- Personal casualty loss - $100 per casualty plus the excess of all casualty losses for the year subject to a 10 percent of AGI floor.

Caps

Five deductions are capped; each in a different way. Specifically,

- The home mortgage interest deduction is limited to the interest on a loan amount of $ 1 million or $500,000 (MFS) unless grandfather rules apply,
- The home equity loan interest deduction is limited to a loan amount of $100,000 or $50,000 (MFS),
- The investment interest deduction cannot exceed net investment income,
- Gambling losses deducted cannot exceed winnings, and
- Charitable contributions are limited to 20, 30, or 50 percent of AGI depending on the type of contribution and type of qualifying organization.

Carry Forwards

Two deductions—charitable contributions and investment interest expenses—can be carried forward to the next year's tax returns[20].

Other Limits on Charitable Contributions

Charitable deductions may be the most complex in terms of calculating how much can be deducted. In part this is due to the many types of contributions that can be made and the different types of organizations involved. If the taxpayer's charitable contributions do not exceed 20 percent of income, there are no other limits on charitable [20] A casualty loss of a business which becomes part of a net operating loss can be carried forward.

INTRODUCTION

This report is the second on complexity called for by the Internal Revenue Service Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (RRA98).[1] The Act requires that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue report on areas of complexity in the Tax Code (Code) and to make recommendations for reducing complexity.[2]

Complexity is well entrenched in the Federal tax system. Complicated provisions create confusing calculations and instructions that frustrate taxpayers and make it difficult for them to file accurate tax returns. Many circumstances contribute to the Code being complex. Complexity is added both knowingly and inadvertently as (1) tax laws are changed, (2) legislative tradeoffs are made, and (3) the economy and society as a whole become more complex.[3] Complexity is also introduced through the interactions among the varying code provisions that affect the same taxpayers.

Changes in individuals' circumstances also can introduce complexity. For example, marriage, having children, changing jobs, and relocating can all have significant effects on income tax liability that a taxpayer must work through. When taxpayers attempt to comply with the tax law in the face of changing circumstances, they often must deal with tax system complexity.

In a complex economy and social structure such as exists in the United States, many tax goals can only be achieved with tax provisions that reflect the underlying complexity of the financial transaction or goal. Complexity is frequently introduced as policymakers make trade-offs between simple tax designs and the desire to make the tax system fair and equitable in a fashion that supports social and economic as well as tax policy goals.

contributions except the overall limit on certain deductions.[21] If the value of the contributions is between 20 and 50 percent of AGI, a variety of conditions affect the amount that can be deducted. The amount deducted for charitable contributions cannot be more than 50 percent of the taxpayer's AGI for the year.

Depending on the nature of the organization and the donated property, a deduction cap of 50 percent, 30 percent, or 20 percent of adjusted gross income applies. Also, carry forward provisions and overall deduction limits apply. The box below summarizes this complex process.

[21] Ninety-seven percent of taxpayer returns with charitable contributions have charitable contributions that are less than 20 percent of AGI.

REV_00350234

Charitable Donation Deduction Rules:

The deduction caps identified below are applied in a specific order with a total deduction for the year limited to 50 percent of adjusted gross income.

1. 50 percent deduction caps for 50 percent limit organizations.[22]
2. 30 percent of adjusted gross income caps for contributions to organizations that are not 50 percent limit organizations, except for contributions of capital gain property subject to the 20 percent cap under "4" below. (Also, if any contributions to 50 percent limit organizations were made, including donations of capital gain property that are subject to the 30 percent cap under "3" below, this cap is the lesser of (1) 30 percent of adjusted gross income or (2) 50 percent of adjusted gross income minus the contributions to the 50 percent limit organizations.)
3. 30 percent of adjusted gross income cap for contributions of capital gain property to 50 percent limit organizations. (If contributions qualifying for the 50 percent cap (step 1) were made, the allowable deduction for these 30 percent limit contributions is the lesser of (1) 30 percent of adjusted gross income or (2) 50 percent of adjusted gross income minus the contributions qualifying for the 50 percent cap.)
4. 20 percent of adjusted gross income cap for contributions of capital gain property to organizations that are not 50 percent limit organizations. (If contributions are deductible under any of the other caps (steps 1-3) the taxpayer may deduct contributions subject to the 20 percent cap only to the extent that there is any adjusted gross income remaining under the overall adjusted gross limit.)

Further, even if none of the charitable contributions are subject to the caps, a taxpayer's overall charitable deduction is subject to the three percent reduction in itemized deductions if his or her 2000 adjusted gross income exceeds $128,950 ($64,475 for married filing separately).

If a taxpayer's deduction is limited by any of the caps, a five-year carry forward is allowed for the excess.

[22] Certain charitable organizations are designated as 50 percent limit organizations, because the amount of deduction that may be taken for contributions to them is 50 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. Some examples are churches, educational organizations, and hospitals. Other organizations are limited to 30 percent or 20 percent, depending on the type of property given and the type of organization.

Personal Exemption Phaseout

The amount taxpayers can deduct in Tax year 2000 for personal exemptions begins to be phased out for taxpayers with AGI between $96,700 and $193,400 for tax year 2000 depending on filing status. It is completely phased out between $157,950 and $315,900 (for tax year 2000) again depending on filing status.

Reducing the Complexity of Itemized Deductions and Personal Exemptions

The many different limits on when and how many taxpayers can claim itemized deductions create multiple layers of complexity and burden. Except for casualty or theft loss from income producing property all itemized deductions are subject to some limit. Taxpayers must not only determine what limit or limits the deduction(s) are subject to, but also what the limit is, and how it is calculated. Personal exemptions are phased out in yet a different way. Many taxpayers must consult a number of publications, fill out multiple forms and make many calculations to determine whether it is advantageous to itemize and their ultimate tax liability.

One straightforward way to reduce this complexity and associated taxpayer burden would be to subject all itemized deductions to the same overall limit or limits. For example

- Itemized deductions could be limited to a certain percentage of the taxpayer's AGI either individually or in total. Currently, this is the limitation most frequently imposed.
- Taxpayers could be allowed to claim itemized deductions only in excess of a percentage of AGI, a common floor.
- Itemized deductions could be phased out at higher income levels.

What limit is imposed is less important than using a single limit. The impact of the limitations on lower income taxpayers could be eliminated or reduced by setting an AGI threshold only above which the limits apply as is currently done. Complexity could be further reduced if any AGI thresholds or phaseouts for itemized deductions and personal exemptions are the same as those for personal credits.

Complexity Issue: The recordkeeping requirements for charitable contributions are cumbersome.

Recordkeeping creates a large burden for taxpayers completing and filing Form 1040 and Schedule A. The rules related to recordkeeping for charitable donations and contributions can be extremely cumbersome. Different forms of proof are required for different types and amounts of contributions. These are explained in the box below.

Recordkeeping Requirements For Charitable Contributions:

Donations made by cash or check for less than $250 require only a statement, receipt, or cancelled check. Donations of goods, clothing or other property also require a receipt from the organization to which the items were donated.

If the value of the donation is $250 or more, the taxpayer needs to get a letter or other written acknowledgement of their donation from the charity. This letter must show the name and address of the organization, the date and location of the donation, the amount of cash or a description of the items donated and whether or not the organization gave the taxpayer anything in return for their donation. If so, a description of the goods received and an estimate of their value is required.

Form 8283 must be completed if the amount of the deduction is more than $500, or donates less than the entire interest in property (e.g., charitable remainder trusts).

If the total deduction for the property is more than $5,000, the taxpayer must complete Section B of Form 8283 and may be required to attach an appraisal of the item(s) they donated. Form 8283, Section B also includes a section for the appraiser and donee organization to complete.

Many of the recordkeeping requirements are necessary because IRS does not receive any information from the charitable organizations on the contributions that they receive from taxpayers. If the charitable organization were allowed to provide the taxpayer and the IRS with this information then the recordkeeping requirements for individuals could be reduced. This could be done on a voluntary basis. Those charitable organizations who chose to do this type of third party reporting to IRS could market the reduced recordkeeping as a benefit to their contributors.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

As with the personal credits, complexity within itemized deductions and personal exemptions could best be reduced by making the specific deductions as consistent as possible in design, qualifications, income limits, and phaseouts. To the extent the rules surrounding deductions and exemptions mirror those applicable to personal tax credits, more simplification and reduced taxpayer burden would be achieved. Under current law, each of the deductions requires taxpayers to make a series of independent determinations and calculations. This results in taxpayer confusion, errors on tax returns, and additional work for the Service. In addition, if voluntary information reporting was allowed to substitute for other charitable contributions, recordkeeping requirements for individual taxpayers (and some amount of complexity) would also be reduced.

Specifically, itemized deductions and the personal exemption could be made less complex and burdensome on taxpayers if the following changes were made.

- Limit itemized deductions to a certain percentage of the taxpayer's AGI either individually or in total.
- Allow taxpayers to claim itemized deductions only in excess of a percentage of their AGI
- Change phaseouts for personal exemptions to be consistent with the income thresholds for itemized deductions.
- Allow charitable organizations to file information returns with taxpayers and the IRS.

CHAPTER III
CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES

Taxpayers are subjected to significant burden and complexity when reporting capital gains and losses from the sale of assets. They also do tax planning to offset the impact of capital gains tax provisions. This burden and complexity result from the need for the taxpayer to determine asset holding periods, figure cost basis, determine if capital losses can be used to offset capital gains or other income, distinguish among asset classes, and determine what tax rate to apply.

No need to differentiate. All taxpayers are subject to the burden.

The accuracy and completeness of reported capital gains/losses is negatively affected by the amount of recordkeeping and time needed to make calculations and understand rules and instructions for completing special forms and worksheets. This chapter identifies several areas of complexity relating to the treatment of capital gains and losses as well as options for reducing complexity and taxpayer burden. While both individual and corporate taxpayers have capital gains income, this discussion is limited to individual taxpayers.

TAXATION OF CAPITAL GAINS

In their simplest form, capital gains are profits from the sale or exchange of capital assets. Assets may include stocks, mutual funds and other financial instruments, real estate, collectibles and other property whether or not the property is used in a business or acquired for investment. Both Wage and Investment and Self-Employed taxpayers may have capital gains. Determining whether a taxpayer has a capital gain (or loss) is a multi-step process. The steps involved include determining:

- the amount of capital gain/loss,
- the holding period,
- the source of the gain/loss,
- whether the gain/loss can be offset against other capital gains/losses, and
- the tax rate to apply.

These types of complexity include maintaining records (potentially over long periods of time), Making multiple or complicated calculations to compute basis and the amount of tax, having to make judgements about complicated technical legal issues, and tax from issues (long forms, interactions between different forms).

Is there a gain or loss?

After selling assets, taxpayers must determine whether they sold their property for more than their "cost basis". In the simplest terms, cost basis, or basis, is what the taxpayer paid for the asset. However, in many cases this amount must be adjusted. For example, previous depreciation amounts and all nontaxable distributions must be subtracted from the taxpayer's basis. Purchase commissions, qualified improvements, and state and local transfer taxes paid by the taxpayer all increase the asset's basis. In addition, specific types of assets may be subject to other basis adjustments. After any adjustments to basis, taxpayers calculate the difference between the sales price and the basis to determine their capital gain or loss.

To determine their basis, taxpayers must keep adequate records for capital assets to be able to determine if, at the time of sale, they incurred a capital gain or loss. In many cases this can be a burdensome task, depending on the length of time the asset is held, the way the asset was acquired, the type of asset, the number of assets the taxpayer has, and other considerations.

What is the holding period?

A taxpayer's holding period is generally determined by the amount of time that elapses between the purchase date and the date of sale. In general the holding period begins on the day after an asset is acquired. But if the taxpayer acquired the property through means other than by purchase (e.g., through a like-kind exchange or gift), the computation of its holding period may begin at an earlier date. Wash sale and short sale rules may require a taxpayer to use a date other than the acquisition date.[23]

Inherited assets are always considered held long term.

Historically there have been two holding period categories for capital gains/losses. These are short term for assets generally held one year or less and long term for assets held longer than one year. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, as amended by RRA '98, created a third category for assets held for more than five years.

There are exceptions to the general definition of short-term gain. For instance:

- When a taxpayer disposes of stock acquired in the exercise of an incentive stock option, the sale results in a long-term capital gain or loss if the stock was held at least one year. As such the holding period for this asset begins on the day of acquisition---not the day after.
- A short-term loss on the sale or exchange of shares in a mutual fund held six months or less could incorporate a long-term loss if a capital gain dividend is distributed before the shares are sold. For example, assume a taxpayer purchases shares in a regulated investment company for $3,000 on July 30, 2000 and sells them on December 18, 2000 for $2,500. Also assume that the company distributes a $50 capital gain dividend to the taxpayer. Disregarding sales commissions, the $500 loss ($2,500 sales price - $3,000 basis) is reported as a $450 short-term loss and a $50 long-term loss.
- A gain or loss on the sale of cattle and horses that were held by the taxpayer for draft, breeding, dairy, or sporting purposes for less than 24 months is short term. However, a gain or loss on the sale of other livestock (not including poultry), held by the taxpayer for draft, breeding, dairy, or sporting purposes for less than 12 months is short term.

[23] A "wash sale" is a financial transaction that involves selling a security at a loss and then buying the same security back within thirty days. A "short sale" refers to a financial transaction in which an investor borrows and sells a security they do not own with the hope of buying it back at a later date at a lower price.

- Gain or loss with respect to a section 1256 contract[24] is treated as 40 percent short-term capital gain or loss, and 60 percent long-term capital gain or loss regardless of the taxpayer's holding period.

What is the source of the gain/loss?

The type of asset that is the source of the capital gain/loss also may have an impact on how it is taxed. For example, $250,000 of the gain ($500,000 for Married Filing Jointly) generated from the sale of a primary residence is in many circumstances excluded from income and therefore exempt from taxation. Other special rules apply to sales of stock in certain small businesses, exchanges of similar property, and collectibles such as art and jewelry.

Can the gain/loss be offset against other gains/losses?

Depending on the type of asset, the gain/loss may be offset against other gains or losses. In addition, under certain circumstances a capital loss that exceeds any potentially offsetting gain may be carried forward.

Gains from the sale of property used for personal use only, rather than for investment are taxed. However, any loss from the sale of personal use property cannot be deducted. Only losses from investment or business use property can be deducted.

In general, short-term capital gains can be offset by short-term losses. The same is true for long-term gains and losses. In addition, any long-term loss in excess of long-term gain can be used to reduce short-term gain. And, a net loss in excess of a net gain is deductible up to the $3,000 capital loss limit.

If a taxpayer's capital losses exceed the amount of capital gain, up to $3,000 annually ($1,500 if MFS) is deductible against other income.[25] Any capital loss not used is carried forward to the next tax year. Unused capital losses are carried over until they are used or the taxpayer dies.

What rate is applied?

Capital gains are taxed at a variety of rates depending on the holding period, when the assets are/were purchased/sold, the source of the gain, and the amount of the other

There are additional sub-categories of long-term gains and losses (e.g., long-term gains or losses resulting from the sale of collectibles) that are taxed at special rates. Table 3.2 summarizes the rates at which long-term capital gains from sales of some special assets are taxed.

REV_00350243

Tax system simplification may occur either through legislation or administrative change. For example, the new Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) rules and definitions, effective after tax year 2001, will simplify claiming EITC for many filers. IRS' administrative change increasing the accrual accounting requirement to $5 million of gross receipts may simplify return preparation for those taxpayers who now can use the cash accounting method. However, change, in itself, generally adds complexity, and in 2001, there were 107 new provisions in tax legislation, including 87 in the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 (EGTRRA).[4] Many of the taxpayers, tax practitioners, scholars, and other stakeholders with whom we spoke emphasized that even the simplest of changes to the Code can have complex consequences if change is frequent and/or has a retroactive or short lead time for the effective date. These issues are also problems for the Service.
Consistent with the requirements of RRA'98, the objectives of this report are to:

- Provide an analysis of selected code provisions that impact large numbers of Wage and Investment and Small Business/Self-Employed taxpayers to determine the types of complexity present and the impact on taxpayers and IRS; and

- Develop options for reducing the complexity of those provisions.

This report is a companion piece to two recent reports on complexity. The December 2001 report of the National Taxpayer Advocate identified 23 issues considered the most serious problems encountered and identified by front-line employees, practitioners, and taxpayers. The Joint Committee on Taxation report of April 2001 is a comprehensive review of the Federal tax system, including both personal and corporate taxes, and many recommendations for tax simplification are put forth. This report, on the other hand, concentrates on three burdensome provisions of the Tax Code. In addition to the analysis, some options for reducing their complexity are discussed.

In the report we analyze the tax law complexity associated with (1) personal credits, (2) personal deductions and exemptions, and (3) capital gains associated with depreciable business assets. Each section is presented from a taxpayer's point of view and is organized in the same way—description of the area of complexity, taxpayer burden associated with each area of complexity, complexity issues requiring attention, and suggested options for alleviating the complexity. The illustrative data in this report are for various years, depending on the data availability when the report was written.

COMPLEXITY ROUNDTABLE

Many of the issues developed in this report first surfaced during a complexity roundtable co-sponsored by the IRS, Office of Program Evaluation and Risk Analysis (OPERA) and the National Society of Tax Professionals (NSTP) held in July 2000 at Georgetown [4] EGTRRA modifies several tax credits, including the adoption credit, child and dependent care tax credit, child tax credit, additional child tax credit, and the earned income tax credit.

REV_00350199

Example

The following example illustrates the process for calculating capital gains.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson and their two children live in Springfield. Mrs. Nelson is the sole proprietor of a company that makes special tires for Sport Utility Vehicles. The Nelsons own their primary residence and a rental property at the beach. They jointly own a variety of securities including 1,000 shares of common stock in New Emerging Development Technology, Inc. (NEDTECH). Mr. Nelson collects coins.

The Nelsons have decided to liquidate several of their holdings. They decide to sell 100 shares of NEDTECH, Mr. Nelson's coin collection, and their rental property at the beach. What steps do they have to take to calculate their gains or losses and any tax they owe from the transactions?

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of their shares in NEDTECH?

Determine the cost basis of the stock. The Nelsons would need to retrieve and review brokerage statements to determine the price of the stock when it was purchased, the price when the stock was sold, and the amount of commission paid on the purchase and sale. If the Nelsons participated in NEDTECH's Dividend Reinvestment Plan, they would also need to determine how many shares were purchased, on what dates, and at what price.

Determine the holding period. The Nelsons would need to review brokerage statements to determine exactly how many years and months they owned the stock.

A short-term gain or loss (shares held one year or less) is reported in Part I of Schedule D. A long-term gain or loss (shares held more than one year) is reported in Part II of Schedule D. A short-term gain would be taxed at ordinary income rates while a long-term gain would be taxed at a maximum rate of 20%.

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of the coin collection?

Determine the cost basis of the collectibles. The Nelsons would need to find invoices that show how much they paid for each coin in the collection.

Determine the holding period. Calculate the number of years and months the Nelsons owned the collection before they sold it.

Losses on the sale of personal assets, such as personal coin collections, are not deductible although profits on the sale of collectibles meeting the holding requirement for long term gains are taxable at the same rates as ordinary income, but not to exceed a 28% rate. Any capital gain would be reported in Part II of Schedule D.

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of their rental property?

As the Nelsons did with their securities and coin collection, in order to report the capital gain or loss on the sale of their rental property they must first determine the asset's cost basis and holding period. The basis may have been reduced over time due to depreciation deductions claimed by the Nelsons or increased over time if the Nelsons made significant improvements to the property. Depreciable property used in a business, such as rental property held for more than one year, is referred to as a Section 1231 asset. A short-term gain or loss is reported on Form 4797, Part II and carried to Form 1040, page 1 as ordinary income. A long-term net loss is carried from Form 4797, Part 1 to Form 4797, Part II and then carried to Form 1040, page 1 and reported as an ordinary loss. A long-term net section 1231 gain is carried to Schedule D and reported as a long-term capital gain. This gain is taxed at a maximum rate of 25% to the extent of unrecaptured section 1250 gain. The remaining gain is taxed at 20%, 10%, or 8% rate, whichever applies.

WHO CLAIMS CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES

During their lifetime, most taxpayers will incur a capital gain or loss. For many taxpayers this will be limited to the sale of their primary residence and any gain may be wholly or partially excluded. But an increasing number of taxpayers are investing in capital assets such as mutual funds, stocks, and bonds. For 1999, 21 percent of all individual tax returns claimed capital gains or losses. Nineteen percent filed a Schedule D, and two percent either a form 4797 or both a Schedule D and form 4797. In 1996, 14 percent of taxpayers claimed a capital gain or loss, with 12 percent filing a Schedule D and 2 percent a form 4797 or both. Table 3.4 breaks down these taxpayers for 1999 by AGI.[27]

TAXPAYER AND ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

The two primary forms used by individual taxpayers to report capital gains and losses are Schedule D and Form 4797. The following publications are also available:

- 523 – Selling Your Home
- 537 – Installment Sales
- 544 – Sales and other Dispositions of Assets
- 550 - Investment Income and Expenses
- 551 – Basis of Assets

A recent survey of taxpayers shows that an average of 6 hours is spent completing Schedule D, for a total of 154 million hours. IRS currently estimates that the average time it takes a taxpayer to prepare, complete, and file Form 4797 is 49 hours. The 1.7 million taxpayers that filed this form are estimated to have spent 84 million hours completing it. Of the 49 hours taxpayers spend completing and filing Form 4797, two thirds of that time (33 hours) is spent creating and maintaining records. Additionally, 8.5 hours is spent preparing, copying and assembling the form, while another 7.5 hours is needed for learning the law and/or the form. Sixty-nine percent of Schedule D filers use a paid preparer. This increases to 84 percent for Form 4797 filers.

From an IRS perspective, Schedule D was one of the top 10 reasons taxpayers called or e-mailed for assistance.

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

We analyzed two complexity issues related to capital gains. They are multiple long-term capital gains rates, and differences in the tax treatment of gains and losses.

Complexity Issue: Multiple long-term capital gains tax rates can create confusion.

Historically, there have been two capital gains rates based on the holding period for the asset—short term and long term. In recent years however, additional long-term rate categories have been added. These are based on holding period as well as type of asset or gain. There are now six different long-term rates ranging from 8 percent to 28 percent.

Reducing Tax Rate Complexity

Replacing the existing rate structure for long-term gains with two rates (one for the 10 and 15 percent brackets and another for higher brackets) would greatly simplify what is required of taxpayers in determining their tax liability for capital gains. Building on the current rate structure that has one rate for taxpayers in the 10 and 15 percent tax brackets and another rate for taxpayers in all higher brackets and applying these rates to the gains from all types of assets would result in a two-thirds reduction in the number of long-term rates.

Complexity Issue: Gains and losses from the same sale can have different tax treatments.

Whether the sale of an asset results in a gain or loss affects its tax treatment. For example, gains from personal assets (e.g., collectibles) are taxed, but losses from the sale of personal assets cannot be deducted. Losses from the sale of depreciable property that is used in a business are treated as ordinary losses, where as those that are sold at a gain are taxed as capital gains.

Reducing Complexity

Treating the gain/loss from the sale of capital assets consistently would help simplify this issue. This could involve allowing taxpayers to deduct losses from the sale of personal property or eliminating taxes on capital gains from personal property. For depreciable property used in a business this would include treating all losses and gains as either ordinary income/loss or capital income/loss.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

The complexity associated with capital gains could be reduced if

- The number of long-term capital gains rates were reduced to two, one for the 10 and 15 percent brackets for ordinary income and one for all other tax brackets.
- The gain/loss from the sale of capital assets were consistently determined to be either capital or ordinary.

APPENDICES

Introduction

The Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 provides a list of topics which may be included in IRS' analysis of the sources of complexity in administration of the Federal tax laws. Each of the Appendices in the report addresses one of these topics. The seven topics listed in Sec. 4022(a)(1) are:

(A)- questions frequently asked by taxpayers with respect to return filing,
(B)- common errors made by taxpayers in filling out their returns,
(C)- areas of law which frequently result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS,
(D)- major areas of law in which there is no (or incomplete) published guidance or in which the law is uncertain,
(E)- areas in which revenue agents make frequent errors interpreting or applying the law,
(F)- the impact of recent legislation on complexity,
(G)- forms supplied by the IRS, including the time it takes for taxpayers to complete, and review forms, the number of taxpayers who use each form, and how recent legislation has affected the time it takes to complete and review forms.

Several concerns arose as we examined IRS data systems to obtain current data relevant to each of these topics. First, the data were developed by various functions for their own purposes, and were not designed to answer tax policy questions such as these. We chose the data to use by how closely they would respond to the specific topics of interest. Nevertheless, the fact remains that these analyses are based on data sources that were not designed for this purpose. A second concern is that the data do not necessarily relate well to each other. Therefore, although we sometimes combined more than one data source for a specific issue, we must caveat the results. In the future, as IRS develops its new data systems, we expect they will be more comparable across business units and functions.

The Appendices of this report present the data which formed one piece of the decision-making process when choosing issues for this report from complex provisions. In each Appendix, we give an overview of each of the seven topics suggested by Congress.

Taxpayer Questions

Overview

IRS receives taxpayer questions on return filing via three communication channels: (1) customer service calls, (2) TeleTax calls, and (3) Internet e-mail correspondence. The IRS records the subject of each question asked and tracks the frequency with which a specific subject is received by each channel and reports them in the Customer Service Calls Report, the TeleTax Report, and the Internet E-mail Report. Each report is based on a different source and each categorizes questions uniquely for its own purposes and so are not directly comparable. Nevertheless, these are some of the best IRS data for analyzing specific taxpayer stumbling points.

Customer Service Calls Report

The Customer Service Calls report is compiled from data tracked via the IRS Telephone Routing and Interactive System (TRIS). When calling IRS on a Customer Service line, taxpayers access a "live" person. TRIS records the frequency of these incoming calls to IRS through its toll free lines and tabulates taxpayer questions by subject. In 2000, about 5 million of the 68 million calls received were inquiries relating to tax provisions.[28] These taxpayer questions were tracked among 40 subject categories related to tax law. The call descriptions of the ten most frequently asked questions of IRS by taxpayers using TRIS are shown in Table A.1.

[28] An example of questions not related to tax provisions would be, for example, refund inquiries which accounted for more than 22 million calls.

Internet E-mail Report

The IRS Internet site, at www.irs.gov, contains a Web page that allows taxpayers to submit questions by e-mail to Agency customer service representatives. Currently, questions relating to any of 18 tax categories can be submitted and answered. Based on the tax category selected, questions asked through the Web site are routed to one of five IRS locations to the representative best able to respond to it. Prepared answers to frequently asked questions are used to reply to routine questions but most questions require individual responses. Even though IRS historically has not advertised this service, other than in some IRS publications, and the Web page is not located in a prominent part of the site, IRS received and answered approximately 295,000 e-mail questions in FY00.

Data describing the subject and frequency of questions asked through the Web site are recorded in the Internet E-mail report. The ten most frequently asked questions of IRS though its Web site in FY00 as reported in the Internet E-mail report are listed in Table A.2.

Common Errors Taxpayers Make on Their Returns

Overview

Errors can occur at any stage of tax return processing—from the very beginning when taxpayers complete their returns through a three-year period in which adjustments to the returns can be made. IRS tracks the number of errors made by taxpayers during these various stages in two reports—the Math Error Notice Code Report and the Customer Service Adjustments Report. Together, these reports identify routine errors, including both math and clerical errors, made by taxpayers on their returns. A high number of errors may reflect difficulties taxpayers encounter due to complex provisions

The Math Error Notice Code Report

Errors in returns are found at different stages of processing. During the initial input processing of a return, a series of automated checks for errors is performed, and all returns are reviewed by an automated system for over 230 different types of errors. When errors are found, notices are generated and sent to taxpayers either alerting them to corrective actions already taken by the Agency or requesting their review of an apparent problem in their return. The Math Error Notice Code Report, produced by Forms and Submission Processing, records reasons for notices having been sent to taxpayers and where on a form or schedule the error appeared. Although the report is titled the Math Error Notice Code Report, it includes many non-computational errors, such as the reporting of an incorrect Social Security Number or errors in transferring numbers from supporting schedules and forms. The ten math errors made most frequently by taxpayers in 2000 are shown in Table B.1.a. Similarly, the ten math errors made most frequently by taxpayers in 1999 are shown in Table B.1.b. Together these ten errors account for 54 percent of all math errors recorded in the report. Together these ten math errors account for over half of the math errors recorded in the both years.

COMPLEXITY AND THE MISSION OF THE IRS

The mission of the Service is to Provide America's taxpayers top quality service by helping them understand and meet their tax responsibilities and by applying the tax law with integrity and fairness to all.

Three strategic goals and five principles guide the modernization of the Service and the accomplishment of its mission. The strategic goals are (1) service to each taxpayer, (2) service to all taxpayers, and (3) productivity through a quality work environment. The five guiding principles provide insights into how IRS will achieve its mission. The principles are (1) understand and solve problems from the taxpayer's point of view, (2) expect managers to be accountable, (3) use balanced measures of performance, (4) foster open and honest communication, and (5) insist on total integrity.

Reducing complexity will aid the Service in achieving all of its strategic goals. Reduced complexity can lead to reduced burden. By reducing burden, IRS better serves each taxpayer. Reduced complexity also can lead to a better understanding of the law, leading to increased compliance. By increasing compliance, IRS better serves all taxpayers. Finally, when the Code becomes less complex, the working environment for IRS employees becomes more productive.

THE IMPACT OF STATUTORY CHANGE

Many of the taxpayers, tax practitioners, scholars, and other stakeholders with whom we spoke emphasized that even the simplest of changes to the Code can have complex consequences if change is frequent and/or has a retroactive or short lead time for the effective date. These issues are also problems for the Service.

When tax laws change, individuals often face uncertainty as to how to comply with the changes, especially if they are frequent or if the individuals and IRS are given little time to prepare before the changes are effective. In 1986, the Code was rewritten for the first time in about 30 years. In the next fifteen years, there have been about 84 tax laws enacted. Just one of these, the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998, contained 25 sections of tax changes. Of these, 11 were effective retroactively and 4 were effective within 90 days of the end of the calendar year. The inability to stay current has

Taxpayer Errors and Complexity

The large number of errors made may reflect that a large number of people complete the form (e.g., for Earned Income Credit) and not necessarily that a large percentage of the taxpayers make errors. The percentage of taxpayers making errors, however, is a better indication of the complexity. Using data from the 1999 Math Error report, OPERA staff calculated the percentage of errors made by taxpayers completing a line on their tax return that related to an issue identified in the body of this report as complex. In constructing Table B.2, staff reviewed the 230 math error categories identified in the Math Error report and combined and sorted these categories according to a corresponding area of complexity. The results of this analysis show that the highest taxpayer error rate (9.3 percent) occurs in the process of calculating the Earned Income Tax Credit.

The data shown in Table B.3 are based on a separate review of data from the 1999 Math Error report. Grouping the errors by complexity category shows that in 1999, 45.6 percent of the total 8.9 million math errors made by taxpayers related to filing definitional issues. As a separate category, Earned Income Tax Credit errors accounted for the highest percentage (51.5 percent) of math errors related to categories of complexity.

The Adjustments Report

An adjustment is defined as a modification to a taxpayer's account. Adjustments can be initiated by the taxpayer or the IRS and can relate to any of five categories:

1) Taxpayer requested changes [e.g., amended return, claim],
2) Taxpayer response to an IRS Math Error Notice,
3) Change in legislation late in the year or a retroactive change,
4) IRS error, or
5) Taxpayer requested carryback.

The number and type of dollar adjustments (increase or decrease) made to taxpayers' accounts are listed in the Adjustments Report produced by Customer Service. This report consists of 45 adjustment categories. Unlike the Math Error Notice Code report which records errors during report processing, adjustments to taxpayer accounts can occur any time during the three years after a return is processed. Therefore, complete data for a specific tax year is not available from the Adjustments report for three years after the end of a tax year.

The ten most frequent adjustments based on taxpayer-requested adjustments and taxpayer responses to an IRS notice for tax year 1997 are shown in Table B.4.a. Together these ten adjustments account for about 73 percent of all adjustments reported in the 2000 Adjustment Report. According to the data from both the Math Error Notice Code Report and the Adjustment Report, the highest percentage of taxpayer errors occurred at some point in the process of calculating and reporting an Earned Income Tax Credit.

Appendix C
Areas of Law Which Frequently Result in Disagreements Between Taxpayers and the Internal Revenue Service

Overview

Provisions of federal tax law that, when implemented, result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS may result in litigation. The National Taxpayer Advocate's Annual Report to Congress identifies the top ten tax issues most litigated by taxpayers. Issues related to tax complexity discussed in this report are prominent in the lists of litigated issues.

Findings from Taxpayer Advocate Report

The following list identifies the ten most common areas in which court opinions were rendered. It should be noted that virtually all cases involved a penalty issue along with at least one of the other issues. In the absence of a penalty most taxpayers have no financial incentive to incur the high costs of litigation. Penalties, as an issue by itself, is probably not a top issue comparable to the other, non-penalty issues identified in the table below.

Table C.1. Areas in Which Court Opinions Were Rendered

Rank	Description
1	Penalty issues
2	Court Procedures
3	Deductible vs Not Deductible trade or business expenses
4	Earned income credit
5	Gross Income Inclusions and Exclusions)
6	Accounting Methods
7	Statute of Limitations
8	Abatements
9	Self Employed, Independent Contractor vs Employee
10	Last Known Address and Notice of Deficiency

Note: The data collection methodology for issues that are ranked as the most common represents a review of tax cases for a three month period, October 1, 1999 – December 31, 1999. This sample of 302 opinions comprised 22 percent of the nearly 1400 opinions for 1999. Opinions are from the U.S. Tax Court, U.S. Court of Federal claims, and U.S. District Court.

Appendix D
Major Areas of Law in Which There is No (or Incomplete) Guidance or in Which the Law is Uncertain

The Internal Revenue Service issues regulations and other published guidance to interpret and explain the Internal Revenue Code. The Office of Chief Counsel in IRS is the primary drafter of guidance published by the IRS and is responsible for coordinating its development with Treasury and other IRS offices. Through the published guidance process, the Office seeks to develop rules that are consistent with the language of the Code and the intent of Congress, that are reasonably administrable by the IRS, and that help taxpayers comply with the law.

The Role of Published Guidance in Tax Administration

Published guidance helps taxpayers better understand and meet their tax obligations. By providing interpretation and explanation of the law, published guidance also helps taxpayers plan their transactions to avoid controversy. This is increasingly important at a time when the complexity of tax law is often identified as both a burden on taxpayers and an impediment to compliance with the tax law. Published guidance also promotes the consistent interpretation and application of the tax law by the IRS.

How the Published Guidance Process Works

Published guidance can be issued in the form of proposed, temporary, or final regulations; revenue rulings; revenue procedures; notices; or announcements.

Annually, the IRS and Treasury publish a list of guidance priorities to identify the guidance projects scheduled for completion during the year. In 2000, the IRS and Treasury implemented a more formalized system for developing the Priority Guidance Plan (PGP). Each year, IRS and Treasury directly solicit suggestions from all interested parties, including taxpayers, tax practitioners and industry groups. All the proposals for guidance are then reviewed by the newly formed Published Guidance Advisory Committee (PGAC), which includes senior officials from the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury's Office of Tax Policy. The projects on the PGP (Exhibit D-1) are in response to newly enacted legislation, court opinions, changes in the market, changes in taxpayer behavior, and comments from taxpayers or their representatives. Accordingly, the projects are representative of areas of the tax law in which there is no (or incomplete) guidance or in which the tax law is uncertain. The PGP ensures that resources for published guidance focus on the highest priority projects. The PGP also serves as a means of communicating IRS guidance priorities to taxpayers. Publication of the PGP early in the year informs taxpayers and their representatives of IRS guidance priorities so that they have an opportunity to participate as the guidance is developed.

The guidance process is open to public participation in a number of ways. Regulations are generally issued in proposed form, with the public invited to submit written comments and to testify at public hearings. In the past several years, the IRS has posted guidance on the Internet and accepted comments submitted though the Internet. The Service has also added a teleconferencing capability so taxpayers outside the Washington, D.C. area can participate in regulation hearings from alternate sites. In 2001, the plan year was changed to end on June 30, due, in part, to taxpayer concerns about a deluge of guidance at the end of the calendar year. Accordingly, the 2002 plan year will end on June 30, 2002.

Both the Service and taxpayers are challenged in these situations. The Service needs to issue clear guidance and forms covering the changes in time for the next filing season. Taxpayers face the uncertainty that late changes introduce around their current and future tax obligations. With short lead times, both the Service and taxpayers have little time to become knowledgeable about the changes. This creates additional opportunities for error as well as heightened frustration and conflict

The Service faces its own challenges in making sure its systems, training, and other employee tools are current and reflect the most recent legislation. In addition, because the time between when a return is filed and when it is audited may be 1-2 years, taxpayers and Service employees must also accommodate circumstances where the Code has changed, sometimes significantly, in the intervening time period.
The enactment of provisions with retroactive or short effective lead times also increases complexity. Both taxpayers and the Service frequently must act quickly to accommodate these changes. For the Service, especially problematic are changes that come late in the calendar year when the forms and publications for the next filing season are ready to go or have gone to the printers. Short timeframes frequently do not allow the Service to consult with taxpayers and other stakeholders in developing new forms. This can result in the forms being more difficult for taxpayers to understand or complete than they would be under normal circumstances.

Time limitations also may affect our ability to make the systems changes necessary to support statutory change. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 and RRA98 are good examples of Acts with many tax-related changes and short effective date lead times. Table 2 details the changes made by recent acts.

Areas in Which Tax Examiners Make Frequent Errors Interpreting or Applying the Law

Overview

The IRS Examination Quality Measurement System (EQMS) provides quality review data from a nationwide sample of closed examination cases conducted in the field (field audits) or at the Service's thirty-three district offices (office audits). Most of the quality elements identified by EQMS cover various work processes and procedures. However, the number of errors made by Tax Examiners in interpreting or applying the law is tracked via EQMS Quality Element 6B.

EQMS Quality Element 6B Results

A sample of 8780 closed field audits and 4868 closed office audits were examined during FY 2000. A summary of these examinations contained 116 (1.3 percent) identifiable UIL code misinterpretations or misapplications of law made during field examinations and another 50 (1 percent) misinterpretations or misapplications made during office audits.

Top Misapplications and Misinterpretations of Law

The most frequent misapplications or misinterpretations of law by UIL description during a field examination for FY2000 are identified in Table E.1 below.

The Impact of Recent Legislation on Complexity

The implementation of new tax laws, or even the modification of current tax laws, that impact issues related to a taxpayer's filing status or affect procedures for calculating estimated and alternative minimum taxes has a direct bearing on complexity. To assess the impact of recent congressional initiatives on complexity each piece of legislation must be assessed independently. While Congress has enacted tax law legislation recently that has added to complexity, they have also enacted other legislation that had minimal (if any) impact on complexity.

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (1997 Act) is an example of tax legislation that resulted in many new tax complexities. The 1997 Act contained many new tax credits that are beneficial to certain categories of taxpayers. These new tax credits required significant tax changes to the tax forms, schedules, and instructions for individuals. Because the credits were targeted to certain types of taxpayers or to certain types of activities, specific qualifications had to be met in order to qualify for the credits. In many cases taxpayers had to decipher complex rules in order to determine whether they qualified for the credits. Several of the credits phased in their maximum benefit over two years. In addition all of the new credits phased out at certain levels of adjusted gross income. These phase-ins and phase-outs lead to increased complexity in the tax law. In some cases taxpayers were given choices (for example, with respect to which of various educational tax incentives to claim), which created the complexity and the possibility of increased errors.

One of the most complex provisions of the 1997 Act was the reduction in the maximum capital gains rates. This provision presents many difficulties for tax payers largely because of the different maximum rates (10, 20, 25, or 28 percent) that apply depending on the nature of the capital asset sold and the taxpayers's marginal tax rate bracket. Part IV of 1999 Schedule D, which provides the tax computation reflecting these reduced rates, contains thirty-five line entries. New complexities are introduced after the year 2000 when the 10 and 20 percent rates dropped to 8 and 18 percent, respectively, for gain from property held for more than five years.

Examples of legislation that did not impact complexity include three new tax laws enacted in 1998: The Surface Revenue Transportation Act of 1998, The Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, and the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998. None of these Acts imposed significant new complexities on taxpayers as these pieces of legislation focused on changes within IRS.

SCOPE AND METHODOLOGY

For this report, we limited our analysis to provisions that affect individual taxpayers, both Wage and Investment (W&I) and the Self-Employed. In this way, we focused on provisions that affect large numbers of taxpayers who are less likely to have the resources necessary to deal with complex tax issues.

RRA98 suggests that certain information that reflects complexity and taxpayer burden be included in this report.[5] Using these criteria as a guide we developed and refined the list of areas of complexity we selected for this year's report by:

- Conducting interviews with senior managers from Jackson Hewitt, H&R Block, Padgett Business Services, Padgett Business Services Foundations who work with individual taxpayers regularly and can identify areas in the Code that create the most complexity for their clients.

- Conducting interviews with various Department of the Treasury and IRS employees who interact with taxpayers and can articulate how various areas of the Code cause confusion and frustration not only for taxpayers but for IRS employees as well.

- Co-sponsoring with the National Society of Tax Professionals a complexity roundtable held in July 2000, at Georgetown University. More than twenty public and private organizations and companies were represented during the roundtable discussion.

- Interviewing tax practitioners, by telephone and in person, willing to share their knowledge and experiences with us about areas of the tax law they considered unduly complex.

- Reviewing a wide range of literature in legal theory addressing complexity and its legal manifestations.

Based on the results of these activities we selected three specific provisions for in-depth analysis. These provisions are (1) personal credits, (2) personal exemptions and itemized deductions, and (3) capital gains.

It is important to note how we addressed two specific items contained in the statutory requirement to which this report responds. They are "administrative complexity" and "undue and unnecessary complexity." For administrative complexity, we found it was [5] Information suggested was: questions frequently asked by taxpayers when filing their return, common taxpayer errors, areas of law that frequently result in disagreement between taxpayers and IRS, areas of the law where there is no or incomplete guidance or where the law is uncertain, areas of the law where revenue officers make frequent mistakes, the impact of recent legislation on complexity, and the time required for taxpayers to complete forms.

Tax Forms and Burden on the Taxpayer

Overview

One of the indicators of complexity of the tax system is the burden encountered by taxpayers in completing tax forms and filing their returns. Estimates of the time to complete forms have been made based on a mathematical model, the Arthur D. Little model, developed in the 1980s. There are several weaknesses in the model. First, it relies on the number of forms, instructions, and words to be read or lines necessary to complete to comply with the tax code. Second, the model is out of date, and recent modifications to the tax system are not reflected in it. Third, the model contains certain peculiarities, such as counting lines added to instructions or forms for the purpose of clarification and simplification for the taxpayer as additional burden. However, the model is still relied on, because it is the only available current estimate of burden.

The estimates of the time to complete tax forms and the quantity of forms distributed are made by the Operations Division. Estimates of the number of taxpayers filing the forms are provided by the Statistics of Income Division.

Forms Supplied by the IRS

Taxpayers obtain tax forms from a variety of sources. These sources include tax form packages mailed to individual taxpayers; IRS distributed forms available, for example, at libraries, post offices, and IRS walk-in offices; IRS-approved computer software and electronic tax forms; and Internet web sites. Tax year 1999 is the latest year with the most complete information on mailings, distribution and filings of forms. The number and method for distributing selected tax forms is identified in Table G.1.

In general, mailing of tax forms to taxpayers continues to decline as electronic return filing increases. Mailings of tax packages containing a 1040 series form plus one or more other forms to targeted taxpayers have declined from approximately 77 million in 1995 to approximately 54 million in 1999. Approximately xx.x million returns were filed electronically in 1999. IRS expects to receive over 33 million electronically filed returns in TY00.

Dear Robyn,

The Senate Judiciary Committee has delayed a vote on the nomination of Priscilla Owen until after the August recess. This doesn't mean that we can forget about this important nomination! It is essential that you learn more about the issues so you are ready for the vote, which may happen in early September.

On July 23, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing on Owen's nomination. In a letter to Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a total of 14 progressive organizations, including Planned Parenthood, National <http://www.benchmarkcampaign.org> Council of Jewish Women, People for the American Way, and the NAACP stated: "Our exhaustive and careful review of Priscilla Owen's record on the Texas Supreme Court has left us with little alternative but to oppose her confirmation because of her activist and extreme views on important civil rights, worker's rights, consumer's rights, and women's rights issues." Source: Civilrights.org <http://www.civilrights.org/library/detail.cfm?id=9821> .

Planned Parenthood is working with a larger coalition of organizations concerned with Justice Owen's nomination. We have previously sent you information on Justice Owen's record on reproductive rights. Here are some of the other issues that have been raised:

Labor: "As a Justice on the Texas Supreme Court, Owen consistently votes to dismiss suits brought by workers for job-related injuries, discrimination and unfair employment practices." Source: Alliance For Justice <http://www.independentjudiciary.org/nominees/nominee.cfm?NomineeID=21> . Additionally, the AFL-CIO states that "Owen's decisions and dissents overwhelmingly favor business and insurance interests to the detriment of working men and women." Source: AFL-CIO <http://www.aflcio.org/bushwatch> .

Discrimination and Workers' Rights: "In several recent cases, Owen has dissented from rulings by the Texas Supreme Court affecting the rights of workers, including the right to be free from discrimination." Source: Alliance For Justice <http://www.independentjudiciary.org/nominees/nominee.cfm?NomineeID=21> . Additionally, the National Women's <http://www.nwlc.org> Law Center states that "Justice Owen's record on sex discrimination and other legal issues of importance to women displays a staunch conservatism that is well outside the mainstream."

Access to Justice: Several groups have expressed concerns about her propensity to overturn jury decisions. In a joint letter signed by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and 13 other organizations including Planned Parenthood it is stated that "In many of her opinions, Owen seeks to override jury verdicts or diminish the role of juries, especially when juries attempt to protect the rights of working families." Subject: Judicial Nominations Update: Coalition Speaks Out Opposing Priscilla Owen

Dear Robyn,

The Senate Judiciary Committee has delayed a vote on the nomination of Priscilla Owen until after the August recess. This doesn't mean that we can forget about this important nomination! It is essential that you learn more about the issues so you are ready for the vote, which may happen in early September.

On July 23, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing on Owen's nomination. In a letter to Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a total of 1 4 progressive organizations, including Planned Parenthood, Nationa l Council of Jewish Women, People for the American Way, and the NAACP stated: "Our exhaustive and careful review of Priscilla Owen's record on the Texas Supreme Court has left u s with little alternative but to oppose her confirmation becaus e of her activist and extreme views on important civil rights, worker's rights, consumer's rights, and women's rights issues." Source: Civilrights.org.

Planned Parenthood is working with a larger coalition of organizations concerned with Justice Owen's nomination. We have previously sent you information on Justice Owen's record on reproductive rights. Here are some of the other issues tha t have been raised:

- Labor: "As a Justice on the Texas Supreme Court, Owen consistently votes to dismiss suits brought by workers for job-related injuries, discrimination and unfair employment practices." Source: Alliance For Justice. Additionally, the AFL-CIO states that "Owen's decisions and dissents overwhelmingly favor business and insurance interests to th e detriment of working men and women." Source: AFL-CIO.
- Discrimination and Workers' Rights: "In several recent cases, Owen has dissented from rulings by th e Texas Supreme Court affecting the rights of workers, including the right to be free from discrimination." Source : Alliance For Justice. Additionally, the < A href="http://www.nwlc.org" target=_blank>National Women's Law Center states that "Justice Owen's record on sex discrimination and other legal issues of importance to wome n displays a staunch conservatism that is well outside the mainstream."
- Access to Justice: Several groups have expressed concerns about her propensity to overturn jury decisions. In a joint letter signed by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and 13 other organizations including Planned Parenthood it is stated that "In many of her opinions, Owen seeks to override jury verdicts or diminish the role of juries, especially when juries attempt to protect the rights of working families." Source: Civilrights.org.
- Environment: "Environmental groups are seriously concerned with Justice Owen's record of favoring special interests over public health and ordinary citizens. Justice Owen is only the fourth of President Bush's many judicial nominees to raise such concerns among the environmental community." Source: Earth Justice.
- Rights of Consumers: "Her dissenting views would have seriously impaired the rights of ordinary citizens to have access to the courts and to obtain redress for a variety of injuries..." Source: People for the American Way.

Dear Mr. Kavanaugh,

I have a question regarding the date range for the last month of this search. Since the change of Administration occurred during January of 2001, we have the Records separated by Administration. Do you want the search to go through Records for the entire month or just through the Clinton time period?

Thanks,

Sandi

BTW: 96 of the 99 search jobs have finished. I expect the last three to be finished within the next several hours. Do you want to review these on line or do you want them on CD? So far there are 5066 hits.

Subject: Question regarding distribution of invite to political appointees

Brett,
The following two questions have been raised about delivery of the invites to the political appointees for the reception hosted by the RNC.

1)Dept. of State asked if they can send an e-mail to the people who are to receive an invite letting them know they have an invitation to pick up in the White House Liaisons Office. The problem with giving it to someone who handles the mail regularly in this case is that their internal mail system is not reliable with it taking up to 3 weeks for mail to be delivered. If their proposal is not ok, what would you propose they do?

2)Conan French,the USAID mentioned that their political appointees had further restrictions on allowable political activities -- I mentioned to them that he should either talk to you or his general counsel to get guidance.

*I will be on vacation Monday, Aug 26 through Thursday, Aug. 29, so please let Dave McMaster who is carboned on this e-mail know whay you would advise.
Thanks for your continued help with questions on this reception.

-Doug
also feel free to call me on my cell at PRA 6 with any questions.

Paul A. DOWHAL, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.
SMITHKLINE BEECHAM CONSUMER HEALTHCARE, etc., et al., Defendants and Respondents.

No. A094460.

July 12, 2002.

Citizen, acting on behalf of the public, filed complaint against drug companies, seeking an injunction and alleging that companies placed nicotine delivery products in the stream of commerce without providing adequate pregnancy warning and that those acts constituted an unfair business practice. The Superior Court, San Francisco County, No. 305893, David A. Garcia, J., granted summary judgment to drug companies. Citizen appealed. The Court of Appeal, Jones, P.J., held that drug companies' obligation under state law to warn of reproductive toxicity of nicotine delivery products was exempted from both express and implied federal preemption.

Reversed.

Simons, J., filed a concurring opinion.

"Respondents have not cited, and we are not aware of, any case that holds a court can ignore Congress's clearly articulated and directly applicable express intent to preempt, (or as here, to 'save' a particular state statutory scheme from preemption) based on an analysis of what Congress impliedly intended to do. We will not be the first." (Maj. opn., ante, at p. 11.)

12 This analysis seems to ignore the post-Cipollone decisions discussed above. Simply because Congress insulated Proposition 65 from the express preemption clause does not mean that conflict preemption does not apply. Of course, under Geier, Congress could express an intent to reverse the normal operation of the supremacy clause and permit conflicting state law to reign supreme, a prospect the high court viewed as unlikely. But the majority does not rely on any textual analysis of either the preemption or the saving clause (21 U.S.C. § 379r) to indicate such a congressional intent.

Certainly nothing in the saving clause warrants a conclusion that Congress wished to bypass the conflict preemption doctrine. In my view, the scope of the saving clause coincides with the scope of the preemption clause. That is, the express preemption clause imposes "national uniformity for nonprescription drugs" (21 U.S.C. § 379r; Pub.L. No. 105-115 (Nov. 21, 1997) 111 Stat. 2296, § 412), and the saving clause creates an exception for California, acting through Proposition 65. As a matter of logic, the saving clause for Proposition 65 does nothing more than serve as a shield, protecting Proposition 65 from the effects of the uniformity provisions of the Modernization Act of 1997. The majority points to no language in the two clauses, and I find none, that permits California to act so as to frustrate any statutory purpose other than uniformity. (See United States v. Locke, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 106.) In my view, Proposition 65 remains limited by the doctrine of conflict preemption and may not interfere with the congressional purpose expressed in the FDCA of protecting the consumer from dangerous or misbranded products.

This interpretation of the saving clause does not render it ineffectual. To the contrary, unlike any other state, California (when acting pursuant to Proposition 65) is entitled to adopt warnings different from as well as additional to those required by federal law. Unlike other states, the only limitation California faces is that these warnings may not actually conflict with the FDCA. Proposition 65 is saved by being left precisely where it was before the uniform labeling law of the Modernization Act of 1997 took effect, allowed to impose different, but not conflicting requirements.

My colleagues rely on the comments of Senators Boxer and Jeffords to support their interpretation. Without quarreling with the propriety of relying on such statements, I believe these particular remarks provide little support to their construction. In the portion of Senator Boxer's remarks emphasized by the majority, she is quoted as thanking other Senators "for working with me to ensure that California's proposition 65 will not be preempted by the uniformity provisions of this bill " and "So I am very pleased that the FDA reform bill now being debated will exempt California's proposition 65." (Remarks of Sen. Boxer, 143 Cong.Rec. S9811-04, S9843 (Sept. 24, 1997); maj. opn., ante, p. 10.) These remarks do not suggest that Senator Boxer believed she had not only managed to fend off the uniformity requirements but had also succeeded in eliminating the narrow conflict preemption limitation the initiative had always faced. In fact, in remarks between the ones quoted by my colleagues, Senator Boxer lauds the accomplishments of the proposition: "Proposition 65 has successfully reduced toxic contaminants in a number of consumer products sold in California and it has even led the FDA to adopt more stringent standards for some consumer products." (Remarks of Sen. Boxer, at p. S9843.) These hardly sound like the words of someone who thought it was necessary to change the legal landscape under which the proposition had been functioning.

13 The remarks of Senator Jeffords must be considered in context. He and Senator Kennedy apparently disagreed about the uniformity provisions relating to the labeling or packaging of cosmetics. On September 5, 1997, when the quoted remarks were made (see maj. opn., ante, p. 10), this provision as it was then worded, [FN4] concerned Senator Kennedy because it precluded states from enacting legislation to protect their citizens. He described California as being "grandfathered in" (that is protected from the upcoming regulatory change) and sought a similar status for Massachusetts and other states. (Remarks of Sen. Kennedy, 143 Cong.Rec. S8851-01, S8860 (Sept. 5, 1997).) Though they preceded the comments of Senator Kennedy, the remarks of Senator Jeffords seem responsive to that concern: i.e., only California had acted in the past to deal with cosmetics and therefore it had received special protection from future preemption. (Remarks of Sen. Jeffords, 143 Cong.Rec. S8851-01, S8857 (Sept. 5, 1997).) Senator Jeffords, like Senator Boxer, never alluded to changing the ground rules Proposition 65 faced before the Modernization Act of 1997.

II. PROPOSITION 65 IS NOT PREEMPTED

Having concluded that the doctrine of conflict preemption applies despite the existence of the saving clause, I now turn to the determinative question whether Proposition 65 actually conflicts with federal law. The long- established rule is that an actual conflict between state and federal law will be found either where it is impossible for a private party to comply with both state and federal standards or where under the circumstances of a particular case the challenged state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. (Crosby v. National Foreign Trade Council (2000) 530 U.S. 363, 372-373, 120 S.Ct. 2288, 147 L.Ed.2d 352.) As I see it, the principal question requiring analysis here is the latter--whether federal purposes would be thwarted by requiring Proposition 65 compliant language on either packaging labels or point of sale signs. [FN5]

What constitutes a sufficient obstacle to the fulfillment of Congress's objectives so as to create a conflict is "a matter of judgment, to be informed by examining the federal statute as a whole and identifying its purpose and intended effects." (Crosby v. National Foreign Trade Council, supra, 530 U.S. at p. 373.) Consideration must also be given to whether state law is an obstacle to the goals expressed in the administrative regulations issued by the agency charged with implementing the federal statute. (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at pp. 874-886 [state tort lawsuit held preempted by vehicle safety regulation issued by the federal Department of Transportation].) In my judgment, Proposition 65 poses no obstacle to the purposes and intended effects of the FDCA or its implementing regulations. Geier instructs that "a court should not find pre-emption too readily in the absence of clear evidence of a conflict." (Geier, at p. 885.) I find no such evidence here.

14 As already indicated, a principal purpose of the FDCA is to protect consumers from dangerous products by requiring warnings of the risks to the user's health. (21 U.S.C. § 352(f).) Proposition 65 has the same objective, to give adequate warning to consumers. (Health & Saf.Code, § 25249.6.) Compliance with Proposition 65 would not frustrate the full-notice objective of the FDCA. (Cf. Chemical Specialties Mfrs. Ass'n, Inc. v. Allenby, supra, 958 F.2d at p. 950 [no conflict between Proposition 65 and Federal Hazardous Substances Act].)

Of course, the newly-added congressional purpose of establishing national uniformity in the labeling of nonprescription drugs (21 U.S .C. § 379r) would be thwarted by state-imposed warnings that are different from the warnings required by the FDCA. But Congress has excepted Proposition 65 from the uniform labeling requirement. (21 U.S.C. § 379r(a), (d)(2).) By expressly allowing California, through Proposition 65, to require labeling that differs from or adds to the labeling required by the FDCA, Congress has nullified any argument that its goal of uniformity would be thwarted by enforcement of Proposition 65. Past assertions by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) notwithstanding, the mere fact that a proposed warning differs from or adds to the its mandated warning cannot render the product "misbranded."

Another purpose of the FDCA is to protect consumers by ensuring that the labels on drugs and devices are not "false or misleading." (21 U.S.C. § 352(a).) To that end, the FDA regulations require that labeling on over-the- counter drugs be "clear and truthful in all respects." (21 C.F.R. § 330.10(a)(4)(v) (2001).) Labeling must include warnings expressed "in such terms as to render them likely to be read and understood by the ordinary individual, including individuals of low comprehension, under customary conditions of purchase and use." (Ibid.) There is nothing in Proposition 65 inconsistent with that federal objective. Proposition 65 requires a "clear and reasonable" message when a product contains a chemical known to cause cancer or birth defects or reproductive harm. (Health & Saf.Code, § 25249.6.) Under state regulations implementing Proposition 65, for consumer products that contain a chemical known to the state to cause reproductive toxicity, a warning in the following language is deemed clear and reasonable: "WARNING: This product contains a chemical known to the State of California to cause birth defects or other reproductive harm." (Cal.Code Regs., tit. 22, § 12601, subd .(b)(4)(B).) The state regulations require that the message be displayed so that it "is likely to be read and understood by an ordinary individual under customary conditions of purchase or use." (Cal.Code Regs., tit. 22, § 12601, subd. (b)(3).)

In a lawsuit filed under Proposition 65, a plaintiff is not required to persuade the court that a particularly worded warning is appropriate. [FN6] Rather, a plaintiff's burden is to demonstrate that a defendant's warning fails to comply with that law's requirements. For this reason, respondents' preemption defense can succeed only if all possible consumer product warnings that would satisfy Proposition 65 actually conflict with the federal standards. (Comm. of Dental Amalgam Mfrs. & Distribs. v. Stratton (9th Cir . 1996) 92 F.3d 807, 810; Chemical Specialties Mfrs.

Ass'n, Inc. v. Allenby, supra, 958 F.2d at p. 943; People ex rel. Lungren v. Cotter & Co., supra, 53 Cal.App.4th at p. 1393, 62 Cal.Rptr.2d 368.) The state regulations implementing Proposition 65 provide that warnings other than the safe harbor warnings are not precluded as long as the message clearly conveys that the chemical in question is known to cause cancer or birth defects or reproductive harm. (Cal.Code Regs ., tit. 22, § 12601, subd. (a).)

15 The respondents argue, however, that the warning prescribed by the FDA for nicotine replacement therapy (NRT) products establishes a ceiling as well as a floor and that the FDA has prohibited any Proposition 65 warning. This argument is premised on the notion that all possible Proposition 65 warnings would interfere with the FDA's stated policy against overwarning consumers about the risks inherent in NRT products, because this overwarning would discourage consumers from trying to stop smoking.

Respondents have not presented any formal FDA regulation on overwarning. Respondents point to a variety of less formal sources, which, they contend, establish its determination that Proposition 65 warnings constitute overwarning: (1) numerous letters exchanged between the FDA and the respondents, from 1996 through 2001, in which it rejected requests to permit the addition of certain supplemental warnings on NRT products; (2) a letter from the FDA to the California Attorney General, dated June 5, 1998, in which it rejected a request to compel the respondents to add the Proposition 65 safe harbor warning to their products; and (3) the August 17, 2001 FDA response to appellant's citizen petition (the Response), denying appellant's request to add a particular Proposition 65 warning to the products. Respondents' contention is unavailing.

The correspondence between the FDA and respondents was entirely too informal to establish a policy that would justify invoking the supremacy clause to invalidate a state law. The FDA letters seem to be nothing more than a formulaic response directing the manufacturers not to act while a review of the issue was conducted. In fact, in its amicus curiae brief, the FDA acknowledges that the correspondence between it and the manufacturers did not constitute a formal directive or set out a definitive FDA policy on proper warnings.

The FDA's letter to the California Attorney General, by its own terms, rejects only the Proposition 65 safe harbor warning. Moreover, the stated rationale for this conclusion, that the data justifies a warning only that nicotine may increase fetal heart rate, was specifically disavowed by it in the August 2001 Response.

The Response makes no determination that all Proposition 65 warnings conflict with an FDA policy on overwarning. It expresses a concern about any warning that discourages consumer use of NRT products. The FDA determined that consumers might be misled by a warning that contains the phrase "[n]icotine ... can harm your baby." Its criticism was directed, however, only at the specific warning proposed by appellant in his citizen petition, which was patterned after the Habitrol warning ["If pregnant or breast-feeding, ask a health professional before use. Nicotine, whether from smoking or medication, can harm your baby. First try to stop smoking without the patch."]. In the FDA's view, the Habitrol warning urged by appellant exaggerates the certainty and dimension of the harm by equating the harm resulting from NRT products with the harm resulting from smoking. Nothing in the Response provides "clear evidence" that the FDA would find all warnings that comply with Proposition 65 to be insufficient or confusing.

16 It seems more consistent with the language of the Response to view the FDA's concern about overwarning as a corollary of its objective of ensuring clear and accurate labeling. (21 U.S.C. § 352(a); 21 C.F.R. § 330.10(a)(4)(v) (2001).) In its Response, the FDA recognized the particular problems posed by NRT products when fashioning an adequate statement of the risks to the user: "NRT drug products pose significant challenges as compared to other [over-the-counter] drugs as they are indicated to break the addiction to smoking, a condition that is known to cause harm. When determining the proper labeling for these products, the [FDA] is faced with the difficult task of relaying the relative risks of the potential harm from NRT products versus the known harm caused by the continued use of tobacco products. [¶] ... [¶] ... The complexity of the data regarding exposure to nicotine during pregnancy and the relative risks of smoking versus use of NRT products are not easily translated to consumer friendly language on an [over-the-counter] package."

To be sure, a warning imposed by Proposition 65 that is inaccurate and misstates the risks of an over-the-counter drug would violate federal standards and be preempted. The manufacturers assert that any Proposition 65 warning would be false because NRT products are not truly "known" to cause reproductive harm. But this argument misstates the nature of the Proposition 65 warning. Proposition 65 does not require warnings about the harm of using particular products; the Proposition 65 warning is that the product contains a chemical known to cause reproductive harm. There is no dispute that the NRT products contain nicotine and that nicotine is linked to reproductive harm. California law explicitly recognizes a causative relationship (Cal.Code Regs., tit. 22, § 12000, subd. (c)), and, as evidenced by this record, California relied upon information obtained from the FDA as a basis for listing nicotine as a reproductive toxin. (See Cal.Code Regs., tit. 22, § § 12000, subd. (a), 12306, subd. (l)(4).) Even in its most recent communiqué, based on current data, the FDA continues to recognize a causative connection between nicotine and reproductive harm, although it is unable to quantify the precise contribution of nicotine to reproductive toxicity. [FN7] In its Response, the FDA explained: "[C]hronic nicotine exposure may represent some risk in humans for embryo-fetal lethality.... While smoking has clearly been associated with fetal harm, the contribution of nicotine has not been clearly delineated.... [¶] ... [¶] ... [C]igarette smoking results in the exposure of the fetus to a number of harmful substances, and it is impossible to ascertain the exact contribution of nicotine to the harm caused by smoking."

The FDA's recognition of the possibility of harm from nicotine is further evidenced in the newly-mandated label announced by the FDA in its Response: "If you are pregnant or breast-feeding, only use this medicine on the advice of your health care provider. Smoking can seriously harm your child. Try to stop smoking without using any nicotine replacement medicine. This medicine is believed to be safer than smoking. However, the risks to your child from this medicine are not fully known." (Boldface type in original.) The admonition that consumers should try to avoid using the product and use the product only with a doctor's advice, together with the statement that the risks of NRT products are not fully known, reflect the FDA's assessment that nicotine indeed may cause harm.

*17 There is no apparent reason why the new FDA-mandated warning could not be supplemented with the simple insertion, after the first sentence of that warning, of a statement, consistent with Proposition 65, acknowledging the risk that nicotine may cause fetal harm. This supplemental information about nicotine would in no way undermine the congressional goal of protecting consumers from unknown risks. And an accurate statement would certainly not violate the goal of truthful labeling. If anything, such an addition would seem to improve the clarity of the message to the consumer by revealing the reasons for the label's admonitions.

In appropriate circumstances, it may be true that overwarning (or underwarning) of the risks could render a package label "false or misleading." However, in the circumstances here, when applied to Proposition 65, there appears to be no basis for the FDA to reject accurate, easily understood supplemental warnings about nicotine simply because the warnings have the potential to discourage the use of an NRT product. Nothing in the FDCA reflects a congressional intent to limit clear and accurate warnings of health risks so that consumers might be more inclined to take advantage of certain beneficial products. (Motus v. Pfizer, Inc. (C.D.Cal.2000) 127 F.Supp.2d 1085, 1098 & fn. 11.) To the contrary, Congress has expressly allowed California to add its own supplemental warnings through Proposition 65. The FDA has no legitimate reason, within the scope of its authority to implement the FDCA, to soften the warning about nicotine any more than it has legitimate reason to soften warnings on other risky over-the-counter drugs that may have health benefits.

It is worth noting that the FDA's own regulations allow a manufacturer to add or strengthen a warning label without waiting for prior FDA approval. (21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2)(i) (2001) .) Contrary to the assertion of the FDA in its amicus curiae brief, a preapproval label supplement is not confined to minor editorial changes. In fact, the regulations allow minor editorial changes to be made without any FDA approval at all. (21 C.F.R. § 314.70(d)(3) (2001).) The implication from the regulations is that additional warnings to the consumer by the manufacturer are too important to defer until after the approval process is complete. It is difficult to understand, then, how the addition of warnings mandated by Proposition 65 would frustrate federal full-notice objectives when warnings voluntarily affixed would not. [FN8]

Respondents may, of course, be correct and the Response may have been intended to state an FDA policy on overwarning that would bar any modification of its proposed warning. The disquiet expressed in that document about the phrase "can harm your baby" may reflect a broad-based concern that would equally ban compliance with Proposition 65 regardless of the language of the warning in its entirety. If so, then it would appear that the FDA's concern for overwarning disguises the its actual goal of establishing label uniformity. In its Response, the FDA concluded that labeling of NRT products should be "consistent" and "uniform" and, while manufacturers "may also consider a different warning, they will have to provide data to support alternative wording." That pronouncement flies in the face of the saving clause (21 U.S.C. § 379r(d)(2)), by which Congress has given its imprimatur to different or supplemental warnings required by Proposition 65. The FDA recognized the difficulty of achieving the goal of a clear statement of the risks of NRT products but failed to perceive that it is in precisely this type of situation that the Congressional desire to permit variance needs to be honored.

18 In summary, I would conclude that Proposition 65 is not saved from any actual conflict with federal labeling standards. However, no actual conflict exists. Compliance with both Proposition 65 and federal regulations would not be physically impossible, nor would compliance with Proposition 65 interfere with congressional or FDA purposes. I concur in the majority's decision that the judgment must be reversed.

FN1. Respondents are GlaxoSmithKline Consumer Healthcare, LP, which markets Nicorette and NicoDerm CQ; McNeil Consumer Products Company and Pharmacia & Upjohn, Inc., which have marketed Nicotrol; Aventis Pharmaceuticals Inc., which is involved in the packaging of NicoDerm CQ; Alza Corporation, which manufactures NicoDerm CQ, and Costco Wholesale Corporation, Lucky Stores, Inc., Rite Aid Corporation, Safeway, Inc., and Walgreen Co., which retail Nicorette, NicoDerm CQ and/or Nicotrol.

FN2. The warnings for the various products differ in some minor respects. No party to this appeal contends the differences are relevant for purposes of this appeal.

FN3. On October 4, 2001, appellant and respondents filed a joint request asking this court to take judicial notice of the August 17, 2001 letter. An appellate court can, but is not required to, take judicial notice of documents that were not presented to the trial court in the first instance. (See, e.g., Brosterhous v. State Bar (1995) 12 Cal.4th 315, 325, 48 Cal.Rptr.2d 87, 906 P.2d 1242.) We will exercise our discretion and grant the request in this instance in order to provide context and background for our discussion.

FN4. While this appeal was being briefed, the parties filed two additional requests for judicial notice. We deferred ruling on the requests until our decision on the merits of the appeal. (Cf. People v. Preslie (1977) 70 Cal.App.3d 486, 493-494, 138 Cal.Rptr. 828.)
Having now considered the requests, we rule as follows:
On July 23, 2001, appellant filed a request asking this court to take judicial notice of three documents that relate to the efforts of Novartis to gain approval of its product Habitrol. Novartis is not a party to this appeal, and Habitrol is not one of the products at issue. The documents were not presented to the trial court in the first instance. We decline to consider them. (See Brosterhous v. State Bar, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 325, 48 Cal.Rptr.2d 87, 906 P.2d 1242.)
On December 4, 2001, amicus the People of the State of California filed a request asking this court to judicially notice (1) a letter from the FDA to an attorney concerning a different over-the-counter product, (coal tar shampoo,) (2) a motion for summary judgment filed in a different case by a litigant who is not a party to this appeal, and (3) a letter sent in 1989 to the FDA by the President's Office of Management and Budget. None of the documents were presented to the trial court. None of them are directly relevant to issues on appeal. We decline to consider them. (See Brosterhous v. State Bar, supra, 12 Cal.4th at p. 325, 48 Cal.Rptr.2d 87, 906 P.2d 1242.)

FN5. The United States Constitution, Article VI, clause 2 states, "... the laws of the United States ... shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, any thing in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."

FN6. The FDA, which has filed an amicus brief, agrees with this assessment. It concedes 21 United States Code section 379r "exempts Proposition 65 from express

preemption...."

FN7. The express preemption clause stated, "Whenever a Federal motor vehicle safety standard established under this subchapter is in effect, no State or political subdivision of a State shall have any authority either to establish, or to continue in effect, with respect to any motor vehicle or item of motor vehicle equipment[,] any safety standard applicable to the same aspect of performance of such vehicle or item of equipment which is not identical to the Federal Standard. [Citation.]" (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 867.)

FN8. The saving clause at issue in Geier stated, " '[C]ompliance with' a federal safety standard 'does not exempt any person from any liability under common law.' " (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 868.)

FN9. We note that a court imposing a penalty for violating Proposition 65 must evaluate several factors including, "[t]he nature and extent of the violation," "[w]hether the violator took good faith measures to comply with [Proposition 65]," "[t]he willfulness of the violator's misconduct," and "[a]ny other factor that justice may require." (Health & Saf.Code, § 25249.7, subds. (A), (D), (E), & (G).)

FN10. Having reached this conclusion, we need not address the other arguments that have been advanced.

FN1. In 1986, the California voters adopted the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986, also known as Proposition 65. (Health & Saf.Code, § 25249.5 et seq.)

FN2. At oral argument, appellant cited Louisiana Public Service Comm'n v. FCC (1986) 476 U.S. 355, 106 S.Ct. 1890, 90 L.Ed.2d 369 as a case in which the high court found that Congress had waived conflict preemption. That case, however, dealt with very different issues than our case. In Louisiana Public Service, the high court faced the contention that certain orders by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) relating to the depreciation of telephone plant and equipment preempted inconsistent state regulation. In the Communications Act of 1934, Congress granted regulatory authority to the FCC over " 'interstate and foreign commerce in wire and radio communication,' [citation], while expressly denying [the FCC] 'jurisdiction with respect to ... intrastate communication service,' [citation]," which was left to the states. (Louisiana Public Service, at p. 360.) The high court defined its task as "simply to determine where Congress has placed the responsibility for prescribing depreciation methods to be used by state commissions in setting rates for intrastate telephone service." (Id. at p. 359.) Louisiana Public Service was, then, simply a statutory construction case, where Congress had created dual regulation of the telephone industry. The Communications Act of 1934 had no relevant express preemption clause or saving clause, and there was no dispute that if the FCC had jurisdiction to establish the relevant depreciation methods, the challenged state methods were in conflict and would have been preempted.

FN3. Other states may apply for an exemption from uniform labeling, but such an exemption is conditioned on the absence of an actual conflict with federal law. (21 U.S.C. § 379r(b)(1)(B).)

FN4. This provision was apparently redrafted before the senate proceedings on September 24, 1997, to permit states to enact legislation unless the FDA had already acted in that specific area. This "compromise" was satisfactory to Senator Kennedy. (Remarks of Sen. Kennedy, 143 Cong.Rec. S9811-04, supra, at p. 9818.)

FN5. The doctrine of conflict preemption is also triggered when compliance with both state and federal law is impossible because one requires what the other prohibits. (Florida Avocado Growers v. Paul (1963) 373 U.S. 132, 142-143, 83 S.Ct. 1210, 10

L.Ed.2d 248.) Here, the trial court concluded that such a conflict existed in this case, resting its conclusion on the difference between plaintiff's proposed warnings and the federal requirements. I disagree with that conclusion. The FDCA and its implementing regulations require particular warning labels on the package for over-the-counter products. (21 U.S.C. § 352(f); 21 C.F.R. § § 201.60, 201.66 (2001).) Even if one were to conclude that Proposition 65 requires a warning that contradicts the federal requirements (a conclusion I do not draw), the state law does not mandate that the warning appear on the package label. Proposition 65 requires "clear and reasonable warning" of chemicals known to cause cancer or reproductive toxicity. (Health & Saf.Code, § 25249.6.) A " '[w]arning' ... need not be provided separately to each exposed individual and may be provided by general methods such as labels on consumer products, inclusion of notices in mailings to water customers, posting of notices, placing notices in public news media, and the like...." (Health & Saf.Code, § 25249.11, subd. (f).) The "safe harbor" regulations provide that the warning may be placed either on the product label or on a sign posted at the retail outlet in a visible place specifying the products containing chemicals that are known to the state to cause cancer, birth defects, or reproductive harm. (Cal.Code.Regs., tit.22, § 12601, subds.(b)(1)(A), (b)(1)(B), (b)(3).) Thus, Proposition 65 can be complied with by using point of sale signs. (Chemical Specialties Mfrs. Ass'n, Inc. v. Allenby (9th Cir.1992) 958 F.2d 941, 947, 949-950 [fungicides and insecticides]; People ex rel. Lungren v. Cotter & Co. (1997) 53 Cal.App.4th 1373, 1393-1396, 62 Cal.Rptr.2d 368 [paint].) And these "signs do not constitute labeling." (Chemical Specialties Mfrs. Ass'n, at p. 947.) Complying with both Proposition 65 and the federal requirements is not physically impossible.

FN6. In fact, in the complaint filed by appellant in this case, he suggests no specific warning requirement. In a contemporaneously filed motion for a preliminary injunction, however, he did propose one.

FN7. When classified as prescription products, NRT products contained the following FDA-mandated label identifying nicotine as a "mediator" in reproductive harm: "Cigarette smoking during pregnancy is associated with an increased risk of spontaneous abortion, low birth weight infants and perinatal mortality. Nicotine and carbon monoxide are considered the most likely mediators of this outcome."

FN8. The FDA emphasizes that a manufacturer is required to explain the "basis" for a preapproval change in label. (21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c) (2001).) It argues that the fact that a manufacturer is required by Proposition 65 to add warnings would not provide a satisfactory scientific explanation of the basis for the change of label. The argument is not persuasive. In light of the saving clause enacted by Congress expressly allowing the different or supplemental warnings called for by Proposition 65, a manufacturer's need to comply with Proposition 65 provides adequate justification for the change of label.

Drug Administration, Robert D. McCallum, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, David W. Shapiro, United States Attorney, Douglass Letter, Peter R. Maier, Department of Justice, Amicus Curiae on behalf of defendants and respondents.

JONES, P.J.

1 Appellant filed an action challenging the failure of respondents to place health warnings mandated by California's Proposition 65 on their nicotine delivery products, marketed over-the-counter as aids to stop smoking. The trial court granted summary judgment to respondents ruling that certain aspects of Proposition 65 are impliedly preempted by the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FDCA) (21 U.S.C. § 301 et seq.). Because the FDCA contains a provision that expressly exempts Proposition 65 from federal preemption, we will reverse the trial court's judgment.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Respondents in this action manufacture, market, and distribute over-the- counter products, such as gum and patches, that are designed to help people quit smoking through nicotine replacement therapy (the products). [FN1]

Originally, the products were available only by prescription. However in 1993, respondents sought Federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval to sell them over the counter.

One aspect of the approval process involved labeling. The FDCA includes strict labeling rules, stating that a product is deemed to be misbranded if "its labeling is false or misleading in any particular...." (21 U.S.C. § 352, subd. (a).) Respondents' application presented a complex labeling issue because the products contain nicotine, a substance recognized by the State of California to cause reproductive toxicity. (See 22 Cal.Code Regs., tit. 22, (Regs.) § 12000, subd. (c).) On the other hand, FDA officials recognized that the purpose of the products is to help individuals stop smoking, a public health goal that should not be frustrated by overwarning. As the chairman of the FDA's nonprescription drugs advisory committee stated, "[T]his is one of the few instances where we have a product that has come before this committee that I would like lots of people to use, that I think we are underusing.... [¶] So we want to make sure that we are not introducing barriers that would prevent people from using them, and what is worse, somebody continuing to smoke or not calling their physician and talking with him .... [¶] I think, at least as I am interpreting the sense of the committee is that let's be real careful on something we want people to use more of that we don't introduce barriers that would reduce their willingness to use the product."

Partly in an effort to balance these competing concerns, the products underwent an unusually long approval process. At the conclusion of that process, the FDA approved the products for sale subject to specific labeling requirements. In each instance, the FDA mandated that the products carry the following pregnancy warning: "Nicotine can increase your baby's heart rate; ... if you are pregnant or nursing a baby, seek the advice of a health professional before using this product." [FN2] In the course of processing supplemental new drug applications in the years that followed, the FDA told respondents they "must use," "should ... use," or to "please use," the FDA approved pregnancy warning, and that "[m]arketing the product with [labeling] that is not identical to the approved labeling text ... may render the product misbranded and an unapproved new drug."

2 Proposition 65 was approved by the voters of this state as an initiative on November 4, 1986. As is relevant here, it added section 25249.6 to the Health and Safety Code which states, "No person in the course of doing business shall knowingly and intentionally expose any individual to a chemical known to the state to cause ... reproductive toxicity without first giving clear and reasonable warning to such individual...." The regulations adopted to implement Proposition 65 state that the required warning "must clearly communicate that the chemical in question is known to the state to cause ... birth defects or other reproductive harm." (Regs., § 12601, subd. (a).) The regulations also describe optional safe harbor warnings that are deemed to be clear and reasonable. (Regs., § 12601, subd. (b).) One of those warning states as follows, "WARNING: This product contains a chemical known to the State of California to cause birth defects or other reproductive harm." (Regs., § 12601, subd. (b)(4)(B).) Finally, the regulations state that the warning may be accomplished in several ways including product labeling, store signs, and public advertising. (Regs., § 12601, subds.(b)(1)(A) through (b)(1)(C).)

In January 1997, respondent McNeil asked the FDA for permission to change the label for its product Nicotrol, to add the Proposition 65 safe harbor warning that we have quoted. The FDA denied the request telling McNeil it "[m]ust use the labeling that was approved at the time of ... approval."

Later that same year, the United States Congress enacted the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997 (Modernization Act of 1997). (See 111 Stat. 2296.) The Modernization Act of 1997 added a new section to the FDCA, 21 United States Code section 379r. Subdivision (a) of section 379r states, in part, "[N]o State or political subdivision of a State may establish or continue in effect any requirement--[¶] .... (2) that is different from or in addition to, or that is otherwise not identical with, a requirement under this Act...." Section 379r also includes a narrowly focused saving clause which states, "This section shall not apply to a State requirement adopted by a State public initiative or referendum enacted prior to September 1, 1997." (21 U.S.C. § 379r, subd. (d)(2).)

In August 1999, appellant, acting on behalf of the public, filed the complaint that is at issue in the present appeal. The complaint names respondents as defendants and contains two causes of action. First, appellant alleged respondents violated Health and Safety Code section 25249.6 because they placed products that contained nicotine into the "stream of commerce" without providing an adequate pregnancy warning as is required by Proposition 65. Second, appellant alleged those same acts (failing to provide an adequate Proposition 65 pregnancy warning) constituted an unfair business practice within the meaning of Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq. Appellant asked the court to issue an injunction precluding respondents from offering their products for sale in California without providing an adequate Proposition 65 warning.

*3 In November 1999, while the complaint was pending, the FDA granted permission to Novartis Consumer Health Care, Inc., (Novaratis) to sell a smoking cessation product called Habitrol. Although Habitrol contains nicotine and is similar in active ingredients, indication for use, and method of administration to the products at issue in this case, Habitrol carried a different FDA approved pregnancy warning. The Habitrol warning stated as follows, "Nicotine, whether from smoking or medication, can harm your baby." Novartis is not a party to this litigation.

When respondent SmithKline learned about the Habitrol pregnancy warning, it asked the FDA about its own warning. The FDA responded that it was "reviewing its position as it relates to the warnings of nicotine products concerning pregnancy and breast feeding."

In May 2000, respondents SmithKline and McNeil each wrote to the FDA, again pointing out that Habitrol carried a different pregnancy warning. Respondents also noted they were being sued by appellant who was alleging their warning was inadequate. In June 2000, the FDA responded to SmithKline that although it was reviewing its position on the pregnancy warning, SmithKline should continue to "use the current warning."

On July 11, 2000, counsel for SmithKline wrote to the FDA seeking confirmation about the pregnancy warning that was required. The FDA responded by letter 10 days later, stating that the products "must" carry the pregnancy warning that had been specified when they were approved.

In March 2001, the FDA sent a letter to SmithKline stating that even though Habitrol carried a different warning, the instructions concerning respondents' products remained unchanged. "[T]he agency is currently reviewing its position regarding the pregnancy/nursing warning on [over the counter] nicotine replacement products. [¶] ... As we have stated previously, until the agency's review is complete, all sponsors of [over the counter] nicotine replacement products should continue to use the pregnancy/nursing warning that was approved by the agency as part of their [new drug approval]. Any additional or modified warning may render the product misbranded." (Italics added.)

While respondents were working with the FDA in an effort to clarify their obligation to warn, appellant filed a motion for summary adjudication. As is relevant here, appellant asked the court to rule that respondents were required under Proposition 65 to provide a pregnancy warning. Respondents opposed the motion and filed a cross-motion for summary judgment. They argued, in essence, that any obligation to warn, which they may have had under Proposition 65, was preempted by federal law.

The trial court denied appellant's motion for summary adjudication and granted respondents' motion for summary judgment, ruling that appellant's Proposition 65 claims were impliedly preempted by the FDCA. The court explained its decision as follows, "Defendants have been expressly forbidden by the federal government from using the pregnancy warnings on their products that Plaintiff contends are required by state law. [¶] Where, as here, a federal agency requires one thing in accordance with its statutory authority, and a state statute requires another, and where both requirements cannot be satisfied simultaneously, conflict preemption exists and the state requirement must yield." In addition, the court ruled that any obligation to provide nonlabel warnings was impliedly preempted because "[r]equiring Defendants in advertising to use the same warning that FDA has expressly prohibited them from placing on their labels ... would frustrate the purpose of the FDCA...."

4 After the court entered judgment in favor of respondents, appellant filed the present appeal.

[1] By letter dated August 17, 2001, while this appeal was pending, the FDA responded to a citizen's petition appellant had filed with the agency on August 2, 2000. [FN3] The FDA said it was "grant[ing] [appellant's] request for a consistent pregnancy warning for all [over the counter nicotine replacement therapy] drug products that clearly and reasonably communicates all of the known harm and conveys the relative reproductive harm of smoking, use of [nicotine replacement therapy] drug products, and total abstinence from nicotine." The FDA proposed that all nicotine replacement products, including the products at issue and Habitrol, bear the following uniform pregnancy warning: "If you are pregnant or breast-feeding, only use this medicine on the advice of your health care provider. Smoking can seriously harm your child. Try to stop smoking without using any nicotine replacement medicine. This medicine is believed to be safer than smoking. However, the risks to your child from this medicine are not fully known." The agency denied appellant's request that it require a warning similar to the "harm your baby" warning on Habitrol.

II. DISCUSSION [FN4]

Appellant contends the trial court erred when it ruled that respondents' obligation to warn under Proposition 65 was impliedly preempted by the FDCA.

[2][3] The supremacy clause of Article VI of the United States Constitution grants to the Congress the power to preempt state law. [FN5] It is axiomatic then that state law that conflicts with a federal statute is " 'without effect.' " (Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc. (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 516, 112 S.Ct. 2608, 120 L.Ed.2d 407 (Cipollone), quoting Maryland v. Louisiana (1981) 451 U.S. 725, 746, 101 S.Ct. 2114, 68 L.Ed.2d 576.) It is equally well established that "[c]onsideration of issues arising under the Supremacy Clause 'start[s] with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States [are] not to be superseded by ... Federal Act unless that [is] the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.' " (Cipollone, at p. 516.) "Accordingly, ' "[t]he purpose of Congress is the ultimate touchstone' " of pre-emption analysis." (Ibid.)

The United States Supreme Court has explained that federal preemption arises in three circumstances. "First, Congress can define explicitly the extent to which its enactments pre-empt state law. [Citation.] Pre-emption fundamentally is a question of congressional intent, [citation] and when Congress has madeits intent known through explicit statutory language, the courts' task is an easy one. [¶] Second, in the absence of explicit statutory language, state law is pre-empted where it regulates conduct in a field that Congress intended the Federal Government to occupy exclusively. Such an intent may be inferred from a 'scheme of federal regulation ... so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it,' or where an Act of Congress 'touch[es] a field in which the federal interest is so dominant that the federal system will be assumed to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject.' [Citation.] Although this Court has not hesitated to draw an inference of field pre-emption where it is supported by the federal statutory and regulatory schemes, it has emphasized: 'Where ... the field which Congress is said to have pre-empted' includes areas that have 'been traditionally occupied by the States,' congressional intent to supersede state laws must be 'clear and manifest.' [Citations.] [¶] Finally, state law is pre-empted to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law. Thus, the Court has found pre-emption where it is impossible for a private party to comply with both state and federal requirements, [citation] or where state law 'stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.' " (English v. General Electric Co. (1990) 496 U.S. 72, 78-79, 110 S.Ct. 2270, 110 L.Ed.2d 65, fn. omitted.)

Here, the trial court ruled respondents' obligation to warn under Proposition 65 was impliedly preempted under the third category. Noting that respondents were "expressly forbidden by the federal government from using the pregnancy warnings ... required by state law," the court concluded the requirements of both the FDA and Proposition 65 "cannot be satisfied simultaneously...." In addition, the court ruled that any obligation to provide nonlabel warnings was impliedly preempted because "[r]equiring [respondents] in advertising to use the same warning that FDA has expressly prohibited them from placing on their labels ... would frustrate the purpose of the FDCA...."

[4] We turn then, to the pivotal issue in this case: whether the trial court ruled correctly when it held that respondents' obligation to warn under Proposition 65 was impliedly preempted by the FDCA.

To answer this question we focus on what we believe is the controlling statute. The Modernization Act of 1997 had many purposes, one of which was to establish "national uniformity for nonprescription drugs." (See 111 Stat. 2374.) This goal was accomplished by adding 21 United States Code section 379r to the FDCA, subdivision (a) of which states, in part, "[N]o State or political subdivision of a State may establish or continue in effect any requirement ... [¶] (2) that is different from or in addition to, or that is otherwise not identical with, a requirement under this Act...."

The broad language preempting state laws concerning nonprescription drugs is subject to a narrow exception related to state voter initiatives. 21 United States Code section 379r, subdivision (d)(2) states, "This section shall not apply to a State requirement adopted by a State public initiative or referendum enacted prior to September 1, 1997."

Proposition 65, by its terms, mandates warnings that are "different from" and "not identical with" those called for under the FDCA, and thus it comes within the scope of 21 United States Code section 379r, subdivision (a). However Proposition 65 was adopted by the voters of this state as a public initiative in November 1986, and therefore it comes within the saving clause set forth in 21 United States Code section 379r, subdivision (d)(2). As far as we can determine, Proposition 65 is the only state initiative or referendum covered by this saving clause.

These two subdivisions, read together, clearly articulate Congress's intent. While state laws governing nonprescription drugs are generally preempted by the FDCA, Proposition 65 is not preempted.

Our reading of 21 United States Code section 379r is confirmed by the legislative history of the statute. Statements made by individual legislators can "provide evidence of Congress'[s] intent" (Brock v. Pierce County (1986) 476 U.S. 253, 263, 106 S.Ct. 1834, 90 L.Ed.2d 248), and here, the Congressional Record confirms that Congress intended to exempt Proposition 65 from federal preemption. During the floor debates that led up to the enactment of the statute, Vermont Senator James Jeffords stated, "Now, the States have had authority to move into this area....You have to remember they have had this authority forever, I guess, and only one State has taken it upon themselves to really do anything in this area to try and solve the problem ... [¶] What did we do? We said, 'OK, California, fine, we will not get involved with preempting you with respect to your laws that are on the books. We will allow those laws to stand. The FDA can work around that." (Remarks of Sen. Jeffords, 143 Cong. Rec. S8851-01, S8857 (Sept. 5, 1997), italics added.)

6 During those same debates, California Senator Barbara Boxer stated, "Finally, I want to thank Senators GREGG and JEFFORDS for working with me to ensure that California's proposition 65 will not be preempted by the uniformity provisions of this bill. California's proposition 65 was passed by California voters in 1986 and requires that persons who expose others to certain levels of carcinogens or reproductive toxins give a clear and reasonable warning. [¶] Proposition 65 has successfully reduced toxic contaminants in a number of consumer products sold in California and it has even led the FDA to adopt more stringent standards from some consumer products.... So I am very pleased that the FDA reform bill now being debated will exempt California's proposition 65. " (Remarks of Sen. Boxer, 143 Cong. Rec. S9811-04, S9843 (Sept. 24, 1997), italics added.)

The statements we have quoted reinforce our interpretation of 21 United States Code section 379r. Congress clearly did not intend to preempt Proposition 65 under the FDCA. Since "Congress has made its intent known through explicit statutory language, [our] task is an easy one." (English v. General Electric Co., supra, 496 U.S. at p. 79.) The trial court erred when it ruled Proposition 65 was preempted by the FDCA.

Respondents do not dispute our interpretation of 21 United States Code section 379r. They concede that under the plain language of that statute, Proposition 65 is not expressly preempted by the FDCA. [FN6] However, respondents contend the expression of legislative intent set forth in the language of the saving clause avoids express preemption only, and has no bearing on implied conflict preemption analysis. According to respondents, implied conflict preemption arises from operation of the supremacy clause and turns on the existence of an actual conflict. Here, various actions taken by the FDA prevented them from complying with Proposition 65. Because compliance with both the state Proposition 65 and federal FDA directives are a physical impossibility, Proposition 65 is impliedly preempted under the doctrine of implied conflict preemption. This is so despite an explicit statement of Congressional intent to the contrary.

We reject the argument. Respondents have not cited, and we are not aware of, any case that holds a court can ignore Congress's clearly articulated and directly applicable express intent to preempt, (or as here, to "save" a particular state statutory scheme from preemption) based on an analysis of what Congress impliedly intended to do. We will not be the first.

Respondents base their argument primarily on language taken from a recent Supreme Court case, Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 120 S.Ct. 1913, 146 L.Ed.2d 914 (Geier). In Geier, the plaintiff was injured when the car she was driving struck a tree. She sued Honda, arguing the car was negligently designed because it lacked a driver's side air bag. The issue on appeal was whether plaintiff's common law tort claim was preempted by the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 (the Act). The court ruled first that the Act's express preemption clause [FN7] did not apply to the plaintiff's suit. (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at pp. 867-868.) The court was then required to determine whether a saving clause contained in the Act [FN8] precluded the application of ordinary implied preemption principles. The court said it did not, explaining, "We ... conclude that the saving clause ... does not bar the ordinary working of conflict pre-emption principles. [¶] Nothing in the language of the saving clause suggests an intent to save state-law tort actions that conflict with federal regulations. The words '[c]ompliance' and 'does not exempt,' ... sound as if they simply bar a special kind of defense, namely, a defense that compliance with a federal standard automatically exempts a defendant from state law, whether the Federal Government meant that standard to be an absolute requirement or only a minimum one.... It is difficult to understand why Congress would have insisted on a compliance-with-federal-regulation precondition to the provision's applicability had it wished the Act to 'save' all state-law tort actions, regardless of their potential threat to the objectives of federal safety standards promulgated under [the] Act." (Geier, at pp. 869-870.)

*7 Respondents interpret this passage as meaning that a saving clause can never preclude the application of implied preemption principles. This interpretation ignores the context of the Supreme Court's statement. The court in Geier ruled that the particular saving clause at issue did not preclude the application of implied preemption principles. It did not purport to establish some sort of all encompassing rule. This is made clear by the court's analysis. The court said an implied preemption analysis was not precluded because "[n]othing in the language of the saving clause suggest[ed] an intent to save state-law tort actions that conflict with federal regulations." (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 869.) Here we are faced with precisely the opposite situation. The saving clause set forth in 21 United States Code section 379r, subdivision (d)(2), not only "suggests" an intent to save some state law claims, it clearly articulates an express intent to save the precise types of claims that are issue in this case. The portion of Geier upon which respondents rely is not controlling.

Next, respondents rely on a passage from Geier where the court said that the "pre-emption provision, by itself, does not foreclose (through negative implication) 'any possibility of implied [conflict] pre-emption....' " (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 869.) Respondents cite this language as supporting the conclusion that an implied preemption analysis is required in all cases. However, the Supreme Court's statement must be read in the context of the case in which it was made. In Geier, the court was faced with a preemption clause that did not apply to the claim at issue. (Id. at pp. 867- 868.) Thus, the quote, read in context, simply stands for the proposition that an inapplicable preemption clause does not preclude the possibility of implied conflict preemption. (See Choate, supra, 222 F.3d at p. 794, fn. 8 [interpreting Geier this same way].) Here, we are called upon to determine the effect of a clearly applicable saving clause. The quoted language from Geier is inapposite.

Finally, respondents rely on language from Geier where the court said that "conflict pre-emption is different in that it turns on the identification of 'actual conflict,' and not on an express statement of pre-emptive intent. [Citations.]" (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 884.) We have no quarrel with this language or the legal principle it describes. It simply stands for the proposition that there can be implied preemption even where Congress did not expressly articulate its intent. Here, we are faced with the very different situation where Congress has expressed its intent, clearly and specifically. The language quoted cannot reasonably be read to support the conclusion that courts may ignore Congress's clearly articulated intent by applying an implied intent analysis.

[5] In sum, based on our analysis of 21 United States Code section 379r, we conclude the FDCA does not preempt Proposition 65. "Just as courts may not find state measures pre-empted in the absence of clear evidence that Congress so intended, so must they give full effect to evidence that Congress considered, and sought to preserve, the States' coordinate regulatory role in our federal scheme." (California v. FERC (1990) 495 U.S. 490, 497, 110 S.Ct. 2024, 109 L.Ed.2d 474.)

8 Our concurring colleague believes that Congress's express intention to save Proposition 65 from preemption is essentially irrelevant. According to the concurrence, "[s]imply because Congress insulated Proposition 65 from the express preemption clause does not mean that conflict preemption does not apply." (Conc.opn., p. 5.) We respectfully disagree.

The concurrence bases its argument on language contained in several recent cases that apply federal conflict preemption. (See Buckman Co. v. Plaintiffs' Legal Comm. (2001) 531 U.S. 341, 121 S.Ct. 1012, 148 L.Ed.2d 854 (Buckman); Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S.Ct. 2240, 135 L.Ed.2d 700 (Medtronic); and Freightliner Corp. v. Myrick (1995) 514 U.S. 280, 115 S.Ct. 1483, 131 L.Ed.2d 385 (Freightliner).) However, none of those cases dealt with preemption in a factual context similar to that presented here. Rather, the issue in each case was the scope of federal preemption where express preemption did not apply. Specifically, the court in Buckman declined to determine whether the express preemption clause at issue was applicable. (Buckman, at p. 348, fn. 2.) The same is true of Medtronic; the court declined to determine whether an express preemption clause applied. (Medtronic, at p. 503.) In Freightliner, the court ruled the express preemption clause at issue was inapplicable. (Freightliner, at p. 286.) In our view, language contained in those cases is not controlling here. Unlike the courts in Buckman, Medtronic, and Freightliner, we are called upon to determine the effect of a directly applicable saving clause that clearly expresses Congress's intent.

Similarly, the concurrence relies on language contained in Nathan Kimmel, Inc. v. Dowelanco (9th Cir.2002) 275 F.3d 1199 (Kimmel) and Choate, supra, 222 F.3d 788. (Conc.opn., p. 2.) But once again, the court in Kimmel declined to determine whether the express preemption clause at issue applied, while the Choate court found the express preemption clause to be inapplicable. (Kimmel, at p. 1204; Choate, at p. 794.) Those cases are not persuasive where, as here, we are faced with a clearly and directly applicable saving clause.

The concurrence also suggests it would be anomalous for Congress to enact a federal law that would allow state law conflicts to exist. (Conc.opn., p. 3.) The concurrence relies on language from Geier where the court stated, "Why ... would Congress not have wanted ordinary pre-emption principles to apply where an actual conflict with a federal objective is at stake? Some such principle is needed. In its absence, state law could impose legal duties that would conflict directly with federal regulatory mandates...." (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 871.)

Considered in context, we see no reason to read the language quoted as anything more than a comment on the specific safety standard at issue in Geier. Moreover, we think it is apparent why Congress would allow Proposition 65 to conflict with otherwise applicable Federal law. Congress was not writing on a blank slate when it decided to impose nationwide labeling uniformity for nonprescription drugs as part of the Modernization Act of 1997. At that point, Proposition 65 had been in effect for many years, and it had proven to be highly effective. As Senator Boxer explained, Proposition 65 had "successfully reduced toxic contaminants in a number of consumer products sold in California and it [had] even led the FDA to adopt more stringent standards [for] some consumer products...." (Remarks of Sen. Boxer, 143 Cong. Rec. S9811-04, S9843, Sept. 24, 1997.) We do not find it unusual that Congress would allow a longstanding and highly effective state law to remain in effect even though it might conflict with otherwise applicable federal law.

9 Finally, we must comment upon respondents' argument that if at any relevant time they failed to comply with the FDA's repeated directives to use only FDA mandated warnings, they faced sanctions for misbranding. Respondents urge that the FDA's position has consistently made it impossible to comply with both Proposition 65 and the FDCA, and suggest it would be unfair to hold them liable under such circumstances. We need not resolve this controversy. We do observe, nevertheless, that respondents' attempts to comply with their state obligations under Proposition 65 have been hindered by a federal bureaucracy that, at least since the enactment of the Modernization Act of 1997, was either unwilling or unable to recognize the limited scope of its authority. It also appears that respondents were further hindered by the FDA's admitted failure to issue "definitive advice" about what it deemed to be an appropriate warning label until its August 17, 2001 letter in response to appellant's citizen's petition. We must leave for another day the issue of whether respondents' efforts to satisfy the FDA limit or preclude their liability [FN9] under Proposition 65. [FN10]

III. DISPOSITION

The judgment is reversed. Costs to appellant.

I concur: STEVENS, J.

SIMONS, J., Concurring.

I agree that the judgment must be reversed. However, I respectfully disagree with my colleagues' constitutional analysis. I cannot accept the majority's decision that Congress has excepted the requirements imposed by Proposition 65 [FN1] not only from the express preemption clause but also from the operation of conflict preemption. I would find that Congress did no more in section 412 of the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997 (Modernization Act of 1997) (21 U.S.C. § 379r) than save Proposition 65 from the uniformity provisions, while leaving intact the ban on actual conflicts between state and federal law. I would nevertheless reverse the judgment on the ground that no actual conflict has been demonstrated here.

I. PREEMPTION

The relatively clear language of the supremacy clause (U.S. Const., art. VI, cl.2) has generated a considerable jurisprudence on the question of federal preemption of state law. The United States Supreme Court has noted three different categories of preemption. "State action may be foreclosed by express language in a congressional enactment [citation], by implication from the depth and breadth of a congressional scheme that occupies the legislative field [citation], or by implication because of a conflict with a congressional enactment [citation]." (Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly (2001) 533 U.S. 525, 541, 121 S.Ct. 2404, 150 L.Ed.2d 532.) In the last decade, the high court has struggled with the relationship between express and conflict preemption. That is, to the extent that a federal statute expressly addresses the scope of preemption, is there any place for an implied conflict preemption rule? Since the high court's most recent pronouncements on this subject clearly answer this question in the affirmative, I believe the majority's analysis of the manufacturers' conflict preemption argument is flawed.

10 In Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc. (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 517, 112 S.Ct. 2608, 120 L.Ed.2d 407, the high court seemed to hold that an express preemption provision precludes the existence of implied preemption: "Congress' enactment of a provision defining the pre-emptive reach of a statute implies that matters beyond that reach are not pre-empted." In Freightliner Corp. v. Myrick (1995) 514 U.S. 280, 288, 115 S.Ct. 1483, 131 L.Ed.2d 385, however, the court clarified its holding in Cipollone and held that an express preemption provision, by itself, does not foreclose, through negative implication, any possibility of implied conflict preemption. (Accord, Geier v. American Honda Motor Co., Inc. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 869, 120 S.Ct. 1913, 146 L.Ed.2d 914 (Geier).) This conclusion was underscored in Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 503, 116 S.Ct. 2240, 135 L.Ed.2d 700, in which the high court recognized that a state statute left untouched by an express preemption clause might still be preempted under conflict preemption analysis. (See Nathan Kimmel, Inc. v. Dowelanco (9th Cir.2002) 275 F.3d 1199, 1204 ["We need not determine the exact length of the preemptive shadow cast by the express language of [the statute], however, because ordinary conflict preemption principles dictate that [the plaintiff's] state law claim is impliedly preempted by [the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act]."]; Scordato, Federal Preemption of State Tort Claims (2001) 35 U.C. Davis L.Rev. 1, 17-18.)

Under the preemption doctrine, a "saving" clause is a statutory provision that restricts the ambit of federal preemption. In recent years, the high court has considered the relationship between such clauses and conflict preemption and has concluded that the existence of a saving clause does not preclude "the ordinary working of conflict pre-emption principles." (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 869.) In sum, in determining whether a state law is preempted by a federal provision, the current view of the United States Supreme Court is that the state law is subject to an implied conflict analysis, even if the applicable federal law contains express preemption and saving clauses. (Buckman Co. v. Plaintiffs' Legal Comm. (2001) 531 U.S. 341, 352, 121 S.Ct. 1012, 148 L.Ed.2d 854; Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 869; see also Nathan Kimmel, Inc. v. Dowelanco, supra, 275 F.3d at p. 1204; Choate v. Champion Home Builders

Co. (10 Cir.2000) 222 F.3d 788, 794.)

The high court has acknowledged the possibility that Congress could insert a saving clause that eliminates conflict as well as express preemption. (Geier, supra, 529 U.S. at p. 872.) It is no exaggeration to say, however, that the court conveyed substantial skepticism about Congress's interest in ever doing so: "Why, in any event, would Congress not have wanted ordinary pre- emption principles to apply where an actual conflict with a federal objective is at stake? Some such principle is needed. In its absence, state law could impose legal duties that would conflict directly with federal regulatory mandates.... [I]t would take from those who would enforce a federal law the very ability to achieve the law's congressionally mandated objectives that the Constitution, through the operation of ordinary pre-emption principles, seeks to protect." (Geier, at pp. 871-872.) "[O]ne can assume that Congress or an agency ordinarily would not intend to permit a significant conflict." (Id. at p. 885.) Neither the dissenting nor the majority opinion in Geier cited any case in which a saving clause was so construed. Similarly, neither the parties to this appeal nor my colleagues in their majority opinion have found any such case. [FN2] The United States Supreme Court, in fact, has consistently refused to interpret a saving clause broadly when to do so would permit a state enactment to conflict with a carefully devised regulatory scheme. (Geier, at pp. 873-874; United States v. Locke (2000) 529 U.S. 89, 106-107, 120 S.Ct. 1135, 146 L.Ed.2d 69; American Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Central Office Telephone, Inc. (1998) 524 U.S. 214, 227-228, 118 S.Ct. 1956, 141 L.Ed.2d 222; International Paper Co. v. Ouellette (1987) 479 U.S. 481, 493-494, 107 S.Ct. 805, 93 L.Ed.2d 883; see also Wyoming v. U.S. (10th Cir.2002) 279 F.3d 1214, 1234-1235 [saving clause within the National Wildlife Refuge System Improvement Act did not permit state regulation which conflicted with its purpose].)

11 With that framework in mind, I turn now to the federal law at issue. The Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (FDCA) was enacted to protect the public from deleterious, adulterated and misbranded items, including over-the-counter drugs. (United States v. Walsh (1947) 331 U.S. 432, 434; , 67 S.Ct. 1283, 91 L.Ed. 1585 21 U.S.C. § 331(b).) To protect consumers from dangerous products, the FDCA requires, among other things, that drugs and devices be labeled with warnings of the risks to the user's health. (21 U.S.C. § 352(f); see generally United States v. Sullivan (1948) 332 U.S. 689, 696- 697, 68 S.Ct. 331, 92 L.Ed. 297 [sulfathiazole tablets]; Papike v. Tambrands, Inc. (9th Cir.1997) 107 F.3d 737, 739 [tampons].) Moreover, the FDCA prohibits labels on drugs and devices that are "false or misleading." (21 U.S.C. § 352(a).)

Prior to the Modernization Act of 1997, the FDCA contained no express preemption clause. States were free to require labels different from those mandated by the Food and Drug Administration so long as those warnings did not actually conflict with federal requirements. (Savage v. Jones (1912) 225 U.S. 501, 529-539, 32 S.Ct. 715, 56 L.Ed. 1182 [state labeling requirement held nonconflicting and valid]; cf. McDermott v. Wisconsin (1913) 228 U.S. 115, 131-137, 33 S.Ct. 431, 57 L.Ed. 754 [state labeling requirement in conflict with federal standards held invalid].) There is no dispute that, with the enactment of the Modernization Act of 1997, Congress expressly intended to establish national uniformity for labeling of nonprescription drugs and to preempt state law with respect to labeling: "[N]o State ... may establish or continue in effect any requirement--[¶] ... [¶] (2) that is different from or in addition to, or that is otherwise not identical with, a requirement under [the FDCA]." (21 U.S.C. § 379r(a)(2).) The dispute in this case concerns not Congress's intent to preempt state law but its intent to save Proposition 65 from this preemption.

Congress carved out of the express preemption clause an exception for certain state initiatives: "Except as provided in subsection ... (d)," no state may impose requirements that differ from, add to, or are not identical to federal requirements. (21 U.S.C. § 379r(a), italics added.) Section 379r(d), in turn, provides: "This section shall not apply to a State requirement adopted by a State public initiative or referendum enacted prior to September 1, 1997." Proposition 65 comes within this exception and is apparently the only state initiative to qualify. [FN3] There is no doubt that this saving clause permits California, when acting pursuant to Proposition 65, to require label warnings that differ from, add to, or are otherwise not identical to the label requirements imposed under the FDCA. I cannot accept, however, the majority's conclusion that this saving clause further permits California to impose labeling requirements that actually conflict with federal requirements.

My colleagues conclude that because it is clear that Congress enacted an express preemption clause (creating uniformity) and then expressly saved Proposition 65 from the uniformity requirements, it is inappropriate to search for an implied legislative intent to retain actual conflict preemption. United States District Court,

Flora MOTUS, Plaintiff,
v.
PFIZER INC. (Roerig Division), et al., Defendants.

No. CV 00-00298 AHM (SHx).

Dec. 12, 2000.

Wife of patient who committed suicide after taking anti-depressant drug brought suit against drug manufacturer, alleging wrongful death and negligence, strict liability, and a survival action for the pain, suffering, and losses that patient sustained while using the drug. Drug manufacturer moved for partial summary judgment. The District Court, Matz, J., held that: (1) federal law governing warning labels on drugs approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) did not preempt failure-to-warn claim brought under state law by wife of patient who committed suicide after taking anti-depressants; (2) permitting state law claims for failure to warn did not conflict with the purposes and objectives of Congress by over-deterring use of the medicine; and (3) wife stated claim under California law premised on strict liability based on inadequate warning.

Motion denied.

There are three ways in which federal law will preempt a state law, including (1) Congress explicitly defines the extent to which its enactment preempts state law, (2) state law regulates conduct in a field that Congress intended federal government to occupy exclusively, and (3) state law actually conflicts with federal law; these categories are not rigidly distinct, but may overlap.

Federal law governing warning labels on drugs approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) did not preempt failure-to-warn claim brought under state law by wife of patient who committed suicide after taking anti-depressants; adopting the stronger suicide warnings that wife advocated under state law would not make it impossible for drug manufacturer to comply both with wife's demands for additional warnings and with FDA's requirement that drug manufacturer use the exact labeling approved by the agency, which contained only a modest suicide warning. Permitting state law claims for failure to warn of possibility of suicide as result of taking anti-depressant drug did not conflict with the purposes and objectives of Congress by over-deterring use of the medicine approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) or by reducing the drug label's effectiveness in communicating necessary information to doctors, and thus, state law claim was not preempted by federal drug labeling laws, where there was no persuasive evidence establishing threat of overdeterrence from strengthening suicide warning labels for the drug, and drug already contained modest warning concerning suicide. ORDER DENYING PFIZER'S MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT small minority of patients may experience 1098 emergent suicidal thoughts or evince such behavior during the pharmacological treatment of depression" and that "[p]atients should be warned that suicidal ideation may occasionally worsen in the course of treatment ... and that such an event would be a reason for immediately contacting their doctor. Applying this standard clinical practice to all patients would constitute a reasonable safeguard in the event that there are, indeed, a small minority of vulnerable patients who are at risk for emergent suicidal ideation." Id. at 112, 114.

In sum, the Court finds an absence of persuasive evidence establishing a threat of overdeterrence from strengthening suicide warning labeling for SSRIs. Indeed, several of the sources suggest that overdeterrence is not a concern because they recommend providing modest warnings that antidepressants may contribute to suicidal thoughts or action.

Pfizer also asserts that FDA's own rationale for rejecting strengthened suicide warnings for SSRIs was concern about overdeterrence. In support, Pfizer cites to the opening remarks to a PDAC committee meeting of Dr. Paul Leber, the then-Director of the FDA Division of Neuropharmacological Drug Products. Leber stated that:

> It is very difficult for us to be Solomon-like in situations as complex and vexing as this ... We have to recognize that the 'net effect' of 'modifying antidepressant drug labeling' 'might be a reduction in the use of antidepressants in the treatment of depression, and that the result might cause overall injury to the public health ... many letters we receive ... emphasize this point. Whether they are correct or not, I am not going to speak to that, but certainly it is a concern.'

DSUF, ¶ 37; Gaul Dec., Exh. 14, p. 662-3. Further, the "Excerpted Comments" of Dr. Leber's remarks state that "if Prozac is not more likely to induce suicidal thoughts, acts and other violent behaviors, a labeling change of the sort contemplated by some, beyond being false and misleading, might well have a net adverse effect." Id.

The Court is not persuaded that FDA has found or has relied on a finding that strengthened suicide warnings would overdeter SSRI use. First, Leber's comments state only that strengthened suicide warnings "might " overdeter SSRI use. Leber himself states that:

> [i]t is easy enough for me to understand why someone could conclude it would be constructive and in the interest of public health to inform individuals using the drug, and the practitioners, about the high rate of reporting ... [I]t is not difficult to appreciate the arguments of those who advocate what have you got to lose? Why not at least point out that some people believe there is a special linkage between Prozac and suicidal ideation.

Exh. 14, p. 663. Leber's introductory comments set out different positions on SSRI labeling and do not discuss "whether they are correct or not." Id. at 662. Second, Pfizer has not established that Leber's ostensibly informal introductory comments to a committee meeting represent the formal position of the FDA.

The evidence Pfizer cites does not establish a threat of overdeterrence or a congressional purpose of preventing overdeterrence. [FN11] Thus, Pfizer has not presented surveys, statistical data or other facts. Pfizer may be correct in its assertion ... but it may not be. Potential users of Zoloft might continue to ingest it but simply be more vigilant about noticing the emergence of or an increase in suicidal ideation and more likely to call their doctor in the event of an adverse reaction.

> FN11. Pfizer presents no legislative history or other evidence suggesting that in creating the FDA and enacting drug laws Congress intended to prevent or even considered overdeterrence of drug use.

1099 Pfizer also argues, based on Chicago and Northwestern Transportation Co. v. Kalo Brick & Tile Co., 450 U.S. 311, 101 S.Ct. 1124, 67 L.Ed.2d 258 (1981), that preemption is appropriate because FDA's approval of Pfizer's labeling for Zoloft and determination that Pfizer was not required to add to the label should be "entitled to considerable deference." Defendant's Motion, p. 25. In Kalo Brick, a shipper brought an action against a railroad to recover under state law for failure to provide adequate rail service. The railroad had abandoned a railroad line and, pursuant to the Interstate Commerce Act ("ICA"), the Interstate Commerce Commission ("ICC") had approved that abandonment. The Supreme Court held that the ICA preempted the shipper's state law claims. Id. at 327, 101 S.Ct. 1124. Pfizer argues that Kalo Brick is instructive because in both that case and here an agency was empowered to approve defendant's challenged conduct, balanced the relevant interests and then approved the conduct. Defendant's Motion, p. 24-5.

Kalo Brick is inapposite. In that case, the Supreme Court specifically held that the "findings by the Commission, made pursuant to the authority delegated by Congress, simply leave no room for further litigation over the matters respondent seeks to raise in state court." Id. at 327, 101 S.Ct. 1124. In accordance with that holding, the Court repeatedly emphasized the pervasive and exclusive nature of the ICA:

> The [ICA] is among the most pervasive and comprehensive of federal regulatory schemes...[T]he authority of the [ICC] to regulate abandonments is exclusive ... The breadth of the Commission's statutory discretion suggests a congressional intent to limit judicial > interference ... The Act in fact spells out with considerable precision the remedies of a shipper ... Congress intended that an aggrieved shipper should seek relief in the first instance from the Commission ... It would vitiate the overarching congressional intent of creating an efficient an nationally integrated railroad system ... to permit the State of Iowa to use the threat of damages to do exactly what the Commission is empowered to excuse. A system under which each State could, through its own courts, impose on railroad carriers its own version of reasonable service requirements could hardly be more at odds with the uniformity contemplated by Congress in enacting the [ICA].

Kalo Brick, 450 U.S. at 318, 321-2, 323, 325-6, 101 S.Ct. 1124. In contrast, several courts have held that food and drug regulation and FDA determinations regarding labeling standards are not so broad or exclusive as to preempt state law claims. See supra at p. 10-11. Because Kalo Brick was based largely on the pervasive and exclusive nature of the ICA, it does not require preemption here.

In sum, the Court finds that Pfizer has failed to establish that plaintiff's state law failure to warn claims conflict with congressional purposes.

In fact, the Court notes that permitting plaintiff's state law "failure to warn" claims may complement the congressional purposes of FDA regulations. Pfizer does not dispute that the FDA and its governing statute and regulations serve the purpose of enhancing drug safety. Defendant's Motion, p. 20-21; 21 U.S.C. § § 355(d) and 393(b)(2)(B). As plaintiff asserts, state law suits against drug manufacturers for defective drug design or failure to warn can serve the same public safety purpose as federal regulations by punishing perpetrators and thus preventing future harm. [FN12] Bansemer v. Smith 1100 Labs., 1990 WL 132579, *3 (E.D.Wis.1988). Indeed, state suits may complement the regulatory methods of promoting safety by directly flushing out more information about the risks of drugs and indirectly encouraging manufacturers to make complete risk disclosures to the FDA. Id. at *4 (quoting Ferebee v. Chevron Chemical Co., 736 F.2d 1529, 1541-42 (D.C.Cir.1984)). [FN13]

> FN12. The Court acknowledges that just because federal law and state law serve the same general purpose does not mean that no conflict can exist. Defendant's Motion, p. 20 (citing Geier v. American Honda Motor Co., 529 U.S. 861, 120 S.Ct. 1913, 1923-25, 146 L.Ed.2d 914 (2000)). However, the Court has examinedPfizer's asserted bases for a conflict and has rejected them.

> FN13. Plaintiff asserts that the FDA has itself acknowledged "the importance of jury verdicts and the fact that they can help the FDA learn about the dangers of drugs." Opposition, p. 24. Plaintiff cites the following language from the FDA's denial of the CCHR petition to withdraw approval of Prozac: "On the other hand, an actual court finding of a causal relationship between Prozac and violent behavior would be relevant. In that event, the agency would be able to evaluate the scientific basis for the court's conclusion and consider whether the court's conclusion warranted a modification of its own position." Gaul Dec., Exh. 12, p. 513. FDA made this comment in response to CCHR's assertion that several lawsuits had been filed against Lilly based on Prozac's alleged causation of tardive dyskinesia. FDA's response was that mere filings are irrelevant but that actual court findings could be. Although the factual context of the comment is different from the circumstances here (e.g., different drug, different alleged adverse effect), the comment nonetheless does indicate that judicial findings based on scientific evidence may play a role in FDA determinations and could affect FDA's position on the issue of health risks.

B. Bar under California Law

[5] Pfizer argues that plaintiff's California state law strict liability inadequate warning claims are barred under the California Supreme Court case of Carlin v. Superior Court, 13 Cal.4th 1104, 1115, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347 (1996). In Carlin, a prescription drug user brought a products liability action against a drug manufacturer for failure to warn about known or reasonably scientifically knowable dangerous propensities of a drug. Despite the defendant's argument that permitting plaintiff's strict liability claims to proceed would create a conflict with FDA labeling regulations, the Court held that plaintiff successfully stated a cause of action for strict liability premised on failure to warn. Carlin, 13 Cal.4th at 1113, 1118, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347. Pfizer nevertheless relies on the following dicta from Carlin:

> [I]n the case of an alleged "known" risk, if state-of-the art scientific data was fully disclosed to the FDA and it determined, after review, that the pharmaceutical manufacturer was not permitted to warn--e.g., because the data was inconclusive or the risk was too speculative to justify a warning--the manufacturer could present such evidence to show that strict liability cannot apply; the FDA's conclusion that there was, in effect, no "known risk" is controlling.

Carlin, 13 Cal.4th at 1114-1115, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347. Based on this dicta, Pfizer argues that because FDA has not found that SSRIs cause suicide, plaintiff cannot establish that Pfizer knew that SSRIs and Zoloft cause suicide and therefore cannot make out a strict liability claim. Defendant's Motion, p. 15.

The Court rejects this argument. First, the language Pfizer relies on is only dicta and did not affect the Court's ultimate holding that plaintiff's claims could proceed. Second, the dicta refers only to the effect on FDA determinations on the issue of "known risks"; it does not say anything about the other possible basis that a plaintiff may, and that Motus did, assert for strict liability failure to warn claims--namely, that a manufacturer reasonably should have known about certain risks. Complaint, ¶ 33 ("defendants knew or should have known that their product was unsafe."). Third, the dicta does not state that an FDA determination is wholly preemptive; it instead states merely that "the manufacturer could present such evidence [of FDA's determination] to show that strict liability cannot apply," which is consistent with the California Supreme Court's statement that: "[i]n appropriate cases, FDA action or inaction, though not 1101 dispositive, may be admissible ... to show whether a risk was known ..." Carlin, 13 Cal.4th at 1114, 1115, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347 (emphasis added). Fourth, the dicta expressly states that it applies only to those situations in which FDA "determined, after review, that the pharmaceutical manufacturer was not permitted to warn ..." The Court has already found that FDA has never determined that Pfizer was not permitted to strengthen the Zoloft suicide warning, but instead determined only that Pfizer was not required to include strengthened warnings. For these reasons, Carlin is inapposite. [FN14]

> FN14. Plaintiff attacks Carlin 's dicta because it requires that "state-of-the-art scientific data concerning the alleged risk was fully disclosed to the FDA..." and plaintiff asserts that Pfizer did not disclose all risk-related data to FDA. Opposition, p. 10. It is not clear that this issue may be or need be evaluated by the Court and the Court does not reach it on this motion.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and good cause appearing therefor, the Court DENIES defendant's motion for partial summary judgment.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Victor Motus suffered from depression. To help deal with that illness, sometime in November 1998 he began taking the drug "Zoloft," which is manufactured by defendant Pfizer Inc. ("Pfizer"). Zoloft was prescribed and supplied to Victor Motus by his internist, to whom Pfizer had provided a supply of Zoloft as a sample. For the approximately one week that he took Zoloft, Victor Motus experienced agitation, confusion and suicidal thinking. On November 12, 1998, he took his life by shooting himself.

Plaintiff Flora Motus ("Motus") was married to Victor Motus. She has brought this lawsuit, removed here from state court, seeking recovery on three claims: 1087 (1) "wrongful death/negligence"; (2) strict liability; and (3) "survival action" for the pain, suffering and losses that Victor Motus sustained while using Zoloft. Her complaint alleges, among other things, that Pfizer "negligently ... fail[ed] to adequately warn the medical community, the general public and plaintiff's decedent, Victor Motus ... of the dangers, contraindications and side effects ... of Zoloft" [Complaint, ¶ 27] and that in the United States "Zoloft was not properly labeled by defendants [FN1] ... and was not accompanied by proper warnings for safe, informed use ... [T]he labeling ... did not warn physicians in general and Decedent in particular of the dangers inherent in its use, particularly that the drug can cause the user to become violent and suicidal." Complaint, ¶ 58.

FN1. Various "DOES" are sued along with Pfizer.

Here is the suicide-related precaution that Pfizer gave:

> Suicide--The possibility of a suicide attempt is inherent in depression and may persist until significant remission occurs. Close supervision of high risk patients should accompany initial drug therapy. Prescriptions for Zoloft (sertraline) should be written for the smallest quantity of capsules consistent with good patient management, in order to reduce the risk of overdose.

Now Pfizer has moved for partial summary judgment dismissing plaintiff's "inadequate warning" claims. Pfizer seeks an order that as a matter of law it may not be held liable for its failure to include in the labeling for Zoloft a warning of the risk of suicide. Pfizer argues that under both California law and federal "conflict" preemption doctrine, plaintiff's state law claims based on Pfizer's failure to include a suicide warning in Zoloft's labeling are barred because the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") has already considered and rejected the inclusion of such a warning in Zoloft's labeling. Motus responds that 1) although FDA did approve Pfizer's proposed labeling for Zoloft without the suicide warning, FDA did not prohibit Pfizer from adding such a warning and 2) Congress has not preempted state tort law claims for failure to warn just because FDA has approved a manufacturer's proposed warnings.

The Court DENIES defendant's motion for partial summary judgment. As set forth in more detail below, Pfizer has failed to establish that a plaintiff is barred from asserting state law tort claims based on failure to warn of a suicide risk.

FACTS [FN2]

FN2. All the facts recited in this Order are undisputed unless otherwise noted.

A. Statutory Background

One aspect of the FDA's mission is to ensure that drugs sold in the United States are "safe and effective." 21 U.S.C. § § 355(d) and 393(b)(2)(B). To obtain FDA approval of a drug, a manufacturer must submit a New Drug Application ("NDA"). 21 U.S.C. § 355(b). NDAs must include: "full reports of investigations which have been made to show whether or not such drug is safe for use and whether such drug is effective in use ... and specimens of the labeling proposed to be used for such drug." Id. The FDA will disapprove an NDA if:

> (1) the investigations ... do not include adequate tests ... to show whether or not such drug is safe for use ... (2) the results of such tests show that such drug is unsafe for use ... or do not show that such drug is safe for use ... (4) ... [there is] insufficient information to determine whether such drug is safe for use ... or (7) based on a fair evaluation of all material facts, [the product's] labeling is false or misleading in any particular...

21 U.S.C. § 355(d).

If FDA approves an NDA, FDA will withdraw that approval if:

> 1088 clinical or other experience, tests, or other scientific data show that such drug is unsafe ... [or] that new evidence of clinical experience, not contained in such application or not available to the Secretary until after such application was approved, or tests by new methods, or tests by methods not deemed reasonably applicable when such application was approved, evaluated together with the evidence available to the Secretary when the application was approved, shows that such drug is not ... safe for use ... or that the application contains any untrue statement of a material fact.

21 U.S.C. § 355(e).

B. The Zoloft New Drug Application

On April 13, 1988, Pfizer submitted an NDA to the FDA seeking approval to market Zoloft for treatment of depression. Defendant's Statement of Uncontroverted Facts

Copr. © West 2002 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

("DSUF"), ¶ 11. Zoloft is the registered trademark and brand name in the United States for sertraline hydrochloride. DSUF, ¶ 2. Sertraline hydrochloride is one of a class of medicines commonly referred to as "selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors," or "SSRIs." Id.

Pursuant to Title 21 U.S.C. § 355, the statute governing New Drug Applications, Pfizer submitted 117 volumes of safety and efficacy data on Zoloft that Pfizer had developed during the preceding seven years. DSUF, ¶ 12; 21 U.S.C. § 355(b). These submissions included information about suicidality in patients given Zoloft, placebos and other drugs, although plaintiff disputes the completeness and accuracy of the information. DSUF, ¶ 13; Opposition, passim.

On November 19, 1990, FDA convened a committee of experts, the Psycho- pharmacological Drugs Advisory Committee ("PDAC"), to review the Zoloft NDA and to advise FDA regarding the medicine's safety and efficacy. DSUF, ¶ 14. As part of his presentation of safety data, one of the PDAC experts, Dr. James Knudson, addressed suicide attempts in Zoloft, placebo and active-control treated patients during the clinical studies of Zoloft. DSUF, ¶ 17. Dr. Knudson stated that:

> Realizing the difficulty in interpreting data where analyses ignore differential exposure time, this table does show that disproportionate numbers of suicides do not occur among the three treatment groups. All suicide attempts appeared in depressed patients, none in the obese.

Id. At the conclusion of the meeting, the PDAC voted unanimously that the evidence Pfizer produced had shown that Zoloft "is safe when used in the treatment of depression." DSUF, ¶ 18.

On September 30, 1991, FDA issued its "approvable" letter for the Zoloft NDA. DSUF, ¶ 18. The letter stated that FDA has "proposed a number of changes to the draft labeling submitted in your July 24, 1990 amendment" and it proposed some different labeling. Id. The precaution section of the proposed labeling included this statement regarding suicide:

> Suicide--The possibility of a suicide attempt is inherent in depression and may persist until significant remission occurs. Close supervision of high risk patients should accompany initial drug therapy. Prescriptions for Zoloft (sertraline) should be written for the smallest quantity of capsules consistent with good patient management, in order to reduce the risk of overdose.

DSUF, ¶ 20. The FDA letter instructed Pfizer to "[p]lease use the proposed text verbatim." (As was shown above, Pfizer eventually did so.) DSUF, ¶ 19. [FN3] In addition, FDA stated that final approval required Pfizer's responses to issues raised in the letter. Defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment ("Defendant's Motion"), 1089 Declaration of Martha Brumfield ("Brumfield Dec."), Exh .3.

> FN3. In addition to asserting that the data that Pfizer provided to FDA was incomplete and inaccurate, plaintiff contends that Pfizer, not FDA, drafted this language. Murgatroyd Dec., ¶ 3, Exh. A, RFA # 144.

FDA granted final approval of the Zoloft NDA on December 30, 1991. DSUF, ¶ 21. Working from a draft submitted by Pfizer, FDA also prepared a final "Summary Basis of Approval" for Zoloft. DSUF, ¶ 22; Plaintiff's Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment ("Opposition"), Declaration of George Murgatroyd ("Murgatroyd Dec."), Exh. A, Response to Request for Admission Nos. 138, 139. Section 5.2.2.4.1 addressed the occurrence of suicide events in the database of tested sertraline users. DSUF, ¶ 22. That section stated that with respect to suicidality in therapeutic depression trials "[r]eview of the rates of events defined by baseline to endpoint shifts in HAMD Item 3 scores [i.e., measurement of suicidal ideation] and baseline to endpoint changes in HAMD Item 3 scores showed results favoring [Zoloft] over placebo and supported the comparability of the [Zoloft] and active control groups." DSUF, ¶ 22.

Following its approval of Zoloft for treatment of depression, FDA also approved Zoloft as safe and effective for treatment of obsessive compulsive disorder (October 25, 1996), pediatric obsessive compulsive disorder (October 10, 1997), panic disorder (July 8, 1997) and post-traumatic stress disorder (December 7, 1999). [FN4] DSUF, ¶¶ 45-48. (The latter approval was granted after Victor Motus took his life.)

> FN4. The Court overrules plaintiff's FRE 402 and 403 objections to these facts. Further, at the hearing on this motion, counsel for Pfizer asserted that FDA reconsidered the issue of suicide and Zoloft on each occasion that it approved Zoloft for a new use. Pfizer's motion papers do not specify what evidence proves such reconsiderations were undertaken. The Court has reviewed the Exhibits (5-9 in Brumfield's Declaration) related to FDA's subsequent approvals of Zoloft and found only one document regarding whether FDA reconsidered the suicide issue. That document is a report, apparently prepared by Pfizer at FDA's request, detailing Pfizer's findings concerning the relation between the use of Zoloft by adults and children for obsessive compulsive disorder and suicide related behavior. Brumfield Dec., Exh. 9. The report concluded, inter alia, that rate of suicidal behavior for adolescents treated with sertraline for obsessive- compulsive disorder was within the range described in normal population samples of adolescents.

C. Other SSRI's and Labeling About Suicide [FN5]

FN5. The Court overrules plaintiff's FRE 402 and 403 objections to these facts. Plaintiff's own complaint refers to the risks posed by Prozac and to an article describing the risks of Prozac, and cites a quote from Pfizer that Zoloft works "just like Prozac" with the same side effects. Complaint, ¶¶ 16-18. The evidence is also relevant to establish how the FDA handled concerns about SSRI-induced suicidal ideations.

Before and during FDA's consideration of the Zoloft NDA, FDA considered claims that other SSRIs, such as Prozac, cause suicide.

In early 1990, an article was published about Prozac that led to a much- publicized public debate about whether fluoxetine induced suicidal ideation in patients. On October 10, 1990, Sanford Block of the Church of Scientology's "Citizens Commission on Human Rights," ("CCHR") filed with FDA a petition claiming that Prozac caused suicidality and asking FDA to withdraw its approval of Prozac. DSUF, ¶ 26. On May 23, 1991, Drs. Ida Hellander and Sidney M. Wolfe of"Public Citizen Health Research Group" ("PCHRA") filed a petition asking FDA to revise Prozac's labeling and "to include a box warning [ ] regarding its association with intense, violent suicidal preoccupation, agitation and impulsivity in a small minority of patients." DSUF, ¶ 27.

On July 26, 1991, FDA denied the CCHR petition, stating that "[t]he data and information available at this time do not indicate that Prozac causes suicidality or violent behavior..." DSUF, ¶ 28.

On September 20, 1991, FDA convened the PDAC to further its "scientific investigation 1090 into suicidal ideation, suicidal acts, and other violent behavior reported to occur in association with the pharmacological treatment of depression." DSUF, ¶ 30. In his opening remarks to the committee meeting, Dr. Paul Leber, the then-Director of the FDA Division of Neuropharmacological Drug Products, stated that the "net effect" of "modifying antidepressant drug labeling" "might be a reduction in the use of antidepressants in the treatment of depression, and that the result might cause overall injury to the public health." DSUF, ¶ 37. "Excerpted comments" of Dr. Leber also show that he stated that "if Prozac is not more likely to induce suicidal thoughts, acts and other violent behaviors, a labeling change of the sort contemplated by some, beyond being false and misleading, might well have a net adverse effect." Id. On the question whether "there is credible evidence to support a conclusion the antidepressant drugs cause the emergence and/or intensification of suicidality and/or other violent behaviors," the PDAC voted unanimously that there was no such evidence. DSUF, ¶ 39. As to the question whether "there is evidence to indicate that a particular drug or drug class poses a greater risk for the emergence and/or intensification of suicidal thoughts and acts and/or violent behaviors," the PDAC also voted unanimously that there was not. DSUF, ¶ 40.

On June 3, 1992, FDA denied the PCHRA petition because the evidence was "not sufficient to reasonably conclude that the use of Prozac is possibly associated with suicidal ideation and behavior..." DSUF, ¶ 43.

Finally, on January 2, 1997, Ms. Rosellen Meysenburg petitioned FDA to require that Prozac's suicidality warning be expanded to indicate that "people who are considered at risk for suicide and who begin to take the antidepressant drug fluoxetine hyudrochloride [sic] should be carefully observed and should consider taking a sedative as well." On June 25, 1997, FDA stated: "[t]he agency has continued to monitor carefully reports of a possible connection between Prozac and increased suicidality. However, no credible scientific evidence has caused the agency to depart from its conclusion that the current Prozac labeling appropriately reflects the level of concern about Prozac and suicidality. Therefore, your petition requesting revision of the labeling for Prozac is denied." DSUF, ¶ 56.

LEGAL STANDARDS FOR A MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides for summary judgment when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." The moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating the absence of a "genuine issue of material fact for trial." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2514, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986). A fact is material if it could affect the outcome of the suit under the governing substantive law. Id. at 248, 106 S.Ct. at2510. The burden then shifts to the nonmoving party to establish, beyond the pleadings, that there is a genuine issue for trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2553, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986).

"When the party moving for summary judgment would bear the burden of proof at trial, it must come forward with evidence which would entitle it to a directed verdict if the evidence went uncontroverted at trial. In such a case, the moving party has the initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of fact on each issue material to its case." C.A.R. Transportation Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Darden Restaurants, Inc., 213 F.3d 474, 480 (9th Cir.2000) (citations omitted). In contrast, when the non-moving party bears the burden of proving the claim or defense, the moving party can meet its burden by 1091 pointing out the absence of evidence from the non-moving party. The moving party need not disprove the other party's case. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325, 106 S.Ct. at 2554. Thus, "[s]ummary judgment for a defendant is appropriate when the plaintiff 'fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to [his] case, and on which [he] will bear the burden of proof at trial.' " Cleveland v. Policy Management Systems Corp., 526 U.S. 795, 119 S.Ct. 1597, 1603, 143 L.Ed.2d 966 (1999) (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322, 106 S.Ct. at 2552).

When the moving party meets its burden, the "adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleadings, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." F.R.Civ.P. 56(e). Summary judgment will be entered against the non-moving party if that party does not present such specific facts. Id. Only admissible evidence may be considered in deciding a motion for summary judgment. Id.; Beyene v. Coleman Sec. Serv., Inc., 854 F.2d 1179, 1181 (9th Cir.1988).

"[I]n ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the nonmoving party's evidence 'is to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in [that party's] favor.' " Hunt v. Cromartie, 526 U.S. 541, 119 S.Ct. 1545, 1551-52, 143 L.Ed.2d 731 (1999) (citing Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255, 106 S.Ct. at 2513). But the non-moving party must come forward with more than "the mere existence of a scintilla of evidence." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252, 106 S.Ct. at 2512. Thus, "[w]here the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L.Ed.2d 538 (1986) (citation omitted).

DISCUSSION

A. Federal Preemption

[1] The Supreme Court has explained that there are three ways in which federal law will preempt a state law:

> scheme of federal regulation ... so pervasive as to make reasonable the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it," or where an Act of Congress "touch[es] a field in which the federal interest is so dominant that the federal system will be assumed to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject." Although this Court has not hesitated to draw an inference of field pre-emption where it is supported by the federal statutory and regulatory schemes, it has emphasized:
> "Where ... the field which Congress is said to have pre-empted" includes areas that have "been traditionally occupied by the States," congressional intent to supersede state laws must be "clear and manifest."
> Finally, state law is pre-empted to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law. Thus, the Court has found pre-emption where it is impossible for a private party to comply with both state and federal requirements, or where state law "stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress."

English v. General Elec. Co., 496 U.S. 72, 78-79, 110 S.Ct. 2270, 2275, 110 L.Ed.2d 65 (1990) (citations omitted) (holding that nuclear fuel production employee's state law claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress was not preempted by the Energy Reorganization Act). These categories are not "rigidly distinct;" in particular, "conflict" 1092 and "field" preemption often overlap. Id. at 79 n. 5, 110 S.Ct. 2270.

> FN6. The Court notes that several Supreme Court cases describe a presumption against finding preemption, especially where state or local regulation of matters related to health and safety are concerned. Hillsborough County v. Automated Medical Labs., 471 U.S. 707, 715, 105 S.Ct. 2371, 85 L.Ed.2d 714 (1985). Pfizer points out that cases like Hillsborough that employ the presumption do not address conflict preemption. The Court need not decide whether a presumption against preemption applies because the Court decides that Pfizer has not established preemption, even absent a presumption.

Pfizer makes no express or field preemption argument. Instead, Pfizer argues that "plaintiff's attempt to use state tort law to require warnings that Zoloft causes suicide" conflicts with (1) FDA's various determinations regarding Zoloft's and SSRI's warnings and (2) the federal statutory and regulatory objective of ensuring that labeling effectively communicates the scientific information physicians need to make informed judgments. Defendant's Motion, p. 16-17.

1. Conflict Preemption

a. Impossibility of Compliance

[3][4] In its opening motion papers, Pfizer asserts that federal law preempts plaintiff's claims based on failure to warn because "the state law advocated by plaintiff would make it impossible for Pfizer to comply both with plaintiff's demands for additional warnings and with FDA's requirement that Pfizer use the exact labeling approved by the agency. See Hurley v. Lederle Labs., 863 F.2d 1173, 1179 (5th Cir.1988)." Defendant's Motion, p. 19.

Plaintiff responds that because FDA standards for labeling are minimum standards, FDA approval of Pfizer's proposed label does not mean that state law claims based on that labeling are preempted. Opposition, p. 20, 22.

As plaintiff correctly argues, most courts have found that FDA regulations as to design and warning standards are minimum standards which do not preempt state law defective design and failure to warn claims. See, e.g., Hill v. Searle Labs., 884 F.2d 1064, 1068 (8th Cir.1989) ("FDA approval is not a shield to liability ... FDA regulations are generally minimum standards of conduct unless Congress intended to preempt common law, which Congress has not done in this area."); Kociemba v. Searle & Co., 680 F.Supp. 1293, 1299 (D.Minn.1988) ("The mere fact that the Cu-7 received FDA approval does not, by itself, indicate that Congress impliedly intended to preclude state tort actions against prescription drug manufacturers. This is especially true in light of the widely held view that FDA regulation of prescription drugs establishes minimum standards, both as to design and warning," citing Graham v. Wyeth Labs., 666 F.Supp. 1483 (D.Kan.1987), Brochu v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., 642 F.2d 652 (1st Cir.1981) and Salmon v. Parke Davis & Co., 520 F.2d 1359 (4th Cir.1975)); Mazur v. Merck & Co., 742 F.Supp. 239, 247 (E.D.Pa.1990) ("mere compliance with FDA suggestion, or for that matter, regulation or order, does not mean that state tort law becomes irrelevant...[C]ompliance with an FDA regulation may establish that the manufacturer met the appropriate minimum standards of due care, but compliance does not necessarily absolve the manufacturer of all liability ... Manufacturers must meet state safety requirements, whether codified or embodied in the common law, in addition to satisfying initial FDA requirements"). Indeed, Pfizer cites not a single case holding that FDA prescription drug requirements preempted state law claims. [FN7]

> FN7. Pfizer does however offer Geier v. American Honda Motor Co., 529 U.S. 861, 120 S.Ct. 1913, 146 L.Ed.2d 914 (2000), for the proposition that even minimum standards may preempt state law tort claims. Reply, p. 5. But in Geier, the Supreme Court expressly found that the Department of Transportation saw the disputed standard "not as a minimum standard, but as a way to provide a manufacturer with a range of choices among different passive restraint systems..." Geier, 120 S.Ct. at 1915, 1922 ("This lawsuit actually conflicts with [the safety standard]. DOT saw [the safety standard] not as a minimum standard ... In petitioners' and the dissent's view, [the safety standard] sets a minimum airbag standard ... But that was not the Secretary's view."). In any case, even if standards deemed "minimum" could conflict with state law tort suits, the warning labeling standards here do not because, as explained shortly, Pfizer has not established that federal regulations or FDA meant to prohibit Pfizer from strengthening its warnings.

1093 So it is Hurley that Pfizer relies on for the proposition that an FDA determination of proper drug labeling can conflict with state law requiring additional or changed labeling. In Hurley, the Fifth Circuit held that federal regulations did not preempt the plaintiff's state law product liability claims based on the allegedly unreasonable dangerousness and inadequate warnings of a whooping cough vaccine. 863 F.2d at 1176-1177. In dicta, however, the Hurley Court stated that:

> The defendants propose that the question of adequacy of the warning is preempted by federal law since the warning used was FDA approved ... This is the one question in this case for which the defendants' arguments on preemption are compelling ... In the area of approving warnings ... the FDA ... accepts information given by manufacturers proposing the licensing of a particular vaccine, and determines a proper warning based upon the information provided ... A state law determination on this issue should not be interjected to overrule the decision of the FDA. Such a procedure would place vaccine manufacturers in a position where they could not comply with both obligations. The FDA extensively regulates the contents and wording of these product inserts ... A manufacturer must first provide all the relevant information to the FDA, which then determines a warning it deems appropriate. The manufacturer is required to print that precise warning in its product insert ... Most important, the manufacturers cannot change the language in the product insert without FDA approval. 21 C.F.R. § 601.12. It would be patently inconsistent for a state then to hold the manufacturer liable for including that precise warning when the manufacturer would otherwise be liable for not including it ... [S]uch a case would fit one of the scenarios ... indicating preemption: the state statute actually and directly conflicts with federal law.

Hurley, 863 F.2d at 1179.

Hurley dealt with and depended on federal regulations

governing vaccines and other "biologics." The Court finds Pfizer's reliance on this language in Hurley misplaced. The dicta Pfizer relies on described one provision, 21 C.F.R. § 601.12, as "[m]ost important" to its statement of possible preemption. At the time Hurley was decided, 21 C.F.R. 601.12(b) stated that "[p]roposed changes in manufacturing methods and labeling may not become effective until notification of acceptance is received from the Director, Center for Biologics evaluation." [FN8] That provision formed the basis for the Fifth Circuit's decision that a "biologics" manufacturer could not simultaneously comply with FDA labeling requirements and a state law requiring different warnings. Neither party has indicated and nothing in the record indicates that the regulations governing "biologics" have any bearing on this case.

> FN8.21 C.F.R. § 601.12 was subsequently amended to allow certain labeling changes prior to FDA approval. 21 C.F.R. § 601.12(f)(2)(i).

The regulations that do apply here, but that did not apply in Hurley militate strongly in favor of finding no conflict preemption, because they provide that Pfizer may strengthen Zoloft's warnings 1094 without prior FDA approval. 21 C.F.R. § 314.70 is the federal regulation governing supplements to approved NDAs. It states that a change to labeling that "add[s] or strengthen[s] a contraindication, warning, precaution, or adverse reaction" is within the category of changes that "may be made before FDA approval." 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2)(i). Therefore, unlike in Hurley, here it is not true that "the manufacturers cannot change the language in the product insert without FDA approval" and is not true that a manufacturer "would otherwise be liable" for strengthening an FDA-approved warning. The FDA Commissioner's own comments support this view:

> The commissioner also advises that these labeling requirements do not prohibit a manufacturer ... from warning health care professionals whenever possibly harmful adverse effects associated with the use of the drug are discovered. The addition to labeling ... of additional warnings ... is not prohibited by these regulations... In the case of an approved NDA, § 314.8(d) [now § 314.70(c)(2)(i)] permits the addition to the drug's labeling ... of information about a hazard without advance approval by the FDA ... At least one Court has held that an NDA holder may have a duty to add a warning before FDA approval of a supplemental application.

21 Federal Register 37447 (1979). There appears to be no inherent conflict between state law requiring a stronger warning for Zoloft and the FDA's approval of Zoloft's present warning.

In its Reply Memorandum, Pfizer supplements its argument from Hurley with additional "impossibility of compliance" arguments based on a federal statute and regulations:

> Since FDA has expressly and repeatedly found that there is "no credible evidence" to support an association between SSRIs and suicide any inclusion in Zoloft's labeling of the warnings advocated by plaintiff would violate the statutory and regulatory prohibition against labeling that "is false or misleading in any particular." 21 U.S.C. § 355(e); 21 C.F.R. § 201.56(a)-(b). Inclusion of any such warning would violate the regulatory requirement that labeling must warn only of "[k]nown hazards and not theoretical possibilities" and must not include any "statement of differences of opinion." 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(d), 1.21(c)(1). It would violate the limitation that labeling statements are permitted "only if they are supported by scientific evidence." 44 Fed.Reg. 37434, 37441 (June 26, 1979).

Reply, p. 14-15.

First, several of the regulations cited by Pfizer do not apply to its alleged failure to warn. [FN9] It is true that 21 C.F.R. § 1.21(c)(1) states that § 1.21(a) does not "[p]ermit a statement of differences of opinion with respect to warnings..." but neither plaintiff nor defendant have asserted that plaintiff wishes to add such a statement. It is also true that 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(d) states that "[k]nown hazards and not theoretical possibilities shall be listed, e.g., if hypersensitivity to the drug has not been demonstrated, it should not be listed as a contraindication." But this language applies only to listing of "contraindications," or "those situations in which the drug should not be used because the risk of use clearly outweighs any possible benefit..." It does not apply to listings of "warnings"--which is what is at stake here and which is governed by a separate regulatory provision in § 201.57(e). Notably, Pfizer does not cite that regulation, which appears not to pose any conflict, in that it does not impose specific prohibitions. 1095 Section 201.57 delineates the "specific requirements on content and format of labeling for human prescription drugs" and subsection (e) specifically governs "warnings." In its entirety, subsection (e) states as follows:

> FN9. Pfizer also cites to several comments of the FDA commissioner, which are now memorialized in the federal register, that come under the heading not of "warnings," but of "adverse reactions," a different part of prescription drug labeling that is subject to its own separate requirements. Reply, p. 15, Fed.Reg. 37453; 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(e) (governing warning labeling); 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(g) (governing adverse reaction labeling).

> Under this section heading, the labeling shall describe serious adverse reactions and potential safety hazards, limitations in use imposed by them, and steps that should be taken if they occur. The labeling shall be revised to include a warning as soon as there is reasonable evidence of an association of a serious hazard with a drug; a causal relationship need not have been proved. A specific warning relating to a use not provided for under the "Indications and Usage" section of the labeling may be required by the Food and Drug Administration if the drug is commonly prescribed for a disease or condition, and there is lack of substantial evidence of effectiveness for that disease or condition, and such usage is associated with serious risk or hazard. Special problems, particularly those that may lead to death or serious injury, may be required by the Food and Drug Administration to be placed in a prominently displayed box. The boxed warning ordinarily shall be based on clinical data, but serious animal toxicity may also be the basis of a boxed warning in the absence of clinical data. If a boxed warning is required, its location will be specified by the Food and Drug Administration. The frequency of these serious adverse reactions and, if known, the approximate mortality and morbidity rates for patients sustaining the reaction, which are important to safe and effective use of the drug, shall be expressed as provided under the "Adverse Reactions" section of the labeling.

Unlike the provision on "contraindications," which does seem to point out one type of statement that may not be included in the "contraindication" section of drug labeling, the provision on "warnings" very clearly lists only those statements that must be included, not statements that may not be included.

Although some of the federal statutory and regulatory law Pfizer cites does appear to apply to Zoloft's warning label, that law does not establish conflict preemption because Pfizer has not established that plaintiff's theory of liability would require warnings that would violate federal law. It is true that prescription drug labeling may not be "false or misleading in any particular." 21 U.S.C. § 355(d); 21 C.F.R. § 201.56(b). It is also true that, as described in the federal register commentary and codified in section 201.56(a), labeling must be based on "the essential scientific information needed for the safe and effective use of the drug." 21 C.F.R. § 201.56(a); Fed Reg. 37441. But Pfizer has not attacked any specific warning as "false or misleading" or not based on "the essential scientific information needed" for safe use. Instead, Pfizer attacks plaintiff's general allegation of failure to warn. Defendant's Motion, p. 3-4. [FN10]

> FN10. In fairness to Pfizer, plaintiff evidently has not yet identified the precise warning that she thinks Pfizer should have provided. As the Court stated at the hearing on this motion, this has proven vexing to the Court, too, because it would be much easier to analyze whether a supposedly necessary warning conflicted with the federal requirement if one knew what the warning said.

The Court finds Pfizer's attack overbroad. Although certain suicide warnings could violate federal law because they were false or misleading or were not based on "the essential scientific information needed" for safe use, the Court does not think that any and every suicide-related warning that might be required under state law is necessarily false or misleading, or not based on "the essential scientific information needed" for safe use. For example, in her opposition, plaintiff discussed the SSRI warning recommended by the Medicines Control Agency, the British equivalent of the FDA: "occasionally, 1096 thoughts of suicide or self harm may occur or increase in the first few weeks of treatment with sertraline, until the antidepressant effect becomes apparent. Tell your doctor immediately if you have any distressing thoughts or experiences." Opposition, p. 23. In its Reply Memorandum, Pfizer did not refer to or attack this example of a warning. The Court has no basis to find that a restrained warning like this one is necessarily false or misleading, or not based on "the essential scientific information needed" for safe use. Therefore, the Court is not persuaded that to the extent that plaintiff's claims are based on failure to warn, they necessarily would violate federal law, regulations or policies.

Moreover, and perhaps most importantly, although FDA did not require Pfizer to include suicide-related warnings in Zoloft's label, FDA has not prohibited Pfizer from doing so. On the occasions cited by Pfizer that FDA considered links between suicide and SSRIs, FDA did find that the evidence did not support requiring manufacturers to include additional suicide-related warnings. But FDA never stated that it would be impermissible to include additional warnings. This is consistent with the regulatory provision governing warning labels, 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(e), which indicates only those warnings that must be included in drug labeling, but does not prohibit any warnings.

Pfizer suggests that FDA impliedly prohibited additional suicide-related warnings, based on a comment of Dr. Paul Leber, the former Director of Neuropharmacological Drug Products, that "a labeling change of the sort contemplated by some" could be "false and misleading." Defendant's Motion, p. 10; Gaul, Dec., Exh.15. But Pfizer has not established that the labeling change "contemplated" by plaintiff's law suit is "a labeling change of the sort contemplated by some"; it is not clear just what "sort" of labeling change Leber is referring to; and, as discussed above, plaintiff has not limited herself to advocating any particular warning. Further, the Court does not agree that an excerpted comment of an FDA doctor, phrased as a hypothetical, made in ostensibly informal introductory comments to a meeting of the PDAC, and presented here only in a footnote constitutes formal FDA prohibition of any and every strengthened suicide-related warning.

To summarize, several other courts have determined that FDA requirements are minimum standards and that FDA approval is not a shield to liability; 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2)(i) permits manufacturers to strengthen warning labels without prior FDA approval; Pfizer has not limited its attack to any specific warnings; and finally the FDA has not made any statement that Pfizer could not include a strengthened suicide warning. In light of these factors, the Court finds that Pfizer has not established that it would be impossible to comply simultaneously with FDA requirements and with a state law or decision requiring a strengthened warning.

b. Frustration of Congressional Purpose

Pfizer asserts that permitting plaintiff's state law claims for failure to warn would stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress:

> Plaintiff seeks to require warnings that FDA has determined are not only unnecessary and unsupported by scientific data and information, but false, misleading and potentially harmful to the public. Such warnings would overdeter use of the medicine, reduce the labeling's effectiveness in communicating necessary information to doctors, and impair the value of federally mandated labeling by undermining physicians' ability to rely on the labeling as scientifically based and accurate.

Defendant's Motion, p. 21.

Pfizer relies on many of the same regulations for its "frustration of purpose" argument that it relied on for its "impossibility of compliance" argument. Defendant's 1097 Motion, p. 21-22. Pfizer essentially argues that permitting a strengthened suicide warning in Zoloft's labeling would violate the federal purpose--embodied in the regulations--of ensuring that doctors act on accurate, scientifically established information. But the Court has already found that plaintiff's state law failure to warn claims do not conflict with federal statutory prohibitions and requirements because those claims do not necessarily call for false and misleading labeling or labeling not based on scientific information. The Court therefore also finds that plaintiff's state law "failure to warn" claims for relief do not necessarily conflict with the regulations' straightforward purpose of ensuring that doctors receive accurate, scientifically based information.

Pfizer also argues that permitting plaintiff to proceed with these claims would conflict with congressional purposes, because it would "overdeter" use of Zoloft. Defendant's Motion, p. 21-23. According to Pfizer, "[a]dding warnings that FDA has determined to be unsupported would give physicians a false impression of the risks entailed in prescribing the drug, thereby deterring its use ... [and] ... would inhibit physicians from using the drug to provide their patients the available benefit..." Id. at 22.

At the hearing on this motion, counsel for Pfizer indicated that three sources, independent of FDA, supported this assertion. The first is "A Report of the Surgeon General on Mental Health." Declaration of Dr. Roger Lane ("Lane Dec."), Exh. 2. The Court has read the excerptof this report that Pfizer submitted. Although it states that SSRIs are "a first-choice medication in treating depressed suicidal children and adolescents" and that "[t]he incidence of treatment related suicidal thoughts for the SSRIs is low and comparable to the rate observed for other antidepressants" it nowhere expressly addresses the issue of overdeterrence. Exh.2, p. 58,61.

Next, Pfizer's counsel referred to a statement of the American Psychiatric Association ("APA"). The Court found one exhibit in Dr. Lane's Declaration that the APA published but this document merely listed the "criteria for major depressive episode[s]" and has no relation to overdeterrence. Lane Dec., Exh.3. However, on November 28, 2000, the day after the hearing on this motion, Pfizer filed an APA "news release" to which Pfizer's counsel had referred. The "news release" concerns the FDA's denial of CCHR's petition to ban Prozac outright. It does indeed state that "our members have reported to us that the CCHR media campaign to discredit Prozac frightened many people with depression into discontinuing their medicine without first discussing it with their physicians, and discouraged others from seeking needed treatment." But the mere fact that a negative media campaign may have overdeterred prospective SSRI users does not mean that a modest warning label that Doctors could evaluate would do the same thing. Indeed, the "news release" itself states that psychiatrists routinely warn patients that antidepressants may contribute to suicidal action: "([m]any patients, however, are so depressed that they don't have the energy to act on [suicidal] thoughts," "antidepressants ... may lead to an increase in energy before it eliminates suicidal thoughts" and "[p]sychiatrists routinely alert patients and their families to this possibility...").

Third, Pfizer's counsel directed the Court's attention to the American College of Neuropsychopharmacology's Consensus Statement on Suicidal Behavior and Psychotropic Medication. Lane Dec., Exh.6. The Statement does assert that "[t]here is no evidence that antidepressants such as ... fluoxetine trigger emergent suicidal ideation over and above rates that may be associated with depression and other antidepressants." Exh.6, p. 112. However, the Statement does not explicitly address the overdeterrence issue. Moreover, it indicates that "case reports suggest that a the information submitted along with it to determine whether there is substantial evidence that the product will be effective and whether the benefits associated with the product outweigh any associated risks. Where the agency concludes both that the product will be effective and safe, FDA then determines how the relevant product information should be presented to the doctor. With respect to over-the-counter drugs, FDA determines how the information should be presented to the consumer in the product labeling.

Drug product labeling reflects not only the evidence submitted by the applicant in support of the NDA but also FDA's review of other relevant information. Such information may include studies completed during the drug development process, information about the chemical entity and how it acts in the body, information concerning the safety of similar drugs, and information concerning whether the drug is known to interact with any other substances. This information may also be included in the required labeling if it provides facts that a physician should know before prescribing the drug to a patient or information that a consumer should know before taking a drug.

What constitutes appropriate labeling for a drug product is not always obvious. Therefore, drug sponsors often have a dialogue with FDA about what should appear on a particular drug label. But when FDA ultimately approves an NDA, it also approves the final version of the product label. Because FDA cannot approve product labeling that would render a product misbranded, any product labeling must provide adequate directions for use and not be false or misleading.[13]

FDA Approval of Drug Product Labeling Changes

Once FDA has approved an NDA, an applicant generally may not deviate from FDA-approved product labeling without submitting an NDA supplement that provides a full explanation of the basis for the change.[14] FDA permits two kinds of labeling supplements: (1) "pre-approval supplements," which require FDA approval before a change occurs; and (2) "changes being effected supplements," which may be implemented before FDA approval.[15] In either case, an applicant must provide supporting information for the proposed change, or alert FDA to the existence of such information elsewhere. The supporting evidence may take several forms, including company-conducted or independent studies, published reports, and compilations of adverse events. FDA evaluates the scientific evidence pertaining to the proposed change. It then determines whether the proposed labeling change is appropriate based on such factors as the frequency of the risk of a side-effect/bad outcome, the severity of the potential risks, and the potential benefits and risks associated with the proposed warning.

Unless the proposed changes are minor, an applicant typically submits labeling changes in a pre-approval supplement. Where an applicant uses a "changes being effected" supplement, its evidentiary obligations are not reduced. Thus, although use of a "changes being effected" supplement permits a manufacturer to make labeling changes upon filing its supplement, the regulation still requires the manufacturer to "give a full explanation of the basis for the change."[16] Therefore, although an applicant may implement a labeling change immediately, it must still give FDA a full explanation of the basis for the change that it has made. The more significant the proposed labeling change, the greater the explanation required. Accordingly, a drug manufacturer must have the same sound basis in scientific evidence for making a labeling change under this provision as it needs to obtain agency approval of a labeling change using the normal pre-approval supplement process.

If the agency disagrees with the changes made based on its evaluation of the evidence supporting the change, FDA notifies the company that the change is not approved. Should the company market the product using that unapproved labeling, it would violate the FDCA's prohibitions against marketing an unapproved new drug and against marketing a misbranded drug.[17]

Thus, in actual practice, only minor product labeling changes, like an editorial change, deletion of an ingredient affecting only the color of a drug product, or changes in the container or closure system for the drug product are generally made without FDA's prior approval. Furthermore, given the expense associated with any labeling change, manufacturers are reluctant to proceed under the provision allowing them to make a labeling change before getting FDA approval because it carries a risk that FDA will ultimately deny approval and thereby require another labeling change.

B. THE FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION MODERNIZATION ACT

In 1997, Congress amended the FDCA by enacting the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act ("the Modernization Act").[18] These amendments to the FDCA added an express preemption provision for over-the-counter drug labeling. That provision expressly preempts any state requirement for over-the-counter drugs that is "different from, in addition to, or otherwise not identical with" an FDA requirement.[19] This section also includes an exception from federal preemption for state laws adopted by public initiative or referendum enacted before September 1, 1997.[20]

C. CALIFORNIA PROPOSITION 65

In 1986, California adopted the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act, also known as Proposition 65.[21] Under Proposition 65, in the course of doing business, persons must provide a clear and reasonable warning before exposing any individual to a chemical known to the state to cause cancer or reproductive toxicity.[22] Such a warning must clearly communicate that the chemical is known to the state to cause cancer, birth defects, or other reproductive harm.[23] The regulations promulgated under Proposition 65 also provide "safe harbor" warning messages that are deemed to satisfy the requirement for a clear and reasonable warning. With respect to the nicotine therapy replacement products at issue here, that "safe harbor" warning consists of the following language: "Warning: This product contains a chemical known to the State of California to cause birth defects or other reproductive harm."[24] Proposition 65 also includes a statutory federal preemption exemption, which excludes from coverage exposures to chemicals for which federal law governs the warnings in a manner that preempts state authority.[25]

Proposition 65 requires the Governor to publish a list of those chemicals known to cause cancer or reproductive harm. The Governor must cause that list to be revised at least annually to reflect additional knowledge.[26] Inclusion of a chemical on such a list is required where the chemical is known to the state to cause cancer or reproductive harm: (1) based upon the opinion of the state's qualified experts relying on scientifically valid testing, (2) based upon a determination by a body deemed to be authoritative by the state's qualified experts and the state's lead agency, or (3) based upon a requirement imposed by a state or federal agency that formally mandates that the chemical be labeled or identified as causing cancer or reproductive harm.[27]

As a general matter, California has deferred to FDA's expertise concerning regulation of drug products by adopting FDA regulations for purposes of California law.[28] More important, California has designated FDA as one of four authoritative bodies empowered to designate chemicals as reproductive toxins under Proposition 65.[29] Moreover, when it listed nicotine as a reproductive toxin under Proposition 65 on April 1, 1990, California relied upon FDA's action requiring a reproductive health warning to be included in the warning labeling for the prescription form of nicotine replacement therapy products as the sole basis for that listing.[30] Thus, California made no independent assessment of the potential reproductive toxicity of the nicotine contained in these products. Nor did it rely on a determination by any other entity deemed an authoritative body under the state's regulations.

II. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

A. Dowhal's State Court Action

In 1998, Dowhal asked the California Attorney General to initiate an enforcement action against SmithKline Beecham and other drug manufacturers that marketed nicotine replacement therapy products in California on the ground that the warnings in their product labeling did not meet the requirements of Proposition 65. In pertinent part, FDA's approved warning for Defendants' products advised users as follows:

> If pregnant or breast-feeding, ask a health professional before use. Nicotine can increase your baby's heart rate. First try to stop smoking without the [name of product].

Exh. 1 to Joint Request For Judicial Notice at 5. Beginning in 1996 and continuing through 2001, in response to specific inquiries, FDA repeatedly advised Defendants that they might be liable for selling misbranded articles if they deviated from the FDA-approved warning labeling for these nicotine replacement therapy products. See Respondents Brief at 10-14, 18-20. Furthermore, FDA gave that advice on several occasions in response to a Defendant's inquiry concerning possible use of warnings that were proposed as compliant with Proposition 65. J.A. 1499-1501, 1504-06, 1514-17, 1520-21, 1568-69, 1571, 1632-36, 2401.

In a May 6, 1998 letter to FDA, the California Attorney General questioned whether Defendants' FDA-approved product labeling satisfied the requirements of Proposition 65. In its written response, FDA advised the California Attorney General that Defendants' warning labeling clearly and accurately identified the reproductive risks associated with their nicotine replacement therapy products and therefore met the FDCA's labeling requirements. FDA also opined that Defendants' warning labeling appeared to satisfy the California Attorney General's standards with respect to Proposition 65 because the warnings were "clear and reasonable." J.A. 1558-1561. After receiving FDA's letter, the Attorney General did not initiate an enforcement action.

On August 23, 1999, Dowhal filed this action in the Superior Court of the State of California, San Francisco County. He alleged that Defendants had committed past violations as well as ongoing violations of Proposition 65 by knowingly and intentionally causing women to be exposed to nicotine through the use of their products without providing the warnings that Proposition 65 required. In addition to civil penalties and restitution, Dowhal sought to enjoin Defendants to include with their products particular warnings that significantly differed from the warnings required by FDA. Plaintiff sought an injunction requiring Defendants to use the "safe harbor" warning set forth at page 8 supra in their labeling or, alternatively, to require them to include either the following warning or a comparable one:

> If pregnant or breast-feeding, ask a health professional before use. Nicotine, whether from smoking or medication, can harm your baby. First try to stop smoking without the patch.

Exh. 1 to Jt. Request For Judicial Notice at 5 (emphasis added). Defendants opposed that request because federal law controlled the contents of these warnings and preempted any state law requirements mandating inconsistent labeling that would render the products misbranded under the FDCA.

B. The Superior Court's Decision

Ruling on cross-motions for summary judgment in a March 12, 2001 order, the Superior Court concluded that Defendants were entitled to summary judgment because federal law preempted application of Proposition 65 with respect to the warnings that they used in their product labeling. J.A. 2429-2432. Applying the doctrine of conflict preemption, the trial court held that the product warnings that FDA had approved for Defendants' use in marketing their products preempted the alternative warning requirements that Dowhal asserted were mandated by Proposition 65. The Superior Court reasoned that the applicability of conflict preemption was unaffected by the express statutory preemption clause and its exception in the Modernization Act. It then concluded that conflict preemption applied because Defendants could not comply with both FDA's warnings and the warnings Dowhal claimed were mandated by Proposition 65. Furthermore, the court found conflict preemption applicable because Dowhal's proposed warnings would frustrate the federal purpose of ensuring that warnings accurately reflect the known health risks associated with drug products.

C. FDA's Disposition Of Dowhal's Citizen Petition

On August 2, 2000, one year after he filed his complaint, Dowhal filed a citizen petition with FDA asking the agency to change the warnings required in the labeling of nicotine replacement therapy products. Again, Dowhal asked FDA to require Defendants and any other manufacturers of a similar product to include a warning like the "harm your baby" warning set forth at page 11 supra.

On August 17, 2001, FDA responded to Dowhal's petition. Based on its review of the relevant information, including the information furnished by Dowhal in support of his citizen petition, FDA declined to adopt the warnings he proposed. Exh. 1 to Jt. Request for Judicial Notice. Instead, FDA asked each sponsor of a nicotine replacement therapy product to submit to the agency a labeling supplement with a new pregnancy warning containing the following wording:

> If you are pregnant or breast-feeding, only use this medicine on the advice of your health care provider. Smoking can seriously harm your child. Try to stop smoking without using any nicotine replacement medicine. This medicine is believed to be safer than smoking. However, the risks to your child from this medicine are not fully known.

This warning reflected language deemed appropriate by FDA given current knowledge about the use of nicotine replacement therapy products during pregnancy. It reflected a proper balance concerning the need to warn about the harms associated with continued smoking during pregnancy, the benefits of total nicotine abstinence, the need to provide information about the known risks of nicotine replacement therapy products, and the need to provide information about the relative risks of these products in comparison to the risks of smoking. In adopting this warning, FDA also determined that the Dowhal's proposed warning lacked sufficient support in scientific evidence.

As the FDA ultimately determined in addressing Dowhal's citizen petition, neither the "safe harbor" warning nor Dowhal's proposed "harm your baby" warning provided appropriate information concerning the nature of the risk posed by nicotine in the products. The absence of such information creates a danger that consumers may be misled about the risks associated with the products, which may result in consumer decisions concerning product use based upon an inaccurate array of information. The presentation of incomplete and misleading information in such warning labeling renders a product misbranded under the FDCA.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Defendants' use of the pregnancy warning that Dowhal advocated for these products would cause them to violate the FDCA's prohibition on selling misbranded drug products. Therefore, under the doctrine of conflict preemption, Proposition 65 could not be applied to Defendants' warning labels if it required Defendants to use Dowhal's proposed warning labeling. Conflict preemption would also apply because state law would pose an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of a federal statute, the FDCA.

1. In rejecting Dowhal's proposed warning in the context of addressing his citizen petition on August 17, 2001, FDA determined that Proposition 65 would conflict with the FDCA if it required use of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling. Thereafter, any state requirement mandating use of labeling that differed significantly from the FDA-approved labeling would be preempted. Moreover, where a federal agency has implemented a statute that it is charged with administering, its action may also be applied to conduct that occurred before the agency announced that decision. Therefore, FDA's construction of the FDCA's misbranding prohibition with respect to Dowhal's proposed warning labeling applies equally to Defendants' antecedent conduct.

Moreover, just as the doctrine of primary jurisdiction allows a trial court to rely upon an agency explanation issued after the filing of a lawsuit, this Court now may properly rely on FDA's application of the FDCA's misbranding provision in the agency's August 17, 2001 determination in order to affirm the Superior Court's grant of summary judgment for Defendants. Furthermore, FDA's determination concerning appropriate warning labeling reflects the agency's application of its unrivaled expertise to the relevant data. Because Congress has entrusted FDA to make any necessary judgments concerning what labeling provides the warnings necessary to avoid misbranding a product, a state court should defer to FDA's assessment and apply it in a way that assures the proper functioning of a comprehensive federal regulatory plan.

Conflict preemption also applies here because requiring Defendants to use Dowhal's proposed warning labeling to meet their duties under Proposition 65 would pose an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. State law must be applied here in a way that preserves the latitude necessary for the federal regulatory scheme to operate as Congress intended. FDA repeatedly cautioned the Defendants against changing their warning labeling unless they had an adequate factual basis to do so. Tellingly, Defendants had no new facts to present to FDA to support different warning labeling. Under these circumstances, applying Proposition 65 to require Defendants to use Dowhal's proposed warning labeling would thwart attainment of the goals Congress sought to achieve under the FDCA.

2. Plaintiff erroneously contends that the Modernization Act exempts Proposition 65 from displacement under conflict preemption principles. The Superior Court correctly held that the Modernization Act affects only express preemption, not conflict preemption.

ARGUMENT

I. THE FDCA PREEMPTS THE ENFORCEMENT OF PROPOSITION 65 AS A STATE LAW BECAUSE IT WOULD CONFLICT WITH THE REQUIREMENTS OF FEDERAL LAW AND POSE AN OBSTACLE TO ACCOMPLISHING THE OBJECTIVES OF THIS FEDERAL STATUTE.

To assure adherence to the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, federal law preempts enforcement of state law in certain circumstances.[31] Thus, federal law preempts state law where Congress has expressed a clear intent that a federal statute have that effect. Even absent explicit preemption language in a statute, federal law preempts state law where Congress has clearly intended to legislate comprehensively and thereby precluded the states from supplementing federal law. Finally, federal law preempts state law where compliance with both federal and state law is impossible or where state law poses an obstacle to accomplishing the full purposes and objectives of Congress as expressed in a statute.[32]

By enacting the FDCA, Congress established a comprehensive scheme of drug regulation. That regulatory plan promotes the important interest of protecting consumers from unsafe drugs. To advance that interest, the FDCA operates to ensure that drugs on the market are safe and effective. Thus, the FDCA prohibits the sale of misbranded drugs,[33] which it identifies as drugs that lack adequate warnings.[34] Given the comprehensive nature of drug regulation under this federal law, any state regulation must be compatible with the regulatory plan established under the FDCA.

Here, conflict preemption applies because requiring Defendants to use Dowhal's proposed warning labeling to meet their duties under Proposition 65 would conflict with federal law and pose an obstacle to accomplishing Congress's full purposes and objectives.[35]

A. Application Of Proposition 65 To Require Defendants To Use Dowhal's Proposed Warnings Would Make It Impossible For Them To Comply With Both Federal and State Law.

In support of the agency's role in assuring that misbranded drugs are not sold, Congress gave FDA authority to regulate the labeling of drug products. FDA's authority includes the power to require appropriate warnings on over-the-counter drugs and prohibit the sale of misbranded drug products.[36] Under the Act, an over-the-counter drug is deemed misbranded when "[i]ts labeling is false or misleading in any particular" or "[u]nless its labeling bears . . . such adequate warnings against use . . . where its use may be dangerous to health . . . in such manner and form as are necessary for the protection of users."[37] To constitute an adequate warning, a warning must in FDA's view be clear and truthful in all respects, not be misleading in any particular respect, and accurately communicate both the benefit-to-risk ratio and the proper use of the product in terms likely to be read and understood by the ordinary person.[38]

1. FDA's Action On Dowhal's Citizen Petition Showed That The FDCA Preempted Compelled Use Of Dowhal's Proposed Warning Labeling Under Proposition 65.

Under the FDCA, manufacturers of drug products may not make changes to product labeling previously approved by FDA unless those changes are accurate and not misleading. Therefore, to the extent that state law would require a manufacturer to use product labeling that misbrands a drug product, the FDCA preempts state law under the doctrine of conflict preemption.

It cannot be reasonably disputed here that the FDCA's requirements with respect to drug marketing preempt any inconsistent requirements imposed by Proposition 65. Thus, the critical question is whether the FDCA's prohibition against the sale of misbranded drugs conflicted with the warning labeling that Dowhal claimed was required by that state law.

In determining whether Dowhal's proposed warning labeling was prohibited under the FDCA, the analysis must start from the proposition that an agency's reasonable judgment with respect to the meaning of its own statute is entitled to judicial deference.[39] Therefore, any reasonable agency determination as to what constitutes misbranding under the FDCA will ordinarily be controlling.

[38]See 21 C.F.R. § 330.10(a)(4)(iii), (v). See also 21 U.S.C. § 355(d), which conditions FDA's approval of a new drug application upon the presentation of adequate tests to show the safety of the drug under the conditions prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the proposed labeling and upon the agency's finding that the labeling for the drug is not "false or misleading in any particular."

Here, FDA ultimately rejected Dowhal's proposed warning labeling as inconsistent with the FDCA's prohibition against misbranding. In its August 17, 2001 letter, FDA addressed Dowhal's citizen petition requesting the agency to require under the FDCA the same warning that he claimed Proposition 65 required. Exh. 1 to Jt. Request for Judicial Notice. In that letter, FDA also established a new pregnancy warning for nicotine replacement therapy products. That warning differed materially from the warning Dowhal sought. In formulating the new labeling requirement, FDA sought to fashion a warning that clearly and reasonably communicated all the known risks associated with these products as well as the relative reproductive risks associated with smoking in comparison to total abstinence from nicotine in any form. Exh. 1 to Jt. Request for Judicial Notice at 6-8.

Tellingly, FDA considered and rejected Dowhal's proposed Proposition 65-compliant warning labeling. Given the rejection of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling by FDA, the federal agency with expertise and paramount responsibility in the area of drug regulation, the agency's determination that use of such warning labeling would make Defendants' products misbranded carries controlling weight in a state court action brought by the very party that asked FDA to act on the matter. As the agency's August 17, 2001 determination made clear, use of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling would render the Defendants' products misbranded because that warning overstated the known risks of product use by equating the hazards posed by small amounts of nicotine delivered by means other than through inhaled smoke with the risks of smoking,[40] Exh. 1 to Joint Request For Judicial Notice at 6-8. Accordingly, if Proposition 65 required Defendants to use Dowhal's warning labeling, that state law would conflict with the FDCA and would yield to federal law under the doctrine of conflict preemption.

2. The Preemptive Effect Of FDA's Disposition Of The Citizen Petition Also Governs The Application Of Proposition 65 To Defendants' Conduct Before FDA Issued Its Determination.

FDA's August 17, 2001 construction of the FDCA's misbranding prohibition with respect to Dowhal's proposed warning labeling also applies to the Defendants' conduct before that date. Where an agency has construed a statute that it is charged with administering, the agency's construction may also be applied to conduct that occurred before the agency announced that construction.[41] In Smiley v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., which also involved a federal statute that preempted state law, the Supreme Court held that a regulation setting forth the Comptroller of the Currency's construction of the National Bank Act was entitled to deference. More important, the Court explained that the Comptroller's construction merited deference even though that construction would apply to conduct that predated the issuance of the regulation containing the agency's construction. The Court concluded that applying the new statutory construction to [40]Cigarettes must carry one of four Surgeon General warnings. 15 U.S.C. § 1333(a)(1). One of the permissible warnings states: "Smoking By Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight." That warning, which closely resembles the warning Dowhal sought, does not differentiate the known harmful effects associated with cigarette smoking from the potential risks of nicotine replacement products. Those risks are not yet scientifically substantiated.

conduct completed before the regulation's issuance did not pose a risk of giving the regulation invalid retroactive effect. At least where an agency's construction filled a gap where there had been no contrary agency guidance, "it would be absurd to ignore the agency's current authoritative pronouncement of what the statute means."[42]

The same rule should govern here. Before FDA's disposition of Dowhal's citizen petition, the agency had not issued definitive advice concerning whether use of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling would render Defendants' products misbranded under the FDCA. Given FDA's August 17, 2001 determination, the agency's rejection of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling constitutes the agency's authoritative assessment of the relevant evidence. It also represents this federal agency's authoritative interpretation and application of the FDCA with respect to that warning labeling. In accordance with the Supreme Court's admonition in Smiley that it would be absurd to disregard an agency's current authoritative application of its governing statute in these circumstances, this Court should apply FDA's construction of the FDCA's requirements to the Defendants' adherence to the FDA-approved product labeling before August 17, 2001.

Although FDA may not have issued a formal directive until it acted on Dowhal's citizen petition, the agency's action on the petition did not reflect a new position by FDA concerning the application of the FDCA to Dowhal's proposed warning labeling. In fact, FDA repeatedly advised Defendants that such a warning could misbrand their products. Thus, the agency's formal determination confirmed the statute's applicability to Dowhal's proposed warning labeling based on the agency's review of all the relevant data. The determination showed the conflict between the FDCA's misbranding prohibition and any state law that required use of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling. Where such a conflict exists between federal and state law, federal law preempts state law even with respect to transactions that have already been completed before the agency's determination confirming the conflict.[43]

[42] 517 U.S. at 744 n. 3.

Moreover, judicial application of FDA's August 17, 2001 statutory construction to the Defendants' conduct before that date closely parallels the doctrine of primary jurisdiction. Where the issues presented fall within an agency's specialized expertise and involve "technical and intricate questions of fact and policy that Congress assigned to a specific agency," the doctrine of primary jurisdiction permits a trial court to consider an agency explanation provided after the commencement of a lawsuit.[44]

FDA has now determined in a final agency action that use of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling would render these products misbranded. For the same reason that a trial court should rely upon an agency explanation issued after the filing of a lawsuit under the doctrine of primary jurisdiction, "it would be absurd to ignore the agency's current authoritative pronouncement of what the statute means" to resolve a question concerning whether use of Dowhal's proposed warnings would make Defendants' products misbranded under the FDCA.[45] Therefore, this Court may affirm the Superior Court's grant of summary judgment for Defendants based upon FDA's action on Dowhal's citizen petition.

FDA's August 17, 2001 determination also merits deference from a state court with respect to conduct that preceded the determination for another reason. That determination reflects a regulatory decision based upon this federal agency's application of a statute it is charged with administering. The determination necessarily involves applying the agency's expertise to the data relevant to deciding what warning label is appropriate for these products. In Chicago and North Western Transportation Company v. Kalo Brick and Tile Company,[46] the Supreme Court concluded that the ICC's judgment was entitled to deference in a state court because Congress had entrusted the agency with responsibility for making such judgments. The Court explained that, because "the judgment as to what constitutes reasonableness belongs exclusively to the Commission," it would frustrate Congressional intent as expressed in a federal statute "to permit the State of Iowa to use the threat of damages to require a carrier to do exactly what the Commission is empowered to excuse."[47] Here, where Congress has entrusted FDA to make any necessary judgments concerning what labeling provides the warnings necessary to keep a product from being misbranded, a state court must also defer to FDA's assessment.

Furthermore, especially where a party may challenge a federal agency's determination in federal court under the Administrative Procedure Act after exhausting available administrative remedies, that party may not bypass that judicial remedy by challenging the agency's determination indirectly by bringing an action under state law.[48] Tellingly, where judicial review is available under the federal system, review under state law is unavailable even where the agency did not make its determination until after the initiation of the state court action.[49]

To be sure, where the evidence bearing upon what warning labeling is appropriate has changed significantly over time, that change may affect whether FDA's determination concerning appropriate labeling may be fairly applied to prior conduct. Thus, if the FDA here had relied heavily on new facts to conclude that Dowhal's proposed warning labeling would render these products misbranded, it might bear on the acceptability of the labeling before those facts came to the agency's attention. Here, however, there is no suggestion that any significant evidentiary change occurred from the time Dowhal filed this suit until the agency's disposition of his citizen petition. Therefore, there can be no suggestion that Dowhal's proposed warning was at some earlier time compliant with the FDCA.

B. Application Of Proposition 65 To Require Dowhal's Proposed Warnings Would Frustrate Attaining The FDCA's Objectives.

The discussion above also shows that conflict preemption applies here because requiring Defendants to use Dowhal's proposed warning labeling to meet their duties under Proposition 65 would pose an obstacle to accomplishing Congress's full purposes and objectives.[50] As previously noted, by enacting the FDCA, Congress established a comprehensive regulatory plan designed to ensure the safety and effectiveness of drugs. Congress gave FDA plenary authority to regulate the labeling of drug products.[51]

State law must be applied in a way that preserves the latitude necessary for the federal regulatory scheme to operate as Congress intended.[52] As we have previously discussed, a drug manufacturer's use of the "changes being effected" supplement is generally limited to circumstances involving noncontroversial labeling changes. Although use of a "changes being effected" supplement permits a manufacturer to make labeling changes as soon as it files its supplement, the regulation requires the manufacturer to provide FDA with a satisfactory evidentiary basis for the change, especially with respect to any significant labeling change like the one Dowhal advocated. FDA's regulation does not allow a drug manufacturer to file such a submission without an adequate factual foundation. Moreover, standing alone, the fact that state law requires use of a particular warning cannot not constitute the necessary factual predicate.

Furthermore, FDA responded to specific inquiries from Defendants during the 1997-2001 period by advising them that they might be liable for selling misbranded drug products if they deviated from the FDA-approved warning labeling for these nicotine replacement therapy products. See Respondents Brief at 10-14, 18-20. Moreover, FDA gave that advice on several occasions in response to a Defendant's inquiry concerning possible use of warnings that were proposed as compliant with Proposition 65. 1568-69, 1571, 1632-36, 2401. Depriving Defendants of their ability to heed this advice without the risk of sustaining liability under a complementary state law system would plainly frustrate the objectives Congress sought to advance under the FDCA.[53]

In light of the nature of their particular products, these Defendants had another valid reason for hesitancy in adopting Plaintiff's proposed warnings based on their concern over liability for misbranding. With many drug products, strengthening the warnings on product labeling may carry only a moderate risk of causing confusion among consumers about whether to use a product. Here, nicotine, the ingredient in Defendants' products that made them subject to Proposition 65, is also present in cigarettes. Consumers use Defendants' products solely to assist their efforts to discontinue the use of cigarettes and thereby avoid further exposure to the serious health hazards posed by inhaled tobacco smoke.

Strengthening the warnings about the consumption of nicotine in these nicotine replacement therapy products carries an obvious risk of discouraging consumers from using the products. Such a warning would increase the risk that consumers would continue to be exposed to the much greater health risks of inhaled tobacco smoke. Given the possibility of causing such harmful consumer confusion, Defendants had good reason to avoid labeling changes that might render their products misbranded.

[53]Based on the particular wording of the agency's communications to certain Defendants, FDA may have in some instances preempted application of Proposition 65 at least as to Proposition 65-compliant warnings that FDA considered and rejected for purposes of compliance with the FDCA. But because preemption applies to all the Defendants in this suit for their actions during entire time period at issue for the reasons set forth elsewhere in this brief, this Court need not consider the applicability of preemption based on FDA's specific communications to particular Defendants.

The California Attorney General nevertheless asserts (Br. 33-35) that FDA's treatment of warning labeling requirements for Habitrol, another nicotine replacement therapy product marketed by a company that is not a party in this case, Novartis Consumer Health, Inc., shows that Defendants' use of Dowhal's proposed warning labeling would not cause them to misbrand their products. The Attorney General chiefly relies upon the fact that, when FDA approved the warning labeling for Habitrol in 1999, that warning labeling included the "harm your baby" warning Dowhal advocates under Proposition 65.

To begin with, this argument ignores the fact that, for FDA's regulatory purposes, every new drug is unique even if its formulation includes ingredients similar to or even identical to another drug product. FDA must evaluate each application based upon the submissions made by the applicant and all other relevant evidence that is available to the agency when it reviews the application. Thus, each NDA approval is manufacturer-specific. Accordingly, it does not necessarily follow that, because FDA has approved a label for one product, its approval for that product represents de facto approval for the identical warning for all similar products.

Furthermore, soon after FDA issued the approval for Habitrol, the agency determined that the scientific evidence regarding the potential harms from the use of the product did not, in fact, support the use of that warning. FDA's determination rendered this product misbranded. But in the exercise of its administrative discretion, FDA withheld pursuit of an enforcement action for misbranding against Habitrol's sponsor while the agency determined what language an appropriate warning should contain. Tellingly, after the agency addressed Dowhal's citizen petition, FDA instructed Habitrol's sponsor to submit an NDA Supplement containing the same labeling that the agency had approved in its August 17, 2001 determination. In so doing, FDA brought these products under a uniform labeling regime, but not a regime requiring the use of the "harm your baby" warning.

In any event, as our argument above shows, state law here conflicts with the FDCA to the extent that Proposition 65 requires Defendants to use Dowhal's proposed warning labeling. Therefore, this Court need not decide whether Proposition 65 may require a drug manufacturer to make a significant change in warning labeling where that manufacturer lacks adequate evidence to justify a labeling change under the federal regulatory plan created by the FDCA. Likewise, the Court also need not decide whether California law may require a drug manufacturer to make a significant change in warning labeling where FDA has explicitly cautioned the manufacturer against making an unwarranted change in warning labeling.

II. THE MODERNIZATION ACT DOES NOT AFFECT THE APPLICATION OF CONFLICT PREEMPTION HERE.

Dowhal contends (Br. at 21-29) that the Modernization Act exempts Proposition 65 from displacement under conflict preemption principles. But the Superior Court correctly held that the Modernization Act affects only express preemption, not conflict preemption.

The Modernization Act added to the FDCA an express preemption provision for over-the-counter drug labeling. That provision expressly preempts any state requirement regarding over-the-counter drugs that is "different from, in addition to, or otherwise not identical with" an FDA requirement.[54] That provision, however, also includes an exception from such federal preemption for state laws adopted by public initiative or referendum enacted prior to September 1, 1997, a classification that includes Proposition 65.[55]

A statutory provision that excludes a state law from the ordinary impact of express preemption does not affect conflict preemption. In Geier v. American Honda Company, the Supreme Court held that, even where Congress uses a savings clause to exempt a particular state law from the impact of express preemption, conflict preemption still applies where a conflict exists between state law and federal law that frustrates attaining a federal objective or makes it impossible for persons to comply with the both federal and state law.[56] In Geier, the Court cautioned against giving broad effect to such savings clauses where doing so would upset the careful regulatory scheme established by federal law. In reaching that result, the Court emphasized that "[c]onflict preemption turns on the identification of actual conflict, and not on an express statement of preemptive intent."[57]

Similarly, in Buckman Company v. Plaintiffs' Legal Committee,[58] which also involved the FDCA, the Court held that conflict preemption applied notwithstanding an express preemption provision that also contained a savings clause. There, plaintiffs asserted that another express preemption provision in the FDCA did not preempt their state law claims alleging fraud on the agency.[59] Reaffirming its analysis in Geier, the Court observed that "[n]either an express preemption provision nor a savings clause bars the ordinary working of conflict preemption principles."[60]

Furthermore, the particular language of the Modernization Act's exemption from express preemption confirms that the exemption does not affect conflict preemption. Section 21 U.S.C. § 379r(d)(2) exempts Proposition 65 from express preemption by virtue of its language that "this section shall not apply to a state requirement." (emphasis added) "This section" refers to the statutory provision entitled National Uniformity for Non Prescription Drugs, which sets forth the federal preemption provision.[61] Where Congress uses the "this section" formulation in a savings clause, it intends to limit the application of that savings clause to one particular express preemption provision.[62] Therefore, Congress plainly intended the exception it crafted for Proposition 65 to apply only with respect to the accompanying express federal preemption, not to conflict preemption.

The California Attorney General also contends (Amicus Br. at 33-35) that the Modernization Act eliminated FDA's authority to prohibit Defendants from using Dowhal's proposed warning. Here, he suggests that any refusal by FDA to permit Defendants to use that warning would not be a "reasonable accommodation" of the Congressional policy expressed in the Modernization Act that FDA "work around" Proposition 65.

But in determining whether federal law preempts state law based on conflict preemption, a court does not examine the merits of the federal action to determine whether it reflects a reasonable accommodation of conflicting federal and state interests. Although a determination of Congressional intent or Congress's authority to act at all may bear on whether express preemption applies in a given case, the California Attorney General cites no decision involving conflict preemption in which a court determined whether federal law had preemptive effect based on these factors. Moreover, as Defendants observe in their reply brief to the Attorney General's amicus brief, the Attorney General's suggestion would effectively convert the question of conflict preemption into a broad inquiry whether federal agency action was arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise unlawful. The California Attorney General errs in asserting that conflict preemption requires the same inquiry as that required under the federal Administrative Procedure Act to assess challenges to agency action.[63]

Because the Modernization Act simply does not affect the application of conflict preemption, the California Attorney General errs in relying at all on the legislative history of these 1997 amendments. Even if that legislative history included something more than a vague admonition in a sponsor's floor statement that FDA "work around" Proposition 65, it would not undermine the correctness of the trial court's holding.

In an apparent effort to suggest that FDA has a propensity to give insufficient deference to regulatory actions taken under Proposition 65, the California Attorney General argues (Amicus Br. at 36-37) that FDA has "previously been cautioned" against undermining a federal policy against preempting state action under Proposition 65. Here, he relies exclusively on a May 19, 1989 letter from an official in the Office of Management and Budget ("OMB") to the FDA Commissioner that observed that "a number of departmental and agency officials" had been contacted by food industry interests involved in Proposition 65. The letter also noted the need to avoid creating "false hopes" of federal involvement unless there was "a significant change . . . to the State's implementation of Proposition 65, which change substantially implicates important federal interests." Exh. C, Amicus Request for Judicial Notice.

This letter lends no support to any argument concerning conflict preemption. That communication from an OMB official, addressed to the FDA Commissioner and perhaps to others, contains no suggestion that FDA had failed to adhere to the policy of the administration of President George Herbert Walker Bush with respect to Proposition 65. Moreover, as the record in this case shows, requiring drug manufacturers under Proposition 65 to use warning labeling that conflicts with the labeling approved by FDA would reflect a change that substantially implicates an important federal interest. Thus, even accepting the strained interpretation of this thirteen-year old letter that the Attorney General advances, it would lack relevance to the proper disposition of this appeal.

STATEMENT OF THE INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES

Plaintiff-Appellant Paul Dowhal challenges the Superior Court's holding that federal law preempted a state labeling requirement for over-the-counter nicotine replacement therapy products marketed by Defendants-Respondents SmithKline Beecham, et al. The United States has a substantial interest in this Court's resolution of that issue. On the merits of the issue, the United States appears as an amicus curiae in support of Defendants because it concurs that federal law preempted a labeling requirement that Plaintiff sought to apply to Defendants under state law.

The Food and Drug Administration ("FDA"), a component of the Department of Health and Human Services, is responsible for regulating drugs. These drugs include over-the-counter drug products, as defined by the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA" "the Act").[1] The FDCA's comprehensive scheme of drug regulation ensures that drugs are safe and effective for their intended uses. The Act specifically authorizes FDA to regulate the labeling of drug products, including appropriate warnings on over-the-counter drugs.[2] An over-the-counter drug is deemed misbranded under the FDCA when "[i]ts labeling is false or misleading in any particular." It is also misbranded "[u]nless its labeling bears . . . such adequate warnings against use . . . where its use may be dangerous to health . . . in such manner and form as are necessary for the protection of users."[3]

In granting summary judgment for Defendants, the trial court accepted their argument that compliance with the warning that Dowhal claimed was necessary to satisfy California law would require them to violate their product labeling duties under the FDCA. Therefore, the court determined that the FDCA preempted any California law requirement that imposed different obligations with respect to product labeling on these nicotine replacement therapy products. This Court's disposition of Dowhal's challenge to that ruling implicates FDA's interest in drug regulation.

1. STATUTORY AND REGULATORY BACKGROUND

A. THE FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT

The FDCA prohibits the misbranding of drugs in interstate commerce and empowers FDA to regulate the labeling of drug products, including the warnings on over-the-counter drugs.[4] Under the statute, an over-the-counter drug is misbranded where its labeling is false or misleading in any particular or if its labeling does not contain adequate warnings against any use dangerous to health.[5] FDA's regulations establish specific requirements for over-the-counter drug product labeling. These requirements are designed to mandate warnings that reflect the known risks based on reliable scientific evidence.[6]

After reviewing new drug applications ("NDAs") submitted to the agency by the individual manufacturers, FDA approved Defendants' nicotine replacement therapy products. [7] In submitting an NDA for a specific drug product for an intended use, an applicant must provide "full reports of investigations which have been made to show whether or not such drug is safe for use and whether such drug is effective for use."[8] An applicant must also include "adequate tests by all methods reasonably applicable to show whether or not such drug is safe for use under the conditions prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the proposed labeling."[9] In addition, applicants must furnish "substantial evidence that the drug will have the effect it purports or is represented to have under the conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the proposed labeling."[10] "Substantial evidence" must consist of adequate and well-controlled investigations, including clinical investigations by suitably qualified experts that provide a reasonable basis for concluding that the drug will have the effect it purports or is represented to have under the conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in its labeling.[11]

Because an evaluation of a drug product's effectiveness in conjunction with FDA review of an NDA is inextricably intertwined with the proposed labeling for the product, an applicant must submit proposed labeling along with the NDA.[12] In evaluating an NDA, FDA reviews all

MODEL FDA PREAMBLE LANGUAGE: PREEMPTION OF FAILURE-TO-WARN ACTIONS

If FDA should decide to issue a final rule based on its December 22, 2000 proposal respecting prescription drug labeling, and if, as part of that initiative, the agency declared its intent that its labeling requirements have preemptive effect, it would develop a preamble to the final rule that would include its statement of basis and purpose respecting preemption. That portion of the preamble might be somewhat like the following.

* * *

I. FEDERAL PREEMPTION OF TORT CLAIMS BASED ON ALLEGEDLY INADEQUATE PRESCRIPTION DRUG LABELING

A. Introduction.

The objective of these revisions to FDA's existing regulations is to provide further assurance that health care practitioners receive clear, concise, and readily accessible labeling for prescription drug products. Such labeling is the primary means by which authoritative information is communicated to health care practitioners regarding the risks and benefits associated with approved prescription drugs. The approved labeling directly informs and influences critical treatment decisions such as prescribing, monitoring, and patient counseling. Making that labeling as useful as possible to health care practitioners is therefore central to FDA's mission to protect the public health by facilitating the safe and effective use of prescription drugs.

Unfortunately, the proliferation of private lawsuits claiming injuries resulting from allegedly inadequate warnings in prescription drug labeling is hindering FDA's ability to achieve its public health objectives. These lawsuits permit judges and juries to second-guess FDA's decisions on what information should be included or excluded from prescription drug labeling, ignore manufacturers' compliance with FDA disclosure regulations, and even punish perceived noncompliance with FDA regulations, without regard to FDA's enforcement program. In same as those that motivated the proposal on December 22, 2000 – "(1) [t]he reduced time needed by health professionals to read or review prescription drug labeling for desired information; (2) the increased effectiveness of treatment; and (3) the decreased number of adverse events resulting from avoidable drug-related errors." Id. at 81104.

The agency has once again concluded that streamlining prescription drug labeling will assist doctors:

> The proposed new format for prescription drug labeling (i.e., package inserts or professional labeling) would reduce the time physicians, pharmacists, and other health professionals must spend reading prescription drug labeling by highlighting frequently used information, by including an indexing system to direct readers to more detailed material in other sections of the labeling, and by reordering and reorganizing the detailed material to facilitate access to information deemed to be most important to prescribers.

Id.

As FDA found in its proposal, both highlighting and excluding certain material in labeling should improve physician decisions as to when and how to prescribe a drug:

> Under the proposed rule, the highlights section would emphasize the drug information that physicians report is the most important for decisionmaking. . . . Moreover, certain information will be removed from existing professional labeling because the rule only allows inclusion of data that are pertinent to the clinical uses specified in the indications section. Consequently, this proposed rule would improve the ability of physicians to select the most safe and effective pharmaceutical treatments for their patients and to administer those treatments in the most safe and effective manner. In addition, the proposal may enhance the likelihood that physicians will communicate important information to patients, which could improve patient understanding and compliance with treatment.

Id. at 81105 (emphasis added).

Most importantly, FDA has again concluded that the new prescription drug labeling format "would decrease the number of adverse drug events (ADE's) caused by incorrect product use. Id. In short, the new labeling requirements will save lives:

> Because it will highlight important information about dosage, side effects, and contraindications, the proposed new prescription drug labeling format would decrease the number of adverse drug events (ADE's) caused by incorrect product use. Many ADE's result from poor or incorrectly applied information (e.g., prescribing too high a dose for a patient with poor kidney function, or prescribing a drug to a patient with known contraindications) and are potentially preventable.

Id. (emphasis added).

As FDA noted in the proposal, it has been shown that a majority of preventable ADE's (about 1 ADE per 100 hospital admissions) are related to errors in physician ordering, "the stage most likely to be affected by improved prescription drug labeling information." Id. Moreover, given the approximately 35 million hospitalizations annually in the United States, the data suggest that "about 350,000 ADE's among hospitalized patients are potentially preventable with better labeling for health professionals." Id. Another study in hospitalized patients has shown that the costs of care associated with preventable ADE's average about $4,685 per patient, which suggests that the annual cost of preventable ADE's in hospitalized patients alone could total $1.6 billion nationally. In addition, many outpatients are hospitalized as a result of preventable ADE's. When the costs of caring for preventable ADE's in hospitalized outpatients are considered as well, "about $3.8 billion per year in hospital costs may be potentially preventable through better prescription drug labeling." Id.

In its comments on patient care and the incidence of preventable ADE's, the American Society for Clinical Pharmacology and Therapeutics, the largest professional organization devoted to human clinical pharmacology, noted that FDA's proposed revisions "can only improve the safety and efficacy of drug therapy by reducing drug-associated adverse events that often occur consequent to iatrogenic [i.e., treatment-induced] causes fueled by inadequate communication of information." FDA Docket No. 00N-1269/C38, at 1.

Although product liability lawsuits once might have been viewed as compatible with FDA regulation, the evolution of tort law has made the two increasingly incompatible. For example, in Wooderson v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., the Supreme Court of Kansas upheld a verdict against a prescription drug manufacturer for actual and punitive damages. The court held that the manufacturer had provided an inadequate warning in FDA-approved labeling notwithstanding clear evidence that the agency had not only approved the labeling, but in fact had rejected proposals to include the very warning plaintiffs claimed was appropriate. 681 P.2d 1038, 1042, 1057 (Kan. 1984).

In Brochu v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., the First Circuit, sitting in diversity, similarly affirmed a verdict against a prescription drug manufacturer and held that labeling provided an inadequate warning even though FDA had not only approved the labeling, but had drafted the particular warning as uniform class labeling. Without appropriate guidance from the agency, the court simply declared that "approval by the FDA of the language involved is not necessarily conclusive on the question of the adequacy of the warnings." 642 F.2d 652, 658 (1st Cir. 1981) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Given such precedents, it is not surprising that in the last few years, pharmaceutical manufacturers have been forced to pay large judgments, or enter into massive settlements, as a result of failure-to-warn claims challenging labeling that FDA had specifically reviewed and approved. In fact, FDA approval of specific labeling has not precluded tort liability even where FDA had considered and rejected proposals to include the language whose omission was alleged by the plaintiff to be the basis for liability. Direct conflicts of this type between FDA and State law standards must give rise to Federal preemption. Equally important, a continuing threat of product liability premised on the failure of FDA-approved labeling to warn adequately will thwart FDA's purposes in this rulemaking.

E. Legal Authority for Preemption.

The constitutional basis for FDA regulations to preempt State failure-to-warn claims is clear. As the Supreme Court recently confirmed, State actions are preempted by Federal law where they would "prevent or frustrate the accomplishment of a federal objective." Geier v. American Honda Motor Co., 529 U.S. 861, 873 (2000). It is well settled that both judicial injunctions and damage verdicts are "State action" subject to preemption: "'[R]egulation can be as effectively exerted through an award of damages as through some form of preventive relief. The obligation to pay compensation can be, indeed is designed to be a potent method of governing conduct and controlling policy.'" Animal Legal Def. Fund Boston, Inc. v. Provimi Veal Corp., 626 F. Supp. 278, 282 (D. Mass. 1986) (quoting San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 247 (1959)). In fact, in 1992, the Supreme Court applied this principle in the specific context of a product liability lawsuit. As the Court held, the "phrase 'state law' . . . include[s] common law as well as statutes and regulations" for preemption purposes. Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 U.S. 504, 522 (1992).

This announcement of FDA's intent to preempt failure-to-warn tort actions is a logical outgrowth of FDA precedent combined with changes in applicable statutory law and agency practice. That precedent and today's action are based on FDA's authority to avoid both frustration of the purposes of the agency's regulations and State law conflicts with FDA's substantive requirements. See City of New York v. FCC, 486 U.S. 57, 64 (1988); Fidelity Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141, 153-54 (1982); Florida Lime & Avocado Growers, Inc. v. Paul, 373 U.S. 132, 142-43 (1963); McDermott v. Wisconsin, 228 U.S. 115 (1913).

Over the past twenty years, FDA has moved to preempt State or local regulation of drugs on a number of occasions; but the agency previously had not acted comprehensively. One reason was that, for most of the years that FDA has regulated prescription drugs, it had not reached the level of pervasive control over drugs and drug labeling that exists – and that we extend – today. Yet as the degree of FDA's control over drug production and labeling has increased, FDA has also increasingly found preemption appropriate to achieve its regulatory objectives and interests and to protect the integrity of its drug approval process for prescription drugs.

A brief review of the balance previously struck between Federal regulation and the preemption of inconsistent State actions shows this clear trend in favor of more general preemption. The Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938 required that manufacturers demonstrate only that their products were safe for human use. The labeling that accompanied these drugs, not surprisingly, was largely promotional, and effectiveness claims made therein did not need to be supported by substantial clinical evidence.

The Drug Amendments of 1962, however, further required manufacturers to demonstrate, through substantial clinical evidence, that their products were effective for the uses indicated in the labeling. FDA was thus charged with the responsibility for reviewing and affirmatively approving the labeling for every new drug, including its package insert, to ensure that it was not false or misleading in any particular, and that it did not omit any information necessary to the safe and effective prescribing of the drug by a physician. To assure that drugs already on the market were brought into compliance with this new statutory scheme, manufacturers of all drugs cleared for marketing prior to the effective date of the 1962 amendments were required to submit efficacy data to expert panels of the Drug Efficacy Study Group established by FDA, in cooperation with the National Academy of Sciences and National Research Council, to review such information. The Group's review focused on whether the efficacy information submitted by manufacturers supported the claims made in their products' labeling. FDA then published a Drug Efficacy Study Implementation ("DESI") notice for each drug, which declared the efficacy rating for the drug with respect to each of its labeled indications. Depending on the rating, the manufacturer was required to submit additional data in support of its claims or to amend the labeling, where necessary, to eliminate unsupported claims.

The DESI review was thus the first comprehensive FDA review of prescription drug labeling, and it took a number of years to complete. The review demonstrated the critical importance of FDA's objective verification of claims made in drug labeling: Of more than 16,500 claims made in labeling prior to 1962, only 19% were found to be supported by substantial efficacy data, leading FDA to conclude that "most package inserts fail in their primary purpose of providing the physician and the pharmacist with authoritative and objective guides to prescribing or dispensing" drugs. "Conditions for Marketing Human Prescription Drugs," 40 Fed. Reg. 26142, 26144 (June 20, 1975).

Not surprisingly, following the DESI review, FDA proposed its first set of comprehensive regulations designating standardized format and content requirements for prescription drug labeling. The rule, finalized in 1979, specified the categories of information that should appear in drug labeling and the precise information that should be included under each category heading. "Labeling and Prescription Drug Advertising; Content and Format for Labeling for Human Prescription Drugs," 44 Fed. Reg. 37434 (June 26, 1979); 21 C.F.R. Parts 56 and 57.

Although these regulations governing the labeling of prescription drugs have remained largely unchanged since their promulgation in 1979, FDA's application of them in practice has evolved. Through the issuance of numerous detailed interpretive guidelines and its role as the approver of both the initial drug labeling as part of a New Drug Application and any post-marketing changes to the labeling, FDA has asserted more and more control over labeling.

As noted, FDA did not begin aggressively regulating prescription drug labeling until the 1970s. Given the minimal level of FDA involvement prior to the 1970s, State and Federal labeling requirements could co-exist. Thus, the case law from that time demonstrates that labeling-based suits grounded in State law were not preempted.

One of FDA's earliest pronouncements on the issue of preemption appears in the preamble to the prescription drug labeling regulations finalized in 1979. In response to a comment expressing concern that the regulations would unfairly shift liability for drug-related injuries from drug manufacturers to prescribing physicians, FDA remarked that, "It is not the intent of FDA to influence the civil tort liability of the manufacturer or of the physician." 44 Fed. Reg. at 37437. The context in which that conclusory statement was made and the absence of a reasoned discussion of the issue reveals that the statement should not be regarded as either a definitive rejection of preemption or FDA's final word on the issue. Especially as the pervasiveness of FDA control over labeling has developed over time, FDA's view regarding preemption has moved gradually towards recognition of the new regulatory reality.

Indeed, as FDA regulation of labeling format and content has become increasingly specific and prescriptive, FDA has repeatedly announced the preemption of State regulation where it concluded such regulation would hinder its Federal regulation objectives in both labeling and related areas.

For example, in response to the Tylenol poisoning cases in 1982, FDA promulgated regulations requiring tamper-resistant packaging for OTC drugs. In the preamble to the final rule, FDA preempted any State or local requirements that were "not identical to . . . [the FDA rule] in all respects." 47 Fed. Reg. 50442, 50447 (Nov. 5, 1982). Although the agency's rule established only general standards for tamper-resistant packaging (e.g., the packaging must have "an indicator or barrier to entry that would provide the consumer with visible evidence that the package had been tampered with or opened"), and left manufacturers with significant flexibility in choosing among various systems capable of satisfying that standard, FDA concluded that any nonidentical State requirements must be preempted. FDA declared its intent that the regulation preempt non-identical State or local requirements in the preamble.

In the "Tylenol" rulemaking, FDA recited numerous situations in which State requirements could interfere with FDA's objectives – e.g., forcing manufacturers to adopt a particular State's standard for products marketed throughout the country, which would effectively negate the flexibility in the FDA regulations; compelling manufacturers to use certain packaging systems with no assurance that they were in fact the best at preventing tampering; forcing manufacturers to adopt separate requirements for each jurisdiction; and permitting differences in interpretation, such that a product meeting the Federal requirement would nevertheless be deemed inadequate at the State level. Id. at 50448. These concerns were sufficient in the agency's view to require its statement of preemptive intent.

In 1994, FDA similarly became concerned that, although the agency's regulations prohibited the release of confidential information on doctors and patients involved in ADE reports – a mainstay of FDA's labeling information – manufacturers might be compelled to disclose such information by State laws or rules permitting discovery in tort or other litigation. To encourage health care providers to report such ADE's fully and accurately, FDA amended its regulations (at 21 C.F.R. § 20.63) to preempt any such discovery in the courts. 59 Fed. Reg. 3944 (Jan. 27, 1994).

On that particular occasion, FDA grounded this preemption on the belief that such discovery rules could conflict with the agency's ADE regulations:

> Although Congress did not expressly preempt State law in this area, the agency finds Federal preemption to be appropriate because such State or local laws, rules, regulations, or other requirements would impede FDA's ability to monitor product safety after approval to ensure that human drug products, biologics, and medical devices are safe and effective for their intended uses.

60 Fed. Reg. 16962, 16963 (Apr. 3, 1995).

Most recently, in November 2000, with FDA's concurrence, the United States Department of Justice argued that FDA prescription drug labeling regulations preempt a court from ordering changes to approved prescription drug labeling in tort litigation involving failure-to-warn claims. Bernhardt v. Pfizer, No. 00-Civ-4042 LMM (S.D.N.Y.). In that case, the plaintiffs had sought court-ordered drug warnings for users of a prescription drug. The Federal district court, sitting in diversity, sua sponte asked the Government to submit its views on whether FDA's labeling regulations preempted the plaintiffs' claims. The Government responded in a Statement of Interest that > Congress has assigned to the Food and Drug Administration . . . the exclusive responsibility to regulate and enforce the laws with respect to prescription drugs sold in the United States. Because the FDA's mission to protect the public health rests on its ability to maintain exclusive control over approved prescription drug labeling, the injunctive relief sought by plaintiffs – both modifications to approved product labeling and the issuance of labeling in the form of warning letters – intrudes upon the FDA's role and is preempted. In other words, to ensure that the public receives uniform, consistent information with respect to prescription drugs, and that this information is based on highly developed expertise, any request to order changes related to the approved drug labeling must be addressed directly and exclusively to FDA . . . .

Statement of Interest at 1-2. (Ultimately, the Court in Bernhardt did not decide the preemption issue, but invoked the doctrine of primary jurisdiction to require the plaintiffs first to submit their request to FDA in the form of a citizen petition. Bernhardt v. Pfizer, Inc., 2000 WL 1738645, at *1 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 22, 2000).)

In support of its conclusion that Congress intended FDA's regulation of drug labeling to be "exclusive," DOJ, with FDA concurrence, described the agency's comprehensive program for the review and approval of prescription drug labeling and warnings. Statement of Interest at 5-6. Given the pervasive regulatory regime, DOJ and FDA argued that it would frustrate FDA's ability to regulate prescription drug labeling if a court or a jury could substitute its judgment for that of FDA. Statement of Interest at 7.

addition, these lawsuits create misplaced incentives for manufacturers to overload drug labeling with tangential and confusing information, to the detriment of FDA's public health goal of effective labeling. Thus, "failure-to-warn" product liability lawsuits have created, and will continue to create, significant obstacles to the achievement of FDA's safety mission. FDA has therefore determined that causes of action seeking damages or injunctive relief based on the information included in, highlighted in, or excluded from approved labeling pose significant obstacles to the achievement of FDA's public health goals and policies with respect to prescription drugs and may result in the imposition under State tort law of requirements that conflict with FDA's labeling requirements. Therefore, such actions should be preempted.

B. Purpose of the Revised Regulation.

As FDA noted in its notice of proposed rulemaking, "the primary purpose of prescription drug labeling is to provide practitioners with essential information they need to prescribe [drugs] safely and effectively for the care of patients." 65 Fed. Reg. 81082, 81083 (December 22, 2000). "These revisions would make it easier for health care practitioners to access, read, and use information in prescription drug labeling and would enhance the safe and effective use of prescription drug products." Id. at 81101. FDA further observed that "by reducing the amount of required information on product labels and simplifying them, a number of medication errors will be reduced." Id. at 81099. Thus, simplifying prescription drug labeling would rationalize it for physicians and enhance patent protection.

In this regard, FDA observed that the need for revised prescription drug labeling reflected various developments in recent years that have "contributed to an increase in the amount, detail, and complexity of labeling information. This has made it harder for health care practitioners to

That contention is well founded. As part of the NDA process, a manufacturer must submit the "proposed text of the labeling" for the drug, together with "annotations to the information in the summary and technical sections of the application that support the inclusion of each statement in the labeling." 21 C.F.R. § 314.50(c)(2)(i). The agency, in turn, will not approve an NDA until it is satisfied that the drug's labeling appropriately describes its indications, dosages, routes, methods, frequency and duration of administration; and any relevant hazards, contraindications, side effects, or precautions. 21 C.F.R. §§ 201.100(c)(1); 314.125(b)(6). FDA regulations – which this rulemaking will revise – thus mandate all aspects of the drug's labeling and expressly prohibit statements of differences of opinion with respect to warnings required in that labeling. 21 C.F.R. § 1.21(c)(1).

FDA maintains this pervasive control over prescription drug labeling even after approval. Most notably, a manufacturer may not amend such labeling without FDA approval, except for purely editorial or typographical changes, which must still be reported to FDA in an annual report. 21 C.F.R. § 314.70. Generally, FDA approval is required before a labeling change can be made, although a manufacturer is permitted to amend its labeling to add or strengthen a contraindication, warning, precaution, or adverse reaction, or to add or strengthen an instruction about dosage and administration for safety reasons, prior to receiving FDA approval of the change. 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2). But, even in those instances, such changes must be submitted to FDA for its ultimate review.

The holder of an approved NDA similarly is subject to substantial reporting requirements after the drug is approved, such that FDA is kept abreast of any emerging information about a drug. 21 C.F.R. §§ 314.80-.81. If FDA believes that any such information merits a change in the drug's labeling, it can request that the company make the change voluntarily. If the manufacturer refuses to do so, FDA has a broad range of enforcement options. 21 U.S.C. §§ 355(e), 333.

All of these pervasive labeling and ADE provisions more than justified the view of the Justice Department and FDA in Bernhardt that it would be counter to FDA's core mission – as ordained by Congress – were a court to mandate changes in an FDA-approved label. The same logic applies to efforts by lay judges and juries to second-guess FDA labeling decisions through damage awards.

FDA's increasing use of preemption parallels a similar expansion in the application of the preemption doctrine by the courts. As noted, in 1992, the Supreme Court decided in Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., that Federal law (in that case the Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1969) preempted failure-to-warn tort claims for damages stemming from promotion of cigarettes, notwithstanding that the statute did not explicitly preempt common law damages actions. 505 U.S. at 515.

In Geier v. American Honda Motor Co., decided in 2000, the Court went even further. The Court held that a tort claim based on an automobile manufacturer's failure to equip a vehicle with a passive restraint device was preempted because it would constitute an obstacle to important Federal objectives underlying a Federal agency's regulatory scheme. Even though the relevant statute included a "saving" clause stating that compliance with a Federal safety standard would not exempt any person from any liability under common law, the Court applied ordinary preemption principles and found a conflict between the State lawsuit and Federal regulations. Specifically, the Department of Transportation had promulgated regulations that, with respect to passive restraint devices, attempted to balance a number of competing policy considerations, including costs, safety risks, public acceptance, and comparative effectiveness. Under those regulations, automobile manufacturers had to equip some but not all of their vehicles with passive restraints. The Supreme Court recognized that plaintiffs' tort action rested on an alleged duty of manufacturers to equip all of their cars with airbags, which duty "would have 'stood as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of' the important ... federal objectives" embodied in the regulations. 529 U.S. at 881-82 (citation omitted). Geier thus demonstrates the Supreme Court's increasing reluctance to allow tort actions to coexist with Federal regulation "where doing so would upset the careful regulatory scheme established by federal law." Id. at 870 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

In Geier, the Supreme Court thus recognized that, where a Federal agency has determined that its public health or safety objectives are best achieved by providing for an array of producer choices in determining the means by which the public health should be protected, State law determinations that only a single option is permissible unduly frustrate Federal objectives. Similarly, in the context of the present rulemaking, because FDA's important public health goal of achieving greater clarity and brevity in prescription drug labeling requires the agency and the manufacturer to make reasoned choices regarding the inclusion, presentation, and exclusion of safety information in prescription drug labeling, determinations in subsequent tort actions that upset that regulatory balance unduly frustrate the primary objective of this rulemaking.

After Geier, the Supreme Court examined preemption in Buckman Co. v. Plaintiffs' Legal Committee, 531 U.S. 341 (2001), in the specific context of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. In Buckman, the plaintiffs had alleged that a consultant to the manufacturer of orthopedic bone screws used by the plaintiffs made fraudulent representations to FDA regarding the intended use of the devices. The Court held that the plaintiffs' claims conflicted with, and were, therefore, impliedly preempted by, the Act. Id. at 348. The Court observed that in the area of medical device regulation the FDA has established a "detailed regulatory regime" and pursues "difficult (and often competing) objectives." Id. at 349-50. To allow State law fraud-on-the-FDA claims in such a setting, the Court reasoned, would result in conflicts with carefully considered FDA policies and the agency's responsibility to police fraud consistently with its judgment and objectives. Id. at 350-51. The Court additionally noted that such claims could result in applicants overburdening the FDA with "a deluge of information that the [FDA] neither wants nor needs," compromising FDA's ability to achieve its regulatory objectives. Id. at 351.

FDA's application of preemption in the present rulemaking is thus consistent with both agency and judicial precedent. FDA's statutory goal is to ensure that prescription drugs are safe and effective for their intended uses. Safety, however, does not mean zero risk. In approving each new prescription drug product, FDA makes a reasoned, scientific determination that a product's benefits to the public health outweigh its risks, both known and unknown.

The prescription drug labeling approved by FDA is the tool by which important FDA-approved information about the benefits and risks of each approved product is communicated to the health care provider. It is the primary tool for a health care provider to determine whether a particular prescription drug is appropriate for a particular patient. Thus, FDA devotes a significant amount of time and resources to ensuring that the labeling provides authoritative risk-benefit information to the health care provider in a clear, concise, and useful manner, and contains only that information necessary to ensure informed prescribing decisions. FDA also devotes significant efforts to ensuring that labeling continues to reflect up-to-date risk-benefit information throughout the life of the drug.

Tort actions based on inadequate warnings in prescription drug labeling frustrate FDA's ability to determine conclusively the content of labeling in accordance with the agency's statutory mandate. Such actions also impede FDA's ability to obtain manufacturer cooperation in excluding warnings or adverse reaction information from the drug labeling where, in FDA's view, such information would not be helpful to health care professionals and might obscure the significance of other information in the labeling. Fear of liability and heavy litigation costs pressure manufacturers to include in the labeling warnings or adverse events that are not supported by evidence indicating a plausible relationship between the drug and the warning or event.

Thus, as in Geier, preemption is necessary because "failure-to-warn" lawsuits present an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the important Federal objectives embodied in this rulemaking. Furthermore, as in Buckman, preemption is appropriate because, in its absence, the agency would be flooded with even more dubious information, its judgment regarding the application of its regulations would continue to be second-guessed by State judges and juries, and its ability to carry out its statutory mission would be seriously compromised.

Finally, preemption also is justified because a decision by a State legislature, State administrative agency, or State (or Federal diversity) court that a pharmaceutical drug's labeling is not adequate directly conflicts with FDA's benefit/risk decision in approving a new drug as safe and effective. When FDA approves labeling information, it does so in the context of a new drug application (or supplement thereto) that comprehensively puts the drug product's safety and effectiveness before the agency. See 21 C.F.R. § 314.50 (describing application requirements, including information as to labeling). As FDA itself has frequently noted, prescription drug labeling is "the primary tool the agency uses to communicate risk and benefit to the public." See, e.g., 67 Fed. Reg. 18230, 18231 (Apr. 15, 2002). Therefore, the approval of a pharmaceutical drug's labeling occurs in the context of the agency's decision that, as formulated and labeled, the drug is safe and effective. A State law decision (for instance, in a product liability lawsuit) that labeling is inadequate, by contrast, reflects a State government entity's conclusion that, as labeled, the product is not safe. See, e.g., Restatement (Third) of Torts: Products Liability § 1 cmt. a, at 6 (1998) (stating that questions of "defects based on inadequate instructions or warnings arise when" the product's "sale without adequate instructions or warnings, renders the product not reasonably safe") (emphasis added). Such a decision directly conflicts with FDA's approval of a pharmaceutical drug no less than would a State statute requiring that a pharmaceutical have a different chemical formulation than the one approved by FDA. Just as such a statute would be preempted under basic principles of conflict preemption, so, too should a State court decision finding an FDA-approved pharmaceutical unsafe under a theory of inadequate labeling.

F. Adequacy of Agency Rationale and Opportunities for Public Notice and Comment.

Although FDA has previously stated in conclusory fashion that its regulation of prescription drug labels should not be accorded preemptive effect, it is well-established that "[a]n agency's view of what is in the public interest may change, either with or without a change in circumstances." Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass'n v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 57 (1983) (quoting Greater Boston Television Corp. v. FCC, 444 F.2d 841, 852 (D.C. Cir. 1971)). In its landmark Chevron decision, the Supreme Court reaffirmed this principle:

> An initial agency interpretation is not instantly carved in stone. On the contrary, the agency, to engage in informed rulemaking, must consider varying interpretations and the wisdom of its policy on a continuing basis.

Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837, 863-64 (1984).

Indeed, just two years ago, in the case overturning FDA's assertion of jurisdiction over tobacco products, all of the Justices of the Supreme Court indicated their agreement with this important principle. The four dissenting Justices argued, citing Supreme Court precedent, that FDA was allowed to change its mind about whether it had jurisdiction over tobacco. FDA v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 186 (2000) (Breyer, J., dissenting). The five Justices in the majority – who, based on a different rationale, ultimately held that FDA lacked jurisdiction because of contrary congressional enactments – emphasized that they did not disagree that FDA could properly reverse a previous position: "[O]ur conclusion does not rely on the fact that the FDA's assertion of jurisdiction represents a sharp break with its prior interpretation of the FDCA. Certainly, an agency's initial interpretation of a statute that it is charged with administering is not 'carved in stone.'" Id. at 156-57 (citation omitted).

In changing even a longstanding position, an agency should supply a "reasoned analysis" justifying the change. State Farm, 463 U.S. at 57. See Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 187 (1991).

In this preamble, FDA is announcing a change from its prior policy statements that suggested (or could be interpreted as suggesting) that the agency did not intend its regulatory control over prescription drug labeling to preempt tort law claims, and is stating its reasons for announcing preemption. That the proposed rule, as published in December 2000, did not contain an explicit proposed preemption provision does not bar the agency from including such a provision in its final rule. As the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has commented, "[t]he requirement of submission of a proposed rule for comment does not automatically generate a new opportunity for comment merely because the rule promulgated by the agency differs from the rule it proposed, partly at least in response to submissions." International Harvester Co. v. Ruckelshaus, 478 F.2d 615, 632 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (footnote omitted). "A contrary rule would lead to the absurdity that in rule-making under the APA the agency can learn from the comments on its proposals only at the peril of starting a new procedural round of commentary." Id. at 632 n.51.

In assessing the adequacy of the notice provided in the proposal, the determinative test is whether the new rule is a "logical outgrowth" of the proposed rule. Natural Resources Defense Council v. Thomas, 838 F.2d 1224, 1242 (D.C. Cir. 1988). See also Small Refiner Lead Phase-Down Task Force v. EPA, 705 F.2d 506, 547 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (same); United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO v. Marshall, 647 F.2d 1189, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (upholding an OSHA final rule that differed from the proposed standard by an "obviously substantial" margin, and finding the notice adequate even though the notice of proposed rulemaking did not mention the standard ultimately adopted but asked for comment on a related question posed by OSHA in the rulemaking). Here, as explained above, Federal preemption is a logical outgrowth of FDA's solicitation of comments regarding the product liability implications of the proposed rule. The comments that FDA received on the preemption issue in response to the proposed rule provide overwhelming evidence of the adequacy of the notice.

Moreover, although FDA is proceeding to issue the final rule with a declaration of preemption, the agency – as it has in the past – invites interested parties to submit further comments on the preemption issue. See District of Columbia v. Train, 521 F.2d 971, 997 (D.C. Cir. 1975), vacated on other grounds sub nom. EPA v. Brown, 431 U.S. 99 (1977). See 67 Fed. Reg. 5046 (Feb. 4, 2002) (new animal drug reporting); 58 Fed. Reg. 46514 (Sept. 1, 1993) (medical device distributor reporting); 58 Fed. Reg. 43442 (Aug. 16, 1993) (device tracking); 58 Fed. Reg. 2066 (Jan. 6, 1993) (food nutrition labeling).

G. Scope of Preemption.

In determining the scope of preemption necessary, FDA, consistent with federalism principles, has balanced a number of public health and regulatory concerns. In accordance with federalism principles, FDA intends to preempt tort actions that would interfere with the agency's charge of protecting the public health by ensuring that prescription drugs are safe and effective and that their labeling contains correct, consistent, and clear information.

Although FDA is formally recognizing the need for preemption in the context of this specific rulemaking in which FDA invited comments on product liability concerns, the issues giving rise to the need for preemption reach beyond the specific changes the agency is implementing to prescription drug labeling format and content. Thus, while the consideration of the labeling changes set forth in this Rulemaking prompted FDA to focus on State law conflicts with and barriers to FDA's regulatory objectives, it has become clear to the agency in the course of this Rulemaking that the conflicts with FDA's requirements and the obstacles to FDA's policies potentially posed by State statutory, regulatory, and common law would require a preemptive solution even if FDA were not to adopt the changes announced in this notice.

The brief review of product liability cases provided above illustrates how court proceedings have already imposed legal duties on manufacturers with respect to prescription drug labeling that conflict with the duties FDA has established. Such actions essentially substitute the judgment of a judge or, more often, a lay jury for the agency's scientific expertise regarding appropriate prescription drug labeling. Yet Congress has charged FDA with the responsibility for protecting the public interest with respect to prescription drugs, including the regulation of their labeling. Such labeling involves a host of complex scientific and public health issues, including the proper interpretation of technical and medical data, judgments about clinical practice, communication techniques, consistency of regulation, and balancing of public health risks (e.g., weighing the possible hazards of a drug against the public interest in freedom from groundless alarms). FDA has the expertise to evaluate and balance these often competing interests and policy issues consistent with congressional intent.

FDA has carefully considered whether a narrower scope of preemption would be consistent with the accomplishment of FDA's regulatory responsibilities. For example, FDA considered preempting only those failure-to-warn claims that would be brought against prescription drugs labeled in compliance with the new regulations. The agency did not adopt that position, however, for two reasons: first, the rationales for preemption apply with as much force to currently approved prescription drug labels as they do to labels that would comply with the new regulations; and second, less extensive preemption would potentially increase the likelihood that State tort claims would be brought with respect to current labeling, thereby find specific information and to discern the most critical information in product labeling." Id. at 81083. Among the developments that have thus increased the length and complexity of drug labeling, FDA found that "the use of labeling in product liability and medical malpractice lawsuits, together with increasing litigation costs, has caused manufacturers to become more cautious and include virtually all known adverse event information, regardless of its importance or its plausible relationship to the drug." Id. These concerns weigh strongly in favor of the preemption of warnings-related pharmaceutical civil litigation claims.

Given the need for specific and discernable information, but confronted by the trend toward even longer and more complex drug labeling, FDA therefore proposed a revised format, the key features of which were (1) an introductory section entitled "Highlights of Prescribing Information," including a focused "Warnings/Precautions" portion, and (2) a revision in the manner adverse reactions would appear in such labeling. Because drug labeling must be internally consistent, each of these proposed changes would be implemented in conjunction with the new "Comprehensive Prescribing Information" in the package insert of each prescription drug, balancing the content and scope of information within the total drug labeling.

The proposed Warnings/Precautions portion of the highlights section is designed to contain a concise summary of the most clinically significant aspects of the Comprehensive Prescribing Information with respect to warnings and precautions. As noted in the proposal, drug labeling must convey information which is "most relevant to clinical prescribing situations." Id. at 81089. In addition to life-threatening drug reactions, the inclusion of information in this portion of the highlights section will reflect criteria requiring clinical judgment and an assessment of how clinicians would likely react to the various types of potentially increasing the scope of the conflict between State law and current FDA-approved labeling.

As explained above, FDA has concluded that preemption is necessary to protect the accomplishment of its regulatory objectives with respect to prescription drug labeling, primarily providing rational and consistent drug labeling on the basis of public health considerations. While the labeling revisions established in this rule would provide additional opportunities for State law to impose inconsistent labeling duties and thus frustrate the ability to achieve these objectives, such actions have already occurred and are currently presenting obstacles to the agency's public health goals, as well as imposing requirements that conflict with FDA-approved labeling. FDA now pervasively regulates prescription drug labeling and the rationales for preemption apply to existing labeling as well as to labeling meeting the new requirements.

Preemption of only those failure-to-warn claims based on labeling meeting the new requirements would also increase the likelihood of conflicting requirements for prescription drug labeling in its present format. FDA has established an implementation plan for the new labeling requirements that takes into account a number of competing considerations, including, among others, public health risks, agency resources, and the desire to avoid creating unfair marketing advantages for certain products. FDA developed that implementation plan pursuant to its determination that not all currently marketed products necessarily need revised labeling consistent with the new regulations in order to protect the public health and achieve regulatory objectives. As comments submitted to FDA have noted, however, the presence of varying labeling formats for products increases the liability risk for products that are entitled to continue to use the present labeling format. It is highly likely that the very existence of the newer format would be used to argue that products using the older format are inadequately labeled, despite FDA's reasoned determination to the contrary. In fact, the plaintiff in Geier made an analogous argument. See Geier, 529 U.S. at 881. If FDA thus were not to extend preemption to encompass labeling using the present format, it would further aggravate the conflicts that State tort law already presents. For these reasons, FDA has determined that all failure-to-warn claims based on FDA-approved labeling, whether compliant with the current format or the format finalized in this rulemaking, must be preempted. The agency believes that any less comprehensive action would fail to protect the important regulatory interests outlined above.

FDA also considered whether preemption should apply only to claims of failure-to-warn in the prescription drug labeling affirmatively approved by FDA. Such a relatively circumscribed scope of preemption would continue tort liability for two different kinds of claims. First, it would permit challenges to a manufacturer's failure to add or strengthen a contraindication, warning, precaution, or adverse reaction without prior FDA concurrence, as permitted under 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2). And second, it would permit challenges to the adequacy of such labeling statements added by a manufacturer without prior FDA concurrence. Based on careful analysis of these issues, FDA has decided to preempt both kinds of claims.

First, as to claims for a manufacturer's failure to add certain disclosures without prior FDA concurrence, the agency has concluded that permitting such claims to survive preemption would undermine the basic purpose of the present rulemaking by creating incentives for manufacturers to overload prescription drug labeling with additional risk information subsequent to the initial labeling approval, regardless of whether such information represents a scientifically plausible risk resulting from use of the drug. Although FDA can require the manufacturer to remove such additional information from the labeling, the agency considers it imperative to avoid creating incentives for manufacturers to attempt to add such information to the labeling for the mere purpose of "creating a record" for product liability protection. A deluge of manufacturer requests to add risk information to the labeling would impair FDA's ability to carry out its most basic functions regarding drug labeling and NDA approval. Moreover, product liability concerns might cause manufacturers to disseminate labeling that includes such additional (and, in FDA's view, unnecessary) "safety-related' information before FDA has the opportunity to assess and react to the manufacturer's request to do so, which likewise would directly compromise FDA's regulatory objectives.

Furthermore, various FDA regulations already require NDA holders to keep FDA informed of new safety data obtained after the initial drug approval. FDA has ample authority to punish NDA holders who fail to fulfill these regulatory duties. The agency also has ample authority to require manufacturers to add or strengthen statements regarding contraindications, warnings, precautions, or adverse reactions in previously-approved labeling, where emerging information makes the addition of such information helpful to health care practitioners. Thus, FDA has determined that causes of action for failure to add post-approval safety information to prescription drug labeling are not necessary to maintain the incentives of NDA holders to report newly emerging safety information to FDA, or to add such information to drug labeling following approval. Moreover, actions seeking damages from a manufacturer for failing to add information to drug labeling following FDA approval directly conflict with the agency's policy goal of seeking clear and concise labels. Because permitting such lawsuits to continue would undermine the objectives of this rulemaking and FDA's ability to carry out its most basic statutory duties to protect the public health and safety, it is FDA's express intent that these regulations will preempt such lawsuits.

Second, with respect to claims premised on the alleged inadequacy of contraindications, warnings, or precautions added to drug labeling prior to approval by FDA, but for which a filing under 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2) has been submitted to the agency, FDA has concluded that the availability of such claims (in a regime that preempts tort claims based on FDA-approved labeling) would have the perverse effect of unduly discouraging manufacturers from adding important safety information without prior FDA concurrence. Although one of the principal purposes of this Rulemaking is to simplify labeling and discourage manufacturers from adding excessive and unnecessary labeling information (for instance, in an attempt to insulate themselves against products liability claims), FDA recognizes that in some circumstances the public health and safety require that manufacturers have the flexibility to add important new safety information to pharmaceutical labeling expeditiously, without receiving prior FDA approval. Exposure to tort liability for claims arising out of the provision of such additional information would discourage manufacturers from making use of the flexibility provided in 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2), which was intended to facilitate and expedite the public availability of important new safety information. See, e.g., 50 Fed. Reg. 7452, 7470 (Feb. 22, 1985) (announcing final rule) (stating that "[s]ubstantive changes in labeling" require advance FDA approval "unless they relate to important safety information, like a new contraindication or warning, that should be immediately conveyed to the user"); cf. 61 Fed. Reg. 2739, 2744 (Jan. 29, 1996) (proposal to amend biologics regulations for reporting changes to approved application) (stating, with respect to labeling changes that would strengthen a contraindication, warning, or similar information, that "FDA believes that permitting these labeling changes to be effected and product distributed prior to FDA approval would facilitate labeling changes intended to adequately inform prescribers and patients of the risks and benefits of a biological product and thereby allow prescribers and patients earlier access to important new information on the safe use of the product"). Thus, while FDA recognizes that information overload is a serious public health issue – and is the primary evil to which this Rulemaking is a response – the agency also recognizes that Section 314.70(c)(2)'s provision for the expeditious addition of important safety information without prior FDA concurrence will continue to serve a salutary public purpose, and manufacturers should not be discouraged from using this procedure by the threat of tort liability. Accordingly, because tort suits alleging deficiencies in information that has been added to labeling, but that has not yet received FDA approval, pose an obstacle to the achievement of the policies underlying Section 314.70(c)(2), FDA has concluded that such suits should be preempted.

FDA has also concluded that one additional type of tort claim must be preempted in order to protect the agency's prescription drug labeling objectives. FDA intends to preempt claims that any person or entity failed to advise the agency of any postmarketing ADE reports. NDA holders are charged under FDA regulations with the obligation to report ADE information to the agency. Those ADE reports form the primary basis for FDA to determine whether a prescription drug's label must be modified to reflect evolving safety information. FDA therefore has promulgated comprehensive ADE reporting regulations setting forth, inter alia, which events must be reported, the time frame in which they must be reported, the information that must be submitted, and the investigation that must be performed.

FDA routinely inspects manufacturers to assure that they comply with these regulations. If the agency identifies failures to submit required reports, untimely reporting, misclassification of events, inadequate surveillance systems, or other deficiencies, FDA will issue a "Notice of Inspectional Observation" detailing the alleged violations. If FDA is not satisfied that the manufacturer has an adequate plan to respond to such observations, the agency may issue a "Warning Letter" informing the company that FDA considers the company to be in violation of the regulations. FDA may additionally impose significant administrative and criminal penalties if it determines that a company has failed to comply with the ADE regulations – and the agency has not been reluctant to do so in appropriate circumstances.

FDA is aware that, despite this pervasive regulation of ADE reporting, manufacturers may be held liable under common law for a "failure to warn" based on purported violations of the ADE regulations, even absent any FDA determination that any violation has occurred. FDA has determined that preemption of such claims is necessary to achieve the regulatory goals as set forth in its ADE reporting regulations and to protect the meaningfulness of the failure-to-warn preemption set forth here. The ADE reporting regulations require only certain ADE information to be reported, based on a balance FDA has drawn between the expected usefulness and public health importance of the information, agency resources, burden on industry, and other public health and policy concerns. FDA has, in the past, eliminated reporting requirements that proved to be of little public health use but were significantly burdensome to both industry and the agency. 62 Fed. Reg. 34166 (June 25, 1997). Tort claims premised on alleged failures to report ADE information to FDA, by establishing State law "duties" to submit ADE information to FDA, threaten to undermine the balance that the agency is attempting to achieve in the application of ADE reporting regulations. Submission of unwanted and unnecessary ADE information not only misdirects and wastes FDA resources but may also obscure the truly important information the agency seeks.

Furthermore, like the "fraud on the FDA" claims the Supreme Court recently held to be preempted in Buckman, whether a manufacturer has violated the ADE reporting regulations is a question that bears directly on the relationship between FDA and the entities it regulates – and, as such, is inherently a matter to be resolved by the agency, not by a tort suit. Buckman, 531 U.S. at 347. This is not a simple case of additional enforcement of Federal requirements. FDA is uniquely situated to enforce its own ADE reporting regulations, and there are significant adverse consequences to the achievement of public health objectives when State courts and juries that do not have the same regulatory and scientific expertise as FDA attempt to determine whether FDA's regulations have been violated.

For all of these reasons, it is FDA's express intent that:

1. No State or local governing body shall require any person or other entity issuing labeling that has been approved by FDA to alter, amend or add to that labeling in any fashion; to issue any additional labeling or prescribing information with respect to any subject that is described, or that could be described, in such labeling; or to take any action or issue any statements inconsistent with the information in such labeling.

2. No court shall entertain any cause of action or prayer for injunctive relief or damages based upon any claim that information in any labeling that has been approved by FDA or for which a filing under 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2) has been submitted to FDA is inadequate, misleading, misclassified, or in any other respect is insufficiently presented, including, but not limited to, any claim that any additional information should have been included in such labeling.

3. No court shall entertain any cause of action or prayer for injunctive relief or damages based upon any claim that any information regarding or relating to any adverse event report(s) was inadequately, misleadingly, or in any other way insufficiently presented in labeling that has been approved by FDA, or that any person or entity failed in any respect to advise FDA sufficiently of such adverse event report(s).

H. Effect on Implementation Schedule.

In conjunction with the proposed revisions to prescription drug labeling, FDA proposed an implementation plan depending on the date of approval of a drug's new drug application and the status of approved or pending efficacy supplements. That plan provided for compliance with conforming labeling spanning a seven-year period. FDA also observed that many products not initially covered by the revised format and content requirements would at some point submit efficacy supplements and thus would be required to revise their labeling to conform to the revised format and content requirements at that time. At the same time, FDA observed that "the changes necessary for the existing product labeling to comply with these sections could be made [voluntarily] without prior FDA approval" with a supplement explaining the changes at the time the applicant makes them under a "Changes Being Effected" supplement. 21 CFR § 314.70(c); 21 CFR § 601.12(f). FDA stated its view that Changes Being Effected supplements would "help ensure that the information and labeling regarding a drug product's indications or uses is not misleading, and to help ensure that the staggered implementation scheme does not give a marketing advantage to certain products." 65 Fed. Reg. at 81099.

Recognizing that drug manufacturers would need to redesign drug product labeling, test redesigned labeling, and prepare and submit labeling to FDA for approval, FDA estimated that "approximately 1,888 labeling supplements would be submitted to the FDA during the first year after the effective date" by approximately 145 applicants. Id. at 81102. The agency also estimated a total of nearly 800,000 hours of manufacturer time for compliance, id. at 81103, because "as many as 1,838 products might have to delete some material from their professional labeling" in order to comply with the new labeling requirements. Id. at 81109. FDA's decision to provide a preemptive effect respecting prescription drug labeling will substantially limit the time, cost and effort that would have been undertaken, both by FDA and by pharmaceutical manufacturers, in implementing the new labeling format and content requirements.

I. Conclusion.

The FFDCA charges FDA with assuring the safety and effectiveness of prescription drugs. The present rulemaking is necessary to correct trends in prescription drug labeling that have obscured clinically relevant information and increased the likelihood of prescribing errors and inappropriate drug use. As revised, the prescription drug labeling regulations will improve the public health by providing health care practitioners with clearer, more accessible, and more useful information. These revised regulations would be rendered unworkable, however, unless accompanied by preemption of lawsuits based on alleged deficiencies in FDA-approved labeling. Therefore, Federal preemption is essential to effectuating FDA's regulatory objectives in this rulemaking. The scope of the preemption announced in this preamble is tailored to achieve those objectives.

information. As FDA observed in the proposal: "It may be just as, if not more, important from a clinical standpoint for a prescriber to know about a less serious, but common and irritating adverse reaction likely to reduce compliance with drug therapy in many patients. Thus, in determining whether specific cautionary information should be included in the highlights section, consideration should be given to a combination of factors, including the seriousness of an adverse reaction and its frequency of occurrence, whether steps could be taken to avoid the adverse reaction or identify and treat it at an early stage, and the likelihood that the reaction could affect patient compliance or continuation of therapy. These factors should be assessed in light of how they would affect a health care practitioner's decision to prescribe the particular drug in a clinical setting and how the practitioner would use and monitor the drug." Id.

In addition to the creation of the highlights section, FDA also proposed a change in the definition of "adverse reaction" in the Comprehensive Prescribing Information. That clarification is designed to assure that only those reactions that are injurious to health and unintended, rather than all effects that are undesirable (which does not necessarily imply either that the effect is injurious or unintended) may be included in the "Adverse Reactions" section of the labeling. FDA stated that it was proposing this change because the "reasonably associated" language in the current regulatory definition can be, and in many cases has been, interpreted as meaning that a reaction should be included merely if there is a temporal association, rather than a reasonable causal association between a response and a drug. As the agency noted, this has resulted in the inclusion of information in the "Adverse Reactions" section of current drug labeling that is not meaningful to prescribers and which dilutes the usefulness of the clinically meaningful information. The revised definition would clarify that at least a reasonably plausible causal relationship must exist between a drug and a noxious and unintended response for the event to be included in the "Adverse Reactions" section of the labeling. Id. at 81094.

C. Call for Public Comments Regarding Product Liability Concerns.

In the proposal, FDA sought comments on certain specific issues concerning the highlights section. One of the specified questions was, "Does the inclusion of a highlights section have a significant effect on manufacturers' product liability concerns and, if so, is this concern adequately addressed by: (a) Titling this section 'highlights' rather than 'summary,'; and (b) including the following statement, in bold, at the end of the highlights section: 'These highlights do not include all the information needed to prescribe (name of drug) safely and effectively.'" The agency then asked: "If these are not sufficient, could the agency take different or additional measures to alleviate product liability concerns without eliminating the highlights section altogether or lengthening it to an extent that it would no longer serve its intended purpose." Id. at 81086.

These specific questions were in part the result of comments FDA had already received on a prototype of new prescription drug labeling from focus groups, physicians' surveys, qualitative testing and a public meeting. Some of those comments had "expressed concern about the inclusion of a highlights section because of its potential effect on product liability." Id. at 81087. Specifically, the comments stated that including the highlights section would force manufacturers to pick and choose only certain parts of the warning information listed in the Comprehensive Prescribing Information. One comment on the prototype that FDA published in its December 22, 2000 proposal was that use of the highlights section "'would allow an expert witness testifying on behalf of a patient who suffered an adverse reaction that was listed in the full prescribing information to argue that a manufacturer's warning was inadequate or "buried" because that specific adverse reaction was not also highlighted in the Summary.'" Id. As a result of such comments, FDA recognized in its proposal that "prescription drug labeling may be used as evidence in product liability cases and other types of civil actions to determine, among other things, whether a manufacturer has adequately disclosed information about risks associated with its drug." Id.

The agency's preliminary assessment regarding these concerns was that the impact on product liability might be "speculative." Id. Nevertheless, FDA sought further comments on whether the inclusion of the highlights section would have a significant effect on manufacturers' product liability concerns and, if so, whether those concerns had been adequately addressed by this proposal. FDA repeated its objective "to alleviate product liability concerns without eliminating the highlights section altogether, or lengthening it to an extent that it would no longer serve its intended purpose." Id. at 81088.

In response to FDA's specific questions, comments were received, inter alia, from the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America ("PhRMA"), which represents the country's research-based pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies. In its general comments on the proposed labeling revision, PhRMA urged FDA to issue a statement that "FDA approval of labels and labeling preempts conflicting or contrary state law, regulations, or decisions of a court of law for purposes of product liability litigation." PhRMA contended that "juries are not qualified to make decisions about whether the FDA-approved labeling information is adequate for the practitioner. Indeed, juries have sometimes determined that the sponsor should have included information that FDA affirmatively decided should not be included in the drug labeling.

Thus, FDA's goal of consistent and user-friendly labeling may be hampered by inconsistent state court jury determinations of adequacy. The agency can avoid this by a statement that FDA-approved labeling preempts inconsistent decisions in individual personal injury litigation." PhRMA Comments on FDA Proposed Rx Labeling Rule, June 14, 2001 at 5.

With specific regard to the highlights section, PhRMA expressed the view that product liability suits "would inevitably arise," particularly in comparing the highlights section and the information in the Comprehensive Prescribing Information section of labeling. PhRMA submitted that this concern was "far from speculative." To the contrary, PhRMA explained that:

> Every pharmaceutical product liability case involves allegations regarding the adequacy of the information disclosed about the product, including allegations that important information is missing or that risk or other information disclosed was not sufficiently prominent. Plaintiffs have specifically brought actions that assert liability based on product summaries that are argued to be incomplete or otherwise flawed.
> The only way to resolve these liability risks would be for FDA to mandate the precise content of the "Highlights" section for a particular product and for FDA's determination to preempt any possible tort liability. Preemption should extend to the entire label, not just the "Highlights" section. Even if the "Highlights" section were preemptive, plaintiffs might cite the fact that newer products have a "Highlights" section as evidence that the labeling for an older product is inadequate in its disclosure of risk information. Plaintiffs might also cite the contrasts between the new "Highlights" section of a new dosage form as alleged evidence of the inadequacy of the labeling of an older dosage form. These risks would increase the product liability exposure presented by older products, unless compliance with FDA labeling requirements were broadly to preempt state law tort claims.

Id. at 8-9. A number of individual pharmaceutical companies submitted comments echoing PhRMA's views on this subject.

PhRMA and other commentors also objected to the proposed revision respecting adverse reactions on the grounds that it would "raise acute product liability concerns." Id. at 18. PhRMA argued that "discrepancies most certainly will arise between products in the same therapeutic class, because labels for older products will include adverse reactions that do not meet the new criteria and thus are not listed in labeling for newer products. Plaintiffs' attorneys would attempt to use this discrepancy in labeling to attack the adequacy of the risk disclosures in the less-inclusive labeling for newer products." Id. at 19. As a result, PhRMA urged that "the only real solution to these product liability concerns is to make the federal requirements for the entire label preemptive so that the FDA-approved labeling is deemed an adequate disclosure in a product liability lawsuit. Otherwise, the agency must be extremely wary of changing features of the labeling, like the standard for including adverse reactions, that are critical for both prescribing and product liability reasons." Id. at 19-20. Given these and related concerns about the revision in the definition of "adverse reactions," PhRMA recommended that FDA drop the proposed change. Id. at 20. FDA, however, continues to believe that a redefinition of "adverse reaction" and modifications in the current presentation of adverse reactions in prescription drug labeling are necessary and, as revised in the final rule, should be maintained.

D. Federal Preemption is Necessary to Achieve FDA's Regulatory Objectives.

FDA has carefully evaluated these comments in light of two related and evolving realities: First, as the December 22, 2000 proposal and the pre-existing FDA regulations governing prescription drug labeling make clear, FDA has a compelling interest in assuring that drug labeling alerts practitioners to the essential information they need to prescribe a drug safely and effectively. In the proposal, FDA provided its assessment in accordance with Executive Order 13132 on Federalism. After it summarized the goals of the proposed regulations in considering the implications on federalism, the agency announced that enforcement of these labeling provisions "is a Federal responsibility." 65 Fed. Reg. at 81103. FDA reiterates that establishing and enforcing clear and concise labeling standards for prescription drugs is a Federal responsibility. Manufacturers must be allowed to follow FDA's regulations and implement the agency's label-by-label decisions without the fear of adverse consequences under State law, including State tort law.

FDA believes that its policy of assuring that drug labeling alerts practitioners to the essential information needed for prescribing pharmaceuticals safely and effectively can only be achieved by using its continued comprehensive, prescriptive and pervasive role in regulating prescription drug labeling to assure that labeling conveys the appropriate balance of information, and conveys it in a way that supports and furthers the public health.

Second, decisions respecting prescription drug labeling arising in product liability and medical malpractice lawsuits have become obstacles to, and will continue to present obstacles to, accomplishment of the purposes and objectives Congress mandated FDA to achieve in determining how prescription drug information should be communicated. Such litigation decisions conflict with the regulatory decisions that FDA has and will make with respect to pharmaceutical labeling. Accordingly, FDA has decided to announce its intent to preempt failure-to-warn claims in private tort liability suits brought in State, or Federal diversity, courts, where a manufacturer's labeling has been approved by FDA.

The benefits of the new drug labeling regulation that support FDA's decision to proceed with a final rule requiring a highlights section and a new definition of adverse reactions are the

FRAMEWORK FOR A COMPENSATION PROGRAM FOR PRESCRIPTION DRUG INJURIES

Trial lawyers and other advocates of the current tort liability system for prescription drug injuries claim that the threat of potentially massive liability gives manufacturers an essential incentive to optimize their product quality and risk-management practices while simultaneously compensating individuals who have suffered injuries as a result of inadequacies in those practices. The purported incentive provided by the tort system, however, directly conflicts with the risk management analysis undertaken by FDA in its approval of new drugs and in its postmarket surveillance of drugs already in the marketplace. FDA's decision to approve a new drug represents the agency's determination that, based on current scientific knowledge, the benefits of the new drug product to the public health outweigh its risks. The approval decision is made with full knowledge of the fact that all drugs pose some risk to some portion of the patient population, and that further study and experience will, over time, provide additional information about risks both known and unknown at the time the drug is approved.

In reality, however, every new piece of safety information provided to the public by FDA and drug manufacturers after a new drug is approved and in use provides opportunistic trial lawyers with a marketing opportunity for a new class action. The costs of defending those state law tort suits -- and the ad hoc decisions of non-expert judges and inexperienced juries in those actions -- often create incentives that are inconsistent with the FDA's expert determination regarding the benefit to public health of individual drugs and the Agency's programs for overseeing and managing the unavoidable risks of prescription drugs. For example, State law verdicts (or the threat of such verdicts) in "failure to warn" tort suits create overwhelming incentives for manufacturers to expand and, consequently, complicate their prescription drug labeling, which directly conflicts with recent FDA efforts to streamline and simplify such labeling, which the agency has undertaken after extensive study of the problem of information overload on drug labels. In short, the current tort system constitutes a shadow regulatory regime that frustrates, conflicts with, and ultimately threatens to undermine the comprehensive regulatory system crafted by the FDA in the exercise of its unique expertise in regulating pharmaceuticals for the protection of public health.

Despite these conflicts, Federal regulators and courts have been reluctant to preempt State law tort claims – no doubt out of concern that preemption would deprive injured persons of compensation for drug-related injuries. In similar situations, however, Congress has responded by displacing tort liability and providing an alternative compensation regime. For example, when lawsuits threatened the supply and availability of childhood vaccines, Congress passed the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986, which eliminated counterproductive litigation while providing an administrative system for compensating those injured by the inherent and inevitable risks of vaccines.

Similarly, sound public policy now demands the elimination of the tort system's ongoing interference with the FDA's management of new drug approval and adverse event surveillance programs designed to protect the public health. At the same time, FDA, Congress, industry and the public must ensure that those who are injured by prescription drugs are fairly compensated. In addition to frustrating FDA's public health objectives as noted above, the current tort system is unacceptably slow, expensive, and inefficient, with an enormous amount of compensation dollars diverted to lawyers, experts and other administrative costs. Even worse, a number of factors, including public perceptions of "big business" generally and the pharmaceutical industry specifically, the complexity of the legal and factual issues involved, and the varying leverage wielded by trial lawyers based upon the "inventory" of claimants they have been able to amass, frequently make the results of drug tort litigation fundamentally unfair to defendants and plaintiffs alike. These cases have become a crapshoot for plaintiffs, whose outcome depends not so much on the merits of the parties' respective claims as on substantively irrelevant factors, such as where suit was brought and who represents the plaintiffs. Thus, a new system is needed to spread the risk of pharmaceutical-related injuries among all those benefiting from prescription drugs and to provide swift, predictable, reasonable and fair compensation with maximum efficiency. To protect the public health for all Americans and to assure fair and efficient resolution of claims for drug-related injuries, we must find a better way.

Overview of Program

A tort replacement initiative in the prescription drug field would, like the Vaccine Act, substitute a "no-fault" reimbursement program covering certain injuries caused by prescription drugs for the existing tort/product liability system. Once in effect, the program would apply prospectively to future claims for prescription-related injury, regardless of when the drug was first prescribed or the injuries first began to develop.. Such a program would effectively eliminate the specter of "bet the company" mass tort litigation in which, despite the best efforts of scientists and regulators, an approved drug product is determined to have previously unknown or unpredictable adverse consequences when administered to the population at large. Coverage could be provided through a trust fund for those who could demonstrate the requisite injury caused by an FDA-approved prescription drug, provided that the drug was taken pursuant to and consistent with a prescription issued to the claimant by a qualified (or purportedly qualified) physician.

The program would allow claimants to recover economic damages (lost earnings and medical care expenses) from the fund consistent with established guidelines, place caps on the recovery of damages for death and non-economic damages, prohibit recovery of punitive and exemplary damages, and permit the recovery of only reasonable attorneys fees and costs. The program would be secondarily liable, and would not pay for items or services covered by collateral sources, such as federal and state benefit plans and private insurance. Moreover, the program could be designed to allow it to seek contribution from responsible third parties (e.g., a physician/administrator who commits malpractice). Compensation awards would be paid from a trust fund that could be financed with a small levy on all prescription drugs covered by the program.

As noted above, FDA approval of a prescription drug as safe and effective represents the Agency's determination that the benefits of the drug product to patient populations outweigh the attendant risks. Some risks, however, remain in the use of all prescription drugs. Some of these risks, ranging from the minor side effects of many prescription drugs to the frequently significant impact of chemotherapy drugs on patients who might die absent treatment, are necessarily attendant upon use of the drug product. They are disclosed in labeling when their incidence has been demonstrated to be sufficiently connected to administration of the drug that FDA deems their disclosure appropriate to protecting the public health. The tort system theoretically bars recovery for those effects as a risk assumed by the patient (although in specific cases, plaintiffs have prevailed). The program, similarly, would not provide recovery for such effects.

Other prescription drug injuries, whether labeled or not, are so far removed from the benefits of the product that an individual drug user could not reasonably expect such an injury attendant to the benefit of the product. The best example is the severe adverse reaction that may occur in a small number of users of a drug who cannot be identified. The program would be designed to allow recovery for such injuries, even where the existing tort system might not.

Framework of Program

1. Prescription Drugs to Be Covered: Coverage would extend to all prescription drugs approved by FDA and issued through an authorized prescription written in the United States and trust territories or for Armed Forces members serving abroad and their dependents. The limitation to United States drugs is justified by importation and reimportation limitations placed on prescription drugs by the Prescription Drug Marketing Act and FDA's recent concerns regarding the scope of the personal use exemption to the importation and reimportation limitations.

2. Uses to Be Covered: Coverage would extend to all uses of an eligible prescription drug. Thus, the program would include both off-label use and allegations of erroneous prescribing or dosage.

(a) Attempting to exclude off-label uses would render the program ineffective for a large number of claims that currently clog the tort system.

(b) In addition, FDA's current labeling regulations require specific warnings related to common off-label uses where there is lack of substantial evidence of effectiveness of the use and association of the use with clinically significant risk or hazard.

(c) Regarding medication errors, the Fund would be authorized to pursue contribution claims from physicians or prescribers to the extent the Fund pays benefits for doctor or prescriber error.

3. Claimant Eligibility: The claim may be denied upon demonstration of use without a prescription issued to the claimant, use by the patient inconsistent with label or physician instructions and warnings, and/or misrepresentation by the patient to the prescriber concerning the existence of conditions material to determining whether the drug is contraindicated.

(a) As part of the petition process, the Claimant would bear the initial burden of providing the prescription and averring as to proper use and lack of material misrepresentation.

(b) The initial burden on the petitioner could also be satisfied by requiring a standardized affidavit from the prescribing physician as to existence and necessity of prescription and appropriate instruction of and disclosure to the patient.

(c) The Fund could challenge the claim based on medical records and other evidence, but would bear the burden of persuasion.

4. Parties to be Covered: The Program would cover manufacturers, health care providers, and pharmacists, with the Fund able to pursue contribution claims against providers and pharmacists for prescribing errors. Such broad coverage would prevent diversion of disproportionate tort burdens to health care providers and pharmacists.

5. Injuries to be Covered: The program would include, subject to determination of causation as noted below, all injuries except those within the known risks identified on the labeling at the time the prescription was issued that are so likely to manifest themselves as part of the benefits of the product that their occurrence should reasonably be expected.

(a) To control administrative costs and prevent the system from being overloaded by trivial or frivolous claims, consideration could be given to establishing an injury threshold for compensable claims under the system. Injuries falling below the seriousness threshold would not be compensated.

(b) As noted below, specific determination of those injuries (and their magnitude) that are sufficiently known and likely to occur could be tied to FDA's determinations of risk as reflected in its labeling decisions. Caps on damages for wrongful death or pain and suffering, similar to the $250,000 cap for each contained in the Vaccine Act, would be included.

(c) Over time, experience with the administration of the system may provide a basis for establishing schedules setting compensation amounts for certain injuries. Such schedules could apply presumptively, with claimants free to offer evidence demonstrating that the scheduled compensation would be insufficient and inappropriate under the circumstances and that, subject to applicable caps, a higher compensation amount should be awarded.

(d) Claims alleging fear of future injury based on exposure (i.e., medical monitoring claims) would not be covered unless FDA determines medical monitoring is warranted based upon experience with a particular drug

(e) Punitive damages would be unavailable under the system.

(f) Under the broad preemption of pharmaceutical-related claims associated with the system, there would be no provision for residual common law or statutory claims for medical monitoring, punitive damages, or liability in excess of awarded amounts.

6. Determination of Causation: Over time, FDA would make drug-by-drug determinations of the types and magnitude of injuries that would be entitled to the rebuttable presumption of causation. These determinations would be made as part of FDA's labeling or approval decisions, and would be reviewed periodically based on adverse event reports, additional information requested or received from the manufacturer or other sources, and experience to date of petition determinations.

(a) All other injuries would be subject to proof of causality by preponderance of evidence.

(b) FDA's labeling requirements, both proposed and current, require that labeling categorize adverse reactions by frequency (most frequent, less frequent, and rare) and severity. These determinations could provide the basis for distinguishing between known adverse reactions whose occurrence and magnitude can reasonably be expected from use of the product (those that are most frequent or least severe and should therefore be excluded from coverage) and the known but unpredictable severe adverse reaction.

(c) As the entity ultimately responsible for the risk-benefit determination that permits marketing of a pharmaceutical product, FDA is in the best position to ultimately decide which risks inherent in the product are part of the trade-off for the product's benefits, and which are so out of proportion to the benefits that a claimant should be compensated.

7. Administration of Program: Under enabling legislation, the Secretary of Health and Human Services would promulgate regulations establishing a system for the efficient and expeditious determination of petitions, which might include, at the Secretary's discretion, contracting with outside parties experienced in the adjustment of medical claims to make an initial determination of eligibility and amount of award, subject to de novo review by a Special Master and APA review by a district court, thus combining private sector, administrative and judicial resources.

8. Funding of Program: Funding would be based on a tax on wholesale sales of each prescription drug.

(a) Adjustments should be considered as cost information is developed or to address other inequities (e.g., adjustments to impose equal tax burdens on manufacturers of "brand name" and "generic" products that present identical risk factors).

(b) Implementing legislation should provide for consideration of the feasibility of the use of risk rating after a set period of years.

Attached is a draft response OFPP has prepared to the recent Lieberman letter seeking OMB's views and various pieces of information regarding contractor indemnification. (If you need another copy of the incoming, let me know and I'll fax it to you.) I have prepared a cover letter giving our overall response and then attached more detailed responses as an enclosure. The draft is still under review within OMB, including in OGC, but we wanted to make sure you had sufficient time to review the document and provide your policy guidance.

Given the time constraints, I limited agency input to the following agencies: DOT and HHS (given their recent experiences with indemnification related specifically to the defense against terrorism), DoD (which has indemnified contractors against unusually hazardous or nuclear risks), and DOE (which, pursuant to the Price-Anderson Act, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident). Each of these agencies is reviewing the factual statements in the response (the policy discussion has not been shared with them). We should have their input by no later than noon on Tuesday.

Lee-Ann Bracket from Lieberman's staff left a voice-mail for me (228-3533) which I passed on to Christine and Danielle for followup. I'm sure she is anxious to have the responses before the Senate resumes its deliberations next week.

We are also hearing that the House Technology and Procurement Policy Subcommittee may hold a hearing on this subject sometime in September.

FYI, Angela is out of town but will be checking emails. (We discussed the basic responses late last week.)

To assist in your review, you might note the following points (any and all of which can obviously be revised/reworked as may be necessary):

The draft strongly opposes the Govt Reform Committee (GROC) indemnification proposal, consistent with the House SAP language. (The letter states that the current indemnification scheme under Public Law 85-804 is sufficient. There is not an extensive comparison made between 85-804 and the GROC proposal other than to point out that the GROC proposal would drastically increase exposure to liability through potential coverage of state and local contractors. It is possible that, at some point, we may be asked why we think the GROC proposal will result in greater indemnification of federal contractors than may occur under 85-804.)

The draft expresses support for the SAFETY Act. This should help to clarify some confusion that apparently has arisen regarding what was intended by the House SAP. FYI, I wasn't sure whether we wanted to support the Act outright or just the "types of protections" it provides -- the latter being a hedge in case we want to work with Congress to fine-tune the mechanics

Although there is limited discussion on the SAFETY Act, there is no specific discussion of the government contractor defense. The government contractor defense (which already exists today through case law) shields contractors from unbounded liability when: (a) the government provides reasonably specific specifications, (b) the contractor follows the specifications, and (c) the contractor makes known risks uniquely known to the contractor. Our initial review of case law suggests that courts traditionally have appeared to overwhelmingly rule in favor of contractors -- and we haven't yet come across a case where the government has been held liable (which comes as little surprise because there appears to be no waiver of sovereign immunity). We might undercut our concern about indemnification if we emphasize that the government contractor defense generally has worked well.

Although the letter asks for parameters for reaching a compromise, the draft does not expressly indicate support for a compromise. There are places in the response where the door theoretically is left open. For example, the last sentence of the second paragraph of the cover letter states that it would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to unbounded liability -- which arguably leaves the door open for bounded liability). The response to the first question includes reference to an FAA example where one key consideration of indemnification apparently centered around the fact that the item was highly customized (as opposed to commercial off-the-shelf). If I recall correctly, Brett drew this type of distinction at our meeting with industry several weeks ago.

The specific responses to the questions focus primarily on Public Law 85-804. However, there is also brief discussion on both the Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA) and the Price-Anderson Act, since the questions asked us to discuss other authorities in addition to 85-804. It is probably beneficial to discuss CSLA, since its model for limiting liability (e.g., requiring approval of a compensation plan and congressional appropriation of funds) is fiscally responsible. On the other hand, Price-Anderson (which mandates indemnification for contracts that involve the risk of a nuclear incident) is probably not a desirable model to emulate. (As I assume you know, Price-Anderson expired and I understand discussions are ongoing regarding an extension of the authority.)

The responses do not attempt to address every question in explicit detail. For example, it is difficult to gauge how often indemnification is provided when a contract is eligible for such because (1) there is no government-wide database of such information and (2) agencies probably determine there is no unusually hazardous risk as opposed to finding such and then telling the contractor no indemnification will be provided.

The cover letter expresses support for a terrorism insurance program. The language should basically mirror SAP discussion for S. 2600. I wasn't sure if you wanted to address this in the letter; hence, the language is bracketed.

The draft indicates that we are not aware of the federal government having previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments. It is possible that there may have been legislation in the 1960s related to the riots in Washington that involved payment from federal to local govt related to indemnification. We're checking into this.

D R A F T

The Honorable Joseph I. Lieberman
Chairman
Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in response to your August 7, 2002 correspondence requesting our views regarding the indemnification of contractors who provide products and services to aid in our Nation's homeland security efforts. Your letter indicates that when the Senate considers its version of the Homeland Security legislation in September, an amendment may be offered to authorize indemnification.

We understand that the amendment the Senate may consider is similar to what was proposed by the House Government Reform Committee for the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (H.R. 5005). The Government Reform Committee's proposal, which was not part of the House-passed bill, would have authorized the federal government to provide unlimited indemnification to companies that sell counterterrorism technology to federal, state, and local government agencies. These actions would not be subject to the availability of appropriations. The Administration would strongly oppose such an amendment, given the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. It would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to this unbounded liability.

Catastrophic business risks associated with selling antiterrorism technology to the government which cannot otherwise be covered through private insurance can generally be addressed, as may be appropriate, under indemnification authorities already provided to agencies. Most notable among these authorities is Public Law 85-804. Under this law, the President may empower the heads of agencies to indemnify contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks associated with activities facilitating the national defense. While the types of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 are limited, covered agencies still have considerable discretion to determine if an activity qualifies as unusually hazardous or nuclear.

Question 2: The request to expand indemnification authority rests on the premise that the government is having, or will have, difficulty in obtaining the technology and products it needs to protect the homeland in the war on terrorism. What is the executive branch's experience in this regard? Has it been difficult or impossible to get the needed products? If so, how extensive has the difficulty been? Has it been government-wide or limited to just a few Departments or agencies? To what do you attribute any difficulty that exists? Is it due to the absence of indemnification authority? Would greater indemnification authority resolve the problem? If so, what should the scope of statutory authority for such provisions be?

To date, OFPP has not been advised by federal agencies of significant or widespread difficulties in obtaining access to the marketplace for products and services needed for homeland security. We are aware of limited difficulties in accessing the marketplace due to contractor concerns with catastrophic liability. Some of these concerms have been dealt with through, or are being considered for, indemnification under Public Law 85-804.

According to DOT, screening companies made clear after September 11th that they would refuse to enter into contractual agreements with the federal government unless indemnification was provided. In January 2002, the Secretary authorized FAA to negotiate indemnification agreements with airport security screening companies to secure contract screening services during the transition to federal airport screening by employees of TSA. Manufacturers of vaccine and related products have advised HHS that such products carry safety and efficacy risks that prevent them from meeting the government's needs at fair and reasonable prices without indemnification. As noted in the response to Question no. 1, the Secretary granted indemnification to one contractor and currently is considering requests from other manufacturers.

Expanding indemnification authority is neither necessary nor appropriate. Most homeland security-related needs will not warrant indemnification. DOT points out, as just one example, that procurement assistance, general services or other management support services would not merit indemnification, if sought, among other reasons because they do not constitute unusually hazardous risks. As a general matter, insurers should have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country acclimates to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th. However, protections of the type set forth in the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005, are worthy of consideration. The SAFETY Act would establish a federal cause of action to recognize claims of parties injured in terrorist attacks where anti-terrorism technology was deployed but, at the same time, limit potential contractor and government liability in a fiscally responsible manner.

Question 3: The amendment before the House would have allowed the Secretary of Homeland Security to indemnify contractors with State and local governments. Has the Federal government ever before entered into agreements indemnifying contractors with State or local governments? Does the Administration believe there is a need to do so? Should Congress consider different factors when evaluating this part of the proposal than when reviewing the expansion of authority for federal government contracts?

We appreciate that state and local governments, like the federal government, need effective access to the innovation and expertise of the private sector. In this regard, we understand, for example, that New York City's Metropolitan Transit Authority and Policy Department have faced difficulties obtaining chemical-biological detection systems. While these difficulties should be addressed, unbounded federal indemnification is not the answer. Indemnification of this nature would be fiscally irresponsible due to the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. To our knowledge, the federal government has not previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments.

Rather than increasing indemnification, state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies could be enhanced through the types of protections proposed by the SAFETY Act (sections 751-755 of H.R. 5005). The SAFETY Act, which would cover sales of products to both federal and non-federal government customers, would require a contractor to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when anti-terrorism technologies that have been approved by the Department of Homeland Security have been deployed in defense against such act. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties, and, at the same time, protect contractors from predatory lawsuits and punitive damages. This type of framework should facilitate state and local government access to contractors that can assist them in carrying out their critical role in the fight against terrorism.

Question 4: I understand that the Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) opposing the House indemnification proposal, but that this view may be evolving. What is the Administration's current view? Even if the Administration still opposes the specific proposal offered in the House, is that opposition a blanket one to any expansion of indemnification authority, or do you believe a narrower authorization would be appropriate? If so, I would appreciate your providing guidance on the parameters of a proposal you believe would be appropriate.

The opposition expressed by the Administration in its SAP on H.R. 5005 was directed at the indemnification proposal recommended by the House Government Reform Committee. That proposal is highly objectionable because it would subject the Treasury to unlimited unfunded contingent liabilities. By contrast, the provisions that the House ultimately adopted (i.e., the SAFETY Act) offer a disciplined and fiscally sound

Following the events of September 11th, agencies have found certain activities associated with defending the homeland to involve unusually hazardous risks and have negotiated indemnification clauses using the existing authorities of Public Law 85-804. For example, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) indemnified a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine. The Secretary of HHS concluded that the steps the contractor has been asked to take to assure adequate availability of vaccine, including dilution of the vaccine, will materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability for which adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable cost. As another example, the Secretary of Transportation recently determined that certain contracts for the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems involve unusually hazardous risk and warrant indemnification.

To the extent the Senate intends to consider new options for handling risks associated with the sale of anti-terrorism technologies, it should give careful consideration to the protections that would be afforded by the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, which was passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005. The SAFETY Act would bolster government access to needed suppliers of anti-terrorism technology in a fiscally sound manner. It would require a contractor selling anti-terrorism technologies to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims for injuries associated with a terrorist attack in which the contractor's technology was deployed to protect the public from harm. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties but, at the same time, shield the Treasury and contractors from predatory lawsuits by generally capping recovery. Because its protections would apply to both federal and non-federal customers, the SAFETY Act would promote marketplace participation with all levels of government.

[In addition, the Senate should move promptly to create a terrorism risk insurance program. The backstop insurance program that would be established by the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (S. 2600) is an effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts and will add much needed stability to our economy. As the Administration has previously noted, the program would aid the economy by ensuring that businesses and properties are able to spread risk efficiently by providing access to a well-functioning insurance market. [Although this measure is short-term, insurers should, as a general matter, have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country continues to acclimate to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th.] **]

The Administration is committed to ensuring that the Department of Homeland Security and other agencies engaged in the war on terrorism have timely and cost-effective access to the expertise and ingenuity of the private sector, upon whom we will rely heavily for the quality goods and services needed to ensure the safety of the American people. We recognize that threats posed by terrorism may present new business risks for sellers of anti-terrorism technologies. When considering this risk, we urge the Committee to reject any proposal that will expose the Treasury to unbounded and unfunded contingent liabilities and look instead to more fiscally sound approaches, such as that proposed by the SAFETY Act [and a terrorism insurance, program].

Additional information responding to your questions[, which was prepared by OMB's Office of Federal Procurement Policy], is set forth in the attached enclosure.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.

Responses to Questions on Contractor Indemnification Posed by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

Note: Information on agency use of indemnification is not collected in a centralized manner. Due to the limited time frame available for responding to this inquiry, OMB informally sought information from the following agencies: the Departments of Transportation (DOT) and Health and Human Services (HHS), which have had recent experiences with indemnification under acquisitions to address needs for the defense against terrorism; the Department of Defense (DoD) which has indemnified contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks; and the Department of Energy (DOE), which, pursuant to statute, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident.

Question 1: The government currently has authority to offer indemnification in a narrow set of contracts. What has the government's experience been in using this existing authority, whether under Public Law 85-804 or otherwise? For example, how often are indemnification clauses included in government contracts? Are they included in all cases in which they are authorized? If not, in what portion are they included, and what criteria are used to determine whether to use them? Do they usually carry limits on the government's liability or imposed specific requirements on the indemnified party? Has the use of these provisions resulted in actual costs to the government? If so, what has been the cost of these provisions to the government? What lessons has the government learned from the use of these provisions?

The main authorities used by the government to indemnify its contractors against catastrophic risk are: (1) Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435), (2) 49 U.S.C. Subtitle IX, Chapter 701 (popularly known as the Commercial Space Launch Act), and (3) the Price-Anderson Act. A short summary of the government's experiences with each of these authorities is discussed below.

Public Law 85-804

Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435) vests the President with authority to empower agencies to grant various forms of extraordinary contractual relief, where the relief would facilitate the national defense. As implemented by Executive Order 10789, as amended, and the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR, 48 CFR Part 50), Public Law 85-804 has enabled agencies (including the major procuring agencies) to secure private sector performance of activities involving unusually hazardous or nuclear risks by indemnifying them against third-party claims.[1]

Criteria.

Guidance emphasizes the need for all due deliberations, reflective of the extraordinary nature of the relief that can be granted -- which is not subject to the availability of appropriated funds. FAR 50.102(b) states that actions "shall be accomplished as expeditiously as practicable, consistent with the care, restraint, and exercise of sound judgment appropriate to the use of such extraordinary authority."

Three important safeguards were incorporated into the exercise of Public Law 85-804 when Executive Order 10789 was amended in 1971. Executive Order 11610 added requirements that: (1) indemnification provisions be approved in advance by an official at a level not below that of the secretary, (2) indemnification could apply only to claims or losses arising out of or resulting from risks that the contract defines as unusually hazardous or nuclear in nature, and (3) the approving official, in determining whether and to what extent indemnification should be authorized, must take into account the availability, cost, and terms of private insurance, self-insurance, other proof of financial responsibility, and workers' compensation insurance. These safeguards help to ensure that agencies, as stewards of the public fisc, fully consider whether indemnification and the potential financial liability it imposes on the government is in the taxpayers' best interest.

Usage in general.

Comprehensive government-wide data is not readily available regarding the use of Public Law 85-804. However, it appears from the limited data reviewed and discussions with several agencies that indemnification under Public Law 85-804 is used sparingly. Typically, indemnification for unusually hazardous or nuclear activities is provided when there is no other way for an agency to accomplish its mission. For example, in 1996, the Defense Logistics Agency indemnified a manufacturer of Pyridostigmine Bromide Tablets (PBT), which is used as a nerve agent pre-treatment to enhance the efficacy of post-exposure antidote therapy. Critical to DoD's decision was the fact that the contractor was the sole manufacturer of the item and had indicated its refusal to deliver PBT without an indemnification provision. In reaching its decision, DoD also took into account that acquisition of PBT could impose liability upon the contractor in excess of financial protection reasonably available.[2]

[1] Relief may also include an increase of contract price without consideration.

[2] Allegations had been made that PBT caused Gulf War veterans' illnesses. As a result, the contractor, as manufacturer was threatened by unknown liability for which insurance coverage was not available.

In FY 1998, the last year that DoD compiled a department-wide report on its use of Public Law 85-804,[3] indemnification clauses were included in 30 of DoD's contracts. Contractors were indemnified against claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the contractors' insurance program.[4]

While the universe of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 is appropriately limited, the law, as implemented, gives agencies a fair amount of discretion to determine if a given activity poses an unusually hazardous or nuclear risk. Not surprisingly, agencies have justified use of indemnification under Public Law 85-804 for the production of items which are themselves inherently dangerous (e.g., high energy propellants or nuclear submarines). But agencies have also justified indemnification under other circumstances, such as where the government was procuring highly customized items whose use by the government could pose risk of very large claims. In 1981, for instance, the Secretary of Transportation authorized indemnification for contractors engaged in the upgrading the en route air traffic control system for the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). Of particular note, the Secretary found that the equipment to be purchased would possess technical characteristics "which far exceeded the technical requirements for hardware and software utilized in most commercial applications." In addition, claims from an accident could be far in excess of the insurance coverage that reliably and reasonably could be obtained by the manufacturers in the marketplace for the life of the system.[5]

Usage in the context of protecting the homeland.

Following the events of September 11th, several agencies have exercised their discretion to indemnify selected contractors for certain activities associated with protection of our homeland where they have determined that such activities qualify as unusually hazardous. In this regard, HHS found solid grounds to indemnify a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine.[6] HHS has been working with the contractor to assure that the available stockpile of smallpox vaccine can be released promptly if and when directed by HHS. HHS is seeking to have the contractor perform various tasks critical to having vaccine available. These tasks include, among others, delivering vaccine whose original expiration date has passed for possible dilution. Because HHS has concluded that these and other tasks materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability and adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable

[3] Section 901(r)(1) of the Federal Reports Elimination Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-362) repealed 50 U.S.C. 1434, which required preparation of annual reports to Congress regarding actions taken on contractor requests for relief under Public Law 85-804.

[4] In addition to Public Law 85-804, DoD may indemnify a research and development contractor pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2354 for claims by third persons for death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, from a risk that the contract defines as unusually hazardous.

[5] See 46 Fed. Reg. 62596 (December 24, 1981) and 47 Fed. Reg. 1229 (January 11, 1982).

[6] The President added the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the list of agencies authorized to use Public Law 85-804 on October 20, 2001. See Executive Order 13232, 66 Fed. Reg. 53941.

cost, HHS has indemnified the contractor for: (a) adverse events associated with the vaccine, (b) failure of the vaccine to immunize, and (c) transmission of the vaccinia virus.

DOT has determined that certain contracts providing services and products related to the screening of airport passengers and baggage for the presence of dangerous items constitute an unusually hazardous risk for which indemnification is appropriate. DOT further concluded that there is an unusually hazardous risk associated with the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems. A table briefly describing indemnification actions taken by DOT's Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is provided at Attachment A.

Limitations on liability.

Both HHS and DOT have taken steps to limit the government's liability. For instance, indemnification for the smallpox vaccine manufacturer is limited to liability that might arise if the vaccine were to be used in a national emergency. With one exception, the indemnification agreements with the airport screening contractors provides for a monetary cap, and all of the agreements will expire when the government screeners are deployed.

Payments under indemnification clauses.

To OFPP's knowledge, there have been no payments made under indemnification clauses entered into pursuant to Public Law 85-804.

The Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA)

CLSA requires the Secretary of Transportation to establish insurance (or other financial responsibility) requirements in amounts sufficient to address certain risks associated with the conduct of licensed launch activities. The CSLA provides detailed requirements for allocating risk among the various launch participants, including federal agencies involved in launch services. First enacted in 1988, this comprehensive scheme was intended to facilitate the development of the U.S. commercial launch industry by allowing it to compete effectively in the international marketplace and by providing to launch participants certain protections against the risk of catastrophic losses that could result from hazardous launch activities.

Under the CSLA, the government accepts responsibility for successful third-party claims that exceed the limits of liability insurance (obtained by licensees in amounts established by the agency) up to $1.5 billion (as adjusted for inflation occurring after January 1, 1989). The licensee remains liable for amounts above this cap. FAA sets insurance requirements based on its determination of the maximum probable loss (MPL) that would result from licensed launch or reentry activities, within statutory ceilings, not to exceed the lesser of $500 million or the maximum available on the world market at reasonable cost.[7] The government may cover claims from the first dollar of loss in the event of an insurance policy exclusion that is determined to be "usual." However, payment -- in all cases -- is subject both to the approval of a compensation plan prepared by the agency and congressional appropriation of funds. In addition, indemnification will not be provided for a party's willful misconduct.[8]

The Commercial Space Transportation Competitiveness Act of 2000, Public Law 106-405, directed the Secretary of Transportation to review the liability risk-sharing regime for U.S. commercial space transportation. The report, which was submitted to Congress earlier this year, concluded that the current regime is adequate, appropriate, and effective.[9] The report found that CSLA's liability structure facilitates the competitiveness of the U.S. launch industry in the international space transportation market, while effectively limiting the government's liability. According to the report, there have been no claims for third-party liability resulting form a U.S.-licensed commercial launch. In fact, DOT is aware of no claims of third-party liability having been presented against the required coverage.

The Price-Anderson Act

The Price-Anderson Act established a system of financial protection for persons who may be liable for, and persons who may be injured by, a nuclear incident. The Act requires DOE to include an indemnification in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident. The indemnification: (1) provides omnibus coverage of all persons who might be legally liable; (2) indemnifies fully all legal liability up to the statutory limit on such liability (currently $9.43 billion for a nuclear incident in the United States); (3) covers all DOE contractual activity that might result in a nuclear incident in the United States; (4) is not subject to the usual limitation on the availability of appropriated funds; and (5) is mandatory and exclusive. The Department of Energy Acquisition Regulation (DEAR) sets forth standard nuclear indemnification clauses that are incorporated into all DOE contracts and subcontracts involving source, special nuclear, or by-product material (nuclear material).[10]

According to DOE, a number of claims have been filed in federal district courts seeking recovery under the Price-Anderson Act. Within the past 15 years, settlements have been paid in two cases, totaling just under $100 million.

[7] According to DOT, the MPL is structured so that the risk estimate of government indemnification obligations is no greater than 1 in 10 million. The current MPL values range up to $261 million for third-party losses resulting from launch vehicle flight.

[8] Regulations setting forth financial responsibility requirements may be found at 14 CFR Part 440.

I think we need all the people who signed the letter to sign the op-ed. If necessary, we should tone down the op-ed. Btw, do you have the current draft? Can you send it? Thanks.

To date, we have 7 of 14 bar presidents signed on to the op-ed. Additionally, we've recruited Charles Aycock ('99-00).

Jim Bowmer has said "no" and I'm trying to find out why. Still waiting for and actively pursuing responses from the others.

I think we probably need to set a deadline for signature in order to get this placed timely so it has some impact. What do you think?

This looks like a good letter. I just had one quick thought:

In the response on #2, are we slightly underselling the need for some sort of protection? I know, for example, that Lockheed in our meeting described a variety of technologies (for example, sensing system for chem-bio agents) that they felt would be of use but that they would not sell absent some way to address liability issues. Since we oppose indemnification, we obviously don't want to be apocalyptic in our descriptions of the current situation; however, I think there's a way to say there's a serious issue but that broad new indemnification provisions may not be the best way to address it.

Subject: Contractor Indemnification & homeland security -- Draft Response to Lieberman

Attached is a draft response OFPP has prepared to the recent Lieberman letter seeking OMB's views and various pieces of information regarding contractor indemnification. (If you need another copy of the incoming, let me know and I'll fax it to you.) I have prepared a cover letter giving our overall response and then attached more detailed responses as an enclosure. The draft is still under review within OMB, including in OGC, but we wanted to make sure you had sufficient time to review the document and provide your policy guidance.

Given the time constraints, I limited agency input to the following agencies: DOT and HHS (given their recent experiences with indemnification related specifically to the defense against terrorism), DoD (which has indemnified contractors against unusually hazardous or nuclear risks), and DOE (which, pursuant to the Price-Anderson Act, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident). Each of these agencies is reviewing the factual statements in the response (the policy discussion has not been shared with them). We should have their input by no later than noon on Tuesday.

Lee-Ann Bracket from Lieberman's staff left a voice-mail for me (228-3533) which I passed on to Christine and Danielle for followup. I'm sure she is anxious to have the responses before the Senate resumes its deliberations next week.

We are also hearing that the House Technology and Procurement Policy Subcommittee may hold a hearing on this subject sometime in September.

FYI, Angela is out of town but will be checking emails. (We discussed the basic responses late last week.)

To assist in your review, you might note the following points (any and all of which can obviously be revised/reworked as may be necessary):

The draft strongly opposes the Govt Reform Committee (GROC) indemnification proposal, consistent with the House SAP language. (The letter states that the current indemnification scheme under Public Law 85-804 is sufficient. There is not an extensive comparison made between 85-804 and the GROC proposal other than to point out that the GROC proposal would drastically increase exposure to liability through potential coverage of state and local contractors. It is possible that, at some point, we may be asked why we think the GROC proposal will result in greater indemnification of federal contractors than may occur under 85-804.)

The draft expresses support for the SAFETY Act. This should help to clarify some confusion that apparently has arisen regarding what was intended by the House SAP. FYI, I wasn't sure whether we wanted to support the Act outright or just the "types of protections" it provides -- the latter being a hedge in case we want to work with Congress to fine-tune the mechanics

Although there is limited discussion on the SAFETY Act, there is no specific discussion of the government contractor defense. The government contractor defense (which already exists today through case law) shields contractors from unbounded liability when: (a) the government provides reasonably specific specifications, (b) the contractor follows the specifications, and (c) the contractor makes known risks uniquely known to the contractor. Our initial review of case law suggests that courts traditionally have appeared to overwhelmingly rule in favor of contractors -- and we haven't yet come across a case where the government has been held liable (which comes as little surprise because there appears to be no waiver of sovereign immunity). We might undercut our concern about indemnification if we emphasize that the government contractor defense generally has worked well.

Although the letter asks for parameters for reaching a compromise, the draft does not expressly indicate support for a compromise. There are places in the response where the door theoretically is left open. For example, the last sentence of the second paragraph of the cover letter states that it would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to unbounded liability -- which arguably leaves the door open for bounded liability). The response to the first question includes reference to an FAA example where one key consideration of indemnification apparently centered around the fact that the item was highly customized (as opposed to commercial off-the-shelf). If I recall correctly, Brett drew this type of distinction at our meeting with industry several weeks ago.

The specific responses to the questions focus primarily on Public Law 85-804. However, there is also brief discussion on both the Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA) and the Price-Anderson Act, since the questions asked us to discuss other authorities in addition to 85-804. It is probably beneficial to discuss CSLA, since its model for limiting liability (e.g., requiring approval of a compensation plan and congressional appropriation of funds) is fiscally responsible. On the other hand, Price-Anderson (which mandates indemnification for contracts that involve the risk of a nuclear incident) is probably not a desirable model to emulate. (As I assume you know, Price-Anderson expired and I understand discussions are ongoing regarding an extension of the authority.)

The responses do not attempt to address every question in explicit detail. For example, it is difficult to gauge how often indemnification is provided when a contract is eligible for such because (1) there is no government-wide database of such information and (2) agencies probably determine there is no unusually hazardous risk as opposed to finding such and then telling the contractor no indemnification will be provided.

The cover letter expresses support for a terrorism insurance program. The language should basically mirror SAP discussion for S. 2600. I wasn't sure if you wanted to address this in the letter; hence, the language is bracketed.

The draft indicates that we are not aware of the federal government having previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments. It is possible that there may have been legislation in the 1960s related to the riots in Washington that involved payment from federal to local govt related to indemnification. We're checking into this.

The Honorable Joseph I. Lieberman
Chairman
Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in response to your August 7, 2002 correspondence requesting our views regarding the indemnification of contractors who provide products and services to aid in our Nation's homeland security efforts. Your letter indicates that when the Senate considers its version of the Homeland Security legislation in September, an amendment may be offered to authorize indemnification.

We understand that the amendment the Senate may consider is similar to what was proposed by the House Government Reform Committee for the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (H.R. 5005). The Government Reform Committee's proposal, which was not part of the House-passed bill, would have authorized the federal government to provide unlimited indemnification to companies that sell counterterrorism technology to federal, state, and local government agencies. These actions would not be subject to the availability of appropriations. The Administration would strongly oppose such an amendment, given the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. It would be fiscally irresponsible to expose the Treasury to this unbounded liability.

Catastrophic business risks associated with selling antiterrorism technology to the government which cannot otherwise be covered through private insurance can generally be addressed, as may be appropriate, under indemnification authorities already provided to agencies. Most notable among these authorities is Public Law 85-804. Under this law, the President may empower the heads of agencies to indemnify contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks associated with activities facilitating the national defense. While the types of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 are limited, covered agencies still have considerable discretion to determine if an activity qualifies as unusually hazardous or nuclear.

Question 2: The request to expand indemnification authority rests on the premise that the government is having, or will have, difficulty in obtaining the technology and products it needs to protect the homeland in the war on terrorism. What is the executive branch's experience in this regard? Has it been difficult or impossible to get the needed products? If so, how extensive has the difficulty been? Has it been government-wide or limited to just a few Departments or agencies? To what do you attribute any difficulty that exists? Is it due to the absence of indemnification authority? Would greater indemnification authority resolve the problem? If so, what should the scope of statutory authority for such provisions be?

To date, OFPP has not been advised by federal agencies of significant or widespread difficulties in obtaining access to the marketplace for products and services needed for homeland security. We are aware of limited difficulties in accessing the marketplace due to contractor concerns with catastrophic liability. Some of these concerms have been dealt with through, or are being considered for, indemnification under Public Law 85-804.

According to DOT, screening companies made clear after September 11th that they would refuse to enter into contractual agreements with the federal government unless indemnification was provided. In January 2002, the Secretary authorized FAA to negotiate indemnification agreements with airport security screening companies to secure contract screening services during the transition to federal airport screening by employees of TSA. Manufacturers of vaccine and related products have advised HHS that such products carry safety and efficacy risks that prevent them from meeting the government's needs at fair and reasonable prices without indemnification. As noted in the response to Question no. 1, the Secretary granted indemnification to one contractor and currently is considering requests from other manufacturers.

Expanding indemnification authority is neither necessary nor appropriate. Most homeland security-related needs will not warrant indemnification. DOT points out, as just one example, that procurement assistance, general services or other management support services would not merit indemnification, if sought, among other reasons because they do not constitute unusually hazardous risks. As a general matter, insurers should have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country acclimates to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th. However, protections of the type set forth in the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005, are worthy of consideration. The SAFETY Act would establish a federal cause of action to recognize claims of parties injured in terrorist attacks where anti-terrorism technology was deployed but, at the same time, limit potential contractor and government liability in a fiscally responsible manner.

Question 3: The amendment before the House would have allowed the Secretary of Homeland Security to indemnify contractors with State and local governments. Has the Federal government ever before entered into agreements indemnifying contractors with State or local governments? Does the Administration believe there is a need to do so? Should Congress consider different factors when evaluating this part of the proposal than when reviewing the expansion of authority for federal government contracts?

We appreciate that state and local governments, like the federal government, need effective access to the innovation and expertise of the private sector. In this regard, we understand, for example, that New York City's Metropolitan Transit Authority and Policy Department have faced difficulties obtaining chemical-biological detection systems. While these difficulties should be addressed, unbounded federal indemnification is not the answer. Indemnification of this nature would be fiscally irresponsible due to the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled. To our knowledge, the federal government has not previously entered into agreements indemnifying sellers who hold contracts with state or local governments.

Rather than increasing indemnification, state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies could be enhanced through the types of protections proposed by the SAFETY Act (sections 751-755 of H.R. 5005). The SAFETY Act, which would cover sales of products to both federal and non-federal government customers, would require a contractor to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when anti-terrorism technologies that have been approved by the Department of Homeland Security have been deployed in defense against such act. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties, and, at the same time, protect contractors from predatory lawsuits and punitive damages. This type of framework should facilitate state and local government access to contractors that can assist them in carrying out their critical role in the fight against terrorism.

Question 4: I understand that the Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy (SAP) opposing the House indemnification proposal, but that this view may be evolving. What is the Administration's current view? Even if the Administration still opposes the specific proposal offered in the House, is that opposition a blanket one to any expansion of indemnification authority, or do you believe a narrower authorization would be appropriate? If so, I would appreciate your providing guidance on the parameters of a proposal you believe would be appropriate.

The opposition expressed by the Administration in its SAP on H.R. 5005 was directed at the indemnification proposal recommended by the House Government Reform Committee. That proposal is highly objectionable because it would subject the Treasury to unlimited unfunded contingent liabilities. By contrast, the provisions that the House ultimately adopted (i.e., the SAFETY Act) offer a disciplined and fiscally sound

Following the events of September 11th, agencies have found certain activities associated with defending the homeland to involve unusually hazardous risks and have negotiated indemnification clauses using the existing authorities of Public Law 85-804. For example, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) indemnified a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine. The Secretary of HHS concluded that the steps the contractor has been asked to take to assure adequate availability of vaccine, including dilution of the vaccine, will materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability for which adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable cost. As another example, the Secretary of Transportation recently determined that certain contracts for the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems involve unusually hazardous risk and warrant indemnification.

To the extent the Senate intends to consider new options for handling risks associated with the sale of anti-terrorism technologies, it should give careful consideration to the protections that would be afforded by the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies (SAFETY) Act, which was passed by the House as part of H.R. 5005. The SAFETY Act would bolster government access to needed suppliers of anti-terrorism technology in a fiscally sound manner. It would require a contractor selling anti-terrorism technologies to obtain liability insurance to satisfy compensable third-party claims for injuries associated with a terrorist attack in which the contractor's technology was deployed to protect the public from harm. The Act would create a federal cause of action for injured parties but, at the same time, shield the Treasury and contractors from predatory lawsuits by generally capping recovery. Because its protections would apply to both federal and non-federal customers, the SAFETY Act would promote marketplace participation with all levels of government.

[In addition, the Senate should move promptly to create a terrorism risk insurance program. The backstop insurance program that would be established by the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (S. 2600) is an effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts and will add much needed stability to our economy. As the Administration has previously noted, the program would aid the economy by ensuring that businesses and properties are able to spread risk efficiently by providing access to a well-functioning insurance market. [Although this measure is short-term, insurers should, as a general matter, have a better ability to measure risk and thus to provide insurance as the country continues to acclimate to the new security measures being implemented in the aftermath of September 11th.] **]

The Administration is committed to ensuring that the Department of Homeland Security and other agencies engaged in the war on terrorism have timely and cost-effective access to the expertise and ingenuity of the private sector, upon whom we will rely heavily for the quality goods and services needed to ensure the safety of the American people. We recognize that threats posed by terrorism may present new business risks for sellers of anti-terrorism technologies. When considering this risk, we urge the Committee to reject any proposal that will expose the Treasury to unbounded and unfunded contingent liabilities and look instead to more fiscally sound approaches, such as that proposed by the SAFETY Act [and a terrorism insurance, program].

Additional information responding to your questions[, which was prepared by OMB's Office of Federal Procurement Policy], is set forth in the attached enclosure.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.

Responses to Questions on Contractor Indemnification Posed by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

Note: Information on agency use of indemnification is not collected in a centralized manner. Due to the limited time frame available for responding to this inquiry, OMB informally sought information from the following agencies: the Departments of Transportation (DOT) and Health and Human Services (HHS), which have had recent experiences with indemnification under acquisitions to address needs for the defense against terrorism; the Department of Defense (DoD) which has indemnified contractors for unusually hazardous or nuclear risks; and the Department of Energy (DOE), which, pursuant to statute, includes an indemnification clause in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident.

Question 1: The government currently has authority to offer indemnification in a narrow set of contracts. What has the government's experience been in using this existing authority, whether under Public Law 85-804 or otherwise? For example, how often are indemnification clauses included in government contracts? Are they included in all cases in which they are authorized? If not, in what portion are they included, and what criteria are used to determine whether to use them? Do they usually carry limits on the government's liability or imposed specific requirements on the indemnified party? Has the use of these provisions resulted in actual costs to the government? If so, what has been the cost of these provisions to the government? What lessons has the government learned from the use of these provisions?

The main authorities used by the government to indemnify its contractors against catastrophic risk are: (1) Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435), (2) 49 U.S.C. Subtitle IX, Chapter 701 (popularly known as the Commercial Space Launch Act), and (3) the Price-Anderson Act. A short summary of the government's experiences with each of these authorities is discussed below.

Public Law 85-804

Public Law 85-804 (50 U.S.C. 1431-1435) vests the President with authority to empower agencies to grant various forms of extraordinary contractual relief, where the relief would facilitate the national defense. As implemented by Executive Order 10789, as amended, and the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR, 48 CFR Part 50), Public Law 85-804 has enabled agencies (including the major procuring agencies) to secure private sector performance of activities involving unusually hazardous or nuclear risks by indemnifying them against third-party claims.[1]

Criteria.

Guidance emphasizes the need for all due deliberations, reflective of the extraordinary nature of the relief that can be granted -- which is not subject to the availability of appropriated funds. FAR 50.102(b) states that actions "shall be accomplished as expeditiously as practicable, consistent with the care, restraint, and exercise of sound judgment appropriate to the use of such extraordinary authority."

Three important safeguards were incorporated into the exercise of Public Law 85-804 when Executive Order 10789 was amended in 1971. Executive Order 11610 added requirements that: (1) indemnification provisions be approved in advance by an official at a level not below that of the secretary, (2) indemnification could apply only to claims or losses arising out of or resulting from risks that the contract defines as unusually hazardous or nuclear in nature, and (3) the approving official, in determining whether and to what extent indemnification should be authorized, must take into account the availability, cost, and terms of private insurance, self-insurance, other proof of financial responsibility, and workers' compensation insurance. These safeguards help to ensure that agencies, as stewards of the public fisc, fully consider whether indemnification and the potential financial liability it imposes on the government is in the taxpayers' best interest.

Usage in general.

Comprehensive government-wide data is not readily available regarding the use of Public Law 85-804. However, it appears from the limited data reviewed and discussions with several agencies that indemnification under Public Law 85-804 is used sparingly. Typically, indemnification for unusually hazardous or nuclear activities is provided when there is no other way for an agency to accomplish its mission. For example, in 1996, the Defense Logistics Agency indemnified a manufacturer of Pyridostigmine Bromide Tablets (PBT), which is used as a nerve agent pre-treatment to enhance the efficacy of post-exposure antidote therapy. Critical to DoD's decision was the fact that the contractor was the sole manufacturer of the item and had indicated its refusal to deliver PBT without an indemnification provision. In reaching its decision, DoD also took into account that acquisition of PBT could impose liability upon the contractor in excess of financial protection reasonably available.[2]

[1] Relief may also include an increase of contract price without consideration.

[2] Allegations had been made that PBT caused Gulf War veterans' illnesses. As a result, the contractor, as manufacturer was threatened by unknown liability for which insurance coverage was not available.

In FY 1998, the last year that DoD compiled a department-wide report on its use of Public Law 85-804,[3] indemnification clauses were included in 30 of DoD's contracts. Contractors were indemnified against claims for death, injury, or property damage arising from nuclear radiation, use of high energy propellants, or other risks not covered by the contractors' insurance program.[4]

While the universe of activities for which indemnification is available under Public Law 85-804 is appropriately limited, the law, as implemented, gives agencies a fair amount of discretion to determine if a given activity poses an unusually hazardous or nuclear risk. Not surprisingly, agencies have justified use of indemnification under Public Law 85-804 for the production of items which are themselves inherently dangerous (e.g., high energy propellants or nuclear submarines). But agencies have also justified indemnification under other circumstances, such as where the government was procuring highly customized items whose use by the government could pose risk of very large claims. In 1981, for instance, the Secretary of Transportation authorized indemnification for contractors engaged in the upgrading the en route air traffic control system for the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). Of particular note, the Secretary found that the equipment to be purchased would possess technical characteristics "which far exceeded the technical requirements for hardware and software utilized in most commercial applications." In addition, claims from an accident could be far in excess of the insurance coverage that reliably and reasonably could be obtained by the manufacturers in the marketplace for the life of the system.[5]

Usage in the context of protecting the homeland.

Following the events of September 11th, several agencies have exercised their discretion to indemnify selected contractors for certain activities associated with protection of our homeland where they have determined that such activities qualify as unusually hazardous. In this regard, HHS found solid grounds to indemnify a contractor that produced the government's current stockpile of smallpox vaccine.[6] HHS has been working with the contractor to assure that the available stockpile of smallpox vaccine can be released promptly if and when directed by HHS. HHS is seeking to have the contractor perform various tasks critical to having vaccine available. These tasks include, among others, delivering vaccine whose original expiration date has passed for possible dilution. Because HHS has concluded that these and other tasks materially increase the contractor's exposure to liability and adequate insurance is not available at a reasonable

[3] Section 901(r)(1) of the Federal Reports Elimination Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-362) repealed 50 U.S.C. 1434, which required preparation of annual reports to Congress regarding actions taken on contractor requests for relief under Public Law 85-804.

[4] In addition to Public Law 85-804, DoD may indemnify a research and development contractor pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2354 for claims by third persons for death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, from a risk that the contract defines as unusually hazardous.

[5] See 46 Fed. Reg. 62596 (December 24, 1981) and 47 Fed. Reg. 1229 (January 11, 1982).

[6] The President added the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the list of agencies authorized to use Public Law 85-804 on October 20, 2001. See Executive Order 13232, 66 Fed. Reg. 53941.

cost, HHS has indemnified the contractor for: (a) adverse events associated with the vaccine, (b) failure of the vaccine to immunize, and (c) transmission of the vaccinia virus.

DOT has determined that certain contracts providing services and products related to the screening of airport passengers and baggage for the presence of dangerous items constitute an unusually hazardous risk for which indemnification is appropriate. DOT further concluded that there is an unusually hazardous risk associated with the design and reconfiguration of passenger security checkpoints and installation and maintenance of explosive detection systems. A table briefly describing indemnification actions taken by DOT's Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is provided at Attachment A.

Limitations on liability.

Both HHS and DOT have taken steps to limit the government's liability. For instance, indemnification for the smallpox vaccine manufacturer is limited to liability that might arise if the vaccine were to be used in a national emergency. With one exception, the indemnification agreements with the airport screening contractors provides for a monetary cap, and all of the agreements will expire when the government screeners are deployed.

Payments under indemnification clauses.

To OFPP's knowledge, there have been no payments made under indemnification clauses entered into pursuant to Public Law 85-804.

The Commercial Space Launch Act (CSLA)

CLSA requires the Secretary of Transportation to establish insurance (or other financial responsibility) requirements in amounts sufficient to address certain risks associated with the conduct of licensed launch activities. The CSLA provides detailed requirements for allocating risk among the various launch participants, including federal agencies involved in launch services. First enacted in 1988, this comprehensive scheme was intended to facilitate the development of the U.S. commercial launch industry by allowing it to compete effectively in the international marketplace and by providing to launch participants certain protections against the risk of catastrophic losses that could result from hazardous launch activities.

reasonable cost.[7] The government may cover claims from the first dollar of loss in the event of an insurance policy exclusion that is determined to be "usual." However, payment -- in all cases -- is subject both to the approval of a compensation plan prepared by the agency and congressional appropriation of funds. In addition, indemnification will not be provided for a party's willful misconduct.[8]

The Commercial Space Transportation Competitiveness Act of 2000, Public Law 106-405, directed the Secretary of Transportation to review the liability risk-sharing regime for U.S. commercial space transportation. The report, which was submitted to Congress earlier this year, concluded that the current regime is adequate, appropriate, and effective.[9] The report found that CSLA's liability structure facilitates the competitiveness of the U.S. launch industry in the international space transportation market, while effectively limiting the government's liability. According to the report, there have been no claims for third-party liability resulting form a U.S.-licensed commercial launch. In fact, DOT is aware of no claims of third-party liability having been presented against the required coverage.

The Price-Anderson Act

The Price-Anderson Act established a system of financial protection for persons who may be liable for, and persons who may be injured by, a nuclear incident. The Act requires DOE to include an indemnification in each contract that involves the risk of a nuclear incident. The indemnification: (1) provides omnibus coverage of all persons who might be legally liable; (2) indemnifies fully all legal liability up to the statutory limit on such liability (currently $9.43 billion for a nuclear incident in the United States); (3) covers all DOE contractual activity that might result in a nuclear incident in the United States; (4) is not subject to the usual limitation on the availability of appropriated funds; and (5) is mandatory and exclusive. The Department of Energy Acquisition Regulation (DEAR) sets forth standard nuclear indemnification clauses that are incorporated into all DOE contracts and subcontracts involving source, special nuclear, or by-product material (nuclear material).[10]

According to DOE, a number of claims have been filed in federal district courts seeking recovery under the Price-Anderson Act. Within the past 15 years, settlements have been paid in two cases, totaling just under $100 million.

[7] According to DOT, the MPL is structured so that the risk estimate of government indemnification obligations is no greater than 1 in 10 million. The current MPL values range up to $261 million for third-party losses resulting from launch vehicle flight.

[8] Regulations setting forth financial responsibility requirements may be found at 14 CFR Part 440.

Excerpt from President Bush's Remarks on August 23, 2002

You know, education is the pathway to success, and there's just example after example of people who came here with nothing except a dream or a hope and love and got a good education and succeeded. That's what America is about. That's what I love about our country. That's the hope. That's what distinguishes us from many other countries, that we welcome people from all walks of life. We proudly call you an American. We don't say, show us your birth certificate, how you're born, where you're born; you're American and we love you for being in America. We welcomed you to this country. (Applause.)

And, you know, I've got a shining example right there in Washington I want to share a story with you about, because it's a we've got a little problem up there with this particular fellow. His name is Miguel Estrada. He's a young guy. He came to our country as a teenager. He barely spoke English. He had trouble with the language, because he didn't spend any time learning the language. And he got here, and he worked hard, and as a result of a good brain, brilliant mind, he now has argued 15 cases before the United States Supreme Court.

I've named him to a high bench, but the Senate won't give him a hearing. Here's a kid who comes to our country, works hard, learns the language. He's a brilliant jurist. He can't even get a hearing. I nominated him over a year and a half ago. I want this man to serve as a bright example of what is possible in America. He'll be a great judge, and the Senate needs to act. (Applause.)

Let's talk. The letters are legal so long as done without official title. But it may generate some attention.

Also, on the approved distribution method for delivery to schedule C's, we want to devise another approach (one that is more workable).

Subject: 72 hour Task Force Recruitment letters

Brett:

Attached are three letters for your approval.

Each will be sent out as recruitment tools on behalf of RNC's 72 Hour Task Force program, where recipients will be encouraged to take 1-3 weeks and volunteer for key targeted campaigns.

Please note these these three separate letters are designated by the universe to which they will be sent, i.e.L
- "72 Hour Letter volunteer (sched c)": will go to sched. c's thru the approved process of WH Liaison hand-delivery (note that Ken does NOT sign this letter).
- "72 Hour Letter volunteer (non-sched c)": will go to Hill staffers and K street workers whom the RNC believes willing to volunteer (note that Ken does sign this letter).
- "72 Hour Letter Elected Officals": will go to GOP elected officials across the country who do not face competitive elections this cycle.

Your guidance when you have a moment... thank you sir (!)

- 72 Hour Letter volunteer (sched c).doc
- 72 Hour Letter volunteer (non-sched c).doc

The President's victory in the 2000 Election was due in large part to the extraordinary way in which our Republican team came together. Thank you for the important role you played – and continue to play - in making that team so successful.

Perhaps most critical was our turnout effort on Election Day – an effort that, while strong in 2000, can almost certainly be improved and expanded in 2002. To that end the RNC is recruiting talented and capable leaders to join the "72 Hour Task Force": an elite group of volunteers who will help direct turnout efforts in targeted states and districts across the country.

We invite you to join this Task Force.

Please contact Jason Huntsberry at your earliest possible convenience at 202-863-8823 or jhuntsberry@rnchq.org to sign up.

Thank you again for your support and dedication – and onward to success this November!

Subject: Re: Legal Questions for WV

On letter, I have made edits in letters to accommodate minor concern about way it was previously phrased.

Dear_____:

Today marks one year to the day that I was elected Chairman of the West Virginia Republican Executive Committee to fulfill the unexpired term of the Chairmanship. I have volunteered nearly full time to not only serve the Republican Party, but all West Virginians. I'm extremely fortunate that Joyce and our four children (number 5 on the way) and my three brothers (real estate partners) allow me to do what I truly love-help elect Republican candidates.

We only have 70 days left until the November General Election. We have an excellent opportunity to re-elect Shelley Moore Capito and add many more Republicans to our ranks in the House of Delegates and State Senate. I remain confident that we will take a majority in both the House and Senate no later than 2008, but we first must elect several new legislators this November.

Allow me to get straight to the point, I am asking you to either contribute $2,000.00 to the West Virginia Republican party within the next three weeks, or to supply me with names of those that you know who are capable of doing the same. I assure you every last dollar will go to directly helping the legislative candidates who have the best chance of being elected in November. Since I became Chairman, I am proud to report that we have raised over $200,000.00 and I presently have commitments for "matching money" at the national level if I can raise $60,000.00 more in time for it to benefit our candidates this election cycle. I have arranged for a trip on October 3 to Washington for those dedicated West Virginia Republicans who are willing to help with this effort. We will hold a Capitol Hill dinner for those who contribute at which we will hear the latest political and Washington update from a special guest speaker, the Honorable Ken Mehlman, who has been one of the President's top political advisers since the 2000 campaign. In addition, we will hear from a special guest speaker from Republican National Headquarters. But, more importantly, those who contribute will make the vital difference in several targeted West Virginia legislative races on November 5th with our financial contributions.

Please respond at your earliest convenience if you will be able to contribute and if you will be able to attend on October 3rd. West Virginia's future depends upon you.

Sincerely,

Kris Warner, Chairman

And finally, we need to get him back up there so he'll support some judges that I nominated. (Applause.) I found fine people to serve on our bench; good, honorable, honest people. We named one, Priscilla Owen, recently. She's smart, she's capable, one of the top students when she was in law school at Baylor. She got elected twice -- I think twice, but I know she got elected at least twice statewide in Texas, with overwhelming numbers. She's a very, very smart and capable woman. But somehow, some of them up there don't like her. I guess maybe they don't like the fact that I nominated her. But this isn't right for the judicial system, for them to be playing politics with a fine, smart, capable woman. And we need people like Jim Inhofe up there to defend my judicial nominees in Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

This mark-up has been given a so-called "protective notice" and can be cancelled as late as next Wed., Sept. 4 (and many Senators won't even return until that day).

No specific names have been mentioned for the mark-up. The only info. we have is that a mark-up has been tentatively penciled in.

And finally, we need to get him back up there so he'll support some judges that I nominated. (Applause.) I found fine people to serve on our bench; good, honorable, honest people. We named one, Priscilla Owen, recently. She's smart, she's capable, one of the top students when she was in law school at Baylor. She got elected twice -- I think twice, but I know she got elected at least twice statewide in Texas, with overwhelming numbers. She's a very, very smart and capable woman. But somehow, some of them up there don't like her. I guess maybe they don't like the fact that I nominated her. But this isn't right for the judicial system, for them to be playing politics with a fine, smart, capable woman. And we need people like Jim Inhofe up there to defend my judicial nominees in Washington, D.C. (Applause.)

As per our telephone conversation, I am hereby requesting approval to accept corporate air travel for Under Secretary of Energy Robert G. Card on August 31, 2002, in relation to his official travel in South Africa. Sasol, one of the largest industrial companies in South Africa, supplies 41% of South Africa's liquid fuel requirements. Sasol also has a joint venture with Chevron, which is responsible for the development, implementation and operation of gas to liquids ventures based on the Slurry Phase Distillate process, and the marketing of their products, such as environment-friendly, sulfur-free fuels. The Under Secretary is one of the Administration leaders on the President's National Climate Change Technology Initiative. Sasol's research and technology facilities, as well as its coal-to-liquid petrochemical operations, are vital for this initiative.

Section 1353 of title 31, United States code, authorizes the acceptance by executive branch agencies of payments for travel, subsistence, and related expenses from non-Federal sources in connection with the attendance of employees at certain meetings or similar functions. Further, the Department has concluded that the need for the Deputy Secretary's participation outweighs any concern that acceptance of the travel may or may reasonably appear to improperly influence him in the performance of his official duties. I have been advised by the Department's Office of Aviation Management that there are no viable aviation options for this proposed travel. Further, we have been advised that travel by car is not only unsafe, but would not allow the Under Secretary the ability to visit all the plants and facilities he would like to visit.

White House policy requires that Cabinet members may not travel on aircraft owned, chartered, or maintained by a company primarily for company use rather than commercial use if the company is regulated by or doing business with their employing agency. Although it is not clear that SASOL would meet the criteria the White House has in mind in formulating this policy, the Under Secretary requested that advance White House approval be obtained.

Sasol has offered to fly the Under Secretary on its corporate aircraft between Lanseria, Secunda, Sasolburg, and back to Secunda (all locations in South Africa). This will allow the Under Secretary to meet with SASOL executives and tour several of their facilities, including their corporate headquarters, research and development facilities, the location where SASOL started making coal-derived fuels and chemicals in 1955, and their coal-to-liquid petrochemical plant, the largest such plant in the world.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and please let me know if you have any questions or require anything further.

Karl is heading to Michigan on Aug. 24th for an event. Betsey DeVos would like to fly Karl on her private plane. Betsey is the former Chair of the MI GOP and the plane ride would be listed as an inkind contribution to Michigan Victory 2002. Itinerary is below if that is helpful.

Attached is the proposed itinerary. The would REALLY like it if Karl would stay until 8:00, they thought that he would still get back to DC pretty close to 9:30.

Betsy is out of pocket so I don't have the draft invite yet or the ticket prices. But as these details get filled in, I'll send them on.

It's the DeVos family personal plane. No business interest that I'm aware of. She works on education choice (non-profit) and her husband just retried as the head of Amway. (The DeVos' started Amway Corp. many years ago). They do have extensive business interests around the country, but in my year and a half here, I've never heard of them lobbying anyone on anything.

She's the former state GOP Chair and her interest with us is simply political.

This bill was reported as introduced without amendment. It is similar to H.R. 203, which passed the House on October 3, 2001. The bill would establish a pilot program under which certain SBA-funded Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs) would provide "regulatory compliance assistance" to small businesses. WE ARE PARTICULARLY INTERESTED IN THE VIEWS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND OTHER AGENCIES REGARDING THE POTENTIAL LIABILITY OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OR THE SBDCs THEMSELVES if small businesses are provided incorrect guidance that results in fines or other losses.

2D SESSION

S. 2483

To amend the Small Business Act to direct the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to establish a pilot program to provide regulatory compliance assistance to small business concerns, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

MAY 8, 2002

Mr. CLELAND (for himself, Mr. KERRY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. JOHNSON) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship

A BILL

To amend the Small Business Act to direct the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to establish a pilot program to provide regulatory compliance assistance to small business concerns, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Small Business Regulatory Assistance Act of 2002".

REV_00351254

(2) standards relating to educational, technical, and support services to be provided by participating Small Business Development Centers;

(3) standards relating to any national service delivery and support function to be provided by the Association under the pilot program;

(4) standards relating to any work plan that the Administrator may require a participating Small Business Development Center to develop; and

(5) standards relating to the educational, technical, and professional competency of any expert or other assistance provider to whom a small business concern may be referred for compliance assistance under the pilot program.

SEC. 5. PRIVACY REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTERS.

(a) Section 21(c) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(9) PRIVACY REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No Small Business Development Center, consortium of Small Business Development Centers, or contractor or agent of a Small Business Development Center shall disclose the name, street, address, or telephone number of any individual or small business concern receiving assistance under this section without the consent of such individual or small business concern, except that—

"(i) the Administrator shall require such disclosure if ordered to do so by a court in any civil or criminal enforcement action commenced by a Federal or State agency; and

"(ii) if the Administrator considers it necessary while undertaking a financial audit of a Small Business Development Center, the Administrator shall require such disclosure for the sole purpose of undertaking such audit.

"(B) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator shall issue regulations to establish standards for requiring disclosures during a financial audit under subparagraph (A)(ii).

"(C) ADMINISTRATION USE OF INFORMATION.—This section shall not be interpreted to—

"(i) restrict Administration access to program activity data; or

REV_00351264

"(ii) prevent the Administration from using client information (other than the information listed in subparagraph (A)) to conduct client surveys.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall take effect 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

REV_00351265

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to establish a 4-year pilot program to—

(1) provide confidential assistance to small business concerns;

(2) provide small business concerns with the information necessary to improve their rate of compliance with Federal and State regulations derived from Federal law;

(3) create a partnership among Federal agencies to increase outreach efforts to small business concerns with respect to regulatory compliance;

(4) provide a mechanism for unbiased feedback to Federal agencies on the regulatory environment for small business concerns; and

(5) utilize the service delivery network of Small Business Development Centers to improve access of small business concerns to programs to assist them with regulatory compliance.

SEC. 3. SMALL BUSINESS REGULATORY ASSISTANCE PILOT PROGRAM.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the following definitions apply:

(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, acting through the Associate

REV_00351255

Administrator for Small Business Development Centers.

(2) ASSOCIATION.—The term "Association" means the association, established pursuant to section 21(a)(3)(A) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648(a)(3)(A)), representing a majority of Small Business Development Centers.

(3) PARTICIPATING SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER.—The term "participating Small Business Development Center" means a Small Business Development Center participating in the pilot program established under this Act.

(4) REGULATORY COMPLIANCE ASSISTANCE.—The term "regulatory compliance assistance" means assistance provided by a Small Business Development Center to a small business concern to facilitate the concern in complying with Federal and State regulatory requirements derived from Federal law.

(5) SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER.—The term "Small Business Development Center" means a Small Business Development Center described in section 21 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648).

(6) STATE.—The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the

REV_00351256

Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and Guam.

(b) AUTHORITY.—In accordance with this section, the Administrator shall establish a pilot program to provide regulatory compliance assistance to small business concerns through participating Small Business Development Centers.

(c) SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out the pilot program established under this section, the Administrator shall enter into arrangements with participating Small Business Development Centers under which such centers will—

(A) provide access to information and resources, including current Federal and State nonpunitive compliance and technical assistance programs similar to those established under section 507 of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 7661f);

(B) conduct training and educational activities;

(C) offer confidential, free-of-charge, one-on-one, in-depth counseling to the owners and operators of small business concerns regarding compliance with Federal and State regulations derived from Federal law, provided that such counseling is not considered to be the practice of law in a State in which a Small Business Development Center is located or in which such counseling is conducted;

(D) provide technical assistance;

(E) give referrals to experts and other providers of compliance assistance who meet such standards for educational, technical, and professional competency as are established by the Administrator; and

(F) form partnerships with Federal compliance programs.

(2) REPORTS.—Each participating Small Business Development Center shall transmit to the Administrator and the Chief Counsel for Advocacy of the Small Business Administration, as the Administrator may direct, a quarterly report that includes—

(A) a summary of the regulatory compliance assistance provided by the center under the pilot program;

(B) the number of small business concerns assisted under the pilot program; and

(C) for every fourth report, any regulatory compliance information based on Federal law that a Federal or State agency has provided to the center during the preceding year and requested that it be disseminated to small business concerns.

(d) ELIGIBILITY.—A Small Business Development Center shall be eligible to receive assistance under the pilot program established under this section only if such center is certified under section 21(k)(2) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648(k)(2)).

(e) SELECTION OF PARTICIPATING STATE PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In consultation with the Association and giving substantial weight to the recommendations of the Association, the Administrator shall select the Small Business Development Center programs of 2 States from each of the following groups of States to participate in the pilot program established under this section:

(A) Group 1: Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Vermont, and Rhode Island.

(B) Group 2: New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

REV_00351259

(C) Group 3: Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, the District of Columbia, and Delaware.

(D) Group 4: Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Florida, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

(E) Group 5: Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin, and Minnesota.

(F) Group 6: Texas, New Mexico, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana.

(G) Group 7: Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas.

(H) Group 8: Colorado, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Utah.

(I) Group 9: California, Guam, American Samoa, Hawaii, Nevada, and Arizona.

(J) Group 10: Washington, Alaska, Idaho, and Oregon.

(2) DEADLINE FOR SELECTION.—The Administrator shall make selections under this subsection not later than 60 days after publication of final regulations under section 4 of this Act.

(f) MATCHING NOT REQUIRED.—Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 21(a)(4) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648(a)(4)) shall not apply to assistance made available under the pilot program established under this section.

(g) GRANT AMOUNTS.—Each State program selected to receive a grant under subsection (e) shall be eligible to receive a grant in an amount—

(1) not less than $150,000 per fiscal year; and

(2) not to exceed $300,000 per fiscal year.

(h) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—Not later than 30 months after the disbursement of the first grant under the pilot program, the General Accounting Office shall—

(1) initiate an evaluation of the pilot program; and

(2) within 6 months of the initiation of the evaluation under paragraph (1), transmit, to the Administrator, the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, a report containing—

(A) the results of the evaluation under paragraph (1); and

(B) any recommendations as to whether the pilot program, with or without modification, should be extended to include the participation of all Small Business Development Centers.

(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

REV_00351261

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section—

(A) $5,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning after the enactment of this Act; and

(B) $5,000,000 for each of the 3 fiscal years following the enactment of this Act.

(2) LIMITATION ON USE OF OTHER FUNDS.—The Administrator may carry out the pilot program only with amounts appropriated in advance specifically to carry out this section.

(j) TERMINATION.—The authorization to carry out the Small Business Regulatory Assistance Pilot Program established under this section shall terminate 4 years after the disbursement of the first grant.

SEC. 4. PROMULGATION OF REGULATIONS.

After providing notice and an opportunity for comment, and after consulting with the Association (but not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act), the Administrator shall promulgate final regulations to carry out this Act, including regulations that establish—

(1) priorities for the types of assistance to be provided under the pilot program;

How would this work-would Romney re-imburse the RNC for a portion of Secretary Card's political cost.

Too Smart for the Senate

Priscilla Owen isn't exactly a household name. But what happens to her today in the Senate Judiciary Committee will say a lot about President Bush's legacy in the federal courts—to wit, whether the 10 liberal Democrats who form the majority will allow him to have one.

Senate Democrats prepare to kill one more judicial nomination.

The Gang of Ten is scheduled to vote on Judge Owen's nomination to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and she ought to be an easy sale. Currently on the Texas Supreme Court, she is one of the best legal minds of her generation and at age 47 is potential Supreme Court material. She's a conservative, but the liberal American Bar Association gave her its highest rating—a unanimous well-qualified.

There was a time that jurists of her intellectual caliber were welcomed by Senators of both parties, but no more. Barring a last-minute bout of conscience, Democrats seem ready to pull a Pickering—that is, kill Judge Owen's nomination in committee and deny her a vote of the full Senate. This was the treatment meted out to Charles Pickering Sr. last March, when the Mississippi judge's nomination was stopped before moderate Democrats got a chance to vote for him. If Judge Owen were to reach the Senate floor, she too would be confirmed with Democratic support.

Political war over judges isn't new, but the Judiciary Democrats are taking it to an entirely new level. Chairman Pat Leahy won't even schedule hearing dates for the best appeals-court nominees; six of Mr. Bush's first 11 picks are still waiting, 16 months after being nominated. That includes legal luminaries Miguel Estrada, Jeff Sutton, John Roberts and Michael McConnell, who, like Judge Owen, are potential Supreme Court candidates—which is their real sin in liberal Democratic eyes.

But maybe they're the lucky ones. Judge Pickering had to endure race-baiting that African-Americans in his home state deplored. D. Brooks Smith was confirmed, amid phony charges of sexism, only because Senator Arlen Specter called in chits for his fellow Pennsylvanian.

Judge Owen's fate is to be called "anti-abortion" because she's upheld Texas's parental-notification law—a view supported by more than two-thirds of Americans and the U.S. Supreme Court. Her critics also make the dishonest charge that even the President's own lawyer, Alberto Gonzales, who served with her on the Texas Supreme Court, thinks she's a judicial "activist." Mr. Gonzales has denied this repeatedly, and as White House counsel had a big say in her nomination.

There's more at stake here than the fate of one accomplished jurist. There's also the Constitutional "advise and consent" process that throughout U.S. history has meant that the entire Senate should work its will. The liberal Judiciary 10 are denying to this President a Constitutional right that Presidents Reagan, Clinton and George H.W. Bush were all granted by Senates controlled by the opposite party. We hope those Senate Democrats who want to be President understand that the same thing could happen to them.

Hi Brett. Secretary Chao is traveling with the President today to Kentucky for a message event and she will also attend a fundraiser for Anne Northup. The Secretary will then travel back to DC commercially. DOL is panicked about whether the campaign should reimburse DOL for a percentage of the travel costs given that she is going to a fundraiser. My initial reaction is no, because the primary purpose for her being there is the message event. Please advise. Thanks!

Washington is a tough and ugly town at times. We saw that today in the United States Senate. I named a really, really fine woman from Texas to one of the appellate benches. This woman was ranked highly qualified by the American Bar Association. She ran statewide in my state of Texas and got over 80 percent of the vote. She's highly respected by Republicans and Democrats. And I named her to a higher bench. And today her nomination was rejected by the United States Senate. A handful of senators distorted her record; a handful of senators, acting out of pure politics, did not let this good woman's name go forward. The United States Senate must act in better stead. This is a -- treating a fine woman this way is bad for the country, it's bad for our bench. And I don't appreciate it one bit, and neither do the American people.
(Applause.)

Approved with caveat that we do not like the sponsors for the luncheon to be listed on lunch sign with names of Nick and Ken. Can they separate that out?

Greetings and welcome back to the land of Homeland Security,

Rather than send a panicked request in one week's time, I thought I'd try the advance-notice approach.

Please review the link below. This is a side-by-side comparison of the Senate committee bill and our House-passed bill. While I recognize that the Senate may actually manage to amend the bill on the floor, it is likely that the main of the Lieberman's bill shall survive. That being the case, I'd like to get a jump on the conference notes the House will need. (side bar: still no final decision as to conferees)

I ask that y'all have someone chk it for accuracy, both of the interpretation of the Senate bill and the House bill. I know some provisions in the House bill were not as they left your committees, but as the vast majority was, I would prefer to have your explanation/description/spin right in this document. Additionally, there were sections that were negotiated among several committees after the committees marked and I suspect you'll need to touch base again in sending in a unified description.

When you send in your corrections, pls consider sending an entire substitute. Also, if you really want to go wild, we intend to add an additional column to compare the President's bill....if you want to include that, I'm happy to incorporate your descriptions of what the President's bill did rather than use an executive version.

If possible, I'd like to get something pulled together by Friday of next week.

Thanks...any questions about this or what I'm hearing fm the Senate side (basically, nothing good) pls call.

Take care,
Margaret

To summarize the discussion of this issue this morning:

When a victim of terrorism sues foreign governments, foreign entities, or foreign individuals for allegedly engaging in or supporting terrorist acts, those lawsuits obviously can raise issues of foreign policy, discovery from the Executive Branch, access to classified information, etc. These are, of course, very serious issues, but they are far beyond what we have been discussing with DOJ.

With DOJ, we have been working through the following issue. The 9/11 fund provides that a victim who claims under the fund waives the right to sue, with certain exceptions. The threshold question is who should determine whether the claimant has impermissibly sought both to claim under the fund and to file suit. The statute does not answer that directly, but the best answer under the statute is that the Special Master always proceeds to consider an otherwise eligible claim under the fund (which has to be filed timely) and that courts have the sole responsibility to dismiss lawsuits (unless an excepted suit) filed by those who also have claimed under the fund or later claim under the fund. (Note that the collateral source deduction prevents someone from gaming the system.) That analysis in turn also answers the narrower and more immediate question of who determines whether a suit fits within the exception that allows people to claim under the fund and file suit: the court and not the Special Master. Therefore, the Special Master has no role in assessing whether claimant's lawsuit is in fact against a knowing participant in a terrorist act and is an excepted suit under the statute.

There are loads of subsidiary issues here, but this is the basic overview.

I do not want to jinx it, but I think we may have a happy solution for all on the 180 days issue. Senators Kyl and Feinstein have to confer (yesterday was not a good day for across-the-isle outreach) on a way I proposed to accomodate the Department's view. If not, I have a revised draft letter that synthesizes both Jay Bybee's and Dan Collins' views.
Thanks for your patience.

[Mr. Kavanaugh -- I'm probably too late in sending this to you...John asked me to send it to you earlier today]:

Brett:

Our draft of a legislative concept is attached. We believe it strikes a good balance in addressing the insurance issue, as well as providing protection for the manufacturers of qualified anti-terrorism technology product and a meaningful approach for compensation of victims. This set of principals would not need to be changed to apply if you all decided to include provisions for state and local government purchases of qualified technology.

This definitely a work in progress.

Call if you have any questions.

<<Anti-Terrorism Legisla tion Draft.doc>>

Principal Provisions of The Anti-Terrorism Technology Advancement, Liability and Compensation Act
September 6, 2002/ 11:15 a.m. Draft

1. Scope – The legislation will apply to [all] [catastrophic] third party claims, including tort and contract claims, brought against a designer, manufacturer, distributor or seller of a piece of qualified anti-terrorism technology for injuries, deaths, business interruption losses and/or property damage or losses caused by, arising out, of or related to terrorism events in which a failure of the qualified anti-terrorism technology to perform as intended or marketed may have been causally related to the claims arising from the terrorism event.

2. Exclusive Federal Jurisdiction & Federal Preemption – The legislation preempts and supersedes all other state and federal causes of action and is the exclusive remedy against designers, manufacturers, distributors and sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies. As set forth below, the legislation provides claimants with a choice of procedures for obtaining compensation for damages within the scope of the legislation (as set forth in Section 1, above). First, the legislation provides for the establishment of a compensation scheme that provides for payment of claims within the scope of the legislation regardless of whether the claimant proves that a manufacturing or design defect in the qualified anti-terrorism technology at issue was the proximate cause of his or her claimed damages. And second, the legislation gives claimants the choice to opt out of the administrative compensation scheme and, instead, to bring actions, including tort and contract actions, in the United States District Courts for the district in which the terrorism event occurred for damages that are caused by, arise out of, or are related to terrorism events and are alleged to have been proximately caused by the defective manufacture or design of a qualified piece of anti-terrorism technology. The legislation vests original, exclusive jurisdiction in the U.S. District Courts to resolve such claims under the act, with normal opportunities to appeal.

3. Willful Misconduct Exception – The protections afforded by the legislation will not be available to a designer, manufacturer, distributor or seller of qualified anti-terrorism technology if a claimant can show by clear and convincing evidence that the designer, manufacturer, distributor or seller engaged in willful misconduct in relation to the qualified anti-terrorism technology and such misconduct was the proximate cause of the harm experienced by the claimant.

4. Determination of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology – The Secretary of Homeland Security will make the determination about whether a particular piece of technology should be considered qualified anti-terrorism technology. The legislation provides criteria for the Secretary to use in making such determination and requires an "efficient" review process.

5. Compensation Alternatives – As noted above, the legislation provides for two (mutually exclusive) options for obtaining compensation for damages under the Act.

5.1 Administrative Compensation Scheme – First, the legislation provides for the creation of an administrative compensation scheme that affords relief without recourse to judicial process. Claimants who choose to obtain relief through the administrative compensation scheme are precluded from seeking relief through judicial process. Claimants may obtain relief through the compensation scheme upon a showing that the damages forming the basis of their claims were caused by, arose out of, or related to terrorism events in which a failure of qualified anti-terrorism technology to perform as intended or marketed may have been causally related to the occurrence of the terrorism events and the claimed damages. Claimants opting for relief through the administrative compensation scheme may obtain compensation without regard to whether they prove the qualified anti-terrorism technology was defective or that any such defect was a proximate cause of their damages. A special master appointed by the Secretary will use appropriate criteria to determine the size of the administrative compensation scheme fund, and will administer the claims process and make all awards.

5.2 Judicial Remedies Under the Act – The legislation also provides for compensation through judicial process, but requires claimants bringing actions under the Act to brings their claims in Federal District Court for the district in which the terrorism event occurred and to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that their damages were proximately caused by a manufacturing or design defect in the qualified anti-terrorism technology. Claimants availing themselves of judicial remedies under the Act are precluded from making claims under the administrative compensation scheme.

6. Funding of Compensation Alternatives:

6.1 Administrative Compensation Scheme Funding – The legislation provides that the administrative compensation scheme shall be funded, in part, by user fees to be paid by purchasers of qualified anti-terrorism technology. The user fees will consist of a __% surcharge on the purchase prices of qualified anti-terrorism technology, such surcharge to be transferred to the fund by the manufacturers, distributors, and/or sellers of such technology. The remainder of the administrative compensation scheme shall be funded through the Congressional appropriations process. Annually, the Secretary of Homeland Security shall evaluate the adequacy of the fund and the level(s) of the surcharges and shall make such adjustments to either or both as he or she deems necessary, taking into account (1) the size of the fund in relation to past, current, and/or expected claims; (2) the success of the legislation in making qualified anti-terrorism technology available; and (3) the effect of the fund and the legislation more generally on the development of a private insurance market for qualified anti-terrorism technology.

6.2 Funding of Judicial Remedy Claimants – To assure adequate funding for payments to qualified claimants who opt to pursue the judicial remedies under the Act, the legislation provides that each designer, manufacturer, distributor or seller of qualified anti-terrorism technology must carry adequate insurance subject to the availability of such insurance at reasonable cost. Thus, for purposes of funding the claims payable to claimants who pursue the judicial remedies under the Act, the following apply:

(a) (1) Any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides a qualified anti-terrorism technology to non-federal government customers ("Seller") shall obtain liability insurance of such types and in such amounts as shall be required in accordance with this section to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims brought by claimants who pursue the judicial remedies under this Act for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against such act and the claimant has proven by a preponderance of the evidence that the anti-terrorism technology was defectively manufactured or designed and such defect was a proximate cause of the damages claimed.

(2) For such total claims brought by claimants who pursue the judicial remedies under this Act (as defined above) and which are related to one such act of terrorism, the Seller is not required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller's anti-terrorism technologies.

(3) Liability insurance obtained pursuant to this subsection shall, in addition to the Seller, protect the contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller, to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies deployed in defense against an act of terrorism.

(4) Such liability insurance under this section shall provide coverage against third party claims brought by claimants who pursue the judicial remedies under this Act for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from the sale or use of anti-terrorism technologies.

(b) EXTENT OF LIABILITY. – Notwithstanding any other provision of law, liability for all claims against a Seller brought by claimants who pursue the judicial remedies under this Act for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed against such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller, whether for compensatory or punitive damages or for contribution or indemnity, shall not be in an amount greater than the limits of liability insurance coverage required to be maintained by the Seller under this Section.

I think it makes sense for us to have a conference call later this week for everyone to provide a status report on efforts being made in preparation for Miguel's hearing. If people are available at 5 pm on Thursday, I will send around a conference number. Please advise.

Brett, please invite the appropriate White House people, including Hispanic liaison people. Manny, please invite the appropriate individuals on the Hill. Jennifer, please invite any people from outside groups you think should participate.

Thanks very much.

Thanks, Brett. I will be forwarding two other requests for use of corporate aircraft shortly. Both requests, one for our Secretary and one for our Under Secretary, involve access to remote locations accessible only by private aircraft. One to be provided by Exxon, the other by Philips Petroleum. When it rains it pours!

Thanks again.

Subject: Approval for Presidential Appointee Travel

As per our telephone conversation, I am hereby requesting approval to accept corporate air travel for Under Secretary of Energy Robert G. Card on August 31, 2002, in relation to his official travel in South Africa. Sasol, one of the largest industrial companies in South Africa, supplies 41% of South Africa's liquid fuel requirements. Sasol also has a joint venture with Chevron, which is responsible for the development, implementation and operation of gas to liquids ventures based on the Slurry Phase Distillate process, and the marketing of their products, such as environment-friendly, sulfur-free fuels. The Under Secretary is one of the Administration leaders on the President's National Climate Change Technology Initiative. Sasol's research and technology facilities, as well as its coal-to-liquid petrochemical operations, are vital for this initiative.

Section 1353 of title 31, United States code, authorizes the acceptance by executive branch agencies of payments for travel, subsistence, and related expenses from non-Federal sources in connection with the attendance of employees at certain meetings or similar functions. Further, the Department has concluded that the need for the Deputy Secretary's participation outweighs any concern that acceptance of the travel may or may reasonably appear to improperly influence him in the performance of his official duties. I have been advised by the Department's Office of Aviation Management that there are no viable aviation options for this proposed travel. Further, we have been advised that travel by car is not only unsafe, but would not allow the Under Secretary the ability to visit all the plants and facilities he would like to visit.

White House policy requires that Cabinet members may not travel on aircraft owned, chartered, or maintained by a company primarily for company use rather than commercial use if the company is regulated by or doing business with their employing agency. Although it is not clear that SASOL would meet the criteria the White House has in mind in formulating this policy, the Under Secretary requested that advance White House approval be obtained.

Sasol has offered to fly the Under Secretary on its corporate aircraft between Lanseria, Secunda, Sasolburg, and back to Secunda (all locations in South Africa). This will allow the Under Secretary to meet with SASOL executives and tour several of their facilities, including their corporate headquarters, research and development facilities, the location where SASOL started making coal-derived fuels and chemicals in 1955, and their coal-to-liquid petrochemical plant, the largest such plant in the world.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and please let me know if you have any questions or require anything further.

Hearing on Successful Strategies for Indian Reservation Development

United States Senate
Senate Committee on Indian Affairs

Written Statement

Tony T. Brown, Director

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
Community Development Financial Institutions Fund

September 12, 2002

INTRODUCTION

Chairman Inouye, Vice Chairman Campbell and members of the US Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, I appreciate the opportunity to testify before you today on behalf of the Department of Treasury's Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFI) Fund. I am Tony Brown, Director of the CDFI Fund. I bring 20 years prior experience in banking to the CDFI Fund with a decade of service in community development during which I managed the community development program for the largest financial institution in the State of Florida.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Paul O'Neill, selected me as Director in August of last year. The Administration's vision for the CDFI Fund is to see it improve the lives of Americans by providing capital and technical assistance to institutions and entities who in turn provide credit, capital and financial services to underserved and distressed markets. The Administration does not see this as a sole responsibility of Treasury or the CDFI Fund itself. Instead, we view this as a comprehensive and collaborative undertaking involving federal interagency cooperation and public-private initiatives. My testimony will focus on the role the CDFI Fund has played and the strategic direction we will take to help improve the economies of Indian Lands[1] and Native Hawaiian Home Lands[2].

[1] "Indian Lands" are defined for the purposes of this testimony as they were defined in the Fund's Native American Lending Study, published in November, 2001: "lands owned by or under control of Tribal governments, including reservations, Indian Lands in Oklahoma, and Alaska Native Villages."

[2] "Hawaiian Home Lands" are defined for the purpose of this testimony as they were defined in the Fund's Native American Lending Study: "trust lands held for the benefit of Native Hawaiian purposes and are administered by the State of Hawaii's Department of Hawaiian Home Lands."

The CDFI Fund is a wholly owned government corporation within the United States Department of the Treasury. The mission of the CDFI Fund is to expand the capacity of financial institutions to provide credit, capital and financial services in economically distressed rural and urban communities. Put simply, the CDFI Fund invests in institutions that in turn provide capital and financial services to underserved people and communities.

The Fund promotes access to capital and local economic growth in four ways:

1) Through the CDFI Program, we directly invest in and support community development financial institutions (CDFIs) that provide loans, investments, financial services and technical assistance to underserved people in economically distressed communities;

2) Through the Bank Enterprise Award (BEA) Program, we provide an incentive to banks and thrifts (FDIC-insured depositors) to invest in their communities and in other CDFIs;

3) Through the Native American CDFI Technical Assistance (NACTA) Program and the Native American CDFI Training Program, we provide grants to assist Native American and Native Hawaiian organizations to build the create and build capacity of CDFIs; and;

4) Through our newest program - New Markets Tax Credit (NMTC) Program – we will provide an allocation of tax credits to Community Development Entities (CDEs) which will enable them to attract investment from the private sector and reinvest these amounts in low-income communities.

Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs) are specialized financial institutions operating in market niches that have not been adequately served by traditional financial institutions. Included in the various types of CDFIs are community development banks, credit unions, business loan funds, housing/facilities loan funds, microenterprise loan funds, and venture capital funds.

The organizations we support through our financial and technical assistance awards are able to lend in ways that are more flexible or innovative than regulated financial institutions. To date, we have certified 603 financial institutions as CDFIs across the country. To date, there are 24 certified CDFIs that include market areas serving Native American and Alaska Native communities and five certified CDFIs that serve Native Hawaiian communities. The CDFI Fund has awarded $34 million to these organizations since 1996. Through the CDFI Program, our awards take the form of technical assistance grants, financial assistance grants, loans, equity investments, and share certificates.

We continue to certify about 200 new CDFIs each year; we re-certify CDFIs every three years. Yet, it's not the number of CDFIs certified that we are most pleased with: it is the fact that these CDFIs serve 98 percent of the nation's most distressed urban and rural communities.

Our communities, through compassion and community activism, have built a financial network that is dedicated to improving the lives of our most economically deprived communities and citizenry. The reach of this financial network is unprecedented. The reach of this financial network is impressive.

The CDFI Fund is a financial lifeline that provides critical support in underserved communities. We are committed to building the strength and capacity of this CDFI financial network to do more by improving the economic conditions of the markets they serve. The CDFI Fund has several strategies underway to improve Indian Land and Native Hawaiian Home Land economic development.

Strategy #1: Obtain 100% certified CDFI coverage in Indian Lands and Hawaiian Home Lands

The CDFI Fund is focused on Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian communities, as within the nation's financially underserved communities. This focus includes the Native American CDFI Technical Assistance (NACTA) Program and the Native American CDFI Training Program. Through the NACTA Program, the Fund provides direct technical assistance grants to Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian CDFIs, Tribal[3] organizations, and other financial institutions and organizations serving these communities for the purpose of creating CDFIs and building CDFI capacity.

During FY 2002, the first active year of the NACTA Program, the CDFI Fund made 38 awards for a total of $ 2.6 million. These technical assistance grants will (i) enable financial institutions to enhance their capacity to provide access to capital and credit to these communities; and (ii) assist such communities in establishing their own CDFIs.

Another $1.5 million in funding has been set aside to implement the Native American CDFI Training Program. This training program has been designed to help Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian communities build leadership skills enabling them to create and manage CDFIs.

The need for this new initiative was identified during the workshops organized by the CDFI Fund in conjunction with the development of the Native American Lending Study. This Study identified six barriers to accessing debt capital and equity investments in Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian communities and offered 17

[3] " Tribal" is defined for the purposes of this testimony as defined in the Fund's Native American Lending Study: "Native American and Alaska Native governments."

recommendations to address Tribal legal system infrastructure and overcoming economic, financial, educational and cultural barriers.

The Fund firmly believes that increasing the number of active and effective CDFIs serving Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands will lead to financial products and services that meet the needs of Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiians and will increase the delivery of financial literacy services offered to these populations.

Strategy #2: Increase Bank Lending in Native Lands

Our second strategy is to provide incentives for regulated banks and thrifts to invest in Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian CDFIs and to increase their lending and financial services in distressed communities in Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Lands. We do this through the Bank Enterprise Award (BEA) Program that recognizes the key role played by traditional financial institutions in community development.

Increasing bank lending in Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands is one area that we believe could have the great impact for Native American and Native Hawaiian economic development. This summer I toured four Native American reservations in Arizona and New Mexico. I was very impressed with the progress and accomplishments these communities have made in accessing capital for economic and housing development. But I also became aware of the gap that still exists between banking services provided and the ability of these communities to attract additional capital.

As noted in the Fund's Native American Lending Study, there is a perception that lending in Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands is "riskier"; the perceived uncertainty of Tribal legal structure causes some banks to either refrain from lending in Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands or mitigate such risk by over-collateralizing debt instruments. Some banks are still unfamiliar with guaranty loan programs offered through the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of Housing and Urban Development; the banks that are active with BIA and HUD programs may perceive those programs as cumbersome and therefore the programs may be under-utilized. Many financial institutions active in Indian Lands have stated that they would like Tribal governments to provide limited waivers of sovereign immunity, which, in many instances, is contradictory to the Tribe's legal authority. In addition, many Native Americans, Alaska Natives and Native Hawaiians lack capital, collateral and credit histories, which can make traditional lending to these populations difficult.

According to the Housing Assistance Council, a CDFI serving rural America, banks reject nearly two thirds of the mortgage applications filed by rural Native Americans, compared to about a third of rural whites' applications. And when they do lend to Native Americans, banks lend lower amounts: in 1998, the median loan to rural whites was 40 percent higher than the median loan to rural Native Americans ($52,000 versus $37,500). This difference cannot be explained by incomes, as median rural white income was only 17 percent higher than that of rural Native Americans ($35,000 versus $30,000). The cost of loans also tends to be higher. The National Community Reinvestment Coalition estimates that, in 2000, 27 percent of all conventional home mortgage loans to Native Americans were issued by high-cost sub-prime or manufactured home lenders, versus only 10 percent of home mortgage loans to whites.

The Fund believes that one of the best ways to overcome the perception that lending on Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands is risky and to overcome systemic barriers to accessing credit and capital is to introduce a demonstration project. Beginning in FY 2003, the Fund has proposed introducing the Native American CDFI Comprehensive Assessment Program (NACCAP) as a funding component. The purpose of this new program will be to make significant CDFI Fund awards by using the experience of the NACTA Program, the Core Component of the CDFI Program, and the BEA Program to encourage CDFIs working with community partners, including banks, concentrating in one or more particular Indian Lands or Native Hawaiian Home Lands. The Fund will track the impact of these investments over five- year period and will use this data to help tribes, financial institutions and federal agencies to develop a systemic approach to economic development. NACCAP, as currently conceived, will have three goals:

1. Increase financing to businesses and individuals desiring to start or expand businesses on Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands;

2. Expand the supply and quality of housing units in Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands affordable to the local population and increase homeownership rates;

3. Expand access to affordable financial services to Native Americans and Native Hawaiians.

Strategy #3: Increase Equity Investments on Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands

Our third strategy involves the use of tax credits to increase the flow of private capital in low-income areas. On December 21, 2000, the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 was signed into law. This law created the New Markets Tax Credit (NMTC) Program.

It will help to stimulate up to $15 billion of needed private sector investments in low-income communities across the country for the next seven years. The NMTC Program offers us a tremendous opportunity to focus on economic development and investments in Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home Lands as well. During my tour of Indian Lands this summer, I promoted this program among the tribal businesses and financial institution managers that I visited with.

By making an equity investment in an eligible "community development entity" (CDE), individual and corporate investors can receive a NMTC worth 39 percent of the amount invested over the seven-year life of the credit.

By offering a tax credit, the NMTC Program encourages private investment in underserved communities in an unprecedented manner. If investors embrace the program, it will be a significant source of new capital that will help to stimulate new industries and entrepreneurs, and to generate new jobs in low-income communities.

By increasing the number and vitality of CDFIs serving Native American and Native Hawaiian communities the Fund believes it will attract NMTC investments into these communities. Certified CDFIs may automatically qualify as a CDE and therefore have increased potential to receive an allocation of NMTCs or to attract an investment from another CDE with such an allocation.

Summary:

In conclusion, I believe that the CDFI Fund is a valuable federal government program that has a history of matching the capital raised by local communities to serve the credit needs of underserved populations. We will continue to work with Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian banks and various community and economic development associations across the country to utilize the best financial tools to meet the economic needs of these communities.

Tribal and Native Hawaiian communities throughout the nation confront daunting economic challenges. They are confronted with legal infrastructure, governmental operations, economic financial, physical infrastructure, education and cultural barriers. As indicated in the Fund's Native American Lending Study Report, there has been palpable progress in addressing these challenges. A significant number of Tribes have mounted innovative development strategies. Efforts are underway to enhance the capacities of Tribal governments. There are many examples of "win-win" relationships with major manufacturing and financial service organizations. Real, albeit modest, progress has been made in addressing the backlog of investment in human and physical capital. Recent federal policies that stress government-to-government relationships are beginning to provide more Tribal governmental control.

To date, much of the progress in expanding access to capital was not achieved by Tribal governments, financial institutions or federal agencies acting alone. Rather, progress often depended on these stakeholders acting together. Neither technical assistance nor cultural education will have the desired effect unless Tribes, Native Hawaiian communities, and banks commit to such processes. Moreover, banks, government regulators, and Tribes would all likely have to participate in attempts to create new loan products for Native American or Native Hawaiian communities.

The CDFI Fund, through its programs, is committed to creating greater access to capital and equity investments throughout Indian Lands and Native Hawaiian Home

REV_00351765

Lands. We believe that all Native Americans and Native Hawaiians should have access to affordable capital, credit and financial services for decent and affordable housing and support to finance small businesses to further create jobs and help to alleviate poverty. The CDFI Fund will work diligently to be a catalyst to bring these parties together to expand Native American, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian communities to the benefit of all America.

Thank you very much.

[Report No. 107–]

To amend and extend certain laws relating to housing and community opportunity, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MARCH 19, 2002

Mrs. ROUKEMA (for herself, Mr. GREEN of Wisconsin, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. LUCAS of Kentucky, Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. BACHUS, Mr. KING, Mr. NEY, Mr. BARR of Georgia, Mrs. KELLY, Mr. RILEY, Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California, Mr. CANTOR, Mr. GRUCCI, Mr. ROGERS of Michigan, Mr. TIBERI, Mr. LEACH, Mr. SHAYS, Mr. LATOURETTE, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Ms. HART, Mr. FERGUSON, and Mr. PICKERING) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Financial Services, and in addition to the Committee on the Judiciary, for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned

SEPTEMBER , 2002

Reported from the Committee on Financial Services with an amendment

[Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italic]

[For text of introduced bill, see copy of bill as introduced on March 19, 2002]

A BILL

To amend and extend certain laws relating to housing and community opportunity, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00351786

Such nonprofit organizations shall include community housing development organizations (as such term is defined in section 104 of this Act, community development financial institutions (as such term is defined in section 103 of the Community Development Banking and Financial Institutions Act of 1994 (12 U.S.C. 4702)), community development corporations (as such term is defined in section 31131 of the National Community Economic Partnership Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C. 13851)), and community-based development organizations.

"(3) COST LIMITS.—The Secretary shall establish limitations on the amount of grant amounts that may be used, on a per unit basis, for eligible activities. Such limitations shall be the same as the per unit cost limits established pursuant to section 212(e), as adjusted annually, and established by number of bedrooms, market area, and eligible activity.

"(f) ALLOCATION PLAN.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT.—With respect to a fiscal year, an affordable housing trust fund shall be eligible to receive a grant under this section for such fiscal year only if the trust fund has established an allocation plan that has been submitted to the Secretary and reviewed and approved by the Secretary as in ac-

"(A) VOUCHER ASSISTANCE.—In the case of a family who is eligible for enhanced voucher assistance under this subsection and who, on the date of the eligibility event resulting in such family's eligibility, is residing in a dwelling unit that is unavailable for continued rental as provided in subparagraph (B) as a result of such event, enhanced voucher assistance under this subsection for the family shall be voucher assistance under subsection (o), except that under such enhanced voucher assistance—

"(i) subject only to clause (iv), the assisted family shall pay as rent no less than the amount the family was paying on the date of the eligibility event for the project;

"(ii) the assisted family may elect to reside in any other dwelling unit that is located within the zip code in which is located the project in which the family was residing on the date of the eligibility event for the project or within a zip code contiguous to such zip code, and if, during any period after such election that the family continues to reside, the rent for the dwelling unit of the family exceeds the applicable payment standard established pursuant to subsection (o) for the unit, the amount of rental assistance provided on behalf of the family shall be determined using a payment standard that is equal to the rent for the dwelling unit (as such rent may be increased from time-to-time), except that—"(I) such rent shall be subject to paragraph (10)(A) of subsection (o);

"(II) such payment standard shall not exceed the greater of 150 percent of the applicable fair market rents or 150 percent of the applicable payment standard for the market area; and

"(III) subject only to the limit in subclause (II), such payment standard shall not adversely affect such assisted families;

"(iii) clause (ii) of this subparagraph shall not apply and the payment standard for the dwelling unit occupied by the family shall be determined in accordance with subsection (o) if—

"(I) the assisted family moves, at any time, to a dwelling unit that is not located within (aa) the zip code within which is located the project in which the family was residing on the date of the eligibility event for the project, or (bb) a zip code contiguous to such zip code; or

"(II) the voucher is made available for use by any family other than the original family on behalf of whom the voucher was provided; and

"(iv) if the income of the assisted family declines to a significant extent, the percentage of income paid by the family for rent shall not exceed the greater of 30 percent or the percentage of income paid at the time of the eligibility event for the project.

"(B) UNAVAILABILITY DUE TO CONVERSION.—A dwelling unit shall be considered to be unavailable for continued rental as provided in this subparagraph if the eligibility event for the project occurs in connection with a conversion of the unit to condominium, cooperative, or commercial use, after having obtained all necessary land use approvals.".

(b) APPLICABILITY.—No funds for enhanced vouchers under section 8(t)(2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t)(2)), as added by the amendments made by subsection (a) of this section, shall be provided from amounts appropriated for fiscal years prior to fiscal year 2003.

(c) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue regulations necessary to carry out the amendment made by subsection (a).

SEC. 413. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM FOR RENTAL ASSISTANCE FOR GRANDPARENT-HEADED OR RELATIVE-HEADED FAMILIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall carry out a demonstration program to determine the feasibility of providing rental assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f) for the rental of suitable dwelling units by covered families.

(b) ELIGIBLE UNITS.—Under the demonstration program, the Secretary shall make rental assistance amounts reserved pursuant to subsection (f) of this section available to public housing agencies selected to participate in the program for use only for assistance on behalf of covered families renting qualified dwelling units. Such a public housing agency may not initially provide voucher assistance under this section for any family after the end of fiscal year 2006.

(c) SERVICES.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall require any public housing agency participating in the demonstration program under this section to ensure that families receiving rental assistance pursuant to this section are provided with supportive services that are tailored to the needs of children and covered families. The Secretary shall coordinate with the heads of other Federal agencies as may be appropriate to assist in ensuring the provision of such services.

(d) SELECTION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall provide for public housing agencies to apply to participate in the demonstration program under this section and, during the period consisting of fiscal years 2003 through 2006 shall, to the extent amounts are available pursuant to subsection (f), select not less than two and not more than four agencies for such participation based on the ability of the applicant to provide assistance and services under the program and national geographical diversity among agencies participating in the program.

(e) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit a report to the Congress describing the demonstration program under this section and analyzing the effectiveness of the program.

(f) FUNDING.—Of any amounts made available for voucher assistance under section 8(o) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)) for fiscal year 2003 and fiscal years thereafter, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall reserve such amounts in such fiscal years as may be necessary to provide voucher assistance for the agencies selected under subsection (d) for use only for providing assistance under this section.

SEC. 414. ELIGIBILITY OF GRANDPARENT-HEADED AND RELATIVE-HEADED FAMILIES FOR FAMILY UNIFICATION ASSISTANCE.

Section 8(x) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(x)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking "section 8" and inserting "this section";

(B) by striking "and" before "(B)" and inserting a comma; and

(C) by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", or (C) a covered family, who is otherwise eligible for such assistance, for rental of a qualified dwelling unit";

(2) in the second sentence of paragraph (3)—

(A) by inserting ", as appropriate (A)" after "containing"; and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", or (B) a description of the need for assistance under this subsection for covered families"; and

(3) in paragraph (4), by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(C) CHILD.—The term 'child' means an individual who—

"(i) is not attending school and is not more than 18 years of age; or

"(ii) is attending school and is not more than 19 years of age.

"(D) COVERED FAMILY.—The term 'covered family' means a family that—

"(i) includes a child; and

"(ii) has a head of household who is—

"(I) a grandparent of the child who is raising the child; or

"(II) a relative of the child who is raising the child.

"(E) GRANDPARENT.—The term 'grandparent' means, with respect to a child, an individual who is a grandparent or stepgrandparent of the child by blood or marriage, regardless of the age of such individual. In the case of a child who was adopted, the term includes an individual who, by blood or marriage, is a grandparent or stepgrandparent of the child as adopted.

"(F) QUALIFIED DWELLING UNIT.—The term 'qualified dwelling unit' means a dwelling unit that—"(i) has at least 2 separate bedrooms;

"(ii) is equipped with design features appropriate to meet the special physical needs of elderly persons, as needed; and

"(iii) is equipped with design features appropriate to meet the special physical needs of young children.

"(G) RAISING A CHILD.—The term 'raising a child' means, with respect to an individual, that the individual—

"(i) resides with the child; and

"(ii) is the primary caregiver for the child—

"(I) because the biological or adoptive parents of the child do not reside with the child or are unable or unwilling to serve as the primary caregiver for the child; and

"(II) regardless of whether the individual has a legal relationship to the child (such as guardianship or legal custody) or is caring for the child informally and has no such legal relationship with the child.

"(H) RELATIVE.—The term 'relative' means, with respect to a child, an individual who—

"(i) is not a parent of the child by blood or marriage; and

"(ii) is a relative of the child by blood or marriage, regardless of the age of the individual.

In the case of a child who was adopted, the term includes an individual who, by blood or marriage, is a relative of the family who adopted the child.".

SEC. 415. INCREASED PAYMENT STANDARD.

Section 8(o)(1)(D) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(1)(D)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(D) APPROVAL.—The" and inserting the following:

"(D) EXCEPTION PAYMENT STANDARDS.—

"(i) APPROVAL.—The"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(ii) INCREASED PAYMENT STANDARD.—A public housing agency may establish a payment standard for the same size dwelling unit in a market area or portion of a market area between 110 and 120 percent of the fair market rent, if the payment standard for the market area or portion of a market area has been set at 110 percent or above for the 6 months prior to the establishment of the new payment standard and the public housing agency determines that it has—

"(I) a voucher success rate (the proportion of families that are issued a voucher that succeed in leasing a unit within the timeframe provided by the public housing agency to search for housing) of not more than 80 percent or has provided an extended search time of not less than 90 days to a significant number of voucher recipients; or cordance with this subsection. The Secretary may disapprove an allocation plan only if the plan fails to comply with requirements set forth in this section.

"(2) ESTABLISHMENT.—An allocation plan in accordance with this subsection is a plan, established by an affordable housing trust fund for a fiscal year, for the distribution of grant amounts provided under this section to the trust fund for such fiscal year.

"(3) NOTICE.—In establishing an allocation plan, the affordable housing trust fund shall notify the public of the establishment of the plan, provide an opportunity for public comments regarding the plan, consider any public comments received, and make the completed plan available to the public.

"(4) CONTENTS.—An allocation plan of an affordable housing trust fund shall include the following information:

"(A) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS FOR ELIGIBLE ENTITIES AND SUBRECIPIENTS.—The allocation plan shall set forth the requirements for eligible entities and eligible subrecipients to apply to receive assistance from grant amounts under this section, including a requirement that each such application include—

"(II) problems with concentration of the voucher holders in high poverty areas.

"(iii) DISABILITY ACCOMMODATION.—A public housing agency may establish a payment standard of not more than 120 percent of the fair market rent where necessary as a reasonable accommodation for a person with a disability, without approval of the Secretary. A public housing agency may seek approval of the Secretary to use a payment standard greater than 120 percent of the fair market rent as a reasonable accommodation for a person with a disability.

"(iv) SECRETARY APPROVAL.—A public housing agency may establish a payment standard in accordance with clause (ii) without approval of the Secretary, if the public housing agency includes in its annual plan that is submitted to the Secretary pursuant to section 5A(b)—

"(I) the reasons for the increase in the payment standard;

"(II) a description of how and why the public housing agency has determined that it meets the requirements of clause (ii); and

"(III) a description of other steps the public housing agency is taking, in addition to increasing the payment standard, to address the problems of voucher utilization, voucher success rates (the proportion of families that are issued a voucher that succeed in leasing a unit within the timeframe provided by the public housing agency to search for housing), and concentration of voucher holders.

"(v) APPLICABILITY.—Clauses (ii) through (iv) shall apply with respect only to amounts made available for rental assistance under this subsection for fiscal year 2004 and fiscal years thereafter.".

SEC. 416. PROTECTION OF INNOCENT TENANTS.

Clause (iii) of section 8(d)(1)(B) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(d)(1)(B)(iii)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: "; except that such criminal activity, engaged in by a member of a tenant's household or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall not be cause for termination of tenancy of the tenant if the tenant or immediate member of the tenant's family is a victim of domestic violence or dating violence and, as a result, could not control or prevent the criminal activity relating to domestic violence or dating violence; and except that nothing in this clause may be construed to limit the authority of a public housing agency to evict individuals who engage in criminal acts of physical violence against family members or others, and in all cases, a public housing agency shall consider the safety, security, and continued maintenance of victims of domestic violence to be of paramount importance".

TITLE V—PUBLIC HOUSING

Subtitle A—General Provisions

SEC. 501. PHA JOINT VENTURES.

Section 13(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437k(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) NON-FEDERAL FUNDS AND ACTIVITIES.—This subsection shall not apply to any subsidiary, joint venture, partnership, or business arrangement, or any activity conducted by such an entity, that does not involve holding or expending funds received from the Federal Government or proceeds or income derived from such funds.".

SEC. 502. THIRD-PARTY PUBLIC HOUSING ASSESSMENT SYSTEM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall provide for the development of a third-party assessment system for evaluating the performance of public housing agencies, in accordance with this section.

(b) PURPOSES.—The assessment system developed under this section shall—

(1) provide an objective assessment of the overall performance of public housing agencies in all major areas of management operations and in discharging their obligations under the United States Housing Act of 1937;

(2) identify quantifiable areas of the management and financial condition of public housing agencies; and

(3) determine the physical condition of public housing dwelling units to ensure that they are maintained in accordance with the requirements pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937.

(c) TESTING AND PROTOTYPE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, to the extent amounts are made available to carry out this section, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall enter into a contract with a public entity or a private for-profit or nonprofit entity to develop a system prototype for the third-party assessment system required under this section and to test such prototype. Such contract shall require such entity to submit the prototype assessment system to the Congress not later than the expiration of the 6-month period beginning upon execution of the contract and to complete such testing not later than the expiration of the 12-month period beginning upon execution of the contract.

(2) CONSULTATION.—In carrying out the testing and prototype development under this subsection, the entity selected under this subsection shall consult with individuals and organizations experienced in managing public housing and their representatives, private real estate managers, representatives from State and local governments, residents of public housing, and the Secretary.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than the expiration of the 12-month period beginning upon execution of the contract referred to in subsection (c)(1), the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit to the Congress a report describing the results and recommendations regarding the testing of the prototype assessment system conducted pursuant to this subsection, which shall include any comments and recommendations of the persons and entities consulted with pursuant to subsection (c)(2) and any recommendations regarding the replacement of the public housing management assessment system established under section 6(j) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437d(j)).

(e) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This section may not be construed to—

(1) provide for or require the implementation of the third-party assessment system developed pursuant to this section; or

(2) alter, affect, suspend, terminate, or delay the effectiveness or applicability of the public housing assessment system under section 6(j) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437d(j)) or any regulations issued, or to be issued, pursuant to such section.

SEC. 503. PUBLIC HOUSING AGENCY PLANS FOR CERTAIN SMALL PUBLIC HOUSING AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5A(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437c–1(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) SUSPENSION OF FILING REQUIREMENT FOR CERTAIN SMALL PHAS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1) or any other provision of this Act—

"(i) the requirement under paragraph (1) shall not apply to any qualified small public housing agency for fiscal years 2003, 2004, or 2005; and

"(ii) any reference in this section or any other provision of law to a 'public housing agency' shall not be considered to refer to any qualified small public housing agency for such fiscal years, to the extent such reference applies to the requirement to submit a public housing agency plan under subsection (b).

"(B) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified small public housing agency' means a public housing agency that meets all of the following requirements:

"(i) The sum of (I) the number of public housing dwelling units administered by the agency, and (II) the number of vouchers under section 8(o) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)) administered by the agency, is 100 or fewer.

"(ii) The agency is not designated pursuant to section 6(j)(2) as a troubled public housing agency.

"(iii) The agency provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that, during fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005, notwithstanding the inapplicability of the requirements under section 5A relating to resident advisory boards and public hearings and notice, residents of public housing administered by the agency will have an adequate and comparable opportunity for participation and notice regarding establishment of the goals, objectives, and policies of the public housing agency.".

(b) REPORT.—Not later than September 30, 2004, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit a report to the Congress describing and analyzing the administrative, financial, and other burdens that would be imposed on public housing agencies described in section 5A(b)(3)(B)(i) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437c–1(b)(3)(B)(i)), as amended by subsection (a) of this section, if such agencies were required to comply fully with the requirements under section 5A(b)(1) of such Act.

SEC. 504. AFFORDABLE ASSISTED LIVING FACILITIES DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

Title I of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 36. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM FOR GRANTS FOR CONVERSION OF PUBLIC HOUSING TO ASSISTED LIVING FACILITIES.

"(a) GRANT AUTHORITY.—To the extent only that amounts are appropriated in advance to carry out this section, the Secretary shall carry out a program, in accordance with this section, to demonstrate the effectiveness of making grants to public housing agencies for use for activities designed to convert dwelling units in eligible projects described in subsection (b) to assisted living facilities or other facilities that expand the availability of supportive services, to enhance the ability of elderly persons to maintain independent living.

"(b) ELIGIBLE PROJECTS.—An eligible project described in this subsection is a public housing project (or a portion thereof) that is primarily occupied by elderly persons.

"(c) APPLICATIONS.—Applications for grants under the demonstration program under this section shall be submitted to the Secretary in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary shall establish. Such applications shall contain—

"(1) a description of the proposed conversion activities for which a grant under the program is requested;

"(2) the amount of the grant requested;

"(3) a description of the resources that are expected to be made available, if any, in conjunction with the grant under the program; and

"(4) such other information or certifications that the Secretary determines to be necessary or appropriate.

"(d) FUNDING FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may not make a grant under the demonstration program under this section unless the application contains sufficient evidence, in the determination of the Secretary, that there will be adequate funding for supportive services for residents of the facility converted with grant amounts.

"(e) SERVICE COORDINATORS.—An application for a grant under the demonstration program under this section may include a request for, and the Secretary may provide funds under the grant for, amounts to provide service coordinators to assist in the provision of supportive services for residents of the facilities converted with grant amounts.

"(i) a description of the eligible activities to be conducted using such assistance; and

"(ii) a certification by the applicant that any housing units assisted with such assistance will comply with the requirements under—

"(I) subsection (k)(9)(A) (relating to rents charged);

"(II) subsection (k)(9)(B) (relating to tenant rent contribution);

"(III) subsection (k)(9)(C) (relating to availability of units for voucher holders); and

"(IV) subsection (k)(9)(E) (relating to use as qualified affordable housing for 40 years).

"(B) SELECTION AND PREFERENCE CRITERIA FOR ELIGIBLE ENTITIES AND SUBRECIPIENTS.—The allocation plan shall set forth the factors for consideration in selecting among applicants that meet the application requirements set forth pursuant to subparagraph (A), which shall give preference to applicants based on—

"(f) SCOPE.—Grants under the demonstration program under this section may be made only with respect to three eligible projects.

"(g) SELECTION CRITERIA.—The Secretary shall select applications for grants under the demonstration program under this section based upon selection criteria, which shall be established by the Secretary and shall include—

"(1) the extent to which the conversion is likely to provide assisted living facilities or supportive services that are needed or are expected to be needed by the categories of elderly persons that the assisted living facility is intended to serve;

"(2) the extent of financial need on the part of the applicant for funding to carry out the conversion activities proposed;

"(3) the extent to which the agency has evidenced community support for the conversion, by such indicators as letters of support from the local community for the conversion and financial contributions from public and private sources;

"(4) the extent to which the applicant demonstrates a strong commitment to promoting the autonomy and independence of the elderly persons that the assisted living facility or other supportive services facility is intended to serve;

"(5) the quality, completeness, and managerial capability of providing services to elderly residents, especially in such areas as meals, 24-hour staffing, and on-site health care; and

"(6) such other criteria as the Secretary determines to be appropriate to ensure that funds made available under the demonstration program under this section are used effectively.

"(h) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'assisted living facility' has the meaning given such term in section 232(b) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715w(b)).

"(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for providing grants under the demonstration program under this section such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004.".

SEC. 505. PROTECTION OF INNOCENT TENANTS.

Paragraph (6) of section 6(l) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437d(l)(6)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: "; except that such criminal activity, engaged in by a member of a tenant's household or any guest or other person under the tenant's control, shall not be cause for termination of tenancy of the tenant if the tenant or immediate member of the tenant's family is a victim of domestic violence or dating violence and, as a result, could not control or prevent the criminal activity relating to domestic violence or dating violence; and except that nothing in this paragraph may be construed to limit the authority of a public housing agency to evict individuals who engage in criminal acts of physical violence against family members or others, and in all cases, a public housing agency shall consider the safety, security, and continued maintenance of victims of domestic violence to be of paramount importance".

SEC. 524. HOPE VI GRANTS FOR ASSISTING AFFORDABLE HOUSING THROUGH MAIN STREET PROJECTS.

(a) PURPOSES.—Section 24(a) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437v(a)) is amended by adding after and below paragraph (4) the following:

"It is also the purpose of this section to provide assistance to smaller communities for the purpose of facilitating the development of affordable housing for low-income families that is undertaken in connection with a main street revitalization or redevelopment project in such communities.".

(b) GRANTS FOR ASSISTING AFFORDABLE HOUSING DEVELOPED THROUGH MAIN STREET PROJECTS IN

SMALLER COMMUNITIES.—Section 24 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437v) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (n) as subsection (o); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (m) the following new subsection:

"(n) GRANTS FOR ASSISTING AFFORDABLE HOUSING DEVELOPED THROUGH MAIN STREET PROJECTS IN SMALLER COMMUNITIES.—

"(1) AUTHORITY AND USE OF GRANT AMOUNTS.—The Secretary may make grants under this subsection to smaller communities. Such grant amounts shall be used by smaller communities only to provide assistance to carry out eligible affordable housing activities under paragraph (3) in connection with an eligible project under paragraph (2).

"(2) ELIGIBLE PROJECT.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'eligible project' means a project that—

"(A) the Secretary determines, under the criteria established pursuant to paragraph (3), is a main street project;

"(B) is carried out within the jurisdiction of smaller community receiving the grant; and

"(C) involves the development of affordable housing that is located in the commercial area that is the subject of the project.

"(3) MAIN STREET PROJECTS.—The Secretary shall establish requirements for a project to be consider a main street project for purposes of this section, which shall require that the project—

"(A) has as its purpose the revitalization or redevelopment of a historic or traditional commercial area;

"(B) involves investment, or other participation, by the government for, and private entities in, the community in which the project is carried out; and

"(C) complies with such historic preservation guidelines or principles as the Secretary shall identify to preserve significant historic or traditional architectural and design features in the structures or area involved in the project.

"(4) ELIGIBLE AFFORDABLE HOUSING ACTIVITIES.—For purposes of this subsection, the activities described in subsection (d)(1) shall be considered eligible affordable housing activities, except that—

"(A) such activities shall be conducted with respect to affordable housing rather than with respect to severely distressed public housing projects; and

"(B) eligible affordable housing activities under this subsection shall not include the activities described in subparagraphs (B) through (F) or (J) through (L) of subsection (d)(1).

"(5) MAXIMUM GRANT AMOUNT.—A grant under this subsection for a fiscal year for a single smaller community may not exceed $1,000,000.

"(6) CONTRIBUTION REQUIREMENT.—A smaller community applying for a grant under this subsection shall be considered an applicant for purposes of subsection (c) (relating to contributions by applicants), except that—

"(A) such supplemental amounts shall be used only for carrying out eligible affordable housing activities; and

"(B) paragraphs (1)(B) and (3) shall not apply to grants under this subsection.

"(7) APPLICATIONS AND SELECTION.—

"(A) APPLICATION.—Pursuant to subsection (e)(1), the Secretary shall provide for smaller communities to apply for grants under this subsection, except that the Secretary may establish such separate or additional criteria for applications for such grants as may be appropriate to carry out this subsection.

"(B) SELECTION CRITERIA.—The Secretary shall establish selection criteria for the award of grants under this subsection, which shall be based on the selection criteria established pursuant to subsection (e)(2), with such changes as may be appropriate to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

"(8) COST LIMITS.—The cost limits established pursuant to subsection (f) shall apply to eligible affordable housing activities assisted with grant amounts under this subsection.

"(9) INAPPLICABILITY OF OTHER PROVISIONS.—The provisions of subsections (g) (relating to disposition and replacement of severely distressed public housing), (h) (relating to administration of grants by other entities), and (i) (relating to withdrawal of funding) shall not apply to grants under this subsection.

"(10) REPORTING.—The Secretary shall require each smaller community receiving a grant under this subsection to submit a report regarding the use of all amounts provided under the grant.

"(11) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, the following definitions shall apply:

"(A) AFFORDABLE HOUSING.—The term 'affordable housing' means rental or homeownership dwelling units that—

"(i) are made available for initial occupancy subject to the same rules regarding level of income and income mix as dwelling units in public housing projects assisted with a grant under this section; and

"(ii) are subject to the same rules regarding occupant contribution toward rent or purchase and terms of rental or purchase as dwelling units in public housing projects assisted with a grant under this section.

"(B) SMALLER COMMUNITY.—The term 'smaller community' means a unit of general local government (as such term is defined in section 102 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5302)) that—"(i) has a population of 30,000 or fewer; and

"(ii)(I) may not be not served by a public housing agency; or

"(i) the amount of assistance leveraged by the applicant from private and other non-Federal sources for carrying out the eligible activities to be funded with assistance from grant amounts under this section, including assistance made available under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f) that is devoted to the project that contains the qualified affordable housing to be assisted with such assistance;

"(ii) the extent of local assistance that will be provided in carrying out the eligible activities, including—

"(I) financial assistance;

"(II) the extent to which the applicant has worked to address issues of siting and exclusionary zoning or other policies that are barriers to affordable housing with the unit of general local government in which the housing to be assisted with such assistance will be located; and

"(III) the extent to which the applicant has worked with the unit of

"(II) is served by a single public housing agency, which agency administers 100 or fewer public housing dwelling units.".

SEC. 607. HOUSING FOR DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AND SEXUAL ASSAULT VICTIMS.

(a) FUNDING.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007 for assistance under this section.

(b) HOUSING ASSISTANCE.—Any amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be available to the Secretary only to provide assistance to qualified organizations for the purpose of providing, on behalf only of eligible individuals or families—

(1) supportive housing (as such term is defined in section 422 of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11382));

(2) tenant-based rental assistance;

(3) financial assistance for a security deposit, first month's rent, or ongoing rental assistance; or

(4) project-based transitional housing, except that such assistance may be used only to cover expenses of renovation, repair, conversion and operation of such housing.

(c) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS AND FAMILIES.—An eligible individual or family under this paragraph is an individual or family that meets both of the following requirements:

(1) VICTIMS.—The individual has been victimized by domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault or the family is a victimized family.

(2) RELOCATION.—The qualified organization providing the housing assistance pursuant to subsection (b) for which the individual or family is applying has determined that the individual or member of the family who was a victim of the domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault reasonably believes that relocation from such residence will assist in avoiding future domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault against such individual or another member of the family.

(d) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—Each qualified organization receiving assistance under this section shall supplement such assistance with a 25 percent match of funds for supportive services (as such term is defined in section 422 of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11382)) from sources other than this section. Each such organization shall certify to the Secretary its compliance with this section and shall include with the certification a description of the sources and amounts of such supplemental funds.

(e) ALLOCATION.—

(1) COMPETITION.—Amounts made available pursuant to this section shall be allocated by the Secretary, among qualified organizations that submit applications to the Secretary, under a national competition based on demonstrated need for such assistance, including the extent of service provided to underserved populations (as such term is defined in section 2003 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796gg–2)) and the ability to un-general local government to reduce the barriers to affordable housing;

"(iii) the degree to which the project in which the qualified affordable housing will be located will have residents of various incomes;

"(iv) the extent of employment and other economic opportunities for low-income families in the area in which the housing will be located;

"(v) the extent to which the applicant demonstrates the ability to maintain dwelling units as qualified affordable housing through the use of assistance made available under this section, assistance leveraged from non-Federal sources, assistance made available under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f), State or local assistance, programs to increase tenant income, cross-subsidization, and any other resources;

"(vi) the extent to which the applicant demonstrates that the county in which the housing is to be located is experiencing an extremely low vacancy rate;

dertake and carry out a program under this section, as the Secretary shall determine.

(2) SET ASIDE FOR INDIAN TRIBES.—Of the total funds made available pursuant to subsection (a) for any fiscal year, at least 10 percent shall be used for grants to Indian tribes or Indian tribal organizations that provide emergency shelter, transitional housing, or permanent housing or supportive services to individuals or families victimized by domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault. Indian tribes or Indian tribal organizations that receive such grants may apply for and receive other grants from the total funds appropriated under this section. All other grants awarded shall go to qualified organizations.

(f) APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary shall provide for qualified organizations to apply for assistance under this section and shall require that such an application shall—

(1) contain such certifications as the Secretary shall require to ensure that—

(A) the applicant organization, to the extent practicable, has entered into cooperative agreements or memoranda of understanding with homeless coalitions, public housing authorities, and community-based agencies that represent underserved populations to establish procedures for facilitating referrals to transitional housing and for implementing tenant-based housing assistance programs; and

(B) any construction or physical improvements carried out with assistance amounts under this section will comply with any applicable housing, safety, and licensing codes, laws, or regulations of the State or local government in which the structure is located; and

(2) describe how the services to be provided with assistance under this section will assist victims of domestic violence in obtaining permanent housing.

(g) CONFIDENTIALITY.—A qualified organization may not be provided assistance under this section unless the organization agrees to ensure the confidentiality of—

(1) the names of individuals and their dependents assisted with services or in facilities funded, in whole or in part, with such amounts; and

(2) any other information regarding such individuals and dependents, except to the extent such information is otherwise required by law to be disclosed.

(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.—The term "domestic violence" includes acts or threats of violence or extreme cruelty (as such term is referred to in section 216 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186a)), not including acts of self-defense, committed by a current or former spouse of the victim, by a person with whom the victim has a child in common, by a person who is cohabiting with or has cohabited with the victim, by a person who is or has been in a continuing social relationship of a romantic or intimate nature with the victim, by a person similarly situated to a spouse of the victim under the domestic or family violence laws of the jurisdiction, or by any other person against a victim who is protected from that person's acts under the domestic or family violence laws of the jurisdiction.

(2) VICTIMIZED FAMILY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "victimized family" means a family or household that includes an individual who has been determined under subparagraph (B) to have been a victim of domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault, but does not include any individual who committed the domestic violence, sexual assault, or adult or child sexual assault. The term includes any such family or household in which only a minor or minors are the individual or individuals who was or were a victim of domestic violence, stalking, or sexual assault only if such family or household also includes a parent, stepparent, legal guardian, or other responsible caretaker for the child.

(B) DETERMINATION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a determination under this subparagraph is a determination that domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault has been committed, which is made by any agency or official of a State, Indian tribe, tribal organization, or unit of general local government based upon any reliable evidence that domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault has occurred. A victim's statement that domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault has occurred shall be sufficient unless the agency has an independent, reasonable basis to find the individual not credible.

(3) INDIAN TRIBE.—The term "Indian Tribe" shall have the same meaning given the term in section 2003 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796gg–2).

(4) QUALIFIED ORGANIZATION.—The term "qualified organization" means a private, nongovernmental organization that—

(A) is organized, or has as its primary purposes, to provide emergency shelter, transitional housing, or permanent housing for victims of domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault or is a medical, legal, counseling, social, psychological, health, job training, educational, life skills development, or other social services program for victims of domestic violence, stalking, or adult or child sexual assault that undertakes a collaborative project with a qualified, nonprofit, nongovernmental organization that primarily provides emergency shelter, transitional housing, or permanent housing for low-income people;

(B) is organized under State, tribal, or local laws;

(C) has no part of its net earnings inuring to the benefit of any member, shareholder, founder, contributor, or individual; and

(D) is approved by the Secretary as to financial responsibility.

(5) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(6) SEXUAL ASSAULT.—The term "sexual assault" means any conduct proscribed by chapter 109A of title 18, United States Code, whether or not the conduct occurs in the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, on an Indian reservation, or in a Federal prison and includes both assaults committed by offenders who are strangers to the victims and assaults committed by offenders who are known to the victims or related by blood or marriage to the victim.

(7) STALKING.—The term "stalking" means engaging in a course of conduct directed at a specific person that would cause a reasonable person to fear death, sexual assault, or bodily injury to himself or herself or a member of his or her immediate family, when the person engaging in such conduct has knowledge or should have knowledge that the specific person will be placed in reasonable fear of death, sexual assault, or bodily injury to himself or herself or a member of his or her immediate family and when the conduct induces fear in the specific person of death, sexual assault, or bodily injury to himself or herself or a member of his or her immediate family.

TITLE VIII—HOUSING IMPACT ANALYSIS

SEC. 801. APPLICABILITY.

Except as provided in section 802, the requirements of this title shall apply with respect to—

(1) any proposed rule, unless the agency promulgating the rule—

(A) has certified that the proposed rule will not, if given force or effect as a final rule, have a significant deleterious impact on housing affordability; and

(B) has caused such certification to be published in the Federal Register at the time of publication of general notice of proposed rulemaking for the rule, together with a statement providing the factual basis for the certification; and

(2) any final rule, unless the agency promulgating the rule—

(A) has certified that the rule will not, if given force or effect, have a significant deleterious impact on housing affordability; and

(B) has caused such certification to be published in the Federal Register at the time of publication of the final rule, together with a statement providing the factual basis for the certification.

Any agency making a certification under this section shall provide a copy of such certification and the statement providing the factual basis for the certification to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

SEC. 802. EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN BANKING RULES.

The requirements of this title shall not apply to any proposed or final rule relating to—

(1) the operations, safety, or soundness of—

(A) federally insured depository institutions or any affiliate of such an institution (as such term is defined in section 2(k) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(k)));

(B) credit unions;

(C) the Federal home loan banks;

(D) the enterprises (as such term is defined in section 1303 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1992 (12 U.S.C. 4502));

(E) a Farm Credit System institution; or

(F) foreign banks or their branches, agencies, commercial lending companies, or representative offices that operate in the United States, or any affiliate of a foreign bank (as such terms are defined in section 1 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3101)); or

(2) the payments system or the protection of deposit insurance funds or the Farm Credit Insurance Fund.

SEC. 803. STATEMENT OF PROPOSED RULEMAKING.

Whenever an agency publishes general notice of proposed rulemaking for any proposed rule, unless the agency has made a certification under section 801, the agency shall—

(1) in the notice of proposed rulemaking—

(A) state with particularity the text of the proposed rule; and

(B) request any interested persons to submit to the agency any written analyses, data, views, and arguments, and any specific alternatives to the proposed rule;

(2) provide an opportunity for interested persons to take the actions specified under paragraph (1)(B) before promulgation of the final rule; and

(3) prepare and make available for public comment an initial housing impact analysis in accordance with the requirements of section 804.

SEC. 804. INITIAL HOUSING IMPACT ANALYSIS.

(a) REQUIREMENTS.—Each initial housing impact analysis shall describe the impact of the proposed rule on housing affordability. The initial housing impact analysis or a summary shall be published in the Federal Register at the same time as, and together with, the publication of general notice of proposed rulemaking for the rule. The agency shall transmit a copy of the initial housing impact analysis to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(b) CONTENTS.—Each initial housing impact analysis required under this section shall contain—

(1) a description of the reasons why action by the agency is being considered;

(2) a succinct statement of the objectives of, and legal basis for, the proposed rule;

(3) a description of and, where feasible, an estimate of the extent to which the proposed rule would increase the cost or reduce the supply of housing or land for residential development; and

(4) an identification, to the extent practicable, of all relevant Federal rules which may duplicate, overlap, or conflict with the proposed rule.

SEC. 805. FINAL HOUSING IMPACT ANALYSIS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Whenever an agency promulgates a final rule after publication of a general notice of proposed rulemaking, unless the agency has made the certification under section 801, the agency shall prepare a final housing impact analysis.

(b) CONTENTS.—Each final housing impact analysis shall contain—

(1) a succinct statement of the need for, and objectives of, the rule;

(2) a summary of the significant issues, analyses, and alternatives to the proposed rule raised during the public comment period in response to the proposed rule and initial housing impact analysis, a summary of the assessment of the agency of such issues, analyses, and alternatives, and a statement of any changes made in the proposed rule as a result of such comments; and

(3) a description of and an estimate of the extent to which the rule will impact housing affordability or an explanation of why no such estimate is available.

(c) AVAILABILITY.—The agency shall make copies of the final housing impact analysis available to members of the public and shall publish in the Federal Register such analysis or a summary thereof.

SEC. 806. AVOIDANCE OF DUPLICATIVE OR UNNECESSARY ANALYSES.

(a) DUPLICATION.—Any Federal agency may perform the analyses required by sections 804 and 805 in conjunction with or as a part of any other agenda or analysis required by any other law, executive order, directive, or rule if such other analysis satisfies the provisions of such sections.

(b) JOINDER.—In order to avoid duplicative action, an agency may consider a series of closely related rules as one rule for the purposes of sections 804 and 805.

SEC. 807. PREPARATION OF ANALYSES.

In complying with the provisions of sections 804 and 805, an agency may provide either a quantifiable or numerical description of the effects of a proposed rule or alternatives to the proposed rule, or more general descriptive statements if quantification is not practicable or reliable.

SEC. 808. EFFECT ON OTHER LAW.

The requirements of sections 804 and 805 do not alter in any manner standards otherwise applicable by law to agency action.

SEC. 809. PROCEDURE FOR WAIVER OR DELAY OF COMPLETION.

(a) INITIAL HOUSING IMPACT ANALYSIS.—An agency head may waive or delay the completion of some or all of the requirements of section 804 by publishing in the Federal Register, not later than the date of publication of the final rule, a written finding, with reasons therefor, that the final rule is being promulgated in response to an emergency that makes compliance or timely compliance with the provisions of section 801 impracticable.

(b) FINAL HOUSING IMPACT ANALYSIS.—An agency head may not waive the requirements of section 805. An agency head may delay the completion of the requirements of section 805 for a period of not more than 180 days after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a final rule by publishing in the Federal Register, not later than such date of publication, a written finding, with reasons therefor, that the final rule is being promulgated in response to an emergency that makes timely compliance with the provisions of section 805 impracticable. If the agency has not prepared a final housing impact analysis pursuant to section 805 within 180 days from the date of publication of the final rule, such rule shall lapse and have no force or effect. Such rule shall not be repromulgated until a final housing impact analysis has been completed by the agency.

SEC. 810. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) AGENCY.—The term "agency" means each authority of the Government of the United States, whether or not it is within or subject to review by another agency, but does not include—

(A) the Congress;

(B) the courts of the United States;

(C) the governments of the territories or possessions of the United States;

(D) the government of the District of Columbia;

(E) agencies composed of representatives of the parties or of representatives of organizations of the parties to the disputes determined by them;

(F) courts-martial and military commissions;

(G) military authority exercised in the field in time of war or in occupied territory; or

(H) functions conferred by—

(i) sections 1738, 1739, 1743, and 1744 of title 12, United States Code;

(ii) chapter 2 of title 41, United States Code;

(iii) subchapter II of chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code; or

(iv) sections 1884, 1891–1902, and former section 1641(b)(2), of title 50, appendix, United States Code.

(2) FAMILIES.—The term "families" has the meaning given such term in section 3 of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

(3) HOUSING AFFORDABILITY.—The term "housing affordability" means the quantity of housing that is affordable to families having incomes that do not exceed 150 percent of the median income of families in the area in which the housing is located, with adjustments for smaller and larger families. For purposes of this paragraph, area, median family income for an area, and adjustments for family size shall be determined in the same manner as such factors are determined for purposes of section 3(b)(2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

(4) RULE.—The term "rule" means any rule for which the agency publishes a general notice of proposed rulemaking pursuant to section 553(b) of title 5, United States Code, or any other law, including any rule of general applicability governing grants by an agency to State and local governments for which the agency provides an opportunity for notice and public comment; except that such term does not in-

"(I) not less than 45 percent of the grant amounts will be used for eligible activities relating to housing that is affordable to families having incomes less than 30 percent of the greater of (aa) the median income for the area in which the housing is located, or (bb) the median income for the State in which the housing is located;

"(II) not less than 30 percent of the grant amounts will be used for eligible activities relating to housing that is affordable to families having incomes not exceeding the amount earned by a family having one individual (or 1.5 individuals in the case of a family consisting of 3 or more individuals), who is employed on a full-time basis in a position paying the higher of (aa) the Federal minimum wage under section 6(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206(a)(1)), or (bb) the minimum wage under State law of the State in which the housing is located; and clude a rule of particular applicability relating to rates, wages, corporate or financial structures or reorganizations thereof, prices, facilities, appliances, services, or allowances therefor or to valuations, costs or accounting, or practices relating to such rates, wages, structures, prices, appliances, services, or allowances.

(5) SIGNIFICANT.—The term "significant" means increasing consumers' cost of housing by more than $100,000,000 per year.

SEC. 811. DEVELOPMENT.

Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall develop model initial and final housing impact analyses under this title and shall cause such model analyses to be published in the Federal Register. The model analyses shall define the primary elements of a housing impact analysis to instruct other agencies on how to carry out and develop the analyses required under sections 804 and 805

SEC. 812. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) DETERMINATION BY AGENCY.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), any determination by an agency concerning the applicability of any of the provisions of this title to any action of the agency shall not be subject to judicial review.

(b) OTHER ACTIONS BY AGENCY.—Any housing impact analysis prepared under section 804 or 805 and the compliance or noncompliance of the agency with the provisions of this title shall not be subject to judicial review. When an action for judicial review of a rule is instituted, any housing impact analysis for such rule shall constitute part of the whole record of agency action in connection with the review.

(c) EXCEPTION.—Nothing in this section bars judicial review of any other impact statement or similar analysis required by any other law if judicial review of such statement or analysis is otherwise provided by law.

TITLE IX—OTHER HOUSING PROGRAMS

SEC. 901. GNMA GUARANTEE FEE.

Section 972 of the Higher Education Amendments of 1998 (Public Law 105–244; 112 Stat. 1837) is hereby repealed.

"(III) not more than 25 percent of the grant amounts will be used for eligible activities relating to housing for families having incomes that (aa) are greater than the incomes referred to in subclauses (I) and (II) of this clause, but (bb) do not exceed the higher of the median income for the State in which the housing is located or 80 percent of the median income for the area in which the housing is located.

"(5) CONSOLIDATED PLAN.—The Secretary shall provide that a State or unit of general local government administering an affordable housing trust fund may comply with the requirements under this subsection for submission of an allocation plan through the inclusion of any appropriate information in a single consolidated submission used for purposes of applying for other community planning and development and housing assistance programs administered by the Secretary.

"(g) FORMS OF ASSISTANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Assistance from grant amounts under this section may be distributed in the form of capital grants, noninterest bearing or low-inquired and that it will make such determination upon such additional occasions as are required by law or regulation.";

(2) by striking subsections (b) and (c); and

(3) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (b).

SEC. 908. STUDY OF COMMUNITY RENEWAL PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall conduct a study to analyze the extent to which use of 1990 census data for purposes of determining eligibility of areas for designation as renewal communities for purposes of the community renewal program under subchapter X of chapter 1 of Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 1400E et seq.), rather than data from the 2000 census, impairs the ability of communities to fully carry out the purposes of such program.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit a report to the Congress, not later September 30, 2004, setting forth the results of the study conducted pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 909. CORRECTION OF INEQUITIES IN THE SECOND ROUND OF EMPOWERMENT ZONES.

(a) GRANT AUTHORITY.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development such sums as may be necessary to make grant awards to each of 15 urban empowerment zones designated pursuant to section 1391(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, taking into account any amount made available pursuant to any prior appropriation made for such zones.

(b) AUTHORITY TO USE FUNDS TO IMPLEMENT STRATEGIC PLAN.—Funds appropriated under Federal law for an empowerment zone referred to in subsection (a) may be used to implement the strategic plan for the zone, including—

(1) economic development;

(2) infrastructure development;

(3) workforce development; and

(4) community development activities.

(c) AUTHORITY TO USE FUNDS TO PAY NON-FEDERAL SHARE OF MATCHING GRANTS.—Funds appropriated under any Federal law for an empowerment zone referred to in subsection (a) may be used to pay the non-Federal share required in connection with another Federal grant-in-aid program undertaken as part of activities assisted under this section.

SEC. 910. EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN PUBLIC AND INDIAN HOUSING AGENCIES.

Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (12 U.S.C. 1701u) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (e), (f), and (g) as subsections (f), (g) and (h), respectively;

(2) in subsection (f), as so redesignated, by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) ONE-STOP DELIVERY SYSTEM.—The term 'one-stop delivery system' has the meaning given that term in section 134(c) of the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 (29 U.S.C. 2864(c))."; and

(3) by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) REQUIREMENT FOR HIRING OF NEW EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) THIRTY PERCENT REQUIREMENT.—It shall be a condition of any contract awarded by a public or Indian housing agency for work to be performed in connection with development assistance provided from the Capital Fund under section 9(d) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, or from the Operating Fund under section 9(e) of such Act, that, except as provided in paragraph 2(B), a minimum of 30 percent of all new employees hired by a contractor for work in connection with such contract will be low- or very low-income persons.

"(2) COMPLIANCE.—As a condition of any contract awarded for the work described in paragraph (1), any contractor awarded such a contract shall—

"(A)(i) immediately before beginning work under such contract, submit evidence to the satisfaction of the public or Indian housing agency showing that a minimum of 30 percent of all new employees hired for work in connection with such contract are low- or very low-income persons; and

"(ii) submit evidence to the satisfaction of the public or Indian housing agency showing that a minimum of 30 percent of all subsequently hired new employees hired for work in connection with such contract are low- or very low-income persons; or

"(B) if such contractor cannot meet the requirement imposed by paragraph (1)—

"(i) submit evidence to the satisfaction of the public or Indian housing agency showing that such contractor has given notice of such contract to the one-stop delivery system for the area which the housing subject to the contract is located, including the particular skills and qualifications needed by potential new employees for work under such contract; and

"(ii) provide to the public or Indian housing agency evidence, as the Secretary shall by regulation require, sufficient to show that no newly hired employees who are not low- or very low-income persons are performing work in place of skilled low- or very low-income persons who were provided by either the public or Indian housing agency or by the one-stop delivery system.

"(3) TRAINING.—Any contractor awarded a contract for the work described in paragraph (1) may not provide on-the-job training to any new employee for work under such contract unless such new employee is a low- or very low-income person.".

SEC. 911. ASSISTANCE FOR NONPROFIT PURCHASERS PRESERVING AFFORDABLE HOUSING.

(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make grants, to the extent amounts are made available for such grants, to eligible entities under subsection (b) for use only for operational, working capital, and organizational expenses of such entities and activities by such entities to acquire eligible affordable housing for the purpose of ensuring that the housing will remain affordable, as the Secretary considers appropriate, for low-income or very low-income families (including elderly persons).

(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—The Secretary shall establish standards for entities to be considered eligible entities for purposes of this section, which shall include requirements that an entity shall—

(1) be a nonprofit organization (as such term is defined in section 104 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act) that has a regional or national focus and has been in existence at least 3 years;

(2) have among its purposes maintaining the affordability to low-income or very low-income families of multifamily properties that are at risk of loss from the inventory of housing that is affordable to low-income or very low-income families;

(3) demonstrate need for assistance under this section for the purposes under subsection (a), experience in carrying out activities referred to in such subsection, and capability to carry out such activities; and

(4) demonstrate financial resources, financial capability, and organizational outreach to make best use of scarce Federal resources by—

(A) levering effectively any funding under this section with private-sector capital; and

(B) working in effective cooperation with other similar organizations.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) ELIGIBLE AFFORDABLE HOUSING.—The term "eligible affordable housing" means housing that—

(A) consists of more than 4 dwelling units;

(B) serves exclusively or predominantly a tenancy of low-income families or very low-income families, or is insured or assisted under a program of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Department of Agriculture, or applicable State housing finance agency programs under which the property is subject to limitations on tenant rents, rent contributions, or incomes; and

(C) is at risk, as determined by the Secretary, of having loss of affordability because of market rate conversion, deterioration, or demolition.

(2) LOW-INCOME FAMILIES; VERY LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—The terms "low-income families" and "very low-income families" have the meanings given such terms in section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for grants under this section.

SEC. 912. HOMEOWNERSHIP FOR MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES.

(a) ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES.—Section 105(a) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5305(a)), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(27) provision of direct assistance to facilitate and expand homeownership among uniformed employees (including policemen, firemen, and sanitation and other maintenance workers) of, and teachers who are employees of, the metropolitan city or urban county (or an agency or school district serving such city or county) receiving grant amounts under this title pursuant to section 106(b) or the unit of general local government (or an agency or school district serving such unit) receiving such grant amounts pursuant to section 106(d), except that—

"(A) such assistance may only be provided on behalf of such employees who are first-time homebuyers under the meaning given such term in section 104(14) of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12704(14)), except that, for purposes of this paragraph, such section shall be applied by substituting 'section 105(a)(27) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974' for 'title II';

"(B) notwithstanding section 102(a)(20)(B) or any other provision of this title, such assistance may be provided on behalf of such employees whose family incomes do not exceed—

"(i) 115 percent of the median income of the area involved, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families; or

"(ii) with respect only to areas that the Secretary determines have high housing costs, taking into consideration median house prices and median family incomes for the area, 150 percent of the median income of the area involved, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families;

"(C) such assistance shall be used only for acquiring principal residences for such employees, in a manner that involves obligating amounts with respect to any particular mortgage over a period of 1 year or less, by—

"(i) providing amounts for downpayments on mortgages;

"(ii) paying reasonable closing costs normally associated with the purchase of a residence;

"(iii) obtaining pre- or post-purchase counseling relating to the financial and other obligations of homeownership; or

"(iv) subsidizing mortgage interest rates; and

"(D) any residence purchased using assistance provided under this paragraph shall be subject to restrictions on resale that are—

"(i) established by the metropolitan city, urban county, or unit of general local government providing such assistance; and

"(ii) determined by the Secretary to be appropriate to comply with subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 215(b)(3) of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12745(b)(3)), except that, for purposes of this paragraph, terest loans or advances, deferred payment loans, guarantees, and any other forms of assistance approved by the Secretary.

"(2) REPAYMENTS.—If an affordable housing trust fund awards assistance from grant amounts under this section in the form of a loan or other mechanism by which funds are later repaid to the trust fund, any repayments received by the trust fund shall be distributed by the trust fund in accordance with the allocation plan under subsection (f) for the trust fund for the fiscal year in which such repayments are made.

"(h) COORDINATION WITH OTHER ASSISTANCE.—In distributing assistance from grant amounts under this section, each affordable housing trust fund shall, to the maximum extent practicable, coordinate such distribution with the provision of other affordable housing assistance by the trust fund, including—

"(1) in the case of any State, housing credit dollar amounts allocated by the State under section 42(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

"(2) assistance otherwise made available under this title or the community development block grant program under title I of the Housing and Community such subparagraphs shall be applied by substituting 'section 105(a)(27) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974' for 'this title';".

(b) PRIMARY OBJECTIVES.—Section 105(c) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5305(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) HOMEOWNERSHIP ASSISTANCE FOR MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, any assisted activity described in subsection (a)(27) of this section shall be considered, for purposes of this title, to benefit persons of low and moderate income and to be directed toward the objective under section 101(c)(3).".

SEC. 913. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING HUD OFFICE OF DISABILITY POLICY.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) 54,000,000 Americans have disabilities;

(2) 1,300,000 disabled Americans have worst-case housing needs;

(3) people with disabilities and their families face unique challenges in securing adequate housing;

(4) it is the policy of the United States, as enshrined in the Fair Housing Act, the Rehabilitation

Act of 1973 and the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990, and other Federal laws, that the disabled have the same rights to housing as other Americans;

(5) people with disabilities represent an important constituency of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and rely heavily on many of the Department's programs for their housing needs;

(6) people with disabilities need a single, one-stop source for help with their housing needs;

(7) people with disabilities need an advocate within HUD;

(8) HUD has designated a Deputy Assistant Secretary for Special Needs whose responsibilities includes many populations with housing challenges, but people with disabilities are not specifically cited as among those responsibilities;

(9) HUD has, in the past, established special resource offices, such as the Veteran Resource Center (HUDVET), to provide information on HUD's community-based programs and services to specific HUD constituents and their families;

(10) people with disabilities are overlooked in much of HUD's administrative structure and ought to receive as much attention from the Federal Government's housing agency as other groups with critical housing needs; and

(11) HUD currently has an Office of Disability Policy, but there has not been a Director of that Office since January 2001.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development should—

(1) immediately appoint a permanent Director of the Office of Disability Policy;

(2) examine the role of the Department's Office of Disability Policy, its relationship to the Office of Special Needs, and whether and what changes might be made to increase attention to people with disabilities within the Department's programs and policies; and

(3) establish a resource center for people with disabilities and their families within the Office of Disability Policy to serve as a portal into the Department's community-based programs and services.

SEC. 914. TRANSFER OF RURAL MULTIFAMILY RENTAL HOUSING PROJECTS TO NONPROFITS AND LOCAL HOUSING AUTHORITIES.

Section 515(h) of the Housing Act of 1949 (42 U.S.C. 1485(h)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(h) PROJECT TRANSFERS.—After" and inserting the following:

"(h) PROJECT TRANSFERS.—

"(1) LIMITATION.—After"; and

(2) by inserting at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) TRANSFER AND RENOVATION OF EXISTING PROJECTS.—

"(A) TRANSFER.—In carrying out this Act, the Secretary should encourage the transfer of ownership or control of projects for which a loan is made or insured under this section to nonprofit organizations and local housing authorities (including public housing agencies).

"(B) RENOVATION.—In carrying out this Act, the Secretary should encourage, and give priority in funding, to the renovation of existing projects for which a loan is made or insured under this section, subsequent to transfer of such projects to nonprofit organizations and housing authorities.".

SEC. 915. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING CONSUMER PROTECTION AND HOME WARRANTIES.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) 30,000 newly constructed homes were insured under the National Housing Act in 2000 and a majority of those homes were purchased by first-time low- and moderate-income homebuyers;

(2) approximately 90 percent of those homes are now protected by private sector insurance-backed warranties against structural damage for ten years, and an estimated 77 percent of structural damage takes place when a home is four years or older, with an average cost of $30,000 per incident of major structural damage;

(3) Mortgagee Letter 2001-27, issued by the Department of Housing and Urban Development in October 2001 will have the effect of discouraging the use of ten-year insurance-backed warranties, leaving homeowners with a one-year builder warranty to protect the value of the home; and

(4) major structural damage to a home will lead to homeowner defaults and, for homes with mortgages insured under the National Housing Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is liable for 100 percent of the unpaid balance of a mortgage when a homeowner defaults.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development should implement a program to provide incentives to homebuilders to offer ten-year insurance-backed private sector warranties for newly constructed homes purchased with mortgages insured under the National Housing Act.

SEC. 916. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM FOR AFFORDABLE HOUSING DATABASE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall carry out a demonstration program to allow the development and creation of an electronic or otherwise readily available database that provides agencies, municipalities, and the general public access to information about available affordable housing and programs that pertain to the affordable housing continuum. The database shall include regularly updated lists of rental units that accept rental assistance vouchers under the program under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f) and shall contain information about the location of the rental units, the number of units of each bedroom size, and the accessibility of the units to public transportation.

(b) SELECTION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall establish the criteria for participation in the demonstration program under this section and, during the period consisting of fiscal years 2003 through 2004 shall, to the extent amounts are made available under subsection (d), select not more than three applicants for participation in this program.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than February 1, 2005, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit a report to the Congress describing the results of the demonstration program under this section, analyzing the effectiveness of the program, and including recommendations, if any, for continuation or replication.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the demonstration program under this section.

SEC. 917. HUD STUDY REGARDING MAIN STREET PARTNERSHIP.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall conduct a study to determine—

(1) the feasibility and effectiveness of establishing a Federal Main Street Partnership Fund to make grants to local communities to assist in making fast-track changes to zoning and planning regulations that may inhibit the revitalization of downtown commercial areas for mixed-use affordable housing as well as commercial uses;

(2) the extent to which local zoning and planning regulations inhibit the ability of developers to create affordable housing in traditional Main Street commercial districts where commercially zoned buildings have vacant and serviceable housing which cannot be used for housing due to such zoning;

(3) whether fast-tracking zoning modifications and other related incentives would reduce the costs of redeveloping commercial buildings in traditional Main Street commercial districts for mixed-use affordable housing as well as commercial and retail uses; and

(4) what eligible planning activities should receive funding under such a Federal Main Street Partnership Fund, such as salary of staff involved in fast-track re-zoning and surveying and mapping involved in the rezoning.

(b) WORKING GROUP.—In conducting the study, the Secretary shall convene a working group and shall solicit views and recommendations from the members of the group. The group shall include representatives of local governments of varying sizes in various regions, developers, realtors, mortgage bankers, community bankers, local non-profit business membership organizations, such as Chambers of Commerce, community-based affordable housing advocacy organizations, and such other parties as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report regarding the findings of the study, which shall include recommendations regarding the establishment of a Federal Main Street Partnership Fund, to the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate.

SEC. 918. CONTRACTUAL COMMITMENTS FOR RURAL MULTIFAMILY RENTAL HOUSING.

(a) PREPAYMENT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law and subject only to subsection (d) of this section, an owner of eligible low-income rural housing may prepay the loan on such housing made or insured under section 514 or 515 of the Housing Act of 1949 without restrictions at any time after the later of—

(1) 20 years from the date on which the loan was made; and

(2) the date until which the owner has agreed with the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Secretary's delegee, to maintain the low-income use of the housing.

(b) ELIGIBLE LOW-INCOME RURAL HOUSING.—For purposes of this section, the term "eligible low-income rural housing" means housing that is financed by a loan made or insured under section 514 or 515 of the Housing Act of 1949 (42 U.S.C. 1484, 1485) pursuant to a contract entered into prior to December 15, 1989.

(c) TENANT PROTECTION.—

(1) PROVISION OF ENHANCED VOUCHER ASSISTANCE.—To the extent that amounts for assistance pursuant to this subsection are provided in advance in appropriation Acts, upon the prepayment of a loan pursuant to this section, enhanced voucher assistance under section 8(t) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t)) shall be made available on behalf of each low-income family who is residing in the project on the date the loan is prepaid.

(2) ENSURING ABILITY TO USE ENHANCED VOUCHER ASSISTANCE.—Each low-income family residing in the project on the date the loan is prepaid may elect to remain in the same project, subject to the terms of the lease for rental of the dwelling unit, and may use such enhanced voucher assistance for lease of such dwelling unit. The owner of the project may not refuse to accept enhanced voucher assistance made available on behalf of any such low-income family for lease of such a dwelling unit or to enter into a housing assistance payments contract for such a unit.

Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5301 et seq.); and

"(3) private activity bonds.

"(i) ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAM BY SUBRECIPIENT.—At the discretion of the affordable housing trust fund, the trust fund may select an eligible subrecipient to carry out all or a portion of the trust fund's responsibilities under this section, in accordance with this section.

"(j) LABOR STANDARDS.—Each affordable housing trust fund receiving grant amounts under this section shall ensure that contracts for eligible activities assisted with such amounts comply with the same requirements under section 286 that are applicable to contracts for construction of affordable housing assisted under such Act.

"(k) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

"(1) ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES.—The term 'eligible activities' means activities relating to the providing qualified affordable housing, including—

"(A) the construction of new housing;

"(B) the acquisition of real property;

"(C) site preparation and improvement, including demolition;

"(D) rehabilitation of existing housing; and

(d) TENANT PROTECTION AND NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—An owner of eligible low-income rural housing may not, pursuant to subsection (a), prepay the loan on such housing made or insured under section 514 or 515 of the Housing Act of 1949 unless—

(1) amounts are provided in advance in appropriation Acts, and are obligated, for assistance pursuant to subsection (c) of this section on behalf of each low-income family who is residing in the project on the date that the loan is prepaid; and

(2) not less than 150 days before such prepayment, the owner of the project provides written notice of intent to prepay, in such form as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, to each tenant of the housing, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and the chief executive officer of the appropriate State or local government for the jurisdiction within which the housing is located.

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 8(t)(2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t)(2)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or loan" after "the prepayment of the mortgage"; and

(2) by inserting "section 914 of the Housing Affordability for America Act of 2002," after "(12 U.S.C. 4113(f)),".

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Housing Affordability for America Act of 2002".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 232. Disposition of assets in revitalization areas.

"(E) providing incentives to maintain existing housing as qualified affordable housing and to establish or extend any low-income affordability restrictions for such housing, including covering capital expenditures and operating costs.

"(2) ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—The term 'eligible entity' includes any public or private nonprofit or for-profit entity, unit of general local government, regional planning entity, and any other entity engaged in the development, rehabilitation, or preservation of qualified affordable housing, as determined by the Secretary.

"(3) ELIGIBLE SUBRECIPIENT.—The term 'eligible subrecipient' means a public agency or a nonprofit organization, including a community development corporation, a community development financial institution, a State or local housing trust fund, and any other intermediary selected by an affordable housing trust fund to administer all or a portion of the trust fund's responsibilities under this section. The term does not include any public agency or nonprofit organization that receives money from an affordable housing trust fund solely as a developer or owner of housing.

"(4) EXTREMELY LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—The term 'extremely low-income families' means families (as such term is defined in section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437a(b))) whose incomes do not exceed 30 percent of the median family income for the area, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families, except that the Secretary may establish income ceilings higher or lower than 30 percent of the median for the area on the basis of the Secretary's findings that such variations are necessary because of unusually high or low family incomes.

"(5) EXTREMELY LOW VACANCY RATE.—The term 'extremely low vacancy rate' means a housing or rental vacancy rate of 2 percent or less.

"(6) EXTREMELY OLD HOUSING.—The term 'extremely old housing' means housing that is 45 years old or older.

"(7) LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—The term 'low-income families' has the meaning given such term in section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437a(b)).

"(8) POVERTY LINE.—The term 'poverty line' has the meaning given such term in section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981, including any revision required by such section.

"(9) QUALIFIED AFFORDABLE HOUSING.—The term 'qualified affordable housing' means a rental dwelling unit that is subject to legally binding commitments that ensure that the dwelling unit meets all of the following requirements:

"(A) RENTS.—The dwelling unit bears a rent not greater than the lesser of—

"(i) the existing fair market rental established by the Secretary under section 8(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(c)) for a dwelling unit of the same size in the same market area; and

"(ii) a rent that does not exceed 30 percent of the adjusted income of a family whose income equals 65 percent of the median income for the area, as determined by the Secretary, with adjustment for number of bedrooms in the unit, except that the Secretary may establish income ceilings higher or lower than 65 percent of the median for the area on the basis of the findings of the Secretary that such variations are necessary because of prevailing levels of construction costs or fair market rents, or unusually high or low family incomes.

"(B) TENANT RENT CONTRIBUTION.—The contribution toward rent by the family residing in the dwelling unit will not exceed 30 percent of the adjusted income of such family.

"(C) AVAILABILITY OF UNITS FOR VOUCHER HOLDERS.—The dwelling unit—

"(i) is located in a project within which a percentage of units are made available only for occupancy by families assisted under the voucher program under section 8(o) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)) (including project-based assistance under section 8(o)(13)) on the same basis as other families eligible for occupancy of the project (except that only the voucher holder's expected share of rent shall be considered), which percentage shall not be less than the percentage of the total cost of developing, rehabilitating, or preserving the project that is funded with assistance under this section; and

"(ii) is one of the units that is subject to such occupancy requirements.

"(D) NON-DISCRIMINATION AGAINST VOUCHER HOLDERS.—The dwelling unit is located in a project in which all dwelling units are subject to enforceable restrictions that provide that a unit may not be refused for leasing to a holder of a voucher of eligibility under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f) because of the status of the prospective tenant as a holder of such voucher.

"(E) DURATION OF USE.—The dwelling unit will continue to be subject to the requirements under this paragraph for not less than 40 years.

"(10) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

"(l) AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2003 and each fiscal year thereafter for grants under this section. Amounts made available for the HOME Investment Partnerships Act shall not be available for assistance under this subtitle.

"(m) INAPPLICABILITY OF HOME PROVISIONS.—Except as specifically provided in this subtitle, no requirement under, or provision of, title I or subtitles A through F of this title shall apply to assistance provided under this subtitle.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 201 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12701 note) is amended by striking "This title" and inserting "Subtitles A through F of this title".

SEC. 102. 3-YEAR ON-SITE INSPECTION CYCLE FOR TAX CREDIT PROJECTS.

Subsection (b) of section 226 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12756) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) PERIODIC MONITORING.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT.—Each participating jurisdiction shall review the activities of owners of affordable housing for rental that is assisted under this title to assess compliance with the requirements of this title. Such review shall be conducted in compliance with the provisions of paragraph (2) (relating to frequency) and shall include on-site inspection to determine compliance with housing codes and other applicable regulations.

"(2) FREQUENCY.—The review required by paragraph (1) shall be conducted not less frequently than annually, except that, in the case of affordable housing for rental that has been allocated a low-income housing tax credit by a housing credit agency pursuant to section 42 of the Internal Revenue Code 1986 and is not considered (under such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe) to be high-risk housing, the on-site inspection referred to in paragraph (1) shall be conducted once every 3 years, or more often as may be required under the regulations issued pursuant to such section 42.

"(3) INCLUSION IN PERFORMANCE REPORT.—The results of each review of a participating jurisdiction shall be included in the performance report of the jurisdiction that is submitted under section 108(a) for the year in which the review is conducted and shall be made available to the public.".

SEC. 103. REPEAL OF LIMITATIONS ON PROGRAM ASSISTANCE AS PERCENTAGE OF OPERATING BUDGET.

(a) HOUSING EDUCATION AND ORGANIZATIONAL SUPPORT.—Section 233(d) of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12773(d)) is amended—

(1) by striking "may not—" and all that follows through "(1)" and inserting "may not"; and

(2) by striking "; or" at the end of paragraph (1) and all that follows through the end of paragraph (2) and inserting a period.

(b) OTHER SUPPORT FOR STATE AND LOCAL HOUSING STRATEGIES.—The first sentence of section 243(b) of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12783(b)) is amended by striking "and shall provide not more than 20 percent of the operating budget of the contracting organization in any one year".

SEC. 104. ELIGIBILITY OF ROOM ADDITIONS FOR USE FOR GRANDPARENTS AND GRANDCHILDREN.

(a) DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE INITIATIVE.—Subtitle E of title II of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12821) is amended to read as follows:

"Subtitle E—Other Assistance

"SEC. 271. DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE INITIATIVE.

"(a) GRANT AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may make grants to participating jurisdictions to assist low-income families to achieve homeownership, in accordance with this section.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES.—Amounts made available under this section may be used only for downpayment assistance toward the purchase of single family housing by low-income families who are first-time homebuyers. For purposes of this title, the term 'downpayment assistance' means assistance to help a family acquire a principal residence.

"(c) HOUSING STRATEGY.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section for a fiscal year, a participating jurisdiction shall include in its comprehensive housing affordability strategy under section 105 for such year a description of the use of the grant amounts.

"(d) FORMULA ALLOCATION.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allocate any amounts made available for assistance under this section for the fiscal year in accordance with a formula, which shall be established by the Secretary, that considers a participating jurisdiction's need for and prior commitment to assistance to homebuyers. The formula may include minimum and maximum allocation amounts.

"(e) REALLOCATION.—If any amounts allocated to a participating jurisdiction under this section become available for reallocation, the amounts shall be reallocated to other participating jurisdictions in accordance with the formula established pursuant to subsection (c), except that if a local participating jurisdiction failed to receive amounts allocated under this section and is located in a State that is a participating jurisdiction, the funds shall be reallocated to the State.

"(f) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, grants under this section shall not be subject to the provisions of this title.

"(2) APPLICABLE PROVISIONS.—In addition to the requirements of this section, grants under this section shall be subject to the provisions of title I, sections 215(b), 218, 219, 221, 223, 224, and 226(a) of subtitle A of this title, and subtitle F of this title.

"(3) REFERENCES.— In applying the requirements of subtitle A referred to in paragraph (2)—

"(A) any references to funds under subtitle A shall be considered to refer to amounts made available for assistance under this section; and

"(B) any references to funds allocated or reallocated under section 217 or 217(d) shall be considered to refer to amounts allocated or reallocated under subsection (d) or (e) of this section, respectively.

"(g) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Notwithstanding section 212(c), a participating jurisdiction may use funds under subtitle A for administrative and planning costs of the jurisdiction in carrying out this section, and the limitation in section 212(c) shall be based on the total amount of funds available under subtitle A and this section.

"(h) FUNDING.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004.".

(b) RELOCATION ASSISTANCE AND DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE.—Subtitle F of title II of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act is amended by inserting

SEC. 204. HOSPITAL MORTGAGE INSURANCE LOSS MITIGATION DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 242 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715z–7) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i) LOSS MITIGATION DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Only to the extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts to carry out this subsection, the Secretary may carry out a program to demonstrate the effectiveness of taking loss mitigation actions for hospitals with mortgages that are insured under this section to reduce the risk of, prevent, or cure defaults of financially troubled hospitals, to reduce claim or holding costs of loans that are assigned to the Secretary, or to maximize the recovery on loan assets. The demonstration program may be carried out only with respect to not more than 3 such hospitals.

"(2) LOSS MITIGATION ACTIONS.—Loss mitigation actions taken under the demonstration program under this subsection may include the following actions:

"(A) Partial payment of a claim under the contract for mortgage insurance under this section.

"(B) Temporary provision of operating assistance funds, including debt service.

"(C) Provision of financial assistance for maintenance, repair, alterations, or the cost of other capital improvements, including for conversion of excess capacity of hospitals to facilities providing health care and supportive housing for elderly persons and families, including assisted living facilities, nursing homes, and supportive housing for the elderly.

"(3) REQUIREMENTS FOR ASSISTANCE.—A hospital may be provided financial assistance under the demonstration program only if—

"(A) the hospital has secured binding commitments for matching funds of not less than 10 percent of the cost of such assistance; and

"(B) the hospital has met the requirements of any applicable State certificate of need or other licensing requirement.

"(4) LIMITATIONS ON ASSISTANCE.—Any payments or financial assistance or relief under this subsection shall be made at the sole discretion of the Secretary and on terms acceptable to the Secretary except that—

"(A) the total amount of payments and financial assistance and relief shall not exceed 30 percent of the outstanding project indebtedness insured by the Secretary; and

"(B) the mortgagor shall agree to repay such total amount to the Secretary upon terms and conditions acceptable to the Secretary.

"(5) FINAL DECISION.—A decision by the Secretary to exercise or forgo exercising any authority under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(6) APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary shall provide for hospitals to submit applications for participation in the demonstration program under this subsection, which shall include information sufficient to determine compliance with the requirements under paragraph (3).

"(7) TERMINATION.—The demonstration program under this subsection shall terminate on December 31, 2004.".

(b) REPORT.—Not later than September 30, 2005, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress analyzing the demonstration program under the amendment made by subsection (a) and the extent to which, if any, the assistance provided under such program reduced the net cost to the General Insurance Fund as calculated on a net present value basis.

"(I) in the case of a mortgage of a mortgagor described in clause (i)(I)(aa), the local educational agency for the school in which the mortgagor is employed (or, in the case of a mortgagor employed in a private school, the local educational agency having jurisdiction for the area in which the private school is located); or

"(II) in the case of a mortgage of a mortgagor described in clause (i)(I)(bb), the jurisdiction served by the public law enforcement agency, firefighting agency, or rescue or ambulance agency that employs the mortgagor.

"(C) PROGRAM INTEGRITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph and section 203(c)(3), the Secretary may suspend the applicability of this paragraph and such section for such period as the Secretary considers appropriate if the Secretary determines such suspension is necessary because of fraud or other issues regarding program integrity.".

(b) DEFERRAL AND REDUCTION OF UP-FRONT PREMIUM.—Section 203(c) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking "Notwithstanding" and inserting "Except as provided in paragraph (3) and notwithstanding"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) DEFERRAL AND REDUCTION OF UP-FRONT PREMIUM.—In the case of any mortgage described in subsection (b)(10)(B):

"(A) Paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection (relating to collection of up-front premium payments) shall not apply.

"(B) If, at any time during the 5-year period beginning on the date of the insurance of the mortgage, the mortgagor ceases to be a teacher or public safety officer (as such terms are defined in section 201) or pays the principal obligation of the mortgage in full, the Secretary shall at such time collect a single premium payment in an amount equal to the amount of the single premium payment that, but for this paragraph, would have been required under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection with respect to the mortgage, as reduced by 20 percent of such amount for each successive 12-month period completed during such 5-year period before such cessation or prepayment occurs.".

(c) DEFINITIONS.—Section 201 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1707) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by redesignating clauses (1) and (2) as clauses (A) and (B), respectively;

(2) by redesignating subsections (a) through (f) as paragraphs (1) through (6), respectively;

(3) by realigning each paragraph 2 ems from the left margin; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(7) The term 'public safety officer' has the meaning given such term in section 1204 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796b).

"(8) The term 'teacher' means an individual who is employed on a part- or full-time basis as a teacher, teacher assistant, or administrator in a public or private school that provides elementary or secondary education, as determined under State law, except that elementary education shall include pre-Kindergarten education, and except that secondary education shall not include any education beyond grade 12.

"(9) The term 'local educational agency' has the meaning given such term in section 14101 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 8801).".

(d) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue regulations to implement the amendments made by this section.

SEC. 223. COMMUNITY PARTNERS NEXT DOOR PROGRAM.

(a) DISCOUNT AND DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE FOR TEACHERS AND PUBLIC SAFETY OFFICERS.—Section 204(h) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1710(h)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (7) through (10) as paragraphs (8) through (11), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following new paragraph:

"(7) 50 PERCENT DISCOUNT FOR TEACHERS AND PUBLIC SAFETY OFFICERS PURCHASING PROPERTIES THAT ARE ELIGIBLE ASSETS.—

"(A) DISCOUNT.—A property that is an eligible asset and is sold, during fiscal years 2002 through 2006, to a teacher or public safety officer for use in accordance with subparagraph (B) shall be sold at a price that is equal to 50 percent of the appraised value of the eligible property (as determined in accordance with paragraph (6)(B)). In the case of a property eligible for both a discount under this paragraph and a discount under paragraph (6), the discount under paragraph (6) shall not apply.

"(B) PRIMARY RESIDENCE.—An eligible property sold pursuant to a discount under this paragraph shall be used, for not less than the 3-year period beginning upon such sale, as the primary residence of a teacher or public safety officer.

"(C) SALE METHODS.—The Secretary may sell an eligible property pursuant to a discount under this paragraph—

"(i) to a unit of general local government or nonprofit organization (pursuant to paragraph (4) or otherwise), for resale or transfer to a teacher or public safety officer; or

"(ii) directly to a purchaser who is a teacher or public safety officer.

"(D) RESALE.—In the case of any purchase by a unit of general local government or nonprofit organization of an eligible property sold at a discounted price under this paragraph, the sale agreement under paragraph (8) shall—

"(i) require the purchasing unit of general local government or nonprofit organization to provide the full benefit of the discount to the teacher or public safety officer obtaining the property; and

"(ii) in the case of a purchase involving multiple eligible assets, any of which is such an eligible property, designate the specific eligible property or properties to be subject to the requirements of subparagraph (B).

"(E) MORTGAGE DOWNPAYMENT ASSISTANCE.—If a teacher or public safety officer purchases an eligible property pursuant to a discounted sale price under this paragraph and finances such purchase through a mortgage insured under this title, notwithstanding any provision of section 203 the downpayment on such mortgage shall be $100.

"(F) PREVENTION OF UNDUE PROFIT.—The Secretary shall issue regulations to prevent undue profit from the resale of eligible properties in violation of the requirement under subparagraph (B).

"(G) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this paragraph, the following definitions shall apply:

"(i) The term 'eligible property' means an eligible asset described in paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection.

"(ii) The terms 'teacher' and 'public safety officer' have the meanings given such terms in section 201.

"(H) PROGRAM INTEGRITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, the Secretary may suspend the applicability of this paragraph for such period as the Secretary considers appropriate if the Secretary determines such suspension is necessary because of fraud or other issues regarding program integrity.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 204(h) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1710(h)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4)(B)(ii), by striking "paragraph (7)" and inserting "paragraph (8)";

(2) in paragraph (5)(B)(i), by striking "paragraph (7)" and inserting "paragraph (8)"; and

(3) in paragraph (6)(A), by striking "paragraph (8)" and inserting "paragraph (9)".

(c) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue regulations to implement the amendments made by this section.

SEC. 224. PUBLIC SAFETY OFFICER HOME OWNERSHIP IN AT-RISK AREAS.

(a) PROGRAM AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall carry out a pilot program in accordance with this section to assist Federal, State, and local public safety officers purchasing homes in locally-designated at-risk areas.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible for assistance under this section, a public safety officer shall agree, in writing, to use the residence purchased with such assistance as the primary residence of the public safety officer for not less than 3 years after the date of purchase.

(c) MORTGAGE ASSISTANCE.—If a public safety officer purchases a home in locally-designated at-risk area and finances such purchase through a mortgage insured under title II of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1707 et seq.), notwithstanding any provision of section 203 or any other provision of the National Housing Act, the following shall apply:

(1) DOWNPAYMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—There shall be no downpayment required if the purchase price of the property is not more than the reasonable value of the property, as determined by the Secretary.

(B) PURCHASE PRICE EXCEEDS VALUE.—If the purchase price of the property exceeds the reasonable value of the property, as determined by the Secretary, the required downpayment shall be the difference between such reasonable value and the purchase price.

(2) CLOSING COSTS.—The closing costs and origination fee for such mortgage may be included in the loan amount.

(3) INSURANCE PREMIUM PAYMENT.—There shall be one insurance premium payment due on the mortgage. Such insurance premium payment—

(A) shall be equal to 1 percent of the loan amount;

(B) shall be due and considered earned by the Secretary at the time of the loan closing; and holds, including new construction, preservation of existing housing, emergency repairs, homeless shelters, housing-related services, and capacity building for nonprofit organizations.

"(5) At any given time, as many as 50 additional jurisdictions are considering the creation of a housing trust fund.

"(6) These unique funds are a fundamental aspect of emerging housing policy in the United States.

"(7) Housing trust funds have demonstrated that when government makes a commitment to address critical housing needs, the on-going dedicated source of revenue allows for more intelligent planning to address housing needs and for improved proposals submitted by the housing industry in an effort to effectively use existing resources.

"(8) Housing trust funds enable jurisdictions to elevate funding for their critical housing needs by committing resources to a process that treats affordable housing as an essential component of maintaining healthy communities.

"(9) Jurisdictions have documented increased jobs, growing sales taxes, higher property tax revenues, and many other economic benefits from the operation of their housing trust funds.

(C) may be included in the loan amount and paid from the loan proceeds.

(d) LOCAL DESIGNATION OF AT-RISK AREAS.—

(1) CRITERIA.—Any unit of local government may request that the Secretary designate any area within the jurisdiction of that unit of local government as a locally-designated at-risk area for purposes of this section if the proposed area—

(A) has a crime rate that is significantly higher than the crime rate of the non-designated area that is within the jurisdiction of the unit of local government; and

(B) has a population that is not more than 25 percent of the total population of area within the jurisdiction of the unit of local government.

(2) DEADLINE FOR CONSIDERATION OF REQUEST.—Not later than 60 days after receiving a request under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall approve or disapprove the request.

(e) PUBLIC SAFETY OFFICER.—For purposes of this section, the term "public safety officer" has the meaning given such term in section 201 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1707) (as amended by section 222(c) of this Act).

(f) PROGRAM INTEGRITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Secretary may suspend the applicability of this section for such period as the Secretary considers appropriate if the Secretary determines such suspension is necessary because of fraud or other issues regarding program integrity.

(g) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue regulations to implement the provisions of this section.

(h) SUNSET.—The Secretary shall not approve any application for assistance under this section that is received by the Secretary after the expiration of the 3-year period beginning on the date that the Secretary first makes available assistance under the pilot program under this section.

Section 203(k)(3) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(k)(3)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subparagraphs (C) and (D) as subparagraphs (D) and (E), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) involve a loan agreement containing such terms and conditions as the Secretary shall provide, including terms and conditions that provide that the mortgagee shall be responsible for—

"(i) choosing an inspector or consultant who shall—

"(I) meet the standards as the Secretary shall establish; and

"(II) be an agent of the mortgagee; and

"(ii) approving advances under the loan;".

SEC. 229. NONPROFIT PURCHASERS UNDER PROPERTY DISPOSITION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 204(g) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1710(g)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(g)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary shall require, as a condition of eligibility of any nonprofit organization for participation in any program of the Secretary for disposition of 1- to 4-family properties acquired by the Secretary pursuant to this Act, the Secretary shall require that such organization—

"(A) has nonprofit status as demonstrated by approval under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3)) or demonstrates that an application for such status is currently pending approval; and

"(B) provide the Secretary with a copy of the application for such status;

"(C) certify, on an annual basis, that the organization has been apprised of the applicable rules and guidelines of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and understands such rules and guidelines; and

"(D) comply with such other requirements as the Secretary may establish.".

(b) ASSETS IN REVITALIZATION AREAS.—Paragraph (9)(D) of section 204(h) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1710(h)(9)(D)), as so redesignated by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended—

(1) by striking clause (ii) and inserting the following new clause:

"(ii)(I) has nonprofit status as demonstrated by approval under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3)) or demonstrates that an application for such status is currently pending approval; and

"(II) provides the Secretary with a copy of the application for such status;";

(2) in clause (iii), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) certifies, on an annual basis, that the organization has been apprised of the applicable rules and guidelines of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and understands such rules and guidelines.".

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 912(1) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1709–2(1)) is amended by striking "one year" and inserting "18 months".

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply only to defaults described in section 912(1) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970 that occur after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 231. PILOT PROGRAM FOR MANDATORY FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER COUNSELING FOR PROPERTIES IN HIGH FORECLOSURE NEIGHBORHOODS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall carry out a pilot program under this section to determine whether, and the extent to which, requiring completion of a program (that is approved by the Secretary) of counseling with respect to the responsibilities and financial management involved in homeownership by any first-time homebuyers purchasing properties located in high foreclosure neighborhoods with mortgages insured under section 203 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709) will help to prevent defaults and foreclosures on such mortgages.

(b) REQUIREMENT.—Notwithstanding any provision of paragraph (2) of section 203(b) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(b)(2)), under the pilot program, during the 1-year period beginning not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, as selected by the Secretary, the Secretary may not insure, or enter into a commitment to insure, a mortgage under such section 203 that is executed by a first-time homebuyer for a property that is located in the pilot program area unless the mortgagor has completed a program of counseling with respect to the responsibilities and financial management involved in homeownership that is approved by the Secretary.

(c) PILOT PROGRAM AREA.—The Secretary shall select a pilot program area for purposes of this section, which shall be a single limited area, within the jurisdiction of a single unit of general local government, for which the rate of foreclosure on residences subject to mortgages insured under such section 203 exceeds the lesser of—

(1) 150 percent of the national early default claim rate for such residences; and

(2) the national early default claim rate for such residences located within the area served by a field office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development in whose area the pilot program area is located.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 30 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit a report describing the effect of the requirement under subsection (b) on mortgage defaults and foreclosures and any other effects of such requirement, and making any recommendations regarding implementation of the requirement on a nationwide basis.

SEC. 232. DISPOSITION OF ASSETS IN REVITALIZATION AREAS.

The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall continue to administer the Disposition of Assets in Revitalization Areas program as provided in section 602 of Public Law 105–276 and the Secretary shall renew all contracts and enter into new contracts with eligible participants in a manner consistent with the requirements of such section.

TITLE III—SUPPORTIVE HOUSING FOR ELDERLY AND DISABLED FAMILIES

SEC. 301. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR GRANTS FOR REPAIRS TO FEDERALLY ASSISTED HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY.

Section 202b of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q–2) is amended by striking subsection (h) and inserting the following new subsection:

"(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for grants for capital repair activities under subsection (a)(1) and for grants for conversion activities under subsection (a)(2) such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004.".

SEC. 302. SERVICE COORDINATORS FOR SUPPORTIVE HOUSING FOR PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES.

Section 683(2) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 13641(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (F), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (G), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) housing that is assisted under section 811 of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 8013).".

SEC. 303. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM FOR ELDERLY HOUSING FOR INTERGENERATIONAL FAMILIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall carry out a demonstration program to determine the feasibility of providing intergenerational dwelling units for intergenerational families in connection with the supportive housing program

under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q).

(b) INTERGENERATIONAL DWELLING UNITS.—Under the demonstration program, the Secretary shall provide assistance under this section to private nonprofit organizations (as such term is defined in section 202(k) of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q(k)) for use only for expanding the supply of intergenerational dwelling units, which units shall be provided—

(1) by designating and retrofitting, for use as intergenerational dwelling units, existing dwelling units that are located within a project assisted under such section 202;

(2) through development of buildings or projects comprised solely of intergenerational dwelling units; or

(3) through the development of an annex or addition to such an existing project assisted under such section 202, which contains intergenerational dwelling units, including through the development of elder cottage housing opportunity units that are small, free-standing, barrier-free, energy-efficient, removable dwelling units located adjacent to a larger project or dwelling.

"(10) Providing federal incentives to encourage the establishment of more State and local housing trust funds, and providing Federal funds for the more than 280 existing housing trust funds, would be a positive action in addressing the affordable housing crisis.

"(b) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development may make grants under this section to affordable housing trust funds that are distinct funds, established by States and units of general local government, that use public revenue to support the production, preservation, and rehabilitation of affordable housing, as determined by the Secretary.

"(c) ALLOCATIONS FOR STATES AND UNITS OF GENERAL LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—The Secretary shall use the total amount made available for grants under this section for each fiscal year to provide such grants to affordable housing trust funds of States and units of general local government. Of such total amount, the Secretary shall allocate 40 percent for grants for affordable housing trust funds of States and 60 percent for grants for affordable housing trust funds of units of general local government. Each State affordable housing trust fund shall receive at least 1 percent of the amount allocated for the States.

(c) PROGRAM TERMS.—Assistance provided pursuant to this section shall be subject to the provisions of section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q), except that—

(1) notwithstanding subsection (d)(1) of such section or any provision of such section restricting occupancy to elderly persons, any intergenerational dwelling unit assisted under the demonstration program may be occupied as provided in subsection (e)(2) of this section;

(2) subsections (e) and (f) of such section 202 (relating to applications and selection criteria) shall not apply;

(3) in addition to the requirements under subsection (g) of such section 202, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall ensure that occupants of dwelling units assisted under the demonstration program are provided a range of services tailored to the needs of elderly persons, children, and intergenerational families and shall coordinate with the heads of other Federal agencies as may be appropriate to ensure the provision of such services; and

(4) the Secretary may waive or alter any other provision of such section 202 necessary to provide for assistance under the demonstration program under this section.

(d) SELECTION.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall provide for private nonprofit organizations to submit applications for assistance under this section and, during the period consisting of fiscal years 2003 through 2006 shall, to the extent amounts are available pursuant to subsection (g), select not less than 2 and not more than 4 projects assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 for such assistance based on the ability of the applicant to develop and operate intergenerational dwelling units and national geographical diversity among projects funded.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) ELDERLY PERSON.—The term "elderly person" has the meaning given such term in section 202(k) of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q(k)).

(2) INTERGENERATIONAL DWELLING UNIT.—The term "intergenerational dwelling unit" means a qualified dwelling unit (as such term is defined in section 8(x)(4) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(x)(4))) that is reserved for occupancy only by an intergenerational family.

(3) INTERGENERATIONAL FAMILY.—The term "intergenerational family" means a covered family (as such term is defined in section 8(x)(4) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(x)(4))) that has a head of household who is an elderly person.

(f) REPORT.—Not later than 36 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit a report to the Congress describing the demonstration program under this section and analyzing the effectiveness of the program.

(g) FUNDING.—Of any amounts made available for assistance under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q) for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall reserve amounts in such fiscal years as may be necessary to fund the demonstration projects selected under subsection (d). Such amounts shall be available for use only for providing assistance under this section.

SEC. 304. TREATMENT OF PROJECTS SUBJECT TO FORECLOSURE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any project assisted with a loan under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 (12 U.S.C. 1701q), as in effect before the enactment of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, notwithstanding any foreclosure on the loan, any use restrictions applicable to the project regarding occupancy by elderly or handicapped families or the maximum income of families occupying dwelling units in the project shall continue to apply after such foreclosure until the expiration of the original term of such loan.

(b) INCOME LIMITS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), in the case of a project assisted with a loan described in such subsection, after foreclosure on such loan any maximum income limit for a families occupying dwelling units in the project may be increased to not more than 80 percent of the median income for the area if such action is necessary to ensure the financial soundness of the project.

(c) TRANSFER TO QUALIFIED NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS.—In the case of the sale or other disposition of a project assisted with a loan described in subsection (a) pursuant to foreclosure on such loan, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall provide a reasonable period during which only qualified nonprofit organizations (as such term is defined by the Secretary) shall have a right of first refusal to purchase the property.

(d) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall issue any regulations necessary to carry out this section.

TITLE IV—SECTION 8 RENTAL HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

SEC. 401. HOUSING VOUCHER DEMONSTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For fiscal years 2003 and 2004, there is authorized to be appropriated to provide incremental assistance for project-based vouchers under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f) the amount necessary to provide a total of 5,000 such incremental vouchers. Vouchers provided pursuant to this section shall be used exclusively for extremely low-income families in connection with dwelling units in newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated housing.

(b) EXTREMELY LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—For purposes of this section, the term "extremely low-income families" means families (as such term is defined in section 3(b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437a(b))) whose incomes do not exceed the higher of—

(1) 30 percent of the area median income, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families and for unusually high or low family incomes; or

(2) 30 percent of the national non-metropolitan median income.

SEC. 402. FLEXIBILITY TO ASSIST HARD-TO-HOUSE FAMILIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8(o) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(19) FLEXIBILITY TO ASSIST HARD-TO-HOUSE FAMILIES.—In any program year, a public housing agency that is not designated as troubled pursuant to the section 8 management assessment program, or under such other program as may be used by the Secretary to evaluate performance of public housing agencies in administering rental assistance under this section, may use up to 2 percent of any amounts allocated to the agency for such year for purposes that directly support the agency's housing choice voucher program, including housing counseling, downpayment assistance under subsection (y), rental security deposits for families receiving voucher assistance, and other activities that directly assist eligible families in gaining and maintaining occupancy in suitable dwelling units.".

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply only with respect to amounts appropriated for fiscal year 2003 or any fiscal year thereafter.

SEC. 403. CLARIFICATION ON PROHIBITION OF RE-SCREENING OF TENANTS.

(2) in subparagraph (D), by striking the period and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) a family's eligibility to receive such assistance shall be determined pursuant to the provisions of law authorizing or requiring the provision of enhanced voucher assistance pursuant to the eligibility event that affected such family and a family may not be required, as a condition of receiving such assistance, to qualify under the selection standards of a public housing agency for voucher assistance under this section.".

SEC. 404. PHA ADMINISTRATIVE FEES.

Section 8(q) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(q)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) PERFORMANCE INCENTIVE.—For fiscal year 2003 and fiscal years thereafter, the Secretary may pay an additional fee to any public housing agency that succeeds in achieving high or substantially improved performance on specified program requirements or program goals, as established under the management assessment program for the rental assistance program under this section, or any successor assessment program for such assistance, or by regulation issued by the Secretary after notice and opportunity for public comment pursuant to the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code (notwithstanding subsections (a)(2), (b)(B), and (d)(3) of such section). The Secretary shall establish limitations on the total amount of any such additional fees paid to agencies for a fiscal year and on the amount of any such fee paid to any single agency for a fiscal year.".

SEC. 405. ENSURING ABILITY TO USE ENHANCED VOUCHERS.

Section 8(t) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (6); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(5) RIGHT TO USE.—The owner of a multifamily housing project for which an eligibility event (as such term is defined in paragraph (2)) has occurred may not refuse—

"(A) to accept enhanced voucher assistance for lease of a dwelling unit in the same project on behalf of a family who was residing in the project upon the occurrence of such eligibility event; or

"(B) to enter into a housing assistance payments contract for such a unit.".

SEC. 406. TREATMENT OF OVERHOUSED ASSISTED FAMILIES.

Paragraph (6) of section 8(o) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(6)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) RESIDENCY IN INAPPROPRIATELY SIZED UNITS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If a public housing agency determines that a family assisted under this subsection is residing in a dwelling unit that, because of a reduction in family size after such assistance was initially provided for such family, has more bedrooms than is appropriate for a family of such size, the agency may not terminate the assistance for the family or require the family to move to another dwelling unit unless—

"(I) the agency provides the family with a dwelling unit that is located in the same building or project as the inappropriately sized dwelling unit and is available for occupancy; or

"(II) in the case of a family residing in a dwelling unit in a building or project that does not contain any available dwelling unit having a number of bedrooms that is appropriate for size of such family, the agency provides the family with a dwelling unit that is located within the same neighborhood as the building containing the inappropriately sized dwelling unit.

SEC. 408. EXTENSION OF PROJECT-BASED SECTION 8 CONTRACT RENEWALS.

(a) RENEWAL OF EXPIRING PROJECT-BASED SECTION 8 CONTRACTS.—Section 524 of the Multifamily Assisted Housing Reform and Affordability Act of 1997 (42 U.S.C. 1437f note) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(4)(A)(iv)—

(A) in subclause (I), by inserting "or" after the semicolon;

(B) by striking subclause (II); and

(C) by redesignating subclause (III) as subclause (II); and

(2) by striking paragraph (3) of subsection (b).

(b) ADJUSTMENTS FOR COVERED PROJECTS.—

(1) RENT DETERMINATION AT INITIAL RENEWAL AFTER ENACTMENT.—Upon the first request for renewal of project-based assistance pursuant to section 524 after the date of enactment of this Act by an owner of a covered housing project—

(A) the rent levels at which assistance will be provided pursuant to such renewal will be determined as if such renewal were the initial renewal of a contract for assistance under section 524, as amended by subsection (a) of this section; and

(B) solely for purposes of determining the rent levels at which assistance will be provided pursuant to such first renewal after the date of enactment of this Act, in the case of a project for which contract rents were reduced on a prior renewal of an expiring contract pursuant to subsection (b)(3) of section 524, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act, the contract rent levels in effect immediately prior to such first renewal after the date of enactment of this Act shall be considered to be the deemed rent levels described in paragraph (3)(C).

(2) RENT ADJUSTMENTS AFTER INITIAL RENEWAL AFTER ENACTMENT.—After the first renewal of a contract for assistance of a covered project after the date of enactment of this Act in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall adjust rents in accordance with section 524(c).

(3) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection—

(A) references to "section 524" or any subdivision thereof are references to section 524 of the Multifamily Assisted Housing Reform and Affordability Act of 1997 (42 U.S.C. 1437f note);

(B) the term "covered housing project" means a project that receives project-based assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f) which was renewed prior to the date of enactment of this Act pursuant to subsection (b)(3) of section 524, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act;

(C) the term "deemed rent levels" means the contract rent levels in effect immediately prior to the first renewal of assistance pursuant to subsection (b)(3) of section 524, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act, upon which contract rent levels were reduced, as adjusted by the applicable operating cost adjustment factor established by the Secretary at the date of such renewal and at the date of any subsequent renewal pursuant to subsection (b)(3) of section 524 occurring before the date of enactment of this Act; and

(D) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

SEC. 409. INSPECTION OF UNITS.

Section 8(o)(8) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(8)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking "(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (11)," and inserting the following:

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii) and paragraph (11),"; and

(B) by inserting at the end the following:

"(ii) EXCEPTION.—A public housing agency may commence payments to an owner, if the public housing agency—

"(I) has conducted an inspection of the building, which includes an inspection of a reasonable number of units in the 6 months prior to the date on which payment is made to the owner, and that inspection and any subsequent unit inspections have not turned up major deficiencies;

"(II) conducts an inspection of the unit for which the payment is being made not later than 30 days after the date for which payment is made to the owner; and

"(III) has an agreement with the owner to correct any deficiencies and make any repairs in the unit not later than 30 days after the date on which the inspection was made under subclause (II).."; and

(2) in subparagraph (D)—

(A) by striking "(D) ANNUAL INSPECTIONS.—Each" and inserting the following:

"(D) ANNUAL INSPECTIONS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), each"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

"(ii) EXCEPTION.—If a public housing agency has a large jurisdiction and is conducting inspections on a geographical basis, the public housing agency may comply with the annual inspection requirement by inspecting the unit within 9 to 15 months of the previous inspection.".

SEC. 410. ESCROW OF TENANT RENT IN CASES OF OWNER FAILURE TO MAINTAIN UNIT.

Section 8(o)(8) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(8)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(F) ESCROW OF TENANT RENT IN CASES OF OWNER FAILURE TO MAINTAIN UNIT.—Each housing assistance payment contract under this subsection shall provide as follows:

"(i) REQUIREMENT.—In any case in which a public housing agency suspends assistance payments under this subsection with respect to a dwelling unit because of a failure on the part of the owner of the unit to maintain the unit in compliance with the housing quality standards established pursuant to this paragraph, the agency shall—

"(I) require the tenant to suspend payment to the owner of the tenant's monthly contribution toward rent and require the tenant to pay such amount into an escrow account established by the agency; and

"(II) notify the tenant and the owner of the failure to maintain the unit in compliance with such housing quality standards and of the actions required under this subparagraph.

"(ii) CORRECTION OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the owner corrects the noncompliance within the period of time established by the agency for such purpose, the public housing agency shall release to the owner any tenant payments toward rent deposited in the escrow account.

"(iii) FAILURE TO CORRECT NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the owner fails to correct the noncompliance within the period of time established by the agency and the tenant moves from the dwelling unit because of such noncompliance, the public housing agency shall make the any tenant payments toward rent that are deposited in the escrow account available on behalf of the tenant upon such move for costs of the move and for rental of a new dwelling unit.".

SEC. 411. PROJECT-BASED VOUCHERS MODIFICATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8(o)(13) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(13)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (C)(ii), by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", revitalizing a low-income community, or preventing the displacement of extremely low-income families";

(2) in subparagraph (D)(ii), by striking "apply in the case of" and all that follows through the period and inserting the following: "apply—

"(I) in the case of assistance under a contract for housing consisting of single family properties (buildings with 1 to 4 units);

"(II) for dwelling units that are specifically made available for households comprised of elderly families or disabled families; or

"(III) outside of a qualified census tract, for buildings with 5 to 25 units or with dwelling units that are specifically made available for families receiving supportive services.

For purposes of this clause, the term 'qualified census tract' has the same meaning given that term in section 42(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 42(d)). The Secretary may waive the limitations of this clause, consistent with the obligation to affirmatively further fair housing practices.";

(3) in subparagraph (F), by striking "10 years" and inserting "15 years";

(4) in subparagraph (J)—

(A) in the first sentence, by inserting before the period the following: ", or from 1 or more separate project-based waiting lists established housing shall include limited equity cooperative housing, as such term is defined in section 143(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C 143(k)).

"(B) USE FOR RENTAL HOUSING OR HOMEOWNERSHIP FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES.—25 percent of such amounts shall be distributed for use only for eligible activities relating to qualified affordable housing that is available for rental by low-income families in the jurisdiction served by the affordable housing trust fund, or for homeownership assistance for low-income families in such jurisdiction. Such rental housing and homes for homeownership shall include housing of a cooperative housing corporation, as such term as defined in section 216(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 216(b)).

"(2) OPERATING ASSISTANCE FOR NONPROFIT HOUSING DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATIONS.—An affordable housing trust fund that receives a grant under this section may use not more than 5 percent of such grant amounts to provide assistance to nonprofit organizations involved in the development, rehabilitation, or preservation of affordable rental housing for payment of operating costs of such organizations.

and maintained in accordance with subparagraph (K). A public housing agency may permit an owner to select families from a waiting list for units assisted under this paragraph maintained by the owner in accordance with subparagraph (L). Regardless of whether a waiting list is maintained under this subparagraph or under subparagraph (K) or (L), families shall initially be selected from the public housing agency's waiting list for assistance under this subsection for at least ½ of the vacant units in a building made available with assistance under this paragraph, unless the units are restricted, under the tenant selection preferences adopted under the annual plan submitted by the public housing agency to the Secretary pursuant to section 5A(b), to occupancy by persons who are receiving intensive publicly funded services and who have a disability, as defined in section 3 of this Act or section 422 of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act";

(B) in the fifth sentence, by inserting before the period the following: ", unless the owner maintains a waiting list under subparagraph (L)"; and

(C) in the last sentence, by striking "and may maintain" and all that follows through "on the separate list";

(5) by redesignating subparagraph (K) as subparagraph (M); and

(6) by inserting after subparagraph (J) the following:

"(K) PUBLIC HOUSING AGENCY WAITING LIST.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—A public housing agency may select families for assistance—

"(I) under subparagraph (J);

"(II) under this subparagraph for each property that receives assistance under this paragraph; or

"(III) under this subparagraph for similar properties that receive assistance under this paragraph.

"(ii) REQUIREMENTS.—A public housing agency that maintains a separate waiting list under this subparagraph—

"(I) shall provide notice of the opening of the waiting list in the same manner required by the Secretary for the provision of notice of the opening of the waiting list for tenant-based assistance under this subsection, except that this subclause shall not apply to units assisted under this paragraph that are restricted, under tenant selection preferences adopted under the annual plan submitted by the public housing agency to the Secretary pursuant to section 5A(b) to occupancy by persons who are receiving intensive publicly funded services and who have a disability, as defined in section 3 of this Act or section 422 of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act;

"(II) shall give preference to families on its tenant-based waiting list, if families are applying at the equivalent time and date with otherwise equivalent preference under the annual plan submitted by the public housing agency to the Secretary pursuant to section 5A(b); and

"(III) shall notify families that are applying for tenant-based assistance of the opportunity to be listed on the waiting list maintained under this subparagraph.

"(L) OWNER WAITING LIST.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—A public housing agency may allow an owner of a structure with a contract for assistance under this paragraph to maintain a waiting list for units assisted under this paragraph.

"(ii) AGENCY PLAN.—The policy for a waiting list maintained under this subparagraph and any applicable preferences or selection criteria shall be included in the annual plan submitted by the public housing agency to the Secretary in accordance with section 5A(b).

"(iii) AGENCY RESPONSIBILITIES.—If a waiting list is maintained under this subparagraph, the public housing agency shall—

"(I) provide notice of the opening of the waiting list in the same manner and to the same extent as is required of the agency under subparagraph (K)(ii)(I);

"(II) notify families that apply for tenant-based assistance of the opportunity to be listed on that waiting list;

"(III) establish a mechanism to transmit applications submitted at its office to the owner for placement on that waiting list; and

"(IV) monitor, at reasonable intervals, the compliance by the owner with laws applicable to tenant selection and waiting lists, including civil rights laws, regulations, and certifications.

"(iv) OWNER RESPONSIBILITIES.—If a waiting list is maintained under this subparagraph, the owner of the structure shall—

"(I) provide notice of the opening of the waiting list (unless the public housing agency agrees to provide such notice for the owner, or notice is not required pursuant to clause (iii)(I)) and provide preference to families on the tenant-based waiting list of the public housing agency in the same manner as is required under subparagraph (K);

"(II) place on its waiting list, families that apply at an office of the agency that accepts applications for tenant-based assistance;

"(III) cooperate with requests of the public housing agency for information concerning the waiting list and the tenant selection decisions of the owner; and

"(IV) submit written tenant selection policies and criteria to the public housing agency for approval, and make those policies and criteria available to the public.

"(v) RIGHT TO INFORMAL REVIEW.—A family that is denied a unit by an owner that maintains a waiting list under this subparagraph shall have the same rights to informal review by a public housing agency as a family that is denied tenant-based assistance by a public housing agency, and such review shall be performed expeditiously so as not to impede the timely rental of units. The public housing agency's review at the informal hearing shall be limited to determining if the owner, if denying admission, followed applicable law and the procedures and criteria adopted by the owner and approved by the public housing agency for determining the eligibility of applicants for admission.

"(vi) APPLICABILITY.—Except as provided in this subparagraph, a waiting list maintained by an owner shall be considered to be a waiting list maintained by a public housing agency for assistance under this subsection.

"(vii) LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.—No right of action shall exist against a public housing agency with respect to an owner's violation of any applicable law, unless the agency has actual knowledge that such violation has occurred or is occurring and—

"(I) the agency has failed to take action to cause the owner to cease such violation; or

"(II) the public housing agency has failed to comply with its responsibilities under clause (iii)."; and

(7) by adding at the end the following:

"(N) FAIR HOUSING, SUBSIDY LAYERING, AND COMPETITIVE SELECTION REQUIREMENTS.—A public housing agency may attach assistance under this paragraph to units without specific approval by the Secretary of compliance with fair housing, subsidy layering, or competitive selection requirements, if—

"(i) for fair housing compliance, the units proposed to receive assistance under this paragraph receive a grant or a loan under a Federal program pursuant to which the Secretary, or a designee of the Secretary, has determined in accordance with regulations that the site location would meet applicable civil rights and fair housing requirements;

"(ii) for compliance with subsidy layering requirements, consistent with the written policy of the Secretary, the public housing agency or another public agency has determined that addition of subsidies under this paragraph would not duplicate other public funding; or

"(iii) for compliance with competitive selection requirements, an advertisement for capital funds announced the potential for availability of assistance under this paragraph.

"(O) USE OF ASSISTANCE IN CONJUNCTION WITH PUBLIC HOUSING CAPITAL FUNDS.—

"(i) CAPITAL FUND AND HOPE VI.—Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in this Act, a public housing agency may attach assistance under this paragraph to a structure or unit that receives assistance allocated to the public housing agency under the Capital Fund, established by section 9(d), or under section 24.

"(ii) OPERATING FUND.—A unit that receives assistance under this paragraph shall not be eligible for assistance under the Operating Fund established by section 9(e).".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—This section and the amendments made by this section shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act (with such minor exceptions as the Secretary may specify).

(2) RULES.—The Secretary shall promulgate rules, as may be necessary, to carry out section 8(o)(13) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(o)(13)), as amended by this Act, and shall publish—

(A) proposed rules not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) final rules not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 412. EXPANDED USE OF ENHANCED VOUCHERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8(t) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437f(t)), as amended by the preceding provisions of this title, is further amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking "Enhanced" and inserting "Except as provided in paragraph (2), enhanced"; and

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

Subject: FYI - Motion to instruct terrorism insurance conferees on judgments from frozen assets of terrorists

The House voted yesterday (373-0) to agree to a Fossella motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3210 to agree to sec. 11 of the Senate amendment relating to satisfaction of judgments from frozen assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terrorism. The first document is the floor debate and the second document is the amendment they are discussing.

Just an FYI.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 3210, TERRORISM RISK PROTECTION ACT -- (House of Representatives - September 10, 2002)

[Page: H6133]

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees on the bill (H.R. 3210) to ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. Biggert). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOSSELLA moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill H.R. 3210 be instructed to agree to the provisions contained in section 11 of the Senate amendment, relating to satisfaction of judgments from frozen assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terrorism.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under rule XXII, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Watt) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3210.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, as we all know, tomorrow marks the first anniversary of the greatest attack on the soil of the United States of America. In that attack, both at the Pentagon in Virginia, in Pennsylvania, and in downtown Manhattan, the Nation lost thousands of innocent human lives.

Since then I think our Nation has been on full alert and in the field combating the war on terrorism, seeking out those evil ones who committed those dastardly acts, so we can holds terrorists accountable for their crimes against Americans. It is a great idea. I applaud the gentleman from New York and all of the people who picked it up and ran with it.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

At the outset, let me really thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Watt). We really would not be here but for his efforts, his ideas, his support, and his leadership. And the victims of terrorism owe thanks to the gentleman from North Carolina as well as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. Sensenbrenner), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Oxley), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Baker), the gentleman from New York (Mr. Grucci), and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. Cannon), who really brought us here today.

And underscore what we have all said, and I am not going to repeat it, but every day and especially tomorrow, September 11, 2002, we honor the heroes and the victims who perished last year, our fellow American citizens, those who just want an ordinary way of life, a peaceful life, who sought to raise a family in this great Nation, who sought to do a job and do it right, and those valiant heroes from EMS and the police department and the port authority and especially the firefighters, 78 of whom were from Staten Island alone, and names like Egan and Olsen and Curatola and Esposito and Siller and Leahy and Doyle, and tragically thousands of others. They are names, yes, but they are families. They have left behind children, they have left behind wives, husbands, parents, and grandparents, and what they were seeking is all what I think we are all about, the right to live in freedom with liberty and in peace, and that was robbed from them. That was robbed from them. It was robbed from their families. And, yes, we are a stronger and better country, and we are fortunate to have brave men and women to wear the uniform to go get those people, wherever they may be across the globe, with the commander in chief, President Bush, leading the way.

But at the same time, I think it is unbelievable that these families down the road, in the event that they will obtain a judgment, would have to come back to Congress or to their own government to petition against a terrorist organization or a state that sponsors terrorism to recover some of those assets.

We should not be here next year or 10 years from now debating this. We should end the subject right now, put it to a close, and bring justice to those victims who suffer today and will be suffering for a long time. But at least this Congress is speaking with one voice and saying that we are going to right that wrong and provide equity for all.

- [Begin Insert]

Mr. SHAYS. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the motion offered by the gentleman from New York and the gentlemen from North Carolina.

Now and then, a proposal comes before Congress that makes such good sense, it's a wonder no one though of it sooner. We have just such a proposal before us today.

Under Section 11 of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act, Americans who are victims of cowardly terrorist acts will get the justice they deserve--not just an IOU.

Allowing victims to enforce judgments against terrorists and state sponsors of terrorism will serve two vital purposes. First, it will compensate the victims of terrorism and their families. These brave men and women have suffered unimaginable losses, and they shouldn't have to worry about whether the State Department will release frozen terrorist assets in the event they prevail in a lawsuit and be awarded funds.

Second, this provision will cut financing for terrorism off at the knees. The assets of terrorist states shouldn't simply be frozen--they should be seized. That's what we're doing here today.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank Chairman MIKE OXLEY for his commitment to this legislation, and urge all of my colleagues to vote for this common-sense motion to instruct.

- [End Insert]

Mr. FOSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. Biggert). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

ensure that we can keep the peace for future generations. But at the same time, we need to get at the heart of these terrorist organizations in those states that sponsor terrorism.

Believe it or not, if an American citizen seeks a judgment in a court of law and is successful against some of these terrorist organizations or states that sponsor terrorism, and assets are frozen by the United States Government, some of those victims who are successful in a court of law may not and indeed are not recovering those assets.

It is a little ironic that American citizens can sue their neighbor for a mild act, obtain a judgment and recover, and yet we cannot sue a terrorist organization that killed people, and in this case thousands, and not recover unless the Federal Government on a petition or a case-by-case basis determines that those successful plaintiffs should recover. This motion to instruct will attempt to right that wrong.

Under current law, Americans who have been victimized by terrorist and state-subsidized terrorism and are eligible to enforce court judgments against the assets of a terrorist state have had to wait until Congress acts before they can receive their awarded funds. Some victims have gotten compensated, and many have not. As I mentioned today, thousands of Americans and their families are considering and have joined the class action lawsuit aimed at recovering and undermining the ability of these groups to perpetuate their acts of evil.

American victims of international terrorism will all have equal access to the courts and to block assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terror as a small but important token of justice. We impose immediate financial costs on terrorists and states that sponsor terrorism, freezing assets for 20 years or 25 years or 30 years or even 5 years, and then giving them back to the terrorist state does not impose such costs, and that seems to be the policy today, dangling this carrot before these evildoers as if they are going to stop their evil ways.

At present, terrorism is a cheap way to pursue war against Americans. Unless America finds ways to make it more costly, terrorists and those states that sponsor terrorism have no economic incentive to stop. By imposing a direct and immediate cost, this provision represents one effective financial tool, one of many, against terrorists and those who help them, and this will seek to help the victims.

Finally, terrorist-sponsored states will no longer be able to use their diplomatic and intelligence agencies to support terrorists with financial impunity. In other words, hiding behind this veil of diplomatic or intelligence immunity, something that is too often abused and flies in the face of justice.

Terrorism-sponsoring states use those wholly owned and controlled agencies and instrumentalities to raise, to launder, and to distribute funds to terrorist cells, sometimes even in the United States of America. Ironically, these agencies and instrumentalities can claim foreign sovereign immunity against victims in U.S. courts because of their relationship with the terrorist-sponsoring states.

By exposing these agencies and instrumentalities to liability, the U.S. further increases the cost of sponsoring terrorism, and goes after the sources of funding for these organizations and cells.

Madam Speaker, tragically and regrettably, I lost a lot of friends and a lot of neighbors; and America lost a lot of friends and a lot of neighbors and brothers and sisters, more than 200 people from Staten Island and almost another 100 from the Brooklyn portion of my district. Those families right now are suffering the shock of it, the shock of losing a father or a mother or a sister or brother or uncle or aunt, and tomorrow marks the anniversary.

The notion that while brave men and women are fighting the war overseas in seeking out these terrorists and those who help them and harbor them and finance them because they are thinking of doing it again, the notion that this government, our government, could prevent my neighbors and friends one day, if successful in a court of law in obtaining judgment, to be unable to recover assets of a terrorist organization or a state that sponsors terrorism to me is the most unjust thing in this Nation.

Madam Speaker, I urge all Members to support this motion to instruct, to be compatible with the other body and bring justice to these families, these victims of terrorism.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I applaud the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) for bringing this motion to instruct forward and pursuing a very good idea. I see that the gentleman has a number of speakers, so I am going to reserve my comments until some of his speakers can proceed.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. Cannon), a man who deserves much, if not all, of the credit for bringing this to the floor today.

Mr. CANNON. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) for moving this issue today and giving me an opportunity to speak.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3210, the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, which provides for continued availability of insurance against terrorism risks and addresses multiple insurance and liability issues arising from the September 11 attacks.

The Senate passed a similar version overwhelmingly supported by the House, and this motion will allow the House to show its support for the issue with a vote to instruct conferees. I would like to talk particularly about what I think is one of the most important issues in that bill which fell within the Committee on the Judiciary's jurisdiction.

Under current law, Americans who have been victimized by state-subsidized terrorism and are eligible to enforce court judgments against the assets of a terrorist state have had to wait for Congress to act before they could collect their awarded funds. Some victims have gotten compensated. However, most have not.

Under the Fossella-Cannon language in section 15(e) of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act passed by the House, American victims of international terrorism will have equal access to the courts and to blocked assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terror as a small but important token of justice.

This language imposes immediate financial costs on the states that sponsor terrorism. Freezing assets for 20 years and then giving them back to the terrorist states does not impose such costs. At present, terrorism is a cheap way to pursue war against Americans. Unless the U.S. finds ways to make it more costly, terrorists and states which sponsor terrorism have less economic incentive to stop. By imposing a direct and immediate cost, this language represents one effective financial tool against terrorists and also helps their victims.

After the Senate pulled the language from their version of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and I introduced a stand-alone bill to ensure a solution to this problem. However, language identical to the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and me was added to the Senate bill on the floor by a vote of 81-3. With this provision now included in both the Senate and the House version of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, there is no reason why we should not be able to preserve the express will of both houses in conference by maintaining this language.

Madam Speaker, there are many people who would benefit from this, and with recent attacks on the World Trade Center, there are many from the district of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) which this legislation would directly affect.

[Time: 10:30]

Others affected by it include people like Terry Anderson and other former hostages held by Hezbollah who successfully sued and won judgments against Iran but have not been able to collect from the seized assets. The provision in this bill today will allow access to the frozen assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations and terrorist-sponsored states, and American victims of international terrorism who obtain judgments against those terrorists.

I would like to once again thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman

OXLEY); the gentleman from Wisconsin (Chairman SENSENBRENNER); my colleague and friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella); and my colleague and friend, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Watt), for their efforts on this issue.

I urge my colleagues to support the motion to instruct conferees. Allowing victims to go directly after the frozen assets of terrorists and their sponsors will help us to allow our Nation and economy to go forward.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, again I would like to thank the gentleman from Utah for his leadership.

Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Grucci).

Mr. GRUCCI. Madam Speaker, I thank my colleagues, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Watt), for their leadership on this. I would like to thank our chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Oxley), for his guidance and leadership on the Committee on Financial Services for bringing many pieces of legislation to reality that will help us to not only track the assets, to track the money of terrorists, but now, with this piece of legislation, hopefully we will be able to access that for the victims.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3210, in an attempt to locate the assets, to seize the assets, and to deliver them back to the victims of terrorists, terrorist nations, et cetera.

Tomorrow we will stand around and we will be in solemn prayer in some places, we will be at services at other places, and remember the tragic attacks on America of almost a year ago. Many of us have borne the pain of seeing families torn apart by this terrible, terrible tragedy. I myself have had over 70 families in my district torn apart. Two of them I knew personally.

It is a terrible ordeal for the families, not only to lose the ones they love, but then to face the uncertainty of what is going to happen to them economically. Their financial needs have all been torn apart. Their communities are reaching out to them, but they still do not have the strength of knowing what they have to go forward with.

Hopefully, if we can get this legislation moving forward, if we can move this piece of legislation forward, hopefully we can bring some peace to their minds, knowing that they will have access to not only the love and the compassion that has been contributed from

Americans, but also they will be able to punish the terrorists even more by seizing their assets, seizing their money, which in turn will slow down their operations.

Madam Speaker, I could not be more in support of this legislation. Once again, I thank my colleagues for their leadership on this.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Oxley), chairman of the Committee on Financial Services, one who has been leading this effort, both before and after September 11, in tracking down the assets of terrorists and states that sponsor terrorism.

(Mr. OXLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, let me first recognize the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Watt) for their leadership on this very, very important issue.

The whole concept of taking terrorist assets that have been seized and compensating victims seems so elemental to our system of justice that it has clearly been one that has been incorporated in this legislation, both in the House and in the Senate; and I would say without the leadership of these two gentlemen, we would not be here today.

As we know, the House passed our version of the terrorism insurance legislation back last year. The Senate finally moved in June. We just appointed conferees right before the August recess. We are ready to go to work on this side.

I will say I have had some discussions with participants from the other body. They seem ready and prepared to move forward. There is no reason why we cannot get this legislation, this conference committee work, completed and on the President's desk as quickly as possible, I would hope certainly by the end of September. That is not an unrealistic possibility.

I just saw a study the other day that the amount of construction sites that are standing idle and the amount of money in those construction sites now is over $10.5 billion. That is an awful lot of jobs that we are losing as a result of this. Somebody once predicted without terrorism insurance we could have a loss of 1 percent of our Gross Domestic Product off the growth numbers. That is an awful lot of jobs, an awful lot of economic activity.

So, Madam Speaker, let us dedicate ourselves today to first passing this excellent motion to instruct conferees. I want to assure both gentlemen that my main task over the next few weeks will be to bring this conference report to the floor of the House and get it signed by the President.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Baker), who again has been at the forefront and working closely with all of us to bring the terrorists to their heels.

Mr. BAKER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time and wish to express my appreciation to both the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) for their leadership on this important issue.

Madam Speaker, in this country when we find someone engaged in the sale of drugs to minors, we think it is such a terrible offense that we not only give them jail time when convicted, we seize all their assets. We take the car from which the material was hauled; we take anything we can find related to that activity.

How more appropriate when some state-sponsored activity takes the life of or tortures innocent individuals for no apparent reason, that we should go after not only those who commit the acts of terror, those who engage in it, but their assets as well?

The United States Government has seized millions of dollars of assets that could be made available to the victims of these heinous acts, but the Congress must act.

So I commend these individuals for taking the leadership in bringing forth this motion to instruct, which will, in some small way, bring relief to those who have been gravely harmed, and, more importantly, send a very strong message to those who engage in acts of terror: when you engage in these acts, there will be a very high price to pay. Money is not enough. We need more.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I want to express my thanks again to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella), to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Grucci), to the chairman of the Committee on Financial Services, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Oxley), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Baker), and to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. Cannon), all of whom have viewed this issue as being important enough to come and support this motion to instruct conferees.

I am personally not a big proponent of motions to instruct conferees, because our experience has shown that when we instruct the conferees, they seldom pay much attention to what we are instructing them to do anyway. They kind of have minds of their own. But this seems to me to be one of those situations where there is a growing sense of unanimity that this is a good idea; and I want to thank my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella), for picking up the idea and running with it.

Let me kind of trace the history of how we got here so that my colleagues will understand it. There have been several kinds of odd references to me as one of the moving forces in this. My colleagues should know that this was an idea that I originated in a very crude amendment which I offered to the terrorism bill when it was being considered a year or so ago in the Committee on Financial Services.

I had two objectives in offering the crudely drawn, quickly drawn amendment to that bill. One of those was the obvious kind of frustration and feeling of helplessness that all of us had in the aftermath of the events of September 11 and the feeling that, as the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) said, this was a pretty elementary notion, that if the Federal Government was going to freeze assets of terrorists and terrorist groups, that it should not necessarily be the Federal Government that benefited from freezing those assets, but that those assets ultimately should be available to the individuals whose lives had been taken, the families of those individuals and the individuals who had been injured by acts of terrorism.

So the first reason that I had was just a sense of frustration and wanting to do something in response to the acts of September 11 and to other acts of terrorism.

The second rationale I had, really I have to reveal to my colleagues in honesty, was kind of to make a point, because when we were debating the terrorism reinsurance bill, one of the issues that came up in the committee was whether we would do some kind of tort reform in the context of the terrorism reinsurance bill.

I was frustrated by the notion that my colleagues would take a terrorism reinsurance bill and inject a highly political issue of tort reform in that bill, and I wanted to try to demonstrate to my colleagues how unreasonable I thought this whole concept of tort reform was. I thought the best way to do that was to point out to them that if they did tort reform, they would be capping as part of that tort reform the recoveries that individual citizens could obtain for acts of terrorism.

I could not imagine that my colleagues would want to put an arbitrary cap of $250,000 in punitive damages, or any kind of arbitrary cap, on the recovery by the family of a constituent of mine who had been killed in the violence on the U.S.S. Cole. My constituent, Lakeina Francis, who had lost her life, her family was there in North Carolina, and my colleagues were playing politics with this bill. I thought that one of the ways I could illustrate to them that what they were doing was unreasonable was to offer this amendment in the context of that terrorism reinsurance bill, and I did.

Of course, as I thought, it did put my colleagues who were supporting tort reform in a pretty tough position. They finally started to understand that these arbitrary caps that they were talking about in this bill did not make sense when somebody gets blown up, or when somebody gets injured by extreme negligence of another party. My colleagues thought this was a good idea, and they adopted this amendment in the terrorism reinsurance bill. They adopted my amendment to the bill.

Well, I conceded at the outset that this was a crude effort, an effort that started to build steam right there in the committee. After the committee markup and the passage of the House terrorism reinsurance bill, I am happy to say that the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. Cannon) picked up on this idea and introduced a free-standing bill that was much, much better than the crude language that I had offered in the committee; and when the bill was considered in the Senate, the Senators put the language in the bill which was much better than I had introduced in the Committee on Financial Services and much better even than the free-standing bill that the gentleman from New York (Mr. Fossella) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. Cannon) introduced, which is why we are here with the motion to instruct conferees, to leave the provision in the bill.

[Time: 10:45]

That is how we got here. This is a great idea. Not because I started with the idea but just because of what the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Oxley) said, the chairman of the Committee on Financial Services, this is so elemental. Why would we freeze the assets of a terrorist group, a terrorist country, terrorist, and not make those assets available to satisfy a judgment that an individual who has been injured or the family of an individual who has been killed in a terrorist attack, why would we freeze the assets if we were not doing it for this honorable purpose?

So I just think this is something whose time has come. I do not think it is going to be controversial. The U.S. Treasury has blocked over $3 billion from organizations or countries designated as terrorists or state sponsors of terrorism. Blocking this money may cripple these organizations and these terrorist states, but it does little to assist the victims of their terrorist acts unless we put this provision in the bill. The bill allows Americans who have suffered as a result of terrorist acts to receive compensation from these blocked assets. Compensating victims will not end terrorism as we know it, but it does raise the price, and it sends a message to terrorist organizations and the states that sponsor them, we will not stand for the murder of innocent Americans. Those who target Americans will be punished and not only will you be punished criminally, you will be punished financially as a result of this language. Using terrorists' assets to compensate victims punishes terrorists and deters future acts of violence, hopefully; maybe, may not, but whether it does or does not, we want them to pay for what they have done. Terrorist states and organizations should not go unpunished for murdering innocent Americans.

Just this past summer, five Americans were murdered in the cafeteria at Hebrew University, and the organization that claims responsibility for that has funds blocked by the U.S. Treasury. Those people ought to have access to those funds and be able to get to them.

The gentleman from New York's bill is fair. It gives all American victims of terrorism an opportunity to receive compensation from terrorist assets, and I urge my colleagues to retain this important provision in the final version of the terrorism insurance bill. By doing so, we demonstrate our commitment to the victim of terrorist acts and show our resolve to punish those states and organizations that sponsor terrorism. This language

H.R.3210 - Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 (Engrossed Amendment as Agreed to by Senate)

SEC. 11. SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENTS FROM FROZEN ASSETS OF TERRORISTS, TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS, AND STATE SPONSORS OF TERRORISM.

(a) IN GENERAL- Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and except as provided in subsection (b), in every case in which a person has obtained a judgment against a terrorist party on a claim based upon an act of terrorism or for which a terrorist party is not immune under section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code, the blocked assets of that terrorist party (including the blocked assets of any agency or instrumentality of that terrorist party) shall be subject to execution or attachment in aid of execution in order to satisfy such judgment to the extent of any compensatory damages for which such terrorist party has been adjudged liable.

(b) PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER-

(1) IN GENERAL- Subject to paragraph (2), upon determining on an asset-by-asset basis that a waiver is necessary in the national security interest, the President may waive the requirements of subsection (a) in connection with (and prior to the enforcement of) any judicial order directing attachment in aid of execution or execution against any property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(2) EXCEPTION- A waiver under this subsection shall not apply to--

(A) property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that has been used by the United States for any nondiplomatic purpose (including use as rental property), or the proceeds of such use; or

(B) the proceeds of any sale or transfer for value to a third party of any asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR CASES AGAINST IRAN- Section 2002 of the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000 (Public Law 106-386; 114 Stat. 1542) is amended--

(1) in subsection (a)(2)(A)(ii), by inserting after `July 27, 2000' the following: `or before October 28, 2000,';

(2) in subsection (b)(2)(B), by inserting after `the date of enactment of this Act' the following: `(less amounts therein as to which the United States has an interest in subrogation pursuant to subsection (c) arising prior to the date of entry of the judgment or judgments to be satisfied in whole or in part hereunder).';

(3) by redesignating subsections (d), (e), and (f) as subsections (e), (f), and (g), respectively; and

(4) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection (d):

`(d) DISTRIBUTION OF FOREIGN MILITARY SALES FUNDS INADEQUATE TO SATISFY FULL AMOUNT OF COMPENSATORY AWARDS AGAINST IRAN-

`(1)(A) In the event that the Secretary determines that the amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) are inadequate to pay the entire amount of compensatory damages awarded in judgments issued as of the date of the enactment of this subsection in cases identified in subsection (a)(2)(A), the Secretary shall, not later than 60 days after such date, make payment from the account specified in subsection (b)(2) to each party to which such judgment has been issued a share of the amounts in that account which are not subject to subrogation to the United States under this Act.

`(B) The amount so paid to each such person shall be calculated by the proportion that the amount of compensatory damages awarded in a judgment issued to that particular person bears to the total amount of all compensatory damages awarded to all persons to whom judgments have been issued in cases identified in subsection (a)(2)(A) as of the date referred to in subparagraph (A).

`(2) Nothing herein shall bar, or require delay in, enforcement of any judgment to which this subsection applies under any procedure or against assets otherwise available under this section or under any other provision of law.

`(3) Any person receiving less than the full amount of compensatory damages awarded to that party in judgments to which this subsection applies shall not be required to make the election set forth in subsection (a)(2)(C) in order to qualify for payment hereunder.'.

(d) DEFINITIONS- In this section:

(1) The term `terrorist party' means a terrorist, a terrorist organization, or a foreign state designated as a state sponsor of terrorism under section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)) or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371).

(2) The term `blocked asset' means any asset seized or frozen by the United States in accordance with law, or otherwise held by the United States without claim of ownership by the United States.

(3) The term `property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' and the term `asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' mean any property or asset, respectively, the attachment in aid of execution or execution of which would result in a violation of an obligation of the United States under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, as the case may be.

Comparison of H.R. 3210 and S. 2600 With Preferred Conference Resolution

	H.R. 3210 (Passed by House of Representatives 11/29/01)	S. 2600 (Passed by Senate 6/18/02)	Preferred Conference Resolution
PER COMPANY RETENTION	Where less than $1 billion of industry losses, 10% of net commercial premiums. §6(b)(2). See also §5(a)(2).	Based on each company's market share (direct written premiums for prior 2 years) times $10 billion in the first year and market share times $15 billion in the second year if the program is extended. Secretary may adjust market share to reflect current market participation. §3(7)	Per company retention should be based on "net," not "direct," written property and casualty insurance premiums during calendar year 2000 and 2001. The Secretary should have adjustment authority to assure equity. Define "net" premium as the premium amount written by a participating insurance company for primary property and casualty insurance less amount paid for reinsurance and define "primary property and casualty insurance" to include excess insurance and not include reinsurance. Clarify that per-company retention (or deductible) is an annual deductible, not a per event deductible (see definition of "Act of Terrorism," below). Authorize the Secretary to adjust market share to assure equity among participating insurance companies, including adjustments to take into account any relationship established by a participating insurance company for the purpose of affecting any participating insurance company's deductible under this Program.

For purposes of meeting individual company retention, trigger should be on a rolling, 12 month basis, not on a calendar basis.

	individual insurer assistance below industry trigger]. Financial assistance is repaid through assessments on all commercial insurers up to $20 billion of total assistance. §7(b). For financial assistance between $20 billion and the $100 billion cap, repayment is through a surcharge on all commercial policies. §8(a) For financial assistance to individual insurers when the $1 billion industry trigger has not been met, there must be industry-wide losses of at least $100 million, and the individual insurer must also have its losses exceed 10% of its capital surplus and 10% of its net commercial P&C premiums for prior year. §5(a)(2). Financial assistance above that trigger is for 90% of the insurer's losses above a retention of 10% of its premiums. §6(b)(2). The Treasury Department has plenary authority to vary assessments, based on a "national interest" determination [§9(c)], although the bill	losses are below $10 billion, the quota share is 80/20 (government/insurer) for any company that meets its retention. When aggregate industry losses exceed $10 billion, the quota share for the layer above $10 billion in losses is 90/10, up to a cap of $100 billion in losses for each period (from enactment through 2002 and through 2003 if the program is extended). §4(e)(1) Neither the government nor insurers are liable for payment of losses exceeding the $100 billion cap for each period. §4(e)(2) Prohibits federal compensation to cover losses paid by other federal insurance and reinsurance programs, the "Duplicative Compensation" programs. §4(e)(1)(D)	Clarify meaning and scope of "Duplicative Compensation" provision.

	contemplates rapid-repayment for lower levels of the financial assistance, keyed to a $5 billion number. §7(c)(2) Treasury has same plenary authority with regard to surcharges and, indeed, may determine not to impose any surcharge. §§8(a), 9(c). Cap on all financial assistance of $100 billion. §6(c)(1).
INSURER ASSESSMENTS	Up to $20 billion of financial assistance. §§8(a)(1), 7(b)(1). There are two types of assessments. The first is called an "industry obligation assessment," which is designed for rapid-repayment and is keyed to a $5 billion financial assistance number. §7(c). The second one is called a "financing assessment," which is an assessment above the "industry obligation," and is limited to 3% of an insurer's net commercial premiums. §7(d).	None	No assessments.

SURCHARGES	From $20 billion to $100 billion of financial assistance. §8(a).Treasury may waive surcharges, in whole or in part. §§8(a), 9(a). In any case, they are limited to 3% of commercial premium. §7(d)(3).	None	No surcharges.
GOVERNMENT / INSURER QUOTA SHARE	None	The quota share split depends on the amount of aggregate industry losses. If aggregate industry losses are below $10 billion, the quota share is 80/20 for any company that meets its retention. When aggregate industry losses exceed $10 billion, the quota share for the layer above $10 billion in losses is 90/10, up to a cap of $100 billion in losses for each period. §4(e)	S. 2600 approach Make certain the Treasury Secretary has true-up authority. Make certain that Treasury doesn't make individual claims payments.
IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEEMENTS	No provision [but see §10(b)].	For reinsurance contracts in force on enactment date, federal share otherwise payable to primary insurer must be shared with its reinsurer in same proportion as its losses would be shared with the reinsurer if the Program did not exist. §4(e)(6)	Language that works for both insurers and reinsurers.

LEGAL REFORM	Creates federal cause of action for claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from a terrorist event; eliminates punitive damages in such cases, except for terrorist defendants; for non-economic damages, "joint and several liability" is replaced with liability limited to proportional fault; and attorneys fees are capped at 20%. §15(a)	Creates federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism. §10(a) Any amounts awarded for punitive damages are not to be counted as insured losses under the bill. §10(c)	Defer to conferees.

"ACT OF TERRORISM" DEFINITION	Limited to international terrorism. Covers acts of war for workers' compensation. The definition is subject to revision, after consultation with the NAIC. §19(1). Requires that damage be within the US, except for US air carriers or flag vessels (or vessel based principally in the US where US income tax is paid and insurance coverage is subject to regulation in US), which are covered wherever geographically the damage occurs. §19(1)(b)(ii).	Limited to international terrorism. The bill covers any act of terrorism committed on behalf of any foreign agent or foreign interest where the damage from the event is in excess of $5 million and the event was not committed in the course of war declared by the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury has discretion, not subject to judicial review, to certify that an act of terrorism has occurred. Requires that damage be within the US except for US air carriers or vessels. Note: definition of "US" does not include territories, but does include territorial seas. §3(1)	"Act of terrorism" should include "acts of war" for workers' compensation purposes. Expand to cover domestic acts of terrorism; if that is not possible, give Treasury the regulatory authority to expand the definition. "Act of Terrorism" should include "act or acts of terrorism" to clarify that the per-company deductible – if there is one – is an annual deductible, not a per event deductible. Should include US government installations abroad (e.g. embassies and military bases). Should include US territories.
TERRORISM COVERAGE	No requirement to offer or include terrorism coverage in all policies (authority left with the states). §12(a); see also §13(a)(2).	A participating insurance company must "make available" terrorism coverage in all its participating lines "that does not differ materially from the terms, amounts, and other coverage limitations applicable to losses arising from events other than acts of terrorism." §4(c)	Prefer House approach. If Senate approach is adopted, clarify the intent of the "make available" language. Exclude notice of premium requirement if no premium is charged. Include actual notice language in the bill that insurers would use. Clarify that use of proposed notice language satisfies notice requirement. Provide for Treasury Secretary to promptly establish transition procedures for policyholder notification requirements, in order to prevent unworkable notice requirements.

TYPES OF INSURANCE INCLUDED	Commercial property and casualty lines. Excludes insurance for personal, family or household needs and professional liability. Also excludes life and health insurance. §§3, 19(4), 19(5).	Mandatory for commercial property and casualty lines; voluntary for personal property and casualty lines. Excludes crop insurance, private mortgage insurance, and financial guarantee insurance. §§3(10) and 4(c) The bill explicitly covers basic business interruption insurance, but only covers lost profits for those policyholders who fit within the Small Business Administration's definition of a small business. §3(2)	Add "surety insurance" to types of insurance covered and define "financial guaranty insurance" by reference to appropriate New York State law. No limitation on business interruption coverage. Allow personal lines to be covered on a voluntary basis.
TYPES OF INSURERS INCLUDED (INCLUDING SELF-INSURERS)	Any "legal entity that provides commercial property and casualty insurance" for persons or property in the US, also including domestic airplanes and ships outside the US. Includes affiliates. §§19(4), (5). Authorizes Secretary to ensure that it covers, "as appropriate," offshore and non-admitted entities. §10(b).	Includes those ''licensed or admitted to engage in the business of providing primary insurance in any state" that were licensed or admitted on September 11, 2001. Appears to exclude state funds that are not licensed. Includes affiliates. §3(6)	Should include all state funds and other residual market mechanisms, irrespective of whether they are actually licensed insurers. Add language clarifying that excess insurance is included as a type of primary insurance. In determining whether to authorize self insured entities in existence before Sept. 11 to participate in the Program, the Secretary must determine that

	The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, apply the Act to self-insurance arrangements by municipalities and other entities, but only if such application is determined before the occurrence of a triggering event, and if all of the provisions of the Act are applied uniformly to such entities. §10(a).	The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, apply the Act to self-insurance arrangements (in existence on 9/11/01) by municipalities and other entities, but only if such application is determined before the occurrence of a triggering event, and if all of the provisions of the Act are applied uniformly to such entities. §4(d)	participation is appropriate in light of market conditions and must establish deductibles for such entities equivalent to the deductibles of participating insurance companies. For self-insured entities and insurers created after September 11, conditions listed above should apply if Secretary determines that participation furthers the purposes of the Act.
PREEMPTION	Insurers authorized to include amounts necessary to cover the assessments in their commercial rates on a going-forward basis. State rate laws are preempted to the extent necessary. §12(b). Prior state review of rates and endorsements for terrorism coverage in commercial policies preempted, but not subsequent review and action. §12(c)	Preempts state law on definition of "act of terrorism." §7(2)(A) Through 2002, insurance rates for terrorism coverage would only be subject to state "file and use" laws, thus preventing the application of state prior approval laws and "waiting period" requirements. After this period, terrorism rates would be subject to state rating law. §7(2)(B) Insurers participating in the program would be required to make available to all their customers terrorism coverage that "does not differ materially from the terms, amounts and other coverage limitations"	Clear preemption of the definition of "Act of Terrorism." Rates and forms for terrorism risk insurance are not subject to prior review from the date of enactment to date of termination. State retains ability to invalidate rate as excessive, inadequate or unfairly discriminatory. Decision to invalidate rate subject to review by the Secretary. If Senate approach is adopted, clarify the mandatory "make available" language, in addition to exclusions included in the base policy (e.g., nuclear exclusions).

Note: Extending the duration of the Program is a critical provision to include. This markup does not extend the duration only because doing so would require numerous technical conforming changes that can be added later.

AN ACT

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $15,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the 1-year period beginning on the day after the date of expiration of the period described in subparagraph (A), if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6.

(8) PERSON- The term `person' means any individual, business or nonprofit entity (including those organized in the form of a partnership, limited liability company, corporation, or association), trust or estate, or a State or political subdivision of a State or other governmental unit.

(9) PRIMARY PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE – The term 'primary property and casualty insurance' means property and casualty insurance issued by a participating insurance company directly to an insured person and includes excess insurance; provided, however, that primary property and casualty insurance shall not include reinsurance.

(10) (~~9~~) PROGRAM- The term `Program' means the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program established by this Act.

(11) (~~10~~) PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE- The term `property and casualty insurance'-

(A) means commercial lines of property and casualty insurance, including workers' compensation insurance and surety insurance;

(B) includes personal lines of property and casualty insurance, if a notification is made in accordance with paragraph (6)(B); and

(C) does not include-

(i) Federal crop insurance issued or reinsured under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.);

(ii) private mortgage insurance, as that term is defined in section 2 of the Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (12 U.S.C. 4901); or

(iii) "financial guaranty insurance~~.~~" as defined at section 6901(a)(1) of the New York Financial Guaranty Insurance Law when issued by "financial guaranty insurance corporations," as defined at section 6901 (b) of the New York Financial Guaranty Insurance Law, and licensed as such corporations under the Laws of the State of New York.

(12) (~~11~~) SECRETARY- The term `Secretary' means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(13) (~~12~~) STATE- The term `State' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, Guam, and each of the United States Virgin Islands.

(14) (~~13~~) UNITED STATES- The term `United States' means the several States, territories, and possessions of the United States, and includes the territorial sea of the United States and United States government installations abroad.

(15) (~~14~~) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION FOR DATES- With respect to any reference to a date in this Act, such day shall be construed-

(A) to begin at 12:01 a.m. on that date; and
(B) to end at midnight on that date.

SEC. 4. TERRORISM INSURED LOSS SHARED COMPENSATION PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM-

(1) IN GENERAL- There is established in the Department of the Treasury the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program.

(2) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY- Notwithstanding any other provision of State or Federal law, the Secretary shall administer the Program, and shall pay the Federal share of compensation for insured losses in accordance with subsection (e).

(b) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS- No payment may be made by the Secretary under subsection (e), unless-

(1) a person that suffers an insured loss, or a person acting on behalf of that person, files a claim with a participating insurance company;

(2) the participating insurance company provides ~~clear and conspicuous~~ the disclosure required in section 5 (b)(8) to the policyholder, either separately or as a part of the policy ~~of the premium charged for insured losses covered by the Program and the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program~~-

(A) in the case of any policy covering an insured loss that is issued on or after the date of enactment of this Act~~, on a separate line item in the policy, at the time of offer, purchase, and renewal of the policy~~, as provided in the procedures established by the Secretary in section 4 (b)(5); and

(B) in the case of any policy that is issued before the date of enactment of this Act, ~~as a line item described in subparagraph (A),~~ not later than 90 days after that date of enactment;

(3) the participating insurance company processes the claim for the insured loss in accordance with its standard business practices, and any reasonable procedures that the Secretary may prescribe; ~~and~~

(4) the participating insurance company submits to the Secretary, in accordance with such reasonable procedures as the Secretary may establish-

(A) a claim for payment of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program;

(B) written verification and certification-

(i) of the underlying claim; and

(ii) of all payments made for insured losses; and

(C) certification of its compliance with the provisions of this subsection.; and

(5) The participating insurance company adheres to the Secretary's regulations and procedures, including transition procedures that the Secretary shall promptly establish adjusting the timing for required disclosures, based upon reasonable business practices.

(c) MANDATORY PARTICIPATION; MANDATORY AVAILABILITY- Each insurance company that meets the definition of a participating insurance company under section 3-

(1) shall participate in the Program;
(2) shall, as soon as reasonably practical, consistent with regulations or procedures

established and enforced by the Secretary, make available in all of its property and casualty insurance policies (in all of its participating lines), coverage for insured losses for the period of time covered by the Program~~; and~~

~~(3) shall make available property and casualty insurance coverage for insured losses~~ that does not differ materially from the terms, amounts, and other coverage limitations applicable to losses arising from events other than acts of terrorism.

(d) PARTICIPATION BY SELF INSURED ENTITIES-

(1) DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY- The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, establish procedures to allow participation in the Program by municipalities and other governmental or quasi-governmental entities (and by any other entity, as the Secretary deems appropriate) operating through self insurance arrangements that were in existence on September 11, 2001, but only if (i) the Secretary makes a determination with regard to participation by any such entity before the occurrence of an act of terrorism in which the entity incurs an insured loss, and (ii) the Secretary makes a determination that participation is appropriate in light of market conditions.

(2) PARTICIPATION- If the Secretary makes a determination to allow an entity described in paragraph (1) to participate in the Program, all reports, conditions, requirements, and standards established by this Act for participating insurance companies shall apply to any such entity, as determined to be appropriate by the Secretary. The Secretary shall establish deductibles for participating self-insured entities that are equivalent to the deductibles of participating insurers.

(e) PARTICIPATION BY ENTITIES ESTABLISHED AFTER SEPTEMBER 11, 2001 - The Secretary may allow self-insured entities and insurers established after September 11, 2001 to participate in the Program under the conditions set forth in subsection (d) and if the Secretary otherwise determines that participation furthers the purposes of this Act. This subsection shall not limit the participation of any affiliate of a participating insurance company.

(f) ~~e~~ Shared Insurance Loss Coverage-

(1) FEDERAL SHARE-

(A) IN GENERAL- Subject to the cap on liability under paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6), the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the 1-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act-

(i) shall be equal to 80 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that-

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company's deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) does not exceed $10,000,000,000; and

(ii) shall be equal to 90 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that-

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company's deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) exceeds $10,000,000,000.

(B) EXTENSION PERIOD- If the Program is extended in accordance with section 6, the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the 1-year period beginning on the day after the date of expiration of the period described in subparagraph (A), shall be calculated in accordance with clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), subject to the cap on liability in paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6).

(C) PRO RATA SHARE- If, during the period described in subparagraph (A) (or during the period described in subparagraph (B), if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6), the aggregate insured losses for that period exceed $10,000,000,000, the Secretary shall determine the pro rata share for each participating insurance company of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses calculated under subparagraph (A).

(D) PERIOD FOR DETERMINING WHETHER THE FEDERAL SHARE IS TRIGGERED- For purposes of determining whether a participating insurance company has met the deductible under this Program triggering the Federal share, insured losses from the date of any act of terrorism will be included, along with insured losses during the preceding 12 month period.

(E) ~~D~~ PROHIBITION ON DUPLICATIVE COMPENSATION- The Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program shall be reduced by the amount of compensation provided by the Federal Government for those insured losses under any other Federal insurance or reinsurance program.

(2) CAP ON ANNUAL LIABILITY- Notwithstanding paragraph (1), or any other provision of Federal or State law, if the aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 during any period referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1) –

(A) the Secretary shall not make any payment under this Act for any portion of the amount of such losses that exceeds $100,000,000,000; and

(B) participating insurance companies shall not be liable for the payment of any portion of the amount that exceeds $100,000,000,000.

(3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS- The Secretary shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 in any period described in paragraph (1), and the Congress shall determine the procedures for and the source of any such excess payments.

(4) FINAL NETTING- The Secretary shall have sole discretion to determine the time at which claims relating to any insured loss or act of terrorism shall become final.

(5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL- Any determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(6) IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS- For policies covered by reinsurance contracts in force on the date of enactment of this Act, until the in-force reinsurance contract is renewed, amended, or has reached its 1-year anniversary date, any Federal share of compensation due to a participating insurance company for insured losses during the effective period of the Program shall be shared—

(A) with all reinsurance companies to which the participating insurance company has ceded some share of the insured loss pursuant to an in-force reinsurance contract; and

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002'.

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds that--

(1) property and casualty insurance firms are important financial institutions, the products of which allow mutualization of risk and the efficient use of financial resources and enhance the ability of the economy to maintain stability, while responding to a variety of economic, political, environmental, and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

(2) the ability of businesses and individuals to obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to economic growth, urban development, and the construction and maintenance of public and private housing, as well as to the promotion of United States exports and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected world;

(3) the ability of the property and casualty insurance industry to cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by potential acts of terrorism in the United States can be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist attacks, while maintaining the stability of the economy;

(4) widespread financial market uncertainties have arisen following the terrorist attacks of September 11,

(B) in a manner that distributes the Federal share of compensation for insured losses between the participating insurance company and the reinsurance company or companies in the same proportion as the insured losses would have been distributed if the Program did not exist.

SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF CLAIMS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY- The Secretary shall have the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Program, including exclusive authority--

(1) to investigate and audit all claims under the Program; ~~and~~

(2) to promptly prescribe regulations and procedures to implement the Program; and

(3) to enforce the provisions of this Act.

(b) INTERIM RULES AND PROCEDURES- The Secretary shall issue interim final rules or procedures specifying the manner in which-

(1) participating insurance companies may file, verify, and certify claims under the Program;

(2) the Secretary shall publish or otherwise publicly announce the applicable percentage of insured losses that is the responsibility of participating insurance companies and the percentage that is the responsibility of the Federal Government under the Program;

(3) the Federal share of compensation for insured losses will be paid to a participating insurance company under the Program, including payments based on estimates of ~~or actual~~ aggregate insured losses, as well as actual aggregate insured losses paid;

(4) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repayment from or reimburse any participating insurance company, based on estimates of insured losses under the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4;

(5) each participating insurance company that incurs insured losses shall pay its pro rata share of insured losses, in accordance with section 4; ~~and~~

(6) the Secretary will determine any final netting of payments for actual insured losses under the Program, including payments owed to the Federal Government from any participating insurance company and any Federal share of compensation for insured losses owed to any participating insurance company, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4; ~~.~~

(7) without regard to the time requirements of section 4 (b)(2), the Secretary shall establish transition procedures for policyholder notification requirements following enactment; and

(8) every participating insurance company shall, in order to fulfill the requirement of section 4 (b)(2), provide the following notice with every policy providing terrorism coverage pursuant to this Act:

NOTICE: THE TERRORISM COVERAGE IN THIS POLICY IS PARTIALLY REINSURED BY THE UNITED STATES UNDER FEDERAL LAW. YOUR POLICY MAY INCLUDE A CHARGE FOR TERRORISM COVERAGE. THE INSURER SHALL PROVIDE INFORMATION ABOUT THAT CHARGE, IF ANY, UPON REQUEST.

(c) SUBROGATION RIGHTS- The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment made by the United States under the Program.

(d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES- The Secretary may employ persons or contract for services as may be necessary to implement the Program.

(e) CIVIL PENALTIES- The Secretary may assess civil money penalties for violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, or order issued by the Secretary under this Act relating to the submission of false or misleading information for purposes of the Program, or any failure to repay any amount required to be reimbursed under regulations or procedures described in section 5(b). The authority granted under this subsection shall continue during any period in which the Secretary's authority under section 6(d) is in effect.

SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM; DISCRETIONARY EXTENSION.

(a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM-

(1) IN GENERAL- The Program shall terminate 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, unless the Secretary—

(A) determines, after considering the report and finding required by this section, that the Program should be extended for one additional year, beginning on the day after the date of expiration of the initial 1-year period of the Program; and

(B) ~~promptly~~ notifies the Congress of such determination and the reasons therefor at least 3 months in advance of the date of expiration of the initial 1-year period of the Program.

(2) DETERMINATION FINAL- The determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(3) TERMINATION AFTER EXTENSION- If the Program is extended under paragraph (1), the Program shall terminate 1 year after the date of commencement of such extension period.

(4) POLICIES IN FORCE-

(A) The Program shall fully cover any policy providing terrorism coverage that is in force during the time the Program is in effect, provided that the policy does not expire more than one year after the termination date of the Program.

(B) Except as provided in subsection (4)(A) of this section, nothing in this Act shall require that insurance be made available for policy periods occurring outside the duration of the Program.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS- Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress-

(1) regarding—

(A) the availability of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism;
(B) the affordability of such coverage, including the effect of such coverage on premiums; and
(C) the capacity of the insurance industry to absorb future losses resulting from acts of terrorism, taking into account the profitability of the insurance industry; and

(2) that considers-

(A) the impact of the Program on each of the factors described in paragraph (1); and

(B) the probable impact on such factors and on the United States economy if the Program terminates 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) FINDING REQUIRED- A determination under subsection (a) to extend the Program shall be based on a finding by the Secretary that-

(1) widespread market uncertainties continue to disrupt the ability of insurance companies to price insurance coverage for losses resulting from acts of terrorism, thereby resulting in the continuing unavailability of affordable insurance for consumers; and

(2) extending the Program for an additional year would likely encourage economic stabilization and facilitate a transition to a viable market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(d) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST COMPENSATION- Following the termination of the Program under subsection (a), the Secretary may take such actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, reimbursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during the period in which the Program was in effect under this Act, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 and regulations promulgated thereunder.

(e) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE- This Act is repealed at midnight on the final termination date of the Program under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be construed-

(1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or causing to be taken, such actions under subsection (d) of this section and sections 4(e)(4), 4(e)(5), 5(a)(1), 5(c), 5(d), and 5(e) (as in effect on the day before the date of such repeal), and applicable regulations

promulgated thereunder, during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect; or

(2) to prevent the availability of funding under section 9(b) during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect.

(f) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS- It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary should make any determination under subsection (a) in sufficient time to enable participating insurance companies to include coverage for acts of terrorism in their policies for the second year of the Program, if the Program is extended in accordance with this section.

(g) STUDY AND REPORT ON SCOPE OF THE PROGRAM-

(1) STUDY- The Secretary, after consultation with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance industry, and other experts in the insurance field, shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage.

(2) REPORT- Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

(h) STUDY AND REPORT ON LONG-TERM INSURABILITY OF TERRORISM RISKS-

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study on the long-term insurability of terrorism risks and make recommendations on appropriate methods to address terrorism insurance over the long term. In doing this study, the Secretary shall consider the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism.

(2) Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

(i) ~~h~~ REPORTS REGARDING TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE PREMIUMS-

(1) REPORT TO THE NAIC- Beginning 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter, each participating insurance company shall submit a report to the NAIC that states the premium rates charged by that participating insurance company during the preceding 6-month period for insured losses covered by the Program, and includes an explanation of and justification for those rates.

(2) REPORTS FORWARDED- The NAIC shall promptly forward copies of each report submitted under paragraph (1) to the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Comptroller General of the United States.

(3) AGENCY REPORTS TO CONGRESS-

(A) IN GENERAL- The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission shall submit joint reports to Congress and the Comptroller General of the United States summarizing and evaluating the reports forwarded under paragraph (2).

(B) TIMING- The reports required under subparagraph (A) shall be submitted-

(i) 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(ii) 12 months after the date of submission of the first report under clause (i).

(4) GAO EVALUATION AND REPORT-

(A) EVALUATION- The Comptroller General of the United States shall evaluate each report submitted under paragraph (3), and upon request, the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the NAIC shall provide to the Comptroller all documents, records, and any other information that the Comptroller deems necessary to carry out such evaluation.

(B) REPORT TO CONGRESS- Not later than 90 days after receipt of each report submitted under paragraph (3), the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to Congress a report of the evaluation required by subparagraph (A).

SEC. 7. PRESERVATION OF STATE LAW.

Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction or regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State over any participating insurance company or other person-

(1) except as specifically provided in this Act; and

(2) except that-

(A) the definition of the term `act of terrorism' in section 3 shall be the exclusive definition of that term for purposes of compensation for insured losses under this Act, and shall preempt any provision of State law that is inconsistent with that definition, to the extent that such provision of law would otherwise apply to any type of insurance covered by this Act;

(B) (i) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on ~~December 31, 2002~~ the termination date of this Act, rates and forms for terrorism risk insurance covered by this Act and filed with any State shall not be subject to prior review, approval, ~~or~~ a waiting period, or retroactive rate

2001, including the absence of information from which financial institutions can make statistically valid estimates of the probability and cost of future terrorist events, and therefore the size, funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by such acts of terrorism;

(5) a decision by property and casualty insurers to deal with such uncertainties, either by terminating property and casualty coverage for losses arising from terrorist events, or by radically escalating premium ~~coverage~~ to compensate for coverage for risks of loss that are not readily predictable, are ~~could~~ seriously hampering ongoing and planned construction, property acquisition, and other business projects, generat~~e~~ing a dramatic increase in ~~rents~~ costs, and otherwise suppressing economic activity; and

(6) the United States Government should provide temporary financial compensation to insured parties, contributing to the stabilization of the United States economy in a time of national crisis, while the financial services industry develops the systems, mechanisms, products, and programs necessary to create a viable financial services market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(b) PURPOSE- The purpose of this Act is to establish a temporary Federal program that provides for a transparent system of shared public and private compensation for insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, in order to-

(1) protect consumers by addressing market disruptions and ensure the continued widespread availability and affordability of property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk; and disapproval under any law of a State that would otherwise be applicable, except that nothing in this Act affects the ability of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory; and

(ii) for purposes of this Program, "excessive" means a rate that is not actuarially sound on a long-term basis. Any decision to invalidate a rate pursuant to subsection (B)(i) shall be subject to review by the Secretary; and

(C) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and for so long as the Program is in effect, as provided in section 6 (including any period during which the authority of the Secretary under section 6(d) is in effect), books and records of any participating insurance company that are relevant to the Program shall be provided, or caused to be provided, to the Secretary or the designee of the Secretary, upon request by the Secretary or such designee, notwithstanding any provision of the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting such access.

SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING CAPACITY BUILDING.

It is the sense of the Congress that the insurance industry should build capacity and aggregate risk to provide affordable property and casualty insurance coverage for terrorism risk.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PAYMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES- There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Program, to remain available until expended.

(b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY- This Act constitutes payment authority in advance of appropriation Acts, and represents the obligation of the Federal Government to provide for the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program.

SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION-

(1) IN GENERAL- There shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for such property damage, personal injury, or death, except as provided in subsection (d).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS- All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (d).

(b) GOVERNING LAW- The substantive law for decision in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be derived from the law, including applicable choice of law principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that-

(1) the law, including choice of law principles, of another State is determined to be applicable to the action by the district court hearing the action; or

(2) otherwise applicable State law (including that determined pursuant to paragraph (1), is inconsistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal law.

(c) PUNITIVE DAMAGES- Any amounts awarded in a civil action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attributable to punitive damages shall not count as insured losses for purposes of this Act.

(d) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS- Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that was a participant in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD- This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including, if applicable, any extension period provided for under section 6.

SEC. 11. SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENTS FROM FROZEN ASSETS OF TERRORISTS, TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS, AND STATE SPONSORS OF TERRORISM.

(a) IN GENERAL- Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and except as provided in subsection (b), in every case in which a person has obtained a judgment against a terrorist party on a claim based upon an act of terrorism or for which a terrorist party is not immune under section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code, the blocked assets of that terrorist party (including the blocked assets of any agency or instrumentality of that terrorist party) shall be subject to execution or attachment in aid of execution in order to satisfy such judgment to the extent of any compensatory damages for which such terrorist party has been adjudged liable.

(b) PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER-

(1) IN GENERAL- Subject to paragraph (2), upon determining on an asset-by-asset basis that a waiver is necessary in the national security interest, the President may waive the requirements of subsection (a) in connection with (and prior to the enforcement of) any judicial order directing attachment in aid of execution or execution against any property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(2) EXCEPTION- A waiver under this subsection shall not apply to-

(A) property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that has been used by the United States for any nondiplomatic purpose (including use as rental property), or the proceeds of such use; or

(B) the proceeds of any sale or transfer for value to a third party of any asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR CASES AGAINST IRAN- Section 2002 of the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000 (Public Law 106-386; 114 Stat. 1542) is amended-

(1) in subsection (a)(2)(A)(ii), by inserting after `July 27, 2000' the following: `or before October 28, 2000,';

(2) in subsection (b)(2)(B), by inserting after `the date of enactment of this Act' the following: `(less amounts therein as to which the United States has an interest in subrogation pursuant to subsection (c) arising prior to the date of entry of the judgment or judgments to be satisfied in whole or in part hereunder).';

(3) by redesignating subsections (d), (e), and (f) as subsections (e), (f), and (g), respectively; and

(4) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection (d):

REV_00352130

`(d) DISTRIBUTION OF FOREIGN MILITARY SALES FUNDS INADEQUATE TO SATISFY FULL AMOUNT OF COMPENSATORY AWARDS AGAINST IRAN-

`(1)(A) In the event that the Secretary determines that the amounts available to be paid under subsection (b)(2) are inadequate to pay the entire amount of compensatory damages awarded in judgments issued as of the date of the enactment of this subsection in cases identified in subsection (a)(2)(A), the Secretary shall, not later than 60 days after such date, make payment from the account specified in subsection (b)(2) to each party to which such judgment has been issued a share of the amounts in that account which are not subject to subrogation to the United States under this Act.

`(B) The amount so paid to each such person shall be calculated by the proportion that the amount of compensatory damages awarded in a judgment issued to that particular person bears to the total amount of all compensatory damages awarded to all persons to whom judgments have been issued in cases identified in subsection (a)(2)(A) as of the date referred to in subparagraph (A).

`(2) Nothing herein shall bar, or require delay in, enforcement of any judgment to which this subsection applies under any procedure or against assets otherwise available under this section or under any other provision of law.

`(3) Any person receiving less than the full amount of compensatory damages awarded to that party in judgments to which this subsection applies shall not be required to make the election set forth in subsection (a)(2)(C) in order to qualify for payment hereunder.'.

(d) DEFINITIONS- In this section:

(1) The term `terrorist party' means a terrorist, a terrorist organization, or a foreign state designated as a state sponsor of terrorism under section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)) or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371).

(2) The term `blocked asset' means any asset seized or frozen by the United States in accordance with law, or otherwise held by the United States without claim of ownership by the United States.

(3) The term `property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' and the term `asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' mean any property or asset, respectively, the attachment in aid of execution or execution of which would result in a violation of an obligation of the United States under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, as the case may be.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) Act of terrorism-

(A) CERTIFICATION- The term `act of terrorism' means any act or acts ~~that is~~ certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General of the United States-

(i) to be a violent act or an act that is dangerous to-

(I) human life;
(II) property; or
(III) infrastructure;

(ii) to have resulted in damage within the United States, or outside the United States in the case of an air carrier or vessel described in paragraph (2)~~(3)~~(A)(ii); and

(iii) to have been committed by an individual or individuals acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest, as part of an effort to coerce the civilian population of the United States or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the United States Government by coercion.

(B) MODIFICATION- The Secretary is authorized to further define and specify the requirements of subsections (A)(i), (A)(ii), and (A)(iii). In making this determination, the Secretary may consult, as appropriate, with the NAIC.

(C) ~~B~~ LIMITATION- No act or event shall be certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism if-

(i) the act or event is committed in the course of a war declared by the Congress, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to any coverage for workers' compensation; or

(ii) losses resulting from the act or event, in the aggregate, do not exceed $5,000,000.

(D) ~~C~~ DETERMINATIONS FINAL- Any certification of, or determination not to certify, an act or event as an act of terrorism under this paragraph shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

~~(2) BUSINESS INTERRUPTION COVERAGE- The term 'business interruption coverage'-~~

~~(A) means coverage of losses for temporary relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, including ordinary wages, where-~~

~~(i) there is physical damage to the business premises of such magnitude that the business cannot open for business;~~

~~(ii) there is physical damage to other property that totally prevents customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; or~~

~~(iii) the Federal, State, or local government shuts down an area due to physical or environmental damage, thereby preventing customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; and~~

~~(B) does not include lost profits, other than in the case of a small business concern (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) and applicable regulations thereunder) in any case described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).~~

(2) ~~3~~ INSURED LOSS- The term `insured loss'—

(A) means any loss resulting from an act of terrorism that is covered by primary property and casualty insurance, ~~including business interruption coverage,~~ including excess insurance, issued by a participating insurance company, if such loss-

(i) occurs within the United States; or

(ii) occurs to an air carrier (as defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code) or to a United States flag vessel (or a vessel based principally in the United States, on which United States income tax is paid and whose insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States), regardless of where the loss occurs; and

(B) excludes coverage under any life or health insurance.

(3) ~~4~~ MARKET SHARE-

(A) IN GENERAL- The `market share' of a participating insurance company shall be calculated using the total amount of ~~direct~~ net written property and casualty insurance premiums for the participating insurance company during ~~the 2-year period preceding the year in which the subject act of terrorism occurred (or during such other period for which adequate data are available, as determined by the Secretary)~~ calendar year 2000 and 2001, as a percentage of the aggregate of all such property and casualty insurance premiums industry-wide during that period.

(B) ADJUSTMENTS- The Secretary may adjust the market share of a participating insurance company under subparagraph (A)~~, as necessary to reflect current market participation of that participating insurance company~~ to assure equity among all participating insurance companies, including adjustments to take into account any relationship established by a participating insurance company with another entity for the purpose of affecting any participating insurance company's deductible under this Program. The Secretary's determination shall be final and nonreviewable.

(4) ~~5~~ NAIC- The term `NAIC' means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(5) NET WRITTEN PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE PREMIUM – the term 'net written property and casualty insurance premium' means the premium amount written by a participating insurance company for primary property and casualty insurance less the amount paid for reinsurance for primary risk, consistent with the Secretary's determination under Section 3 (3) (B).

(6) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY- The term `participating insurance company' means any insurance company, including any subsidiary or affiliate thereof-

(A) that-

(i) is licensed or admitted to engage in the business of providing primary insurance, including excess insurance, in any State, and was so licensed or admitted on September 11, 2001; or

(ii) is not licensed or admitted as described in clause (i), if it is an eligible surplus line carrier on September 11, 2001, as listed on the Quarterly Listing of Alien Insurers of the NAIC~~, or any successor thereto~~; or

(iii) is a state workers' compensation fund; or

(iv) is an entity established by a state to provide insurance to persons unable to obtain it in the private market;

(B) that receives direct premiums for any type of primary commercial property and casualty insurance coverage or that, not later than 21 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submits written notification to the Secretary of its intent to participate in the Program with regard to personal lines of property and casualty insurance; and

(C) that meets any other criteria that the Secretary may reasonably prescribe.

(7) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY DEDUCTIBLE- The term `participating insurance company deductible' means-

(A) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $10,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the 1-year

Federal Terrorism Reinsurance Legislation Should Recognize Unique Workers' Compensation Needs

Enactment of federal terrorism reinsurance legislation that is now before a conference committee will benefit the U.S. economy broadly because of the vital and necessary role that insurance plays in safeguarding people, property, and the economy. For businesses and workers specifically, an important consideration is the impact of terrorism risk on the workers' compensation system.

The post-September 11 impact on workers' compensation insurance has been particularly acute. While both the House and Senate terrorism insurance bills seek to rebuild insurance markets across the vast majority of commercial product lines, including workers' compensation, workers' compensation is more uniquely vulnerable to terrorism-related losses than other lines. Both employers and insurers are concerned that potential terrorist targets seem to focus on high employment areas, where most employees are working in highly-concentrated areas, including large office buildings and manufacturing plants. This reality, combined with other elements of workers' compensation that make it fundamentally different from other commercial insurance lines, necessitates additional measures in a final terrorism insurance bill that will specifically address the current distortion and vulnerabilities of the workers' compensation marketplace.

How Workers' Compensation Is Different From Other Commercial Insurance Lines

Workers' compensation is different in the following ways:

- Terrorism losses for a single employer or insurer can be staggering. If a manufacturing plant with 6,000 employees—which could be located almost anywhere—were hit by a nuclear or biological attack, the workers' compensation losses could be double those of September 11. Yet, if the physical damage were relatively modest, the federal backstop would not come into play, leaving insurers in an extremely precarious position, both financially and in their ability to provide needed coverage.

- Workers' compensation is mandated by state law and has no exclusions, exemptions or limitations. While all other forms of commercial insurance have received terrorist exclusions from their policies in all but a few states in the absence of a federal backstop, workers' compensation insurance has no such exclusions. Unlike other policies, insurers may not tailor their policies to exclude losses arising out of terrorism or war. Therefore, they are exposed to limitless risk.

BERNARD L. HENGESBAUGH Chairman | ROBERT P. RESTREPO, JR. Chairman Elect | DAVID B. MATHIS Vice Chairman | CONSTANTINE P. IORDANOU Vice Chairman | ROBERT E. VAGLEY President

- A workers' compensation insurer may not eliminate its financial risk by deciding not to underwrite any specific employer. This is the case because an insurer – whether or not it writes a specific risk – may become obligated for the losses generated by that risk through mechanisms established by state law that guarantee every employer access to workers' compensation coverage. Losses from these mechanisms – called residual markets – are ultimately financed by every workers' compensation insurer in the state. In some states, the residual market is handled by state-created funds which are encountering the same unascertainable risk as private market insurers.

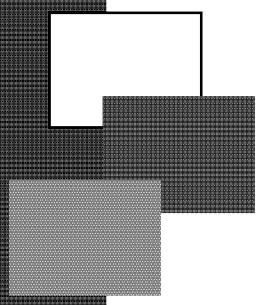
- Workers' compensation is a state-based system, but terrorism is a national problem. There simply is not enough capacity in small states such as South Dakota or Alabama to handle all of the workers' compensation terrorism risk facing in-state employers.

- These problems are not merely theoretical but are occurring in the marketplace, now. There is an explosion of risk moving to the residual markets, because workers' compensation insurers are increasingly unable to prudently underwrite these risks in the private marketplace. Weekly residual market pool premium booked in 2002 has been frequently 30% to 50% higher than the corresponding week in 2001. Pool premium volume for 2002 already exceeds total pool premium for all 2001. These trends effectively reduce the capacity in the private marketplace to offer both terrorism and workers' compensation insurance.

Potential Solutions

Congress should consider amending the legislation to provide federal financial reimbursement for all workers' compensation terrorism losses, without any deductible, that arise either from an act of war or from nuclear, radiological, chemical or biological attacks. As these are the kinds of events that pose the most extraordinary risks, the federal government could provide critical support to the private marketplace by creating this targeted backstop.

Alternatively, the legislation should include authorization for a nationwide workers' compensation terrorism insurance pool, to allow insurers effectively to spread their risk below per company or industry deductibles required before triggering the federal backstop. Although federal law would establish the pool, there would be essentially no federal costs associated with this entity, and federal involvement would be very limited (in fact, the pool would be chartered by a state, not the federal government). From a marketplace standpoint, the establishment of a pool will increase private industry's ability to continue to underwrite workers' compensation insurance, thereby stemming the dangerous rush towards the state residual markets. Furthermore, the creation of a pool would retain existing state statutory benefit structures and not pose any new federal operating standards on existing state programs.



Either solution would alleviate critical problems facing the workers' compensation system.

Estimating the Budgetary Impacts of the Proposed Federal Terrorism Risk Insurance Program: HR 3210 and S 2600

Estimating the Budgetary Impacts of the Proposed Federal Terrorism Risk Insurance Program: HR 3210 and S 2600

Introduction

At the request of the American Insurance Association, we have prepared a comparison of the estimated costs of the alternative terrorism risk insurance programs under consideration in Congress. More specifically, we have analyzed the impacts on federal budgetary disbursements and revenues of:

— HR 3210, the Terrorism Risk Protection Act
— S 2600, the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002

For each Act, we estimated the expected federal disbursements to insurers for terrorist losses. We also estimated the expected federal revenues from the recouping assessments proposed in HR 3210. Our analysis did not consider any potential offsets to disbursements (or revenue) under either proposal -- for example due to lower deductions for insurance costs on corporate income taxes. Consideration of these offsets would be appropriate in considering the overall economic impact of the proposals.

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) published a cost estimate for HR 3210 on November 19, 2001. Our approach was to use the CBO analysis as our starting point, seeking to replicate their analysis of HR 3210, and then extend the analysis to S 2600 using a consistent set of assumptions. While we could not reproduce the CBO estimates precisely, we believe that our underlying assumptions are reasonably consistent with theirs and that our results for HR 3210 can be reconciled to those published by the CBO.

In a few areas we have deviated from the CBO's assumptions in order to facilitate a fair comparison between HR 3210 and S 2600. For example, the CBO assumed that the program would continue for three years, while we have assumed it will only last for two years, which is the maximum length of the program under S 2600. In addition there were several minor changes to HR 3210 between the time CBO performed their analysis and the passage of the final bill.

Insurance involves the substitution of certainty for uncertainty. The actual costs of either proposal will ultimately depend on future events that may or may not happen. Since the actual cost can't be predicted, it seems appropriate to substitute the expected cost in assessing the impact of the bills.

Summary of Conclusions

Expected federal disbursements under the program proposed in HR 3210 are significantly higher than under S 2600, due primarily to (a) the lower effective threshold at which payments to insurers begin and (b) the fact that once the threshold is met payments are "first dollar" rather than excess over a company retention. While the actual disbursements under either program will depend on the specifics of the terrorist events, on average the expected disbursements under HR 3210 are more than double those of S 2600. Assuming enactment had taken place on July 1, 2002, over the next five fiscal years the expected disbursements under HR 3210 would be $6.6 billion versus $2.8 billion for S 2600. (Both years assume the program operates for two years, then ends.)

HR 3210 provides for recovery of any federal disbursements via assessments and surcharges, while S 2600 does not. However, a number of provisions in HR 3210 place limitations on the rate at which these recoveries are made. In their costing of HR 3210, the CBO assumed that any assessments or surcharges would be collected over an extended period, with very little of these collections occurring in the next five years. In fact, the CBO estimated that only 60% of the expected disbursements would be recovered within ten years. Using recovery rates that are consistent with CBO's, we estimate the expected recoveries over the next five fiscal years would be $1.4 billion.

Taking into account both disbursements and revenues, the expected 5-year net budgetary impact under HR 3210 is still higher than under S 2600. On average, the expected net cash flow from Treasury is roughly 80% higher under HR 3210 ($5.3 billion for HR 3210 versus $2.8 billion for S 2600).

Assumptions

Our key assumptions are described below, along with a discussion of the considerations in setting them. Alternative assumptions would, of course, produce different results. However, different assumptions are less likely to change the relative results between the two proposals.

- The expected aggregate annual insured losses from terrorism. The Bush Administration has continued to warn that further terrorist attacks are certain. It is reasonable to expect that some portion of the damages from such attacks will be covered by insurance. Not all terrorism events will trigger insured losses. We currently estimate that the September 11 terrorist attacks will cost the insurance industry between $32 billion and $56 billion, of which roughly $3.5 billion will be borne by life insurers. However the September 11 attack represents an extreme event, in which the terrorists were highly successful in meeting their objective of mass destruction. While scenarios can be constructed that would produce even greater losses, government at all levels is expending considerable resources to prevent future attacks and mitigate the damages from such attacks. We cannot know how successful these efforts will be, but it is reasonable to assume that they will have a positive effect. Under the circumstances it is reasonable to assume a lower level of expected insured losses.

The CBO published a cost estimate of HR 3210 on November 19, 2001, in which they estimated that insured losses from terrorism would be $4.5 billion annually. We believe this assumption is reasonable; for consistency we have used the CBO figure in our analysis.

- The probability distribution representing variability of insured losses from terrorism. The range of potential losses obviously extends from zero to a very large number. This situation can be represented statistically using a probability distribution with a specified level of variability. We have chosen to use a lognormal distribution, which is commonly used in insurance pricing exercises of this type. (See the figure below.) The variability of this distribution can be set so that the probability of losses of a chosen size is achieved. For example, while the expected losses are only $4.5 billion, the variability parameter can be chosen such that there is a 1% chance that insured losses for the year will be $40 billion. We have used this probability as our baseline assumption. An increase in the variability parameter will increase the assumed likelihood of a $40 billion loss; a decrease in the parameter will decrease the assumed likelihood of such a loss.

  While the CBO did not publish their assumptions as to the probabilities of insured losses of various sizes, we believe that our assumption is reasonably consistent with theirs.

- The proportion of losses retained by the insurance industry. Both of the proposals being considered contemplate that federal disbursements would not commence until the insurance industry losses from terrorist attacks in a given year reach a certain level. The retained losses are based on either aggregate industry losses or on individual company losses.

  — In the case of HR 3210, there is a dual trigger for federal disbursements. The main trigger is annual insured losses from terrorist attacks of $1 billion, at which point all participating insurers would be eligible for payments under the program. A secondary trigger provides that, if annual insured losses from terrorist attacks exceeds $100 million and losses for at least one insurer exceed both 10% of surplus and 10% of commercial lines net written premium, then those specific insurers who are so affected are eligible for payments under the program.

- In the case of S 2600, each insurer can only recover to the extent that their losses from terrorist attacks exceed a deductible equal to their commercial insurance market share times $10 billion ($15 billion in the second year).

In order to capture the effects of individual company deductibles, it was necessary to construct a model of the incidence of terrorist losses by insurance company. In some cases a smaller insurer will suffer a relatively large loss, in other cases a large company may suffer a relatively modest loss. Our model event is a "stylized" version of the September 11 attack, approximately reflecting the incidence of those losses by company. The total of the individual company losses in the model event is $20 billion, roughly the amount that has been reported to-date. To obtain individual company losses for events above or below $20 billion, we simply scaled the individual company losses in the model up or down to produce different levels of hypothetical industry losses.

- The share of losses paid by the government. Once the insured losses exceed the deductible/trigger, the federal government will reimburse a specified percentage of the losses.

  - In the case of HR 3210, once the main trigger of $1 billion is reached, insurers are reimbursed for 90% of their losses above a $5 million deductible. In the case of the secondary trigger, eligible insurers are reimbursed for 90% of their losses in excess of 10% of their net written commercial lines premiums.
  - In the case of S 2600, the federal share of losses is 80% of losses in excess of the individual company deductible, until losses reach $10 billion. Thereafter, the federal share is 90%.

  Both Acts provide a cap of $100 billion on federal payments. We have assumed that this cap is an annual limit applicable to each year of the program. The CBO made a similar assumption in their costing of HR 3210.

- The pattern of insured loss payments. Insured losses are not paid immediately. For each line of insurance there is a natural pattern of payments that reflect the settlement characteristics of that line. Property damage claims are paid relatively quickly, because the losses are generally readily apparent and the benefits are immediate. Business interruption claims are paid more gradually because it takes longer to measure the losses, which can continue for extended periods. Workers compensation claims are paid out relatively slowly because a major portion of the benefits for serious injuries and fatalities are annuities. We have used payment patterns derived from published industry data for property (including business interruption), general liability, workers compensation and aviation. An assumption must also be made as to the relative mix of losses by line. For the purposes of our estimates, we assumed the following mix: 50% property and business interruption, 20% workers compensation, 15% liability, and 15% aviation. This assumption appears to be consistent with the payment pattern used by the CBO.

- The recoveries via assessments and surcharges. A principal difference between the two Acts is that the HR 3210 requires that any disbursements under the program be recovered via assessments and surcharges, while S 2600 does not. Under HR 3210, the first $20 billion of disbursements are to be recovered via assessments on commercial insurers; any disbursements in excess of $20 billion are to be recouped via earmarked surcharges on commercial insurance policies. While the majority of program disbursements may eventually be recouped, the federal government is exposed to insurer credit risk, as it cannot reallocate uncollectable balances due from any failed insurers.

  Except for the first $5 billion of disbursements, assessments and surcharges in any calendar year are limited to 3% of commercial lines net written premium, which translates to an industry-wide overall annual dollar cap on recoveries of roughly $3.6 billion, based on our estimate of commercial lines direct written premium of $120 billion. In addition, HR 3210 provides the Secretary of the Treasury with considerable latitude regarding the timing and administration of any assessments or surcharges. For example, the Secretary may defer assessments on individual insurers to the extent that the Secretary determines that a deferral is necessary to avoid insolvency. Similarly, before imposing any surcharges, the Secretary is required to assess commercial insurance market conditions and consider the impact of the surcharges on affordability of commercial insurance. In their costing of HR 3210, the CBO assumed that assessments and surcharges would be collected over a considerable period of time. For example, of the $9.0 billion that CBO estimated would be disbursed over the life of the program, the CBO projected that only $5.3 billion, or 60%, would be recovered within ten years.

  In our analysis, we have assumed a level and timing of recoveries via assessments and surcharges that is consistent with the CBO assumptions. Since our projected disbursements by year are different than the CBO's, the amounts of recoveries by year are also (correspondingly) different.

Finally, to facilitate comparison between the two Acts, we have assumed that either program would operate for two years, and then end. In addition we have not considered the impact of personal lines insurers opting into the program, as they are allowed to do under S 2600.

Results

Using the assumptions outlined above, we calculated the expected disbursements and revenues under each of the alternative programs.

- Under the program proposed in HR 3210, the expected federal disbursements to reimburse insurers for terrorist losses would be $3.81 billion (out of total expected annual insured losses of $4.50 billion) for each year that the program was in place. Assuming the program ran for two years, the expected ultimate federal disbursements would be $7.62 billion under this proposal.

- Under the program proposed in S 2600, the expected federal disbursements to reimburse insurers for terrorist losses would be $1.76 billion for the first year of the program and $1.44 billion for the second year. Assuming the program ran for two years, the expected ultimate federal disbursements would be $3.20 billion under this proposal.

Federal disbursements are higher under HR 3210, due primarily to (a) the lower effective threshold at which payments to insurers begin and (b) the fact that once the threshold is met payments are "first dollar" rather than excess over a company retention.

Note that the above figures are the ultimate disbursements relating to insured terrorist incidents occurring in each of the years. Even if the program only lasts for two years, on a cash basis these disbursements would be spread over a number of years, as insurers paid their claims. Using assumptions regarding the timing of the cash flows described earlier, we calculated the budgetary impacts over the next five fiscal years, for each of the two proposals, assuming they were enacted with a July 1, 2002 effective date. The tables below summarize the results we obtained for each Act.

Expected Budgetary Impact – HR 3210 – In Millions
Fiscal Year	Amount of Expected Disbursements	Amount of Expected Revenues	Net Budgetary Impact
2002	1,550	--	1,550
2003	2,540	190	2,350
2004	1,450	300	1,150
2005	690	420	270
2006	380	450	-70
Total	6,610	1,360	5,250

Expected Budgetary Impact – S 2600 – In Millions
Fiscal Year	Amount of Expected Disbursements	Amount of Expected Revenues	Net Budgetary Impact
2002	720	--	720
2003	1,050	--	1,050
2004	590	--	590
2005	280	--	280
2006	150	--	150
Total	2,800	--	2,800

While HR 3210 is designed to operate more as a "loan facility", the likelihood that collections will be spread over several years based on market considerations, causes the expected revenues to be significantly deferred into future years – well beyond the traditional five-year budgetary horizon. The deferral of recoveries produces a significant net budgetary impact.

In theory, the federal government should ultimately be able to recoup the majority of any disbursements under HR 3210. Over an extended period the only limitation on recoupment would be due to unrecoverable assessments on insolvent insurers. However, the timing difference between the federal disbursements and recoveries represents a significant economic cost, measurable by the differences in the present values of the two cash flows. If the time value of money were taken into account, the disparity between the expected net costs of the two programs would increase further.

FEDERAL ADVANTAGE

For the Legal Professional

New Enhancements to lexis.com®!

LexisNexis is pleased to announce exciting new enhancements to the LexisNexis research services at www.lexis.com! These new enhancements will help eliminate steps in the research process making your research even more efficient and productive…and most importantly, saving you valuable time!

Source Selection Tabs: Source selection is now categorized into convenient tabs for Legal, News & Business and Public Records. Each tab contains the most commonly used sources for those areas on the front screen so that you can find the source you need and start researching with just two clicks! There is also a link to more sources, if needed.

Find a Source Tab, Ability to Browse Alphabetically: An additional tab, "Find a Source" is now available so that you can search for a source by typing in the source name OR you can use the new alphabetical listing of sources.

Ability to Edit the Last 20 Sources: You can now edit those last 20 sources to better reflect you most favorite and most frequently used. This new feature allows you to mark those you want to retain in the list and delete those you don't use too often.

Want an even easier way to access the information you need for your practice area on LexisNexis? Check out the LexisNexis Practice Area Pages…

Practice Area Pages combine all the resources for a particular area of law on one page and allow you to quickly access sources specific to the practice or jurisdictional area covered. The pages cover over 30 key practice areas and are designed to provide simple, time saving entry points into LexisNexis at www.lexis.com.

To view these practice area pages, simply go to http://www.lexis.com/practicepages or click on the tab for Practice Pages located at the top of your screen on lexis.com.

Some of the most recently added pages include Communications, Worker's Compensation and Labor & Employment.

Don't forget to check them out!

Bob,

Thanks for passing this draft text along to Kevin Warsh. It is attached in wpd and pasted in below. The letter is pretty self-explanatory. We would like to send it to the conferees, but were not sure who was clearing these. Any help or advice is appreciated.

I do not have a lot of other information that can be sent by email, but I know this is a big priority for the MMS and they are ready to provide whatever economic data NEC may require. It is their view that not including OCS will have a drastic chilling effect on new investment in the Gulf of Mexico and could cause their bonus bids and future royalty revenue to decline.

I can be reached any time on my cell phone at (PRA 6

MMS DRAFT LETTER TO CONFEREES ON TERRORISM INSURANCE

Dear Conferees:

As you continue your conference deliberations on the terrorism insurance legislation (H.R. 3210/S. 2600), the Department of the Interior respectfully requests that two important clarifications be made to the bill to ensure that critical maritime and energy production activities are covered.

First, it is extremely important that the geographic scope of the final bill be clarified to include all energy production facilities located on the Federal Outer Continental Shelf (OCS). Second, it is equally important that the definition of participating insurers in the final bill be clarified to include the insurers that provide coverage for facilities and operations on the OCS.

The geographic coverage in the current versions of the legislation apply only to areas located within the United States. During Senate debate on S. 2600, the bill was amended to expand the definition of "United States" to include the term "territorial sea," thus extending the geographic scope of the program to waters located up to 12 nautical miles offshore the United States. However, the OCS extends considerably further offshore than does the territorial sea (i.e., 12 miles versus 200 miles or more for many areas offshore the United States, such as the Gulf of Mexico.

In Federal waters alone, there are approximately 4,000 individual active drilling and production platforms (between 3 miles from shore to 180 miles from shore) and approximately 26,000 miles of active pipelines (between 1 inch and 55 inches in diameter). The vast majority of this offshore energy infrastructure lies outside the boundaries of the territorial sea and, thus, would not be covered under the current versions of the bill being considered in conference.

We would suggest that the final bill language extend the geographic scope of the program to the "continental shelf of the United States," as that term is defined in P.L. 103-322, the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act. The Minerals Management Service collects approximately $3 billion per year from these OCS operations, making this activity one of the largest revenue sources for the Federal government. This revenue source needs the protection of the terrorism insurance legislation.

Also, as S. 2600 is currently written, "participating insurers" are limited to those insurers that are state licensed or are foreign surplus lines insurers listed by the NAIC. This approach fails to recognize that the vast majority of insurance for OCS operations is obtained from the international insurance market?as opposed to the national market?with the preponderance coming from the London Insurance Market.

It appears that H.R. 3210 provides more flexibility with respect to the issue of "participating" insurance companies. H.R. 3210 directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ensure that the Act is applied as appropriate to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial property or casualty insurance. However, the most preferable approach would be to amend the definition of "participating insurer" to include those insurers that are accepted by relevant Federal agencies, such as the Departments of the Interior, Transportation, and Labor.

Insurance is critical to OCS operations, as it is the major mechanism for financial liability protection, either directly or indirectly, for these operations. Without the availability of such a mechanism, it is unlikely that many small and intermediate companies could operate on the OCS. In addition, current operations and new investment of the large companies would be severely limited, which would have an extremely damaging affect on the Federal income from OCS activities. It could also adversely affect the safety and pollution prevention from such operations.

Thank you for your careful consideration of these important clarifications to the terrorism insurance legislation.

Sincerely,

Assistant Secretary
Land and Minerals Management

She is apparently very upset that we are not using her plane for Karl on Oct. 24th. She claims they have no business before the federal gov't. and Dick resigned as Chairman of Amway over 2 month ago. This may cause us a political problem with her..... How critical is it that we don't fly on her plane??

Hon. Patrick J. Leahy
Chairman, U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary
433 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Leahy:

I am writing in strong support of Michael McConnell's nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit.

I have known Michael since 1991, when I joined the faculty of the University of Chicago Law School. For several years, we spoke almost daily about law. In all that time, I never knew Michael to be anything other than thoughtful, open-minded, and even-handed in his approach to legal questions. There is no part of Michael that is activist or extremist. He is one of the most fair and scrupulous individuals I have ever encountered. I do not believe he ever would bend the law to get to a political result. I disagree with Michael on some important matters, as I am sure you and other members of the Judiciary Committee do. But I am confident that as a judge, he would handle each and every case, regardless of the legal issue at stake, with the qualities of honesty, integrity, and fidelity to law that all his academic colleagues recognize in him.

As you may recall, I was once myself a nominee to the appellate bench. At that time, Michael exerted himself mightily to persuade then-Chairman Hatch to grant me a hearing. He thought that the treatment that the Judiciary Committee gave to many of President Clinton's nominees was wrong. And he acted on that conviction, declining to join in the obstruction, but instead doing his best, regardless of political affiliation, for the people whom he thought would bring credit to the federal bench. I believe that approach says a great deal about the kind of judge Michael would make if you honor him with confirmation.

I admire greatly the job you have done as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I hope you can give Michael a hearing and vote to confirm him. I am confident you would not regret the decision.

Very truly yours,

Elena Kagan

Hon. Orrin G. Hatch
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
224 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Hatch:

We enthusiastically support the nomination of Michael W. McConnell to be a judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit.

McConnell is one of America's most distinguished constitutional law scholars and one of its most distinguished lawyers. He has published more than fifty scholarly articles in the nation's leading law reviews and has argued eleven cases before the United States Supreme Court. He is currently Presidential Professor at the University of Utah College of Law and was formerly a professor for twelve years at the University of Chicago Law School. He was a law clerk to Judge J. Skelly Wright of the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and to Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. of the United States Supreme Court. He served as Assistant General Counsel of the Office of Management and Budget and as Assistant Solicitor General.

McConnell's scholarly work has been path-breaking and influential. It also has been characterized by care, thoroughness, and fairness to opposing viewpoints. Both in person and in his writings, McConnell exhibits respect, gentleness, concern, rigor, integrity, a willingness to listen and to consider, and an abiding commitment to fairness and the rule of law. He provides a model of the wisdom, intelligence, temperament, craftsmanship, and personal qualities that can make a judge outstanding.

Many of the signers of this letter are Democrats who did not vote for the President who nominated Professor McConnell. Some of us have disagreed with McConnell on constitutional issues and undoubtedly will disagree with him again. All of us, however, hope that the Senate will confirm Professor McConnell without greater delay than is necessary to fulfill its important Constitutional responsibilities. In our view, Michael McConnell is a nominee of exceptional merit whose confirmation warrants bipartisan support.

We list our institutional affiliations for purposes of identification only.

Sincerely yours,

Senator Patrick Leahy
United States Senate
Committee on the Judiciary
433 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Leahy:

I am writing about Michael McConnell, President Bush's nominee for the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. As you know, I believe that the federal judiciary now reflects the undue influence of right-wing activists, and that it is extremely important for the Senate to play a large role as a check on the President's choices. Nonetheless, I believe that McConnell should be confirmed.

I know McConnell well. He was a colleague of mine at Chicago for a number of years. In that time, I learned two things. First, McConnell is a person of exceptional ability. He is one of the best legal minds I have ever encountered. Second, McConnell combines strong convictions not only with an ability to respect opposing views but also with the capacity to listen carefully, and on occasion to change his mind. (In this way he is very different from another former colleague of mine, Antonin Scalia, who is able to listen, but who has some real rigidity.) McConnell's nature is genuinely judicious. On issues ranging from free speech to affirmative action to sex equality to abortion, he is genuinely willing to think, and to go where the best arguments take him.

Under current circumstances, intellectual ability, standing by itself, does not seem to me enough to justify confirmation. The Senate is not restricted to consideration of competence. But intellectual ability is surely a strong virtue. The crucial fact about McConnell is that he is no ideologue. He is very different, for example, from Robert Bork and Justices Scalia and Thomas, all of whom have ideological tendencies. I can't be certain, but my strong hunch is that McConnell would be a strong defender of Congress' constitutional prerogatives, as reflected in his outstanding defense of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. Those of us who are most concerned about judicial hubris in the name of the Constitution do not have much to fear from McConnell. I also believe, though here too I cannot be certain, that McConnell would not be a part of the alarming federal judicial attack on affirmative action -- an attack that seems to me a form of judicial fiat without constitutional basis. This is the sort of thing that (I think) McConnell would tend to avoid.

Or consider, as a brief, useful illustration of his character and temperament, McConnell's judicious words on Bush v. Gore: "I believe the Court deserves two-and-a-half cheers for its performance. But the half-cheer it forfeited, by failing to produce a bipartisan consensus on the remand issue, continues to cast long shadows both on the Court and on the Bush presidency." And more dramatically: "I think the decision to halt the recount was incorrect as a matter of law (though the question is closer than the Court's critics like to think). But perhaps more important even than law, in this case of high constitutional moment, was the questionable judicial statesmanship of this part of the ruling." I also believe that in the midst of the impeachment controversy, McConnell wrote a superb letter to Congressman Hyde, strongly arguing that the absence of a bipartisan consensus in favor of impeachment made impeachment the wrong course to follow.

Of course the question of Roe v. Wade looms in the background. I believe that McConnell thinks that the decison was wrong when decided. But I know that he would faithfully follow the law as it now stands. Certainly for a court of appeals nomination, it would be extremely peculiar to say that a belief in the initial correctness of Roe v. Wade is a precondition for confirmation. Many lawyers, on the left as well as the right, question Roe v. Wade. Open-minded, nonideological nominees should not be rejected for that reason.

I could go on and on about McConnell, but I think I'll end here, with a simple notation that his work on religious liberty is extremely distinguished, has altered academic thinking in fundamental ways, and reflects, above all, respect for America's tradition of religious pluralism. I hope that the Senate will take an extremely aggressive role in ensuring that President Bush does not populate the bench with right-wing ideologues. I also hope that the Senate will confirm McConnell, an exceptionally distinguished nominee, and the furthest thing from an ideologue. I would be happy to answer any questions that you might have.

Best wishes to you.

Sincerely,

Cass R. Sunstein

WE LIKE MIKE:
An Open Letter To Senator Patrick Leahy In Support Of Judicial Nominee Michael Mcconnell
By AKHIL REED AMAR AND VIKRAM DAVID AMAR

Friday, Feb. 08, 2002

To: Senator Patrick Leahy, Chair, Senate Judiciary Committee

Dear Senator Leahy,

We write this open letter in strong support of Professor Michael McConnell, who has been nominated by President Bush to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit.

By way of introduction, we are registered Democrats who voted for Al Gore and Joe Lieberman. We have not hesitated to publicly oppose the Bush Administration where we think its policies endanger constitutional liberty. In a previous column, we sharply criticized Attorney General Ashcroft for issuing a constitutionally troubling eavesdropping regulation. In that column, we directed our readers to your website, which raised similar questions about this regulation. (We have also worked with your staff on a variety of other post 9-11 issues.) This week, we have filed a pro bono amicus brief in the Supreme Court opposing an intrusive and ill-justified high school drug-testing policy in Tecumseh, Oklahoma; the Bush Administration has filed an amicus brief on the other side.

But on the subject of the McConnell nomination, we applaud the Bush Administration. Here is an issue where thoughtful Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, should come together.

A Uniter, Not a Divider

We begin with a few observations about Michael McConnell, the man. Character counts, and nowhere does it matter more than for judicial appointments for life. We know McConnell well, and admire him. He is soft-spoken, modest, and generous towards others, both personally and intellectually. These qualities are all the more striking because McConnell is a truly gifted legal scholar. (Brilliance and humility do not often coincide, especially in the legal academy.) McConnell is a man of moderation, balance, and judgment. In short, he has an ideal "judicial temperament."

We are hardly alone in this assessment. In early July, over 300 law professors sent you a letter "enthusiastically" endorsing McConnell's nomination. This letter included many of McConnell's past and current colleagues-men and women who have seen him up close over many years. Its signatories included the past and present deans of many distinguished law schools, including Yale, Harvard, Chicago, Stanford, Michigan, and Cal-Berkeley.

Perhaps most strikingly, the list was genuinely bipartisan and cross-sectional, featuring dozens of leading "liberal" as well as "conservative" scholars, including Al Alschuler, Jack Balkin, Randy Barnett, Robert W. Bennett, Lillian BeVier, Vince Blasi, Steve Calabresi, Evan Caminker, Stephen Carter, Ron Cass, Jesse Choper, Bob Clark, Michael Dorf, John Hart Ely, Richard Epstein, Sam Estreicher, Dan Farber, Charles Fried, John Garvey, Mary Ann Glendon, Carole Goldberg, Kent Greenawalt, Sam Issacharoff, Elena Kagan, Yale Kamisar, Doug Kmiec, Anthony Kronman, Doug Laycock, Jeff Lehman, Lawrence Lessig, Sanford Levinson, Saul Levmore, Dan Lowenstein, Cal Massey, Tracey Meares, Robert Nagel, Mike Paulsen, Scot Powe, H. Jefferson Powell, David Shapiro, Suzanna Sherry, Ann-Marie Slaughter, Kate Stith, David Strauss, Peter Strauss, Bill Stuntz, Cass Sunstein, and Jeremy Waldron, to name just a few.

Rarely do law professors-by nature a contentious lot, rewarded for strong opinions-come to such universal consensus. It is hard to imagine many other things that the above-named professors (to say nothing of the broader list of 300) could all agree on.

A Legal Eagle

Competence counts alongside character; and here too McConnell is off the charts. After clerking for Judge J. Skelly Wright and Justice William Brennan, McConnell has gone on to be a leading public servant, private lawyer, and legal academic. In an earlier column, we argued that courts should bring together lawyers with varied legal backgrounds and pre-judicial careers. McConnell brings this desired balance together in a single person, who has excelled at very different legal jobs, and who has synthesized the distinctive virtues of each.

McConnell is a scholar's scholar AND a lawyer's lawyer. Each side of his resume is dazzling, but what is most remarkable is that a single person has excelled at both. (Only Larry Tribe, Walter Dellinger and a few others may claim comparable achievements both as a constitutional scholar AND as a constitutional practitioner.)

As a scholar, McConnell has published over fifty law review articles, many of which appeared in leading law reviews and are now considered classics. As a practitioner, he has served in various high-level governmental positions and has practiced law on his own. All told, he has argued eleven cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Being an outstanding scholar has made McConnell a better lawyer, and being an outstanding lawyer has made him a better scholar. To overstate: great scholars sometimes lack judgment, and good lawyers sometimes lack ideas. But McConnell sees both the big picture and the details; he has both vision and prudence. In his scholarship and his briefs, he has deftly woven legal tapestries respectful both of constitutional text and of the sometimes competing considerations of tradition, precedent, and established practice.

We give McConnell special credit for the way he has pursued private practice. He has taken on many pro bono cases, rather than simply selling himself to the highest bidder. He has worked well in partnership with other lawyers on his cases, who praise his collegiality. Collegiality is a special requirement for appellate judges, who do their work in panels; and the lack of it is sometimes a weakness of pure academics, who do most of their work alone.

The Vision Thing

As we have explained in an earlier column, Senators may properly and openly consider nominees' overall legal philosophies and likely judicial rulings. Given McConnell's scholarly writings and practice experience, we highlight two areas that will likely be of particular interest in his hearings.

McConnell is perhaps America's pre-eminent scholar of religious liberty. Although we do not agree with everything he has written on the subject, we find his general views carefully argued and normatively congenial.

A couple of media pieces have misstated McConnell's general views, so it's useful to set the record straight. McConnell generally champions the idea of governmental "neutrality"-government ordinarily should not favor any specific religion or religion generally; but neither should government single out religion for unique disfavor and disadvantage. Government shouldn't discriminate against religion. For example, if a veteran can use his GI loan to help finance his education at a nonreligious college, he should likewise be allowed to use the loan at Notre Dame or BYU-otherwise, the government is discriminating against religion.

This is a generally attractive vision, and it has real bite from a civil libertarian perspective, connecting the religion clauses to the Constitution's grand theme of equal citizenship. McConnell opposed state-sponsored graduation prayers at public school commencements even before the Supreme Court struck down this practice, 6-3, in the 1992 case of Lee v. Weisman. McConnell has likewise publicly endorsed the result of the more recent Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe case, which invalidated (by a similar 6-3 vote) government-sponsored prayer at high school football games. In both situations, government flunked the neutrality/equality test.

McConnell has also championed the idea that courts should treat congressional statutes with deference, and should not lightly strike them down. This is a principled position of judicial restraint, and it stands in stark contrast to more virulent forms of conservative ideology now prominent in federal courts generally and in the Supreme Court in particular.

In the almost eighty years between the Founding and Reconstruction, the Supreme Court invalidated acts of Congress on only two occasions, Marbury v. Madison in 1803 and Dred Scott v. Sanford in 1857. By the mid 1920s, this number had risen to about fifty-less than one case a year. Overall, the Warren Court invalidated acts of Congress in about twenty cases over a sixteen year span. By contrast, the Rehnquist Court in the last six years alone has struck down congressional laws (most of them constitutionally sound laws, in our view) in almost 30 cases-far more than in any prior six-year period.

This is a trend that should disturb Congress-and the confirmation process is one place for Congress to begin to fight back for its rightful place in the Constitution's scheme-co-ordinate with courts rather than below them.

One of the worst trends on the current Supreme Court has been its willingness to invalidate Congressional civil rights laws enacted pursuant to congressional power under the Reconstruction Amendments, from the Religious Freedom Restoration Act to the Violence Against Women Act and the Americans With Disabilities Act. McConnell has been a leading critic of this trend toward judicial imperialism. Put differently, McConnell has been a principled champion of Congress's right to implement its broad vision of civil rights even when Congress seeks to protect rights more generously than the Supreme Court has chosen to do on its own.

If Not McConnell, Who?

McConnell's nomination to the Tenth Circuit draws additional support from the fact that he is strongly supported by his home-state Senators, one of whom, Orrin Hatch, is the ranking member and former chair of the Judiciary Committee. Indeed, McConnell is supported by virtually all the Senators from the entire circuit. And if the Senate is to play anything close to an equal role with the president in the appointments game, it is important-and consistent with Senate traditions of courtesy and deference-for the Senate as a whole to pay particular respect to the views of Senators with a special stake in a given nomination.

We realize that in the mid 1990s, when the political situation was reversed-a Democratic President confronting a Republican Senate-some of President Clinton's judicial nominees were obliged to wait far too long to be confirmed. In particular, we were saddened that our friend Willy Fletcher, then a Professor at Cal-Berkeley, waited several years before finally winning confirmation to the Ninth Circuit. We strongly supported Fletcher then-for many of the same reasons we support McConnell now. Both are outstanding scholars with superb judicial temperaments.

It may be tempting to play tit for tat-Republicans stalled Fletcher so now Democrats obstruct McConnell. But we urge our fellow Democrats to resist this temptation.

At some point, someone needs to take a huge step away from an endless cycle of reprisal that works to the long-term disadvantage of both parties, and of the country. We were thus heartened to read your recent comments in the Congressional Record promising to hold hearings soon on McConnell's nomination.

But perhaps it's naive to think that moderate payback can be eliminated altogether from the appointments game. So here is a realpolitik point: President Bush is nominating and probably will continue to nominate several other judicial candidates who deserve very close scrutiny. Some of these candidates may have less prominent paper trails than McConnell. But many are likely inferior to McConnell in almost every way-less smart, less open, less humble, less lawyerly, less respectful of Congress, less knowledgeable about the Constitution. If there must be payback, please pick on someone else.

We like Mike-as does virtually everyone who knows him well-and we think that if you give him a chance, you will, too.

1. Absolutely. Please e-mail me names, birthdates, and social security numbers of all the tour guests and I will reserve time for an after-hours West Wing tour. (They usually are not available until after 8pm; is there any night next week after 8pm that won't work? Perhaps we could shoot for Thursday?)
2. The President certainly wants to indicate his continuing commitment to his judicial nominees. I will inquire as to whether a post-hearing meeting is the best way and/or possible given the President's schedule.

Dear Kyle,

A personal request and a poltical thought/suggestion:

(1) Any chance of a behind-the-scenes White HOuse tour for my family while we are in WAshington next week? We will be staying through Sunday. (I have a day-long meeting at teh Administrative Office of the courts on Thursday, but other than that, we are unscheduled.)

(2) After the Owen defeat, presumably the President wants to indicate his commitment to his judicial nominees. Schedule permitting (obviously), wouldn't there be some value in arranging a brief post-hearing meeting between the President and his nominee, with a press photo op?

As per our telephone conversation, I am hereby requesting approval to accept corporate air travel for Under Secretary of Energy Robert G. Card on August 31, 2002, in relation to his official travel in South Africa. Sasol, one of the largest industrial companies in South Africa, supplies 41% of South Africa's liquid fuel requirements. Sasol also has a joint venture with Chevron, which is responsible for the development, implementation and operation of gas to liquids ventures based on the Slurry Phase Distillate process, and the marketing of their products, such as environment-friendly, sulfur-free fuels. The Under Secretary is one of the Administration leaders on the President's National Climate Change Technology Initiative. Sasol's research and technology facilities, as well as its coal-to-liquid petrochemical operations, are vital for this initiative.

Section 1353 of title 31, United States code, authorizes the acceptance by executive branch agencies of payments for travel, subsistence, and related expenses from non-Federal sources in connection with the attendance of employees at certain meetings or similar functions. Further, the Department has concluded that the need for the Deputy Secretary's participation outweighs any concern that acceptance of the travel may or may reasonably appear to improperly influence him in the performance of his official duties. I have been advised by the Department's Office of Aviation Management that there are no viable aviation options for this proposed travel. Further, we have been advised that travel by car is not only unsafe, but would not allow the Under Secretary the ability to visit all the plants and facilities he would like to visit.

White House policy requires that Cabinet members may not travel on aircraft owned, chartered, or maintained by a company primarily for company use rather than commercial use if the company is regulated by or doing business with their employing agency. Although it is not clear that SASOL would meet the criteria the White House has in mind in formulating this policy, the Under Secretary requested that advance White House approval be obtained.

Sasol has offered to fly the Under Secretary on its corporate aircraft between Lanseria, Secunda, Sasolburg, and back to Secunda (all locations in South Africa). This will allow the Under Secretary to meet with SASOL executives and tour several of their facilities, including their corporate headquarters, research and development facilities, the location where SASOL started making coal-derived fuels and chemicals in 1955, and their coal-to-liquid petrochemical plant, the largest such plant in the world.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and please let me know if you have any questions or require anything further.

During our discussions on contractor indemnification and the SAFETY Act, Phil asked whether a third party claimant might be able to successfully take legal action against the United States under the Federal Tort Claims Act for damages caused by an act of terrorism that was not detected by a federal contractor's technology because the government's specifications were defective.

In response to Phil's request, Grant prepared the attached legal memorandum. Grant's conclusion is that such a claim against the United States under the FTCA would not succeed because the government action would fall under the "discretionary function" exception to the FTCA's waiver of sovereign immunity. The memorandum provides an insightful expanded discussion of how the discretionary function exception works and why it would likely protect the government against such claims.

Both Richard and Dana have reviewed Grant's memorandum and agree with his analysis.

MEMORANDUM
FROM: Grant Kronenberg
RE: Federal Tort Claims Act and the discretionary function exception

The Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) acts as a waiver of the United States' sovereign immunity from claims against it. Under the law, the United States is "liable, respecting the provisions of this title relating to tort claims, in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances, but shall not be liable for interest prior to judgment or for punitive damages." 28 U.S.C. § 2674. The district courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction over civil actions against the United States "for money damages...for injury or loss of property, or personal injury or death caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any employee of the Government while acting within the scope of his office or employment, under circumstances where the United States, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred." 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(1).

There are a host of exceptions to the general waiver of sovereign immunity under the FTCA, though. See 28 U.S.C. § 2680. 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a) contains two distinct scenarios under which the Government does not waive its sovereign immunity. The first of these involves a Government employee acting according to a statute or regulation. If the claim is based on an act, or the omission of an act, by a Government employee, while exercising due care in executing a statute or regulation, regardless of the validity of that statute or regulation, there is no waiver. Id. § 2680(a). The second part of 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a) incorporates the "discretionary function" exception. There is no waiver if the claim is based "upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency or an employee of the Government, whether or not the discretion involved be abused." Id. If a Government employee is acting under the direction of a statute or regulation, or if the employee is exercising a discretionary function, sovereign immunity continues to provide a shield.

The "discretion function" portion of 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a) has been refined and defined through the case law. Not all decisions that involve an exercise of discretion fall under the discretionary function exception. See Berkovitz v. United States, 486 U.S. 531, 537 (1988). Furthermore, "[t]he United States has the burden of proving that the discretionary function exception applies." Sigman v. United States, 208 F.3d 760, 768 (9th Cir. 2000) (citing Prescott v. United States, 973 F.2d 696, 702 (9th Cir. 1992)).

A bevy of cases have applied the discretionary function exception to the FTCA, establishing a two-pronged test for the exception's applicability in specific cases. "[A] court must first consider whether the action is a matter of choice for the acting employee. This inquiry is mandated by the language of the exception; conduct cannot be discretionary unless it involves an element of judgment or choice." Berkovitz, 486 U.S. at 536. Second, a court must decide whether or not the decision at issue, even if it involves an element of judgment or choice, is of the sort that Congress meant to protect from liability. Id. The purpose behind the discretionary function exception is that "Congress wished to prevent judicial 'second-guessing' of legislative and administrative decisions grounded in social, economic, and political policy through the medium of an action in tort." United States v. S.A. Empresa de Viacao Aerea Rio Grandense, 467 U.S. 797, 814 (1984) (cited also as United States v. Varig Airlines). "The exception, properly construed, therefore protects only governmental actions and decisions based on considerations of public policy." Berkovitz, 486 U.S. at 537. Although the exception only protects actions based on public policy concerns, "[w]hen a statute or regulation allows a federal agent to act with discretion, there is a 'strong presumption' that the authorized act is based on an underlying policy decision." Tri-State Hosp. Supply Corp., 142 F. Supp. 2d 93, 100 (D.D.C. 2001) (quoting United States v. Gaubert, 499 U.S. 315, 324 (1991)).

The fact that there exists a presumption that a federal agent acts based upon a public policy concern when a statute or regulation gives the agent discretion does not mean that the evidence always turns in favor of the presumption. "If all federal employee acts involving some judgment and performed under some policy were to be viewed as discretionary policy-making, then the discretionary function exception would overtake both the rule and the purpose of the FTCA, and the second prong of the…test would be meaningless." Mayer v. United States, 774 F. Supp. 1114, 1119 (N.D. Ill. 1991). A good example of something that is often mentioned as not receiving the protection of the discretionary function exception is the operation of a car. Certainly, driving a car meets the first prong of the test, assuming the Government employee is driving in his official capacity, as operating the vehicle involves an element of judgment or choice. The second prong is not met, though, as the choices one makes as a driver are certainly not something that Congress meant to protect from liability in crafting the FTCA. There are no social, economic, or public policy considerations involved in the discretionary decisions that a driver makes during a trip.

The Supreme Court in Gaubert further defined exactly what a court is to look at when deciding whether the second-prong of the test has been satisfied. "For a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, it must allege facts which would support a finding that the challenged actions are not the kind of conduct that can be said to be grounded in the policy of the regulatory regime. The focus of the inquiry is not on the agent's subjective intent in exercising the discretion conferred by statute or regulation, but on the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy analysis." Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 324-25.

When analyzing the sort of decision that the Secretary would make concerning which technologies and products to approve under the SAFETY Act, it seems clear that a court would find sovereign immunity not to have been waived. The first portion of 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a) likely would not protect the Secretary's actions, because the SAFETY Act allows discretion as far as what is certified by the Secretary and what is not. See id. at 323-24. Nonetheless, the "discretionary function" portion of 28 U.S.C. § 2680(a) seems to apply, thereby maintaining the Government's sovereign immunity. Applying the two-pronged test of Berkovitz, the first prong is met, as the decision of whether to certify a particular product or technology is clearly a matter of choice for the Secretary. It would also appear that the second prong is met, as the decision of which items to certify presumably involves policy considerations.

The only possible way the waiver of immunity would still exist might be if the Secretary actually did not make any policy considerations in the certification process. Even then, though, there is a strong presumption that when a statute or regulation permits the exercise of discretion, policy was the foundation for the decision. See Tri-State Hosp. Supply Corp., 142 F. Supp. 2d at 100 (quoting Gaubert, 499 U.S. at 324). Furthermore, language in Gaubert indicates that the court is not to focus on the Government employee's "subjective intent...but on the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy analysis." 499 U.S. at 325. Likely the only thing that might draw the court's focus to the Secretary's subjective intent would be a statement that "policy considerations played no part in my decision to certify x." Since such a statement seems highly unlikely to ever be made, and even if it was made it is possible that a court might still find sovereign immunity not to have been waived, it seems safe to say that a suit under the FTCA would be barred by the discretionary function exception in this setting.

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. We wholeheartedly agree that the Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation. Convening such a group would be a positive next step in resolving the issue, and the Treasury Department looks forward to participating in it.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

REDRAFT 13 September 2002 REDRAFT

The Honorable John D. Rockefeller IV
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510-6375

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This represents the Administration views H.R. 3645, 107th Congress, a bill "To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for improved procurement practices by the Department of Veteran Affairs in procuring health items."

While the Administration supports efforts to introduce competition into Federal programs and to better coordinate Department of Veterans Affairs and Department of Defense health care programs, for a variety of reasons, it cannot support either the proposal in section 8 of the bill or the similar proposal in section 303 of S. 1905, a similar bill "To enhance veterans' programs and the ability of the Department of Veterans Affairs to administer them."

Section 8 of H.R. 3645 would permit the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to "authorize the Secretary of Defense to make purchases through the Department of Veterans Affairs' revolving fund in the same manner as activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Section 303 of S. 1905 would permit the Department of Veterans Affairs' fund to be used to purchase "medical supplies, equipment, and services for the Department of Defense". The Administration believes this proposal and related proposals are premature and would not further efforts to improve the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense cooperation in improving health care. Further study is necessary. In its current form the proposals:

- Would undermine the Department of Defense wartime medical mission. The Department of Defense's peacetime medical purchases support its wartime medical logistics systems. As noted in chapter six of the interim report of the President's Task Force to Improve Health Care Delivery for Our Nation's Veterans.

  Both Departments the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs have unique, mission-driven requirements that affect procurement decisions. The Department of Defense faces unique challenges with regard to rapid deployments and the demands this mission places on the supply chain. Any efficiencies attained through joint acquisition and procurement must accommodate this very real requirement.

This concern is especially important and immediate in light of our current war on terrorism.

- Could not be implemented immediately without causing disruption to the Department of Defense. Funds needed to support DoD's wartime, world-wide medical logistics system are currently included in the price of medical supplies sold by DoD's logistics system to DoD customers. If DoD customers purchase medical supplies from the DVA instead of from DoD's logistics system, these funds are lost to DoD's medical logistics system. Since this system must be maintained, additional funding may be required, which is in neither the FY 2003 or FY 2004 budgets.

- May not ensure that the competition between revolving funds in DVA and DoD results in the lowest cost to the government. This is only possible when the lowest cost to the customer is also the lowest cost to the government. The comparative costs analysis between the DVA and DoD revolving funds' price structures necessary to ensure this result has not been done.

The Administration will continue to work with the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense, as well as with the Congress to find a manner to implement the President's Management Agenda to improve medical care to veterans and active duty personnel and their families, while reducing the cost. In fact, the Joint Department of Defense/ Department of Veterans Affairs Executive Council will be addressing the issues raised by these proposals this Fall.

The concept of competition between the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs' revolving funds merits further study; but the Administration does not support this provision in either the House or Senate bills noted above.

Any law that would reduce receipts or increase spending is subject to the pay-as-you-go (PAYGO) requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act and could cause a sequester of mandatory programs in any fiscal year through 2006. The requirement to score PAYGO costs expire on September 30, 2002, and there are no discretionary caps beyond 2002. Preliminary OMB estimates indicate that this provision could increase direct spending since it would permit the Department of Veterans Affairs' supply fund to extend the availability of Department of Defense funds that would otherwise lapse. The Administration will work with Congress to ensure fiscal discipline consistent with the President's budget and a quick return to a balanced budget. The Administration also will work with Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that it has no objection from the standpoint of the Administration program to the provision of these views to the Congress.

Sincerely,

William J. Haynes II

Irene:

CEA objects strongly to the proposed letter. The Administration has not agreed to participate in any joint working group such as that proposed by Sen. Baucus. All references to such a process should be removed from the letter.

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. We wholeheartedly agree that the Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation. Convening such a group would be a positive next step in resolving the issue, and the Treasury Department looks forward to participating in it.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Chairman
Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am pleased to provide the Department's views on H.R. 3253, the "Department of Veterans Affairs Emergency Preparedness Act of 2002," as passed by the Senate on August 1, 2002. This bill would "amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for the establishment of medical emergency preparedness centers in the Veterans Health Administration, to provide for the enhancement of the medical research activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and for other purposes."

On July XX, 2002, the President sent to Congress the Administration's proposal to create a new Department of Homeland Security which would make the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) the lead agency for all homeland security threats – including biological terrorism, potentially the gravest homeland security threat of the 21st century. The DHS Secretary should have both the responsibility and authority to prepare for and respond to bioterrorism. To carry out these responsibilities, the DHS Secretary should have control over bioterrorism research funding and public health preparedness grants, in consultation with Secretary of HHS and VA. It is necessary that VA be a strong partner in this effort, but that it not act independently. Therefore the Administration cannot support H.R. 3253 which would be inconsistent with the President's plan to make the DHS Secretary the lead for medical emergency preparedness. ~~The Senate passed version of H.R. 3253 contains an array of different provisions and generally, the Department does not object overall to passage of the measure. The Department's General Counsel articulated the Department's views on most of the provisions in the bill at a hearing held by the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee on May 2, 2002.~~ In this letter, I also want to highlight our strong opposition to enactment ~~of one particular section of the bill,~~ section 401. With respect to a second particular section, section 403, we strongly favor its enactment in a different context but I want nevertheless to convey our concern that its protective scope is unintentionally broad.

Formatted: Strikethrough

Formatted: Strikethrough

Section 401

Specifically, section 401 would broaden subchapter IV of chapter 73 and subchapter IV if chapter 81 of title 38, United States Code, which contain the authority for nonprofit research and education corporations and sharing contracts, respectively, to permit the transfer, through contract, of VA appropriations from the Department to the corporations. Section 401 would establish a new section 7362, which would make VA appropriations "available for the conduct of research or education by a corporation" through a contract or agreement "executed pursuant to [the new paragraph (2) of new subsection (b)] or [the sharing law]." Finally, section 401 would establish a new section 8153(a)(3), which would amend the sharing law to add research and education and training to the resources that are authorized to be covered by sharing contracts, and would extend to the VA nonprofit and education corporations authorized by subchapter IV of chapter 73 of title 38 the special, noncompetitive treatment under that law that now applies to affiliated educational institutions.

In our view, section 401 would, if ultimately it becomes law, fundamentally alter the relationship between VA and the research corporations. The initial purpose of the corporations, and the principal reason for their success, has been to supplement appropriations. As formulated, the section would change the corporations' function from supporting research and education being conducted by the Department. It would allow the corporations to conduct those activities under private auspices becoming users of appropriations. The traditional value of the corporations has been their roles essentially as trustees for the benefit of research and education programs that VA conducts. That trust relationship ensures that corporations' interests and VA's interests are the same. Section 401 would frustrate that traditional trust relationship by giving rise to an arm's length contractual relationship between parties with necessarily competing interests.

Furthermore, conflict of interest concerns would make contracts between VA and the corporations extremely difficult to negotiate or administer. Persons who are employees of both, including the Director and the Chief of Staff at every facility, could not properly carry out their fiduciary and statutory responsibilities on behalf of either VA or a corporation. Given that each corporation has three directors who, by statute, are already VA executives and managers, oversight and troubleshooting on behalf of either VA or a corporation with respect to such contracts would be severely hampered by such conflicts.

Section 403

Section 403 would amend subchapter IV of chapter 73 of title 38 to establish in statute the coverage, under the Federal Tort Claims Act and relevant procedure, of corporation employees who perform VA research and education and training activities under appointments with VA. The section would specify in statute that the remedy under the tort claims law against the Government is exclusive. The section would thus clarify, for those individual employees, that they are immune from litigation based on covered torts.

The immunity provision, however, would purport to cover the described employees in connection with any of their acts, rather than limiting coverage of those employees to those times when they are actually carrying out the relevant duties. We recommend substituting, in paragraph (3) of the new subsection (b) of new section 7364A, the words "is actually performing" for the word "performs."

OMB Letter on HR 3253 to House and Senate

I am writing to express the Administration's concerns with H.R. 3253, the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) Emergency Preparedness Act of 2002.

On June 18, 2002, the President sent to Congress the Administration's proposal to create a new Department of Homeland Security (DHS), which would make it the lead agency for all homeland security threats – including biological terrorism, potentially the gravest homeland security threat of the 21st century. The DHS Secretary should have both the responsibility and authority to prepare for and respond to bioterrorism. To carry out these responsibilities, the DHS Secretary should have control over bioterrorism research funding and public health preparedness grants, in consultation with Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS), the Department of Defense (DoD), and VA. It is necessary that VA be a strong partner in this effort, but that it not act independently.

It is important to allow Congress to complete its action on the Department of Homeland Security Bill before any supporting legislation, that may or may not align with the mission and goals of the new Department, is considered. Therefore, the Administration does not support H.R. 3253 at this time because it would be inconsistent with the President's plan to make the DHS Secretary the lead for medical emergency preparedness. VA is already an important partner in the National Disaster Medical System, and any increased role needs to be carefully coordinated with the new Department.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.

Yes, at least prudentially. We do not have to advertise its availability, but we should not turn down reasonable requests from those who would seek it.

Where does this stand? Bottom line is that we should not make video available on a preferential basis to political entities. If available to them, should be available to others on same terms and conditions.

On a routine basis, no. But at times, when appropriate, we make tapes available free of charge. For example, the Oklahoma City Museum wanted a copy of the President's Speech on Sept. 14 at the National Cathedral -- we provided it. Does that count?

Do we allow other outside entities to purchase the footage? If so, the footage may be made available to GOP-TV on the same terms and conditions as it is made available to those other entities (with the caveat that we should always approve the GOP-TV usage in advance). Keep me posted.

Brett --

We talked a while back about finding a way to let RNC's GOP-TV use White House TV footage. Any movement on that? They need footage from the PA ceremony today and cannot get it commercially. Can we do anything to help?

September 17, 2002, Remarks by President in Tennessee:

I appreciate the fact that I'll be able to work with Lamar on making sure the good people who I nominate to our federal benches will not only get a fair hearing, but a speedy hearing, and will get approved. (Applause.) The country got to see what happens when the Senate gets so politicized that they won't give people a fair hearing when it comes to judicial nominees.

I named a fabulous woman out of Texas, named Priscilla Owen to the 5th Court. And they distorted her record. She had the highest ranking from the ABA, and yet having listened to the rhetoric coming out of a highly politicized and polarized committee, you never would have realized how qualified she is. She was turned down for purely political purposes. For the sake of a federal judiciary that is strong and solid, we need United States senators like Lamar Alexander who will be fair and reasonable and realistic, and will not play politics with the President's judicial nominees. (Applause.)

DRAFT

Statement of
The Honorable Robert H. Roswell, M.D.
Under Secretary for Health Department of Veterans Affairs
On Various Research Issues before the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives

September 19, 2002

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you to discuss various research and development issues that we understand you are interested in. Specifically, my testimony focuses on the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) technology transfer program, non-profit research corporations and educational foundations, human subject protections, and the recovery of indirect costs associated with conducting National Institutes of Health funded research at VA facilities. With me today are Dr. James F. Burris, Chief Research and Development Officer; Dr. John H. Mather, Chief Officer, Office of Research Compliance and Assurance; Dr. Mindy L. Aisen, Director, Rehabilitation Research and Development Service; and Mr. John A. Bradley, Director of Finance, Office of Research and Development.

1. VA Technology Transfer Program (TTP)

The history of the VA research program is a history of discoveries that have benefited not only veterans but also all American citizens. VA researchers have played key roles in developing the cardiac pacemaker, the CAT Scanner, the Seattle Foot, magnetic resonance imaging, and the nicotine patch. The first liver transplant in the United States was performed at a VA medical facility, and VA researchers pioneered the first successful drug treatments for high blood pressure and schizophrenia.

meetings with NIH, VA was informed that NIH would limit VA reimbursement to a rate based on incremental costs above the current level of indirect support for research that VA provides. This methodology would present tremendous difficulty for VA and is different from that applied to determine the reimbursement rate for other sites that conduct NIH funded research. At this time, we are considering what our next steps should be, but will meet again in October in a further attempt to resolve this issue.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. My colleagues and I will now be happy to answer any questions that you and other members of the Subcommittee might have.

REV_00352748

For many years, VA did not claim ownership rights to the new technologies its researchers developed. As a result, VA facilities and laboratories lost the opportunity to benefit financially from the discoveries they brought to life. Some important VA discoveries that did not capture the interest of private industry were never offered to the general public, despite their benefits to veterans and others. Today, VA takes credit for both the past and the future work of its researchers. If that work results in financial gain, VA uses that gain on behalf of veterans.

To facilitate this vision, the TTP requires that VA assert an ownership interest whenever appropriate, so that VA can build upon its discoveries and ensure access to technologies by veterans. The TTP is committed to supporting the highest quality intramural research program. This means not only moving discovery from the laboratory to clinical practice in a timely manner, but also assuring that inventors and their host VA medical centers (VAMC) receive optimal advice and support so that they may realize equitable compensation and recognition.

VA operates a substantial research program in connection with the research programs at many of the medical institutions with whom it is affiliated. As a result, many VA researchers also hold academic appointments with VA affiliates. Some of VA's best and most beneficial inventions have come out of this setting, and VA continues to promote this research relationship, as it benefits our veterans and the public generally.

Although VA can assert an ownership right in inventions made by its employees under Executive Order 10096, it cannot, and does not, do so to the exclusion of our university partners or the inventors. Since many of VA's researchers hold dual appointments with VA and a university, VA recognizes that, in such cases, the universities often have an interest in an invention made at a VA facility, leading to joint ownership.

To further enhance cooperation between VA and its research affiliates, and to facilitate the technology transfer process, VA's TTP developed a Cooperative Technology Administration Agreement (CTAA). The first such agreement, developed in collaboration with the University of California, was signed in May 2000 and included all 10 campuses of the University system. This CTAA served as the template for future agreements with other affiliates, but has evolved with input from other research partners. To date, over 50 percent of our major university partners have executed a CTAA with VA. In the absence of a CTAA, VA and an affiliated university would have to negotiate jointly developed technology on a case-by-case basis, a time consuming and expensive process. With a CTAA, an affiliated university will generally take the lead on patenting and commercializing jointly owned inventions.

VA understands that the Bayh-Dole Act has imposed certain requirements and responsibilities on its university research affiliates. VA believes that its own rights, responsibilities, and interests in the operation of a research program are not in conflict with those requirements.

VA has been meeting with members of the Association of American Medical Colleges and the Council on Governmental Relations to discuss VA technology transfer issues. Both organizations expressed general support of the use of the CTAA but also requested that VA consider authorizing variations from the model CTAA as circumstances at individual research universities dictate. VA has provided an updated model CTAA on the Research web site that allows potential partners to select specific language that best suits their particular needs for certain sections of the CTAA. Feedback on this has been very positive. The website also contains other information to assist partners in understanding this program.

When VA is the sole owner or the university partner does not wish to take the lead in developing an invention, VA may choose to patent and commercialize the intellectual property. In the last two years, nine patent applications have been submitted to the US Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) for action. An additional five applications are in preparation with contract patent counsel for submission to USPTO. VA has recently concluded its first commercial licensing agreement and will finalize a second agreement this autumn.

VA's intellectual property portfolio has grown steadily from FY 1999 to date, as shown below.

- In FY 1999, VA received 48 invention disclosures and asserted ownership rights on 20. Of those 20 inventions, 12 involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. In the remaining eight, VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency. VA retained a government use license in 13 inventions.
- In FY 2000, VA received 85 invention disclosures and VA asserted ownership rights on 51. Thirty-nine (39) involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency in the remaining 12. VA retained a government use license in 18 inventions.
- In FY 2001, VA received 132 invention disclosures and asserted ownership rights on 91. Sixty-eight involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. In 20, VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency. Three are being handled under public domain processing. VA retained a government use license in 15 inventions.
- In FY 2002 to date, VA has received 115 invention disclosures. VA has asserted ownership rights on 62, 55 of which involved joint ownership where the affiliate assumed the lead. VA obtained sole ownership or assumed responsibility as the lead agency in 7, and none were handled under public domain processing. VA retained a government use license in 7 inventions.

2. Non-profit Research Corporations and Educational Foundations

In 1988, Congress authorized the creation of non-profit research corporations at VAMCs to support the VA research mission. Public Law 106-117 (1999), the Veterans Millennium Health Care and Benefits Act, expanded the authority to create new VA non-profit corporations to support research or education or both. It also authorized existing VA non-profit corporations to expand their mission to include support of education activities as well as research. Education activities supported by the non-profits may be directed at patients or employees. Such activities include broad instructional learning experiences for veterans and their families that focus on improving and maintaining patient health as well as work-related instruction and training for VA staff.

There are 85 active VA non-profit research corporations and educational foundations (non-profits). These non-profits enable the Department to spend optimally the funds it receives from non-VA sources. The non-profits have greater procurement flexibility than the General Post Fund and are not subject to Federal employment regulations or ceilings. Further, the non-profits are not subject to the restriction under current National Institute of Health (NIH) policy that limits reimbursements for indirect costs if the research is conducted at VA. Several non-profits have successfully negotiated with NIH to include an indirect cost reimbursement rate for NIH grants administered by the corporations.

In 2001, non-profits received $179.5 million in donations, grants, and interest for both research and education activities. Non-profits supported almost 4,700 VA-approved projects. Many are medical research clinical trials that focus on conditions prevalent in the veteran population and thus provide a direct benefit to VA patients. Non-profits also provide salary support for clinical research personnel to monitor veteran patients enrolled in clinical trials. These services enable the research participants to receive additional care and attention. In addition, the general public benefits from approval of new treatments that are developed through this research.

Non-profits also enable many facilities to fund essential services. For example, some non-profits, such as the McGuire Research Institute in Richmond, Virginia, are helping facilities meet increasingly complex and stringent human research requirements by hiring research compliance and institutional review board (IRB) staff. Others, such as the Atlanta Research and Education Foundation, have paid for numerous renovation and repair projects, which include the design and remodeling of laboratories. The Indiana Institute for Medical Research has purchased confocal microscopes and other equipment for the Indianapolis VAMC.

In 2001, non-profits managed funds very efficiently, as evidenced by a low administrative overhead rate whose mean and median equaled 11 percent. As a result, 90 percent of all non-profit expenditures directly supported approved research and education. This reflects the sound oversight and management of each board of directors and the dedicated efforts of the non-profit staffs.

VA assigns primary oversight of non-profits to the local facility leadership. The facility director approves all board members and, as required by statute, serves on the board with the facility chief of staff and the associate chief of staff for research/education. A certified public accountant and an external auditor assist each corporation board of directors in their oversight function. In addition, facility directors have at their disposal the same measures to prevent waste, fraud, and abuse in the operations of the VA non-profits as they do for other organizations within their purview. This would include, for example, a request that the Chief Financial Officer at the facility review certain corporation documents or investigations conducted by the Office of the Inspector General. Non-profits also are subject to audit and inspection by the Internal Revenue Service. They also receive periodic scrutiny by state, city, and other local government agencies.

3. Human Subject Protections

VA is fully committed to protecting those who participate in clinical trials and other research projects. At the previous hearing, I described many of the initiatives that VA has undertaken to ensure that its scientists and research staff fully understand and comply with the stringent ethical principles and rigorous regulatory requirements of our human research protection program. The role of the Office of Research Compliance and Assurance (ORCA) was discussed at the previous hearing. In this statement I will update information previously provided and focus more on the activities of VA's Office of Research and Development (ORD).

During the past three years VA facilities received more than $85 million to support research administrative functions including human subject protections. This funding has permitted facilities to increase staffing, education, resources (such as computers and computer software to allow better tracking and more complete record keeping), and networking among facilities to disseminate best practices and model documents.

This year, ORD is providing over $30 million per year in administrative support funding, and it will make up to an additional $10 million in non-recurring funds available over two years for Institutional Review Board-related proposals.

An important educational tool is the Research and Development Accreditation Consultation Team, or ReDACT. ReDACT offers consultation, coaching and counseling for local IRBs and research personnel. The team consists of experts in human subjects protection and NCQA standards, and we expect it to be a key part of VA's effort to protect research participants.

Participants in clinical trials will also benefit from several other initiatives. ORD has collaborated with veterans service organizations to convene focus groups that review informed consent documents and procedures to make the process more understandable and meaningful to potential research participants. Trial investigators must receive formal training in human research protections before submitting research proposals to their IRB for review and approval. In addition, investigators in our Cooperative Studies Program, a program that conducts very large multi-site studies, must attend training in Good Clinical Practices, the international "gold standard" for conducting clinical trials. A Site Monitoring and Review Team (SMART) provides site monitoring and Good Clinical Practices reviews in an effort to improve the conduct of clinical trials. SMART conducts approximately 125 random and requested site visits per year.

The Handbook on Human Subjects Protection is awaiting final review before being disseminated to the field. The handbook combines the concerted effort of both VA and non-VA experts in the field of human subjects protection to enhance VA policies. Facilities will need virtually no additional time and effort to implement the handbook. The draft handbook has been available on VA's web site throughout its development and many of the new requirements are good clinical practices that the field has begun to adopt. ORD is also developing a Web-based instruction/guidance document on writing informed consent documents. Educational efforts will also be provided through national and regional conferences, programs in conjunction with the ReDACT effort, and national conference calls.

Indicative of the success of these efforts is a recent quality improvement survey that ORD conducted. Ninety-seven percent of responding research subjects agreed with the statement "The Informed Consent process including discussion with study staff gave me the information needed to make an informed decision about whether or not to participate in the study."

At the previous hearing, I discussed at length VA's efforts to accredit its human research protection programs through the National Committee on Quality Assurance (NCQA). As of September 18, 2002, eight additional final reports have been issued, with seven facilities being "Accredited with Conditions," and one site receiving "Not Accredited" status. Cumulatively, 15 facilities have been "Accredited with Conditions," two have received a final result of "Not Accredited," two have received a preliminary result of "Not Accredited," and four sites still await final reports. ORCA is continuing to conduct reviews at these sites.

I also noted that this first-of-its-kind program had temporarily suspended accreditation reviews in order to conduct quality improvement activities, based on the experiences of the first 23 inspections. VA and NCQA have both agreed that the standards needed modification to help streamline the review process and to clarify selected requirements. As a result, NCQA released revised standards for public comment on September 5.

The revised standards reflect Institute of Medicine recommendations encouraging institutions to involve participants in human research programs. NCQA has proposed broadening standards requiring research centers to conduct surveys of participants and potential participants and to use their input to help improve their research and their human subject protection programs. The standards also promote self-evaluation, through which VA medical centers can analyze and rate their own performance, and continuously improve their research programs.

For the program's second year, NCQA and VA have agreed on an approach to coordinate oversight requirements for VAMCs that use the IRBs of affiliated academic institutions. Under this process, sites that use the IRBs of an academic affiliate accredited by the Association for the Accreditation of Human Research Protection Programs (AAHRPP) will be permitted to undergo a more limited NCQA survey. Upon completion of the survey, NCQA will issue an accreditation decision that combines the results of the NCQA and AAHRPP surveys. NCQA, AAHRPP, and VA will be developing detailed plans to implement the new process in the coming weeks.

4. Recovery of Indirect Costs for National Institutes for Health (NIH) Funded Research

The strength of VA's medical research program can be assessed not only through its discoveries and Nobel Prize winners but also by the success of its investigators in winning research grants from the NIH. In FY 2001, VA researchers received almost $400 million in NIH grants, a sum greater than VA's own Medical and Prosthetic Research budget.

Although the VA/NIH partnership has grown to both institutions' benefit, the facilities and administration (F&A) or indirect costs of supporting NIH funded research has strained VA resources and infrastructure. Unlike universities and even some foreign facilities, VA sites do not receive NIH reimbursement for indirect costs incurred in supporting that research. VA has had to absorb this cost. The inability to recoup the F&A costs associated with the NIH-sponsored research threatens to limit artificially the amount of NIH funded research conducted at VA sites.

VA estimates that its F&A costs for NIH-supported research are almost 24 percent of the direct grant amounts, a rate that is lower than those negotiated with most universities and non-profit organizations. These lower costs reflect the significant contribution that VA will continue to make toward supporting NIH funded research conducted in VA facilities.

Since the May hearing, NIH officials have acknowledged the need for VA to be properly reimbursed for indirect research costs. However, in recent

Doug,
We had to make 2 changes and they are highlighted in red. Please review and let me know if this needs to be re-approved.

Our victory in the 2000 Election was due in large part to the extraordinary way in which our Republican team came together. Thank you for the important role you played - and continue to play - in making that team so successful.

Perhaps most critical was our turnout effort on Election Day - an effort that, while strong in 2000, can almost certainly be improved and expanded in 2002. To that end the RNC is recruiting talented and capable leaders to join the ?72 Hour Task Force?: an elite group of volunteers who will help direct turnout efforts in targeted states and districts across the country on behalf of the state parties.

We invite you to join this Task Force.

If you attended the Volunteer Deployment Party we will be contacting you soon to discuss your arrangements. If you have not signed up please contact Jason Huntsberry at your earliest possible convenience at 202-863-8823 or jhuntsberry@rnchq.org to sign up.

Thank you again for your support and dedication - and onward to success this November!

September 17, 2002, Remarks by President in Tennessee:

I appreciate the fact that I'll be able to work with Lamar on making sure the good people who I nominate to our federal benches will not only get a fair hearing, but a speedy hearing, and will get approved. (Applause.) The country got to see what happens when the Senate gets so politicized that they won't give people a fair hearing when it comes to judicial nominees.

I named a fabulous woman out of Texas, named Priscilla Owen to the 5th Court. And they distorted her record. She had the highest ranking from the ABA, and yet having listened to the rhetoric coming out of a highly politicized and polarized committee, you never would have realized how qualified she is. She was turned down for purely political purposes. For the sake of a federal judiciary that is strong and solid, we need United States senators like Lamar Alexander who will be fair and reasonable and realistic, and will not play politics with the President's judicial nominees. (Applause.)

Institute for Justice Urges Swift Approval of Michael McConnell

The Institute for Justice today urged the Senate Judiciary Committee to vote favorably on the nomination of Michael McConnell to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit. Professor McConnell is a distinguished legal scholar who is widely respected by both liberal and conservative colleagues in academia. McConnell was nominated by President Bush on May 9, 2001, and his nomination has been pending since that time. The 25 percent vacancy rate in the 10th Circuit and Professor McConnell's having received from the American Bar Association its highest rating of "well qualified" are only two of the many reasons why he deserves speedy confirmation.

"The hysterical and mean-spirited rhetoric of partisan interest groups seeking to derail the McConnell nomination mischaracterizes his writings and reveals a desperate effort to further politicize the judicial selection process," said Chip Mellor, president and general counsel of the Washington, D.C.-based Institute for Justice, a constitutional law firm. "The committee should reject their attempts for character assassination and distortion and, after a robust hearing, vote to send the McConnell nomination to the full Senate."

Professor McConnell has written path-breaking articles on constitutional law, particularly the religion clauses of the First Amendment. These articles have received widespread praise and respect among legal scholars, lawyers and courts.

"Michael McConnell epitomizes the qualities our nation should seek in its judges," Mellor said. "He is humble, honest, intelligent and hard working. He is a passionate defender of the Constitution and has consistently championed the principle of equal justice for all."

This is to request approval from the White House for the Secretary of Energy to travel on aircraft owned by ConocoPhillips on September 23, 2002, in relation to his official travel to two remote locations in Alaska.
The Secretary will be going to Alaska to tour the Alpine production facility which is an example of the new environmentally sensitive oil production facilities being deployed in Alaska. After finishing a tour of Alpine, the Secretary will visit the village of Kaktovik, located in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) to hear the concerns about opening ANWR to development. The Secretary will finish the day in Anchorage where he will make the annual dinner speech to 500 members of ":The Alliance." The Alliance represents the companies which provides services and equipment to the major oil companies in Alaska and who employ approximately 35,000 workers.

Alpine and Kaktovik are remote locations with no commercial air service available. In fact, the Alpine facility is owned by ConocoPhillips.
I have been advised that the only viable option is to travel via the ConocoPhillips aircraft. Section 1353 of title 31, United States code, authorizes the acceptance by executive branch agencies of payments for travel, subsistence, and related expenses from non-Federal sources in connection with the attendance of employees at certain meetings or similar functions. Further, the Department has concluded that the need for the Secretary's participation outweighs any concern that acceptance of the travel may or may reasonably appear to improperly influence him in the performance of his official duties.

White House policy requires that Cabinet members may not travel on aircraft owned, chartered, or maintained by a company primarily for company use rather than commercial use if the company is regulated by or doing business with their employing agency. Because the Department currently has two contracts with ConocoPhillips, (one approximately $10 million, the other approximately $26 million), it is our understanding that White House approval is necessary for the Secretary to travel on this aircraft owned by ConocoPhillips.

Also, the Department's Office of Aviation Management is currently researching the possibility of using government-owned aircraft for this entire trip, in such case White House approval will not be necessary.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and please let me know

if you have any questions or require anything further.

Alicia --

I know you are working with Counsel's Office on this, and we appreciate all your efforts in getting them folks to respond quickly. Our latest proposal would be an invitation to Monday's event with the President at Trenton-Mercer Airport from Chairman Kyrillos in his capasity as State Senator Kyrillos, sent on official legislative stationary, with an RSVP number in his legislative district office.
Or, can you send us an approved invite on White House stationary, and we will simply send that exact letter out to the schools.

Thanks.

CGF

PS -- I have a 5pm walk-thru with Therese at the airport, so please reply to

Mike DuHaime at the above address when you get something later this afternoon. Thanks again.

HEALTH

Jim Talent's mother lost her battle with breast cancer, so his plan is dedicated to initiatives increasing access to quality health care for women and children.

Jim voted to end the "drive-by deliveries" and to require HMO's to allow mothers and newborns to remain in the hospital for a minimum of 48 hours of in-patient care after a regular delivery and at least 96 hours following a caesarian section. (H.R.3666, CQ Vote #426, September 24, 1996)

In contrast, Jean Carnahan has no health care plan.
She voted against a workable Patient's Bill of Rights and actively worked against legislation that would increase access to quality affordable health care for thousands of Missourians. In addition, she is part of a Senate that has failed to pass a prescription drug benefit for Missouri's seniors.

Neighborhoods Threatened by Violence

Jim Talent has a plan to help make our neighborhoods safe again.

Jim co-sponsored Aimee's Law to make sure that those convicted of murder, rape or child molestation actually go to jail.

He led efforts to stop domestic violence and he co-sponsored the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, which allocated $3.6 billion for shelters and sexual assault prevention programs. (H.R. 1248, CQ Vote #491, September 26, 2000)

Jim voted for Project Exile providing $100 million to states to fight gun violence and would require mandatory prison time for violent offenders who use a gun in the commission of a crime. (Project Exile, H.R. 4051, April 11, 2000)

Call Jim Talent at (314) 453-0344.
Ask him to keep fighting for his Missouri First families initiatives.

Jim Talent's Plan: Putting Missouri Families First

Honest answers. Hard work. Real results.

Jim Talent's Plan:

Jim Talent is offering a plan that works for Missouri families because he asks more from government. Why? Jim and Brenda Talent have three school-age children of their own. They know that these aren't just "issues" to parents and real people.

"Real results may be the difference between buying or renting a home, paying or postponing a debt, paying for college education or worrying you won't be able to help your children."

President George W. Bush
Renewing America's Purpose

Helping Middle Class Families

His plan would make President Bush's tax cut permanent. It makes it easier – not harder – for more Missourians to join the ranks of the middle class.

Jim Talent' s plan recognizes some families need help – help that is best provided when the distance is shortest between decision-makers and those in need.

Jim led the successful effort to help millions of people move from government dependency into jobs and self-sufficiency. His historic bipartisan welfare reform bill became law in 1996.

In contrast, Jean Carnahan voted against marriage penalty relief for millions of Missouri families, voted against making health care costs deductible for women working at home, doesn't support proposals which will provide quality, affordable health care to millions of Americans, and voted against a workable Patient's Bill of Rights.

Government's greatest charge – Missouri's children.

More than 130,000 of the 565,000 American children in foster care, ranging in age from toddlers to teenagers, are waiting to be adopted. On average, these children have been in foster care for almost four years.

Most of these children have special needs that limit their ability to be adopted.

In 1996, Jim Talent helped pass a $5,000 tax credit for families who adopt a child, including overseas adoption. For couples assisting children with special needs, the credit is increased to $6,000.

In contrast, Jean Carnahan voted against making the purchase of elementary school supplies, books and college tuition tax deductible and Carnahan sponsored legislation that would send millions of Missouri's school construction dollars to other more wealthy states like California and Massachusetts.

HR 3210 EH

107th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 3210

AN ACT< /b>

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE AND TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the `Terrorism Risk Protection Act'.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. < span class=GramE>Short title and table of contents.
Sec. 2. < span class=GramE>Congressional findings.
Sec. 3. < span class=GramE>Authority of Secretary of the Treasury.
Sec. 4. < span class=GramE>Submission of premium information to Secretary.
Sec. 5. < span class=GramE>Initial and subsequent triggering determinations.
Sec. 6. < span class=GramE>Federal cost-sharing for commercial insurers.
Sec. 7. < span class=GramE>Assessments.
Sec. 8. < span class=GramE>Terrorism loss repayment surcharge.
Sec. 9. < span class=GramE>Administration of assessments and surcharges.
Sec. 10. Application to self-insurance arrangements and offshore insurers and reinsurers.
Sec. 11. Study of reserves for property and casualty insurance for terrorist or other catastrophic events.
Sec. 12. State preemption.
Sec. 13. Consistent State guidelines for coverage for acts of terrorism.
Sec. 14. Consultation with State insurance regulators and NAIC.
Sec. 15. Litigation management.
Sec. 16. Study of potential effects of terrorism on life insurance industry.
Sec. 17. Railroad and trucking insurance study.
Sec. 18. Study of reinsurance pool system for future acts of terrorism.
Sec. 19. Definitions.
Sec. 20. Covered period and extension of program.

interest, which may include avoiding unreasonable economic disruption or excessive market instability and avoiding undue burdens on small businesses.

(d) CIVIL MONETARY PENALTY-

(1) IN GENERAL- The Secretary may assess a civil monetary penalty in an amount not exceeding the amount under paragraph (2) against any commercial insurer that the Secretary determines, on the record after opportunity for a hearing--

(A) has failed to pay an assessment under section 7 in accordance with the requirements of, or regulations issued, under this Act;

(B) has failed to charge, collect, or remit surcharges under section 8 in accordance with the requirements of, or regulations issued under, this Act;

(C) has intentionally provided to the Secretary erroneous information regarding premium or loss amounts; or

(D) has otherwise failed to comply with the provisions of, or the regulations issued under, this Act.

(2) AMOUNT- The amount under this paragraph is the greater of $1,000,000 and, in the case of any failure to pay, charge, collect, or remit amounts in accordance with this Act or the regulations issued under this Act, such amount in dispute.

SEC. 10. APPLICATION TO SELF-INSURANCE ARRANGEMENTS AND OFFSHORE INSURERS AND REINSURERS.

(a) SELF-INSURANCE ARRANGEMENTS- The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, apply the provisions of this Act, as appropriate, to self-insurance arrangements by municipalities and other entities, but only if such application is determined before the occurrence of a triggering event and all of the provisions of this Act are applied uniformly to such entities.

(b) OFFSHORE INSURERS AND REINSURERS- The Secretary shall ensure that the provisions of this Act are applied as appropriate to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial property and casualty insurance.

SEC. 11. STUDY OF RESERVES FOR PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE FOR TERRORIST OR OTHER CATASTROPHIC EVENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL- The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study of issues relating to permitting property and casualty insurance companies to establish deductible reserves against losses for future acts of terrorism, including--

(1) whether such tax-favored reserves would promote (A) insurance coverage of risks of terrorism, and (B) the accumulation of additional resources needed to satisfy potential claims resulting from such risks,

(2) the lines of business for whic h such reserves would be appropriate, including whether such reserves should be applied to personal or commercial lines of business,
(3) how the amount of such reserves would be determined,
(4) how such reserves would be administered,
(5) a comparison of the Federal tax treatment of such reserves with other insurance reserves permitted under Federal tax laws,
(6) an analysis of the use of tax-favored reserves for catastrophic events, including acts of terrorism, under the tax laws of foreign countries, and
(7) whether it would be appropriate to permit similar reserves for other future catastrophic events, such as natural disasters, taking into account the factors under the preceding paragraphs.

(b) REPORT- Not later than 4 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to Congress on the results of the study under subsection (a), together with recommendations for amending the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or other appropriate action.

SEC. 12. STATE PREEMPTION.

(a) COVERED PERILS- A commercial insurer shall be considered to have complied with any State law that requires or regulates the provision of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism if the insurer provides coverage in accordance with the definitions regarding acts of terrorism under this Act or under any regulations issued by the Secretary.

(b) RATE LAWS- If any provision of any State law prevents an insurer from increasing its premium rates in an amount necessary to recover any assessments pursuant to section 7, such provision is preempted only to the extent necessary to provide for such insurer to recover such losses.

(c) FILE AND USE-

(1) IN GENERAL- With respect only to commercial property and casualty insurance covering acts of terrorism, any provision of State law that requires, as a condition precedent to the effectiveness of rates or policies for such insurance that is made available by an insurer licensed to transact such business in the State, any action (including prior approval by the State insurance regulator for such State) other than filing of such rates and policies and related information with such State insurance regulator is preempted to the extent such law requires such additional actions for such insurance coverage.

(2) SUBSEQUENT REVIEW AUTHORITY- Paragraph (1) shall not be considered to preempt a provision of State law solely because the law provides that rates and policies for such insurance coverage are, upon such filing, subject to subsequent review and action, which may include actions to disapprove or discontinue use of such rates or policies, by the State insurance regulator.

(3) TREATMENT OF PRIOR REVIEW PROVISIONS- Any authority for prior review and action by a State regulator preempted under paragraph (1) shall be deemed to be authority to conduct a subsequent review and action on such filings.

SEC. 13. CONSISTENT STATE GUIDELINES FOR COVERAGE FOR ACTS OF TERRORISM.

(a) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING COVERED PERILS- It is the sense of the Congress that--

(1) the NAIC, in consultation with the Secretary, should develop appropriate definitions for acts of terrorism that are consistent with this Act and appropriate standards for making determinations regarding occurrences of acts of terrorism;

(2) each State should adopt the definitions and standards developed by the NAIC for purposes of regulating insurance coverage made available in that State;

(3) in consulting with the NAIC, the Secretary should advocate and promote the development of definitions and standards that are appropriate for purposes of this Act; and

(4) after consultation with the NAIC, the Secretary should adopt further definitions for acts of terrorism and standards for determinations that are appropriate for this Act.

(b) INSURANCE RESERVE GUIDELINES-

(1) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING ADOPTION BY STATES- It is the sense of the Congress that--

(A) the NAIC should develop appropriate guidelines for commercial insurers and pools regarding maintenance of reserves against the risks of acts of terrorism; and

(B) each State should adopt such guidelines for purposes of regulating commercial insurers doing business in that State.

(2) CONSIDERATION OF ADOPTION OF NATIONAL GUIDELINES- Upon the expiration of the 6-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall make a determination of whether the guidelines referred to in paragraph (1) have, by such time, been developed and adopted by nearly all States in a uniform manner. If the Secretary determines that such guidelines have not been so developed and adopted, the Secretary shall consider adopting, and may adopt, such guidelines on a national basis in a manner that supersedes any State law regarding maintenance of reserves against such risks.

(c) GUIDELINES REGARDING DISCLOSURE OF PRICING AND TERMS OF COVERAGE-

(1) SENSE OF CONGRESS- It is the sense of the Congress that the States should require, by laws or regulations governing the provision of commercial property and casualty insurance that includes coverage for acts of terrorism, that the price of any such terrorism coverage, including the costs of any terrorism related assessments or surcharges under this Act, be separately disclosed.

(2) ADOPTION OF NATIONAL GUIDELINES- If the Secretary determines that the States have not enacted laws or adopted regulations adequately providing for the disclosures described in paragraph (1) within a reasonable period of time after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall, after consultation with the NAIC, adopt guidelines on a national basis requiring such disclosure in a manner that supersedes any State law regarding such disclosure.

SEC. 14. CONSULTATION WITH STATE INSURANCE REGULATORS AND NAIC.

(a) IN GENERAL- The Secretary shall consult with the State insurance regulators and the NAIC in carrying out this Act.
(b) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE, ASSESSMENTS, AND SURCHARGES- The Secretary may take such actions, including entering into such agreements and providing such technical and organizational assistance to insurers and State insurance regulators, as may be necessary to provide for the distribution of financial assistance under section 6 and the collection of assessments under section 7 and surcharges under section 8.
(c) INVESTIGATING AND AUDITING CLAIMS- The Secretary may, in consultation with the State insurance regulators and the NAIC, investigate and audit claims of insured losses by commercial insurers and otherwise require verification of amounts of premiums or losses, as appropriate.

SEC. 15. LITIGATION MANAGEMENT.< /span>

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION-
(1) IN GENERAL- There shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for such property damage, personal injury, or death, except as provided in subsection (d).
(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS- All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (d).
(3) SUBSTANTIVE LAW- The substantive law for decision in any such action shall be derived from the law, including choice of law principles, of the State in which such acts of terrorism occurred, unless such law is inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law.
(4) JURISDICTION- For each determination under paragraph (1), the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall designate one or more district courts of the United States which shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim (including any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death) brought pursuant to this subsection. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall select and assign the district court or courts based on the convenience of the parties and the just and efficient conduct of the proceedings. For purposes of personal jurisdiction, the district court or courts designated by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall be deemed to sit in all judicial districts in the U nited States.

(5) LIMITS ON DAMAGES- In an action brought under this subsection for damages:

(A) No punitive damages intended to punish or deter, exemplary damages, or other damages not intended to compensate a plaintiff for actual losses may be awarded, nor shall any party be liable for interest prior to the judgment.

(B)(i) Each defendant in such an action shall be liable only for the amount of noneconomic damages allocated to the defendant in direct proportion to the percentage of responsibility of the defendant for the harm to the plaintiff, and no plaintiff may recover noneconomic damages unless the plaintiff suffered physical harm.

(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the term `noneconomic damages' means damages for losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium, hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and any other nonpecu niary losses.

(6) COLLATERAL SOURCES- Any recovery by a plaintiff in an action under this subsection shall be reduced by the amount of collateral source compensation, if any, that the plaintiff has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the acts of terrorism with respect to which the determination under paragraph (1) was made.

(7) ATTORNEY FEES- Reasonable attorneys fees for work performed shall be subject to the discretion of the court, but in no event shall any attorney charge, demand, receive, or collect for services rendered, fees or compensation in an amount in excess of 20 percent of the damages ordered by the court to be paid pursuant to this section, or in excess of 20 percent of any court-approved settlement made of any claim cognizable under this section. Any attorney who charges, demands, receives, or collects for services rendered in connection with such claim any amount in excess of that allowed under this section, if recovery be had, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

(b) EXCLUSION- Nothing in this section shall in any way limit the liability of any person who--

(1) attempts to commit, knowingly participates in, aids and abets, or commits any act of terrorism with respect to which a determination under subsection (a)(1) was made, or any criminal act related to or resulting from such act of terrorism; or

(2) participates in a conspiracy to commit any such act of terrorism or any such criminal act.

(c) RIGHT OF SUBROGATION- The United States shall have the right of subrogation with resp ect to any claim paid by the United States under this Act.

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW- Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect--

(1) any party's contractual right to arbitrate a dispute; or

(2) any provision of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (Public Law 107-42; 49 U.S.C. 40101 note).

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD- This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including, if applicable, any extension period provided for under section 6.

(f) SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENTS FROM FROZEN ASSETS OF TERRORISTS, TERRORIST ORGANIZATIONS, AND STATE SPONSORS OF TERRORISM-

(1) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in paragraph (2), in every case in which a person obtains a judgment against a terrorist party on a claim for compensatory damages for an act of terrorism, or a claim for money damages brought pursuant to section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code, the frozen assets of that terrorist party, or any agency or instrumentality of that terrorist party, shall be available for satisfaction of the judgment, to the extent of any compensatory damages awarded in the judgment for which the terrorist party is liable.

(2) PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER-

(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), upon determining on an asset-by-asset basis that a waiver is necessary in the national security interest, the President may waive the requirements of this subsection in connection with (and prior to the enforcement of) any judicial order directing attachment in aid of execution or execution against any property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.

(B) A waiver under this paragraph shall not apply to--

(i) property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that has been used for any nondiplomatic purpose (including use as rental property), the proceeds of such use; or

(ii) any asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations that is sold or otherwise transferred for value to a third party, the proceeds of such sale or transfer.

(3) DEFINITIONS- In this subsection:

(A) The term `terrorist party' means a terrorist, a terrorist organization, or a foreign state designated as a state sponsor of terrorism under section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)) or section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371).

(B) The term `frozen assets' means assets seized or frozen by the United States in accordance with law.

(C) The term `property subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' and the term `asset subject to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations' mean any property or asset, respectively, the attachment in aid of execution or execution of which would result in a violation of an obligation of the United States under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, as the case may be.

SEC. 16. STUDY OF POTENTIAL EFFECTS OF TERRORISM ON LIFE INSURANCE INDUSTRY.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT- Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall establish a commission (in this section referred to as the `Commission') to study and report on the potential effects of an act or acts of terrorism on the life insurance industry in the United States and the markets served by such industry.

(b) MEMBERSHIP AND OPERATIONS-

(1) APPOINTMENT- The Commission shall consist of 7 members, as follows:

(A) The Secretary of the Treasury or the designee of the Secretary.

(B) The Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or the designee of the Chairman.

(C) The Assistant to the President for Homeland Security.

(D) 4 members appointed by the President, who shall be--

(i) a representative of direct underwriters of life insurance within the United States;

(ii) a representative of reinsurers of life insurance within the United States;

(iii) an officer of the NAIC; and

(iv) a representative of insurance agents for life underwriters.

(2) OPERATIONS- The chairperson of the Commission shall determine the manner in which the Commission shall operate, including funding, staffing, and coordination with other governmental entities.

(c) STUDY- The Commission shall conduct a study of the life insurance industry in the United States, which shall identify and make recommendations regarding--

(1) possible actions to encourage, facilitate, and sustain the provision, by the life insurance industry in the United States, of coverage for losses due to death or disability resulting from an act or acts of terrorism, including in the face of threats of such acts; and

(2) possible actions or mechanisms to sustain or supplement the ability of the life insurance industry in the United States to cover losses due to death or disability resulting from an act or acts of terrorism in the event that--

(A) such acts significantly affect mortality experience of the population of the United States over any period of time;

(B) such losses jeopardize the capital and surplus of the life insurance industry in the United States as a whole; or

(C) other consequences from such acts occur, as determined by the Commission, that may significantly affect the ability of the life insurance industry in the United States to independently cover such losses.

(d) RECOMMENDATIONS- The Commission may make a recommendation pursuant to subsection (c) only upon the concurrence of a majority of the members of the Commission.

(e) REPORT- Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit to the House of Representatives and the Senate a report describing the results of the study and any recommendations developed under subsection (c).

(f) TERMINATION- The Commission shall terminate 60 days after submission of the report pursuant to subsection (e).

SEC. 17. RAILROAD AND TRUCKING INSURANCE STUDY.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study to determine how the Federal Government can address a possible crisis in the availability and affordability of railroad and trucking insurance by making such insurance for acts of terrorism available on commercially reasonable terms. Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report regarding the results and conclusions of the study.

SEC. 18. STUDY OF REINSURANCE POOL SYSTEM FOR FUTURE ACTS OF TERRORISM.

(a) STUDY- The Secretary, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Comptroller General of the United States shall jointly conduct a study on the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism to replace the program provided for under this Act.
(b) CONSULTATION- In conducting the study under subsection (a), the Secretary, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Comptroller General shall consult with (1) academic experts, (2) the United Nations Secretariat for Trade and Development, (3) representatives from the property and casualty insurance industry, (4) representatives from the reinsurance industry, (5) the NAIC, and (6) such consumer organizations as the Secretary considers appropriate.
(c) REPORT- Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Comptroller General shall jointly submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study under subsection (a).

SEC. 19. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act, the following definitions shall apply:
(1) ACT OF TERRORISM-
(A) IN GENERAL- The term `act of terrorism' means any act that the Secretary determines meets the requirements under subparagraph (B), as such requirements are further defined and specified by the Secretary in consultation with the NAIC.
(B) REQUIREMENTS- An act meets the requirements of this subparagraph if the act--
(i) is unlawful;
(ii) causes harm to a person, property, or entity, in the United States, or in the case of a domestic United States air carrier or a United States flag vessel (or a vessel based principally in the United States on which United States income tax is paid and whose insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States), in or outside the United States;
(iii) is committed by a person or group of persons or associations who are recognized, either before or after such act, by the Department of State or the Secretary as an international terrorist group or have conspired with such a group or the group's agents or surrogates;
(iv) has as its purpose to overthrow or destabilize the government of any country, or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the government of the United States or any segment of the economy of United States, by coercion; and

(v) is not considered an act of war, except that this clause shall not apply with respect to any coverage for workers compensation.

(2) AFFILIATE- The term `affiliate' means, with respect to an insurer, any company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the insurer.

(3) AGGREGATE WRITTEN PREMIUM- The term `aggregate written premium' means, with respect to a year, the aggregate premium amount of all commercial property and casualty insurance coverage written during such year under all lines of commercial property and casualty insurance.

(4) COMMERCIAL INSURER- The term `commercial insurer' means any corporation, association, society, order, firm, company, mutual, partnership, individual, aggregation of individuals, or any other legal entity that provides commercial property and casualty insurance. Such term includes any affiliates of a commercial insurer.

(5) COMMERCIAL PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE-

(A) IN GENERAL- The term `commercial property and casualty insurance' means insurance or reinsurance, or retrocessional reinsurance, for persons or properties in the United States against--

(i) loss of or damage to property;

(ii) loss of income or extra expense incurred because of loss of or damage to property;

(iii) third party liability claims caused by negligence or imposed by statute or contract, including workers compensation; or

(iv) loss resulting from debt or default of another.

(B) EXCLUSIONS- Such term does not include--

(i) insurance for homeowners, tenants, private passenger nonfleet automobiles, mobile homes, or other insurance for personal, family, or household needs;

(ii) insurance for professional liability, including medical malpractice, errors and omissions, or directors' and officers' liability; or

(iii) health or life insurance.

(6) CONTROL- A company has control over another company if--

(A) the company directly or indirectly or acting through one or more other persons owns, controls, or has power to vote 25 percent or more of any class of voting securities of the other company;

(B) the company controls in any manner the election of a majority of the directors or trustees of the other company; or

Sec. 21. Regulations.

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.< /span>

The Congress finds that--

(1) the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon of September 11, 2001, resulted in a large number of deaths and injuries, the destruction and damage to buildings, and interruption of business operations;

(2) the attacks have inflicted possibly the largest losses ever incurred by insurers an d reinsurers in a single day;

(3) while the insurance and reinsurance industries have committed to pay the losses arising from the September 11 attacks, the resulting disruption has created widespread market uncertainties with regard to the risk of losses arising from possible future terrorist attacks;

(4) such uncertainty threatens the continued availability of United States commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk at meaningful coverage levels;

(5) the unavailability of affordable commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorist acts threatens the growth and stability of the United States economy, including impeding the ability of financial services providers to finance commercial property acquisitions and new construction;

(6) in the past, the private insurance and reinsurance markets have shown a remarkable resiliency in adapting to changed circumstances;

(7) given time, the private markets will diversify and develop risk spreading mechanisms to increase capacity and guard against possible future losses incurred by terrorist attacks;

(8) it is necessary to create a temporary industry risk sharing program to ensure the continued availability of commercial property and casualty insurance and reinsurance for terrorism-related risks;

(9) such action is necessary to limit immediate market disruptions, encourage economic stabilization, and facilitate a transition to a viable market for private terrorism risk insurance;

(10) in addition, it is necessary promptly to conduct a study of whether there is a need for reserves for property and casualty insurance for terrorist or other catastrophic events; and

(11) terrorism insurance plays an important role in the efficient functioning of the economy and the financing of commercial property acquisitions and new construction and, therefore, the Congress intends to continue to monitor, review, and evaluate the private terrorism insurance and reinsurance marketplace to determine whether additional action is necessary to maintain the long-term stability of the real estate and capital markets.

SEC. 3. AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

(C) the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that the company directly or indirectly exercises a controlling influence over the manag ement or policies of the other company.

(7) COVERED PERIOD- The term `covered period' has the meaning given such term in section 20.

(8) INDUSTRY-WIDE LOSSES- The term `industry-wide losses' means the aggregate insured losses sustained by all insurers from coverage written under all lines of commercial property and casualty insurance.

(9) INSURED LOSS- The term `insured loss' means any loss, net of reinsurance and retroc essional reinsurance, covered by commercial property and casualty insurance.

(10) NAIC- The term `NAIC' means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(11) NET PREMIUM- The term `net premium' means, with respect a commercial insurer and a year, the aggregate premium amount collected by such commercial insurer for all commercial property and casualty insurance coverage written during such year under all lines of commercial property and casualty insurance by such commercial insurer, less any premium paid by such commercial insurer to other commercial insurers to insure or reinsure those risks.

(12) SECRETARY- The term `Secretary' means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(13) STATE- The term `State' means the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa , and any other territory or possession of the Uni ted States.

(14) STATE INSURANCE REGULATOR- The term `State insurance regulator' means, with respect to a State, the principal insurance regulatory authority of the State.

(15) TRIGGERING DETERMINATION- The term `triggering determination' has the meaning given such term in section 5(a).

(16) TRIGGERING EVENT- The term `triggering event' means, with respect to a triggering determination, the occurrence of an act of terrorism, or the occurrence of such acts, that caused the insured losses resulting in such triggering determination.

(17) UNITED STATES- The term `United States' means, collectively, the States (as such term is defined in this section).

SEC. 20. COVERED PERIOD AND EXTENSION OF PROGRAM.

(a) COVERED PERIOD- Except to the extent provided otherwise under subsection (b), for purposes of this Act, the term `covered period' means the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on January 1, 2003.

(b) EXTENSION OF PROGRAM- If the Secretary determines that extending the covered period is necessary to ensure the adequate availability in the United States of commercial property and casualty insurance coverage for acts of terrorism, the Secretary may, subject to subsection (c), extend the covered period by not more than two years.
(c) REPORT- The Secretary may exercise the authority under subsection (b) to extend the covered period only if the Secretary submits a report to the Congress providing notice of and setting forth the reasons for such extension.

SEC. 21. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall issue any regulations necessary to carry out this Act.

Passed the House of Representatives November 29, 2001.

Attest:

Clerk.

107th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 3210
AN ACT< /b>

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

END

The Secretary of the Treasury shall be responsible for carrying out a program for financial assistance for commercial property and casualty insurers, as provided in this Act.

SEC. 4. SUBMISSION OF PREMIUM INFORMATION TO SECRETARY.

To the extent such information is not otherwise available to the Secretary, the Secretary may require each insurer to submit, to the Secretary or to the NAIC, a statement specifying the net premium amount of coverage written by such insurer under each line of commercial property and casualty insurance sold by such insurer during such periods as the Secretary may provide.

SEC. 5. INITIAL AND SUBSEQUENT TRIGGERING DETERMINATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this Act, a `triggering determination' is a determination by the Secretary that an act of terrorism has occurred during the covered period and that the aggregate insured losses resulting from such occurrence or from multiple occurrences of acts of terrorism all occurring during the covered period, meet the requirements under either of the following paragraphs:

(1) INDUSTRY-WIDE TRIGGER- Such industry-wide losses exceed $1,000,000,000.

(2) INDIVIDUAL INSURER TRIGGER- Such industry-wide losses exceed $100,000,000 and some portion of such losses for any single commercial insurer exceed--

(A) 10 percent of the capital surplus of such commercial insurer (as such term is defined by the Secretary); and

(B) 10 percent of the net premium written by such commercial insurer that is in force at the time the insured losses occurred;

except that this paragraph shall not apply to any commercial insurer that was not providing commercial property and casualty insurance coverage prior to September 11, 2001, unless such insurer incurs such losses under commercial property and casualty insurance providing coverage for acts of terrorism through a pool of reserves for terrorism risks that is not under the control of any commercial insurer.

(b) DETERMINATIONS REGARDING OCCURRENCES- The Secretary, after consultation with the Attorney General of the United States and the Secretary of State, shall have the sole authority which may not be delegated or designated to any other officer, employee, or position, for determining whether--

(1) an occurrence was caused by an act of terrorism; and

(2) an act of terrorism occurred during the covered period.

SEC. 6. FEDERAL COST-SHARING FOR COMMERCIAL INSURERS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Pursuant to a triggering determination, the Secretary shall provide financial assistance to commercial insurers in accordance with this section to cover insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, which shall be repaid in accordance with subsection (e).

(b) AMOUNT-

(1) INDUSTRY-WIDE TRIGGER- Subject to subsections (c) and (d), with respect to a triggering determination under section 5(a)(1), financial assistance shall be made available under this section to each commercial insurer in an amount equal to the difference between--

(A) 90 percent of the amount of the insured losses of the insurer as a result of the triggering event involved; and

(B) $5,000,000.< /span>

(2) INDIVIDUAL INSURER TRIGGER- Subject to subsections (c) and (d), with respect to a triggering determination under section 5(a)(2), financial assistance shall be made available under this section, to each commercial insurer incurring insured losses as a result of the triggering event involved that exceed the amounts under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of such section, in an amount equal to the difference between--

(A) 90 percent of the amount of the insured losses of the insurer as a result of such triggering event; and

(B) the amount under subparagraph (B) of section 5(a)(2).

(3) ADDITIONAL AMOUNTS- Subject to subsection (c), if the Secretary has provided financial assistance to a commercial insurer pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsequently makes a triggering determination pursuant to section 5(a)(1), the Secretary shall provide financial assistance to such insurer in connection with such subsequent triggering determination (in addition to the amount of financial assistance provided to such insurer pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection) in the amount under section 5(a)(2)(B).

(c) AGGREGATE LIMITATION-

(1) IN GENERAL- The aggregate amount of financial assistance provided pursuant to this section may not exceed $100,000,000,000.

(2) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING SEVERE LOSSES- It is the sense of the Congress that acts of terrorism resulting in insured losses greater than $100,000,000,000 would necessitate further action by the Congress to address such additional losses.

(d) LIMITATIONS- The Secretary may establish such limitations as may be necessary to ensure that payments under this section in connection with a triggering determination are made only to commercial insurers that are not in default of any obligation under section 7 to pay assessments or under section 8 to collect surcharges.

(e) REPAYMENT- Financial assistance made available under this section shall be repaid through assessments under section 7 collected by the Secretary and surcharges remitted to the Secretary under section 8. Any such amounts collected or remitted shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury.

(f) EMERGENCY DESIGNATION- Congress designates the amount of new budget authority and outlays in all fiscal years resulting from this section as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901(e)). Such amount shall be available only to the extent that a request, that includes designation of such amount as an emergency requirement as defined in such Act, is transmitted by the President to Congress.

SEC. 7. ASSESSMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL- In the case of a triggering determination, each commercial insurer shall be subject to assessments under this section for the purpose of repaying a portion of the financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with such determination.

(b) AGGREGATE ASSESSMENT- Pursuant to a triggering determination, the Secretary shall determine the aggregate amount to be assessed under this section among all commercial insurers, which shall be equal to the lesser of--

(1) $20,000,000,000; and

(2) the amount of financial assistance paid under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination.

The aggregate assessment amount under this subsection shall be assessed to commercial insurers through an industry obligation assessment under subsection (c) and, if necessary, the remainder shall be assessed through one or more financing assessments under subsection (d).

(c) INDUSTRY OBLIGATION ASSESSMENTS-

(1) IN GENERAL- Immediately upon the occurrence of a triggering determination, the Secretary shall impose an industry obligation assessment under this subsection on all commercial insurers, subject to paragraph (3).

(2) AMOUNT- The aggregate amount of an industry obligation assessment in connection with a triggering determinat ion shall be equal to--

(A) in the case of a triggering determination occurring during the covered period specified in section 20(a), the lesser of--

(i) the difference between (I) $5,000,000,000, and (II) the aggregate amount of any assessments made by the Secretary pursuant to this section during the portion of such covered period preceding the triggering determination; and

(ii) the amount of financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination; or

(B) such other aggregate industry obligation amount as may apply pursuant to subsection (g).

(3) TIMING OF MULTIPLE ASSESSMENTS-

(A) DELAYED IMPOSITION AND AGGREGATION OF ASSESSMENTS- In the case of any triggering determination occurring within 12 months of the occurrence of a previous triggering determination, any industry obligation assessments under this subsection resulting from such subsequent determination shall be imposed upon the conclusion of the quarterly assessment period under subparagraph (B) during which such determination occurs.

(B) QUARTERLY ASSESSMENT PERIOD- With respect to a subsequent triggering determination referred to in subparagraph (A), the quarterly assessment periods under this subparagraph are--

(i) the 3-month period that begins upon the imposition of the industry obligation assessment resulting from the triggering determination that--

(I) occurred most recently before such subsequent triggering determination; and

(II) did not occur within 12 months of the occurrence of any previous triggering determination; and

(ii) each successive 3-month period thereafter that begins during the covered period.

(d) FINANCING ASSESSMENTS-

(1) IN GENERAL- If the aggregate assessment amount in connection with a triggering determination exceeds the aggregate amount of the industry obligation assessment under subsection (c) in connection with the determination, the remaining amount shall be assessed through one or more, as may be necessary pursuant to paragraph (3), financing assessments under this subsection.

(2) TIMING- A financing assessment under this subsection in connection with a triggering determination shall be imposed only upon the expiration of any 12-month period beginning after such determination during which no assessments under this section have been imposed.

(3) LIMITATION- The aggregate amount of any financing assessments imposed under this subsection on any single commercial insurer during any 12-month period shall not exceed the amount that is equal to 3 percent of the net premium for such insurer for such period.

(e) ALLOCATION OF ASSESSMENT- The portion of the aggregate amount of any industry obligation assessment or financing assessment under this section that is allocated to each commercial insurer shall be based on the ratio that the net premium written by such commercial insurer during the year during which the assessment is imposed bears to the aggregate written premium for such year, subject to section 9 and the limitation under subsection (d)(3) of this section.

(f) NOTICE AND OBLIGATION TO PAY-

(1) NOTICE- As soon as practicable after any triggering determination, the Secretary shall notify each commercial insurer in writing of an assessment under this section, which notice shall include the amount of the assessment allocated to such insurer.

(2) EFFECT OF NOTICE- Upon notice to a commercial insurer, the commercial insurer shall be obligated to pay to the Secretary, not later than 60 days after receipt of such notice, the amount of the assessment on such commercial insurer.

(3) FAILURE TO MAKE TIMELY PAYMENT- If any commercial insurer fails to pay an assessment under this section before the deadline established under paragraph (2) for the assessment, the Secretary may take either or both of the following actions:

(A) CIVIL MONETARY PENALTY- Assess a civil monetary penalty pursuant to section 9(d) upon such insurer.

(B) INTEREST- Require such insurer to pay interest, at such rate as the Secretary considers appropriate, on the amount of the assessment that was not paid before the deadline established under paragraph (2).

(g) AGGREGATE INDUSTRY OBLIGATION AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM EXTENSION YEARS- If the Secretary exercises the authority under section 20(b) to extend the covered period, the aggregate industry obligation amount for purposes of subsection (c)(2)(B) shall, in the case of a triggering determination occurring during the portion of the covered period beginning on the date referred to in section 20(a), be equal to the lesser of--

(1) the difference between (A) $10,000,000,000, and (B) the aggregate amount of any assessments made by the Secretary pursuant to this section during the 12-month period preceding the triggering determination; and

(2) the amount of financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination.

(h) ADMINISTRATIVE FLEXIBILITY-

(1) ADJUSTMENT OF ASSESSMENTS- The Secretary may provide for or require estimations of amounts under this section and may provide for subsequent refunds or require ad ditional payments to correct such estimations, as appropriate.

(2) DEFERRAL OF CONTRIBUTIONS- The Secretary may defer the payment of part or all of an assessment required under this section to be paid by a commercial insurer, but only to the extent that the Secretary determines that such deferral is necessary to avoid the likely insolvency of the commercial insurer.

(3) TIMING OF ASSESSMENTS- The Secretary shall make adjustments regarding the timing and imposition of assessments (including the calculation of net premiums and aggregate written premium) as appropriate for commercial insurers that provide commercial property and casualty insurance on a non-calendar year basis.

SEC. 8. TERRORISM LOSS REPAYMENT SURCHARGE.

(a) DETERMINATION OF IMPOSITION AND COLLECTION-

(1) IN GENERAL- If, pursuant to a triggering determination, the Secretary determines that the aggregate amount of financial assistance provided pursuant to section 6 exceeds $20,000,000,000, the Secretary shall consider and weigh the factors under paragraph (2) to determine the extent to which a surcharge under this section should be established.

(2) FACTORS- The factors under this paragraph are--

(A) the ultimate costs to taxpayers if a surcharge under this section is not established;

(B) the economic conditions in the commercial marketplace;

(C) the affordability of commercial insurance for small- and medium-sized business; and

(D) such other factors as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(3) POLICYHOLDER PREMIUM- The amount established by the Secretary as a surcharge under this section shall be established and imposed as a policyholder premium surcharge on commercial property and casualty insurance written after such determination, for the purpose of repaying financial assistance made available under section 6 in connection with such triggering determination.

(4) COLLECTION- The Secretary shall provide for commercial insurers to collect surcharge amounts established under this section and remit such amounts collected to the Secretary.

(b) AMOUNT AND DURATION- Subject to subsection (c), the surcharge under this section shall be established in such amount, and shall apply to commercial property and casualty insurance written during such period, as the Secretary determines is necessary to recover the aggregate amount of financial assistance provided under section 6 in connection with the triggering determination that exceeds $20,000,000,000.

(c) PERCENTAGE LIMITATION- The surcharge under this section applicable to commercial property and casualty insurance coverage may not exceed, on an annual basis, the amount equal to 3 percent of the premium charged for such coverage.

(d) OTHER TERMS- The surcharge under this section shall--

(1) be based on a percentage of the premium amount charged for commercial property and casualty insurance coverage that a policy provides; and

(2) be imposed with respect to all commercial property and casualty insurance coverage written during the period referred to in subsection (b).

(e) EXCLUSIONS- For purposes of thi s section, commercial property and casualty insurance does not include any reinsurance provided to primary insurance companies.

SEC. 9. ADMINISTRATION OF ASSESSMENTS AND SURCHARGES.

(a) MANNER AND METHOD-

(1) IN GENERAL- Except to the extent specified in such sections, the Secretary shall provide for the manner and method of carrying out assessments under section 7 and surcharges under section 8, including the timing and procedures of making assessments and surcharges, notifying commercial insurers of assessments and surcharge requirements, collecting payments from and surcharges through commercial insurers, and refunding of any excess amounts paid or crediting such amounts against future assessments.

(2) EFFECT OF ASSESSMENTS AND SURCHARGES ON URBAN AND SMALLER COMMERCIAL AND RURAL AREAS AND DIFFERENT LINES OF INSURANCE- In determining the method and manner of imposing assessments under section 7 and surcharges under section 8, including the amount of such assessments and surcharges, the Secretary shall take into consideration--

(A) the economic impact of any such assessments and surcharges on commercial centers of urban areas, including the effect on commercial rents and commercial insurance premiums, particularly rents and premiums charged to small businesses, and the availability of lease space and commercial insurance within urban areas;

(B) the risk factors related to rural areas and smaller commercial centers, including the potential exposure to loss and the likely magnitude of such loss, as well as any resulting cross-subsidization that might result; and

(C) the various exposures to terrorism risk for different lines of commercial property and casualty insurance.

(b) TIMING OF COVERAGES AND ASSESSMENTS- The Secretary may adjust the timing of coverages and assessments provided under this Act to provide for equivalent application of the provisions of this Act to commercial insurers and policies that are not based on a calendar year.

(c) ADJUSTMENT- The Secretary may adjust the assessments charged under section 7 or the percentage imposed under the surcharge under section 8 at any time, as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the national

VOTER REGISTRATION APPLICATION ENCLOSED

"IN THESE IMPORTANT TIMES, I ASK YOU TO DO SOMETHING IMPORTANT FOR OUR NATION: REGISTER TO VOTE. BY VOTING, YOU REAFFIRM OUR NATION'S COMMITMENT TO DEMOCRACY AND SHOW THE WORLD THAT AMERICA IS STRONG."

PRESIDENT GEORGE W. BUSH

REV_00353190

Dear Fellow Tennessean,

Beth Harwell
Chairman
Republican Party of Tennessee

We witnessed first hand during the close results of the 2000 Presidential Election — every vote does count. But if you're not registered to vote, you won't have a say in choosing the elected leaders who represent you at the federal, state, and local levels of government.

To make your vote count and to keep Tennessee moving in the right direction, we urge you to register immediately and vote Republican on November 5th.

Under the leadership and guidance of Republicans we are implementing the Party's philosophy of lower taxes, better education, TennCare reform and a smaller, smarter government.

By cutting taxes and by getting government off the backs of working families, we can unleash an entrepreneurial spirit that will allow you to keep more of your hard-earned money, revitalize Tennessee's business climate and create hundreds of thousands of new job opportunities for the citizens of this great state.

Your participation in this year's election is especially critical to making sure we continue moving this state forward – which means electing Republicans to the Tennessee state Senate and House, for Congress, U.S. Senate and Governor.

Don't be shut out of the process. You may use the attached official voter registration forms to register or to indicate a change of address but be sure to mail your forms to your local county Election Commission postmarked before October 6th. If you have any questions, please don't hesitate to contact me directly at (615) 329-9595.

Sincerely,

Beth

Beth Harwell

VOTER REGISTRATION INSTRUCTIONS

1. Complete one of the voter registration applications to the right. You may use the second application for any member of your family who wishes to register and meets the voting criteria. (Please PRINT with a blue or black INK pen — not felt tip.)
2. Make sure you complete all information in items 1-8 and sign and complete the Voter Declaration section.
3. Detach the completed form(s), moisten the areas indicated on the top of the form and fold in half. Simply apply first class postage and drop in the mail, postmarked before October 6th.

VOTER REGISTRATION INFORMATION

You can use this form to:

- ☞ register to vote in Tennessee, or to
- ☞ let us know that your name or address has changed.

To register to vote:

- ☞ you must be a U.S. citizen, AND
- ☞ you must be a resident of Tennessee, AND
- ☞ you must be at least 18 years old on/or before the next election, AND
- ☞ you must not have been convicted of a felony, or if you have your full rights of citizenship must have been restored)or you must have received a pardon).
- ☞ Anyone who registers by mail, must vote in person the first time he or she votes after registering.

MAIL OR HAND DELIVER THIS FORM TO YOUR COUNTY ELECTION COMMISSION.

- ☞ An application for voter registration must be postmarked or hand delivered to the proper county election commission office postmarked no later than October 6th.
- ☞ Voter registration records are public records, open to inspection by any citizen of Tennessee.

YOU ARE NOT REGISTERED TO VOTE UNTIL YOU RECEIVE A VOTER REGISTRATION CARD.

If you are qualified and the information on your form is complete, your name will be added to the county's voter rolls. A voter card will be mailed to you. This card will tell you where to vote.

For more information, call your county election commission.

Subject: RE: LRM IKK265 - - JUSTICE Oversight Testimony on Terrorist Financing : A Progress Report on Implementation of the USA PATRIO...

As best I can tell the Chertoff testimony was essentially in support of a DOJ draft bill on money laundering cleared by OMB and sent to Congress on 9/25/01. So the reference should be to that bill, not Chertoff's testimony.

These paras need to be deleted, as they describe proposals that, while beneficial, have not been cleared within the Administration, as best I can tell:

"Another situation involves the valuation of blank bearer instruments...."
"As I mentioned earlier, the use of Hawalas...."
"Section 365 of the PATRIOT Act...."
"Finally, I would suggest...."

OK?

Sorry, but could you just answer this question? See WHGC email below: Can you confirm with DOJ that the specific proposals summarized here were previously proposed in the Chertoff testimony? We ask because some of these have been politically controversial in the past.

The testimony refers on p. 6-7 to prior testimony of AAG Chertoff concerning proposals to supplement money-laundering statutes and then summarizes a few, including pre-trial freeze of assets subject to forfeiture, bulk cash smuggling and administrative subpoenas. Can you confirm with DOJ that the specific proposals summarized here were previously proposed in the Chertoff testimony?

Will Bankruptcy Reform Make the System More Equitable and Efficient?

featuring

Todd Zywicki
George Mason University School of Law

Lawrence Ausubel
University of Maryland

Last July a House-Senate conference committee reconciled legislation to overhaul the nation's bankruptcy laws. In particular, the legislation would introduce means testing to the federal bankruptcy code and direct wealthier debtors into Chapter 13 repayment plans instead of allowing them to eliminate their debts under Chapter 7. Critics of reform argue that the legislation would place undue burdens on low-income debtors by making it more difficult for them to obtain a "fresh start" through the bankruptcy system. Supporters argue that the current system provides a windfall to many debtors by making it attractive to file for bankruptcy and point to the record number of bankruptcies in recent years as evidence of a system badly in need of repair. Please join us for a timely discussion on the future of bankruptcy reform.

Re: Miguel Estrada

Dear Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch:

During much of the year in which I served as Principal Deputy Solicitor General (1996-1997), Miguel Estrada and I were colleagues. I understand from published reports that my predecessor, Paul Bender, has criticized Mr. Estrada's professional conduct while in the Solicitor General's Office. I do not share those criticisms at all. During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views—or indeed that they reflected any consideration other than the long-term interests of the United States. I greatly enjoyed working with Miguel, profited from our interactions, and was genuinely sorry when he decided to leave the office in favor of private practice.

Much has been said about Mr. Estrada's views regarding policy and social issues. I have never had a conversation with Mr. Estrada about either. To my mind—and I believe Mr. Estrada's as well—those views were entirely irrelevant to the work we had before us in the Solicitor General's office. I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity.

Yours sincerely,

Seth P. Waxman

Irene:

My understanding is that -- after conversations among many of the parties -- that two things are true:

1. There will be an interagency meeting tomorrow to discuss next steps on FSC/ETI, and
2. The letter will not go out until after that meeting and any modifications to the letter agreed upon tomorrow.

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. We wholeheartedly agree that the Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation. Convening such a group would be a positive next step in resolving the issue, and the Treasury Department looks forward to participating in it.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

PRESIDENT GEORGE W. BUSH

Dear Friend,

Thank you for taking the time to vote Republican this election year. The Republican Party has a strong record of achievement over the last two years, and by participating in the election process and voting Republican – you can help our progress.

Despite our successes, much work remains. Our Republican Team is fighting to:

- Strengthen Medicare and Social Security for future generations
- Teach every child to read
- Lower taxes and control the growth of government
- Reform welfare to end dependency on government
- Secure our nation's borders
- Win the war on terrorism

That is why your support is so critical to our success – EVERY VOTE COUNTS! To keep building on our success we must elect more Republicans to all levels of government. Please complete and mail the enclosed Absentee Ballot Application to ensure that your vote is counted on Election Day!

Sincerely,

George W. Bush

The 30th might work. He is traveling with the President that day, so we just need to see what time they get back. His schedule is just very hard because the President is traveling almost every monday until Election Day. Would you be willing to have it on a non-Monday or Tuesday?

If you don't get an answer today regarding the NFC call on the 16th could Karl do the call on the 23 or 24th. I am getting worried about getting the info out to everyone since it is only 4 days away. Thanks,

Irene:

My understanding is that -- after conversations among many of the parties -- that two things are true:

1. There will be an interagency meeting tomorrow to discuss next steps on FSC/ETI, and
2. The letter will not go out until after that meeting and any modifications to the letter agreed upon tomorrow.

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. We wholeheartedly agree that the Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation. Convening such a group would be a positive next step in resolving the issue, and the Treasury Department looks forward to participating in it.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

Good afternoon,
According to my conversation with Doug and his email, please see below, I just want to make sure that everyone agrees that this letter will not be cleared at this time. Could you please let me know that we are all on the same page. Thank you.

Irene:

My understanding is that -- after conversations among many of the parties -- that two things are true:

1. There will be an interagency meeting tomorrow to discuss next steps on FSC/ETI, and
2. The letter will not go out until after that meeting and any modifications to the letter agreed upon tomorrow.

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. We wholeheartedly agree that the Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation. Convening such a group would be a positive next step in resolving the issue, and the Treasury Department looks forward to participating in it.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Fifteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The Amendment, by its language and history, applies to all state elections.

Notwithstanding the clear language of the Fifteenth Amendment, Hawaii determines a citizen's qualifications to vote in elections for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs solely on the basis of the citizen's race. Hawaii's racial voting qualification is a clear violation of the Fifteenth Amendment, and that violation alone requires reversal of the decision of the court of appeals.

The racial voting qualification also violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. This Court's cases establish that the Equal Protection Clause prohibits racial classifications except when such classifications are necessary and narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest.

ÿ[*3]ÿ Outside of an immediate threat to life or limb, as in a prison race riot, a compelling government interest exists only when the government has imposed the racial classification as a remedy for past, identified discrimination in that jurisdiction and field (such as discrimination in the schools in a particular jurisdiction). Hawaii has not shown or attempted to show that its racial voting qualification in elections for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs is designed to remedy past discrimination in voting against "Hawaiians" in Hawaii.

In any event, even assuming such past discrimination, a racial qualification to vote has never been held necessary and narrowly tailored to remedy past discrimination. Moreover, this racial voting qualification is not narrowly tailored in scope: It is a strict racial qualification that categorically excludes members of certain racial groups (all but "Hawaiians") from the ballot in elections for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs--including members of racial groups historically discriminated against in the United States and in Hawaii. Nor is the racial qualification narrowly tailored in duration: Hawaii established the racial classification in 1978, and it has no termination date.

Hawaii has explained that Hawaiians share a common heritage and background that they, like many Americans of all backgrounds, cherish and celebrate. But a state has no right to engage in racial classifications on the right to vote in a state election simply to preserve a particular culture. This Court has forbidden analogous "cultural" justifications for racial classifications in cases ranging from Brown v. Board of Education to Loving v. Virginia.

Finally, Hawaii's attempt to end-run the Equal Protection Clause by analogizing "Hawaiians" to American Indian tribes is entirely unavailing. As this Court repeatedly has held, differential treatment of Indian tribes as tribes is justified by the Constitution's specific reference to Indian tribes as separate sovereigns. The Constitution does not contain a Hawaiian ÿ[*4]ÿ Commerce Clause, and Hawaiians do not and could not qualify as an American Indian tribe.

ARGUMENT INTRODUCTION

Hawaii determines a citizen's qualifications to vote in state elections for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs on the basis of the citizen's race. As is clear from that introductory sentence alone, Hawaii's racial restriction on voting is a patent violation of the United States Constitution. See City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co., 488 U.S. 469 (1989); Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967); Anderson v. Martin, 375 U.S. 399 (1964); Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339 (1960); Guinn v. United States, 238 U.S. 347 (1915). n2 n2 We will use the terms "race" and "racial" throughout this brief to encompass the overlapping concepts of race, ethnicity, ancestry, and national origin, as government distinctions based on such characteristics are subject to the same stringent constitutional scrutiny. See Oyama v. California, 332 U.S. 633, 646 (1948); Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 374 (1886). We will adopt the convention of state law and use the term "Hawaiian" to refer to those whose ancestors were Hawaiian. For purposes of our brief, there is no need to further distinguish by blood amount between "Hawaiians" and "native Hawaiians," although state law does so.

Two provisions of law provide the backdrop for this controversy: the federal Admission Act of 1959 and the Hawaii Constitution, as amended in 1978. The Admission Act, enacted by Congress at the time of Hawaii's admission to the Union, ceded to the State approximately 1,800,000 acres of land that the United States had owned since 1898. The Admission Act restricted the State's use of land to five purposes: (1) support of public schools; (2) betterment of the conditions of native Hawaiians; (3) development of farm and home ownership on as widespread a basis as possible; (4) making of public improvements; and (5) provision of lands for public use. Admission Act of March 18, 1959, 73 Stat. 4, õ 5(f).

The Admission Act further provided that "such lands, proceeds, and income shall be managed and disposed of for one or more of the foregoing purposes in such manner as the constitution and laws of said State may provide." Id. The Act thereby permitted the State to use those lands in a race-neutral way and/or for the benefit of all citizens of Hawaii. Indeed, that is precisely how the State administered the lands from 1959 to 1978 when the State used money from the lands on a race-neutral basis primarily for state educational purposes. Pet. App. 5a. n3 n3 A discrete block of 200,000 acres is administered by the State's Department of Hawaiian Home Lands pursuant to a separate statutory regime. A 1920 federal statute (the Hawaii Homes Commission Act, 42 Stat. 108) dealt with those lands by means of an express racial classification, albeit one that was not applied in the decades that followed. In any event, the HHCA program is not at issue here, although it also has serious constitutional problems to the extent that it relies on racial classifications.

In 1978, however, Hawaii dramatically changed course. The State enacted a constitutional amendment, see Haw. Const. art. xii, which along with a statute enacted shortly thereafter accomplished three things. First, the State required that 20% of the proceeds from the Admission Act lands be used solely to benefit certain native Hawaiians. Id.; Haw. Rev. Stat. õõ 10-3(1); 10-13.5. Second, the State created the Office of Hawaiian Affairs (OHA) to administer that 20% portion of the proceeds and to administer solely for the benefit of Hawaiians other monies received from general state funds. The OHA's officers must be Hawaiians. Haw. Const. art. xii.

Third, the State imposed still another racial qualification, allowing only Hawaiians to vote in the OHA elections. Haw. Rev. Stat. õ 13D-3(b) ("No person shall be eligible to register as a voter for the election of board members unless the person meets the following qualifications: (1) The person is Hawaiian . . . .").

The entire scheme is infused with explicit racial quotas, exclusions, and classifications to a degree this Court has rarely encountered in the last half-century. See generally Board of Educ. of Kiryas Joel Village Sch. Dist. v. Grumet, 512 U.S. 687, 730 (1994) (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment). The scheme benefits one preferred racial class within the State of Hawaii to the exclusion of all others and creates collateral racial classifications that are unnecessary even to serve that (itself unconstitutional) purpose. The scheme is a clearcut and extensive violation of the Constitution: None of its three elements, particularly the voting qualification at issue here, is constitutional.

Under the State's theory, the State of Massachusetts could declare certain state funds in Massachusetts to be distributed for the benefit of Irish-Americans, establish an Office of Irish Affairs composed solely of Irish-Americans to administer the funds, and restrict the vote for that Office to those citizens of Massachusetts with Irish blood. The State of Florida could do the same for Cuban-Americans, the State of Wisconsin for German-Americans, the State of Texas for Mexican-Americans, and so on. As a matter of logic and of constitutional law, affirmance of the court of appeals decision could usher in an extraordinary racial patronage and spoils system.

Hawaii no doubt will label such concerns an exaggeration, suggesting that other states would not adopt such a scheme. But we do not possess so clear a crystal ball as to confidently predict how a state 10 or 25 or 50 years from now might utilize a decision in Hawaii's favor in this case. And ultimately the Court must consider what a ruling in Hawaii's favor would authorize. See Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 731 (1988) (Scalia, J., dissenting). As Justice Jackson stated, "once a judicial opinion rationalizes such an order to show that it conforms to the Constitution, or rather rationalizes the Constitution to show that it sanctions such an order, the Court ÿ[*7]ÿ for all time has validated the principle of racial discrimination . . . . The principle then lies about like a loaded weapon ready for the hand of any authority that can bring forward a plausible claim of an urgent need." Korematsu v. United States 323 U.S. 214, 246 (1944) (Jackson, J., dissenting).

The aspect of the OHA program specifically at issue here is the racial voting qualification, which violates both the Fifteenth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment.

Hi Kate-
Have attached the draft invite for your approval. It will go on RLC Letterhead, but I don't have it digitally, so cannot send to you digitally. (Happy to fax if you want to see the whole shebang)

Awaiting approval of a few people on here. (yesses thus far- Baldwin, Creighton, Judge, Gemeinhardt, Oliver); calls into the rest, as well as Judy
Black, Roger Levy and Craig Fuller.

Note that we got the boot from the Oval Room, so it's now at the Occidental.
Hope that is ok.

Invite will go on Monday along w/ a RLC Fact Sheet.

Thanks for your help.

Treasury (DeMarco reflecting Peter Fisher's comments) says that they strongly oppose the Interior and Transportation letters (and potentially State's as well) on this subject. Treasury feels the Interior and Transportation positions would open up Federal terrorism insurance to international exposure situations (e.g., American investments overseas) that we have been trying to avoid. I assured them that the issue would be thrashed out internally before the letters are ever cleared. You should expect to get a strong response from Treasury through your channel. It seems to us they may have a good point.

The Honorable
Chairman
Committee on
United States House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter provides the views of the Department of Transportation concerning H.R. 3210, the Terrorism Protection Act, as passed by the House of Representatives on November 29, 2001, and S. 2600, the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002, as passed by the U. S. Senate on June 18, 2002. The Department commends the Committees for their leadership in addressing the vital issue of commercial terrorism insurance, and looks forward to working with the conferees as differences between the House and Senate bills are resolved.

The Department supports the goals of H.R. 3210 and S. 2600. Catastrophic losses were incurred by commercial insurance underwriters as a result of the events of September 11th, and there has been an across-the-board reduction/elimination of terrorism insurance coverage. The Departments comments and recommendations regarding marine insurance industry matters are intended to assist the conferees in developing final legislation to provide the Department of Transportation and the Federal Government with the a comprehensive terrorism insurance program to respond to the new, post-September 11th threat environment.

Participating insurer

S. 2600 includes within its definition of "participating insurers" only insurers that are state-licensed and foreign surplus lines insurers listed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC). However, insurance for most maritime (and offshore energy production units) is exempt from state regulation, and therefore a state license or a NAIC listing is neither available or necessary for many of the insurers of these activities. The same is true for commercial aviation, yet the acceptability of insurers of these activities is often subject to active oversight by federal agencies regulating the underlying maritime, energy or aviation activity. MARAD, for example, has a formal approval process to qualify foreign underwriters to insure vessels receiving loan guarantees under Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, which takes into account a number of factors, including their financial condition. While insurer eligibility rules or practices vary with each federal agency, the Department believes that federal agency approval should be accorded equivalent status to State agency approval or NAIC listing. Therefore, if the S. 2600 structure is adopted in conference, a provision should be made to incorporate federal agency approval of insurers as a basis for eligibility.

H.R. 3210 includes a broad definition of "commercial insurer" and also expressly directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ensure that the act is applied "as appropriate to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial property and casualty insurance." This definition presumably makes certain that the insurers who cover activities in the United States territorial waters (and continental shelf) are eligible. If the conferees structure the final bill in a manner similar to H.R. 3210, they should retain the provision directing the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the act to offshore and non-admitted insurers, as appropriate.

Geographic Scope of Coverage

In S. 2600, the definitions of "act of terrorism" and "insured losses" are primarily limited to acts and harm occurring "within the United States." In H.R. 3210, the definition of "act of terrorism" refers to acts or harm occurring "in the United States." How these definitions would apply to activities conducted in the jurisdictional waters of the United States is unclear. Such activities include both coastwise and international shipping, bound to or from the United States, which carries the preponderance of U.S. exports and imports. Another critical activity is energy production on the United States continental shelf, which is an increasing share of the country's hydrocarbon production.

Congress specifically foresaw the possibility of terrorist acts against shipping in the U.S. territorial sea (the 12-mile limit) and against fixed platforms on the U.S. continental shelf when it passed the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (Pub. L. 103-322). Section 60019 of that Act ("Offenses of Violence against Maritime Navigation or Fixed Platforms") made such terrorist acts a federal crime and confirmed U.S. territorial jurisdiction over such criminal activities. These provisions, codified at 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280-2281, define U.S. jurisdiction with respect to "acts to compel the United States to do or abstain from doing any act" to include the "territorial sea of the United States" meaning all waters seaward to 12 nautical miles from the baseline on the United States (generally the shoreline); and the "continental shelf of the United States," meaning the seabed or subsoil of the submarine areas that extend beyond the territorial sea to the limits provided by the customary international law as reflected in Article 76 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Shipping and other maritime activity proximate to U.S. ports, including deepwater ports, and U.S. offshore energy facilities are potential targets of foreign terrorists. The conferees should ensure that such key economic activities are protected by the program. S. 2600 addresses this by including the territorial sea in its definition of "United States." However, the conferees should further clarify the definition of the United States by incorporating the jurisdictional lines set forth in 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280 and 2281 respectively for the "territorial sea of the United States" (12-mile nautical limit) and the "continental shelf of the United States." This will ensure that all shipping in U.S. waters, and all oil and gas activities on the United States continental shelf, fall within the geographic scope of the bill since these activities are equally as vital to the U.S. economy as other domestic activities covered under the bill.

Coverage of Title XI Guaranteed Vessels

Section 19 of H.R. 3210, which delineates the property eligible for terrorism insurance, includes United States flag vessels or vessels based prnicipally in the United states on which United States income tax is paid and who insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States. If the H.R. 3210 structure is adopted by the conferees, Subsection (1)(B)(ii) should be amended to also include foreign-flag vessels which are subject to a Title XI ship financing mortgage. MARAD has financed a number of vessels under the export provisions of Title XI of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act. Although those vessels are registered under non-U.S. flags, they carry a mortgage in favor of the United States. These vessels should be included under the provisions of this insurance to protect the government's security interest.

Railroad and Trucking Insurance Study

Section 17 of H.R. 3210 requires the Secretary of Treasury to conduct a study to determine how the Federal government should address a possible crisis in the availability and affordability of railroad and trucking insurance, by making such insurance for acts of terrorism available on commercially reasonable terms. The study would also address the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism to replace the program provided for under H.R. 3210.

If such a study is included in final legislation, the Department believes that it should be expanded to include all critical transportation systems and infrastructure, and not just the trucking and railroad industries. Therefore, Section 17 should be amended to also include ports, intermodal terminals, airports and pipelines. In addition, since most of the expertise on these transportation industry segments rests with DOT, the study should be co-chaired by the Secretary of Transportation.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, to the submission of this letter to Congress.

Sincerely,

Kirk K. Van Tine

Treasury (DeMarco reflecting Peter Fisher's comments) says that they strongly oppose the Interior and Transportation letters (and potentially State's as well) on this subject. Treasury feels the Interior and Transportation positions would open up Federal terrorism insurance to international exposure situations (e.g., American investments overseas) that we have been trying to avoid. I assured them that the issue would be thrashed out internally before the letters are ever cleared. You should expect to get a strong response from Treasury through your channel. It seems to us they may have a good point.

The Honorable
Chairman
Committee on
United States House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter provides the views of the Department of Transportation concerning H.R. 3210, the Terrorism Protection Act, as passed by the House of Representatives on November 29, 2001, and S. 2600, the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002, as passed by the U. S. Senate on June 18, 2002. The Department commends the Committees for their leadership in addressing the vital issue of commercial terrorism insurance, and looks forward to working with the conferees as differences between the House and Senate bills are resolved.

The Department supports the goals of H.R. 3210 and S. 2600. Catastrophic losses were incurred by commercial insurance underwriters as a result of the events of September 11th, and there has been an across-the-board reduction/elimination of terrorism insurance coverage. The Departments comments and recommendations regarding marine insurance industry matters are intended to assist the conferees in developing final legislation to provide the Department of Transportation and the Federal Government with the a comprehensive terrorism insurance program to respond to the new, post-September 11th threat environment.

Participating insurer

S. 2600 includes within its definition of "participating insurers" only insurers that are state-licensed and foreign surplus lines insurers listed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC). However, insurance for most maritime (and offshore energy production units) is exempt from state regulation, and therefore a state license or a NAIC listing is neither available or necessary for many of the insurers of these activities. The same is true for commercial aviation, yet the acceptability of insurers of these activities is often subject to active oversight by federal agencies regulating the underlying maritime, energy or aviation activity. MARAD, for example, has a formal approval process to qualify foreign underwriters to insure vessels receiving loan guarantees under Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, which takes into account a number of factors, including their financial condition. While insurer eligibility rules or practices vary with each federal agency, the Department believes that federal agency approval should be accorded equivalent status to State agency approval or NAIC listing. Therefore, if the S. 2600 structure is adopted in conference, a provision should be made to incorporate federal agency approval of insurers as a basis for eligibility.

H.R. 3210 includes a broad definition of "commercial insurer" and also expressly directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ensure that the act is applied "as appropriate to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial property and casualty insurance." This definition presumably makes certain that the insurers who cover activities in the United States territorial waters (and continental shelf) are eligible. If the conferees structure the final bill in a manner similar to H.R. 3210, they should retain the provision directing the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the act to offshore and non-admitted insurers, as appropriate.

Geographic Scope of Coverage

In S. 2600, the definitions of "act of terrorism" and "insured losses" are primarily limited to acts and harm occurring "within the United States." In H.R. 3210, the definition of "act of terrorism" refers to acts or harm occurring "in the United States." How these definitions would apply to activities conducted in the jurisdictional waters of the United States is unclear. Such activities include both coastwise and international shipping, bound to or from the United States, which carries the preponderance of U.S. exports and imports. Another critical activity is energy production on the United States continental shelf, which is an increasing share of the country's hydrocarbon production.

Congress specifically foresaw the possibility of terrorist acts against shipping in the U.S. territorial sea (the 12-mile limit) and against fixed platforms on the U.S. continental shelf when it passed the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (Pub. L. 103-322). Section 60019 of that Act ("Offenses of Violence against Maritime Navigation or Fixed Platforms") made such terrorist acts a federal crime and confirmed U.S. territorial jurisdiction over such criminal activities. These provisions, codified at 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280-2281, define U.S. jurisdiction with respect to "acts to compel the United States to do or abstain from doing any act" to include the "territorial sea of the United States" meaning all waters seaward to 12 nautical miles from the baseline on the United States (generally the shoreline); and the "continental shelf of the United States," meaning the seabed or subsoil of the submarine areas that extend beyond the territorial sea to the limits provided by the customary international law as reflected in Article 76 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Shipping and other maritime activity proximate to U.S. ports, including deepwater ports, and U.S. offshore energy facilities are potential targets of foreign terrorists. The conferees should ensure that such key economic activities are protected by the program. S. 2600 addresses this by including the territorial sea in its definition of "United States." However, the conferees should further clarify the definition of the United States by incorporating the jurisdictional lines set forth in 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280 and 2281 respectively for the "territorial sea of the United States" (12-mile nautical limit) and the "continental shelf of the United States." This will ensure that all shipping in U.S. waters, and all oil and gas activities on the United States continental shelf, fall within the geographic scope of the bill since these activities are equally as vital to the U.S. economy as other domestic activities covered under the bill.

Coverage of Title XI Guaranteed Vessels

Section 19 of H.R. 3210, which delineates the property eligible for terrorism insurance, includes United States flag vessels or vessels based prnicipally in the United states on which United States income tax is paid and who insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States. If the H.R. 3210 structure is adopted by the conferees, Subsection (1)(B)(ii)

should be amended to also include foreign-flag vessels which are subject to a Title XI ship financing mortgage. MARAD has financed a number of vessels under the export provisions of Title XI of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act. Although those vessels are registered under non-U.S. flags, they carry a mortgage in favor of the United States. These vessels should be included under the provisions of this insurance to protect the government's security interest.

Railroad and Trucking Insurance Study

Section 17 of H.R. 3210 requires the Secretary of Treasury to conduct a study to determine how the Federal government should address a possible crisis in the availability and affordability of railroad and trucking insurance, by making such insurance for acts of terrorism available on commercially reasonable terms. The study would also address the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism to replace the program provided for under H.R. 3210.

If such a study is included in final legislation, the Department believes that it should be expanded to include all critical transportation systems and infrastructure, and not just the trucking and railroad industries. Therefore, Section 17 should be amended to also include ports, intermodal terminals, airports and pipelines. In addition, since most of the expertise on these transportation industry segments rests with DOT, the study should be co-chaired by the Secretary of Transportation.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, to the submission of this letter to Congress.

Sincerely,

Kirk K. Van Tine

Treasury (DeMarco reflecting Peter Fisher's comments) says that they strongly oppose the Interior and Transportation letters (and potentially State's as well) on this subject. Treasury feels the Interior and Transportation positions would open up Federal terrorism insurance to international exposure situations (e.g., American investments overseas) that we have been trying to avoid. I assured them that the issue would be thrashed out internally before the letters are ever cleared. You should expect to get a strong response from Treasury through your channel. It seems to us they may have a good point.

Such activities include both coastwise and international shipping, bound to or from the United States, which carries the preponderance of U.S. exports and imports. Another critical activity is energy production on the United States continental shelf, which is an increasing share of the country's hydrocarbon production.

Congress specifically foresaw the possibility of terrorist acts against shipping in the U.S. territorial sea (the 12-mile limit) and against fixed platforms on the U.S. continental shelf when it passed the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (Pub. L. 103-322). Section 60019 of that Act ("Offenses of Violence against Maritime Navigation or Fixed Platforms") made such terrorist acts a federal crime and confirmed U.S. territorial jurisdiction over such criminal activities. These provisions, codified at 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280-2281, define U.S. jurisdiction with respect to "acts to compel the United States to do or abstain from doing any act" to include the "territorial sea of the United States" meaning all waters seaward to 12 nautical miles from the baseline on the United States (generally the shoreline); and the "continental shelf of the United States," meaning the seabed or subsoil of the submarine areas that extend beyond the territorial sea to the limits provided by the customary international law as reflected in Article 76 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Shipping and other maritime activity proximate to U.S. ports, including deepwater ports, and U.S. offshore energy facilities are potential targets of foreign terrorists. The conferees should ensure that such key economic activities are protected by the program. S. 2600 addresses this by including the territorial sea in its definition of "United States." However, the conferees should further clarify the definition of the United States by incorporating the jurisdictional lines set forth in 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2280 and 2281 respectively for the "territorial sea of the United States" (12-mile nautical limit) and the "continental shelf of the United States." This will ensure that all shipping in U.S. waters, and all oil and gas activities on the United States continental shelf, fall within the geographic scope of the bill since these activities are equally as vital to the U.S. economy as other domestic activities covered under the bill.

Coverage of Title XI Guaranteed Vessels

Section 19 of H.R. 3210, which delineates the property eligible for terrorism insurance, includes United States flag vessels or vessels based prnicipally in the United states on which United States income tax is paid and who insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States. If the H.R. 3210 structure is adopted by the conferees, Subsection (1)(B)(ii)

should be amended to also include foreign-flag vessels which are subject to a Title XI ship financing mortgage. MARAD has financed a number of vessels under the export provisions of Title XI of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act. Although those vessels are registered under non-U.S. flags, they carry a mortgage in favor of the United States. These vessels should be included under the provisions of this insurance to protect the government's security interest.

Railroad and Trucking Insurance Study

Section 17 of H.R. 3210 requires the Secretary of Treasury to conduct a study to determine how the Federal government should address a possible crisis in the availability and affordability of railroad and trucking insurance, by making such insurance for acts of terrorism available on commercially reasonable terms. The study would also address the advisability and effectiveness of establishing a reinsurance pool system relating to future acts of terrorism to replace the program provided for under H.R. 3210.

If such a study is included in final legislation, the Department believes that it should be expanded to include all critical transportation systems and infrastructure, and not just the trucking and railroad industries. Therefore, Section 17 should be amended to also include ports, intermodal terminals, airports and pipelines. In addition, since most of the expertise on these transportation industry segments rests with DOT, the study should be co-chaired by the Secretary of Transportation.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, to the submission of this letter to Congress.

Sincerely,

Kirk K. Van Tine

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. ~~We wholeheartedly agree that t~~The Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation addressing the issue. Convening such a group ~~w~~could be a positive next step in ~~resolving the issue~~doing so, and the ~~, and the~~ Treasury Department looks forward to ~~participating in it~~meeting with you and your colleagues from the House.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our

WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) ~~-~~provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. ~~We wholeheartedly agree that t~~The Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation addressing the issue. Convening such a group ~~w~~could be a positive next step in ~~resolving the issue~~doing so, and the ~~, and the~~ Treasury Department looks forward to ~~participating in it~~meeting with you and your colleagues from the House.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our

WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) ~~-~~provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

Howdy, sir. Just wanted to confirm that administration officials can speak at banquets/fundraisers such as the one below as long as: 1) they are not listed in the promotional material and 2) they don't use their official administration title. Correct?

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. ~~We wholeheartedly agree that t~~The Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation addressing the issue. Convening such a group ~~w~~could be a positive next step in ~~resolving the issue~~doing so, and the ~~, and the~~ Treasury Department looks forward to ~~participating in it~~meeting with you and your colleagues from the House.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our

WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) ~~-~~provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

The Honorable Max Baucus
Chairman
Committee on Finance
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Charles Grassley
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Committee on Finance
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley:

Let me begin by thanking you for inviting me to participate in the Finance Committee's recent hearing regarding the World Trade Organization (WTO) decision in the Foreign Sales Corporation/Extraterritorial Income Exclusion (FSC/ETI) case and the international competitiveness of U.S. businesses. Addressing the issue visited on the United States by the WTO decision is critically important, and I appreciate the attention you are giving it.

You have proposed that a working group including the Administration and both Houses of Congress be convened to consider how we address this issue. ~~We wholeheartedly agree that t~~The Administration and Congress must work together on a bipartisan basis to enact legislation addressing the issue. Convening such a group ~~w~~could be a positive next step in ~~resolving the issue~~doing so, and the ~~, and the~~ Treasury Department looks forward to ~~participating in it~~meeting with you and your colleagues from the House.

As the President has stated, we are committed to preserving – or preferably improving – the competitiveness of U.S. companies and their workers who operate in an increasingly globalized economy. It is essential that our tax and trade policies provide a foundation on which they can thrive and grow in the global marketplace. At the same time, we are committed to coming into compliance with our WTO obligations.

We believe it is important to recognize at the outset that meeting these dual goals will require legislation that makes appropriate and meaningful changes to our tax laws. If we begin our working group effort with the goal of preservation of the status quo, as was the case when the working group convened in 2000 in response to the WTO decision in the FSC case, then we do not believe the working group will reach a result that satisfies our dual goals of ensuring the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and complying with our

WTO obligations. As I stated when I testified before the Committee, we cannot again attempt to replicate FSC/ETI benefits. We must make substantive changes.

Your recent hearing provides evidence that the work on compliance has already begun. Moreover, you, Mr. Chairman, long have been a leader on proposals to reform our international tax rules. The Ways and Means Committee also has held ~~similar~~ hearings at which alternatives to FSC/ETI have been explored. Those hearings resulted in Chairman Thomas's introduction of a bill that would satisfy our dual goals by bringing our laws into compliance with our WTO obligations while, at the same time, more closely aligning them with those of our major trading partners, thus leveling the playing field for U.S. businesses. Although there are several alternatives our working group might explore to achieve our objective, Chairman Thomas's bill (which includes many of the international reform proposals you have advanced, Mr. Chairman) ~~-~~provides a good starting point for the discussion.

As you indicated, we must show real progress now. We look forward to working closely with you and the House in our endeavor to meet our WTO obligations and ensure the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and their workers.

Sincerely,

Kenneth W. Dam

Jeff Zeleny from the Chicago Tribune wanted to know (predictably) if the WH wanted to encourage an investigation by DOJ into the tape matter. He asked the question several different ways. I indicated that communicating with candidates, elected officials and grassroots activists is a regular function of the Office of Political Affairs and that Ken was participating in a private meeting.

Jeff is going to do a short story for tomorrow. He was fishing to make a link between the powerpoint disk and the call and overall security issues with 'political information.'

Subject: Ganske Tape stories

I assume maybe you've seen these, but here three stories that came out of the suspiciously recorded Ganske strategy meeting.

Des Moines Register

Ganske camp says rivals taped strategy session
It's not true, Sen. Tom Harkin's campaign chief says. The GOP challenger's campaign wants a probe.
By THOMAS BEAUMONT
Register Staff Writer
09/23/2002 There's a new controversy in Iowa's U.S. Senate race involving what one campaign is calling a secretly taped strategy session.
U.S. Rep. Greg Ganske is accusing U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin's campaign of taping a meeting involving Ganske, some strategists and supporters in a Hotel Savery conference room in Des Moines on Sept. 3.
Ken Mehlman, director of political affairs for the White House, also participated in the conversation, according to a transcript of the meeting.
The Harkin campaign said it had no knowledge of the taped conversation or the source of the transcript. The Ganske campaign distributed copies of the transcript to reporters over the weekend.
The transcript reveals a discussion of media strategy and quotes Republican Ganske repeating a theme he's brought up frequently on the campaign trail: that he wants to campaign hard against Harkin without becoming mean-spirited.
"You've never seen a campaign where anyone will attack him like we're going to," Ganske said, according to the transcript. "With a smile on our face, not angry, not growling or scowling."
Harkin, a Democrat, and Ganske have been locked in a bitter campaign that has included attack ads from both sides.
Ganske campaign manager Bill Armistead said the campaign received the 11-page transcript from Kathie Obradovich, a political and state government reporter for Lee Enterprises, which publishes the Quad-City Times.
Obradovich could not be reached for comment Sunday.
Armistead said he could not vouch for the word-by-word authenticity of the transcript, but he said its existence breached campaign ethics at a minimum.
"This is way, way over the line of any kind of campaigning," Armistead said.
Armistead said the Ganske campaign planned to seek an outside investigation.
Harkin campaign manager Jeff Link described the allegations as a tactic to distract voters from real issues. He said neither the recording nor the transcript was the work of a Harkin operative.
"I don't know where (Obradovich) got it," Link said of the transcript. He suggested that the Ganske campaign had taped the meeting and leaked the tape and transcript, or that it was the work of a former Ganske supporter who had turned against the Republican's campaign.
Armistead said he did not suspect that a Ganske supporter had turned against the campaign. He said the notion that the campaign had manufactured the story to taint Harkin was "laughable."
State GOP Chairman Charles Larson Jr. said the party was reviewing its options in regard to the incident.

New York Times

http://www.nytimes.com/2002/09/19/politics/19FLOR.html

A Tale of a Tape in Iowa's Senate Race
Three weeks ago, Greg Ganske, the Republican who is challenging Senator Tom Harkin, the Iowa Democrat, held a private meeting with financial supporters at a Des Moines hotel. The gathering featured a briefing and pep talk, by telephone, from Ken Mehlman, the White House political director, and a somewhat bellicose speech by Mr. Ganske. Somehow, a tape and transcript of that meeting turned up in Iowa political and journalistic circles yesterday and Republicans were yelling "Watergate."

"The candidate is shocked that this would occur in Iowa: that someone would record a private meeting for political purposes," Mr. Ganske's campaign manager, William S. Armistead, said. "We definitely need to get to the bottom of this."
Mr. Ganske's campaign issued a statement referring to "Tom Harkin's revelation that he has secretly taped a Ganske for Senate meeting and phone call." Mr. Harkin's press secretary, Sarah Leonard, denied that. Mr. Armistead said the notion that Mr. Harkin was the source of the tape had been suggested to him by Iowa reporters who came to him looking for comment.
There really was not too much to the tape itself, in the smoking-gun department, other than some pretty tough words from Mr. Ganske about the attacks he planned on Mr. Harkin. "It will be mind-blowing," he said, according to the transcript. "You're never seen a campaign where anyone will attack him like we're going to. With a smile on our face."
ABC News "The Note"

Iowa
For about 27 people in the media and politics, this weekend had a serious subplot involving allegations of political trickery in one of the nation's biggest Senate races.
On September 3 of this year, a group of GOP Senate nominee Greg Ganske's supporters gathered in the legendary Hotel Savory in Des Moines to hear a speakerphone briefing from White House Political Director Ken Mehlman on Ganske's run against Senator Tom Harkin (D).
Ganske was at the event (although he arrived late) and briefed his supporters as well.
This was a typical meeting in which financial supporters are given an "insider" briefing to encourage them to continue to help raise money and build political support.
Somehow, a recording of the meeting, and then a transcript, were made.
This transcript has been floating around in Iowa since Friday, and anyone who is anyone now has a copy.
The Ganske campaign and the Iowa Republican Party are claiming that they know from reporters that the Harkin campaign is responsible for this, and they are calling for an investigation into how the transcript was made.
At 11:30 am ET this morning, the Iowa Republican Party chairman is planning to bring his lawyer with him to call for state and federal investigations.
Whoever produced the transcript seemed to put it out for one main reason: at the top of the 12-page document is a pull quote from Ganske in which he says "You've never seen a campaign where anyone will attack him (Harkin) like we're going to."
Pretty thin gruel, in terms of a "smoking gun," but the point seems to be: Ganske plans to run a negative campaign.
For political junkies, probably most interesting is the reminder that these secret, private, donor-only briefings tend to have almost nothing secret or interesting in them.
That having been said, there IS some stuff that junkies will like:
1. A little bit from Mehlman (akin to his famous slipped-disk slide show) about which Senate races he thinks are in play, although there are no big surprises here. No sign yet that any of this has made a splash in the states with Senate races that Mehlman chooses to include or leave out.
2. Mehlman's formula for analyzing states Republican-trending by looking at how 41 did in '88 compared to 43 in the two-party popular vote. Can someone send us those numbers?
3. Mehlman comparing Iowa '02 to Florida '00, as kind of the "ground zero" of American politics
4. A Ganske hard shot at Iowa's longtime lead political reporter for the AP, Mike Glover, whose daughter used to work for Harkin. Ganske's accusation of bias just might be reverberating around the state's political and media circles as we type this.

The New York Times had a brief item about all this on Sunday, and the Des Moines Register finally today has a "he said, he said" version. LINK
"Ganske campaign manager Bill Armistead said the campaign received the 11-page transcript from Kathie Obradovich, a political and state government reporter for Lee Enterprises, which publishes the Quad-City Times."
"Obradovich could not be reached for comment Sunday ("
"Harkin campaign manager Jeff Link described the allegations as a tactic to distract voters from real issues. He said neither the recording nor the transcript was the work of a Harkin operative."
"'I don't know where [Obradovich] got it,' Link said of the transcript. He suggested that the Ganske campaign had taped the meeting and leaked the tape and transcript, or that it was the work of a former Ganske supporter who had turned against the Republican's campaign."
"Armistead said he did not suspect that a Ganske supporter had turned against the campaign. He said the notion that the campaign had manufactured the story to taint Harkin was 'laughable.'"
Sounds to us like Chicago Tribune ace and ex DMR reporter Jeff Zeleny should parachute back in to solve the caper (

Potential Supreme Court Nominees
Associated Press
Last Updated: Sept. 22, 2002 at 0:35:40 a.m.
None of the nine Supreme Court justices has hinted at imminent retirement, but advancing age and politics may persuade at least one of them to leave soon. If that happens, the White House already has a secret list of potential replacements. Lawyers and law professors who watch the court have their own list. Among their picks:
Alberto Gonzales, Bush's White House counsel and the man in charge of making the White House list. Gonzales is a former Texas state judge who is close to Bush but was mostly unknown outside Texas before Bush won the 2000 election.
J. Harvie Wilkinson, the chief judge of the Richmond, Va.-based 4th U.S.
Circuit Court of Appeals. A courtly, soft-spoken conservative who in the ideological mold of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist. Wilkinson has been mentioned as a potential Republican high court pick for more than a decade, since the administration of Bush's father.
J. Michael Luttig, a junior judge on the 4th Circuit appeals court. A firebrand conservative in the mold of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, and a favorite of conservatives from the influential Federalist Society. Luttig was an adviser to the first President Bush.
Samuel A. Alito Jr., named to the Philadelphia-based 3rd U.S. Court of Appeals by Bush's father. Well-known in conservative legal circles, he is sometimes called ``Scalito'' for the similarities between his views and those of Scalia.
If Rehnquist is the first sitting justice to leave, Bush could choose to name a replacement from the remaining eight justices, and then fill the vacant seat with an outsider. Only two sitting justices are considered candidates for the top job:
Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, the first woman named to the high court when President Reagan picked her in 1981. She has said her age - 72 - makes the notion of an elevation to chief far-fetched.
Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, also a Reagan pick, in 1988. Considered a long shot for chief, in part because many conservative advisers close to Bush

The 30th might work. He is traveling with the President that day, so we just need to see what time they get back. His schedule is just very hard because the President is traveling almost every monday until Election Day. Would you be willing to have it on a non-Monday or Tuesday?

Hi Kate-
Have attached the draft invite for your approval. It will go on RLC Letterhead, but I don't have it digitally, so cannot send to you digitally.
(Happy to fax if you want to see the whole shebang)

Awaiting approval of a few people on here. (yesses thus far- Baldwin, Creighton, Judge, Gemeinhardt, Oliver); calls into the rest, as well as Judy
Black, Roger Levy and Craig Fuller.

Note that we got the boot from the Oval Room, so it's now at the Occidental.
Hope that is ok.

Invite will go on Monday along w/ a RLC Fact Sheet.

Thanks for your help.

Hi Kate!
I'm doing work with the Republican Leadership Council. I understand we have
Ken scheduled to address our dinner on Monday, 10/7.
Does he have any particular spot (assuming he'd like to stay close to the WH) to go?
Oval Room? Oceanaire-not exactly by WH? Occidental? Other suggestions?

I'll have invite for your approval this afternoon.

Hi Kate-
Hav e attached the draft invite for your approval. It will go on RLC Letterhead, but I don't have it digitally, so cannot send to you digitally. (Happy to fax if you want to see the whole shebang)

Awaiting approva l of a few people on here. (yesses thus far- Baldwin, Creighton, Judge, Gemeinhardt, Oliver); calls into the rest, as well as Judy Black, Roger Levy an d Craig Fuller.

Note that we got the boot from the Oval Room, so it's now at the Occidental. Hope that is ok.

Invite will go o n Monday along w/ a RLC Fact Sheet.

Thanks for your help.

HEADLINE: Nominee for Court Faces Two Battles; Senate Panel to Focus on Ideology, Immigrant Past

BYLINE: Charles Lane, Washington Post Staff Writer

BODY:

When the Senate Judiciary Committee convenes Thursday for a hearing on President Bush's choice to sit on the powerful U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, the nominee will bring with him not only a glittering legal rsum but also a story of immigrant success.

Forty-year-old Washington lawyer Miguel Estrada earned academic honors at Columbia and Harvard and served as a law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Anthony M. Kennedy. He has worked both as a federal prosecutor and as an assistant solicitor general of the United States. He has won two-thirds of the 15 cases he has argued before the Supreme Court, and he played a key supporting role on Bush's team of conservative legal all-stars who won the 2000 presidential election case. Supporters say these achievements are especially remarkable for someone who, at 17, arrived in the United States from his native Honduras speaking limited English.

If confirmed for the D.C. Circuit, Estrada would become the first Hispanic judge in the court's history, and, as such, perhaps the most influential Hispanic jurist of his generation. Yet far from looking like a triumphal moment for Estrada, Thursday's hearing is shaping up as possibly the most contentious public event yet in a long, tense struggle over his nomination.

To veterans of the increasingly rancorous judicial nomination process, the fight over Estrada's appointment has a familiar ring. Senate Democrats and liberal interest groups say Estrada represents the latest Bush administration attempt to "pack the courts with people who will roll back critical rights and protections," in the words of Nan Aron, president of the liberal Alliance for Justice. Republicans accuse Estrada's opponents of trying to block a well-qualified lawyer because he does not conform to their ideology.

But the added element of ethnic politics makes the Estrada nomination more than just another skirmish in the battle for control of the lower courts: If confirmed, Estrada would immediately become a leading candidate to be named the first Hispanic on the Supreme Court. Such a historic appointment could help Bush not only tilt the high court to the right, but also make political gains among the fast-growing ranks of Hispanic voters.

Leading Republicans are blunt about their view of the political stakes. Democrats "are afraid Bush will nominate him to the Supreme Court where he won't toe their left-of-center line," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), the ranking Republican member of the Judiciary Committee.

The nomination has divided not only the Senate but also leading Hispanic organizations. Some hail the appointment as a breakthrough for a group that is underrepresented on the federal bench. Others portray Estrada as an acid-tongued conservative who is out of touch with the major concerns of Hispanics and other minorities.

In a real sense, the argument is a dispute over the meaning of Estrada's life story.

Just as the first Bush administration praised Clarence Thomas for his rise from humble origins in Pin Point, Ga., the current Bush administration presents Estrada as the epitome of the self-made Latino immigrant.

"Miguel Estrada is an extremely bright person of strong convictions, and he has a great story," White House counsel Alberto Gonzales said. "He shows what is possible in this great country."

But to Estrada's critics, especially some of those in Hispanic civil rights organizations, his is the career of a successful minority who has put down only shallow roots in his ethnic community; he belongs to no Latino organizations.

In a blistering six-page statement opposing the Estrada nomination, the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund (PRLDEF) said recently that Estrada "has lived a very different life from that of most Latinos -- a life isolated from their experience and concerns."

Neither side's case is free of overstatement.

Estrada's success in the United States could be seen as the extension of his upbringing amid relative comfort and high academic expectations in Honduras, one of the poorest countries in Latin America. His father, Jesus Maria Estrada, who died in 1997, was a prominent and politically conservative lawyer who helped found the country's first private university. Estrada's mother, Clara Argentina Castaeda Batres, a successful accountant, is the daughter of a teacher-diplomat.

Estrada could read and write by the age of 5. He used to stand by the window of a school near his home, shouting out answers to the first-grade teacher's questions until she relented and asked Estrada's father to enroll him, according to a profile of Estrada published recently in the Honduran newspaper El Heraldo.

Later, at the San Francisco Institute, an elite Catholic academy in a residential area of Tegucigalpa known as Country Club, Estrada was an academic standout remembered by friends and teachers for winning a poetry reading contest and the 1976 Honduran national science fair -- his project was a homemade seismograph.

Arturo Corrales, a high school friend of Estrada's who later became the presidential candidate of Honduras's small left-of-center Christian Democratic Party, said Estrada's conservative views were already evident in their teenage debates. Estrada would praise the United States for its strong local government and free market system, and needle his friend when he defended the idea of a more European-style "social market economy," Corrales said.

Their only point of agreement, was abortion: He and Estrada agreed that it was morally "wrong," Corrales recalled. But the two Catholic school students never talked about whether abortion should be illegal, Corrales said.

Yet if Estrada was relatively privileged economically and socially, he faced personal obstacles. Estrada's mother left for the United States in 1969 amid a bitter divorce and child custody battle with his father -- she took Estrada's sister; Estrada, then only 8, stayed with his father.

Estrada would not see his mother and sister again until 1974, when he visited her for the first time in the United States. He saw her only two more times before he immigrated to the United States in 1978 against his father's wishes.

Though some backers have suggested Estrada spoke no English when he came to the United States, he actually possessed a rudimentary grasp of the language. Upon his arrival, Estrada's mother and sister conducted a crash course for him, and soon, his skills were adequate to earn a B- in English composition at the State University of New York at Old Westbury, where he spent his freshman year before transferring to Columbia.

He has attained excellent oral advocacy abilities in his second language despite a lifelong struggle with a speech impediment.

Friends say the experience of adjusting to life in the United States reinforced the conservative tendencies Estrada brought with him. In discussing such issues as affirmative action, they say, Estrada appeared influenced by the feeling that he and, before him, his mother had succeeded on their own in the United States, and that others should be able to follow suit.

In a 1998 remark quoted in a USA Today article about the lack of minority Supreme Court clerks, Estrada said, "If there were some reason for the underrepresentation, it would be something to look into . . . but I don't have any reason to think it's anything other than a reflection of trends in society."

An irony of the Bush administration's use of Estrada's appointment to score points with Hispanic voters, Estrada's friends and former colleagues say, is that the Estrada they know would be uncomfortable with the idea.

"He's an extremely proud person who would be offended by any of us thinking of him in a certain category," says Paul Cappuccio, a Harvard Law School classmate who is now executive vice president and general counsel of AOL Time Warner.

Unlike previous Bush nominees who have had to answer tough questions about their writings as legal scholars or lower-court judges, Estrada's career binds him to no particular paper trail. Most of his work consisted of helping to formulate or advocate the legal positions of others: judges, the federal executive branch or private clients.

Those who have known him during his decade and a half in the law offer conflicting views of his open-mindedness, temperament and other more intangible qualifications for the federal appellate bench. They agree that Estrada is politically conservative but are divided over just what kind of conservative he would be on the court: an activist who infuses rulings with his ideology or a restrained jurist who heeds the role of precedent.

The American Bar Association has pronounced Estrada "well-qualified," and several distinguished lawyers, including a number of Democrats, have written letters of endorsement.

One of his most avid supporters is Ron Klain, former chief of staff to Vice President Al Gore, who knew Estrada when both were Supreme Court law clerks.

"I think Miguel Estrada takes the law very seriously. He's a very independent thinker and confident enough to come to his own conclusions, and won't just follow along with the Republican herd," Klain said.

As evidence of Estrada's flexibility, supporters note that, despite his career on the government's side of criminal cases, he took on a Virginia death row inmate's case pro bono in 1999, arguing unsuccessfully before the Supreme Court that the man should get a new trial because he had been denied access to information that would have cast doubt on key evidence against him.

However, privately, many of those who have known Estrada over the years, describe him as an acerbic ideologue who likes to pick fights at the office over political issues and does not suffer fools gladly.

"He has a very intellectual kind of snideness of the kind you see on the Wall Street Journal editorial page," a former colleague says. "I don't think I ever heard him utter a compassionate phrase about someone he was prosecuting."

As evidence of Estrada's reflexive pro-prosecution views, they cite his membership on the board of the Center for the Community Interest, a New York-based nonprofit that advocates tough anti-crime measures, such as anti-loitering ordinances, that Latino civil rights groups have opposed as unfair to minorities.

At the solicitor general's office, Estrada clashed with Paul Bender, a liberal Clinton administration political appointee who served as principal deputy solicitor general.

"I think he lacks the judgment and is too much of an ideologue to be an appeals court judge," Bender told The Washington Post last year. Bender declined to comment for this article.

Meanwhile, though, other former Clinton administration officials, including the respected former solicitor general Seth A. Waxman have stepped forward to say they disagreed with Bender's assessment of Estrada. Last week the White House released excerpts from performance reviews of Estrada's work at the solicitor general's office, signed by Bender, that described Estrada as "outstanding."

Estrada was originally nominated in May 2001. But after control of the Senate switched to the Democrats, some Hispanic organizations skeptical of the nomination prevailed upon Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) to delay Estrada's hearing to permit interest groups and Democratic staffers more time to comb his background.

Some of those involved in the effort say their concerns about Estrada's temperament and ideology have been confirmed, but concede that they have turned up no bombshells.

Democrats on the Judiciary Committee are still seething over what they regard as the Republicans' unfair blocking of President Bill Clinton's nominees for the D.C. Circuit -- as well as several of his Hispanic nominees for other courts -- when the GOP controlled the Senate.

"If the White House had looked a little harder and were not so focused on packing the circuit court bench with a narrow ideology, it could have found many qualified nominees," Leahy said, citing the names of three Clinton appointees whose nominations died in the GOP-controlled Senate.

With Republicans gearing up to use the hearing to emphasize Estrada's immigrant success story, Democrats are expected to turn the session into an examination of his ideology and temperament.

But Democrats must proceed gingerly with Estrada to avoid the risk of offending Hispanic voters themselves. For the Democrats to vote him down on ideological grounds, absent solid evidence he is unfit for the court, "would be a huge mistake -- it'll backfire on them," says Brent Wilkes, executive director of the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), which has endorsed Estrada.

LULAC is one of several Hispanic groups, including the Hispanic National Bar Association and the Cuban-American National Foundation, to argue that Estrada is a qualified Latino and that he can serve as a role model for others.

"I definitely think he's not supportive of affirmative action, but I don't think any Bush nominee would be," Wilkes said. "We don't want to shoot down their only Hispanic nominee, just to get a white conservative in his place."

DRAFT -- NOT FOR RELEASE

September 24, 2002
(House)

H.R. 4600 - Help Efficient, Accessible, Low Cost, Timely Health Care Act of 2002
(Rep. Greenwood (R) PA and 120 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports House passage of H.R. 4600, a bipartisan bill that contains many of the reforms needed to address the Nation's badly broken medical liability system. The bill would create a more timely, predictable, and fair liability system that improves access to quality care while reducing health care costs.

H.R. 4600 offers individuals who have been harmed full and unlimited compensation for all economic damages - including medical costs, lost future wages, and the costs of replacing unpaid services such as child care. At the same time, the bill places reasonable limits on non-economic and punitive damages, similar to medical liability reforms in many States. These State laws have proved effective in improving access to quality care while reducing health care costs.

The medical liability crisis threatens American's ability to obtain and afford quality health care. In a growing number of communities, there is no access to trauma care, childbirth care, and other critical and even basic medical services as doctors have quit their practice altogether. In States without meaningful reforms, Americans are paying billions more for their health insurance to cover the costs of excessive litigation and "defensive" medicine. The additional Federal costs resulting from the liability crisis - which could easily exceed $25 billion this year - add to the costs of Medicare and Medicaid and frustrate initiatives to improve access to affordable care.

For these reasons, on July 25, 2002, the President called for Congress to create new Federal minimum standards for liability reform, based on measures that have been proven to be effective in States like California. If adopted, these proposals will prevent excessive awards that drive up health care costs, encourage frivolous lawsuits, and promote time-consuming legal proceedings.
The Administration is pleased that H.R. 4600 encompasses the President's proposals for creating a medical liability system that will compensate patients fairly, hold doctors accountable without driving them out of medicine, and reduce health care costs.

The Administration looks forward to working with the Congress to produce a bill to implement the President's goals and enact this much needed legislation. [Specifically, the Administration would like to work with the Congress to improve H.R. 4600 by limiting the State "opt-out" provision. This provision compromises the critically important benefits of litigation reform for Federal health initiatives.] [In addition, the Administration would like to work with the Congress to exempt Medicare and Medicaid from the bill's provision that would prohibit providers of collateral source benefits from recovering any medical costs paid to the plaintiff resulting from medical malpractice. This provision is inconsistent with current Medicare and Medicaid law, and would cause significant increases in spending in these two programs.]

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring [INSERT ONLY IF SECTION 6 HAS NOT BEEN FIXED]

Any law that would reduce receipts or increase direct spending is subject to the PAYGO requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act (BEA) and could cause a sequester of mandatory programs in any fiscal year through 2006. The requirement to score PAYGO costs expires on September 30, 2002, and there are no discretionary caps beyond 2002. OMB estimates for H.R. 4600 are under development. The Administration will work with Congress to ensure fiscal discipline consistent with the President's budget and a quick return to a balanced budget. The Administration will also work with Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur.

This Statement of Administration Policy was developed by the Legislative Reference Division (Pellicci) in consultation with Associate Director Capretta, CEA (McClellan), DPC (Gilbert), HD (Fontenot/Vinkenes), OIRA (Aguilar), BASD (Balis), and NSD (Ermann). The Departments of Health and Human Services (per Thayer Nelson), and Veterans Affairs (per Neil Richman) concur in the proposed position. The Department of Justice (per Velma Taylor) has no objection.
OMB/GC, WHGC, DPC (Lefkowitz), and White House IGA did not respond to our request for views, and should be consulted with regarding the inclusion of the State flexibility bracketed language in the last paragraph of the SAP.

OMB/LA Clearance:

Further Revisions To SAP May Be Needed

1. State Flexibility - OVP (Addington) recommends that the language in brackets on State flexibility be deleted because the "Administration's position on the legislation ought to have at least a minimal degree of respect for the traditional role of the States in our constitutional system by allowing at least an opt-out." According to Mark McClellan, both the NEC and DPC feel strongly about leaving the language in and disagree with the OVP recommendation. (First set of bracketed language)

2. Collateral Source Benefits - Section 6 of H.R. 4600 would require a collateral source (including Medicare and Medicaid) to pay first for any medical costs resulting from medical malpractice. This is inconsistent with current Medicare or Medicaid law (see description below), and would cause significant increases in spending in these two programs. CEA (Mark McClellan) believes the Administration may be able to fix this problem in the Rules Committee. Language describing the Administration's concern with Section 6 has been included in brackets in case the provision is not fixed. (Second set of bracketed language)

Background

The proposed position is consistent with that taken by the President in a July 25, 2002, speech at High Point University, Greensboro, North Carolina, on major reforms to address medical liability crisis. H.R. 4600 was approved by voice vote by the House Judiciary Committee on September 10th; the House Energy and Commerce Committee approved the bill by a vote of 27-21 on September 18th.

Summary of H.R. 4600

As reported by the House Committees on the Judiciary and Energy and Commerce, H.R. 4600 would limit non-economic damages to $250,000 and punitive damages to twice the economic damages or $250,000, whichever is greater, but would allow recovery of full economic damages -- the costs of medical care or lost income. H.R. 4600 also would limit attorneys' contingency fees to 40 percent of the first $50,000 in damages; 33.33 percent of the next $50,000; 25 percent of the next $500,000; and 15 percent of any amount in excess of $600,000. In addition, the bill would set time limits on filing lawsuits that are tied to when an injury manifests itself, not when the act that caused it occurs.

H.R. 4600 would preempt State law unless such law imposes greater protections (such as a shorter statute of limitations) for health care providers and organizations from liability, loss, or damages. The bill would allow States to enact laws (whether enacted before, on, or after the date of enactment of H.R. 4600) setting limits on the amount of compensatory, punitive, or total damages awarded in a health-care lawsuit, whether higher or lower than the caps provided in H.R. 4600. Section 6 of the bill also would prohibit providers of collateral source benefits (including Medicare and Medicaid) from recovering any medical costs paid to the plaintiff resulting from medical malpractice. (Under current law, when a Medicare or Medicaid beneficiary wins a medical liability suit, the two programs can recover the costs of the care that they paid for and the beneficiary needed as a result of the malpractice event.) Also, under H.R. 4600, manufacturers and distributors of medical products would be immunized from liability for punitive damages if consumers are injured by a medical product if FDA had approved the marketing application for the product.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

If Section 6 is not fixed: According to HD (Fontenot/Vinkenes), H.R. 4600 would increase direct spending; therefore, it is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. OMB estimates are currently under development.

Some very strong comments in here.

Thank you, Chairman Schumer. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words at this subcommittee hearing.

Since the Democrats took over the Senate and the Judiciary Committee last June, my colleague and good friend from New York has been arguing that we on the Committee should be upfront about our role in the advice and consent process - that we should not engage in the slight-of-hand of talking about one issue while voting on another. I agree with him to the extent that we should speak and act forthrightly, and we should not stoop down to the politics of personal destruction in order to justify a vote that is based on something else.

Unfortunately, I think that is where our agreement ends. Several weeks ago on the floor, I had my friend as a captive audience because he was serving as the Presiding Officer, and I explained my view that being honest and open neither requires, nor excuses, the overt injection of raw politics into the advice and consent process. I explained then my opinion, based on 26 years of experience, that the only way to make sense of this process is to begin with the assumption that the President's constitutional power to nominate should be given a fair amount of deference, and that we should defeat nominees only where problems are truly significant.

I believe that to the extent ideology is a question in judicial confirmations, it is a question answered by the American people and the Constitution when the President is constitutionally elected. The Senate's task of advice and consent is to advise and to query on the judicious character of nominees, not to challenge by our naked power the people's will in electing who shall nominate.

The premise of this hearing reminds me of a nickname that some clever college freshman gave to one of his required first-year courses: Introduction to the Obvious. If the point of this hearing is to show that the D.C. Circuit currently includes four judges appointed by Democrats and four appointed by Republicans, then we hardly need to convene a Senate Subcommittee to figure that out. And, if the further point is made that adding one Republican appointee will result in five Republican appointees and four Democrat appointees, then I still can't imagine the hearing being disrupted by reporters running from the room yelling STOP THE PRESSES.

But I know that we are not here to explore the obvious with a sense of discovery. So I suppose the real question is: What should we do about this? How should the Senate act when faced with courts that have either a balance or an imbalance between the number of Republican and Democrat appointees? Should we refuse to confirm any new judges to those courts unless they belong to the right political party? Should we wait until one of the judges steps down, and then wait even longer for there to be a President who happens to belong to the same political party as the President who appointed that judge? Well, these options seem to be perfectly ludicrous to me.

The only possible answer is to accept the reality that Presidents have the power to appoint judges, and that the balance in the judiciary will change over time as Presidents change, but much more slowly. The variables of Presidential elections, judicial retirements, circuit size, and many other factors will mean that perfect balance will be achieved rarely if ever. That is simply how the system works - and has worked, since the Judiciary Act of 1789. Our role of advice and consent is meaningful, and we must take it very seriously, but it was never intended as the power to second-guess the President or simply to substitute our judgment for his, and in doing so usurping the will of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, you know better than anyone that I am sincere about this, and that my track record proves it. Your report issued last Friday to the press shows that I voted against only one nominee in the last ten years. As a matter of fact, you could go back a lot further than that, because that's the only one for at least the last 22 years. And to clarify, I did so not on the basis of politics or ideology, but rather out of respect for the traditional role of home-state Senators in the selection of District Court nominees. When both home-state Senators of that nominee informed me that they were voting no, I felt I had no choice but to respect their judgment. For what it's worth, I think that vote was quite an unfortunate episode, but I nevertheless feel that I acted in accordance with Senate practice.

In keeping with the spirit of openness and honesty, I must say this: although I know how this hearing is being billed, I am left to wonder why we are not having a hearing about the scandalous 9th Circuit, or about the procedural scandals that are plaguing the 6th Circuit. Why, I ask myself, are we having a hearing about the DC Circuit just two days before the nomination of Miguel Estrada. Coincidence? Surely not.

When I was Chairman I ended the practice of having witnesses lined up to eviscerate good nominees. It was clear that the times had changed and that the base art native to the Potomac of destroying reputations had been too well perfected. I am glad that Chairman Leahy has concurred in this practice. I am disappointed that we are having this hearing because, to be frank, it strikes me that we are regressing, that this subcommittee is a just thinly veiled attempt to lay the foundation to oppose one of the most intelligent, accomplished and respected lawyers ever named to the D.C. Circuit Court. It seems to me that it would have been more forthright to name this hearing what it is: the C?ntra Estrada Hearing.

Now let me express my very real concern for the build up that I see happening to attempt to harm the nomination of a brilliant young man who came to this country at age 17 from another country knowing very little English and who has made his parents proud.

In one sense, I agree that there should be concern for balance on the D.C. Circuit. As Chairman and founder 12 years ago of the nonpartisan Republican Hispanic Task Force - which, despite the name, is made up of both Republican and Democratic Members -- I have long been concerned for the inclusion of Hispanics in the federal government. Without trumpeting the over-used word "diversity," I have made it my business to support the nominations of talented Hispanics for my entire career in the Senate. I am sorry that not even the desire for diversity will trump the reckless pursuit of ideology in judicial confirmations.

I have a special affinity for Hispanics and for the potential of the Latin culture in influencing the future of this country. Polls show that Latinos are the hardest working Americans, that they have strong family values and a real attachment to their faith traditions. In short, they have reinvigorated the American dream and I expect that they will bring new understandings of our nationhood that some of us might not see with tired eyes.

I also know that Hispanics come in many colors and that they have left behind countries filled with ideologues that would chain them to particular political parties. I know that they share a common sense appreciation of each other's achievements in this country without any regard whatsoever to ideology, over which some Americans have the luxury of obsessing.

I am concerned with balance on the D.C. Circuit, but of a real sort, not the kind to be discussed here today. Like President Bush, I think it is high time that a talented lawyer of Hispanic descent is represented on the second most prestigious court in the land. The D.C. Circuit hears federal cases no other court hears, and has a special role in the enforcement of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Yes, I think that it's time that a Hispanic sat on that court.

I also think it is time that we unmask the way that Miguel Estrada's nomination is being treated, and the lengths that his detractors are going to place hurdles in its path. For months I have been sounding the alarm of the influence of the special interest groups on this Committee. I have been increasingly ashamed of the axis of profits that demands that judicial nominees be voted down for a palimpsest of reasons. While the game plan is unvaried, the quarterbacks change, and now it is the liberal Hispanic groups that are on the field. They ought to be ashamed of themselves. They have sold out the aspirations of their people just to sit around schmoozing with the power elite.

I have repeatedly warned against what is going on behind the scenes. But I have done it so often that perhaps it is time to try it with new words. Well here is a Spanish word:

The word is confabular. It means: when one or more persons come together secretly to invent falsehoods about another. I am afraid that is what we will see this week against Miguel Estrada, and I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that this hearing is part of the effort.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Some very strong comments in here.

Thank you, Chairman Schumer. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words at this subcommittee hearing.

Since the Democrats took over the Senate and the Judiciary Committee last June, my colleague and good friend from New York has been arguing that we on the Committee should be upfront about our role in the advice and consent process - that we should not engage in the slight-of-hand of talking about one issue while voting on another. I agree with him to the extent that we should speak and act forthrightly, and we should not stoop down to the politics of personal destruction in order to justify a vote that is based on something else.

Unfortunately, I think that is where our agreement ends. Several weeks ago on the floor, I had my friend as a captive audience because he was serving as the Presiding Officer, and I explained my view that being honest and open neither requires, nor excuses, the overt injection of raw politics into the advice and consent process. I explained then my opinion, based on 26 years of experience, that the only way to make sense of this process is to begin with the assumption that the President's constitutional power to nominate should be given a fair amount of deference, and that we should defeat nominees only where problems are truly significant.

I believe that to the extent ideology is a question in judicial confirmations, it is a question answered by the American people and the Constitution when the President is constitutionally elected. The Senate's task of advice and consent is to advise and to query on the judicious character of nominees, not to challenge by our naked power the people's will in electing who shall nominate.

The premise of this hearing reminds me of a nickname that some clever college freshman gave to one of his required first-year courses: Introduction to the Obvious. If the point of this hearing is to show that the D.C. Circuit currently includes four judges appointed by Democrats and four appointed by Republicans, then we hardly need to convene a Senate Subcommittee to figure that out. And, if the further point is made that adding one Republican appointee will result in five Republican appointees and four Democrat appointees, then I still can't imagine the hearing being disrupted by reporters running from the room yelling STOP THE PRESSES.

But I know that we are not here to explore the obvious with a sense of discovery. So I suppose the real question is: What should we do about this? How should the Senate act when faced with courts that have either a balance or an imbalance between the number of Republican and Democrat appointees? Should we refuse to confirm any new judges to those courts unless they belong to the right political party? Should we wait until one of the judges steps down, and then wait even longer for there to be a President who happens to belong to the same political party as the President who appointed that judge? Well, these options seem to be perfectly ludicrous to me.

The only possible answer is to accept the reality that Presidents have the power to appoint judges, and that the balance in the judiciary will change over time as Presidents change, but much more slowly. The variables of Presidential elections, judicial retirements, circuit size, and many other factors will mean that perfect balance will be achieved rarely if ever. That is simply how the system works - and has worked, since the Judiciary Act of 1789. Our role of advice and consent is meaningful, and we must take it very seriously, but it was never intended as the power to second-guess the President or simply to substitute our judgment for his, and in doing so usurping the will of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, you know better than anyone that I am sincere about this, and that my track record proves it. Your report issued last Friday to the press shows that I voted against only one nominee in the last ten years. As a matter of fact, you could go back a lot further than that, because that's the only one for at least the last 22 years. And to clarify, I did so not on the basis of politics or ideology, but rather out of respect for the traditional role of home-state Senators in the selection of District Court nominees. When both home-state Senators of that nominee informed me that they were voting no, I felt I had no choice but to respect their judgment. For what it's worth, I think that vote was quite an unfortunate episode, but I nevertheless feel that I acted in accordance with Senate practice.

In keeping with the spirit of openness and honesty, I must say this: although I know how this hearing is being billed, I am left to wonder why we are not having a hearing about the scandalous 9th Circuit, or about the procedural scandals that are plaguing the 6th Circuit. Why, I ask myself, are we having a hearing about the DC Circuit just two days before the nomination of Miguel Estrada. Coincidence? Surely not.

Brett --

I couldn't get through to a listen line for the WTMJ interview. Let me know how it went. Did standing up help? If you don't feel comfortable, don't do it, but it can really help you sound energized. Some of the best talk show hosts do their shows standing up -- Ollie North does his whole 3 hours standing. Let me know how it went, and thanks for your help.

This morning, Treasury sent to us (as an FYI) draft language for a letter to Congressman Crane on the topic of the WTO's decision regarding the United States' Extraterritorial Income tax provisions. Treasury informed us that the letter (see language below) will be sent today. This letter reiterates points made in a USTR (Zoellick) letter (also attached, which we also recieved from Treasury) sent on September 23rd to the Congressman stressing the importance for the United States to comply with the WTO's decision. USTR did not send us a copy of their letter.

My current plan is not to put this letter through the OMB inter-agency clearance process. The letter does not provide a specific legislative proposal or take a position on any specific proposal on the Hill. However, we are sending this to you to make sure that you have seen it and that the letter is consistent with White House policy and strategy on this topic. I have told Treasury that I intend to run this letter past you and that I would give them any feedback we receive. Please let us know if you have anything you would like us to communicate to Treasury (or USTR). Thanks.

TREASURY LETTER

I am writing to echo the sentiments in Ambassador
Zoellick's
letter to you today. As the President has stated and Ambassador Zoellick reiterates the United States must comply with the WTO decision in this case.
We cannot rely on future trade negotiations to avoid enacting legislation that the WTO case mandates. Our failure to enact legislation will have an unacceptable result - retaliation on American workers and businesses.

Therefore, I am confident the recent finding regarding damages will be rendered moot by the U.S. response. We look forward to working with you and the Congress to enact changes to our tax law that will preserve the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and American workers while honoring our WTO obligations.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20508

September 23, 2002

The Honorable Philip Crane
Chairman
Ways & Means Subcommittee on Trade
United States House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Chairman Crane:

I of course read with interest your recent op-ed in the Financial Times, "Unity Against Sanctions." As we have discussed, I greatly appreciate your willingness to work with Chairmen Thomas and Baucus, Senator Grassley, and the Administration to respond to the adverse FSC/ETI decision in the WTO while avoiding trade retaliation by the European Union. To manage this dispute constructively -- and to resolve it -- the United States needs to make serious progress to come into compliance with our WTO obligations.

I wanted to share with you an observation triggered by one point in particular in your opinion piece. I do so in the spirit of trying to avoid misperceptions that could lead to miscalculations that would trigger serious EU trade retaliation. As you noted to me, representations made during the course of the ETI amendments in 2000 -- however they came about -- left you with an inaccurate assessment of the likelihood that the ETI would survive WTO scrutiny. Given the difficulty and contentiousness of this problem, I want to be sure to alert you of options that could lead us to dead-ends.

In particular, I do not believe that the United States will be able to avoid trade retaliation by the EU if we try to solve this problem through changes in WTO rules to be negotiated in the recently launched global trade negotiations, the Doha Development Agenda. The Doha negotiations are not scheduled to be completed until 2005, assuming the schedule goes as planned. Although I have worked with Commissioner Lamy of the EU to delay trade retaliation by emphasizing the United States intent to comply with the WTO ruling -- and by explaining the complexity and timing difficulties of Congressional action -- I would do you a disservice to leave an impression that we can defer this problem until 2005.

To the contrary, if the EU determines that is the course Congress has chosen, we are likely to trigger earlier trade retaliation against U.S. exporters -- and the workers and farmers who produce the exports. As you know, the WTO recently authorized the EU to retaliate against U.S. trade in amount up to $4.043 billion. A delay based on the hope that the WTO rules will be changed, as opposed to U.S. compliance with the rules and rulings, is a course that is more likely to hasten the trade retaliation all of us wish to avoid.

Of course, in our ongoing and close consultations with the Ways & Means and Finance Committees, I am pleased to discuss ideas on negotiating objectives for the Doha Development Agenda in all areas covered by the Doha mandate. I would observe, however, that changes in WTO rules concerning export subsidies go to the heart of the "unfair trade" law provisions that many Members of Congress have urged us -- strongly -- not to change, or even negotiate.

Again, I read the primary message of your op-ed to be the one the FT noted in the subtitle: "Democrats and Republicans must work together to solve the dispute over world trade...." I thank you for that spirit and am pleased to continue to work with you, Chairman Thomas, your Senate colleagues, and our Treasury and other Administration officials to bring the United States into compliance with our international obligations, while striving to reform the U.S. tax system in a way that enhances the international competitiveness of American businesses and workers.

With best wishes and regards,

Bob

This morning, Treasury sent to us (as an FYI) draft language for a letter to Congressman Crane on the topic of the WTO's decision regarding the United States' Extraterritorial Income tax provisions. Treasury informed us that the letter (see language below) will be sent today. This letter reiterates points made in a USTR (Zoellick) letter (also attached, which we also recieved from Treasury) sent on September 23rd to the Congressman stressing the importance for the United States to comply with the WTO's decision. USTR did not send us a copy of their letter.

My current plan is not to put this letter through the OMB inter-agency clearance process. The letter does not provide a specific legislative proposal or take a position on any specific proposal on the Hill. However, we are sending this to you to make sure that you have seen it and that the letter is consistent with White House policy and strategy on this topic. I have told Treasury that I intend to run this letter past you and that I would give them any feedback we receive. Please let us know if you have anything you would like us to communicate to Treasury (or USTR). Thanks.

TREASURY LETTER

I am writing to echo the sentiments in Ambassador
Zoellick's
letter to you today. As the President has stated and Ambassador Zoellick reiterates the United States must comply with the WTO decision in this case.
We cannot rely on future trade negotiations to avoid enacting legislation that the WTO case mandates. Our failure to enact legislation will have an unacceptable result - retaliation on American workers and businesses.

Therefore, I am confident the recent finding regarding damages will be rendered moot by the U.S. response. We look forward to working with you and the Congress to enact changes to our tax law that will preserve the competitiveness of U.S. businesses and American workers while honoring our WTO obligations.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
THE UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20508

September 23, 2002

The Honorable Philip Crane
Chairman
Ways & Means Subcommittee on Trade
United States House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Chairman Crane:

I of course read with interest your recent op-ed in the Financial Times, "Unity Against Sanctions." As we have discussed, I greatly appreciate your willingness to work with Chairmen Thomas and Baucus, Senator Grassley, and the Administration to respond to the adverse FSC/ETI decision in the WTO while avoiding trade retaliation by the European Union. To manage this dispute constructively -- and to resolve it -- the United States needs to make serious progress to come into compliance with our WTO obligations.

I wanted to share with you an observation triggered by one point in particular in your opinion piece. I do so in the spirit of trying to avoid misperceptions that could lead to miscalculations that would trigger serious EU trade retaliation. As you noted to me, representations made during the course of the ETI amendments in 2000 -- however they came about -- left you with an inaccurate assessment of the likelihood that the ETI would survive WTO scrutiny. Given the difficulty and contentiousness of this problem, I want to be sure to alert you of options that could lead us to dead-ends.

In particular, I do not believe that the United States will be able to avoid trade retaliation by the EU if we try to solve this problem through changes in WTO rules to be negotiated in the recently launched global trade negotiations, the Doha Development Agenda. The Doha negotiations are not scheduled to be completed until 2005, assuming the schedule goes as planned. Although I have worked with Commissioner Lamy of the EU to delay trade retaliation by emphasizing the United States intent to comply with the WTO ruling -- and by explaining the complexity and timing difficulties of Congressional action -- I would do you a disservice to leave an impression that we can defer this problem until 2005.

To the contrary, if the EU determines that is the course Congress has chosen, we are likely to trigger earlier trade retaliation against U.S. exporters -- and the workers and farmers who produce the exports. As you know, the WTO recently authorized the EU to retaliate against U.S. trade in amount up to $4.043 billion. A delay based on the hope that the WTO rules will be changed, as opposed to U.S. compliance with the rules and rulings, is a course that is more likely to hasten the trade retaliation all of us wish to avoid.

Of course, in our ongoing and close consultations with the Ways & Means and Finance Committees, I am pleased to discuss ideas on negotiating objectives for the Doha Development Agenda in all areas covered by the Doha mandate. I would observe, however, that changes in WTO rules concerning export subsidies go to the heart of the "unfair trade" law provisions that many Members of Congress have urged us -- strongly -- not to change, or even negotiate.

Again, I read the primary message of your op-ed to be the one the FT noted in the subtitle: "Democrats and Republicans must work together to solve the dispute over world trade...." I thank you for that spirit and am pleased to continue to work with you, Chairman Thomas, your Senate colleagues, and our Treasury and other Administration officials to bring the United States into compliance with our international obligations, while striving to reform the U.S. tax system in a way that enhances the international competitiveness of American businesses and workers.

With best wishes and regards,

Bob

Dear PRA 6

I write in response to your August 29 letter to the President inquiring about your ability to file a lawsuit without compromising your ability to accept the government compensation fund.

As the Special Master has now made clear, you may file a lawsuit without affecting your ability to participate in the government compensation fund. If you file a claim under the fund, you may file a lawsuit for collateral source obligations or against someone who "is a knowing participant in any conspiracy to hijack any aircraft or commit any terrorist act." If you file a claim with the fund and file a lawsuit that is not a suit to recover collateral source obligations and is not a suit against someone who is not a "knowing participant in any conspiracy to hijack any aircraft or commit any terrorist act," you are still eligible for compensation from the fund. In that situation, your lawsuit would be dismissed, but your participation in the fund would be unaffected. This rule applies regardless whether you file your claim with the fund before or after filing a lawsuit. For additional information, you may access the Victim Compensation Fund's web site, which now provides questions and answers on this issue to explain the process. http://www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation/lawsuit_qa.html

Thank you very much for your moving letter and for your continued service to our country.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Dear Mrs. Burnett:

I write in response to your August 29 letter to the President inquiring about your ability to file a lawsuit without compromising your ability to accept the government compensation fund.

As the Department of Justice has now made clear, you may file a lawsuit without affecting your ability to participate in the government compensation fund. If you file a claim under the fund, you may file a lawsuit for collateral source obligations or against someone who "is a knowing participant in any conspiracy to hijack any aircraft or commit any terrorist act." If you file a claim with the fund and file a lawsuit that is not a suit to recover collateral source obligations and is not a suit against someone who is not a "knowing participant in any conspiracy to hijack any aircraft or commit any terrorist act," you are still eligible for compensation from the fund. In that situation, your lawsuit would be dismissed, but your participation in the fund would be unaffected. This rule applies regardless whether you file your claim with the fund before or after filing a lawsuit. For additional information, you may access the Department of Justice's web site, which now provides questions and answers on this issue to explain the process. http://www.usdoj.gov/victimcompensation/lawsuit_qa.html

Thank you very much for your moving letter and for your continued service to our country.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

And for a stronger America, we need good judges. We need people who will not write the law from the benches, but people who strictly interpret the Constitution. I have been appalled at what has taken place in the United States Senate recently. I named two good judges, one from Mississippi and one from my home state of Texas -- Charles Pickering, Pricilla Owen. Their records were distorted. I don't think they were given a fair hearing. Special interests got a hold of the committee. It is not right that these two fine, fine people were denied the bench.

Soon the Senate will take up the nomination of Miguel Estrada. Miguel Estrada is an excellent lawyer. He's a fine man. He's an American success story. The Senate should not play politics with this nomination, for he will be an outstanding judge. One of the reasons to change the United States Senate is to make sure the good judges I nominate get a fair hearing, a swift vote, and approval. (Applause.)

Look Who's Playing Politics

By Michael Kelly

Wednesday, September 25, 2002; Page A27

Distasteful as it may be, some notice should be paid to the speech that the formerly important Al Gore delivered Monday at the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco.

This speech, an attack on the Bush policy on Iraq, was Gore's big effort to distinguish himself from the Democratic pack in advance of another possible presidential run. It served: It distinguished Gore, now and forever, as someone who cannot be considered a responsible aspirant to power. Politics are allowed in politics, but there are limits, and there is a pale, and Gore has now shown himself to be ignorant of those limits, and he has now placed himself beyond that pale.

Gore's speech was one no decent politician could have delivered. It was dishonest, cheap, low. It was hollow. It was bereft of policy, of solutions, of constructive ideas, very nearly of facts -- bereft of anything other than taunts and jibes and embarrassingly obvious lies. It was breathtakingly hypocritical, a naked political assault delivered in tones of moral condescension from a man pretending to be superior to mere politics. It was wretched. It was vile. It was contemptible. But I understate.

Gore uttered his first big lie in the second paragraph of the speech when he informed the audience that his main concern was with "those who attacked us on Sept. 11, and who have thus far gotten away with it." Who have thus far gotten away with it. The government of Gore's country has led a coalition of nations in war against al Qaeda, "those who attacked us on Sept. 11"; has destroyed al Qaeda's central organization and much of its physical assets; has destroyed the Taliban, which had made Afghanistan a state home for al Qaeda; has bombed the forces of al Qaeda from one end of Afghanistan to the other; has killed at least hundreds of terrorists and their allies; and has imprisoned hundreds more and is hunting down the rest around the world. All this while Gore, apparently, slept.

Well, perhaps Gore was talking loosely. No. He made clear in the next sentence this was a considered indictment: "The vast majority of those who sponsored, planned and implemented the coldblooded murder of more than 3,000 Americans are still at large, still neither located nor apprehended, much less punished and neutralized." If there is a more reprehensible piece of bloody-shirt-waving in American political history than this attempt by a man on the sidelines to position himself as the hero of 3,000 unavenged dead, I am not aware of it.

And, again, this sentence is a lie. The men who "implemented" the "coldblooded murder of more than 3,000 Americans" are not at large. They are dead; they died in the act of murder, on Sept. 11. Gore can look this up. In truth, the "vast majority" of the men who "sponsored" and "planned" the crime are dead also, or in prison, or on the run. The inmates at Guantanamo Bay, and the hunted survivors of Tora Bora, and the terrorist cell members arrested nearly every week, and the thousands of incarcerated or fugitive Taliban, might disagree as to whether they have been located, apprehended, punished or neutralized.

Although Gore knows that Bush has been publicly trying to move the nation toward war with Iraq since at least January, he pretended to believe the president was only now -- "in this high political season" -- pushing for war in order to gain electoral ground for his party and to divert attention from his administration's failure against al Qaeda by attacking "some other enemy whose location might be easier to identify." I see -- Bush is risking his presidency on a war with Iraq because it is the easy thing to do.

Although Gore knows that the Democratic leadership insisted (and both practical politics and constitutional imperatives demanded) that Bush seek the congressional support he is now requesting, he pretended this too was something the president was doing simply for political gain. Although Gore knows that Bush is also seeking, as Democrats also demanded, United Nations approval, he pretended this represented a failure of leadership as well because "thus far, we have not been successful in getting it." True enough -- because the Security Council hasn't voted. Thus far. Cute.

Probably the purest example of the Gore style -- equal parts mendacity, viciousness and smarm -- occurred when Gore expressed his concern (his deep, heartfelt concern) over "the doubts many have expressed about the role that politics might be playing in the calculations of some in the administration." And then added: "I have not raised those doubts, but many have."

What a moment! What a speech! What a man! What a disgrace.

I never looked this over before, and I'm not sure I like it. If we are talking to the House to prepare for conference, shouldn't we be shopping our favorite tort reform measures for a conference strategy (i.e. the FTCA approach)? Also, Warner is only a piece of the larger picture -- we intend to change the EO to achieve certain of the curbs on 85-804. Should we be explaining what we'll do in the EO and explaining how tort reform elements would mesh with the Warner approach?

Bottom line: It would help me to know to whom we are speaking. My inclination would be to have policy folks go see Armey, DeLay and others and pound out a comprehensive approach.

Warner Amendment on Contractor Indemnification

Talking Points

The Warner amendment on risk sharing clarifies the ability of federal agencies to indemnify providers of anti-terrorism technologies and services under Public Law 85-804.

The amendment is crafted to avoid interfering with the President's broad discretion to ensure agencies act in a fiscally responsible manner when considering and negotiating indemnification. Preservation of this discretion will enable the Executive Branch to apply the principles of indemnification and tort reform in harmony to effectively address the liabilities associated with deploying anti-terrorism products and services.

- The provisions preserve the President's ability to bound liability and avoid excessive costs that cannot otherwise be reasonably estimated or controlled.

- Agencies would be required to notify Congress within 30 days after they execute a contract clause to provide indemnification.

In contrast to the Warner amendment, the Turner/Davis provisions on risk sharing would create a new and expansive framework for contractor indemnification that significantly increases the potential for excessive liability.

- By authorizing indemnification for acquisitions that arguably go beyond those that are clearly needed to prevent mass disasters, the Turner/Davis provisions encourage contractors to withhold needed anti-terrorism technologies from agencies until they are given broad indemnification.

- The Turner/Davis provisions could also encourage contractors to withhold anti-terrorism technologies from states and localities until broad indemnification is provided, thereby making the federal government the underwriter of Homeland initiatives going well beyond the federal mission. The Warner amendment recognizes the need for state and local access to anti-terrorism technologies and services but also recognizes that this access can be accomplished with a more limited authorization where the government fully controls both the acquisition and the terms of indemnification.

A stronger America is also one that's got a good bench, a good federal bench. There was an interesting moment in this campaign. I nominated a fabulous woman, first-rate woman named Pricilla Owen. (Applause.) Top law student out of Baylor, been elected statewide in Texas a couple of times, overwhelmingly once. Had the highest ranking of the ABA, the best rating you could possibly get. I knew she'd be a great judge. Good, solid Texas woman, somebody -- it would be good to have that attitude and her point of view on the bench.

So I sent her nomination up there. It became political. They distorted her record. They didn't give her a fair chance. Shamefully, the Senate turned down her nomination. In so doing, that was not only bad for Texas, it was bad for America, as far as I'm concerned.

It's important for the voters of this state to listen to what was said by the two candidates running for the United States Senate about Pricilla Owen. There's only one candidate in this race that stood up strongly with me and strongly supported the ratification of her nomination, and that candidate was John Cornyn. (Applause.)

From the Hartford papers. Not only is Mr. Figueroa not taking back his "boneheaded" comments, he is positively campaigning on them. "Latino name,"
he says, but not really Hispanic. These guys is unbelievable.

Brett,
I've received your various messages, and your irritation is duly registered. That said, I think you're skating on pretty thin ice if you are seriously arguing that the White House has not been playing ethnic politics with this nomination. While I agree that the op-ed stresses Estrada's qualifications, it also stresses--in the first graf--that he "would be the first Hispanic to serve on that court" and goes on to emphasize that "the historic nature of the nomimation" ought to convey swift support. It describes him as "an American success story" who "came to this country as a teenager from Honduras speaking little English." It notes his support by "a " and concludes by describing him as "a Hispanic immigrant who has risen to the peak of the legal profession" and who is therefore "an inspiration to Hispanics and to all Americans." In Charles Lane's story of the other day, moreover, Judge Gonzales is quoted as saying: "Miguel Estrada is an extremely bright person of strong convictions, and he has a great story." A news outlet called EFE, moreover, quotes him as saying: "Estrada's nomination demonstrates the importance the president places on diversity, and he is sending a powerful message to the Hispanic community." The President himself brought Estrada to a speech before the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, where he said: "I'm calling on the United States Senate to move quickly on Miguel's nomination, so that we can have a good, young, Latino, smart, brilliant man represent our nation." Karl Rove likewise stressed on NPR that the initial 8 nominations "include incredibly compelling life stories. I mean, Miguel Estrada came to this country as a teen-ager and did not speak English..." All of this may be true, and the White House is certainly entitled to make the argument. But I don't see how you can contend that it is not using Estrada's ethnicity as a principle argument for his confirmation. Whether or not a debate between those who make this argument and those who contend that Estrada is a Hispanic Uncle Tom is a degrading one is purely a matter of opinion--one not amenable to the correction you demand.

Best,
Ben

Thanks very much for the quick reply. As you know, I did not much like (or agree with) the suggestion that the one line in Judge Gonzales' op-ed was an example of "degrading" behavior on Judge Gonzales' part. I also do not think we have ever suggested, explicitly or implicitly, that there is a Hispanic manner of deciding cases. We have noted that Miguel is a Hispanic immigrant who would be the first Hispanic on this important court. Those two facts are irrelevant to some people, but noteworthy to many other people. I do not think it is degrading to point out. Anyway, I will agree to disagree with you on the Gonzales op-ed. (I thought the rest of the Post editorial was on target, particularly the final line!)

Mr. McNally,
To my knowledge the brief was not reviewed by Mr. Kavanaugh as the first time I heard anyone mention his name was during my conversation w/ you today. You are correct, however, there is a drop box at the D.C. Courthouse and I will be more than happy to stay here for as long as it takes in order for your office to review and feel comfortable with our proposed filing. As you directed, I will call your assistant and leave the same message with her.
Again I apologize profoundly for the miscommunication and promise that it will not happen again. FYI, I can be reached at the below-listed telephone number or on my cell phone at PRA 6 Thank you for consideration.

Subject: Judicial Watch brief for your review

Ed: Just had a call re. this brief -- which must be filed by COB today.
Question is whether we refer to OHS as part of WHO. At an earlier stage
Lucy and Kate agreed with litigation counsel not to, and as far as I can see those reasons still stand.
Will you be here for the GAO meeting at 5? Robert

"We need an insurance bill to cover potential terrorist acts, so that hard hats in America can get back to work. And I want a bill on my desk that says we care more about the working people and less about the trial lawyers."

—President George W. Bush, Sept. 23, 2002

We Agree, Mr. President! There's Too Much At Stake:

- 300,000 jobs left wanting by the lack of terrorism insurance legislation[1]
- More than $15 billion in real estate transactions canceled or delayed[2]
- Nearly $4 billion in job-enhancing construction projects killed[3]
- Sixty-five percent of companies have NO COVERAGE at all for terrorism[4]
- Nearly $7 trillion in commercial real estate debt is at increasing risk[5]
- Commercial mortgage-backed securities are being downgraded because of the lack of terrorism insurance legislation[6]
- And the threat of another attack has not gone away

Congress, Why the Delay?

The Time is Now.
Pass Terrorism Insurance Legislation!

Hi Alicia:
This explains in more details what is proposed. Joe Ellis thought it was fine. If you could let me know ASAP it would be great.
Thanks.

> Hi Robb -
>
> Just to confirm our game plan for the President's visit to the National > Guard Armory on Saturday morning.
>
> Fleet and Coke with donate the bottled water -- a supply for approximately > 4000 visitors.
>
> In turn, the volunteers plan to sell the water with all proceeds to benefit
> a non profit - breast cancer research organization (to be determined).
>
> Two important questions:
>
> 1. Can Fleet and Coke hang banners at both water stations
>
> 2. Can a placard be placed at both stations reading -
>
> "Water donated by Coke and Fleet. All Proceeds to benefit XXX non profit > organization (breast cancer research)"

>
> Rob, I have been in touch with Jim Merrill re: signage - and need for > coolers. We are definitely going to need coolers on site for the water.
> Jim will coordinate water delivery directly with Coke ---
>
> We plan to have two waters stations inside. We will have 4 to 7 "Fleet > Works" employee volunteers on site to help with the water sale, and Jim is > arranging for 7 volunteers from a non profit breast cancer research > organization to staff the other water station.

Hi Alicia:
This explains in more details what is proposed. Joe Ellis thought it was fine. If you could let me know ASAP it would be great.
Thanks.
Robb Thomson

Bush Increasing Demands For Terrorism, Homeland Bills
President Bush today sharpened his call for Congress to send him terrorism insurance and homeland security legislation, insisting during two separate appearances at the White House that lawmakers not go home until those bills are finished. Bush spoke first to Hispanic leaders, calling for Congress to finish both bills before leaving to campaign, and then later repeated the call for Congress to finish terrorism insurance during separate remarks focused on that topic.
The president Wednesday asked legislators to come to an agreement on terrorism insurance by Friday. But today's call appears to equate the terrorism insurance and homeland security bills with the FY03 Defense appropriations bill, which Bush also wants to sign before Congress goes home to campaign. OMB Director Daniels last month indicated the president might not sign a long-term continuing resolution if a Defense spending bill is not on his desk. Bush today also demanded Congress pass the Defense appropriations bill before it leaves town for the elections.
```

Legislation to establish a Homeland Security Department has passed the House, but stalled in the Senate over the issue of personnel rules. "The Senate is still struggling with the bill," Bush said today. "They need to get it done before they go home." Bush gave no ground to his Senate opponents, but he tipped his hat to their effort to preserve certain rights for agency employees.
"Collective bargaining is important * I support the idea of workers being able to have collective bargaining," Bush said. "But we need to be able to manage the new agency, so that we can best protect the American people. And I call upon the Senate to understand the importance of what I just said."
Bush said lack of terrorism insurance was affecting the nation's employment picture, and suggested that a future terrorist attack would have worse consequences for the economy if the legislation is not passed. "Congress has got to act now, before they go home," Bush said.
"They've got to get a bill to my desk tomorrow." Congressional sources working to produce a terrorism insurance conference report remained guardedly optimistic today that an agreement is possible this week, despite what one source characterized as "big gaps" remaining in the process of reconciling the House, Senate and White House positions. Sources today said they thought they could meet Bush's deadline. But they predicted that staff members, who at presstime today were still grappling with some key issues both on tort reform and the bill's formula for coverage, would be required to work late into the night in an effort to make that happen. *

In the interests of time, attached please find a draft for discussion. One issue it does not address is the issue of Department of the Treasury involvement in settlement approval. I'm less familiar with that aspect, so at this point I will leave it to other to add material in that regard.
(I've flagged that issued in brackets in the file attached here.)

Our e-mails are all crossing. But here is a revised proposal with Wayne's suggestions incorporated for your consideration.

We appreciate the offer made yesterday by Senator Dodd and Senator
Schumer on the liability provisions of terrorism insurance legislation.
We are hopeful that their proposal will bring us closer to an agreement on this important issue and help put Americans back to work. American businesses and the federal government, with taxpayer funds, cannot make reasonable decisions to move forward when the risks B including the liability risks B are unknown and potentially infinite. The interests of a single interest group, including trial lawyers, should never trump the well-being of all Americans, including American victims of terrorism.

With respect to the issue of damages, the proposal of Senator Dodd and Senator Schumer draws on provisions in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act. Senator Dodd said, "Instead of writing all new laws here in the liability area, take the precedent that's already been set."
However, the proposal laid out by Senators Dodd and Schumer includes only half of the H.R. 1 liability protections. Their proposal fails to incorporate the provisions of H.R. 1 that provide that defendants will pay only their fair share of non-economic damages. That commonsense provision, which is included in the House-passed terrorism insurance bill, would ensure that American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks are not forced to pay damages caused by the terrorists. In short, if H.R.
1 is to be the model here, as the two Senators have suggested, it should be model for both the punitive damages and non-economic damages issues.

We understand that the Senators' offer includes a proposal for a federal cause of action and consolidation of all cases, both at pre-trial and trial proceedings, arising out of a terrorist event. That is an essential element of any legislation. In addition, settlement of cases under the program should be subject to approval by the Secretary of Treasury so as to place a reasonable check on settlement costs borne by the taxpayers. Finally, we note that the Senators have not yet proposed compromises on the other provisions in the House-passed bill such as a deduction of collateral source payments.

We look forward to continuing to work with the Senate and hope to pass legislation that will help strengthen our economy and put Americans back to work.

I sent a version earlier. Re-sent below. We thought we should keep it shorter.

We appreciate the offer made yesterday by Senator Dodd and Senator
Schumer on the liability provisions of terrorism insurance legislation.
We are hopeful that their proposal will bring us closer to an agreement on this important issue and help put Americans back to work. The interests of a single interest group, including trial lawyers, should never trump the well-being of all Americans, including American victims of terrorism.

With respect to the issue of punitive damages, the proposal of Senator Dodd and Senator Schumer draws on provisions in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act. Senator Dodd said, "Instead of writing all new laws here in the liability area, take the precedent that's already been set." However, the proposal laid out by Senators Dodd and Schumer includes only half of the H.R. 1 liability protections. Their proposal fails to incorporate the provisions of H.R. 1 that provide that defendants will pay only their fair share of non-economic damages. That commonsense provision, which is included in the House-passed terrorism insurance bill, would ensure that American businesses who are victims of terrorist attacks are not forced to pay damages caused by the terrorists. In short, if H.R.
1 is to be the model here, as the two Senators have suggested, it should be model for both the punitive damages and non-economic damages issues.

We also note that the Senators have not yet proposed compromises on the other provisions in the House-passed bill such as a deduction of collateral source payments.

We look forward to continuing to work with the Senate and hope to pass legislation that will help strengthen our economy and put Americans back to work.

In the interests of time, attached please find a draft for discussion. One issue it does not address is the issue of Department of the Treasury involvement in settlement approval. I'm less familiar with that aspect, so at this point I will leave it to other to add material in that regard. (I've flagged that issued in brackets in the file attached here.)

Dear Chairman Sarbanes and Senator Gramm:

Thank you for the opportunity of appearing before your Committee. The purpose of this letter is to clarify the issue related to political activity that was raised in the hearing. I have never had my name on a solicitation for a fundraiser, and I have attended fewer than half a dozen fundraising events over the past twenty years. I do not expect this pattern to change. Should I have the honor of being confirmed, I commit to preserving the propriety of my position as director of the Federal Housing Finance Board at all times. I will carefully follow all applicable laws, regulations, and rules relating to political activity and political fundraising. I also recognize that questions can be raised even with respect to perfectly lawful political activity, and I would endeavor to avoid activity which would engender such questions. For example, I would not associate myself with any political activity or event that is targeted at entities under my regulatory supervision, whether this be the banking or the housing industry.

Please let me know if I can answer any further questions.

Sincerely,

Diana Furchtgott-Roth

Brett and Wayne, Steve Pinkos asked me to coordinate with you both regarding an offer we would send over to the Senate today regarding terrorism insurance.

As I see it:

The WH, H, and S agree on a federal cause of action and consolidation in federal court.

The WH and H agree on banning punitive damages, and the S has agreed to a "clear and convincing" standard.

The WH and the H support a "fair share" rule for noneconomic damages, and the S has opened the door to that by referring to HR 1 as a model.

The H supports limits on attorneys fees and a collateral source rule.

Here are two ideas on possible agreement:

(1) We can say to the Senate, if HR 1 is to be used as a model, then perhaps if the Senate comes closer to a ban on punitive damages vis a vis HR 1 (say, by agreeing to a "clear and convincing evidence" standard), then the House could modify the fair share rule and come closer to the Senate's opposition to a noneconomic damages rule vis a vis HR 1 by, say, by having the provision provide that a defendant only gets the benefit of a fair share rule if they're less than 50% responsible. The House could also drop the collateral source provision. The House might also continue to push for the attorneys fees provisions (tied to awards that come from the federal Treasury) since the policy rationale there is simply an extension of that behind the Federal Tort Claims Act. We'd also insist on Treasury Secretary approval of settlements.

(2) We can let the Senate out of their fair share rule box and agree to drop the fair share rule in return for a complete ban on punitive damages. The House might also continue to push for the modified attorneys fees provisions and drop the collateral source provision. We'd also insist on Treasury Secretary approval of settlements.

What are you thoughts on this? Might we arrange a conference call or a meeting on this this morning or soon thereafter? My direct line is 225-7157. My cell phone is PRA 6

DRAFT

Dear X:

I am writing regarding S. 2798, in particular the amendment in the nature of a complete substitute intended to be proposed by Senator Durbin.

The bill would make significant revisions to the complex bankruptcy statute. Changes of this magnitude deserve careful study to ensure that they do not create unintended, even potentially destructive incentives for corporate debtors. Such incentives would hurt workers and creditors, and help no one. Given the sweep of the changes contemplated in S. 2798, the Senate Judiciary Committee should hold hearings before concluding consideration of the bill.

These are several of the questions a hearing could address:

(a) Section 2 would create a new "excess benefit test," requiring business leaders to hand back benefits beyond a statutory ceiling received up to four years before. While this provision is grouped with fraudulent transfers, the "excess benefit test" would not make fraud a requirement. Should it be, given the potentially massive liability that this provision would impose unexpectedly on a business leader, when his or her business failed? And should the business leader have to hand back the whole benefit – including the non-excess portion below the "excess" ceiling?

(b) Section 3 would create new restrictions on a debtor's ability to retain key employees and hire advisors. The provision seeks to protect the debtor's assets. Yet the bankruptcy statute must also give a debtor the means to hire talented leaders and professionals when the company's survival is at stake. Does this provision properly balance these two goals?

(c) Section 4 would take the apparently unprecedented step of converting equity interests in the firm in employees' pension plans into high-priority claims, even higher than Federal tax claims. In addition, the provision would value the equity interest as of the time of grant, which amounts to a quasi-guarantee on equity. Is privileging this type of compensation over wages and creditors' claims good policy? Part of the provision's goal seems to be to encourage diversification in employees' pension plans; is the bankruptcy code the right place to do so? And would the provision chill employers' willingness to grant matching stock?

(d) The bill would apply effective immediately, at the risk of throwing existing bankruptcy cases into disarray and re-ordering legal rights without notice to any claimants. Should the bill be prospective?

Hearings with bankruptcy experts would help resolve fundamental questions of this type. In light of the importance of the efficient workings of bankruptcy to our economy, I urge you to take such expertise into your deliberations.

Yours sincerely,
