Statement of Daniel J. Bryant

Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legislative Affairs

Before the Committee on Government Reform

February 6, 2002

Chairman Burton, Congressman Waxman, Members of the Committee: Good Morning. I welcome this opportunity to present testimony on behalf of the Department of Justice at this hearing regarding the history of congressional access to deliberative Department of Justice documents.

At the outset, I want to remind the Committee of the Department's request to meet about the Boston documents. It was and remains our hope that in such a meeting, knowledgeable officials could confer with you about the nature of the documents, which could have obviated the need for this hearing and allowed the Committee's oversight inquiry to move forward expeditiously. We do not understand why the Committee has chosen not to accept our offer.

Mr. Chairman, in preparation for this hearing I have made an effort to familiarize myself with the history of congressional access to deliberative Justice Department documents, and deliberative prosecutorial advice documents in general. At the outset, I wish to clarify that the current dispute between this Committee and the Department of Justice pertains only to the narrow and especially sensitive sub-category of deliberative documents constituting advice memoranda regarding whether or not to bring criminal charges against certain individuals and advice memoranda to the Attorney General in connection with appointing a special prosecutor.

This category of documents which the Committee has subpoenaed is a very small subset of all deliberative Department memoranda, and an even smaller subset of the total universe of information which is routinely requested by and provided to Congress. I direct your attention to a chart illustrating this which I have appended to my submitted testimony.

There are a number of relevant propositions that emerge from a review of the history of congressional access to deliberative Justice Department documents.

First, it is apparent that the framers of the Constitution envisioned tensions arising between the branches in the course of their discharging their constitutionally-assigned responsibilities. In fact, such tensions reflect one of the fundamental checks and balances at the heart of our system of government based on the separation of powers. One such intentional check is immediately apparent: Congress has authority to obtain information from the Executive so as to enable it to carry out its legislative responsibilities. At the same time, the Constitution requires the Executive, in the words of Article II, Section 3, "to take care that the laws be faithfully executed," and in doing so, clearly contemplates the need to withhold certain information in order faithfully to fulfill this core Executive function.

Second, our tradition of government clearly envisions that the branches will work to resolve any inter-branch disputes that arise. The longstanding policy of the Executive Branch is to comply with congressional requests for information to the fullest extent that is consistent with its constitutional and statutory obligations. The policy is reflected in the Executive Branch's commitment to the accommodation process. That historic policy remains the policy of the Executive Branch today.

Third, the history of specific inter-branch accommodations can serve as a useful guide for present and future disputes, but past inter-branch accommodations are not themselves binding precedent. Each specific inter-branch accommodation reached is highly case-specific, and is, therefore, of questionable application to subsequent inter-branch disputes. Moreover, unlike case law, which involves a court arbitrating the resolution of the matter and handing down a ruling with clear precedential significance, disputes between Congress and the Executive have been left to the parties themselves to settle. Consequently, the Executive Branch's concern to safeguard certain documents from improper disclosure has manifested itself over the decades in a wide variety of ways, depending on the particular circumstances and exigencies present at the time of the dispute.

Fourth, throughout the history of inter-branch disputes regarding deliberative Justice Department documents, the Executive Branch has consistently maintained that the sub-category of prosecutorial documents at issue in our current dispute are presumptively privileged and should be protected. This position has been consistently articulated by the Executive Branch for decades and is supported by historical practice, scholarly commentary and case law. The reasons for this position are clear: The authority to prosecute criminal suspects is one of the core executive powers vested in the President by the Executive Power and Take Care Clauses of Article II of the Constitution. In order to assist the President in fulfilling his constitutional duty, the Attorney General and other Department decision-makers must have the benefit of candid and confidential advice and recommendations in making prosecutorial decisions.

The need for confidentiality is particularly compelling in regard to the highly sensitive prosecutorial decision of whether to bring criminal charges. If prosecution and declination memoranda are subject to congressional scrutiny, we will face the grave danger that prosecutors will be chilled from providing the candid and independent analysis essential to the sound exercise of prosecutorial discretion and to the fairness and integrity of federal law enforcement. As the Supreme Court described its concern about a chilling effect: "Human experience teaches that those who expect public dissemination of their remarks may well temper candor with a concern for appearances and for their own interests to the detriment of the decisionmaking process." United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705 (1974). The Court observed that "the importance of this confidentiality is too plain to require further discussion." Id. Just as troubling, the prospect of congressional review might force prosecutors to err on the side of investigation or prosecution simply to avoid public second-guessing. This would undermine public and judicial confidence in our law enforcement processes.

Disclosure of declination memoranda would also implicate significant individual privacy interests. Such documents discuss the possibility of bringing charges against individuals who are investigated but not prosecuted, and often contain unflattering personal information as well as assessments of witness credibility and legal positions. The disclosure of the contents of these documents could be devastating to the individuals they discuss.

In sum, government functions as the Constitution intended and the public interest is well served by safeguarding from disclosure those documents that advise whether or not to prosecute. individuals.

Mr. Chairman, as stated by Judge Gonzales, Counsel to the President, the Department of Justice is "prepared to accommodate the Committee's interest in a manner that should both satisfy the Committee's legitimate needs and [that] protect[s] the principles of prosecutorial candor and confidentiality." That is why Department officials have offered to meet with you about the Committee's interest in the Boston documents and I reiterate that offer today.

Thank you.

Can we do a conference call on this at 10:15? Best way to work it on short notice is to have Brett call Carl at 4-3951 and we'll loop in OLC at 4-2048; Collins at 4-6753; and Crim at 3-8579 - is that doable for everyone?

What about taking this one a notch further and stating that we have prepared a redacted version of that particular document that we are willing to show them at the meeting? (Assuming that we can do such a redaction without delaying the letter.)

What do people think of substituting "particularized need regarding" for "particularized need for"? "Need for" tends to suggest need to receive a copy of the document, whereas "need regarding" is more neutral and thus will preserve our position that they would first get only access.

Can we do a conference call on this at 10:15? Best way to work it on short notice is to have Brett call Carl at 4-3951 and we'll loop in OLC at 4-2048; Collins at 4-6753; and Crim at 3-8579 - is that doable for everyone?

What about taking this one a notch further and stating that we have prepared a redacted version of that particular document that we are willing to show them at the meeting? (Assuming that we can do such a redaction without delaying the letter.)

It strikes me that paragraph 3, as now phrased, almost suggests that Burton does have a particularized need for the document that we are just waiting for him to articulate. He may need the info through a briefing, but he doesn't need the document.

Draft February 7, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to reiterate again the Department's request to meet with you about the Boston documents that are responsive to the Committee's subpoena of September 6, 2002.

As I indicated at the hearing on February 6, a meeting would provide an opportunity for Department officials to describe each document to you and learn more about the Committee's particularized needs. We believe that such an exchange of information would be helpful to resolving the dispute regarding these documents.

We also believe that a meeting would be helpful to your preparations for the Committee's hearing on February 14. Your web site indicates that Judge Edward Harrington is scheduled to appear at the hearing. One of the documents we have offered to discuss with you was prepared by then Assistant United States Attorney Harrington and contains some information concerning the Deegan matter. Accordingly, I want to reiterate our request to meet with you about the subpoenaed Boston documents so that we discuss whether the Committee has a particularized need regarding this document in advance of the February 14hearing.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you would like additional assistance regarding this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

APPOINTMENT OF FEDERAL JUDGES: STATUS REPORT
(February 7, 2002)

1. The President has nominated judges at a record pace.

- President Bush has nominated 90 Article III judges: 29 circuit, 60 district, and 1 Int'l Trade. President Bush has submitted more judicial nominations than any previous President had submitted by this point in the Presidency. Indeed, none of the previous six Presidents submitted more than 47 judicial nominations in the first year.

2. There is a vacancy crisis in the federal judiciary.

- In 1998, at a time when there were 50 judicial vacancies, Senator Leahy stated that the number of vacancies represented a "judicial vacancy crisis." (The Associated Press, October 22, 1998)

- As of today, there are 98 vacancies out of 853 authorized circuit and district court judgeships, a 12% vacancy rate. The crisis has worsened substantially.

    - The Chief Justice's recent year-end report on the judiciary labeled the current situation as an "alarming number of judicial vacancies."

    - The Judicial Conference of the United States has classified 37 of the current vacancies as "judicial emergencies."

- The 12 regional circuit courts of appeals, the courts of last resort in the vast majority of federal cases, face a particular crisis with 31 vacancies out of 167 authorized judgeships, an extraordinary 19% vacancy rate. The vacancy rate is an especially serious problem in light of the enormous caseload: According to the Chief Justice's recent year-end report, filings in the 12 regional courts of appeals reached an all-time high last year and have increased 22% since 1992.

    - The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals (covering Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, and Tennessee) is operating at only half strength, with 8 vacancies on a 16-judge court.

        - In March 2000, at a time there were 4 vacancies on that court, Chief Judge Merritt of the Sixth Circuit wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee about the crisis: "The Court is hurting badly and will not be able to keep up with its work load. . . . Our Court should not be treated in this fashion. The public's business should not be treated this way. The litigants in the federal courts should not be treated this way. . . . The situation in our Court is rapidly deteriorating due to the fact that 25% of the judgeships are vacant."

- The D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals is operating with 1/3 of its judgeships vacant (4 vacancies on a 12-judge court).

- The caseload in the federal courts may increase further as a result of the war on terrorism, as well as other criminal and civil matters that arise out of the September 11 attacks.

3. The President has acted decisively in response to the vacancy crisis, but the Senate has not yet done so.

- The President has submitted 90 judicial nominations, which is a record pace. But the Senate has voted on only 32 of the President's 90 nominees.

- Despite the President's record pace of nomination, the number of vacancies has actually increased since the President took office due to the Senate's pace of confirmation (which has not kept up with judicial retirements). When the President took office, there were 84 vacancies. Now, there are 98 vacancies.

- Notwithstanding the especially serious vacancy crisis in the circuit courts of appeals, the Senate has voted on only 6 of the President's 29 circuit nominees (21%).

- In the President's first year, the Senate voted on 24 of the 44 nominees who were nominated before the August recess. That was a sharp departure from the Senate's traditional practice with respect to nominees of a new President.

    - In the first year of the past three Administrations, all but one of the nominees who were nominated before the August recess were voted on and confirmed in the first year of the Presidency.

4. The Senate's treatment of the President's first 11 nominees illustrates the Senate's delay.

- On May 9, 2001, at an event in the East Room, the President announced the nomination of 11 judges -- including 8 nominees for judicial vacancies classified as "emergencies" by the Judicial Conference of the United States.

    - All 11 nominees subsequently received a "well qualified" or "qualified" ABA rating. In March 2001, Senator Leahy referred to the ABA rating as the "gold standard" for evaluating judicial nominees.

- Nearly nine months have now elapsed since those nominations, yet the Senate Judiciary Committee has held hearings for only 3 of the 11 nominees.

- The Washington Post editorial page stated that "[t]he Judiciary Committee chairman, Democratic Sen. Patrick Leahy, has offered no reasonable justification for stalling on these nominations." (Give Them Hearings, November 30, 2001)

5. Judicial nominees deserve a prompt hearing and vote in the Senate.

- On May 9, 2001, the President made the following request of the Senate: "I urge Senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house, and no matter who controls the Senate. I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process."

- In his recent year-end report on the judiciary, the Chief Justice of the United States emphasized the same principle: "On behalf of the Judiciary, . . . I ask the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."

- On June 24, 1998, at a time when there were many fewer vacancies than today, Senator Daschle stated: "We cannot wait for the judicial system to collapse before the Senate acts." He asked for the Senate to "significantly accelerate the pace of scheduled judicial confirmations." (144 Cong. Rec. S 7008)

- On July 7, 1998, at a time when there were 68 vacancies, Senator Leahy stated: "Those who delay or prevent the filling of these vacancies must understand that they are delaying or preventing the administration of justice. Courts cannot try cases, incarcerate the guilty or resolve civil disputes without judges." (144 Cong. Rec. S 7535)

- The Washington Post editorial page, which has written often and consistently on the judicial confirmation process, has stated: "Failing to hold [hearings] in a timely fashion damages the judiciary, disrespects the president's power to name judges and is grossly unfair to often well-qualified nominees." (Give Them Hearings, November 30, 2001)

Draft February 7, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to reiterate again the Department's request to meet with you about the Boston documents that are responsive to the Committee's subpoena of September 6, 2002.

As I indicated at the hearing on February 6, a meeting would provide an opportunity for Department officials to describe each document to you and learn more about the Committee's particularized needs. We believe that such an exchange of information would be helpful to resolving the dispute regarding these documents.

We also believe that a meeting would be helpful to your preparations for the Committee's hearing on February 14. Your web site indicates that Judge Edward Harrington is scheduled to appear at the hearing. One of the documents we have offered to discuss with you was prepared by then Assistant United States Attorney Harrington and contains some information concerning the Deegan matter. Accordingly, I want to reiterate our request to meet with you about the subpoenaed Boston documents so that we discuss whether the Committee has a particularized need regarding this document in advance of the February 14 hearing.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you would like additional assistance regarding this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

President Hails Progress on Armies of Compassion Agenda

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush met with a bipartisan group of Senators who have introduced the CARE Act – legislation that closely mirrors the President's Armies of Compassion agenda to help America's charities. The President also urged the Senate leadership to move forward with the legislation.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S ARMIES OF COMPASSION AGENDA

- Last year, the President announced his Armies of Compassion initiative to strengthen charitable organizations in America. Legislation reflecting key elements of the President's initiative -- H.R. 7, the Community Solutions Act, sponsored by Congressmen J.C. Watts (R-OK) and Tony Hall (D-OH) -- passed the House in July by a vote of 233-189.

- In August, the White House Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives released the Unlevel Playing Field report. The report was the first comprehensive audit of five Federal agencies and their policies towards community and faith based organizations. The report showed the barriers these groups face in the Federal funding process.

- The CARE Act (Charity Aid, Recovery, and Empowerment)) builds on the good work of the House bill in meeting the key principles of the Armies of Compassion initiative. And, the legislation also includes provisions that help address the specific barriers identified in the Unlevel Playing Field report.

- The Senate legislation meets the President's Armies of Compassion principles in three key ways:

  (1) Encourages charitable giving through tax incentives.

  - Allows an estimated 84 million taxpayers who do not itemize to deduct their charitable contributions – providing a $400 (individual)/$800 (joint filers) deduction for charitable giving for two years;
  - Allows individuals to make tax-free distributions from their IRAs to charities after the age of 67; and
  - Provides enhanced deductions for farmers and restaurants to donate food to food banks.

  (2) Addresses principal barriers that faith- and community-based charities face in accessing Federal funds that were identified in the Administration's Unlevel Playing Field report.

  - Requires non-discrimination against non-governmental organizations based on religious grounds, religious iconography, governance, and lack of experience with government contracts;
  - Creates a 501(c)3 "EZ Pass" process to help small, community-based groups get tax-deductible status more easily; and
  - Establishes a $150 million Compassion Capital Fund to educate and empower community-based organizations.

  (3) Provides needed support for initiatives targeted to vulnerable populations.

- Authorizes up to $33 million in support for maternity group homes, principally for teenage unwed mothers.

BACKGROUND ON THE CHARITIES CRISIS IN AMERICA

- Many of America's charities have been hit hard in the aftermath of September 11 due to the effects of a weakened economy. A survey by the Independent Sector found that 48% of Americans will reduce their charitable giving if the economic slowdown worsens. The survey also found that 26% of Americans will stop giving or reduce the size of their donations to the charities they normally support due to their recent donation to September 11-related charitable causes.

- Today, the Association of Fund Raising Professionals -- representing more than 25,000 different social service, health and education-related charities -- released a report showing that nearly 45% of its charities reported a decline in gift receipts for the most recent reporting period. According to another study, individual and corporate donations were slashed by as much as $300 million in the Los Angeles area alone for the fourth quarter of 2001.

- President Bush's Armies of Compassion initiative is designed to support charities that provide vital social services for millions of disadvantaged Americans. The President urges the Senate leadership to take up the CARE Act quickly to help address America's charities crisis.

President Hails Progress on Armies of Compassion Agenda

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush met with a bipartisan group of Senators who have introduced the CARE Act – legislation that closely mirrors the President's Armies of Compassion agenda to help America's charities. The President also urged the Senate leadership to move forward with the legislation.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S ARMIES OF COMPASSION AGENDA

- Last year, the President announced his Armies of Compassion initiative to strengthen charitable organizations in America. Legislation reflecting key elements of the President's initiative -- H.R. 7, the Community Solutions Act, sponsored by Congressmen J.C. Watts (R-OK) and Tony Hall (D-OH) -- passed the House in July by a vote of 233-189.

- In August, the White House Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives released the Unlevel Playing Field report. The report was the first comprehensive audit of five Federal agencies and their policies towards community and faith based organizations. The report showed the barriers these groups face in the Federal funding process.

- The CARE Act (Charity Aid, Recovery, and Empowerment)) builds on the good work of the House bill in meeting the key principles of the Armies of Compassion initiative. And, the legislation also includes provisions that help address the specific barriers identified in the Unlevel Playing Field report.

- The Senate legislation meets the President's Armies of Compassion principles in three key ways:

  (1) Encourages charitable giving through tax incentives.

  - Allows an estimated 84 million taxpayers who do not itemize to deduct their charitable contributions – providing a $400 (individual)/$800 (joint filers) deduction for charitable giving for two years;
  - Allows individuals to make tax-free distributions from their IRAs to charities after the age of 67; and
  - Provides enhanced deductions for farmers and restaurants to donate food to food banks.

  (2) Addresses principal barriers that faith- and community-based charities face in accessing Federal funds that were identified in the Administration's Unlevel Playing Field report.

  - Requires non-discrimination against non-governmental organizations based on religious grounds, religious iconography, governance, and lack of experience with government contracts;
  - Creates a 501(c)3 "EZ Pass" process to help small, community-based groups get tax-deductible status more easily; and
  - Establishes a $150 million Compassion Capital Fund to educate and empower community-based organizations.

  (3) Provides needed support for initiatives targeted to vulnerable populations.

- Authorizes up to $33 million in support for maternity group homes, principally for teenage unwed mothers.

BACKGROUND ON THE CHARITIES CRISIS IN AMERICA

- Many of America's charities have been hit hard in the aftermath of September 11 due to the effects of a weakened economy. A survey by the Independent Sector found that 48% of Americans will reduce their charitable giving if the economic slowdown worsens. The survey also found that 26% of Americans will stop giving or reduce the size of their donations to the charities they normally support due to their recent donation to September 11-related charitable causes.

- Today, the Association of Fund Raising Professionals -- representing more than 25,000 different social service, health and education-related charities -- released a report showing that nearly 45% of its charities reported a decline in gift receipts for the most recent reporting period. According to another study, individual and corporate donations were slashed by as much as $300 million in the Los Angeles area alone for the fourth quarter of 2001.

- President Bush's Armies of Compassion initiative is designed to support charities that provide vital social services for millions of disadvantaged Americans. The President urges the Senate leadership to take up the CARE Act quickly to help address America's charities crisis.

Dear Brett,
I greatly appreciate your taking the time to speak with my students yet again this Friday at 3 pm. As you may recall, the class takes place in the 2nd floor

conference room at 888 16th St. NW.
This class will examine application of attorney-client privilege to the government. Attached you will find a list of the readings and questions that the students will have reviewed before the class, along with each of the readings (which I'm sure that you know like the back of your hand).
If you have any questions, you can call me at my office (314-935-4081) or on my cell phone PRA 6
See you Friday afternoon.
--Kathleen

STATEMENT OF
WILLIAM F. WASLEY
DIRECTOR, LAW ENFORCEMENT AND INVESTIGATIONS (LEI)
FOREST SERVICE
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Concerning
Eco-Terrorism and Lawlessness on National Forests

Before the
SUBCOMMITTEE ON FORESTS AND FOREST HEALTH COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

February 12, 2002

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE:

My name is Bill Wasley, and I am the Director of the Forest Service Law Enforcement and Investigations (LEI) program. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today to discuss eco-terrorism acts on Forest Service facilities and how the Agency is addressing employee safety.

The Forest Service manages approximately 192 million acres of land in the United States. Protecting people and natural resources is part of our mission. This mission has become more difficult over the years as crimes occurring on national forests and to federal property have increased, especially acts of eco-terrorism on research projects and government facilities. LEI is responsible for protecting and serving the public and agency employees; protecting natural resources and other property under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service; and cooperating with other law enforcement agencies.

Incidents of Ecoterrorism

Over the past 10 years, destructive civil disobedience and acts of eco-terrorism have increased, damaging resources and placing people in harm's way. Destructive criminal acts have primarily been related to protests against commercial logging activity on National Forest System (NFS) lands. These acts have included the illegal occupation of NFS lands and roads that place protestors at great risk; spiking trees designated for cutting; damaging or destroying natural resources, public roads, and facilities; damaging private property; and threatening and interfering with timber sale purchasers and timber operators. Since 1998, the Earth Liberation Front (ELF) has claimed responsibility for at least five terrorist acts to Forest Service resources, facilities, or vehicles.

Forest Service research programs have also been the targets of recent criminal acts. The Agency has an extensive research and development program that conducts basic and applied research on an array of subjects that complement the diverse mission of the Agency, including research on biological pathogens or forest genetics. In FY 2000, two acts of vandalism resulted in damages to the Forest Service Research facilities in Minnesota and Wisconsin, estimated at over $1.3 million. Over 850 pine and broadleaf trees, and saplings from "superior" tree stock and cross-pollination research were cut down, ring-barked and trampled. ELF claimed responsibility for this act. In November of 2001, two explosive arson devices were planted near university and Forest Service research buildings at Michigan Technical University, but fortunately were located by security personnel prior to detonation. No one has yet been charged with this crime.

Prevention is critical to the Agency's action plan against criminal acts of eco-terrorism. Currently, the Forest Service is conducting facility security assessments to identify those facilities that are vulnerable to terrorist acts. These assessments will address employee, facility, asset, transportation, special use permitting, and resource protection concerns.

Safety in the Workplace

Forest Service employees have been the targets of increasing domestic terrorism threats and attacks since the mid 1990's. Examples of these attacks include the bombing of an employee's residence and the complete destruction by arson of two Forest Service offices. These attacks have raised fears and concern among Agency employees for their personal safety. The Agency is addressing these concerns by securing government facilities; producing and distributing safety pamphlets, brochures, and videos; holding safety meetings; providing information to employees on steps that are being implemented to improve employee security; and providing violence awareness training. The Forest Service has an agreement with the Office of Inspector General (OIG) regarding investigations dealing with employee safety. The safety of Agency employees and the public is one of the highest priorities for the Forest Service.

Efforts to Ensure Coordinated Security

In cases of domestic terrorism the FBI has primary jurisdiction. LEI assist the FBI by serving on the joint task force investigating domestic terrorism acts.

REV_00333448

Agency law enforcement officers and criminal investigators coordinate closely with line and staff officers to provide and implement security procedures for Forest Service facilities, resources, employees, and the public. Security measures undertaken by LEI include: conducting intelligence gathering and threat assessments; providing personnel and facility security details during protests or high risk events, providing first responders to incidents; responding to protest and civil disobedience activities; investigating criminal acts; conducting search and rescues; responding to shooting incidents and drug and alcohol possession and use problems; and responding and investigating all reported instances of intimidation, threat, or assault against agency employees.

In investigating criminal acts, LEI has developed many cooperative agreements with other Federal, State, and local agencies for performance of routine law enforcement patrols, drug enforcement, timber theft investigations, and coordination of other enforcement activities. LEI participate in many task forces, particularly the FBI's counterterrorism taskforce mentioned above and the Office of National Drug Control Policy's (ONDCP) High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area (HIDTA) program.

Conclusion

The Forest Service is committed to work with the FBI to combat acts of domestic terrorism. We also are committed to ensuring safety and security of the public and our employees. The job is immense, but we will continue to work at providing these services and expend resources consistent with this priority.

REV_00333449

This concludes my statement, I would be happy to answer any questions you or Members of the Subcommittee might have.

------------------------------------------------------------

The far-left is flexing its muscles, roughing up a distinguished appeals court nominee just to show the Bush administration that they can. A year ago, left-wing senators savaged attorney general nominee John Ashcroft as a "shot across the bow" on a future Supreme Court vacancy. Today, by beating up Judge Charles Pickering, the shots are getting closer.

Judge Pickering has been a U.S. District judge since 1990 and his legal career spans more than four decades. Nearly 20 past presidents of the Mississippi Bar Association support his nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

In their drive-by Borking, Judge Pickering's attackers insist that the nominee is "insensitive" to civil rights. On Feb. 6, Rep. Bennie Thompson said Judge Pickering is actually "hostile to minorities and women." These, of course, are the far-left's code words. Anyone who does not share their particular view of the world, their specific political agenda, anyone who is not like them, is insensitive and hostile. So much for tolerance and diversity.

Yet this picture bears no resemblance to the nominee, who initiated and serves on the board of the University of Mississippi's Institute for Racial Reconciliation. He has chaired a county race-relations committee, helped establish a local program for at-risk black youth, and both testified against and prosecuted Ku Klux Klan members despite risk to himself and his family. He once lost a bid for re-election as county prosecutor because he defied the Klan.

James Evers, brother of slain civil-rights leader Medgar Evers, wrote in the Feb. 7 Wall Street Journal that "I can tell you with certainty that Charles Pickering has an admirable record on civil rights issues."

The sensitivity cops in the judicial selection process are the liberal American Bar Association (ABA). Their published guidelines define the criterion of "judicial temperament" as including a nominee's "compassion . . . freedom from bias, and commitment to equal justice under the law." The ABA said Judge Pickering had those qualities in 1990 when first appointed to the federal bench. The Democrat-led Judiciary Committee and Senate unanimously approved him them, including current committee Chairman Patrick Leahy and Democrat members Ted Kennedy and Joe Biden. The ABA apparently believes Judge Pickering is even more committed to equal justice today, giving him their highest "well-qualified" rating for appointment to the appeals court.

Some of the attackers' tactics are really underhanded. The Alliance for Justice, for example, claims on its web site that Judge Pickering "decided not to publish" most of his 1,100 written opinions. The truth is that the Judicial Conference of the United States, which sets the rules for federal judges, since 1964 has said judges should limit publication of their opinion. Rule 47.5 of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, which includes Judge Pickering's jurisdiction, echoes the same policy. The Federal Judicial Center's Judicial Writing Manual states that because decisions of district judges (such as Judge Pickering) are "merely persuasive authority" and not "binding precedent . . . publication should be the exception." More than 80 percent of appeals-court decisions are unpublished, and district judges should publish even less. Turns out Judge Pickering was just following the rules.

But then, that's what the debate over the judiciary is all about, whether judges must just follow the law or can (and even should) make it up to achieve particular results. It's about whether judges or the people should run the country and define the culture. The far-left finds it tough going in the ordinary political process, so they turn from the statehouse to the courthouse to force their agenda on us anyway. Our freedom, however, requires that judges follow the law and leave the politics to the people.

Judge Pickering knows the difference. At his Judiciary Committee hearing on Feb. 7, he repeatedly said that "I will follow the law even when I disagree with it." He told Sen. Dianne Feinstein that "I know the difference between a political decision and a judicial decision." That is precisely the kind of judge America needs. In fact, it's the oath judges take ? to be impartial.

In the completely political world of the far-left, even judges exist simply to further the revolution, to deliver the political goods. That world does not contain something called the rule of law that does not change and that can protect everyone's rights. It's their way or the highway. The ends justify the means. It's not how you play the game, but whether they win or lose.

The kind of judge America needs remains the primary issue in judicial selection. It's no wonder the far-left can't stand Judge Pickering. With more like him, especially on the Supreme Court, they would have to convince the American people instead of a few elitist judges. That's a debate they cannot win.

The DC government is considering a permit request, filed by some shady people, to open a strip club on the 1700 block of I street - about a block from the new executive office building. I am told they have hired some connected lobbyists to get this through. Businesses in that neck of the woods, including the owners of an establishment I used to frequent during my rugby days, are opposing it. These legitimate businesses were hoping someone from the executive office of the WH might be willing to write the DC

I just talked to Rebecca, and she hasn't heard anything about OLC being concerned. It came as a great surprise to her since she has been working closely with DOJ on these tort reform initiatives. She is going to call Ed Whalen and see what's up.

Rebecca is finalizing a memo that summarizes the working group's efforts. It will be basically the same as what the group discussed at the last meeting, although Larry Lindsey's shop has successfully lobbied to have the Client's Bill of Rights proposal placed back on the list, notwithstanding our objections and those of others in the group including Rebecca herself. She is forwarding to me a work-in-progress draft of that memo, which I'll send to you. The memo will ultimately be presented by Jay at a "deputies meeting" (whatever that is) within the next week or so.

Subject: [Fwd: H.R. 2341]

Yesterday I heard some rumors that someone in OLC might have some sort of undefined "constitutional concerns" about H.R. 2341, the class action reform act. What I was led to believe was that it might be possible that the Department might suggest a Statement of Administration Policy that would be "generally supportive" but voice a few concerns. Naturally, this was of great concern to me.

Trying to follow up on this vague information this morning I communicated with the Office of Legislative Affairs to see if there might be something I could do or provide to counter whatever might be the rumored concerns. I was invited simply to submit whatever I thought might be useful. And, this I have done.

Attached you will see my cover email and attached to it is a longer paper that I hope addresses whatever somebody has apparently raised as a "constitutional concern."

I think it very important that any Administration expression relating to H.R. 2341 be unequivocal and supportive.

Dan:

Sorry it has taken me all day to get back to you.

The issue here, as I understand it, is that there is the possibility that "constitutional concerns" or reservations might be included in the OLC comments that will be forwarded to OLP regarding H.R. 2341 and that those concerns might then influence the proposed statement of administration policy. That possibility is quite troubling on several counts. First, because the legislation really has been flyspecked with particular attention to constitutional issues over the last several years (this is the third Congress the core provisions have been introduced). And, second, because the sponsors surely have expected the Administration's whole hearted support, especially after the careful scrutiny the bill was put through by the President's campaign before he specifically endorsed it in 2000.

However, having said that, and while I am at a bit of a disadvantage not knowing what "concerns" might be lurking, I will try here to respond assuming the concerns might be reminiscent of concerns thrown at the bill previously by the likes of Public Citizen and ATLA, two organizations well known for their constitutional and federalism concerns.

Attached here you will find a treatment of federalism "concerns" - or, as I see it "false federalism" allegations - with which we have dealt before. I think this paper speaks clearly for itself and should overcome any suggestions that H.R. 2341 somehow violates principles of federalism. You also can find this treatment under Tab H in the background materials book I had delivered to you last week.

About the only other possible issue that I can think of that might be suggested as a "constitutional concern" is as follows:"

Recently the Ninth Circuit issued a ruling -- Gibson v. Chrysler -- in which the court held that in assessing the amount in controversy requirement under current law, you should not looked an unnamed class members because they are not parties to the case at that point. Thus, maybe some would argue that H.R. 2341, in looking at unnamed parties to check for minimal diversity is unconstitutional because it looks to people who are not yet parties to the case (until a class is actually certified).

My response would be that unnamed class members are presently deemed to be parties for many purposes. In short, the Ninth Circuit simply has one view on this subject. For example, the rules say that you have to give notice to those unnamed class members if the case is dismissed (or at least consider doing so). Further, Congress is free to declare them to be parties if they want to as part of defining the class device. If this is the argument it is strange because it in essence says that if a state court were to certify a case and then non-diverse folks became parties (under this critics' view), the case would suddenly become removable.

I hope this is helpful. If you learn more about what someone might criticize about the bill, please let me know.

FEDERALISM INTERESTS ARE PROMOTED (NOT HARMED) BY THE CLASS ACTION FAIRNESS ACT (H.R. 2341)

There have been heard some vague criticisms that the class action jurisdiction provisions of H.R. 2341 would diminish state authority or otherwise somehow offend basic federalism principles. That is not the case.

- H.R. 2341 would not alter state courts' powers to handle class litigation as they see fit. The bill simply gives parties the ability to bring certain types of interstate class actions in federal court or to remove such cases to federal court.
- Some persons have suggested that when a lawsuit filed in state court is removed to federal court, that step somehow deprives the state court of its "rights" – that it prevents the state court in which the matter was originally filed from hearing litigation of state-created rights of action that presumptively belong in state court. But all state law-based actions don't presumptively belong in state court. The concept of federal diversity jurisdiction is to negate any such presumption. Diversity jurisdiction is a mechanism by which state-law based claims may be moved from local courts to federal courts, so as to ensure that all parties will be able to litigate on a level playing field and that interstate commerce will be protected.[1]
- This concept is not a judicial invention. And it is not something that Congress created. Diversity jurisdiction was established by our framers in Article III of the Constitution. The framers included the diversity jurisdiction concept in Article III to make certain that local biases against commercial enterprises would not create a climate that would stymie expansion of commercial and manufacturing interests throughout the country, thereby undermining the forging of a national union.[2] Article III ensures that there will be a fair, uniform, and efficient forum (a federal court) for adjudicating interstate commercial disputes, so as to create an environment that nurtures commercial expansion.[3]
- The expansion of federal diversity jurisdiction over interstate class actions envisioned in the legislation is entirely consistent with the current concept of such

Peck,* 59 U.S. (18 How.) 518, 520 (1856)("The theory upon which jurisdiction is conferred on the court of the united States, in controversies between citizens of different states, has its foundation in the supposition that, possibly, the state tribunal might not be impartial between their own citizens and foreigners.")

[2] See James William Moor & Donald T. Weckstein, Diversity Jurisdiction: Past, Present and Future, 43 Tex. L. Rev. 1, 16(1964). See also Bank of United States v. Deveaux, 9 U.S. (5 Cranch) 61, 87 (1890) (Marshall, C.J.) ("However true the fact may be, that tribunals of states will administer justice impartially as those as those of the nation, to the parties of every description, it is not less true that the Constitution itself … entertains apprehensions of the subject …, that it has established national tribunals for the decision of controversies between … citizens of different states.").

[3] "No power exercised under the Constitution …had greater influence in melding these United States into a single nation [than diversity jurisdiction]; nothing has done more to foster interstate commerce and communication and the uninterrupted flow of capital for investment into various parts of the Union, and nothing has been so potent is sustaining the public credit and the sanctity of private contracts." John J. Parker, The Federal Constitution and Recent Attacks Upon It, 18 A.B.A.J. 433, 437 (1932).

jurisdiction. At present, the statutory "gatekeeper" for federal diversity jurisdiction – 28 U.S.C.§ 1332 – essentially allows federal courts to hear cases that are large (in terms of the "amounts in controversy") and that have interstate implications (in terms of involving citizens from multiple jurisdictions). By their nature, class actions typically fulfill these requirements. Class actions normally involve so many people and so many claims that they invariably put huge dollar sums into dispute and implicate parties from multiple jurisdictions. Yet, because section 1332 was originally enacted before the rise of the modern day class action, it did not take account of the unique circumstances presented by class actions. As a result, that section has served to exclude class actions from federal courts, while inviting into federal courts much smaller single-plaintiff cases having few (if any) interstate ramifications. That technical problem would be corrected by the legislation.

- As former Clinton Administration Solicitor General Walter Dellinger testified during a July 1999 House Judiciary Committee hearing, if Congress were to redraft the federal diversity jurisdiction statute, there would be little legitimate debate that interstate class actions would most deserve inclusion within the scope of the statute. Interstate class actions typically involve more people, more money, more interstate comity issues, and more interstate commerce ramifications than any other type of case. Such cases therefore warrant federal diversity jurisdiction. They should not be barred at the federal courthouse door simply because Congress has not heretofore undertaken to repair the technical problem in section 1332 that generally keeps class actions out of federal court, while admitting smaller, less significant cases.

The need for this change has been highlighted in several recent appellate decisions:

- In Davis v. Cannon Chevrolet-Olds, Inc., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 17040 (11th Cir. July 26, 1999), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit reluctantly remanded a large interstate class action to state court. The court concluded that given the manner in which plaintiffs' counsel had craftily pleaded around jurisdictional prerequisites, there was no basis for federal diversity jurisdiction over the case. In so ruling, however, the appellate court offered what it termed and "apologia" for the fact that "[t]he traditional principles [regarding class action jurisdiction] have evolved haphazardly and with little reasoning" and "serve no apparent policy."

  We acknowledge that this case and its kin present an anomaly in our law. An important historical justification for diversity jurisdiction is the reassurance of fairness and competence that a federal court can supply to an out-of-state defendant facing suit in state court. [the defendant in this case] is an out-of-state defendant facing a multimillion-dollar judgment … in a state court system that has on occasion produced gigantic awards against out-of-state corporate defendants. One would think that this case is exactly what those who espouse the historical justification for section 1332 would have had in mind, and that this fact would somehow color the statute's interpretation.

- Judge John Nangle, the long-time chairman of the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, concurred, echoing criticisms of the way in which federal diversity jurisdictional requirements are applied to class action:

> The case at hand is but one example of a growing trend in class action litigation in this country. Plaintiff's attorneys are increasingly filing Nationwide class actions in various state courts, carefully crafting language in the petitions or complaints in order to avoid the amount in controversy requirement of the federal courts. Existing federal precedent … mandates that this practice be permitted, although most of these cases in actuality will be disposed of through "coupon" or "paper" settlements …. Concurrently, … such settlements are virtually always accompanied by munificent grants of or requests for attorneys' fees for class counsel … [T]his judge is of the opinion that the present [jurisdictional] case law does not accommodate the reality of modern class litigation and settlements.

- Similarly, in an opinion by Judge Anthony Scirica (chairman of the Judicial Conference's Standing Committee on Rules and Procedure), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit observed that although "national (interstate) class actions are the paradigm for federal diversity jurisdiction because, in a constitutional sense, they implicate interstate commerce, foreclose discrimination by a local state, and tend to guard against any bias against interstate enterprises, … at least under the current jurisdictional statutes, such class actions may be beyond the reach of the federal courts." In re Prudential Ins. Co. America Sales Practice Litig., 148 F.3d 283, 305 (3d Cir. 1998).

The legislation would not "federalize" class actions: it would correct the current "false federalism" problem.

- Any suggestion that legislation would "federalize" class actions ignores the current class action landscape. It is the status quo that is already federalizing class actions. What is occurring is "false federalism" – one state court telling the other 49 state judiciaries what their laws should be. When state courts preside over class actions involving claims of residents of more than one state (as they increasingly are inclined to do), they end up dictating the substantive laws of other states, sometimes over the protests of those other jurisdictions. When that happens, there is little those other jurisdictions can do, since the judgment of a court in one state is not reviewable by the state court of another jurisdiction. It is this improper "federalization" of class actions that the proposed legislation would correct.

The jurisdictional provisions would not move virtually all class action litigation into the federal courts.

- The provisions would simply allow removal of certain interstate class actions to federal court – it would not require removal. If the state courts of a jurisdiction provide an evenhanded forum for litigating class actions, defendants presumably will not remove new cases to federal court and will instead allow them to proceed in state court. That's how the system is supposed to work under the diversity jurisdiction provisions of Article III – to provide an alternative federal forum for litigation if the state courts of a jurisdiction are inhospitable to out-of-state defendants.

The suggestion that the bill would infringe upon the traditional authority of the states to manage their own judicial business misperceives the nature of most state court class actions.

- In most state law-based class actions, the proposed classes encompass residents of multiple states. Thus, the trial court – regardless of whether it is a state or federal court – must interpret and apply the laws of multiple jurisdictions.
- It is far more appropriate for a federal court to interpret the laws of various states (a task inherent in the constitutional concept of diversity jurisdiction), as opposed to having one state court dictate to other states what their laws mean. In short, what business does a state court judge elected by several thousand residents of a small county in Alabama have in telling the state of Massachusetts what its laws mean? Why should an Alabama state court judge be rendering interpretations of Massachusetts law that are binding on Massachusetts residents and that cannot be appealed to or reviewed by Massachusetts courts? These matters of interstate comity are more appropriately handled by federal judges appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.
- Even stranger is the increasingly frequent phenomenon that in class actions, one state court resolves the claims of residents of multiple other states against a defendant that resides in yet another jurisdiction. Why should a Texas court be resolving the claims of Wyoming residents against a California corporation? Those are the sorts of disputes for which federal diversity jurisdiction was designed.

Brett,

Peggy Love of EPA called requesting a memo that details the ethical guidelines when combining official and political travel for government officials.
One of EPA's regional administrators is visiting the TX regional office and also wants to attend a political fundraiser. They claimed that a memo already exists on this subject. Do you have it or is this a Moose question?

Patrick

The Free Congress Commentary
Still Pestering Pickering
By John Nowacki

Although the Left has pulled out all the stops in its attempt to defeat the nomination of Charles Pickering Sr. to the U.S. Court of Appeals, there are probably enough votes in the full Senate for him to win confirmation. But that won???t make any difference if he can???t make it out of the Judiciary Committee.

After a February 7 nomination hearing -- Judge Pickering???s second -- it was apparent that most Democrat Senators on the Judiciary Committee are siding with liberal interest groups in opposing his nomination. And about a week ago, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle announced that he would oppose the nomination as well.

Pickering was confirmed as a U.S. District Judge in 1990 after the Senate approved his nomination by unanimous consent. The Judiciary Committee had unanimously voted to report out his nomination that year, with Senators Patrick Leahy, Ted Kennedy, Joseph Biden, and Herbert Kohl present for the vote.

Judge Pickering has received a majority ???well-qualified??? rating from the American Bar Association, which evaluates (among other things) ???judicial temperament,??? and whose published guidelines define that as including a nominee???s ???compassion . . . freedom from bias, and commitment to equal justice under the law.??? In a letter to the President last March, Leahy and Schumer referred to ABA ratings as the ???gold standard by which judicial candidates are judged.???

None of that makes any difference to the left-wing groups who have Pickering in their cross-hairs. In an effort to rally their troops for the next Supreme Court nomination, they???ve mounted a smear campaign that portrays Pickering as backward on voting rights, race relations, and civil rights generally. In short, without actually uttering the word, the Left is branding him as a racist.

Never mind that Pickering testified against the Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan -- in 1967 Mississippi -- despite the risks involved. Never mind that he worked with the FBI against the Klan. Never mind that he???s heavily involved in racial reconciliation efforts, and that he has been for years. Or that he has a record of following the law and precedent in his years on the bench. The truth is that in his public and private life, Pickering has a strong record on civil rights and race issues.

I???ve said all along that liberals are counting on people being scared off by accusations about civil rights, hoping that no one will look closely at their charges. Because when Judge Pickering???s record is examined in its entirety -- and not in carefully edited bits and pieces -- it becomes clear that there is absolutely nothing to their case.

When the Legal Times, the Washington D.C. legal newspaper, took a close look at Judge Pickering???s record, it concluded that you won???t get the full story on Pickering from liberals??? portrayals of his life and record, and that (to put it mildly) there is an ???alternate view??? to the issue.

When the Washington Post addressed the nomination on Sunday, the liberal editorial page concluded that the Left???s unfair portrayal of Judge Pickering degrades the confirmation process.

And when the liberal New York Times looked at the support for Pickering back home in Mississippi, it found that while the NAACP leadership is demanding that Pickering not be confirmed, many blacks who know Pickering and his reputation firsthand support his nomination.

What this battle really comes down to is the vote in the Judiciary Committee, which could happen at any time. There are 10 Democrats and 9

Republicans on the Judiciary Committee. Judge Pickering needs one Democrat vote for his nomination to get out of the committee.

Some have suggested that Senator Kohl of Wisconsin might still have an open mind; others have mentioned (almost unbelievably) Senator Feinstein of California.

This is the time for conservatives to act, to contact their Senators and let them know what they think. The Left knows the importance of this battle, and its people aren???t hesitating to act. We can only hope that conservatives understand it too, and that they realize what that means they should do.

John Nowacki is deputy director of the Free Congress Foundation???s Judicial Selection Monitoring Project.

Political Activity Overview
(February 20, 2002)

General Principle

- In general, Executive Office of the President political appointees (EOP)[1] and Senate-confirmed officials (PAS) may engage in a wide variety of political activity (other than expressly soliciting contributions) including while on duty and in the office. The government must be reimbursed for additional costs associated with that activity -- that is, the costs beyond what the government otherwise would have incurred.
    - Certain investigative and national security agencies have more restrictive rules and policies; each such agency is responsible for appropriate guidance.

The Major Rules for EOP and PAS Officials

- Fundraisers
    - may appear and speak at fundraisers, but no explicit fundraising
- Use of Title
    - no use of actual title in invitations to political events (attempt to review invitations in advance)
    - may use "The Honorable" if applicable; former political titles appropriate
    - the official title may be used in a biography distributed at the event itself, in the introduction of the speaker, and in other similar ways at event
- Travel Costs
    - appropriate political entity pays costs associated with political travel
    - mixed trips: reimbursement determined by "total activity time"
    - security-related costs are official costs
    - corporate aircraft policy (do not use absent extraordinary circumstances)
    - Events in government buildings
        - no fundraising events on government property
        - appearance issues with donors qua donors
- Equipment
    - generally permissible for EOP and PAS officials to use equipment such as computers, printers, telephones, and FAXes for reasonable political activity because there are no additional costs incurred by government except incidental costs of paper
        - appearance issues from excessive use

[1] Such officials ordinarily work beyond normal work hours and outside the normal duty post as contemplated by the regulations.

Official versus Political

- Few bright-line rules; often a case-by-case judgment (1982 OLC opinion)
- The definitional issue is relevant primarily for use of title and travel purposes.
- Political activity is activity primarily related to an election, a campaign, a political party event, or a political party's operations.
    - Speaking at or attending an event held by a political party or political organization is ordinarily considered "political" unless the speaker is speaking only on official policy matters; if the event is a fundraiser or a campaign event, however, it ordinarily should be considered political regardless of content.
    - An otherwise official event is official notwithstanding that it may somehow incidentally assist the popularity of a political party or candidate (for example, if the event is in a district of a political candidate or if a political candidate such as a House member attends the event).
        - Speakers at an official event should avoid expressly advocating the election of a candidate.
    - Being knowledgeable about the political environment and the status of particular races can be relevant to one's official duties, for it is all but impossible to understand Congress or state or local government without being knowledgeable about the overall political/electoral environment in Congress and the states. Therefore, a briefing on the political environment and the status of particular races can be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
    - Being knowledgeable about public opinion and public approval similarly can be relevant to one's official duties, and briefings on such issues ordinarily should be considered official activity depending on the overall context of the briefing.
- Informing the public about public policy issues, about the official and ceremonial activities of the President and the Administration, about activities in Congress, and about the Administration's legislative strategy is official activity (and indeed can be an official responsibility).

Principle for non-EOP, non-PAS employees

- Other Executive Branch officers and employees (again, except those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may engage in a wide variety of political activity, but they may do so only while off duty and not on government property.

- The law also recognizes, however, that certain Executive Branch employees who are not themselves White House or PAS officials may be required in the performance of their official duties to accompany or assist White House or PAS officials engaging in political activity (for example, ordinary duties related to security, scheduling, or typing). Such assistance is permissible, and the government need not be reimbursed for the compensation and expenses associated with such assistance.

Specific Rules

- Except for those in certain investigative and national security agencies, the permissible range of political activities includes:

    - participation in political organizations, which includes:

        - being a member of a political party;
        - serving as an officer of a political party;
        - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
        - organizing a political party;
        - participating in a political convention or rally; and
        - serving as a delegate to a political convention.

    - participation in political campaigns, which includes:

        - displaying political pictures, signs, stickers, or buttons (although employees other than White House and PAS appointees cannot do so while on duty or in their offices);
        - circulating a nominating petition;
        - canvassing for votes;
        - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material (so long as one's official title is not used, except for that of the President and Vice President);
        - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
        - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

    - participation in elections, including:

        - voting;
        - acting as officer or watcher at a polling place;
        - serving as election judge or clerk; and
        - driving voters to polling places.

    - participation in fundraising:

Other than the President or Vice President, Executive Branch officers and employees may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. However, Executive Branch officers and employees (other than those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may:

- make political contributions;
- attend political fundraisers;
- manage or organize political fundraisers behind the scenes;
- speak at political fundraisers, so long as one's official title is not used (the term of address "The Honorable" may be used);
- be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser, so long as the invitation does not use one's official title (again, the term of address "the Honorable" may be used);
- solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual, without using one's official title (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she ask a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency to provide such services).

- As the above summary reveals, certain kinds of political activities are forbidden:
  - no soliciting, accepting, or receiving political contributions, except by President and Vice President (but officials may organize, manage, appear at, and speak at fundraisers)
  - no fundraising on government property
  - official's name cannot appear on an invitation as a "sponsor" of a fundraiser, but can be identified as a guest speaker
  - official's title cannot be used in connection with political events, but can use "The Honorable"
  - general misuse of official authority
    - cannot ask regulated entities or those under investigation to engage in political activities; however, one can speak to a diverse group that includes individuals within those categories
    - cannot ask subordinates to engage in political activity; however, superiors and subordinates may interact on political matters when both are involved in same political activity or organization
  - other than President and Vice President, cannot run as a candidate in a partisan election except under specified circumstances

North Carolina's Salute to George W. Bush

Wednesday, February 27, 2002
Charlotte, North Carolina

We are deeply honored to welcome you to North Carolina's Salute to George W. Bush. It appears as though this special event, on behalf of the Dole 2002 Committee, Hayes for Congress and the North Carolina Victory 2002 Committee, will be one of the most successful ever in the state of North Carolina.

This would not be possible without the loyal support and generous enthusiasm of our statewide Finance Committee members and everyone who took part in our Salute Leadership.

From Asheville to Wilmington and Concord to Salisbury, our capital city of Raleigh and our host city of Charlotte, thank you everyone for being here today to honor our president, George W. Bush.

Please accept our heartfelt thanks and gratitude for your continuing support and commitment to Elizabeth Dole, Robin Hayes and our get out the vote efforts for this fall.

Now on to victory in 2002!

Every effort was made to confirm the proper listing of individuals and organizations prior to printing.

Very good, but I also do not know why it should matter that the statutory scheme be "coherent and consistent" in order that the Court follow the plain language of a particular provision. The Court must be aware of legislation I have rarely seen, as "coherent and consistent" statutory schemes are not exactly common, at least on any important issues.

Tim et al.:

Justice Thomas's opinion for the six-Justice majority in Tuesday's (2/19/2002) decision in Barnhart v. Sigmon Coal Company may warm your heart on the subject of statutory interpretation and legislative history. For example (internal citations all omitted):

"As in all statutory construction cases, we begin with the language of the statute. The first step 'is to determine whether the language at issue has a plain and unambiguous meaning with regard to the particular dispute in the case.' The inquiry ceases 'if the statutory language is unambiguous and "the statutory scheme is coherent and consistent."' With respect to the question presented in this case, this statute is unambiguous. The statutory text instructs that the Coal Act does not permit the Commissioner to assign beneficiaries to the successor in interest of a signatory operator." . . .

"We see no reason to give greater weight to the views of two Senators than to the collective votes of both Houses, which are memorialized in the unambiguous statutory text." . . .

FN 15 "Moreover, were we to adopt this form of statutory interpretation, we would be placing an obligation on Members of Congress not only to monitor their colleague's floor statements but to read every word of the Congressional Record including written explanations inserted in to the record. This we will not do. The only 'evidence' that we need rely on is the clear statutory text." . . .

"Dissatisfied with the text of the statute, the Commissioner attempts to search for an apply an overarching legislative purpose to each section of the statute. Dissatisfaction, however, is often the cost of legislative compromise. And negotations surrounding enactment of this bill tell a typical story of legislative battle among interest groups, Congress, and the President. Indeed, this legislation failed to ease tensions among many of the interested parties. The deals brokered during a Committee markup, on the floor of the two Houses, during a joint House and Senate Conference, or in negotiations with the President are not for us to judge or second-guess.""

The sample you received was actually used for a loan to NARA's Gerald Ford don't see any problem with the WH using this form to loan materials (which include personal property of the President and staff, and other governmental items that are not in NARA's legal custody) to NARA. It is my understanding that the WH has been using this since at least 1989. (I also see now from looking at the form, that it includes the items as part of the form, and not as an attachment.)

Let us know if you have any particular concerns and how you would like to proceed.

The conditions in the sample loan agreement I received seem to contemplate a loan to a party other than the National Archives. In this case, the loan is to the National Archives, as I understand it. How does that change the agreement (and need for it in this form)?

I just read the Milbank piece, and was flabbergasted, to say the least. Milbank apparently conferred with only the GAO and former Clinton employees Mark Lindsey and Mike Malone. Had he bothered to check with us, we might have cleared up some matters, if we decided to respond. Milbank's article is all the more troubling given GAO's track record of misstatements to the press about this investigation; on at least three occasions, the GAO has made statements where they later claimed to me that they were "misquoted."

The article's lead about a "warm pizza crust" is both a mystery and a red-herring. First, I have sat in on every interview with WH employees, and, according to my notes, no one has mentioned that pizza crusts were still "warm." To the contrary: A few people mentioned finding pizza; but, to the extent anyone commented on its age, they said that it was "weeks old" and was found "inside a desk." According to GAO, the "warm pizza" statement was made by Larry Handeland in reference to Room 185. I have no refererence to that statement in my notes. But, even if the statement were made (perhaps during an aside to the GAO folks, when I wasn't nearby), the story is a complete red-herring. As he told GAO, Larry Handeland began entering the rooms in the EEOB beginning between 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. on January 19. Therefore, even assuming that "the Clinton officials" sourced in the article are correct -- that "no Clinton aides assigned to that office were even in the White House complex after [midnight on] Jan. 19" -- Handeland could certainly have found warm pizza while surveying the rooms.

Lindsay's statement that "the White House continues to push the matter" is also false. It is, however, a theme we have heard before from Walker, and should be prepared to rebut. We did not ask for this investigation and, although we have responded, it is GAO -- not the WH -- that continues to drag out the investigation by making more and more requests for information. There have been more than a dozen additional request over the last month.

The article also states that "[t]he Bush team gave the GAO a photo of a dirty room in the White House complex, but Clinton aides wrote that 'the office featured in the photograph was vacated at least one week prior to Inauguration Day, and had been in fact completely cleaned by the morning of January 20th.'" The photos that we provided to GAO were of Room 128 -- the Counsel's office in the EEOB. GAO has received statements from career employees (statements that, given the circumstances surrounding the Clinton departure, no one could deny) that the attorneys in the Counsel's Office (and specifically in Room 128) were working up until the last minute on January 20th. When I asked GAO about this statement in the article, I was told that Lindsay's letter was NOT referring to the pictures that we provided to GAO, but to pictures that appeared on the Drudge Report prior to GAO beginning its investigation. Now my recollection is that the Drudge Report pic was also of Room 128. But that is beside the point because Milbank's statement that "[t]he Bush team gave the GAO a photo of a dirty room" is patently false, in all events.

Finally, Milbank refers to some missing "historical articfacts," and quotes Lindsay's retort that "at least one of the artifacts, an historic fireplace mirror, can be found hanging over the fireplace in Chief of Staff Card's office." This is a complete strawman. We have never suggested that the mirror was missing. We have told GAO on repeated occasions that 5 items were missing (a painting of a seascape, a brass mantle clock, a plate with the WH on it, a soup bowl, and an oyster plate). As I recall Sig Girgus described each of the 5 items to the GAO at length and estimated there value; I believe we also provided GAO with photographs and descriptions of each item.. No one has suggested for a moment that a mirror was missing.

So, Milbank's article is based on false statements and red-herrings. Nice journalism.

Subject: York's NRO column

In a new twist in the battle over the nomination of Charles Pickering to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, a former top Clinton Justice Department official - who also happens to be former Vice President Al Gore's brother-in-law - has given the Senate Judiciary Committee a strong endorsement of Pickering's character.

The former official is Frank Hunger, who headed the Justice Department's Civil Division from 1993 until 1999. Like Pickering, Hunger is a Mississippian, and the two men have known each other for almost 30 years. Hunger is the man Pickering called in early 1995 when Pickering, a federal district judge in southern Mississippi, was trying to decide how to sentence a man convicted in a cross burning case. Pickering had become frustrated by the Justice Department's reluctance to answer questions about sentencing practices for similar crimes and complained to Hunger, who told him the problem was outside his area of responsibility. Democratic senator John Edwards, in a harsh interrogation at Pickering's February 7 confirmation hearing, accused Pickering of violating judicial ethics by calling Hunger.

In a February 12 letter to committee chairman Patrick Leahy and ranking Republican Orrin Hatch, Hunger takes issue with those allegations. "I have little or no recollection of the call," Hunger writes. "The significance of this to me is had I felt at the time that there was anything inappropriate or improper about Judge Pickering's call I would most assuredly remember it today." Hunger says he has read Pickering's account of the matter and has "no reason whatsoever to take issue with anything he [Pickering] has said about the call."

Hunger's letter continues with an endorsement of Pickering as a judge and a man. "I have known Judge Pickering for nearly thirty years and have the utmost respect for him as a fair-minded judge who would never knowingly do anything improper or unethical," Hunger writes. "He is a person of great integrity, strong moral character, courage and compassion who treats all who come before him in a fair and dignified way." Hunger concludes by saying that Pickering has been "a distinguished judge and I think it most regrettable that his nomination has become controversial."

Despite the lift provided by Hunger's letter, there is increasing pessimism among Republicans about Pickering's chances. Many were deeply discouraged on Sunday after the appearance of Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein on NBC's Meet the Press, in which Feinstein declared her opposition to Pickering and said every Democrat on the committee agreed with her. "I believe that there's virtually unanimous opinion on the Democratic side of the Judiciary Committee that he will not be confirmed," Feinstein said. "In other words, he will not be voted out of the Judiciary Committee." "So all ten Democrats will oppose him?" host Tim Russert asked. "I believe so," Feinstein answered.

From a Republican perspective, what is even more disturbing than the fate of the Pickering nomination is the fear that Democrats are making good on threats to adopt a no-conservatives-allowed policy of evaluating nominations to the federal bench. "I've looked rather carefully at [Pickering's] background, and I think you have a person who has very strong right-wing views, both politically and personally," Feinstein said. "The question always comes: Can you put those views entirely aside? This is a lifetime appointment. If you can't be assured that the individual is really going to put those views aside, what happens is two years into the term those views creep forward again."

Finally, in the most disheartening development for Republicans, Feinstein returned to an argument against President Bush that Democrats have not used publicly in many months, certainly not since Sept. 11: the contention that the narrowness of Bush's victory in the 2000 election disqualifies him from appointing conservatives to the bench. "President Bush did not have a large mandate," Feinstein said. "There is no mandate, in my view, to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you're going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges, and those judges that they find outside of the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support."
A committee vote on Pickering is likely by March 7, but some key Republicans now believe Pickering's defeat is just a formality. "I still had hope until Sunday," said one GOP aide after watching Feinstein on Meet the Press. Now, that hope appears to be gone.

Talent Campaign
TBD Addresss

To the Talent Campaign:

This letter is written to advise of an improper use of Karen Hughes's title on the official Talent Campaign invitations sent out to Kansas City and St. Louis citizens in regard to Ms. Hughes' visit to Missouri on March 6th.

Prior to the invitations issuance, your campaign was notified that Ms. Hughes' title was to read, "Long-time friend and adviser to the President," and not "Senior Counselor to the President" or "Assistant to the President" or any other variation beside the one recommended.

White House counsel appreciates your acknowledgement of this situation, as well as your willingness to comply in the future with all recommendations that relate to Administration surrogates and their involvement in Talent Campaign events.

Sincerely,

XXXXXXXX

Subject: my remarks

I can give you the beginning of what I plan to say tomorrow, just for purposes of your putting the panelists in an effective order and getting a sense of my overall theme. This is not the complete paper and I do plan to make significant revisions before tomorrow morning. Sorry for going down to the wire like this..

Rebecca Brown

I would like to use my time to pose and explore a puzzle that I think has not been satisfactorily resolved: why a nonoriginalist (like me) should care about history-as I do and as I think most non-originalists do. I want to say that historical truth (assuming there is such a thing) is overrated. At least in constitutional interpretation. What I mean by that is that the quest for "truth" misconceives, I think, the project of reading the Constitution as well as the role of the judge. That project, to my mind, is not the pursuit of historical fact at all. As my fellow panelist Professor Rakove has said so well, it "is very much about a specific moment in history but is not about history alone." But I am unwilling to say that history itself is either unimportant or irrelevant to the task of reading the Constitution.
That is the puzzle. Setting out the framework for considering this puzzle, let me use Federalist 10 as an example. Should we consider Federalist 10 in interpreting the Constitution? The standard originalist view, looking to intent of the framers, is yes, we should-Madison was a framer and Federalist 10 sets out his theory of the structure of a large republic. Professor Kramer has shown us that, in fact, an originalist worth her salt should not follow Federalist 10 because few people other than Madison were aware of those arguments, let alone took them seriously in understanding or ratifying the Constitution. Thus, the answer for the revised originalist, like Professor Barnett-who looks for original meaning-should be no.

That is one end of the spectrum-the original intent or original meaning originalism. Use history to confine, constrain and determine the meaning of a constitutional provision. At the other end of the spectrum is only a caricature, for no one has ever really pressed this approach, but it would be that we should look to the "best" political theory we can find, whether it be Madison or Machiavelli or Rawls-and use it to interpret the Constitution. This view is sometimes attributed to Dworkin, but as I say I believe it is a caricature of him and so will call that view the Dworkin caricature.

I submit that the challenge for truly responsible constitutional interpretation is to consider what middle ground there is that can consider Madison's views on faction as discussed in Federalist 10, caring about them even if they had no 18th century audience, yet not simply because Madison was a particularly astute political theorist, in the same category in that regard as Machiavelli or John Rawls. That middle ground holds the promise for constitutional judgment that has integrity both because it accords value to the historical and theoretical origins of the Constitution and because, at the same time, it does not abdicate responsibility to give that Constitution its best meaning for present times.

For I would want to understand Federalist 10 and use it to help me resolve current interpretational issues even if I knew that it had never been published at all. The question is why, and all I can do in this limited time is take a shot at beginning to answer it.

The project is to interpret the Constitution that we have. That is why history is useful-it helps us know more about the events that gave rise to our nation's commitments, it informs us as to the evils that the founders of our nation sought to avoid, and some of the aspirations to which they set their sights for posterity. History, in combination with the text of the Constitution, is a contributor to a larger sense of what the Constitution seeks to achieve, the balance that it seeks to strike, the values that it seeks to perpetuate. In that sense, history is relevant to the interpretation of the Constitution as a whole.

But history should not be confused with truth or with specific subjective desires of our ancestors. The historians confirm our sense that history will always be art, not nature. The array of choices and inferences to be made, the selection of dominant over recessive themes in a historical period, are all ways in which historians seek to render a collection of events intelligible for subsequent generations. That is a very useful task that they provide. By doing so, however, they tell us nothing about what the Constitution should mean in a given setting. Rather, they offer us a basis for developing insight into the larger purposes of the Constitution which judges or scholars can then use to develop judgments about what particular provisions should mean.

Re Heather's request about the meeting: Libby is arranging the room in EEOB for Judge Gonzales to meet with the visiting Miss. group on Wednesday after the 10:00 meeting between Judge Pickering and the President. Also, Heather had mentioned the AG as a possible attendee for the EEOB event with the Miss. visitors, and Libby is touching base with AG's office as well. I also have left a message with OLP giving them the latest.

I provided some suggested talking points for Brett's review/edits. It's my understanding from DoJ OLP that the AG will not be available (which isn't a real problem from our standpoint).

We are waving in those coming to the meeting with the President, but are not handling the waves for the meeting with the Judge. Matt, I know you all are in contact with Todd at progress for america on the participants for the meeting with the Judge. Will you all handle those waves?

Let me know what you need from us! Thanks, Heather

MATT- If political has people coming in for this event I assume you guys are handling the WAVES for all of the guests.

News Advisory:

The Associated Press is reporting that the White House will hold an event tomorrow morning to boost the nomination of Charles Pickering, President Bush's nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (covering Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana).

Individuals and representatives from civil rights and women's rights organizations in Mississippi, Texas, and Louisiana will be available tomorrow to share why they are opposed to Judge Pickering's confirmation. Members of the press interested in contacting these individuals should call 202-466-1885.

Some of these community leaders visited Capitol Hill last week to voice their opposition to their Senators and to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Charles Pickering's record has come under attack from a diverse group of local community leaders and a cross-section of national organizations because of his record on civil rights and constitutional rights. In addition, ethical issues have been raised by these leaders and others.

1 March 2002

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid for all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress, and which shall take effect on the 180th day after ratification of this article:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The rights of victims of violent crime, being capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them, are hereby established and shall not be denied by any State or the United States and may be restricted only as provided in this article.

"SECTION 2. A victim of violent crime shall have the right to reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime and of any release or escape of the accused; the rights not to be excluded from such public proceeding and reasonably to be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, pardon, and commutation proceedings; and the right to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the offender. These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity.

"SECTION 3. Nothing in this article shall be construed to provide grounds for a new trial or to authorize any claim for damages. Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article, and no person accused of the crime may obtain any form of relief hereunder.

"SECTION 4. Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article, except those pertaining to federal pardon and commutation proceedings."

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General Washington, D.C. 20530

Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510-6275

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter presents the views of the Department of Justice on the proposed Victims' Rights Amendment. Both the Attorney General and the President strongly support guaranteeing rights to victims of violent crime and we agree with the sponsors of this bill that these rights can only be fully protected by amending the Constitution of the United States.

The amendment would protect victims' rights before all levels of government in the United States, including the federal government, the states, and municipalities. At least thirty-two states have already recognized the importance of granting constitutional guarantees to victims of crime by amending their state constitutions. Additionally, most states have passed statutory protections for victims of crime. The current amendment respects the role of state and local governments because it does not bar state and local governments from providing additional or broader rights to victims. It provides a floor and not a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime.

Although there have been legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained within this amendment, in our view legislative guarantees are not always sufficient when viewed in light of an accused's constitutional rights. Unfortunately, this is the case even when a victim's statutory rights are capable of protection without infringing upon the defendant's rights. In drafting the current proposal, the Department believes that the sponsors struck the proper balance between the rights of victims and of defendants and that the amendment, as drafted, will not infringe upon the constitutional rights afforded to defendants and convicted offenders.

At the same time, as the principal federal law enforcement agency, the Department must remain keenly aware of the effects that such an amendment would have on the landscape of the criminal justice system. There is no doubt that if Congress is successful in passing this amendment and granting victims a voice in the system, there will have to be adjustments in how U.S. Attorneys, in addition to state and local prosecutors, deal with their law enforcement and prosecutorial responsibilities.

The Department has therefore reviewed the proposed amendment taking into account both our responsibilities in the criminal justice system and our desire to support the granting of constitutional rights to victims of violent crime. It is our view that any newly conferred rights should not be unnecessarily burdensome and we believe that the current language accomplishes this goal. Below are the Department's views on the specific provisions of the amendment.

Section 1 of the Victims' Rights Amendment

It is the Department's view that section 1 is a preamble and, as such, does not confer nor restrict any rights, nor has any effect on the criminal justice system. However, the Department agrees with the inclusion of this language in the amendment and with the proposition it enunciates, that the rights of victims of violent crime are 'capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them.'

We also support limiting the application of the amendment by providing constitutional guarantees only to 'victims of violent crime.' All victims of crime clearly deserve to be treated with fairness and dignity in the criminal justice system. By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment ensures that the process remains manageable while recognizing the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims. The Department would note that in any legislation implementing this amendment, Congress should consider delineating the definition of 'victims of violent crime' so as to provide more guidance as to the full impact of the guarantees contained in section 2 of the amendment.

Section 2 of the Victims' Rights Amendment

As stated previously, the Department strongly supports the proposition that victims of violent crime deserve specific rights that allow them to have a voice in the criminal justice system. It is our view that the three categories of rights contained in section 2, along with the final clause which enunciates the standards for exceptions, grants to these victims the proper rights to accomplish this goal.

1. '[T]he right to reasonable and timely notice of public proceedings involving the crime and of any release or escape of the accused'

This guarantee recognizes the importance of allowing victims the opportunity to be kept informed of matters that concern their victimization. The Department fully supports including the 'reasonable and timely' language, which in our view places the responsibility of the notice on the governmental entity but does not unduly burden agencies by requiring that a victim receive actual notice. There are a number of situations where an actual notice requirement might prove untenable, such as in crimes involving a mass of victims and where a victim has moved away without informing law enforcement officers or prosecutors. By providing notice only to public proceedings, the proposed amendment affords preserves flexibility for situations where law enforcement and prosecutorial concerns, for necessity or efficiency, will require that proceedings be closed to the public.

2. '[T]he rights not to be excluded from such public proceeding and reasonably to be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, pardon, and commutation proceedings'

The Department appreciates that the main complaints that victims have with the criminal justice system stem from their exclusion from proceedings that affect their well-being. For this reason, we strongly support the right of victims of violent crime to be present at proceedings that are otherwise open to the public. However, because of law enforcement and prosecutorial concerns, and specifically the discretion that is necessary in carrying out these responsibilities, we would object to constitutionalizing the right to attend closed and deliberative proceedings. We therefore strongly support the language contained in this clause.

By allowing victims to be heard, the amendment recognizes the important impact that allowing victims to express themselves has on the well being of those victimized by crime. The 'reasonably to be heard' language allows the judge or decision-maker to exercise their discretion to decide whether the right to be heard would best be satisfied orally or in writing.

3. '[A]nd the right to decisions that duly consider the victim's safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the offender'

The Department supports granting victims of violent crime the right to due consideration of certain interests that go to the very heart of their victimization--their safety, interest in finality, and compensation from their offenders. It is the Department's belief that this clause ensures that proper consideration will be given to the three substantive interests enunciated. We further believe that this clause applies only to judicial decisions and we would ultimately oppose any effort to regulate internal and deliberative decisions by law enforcement and prosecution officials.

The Department also supports limiting the types of claims to restitution to those that are 'just and timely.' In previous drafts, there was no such limitation. The result would have been to allow considerations of claims that were not warranted by the facts or were raised long after the adjudication of responsibility for the crime. The Department is committed to ensuring the finality of judgments.

4. 'These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity'

As you well know, one of our primary functions at the Department of Justice is the administration of the criminal justice system. In order to carry out this function, there is a need to ensure that our prosecutors and law enforcement officials retain a certain amount of flexibility in order to carry out their duty to bring offenders to justice in a timely, efficient, and fair manner. In addition, we are cognizant of these same considerations faced by state and local entities in the administration of their duties. Therefore, our major concern with any proposed constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened in such a way as to impair our ability to prosecute defendants. The Department believes that the sponsors have recognized this concern and the current proposal properly balances the rights of victims with the need for the efficient detection and prosecution of crime by allowing for appropriate considerations when the government can show a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of justice.

We note that the language providing for a showing of substantial interest is not, in our view, intended to convey that the government's interest in public safety and the administration of justice is properly categorized as a substantial interest rather than a compelling interest. Indeed, the Department believes that public safety and the administration of justice are compelling interests of the most paramount importance. Rather, we interpret the language not to qualify the interest but to provide the proper standard by which the courts should evaluate the concerns in a given case to determine if it is appropriate to grant an exception to the rights. The Department fully supports the lower standard of review, substantial interest, when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of justice, while requiring the higher standard of review of compelling necessity for other possible exceptions.

Although we support granting these rights as outlined above, and trust that the proper enforcement mechanisms will either be forthcoming in implementing legislation or through avenues that currently exist such as intervention or mandamus, the Department strongly supports the language contained in section 3 which states: 'Nothing in this article shall be construed to provide grounds for a new trial or to authorize any claim for damages. Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article, and no person accused of the crime may obtain any form of relief hereunder.'

The point and purpose of this amendment is to provide constitutional rights to victims, not to provide additional constitutional rights to criminal defendants. We would oppose any new cause of action that would be detrimental to our prosecutors and therefore detrimental to our efficient management of the criminal justice system. State and local prosecutors would also be adversely affected if this amendment could be used in such a way so as to hold them responsible when a victim felt that their rights were being deprived. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment.

Furthermore, the Department's view is that the amendment should confer standing only upon those for whom it was intended to benefit. Therefore, the limiting language in the final sentence of this section is both appropriate and necessary. It precludes a criminal defendant from asserting the rights of victims under theories of third-party standing. We would like to note, however, that Congress should consider defining 'victim' and 'victim's lawful representative' in any implementing legislation to ensure that this amendment is not utilized by an unintended party.

The Department fully supports the language contained in section 4 of the amendment, which provides that "Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article, except those pertaining to federal pardon and commutation proceedings." Although the amendment appears to be self-executing to a large extent, and therefore the rights are seemingly enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation, the Department welcomes any implementing legislation that Congress may deem appropriate. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to define those situations where the amendment will apply so as to minimize the difficulties that could arise if prosecutors find themselves unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain situations. The Department looks forward to working with the Congress in the event that such implementing legislation is considered.

In addition, the Department strongly supports the limiting language that will prevent Congress from establishing legislation that will alter federal pardon and commutation proceedings. In the past, opposition arose over any attempt to curtail the President's power under Article II of the Constitution. The view of the Department is that the President's power in this regard is plenary and this should in no way be affected by passage of the Victims' Rights Amendment.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this matter. If we may be of additional assistance, we trust that you will not hesitate to call upon us. The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration to the submission of this letter.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant

Dear Mr. Garo:

We have received your inquiry regarding the President's December 12, 2001, invocation of executive privilege. Thank you very much for your inquiry.

White House May Set Up Judicial Nominations &War Room8 In Cheney,s Capitol

the problem with the Pickering nomination, which is scheduled for defeat Thursday unless he withdraws beforehand, was not a lack of effort on anyone's part but a lack of coordinated effort, according to an administration official. Republicans are now talking about creating a + war room, to handle controversial judicial nominations, linking White House officials, the Justice Department and Senate Republicans in a combined effort to push nominees. Some in the administration are eyeing the space in the Dirksen Senate Office Building that is set aside for Vice President Cheney but is rarely used now as the actual war room to handle the effort.8

Let us know when today you think we will get the 150. I assume these are still under consideration, and no final decision has been made?

Also, are any of the documents considered classified? The Judge's letter says that the remaining 150 only concern deliberations about appointments, but I thought that a few were reviewed by NSC for possible classification. If there are any classified, then we can withhold under (b)(1), and you don't have to assert privilege, but we still need to know what they are. Please advise. Thanks.

Mr. Kavanaugh,

We're in receipt of the letter from Judge Gonzales dated March 7 updating
the status of your review of the remaining Reagan records previously sent.
Would you be able to send us a listing of the 150 records remaining to be reviewed? I understand that the materials have been numbered making it relatively easy to create a list. With that in hand, staff at the Reagan Library will be able to expeditiously proceed with a further opening of all but the 150 pages still subject to review. (I'm also informed this morning from Craig Blackwell at DOJ
Federal Programs that plaintiffs will be raising an issue in their filing today concerning the lack of forward progress in opening 59,000 pages; but the Reagan
library staff will be able to do so once NARA has received your list specifically identifying the remaining pages.)
Gary Stern is off til Monday; please feel free to call Amy Krupsky or me
today
if you have any questions. Amy is at 301-713-6025 x230 and I'm at x232.
Thanks, Jason

Dear Michael,

As a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, I need your help today to help confirm Judge Pickering. This is an opportunity to halt the vacancy crisis that presently plagues the federal courts. Chief Justice Rehnquist specifically urged the Senate "to act with reasonable promptness and to vote each nominee up or down." He continued, "The Senate is not, of course, obliged to confirm any particular nominee. But it ought to act on each nominee and to do so within a reasonable time."

As many of you are aware, Judge Pickering from Mississippi has been the subject of very harsh criticism from Senate Democrats. This week several supporters of Judge Pickering from Mississippi met with the President, who made a very strong statement of support for Judge Pickering. Please forward this message to your Team, asking them to call their Senators and urge a vote to send Judge Pickering to the floor for an honest "up or down" vote.

Sincerely,

Senator Mitch McConnell
United States Senate
Committee on the Judiciary

Virtually every federal initiative the Administration does or proposes extent state law conflicts.

SUBJECT: OMB Request for Views on S1994 Combined 8(a) and HubZone Preference Act

DEADLINE: 10:00 A.M. Monday, March 25, 2002
In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This bill would: (1) Give businesses certified under both the 8(a) and the Historically Underutilized Business Zone ("HUBZone") programs a statutory preference over those that are certified under only one of the programs. (Thus, HUBZone firms which are also 8(a) firms would have priority over other HUBZone firms, and 8(a) firms which are also HUBZone firms would have priority over other 8(a) firms). (2) Provide a price evaluation preference to firms certified under both programs of 20% where the competing firm is not a small business and 10% where the competing firm is a small business. (3) Raise sole-source dollar ceilings under the 8(a) business development by $1 million (resulting in new ceilings of $4 million for sole-source contracts for goods and services and $6 million for manufacturing.).

107th CONGRESS

2d Session

S. 1994

To establish a priority preference among certain small business concerns for purposes of Federal contracts, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

March 6, 2002

Mr. KERRY (for himself and Mr. BOND) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship

A BILL

To establish a priority preference among certain small business concerns for purposes of Federal contracts, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Combined 8(a) and HUBZone Priority Preference Act'.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act the following definitions shall apply:

(1) CONTRACTING OFFICER- The term `contracting officer' has the same meaning as in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5)).

(2) 8(a) HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `8(a) HUBZone small business concern' means a qualified HUBZone small business concern that is also a section 8(a) small business concern.

(3) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `qualified HUBZone small business concern' has the same meaning as in section 3(p)(5) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(p)(5)).

(4) SECTION 8(a) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `section 8(a) small business concern' means a small business concern that is certified by the Small Business Administration as eligible to receive benefits under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)).

(5) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `small business concern' has the same meaning as in section 3(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(a)).

(6) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS- The term `small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals' has the same meaning as in section 8(a)(4)(A) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)(4)(A)).

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF PRIORITY PREFERENCE.

(a) EFFECT OF PRIORITY PREFERENCE ON RESTRICTED COMPETITION CONTRACTS-

(1) SECTION 8(a) CONTRACTS- In determining the successful offeror for a restricted competition contract under section 8(a)(1)(D) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)(1)(D)), the contracting officer shall select an offer from an 8(a) HUBZone small business concern over a comparable offer from a section 8(a) small business concern that is not a qualified HUBZone small business concern.

(2) HUBZONE CONTRACTS- In determining the successful offeror for a restricted competition contract under section 31(b)(2)(B) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657a(b)(2)(B)), the contracting officer shall select an offer from an 8(a) HUBZone small business concern over a comparable offer from a qualified HUBZone small business concern that is not a section 8(a) small business concern.

(b) EFFECT OF PRIORITY PREFERENCE ON PRICE EVALUATION PREFERENCE-

(1) IN GENERAL- Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), in any case in which a Federal procurement contract is to be awarded on the basis of full and open competition in accordance with section 303 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253), the price offered by an 8(a) HUBZone small business concern shall be deemed as being lower than the price offered by another offeror, if the price offered by the 8(a) HUBZone small business concern is not more than 20 percent higher than the price offered by the otherwise lowest and responsive offeror.

(2) OTHER SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- If the competing offeror under paragraph (1) is a small business concern, the price evaluation preference given to the 8(a) HUBZone small business concern shall be 10 percent.

(3) RESPONSIVE OFFER- An 8(a) HUBZone small business concern shall not receive a price evaluation preference under this section if it does not make a responsive offer.

(c) EXCLUSION- This section does not provide any priority preference to a small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals that is also a qualified HUBZone small business concern, unless such business has been certified by the Small Business Administration as eligible to receive benefits under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)).

SEC. 4. MODIFICATION OF SOLE SOURCE THRESHOLDS.

(a) SECTION 8(a) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- Section 8(a)(1)(D)(i)(II) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C.
637(a)(1)(D)(i)(II)) is amended--

(1) by striking `$5,000,000' and inserting `$6,000,000'; and

(2) by striking `$3,000,000' and inserting `$4,000,000'.

(b) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- Section 31(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Small Business Act

Dear Senator Stevens:

First, I apologize for the tardiness of this reply. Next, I want to thank you for your letter to Assistant to the President for Homeland Security Tom Ridge. The President and the Administration greatly appreciate the continued interest and involvement of you, the Committee on Appropriations, and the entire Congress in the critical homeland security issues facing the Nation. We share your view that it is essential for Federal, state, and local governments to work together closely as part of the significant and sustained national effort to defend the United States and the American people.

The Administration is committed to ensuring that you and the Congress receive the appropriate information you need with respect to the Administration's homeland security policies and practices. As you know, the various Executive Branch departments and agencies with responsibility for homeland security continue to provide substantial amounts of information to Congress. Executive Branch officials such as Attorney General John Ashcroft, Director Robert Mueller of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and Director Joseph Allbaugh of the Federal Emergency Management Agency have regularly testified before Congress about homeland security and other issues. Director Mitch Daniels of the Office of Management and Budget has regularly testified and provided information on issues related to the budget. In addition, Governor Ridge and other Presidential advisors have met with and provided briefings on homeland security and budgetary issues to many Members of Congress and their staffs on numerous occasions over the last six months. These kinds of activities -- all of which are designed to ensure that Congress has the information it needs on homeland security policy -- will continue in the future.

In your letter, you request that Governor Ridge formally testify before your Committee. The long-standing position of Presidents of both parties, a position long respected by Congress, is that members of the President's staff do not ordinarily testify before congressional committees. This position has long applied to Presidential advisors such as the Chief of Staff, the Counsel, the National Security Advisor, and the other immediate advisors to the President such as Governor Ridge. Therefore, we respectfully must decline your invitation for Governor Ridge to formally testify before the Committee, but also wish to emphasize that Governor Ridge and others in the Executive Branch remain available to meet with you and your entire Committee. Additionally, Governor Ridge, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, and I would be happy to meet with you about this matter at your convenience.

Sincerely,

Nicholas E. Calio
Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs

Ranking Member

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

March 12, 2002
(House Rules)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

(THIS STATEMENT HAS BEEN COORDINATED BY OMB WITH THE CONCERNED AGENCIES.)

(Rep. Goodlatte (R) Virginia and 56 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports the enactment of H.R. 2341 as an important step in reforming class action litigation. Among the bill's many commonsense provisions, the Administration supports the proposal to establish a consumer class action bill of rights that would: (1) require notice of a lawsuit to class members in "plain English"; (2) require judicial review of settlements that give class members only "coupons" or other non-cash benefits; and (3) prohibit a court from approving a settlement that discriminates among plaintiffs on account of their geographical location or status as class representatives.

The bill also would make long-needed changes to the requirements for federal diversity jurisdiction over class action cases. The Administration strongly supports the proposal to permit removal to federal court of a class action if the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2 million and there is minimal diversity (at least one plaintiff representative and one defendant are from different States). Combined with existing federal rules for consolidation of related federal cases, this proposal would help avoid the inefficiency, waste, and unfairness that has too often resulted from multiple overlapping class action suits.

The Administration would support adding, at the appropriate point in the legislative process, a provision to Section 7 of the bill to make clear that the authority of the Supreme Court under Section 2072, 2074 or 2075 of Title 28 of the U.S. Code to issue certain rules that supersede conflicting laws cannot be used to supersede this legislation and amendments made by this legislation.

Intended to be proposed by

At the appropriate place, add the following:

"Sec. ___. FAIR TREATMENT OF PRESIDENTIAL JUDICIAL NOMINEES.

(a) Findings. -- The Senate finds that --

(1) the Senate Judiciary Committee's pace in acting on judicial nominees thus far in this Congress has caused the number of judges confirmed by the Senate to fall below the number of judges who have retired during the same period, such that the 67 judicial vacancies that existed when Congress adjourned under President Clinton's last term in office in 2000 have now grown to 96 judicial vacancies, which represents an increase from 7.9 percent to 11 percent in the total number of Federal judgeships that are currently vacant;

(2) thirty one of the 96 current judicial vacancies are on the United States Courts of Appeals, representing a 17. 3 percent vacancy rate for such seats;

(3) seventeen of the 31 vacancies on the Courts of Appeals have been declared "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts;

(4) during the first 2 years of President Reagan's first term, 19 of the 20 circuit court nominations that he submitted to the Senate were confirmed; and during the first 2 years of President George H. W. Bush's term, 22 of the 23 circuit court nominations that he submitted to the Senate were confirmed; and during the first 2 years of President Clinton's first term, 19 of the 22 circuit court nominations that he submitted to the Senate were confirmed; and

(5) only 7 of President George W. Bush's 29 circuit court nominees have been confirmed to date, representing just 24 percent of such nominations submitted to the Senate.

(b) Sense of the Senate. -- It is the Sense of the Senate that, in the interests of the administration of justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee shall hold hearings on the nominees submitted by the President on May 9, 2001, by May 9, 2002.

I am informed that Mayor Williams today may call the Judge about one of the new DC Superior Court candidates, Jeb Boasberg. Boasberg is a federal prosecutor in DC. For what it is worth, I have known Boasberg a long time and think he would be great on this court.

Sen. Miller Warns of Possible Pickering Payback Fri Mar 15, 1:38 PM ET WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Sen. Zell Miller of Georgia warned fellow Democrats on Friday they may pay a political price in the South for preventing a Mississippi judge from getting a seat on a federal appeals court.

"The political repercussions are too obvious to ignore," Miller said a day after the Democratic-led Senate Judiciary Committee rejected President Bush 's bid to elevate U.S. District Judge James Pickering of Mississippi to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals

On three party-line votes of 10-9, the panel refused to send Pickering to the full Senate for consideration, contending he cannot be trusted on civil rights. It brushed aside Bush's contention he has had a good record on this front.

Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi called the committee action "a slap" at his home state. And Miller, who has frequently broken ranks with Democrats on Capitol Hill, suggested on Friday the sting may be felt across the South.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, a Vermont Democrat, brushed off Miller's warning, saying, "I don't look at judicial nominations through a political prism."

Leahy said his job is to help determine if nominees are "qualified or not." In opposing Pickering, Leahy said during 12 years on the federal bench, the judge often put his own beliefs above the law.

Miller said he was "very disappointment" by the defeat of Pickering, calling him a "good and brave man," and warned of possible repercussions.

"This action may very well elect a Republican governor in Mississippi and it will certainly make it even more difficult for Democratic candidates to be successful in the South," Miller said in a statement.

Democratic Mississippi Gov. Ronnie Musgrove's term does not end until 2004. Members of Congress across the South are up for reelection this November

EDITORIAL: Now warming up ...

The Senate Judiciary Committee's rejection last week by party-line vote of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering to a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was a shameful exercise of partisan bullying tinged with race-baiting by national "civil rights" groups.

This was the left's trial run. Liberals wanted to notify President Bush, in no uncertain terms, that the only nominations they'll confirm are either mushy moderates, closeted leftists or judicial ciphers who have no "paper trail" (or fixed philosophy, for that matter) and can be counted on to rubber-stamp the rulings of the activists already on the bench. No constitutionalists need apply.

The president should accept this challenge to his authority as the constitutionally empowered chief executive of the United States. As he considers a successor for the seat Judge Pickering would have occupied on the 5th Circuit, Mr. Bush should send up someone who's equally qualified yet even more conservative -- an unapologetic defender of individual liberties and free markets with a paper trail of journal articles or court rulings that'll make the senators' heads spin. Someone affiliated with the Institute for Justice, or the Ludwig von Mises Institute, perhaps.

And if the left-liberals reject that nominee? Send up someone even more conservative than that.

You want a battle over judicial philosophy? Bring it on.

INVITATION MEMO

TO: />$15,000 GOP/Corporate donors/

FROM: Congressman Henry Bonilla
Chairman, Texas Victory 2002

RE: PRESIDENT GEORGE W. BUSH SUPPORTS TEXAS VICTORY 2002

The race to the General Election has begun, and at the request of Governor Perry and Attorney General Cornyn I have agreed to serve as Chairman of Texas Victory 2002. We are counting on your support of this year's Victory effort -- to elect the Republican ticket from the local level to the Governor's Mansion to the United States Senate.

As you may already know President Bush will be in Dallas on March 28th. I was notified yesterday that the President wants to put his support behind this effort to raise money for the state party Victory effort, because of the obvious threat by the Democrat party.

I have been given the opportunity to invite the top 20 Texas Victory donors to a private reception and photo opportunity in Dallas with President Bush on March 28th. We NEED you to be one of those donors by giving your contribution of $25,000.

That is why I am contacting you. You have been a consistent contributor to the /Republican Party of Texas/ over the years (include only if they have)/ and this year we need your strongest support possible.

The funds raised through Victory 2002 will be used to grow our Republican base by: identifying conservative independents, advocating our message to these identified conservatives, and turning them out to support our ticket. President Bush is short one seat of a majority in the United States Senate and is aggressively trying to pick up a seat in Missouri, South Dakota and Minnesota. The National Democrats, i.e. James Carville, Hillary Clinton, etc. have targeted Texas in an effort to embarrass President Bush. Recently, we have seen Senator Daschle targeting the President's agenda by holding up the stimulus package and Judge Pickering's nomination. Our own Texas Supreme Court justice, Priscilla Owen is next on the hot seat for the federal bench.

President Bush, Governor Rick Perry, and our candidates for the Texas House and Senate need your help more than ever. Please let me know of your participation at your earliest convenience. I will be contacting you personally next week to ask for your help.

Thank you for always being there for the President and the Republican Party. Your support is greatly appreciated.

Paid for by Texas Victory 2002, a project of the Texas Republican Congressional Committee and the Republican Party of Texas.

Free Congress Foundation???s
Notable News Now

The Free Congress Commentary
Pickering Defeat was Purely Political
by John Nowacki

Last week???s Senate Judiciary Committee vote against sending the nomination of Charles Pickering to the full Senate was more than just an example of the politics of personal destruction at work. It was a real blow to the independence of the judiciary, dealt by committee members who outwardly profess a desire to protect that very thing.

When Senators demand that judges subscribe to their political agenda as the price of confirmation, it damages the integrity of our entire judicial system. Judges should be fair and impartial, dedicated to interpreting the law, not to toeing some political line while on the bench. However, that injection of politics into judicial decision-making is precisely what Senate Democrats have sought to justify over the past year, holding hearings to provide academic cover for political litmus tests and placing the burden of proof on an otherwise qualified nominee to demonstrate his ideological purity.

Committee Democrats have spoken often of a desire to confirm ???mainstream??? and ???consensus??? nominees, but the Pickering vote has revealed that justification for litmus tests to be a sham. Judge Pickering had a majority well-qualified rating from the American Bar Association, the backing of both home state Senators, and strong bipartisan support from people who know him and work with him -- in addition to the apparent support of 49 or more members of the U.S. Senate. But that didn???t stop ten Democrats from making sure those Senators would never get the chance to vote.

One of the top political issues for the Democrats??? litmus test is abortion.
Although Judge Pickering had never handled an abortion case in more than a decade on the federal bench, the issue played a significant role in his defeat. Pickering???s own views on the issue did not matter, he told the committee, and he declined to discuss them when pressed during his hearing. Instead, he affirmed that he would follow the binding precedent of higher courts.

That didn???t satisfy the committee Democrats, who loudly complained that he didn???t have a commitment to core constitutional values and that he wasn???t
???moderate??? enough. Senator Maria Cantwell actually criticized him for an inability to distinguish between his personal beliefs and the law before turning around and condemning his refusal to tell her whether he personally believed that the Constitution guarantees a right to an abortion.

For Senator Cantwell and her fellow Democrats on the committee, it wasn???t enough that Pickering left politics behind when he took his oath as a judge.
It wasn???t enough that he testified, under oath, that he would follow the precedent of the Supreme Court and the Fifth Circuit. He had a choice: support their political agenda, or lose their vote. He made his choice. And they made theirs.

Political litmus tests have no more place in judicial confirmations than politics does in a judge???s deliberations. Nevertheless, a majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee has taken the position that nothing ??? not even a nominee???s experience and qualifications ??? is more important. If Democrats were truly serious about judicial independence and the public???s confidence in the courts, they would end this attempt to politicize the judiciary. Unfortunately, they aren???t serious, and so the attempts to defeat nominees on purely political grounds will continue.

FAMILY NEWS IN FOCUS STORIES:

Pickering Rebuff Prompts Angry Response
By Bob Ditmer, director

SUMMARY: Conservative lawmakers and organizations reacted angrily to a vote last week in the Senate denying a federal appeals court seat to Judge Charles Pickering.

The vote was not a surprise. The same liberals on the Senate Judiciary Committee who had held up the Pickering nomination for five months and made it clear how they intended to vote, last week formally rejected the Mississippi lawyer and judge for a position on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The committee also refused to allow a vote in the full Senate, where Pickering might have had a better chance of being confirmed.

The vote was 10-9, with all Democrats voting against Pickering and all Republicans voting for him.

But the foreknowledge didn't ease the concerns of Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch, the ranking Republican on the Democrat-controlled committee.

"It is no secret that many consider the smear campaign waged against Judge Pickering to be merely a warm-up battle for the ideological war that the left-of-mainstream special interest groups will wage to block any Supreme Court nominee that President Bush may have the opportunity to nominate," Hatch said.

Jay Sekulow, chief counsel of the American Center for Law and Justice, said committee members subverted the Constitution -- and set up a litmus test for future judicial nominees.

"If you're a conservative, if you're pro life, if you're a Christian, you're not going to be confirmed as a nominee to the court of appeals or to the U.S. district court," Sekulow said

That kind of obstructionism is a major concern for Sekulow, who fights for religious liberties.

"This is probably the number one issue for us right now, because the federal judiciary determines every case that we're involved in at American Center for Law and Justice," Sekulow said.

The question, now, is whether the White House bow to the litmus test in its future nominees. George Tryfiates, of Concerned Women for America, is hoping the president will not cave in.

"We need to encourage the president to continue to fight for good men like Pickering," Tryfiates said. "We cannot let political demonizations cause us to do what's wrong - - cause us to put less-qualified people on the bench."

TAKE ACTION:
Contact the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee and politely express your opinion about their vote on Charles Pickering's nomination. You can call the Capitol switchboard at 202-224-3121, or see our Legislative Action Center for a list of the Judiciary Committee members and how to contact them:
http://capwiz.com/fof/dbq/officials/directory/directory.dbq?command=congdir

Also, contact your two U.S. senators and express your thoughts on how the Pickering nomination was handled.

March 21, 2002

TREASURY DEPUTY CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER TESTIMONY

BEFORE THE

HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE ON TECHNOLOGY AND PROCUREMENT

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT REFORM

Mr. Chairman and members of the Subcommittee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear today to discuss the progress of the Department of the Treasury in using information technology to retool its information management architecture with a goal of simplifying and unifying information for the enterprise. I would like to thank the Chairman and the other members of the Subcommittee for your continued support and interest in the improvement of information technology performance and accountability in the Federal Government.

I serve as the Deputy Chief Information Officer (CIO) for the Treasury Department. In this role I provide strategic direction, oversight and management of all information technology programs within the Treasury Department and its Bureaus. I also serve on the Federal CIO Council Executive Committee as the E-Government Coordinator. My Federal role is to promote E-government initiatives that focus on results oriented, citizen-centric government.

establishing their accounts on-line, completing transactions to include the payment process, and accessing all account information.

The U.S. Mint operates the Online Store, a highly successful electronic commerce web site with an online catalog shopping service. The site offers Internet catalog browsing with mail and phone order capability as well as secure credit card sales. The U.S. Mints; Online Store is recognized as one of the top 20 "e-tailers" in the nation, with total web sales of more that $256 million during a twelve-month period. The Mint receives orders from customers located world-wide to electronically buy Mint products. The Mint also receives coin orders electronically from the Federal Reserve Banks (FRB). E-mails and electronic spreadsheets are used quarterly by the FRB to order coins for individual banks by denomination and amount.

The Electronic Federal Tax Payment System (EFTPS) provides an electronic system for reporting and paying Federal taxes. EFTPS is the largest payment collections system in the world. The Financial Management Service (FMS) and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), working with the private sector, have modernized the federal tax payment environment. They started with the federal tax deposit coupon system then expanded to other business and individual tax payments. By replacing the current paper-based system, EFTPS benefits taxpayers and the Federal Government by providing greater reporting efficiencies and by expediting the availability of funds and investment decision-making information to the Treasury Department. The primary objectives for EFTPS are to reduce the filing burden by providing flexible payment choices for taxpayers; to increase the speed, efficiency, and accuracy of revenue collection and taxpayer account posting; and to expedite the availability of funds to the Government.

The Financial Management Service (FMS) Payment Application Modernization and Government-wide Accounting Modernization efforts include processes in the areas of payments, collections, government-wide accounting and debt management that, when made available in an electronic form, will provide individuals and other entitles that do business with FMS, the option to submit information or transact with FMS more efficiently and with improved customer service and satisfaction. Since the implementation of the electronic funds transfer (EFT) requirement of the Debt Collection improvement Act, the percentage of total Treasury disbursed payments made by EFT has risen to 73%. FMS Payment services touch the lives of over 100 million people. Literally tens of millions of Americans depend on FMS systems to meet lifeline needs every month. FMS makes almost 900 million payments annually on behalf of civilian agencies such as the Social Security Administration, Department of Veterans Affairs and the IRS. FMS also offsets certain payments against debt owed to the Federal Government. Payment modernization is one component of a multi-year effort to replace, streamline and reengineer the critical information systems that support core FMS business processes. The processes and systems used to account for and report on the execution of the President's Budget, and on the government's receipts, outlays and surplus or deficit, have not changed fundamentally for 30 years. However, there have been dramatic changes in the government's accounting environment. The Government-wide Accounting Modernization initiative will improve the reliability and timeliness of the government's financial information by providing better tools for federal program agencies to check the status of their financial information held by Treasury and by streamlining reporting and reconciliation processes.

These are just a few of the success stories we have in the Department. The task at hand now is to continue the growth of E-Government and to manage the transformation as a team across government. The task of managing investments across departments will be difficult but we now have an internal advocate within OMB. Mark Forman is a key member of the OMB staff. For the first time, we have a dedicated person within OMB, appointed by the administration, whose purpose is to help us manage citizen-focused investments and work across agency silos.

How does the Department of Treasury view EA in the context of improving its information infrastructure? How has EA been used to modernize the Department of Treasury's IT environments? As the managing agency partner on a number of e-government initiatives, how is EA being integrated into those tasks? Please discuss specifically the Wireless Public Safety Interoperable Communications-Project SAFECOM.

At the Department of the Treasury, we are using Enterprise Architecture to create a unified approach to business solutions. We are leveraging EA to align technology to the business needs to allow sound business decisions, including anticipating and mitigating risks and making IT more accountable to business management. We believe that business objectives must be well defined before initiating information technology solutions, and that total business value is the primary objective when making information technology decisions. We are focusing on interoperability of systems and integration of data requirements. The focus is on the commonality of customers, functions and business processes.

We have a Department Enterprise Architecture Working Group that reports directly to the CIO Council. Business processes and supporting "as-is" structures have been defines. The "to-be" architecture is developed. Consistent standards and products have been defined for common processes. New initiatives will adhere to the standards. The Enterprise Architecture working group continuously identifies opportunities for consolidating services, site licenses, and economies of scale for equipment and services.

Treasury has the lead on Project SAFECOM. The intent of Project SAFECOM is to accelerate the implementation of interoperable public safety wireless communications at all levels of government throughout the nation. The goals of the program are to save lives through immediate public safety communications and coordination. By addressing federal to federal, federal to state/local, and state to local interoperability we will be able to provide effective public safety and emergency support communications for not only emergency response situations, but also for daily operations and task force support for public safety agencies. We will use EA to identify interoperability requirements across all level of government, and to achieve interoperability solutions and cost savings through standardization, resource sharing, frequency spectrum management, and sharing of information between partners.

Treasury has a history of supporting the Federal EA effort and the Federal CIO Council. Treasury was a major contributor to several CIO Council EA documents. (Federal Enterprise Architecture Framework (FEAF), Version 1.1, September 1999; the Architecture Alignment and Assessment Guide (AAAG), October 2000; and A Practical Guide to Federal Enterprise Architecture, Chief Information Officer Council, Version 1.0, February, 2001). The last two documents are primarily based on the EA work that was done at Treasury's U.S. Customs bureau. Treasury will continue to support the E-government initiatives including the Federal CIO Council, OMB and Congressional efforts.

What recommendations can you make to the Subcommittee for future legislative initiatives that would facilitate cross-agency and inter-agency cooperation for simplifying and unifying redundant business architectures, particularly in support of e-government initiatives?

Any legislation considered should focus on improving the coordination and implementation of IT efforts across functional boundaries. Any legislation that would reduce the burden on citizens to provide information is a positive step. We must envision a government in an interconnected digital world. As a member of the Executive Committee of the Federal CIO Council I believe that many government programs that share common elements or information could be vastly improved with stronger authority to enforce interagency and intergovernmental cooperation. We need to tear down stovepipes and obsolete hierarchical structures. We don't have an architecture to support our lines of business. We have 478 lines of business with multiple departments supporting the same lines. In the past, the client server based technology presented barriers to the provision of services across agency boundaries and to the sharing of information across functional areas. Today, the Internet knows no such structures or boundaries. Today, technology can facilitate the interoperability. Technology can support the path to a citizen-centered government.

How do current budgetary practices and the appropriations process affect your ability to implement enterprise-wide architectures and eliminate redundant IT investments?

The appropriations process, coupled with a variety of budgetary practices, have provided the framework for federal agencies to implement a variety of enterprise solutions. OMB's October 25, 1996 memorandum, "Funding Information Systems Investments" (also known as "Raines Rules") establishes eight decision criteria OMB uses to evaluate all major information system investments proposed in the President's budget. These rules initiated fundamental changes in the management of IT resources and provided the underpinning in the promotion of enterprise solutions.

Legislative guidelines, such as the Clinger Cohen Act, further underscore the importance for the effective management of IT resources. This particular legislation allows the CIO to maximize his role in establishing enterprise approaches to fully exploit the advantages of Information Technology. Treasury's CIO leveraged this as the chair of the Treasury's CIO Council. The CIO council serves as the forum for recommending policies and standards for enterprise applications, products and services as well as promoting new technologies and IT opportunities. The council provides the voice of the customers across a range of IT management issues, including the evaluation of the effectiveness of bureau programs and the costs of services provided. The Capital Investment Review Board and the CXO Council provide the opportunity to regularly review investment plans to ensure the most cost effective solutions; emphasis is given to those utilizing enterprise solutions.

The next step is to take the capital planning process across agency boundaries and into citizen-centered investments. With the help of the Associate Director for IT and E-Government and the President's Management Council, we can do this. The key is teamwork not technology. The technology exists; the rest is up to us.

How is your agency identifying and implementing proper security and privacy policies for information systems, both overall and with respect to systems that will be used for E-government initiatives?

The Treasury CIO Council identified Security, Privacy and Critical Infrastructure Protection as a key initiative. With the onset of E-Government initiatives, the CIO Council felt that the Department must develop baseline requirements and policies. The Council established several committees with cross bureau representation to address security issues for the Department. Most of the committees are chaired by the Department's Director of Information Systems Security. Some committees have bureau

CIOs as chairs. Policies and practices are shared and implemented across the Department. Baselines are established for security and privacy with more extreme measures for the law enforcement and crime prevention entities. The committees have established enterprise performance metrics to ensure that effective security controls are developed for every major system or application within the Department. All major systems or applications are certified and accredited. We have also established a computer security incident response capability to coordinate Treasury efforts with appropriate external Computer Emergency Response Teams and to collect agency-wide information and disseminate relevant incident reports within Treasury. Periodic audits are performed by the Office of Information Security. The Treasury CIO Council approved and adopted the IRS's Security Assessment Framework as a standard for Treasury. The IRS framework has been recognized by the General Accounting Office as a best practice within the federal sector. Treasury has also developed a web-enabled and CD-ROM based agency-wide information security awareness course.

I would like to thank the subcommittee for the support it has given to E-Government. Without your support we would not have been able to achieve the national success we enjoy to date. Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you this morning. This concludes my formal remarks and I would be happy to respond to any questions.

How do you address enterprise-wide issues that have traditionally been dealt with bureau by bureau and/or department by department within your agency? How do you determine which information systems are suitable for cross cutting implementation enterprise-wide?

In the Treasury Department, forums such as the Treasury Chief Information Officers (CIO) Council, the Capital Investment Review Board (CIRB), and the newly formed Chief Officers (CXO) Council address the enterprise-wide issues facing the Department and its bureaus. I have provided a handout with my testimony of the structure within the Treasury Department to address enterprise decisions and strategic planning. The Treasury CIO Council provides the strategic technical direction and evaluates technical solutions considered on an enterprise basis. Business cases for enterprise solutions are evaluated and approved by the Capital Investment Review Board. The Chief Officers Council (CXO), a newly formed group, is designed to act as a Steering Group – adopting initiatives and developing high level Departmental benchmarks. Its membership is comprised of the highest-level executives of the following four disciplines: CIOs, Chief Financial Officers (CFOs), Human Resource Officers (HROs), and Procurement Executives (PEs). Our method for determining information systems that are suitable for implementation on an enterprise-wide basis boils down to requirements, economies of scale, and common sense. We hold periodic strategic planning sessions with the CIOs and other departmental officials to determine initiatives we can all benefit from, initiatives that are doable, areas where we already share common technology and issues that we all need to address. Financing options are discussed. Leadership is assigned. Every enterprise initiative has a champion CIO within the Department or its bureaus.

The CXO Council approved a number of technology initiatives that will provide a baseline for many business initiatives within the Department and its bureaus, and is exploring implementation issues necessary to move forward. These initiatives include Portal technology; Self Service Travel; Public Key Infrastructure and Smart Cards; Electronic Records and Document Management; and the Wireless Program. A portal framework was ready on October 1st. The portal will support departmental directory services, communities of practice and the secure sharing of electronic information. The internal communities of practice under consideration include management, procurement, finance, human resources and legislative. We are in the process of evaluating proposals for an enterprise travel solution and hope to have a streamlined and cost effective solution in place within six months. We are providing this information to the Federal E-Gov Travel initiative. Discussions are underway for the provision of public key technology and smart cards for the Department. There is an immediate need to provide 2,000 certificates to the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration to support the transmission of confidential files via public mechanisms. The smart cards, we are exploring, would be used for building access and eventually as an employee identification and network access card. For the wireless program, we are working closely with local, state and federal entities to improve the public safety wireless network. Treasury has the leadership role for this effort in the Federal E-Gov initiatives. One of the first successful uses was at the 2002 winter Olympics.

The next logical step in the process will be to manage investments across agency silos to address citizen focused services such as health care, grants, licensing or taxes.

Discuss specific enterprise-wide infrastructure initiatives that are being implemented that will allow the federal government to harness the benefits of technology. How will your efforts support the work of the OMB Associate Director of IT and E-Government, Mark Forman, in implementing priority e-government and IT initiatives? How will your agency's initiatives benefit citizens? State and local governments? Other agencies?

The Department of the Treasury has more direct contact with the public than most Federal agencies. According to Media Metrics, the Treasury web properties are consistently among the top most frequently accessed sites. The majority of Treasury's E-government initiatives are directed at its customer base – citizens, businesses and other government agencies. This strategy maximizes Treasury's return on its investment, by reducing costs, leveling off its workforce and leveraging technology across all its business lines. I could spend the rest of the afternoon detailing the Department's E-government initiatives, but let me focus on some of the major enterprise initiatives underway at the Department.

Treasury is implementing an enterprise Human Resources system – HR Connect. We are currently spending $53 million a year to support more than 90 personnel and payroll systems. The majority of these systems do not interoperate or "talk" to each other and were never designed for use with today's technology. The objectives of this effort are:

- Enable strategic management of the Treasury workforce
- Facilitate process improvements increasing productivity and achieve high performance
- Provide improved services to employees and managers at reduced costs
- Replace legacy systems with integrated state-of-the-art technology
- Improve the organization's ability to recruit, develop and retain high caliber individuals.

The first three bureaus that went live on HR Connect represented a major milestone. It was the first time that multiple Treasury bureaus were supported within a single line of code. At this time we are working to bring our 7th bureau on line with HR Connect. Total investment plus operational costs of $262 million over 10 years yields a cumulative net benefit of $195 million. The return on investment is $2.31 for every dollar invested. This system supports the internal efficiency and effectiveness goal set forth by OMB.

Our Treasury Communications System (TCS) is the largest private data network in the world. The Department is transitioning TCS into the Treasury Communications Enterprise (TCE). This is essentially a set of corporate utilities that take advantage of Treasury's volume to reduce costs plus managed services to integrate several Treasury telecommunications management programs into a single corporate telecommunications and information technology service. This system serves as a backbone for Treasury's E-government initiatives and supports over 200,000 users worldwide. This system definitely supports the internal efficiency and effectiveness goal but will also provide the baseline for many of Treasury's E-Government initiatives supporting the areas of government to citizen (G2C), government to business (G2B) and government to government (G2G).

As is well known throughout the government and the IT world, Treasury and its bureaus have a number of modernization efforts in various stages of implementation. These modernization efforts address the most difficult issues by reengineering the business processes they support as well as reengineering the technology. The federal tax system, which produces close to $2 trillion in revenue each year, is dependent on a collection of obsolete computer systems developed by IRS over the last 35 years. The purpose of the IRS Business Systems Modernization effort is to raise all major IRS business systems to the level of best practice that exists in private and public sectors, while managing risks inherent in the process. This modernization effort will impact every component of IRS over time. Implementation work on the first approved modernization projects to facilitate call routing and electronic filing will begin in 2001-2002. The Business Systems Modernization Program has reorganized the IRS into business lines which will be supported by the technology. The business lines are: Wage and Investment; Large and Mid-sized Business; Small Business/Self Employed; and Tax Exempt. The IRS has three strategic, customer focused goals: service to each taxpayer, service to all taxpayers, productivity through a quality work environment. Congress has established the aggressive goal that 80 percent of all tax and information returns should be filed electronically by 2007. The 2000 tax year was a banner year for the IRS with one out of every four individual taxpayers filing their tax returns electronically. The IRS E-file program provides faster refunds, an acknowledgement that the tax return has been accepted by the IRS, and nearly 100% accuracy, all of which translates into fewer contacts with the IRS. As of March 30, 2001, the IRS received about 69.9 million Form 1040 returns, down about .4% from last year at that time. This includes 32.6 million returns that were filed electronically, up about 11.2% from the same period last year. The IRS modernization effort addresses all four OMB priorities: internal efficiency and effectiveness, G2C, G2B, and G2G.

In the last decade, trade has grown 132%. U.S. Customs is currently using the Automated Commercial System (ACS), which is sixteen years old and taxed to its limits. To address this deficiency, Customs has designated its replacement, the Automated commercial Environment (ACE) under the overall Customs Modernization Program. Other government agencies, such as Agriculture, Food and Drug Administration, Transportation, Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Bureau of the Census, rely on Customs systems to perform their internal operations. Currently, a single international shipment can require as many as 40 different government paper forms. Ninety percent of the information is redundant. ACE will significantly reduce the paperwork burden, provide functionality long sought by the trade, and respond to legislative requirements. This contract will put in place a system that not only replaces the current trade system, but in later stages or modules it will upgrade the investigative case management system and internal administrative systems – financial and human resources. A cost-benefit analysis for ACE has determined that a $1 billion investment in ACE now will generate $3.3 billion in Government benefits through revenue recovery, labor cost avoidance, and productivity improvements. ACE is another example of a system hitting each of OMB's goals.

An example of the way that Treasury Bureaus are delivering new value to citizens, businesses, and government partners is FMS' Pay.gov. Pay.gov is an Internet portal and transaction engine that offers a package of electronic financial services to assist agencies. The services of Pay.gov rest on four cornerstones:

- Collections – enabling end-users to authorize collections over the Internet
- Forms submittals and bill presentment – accepting agency forms submitted over the Internet and presenting agency bills to end-users over the Internet
- Authentication – establishing the identity of Internet end-users
- Agency reporting – providing necessary information back to agencies about transactions.

The services of Pay.gov can help agencies meet their GPEA requirements to accept forms electronically by October 2003. The basic services of Pay.gov generally will be free for agencies and the public. FMS will price services that go beyond basic services using an "at-cost" basis.

Treasury's Bureau of Public Debt partnered with Treasury's Financial Management Service, Mellon Bank, MasterCard and IBM to build an Internet-based system to sell U.S. Savings Bonds directly to the public. The Savings Bond Connection allows citizens to buy a savings bond on a 24 x 7 basis through the Internet using a credit card. The Bureau of Public Debt sells directly to the public instead of using its traditional network of over 40,000 commercial banks. Through the Savings Bond Connection, Public Debt reduced the delivery time for bonds by one-third. The system cost $350 thousand to develop and implement. Americans bought $292 million in bonds at the site in fiscal year 2001.

The Bureau of the Public Debt's Treasury Direct Electronic Services (TDES) allows individuals to directly manage their investments in the U.S. Treasury marketable securities using either the Internet or telephone. The system is an application that uses intelligent agents to automate various investor services, such as purchasing securities, reinvesting maturing securities, viewing account status, requesting account statements, as well as other similar services. TDES was implemented to promote self-sufficiency among Treasury Direct's 600,000 customers who hold some $77 billion in securities. The system facilitated Public Debt's consolidation of servicing sites from thirty-six Federal Reserve Banks to three. By using TDES, Public Debt has reduced the processing cost of a tender to $0.50 as opposed to $30.00 to process a paper tender in the past. Now, TDES accounts for 70 percent of all reinvestments and 40 percent of new sales. Investors purchased more than $8.7 billion in bills, notes and bonds in fiscal year 2001.

The Savings Bond Connection and the Treasury Direct Electronic Services are two highly secure E-Government applications that allow individual investors the option of

SBA eliminates redundant IT investments

Unlike larger agencies, SBA does not have multiple bureaus with unique appropriations sources. This simplifies budget execution and makes SBA's IT expenditures more visible. Because there are few funding sources, opportunities for duplicate investments are reduced. For the cross agency Business Compliance One-Stop, SBA is requesting the entire funding in its budget, which will minimize the chances of redundant systems being developed by the participating agencies.

In accordance with the Clinger-Cohen Act and implementing guidance from OMB, all of SBA's major IT investments are subject to planning and review -- including acquisition reviews -- that should detect any potential duplicate investment before it can be implemented. SBA has been moving aggressively toward capturing 100 percent of its planned and actual IT expenditures during budget formulation and in accordance with published OMB guidance (Circulars A-11 and A-130). We believe that adhering to a regimen of solid IT capital planning will prevent the likelihood of duplicative investments among IT projects across the Agency.

SBA introduces strong security and privacy policies

Over the past two years, SBA has revised its IT security program. SBA uses IT security standards, policies, procedures, and guidelines developed by the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) as the basis for the IT security program. We also use portions of the General Accounting Office Federal Information Security Controls Audit Manual (FISCAM) as a guide in developing information security controls. Finally, we rely on current industry best practices in the development of security policies and use of cutting edge technology.

Protection of business transactions conducted over the Internet has been a primary concern as SBA has introduced web enabled business transactions. To ensure data integrity of these business transactions, SBA requires high level encryption of all transactions and authentication of systems users to gain access to the web systems. SBA has also conducted penetration testing with an independent consultant to identify and correct potential weaknesses. The OCIO conducts periodic on site security reviews of SBA's offices and remote computing facilities as well. Ultimately, the Agency will be in compliance with the standards and guidelines developed by GSA under the cross-agency E-authentication effort.

SBA provides benefits through its enterprise-wide infrastructure initiatives

SBA has made significant strides in implementing an open systems technology environment, one which supports interoperability of technologies and systems both within SBA and with external entities. SBA has been a government leader in conducting business via the Internet. These activities include many web enabled business transactions such as registration in Pro-Net and HubZones, which will soon include an entirely electronic application and self-certification process. The technology we use includes relational databases, supporting easier data sharing and data access, industry accepted communications protocols that support interoperability between disparate computer platforms, and XML based file transfer formats.

SBA's open systems environment, as with every federal agency, is an important part of the federal infrastructure necessary to support federal e-government initiatives. Technology environments that support interoperability between agencies and between the government and businesses will require minimal changes as e-government initiatives are implemented.

Prototyping a transaction engine that uses XML and offers modules that is based on forms-driven inquiries, validation and verification against a database, and secure transactions will expand the utility of the Business Compliance One Stop to all users. The software allows each piece of the system to use different forms and business rules at the user interface with a standardized set of processes for conducting the electronic licensing and permitting. Using this "off the shelf" approach and piloting the Portal Maximizer will provide significant savings to state and local governments reduce cost to businesses by permitting online transactions, and reduce compliance and enforcement costs for regulatory agencies who use the templates to build the digital compliance assistance guides.

The impact of the Internet can only grow among small businesses. This is reinforced by an August 2001 study by NFIB stating that 57 percent of all employers use the Internet for business-related activities. Of those using the Internet, 87 percent use it to gather business information. One third of those not presently using the Internet intend to begin using it within the next year. To the degree that businesses can inform themselves as a result of aggressive implementation of compliance assistance, taking advantage of the Internet to broadly distribute information, an agency can focus its scarce resources on addressing companies that disregard the value of community, employee health and safety, and environmental protection.

SBA is addressing enterprise architecture issues

SBA is confronted by a number of technical issues that need to be addressed to successfully implement the Business Compliance One Stop. One major issue is developing a cross-agency platform without having to dictate the databases and applications that Federal and state and local agencies use. This platform must be interoperable with existing technologies but also provide the web services infrastructure that minimizes system development. It must be open, secure, and provide maximum flexibility for participating agencies.

The Internet and its associated protocols such as HTTP (Hyper Text Transport Protocol) whether used openly, or through a Virtual Private Network, has become the fundamental underlying transport system for E-government. XML (Extended Markup Language) is a way of tagging data that can be transported over HTTP and is easily handled by applications. The data structure can change without having to change the consuming application. Key architecture design issues include linking to transaction sites versus containing a transaction engine, uploading and downloading data across platforms, creating common forms that have multiple uses, providing content, and "value network integration."

Using the portal model, organizations can provide aggregated and customized services as well as information to people in the subject areas that are of interest to them with technology that is available now. With this kind of a framework for E-government, organizations can build a secure, dynamic web presence with personalization, content management, analytics, and search capabilities for anytime, anywhere access. Additionally, the framework can assist other government agencies to reduce their operating costs and provide citizen and business services with rich transaction capabilities while at the same time providing government with data mining tools to understand salient citizen and business trends in demands and usage and measure key performance indicators.. Examples of this include on-line processing, not just forms, for change of address, wage and tax filings, and business registrations.

Another major issue is providing navigational tools to make it possible for the user to arrive at desired information or have problem-solving capability with as few clicks as possible. This means providing advanced search engines that can handle "affinities or fuzzy sets," intelligent FAQs, using an optional profiler to characterize the user and what he is looking for, and business rule driven wizards to aid in the search process. If possible, the software should simplify navigation with context dependent aids to prompt the user on where to proceed.

Conclusion

The overall goal of the Administration's E-Government initiative is to use technology as a driver for change. Using the Internet to deliver service from multiple agencies and various levels of government offers the business owner more accessibility, more timely and reliable information, more cost-effective and personalized service, and enables citizens to hold government accountable. The technology also permits the delivery of service across organizations, a key transformation from the "turf" consciousness of traditional government to strategic alliances in collaborative government. The technology also permits us to evaluate and learn from those leading this change, allowing rapid development and implementation of innovation and creativity. Unifying and simplifying our delivery of needed citizen service results in a more cost effective government that is citizen-centered, market-based, and results-driven. With leadership, resources, the right industry partners, and a little time, we can transform our public institutions. This is what the Congress asks, the President demands, the Citizen expects, and we intend to provide.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you here today. I will be happy to answer your questions.

Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee. Thank you for inviting the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) to testify today about our role as a managing partner for creating the Business Compliance Assistance One Stop Initiative. I am prepared to discuss in general our views on the appropriate enterprise architecture to implement this effort and describe the basic goals and objectives of the initiative.

My name is Lloyd Blanchard and I am the Chief Operating Officer for SBA. Joining me is Larry Barrett, SBA's CIO, and Dr. Jim Van Wert, our Senior Advisor for Policy Planning and E-Gov and project manager for creating the Business Compliance Assistance One Stop. I joined SBA a little over two months ago with the express goal of implementing the President's Management Agenda at the SBA. One of the core elements of the Agenda is enhancing E-Government at the SBA.

The Administration's vision for E-Government coincides with ours at SBA; namely, "an order of magnitude improvement in customer service." E-Gov is all about improving citizen service and changing the way government and citizens interact. For SBA, it is primarily about changing how we do business and what we can offer our small business customers. In the case of the Business Compliance One Stop, it's about presenting a "single face of government" to businesses to help them reduce the burden of complying with laws and regulations.

E-Gov is also about creating partnerships with other government agencies and breaking down the silo mentality that currently pervades. Perhaps there is no more difficult task than collaborating across organizational boundaries to provide integrated services, breaking down the agency stovepipes, eliminating the culture of command and control and replacing it with collaboration. And as someone once said, "teaming" is the most unnatural human act known to mankind. Our challenge is to create appropriate incentives for all of us to "take off our agency hats" and put on a government-wide hat. E-Gov asks us to "unify and simplify" our processes to eliminate redundancy and re-engineer what we do, making government more accessible to its citizens.

Let me briefly describe how the right Enterprise Architecture can help us achieve our mission, describe the Business Compliance One Stop in more detail, and answer the questions contained in your letter dated March 7, 2002.

Enterprise Architecture

The IT architecture defines what data is collected and how it is processes. Roughly defined, the Enterprise Architecture (EA) is a framework that addresses how information is used. That is how we use it to achieve our mission of serving customers better, faster, and more cost effectively.

At the outset, I should say that we at SBA are only beginning to define our enterprise architecture to implement the goals of the Business Compliance One Stop.

At the core of all the E-Gov initiatives is cross-agency (and perhaps intergovernmental) service delivery. Collaboration among agencies with a vested interest in a particular federal segment, such as regulatory compliance or licensing and permitting, will result in increased efficiency and economies of scale, not to mention reduced cost for the business customer, who can access government services more easily, cost effectively, anytime, anyplace.

It is critical to develop the right EA for this initiative. The use of an appropriate EA in a cross-agency initiative promotes development of shared common Federal processes, interoperability, and sharing of information across entities. The Business Compliance One Stop functions are government-wide and multi-agency in nature, as well as intergovernmental. Without uniform standards and structures, information and data formatting, technology, and delivery systems, we will not be able to build robust, open, interoperable, and scalable portals.

Business Compliance One-Stop Funding and Governance

The Business Compliance Assistance One Stop initiative is one of the 24 highest priority cross-agency Presidential E-Gov initiatives approved by the President's Management Council last October.

Small businesses tell us repeatedly that one of their major concerns is reducing the burden of laws and regulations. In 2000, SBA's Office of Advocacy estimated that complying with laws and regulations cost small firms nearly a half a trillion dollars, or $7,000 per employee for firms with less than 20 employees. While there are a myriad of laws and regulations that affect business at all levels of government, few compliance assistance tools and almost no capability of licensing and permitting online exists. The average business needs to apply for and receive approximately 10-15 licenses and permits, many of them from the state and local government level. With these needs in mind, we are building this Business Compliance Assistance One-Stop to make it easier for small businesses to find, understand, and comply with the laws and regulations at all levels of government.

Comment [MKB1]:

OMB has established a non-traditional budgeting and governance structure for these cross agency projects. Each managing partner is requesting funding for all elements of the project, whether it is part of the traditional core functions of that agency or not. This project is no exception.

Like other managing partners, SBA is asking for the funding to support program activities of the 8 participating agencies and other levels of government. For example, even though SBA does not normally fund compliance assistance tools, the Compliance One Stop will provide the resources and architecture for OSHA's development of a tool for businesses to learn how to evacuate a building in the event of a terrorist attack or disaster event. We will do the same for another 25 digital guides in the environment, workplace health and safety, employment and taxation areas, integrating each part into one portal.

This project will also support a prototype of a transaction engine that can be used by local, state, and federal agencies in providing certain licenses and permits. These are not traditional line items in an SBA budget, but clearly creating these tools support our statutory mission of helping small businesses succeed—by eliminating one of the most important impediments to their success. SBA is not a regulatory agency and does not traditionally include in its budget funds for creating easier access to laws and regulations, compliance assistance tools, and online licensing and permitting. Neither do we normally fund intergovernmental efforts. Yet, as managing partner for the Business Compliance effort, SBA represents the business customer, who wants a "single face of government" with whom to do business.

Business Compliance Project Management and Oversight

Both SBA and OMB are taking extraordinary steps to manage and exercise oversight over this project to deliver within 24 months value-added service to American business owners.

SBA management and oversight structure. As you know, SBA hired me as Chief Operating Officer (COO) to manage and coordinate the work of the CFO, CIO, and the new office of E-Government. SBA agreed with OMB's recommendation and created the Office of E-Government, directed by an SES who reports directly to me with successful achievement of project deliverables as part of the position's performance criteria. The office will include two GS 15s as well as an "as needed" IT professional, a content and configuration manager, and an administrative staff. This office will not only manage the Business Compliance One Stop, but will develop SBA's E-Gov policy and coordinate SBA's participation in the other E-gov initiatives. These include Federal Asset Sales, E-loans, Disaster.gov, Integrated acquisition portal, Streamlined international trade, Electronic tax tools for business, Online eligibility assistance, and online rule making.

The project manager submits weekly activity status reports and meets regularly with me to describe project plans, identify milestones and deliverables, and report on progress as part of the Agency's performance monitoring and managing for results. The business case also calls for contracting for a management specialist to manage and oversee project plans and expenditures. The E-Gov office will also hire a validation and verification contractor and a content and configuration manager to ensure that the project is meeting its milestones and that there is full documentation of ongoing efforts.

OMB oversight governance structure. OMB's Associate Director for Information and Technology and E-Government (ADITEG), Mark Forman, has created a top-down governance structure that reports to the leadership of the President's Management Council, which holds him accountable for delivery of the President's E-Gov agenda. Cascading transparency and accountability downward, Mr. Forman is using portfolio managers, steering committees, and individual project managers to implement the 24 project managers in each of the managing partner agencies. He is requiring each project manager to build business cases with goals, objectives, milestones, and costs and a series of "checks and balances" to hold these managers accountable.

Procedurally, OMB reviews the progress of each project on a monthly basis and briefs the President's Management Council (PMC) quarterly on the status of all the efforts and requests PMC members assistance, when appropriate, to ensure the projects meet goals and objectives. Mr. Forman has stated he will also terminate or restructure individual projects when they do not achieve a reasonable return-on-investment.

To help Mr. Forman oversee the efforts, each customer segment has a portfolio manager who meets weekly with the project manager to guide, assist, and manage the individual project managers. The portfolio manager for the G2B segment is Tad Anderson. In addition to providing Mr. Forman a monthly status of the overall program achievement, cost, schedule and performance goals, Mr. Anderson will convene at least quarterly meetings with the individual project managers and OMB to discuss project status. The Portfolio manager is responsible for ensuring that the e-government program achieves, on average, at least 90 percent of the approved project cost, schedule and performance goals.

For still another level of oversight, OMB has established four Steering Committees (SC) composed of Chief Information Officers, Chief Financial Officers, Procurement Executives, Budget Officers Advisory, and Human Resources Councils, and with other advisors and users. Their goal is to meet monthly with the portfolio manager and project manager to advise and assist project teams in achieving the objectives expected within the budget limits.

Business Compliance One Stop Business Case

As stated earlier, OMB requires each project manager to develop a detailed business case that describes the value proposition (costs and benefits both to the clients and to the government), modular development approach, milestones and proposed deliverables, timeframes and costs (as required by the Clinger-Cohen Act). The business case also includes a description of the proposed enterprise architecture, which includes a discussion of the business needs and rules, information architecture, systems applications, data structure, and technology delivery systems. Our business case, summarized below, currently exceeds 40 pages and continues to be revised.

Problem. The cost of complying with laws and regulations is too burdensome for American businesses. SBA's Office of Advocacy estimates that the regulatory burden on citizens is more than $800 billion, with nearly $500 billion borne by small businesses in 2000. This translates to roughly $7000 per employee in firms with less than 20 employees. The volume of existing laws, expense of finding nearly inaccessible information, multi-jurisdictional systems, and lack of smart online tools contribute to this overwhelming cost.

Solution. Businesses need a single point of access – a "single face of government" -- to the applicable laws and regulations that affect them. They also need tools to help them know if they are in compliance with the law, and a one-stop that offers them an opportunity to conduct transactions. Because of the growing number of businesses with Internet access (67 percent of all firms with employees in early 2001), the Web is currently the most viable delivery channel for these services. A one-stop compliance site will significantly reduce the time needed to find, understand, and comply with the legal and regulatory burdens facing them. For these reasons, OMB selected the Business Compliance One-Stop as one of 24 approved Administration E-Gov projects.

Project Goal

- Make it easy for business to find, understand, and comply with pertinent laws and regulations at all levels of government.

Functionality

- Enable quick access to laws and regulations. Site users can access appropriate laws and regulations in three clicks or less.
- Provide Compliance Assessment Aids. Online tools can help businesses determine what laws and regulations apply to them and whether they are in compliance. More importantly, what to do and where to go to achieve compliance status.

REV_00336159

- Perform online transactions. Businesses will register online at the state level and apply and receive selected licenses and permitting at all three government levels.

Objectives

- Improve customer service by providing a single access point to business laws and regulations, licenses and permits, compliance assistance tools and hands-on help.
- Further establish results-driven government by building the site in less than two years.
- Create a market-based government by using public-private partnerships (e.g., lawyers from every state, laws schools, Martindale-Hubbell) to build the site, relying on industry best practices and solutions (e.g., UK Gateway, Washington and Illinois online transactions).
- Expand outreach to small businesses by helping up to 25 million businesses, plus countless individual citizens find, understand, and comply with laws and regulations.
- Build effective partnerships by building horizontally integrated tools across the federal level and vertically integrated tools to help individual business industries (sectors).
- Compile and employ best practices learned in the building of the recently launched BusinessLaw.gov and existing online compliance guides built by other agencies.

Results

- Save businesses time and money by reducing the legal and regulatory burden.
- Increase business compliance, thereby reducing costs for enforcement/compliance activities.
- Transform the way the federal government works by using technology to offer e-business solutions.
- Make the Federal government more accessible to its citizens.

Governance Structure/Participating Partners

- As the managing partner for this project, SBA will perform project management, develop the enterprise architecture, and find private sector consultants to develop modules for the project, (e.g., permitting, compliance guides, and interactive tools) and oversee the effort (e.g., Microsoft, Accenture, Consad Research)
- Participating partners include EPA, DOL, OSHA, GSA, IRS, DOT, DOE, DOI, INS, Trade Associations and selected State CIOs (e.g., Washington, Illinois, New Jersey Mississippi).

Approach. The initiative will incorporate best practices from the private sector to build this tool. We will build upon the experience gained in the construction of the gateway and transaction engine in the United Kingdom (e.g., cross-agency permitting). We will also use private sector best practices for knowledge management -- (i.e., individualized packaging of information to offer quick access to the right information for appropriate solutions). We will focus on improved navigation, personalization, expert tools, and interactive problem solving.

In particular, we will begin by targeting several industries, i.e., restaurants, truckers, convenience stores and gas and oil companies, across 4 functional areas, i.e., environment, workplace health and safety, employment and taxation. Through prototypes and pilots , we will enable a business in these sectors to register its business, get a tax id number, apply for a building permit, receive electronically an employer identification number, and get a permit to use federal lands.

While better portal capability and consolidation of information is needed, the one-stop compliance site needs to provide real solutions to business problems within a local context in a minimal amount of time. Rules-based software, XML and other Web-based technologies make it possible to create a site that is both horizontally and vertically integrated to meet these needs.

Short Term Deliverables

- Pilot Portal Maximizer (July 2002 -- $225,000). By purchasing this software, the project manager will have an automatic and intelligent information management capability to index, categorize, and universally link business users to both new and existing legal and regulatory content across all 50 states. In the next 30 days, we will pilot the software on BusinessLaw.gov (over 20,000 links to federal, state and local content); evaluate and user test over the next 60 days; and add new content, categorizing it by theme over the final 30 days.

- Legal and Regulatory Digital Guides (August 2002 -- $240,000). We will create and test for launching four digital guides that help reduce the burden of laws and regulations on business owners, which may include the following:

    - Working with INS, we will develop an expert tool to assist restaurant owners understand and comply with applicable employer-based immigration statutes and regulations.
    - Working with OSHA, we will also develop a record keeping and building evacuation expert tools.
    - Working with DOT Motor Carrier Safety Administration, we will create an expert tool for truckers to find, understand, and comply with transportation laws and regulations.
    - Working with Martindale-Hubbell (Lexis-Nexus), we will build tools to help small businesses identify legal issue that require expert help and where to go to find an attorney.

- Business Registry-state and Federal Licensing (August 2002 -- $275,000). Working with Washington State and IRS, we will build upon the proof of concept work done by GSA to prototype a single application that satisfies business licensing and tax id requirements (state licensing and IRS Internet EIN. Working with Illinois, we will create a prototype truckers' one-stop that incorporates federal and state DOT regulations and online licenses and permits.

Funding. SBA estimates it will cost $1,040,000 in FY 2002 and $5,000,000 in FY 2003 to develop this Business Compliance One-Stop. With the funding, SBA will build upon its legal and regulatory assistance site, BusinessLaw.gov, to create an intergovernmental portal that does three things: offer small firms access to governmental laws and regulations that impact them, provide compliance assistance digital tools, and offer online licensing and permitting. With funding in FY 2002, we will create a new office of E-Gov, build compliance assistance content, and buy software that registers existing content by theme and facilitates site content management. It will also permit us to prototype/buy a transaction engine to do the secure licensing and support work in several states working through the National Governor's Association.

Mr. Chairman, I will now address the questions you included in your invitation to testify that deal with having the right enterprise architecture.

How SBA avoids redundant information systems

The SBA organizational structure does not have autonomous bureaus and departments, which greatly reduces the occurrence of traditional issues involved in standardization of systems for agency-wide functions (i.e., payroll, personnel, accounting, travel, etc.). SBA has centralized management of information resources in the Office of the Chief Information Officer (OCIO). OCIO, originally the Office of Information Resources Management, has proactively sought to standardize and minimize redundancy of technologies and systems since the advent of desktop computing. These efforts have included standardization of hardware and software for the desk tops, local area (LAN) and wide area (WAN) networks, e-mail, and system development tools including relational databases, programming languages and tools, security, and communications protocols.

SBA's Enterprise Architecture connects information use and needs to information provided by the IT infrastructure. Using these cross walks as a guide, information technology (IT) decision makers, including the IT investment council, can easily identify information systems that are candidates for enterprise-wide implementation.

Comment [MKB2]:

Comment [MKB3]:

SBA believes that its EA offers tangible benefits to the Agency and those responsible for evolving the enterprise. SBA has used the EA to:

- Improve communication among the business organizations and IT organizations within the enterprise through a standardized vocabulary
- Provide architectural views that help communicate the complexity of large systems and facilitate management of extensive, complex environments
- Focus on the strategic use of emerging technologies to better manage the enterprise's information and consistently insert those technologies into the enterprise
- Improve consistency, accuracy, timeliness, integrity, quality, availability, access and sharing of IT-managed information across the enterprise
- Support the IT investment process by providing a tool for assessment of benefits, impacts, and capital investment measurements and supporting analyses of alternatives, risks, and tradeoffs.

Under the aegis of the Business Compliance Assistance One Stop, the project team will follow the principles of unify and simplify, using industry best practices, reducing redundancy and re-engineering processes where appropriate. For instance, we will pilot the use of a COTS package that aggregates information across all 50 states, automating the content building function. We will also prototype the use of a transaction engine that permits the user to access modules for forms entry, validation and verification, and online transactions. Each state will be able to modify the business rules and still use the proposed software. For compliance assistance, we plan to use a variety of approaches including benchmarking, expert tools, tutorials, and online call centers to help the business comply with the pertinent laws and regulations. Although the rules, forms, and security requirements will differ from regulation to regulation, our approach will include XML-P to access information (in a variety of formats) across agencies to deliver a "single face of government" to the business user.

Subcommittee on Government Management, Information, and Technology
Committee on Government Reform
House of Representatives

March 21, 2002

REV_00336172

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee. On behalf of Secretary Mel Martinez, I thank you for the opportunity to discuss the Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) ongoing initiative to improve the effectiveness and cost efficiency of Departmental programs through the development and deployment of an enterprise-wide architecture. I will limit my remarks to enterprise architecture at HUD, and the need for continued Congressional and OMB support for enterprise architecture development. I will leave it to Mark Forman, Associate Director for Information Technology and E-Government with the Office of Management and Budget, to discuss efforts to develop a Federal Enterprise Architecture.

I serve as HUD's Deputy Chief Information Officer (CIO) for Information Technology (IT) Reform, and I Co-chair the Federal CIO Council's Committee on Best Practices. In early February 2002, I accepted a temporary detail as Program Manager for the Federal Enterprise Architecture Program.

ENTERPRISE ARCHITECTURE AT HUD. Let me first discuss HUD's approach to enterprise architecture. At one time, HUD's IT environment consisted of more than 200 stovepipe systems and databases conceived and developed independent of each other. Many systems carried out redundant processes, relied on obsolete technology, contained incompatible data and were incapable of supporting enterprise-wide decision making. HUD completed initial development of an Enterprise Architecture Management Process, a baseline Architecture, and a strategic Target Architecture for Grants and Financial business functions in January 2001. Through the current leadership at HUD, the department continues the process set forth by previous administrations toward achieving a federal enterprise architecture.

The enterprise architecture development process began with a series of in-depth workshops with key program and IT officials. These sessions clarified HUD business functions and processes, and the applications and technologies in use across the enterprise. HUD also developed a dynamic, web-based tool to track and analyze the layers of its enterprise architecture, and the relationships between those layers. This Enterprise Architecture Management System (EAMS) now serves as the repository for the information that defines HUD's baseline architecture and is facilitating the development of a target architecture. The data in EAMS is helping to identify promising opportunities where collaboration, data sharing, and process simplification can lead to improved productivity, efficiency and effectiveness in service delivery. Because of HUD's success, EAMS is currently being used or evaluated by approximately ten other Federal organizations.

HUD's Enterprise Architecture is beginning to drive its IT Capital Planning and Investment Management Process. The selection of initiatives to be included in the Department's IT portfolio is based upon thorough business cases that include several architecture-related considerations, including:

- Is the proposed initiative an Enterprise Solution that moves us closer to our near-and long-term target environments?

- Is the proposed initiative designed to allow data to be shared across the organization?
- Will the initiative consolidate or eliminate redundant systems and infrastructure?
- Does the proposed initiative reuse existing components and infrastructure?
- Does the hardware and software to be used comply with existing and target agency standards?

As a result of HUD's enterprise-wide approach to IT investment management, the Department is now pursuing several cross-program, enterprise-wide, or cross-government initiatives. For example, Native EDGE is cross-government office and internet portal led by HUD, with 17 partnering agencies. It includes a call center and resource library for Native American small businesses and community development practitioners. The site also contains a publications clearinghouse, business partner links, and a technical assistance information center.

A second example is HUD's Empowerment Zone / Enterprise Community Software. This suite of software provides a full range of services to HUD business partners, communities, and the public from the program selection phase to post-award performance reporting. It permits application, selection and performance evaluation for the Empowerment Zone program on-line.

HUD AND E-GOVERNMENT. Let me now discuss HUD's leadership in the area of E-Government. HUD is a leader in the development of E-Government initiatives and continues to be recognized through government and industry's most prestigious awards.

Two examples of HUD E-Government success stories include FHA Connection and the capability to conduct on-line loan auctions. FHA Connection is the application developed by HUD to support electronic commerce between FHA and the community of approved FHA lenders and service providers. Using a single FHA assigned user-id, a business partner can submit official FHA business transactions to a variety of FHA automated systems. In the area of FHA single-family loan origination alone, more than 90 percent of the business transactions processed by HUD's underwriting system come from business partners using the FHA Connection. There are currently 9,000 lenders and 100,000 users of the system.

For HUD's third successful E-Government example, last April 2001, HUD conducted its first web-based loan sale. The $111 million auction was the largest Internet loan sale to date by the U.S. Government. The auctioned loans were originated under the Department's Section 312 Loan Program, which provided funds for the rehabilitation of homes in distressed neighborhoods at below-market rates. The marketing, investor due diligence, and bidding were all conducted on-line. By empowering bidders through an advanced loan trading system, HUD increased bidder interest in the sale, and maximized its sale proceeds.

Because of its leadership in the areas of enterprise architecture and E-Government, HUD is a partnering agency on 15 of the President's E-Government initiatives. In fact, HUD staff worked with OMB and representatives from across the Government to finalize the business cases for several of the 24 E-Government initiatives.

SECURITY. With regards to the security of its IT investments, HUD is also implementing a methodology to comprehensively assess the current HUD and security landscape through its enterprise architecture. With respect to security and privacy, HUD's methodology will make no distinction between those systems that will be used for E-Government initiatives and those that will not. The methodology will guide the Department in identifying sensitive information being collected, and in identifying current agency processes and policies for handling sensitive data throughout the lifecycle. HUD will also begin assessing security measures for applications and technology associated with most-sensitive personal information. In addition, HUD will provide a long-term strategic approach to ensure that the target architecture appropriately addresses security and privacy.

BUDGETARY ISSUES. Finally, let me comment on how the Federal budget process can support the continued development of enterprise architectures. It is true that agencies are making mixed progress in terms of enterprise architecture. Based on my experience at HUD and as Co-Chair of the Best Practices Committee, I believe that it is critical that OMB and Congress continue to place pressure on agencies to make progress in this area. It is also helpful that OMB includes, in agency passback language, specific allocations of funding for enterprise architecture development. Establishing an enterprise architecture requires participation from all agency organizations. Providing, verifying, updating and analyzing the enormous amount of information takes a significant amount of time and requires a widespread, multi-disciplined effort. Continued improvement requires perseverance and the continued support of critical oversight organizations such as Congress and OMB.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to share my thoughts with you today. I would be happy to answer any questions you may have.

Today's Washington Post (Federal page) reports that you and Sandy Berger have previously "testified" before Congress. Is this accurate? This is being cited by Congress as precedent for the Congressional insistence that Governor Ridge testify.

SUBJECT: Richard Clarke's Appearance before Congress

The Washington Post ran an erroneous article today (see attached) which stated that Richard Clarke had testified before congress. The article is factually incorrect. Mr. Clarke has never testified before congress in either his current or former White House roles.

Mr. Clarke has, however, briefed congressional members and committees. These briefings can be clearly distinguished from testimony in several ways.

1. The briefings did not require an oath.

2. The briefings were not part of the public record. Accordingly, there were no written statements or questions submitted for the record.

3. The information provided to the members of congress and their respective committees did not include advice or recommendations which may have been provided to the President.

It is important to note that the briefings only provided further explanations of policy which had already been issued. For example in 1998, after Presidential Decision Directive 63 was issued Mr. Clarke explained the framework created for addressing critical infrastructure protection. In February 2002, Mr. Clarke briefed members of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Executive Order 13231 the responsibilities of the Office of Cyber Security and President's Critical Infrastructure Protection Board.

Congress, White House Fight Over Ridge Status

By Dana Milbank
Washington Post Staff Writer
Thursday, March 21, 2002; Page A33

The dispute between Congress and the White House over whether Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge will testify before lawmakers has mushroomed into a constitutional struggle with stakes far greater than the relatively small value of a single official's words.

Ridge is being asked to testify about unclassified information that is already mostly public. But for the White House, the fight has become part of its effort to reverse what it sees as decades of congressional encroachment on executive power. For some lawmakers, the issue has become a rallying point for preserving congressional oversight over an increasingly imperial presidency.

As with most such disputes, an eventual compromise is almost certain. But neither side wants to be perceived as giving in, for fear of setting a precedent.

The latest twist came early yesterday, when the House Government Reform Committee distributed notices announcing that Ridge's deputy, Steve Abbot, would appear before the national security subcommittee Thursday. It was called an unclassified "briefing" but was identical to a normal public "hearing." Democrats sent around an e-mail hailing the "compromise." But when officials in Ridge's office saw the notice, they called to demand that the session be closed to the public.

"This is another case of them trying to ignore Congress and avoid accountability," said Rep. Dennis J. Kucinich (Ohio), the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee. "I know Congress can be inconvenient sometimes, and so is democracy, but we have to get past this sense that the administration doesn't have to answer to anyone."

A number of Republicans share that view. "I find the concern among members is building," said Rep. Ernest J. Istook Jr. (R-Okla.). "The point is not whether a presidential adviser testifies, it's whether somebody can be given express major responsibilities under an executive order and then be exempted from accountability. I see it as respecting the Constitution."

The administration argues that Ridge cannot be compelled to testify because he is a White House aide, not subject to Senate confirmation. Many in Congress want to make Ridge's office a Cabinet agency, under congressional oversight.

In a broader sense, the dispute over a Ridge appearance on Capitol Hill fits the pattern of a series of power struggles between the White House and Congress. The court fight between the White House and Congress over Vice President Cheney's energy task force is also about the ability of presidential advisers to shield themselves from congressional investigation.

Lawmakers have also battled with the administration over access to information about its creation of environmental regulations, its contacts with Enron Corp., classified intelligence information, plans for a federal contingency government and records of past presidents.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.), the Appropriations Committee chairman, told Democratic colleagues Tuesday that he fears President Bush is "trying to set up an adjunct to the real government that is going to be outside of congressional scrutiny," as one listener described it.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer yesterday called the effort to force Ridge to testify "a dramatic break from the long-standing traditions that Congress has previously upheld vis-a-vis the executive branch. While the information is flowing, and flowing freely, from the executive to the legislature, sometimes it's never enough for a legislature."

Fleischer argued that "oversight over any presidential adviser who is not confirmed by the Senate is by the president."

The administration has Democratic support for its case. In 1999, then-Attorney General Janet Reno wrote to President Bill Clinton that "the president and his immediate advisers are absolutely immune from testimonial compulsion by a congressional committee. This position is constitutionally based."

But others point out that Clinton national security adviser Samuel R. "Sandy" Berger testified about Haiti and that his counterterrorism adviser Richard Clarke also testified. President Ronald Reagan's national security advisers testified before Congress during the Iran-Contra investigation.

Bruce Fein, a former Nixon and Reagan administration lawyer critical of the Bush administration's secrecy, argued that Ridge fits the Supreme Court's definition of a constitutional "officer" of the United States "like a glove." That means Ridge should not only testify to the Senate, but also be confirmed by it.

Whether Ridge ultimately qualifies as a simple presidential counselor like the national security adviser or a person with operational authority like the White House budget director is a matter of legal arcana that will probably never reach a court. Congress will have to approve the homeland security budget later this year -- and Bush has nothing to gain by facing furious lawmakers.

"Assume for the sake argument that Ridge can't be required to do this," said Yale law professor Akhil Amar, who supports a stronger executive branch. "Fine, but it might be in his interest to do it anyway."

employees whose 401(k) plans were heavily invested in company stock lost their retirement savings when its value plummeted last year.

Republicans say the measure would unfairly restrict companies, which would stop making matching contributions or even offering the voluntary 401(k) plans.

"What you essentially are going to see is the death of the 401(k)," said ranking Republican Sen. Judd Gregg of New Hampshire.

The Republicans' maneuver also interrupted the Governmental Affairs Committee, which was examining why the three Wall Street credit rating agencies maintained high ratings for Enron until four days before its bankruptcy filing Dec. 2.

Chairman Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., officially adjourned the hearing, but refused to halt proceedings, saying they would continue as an informal meeting or discussion.

Separately, the House Education and Workforce Committee passed its own pension legislation Wednesday that is similar to White House proposals, setting up a clash between Senate Democrats and House Republicans over protections for retirement savings plans.

But the House bill, sponsored by Rep. John Boehner of Ohio, veers from Bush's plan by requiring workers to hold company-matched employer stock for three years before they can sell it. Bush's plan would let workers sell the stock three years after joining the plan.

The bill also would let workers receive financial advice from the same companies that manage their 401(k) accounts. House leaders plan to merge the legislation with another pension bill passed by the House Ways and Means Committee last week that would let workers use pretax money to pay for independent investment advice. A vote on the House floor is expected next month.

Prosecution: Pakistani pleads guilty to immigration fraud

The Associated Press

A Pakistani man arrested days after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on immigration fraud charges could face up to 51 years in prison and a $1.5 million fine after pleading guilty this week, a prosecutor said.

Iftikhar Ahmed, 46, has been held in federal detention since Sept. 13. He has not been charged with any crime related to terrorism, but authorities have held him in part to explore what he knew about anything related to the Sept. 11 attacks.

He was indicted in January on six felony charges of holding fake Pakistani passports and U.S.

Ahmed pleaded guilty to all charges Monday before federal District Judge Terrence Boyle in Elizabeth City, said Scott Wilkinson, an assistant U.S. attorney handling the case. Ahmed's defense lawyer, Rosemary Godwin, did not return calls Wednesday seeking comment.

Boyle did not set a sentencing date.

The documents were recovered during a Sept. 13 search of the Fayetteville house Ahmed shared with a family. Federal agents and police from neighboring Fort Bragg searched the home after workers at an Office Max store told them Ahmed tried to have an ink stamp made that would mark a passport as being renewed, according to an INS agent's affidavit.

Senate Minority Leader Lott (R-Miss.) is insisting that his opposition to nomination of Jonathan Adelstein to FCC (CD March 18 p2) has nothing to do with fact that Adelstein works for Senate Majority Leader Daschle (D-S.D.), who joined in opposition to judicial nominee from Lott's home state. Lott spokesman said Tues. that minority leader preferred Andrew Levin, top aide to House Commerce Committee ranking Democrat Dingell (Mich.) . Levin withdrew his nomination when it became clear Daschle wanted Senate staffer as nominee for vacant Democratic seat. "Senator Lott supports this individual [Levin] to fill the Democratic seat at the Commission because he has the experience necessary to deal with the telecommunications issues that come before the Commission," spokesman said, declining to say why Lott didn't express his preference for Levin during vetting process last year. Lott earlier had questioned Adelstein's youth, although Daschle staffer is older than FCC Chmn. Powell and Comr. Martin. Lott first went public with opposition to Adelstein shortly after Senate Judiciary Committee on party- line vote rejected nomination of Charles Pickering to federal appeals court.

Lott leads GOP in payback for rejection of Pickering

Noelle Straub
The Hill
March 20, 2002 Wednesday

In his latest reprisal for Senate Democrats' defeat of controversial judicial nominee Charles Pickering, Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) on Tuesday added an amendment to the energy bill that would force action on judicial nominees.

Lott tacked his amendment on to Sen. Dianne Feinstein's (D-Calif.) amendment on energy derivatives, tying up her provision in procedural knots. Feinstein, a member of the Judiciary Committee, was the first to announce her opposition to Pickering and to predict the committee would vote against him.

The dispute further eroded Lott's relationship with Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.), who charged him with "obstructing the completion of the energy bill." At the same time, Democrats attempted to downplay the partisan rancor triggered when the Judiciary Committee voted down Pickering's nomination last week on a 10-9 party line vote. His rejection is widely seen as a preview to the battle over future Supreme Court nominations by President Bush.

GOP Conference Chairman Rick Santorum (R-Pa.) said the Pickering defeat was "probably one of the lowest points" he has witnessed in the Senate. "I think it'll affect the workings of the Senate dramatically over the next several months, and probably for the rest of the year," he said. "I think there'll be a lot less cooperation."

He blamed Daschle for running the Senate "in a very partisan way that is not going to, in the end, result in a heck of a lot getting done in the United States Senate."

Lott, a personal friend of Pickering's for 40 years, has warned of additional retaliation if the panel doesn't start moving nominations more quickly. The Judiciary Committee's ranking member, Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), predicted that the Pickering vote will have a ripple effect on other Senate business.

"If they're going to battle these really high-quality nominees, it's going to be all-out war because everybody knows these are some of the best nominees ever nominated," Hatch said Monday.

Lott's amendment, similar to a resolution he offered on the floor last week immediately after the committee vote, would require that the panel hold hearings by May on nine federal Circuit Court judges nominated last May.

"Senate Republicans strongly believe that we should have an understanding on when President Bush's Circuit Court nominees, many of whom have been languishing in the committee for almost a year, will get hearings and be treated fairly, and we'll continue to call attention to this issue," said Lott spokesman Ron Bonjean.

Lott earlier had rejected a bipartisan Judiciary Committee request for $1.5 million for oversight of federal agencies involved in the war against terrorism, and blocked the nomination of a Daschle aide to the Federal Communications Commission.

On the Senate floor last week, Hatch declared, "Today is the Ides of March. I would call on my Senate colleagues to 'Beware.' The fight they started with Judge Pickering is one that others may end. I hope, however, to quote Shakespeare further, that they have not crossed the Rubicon, that the die is not cast."

But Budget Committee Chairman Kent Conrad (D-N.D.) urged Republicans to let cooler heads prevail.

REV_00336407

"They need to be careful about this rhetoric," he said. "They need to remember they've got the White House now. They're the ones that need to be worried about moving an agenda. They're the ones that need to be worried about moving nominees. This overheated rhetoric is not very useful for their own best interests."

Conrad also said Republicans should remember they didn't give some of President Clinton's nominees a hearing.

"In this place you've got to live to fight another day and realize your adversaries of yesterday are your allies tomorrow and kind of move on to the next fight," he said. "Don't get too hung up on what's transpired."

During the Judiciary Committee's consideration of Pickering, Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.) expressed concern that the bitterness might spill over into other Senate business. He pointed out that any one senator can keep the chamber from reaching unanimous consent agreements, which keep the Senate running smoothly.

"The feelings are running so deep here on these judicial issues I'm afraid that might happen," he said. "Any one of us could throw a monkey wrench and tie the Senate in knots."

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), a member of the Judiciary Committee, conceded that Pickering's defeat was "painful" for Lott, but warned that, if Republicans slow down the Senate, it will only hurt passage of President Bush's agenda.

"There are certain things which the administration needs to accomplish by way of appointments and appropriations, and it will take the cooperation of the Democrats. So ultimately, like it or not, we're in this boat together."

Sen. Debbie Stabenow (D-Mich.) defended Democrat's right to vote down Pickering.

"It's every senator's right to raise questions about these kinds of very serious issues that came up," she said. "I think they were legitimate questions, not only on civil rights but on his record on choice, which I was extremely concerned about. It's legitimate and hopefully people will be able to go on."

As for Senate business, she said, "Our Republican colleagues will have to decide how important they think a national energy policy is, and campaign finance reform and balancing the budget."

Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D-Conn.) said it was too early to say if the Pickering defeat would hurt the Senate.

"These things happen and usually we get over them. I guess we'll get over this one too. It's part of the human drama here. Underneath all the news, it's just 100 people trying to work together and sometimes we have disagreements."

Lott Fires New Salvo On Pickering

National Journal's CongressDaily
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

Senate Minority Leader Lott fired a new shot Tuesday in an apparent campaign to make life difficult for Senate Democrats following the Judiciary Committee's rejection of the nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. for an appellate court post.

Lott Tuesday offered a "sense of the Senate" resolution about timely consideration of judicial nominations as a second-degree amendment to another energy bill amendment by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., that deals with regulation of energy trading.

The move could delay a final vote on Feinstein's amendment, which is being considered as part of energy legislation on the floor today. "I think it's rather spiteful," said Feinstein, "and is going to stand in the way of an amendment that is really the first action this Congress will take with respect to seeing that an Enron-type situation doesn't happen again."

Feinstein, who serves on the Judiciary Committee, voted against the nomination of Pickering, a longtime friend of Lott.

In another move Monday, Lott's office signaled that Lott would support the nomination of Andrew Levin, an aide to House Energy and Commerce ranking member John Dingell, D-Mich., to serve on the FCC. Lott last week said he would try to block the nomination of another candidate, Jonathan Adelstein, an aide to Majority Leader Daschle, in a move Lott denied was an act of retribution for Pickering's defeat.

The move could put several key Senate Democrats at odds. Commerce Chairman Hollings, who blocked Levin's nomination last year, said Tuesday, "I'll see what happens."

Lott also has opposed a $1.5 million funding request by the Judiciary Committee.

Majority Whip Reid said that leaders might be able to deal with the judicial nominations issue today with a separate vote and debate on the issue.

Daschle has said he intends to offer a competing sense of the Senate resolution on nominations. Reid said that if the Feinstein amendment is stalled, the Senate could turn to another amendment by Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz. -- By Geoff Earle

Nominee Faces Questions

REV_00336409

The New York Times
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

A nominee for Federal District Court faced tough questioning from Senate Democrats today about his efforts to overturn the requirement that police inform suspects of their right to remain silent.

The nominee, Prof. Paul Cassell of the University of Utah law school, helped persuade the Supreme Court to review the so-called Miranda warnings, but, nonetheless, the court upheld the rule in a 7-to-2 decision in 2000. Professor Cassell had argued that a 1968 law loosened the restrictions imposed by the Miranda decision and allowed voluntary confessions to be admitted as evidence, even if suspects were not read their rights. http://www.nytimes.com

Bush May Hire Lobbyist to Push Judge Nominees

Jonathan Groner
The Recorder
March 20, 2002 Wednesday

WASHINGTON - Stung by the political defeat of Judge Charles Pickering Sr., the Bush administration is likely in the next few weeks to bring on a high-level official with day-to-day responsibility for shepherding the president's judicial nominations through the Senate.

"They are going to bring somebody in as a go-to guy, someone who would have no other duties," says a GOP Hill staffer with knowledge of the plan. "This would be someone who has been around Washington for a couple of decades and knows his way around."

The effort comes as a Bush nominee for the District Court in Utah, University of Utah College of Law Professor Paul Cassell, was expected to field sharp questions from Democrats at his Judiciary Committee hearing Tuesday. Cassell is best known for unsuccessfully seeking to overturn the Miranda decision in an argument before the Supreme Court in 2000. An administration official confirms that ongoing discussions at the White House may soon lead to a decision to hire a high-level lobbying strategist for judicial nominations.

"Resources will definitely be brought on to meet the needs," says this official, who cautions that "it hasn't quite reached the point of decision."

This source says the administration may instead decide to clarify the confirmation-related duties of current White House and Justice Department officials and to set up ways to improve lines of communication.

The official says other steps are being taken to shore up deficiencies that became apparent in the White House response to assaults on Pickering's record by liberal groups and senators. There are now meetings about nominations every two weeks, for example, that include key members of the

Senate leadership and high executive officials such as White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales.

The GOP aide on the Hill adds that it's crucial for the White House, the Justice Department, the Republican leadership, and GOP Judiciary Committee members to work together in defending the administration's nominees. Efforts to push Pickering suffered because there was no central strategist, this aide says.

"The key is coordination," says the staffer. "We have to get our act together."

Says another Hill staffer who was not familiar with the discussions about revamping the administration's response: "We just got beat politically.

They were able to define this guy as the antichrist. What we need is a big-time politically savvy lobbyist, not a Supreme Court clerk. We don't have enough butt-kickers. We have to realize that we're in a war here."

Pickering is a federal trial judge in Hattiesburg, Miss., tapped last year for a seat on the Fifth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals. Despite close ties to Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, a fellow Mississippian, Pickering was rejected March 14 by a 10-9 party-line committee vote.

Although President George W. Bush made several personal pleas for Pickering as the vote approached, many observers still see his involvement, like many aspects of the pro-Pickering effort, as too little and too late.

In administration circles, Pickering was not regarded as an especially controversial nominee until late January.

Although the original charges against Pickering, involving alleged racial insensitivity, proved hard to sustain, his liberal opponents were able to put the White House on the defensive from the start - and ultimately to frame the vote as a test of each senator's commitment to appointing federal judges from the political mainstream.

Of course, it's not clear that a greater effort could have saved the nomination from defeat in a highly partisan Judiciary panel that narrowly favors the Democrats.

PAST IS PRESENT

Many Senate Democrats still harbor resentment against Republicans for delaying and thwarting many of President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees when the GOP controlled the Senate. Lists of Clinton nominees who didn't get a hearing or a committee vote circulated in the packed Dirksen Building hearing room on March 14.

This anger emerged repeatedly at the 412-hour committee meeting, which ended with three 10-9 votes, all rejecting Pickering. The last two tallies were in response to motions by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., to report the nomination to the floor - where it is believed Pickering would have been confirmed - without a committee recommendation or with a negative recommendation.

Other nominees whose hearings are expected to take place later this year, such as D.C. Circuit nominee Miguel Estrada and Tenth Circuit choice Michael McConnell, are seen as likely targets for attacks by well-prepared and well-funded groups such as People for the American Way and the Alliance for Justice, and so may require considerable help.

Those anticipated battles, as well as the prospect of an opening on the Supreme Court, are the reasons that people in high places are thinking about bringing in a top-level lobby strategist. They don't want a repeat performance.

Explains the congressional aide: "When [People for the American Way President] Ralph Neas makes points one, two and three, we need someone who can refute points one, two and three in the same news cycle. When you wanted to find something bad about Pickering, you knew you could always go to Ralph Neas or to [Alliance for Justice President] Nan Aron. When you wanted to find something good about Pickering, it wasn't clear where you could go."

Marcia Kuntz, director of the Judicial Selection Project of the Alliance for Justice, downplays the importance of strategy and public relations in the battle. "We believe that Judge Pickering was rejected by the committee because of his record," she says.

But the liberal groups' superior preparation and coordination had a lot to do with their victory, many on both sides say.

"It was hard to say who was in charge on Pickering," says Eleanor Acheson, who as assistant attorney general helped shepherd Clinton judge nominees and who followed the Pickering nomination closely.

"And once the guy got into trouble, there was no one there to help him make his case."

The GOP Capitol Hill staffer says that the "go-to person" could end up being someone already in the administration, such as a member of Nicholas Calio's White House legislative affairs team. On the other hand, according to the staffer, the administration might recruit someone with Hill or administration experience but currently out of government for a stint of a year or so.

It's not clear whose staff the person would be assigned to, but sources say the White House is the most likely possibility.

In addition to Calio's group, the Department of Justice's Office of Legislative Affairs, headed by Daniel Bryant, the DOJ Office of Legal Policy, under Viet Dinh, and the White House counsel's office all play key roles in defending any nominee.

No matter what course the administration takes, the high-ranking executive official says the next confirmation battle will not resemble this one. "We'll make sure that from now on, we have just one song sheet that we're singing off of."

Rove to Group: Bush to Press For Conservative Judiciary

Alan Cooperman and Amy Goldstein
The Washington Post
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

As the Senate Judiciary Committee was voting Thursday evening to reject U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering for an appellate court position, presidential adviser Karl Rove was telling an influential Christian political action group that President Bush would continue to nominate conservatives as federal judges.

"We're not going to have a pleasant day today [in the Senate]," Rove told the Family Research Council at the Willard Hotel, according to a tape recording given to The Washington Post by an attendee. ". . . This is not about a good man, Charles Pickering. This is about the future. This is about the U.S. Supreme Court. And this is about sending George W. Bush a message that 'You send us somebody that is a strong conservative, you're not going to get him.' "Guess what?" Rove added. "They sent the wrong message to the wrong guy."

In addition to sounding a defiant note on judicial nominations, Rove's speech set out a broad agenda for cooperation between the administration and the Christian right.

"There'll be some times you in this room and we over at the White House will find ourselves in agreement, and there'll be the occasion when we don't. But we will share a heck of a lot more in common than we don't. And we'll win if we work together far more often than the other side wants us to," Rove told the group of about 250 Christian political activists from around the country.

During the speech and subsequent question-and-answer session, Rove promised that the White House would push welfare reforms that encourage families and marriage.

He also said the administration would try to find ways to support crisis pregnancy centers that counsel women against abortion. And he predicted a battle in the Senate over administration-backed proposals to ban human cloning. "The other side is winning the P.R. war" to permit laboratory cloning for medical research, he said.

Rove referred to the Senate's action on Pickering's nomination as a "judicial lynching" and said the blocking of such nominees "needs to be the issue in every race around the country for the United States Senate."

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Judiciary Committee, has denied that the panel is out to block Bush's judicial selections, noting that it approved 42 nominees to federal courts before it rejected Pickering.

Leahy also said the panel had conducted more hearings and votes on federal judgeships since Democrats assumed a majority in the Senate last year than the GOP-led Senate did during the entire Clinton administration.

Democrats Grill Judicial Nominee

AP Online
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

Democrats, in a rare grilling of a U.S. District Court nominee, questioned law professor Paul Cassell on Tuesday about his attempts to overturn the requirement that police inform suspects of their right to remain silent.

Cassell, a University of Utah law professor seeking a federal judgeship in Utah, persuaded the U.S. Supreme Court to re-examine the Miranda warnings. He lost, however, in 7-2 decision in 2000 with Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist writing, "Miranda has become embedded in routine police practice to the point where the warnings have become part of our national culture." Cassell argued that a 1968 law loosened the restrictions imposed by Miranda and allows voluntary confessions to crimes to be admitted as evidence, even if suspects aren't read their rights.

Cassell's advocacy against Miranda, which was supported by some law enforcement organizations, made several Democratic senators question whether he would be pro-prosecution in a criminal trial as a federal judge.

"If I was a criminal defendant in front of Judge Cassell, would I be treated fairly?" questioned Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

Cassell assured Democrats that he would uphold Miranda as a judge. The Miranda warning "is the law of the land and that's the law I will follow," he said.

Cassell, an advocate for victims rights, also told senators that he felt there were some areas where the courts have been too protective of criminal defendants' rights and advocated video or audio taping criminal interrogations. However, "I understand the difference between being an advocate and being a jurist," he told the committee.

The almost two hours of questioning from Democrats may indicate that Cassell's nomination might be in for a battle from the Democrat-controlled committee.

Most U.S. District Court nominees get few questions about their applications to be federal judges. The two other nominees on Tuesday's agenda, U.S. District Judge nominees Legrome Davis of Pennsylvania and Lance Africk of Louisiana silently flanked Cassell as he was questioned, only getting a couple of questions of their own at the very end.

Senate Democrats warn of future delays in considering conservative judicial nominees

Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

Senate Democrats, victorious in their first battle over a judicial nominee with President Bush, say others of the White House's more conservative appeals court choices may have to wait before having hearings.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy told Republicans last week, after his committee voted down federal appeals court candidate Charles Pickering of Mississippi, that he would force judicial nominees that Democrats don't like to move to the back of the line.

Leahy said he will move "consensus" candidates first, pointing out that the committee spent five months on the Pickering nomination. "By moving first on the non-ideological and well-qualified of President Bush's nominees we can fill the most vacancies in the least amount of time," the Vermont Democrat said Monday. That means nominees like Miguel Estrada will not appear soon before Leahy's committee, despite Republican demands for faster movement of applicants to the Senate for confirmation votes.

Instead, the committee is moving forward Tuesday with noncontroversial appeals court candidates like former Wyoming state judge and legal consultant Terrence O'Brien, who wants a seat on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Leahy argued that dealing quickly with conservative judges like Estrada would lead to arguments such as the rancor in the committee over Pickering, a conservative federal district court judge who was voted down by Democrats on a 10-9 party-line vote after two judicial hearings, two weeklong confirmation delays and three separate votes.

Republicans nevertheless have been pushing Leahy to hold hearings for favored GOP nominees like Estrada, whose confirmation has been championed personally by President Bush.

Estrada, nominee to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, is a partner in the Washington firm that represented Bush at the Supreme Court during his postelection legal fight with Al Gore.

"As Mr. Estrada has been waiting nearly 300 days for the Judiciary Committee to consider his nomination, we encourage you to schedule this hearing as soon as possible," Senate Majority

REV_00336415

Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said in a letter to Leahy.

Leahy has promised Republicans that Estrada and other contentious nominees would have hearings this year. But "we need to move the ones that have consensus first to keep from getting bogged down," Leahy said.

Republicans say the problem with that argument is that none of the judges they want on the court are liked by Democrats, who control the Senate with a 50-49 advantage.

"The problem with this argument is that those who propound it seem to define mainstream nominees as nominees who agree with them on divisive social issues, such as abortion," said Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Republicans have threatened to retaliate against Democrats unless their nominees start moving through the Senate Judiciary Committee faster.

Lott initiated retribution last Friday by blocking a Judiciary Committee request for money for a Sept. 11 investigation and by blocking one of Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle's aides from a Federal Communication Commission seat.

"I would call on my Senate colleagues to beware," Hatch said. "The fight they started with Judge Pickering is one that others may end."

Republicans have been pushing for hearings for Estrada and:

-John Roberts, a former clerk to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist. Roberts' earlier nomination was never acted on during the first President Bush's administration.

-Michael McConnell, a University of Utah legal professor. He is considered in legal circles to be especially conservative on abortion rights and lenient on church involvement with government.

-Jeff Sutton, a former Ohio state solicitor. Sutton successfully argued to the Supreme Court that state employees cannot use federal disability rights to collect damages for on-the-job discrimination.

Confirmation hearing for judicial nominee Davis held

Claude Marx
The Associated Press
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

Though the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing Tuesday on the nomination of Philadelphia Common Pleas Judge Legrome Davis for a federal judgeship, seven other nominees from Pennsylvania are still waiting for similar action.

Davis, nominated by President Bush on Jan. 23 for the U.S. District court in Philadelphia, was one of four judicial nominees whom the committee considered on Tuesday and the only one from Pennsylvania. Davis faced little questioning and was praised by both of Pennsylvania's senators and members of the committee of both parties. He promised that he would follow judicial precedent and interpret rather than make the law.

Davis, a Democrat, was twice nominated by former President Clinton but Senate Republicans never scheduled a confirmation hearing.

In an interview after his hearing, Davis declined to comment on the delays.

"I am happy to be here. But out of respect for the senators' tasks, it would not be appropriate to say any more," he said.

The committee will probably vote on his nomination next month, a spokeswoman for the panel said.

The other district court nominees from Pennsylvania are: Michael Baylson and Cynthia Rufe in the eastern district; Christopher C. Connor and John E. Jones in the middle district; and Joy Flowers Conti, Terrence F. McVeery, and Arthur Schwab in the western district.

Bush nominated all of them on Jan. 23, except Connor and Jones who were nominated on Feb. 28.

The Judiciary Committee spokeswoman said hearings on the seven nominees have not been scheduled because the American Bar Association has not completed its evaluation of their fitness for the bench.

The committee held a confirmation hearing last month for the nomination of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd Circuit Appeals Court but has not scheduled a vote.

The large number of vacancies is slowing down the time it takes for cases to be heard.

In Philadelphia, it takes an average of 15 months from the time a civil case is filed to the start of a trial, compared to 12 months in 1995 when the district court was last at full strength. Currently, there are 18 active judges and the court is supposed to have 22.

In Pittsburgh, it takes an average of 23 months from the time a civil case is filed to trial, compared to 20 months in 1995, when the district court was last at full strength. Currently, there are five active judges there and the court is supposed to have 10.

The caseload is helped by retired judges who take senior status and assume one-fifth of a district judge's normal caseload.

"Most cases don't settle until a trial date is set and with fewer judges doing more work that delays trials and slows down the process. That is the case even though each judge's caseload is going up," said U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, who is one of the five judges in Pittsburgh.

Symbolism in fold-up cots: Senate isn't asleep

Gail Russell Chaddock
The Christian Science Monitor
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

Senate majority leader Tom Daschle is warning colleagues to prepare for some long nights this week. To make the point, he ordered a dozen cots wheeled into the Capitol - and told photographers where to be to catch the shot.

No one leaves for recess until the first overhaul of campaign-finance reform in a generation clears the Senate and heads to President Bush's desk for an expected signature, he says. The cots mean that opponents hoping to use Senate rules to delay passage of this bill will have to do it around the clock.

There's more at stake in this fight than limits on political donations, which Mr. Bush early on opposed. It's part of a larger bid to demonstrate that the Senate - despite razor-thin margins and a Democratic caucus that is divided on many issues - can be an effective check on a war-empowered White House.

Ever since the attacks on Sept. 11, Senate Democrats have played down differences with President Bush over conduct of the war on terrorism. There would be "no daylight" between the White House and Congress on this war, said leaders on both sides.

Late last month, Mr. Daschle opened up lots of daylight by publicly questioning the expansion of the war and its prospects for success. After a firestorm of criticism from Republicans, he pushed through a resolution declaring that the Senate "stands united with the president" on the war.

Now, however, clashes between the White House and the Senate are shaping up on a number of fronts, especially oversight of the war on terrorism at home, judicial appointments, and the budget.

One of the biggest clashes is whether Homeland Security director Tom Ridge will be compelled to testify before Senate committees. As an adviser to Mr. Bush (not a Cabinet official), Mr. Ridge is not required to appear, White House officials say.

But since last week, Mr. Daschle has been quietly testing support within his caucus and among some Republicans to subpoena Mr. Ridge. GOP Sens. Ted Stevens of Alaska and Richard Shelby of Alabama also say Ridge has an obligation to appear.

"We aren't comfortable coercing somebody to speak, but when you have somebody this important and when you have the issue as critical as it is for all of this country at stake, there shouldn't be any question about his willingness to come before the committees," Daschle said.

At the same time, the Senate Judiciary Committee handed Bush his first defeat on a judicial nomination, when it rejected the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the US Circuit Court of Appeals on a straight party-line vote last week. The move sends a warning that Senate Democrats intend to advise the president, as well as consent, on future judicial nominations, especially to the Supreme Court.

In response, Senate Republican leader Trent Lott blocked a new bid from the Judiciary Committee to step up its oversight of the war on terrorism. The committee had sought money to evaluate US intelligence operations after the 9/11 attacks.

SUSTAINED high approval ratings for President Bush makes Democratic efforts to define distinctive positions on issues like homeland defense perilous. Stung by GOP charges that he has been an "obstructionist" in a time of war, Daschle is stepping up efforts to demonstrate bipartisan support before launching future assaults on White House positions.

One of his biggest challenges will be managing this year's budget process, which promises to be especially difficult when both the House and Senate are at stake in fall elections. Already, Senate Democrats are deeply divided between those who favor fiscal restraint and those on the liberal wing of the party who think it is critical to push for more spending on social programs for the 2003 fiscal year.

"It's going to be hard, because our fiscal condition has dramatically deteriorated," says Senate Budget Committee chair Kent Conrad (D) of North Dakota.

While Daschle opposed President Bush's 10-year, $ 1.35 trillion tax cut, he has not called for its repeal. With 12 members of his own caucus voting with Republicans for the tax cut, a rollback isn't politically feasible. But he is using all the tools at his disposal to define a Democratic alternative, including scheduling all-night sessions or yanking the energy bill out of the Energy Committee when it appeared poised to include drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge - a top White House priority. The drilling initiative now looks likely to fail.

"He's used the powers he has and done relatively well keeping the party together. But that doesn't mean he can keep a coalition together on other issues, like the budget," says James Thurber, a political scientist at American University here.

Liberals grill Utah judge nominee

Lee Davidson
The Deseret News (Salt Lake City, UT)

REV_00336419

March 19, 2002, Tuesday

WASHINGTON -- University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell found Tuesday that anything he has said against Miranda rights could -- and would -- be used against him in his Senate confirmation hearings to become a new federal judge.

Liberal groups and Democrats said his years of arguing that evidence need not be automatically excluded if suspects do not first receive Miranda warnings (instructing that they have a right to a lawyer, and anything they say could be used against them) makes them wonder if he can be fair to defendants as a judge.

Cassell said he can.

An example of the attacks came from Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice -- an umbrella group of 59 liberal groups ranging from Planned Parenthood to The Wilderness Society and the National Center on Poverty Law. "Cassell has dedicated his legal career to restricting the rights of criminal defendants, acting with an unprincipled zeal that raises serious questions about his ability to rule fairly," she said before the hearings began.

National and Utah chapters of trial lawyer associations are opposing Cassell for similar reasons.

The attacks on Cassell come after the Senate Judiciary Committee last week rejected a nominee for an appeals court, U.S. District Court for Mississippi Judge Charles W. Pickering, after similar liberal groups accused him of bias. Democrats said they worried his strong personal views on such things as abortion might not let him rule fairly.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, had warned there would be "hell to pay" if Democrats treated other nominees similarly, but Cassell faced much of the same.

Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., complained that Cassell had led a "one-man crusade" against Miranda rights for 10 years -- and asked how he could take that position while also advocating steps to improve defense of those accused in capital murder cases.

Cassell said he did not wage a crusade against Miranda but took to the Supreme Court a case arguing that the government was not enforcing a law Congress passed in 1968 that said evidence need not automatically be excluded from trials if a defendant didn't receive a reading of his Miranda rights.

That law called for a review of whether defendants already knew those rights and whether confessions and other information provided was voluntary.

Cassell said he realized the Supreme Court ruling against his position was the law of the land and that he would have no problem following it as a judge.

But Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said he questioned if defendants could look at him as a judge -- with his background -- and believe they would be treated fairly. "There is a feeling by some that if they were a criminal defendant, they would not be able to look at a Judge Cassell and feel that way," Leahy said.

Leahy also criticized Cassell for attacking the Supreme Court ruling against him on the Miranda case as an example of an "imperial judiciary."

Cassell countered that there is a difference between being an advocate and a judge. He said two Supreme Court justices -- whom liberals admire -- were able to make that transition well: Thurgood Marshall (whom Cassell said also argued against Miranda) and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

"Both went from advocate to fair-minded justice . . . . I hope to do the same," Cassell said.

He said those attacking him have also not looked at his entire record. He added that law students he teaches could back his claims that he is open to discussing all points of view on cases, and allowing free discussions.

He said he has pushed ways to help ensure criminal defendant rights including using DNA tests to help exonerate convicts of capital crimes, use of video audio tapes of all police interrogations, and suggesting that some death penalty statutes are too wide.

Hatch also defended Cassell saying "it is not unusual for a law professor to criticize the court or justices . . . .That is how we refine the law, how we improve the law." He said the only question is whether Cassell will be fair now -- and Cassell said he would.

While Cassell ran into attacks, Republican aides say they feel he likely still will have enough votes for confirmation. That comes, in part, because Cassell helped push a bill sponsored by many committee Democrats to protect victim rights -- and led an effort to allow Oklahoma City bombing victims' families to watch the trial.

Cassell would fill the spot vacated by retired U.S. District Court for Utah Judge David Sam.

Cassell was a clerk for former chief Justice Warren Burger and for now Justice Antonin Scalia when he was an appeals court judge. He was an assistant U.S. attorney in Virginia.

He received a mixed rating from the American Bar Association. A majority of a review panel rated him as "well qualified," the top rating. But a minority rated him only "qualified," and another minority rated him as "not qualified."

The "unhelpful" George Bush, the slimed Charles Pickering, a timeless classic, &c.

EXCERPT

The Bush administration's new stance on Israel is familiar, but also surreal. Every administration has treated Israel's determination to defend itself as an inconvenience; but this Bush administration seemed different, especially after Sept. 11: The president seemed to "get" that Israel was engaged in exactly what the U.S. now had to do.

Bush also seemed sure to fulfill a campaign promise: not to interfere unduly in the Arab-Israeli conflict, not to make demands on Israel that put it in a weaker position, and cost it lives.

But then the president decided that Israel's attempts to protect itself weren't "helpful." He dispatched his pitiful, uncomprehending envoy, Anthony Zinni, to the Middle East, to further, or restart, or talk about the "peace process." One TV newscaster said that Zinni arrived there "facing a mounting death toll." Gee, that's nothing compared with what the victims and their families face! The administration, only a half-year into the war, seems to view the Arab-Israeli conflict as a problem for the U.S., above all. According to a "senior official," speaking to the New York Times, Colin Powell told Ariel Sharon to "get out of Ramallah and the other areas. The implication being, 'This is the president's mission, the president's decided to send Zinni, and it's not going to be good if it's interpreted that your actions are undermining the president and his envoy in their attempts to end the violence."

Thus Israel is given a choice: protect its citizens from murder or cross its primary - sometimes only - ally. That's a lousy choice to impose on a government, especially one whose nation faces mortal threats.

You would have thought we were beyond this kind of strong-arming - unenlightened strong-arming; you would have thought that the administration now recognized the right - the necessity - of self-defense, and the futility of appeasing Muslim fanatics determined to kill; you would have thought that Bush understood the folly of rewarding Yasser Arafat for terror. For a time there, it seemed that Arafat would actually be punished for inflicting near-daily violence on Israel: the PA-sanctioned suicide bombers, freighters full of explosives, etc. But no: Washington has ridden to his rescue again.

And the media, of course, toasted Bush for this. The headlines said "Bush Rebukes Israel!" and the editorialists almost shouted with glee that the president was at last showing "evenhandedness": Evenhandedness, that great shibboleth, is seen as a sign of wisdom in things Middle Eastern. Our betters are always telling us to "understand" the aggrieved and murdering Arabs; an understanding of the Israeli position is not encouraged.

On Sunday, the New York Times had the headline "What Does He Want? The Enigma That Is Sharon." The question "What does Sharon want?" is among the easiest in the world: He wants that his nation live and not die, that it somehow endure among the millions bent on lying about it and killing it.

George Bush claims that Sharon's actions are "unhelpful," but he doesn't say unhelpful how - or to what. Does he imagine that the Arabs will rush to overthrow Saddam if only Sharon plays nice and lets girls at their bat mitzvahs be blown up without response? Bush doesn't say, either, what incentive Arafat could possibly have to quell the terror: The United States will obviously not require it of him. He's sitting pretty once more, strolling and smiling with Zinni, looking ever the statesman.

Just when Jerusalem thinks it at last has Arafat isolated, the Americans come along and un-isolate him. I'll tell you what incentive the PLO has to stop the killing: zero.

A sharp-eyed and conscientious reader pointed out something quite interesting to me. In the current National Review, our John J. Miller has an article on James Zogby, head of the Arab American Institute. Miller writes, "When the United States arrested a Hamas leader in 1995, Zogby called the move 'destructive and not helpful to the peace process,' as if letting terrorists run free were somehow in the interests of peace."

And now Bush and the rest of the administration parrot that same language. Disgusting. And also unnerving. We are not yet in James A. Baker III territory, but we should watch.

So, Judge Charles Pickering is finished - at least, he went down to defeat in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

There is a new line developing, among the liberals; actually, it was established about a week ago, when it became clear that Pickering wouldn't make it: "The country is divided. The 2000 election was screwy, with the Democratic nominee, the loser, winning the popular vote. Bush has no mandate. He was 'selected, not elected.' The Democrats have control of the Senate, thanks to Jeffords. Bush has no business pushing for conservative judges. He's not that kind of president. He has no right."

Ah, but remember: That's not what they'd said before. No. They said that Pickering was a racist, a Neanderthal, a hater not only of blacks but of women and the poor.

This is the way the liberals always play. If conservatives don't expect it, they're inducible. It meant nothing to the Left that Pickering had put himself and his family at risk when he prosecuted the Klan - back when it was unpopular to do so in Mississippi. It meant nothing that he had the support of most black citizens in his community. Democrats still depicted Pickering as a kind of Klansman - a man who, if he wouldn't burn a cross himself, would tolerate it.

The most delicious line uttered in this whole business came from Medgar Evers's brother, who said, "The NAACP and the Klan are the only two organizations that are against him down here [in Mississippi] right now."

Contemplating the destruction of Pickering, I was reminded of something in a piece I did last summer about Patrick Leahy, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee ("The 'Nastiest' Democrat," NR, July 9). Here's what I had in mind:

REV_00336423

One Leahy foe puts the beef of many this way: The senator "always likes to have an ethical veneer for his purely partisan attacks. He can't just say [for example] that he despises Ted Olson's views, that he resents his representation of [George W.] Bush in Bush v. Gore, that he's sorry there has to be a conservative solicitor general at all. No, he has to say that Olson lacks integrity, that he lacks honesty, and that's what stinks about Patrick Leahy."

I would say to Democrats, Look: If you want to say that Bush shouldn't get judges because of the election, fine. But knock off this BS about how our guys are racists.

Daschle Outlines A Potential Post-Recess Agenda

National Journal's CongressDaily
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

Senate Majority Leader Daschle has written Minority Leader Lott outlining legislation that could come up during the seven- week stretch of session following the two-week spring recess, which begins this Friday. The list, which could be expanded, includes measures that are important to business groups as well as key Democratic constituencies, while reflecting commitments Daschle has made to Republicans. Daschle plans to complete energy legislation after the recess, although the legislation could also get more floor time this week, depending on the pace of the campaign finance debate. Daschle plans to move legislation to renew presidential trade negotiating authority, renew trade adjustment assistance, and deal with Andean trade issues after the recess, although Daschle has also said he might try to move the Andean trade bill this week, before President Bush's trip to Peru. Also listed is legislation addressing stem cell research and genetic discrimination, honoring a pledge Daschle made to Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., to bring up the stem cell bill. Daschle lists an FY03 budget resolution as a possibility, although some observers have said it will be difficult for the Senate to pass a budget resolution this year. Daschle also could schedule "hate crimes" legislation, and a bill establishing parity in coverage for mental health benefits. He also includes on his list election reform legislation, which Daschle pulled from the floor after Democrats failed to break a GOP filibuster over a Democratic amendment dealing with voter identification. Party leaders have said the two sides should now be able to reach a compromise.

Daschle also lists a defense authorization bill, which traditionally moves before the FY03 Defense appropriations measure. Bush has called on Congress to pass that bill first among the 13 appropriations bills. Also listed is a supplemental appropriations bill, with the administration expected to submit its FY02 supplemental request by the end of this week. The Senate also could take up a border security bill after the recess. The administration had hoped to take up the bill sooner along with immigration legislation. But Appropriations Chairman Byrd said Thursday in a floor speech that he would not be "pressured" into acting on the measure without full debate. Daschle also lists a bill sponsored by Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., intended to assist small businesses hurt by the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. The measure gained some attention last year, when Kerry claimed Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., had placed a hold on it. Finally, Daschle plans to Lott Halts Work In Three Committees To Retaliate For Rejection Of Pickering Nomination.

Nather Pierce
CQ
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

EXCERPT

Senate Republicans on Wednesday "continued their campaign of retaliation against the chamber's Democratic leadership for what they perceive as the slow pace over President Bush's judicial nominees." Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott "halted work in three committees by invoking a little-used rule that limits hearings and markups to two hours unless senators agree to extend them." Lott said he was "preparing to do the same Thursday," adding, "We're looking over the list of opportunities." CQ adds Lott's Wednesday action "stopped the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee (HELP) from considering pension overhaul legislation (S 1992), the Government Affairs Committee from holding a hearing on the Enron Corp. collapse, and the Judiciary Subcommittee on Technology, Terrorism and Government Information from holding a hearing on identity theft and information protection." Lott invoked the rule "by objecting to a routine Democratic request to extend the committee sessions." Lott said, "There's got to be a change in the conduct around here. They've got to start working with us on how bills are brought up." CQ adds Lott is "still angry over last week's Judiciary Committee party-line vote rejecting the nomination of Charles W. Pickering Sr. to the appellate bench. Pickering is Lott's personal friend and Lott's recommended nominee to Bush." Lott also said Wednesday that Daschle "only has intensified the partisanship by pulling public relations stunts on a campaign finance bill (HR 2356). Saying he expected to be in all-night sessions to prevent a filibuster, Daschle brought in cots for members to sleep on."

GOP 'borkers' righteously slam 'borking

Jay Bookman
The Atlanta Journal and Constitution
March 21, 2002 Thursday

Fifteen years ago, the Senate's rejection of Robert Bork as a nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court introduced a new word to right-wing political discourse. Since then, any conservative rejected by the Senate is said to have been "borked," meaning unfairly maligned by mean liberals.

Bork, the man, has done almost as well as "bork," the word. Through books, articles and speeches, he has used his fame as a pulpit from which he has preached his worldview far more fully than he had in his confirmation hearings. It has, to say the least, been a revelation. In 1987, Bork's opponents painted him as an extremist, and Bork has spent the years since then proving them right.

For example, Bork says that government has the legal right to bar its citizens from using birth-control devices, such as the Pill. He believes that government can, if it chooses, forcibly sterilize repeat criminals.

He believes that Congress ought to have the power to overturn any decision by the Supreme Court, and he thinks that government censorship is an idea whose time has probably come. He also believes that the U.S. Supreme Court --- the "extremely liberal Supreme Court" headed by William Rehnquist, no less --- is the single most important cause of the nation's cultural corruption.

To his credit, Bork hasn't been coy about expressing those beliefs. But I would not recognize the nation that he describes as the United States. Nor would I want a man of those viewpoints sitting on the Supreme Court with a lifetime appointment. In "borking" Robert Bork, the Senate did the nation a great service.

Which brings us to Charles Pickering, the latest judicial nominee alleged by conservatives to have been "borked." On a 10-9 vote, strictly along party lines, the Senate Judiciary Committee has rejected Pickering's nomination to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, a decision that has set off howls of righteous anger.

In the wake of that vote, Senate Democrats have been accused of everything from subverting the Constitution to playing politics with the judiciary. U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch has even complained that Pickering is the victim of a "lynching" by senators who, in Hatch's view, committed the cardinal sin of rejecting a nominee on grounds of ideology.

Now, if Hatch were sincerely angered by what happened to Pickering, he would probably be even more outraged to learn how the Senate treated another judicial nominee, Michael Schattman.

Pickering at least got two committee hearings and a committee vote, all within a year of his nomination. He may not have liked the final outcome, but he did get the courtesy of a vote.

Schattman, by contrast, waited three long years and never got even a hearing. He finally withdrew his name when it became clear that those running the Senate Judiciary Committee would never give him a chance to be considered.

The man running the Judiciary Committee all that time was Orrin Hatch.

Of course, Hatch and his GOP colleagues denied opposing Schattman on ideological grounds. Oh, no --- only Democrats would be that nefarious. Instead, Republicans charged that Schattman was . . . too partisan, yeah, that was the reason! As proof, they dredged up the fact that he had once served as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

Horrors!

Given the Schattman Test, however, one wonders how the Republicans could ever have nominated Pickering. He had not only been very active in Republican politics, he led the effort at the '76 GOP convention to rewrite his party's platform on abortion, committing the GOP to oppose the practice even in cases of rape or incest.

Republicans claim to believe that judges should be appointed based on ability, not ideology, yet the push to get "more judges who think like we do" has become a GOP obsession. They claim to oppose judges who are "activist," but the list of cultural and legal changes that the GOP hopes to achieve by taking over the judiciary is as long as Hatch's nose.

But most of all, their self-righteous whining about such issues has gotten unbearable. If Hatch insists on perfecting his Dudley Do-Right imitation, he should do it in the privacy of his own home, not in front of the TV cameras.

Pickering Didn't Get 'Lynched,' and We Shouldn't Say That He Did

Linda R. Monk
Los Angeles Times
March 21, 2002 Thursday

Karl Rove, President Bush's chief political advisor, and Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) have called the Senate Judiciary Committee's defeat of Judge Charles W. Pickering for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals a lynching.

"Lynching," like "Holocaust," is a word that should not be used gratuitously.

The word has special meaning to native Mississippians like Pickering and me. From 1882 to 1944, there were about 4,700 lynchings in the United States; Mississippi led the nation with 573. Of Mississippi's victims, 93% were African American. Here's how my hometown paper, the Vicksburg Evening Post, described a 1904 lynching of Luther Holbert and his wife, accused of killing Holbert's employer:

"When the two Negroes were captured, they were tied to trees and while the funeral pyres were being prepared, they were forced to suffer the most fiendish tortures. The blacks were forced to hold out their hands while one finger at a time was chopped off. The fingers were distributed as souvenirs. The ears of the murderers were cut off. Holbert was beaten severely, his skull was fractured and one of his eyes, knocked out with a stick, hung by a shred from the socket....

"The most excruciating form of punishment consisted in the use of a large corkscrew in the hands of some of the mob. This instrument was bored into the flesh of the man and woman, in the arms, legs and body, and then pulled out, the spirals tearing out big pieces of raw, quivering flesh every time it was withdrawn."

Future Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas started us down this path of gratuitous use of the word lynching when he called the sexual harassment accusations of law professor Anita Hill "a high-tech lynching." But the proper word for citizens airing their concerns about judicial nominees who will have lifetime jobs is not lynching but democracy.

To understand the real meaning of lynching, get a copy of the 2000 book, "Without Sanctuary: Lynching Photography in America." People once attended lynchings as entertainment and sent their relatives picture postcards of the events. One of the most compelling photos is of a 1930 double lynching in Indiana. There's a young couple laughing in the foreground and a man with a Hitler-style mustache pointing at the swinging bodies. A lock of the victim's hair was framed along with the photograph.

Part of the concern over Pickering's nomination was his history on racial issues. Opponents accused him of lying under oath about his connection to Mississippi's infamous Sovereignty Commission, which writer Willie Morris referred to as "a sort of boondocks Gestapo." Supporters--including a local leader of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People--pointed to Pickering's testimony against the Ku Klux Klan in a murder trial, which cost him reelection as a prosecutor. These were legitimate questions that deserved a full hearing, which is why the Constitution gives the Senate the power to approve judicial nominations.

I would be the last person to say a racist can't be rehabilitated. When my grade school was integrated in 1970, I was one of the most racist 12-year-olds you could imagine. I made it clear to my black classmates that they were unwelcome and inferior. Fortunately, they didn't listen.

Much was made in the press of Pickering's role on the board of the Institute for Racial Reconciliation at the University of Mississippi, my alma mater. An essential part of racial reconciliation is coming to terms with the brutality of slavery and the state-sponsored terrorism inflicted on African Americans for at least a century afterward. This does not mean we should live in the past, but we can't whitewash it either. Pickering should be the first to admit that he was in no way "lynched." It's important to remember what a real lynching is.

A Disappointing U.S. Attorney Choice

The New York Times
March 21, 2002, Thursday

United States attorneys are a bulwark of the justice system. The top federal prosecutors at the state level, they enforce some of the nation's most critical laws. With vast resources, including the F.B.I., at their disposal, United States attorneys take on the government's biggest, highest-impact cases, from prosecuting international terrorists to getting to the bottom of the Enron mess.

New York City has two United States attorneys, one based in Manhattan and the second, for the Eastern District, in Brooklyn. President Bush has nominated Roslynn Mauskopf for the Brooklyn post, which prosecuted the Abner Louima police-brutality case and indicted 65 people in a huge medical insurance fraud ring last summer. Whoever heads the office will have a large impact on the level of organized crime, drug trafficking, public corruption and racial discrimination in the city. Roslynn Mauskopf is not without professional credentials, but she is still a disappointing choice. In 13 years in the Manhattan district attorney's office, she rose to chief of the frauds bureau, and she has served since 1995 as New York's inspector general, a position she was appointed to by Gov. George Pataki.

What Ms. Mauskopf lacks is experience as a federal prosecutor. United States attorneys must make constant judgment calls based on fine points of federal law and prosecutorial practice -- when to prosecute or not, what criminal sentence to pursue under arcane federal guidelines, how to cooperate with other units of government. These decisions are too important for on-the-job training. Federal prosecutorial experience has almost invariably been seen as a prerequisite for the top New York posts.

Questions have also been raised about Ms. Mauskopf's independence. She is clearly close to the Pataki administration, whose influence accounts for her surprising nomination. That alone should not be a disqualifying factor; nominees to these prestigious posts often have connections to powerful officeholders. But Democrats have charged that she has gone too easy on state government in her six years as inspector general. That issue was raised, but not answered, by New York State's comptroller, Carl McCall, in a 2000 audit that faulted Ms. Mauskopf for refusing to turn over records that he said were necessary for evaluating her performance.

Governor Pataki's office claims that the fight over Ms. Mauskopf is a proxy for a larger issue: Senator Charles Schumer's unhappiness that he is not being given a bigger role in federal judicial appointments in New York. This inter-party fight mirrors the one in Washington between President Bush and Senate Democrats over Mr. Bush's judicial nominees. In both cases, there has been too much finger-pointing and motive-questioning.

The fair administration of justice requires that nominees for both United States attorney and the federal bench be men and women from the political mainstream who are politically independent and demonstrably qualified for their jobs. Ms. Mauskopf's nomination does not meet those standards. http://www.nytimes.com

Judge Not

Newsday (New York, NY)
March 21, 2002 Thursday

There's been much name-calling and many angry words coming from right-wingers and Republicans over the defeat of Judge Charles Pickering's nomination for a lifetime appointment to the federal appeals court ["Bush Judicial Nominee Rejected," March 15]. Even the president chimed in with groans about the number of vacancies that exist on the nation's courts. How short memories are in politics.

At least Pickering's nomination came up for a vote in the Democratic-controlled Senate

REV_00336430

Judiciary Committee. Many of the well-qualified and moderate judges nominated by President Bill Clinton were never even given the courtesy of having their nominations brought up for a vote by the Republican-controlled Judiciary Committee.

Yes, vacancies must be filled, but let's bear in mind that the Democrats are bringing to a speedy vote more of Bush's nominees than the Republican-controlled judiciary committee did of Clinton's.

She Doth Protest Too Much Justice Clarence Thomas' Wife Attacks Democrats for Daring to 'Demonize' Conservative Judges

Michael Kinsley
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
March 21, 2002 Thursday

The question ordinarily posed by pieces on the Wall Street Journal editorial page is whether the author is staggeringly disingenuous or sincerely addled by ideology. In the case of a column published in the Journal last Thursday, though, the explanation is more benign.

This article was an attack on Democrats for opposing President Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The author was Virginia Thomas, wife of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, whose own confirmation ordeal has made him a conservative martyr-saint. Thomas, as you will recall, was pummeled so brutally by vicious gangs of Democrats and liberals -- who accused him of being a right-wing ideologue with a closed mind about abortion rights, among other vicious lies -- that he now lies comatose in the Supreme Court, able only to issue reliably right-wing opinions and vote against abortion rights. Naturally his wife is bitter.

Virginia Thomas is also "director of executive branch relations" at the Heritage Foundation, the right-wing propaganda machine that masquerades as a tax-exempt nonpolitical research institution. That a Supreme Court justice's spouse could write this article, and the nation's most influential conservative opinion forum could publish it, illustrates that, for all the talk of the insular liberal culture of Washington, the conservative Washington culture is large enough and insular enough for its members to live within an echo chamber of their own views.

The Constitution gives the Senate the authority to "advise and consent" on the appointment of federal judges. Whatever this means, it must mean more than the obligation to rubber-stamp the president's nominees or merely to pass on their basic competence.

Since Ronald Reagan, presidents of both parties have become more careful to nominate judges who reflect their own judicial philosophy. In response, the Senate, especially when controlled by the opposing party, has weighed judicial philosophy more carefully in exercising its advice and consent. Both political parties oppose nominees from the other one and pompously deplore "politics" when the other party does the same.

Republican presidents have been more disciplined than the one recent Democrat, Bill Clinton, about nominating judges who won't surprise them, which makes the Republican indignation about "ideological" opposition to the president's choices more hypocritical.

On the other hand, Democratic politicians and interest groups have been somewhat less principled about distinguishing judicial philosophy -- how a judge interprets the law and the Constitution -- from the vulgar question of whether they like the outcome.

Meanwhile, though, Republicans pretend or imagine that a few magic words such as "judicial restraint" and "strict constructionism" add up to a philosophy beyond legitimate dispute -- even though it's a philosophy that even they don't apply with any consistency.

It seems to Virginia Thomas, by contrast, that anyone who opposes judicial nominees of Republican presidents -- people such as Tom Daschle -- represents the "hard left" that cares only "about abortion and homosexuality," and doesn't "think of [opponents] as human." Oh, yes, and these hard leftists "demonize" people they disagree with!

"Senate Democrats are actually claiming that some views are so politically incorrect that judges (or others) cannot be allowed to hold them," she wrote, and her husband and Pickering are defending "a culture ... tolerant of philosophical disagreement."

Unless I'm crazy, "hard left" is not an accurate description of the average Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee. In reality, both sides of these disputes care disproportionately about abortion. (Homosexuality seems more like a right-wing obsession.) That's why abortion is so contentious.

Actually, both sides have litmus tests, which is another way of saying these are issues they feel strongly about. In Virginia Thomas' opinion, should Republican senators vote to confirm a judicial nominee who believes Roe vs. Wade was correctly decided? Or is that view "so politically incorrect that judges (or others) cannot be allowed to hold" it -- which is just an overheated way of saying you disagree?

Looking around the real world, it's hard to see this martyrdom that Clarence Thomas supposedly has suffered for the sin of holding views the all-powerful hard left wants to suppress.

He had a rough confirmation battle, but now he's a Supreme Court justice, even though he clearly lied under oath -- or at the least willfully deceived -- in claiming he had never discussed Roe vs. Wade and had no opinion about it. He probably lied about more notorious matters, too. If he's in pain, it must hurt only when he laughs.

REV_00336432

The top Democrat plays the race card -- again.

Brendan Nyhan
Salon.com
March 21, 2002 Thursday

In remarks Friday to the National Association of Hispanic Publications, Democratic National Committee chairman Terry McAuliffe took the low road yet again, implying that Republican primary voters are hostile to Hispanics and suggesting that the GOP is racially biased. Even for statements by a professional partisan, they were wildly unfair.

The speech contained scary-sounding but vague denunciations of what he called "ultra-conservatism." McAuliffe entered into a discussion of how Republicans "just can't help themselves" and "always show their true colors by choosing the extremists on the right." After citing Bill Simon's win over the more moderate Richard Riordan in California's Republican gubernatorial primary, McAuliffe turned to the campaign for the GOP nomination for the state Supreme Court in Texas. "It happened in the Texas primary too. There was only one Latino Republican on the statewide primary ballot -- Xavier Rodriguez. And he lost, even though he is a sitting state Supreme Court justice," McAuliffe said. "Republican primary voters, not surprisingly, preferred the Anglo candidate, who was the plaintiffs' lawyer in the Hopwood case, which ended affirmative action in the Texas university system." The result, McAuliffe clearly suggested without citing any evidence, was that (presumably white) Republicans voted for Smith purely because of his race.

McAuliffe tried to qualify the suggestion by noting that the candidate, Steven Wayne Smith, was the lawyer who organized the successful Hopwood suit against affirmative action practices at the University of Texas School of Law. But, as President George W. Bush knows from two successful gubernatorial campaigns in Texas, many Latinos oppose affirmative action, too; indeed, some are among the very conservatives that McAuliffe derides. So why is it relevant that Rodriguez is Latino and his opponent white?

Affirmative action and related issues of ethnicity and race did play at least some role in Rodriguez's defeat, which shocked the Texas political establishment. Smith focused his underdog campaign on his role in the Hopwood case and criticized his opponent for not taking a strong-enough stand against racial preferences, among other things. In published accounts, Texas political observers have cited a number of possible explanations for Smith's victory, including his "simpler" name (a view shared by Rodriguez); Hispanic Republicans crossing over to vote in the Democratic primary (which featured two Hispanic candidates); and the contrast between Smith's conservatism and Rodriguez's more moderate positions. But none of this justifies McAuliffe's implicit stereotyping of Republican voters.

Earlier in the speech, McAuliffe took a similarly inflammatory swipe at Republicans for supporting a proposed requirement that first-time voters who register by mail have to prove their identity with photo identification when they arrive at the polls. Again linking Republicans to racial animus, he said that the proposed requirement is a "direct descendant of the poll taxes and literacy tests of the segregationist South," and suggested sarcastically that " t he next thing you know they'll want you to present your country club membership card in order to get a ballot."

This is far from the first time McAuliffe, the titular head of the Democratic Party, has played on racial issues in his public remarks. In a press release earlier this month, McAuliffe claimed that by nominating District Court Judge Charles Pickering to a court that presides over a region heavily populated with minorities, "Bush is attempting to disenfranchise this community." As we have pointed out before, attributing this motivation to Bush based solely on Pickering's views on the Voting Rights Act is outrageous.

Partisan discourse is one thing, but resorting to such nasty racial attacks, which are meant only to conjure crude images of Republicans driven by the worst possible motivations, is nothing short of demagoguery.

In a March 20 article about judicial nominations, a statement by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) was incorrectly paraphrased. Leahy said that, since Democrats assumed a majority in the Senate last year, the committee has been holding hearings on judicial nominees at a faster pace than the GOP-led committee did during the Clinton administration. A March 18 article on the Bush administration's plans for easing emission rules for older power plants incorrectly suggested the revised rules would be voluntary. They would continue to be mandatory.

An item in the March 16 Crime & Justice column incorrectly said that James Boileau, convicted of second-degree murder while armed in the slaying last summer of Harriet Hill, used an ax to kill her. Hill's grandson, Howard L. Hill Jr., pleaded guilty last week to first-degree murder in the slaying, but prosecutors never proved in court that Boileau held the ax that killed her during a robbery of her District home.

RESTRAINT OF THE OTHER.

This decade could be a variation on the last one. The voters support Bush on his basic anti terrorism campaign but are skeptical of some of the military adventurism on the horizon. They like his economic program, especially when he borrows basically Democratic themes like more secure health insurance and better-paying jobs. So despite Bush's huge popularity in the wake of Sept. 11, this could be another decade of partisan cohabitation. On the foreign front, Bush's saber-rattling at Iraq may or may not be unnerving Saddam Hussein, but it is giving pause to our allies and spine to the domestic opposition.

Vice President Dick Cheney's Mideast mission to enlist the tacit consent of friendly Arab states for an Iraq expedition quickly shifted to a more urgent question: a new peace initiative for Israel and Palestine. Even in London, where Prime Minister Tony Blair has been Bush's most loyal ally, 100 Labor members of Parliament have petitioned their chief urging him to resist any war with Iraq.

At home, Democrats who shared the public outrage at the Sept. 11 attacks and strongly supported the limited Afghan war are now questioning Bush's plans for the next phase. A campaign against Iraq that failed, left a messy aftermath, incurred serious American casualties, or isolated America from its allies could dramatically change the national psychology of broad support for the president. And all of these outcomes are more likely than a costless toppling of Saddam.

Since Sept. 11, Americans have generally suspended their reservations about Bush. But every president since Truman has had to rein in the most extremist elements in his own camp. President Truman had to fire General Douglas MacArthur. President Kennedy had to resist General Curtis LeMay, who wanted, famously, to nuke North Vietnam "back to the Stone Age." Even LBJ ultmately denied his generals another half a million American troops for Vietnam.

Bush's ultras are civilians - people like Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz and grand hawk Richard Perle, who have been spoiling for a war with Saddam. But many of us who supported the military action in Afghanistan now wonder whether Bush has what it takes to resist people who could literally start World War III. These misgivings could spread.

The economy, seemingly, is good news for President Bush. But here, too, there are parallels with George Bush the First. During his only term, the economy went into recovery late in 1991, but in November 1992, it didn't feel like much of a recovery to a lot of voters.

Unemployment stayed just high enough to create a lot of job insecurity and keep people from getting raises. Other worries, such as unease about health insurance, gave the Democrats a set of pocketbook issues sufficient to oust the first President Bush, supposed recovery or no.

This economy has much in common with that one. Unemployment is just high enough to keep labor markets soft. Worries about health coverage are, if anything, much more severe than in 1992. Constituencies that tilt Democratic, like seniors, wage workers, public employees, working women, and minorities, don't feel as if their personal economies are in recovery.

Of course, the Democrats would have to offer something to these voters. And here, the Democrats' own divisions are probably more disabling than the supposed invincibility of the president.

Yet, despite the president's overwhelming (and bipartisan) public support on the basic antiterror campaign, the Democrats have intermittently functioned as an effective opposition party on other issues without suffering voter retribution. They surprised themselves by blocking the elevation of a dubious judicial appointee, Charles Pickering.

They managed to win the two governorships in contention last November, in Virginia and New Jersey, just two months after Sept. 11, based largely on local issues. And California Democratic Governor Gray Davis, with a sly campaign, recently knocked out Richard Riordan, Bush's handpicked challenger to Davis in the Republican primary.

The voters, I suspect, are more adept at compartmentalization that the pundits often give them credit for. In the current case, that means the ability to distinguish economic from national security issues, general economic recovery from personal recovery, and even the righteous response to Sept. 11 from dangerous foreign military adventures.

No, He's Not King George

Capital Times (Madison, WI)
March 20, 2002 Wednesday

President Bush is throwing a royal hissy fit over the Senate Judiciary Committee's rejection of Mississippi Federal Judge Charles Pickering's nomination to serve on the Deep South's 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Never mind that Pickering, whose record of hostility to civil rights can be traced from the 1950s through the present day, was such a legally inept and ethically challenged jurist that even the most moderate members of the panel opposed his nomination. Bush is furious that his choice was not rubber-stamped by the Senate. The president - who lost the 2000 election by more than 500,000 votes - now complains that democracy itself has been undermined by the Senate's action.

The tantrum is typical of the president and his partisans, who celebrated Bush's selection by the Supreme Court as the dawn of an era of right-wing hegemony in which their whims would become law and their friends judges. Vermont Sen. Jim Jeffords' exit from the party of Bush and Trent Lott upset the "perfect storm" scenario that had Republicans at the helm of the White House, Senate and House of Representatives. But, until the defeat of the Pickering nomination, Bush did not seem to fully understand the dynamics of power-sharing.

REV_00336436

It fell to Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., a former boxer who is one of the Senate's least regal members, to explain some of the constitutional realities. "George W. Bush is president of the United States, not king of the United States. He is President Bush. He is President George, not King George," declared Reid.

Reid said he felt compelled to "express some concern about statements from the administration, including from the president, that the Senate's treatment of judicial nominees 'hurts our democracy.' His statement is unsettling, unfounded, and it is a misunderstanding of the fundamental separation of powers in the Constitution, the checks and balances in the founders' design.

"In our democracy, the president is not given unchecked powers to pack the courts and give lifetime appointments to anyone who shares his view. Instead, the Constitution provides a democratic check on the power of appointment by requiring the advice and consent of the Senate."

What Reid did not add, but certainly could have, is that the check on presidential excess by the Judiciary Committee last week was precisely the sort of balancing of powers that the founders of this nation intended. Indeed, with Pickering's rejection, the Senate asserted powers and principles that, despite the president's tantrums, are at the very heart of this American experiment.

Judicial process close to chaos

Lee Davidson
The Deseret News (Salt Lake City, UT)
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

WASHINGTON -- Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, warned last week there would be "hell to pay" if Democrats treat any more judicial nominees like they did Charles Pickering. But that's what they are doing now to University of Utah law professor Paul Cassell.

Democrats rejected Pickering -- whom many liberal groups painted as a racist after he was nominated to an appeals court -- saying they questioned whether someone with his strong conservative views could not help but be biased on the bench.

While Cassell -- who is nominated as federal judge in Utah -- didn't face attacks for racism, Democrats questioned Tuesday whether he could be fair to criminal defendants after his years of battling "Miranda rights." Those are the warnings to suspects that they have a right to a lawyer and that anything they say can be used against them. Cassell found that anything he has ever said against Miranda rights could and would be used against him in his confirmation hearing.

For example, Nan Aron, president of the liberal Alliance for Justice, said beforehand, "Cassell has dedicated his legal career to restricting the rights of criminal defendants, acting with an unprincipled zeal that raises serious questions about his ability to rule fairly."

National and Utah associations of trial lawyers also opposed Cassell over his Miranda stands. The American Bar Association took a strange stance. A majority of its review panel gave him a "well qualified" rating, but a minority gave him "qualified" or "not qualified" ratings.

Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., complained Cassell had waged a "one-person crusade" against Miranda rights. Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., questioned whether any criminal defendant could look at Cassell and feel he or she would be treated fairly.

Cassell said critics were not treating his record fairly. He said he pushed a case to the Supreme Court arguing that a 1968 law was not being enforced that said voluntary confessions need not automatically be excluded if someone failed to receive a Miranda warning. A review would be needed to see if the person knew those rights and whether the confession was truly voluntary.

The Supreme Court ruled against Cassell. He then criticized that in a law journal article as an example of an "imperial judiciary." Leahy said he was aghast that someone would criticize it that way. (Republicans on the committee were not.)

Still, Cassell said he would follow such rulings as a judge and be fair. He noted that many other lawyers have successfully gone from strong advocate to fair-minded judge -- including such liberal icons of the Supreme Court as Thurgood Marshall and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

He also said critics ignored his work that would improve (and not restrict) defendant rights, including his proposals that police should video or audio tape interviews of suspects, that courts should use DNA testing to help verify or exonerate all those on death row, and steps to ensure adequate defense of all capital murder defendants.

Similar arguments made by Pickering did not save him.

With such treatment of Cassell now after what happened to Pickering, will all heck break loose as promised by Hatch?

Democrats are apparently betting it won't. Otherwise, they likely would not attack Cassell so quickly. After all, they faced only minor retaliation over Pickering. It amounted to putting on hold a nominee Democrats wanted on the Federal Communications Commission and blocking some Judiciary Committee funding. Some in the GOP have called for more drastic measures, including tying up Senate floor action in protest.

Republicans may have to "put up or shut up" with their threats to protect their nominees if all sides don't take a step back from contention. But that may put the confirmation process into complete tit-for-tat chaos.

In short, the Senate is on the extreme edge of the precipice of possible disaster and chaos on judicial nominations. And senators are about to take a giant step forward. The question is whether that will be literally or figuratively.

Pickering A Fight; Plenty of Jurists Both Parties Could Agree on

The Houston Chronicle
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

The Senate Judiciary Committee's rejection of a nominee for the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals had nothing to do with presidential prerogative and everything to do with needless partisan bickering.

There are plenty of distinguished, fair, sensible jurists that the White House and Democratically controlled Senate could agree on. The rejected nominee, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, was Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott's pick, not Bush's. Leniency toward people who terrorize their neighbors by burning crosses on their lawn, something Pickering advocates, is not a principle in Bush's philosophy of compassionate conservatism.

The rancor over Senate confirmation of judicial nominees results because Democratic and Republican senators seek nomination of ideologues of their own stripe and oppose those with opposing views. If senators of both parties put judicial records of fairness and intelligent decisions ahead of partisan advantage, the problem of stalled judicial nominations would recede.

Fooling the voters...

The News and Observer (Raleigh, NC)
March 20, 2002 Wednesday

Thanks for putting on the front page of your March 14 issue the story about U.S. Sen. John Edwards and his continued betrayal of his constituents in North Carolina ("Stance on judge erodes good will"). Even Democratic trial lawyers in Mississippi now recognize the blind ambition of Edwards and are openly expressing their opposition to his cause. The majority of people who voted for this man did so because they believed he was a moderate politician who would represent the core values of the mostly conservative population of this great state. The people of North Carolina were hoodwinked by a Clintonesque double-speaker.

As Edwards' voting clearly shows, including his vote on the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering, his walk does not match his talk. The national, liberal, left-wing interests named in your article as praising Edwards and who will give to his presidential effort are the real constituents he serves. I hope

The N&O will continue to expose Edwards so that voters can make an informed decision next time.

...Legitimate stance

I object to the writer of the March 16 People's Forum letter headlined "Sen. Edwards: Partisan rejection" seeming to denigrate the states and people of Massachusetts, Vermont and New York. U.S. Sen. John Edwards is speaking up for those of us from all states -- North, South, East and West -- who disagree with the radically Republican right-wing views of our other U.S. senator, Jesse Helms. I also disagree with the letter-writer's characterization of the Senate hearings on Judge Charles Pickering as smear and character-assassination, but, were I to agree with him on the terminology, I would suggest that the letter-writer recall that the Democrats learned the fine points of these tactics from the Republicans, who honed their use to a fine point during the years President Clinton was trying to get his own choice of judges appointed.

If the right wing can't take the heat, they should not have set fire to the kitchen.

Stop The Party Sniping

David S. Broder
The Washington Post
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

Unless someone steps in to stop it, the descent to bitter partisanship in Washington will increasingly jeopardize the functioning of government. The looming crisis requires President Bush himself and the leaders of both parties in Congress to act in concert to reverse this dangerous trend.

The latest symptoms of the disease were on display last week, in the party-line vote in the Senate Judiciary Committee to refuse to send the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering Sr. to the Senate for confirmation and in the refusal of Bush to allow Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge to testify before congressional committees.

By insisting on flexing their muscles on clearly debatable issues, both parties and both branches were deliberately antagonizing their opponents. Their actions invite retaliation, and as the sorry spectacle grows, public cynicism will increase. This vicious cycle needs to be stopped -- and stopped now. And the responsibility falls directly on the men who lead the government -- George Bush, Tom Daschle, Trent Lott, Dennis Hastert and Dick Gephardt. They have contributed to this impasse and it is up to them to find a way out.

The way back to common sense and comity is clear. Take the issue of the Pickering nomination, which would have elevated him from a district judgeship to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Judiciary Committee's 10 Democrats voted against Pickering; its nine Republicans supported him.

Fair enough. But then that same partisan majority refused to let the full Senate vote on the nomination. Majority Leader Daschle claimed there was no precedent for sending the nomination to the floor with an adverse recommendation. But even if he is correct in his claim, his obduracy on the Pickering nomination is inappropriate. The Constitution gives the power to appoint judges to the president, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." It does not empower any 10 members of one party to veto the choice of a president of the other party.

If those senators are really convinced of the need to reject the president's choice, they ought to have confidence they can persuade a majority of the other 90 senators they are right. And leading a Senate in which his party has a one-vote majority only because of the defection of a single Republican senator, Daschle ought to have enough respect for the opposition's viewpoint to say that when there is such controversy over a nomination, he will submit the question to the judgment of the whole Senate. Otherwise, there will be more and more retaliatory moves of the kind Minority Leader Lott already has threatened.

Now consider the case of Ridge's refusal to testify at formal congressional hearings. Bush created the post of homeland security director by executive order, making Ridge's office a new element of the White House staff. He insists that as a staff member, giving advice to the president, Ridge should not be subject to formal questioning by Congress.

White House staff members generally meet only informally with members of Congress. But Ridge is in a different position from, say, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice; she coordinates policy of the Defense Department and the State Department, whose heads testify regularly on Capitol Hill. Ridge has operational responsibilities unique to his office, such as developing the threat warning system he announced last week. No one in the Cabinet can explain that policy or defend it as well as he does.

What is more, for him to fulfill his duties -- including a promised reorganization of the scattered border security agencies -- he will absolutely need the cooperation of Congress. Why, then, frustrate Congress by refusing to let him testify?

It would behoove the president to acknowledge that Ridge's role is really comparable to that of the director of the Office of Management and Budget. Mitch Daniels, the current OMB director, is an important policy adviser to the president, but he also runs a coordinating agency whose work is of vital importance to Congress. Under the statute creating OMB, he is confirmed by the Senate and available to testify.

Bush should say he recognizes now, if he did not last September, that this new, permanent Office of Homeland Security is of sufficient importance that Congress should give it a statutory basis, that its director should be confirmed by the Senate and should testify when asked.

It is only by everyone's stepping back from these embittering and unnecessary jurisdictional fights that the rapid descent into ugly partisanship can be halted. The president and the congressional leaders meet each week. This ought to be on the agenda.

President must make judicial nominees a priority

The Washington Times
March 20, 2002, Wednesday

John Nowacki's March 14 Op-Ed column, "The uncivil war on Pickering, stated the obvious but failed to render a solution. Mr. Nowacki rightly observes that though Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden stated in 1992 that every judicial nominee deserves a floor vote, he rescinded that opinion when the "wrong type of nominee - U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering - was being considered. Mr. Nowacki laments the Democrats' obstructionism by comparing numbers of nominees and approvals from past Republican and Democratic administrations, but he fails to admit the obvious: This is the way the game is played. As wrongheaded as the Democrats are, they are as committed to preventing federal appointments for conservative judges as Republicans were to blocking President Clinton's lefties. President Bush must expend political capital to regain control of the Senate. Getting reasonable judicial nominees, such as Judge Pickering, confirmed is more important to the well-being of this country than anything else in the president's campaign agenda.

Balancing the federal judiciary against the lopsided leftward tilt to which we have been subjected for years must take precedence. The president has ushered through his tax cut and seen the economy recover on his watch, and he will be viewed as a successful wartime president who fought for a just and moral cause.

While it is comforting that the president enjoys his present level of popularity, he also should understand that political capital cannot be banked; it is fleeting. He needs to spend capital, which he'll lose eventually, and get Republicans elected to the Senate in 2002. Time is running short.

Virginia Thomas, the wife of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, recently published an op-ed in The Wall Street Journal in which she lambasted Senate Democrats for their treatment of Judge Charles Pickering, President Bush's defeated nominee to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. ("To Judge Pickering: They can't take away your honor," March 14).

Comparing Pickering's ordeal to Justice Thomas' own stormy hearings, she complained that the "Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee" don't think of Pickering "as human right now." She argued that "facts matter little" to Senate Democrats, and that they opposed Pickering because it helped "their fundraising efforts." These are political thunderbolts, hurled by the wife of a sitting Supreme Court Justice.

Following the Florida election fiasco, it should be obvious that the Supreme Court must be held scrupulously neutral in political disputes, both in fact and appearance. So what do we make of it that Ms. Thomas has very publicly weighed in on an intensely political controversy? Unique in the history of Supreme Court spouses, Virginia Thomas has been an active political operative during her husband's entire term on the court. She initially served on the staff of the House Republican Conference, and she later became a senior policy adviser to Majority Leader Dick Armey. She is currently the director of Executive Branch Relations for the conservative Heritage Foundation. In each of those positions, Thomas had, until last week, wisely refrained from overt politicking. Now, however, she has broken another barrier, invoking her husband's name in what can only be seen as an overt effort to sway votes in favor of the Republican administration.

Of course, the ethical principles that constrain the justices do not apply to their spouses. Thomas is entitled to write whatever she pleases. She is an exceptionally capable professional, with an important career that is completely independent of her husband's job. Nonetheless, she showed dreadfully poor judgment in publishing this particular op-ed. It would be a different matter if she had merely written a pro-Pickering essay and signed it "Virginia Thomas," or if she had written a piece about the travails of confirmation without resorting to political invective. Instead, she willfully combined the two, capitalizing on Justice
Thomas's position in order to make a political point.

The Supreme Court is a fragile institution, often best served by the voluntary circumspection of those connected to it. The spouses of other justices seem to recognize this. For example, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg's husband, a prominent tax attorney, divested himself of perfectly legitimate investments in order to avoid even an appearance of judicial partiality. It is unlikely that we will ever again see a Supreme Court spouse who doesn't lead an independent life in one realm or another. It would be unacceptable to place formal limits on their activities, but it's not too much to request some prudence. Yes, Virginia Thomas has the right to exploit her relationships in aid of her cause. It's just too bad no one asked her to keep the Supreme Court out of it.

Democrats never gave Pickering a chance

LANCASTER NEW ERA (LANCASTER, PA.)
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

When Senate Democrats blocked the nomination of Federal District Judge Charles Pickering for the circuit court of appeals last week, they in essence declared that they are prepared to wage total political war for the next eight months.

From now through the November election, expect increasing acrimony between the two parties on domestic issues. They will remain unified in support for the war on terrorism, but they are will fight long and hard on everything else.

It is unlikely that many politicians will try to keep this contest in perspective. They all know this sort of thing has been going on ever since the Senate confirmed the first judicial nominee. The situation turns particularly serious when one party controls the presidency and the other the Senate and during an election year. Over the years, both Republicans and Democrats have gone out of their way to scuttle the other party's nominations.

That history is of no solace to Charles Pickering, a decent man who got caught in a political whirlwind.
Pickering has served as a federal district judge since 1990. The Senate quickly confirmed his appointment to that post, based on his service as a Mississippi prosecutor and state senator. Pickering has done a good job, earning the American Bar Association's endorsement for the higher post.

Senate Democrats opposed Pickering this time around not because of his recent record but because he wrote more than 40 years ago about proposals to strengthen Mississippi's laws against interracial marriage. Black activist groups lobbied against his nomination based on that old and thin material.

No matter that, like a lot of Mississippians, Pickering has changed his attitude toward racial matters since then and has defended civil rights. No matter that many black leaders of Mississippi supported his nomination and denied that he is racially prejudiced.

Senate Democrats also opposed Pickering because they say he has injected his own opinion into accepted law -- as if Democrats would never do such a thing. TheDemocrats were against Pickering simply because he has conservative opinions they do not share.

That the Democrats would slander Pickering's reputation in order to kill his nomination is bad enough, but that they would refuse to allow the full Senate to consider that nomination is the true explanation for the coming war with Republicans over subsequent nominations.

Sallie Twentyman, a teacher from Falls Church, Va., said a fraud alert was not enough when a thief stole her credit card and started opening accounts in different states and running up huge bills. "I felt that, no matter how hard I tried, I was always a step behind." Another witness told Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., that he got enough information about her from her Web site to search the Internet for everything needed to get a credit card in her name.

Congressional investigators said this month that credit card fraud from stolen identities surpasses $ 1 billion annually. Among the proposed remedies: measures that would limit information printed on credit card receipts, penalize companies that issue new cards when a "fraud alert" is on file, help victims get financial records from companies and expand the power of local law enforcement agencies to deal with identity theft.

House panel votes to loosen PAC rule

Political action committees that concentrate on state and local races would no longer have to disclose their existence or their financial activities to the IRS under legislation approved by the House Ways and Means Committee. The approval came as the Senate sent to President Bush a bill overhauling the laws on how campaign money is raised and spent in federal races.

The new bill would affect groups organized under Section 527 of the tax code, which makes contributions they receive tax-exempt. These groups, which critics call "stealth PACs," generally seek to influence races without mentioning specific candidates, although their ads frequently make clear who is being targeted or endorsed.

The House proposal would exempt those groups from IRS disclosure rules if they deal only in state or local races and disclose "substantially similar" information to state or local regulators.

GOP forces end to two Senate hearings

Senate Republicans, invoking a little-used rule, shut down two committees in retaliation for Judiciary Committee Democrats killing President Bush's nomination of Charles Pickering for a federal appeals court seat.

The rule limits Senate committees and hearings to two hours after the Senate convenes unless all senators agree to an extension. Senate GOP leader Trent Lott refused. That shut down hearings of the committees on Governmental Affairs and Health, Education, Labor and Pensions.

Ron Bonjean, a spokesman for Lott, said that many of Bush's appeals court nominees "have been languishing in the Judiciary Committee for almost a year" and that GOP lawmakers want to know when the candidates "will get hearings and be treated fairly."

Deficit nears $ 70 billion 5 months into fiscal year

The Democrats probably would have lost if this nomination had been considered by the full Senate, but Majority Leader Tom Daschle refused to allow that. He liked his odds in the Judiciary Committee, where Democrats outnumber Republicans 10-9. That's how they voted, killing the nomination.

Minority Leader Trent Lott decried this treatment of Pickering, a fellow Mississippian, and vowed retaliation. That retaliation has begun: Lott has blocked a $1.5 million request from the Judiciary Committee for its post-Sept. 11 oversight operations, and he is blocking a senior Senate Democratic aide's appointment to the Federal Communications Commission.

The Democrats can be expected to retaliate for Lott's actions, and the game of tit-for-tat will continue. The harm this type of knee-jerk partisanship does to the democratic process is clear: It slows down more than judicial nominations; any legislative action is now ripe for the picking by the opposite party.

The ultimate harm, however, is to those people who consider working in government. Most judicial nominees would not willingly put up with what Charles Pickering has endured for the past several months. The same sort of thing often happens with cabinet officers and other high-ranking government officials.

Charles Pickering should have been elevated to the circuit court of appeals. The fact that he was not condemns an overly politicized United States Senate and, in this case, Daschle and other Democrats who arrogantly refused to allow the nomination to go to the floor.

Judiciary role above politics

The Advocate (Baton Rouge, LA.)
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

The decision to block the nomination of a Mississippi judge to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals is a distressing example of what's wrong with the judicial confirmation process.

President Bush nominated a 64-year-old judge, Charles Pickering, who had served on the District Court bench for 10 years. He was unanimously confirmed by the Senate for his place on the lower court.

The nominee clearly demonstrates that politics is part of the judicial appointment process: He is a former Mississippi legislator, the father of a Mississippi congressman, and a longtime friend of the Senate's minority leader, Trent Lott of Mississippi. Pickering's nomination was undone by criticism from the NAACP and other influential civil rights and abortion rights groups, who don't want a conservative named to the powerful appeals court. This is the wrong way to approach a decision about a judge.

If he is not the most distinguished jurist in America, or maybe even in Mississippi, Pickering nevertheless won endorsement from the American Bar Association, hardly a conservative bastion.

Pickering was endorsed by Frank Hunger, a fellow Mississippian who happens to be the brother-in-law of former Vice President Al Gore and was a high official in the Clinton administration's Justice Department.

The nominee even had a touch of Atticus Finch about him. He testified against the Ku Klux Klan in a case in the 1960s, when that could well have resulted in violence against him or his family.

His appointment was backed by numerous black Mississippians familiar with what appears to be a good record in promoting racial reconciliation in Mississippi.

Conservative, sure.

Racist or extremist? No.

The ABA blessing, it's true, came before his critics attacked Pickering for what appears to be an ethical lapse, calling his friend Hunger at the Justice Department to protest a decision by prosecutors to seek a heavier penalty for a defendant than Pickering thought was justified in the case. In the event, Hunger took no action on the call, and it had little to do with Pickering's eventual rejection.

That was about politics.

The appeals courts seats are among the most powerful appointments a president can make, and traditionally have reflected the ideology of the president. Recently, the party in control of the Senate has blocked nominees sent up Pennsylvania Avenue by the president of the opposing party.

Republicans sinned in this way when they were in charge of the Senate. Hearings on judicial nominations have been unconscionably delayed, sometimes for years, because senators put unofficial and inappropriate "holds" on nominees.

At least Pickering got a hearing, and a vote, if only in committee.

The Pickering fight was an imperfect test case for a fight over any future nominations to the Supreme Court, where vacancies might occur in the next couple of years.

His rejection obviously was based on the fact that 10 senators on the Judiciary Committee think they know how he would rule, and didn't like it.

That is not a reasonable basis for rejecting a judge.

REV_00336446

A judicial nominee should never state how he or she is going to rule on cases that might come before him or her. Pickering didn't, but the senators - and the interest groups, left or right, who parse opinions to find the nominee's ideological predilections - undermine the independence of the judiciary when appointments such as his become vulnerable to politics.

Judges must be free to interpret the law and rule on cases without regard to politics or popular opinion. While there are cases in which judges violate this principle, it ought to be the standard by which all involved in the judicial selection process should act.

When a president nominates a judge, intellectual and legal qualifications and basic standards such as honesty and personal integrity are the factors that ought to be weighed by senators.

Further, the president's nominees ought to receive deference from senators. However much senators such as Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., don't like it, Bush is not going to be appointing many liberal Democrats to the bench, especially on the appeals courts. That's even more true in the conservative South; the 5th Circuit includes the conservative states of Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi.

Bush won the election, although in an Electoral College squeaker. He is sure to name judges who are likely to generally reflect his views, although experience teaches that appointees to lifetime seats have a way of surprising their political sponsors.

The president names his appointees from a position of election by the whole country, and senators ought to have a reasonable willingness to agree to the president's choices, absent an obvious issue of qualifications or serious misconduct.

Mindless Retribution

The Buffalo News
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

When it comes to the honorable handling of federal court nominations, Washington apparently cannot help itself.

In a kind of low-intensity version of the eye-for-an-eye psychology in the Middle East, it has become Ramallah on the Potomac. Democrats and Republicans each have to respond to what the other last did, which may make a kind of perverse political sense, but which inevitably serves to drive Americans further away from their public institutions. The latest example is in the ugly fight Senate Democrats waged to block the nomination of a Mississippi judge to an appellate court seat. On a straight 10-9 party line vote, the Senate Judiciary Committee rejected the nomination of Charles Pickering Sr. The Democrats' main complaint is that as a law student in 1959 -- 1959! -- Pickering wrote an article suggesting ways to strengthen Mississippi's ban on interracial marriages.

If that retrograde thinking represented Pickering today, it would be more than enough to torpedo his nomination, but it does not. In 1967, Pickering testified against Ku Klux Klan imperial wizard Samuel Bowers, charged with murdering civil rights worker Vernon Dahmer. Charles Evers, brother of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, supported Pickering's nomination, regardless of Pickering's views of 43 years ago. "Whatever he was then, he's not that now," said Evers. What is more, these issues were already vetted in 1990, when the Senate unanimously approved Pickering for a district court judgeship.

But this is just the latest of the Senate's judicial wars. When Bill Clinton was president and Republicans held the Senate, scores of nominations were held hostage, and for the most political of reasons: If they could wait out Clinton, a Republican president might send nominees more to their liking.

One of those was Ronnie White, the first black justice of the Missouri Supreme Court, whose nomination to the federal bench was sabotaged by then Sen. John Ashcroft, now President Bush's attorney general. Democrats may well feel that to treat Bush's nominees kindly would be to reward that behavior. Republicans, of course, were already incensed over Democrats' treatment of Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas and, before him, Robert Bork.

At some point, though, the sniping has to stop. But judging from Senate behavior, that will only be marginally easier than persuading the Palestinians and Israelis to lay down their arms. Complicating that goal is the unavoidable fact that there is an appropriate role for politics in the nomination and confirmation of judicial nominees.

Unlike cabinet secretaries, federal judges serve for life. Furthermore, the Founding Fathers saw fit to require approval of judicial nominees by the Senate, where politics is, by design, the coin of the realm. Consideration of how a nominee would evaluate the law on signature issues, from abortion to civil rights, is not inappropriate.

But that is far different from refusing to vote on nominees or even to give them a hearing, or smearing them with falsehoods or flogging them with the scraps of a publicly repudiated past. That has been the tarnished coin of the Senate's realm for 15 years, and both sides are guilty. Both sides need, at last, to grow up.

Whoever Doesn't Agree With You Must Be Racist

Ken Mcelroy
The Daily News of Los Angeles
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

THE nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals was scuttled by the Senate Judiciary Committee last week on a 10 to 9 party line vote.

Pickering is a federal district court judge in Mississippi, confirmed by the Senate for that position in 1990.

The Democrats on the committee, working in conjunction with various left-wing interest groups, set out to derail Pickering's nomination, because he doesn't fit with their desire that all judges be liberal activists.

The result has been, in what has become typical Democratic style, a smear campaign to promote wholly partisan ends. The charge of racism has become the new McCarthyism in America, and this is just one illustration. Anyone who does not toe the left's party line, especially on issues of race, will be branded a racist, a bigot, or "racially insensitive" by the Democrats.

They tried to derail the confirmation of John Ashcroft employing the same tactics. They even played the race card against George W. Bush in the 2000 election. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People aired a television ad in Texas that practically accused Bush of lynching James Byrd. It was a nasty smear, but effective, so the Democrats used it.

They'll keep playing the race card as long as it works, as long as it goes largely unanswered. And that's a big part of the problem - Republicans give tepid response to these kinds of attacks, rather than responding to them forcefully.

Who would put up with false accusations of spousal abuse or being a drunk? But a false charge of racism usually brings very little protest by the target of the smear or by his supporters. The fear is that the charge will spread. If you defend an accused racist, you must be one, too. But this is like ignoring when the school bully picks on someone else in hopes he won't come after you. The only way to stop a wrong is to oppose it.

The racial fear-mongering strategy is terribly divisive; it's bad for our country. But, apparently, what's good for American society isn't at the top of the Democratic Party agenda. Winning at any cost to maintain power is the priority.

NAACP Chairman Julian Bond joined in the attack, accusing Pickering of lying during his 1990 Senate confirmation hearing about his association with the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission, a body that was formed in the 1950s to help maintain segregation in the South.

This was merely a smear tactic, an attempt at guilt by association. The "connection" between Pickering and the Sovereignty Commission was based on a single phone call from Pickering to a commission staffer relating to a local labor dispute in 1972. If you're a Republican, and you've ever even met a racist, then you might as well be wearing a Klan hood.

This is the same Julian Bond who compared the Bush administration to the Taliban in several speeches last year. He's not one to shy away from outrageous rhetoric.

Several years ago, Rep. Charles Rangel of New York compared Republicans in Congress to the Ku Klux Klan simply because they wanted to cut taxes. After election 2000, Jesse Jackson was in Florida comparing Republicans to Nazis. Three days before the election, Al Gore told a largely black audience that when he heard someone like Bush say they were a "strict constructionist" of the Constitution, he was reminded of a time when blacks were considered three-fifths of a person.

This type of contemptible slander is common left-wing rhetoric, and it can be expected to persist until they stop getting away with it. There must be a political price for engaging in this kind of "politics of personal destruction" or it will continue.

The Republicans have promised payback for the defeat of Pickering, but there is little they can do with Democrats in control of the Senate. The nomination of Pickering fell victim to the Democratic smear campaign. The Republicans mounted a defense, but much too late to have any effect. And the Democrats' success means the slanders will continue.

It's long past due for Republicans and others who oppose these race- baiting smear campaigns to denounce the racial demagogues in the strongest possible terms. What are they going to do, call you a racist? They've already played that card.

Hollings Had Fortitude To Support Pickering

The State (Columbia, SC)
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

The very qualified Judge Charles Pickering was the target of a brutal and unfair smear campaign by far left special interest groups who want activist liberal judges who write law instead of conservative judges who just interpret the law. The Democratic majority on the Judiciary Committee are sycophantic poltroons in thrall to these liberal extremists, and so they voted down Judge Pickering appointment to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. Only two Democrats in the entire Senate had the moral fortitude and Christian compassion to support Charles Pickering. One is Ernest Hollings. I am a conservative Republican, so I cannot promise I will ever vote for Sen. Hollings, but his brave and noble stance on this matter means that his future GOP opponent had better be a man or woman of equal merit and mettle or I may not vote against our junior senator.

Must Presidential Nominee Be Reduced to Blank Slates?

Dan Thomasson
The Sun Herald (Biloxi, MS)
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

Judge Clement Haynesworth, whose nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court was narrowly defeated in the Senate 30 years ago, wrote a respected journalist that, after reading in the national press about himself he had told his wife, "I don't think I would vote for this fellow, either."

The grim humor of the South Carolina jurist, who had a long and distinguished career on the federal circuit court bench, clearly reflected the anguish of a nominee to high federal office unwittingly caught up in the partisan warfare that too often results from a White House controlled by one party and a Senate by another. It can be and frequently is a process outrageously demeaning and destructive to the nominee, whose every utterance or written word nearly from the cradle on is parsed by special interests and lawmakers who could never meet the same standards.

Ultimately, the real victim is the public, Americans who only want responsible actions from the best officials, many of whom are unfairly denied the opportunity to serve because of picayune differences with partisans and ideologues whose own motives range from self service to getting even for the denial of one of their own candidates for office. What is worse, it slows the business of government dramatically, leaving important jobs and vacancies unfilled in both the administrative and judicial branches. The latest example of this, of course, has been the Senate Judiciary Committee's purely partisan vote to deny Federal District Judge Charles Pickering's elevation to the circuit court of appeals on such grounds as racial insensitivity and injecting his own opinion into accepted law. The insensitivity charge rose from his writing as a student more than 40 years ago about how to strengthen Mississippi's laws against interracial marriage. Since then, he has shown himself on more than one occasion to be a defender of civil rights, garnering the support of important African-American civil rights leaders from his Deep South state.

As for his own views of accepted law, cited as a way of challenging his competence for a job at the higher judicial level, it seems to have been an assessment to give the committee's Democrats a legitimate reason for voting not to send his nomination to the full Senate.

Now the "tit for tat" begins in earnest. And the result is likely to be a completely unproductive year of denials and counter-denials in the acrimonious confirmation process, particularly as it pertains to the judiciary and President Bush's right to fill not only a long list of vacancies in the lower courts but potentially at least one seat on the Supreme Court with nominees who agree with him philosophically.

Senate Republican leader Trent Lott has made it clear he will now repay the "injustice" done to his fellow Mississippian by doing the same to candidates for confirmation proposed by Democrats.

While Lott's anger is understandable, it certainly does nothing to improve the situation, which, he must surely understand, has come about in part because of his own troops' consistent denial of nominees for the federal bench proposed by President Bill Clinton when Republicans controlled the Senate. Well, so much for the bipartisanship of the days following Sept. 11. But then, no one really expected the spirit of political equanimity to apply to domestic issues, especially during an election year.

The misuse of the advise-and-consent process has been going on since the founding of the Republic. The modern era of revenge and special-interest sabotage, however, seems to have stemmed from the late '60s, when Senate Republicans managed to derail Justice Abraham Fortas' elevation to chief justice of the United States. What followed was a bloodbath that saw Richard Nixon's first two nominations, including Haynesworth, rejected. The process hit a new low with the defeat of Judge Robert Bork's nomination to the high court and the ludicrous Judiciary Committee hearings into allegations of sexual harassment against nominee Clarence Thomas, which may have set the standard for tastelessness.

For a time, it has seemed the only real way to win swift confirmation was to bring nothing whatsoever to the table -- a clean slate devoid of any controversial writing or opinion or real-life experience that might give the special interests a wedge. Is it too much to hope that the "children" who run the Senate on both sides of the aisle relent and consider only substantive matters? Probably. But until they do, good nominees are going to be hard to find.

The Issue Was Always Politics, Never Pickering

The Sun Herald (Biloxi, MS)
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

What goes around comes around.

That's the message in the backrooms of Washington politics as Democrats celebrate the rejection of Charles Pickering, President George Bush's nomination to a seat on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

This was an interesting political battle, with much nuance and meaning on several fronts.

First there was the payback thing. To Democrats, the defeat of Judge Pickering, a conservative federal judge from Laurel, was retribution for similar defeats suffered by their nominees when President Clinton's choices were axed by a Republican majority. Revenge, by any other name in the game of politics, how sweet it is.

Then there is the Lott factor. Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, Judge Pickering's close friend and political godfather in the nomination, may not be the most popular fellow among Democrats. Let's just go ahead and say it, they really don't like the junior senator from Mississippi, so there was no crisis of conscience suffered by any of the 10 Democrats on the Senate Judiciary in laying the wood to Lott's man.

(We digress to invoke one name: Senator Jim Jeffords, formerly a Republican, whose party switch in May of last year changed everything. Whereas, before that, Republicans controlled the deal, suddenly it was the folks with the big "D" beside their names calling the shots. Had Jeffords stayed put, this squabble would have ended differently.)

Which brings us to the real point of this editorial about partisan politics: They're baaacckk.

There actually did seem to be a moment following the events of Sept. 11 when politicians briefly acted more as Americans than as Democrats and Republicans, but whatever comity did exist has quickly eroded to the point where the gloves are off and both parties are threatening nuclear retaliation of the political sort.

The Democrats cloaked their argument in the grand rhetoric of the higher philosophical kind. This is about principle, they professed. The man was a racist, they claimed. His arch-conservative view of the law was extreme, and far from the mainstream, they asserted.

Yes, he is conservative. No, he is not a racist. But he was the president's nominee, and he was, in fact, legally, morally and ethically qualified. One is constrained to believe the Democrats on this committee would not have confirmed any nominee unless he was a Democrat, or at least Democrat-like in his or her views.

On the other hand, you would have to believe all of the Republicans would have rubber-stamped the nominee, regardless of qualifications.

That is the nature of partisanship. Members of parties are bound to toe the party line.

Were John Kennedy alive and looking for a next chapter in his "Profiles in Courage," he would not have discovered a viable candidate. These were party people, pure and simple. The outcome was just as it was preordained: 10-9. Ten Democrats against, nine Republicans for. End of game.

So where does this go from here? Downhill. Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., the Senate Majority Leader, is perhaps his party's best take-no-prisoners field general since Tip O'Neill when he was Speaker of the House.

Daschle's fine hand was apparent in all of this, and now he is ready to lead his campaign-finance offensive, which promises to be a protracted donnybrook.

The Republicans' biggest threat to date is a spiteful promise to block one of Daschle's aides from a seat on the Federal Communications Commission.

If anything good can come of this political games- manship, it might be that a stalemate will result in absolutely nothing being accomplished in Washington, which a great many taxpayers will applaud.

But an even bigger "if" is this one: If the parties of both parts, the Democrats or Republicans, wonder why so many Americans are turned off by politics, and why so few are voting these days, they should look no further than their own actions. For the fault, Brutus, lies in their own deeds.

Unfortunately, a good and honorable man was sacrificed in this bloody arena of partisan politics.

Sen. Lott's Retribution

The Washington Post
March 19, 2002, Tuesday

JUDGING FROM the way Trent Lott lashed out following the Judiciary Committee's rejection of his friend and fellow Mississippian, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, as a nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, it may be, as they say in the helping professions, that the senator has some anger issues to address. Within hours of Judge Pickering's party-line defeat, Sen. Lott moved to block a $ 1.5 million request by the committee to conduct a probe related to Sept. 11 miscues, obstructed the nomination of an aide to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle to the Federal Communications Commission, and signaled that there may be more parliamentary choke points where those came from: "You'll see it in a lot of ways and in a lot of days," warned Sen. Lott. He is clearly behaving as a victim done wrong. That is a worrisome mind-set because, as minority leader, Mr. Lott's current impulsive, negative method of dealing with his anger could disrupt the Senate's important work. This isn't to say Mr. Lott doesn't have some cause to be a bit touchy these days. The past 10 months haven't been exactly peachy. The Pickering debacle is only the latest in a string of personal reversals that could leave even the most self-confident legislator feeling a bit unappreciated. First of all, last May Jim Jeffords, Mr. Lott's good friend and a fellow crooner in the "Singing Senators" quartet, defected from the Republican Party, giving Democrats a majority and costing Mr. Lott the best job he ever had as the Senate's powerful leader. Next, Sen. Lott had to watch as his Mississippi friend and ally, Curt Hebert, resigned from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission because of disagreements with the Bush administration's stance on energy deregulation. That was followed by the recent ouster of Mike Parker, another Trent Lott friend and Mississippian, as civilian head of the Army Corps of Engineers. Now, on the heels of Mr. Parker's forced resignation, the Senate's top Republican finds himself unable even to deliver the goods for a longtime friend and a home state judge who probably would not have been nominated by President Bush were it not for Sen. Lott's sponsorship and strong backing. Judge Pickering, a jurist of slim talents, should have been refused a seat on the appeals court. But his rejection must be especially hard for Sen. Lott to swallow.

Is that cause, however, for a senior senator to become passive- (or not-so-passive-) aggressive, striking out at his perceived enemies indirectly through acts of petty destructiveness? Sen. Lott's irrational response is only going to escalate an already unhealthy political climate in the Senate.

yearly deficit was in 1997. The Bush administration blames recession and the costs of the war on terrorism. Democrats point to the 10-year, $ 1.35 trillion tax cut President Bush pushed through Congress last year.

Washington In Brief

The Washington Post
March 21, 2002, Thursday

The Bush administration said yesterday it would seek $ 750 million in emergency funding to aid dislocated workers affected by the recession. The plan is part of a $ 25 billion supplemental budget proposal to fund the war on terrorism that likely will be released today.

The largest part of the plan -- $ 550 million -- would go to replenish the National Emergency Grant program administered by the Labor Department, which responds to requests from states and localities. Congress did not act on an administration proposal to boost the program as part of the recently passed economic stimulus bill; some had faulted the plan because the grants are not based on a formula, meaning some states could suffer depending on the timing of the applications. The administration is also seeking $ 110 million that had been rescinded from a state dislocated workers fund, $ 50 million for a job training initiative and $ 40 million to create jobs in communities hit by large plant closures.

Republicans shut down two Senate committees that were considering Enron-related legislation, retaliating against Democrats who voted down a federal appeals court nominee.

"Senate Republicans strongly believe that we should have an understanding on when President Bush's circuit court nominees, many of whom have been languishing in the Judiciary Committee for almost a year, will get hearings and be treated fairly," said Ron Bonjean, a spokesman for Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.).

Lott objected to Senate committee hearings running more than two hours. A little-used rule limits meetings to two hours after the Senate convenes unless all senators agree to an extension. Lott would not, halting two Democratic-controlled committees: Governmental Affairs, and Health, Education, Labor and Pensions.

The Judiciary Committee last week voted down U.S. Appeals Court nominee Charles Pickering, a friend of Lott's. Since then, the GOP has threatened payback to the Democratic majority by slowing down Senate proceedings and blocking Democratic nominees.

Loyola brushes off protests, lets NOW leader speak

The senator should do some deep breathing and consider the possibility that no one is out to get him, that Mississippi can do better than Judge Pickering, and that even as minority leader, he's still got a job that keeps him out of the sun.

Federal Society Speech Supports The Case Against Judge Smith

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
March 21, 2002 Thursday

The March 13 editorial "Confirm Judge D. Brooks Smith" recognized that Judge Smith's 1993 Federalist Society speech "ridiculed the suggestion by [Violence Against Women Act] advocates that Congress could legislate in this area because 'gender-motivated violence has a substantial or adverse effect on interstate commerce,' which Congress is empowered to regulate." Unfortunately, you misleadingly conclude that "the U.S. Supreme Court agreed" with Judge Smith. In fact, as U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, explained at a hearing on Judge Smith's nomination to the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the Supreme Court struck down only the civil remedy portion of the act. Sen. Hatch said he "couldn't disagree more" with the speech's characterization of the act, that he is "firmly convinced that there is nothing unconstitutional in the remainder of the act," including its criminal provisions, and that Judge Smith's criticisms misconstrue "the nature and scope of the act."

These comments are particularly telling coming from Sen. Hatch, who supports Judge Smith's nomination to a lifetime appeals court seat. Judge Smith's speech bolsters the very serious concerns expressed by Earthjustice and 26 other national environmental, women's rights and disability rights groups that his rulings show a disturbing pattern of bias in favor of powerful interests and disregard for the rights and needs of ordinary Americans.

Judge Smith's call to roll back congressional authority does distinguish, as the editorial notes, "between federal civil rights legislation, which was necessitated by the complicity of Southern states in institutionalized racial discrimination, and the Violence Against Women Act." It is hard to see, however, how this "institutionalized racial discrimination" exception would preserve many federal safeguards, from the Americans With Disabilities Act to many environmental laws.

Driving Mr. Daschle

David N. Bossie
March 21, 2002, Thursday

REV_00336455

Bill Janklow, Republican governor of South Dakota, just signed into law a bill forbidding Tom Daschle from running simultaneously for president and Senate re-election in 2004. Maybe the people of South Dakota, unlike some in Washington ,recognize the ambition driving Mr. Daschle. After spending a quarter of a century in Congress, the Senate majority leader has decided that 2004 will be his year. Mr. Daschle wants to be president. Mr. Daschle's recent criticism of President Bush's conduct of the war against terror tipped off his burning White House ambition. He had no alternative policy to offer Mr. Bush. There are no war blunders or disasters for Mr. Daschle to criticize .He even repudiated his own posturing when polls indicated it was not playing well in Peoria. The Senate majority leader was simply showing his fellow Democrats that he could stand up to an enormously popular Republican president. The soft-spokenSouth Dakotan's words and actions indicate a desire to position himself as the Democrat's challenger to Mr. Bush in two years. Mr. Daschle presents his criticism of Mr. Bush in a calm yet calculating manner. More in sorrow than in anger, he worried aloud on recent Sunday talk shows about how the Bush administration intended to set up a "secret" government and hadn't told him the plans. He then whined that Mr. Bush wasn't notifying him in advance of every step he was taking in the war. What's going on in those coffee klatsches he's having every week at the White House? Mr. Daschle expressed to the media, of course,his doubt about the administration's militant rhetoric toward America's enemies. Was it wise to refer to Iraq, Iran and North Korea as "the axis of evil?" Were the Bush administration's war on terror aims too ambitious and open-ended? Mr. Daschle's political play for self-promotion failed miserably, just as his speech on the economy did a month ago. Seven brave American soldiers were killed in Afghanistan soon after his Sunday remarks. Mr. Daschle hastily reversed himself on Monday: "As we look at our circumstances today, I think there is no question that there is strong support for the troops and for the president's leadership." Columnist Michael Kelly, a hard-bitten former combat correspondent, observed that it was "perfectly fine" for Mr. Daschle "to fret and worry and carp on Sunday television. It is just not serious." Mr. Daschle realized quickly that being perceived as anti-American during a war was not in his political best interest. He was simply pushing the envelope to find the Bush administration's soft spots and reminding everybody that Mr. Daschle was still the big Democrat on the political campus.Wartime constrains Mr. Daschle from being too partisan on foreign policy. Unless a disaster like Vietnam occurs, the former Air Force veteran must defer to a wartime president. However, domestic policy offers many opportunities to remind liberal special interest groups of his anti-Bush leadership. Leftist special- interest groups, led by NOW and NARAL, demand that Mr. Daschle aggressively fight Mr. Bush's picks to the federal bench. The smearing of Charles Pickering, a fine federal district judge, is about Mr. Daschle positioning himself for the presidential nomination in 2004. It does not matter to the left that the Democrat-controlled Senate unanimously confirmed Judge Pickering back in 1990. It does not matter that Judge Pickering compiled a fine record as a judge and got the approval of the beloved American Bar Association. This is about politics. Mr. Daschle shoots down Judge Pickering in his calm, calculating and low-key way and quietly bottles up the nominations of other judicial nominations to prevent them from even getting a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. By skillfully doing the left's bidding on judges, Mr. Daschle can secure their support for his presidential run. Mr. Daschle's self-promoting agenda is now set on undermining Mr. Bush's economic policies. He brilliantly obstructed and weakened Mr. Bush's financial stimulus package by using delaying tactics and the amendment process. When Mr. Bush demanded quick action to stimulate the American economy out of a recession, Mr. Daschle demanded that Mr. Bush revoke the 2001 tax cuts enacted with the help of 10 Democratic senators. He continues to hold up the energy bill despite the pleas from the American people and the opportunity to reduce our dependency on Middle East oil. With an estimated 750,000 new jobs that would be created by the bill, the economy might fully recover — which would not fit well into the Democrats plans for 2002 or 2004. Pushed by the Sierra Club and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, Mr. Daschle and the Democrats believe recession is the issue to run on in the fall 2002 congressional elections. If Mr. Daschle attacks Mr. Bush with little backlash, he can position himself properly for the 2004 primary season, which begins in just 655 days. If the 2002 fall elections go as Mr. Daschle hopes, Democrats will add to their slim one-vote lead in the Senate and take back the House of Representatives. Democratic Party regulars will then join with left-wing special interest groups in hailing the brilliant Senate majority leader. And if the war on terror starts to go badly, who will be better positioned to lead the Democrats to victory in 2004 than Tom Daschle? Of course, Americans may be worse off if Mr. Daschle's methods work, but that rarely factors in to the ambition of a politician. Mr. Daschle must be made to pay the political price as he tries to garner support from the left. Maybe it's time for Republicans in Washington to recognize Mr. Daschle's political ambition.

Interview With Rep. Chip Pickering

Fox News Network
SHOW: FOX HANNITY & COLMES
March 20, 2002 Wednesday

HANNITY: As we continue on HANNITY & COLMES: While Senate Democrats were working to defeat the nomination of Charles Pickering over the last several weeks, was there a back-room offer made to his son?

Fox News has reported that, in the midst of his father's confirmation battle, Mississippi Congressman Chip Pickering was offered a deal to save his father's nomination by agreeing to have his congressional district redrawn in favor of Democratic votes.

Joining us now to comment on the reported deal and his father's apparent defeat is Mississippi Republican Congressman Chip Pickering. Chip, welcome aboard. How are you?

REP. CHIP PICKERING (R), MISSISSIPPI: Sean, good to be with you.

HANNITY: I agree with Zell Miller, Democrat of Georgia, a senator, when he says a good and brave man has been hurt and that is what is most tragic here.

PICKERING: An honorable man had to go through a dishonorable process. And it was a difficult situation for our family to watch, because we know my father's good record, his good heart.

HANNITY: Sure.

PICKERING: And the people back home in Mississippi, black, white, Republican, Democrat, have rallied to his support. And that encouragement has given him strength.

His spirits are still high. And he does hope that good will come from this process, that we can see a reform, and we can see the Senate come back to a process that will be fair to nominees, that will give them the time certain...

HANNITY: Don't count on it.

PICKERING: I'm afraid that we're seeing the Senate go...

HANNITY: You know, what's so outrageous about this, in the Clinton years, not one time did they defeat it in committee and not allow it to go to the Senate floor, not one Clinton nominee, not one. And this is what -- this is the way they play the game.

I want to go back to this Fox News report that, in the midst of this confirmation battle, a deal was offered you. Tell us about that.

PICKERING: You know, it's one of the worst examples of politics. And it was one of the extort- and smear-type of scheme where they thought that, if they created the opposition to my father, engaged in character assassination, showed that they could block his confirmation, that they could then leverage that in the redistricting that was going on in Mississippi.

There was a federal court and a state court plan, pending Justice Department approval. And they thought that they could offer a deal that, if we withdrew the appeal from the state court, allow the plan to go forward and be approved by the Justice Department, then they would let my father's confirmation go forward. And it is one of the sickest, saddest examples of what can happen in the political process.

COLMES: Congressman, It's Alan. Good to have you on the program. Thank you for doing it tonight.

PICKERING: Alan, thank you.

COLMES: Where did this originate? One report said that a lobbyist named Prince Boland (ph), a former aide to Trent Lott, was the intermediary who contacted you about this. Was this

REV_00336458

Republican or Democrat originated, the idea of this deal?

PICKERING: You know, whether it was originated from any of the members, it came from a consultant to both Congressman Shows and Congressman Thompson named Richard Buckman (ph). And Prince Boland was simply the messenger of what they had offered in this situation. We thought it was very sleazy, unethical. And we paid no attention to it. And it went no farther than that.

COLMES: I know you. I sat next to you at dinner last year. I told your aide you stole my mashed potatoes. You owed us. You had to come on the program.

But, look, I'm sure your father is a good guy. The people of Mississippi say he is. My issue is that to say that only Democrats do this, when Republicans played the same game when Bill Clinton was president, I think is disingenuous. Didn't Arlen Specter say, pretty much, that both parties do it?

PICKERING: Unfortunately, we've seen a confirmation process over the last two decades, really, past administration and currently with my father, continue to degrade. "The Washington Post" has said that this is the degradation of the confirmation process. It doesn't have to get nasty. You don't have to engage in character assassination.

And, hopefully, there will be a statesman in the Senate who will step back and say we have got to reform the process. We have to quit smearing good people and engage in these type of tactics. We need to look at the qualifications, look at the record, and give the full Senate, not just 10 members on the committee, but the full Senate, as the Constitution requires, an up-or-down vote on each of these nominations.

HANNITY: When we get back, we'll feel out Chip and find out how he feels about how the White House handled all of this.

And, remember, by the way, you can log on to FoxNews.com and you can become a Fox News Channel, Alan Colmes fan.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

COLMES: Congressman, Trent Lott is saying he is going to block $1.5 million from the judiciary to retaliate for the Democrats not approving of your father. And he's also not going to approve of an FCC nomination, which would be an aide to Tom Daschle who would like that job. Do you approve of that retaliatory measure, or those measures? Do you approve of that?

PICKERING: You know, Senator Lott and the Senate Republicans are trying to fight for principle to give each judicial nominee a fair shot, a full Senate vote, that we'll have a time certain when other confirmations will come before the committee, get a hearing, get to the floor.

And I think, unfortunately, because of the unfair treatment that we've seen for my father, the

Republicans are trying to do everything they can to fight out of principle to get a fair vote for the president's nominees.

HANNITY: He deserves a fair vote, because he would have been confirmed. And this is what the Democrats knew. And that is what their strategy was about.

Zell Miller, who, again, said great things about your dad, and he's a Democrat -- I think John Breaux of Louisiana certainly would have voted for him. But he said: "The political repercussions are too obvious to ignore. Politically, this action may well elect a Republican governor in Mississippi and will make it even more difficult for Democratic candidates to be successful in the South."

Don't you think it's time for Zell to switch and become a Republican?

(LAUGHTER)

PICKERING: Yes, we would love to have Zell come over. We would welcome him. And then my father's nomination could quickly go through the Senate.

HANNITY: Very much so. But it has got to hurt, so we wish your dad well.

Do you want the president to keep fighting?

PICKERING: I do. And he has not withdrawn it. The nomination is still pending before the Senate. And if not, sometime between now and November, when the Republicans take the majority back, he will still have a chance to go through confirmation and go through the full Senate.

COLMES: Congressman, we've got to go. I was just kidding about the mashed potatoes.

Thank you very much for being here tonight.

PICKERING: Alan, thank you. Sean, it's good to be with you.

COLMES: That's all the time we have for tonight.

Fox News Network
SHOW: FOX SPECIAL REPORT WITH BRIT HUME
March 19, 2002 Tuesday

HUME: And now the most interesting two minutes in television, the latest from the "Wartime Grapevine." Senate judiciary chairman Patrick Leahy wants a Justice Department investigation of whether former independent counsel Robert Ray, who's running for the Senate in New Jersey, engaged in improper political activities while he was still at his old job.

While Ray never commented publicly on any political ambitions while he was still the independent counsel, he did reportedly meet with Republican Party officials in New Jersey and party fund-raisers. Leahy wrote to Attorney General Ashcroft that -- quote -- "Ray's choice of career is of no concern, but the timing of his choice is." The latest from the world of American education is that a 16-year-old high school junior in the Fort Worth, Texas suburb of Hurst is fighting his expulsion from school because a bread knife was found in the back of his pickup truck. The student explained that the day before they had used the truck to take some of his ailing grandmother's belongings, including some kitchen ware, to the Goodwill for donation.

The knife, it seems, fell out of one of the boxes, unbeknownst to the boy, and was spotted by school officials the next day. After a hearing, the boy was expelled. Officials said they had no choice under the school's zero tolerance policy for possession of a weapon.

The Arabic translation of Hitler's anti-Semitic manifesto, "Mein Kampf," which has been a bestseller in the Palestinian territories for some time, has begun to turn up in book stores in London, where copies are said to be selling well. The "London Telegraph" quotes a local bookstore clerk in an area heavily populated by Arabs as saying, -- quote -- "people are interested in it."

The "Telegraph" notes that the Bavarian state government in Germany, which holds the book's copyright, has tried to stop its publication around the world. But the Arabic version, which, as you saw, has a picture of Hitler and a swastika on its cover, became the sixth-best selling book in areas controlled by the Palestinian Authority in the Mideast.

And CBS news anchor Dan Rather is worried that what he calls patriotic spin may adversely affect American journalists. He told an audience in Houston Monday that such spin -- quote -- "is not anything explicit but nonetheless sends this message: Don't examine this. Don't grouse. Don't ask tough questions -- don't you know we're in a war?" End quote.

Rather said such pressures -- quote -- "can be the hardest for all of us to deal with," end quote.

The Democrats dismissed President Bush's call to elevate Judge Charles Pickering to the appellate bench. Republicans in the Senate promised political revenge. The GOP viewed Pickering as a qualified candidate who was dismissed only because of political differences. And now Republicans seem to be trying to show Democrats both parties can play that game. Chief political correspondent Carl Cameron has the story.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

CARL CAMERON, FOX NEWS CORRESPONDENT (voice-over): Republican reprisals for the Democrats' defeat of one of President Bush's judicial nominations have begun to take their toll on the Senate and Democratic leader Tom Daschle.

SEN. TOM DASCHLE (D-SD), MAJORITY LEADER: When are they going to quit obstructing?

CAMERON: Republicans say not anytime soon. When Democrats killed the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering on a straight party line vote last week, the GOP promised payback. So far, GOP leader Trent Lott has single- handedly stuck it to Senate Democrats on several fronts.

The latest, Lott is holding up an amendment to the energy bill by judiciary committee Democrat, Dianne Feinstein. Lott is attaching an unrelated measure that demands fair action on the president's judicial picks. And Daschle has noticed.

DASCHLE: They're obstructing now, with regard to completion of the energy bill.

CAMERON: Lott took it somewhat personally when the nomination of Pickering, his friend of 40 years, was defeated. So Lott put a hold on Daschle's handpicked nominee for the FCC. And the Democrat is now complaining about gridlock.

DASCHLE: They're obstructing nominations. They may be obstructing campaign finance reform continually, as we have seen them do over the last several weeks.

CAMERON: On the contrary, GOP leaders say they are now trying to get campaign finance reform passed right away. Not because they particularly support the measure, but because they know they cannot defeat it, and just want to get it over with.

SEN. MITCH MCCONNELL (R), KENTUCKY: As someone who has fought for many years to defeat this bill, it is clear that that position is not going to prevail.

SEN. TRENT LOTT (R-MS), MINORITY LEADER: I believe that it's ready. I think it's time that we bring this to conclusion.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

CAMERON: Lott may be ready to bring campaign finance reform to a conclusion, perhaps as soon as Wednesday, but not on much else. In fact, Republican leadership sources say they have a whole other round of obstructionist tactics ready to launch any day now.

And the GOP has even begun to use rhetoric borrowed from the Pentagon on the war on terrorism, warning Americans that they need to be patient, that this is not likely to end anytime soon, and that it could be a long and protracted battle to ensure that they get what they call prompt and fair treatment of the president's judicial nominations -- Brit.

HUME: Carl Cameron, thank you very much.

REV_00336462

HUME: The analytical observations now of Fred Barnes, executive editor of "The Weekly Standard," Mort Kondracke, executive editor of "Roll Call" and Mara Liasson, national political correspondent of National Public Radio, Fox News contractors, all.

As you heard in Carl Cameron's report, the squabbling and battling in the U.S. Senate, the fallout from the Judge Pickering nomination defeat is not over. And what the Republicans are worried about, and what they're trying to establish by fighting back, as they see it, is future nominations. And among those future nominations are 29 that have been made to the U.S. Courts of Appeals, including one of this man to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. He is Miguel Estrada. He is an attorney here in Washington. He's argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court. He came to the U.S. as a non-English speaking immigrant from Honduras at the age of 17.

He had a picturesque story. He became editor of the "Harvard Law Review," graduated Harvard law school with honors. Clerk for Justice Kennedy, was an assistant solicitor general under President Clinton for five years. And now he's nominated to be on this appellate court. And the feeling about him is that he's a particularly crucial nominee, Mort, because...

MORT KONDRACKE, "ROLL CALL": Well, because he's a young Hispanic, and if he's on the D.C. Circuit Court, that is a stepping stone to the U.S. Supreme Court. And when this president has a Supreme Court nomination to make at some point in the future, he might be a candidate for it.

HUME: And then he would then be the first Hispanic ever nominated.

KONDRACKE: Well, there are others.

(CROSSTALK)

KONDRACKE: The White House council...

HUME: If he were named, he would be the first, right?

MARA LIASSON, NATIONAL PUBLIC RADIO: Yes.

KONDRACKE: He would be. But one would think that he would need a little seasoning time, you know, on the D.C. Circuit, before he would go up. I would think he might be the second after Alberto Gonzalez, who's the White House counsel.

HUME: Now, he was nominated when the president nominated a bunch of these judges last spring. So far, he hasn't had a hearing.

KONDRACKE: Right. And what the Democrats apparently plan to do is to answer the president's objections that they're creating a vacancy crisis on the courts by approving everybody who's non-controversial and showing that they're busy, and taking all of the conservatives and putting them to the back of the line.

HUME: Estrada...

(CROSSTALK)

KONDRACKE: Estrada being one of them. And so they can just say, well, we ran out of time. But you know, after this election, I think this election will determine whether the November elections -- determine whether he -- if the Senate is Republican, then they'll all get...

(CROSSTALK)

HUME: If it goes ahead.

(CROSSTALK)

LIASSON: If the Senate changes hands, then Miguel Estrada is going to be a quick confirmation. But I do think it's going to be a little bit harder for the Democrats to -- delay is one thing, but to outright oppose him. He's someone who's young, he is Hispanic. And he hasn't been on the bench before, so he doesn't have a long paper trail. And I think it's going to be tougher for the Democrats to oppose this nominee.

FRED BARNES, "WEEKLY STANDARD": There is a way to do it, though. And the way to do it is, just not call it up. See, if Miguel Estrada comes and has a hearing, and then it would have to come to a vote in the committee, it would be very difficult for senators like Dianne Feinstein of California and Dick Durbin of Illinois -- states that have large Hispanic populations -- it would be very difficult for them to vote against him. So my guess is they're just going to try to avoid, as long as possible, giving him a hearing.

Now, at one point, I believe the chairman of the committee, Pat Leahy, said he'll give people like Estrada a hearing this year. But I don't think he's ever promised Estrada in particular would get a hearing this year.

HUME: And he seems to evoke the most fear because what, he's the most appealing, he has a picturesque story. He's not the only Hispanic.

BARNES: Yeah, but here's what they don't like. They don't like nominees for the appeals court who are young, bright and conservative. And they particularly don't like them if they're young, bright, conservative and Latino. And he qualifies on all four counts in the way, really, none of the other nominees do, Hispanic or not.

Brett Martel
The Associated Press
March 21, 2002, Thursday

Clashing with key Catholic principles upon which her alma mater was founded, the president of the National Organization of Women has returned to Loyola University for several days of appearances.

University officials have not tried to defend Kim Gandy's support of abortion rights, but also have declined to withdraw their invitation in the face of sharp criticism from religious leaders, a conservative congressman and a $1 million donor.

About 50 anti-abortion protesters stood behind barricades across from the street from the building where Gandy delivered her first talk Wednesday night. Inside, law school officials presented Gandy with a public service award. When Gandy heard her visit was opposed by local real estate developer Joe Canizaro, who has pledged $1 million to Loyola, "I began to think about how much everything revolves around money and power."

"Loyola showed true courage by allowing me to speak in the face of such political and financial pressure," Gandy said at a press conference before her speech.

Gandy's arrival in New Orleans coincided with a two-column ad placed in The Times-Picayune by the local chapter of Priests for Life. It read, "Shame on Loyola University," and went on to accuse Loyola of "fostering a culture of death."

It was among the latest condemnations of Loyola since the city's Roman Catholic archbishop, Alfred Hughes, said he was upset Gandy was bringing a "pro-abortion agenda" to a local Catholic university.

U.S. Rep. John Cooksey, R-Monroe, also took part in the Loyola bashing, issuing a statement saying he condemned whoever allowed her to speak at the university. He noted that a 1999 NOW resolution called for the Vatican to be thrown out of the United Nations. Gandy became NOW president in August.

Cooksey intends to run against U.S. Sen. Mary Landrieu, a New Orleans Democrat, for her senate seat when it comes up for election in November. Landrieu was supported by NOW in her first campaign.

Gandy, a north Louisiana native who graduated from Loyola law school in 1978 and worked in New Orleans for a decade, said she was surprised by the uproar her visit has caused.

"I speak at law schools and universities all over the country ... and have literally never received a reception like this," Gandy said at a news conference. "It did surprise me coming to my alma mater ... a place where I lived and worked for so many years."

REV_00336402

LIASSON: And the reason for that is, they don't like them -- a young nominee means that he has a lot of years ahead of him.

BARNES: Right.

LIASSON: And the Hispanic part -- it's not that they don't like him because he's Hispanic, but they understand that he's more appealing because he's Hispanic. And he's harder to oppose.

(CROSSTALK)

KONDRACKE: But blocking him, while in view of the fact that he's Hispanic, is also dangerous. Because you can get -- you can get a lot of political ammunition out of this you know, in the battle for the Hispanic vote, which is a crucial swing vote.

And increasingly, the idea that the Democrats are blocking the upward mobility of a bright Hispanic is just death, politically.

BARNES: Only if one person in America makes an issue out of this, and that's President Bush.

(CROSSTALK)

BARNES: He's mentioned it, but he's got to make it -- I mean, he's got to -- this is the one issue on Capitol Hill that I think he's going to have to be active in. I know he doesn't want to fight with Democrats while he's a war president. But on this one he's going to have to. And he's going to have to mention Miguel Estrada frequently.

HUME: Don't you think that the press...

BARNES: The press carries the ball for him.

HUME: ... won't they want to deal with this issue?

BARNES: Well, I'm sure there are times when the press wants to carry the ball for conservatives, I've just never noticed that ever happening.

(LAUGHTER)

LIASSON: The press shouldn't carry the ball for presidents of any persuasion. I mean, he has to get out there and fight.

BARNES: Some more than others.

LIASSON: If he wants to fight for this nominee, he should do it early.

HUME: All right. Coming up next, the Arab press is full of remarkable things about Jews and

REV_00336465

Israelis. Do leaders in those countries have an obligation to quash those sentiments? The U.S. government thinks so, and we'll talk about that next.

Interest Groups/Press Releases

REV_00336466

Gandy did not focus her lecture on abortion, but touched on the subject when she told her largely supportive audience that she feared federal appeals courts, where appointments are for life, could become too conservative under President Bush's administration.

Bush took over with 32 vacancies in federal appeals courts. If too many conservative federal judges were appointed, their rulings would weaken laws protecting the environment, civil rights, and women's reproductive rights, particularly abortion, she said.

And Bush's nominations have an advantage over many of Clinton's who were rejected because of the current war on terror, she noted.

If Americans don't scrutinize Bush's judicial nominees, "because we're afraid of being called unpatriotic if we criticize the administration ... then it will be too late."

None of the anti-abortion protesters gathered outside the law school identified themselves as Loyola students. Most appeared to be adult activists, a number of whom brought their children. One girl held a sign that said she would not be attending college at Loyola. Other signs depicted dismembered late-term fetuses, comparing abortion to the Holocaust. At least a dozen police officers monitored the protests, which were peaceful.

"If this were a debate, where we could sit around a table and discuss both sides of the issue, it would be great," said one of the protesters, Jim Garcia, 32, a student at Notre Dame Seminary in New Orleans. "But a Catholic school should not be giving someone who has fought against life, especially on abortion, an open forum."

There were no disruptions inside the law school, but many spectators were turned away because the lecture hall became too crowded.

Outside, several law students gawked at the protesters.

"Fanatics all have the same problem: their fanaticism creates an environment that's not very conducive to resolution of problems," said Matthew Kinney, 26, a second-year law student. "It actually irritates the situation more than it helps."

Loyola officials who arranged Gandy's visit said they were caught off guard by the uproar it caused.

Universities have a responsibility to expose those in their community to a variety of views, said Isabel Medina, a law school professor who helped set up Gandy's appearance.

Gandy's appearance should not be interpreted as a university-wide endorsement of her agenda, Medina said.

Members of the law faculty and the university's Women's Resource Center see Gandy as an accomplished Loyola graduate who works for women and children across a broad range of economic, family and workplace, Medina added.

Gandy was raised Presbyterian said she does not consider herself an enemy of Catholics. She pointed out that some of her mentors while she studied and worked in New Orleans were Catholic, including former Mayor Moon Landrieu, who is Mary Landrieu's father, and former Congresswoman Lindy Boggs, who also was a U.S. ambassador to Vatican.

"I think it's sad that because of my stance on one issue I'm being labeled an inherently bad person who's unfit to do good on other matters concerning women and children," Gandy said.

Senate GOP Retaliates Over Judges

AP Online
March 20, 2002 Wednesday

Republicans shut down two Senate committees that were considering Enron-related legislation Wednesday, retaliating against Democrats who voted down a federal appeals court nominee.

"Senate Republicans strongly believe that we should have an understanding on when President Bush's circuit court nominees, many of whom have been languishing in the Judiciary Committee for almost a year, will get hearings and be treated fairly," said Ron Bonjean, a spokesman for Republican Leader Trent Lott. "We will continue to call attention to this issue." Lott objected to Senate committees and hearings running more than two hours Wednesday. A little-used rule limits meetings to two hours after the Senate convenes unless all senators agree to an extension. Lott would not, halting two Democratic-controlled committees:
Governmental Affairs and Health, Education, Labor and Pensions.

The Judiciary Committee last week voted down U.S. Appeals Court nominee Charles Pickering, a friend of Lott, R-Miss. Since then, Republicans have threatened payback to the Democratic majority by slowing down Senate proceedings and blocking Democratic nominees.

A Judiciary subcommittee hearing had just concluded Wednesday before the order to close down the committees was issued, a committee spokeswoman said.

But the shutdown came before a vote could be taken in the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee on a bill that would limit employer stock in 401(k) plans. Another meeting was called for Thursday morning.

"All they're doing is delaying the inevitable," said Jim Manley, a spokesman for committee chairman Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. "We'll vote tomorrow morning to send this bill to the Senate floor for a vote."

Kennedy's bill would let employers contribute to their employees' plans with matching company stock or let workers buy the stock as an investment option, but not both. Many Enron Corp.

FYI, Rep. Chabot, Chairman of the House Subcommittee on the Con stitution, sent the attached letter to Sen. Daschle yesterday. It regards the constitutional role of the full Senate in confirming judicial nominations.

The Honorable Tom Daschle

Washington, DC 20510

March 21, 2002

The Honorable Tom Daschle
Majority Leader
United States Senate
825 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Daschle,

President Bush has asked you to allow the full Senate to vote on the nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering to a seat on the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit despite the refusal of the Senate Judiciary Committee's 10 Democratic members to vote the nomination out to the full Senate. At a March 14, 2002, press conference, you rejected the President's request because doing so, you said, would "break a 200-year-old precedent."

The precedent to which you refer is unclear. The Constitution, however, is not.

Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint ... Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States ...."

If there were any room for doubt regarding the role of the full Senate in confirming the President's judicial nominees, Alexander Hamilton, in Federalist Paper No. 76, makes clear that the President is "bound to submit the propriety of his choice to the discussion and determination of a different and independent body, and that body an entire branch of the legislature." Indeed, Hamilton elsewhere and repeatedly refers to the Senate's role in approving judicial nominees as

Majority Leader
United States Senate
825 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

involving the "whole body" of the Senate and, in Federalist Paper No. 77, as requiring the judgment of, again, "an entire branch of the legislature."

Following the committee's failure to vote out Judge Pickering's nomination to the full Senate, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy was quoted as saying "We have made the Constitution work and we made this committee work." However, granting a committee of a much larger legislative body the final decision on nominations was explicitly rejected by the Founding Fathers. For example, while the States considered ratifying the federal constitution, final approval of nominations by the governor of New York rested with a small council consisting of a handful of persons. That approach was singled out for the strongest of criticisms in Federalist Paper No. 77, in which Hamilton warned that, under such a regime, "[e]very mere council of appointment, however constituted, will be a conclave, in which cabal and intrigue will have their full scope."

Further, the Senate adopted the following resolution in 1789 for addressing presidential nominations:

> Resolved, That when nominations shall be made in writing by the President of the United States to the Senate, a future day shall be assigned, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise, for taking them into consideration .... [A]ll questions shall be put by the President of the Senate ... and the Senators shall signify their assent or dissent by answering, viva voce, ay or no.
> 1 Exec. J. 19.

This resolution, so early on in the Senate's existence, embodied the strong commitment the Senate once had to fulfill its constitutional role by bringing presidential nominations before the full body of the Senate for a vote. Modern scholarly observers have also long supported this principle. Harvard Law School Professor Laurence Tribe, for example, at page 131 of his book God Save This Honorable Court (1985) has written that "what matters most is that one hundred Senators, of diverse backgrounds and philosophies" vote on the confirmation of judicial nominees.

With the Constitution and the wisdom of the Founding Father in mind, I urge you to bring the President's judicial nominees to the floor of the Senate for a vote by the entire body.

Sincerely,

Steve Chabot

His last day is TODAY!

You are invited to join us at the Old Ebbitt Grill this afternoon, Friday, March 22, from 6-8 p.m., to congratulate Marcus on getting into Harvard Business School and abandoning us in our time of need.

When you walk in the door, go down the steps to your left. We will be in the private area called the Cabinet Room.

Hope to see everyone (who's not suppose to be in Latin America) there. Please feel free to invite anyone I may have missed. Everyone is welcome.

Interesting (at least rhetorically) and worth a read. This e-mail came from a guy on House Judiciary with whom I worked on anti-terrorism bill last fall.

FYI, Rep. Chabot, Chairman of the House Subcommittee on the Con stitution, sent the attached letter to Sen. Daschle yesterday. It regards the constitutional role of the full Senate in confirming judicial nominations.

The Honorable Tom Daschle
Majority Leader
United States Senate

March 21, 2002

The Honorable Tom Daschle
Majority Leader
United States Senate
825 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Daschle,

President Bush has asked you to allow the full Senate to vote on the nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering to a seat on the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit despite the refusal of the Senate Judiciary Committee's 10 Democratic members to vote the nomination out to the full Senate. At a March 14, 2002, press conference, you rejected the President's request because doing so, you said, would "break a 200-year-old precedent."

The precedent to which you refer is unclear. The Constitution, however, is not.

Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint ... Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States ...."

If there were any room for doubt regarding the role of the full Senate in confirming the President's judicial nominees, Alexander Hamilton, in Federalist Paper No. 76, makes clear that the President is "bound to submit the propriety of his choice to the discussion and determination of a different and independent body, and that body an entire branch of the legislature." Indeed, Hamilton elsewhere and repeatedly refers to the Senate's role in approving judicial nominees as

Majority Leader
United States Senate
825 Hart Senate Office Building

involving the "whole body" of the Senate and, in Federalist Paper No. 77, as requiring the judgment of, again, "an entire branch of the legislature."

Following the committee's failure to vote out Judge Pickering's nomination to the full Senate, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy was quoted as saying "We have made the Constitution work and we made this committee work." However, granting a committee of a much larger legislative body the final decision on nominations was explicitly rejected by the Founding Fathers. For example, while the States considered ratifying the federal constitution, final approval of nominations by the governor of New York rested with a small council consisting of a handful of persons. That approach was singled out for the strongest of criticisms in Federalist Paper No. 77, in which Hamilton warned that, under such a regime, "[e]very mere council of appointment, however constituted, will be a conclave, in which cabal and intrigue will have their full scope."

Further, the Senate adopted the following resolution in 1789 for addressing presidential nominations:

> Resolved, That when nominations shall be made in writing by the President of the United States to the Senate, a future day shall be assigned, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise, for taking them into consideration .... [A]ll questions shall be put by the President of the Senate ... and the Senators shall signify their assent or dissent by answering, viva voce, ay or no.
> 1 Exec. J. 19.

This resolution, so early on in the Senate's existence, embodied the strong commitment the Senate once had to fulfill its constitutional role by bringing presidential nominations before the full body of the Senate for a vote. Modern scholarly observers have also long supported this principle. Harvard Law School Professor Laurence Tribe, for example, at page 131 of his book God Save This Honorable Court (1985) has written that "what matters most is that one hundred Senators, of diverse backgrounds and philosophies" vote on the confirmation of judicial nominees.

With the Constitution and the wisdom of the Founding Father in mind, I urge you to bring the President's judicial nominees to the floor of the Senate for a vote by the entire body.

Sincerely,

Steve Chabot

It is permissible to use your e-mail for political e-mails. The principle that governs in the Executive Branch for EOP officials such as your office is that you are authorized to engage in political activity while on duty and in your office and while using your office equipment.
If the government incurs additional non-incidental costs (e.g., travel) from political activity, then reimbursement by the appropriate political entity is required.
In sum, with respect to telephone, FAX, computer, printer, and e-mail, you therefore are permitted to use that equipment for political activity.
That's the law. As with everything, of course, think about appearances in advance.

I mailed you a CRS report that, in passing, indicates that White House advisors do not testify on policy matters. I am attaching a summary document as well and also providing some additional info in the text of this e-mail. (Note that this e-mail and the attached summary are for your use only and should not be further distributed to others absent checking back with me.)

The leading Executive Branch interpretation on the constitutional underpinnings of this issue is a 1971 AAG Rehnquist OLC opinion, which states the following: "The President and his immediate advisers -- that is, those who customarily meet with the President on a regular or frequent basis -- should be deemed absolutely immune from testimonial compulsion by a congressional committee. They not only may not be examined with respect to their official duties, they may not even be compelled to appear before a congressional committee."

The basic position as articulated by the Administration over the last few weeks is as follows:

The President,s immediate White House advisers and staff, including officials with responsibilities closely analogous to those of Governor Ridge such as the National Security Adviser, ordinarily do not testify before Congress on policy matters. This is a fundamental principle of separation of powers that protects the confidentiality of the President,s relationship with his White House advisors and the President,s ability to employ advisors who can devote their attention to assisting and advising the President as he sees fit.

The rare historical exceptions to the rule against testimony by White House staff have generally been in circumstances, unlike those here, involving substantial evidence of personal or official misconduct. For example, some have cited three World War II examples, but each of those situations involved allegations of personal or official wrongdoing. And even if there were isolated examples of close Presidential advisors testifying on policy matters, that would not alter the fundamental point: For many decades, Presidents of both parties -- and Congress -- have agreed that the President,s White House advisors ordinarily do not testify before Congress on policy matters.

Note also that the Dana Milbank piece was wrong on NSC Advisor Berger and his aide. They did not in fact testify.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNOR RIDGE TO TESTIFY

Governor Ridge has been asked to testify before Congress. The Administration believes strongly that the Governor – as one of the President's closest White House advisors – should adhere to the long-standing practice under which such close Presidential advisors do not testify before Congress.

The Administration recognizes the needs of Congress to receive information to perform its constitutional responsibilities. Governor Ridge has offered and held numerous meetings and briefings with Members of Congress. The Governor will continue to work closely with Congress, including the relevant Committees, in a manner consistent with this long-standing practice. Just as significantly, each of the departments and agencies with operational and budget authority will also continue to work with and testify before the Congress.

Why the Director of Homeland Security should not testify

- Presidents of both parties, for at least 50 years, have taken the position that their closest advisers cannot be forced to and ordinarily will not testify before Congress on policy matters. This position, based on the Constitution's separation of powers, has long been accepted by the Congress.

- Governor Ridge is the President's chief advisor on homeland security issues. As an Assistant to the President, a non-confirmed position, he has no authority to hire or fire, except in his immediate office.

- The Director of Homeland Security serves as a coordinator between various agencies and departments. The National Security Advisor, who has a similar coordinating role between agencies, does not testify, nor do the White House Chief of Staff, Counsel, and other officials.

- Administrations of both parties have adhered to this position, except for instances involving substantial evidence of personal or official wrongdoing. Three examples have been cited where White House officials have testified during WWII, all of which involve congressional investigations of personal or official wrongdoing. Donald Nelson testified in response to an inquiry into numerous allegations of financial corruption within the government's war effort. Donald Dawson was investigated for accepting cash and other favors for providing favorable treatment on loan applications. Jonathan Daniels was called to testify regarding allegations that he had improperly forced the head of the REA to resign over a particular decision.

- Officials within the Executive Office of the President that serve in Senate confirmed positions in statutorily-created agencies regularly testify before Congress. These offices include the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, and the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

REV_00336566

Meeting Congress' Need for Information

- The Administration and Governor Ridge have regularly met with Congress and provided extensive information on homeland security.

- Governor Ridge assumed his responsibilities October 8, 2001. Since that time Governor Ridge and his staff have held over 100 meetings with Members of Congress and staff, and briefed various committees in the House and Senate. He has also repeatedly reached out to the bipartisan leadership of the Senate, and most recently met with the Senate caucuses of both parties. And, he has offered to meet with the committees of jurisdiction in a non-testimonial format at their convenience.

- During this short period of time, Governor Ridge has been working with the relevant executive branch departments and agencies on important homeland security issues such as Border Reorganization, the Threat Alert System, anthrax and bioterrorism, food safety, and ensuring security at home at events such as the Olympics, and the Super Bowl.

- Governor Ridge does not have operational or budget authority over any federal agency except his own office within the White House. The Threat Alert System is an example of an initiative that the Governor coordinated with various agencies which was ultimately turned over to DOJ for a period of comment, and DOJ will eventually handle the actual operation of the program.

- Administration officials with operational and budgetary authority, including the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General, have repeatedly testified before Congress on homeland security matters. They have also provided Members of Congress with periodic briefings.

Moving forward in the future.

- The Administration and Governor Ridge recognize that the country faces significant issues regarding homeland security and that it will take the cooperation of both branches working together to solve them.

- The Administration is committed to meeting Congressional needs for information consistent with the principle of separation of powers.

- Governor Ridge looks forward to continuing to meet with Members of Congress, the 14 committees with jurisdiction over homeland security, and to brief committees on an ongoing basis.

SUBJECT: OMB Request for Views on S1994 Combined 8(a) and HubZone Preference Act

DEADLINE: 10:00 A.M. Monday, March 25, 2002
In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This bill would: (1) Give businesses certified under both the 8(a) and the Historically Underutilized Business Zone ("HUBZone") programs a statutory preference over those that are certified under only one of the programs. (Thus, HUBZone firms which are also 8(a) firms would have priority over other HUBZone firms, and 8(a) firms which are also HUBZone firms would have priority over other 8(a) firms). (2) Provide a price evaluation preference to firms certified under both programs of 20% where the competing firm is not a small business and 10% where the competing firm is a small business. (3) Raise sole-source dollar ceilings under the 8(a) business development by $1 million (resulting in new ceilings of $4 million for sole-source contracts for goods and services and $6 million for manufacturing.).

2d Session

S. 1994

To establish a priority preference among certain small business concerns for purposes of Federal contracts, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

March 6, 2002

Mr. KERRY (for himself and Mr. BOND) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship

A BILL

To establish a priority preference among certain small business concerns for purposes of Federal contracts, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Combined 8(a) and HUBZone Priority Preference Act'.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act the following definitions shall apply:

(1) CONTRACTING OFFICER- The term `contracting officer' has the same meaning as in section 27(f)(5) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 423(f)(5)).

(2) 8(a) HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `8(a) HUBZone small business concern' means a qualified HUBZone small business concern that is also a section 8(a) small business concern.

(3) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `qualified HUBZone small business concern' has the same meaning as in section 3(p)(5) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(p)(5)).

(4) SECTION 8(a) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `section 8(a) small business concern' means a small business concern that is certified by the Small Business Administration as eligible to receive benefits under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)).

(5) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- The term `small business concern' has the same meaning as in section 3(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(a)).

REV_00336603

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF PRIORITY PREFERENCE.

(a) EFFECT OF PRIORITY PREFERENCE ON RESTRICTED COMPETITION CONTRACTS-

(1) SECTION 8(a) CONTRACTS- In determining the successful offeror for a restricted competition contract under section 8(a)(1)(D) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)(1)(D)), the contracting officer shall select an offer from an 8(a) HUBZone small business concern over a comparable offer from a section 8(a) small business concern that is not a qualified HUBZone small business concern.

(2) HUBZONE CONTRACTS- In determining the successful offeror for a restricted competition contract under section 31(b)(2)(B) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 657a(b)(2)(B)), the contracting officer shall select an offer from an 8(a) HUBZone small business concern over a comparable offer from a qualified HUBZone small business concern that is not a section 8(a) small business concern.

(b) EFFECT OF PRIORITY PREFERENCE ON PRICE EVALUATION PREFERENCE-

(1) IN GENERAL- Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), in any case in which a Federal procurement contract is to be awarded on the basis of full and open competition in accordance with section 303 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253), the price offered by an 8(a) HUBZone small business concern shall be deemed as being lower than the price offered by another offeror, if the price offered by the 8(a) HUBZone small business concern is not more than 20 percent higher than the price offered by the otherwise lowest and responsive offeror.

(2) OTHER SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- If the competing offeror under paragraph (1) is a small business concern, the price evaluation preference given to the 8(a) HUBZone small business concern shall be 10 percent.

(3) RESPONSIVE OFFER- An 8(a) HUBZone small business concern shall not receive a price evaluation preference under this section if it does not make a responsive offer.

(c) EXCLUSION- This section does not provide any priority preference to a small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals that is also a qualified HUBZone small business concern, unless such business has been certified by the Small Business Administration as eligible to receive benefits under section 8(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)).

SEC. 4. MODIFICATION OF SOLE SOURCE THRESHOLDS.

(a) SECTION 8(a) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- Section 8(a)(1)(D)(i)(II) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a)(1)(D)(i)(II)) is amended--

(1) by striking `$5,000,000' and inserting `$6,000,000'; and

(2) by striking `$3,000,000' and inserting `$4,000,000'.

(b) QUALIFIED HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN- Section 31(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Small Business Act

(15 U.S.C. 657a(b)(2)(A)(ii)) is amended--

(1) in subclause (I), by striking `$5,000,000' and inserting `$6,000,000'; and

This is an important election for Texas. And it's an important election for the country. We've got to have a man like John Cornyn representing our state in Washington. And there are a lot of reasons why.

First, we've got to get good, conservative judges appointed to the bench and approved by the United States Senate. (Applause.) I want people on the bench who don't try to use their position to legislate from the bench. We want people to interpret the law, not try to make law and write law. And I sent such a man up from Mississippi the other day -- a good, honest, honorable man, who had been approved unanimously by the United States Senate earlier -- and, yet, did not get a vote on the floor of the United States Senate.

We need people like John Cornyn in the United States Senate, who will work with the White House to have a solid judiciary, to make sure that the judges do what they're supposed to do in the United States and not overstep their bounds. (Applause.)

I haven't been involved in this particular issue, but I have been involved generally in the issue of allowing gov't contracts to include indemnification clauses (POTUS recently issued an EO granting HHS indemnification authority, which I worked on).

FYI: Since you guys were interested in her, I thought I'd let you know she's coming in to interview on Wednesday April 10 after JSC. Judge had me tell Edwards we were talking to more people (without identifying them) and then invite her in to try to force Edwards' hand a bit more, or else put us in a position to offer her name up ourselves.

elect a Republican governor in Mississippi, and it will certainly make it even more difficult for Democratic candidates to be successful in the South," Miller said in a statement last week after the Pickering vote.

Miller, who has made re-electing Cleland his top political priority this year, said Tuesday that he spent a good deal of time over the weekend reading letters to the editor in local papers, and that it is obvious where sentiment lies in Georgia over the Pickering nomination.

"It does not go unnoticed, "he said.

Cox Offers Bipartisan Study

Paul Kane
Roll Call
March 21, 2002

Although support is building among both House leaders and rank-and-file Members to establish provisions allowing continuity of government if a large number of lawmakers were killed or incapacitated, there appears to be little consensus on how exactly to proceed.

At a press conference yesterday, a bipartisan group of lawmakers led by Rep. Brian Baird (D-Wash.) unveiled a letter to Speaker Dennis Hastert (R-Ill.) and Minority Leader Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.) calling on the two leaders to "appoint and convene an expert panel made up of an equal number of House and Senate Members of both parties" to study the issue.

The letter has been signed by about 200 lawmakers.

Baird has proposed a constitutional amendment that would allow governors to appoint temporary House Members if 25 percent or more of the chamber's lawmakers were killed or incapacitated. Other Members and experts have since weighed in with alternate suggestions. The latest entrants into the debate are former Speakers Tom Foley (D-Wash.), who appeared at yesterday's press conference, and Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.). The two ex-leaders wrote an op-ed in Sunday's Washington Post urging the House to quickly address the issue.

"The expeditious path is for the House immediately to adopt a change in its rules authorizing each Member to pre-designate an interim successor who could serve for the period between a catastrophic loss of House Members and the election of successors," they wrote.

Foley and Gingrich argued that the House should pass a rules change allowing designation of successors until a constitutional amendment is crafted and approved, a process that could take years.

While acknowledging that the issue needs to be addressed, however, some GOP leaders seemed cool to the idea of lawmakers designating their own successors.

REV_00336719

"Our Constitution is very specific," said Majority Leader Dick Armey (R-Texas), noting that it explicitly calls for special elections to fill any House vacancies. "I'm all for having a contingency plan, but I don't see how a rules change would hold up when it [would] supercede the Constitution."

Majority Whip Tom DeLay (R-Texas) expressed similar concerns.

"We need to think about a contingency plan, but the idea that one Member gets to pick his successor?" DeLay said.

"I've been thinking about what to do. You want to maintain that process that the Founding Fathers knew was important, that the House needs to remain the people's House. And I'm not sure that's what this plan would do."

DeLay also said there are no firm plans to act on something addressing the situation by the end of the session.

"I don't think we're planning on that," he said. "I'm not focused on it."

Another member of leadership, Republican Policy Chairman Christopher Cox (R-Calif.), has sent a letter to Gephardt suggesting that his panel and the Democratic Policy Committee convene a joint meeting to discuss the various continuity proposals.

Hastert spokesman John Feehery said the Speaker has "not started the process of reviewing these proposals yet," though he added that Cox's idea of convening the two policy committees is "a good place to start."

The two committees held a similar gathering Sept. 20, 2001, to discuss economic issues in the wake of attacks on New York City and the Pentagon.

Beyond Baird's proposed amendment and the designated successor idea, other solutions put forth include the appointment of "emergency delegates" who could process legislation in the committee of the whole and the passage of a law forcing states to speed up their special election schedules in the event of a crisis.

Some Members and experts have also argued that Congress should take this opportunity to alter the current system of presidential succession, either mandating that lawmakers in line for the White House be in the same party as the president or removing Members from the line of succession altogether.

The Judiciary subcommittee on the Constitution has held one hearing on Baird's amendment, but panel Chairman Steve Chabot (R-Ohio) said he currently has no further hearings or markups scheduled on the subject.

REV_00336720

Chabot said he agreed the issue needs further study, but was inclined to oppose Baird's amendment.

"We should look at all the options, but at this point I don't think the best option is amending the Constitution," he said.

Other Members echoed Chabot's caution.

Rep. Ray LaHood (R-Ill.), a signatory of Baird's letter, said he would like to see "leadership lend their support to this," but also cautioned against "leaping into legislation and jumping to conclusions."

Rep. Steny Hoyer (D-Md.), the ranking member on the House Administration Committee, said the issue "cries out for a response," but was also wary of anything that would put unelected Members into the chamber.

"The founding fathers wanted elected people in this House," said Hoyer, who added that if any appointees were allowed, they would have to "only be short term."

House Administration Chairman Bob Ney (R-Ohio) said, "We have to deal with this now," but did not endorse any particular suggestion.

Some Members also admitted that it was difficult to contemplate what should happen after they die.

"Some things are better left until they happen," said Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.). "I'm worried enough about this when I'm alive. I don't think I'm going to worry about it if I'm dead."

Although most of these proposals concern a large number of lawmakers being killed or incapacitated, Ney is also worried about what would happen if catastrophe struck when Members were outside of Washington and unable to return.

Partly at the urging of Rep. Jim Langevin (D-R.I.), House Administration has been studying the issue of creating a cyber Congress that would use advanced encryption technology to allow Members to vote online in case of emergency.

"I'd hope that we'd have some ideas in the next couple of months," Ney said.

Showing no interest in reconciliation, Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) yesterday broadened his attacks on Senate Democrats, citing the chamber's inability to complete its work on even relatively non-controversial items.

Sparked by the recent rejection of his friend's bid for a federal circuit court seat, Lott said the fight over U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering's nomination was a symptom of bigger problems in the Senate, particularly what he characterized as a lack of leadership from Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.).

"The Senate is becoming dysfunctional, the Daschle Democrat dysfunctional process. It is happening on bill after bill after bill," Lott said in an interview Wednesday.

He added later: "It's bigger than a judge or a couple leaders. What's more important is substance. It's affecting our country and it's hurting our foreign policy."

Heading into the two-week spring recess, Lott rattled off a list of items that he says could have been completed before the break without too much effort or controversy:an Andean trade bill, lifting the debt ceiling, trade promotion authority and a border security and immigration measure dealing with Mexico.

In effect, Lott signaled that he will be mounting a two-front war on Senate Democrats in the weeks and months ahead. He said he will continue to drive home a message that the "Daschle Democrats" are obstructionists and don't pass substantive legislation, even bills that have broad bipartisan support.

But he will also continue his own personal vendetta, lashing out at the Democrats who played key roles in defeating the Pickering nomination. "This was highly offensive to me, and I'm not going to forget it any time soon,"he said.

Lott indicated that he will continue to vent his anger in targeted ways.

Last week, he announced his opposition to a Daschle staffer being confirmed to the Federal Communications Commission, as well as to the Judiciary Committee receiving an additional $1.5 million for further oversight of agencies involved in Sept. 11 investigations. On Tuesday, he derailed an energy amendment offered by Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), a senior Judiciary Committee member, and yesterday he used parliamentary maneuvers to block Judiciary from completing a hearing.

Democrats believe the Minority Leader is overreacting and say he is only hampering his own future efforts - both on White House agenda items and getting more judicial nominees approved - by making the always necessary consensus impossible in the Senate.

"If he wants nothing, that's what will happen," warned Majority Whip Harry Reid

(D-Nev.). "Stopping everything around here doesn't help him."

Reid said Democrats understand Lott's personal reaction to Pickering's rejection because he has known the judge since the 1960s. "I would feel squashed if it was somebody from Nevada," Reid said, but added, "I hope Senator Lott, as a former Majority Leader, understands how difficult it is to move things on the floor."

REV_00336722

But by starting with focused acts of retribution, specifically targeting individual Senators and the Judiciary Committee, Lott is trying to blunt Democratic criticism that he is hurting President Bush's agenda. Other measures will be used as payback, but for now Lott said he is not looking to shut down the entire chamber - a tactic that has been used by both Democrats and Republicans in the past over the sensitive issue of judicial nominations.

"This is not Defcon 5, all stop, which we could do. We could shut the place down," Lott said. "No, this is going to be reminders that this was a mistake. I'm willing to forgive them, for they knew not what they did, perhaps. But it probably is going to be ratcheted up as we go forward if they don't change their conduct."

But Lott also wants this effort to be about more than just payback for Pickering's defeat, which he considers his and the administration's failure to anticipate how willing Judiciary Democrats would be to take out a nominee at the behest of liberal interest groups.

"I'm not looking for a thing out of this. They've already taken the thing Icared an awful lot about," he said.
Instead, Lott is using the Pickering fight as a springboard into other lines of attack on Democrats, particularly Daschle.

"The judge and the nomination and the personal problems are not the cause. Ithink that they are the effect of a combination of [factors in] the way the Senate is being run," he said.

Through the first three months of this session, Lott said only two bills of substance have passed, the farm bill and campaign finance reform, with the latterthe only measure that will make it to the President's desk.

All other legislation has been, in Lott's words, "delayed, partisan and paltry."

He said the inability to pass an Andean trade bill and the border security and immigration measure hurt Bush internationally as he prepares for trips to Central and South America and mean "the President's going to Mexico empty handed."

The Democrats could take two immediate steps to smooth over relations, according to Lott. They could hold hearings on the eight circuit court nominees who were announced by Bush last May but who have been stalled since, and they could pass an increase in the debt ceiling and the border security-immigration measures.

"We're not asking for the moon," he said.

Democrats reject Lott's assertion that they are the ones blocking legislation and say that Republican demands that these bills be brought up exactly the way the GOPwants have hampered the process.

And while Daschle said Wednesday he can "understand the significant disappointment" Lott feels toward Pickering's defeat, he insisted the Minority Leader is asking too much of him, particularly in wanting Daschle to go around Judiciary and bring the nomination directly to the floor.

"I had no choice but to respect the decision of the Judiciary Committee,"he said, noting that Lott's attacks since the defeat haven't helped matters. "Personal retribution is something I don't subscribe to."

Lott, however, feels betrayed by Daschle over the Pickering fight, and it's clear that it will take some time before their relationship is repaired.

Lott said he spoke, one on one, with Daschle three separate times beginning late last year to tell him how important it was that his friend Pickering's nomination be approved. By custom, he said, the two of them had always allowed for nominees that were that important to each other to pass through without too much controversy.

"He knew this was important to me," Lott said.

Instead of smooth sailing, Lott said Daschle publicly rebuked Pickering on nationally televised Sunday talk shows, long before Judiciary held its vote, sending a message to committee members it was OK to reject Lott's friend.

"He actually contributed to it.When the fat first started getting into the fire, he jumped out there and said, 'I can assure you that if he comes to the Senate, I'll call it up, but I'll vote no.' That was the signal," Lott said.

It's no coincidence, then, that Lott's first act of retribution was to go after Daschle's staffer, Jonathan Adelstein, who was previously set for an easy ride to confirmation to the FCC.

And Lott said there will continue to be similar actions taken against Democrats, at least for the time time being.

"Just stay tuned, there'll be a little something every day," he added.

In Top Federal Appointments, Mississippi Is Batting 0-3

Bill Minor
The Sun Herald
March 21, 2002 Thursday

Surprisingly, few tears were shed down here by the old guard of the Mississippi Republican Party over Mike Parker being ousted by the Bush administration as head of the Army Corps of Engineers, the second Mississippian, incidentally, to be booted from a high national job by President Bush after a short stay.

REV_00336724

The first Mississippi casualty had been Curt Hebert, elevated a year ago by Bush to chair the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, who later, so to speak, had been Enronized and hung out to dry.

Parker's ousting from the pork-happy Corps of Engineers job also didn't elicit outrage in the national press, not even from the right-wing editorial page of the Wall Street Journal.

Bush lowered the boom on the ex-congressman from Mississippi after only six months on the job when Parker publicly disagreed with the president's proposed 10 percent cut in the Corps budget, while Parker was seeking a 40 percent increase. Building more domestic water projects at a time the nation is on a budget-busting binge to fight international terrorism doesn't rank as a high priority -- something Parker apparently didn't comprehend, but Bush did.

Not to be overlooked is the biggest plum in the Corps' proposed budget: the $181 million Yazoo Backwater Pump pushed by Mississippi's Sen. Trent Lott, Parker's sponsor in getting the Corps job.

To begin with, the whole idea of a former small-town funeral home operator, with not a smidgen of engineering in his background, being appointed to head a vast federal agency that deals with locks, dams, flood control and myriad other public works seemed to me the outrage of the year.

Evidently Parker's lack of qualifications -- except in the world of politics -- nicely fit the image of what the Corps of Engineers has become: a rich feeding ground for congressional pork projects. That fact was well-documented by a Washington Post series nearly two years ago.

"No great loss," is how a senior state Republican leader put it, reflecting on Parker being canned from the Corps post, adding: "That was strictly Trent's deal, to give Parker a job."

Old guardsmen among Mississippi Republicans have a long, bitter memory that Parker blew the gubernatorial election in 1999, dropping off the campaign trail in the last two weeks of the election. "And now he (Parker) is blaming us for losing," the GOP veteran added.

Environmentalists no doubt were also glad to see Parker's departure, since, according to a story in the Washington Post after his firing, he once groused that "the dumbest thing President Richard M. Nixon ever did was create the Environmental Protection Agency."

Parker stepped down from the safe 4th Mississippi District seat he had held for 10 years to carry the GOP banner for governor in 1999. Democrat Ronnie Musgrove, then the state's No. 2 official, won by a narrow popular-vote margin.

When Parker later staged an unprecedented campaign that forced the Mississippi House six weeks after the statewide election to decide the gubernatorial winner under an obscure 1890 "electoral college" provision, it evidently further irritated many state Republicans.

REV_00336725

Another count against Parker, according state GOP veterans, is that he failed to endorse and visibly support George W. Bush during the 2000 Republican primaries, even though Mississippi's state GOP delegation was solidly behind Bush.

Consequently, say some old-line Mississippi GOPers, it came as a surprise that Lott yanked Parker out of political obscurity and pushed him for the Corps of Engineers job. Being a former congressman, Parker's Senate confirmation was a slam dunk.

The story of Curt Hebert's ouster last summer as head of FERC would be a considerable embarrassment to President Bush in times other than when the nation's focus has become fixated on the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

As it became known when Enron, the huge Houston-based energy company, suddenly began to disintegrate last December into the nation's biggest business bankruptcy, Enron's top executive, Kenneth Lay, a close Bush associate, played a major role behind the scene in Hebert's departure.

Hebert had gotten into hot water early last year during California's rolling power blackouts because he opposed electricity deregulation and capping energy prices, both desperately sought by California officials.

Turns out Ken Lay and Enron had a huge stake in promoting California's energy deregulation, and Lay played his Bush card in getting Hebert replaced by Bush's old Texas energy regulatory buddy, Pat Wood.

So, taken together with last week's rejection of Mississippi judge Charles Pickering's appointment to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, Mississippi is batting 0 for 3 in the national political league, since Bush took office.

Scruggs: Pickering Got 'A Real Bum Rap'

Beth Musgrave
The Sun Herald (Biloxi, MS)
March 21, 2002 Thursday

QUOTE: "A lot of these cases are decided on the back roads before they get into court. If we had a wider jury pool, these runaway jury decisions would get cut back." - Dickie Scruggs on tort reform

Since Dickie Scruggs won a landmark tobacco lawsuit settlement in 1997, the Pascagoula native and famous trial lawyer has been able to pick his legal cases and has had more time to spend on political issues. "Besides donating money," Scruggs said, "my talent, if I have one, is doing what I do best, which is to help correct some of these social wrongs. It's nice to have money in the bank so you can take long shots."

He discussed his political activities with The Sun Herald editorial board on Wednesday.

Scruggs has been in the news a lot lately. He lobbied for South Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering to be appointed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and also was a key player in the effort to bring a Hyundai plant to Mississippi, although both efforts failed.

But Scruggs, the brother-in-law of U.S. Sen. Trent Lott, said he doesn't consider himself a political force in Jackson County. When asked if he would support Attorney General Mike Moore, a fellow Jackson County native and longtime friend, if Moore were to run for governor, Scruggs said he would have to pick Moore over Gov. Ronnie Musgrove. Scruggs has been a longtime Musgrove supporter.

But if Moore were to take on Lott in a Senate race, Scruggs said, "you would find me on a rocket ship near the moon."

Scruggs went to Washington, D.C., twice to drum up support for Pickering this winter. He said he was surprised and disappointed that the Mississippi congressional delegation's political might didn't translate to a green light from the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee nixed Pickering's nomination by a 10-9 vote.

"All of the leading Democrats in Mississippi, with the exception of Rep. Bennie Thompson (who opposed Pickering's nomination), made a lot of phone calls, wrote a lot of letters and flexed a lot of muscle, a lot more than I thought could be brought to bear from our state. And it didn't swing a single vote," Scruggs said. "I think Judge Pickering got a real bum rap."

It was because of Scruggs' friendship with both Lott and Gov. Musgrove that Scruggs was brought in to help lure Hyundai to Mississippi. Scruggs acted as a liaison between the staffs of Lott and Musgrove.

Scruggs joked that he must not have done a very good job, because Hyundai has decided to look elsewhere.

"I think the second best thing that we can get is a site in Alabama so we can get some ancillary business," Scruggs said. He said he has no plans to enter statewide economic development ventures, such as the Hyundai deal, in the near future.

The President in Atlanta: Chambliss gets Bush backing; President Marks anti-terror drive

REV_00336727

Jim Tharpe
The Atlanta Journal and Constitution
March 28, 2002 Thursday

President Bush came to Atlanta on Wednesday with two fights on his hands --- the battle against terrorism and the November slugfest to retake the U.S. Senate from Democrats.

The president, on his second trip here in as many months, spoke to front-line emergency personnel at Georgia Tech before attending a Buckhead fund-raiser for Rep. Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.), who is seeking the Senate seat held by Democrat Max Cleland.

Chambliss introduced Bush to a largely partisan crowd sprinkled with a few Democrats, including Gov. Roy Barnes and his wife, Marie, at Tech's O'Keefe Gymnasium.

"The surest way to protect the American homeland is to run them [terrorists] down one by one and bring them to justice," said Bush, triggering one of at least six standing ovations during the first of his Atlanta stops. "There are still killers running loose, and we must deal with that fact," Bush said. "They thought we were so self-absorbed and materialistic that we would just sue them [following the Sept. 11 attacks]. They were wrong."

During his six-hour visit to the city, Bush emphasized attacking terrorists with allied troops, cutting off their funds and upgrading U.S. intelligence about their operations.

"If we get an inkling somebody is coming, we're going to respond," he said.

The president stressed the importance of police, firefighters, emergency medical technicians and others in the front-line battle against terrorist attacks.

He urged large metro areas such as Atlanta to share expertise with smaller municipalities. Bush then moved to a fund-raiser for Chambliss at the Grand Hyatt Hotel in Buckhead.

The event brought in $1.4 million for the man Republicans believe can beat Cleland in November.

"I am here to deliver this message --- Saxby Chambliss needs to be in the U.S. Senate," the president told about 800 people, including Georgia GOP congressmen and Republican leaders from the state Capitol.

Bush said he needs a Georgia Republican in the Senate to assist with his agenda, which includes increased defense spending and federally appointed judges "who do not try to write law from the bench."

He attacked Cleland for not defending his recent nomination of a Mississippi judge who failed to get committee confirmation for a federal appeals court.

"I expect people from Georgia to do what Zell Miller did, and stand up and defend the integrity of a man like Judge [Charles] Pickering," Bush said. "That's what Saxby would do."

The fund-raiser was a major boost for the Chambliss campaign. At one point, the congressman stood side by side with Bush with a backdrop of nine American flags as the party faithful cheered.

"I value his advice on terrorism," Bush said. "He is very sound when it comes to anti-terrorism."

Democrats control the Senate by a single seat, and the White House views Georgia's race as a key part of the GOP quest to regain control.

So critical is the Georgia contest that Bush has waded into a Republican family feud to back Chambliss, who leads the House subcommittee on terrorism and homeland security.

State Rep. Bob Irvin (R-Atlanta), is running against Chambliss in the August GOP primary, and Irvin's backers have criticized White House involvement so early in the race.

Presidents rarely get involved in primary fights. But the state and national GOP leaders think Chambliss is the candidate with the best shot, and Bush's advisers have devised an aggressive strategy of inserting the president and his high approval ratings into key Senate races early and often.

Chambliss is backed by Georgia's seven GOP congressmen, key Republicans at the state Capitol and core members of the national party --- even former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani endorsed Chambliss at a February stopover in Atlanta.

Irvin's political base is in the Republican-dominated north Atlanta suburbs, while Chambliss' is in Democrat-controlled South Georgia. Irvin says that gives him an edge. Chambliss in turn planted his campaign headquarters on Irvin's turf: Buckhead.

"The geography of the primary is in my favor," Irvin said.

But the money and endorsements are not.

Irvin is expected to raise only a fraction of the money Chambliss will garner in a statewide race where expensive TV advertising is critical.

Asked whether he had planned to attend any of Wednesday's events, Irvin said, "I wasn't invited."

Judge Moves to Speed Along Lawsuit Over Managed Care

Milt Freudenheim

REV_00336729

The New York Times
March 28, 2002, Thursday

A federal judge in Miami has allowed a group of managed care companies that have been accused of fraud to ask an appeals court for an immediate ruling on whether they are open to racketeering claims, a move that lawyers for both sides said could speed a final decision.

The judge hearing the case, Federico A. Moreno of Federal District Court, ruled last month that the lawyers who represent health plan subscribers could proceed with claims of fraud under the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act against Aetna, Cigna and United Healthcare. Humana is also a RICO defendant under an earlier ruling. The plaintiffs contend that the health maintenance organizations violated the racketeering law by conspiring to withhold medical care and by not telling H.M.O. members that doctors were rewarded financially for doing so.

The insurance company lawyers said the RICO claims, on behalf of millions of health plan subscribers, should be dismissed. That view was upheld two years ago by a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in Philadelphia.

In his latest ruling, issued late Tuesday, Judge Moreno agreed with the defendants that the RICO issue raised an important legal question, "whether a managed care subscriber who has not actually been denied care can state a claim under RICO," and said the issue could be sent at once to the United States Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit in Atlanta. By resolving the issue, the appeals court would "permit the parties to avoid unnecessary, protracted and expensive litigation," he said.

For one thing, the defendants might not have to open insurance company records for examination by the plaintiffs' lawyers. Miguel Estrada, a Washington lawyer for Aetna, said that without the racketeering claims, the lawsuits "basically shrivel up."

"There's very little left of the case," he added.

But Stephen Neuwirth, a lawyer for the plaintiffs, said that "if there is misrepresentation of the coverage when you buy an insurance policy, you can overpay" and suffer economic damage. He said a ruling by the appeals court could "validate our claim going forward."

Earlier this month, the appeals court in Atlanta upheld several rulings by Judge Moreno in a separate group of suits on behalf of doctors. Those suits also made RICO claims against the H.M.O.'s. The judge had said some of the claims should be settled by arbitration and others by litigation.

The judge has not yet ruled on requests by the plaintiffs to have both sets of cases declared class actions.

Pickering honored in his home area

The Associated Press
March 27, 2002, Wednesday

U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering, whose nomination to a federal appeals court was nixed by a Senate committee, was honored by the South Central Mississippi Bar Association.

Pickering spoke at the reception Tuesday night, and was joined by his wife, Margaret Ann. Pickering said he and his family had been through a difficult period.

But the support of Mississippians, especially those from his home area of Jones and Forrest counties, helped them pull through.

"There has never been a time in our lives when Margaret Ann and I have felt a more overwhelming sense of gratitude, or a deeper sense of appreciation, than we have felt for our friends and neighbors at home during these past several months," Pickering said.

Pickering was the first of President Bush's judicial nominees to lose in the Judiciary Committee. In a party-line vote, Democrats voted down the nomination two weeks ago.

Democrats criticized the 64-year-old judge's judicial temperament and judgment on civil rights issues.

Pickering said many black supporters of him from Forrest and Jones counties were pressured to turn against him, but "stood strongly in support of my nomination.

"I hope that this will be another step forward ... demonstrating to the world, and to those of us who live in this area, that African-Americans and whites can talk and communicate with one another, and can work together for common goals," he said.

Bar president Mike Adleman, Hattiesburg Mayor Johnny Dupree and Forrest County Board of Supervisors President Lynn Cartlidge attended the function.

Supreme Court orders Baltimore Ravens to pay fine

Andrew Welsh-Huggins
The Associated Press
March 27, 2002, Wednesday

The Ohio Supreme Court has ordered the Baltimore Ravens to pay a $50,000 fine on behalf of five players who said the team failed to pay them workers' comp benefits when it was still in Cleveland.

REV_00336731

The court ruled 6-1 Wednesday that the Ravens must pay the fine levied against it more than three years ago by an Ohio workers' compensation review board.

The case involved complaints over workers' comp benefits filed by five players for the team when it was still playing in Ohio as the Cleveland Browns. The team moved to Baltimore after the 1995 NFL season. At issue was the independence of a state review board that evaluates complaints about workers' comp benefits involving companies that are self-insured.

Former Browns' players Ricky Bolden, Paul Farren, Mark Harper, Lee Jones and Stacey Hairston complained to the Bureau of Workers' Compensation that the team failed to pay benefits to them while they were injured.

The Ohio Industrial Commission agreed and ordered the Ravens to pay the benefits, said Irwin Dinn, a lawyer representing the Ravens. The Industrial Commission handles all workers' comp disputes.

The team contends this amounted to a double payment of benefits, Dinn said. He said the five athletes had already been paid their regular salary while injured and unable to play, a procedure that amounts to a workers' comp benefit for professional athletes, Dinn said.

In March 1999, the players' complaint was upheld by the bureau's Self-Insuring Employers Evaluation Board.

The board ruled that the Ravens' initial refusal to pay the benefits amounted to "blatant and defiant behavior" and ordered a $50,000 fine.

The Ravens appealed the fine to a Franklin County judge in Columbus. The evaluation board argued that the judge didn't have jurisdiction under state law because the board is part of the administrative structure of the workers' comp bureau, and not an independent state agency.

The Supreme Court agreed.

The board "is not self-sustaining or self-governing," said Justice Alice Robie Resnick, writing for the majority. "It is not charged with administering or implementing any legislation, does not have its own staff or agenda, and does not promulgate any rules or regulations."

Justice Deborah Cook dissented. She said her colleagues misread the law, which she said does define the review board as a separate state agency.

The decision left the $50,000 fine in place. Dinn said he will work with the evaluation board to try to resolve the matter.

Grassley Nominates Iowans for Federal Judgeship

REV_00336732

The Associated Press
March 25, 2002, Monday

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, on Monday announced his recommendations to fill a vacancy on the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Iowa.

He has recommended Iowa Appeals Court Judge Terry L. Huitink of Ireton; U.S. District Magistrate Judge John A. Jarvey of Cedar Rapids; Iowa District Judge Linda R. Reade of Urbandale; and Iowa District Judge David M. Remley of Anamosa. "I have great confidence that any of these individuals would make a superb addition to the bench," Grassley said.

President Bush will forward one name for the judgeship to the Senate Judiciary Committee for a confirmation hearing.

The U.S. District Court for the Northern District has two district judges. A spot on the bench became available when Judge Michael Melloy was confirmed by the Senate for a judgeship on the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Paul Cassell Answers Senate Skeptics District court nominee, who challenged Miranda at Supreme Court, parries Judiciary Committee questions.

Jonathan Groner
Legal Times
March 25, 2002, Monday

U.S. District Court nominee Paul Cassell clung tightly to the political center in defending his views on criminal law at a lively March 19 Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearing.

Cassell, 42, a University of Utah College of Law professor who was selected for the federal trial bench in his home state, is well-known for his efforts to get the Supreme Court's Miranda ruling overturned and for his outspoken support for the death penalty.

Little formal opposition has emerged to Cassell's confirmation, but liberal Democrats on the committee seized the opportunity to grill the soft-spoken conservative on those two issues. Cassell's responses gave the opposition little new fodder, if any.

The nominee pointed out that in addition to his tough-on-crime views, he has sometimes criticized the courts for not giving enough protection to the rights of criminal defendants. And he mentioned Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg and the late Justice Thurgood Marshall as among those who embody his ideals.

When Sen. Richard Durbin (D-Ill.) asked Cassell why he had "led a crusade against Miranda rights," the nominee replied that he had nothing against the familiar police warnings.

He simply was "concerned that an act of Congress is going unenforced," referring to a 1968 federal law that was designed to overrule the landmark 1966 Miranda case and require federal courts to admit confessions into evidence as long as they are shown to be voluntary.

In United States v. Dickerson, the Supreme Court voted 7-2 in 2000 to turn aside Cassell's challenge to Miranda, finding the 1968 law unconstitutional.

Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) asked Cassell why, in a law review article, he referred to Chief Justice William Rehnquist's opinion in Dickerson as an example of "the imperial judiciary."

Cassell replied in a self-deprecating vein, "I exercised the one prerogative of anyone losing a Supreme Court case, which is to write a law review article disagreeing with the decision."

Leahy asked Cassell whether he would be able to regard Dickerson as a valid precedent if he had to face the issue as a sitting judge.

"There's a difference between being an advocate and a judge," Cassell replied. "Some of the justices I most admire, such as Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Thurgood Marshall, successfully made the transition from the role of open-minded advocate to that of a fair judge."

No date has been set for a vote on Cassell. The hearing, the first on judicial nominations since the contentious defeat of appeals court nominee Charles Pickering Sr., was generally cordial and low-key.

Three other nominees were considered briefly and without controversy: Terrence O'Brien for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit, Legrome Davis for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and Lance Africk for the Eastern District of Louisiana. Votes on those nominees have not been scheduled.

Tymkovich still on hold

Bill McAllister
The Denver Post
March 24, 2002 Sunday

A new sign that the nomination of Denver lawyer Tim Tymkovich to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals could be in trouble: The Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday gave a hearing to Terrence O'Brien, Wyoming's nominee to the Denver-based appeals court.

Formerly a judge on Wyoming's 6th Judicial District Court, O'Brien was nominated for the Circuit Court seat on Aug. 2. Tymkovich, who rejected the chance to be the top lawyer at the

REV_00336734

Interior Department, was nominated for Colorado's seat on the court several months earlier, on May 25.

Despite the backing of Allard and Campbell, he has received had no hint of a hearing. Tymkovich's FBI check was completed on June 12 and the American Bar Association completed its review of him on May 30; both are steps that can delay a court nomination.

Allard is hoping to meet with Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., over the impasse, but Conway said that discussion now may be delayed by the coming two-week recess.

'Tymkovich is part of the larger issue,' Conway said, referring to partisan disputes over President Bush's judicial nominees. 'The pressure is on the Democrats. They've got their scalp,' he said in reference to the defeat of Judge Charles W. Pickering of Mississippi for an appeals court seat.

Nickles unleashes frustrations on Senate floor

Chris Casteel
THE SUNDAY OKLAHOMAN
March 24, 2002, Sunday

Sen. Don Nickles, in his 22nd year as a U.S. senator from Oklahoma, has grown increasingly frustrated about the way things are going in the Senate this year, and he unleashed a list of grievances in a speech last week on the Senate floor.

Nickles, R-Ponca City, said, "The Senate is not working. This institution I love is not working."

He said partisanship had dictated the crafting of the farm bill and the energy bill and was now holding up votes on President Bush's judicial nominees. He urged his colleagues "to lower the partisan rhetoric" and yield to the role of committees in crafting legislation, rather than sending important bills to the floor for a series of complicated amendments. Nickles, the assistant Republican leader, said it was "unconscionable" that the Senate Judiciary Committee defeated the nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi. Pickering, a good friend of Senate GOP leader Trent Lott, of Mississippi, was up for a slot on a federal appellate court.

"It's unbelievable to me to think that members wouldn't confirm a nominee that is a close friend of the Republican leader," Nickles said. "I can't imagine that ever happening with Bob Dole. I can't imagine it happening to George Mitchell. I can't imagine it happening to Howard Baker.

"So the Senate has really stooped in my opinion pretty low, and maybe in a way we're trespassing where we shouldn't go."

Nickles' comments were just the latest expression of his frustration. Last Sunday, on a news program, he vowed that Republicans would do whatever was necessary to force votes on Bush's judicial nominees. And he has used floor speeches to criticize the way the energy legislation bypassed committee work and that a key part of the farm bill passed in committee on a party-line vote.

Because of term limits on some leadership jobs, Nickles is in his last year as assistant minority leader. It is not known whether he will run for the top Republican job because it may depend on what Lott does.

Federal Bench Nominees Left in Limbo; Bickering Curdles Senate into Inaction

James W. Brosnan
The Commercial Appeal
March 23, 2002 Saturday

The case of President Bush vs. Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats was far from settled by the rejection of U.S. Dist. Judge Charles Pickering, and that may further delay confirmation of two Memphis nominees to federal judgeships.

U.S. Dist. Judge Julia Gibbons, 51, nominated in October to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, is one of seven Bush nominees to the court who have yet to get a hearing. Hardy Mays, 54, nominated in January for the district court in West Tennessee, is awaiting a review by the American Bar Association before the committee will consider him. There are more than 20 district court nominees also awaiting hearings.

They face a Senate soured on both sides by the bitter battle over Pickering.

Since Pickering's defeat by the Judiciary Committee March 8, Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) has launched parliamentary attacks on the Democratic majority, including cutting short committee hearings and blocking a Democratic aide's nomination to the Federal Communications Commission.

Thursday, Lott clogged up the Senate's time with a "sense-of-the-Senate resolution" urging faster action on Bush's nominees. It failed 47-51 on a party-line vote.

Lott warned, "This will not be the last resolution in this area, unless we begin to see some fair progress."

The dispute is not just about the defeat of a powerful senator's home state judge.

It's over whose judges will control the third branch of government, particularly the 13 powerful circuit courts of appeals.

REV_00336736

The Supreme Court decides about 85 cases a year, the circuit courts more than 30,000, notes Ralph Neas, president of the liberal People for the American Way.

Judges nominated by Republican presidents are in the majority on seven of the courts and Democratic nominees five, with one tie, on the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, said Neas.

The Senate has confirmed seven of Bush's nominees. Pickering was his lone defeat. But 22 circuit nominees are still pending in the committee, and Bush has nine more vacancies to fill.

The Sixth Circuit, which hears appeals from Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio and Michigan, has six judges nominated by Democratic presidents, two by Republicans and eight vacancies.

But Democrats think two of those eight vacancies should have been filled during President Clinton's term by his nominees from Michigan, Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis. Neither even got a hearing when Republicans controlled the Judiciary Committee and were among 53 still pending when Clinton left office.

So in an unusual move, committee chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) has held up all Sixth Circuit nominees in an effort to force Bush to renominate either White or Lewis. Sen. Carl Levin (D-Mich.) said that so far the White House has not responded.

John Nowacki, director of legal policy at the Free Congress Foundation, said Bush has already reached out to Democrats by renominating Clinton candidates from Virginia and Pennsylvania and shouldn't back down on the Sixth Circuit.

Sen. George Voinovich (R-Ohio) said that without "a very aggressive campaign" by Bush and Republican senators, the logjam won't be broken.

"Cases aren't being heard in our circuit," said Voinovich.

"It basically cannot function," said Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.).

Not so, says Chief Judge Boyce Martin of Louisville. Martin said he has filled out all three-judge hearing panels through next January by using district court judges and the nine Sixth Circuit judges on "senior" or semiretired status.

"There's no crisis," said Martin, who was appointed by President Carter.

Republican senators reacted to Martin's comments with disbelief.

Sen. Fred Thompson (R-Tenn.) said, "You can make do. If we lost half our courthouses, we'd still find a way to try cases. But that's hardly the issue. For a chief judge to say there's no problem when half his court is missing is very surprising to me."

REV_00336737

Thompson was hoping Pickering's defeat would cause Democrats to back off their opposition to other Bush nominees.

"The whole process is unfortunate and has been headed in the wrong direction for a long time," said Thompson. "Something has got to give here. We can't have that kind of acrimony."

But some Democrats think it is the White House that is forcing the fight.

This week, the Judiciary Committee held a contentious hearing on Paul Cassell, a district court nominee in Utah who has spent much of the last decade trying to weaken the Miranda standard that requires police to notify defendants of their right to speak to an attorney before questioning.

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) said, "Had Bill Clinton sent a nominee here who had spent 10 years arguing for the legalization of marijuana or for the elimination of the death penalty, that nominee wouldn't have had a prayer before that Senate Judiciary Committee."

Their suspicions were reinforced when The Washington Post reported Bush's top political adviser, Karl Rove, had assured the conservative Family Research Council that Bush would continue to send conservative nominees to the Senate despite Pickering's defeat.

"They sent the wrong message to the wrong guy," Rove was quoted as saying.

Neas reacted, "What Karl Rove and what the administration want to do is have right-wing conservatives controlling these circuit courts. We're saying there should be an effort to work out more compromise and more consensus so you don't have the entire balance of the federal judiciary thrown to the right."

Ironically, aides to Bush's father considered Memphis's Judge Gibbons too moderate when she was first considered for the Sixth Circuit in 1991. Justin Wilson, son of prominent Republican fund-raiser Pat K. Wilson, was nominated instead, but he was never confirmed. Wilson is now Gov. Don Sundquist's chief policy adviser.

Gibbons was rated "well qualified" by a majority of the American Bar Association review committee and "qualified" by a minority.

So far, she has not drawn the opposition of the liberal groups who targeted Pickering and now have their sights on two Sixth Circuit nominees from Ohio, state Supreme Court Justice Deborah Cook and conservative Ohio State University law professor Jeffrey Sutton.

"A candidate of Judge Gibbons's caliber deserves a full and very expeditious hearing, and we're not getting it," said Sen. Bill Frist (R-Tenn.). Thompson said he's talked to Leahy and remains "optimistic she's going to be treated in an expeditious manner."

Lawyer gets key post

John Wagner
The News and Observer
March 23, 2002 Saturday

President Bush on Friday made official his choice of Frank Whitney as the next U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of North Carolina.

Whitney is a Charlotte lawyer who previously served more than a decade as a federal prosecutor in the state's Western District office.

Now a lawyer with Kilpatrick Stockton, Whitney an eventful stint as chairman of the Mecklenburg County Republican Party. His name first surfaced in late January at a time when many thought George Holding, a former aide to U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, had a lock on the position, which is based in Raleigh.

Helms had recommended Holding, and he had an impressive list of backers included N.C. Supreme Court Chief Justice I. Beverly Lake Jr. and U.S. Eastern District Court Judge Terrence Boyle.

But the Bush administration -- which announced its choice Friday evening -- apparently wanted someone more seasoned.

Holding, incidentally, has landed a job in the U.S. Attorney's Office -- just not the top one. He started work as an assistant U.S. attorney in about a week ago.

"I'm just honored to be here," said Holding, a Raleigh native.

Send money fast

The U.S. Senate campaign of Republican Elizabeth Dole is asking supporters for more money -- and the campaign wants to get it in a hurry.

In a recent fund-raising appeal, Dole included a self-addressed Federal Express envelope so donors won't have to bother with the U.S. Postal Service. The campaign picks up the tab for the expedited service.

"In this day and age, when people are receiving so much mail, we need to punch through the clutter to help bring attention to our message," said Dole spokeswoman Mary Brown Brewer.

Brewer said the campaign must counter "an early negative television campaign against us."

REV_00336739

She was referring to ads run by the Democratic Party that questioned Dole's participation in a fund-raiser in Houston nine days after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. At the time, a spokesman for Dole was telling reporters that the campaign was on hold.

"Because of the huge amount of money that is being spent on these negative attacks by the national Democratic Party, we do need to raise more money," Brewer said.

Robert Gibbs, a spokesman for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, dismissed that reasoning. "If Elizabeth Dole had just come clean and told the truth about her fund-raiser, this campaign would be a whole lot easier for her," said Gibbs, whose organization helped fund the ads.

Bowles moves briskly

Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Erskine Bowles moved quickly Friday to voice opposition to a Bush administration proposal that he said would weaken medical privacy rules.

The Bush proposal would repeal safeguards enacted by Bowles' former boss, President Clinton, against release of certain medical information to doctors, hospitals, pharmacies and insurance companies without patients' written consent.

"Taking away the rights of patients is just plain wrong," Bowles said in a statement.

Tommy Thompson, Bush's secretary of health and human services, argues that the Clinton-era rules can delay needed care.

Justices get school case back; Ohio court to decide whether to enforce orders on aid or soften stance. Fall elections may be key

Doug Oplinger and Dennis J. Willard
Akron Beacon Journal
March 22, 2002 Friday

A national mediator put the Ohio Supreme Court in the center of controversy yesterday when he delivered a short letter saying that he was unable to help Ohio resolve its school funding crisis.

Howard Bellman submitted a 67-word statement to the court that said his effort at mediation "has not produced a resolution."

"I am sorry that I could not achieve the desired end," he wrote.

REV_00336740

Now the court must decide whether it will attempt to enforce any of its previous three orders on school funding, or soften its stand. In 1997, the court ordered an overhaul of state education funding, and in 2000, it said that changes imposed had only made the situation worse.

Last year, the court ruled that the system could be made constitutional with changes in the funding formula that would have cost the state $1.2 billion.

As the issue again returns to the Supreme Court, two -- and maybe three -- of the seven seats will be up for election in November, offering a possible voter endorsement or rejection of the court's handling of school funding.

"This doesn't speak well of the health of Ohio government that we're in this situation," said Jonathan Entin, a professor of constitutional law at Case Western Reserve University. "In a well-functioning government, you don't want the court playing chicken with the legislature."

He said that while there has been no outright defiance of the court, there is a question about the court's ability to enforce any of its orders.

"To some extent, the court doesn't have a clear majority," Entin said.

Political analyst John Green agreed. "The three rulings do not set a clear course," said Green, director of the Ray C. Bliss Institute of Applied Politics at the University of Akron. "The court has the authority, but it may not have the political capability" to enforce its rulings.

"Maybe this has to be resolved by an election."

Justice Andy Douglas, who has been in the majority in all three rulings, is retiring this year. Justice Evelyn Lundberg Stratton, who twice voted against the coalition of public schools that are suing, then agreed to a compromise in the third ruling, is up for re-election.

Justice Deborah Cook hopes to be appointed to a federal judgeship, which would open her seat to election, too. She consistently has opposed court intervention in school funding.

Reaction from participants in the case to Bellman's report showed disappointment, but no surprise.

Gov. Bob Taft listed what he believes are the accomplishments of his administration and said only a few issues are unresolved.

The coalition, however, maintained its position that all the issues remain on the table, including an overhaul of property taxes and the need to determine the cost of an adequate education.

Nicholas Pittner, a lawyer for the coalition, said that Bellman is an "excellent and skilled mediator, and both parties came to the process and did the best that they could" but failed to reach any agreement.

REV_00336741

As the case goes back to the court, Pittner said, there is concern about what the justices might do. "I don't believe they lack power" to enforce their orders, Pittner said, "they lack the willingness to exercise it."

Chief Justice Thomas Moyer said in a statement that he had hoped mediation would work. Now the case goes back onto the active docket for discussion, Moyer said.

Bellman said yesterday that his job was to find agreements on policy. Now the court must deal with legal issues.

Bellman said both sides have principles on which they would not compromise. The negotiations were difficult because the principles were so different.

The coalition would not compromise on providing all children with an adequate education, he said.

The state, on the other hand, was protecting the separation of powers, or the responsibilities of the branches of government.

In an interview yesterday, Bellman said he couldn't elaborate because the court's order prevents participants from discussing agreements and differences.

He said that in mediation, confidentiality must be guaranteed to promote open discussion. For that reason, he will not file a more formal report.

"These negotiations weren't ordinary," he said. "The only thing I can say is it's a very difficult matter. I'm very disappointed by the outcome."

For his first two months of work, Bellman received $19,400 in fees and $3,885 in expenses. He has yet to bill for the last four weeks. The state and the coalition share the costs.

Mediation Effort Fails; School Funding Returns to Court

Laura A. Bischoff
Dayton Daily News
March 22, 2002 Friday

COLUMBUS - Resolving the 11-year-old school-funding case got tougher this week when mediation failed to bring an agreement and state officials unveiled a budget deficit that could top $1 billion by June 30, 2003.

REV_00336742

Court-appointed mediator Howard Bellman filed his final report Thursday with the Ohio Supreme Court after three months of talks between state officials and the coalition of school districts suing the state about its school funding system. Bellman's report - just four sentences long - said the parties worked hard, but that mediation didn't produce a resolution.

Now the case is once again in the hands of the Ohio Supreme Court. "It is unfortunate that the interested parties . . . were not able to successfully use this process," Ohio Supreme Court Chief Justice Thomas Moyer said Thursday. "As stated in our order of Nov. 16, 2001, the matter will now return to the Court's active docket for resolution."

Justice Paul Pfeifer said, "I only can conclude now that the parties trust us to resolve this more than they trust themselves to resolve this. I don't think you can reach any other conclusion."

House Speaker Larry Householder, R-Glenford, said this week he thinks the court will have to take into consideration the state's continuing money problems. The state is projecting a $400 million deficit by June 30, and Householder said there could be an additional $600 million to $800 million deficit in the next fiscal year, the second year of the state's two-year budget cycle. Tax revenues are not keeping pace with the budget.

But Pfeifer said, while he's aware of the budget troubles, "I don't think that has any bearing on constitutional calls and constitutional questions, and that's what we're deciding. That's all we're deciding."

William Phillis, director of the Ohio Coalition for Equity & Adequacy of School Funding, the group of more than 500 school districts pressing the funding lawsuit, said, "I would hope a decision on a constitutional issue would not be influenced by a short-term recession."

He added that the state didn't fix the school funding system in the 1990s when the economy was booming.

Gov. Bob Taft, meanwhile, expressed disappointment that the parties couldn't resolve the case.

"As the court recognized in its most recent decision, the state has made dramatic progress in addressing the issues that gave rise to this case," he said.

In 4-3 decisions, the court ruled in March 1997 and May 2000 that Ohio's school funding system was unconstitutional. The basic problem was an overreliance on property taxes and disparities in educational opportunities across the state.

To address the concerns, lawmakers adopted a plan that increases basic per student funding to $4,814 in 2002 and $4,949 in 2003, up from $4,294 in 2001. The state also has begun a 12-year, $23 billion plan to repair and replace old schools, overhauled the proficiency tests to match new academic standards and created a separate pot of money called parity aid to assist poorer districts.

In a third 4-3 ruling last September, the Supreme Court praised the overall plan, but said modifications still were needed to make it constitutional. The court told the the state to recalculate how it determines the amount each school district has to spend for each student's basic education, and ordered it to speed up the parity aid funding so that it's all in place by July 2003, rather than phased in by 2006.

State officials immediately said recalculating the base funding formula would cost an extra $1.2 billion a year and that the justices relied on faulty data when making their decision.

In November, the court agreed to reconsider its September ruling, and it ordered the mediation talks to try to settle the case, first filed in 1991.

Complicating matters now is that this is an election year.

"Typically, government bodies do not do very well under the pressure of elections," said John Green, political scientist with the University of Akron. "Justice Stratton probably isn't going to want to take on a really controversial ruling in the midst of an election campaign. And the other justices will be mindful of the political process. So, I guess, I wouldn't be surprised if this were put off until after the election."

Two court seats are on the ballot this year. Justice Evelyn Lundberg Stratton is up for re-election and Justice Andrew Douglas, who twice voted against the state's funding system, is stepping down at the end of this year.

Lt. Gov. Maureen O'Connor is running for Douglas' seat. Republicans Stratton and O'Connor face Democratic challengers Tim Black of the Hamilton County Municipal Court, and Janet Burnside of the Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Court.

A third seat may come open if President Bush's appointment of Justice Deborah Cook to a federal appeals court is confirmed.

Changing one face on the court could dramatically affect the school funding case, and a new majority could work to the state's advantage.

"Yeah, it's possible we could be at an advantage. I think it puts a tremendous amount of interest in the judicial elections coming up," Householder said.

The election, Householder conceded, has the potential to get ugly.

That's what happened two years ago when business groups unsuccessfully targeted Democratic Justice Alice Robie Resnick, spending more than a million dollars to try to unseat her because of her decisions on tort reform, school funding and other cases. Organized labor and trial attorneys lined up behind her.

REV_00336744

Even if the court rules before the election, state leaders know the bench is likely to change, and that could "change the dynamic of how people receive any kind of ruling," said state Sen. Jeff Jacobson, R-Butler Twp., a principle architect of last year's school-funding changes.

Phillis said the coalition will continue to ask the court to order sweeping changes in Ohio's funding system. The state, meanwhile, is asking the court to reconsider only small portions of the case.

"I think everybody needs to take a deep breath and look again at the plan that we put together," Jacobson said.

The coalition and state are expected to split the mediation costs, which through Feb. 25 were $23,285.

Hutchison urges swift OK for appeals court nominee

Michael Petrocelli
The Houston Chronicle
March 22, 2002, Friday

WASHINGTON - Wary of reports that a Texan's nomination to a federal appeals court could be in jeopardy, Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison pleaded Thursday for the Democratic-controlled Senate to quickly confirm the nominee.

Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen, who has been targeted by abortion rights and judicial watchdog groups for her rulings, has not yet been scheduled for a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"I just want to ask that we have a fair hearing on Justice Owen," said Hutchison, a Republican. Her speech on the Senate floor came after Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., was quoted as saying that Owen's confirmation could be put in doubt because of campaign contributions she received from Enron and a subsequent ruling she made that benefited the company.

"I have heard from a lot of Republicans who are concerned about her Enron connections," Leahy was quoted by Reuters as saying this week. "I mentioned . . . to the White House it may want to look into it."

According to Texans for Public Justice, a judicial watchdog group opposed to the nomination, Owen received $ 8,600 from Enron executives and the company's political action committee during her first campaign for the Texas Supreme Court in 1994.

Andrew Wheat, a spokesman for the watchdog group, said an opinion Owen wrote in 1996 gave a $ 224,989 tax break to Enron.

REV_00336745

It is not clear when Owen will get the chance to answer questions before the Judiciary Committee. Last week, Leahy said that nominees who are considered controversial, a category his aides said includes Owen, will get hearings only after the nominees win bipartisan support.

Last year, however, he said that all judicial nominees would get a hearing before the committee within a year of their nomination. Bush nominated Owen last May 9 to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which serves Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Twenty-one nominations to circuit courts - the appellate courts that are one step below the U.S. Supreme Court - are pending before the Judiciary Committee.

Hutchison's aides said she also sent Leahy a letter last week urging him to take "swift and positive" action on Owen's nomination.

Hutchison's remarks came amid increasing Republican complaints about the way Senate Democrats are handling judicial nominations. Democrats on the Judiciary Committee last week killed the nomination of Charles Pickering of Mississippi to the 5th Circuit on a 10-9 party-line vote.

Much of the criticism of Owen has come from liberal interest groups including People for the American Way and the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, on grounds that her decisions as a Texas Supreme Court justice show her to be too conservative for the federal bench, particularly on abortion issues.

The Friday Buzz

National Journal's CongressDaily
March 22, 2002, Friday

EXCERPT*
Everybody Into The Ring. Senate Republicans and Democrats have now created a template for how to get the world's greatest deliberative body to degenerate into a sandbox fight in only four weeks. Asked how this could happen, retiring Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., responded, "It's just kind of like history - one doggone thing after another." Outside groups got the ball rolling when they started running a series of ads against Majority Leader Daschle over the last recess. Then Daschle raised some questions about the war on terrorism effort, provoking an immediate reaction from Minority Leader Lott and other Republicans. It took Daschle days to recover. Although Republicans had been tagging Daschle as an obstructionist for months, the jabs seemed to finally get to him. Soon, he was scolding reporters, who had first queried Daschle about his views on the war and reported the swift GOP reaction. "Time and time and time again, you see Republican obstructionism," Daschle complained at one news conference this month. "But then you go along with the Republicans when they blame me as the obstructionist." Legislative gridlock is nothing new in the Senate, but this month the personal nature of the issues made them more raw, particularly the Judiciary Committee's rejection of the appellate court nomination of District Judge Charles Pickering Sr., a close friend of Lott's. Lott told a group of reporters that Daschle had broken an unwritten rule that each party leader should defer to the other leader on home-state issues of major concern. Lott's reaction - to launch a series of procedural moves to annoy Democrats, including holding up a Daschle FCC nominee - further strained relations, although Daschle vowed not to engage in "retribution." The Washington Post ran an editorial calling Lott's actions passive-aggressive, and urging him to do some "deep breathing."

REV_00336746

Picking on Pickering

Jason L. Steorts

March 22, 2002, Friday

Tom Daschle should meet my parents. Like most members of their species, my parents have a language entirely their own, and of its many expressions, one in particular would be appropriate for the Senate Majority Leader's ears. It goes like this: "If you want to be treated like an adult, you have to act like one first."

Last week, by killing Judge Charles Pickering's nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, Daschle and his sidekick, Judiciary Committee Chair Pat Leahy, proved themselves to be this nation's most politically powerful adolescents. And as though indicating that such childishness would be rewarded in kind, Trent Lott announced his own plan to block the nomination of a former Daschle aide to the Federal Communications Commission. The 10 to 9 partisan vote that ended Pickering's nomination was juvenile in that Democrats behaved like a pack of schoolyard bullies. Instead of giving Pickering a fair hearing, they ganged up to vilify him as "racist" -- a charge entirely unsubstantiated by his judicial record.

The smear campaign against Pickering began with attacks on a three-page law review article he wrote in 1959 (at the ripe age of 21), in which he suggested a way to strengthen Mississippi's law against interracial marriages. Never mind that shortly thereafter, in the early 1960s, he prosecuted a popular Ku Klux Klan leader and lost re-election because of it. Apparently all that matters is the few hundred words he wrote over 40 years ago. (Advice for Harvard law students: avoid writing, lest someone clobber you over the head with your juvenescent opinions a generation from now.)

Critics of Pickering's record on race also pointed to a 1994 cross burning case in which he encouraged prosecutors to seek a lighter sentence for one of the defendants. The critics, of course, told only half the story. What they failed to mention is that the individual in question had played a much smaller role in the crime than one of his co-defendants, who copped a plea and was charged with a misdemeanor. Pickering's aim was not to defend cross burning, but to express concern for the apparent injustice of sending a lesser criminal to prison for seven and a half years while the ringleader got off with no jail time at all. In the end, Pickering sentenced the man to 27 months in prison, saying, "the type of conduct that you exhibited cannot and will not be tolerated... You did that which does hinder good race relations and was a despicable act."

These are hardly the words of a racist judge. In fact, Pickering's record not only refutes the charge of racism, but suggests he is an especially capable jurist. As Judiciary Committee member Orrin Hatch argued last Thursday, Pickering's reversal rate is lower than both the national average and the average for district court judges in the Fifth Circuit. And, as Hatch noted, almost all of the matters on which Pickering was reversed were minor issues unrelated to the substance of the case (such as the precise determination of legal fees to be paid by a losing defendant to the plaintiff).

So why did Pickering get picked on? At least one Democrat was straightforward about the reasoning behind his vote. The New York Times reports that Charles Schumer admitted that Pickering was "a decent and honorable man and certainly not a racist." But Schumer went on to explain that the vote was about demonstrating the unacceptability of "stack[ing] the courts with Scalias and Thomases."

Here we see the Democrats' real motive. Although partisan politics have influenced judicial nominations before, Daschle's Democratic leadership is especially determined to exclude any judges whose ideology differs from their own. Senate Democrats defend themselves by noting that 40 of President Bush's 92 judicial nominees have been approved (not itself a very encouraging number), but they neglect to mention that the majority of these approvals were of nominees to lower-level district court positions. According to the Wall Street Journal, of Bush's 29 appeals court nominees, only a paltry seven have been approved. That is especially alarming given that the Judicial Conference of the United States has deemed 11 of these openings "judicial emergencies." Yet despite the fact that many of the nominees have received "well-qualified" ratings from the American Bar Association, hearings have not even been scheduled for most of them.

The real outrage of Pickering's defeat, however, is not Daschle's special brand of partisan uncooperativeness. Rather, it is the fundamentally antidemocratic tactics of Daschle's leadership. I say "antidemocratic" because if Pickering's nomination hadn't died in committee, it likely would have been approved in a Senate floor vote, with as many as three Democratic Senators willing to break party ranks and support Pickering. Instead, the wiles of 10 senators managed to keep the democratically elected body invested with Constitutional authority to approve or reject judicial nominations from doing just that.

And no, Republicans do not have a similar history of killing nominations in committee. Of Clinton's nominees to the federal bench, only Ronnie White was defeated-through a floor vote of the whole Senate, in which a majority voted against him. The last three nominees defeated in committee-in 1991, 1988, and 1986-all met their demise at Democratic hands.

Ultimately, Daschle's shenanigans will backfire, as Trent Lott's planned retaliation demonstrates. While such nomination wars are not the behavior we hope for from our senators, it is worth remembering who started the fight. Lott is only meeting Daschle on his own childish

U. Utah law school examines justice alternative

Adam Benson
University Wire
March 22, 2002, Friday

An alternative system of punishing criminals is the focus of a symposium sponsored by the University of Utah Law Review.

"Restorative justice is an approach to crime that involves all stakeholders in a process of group decision making on how to address the offense and its consequences for the future," according to University of Utah law professor Erik Luna. The symposium began Thursday and concludes Friday. Luna, who is organizing the symposium, learned of the system of restorative justice while in New Zealand as a Fulbright Scholar in 2000.

"Restorative justice is a different way of approaching crime and justice, in which excluded parties in the criminal justice system become integral members in deciding an appropriate sentencing in a given offense," Luna said.

Excluded parties include the victim, family members, community members and the offender.

Using the system of restorative justice, the victim, the offender and other individuals who are affected by a crime collaborate to find a sentence that is satisfying for the victim and meaningful to the offender.

Though not common in the United States, restorative justice is a common practice in New Zealand, Australia, Canada and England. Other cultures, such as Japanese and American Indian, use forms of justice that "appear" restorative, Luna continued.

Within the United States, restorative justice is reserved largely for property-based crimes such as vandalism and theft; however, in many cultures, restorative justice is used for the full spectrum of crimes, ranging from sex crimes to homicide, according to Luna.

One of the most unique aspects of restorative justice is the process can begin only when an offender admits his or her guilt or is found guilty in a court of law.

"Restorative justice really involves a collaborative approach," Luna said.

REV_00336749

Though restorative justice relies on communication between the victim and the offender, Luna said it's a highly effective way of preventing crime.

"With certain types of people, specifically first-time offenders who are not hardened criminals, restorative justice can be a very effective way of reducing repeat offenses because the offender is forced to meet face to face with the victim. People will tend to understand the harm in their conduct when they see the victim in person," Luna explained.

Restorative justice's most effective results are in the reduction of repeat offenders and diminishing the prison population.

"I see [restorative justice] as a way to lower crime -- but in the short term, it's going to be focused on particular types of offenders in particular age groups, mainly juveniles," Luna said.

Although restorative justice relies on the communication between victim and offender, Luna said it will not replace the criminal justice system.

"Restorative justice is not a complete replacement of the criminal justice system. You always need a backstop should restorative justice fail," though incarceration can be part of a restorative justice agreement, Luna said.

Many renowned legal experts are involved in the symposium, including U law professors Paul Cassell and Michael McConnell, both of whom are nominees for federal judgeships. Former Utah Supreme Court Justice Elder Dallin Oaks from the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a participant as well.

Seven Federal Nominees Still Await Confirmation Hearings Senators consider Davis for bench

Claude R. Marx
Pennsylvania Law Weekly
March 25, 2002, Monday

Though the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing last week on the nomination of Philadelphia Common Pleas Judge Legrome Davis for a federal judgeship, seven other nominees from Pennsylvania are still waiting for similar action.

Davis, nominated by President Bush on Jan. 23 for the U.S. District Court in Philadelphia, was one of four judicial nominees whom the committee considered on last Tuesday and the only one from Pennsylvania. Davis faced little questioning and was praised by both of Pennsylvania's senators and members of the committee of both parties. Davis promised that he would follow judicial precedent and interpret rather than make the law.

Davis, a Democrat, was twice nominated by former President Clinton but Senate Republicans never scheduled a confirmation hearing.

In an interview after his hearing, Davis declined to comment on the delays.

"I am happy to be here. But out of respect for the senators' tasks, it would not be appropriate to say any more," he said.

The committee will probably vote on his nomination next month, a spokeswoman for the panel said.

The other district court nominees from Pennsylvania are: Michael Baylson and Cynthia Rufe in the eastern district; Christopher C. Connor and John E. Jones in the middle district; and Joy Flowers Conti, Terrence F. McVeery, and Arthur Schwab in the western district.

Bush nominated all of them on Jan. 23, except Connor and Jones who were nominated on Feb. 28.

The Judiciary Committee spokeswoman said hearings on the seven nominees have not been scheduled because the American Bar Association has not completed its evaluation of their fitness for the bench.

The committee held a confirmation hearing last month for the nomination of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith to the 3rd Circuit Appeals Court but has not scheduled a vote.

The large number of vacancies is slowing down the time it takes for cases to be heard.

In Philadelphia, it takes an average of 15 months from the time a civil case is filed to the start of a trial, compared to 12 months in 1995 when the district court was last at full strength. Currently, there are 18 active judges and the court is supposed to have

In Pittsburgh, it takes an average of 23 months from the time a civil case is filed to trial, compared to 20 months in 1995, when the district court was last at full strength. Currently, there are five active judges there and the court is supposed to have 10.

The caseload is helped by retired judges who take senior status and assume one-fifth of a district judge's normal caseload.

"Most cases don't settle until a trial date is set and with fewer judges doing more work that delays trials and slows down the process. That is the case even though each judge's caseload is going up," said U.S. District Judge Robert Cindrich, who is one of the five judges in Pittsburgh.

Brief news stories from Las Vegas Homeless Encampment

REV_00336751

The Associated Press
March 23, 2002, Saturday,

LAS VEGAS (AP) - After winning a battle in federal court Friday, Las Vegas officials said they plan to remove about 175 homeless people who are staying in an encampment near downtown.

City officials said they would clear the garbage-filled camps from sidewalks along several blocks by Sunday.

At the conclusion of the 45-minute hearing, U.S. District Judge James Mahan denied a request for an injunction filed earlier in the day by the American Civil Liberties Union of Nevada.

The judge said he would be overstepping his bounds if he told Las Vegas officials how to handle the homeless problem. He found persuasive arguments in which city attorneys stressed the public health hazards created by the encampments.

"Having human waste and garbage thrown in the streets like some medieval town just doesn't work in the modern world," Mahan said. "We can't have that because we know how diseases get passed around."

Marcia Kriefer Sworn-In As Judge

Karen Abbott
Rocky Mountain News
March 23, 2002 Saturday

Colorado U.S. District Judge Marcia Krieger, 48, was sworn-in formally Friday in the downtown Denver courthouse.

"We need your help desperately," Chief Judge Lewis Babcock told her. Krieger took the judge's oath privately March 1 and already has been handed a caseload of 285 civil lawsuits. She also will handle criminal cases and appeals from the federal bankruptcy court across the street, where she had been a judge since 1993.

In an interview before the ceremony, Kreiger said U.S. District Court is challenging because of the breadth of subjects it handles.

"In a given day, you may consider a voting rights case, a criminal case, a prisoner's allegations of civil rights violations, a personal injury lawsuit and a securities lawsuit," she said.

Krieger, a Colorado native, earned her law degree from the University of Colorado. Her father, Donald Smith Sr., was a state judge in Arapahoe County and later on the Colorado Court of Appeals. Her mother, Marjorie Smith, was an accountant with her own practice. Both attended Friday's ceremony.

Krieger's husband, Frank "Harry" Roberts, helped her into her black robe after she took the oath and - prompted by Babcock's low-voiced "Give her a peck on the cheek," did. Roberts is a lawyer with a commodities trading firm.

President Bush appointed Krieger to the post on the U.S. District Court. The U.S. Senate confirmed his choice 99-0.

Krieger replaces U.S. District Judge Daniel Sparr, who has taken senior status. Senior federal judges may continue to handle cases if they choose, but don't have to.

Jurist's nomination bogged in Senate

Columbus Ledger-Enquirer
March 22, 2002 Friday

The nomination of a Mobile jurist for a vacancy on a federal appeals court remains stalled five months after President Bush sent his name to the U.S. Senate.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has not set a date to consider the nomination of U.S. Magistrate William Steele for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta. But U.S. Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., said he expects Steele will be confirmed by the Senate.

Savage Nominated for Eastern District Judgeship

Shannon P. Duffy
The Legal Intelligencer
March 25, 2002, Monday

President Bush last week nominated attorney Timothy J. Savage, a 56-year-old civil litigator and Democratic Party ward leader, to fill the final remaining vacancy on the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

For Savage, 56, the news of his nomination was bittersweet because it came on the same day that he found his mother, Edna Savage, dead in her home.

Congressman Robert Brady(D) said Friday that while Savage's mother did not live to see her son sworn in as a judge, she was aware that his nomination was imminent.

"I think he'll be an excellent judge. He's extremely bright," Brady said. Under a "formula" devised by Republican Sen. Arlen Specter, nominations to the federal trial courts in Pennsylvania are divided between the two parties on a 3-to-1 ratio, so that for every three nominees chosen by the party in the White House, the other party gets one.

REV_00336753

Savage joins three other Eastern District nominees now awaiting confirmation by the Senate, including Philadelphia Common Pleas Judge Legrome Davis, Bucks County Common Pleas Judge Cynthia Rufe and former U.S. attorney and current Duane Morris & Heckscher partner Michael M. Baylson.

Although Davis is a Democrat, sources say he "did not count as the Democratic pick" because he was not Brady's choice.

Brady on Friday confirmed that it was he who pressed for Savage's nomination.

"Timmy is my guy and they honored that, and I really do appreciate that," Brady said. Davis was tapped for the Eastern District bench once before by President Clinton only to see his nomination die on the vine as a Republican-controlled Senate refused to give him a hearing. Now, however, Davis is the closest to winning confirmation because he has already had a hearing before the Senate's Judiciary Committee.

Because Davis was previously screened by the American Bar Association, a source said that the ABA was able to update the report quickly. Hearings for Baylson and Rufe cannot be scheduled until their reports are completed, the source said.

Savage earned a bachelor's degree in 1968 from Assumption College and earned a law degree at Temple School of Law in 1971.

Early in his career, Savage's practice included some criminal defense work, but within a few years he focused almost entirely on civil litigation in both state and federal courts.

Beginning in 1976, Savage began working part time as a hearing examiner for the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board.

Attorney Thomas Kline of Kline & Specter, who chairs the joint commission that screens applicants to the Eastern District bench for Specter and Sen. Rick Santorum (R), said Savage won the recommendation of the commission because of his impressive career as a trial lawyer for 30 years, and the breadth of his experience, including criminal work and sitting in an adjudicative capacity with the LCB, hearing cases that involved liquor code violations and license transfers.

Kline said Savage also had a strong academic background, having graduated from college with honors and serving as an editor on Temple's law review.

Savage also has a significant resume in local politics, having served as leader of the city's 23rd Ward for many years.

Kline said the committee was also impressed by Savage's community involvement in Northeast Philadelphia, including longtime support of the Northeast Community Center for Mental Health and Mental Retardation and the local chapters of the Boys' and Girls' Clubs.

Savage's nomination was among five judicial nominations announced by the White House on Friday, including one for the Western District of Pennsylvania, two in Missouri and one in Illinois.

The Western District nominee is Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone, who, like Davis in Philadelphia, was nominated before by President Clinton but never received a Senate hearing.

In fact, several of Clinton's nominees from Pittsburgh suffered the same fate.

Western District Judge Robert Cindrich was nominated by Clinton for the 3rd Circuit but never had a Senate hearing, and former U.S. Attorney Harry Litman and attorney Lynette Norton were both nominated by Clinton for seats on the Western District bench but were never confirmed.

Judicial pick's ability is cited; 'It's not like he was in circles of wealth or power ... growing up'

Todd Bensman
The Dallas Morning News
March 23, 2002, Saturday

Friends and colleagues of state District Judge David Godbey say his political connections and powerful credentials are only two of the reasons he has been nominated for federal judge.

"My observation is there are some guys who are politically connected, and so they make it in the world," longtime friend and Dallas lawyer John McDowell said. "Whereas with David, you look at him and say his abilities are what got him where he is. It's not like he was in circles of wealth or power when he was growing up." Judge Godbey was nominated in January by President Bush to become one the Northern District of Texas' nine judges. If confirmed, he would replace U.S. District Judge Robert B. Maloney, who took senior status with its reduced caseload.

The Senate has not scheduled a confirmation hearing for Judge Godbey, who is among a group of 51 nominees waiting to be confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. Judge Godbey declined to comment, pending confirmation.

Judge Godbey was born the son of a Methodist preacher in Temple, Texas. He earned engineering and math degrees from Southern Methodist University and a law degree from Harvard University, graduating at the top of his class. The Republican was elected in 1995 to the 160th District Court, giving up a job at Hughes & Luce.

Marc Taubenfeld, president of the Dallas chapter of the Federal Bar Association, said political connections are essential for a state judge to ascend to the federal bench. The evaluation process requires the backing of the state's two U.S. senators, who forward their picks to the president. Judge Godbey was among 10 people evaluated by a special committee over three months, members of the committee said.

Successful appointees also have to be well-regarded in the legal community and pass a variety of tests, including an FBI background check, Mr. Taubenfeld said.

The Dallas Bar Association's annual ratings of judges have consistently given Judge Godbey high marks in legal ability, impartiality and judicial temperament. The most recent lawyers' poll gave him an 88 percent overall approval rating.

Tex Lezar, who served on the committee and says he is a friend of the Godbeys, said the judge's unusual background in engineering and academic accomplishments at Harvard University carried tremendous weight with committee members. It also helped that Judge Godbey is known as a loyal Republican.

Mr. Lezar, who was an assistant attorney general under President Ronald Reagan, said he did not have to make any special phone calls on Judge Godbey's behalf.

"David is an incredibly, incredibly smart and experienced lawyer, as well as being a really good guy," he said. "I would think David probably was the top-ranked person."

The judge and his wife, a partner in the Dallas law firm of Gardere, Wynne and Sewell, have two children and live in the Lakewood area of Dallas.

Known as a political conservative, Judge Godbey has delivered legal advice to the Bush family. He founded the Dallas Republican Lawyers Club before running for judge.

"He's not one who gets elected and you never see him again," said Bob Driegert, chairman of the Dallas County Republican Party. He's seen at lots of political functions. But he's a very unassuming individual. He's very low key, but you always know you're dealing with someone who has a brilliant mind."

Michael Parham, immediate past president of the Dallas Trial Lawyers Association, said experience has shown that Judge Godbey has been able to separate his conservative political views from jurisprudence.

"I don't think he has a political agenda, and he calls them like he sees them," Mr. Parham said. "My belief is he is a student of the law, he follows the law, does not try to create the law, and that's the proper role of a sitting trial judge."

Some friends said they were unsure what motivated Judge Godbey to pursue the federal post. Although being a federal judge offers job security and prestige, the gap between judges' pay and opportunities in the private sector has never been wider.

REV_00336756

"He could have stayed at Hughes & Luce and been a wealthy guy," Mr. McDowell said. "He chose public service, which is something fewer and fewer people are doing because of the gross disparities in economics."

Judge Hoping 2nd Time A Charm

Mackenzie Carpenter
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
March 25, 2002 Monday

Two years ago, Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone was one of four Clinton nominees to the federal bench in Western Pennsylvania who saw their hopes of confirmation dashed because of a feud between the state's Republican senators and the White House.

But last week, Cercone's career prospects got a boost when President Bush nominated him to be a U.S. District judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

So how did Cercone, a Democrat, come to be chosen for a second time by the Bush White House?

He is not speculating. "I don't want to comment on that," said the otherwise loquacious, friendly Stowe resident and 20-year veteran of the county court.

Did Cercone, 49, pass muster with Republicans because of his position, for example, on abortion, which has been considered a key litmus test for judicial nominees from both liberal and conservative camps?

"No one knows for sure what my position is, and no one asked me," Cercone said.

But if he is asked about abortion by U.S. senators in his confirmation hearing, what will his answer be?

"I don't know what I'll say, I'll give consideration to the question, and answer it as I feel appropriately at the time."

Regardless of his opinions -- or lack of them -- on such hot-button issues, Cercone's nomination has been praised in Pittsburgh legal circles, where he is known as a careful, middle-of-the-road judge who treats lawyers with consideration.

"As a criminal defense lawyer, I always hope that judges will attempt to level the playing field for our clients and protect the accused's constitutional rights, and he does that," said Caroline Roberto. "He's fair. But more than that, he respects lawyers, and what we do, especially criminal defense lawyers. He's been a prosecutor, and he always lets me zealously represent my client in the courtroom."

REV_00336757

John Bingler, another attorney who also was one of Clinton's nominees to the U.S. bench, agreed. "He's a good judge," Bingler said. "He treats lawyers well."

If Cercone's life story isn't exactly about Horatio Alger triumphing over adversity, it certainly is about how a Pittsburgh boy worked hard and made the most of his family connections.

His great-uncle was Michael Musmanno, a longtime judge on the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and at one point a Nuremberg war crimes tribunal judge.

"He wasn't on the one that tried Goering or the main Nazis, but on the second one, which was important, too," Cercone said.

Musmanno was considered a brilliant legal mind and something of a character. Known as a passionate defender of Italian anarchists Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, Musmanno was also an ardent anti-communist and supporter of Republican Sen. Joseph McCarthy who, at one point, asked the Cincinnati Reds to change their name in an effort to avoid headlines describing Reds victories.

It became a Pittsburgh tradition of sorts to see Musmanno appear on television in the early and mid-1960s every Columbus Day with KDKA anchor Bill Burns, debunking the idea that the Vikings landed in the New World before Christopher Columbus.

"He became irate when Yale University released its findings about the Vikings on Columbus Day," recalled Cercone of his great-uncle's efforts to prove that Columbus discovered America. "It became personal, yeah."

With a relative like that -- who also kept autographed pictures of Babe Ruth and Eleanor Roosevelt in his chambers -- and another uncle, William Cercone, who was president judge of the state's Superior Court, it is perhaps not surprising that the young Cercone decided he wanted to be a lawyer at age 6.

"Being raised in that family, and watching these men from the time I was a young boy, well, I was fascinated," Cercone said.

He made all the right moves during a speedy ascent up the legal ladder. After graduating from Duquesne Law School in 1977, he worked in the public defender's office, clerked for a common pleas judge, spent time as an assistant district attorney, and as a district magistrate in Stowe before becoming the youngest person elected to Common Pleas Court at age 32.

From 1993 to 1999, Cercone was the administrative judge in the court's criminal division, and says he's proudest of his role in establishing the first drug court in Western Pennsylvania.

"I believe that warehousing these people with drug addictions is not the answer, because they will simply return to criminal conduct after they're released," he said. "The answer is getting

Bush choice for appeals court from Mobile stalled

The Associated Press
March 21, 2002, Thursday

The nomination of a Mobile jurist for a vacancy on a federal appeals court, while drawing little political fire, remains stalled five months after President Bush sent his name to the U.S. Senate.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has not set a date to consider the nomination of U.S. Magistrate William Steele for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta. But U.S. Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., Steele's sponsor, said he expects Steele will be confirmed by the Senate. Steele's nomination apparently has been delayed because of his ruling in a racial discrimination case. Two civil rights groups - the SCLC and NAACP - were critical of his decision last April to throw out a job discrimination suit brought by three black workers at a Choctaw County paper

them treatment."

Why did he seek appointment to the federal bench? "I love being a trial judge, and I believe when you want to stay a trial judge, the natural progression is from the state judiciary to the federal judiciary. Without diminishing the importance of state court, you get to deal with more significant issues on the federal bench."

He says he wasn't bothered by the political controversy that ultimately derailed his first nomination.

"I never felt frustrated because I enjoyed my current position. I was honored to be nominated, and if it [the federal nomination] was going to happen it was going to happen."

Name: David Cercone

Place of birth: Stowe

In the news: President Bush has nominated Cercone, an Allegheny County Common Pleas judge and a Democrat, to be a U.S. District judge.

Education: Graduate of Sto-Rox High School; received a bachelor's degree in history from Westminster College in 1974; received his law degree from Duquesne University in 1977.

England Gets District Judge Nomination

Kevin Livingston
The Recorder
March 25, 2002 Monday

SACRAMENTO - President George W. Bush has nominated Sacramento County Superior Court Judge Morrison England Jr. for a seat on the Eastern District of California.

If approved by the Senate, England will replace Chief Judge Lawrence Karlton, who took senior status two years ago. England, an African-American, was one of six names sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee on Friday and the only California nominee.

A Republican, England was appointed to the municipal court bench by Gov. Pete Wilson in 1996 and to the superior court a year later.

He is a 1983 graduate of McGeorge School of Law, University of the Pacific, and spent his career practicing in Sacramento with the firm Quattrin, Johnson, Campora & England.

In his short time on the Sacramento bench, England may best be known for presiding over a challenge to the State Bar's use of member dues to fund political speech.

In 1999, England ruled in favor of the plaintiffs, who were represented by the conservative Pacific Legal Foundation, and awarded them each $10 - reflecting the portion of Bar dues that went to political and ideological speech.

England isn't the first judicial nominee for Karlton's seat.

Former President Bill Clinton nominated Sacramento appellate attorney Marian Johnston two years ago, but her nomination was never acted upon by the Senate and expired.

EXCERPT
WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House has officially nominated candidates for federal judgeships in Missouri, naming St. Louis Circuit Judge Henry Autrey to Missouri's eastern district and Springfield lawyer Richard Dorr to Missouri's western district.

Sen. Kit Bond, R-Mo., chose both the nominees and said Thursday that their names had been submitted. The president makes nominations but customarily follows the wishes of a senior lawmaker such as Bond.

The nominations must be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

Autrey, 50, was a lawyer in the St. Louis prosecutor's office before being named associate circuit judge in 1986 by then-Gov. John Ashcroft, a Republican. The late Democratic Gov. Mel Carnahan elevated him to circuit judge in 1997.

Autrey is being considered for the post denied Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White in a partisan showdown on the floor of the U.S. Senate. White's nomination was derailed by then-Sen. Ashcroft, and the jurist took the unusual step of testifying against Ashcroft at the U.S. attorney general's confirmation hearings.

Dorr, 57, is managing partner of the firm Blackwell, Sanders, Peper and Martin and has practiced for several years in Springfield. He holds a University of Missouri law degree.

Cercone Bush Choice For U.S. Bench; Nomination by Clinton Had Been Killed By Dispute

Ann McFeatters
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
March 22, 2002 Friday

The White House said yesterday that President Bush is nominating Allegheny County Common Pleas Judge David Cercone to be a U.S. District judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Cercone, 49, of Stowe, was first nominated by former President Clinton but that nomination died in a dispute between Senate Republicans and the White House.

"I'm deeply honored that the president would nominate me to this very important position," Cercone said last night. "I presume that my 20 years of judicial experience was an important factor in my nomination." Carolyn Ban, dean of the University of Pittsburgh Graduate School of Public and International Affairs, said she was delighted that Cercone has been nominated again.

"I have no idea whether he is a Democrat or Republican," she said. "I just know that he is a fine judge."

Cercone, a Democrat, has been an adjunct professor in legal studies at Pitt since 1983 and also serves on the Board of Visitors. From 1993 to 1995 he was an adjunct professor at Robert Morris College.

Cercone graduated magna cum laude with a bachelor of arts degree from Westminster College and from the Duquesne University School of Law in 1977. He practiced law for two years and was assistant district attorney in Allegheny County from 1979 to 1981. He was a district justice from 1982 to 1985 and has been in Common Pleas Court since 1986.

Cercone was one of four Clinton nominees to the federal bench in Western Pennsylvania who fell prey to a feud between the White House and U.S. Sens. Rick Santorum and Arlen Specter, both Pennsylvania Republicans.

The senators complained that the White House violated an agreement that for every three judicial nominees from the White House they would get to nominate one. Even though Cercone passed a screening committee set up by Specter and Santorum, he was one of many judges who were never voted on for confirmation because of the dispute.

Last year, a merit selection committee prepared a list of names for the White House of suggested nominees to fill vacancies on the federal bench. Cercone's name is believed to have been on that list.

Bush nominates 2 for federal judgeships

St. Louis Post-Dispatch
March 22, 2002 Friday

EXCERPT
President George W. Bush nominated St. Louis Circuit Judge Henry E. Autrey for a federal judgeship for the Eastern District of Missouri on Thursday.

The president also nominated Richard Dorr, managing partner of the firm Blackwell, Sanders, Peper and Martin in Springfield, Mo., for federal judgeship for the Western District of Missouri.

Both nominations were based on recommendations by Sen. Christopher "Kit" Bond, R-Mo. Their names now go to the Senate, where they will have to win confirmation.

If approved, Autrey would take a seat vacant since 1996. Former President Bill Clinton nominated Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White for the post in 1991, but his nomination was defeated by Senate Republicans in 1999.

Split Decision; Bush's job-approval ratings are sky high--so why does he keep getting walloped on Capitol Hill?

James Carney and Douglas Waller Time
April 1, 2002, Monday

After Sept. 11, George W. Bush launched the Breakfast Club, a meeting held every two weeks or so with the top four leaders in Congress. The idea was to make the lawmakers feel important by treating them to scrambled eggs, coffee and the President's personality. But the Breakfast Club has not met since Feb. 27. That morning Bush led the group--Democrats Tom Daschle and Dick Gephardt and Republicans Trent Lott and Dennis Hastert--on an hour-long tour of the world, briefing them on Afghanistan, Pakistan and his recent trip to Korea, Japan and China. But the next morning Daschle and Gephardt learned what he had left out. They woke up to a headline that said Bush was considering sending military advisers to fight al-Qaeda terrorists in Yemen. It was a major development, but Bush had not mentioned it. Daschle and Gephardt were furious. The Breakfast Club needs a new name; you might even call it the Fight Club. Complaints that the Bush Administration has been ignoring Congress are coming from Democrats and Republicans alike--and Congress has found some extremely effective ways to punch back. For a President with strong popular support--he scored a 75% approval rating in the latest TIME/CNN poll--Bush has been on a surprising losing streak in Congress since Sept. 11. Democrats forced him to go along with making airport-security workers federal employees and yanked his corporate tax breaks out of the economic-stimulus package. G.O.P. leaders persuaded him to "postpone" Social Security reform, and members of both parties compelled him to rewrite his faith-based charity initiative so drastically that it now bears scant resemblance to the original proposal. Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee shot down his nomination of Charles Pickering for the federal appeals court. And just last week the Senate, by a 60-to-40 vote, sent him John McCain's campaign-finance-reform bill, which he does not want to sign but will, and stalled an energy bill that allows drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR), which the White House has lobbied furiously to pass.

Bush might have won some of these fights, legislators say, if he had worked a little harder to stroke Congress. Ted Stevens, the top Republican on the Senate Appropriations Committee, joined Democratic chairman Robert Byrd in an angry letter to Bush two weeks ago over Bush's refusal to allow Homeland Security chief Tom Ridge to testify before Congress. Republican Congressman Ernest Istook, who chairs the House subcommittee that controls the Office of Homeland Security's budget, hinted that he might hold up funds unless Ridge comes forth. (After all that, the White House began talking about a compromise.) And some Republicans grumble that by refusing to release information to Congress about Vice President Dick Cheney's energy task force, the White House has pointlessly provided the Democrats with ammunition in their effort to portray Bush and the G.O.P. as tools of Big Business. "Why antagonize people you're going to need down the road?" asks a senior Republican Senator. "I don't get it."

White House aides say the conflict is nothing more than what Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer calls "a classic executive-legislative struggle over information." They have a list of 88 briefings Administration officials have given lawmakers on the war and homeland security, and tartly note that some were sparsely attended. They point to the 124 meetings Bush has had with members since taking office in January 2001. "For God's sake, if they've got concerns about what we're doing, all they have to do is ask!" says an exasperated Bush adviser. Adds another: "We kiss so much ass every day [on Capitol Hill], we have to ice down our lips at night."

Bush was famous in Texas for picking and choosing his fights, and backing off when he knew a cause was lost. He is following the same strategy in Washington, but congressional Republicans grumble that he is often too choosy. House Speaker Hastert was quietly enraged last month when Bush all but abandoned G.O.P. Congressmen battling campaign-finance reform. (During the 2000 campaign, Bush frequently suggested the reform bill was unconstitutional but has since signaled that he will sign it. "How can he sign a bill he believes is illegal?" asks one Republican.) Bush barely tried to rescue Pickering's nomination at the 11th hour, even though the judge's patron was Lott, the Senate's Republican leader. The day before the Judiciary Committee's vote, Bush phoned Charles Schumer, a liberal Democrat on the panel, to ask if he would change his mind and support Pickering. Schumer announced in early February that he was against the Mississippi judge. Incredulous at Bush's call, Schumer politely declined.

Bush's reluctance to spend political capital on tough fights has emboldened Democrats. Daschle and Gephardt plan to press for vastly more money than Bush wants for prescription-drug and education spending, two issues they believe will play well for theirparty in the November elections. And Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee have targeted four more conservative nominees they might block for the appeals court: Jeffrey Sutton in Ohio, Miguel Estrada in the District of Columbia, D. Brooks Smith in Pennsylvania and Priscilla Owen in

Texas. Dan Bartlett, the White House communications director, says Bush intends to fight for those nominees, but then he also insists Bush fought hard for Pickering. To counter the Democrats, the President plans tospend the coming months pushing Congress to pass an energy bill that includes drilling in the ANWR, more tax cuts for small businesses and a patients' bill of rights. "There's a healthy agenda out there," says Nick Calio, Bush's chief liaison to Congress, "waiting to be acted on."

Passing that agenda will not be easy, in part because Bush, despite his reputation, is not always eager to do what is necessary to win over lawmakers. In December he gave a ride on Air Force One to half the South Carolina congressional delegation as he flew back to Washington from a speech in Charleston. The lawmakers spent the flight in the plane's conference room, waiting for Bush to stop by. Inside his office, aides kept reminding Bush, who was in the middle of giving an interview, that he needed to pay a visit to the Congressmen and Senator who were aboard, but the President kept putting it off. Finally, as the plane landed, Bush turned to his chief of staff, Andy Card, laughed and said, "Forget Congress." --With reporting by John F. Dickerson/Washington

Jay Bookman
The Atlanta Journal and Constitution
March 21, 2002 Thursday

Fifteen years ago, the Senate's rejection of Robert Bork as a nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court introduced a new word to right-wing political discourse. Since then, any conservative rejected by the Senate is said to have been "borked," meaning unfairly maligned by mean liberals.

Bork, the man, has done almost as well as "bork," the word. Through books, articles and speeches, he has used his fame as a pulpit from which he has preached his worldview far more fully than he had in his confirmation hearings. It has, to say the least, been a revelation. In 1987, Bork's opponents painted him as an extremist, and Bork has spent the years since then proving them right.

For example, Bork says that government has the legal right to bar its citizens from using birth-control devices, such as the Pill. He believes that government can, if it chooses, forcibly sterilize repeat criminals.

He believes that Congress ought to have the power to overturn any decision by the Supreme Court, and he thinks that government censorship is an idea whose time has probably come. He also believes that the U.S. Supreme Court --- the "extremely liberal Supreme Court" headed by William Rehnquist, no less --- is the single most important cause of the nation's cultural corruption.

To his credit, Bork hasn't been coy about expressing those beliefs. But I would not recognize the nation that he describes as the United States. Nor would I want a man of those viewpoints sitting on the Supreme Court with a lifetime appointment. In "borking" Robert Bork, the Senate did the nation a great service.

Which brings us to Charles Pickering, the latest judicial nominee alleged by conservatives to have been "borked." On a 10-9 vote, strictly along party lines, the Senate Judiciary Committee has rejected Pickering's nomination to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, a decision that has set off howls of righteous anger.

In the wake of that vote, Senate Democrats have been accused of everything from subverting the Constitution to playing politics with the judiciary. U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch has even complained that Pickering is the victim of a "lynching" by senators who, in Hatch's view, committed the cardinal sin of rejecting a nominee on grounds of ideology.

Now, if Hatch were sincerely angered by what happened to Pickering, he would probably be even more outraged to learn how the Senate treated another judicial nominee, Michael Schattman.

Pickering at least got two committee hearings and a committee vote, all within a year of his nomination. He may not have liked the final outcome, but he did get the courtesy of a vote.

Schattman, by contrast, waited three long years and never got even a hearing. He finally withdrew his name when it became clear that those running the Senate Judiciary Committee would never give him a chance to be considered.

The man running the Judiciary Committee all that time was Orrin Hatch.

Of course, Hatch and his GOP colleagues denied opposing Schattman on ideological grounds. Oh, no --- only Democrats would be that nefarious. Instead, Republicans charged that Schattman was . . . too partisan, yeah, that was the reason! As proof, they dredged up the fact that he had once served as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

Horrors!

Given the Schattman Test, however, one wonders how the Republicans could ever have nominated Pickering. He had not only been very active in Republican politics, he led the effort at the '76 GOP convention to rewrite his party's platform on abortion, committing the GOP to oppose the practice even in cases of rape or incest.

Republicans claim to believe that judges should be appointed based on ability, not ideology, yet the push to get "more judges who think like we do" has become a GOP obsession. They claim to oppose judges who are "activist," but the list of cultural and legal changes that the GOP hopes to achieve by taking over the judiciary is as long as Hatch's nose.

But most of all, their self-righteous whining about such issues has gotten unbearable. If Hatch insists on perfecting his Dudley Do-Right imitation, he should do it in the privacy of his own home, not in front of the TV cameras.

Gonzales Gets Mixed Reviews for High Court Nomination

Jason Pierce
CNSNews.com
March 25, 2002

The man some think may be President Bush"s first pick for a nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court could have a tough row to hoe in the nomination process, with both liberals and conservatives.

Informal speculation in Republican circles suggests that White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales is a leading candidate for nomination to the high court, and some believe the long-time Bush ally has many factors going for him.

"I think (he"s) certainly a very likely candidate, because I think he"s very appealing to the administration," said Nan Aron, president of the Alliance for Justice.

Aron added that "given he"s close to Bush, he"s Latino, has judicial experience," Gonzalez is probably on the President"s short list of potential Supreme Court nominees.

None of the current Supreme Court justices has indicated any plans for retirement, but given the long-term power exercised by justices on the court - and the age of some of those currently sitting on the nine-member bench - the potential for a Bush nomination to the court has Republicans comparing notes.

Associate Justice John Paul Stevens is the oldest member of the Supreme Court at 81, followed by Chief Justice William Rehnquist at 77 and Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor at 71. None have stated they are contemplating retirement.

Some think that the fact Gonzales is Hispanic makes him a front-runner on a potential short list of candidates for the high court, but Gonzales plays down his ethnicity and his current, high-ranking White House position.

"For most Americans, it matters very little that a Hispanic is doing this job," Gonzales said at a recent March 21 breakfast with young Hispanic Republicans in Washington. "What they care about, as they should in my judgment, is that the job is getting done."

Gonzales added that Bush has tried to include diversity when choosing his nominees, both for the federal bench, and all other appointments in the administration.

"As governor, (Bush) planted diversity in his appointments as an important compliment to integrity and confidence," said Gonzales. "This is likewise true with appointments to the bench."

Born in San Antonio and raised in Houston, Gonzales spent two years in the Air Force and two years at the Air Force Academy. He eventually graduated from Rice University in 1979 with a degree in political science.

Gonzales then attended Harvard Law School, and was hired upon his graduation by a Houston firm, Vinson and Elkins.

In 1995, then-Gov. Bush appointed him to chief counsel to the Governor in Texas; two years later, Bush made Texas Secretary of State. Soon after that, Gonzales was nominated to the Texas Supreme Court in 1998.

When announcing his appointment in Dec. 2000 to be White House Counsel, Bush called Gonzales "a man I can trust."

But to conservatives and liberals alike, his record on the bench in Texas does not inspire the same level of trust the president feels.

Some of the actions taken by Gonzales since assuming his White House role have rubbed liberals the wrong way. The most notable action was ending the 50-year tradition of consulting the American Bar Association, which is considered a liberal organization, when screening judicial nominees.

Gonzales has been a key player in Bush"s anti-terrorism agenda, with plans for military tribunals for foreigners suspected of terrorism. He was also instrumental in labeling prisoners "battlefield detainees" instead of "prisoners of war" at Guantanamo.

As White House counsel, Gonzales has also been the point man on some of the administration"s initiatives, including those involving Vice President Dick Cheney and energy firms like Enron.

"I think he has shown in his [capacity as] White House counsel, a single minded interest in tilting the courts rightward, by excluding the American Bar Association... and by failing to engage in meaningful consultation with Senators about the judgeship," said Aron said.

"Those are all very disturbing and significant concerns of ours, together with the judicial nominees that have been selected so far," she said.

Aron added that despite Gonzales being portrayed by some as an ideologically moderate judge, Gonzales shows his true conservative colors in his actions in the White House.

"From our point on view, the positions he has taken as White House counsel on military tribunals, on withholding from the public scrutiny all are very troublesome," Aron said.

"I think there was initially an effort to portray him as a moderate, but I would say that his involvement in very significant issues at the White House concerning judicial selection, presidential papers, important documents all raise alarm bells," she said.

Since the Texas Supreme Court deals in mainly in civil and juvenile cases, few court decisions and opinions are rooted in ideology.

But some conservatives have their concerns, especially in the case of one particular decision by Gonzales while on the Texas Supreme Court.

Gonzales agreed with the court"s majority in ruling that a 17-year-old girl was "sufficiently well informed to have an abortion without parental notification."

In a July 9, 2001, column, former presidential candidate Pat Buchanan said Gonzales has the potential to become another David Souter, who was nominated to the U.S. Supreme Court by Bush"s father, and who is considered by some to be one of the high court"s most ardent liberals.

Buchanan called Gonzales "a strategist"s dream," because of his ethnicity and closeness with Bush, but warned that, even with a limited knowledge about his ideology, conservatives should beware. "The little we know is all we need to know," Buchanan wrote.

"Politically, it makes sense," Buchanan wrote. "But philosophically, the little we know suggests that the search committee should recast its nets."

Next Judicial Target
Robert Novak
Townhall.com

March 23, 2002

With Federal District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi defeated for nomination to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, another nominee of President Bush for that court is likely to be targeted by Senate Democrats: Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen.

The case against Owen, a conservative, involves her ruling in favor of the Enron Corp. in a 1996 tax case after receiving a judicial campaign contribution from the company. She received $8,600 from Enron out of $134,058 it gave to state Supreme Court members. The court ruled unanimously in Enron's favor in the tax case.

A footnote: Although Senate Democrats are stalling Bush's appellate nominees while permitting lower court choices to be confirmed, they may target University of Utah Prof. Paul Cassell's mill.

But since then, black lawyers who practice in Steele's courtroom have called him fair.

Sessions' office has blamed the plaintiff's lawyer in the discrimination suit, Richard Meelheim of Birmingham, for stirring up opposition to Steele's nomination. Meelheim said he believed Steele's ruling in the case raised questions about whether he should serve on the powerful appellate court.

Steele's ruling in the discrimination suit has been appealed.

After their initial complaints, neither the NAACP nor the Southern Christian Leadership Conference appears to have taken further public action to derail the nomination.

Steele, 50, has served as a magistrate judge in Mobile since 1990. Formally nominated for a seat on the 11th Circuit in October, he has consistently declined to comment. An appellate judgeship is a lifetime appointment and currently pays $159,100 per year.

Steele has never held public office. According to his responses to a Judiciary Committee questionnaire, Steele has never published a single article, meaning that he has not put any positions into writing that might later politically backfire on him.

"To the extent that this particular judge has no history, there's nothing to go after there," said Kay Daly, spokeswoman for the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary, a conservative umbrella group also based in Washington.

"That certainly is helpful in terms of getting him through the process, but I think it's a really sad commentary on the confirmation" system, she told the Mobile Register's Washington correspondent in a story Thursday.

Democrats, she said, are choosing their targets carefully. Steele "doesn't seem to be on the hit list of the left," she said.

The Senate Judiciary Committee last week rejected Bush's nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering Sr. of Mississippi to a federal appeals post. Democrats accused Pickering of racial insensitivity.

Pickering fallout persists; GOP shuts down committees in retaliation for snub

Federal Court Logjam

The Augusta Chronicle
March 21, 2002

Democrats say the partisan Senate Judiciary Committee vote to kill the nomination of federal Judge Charles Pickering to the Fifth Circuit of Appeals is no different than what Republicans did, when they controlled the Senate, to then-President Clinton's judicial nominees.

To some extent, this is true. Republicans did block most of Clinton's judicial nominees in his last two years in office, but not in committee. They were killed (or withdrawn if the votes weren't there) on the Senate floor. Democrat partisans on the Judiciary panel, however, wouldn't let the Pickering nomination go to the full Senate. They knew U.S. Sens. Zell Miller, D-Ga., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., would vote with 49 Republicans to confirm.

As Sen. Don Nichols, R-Okla, pointed out in a Sunday TV interview, overall Clinton got about 90 percent of his judicial nominees confirmed, most of them in the first few years following his two elections. President Bush, still in his early years, has only gotten about 30 percent confirmed.

In fact, most of Bush's nominees can't even get hearings. Pickering at least got that much. Democrats' partisan bludgeoning of the judicial confirmation process seems more than just pay-back for old GOP abuses. It appears they're using the process to extract their pound of flesh for having been, in their view, "cheated" out of a presidency they believe they won in 2000.

Since Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., became Judiciary chairman he won't schedule hearings for nominees he believes are committed to judicial restraint or who might be pro-life.

Without hearings, conservative nominees -- with long and distinguished judgeship services behind them -- can't be voted on by the Judiciary panel, much less sent to the full Senate for confirmation.

This shows just how much ideology is corrupting the confirmation process. It's also serious business that goes beyond partisanship. The rising number of federal judiciary vacancies -- including more than 30 classified as "judicial emergencies" (appeals courts that can't keep pace with their caseloads without new judges) -- pose a threat to the integrity of the nation's justice system.

REV_00336769

The Boston Herald
March 21, 2002 Thursday

Your editorial suggests that I misrepresented Judge Charles Pickering's record as hostile to civil-rights protections ("Bush must fight for his judgeships," March 16). Any fair review of his record shows that Pickering consistently votes against civil rights claimants and litters his opinions with statements hostile to civil rights. Even the conservative Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals has reversed him 15 times in civil rights cases. His American Bar Association rating does not reflect his commitment to upholding civil rights laws, and while you trumpet his support by blacks in his hometown, you neglect to say that all 140
Mississippi NAACP chapters as well as 32 Mississippi black state legislators opposed Pickering.

You accuse me and other Democrats of blocking nominees who "pose a threat to judicial activism." But Pickering displayed extraordinary activism when he campaigned federal prosecutors to lighten the sentence of a convicted cross-burner. Five legal ethicists wrote to the Judiciary Committee that Pickering's behavior in that case was inconsistent with impartial judging.

Rather than advise President Bush on how to battle for unsuitable nominees, you would do better to encourage him to nominate qualified, moderate individuals. The Senate has already confirmed 42 such nominees.

Sensible jurists needed

Fort Worth Star-Telegram
March 21, 2002 Thursday

The Senate Judiciary Committee's rejection of a nominee for the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals had nothing to do with presidential prerogative and everything to do with needless partisan bickering.

There are plenty of distinguished, fair, sensible jurists that the White House and Democratically controlled Senate could agree on.

The rejected nominee, U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, was Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott's pick, not Bush's. Leniency toward people who terrorize their neighbors by burning crosses on their lawn, something Pickering advocates, is not a principle in Bush's philosophy of compassionate conservatism.

.... If senators of both parties put judicial records of fairness and intelligent decisions ahead of partisan advantage, the problem of stalled judicial nominations would recede.

A Disappointing U.S. Attorney Choice

The New York Times
March 21, 2002

United States attorneys are a bulwark of the justice system. The top federal prosecutors at the state level, they enforce some of the nation's most critical laws. With vast resources, including the F.B.I., at their disposal, United States attorneys take on the government's biggest, highest-impact cases, from prosecuting international terrorists to getting to the bottom of the Enron mess.

New York City has two United States attorneys, one based in Manhattan and the second, for the Eastern District, in Brooklyn. President Bush has nominated Roslynn Mauskopf for the Brooklyn post, which prosecuted the Abner Louima police-brutality case and indicted 65 people in a huge medical insurance fraud ring last summer. Whoever heads the office will have a large impact on the level of organized crime, drug trafficking, public corruption and racial discrimination in the city. Roslynn Mauskopf is not without professional credentials, but she is still a disappointing choice. In 13 years in the Manhattan district attorney's office, she rose to chief of the frauds bureau, and she has served since 1995 as New York's inspector general, a position she was appointed to by Gov. George Pataki.

What Ms. Mauskopf lacks is experience as a federal prosecutor. United States attorneys must make constant judgment calls based on fine points of federal law and prosecutorial practice -- when to prosecute or not, what criminal sentence to pursue under arcane federal guidelines, how to cooperate with other units of government. These decisions are too important for on-the-job training. Federal prosecutorial experience has almost invariably been seen as a prerequisite for the top New York posts.

Questions have also been raised about Ms. Mauskopf's independence. She is clearly close to the Pataki administration, whose influence accounts for her surprising nomination. That alone should not be a disqualifying factor; nominees to these prestigious posts often have connections to powerful officeholders. But Democrats have charged that she has gone too easy on state government in her six years as inspector general. That issue was raised, but not answered, by New York State's comptroller, Carl McCall, in a 2000 audit that faulted Ms. Mauskopf for refusing to turn over records that he said were necessary for evaluating her performance.

Governor Pataki's office claims that the fight over Ms. Mauskopf is a proxy for a larger issue: Senator Charles Schumer's unhappiness that he is not being given a bigger role in federal judicial appointments in New York. This inter-party fight mirrors the one in Washington between President Bush and Senate Democrats over Mr. Bush's judicial nominees. In both cases, there has been too much finger-pointing and motive-questioning.

The fair administration of justice requires that nominees for both United States attorney and the federal bench be men and women from the political mainstream who are politically independent and demonstrably qualified for their jobs. Ms. Mauskopf's nomination does not meet those standards.

Powell Request for Fast Action Spurned

Robert Novak

The Augusta Chronicle

March 25, 2002 Monday

SECRETARY OF STATE Colin Powell telephoned Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., seeking action before the Easter recess on what he termed three bills linked to national security, but the Senate adjourned Thursday for 10 days without acting.

Powell was pushing for measures to help President Bush's visit to Latin America: Andean trade, border security and amnesty for illegal aliens. Bush aides grumbled that Daschle managed to pass a campaign finance reform bill that will take effect after the 2002 elections, but did not schedule the time-sensitive measures.

The illegal alien bill faces tough opposition. Democratic Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina leads its foes, but he has support from a top Republican conservative -- Sen. James Inhofe of Oklahoma. * WITH FEDERAL DISTRICT Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi defeated for nomination to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, another nominee of President George W. Bush for that court is likely to be targeted by Senate Democrats: Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen.

The case against Owen, a conservative, involves her ruling in favor of the Enron Corp. in a 1996 tax case after receiving a judicial campaign contribution from the company. She received $8,600 from Enron out of $134,058 it gave to state Supreme Court members. The court ruled unanimously in Enron's favor in the tax case.

A footnote: Although Senate Democrats are stalling Bush's appellate nominees while permitting lower court choices to be confirmed, they may target University of Utah Professor Paul Cassell's nomination for the federal district court in Utah. Cassell, a former federal prosecutor, is an advocate of replacing the Miranda rule.

* SEN. TIM HUTCHINSON, the first Republican ever elected to the Senate from Arkansas, may be overcoming personal difficulties in his second-term bid. That increases pessimism among Democratic strategists about retaining their one-seat margin in the Senate.

Opposed by Democratic State Attorney General Mark Pryor (son of former Sen. David Pryor),

REV_00336772

Hutchinson was considered highly vulnerable because of his divorce and marriage to a former aide. However, a Feb. 17-19 survey that Hutchinson commissioned by national pollster Ed Goeas gave him an 11-point lead among most likely voters. Conservative Christians favored Hutchinson over Pryor by 40 percentage points.

Democratic strategists calculate that they must capture at least two Republican Senate seats to keep their Senate majority. They view their best hope as New Hampshire, where Sen. Bob Smith is being challenged in the Republican primary by Rep. John E. Sununu. Next to Smith, the most vulnerable GOP incumbent may be Sen. Wayne Allard of Colorado.

* CONTRIBUTORS TO Republican Elizabeth Dole's North Carolina campaign for the U.S. Senate this week received an appeal for $250 or $500 to combat "a viciously negative TV ad campaign against me" by the North Carolina Democratic Party.

"It didn't take long for our opponents to unleash their first negative attacks against me," Dole's letter began. The state's Democrats have tried to link her with the Enron scandal. Requesting an "emergency contribution," she enclosed a pre-paid Federal Express envelope.

* REPUBLICAN CRITICISM of Secretary of Transportation Norman Mineta, the only Democrat in President George W. Bush's Cabinet, is rising because of his opposition to arming airline pilots.

The new airline security act allows individual airlines, with the approval of the Transportation Department, to decide whether to arm pilots. Mineta is opposed to the provision. So is Jane Garvey, the Clinton administration holdover who is leaving as head of the Federal Aviation Administration.

A footnote: Opposition by Mineta and Garvey is more than an aberration by two Democrats in a Republican administration. Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge also opposes armed pilots -- suggesting that could be Bush's position.

The weakness of 'law'

Re: "Judicial criticism can't be deflected by yelling 'Bork,' " by Richard Cohen, and "Those who rewrite Bible have little interest in Truth," by William Murchison, Viewpoints, March 13.

Both columns suggest a major problem in our society today: the relationship between the law and what is right or just. Mr. Cohen suggests that because something is legal does not make it right, while Mr. Murchison equates The Law to Truth.

We are proud to be a nation of laws, but I would suggest that our reliance on law is what has brought us to our current state.

Non-legislative solution

Re: "Selfish motives kill environmental efforts," by Paul Krugman, Viewpoints, March 18.

Environmental efforts haven't been "killed." Mr. Krugman and others sharing his line of fuzzy thinking believe that just because they will not get the new government laws they want curtailing the choices U.S. auto buyers can make that this will "kill environmental efforts."

The solution to higher vehicle fuel-use efficiency they say they want is right under their noses, but they don't want to recognize it. All they have to do is persuade new vehicle buyers to choose available smaller engines in everything they buy. If they succeed, U.S. fuel-use efficiency would increase dramatically without any new government laws.

Rather than work on this obvious solution they prefer to lobby the government to mandate people's choices for them. These so-called environmentalists really do not want the solutions that are available, they just want issues to demagogue.

GOP set the pattern

Re: "Pickering Nomination - Gamesmanship is souring the process," Editorials, March 15. Your editorial on the nomination of Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering comes about nine years too late. The partisan gamesmanship that began during the Clinton administration is merely being continued. It is now too late in the game for the Republicans to attempt to change the rules. Judge Pickering deserves no more consideration than the process allows. If the Republican-created process allows his nomination to "be bottled up" in committee, then the Republicans have no one but themselves to blame.

Furthermore, comparing Mr. Pickering's nomination to the nomination of Ronnie White presents a simplistic analogy that ridicules Judge White's nomination. Judge White fought to enforce laws that were a part of American jurisprudence, whereas Judge Pickering fought to ignore laws, such as the Voting Rights Act and other civil rights laws. Minority groups have reason to question Mr. Pickering's ability to enforce laws that he is ideologically opposed to - mainly civil rights laws. Now that the Senate Judiciary Committee recognized the problems with the Pickering nomination and decided not to present it to the full Senate, the Republicans have no one but themselves to blame.

Sabotage by Democrats

Re: "Just pick best judges," by John Harlan, Letters, March 15.

At the end of the elder Bush's presidency there were still 130 judicial nominees whom the Democratic-controlled Senate had not even allowed the courtesy of a full Senate vote. Now in George W. Bush's term, Sens. Tom Daschle and Patrick Leahy have only allowed seven of 29 appeals court nominees out of committee.

The Democratic leadership is doing their best to sabotage the younger Bush's presidency in the same fashion they sabotaged the elder Bush's administration. Anyone like letter-writer John Harlan who thinks that the refusal to even allow Charles Pickering a full Senate vote was based on his record is either hopelessly naive or just an extreme partisan.

'Gotcha!'

Roll Call
March 25, 2002 Monday

The Senate is beginning to resemble the Hatfields and the McCoys. Democrats, now that they're in power, are playing payback for Republicans' refusal to process President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees and for GOP obstruction of Democratic proposals. And Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) is responding to the rejection of his friend Charles Pickering's nomination by railing at Majority Leader Thomas Daschle (S.D.) and carrying out reprisals against Democratic priorities. Both sides are acting as if there were no tomorrow - that is, as if, after this election or the next, the now majority might not become the minority and vice versa. Are the two sides going to play "gotcha" and counter-"gotcha" forever? Or are they going to start acting like civilized grown-ups seriously bent on conducting the people's business? Sometimes they do so, as in the serious debate just completed over campaign finance reform. But obstructionist tactics have become the norm.

Right now Lott is making the battle intensely personal, singling out Daschle in a Roll Call interview last week. "The Senate is becoming dysfunctional, the Daschle Democrat dysfunctional process," he said. "It is happening on bill after bill." Indeed, there's some merit in his allegation. Daschle claimed that he could not bring Pickering's nomination to the floor because he had to respect the role of the Judiciary Committee. But he brought an energy bill to the floor without committee action - obviously because he feared that the Energy and Natural Resources Committee would produce a bill that wasn't to his liking.

There is, as Republicans charge, a blacklog in the Senate of measures that have passed the House: energy, an Andean trade bill, lifting of the national debt ceiling, trade promotion authority, and a border security and immigration measure regarding Mexico. On the other hand, as Lott should know better than anyone, corralling 60 votes to pass any controversial legislation isn't easy. Lott himself, when he was Majority Leader, often was accused of being ineffectual - sometimes by members of his own party.

So far, Lott, in his wrath over the Pickering rejection, is targeting a narrow range of Democratic items, including stifling the nomination of a Daschle staffer for the Federal Communications Commission and holding up money and a Judiciary Committee hearing. He indicated that he plans "a little something every day" in the way of retaliation. But he's also threatening to prevent the Senate from acting on anything if Democrats don't start moving House-passed bills.

Closing down the Senate was a tactic Democrats occasionally employed when they were in the minority and felt abused. Will this never stop?

Senator Leahy's personal Constitution; Partisanship over Pickering leaves a scar on the Senate

Nat Hentoff

The Washington Times

March 25, 2002, Monday

When Judge Charles Pickering was sent home to Mississippi by a 10-9, party-line Senate Judiciary Committee vote, the Democratic chairman, Patrick Leahy of Vermont, said unctuously: "We have made the Constitution work and we have made this committee work." Does he have a copy of the Constitution unknown to the rest of us?

I challenge Mr. Leahy to find in the Constitution, in James Madison's notes on the debates as the Constitution was being written or in the Federalist Papers, any justification for allowing a single committee, no matter which party is in the majority, to veto a federal judicial nomination.

Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution says clearly that the president shall nominate judges "with the advice and consent of the Senate." There is no footnote giving the final authority to the Judiciary Committee. Its veto power is the result of Senate rule. A constitutional amendment is not required to change that rule. All it requires is enough senators who believe in a process that is democratic. Before Judge Pickering was dismissed, Pennsylvania Sen. Arlen Specter, a Republican who understands constitutional democracy, urged his colleagues to send Judge Pickering's nomination to the floor so that the full Senate could advise and consent. Both Republican resolutions to that effect were voted down 10-9. Even if they had passed, Democratic Majority leader Tom Daschle had vowed to block a full Senate vote.

Before the final votes were taken, Mr. Specter predicted that this partisan warfare, including the refusal to give Judge Pickering at least a fair vote on the floor, would "leave a scar" on the Senate. And not for the first time.

Committee member Charles Schumer, a New York Democrat, had made it clear for months that he will hold judicial nominees to his own ideological tests. After Judge Pickering went down, Mr. Schumer said grandly: "There is clearly no mandate from the American people to stack the courts with conservative ideologues. So, if the White House persists in sending us nominees to throw the courts out of whack with the country, we have no choice but to vote 'no.' "

The gloating Mr. Schumer did not tell us how he knows what "the American people" want in their federal judges. Has it not occurred to him that the clearest way to find out is by allowing all the members of the Senate to vote on the judicial nominee, no matter what the Judiciary Committee decides? That's the countrywide advice to the president the Framers put into the Constitution.

Mr. Leahy, who prides himself on his knowledge of and fealty to the Constitution, said righteously after the Pickering vote that the Senate's constitutional role "is advise and consent. It isn't advise and rubber stamp." That is, indeed, according to the Constitution, the whole Senate's role - not just one committee in the Senate.

I wonder at what point such good government outfits as the civil rights organizations, People for the American Way and Alliance for Justice will join Mr. Specter in urging the Senate to change its rule and abide by Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution. I'm not very hopeful, however, that the impetus will come from them. They ignore the fact that, if this game continues to be played by the current rules, many of their candidates will lose on strict party-line votes when the Republicans next have the majority on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

If democratic change is to come, the arena from now on will be the congressional and presidential elections. Candidates of both parties should be challenged by their opponents, by citizens and by the media on whether and when the entire Senate will make the final decision on who sits in the federal courts and on the Supreme Court.

I was mordantly amused when, after the vote on Judge Pickering, Sen. Diane Feinstein of California told The Washington Post, in justifying her vote against Judge Pickering, that he is a "very polarizing figure."

This is the very polarizing senator who said on NBC's "Meet The Press" recently that she would not vote for any judicial nominee whom she believes would overturn Roe vs. Wade. Period. Using Mr. Schumer's terminology, her absolutist, pro-abortion-rights criterion is "out of whack" with a considerable percentage of Americans. Mr. Schumer and other members of the Judiciary Committee, in both parties, owe it to the country to tell us their definition of what makes a judicial nominee "in whack" with the country - and also how they define "judicial independence."

Judicious Compromise is needed to Fill Judgeships

David Kushma

The Commercial Appeal

March 24, 2002 Sunday

Judge Charles Pickering and his supporters, including his advocate in the White House, are understandably dismayed that the Mississippi jurist won't be promoted to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Republic will survive the Senate Judiciary Committee's party-line vote this month to reject Pickering's nomination. Still, the judge's failure to win confirmation deserves a brief post-mortem, because it portends future, larger conflicts between the Republican president and the Democratic-controlled Senate - conflicts that threaten the federal courts' ability to dispense justice.

The spin each party has applied to Pickering's defeat - Republicans called it an affront to democracy; Democrats said they spared the nation a demonstrably unqualified judge - warrants skepticism. Both positions are laced with hyperbole bordering on hypocrisy. It should surprise no one that a president would use his constitutional power to appoint judges to try to shape the federal judiciary to reflect his ideology, and fit his view of political and social issues, including the proper role of government. President Bush did that with his nomination of Judge Pickering.

And it's equally unsurprising that senators who don't share that vision, and are in a position to block it by using their constitutional power to reject the president's nominees, would seek to do so. Judiciary Committee Democrats did that.

"Advise and consent" amounts to more than waving through every candidate the president nominates who is not obviously incompetent or corrupt. It means less, though, than trying to take over the appointment power or imposing an ideological litmus test on a qualified nominee. Steering between those poles is a political process.

It would seem that one thing the federal courts don't need after the Supreme Court effectively decided the 2000 presidential election is greater politicization. But it isn't one-sided partisanship in this instance; both parties are complicit in the mess that judicial confirmation has become. Bush and Senate Democrats need to work together to clean up that mess.

conducting Enron-related business in retaliation against Democrats for killing the nomination of Charles Pickering to a federal appeals court.

Republicans invoked an obscure rule that limits committee hearings to two hours, forcing a halt to official business in the Governmental Affairs Committee and the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee.

The parliamentary maneuver came as the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee was set to vote on a bill that would limit the amount of employer stock that could be included in 401(k) accounts. The bill, a response to the Enron collapse, was expected to pass the Democrat-controlled committee and move to a vote of the full Senate.

"All they're doing is delaying the inevitable," said Jim Manley, spokesman for committee Chairman Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. The vote on the bill was rescheduled for today.

The Governmental Affairs Committee was holding a hearing on why credit agencies were slow to downgrade Enron's credit rating during its collapse.

When news of the shutdown came, committee Chairman Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., officially adjourned the hearing, but kept the proceedings going as an informal discussion.

Republicans also sought to shut down the Judiciary Committee, but it already had adjourned for the day.

The committee shutdowns are the latest in a series of retaliatory moves taken by Republicans after Democrats on the Judiciary Committee killed Pickering's nomination in a party-line vote last Thursday.

The parliamentary maneuvers have been spearheaded by Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott,R-Miss., a personal friend of Pickering's.

President Bush had nominated Pickering, a federal judge in Mississippi, to an open seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which serves Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

"Senate Republicans strongly believe that we should have an understanding on when President Bush's Circuit Court nominees, many of whom have been languishing in this Judiciary Committee for almost a year, will get hearings and be treated fairly," said Ron Bonjean, a spokesman for Lott. "We will continue to call attention to this issue."

Ranit Schmelzer, spokeswoman for Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., called the shutdown "another piece of Pickering pique" that undermined cooperation in the Senate.

Last week, Lott said he would block the nomination of a Daschle aide to the Federal Communications Commission. Lott also blocked the Judiciary Committee's request for $ 1.5 million to investigate the performance of the intelligence community in regard to the terror

REV_00336716

One of every nine federal judgeships is vacant. The problem is even more acute on the appeals court level: Thirty of 179 posts are unfilled, at a time when the Supreme Court is ruling in about 100 cases a year, leaving nearly 30,000 to the 13 appeals courts to decide.

Bush has nominated 29 candidates to fill appeals court posts; the Senate has confirmed seven of them. Eleven of the vacancies are considered emergencies.

Many of the cases the high court leaves to appeals courts deal with such vital issues as civil rights, abortion, gun control, criminal law and environmental protection. Failing to fill judicial vacancies weakens the fair, swift administration of justice.

But the dilemma didn't arise overnight. It ill behooves Republicans to slam Democrats for "obstructionism" on the Pickering nomination, since they have engaged in blocking tactics of their own.

When the roles were reversed - during the six years when Bill Clinton, a Democrat, was in the White House and Republicans held a Senate majority - the Senate failed to confirm more than a third of Clinton's judicial nominees. Democrats note that they have confirmed 40 of Bush's 92 judicial nominees, although most of them have been to lower-level federal district courts.

Pickering surely possesses the basic qualifications to sit on the Fifth Circuit appeals court. The American Bar Association, usually no friend of Republicans or conservatives, gave him its highest rating.

But it seems equally true that Bush nominated Pickering largely on the strength of his enthusiastic endorsement by Senate Republican leader Trent Lott of Mississippi. It strains credulity to suggest that on merit alone, he was unquestionably the best nominee the President could have offered.

The assertion that Pickering is a racist, circulated by some of the judge's more extreme opponents in liberal interest groups, is absurd. What Pickering wrote more than 40 years ago about interracial marriage in Mississippi seems more relevant to that time than to his qualifications as a judge today.

This newspaper and others have reported the support Pickering enjoys among African-Americans in his hometown of Laurel and throughout Mississippi, including that of Charles Evers, the brother of the slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers. Pickering testified against a Ku Klux Klan leader in the 1960s when it was neither politically advantageous nor safe to do so.

Yet it bears noting that the African-American bar association in Mississippi opposed Pickering's confirmation, as did a number of black elected officials and the state chapter and national leadership of the NAACP. His recent record offered valid grounds for concern.

Several of his rulings as a district court judge on such matters as voting rights and job discrimination display skepticism toward vital federal legislation bordering on hostility. He has been overruled 15 times.

His contact with federal authorities before he handed down a sentence in a cross-burning case was troubling, as was his solicitation of letters of support for the appeals court post from lawyers who practice before him. He evidently was less than fully candid about his past relationship with Mississippi's notorious Sovereignty Commission.

You may not agree with the Judiciary Committee's vote against Judge Pickering, but you can't fairly say it had no basis or that it was merely partisan. That said, much of the Beltway interest-group opposition to Pickering's nomination seemed opportunistic and overheated.

Had Pickering's nomination gone to the full Senate, he likely would have been confirmed, since several Democrats had announced their support for him. President Bush and other Republicans insist that the Judiciary Committee should have permitted a floor vote.

That's a legitimate argument. But if you're prepared to junk Congress's committee system in this instance because you didn't like the outcome, where else are you prepared to cut corners?

The Pickering dust-up may have been just the preliminary bout before the main event: Bush's first nomination to the Supreme Court, whenever a vacancy occurs. And it appears the fallout won't be confined to the federal court system.

Lott has blocked the nomination of a Daschle aide to a federal post and held up a Judiciary Committee budget request to show his displeasure with Pickering's defeat. And he isn't done: "You'll see it in a lot of ways and in a lot of days," he said.

There's no need for judicial nominations to end in stalemate. Nor is there a need to settle for lowest-common-denominator candidates; history has shown that the most inoffensive judges are not necessarily the best ones.

As the President makes his nominations to the federal courts, and Senate Democrats consider them, both sides must decide whether it's more important to fill judicial posts with mainstream candidates or fight over polarizing ones.

Plenty of excellent judges are out there. Overburdened federal courts await their service. Putting the two together has to be the priority.

The Pickering Vote

The Washington Post
March 22, 2002, Friday

REV_00336780

The Senate Judiciary Committee vote on the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering -- 10 Democrats against, nine Republicans for -- shows that the issue was purely partisan, not about his qualifications [front page, March 15].

The vote did not reflect the will of the American people as expressed by all our representatives -- the full U.S. Senate. The Democrats, knowing his nomination would have been approved by the full Senate, denied the American people -- us -- our vote, for obvious partisan reasons. This is not the way a democracy should work.

Are you listening, Sen. Daschle?

I can hardly believe the belly-aching of the Republicans on the Judiciary Committee regarding the defeat of the Pickering nomination. One would think that this is the first time there's been partisan action on such nominations.

I remember what happened to the nominations sent to the committee during the eight years of the Clinton administration: A high percentage of his nominees were blocked or stalled by the Senate. Unless our elected representatives decide that the business of government is more important than mindlessly supporting the party line (translation: getting reelected), history will repeat itself. Too bad the Republicans weren't more statesmanlike.

School funding interlude is over

The Plain Dealer
March 24, 2002 Sunday

T he only thing Ohio gained from a few months of mediation is further proof that compromise cannot resolve the state's school funding scuffle.

There's no more avoiding it: The Ohio Supreme Court has to take a stand.

Wisconsin-based mediator Howard Bellman had a reputation as someone who could settle even the most difficult disputes. But as happened so many times already, the combatants demonstrated that a negotiated truce was not only unlikely - it was downright impossible. In the wake of mediation's spectacular failure, the justices are expected to meet next week. The court has to decide whether to stick with its September decision - which the members of the majority acknowledge is based on faulty data - issue a revised ruling, or open the case to additional arguments. Bet on the justices to pick option three, if only because it allows them still more time avoid decisive action.

The case is complicated still more by impending changes in court membership. Justice Andrew Douglas will leave the court at the end of this year because he has reached the mandatory retirement age, while Justice Deborah Cook is awaiting congressional action on her nomination to a federal appellate judgeship. With 4-3 votes common in nearly every step of this process, such departures could signal wholesale changes - even reversals - in the court's approach to school funding.

Still, the justices should not look to the calendar to spare them the pressure of a ruling. The uncertainty of this case has distracted school districts for years now, hindering planning efforts and attempts to communicate with voters. The court should act promptly, recognizing that whatever action the justices take is bound to draw criticism from several quarters. Given the guarantee of controversy, the court should simply follow the law, rather than seeking political solutions or horse-trading pieces of the decision to achieve a majority.

This case is too crucial to Ohio to be tainted again by ego, illogic or flip-flopping justices. The court's meeting next week should end with a clear timetable for a new ruling based on accurate data - and issued with more than deliberate speed.

Implacable?

The Richmond Times-Dispatch
March 24, 2002 Sunday

A few days before Senate Judiciary Democrats spiked the nomination of Charles Pickering, The Washington Post's Richard Cohen wrote, "It's apparently true that in [Pickering's] hometown, the minority community likes him just fine, but they are judging the man and not the jurist. It is the latter who could do real damage to the body of laws that protect civil rights, not because he is a racist but because he is implacably and, sometimes, hyperventally conservative." Cohen - perhaps rightly - assumes that federal judges must rule on cases regarding civil rights laws. In other words, his argument goes like this: An implacable conservative would do irreparable harm to civil rights rules, thus such a conservative - mind you, any conservative who might not change - is not fit to serve on the federal bench.

Verily, such liberals believe the courts should not contain conservatives. And because Republicans typically nominate conservatives, smug Democrats wielding power in the upper chamber's Judiciary Committee can dump Republican nominees without blinking an eye.

Yet the Democrats should remember that once upon a time, some on the left regarded one-half of the "conservative" Minnesota Twins - Harry Blackmun - and John Paul Stevens as certainly not hard left. Implacably and sometimes hyperventally conservative as they might have been in early Seventies, change Blackmun and Stevens did.

March 23, 2002, Saturday

What Michael Kinsley failed to mention in his sneering March 18 op-ed piece is the widely known fact that the defeat of Charles Pickering's nomination to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals was nothing more than a preordained act by the Democrats to send a message to the Bush administration regarding potential future openings on the Supreme Court.

To find proof that the vote in committee had nothing to do with Pickering's qualifications for the position, one need look no further than the judicial review done by the American Bar Association (ABA), which gave Pickering the highest available rating. This happens to be the same ABA judicial review that the Democrats fought tooth and nail to reinstate after the Bush administration had decided that its usefulness was more political than anything. Apparently the president was on to something, as in this case it would seem that the opinion of the ABA is only accurate when it jibes with the endgame of the Democrats.

And while I agree with Kinsley that it is not the Senate's job to simply rubber-stamp the nominations of any president, in this case the Senate never got a chance to do anything at all, as this particular nomination was killed in committee in a display of partisanship without getting a full vote on the Senate floor. For a journalist as well-respected as Kinsley to end his article with a supposition falling just short of slander regarding "probable" lies made by Clarence Thomas about "more notorious" matters is inexcusable.

-- Brian Ish

Michael Kinsley wonders that unless he's "crazy, 'hard left' is not an accurate description of the average Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee."

The liberal group Americans for Democratic Action rates every member of Congress on a scale of 1 to 100 based on how they vote, with 100 being a "perfect liberal score." The group gave the 10 Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee an average rating of 95.5.

If Kinsley doesn't consider a group of people who vote straight liberal positions 95 percent of the time as being "hard left," then that just shows how completely out of touch he is with reality.

Benched; Senate's Partisanship Mucking Up Justice

The Wichita Eagle

Congress faces enough threats right now to its collegiality and productivity from external forces. So why is the U.S. Senate letting a thing like President Bush's judicial nominations break it into partisan halves?

The answer depends on the answerer's perspective. In wake of the Senate Judiciary Committee's party-line 10-9 rejection last week of the appeals-court nomination of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering of Mississippi, Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said the Senate's role is "advise and consent. It isn't advise and rubber-stamp." Republicans say the Democrats are doing the bidding of liberal interest groups and denying President Bush's nominees fair treatment. We'd have to side with the Republicans this time, just as we sided with the Democrats when Republicans wielded their power by blocking many of former President Clinton's judicial nominations. No matter the source, such partisanship is unacceptable when it undermines the president's constitutional right to pick judges, obstructs the confirmation process and ultimately leaves benches empty.

That said, the GOP's retaliatory response isn't helping.

First, Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., blocked a $1.5 million request from the Judiciary Committee for post-Sept. 11 funding and put the brakes on an appointment to the Federal Communications Commission of a senior aide to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D. Wednesday, Republicans succeeded in shutting down two of three Senate committees they'd targeted for a Pickering-related protest. As the partisanship reigns, 20 more Bush nominees wait for Judiciary Committee hearings, some nearly a year after getting Mr. Bush's nod.

Granted, the Senate's advise-and-consent function is serious business, a power that can shape the justice system for decades to come. And conventional wisdom holds that the next wave of judges will have the power to sustain or overturn Roe v. Wade, turning up the heat on senators to use their judicial confirmation votes to shore up their base on abortion.

But just as presidents have an obligation not to nominate the incompetent or unqualified to the federal bench, presidents deserve broad authority in making their choices for such judicial posts. And the Senate has a responsibility to give those choices every possible consideration and, barring some glaring defect, confirm them quickly. Yet the backstabbing and stalling on judicial confirmations has escalated to the point of obstructing justice. It needs to stop.

Partisanship is threatening our government

Re: Stop bitter partisanship in Washington,
March 20.

Congratulations to David Broder for having the courage to tell it like it is and to the Times for printing such an excellent column.

There is, as Broder points out, a bitter partisanship brewing in Washington while all the time the combatants are pounding their chests about their virtue and support for the war effort. Unfortunately there is something really smelly about the Democrats' refusal to allow the full Senate to vote on the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. It shows that the special interest groups hiding behind the cover of the Democratic majority on the Judiciary Committee will once again get their race and gay-rights issues protected despite the illegality of the entire process. I have read the Constitution, the Bill Of Rights, and the Declaration of Independence and nowhere can I find reference to a special judiciary committee mentioned by our founding fathers. Just when did this appointed group come into existance, and why do we allow such a travesty to continue?

You would think, as Broder points out, that Majority Leader Tom Daschle would tread lightly on the rights of the president to appoint judges as is his constitutional privilege, but instead he is using his one-vote majority in the Senate and on the Judiciary Committee to thwart most, if not all of President Bush's appointees.

Even those people who support such foul play must surely understand that thanks to jumping Jim Jeffords we have a divided government that plays to the minorities and strengthens the resolve of our enemies in the war on terrorism.

For the good of the United States and for the preservation of our republic let's all write to our members of Congress to stand up for truth, honor, justice and the American Way before partisanship has wrecked our constitutional form of government.

Panel was right to oppose judge

I think that the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee did the right thing when they killed the nomination of U.S. Judge Charles Pickering. They saw in him a man who was pretty far right wing, and by killing this nomination, they are pressing President Bush, who lost the popular vote in the 2000 elections, to put moderate judges, and not far right wingers who inject their own personal opinions into rulings, onto the bench.

Bush and the Republicans keep on talking about a "crisis" in regard to the lack of federal judges. It should be noted that when President Clinton nominated someone, oftentimes the Republicans, once again bowing to the demands of the radical right wing, didn't even let many of those nominations come up for vote in the Judiciary Committee. At least committee Chairman

Patrick Leahy is doing that!

The crisis cannot be blamed solely on the Democrats, but on the far right wingers like Trent Lott and Jesse Helms, among others. The Democrats, in their vote to deny Pickering the promotion, voted their conscience. They make me proud to be a Democrat!

Senators are behaving immaturely

The recent rejection by the Senate Judiciary Committee of Judge Charles Pickering has a certain resemblance to a college fraternity black-balling. How can full grown men on the public payroll continue to act so immaturely?

I think it would be doing a public service for the media to publish the names of the dissenting voters in this debacle. For instance, were Florida's senators involved? Or was it the same old holier-than-thou clan including Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts and Patrick Leahy of Vermont.

Certainly since Sept. 11 someone in the Democratic Party must realize that the people are no longer into "politics as usual." I wish we could fast-forward to the fall elections. The results of that voting, I'm afraid, are going to rock the Democratic Party's boat for a long, long time to come.

Take politics out of nominations, too

Re: Senators attack judicial independence, by Nat Hentoff, March 14.

In an ideal world, of course Nat Hentoff would be correct that the judiciary should be independent. In the real world, we have politics.

Hentoff's concern seems to be limited only to senatorial review. He ignores how judicial nominees are selected in the real world. As everyone knows, they are selected not only for their judicial expertise but also for their judicial philosophy. Lately, their philosophy seems more important than their expertise.

In fairness, to take politics out of senatorial review requires a similar step in the nomination process.

Reversing Judge Smith

REV_00336786

The Washington Post
March 24, 2002, Sunday

Leonard L. Fleisig's March 9 letter, "Judgment Call in the Senate," claimed that criticism of D. Brooks Smith's reversal rate is "unpersuasive. Conservative judges tend to have a higher reversal rate in liberal-leaning circuits." The overwhelming majority of the judges who reversed Judge Smith's most controversial rulings, however, were conservative judges who were selected by Republican presidents. For example, this describes two of the three judges who unanimously reversed Judge Smith twice in the Chambers case. The 3rd Circuit explained that its second "mandamus" reversal was a "drastic remedy that a court should grant only in extraordinary circumstances in response to an act amounting to a judicial usurpation of power," and that Judge Smith "ignored both the letter and the spirit" of its prior reversal.

The Politics of Judgeships

The New York Times
March 25, 2002, Monday

Editorial Desk

Since the rejection earlier this month of Judge Charles Pickering for the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, senators and White House officials have dwelled on old grievances. Trent Lott, the Senate minority leader, has threatened retaliation. Democrats are slow-walking other nominations because they do not relish another fight. Meanwhile, President Bush's top political adviser told a conservative religious group that Mr. Bush would keep selecting conservative ideologues for the bench.

It is perhaps inevitable that showdowns over judgeships, which involve individuals, create more bitterness than those over legislation. The disagreements can seem personal even when they are not. What is therefore urgently needed is a commitment to procedures that accommodate both sides, and an agreement to avoid ideological court-packing in the judicial selection process. Senator Orrin Hatch has charged that a "Circuit Court vacancy crisis" has resulted from the Senate's failure to schedule hearings on 8 of President Bush's first 11 choices for the Appellate Division, and that no progress is being made to fill the empty slots.
Senator Patrick Leahy, the Judiciary Committee chairman, says the vacancies actually result from the stalling by Republicans that prevented President Bill Clinton's choices for the Appellate Division from being approved.

Mr. Leahy is, in fact, more right than Mr. Hatch on this. At least Mr. Bush's choices are going through a hearing process, albeit a slow one in some cases. Dozens of Mr. Clinton's nominees were not even given the courtesy of a hearing or a vote, and the delays on judges, especially at the appellate level, were much worse in that period than they are now.

Nonetheless, stalling by the Democratic-controlled committee is not the answer. The Judiciary Committee needs to act promptly on the nomination of candidates who have won acceptance as moderates and people of judicial stature and temperament. The current Senate has in fact compiled an excellent record of approving such judges at the district level. This can produce its own dangers -- when a district bench nominee is less than qualified, he or she must be scrutinized and rejected, and that can take time. On the appellate level, the committee must continue with its deliberate practice of processing the nominees with hearings and background checks, and then arranging for an up-or-down vote in the Judiciary Committee.

The Bush administration and the Republican leadership in the Senate must take seriously the Democrats' demand for more mainstream nominees. Recently Karl Rove, Mr. Bush's top political aide, dismissed that idea by telling a conservative religious group, according to The Washington Post: "Guess what? They sent the wrong message to the wrong guy." Mr. Rove may have forgotten, but Mr. Bush was the guy who ran for president as a uniter, not a divider. Many of his judicial nominations remain troubling, and divisive, just as Judge Pickering was, from the standpoint of their records in protecting mainstream rights. Mr. Bush also said recently that he favored judges who would not make new law but simply interpret the law.

The Senate should apply that standard across the board, including the tendency of some judges to strike down laws on gun control or worker safety. It is time for the White House to define its legacy as working to establish a judiciary that wins the broad respect of the center and is not appointed to curry favor with the right-wing ideology of the few.

The fallout for the defeat of Judge Charles Pickering nomination to a federal appellate court continues on Capitol Hill. On Tuesday, Lott put a procedural stick in the spokes of an energy bill amendment offered by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., one of Pickering's most vocal opponents on the Judiciary Committee.

Lott attached his own amendment, which would force action on Bush's remaining judicial nominees, to Feinstein's amendment, making its passage problematic for Democrats.

GOP Senate Hopefuls Expect Boost From Pickering Nomination Battle

Paul Cane
Roll Call
March 21, 2002 Thursday

Rep. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) is already rehearsing a portion of his speech for when President Bush comes to visit, possibly next week, to pump up his bid for a Senate seat.

"Mr. President," Graham expects to say, "Ilook forward to working to confirm your judicial nominations. I will be an ally in your cause."

As the Senate continues to deal with the reverberations from the Judiciary Committee's party-line rejection of U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering's bid for a circuit court seat, Graham and other House Republicans gunning for Senate seats are already using the fight as a rallying cry for their own campaigns. "If I were in the Senate, there would be holy hell to pay for this," said Graham, who is running for the seat of retiring Sen. Storm Thurmond (R-S.C.).

Graham and Rep. Greg Ganske (R-Iowa), who is seeking to oust Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin (D), said they believe they can specifically use the Pickering case to score points with voters. Georgia Rep. Saxby Chambliss (R) said his campaign against Sen. Max Cleland (D-Ga.) would portray the issue of judicial nominations as part of an overall effort by Senate Democrats to block Bush's agenda.

The candidates themselves acknowledged that they are testing new political waters, since non-Supreme Court fights aren't usually fertile ground for campaign issues. So it's unclear how big an impact the Pickering case or other judicial fights will have on the Senate races.

Most Democrats dismissed the idea of a nomination battle over the Mississippi judge having a negative effect on incumbent Senators from other states, such as Harkin or Cleland, who aren't even on the Judiciary Committee. "Idon't see that resonating at all,"said Sen. Patty Murray (Wash.), chairwoman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Murray predicted that any attempt to make judicial nominations an issue would backfire, helping stir up emotions among Democratic base voters who are still angry about Senate power," for blocking President Bush's picks to be federal judges.

SEN. JON KYL (R), ARIZONA: It is about retribution. In effect, they've made it about retribution and politics.

CAMERON: Democrats deny that, but always seem to mention that Republicans did it first, to President Clinton's judicial nominees.

SEN. TOM DASCHLE (D-SD), MAJORITY LEADER: I can certainly appreciate the frustration expressed by some of our colleagues. We've been there.

CAMERON: On a straight party line vote, Democrats defeated a Republican resolution that would have required the Senate to hold confirmation hearings for eight of President Bush's appeals court nominees by May 9, fully one year after Mr. Bush first tapped them. The GOP leader is decrying gridlock caused by Democrats.

SEN. TRENT LOTT (R-MS), MINORITY LEADER: There is a growing concern that the Senate is becoming dysfunctional.

CAMERON: But Lott also admits, proudly, that he's causing some of the problems himself, and slowing down Senate work with procedural tactics available to the minority. If Democrats don't act on Bush judges more quickly, he promises to cause even bigger problems.

LOTT: Oh, there is a lot more that can be done. These are just small pinpricks to try to get their attention.

CAMERON: But the majority says it is paying attention. And the No. 2 Democrat, Harry Reid, offered a resolution promising to act on judges, but without a timetable. It passed, 97-1.

Amid all the tit for tat came Arlen Specter, a leader of the more liberal and moderate Republicans, who called for a truce, and said both parties have been guilty.

SEN. ARLEN SPECTER (R), PENNSYLVANIA: Just as I thought Republicans were wrong in the confirmation process during much of President Clinton's tenure, I think the Democrats are wrong on what is happening now.

CAMERON: But most Democrats are not budging. Liberals like Paul Wellstone and Barbara Boxer have told their colleagues that they will filibuster any conservatives nominated by the president, purely to oppose right-leading ideology. Charles Schumer cast many Bush nominees as far right extremists.

SEN. CHARLES SCHUMER (D), NEW YORK: So we just can't blindly confirm judges who are a threat to rolling back rights and protections won through the course, not over the last 25 years, but over the last 70.

REV_00336789

LOTT: Now, that is totally irresponsible. You don't filibuster judicial nominees. They should be reprimanded for even saying that by their own leadership.

CAMERON: No indication that there will be any reprimand from Democratic leadership. And Republicans accuse Democrats of complete exaggeration, saying that the idea that President Bush would nominate judges that would roll back rights established more than 70 years ago is ridiculous.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

For their part, Republicans say what Democrats are trying to do is change the way judges have been confirmed for a lot longer than 70 years, in effect swapping judicial temperament and philosophy for a new test of straight partisan politics -- Brit.

Senator Hatch, I've got to ask you about this big fight over Charles Pickering's nomination. Do you think it was fair of the Democrats on the committee--Judiciary Committee to use their one-vote advantage to deny a floor vote on this nomination?

Sen. HATCH: I really don't. You know, even Ronnie White, who--who had a negative vote in committee, we put him to the floor. And he was defeated on the floor, but at least he had a vote on the floor. Now, they knew, in the Judiciary Committee, that if Pickering went to the floor with--with either--without a recommendation or with a negative recommendation, that he would have passed. And he would have passed, I think, easily on the floor. And they just didn't want to allow that to happen. And it was a shame, because all of the arguments that they used against him, I think we shot them full of holes.

MATTHEWS: Well, why do you think the Democrats united all--well, to the last person, Dianne Feinstein, some of the more grown-up members of the Senate--everyone of the Democrats marched in line--was that Norman Lear's operation that smacked them into line?

Sen. HATCH: Not just people for the American way, who are really, I think, reprehensible, but--but every left-wing organization. They're all centered right here in Washington, DC. They only surface about every eight years when you have a--a Republican president. And yeah, I think they had a tremendous influence. But I think it's more than that. I really believe that they're not...

MATTHEWS: What are you going to do about it?

Sen. HATCH: Well, I--let me tell you what I think it is. I don't think they want to admit it, but it comes down to abortion.

MATTHEWS: Yeah, well, why don't they admit it?

Sen. HATCH: Well...

Sen. HATCH: I--I'll tell you...

Sen. HATCH: I'll tell you why. I...

MATTHEWS: Why don't they say they're fighting over abortion rights and that's a legitimate debate in this country?

Sen. HATCH: Well, let me explain that to you. I walked out of the fir--the second Pickering hearing, and of course, the abortion rights action leader and other pro-abortion groups were there, and I always get along well with them. I--I--I talk to them. And one of them said, 'Well, Senator, would you put somebody on the court who--who was against Brown vs. Board of Education?' I said, 'Certainly not.' I said, 'But there's a difference. Brown vs. Board of Education has 99.99 percent of the American people in favor of it.' I said, 'Roe vs. Wade has about 50 percent of the American people in favor of it, and about 50 percent against, and if you ask the right question, "Are you in favor of abortion," about 75 percent of the people would say they're not, but they buy off on this slogan, "right to choose." And there's a difference in that.'

But I think what's happening here is to those who basically believe in a right to--to choose, it's a social issue to them, and they think it's very, very important. I respect them for that. But to those of us who believe that there is a precious right to life, it's a religious issue to us. And in the case of Pickering, he made it very clear that Roe vs. Wade is the law of the land, he would abide by it, he was not going to do anything to hurt that ruling because he couldn't as a lower court judge, even though high court, in the sense of circuit court of appeals. But they still--you know, I think basically it came down to that.

MATTHEWS: OK.

REV_00336791

Sen. HATCH: They just don't want people like on the courts.

Rejection of conservative judge sparks warfare in the Senate

REV_00336792

In Washington this past week, before lawmakers left town for a two-week recess, a kind of low-intensity warfare broke out in the Senate. The battle began when Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee rejected a conservative judge nominated for a federal appeals court by President Bush. NPR's David Welna reports.

DAVID WELNA reporting:

Before leaving the marble halls of Congress for his native Mississippi, Republican Minority Leader Trent Lott had this assessment of the Senate's mood this week. Senator TRENT LOTT (Republican, Mississippi): Oh, pretty grouchy, actually.

Unidentified Woman: ...(Unintelligible).

(Soundbite of laughter)

WELNA: No one was more grouchy than Lott himself. For him the Judiciary Committee's party line rejection 10 days ago of Judge Charles Pickering, a close friend and fellow Mississippian, was not just a slap at the president, it was a declaration of war, and Lott is fighting back.

Sen. LOTT: We've tried to make it clear this week that what happened to Judge Pickering is not going to be the pattern around here, cannot be, if they, you know, expect to show any ability to run the Senate, which I think is part of what's at stake here.

WELNA: Lott maneuvered to cut short three Senate committee hearings, he tied up legislation offered by a Democrat who voted against Pickering, and he also moved to block funds the Judiciary Committee had requested to keep track of federal anti-terrorist actions. The committee's Democratic chair, Patrick Leahy, dismisses Lott's tactics as 'petty.'

Senator PATRICK LEAHY (Democrat, Vermont): At least when I came here in the Senate we had a lot of giants in both parties, both Republicans and Democrats, they would be above that sort of thing.

WELNA: Majority Leader Tom Daschle sought to downplay the mischief Lott's been making.

Senator TOM DASCHLE (Democrat, South Dakota): These little tactics about committees are not influencing our judgment. They can keep doing that. It's not that big a deal. We can work around that pretty easily.

WELNA: Daschle has not remained above the fray. He made a great show last week of setting up cots to weather a Republican filibuster that clearly was not going to happen. Idaho Republican Larry Craig blames Daschle for Pickering's rejection.

Senator LARRY CRAIG (Republican, Idaho): Tom's got his fingers squarely in Trent's eye, but he'll pull it out in time and Trent's vision will clear and we'll get on with the business of the day.

REV_00336793

But memories are long. Procedure is important. And somebody who chooses to go out and destroy the personality of an honorable person all in the name of politics shouldn't be allowed to do that.

WELNA: Republicans complained Pickering is only the latest victim of Senate Democrats determined to stall President Bush's judicial nominees. On Thursday, Judiciary Chair Leahy defended his party's record on the Senate floor.

Sen. LEAHY: Well, in nine months we confirmed more judges for President Bush than the Republicans were willing to for President Clinton during 12 months of the year 2000, the year 1999, the year 1997 and the year 1996.

WELNA: And this was the response from Judiciary's top Republican, Utah's Orrin Hatch.

Senator ORRIN HATCH (Republican, Utah): Here we go again, statistics judo being used on the floor of the Senate, courtesy of the Judiciary Committee.

WELNA: But another Republican on the committee, Pennsylvania's Arlen Specter, said his party had also done wrong by holding up President Clinton's nominees.

Senator ARLEN SPECTER (Republican, Pennsylvania): It is my hope that there would be a truce on the confirmation vitals, a truce on these vitals which have been raging for a very, very long time.

WELNA: Democrats warned such a truce can't happen unless President Bush starts conferring with them about nominees and stop sending over candidates they see as too far to the right of the political center. For Minority Leader Lott, what the Democrats want is unacceptable.

Sen. LOTT: That's ridiculous. President Bush--one, President Bush is a conservative president. President Bush is, I hope, going to nominate conservative men, women and minorities to the bench. And I'm sure he will continue to do that.

WELNA: Lott says when the Senate returns next month, Democrats can expect further disruption until they move more judicial nominees. Democrats say they're going as fast as they can. One moderate Democrat, Louisiana's John Breaux, expects nothing good to come from this standoff.

Senator JOHN BREAUX (Democrat, Louisiana): It just shows that we are approaching a potential for a real stalemate. And it's like payback time. I got you. You got me. I got you. And that's a formula for disaster as far as the legislative process is concerned.

WELNA: Breaux says just like in the Middle East, post-Pickering Senate Republicans and Democrats may need an outside mediator to patch things up. David Welna, NPR News, the Capitol.

WOODRUFF: We may hear from some of those you called hacks. We'll see what happens.

All right. Senate battles coming up. What's that all about?

NOVAK: They are just in a tremendous partisan battle over these judgeship nominations. The Republicans have a plan, I don't know if they'll go through with it, they may clutch at the end, to really bring the Senate to a standstill and unless they bring some of these appeals court judges up for a vote on the floor.

The next target of the Democrats could be Texas Supreme Court Judge Priscilla Owen who is nominated for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, the same court that Pickering was nominated for. Justice Owen, it seems, received $8,000 in contributions for Enron for her judicial campaign and then she rolled on a unanimous court in favor of Enron in a tax suit. They say -- the Republicans say that it's irrelevant, she should be permitted to vote on the Senate floor.

Interest Groups/Press Releases

Republicans' treatment of Clinton administration nominees in the 1990s. "It plays both ways. Idon't see this as an issue at all," she said.

Cleland, facing a potentially tough challenge from the well-funded Chambliss, rejected the notion that voters would be concerned about the somewhat obscure issue of the federal judiciary, which isn't a "dinner table issue" such as education or the economy. "Those are the issues that I think people in my state are going to be interested in," he said.

National Republican Senatorial Committee Chairman Bill Frist (Tenn.) agreed with the Democrats' assessment that the Pickering case alone might be a hard campaign issue because it was so primarily rooted in Mississippi politics.

"It's too parochial, it's too provincial," Frist said. But, like Chambliss, he said the Pickering case did raise the national profile of the issue of lower court federal judicial nominations. If Democrats continue to move slowly on circuit court nominees or reject a few more, Frist said judicial nominations could become a key part of the GOP's overall national campaign theme that Senate Democrats are blocking the will of a popular President.

"It just fits with this pattern of obstructionism," he said.

Chambliss agreed: "It's a pattern. The broader issue of judicial nominations is very definitely going to be an issue."

Graham and Ganske, however, said it's more than just a general issue, contending that the Pickering case itself has fired up voters, at least the conservative base voters who will be key to turnout in a midterm election.

Two weekends ago, Ganske said, he hit eight county GOP conventions and found that Pickering's nomination was "a hot issue," and was met with great applause when he railed against Senate Democrats for the way they treated him. "I didn't really have to explain who Judge Pickering was," added Ganske, who has written op-eds in local papers blasting Democrats over that nomination.

Most energized of all, Graham predicted, will be Southern conservatives. "Ithink the people of the South, in particular, understand this," he said.

Graham was echoing a theme some GOP aides have hinted at, namely that Southerners will be particularly put off by the Democrats' racially tinged rejection of Pickering, one that seemed to imply that an older white man from that part of the country can't belong to the "New South."

Bolting from his party leadership once again, Sen. Zell Miller (D-Ga.) concurred that Southern voters would abandon Democrats just as they did in the 2000 elections after several years of gains in Senate and gubernatorial races.

"The political repercussions are too obvious to ignore. Politically, this action may very well

FYI - just talked to Sen. Smith's COS re the D. Oregon vacancy. He says this issue is not at the top of the Senator's priority list -- he'll get to it when he gets to it since he doesn't think the person would get a hearing this year anyway and since he's up for re-election this year. I said we encourage them to move as quickly as possible, but doesn't sound like he'll get around to it any time soon.
He also said that the Senator really wants an Eastern Oregon candidate, which means it doens't look good for Karen Immergut.

Is Justice Kennedy A in[illegible] for Chief Seat?

Tony Mauro
American Lawyer Media
April 1, 2002

There he was in January, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Ken nedy elbow-to-elbow with first lady Laura Bush, encouraging D.C. high school st udents to spread the word about fundamental American values in the wake of Sept . 11.

Then on March 5, Kennedy was in the news again, speaking with passion b efore a Senate budget committee about the "frustration and disappointment" felt by federal judges over the failure of Congress to raise their pay.

Two weeks later, Kennedy made headlines again, this time decrying the " drug culture" and suggesting during an oral argument that students who object t o drug testing might prefer to attend a "druggie school."

To Kennedy's supporters, all three incidents reflect the principled pas sions of a conservative justice who takes public service seriously.

But to some -- including his fans -- Kennedy's recent public profile be ars all the markings of a man who would like to be chief justice, should the cu rrent chief, William Rehnquist, decide to call it quits in the next year or so.

Justices often say that it's futile and unwise to campaign for a seat o n the high court, much less the chief justice's chair, and that such an appoint ment is a lightning strike that can never be anticipated. But among Court-watch ers in Washington, D.C., it is accepted almost routinely that Kennedy, 65, is d oing his best to position himself atop the highest hill just in case. "There's no question that he would love to be chief," says one Kennedy friend.

"I've been watching and wondering like everyone else," says Jay Sekulow , chief counsel of the American Center for Law and Justice. "If you look at the list of likely candidates, he is on it."

The speculation, floating around Washington on and off for years, gaine d new currency with a Chicago Tribune article in February on his prospec ts for becoming chief, as well as with Kennedy's high-profile activities.

Anyone seeking the job of chief justice right now would want to get in the good graces of President George W. Bush, with the federal judiciary whose m embers he would lead, and with conservatives who might otherwise question his p olitical bent. Kennedy has touched all three bases since the beginning of the y ear. Another plus for Kennedy: Two of his former law clerks, Bradford Berenson and Brett Kavanaugh, are in key positions in the White House counsel's office.

Kennedy's most visible effort was launching, with the help of the Ameri can Bar Association, a project called "Dialogue on Freedom." Soon after the ter rorist strikes on Sept. 11, as Kennedy tells it, he became concerned that high school students are not well-equipped to explain and make the case for American values around the world.

After testing his ideas with a civics class at Langley High School near his Virginia home, Kennedy enlisted ABA President Robert Hirshon and the first lady to expand the trial run of his structured dialogue sessions at high schoo ls in D.C. and New York. In the D.C. school, Laura Bush observed Kennedy in act ion for close to an hour.

Later this month, Justice Kennedy takes the dialogue to a high school i n Boston, where he will be joined by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., another Wash ington power center whose support for chief justice would be invaluable.

But those who have worked with Justice Kennedy on the project say his m otives are apolitical. Imputing any other agenda behind his approach to Laura B ush, they say, is an example of the adage "no good deed goes unpunished."

ABA President Hirshon says, "It's one thing to give a passing amount of time to something because you have ulterior motives, but Justice Kennedy has g iven this a lot of time. My sense is that he is extremely sincere about it."

Another friend of Kennedy says the high school effort is consistent wit h the justice's long-standing commitment to young people and to teaching. Kenne dy has made several trips to China recently and has returned committed to the i dea that American youth need to better understand and appreciate democratic val ues.

"It's not about bonding with the Bushes -- it's something he has been i nvolved in for a long time," said this Kennedy ally.

The justice's March 5 testimony before the Senate budget committee on j udicial salaries also does not need to be second-guessed as political, his supp orters say.

Kennedy, who once sat on the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, has lon g been attuned to the mood of the federal judiciary and was speaking extemporan eously about the "absolute urgent responsibility" of Congress to address the is sue of low judicial salaries.

His third seeming nod toward an important political force -- conservati ves -- was his anti-drug riff during the oral arguments in Board of Educatio n of Pottawotamie County v. Earls, No. 01-332. Discussing a school policy t o test a broad range of students for drug use, Kennedy hypothesized that studen ts who refused to take the test could be sent to a "druggie" school.

"No parent would send their child to a 'druggie' school, except perhaps your client," Kennedy told Graham Boyd, who represented Lindsay Earls, the stu dent who challenged the Tecumseh, Okla., policy. Earls' uncontradicted testimon y is that she has never used drugs.

For some audiences, Kennedy's crack came across as a heavy-handed perso nal slur on the young woman, now a Dartmouth College student. The Boston Glo be headlined its story "Justice Kennedy attacks student's views."

But the remark may win Kennedy points with conservatives who might be h arboring other doubts about him. Kennedy, a 1988 Reagan appointee, lost the war m embrace of conservatives when he joined the majority in the 1992 decision Planned Parenthood v. Casey, which rescued Roe v. Wade from reversal .

He regained some of his standing with conservatives by angrily dissenti ng from Stenberg v. Carhart, the 2000 decision that upheld a Nebraska pa rtial-birth abortion law. To some, Kennedy's dissent signaled his readiness to change his mind about the basic abortion right. "On abortion, the third rail of judicial politics, Kennedy has tried not to step on it," says Edward Lazarus, author of the 1998 book "Closed Chambers."

Catholic University of America Columbus School of Law Dean Douglas Kmie c, a onetime Reagan Justice Department official, says Kennedy "may be the only one" of the current justices who could plausibly be elevated to chief justice, though he quickly adds, "I don't get any indication the present chief justice w ants to leave."

With the Senate in Democratic control, Kmiec thinks President Bush migh t feel compelled to "look to the center" for a new appointee, and Kennedy would top the list among sitting justices. "He manifests a quality of intellect and open-mindedness that is attractive," Kmiec says.

Vanderbilt University law professor Christopher Yoo, a former Kennedy c lerk, says he is unaware of any campaign by his former boss, but adds that Kenn edy would be "a fantastic chief justice. He cares deeply about the law and the profession."

Kennedy's drawback might be that, as a white male, he wins no points am ong constituencies Bush may want to please. In addition, the fact that Kennedy joined the majority in Bush v. Gore -- possibly writing its key sections -- could leave him and Bush open to charges that Kennedy's elevation is a payb ack. That factor could spoil the chances of any sitting justice to become chief .

"Presidents Eisenhower and Nixon went outside the Court to name chiefs, and it might be that President Bush will find it wise to do the same," says Km iec.

Recently, Kennedy spent the better part of a day at Catholic University , teaching three constitutional law classes and meeting with faculty and studen ts.

Did Kennedy seem to be campaigning for higher office? Kmiec replied, "H onestly, no. I got the sense of someone who is generous with his time and respo nsive to teachers and students alike. It was not part of any larger campaign, e xcept that he won the enormous good will of 41 faculty members and hundreds of students. It would be too cynical to say it was anything more."

O'CONNOR UNPLUGGED

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor was in a relaxed mood recently when she spo ke and answered questions from attendees at the annual Corporate Counsel Instit ute at Georgetown University Law Center. She made rare digs at fellow -- but un named -- justices and offered tips for practitioners at the March 14 event. Amo ng her observations:

On writing briefs. Sounding a bit exasperated at the number and length of briefs filed with the Court, she reminded listeners that "we have pa ge limits, thank goodness." Some advocates try to get around those limits, she noted, by including lengthy, fine-print footnotes that in effect squeeze a few more pages into print. "Don't play that game, please!" she exclaimed. As for am icus curiae briefs, O'Connor said "they are read," and often are useful. She ca utioned that justices can tell when organizations file "me-too" briefs that rep eat the points made by the parties in the case. "But if you have a different ta ke, I would encourage it."

On oral argument. Questions come fast and furious at high court oral arguments, leading O'Connor to observe that "I don't think that I'd want to be a lawyer before the Court. It's scary!"

O'Connor said she restrains herself from asking questions once the yell ow light goes on to warn advocates that they have five minutes of their allotte d time left. But other justices don't observe that practice, O'Connor said incr edulously, sarcastically describing unnamed justices -- David Souter and Ruth B ader Ginsburg come to mind -- who ask questions that take "three minutes to art iculate" while the yellow light is on.

On dissents. It is well-known that the chief justice or senior justice in the majority of a case assigns the writing of an opinion, but O'Conn or noted that the same practice governs the assignment for writing dissents. Sh e recalled an incident from early in her tenure: At conference, she had indicat ed she was likely to dissent. Soon afterward, the senior justice on that side c alled her to ask if she would write the dissent. When she demurred, professing uncertainty, the unnamed justice said "Oh," and hung up. "This justice didn't s peak to me for months," O'Connor said. She learned that at least for this justi ce, an assignment to write a dissent was "an offer you can't refuse."

On the current term. O'Connor said the number of incoming cases remains high, and this term is dominated by filings from prison inmates raisin g issues related to the Court's 5-4 ruling in Apprendi v. New Jersey. Th at 2000 decision, from which O'Connor dissented, mandates that penalty-increasi ng facts must be tried before a jury, not a judge. "Gosh, that's producing a lo t of cases," O'Connor said.

On consensus building within the Court. "There's no lobbying be hind the scenes" for votes or writing assignments, O'Connor said flatly. Draft opinions are circulated and speak for themselves, she said. She recalled a case in which each justice at conference articulated a slightly different view of w hat the outcome and reasoning should be. "There weren't two who had the same op inion," O'Connor said. She drew the assignment to write the opinion and circula ted one draft, then withdrew it and sent around another. "It was as if it dropp ed into a black hole," she said, because none of the justices responded to it a t first. Weeks went by, and finally one justice, then another, signed onto her draft without comment. "We ended up with a unanimous Court," she said, adding, "Isn't that the darnedest story?"

END OF AN ERA

The first time a legal brief came to the Supreme Court bearing the name of Norton Come on behalf of the National Labor Relations Board was in 1955, ac cording to an online search. The last time was last week -- almost 47 years lat er.

Come, the NLRB's longtime deputy associate general counsel in charge of its Supreme Court work, died on March 15 at the age of 82.

Come argued 56 cases before the high court in his long career. He was a cclaimed as "the epitome of a fine public servant all his career" by longtime f riend and colleague Daniel Friedman, a senior judge on the U.S. Court of Appeal s for the Federal Circuit. In addition to the arguments, Come wrote or advised on hundreds of briefs before the Supreme Court. An online search for his name a mong Supreme Court briefs and opinions turned up 714 mentions.

"He had a significant influence on the shape of labor law," says former NLRB member Charles Cohen, a senior partner in the D.C. office of Morgan, Lewi s & Bockius. "And he was a fine man, a very good guy."

Come shepherded the NLRB through decades of Supreme Court litigation at a time when the contours of the National Labor Relations Act were hotly contes ted by labor and management. Come was generally viewed as a pro-labor voice, ar guing for a more expansive interpretation of workers' rights in labor disputes. "He understood the limits of the board's authority, but he was a strong suppor ter of the board and vigorously defended its positions," says Friedman.

"He had an encyclopedic memory of what the board had decided and what t he Supreme Court had decided," recalls Deputy Solicitor General Lawrence Wallac e, who had worked with Come since 1968. The NLRA is now a "very mature statute, " says Wallace, meaning that fewer disputes over its meaning reach the Supreme Court now. But Come provided valuable counsel until the end, said Wallace, cont inuing to work even through failing health that made it difficult for him to ge t around.

My friend

Would you be kind enough to be in email contact with Father Sirico; he is a big hitter -- on the WSJ editorial board -- and would like to write about judges.

Might you ask him how you can be helpful? He is eager to write.

This is a discussion draft that presents the issues we debated and in which I have tried to craft recommendations that might get us all to an

Memorandum to Economic Principals Staff

From: Carlos Bonilla

Subject: Aviation War & Terrorism Insurance:
Third-Party Liability

On March 20th, Economic Principals met and agreed that the optimal solution to the problem of third party liability in the aviation industry was to limit that liability through legislative action. The constraints of the current legislative calendar forced an acknowledgement that legislative action was unlikely until the next session of Congress. Staff was instructed to agree on recommendations to Principals for structuring an interim solution until a permanent solution could be achieved.

Concerns have been raised that it may be unrealistic to expect the Congress, given its predilections, to enact this principle into law. Thus the actions we recommend here may prove to be of a longer lasting nature than we desire and should be viewed in that light.

The Level of Liability Limitation

A general consensus existed among staff that the limit could be set arbitrarily at any level consistent with the goal of limiting liability. Some staff endorsed a level of $0, others expressed no preference. There was a certain measure of support for continuing the $100 million cap which existed until March 20. One additional suggestion was made, that liability be limited so as to include only economic losses and to exclude, for example, punitive losses. The working group agreed that the goal of limiting liability included the desire to introduce more certainty into the process, and that certainty was more consistent with a dollar limitation.

Recommendation to Principals: The $100 million level for third party liability from acts of war and terrorism is an arbitrary level that meets the goal of limiting liability and which draws on historical precedents as a justification.

Interim Provision of Insurance

The interim solution depends heavily on the level at which the liability limit is set. Recognizing that enacting liability limitation will be a difficult and possibly prolonged task, staff was instructed to produce recommendations for providing the necessary insurance coverage in the interim. Regardless of our preferred ideal solution, in the interim we will be dealing with this problem through an insurance vehicle, and we need to craft our response in a manner which imposes the least possible distortion on the insurance market. This forces us to balance competing interests.

- Significant concerns have been raised that the private offers of insurance that have been made in the market place may be from such a small number of parties that market forces do not accurately reflect competitive forces in the price of that insurance.

- Recognize that any federal provision of insurance through the FAA distorts the market and prevents private parties from offering the insurance that will develop the competitive market for this product.
  - Any federal support of the industry's Equitime solution will require an ongoing federal role in the insurance market leading to prolonged distortions in this market.

Recommendation to Principals: To deal with these concerns over interim provision of insurance, staff recommends that DOT re-price the FAA offered insurance consistent with the language authorizing that insurance. If appropriate, DOT can recommend a phase-in towards this new price. This interim pricing structure needs to approximate the exposure of the federal government as it may be in force for a longer than desired period of time.

The Federal Role for Losses from Acts of War and Terrorism

This is perhaps the most contentious issue in this proposal. Strongly held sentiments on this were voiced by all participants. Among the concerns voiced or since communicated:

- The viability of any limitation on third party liability is inextricably tied to the role the federal government assumes for compensating victims.
- Any blanket guarantee of federal assistance for losses suffered will have a distorting influence on the market for private insurance. Individuals should be encouraged to independently insure for any losses they may suffer.
- Large incidents may overwhelm the capacity of the private insurance system.
- The federal government is widely seen as being expected to step in when losses exceed the level of insurance that has been purchased. This was true after 9/11 and will be true in the event there is a future incident.
- War and terrorism are governmental or quasi-governmental activities. Individuals should not be expected to assume the cost of third party losses brought on by these acts.
- The trial lawyers are an influential political constituency and can be expected to oppose a permanent limitation on liability.

Recommendation to Principals: There is a federal role in dealing with the costs of war and terror. At the same time, we raise a significant moral hazard problem if we assume blanket liability. The federal role should be one which encourages individuals to insure for their own losses and which steps in only after such coverage has been exhausted and needs remain unmet. This is a significant deviation from the post 9/11 policy which, for example, penalized individuals who had purchased insurance as the compensation formula netted out insurance proceeds. The federal role here should be to not only preclude the search for a deep pocket through the tort system but to foster a climate where individuals have provided for their own needs and thus have less need to search out that deep pocket.

The regular Friday meeting at the White House will now meet in S-230 in the Capitol at 10 am on Friday mornings !!!

However, for this week only in light of recess, we will meet tomorrow (Thursday) morning at 9:45 am since it looks like attendance on Friday would be sparse -- I wonder why!!

Again, Thursday at 9:45 am

Brett,
Appreciating the irony (that this little missive itself will becoming part of a presidential record some day, presumably eligible to be read in the year 2020 by some history nerd), I still have a question:
Because most of the P-5 files withheld at the Reagan Library relate to appointments, particularly Supreme Court appointments, some of the scholars I've talked to believe that the decision to withhold them reflects a sensitivity within the current Bush White House to the politics of the judicial appointment process. Is a fair inference, do you think?
Cheers,
Carl

I think the law has always allowed use of miles for upgrades on official travel but not the use of miles for personal travel, which is what was recently changed. I can tell that when I was at the FCC, before the law changed, we were allowed to use miles earned on official travel for upgrades on official travel, but not ever for personal travel. Hope this helps.

just to be clear, we did not offer to the House committees to do them in a public forum, it was not an issue. TR just mentioned it in his press roundtable as an option, but that was after all the House stuff was pretty much set up and everyone was happy.

Susan --
The approach you suggest for today's cycle is solid. You could also add the fact that Gov. Ridge is already scheduled to brief on __ and __ dates to the House next week, to a number of different committees, and that he has offered to do them in a public forum.
Beyond that, I am outside the office this afternoon and tomorrow beginning now, and you should please vet all Byrd/communications issues with my colleague Brett Kavanaugh in WH Cpunsel's office. Thanks -- E

Subject: our response?

Media are starting to call to get our response to Byrd.

How shall we characterize our response?

The Governor wants to be responsive to Senator Byrd's request for information without violating the constitutionally directed separation of powers between the Executive and Congressional branch, and thus is disappointed with the Senator's response. However, the Governor's offer still stands to brief members of the Senate in a public forum, accompanied by representatives from the agencies with operating authority,

Draft – April 9, 2002 – House Judiciary Committee TIME

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I appreciate this opportunity to testify today on reforming and restructuring the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS).

There is no debate as to whether the INS must be reformed. When I was asked to take this job, the Attorney General and President set forth two goals: restructure the agency and reduce the backlog of paperwork. There is no confusion about the mission; the issue is simply how it can be done quickly, efficiently, and with the appropriate degree of flexibility.

Although the Administration is taking no formal position on legislative restructuring proposals for the INS, we note that the Administration's restructuring proposal and H.R. 3231 share important common goals.

First, both plans recognize the importance of separating enforcement and services in such a manner as to address competing priorities and problematic chains of command. Thus, both provide for separate enforcement and services functions.

Second, both recognize that some functions, such as that of a Chief Financial Officer, are better performed reporting directly to agency leadership, rather than within one of the two bureaus.

In addition, H.R. 3231 would provide certain personnel flexibilities that are important to restructuring efforts, such as buyout authority.

I have heard loud and clear the many concerns from Members of Congress about the INS. In the story Candide, optimism is defined as the "madness of maintaining that everything is right when it is wrong." I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that there are no

REV_00337565

Rather than place related functions under a single strong head with direct line authority, ultimate responsibility and accountability would be spread out and diffused under the proposed structure of H.R. 3231. The Associate Attorney General for Immigration Affairs is weaker than the current position of Commissioner of INS and raises questions as to how immigration services and enforcement will operate in a coordinated and effective manner absent a strong line manager with authority. The events of September 11 have shown the crucial links between immigration service and enforcement policy. Under H.R. 3231, the Director of the Services Bureau, with his or her own budget authority and immigration functions transferred by statute from the INS Commissioner, would be essentially independent from both the Director of Enforcement and the Associate Attorney General for Immigration Affairs.

Another issue the bill raises is flexibility. The statutory establishment of numerous positions from the national level down to the local level would circumscribe the ability of the Attorney General and Department of Justice to restructure and reorganize these offices as needs may dictate without future legislation. This, as well as some other provisions, would uniquely limit the ability of current and future Attorneys General or Presidents to reorganize operations related to administering our immigration laws. Retaining the ability to respond quickly and thoroughly to changed circumstances, as well as to trends that develop over time, is an advantage of administrative restructuring or of a less detailed bill.

Finally, while an immigration services customer relations office is a shared feature of H.R. 3231 and the Administration's restructuring plan, the reporting requirements of the Ombudsman provisions in the House bill raise separation of powers concerns. Under H.R. 3231, the Ombudsman is to issue reports and legislative recommendations directly to Congress without the Department of Justice or other executive branch officials being permitted to examine the reports prior to issuance. By constraining executive branch channels of review in this manner, this provision raises a serious constitutional question with respect to its impairment of the President's ability to oversee the functions of an Executive Department and to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." Art. II, sec. 3.

The restructuring of the INS is an important issue. The aftermath of the attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center was an incredibly tense time for everyone. Any agency leader needs to be able to make quick decisions regarding staff deployment, directing the investigation and detention of possible terrorists and their accomplices, and formulating new regulations and procedures with regard to the INS' participation in the investigation of and response to the attack. It is crucial to preserve the ability to respond quickly to changing circumstances and to continue to have an individual in charge to set policy and exercise "real time" line authority and leadership.

Mr. Chairman, you and this Administration share exactly the same goal—and that is to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of enforcement of our immigration laws and service to those who are entitled to benefits under those same laws. We may differ as to the specific approach in reaching that shared goal, but I hope and believe that we will be able to find common ground in realizing our objective.

Panglossian optimists at the INS today who believe that the current situation is the best of all possible worlds. As I stated at the hearing before the Immigration and Claims Subcommittee on March 19, I want to use the events of recent weeks as a catalyst to institute the changes and reforms urgently needed at the INS. The concurrence by the House and Senate Appropriations Committees that where received on March 18 and March 21, respectively have given us the green light to move forward with the Administration's Restructuring Plan.

After the incident involving the I-20 notices sent to Huffman Aviation, I put forward a series of significant regulatory and process changes to the student visa system. I also made a series of high-level personnel moves at the INS to reshape our management team. After the recent incident in Norfolk, Virginia, where indications are that procedures on waivers for four Pakistani crewmen were not followed, I moved quickly to reassign the supervising officer, pending an investigation, and instituted a zero-tolerance policy on failure to follow policy from headquarters.

Mr. Chairman, we want to work with you and the Congress to complete a restructuring that effectively addresses your concerns and at the same time gives the Attorney General and the Department of Justice the flexibility to adjust to ever-changing needs and circumstances with respect to the enforcement of immigration laws and the provision of immigration services.

In my testimony today, I will address first the Administration's restructuring proposal. I then will address certain reforms that are proposed in H.R. 3231 and why they raise concerns for the agency.

REV_00337566

Administration's Restructuring Proposal

In November, the Attorney General announced the start of a reorganization of the Department of Justice to reorient DOJ as a department whose primary responsibility is to defend Americans against terrorism and other national security threats. At that time, he stated that the administrative restructuring of the INS is a major part of that reorganization. As you know, the President transmitted to the Congress a specific Restructuring Proposal for the INS last November, and as noted earlier in late March, the Department of Justice received letters from the House and Senate Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Subcommittees concurring in INS moving forward with that full restructuring plan.

The INS restructuring plan is a fundamental reform that splits service and enforcement into two bureaus. It will clarify and streamline the chain of command at INS and increase accountability. While it is true that past Administrations have restructured some parts of the agency, these partial reorganizations have not fundamentally changed the way the agency does its business at the field level or focused on the core issue of competing and occasionally conflicting service and enforcement missions. Moreover, due to an unprecedented growth in staffing and expansion of its mission, the agency is very different today than in the past, and the merits of the current proposal should not be judged against those with different and, indeed, narrower aims.

Since receiving the concurrence of the Appropriations Committees, we have moved quickly on key steps to restructure the agency. We have:

- Established a direct reporting relationship from Chief Patrol Agents in the field to the Border Patrol Chief in Headquarters;

REV_00337567

- Announced that we will establish an Office of Juvenile Affairs reporting directly to the Commissioner and responsible for providing oversight to INS personnel responsible for the proper handling of juveniles in INS custody;
- Advertised for the position of Chief Information Officer (CIO). The CIO will ensure the effective integration and coordination of data systems of mutual interest to the bureaus of Service and Enforcement as well as other federal agencies;
- Advertised for the position of Chief Financial Officer (CFO). The CFO will be responsible for ensuring sound fiscal management reporting directly to agency leadership; and
- Planning has begun for the Headquarters Detention and Removal Program to oversee facility management, care of detainees, management of detention standards and bed space allocations at all INS owned and operated Service Processing facilities; and
- Begun the process of realigning reporting relationships in the adjudications arena.

The Office of Restructuring which was established to move the restructuring initiative will implement Headquarters restructuring this fiscal year. We will create the new Bureaus of Immigration Services and Immigration Enforcement by realigning reporting relationships and streamlining chains of command. The actions already taken, as noted above, reflect the first phases of the creation of separate bureaus. Field planning will entail a detailed analysis of facilities and workload distribution and development of a comprehensive human resource plan for making the necessary personnel adjustments. As part of field implementation, to be completed in 2003, we will abolish the existing Regional and District offices, as well as the positions of Regional and District Directors, and establish the new services and enforcement areas.

Mr. Chairman, the restructuring of INS is designed to address key problems identified by Members of Congress and the public. Two interrelated criticisms that have been identified are: 1) that the current INS structure incorporates a mixed mission, and 2) that the agency lacks clear chains of command. Currently, the field structure of the INS centers around District Directors, who report to Regional Directors, who in turn report to the Executive Associate Commissioner for Field Operations. All of these individuals have dual service and enforcement responsibilities. The Administration's plan changes that. Under the restructuring plan, the positions of District Directors and Regional Directors will be eliminated. In their place, the Border Patrol, Inspections, Investigations and Intelligence components of INS will be under the command of the Chief of the Border Patrol and Interior Enforcement Division, who will report to the Executive Commissioner for Immigration Enforcement. The International Division and the Dentention and Removals Division will also report directly to the Executive Commissioner for Immigration Enforcement. Services personnel will report through a Services chain of command, leading up to the Executive Commissioner for Immigration Services. A key element of the restructuring is to provide clarity of function by improving accountability and professionalism through a clear and understandable chain of command with specific expertise at all levels.

Another significant problem at INS is information technology. The restructuring plan seeks to address part of this problem by establishing the new position of Chief Information Officer (CIO). Splitting services and enforcement entails a significant risk of severing interrelated service and enforcement information. Therefore, in addition to maintaining services and enforcement within one agency, the plan establishes an Information Coordinator, working through the CIO, to ensure that Enforcement and Services Bureau personnel maintain necessary and appropriate access to data collected by each other.

Concerns have been raised that INS enforcement does not always respond in the most appropriate or timely manner. This plan will enhance immigration law enforcement and improve our ability to respond to national security threats by eliminating current layers of reporting and the dual service and enforcement responsibilities out in the field. For example, until the past week, the 21 Border Patrol Sector Chiefs reported to three Regional Directors rather than straight to the Chief of the Border Patrol. In some cases, they were reporting to persons with no law enforcement background. These extra reporting layers at times prevented rapid deployment and redeployment of agents and equipment in the field. The current reporting structure for Investigations, Inspections and the Detention and Removal program is even more problematic as those components report through District Directors and Regional Directors before reaching headquarters, and may be reporting to individuals without the requisite experience in those programs.

As noted earlier, a key step in restructuring on the enforcement side was accomplished last week by requiring the 21 Border Patrol Sector Chiefs to report straight to headquarters to the Chief of the Border Patrol. In addition, under our proposal, there will be nine Enforcement Areas, where a Special Agent in Charge (SAC) for Investigations and an Area Port Director for Inspections in each of the areas will be co-located for coordination and administrative purposes. Special Agents in Charge and Area Port Directors will report to the Chief of the Border Patrol and Interior Enforcement Division. Similarly, the Detention and Removal program will have an independent chain of command that will support the Border Patrol, Inspections and Investigations programs and continue to detain and remove illegal aliens from the United States.

There have been complaints that INS does not adequately cooperate with local law enforcement. The new enforcement structure will place emphasis on further developing INS' extensive relationships with foreign, Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies. The Interagency Liaison Officer, reporting to the Executive Commissioner for Immigration Enforcement, will facilitate an improved flow of information and cooperation with Federal, State, and local law enforcement organizations.

Another problem that has been identified is INS' treatment of juveniles who come into our custody. The restructuring establishes an Office of Juvenile Affairs, whose director will have the necessary authority to ensure that custody and placement decisions with respect to juveniles are appropriate.

Finally, complaints about INS service performance have been long-standing. Under the restructuring, service will improve because the chain of command will be clarified and streamlined. Officers and staff in the field will report to their respective program managers directly without being judged or adversely affected by competing interests, such as is now the case in District and Regional offices. Eliminating the District Director and Regional Director positions in this chain of command will increase accountability and establish clearer points of contact for immigrants, U.S. citizens and

Congressional offices. The six Area Directors, who will focus solely on adjudications and related service functions, will have substantial authority to control activities within their area.

H.R. 3231

Mr. Chairman, as noted at the outset of my testimony, we recognize and appreciate the positive aspects of H.R. 3231, including the separation of the service and enforcement functions, personnel flexibilities such as buyout authority, recognition of the importance of functions that serve both services and enforcement purposes, and an emphasis on customer service, such as establishing an Ombudsman position. We have, however, some concerns about H.R. 3231, particularly with regard to the supervisory authority of the Attorney General and the new Associate Attorney General for Immigration Affairs (AAGIA). We hope that these issues can be addressed as the legislation moves forward.

Under current law, the Attorney General's exercise of authority over the Commissioner, or other Department officials, is based upon the principle of delegation. The Attorney General has delegated substantial authority to the Commissioner, but retains the ultimate statutory responsibility to administer and enforce the immigration laws under section 103 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA). In H.R. 3231, this principle is substantially weakened, because it is the subordinate officials who are vested with the statutory authority over immigration services and enforcement, rather than their supervisors.

The bill statutorily transfers from the INS Commissioner to the Director of the Services Bureau the immigration service functions, and from the Commissioner to the Director of the Enforcement Bureau the enforcement functions. Therefore, although the Associate Attorney General for Immigration Affairs has nominal supervisory responsibility over the Directors, they in fact have substantially greater statutory functions than their nominal supervisor.

REV_00337572

As the functions that would be transferred to the Directors by statute are currently regulatory, not statutory, H.R. 3231 would transform the current delegation of the Attorney General's authority by regulation into a direct statutory assignment of functions to lower-level Department officials. These provisions potentially could call into question the ultimate authority of the Attorney General, acting through the Associate Attorney General for Immigration Affairs, to direct and control the immigration services and enforcement functions. Although technical drafting concerns regarding transfers of functions may be solved through appropriate technical amendment, these provisions raise substantive concerns as well regarding the intended scope of the Associate Attorney General for Immigration Affairs' authority to direct and control the service and enforcement bureaus.

The issue of accountability further arises in this respect, since the Attorney General and the new AAGIA would be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, whereas the specific experience requirements of H.R. 3231 make it almost assured that career immigration officials would occupy the posts of Directors of the Service and Enforcement Bureaus. The experience requirement additionally for the AAGIA also uniquely limits the President's appointments authority. These constraints on the President's Appointments Power raise constitutional as well as prudential concerns.

Good piece. Great work Margarita. Notice how Leahy is trying to say the issue was raised in "press reports" (not by his office placing it in press reports.

National Review - Byron York

Bush Fights Back
The White House defends its latest embattled judicial nominee.

In a sign that the White House is preparing to fight on behalf of the nomination of Priscilla Owen to a place on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, White House counsel Alberto Gonzales has sent a strongly worded letter to Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy, responding to Leahy's contention that Owen's
"connections" to Enron raise questions about her nomination.

Owen is a justice on the Texas supreme court. In Texas, justices are elected to the court, and in 1994, when Owen first ran for office, she received a total of $8,800 in campaign contributions from Enron-related sources. Owen's opponents have suggested that those contributions may have influenced Owen's actions in a case that ultimately saved Enron about $250,000 in corporate income taxes.

When liberal activists raised the charge, Leahy urged the White House to study Owen's ties to Enron. "I have heard from a lot of Republicans who are concerned about her Enron connections," Leahy told Reuters in late March. "I mentioned...to the White House it may want to look into it."

Now, the White House has. In the April 5 letter to Leahy, Gonzales writes,
"We have done as you have suggested, and I see no basis to question Justice Owen's fitness to serve on the Fifth Circuit. The record reflects that she has at all times acted properly and in complete compliance with both the letter and the spirit of the rules relating to judicial campaign finance."

In 1994, Gonzales writes, Owen took in approximately $1.2 million in donations from 3,084 different contributors. Of that, $8,800 was from Enron employees and the Enron employee-funded political action committee. "It was entirely proper for Justice Owen's campaign to receive campaign contributions, including the contributions from Enron employees," Gonzales writes. "Indeed seven of the nine current Texas Supreme Court justices received Enron contributions, and several of them received more than Justice Owen's campaign received. As this record demonstrates, elected judges certainly did not act improperly in the past, before anyone knew about Enron's financial situation, by receiving contributions from employees of Enron - any more than it could be said that members of Congress acted improperly in the past by receiving contributions from Enron."

The last sentence could be a veiled reference to Judiciary Committee
Democrat
Charles Schumer, a leader of the opposition to Bush judicial nominees. According to the Center for Responsive politics, between 1989 and 2001 Schumer took in $21,933 from Enron-related sources - more than twice as much as Owen.

In addition, Gonzales says the White House counsel's office has reviewed all Enron-related cases that have come before the Texas supreme court since 1995, the year Owen took her seat.
Gonzales says White House lawyers found six such cases. In two of them, he writes, Owen's vote could be characterized as favorable to Enron. In two others, it could be seen as adverse to Enron. Gonzales says a fifth case cannot be characterized either way, and in the sixth case, Owen recused herself because it involved a law firm where she had been a partner.

Concerning the tax case that Owen's opponents have cited as evidence of Enron
"connections," Gonzales writes that the Texas court's decision which saved Enron about $250,000 in corporate income taxes was unanimous. In addition, Gonzales referred to a letter written to Leahy by two former Democratic justices on the state supreme court, Rose Spector and Raul Gonzalez, who took part in the tax case. In their letter to Leahy, Spector and Gonzalez write that "all justices, Democrats and Republicans alike, agreed with the opinion authored by Justice Owen." Concluding his own letter, the White House counsel writes, "I trust that the foregoing will resolve all questions concerning the propriety of Justice
Owen's activities in relation to financing her campaigns."

Late Friday afternoon, David Carle, spokesman for Leahy, issued a response to the White House letter.
"Senator Leahy appreciates Judge Gonzales' responsiveness in answering some questions that have been raised about this nomination in several news stories," Carle said. "The issue in this instance has not been the nominee's Enron-related contributions but the nominee's actions as a judge.
Judge Gonzales' review of these cases will be a useful addition to the committee's record as it prepares to schedule a hearing on this nomination."

Hi again Ken,
Thought I'd write you and tell you what I was thinking with respect to Nicole's situation, as opposed to being nebulous. As you know from what John passed on to you, Nicole is applying for an O-visa, on the basis of her outstanding accomplishments as a research scientist in environmental biology. Her credentials are MORE THAN sufficient for this visa status, but since Sept. 11, it appears that INS has been overly strict, so much so that they are imposing standards above and beyond what is required for the given visa. As such, we are soliciting letters of support from scientists, and other interested parties to include in her current application, in the hopes that her application gets the fair treatment it deserves.
Thus far, we have letters from 6 well-respected scientists, including members of the National Academy. This should be more than sufficient to show that Nicole's work stands on its merits (as judged by quality scientists), and that her application is valid on scientific grounds. It has become clear to us however, that more is needed. As such, we have sent Nicole's credentials to our Senators, and both have written letters of support on her behalf, which we have included in her visa application. We think this too will help get INS to take a closer look at her application. We also wondered Ken, if it is possible to obtain a similar letter of support from the White House? We feel that such a letter of support would cause INS to take a careful look at Nicole's application; which is all we're asking for. If this is possible, I can send you Nicole's credentials immediately, as well as copies of the letters from the Senators, for closer inspection.

If it is not possible to obtain include such a letter in her application, do you have any other ideas for where we might turn for support? We are getting very nervous about this situation, because if her visa is inappropriately denied again, Nicole's time on her current visa will run out in August, and we will be forced to quit our jobs, sell everything, and move to Colombia for 2 years. With the current situation of political unrest and civil war there, it goes without saying that I do not want my 6-month old son to spend significant time there, and be in harms-way, but we may be facing that situation in the very near future.

So, thanks for taking the time to consider this. I hope that the White House can add a letter of support on Nicole's behalf, and look forward to your response.

Hope to see you again soon,

Dean

Here is the final list of examples prepared by Treasury of entities that have been adversely impacted by the lack of a federal program for terrorism risk insurance. It has been provided to our press office for release after the President's remarks later today.

Many thanks to Ed Demarco, Gerry Hughes, and John Horowitz for all their help in preparing this.

Lack of Terrorism Insurance Coverage:
A National Problem Requiring a National Solution

The President today drew attention to the economic ramifications of the lack of adequate commercial property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk. The economic consequences are widespread, affecting all parts of the country and many industries, non-profit organizations, and municipalities. While many entities are reluctant to publicly discuss the difficulties they have had in securing insurance coverage for terrorism risk, some have stepped forward. The following examples demonstrate the national scope and diversity of the problem.

Prior to January 1st 2002, Gwinnett County, GA, in Atlanta's metropolitan area paid approximately $349,000 for $1.8 billion of property-casualty insurance, including $300 million of terrorism coverage. At renewal, Gwinnett secured only $500 million in property-casualty insurance for the county's jail, police headquarters, sewage treatment plants, government center, and other municipal buildings from its primary carrier, and only $1 million of terrorism insurance coverage. Additionally, the county's premiums climbed to $502,000 per year. Gwinnett County then went out and purchased a $50 million terrorism insurance policy from Lloyds of London for $390,000.

After discussions with over 40 different insurance companies for general liability coverage, the U.S. Olympic Committee (USOC) received quotes from only two companies just days before the Salt Lake City Games were to begin. Both quotes excluded terrorism coverage. The day before the Olympic Winter Games began, the USOC secured a minimal amount of terrorism risk coverage – 5 percent of its expiring general liability limit, for the full price of the broader coverage – a 20-fold increase in cost per dollar of coverage. The USOC is currently negotiating a policy for 3 U.S. Olympic training sites, for an April 16 renewal. So far, it has received 5 quotes for insurance coverage, but none of them includes terrorism coverage.

The Metropolitan Transportation Authority for New York City was able to obtain only $150 million in terrorism coverage for its tunnels, bridges, and subways worth over $1.5 billion.

Terrorism insurance coverage for the Mall of America was finally re-obtained in late March. For the real estate company, which owns the Mall and many other trophy properties, certain coverage limits are now 1/100th of what they were prior to January 1st. At times terrorism coverage costs more than 10 times what all risk coverage had cost prior to January 1st. The company is prohibited from revealing the exact price terms.

The LeFrak Organization, owner of a new large office building in Jersey City, New Jersey, experienced difficulty obtaining mortgage financing because of the high cost of terror coverage. Self-insurance was not an option since all of LeFrak's lenders, including the securitization market, required terrorism insurance. After an extensive search, LeFrak was able to obtain terrorism coverage. But this came at a substantially higher cost – $400,000 for standard property-casualty coverage and another $400,000 for terrorism insurance. Prior to 9/11, the entire cost of the coverage for this building, including terrorism coverage, was $60,000.

The Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco has lost its terrorism risk coverage. For its non-terrorism coverage, premiums recently rose from $500,000 to $1.1 million and coverage was reduced from $125 million to $25 million. The Golden Gate Bridge District's CFO is contemplating toll increases to pay for the premium hikes.

The United Jewish Appeal-Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York sponsors hospitals, major medical teaching centers, nursing homes, and many other facilities throughout New York State. None of these institutions has been able to obtain terrorism risk insurance.

The Newark Museum's fine arts insurance premium recently doubled, increasing from $21,000 to $42,500. According to the Museum's insurance agent, this increase was primarily due to concerns about potential terrorism, exacerbated by the institution's proximity to New York City.

The Hyatt Corporation has purchased a site for a new office building in downtown Chicago at a cost of roughly $400 million. The company is now trying to obtain financing for this project but is being told that nobody will make loans without insurance for terrorism, yet adequate terrorism insurance is unavailable. As a result, construction on the project has not been able to begin. The project will lead to the creation of 2500 jobs -- if the Hyatt Corporation can get insurance and proceed with the project.

Amtrak was unable to obtain terrorism coverage when its $500 million property insurance policy came up for renewal on December 1st. Terrorism coverage of that magnitude was not available, and the amount of terrorism coverage that was available was priced so high that it was beyond consideration. Amtrak believes that only limited amounts of terrorism coverage are available today, and that limited coverage is at extremely high rates.

Major hotel companies, including such well-known brands as Embassy Suites, Hilton, Holiday Inn, Hyatt, Marriott, Sheraton, Westin and others, have lost or will soon lose within the next 60 days terrorism coverage under their property insurance programs. These companies are finding that whatever replacement terrorism insurance coverage is available is inadequate to meet their insurance needs. These companies employ millions of Americans, including people working in the hotels, building the hotels and all the other indirect jobs that are required to support hotel properties.

The Cleveland Municipal School District has been notified that there will be an exclusion for terrorist risk when its policy comes up for renewal in July. The School District is concerned that not only will it be losing coverage for terrorism risk, but that the language of the exclusion is written very broadly.

The Wisconsin Energy Corporation has been informed by its insurer that coverage will no longer be available for acts of terrorism when its policy comes up for renewal in July. In seeking to fill this void, the company has found only very limited, and extremely expensive, coverage available from other insurance companies. With this limited coverage, the company's non-nuclear power plants would be grossly underinsured for the potential risk.

In a recent insurance renewal, Baylor University was able to get only half the coverage for twice the price, and its terrorism risk coverage was even more limited. Last year, Baylor's coverage was $1 billion, including terrorism coverage, for a $500,000 premium. This year, they have several separate policies totaling $600 million in coverage, and the premium has risen to $1 million. The terrorism coverage is only $60 million.

The State of Florida is requiring all insurance policies for homeowners and small businesses to include terror coverage. But the availability of such insurance is in jeopardy because the insurance companies cannot obtain reinsurance on coastal commercial properties in Florida.

A prominent Las Vegas developer has been unable to obtain financing for a $2 billion project due to lack of insurance; once financing is obtained, the project will provide 16,000 jobs.

The National Football League and individual teams and stadiums have experienced difficulty acquiring terrorism coverage. The Miami Dolphins and New York Giants have joined the ranks of other teams around the country that have lost terrorism coverage in the wake of the 9/11 attacks. Many teams and stadiums are faced with the choice of going "bare" or paying the exorbitant prices being charged by insurers for minimal coverage.

Hey, we just went back to reconstruct this to see if anything had slipped through the cracks. Here is what we found. After we received your comment below and comments from OHS (as well as comments to Judge from Nick, I believe) on Wed. the 20th, Judge Gonzales sent it to Secretary Card on the night of the 20th for his review. Secretary Card was leaving the morning of the 21st, and there was a strong desire to get it out before he left. Secretary Card reviewed it and signed the letter early on the morning of Thursday the 21st. It was then FAXed that morning. Copies of the final were delivered to Nick's office (to Jill Davie or Mike Conway, I believe), but the final version apparently may not have made its way to you.

I hope we did not cause any unintended confusion in this. But my apologies if we did.

DRAFT
March __, 2002

Dear Senator Stevens and Senator Byrd:

The President received your letter of March 15, 2002, and asked that I reply on his behalf.

The Administration respects the important role played by the Congress in evaluating and funding homeland security efforts, and we are committed to meeting Congress' legitimate need for information. For that reason, senior Administration officials, including members of the President's Cabinet and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, have testified before Congress on these subjects. Governor Ridge and his staff have also provided numerous briefings to many members of Congress and their staffs on homeland security and budgetary matters. The Governor will continue to work closely with Congress, including the relevant Committees, in a manner consistent with this practice. Just as significantly, each of the departments and agencies with operational and budget authority also will continue to work with and testify before the Congress.

As Nick Calio advised you in his letter of March 13, 2002, however, this Administration also will adhere to the same policy that Presidents of both parties have long followed and that Congress has long respected: The President's immediate White House advisers and staff, including officials with responsibilities closely analogous to those of Governor Ridge such as the National Security Adviser, ordinarily do not testify before Congress on policy matters. This is a fundamental principle of separation of powers that protects the confidentiality of the President's relationship with his White House advisors and the President's ability to employ advisors who can devote their attention to assisting and advising the President as he sees fit.

The rare historical exceptions to the rule against testimony by White House staff have generally been in circumstances, unlike those here, involving substantial evidence of personal or official misconduct. For example, your letter cites three World War II examples, but each of those situations involved allegations of personal or official wrongdoing. And even if there were isolated examples of close Presidential advisors testifying on policy matters, that would not alter our fundamental point: For many decades, Presidents of both parties -- and Congress -- have agreed that the President's White House advisors ordinarily do not testify before Congress on policy matters.

I appreciate your continued interest in homeland security issues, and I invite you to meet with me, Governor Ridge, Nick Calio, and Judge Gonzales to work out a satisfactory accommodation that will ensure, consistent with these principles, that you receive the information you need regarding homeland security matters.

Sincerely,

Andrew H. Card, Jr.
Chief of Staff

March 25, 2002

The Honorable Robert C. Byrd
Committee on Appropriations
United States Senate
S-128, The Capitol
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Byrd:

Thank you very much for the courtesy you extended in our meeting on Wednesday. The thoughtful explanation of your position was insightful and I am appreciative of your willingness to discuss the current issues.

As I mentioned, in the sixty or so legislative days that have passed since October 8th, 2001, when the Office of Homeland Security opened, I have personally participated in over thirty-five meetings on Capitol Hill. Collectively, members of the Homeland Security office have been involved in over one hundred meetings. The President and the Administration are intent on providing appropriate information to Members of Congress and the American people about our approach to securing our homeland.

Our earlier conversations have given rise to the proposal I briefly outlined during our telephone conversation Saturday evening. I believe it will meet your needs and avoid the setting of a precedent that could undermine the Constitutional separation of powers and the long-standing traditions and practices of both Congress and the Executive Branch.

I would welcome the opportunity to provide a public briefing next month to Senators and Members of Congress. Also present would be Executive Branch officers who have operational authority over the homeland security programs and appropriations proposed in the FY03 budget. Senators and Members of Congress present would have the opportunity to ask questions of me and of those officers. The proceedings would be open to both the public and the press. This approach addresses your concerns for a public forum for discussing the President's homeland security proposals in the FY03 budget. The proposal addresses the unique needs of Congress to become informed on the evolving new issue of how we, as a Nation, are addressing homeland security in the near aftermath of September 11th.

I look forward to your response to this proposal. I believe that we can work together in an effort to make America safer, stronger, and better.

Sincerely,

Tom Ridge
Assistant to the President

we continue to get calls, the most recent from Bloomberg, on how much potus pays for political trips. how we calculate costs for air force one, how much the white house pays, who pays, etc. I would like to get a stock answer/process.

i would suggest the rnc say:
1) no taxpayer funds are used to pay for political activities.
2) the rnc receives a deposit for political events prior to the event from a campaign or other host.

3) the rnc refunds the excess amount.
4) the formula for these calculations has been used consistently dating back to president reagan.

all questions on cost of air force one, other details we would refer to the wh. travel or legal offices.

note: the amount of deposit will show up on our financial report, in the case of bloomberg inquiry for the march 1 trip to iowa, in two weeks. should we disclose the amount of deposit? or just, if pressed, tell them it will be on our financial disclosure form?

i assume wh legal and rnc legal will have to sign-off on this approach?

thanks.

REV_00337985

(d) PARTICIPATION BY SELF INSURED ENTITIES.—

(1) DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, establish procedures to allow participation in the Program by municipalities and other governmental or quasi-governmental entities (and by any other entity, as the Secretary deems appropriate) operating through self insurance arrangements that were in existence on September 11, 2001, but only if the Secretary makes a determination with regard to participation by any such entity before the occurrence of an act of terrorism in which the entity incurs an insured loss.

(2) PARTICIPATION.—If the Secretary makes a determination to allow an entity described in paragraph (1) to participate in the Program, all reports, conditions, requirements, and standards established by this Act for participating insurance companies shall apply to any such entity, as determined to be appropriate by the Secretary.

(e) SHARED INSURANCE LOSS COVERAGE.—

(1) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the cap on liability under paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6), the Federal share of com-

(i) shall be equal to 80 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that—

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) does not exceed $10,000,000,000; and

(ii) shall be equal to 90 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that—

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) exceeds $10,000,000,000.

(B) EXTENSION PERIOD.—If the Program is extended in accordance with section 6, the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2003, shall be calculated in accordance with clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), subject to the cap on liability in paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6).

(C) PRO RATA SHARE.—If, during the period described in subparagraph (A) (or during the period described in subparagraph (B), if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6), the aggregate insured losses for that period exceed $10,000,000,000, the Secretary shall determine the pro rata share for each participating insurance company of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses calculated under subparagraph (A).

(2) CAP ON ANNUAL LIABILITY.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), or any other provision of Federal or State law, if the aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 during any period referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1)—

(A) the Secretary shall not make any payment under this Act for any portion of the amount of such losses that exceeds $100,000,000,000; and

(3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 in any period described in paragraph (1), and the Congress shall determine the procedures for and the source of any such excess payments.

(4) FINAL NETTING.—The Secretary shall have sole discretion to determine the time at which claims relating to any insured loss or act of terrorism shall become final.

(5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(6) IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS.—For policies covered by reinsurance contracts in force on the date of enactment of this Act, until the in-force reinsurance contract is renewed, amended, or has reached its 1-year anniversary date, any Federal share of compensation due to a participating insurance company for insured losses during the effective period of the Program shall be shared—

(A) with all reinsurance companies to which the participating insurance company has ceded some share of the insured loss pursuant to an in-force reinsurance contract; and

(B) in a manner that distributes the Federal share of compensation for insured losses between the participating insurance company and the reinsurance company or companies in the same proportion as the insured losses would have been distributed if the Program did not exist.

SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF CLAIMS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Program, including authority—

(1) to investigate and audit all claims under the Program; and

(3) the Federal share of compensation for insured losses will be paid under the Program, including payments based on estimates of or actual aggregate insured losses;

(4) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repayment from or reimburse any participating insurance company, based on estimates of insured losses under the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4;

(5) each participating insurance company that incurs insured losses shall pay its pro rata share of insured losses, in accordance with section 4; and

(6) the Secretary will determine any final netting of payments for actual insured losses under the use of financial resources and enhance the ability of the economy to maintain stability, while responding to a variety of economic, political, environmental, and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

(2) the ability of businesses and individuals to obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to economic growth, urban development, and the construction and maintenance of public and private housing, as well as to the promotion of United States exports and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected world;

(3) the ability of the insurance industry to cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by potential acts of terrorism in the United States can be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist attacks, while maintaining the stability of the economy;

(4) widespread financial market uncertainties have arisen following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, including the absence of information from which financial institutions can make statistically valid estimates of the probability and cost of future terrorist events, and therefore the size,

REV_00337974

Program, including payments owed to the Federal Government from any participating insurance company and any Federal share of compensation for insured losses owed to any participating insurance company, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4.

(c) SUBROGATION RIGHTS.—The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment made by the United States under the Program.

(d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may employ persons or contract for services as may be necessary to implement the Program.

(e) CIVIL PENALTIES.—The Secretary may assess civil money penalties for violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, or order issued by the Secretary under this Act relating to the submission of false or misleading information for purposes of the Program, or any failure to repay any amount required to be reimbursed under regulations or procedures described in section 5(b). The authority granted under this subsection shall continue during any period in which the Secretary's authority under section 6(d) is in effect.

SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM; DISCRETIONARY EXTENSION.

(a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—

REV_00337992

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Program shall terminate at midnight on December 31, 2002, unless the Secretary—

(A) determines, after considering the report and finding required by this section, that the Program should be extended for one additional year, until midnight on December 31, 2003; and

(B) promptly notifies the Congress of such determination and the reasons therefor.

(2) DETERMINATION FINAL.—The determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(3) TERMINATION AFTER EXTENSION.—If the Program is extended under paragraph (1), the Program shall terminate at midnight on December 31, 2003.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress—

(1) regarding—

(A) the availability of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism;

REV_00337993

(B) the affordability of such coverage, including the effect of such coverage on premiums; and

(C) the capacity of the insurance industry to absorb future losses resulting from acts of terrorism, taking into account the profitability of the insurance industry; and

(2) that considers—

(A) the impact of the Program on each of the factors described in paragraph (1); and

(B) the probable impact on such factors and on the United States economy if the Program terminates at midnight on December 31, 2002.

(c) FINDING REQUIRED.—A determination under subsection (a) to extend the Program shall be based on a finding by the Secretary that—

(1) widespread market uncertainties continue to disrupt the ability of insurance companies to price insurance coverage for losses resulting from acts of terrorism, thereby resulting in the continuing unavailability of affordable insurance for consumers; and

(2) extending the Program for an additional year would likely encourage economic stabilization and facilitate a transition to a viable market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(d) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST COMPENSATION.—Following the termination of the Program under subsection (a), the Secretary may take such actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, reimbursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during the period in which the Program was in effect under this Act, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 and regulations promulgated thereunder.

(e) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE.—This Act is repealed at midnight on the final termination date of the Program under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be construed—

(1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or causing to be taken, such actions under subsection (d) of this section and sections 4(e)(4), 4(e)(5), 5(a)(1), 5(c), and 5(e) (as in effect on the day before the date of such repeal), and applicable regulations promulgated thereunder, during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect; or

(2) to prevent the availability of funding under section 10(b) during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect.

(f) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary should make any determination under subsection (a) in sufficient time to enable participating insurance companies to include coverage for acts of terrorism in their policies for 2003.

(g) STUDY AND REPORT ON SCOPE OF THE PROGRAM.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary, after consultation with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance industry, and other experts in the insurance field, shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

(h) REPORTS REGARDING TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE PREMIUMS.—

(1) REPORT TO THE NAIC.—Beginning 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter, each participating insurance company shall submit a report to the NAIC that states the premium rates charged by that participating insurance company during the preceding 6-month period for insured losses covered by the Program, and includes an explanation of and justification for those rates.

(2) REPORTS FORWARDED.—The NAIC shall promptly forward copies of each report submitted under paragraph (1) to the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Comptroller General of the United States.

(3) AGENCY REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission shall submit joint reports to Congress and the Comptroller General of the United States summarizing and evaluating the reports forwarded under paragraph (2).

(B) TIMING.—The reports required under subparagraph (A) shall be submitted—

(i) 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(ii) 12 months after the date of submission of the first report under clause (i).

(4) GAO EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

(A) EVALUATION.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall evaluate each report submitted under paragraph (3), and upon request, the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the NAIC shall provide to the Comptroller all documents, records, and any other information that the Comptroller deems necessary to carry out such evaluation.

(B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after receipt of each report submitted under paragraph (3), the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to Congress a report of the evaluation required by subparagraph (A).

SEC. 7. PRESERVATION OF STATE LAW.

Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction or regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State over any participating insurance company or other person—

(1) except as specifically provided in this Act; and

(2) except that—

REV_00337998

(A) the definition of the term "act of terrorism" in section 3 shall be the exclusive definition of that term for purposes of compensation for insured losses under this Act, and shall preempt any provision of State law that is inconsistent with that definition, to the extent that such provision of law would otherwise apply to any type of insurance covered by this Act;

(B) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002, rates for terrorism risk insurance covered by this Act and filed with any State shall not be subject to prior approval or a waiting period, under any law of a State that would otherwise be applicable, except that nothing in this Act affects the ability of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory; and

(C) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and for so long as the Program is in effect, as provided in section 6 (including any period during which the authority of the Secretary under section 6(d) is in effect), books and records of any participating insurance company that are relevant to the Program shall be provided, or caused to be provided, to the Secretary or the designee of the Secretary, upon request by the Secretary or such designee, notwithstanding any provision of the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting such access.

SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING CAPACITY BUILDING.

It is the sense of the Congress that the insurance industry should build capacity and aggregate risk to provide affordable property and casualty insurance coverage for terrorism risk.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PAYMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Program, to remain available until expended.

(b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY.—This Act constitutes payment authority in advance of appropriation Acts, and represents the obligation of the Federal Government to provide for the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program.

SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for such property damage, personal injury, or death, except as provided in subsection (d).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (d).

(b) GOVERNING LAW.—The substantive law for decision in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be derived from the law, including applicable choice of law principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that—

(1) the law, including choice of law principles, of another State is determined to be applicable to the action by the district court hearing the action; or

(2) otherwise applicable State law (including that determined pursuant to paragraph (1)), is in-funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by such acts of terrorism;

(5) a decision by property and casualty insurers to deal with such uncertainties, either by terminating property and casualty coverage for losses arising from terrorist events, or by radically escalating premium coverage to compensate for risks of loss that are not readily predictable, could seriously hamper ongoing and planned construction, property acquisition, and other business projects, generate a dramatic increase in rents, and otherwise suppress economic activity; and

(6) the United States Government should provide temporary financial compensation to insured parties, contributing to the stabilization of the United States economy in a time of national crisis, while the financial services industry develops the systems, mechanisms, products, and programs necessary to create a viable financial services market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to establish a temporary Federal program that provides for a transparent system of shared public and private compensation for insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, in order to—consistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal law.

(c) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—Any amounts awarded in a civil action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attributable to punitive damages shall not count as insured losses for purposes of this Act.

(d) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS.—Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that was a participant in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including, if applicable, any extension period provided for under section 6.

(1) protect consumers by addressing market disruptions and ensure the continued widespread availability and affordability of property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk; and

(2) allow for a transitional period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses, while preserving State insurance regulation and consumer protections.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) ACT OF TERRORISM.—

(A) CERTIFICATION.—The term ''act of terrorism'' means any act that is certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General of the United States—

(i) to be a violent act or an act that is dangerous to—

(I) human life;

(II) property; or

(III) infrastructure;

(ii) to have resulted in damage within the United States, or outside the United

REV_00337976

States in the case of an air carrier described in paragraph (3)(A)(ii); and

(iii) to have been committed by an individual or individuals acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest, as part of an effort to coerce the civilian population of the United States or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the United States Government by coercion.

(B) LIMITATION.—No act or event shall be certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism if—

(i) the act or event is committed in the course of a war declared by the Congress; or

(ii) losses resulting from the act or event, in the aggregate, do not exceed $5,000,000.

(C) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any certification of, or determination not to certify, an act or event as an act of terrorism under this paragraph shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(2) BUSINESS INTERRUPTION COVERAGE.—The term ''business interruption coverage''—

REV_00337977

(A) means coverage of losses for temporary relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, including ordinary wages, where—

(i) there is physical damage to the business premises of such magnitude that the business cannot open for business;

(ii) there is physical damage to other property that totally prevents customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; or

(iii) the Federal, State, or local government shuts down an area due to physical or environmental damage, thereby preventing customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; and

(B) does not include lost profits, other than in the case of a small business concern (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) and applicable regulations thereunder) in any case described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

(3) INSURED LOSS.—The term ''insured loss''—

(A) means any loss resulting from an act of terrorism that is covered by primary property and casualty insurance, including business interruption coverage, issued by a participating insurance company, if such loss—

(i) occurs within the United States; or

(ii) occurs to an air carrier (as defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code) or to a United States flag vessel (or a vessel based principally in the United States, on which United States income tax is paid and whose insurance coverage is subject to regulation in the United States), regardless of where the loss occurs; and

(B) excludes coverage under any life or health insurance.

(4) MARKET SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The ''market share'' of a participating insurance company shall be calculated using the total amount of direct written property and casualty insurance premiums for the participating insurance company during the 2-year period preceding the year in which the subject act of terrorism occurred (or during such other period for which adequate data are available, as determined by the Secretary), as a percentage of the aggregate of all such property and casualty insurance premiums industry-wide during that period.

(B) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may adjust the market share of a participating insurance company under subparagraph (A), as necessary to reflect current market participation of that participating insurance company.

(5) NAIC.—The term "NAIC" means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(6) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY.—The term "participating insurance company" means any insurance company, including any subsidiary or affiliate thereof—

(A) that—

(i) is licensed or admitted to engage in the business of providing primary insurance in any State, and was so licensed or admitted on September 11, 2001; or

(ii) is not licensed or admitted as described in clause (i), if it is an eligible surplus line carrier listed on the Quarterly

Listing of Alien Insurers of the NAIC, or any successor thereto;

(B) that receives direct premiums for any type of commercial property and casualty insurance coverage or that, not later than 21 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submits written notification to the Secretary of its intent to participate in the Program with regard to personal lines of property and casualty insurance; and

(C) that meets any other criteria that the Secretary may reasonably prescribe.

(7) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY DEDUCTIBLE.—The term ''participating insurance company deductible'' means—

(A) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $10,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002; and

(B) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $15,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an

The Honorable Gordon England
Secretary of the Navy
1000 Navy Pentagon
Washington, DC 20350-1000

Dear Secretary England:

I am writing to respectfully recommend that you name a Virginia class submarine in honor of my home state of South Dako ta. Besides commemorating the sacrifices of South Dakota's sons and daugh ters to the preservation of freedom, this is a wonderful opportunity to continu e the proud heritage of two previous U.S. Navy ships named after the state of S outh Dakota.

The first USS South Dakota was a 13,680 ton arm ored cruise, mounting 8-inch guns, commissioned in 1908. Her name was cha nged to USS Huron in 1920 when a new battleship was to be christened "South Dak ota."

The second USS South Dakota (BB57) was launched June 7, 1941. This mighty battleship became a legend before she was a ye ar old because of her exploits against the Japanese in the South Pacific during World War II. She sank three Japanese cruisers in a matter of minutes du ring the battle of Guadalcanal in 1942, and survived the heaviest air attack ma de on a battleship, shooting down 32 Japanese planes. These actions caugh t the attention of Americans all across the U.S. when they were reported in new spapers.

As you can see, the name "USS South Dakota" has a distinguished history. I believe that honoring this exemplary service and those who served aboard the previous USS South Dakota's by naming a< I> Virginia class submarine after my state is a worthy action. I look forward to he aring from you.

Have you talked to him to try to get a more definite sense about where he's coming from? If there is a good chance this will be a reasonably balanced and fair-minded profile (which doesn't mean, of course, that it would be entirely free from criticism), my own vote would be to extend some cooperation. If we have any reason to believe, however, that this is a hit piece, I'd brush it off. Do you know the reporter?

Anne,

How are you?

I'm writing a long piece about Alberto Gonzales that will cover both his career in Texas and time in Washington. It is currently slated to be a cover story.

I want to interview Gonzales and perhaps some of his senior aides. What are the chances of making that happen? This is going to be a fairly exhaustive profile, and I can't imagine doing it without speaking to him.

Ideally, I would like to talk to him within the next week, but I can certainly be flexible. Thanks for considering this request, and let me know if you have any questions about the piece.

DEADLINE: COB Friday, April 5, 2002

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This draft bill would authorize VA to provide individually-identified health information to organ procurement organizations for the purpose of determining whether a patient is a suitable organ, tissue, or eye donor without the prior written consent of the patient or his or her authorized representative if deceased. This proposal would allow VA to conform to the organ donor practices followed by most medical facilities in the country.

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

There is transmitted herewith a draft bill "to amend Title 38, United States Code, to provide authority for the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to release individually-identified medical information to assist in the donation of organs, tissue and eyes for the purpose of transplantation" with the request that it be introduced and considered for enactment.

This legislative proposal would permit VA to conform to the organ donor practices followed by most medical facilities in the country. It would authorize the Veterans Health Administration to provide individually-identified health information to Organ Procurement Organizations (OPOs) for the purpose of determining whether a patient is a suitable organ, tissue or eye donor, without the prior written consent of the patient or his or her authorized representative if deceased.

State and private sector health care providers currently provide such information to OPOs pursuant to a regulation promulgated by the Department of Health and Human Services that requires Medicare-participating hospitals to report all deaths and imminent deaths to their associated OPO in order to continue participating in the Medicare program. 42 CFR Part 482.

When a patient has died or faces imminent death, the participating facility notifies the OPO, which immediately sends personnel to the facility to review the patient's medical records and decide whether the patient is an appropriate donor candidate. If so, the OPO then contacts the patient, or in the case of an incompetent or deceased patient, the patient's family, to seek permission for donation. OPO personnel are specially trained to evaluate patients' medical records to identify appropriate donor candidates, and to approach family members or patients about donation.

VA medical facilities, not being Medicare-participating hospitals, are not subject to the rule's disclosure mandate. VA desires to participate in this nationwide program, but is currently constrained from providing the patient information necessary for participation. VA may provide individually-identified patient medical information to an OPO only to the extent permitted by applicable Federal law. Although the Privacy Act covers VA medical records, it is not a bar to OPO disclosure. In the case of a living patient, a routine use which would authorize an unconsented-to disclosure to an OPO can be adopted by publication in the Federal Register. 5 U.S. Code, Section 552a(b)(3). The Privacy Act is inapplicable upon the death of the patient.

Two VA-specific statutes however, also apply to the release of individually-identified VA patient medical information: the veterans' benefits records confi-dentiality statute, 38 U.S.C. § 5701, which specifically protects the veteran's name and address, and other, benefits-related information, such as medical records; and a statute providing for the confidentiality of VA medical information pertaining to treatment for sickle cell anemia, substance abuse, and treatment for HIV infection, 38 U.S.C. § 7332. Death does not eliminate their applicability. VA does not have legal authority under these statutes to release information to OPOs without the prior written consent of the patient or his or her authorized representative.

Obtaining prior written consent for disclosure of this information is not feasible. This is a very emotional, stressful time for patients and their survivors. It is not desirable to disturb them in order for an OPO representative to examine medical records to determine if donation consideration is appropriate. (VA staff lack the expertise necessary to evaluate medical records for donation purposes.) If it is, consent for the donation procedure will be sought by specially trained OPO personnel; if it is not, the patient or family representative has not been disturbed. Additionally, if consent for disclosure of information to the OPO is required, because of the lack of detailed knowledge of the OPO donation program, and the lack of specialized training on how to approach patients or family representatives for this purpose in these circumstances, VA personnel are not very well equipped to obtain such consents. Lastly, a sizable number of patients die in hospitals, making this too large a commitment to be handled by medical facility staff.

Therefore, sections 5701(a) and 7332 prevent VA from providing OPOs with VA patient names, home addresses and general medical information, and, any treatment information for sickle cell anemia, substance abuse, and treatment for HIV infection. As a consequence, the VA cannot fully participate in the national donation program. As the provider of health care to this Nation's veterans, VA must be able to participate fully in the national organ donation program, i.e., in order to donate as well as receive organs. Enacting this legislation will enable VA to disclose the medical information to OPOs necessary for VA's full participation in this program. VA will be able to follow the organ donation procedures followed by other health care providers.

Because medical information covered by section 7332 is so sensitive, VA's section 7332 regulations generally prevent redisclosure of this information by a recipient without the recipient first obtaining consent to the redisclosure. VA would expect all information disclosed to the OPO to be safeguarded and redisclosed only for purposes of the donation program.

There are no costs associated with this proposal.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this proposal from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

107th Congress
2nd Session

A Bill

To amend Title 38, United States Code, to provide authority for the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to release individually-identified medical information to assist in the donation of organs, tissue and eyes for the purpose of transplantation.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America In Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DISCLOSURE FROM VETERANS' BENEFITS RECORDS.

(a) Section 5701 of Title 38, United States Code, is amended

(1) by redesignating existing subsection (j) as (k); and

(2) by inserting the following new subsection (j):

"(j) The Secretary may release the name or address, or both, of any present or former member of the Armed Forces, or a dependent of a present or former member of the Armed Forces, to an Organ Procurement Organization or similar entity approved by the Department of Health and Human Services to determine whether an individual is a suitable organ, tissue or eye donor."

SECTION 2. DISCLOSURE FROM CERTAIN MEDICAL RECORDS.

Section 7332 of Title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding the following numbered paragraph at the end of subsection 7332(b)(2):

"(E) To an Organ Procurement Organization or similar entity approved by the Department of Health and Human Services to determine whether an individual is a suitable organ, tissue or eye donor."

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF DRAFT BILL

Sections 1 and 2 of the bill would add new subsections to sections 5701 and 7332 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to disclose individually-identifiable patient medical information without the prior written consent of the patient, or his or her authorized representative if deceased, to Organ Procurement Organizations (OPOs) for them to determine whether the patient is a suitable organ, tissue, or eye donor.

Section 5701 of title 38, United States Code, permits VA to release the names and home addresses of veterans and their dependents without consent only for very limited purposes. OPO reporting is not one of those purposes.

This legislation would amend 5701 and 7332 to provide specific authority for VA to release this information to OPOs without consent. The section 5701 amendment would specifically authorize disclosure of a veteran patient's name and address information along with the veteran's general medical information; disclosure of the later is authorized under existing authority. 38 U.S. Code, section 5701(e). The section 7332 amendment implicitly authorizes disclosure of both individual identifier information and the indicated medical information. Because medical information covered by section 7332 is so sensitive, VA's section 7332 regulations generally prevent redisclosure of this information by a recipient without the recipient first obtaining the patient's consent to the redisclosure. VA would expect redisclosure by OPO's to be limited to donation purposes.

TESTIMONY OF
MITCHELL E. DANIELS, JR.
DIRECTOR
BEFORE
COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS
U.S. SENATE

APRIL 11, 2002

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Thompson, Members of the Committee, I am pleased to be here this morning to discuss homeland security.

Introduction

Our nation learned a terrible lesson on September 11th. The characteristics of American society that we cherish -- our freedom, our openness, our great cities, our modern transportation systems -- make us vulnerable to terrorism of catastrophic proportions. This vulnerability will exist even after we bring justice to those responsible for the events of September 11th. Indeed, the threat of mass-destruction terrorism has become a reality of life in the 21st Century. It is, a permanent condition to which not just America, but the entire world must adjust.

The federal government has an absolute obligation to secure the homeland from future terrorist attacks. This will involve major new programs and significant reforms by the federal government, several of which are described in the FY 2003 Budget. But it will also involve new or expanded efforts by state and local governments, private industry, non-governmental organizations, and ordinary citizens. The higher priority we all now attach to homeland security has already begun to ripple through the land.

Homeland security is a challenge of monumental scale and complexity. It will not be cheap, easy, or quick. Achieving our homeland security objectives will require vast sums of money, strenuous labor, and many years. Our work has already begun, and it will continue. The American people should have no doubt that ultimately we will succeed in weaving a proper and permanent level of security into the fabric of America.

This President's FY 2003 budget reflects not just our absolute commitment to achieving a much more secure homeland, but also our determination to do so in a manner that preserves liberty and strengthens our economy.

September 11th and Our Immediate Response

The September 11th terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon have presented an unprecedented challenge to our nation. The response has been, and must continue to be, equal to that challenge. In the immediate aftermath of the attacks, Congress swiftly appropriated $40 billion to compensate victims, aid reconstruction, wage war against terrorism, and strengthen our defenses at home. In the seven months since September 11th, the $40 billion dedicated to homeland security purposes has helped to:

REV_00338134

- increase the number of sky marshals on our airlines;
- support the largest criminal investigation in U.S. history;
- acquire enough medicine to treat up to 10 million more people for anthrax or other bacterial infections;
- investigate the sources of terrorist funding, and then freeze the financial assets of more than150 individuals and organizations connected to international terrorism;
- deploy hundreds of Coast Guard cutters, aircraft, and small boats to patrol the approaches to our ports and protect them from internal or external threats;
- acquire equipment for certain major mail sorting facilities to find and destroy anthrax bacteria and other biological agents of terror; and,
- station 8,000 National Guards troops at baggage-screening checkpoints at 420 major airports.

Homeland Security Strategy

The Administration is now taking the next step. When the President established a new Office of Homeland Security, under the leadership of Governor Tom Ridge, he directed the Office "to develop and coordinate the implementation of a comprehensive national strategy to secure the United States from terrorist threats or attacks."

This strategy will meet four key tests:

- The strategy for homeland security will be comprehensive and will integrate the full range of homeland security activities into a single, mutually supporting plan.
- The strategy will be a national strategy, not a federal government strategy as the threat posed by terrorism does not fall neatly within the jurisdiction of the federal government. To defeat terrorism, the federal government must work with states and localities and the private sector.
- The strategy will outline a long-term plan for the federal government to strengthen homeland security.
- Finally, the strategy will include measures by which we can evaluate progress and allocate resources. These objectives will set the goals for federal departments and agencies. They will also give guidance to state and local governments and the private sector.

At the same time as the Office of Homeland Security crafts a national strategy, the Administration will begin work immediately on four urgent and essential missions for the defense of our homeland: ensuring state and local first responders (firemen, police, and rescue workers) are prepared for terrorism; enhancing our defenses against biological attacks; securing our borders; and, sharing information and using information technology to secure the homeland.

These four missions lead our homeland security agenda -- but they are not the whole of it. We must also finish the job of securing our airways. In 2003, the new Transportation Security Administration (TSA) will strive to meet the tight deadlines and rigorous aviation security requirements set by Congress. In addition, we also propose a robust expansion in domestic law enforcement work. The 2003 Budget requests enhancements to the capabilities of the FBI and other law enforcement/intelligence agencies. The President's Budget for 2003 includes total spending for homeland security that would rise to $38 billion in 2003 -- an $18 billion increase over the total appropriated in 2002, and a virtual doubling of the pre-September 11th levels.

REV_00338135

On March 21st the President submitted a $27.1 billion supplemental budget request to Congress to address the War on Terrorism, Homeland Security and Economic Recovery. Funding for items included in this package meet the following criteria: they are true emergencies; they address an immediate and known requirement, and they cannot be met with existing funds. In most cases, the funds would be required to be obligated this fiscal year. Of this amount, $5.2 billion was provided for Homeland Security needs.

Office of Homeland Security

In developing the FY 2003 Budget, there was an unprecedented level of cooperation between OMB and OHS. OMB has dedicated staff and managers working with OHS, and many more are engaged on homeland security on an issue-by-issue basis. This arrangement has been very productive. OHS is focused on building the capacities we need to fight terrorism in the most effective and efficient way. OMB adds its programmatic and budgetary knowledge to ensure that we are utilizing the right resources and tools to build that capacity. We expect that this arrangement will continue as OHS develops its National Strategy, as the Administration works to develop the FY 2004 Budget, and beyond.

While the Office of Homeland Security coordinates and consults with OMB and agencies throughout the government, Governor Ridge does not have operational authority over any federal agency except his own office within the White House. The roll-out of the Homeland Security Advisory System is illustrative of how the Governor coordinated with various agencies, but ultimately handed over the operational aspects of the final product to a Department – which, in this case, is the Justice Department.

The Administration recognizes and endorses the legitimate desire of Congress to have full access to the information it needs to make decisions related to the nation's homeland security. Through an extensive variety of means, the Administration will act to provide Congress with responsive answers to its information needs. Governor Ridge has regularly met with Members of Congress to provide extensive information on homeland security. In fact since October 8, Governor Ridge and his staff have held over 100 meetings with Members of Congress and their staff. And he has also offered to meet with the committees of jurisdictions in a non-testimonial format at their convenience.

We have an honest difference of opinion about the propriety of those Presidential advisors without statutory office being compelled to testify before Congress. It is only this difference of principle, and not any disagreement about the need for Congress to inform itself, that separates our positions.

The President has said from the outset that the initial structure for organizing and overseeing homeland security may evolve over time as we all learn more and circumstances change. It is possible that the National Strategy Review now underway may recommend an arrangement different from the current one.

Conclusion

In the near term, the Administration is open to all methods of conveying information that protect the confidentiality of Presidential advice. Longer term, we are pleased to discuss with Congress alternative ways of organizing for Homeland Security that effectively meet the needs of the American people and their legislative representatives.

The Nation faces new kinds of threats from new kinds of enemies. Defeating those threats will be the great challenge and the great achievement of this generation of Americans.

Why Confirm Estrada? Ask the Democrats.
By John Nowacki

Several Senators, House members, representatives of Hispanic groups, attorneys and grassroots activists will hold a rally this afternoon to show their support for the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit. Mr. Estrada, a prominent Washington attorney, was nominated on May 9, 2001, and though nearly a year has passed, the Democrat leadership of the Senate has chosen to do nothing with his nomination. No Senate vote. No committee vote. No real hint of when he'll even receive a hearing. And no good reason why.

It isn't as if he's not qualified. Mr. Estrada is a widely respected attorney at a well-known DC law firm, who served as an Assistant U.S. Solicitor General from 1992-1997, during both the first Bush and Clinton Administrations. He is also a former Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York, where he served as Deputy Chief of the Appellate Section.

Mr. Estrada has argued fifteen cases dealing with civil and criminal issues before the U.S. Supreme Court, prevailing in ten of them. He has tried ten cases as a prosecutor and argued seven cases before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Mr. Estrada clerked for a Carter appointee on the Second Circuit before clerking for Justice Anthony Kennedy on the Supreme Court, and the American Bar Association has rated him "well-qualified" for a seat on the DC Circuit.

And it isn't as if there is a substantive objection to Mr. Estrada's confirmation. A representative of the liberal Alliance for Justice, for example, recently expressed some vague concern about Mr. Estrada's "approach to issues" while admitting that, in truth, "we don't know that much about him."

In short, there's no excuse for the Democrats' refusal to act. No excuse, except politics.

Democrats and their allies on the Left have made it clear that they will fight over circuit court nominations in a way previously reserved for Supreme Court nominees. And when they can't cobble together some rationale for opposing a nominee - as they did with Charles Pickering and are attempting to do with Brooks Smith and Priscilla Owens -- they simply stall. And stall. And stall.

The fact that Mr. Estrada is Hispanic is apparently also working against him -- not because Democrats don't want Hispanics on the bench, but because they don't want Republican-appointed Hispanics on the bench.

But apart from all these arguments - Mr. Estrada's qualifications, his stellar r?sum?, and his excellent reputation - there are other arguments for Senate action on the nomination, arguments put forward by Senate Democrats themselves.

On October 11, 2000, Senator Patrick Leahy, now Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and scheduler of hearings, said: "I have said on the floor, although we are different parties, I have agreed with Governor George Bush, who has said that in the Senate a nominee ought to get a vote, up or down, within 60 days."

Mr. Estrada has been waiting for a hearing and a Senate vote, up or down, for 336 days. And counting.

On July 25, 2000, Mr. Leahy said: "The Senate should get about the business of voting on the confirmation of the scores of judicial nominations that have been delayed without justification for too long . . . That is our constitutional responsibility. It should not be shirked."

On March 7, 2000, Senator Tom Daschle - now the Senate Majority Leader - said: "There is a dire shortage-we have a judicial emergency right now, throughout the country. And it's important for us to respond to that emergency, confirm the many, many judges whose nominations are still languishing either in committee or on the floor."

There were 75 vacancies then. There are 95 vacancies now.

On March 19, 1997, Mr. Leahy said: "But we should also remember that when we just put numbers here, numbers do not tell the whole story. The DC Circuit's docket is by far the most complex and difficult in the Nation."

Four of the twelve seats on the DC Circuit are now vacant.

On that same day, Senator Richard Durbin, a current member of the Judiciary Committee, said: "I submit that this debate is not just about numbers. It is about the administration of justice; the fair, prompt, equitable, and thorough administration of justice is at stake."

Mr. Estrada should be confirmed, and the Senate does indeed have a responsibility to move forward on this nomination, which has been delayed without justification for far too long. If Democrats really believe that judicial vacancies impair the administration of justice, they should give Miguel Estrada a hearing and a vote. They've made the case. Now it's time for them to act.

DEADLINE: COB Friday, April 5, 2002

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This VA draft bill would clarify title 38 so that VA would be identified as the primary payer of all needed care and services for the biological children of Vietnam veterans who suffer from spina bifida and for children of women Vietnam veterans born with certain birth defects or disabilities. It also would permit health care providers to bill potential additional payers for remaining bill balances in cases where beneficiaries have coverage other than VA for the same care or services.

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker
U. S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

We are transmitting a draft bill, "To amend title 38, United States Code, to permit the Department of Veterans Affairs to be the primary payer of health care provided to certain children of Vietnam veterans." We request that it be referred to the appropriate committee for prompt consideration and enactment.

In accordance with chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) provides needed medical care, directly or by contract or other arrangement, to biological children of Vietnam veterans who suffer from spina bifida and to children of women Vietnam veterans born with certain birth defects or associated disabilities. By statute, VA must provide the needed health care to eligible beneficiaries who seek such care through the Department. Chapter 18 does not provide any authority by which payers other than VA may be financially responsible, as secondary payers, for the care or services VA has provided (either directly or by contract). Thus, even if a beneficiary has a health plan that would otherwise be responsible for payment for the care or services and VA's payment is less than the amount billed by the provider, the provider may not bill the beneficiary's health plan for the balance. That is, the provisions of chapter 18 do not include any provisions permitting the possible coordination of benefits between a provider and potential payers for care furnished to these beneficiaries.

In our experience with the spina bifida program, we have learned that many private providers will not accept chapter 18 beneficiaries as patients. This is because of the providers' inability to charge other payers for the difference between VA's payment and the billed amount. To improve access to care for these special beneficiaries, the draft bill would expressly identify VA as the primary payer of all needed care and services covered under chapter 18 and permit health care providers to bill potential additional payers for remaining bill balances in cases where beneficiaries have coverage other than VA for the same care or services. However, the draft bill would specifically prohibit these health care providers from imposing any additional charges on the beneficiary, or the beneficiary's family, for any care or service for which the Department has made payment. It would also limit the total amount a provider could receive for care or services furnished under chapter 18 to the amount billed to VA, to prevent the provider from receiving a windfall. Lastly, the proposal would require VA, upon request, to disclose information received on claims to an insured's health plan.

VA supports this measure, believing that it would increase these special beneficiaries' access to medical care by increasing the number of providers willing to participate in these worthy programs. If enacted, this proposal would have no costs to VA.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this proposal from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

REV_00338180

New subsection (c) would permit the provider (or his agent) who furnished such care to seek payment for the difference between the amount billed and the amount paid by the Secretary from a third party payer if the beneficiary has a health care plan that would otherwise be responsible for payment for the care or services. New subsection (c)(1) would prohibit the health care provider (or the provider's agent) from imposing any additional charges on the beneficiary who received the care, or the beneficiary's family, for any service or item for which the Secretary has made payment under this section. New subsection (c)(2) would limit the total amount a provider could receive for furnishing care or services under this section from all payer sources to the amount billed to VA. New subsection (c)(3) would require VA, upon request, to provide a third party with information concerning claims under this section.

Section 3 would redesignate subsection (c) of section 1813 as subsection (d) and add a new subsection (c) to that section. New subsection (c) would provide for the Department of Veterans Affairs to be the primary payer for care or services furnished under this section. New subsection (c) would also permit the provider who furnished such care (or his agent) to bill a third party payer for the difference between the amount billed and the amount paid by the Secretary, if the beneficiary has a health care plan that would otherwise be responsible for payment for the care or services. New subsection (c)(1) would prohibit the health care provider (or agent of the provider) from imposing any additional charges on the beneficiary, or the beneficiary's family, for any item or service for which the Secretary has made payment under this section. New subsection (c)(2) would limit the total amount a provider could receive for furnishing care or services under this section from all payer sources to the amount billed to VA. New subsection (c)(3) would require VA, upon request, to provide a third party with information concerning claims under this section.

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

There is transmitted herewith a draft bill "to provide explicit authority for the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to obtain title to inventions, particularly when made by Department employees under certain circumstances." The draft bill redesignates subsection (e) as (f) and inserts a new subsection (e) of section 7303 of Title 38, United States Code. We request that it be referred to the appropriate committee for prompt consideration and enactment.

In accordance with Section 7303 of Title 38, U. S. Code, the Secretary operates a recognized national medical research program. The program includes biomedical, mental illness, prosthetic and other rehabilitative research, with emphasis on injuries and illnesses particularly related to military service. While the program is supported by the more than 100 VA medical facilities at which research is performed, it is enhanced by more than 80 affiliations with major medical school research programs. Many very productive VA researchers hold both part-time faculty research appointments and part-time VA medical center positions. The program is also enriched by funds administered by VA non-profit research corporations and the medical school affiliates. Notwithstanding this extensive medical research program, until recently, the Department has not been an active participant in the Federal technology transfer program, the Federal effort, supported by legislation, to move inventions in Federal laboratories to publicly available products marketed by private sector entities. Last year, the Secretary announced that the Department will actively participate in the technology transfer program, identifying three reasons for this policy. First, to ensure that inventions beneficial to the veteran population, regardless of whether they are commercially profitable, are developed for the use of veterans. Second, to establish greater awareness of and receive recognition for the Department's extensive research program. Finally, to realize any possible revenue in order that it can be reinvested in the research program.

Currently there is general authority for a Federal agency to obtain title to inventions. For example, Section 207 of Title 35, U. S. Code, implicitly recognizes this authority in providing that Federal agencies may obtain patents in federally-owned inventions. The circumstance most frequently giving rise to VA ownership is the employer-employee relationship.

The Department adheres to the same rules and legal criteria as other Federal agencies when determining whether to assert an ownership right in an invention made by a VA employee. These criteria are set forth in regulations promulgated by the Department of Commerce in accordance with Executive Order 10096. For an agency to assert an ownership interest, the inventor must be an employee of the Federal agency, who made the invention while acting within the scope of his or her research duties, and, there must have been a significant contribution to the making of the invention by the Federal agency, e.g. equipment, funds, official time and services of other federal employees. If the employee disagrees with the agency decision, there is a right of appeal, first to the Department of Commerce, and then to Federal court. The agencies are bound by the decisions rendered by the Department of Commerce and the Federal courts.

This legislative proposal does not change or interfere with the existing authority Federal agencies have to assert ownership rights in inventions made by Federal employees. Following enactment, VA will still be required to conduct itself in the same manner as all other Federal agencies in determining whether the agency can claim title to an invention made by its employees. VA, however, is unique among Federal agencies because of its specific mandate to partner with medical colleges and universities in the operation of its Health Administration and its medical research program (38 U.S.C. §7303(a)(4)). Many research employees of the Department are part-time, also holding a part-time academic research appointment with a university affiliate. Frequently, such researchers make an invention over a period of time during which they were performing research for the VA part of the time and for the university part of the time. This leads to a single inventor but two different organizations having ownership rights in the invention. Although present law (35 U.S.C. §202(e)) recognizes joint owners in an invention, it contemplates two inventors who have made one invention. Joint ownership arises for VA when a single inventor who is both a part-time employee of the Department, and of the academic affiliate, makes an invention while functioning as an employee of both.

Many of our university research affiliates have accepted the fact that VA has a joint ownership right in the aforementioned circumstances; however, a number of questions and concerns have arisen as to the statutory authority of the Secretary to take title in inventions, even though made under the criteria set forth in the Executive Order and the Department of Commerce's regulations. This may be a reflection of the fact that the VA research program and VA research affiliations are mandated by law, but there is no comparable authority for the Secretary to obtain title to inventions arising therefrom. Enactment of this legislation will ensure that there is no question amongst our other university affiliates as to the Department's entitlement to at least joint ownership in VA-developed inventions. The Department does not anticipate that this legislation will disturb the mutually beneficial research relationship with our affiliates, but we are confident that where any reservations exist, we can work out fair, mutually-acceptable technology transfer arrangements. The majority of the university affiliates have recognized VA's claim to a joint ownership interest in inventions made at the VA by inventors carrying out research duties for both.

The agency currently incurs operating expenses, as a participant in the Federal technology transfer program. No additional costs would be incurred by the enactment of this legislation.

This authority is also made applicable to any research efforts within the Department, separate from those arising under the program of medical research.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this proposal from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

REV_00338191

107th Congress
2nd Session

A Bill

To amend Title 38, United States Code, to provide explicit authority for the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to acquire title to inventions under certain circumstances.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America In Congress assembled,

(a) Subchapter I of Chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, is amended--

(1) by redesignating subsection (e) as (f)

(2) by inserting the following new subsection (e):

§ 7303. Functions of Veterans Health Administration: research programs

"(e) The Secretary may obtain title to inventions, including those inventions made by employees, acting within the scope of their research duties and with a significant contribution by the Department, under the program of medical research, or any other activity of the Department.".

ANALYSIS OF PROPOSED BILL

The draft bill would amend title 38, United States Code, by inserting a new subsection (e) to explicitly authorize the Secretary of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to obtain title to inventions, particularly when made by Department employees under certain circumstances.

Federal agencies are authorized to obtain title to inventions. For example, Section 207 of Title 35, United States Code, implicitly recognizes such authority in providing that Federal agencies may obtain patents in federally-owned inventions. VA can claim ownership of inventions made by its employees, acting within the scope of their research duties and with a significant contribution of the Department, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Department of Commerce in accordance with Executive Order 10096, as well as VA's implementing regulations.

This legislation would not provide VA with any different or more extensive legal bases for the taking of inventions than currently exist. This language does, however, explicitly set forth authority by which the Secretary may take title to inventions in accordance with existing law. This authority is made applicable to any research efforts within the Department, in addition to those arising under the program of medical research.

The draft bill would also redesignate the existing subsection (e), of section 7303, of title 38, United States Code as subsection (f).

Republicans Accuse Democrats of Discrimination
Wednesday, April 10, 2002
By Thomas Ferraro
WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Top U.S. Senate Republicans accused Democrats of racial discrimination on Wednesday in delaying action on Miguel Estrada, a conservative Hispanic judicial nominee seen as a future contender for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court.
Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats promptly denied the charge as "preposterous on its face," noting in a statement they had already approved three of President Bush's four other Hispanic judicial nominees.
Regardless, the partisan exchange showed a year-long battle over the Republican president's largely conservative judicial nominees heating up in the Democratic-led Senate.
The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to hold a confirmation hearing on Estrada, 40, a Washington, D.C. attorney picked by Bush nearly a year ago to be the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.
Estrada was on the legal team that represented Bush before the U.S. Supreme Court in Florida's election recount battle that effectively decided the 2000
White House contest.
Critics, including a number of Senate Democrats who favor moderate judges, see Estrada as having a very conservative record and fear he could pose a threat to civil rights.
But Estrada has become a favorite among Republicans, anxious to draw more Hispanic voters. He is widely viewed as a possible future candidate for the U.S. Supreme Court.
"They (Democrats) don't want Miguel Estrada because he's Hispanic," Senate

Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, said as he emerged from a White House meeting with Bush.
"This is complete discrimination," Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Senate Republican Conference, charged at a rally on behalf of Estrada outside the U.S. Capitol that drew about three dozen people, many of them Hispanic clergymen.
"I want to say to Democrats ... you don't have to be afraid," said Sen. Pete Domenici, a New Mexico Republican. "They (Hispanics) are good lawyers and great judges."
Replied Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, a Vermont Democrat, "The Republican campaign to paint a picture of unfairness in the handling of this or other judicial nominees is pure partisan bunk that is flatly refuted by the record."
"It is the Democrats who have long championed diversity in the federal courts," Leahy said, noting Democratic President Bill Clinton nominated a number of Hispanics, on many of whom the then Republican-led Senate refused to hold hearings.
Leahy has said his committee will give Estrada a confirmation hearing, but has thus far declined to say when.
Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said on Wednesday he did not believe Democratic opposition to Estrada was based on race.
"I don't think there is anybody in the Senate with a racist bone in their body, but I do think it is prejudice against conservatives," Hatch said.
To date, 42 of Bush's 98 judicial nominees have been confirmed. Just one, Charles Pickering of Mississippi, has been rejected.
But a number of other Bush judicial nominees, including Estrada and seven others first nominated by the president in May 2001, have yet to have a hearing.
Bush has accused Democrats of dragging their feet on his judicial nominees, echoing Clinton's complaints when Republicans controlled the Senate during six of his eight years in office.

* Associated Press: GOP Wants Minority Judges Confirmed
http://www.nytimes.com/aponline/national/AP-Senate-Estrada.html

Filed at 4:39 p.m. ET

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Senate Republicans on Wednesday accused Democrats of discriminating against conservative minorities picked for the federal bench, citing the case of a Hispanic lawyer nominated last May but still awaiting a confirmation hearing.

Democrats said the charge was ridiculous and that Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has promised that Miguel Estrada, selected for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, will get a hearing this year.

Republicans have lobbied for the committee to act more quickly on all of Bush's nominees. The president has nominated 98 people for openings on federal trial and appellate courts. The Democratic-controlled Senate has confirmed 42 and rejected one.

``What you are seeing here is an assault by the Senate Judiciary Committee on anyone who is a conservative,'' said Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. But ``if you are a conservative and a minority the bar goes up a lot higher. ... This is Clarence Thomas all over again. This is complete discrimination.''

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., called Santorum's comments a ``punch below the belt.''

During his Supreme Court confirmation hearing 11 years ago, Clarence Thomas contended that opposition to his nomination amounted to a ``high-tech lynching for uppity blacks.''

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the committee, said Democrats ``will simply not accept a Hispanic, an African-American or even women who do not tow the line of the left of main center, liberal interest groups.''

Estrada, a partner in the Washington law firm that represented Bush during the election recount, would become the first Hispanic on D.C. appeals court.

Also awaiting a hearing for the same court is John Roberts, a former clerk to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist. Roberts' earlier nomination was never acted on during the administration of the first President Bush.

``Are we discriminating against John Roberts ... because he's white?'' Schumer asked. ``I don't care if a judge nominee is white, black, Latino or something else, if they are in the mold of Justices (Antonin) Scalia and Thomas, I am not going to be stampeded into voting for them.''

Harsh feelings from previous judicial battles also linger.

Democrats say that majority Republicans stalled former President Clinton's nominees for the D.C. appeals court. It has been five years since a nominee was confirmed to that court.

``I think it sort of clouds the argument that we ought to do these quickly when they took their sweet time back then,'' Schumer said.

In addition, the last disputed Hispanic nominee, Richard A. Paez, waited four years -- longer than any other nominee in history -- before being confirmed for the 9th U.S. Circuit Appeals Court by the Republican-controlled Senate. Conservatives complained that Paez, a Mexican-American, was too liberal and activist.

Similar charges of discrimination by the parties have arisen before.

In 2000, the Congressional Black Caucus accused Senate Republicans of being sexist and racist for not voting for Clinton's minority judicial candidates, including Roger Gregory, who would have been the first black on the 4th U.S.
Circuit Court of Appeals. Republicans denied the charge.

Only after President Bush took office and Democrats took over the Senate Judiciary Committee did Gregory get confirmed.

"They (Democrats) don't want Miguel Estrada because he's Hispanic," Senate Mino rity Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, said as he emerged from a White House meeting with Bush.
"This is complete discrimination," Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Senate Republican Conference, charged at a rally on behalf of Estrada o utside the U.S. Capitol that drew about three dozen people, many of them Hispan ic clergymen.
"I want to say to Democrats ... you don't have to be afraid," said Sen. Pete Do menici, a New Mexico Republican. "They (Hispanics) are good lawyers and great j udges."
Replied Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, a Vermont Democrat, "The Republican campaign to paint a picture of unfairness in the handling of th is or other judicial nominees is pure partisan bunk that is flatly refuted by t he record."
"It is the Democrats who have long championed diversity in the federal courts," Leahy said, noting Democratic President Bill Clinton nominated a number of His panics, on many of whom the then Republican-led Senate refused to hold hearings .
Leahy has said his committee will give Estrada a confirmation hearing, but has thus far declined to say when.
Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said o n Wednesday he did not believe Democratic opposition to Estrada was based on ra ce.
"I don't think there is anybody in the Senate with a racist bone in their body, but I do think it is prejudice against conservatives," Hatch said.
To date, 42 of Bush's 98 judicial nominees have been confirmed. Just one, Charl es Pickering of Mississippi, has been rejected.
But a number of other Bush judicial nominees, including Estrada and seven other s first nominated by the president in May 2001, have yet to have a hearing.
Bush has accused Democrats of dragging their feet on his judicial nominees, ech oing Clinton's complaints when Republicans controlled the Senate during six of his eight years in office.

* Associated Press: GOP Wants Minority Judges Confirmed
http://www.nytimes.com/aponline/national/AP-Senate-Estrada.html

Filed at 4:39 p.m. ET

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Senate Republicans on Wednesday accused Democrats of discriminating against conservative minorities picked for the federal bench, citing the case of a Hispanic lawyer nominated last May but still awaiting a confirmation hearing.

Democrats said the charge was ridiculous and that Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has promised that Miguel Estrada, selected for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, will get a hearing this year.

Republicans have lobbied for the committee to act more quickly on all of Bush's nominees. The president has nominated 98 people for openings on federal trial and appellate courts. The Democratic-controlled Senate has confirmed 42 and rejected one.

``What you are seeing here is an assault by the Senate Judiciary Committee on anyone who is a conservative," said Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa. But ``if you are a conservative and a minority the bar goes up a lot higher. ... This is Clarence Thomas all over again. This is complete discrimination."

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., called Santorum's comments a ``punch below the belt."

During his Supreme Court confirmation hearing 11 years ago, Clarence Thomas contended that opposition to his nomination amounted to a ``high-tech lynching for uppity blacks."

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the top Republican on the committee, said Democrats ``will simply not accept a Hispanic, an African-American or even women who do not tow the line of the left of main center, liberal interest groups."

Estrada, a partner in the Washington law firm that represented Bush during the election recount, would become the first Hispanic on D.C. appeals court.

Also awaiting a hearing for the same court is John Roberts, a former clerk to Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist. Roberts' earlier nomination was never acted on during the administration of the first President Bush.

``Are we discriminating against John Roberts ... because he's white?" Schumer asked. ``I don't care if a judge nominee is white, black, Latino or something else, if they are in the mold of Justices (Antonin) Scalia and Thomas, I am not going to be stampeded into voting for them."

Harsh feelings from previous judicial battles also linger.

Democrats say that majority Republicans stalled former President Clinton's nominees for the D.C. appeals court. It has been five years since a nominee was confirmed to that court.

``I think it sort of clouds the argument that we ought to do these quickly when they took their sweet time back then," Schumer said.

In addition, the last disputed Hispanic nominee, Richard A. Paez, waited four years -- longer than any other nominee in history -- before being confirmed for the 9th U.S. Circuit Appeals Court by the Republican-controlled Senate. Conservatives complained that Paez, a Mexican-American, was too liberal and activist.

Similar charges of discrimination by the parties have arisen before.

In 2000, the Congressional Black Caucus accused Senate Republicans of being sexist and racist for not voting for Clinton's minority judicial candidates, including Roger Gregory, who would have been the first black on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Republicans denied the charge.

Only after President Bush took office and Democrats took over the Senate Judiciary Committee did Gregory get confirmed.

Statement of Senator Orrin G. Hatch
Ranking Republican Member, Committee on the Judiciary
Before the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary

Hearing on the Nominations of Jeffrey R. Howard, to be U.S. Circuit Judge, First Circuit
Percy Anderson, to be U.S. District Judge, Central District of California
Michael M. Baylson, to be U.S. District Judge, E. District of Pennsylvania
William C. Griesbach, to be U.S. District Judge, Eastern District of Wisconsin
Joan E. Lancaster, to be U.S. District Judge, District of Minnesota
Cynthia M. Rufe, to be U.S. District Judge, Eastern District of Pennsylvania
John F. Walter, to be U.S. District Judge, Central District of California

April 11, 2002

Thank you, Chairman Kohl.

I am pleased that the Judiciary Committee is considering the nominations of seven exceedingly well-qualified candidates for the federal bench, and I would like to welcome you to the Committee.

Before we discuss the excellent credentials of today's nominees, however, I must take just a minute to make an observation about how this hearing fits into the bigger picture of the Committee's work on judicial nominations.

Today marks the 337th day since President Bush announced his first 11 picks for the federal bench. Eight of those nominations have been languishing in this committee for nearly a year with no commitments for hearings or votes any time soon. All eight received the ABA's majority rating of either well-qualified or qualified. Among these are some of the very best lawyers in the history of our country, including Miguel Estrada, John Roberts and Michael McConnell, just to name three.

This Committee's unwillingness to move more expeditiously on these nominations is exacerbating the circuit court vacancy crisis that exists in America today. Nearly one in five circuit court seats is vacant all across America. When President Bush sent up his first nominees we had 31 circuit court vacancies, and today we still have 31 vacancies. The DC Circuit Court of Appeals is one-third vacant and the 6th Circuit is 50-percent vacant.

President Bush has responded to the circuit court vacancy crisis by rapidly nominating top-notch men and women. The only obstacle standing in the way of the nominees' ability to serve the American people is this Committee.

I am glad that we will consider a circuit court nominee today, but I will point out that in years past under Republican leadership, we regularly considered two or more circuit nominees at a time. In fact, we did so on ten different occasions.

I'm also particularly pleased to see nominees John Walter and Percy Anderson from the Central District of California here – and I'll bet they are happy to be here today too – considering it's been 10 years since they were initially nominated to their seats during the first Bush Administration. They were both nominated in March of 1992, but unfortunately the Senate – which was controlled by the Democrats at the time – denied them a hearing.

Interestingly, they are not the only nominees pending before the Committee today who were nominated by the first President Bush nearly 10 years ago. Terrence Boyle for the 4th Circuit, John Roberts for the D.C. Circuit, Henry Saad for the 6th Circuit, Leonard Davis for the Eastern District of Texas, Andrew Hanen for the Southern District of Texas, Ronald Leighton for the Western District of Washington, and Richard Dorr for the Western District of Missouri – all seven of these nominees were also nominated by the first President Bush, but never received Committee action at that time. I hope that they too will soon receive their long-awaited hearings.

Now, although I would like to explain my support for each of the seven excellent nominees before us today, in the interest of time, I am going to ask Chairman Kohl if the balance of my remarks could be included in the record at this point. That way, we will have more time for the introductions from Members and for the nominees themselves. Let me just say that you are all excellent nominees and I am going to support all of you. I will work with my colleagues for your swift confirmation.

Thank you, Chairman Kohl.

[INSERTION FOR RECORD]

Jeffrey Howard's nomination to the First Circuit Court of Appeals is one more example of the quality appointments that President Bush is making. Mr. Howard has the record of a great attorney and a great public servant. He has served his communities in elected and appointed office and in a myriad public and volunteer undertakings. The people of New Hampshire can be proud of him.

As New Hampshire's Attorney General, he wrote and implemented one of the nation's first effective comprehensive state wide interdisciplinary protocols to combat domestic violence. He also led the fight in New Hampshire for consumers that were the victim of fraudulent businesses. As Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General for the Justice Department, Mr. Howard was a top advisor to Attorney General William Barr, in the areas of asset forfeiture, drug enforcement, and civil rights.

Percy Anderson, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Central District of California, began his career representing indigent clients in civil matters. He later became an Assistant U.S. Attorney in Los Angeles, where he spent six years as First Assistant Division Chief, managing criminal division affairs in the absence of the Chief of the division. In 1985, he joined the Bryan Cave firm, specializing in white collar criminal defense and aviation litigation. In 1996, Mr. Anderson became a partner with Sonnenschein Nath & Rosenthal, a Los Angeles firm, where he focuses on commercial litigation, intellectual property, products liability, false claims, and white collar criminal defense work.

Michael Baylson, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, is familiar with that district because he has served as the United States Attorney there. In that capacity, he developed a reputation for adopting new and successful strategies for the war on drugs, including the tactic of identifying a drug gang, then infiltrating it to learn all its members and indict them en masse. He also was an early proponent of the "Weed and Seed" program designed to "weed out" drug dealers from a community and then "seed" those communities with social services and financial support.

William C. Griesbach, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, comes to us with seven years of experience on the bench, having served as a Wisconsin State Circuit Court Judge since 1995. Prior to his elevation to the bench, Judge Griesbach obtained substantial experience in both criminal and civil litigation: He spent eight years as an Assistant District Attorney for Brown County Wisconsin handling criminal matters, and five years before that at a Green Bay, Wisconsin law firm working on civil cases.

Joan E. Lancaster, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Minnesota, began her career as an Assistant City Attorney, trying approximately 12 jury and 40 court trials during her service. She then spent ten years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Minnesota. After two years of private practice, Justice Lancaster was named as a District Court Judge in the 4th Judicial District in Minnesota. Since 1998, she has served as an Associate Justice on the Minnesota Supreme Court.

Cynthia M. Rufe, nominated to be U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, is another example of how President Bush has tried to create a diverse federal judiciary. Judge Rufe can only be described as a true champion of the rights of children and women. She also was a high school teacher. In addition to her charity work, Judge Rufe has also run the gambit of the legal profession. She was a Public Defender for 5 years and went on to start her own private practice. As a judge, she was appointed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and served with distinction as a member of the Appellate Procedural Rules Committee.

John F. Walter, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, has gained experience in private practice and government service. Mr. Walter has served as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the Criminal Division, Fraud and Special Prosecutions Unit, where he prosecuted the then-largest bank burglary in the U.S. He has been in private practice since1972, working not only as a civil litigator but also as a criminal defense lawyer. As a member of the Federal Indigent Defense Panel, Mr. Walter has represented more than 75 indigent defendants charged with federal crimes in federal court and devoted thousands of pro bono hours to these cases.

In the ad we have a picture of President Bush at our convention along with a quote from him saying:
"I appreciate so very much the fact that the cattlemen usually don't spend a lot of time asking for something from the federal government. Except perhaps for lower taxes" -President George W. Bush 2002 Cattle Industry Convention

We have a membership application at the bottom of the ad, but nothing else in the ad mentions the President...it just deals with policy items NCBA is working on.
Thanks for your help on this.

Libby,

We are wondering what phrase we can add to our schedules to let people know that they need to dispose of schedules properly after an event.

Should I check with the security office about this request?

Thanks!

Brett,

Barbara's # is 224-2763.

I'm helping her compile a list of names to invite.

And I've been spending a lot of time on the fishing club issue. Is there anything I can help you out with?

I've got some questions about some people that Political Affairs would like to import into a database that will be shared by Strategic Initiatives, Political Affairs, Public Liaison and Intergovernmental Affairs. Doug Hoelscher has been working with me on organizing all the entries to be imported into the database.

Please let me know a good time for me to drop by your office to go over them. It should take less than 10 minutes.

Terrorism Insurance Breakthough Suggested, Debunked Congressional sources on both sides of the aisle reported today that Senate and White House negotiators on terrorism reinsurance legislation appear to have made a breakthrough in their discussions and said prospects for reaching a unanimous consent agreement had improved considerably as of Thursday. But Senate leadership sources dismissed those reports as premature and overly optimistic. All observers agreed that the negotiations, which sources described as "intense," have not yet yielded a unanimous consent agreement. But some Republican and Democratic sources said the discussions as of Thursday had progressed beyond substance and into purely procedural territory.
"We are trying to reach a unanimous consent agreement within the next two weeks, with a limited number of amendments [related to legal] liability," said a Democratic source. Moreover, according to this source, lawmakers on both sides had agreed to use a compromise measure crafted last year by Senate Majority Leader Daschle, with contributions from Sen.
```

Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., Senate Banking Chairman Sarbanes and Banking ranking member
Phil Gramm, R-Texas, as the starting point for the "jump ball" amendments on legal reform.
The discussion now is "in terms of limiting the number of amendments, trying to whittle it down
so we can move forward," the Democratic source added.
However, both a spokeswoman for Daschle and a Senate Republican leadership source said today that no agreement has been reached on the base text.
"That hasn't been solved yet," the GOPleadership source said. And without a decision on the starting point, it is impossible to know which or how many amendments related to tort reform will be offered, he added. He continued: "So I imagine we will continue the conversation on both substance and process to see how those flower over the next few weeks. When you start with a jump ball on the floor, it makes a difference whether you're at the Republican key or the Democratic key."
Senate Republicans are advocating bringing up a House-passed reinsurance bill as the starting point * a measure that is clearly unacceptable to Senate Democrats because of its far-reaching tort reforms. Anyone predicting a quick resolution "is not quite appreciating the nuances of what's going on," the GOP source added. "There is and will be a serious effort to attempt to thread the Senate needle for passage of a balanced terrorism reinsurance bill."
But, he continued, "There are (bills that are amendable and fully debatable between now and Memorial Day. We can offer the [reinsurance] bill as an amendment to another bill, thereby triggering a full and fair floor (process," he said.
House Financial Services Chairman Oxley, who shepherded the House reinsurance bill, admonished the Senate to "stop protecting the trial lawyers and start protecting American jobs" by passing a comparable measure. In a speech to the Independent Insurance Agents of America's annual legislative conference Thursday, Oxley said he thought prospects for enactment had improved since President Bush's personal appeal to the Senate earlier this week. In another insurance development, Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., intends to introduce next week a bill to make auto insurance fraud a federal crime, punishable by a maximum sentence of 15 years in prison and over $100,000 in fines. * by Pamela

I view this as an all around bad idea from a legal standpoint. First, and assuming this is intended only as being for the benefit of the WH, if the WH wants to evaluate its website, it should pay for it from WH appropriations. There is no general gift acceptance authority for the WH, so a gift from the RNC or anyone else for this purpose would be inappropriate. Second, and Brett is the political/legal authority, the RNC should pay for purely political matters. Anything that could be construed as giving access to the RNC of a database of who contacts the WH for official business purposes could be problematic. I think the prior administration had problems with confusing their official databases with DNC political databases, and it did not look good.

Would it be allowable to have the RNC pay for a user survey of the WH website? The company doing the survey would place a cookie in the WH site that would randomly select a predetermined number of users - those users would be asked if they'd like to participate in a survey on the usability, functionality and content of the WH site - if they say no, they go back to their original WH screen - if they say yes, they'll be transferred to another web site to complete the survey and then will be taken back to the WH site.

Making Judicious Choices: The Constitutional Responsibility to Appoint Article III Judges

Viet D. Dinh*

I. Introduction

The rule of law has come in for a beating lately. The prevailing conception of judicial decisionmaking is one in which judges decide cases in order to bring about outcomes that are desirable from a policy standpoint.[1] Regrettably, the Senate seems poised to get into the act. A growing chorus of commentators has urged the Senate to screen judicial nominees for ideological orthodoxy; that is, for their tendency to reach case outcomes that the Senate deems to be "just."[2]

This essay hopes to breathe new life into the ideal of the judge as a neutral arbiter of the law's meaning. Its claim is simple: judges must decide cases according to the rule of law, and the Senate must ensure that judicial nominees commit to doing so. The first topic this essay will address is the proper role of the judiciary and what types of judges should be nominated. Next, it will turn to the appropriate role of the Senate in the confirmation process.

Ultimately, the role of the President in nominating candidates to the federal bench, and of the Senate in confirming judicial nominees, and of judges in deciding individual cases, is the same: to ensure that legal disputes are resolved according to the rule of law. The rule of law requires that judges decide cases by applying objective and neutral legal principles to particular cases regardless of the facts, the law, or the arguments made in a given case. If accepted, such a view would eliminate equality before the law.

Evaluating nominees on the basis of their anticipated case outcomes also tends to undermine judicial independence. Judicial independence is an important part of our constitutional system because it enables judges to decide cases according to their merits, and not based on any extrinsic considerations, such as the identity of the litigants. But screening judicial nominees for ideological orthodoxy is an attempt to encourage them to decide cases based on the Senate's view of the desirable public policy outcome. Such inquiry thus raises the possibility of collusion between the Senate and candidates for the federal bench. The danger is that the Senate will offer confirmation in exchange for nominees' agreement to reach outcomes to the Senate's liking—that a nominee will become, in Judge Abner Mikva's apt phrase, "a yes man to the powers that be."[21]

Perhaps the most extreme version of the view that the Senate should confirm nominees based on their policy preferences comes from Professor Laurence Tribe of the Harvard Law School, who argues the Senate's role is to "balance" the judiciary ideologically. The "Senate's ideal role is as a ballast—to adjust the drift of the Supreme Court as represented by a given appointment."[22] Because the current federal bench, especially the Supreme Court, is "dramatically," "lopsidedly," and "overwhelmingly" conservative, Professor Tribe would have the Senate deny confirmation to identifiably conservative nominees.[23]

REV_00338647

And there's the rub. For Professor Tribe's argument for "balance" assumes that the Senate can accurately predict how a judicial nominee will behave once he takes the bench. But if history is any guide, such predictions are wrong as often as they are correct.[24] When President Eisenhower was asked whether he had made any mistakes while in office, he is said to have quipped, "Yes, two, and they are both sitting on the Supreme Court."[25]

Moreover, the judiciary already appears to be evenly balanced between conservatives and liberals. The 5-4 Supreme Court decisions that Professor Tribe and others cite as evidence of the judiciary's radical conservatism reveal that the Court is as evenly divided as it can be.[26] And, President Clinton appointed as many federal judges as did President Reagan.[27]

In fact, the Supreme Court's recent jurisprudence is remarkable not for its "dramatic," "lopsided," and "overwhelming" conservativism, but for its ideological balance. In the past two years, a 5-4 majority held that a Nebraska law prohibiting partial-birth abortion imposed an "undue burden" on a woman's substantive due process right to procure an abortion.[28] The Court by a 7-2 majority held that because the Miranda warnings are "constitutionally based," Congress could not abrogate them by statute.[29] A 6-3 Court held that a Washington law allowing courts to grant child-visitation rights to third parties anytime the court deemed such visitation in the child's best interests, interfered with the parent's substantive due process right to control the upbringing of her children.[30] And the Court unanimously held that Congress had the authority under the Commerce Clause to enact the Driver's Privacy Protection Act, which restricts state governments' ability to disclose a driver's personal information to third parties, and that the Act did not violate the Tenth Amendment's principles of federalism.[31]

Nor does Professor Tribe ever specify whether the Senate should seek to balance individual jurisdictions, or whether the federal judiciary as a whole must be balanced. Of course, some courts of appeals have a reputation for being liberal, while others are known for being conservative. If Professor Tribe's balance imperative applies to individual jurisdictions—and he gives no reason why it should not—I look forward to his joining my call for more Diarmuid O'Scannlains and Alex Kozinskis on the Ninth Circuit.

Practical difficulties aside, Professor Tribe's balancing approach would undermine the rule of law, not to mention our nation's democratic principles. Using the confirmation process to manipulate the judiciary's ideological balance would amount to an attempt to influence the judiciary to decide cases based on non-legal factors, such as judges' personal policy preferences and the identities of the litigants. And even if we were to suppose that an ideologically balanced judiciary is a desirable goal, the way to achieve it is not by manipulating the procedures for confirming judges, but through ordinary electoral processes—that is, through the American people electing a President who will nominate judges who are more to their liking.

Which brings us to the last topic I'd like to discuss. Some commentators have argued that the unique circumstances of the 2000 presidential election, including President Bush's lack of a popular vote plurality and the Supreme Court's decision in Bush v. Gore,[32] entitle the Senate to play a more active role in screening nominees for ideological orthodoxy. Some even argue that the Senate should refuse to confirm any of President Bush's nominees to the Supreme Court.[33]

The number of popular votes a President receives has no bearing on the scope of his powers. The Constitution grants the President certain prerogatives—including the power to nominate judges—based simply on the fact that he is President. A government official, for example the Speaker of the House, who succeeded to the presidency in the wake of a national disaster[34] would still be entitled to wield the full panoply of presidential powers regardless of the fact that he did not receive a single popular vote in the previous election.

Moreover, if the President's failure to command a popular-vote plurality dilutes his nomination powers, might it not also dilute other presidential powers? What about his powers as Commander in Chief? Does President Bush have less authority to prosecute the war on terrorism than he would have had if he had won a plurality of the popular vote?

The place to debate the soundness of Bush v. Gore is the law reviews, not confirmation hearings. To cite Bush v. Gore as a reason for harsher scrutiny of the current President's nominees is a disingenuous way of attempting to stack the courts with judges whose policy

[33] See, e.g., Abner J. Mikva, Supreme Patience, WASH. POST, Jan. 25, 2002, at A25 (arguing that "the Senate should not act on any Supreme Court vacancies that might occur until after the next presidential election," in part because "this president does not have the mandate of a national plurality" in the popular vote); Meet the Press (NBC television broadcast, Feb. 24, 2002) (statement of Sen. Dianne Feinstein):

> President Bush did not have a large mandate. There is no mandate, in my view, to skew the courts to the right. And so I think you're going to see a Judiciary Committee that's really going to be looking for mainstream judges, and those judges that they find outside of the mainstream I do not believe will have Democratic support.

[34] 3 U.S.C. § 19(a)(1) (2000) provides that the Speaker of the House will succeed to the presidency if the President and Vice-President are killed, incapacitated, or removed from office. preferences match those of the current Senate majority. Such obstructionism may win the Senate points from interest groups, but it comes at the price of the rule of law and an independent judiciary.

IV. Conclusion

The Senate's role in the judicial confirmation process is a solemn one. It must ensure that qualified and ethical jurists sit on our nation's courts. But inquiring into the results that nominees are likely to reach in future cases, and attempting to bring "ideological balance" to the judiciary, would unravel America's legal and political systems.

In 1981, Senator Metzenbaum defended Sandra Day O'Connor's refusal to discuss her views on abortion. "I believe there is something basically un-American," he claimed, "about saying that a person should or should not be confirmed for the Supreme Court or should or should not be elected to public office based on somebody's view that they are wrong on one issue."[35] Senator Kennedy concurred, stating that "[i]t is offensive to suggest that a potential Justice of the Supreme Court must pass some presumed test of judicial philosophy. It is even more offensive to suggest that a potential justice must pass the litmus test of any single-issue interest group."[36] The insight of Senators Metzenbaum and Kennedy is equally true today. Whether a single issue or a collection of issues, any requirement that nominees share a set of policy preferences, whether imposed by the President or the Senate, is an abuse of power.

If our courts are to retain their legitimacy, judges must continue to be seen as objective decisionmakers with no biases or policy goals in the exercise of their duties. As Judge Tacha of the Tenth Circuit has explained, "judicial independence means simply that a life-tenured federal judge is free from all political and other outside pressures to decide cases in a wholly impartial manner. . . . . Prevailing political winds have no effect."[37] To permit bitter confirmation battles to call into question the neutrality of the federal judiciary would not only cast doubt on the soundness of individual court decisions. It also would sanction the view that courts may act as political players, and may usurp the rightful powers of the two democratically elected branches to set policy for us all.

facts, and not on the basis of extrinsic considerations such as individual policy preferences, society's changing priorities, or the identities of the litigants. The Senate departs from this ideal only at great risk. For insisting that judicial nominees commit to deciding cases in a way that will secure desirable outcomes would not just unravel the rule of law and compromise judicial independence. It would threaten the basic principle of American constitutionalism: popular sovereignty, the notion that the people are the source of all political power, and therefore are entitled, subject to a few clearly defined constitutional limitations that themselves reflect the will of the people, to live under laws of their own choosing.

II. The Role of the Courts

Our Constitution establishes a system with three separate branches of government—executive, legislative and judicial—each with distinct powers. Because "we the people" ultimately are sovereign under the Constitution, our government is subject to the same restrictions it would impose on us. As Alexander Hamilton wrote in Federalist No. 51, "[i]n framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: you must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place oblige it to control itself."[3] The fact that the government is itself bound by the law, not just a distant lawgiver, enables us as citizens to predict the legal consequences of our actions, and ensures that the law can be applied equally to all.

Because the rule of law requires the government to subject itself to the laws, and because the judiciary is a branch of the government, it follows that the courts must be subject to the law. Translated into an operational principle, this means that judges must decide cases according to pre-announced, determinate, and neutral legal principles, not according to extrinsic considerations such as their personal policy preferences or their estimation of what is politically popular. Put another way, the federal courts serve a limited role under the Constitution. They have not been assigned the power to legislate, but only to interpret the Constitution and legislation enacted by Congress.

The reason we have not entrusted the Article III judiciary with legislative powers goes to the very foundation of American constitutionalism: popular sovereignty, the notion that the people or their representatives are entitled to enact laws of their liking.[4] Our commitment to self-governance does not allow the courts to wield legislative powers, for they are staffed by unelected judges who cannot be held accountable for the policy choices they would make. Judge Learned Hand recognized nearly half a century ago that government by judiciary would be antithetical to American democracy:

> For myself it would be most irksome to be ruled by a bevy of Platonic Guardians, even if I knew how to choose them, which I assuredly do not. If they were in charge, I should miss the stimulus of living in a society where I have, at least theoretically, some part in the direction of public affairs. Of course, I know how illusory would be the belief that my vote determined anything; but nevertheless when I go to the polls I have a satisfaction in the sense that we are all engaged in a common venture.[5]

Just as Congress cannot adjudicate,[6] the judiciary shall not legislate.[7] By respecting these separate roles, we protect the ideals of republican government and self-governance.

Put another way, judges when deciding cases must focus on methodology—the process that is used to determine which party should prevail—not on whether the ultimate outcome is "desirable." An emphasis on the process of adjudication, as opposed to its results, helps to mitigate the influence of judges' individual personal policy preferences, and thus helps to prevent courts from frustrating the will of the people in the guise of legal interpretation. If the methodology is sound, the result is legitimate.[8] What, then, is the proper method for deciding cases?

The meaning a court assigns to a law—whether the Constitution or a statute promulgated pursuant to the Constitution—must come from its text and structure. Only if courts rely on such objective indicia of the law's meaning can the law provide citizens with the predictability and knowability that enable them to act in accordance with that law. Not only does the law inform the governed what they may or may not do, but more importantly it informs the government what it shall not do.

Regrettably, the meaning of some—though by no means all—legal texts can be opaque. Where unambiguous, a court is bound to apply the law as written. But ambiguity is not an excuse for judicial policymaking. Where the text of the law is unclear, the court's goal must remain to discern the objective meaning of the law from its language, structure, and context. Only a fool would deny that language sometimes can be difficult to interpret, "but that does not suggest that it can be made to mean anything."[9] Being tied to the language, however, limits the number of reasonable interpretations that can be reached.

A court endangers the Constitution, and the principle of self-representation that it embodies, when it interferes with the decisions of democratic majorities without a concrete textual foundation. This is not to suggest that courts lack the authority to restrain electoral majorities where the laws they have enacted violate the Constitution's clear and explicit terms. But where the Constitution is silent the choice is for the people and their elected representatives. The Constitution does not itself settle every controversial political issue. Rather, it creates a form of government that enables the people to do so.[10]

Regrettably, a rival conception of judicial decisionmaking—that judges do have the expansive authority to rewrite text, especially constitutional text, to conform to current norms, or, more accurately, to the judges' perception of current norms—has gained in popularity among academics and judges.[11] The underlying assumption is that judges are not neutral arbiters of the law's meaning, but instead seek to find reasons to justify their desired results. Accepting this as an accurate description of judicial decisionmaking is to accept that the law does not truly govern. And, that our true governors are unelected, lifetime members of the federal judiciary. Accepting this position further requires us to accept that the judiciary is not an unbiased, objective arbiter but rather is an interested policymaking body—moreover, one whose policies are not subject to correction at the polls. The judiciary would essentially be the final decisionmaker on all questions of public policy. As President Lincoln recognized, "[i]f the policy of the government, upon vital questions . . . is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court . . . the [11] See, e.g., RONALD DWORKIN, LIFE'S DOMINION 145 (1993) (arguing that judges must "do their best collectively to construct, reinspect, and revise, generation by generation, the skeleton of freedom and equality of concern that [the Constitution's] great clauses, in their majestic abstraction, command"); Laurence H. Tribe, Comment, in ANTONIN SCALIA, A MATTER OF INTERPRETATION: FEDERAL COURTS AND THE LAW 65, 70 (1997) (proposing that the Constitution was "launched upon a historic voyage of interpretation in which succeeding generations, looking at the entire text of the Constitution as amended from time to time, would elaborate what the text means in ways all but certain not to remain static").

people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having . . . practically resigned their government, into the hands of that eminent tribunal."[12]

Indeed, judicial lawmaking through "updating" the Constitution to fit the times poses a threat not just to conservatives, but to liberals as well. People of all ideological stripes, who accept the right of the people to enact laws of their liking, should share a concern about judges who would substitute their policy preferences for those of the people (as reflected in the Constitution) or of the people's representatives (as reflected in statutes). For if the judiciary has the power to disregard the Constitution's text to expand individual rights, it also has the power to contract individual rights. Ironically, the individual rights that the Living Constitution theory seeks to protect are better safeguarded by a commitment to the Constitution's text.

Perhaps the most eloquent meditation on the dangers of disregarding established legal rules, even in service of the most noble objectives, appears in A Man for all Seasons, Robert Bolt's play about the life of Sir Thomas More.

> SON-IN-LAW: So now you'd give the Devil benefit of law!
>
> MORE: Yes. What would you do? Cut a great road through the law to get after the Devil?
>
> SON-IN-LAW: I'd cut down every law in England to do that!
> MORE: Oh? And when the last law was down, and the Devil turned round on you—where would you hide, the laws all being flat? This country's planted thick with laws from coast to coast—man's laws, not God's—and if you cut them down—and you're just the man to do it—d'you really think you could stand upright in the winds that would blow then? Yes, I'd give the Devil the benefit of law, for my own safety's sake.[13]

Today no less than in More's day, those who would "cut a great road through the law" to achieve praiseworthy goals risk undermining the very ends they seek to advance.

Tocqueville probably was right when he proposed that "[s]carcely any political question arises in the United States that is not resolved sooner or later into a judicial question." But just because judges decide questions with political significance does not mean they should decide them in a political manner.[14] Politics is the business of the political branches. By seeking to nominate judges committed to the rule of law and a neutral method of decisionmaking, the President has not sought to influence the outcomes of cases. He has sought to ensure that the sovereign people continue to be the ultimate source of America's policy choices through elections of those in the political branches, who can be held accountable for their actions. Judges' policy preferences and personal beliefs should play a role in our system only in the way each of our policy preferences and personal beliefs do: through individual votes at the polls.

III. The Role of the Senate

The overriding goal of the judicial appointment process—including both the President's decision to nominate and the Senate's decision to confirm—is to ensure that our nation's courts are staffed by jurists who decide cases consistent with the rule of law. But judges can function as neutral arbiters of the law's meaning only if they are independent of the legislature. According to Federalist 78, judicial independence "is an excellent barrier to the despotism of a prince," and "in a republic it is no less an excellent barrier to the encroachments and the oppressions of the legislative body."[15] This is why the framers of the Constitution sought to shield federal judges from the influence of Congress, by prohibiting the legislature from reducing their salaries and allowing Congress to remove them only by impeachment.[16]

[14] See BORK, supra note 9, at 177 ("[c]onstitutional philosophies always have political results. They should never have political intentions.")

The twin imperatives that judges respect the rule of law, and that they be independent of the political branches, have broad implications on what criteria the Senate may consider when deciding whether to confirm a nominee. As Senator Biden explained in 1994, the Senate is entitled to screen nominees for qualifications and character. First, nominees must have "the capacity, competence, and temperament to be on the court of appeals or a trial court." Second, they must be "of good character" and "free of conflict of interest." Third, candidates must "faithfully apply the Constitution and the precedents of the Supreme Court." If they satisfy those three elements—and if they are not "so out of the mainstream" that one has reason to question their competence, character, or temperament—then "they should be given an opportunity to fulfill [sic] the seat for which they have been named."[17] In addition, the Senate is entitled to consider nominees' judicial philosophy: the methodology they would use when deciding a case, including their commitment to precedent and their willingness to set aside personal biases.

In recent months, a coalition of law professors and professional activists has urged the Senate to go look beyond qualifications, character, and judicial philosophy, and also evaluate nominees based on their "ideology"—their tendency to reach desirable case outcomes. Accepting that invitation would undermine both the rule of law and judicial independence. The Senate would be basing its decision whether to confirm on a factor the President did not consider: the nominee's policy preferences.

To take a couple of examples almost at random, Wall Street Journal columnist Al Hunt proposes that the Senate should refuse to confirm judicial nominees who "would reverse many federal protections in civil rights, women's rights, environmental protection, campaign finance reform, privacy and abortion rights," or who "would severely curtail the role of the federal government and reshape the economic and social structure of the country well to the right."[18] And Joseph A. Califano Jr., a former official in the Johnson Administration, urges the Senate to subject judicial nominees to a "penetrating policy MRI." It should "nail[] down" their views on a wide range of controversial matters—including "tobacco policy, prison reform, control of HMOs, the death penalty, abortion, environmental issues, the constitutionality of redistricting for House elections, gun control and the rights of women and minorities"—to ensure that they will reach desirable outcomes when those issues come before them. Nominees who would reach outcomes of which the Senate approves are entitled to confirmation; those who would not, are not.[19]

The Senate is not merely "advising and consenting" when it requires nominees to disclose their preferred case outcomes. A central requirement of the rule of law is that judges must render justice impartially, taking no account of the identity of the litigants. But those who urge the Senate to screen nominees for their "ideology" effectively are arguing that judges should favor the interests of particular types of parties, such as racial minorities, women, federal agencies, or Congress. For example, Professor Judith Resnik of the Yale Law School argues that federal judges should use their positions to "ensure women's equality."[20] While the precise contours of her "ensure women's equality" imperative are somewhat vague, her statement reasonably can be interpreted as an argument that the judiciary should rule in favor of women in

On policy, I worry about the slippery slope. We probably would need to be prepared to give out information akin to this regardless of the facts (guests for WH movies, dinners, lunches, Camp, etc.). I therefore would prefer at most just to give out the total numbers here. I would like to check with Judge Gonzales on this before we sign off.

AP has requested the members of Congress who have brought individuals to the White House for tours. The inquiry is the result of an article in the Tulsa World that claimed that Rep. Tom Davis called a former Rep. Gov. of Kansas asking him to be the Chair of a new GOP business group. In the message that was left for the Gov, it mentioned that if he donated and accepted the Chairmanship, one of the benefits would be a White House tour. We worked that individual situation out last week, but it has led to other questions.

The facts are actually decent - 68 members or their wives have brought individuals or small groups (no more than 6 at a time), and more D's have been on tours than R's. AP aslo wanted the names of the guests they brought, but I think it's more appropriate that the individuals members make decisions about that information.

Just want to check with you before I give the info out.

Pittsburgh Post Gazette

Editorial: Muddying the waters / A new fishing expedition fails to hook Judge Smith

Monday, April 15, 2002

Opponents of U.S. District Judge D. Brooks Smith's nomination for the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals have had a problem: Their portrait of the judge from Altoona as a reactionary right-winger is plainly at odds with the reasonable jurist widely known and respected in Western Pennsylvania by Democrats and Republicans alike. So they have gone fishing.

Their best hope of hooking the judge was the fact that he created at least an appearance of conflict of interest by not immediately disqualifying himself from two cases involving Mid-State Bank (his wife's employer and an institution in which he holds stock) and John Gardner Black, who went to prison for defrauding a number of school districts. To less effect, he was also faulted for taking so-called junkets to legal education seminars, but judges are permitted to do so.

Judge Smith told the Senate Judiciary Committee that, in hindsight, he wished he had stepped down earlier than he did from the Mid-State cases.

The Post-Gazette agrees that he should have excused himself earlier, and criticized him for not doing so. But we part company with critics who believe that this lapse should disqualify him from promotion to a higher court. As this newspaper argued in favor of his nomination last month, his years of distinguished judicial service entitle him to the benefit of any doubt.

So the critics have gone fishing again -- and now they have come up with . . . a whole fishing and gun club. The aggrieved party this time is the Pennsylvania president of the National Organization for Women, Kathy Miller. She believes that Judge Smith is unfit to serve on the appellate bench, in part because he belonged to the Spruce Creek Rod and Gun Club, which discriminates against women, and he stayed a member for 11 years after indicating that he would quit.

In a letter to Sen. Arlen Specter, Ms. Miller cites Canon 2C of the Code of Judicial Conduct, which permits a judge to remain a member of an organization that practices "invidious discrimination" as long as he or she lobbies against it. But he or she must resign within two years of learning of the practices if the organization does not reform.

It seems cut-and-dried. It isn't. According to the Justice Department, the canons were revised in 1992, and in 1988, when Judge Smith was being confirmed, no rule set a two-year deadline for possible resignation.

But it is not even clear that the Spruce Creek Rod and Gun Club fits the definition covered by Canon 2C. An opinion in the code's compendium states: "All-male club with purely social purpose, limited membership according to selective criteria, no business or commercial purpose, and not in violation of state or local law, cannot be said to practice invidious discrimination; judge need not resign from club but should periodically re-evaluate club membership policies in conformance with Canon 2C."

But, back in 1988, Judge Smith did recognize a problem with the club (which does allow women as guests) -- and it was entirely in character that he would.

Far from being anti-woman, the judge has a strong reputation for working to eradicate gender bias, which is why the executive board of the Women's Bar Association of Western Pennsylvania has backed his nomination. He promised senators that he would lobby the club to change its policy and he did. He finally resigned in 1999 -- long before this nomination was submitted to the Senate.

So he did the right thing in the end, as even NOW might agree. Therefore, the real question is the timing. Should he have resigned earlier, heeding his own conscience even if judicial ethics did not require it?

The answer is probably yes, because arguably he did leave the impression during testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1988 that he was going to resign sooner rather than later if his efforts at reform were not successful.

But this was not something crying to sweet heaven for a remedy. In truth, the Spruce Creek club is hardly a major force in keeping women down. It may be prestigious, but it's still a small fishing club. Jimmy Carter, among the most liberal of modern presidents, has not been affronted by it -- he fished there during his presidency and has continued to visit.

Despite the full-Bork press to paint Judge Smith as an extremist, those familiar with the Western District know he is not. Pennsylvania NOW went fishing and, for all the fuss, now displays a minnow.

If judicial nominations are more than an opportunity to settle political scores, Sen. Specter and his colleagues should in fairness recognize that this fish won't swim; this dog won't hunt

Brett,

Viet would like to publish the attached essay on judicial confirmations in the Drake Law Review. He wanted me to give you a heads up.

If you have any comments, please let me know by Monday at noon; we need to get the essay to the Drake folks so they can cite-check it Monday PM. I'm afraid time is very much of the essence.

Best,
Nathan

. . . There's a practical reason to elect Ganske, because he's going to be part of the change of leadership in the United States Senate. And when we change the leadership in the United States Senate, thanks to his election, Senator Chuck Grassley will become Chairman of the Finance Committee and that's going to be good for Iowa. (Applause.)

And that's not only good for Iowa, that's good for America. I appreciate Chuck and I appreciate his hard work. He, like Greg, is a fine, solid -- solid -- citizen who represents your state with a lot of class and a lot of distinction in Washington, D.C.

We need a majority because I want my judges to be given a fair hearing. (Applause.) I want to tell you I appreciate Greg's understanding of the importance of trade. Jim Leach reminded me that here in Cedar Rapids this is a town that relies upon trade -- more dollars per capita generated through trade than almost any other city in the United States. Of any city in the nation that understands the importance of trade, it's right here. . . .

President Calls for Crime Victims' Rights Amendment

Today's Presidential Action

- In a speech at the Department of Justice, President Bush announced his support of a Federal Constitutional amendment for ~~to protect~~ victims of violent crime. This amendment would ensure that victims' rights ~~the rights of victims~~ are ~~would be~~ fully protected ~~recognized~~ under the Constitution.

Background on Today's Presidential Action

- In 2000 alone, 6.3 million Americans were victims of violent crime. [START NEW BULLET POINT:] During the Presidential campaign, President Bush announced his support for a Federal Constitutional amendment to protect crime victims. Texas is one of 32 states that have state constitutional amendments guaranteeing rights for victims.

Formatted: Bullets and Numbering

- While the states and the ~~federal~~ Federal government have enacted legal protections for crime victims, those laws are insufficient to fully vindicate victims' rights in the criminal justice system.

- Because rights of the accused are specifically included in the Constitution, it is only just and proper that victims' rights be included in the Constitution as well. Further, because victims' rights vary from state to state, the Constitutional amendment would ensures that ~~every~~ all victims ~~citizen~~ have ~~has~~ at least a minimum level of rights in the legal system ~~to victims on the state and Federal level~~.

- Today, the President announced his support for the bipartisan Crime Victims Rights Amendment that has been introduced by Senators Feinstein and Kyl. The amendment would provide victims of violent crime in ~~federal~~ Federal or state court the right to:

    - reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime or the release or escape of the accused;
    - not be excluded from such public proceedings;
    - reasonably be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, reprieve, and pardon proceedings; and
    - decisions that duly consider the victim's: (1) safety; (2) interest in avoiding unreasonable delay; and (3) just and timely claims to restitution from the offender.

- These rights could not be restricted "except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity." The amendment would not provide the grounds for a new trial, or authorize any claim for damages.

- Any effort to amend the Constitution must be undertaken with great care. The specific language of the Feinstein-Kyl amendment strikes the proper balance in fully protecting victims' rights in America's legal system.

Jay:

Last Thursday Dan Keniry from Leg Affairs and I met with staff from the House Armed Services Committee and Veterans Affairs Committee to talk about possible legislation involving burials at Arlington National Cemetery (ANC). I agreed to go since I am now the Veterans Affairs policy person, although I quickly discovered that ANC is the one military cemetery actually administered by the Secretary of the Army and not Veterans Affairs.

You may recall that a few years ago President Clinton was criticized for granting waivers so that political supporters could be buried at ANC. The most egregious example was of the late ambassador Larry Lawrence, who it was discovered had lied about his military record (subsequently his remains were exhumed) . These waivers are granted by the Secretary of the Army and are waivers of regulations, not statutes. According to our discussion with Hill staff, the prevailing legal position (and practice) of the White House has always been that the President inherently has whatever waiver authority the Secretary of the Army has to grant waivers. The Congressional Research Service in a memorandum is of the opinon that the President does not have legal authority to grant these waivers -- only the Secretary of the Army does.

The issue is important because Armed Services and veterans Affairs Committee staff want some signal from the White House as to whether we would support legislation codifying this waiver process. Legislation sponsored by Chairman Stump passed in the House -- both in the 105th and 106th Congress -- doing just that, but it never made it out of Committee in the Senate (the legislation does not provide for burial of House Members or Senators unless they were veterans, and Ted Kennedy apparently wants to be buried at ANC with the other Kennedys --this according to Hill staff).

Rather than engage again in a futile exercise, Hill staff wanted to get from the White House some indication as to whether we would be supportive of this legislation, perhaps if they added some limited waiver authority for the President. Veterans groups of course would be supportive -- the only real opposition appears to be from Senators who woudl exercise holds.

The threshold issue I raised with Dan is the following: if through practice and precedent, the White House position is that the President does have the legal authority to grant waivers, then by supporting this legislation we would be limiting the current powers of the Office of the President. This is something that White House Counsel would need to look at very carefully before we agree to even vet the idea with Defense or VA, in my opinion. We left it with Committee staff that we were going to go back and run the traps on the issue and give them guidance. You may want to forward this e-mail to Tim Flanigan in White House Counsel's office to see what his reaction is -- he may want to begin staffing it out.

Let me know your thoughts on how we proceed.

Chris,
Sorry I've been hard to get hold of. I could help you the most if you'd clarify what you're looking for. If you're interested in government contract work (which is what it sounds like might be the case), I can't help as our ethics rules prohibit me from helping or favoring someone who wants government work. If on the other hand, you're interested in the policy side, you should talk with my brother, Bruce. He heads up Tech Policy at the Commerce Department and can advise you on policy. His email is mehlman@ta.doc.gov. Finally, if you have some proposals for homeland security, I'd be happy to set up a meeting with someone in the homeland office. Once again, though, I could not recommend that they use you, only that they listen.

I have asked my staff (Perry, Pelletier and Cleveland) to put together draft principles as an alternative to specific legislation. Once that is together, we can circulate to interested parties in the WH to see if this is preferable to the legislation that State drafted.
The State letter has been derailed for the time being and we have not cleared any testimony, letters etc on this subject at this time.

1. The Allen-Harkin-Smith bill apparently is being announced at 3:00 today.

2. In addition, as you know, State circulated through the OMB clearance process a proposed letter on section 15(e) in HR 3210, the provision on use of blocked assets to satisfy judgments.

3. I assume our approach is (i) State should not send the letter on HR 3210; and (ii) at appropriate time, State will oppose Allen-Harkin-Smith. If that is not the case, or there needs to be further discussion, we obviously should meet and/or discuss.

4. On the issue whether Administration should propose a terrorism victims compensation plan, I understand that State sent a memo to Nancy. If there has been any change in thinking, or we need to discuss again, we should meet about that as well. If not, I assume we will await further developments in Congress.

Dear Mr. Berenson,

Thank you again for agreeing to speak at the Republican National Lawyers Association Conference on April 19 at 11:30 a.m. at the National Press Club on the judicial nomination process.

Are their any materials that Mr. Kavanaugh or you would like to include in the materials that the RNLA will be distributing regarding the conference? The RNLA will be applying for CLE credit for your presentation and will be pulling together all the relevant material in the next couple days.

Also, could you email or fax us a biography to include in the conference materials? (Fax number is 703-248-0470.)

Thanks again for agreeing to speak at the conference. It should be our largest and best attended ever. If you can arrive a little early Senator Hatch will be speaking immediately before you and may be of interest to you or Mr. Kavanaugh. (You are, of course, free to attend and enjoy any portion of the conference including the reception afterwards.)

Thank you again,

Subject: Conference Featuring the Leaders in the Fight for Confirmati
Author: Republican National Lawyers Association <RNLA@rnchq.org>
Date: 4/17/2002 2:37 PM

Dear Senate Judiciary Committee Staffers,

As you know, Senator Hatch will be addressing the Republican National Lawyers Association's Annual Conference on Friday April 19 at the National Press Club.

I would like to extend to all of the Judiciary staff an invitation to attend the entire conference for free.

I think you will find this conference of particular interest as it features many of the leading figures on the Judicial Confirmation Crisis. In addition to Senator Hatch, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales will speak and a panel featuring Associate White House Counsels Brad Berenson and Matt Kavanaugh will all address the Judicial Confirmation issue. Nowhere else will you see so many leaders from the Republican side of the issue speaking in the same place.

In addition to all the presentations related to the Judicial Confirmation issue, the conference will also feature presentations by other leading lawyers on a variety of hot topics. For more details, please visit http://www.rnla.org/Events/Events.asp or for a complete schedule please visit http://www.rnla.org/Events/EventsDetail.asp?EventID=13 . The conference provides Continuing Legal Education Credit (CLEs) for lawyers as well.

Even if you can't make our conference, I hope you will consider joining the new RNLA. (For details of our new services and features please check out www.rnla.org <http://www.rnla.org/> when you have a minute.)

Dear Senator Dodd:

As you prepare to take up a terrorism insurance bill this session, I am writing to express the Administration's strong opposition to certain aspects of section 15 of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act (H.R. 3210), in particular, subsection 15(e).

Section 15 establishes a new federal cause of action for claims related to certified terrorist acts and limits damages and attorneys fees recoverable from defendants other than the perpetrators of the acts and their co-conspirators. Section 15(e) permits judgment holders to satisfy their judgments with the blocked assets of the responsible terrorist party, or an agency or instrumentality of that party.

To the extent that it relates to compensation for acts of international terrorism, section 15 impinges on Congress' recent directive to the Administration to submit "a legislative proposal to establish a comprehensive program to ensure fair, equitable, and prompt compensation for all United States victims of international terrorism." See Section 626 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (Pub. Law 107-77). The State Department, together with other agencies, is in the process of developing just such a program.

The Honorable
Christopher Dodd

By contrast, subsection 15(e) would stimulate a race to the courthouse among the attorneys for the victims who qualify, and since there are limited assets, only a handful of victims would be compensated under this system. It reflects an unfair and unseemly approach to compensation based on the unpredictability and vagaries of litigation rather than a systematic and equitable approach to providing relief to all victims of terrorism and their families, not just those who can pursue litigation.

Also, by making blocked assets of states available to fund terrorist victims' compensation, section 15(e) would impair the President's ability to use blocked assets to best meet U.S. foreign policy and national security interests. This is no abstract argument. For example, leverage from blocked Vietnamese assets was critical in getting Vietnam to address our concerns about MIA's and POW's and to take responsibility for over $200 million in outstanding U.S. claims. More recently, the return of the blocked assets of Afghanistan's central bank and the shoring up of Afghanistan's Interim Authority would not have been possible if those assets had instead been used to pay claims. These examples underscore the importance of maintaining blocked assets in order to support friendly successor governments that may emerge in formerly hostile states, and to reduce the amount of direct assistance that would otherwise be needed.

Moreover, section 15(e) permits the liquidation of all types of blocked assets of terrorist list states, including diplomatic and consular property. The provision's Presidential waiver, which would apply only to diplomatic and consular property, is insufficient to cover all property with respect to which the United States has obligations under the Vienna Conventions for Diplomatic and Consular Relations. This provision therefore would cause us to violate our international legal obligations. It also could set a precedent for foreign governments seizing U.S. government assets abroad.

In sum, as Congress directed in section 626 of Public Law 107-77, a comprehensive, fair, and rational system of compensation for victims of international terrorism is urgently needed. Parts of section 15 would overlap with the system that the Administration is in the process of developing, and subsection 15(e) would raise precisely the types of fairness and foreign policy concerns that the Administration is seeking to address.

Accordingly, we ask that you give us a chance to meet Congress' request to submit an appropriate compensation program in relation to acts of international terrorism. We look forward to working with you to ensure that such a program is enacted as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Paul V. Kelly

Subject: Political Activity briefing from Counsel

I need some guidance. As a follow-up to Mehlman's briefing at Treasury last month, we have been trying to schedule a briefing with WH Counsel/Treasury Counsel to give political appointees guidance as to what is and is not appropriate activity. My understanding is that we were waiting on some final changes to the guidance from WH Counsel. That process seems to have stalled endlessly. Any ideas about what's going on? Can you help to prod this out of its cocoon? We're coming up on the busy season and I want to make certain our people know the rules.

Please advise.

Wendy, will you or Carl be distributing copies of the letter to the list?
Brett, I take it you will be distributing a draft response -- b/c there's a history here of correspondence back and forth with Sen. Byrd in particular, it's unlikely to be a straightforward form letter response.
And b/c both Nick Calio and Gov. Ridge have each signed a letter to Sen.
Byrd, once we see the letter there will be the question of who should sign this particular one (perhaps the Judge?). Finally Brett, and just in terms of radar tracking and cross-referencing, do I recall correctly that there remains an unanswered letter from Sen. Byrd to the President, requesting a meeting on this issue?

DEADLINE: COB Thursday, April 18, 2002

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This letter states VA's support for the provisions of H.R. 1541 which would authorize VA to provide benefits to the children of veterans for their diseases that may be associated with their parents' herbicide exposure in active military service. However, VA states that it does not support the bill's provision that would direct VA to provide these benefits for acute myelogenous leukemia (AML) because a recent NAS report indicates that current scientific evidence does not show an association between parental herbicide exposure and the occurrence of AML in the children of exposed parents.

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Chairman
Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As requested by the Honorable Lane Evans, Ranking Democratic Member, I am pleased to provide the Committee the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 1541, 107th Congress, the "Vietnam Veterans Children's Disability Act." The bill would add a new subchapter to chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, authorizing VA to provide certain benefits to veterans' children who have diseases associated with the veterans' exposure to herbicide agents in active service.

VA supports H.R. 1541 insofar as it would authorize VA to provide benefits to veterans' children having diseases associated with parental exposure to herbicide agents in service. However, VA does not support the provision of this legislation directing VA to provide such benefits for acute myelogenous leukemia (AML). As explained below, a recent report of the National Academy of Sciences indicates that current scientific evidence does not indicate an association between parental herbicide exposure and the occurrence of AML in the children of exposed parents.

Although VA supports the objectives of H.R. 1541 with the one exception noted above, we believe that a number of revisions to this bill are necessary to ensure clarity and consistency with other VA benefit programs. Accordingly, we offer a number of recommended changes and an explanation of the concerns underlying each recommendation.

Provisions of H.R. 1541

Section 2 of H.R. 1541 would add a new subchapter IV, comprising five new statutory sections, to chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code. Under this new subchapter, VA would be authorized to provide health care, vocational training, and a monetary allowance to an "eligible child" of a veteran for disability resulting from any disease which VA determines is associated with parental exposure to an herbicide agent prior to the child's conception. Section 1831 of title 38, as added by this bill, would define the term "eligible child" to refer to an compensation under 38 U.S.C. § 1110 for the same disability or disability pension under 38 U.S.C. § 1521.

Based on the foregoing concerns, we recommend adding the following provisions to H.R. 1541:

> __ NONDUPLICATION OF BENEFITS.--Section 1824(a) is amended to read as follows--
>
> "(a) Monetary Allowance--(1) In the case of an eligible child under subchapter II of this chapter whose only covered birth defect is spina bifida, a monetary allowance shall be paid only under subchapter I of this chapter.
>
> "(2) In the case of an eligible child under subchapter II of this chapter who has spina bifida and one or more additional covered birth defects, a monetary allowance shall be paid only under subchapter II of this chapter.
>
> "(3) In the case of an eligible child who has two or more covered diseases under subchapter IV of this chapter or who has one or more covered diseases under subchapter IV of this chapter and one or more birth defects covered by subchapter I or II of this chapter, a single monetary allowance shall be paid under subchapter IV of this chapter. The amount of the monthly allowance paid to such child under subchapter IV of this chapter shall be based on the degree of disability suffered by the child concerned as the result of all the child's diseases or defects covered by this chapter.
> "(4) An individual may not receive both a monetary allowance for disability under this chapter and either compensation under section 1110 of this title for the same disability or pension under section 1521 of this title.".
>
> __ CONFORMING AMENDMENT.--Section 1823(a) is amended by striking "Notwithstanding" and inserting "Except as provided in section 1824(a)(4) of this title, and notwithstanding".

Consistent with the principle that an eligible child should be paid a single monetary allowance for all disability due to a covered condition or conditions, we recommend revising the text of 38 U.S.C. 1835(c)(3) appearing in H.R. 1541 to read as follows:

> "(3) In determining the degree of an eligible child's disability for purposes of this section, the Secretary shall take into account any secondary disability which results from a covered disease."

This language would clarify that a single monetary allowance, rather than cumulative allowances, would be paid for disability due to a covered disease and any disability associated with a secondary condition.

Monetary Allowance for Disability Resulting from Treatment

Section 1835(c)(3) would authorize benefits for "any disability resulting from treatment" for a disease associated with parental herbicide exposure. We believe this reference to disability resulting from treatment should be deleted. As suggested by the Supreme Court's analysis of similar language in Brown v. Gardner, 513 U.S. 115 (1994), this language would likely be construed broadly to permit payment for all consequences of treatment by VA or any other health-care provider. For example, this provision could be construed to authorize VA payment for disability caused solely by the negligence of non-VA physicians, even if such disability bears no relation to the patient's covered disease except that it was incurred while the patient was receiving treatment for a covered disease. We believe that such a broad rule would be beyond the intended scope of H.R. 1541. Further, as explained below, we believe the reference to disability resulting from treatment for a covered disease is unnecessary.

We believe the reference in H.R. 1541 to disability resulting from treatment may be based on the concern that accepted forms of treatment for certain diseases may be invasive and productive of disability distinct from the symptoms of the underlying condition. For example, some patients who receive bone marrow transplants as treatment for AML may incur a condition known as "graft vs. host disease" requiring ongoing treatment. We believe the ordinary consequences of treatment for a covered disease may reasonably be considered as a "secondary condition" resulting from the covered disease, in a manner analogous to grants of "secondary service connection" for veterans' conditions under 38 C.F.R. § 3.310. See, e.g., Hayes v. Brown, 4 Vet. App. 353, 354 (1993) (reflecting grant of service connection for burn scar and hypothyroidism secondary to radiation therapy). Inasmuch as 38 U.S.C. § 1835(c)(3) would authorize compensation for "secondary disability", there is no need for specific reference to disability resulting from treatment, which could be misconstrued to provide broader liability for any consequences of medical treatment.

Subchapter Heading

We recommend that the word "Vietnam" be deleted from the heading of subchapter IV appearing in H.R. 1541, because this legislation would also apply to children of veterans other than Vietnam veterans. For similar reasons, it may be appropriate to revise the heading of chapter 18.

Benefits for Spina Bifida in Children of Other than Vietnam Veterans Who Were Exposed To Herbicide Agents in Service

VA supports the provisions of H.R. 1541 authorizing benefits for covered diseases occurring in children of veterans other than Vietnam veterans who were exposed to herbicide agents in service. We note, however, that this legislation may appear to create an inequity to the extent that benefits could not be provided for spina bifida occurring in children of such veterans, although the provision of benefits for children suffering from spina bifida is based on the association between that condition and parental exposure to herbicides. To ensure consistency and fairness in the provision of benefits for disabilities associated with exposure to herbicide agents, we recommend that subchapter I of chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, be amended to provide benefits for spina bifida occurring in children of veterans other than Vietnam veterans who were exposed to herbicide agents in service. This may be accomplished by replacing the phrase "child of a Vietnam veteran" in 38 U.S.C. §§ 1803(a), 1804(a), and 1805(a) with the phrase "eligible child"; and by adding a provision defining "eligible child", for purposes of subchapter I, in terms similar to those we have proposed above with respect to the definitional provisions of subchapter IV contained in H.R. 1541.

individual, regardless of age or marital status, who (A) is the natural child of a Vietnam veteran or is the natural child of a veteran who was exposed to herbicides during active military, naval, or air service before the child was conceived and (B) who has one or more covered diseases.

Section 1832(a) of title 38, as added by this bill, would direct VA to identify by regulation "diseases occurring in children that have a positive association with parental exposure to an herbicide agent before the date on which the child was conceived." Section 1832(b) would direct VA to include AML among the diseases identified in such regulations.

Sections 1833 and 1834 of title 38, as added by this bill, would authorize VA to provide health care and vocational training to an eligible child in essentially the same manner as is currently authorized under chapter 18 for certain Vietnam veterans' children born with spina bifida or another covered birth defect.

Section 1835 of title 38, as added by this bill, would authorize VA to pay a monetary allowance to an eligible child for disability resulting from a covered disease. As with spina bifida and other covered birth defects, the amount of the monetary allowance would be based on each child's level of disability, in accordance with a schedule of disability ratings to be established for this purpose. The monthly amount of the monetary allowance paid to an eligible child under this bill could be no less than the lowest monthly amount authorized by section 401 of the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Improvement Act of 2000 for disability due to covered birth defects other than spina bifida, and no greater than the highest monthly amount authorized by that Act. Unlike the existing provisions of law regarding monetary allowances for spina bifida and other covered birth defects, however, this bill would place no limit on the number of levels of monetary allowance that VA may establish between the highest and lowest levels prescribed.

Section 1835(c)(2), as added by this bill, would provide that VA may discontinue payment of a monetary allowance six months after the child has fully recovered from the disability. Section 1835(c)(3) would provide that benefits may be paid for any secondary disability that results from any disability associated with herbicide exposure or any disability resulting from treatment for such disability.

Authority to Provide Benefits to Veterans' Children

The Agent Orange Act of 1991 established procedures for identifying diseases associated with exposure to herbicide agents and for providing benefits to certain veterans who incur such diseases. Pursuant to that Act, the Institute of Medicine (IOM) of the National Academy of Sciences has, since 1993, provided VA with biennial reports summarizing the scientific and medical evidence concerning the health effects of exposure to herbicide agents. In its 1996 report, "Veterans and Agent Orange: Update 1996," the IOM concluded that there was "limited/suggestive" evidence of an association between exposure to herbicide agents and the occurrence of spina bifida in the children of exposed individuals. Because VA did not have authority to provide benefits for disability occurring in the children of veterans, we sought legislative authority to provide health care, vocational training, and a monetary allowance to children of Vietnam veterans born with spina bifida. In September 1996, Congress enacted Pub. L. No. 104-204, section 421(b) of which provided the authority to provide such benefits.

In October 1998, VA's Environmental Epidemiology Service released a study that detected a statistically significant increase in the occurrence of birth defects among the children of female Vietnam veterans. The increased occurrence of birth defects was not specifically linked to herbicide exposure. Based on those findings, VA sought legislative authority to provide benefits to the children of female Vietnam veterans born with birth defects found to be associated with the service of female veterans in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era. In December 2000, Congress provided such authority in section 401 of the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Improvement Act of 2000.

In view of the ongoing evolution of scientific and medical knowledge concerning the health effects of exposure to herbicide agents, and the continuing efforts of the IOM and VA to identify such health effects, it is possible that diseases in children will be found to be associated with parental exposure to herbicide agents. We believe it would be appropriate, and consistent with the purposes of the above-referenced statutes concerning spina bifida and other birth defects, to authorize VA to provide benefits to the children of veterans for their diseases that may be associated with their parents' exposure to herbicide agents in active military, naval, or air service. H.R. 1541 would obviate the need for VA to seek specific legislative authorization in the future to pay benefits for any diseases as to which an association is detected.

Acute Myelogenous Leukemia

As noted above, H.R. 1541 would add a provision at 38 U.S.C. § 1832(b) requiring VA to issue a regulation identifying AML as a "covered disease" for purposes of providing benefits to the children of veterans exposed to herbicides during service. VA does not support this provision because current scientific evidence does not demonstrate a positive association between parental exposure to an herbicide agent and the occurrence of AML in children conceived after such exposure.

On April 19, 2001, the IOM released a report concluding that there was "limited/suggestive" evidence of an association between exposure to herbicides and the occurrence of AML in the children of exposed individuals. This conclusion was based in part upon a study by the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW), which detected a more than four-fold increase in the risk of AML among the children of Australian Vietnam veterans. The IOM considered this study significant because the increased risk was statistically significant and of sufficiently large magnitude as to reduce the likelihood that the increase was due to other confounding factors. After the IOM released its April 2001 report, however, the AIHW announced that it had detected an error in its analysis concerning AML and that the corrected data no longer indicated that the children of Vietnam veterans face a significantly greater risk of AML than children in the general population. In view of this announcement, VA asked the IOM to conduct a further assessment of the scientific evidence concerning the possible association between parental herbicide exposure and the occurrence of AML in children.

On February 27, 2002, the IOM released its report, entitled "Veterans and Agent Orange: Herbicide/Dioxin Exposure and Acute Myelogenous Leukemia in the Children of Vietnam Veterans." In this report, the IOM concludes that there is "inadequate/insufficient evidence to determine whether an association exists" between parental herbicide exposure and the occurrence of AML in children. The finding of "inadequate/insufficient evidence" reflects the IOM's conclusion that the available studies are of insufficient quality, consistency, or statistical power to permit a conclusion regarding the presence or absence of an association. The IOM stated that a revised study issued by the AIHW in October 2001 detected a slight excess of AML cases in the children of Vietnam veterans, but the increase was not statistically significant. The IOM reviewed and discussed a number of other scientific studies, including two that were not previously considered in its April 2001 report, and concluded that current scientific evidence is insufficient to permit a determination as to whether an association exists between parental herbicide exposure and the occurrence of AML in children.

I am confident that the IOM has thoroughly and thoughtfully evaluated the evidence on this issue. In view of the analysis stated in the IOM's February 2002 report, current scientific evidence does not support a conclusion that there is a positive association between parental herbicide exposure and the occurrence of AML in children. Accordingly, VA does not support the proposal in H.R. 1541 to provide benefits for AML in the children of veterans exposed to herbicides in service.

Recommended Changes

I am attaching a summary of our recommended changes to this bill, which we believe are necessary to ensure the fair and efficient administration of the benefits it contemplates.

Costs

VA estimates that the benefit costs of paying a monetary allowance for AML under H.R. 1541 would be $12.7 million over the first five years and $36.8 million over the first ten years. VA further estimates that the cost of furnishing medical care for disability associated with AML or its treatment would be $81.4 million over the first five years and $164.8 million over the first ten years.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

Recommended Changes to H.R. 1541

Definition of "Eligible Child"

Section 1831(1)(A) of title 38, as added by H.R. 1541, would define "eligible child", for purposes of new subchapter IV, as the natural child of either (i) a Vietnam veteran, or (ii) a veteran other than a Vietnam veteran who was exposed before the child was conceived to herbicides during active military, naval, or air service. Accordingly, with respect to the children of Vietnam veterans, this definition would not require that the veteran's presumed exposure to herbicides have occurred prior to the child's conception. We note that 38 U.S.C. § 1821(1), as added by section 401 of Pub. L. No. 106-419, defines the term "child", for purposes of chapter 18, to refer to an individual who is the natural child of a Vietnam veteran and who was conceived after the date on which the veteran first entered the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era. As a technical matter, however, it is not clear that the date-of-conception limitation in section 1821(1) would govern the definition of "eligible child" under section 1831(1)(A). Inasmuch as the terms "eligible child" and "natural child" in section 1831(1)(A) encompass children of certain non-Vietnam veterans, they do not appear to incorporate the more limited definition of "child" in section 1821(1). Further, because the definition of "eligible child" in section 1831(1)(A)(i) reiterates the "natural child" requirement, but not the date-of-conception requirement, contained in section 1821(1), it may be interpreted as reflecting an intent to omit any date-of-conception limitation.

To address this concern, we recommend revising the text of section 1831(1) appearing in H.R. 1541 to read as follows:

> "(1) The term 'eligible child' means an individual, regardless of age or marital status, who--
>
> "(A) is either--
>
> "(i) a child as defined in section 1821(1) of this title; or
>
> "(ii) the natural child of a veteran other than a Vietnam veteran who, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, was exposed before the child was conceived to an herbicide agent during active military, naval, or air service; and
> "(B) has one or more covered diseases."

This language would be consistent the definitional provisions of 38 U.S.C. § 1821(1), as added by Pub. L. No. 106-419. Our proposed language also substitutes the phrase "herbicide agent" for "herbicides" to conform to the terminology used in 38 U.S.C. § 1832(a) as stated in H.R. 1541 as well as the terminology currently used in 38 U.S.C. § 1116.

Definitions of "Herbicide Agent" and "Positive Association"

We recommend revising 38 U.S.C. § 1831 to include definitions of "herbicide agent" and "positive association" corresponding to the definitions stated in 38 U.S.C. § 1116(a)(4) and (b)(3), respectively. H.R. 1541 would employ those terms in 38 U.S.C. § 1832 in a manner apparently intended to mirror their use in 38 U.S.C. § 1116. However, the definitions stated in section 1116(a)(4) and (b)(3) would not expressly govern the interpretation of 38 U.S.C. § 1832(a), and H.R. 1541 would provide no separate definition in chapter 18. Accordingly, we recommend adding the following subsections to 38 U.S.C. § 1831:

> "(3) The term 'herbicide agent' has the same meaning stated in section 1116(a)(4) of this title.
> "(4) The term "positive association" has the same meaning as specified in section 1116(b)(3) of this title."

Duty to Issue Regulations

Section 1832(a) would state that, "[t]he Secretary shall by regulation identify diseases occurring in children that have a positive association with parental exposure to an herbicide agent before the date on which the child was conceived." Inasmuch as the statute does not specify when VA's duty to issue such regulations accrues, this section could be construed to require VA to issue such regulations following enactment of H.R. 1541, even if current evidence does not establish a positive association between parental herbicide exposure and any disease in children. We do not believe there is any reason to require VA to issue regulations stating only the negative proposition that no such associations are currently shown. Accordingly, we recommend this section be revised to read as follows:

> "Whenever the Secretary determines that there is a positive association between a disease occurring in children and parental exposure to an herbicide agent before the date on which the child was conceived, the Secretary shall provide by regulation that such disease shall be considered a 'covered disease' for purposes of this subchapter."

Effective Date of Regulations

We recommend adding a sentence at the end of 38 U.S.C. § 1832(a) in H.R. 1541 stating: "Such regulations shall be effective on the date of issuance." This would conform to the effective-date rule prescribed in 38 U.S.C. § 1116(c)(2) for regulations concerning veterans' diseases associated with exposure to herbicide agents.

Manifestation Periods

We recommend adding a provision to 38 U.S.C. § 1832 to specify that VA may prescribe time limits within which a covered disease must become manifest in order for benefits to be paid under new subchapter IV. We are unable to predict which diseases may be found to be associated with parental herbicide exposure. It is possible that such an association may be found for a disease that is not limited to onset during childhood, but which may become manifest many years or even decades following birth. In the event that sound scientific evidence were to indicate that a positive association exists for a particular disease having its onset during childhood, but not for the same disease if initially manifested at some later period, there would be no sound basis for providing benefits in the latter circumstance. We believe VA should have the authority to provide benefits only to the extent consistent with the prevailing scientific evidence. This principle is reflected in 38 U.S.C. § 1116(a)(1)(B), which authorizes VA to prescribe manifestation periods for veterans' diseases associated with herbicide exposure. Accordingly, we recommend adding the following new subsection (b) to 38 U.S.C. § 1832, in lieu of current subsection (b), which we do not support for reasons explained above:

> "(b) The Secretary may prescribe the time periods within which a covered disease must become manifest in order for benefits to be provided under this subchapter."

Intervening Causes

Under 38 U.S.C. § 1812(b)(2), VA may not provide benefits where a covered birth defect is shown by affirmative evidence to have resulted from a cause other than the mother's Vietnam service. In similar fashion, 38 U.S.C. § 1113 prohibits VA from granting service connection on a presumptive basis where there is affirmative evidence that an intercurrent injury or disease capable of causing the veteran's disability was suffered between the date of separation from service and the date of onset of the disability. For purposes of consistency with these provisions, and to prevent the provision of benefits in cases where a veteran's service did not result in disability to the veteran's child, we recommend adding the following new subsection to 38 U.S.C. § 1832 in H.R. 1541:

> "(c) In any case where affirmative evidence establishes that a covered disease of an eligible child results from a cause other than the exposure of the child's parent to an herbicide agent during active military, naval, or air service, no benefits or assistance may be provided to the child under this subchapter."

Nonduplication of Benefits

As added by Pub. L. No. 106-419, 38 U.S.C. § 1824(a) prohibits an individual from receiving separate monetary allowances under subchapters I and II of chapter 18 for spina bifida and another covered birth defect. We believe it is necessary to include similar provisions specifying the criteria governing the payment of a monetary allowance to an individual who has both a covered disease under subchapter IV and a birth defect covered by subchapter I or II, or who has two or more covered diseases under subchapter IV.

The prohibition on paying separate monetary allowances under subchapters I and II is apparently based in part on the fact that spina bifida is itself a birth defect and that disability from two or more birth defects may be considered in the assignment of a single disability rating for birth defects under subchapter II. In contrast, because diseases covered under subchapter IV generally would not be considered to be birth defects, disability due to such diseases may be distinct from any disability covered by the monetary allowances authorized for spina bifida or other covered birth defects. At the same time, merely adding together the allowances that would be separately payable for two or more covered conditions may result in payment amounts disproportionate to the overall level of disability and disproportionate to compensation amounts paid to veterans with multiple disabilities under principles of combined disability ratings. We believe the goal of this bill should be to authorize payment of a monetary allowance based on the overall level of disability from all of an individual's covered diseases and birth defects. We believe this goal should also govern the payment of a monetary allowance to a child who has two or more covered diseases under subchapter IV.

To address this concern, we recommend adding a provision to 38 U.S.C. § 1824(a) specifying that, in the event that an eligible child has more than one covered disease under subchapter IV or has a covered disease under subchapter IV and a birth defect covered by subchapter I or II, a monetary allowance shall be paid under subchapter IV taking into account the combined effect of disability attributable to all of the child's diseases or birth defects covered by chapter 18. We believe the provisions of section 1835, as added by H.R. 1541, would allow VA to adopt procedures to determine the degree of disability resulting from more than one covered condition.

As a separate matter, it is possible that a child's disease associated with parental herbicide exposure may not arise until the child has reached adulthood. In such circumstances, it is possible that a child may have served on active duty in the Armed Forces of the United States and may be entitled to VA disability compensation or disability pension based on his or her own service. Consistent with the general prohibitions on duplication of benefits, we recommend adding a provision to 38 U.S.C. § 1824(a) stating that a child may not concurrently receive a monetary allowance for disability under chapter 18 and either disability

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

April 24, 2001

Mr. EVANS (for himself, Mr. REYES, and Ms. BROWN of Florida) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide the Secretary of V eterans Affairs authority to furnish certain benefits for certain diseases occu rring in children of Vietnam-era veterans upon a determination that such diseas es have a positive association with parental exposure to a herbicide agent.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Un ited States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Vietnam Veterans Children's Disability A ct'.

SEC. 2. AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE BENEFITS FOR CHILDREN OF VIETNAM VETERANS W ITH CERTAIN DISEASES ASSOCIATED WITH PARENTAL EXPOSURE TO HERBICIDE AGENTS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO NEW CHAPTER 18- The amendments made by this section are made to chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, as amended by section 4 01 of the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Improvement Act of 2000 (Public Law 106-419; 114 Stat. 1857), and take effect on--

(1) December 1, 2001 (the effective date of those amendments); or< /ul>

(2) if later, the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN- (1) Chapter 18 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

`(A) is the natural child of--

`(i) a Vietnam veteran; or

`(ii) a veteran other than a Vietnam veteran who, as deter mined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, was exposed before the chi ld was conceived to herbicides during active military, naval, or air service; a nd

`(B) has one or more covered diseases.

`(2) The term `covered disease' means a disease identified by the Secretary under section 1832 of this title.

`Sec. 1832. Covered diseases

`(a) IDENTIFICATION- The Secretary shall by regulation identify diseas es occurring in children that have a positive association with parental exposur e to an herbicide agent before the date on which the child was conceived.

`(b) DISEASES TO BE INCLUDED- The Secretary shall include acute myelog enous leukemia in the diseases identified under subsection (a).

`Sec. 1833. Health care

`(a) NEEDED CARE- The Secretary shall provide an eligible child such h ealth care as the Secretary determines is needed by the child for that child's covered diseases or any disability that is associated with those diseases.

`(b) AUTHORITY FOR CARE TO BE PROVIDED DIRECTLY OR BY CONTRACT- The Se cretary may provide health care under this section directly or by contract or o ther arrangement with a health care provider.

`(c) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section, the definitions in sec tion 1803(c) of this title shall apply with respect to the provision of health care under this section, except that for such purposes--

`(1) the reference to `specialized spina bifida clinic' in paragra ph (2) of that section shall be treated as a reference to a specialized clinic treating the disease concerned under this section; and respect to any program of vocational training provided under subsection (a).

`(2) the reference to `vocational training under section 1804 of t his title' in paragraph (8) of that section shall be treated as a reference to vocational training under section 1834 of this title.

`Sec. 1835. Monetary allowance

`(a) MONETARY ALLOWANCE- The Secretary shall pay a monthly allowance t o an eligible child for any disability resulting from a covered disease.

`(b) SCHEDULE FOR RATING DISABILITIES- (1) The amount of the monthly a llowance paid under this section shall be based on the degree of disability suf fered by the child concerned, as determined in accordance with a schedule for r ating disabilities resulting from covered diseases that is prescribed by the Se cretary.

`(2) In prescribing a schedule for rating disabilities for the purpose s of this section, the Secretary shall establish the levels of disability upon which the amount of the allowance provided by this section shall be based. The levels of disability established may take into account functional limitations, including limitations on cognition, communication, motor abilities, activities of daily living, and employability.

`(c) AMOUNT OF MONTHLY ALLOWANCE- (1) The Secretary shall prescribe th e amount of the monthly allowance paid under this section for each level of dis ability established in the schedule of rating disabilities prescribed under sub section (b), except that an allowance under this section--

I think Barbara was overzealous in her assessment of the WSJ, WP and Newsweek from the start, but, unfortunately, in the course of a couple hours, the Wall Street Journal article has turned into a Washington Wire item. sucks for us. Jim doesn't think that this is news because it seems like the same stuff conservative groups have done. He's interested if there are any other really egregious examples, but he's found that the woman calling around about Miguel has been generally very cordial and her questions have not been innappropriate.

Therefore, I am not going to have the Judge talk to him. I would gamble that the Newsweek thing will end up at half column, in their Periscope section. Brett, I leave it to you to keep feeding Ben Wittes.

can you make sure people aren't expecting anything major? thx.

For what it's worth, I prefer option 2, as it appears less like a formal waiver of valid objections.

Subject: 2 options for para. in question

Option 1

The concerns that we and Senator Thompson have identified about the predicate for, timing of, and scope of the letter request may well justify, at this juncture, resisting the Committee,s inquiry until it actually gathered information from other entities demonstrating a predicate for a request to the White House, and reasonably focused the request in light of any such predicate. But we do not seek controversy or conflict with you or the Committee. We therefore intend to assist the Committee by taking substantial and reasonable steps now to gather certain information of interest to the Committee.

Option 2

All of that said -- and despite our concerns about the timing and scope of this request -- we do not seek any controversy or conflict with you or the Committee. We therefore intend to assist the Committee by taking substantial steps to gather certain information of interest to the Committee.

Lack of Terrorism Insurance Hurts the CMBS Market

A recent survey by The Bond Market Association found that large lenders have placed on hold or canceled more than $7 billion—or 10 percent of the 2001 large loan volume—in commercial mortgage loans, citing the difficulty and expense for property owners trying to find terrorism insurance coverage.[1] These cancelled or delayed loans represent lost construction jobs and missed cost savings for property owners hoping to refinance at lower interest rates.

Most large commercial loans are repackaged as bonds known as commercial mortgage-backed securities, or CMBS. Similar to residential mortgage-backed securities, the principal and interest payments for CMBS flow from mortgage payments. The difference is that CMBS are backed solely by mortgages on commercial buildings. Investors in this $270 billion market include pension funds, insurance companies and other institutions. In 2001, the volume of large loans totaled $73.8 billion, $72 billion of which became CMBS. The $7 billion in loans on hold or cancelled so far this year likely means $7 billion less in CMBS will be issued in 2002. As the Association completed its survey in March, the actual number of incomplete deals—and lost CMBS issuance—could be even higher.

As with any mortgage, lenders require the owner of the property, which is the loan collateral, to obtain insurance coverage. Prior to the terrorist attacks on New York and Washington last September 11, such policies routinely included coverage for losses related to acts of terrorism. In the wake of the destruction of the World Trade Center towers and the damage to the surrounding area in lower Manhattan, most insurers of commercial property are either refusing to provide the same coverage, or else pricing the coverage high enough to render the real estate deal uneconomic.

Terrorism coverage for many large properties has been difficult to find, according to a General Accounting Office report issued in February. While property owners continue to make mortgage payments that flow through to CMBS investors, the lack of terrorism coverage can place the property owner in technical default on their loans. This could lead rating agencies that monitor the pools of mortgages underlying CMBS to downgrade the credit quality of the securities. Institutional investors such as life insurance companies could see their regulatory capital erode if they have large CMBS holdings.

[1] The Bond Market Association surveyed leading CMBS underwriters and received responses from CMBS underwriters that accounted for nearly 75 percent of CMBS issuance in 2001.

It is imperative that Congress appreciate the potential fallout from the financing problems facing the commercial real estate industry. In October of last year, the House and Senate each developed separate proposals to deal with the problem. Both would have made the federal government—either through loan guarantees or direct payments—a reinsurer of last resort for insurance companies faced with overwhelming terrorism-related claims. Efforts to reach a compromise on the legislation last fall ultimately failed. It is critical Congress act to shore up the terrorism insurance market immediately.

Please contact Donna Alexander or Michael Williams at 202.434.8400 if you have any questions.

DRAFT
4/19
4:00 P.M.

April 19, 2002

Dear Chairman Lieberman:

Thank you for your letter to Secretary Card and for subsequently discussing the letter with me. As we had discussed, members of my staff later met with members of your staff to review the Committee's letter request for information from the White House.

At the outset, I want to emphasize our respect for your work and the work of the Committee, as well as our appreciation for the congressional inquiries into the causes and consequences of the collapse of Enron. Please be assured that the President shares your concern about this matter, including the consequences for Enron employees and shareholders. Indeed, the President and the Administration have responded rapidly to the issue by proposing important policy changes to address the problems. In addition, the Department of Justice and other federal agencies are conducting intensive official investigations of Enron and related entities and individuals. In short, the Administration is committed to appropriate investigative, law enforcement, and policy actions relating to the Enron bankruptcy.

I also want to emphasize that, as the Committee seeks to investigate Enron-related issues, we intend to ensure to the extent possible that the Committee receives appropriate information critical to its inquiry. We understand that the Committee is conducting an extensive investigation of Enron, which may well continue for many more months, and we want to be as helpful as we can, consistent with both the Committee's legitimate needs and the Executive Branch's traditional responsibilities and prerogatives.

With respect specifically to the ~~your~~ letter request for information, we discussed with your staff two ~~expressed~~ concerns. First, at this point, the request appears overbroad and not well-defined. For example, the letter does not identify any particular regulatory matters or subject matters in which the Committee is interested. Nor does the letter identify~~ied~~ particular offices or individuals within the White House, or particular individuals affiliated with Enron, in whose communications the Committee is interested. Rather, the request on its face covers potential communications (about undefined subjects) between tens of thousands of individuals, the vast majority of whom are not known to us or you, such as all of Enron's "officers, directors, employees, and representatives, including anyone purporting to act on their behalf; and each of their affiliates, subsidiaries, partnerships, special purpose entities, joint ventures, trusts or any other entity in which [Enron] is or was a shareholder, partner, investor, trustee, or member."

~~T~~The letter also seeks certain information that appears removed from the Committee's legitimate inquiry into the collapse of Enron. For example, the letter seeks information about the deliberations and communications of the National Energy Policy Development Group. It is not clear, however, how the activities of this group, and its report, have anything to do with what your letter identifies as the focus of the Committee's investigation -- namely, "whether the various federal agencies charged with overseeing or regulating part of Enron's business could have done something to detect or prevent the problems that led to the company's downfall and the losses of thousands of jobs and billions of investors' and employees' dollars."

Moreover, as I hope you appreciate, our concern about the letter request is especially heightened with respect to certain specific areas where the request would intrude deeply into the President's core constitutional responsibilities: for example, the President's power of nomination and appointment. The Constitution vests the power of nomination to the President, and congressional oversight in this area, at least absent a compelling predicate, threatens important Executive Branch prerogatives, as well as important privacy interests of candidates and others involved in the process. The letter request does not indicate any particular appointments that are of interest to the Committee and necessary to the Committee's investigation.

Second, and more broadly, the letter request ~~Committee respectfully appears to have~~ invert~~sed~~ the traditional process of congressional inquiry to the White House. We think Senator Thompson put it well when he explained why did not join in this request. He explained that the Committee's initial "focus was going to be on the external controls and watchdogs, and the federal agencies and laws, and ask why in this case they couldn't better protect the thousands of employees and investors who have suffered from Enron's untimely and unnatural demise." Senator Thompson further explained that he would be willing to follow up with the White House if "any of our other subpoenas or requests for information to Enron, Arthur Andersen or the regulatory agencies produced evidence of White House involvement." We respectfully believe that Senator Thompson has correctly outlined the traditional and appropriate congressional approach to inquiries to the White House.

In this instance, however, the Committee is seeking information from the White House without first gathering and assessing information from other entities (including federal departments) that may indicate whether there is, indeed, any real predicate for seeking information from the White House. Your staff stated in our meeting that the Committee's investigation has not as yet proceeded as far as we had thought, and the Committee therefore has not developed information -- either from Enron, Enron officials or representatives, or federal departments and agencies -- that would establish a basis for seeking information from the White House. Given the sensitivity and separation of powers concerns that arise from congressional requests for information from the White House, ~~however,~~ [I don't see what the "however" does – this sentence supports, not contradicts, the prior one]congressional committees traditionally avail themselves of alternative means to obtain information before submitting an information request to the White House.

To be sure, we are aware that in past Administrations some congressional inquiries have sought information directly from the White House before or at the same time they sought information from other departments and entities. But in those instances, there generally was a specific allegation or evidence of wrongdoing by White House officials ~~in those past Administrations~~. [this is already clear] In this instance, there is none.

For those reasons, we share the overall concern reflected in Senator Thompson's statement: "While I have supported several other requests for information in this matter, I cannot support the chairman's letter. . . . There are obvious separation of powers issues here which are bound to lead to controversy, and I believe that before Congress intrudes upon the private communications of the President of the United States, the inquiry should be focused on an appropriate legislative purpose or there should be some indication of improper or illegal White House activity."

All of that said, we do not seek controversy or conflict with you or the Committee. We therefore intend to assist the Committee by taking substantial and reasonable steps now to gather certain information of interest to the Committee.

First, the Administration already has provided certain information to the House of Representatives relevant to your inquiry: letters from the Chief of Staff, Director of the National Economic Council, Assistant to the President for Presidential Personnel, and Director of the Office of Management and Budget. We ~~think this information is quite useful, and we~~ have enclosed that documentation in order to assist the Committee. Second, we will take appropriate steps to gather substantial additional information from appropriate White House officials. Third, we then intend to provide to the Committee information about the results of our efforts. Fourth, we then intend to meet with Committee staff to assess the results of our efforts in the overall context of the Committee's inquiry.

Thank you for your willingness to discuss the Committee's request. We hope to continue a cooperative relationship with the Committee, recognizing of course that the two Branches inevitably may have somewhat different perspectives on certain sensitive issues. That difference in perspective is, however, both healthy to our constitutional government and, in my judgment, is not at all inconsistent with the productive and cooperative relationship we have begun. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Brett, I received this for review from Karen's Office and wanted to get your input. (Hence my head in your office just as you were leaving for your speech).

Seems like an appropriate forum and I'm assuming that Karen will not give preferential treatment to only this PAC. Of course, I'm sure Karen knows the no direct solicitation rule and the no request that people give money in her remarks.

The only question in my mind is that Karen's the only draw, which is a little different than the section 2635.808 example where the Secretary of Labor speaks at a fundraiser honoring another distinguished person, who, arguably could be the money draw.

Also, does this go to Office of Political Affairs? Thoughts?

DRAFT
4/19
2:00 P.M.

April 19, 2002

Dear Chairman Lieberman:

Thank you for your letter to Secretary Card and for subsequently discussing the letter with me. As we had discussed, members of my staff later met with members of your staff to review the Committee,s letter request for information from the White House.

At the outset, I want to emphasize our respect for you and the Committee, as well as our appreciation for the congressional inquiries into the causes and consequences of the collapse of Enron. Please be assured that the President shares your concern about this matter, including the consequences for Enron employees and shareholders. Indeed, the President and the Administration have responded rapidly to the issue by proposing important policy changes to address the problems. In addition, the Department of Justice and other federal agencies are conducting intensive official investigations of Enron and related entities and individuals. In short, the Administration is committed to appropriate investigative, law enforcement, and policy actions relating to the Enron bankruptcy.

I also want to emphasize that, as the Committee seeks to investigate Enron-related issues, we intend to ensure to the extent possible that the Committee receives appropriate information critical to its inquiry. We understand that the Committee is conducting an extensive investigation of Enron, which may well continue for many more months, and we want to be as helpful as we can, consistent with both the Committee,s legitimate needs and the Executive Branch,s traditional responsibilities and prerogatives.

With respect specifically to the letter request for information, we discussed with your staff two concerns. First, at this point, the request appears overbroad and not well-defined. For example, the letter does not identify any particular regulatory matters or subject matters in which the Committee is interested. Nor does the letter identify particular offices or individuals within the White House, or particular individuals affiliated with Enron, in whose communications the Committee is interested. Rather, the request on its face covers potential communications (about undefined subjects) between tens of thousands of individuals, the vast majority of whom are not known to us or you, such as all of Enron,s &officers, directors, employees, and representatives, including anyone purporting to act on their behalf; and each of their affiliates, subsidiaries, partnerships, special purpose entities, joint ventures, trusts or any other entity in which [Enron] is or was a shareholder, partner, investor, trustee, or member.8

The letter also seeks certain information that appears removed from the Committee,s legitimate inquiry into the collapse of Enron. For example, the letter seeks information about the deliberations and communications of the National Energy Policy Development Group. It is not clear, however, how the activities of this group, and its report, have anything to do with what your letter identifies as the focus of the Committee,s investigation -- namely, &whether the various federal agencies charged with overseeing or regulating part of Enron,s business could have done something to detect or prevent the problems that led to the company,s downfall and the losses of thousands of jobs and billions of investors, and employees, dollars.8

Moreover, as I am sure you can appreciate, our concern about the letter request is especially heightened with respect to certain specific areas where the request would intrude deeply into the President,s core constitutional responsibilities: for example, the President,s power of nomination and appointment. The power of nomination under the Constitution belongs solely to the President, and congressional oversight in this area, at least absent a compelling predicate, threatens important Executive Branch prerogatives, as well as important privacy interests of candidates and others involved in the process. The letter request does not indicate any particular appointments that are of interest to the Committee.

Second, and more broadly, the letter request inverts the traditional process of congressional inquiry to the White House. The Committee is seeking information from the White House without first gathering and assessing information from other entities (including federal departments) that may indicate whether there is, indeed, any real predicate for seeking information from the White House. Your staff stated in our meeting that the Committee,s investigation has not as yet proceeded as far as we had thought, and the Committee therefore has not developed information -- either from Enron, Enron officials or representatives, or federal departments and agencies -- that would establish a basis for seeking information from the White House. Given the sensitivity and separation of powers concerns that arise from congressional requests for information from the White House, congressional committees traditionally avail themselves of alternative means to obtain information before submitting an information request to the White House.

In that regard, we think Senator Thompson put it well when he explained why did not join in this request. He explained that the Committee,s initial &focus was going to be on the external controls and watchdogs, and the federal agencies and laws, and ask why in this case they couldn,t better protect the thousands of employees and investors who have suffered from Enron,s untimely and unnatural demise.8 Senator Thompson further explained that he would be willing to follow up with the White House if & any of our other subpoenas or requests for information to Enron, Arthur Andersen or the regulatory agencies produced evidence of White House involvement.8 We respectfully believe that Senator Thompson has correctly outlined the traditional and appropriate congressional approach to inquiries to the White House.

To be sure, we are aware that in past Administrations some congressional inquiries have sought information directly from the White House before or at the same time they sought information from other departments and entities. But in those instances, there generally was a specific allegation or evidence of wrongdoing by White House officials in those past Administrations. In this instance, there is none.

All of that said, we do not seek controversy or conflict with you or the Committee. We therefore intend to assist the Committee by taking substantial and reasonable steps now to gather certain information of interest to the Committee.

Second, we will take appropriate steps to gather substantial additional information from appropriate White House officials. Third, we then intend to provide to the Committee information about the results of our efforts. Fourth, we then intend to meet with Committee staff to assess the results of our efforts in the overall context of the Committee, s inquiry.

Thank you again for your letter. We hope to continue a cooperative relationship with the Committee, recognizing of course that the two Branches inevitably may have somewhat different perspectives on certain sensitive issues. That difference in perspective is, however, both healthy to our constitutional government and not at all inconsistent with the productive and cooperative relationship we have begun. SUBJECT: VETERANS AFFAIRS Report on HR3461 Addition of Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis to the Diseases Presumed to Be Service-Connected For Gulf War Veterans

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This letter states VA's opposition to H.R. 3461, which would provide a presumption of service-connection for amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) for veterans with service during the Gulf War. VA states that it opposes H.R. 3461 because VA is not aware of any study that would support a presumption of service-connection for ALS in Gulf War veterans.

The Honorable Lane Evans
Ranking Democratic Member
Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Congressman Evans:

This is in response to your request for the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 3461, 107th Congress, a bill "[t]o amend title 38, United States Code, to add the disease of Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis to the diseases presumed to be service connected when incurred by veterans of the Persian Gulf War." VA opposes this bill.

H.R. 3461 would amend 38 U.S.C. § 1118(a) to provide a presumption of service connection for Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS) for veterans with service in the Armed Forces in the Southwest Asia theater of operations during the Persian Gulf War. The ending date of the Persian Gulf War has not yet been prescribed by Presidential proclamation or by Congress.

The preliminary results of a recent large-scale medical study, supported by VA and the Department of Defense, found that veterans who were deployed to the Southwest Asia theater of operations between August 2, 1990, and July 31, 1991, during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, are nearly twice as likely as their non-deployed counterparts to develop ALS. Because ALS is a rapidly degenerative and ultimately fatal disease, I directed the Veterans Benefits Administration in December 2001 to invite claims for service connection from veterans diagnosed with ALS who served in the Southwest Asia theater of operations between August 2, 1990, and July 31, 1991, and to promptly adjudicate their claims.

VA opposes H.R. 3461 because we are unaware of any study regarding the risk of ALS in veterans deployed in the Southwest Asia theater in any period other than August 2, 1990, through July 31, 1991, that would support a presumption of service connection for such veterans. In addition, the medical study upon which I based my recent directive has not yet been peer-reviewed and therefore it would be premature to base a far-reaching presumption of service connection on the study. The compensation claims of veterans who were so deployed during the August 2, 1990, through July 31, 1991, period are already being dealt with under existing procedures. VA, of course, has the authority to grant direct service connection for ALS to a veteran who served in the Southwest Asia theater during some other time period, or to any veteran for that matter, if the evidence establishes that the disease was incurred in service. In addition, veterans who served on active duty in the Southwest Asia theater of operations during the Persian Gulf War are currently eligible for VA hospital care, medical services, and nursing home care for any disability pursuant to 38 U.S.C. § 1710(e)(1)(C).

VA estimates that enactment of H.R. 3461 would result in benefit costs of $457,000 in fiscal year (FY) 2003, $3.1 million over the five-year period FY 2003-2007, and $8.7 million over the ten-year period FY 2003-2012.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

Here is the cirulation I would propose for the questionnaire. This is large but still excludes a considerable number of people, and it should be easily defensible as a reasonable, if not generous, approach. Precisely how we would implement the circulation and collection (e.g., direct contact with each person vs. going through office heads) remains to be discussed.

On the May 3 scheduling request: I think the invited guests should not include law clerks, who work for the judiciary and should not be part of this kind of event. I also do not think law students add much. Rather, I think we should invite (i) selected bar leaders from around the country; (ii) leaders of certain groups that care about this issue; and (iii) bipartisan supporters of the key nominees.

Brett:

With the exception of Tom Taggart and myself, I understand that everyone in ORM received a notice that they had failed to turn in a certification regarding the Department of Justice inquiry.

Obviously, they will do so if necessary. However, I had assumed that my response was sufficient, based on my memo below.

Terry

March 26, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR: BRETT KAVANAUGH
COUNSEL'S OFFICE

FROM: TERRY GOOD
OFFICE OF RECORDS MANAGEMENT

RE: RESPONSE TO INQUIRY FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

In response to the March 18 memorandum from Timothy E. Flanagan, Deputy Counsel to the President, I am attaching my signed copy of certification.

Previously, I have provided to the Office of the Staff Secretary, copies of what may be responsive documents found among those in the custody of the Office of Records Management.

Unless you think otherwise, I would believe that my certification satisfies the requirement for all members of the Office of Records Management.

SMALL BUSINESS WEEK, 2002

- - - - - - -

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

The strength of our economy is built on the creativity and entrepreneurship of our people. Those who own and operate our Nation=s 25 million small businesses make a vital contribution to our prosperity through their ongoing work to create new technologies, products, and services. These hardworking men and women and their employees define the American spirit through their innovation, dedication, and determination.

The tragedy of September 11, 2001, impacted our Nation, but our economy remains sound. In the aftermath of the terrorist attacks, the business community rose to this challenge by volunteering their time and services to help with the relief and rebuilding efforts in New York City and Washington, D.C. This compassionate spirit demonstrated America=s true character.

To help businesses recover from September 11, my Administration has made more than $520 million in disaster loans available to business owners nationwide. My Administration also remains committed to a domestic policy that stimulates economic growth, boosts consumer purchasing power, and creates a level playing field. Our efforts to lower taxes, enact reasonable regulations, and reduce tariffs and other barriers to free trade will increase the competitive position of our small businesses. To further encourage economic growth, I recently signed into law the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002. The act extends unemployment benefits, cuts taxes for small businesses, and provides a long-term stimulus to create more jobs across our country. This new law also provides tax incentives for companies to expand and create jobs by investing in facilities and equipment. This action will lead to more opportunities in the manufacturing, high-tech sectors, and our small businesses.

America=s small business owners represent more than 99 percent of all employers and their businesses employ more than half of the private work force. These entrepreneurs who create more than 66 percent of the new jobs nationwide and generate more than 50 percent of the Nation=s gross domestic product, are critical to our country=s prosperity and the well-being of our communities. We salute these employers by celebrating Small Business Week and recognizing their contributions to all Americans.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim May 5 through May 11, 2002, as Small Business Week. I call on all Americans to observe this week with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs that celebrate the achievements of small business owners and encourage and foster the development of new enterprises.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this day of , in the year of our Lord two thousand two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty-sixth.

Subject: Re: LRM JAB 206 Small Business Administration Draft Provision on Authorization for Native American Economic Development Activities

James:

1. "Indian tribe," "tribal entity" or "Alaskan Native Corporation". Courts have concluded that (a) Indian tribes are political classifications rather than racial classifications, (b) they therefore need only be justified by a rational basis, and (c) economic benefits based on these classifications is rationally related to the proper governmental purpose of exercise of Indian Commerce Clause power to the benefit of Indians. Also, at least one court has held that Alaskan Natives are "Indian Tribes" for purpose of the Indian Commerce Clause. Accordingly, I have no objection to the legislation insofar as it refers to Indian Tribe, tribal entity or Alaskan Native Corporation.

2. Native Hawaiians. With regard to Native Hawaiians, I am not aware that any court has held that the classification constitutes "Indian Tribes" for purpose of the Indian Commerce Clause, or that Native Hawaiians is a political classification rather than a racial classification. If it is a racial classification, then the Government must have a compelling governmental interest which this classification is narrowly tailored to serve. Please do not clear the inclusion of "Native Hawaiians" in the proposed provision unless DOJ/OLC advises that such legislation would be consistent with the Constitution.

They had and have your USA Today and Wash Post op-eds, of course, which explain the order. Yes, we will meet with them again next month as we had previously scheduled, and we will re-distribute the letter at that time in a package.
More broadly, I think two points warrant emphasis as we consider the landscape. First, in the nearly 6 months since the order, we have not received a single inquiry from the Senate on the order even though the Senate is Democrat-controlled. Second, as the Kmiec and Gaziano testimony demonstrate anew, the President's order was a very good thing -- and indeed was constitutionally necessary and appropriate. It may be difficult to convince skeptics in the historian community and it may not be popular with a few folks who have big megaphones, but it is right.

Brett, have we ever shared with the historians our letter to the Congress setting forth our interpretation of the order? I recall this was helpful in calming some of the fears of Horn. Perhaps we should do this, and perhaps even meet with the historians next month. I want to mute the complaints about the order.

* * *
This reaction did not go unnoticed at the White House.
With Democrats queuing up to take Bush down a peg in an election year, a public furor in which the President is seen as taking the side of Richard Nixon was not considered ideal positioning. So, the White House launched a public relations counteroffensive. Gonzales responded to Hensen's Washington Post op-ed with one of his own. He wrote that "freedom and openness are at the core of our government," and asserted that the Bush executive order "ensures expeditious disclosure of documents to provide historians, scholars, and the public valuable insights into the way our government works." Next, the White House signed off on the release of a batch of some 8,000 P-5 papers at the Reagan library. That release occurred on January 3. In addition, Gonzales maintained a back-channel dialogue with scholarly groups, including some of those who are suing the White House, in an effort to reassure them that the Administration's motives are not of the cover-up variety.

On December 7, 2001, a delegation of scholars, archivists, and journalists was invited to the White House for a meeting with the White House counsel's office. The scholars were expecting Gonzales and a deputy in the office, Brett M. Kavanaugh. Gonzales didn't make it, which disappointed some of the scholars. So did the message they heard from Kavanaugh, though they didn't blame the deputy White House counsel.

"Kavanaugh himself was intelligent, sincere, informative, and constructive," Robert J. Spitzer, president of the Presidency Research Group of the American Political Science Association, reported back to his organization. "I was impressed by [his] earnest desire to work with the groups represented." And yet, Spitzer noted that it was apparent that the Bush White House appears convinced of the appropriateness of its executive order, has no intention of backing down, and seems to believe it will prevail in court. At the same time, Kavanaugh repeatedly assured the scholars that the Bush White House is not trying to hide anything and has no intention of inappropriately impeding the release of the remaining 60,000 pages of Reagan papers, which White House sources say will probably occur in April. Kavanaugh invited the group to revisit the issue in six months or so, and he predicted that they might be pleasantly surprised by the results. "We think you'll be happy with the procedures. We think they will work-and work well," he concluded.

But the scholars remain concerned. "Kavanaugh's promise of openness reminds me that the promise is predicated not on law, but merely on good will," Spitzer said in an interview. "The situation continues to be deeply troubling."
