The nomination of Michigan Court of Appeals Judge Richard Griffin to the federal bench makes him the latest pawn is an outrageous, lingering stalemate between the White House and the U.S. Senate. It has created a severe shortage of judges.

For years, it was a deadlock between the Clinton White House and the Republican-ruled Senate. Now it's between the Bush White House and the narrowly Democratic Senate -- where Michigan's Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow essentially have veto power over appointees from their state.

On Thursday, President Bush nominated Griffin to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which has declared a judicial emergency because half of its 16 positions are vacant. Four of the vacancies are Michigan seats.

But there ma y not even be a hearing this year on confirmation of Griffin and three previous Michigan Bush nominees who have been twisting in the wind for more than a year while politicians play tit-for-tat.

The federal court system has 86 vacancies. The percentage is highest in the 6th Circuit, which handles appeals from federa l district courts in Michigan, Kentucky, Ohio and Tennessee.

Gov. John Engler Friday correctly declared the Senate guilty of "misuse of the advise and consen t authority." He's particularly frustrated by the vacancies and backlog in the 6t h Circuit, where Michigan is appealing federal court rulings that knocked down laws on drug testing of welfare recipients and registries of sex offenders.

Engler told me the problem is so serious he thinks President Bush should consider filling all vacancies with recess appointments of judges who would serve two years without Senate confirmation an d then step down.

"America< FONT size=2> is facing a crisis in our courts," says U.S. Rep. David Camp, R-Midland. "The Senate has failed to see the importance o f fulfilling its constitutional responsibility."

Traditionally, the Senate Judiciary Committee will not advance a president's judicial nomination without consent of the home state senators. Democrats Levin and Stabenow vow that the four Michigan vacancies in the 6th will not be filled "in the absence of bipartisan compromise."

The shoe was o n the other foot before the 2000 election that put Bush in the White House and Stabenow in the seat of Republican Sen. Spencer Abraham, who had balked at Clinton appointees to the court.

Michigan Court of Appeals Judge Helene White and Detroit attorney Kathleen McCree Lewis were nominated to the federal bench by Clinton but never got a hearing in the GOP-controlled Senate. Levin says White's "four-year wait was longer than that of any nominee in Senate history."

After Bush's nominatio n of Griffin -- son of ex-Sen. Bob Griffin -- Levin and Stabenow said: "The White House has regrettably opted for stalemate" over the 6th Circuit.

They said they had "made repeated attempts to reach compromise." One would have Bush nominate White and Lewis to appeals and district vacancies.

It was wrong for the Senate to fail t o act on Clinton's Michigan nominees. But another wrong won't make things right for Michigan. Enough is enough.

Griffin, Federal District Judge David McKeague, state Appeals Judge Henry Saad and Wayne Circuit Court Judge Susan Neilson should be individually evaluated for Michigan vacancies on the 6th Circuit -- not shelved until voters decide Nov. 5 which party will rule the Senate.

Senators, it is long past time to fill Michigan's voids in the hall of justice.

There's a blurb on John Roberts in the Hearsay column of the Post Business Section today...

Still No Hearing

John Roberts wins Hearsay's 2002 Supreme Court Sweepstakes. Roberts, of Hogan & Hartson, won three of the four cases he argued before the high court. He won more cases this year than any of the usual suspects, mostly because it appears, by our haphazard review, that he is the only attorney to have argued more than two cases.
His wins include a unanimous opinion on the Americans with Disabilities Act ( Toyota Motor Manufacturing v. Williams), a landmark case turning back an attempt to call a Lake Tahoe building moratorium an illegal taking under the Constitution, and a education privacy victory for Gonzaga University. For his prize, Roberts surely would like a hearing for his nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. ("You get used to [waiting] as the years go by," Roberts joked.) But Hearsay does not control the calendar of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which, for its part, argues it is approving nominations faster than the Republicans did under President Bill Clinton.

There may be various efforts to prompt Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick J.Leahy (D-Vt.) into jump-starting judicial hearings; congressional sources believe that's why some anonymous senator has placed a hold on a bill by Leahy and Sen. Charles Grassley (R-Iowa). The bill would give FBI employees federal whistleblower protection.

The law is meant to protect people such as FBI agent Colleen Rowley, who recently testified before Congress. Even under that bill, though, protection would be more tenuous for Sibel Edmonds, the latest whistleblower to be fired by the FBI.

Edmonds, who worked in the Washington Field Office's translation division, alleges she lost her job because she reported suspicious comments and activities of a fellow translator.

The FBI has confirmed key aspects of the story -- for example, that the translator had unreported contacts with the Middle Eastern target of secretly taped conversations. But Edmonds was fired because she was "disruptive." She is represented by Kohn, Kohn & Colapinto of Georgetown, the same firm that represented FBI whistleblower Frederick Whitehurst, who alleged problems in the FBI laboratory.

"It is not a good management practice for the FBI to fire the person who reports a security breach, while nothing happens to the person who allegedly committed the breach," Leahy said in a floor speech. Similarly, Grassley said firing her was akin to shooting the messenger.

Subject: Food for thought . . .

What's a Military Family Worth? by Rush Limbaugh, March 11, 2002

I think the vast differences in compensation between the victims of the September 11th casualty, and those who die serving the country in uniform, are profound.

No one is really talking about it either because you just don't criticize anything having to do with September 11th. Well, I just can't let the numbers pass by because it says something really disturbing about the entitlement mentality of this country.

If you lost a family member in the September 11th attack, you're going to get an average of $1,185,000. The range is a minimum guarantee of $250,000, all the way up to $4.7 million. If you are a surviving family member of an American soldier killed in action, the first check you get is a $6,000 direct death benefit, half of which is taxable. Next, you get $1,750 for burial costs.

If you are the surviving spouse, you get $833 a month until you remarry.

And there's a payment of $211 per month for each child under 18. When the child hits 18, those payments come to a screeching halt. Keep in mind that some of the people that are getting an average of $1.185 million up to $4.7 million are complaining that it's not enough.

We also learned over the weekend that some of the victims from the Oklahoma City bombing have started an organization asking for the same deal that the September 11th families are getting. In addition to that, some of the families of those bombed in the embassies are now asking for compensation as well.

You see where this is going, don't you? Folks, this is part and parcel of over fifty years of entitlement politics in this country. It's just really sad.

"Patriotism is not a short and frenzied outburst of emotion but the tranquil and steady dedication of a lifetime."-Adlai E. Stevenson, Jr.

Every time when a pay raise comes up for the military they usually receive next to nothing of a raise. Now the green machine is in combat in the Middle East while their families have to survive on food stamps and live in low rent housing.

However our own U.S. Congress just voted themselves a raise, and many of you don't know that they only have to be in Congress one-time to receive a pension that is more than $15,000 per month and most are now equal to be millionaires plus.

They also do not receive Social Security on retirement because they didn't have to pay into the system. If some of the military people stay in for 20 years and get out as an E-7 you may receive a pension of $1,000 per month, and the very people who placed you in harms way receive a pension of $15,000 per month. I would like to see our elected officials pick up a weapon and join ranks before they start cutting out benefits and lowering pay for our sons and daughters who are now fighting.

"When do we finally do something about this ??"

If this doesn't seem fair to you, it is time to forward this to as many people as you can

If you lost a family member in the September 11th attack, you're going to get an average of $1,185,000. The range is a minimum guarantee of $250,000, all the way up to $4.7 million. If you are a surviving family member of an American soldier killed in action, the first check you get is a $6,000 direct death benefit, half of which is taxable. Next, you get $1,75 0 for burial costs.

If you are the surviving spouse, you get $833 a month until you remarry.

And there's a payment of $211 per month for each child under 18. When the child hits 18, those payments come to a screeching halt. Keep in mind that some of the people that are getting an average of $1.185 million up to $4.7 million are complaining that it's not enough.

We also learned over the weekend that some of the victims from the Oklahoma City bombing have started an organization asking for the same deal that the September 11th families are getting. In addition to that, some of the families of those bombed in the embassies are now asking for compensation as well.

You see where this is going, don't you? Folks, this is part and parce l of over fifty years of entitlement politics in this country. It's just really sad.

"Patriotis m is not a short and frenzied outburst of emotion but the tranquil and steady dedication of a lifetime."-Adlai E. Stevenson, Jr.

Every time when a pay raise comes up for the military they usually receive next to nothing of a raise. Now the green machine is in combat in the Middle East while their families have to survive on food stamps and live in low rent housing.

However our own U.S. Congress just voted themselves a raise, and many of you don't know that they only have to be in Congress one-time to rece ive a pension that is more than $15,000 per month and most are now equal to be millionaires plus.

They also do not receive Social Security on retirement because they didn't have to pay into the system. If some of the military people stay in f or 20 years and get out as an E-7 you may receive a pension of $1,000 per month, and the very people who placed you in harms way receive a pension of $15,000 per month. I would like to see our elected officials pick up a weapon and join ranks before they start cutting out benefits and lowering pay for our sons and daughters who are now fighting.

"When do we finally do something about this ??"

If this doesn't seem fair to you, it is time to forward this to as many people as you can

Dear Friends,
I will be appearing on the O'Reilly Factor show on Fox News Channel Monday evening at 8pm Eastern Time, to discuss the 9th Circuit generally and its recent Pledge of Allegiance decision in particular. Check your local listings if you are interested.

Best regards,

Charlotte,

If you could do me a huge favor and check with Brett Kavanaugh to see if he is going to be writing a piece for the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy based on his talk at the Federalist Society Symposium at Yale earlier this year, that would be hugely helpful. You can let him know that our deadline is July 14th and that we would be very interested in having him publish a piece of any length. Thanks for your help on this!

Delete the word "private." Delete the official titles. Add "special guests" before mention of Karl and Ken. With those changes, it is ok.

Susan,
Is it ok to forward the below information to Norm Coleman's staff so they can help write an introduction?

Does Karl have a preferred introduction and if so would you be willing to e-mail it to me?

Finally, is it ok for the person introducing to use Karl's official title and introduce him as Senior Advisor to the President?
-Doug

Office of Senior Advisor

The White House

Karl Rove

Senior Advisor and Assistant to President George W. Bush

Karl Rove is the Senior Advisor and Assistant to President George W. Bush. Mr. Rove oversees the strategic planning, political affairs, public liaison, and intergovernmental affairs efforts of the White House.

He previously served as chief strategist for the Bush for President Campaign and for 18 years before that, president of Karl Rove & Company, an Austin, Texas-based public affairs firm that worked for Republican candidates, non-partisan causes, and non-profit groups. His clients have included over 75 Republican U.S. Senate, Congressional and gubernatorial candidates in 24 states, as well as the Moderate Party of Sweden.

The Colorado native attended the University of Utah, the University of Texas at Austin and George Mason University.

He has taught at the LBJ School of Public Affairs and in the Journalism Department at the University of Texas at Austin and was also faculty member at the Salzburg Seminar.

He was a member of the Board of International Broadcasting, which oversaw operations of Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, and served on the board of the McDonald Observatory before entering government.

Mr. Rove and his wife, Darby, have one son, Andrew.

REMAINING U.S. CEOs MAKE A BREAK FOR IT

Band of Roving Chief Executives Spotted Miles from Mexican Border

San Antonio, Texas - Unwilling to wait for their eventual indictments, the 10,000 remaining CEOs of public U.S. companies made a break for it yesterday, heading for the Mexican border, plundering towns and villages along the way, and writing the entire rampage off as a marketing expense. "They came into my home, made me pay for my own TV, then double-booked the revenues," said Rachel Sanchez of Las Cruces, just north of El Paso. "Right in front of my daughters."

Calling themselves the CEOnistas, the chief executives were first spotted last night along the Rio Grande River near Quemado, where they bought each of the town's 320 residents by borrowing against pension fund gains. By late this morning, the CEOnistas had arbitrarily inflated Quemado's population to 960, and declared a 200 percent profit for the fiscal second quarter.

This morning, the outlaws bought the City of Waco, transferred its underperforming areas to a private partnership, and sent a bill to California for $4.5 billion. Law enforcement officials and disgruntled shareholders riding posse were noticeably frustrated. "First of all, they're very hard to find because they always stand behind their numbers, and the numbers keep shifting," said posse spokesman Dean Levitt. "And every time we yell 'Stop in the name of the shareholders!', they refer us to investor relations. I've been on the phone all morning."

The pursuers said they have had some success, however, by preying on a common executive weakness. "Last night we caught about 24 of them by disguising one of our female officers as a CNBC anchor," said U.S. Border Patrol spokesperson Janet Lewis. "It was like moths to a flame." Also, teams of agents have been using high-powered listening devices to scan the plains for telltale sounds of the CEOnistas. "Most of the time we just hear leaves rustling or cattle flicking their tails," said Lewis, "but occasionally we'll pick up someone saying, 'I was totally out of the loop on that.'" Among former and current CEOs apprehended with this method were Computer Associates' Sanjay Kumar, Adelphia's John Rigas, Enron's Ken Lay, Joseph Nacchio of Qwest, Joseph Berardino of Arthur Andersen, and every Global Crossing CEO since 1997. ImClone Systems' Sam Waksal and Dennis Kozlowski of Tyco were not allowed to join the CEOnistas as they have already been indicted.

So far, about 50 chief executives have been captured, including Martha Stewart, who was detained south of El Paso where she had cut through a barbed-wire fence at the Zaragosa border crossing off Highway 375. "She would have gotten away, but she was stopping motorists to ask for marzipan and food coloring so she could make edible snowman place settings, using the cut pieces of wire for the arms," said Border Patrol officer Jennette Cushing. "We put her in cell No. 7, because the morning sun really adds texture to the stucco walls."

While some stragglers are believed to have successfully crossed into Mexico, Cushing said the bulk of the CEOnistas have holed themselves up at the Alamo. "No, not the fort, the car rental place at the airport," she said. "They're rotating all the tires on the minivans and accounting for each change as a sale."

Deliberative Process Material

In preparation for our 11 a.m. meeting tomorrow morning, attached please find a revised version of the HHS options paper on med mal reform. This reflects a major revision from the last paper from before the 4th of July. It follows discussions this afternoon with OLC at DOJ regarding constitutional concerns about certain elements of the original proposal. We have attempted to respond to and reflect OLC's concerns, but because of the press of events, they will not have had the chance to preclear this before sending around to all of you, so please bear that caveat in mind.

MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LIABILITY REFORM

1. The Medical Malpractice Liability Crisis:

America is currently experiencing a medical malpractice insurance coverage crisis that causes increased cost, decreased access, and lower quality of care:

- Medical malpractice premiums have skyrocketed in recent years
  - 8 states reported premium increases of over 30 percent in 2002
  - Premiums account for 1% of health care costs and 10-25% of physician incomes
- Rising malpractice judgments and costs of litigation are forcing insurance providers out of the market, leaving doctors without coverage and causing doctors to move their practices
  - Most OB/GYNs in Las Vegas are refusing to take on new patients
  - Las Vegas' only trauma center closed its emergency department because physicians were unable to obtain liability insurance for emergency care.
  - Mississippi doctors moved to Louisiana because malpractice insurance is unavailable in Mississippi.
  - St. Paul Insurance, which covered at least 25% of the market in 12 states, is no longer writing malpractice insurance
  - Only one insurance carrier remains in West Virginia
- Fear of liability causes the practice of defensive medicine, increasing health care costs perhaps by as much as $50 billion per year.
  - 75% of physicians admit that fear of litigation led them to order more tests and refer more patients to specialists than they otherwise would
- The major cause of increased premiums is the rising size of malpractice judgments and the costs of litigation
  - The average jury award has tripled since 1994 to $3.5 million
  - In 2001 insurers paid $1.40 in claims for every dollar in premiums
  - Failure to anticipate the size of awards and the poor performance of investments may have exacerbated the situation
- The current system does not enhance the quality of care – it actually harms the quality of care and reduces access to care
  - Medical malpractice awards are not targeted to those who were injured by negligent medical care
    - Studies indicate that as little as 25% in professional liability insurance premium is returned to those who have been injured by medical error
  - Fear of liability prevents providers from performing quality self-evaluations and improvements
  - The high costs of insurance are causing providers to defer purchases of new medical equipment and the hiring of needed staff
  - Doctors are leaving certain locations, medical staffs or medical specialties due to litigation fears and unavailability of liability insurance, resulting in reduced access to care for many patients in many cities.
- The current system is not fair to injured patients

d. Option 4: FDA rule preempting state duty to warn claims based on prescription drug labels

Under the Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act, the FDA comprehensively regulates the labels on prescription drugs. The FDA approves every claim and warning that may be put on the label. Often, the FDA refuses permission to include warnings that the manufacturer or other petitioners would like to have on the label. State duty to warn claims conflict with this comprehensive federal regulatory regime. Public health experts at the FDA believe that excessive warnings can create a health risk by detracting from necessary warnings and by deterring people from taking needed drugs based on unneeded warnings.

Recommendation: The FDA should through notice and comment rulemaking set forth its interpretation of the Act as preempting state duty-to-warn claims based on prescription drug labels.

Pros:

- Could be enacted quickly through administrative action
- Would prevent state tort law interference with a comprehensive federal public health and safety regime

Cons:

- Opponents would argue that the FDA sets a floor on warning, not a ceiling
- Opponents would argue that only those warnings that had been specifically rejected by the FDA should be preempted
- Any preemption argument is susceptible to the claim that it does not accord adequate respect to state regulatory requirements under their general police powers

v. 7/9/02

REV_00346137

- Medical-malpractice litigation does not in most cases actually compensate patients truly injured by medical negligence and rarely identifies and holds providers accountable for substandard care (New England Journal of Medicine, July 25, 1991, vol. 325:245-251)
- Plaintiffs lawyers and clients have a conflict of interest because seriously injured patients desire prompt recovery of their out-of-pocket losses, but attorneys are willing to hold out and gamble for larger possible awards of non-economic damages in a few of their cases because they can spread the risk of loss over their entire portfolio of medical malpractice cases
- Litigation is slow, expensive, and traumatic for all involved; on average patients must wait almost 5 years before receiving any compensation.
- Providers are reluctant to make settlement offers because they will appear weak to plaintiffs attorneys and get nothing in return

- The medical liability crisis is a federal concern
  - The direct cost to the federal government of increasing malpractice costs is $6 billion per year. The federal government health programs cover approximately 50% of Americans
    - The 1000% increase in liability costs for nursing homes since 1990 is financed largely through Medicaid and Medicare
  - The indirect cost of defensive medicine to the federal government may be as much as $12 billion per year
  - The malpractice crisis directly impacts interstate commerce by causing doctors to practice in certain states and not practice in others, impacting not only doctors, but the interstate mobility of citizens who need access to quality health care
  - As the insurer of 1 in 4 Americans, the federal government has a critical concern for the quality of care that is provided and access to providers

2. Options for Reform:

Any successful medical malpractice reform proposal should serve two goals:

- Enhance health care quality by encouraging early recognition of medical errors and targeting fast compensation to those who have been injured by medical errors (similar to workers compensation models)
- Reduce excessive non-economic damages awards unconnected to remedying real errors (thus reducing health care costs and enhancing health care access)

a. Option 1: Actively support the Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act

Real medical errors can be reduced through health care provider self-evaluations of bad incidents. Plaintiffs' attorneys, however, attempt to use these self-evaluations as evidence against providers in litigation. Most states have statutes that offer some confidentiality protections to these self-evaluations or adverse event reports, but the protections are inconsistent and often provide only partial protection for certain categories of review.

REV_00346129

Senators Frist, Breaux, Jeffords, and Gregg have introduced the Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act (S. 2590, introduced in the House by Rep. Johnson as H.R. 4889) to provide for uniform confidentiality, nondiscoverability, and inadmissibility of patient safety data generated for patient safety or health care quality purposes. (Underlying evidence not generated for these purposes would still be available to plaintiffs attorneys.) Two members of the Administration have already expressed support for this legislation.

Recommendation: The Administration should actively support enactment of this legislation as the first step towards health care quality-centered medical malpractice reform.

Pros:

- This is a basic step to improve quality of care and thus also reduce litigation
- This legislation already has tripartisan support

Cons:

- Could be portrayed as an effort to hide vital healthcare information and to protect bad actors (although it will only prevent plaintiffs attorneys from free riding off of the provider's self-evaluation work)

b. Option 2: Propose federal legislation to encourage States to implement early offer systems and medical review boards to speed claims evaluation, settlement, and resolution of meritorious claims

Early offers and medical review boards are procedural improvements that could be enacted either separately or in tandem to 1) encourage providers to make, and plaintiffs to accept, early offers to pay all of a negligently injured patient's economic damages and 2) encourage the use of expert medical review boards to resolve cases through expedited procedures prior to litigation.

Federal legislation could encourage States to enact their own medical liability reforms, which would include both an early offer and medical review panel system. The introduction of early offers and medical review panels by the States would lead to fast, efficient findings of liability and damages, with significant incentives not to challenge the findings in court.

The federal legislation would encourage State adoption of early offer and medical review panel systems by creating a preemptive federal malpractice action for those States that do not adopt such reforms. This federal malpractice cause of action would include protections similar to the Health Act (H.R. 4600, see p. 9) (e.g., caps on damages for non-economic damages; limitations on punitive damages; elimination of joint and several liability; elimination of collateral source rule).

Under the federal malpractice action, a patient's medical malpractice suit would continue to be heard in State court and would use State medical liability tort standards (similar to

way in which Federal Tort Claims Act cases are heard), except where those standards are contrary to federal law.

States that wished to "opt-out" of this federal malpractice action and its limits would need to create State law mechanisms for early offers and medical review boards. The early offer and medical review panel systems adopted by the opting-out States would have to meet certain minimum standards set forth by the federal legislation (outlined below) as further interpreted and certified as compliant by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. The opting-out States would, however, maintain some discretion as to the design and functioning of their early offer and medical review panel systems, so long as the minimum federal guidelines were met.

1. Early offer reforms

Early offers encourage the rapid settlement of cases and provide quick payment of economic compensation in deserving cases and avoid the delay, cost, and emotional distress of litigation.

Within a specified short period after an adverse event or the filing of a claim, a potential or named defendant may make an "early offer" to the claimant. The provider does not have to make an early offer.

The "early offer": The terms of the offer would be set by State statute:

- Net economic damages: The offer would not be for a set dollar amount, but would rather have to include an offer to pay all of the claimant's economic damages (net of collateral sources of recovery) past and future on an accrual basis (e.g., lost wages and health care costs, as more specifically defined in the statute).
- Alternative minimum damages for certain serious injuries: In the case of certain serious injuries that may not cause economic injury, the statute would require the offer of an alternative minimum payment according to a schedule of liability (for injuries such as disfigurement, loss of limbs, or loss of reproductive function). The State system could establish a panel to determine by regulation (with the opportunity for inflation adjusters) what injuries qualify as "serious injuries" and set the schedule for such payments.
- Reasonable attorneys fees to evaluate the offer: The offer would also have to include an offer to pay the claimant's reasonable attorney's fees to evaluate the offer.
- Within the time period for making an early offer, the patient could submit to the provider a statement that it would accept a statutory early offer if made.

In short, the early offer would be an offer to make the claimant whole for the injury. It would not include the payment of non-economic damages such as pain and suffering or loss of consortium or punitive damages (except for the set amount for certain "serious injury" cases).

Acceptance of the early offer: If the provider makes an early offer and the claimant accepts, the case is over. Once the parties reach this agreement, they could independently make a settlement that precisely lays out the terms of financial liability (such as through the purchase of an annuity by the provider). Alternatively, the accepted early offer could be implemented according to the statutory terms.

- Any disputes that might arise regarding whether particular expenses fit within the statutory definition of the early offer (such as whether a trip to Bermuda for recovery is a bona fide medical expense) or the scope of attorneys fees would be subjected to binding arbitration.
- Although that might still leave uncertainty and some litigation risk, the litigation would relate to damages under a statutory standard, rather than the much more complex issues of liability and future damages calculations.
- Potential co-defendants could join the early offer, with disputes among early offerors as to their respective shares being resolved by binding arbitration if necessary.

Rejection of the early offer: If the provider makes an "early offer" according to the terms of the statute and the claimant refuses it, the provider would have a qualified legal defense in any subsequent state or federal suit or medical review board process.

- The qualified legal defense would provide that the defendant could be held liable only upon clear and convincing evidence of negligence and causation (as opposed to the normal preponderance of the evidence standard).
- The defense would provide that non-economic damages could be awarded only upon clear and convincing evidence of wanton or intentional misconduct by the provider (or, in the alternative, non-economic damages could be limited to $250,000).
- The defense would prohibit the admission into evidence of the fact that an early offer had been made.

Recommendation: Propose federal legislation encouraging States to enact early offer systems for providers to make and patients to accept early offers.

Pros:

- Early offers is a new kind of tort reform that does not involve taking away a vested recovery, as caps on damages do; it gives plaintiffs swift, certain recovery, like workers compensation.
- Leaves States with some flexibility and autonomy in running their tort systems.
- An even stronger form of early offer legislation was first proposed in 1984 by Representatives Richard Gephardt and Henson Moore (it would have applied to Medicare, Medicaid, and other federally funded care in states that did not introduce their own reform, and would have given the plaintiff no option to reject the early offer).
- Would reduce litigation expenses and large non-economic damages awards and permit plaintiffs and defendants and thus ultimately the public to share in the savings.
- Would reduce the number of medical malpractice cases in court.

- A form of early offer was implemented several years ago when a school board purchased an insurance policy providing that if a student suffered serious injury in the course of athletic activities, the insurance company would offer to pay net economic loss as it accrued. Due to risk aversion, in almost every case of serious injury, the student accepted the offer.

Cons:

- Possible continued litigation and uncertainty regarding the exact amount of economic damages liability assumed by the provider making an early offer.
- Plaintiffs' lawyers will argue that it takes away the right to recover non-economic damages in the most serious cases (i.e., the ones where the conduct was so clearly bad that the provider is willing to settle immediately).
- Certain advocacy groups may argue discrimination (i.e., less economic damages for low-income patients) and denial of opportunity to participate in the litigation lottery for large, non-economic damage awards.

2. Early offer demonstration project at federal agencies

A watered-down version of the early offer program could be adopted administratively by federal agencies that are health care providers, such as the VA, DOD, and HHS. Because this version would be implemented without legislation, there could be no "hammer" should a plaintiff refuse the early offer. Patients would be informed that the federal government has an early offer program. Within a set period of time, the government and the patient may file an early offer or acceptance, as the case may be, with a designated neutral third party ("the black box"). Only if both an offer and acceptance are put in the black box will the parties learn of each other's offer and the case would be settled immediately.

Recommendation: The Administration should announce commencement of an early offer demonstration at the time early offer legislation is proposed.

Pros:

- Might provide useful information to see if an early offer program would be popular, speed recovery to deserving victims, and reduce damages paid in these cases.
- Can be implemented without legislation.

Cons:

- Could undercut legislative efforts (i.e, "wait and see).
- Would lack any sanction for refusing an early offer.
- Government malpractice claims already have significant tort liability protections under the Federal Tort Claims Act in that punitive damages cannot be awarded, trials are before judges, and the government receives the benefit of any liability caps in the jurisdiction.

3. Medical review board systems

Nineteen states currently have some form of medical review panels that may be used prior to litigation. Most of these systems are not mandatory, have little incentive to be efficient, and have no real sanction for challenging the findings of the board. As a result, these systems can simply lead to a dress rehearsal of a second trial in court, at much added expense.

As with encouraging early offers, new federal legislation would encourage State adoption of medical review panel systems by enacting a preemptive federal malpractice action, with damage caps and protections similar to the Health Act (H.R. 4600, see p. 3 and 9). The State medical review panel systems could always provide more stringent standards than provided for by the guidelines under the federal statute, however the minimum standards for such "opt-out" State medical review panel processes would be as follows:

The State medical review board process: Once a claim is filed, a provider would have the option of channeling the claim through the medical review board process. The provider would then have no right to challenge the findings of the board in court, except on the grounds that the findings were clearly erroneous.

- Board composition:
  - Boards would be composed of at least 2 licensed doctors from the State and one lay chairman.
- Board procedures:
  - All costs of the boards, including compensation of members and administration of the system, would be borne by the provider or by the State government or medical licensing board or professional association, at the option of the State. Board members would have the authority to assess costs on claimants with frivolous claims.
  - Participants would have limited discovery rights (i.e., the medical record only, testimony only of those who were eyewitnesses to the conduct at issue, limits on damages discovery) and would be able to put on only essential evidence (e.g., one expert witness per side, all direct testimony submitted in advance in writing, time limits for hearing) before the board.
  - Boards would be required to render decisions within 90 days of the election by the provider of the board process. If a decision is not reached within that time frame, the patient may bring suit without restriction.
  - Deliberations of the panels would be confidential and decisions of the board on 1) causation and liability and 2) damages would be reduced to writing.
  - Board members would be granted qualified legal immunity for private suits for defamation, antitrust, conspiracy, defamation, etc., arising out of their work on the board.
- Board damages awards: The board may award the following damages (subject to any more stringent liability limits adopted by the relevant state or limits set by the early offer program):

REV_00346134

- Past economic damages and future economic damages would be structured for future payment
  - Following such an award, the parties could agree to settle the ongoing economic liability if they wish (such as through the provider's purchasing an annuity for the plaintiff)
- Unlimited non-economic damages if agreed to by all board members, or $250,000 maximum non-economic damages if agreed to by a majority board members.
  - Damages for future non-economic injury would be paid out on an annual basis, rather than in a lump sum
- Board must vote unanimously for assessment of any punitive damages

Patient challenges to medical review board findings: If the defendant elects to participate in the review board process, the defendant will be entitled to a qualified legal defense in any subsequent lawsuit:

- The defense would provide that the findings of the board will be admissible in evidence and may be reversed only if clearly erroneous
- The defense would limit non-economic damages to $250,000 (unless a more stringent state limit exists)

Recommendation: Propose federal legislation encouraging States to establish the medical review board process. For States that do not "opt-out" and create such a medical review board process, medical malpractice claims would be preempted by federal law through the creation of a federal medical malpractice tort action, subject to various procedural protections similar to the Health Act.

Pros:

- Would reduce the number of medical liability cases in court
- Would reduce litigation defense costs and damages amounts
- Would offer patients a fast process for an essentially binding liability finding against the provider (if provider submits to panel process)
- Recognizes State sovereignty and State tort law by permitting States to "opt-out" of federal medical malpractice tort action by creating State-run medical review panel process and procedural protections.
- Would automatically enact federal statutory reforms in States that did not "opt-out" and enact their own medical liability reforms including early offer and medical review panel systems.

Cons:

- Could be viewed as adding one more layer of litigation, unless there are real disincentives to continuing with a suit in court
- Success of medical review board systems in States has been mixed
- Past Administrations have promoted the use of medical review boards without much success

c. Option 3: Support the Health Act (H.R. 4600)

In April a bipartisan coalition of 34 congressmen led by Representative Greenwood introduced the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low Cost, Timely Health Care Act ("Health Act") (H.R. 4600), which provides:

- Three year statute of limitations on medical liability lawsuits
- Elimination of joint and several liability
- $250,000 cap on non-economic damages (no cap on economic damages)
- Cap on punitive damages of two times non-economic damages
- No punitive damages could be awarded for FDA compliant products
- Limits on plaintiffs attorney contingency fees
- Future damages are paid out over time rather than in one lump sum

Recommendation: Support the Administration's own innovative approach to medical malpractice liability reform, rather than the Health Act.

Pros of supporting the Health Act:

- Liability caps are the only proven method of reducing liability exposure
- Health Act has bipartisan support in the House, and likely could pass in the House

Cons of supporting the Health Act:

- Old idea, not new.
- Would detract from the Administration's own proposals, which would be more focused on health care quality and targeted, swift recovery to the truly injured
- Past experience suggests that federal caps on liability will not pass in the Senate

Deliberative Process Material

In preparation for our 11 a.m. meeting tomorrow morning, attached please find a revised version of the HHS options paper on med mal reform. This reflects a major revision from the last paper from before the 4th of July. It follows discussions this afternoon with OLC at DOJ regarding constitutional concerns about certain elements of the original proposal. We have attempted to respond to and reflect OLC's concerns, but because of the press of events, they will not have had the chance to preclear this before sending around to all of you, so please bear that caveat in mind.

MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LIABILITY REFORM

1. The Medical Malpractice Liability Crisis:

America is currently experiencing a medical malpractice insurance coverage crisis that causes increased cost, decreased access, and lower quality of care:

- Medical malpractice premiums have skyrocketed in recent years
  - 8 states reported premium increases of over 30 percent in 2002
  - Premiums account for 1% of health care costs and 10-25% of physician incomes
- Rising malpractice judgments and costs of litigation are forcing insurance providers out of the market, leaving doctors without coverage and causing doctors to move their practices
  - Most OB/GYNs in Las Vegas are refusing to take on new patients
  - Las Vegas' only trauma center closed its emergency department because physicians were unable to obtain liability insurance for emergency care.
  - Mississippi doctors moved to Louisiana because malpractice insurance is unavailable in Mississippi.
  - St. Paul Insurance, which covered at least 25% of the market in 12 states, is no longer writing malpractice insurance
  - Only one insurance carrier remains in West Virginia
- Fear of liability causes the practice of defensive medicine, increasing health care costs perhaps by as much as $50 billion per year.
  - 75% of physicians admit that fear of litigation led them to order more tests and refer more patients to specialists than they otherwise would
- The major cause of increased premiums is the rising size of malpractice judgments and the costs of litigation
  - The average jury award has tripled since 1994 to $3.5 million
  - In 2001 insurers paid $1.40 in claims for every dollar in premiums
  - Failure to anticipate the size of awards and the poor performance of investments may have exacerbated the situation
- The current system does not enhance the quality of care – it actually harms the quality of care and reduces access to care
  - Medical malpractice awards are not targeted to those who were injured by negligent medical care
    - Studies indicate that as little as 25% in professional liability insurance premium is returned to those who have been injured by medical error
  - Fear of liability prevents providers from performing quality self-evaluations and improvements
  - The high costs of insurance are causing providers to defer purchases of new medical equipment and the hiring of needed staff
  - Doctors are leaving certain locations, medical staffs or medical specialties due to litigation fears and unavailability of liability insurance, resulting in reduced access to care for many patients in many cities.
- The current system is not fair to injured patients

d. Option 4: FDA rule preempting state duty to warn claims based on prescription drug labels

Under the Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act, the FDA comprehensively regulates the labels on prescription drugs. The FDA approves every claim and warning that may be put on the label. Often, the FDA refuses permission to include warnings that the manufacturer or other petitioners would like to have on the label. State duty to warn claims conflict with this comprehensive federal regulatory regime. Public health experts at the FDA believe that excessive warnings can create a health risk by detracting from necessary warnings and by deterring people from taking needed drugs based on unneeded warnings.

Recommendation: The FDA should through notice and comment rulemaking set forth its interpretation of the Act as preempting state duty-to-warn claims based on prescription drug labels.

Pros:

- Could be enacted quickly through administrative action
- Would prevent state tort law interference with a comprehensive federal public health and safety regime

Cons:

- Opponents would argue that the FDA sets a floor on warning, not a ceiling
- Opponents would argue that only those warnings that had been specifically rejected by the FDA should be preempted
- Any preemption argument is susceptible to the claim that it does not accord adequate respect to state regulatory requirements under their general police powers

v. 7/9/02

REV_00346161

- Medical-malpractice litigation does not in most cases actually compensate patients truly injured by medical negligence and rarely identifies and holds providers accountable for substandard care (New England Journal of Medicine, July 25, 1991, vol. 325:245-251)
- Plaintiffs lawyers and clients have a conflict of interest because seriously injured patients desire prompt recovery of their out-of-pocket losses, but attorneys are willing to hold out and gamble for larger possible awards of non-economic damages in a few of their cases because they can spread the risk of loss over their entire portfolio of medical malpractice cases
- Litigation is slow, expensive, and traumatic for all involved; on average patients must wait almost 5 years before receiving any compensation.
- Providers are reluctant to make settlement offers because they will appear weak to plaintiffs attorneys and get nothing in return

- The medical liability crisis is a federal concern
  - The direct cost to the federal government of increasing malpractice costs is $6 billion per year. The federal government health programs cover approximately 50% of Americans
    - The 1000% increase in liability costs for nursing homes since 1990 is financed largely through Medicaid and Medicare
  - The indirect cost of defensive medicine to the federal government may be as much as $12 billion per year
  - The malpractice crisis directly impacts interstate commerce by causing doctors to practice in certain states and not practice in others, impacting not only doctors, but the interstate mobility of citizens who need access to quality health care
  - As the insurer of 1 in 4 Americans, the federal government has a critical concern for the quality of care that is provided and access to providers

2. Options for Reform:

Any successful medical malpractice reform proposal should serve two goals:

- Enhance health care quality by encouraging early recognition of medical errors and targeting fast compensation to those who have been injured by medical errors (similar to workers compensation models)
- Reduce excessive non-economic damages awards unconnected to remedying real errors (thus reducing health care costs and enhancing health care access)

a. Option 1: Actively support the Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act

Real medical errors can be reduced through health care provider self-evaluations of bad incidents. Plaintiffs' attorneys, however, attempt to use these self-evaluations as evidence against providers in litigation. Most states have statutes that offer some confidentiality protections to these self-evaluations or adverse event reports, but the protections are inconsistent and often provide only partial protection for certain categories of review.

Senators Frist, Breaux, Jeffords, and Gregg have introduced the Patient Safety and Quality Improvement Act (S. 2590, introduced in the House by Rep. Johnson as H.R. 4889) to provide for uniform confidentiality, nondiscoverability, and inadmissibility of patient safety data generated for patient safety or health care quality purposes. (Underlying evidence not generated for these purposes would still be available to plaintiffs attorneys.) Two members of the Administration have already expressed support for this legislation.

Recommendation: The Administration should actively support enactment of this legislation as the first step towards health care quality-centered medical malpractice reform.

Pros:

- This is a basic step to improve quality of care and thus also reduce litigation
- This legislation already has tripartisan support

Cons:

- Could be portrayed as an effort to hide vital healthcare information and to protect bad actors (although it will only prevent plaintiffs attorneys from free riding off of the provider's self-evaluation work)

b. Option 2: Propose federal legislation to encourage States to implement early offer systems and medical review boards to speed claims evaluation, settlement, and resolution of meritorious claims

Early offers and medical review boards are procedural improvements that could be enacted either separately or in tandem to 1) encourage providers to make, and plaintiffs to accept, early offers to pay all of a negligently injured patient's economic damages and 2) encourage the use of expert medical review boards to resolve cases through expedited procedures prior to litigation.

Federal legislation could encourage States to enact their own medical liability reforms, which would include both an early offer and medical review panel system. The introduction of early offers and medical review panels by the States would lead to fast, efficient findings of liability and damages, with significant incentives not to challenge the findings in court.

The federal legislation would encourage State adoption of early offer and medical review panel systems by creating a preemptive federal malpractice action for those States that do not adopt such reforms. This federal malpractice cause of action would include protections similar to the Health Act (H.R. 4600, see p. 9) (e.g., caps on damages for non-economic damages; limitations on punitive damages; elimination of joint and several liability; elimination of collateral source rule).

Under the federal malpractice action, a patient's medical malpractice suit would continue to be heard in State court and would use State medical liability tort standards (similar to way in which Federal Tort Claims Act cases are heard), except where those standards are contrary to federal law.

States that wished to "opt-out" of this federal malpractice action and its limits would need to create State law mechanisms for early offers and medical review boards. The early offer and medical review panel systems adopted by the opting-out States would have to meet certain minimum standards set forth by the federal legislation (outlined below) as further interpreted and certified as compliant by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. The opting-out States would, however, maintain some discretion as to the design and functioning of their early offer and medical review panel systems, so long as the minimum federal guidelines were met.

1. Early offer reforms

Early offers encourage the rapid settlement of cases and provide quick payment of economic compensation in deserving cases and avoid the delay, cost, and emotional distress of litigation.

Within a specified short period after an adverse event or the filing of a claim, a potential or named defendant may make an "early offer" to the claimant. The provider does not have to make an early offer.

The "early offer": The terms of the offer would be set by State statute:

- Net economic damages: The offer would not be for a set dollar amount, but would rather have to include an offer to pay all of the claimant's economic damages (net of collateral sources of recovery) past and future on an accrual basis (e.g., lost wages and health care costs, as more specifically defined in the statute).
- Alternative minimum damages for certain serious injuries: In the case of certain serious injuries that may not cause economic injury, the statute would require the offer of an alternative minimum payment according to a schedule of liability (for injuries such as disfigurement, loss of limbs, or loss of reproductive function). The State system could establish a panel to determine by regulation (with the opportunity for inflation adjusters) what injuries qualify as "serious injuries" and set the schedule for such payments.
- Reasonable attorneys fees to evaluate the offer: The offer would also have to include an offer to pay the claimant's reasonable attorney's fees to evaluate the offer.
- Within the time period for making an early offer, the patient could submit to the provider a statement that it would accept a statutory early offer if made.

In short, the early offer would be an offer to make the claimant whole for the injury. It would not include the payment of non-economic damages such as pain and suffering or loss of consortium or punitive damages (except for the set amount for certain "serious injury" cases).

Acceptance of the early offer: If the provider makes an early offer and the claimant accepts, the case is over. Once the parties reach this agreement, they could independently make a settlement that precisely lays out the terms of financial liability (such as through the purchase of an annuity by the provider). Alternatively, the accepted early offer could be implemented according to the statutory terms.

- Any disputes that might arise regarding whether particular expenses fit within the statutory definition of the early offer (such as whether a trip to Bermuda for recovery is a bona fide medical expense) or the scope of attorneys fees would be subjected to binding arbitration.
- Although that might still leave uncertainty and some litigation risk, the litigation would relate to damages under a statutory standard, rather than the much more complex issues of liability and future damages calculations.
- Potential co-defendants could join the early offer, with disputes among early offerors as to their respective shares being resolved by binding arbitration if necessary.

Rejection of the early offer: If the provider makes an "early offer" according to the terms of the statute and the claimant refuses it, the provider would have a qualified legal defense in any subsequent state or federal suit or medical review board process.

- The qualified legal defense would provide that the defendant could be held liable only upon clear and convincing evidence of negligence and causation (as opposed to the normal preponderance of the evidence standard).
- The defense would provide that non-economic damages could be awarded only upon clear and convincing evidence of wanton or intentional misconduct by the provider (or, in the alternative, non-economic damages could be limited to $250,000).
- The defense would prohibit the admission into evidence of the fact that an early offer had been made.

Recommendation: Propose federal legislation encouraging States to enact early offer systems for providers to make and patients to accept early offers.

Pros:

- Early offers is a new kind of tort reform that does not involve taking away a vested recovery, as caps on damages do; it gives plaintiffs swift, certain recovery, like workers compensation.
- Leaves States with some flexibility and autonomy in running their tort systems.
- An even stronger form of early offer legislation was first proposed in 1984 by Representatives Richard Gephardt and Henson Moore (it would have applied to Medicare, Medicaid, and other federally funded care in states that did not introduce their own reform, and would have given the plaintiff no option to reject the early offer).
- Would reduce litigation expenses and large non-economic damages awards and permit plaintiffs and defendants and thus ultimately the public to share in the savings.
- Would reduce the number of medical malpractice cases in court.

- A form of early offer was implemented several years ago when a school board purchased an insurance policy providing that if a student suffered serious injury in the course of athletic activities, the insurance company would offer to pay net economic loss as it accrued. Due to risk aversion, in almost every case of serious injury, the student accepted the offer.

Cons:

- Possible continued litigation and uncertainty regarding the exact amount of economic damages liability assumed by the provider making an early offer.
- Plaintiffs' lawyers will argue that it takes away the right to recover non-economic damages in the most serious cases (i.e., the ones where the conduct was so clearly bad that the provider is willing to settle immediately).
- Certain advocacy groups may argue discrimination (i.e., less economic damages for low-income patients) and denial of opportunity to participate in the litigation lottery for large, non-economic damage awards.

2. Early offer demonstration project at federal agencies

A watered-down version of the early offer program could be adopted administratively by federal agencies that are health care providers, such as the VA, DOD, and HHS. Because this version would be implemented without legislation, there could be no "hammer" should a plaintiff refuse the early offer. Patients would be informed that the federal government has an early offer program. Within a set period of time, the government and the patient may file an early offer or acceptance, as the case may be, with a designated neutral third party ("the black box"). Only if both an offer and acceptance are put in the black box will the parties learn of each other's offer and the case would be settled immediately.

Recommendation: The Administration should announce commencement of an early offer demonstration at the time early offer legislation is proposed.

Pros:

- Might provide useful information to see if an early offer program would be popular, speed recovery to deserving victims, and reduce damages paid in these cases.
- Can be implemented without legislation.

Cons:

- Could undercut legislative efforts (i.e, "wait and see).
- Would lack any sanction for refusing an early offer.
- Government malpractice claims already have significant tort liability protections under the Federal Tort Claims Act in that punitive damages cannot be awarded, trials are before judges, and the government receives the benefit of any liability caps in the jurisdiction.

3. Medical review board systems

Nineteen states currently have some form of medical review panels that may be used prior to litigation. Most of these systems are not mandatory, have little incentive to be efficient, and have no real sanction for challenging the findings of the board. As a result, these systems can simply lead to a dress rehearsal of a second trial in court, at much added expense.

As with encouraging early offers, new federal legislation would encourage State adoption of medical review panel systems by enacting a preemptive federal malpractice action, with damage caps and protections similar to the Health Act (H.R. 4600, see p. 3 and 9). The State medical review panel systems could always provide more stringent standards than provided for by the guidelines under the federal statute, however the minimum standards for such "opt-out" State medical review panel processes would be as follows:

The State medical review board process: Once a claim is filed, a provider would have the option of channeling the claim through the medical review board process. The provider would then have no right to challenge the findings of the board in court, except on the grounds that the findings were clearly erroneous.

- Board composition:
  - Boards would be composed of at least 2 licensed doctors from the State and one lay chairman.
- Board procedures:
  - All costs of the boards, including compensation of members and administration of the system, would be borne by the provider or by the State government or medical licensing board or professional association, at the option of the State. Board members would have the authority to assess costs on claimants with frivolous claims.
  - Participants would have limited discovery rights (i.e., the medical record only, testimony only of those who were eyewitnesses to the conduct at issue, limits on damages discovery) and would be able to put on only essential evidence (e.g., one expert witness per side, all direct testimony submitted in advance in writing, time limits for hearing) before the board.
  - Boards would be required to render decisions within 90 days of the election by the provider of the board process. If a decision is not reached within that time frame, the patient may bring suit without restriction.
  - Deliberations of the panels would be confidential and decisions of the board on 1) causation and liability and 2) damages would be reduced to writing.
  - Board members would be granted qualified legal immunity for private suits for defamation, antitrust, conspiracy, defamation, etc., arising out of their work on the board.
- Board damages awards: The board may award the following damages (subject to any more stringent liability limits adopted by the relevant state or limits set by the early offer program):

REV_00346158

- Past economic damages and future economic damages would be structured for future payment
  - Following such an award, the parties could agree to settle the ongoing economic liability if they wish (such as through the provider's purchasing an annuity for the plaintiff)
- Unlimited non-economic damages if agreed to by all board members, or $250,000 maximum non-economic damages if agreed to by a majority board members.
  - Damages for future non-economic injury would be paid out on an annual basis, rather than in a lump sum
- Board must vote unanimously for assessment of any punitive damages

Patient challenges to medical review board findings: If the defendant elects to participate in the review board process, the defendant will be entitled to a qualified legal defense in any subsequent lawsuit:

- The defense would provide that the findings of the board will be admissible in evidence and may be reversed only if clearly erroneous
- The defense would limit non-economic damages to $250,000 (unless a more stringent state limit exists)

Recommendation: Propose federal legislation encouraging States to establish the medical review board process. For States that do not "opt-out" and create such a medical review board process, medical malpractice claims would be preempted by federal law through the creation of a federal medical malpractice tort action, subject to various procedural protections similar to the Health Act.

Pros:

- Would reduce the number of medical liability cases in court
- Would reduce litigation defense costs and damages amounts
- Would offer patients a fast process for an essentially binding liability finding against the provider (if provider submits to panel process)
- Recognizes State sovereignty and State tort law by permitting States to "opt-out" of federal medical malpractice tort action by creating State-run medical review panel process and procedural protections.
- Would automatically enact federal statutory reforms in States that did not "opt-out" and enact their own medical liability reforms including early offer and medical review panel systems.

Cons:

- Could be viewed as adding one more layer of litigation, unless there are real disincentives to continuing with a suit in court
- Success of medical review board systems in States has been mixed
- Past Administrations have promoted the use of medical review boards without much success

c. Option 3: Support the Health Act (H.R. 4600)

In April a bipartisan coalition of 34 congressmen led by Representative Greenwood introduced the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low Cost, Timely Health Care Act ("Health Act") (H.R. 4600), which provides:

- Three year statute of limitations on medical liability lawsuits
- Elimination of joint and several liability
- $250,000 cap on non-economic damages (no cap on economic damages)
- Cap on punitive damages of two times non-economic damages
- No punitive damages could be awarded for FDA compliant products
- Limits on plaintiffs attorney contingency fees
- Future damages are paid out over time rather than in one lump sum

Recommendation: Support the Administration's own innovative approach to medical malpractice liability reform, rather than the Health Act.

Pros of supporting the Health Act:

- Liability caps are the only proven method of reducing liability exposure
- Health Act has bipartisan support in the House, and likely could pass in the House

Cons of supporting the Health Act:

- Old idea, not new.
- Would detract from the Administration's own proposals, which would be more focused on health care quality and targeted, swift recovery to the truly injured
- Past experience suggests that federal caps on liability will not pass in the Senate

Unfortunately, this meeting will need to be rescheduled due to the fact that both Tim and Jay will be unable to attend. Please let me know of your availability for both Monday and Tuesday, hopefully we can rescheduled for one of those days.

Thanks,
Allison

I now cannot do a meeting until 2:00 but am free the rest of the day from 2:00 on. It will just be me most likely. Please let me know as soon as you can.

Can you all do 12:15? I have a 11:00 meeting that I must attend and that will go for a while.
-- On NSC, you should have them as of yesterday. Please let me know if not.

-- On redactions, that's a good plan.
-- On the press and counsel, we will be prepared to discuss categories.

Thanks.

Brett: we can do 11:30 am tomorrow -- does that work for you?
A couple of thoughts in advance of the meeting:
We haven't yet received word of NSC documents at Senate Security -- can you check to see when they will send them?
On the redacted documents, it's our hope that we can go through each one of them
tomorrow and have you explain the basis for the redaction.
On the two categories of withheld documents you mentioned (WH Counsel and Press office), we think the same would be helpful -- that is, with respect to each document, having you walk us through why it is appropriate not to produce the document. I'm not sure of the volume of those documents, so if you think it's better to start with a log of them, let me know.
Thanks

Could the seven of us participate in a 15-minute conference call at noon eastern time Saturday to discuss:
(i) who from Texas is definitely coming (and potentially coming)
(ii) itinerary of those who are coming
(iii) schedule of activities while they are here
(iv) what can be done by the Texas supporters who cannot come to DC
(v) good of the order
If so, I will arrange a call-in number and e-mail it back to everyone this afternoon.

PRF GSE TESTIMONY

Mr. Chairman, Representative Kanjorski, and Members of the Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to provide the Administration's views on government sponsored enterprises (GSEs), in general, and H.R. 4071, the Uniform Securities Disclosure Act, in particular.

I want to commend you, Mr. Chairman, and Members of the Committee for your careful consideration GSE issues in recent years. You have recognized that – as is the case today – even in the absence of current issues or concerns with respect to the management of GSEs, we need to pay continuous attention to ensure that, in a constantly changing financial world, these organizations continue to serve our objectives as effectively over the coming years as they have in the past.

We share the concerns of the authors of H.R. 4071 about the importance of providing investors with assurance as to the comparability, consistency and sufficiency of GSE financial disclosures. But the Administration cannot support H.R. 4071 because it focuses too narrowly on only two of the GSEs and because we are not prepared to support repeal of their exemptions from the Securities Act of 1933.

The Administration believes that all GSEs should comply with the corporate disclosure requirements of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, as interpreted and applied by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The Administration believes that this can be accomplished, without the necessity of legislation, under the terms of the '34 Act.

For this reason, the Administration is particularly pleased that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac reached agreement last week with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight on a regulatory framework, consistent with the voluntary registration of their common stock under Section 12(g) of the '34 Act, which will ensure that they are required as a matter of federal law to meet current and future SEC requirements for financial disclosure under the '34 Act. We are requesting that other GSEs make similar arrangements to bring themselves into compliance with the '34 Act, under the authority of the SEC.

The Challenge of Multiple Objectives

This Administration is committed to the objective of affordable housing for all Americans and, as a means to that end, to improving homeownership opportunities for minorities. This Administration is also committed to the objective of a sound and resilient financial system and, as a means to that end, to protecting investors by improving the clarity of disclosures about the risks and the rewards to which their investments are exposed. The question is not whether we are committed to either of these objectives but, rather, how we strive to achieve them both simultaneously.

To do this we look to mobilize the private sector to bring even more capital to bear both in creating housing opportunities and in the financial intermediation that supports and prices the relevant risks and rewards. If we are going to rely on private capital to achieve these objectives then we need to work even harder to improve the quality of the information that shareholders and creditors receive. And if we are going to rely, in part, on the vehicle of government sponsored enterprises, we have no less of a need to inspire confidence in the sufficiency and comparability of the disclosures by GSEs to the investors whose capital we seek to employ.

The GSEs are privately owned but federally-chartered companies, created by Congress to help overcome barriers to the flow of credit into certain segments of the economy – housing, agriculture, and education. They are private companies that are not backed by the full faith and credit of the federal government. Today, the largest GSEs – Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the Federal Home Loan Bank System – are focused on housing. Two other GSEs – Farmer Mac and the Farm Credit System – are focused on agriculture. One GSE –the Student Loan Marketing Association – is focused on education and is now in the process of a congressionally mandated transition to full privatization.

Although GSEs were created to help bring the capital of private investors to bear on these societal goals, only Farmer Mac – the most recently created GSE – is fully subject to the disclosure regime that informs investors and is administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission under our nation's securities laws.

Given the size and importance of each of the GSE's operations in our capital markets and banking system, continued operation outside of the SEC-administered corporate disclosure regime is inconsistent with our objective for investor protection and for a sound and resilient financial system and will only hamper our efforts to bring even more capital to bear on the objective of affordable housing and, more generally, on all the objectives served by GSEs.

In sum, the GSEs – and particularly the three housing GSEs – are no longer modest experiments on the fringes of our financial system. They are large, rapidly growing and important players in our capital markets and in our banking system. As such, they need to be role models for our system of investor protection, not exceptions to it.

All GSEs Should Be In Compliance With the '34 Act

H.R. 4071 – the Uniform Securities Disclosure Act – would repeal Fannie Mae's and Freddie Mac's exemptions from both the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. The '33 Act requires a public company to submit a registration statement and prospectus when bringing new issues to market. The '34 Act requires periodic disclosures about the financial condition and management of companies that issue securities.

We do not see a basis for removing the '34 Act exemptions only for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Instead, we support the application of the '34 Act disclosure requirements to all GSEs.

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are two well run companies that have done much in recent years to provide their investors with high quality financial disclosures. However, as they have recognized and the Administration has agreed, the time has come for their investors to be assured that the level and quality of the corporate disclosures they receive are the same as those that are made by any other company that actively participates in our capital markets.

The only way to achieve this assurance of comparability is to have each GSE comply with the disclosure requirements of the '34 Act as interpreted and applied by the SEC. This ensures that investors will receive the benefit of knowing that GSE disclosures are consistent with those of other companies as determined by the SEC, consistent with the changes in disclosure requirements as they are implemented over time by the SEC, and that GSE disclosures are available on a consistent basis through the SEC's EDGAR system. To accomplish this, the Administration is requesting that each of the GSEs initiate a process with the SEC that will result in their compliance with the '34 Act.

The Administration is pleased that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac reached agreement last Friday with the SEC and the OFHEO to do exactly this – to establish a regulatory framework that will ensure their complete compliance with the requirements of the '34 Act.

Under Section 12(g) of the '34 Act an issuer that is not otherwise subject to the requirements of the Act may register its common stock with the SEC, thereby triggering obligations under Section 13 of the Act to file periodic financial and material event disclosures with the SEC on an ongoing basis. The Section 13 disclosure requirements include filing 10-K annual reports, 10-Q quarterly reports, and 8-K material event reports.

Although the process begins at the initiative of the company, once the initial filing is made, the issuer is henceforth required to make all the appropriate filings, reports and disclosures in the same manner as any other company subject to the '34 Act. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have agreed with the SEC to register their common stock under Section 12(g) of the '34 Act.

In addition, to ensure compliance with all of the provisions of the '34 Act, as part of the regulatory framework agreed last week, OFHEO has agreed to promulgate a rule requiring that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, and their respective officers and directors, file all statements, reports and forms required by Sections 14 and 16 of the '34 Act with the SEC (and concurrently with OFHEO). The effect of this rule will be that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will have to comply with the SEC's requirements that officers and directors report any purchases or sales of common stock of the companies, that the companies file with the SEC proxy statements relating to annual or special shareholder meetings, and that their proxy statements be subject to review and comment by the staff of the SEC.

OFHEO and the SEC, and Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, have worked hard so that this framework can provide a role model for smart, efficient regulation. This arrangement reinforces the principle of functional regulation, ensuring that the SEC administers and enforces our regime for investor protection, that OFHEO maintains its responsibilities for the safety and soundness of the housing enterprises' operations and that there will no duplication or overlap between them.

It should be noted that OFHEO, of course, retains its own authority to require such public disclosures of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as it deems necessary or appropriate under its safety and soundness mandate to regulate the enterprises. This is an area of some considerable interest to me, having worked on several projects to develop enhanced risk disclosures for financial intermediaries prior to my service at the Treasury. I look forward to working with OFHEO to consider whether and how enhanced risk disclosure concepts might be applied to the housing enterprises.

A Study of Initial Offering Disclosures for All Issuers of Mortgage-backed Securities

The Administration is not prepared to support repeal of the GSEs' exemptions from the '33 Act, nor to subject the GSEs to the needless paperwork of a cumbersome registration process. The Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight will not be pursuing a securities registration regime for Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. However, the Administration would like to promote a more level-playing field with respect to initial offering disclosures between GSE and non-GSE mortgage-backed securities issuers and to ensure the adequacy of disclosures to investors in all mortgage-backed securities. The Treasury will conduct a study of how this can best be achieved consistent with the Administration's objectives for both affordable housing and a sound and resilient financial system.

As a general proposition, we would prefer to see the registration process made more efficient and less burdensome for all securities issuers, consistent with ensuring adequate disclosures to protect investors. As a particular matter, a large proportion of our mortgage-backed securities market is comprised of GSE issued securities and has operated effectively outside the requirements of '33 Act. Consequently, application of the '33 Act to the GSEs mortgage-backed market without much greater consideration of the transition costs of moving from one regime to the other could well, in the short run, compromise our objectives for both affordable housing and for a sound and resilient financial system.

In the long-run, however, I think it most likely that our twin objectives will best be served by creating a single, consistent standard for initial offering disclosures for all mortgage-backed securities, to be administered by the SEC. Such a standard would seek to ensure that all mortgage-backed securities investors receive clear, concise and useful information about the risks and rewards to which their investments are exposed.

At present, out of a total mortgage-backed market of $3.9 trillion, there are over $2.3 trillion in GSE issued mortgage-backed securities outstanding that have come into the market completely outside of the requirements of the '33 Act. There are also, at present, $916 billion in mortgage-backed securities issued by non-GSEs that are subject to some but not all of the provisions of the '33 Act, under certain limited exemptions for "mortgage-related securities".

We would like to take a fresh look at the initial offering materials of mortgage-backed securities. To do this, the Treasury will work closely with the SEC and listen carefully to the securities industry, investors, both GSE and non-GSE issuers and others in the regulatory community, such as OFHEO, to gain a fuller understanding of the market structure, the nature of competition, and the risks being priced and transferred. This will serve as background to a fundamental reconsideration of the initial offering disclosures that would best serve all of the participants in mortgage-backed markets and be most consistent with our twin objectives for affordable housing and a sound and resilient financial system.

We will aim to complete our review of initial offering disclosures of both GSE and non-GSE mortgage back issuers, and report back to this Committee, and other interested congressional committees, early in the first session of the next Congress.

Conclusion

Our system of regulating securities markets has served our country well for almost seventy years. That does not mean that we can be content. Our financial markets and financial institutions have evolved and expanded in ways that were unimaginable just a few decades ago. Constant attention is necessary to ensure that our system of investor protection and our system of government sponsored enterprises continues to serve us as well in the future as they have in the past.

Thank you again for providing me with the opportunity to discuss these important issues with the Committee today.

Subject: Re: Travel for Fundraisers

This issue comes down to the photograph of a cabinet member embarking from a corporate plane. We can expect that the minute Mitch embarks, he can anticipate questions about the private corporate aircraft. Charters are less troublesome. The worse, of course, is use of a military craft.

The general principle is that you can't accept an offer of travel by an entity doing business with the agency. In this case, you would want to look at the private craft and the regulatory nexus and see how closely the two align. Also, FAA regulations are quite challenging on re-imbursement. The e-mail traffic suggests that the RNC or state party (not specified) may re-imburse, but you would want to be certain about this and have the file pre-documented. Can the private craft owner lawfully accept re-imbursement? What is the proper value? A coach class ticket or the real value to the corporation? How would it appear if the full costs weren't reimbursed? What about the special access issue?

In seasoned political circles, there is an almost instinctive paranoia about this type of corporate aircraft usage that is perhaps borne of painful experience. I can say with certainty that the "it is an efficient use of my time and preserves my energy" rationale, though probably true, doesn't sell well. If you would like to pursue this, I'd be happy to review the file paperwork to ensure that you've crossed every "t" and dotted every "i." But it would be a whole lot safer to just fly commercial coach and have the RNC reimburse for political.

Nanette,

The OMB Director has agreed to do several fundraisers in Indiana in August for which the campaign would pay. I don't see a problem with the campaign paying for his commercial flights from Washington, but private aircraft travel is always a sensitive and controversial matter. Does WHC have a policy for WH personnel on concerning private aircraft travel for campaign purposes?

Please advise. Thank you, Mac---------- Forwarded by McGavock D. Reed/OMB/EOP on 07/02/2002 05:50 PM ----------

Mac,

Mitch has agreed to do several fundraisers in Indiana in August. This will involve the campaigns paying for Mitch's commercial travel from DC to Indy and for private planes transporting him within the state. Please let me know if this is okay.

Thanks,

We want to thank all of you for the help you have provided PFA over the past year. As you know, trying to get a new organization off the ground can be difficult at times and with your time, assistance, and patience, we think we have made great strides.

We are having a reception/dinner on Wednesday, July 31 with Karl and Ken for PFA Members. We would like you to join us as our guests. We know your schedules are busy, if you would like to come by for cocktails and not stay for dinner, that is fine, or vice versa. The only thing is, since this is a small dinner and there will be assigned seats we will need to know by Monday, July 29 if you will be staying for dinner.

Here are the details:

Wednesday, July 31
6pm cocktails
6:30 dinner

The Oval Room
800 Connecticut Avenue

We hope to see you on the 31st!

The Honorable Patrick Leahy
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary
224 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Leahy:

As past presidents of the State Bar of Texas, we join in this letter to strongly recommend an affirmative vote by the Judiciary Committee and confirmation by the full Senate for Justice Priscilla Owen, nominee to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Although we profess different party affiliations and span the spectrum of views of legal and policy issues, we stand united in affirming that Justice Owen is a truly unique and outstanding candidate for appointment to the Fifth Circuit. Based on her superb integrity, competence and judicial temperament, Justice Owen earned her Well Qualified rating unanimously from the American Bar Association Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary – the highest rating possible. A fair and bipartisan review of Justice Owen's qualifications by the Judiciary Committee certainly would reach the same conclusion.

Justice Owen's stellar academic achievements include graduating cum laude from both Baylor University and Baylor Law School, thereafter earning the highest score on the Texas Bar Exam in November 1977. Her career accomplishments are also remarkable. Prior to her election to the Supreme Court of Texas in 1994, for 17 years she practiced law specializing in commercial litigation in both the federal and state courts. Since January 1995, Justice Owen has delivered exemplary service on the Texas Supreme Court, as reflected by her receiving endorsements from every major newspaper in Texas during her successful re-election bid in 2000.

The status of our profession in Texas has been significantly enhanced by Justice Owen's advocacy of pro bono service and leadership for the membership of the State Bar of Texas. Justice Owen has served on committees regarding legal services to the poor and diligently worked with others to obtain legislation that provides substantial resources for those delivering legal services to the poor.

Justice Owen also has been a long-time advocate for an updated and reformed system of judicial selection in Texas. Seeking to remove any perception of a threat to judicial impartiality, Justice Owen has encouraged the reform debate and suggested positive changes that would enhance and improve our state judicial branch of government.

While the Fifth Circuit has one of the highest per judge caseloads of any circuit in the country, there are presently two vacancies on the Fifth Circuit bench. Both vacancies have been declared "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U. S. Courts. Justice Owen's service on the Fifth Circuit is critically important to the administration of justice.

Given her extraordinary legal skills and record of service in Texas, Justice Owen deserves prompt and favorable consideration by the Judiciary Committee. We thank you and look forward to Justice Owen's swift approval.

Sincerely,

Darrell E. Jordan

On behalf of former Presidents of the State Bar of Texas

James B. Sales	Travis D. Shelton
Hon. Tom B. Ramey, Jr.	M. Colleen McHugh

Jay,

I hope that you are doing well. There's certainly no shortage of important domestic issues for you. Things have been very good and busy here as well, but I would still like to help you fight the good fight. Along those lines, Alex Acosta called from civil rights to ask if I would be interested in being a counsel in that office. (Alex and I know each other from his Kirkland days, and have kept in touch.) I would appreciate guidance on whether that is a good position to take (Alex himself seemed somewhat ambivalent about it), and it seems a bit junior for me at this point. If you have any thoughts, please let me know. I'm at

PRA 6

Thanks,
Daryl

Jay,

I hope that you are doing well. There's certainly no shortage of important domestic issues for you. Things have been very good and busy here as well, but I would still like to help you fight the good fight. Along those lines, Alex Acosta called from civil rights to ask if I would be interested in being a counsel in that office. (Alex and I know each other from his Kirkland days, and have kept in touch.) I would appreciate guidance on whether that is a good position to take (Alex himself seemed somewhat ambivalent about it), and it seems a bit junior for me at this point. If you have any thoughts, please let me know. I'm at

PRA 6

Thanks,
Daryl

I. The Real Priscilla Owen

The colleagues of Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen know her to be a common-sense, restrained jurist who strives to follow the law in all cases, defers to the precedents of the United States Supreme Court, and refuses to interfere with the policy choices of the people's elected representatives in the legislature. Justice Owen, whom the President has nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, neither reflexively bends the law to benefit the interests of ordinary citizens, nor does she instinctively strain to rule in favor of businesses. Instead, a fair-minded assessment of her eight-year career on the Texas Supreme Court reveals her to be a balanced jurist well within the mainstream of Texas, and American, law.

Justice Owen has written or joined a number of opinions that protected the safety and well-being of children. In Hernandez v. Tokai Corp., 2 S.W.3d 251 (Tex. 1999), she rejected a manufacturer's claim that it had no duty to ensure that its cigarette lighters were child resistant since they were only intended for use by adults. In In re D.A.S., 973 S.W.2d 296 (Tex. 1998), she extended the right of indigent juveniles to have the assistance of counsel on appeal. And in Abrams v. Jones, 35 S.W.3d 620 (Tex. 2000), a bitterly contested child custody battle, she applied statutory protections denying access to the child's mental health records, because releasing them would have harmed the child's physical, mental, or emotional health.

malpractice claim was without merit. (The trial court and court of appeals both had reached the same conclusion.)

Nor can the Peeler case be characterized as an attempt by Justice Owen to shield the law firm, which had contributed to her campaign, from the consequences of its actions. The Court went out of its way to emphasize that the convict's claims about her lawyer's misconduct "merit review by the State Bar." Id. at 500. And the Court specifically instructed that, even though there was no basis for a malpractice lawsuit, the lawyer still could be disciplined under state ethics rules.

Efforts to portray Justice Owen's opinion in Enron Corp. v. Spring Independent School District, 922 S.W.2d 931 (Tex. 1996), as a payoff to a campaign contributor are no more credible. In that arcane tax case, the unanimous Texas Supreme Court, Republicans and Democrats alike, applied two on-point rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court to determine the manner in which business property should be valued for tax purposes.

The specific issue in Spring I.S.D. was whether the Texas Legislature violated the state constitution when it enacted a law that allowed business to choose whether their inventories will be valued for tax purposes on January 1 or September 1. The Court concluded that the statute passed constitutional muster, in large measure by applying the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Thomas v. Gay, 169 U.S. 264 (1897), and Shotwell v. Moore, 129 U.S. 590 (1889). As a result, Enron's tax liability was lowered by about $200,000. Again, Spring I.S.D. was decided unanimously, and Justice Owen's opinion for the Court was joined by members of both political parties.

The lawyer for the losing school district recently wrote the Senate Judiciary Committee to dispel any suggestion that the Court was influenced in its rulings by the campaign contributions its members received. Although he was disappointed with the outcome in Spring I.S.D., the lawyer had no reason to doubt the integrity of the process that produced that result.

> I have been disturbed by the suggestions that Justice Priscilla Owen's decision in this case was influenced by the campaign contributions she received from Enron employees. I personally believe that such suggestions are nonsense. Justice Owen authored the opinion of a unanimous court consisting of both Democrats and Republicans. While my clients and I disagreed with the decision, we were not surprised. The decision of the Court was to uphold an act of the Legislature regarding property valuation. It was based upon United States Supreme Court precedent, of which we were fully aware when we argued the case. I firmly believe there is absolutely no reason to question Justice Owen's integrity based upon the decision in this case.

Nor can any discernable pattern be seen in the 13 other Enron-related cases the Texas Supreme Court has heard during Justice Owen's tenure. Six of the 14 cases (including Spring I.S.D.) could be characterized as "favorable" to Enron (although three were simply decisions to deny review, and hence did not involve any analysis of the parties' rights and responsibilities). Five of the 14 cases could be characterized as "unfavorable" to Enron. And the remaining three cases neither benefited nor harmed Enron. (Justice Owen did not participate in one of the three cases because her former law firm was involved in the litigation, and another case was dismissed by agreement of the parties.)

On the same day the unanimous Spring I.S.D. decision was handed down, the Texas Supreme Court decided another tax-valuation case without recorded dissent: H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Jefferson County Appraisal District, 922 S.W.2d 941 (Tex. 1996). As was true of the Spring I.S.D. case, the HEB ruling was the unanimous and bipartisan decision of the Court. And, again like Spring I.S.D., HEB was based on two on-point decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as a ruling by another state's supreme court.

In a closely divided HEB case handed down two years later, H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Bilotto, 985 S.W.2d 22 (Tex. 1998), Justice Owen joined dissents that faithfully applied a Texas procedural rule forbidding trial judges from informing juries about the legal effect of their factual findings. In effect, the dissents sought to preserve the unique role of the jury as the finder of fact, without assigning it the power of a judge to resolve questions of law.

Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 277 prohibits a judge from "advis[ing] the jury of the effect of their answers." But when charging the jury in a lawsuit involving a man who slipped at an HEB grocery store, the trial judge's instructions implied that the plaintiff could not recover damages unless the jury found him 50% or less responsible for the injuries he suffered. In fact, it had been long-settled Texas law that to tell jurors that a certain amount of negligence on the plaintiff's part will bar his recovery, is to impermissibly tell them the legal effect of their answers. See Grasso v. Cannon Ball Motor Freight Lines, 81 S.W.2d 482 (Tex. 1935). The separate opinions thus were based on time-tested principles regarding the allocation of responsibilities among judges and juries.

III. Conclusion

Judged by any standard, Justice Priscilla Owen is a restrained, common-sense jurist with a deep and abiding commitment to deciding cases consistent with the rule of law. According to Al Gonzales, currently the White House Counsel and Justice Owen's former colleague on the Texas Supreme Court, Justice Owen "possesses exceptional integrity, character and intellect" and "extensive experience as a judge and lawyer in private practice." "She is an outstanding jurist and will perform superbly as a federal appeals court judge." DALLAS MORNING NEWS, July 16, 2002.

As Gonzales knows from first-hand experience, Justice Owen disinterestedly follows the law wherever it leads—including to rulings that benefit children, workers, consumers, and the environment—because she takes seriously her obligation to adhere to the precedents of the U.S. Supreme Court, and to give effect to the choices of the people's representatives in the legislature. Moreover, Justice Owen has proven herself to be an unswerving champion of reforming the Texas judicial-selection system to preserve the integrity and independence of the courts. We enthusiastically support her nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and call on the Senate to approve her immediately.

Appendix

City of McAllen v. De La Garza
Landowner's Duty to Warn

Allegation: Justice Owen, writing for the majority, held without oral argument, that the city had no duty to warn drivers of the roadside danger where there was a limestone pit at the side of a road.

Facts: City of McAllen v. De La Garza*, 898 S.W.2d 809 (Tex. 1995)

➢ Justice Owen's opinion, joined by six other Justices, upheld the trial court's initial grant of summary judgment for defendant, which had been overturned by the Court of Appeals.

➢ Justice Owen's opinion applied the First and Second Restatement of Torts, which had been relied upon by the Texas Supreme Court in numerous other settings, to the facts of this case. The Restatement makes clear that the town's duty of care only applied to passengers in the "ordinary course of travel." Travelers who "intentionally deviate[] from the highway for a purpose not reasonably connected with travel upon it" are not subject to a duty of care.

  ✓ The decedent was a passenger in a vehicle driven by an intoxicated man (over the legal limit). The driver either blacked out or fell asleep, veered off the left side of the road onto adjoining land, traveled 100 feet, went through a wire fence (knocking over seven fence poles), traveled another 110 feet, became airborne, and landed in a limestone caliche pit. The decedent passenger was not wearing a safety belt.

➢ The majority opinion did not hold that the defendant city owed no duty to decedent. In fact, it reestablished the principle that the city owed a duty of reasonable care to those traveling on the highway or those who foreseeably deviate from it in the ordinary course of travel.

➢ Justice Owen examined numerous other cases on the subject from other jurisdictions and came to the conclusion that the trial court was correct. The driver, by driving while intoxicated, blacking out or falling asleep and driving through a fence, was "not traveling in the ordinary course of travel." Because of this conclusion, the court never reached the question of whether the placement of the city's caliche pit would violate a duty of care to travelers operating their vehicles in a proper fashion.

➢ Justice Cornyn's dissent claimed that oral argument was necessary in the case. However, as Justice Owen noted in her opinion, the Texas Supreme Court had already established in a prior case the legal duty of reasonable care of landowners to travelers who deviate from an adjoining roadway onto the landowner's property.

Clayton W. Williams, Jr., Inc. v. Olivo

Premises Defects/Workers Injuries

Allegation: In a majority opinion joined by Justice Owen, the Texas Supreme Court reversed the damage award to a man paralyzed in a fall from an oil rig, trumping the jury's factual findings.

Facts: Clayton W. Williams, Jr., Inc. v. Olivo*, 952 S.W.2d 523 (Tex. 1997)

- All nine Justices on the Texas Supreme Court – Democrats and Republicans alike – agreed that the plaintiff had sued under the wrong theory of law. Only one judge would have remanded for a new trial.

- The plaintiff was an employee of an independent contractor and the injury resulted from a premises defect that the independent contractor created, unbeknownst to the general contractor -- the defendant in the case.

  - ✓ The Court reversed the jury award because the plaintiff sued the general contractor for negligence rather than obtaining jury answers about the premises defect as the law requires.

  - ✓ The opinion specifically noted that "there are no jury findings against Williams" on the issue of premises defects.

- In their appeal to the Texas Supreme Court, the plaintiffs did not "complain, even conditionally, that the trial court should have submitted their proposed question" on premises defects elements to the jury, thus waiving that argument for appeal.

- Issues regarding punitive damages were disposed of in the Court of Appeals and were not before the Texas Supreme Court.

- The United States Supreme Court denied certiorari in the case. Bossley v. Dallas County Mental Health, 525 U.S. 1017 (1998).

Concord Oil Co. v. Pennzoil Exploration & Production Co.

Contract Interpretation

Allegation: In an plurality opinion authored by Justice Owen, the Texas Supreme Court reversed a trial court judgment in a contract dispute. Justice Owen found ambiguity in a contract in which there was no ambiguity, and in the process overturned a jury verdict.

Facts: Concord Oil Co. v. Pennzoil Exploration & Production Co.*, 966 S.W.2d 451 (Tex. 1998)

➢ This case concerned a 1937 minerals deed. The granting clause of the deed describes the interest conveyed as a 1/96 interest in minerals, but a subsequent clause stated that the conveyance covered and included 1/12 of all rentals and royalty of every kind and character. Concord Oil claimed through the grantee, and Pennzoil claimed an interest in a portion of the remainder of the estate.

➢ At trial, the parties stipulated to the facts, and the trial court ruled in favor of Pennzoil. The case was tried by the court and not by a jury. No allegations that the decision usurped the power of the jury can be made. Additionally, since the parties stipulated to the operative facts, the trial court's decision was, in essence, a purely legal determination.

- ✓ In Luckel v. White, 819 S.W.2d 459, the Court recognized that the intent of the parties must be determined from what the expressed in the instrument, read as a whole, and that the labels given to clauses in a deed (e.g., "granting") would not be relied upon.
- ✓ Justice Owen concluded that the only proper way to read the contract would be to find that the grantor intended to convey a 1/12 interest in the entire estate.
- ✓ She followed Texas Supreme Court precedent that dealt with the arcane subject of the types of errors made in fractionation in the drafting of old mineral rights deeds. (Garrett v. Dils Co., 199 S.W.2d 904 (Tex. 1957)).

➢ The dissenters in this case claimed that Justice Owen "complicate[d] the deed's plain language to create a false conflict." However, in her opinion, Justice Owen criticizes the dissent's approach, which would have awarded Concord Oil only 1/96th of the mineral estate (and 1/12 of all other rentals and royalties of the estate).

- ✓ Justice Owen notes that there must have been a clear conflict in the deed, for a very simple reason: if the strict language of both clauses of the deed were followed, Concord Oil would end up with more than 1/12 of the mineral estate (1/96 of the mineral estate, plus 1/12 of the royalties of the mineral estate – i.e., 9/96ths of the mineral estate).

Continental Coffee Products v. Cazarez
Employment Law

Allegation: In a majority opinion joined by Justice Owen, the Texas Supreme Court reversed the award of $500,000 in punitive damages to a woman fired in retaliation for the filing of a workman's compensation claim.

Facts: Continental Coffee Products v. Cazarez*, 937 S.W.2d 444 (Tex. 1996)

➢ All Texas Supreme Court Justices signed the unanimous and bipartisan opinion.

➢ This trial was before a judge, not a jury, so no allegations that the decision usurped the power of the jury can be made.

➢ The Supreme Court allowed the trial court's actual damages award of $150,000, but vacated the additional $500,000 punitive award as not permissible under clear Texas law, which requires a showing of actual malice to award punitive damages.

➢ The plaintiff sued her employer and a manager for allegedly firing her in retaliation for filing a workers' compensation claim, alleging such retaliation violated state law.

  ✓ The Court denied the punitive damages claim because of the absence of evidence of ill-will, spite, or specific intent to cause the injury (actual malice).

➢ The Court noted that they "found nothing to indicate that the [Texas] Legislature intended that heightened conduct necessary for damages under the Texas Anti-Retaliation law may be implied from the employer's intentional wrongdoing" without a showing of actual malice.

  ✓ The employer's agent who fired the plaintiff in this case "had never met [the plaintiff] before he fired her . . . , nor did he even review her file before the firing." This evidence was insufficient to show that the employer acted with "ill-will, spite, or specific intent to cause the injury."

Dallas County Mental Health v. Bossley

Sovereign Immunity

Allegation: In a majority opinion joined by Justice Owen, the Texas Supreme Court barred the estate of a suicidal mental patient from collecting against defendant mental hospital. It found no causal link between the mental hospital leaving its doors open, and the patient escaping and killing himself.

Facts: Dallas County Mental Health v. Bossley*, 968 S.W.2d 339 (Tex. 1998)

➢ This case concerned a deceased mental patient at a governmental mental health care facility. The patient had been recovering from a recent suicide attempt. The front door of the facility was normally kept locked by center employees. One day, when an employee was unlocking the door so as to permit herself to leave, the patient approached her, pushed her aside, and ran out of the facility. On foot, he led police on a mile-and-a-half long chase before he jumped in front of a passing truck and was killed.

➢ The trial court granted summary judgment for the government hospital based on sovereign immunity. The Texas legislature has proscribed that government immunity is waived only for "personal injury or death so caused by a condition or use of tangible or real property."

- ✓ Under Texas Supreme Court precedent, property does not cause injury if it does no more than furnish the condition that makes the injury possible.

- ✓ Because the momentarily open door did not "cause" decedent's suicide under controlling Texas Supreme Court precedent, the Court agreed with the trial court that the claim was barred, reversing the Texas Court of Appeals.

➢ The majority went on to note that "[t]he real substance of plaintiff's complaint is that [decedent]'s death was caused, not by the condition or use of the property, but by the failure of [the government hospital]'s staff to restrain him once they learned he was suicidal."

- ✓ Deferring to the decision made by the Texas legislature, the court stated, "The Tort Claims Act does not waive Dallas County['s] immunity from such a complaint." To have permitted decedent's claim to proceed, the Court would have had to ignore and reject the legislature's considered decision to bar such claims.

Dickinson Arms-Reo., L.P. v. Campbell
Landlord Liability for Crimes

Allegation: Justice Owen joined a dissent from the denial of petition for review that would have reviewed (likely to overturn) a court of appeals opinion that held an apartment complex owner liable for a murder on his property.

Facts: Dickinson Arms-Reo., L.P. v. Campbell*, 35 S.W.3d 633 (Tex. 2000).

➢ The dissent sought to apply Supreme Court of Texas precedent to this case to determine whether third-party criminal conduct is foreseeable so that an owner must anticipate and protect others against that criminal conduct.

- ✓ A visitor to an apartment complex was shot and killed in the parking lot while waiting in his truck by another visitor who had left a party at the complex. The owner of the complex was held liable at the trial court.

- ✓ There was a dissent in the court of appeals and two justices dissented from the refusal to grant a hearing en banc.

➢ The dissent from the denial of petition for review noted that there was no evidence of the type of crime that would support a judgment in this case. There had not been a murder in the entire town in years, and no murder at this apartment complex ever.

- ✓ Additionally, although there had been reports of crime at the complex, there had been no reports of "violent crimes" (as defined by the FBI) at the complex in the three-and-a-half years before the incident in question.

➢ The dissent also noted that a grant of review was necessary to resolve conflicts in the Texas lower courts, which were "troubled" over the issue of the extent to which a landowner may be liable for a crime committed on his or her premises.

Enron Corp. v. Spring Independent School District
Valuation of Property for Tax Purposes

Allegation: "Both opinions overturned lower appeals court rulings against Enron and both occurred in 1996, two years after Owen and consultant Karl Rove raised $8,600 from Enron's PAC and executives. In the court's first Enron ruling, Owen wrote a unanimous opinion that prevented Enron from having to pay $224,989 in school taxes."

Facts: Enron Corp. v. Spring Independent School District*, 922 S.W.2d 931 (Tex. 1996)

- The unanimous Texas Supreme Court, Republicans and Democrats alike, applied two arcane rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court to determine the manner in which business property should be valued for tax purposes.
  - ✓ The specific issue was whether the Texas legislature violated the state constitution when it enacted a law that allowed business to choose whether their inventories will be valued for tax purposes on January 1 or September 1.
  - ✓ The Court concluded that the statute passed constitutional muster, in large measure by applying the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Thomas v. Gay, 169 U.S. 264 (1897), and Shotwell v. Moore, 129 U.S. 590 (1889).
- The lawyer for the losing school district recently wrote the Senate Judiciary Committee to dispel any suggestion that the Court was influenced in its rulings by the campaign contributions its members received:
  - ✓ "I have been disturbed by the suggestions that Justice Priscilla Owen's decision in this case was influenced by the campaign contributions she received from Enron Employees. I personally believe that such suggestions are nonsense. Justice Owen authored the opinion of a unanimous court consisting of both Democrats and Republicans. While my clients and I disagreed with the decision, we were not surprised. The decision of the Court was to uphold an act of the Legislature regarding property valuation. It was based upon United States Supreme Court precedent, of which we were fully aware when we argued the case. I firmly believe there is absolutely no reason to question Justice Owen's integrity based upon the decision in this case."
- No discernable pattern can be seen in the 14 Enron-related cases the Texas Supreme Court has heard during Justice Owen's tenure.
- Six of the 14 cases could be characterized as "favorable" to Enron. Five of the 14 cases could be characterized as "unfavorable" to Enron. And the remaining three cases neither benefited nor harmed Enron.

Ford Motor Co. v. Miles
Remand for New Trial in Proper Venue

Allegation: "Owen's activist plurality opinion in Ford Motor Co. v. Miles overturned a $40 million jury verdict, a court of appeals affirmance and years of well-established venue precedents. Although the court did not grant review on the venue issue (which had not been argued or briefed), Owen's opinion nevertheless reversed and remanded on this issue."

Facts: Ford Motor Co. v. Miles*, 967 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. 1998)

- A bipartisan majority of the Texas Supreme Court held that the lawsuit, which arose out of a car accident, was filed in the wrong county, and therefore remanded for transfer and a new trial in a different county.
  - ✓ The Court concluded that the plaintiffs should have filed suit in Dallas County (where the plaintiffs lived, the car was purchased, and the accident occurred), rather than Rusk County (where an unrelated Ford dealership was located).
  - ✓ Indeed, the plaintiffs even "concede[d] that the Rusk County dealership has no connection with the collision or to the Ranger." Id. at 379.
  - ✓ The dissenting Justices agreed that the majority "cite[d] the correct standard of review for venue determinations," and disagreed only as to the proper application of that standard.
- The decision did not eliminate the plaintiffs' ability to sue for the injuries they had suffered; it simply ordered that the case be reassigned to the appropriate venue. See id. at 389 ("remand[ing] this case to the trial court for transfer to Dallas County and a new trial.")
- Both the majority and the dissent agreed that it was appropriate to resolve the venue issue. No member argued that the Court should not consider whether venue was appropriate.
- Justice Owen's majority opinion was joined by Justices from both major political parties.

During her tenure on the Texas Supreme Court, Justice Owen has also actively protected the legal rights of workers and employees. To name only a few examples, in Kroger Co. v. Keng, 23 S.W.3d 347 (Tex. 2000), she prohibited employers from raising "comparative negligence" defenses—under which employees could be held responsible for their own injuries—if they opt out of the workers' compensation insurance system. In Pustejovsky v. Rapid-American Corp., 35 S.W.3d 643 (Tex. 2000), she ruled that a worker who developed asbestos-related cancer could pursue his claims against asbestos suppliers, even though he had received an earlier settlement from another asbestos supplier. And in Lee Lewis Construction, Inc. v. Harrison, 70 S.W.3d 778 (Tex. 2001), she upheld a $12.9 million jury verdict—$5 million of which was punitive damages—in a case where a construction worker died after the general contractor had knowledge of, but refused to stop, the use of an extremely dangerous device.

Justice Owen likewise has helped ensure that consumers get a fair shake before the Texas Supreme Court. In Chilkewitz v. Hyson, 22 S.W.3d 825 (Tex. 1999), for instance, Justice Owen held that a defendant doctor could not escape a valid lawsuit simply because the plaintiff sued him personally, rather than his physician's association. And in Mid-Century Insurance Co. v. Lindsey, 997 S.W.2d 153 (Tex. 1999), she required an insurance company to pay $50,000 in uninsured motorist coverage, because she concluded that the policy's coverage of "accidents" included a boy's inadvertent act.

Finally, Justice Owen has faithfully enforced Texas statutes and ordinances designed to protect the environment. In Barshop v. Medina County Underground Water Conservation District, 925 S.W.2d 618 (Tex. 1996), Justice Owen upheld the constitutionality of the Edwards Aquifer Act, which regulates withdrawals of water from wells drilled in the aquifer and limits the drilling of future wells. In doing so, she rejected landowners' claims that the Act deprived them of their property rights, and concluded that the state has the authority to regulate and conserve groundwater usage. Similarly, in Quick v. City of Austin, 7 S.W.3d 109 (Tex. 1999), she rejected landowners' challenges to a city ordinance that was designed to protect water quality and control pollution.

These rulings, and many others like them, do not suggest that Justice Owen sets out in any given case to rule in favor of children, workers, consumers, or the environment. But they give the lie to any claim that she instinctively favors any one type of litigant. Instead, Justice Owen decides cases according to the governing law—by applying U.S. Supreme Court precedents, or by deferring to the wishes of the legislature—and follows those authorities wherever they might lead her.

The people of Texas have benefited from more than Justice Owen's legal rulings. In addition, Justice Owen has gone to great lengths to improve the quality of legal services provided to the poor. In Griffin Industries v. Honorable Thirteenth Court of Appeals, 934 S.W.2d 349 (Tex. 1996), Justice Owen stressed that "[o]ur state Constitution and our rules of procedure recognize that our courts must be open to all with legitimate disputes, not just those who can afford to pay the fees to get in." Id. at 353. These are not mere words to Justice Owen; she has put them into practice. Justice Owen has served on the Texas Supreme Court's

FM Properties Operating Co. v. City of Austin

Deferring to Legislative Policy Choices

Allegation: "In a test of the constitutionality of a state law tailored to exempt a specific land developer from the City of Austin's water quality rules, Owen wrote a forceful dissent that decried the majority for finding this special-interest statute unconstitutional (FM Properties Operating Co. v. City of Austin). The dissenting Owen, who received $2,500 in campaign contributions from the same developer and $45,000 from the developer's attorneys, criticized the majority for curtailing the developer's private property rights."

Facts: FM Properties Operating Co. v. City of Austin*, 22 S.W.3d 868 (Tex. 2000)

- Justice Owen dissented from the majority's decision that a Texas law, which allowed landowners to designate their property as "water quality protection zones," was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.
  - ✓ The Justices in the majority themselves conceded that "[d]efining what legislative power is or when it has been delegated is no easy task."
- Justice Owen argued that legislatures should be allowed the flexibility to develop creative, innovative solutions to pressing social problems, and that courts should not interfere with such experimentation.
  - ✓ "How the Legislature chooses to regulate is left to the Legislature, not this Court."
  - ✓ The majority's decision to invalidate the law "usurps authority that is reserved to another branch of government—the Legislature."
- Justice Owen rejected the majority's "nondelegation doctrine"—a theory that, if adopted by the federal courts, would imperil Congress's ability to delegate lawmaking authority to all manner of administrative agencies.
- Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, a Democrat, had intervened in the proceedings to defend the law's constitutionality.

Grain Dealers Mutual Insurance Co. v. McKee

Insurer's Contractual Right to Deny a Claim

Allegation: Refusing to let a jury decide the issue, Justice Owen reversed both the trial court and the appellate court deciding that the insurer, a contributor to Justice Owen's campaign, was entitled to summary judgment on the issue of whether Mr. McKee's daughter, who was injured in an automobile accident, was covered by an insurance policy issued to a company owned by Mr. McKee.

Facts: Grain Dealers Mutual Insurance Co. v. McKee*, 943 S.W.2d 455 (Tex. 1997)

➢ Mr. McKee wanted to recover for injuries to his daughter the underinsured/uninsured motorists coverage and the personal injury protection coverage from an insurance policy issued to his corporation. Mr. McKee's daughter was injured in a one-car accident, in which her step sister was driving a car not insured by Mr. McKee. The car was owned by her step-sister's husband, not by Mr. McKee's business.

- ✓ In addition to suing his company's insurer, Mr. McKee also sued his personal automobile insurance carrier and the step sister of his injured daughter, both of whom settled and provided recovery for the eleven year old daughter of Mr. McKee.

➢ The court held that the insurance policy was unambiguous and that the daughter was not a designated person or a family member under the policy.

- ✓ As the sole shareholder of Future Investments, Mr. McKee was responsible for the insurance policy that the company obtained, which insured only the company, any family members of the company (of which a corporate entity has none), any designated persons designated by the insured company, and their family members.

- ✓ Mr. McKee failed to designate himself or any family members; thus, the insurance coverage applied only to the corporate entity and any property owned by it.

- ✓ The court found that the child would have been covered as passenger in a covered auto or as family member of a designated person, if her father, the president of the company, had been designated on the policy.

➢ Most, if not all, jurisdictions leave interpretation of an insurance contract to the courts and not to juries, unless the contract is ambiguous.

- ✓ Although the trial court and appellate court's concluded that the contract's provision for coverage for "family members" was ambiguous, the Texas Supreme Court, with only one dissenting member, disagreed based on well established law that a corporation is a separate and distinct entity from its shareholders and that the contract used in this case was a form contract and not tailored to the relationship between Grain Dealers and Future Investments.

➢ Addressing an issue of insurance contract interpretation similar to the one in this case, over 10 other jurisdictions, a majority of courts to decide the issue, agreed with the Texas Supreme Court's conclusion.

- ✓ The courts agreeing with the Texas Supreme Court included state and federal courts and courts located across the country, including Pennsylvania, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, and Washington.

- ✓ Only courts in Montana, Connecticut, Colorado, Minnesota and Ohio could be said to have disagreed with the Texas Supreme Court's rationale.

➢ Justice Owen did not author this opinion, but merely joined all but one of her colleagues in applying settled Texas law to the interpretation of a contract.

GTE Southwest, Inc. v. Bruce, et al.
Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Allegation: Justice Owen refused to qualify profanity, bullying, and harassing behavior as rising to the level of extreme and outrageous conduct necessary to support a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Facts: GTE Southwest, Inc. v. Bruce, et al.*, 998 S.W.2d 605 (Tex. 1999)

- In a unanimous result, with which Justice Owen concurred, the Texas Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeals decision to uphold a jury verdict against GTE in favor of three employees on their claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress, who suffered extreme abuse at the hands of their supervisor, including physical threats and sexual harassment.

- Voting in favor of these employees, Justice Owen disagreed with GTE's contention that the employees' injuries were compensable through workers' compensation, which would have limited their recovery to statutory levels and would have barred this suit.

- Justice Owen also disagreed with other claims of GTE, including its claim that the statute of limitations barred the plaintiff employees' claim.

- In a brief concurrence, Justice Owen wrote only to explain that much of the supervisor's actions in this case, such as the mere use of profanity, yelling, and making threats of termination were not, by themselves or categorically, extreme enough to support a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress.

- In this case, Justice Owen voted against the appeal of GTE, from whose "Good Government Club" Justice Owen had received $1,000, concluding that the abuse suffered by these employees was enough to support the claim.

Gunn Infiniti, Inc. v. O'Byrne
Deceptive Trade Practices Act

Allegation: Justice Owen, in an activist opinion, determined that insufficient evidence existed for the jury's verdict in favor of the plaintiff under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act.

Facts: Gunn Infiniti, Inc. v. O'Byrne*, 996 S.W. 2d 854 (Tex. 1999)

➢ The plaintiff, a resident of Louisiana, purchased an Infiniti automobile from a Texas dealership. The dealership assured the plaintiff that the car had never been wrecked, an assertion that turned to be false. When the plaintiff inquired after the vehicle's purchase, the dealership admitted the car had been wrecked and offered a number of options to the plaintiff, including at one point a full refund. The plaintiff refused the offers, choosing to sue under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, which permitted additional damages.

➢ A jury found in favor of the plaintiff and awarded him $10,500 to make him whole with respect to the car purchase, plus $11,000 for mental anguish and $50,000 in additional damages under the TDTPA.

➢ Justice Owen, writing for all but one member of the court, reversed only with respect to the mental anguish damages, which in turn reduced by a fraction the additional damages, which under the Act must be tied to total recovery awarded to the plaintiff. Thus, once mental anguish damages are eliminated the appeals court was directed to reassess these additional damages.

➢ Every day appellate courts determine the legal sufficiency of the evidence heard by juries. Evidence of the plaintiff's mental anguish came largely from his own testimony, which reflected the true reason for his mental anguish was unrelated to any misrepresentation of the dealership, but was instead due to the reaction of the plaintiff's friends to his having purchased an Infiniti.

  ✓ He further testified that this activity of his friends took the form of their telling him, even before he purchased the car, that he should not buy an Infiniti.

  ✓ Since his mental anguish was unconnected to the defendant's conduct, the damages awarded on this claim could not under the law be permitted to stand.

Haynes & Boone v. Bowser Bouldin

Assessing Damages for Legal Malpractice

Allegation: Justice Owen overturned a jury award of damages stemming from a legal malpractice suit against a law firm from which she received over $16,000 in contributions.

Facts: Haynes & Boone v. Bowser Bouldin*, 896 S.W.2d 179 (Tex. 1995)

- Justice Owen joined a unanimous decision in which the court upheld the finding of legal malpractice but reversed a judgment of $4.4 million due to the lack of evidence to support the finding.

- The damage award to Bouldin (which was overturned by the Court) was based on the loss of investment from the foreclosure on a mall, not from the loss of the lease with a particular store -- Blockbuster. It was therefore necessary for Bouldin to prove not only that Haynes & Boone's representation was deficient, but that the loss of the litigation against Blockbuster was the reason that the entire mall project was subsequently foreclosed upon.

- The unanimous court in this case, applying Texas law on producing cause, logically concluded that the loss of the suit with Blockbuster, which Haynes & Boone was responsible for, was not the same thing as the loss of Blockbuster as a tenant. Indeed, it was undisputed that Blockbuster intended to quit the premises before the Haynes & Boone associate who performed deficiently was ever even retained.

- Unable to prove that the loss of the litigation against Blockbuster led to the foreclosure, the damages awarded to Bouldin legally could not be sustained.

H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Bilotto Jury Charges

Allegation: "In HEB Grocery Co. v. Vinnie Bilotto, an appeals court and a Supreme Court majority both affirmed a trial court judgment that granted $91,000 in actual damages to a customer who was injured in a grocery store fall. Owen joined two dissents in the case that argued that damages questions to the jury should not have been predicated on the degree of negligence attributed to the defendant."

Facts: H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Bilotto*, 985 S.W.2d 22 (Tex. 1998)

- Justice Owen joined dissents that faithfully applied a Texas procedural rule forbidding trial judges from informing juries about the legal effect of their factual findings.
  - ✓ Texas Rule of Civil Procedure 277 prohibits a judge from "advis[ing] the jury of the effect of their answers."
  - ✓ When charging the jury in a lawsuit involving a man who slipped at a grocery store, the trial judge's instructions implied that the plaintiff could not recover damages unless the jury found him 50% or less responsible for the injuries he suffered.
  - ✓ Under long-settled Texas law, telling jurors that a certain amount of negligence on the plaintiff's part will bar his recovery, impermissibly advises them about the legal effect of their answers. See Grasso v. Cannon Ball Motor Freight Lines, 81 S.W.2d 482 (Tex. 1935).
- In effect, the dissent sought to preserve the unique role of the jury as the finder of fact, without assigning it the power of a judge to resolve questions of law.

H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Jefferson County Appraisal District

Valuation of Property for Tax Purposes

Allegation: "HEB Grocery Co. v. Jefferson County allowed a grocery store chain to pay taxes on just one of six stores that it operated in Jefferson County. This decision benefited HEB Chair Charles Butt, who has hosted fundraisers for justices in his home and who was the justices' second-largest individual donor at the time. The Butt family had given the justices $53,098, including $2,000 to Owen."

Facts: H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Jefferson County Appraisal District*, 922 S.W.2d 941 (Tex. 1996)

- In HEB, the Court simply applied its ruling in Enron Spring Independent School, which was handed down on the same day. As was true in Spring Independent School case, the HEB ruling was the unanimous and bipartisan decision of the Court.

- The Texas Supreme Court applied two arcane rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court to determine the manner in which business property should be valued for tax purposes.

  - ✓ The specific issue was whether the Texas legislature violated the state constitution when it enacted a law that allowed business to choose whether their inventories will be valued for tax purposes on January 1 or September 1.

  - ✓ The Court concluded that the statute passed constitutional muster, in large measure by applying the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Thomas v. Gay, 169 U.S. 264 (1897), and Shotwell v. Moore, 129 U.S. 590 (1889).

Hernandez v. Tokai Corp.
Child Safety and Product Liability

Allegation: Owen joined a majority opinion that severely curtails the responsibility of manufacturers to incorporate child safety into the design of products intended for adult use.

Facts: Hernandez v. Tokai Corp.*, 2 S.W.3d 251 (Tex. 1999)

➢ A federal trial court had granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment thereby not allowing the matter to go to a jury.

➢ However, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, seeking clarification of Texas law on this matter, certified the question to the Supreme Court of Texas to see whether a defective-design products liability claim could be maintained.

➢ Contrary to the allegation, a unanimous court rejected the product manufacturer's argument that it could not be held liable. Instead, what the Supreme Court of Texas found was that such a claim could indeed be maintained and applying both statutory and common law, the proper analysis in deciding upon such issues was to engage in a risk-utility analysis.

  ✓ As stated by the Court, this analysis includes considerations of the intended users of the product, safer alternative designs, whether the design defect makes the product unreasonably dangerous, and whether the defect is the producing cause of the injury.

  ✓ The court rejected the manufacturer's argument that it had no duty to make its product child resistant if it was intended only for adult use.

In Re City of Georgetown
Confidential Government Reports

Allegation: "In this opinion, Owen rewrote the Texas Public Information Act to block the media from seeing an engineering report that a city commissioned in response to a lawsuit over sewage discharges. To reach this result, Owen had to overrule the trial court and the state Attorney General and plowed under statutory language that said that the courts could not bar from disclosure any information that is not expressly made confidential by the statute."

Facts: In re City of Georgetown*, 53 S.W.3d 328 (Tex. 2001)

- Justice Owen's six-member majority concluded that Texas law did not require a city to disclose a report that was covered by the attorney-client and work-product privileges. In doing so, Justice Owen deferred to and applied the precedents of the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as Texas's rules of evidence and civil procedure.

- Texas law specifically provides that cities need not disclose to the public "information relating to litigation of a civil or criminal nature to which the state or a political subdivision is or may be a party." TEX. GOV'T CODE § 552.103(a).

  - ✓ Georgetown prepared the report in connection with two then-pending lawsuits over discharges at a water treatment plant, and expected to be named in several other suits.

- Texas law also allows cities to keep private any information that is "expressly confidential under other law." Id. § 552.022(a).

  - ✓ The Texas rules of evidence and civil procedure both specifically deem certain work product and certain attorney-client communications—including the report at issue in the case—to be confidential.

  - ✓ Justice Owen interpreted the phrase "expressly confidential under other law" in light of Norfolk & Western Railway v. American Train Dispatchers Association, 499 U.S. 117 (1991).

  - ✓ Justice Owen also relied on the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947), where the Court recognized the confidentiality of work product prepared in anticipation of litigation.

Mediation Task Force, and on statewide committees that focus on providing pro bono legal services to the less fortunate. She successfully urged the Texas Legislature to pass a law that has resulted in millions of dollars per year in additional funds for those who provider legal services to the poor. In recognition of her dedicated service, a past president of Legal Aid of Central Texas wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee that "Justice Owen has an understanding of and a commitment to the availability of legal services to those who are disadvantaged and unable to pay for such legal services. It is that type of insight and empathy that Justice Owen will bring to the Fifth Circuit."

Justice Owen also has distinguished herself as one of the strongest voices in Texas calling for the overhaul of the state's judicial selection system. As is true in many states, the people of Texas, through their constitution, have chosen to select their judges in partisan, contested elections. See TEX. CONST. art. V, § 2(c). For that reason, Texas law specifically provides that judicial candidates may solicit and accept campaign contributions. See TEX. CODE OF JUDICIAL CONDUCT, Canon 4D(1).

Since first taking the bench in 1994, Justice Owen unwaveringly has urged that the Texas judicial selection system be reformed, to minimize any possible appearances of impropriety that could arise when judges preside over cases involving contributors to their campaigns. In 1994, when Texas law imposed no limits on contributions to judicial candidates, Justice Owen voluntarily signed a judicial reform pledge to limit the contributions she would accept. She has publicly supported a number of proposed amendments to the Texas constitution, one of which would require judges to run in uncontested, nonpartisan, retention elections. And after the 2000 election, in which she did not draw a major-party opponent, Justice Owen went so far as to return a significant portion of her campaign contributions.

II. The TPJ Caricature

Given Justice Owen's sterling pro-reform credentials, one would expect to count among her supporters Texans for Public Justice, or "TPJ," a group that characterizes itself as "promot[ing] campaign finance and judicial-selection reforms." Regrettably, TPJ's recent report on Justice Owen is riddled with half truths and outright distortions. Although the organization is innocuously named, TPJ is in fact an advocacy group for trial lawyers. TPJ habitually denounces Texas judges who accept campaign contributions from businesses, but steadfastly refuses to criticize judges whose campaigns are funded by trial lawyers. Earlier in 2002, Elizabeth Ray ran for a seat on the Texas Supreme Court, and received 83% of her campaign contributions from trial lawyers. According to the Austin American-Statesman, "Ray's top donors have been four plaintiffs' firms, which gave her a total of $100,000." AUSTIN AM.-STATESMAN, Mar. 27, 2002, at B1. Yet TPJ's director refused to criticize her as beholden to trial lawyers, instead arguing that: "It shows she's not locked into an anti-consumer, pro-tort reform agenda." Id.

TPJ's officers have admitted publicly that their principal sources of funding are trial lawyers and liberal foundations. According to the Houston Chronicle, TPJ's director "has said that $273,000 of his organization's operating budget of $326,200 was raised mostly from liberal

In Re Jane Doe 2
Parental Notification Act

Allegation: "The majority opinion in In re Jane Doe 2 instructed trial courts on how to judge if notification would be in a minor's best interest. Although the statute mentioned no such criteria, Owen's concurring opinion criticized the majority for not requiring judges to find that the abortion itself would be in the applicant's best interest."

Facts: In re Jane Doe 2*, 19 S.W.3d 278 (Tex. 2000)

- Justice Owen concluded that an exception to Texas's Parental Notification Act, which permits an underage girl to have an abortion without telling a parent when doing so is in her "best interest," required the court to consider both whether abortion is in her best interest, and whether notification is not.

- Justice Owen reached this conclusion by applying the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lambert v. Wicklund, 520 U.S. 292 (1997) (per curiam), which interpreted a similar Montana statute.

  - ✓ In Lambert, the Court concluded that "a judicial bypass procedure requiring a minor to show that parental notification is not in her best interests is equivalent to a judicial bypass procedure requiring a minor to show that abortion without notification is in her best interest."

- The fact that the Lambert Court required the girl to prove both that abortion is in her best interest, and that notification is not, is indicated by Justice Stevens's separate opinion.

  - ✓ Concurring in the judgment, Justice Stevens faulted the majority for concluding that "a young woman must demonstrate both that abortion is in her best interest and that notification is not."

Johnson & Johnson Medical v. Sanchez
Wrongful Termination of an Injured Worker

Allegation: Justice Owen's dissent argued that a wrongful termination suit of an injured worker was unequivocally barred by the statute of limitations, an issue that the majority deemed ambiguous, demonstrating her reluctance to recognize employees' rights.

➢ The fact that the decision regarding the running of the statute limitations was a 5 to 4 decision demonstrates that this was a very close question and that Justice Owen, joined by three other justices, was not deciding in an arbitrary manner.

➢ Under Texas law, a suit for wrongful termination must be commenced within two years after such cause of action accrues. A cause of action accrues when the employee receives unequivocal notice of his or her termination or when a reasonable person should have known of his or her termination.

➢ Sanchez was put on "indefinite medical layoff" on November 20, 1987, but was informed that she had "recall rights," meaning that if a position became available she would be rehired. The slim five justice majority found that because she had these recall rights, it could not definitively determine at what point she should have known that she had been terminated, thus triggering accrual of the cause of action.

➢ In rendering her dissent, Justice Owen pointed to a number of facts contained in the record which indicated that not only would a reasonable person have known she had been terminated more than two years before filing the suit, but that Sanchez's own actions showed that she had actual knowledge that she was no longer employed by the defendant. These facts included:

- ✓ In the letter advising her that she had been placed on "indefinite medical lay-off," she was also notified that her medical benefits would terminate at the end of the month and they were indeed terminated. She therefore knew more than three years before her suit that she no longer had a job or any source of income from Johnson & Johnson.

- ✓ In March of 1988, three years before the suit was initiated, Sanchez was again told by Johnson & Johnson that they did not have a position for her. She therefore filed for and received unemployment benefits.

- ✓ When she received permission from her doctor to begin work again, Sanchez filed an application with Johnson & Johnson and when asked on the form if she had ever worked there before, she indicated yes and wrote "1981-1987," evincing the fact that she knew that she was no longer employed there after 1987.

Kerrville State Hosp. v. Clark
Sovereign Immunity

Allegation: Justice Owen joined an anti-consumer and anti-jury majority opinion which held that a state mental hospital was immune from a wrongful death claim brought by the family of a woman who was murdered by a mental patient.

Facts: Kerrville State Hosp. v. Clark*, 923 S.W.2d 582 (Tex. 1996)

- Plaintiffs in this case alleged that the state mental hospital was liable for the death of their daughter, Rebecca, because it had released her husband after administering short-term drugs rather than longer-term drugs. Evidence was presented at trial that longer-term drugs – lasting more than a month – were available and might have prevented the murder.

- In a 5-4 decision authored by Democrat Justice Raul Gonzalez, the court held that the state mental hospital was entitled to sovereign immunity unless it could be construed to have waived its immunity under the Texas Tort Claims Act. This Act waives immunity for "death . . . caused by a condition or use of tangible personal or real property."

- The court concluded that a failure to prescribe a certain form of drug did not fall within the definition of "use" under the Act, and that the state mental hospital had therefore not waived immunity.

- The court also explains that to hold otherwise would extend the Tort Claims Act's waiver provision to almost every case in which the state mental hospital had dispensed a drug, because a patient could always claim that a different treatment regime would have been preferable.

- The dissent argues that the patient in question had a history of not taking his medicine, and that this history of non-use and misuse accounted to "use of tangible property."

Lozano v. Lozano
Equal Inference Rule

Allegation: Justice Owen joined in a dissent from a per curiam opinion reinterpreting the "equal inference rule" in a case concerning liability for interfering with child custody rights. Justice Owen's view would severely curtail the fact-finding function of juries.

Facts: Lozano v. Lozano*, 52 S.W.3rd 141 (Tex. 2001)

- The "equal inference rule," a longstanding principle in Texas jurisprudence, provides that a jury "may not reasonably infer an ultimate fact from meager circumstantial evidence which could give rise to any number of inferences, none more probable than another."

- The opinion in the case would be confusing to even the most experienced lawyer. Of the seven Justices participating in this case, five concurred in Chief Justice Phillips' opinion – which is the opinion that sets forth the novel interpretation of the equal inference rule.

  - ✓ Chief Justice Phillips' opinion asserts that, under the equal inference rule, "if circumstantial evidence will support more than one reasonable inference, it is for the jury to decide which is more reasonable."

- The four jurists who joined in Chief Justice Phillips' opinion concurred in a second opinion, not relying on the equal inference rule, that set forth a different interpretation of the use of circumstantial evidence.

- Justice Owen joined a dissenting opinion that criticized Justice Phillips' interpretation of the equal inference rule. The dissent asserts that the equal inference rule bars a jury from drawing conclusions based on circumstantial evidence from which more than one reasonable inference can be drawn.

  - ✓ The dissenting opinion joined by Justice Owen agrees with a majority of the court that the finder of fact must consider the totality of the evidence and that additional evidence may make one of multiple possible inferences more probable.

  - ✓ Critics therefore misconstrue this opinion as "anti-jury"– the dissent explicitly states that juries should weigh the evidence where a reasonable conclusion can be drawn from it.

- The Texas Supreme Court has issued at least 10 other opinions in the past twenty-five years construing the equal inference rule and supporting the interpretation of the rule joined by Justice Owen.

Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals v. Havner

Reliability of Scientific Experts

Allegation: "The Havner family alleged that the morning sickness drug Bendectin caused severe birth defects in their daughter, Kelly. Owen's opinion used extremely strict limits on the admissibility of expert testimony to overturn a jury award (after trial court modification) of $3.75 million in actual damages and $15 million in punitive damages."

Facts: Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals v. Havner*, 953 S.W.2d 706 (Tex. 1997)

- The Texas Supreme Court—including both Republicans and Democrats—unanimously concluded that a girl born with birth defects had not proven that a drug manufactured by the defendant was responsible for her injuries. The opinion, authored by Justice Owen, followed the precedents of the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as the lower federal courts.

- There was no reliable evidence that Bendectin—a drug taken by pregnant women to combat morning sickness—was responsible for birth defects.

  - ✓ The federal courts have heard identical lawsuits over the years, and every single one ultimately has failed: "The federal courts have dealt extensively with Bendectin litigation. To date, no plaintiff has ultimately prevailed in federal court. The evidence in those cases has been similar to that offered by the Havners." Id. at 709

  - ✓ Justice Owen cited 19 federal cases in which Merrell Dow was exonerated.

- Justice Owen's opinion applied the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579 (1993). That decision instructs courts to disregard evidence, offered by self-described scientific experts, that is not based on "valid science."

Mid-American Indemnity Ins. Co. v. King
Minimum Capital Requirements for Insurers

Allegation: Justice Owen dissented from a majority opinion interpreting an insurance statute setting forth minimum capital requirements for certain types of insurers. Justice Owen's "activist" and "anti-consumer" dissent would have allowed then-existing insurance policies to grandfather out of the new requirements.

Facts: Mid-American Indemnity Ins. Co. v. King*, 22 S.W.3d 321 (Tex. 1995)

➢ The Texas Insurance Code requires unlicensed and unauthorized insurers – "surplus insurers" – to post a bond in an amount determined by the court before filing a pleading in a lawsuit.

  ✓ According to the unambiguous language of the statute, the requirement "does not apply to . . . insurers which were deemed eligible surplus line insurers . . . at the date applicable coverage was issued."

➢ The majority construed this statute to require that insurers meet the minimum capital requirements to be considered an "eligible surplus line insurer" both at the time the applicable coverage was issued and at the time the lawsuit was filed.

  ✓ The majority based its interpretation on its view that the Texas legislature had intended to make a prerequisite for appearance in court that an insurer have the means to satisfy any potential judgment.

➢ Justice Owen, joined by four other justices, including Democrat Justice Raul Gonzalez, argued that the plain language of the statute was unambiguous and that it required the insurer to be eligible only at the time the original policy was issued. Because the language of the statute was unambiguous, making it unnecessary to look to the legislature's intent. Her analysis of the statute at issue in this case is entirely consistent with the well-settled principles of statutory construction.

Operation Rescue v. Planned Parenthood
Buffer Zones Between Clinics and Protestors

Allegation: Justice Owen supported the elimination and narrowing of buffer zones around reproductive health care clinics in Houston.

Facts: Operation Rescue v. Planned Parenthood*, 975 S.W.2d 546 (Tex. 1998)

- Justice Owen joined the majority opinion in the Texas case upholding virtually all of the buffer zones established in the trial court's permanent injunction, with some limited modifications.

- Leading abortion rights supporters hailed the Court's decision at the time it was handed down. "Planned Parenthood officials cheered the court's decision to leave the monetary damages intact. 'This is a complete and total victory,' said Judy Reiner, senior vice president for Planned Parenthood of Houston and Southeast Texas." (Austin American-Statesman, p. B2, July 4, 1998).

- "Neal Manne, attorney for Planned Parenthood of Houston and Southeast Texas, said he believes this is the first time the Texas Supreme Court has upheld punitive damages against anti-abortion protesters. 'It wasn't a home run. It was a grand slam,' he said. Manne said the order correctly balanced the right to peaceful protest against the legitimate business interests of the clinics. Planned Parenthood operates one of the clinics targeted by the protesters." (Houston Chronicle, p. A1, July 4, 1998).

- A headline in a Planned Parenthood Newsletter released at the time the buffer zone holding was released stated that: "Anti-abortion protestors lose in Texas Supreme Court: $1.2 million in damages upheld; protestor restrictions remain."

  - ✓ The newsletter specifically stated that, "minor changes were made to injunction limits on protestors activities. Buffer zones were lifted around five clinics but left in place around Planned Parenthood and three other clinics and the homes of four physicians." They added, "[r]estrictions on protestors' aggressive behavior remain in effect."

- The Court's decision upheld most of the restrictions set out in the permanent injunction ordered by the trial court, but in some of the instances directed modification of the injunction to permit a limited number of peaceful demonstrators to approach patients to discuss the issue as long as upon request by the patient such conversations were ended by the demonstrators.

Peeler v. Hughes & Luce
Malpractice Lawsuits by Criminal Convicts

Allegation: "After pleading guilty to federal tax fraud, a securities worker tried to sue Hughes & Luce (which this plaintiff had retained for $250,000) for failing to tell her that a prosecutor had offered her immunity in exchange for her testimony in a wider probe. After taking $14,236 from Hughes & Luce in her 1994 race, Owen joined the court's plurality opinion that ruled that convicted criminals cannot bring malpractice lawsuits. Three dissenting justices pointed out that the plaintiff arguably never would have been indicted or convicted if her attorney had told her about the immunity offer."

Facts: Peeler v. Hughes & Luce*, 909 S.W.2d 494 (Tex. 1995)

- The Court held that criminal convicts cannot sue their defense attorneys for malpractice if they are guilty of the offenses for which they were convicted. This decision is consistent with the vast majority of states, which overwhelmingly have concluded that guilty clients may not bring malpractice claims.
  - ✓ According to the Court's ruling public policy weighs against allowing those who are guilty to sue their lawyers for malpractice: "convicts may not shift the consequences of their crime to a third party." Id. at 498.
  - ✓ Only two states allowed guilty clients to bring malpractice claims.
- The dissent agreed that ordinarily, only the innocent should be able to sue their lawyers for malpractice: "In most cases the law should not permit a person convicted of a crime to recover for legal malpractice."
- The Peeler case cannot be characterized as an attempt by Justice Owen to shield the law firm, which had contributed to her campaign, from the consequences of its actions.
  - ✓ The Court went out of its way to emphasize that the convict's claims about her lawyer's misconduct "merit review by the State Bar." Id. at 500.
  - ✓ The Court specifically instructed that, even though there was no basis for a malpractice lawsuit, the lawyer still could be disciplined under state ethics rules.
- The trial court and court of appeals both reached the same conclusion as the Texas Supreme Court.

Praesel v. Johnson
Physician's Duties

Allegation: Justice Owen wrote the majority opinion in this case, holding that three doctors who had treated a man with epilepsy did not have a duty to third parties to keep the epileptic man from driving.

Facts: Praesel v. Johnson*, 967 S.W.2d 391 (Tex. 1998)

➢ Justice Owen wrote the majority opinion, which was joined by seven other justices, including Democrat Justices Raul Gonzalez and Rose Spector. The ninth Justice concurred.

➢ As Justice Owen recognized in her opinion, it is well-settled in common law that physicians do not bear a duty to unidentified third parties.

- ✓ Some courts have held that a psychiatrist, for instance, has a duty to warn an identified party when a patient poses a threat to that party.
- ✓ For instance, if a mental patient tells a psychiatrist that he is going to kill his girlfriend, the psychiatrist has a duty to warn the girlfriend.
- ✓ But if the mental patient tells the psychiatrist that he is going to kill "someone" or "everyone," the psychiatrist has no duty to inform the general public of the threat.

➢ In Praesel, Justice Owen applied the well-settled principle that there is no duty to unidentified third parties. She held that the three physicians in this case did not have a duty to inform the Medical Advisory Board that the patient was an epileptic.

- ✓ It was clear from the evidence that the Medical Advisory Board would not have automatically revoked the patient's license even if it had been informed of his epilepsy.

➢ Justice Owen relied in part on medical evidence that demonstrates that individuals who have been seizure-free for three or more years suffer seizures at a very low rate.

➢ Justice Owen also held that the duty to determine whether an individual should continue to drive rests with the individual. She, along with seven other members of the court, found that the physicians had no duty to warn the patient himself that his epilepsy posed a risk to driving.

- ✓ Justice Owen's opinion reinstated the trial court's original grant of summary judgment to the defendants.

Provident American Ins. Co. v. Castaneda

Scope of Coverage Under Insurance Policy

Allegation: "In Provident American Ins. v. Castaneda, Denise Castaneda sued her insurer for not covering her medical costs after she had her spleen and gallbladder removed due to a hereditary blood disease. A jury awarded her $50,000 in damages, which the trial court trebled under the Deceptive Trade Practices Act. But Owen's majority opinion overturned two lower courts, finding insufficient evidence of liability and creating a new defense for insurers to deny claims on pre-existing conditions."

Facts: Provident American Ins. Co. v. Castaneda, 988 S.W.2d 189 (Tex. 1998)

- A substantial majority of the Texas Supreme Court agreed with Justice Owen that an insurance company did not act in bad faith when it denied a young woman's claim under a policy that, by its very terms, did not apply to her illness.
  - ✓ The very first paragraph of Denise Castaneda's policy expressly stated that the policy only provided benefits for an illness "which first manifests itself more than thirty (30) days after the effective date of this Policy."
  - ✓ The "undisputed evidence" showed that Denise's hemolytic spherocytosis (a blood disease) had manifested itself long before the 30-day period passed. In fact, she experienced symptoms years before her father even applied for the policy.
  - ✓ As her father explained in a letter to the insurance company: "Denise and [her brother] had their skin a little yellow throughout their whole lifes [sic]." Id. at 195. And, again according to the letter, Denise was "checked and diagnosed" by a physician on July 20, 1991—just three days after the 30-day period expired.
- Only two members of the Court dissented from Justice Owen's ruling.

or progressive, public interest-type foundations." HOUSTON CHRON., Nov. 28, 2001, at A29. The director further has acknowledged that: "There are some wealthy liberal individuals, including trial lawyers, who have given to me over the years." HOUSTON CHRON., Nov. 4, 2001, at 2. And in an extraordinary moment of candor, TPJ's spokesman during an August 14, 1998 press event admitted the following:

> Are we getting money from lawyers? I mean, that's the question here. Sure. Yeah. We've gotten money from trial lawyers, absolutely. And we solicit money from trial lawyers. . . . If you want to talk about trial lawyers, uh, you know, there are trial lawyers in this state who just made a lot of money on the tobacco case. And, frankly, we'd like to get a lot more money from those people. We feel that they have a duty to support groups like ours.

No wonder the Legal Times recently described TPJ as "a liberal activist group." LEGAL TIMES, July 8, 2002, at 1.

Despite TPJ's repeated calls for public officials to come clean on their sources of funding, the group refuses to respond to media requests that it identify its individual contributors. TPJ makes no effort to live up to the standards it seeks to impose on others. For this reason, the Houston Chronicle recently labeled the group "hypocritical because it doesn't fully make public its own list of donors." HOUSTON CHRON., Nov. 4, 2001, at 2. The Chronicle also took TPJ's director to task for suggesting that publicizing his donors' names would expose them to the same dangers as civil rights activists in the Jim Crow South: "Whatever differences he may have with Texas officialdom, his contributors don't have to fear being lynched or seeing their houses burned." Id.

TPJ is hardly a disinterested observer of the legal system. Instead, it brings a particular mindset to bear when weighing in on important matters of public concern. No one would argue that groups like TPJ should be silenced, or have no legitimate role to play in public debates, including debates over judicial nominations. But neither should TPJ be mistaken for an objective, impartial voice. The group's pronouncements, like those of any activist group with a particular ideological orientation, should be taken with a grain of salt.

A. Justice Owen's Judicial Restraint

Judicial restraint means that judges have a proper understanding of the scope of their own powers. Judging is not the same as legislating. When deciding a case, judges are required to give effect to the intent of the lawgiver, whether the people themselves through a constitution, or the people's elected representatives through a statute. Judged by this standard, Justice Owen certainly qualifies as a practitioner of judicial restraint. She consistently defers to the policy choices of the Texas Legislature, refusing to substitute the Court's policy preferences. And she consistently applies the authoritative precedents of the U.S. Supreme Court.

TPJ proposes that Justice Owen's concurrence in In re Jane Doe 2, 19 S.W.3d 278 (Tex. 2000), is somehow evidence of "judicial activism." Nothing could be further from the truth. In Read v. The Scott Fetzer Co.

Manufacturer Liability for Sexual Assaults by Independent Contractor Salesmen

Allegation: Justice Owen joined an "extreme dissent" in a case involving business liability for the acts of a door-to-door vacuum cleaner salesman who raped a customer. The dissent argued that a distributor had no legal duty to perform background checks on door-to-door salesmen, and that failure to perform these checks could not result in foreseeable assaults.

Facts: Read v. The Scott Fetzer Co.*, 990 S.W. 2d 732 (Tex. 1998)

- Ms. Read was raped at her home by a vacuum cleaner salesman, Mr. Carter. She sued the vacuum manufacturer, Kirby, and Kirby's distributor who hired Mr. Carter as an independent contractor/salesman.

- The issue was whether a company that requires in-home sales but markets through an independent contractor, who in turn, retains other independent contractors to make the sales exercises sufficient control to subject it to liability.

- Justice Owen attempted to follow what she believed was settled Texas law in this case. She believed that this case was governed by and indistinguishable from two prior decisions of the Texas Supreme Court, Golden Spread Council, Inc. v. Akins, 926 S.W.2d 287 (Tex. 1996) and Greater Houston Transportation Co. v. Phillips, 801 S.W.2d 523 (Tex. 1990).

  - ✓ In Akins, the Court held that the Boys Scouts of America had no duty to monitor its independent local volunteer councils' selection of troop leaders to prevent sexual assaults by these leaders, even though the Boy Scouts created an organization in which the risk of misconduct by troop leaders was inherently possible.

  - ✓ In Phillips, the Court rejected the argument that the Yellow Cab Company of Houston should have known that it was likely that one of its drivers would carry a gun, get into an altercation while on the job, and shoot someone. Despite the fact that the Yellow Cab Company had operated in Houston for nearly twenty years, and was involved in nearly 1,000 traffic accidents per year, the Court held that the company had no duty to warn its cab drivers not to carry guns.

- Justice Owen specifically agreed in the case that a contractor, like Kirby, has a duty to exercise reasonably the control it retains over the independent contractor's work.

- In addition, she noted that the plaintiff had suffered "a terrible injury" and that it was beyond doubt that the victim was due compensation from her rapist AND the local distributor for failing to exercise reasonable care in hiring him.

- ✓ Kirby, however, did not control the hiring of Mr. Carter. Ms. Read sued for injuries related to the selection of Mr. Carter as a salesman without a background check.

- ✓ The contract between Kirby and its distributors says that Kirby "shall exercise no control over the selection of ... Dealers," and that distributors have the "full ... responsibility for recruiting, hiring, firing, terminating ... independent contractors. Id. at 745.

Saenz v. Fidelity Insurance Underwriters

Workers Compensation: Reversed Jury Award for Mental Anguish

Allegation: Justice Owen joined a concurring/dissenting opinion which reversed a jury award for mental anguish in a worker's compensation case. The opinion "reversed Texas case law, which previously relied on juries to assess mental anguish awards."

Facts: Saenz v. Fidelity Insurance Underwriters*, 925 S.W.2d 607 (Tex. 1996)

➢ Justice Owen joined an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, which reversed a jury's finding that the plaintiff was entitled to $250,000 in damages for mental anguish arising out of her insurance carrier's alleged fraudulent conduct in inducing her to settle her worker's compensation claim.

➢ Justice Owen's view of this case was MORE generous to the plaintiff than the view adopted by the majority opinion.

- ✓ The majority opinion reversed a $5 million jury verdict -- including $250,000 for mental anguish, $500,000 for future medical bills and $4.25 million in punitives -- and rendered a take nothing judgment against the plaintiff.
- ✓ Justice Owen joined a concurring/dissenting opinion which would have given the plaintiff another bite at the apple.
- ✓ While they agreed that the plaintiff could not recover for actual or punitive damages for fraud, Justice Owen and Chief Justice Phillips believed that the interests of justice required that the case be remanded back to the trial court to allow the plaintiff to rescind and re-open her worker's compensation settlement.
- ✓ They so argued despite testimony presented at trial by the state hearing examiner with decades of experience that he "had never seen a compromise settlement as high" as plaintiff's original settlement, and "had never seen one that high since."

➢ The opinion in Saenz was limited to the facts presented in the case. It did not, as alleged, create new Texas law and did not affect the ability of juries to make mental anguish awards in future cases.

- ✓ Later Texas appellate cases affirmed jury awards for mental anguish. See Hoffman-LaRoche v. Zeltwanger, 69 S.W.3d 634 (Tex.App.-Corpus Christi 2002)(affirming a jury award of $1 million for mental anguish arising out of a case of extreme and outrageous sexual harassment); Lone Star Ford v. Wilson, 2002 WL 356711 (Tex.App.-Houston 2002)(affirming a jury award of $250,000 for mental anguish arising out of wrongful termination); Haskett v. Butts, 2002 WL 1485290 (Tex.App.-Waco 2002)(affirming a jury's award of $250,000 for mental anguish arising out of a medical malpractice case involving a still-born child).

➢ The Texas Supreme Court reversed the mental anguish award in this case because it was based on insufficient evidence at trial– which appellate courts do every day across the country.

✓ To support an award of mental anguish damages under Texas law, a plaintiff must either present "direct evidence of the nature, duration, and severity of their mental anguish, thus establishing a substantial disruption in the plaintiff's daily routine," or "evidence of 'a high degree of mental pain and distress' that is 'more than mere worry, anxiety, vexation, embarrassment, or anger.'"

➢ The only evidence of mental anguish presented during the three-day trial in Saenz consisted of ONE question to the plaintiff by her attorney:

Q: Can you tell the jury what it is that you were concerned about this lifetime medical benefits and who was going to wind up paying for the lifetime medical benefits that you were told you were going to incur?

A: I worried about that a lot. My husband was already working two jobs, and I was worried also that we were going to lose our house because when we bought it we had two incomes and, I knew that we couldn't afford the medical bills that we were going to have.

➢ Because this testimony did not specifically address the plaintiff's mental anguish, the evidence presented at trial in this case was clearly insufficient to support an award of damages for mental anguish.

Sonnier v. Chisholm-Ryder

Statute of Repose in a Products Liability Case

Allegation: Owen joined an "activist dissent" in arguing that all manufacturers who construct or repair improvements to real property should be subject to a ten-year statute of repose.

Facts: Sonnier v. Chisholm-Ryder*, 909 S.W.2d 475 (Tex. 1995)

➢ In Sonnier, an employee injured by a tomato chopper installed by the Texas Department of Corrections sued the chopper's manufacturer some 25 years after the manufacturer constructed the machine.

➢ This case turned on the interpretation of section 16.009 of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code, which stated that "a claimant must bring suit for damages.... against a person who constructs or repairs an improvement to real property not later than 10 years after the substantial completion of the improvement...."

➢ Justice Owen and her three fellow dissenters (which included Democrat Justice Gonzalez) attempted to follow what they believed was well-settled Texas law.

- ✓ According to the dissent, the activist majority opinion ignored a prior decision of the Texas Supreme Court and no fewer than seven Texas courts of appeals.
- ✓ In Conkle v. Builders Concrete Products, 749 S.W.2d 489 (Tex. 1988), the Court held that off-site manufacturers were protected by Section 16.009's repose, but only if the manufacturer constructed the entire improvement and not a component part of it.
- ✓ Seven Texas courts of appeal had issued similar holdings. See Karisch v. Allied-Signal, Inc., 837 S.W.2d 679 (Tex.App.-- Corpus Christi 1992); Big West Oil Co. v. Willborn Bros. Co., 836 S.W.2d 800 (Tex.App.--Amarillo 1992); Ablin v. Morton Southwest Co., 802 S.W.2d 788 (Tex.App.--San Antonio 1990); Dubin v. Carrier Corp., 798 S.W.2d 1 (Tex.App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1989); Rodarte v. Carrier Corp., 786 S.W.2d 94 (Tex.App.--El Paso 1990); Dubin v. Carrier Corp., 731 S.W.2d 651 (Tex.App.-- Houston [1st Dist.] 1987); Ellerbe v. Otis Elevator Co., 618 S.W.2d 870 (Tex.App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1981).

St. Luke's Episcopal Hosp. v. Agbor
Medical Malpractice Claim Barred

Allegation: Justice Owen joined a majority opinion that utilized an activist interpretation of a patient protection law to harm malpractice victims. The majority's twisted summary judgment reversed an appeals court and kept the case from the jury. The opinion was activist, anti-consumer, and anti-jury.

Facts: St. Luke's Episcopal Hosp. v. Agbor*, 952 S.W.2d 503 (Tex. 1997)

➢ Justice Owen joined four other justices in a majority opinion written by Democrat Raul Gonzalez.

- ✓ The majority found that the Texas Medical Practice Act barred a patient's claim against a hospital for its credentialing of a doctor.
- ✓ During birth, the plaintiffs' baby suffered an injury that permanently disabled one arm. The plaintiffs alleged that the hospital should not have renewed the doctor's staff privileges because she had been the subject of other malpractice cases and was not properly insured.

➢ The majority, far from being activist, followed a well-established rule of law that "when a statute is clear and unambiguous, courts need not resort to rules of construction or extrinsic aids to construe it, but should give the statute its common meaning."

- ✓ On its face, the Texas statute was clear and unambiguous.
- ✓ The dissent agreed that the statute was clear and unambiguous: "Read literally, these provisions do bar the Agbor's claims."
- ✓ It was the dissent that then pursued an activist approach, stating, "we must consider the entire act, its nature and object, and the consequences that would follow from a proposed construction."

➢ The majority, including Justice Owen, recognized that it must take a statute as it finds it: "[courts] are not responsible for omissions in the legislation. They are responsible for a true and fair interpretation of the written law."

- ✓ Based on the plain meaning of the language used by the legislature, the statute provided the hospital immunity in this case.

➢ The majority's opinion agreed with the trial court's original decision in granting summary judgment.

- ✓ There was no factual issue for the jury to decide in this case because, as a matter of law, the hospital had immunity in this case.

State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Simmons

Bad Faith by Insurers

Allegation: In a case where an insurer refused to pay the claim of a family whose home had burned to the ground, Justice Owen joined an extreme dissent that questioned the damages awarded by the jury for the bad faith of the insurer. The case shows that Justice Owen is activist, anti-consumer, and anti-jury.

Facts: State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Simmons*, 963 S.W.2d 42 (Tex. 1998)

➢ The trial court in this case found that there was not legally sufficient evidence to support a jury's finding that the insurer breached its duty of good faith and the jury's award of $2 million in punitive damages.

- ✓ The majority opinion, written by Democrat Justice Rose Spector, reversed the jury's punitive damages award, but left the bad faith finding under a revised legal standard.

➢ Justice Owen joined a dissent that argued that the majority opinion did not consider the bad faith claim under the standards the Texas Supreme Court itself had established.

- ✓ The court in earlier opinions held that there are two elements to proving bad faith: (1) the insurer had no reasonable basis for denying the claim and that it knew or should have known that fact; (2) an insurer denied a claim after liability was reasonably clear.

➢ The dissent criticized the majority opinion for being driven not by legal principles, but rather, by the belief that the insurer had not been entirely fair and therefore should pay some money to the plaintiffs.

- ✓ The dissent joined by Justice Owen applied the law as it was established in precedent. It was the majority opinion which ignored the legal standards and created an exception unique to the case.

- ✓ Although Justice Owen had dissented from the opinion setting forth the original standard, once it became precedent, she faithfully applied the standard.

➢ Both the majority opinion, written by Democrat Justice Rose Spector, and the dissent found that there was insufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict, a decision made by appellate courts every day.

State Farm Insurance Co. v. Beaston

Scope of Policy Coverage and Mental Anguish Damages

Allegation: "Terri Beaston sued an insurer that denied a life insurance claim after her husband died in a car crash. The trial court judgment granted Beaston the $250,000 value of her husband's policy but overruled a jury award of $200,000 in mental anguish damages on the grounds that there was no finding that the defendants acted knowingly. A court of appeals reinstated the mental anguish award and trebled it under a state Insurance Code provision. Owen's majority opinion overturned the jury and two lower courts to rule that Beaston take nothing. This opinion created new obstacles for consumers who are deceived by insurers."

Facts: State Farm Insurance Co. v. Beaston*, 907 S.W.2d 430 (Tex. 1995)

- A bipartisan majority of the Texas Supreme Court agreed that, because the plaintiff's husband decided not to renew his insurance policy, the plaintiff was not entitled to receive benefits after her husband's death.
  - ✓ David Beaston failed to pay the premium on his life insurance policy by its due date of December 28, 1983. The policy lapsed on that day, and the 31-day grace period expired on January 28, 1984—three days before the husband died.
  - ✓ Because the husband's death occurred after the expiration of his life insurance policy, the Court held, the wife had no right to receive benefits.
- An even larger majority (with just two Justices dissenting) joined Justice Owen in ruling that the wife was not entitled to recover "mental anguish damages," since the jury did not find that the insurance company had acted knowingly.
  - ✓ Under Texas common law and other statutes, plaintiffs are not entitled to "mental anguish damages" unless they convince a jury that the defendant acted knowingly.
  - ✓ Justice Owen simply construed the Texas Insurance Code to be consistent with another act of the legislature (which was passed at the same time as the Insurance Code), and with the common law of tort.
  - ✓ The trial judge likewise had concluded that mental anguish damages are available only if the jury finds that the defendant acted knowingly.

State Farm Lloyds v. Nicolau
Bad Faith by Insurers

Allegation: In a case finding that an insurer breached its contract and acted in bad faith in denying most of the plaintiff's claims for foundation damage to their home, Justice Owen joined a dissent that reweighed the trial court evidence and found that no tort was committed at all. The dissent itself was striking in its disdain for plaintiffs in general.

Facts: State Farm Lloyds v. Nicolau*, 951 S.W.2d 444 (Tex. 1997)

➢ The dissent, joined by Justice Owen and 3 other justices including Democrat Raul Gonzalez, focused on the Texas Supreme Court's failure to define the limits of bad faith liability.

- ✓ The opinion stated: "Individuals and entities, even insurance companies, are entitled to know before they act what the law expects of them, what behavior is culpable and what is not. A legal cause of action must be adequately defined by principles and standards."

- ✓ A court of appeals also noted the problem, stating that the Texas Supreme Court "has ultimately done little to provide lower courts with any guidance for conducting a legal sufficiency review in bad faith cases."

➢ The dissent specifically stated that as a reviewing court, it was not reweighing the evidence, "as that is the province of the jury." The dissent, following well-settled principles, viewed the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, and determined that the evidence did not support the jury's finding of bad faith – a finding also arrived at by the trial court.

➢ Rather than criticizing the jury finding, the dissent sympathized with jurors who had to grapple with a decision on bad faith liability without being told what the clear legal standard was to apply.

➢ The dissent found that, even using the bad faith standard set forth in the majority opinion that an insurer breaches its duty when it "fails to settle a claim if [it] knew or should have known that it was reasonably clear that a claim was covered," the insurance company should not have been liable.

- ✓ The dissent argued that the evidence showed that there was a legitimate dispute among the experts hired by each side.

➢ The dissent, far from attacking plaintiffs, criticizes a system that encourages attorneys to add an allegation of bad faith to the complaint, because the odds of recovery – regardless of the facts – are good.

Stier v. Reading & Bates Corp.

Federal Preemption and Workplace Injury

Allegation: Justice Owen wrote the majority opinion holding that the federal Jones Act (which provides broad remedies to injured seamen) preempted the state claims of a German worker injured near Trinidad on an off-shore drilling rig owned by a Texas company.

Facts: Stier v. Reading & Bates Corp.*, 992 S.W.2d 423 (Tex. 1999)

- The plaintiff was a German citizen, resided in Brazil, was not a citizen of the U.S., was not a resident of the U.S., and was injured on an offshore drilling vessel berthed in Trinidad. The plaintiff sued his employer, a Texas company, for injuries suffered on the deck of a rig when he was hit in the head by a hook on a sling operated by others.

- Under the specific case facts, federal law mandates that the case not be heard in Texas because federal law preempts state law.

- Justice Owen's opinion relied, among other law, upon two United States Supreme Court decisions, American Dredging Co. v. Miller, 510 U.S. 443 (1994) and Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, 244 U.S. 205, 61 L. Ed. 1086, 37 S. Ct. 524 (1917).

- The plaintiff, Mr. Stier, does not dispute that he was a foreign seaman employed in the exploration of offshore energy sources or that he has remedy for his injuries under the laws of Trinidad, Germany, or Brazil.

fact, Doe 2 reveals Justice Owen's demonstrated commitment to following and applying the precedents of the United States Supreme Court.

In Doe 2, Justice Owen concluded that an exception to Texas's Parental Notification Act, which permits an underage girl to have an abortion without telling a parent when doing so is in her "best interest," required the Court to consider both whether abortion is in her best interest, and whether notification is not. She came to this conclusion by citing the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lambert v. Wicklund, 520 U.S. 292 (1997) (per curiam). In that case, the Court interpreted an identical "best interest" exception in a Montana statute, and concluded that "a judicial bypass procedure requiring a minor to show that parental notification is not in her best interests is equivalent to a judicial bypass procedure requiring a minor to show that abortion without notification is in her best interest." Id. at 297. "Judicial restraint" involves deferring to and applying the precedents of a superior tribunal, and that is precisely what Justice Owen did in Doe 2.

In Ford Motor Co. v. Miles, 967 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. 1998), a products liability case arising out of an automobile accident, a bipartisan majority of the Texas Supreme Court held that the lawsuit had been filed in the wrong county, and therefore remanded for transfer and a new trial in a different county. It must be stressed that this decision did not eliminate the plaintiffs' ability to sue for the injuries they had suffered; it simply ordered that the case be reassigned to the appropriate venue. See id. at 389 ("remand[ing] this case to the trial court for transfer to Dallas County and a new trial.")

Justice Owen's majority opinion, which was joined by Justices from both major political parties, concluded that the plaintiffs should have filed suit in Dallas County (where the plaintiffs lived, the car was purchased, and the accident occurred), rather than Rusk County (where an unrelated Ford dealership was located). Indeed, the plaintiffs even "concede[d] that the Rusk County dealership has no connection with the collision or to the Ranger." Id. at 379. Because, as the plaintiffs themselves admitted, the Ford dealership in Rusk County had "no connection" to their case, the Court concluded that the lawsuit should have been filed elsewhere. Significantly, the dissenting Justices agreed that the majority "cite[d] the correct standard of review for venue determinations," and disagreed only as to the proper application of that standard. Id. at 390 (Hankinson, J., dissenting). Both the majority and the dissent agreed that it was appropriate to resolve the venue issue, even though the Court did not grant review solely for the purpose of addressing that question; no member argued that the Court should not consider whether venue was appropriate.

B. A Balanced Approach to Consumer Lawsuits

Justice Owen's voting tendencies in lawsuits filed by consumers defies easy categorization. As discussed above, she has rejected the claim of a cigarette lighter manufacturer that it had no duty to make its products child resistant; she has held that doctors cannot escape valid lawsuits simply because a plaintiff fails to name the physician's associations as defendants; and she has upheld a multimillion-dollar jury verdict against a general contractor who allowed workers to use dangerous devices that resulted in one worker's death. Justice Owen did not Stringer v. Cendant Mortgage Corp.

Consumer Protections from Home Equity Lenders

Allegation: Justice Owen joined a majority opinion gutting the consumer protections in a Texas state constitutional amendment in which home equity lenders were prohibited from forcing borrowers to apply home equity loan funds to other debts. The opinion was activist and anti-consumer.

Facts: Stringer v. Cendant Mortgage Corp.*, 23 S.W.3d 353 (Tex. 2000)

- The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, seeking clarification of Texas law, certified the question to the Texas Supreme Court of whether a home-equity lender may require the borrower to pay off third party debt that is not secured by the home with the proceeds of the home equity loan.
  - ✓ The Fifth Circuit found that two sections of the constitutional amendment conflict and could not be reconciled.
- The Texas Supreme Court, in a unanimous opinion, applied well-settled rules of constitutional interpretation and relied upon the plain meaning of the text.
  - ✓ The court found that the first section, which provided the substantive rights and obligations of lenders and borrowers, allowed lenders to require a borrower to pay off debts secured by the home or debts to third party creditors.
  - ✓ The second section only provided the language for the mandatory notice to borrowers, and laid out no rights or obligation under the Amendment.
- The unanimous court held that the substantive provisions of the amendment, which allowed lenders to require a borrower to pay off debts to third party creditors, prevailed over the notice provision.
  - ✓ The Regulatory Commentary on Equity Lending Procedures, which represents four Texas administrative agencies' interpretation of the Home Equity Constitutional Amendment, supported the court's interpretation.
- In an extra effort to provide protection to consumers, the unanimous court required all home equity lenders to include in their notice to borrowers, information about the conflict in the amendment and the court's ruling on the conflict.

Texas Utilities Electric Co. v. Timmons

Attractive Nuisance Doctrine

Allegation: Justice Owen joined a majority opinion that reinstated a trial court's summary judgment for the power company in a case where a 14 year-old boy was electrocuted while climbing an electric tower in his neighborhood. The opinion failed to follow precedent on "attractive nuisance," and was activist, anti-consumer, and anti-jury.

Facts: Texas Utilities Electric Co. v. Timmons*, 947 S.W.2d 191 (Tex. 1997)

➢ The majority opinion, joined by Justice Owen and six other justices, agreed with the trial court, which granted summary judgment to the utility. The Texas Supreme Court held that based on precedent, the boy's mother could not invoke the attractive nuisance doctrine.

➢ The majority applied well-settled law on the attractive nuisance doctrine, where a landowner may be held liable for physical harm to a trespassing child caused by a dangerous condition on the land if, among other requirements, the child, because of his youth, did not realize the risk.

➢ The majority found that the boy, who was 14 years-old, was mature enough to be aware of the risk and was actually aware of the risk.

- ✓ There was testimony that the boy's family and friends had repeatedly warned the boy not to climb the tower because it was dangerous.
- ✓ There was testimony that while he was climbing the tower, the boy acknowledged but refused to heed his friends' warnings to him that he could be electrocuted and that he should come down.
- ✓ Prior to climbing the tower, the 14 year-old boy had spent the evening drinking beer and malt liquor at a friends house. His blood alcohol level was .10, Texas' legal standard for intoxication.

➢ The court had previously refused to apply the attractive nuisance doctrine to a youth who had climbed an electrical tower and was injured by electrical arcing, as this boy was, because the youth realized the risk of being near electrical wires, even if he was not aware of arcing – where the electricity could arc from a line into a nearby object that was not touching the line.

- ✓ The majority distinguished cases applying the doctrine in other electrical tower cases that did not include similar warnings and barricades.

- ✓ In this case, the tower was 90 feet tall and did not have a ladder allowing access to the top. The boy had to climb the actual tower by using the metal braces supporting each side.

- ✓ The utility had erected a 12 ½ foot barricade around the tower that was encircled by barbed wire.

- ✓ There were signs posted on the barricade stating: "KEEP AWAY" "DANGER" "WIRES HEAVILY ELECTRIFIED"

Timberwalk Apartments v. Cain
Duty of Landlords to Protect against Crime

Allegation: In a case where a woman alleged that she was raped in her apartment because her landlord failed to provide adequate security, Justice Owen joined in the majority opinion overruling the court of appeals' grant of a new trial to the plaintiff. Ruling that, as a matter of law, the defendant owed no duty to provide additional security, the majority took what should have been a factual finding away from a jury.

Facts: Timberwalk Apartments v. Cain*, 972 S.W.2d 749 (Tex. 1998)

- The Texas Supreme Court unanimously found that the risk that a tenant would be sexually assaulted was not foreseeable to Timberwalk, the apartment owners. It is well settled law, that if there is not a foreseeable risk of the crime in question, there can be no duty to provide security measures against such a crime.

- Justice Spector, a Democrat, analyzed in her concurrence whether there was a duty under her own broader criteria and came to the same conclusion as the majority: "Cain presented no evidence that the character, use made, or location of the apartment complex created a heightened risk of foreseeable criminal conduct. I therefore concur in the Court's rendition of judgment for Timberwalk."

- The court unanimously agreed that whether a duty exists is a question of law for the court to decide under the facts surrounding the occurrence in question. The court followed well-settled law, its own precedent, and the Restatement (Second) of Torts.

- The second defendant in the case, the apartment management company, had not argued on appeal that it had no duty to provide special security measures against the crime in question. The court unanimously agreed that the case as to the second defendant would be remanded for a new trial.

- Rather than being hostile to the decisions made by juries, the court, including Justice Owen, recognized that an improper jury instruction was reversible error in the case and sent the case against the second defendant back for a new trial.

- Critics claim that Justice Spector's concurrence criticized the majority's opinion for ignoring caselaw on other foreseeability evidence. She does cite caselaw from other states – not binding on Texas, but ultimately agrees with the majority that there was no duty under her more stringent standard as well.

Universe Life Insurance Co. v. Giles

"Bad Faith" in Insurance Cases

Allegation: "In this bad-faith insurance case, the majority overturned the jury's punitive damages award citing a lack of evidence. Owen joined a more extreme dissent that would have directed judges to replace juries in making bad-faith determinations. The majority criticized this dissent, saying it 'would take the resolution of bad-faith disputes away from the juries that have been deciding bad faith cases for more than a decade.'"

Facts: Universe Life Insurance Co. v. Giles*, 950 S.W.2d 48 (Tex. 1997)

- Justice Owen agreed with the unanimous Court that an insurance company had denied a policyholder's claim "in bad faith."

- She also joined a concurring opinion—along with other colleagues from both political parties—which argued that the question of what constitutes "bad faith" should be decided by judges, to ensure that such determinations can be reviewed on appeal.

  - ✓ Allowing juries to decide whether an insurance company has acted in "bad faith" prevents appellate courts from meaningfully reviewing their decisions.

  - ✓ Texas law forbids appellate courts, when examining a jury's findings, from weighing the evidence before the trial court. They can only consider "undisputed evidence and evidence to support the finding." Id. at 43 (concurring opinion).

  - ✓ To ensure that higher courts have the opportunity to consider whether "bad faith" exists in a given case, it is necessary to allow judges—whose decisions are fully reviewable on appeal—to determine "bad faith."

  - ✓ The concurrence reflects the view that juries should not be able to wield an unchecked, unreviewable power to make legal determinations.

- Even the majority acknowledged that Texas law effectively prevented appellate review of a jury's "bad faith" determinations, and tried to resolve the problem by adopting a narrower definition of "bad faith."

  - ✓ According to the majority, "[a]lthough we attempted to resolve this dilemma in [past cases], it is clear that our efforts have not been entirely successful." Id. at 52.

  - ✓ The majority and concurrence agreed that an unchecked jury was a significant problem; they simply differed on the best way to solve it.

- Justice Owen joined, but did not author, the concurrence.

reach these conclusions because she wanted to assist any particular party. Rather, these and other cases illustrate Justice Owen's commitment to faithfully applying the law regardless of the parties' identities.

In Provident American Ins. Co. v. Castaneda, 988 S.W.2d 189 (Tex. 1998), a substantial majority of the Texas Supreme Court (only two members dissented) agreed with Justice Owen that an insurance company did not act in bad faith when it denied a young woman's claim under a policy that, by its very terms, did not apply to her illness. After the court of appeals reversed in part the trial court's decision to award her $150,000 in money damages, the Supreme Court reversed the remainder of the decision.

The very first paragraph of Denise Castaneda's policy expressly stated that the policy only provided benefits for an illness "which first manifests itself more than thirty (30) days after the effective date of this Policy." Id. at 193 n.20. But the "undisputed evidence" showed that Denise's hemolytic spherocytosis (a blood disease) had manifested itself long before the 30-day period passed. In fact, she experienced symptoms years before her father even applied for the policy. As her father explained in a letter to the insurance company: "Denise and [her brother] had their skin a little yellow throughout their whole lifes [sic]." Id. at 195. And, again according to the letter, Denise was "checked and diagnosed" by a physician on July 20, 1991—just three days after the 30-day period expired. Because Denise's illness had manifested itself well before the end of the 30-day waiting period, her insurance company had no legal obligation to cover it.

In In re City of Georgetown, 53 S.W.3d 328 (Tex. 2001), Justice Owen's six-member majority concluded that Texas law did not require a city to disclose a report that was covered by the attorney-client and work-product privileges. In doing so, Justice Owen deferred to and applied the precedents of the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as Texas's rules of evidence and civil procedure.

Texas law specifically provides that cities need not disclose to the public "information relating to litigation of a civil or criminal nature to which the state or a political subdivision is or may be a party." TEX. GOV'T CODE § 552.103(a). That certainly describes Georgetown, which had prepared the report in connection with two then-pending lawsuits over discharges at a water treatment plant, and which expected to be named in several other suits. In addition, Texas law allows cities to keep private any information that is "expressly confidential under other law." Id. § 552.022(a). According to the six-Justice majority, the phrase "other law" includes the Texas rules of evidence and civil procedure, both of which specifically deem certain work product and certain attorney-client communications—including the report at issue in the case—to be confidential.

Significantly, Justice Owen interpreted the phrase "expressly confidential under other law" in light of Norfolk & Western Railway v. American Train Dispatchers Association, 499 U.S. 117 (1991), where the U.S. Supreme Court held that similar language included federal statutes, state statutes, municipal ordinances, and judicial decisions. Justice Owen also relied on the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947), where the Court recognized the confidentiality of work product prepared in anticipation of litigation.

Justice Owen dissented in FM Properties Operating Co. v. City of Austin, 22 S.W.3d 868 (Tex. 2000) from the majority's decision to hold unconstitutional a Texas law that allowed private entities to designate their land as "water quality protection zones." In doing so, she refused to interfere with the choices of the people's elected representatives in the state Legislature.

Justice Owen disagreed that the law was an unconstitutional delegation of "legislative power" to landowners. Indeed, the Justices in the majority themselves conceded that "[d]efining what legislative power is or when it has been delegated is no easy task." Id. at 873. In essence, Justice Owen argued that legislatures should be allowed the flexibility to develop creative, innovative solutions to pressing social problems, and that courts should not interfere with such experimentation. "How the Legislature chooses to regulate is left to the Legislature, not this Court." Id. at 915 (Owen, J., dissenting). Justice Owen thus rejected the majority's "nondelegation doctrine"—a theory that, if adopted by the federal courts, would imperil Congress's ability to delegate lawmaking authority to all manner of administrative agencies.

Nor is it proper to describe Justice Owen's opinion as favoring a past campaign contributor. In fact, Justice Owen sided with the state of Texas, whose Attorney General—Dan Morales, a Democrat—had intervened in the proceedings to defend the law's constitutionality. The majority's decision to invalidate the law, she argued, "usurps authority that is reserved to another branch of government—the Legislature." Justice Owen's willingness to defer to the politically accountable branches of government is a hallmark of judicial restraint.

C. Allocating Responsibilities Among Judges and Juries

Judges and juries perform very different functions at trial. As a general matter, judges are charged with the task of ruling on questions of law—e.g., whether a particular piece of evidence should be admitted—whereas the jury's function is limited to making findings of fact. Justice Owen has sought to respect this traditional distinction, and to faithfully apply more recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions on the respective responsibilities of judges and juries.

In Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals v. Havner, 953 S.W.2d 706 (Tex. 1997), the members of the Texas Supreme Court—including both Republicans and Democrats—unanimously concluded that a girl born with birth defects had not proven that a drug manufactured by the defendant was responsible for her injuries. The opinion, authored by Justice Owen, assiduously followed the precedents of the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as the lower federal courts.

According to the unanimous Court, there was no reliable evidence that Bendectin—a drug taken by pregnant women to combat morning sickness—was responsible for birth defects. As Justice Owen pointed out, the federal courts have heard identical lawsuits over the years, and every single one ultimately has failed: "The federal courts have dealt extensively with Bendectin litigation. To date, no plaintiff has ultimately prevailed in federal court. The evidence in those cases has been similar to that offered by the Havners." Id. at 709-10 (citing 19 federal cases in which Merrell Dow was exonerated).

In concluding that the plaintiffs had not proven that Bendectin caused the injuries, Justice Owen's opinion applied the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579 (1993). That decision instructs courts to disregard evidence, offered by self-described scientific experts, that is not based on "valid science." Because the plaintiffs' evidence did not satisfy the U.S. Supreme Court's standard of reliability, the Texas Supreme Court unanimously concluded that Merrell Dow could not be held responsible.

A bipartisan majority of the Texas Supreme Court agreed with Justice Owen's conclusion in State Farm Insurance Co. v. Beaston, 907 S.W.2d 430 (Tex. 1995), that, because the plaintiff's husband decided not to renew his insurance policy, the plaintiff was not entitled to receive benefits after her husband's death. David Beaston failed to pay the premium on his life insurance policy by its due date of December 28, 1983. The policy lapsed on that day, and the 31-day grace period expired on January 28, 1984—three days before the husband died. Because the husband's death occurred after the expiration of his life insurance policy, the Court held, the wife had no right to receive benefits.

An even larger majority (with just two Justices dissenting) joined Justice Owen in ruling that the wife was not entitled to recover "mental anguish damages," since the jury did not find that the insurance company had acted knowingly. Justice Owen reasoned that, under Texas common law and other statutes, plaintiffs are not entitled to such damages unless they convince a jury that the defendant acted knowingly; she therefore concluded that the Texas Insurance Code likewise requires a showing of willful action. In other words, Justice Owen simply construed the Texas Insurance Code to be consistent with another act of the Legislature (which was passed at the same time as the Insurance Code), and with the common law of tort. (In this respect, Justice Owen agreed with the trial judge, who likewise concluded that mental anguish damages are available only if the jury finds that the defendant acted knowingly.)

In Universe Life Insurance Co. v. Giles, 950 S.W.2d 48 (Tex. 1997), Justice Owen agreed with the unanimous Court that an insurance company had denied a policyholder's claim "in bad faith." Along with three other colleagues from both political parties, she also joined a concurring opinion, which argued that the question of what constitutes "bad faith" should be decided by judges, to ensure that such determinations can be reviewed on appeal. (Justice Owen joined, but did not author, the concurrence.)

According to the concurrence, allowing juries to decide whether an insurance company has acted in "bad faith" prevents appellate courts from meaningfully reviewing their decisions. This is so because Texas law forbids appellate courts, when examining a jury's findings, from weighing the evidence before the trial court; appellate courts can only consider "undisputed evidence and evidence to support the finding." Id. at 43 (concurring opinion). To ensure that higher courts have the opportunity to consider whether "bad faith" exists in a given case, it is necessary to allow judges—whose decisions are fully reviewable on appeal—to determine "bad faith." The concurrence hardly reflects a disdain for the prerogatives of juries, as TPJ now claims. It reflects the well-settled legal principle that juries should not be able to wield an unchecked, unreviewable power to make legal determinations.

Even the majority acknowledged that Texas law effectively prevented appellate review of a jury's "bad faith" determinations, and tried to resolve the problem by adopting a narrower definition of "bad faith." According to the majority, "[a]lthough we attempted to resolve this dilemma in [past cases], it is clear that our efforts have not been entirely successful." Id. at 52. In other words, the majority and concurrence agreed that an unchecked jury was a significant problem; they simply differed on the best way to solve it.

D. Impartiality Toward Campaign Contributors

For better or worse, the people of Texas have chosen to elect their judges in contested, partisan elections. Texas law therefore explicitly authorizes judicial candidates to solicit and receive campaign contributions. See TEX. CODE OF JUDICIAL CONDUCT, Canon 4D(1). In her eight years as a member of the Texas Supreme Court, Justice Owen consistently has called for reform of the state's judicial-selection laws, believing that judges should never be in a position where observers, with or without reason, could doubt their integrity and impartiality. Justice Owen's commitment to impartially resolving legal questions is equally apparent in the evenhanded, disinterested way she has ruled in cases involving contributors to her own judicial campaigns.

TPJ hits farthest from the mark when it suggests that Justice Owen has been influenced by campaign contributions to rule favorably toward her donors. These charges are no more than insinuation: TPJ has not alleged, let alone produced any evidence of, a quid pro quo. Nor has it proposed that any contributor-related case was legally incorrect—i.e., that it involved an erroneous application of law to fact. Indeed, no litigant has ever so much as asked Justice Owen to recuse herself from a case involving a contributor. And by way of clarification, Justice Owen has never received a contribution from a corporation, which is not permitted under Texas law. She has only received contributions from the employees of corporations, either individually or collectively through their political action committees. In a word, then, Justice Owen has done no more than comply with Texas law—which allows judicial candidates to receive campaign contributions, and which Justice Owen consistently has sought to reform.

In Peeler v. Hughes & Luce, 909 S.W.2d 494 (Tex. 1995), the Texas Supreme Court held that criminal convicts cannot sue their defense attorneys for malpractice if they are guilty of the offenses for which they were convicted. In so ruling, the Court aligned itself with the vast majority of states that overwhelmingly have concluded that guilty clients may not bring malpractice claims.

According to the Court's ruling, which Justice Owen joined, public policy weighs against allowing those who are guilty to sue their lawyers for malpractice: "convicts may not shift the consequences of their crime to a third party." Id. at 498. For this reason, only two states allowed guilty clients to bring malpractice claims. In fact, the dissent agreed that ordinarily, only the innocent should be able to sue their lawyers for malpractice: "In most cases the law should not permit a person convicted of a crime to recover for legal malpractice." Id. at 501 (Phillips, C.J., dissenting). Because Carol Peeler never even asserted that she was innocent of federal tax fraud—and indeed admitted to many other crimes—the Court therefore concluded that her

Ed:

Can you please fwd me the latest draft of the Judge's memo to WH personnel on dealings with TPO? I may have some suggested edits.

Also, it's time to get all these loose ends tied up. I suggest the following:

1. Can you please identify a WHO employee who already resides at 18th & G (or can be put there for a few mos) to serve as the mailroom/stamping agent for docs from WHO to TPO. S/he should serve as a fast pass-through for faxes/mail/deliveries from WHO to TPO.

2. This designated WHO person should attach a blue cover sheet to all docs over which WHO will retain custody/control. S/he should ensure that docs are appropriately stamped and retain copies of each such doc. for a WHO file. After quickly performing these functions, she should make the docs available for review by the appropriate TPO personnel. The blue sheet should indicate a "return date" for each doc.

3. S/he should keep a log and ensure the appropriate handling of all WHO docs.

I have drafted instructions for all TPO employees (don't disclose WHO docs; segregate WHO docs etc.) I can finalize those rules AFTER we work out the procedures for this WHO employee. Let's try to get this done today or tomorrow.

I leave to you the task of ensuring that OHS folks understand and comply with the Executive Order.

SECTION: PRESS CONFERENCE OR SPEECH

LENGTH: 3060 words

HEADLINE: STAKEOUT FOLLOWING THEIR MEETING WITH PRESIDENT BUSH

SPEAKERS: SENATOR PHIL GRAMM (R-TX); SENATOR KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON (R-TX); AND LEADERS OF THE TEXAS BAR

LOCATION: WHITE HOUSE DRIVEWAY, THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON D.C.

BODY:
SEN. GRAMM: Well, let me first thank everybody that came here today from Texas. We have Democrats and Republicans, people who have served our state and who know Priscilla Owens (sic). We have people who served on the Texas Supreme Court with her, people who have been very much involved in making our state one of the greatest states in the Union, who have come today to endorse Priscilla.

I guess I would have to say that normally when a decision is made to take on someone who has been nominated, what you normally see is people take something and take it completely out of context. But what is happening here is that basically things are being made up. A picture is being painted that is totally inaccurate, where there's no basis for it whatsoever. Priscilla Owens is a brilliant lawyer, an outstanding judge, has been elected statewide in our state twice, has been endorsed by every major newspaper in our state when she has run for the Supreme Court. And the picture that is being painted of her is simply not accurate. And we are at a point now where we're trying to let people who know her, who served with her, who care about her, make it clear to people in Washington who don't know her as well exactly how they feel. And that's why they're here today, and I'm proud to be here with them. SEN. HUTCHISON: Let me just say that I think the meeting that we had today with the president and this very bipartisan group of formerly elected Democratic officials as well as Republican officials, state bar presidents, really shows the commitment that we all have to the president to make sure that he gets his nominees through the Senate. He has the right to have hearings and action on his nominees to these federal courts: the district courts and the appellate court. And, in fact, I am sorry to say the Senate has been dragging its feet. And I think this is depriving the president of one of his very important rights.

I know Priscilla Owen. And I know she is one of the most respected jurists in the state of Texas.

She was number one in her class at Baylor Law School. She made the highest grade on the bar exam when it was given. She has had a stellar record, and I guess the best indication that she has a good record is that she had no opponent in her last race, except for a Libertarian.

So I think that she is well-regarded by the people who know her, and that, I think, should speak very well for her, and that's why we're all here today. We met with the president. He reaffirmed his commitment to go all the way to try to get this very qualified, experienced, respected judge the lifetime appointment to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which she has earned and deserves.

And now we would like for some of the others who are here to speak on her behalf, and I think we're going to start with the former Supreme Court justice Raul Gonzalez.

RAUL GONZALEZ (former justice, Texas Supreme Court): Thank you, Senator.

My name is Raul Gonzalez. I served 14 years on the Texas Supreme Court. I was elected as a Democrat.

I know Priscilla Owen. I had the privilege of serving with Priscilla. She is a person of the highest intellect, highest integrity. And the American Bar Association, which has reviewed her record on objective criteria, have -- has unanimously rated her highly qualified, and that is almost unheard of.

So I am here to appeal to the Judiciary Committee to give her a fair hearing, get to know Priscilla, because if you examine her record on an objective basis, you will find what we know, and that is, she is a person of the highest moral character, the highest -- the highest -- judicial qualifications of any judge. There are certainly no more qualified persons than Priscilla Owen. So I appeal to Democrats and Republicans, independents and to the people out there at large. Give her a fair hearing and approve this nomination.

SEN. HUTCHISON: Thank you, Justice.

Attorney General -- oh. (Off-mike cross talk.)

LYNN LIBERATO (former president, State Bar of Texas): It's okay.

Hi. My name is Lynn Liberato, and I'm the former president of the State Bar of Texas, and along with Laredo Mayor Betty Flores, Judge Gonzalez and others, I'm a Democrat and have always been a Democrat.

But I should also tell you that I'm an appellate lawyer who's practiced in front of Judge Owen for many years now. And even though I've lost some cases -- and I've won a few -- I've always really felt like I've gotten a fair shake from her. She is the kind of judge that I'm always glad to appear in front -- because I know that she's going to listen to me, that I'm dealing with her on a level playing field. And I would be proud to have her on the bench.

I would look forward to appearing in front of her. I think that most of my colleagues feel the same way. She is -- on top of all that, I know her personally, also. She's just a really fine, fine person. So it's an honor for me to be able to stand here in front of you and others and give my hundred-percent support for her nomination.

Thank you.

JOHN HILL (former chief justice, Texas Supreme Court): Good morning. I'm

John Hill. I'm from Houston, Texas. I served as chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court and as attorney general of the state of Texas and secretary of state. So I've got a few political scars. I know a rodeo when I see one, and it looks like that's what's about to begin up here.

I really -- just taking off all my judiciary and public service, I'm, for one, pretty fed up with, and I think the American people are, with this process whereby we go to war in the Judiciary Committee against a qualified nominee simply because of the politics of the situation. And I can't imagine why anyone would oppose Priscilla Owens based upon the opinions that she's written. And that's the charge against her, is that if you read her opinions, that they pursue some sort of political agenda on her part.

She's not political. She ran for this office. She's not running for governor or attorney general or anything else. She was asked by a lot of people to put her name in the pot for this, and look what's happening. She just has to go through a lot of explanations of all of these opinions. I can tell you, as someone who watches the Supreme Court opinions pretty closely, I think I know something about putting an opinion together. If you'll look at her opinions and be fair about it, they don't reflect anything except a judge who's trying to follow the law as it's written.

She is a stickler for legislative intent. She is a stickler for interpreting the statute as she believes that it's been written. She does stand up for the precedent set by the United States Supreme Court and by the Texas court. That is mainstream jurisprudence. She is a mainstream jurist. And she -- we ought to rise above his and give her the nod she deserves so that she can go to the Senate floor.

We're up here to try to help make that happen. Thank you.

MICHAEL WILLIAMS (chairman, Texas Railroad Commission): Good afternoon. I'm Michael Williams. I'm chairman of the Railroad Commission of Texas. And back home, that's the agency that regulates the Texas oil and gas industry.

At this moment, I also happen to be on a ballot back home, but it was important for me to leave Texas to come here in order to express my support for Judge Owen. You know, as somebody who has -- who guides an agency that is also sometimes a litigant, and also sometimes has to go before an appellate tribunal, it's important to have somebody who has the integrity that Justice Owen has. It's also important to have somebody who has the work ethic that she has to work through the cases, to understand the law, and then to apply it in the appropriate fashion. It's also extremely important for me to have somebody who obviously shares the values of the people of not only Texas, but the people of America.

And so I came here today, even though, you know, maybe there may have been staffers back home that would have thought that I should have been spending time making sure that I get reelected to a six-year term. But it was extremely important for me to come here not only to support the president and his nominee, but also to tell -- to say to members of the Senate and members of the Judiciary Committee that we believe it's extremely important that you give Priscilla a fair hearing, a quick hearing, and that you then confirm this nominee. And I just simply wanted to come here and say that. And thank you for your time.

SEN. HUTCHISON: In addition to Mayor Betty Flores, the mayor of Laredo, we also have -- everyone else here is a former state bar president -- Republicans, Democrats, Independents. And I think it shows the support that Priscilla Owen has from the people who know her best, and I think it's a great show of strength that we have had this many very fine Texans come to Washington to meet with the president and talk about how we can move this nomination forward.

Any questions?

Q Senator, have you and Senator Gramm worked to set up meetings between Justice Owen and some of the senators on the Judiciary Committee?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Yes, we have.

Q With who?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Yes, we have met with Senator Feinstein and Senator Specter, Senator Collins. We'll be meeting with Senator Snowe and Senator Feingold, and are looking forward to a meeting with Senator Biden. And as we go down the way, we're going to do everything we can so that the members of the Judiciary Committee have an opportunity to visit with Priscilla and ask her the questions that have been raised by some of these outside interest groups.

Q What are they telling you about your chances? How's it going to go for -- if next week is the current schedule?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Well, I would say that none of the Democrats on the committee have made a decision. They are, I think, giving her -- the ones that we've met with -- oh, and Senator Kohl -- have given her quite a fair hearing.

They've asked questions, raised the issues that they have been hearing from the outside groups about. And so no one's made commitments, but I'm just very hopeful that after the hearing, it will be clear that Priscilla Owen has upheld the law of Texas. And she is a strict constructionist; she's not a judicial activist. And what the legislature writes she is doing everything in her power to interpret.

Q Senator, what did the president say to you today?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Oh, the president said that he was totally committed to this fine nominee. He's very frustrated with the lack of response to his nominees by the Senate. He has, I think, over 70 nominations still pending. The appellate-court-judge nominees are particularly moving slowly, and he thinks that it is time for the Judiciary Committee to do what Attorney General John Hill just said, and that is, he has the right to make these nominations. There should be an expedited procedure on them so that we can have these benches filled. We have backlogs, especially in Texas, on the Western District and the Southern District, and we need to have these nominees moved through in all the circuits and district courts in America so that we don't have overworked judges and prosecutors trying to do the jobs of judges that are not there because they haven't been confirmed.

Q Senator, what's your own view on why the Senate's being so sluggish in moving forward on these nominations, including Justice Owen? And why do you feel this is all -- (off mike)?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Well, I think this is the slowest movement that we have ever seen, and I can only surmise that they are trying not to fill these slots any more than they're absolutely forced to do. But what we're trying to do, of course, is get these vacancies filled so that the work loads will be able to be cut back.

Q Senator, let me ask you a quick question on homeland security. I'm sorry to change the subject here. Some members of the House seem to think that the Coast Guard and the Secret Service and FEMA shouldn't be under the Department of Homeland Security and should be -- do you think that it's a good idea for them to be in Homeland Security, or do you that they should remain where they are?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Yes, I do think that more consolidation would be good in the Office of Homeland Security, particularly the Coast Guard, which is a very important part of our transportation security.

It should be under Homeland Security. We now know that there are potential terrorist attacks from incoming ships. I think the Coast Guard being in the Department of Transportation is not a fit at this point. I think they should take a major role in homeland security, and I think just like the Transportation Security Agency, which is going to be the oversight for all the transportation infrastructure security, they should be under the Office of Homeland Security.

With regard to the Secret Service, I think the president has to make that decision. That is a part of his detail that protects the presidency, and he would be in the best position to make that decision. And I'm going to support him on that.

And certainly, I think the disaster -- the FEMA being in the Office of Homeland Security is a good thing. I mean, how are you -- FEMA responded to New York on 9/11, and it was a seamless move. So, having it under one department so that whether it's a terrorist act or a natural act, I think is just fine.

Q Senator, one more on the Owen nomination. Do you find it at all ironic that the frustration you're expressing today is similar to what former President Clinton said when he was in office about your opposition and Senator Gramm's opposition to the Enrique Moreno nomination some years ago?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Well, we gave the reasons for that. And he was not nominated until the very last part of the Clinton administration. He did not have a written record. And he was not really forthcoming in some of his judicial views. I think that is a different case from Priscilla Owen, who has quite a written record, and a good one. And I think because of all the people standing behind me, you can see that she is a respected jurist and people do know what kind of judge she's going to be.

Q Senator, you're in a position today of defending someone who Alberto Gonzales himself, the White House counsel, actually criticized in one of her opinions and called it judicial activism. It was an opinion on parental notification. How can -- how do you explain the defense of her when the White House counsel has had that opinion --

SEN. HUTCHISON: Well, President Bush's White House counsel has the utmost respect for Justice Owen. He was instrumental in making her appointment because even when he disagreed with her, he respected her opinion. And I think he is in the best position to make a judgment on her overall judicial demeanor and qualification.

There isn't a judge -- and I'm sure that Justice Gonzalez and Justice -- former Justice Hill would agree -- you don't agree with any judge all the time. If you do, you probably aren't a very good judge.

Q So you think his assessment of her opinion as judicial activism is probably wrong?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Oh, no. I think that on a particular case, he thought she was wrong, and he stated so plainly. You could take any number of opinions where any judge might write an opinion that is pretty direct about what they think of the other person's view. But I think when Justice Gonzalez made the recommendation for Justice Owen to take the Fifth Circuit appointment, he took the whole record into account and decided that she was the most qualified.

JUSTICE GONZALEZ: Senator, in that connection, I think Alberto Gonzales has stated today and in other times that that statement and that opinion has been taken grossly out of context. And I think it serves you well to talk to Judge Gonzales and look at the opinion yourself and look at the context in which he meant the statement. He has not for one moment accused Justice Owen of being a judicial activist. That statement has been taken out of context by those people who do not support Justice Owen, and I would appeal to you to read the opinion, look at the context in which it was said, and call Alberto Gonzales and he'll tell you himself that he has the highest respect for Judge Owen or he would not have recommended her to the president.

SEN. HUTCHISON: Thank you.

Q Senator? Senator?

SEN. HUTCHISON: I'm sorry. I have a military construction bill that I understand is going to be on the floor in 15 minutes.

Q On the nomination of Tony Garza?

SEN. HUTCHISON: Yeah, let me just quickly. I am so very pleased that it appears that Tony Garza is going to be the next ambassador to Mexico. I cannot think of a more qualified person. And particularly, I have to say having someone who has served as a county judge in a border community will give a new perspective to a relationship with Mexico that I think is very important. The border communities have felt sort of left out of the processes many times. And I will assure you that Tony Garza is going to be a person who will represent our country and represent the views of our country very well, but from a perspective of experience and knowledge of the problems on both sides of the border that I have never seen before in a nominee.

Thank you.

MR. WILLIAMS: If I could, obviously Commissioner Garza and I have served together on the railroad commission in Texas since January of 1999. And while I hate to see Tony leave the commission, it is obviously a great thing for the United States and obviously for the relationship between us and Mexico to have him being named the ambassador to Mexico. I mean, I -- he has an enormous amount of experience with regards to the relationship between both the U.S. and Mexico. He knows something -- there's something unique about that relationship, that it's also about the significant importance of energy and the role that Mexico and the U.S. can play in making sure that both the U.S. and Mexico have sound energy futures.

And so I am extremely pleased and happy that the president has made this nomination. And while I hate to see him leave the commission, it'd be good for, obviously, Texas, the United States and Mexico as well to have Tony join the diplomatic corps as the ambassador -- next ambassador to Mexico.

Thank you.

Q Thank you.

By all means, we want Chuck and Company in, and we will work to that end.

On another note: might DOJ host the next coalitions meeting on Monday? I am out of town Thursday Friday, Monday, Tuesday. I thought it would be good if you would host everyone on Monday; I think having them to the DOJ is a sign of

the high regard we hold the groups in; and, it lets you chair the meeting, which gives the overall coalition effort a boost.

Are you up to having Kay invite everyone to DOJ Monday?

He told me that if there is material about a judicial nomination having ruled on a gun issue they would be involved but they will not engaged on the

Hi Coddy,

Attached is the draft copy for the tickets and program for the July 25
Greensboro event for your review and approval.

We are following the same format as with our previous events, and are in the process of confirming a few program particpants and working on our donor listing.

We are not planning to use any logos, photos, etc... on the tickets and programs -- just a simple layout and an elegant typestyle.

If approval is possible by this Friday, we would appreciate it.

Many thanks,

Note several things about this article -- the fact that the Christian Daughter's intervention could moot the case, the fact that Judge Goodwin wanted to make the Supreme Court catch a bullet, and the arrogance with which Goodwin refers to those that disagreed with the decision.

Religious Beliefs May Moot Case on Pledge of Allegiance

By James Gordon Meek
L.A. Daily Journal Staff Writer

July 15, 2002

WASHINGTON -- The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals judge who wrote the holding that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional said on Friday that the whole matter could become moot because of new developments in the case.

Last week, the mother of the girl at the heart of the ruling hired lawyers from Foley & Lardner to tell the public that she and her daughter are Christians who don't agree with the decision.

The lawsuit was filed by the girl's father, Michael Newdow, an atheist who is not married to her mother.

Judge Alfred T. Goodwin, the judge on the appeals court who wrote the opinion, said the mother's legal intervention is a "significant" development that "may very well moot out" the whole case.

Erwin Chemerinsky, a USC Law School professor, said the judge might be right.

"If the mother is deemed to represent her child and decides not to go forward - to change their position - and this is deemed to make the case moot, then the case would be vacated and dismissed," Chemerinsky said. "But it's impossible at this stage to determine how likely that is."

Chemerinsky cited a Supreme Court case, U.S. v. Munsingwear, 340 U.S. 36 (1950), which determined that, if a case becomes moot, then a lower-court decision is vacated. On the other hand, if the case is settled, the lower-court matter wouldn't be vacated.

Goodwin, a senior judge, expressed disappointment at the prospect of the pledge case evaporating before it reaches the high court.
"It may be that the Supreme Court has dodged a bullet, which I was kind of hoping they would not be able to dodge," Goodwin said. "I was hoping they would have a chance to clean up some of their own rhetoric and write a good, cohesive statement on where we stand on some of these liturgical phrases in our patriotic imagery."
Goodwin also offered his reaction to a report by the Daily Journal that 9th Circuit Judge Stephen Reinhardt had criticized his decision to stay the order after coast-to-coast anger over the ruling exploded in the media.
"It is one thing for a court to be unpopular because its judges have views with which the public or politicians disagree," Reinhardt wrote in an internal memo last month. "It is another for a court to lack the courage of its convictions."

Goodwin said he had since spoken with his colleague and worked out their differences, lamenting the memo's being leaked.
He explained the stay order was an effort to deflect heat from the other 9th Circuit judges.
"All I was trying to do was get the phones to stop ringing," he said. "It was fire control. We were trying to stop the chaos of all these mostly uninformed [people] calling in."

Since the June ruling, political leaders, including President Bush, have used the case as an example of the liberal leanings of the court and a reason not only to confirm more "common sense" judges to federal courts but also to break up the 9th Circuit once and for all.
Goodwin, a Nixon appointee, dismissed talk in the capital's power corridors of finding a way for the Senate to impeach or otherwise remove him and Reinhardt, a liberal Carter appointee who concurred in the pledge opinion.

"That's exactly what the Taliban would do with dissidents in their little theocracy," Goodwin said.
Goodwin joked that, although the pledge story knocked the Martha Stewart insider-trading allegation headlines off front pages, the domestic doyenne hasn't sent him any flowers in thanks.
"She owes me a bouquet," he quipped.

HEADLINE: West Wing suits Utahn

BYLINE: By Sharon HaddockDeseret News staff writer

BODY:
ALPINE -- Jay Leno's stream of jokes about President George W. Bush's intellect aren't deserved, according to a White House insider with Utah ties.

He isn't indecisive. And he isn't slow-witted, says Kyle Sampson, a former Utah County man who's currently one of six associate legal counselors to the president.

"All day he sits in the Oval Office and makes the tough decisions," he said. "You know they're the tough ones or they wouldn't make it to the Oval Office. He listens. He cuts to the heart of the matter and he makes a decision. He is amazingly astute." Sampson said White House staffers bristle when the president is publicly attacked -- but Bush takes it well.

"I know up close he's really trying to do the right things for the right reasons," he said. "He doesn't deserve the ridicule or the pundits."

Bush doesn't hand over the reins to Vice President Dick Cheney either, Sampson said. "The president is the president and no one knows that more than the vice president," he said.

Sampson has been working in the West Wing for 18 months, brought on board as a special assistant to the president after he'd worked for U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and with Cheney's daughter, Elizabeth, helping select lawyers to fill the slots in various governmental agencies.

He'd put together lists of potential candidates, pare it to a short list and then present the candidates to the president. Bush would then announce the name and Sampson would help see the process through. He helped pick a deputy attorney general, an FBI director, a drug czar and a solicitor general.

"I quickly found that the secret was to first decide what you want and then find the person who fit that bill. You had to have that determined first because you'd get a flood of referrals from every senator and every politician out there."

Sampson divides his time between overseeing the ongoing and potential litigation involving the environmental portfolio, seeing that gifts or solicitations to the president are legally acceptable and continuing to help with judicial selection.

There's also a lot of additional assignments that are handed out at the discretion of Al Gonzales, Sampson's boss.

"It's interesting because a lot of what I do involves negotiating that is challenging because you're working with egos, special interests and a variety of perspectives."

Typically, Sampson starts his day with a 5 a.m. jog and a session with the Washington Post. He's in staff meeting in the West Wing by 8 a.m. and taking care of business by 8:45.

"It's all very difficult and very important and the answers are needed just like that," he said, snapping his fingers.

When he meets with President Bush he's usually taking in a binder full of carefully researched information. "He's got these little half-glasses and he'll drop them, look over them at you and question you if there's a problem. It's very much a back- and-forth dialogue."

Sampson, who grew up in American Fork and graduated from Brigham Young University in 1993, never really aspired to the White House, but he's enjoying his ride.

"I've been told the average tenure for a White House staff member is 18 months. I've had 18 months and I love it," he said. "It's intense. I'm on call all of the time but it's a once-in-a-lifetime thing. I love the job."

Sampson was part of Bush's second meeting on the president's first work day on Jan. 21, 2000. He also was in the White House Sept. 11 and remembers that day as frightening, chaotic and emotionally draining.

"It also gave new purpose to my work. I think the whole country looked at everything differently and wanted to help. I was lucky enough to be a position to do so."

He says the pace of the job is very similar to that portrayed on the popular television show "The West Wing" except that he and other staff members don't walk around as much.

"We just shoot off an e-mail," Sampson said.

He's aware that people are fairly impressed when he tells them what he does and who he works with during the day, but he doesn't dwell on it or count on any permanence.

"I get respect from my family and friends and colleagues, from everyone but my wife," he said. "And I've been told most guys in this job burn out, get fired or accept a better offer."

We need to discuss this.

In the last three Administrations, 60 of the 65 circuit court nominees (92%) submitted during the first two years of the Presidency were confirmed in the first two years.

What They Are Saying About Justice Priscilla Owen:

ú &Although we profess different party affiliations and span the spectrum of views of legal and policy issues, we stand united in affirming that Justice Owen is a truly unique and outstanding candidate for appointment to the Fifth Circuit.8) Darrell E. Jordan on behalf of fifteen former Presidents of the State Bar of Texas in a letter to Chairman Leahy, July 15, 2002 ú ".... Justice Owen,s lifelong record is one of accomplishment and integrity. She is one of the few judicial nominees to receive a unanimous +well qualified, rating from the American Bar Association." - Dallas Morning News, editorial, February 10, 2002.

ú &A conservative, Owen has the proper balance of judicial experience, solid legal scholarship and real-world know-how to continue to be an asset on the high court.8 - Houston Chronicle, editorial, September 24, 2000

ú &Ms. Owen is a well-liked and highly respected jurist. Her legal colleagues in both parties, call her fair, reasonable and +smart as a whip.,8) Dallas Morning News, editorial, July 11, 2002

ú &But it,s been more than a year since the president nominated her, and the Senate Judiciary Committee, chaired by Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., should give Owen a full, fair hearing(and then vote.8) Austin American Statesman, editorial, July 15, 2002

ú &Justice Owen is a woman of integrity who has a profound respect for the rule of law and our legal system. She takes her responsibilities seriously and carries them out diligently and earnestly(Justice Owen is a role model for me and for other women attorneys in Texas. - Former law clerk, Lori R.E. Ploeger, letter to Chairman Leahy, June 27, 2002 ú &Undoubtedly, Justice Owen has an understanding of and commitment to the availability of legal services to those who are disadvantaged and unable to pay for such legal services. It is that type of insight and empathy that Justice Owen will bring to the Fifth Circuit.8) Immediate past president of Legal Aid of Central Texas, Hector DeLeon letter to Chairman Leahy, June 26, 2002

ú &Based on my knowledge of Justice Owen for the past 30 years, I believe that you simply cannot make a more solid choice for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.8 - Herbert H. Reynolds, Baylor University President and former Chair of the Texas Commission on Judicial Efficiency, Letter to All Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, March 25, 2002.

ú &Justice Owen,s stellar academic achievements and professional experience are remarkable.8 - Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison Letter to Chairman Leahy, March 15, 2002.

ú "Justice Owen is eminently qualified to serve on the Fifth Circuit bench, having served with distinction since 1995 as a member of the Supreme Court of Texas and as an accomplished attorney in private practice for almost 20 years prior to that time." - Senators Gramm and Hutchison Letter to Chairman Leahy, October 12, 2001.

ú "+She's what Bush said (in nominating her): She tries to follow the legislative will in every case and apply the law, not invent it,, he said." - Tom Phillips, Chief Justice, Texas Supreme Court, Houston Chronicle, May 10, 2001.

ú &Always knowledgeable of the facts and the law, she also exercised the cooperation and professionalism in her conduct and respect for witnesses, parties, opposing counsel, and the Court that is so often missing from advocates." - Attorney Jon David Ivey Letter in Support of Justice Owen,s Nomination, May 23, 2001.

ú "+She's a precise questioner,, Hunt says. +She couldn't be that way unless she had done her homework and studied.," - Texas Lawyer, May 14, 2001, statement by Appellate Specialist Don Hunt, with Mullin Hoard Brown Langston Hunt & Joy in Lubbock.

1. The VPA is not really an "immunity" statute, which is term used in HHS document. Rather, it simply alters the minimum standard of liability from negligence to gross negligence. Question: how much will that help volunteer organizations? (note that some do not view the standards as particularly different in application)

2. What are the likely pitfalls/criticisms of extending that protection to organizations?

3. Relatedly, the Emerson Act applied to organizations; have there been any problems with that? Has that been viewed as a success?

4. Are there volunteer health care organizations that provide free abortions that would be covered by this kind of bill?

Okay, since you have all been there before, I know you will understand this when I tell you our dinner with Karl and Ken has been changed from July 31 to Thursday, Aug. 8, 2002. We hope you can still make it.

Please let me know if you are able to attend by Aug. 5. Thank you.

Sorry about the confusion.

We want to thank all of you for the help you have provided PFA over the past year. As you know, trying to get a new organization off the ground can be difficult at times and with your time, assistance, and patience, we think we have made great strides.

We are having a reception/dinner on Wednesday, July 31 with Karl and Ken for PFA Members. We would like you to join us as our guests. We know your schedules are busy, if you would like to come by for cocktails and not stay for dinner, that is fine, or vice versa. The only thing is, since this is a small dinner and there will be assigned seats we will need to know by Monday, July 29 if you will be staying for dinner.

Here are the details:

Wednesday, July 31
6pm cocktails
6:30 dinner

The Oval Room
800 Connecticut Avenue

We hope to see you on the 31st!

Subject: from Tony Snow

SNOW: Well, let me switch gears a little bit. You're also on the Judiciary Committee. Priscilla Owens, who is a judge in Texas, a member...
BIDEN: Yes.
SNOW: ... is now under consideration. Do you think, A, she's going to get through the committee and, B, she'll get a vote on the Senate floor?
BIDEN: I think she'll--I don't know if she'll get through the committee. We're having her hearing on Tuesday.
As you know, she's very well-known and, like all well-known judges, left or right, fairly controversial. I have had all kinds--I've read all kinds of things for her and against her.
I'm going to be going to her hearing on Tuesday, and it's hard to tell right now. I wouldn't want to second-guess that. I've voted on over 1,100, almost 1,200 judges, and I've only voted no nine times. And so, you know, it's going to--they're going to have to make the case why she shouldn't be on the court.
HUME: Well, Senator, do you think, based on what you've read and know so far, that this woman appears to have the background, the temperament and the experience to be on that court for which she's been nominated?
BIDEN: Well, she seems to have the intellectual background. The real question, Brit, is her temperament. I have read some of her cases. She seems to reach pretty far, in terms of going beyond what the law states on its face. But again, I think she should have a chance...
HUME: So she's an activist?
BIDEN: I think she should have a chance to make her case before I start making a judgment about her.
SNOW: Do you worry about the tone of some of the attacks on her so far?
BIDEN: I do, but, you know, we went through that for that last--I've been doing this now for a long time. That is, you know, par for the course, on both sides of the aisle.
As some of you may remember, I'm among the few guys that have been beat up by the left and the right, in terms of how we should approach judges. I think we should tone all this down. And I think Republicans should have toned it down too.

But we are who we are. It doesn't surprise me. If your question is am I surprised, no, I'm not surprised.

Potential Volunteers:

On behalf of USA Freedom Corps, thank you for talking with representatives of the many non-profit organizations who joined us at the service fair in the Indian Treaty Room and at the Fitness Run. Thank you also for taking the important step of signing up to start volunteering with one or more of these organizations.

We have been following up with the organizations and know that many of you have started participating or have signed up for training with their service programs. Last month almost 60 White House staff members participated in a Habitat for Humanity build in Northern Virginia) helping to construct nine homes for low-income families.

For those of you who haven,t gotten started yet, we wanted to suggest that now would be an excellent time to do so. Many of the organizations you signed up with are contacting you directly, but if you haven,t heard from the organizations you are interested in or have misplaced their information, we have included a list of contact names and numbers at the end of this email to help you follow up. Our office will continue touching base with the organizations and with you via phone and email to keep up to date on our progress. In the meantime, please also feel free to drop us a line and let us know what you are up to.

Many thanks again for your interest in helping to answer the President,s Call to Service, and for your support of the USA Freedom Corps.

Potential Volunteers:

On behalf of USA Freedom Corps, thank you for talking with representatives of the many non-profit organizations who joined us at the service fair in the Indian Treaty Room and at the Fitness Run. Thank you also for taking the important step of signing up to start volunteering with one or more of these organizations.

We have been following up with the organizations and know that many of you have started participating or have signed up for training with their service programs. Last month almost 60 White House staff members participated in a Habitat for Humanity build in Northern Virginia) helping to construct nine homes for low-income families.

For those of you who haven,t gotten started yet, we wanted to suggest that now would be an excellent time to do so. Many of the organizations you signed up with are contacting you directly, but if you haven,t heard from the organizations you are interested in or have misplaced their information, we have included a list of contact names and numbers at the end of this email to help you follow up. Our office will continue touching base with the organizations and with you via phone and email to keep up to date on our progress. In the meantime, please also feel free to drop us a line and let us know what you are up to.

Many thanks again for your interest in helping to answer the President,s Call to Service, and for your support of the USA Freedom Corps.

Potential Volunteers:

On behalf of USA Freedom Corps, thank you for talking with representatives of the many non-profit organizations who joined us at the service fair in the Indian Treaty Room and at the Fitness Run. Thank you also for taking the important step of signing up to start volunteering with one or more of these organizations.

We have been following up with the organizations and know that many of you have started participating or have signed up for training with their service programs. Last month almost 60 White House staff members participated in a Habitat for Humanity build in Northern Virginia) helping to construct nine homes for low-income families.

For those of you who haven,t gotten started yet, we wanted to suggest that now would be an excellent time to do so. Many of the organizations you signed up with are contacting you directly, but if you haven,t heard from the organizations you are interested in or have misplaced their information, we have included a list of contact names and numbers at the end of this email to help you follow up. Our office will continue touching base with the organizations and with you via phone and email to keep up to date on our progress. In the meantime, please also feel free to drop us a line and let us know what you are up to.

Many thanks again for your interest in helping to answer the President,s Call to Service, and for your support of the USA Freedom Corps.

Priscilla Owen

Today,s Presidential Action:

President George W. Bush today met with Justice Priscilla Owen, nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, and a bipartisan group of her supporters from Texas. Justice Owen was scheduled to have a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee this week, but after one year of delay, her hearing has been postponed again. She is an accomplished jurist of exceptional integrity, character, and intellect and an extraordinarily well-qualified nominee. She deserves a hearing from the Judiciary Committee and a prompt confirmation.

? Justice Owen,s integrity and accomplishments have earned her the respect of her colleagues and the people of Texas.
? Justice Owen has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court since first being elected in 1994.
? During her reelection bid in 2000, every major newspaper in Texas endorsed her, and she was reelected by an overwhelming majority.
? A bipartisan group of 15 past presidents of the State Bar of Texas have written to Chairman Leahy urging an affirmative vote by the Judiciary Committee.
? Democrat former Texas Supreme Court Justices Raul Gonzales and Rose Spector wrote to Chairman Leahy on behalf of Justice Owen.
? Tom Phillips, Chief Justice of the Texas Supreme Court has characterized Justice Owen,s work as fair and diligent.) Houston Chronicle, May 10, 2001
? The American Bar Association has unanimously rated Justice Owen & well qualified,8 its highest possible rating. This ABA rating has been called the &Gold Standard8 by Democrats on the Judiciary Committee.

? Justice Owen has superb professional and academic credentials.
? Justice Owen practiced commercial litigation in Texas for 17 years before becoming a judge and was a partner at the national law firm of Andrews & Kurth.
? Justice Owen graduated cum laude from Baylor University and Baylor Law School and was a member of the Law Review at Baylor Law School.
? Justice Owen earned the highest grade on the Texas Bar Exam.

? Justice Owen has demonstrated a strong commitment to her community.
? Justice Owen has served as the Texas Supreme Court Liaison to statewide committees regarding legal services to the poor and pro bono legal services.
? She was part of a committee that successfully encouraged the Texas Legislature to enact legislation that has resulted in millions of dollars per year in additional funds for providers of legal services to the poor.
? She was instrumental in organizing a group known as Family Law 2000 that seeks to find ways to educate parents about the effect the dissolution of a marriage can have on their children and to lessen the adversarial nature of legal proceedings when a marriage is dissolved.

? Justice Owen has the strong support of her home state Senators. Senators Hutchison and Gramm wrote to Chairman Leahy, &Justice Owen is eminently qualified to serve on the Fifth Circuit bench(8

? The people of the 5th circuit in Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi need Justice Owen on the bench. Justice Owen is the kind of judge that the people of the 5th Circuit need on the bench) an experienced jurist who follows the law and uses good common sense. She,s been nominated to a seat that has been classified as a &judicial emergency8 by the Judicial Conference of the United States, one of 36 such emergencies around the country.

? The Senate has not acted quickly enough on the President,s judicial nominees. There are presently 93 vacancies in the federal courts . The President has nominated 108 individuals to serve as federal judges, but only 54% of them have been confirmed, and 50 nominees are pending. The President has nominated 32 individuals to the circuit courts, but only 31%, or 10 judges have been confirmed. In the past three administrations, the confirmation rate of circuit court nominees in the first two years in office was 86% for President Clinton, 96% for President Bush and 95% for President Reagan.

Andrew: As I mentioned on the phone, we have two options that we are looking. In each case, Chairman Kittle has a commitment for $10K of plane time to be donated to the state party as an in-kind contribution.
We usually only pay for fuel and the pilots. Chairman Kittle wants to call each FBO operator tomorrow to make sure we get the best deal and thinks he can talk them into donating even more for this special occasion.

1. FBO Operator/Company: First Wing Management
Contact: Matt Hagen
Approx. Cost: $7,000 with $6K In-Kind
Type of plane: Commander on hold for us Ownership of plane: First Wing --- they have planes for timeshare

2. FBO Operator/Company: Indianapolis Aviation
Contact: Tom Auda
Approx. Cost: $7,000 with $6K In-Kind
Type of plane: Commander or King Air Ownership of plane: Indianapolis Aviation - time share also

Thanks,
Craig

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 3645

AN ACT

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for improved procurement practices by the Department of Veterans Affairs in procuring healthcare items.

REV_00348277

division of financial responsibility between the two Departments.

"(D) The stated goal under each procurement preference program, together with an assessment of the performance of the Department toward achievement of that goal, especially with respect to the goal for contracting with businesses that are owned by veterans with service-connected disabilities.

"(2) The Advisory Committee on Prosthetics and Special- Disabilities Programs of the Department shall submit comments on each report under paragraph (1) before the report is submitted under that paragraph, and the Secretary shall include those comments in the report as submitted.

"(i) For the purposes of this subsection:

"(1) The term 'health-care item' includes any item other than services listed in, or (as determined by the Secretary) of the same nature as an item listed in, Federal Supply Classification (FSC) Group 65 or 66.

"(2) The term 'national contract' means a contract for procurement of an item that is entered into by the National Acquisition Center of the Department or another Department procurement activity, as authorized by the Secretary, that is available for use by all Department medical facilities.

"(3) The term 'valid clinical need' means in the professional judgment of an appropriate clinician. Such term applies to health care items, prosthetic appliances, sensory or mobility aids and supplies that are prescribed by a physician for special patient populations such as veterans with spinal cord dysfunction, blindness, amputations, and other veterans included in section 1706(b) of this title.

"(4) The term 'Federal Supply Schedule contract' means a contract that is awarded and administered by the National Acquisition Center of the Department under a delegation of authority from the Administrator of the General Services Administration.

"(5) The term 'emergency procurement' means a procurement necessary to meet an emergency need affecting the health or safety of a person being furnished health-care services by the Department.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on September 30, 2003, and shall apply to procurements by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs after that date.

SEC. 7. IMPROVED ACCOUNTABILITY OF RESEARCH CORPORATIONS ESTABLISHED AT DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTERS.

(a) AUDITS AND IMPROVED ANNUAL REPORT.—Subsection (b) of section 7366 is amended to read as follows:

''(b)(1) Not later than March 1 each year, each such corporation shall submit to the Secretary a report concerning the preceding calendar year. Each such annual report shall include the following:

''(A) A detailed statement of the corporation's operations, activities, and accomplishments during the preceding calendar year.

''(B) A description of each research project or activity for which funds were provided by the corporation during that year or for which funds were provided by the corporation during a preceding year and that is ongoing during the year covered by the report, including, for each such project or activity, the title of the project or activity and a description of the purpose of the project or activity.

"(C) A statement of the amount of funds controlled by the corporation as of the first day, and as of the last day, of the year covered by the report and a statement of the amount of funds received, shown by source, during the year.

"(D) An itemized accounting of all disbursements made during the year.

"(E) The most recent audit of the corporation under paragraph (2).

"(F) Such other information as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to prepare the annual report to congressional committees required under section 7367 of this title.

"(2) A corporation with a balance of funds under its control in excess of $300,000 at any time during a calendar year shall obtain an audit of the corporation for that year. Any other corporation shall obtain an independent audit of the corporation at least once every three years. The report on any such audit shall specifically state whether the corporation audited made any payment, or provided any travel, during the period covered by the audit to a member of the board of directors of the corporation and, if so, the amount and recipient of any such payment or travel.

"(3) Any audit under paragraph (2) shall be performed by an independent auditor and shall be performed in accordance with generally accepted Government auditing standards and in accordance with Office of Management and Budget Circular A–133.

"(4) The Inspector General of the Department shall each year review the most recent audit under paragraph (2) of not less than 10 percent of the corporations described in the first sentence of paragraph (2) and not less than 10 percent of the corporations described in the second sentence of that paragraph. As part of such review, the Inspector General shall determine whether the audit was carried out in accordance with generally accepted Government auditing standards, as required by paragraph (3).".

(b) ANNUAL REPORT OF SECRETARY.—(1) Subchapter IV of chapter 73 is amended—

(A) by inserting after subsection (c) of section 7366 the following:

"§ 7367. Annual report to congressional committees";

and

(B) in the text immediately following the section heading inserted by subparagraph (A)—

(i) by striking "(d)" and inserting "(a)";

REV_00348295

(ii) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "Each such report shall be based on the annual reports submitted by the corporations to the Secretary under section 7366(b) of this title and shall be submitted not later than May 1 of the year following the year covered by such reports."; and

(iii) by striking "The report shall" and inserting the following:

"(b) Each such report shall".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7366 the following new item:

"7367. Annual report to congressional committees.".

(c) EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH RESEARCH CORPORATIONS.—Section 7368 is amended by striking "December 31, 2003" and inserting "December 31, 2006".

SEC. 8. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PARTICIPATION IN REVOLVING SUPPLY FUND PURCHASES.

(a) ENHANCEMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PARTICIPATION.—Section 8121 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) and (c) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively;

(2) by designating the last sentence of subsection (a) as subsection (c); and

REV_00348296

(3) by inserting after paragraph (3) of subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary may authorize the Secretary of Defense to make purchases through the fund in the same manner as activities of the Department. When services, equipment, or supplies are furnished to the Secretary of Defense through the fund, the reimbursement required by paragraph (2) of subsection (a) shall be made from appropriations made to the Department of Defense, and when services or supplies are to be furnished to the Department of Defense, the fund may be credited, as provided in paragraph (3) of subsection (a), with advances from appropriations available to the Department of Defense.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply only with respect to funds appropriated for a fiscal year after fiscal year 2002.

SEC. 9. NAME OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS OUTPATIENT CLINIC, NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT.

The Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic located in New London, Connecticut, shall after the date of the enactment of this Act be known and designated as the "John J. McGuirk Department of Veterans Affairs Outpatient Clinic". Any reference to such outpatient clinic in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the John J. McGuirk Department of Veterans Affairs Outpatient Clinic.

Passed the House of Representatives July 22, 2002.

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 3645

AN ACT

To amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for improved procurement practices by the Department of Veterans Affairs in procuring health-care items.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00348279

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Veterans Health Care and Procurement Improvement Act of 2002".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. References to title 38, United States Code.
Sec. 3. Limitation on use of local contracts for Department of Veterans Affairs procurement of health-care items.
Sec. 4. Enhancements to enhanced-use lease authority.
Sec. 5. Eligibility for Department of Veterans Affairs health care of certain additional Filipino World War II veterans residing in the United States.
Sec. 6. Outpatient dental care for all former prisoners of war.
Sec. 7. Improved accountability of research corporations established at Department of Veterans Affairs medical centers.
Sec. 8. Department of Defense participation in Revolving Supply Fund purchases.
Sec. 9. Name of Department of Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic, New London, Connecticut.

SEC. 2. REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 3. LIMITATION ON USE OF LOCAL CONTRACTS FOR DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS PROCUREMENT OF HEALTH-CARE ITEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8125 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 8125. Procurement of health-care items

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), any procurement of a health-care item by the Department shall be made through the use of a Federal Supply Schedule contract, or a national contract, that meets the requirements of subsection (d).

"(b)(1) Subsection (a) does not apply to a procurement of a health-care item in any of the following cases:

"(A) A procurement that is necessary to meet a current or near-term medical emergency at a medical center.

"(B) A procurement that is for a health-care item that is not listed in the Federal Supply Schedule or as part of a national contract and for which there is a valid clinical need.

"(C) A procurement that is for a specialized health-care item not listed in the Federal Supply Schedule or as part of a national contract and that is to meet the special needs of an individual patient who has one of the special needs identified in section 1706(b) of this title and who has a valid clinical need for the item.

"(D) A procurement that is part of an approved sharing agreement between the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs with demonstrable cost-per-item savings for a health-care item listed on the Federal Supply Schedule or a national contract.

"(E) A procurement that supports a prime contract or a subcontract with a small business concern qualifying for a procurement preference program under section 8 or 15 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637, 644).

"(2) A procurement may be made as authorized under subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1) only if the procurement is specifically authorized in advance in writing by the Secretary. The authority of the Secretary under the preceding sentence may only be delegated to the Deputy Secretary or to an official of the Veterans Health Administration not below the level of a Deputy Under Secretary (or equivalent) acting jointly with a procurement executive of the Department not below the level of an Associate Deputy Assistant Secretary.

"(c) In the case of an emergency procurement of a health-care item as authorized by subsection (b)(1)(A), the quantity of the item procured may not exceed the quantity of that item that is the reasonably foreseeable need for the item at the medical center concerned until resupply can be achieved through procurement actions other than emergency procurement.

"(d) A contract meets the requirements of this subsection if the contract includes—

"(1) provisions referred to as 'preaward and postaward audit clauses'; and

"(2) a provision referred to as a 'price reduction clause'.

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall establish procedures to assure compliance by each Department medical facility with the provisions of this section and with applicable Federal and Department procurement regulations.

"(2) The procedures established by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be designed to maximize health-care item variety and the use of the Federal Supply Schedule.

"(3) The Secretary shall establish and enforce procedures limiting the standardization of items at the local, regional, or national level to provide special patient populations (as identified in section 1706(b) of this title) with the range and types of health-care items required to meet their clinical and quality-of-life needs.

"(4) The Advisory Committee on Prosthetics and Special-Disabilities Programs established under section 543 of this title shall review the procedures established under paragraph (3), including the implementation of those procedures, and shall advise the Secretary when those procedures are not effectively enforced by the Department.

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall establish annual goals for Department medical centers for the purchase of health-care items from Federal Supply Schedule and national contracts meeting the requirements of subsection (d). Such goals shall be designed to maximize the percentage of such purchases that are made through such contracts.

"(2) The Secretary shall establish goals for the Department for procurements from small business concerns qualifying for a procurement preference program under section 8 or 15 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637, 644). Such goals shall be no less than the national goal for each such procurement preference program under either of those sections.

"(3) Achievement of the goals established under this subsection shall be an element in the performance standards for employees of the Department who have the authority and responsibility for achieving those goals.

"(g) A provision of law that is inconsistent with any provision of this section shall not apply, to the extent of the inconsistency, to the procurement of a health-care item for the Department.

"(h)(1) Not later than December 31 each year, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the procurement of health-care items during the preceding fiscal year. Each such report shall include, for the year covered by the report, the following:

"(A) The total dollar amount of all items listed in Federal Supply Classification (FSC) Group 65 or 66 and the total dollar value of the exceptions to subsection (a) under each of subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E) of subsection (b)(1), shown by medical facility.

"(B) A detailed explanation for exceptions to subsection (a), including—

"(i) the rationale for use of emergency procurement at Department medical facilities;

"(ii) the rationale for approval of requests under subsection (b)(1)(B) for procurement of items not listed on the Federal Supply Schedule or on national contracts; and

"(iii) exceptions granted for special health-care needs of veterans with disabilities described in section 1706(b) of this title.

"(C) Analysis of sharing agreements between the Department and the Department of Defense to indicate the basic written sharing initiative and the

Dear Bill,

On behalf of EPA, thank you very much for your inquiry regarding whether EPA is able under our appropriations to fund the purchase of the four jackets used by the President, Secretary Card, Governor Pataki and Administrator Whitman at the Earth Day event at Lake Placid on April 22, 2002. I have had initial conversations with our Office of General Counsel, and we are attempting to determine whether we can in fact pay for the purchase of wearing apparel. It would greatly assist our determination if you can tell us what happened to the jackets after they were worn. Did the individuals retain the jackets (which would seem more like a gift), or were they turned in (which would appera to be less like a gift)?

If we determine that EPA can pay for the jackets, then they would of course be EPA property and would have to be accounted for in our custodial procedures in some way. In the only analogous situation we have unearthed thus far, EPA has paid for certain apparel for on-scene-coordinators (OSCs), but there are several factors in the test used to justify those purchases. In those cases, the argument is furthered by the fact that the apparel can be worn by different OSCs and the fact that the apparel remains government property, not the property of the individual employee. Thus, as you can see, it would be very helpful for EPA to know what happened to the jackets in question. We note that our reasoning as to Governor Pataki may not be the same as applied to the President, Secretary and Administrator. He is, after all, not a federal employee.

I will be in the office until noon on Wednesday, July 17, and then will be on vacation through Tuesday, July 23. I'll return to the office on Wednesday, July 24 and look forward to further discussions with you then.

All the best,
Justina

Ms. Fugh,
I am the accountant for the White House Office and I need to bring an issue to your attention. The EPA agreed to fund costs associated with a visit by President Bush to Lake Placid, NY on April 22 . Part of the money spent for this event went to the purchase of four jackets in the amount of $630. Further details of the purchase can be found below. We need to know if the EPA has an issue with funding the purchase of these jackets before we present the total cost of the event to you and the transfer of funds takes place. Thank you for your attention.

In support of the President

's visit to the Lake Placid, NY region for an Earth Day event on Monday-April 22, 2002, four jackets were purchased, at the request of the advance lead, for use by the principals in an outdoor event.

There were several justifications of this purchase given by the advance lead.
Due to the fact that the event involved the principals walking on a hiking trail, the standard banners used around a stationary podium to provide information on the event could not be used. Rather, the jackets served as banners with information placed on them in the form of a logo. In this case the logo stated the location of the event. Second, due to unusually severe winter conditions, the jackets served as outdoor protection for the inclement weather.

The four principals that were wearing these jackets during the event were the PRESIDENT, Secretary Card, Governor Pataki, and EPA Administrator Whitman.

RNC RESEARCH BRIEFING

RNCResearch@rnchq.org

July 23, 2002

PRISCILLA OWEN

Eminently Qualified . . .
. . . Held Hostage By The Left

". . . [S]he should be confirmed. Justice Owen is indisputably well qualified, having served on a state supreme court for seven years and, prior to her election, having had a well-regarded law practice. So rather than attacking her qualifications, opponents have sought to portray her as a conservative judicial activist." (Editorial, "The Owen Nomination," The Washington Post, July 24, 2002)

OWEN'S DISTINGUISHED RECORD

Justice Owen's Integrity And Accomplishments Have Earned Her The Respect Of Her Colleagues And The People Of Texas.

- Justice Owen has served with distinction as a Justice on the Texas Supreme Court since first being elected in 1994.
- Her reelection bid in 2000 marked the first time a candidate has sought election to a full term on the Texas Supreme Court and failed to draw an opponent from either major political party in the primary race or the general election.
- Every major newspaper in Texas endorsed her reelection bid in November of 2000, and she was reelected by an overwhelming majority.
- Tom Phillips, Chief Justice of the Texas Supreme Court has characterized Justice Owen's work as fair and diligent. (Houston Chronicle, May 10, 2001)

Paid for by the Republican National Committee
310 First Street SE, Washington, DC 20003 – (202) 863-8614 – www.rnc.org

- The American Bar Association has unanimously rated Justice Owen "well qualified," its highest possible rating. This ABA rating has been called the "Gold Standard" by Democrats on the Judiciary Committee.

Justice Owen Has Superb Professional And Academic Credentials.

- Justice Owen practiced commercial litigation in Texas for 17 years before becoming a judge and was a partner at the national law firm of Andrews & Kurth.

- Justice Owen graduated cum laude from Baylor University and Baylor Law School and was a member of the Law Review at Baylor Law School.

- Justice Owen earned the highest grade on the Texas Bar Exam.

Justice Owen Has Demonstrated A Strong Commitment To Her Community.

- Justice Owen has served as the Texas Supreme Court Liaison to statewide committees regarding legal services to the poor and pro bono legal services.

- She was part of a committee that successfully encouraged the Texas Legislature to enact legislation that has resulted in millions of dollars per year in additional funds for providers of legal services to the poor.

- She was instrumental in organizing a group known as Family Law 2000 that seeks to find ways to educate parents about the effect the dissolution of a marriage can have on their children and to lessen the adversarial nature of legal proceedings when a marriage is dissolved.

Justice Owen Has The Strong Support Of Her Home State Senators. Senator Hutchison has written to Senator Leahy that "Justice Owen's stellar academic achievements and professional experience are remarkable."

The People Of The 5th Circuit In Texas, Louisiana And Mississippi Need Justice Owen On The Bench. Justice Owen has been nominated to fill a vacancy on the Fifth Circuit that has been declared a "judicial emergency" by the Judicial Conference of the United States, one of 40 such emergencies around the Nation.

WHAT PEOPLE ARE SAYING ABOUT JUSTICE PRISCILLA OWEN:

- The ABA Gave Owen A Unanimous "Well Qualified" Rating. Justice Owen's lifelong record is one of accomplishment and integrity. She is one of the few judicial nominees to receive a unanimous 'well qualified' rating from the American Bar Association." (Dallas Morning News, editorial, February 10, 2002).

- Former Democrat Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez Labeled Owen As A Person Of The Highest Intellect And The Highest Integrity. "Raul Gonzalez, a Democrat and former Texas Supreme Court justice who served with Justice Owen, echoed those sentiments. 'She is a person of the highest intellect, the highest integrity,' he said. 'Give her a fair hearing and approve this nomination.'" (Christopher Lee, "Bush Stands Up For Judicial Nominee," The Dallas Morning News, July 17, 2002) (emphasis added)

- Justice Gonzalez Described Owen As A Person Of The Highest Moral Character And Claimed That She Has The Highest Judicial Qualifications Of Any Judge. "So I am here to appeal to the Judiciary Committee to give her a fair hearing, get to know Priscilla, because if you examine her record on an objective basis, you will find what we know, and that is, she is a person of the highest moral character, the highest -- the highest -- judicial qualifications of any judge. There are certainly no more qualified persons than Priscilla Owen. So I appeal to Democrats and Republicans, independents and to the people out there at large. Give her a fair hearing and approve this nomination." (Justice Raul Gonzalez, Press Conference With President Bush, July 16, 2002) (emphasis added)

- Owen Is Dedicated To Removing Politics From The Judicial Process. "She has limited her campaign contributions and supported proposals to remove politics from the judicial process." (Dallas Morning News, editorial, October 26, 2000)

- Owen Has The Experience, Intelligence And "Real-World Know-How" To Serve With Distinction In The Federal Judiciary. "A conservative, Owen has the proper balance of judicial experience, solid legal scholarship and real-world know-how to continue to be an asset on the high court." (Houston Chronicle, editorial, September 24, 2000)

- Owen's Achievements And Professional Experience Have Been Characterized As "Remarkable." "Justice Owen's stellar academic achievements and professional experience are remarkable. She earned a cum laude Bachelor of Arts degree from Baylor University and graduated cum laude from Baylor Law School in 1977. Thereafter, she earned the highest score on the Texas Bar Exam." (Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison Letter To Chairman Leahy, March 15, 2002)

- Owen Is "Eminently Qualified To Serve On The Fifth Circuit Bench." "Justice Owen is eminently qualified to serve on the Fifth Circuit bench, having served with distinction since 1995 as a member of the Supreme Court of Texas and as an accomplished attorney in private practice for almost 20 years prior to that time. Her academic and scholarly experience is also exceptional." (Senators Gramm And Hutchison Letter To Chairman Leahy, October 12, 2001)

- Owen Will Apply The Law And Practice Judicial Restraint. "'She's what Bush said (in nominating her): She tries to follow the legislative will in every case and apply the law, not invent it,' he said." (Tom Phillips, Chief Justice, Texas Supreme Court, Houston Chronicle, May 10, 2001)

- Owen Possesses Great Integrity, Character And Morality. "Justice Owen is a superlative individual in every way. She is extremely bright, she possesses great integrity and is equipped with the character and moral virtues necessary for the high office she holds as well as the high office for which she has been nominated." "Based on my knowledge of Justice Owen for the past 30 years, I believe that you simply cannot make a more solid choice for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals." (Herbert H. Reynolds, Baylor University President And Former Chair Of The Texas Commission On Judicial Efficiency, Letter To All Members Of The Senate Judiciary Committee, March 25, 2002)

REV_00348403

- Owen Is "Knowledgeable Of The Facts And The Law," Extremely Cooperative And Professional In Her Conduct. "Justice Owen and I were adversaries for a number of years in an oil and gas case involving a claim for several million dollars. Throughout the extensive discovery and pre-trial process, as well as during the trial, Justice Owen conducted herself in an exemplary fashion. Always knowledgeable of the facts and the law, she also exercised the cooperation and professionalism in her conduct and respect for witnesses, parties, opposing counsel, and the Court that is so often missing from advocates." (Attorney Jon David, Ivey Letter in Support of Justice Owen's Nomination, May 23, 2001)

- Owen Displays The Intelligence And Work Ethic To Be A Solid Addition To The Fifth Circuit Court Of Appeals. "She is smart and has a strong work ethic, which is critical because of the heavy caseload at the 5th Circuit, he says. 'Her pedigree in terms of intellectual ability is excellent,' Alexander says, noting that Owen graduated [in the top of] her class at Baylor University School of Law in 1977." (Texas Lawyer, May 14, 2001, Statement By Doug Alexander, A Partner In Austin's Scott, Douglass & McConnico)

- Owen Has Earned The Reputation Of Being A "Precise Questioner" And Thorough Judge. "'She's a precise questioner,' Hunt says. 'She couldn't be that way unless she had done her homework and studied.'" (Texas Lawyer, May 14,2001, Statement By Appellate Specialist Don Hunt, With Mullin Hoard Brown Langston Hunt & Joy In Lubbock, TX)

JUSTICE PRISCILLA OWEN: THE MYTHS V. THE FACTS

The Partisan Myth

Owen Displays Hostility Toward Reproductive Rights. Kate Michelman, the president of the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL), has said, "'We regard her as someone who exemplifies the most extreme hostility to reproductive rights of any of the nominees that President Bush has named,' Ms. Michelman said." "Justice Owen is an opponent of abortion rights for minors without their parents' permission." (New York Times, April 7, 2002)

The Facts

Owen Has Faithfully Applied The Laws Enacted By The Texas Legislature. Justice Owen has always faithfully applied statutes enacted by the Legislature. Her only role in these cases was to interpret and apply a new statute enacted by the Texas legislature. The statute provides that girls under 18 must notify parents before having an abortion unless a court is notified and finds that the girl is sufficiently mature to make the decision without parental notification.

- The Texas Parental Notification Law Is Consistent With The Supreme Court's Past Abortion Rulings. The law enacted by the Texas Legislature and interpreted by the Texas Courts is consistent with decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court. The U.S. Supreme Court has long held that parental notification statutes are entirely consistent with the constitutional right to abortion the Court established in Roe v. Wade.

REV_00348404

- Disagreement With Owen's Abortion Decisions Have Not Concerned The Validity Of Her Legal Conclusions, Only Minor Interpretive Issues. The Justices on the Texas Supreme Court disagreed about the application of the parental notification statute in certain cases as well as about the proper standard of appellate review. But those were ordinary judicial disagreements about how to interpret a vague statute and what standard to apply in reviewing certain lower-court decisions.

The Partisan Myth

Owen Is Too Closely Tied To Big Texas Corporations. ". . . [L]iberal advocacy groups have raised questions about the relationship of Justice Owen's opinions to donations she received from Texas corporations, including Enron, the Houston energy giant that filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy law." (New York Times, April 7, 2002)

The Facts

Owen Has Rendered Sound Judicial Decisions Regardless Of The Parties Involved In Her Cases. Priscilla Owen has always followed the law to render sound judgments, regardless of whom is arguing before her.

- As An Elected Official, Owen May Legally And Willfully Solicit And Accept Campaign Funds. The Texas Constitution provides that state judges must run for their seats and the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct provides that the candidates may solicit and accept campaign funds.

  ✓ Judicial Recusal Is Not Necessary When Presiding Over Cases Involving Campaign Contributors. It is well established that judicial recusal is neither necessary nor appropriate in cases involving parties or counsel who contributed to that judge's campaign.

  ✓ Elected Judges Often Ascend To The Federal Bench, Including The Fifth Circuit. An elected system of judicial selection is not unique to Texas and has not in the past precluded future appointment to the federal judiciary. Appointees of President Clinton had run and been elected in contested elections: for example, Fortunato "Pete" Benevides and James Dennis, who both now serve on the 5th circuit.

  ✓ Owen Is A Strong Supporter Of Judicial Reform. Justice Owen has long advocated reform of the system of elected judges in Texas.

- Owen Has Received A Wide-Range Of Support During Her Recent Judicial Campaigns. In her elections, Justice Owen was supported by many entities and individuals, some of which made contributions to her campaign committee.

  ✓ Owen Received No Contributions From Enron Or Its Employees During Her Most Recent Campaign. In her most recent election in November of 2000, Justice Owen's campaign received no contributions from Enron, its employees, or its political action fund.

  ✓ In The 1994 Election Cycle, Enron And Its PAC Gave Less Than $9,000 To Owen's Judicial Campaign. In the 1994 election cycle, her campaign committee received approximately $1.2 million in contributions from over 3,000 different contributors. Employees of Enron and its employee-funded political action committee contributed less than $9000 - or less that 1 % - of her contributions. The committee received no corporate contributions from Enron or any Enron-affiliated corporation.

- ✓ Seven Of The Nine Current Texas Supreme Court Justices Have Received Enron Contributions In The Past. Like employees of many corporations, employees at Enron contributed to many political candidates in Texas. In fact, seven of the nine current Texas Supreme Court Justices received Enron contributions, and several of them received more than Justice Owen's campaign committee received.

The Partisan Myth

Owen Has Consistently Ruled In Favor Of Enron Corporation. Justice Owen has consistently ruled in favor of the Enron corporation, a campaign contributor, when they have come before her. She even ruled against a school district and in favor of Enron. (American Lawyer, April 4, 2002)

The Facts

Owen Follows The Law Regardless Of The Parties Involved In The Case At Hand. Priscilla Owen follows the law regardless of who is arguing before her.

- Owen Has Shown No Preference To Enron In Any Of Her Court Rulings. Justice Owen has shown no preference to Enron in her rulings. Of the 14 proceedings in which Enron was a party since Justice Owen took her seat, her vote can be characterized as favorable to Enron in six of the cases and adverse in five cases. With respect to the three remaining cases, one case cannot be characterized either way, one was dismissed by agreement of the parties, and one she did not participate in.

- Owen's 1996 Enron Opinion Was The Unanimous Opinion Of The Court. Justice Owen's opinion in Enron Corp. v. Spring Creek Independent School District, 922 S.W.2d 931 (Tex. 1996), was the unanimous opinion of the court and raises no legitimate questions.

  - ✓ The case was a complex property tax law case: the constitutionality of a property tax statute that allowed market value of inventory to be set on one of two different dates was in question.

  - ✓ Justices Raul Gonzalez and Rose Spector, the two Democrat Justices on the Court at that time, have written to Chairman Leahy to explain the issue in question.

  - ✓ The lawyer who represented a party opposing Enron in this case, Robert Mott, recently was quoted as saying that criticism of Justice Owen for her role in this case is "nonsense" and a "bunch of crap."

The Partisan Myth

Owen Caters To Big Business And Is Anti-Consumer. Justice Owen consistently rules in favor of big business and against consumers, employees, and the environment. "But activists from consumer, environmental and abortion rights groups such as Texans for Public Justice, the Sierra Club and the Texas Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League say they plan to converge on Washington this month to discuss Owen's record with members of the Senate Judiciary Committee." (American Lawyer, April 4, 2002)

The Facts

Owen Has A Clear Record Of Support For Employees, Consumers And The Environment. Justice Owen has a strong record of protecting employees, consumers and the environment. She consistently writes or joins opinions that are in the mainstream and often votes to affirm lower court decisions, respecting the role of lower courts in weighing the evidence.

- Owen Stood Up For Injured Workers And "Deceived" Insurance Agents. Justice Owen has protected employees from accepting blame for on-the-job injuries, and she ruled that insurance agents who had been deceived by their company should have the recourse of the courts.

- Owen Has Held Manufacturers Accountable For Their Behavior. Justice Owen has upheld a manufacturer's duty to make cigarette lighters child resistant; preventing businesses from avoiding lawsuits on business name technicalities; and she ruled to force an insurance company to pay $50,000 under an insurance policy when a gun accidentally discharged.

- Owen Has A Strong Judicial Record On Conservation And Environmental Issues. Justice Owen has upheld conservation measures passed by the Texas Legislature; approved government limits on withdrawals of aquifer water from wells; and favored enforcement of city laws that protect water quality and control pollution.

Phil (and John) --
The third doc below was sent by Robert to you on Monday -- it's a copy of the draft you sent me last week re: your draft instructions to TPO staff. Robert added in the name and location of the two WHO staffers at 18th & G. Other than that, your draft was not changed.
If you can send me back a draft that's ok for the Judge to include in his package to Andy Card tonight, that would be great.
If that's not possible, please let me or Tim know as soon as possible today.
Thanks Phil -- let me know how we can help. --- Ed

Libby, Allison: I'm forwarding very slightly edited versions of three documents that Ed circulated on Friday. These are (1) the cover memo from Judge Gonzales to all WHO staff re. the MOU on transition documents, (2) a cover memo from Ed to OHS staff re. following the Executive Order creating the TPO, (3) Phil Perry's memo to TPO staff re. document procedures. Today's only edits consist (except for changing one or two typos) in adding the names and address of the two "gatekeepers" through whom WH materials will be routed to TPO, i.e., Distie Carstensen and Brook Holladay.
I spoke with Phil Perry earlier today. As I understand it, TPO staffing hasn't started just yet. Also, the MOU which underpins all these arrangements, and which Ed also circulated on Friday, hasn't been finalized and signed yet. Phil seemed to think that the best plan was to get all four documents out (i.e., the three attachments plus the MOU) on Wednesday, when there may be some staff at TPO.

Ed and I have reviewed the three attachments and as far as we're concerned, they're good to go. (That's also true of the MOU.)
So you all know, I've also briefed Distie and Brook this morning on how they're to implement the procedures.
Any questions/comments, call me through Magda (456 1195) or on my cell (494-6163). Thanks, Robert

MEMORANDUM TO OHS STAFF

FROM: EDWARD McNALLY

SUBJECT: TRANSITION PLANNING OFFICE DOCUMENTS

As has been discussed at recent staff meetings, some OHS staff may become involved in preparing materials related to the transition for the new Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Most of these materials will be OHS materials. But some, such as drafts of Governor Ridge's testimony before Congress, may be created for the Governor in his capacity as Director of the Transition Planning Office (TPO) at OMB (established by Executive Order 13267, attached), and not in his capacity at OHS. Furthermore, as the TPO begins to be staffed, you may be receiving written materials created by TPO. E.O. 13267 directs that the "records" of OHS "shall be kept separate" from the records of TPO. In order to ensure compliance with this directive, please observe the following procedures:

• Hard Copies – For purposes of E.O. compliance, you should keep separate files for records which are:

(a) prepared specifically for the use of TPO (including documents prepared for the Governor in his capacity as Director of TPO), and which

(b) have in fact been transmitted to TPO.

For example, copies of testimony and briefing materials used by Governor Ridge in testifying before Congress (as you know he's appearing in his capacity as TPO Director) should be kept separate. Please maintain any such materials in file folders labeled "TPO", and store them separately, e.g., in a separate drawer in a file cabinet. All White House materials that are made available to TPO staff (other than e-mail or e-mail attachments) must first be routed to TPO via Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor.

• E-mail – OMB is making arrangements with its IT personnel to handle e-mail appropriately.

If you have any questions please contract Robert Delahunty, Kate Anderson or myself.

This memorandum is for internal purposes only and is not intended to, and does not, create any right, benefit, trust, or responsibility, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or equity by a party against the United States, its departments, agencies or entities, its officers or employees, or any person.

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL WHO, OVP, NSC, CEA AND OPD EMPLOYEES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

SUBJECT: MANAGEMENT, TRANSMISSION AND STORAGE OF WHITE HOUSE MATERIALS MADE AVAILABLE TO TRANSITION PLANNING OFFICE (TPO) STAFF FOR THE NEW DHS

White House materials may be made available from time to time to the staff of the Transition Planning Office (TPO) that was formed in expectation of the creation of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Because of the sensitivity and confidentiality of such materials, the White House Office (or, as appropriate, other White House entities[1]) will maintain control over such materials even after they have been made available to TPO staff. The attached Memorandum of Understanding sets forth procedures intended to ensure that the relevant White House entities maintain control over any such House materials. This cover memorandum is intended to provide you with a guide to follow when you make White House materials available to TPO staff.

"White House materials" means any written, typed, recorded or graphic matter of any nature whatsoever, regardless of how recorded and whether an original or copy, including information therein, that is originated or received by a White House entity.

The general rules on White House materials made available to TPO staff are as follows:

- You must not make White House materials available to TPO staff other than for TPO's internal purposes.

- All White House materials that are made available to TPO staff (other than e-mail or e-mail attachments) must first be routed to TPO via Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor. That office will ensure that those materials are stamped: "White House-controlled material/Protected from Disclosure."

- OMB is making arrangements with IT personnel so that the same text "White House-controlled material/Protected from Disclosure" will be placed automatically on e-mail sent from White House entity e-mail addresses to TPO e-mail addresses.

[1] "White House entities" means the White House Office, the Office of Policy Development, the National Security Council, all other entities in the Executive Office of the President to whom section 552 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code does not apply, and (with respect to executive materials) the Office of the Vice President.

DRAFT – DELIBERATIVE MATERIAL

MEMORANDUM

TO: Transition Planning Office Staff

FROM: Philip J. Perry
General Counsel

RE: Special Procedures for Documents Made Available to TPO by White House Entities

This memorandum sets forth special procedures for handling of documents made available to the Transition Planning Office (TPO) by White House entities.

From time to time, documents from certain White House entities, including the Office of Policy Development, the National Security Council, the Office of the Vice President or the Office of Homeland Security may be made available for review by TPO personnel. When White House entities make such materials available to TPO, they will do so on a temporary basis only, for limited purposes, and on condition of confidentiality.

The procedures described below will govern TPO staff's handling of such documents. Except as noted below, the policies apply regardless of whether the documents are typed, handwritten or in electronic form. Although many of these documents will be marked "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure," the White House's failure to apply such a marking does not excuse TPO from complying with the following procedures:

- Do not email, fax, or otherwise disclose such documents outside TPO or the White House. These materials are provided only for purposes of internal TPO review.

- Do not make unnecessary copies of such materials.

- Documents made available by White House entities should be kept in separate files that clearly identify the contents as White House Materials. Such materials should not be commingled with other files. (We will make arrangements with our IT personnel to handle email appropriately.)

- Return all documents made available by White House entities, including all copies thereof, to Distie Carstensen or Brook Holladay at 1800 G Street, 9th floor on the date(s) requested for return, and in no circumstances later than the date of termination of the TPO. (We will make proper arrangements for email.)

- Finally, take care regarding the use of email as a means of communicating with White House entities. While email is often the most convenient means of communicating, email can easily be forwarded to persons outside TPO or the White House.

If you have any questions regarding the implementation of these procedures, please contact Kimberley S. Luczynski at 395-7870.

This memorandum is intended only to improve the internal management of the TPO and is not intended to, and does not, create any right, benefit, trust, or responsibility, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or equity by a party against the United States, its departments, agencies or entities, its officers or employees, or any person.

FBO stands for Flight Base of Operations - it is generic name for hangars/arrival gates that are not owned by a big commercial airlines.
First Wing Management is the company that owns the FBO at the airport in Indy at which Karl will be landing - thanks man for hellping us through this (!)

First Wing Management is the owner and operator of the FBO and is donating
the plane to the Indiana State Party. The amount of the in kind donation will be approx. $6,000. The Indiana GOP will pay for the gas and pilot time costing

$1,200.

No i think you're right -
In this case First Wing Management owns the plane as part of a timeshare -
First Wing will basically in-kind to the state party the usual service fees for the plane and make the state party only pay for the pilot and gas.

First Wing will basically in-kind to the state party the usual service fees for the plane and make the state party only pay for the pilot and gas.

thanks again for helping us on this - sorry if it is a pain (!)

This strikes me as equivalent to a charter except that the "charter company" -- owner of the plane which is leased out on time-share basis -- is donating some part of the the cost of the plane to the campaign? Is that accurate? Am I missing something?

FBO stands for Flight Base of Operations - it is generic name for hangars/arrival gates that are not owned by a big commercial airlines.
First Wing Management is the company that owns the FBO at the airport in Indy at which Karl will be landing - thanks man for hellping us through this (!)

First Wing Management is the owner and operator of the FBO and is donating
the plane to the Indiana State Party. The amount of the in kind donation will be approx. $6,000. The Indiana GOP will pay for the gas and pilot time costing $1,200.

Are these charter planes that would be leased by the campaign from a charter company? Or donated by the charter company to the campaign? Or are they planes owned by a corporation that runs a business other than a Liability System" Thursday during a roundtable discussion with medical professionals at High Point University in North Carolina. The proposal, which would require congressional approval, could supersede state laws.

For more health coverage, visit the Online Journal's new Health
Industry Edition at wsj.com/health1, and take a tour2 of the edition.

It faces long odds of passage. Trial lawyers and patients' rights advocates are certain to vigorously oppose the plan.

According to documents released by the administration Wednesday night, the president is calling for a $250,000 cap on noneconomic damages such as pain and suffering, and a new standard that insists that monetary awards reflect a defendant's level of culpability rather than the doctor's or hospital's wealth.

As to punitive damages, which can reach into the millions, Mr. Bush would limit them to cases where defendants are found to have deliberately or maliciously injured the patients; punitive damages would be double the economic damages up to a cap of $250,000 or double the economic damages, whichever is more. The plan wouldn't limit economic damages. The Department of Heath and Human Services also is calling for a new program, called "Early Offers,"
that encourages doctors to offer economic compensation to patients quickly after an injury.

The American Medical Association and other physicians' groups have been pressing for state and federal changes that would stop what they are calling a malpractice-insurance crisis. AMA President-elect Donald Palmisano is expected to attend Thursday's roundtable.

In April, Republican Reps. James Greenwood of Pennsylvania and Christopher
Cox of California introduced a bill that, in addition to capping malpractice damages, would limit contingency fees for lawyers and prohibit punitive damages related to products that won a legitimate approval from the Food and Drug Administration.

The House has yet to take it up, and the president's decision to weigh in on the issue is intended to give Rep. Greenwood's proposal new momentum.
Mr.
Bush's use of the bully pulpit on the issue reflects Republicans' concern that they need to demonstrate action on a health-care issue before the midterm elections.

. . . I want my judges to get a fair hearing. (Applause.) I picked -- I nominated good people to serve on the bench, good, qualified, distinguished Americans -- like Terry Boyle. I put his name out there -- (applause.) I put his name out there 14 months ago, and he can't get a hearing. I nominated a fabulous woman from Texas named Priscilla Owen, a great jurist ranked at the highest rating by the ABA, ran twice statewide in Texas and won. And yet, when you listen to the rhetoric up there, it's all politics in Washington, D.C. They're not willing to give these judges their fair shake and a fair due. It's time to get the Senate in the hands of people who will approve the good jurists I send, so we can have a federal bench that will not -- that will strictly interpret the Constitution of the United States of America. (Applause.) . . .

HEADLINE: Kohl ;
Kohl, Feingold not revealing judicial vote;
Wisconsin senators may play key role

BYLINE: CRAIG GILBERT of the Journal Sentinel staff

BODY:
Washington -- In the latest skirmish over a Bush judicial nominee, Senate Democrats Herb Kohl and Russ Feingold could be key swing votes.

But in interviews this week, neither gave strong hints of how he is leaning.

"My Democratic colleagues on this committee, they have no idea how I may vote," Kohl said.

Texas Judge Priscilla Owen defended herself at a Senate hearing Tuesday against charges by liberal activists and Democratic lawmakers that her decisions from the bench had been dictated by conservative political views. Owen is President Bush's pick for the 5th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans. The battle over her nomination is mainly about abortion. But it is the latest in a series of ideological collisions over the federal judiciary.

Democrats and their interest-group allies say Bush is trying to stock the bench with conservative activists. The White House and its allies on the right say that it's liberals who are politicizing the process, imposing a litmus test on qualified nominees.

Kohl and Feingold both sit on the Judiciary Committee, which considers judicial picks. And both have come to be seen as potential pivots in nomination fights. Kohl is more moderate than some Democrats on the panel, and Feingold is known for breaking party ranks.
Feingold was the only committee Democrat to vote yes when John Ashcroft was nominated for attorney general.

In interviews, the two Wisconsin senators declined to assess the Owen nomination in detail, saying they wanted to review her record, review what she said in the hearing and let the process play out.

But they spoke more generally about how they would approach her case and what standards they were using in the judicial battles that are now a fixture of national politics.

"I'm just trying to figure out where she is," Kohl said. "Is she a person who is likely to become, number one, an activist, and then along with that a very conservative activist? That's not a place where I think I want to go right now in terms of voting for nominees. Or is she a person who's more what I consider to be in the broad mainstream?"

After Kohl heard Owen say she followed the law and not her personal views, he said, "I'm always a little suspect" of such assertions.

Said Kohl: "People have opinions. They're not blank slates. We all do come with our own philosophical opinions. And we apply that to what it is we (do), whether it's legislators or judges."

Kohl, who met with Owen a couple of months ago, said the key question for him was whether Owen's political views were "so conservative that in my opinion she's not close enough to what I consider to be the broad mainstream."

Asked whether holding nominees to that standard disqualifies judges who are not political centrists, Kohl said his definition of mainstream is "pretty broad."

Feingold met with Owen last week. While Feingold's vote last year for Ashcroft -- a man with a starkly different ideology -- drew a lot of attention, he said then and again this week that presidents are due less deference with their judicial picks than with their cabinet picks.

Level of scrutiny

In fact, Feingold said he viewed presidential nominations according to a "very clear progression on how tough the scrutiny should be."

Said Feingold: "I think the least scrutiny goes to the cabinet because it's (the president's) choice of who sits at the table."

He said appointments to independent agencies, such as the Federal Election Commission, deserve less automatic deference. Nominees for federal trial judge deserve less still, he argued, followed by picks for federal appellate judge and, finally, nominees for the Supreme Court.

"The higher up the ladder you go, the more legitimate it is to ask a question about whether the person will be fair . . . are they impartial or do they have a political agenda that's inflexible?" Feingold said.

By that logic, a nominee's politics and personal views are much more relevant in the case of a court of appeals nominee like Owen than a cabinet pick like Ashcroft.

Feingold's questions of Owen at Tuesday's hearing did not relate to politics but to ethical issues that critics had raised regarding her tenure on the Texas Supreme Court.

Owen's critics have focused above all on the issue of abortion, contending that her rulings on parental consent for minors having abortions were driven by politics.

At the hearing, she told lawmakers that she would follow the laws "as you have written them. . . . The picture that some special-interest groups have painted of me is wrong."

Owen, who has received a unanimous "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, is a friend of Bush and was first elected to the Texas Supreme Court in 1994.

Hers is the most contentions judicial nomination since Senate Democrats rejected Charles Pickering of Mississippi for the same court in March. Both Kohl and Feingold voted against that pick. The 5th U.S. Circuit covers Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

A Judiciary Committee vote on Owen is expected sometime after the August recess.

In the 8 years of the Clinton Administration, 13 circuit nominees were forced to wait more than a year for a hearing (3 of whom were subsequently confirmed). In the 4 years of George H.W. Bush Administration, the number was 2. In the 8 years of Reagan Administration, the number was 3.

In only 1.5 years of the Bush Administration, 11 circuit nominees already have been forced to wait more than a year for a hearing and the number will rise to 15 by November 8 (with Steele and 3 Michigan CA6 nominees).

SECTION: CAPITOL HILL HEARING

LENGTH: 17404 words

HEADLINE: PANEL ONE AND TWO OF A HEARING OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

SUBJECT: JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

CHAIRED BY: SENATOR DIANE FEINSTEIN (D-CA)

PANEL I: SENATOR PHIL GRAMM (R-TX); SENATOR KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON (R-TX); SENATOR BILL NELSON, (D-FL); AND REPRESENTATIVE KAY GRANGER (R-FL)

PANEL II: JUSTICE OWEN, TO BE A CIRCUIT COURT JUDGE FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

LOCATION: 325 RUSSELL SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C.

BODY:
SEN. FEINSTEIN: (Bangs gavel.) We'll begin the hearing. And members will be coming in from time to time. Before I make my opening statement, I would like to just quickly run through the protocol for this hearing.

There are three panels that we will be hearing today. Members will be called on the basis of the early bird rule. We will alternate from side to side. For those that don't know the early bird rule, is an incentive to get members to come to committee promptly so that they can respond to -- be responded to with questions.

There will be a vote I think around 10:30. We will recess for that vote. This session will run from 10:00 to 12:15. We will begin again at two o'clock and to through to five o'clock, at which point the hearing will end, and if we need an additional hearing, that could be determined at that time. There will be two votes this afternoon. I believe at 2:45, and we will do a similar thing. We will simply adjourn and go and cast our votes and promptly return here. I would like to begin by saying that there are three panels. If three distinguished members at the first panel. Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison is traveling and will arrive a little late, and I've agreed to take her statement as soon as she comes in. So, we'll stop whatever we're doing and listen to her when she comes in. We will then hear the statements from the members, and then a statement from the chairman of the committee and the ranking member.

I would like to welcome Priscilla Owen on behalf of the Judiciary Committee. Justice Owen and not decide them before we even have the hearing.

We will have hearings today on the 79th, 80th and 81st judicial nominees we've held since I took over on July 11th. Judge Owen is the 17th court of appeals hearing we've had. I would point out that this is for the United States Court of Appeals for the fifth circuit. That was the seat vacated by William Garwood in January 1997.

President Clinton had nominated Jorge Rangel, a distinguished Hispanic attorney from Corpus Christi, to fill that vacancy. He had a unanimous rating of well-qualified by the ABA, something the senator from Utah says is very important, but the senator from Utah and the Republican-controlled Senate refused to give him a hearing, and after 15 months his name was returned. He was never allowed to have a hearing.

So then President Clinton nominated Ricky Moreno, another outstanding Hispanic attorney, to fill the same vacancy. But this committee, under Republic chairmen, did not allow him to even have a hearing over the 17 months that his name was pending here, and then President Bush withdrew his name. And now we have Judge Owen, who is the third vacancy.

I trust the distinguished senator from California to hold a fair hearing, something that the two nominees, two Hispanic nominees, two extremely well-qualified Hispanic nominees nominated by President Clinton, were never allowed to have hearings before this committee.

I commend the senator from California and this committee for holding a hearing and not doing as had been past practice -- we've heard a lot about past practice -- did not follow past practice and instead we are having a hearing. I'll make up my mind based on what we hear. I would hope that other senators would refrain from the kind of name-calling we've heard about people who express their views. I have had a lot of views expressed on this, both for and against, Justice Owen. While I may not have liked the tenor, and even some of the things I was called in those dues, I am one who depends on the First Amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We will now turn to the members of --

SEN. SCHUMER: Madam Chair? May I ask -- there are a couple of things that I would just like to mention here in response to Senator Hatch. May I have a minute or two to do that?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, we have a very long -- I think every other member probably has something they would like to say. What we generally do is turn to the members and then hear -- if you wouldn't mind, I think it would be appreciated.

SEN. SCHUMER: I'll defer to you, Madam Chair. I just thought certain things were on the record that were just so wrong that they need some refutation.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I'll give you ample time to complaint --

REV_00348653

SEN. SCHUMER: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: -- later.

We now have three members of the Congress. I'd like to begin with the senior senator from Texas, the Honorable Phil Gramm, and then we'll proceed right down the line. Please, and if you could keep your statement to five minutes or so, that would be appreciated.

SEN. GRAMM: Well, Madam Chairman, first, thank you very much. I appreciate having an opportunity to be here. I am not going to waste your time telling you that Priscilla Owen is brilliant, that she's a distinguished student of the law. Everybody knows that. If she were a simpleton, there would not be all this opposition to her.

I just want to talk about the Priscilla Owen that I know and that the people of my state know. First of all, normally when there is an effort to attack somebody, you find one little thing about them and you blow it out of all proportion. What is so basically disturbing to me about this case is there is no one little thing to blow out of proportion. This attack is created out of whole cloth. Priscilla Owen is not a political person. Priscilla Owen, when she was recruited by people who wanted to have outstanding jurists, was probably our state's greatest commercial litigator. She was living in River Oaks, which is the richest neighborhood in our state. She was extraordinarily successful. She was totally nonpolitical. When she was approached about running for the court, she wasn't sure what primary she had voted in. The idea that this good woman is some kind of political activist or kook is as far from the truth as it can be as you can get from the truth.

She made an extraordinary decision. She gave up probably the most successful commercial litigation practice that any female lawyer in my state had or ever had, moved out of River Oaks as a single mom, to become a justice of the Supreme Court of Texas.

Now, I want to address two areas that have been brought up. One is Enron. Now, Priscilla is from Houston. Enron was the largest and most successful company in my state. So, is anybody shocked that people who work for the largest and most successful company in Texas, a company domiciled in Houston, supported the most successful commercial litigator in the state when she ran for the Texas Supreme Court? What is amazing for me is that people who worked for Enron contributed only $8,600. That should have been the beginning of a message that maybe these weren't good people. (Laughter.)

Now, there has been a -- there has been an accusation that somehow, because employees of the largest and most successful -- at that point -- company in my state contributed $8,600 that somehow this induced her to make a political ruling. Well, the case was pretty simple. The state law sets out a procedure whereby inventories are evaluated. The case came before the Supreme Court. There was a unanimous decision -- and even the lawyer -- and I've got a copy of a letter from Robert Mott -- writes a letter and says, "Justice Owen authored the opinion of a unanimous"

REV_00348654

-- this is the lawyer who represented the other side of the case. "Justice Owen authored the opinion of a unanimous court, consisting of both Democrats and Republicans. While my client and I disagree with the decision, we were not surprised." So you read this propaganda being put out, you would get the idea that this person, bought and sold by Enron, and made a political ruling. You get down to the facts, it's insulting.

Second point, this abortion business. The Texas legislature wrote a law that basically said you have got to notify a parent when a minor is having an abortion. Now, to some people that is an extremist position. To most Americans that's a pretty straightforward position. I would have to say loving many members of the legislature, as I do, I would still have to say that the bill was written by people who were trying to be on three sides of a two-sided issue. It is a very poorly written law. It imposed very heavy burdens on the court. But if you go back and look at Priscilla Owen's rulings, if you listen to her, whether you agree or you don't agree with her efforts to try to bring logic and reason and precedent to a very poorly written law, you have got to be basically struck by the fact that this is a person who tried to follow precedent, which is what courts are supposed to be about.

Finally, let me say that if you need evidence that this is an extraordinary woman who has done a good job, who is basically nonpolitical, let me just give you some. When she ran for office, she was endorsed by every major newspaper in the state of Texas. There are a lot of newspapers in the state of Texas that never endorse me. Someone who is some kind of out of the mainstream person is not endorsed by the Austin American Statesman. In fact, most mainstream people are not endorsed by the Austin American Statesman. (Laughter.) The last Democrat who sat on the Texas Supreme Court is a strong supporter of Priscilla, and paid to come up here and tell people that. That was Raoul Gonzalez. The most respected living former chief justice, John Hill, came to Washington on his own initiative -- and he is a Democrat -- and was a Democrat candidate for governor, was attorney general, is one of the most loved former officeholders in our state -- came to Washington for the specific point of telling people that what they were saying about Priscilla Owen is simply not true.

So I want to urge my colleagues -- I know how these things work. I've been in this town for 24 years, and I've seen a lot of organized campaigns. And I know that this creates tremendous political pressure on both sides of the aisle. But I just want to say that if a group of special interests can convince people that this good woman is some kind of extremist, then these same groups could convince people that Chuck Schumer was a conservative or I was a liberal. There is no foundation to these charges that have been made. And I want to urge you to get the facts, look at them, and weigh them from the perspective of not what some advocate group says but in simply looking at the facts. If you will do that, I am confident that Priscilla Owen will be confirmed, and I think it will send a very good signal to America that when the facts don't comport to the charges that the Senate goes with the facts. And I thank you, Madam Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Senator Gramm. I should tell the witnesses that the light is now on. It is set at five minutes. And, Senator Nelson, you are next in line.

REV_00348655

SEN. BEN NELSON (D-FL): Well, Madam Chairman, I am from Florida, and I am here for two noncontroversial nominations.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. I should tell everybody that we have two additional nominees following Justice Owen.

SEN. LEAHY: And I want to thank both Senator Nelson and Senator Graham of Florida for working out the situation with the White House so that we could have some noncontroversial nominees up here.

SEN. NELSON: And, Madam Chairman, if you would like I will be merciful and I will take a total of 30 seconds.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: We would appreciate that. Thank you for your mercy.

SEN. NELSON: Well, I am here on behalf of Jose Martinez and Tim Corrigan. They are noncontroversial nominees to the district court, one from the Southern District and one from the Middle District.

The reason they are noncontroversial -- and I am here on behalf of Bob Graham and myself, and with my permission will insert both Senator Graham's and my written statements into the record. They are noncontroversial because we have a selection process in Florida, called a Judicial Nominating Commission, appointed by distinguished members of the bar and prominent citizens of the community that screen the applicants. They go through an extensive formal written application, extensive interviews. Then the three nominees come to Senator Graham and me, and we interview them and tell the White House if we have an objection. And then the White House makes its selection for a district judge from the three.

And so I am happy to be here on behalf of Senator Graham and myself to tell you that we enthusiastically support both of these nominees, and they will be very good additions to the federal bench. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Nelson. Representative Granger?

REP. GRANGER: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I am honored to be here today to support the nomination of Priscilla Owen, a highly qualified nominee from my state, home state of Texas. According to the Department of Justice, there are 91 vacancies in the federal court -- that's right, 91. Overall, the president has nominated 113 individuals to serve as federal judges, but only 59 of them have been confirmed, and 54 nominees are still pending. Specifically, the president nominated 32 individuals to the circuit courts, but only 11 have been confirmed. Today we have a chance to address that problem.

REV_00348656

Today we can move to fill a vacancy that has been classified as a judicial emergency. The time has come to fill this seat, and fill it with a qualified, sensible nominee like Priscilla Owen -- Priscilla Owen, who received a unanimous rating of well qualified, the highest rating possible from the American Bar Association.

Justice Owen's academic achievements are remarkable, and her professional experience is exemplary. She graduated with honors from both Baylor University and Baylor Law School, and following graduation she received, as has been noted here, the highest score for that year on the Texas bar exam.

Justice Owen practiced commercial litigation for 17 years before her election to the Texas Supreme Court in 1994. She is well respected for her service to the highest state court. And in 2000 she was endorsed, as Ben said, by every major Texas newspaper for her successful reelection.

In her professional career, Justice Owen has worked to improve access to legal services to the poor, and increase funding for these programs. She served as the Texas Supreme Court liaison to statewide committees that strive to offer legal services to the poor. Justice Owen also participated in the state committee that successfully enacted legislation at the state level to significantly increase funding for indigent legal services.

Additionally, Justice Owen organized a group known as Family Law 2000. Family Law 2000 warns parents about the difficulties children face when parents go through a divorce. It's a program that also teaches parents how to address those difficulties and how to make the divorce process as painless as possible for children.

Madam Chairman, Justice Owen has proven herself to be the right candidate for this position. She has served the state of Texas with distinction, and I am confident she will serve our nation well in the federal court. In short, Justice Owen is an excellent choice for the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak for her.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Representative Granger. The chair will excuse the witnesses, and we'll ask Justice Owen to come forward. Justice Owen, before you sit down, if you would raise your right hand, and affirm the oath when I complete its reading. Do you swear that the testimony you are about to give before the committee will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

JUSTICE OWEN: I do. (Witness sworn.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Please be seated.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you very much.

REV_00348657

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And I have put the clock on ten minutes, but we're -- my intention would be to give you as much time as you require. Generally around here people begin by introducing any family members they might wish to, and we'd be delighted to meet any of your family or friends you care to introduce. Then the time is yours to say whatever you might like to the committee. And then we will proceed with rounds of questions, and each member will have ten minutes for their questions.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you, Madam Chair, Chairman Leahy, members of the committee. I do want to, before I introduce my family, and my special guests today, I do want to take the opportunity to thank you very much for the hearing today, and for being able to talk to you about some of the issues that have been raised.

I also want to thank the president, of course, for the honor of nominating me to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. And I certainly want to thank Senator Gramm and Congresswoman Kay Granger for coming here today and for their kind words about me, and for introducing me.

And, as you mentioned, Madam Chair, Senator Hutchison will be here later this morning. But I did want to take this opportunity to express my thanks to Senator Hutchison for all that she has done and for her friendship and support throughout this process.

I also want to thank -- she's not here today, but the counsel to the president, who is also my former colleague, Alberto Gonzalez (ph), for his support and assistance throughout this process. And --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I am going to stop you for a minute. Pull the mike -- this is unidirectional. It has to be directly in front of you. And you have to talk directly into it, or it blurs --

JUSTICE OWEN: Is that better?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: If you could put the mike directly in front of you, and then speak --

JUSTICE OWEN: Is that better?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: That's much better.

JUSTICE OWEN: Okay. I would like to introduce my family and some of the folks who are with me today. My sister, Nancy Lacey (ph), is here. And my pastor, Jeff Black, who is from my church in Austin.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: If they would stand, we would like to acknowledge you.

JUSTICE OWEN: And I would certainly be remiss if I did not introduce the former chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court and the former Texas attorney general, John Hill, who is here today. And I want to thank him for his support and all that he has done. Some of my other friends who are here -- and I had hoped someone would help me with this, so I don't miss anyone -- because it's hard for me to see who all is here. Pat Meizel (ph), a former judge from Harris County; my special friend Harriett Myers, who is a former president of the State Bar of Texas, and who is now at the White House. Who am I missing? Oh, Judge Levi Benton, from Houston -- Harris County, Texas -- thank you, Levi for coming on short notice, and I appreciate it. Who else is? I am sorry I am not able to introduce everybody that's here. But thank you all for coming, and everybody who prepared to come last week -- and I thank you for changing your plans and getting here this week.

I also want to thank, although they couldn't make it this week, my former colleagues Raoul Gonzalez and Justice Jack Hightower. Jack Hightower is also a former congressman from Texas. And the 15 past state bar presidents, both Democrat and Republican, who have signed a letter of support and given that to the committee. And then last week there were a whole bunch of folks who came up from Texas to meet with senators and with their staffs, and I want to thank them for the effort and the time that they took to do that.

And, Madam Chair, Mr. Chairman and members, I also appreciate the opportunity to make an opening statement today. I know that that's not usually done, but for the reasons that have been discussed this morning, I think it's appropriate and necessary for me to at least give a brief opening statement.

Madam Chair, I truly believe that the picture that some special interest groups have painted of me is wrong, and I very much want the opportunity to try to set the record straight. I have been very honored to serve as a judge on the Supreme Court of Texas, and I am extremely humbled that the president has nominated me to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals -- the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. But I have never forgotten where I've come -- where I came from and my basic values.

After my father died of polio when I was about 10 months old, my mother and I went to live with her parents and her brother on a farm in South Texas. And my family worked very hard for a living then, as they do now. That was a difficult time. But my mother eventually remarried to a wonderful man, and we moved to what I considered the big city, which was Waco. Some of you don't know where that is -- it's near Crawford. But even though we moved to Waco, I missed my family in South Texas and I spent my summers growing up on the farm. And I worked alongside a lot of folks from a very different background than mine, but I learned through that that all of us have a whole lot in common. It doesn't really matter much where we came from or how we make a living, but it does matter that we all respect one another.

I was fortunate enough to be able to go to Baylor University and Baylor Law School, and I started practicing law 24 years ago, when there weren't very many women in the profession. The law was very good to me. But, an opportunity came for me to run for the Supreme Court of Texas, and I decided that I should pursue that opportunity. I believe that people like me, who had the experience, and who had the academic credentials, and who didn't have any kind of axe to grind, should be willing to step out of private practice and serve the public as judges. So I ran for the Supreme Court of Texas, and the people of Texas elected me in 1994, and reelected me in 2000.

Although I'm a judge, I believe it's very important that I try to serve people in other ways. And one of the first things I have -- did after I got to the court, I was to work to increase legal aid to the poor, and to improve their access to the courts. I also, as you have heard today, helped form a group called Family Law 2000 that has been concerned about the adversarial nature of divorces. I've also served on the Board of Texas Hearing and Service Dogs, which is a charitable organization that provides and trains service dogs for paraplegics and quadriplegics and for those who are hearing impaired. As I mentioned, I am a member of St. Barnabas Episcopal Mission. I teach Sunday school there to elementary school children, and I serve as head of the Altar Guild.

But as a Judge, I have worked very hard to carry out my responsibilities to the people of Texas, and I believe that I have done so. There have been four, I would say basic principles that have guided my work as a judge. The first is I always remember that the people that come to my court are real people with real problems and real issues, and that when we decide their cases, we're going to decide cases that affect a lot of other real people because of the precedent those cases set. So, when I decide a case, I must do so on the basis of the fair and consistent application of the law, and my decisions cannot be based, and are not based on whether a party is rich or poor, or who their lawyer is. My decisions are based on the law -- whether that's a statute, or United States Supreme Court decision, or a prior decision from my court.

Second, when it's a statute that's before me, I must enforce it, as you in the Congress, or a state legislature, as the case may be, has written it, unless it's unconstitutional. I believe my decisions demonstrate that I do respect the division between the judicial and the legislative branches of government. If I am confirmed, I will do my utmost to apply the statutes you have written, as you have written them, not as I would have written them or as others might want me to interpret them.

Third, I must strictly follow United States Supreme Court precedent. I have taken a solemn oath to do so. I've upheld that oath in the past, and if confirmed, I will continue to do so as a Fifth Circuit judge.

Fourth, and finally, judges must be independent, both from public opinion and from the parties and the lawyers who appear before them. And as you've heard, Texas selects its judges through partisan elections. That means that judges necessarily preside over cases in which people appear before them as parties or lawyers who may have contributed to campaigns. That's a system that several other states have, but I don't believe it's the best system. I have long advocated that we change the way we select judges in Texas. I have advocated that we essentially follow an election -- and the retention election after the judge is initially appointed.

In the meantime, I have led reforms in the judicial campaigning area. When I first ran for the Supreme Court of Texas, I voluntarily imposed limits on my campaign contributions when there weren't any laws at all imposing any kind of limits. And in -- when I ran for reelection in 2000, I returned over one-third of my contributions where I did not receive a major party opponent.

In closing, Madam Chair, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I recognize the tremendous responsibility that judges have, and I have tried the very best I could for the last seven years to carefully and faithfully execute those responsibilities. Those who know my record the best have written to you in my support and express their judgment that I have been a fair an impartial judge on the Supreme Court of Texas.

I thank you for allowing me to make this statement, and I truly welcome the opportunity to answer all of your questions today. Thank you very much.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much. I know that Senator Hutchison has just arrived. If she'd take her place, and while she is, I'd like to spell out the early bird order. It is Feinstein, Hatch, Leahy, DeWine, Kennedy, Sessions, Feingold, McConnell, Schumer, Brownback, Durbin, and Cantwell.

Senator Hutchison, welcome. Your colleagues have all testified, but as you told me, you were going to be a little late, and we're delighted to have you here. And if you would like to make a statement, if you could possibly confine it to five minutes, we be appreciative.

SEN. KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON (R-TX): Thank you very much, Senator Feinstein. And thanks to you and Senator Leahy for allowing me to make this statement a little early. I got the earliest flight out of Dallas this morning and it just arrived, so I do thank you for that.

Madam Chairman, I am here in total and full support of my friend Justice Priscilla Owen. She's a seven-year veteran on the Supreme Court of Texas. I think you know her exemplary career, starting from when she graduated cum laude from Baylor Law School in 1977, and Justice Owen also made the highest grade on the state bar exam that year. I think her academic credentials are unmatched. She also has the experience to be a good circuit court of appeals judge, having been elected, reelected to the supreme court with 84 percent of the vote in Texas. She was endorsed by every major newspaper in Texas during her successful reelection bid.

I think she has the best qualifications of anyone that I've ever seen come before this committee for a court of appeals appointment. The Dallas Morning News called her record one of accomplishment and integrity. The Houston Chronicle wrote that she has the proper balance of judicial experience, solid legal scholarship, and real- world know-how.

But despite the fact that she is a well-respected judge who has received high praise, her nomination has been targeted by special interest groups. Justice Owen's views have been mischaracterized and her opinions distorted. Today this committee and Justice Owen have an opportunity to set the record straight. One particular area of misinformation concerns Enron. In Texas, we have statewide elections for judges. Whether any of us approve of that system or not, it is the current law in Texas, and as we all know, a person has to run a campaign and raise the funds to do that. Priscilla Owen has actually been a leader in trying to reform the way judges are elected in our state, having come out solidly against such elections. Like six other justices on the nine-member court, Justice Owen has received Enron contributions in her election bids. She not only received legitimate contributions from employees and the employee PAC, she didn't take corporate contributions, but at that time, Enron was one of our state's largest employers, and its employees were active. They were active politically. They were active civically, and they are -- they have been major charitable contributors in Texas and especially in Houston. So, it isn't -- it should be understandable that they did make political contributions which were absolutely legitimate. She only took $8,800 in Enron contributions out of a total of 1.2 million raised for her bid. Her opponent actually raised actually 1.5 million.

During her 2000 campaign, Priscilla imposed voluntary limits on herself, which included taking no more than $5,000 per individual and spouse, no more than $30,000 per law firm, and over half her total contributions were from non-lawyers. In fact, after she started the trend of voluntary limits, the state actually came in and made laws similar to her voluntary limits that she had led the way to make. After she did not have a major opponent in 2000, she returned over a third of her remaining contributions to her contributors.

I want to read the words of our former state supreme court chief justice, John L. Hill, who is a Democrat and was also elected attorney general of Texas as a democrat, denouncing the mischaracterization of Priscilla Owen's record by outside special interest groups. Their attacks on Justice Owen in particular are breathtakingly dishonest, ignoring her long-held commitment to reform and grossly distorting her rulings. Tellingly, the groups made no effort to assess whether her decisions are legally sound. I know Texas politics, and he can clearly say these assaults on Justice Owen's record are false, misleading, and deliberate distortions. As you know, Justice Owen enjoys bipartisan support and the ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary has unanimously voted Justice Owen well qualified.

So, Madam Chairman, I thank you for allowing me to sit in full support of my friend, Justice Priscilla Owen, a member of the Texas Supreme Court with an outstanding judicial record.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator, for the excellent statement. We appreciate it very much, and you're welcome to stay or be excused, whatever you wish.

I'm going to proceed with -- try to do two questions in this round, Justice Owen. The first, it relates to the Searcy case, and the second has to do with comments that were made.

My understanding of the Searcy case is this. Willie Searcy was a 14-year-old in a Ford pickup with a pickup -- with a seatbelt, when another car smashed into the pickup and the seatbelt severed. As a result, he became a quadriplegic. He was on a respirator. The case went to court.

comes to us with a distinguished record and with recommendations of many respected individuals within her state of Texas. She currently sits as one of nine justices on the Texas Supreme Court, which is the court of last resort for civil cases in that state. Justice Owen is a graduate of Baylor and Baylor Law School, and before joining the Texas Supreme Court in 1995, she was a partner in the law firm of Andrews and Kirk.

As indicated by the large number of people in this room -- in fact, as indicated by the size of the room itself, this is a nomination that's received a lot of interest. My office has received dozens of letters of support and of opposition from organizations within Texas and from national organizations as well on both sides of the debate. So feelings run very very strong. We will, of course, keep order, and we do not appreciate any comment from the audience.

I'm keeping an open mind on this nominee, as I do with all nominees. I first met with her several weeks ago. I found her to be personable, intelligent and well-spoken. It's clear to me that Justice Owen knows the law, that she's very capable and that she'd be an excellent advocate for a cause. But the question this committee must answer for this and all nominees is whether this individual would make a good federal judge, a federal appellate judge, and that determination includes questions beyond intelligence and character. We must also ask about temperament, and the ability to decide cases on the law, not on personal beliefs.

The concerns that have been raised about Justice Owen go to the heart of these questions. Accusations have been made that Justice Owen too often stretches or even goes beyond the law as written by the Texas legislature to meet her personal beliefs on several core issues, including abortion and consumer rights.

I've read through a great deal of the material about Justice Owen in preparation for this hearing, including a number of opinions she has written on a variety of subjects. So, I'm very interested to hear from Justice Owen on these issues today, after which I'll carefully review the record and make what is sure to be a very difficult decision, as well we -- as we will all do.

So, now I would like to turn to the ranking member and then to the chairman of the committee.

SEN. ORRIN HATCH (R-UT): Well, thank you, Madame Chairman. I want to welcome all nominees today as well as the members of the Congress that have come to testify on their behalf. And I ask that I be able to put statements for Misters Timothy Corrigan and Jose Martinez into the record?

I would ask unanimous consent for that.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection.

SEN. HATCH: I would like to go especially -- especially to welcome Justice Priscilla Owen of Texas, our lone star, lone circuit court nominee. I intend today to comment on Justice Owen's

REV_00348645

He received a $30 million judgment, which was then reduced to a $20 million judgment, and the case came up on appeal. The young man was in every difficult circumstances. He was on a respirator. I understand that his family could only pay for a nurse through 4:00 a.m. and there was a quiet hour with nobody attending him, and then the parents attended him from 5:00 a.m. in the morning. Well, he had been in there from the age of 14 to 22, and while the year-and-a-half dragged by that you were supposed to be writing that opinion, one morning the respirator went out and he died.

And, you wrote an opinion and the opinion you wrote said that the appeal should not be granted on the basis of faulty venue, that it was brought in the wrong venue, which had never been argued in either of the lower courts that handled the case.

This was a very surprising case for me to read about you because I thought you, and hope I'm right, were a person with a great deal of compassion, and yet here was someone that had two courts sustaining a verdict which could have gotten him the nursing help that he needed to sustain his life, but during the delay, he died. And there are those in the writings that have been presented that have said that the delay was unnecessary, a year-and-a-half delay was unnecessary to write that opinion.

Could you respond to that, and could you also tell us the average length of time that you take to write an opinion like this?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, I appreciate that question because I do -- would like the opportunity to respond since there's been so much in the press that's simply wrong about that case.

First of all, we remanded the case to the lower court, and it was three years later that Mr. Searcy unfortunately passed away. Now, the court -- the case had been in the lower court system quite a while before it got to our court. It was over a year after the accident before the lawsuit was even filed in the trial court, so he did not pass away while the case was pending in my court.

What -- and I also want to specifically address the allegation, I guess, you would say, not from you, Senator, but that's been printed in the press, that the issue of venue was never raised in the lower courts or in my court, which is just ludicrous, frankly. I would be happy to produce the briefs all the way up in our court. Venue was argued in the trial. It was briefed in the court of appeals. The court of appeals decision wrote on venue. Venue was in the briefs permanently in our court. We -- it was -- it was definitely briefed.

And Senator, though this is kind of a legal technical explanation that I'm going to try to explain the best I can, there were no rendition points in that case. In other words, Ford was not saying that we win as a matter of law, they were saying "We want a new trial." And under those circumstances, our court had to address the venue issue. We had no choice, because there's a statute in Texas that says if the case is filed in the wrong trial court, then -- then reversal is mandatory. It's not discretionary, it's mandatory.

And what happened in this case, the Ford vehicle, the pickup was purchased in Dallas, where Miles -- Mr. Searcy, his family, lived in Dallas. The accident occurred in Dallas. Everybody agreed that all the operative facts centered around Dallas, Texas. Yet, the plaintiff's lawyer decided to file in Rusk County, in Texarkana, which is, I think, 180 or 200 miles northeast of Dallas, in a county that had absolutely nothing to do with the vehicle or the accident. Everybody stipulated that. The only basis for filing in the other country, a long way away from Dallas, was that there was a Ford dealership there, as I'm sure there's a Ford dealership in almost every county in Texas. And we looked at existing precedent in Texas, my court did, and we said, Ford doesn't own the dealership. Under the statute, again, applying our prior supreme court precedent and other courts of appeals decisions, we said venue was in the wrong county. This was essentially forum shopping issue.

And we were required by the statute, having concluded that venue was in error, to remand to the trial court, which we did. Once it got back to the trial court, the trial court granted a partial summary judgment against Mr. Searcy and his family, and that went up on interlocutory appeal, and the court of appeals considered that. The case came back to our court. We denied the petition. It went back down to the trial court. And it was at that point, three years after our decision remanding it to the trial court, based on the venue ruling, the Mr. Searcy passed away. And there's -- to this date there's been no, it is my understanding, trial to adjudicate whether Ford is liable in the first instance.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you. Since the distinguished ranking member and my friend raised Justice Gonzales, I thought I would get his actual statement and read it in some context, because this relates around the Jane Doe cases. And this where I think there has developed a feeling among some that you are a, in a sense a judicial activist, that you went beyond the law, as the law was written in Texas, with respect to notification, in asking for additional things to be presented, that the law itself in its three prongs on notification did not require. But let me just quote this.

"To the contrary, every member of this court agrees that the duty of a judge is to follow the law as written by the legislature. This case is no different." And then it goes on to say, "Our role as judges requires we put aside our own personal views of what we might like to see enacted and instead do our best to discern what the legislature actually intended. We take the words of the statute as the surest guide to legislative intent. Once we discern the legislature's intent, we must put it into effect, even if we see our, even if we ourselves might have made different policy choices." And then it goes on to say, "The dissenting opinions, of which you were one in this case, suggest that the exceptions to the general rule of notification should be very rare and require a high standard of proof. I respectfully submit that these are policy decisions for the legislature, and I find nothing in this statute to directly show that the legislature intended such a narrow construction. As the court demonstrates, the legislature certainly could have written Section 33.033(I) to make it harder to bypass a 366 parent's right to be involved in decisions affecting their daughters, but it did not.

Likewise, part of the statute's legislative history directly contradicts the suggestion that the legislature intended bypasses to be very rare. Thus to construe the Parental Notification Act so narrowly as to eliminate bypasses or to create hurdles that simply are not to be found in the words of the statute would be an unconscionable act of judicial activism.

And, of course, in reading your opinions in these Doe cases, you did, in fact, insist on certain tests that were not present in the statute. Could you speak to that, please?

MS. OWEN: Well, Senator, let me start in reverse order with some of the things in your question. First of all, this was the third in a series or down the line in a series of Doe cases.

The first Doe case that came to the court was, of course, Doe I. And in that opinion, I tried my very best to give effect to legislative intent. And, Senator, I honestly believe that I did not go outside of what the legislature intended. I looked at the words they chose.

The legislature said that a girl who is under 18 who wants to have an abortion without notifying one of her parents may get a judicial bypass if one of three prongs are met. And the language that they chose to put in the statute for the judicial bypass was language that was almost verbatim, if not verbatim, taken out of a U.S. Supreme Court opinion. And the opinion had blessed a judicial-bypass provision in another, although it was a consent statute.

And so I looked at the context in which the legislature was deciding what to write and why. And these words were not written in a vacuum. To me they had meaning within the context of all these U.S. Supreme Court cases.

So I looked at the U.S. Supreme Court decisions in this area, primarily Casey and Akron I -- excuse me, the second decision in City of Akron -- and looked at what the U.S. Supreme Court had said about what it is that states may have an interest in information being supplied about the abortion decision. So everything in my Doe I opinion tracked language from the U.S. Supreme Court's decision, specifically, as I said --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I'm going to have to stop you mid-sentence, because we have three minutes to get to a vote. So I'm going to recess the committee, and we'll take up just where we left off.

MS. OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you.

(Recess.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Justice Owens -- Owen -- I interrupted you right in the middle of a response. Let me just quickly better state the question. The issue here is not what some hypothetical state could impose, but what in fact the state of Texas did enact into legislation. And while various

REV_00348665

Supreme Court cases may have indicated that requiring additional steps or information might be permissible, the Texas legislature, as Justice Gonzalez said, could have written that section, Section 33.0331, to make it harder to bypass a patient's right to be involved in decisions affecting their daughters. But the point is it did not. For instance, in one Jane Doe case you suggested a minor must show that she understands the impact the procedure will have on the fetus. I understand you point to the Casey case in support of this conclusion. But that case never said that such a requirement is mandatory. So what in the Texas statute itself would justify such an expansion of this statute?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, Senator Feinstein, again, the words that the legislature used on the first prong were "mature and sufficiently well informed." And they in fact took the entire bypass straight out of U.S. Supreme Court cases. And if you look at the backdrop against which this whole statute was enacted, it seemed to me -- and a majority of the court agreed on this, is it's in their opinion -- that they were looking at all the U.S. Supreme Court precedent on this point. And the words "sufficiently well informed" connoted, to me at least, that they wanted us to look at what the U.S. Supreme Court has said is relevant to being fully informed. I think the Texas legislature intended, as explained in another Supreme Court case -- it's HL v. -- and I can't remember the second name of it -- that they realized that in these situations there was not going to be a parent involved, that neither parent was going to be notified, that an adult, standing in the shoes of the parent was not going to be able to give mature advice and information to this minor. Again, we are talking about minors. And the U.S. Supreme Court at one point in its opinion said of course the states are entitled to presume that parents would give this kind of information and counseling, but of course that's not going to happen in these situations. So, again, it seemed to me that the Texas legislature, when they said fully -- or, excuse me, "sufficiently informed," wanted us to look at what the U.S. Supreme Court had said. States may encourage women to know about the abortion decision, to be informed, to make an informed choice.

And so I looked at, as I have indicated, primarily Casey and the second decision, City of Akron, to see what has the U.S. Supreme Court said about the words "informed." And when you go to those cases -- I lifted directly out of the cases the issues that the Supreme Court had identified that they thought it was okay for states to look at in making this decision. And it seemed to me, again, you are talking about a minor here. These legislators were concerned that mothers and fathers would want their daughters to make the decision with as much information as they could have -- constitutionally, since there was not going to be an adult involved in the process, only the court, and that that's what the legislature intended within constitutional bounds.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: My time is up. Senator Hatch.

SEN. HATCH: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Justice Owen, I will ask you more on this later, but let me make sure that everybody understands some of the answers you have just given on the Jane Doe cases. When you argued in Jane Doe, one, that for oar minor to be, quote, "sufficiently well informed," unquote, a minor would need to, quote, "demonstrate that she has sought and obtained meaningful counseling from a qualified source about the emotional and psychological impact," unquote, and so on. This was not your personal standard that you were imposing, but an application of the United States Supreme Court standard -- isn't that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, Senator Hatch, that's correct. That cane out of one of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

SEN. HATCH: Can we presume that when the justices of the Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court, established these standards that they had before them the best available medical and psychological information?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator, I agree with that.

SEN. HATCH: It just seems to me that your detractors are speaking -- not talking about people up here, who have a right to ask any questions they want -- but your detractors on the outside are seeking to retry Casey and every other Supreme Court case by attacking you. But what you were doing was applying Roe v. Wade and its progeny. Am I right about that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator. I quoted Roe v. Wade as modified by Casey, and I clearly recognize throughout the opinion that that is the law of the land, and I was trying faithfully to follow it. And I also pointed out in the course of the -- I think it was the Jane Doe I opinion, that if we applied that rationale of those cases it would probably mean some of our family law statutes were unconstitutional in this context.

SEN. HATCH: Well now, much has been made of your opinion that for a minor to be sufficiently informed for purposes of the judicial bypass, she must, quote, "exhibit an awareness that there are issues, including religious ones, surrounding the abortion decision," unquote. Now, I have to tell you that nothing panics your detractors --that is, these liberal special interest groups -- more than a judge suggesting that religion exists. I think they think that it's crazy talk. To be clear though, your language that a minor should, quote, "indicate to the court that she is aware of and has considered that there are philosophical, social, moral and religious arguments that can be brought to bear when considering abortion," unquote, is nothing but a faithful -- maybe I shouldn't use that term -- mere application of Sandra Day O'Connor's language in the Casey decision -- isn't that right?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator, it was in Casey. It was in -- I believe it was also in Akron 2 -- and the specific words, "religious beliefs" and "religion" was included in HL v. Matheson.

SEN. HATCH: You didn't wake up one morning and suddenly decide you were going to impose a standard that was all your own, did you?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, senator. Frankly, when this statute hit the court we were all a little caught unawares. And I went to the -- straight to the U.S. -- looked at the history of it, and went straight to the U.S. Supreme Court decisions and started reading to see what have they said about states' abilities to see that a minor is sufficiently informed in making the choice.

SEN. HATCH: Well, it would seem to me that your detractors would like you to cherry-pick among Supreme Court cases or precedents that you should follow and Supreme Court precedents you should ignore. Of course that's typical of how some of them actually read the Constitution.

Now, let me ask you this. On your decision in Ford Motor Company v. Miles, is it not true that a bipartisan majority of the Texas Supreme Court held that lawsuit, which arose out of a car accident, was filed in the wrong county, and therefore remanded for transfer and a new trial in a different county?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, senator.

SEN. HATCH: Now, the decision did not eliminate the plaintiff's ability to sue for the injuries they had suffered. It simply ordered that the case be reassigned to the appropriate venue. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, senator.

SEN. HATCH: Okay, well, I just wanted to make that clear.

Now, Justice Owen, I would like to ask you further about your decisions concerning the Texas statute that regulates the ability of minors to obtain abortions without telling their parents in certain circumstances. First, I want to make sure that we all understand exactly what that statute does. As I understand it, the statute codifies the right of minors to obtain abortions without permission from their parents, but requires that one of the young woman's parents simply be notified of their daughter's decision 48 hours before the procedure is performed. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, senator. It is not a consent statute, it's a notification statute.

SEN. HATCH: I see. In addition, the statute provides for what is called a judicial bypass, which means that a judge can allow the abortion to go forward without parental notification, provided that the girl ask the trial judge to do so, and proves with testimony or other evidence that she meets one of the stated reasons for such a bypass. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. HATCH: Okay. Now, Justice Owen, do you know how many cases have been found since that statute went into effect by girls seeking to obtain abortions without notifying their parents?

JUSTICE OWEN: We don't know the precise number, because they're confidential. In some -- we do know that there have at least been 650-some odd since the statute went into effect in 2000. And the reason we know that is that the statute provides that the court can appoint counsel or appoint guardian ad litems for these girls at state expense. And so we know that that number of reimbursements in that number of cases have been applied for. But we also know that there are quite a number of lawyers who do these cases for free on a pro bono basis. So we don't know the exact number, but we do know at least that many --

SEN. HATCH: And how many of these cases reached the Texas Supreme Court?

JUSTICE OWEN: Ten different minors have come to our court in 12 different cases. Jane Doe and Jane Doe 4 came back after the remand.

SEN. HATCH: I see. And what happened to the rest of the cases of the 650?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, the first two cases that came, Jane Doe and Jane Doe 2, a majority of the court, including me, believed that she, based on the evidence, that she had not met the statutory standards. But because our court had never written on either the "mature and sufficiently well informed" prong of the statute or the best interest statute, that she didn't -- and those were sort of amorphous concepts standing alone -- that she and her lawyer did not really know what standard they were trying to meet. So, in the interest of justice, we remanded those cases to the trial court for another hearing. And Jane Doe 3 -- that case was remanded. We don't know what happened to Jane Doe 3 -- she -- we just don't know because the confidentiality. Jane Doe 4 -- the court affirmed the two lower courts and denied the bypass.

And let me say -- I think it's been said, but let me make clear that none of these cases ever get to my court unless both the trial court and the Court of Appeals have denied the bypass. If the --

SEN. HATCH: I am correct in saying that the Texas Supreme Court hears such cases only after a trial court has heard them --that's the court that actually hears the testimony and the evidence -- and that trial court denies the bypass, and then the Court of Appeals reviews the trial court decision, and agrees that the bypass should be denied?

JUSTICE OWEN: Or, say, if they disagree and grant the bypass, that's the end of it. There are no further appeals. It would not come to my court.

SEN. HATCH: So is it safe to say, Justice Owen, that the cases reaching the Texas Supreme Court are the tough cases, because there have only been a few of them that have made it up there.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, yes, senator, with this caveat -- caveat, or however you pronounce it -- we have had some cases that came to the court that -- there were five of them actually -- where the court affirmed the lower court's judgment without opinion. And it takes under our rules at least six judges to agree to do that. And if any judge had dissented and noted their dissent publicly, then we would have reflected that. I can't get into the deliberations on our court or disclose what was at issue in those cases, but I think it's a fair inference from those circumstances, given the number of opinions written in all those other cases, that these were not close cases in those five instances.

SEN. HATCH: So it leads to the more difficult case, where evidence of maturity, best interests or abuse happens to be not very clear -- is that right?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator.

SEN. HATCH: And where the precise definition of words used by the Texas legislature has to be determined?

JUSTICE OWEN: That was the -- we had never obviously construed the statute before, and it needed to be construed by my court to give guidance to the trial courts and the courts of appeals.

SEN. HATCH: Of course some of the abortion rights advocacy groups would prefer that you simply always rule in favor of bypassing parents rather than look at the words of the statute. But I have got to say I think the method of your decisions, your principled examination of legislative intent, is exactly the kind of judging that most Americans really want from their judges -- and expect.

Now, the judicial bypass law in Texas has been in effect for a relatively short time. Am I right about that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, it came into effect in January of 2000.

SEN. HATCH: Okay, so it's only been a year or so. Therefore, disputes arising out of that law are cases of first impression, meaning that the court was deciding the proper standards that the Texas legislature intended for the first time. Is that right?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator.

SEN. HATCH: Okay. Now, Justice Owen, some of the liberal interest group lobbyists that oppose your nomination have accused you of lacking sympathy for the girls whose cases made it all the way up to the Supreme Court for review. Some of those groups want the public to believe that your decisions reflect an opposition to abortion itself, rather than a thoughtful and principled approach to applying the law as the legislature intended that are meant. I know that these accusations are false, but I have examined your record and your opinions, as I have done for a huge percentage of the judges sitting on the federal bench today, and I've concluded that some of these groups have set out to ruin your reputation, and they've simply gotten it wrong. But they don't always take my word for it, unfortunately. So let me just ask you when you were writing your judicial opinions in the Jane Doe cases, were you motivated simply by a desire to achieve a particular public policy result, or was your objective to ascertain and enforce the intent of the Texas legislature?

REV_00348670

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, my personal beliefs don't enter into any of my decisions. They certainly didn't enter into these decisions. We had a statute in front of us that again was enacted after long debate in the Texas legislature against a backdrop of a series of U.S. Supreme Court decisions that mapped out some of the perimeters of this area.

SEN. HATCH: Well, I'd like to pursue this further, but I just noticed the red light, and my time is up.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Before recognizing Senator Leahy -- after Senator Leahy, Senators DeWine, Kennedy, Sessions -- it is my understanding that, Senator McConnell, that you wanted to move up in that order. I'll leave it up to you to work out with --

SEN. DEWINE: That would be fine with me.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right, excellent. Then we'll move Senator McConnell up in place of Senator DeWine. DeWine will go into McConnell's place.

Senator Leahy.

SEN. LEAHY: Thank you, Madam Chair. I -- and, Justice Owen, good to have you here. I'm glad you are able to have this hearing.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. LEAHY: And, as I noted before, just to cut through the basic rhetoric, when the other party was in charge of this committee, Jorge Rangel and Enrique Moreno, who had been nominated by President Clinton for a seat, were never even allowed to have a hearing. And I mention that because of some of the -- as I hear some of the comments being made on my comment line by the White House supporters about you, they were probably unaware of that. And, also, to forestall some of the other comments that the White House is trying to get out on your behalf, that we did notify the White House of the various cases that I was going to ask you about -- about a week ago -- is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: I'm sorry?

SEN. LEAHY: About a week ago we gave the White House a heads-up on the type of cases I was going to ask you about -- is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: I really don't know, Senator Leahy.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, then that's -- you should talk to them, because we did.

In FM Properties v. City of Austin -- let me go to that a bit, because you have developed a reputation for opinions which if not every time most of the time favor big business interests. And this is a case that doesn't change that reputation. A large majority of the Texas Supreme Court in FM Properties v. City of Austin found a section of the Texas water code unconstitutional because it gave too much legislative power to corporate land owners with large tracts of land. As a majority of your court saw it -- and I think very convincingly explained their legal reasoning for it, the code section simply went too far -- it allowed these large land owners to regulate themselves, even though that would affect their financial interests, even though it may adversely affect the environment of those around them. So the farmer is telling the fox to guard the henhouse. And the court said, and I am quoting, "that your dissent in that case was nothing more than inflammatory rhetoric." The six justices and the majority explained why your legal objections were mistaken. They said that no matter what the state legislature had the power to do on its own, it was simply unconstitutional to give the power of the people to a land owner. Now, could you tell me why you thought it was proper for the legislature to grant these large corporate land owners the power to regulate themselves? Because under this, as I understand it, with limited government review there would be very little opportunity for citizens to challenge the regulations. There's clear financial interests in those who would be regulating themselves. If that's not giving up too much to a private interest, what would be?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator Leahy, I know that some have tried to characterize this case as involving a fight between the City of Austin and big business, but in all honesty when you get down and look at it, what this was really a fight about was the state of Texas versus the City of Austin. And when this case hit our court, the then attorney general of Texas, Dan Rawlins, intervened in the case and filed a long, thorough brief in support of the constitutionality of the state statute. There had been a long-standing rivalry between the city of Austin and the state of Texas over Austin trying to regulate within its extraterritorial jurisdiction. And the legislature came back and said, you know, we want state regulations to apply in your ETJ, which they couldn't -- that's a technical term, but it wasn't technically part of the city of Austin, but it was their ETJ. The state said, Look, we gave you the ability to have an ETJ in the first place, and we want state regulations, not city regulations, to apply in that area. And this was not an unregulated area. The entire area was subject to all of the laws of the Texas natural resources code, all of the other water laws and conservation laws that apply to every piece of land in the state of Texas. So it was not regulated.

SEN. LEAHY: But just so on -- that's not really the way the majority saw it. They did refer to your opinion as being inflammatory rhetoric, your dissent. There was very limited ability for the citizens to question it. Frankly, if you followed your dissent, one could argue that the problems on Wall Street right now, there'd be no problem in delegating the power to the corporations and the accountants to regulate themselves, no matter what effect it might have on ordinary citizens, no matter the lack of regulation.

Let me ask you about another one, Read versus Scott Fetzer. The Texas Supreme Court, by a vote of 6-3, held a vacuum cleaner company liable when one of its dealers raped a customer after an in-home demonstration required by the company.

qualifications and to address some of the deceptions, distortions and demagoguery orchestrated against her nomination that we have all read in the national and local papers. I have long looked forward to this hearing, and I expect she has as well.

I would like first to comment on the two jingoes that are being used about her record, as if they had substance. Namely, that Justice Owen is, quote, conservative, unquote; and that she is, quote, out of the mainstream, unquote. Of course this comes from the Washington interest groups that we've seen year after year, in many cases, who think that the mainstream thought is more likely to be found in Paris, France than in Paris, Texas.

I must admit that it's curious to hear it argued that a nominee twice elected by the people of the most populous state in the circuit for which she is now nominated is, quote, out of the mainstream, unquote. Texans will no doubt be entertained by whoever says that. Listening to some of my commentary on judges, I sometimes think that mainstream for them is a northeastern river of thought that travels through New Hampshire early and often, widens in Massachusetts, swells in Vermont, and deposits in New York City.

Well, the mainstream that I know of, and that most Americans --

SEN. LEAHY (D-VT): That's (impossible to do ?) geographically, but that's okay.

SEN. HATCH: (Laughs.) Understand. Well, the mainstr -- that's -- that was the point.

Well, the mainstream that I know, and that most Americans relate to runs much broader and further than that. The other mantra repeated by Justice Owen's detractors is that she is, quote, conservative, unquote. Now, I believe that the use of political and ideological labels to distinguish judicial philosophies has become highly misleading and does a disservice to the public's confidence in the independent judiciary, of which this committee is the steward.

I endorse the words of my friend and former chairman, Senator Biden, when he said some years ago that, quote, "Judicial confirmation is not about pro-life or pro-choice, conservative or liberal. It is not about Democrat or Republican. It is about intellectual and professional confidence to serve as a member of the third co-equal branch of the government," unquote.

Now, I believe it is our duty to confirm judges who stand by the Constitution and the law as written, not as they would want to rewrite them. That was George Washington's first criterion for the federal bench and it is mine.

I also want common-sense judges who respect American culture. I believe that is what the American people want as well. I believe we do a disservice to the independence of the judiciary by using partisan or ideological terms in referring to judges.

My reason was well-stated by Senator Biden when he said that, quote, "It is imperative not to

REV_00348646

Now, a jury of Texans found the company should be held accountable. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Texas appellate court had agreed first. They said the company had a duty to exercise reasonable control over the vacuum sales representatives because in this case it required in-home sales. And in this case you had a person who had enough in his record to raise warning flags to the company.

But you said this was wrong, if I understand the dissent you joined; that it's a wrong view of corporate responsibility because it would impose liability on all in-home vendors, as if the outcome might provide too much justice and compensation to future victims, even though this case was a pretty blatant one. Do you think that's a fair basis to shield corporations from the actions of their agents?

MS. OWEN: Senator Leahy --

SEN. LEAHY: It seems to be going against basic horn book of tort law.

MS. OWEN: I was trying to follow basic horn book tort law. And I think this case was very sympathetic. There were terrible facts in the sense that this woman was raped in her home. But basic hornbook law is that when there are independent contractors involved that you don't have respondeat superior liability. And here we had not just one independent contractor but we had two layers of independent contractors.

The Kirby vacuum cleaner company, at the national level, hired or engaged distributors -- this is all stipulated that they were independent contractors -- this wasn't my view; the parties agreed to this; there was no issue about it -- that Kirby's distributors were independent contractors and that Kirby in turn contracted with other independent contractors to go door to door and make the sales. And under hornbook contract law, you're typically not liable for the acts of your independent contractor.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, this -- but the Texas trial court disagreed with you. The Texas appellate court disagreed with you. The Texas Supreme Court disagreed with you. I mention this only because I find so many of these things where you seem to be outside even the mainstream of what is arguably a very conservative supreme court, the Texas Supreme Court.

I saw this in the City of Garland versus Dallas Morning News on allowing -- you seemed to be wanting to write in such a large exception to any kind of public disclosure that anybody could hide anything from public disclosure. That is why -- and I will submit a number of questions for the record, because I understand that there's time -- time is running out.

But I will submit a number of questions on these where you seem to be outside the mainstream even of your own court, and the other area being the area of campaign contributions. And I realize that judges are allowed to raise campaign contributions. You've raised over a million dollars for your 1994 and 2000 election campaigns from law firms, lawyers, litigants, including Enron and Halliburton. Many of them regularly appear and have interests before your court.

It appears that in many of the cases in which your past contributors were parties, you did not disqualify or recuse yourself. In our state, we would see this as a major conflict of interest. Apparently it is not in Texas.

So I'd just ask you this. While you don't have any duty to disclose contributions, did you make a full disclosure to the parties of campaign contributions that you received related to those who may have interest in the case?

MS. OWEN: Senator Leahy, all of my contributions are a matter of public record. For the 2000 election, they're all available on the Internet. Anybody -- I had 3,000 of them, individual contributors, in my 1994 campaign.

SEN. LEAHY: But some of these are fairly significant. I mean, the Enron ones, for example, were significant. Yet you, shortly after receiving them, were arguing a case. In 1994 you got 21 percent of your total campaign funds from non-law firm businesses, including individuals with political action committees -- Enron, Halliburton, Shell, Kinetic.

You -- my question is, whether required or not, did you ever have a case, one, where you recused yourself because of campaign contributions, first? Did you?

MS. OWEN: No.

SEN. LEAHY: Did you ever have a case where you noted, aside from whatever might be on a web site, that you noted to the parties involved that you'd had significant contributions from one of the parties?

MS. OWEN: Senator, again, they're a matter of public record. And everybody --

SEN. LEAHY: I know, but that's an easy --

MS. OWEN: And no one's ever asked me --

SEN. LEAHY: I'm not trying to do a trick question, Justice Owen, just a simple yes or no. Did you ever have a case where you went out of your way to make such a disclosure to the parties? And I would note that you're not required to. I'm just asking, did you ever?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, no one's ever asked me to recuse because of campaign contributions.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, did you ever -- no, that's not my question. And I posit this by saying, in fairness to you, you're not required to do this. But did you ever have a case where you had had significant contributions from one of the parties involved where you noted that fact to the litigants when they were before you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I did not.

SEN. LEAHY: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you.

MS. OWEN: Mr. Leahy?

SEN. HATCH: Could the witness answer some of the other questions that Senator Leahy raised? He cut her off.

SEN. HATCH: I wonder if -- Madam Chair, I tried to make -- I don't think I cut her off, but I'll leave that to the chair to determine. I will have a number of --

SEN. HATCH: Well, but if she would like to say more, I'd like her to have the opportunity.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Let me just ask, do you have anything else you'd like to say on that?

MS. OWEN: I would like to make -- there was a lot in there, but there are two points I would like to make quickly --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Please.

MS. OWEN: -- particularly about the comment that I'm out of the mainstream on my own court. We've had 890-something decisions or close to 900 that I've participated in since I've been on the court, and I have been in the dissent apparently -- I haven't counted them myself, but according to some of my opposition, 86 times, which means I've been in the dissent on my court less than 10 percent of the time.

SEN. LEAHY: A lot of those cases, though, were unanimous, were they not, and just -- there were no significant dissents?

MS. OWEN: I don't believe so, Senator Leahy.

SEN. LEAHY: Okay.

MS. OWEN: We split up quite frequently on my court. The second point I wanted to -- well, I can deal with FM Properties, I guess, in detail, but they were subject to a lot of regulation by the state, just like every land-owner in the state of Texas. And so I would like the opportunity at some point to fully address all of that, if not today in the hearing, certainly by --

REV_00348675

SEN. LEAHY: Well, please understand that on the time, you have the opportunity -- and I'm sure that Senator Feinstein would agree with this -- you have an opportunity to expand on any of your answers. Nobody wants to cut you off. If you have an area where you feel you did not have an opportunity to fully answer, of course you can add that for the record. And I will be submitting other questions. And, of course, if you feel that they're not clear and you need more information, we'll do that too.

MS. OWEN: I appreciate it.

SEN. LEAHY: Nobody is trying -- as I said at the beginning, unlike Senator Hatch, I try to make up my mind after the hearing, not before.

MS. OWEN: I appreciate that.

SEN. HATCH: I've noticed that.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Now, now, gentlemen. Now, now. The next questioner is Senator McConnell. And directly -- finishing with his time, we will recess until 2:15. Senator McConnell.

SEN. MITCH MCCONNELL (R-KY): Justice Owen, I gather from your testimony and that of others that you share my view that judges ought not to be elected.

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator McConnell. From the very first time since I've been on the court, since the '95 legislature on upward, I have advocated that we allow the people of Texas to amend the state constitution, which is what it would take in Texas, to change the way we pick judges and allow them to choose to go to a system that's essentially an appointment system whereby the judges would then stand for retention in a totally nonpartisan manner.

SEN. MCCONNELL: You've probably noticed the U.S. Supreme Court decision a few weeks ago on the issue of whether or not states are permitted to have, in effect, gag rules on judges if they do elect them. The Supreme Court held -- I got the impression, from reading Justice Scalia's opinion, that he too was unenthusiastic about electing judges. But he said if you're going to elect them, you can't say they can't say anything.

And I was reminded, we have a similar rule in Kentucky. And I've noticed over the years judges showing up at events, standing up, introducing themselves, smiling sweetly and sitting down, because they are essentially not allowed to say anything.

I raise this because it is, of course, permissible to elect judges, and Texas has chosen to do that. And while that's maybe not how I would do it, the people of Texas didn't consult me on that. And this issue about your contributions, I find fascinating how one could run for office unless the taxpayers provide funding for an election, one could run for office without speaking, and having the funds available to speak to a large audience like you have in Texas is beyond me.

You were successful in raising funds in order to carry your message to the people of Texas. And now you are being, I gather, criticized for raising perfectly legal contributions to engage in perfectly permissible campaigns in order to hold the office that you have now.

You certainly received de minimis contributions from Enron, smaller amounts than at least one member of this committee. And there's no evidence whatsoever that Enron was given any favorable treatment in any of the cases that it might have had before you.

All evidence indicates that you've acted ethically and ruled correctly with respect to any matters involving Enron. You never received any contributions from the company or from Enron-affiliated corporations. And while you received some contributions from Enron employees, as I read it, it's less than 1 percent of the total amount of funds you raised.

The one opinion that I gather is frequently referred to, relating to Enron, that you wrote was unanimous and bipartisan and relied on two on-point Supreme Court decisions. So the notion that you somehow were tainted by any of these Enron employee corporations is utterly without any basis.

The committee has received a letter from two Democratic justices on the Texas Supreme Court, Raoul Gonzalez and Rose Specter, who joined in that unanimous decision and who confirm that there was nothing extraordinary, let alone improper, about it. And if no one else has put that letter in the record to date, I'd like to ask that that letter be put in the record.

Others have referred to the lawyer who lost that case and the letter he sent saying that he was disturbed by suggestions that your decision in the case was influenced by campaign contributions from Enron employees. The lawyer said, "I personally believe that such suggestions are nonsense." This was the guy who lost.

You could have taken a much more expansive view of what the contribution system allowed in Texas. But I hold up your pledge you made to the people of Texas when you ran in 1994, that you didn't have to make, with regard to the parameters that you were going to superimpose over your contributions during that campaign.

You unilaterally decided to accept no more than $5,000 from a PAC, a political party, any other entity, or an individual, together with his or her spouse and independent family members. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: That's correct, Senator. At that time there were no laws at all in Texas limiting judicial campaign contributions.

SEN. MCCONNELL: And you pledged to have "no more than half my contributors be lawyers" and in a statewide race accept no more than 60 percent of your total contributions from lawyers. You didn't have to do that, did you?

REV_00348677

MS. OWEN: I met all the -- I met my pledge.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Yeah. But you didn't have to do that.

MS. OWEN: I did not have to do that.

SEN. MCCONNELL: This is something you chose to do because you were troubled by having to raise funds in order to run for a judicial race. But, of course, if you didn't, nobody would have known who the heck you were.

MS. OWEN: That's correct, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Third, you said you would allow no PAC or political party "to spend more than $5,000 pro-rated to aid my campaign." You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I didn't.

SEN. MCCONNELL: You, fourth, said you would accept no more than $25,000 from a law firm and all its employees and members, their spouses and dependent family members. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Fifth, you said you would accept no more than 15 percent of your total contributions from non-lawyer PACs. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Sixth, you said you would use no funds raised for any non-judicial office. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Seventh, you said you'd spend or loan "no more than $10,000 of my money on my campaign." You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, sir.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Eight, you said you'd spend no more than $2 million. You didn't have to do that, did you?

REV_00348678

MS. OWEN: No, sir.

SEN. MCCONNELL: And, ninth, you said you'd make a good-faith effort to report the occupation and employer of each person who contributes more than $50. Did you have to do that?

MS. OWEN: I wasn't required by law to do it, no.

SEN. MCCONNELL: All right. So you were somewhat troubled by the fact that you had to run for office like a regular candidate here, and you were on your own trying to impose some standards in order to diminish the appearance, at least, of undue influence on the part of these contributors to your campaign. Is that correct?

MS. OWEN: Well, let me do say that when you say I was on my own, Senator -- one of my colleagues who also running at the same time also took the same pledge, and Chief Justice Phillips had not done exactly that, but he has imposed limit when he had run prior to that. So, I was certainly not the only one that had ever done it, but -- but not many of us have had.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Well, that's nice of you to say that. The others obviously had more trouble by -- by the process in some ways as well. And as several of the people who testified on your behalf pointed out, you've actually backed -- been a leader in trying to nudge Texas in the direction of adoption a different system, have you not?

MS. OWEN: I have.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Frankly, I think you ought to be sainted for your exemplary conduct in running for this office. Some people are insisting on painting you as some kind of a Ma Barker here, of a Depression Era gang land thing, and it's utterly absurd. So, just to explore how much attention you may have paid to these contributors, can you name for me your top five largest contributors?

MS. OWEN: I can -- I can name the top one because it was my former law firm, and the employees, including the mailroom people, contributed and they exceeded the cap and I gave a bunch of their money back. But I know -- I know because of that that they were my largest contributor, but other than that, I don't know.

SEN. MCCONNELL: You can't remember any of the rest of them, right?

MS. OWEN: I can remember some -- certainly I can remember some of the law firms that contributed because they are people I practiced law with for 17 years, but I don't know where they fell in terms of were they 100th, or 10th, or -- I don't remember.

REV_00348679

SEN. MCCONNELL: And so the suggestions made that you should have somehow notified parties arguing cases before you of your -- the fact that you had received contributions when in fact that isn't required by Texas law and the contributions would be available in publicly disclosed forum to anybody who was curious enough to ask, and certainly including the lawyers who were appearing before you, correct?

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Well, I think these suggestions that you've somehow engaged in rulings that favor your donors is -- is absolutely absurd on its -- on its face. And I commend you for really traversing the waters here of elected politics for a judicial position in a very ethical manner. As I said, you know, at the risk of being repetitious, I don't think judges ought to be elected, but if we are going to elect them, they certainly ought to be free to speak, and the supreme court has made it clear they're free to speak. The supreme court also made it clear over 25 years ago that in order to speak you have to reach the audience. And the only way you're going to reach the audience is to raise funds to reach the audience, particularly in an enormous state like yours, with a population currently of what?

MS. OWEN: I -- I don't know --

SEN. MCCONNELL: Over 20 million?

MS. OWEN: Five million people, I think, close to five million people voted in my race.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Yeah, over 20 million people in Texas. You managed to do that in an extraordinarily thoughtful and ethical manner for which you ought to be commended, not condemned. And I think the suggestion that you have in any way been tainted by these contributions is completely and totally baseless -- completely and totally baseless. It -- it just troubles me greatly that you've even been subjected to this criticism because there is essentially nothing that I can find in the record that justifies it.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator, your time is up.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Madam President -- Madam Chairman, I think we are about to the end of our time here anyway, and I'll save the balance of my observations for another round.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right. And Senator Hatch, you have a question --

SEN. HATCH: Madam Chair, if I could, I feel compelled to respond to the questions raised earlier about the nominations of Judge Rangel and Enrique Moreno, because these nominations were made when I was chairman of this committee, and I understand those remarks as an attack on my record of fairness. Those -- Jorge Rangel voluntarily withdrew his nomination citing frustration with the pace of the confirmation process. It is interesting to note that his nomination was pending for fewer in-session days than Justice Owen's. Mr. Wrangler quit after waiting 192 days of Senate business while Justice Owen is here after 212 Senate business days. When Mr. Rangel, President Clinton decided not to allow the Texas Senators Federal Judiciary Advisory Group to review and recommend potential candidates. Instead, President Clinton nominated Enrique Moreno. This put the advisory group in the unprecedented position of interviewing someone who had already been nominated to determine his qualifications. And when the advisory group voted, two-thirds of the voting members opposed the nomination. Now, anyone acquainted with the history of Senate consultation on nominations would fully understand that bypassing the home state senators is not an effective strategy for confirmation. In contrast, Justice Owen enjoys the full and strong support of both of her home state senators, and, of course, many others in a bipartisan way as well.

So, I just wanted to set the record straight because I didn't want anybody walking out of here thinking that -- that there was a lack of fairness.

Thanks, Madam Chairman, for letting me make that point.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right. You're welcome.

SEN. HATCH: Could I also put in the record, Madam Chairman, a letter -- a letter to Senator Leahy from -- concerning the Ford Motor case that was raised earlier -- yes, written by Victor E. Schwartz, who, of course, is one of the true authorities on tort law in this country and knows what horn book law really is.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection. The hearing will recess until 2:15. I earlier said 2:00, but the party conferences generally don't end until 2:15, so we'll make it that. Thank you very much.

SECTION: CAPITOL HILL HEARING

LENGTH: 19648 words

HEADLINE: AFTERNOON SESSION OF PANEL II OF A SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE HEARING

CHAIRED BY: SEN. DIANNE FEINSTEIN (D-CA)

SUBJECT: NOMINATION OF PRISCILLA OWEN TO BE A CIRCUIT COURT JUDGE FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

WITNESSES: PRISCILLA OWEN, NOMINEE

BODY:
SEN. FEINSTEIN: The hearing will come to order. Justice Owen, just a reminder: You are still under oath. And we will resume the first round of questioning. I would remind the committee that we'll recess for any floor votes that occur during the remainder of the day. And once again we're following the early-bird order, and it begins with Senator Kennedy; after Senator Kennedy, Senators DeWine, Feingold, Sessions, Schumer, Brownback, Durbin, Cantwell and Edwards is what I have so far.

Senator Kennedy.

SEN. EDWARD KENNEDY (D-MA): Thank you very much, Senator Feinstein. Welcome, Judge Owen.

MS. OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. KENNEDY: I apologize not being here earlier. I was here in the very beginning of the hearing. We're, as you have heard, considering the prescription drug issue. And as the floor manager of that, I needed to be on the floor. So I'm going to ask questions and then, with permission of the chairman, submit some follow-on questions. But I'd like to cover, if I could, in the time that I do have, two areas. As I look at your cases, I see that you have a pattern of siding against the consumer or the victim of personal injury in favor of business and insurance companies. And I'm struck by the fact that when the court does rule in favor of consumers or victims of personal injury, you're frequently in dissent.

In a few instances you've gone along with the majority of the case and ruled in favor of injured individuals. But looking at the information over the last three years, you've dissented almost half the time that a consumer wins. And you've never dissented from a case in which the consumer loses.

Do you disagree that you're among the most likely on the Texas Supreme Court to dissent from favoring -- cases favoring a consumer or injured plaintiff?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I don't. I judge each case on its merits. I'd like to address one thing you said. One case that comes to mind where I was in the dissent in favor of the plaintiff was Sands versus Fidelity Guaranty, or I'm not sure what comes after Fidelity.

But it was a workers' compensation case, and the woman entered into a settlement agreement of her workers' compensation claim and she ultimately claimed that she was fraudulently induced into it and claimed damages for bad faith. And I agreed with the majority of the court that the compromise the public perception that judges and courts are a forum for the fair, unbiased and impartial adjudication of disputes," unquote.

We compromise that perception, I believe, when we play partisan or ideological tricks with the judiciary. Surely we can find other ways to raise money for campaigns and otherwise play at politics without dragging this nation's trust in the judiciary through the mud, as some of the outside groups continue to do.

All you have to do to see my point is read two or three of the fund-raising letters that have become public over the past couple of weeks that spread mistruths and drag the judiciary branch into the mud, as many recent political campaigns increasingly find themselves.

On a lighter note, while on ideology, let me pause to point out that one of the groups deployed against Justice Owen is the Communist Party of America. But then I don't know that they have come out in favor of any of President Bush's nominees. I suspect, after the fall of the Berlin Wall, they must have a lot of time on their hands these days.

Today I wish to address just why a nominee with such a stellar record of respected judicial temperament and as fine an intellect as Justice Owen has, who graduated third in her class from Baylor's law school, a great Baptist institution, when few women attended law school, let alone in the South, who obtained the highest score on the Texas bar examination and who has twice been elected by the people of Texas to serve on their Supreme Court, the last time with 83 percent of the votes and the support of every major newspaper of every political stripe, I would like to address just why such a nominee could be here today with as much organized and untruthful opposition from the usual leftist Washington special interest groups that we see.

I will peel through what is at play for these groups. We need to expose and repel what is at play for the benefit and independence of this committee. And I would like to address also the reasons why I am confident that she will be confirmed notwithstanding, not least of which is that this committee has never voted against a circuit nominee with the American Bar Association's unanimous rating of well- qualified, the highest rating they give. Justice Owen has that highest of ratings.

The first reason for the organized opposition, of course, is (plain?). Justice Owen is from Texas, and Washington's well-paid reputation destroyers cannot help but attempt to attack the widely-popular president of the United States at this particular time, in an election year, by attacking the judicial nominee most familiar to him, Justice Owen. Welcome to Washington.

But as I prepared more deeply for this hearing, the second reason became apparent to me. In my 26 years on this committee, I've seen no group of judicial nominees as superb as those that President Bush has sent to us, and he has sent both Democrats and Republicans, men and women, Hispanics, African-Americans and Caucasians.

bad-faith claim couldn't stand. But I dissented because she should have been entitled to rescind that settlement agreement and go back and reassert her original workers' compensation claim. That's one that comes to mind. I can go back and --

SEN. KENNEDY: Let's take the example where the majority found -- over the objections of the majority. Have you ever dissented over the objections of the majority and found for a consumer of plaintiff? Do you have any recollection of any cases?

MS. OWEN: Well, that would be one of them, the Sands versus Fidelity.

SEN. KENNEDY: That wasn't a majority case.

MS. OWEN: I was in the dissent in that case. You're asking me if I've been in the majority for consumers?

SEN. KENNEDY: Any time that -- can you point to a case in which you stood up for a consumer or individual plaintiff over the objections of the majority?

MS. OWEN: Well, there's --

SEN. KENNEDY: That is, a case in which the consumer lost and you dissented.

MS. OWEN: Well, I think the Sands case that I just described is one of them. I think there are probably others. Again, there are 900 of them. I don't remember them all. But I could go look.

SEN. KENNEDY: Well, if you could be good enough to provide some of those.

MS. OWEN: Now, I've certainly voted -- there are a number of opinions where I have -- obviously the consumer has recovered and I joined those opinions.

SEN. KENNEDY: In the past two years, the Texas Supreme Court has ruled on cases brought under the Texas Parental Notification Act, and the law passed by the state legislature in 2000 permits the young woman to have an abortion without notifying her parents if she proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, that she's mature and sufficiently well-informed to make the decision or if notification would not be in her best interest or if notification would lead to physical, sexual or emotional abuse.

Many, if not most, would describe members of the Texas Supreme Court as conservatives. And as cases have come before the court, it's clear that its members have struggled with the task of restraining their personal beliefs on abortion and parental notification to ensure they adhere to the letter of the law.

In fact, former Texas Supreme Court member, current White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, wrote, "I cannot rewrite the statute to make parental rights absolute or virtually absolute, particularly when, as here, the legislature has elected not to do so. However the ramifications of such a law and the results of the court's decision here may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the legislature." That's all his quote.

Now, Justice Owen, a majority of the court have applied the plain language of the parental-notification statute to the relevant cases and they have refrained from legislating from the bench and placing new hurdles before young women who are already required to meet the stringent standards required by the statute.

On the other hand, you've repeatedly tried to impose new standards, standards not found in the statute, on the young women whose cases come before you. For example, you'd require young women to meet unusually high standards to prove "the direct, clear and positive," quote, proof of abuse instead of showing that the notification may lead to abuse.

Your standard is so high that four of your colleagues wrote, "Abuse is abuse. It is neither to be trifled with nor its severity to be second-guessed." Similarly, you would require a minor to exhibit an awareness of religious issues. In no place does the statute require such a showing.

So, Justice Owen, you seem to be making, not interpreting, the law. And, in fact, many might call your actions on the court activist. Can you tell the committee why, if you believe that your views reflect the plain language of the statute, you have been unable to persuade a majority of your colleagues to interpret the statute such that it includes the additional hurdles that you've grafted onto the parental-notification law?

MS. OWEN: Senator, obviously my court disagreed. We divided up initially on these cases. I -- let me go back and address the "clear, direct, positive." That was not the standard that -- the statute says "abuse may occur." And I looked for a definition of emotional abuse in another piece of the same family code. And I didn't say that you actually have to have that, but I said that's the definition of abuse if it may lead to that. That's all I was saying there.

The "clear, direct evidence" piece comes in to -- that's our standard of review as an appellate court, not in the trial court; not in the trial court. In the trial court, the burden of proof is preponderance of the evidence. And if there's some evidence to support what the trial court did, that's that.

But on appeal, if the trial court denies the minor the bypass, and even if there's no evidence to support that denial, she still must, under established law that the majority agrees with, she must still establish, by clear, direct evidence that's unequivocal as a matter of law, that she's entitled to that bypass. And a majority agrees with that. It's in our case law. That's just the standard of review, for her to establish, is a matter of law. She's entitled to it on appeal. That's not the standard that would be applied in the trial court.

SEN. KENNEDY: Well, are you saying that the four justices didn't have a different position than you had on this particular case?

MS. OWEN: I'm saying there are two different inquiries. In Doe I, I differed with the majority. I said that there are other factors that ought to be considered in deciding whether a minor is sufficiently informed. And once Doe was over, that was the standard that I applied in every case thereafter.

A separate issue that we don't disagree on --

SEN. KENNEDY: These are other factors in the law? You were looking at the law and you found that there were other aspects of the law that you noticed that the other judges did notice?

MS. OWEN: I looked, again, at everything that the U.S. Supreme Court had said, that it's okay for states to include in ensuring that a minor is sufficiently well-informed to make this decision without the knowledge of either of her parents. There are factors that appear in at least three Supreme Court cases that I thought the legislature intended to reference when they used the word "sufficiently informed and mature."

And so I was looking, again, at what the U.S. Supreme Court had said in this whole area about being informed and being mature. The court did not agree with me. But after Doe I, I applied the court's standards that they pronounced. And then this "clear, direct evidence," it's not tied to the statute. That's an appellate standard that the majority agrees with. That's just -- she's not entitled to a bypass in our court unless she establishes in the record the evidence established by clear, direct, positive testimony, free from doubt, as a matter of law, she had met the standard.

SEN. KENNEDY: Well, if you had that, do you have the same ruling today as you had at that particular time? Do you still read that the way you did at that particular time?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I apply the -- after Doe I, in all the other Doe cases that have come up involving "mature and sufficiently well-informed," I apply the same -- I only look at the same factors that the court did. The big controversy the second time Doe came up was whether there was any evidence at all to support what the trial court did.

And I said it was a close case, but I said the trial court was actually there on the ground. He saw -- he or she saw the minor testify, judged her credibility. And I think maturity is something that's particularly hard to do from a cold record. And I said there's some evidence, even though it's close, to support what the trial court did. And under appellate standards of review, I felt I was bound to uphold what the trial court did, even though I might have ruled a different way had I been on the trial court.

SEN. KENNEDY: Madam Chair, I thank -- my time is up. I'll have a chance to examine this record further, but I'm troubled by this conclusion. Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Senator Kennedy. Senator DeWine.

SEN. MIKE DEWINE (R-OH): Justice Owen, thank you for being with us. I want to clarify something, to follow up on Senator Kennedy's questioning. You do now follow Roe I.

MS. OWEN: Yes. That's -- yes.

SEN. DEWINE: That is the law of Texas today.

MS. OWEN: It is the law.

SEN. DEWINE: And you have followed that ever since Roe I was decided. Is that correct?

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator.

SEN. DEWINE: Now, in Roe I, both the minority and the majority were trying to decide what guidance to give the trial court.

MS. OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: Isn't that correct?

MS. OWEN: Yes. We were trying to --

SEN. DEWINE: And isn't it correct that the only dispute was what guidance to give? It wasn't a dispute over whether you were going to give guidance.

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: And, in fact, isn't it true that the majority did give guidance to the lower court?

MS. OWEN: They did.

SEN. DEWINE: And that's the guidance that you follow today.

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: There are a number of rules of construction that courts apply when interpreting a statute. Isn't it true that one of those rules is that a legislature is presumed to be aware of United States Supreme Court precedent in an area in which it has passed a statute?

REV_00348686

MS. OWEN: That's where the standard presumption is in statutory construction.

SEN. DEWINE: Basic rule of construction, the courts will follow.

MS. OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: So in the case of the Texas parental-notification statute, the Texas court's presumption would be that the Texas legislature was, in fact, aware of Supreme Court precedent when it crafted its judicial-bypass process.

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator. And we all agreed on that. The majority agreed that that was true.

SEN. DEWINE: Now, I'm looking at the end of Section -- Roman numeral IV in the Texas Supreme Court's majority opinion in the first Jane Doe case. In Section 4, your court's majority is discussing a line of U.S. Supreme Court cases on parental bypass, starting with Bellotti. Your court majority concludes, and I quote, "Our legislature was obviously aware of this jurisprudence when it drafted the statute before us," end of quote.

So you weren't alone in your conclusion that the Texas legislature drafted the parental-notification statute with the Supreme Court case in mind, were you?

MS. OWEN: No, sir.

SEN. DEWINE: The majority had the same opinion.

MS. OWEN: They did.

SEN. DEWINE: Let me really get back to basics in regard to this issue. I want to go back to the statute that was passed by the Texas legislature in this area. And I will quote from it. When a minor files this application for a bypass -- in other words, saying, "I do not want either one of my parents notified" -- and this is, in fact, a minor we're dealing with -- "When a minor files such an application, the court shall determine" -- I'm quoting from the statute -- "by a preponderance of the evidence, whether, one, the minor is mature and sufficiently well-informed to make the decision to have an abortion performed without notification to either of her parents, or, two, notification would not be in the best interest of the minor, or, three, notification may lead to physical, sexual or emotional abuse of the minor."

And the statute continues. "And if the court makes any of these determinations" -- that's my emphasis -- "any of these determinations, the court shall enter an order authorizing the minor to consent to the performance of the abortion."

So -- now, as the Supreme Court, you're not the trier of fact, are you?

REV_00348687

MS. OWEN: No, we're not.

SEN. DEWINE: That is the lower court, the originating court.

MS. OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: And in Texas, you have three layers?

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: Okay. So before that case gets to you -- any of these, what, 10 cases, 12 cases?

MS. OWEN: Well, there were 10 girls.

SEN. DEWINE: Whatever they were -- about that. Before they got to you, the trier of fact had already determined that none of these three items applied, because if any of them would have applied, the trier of fact, who was watching the witness, who was talking to the young lady, who was taking all the circumstances into consideration, if that trier of fact had found any of these three, that case never would have got to you, would it?

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: Now, is it my understanding, under Texas law, that once a lower court makes that determination, that ends the case --

MS. OWEN: That ends the case.

SEN. DEWINE: -- because there's no one to appeal the case?

MS. OWEN: That's correct. There's no one to --

SEN. DEWINE: The plaintiff has won or the person who's filing, the young lady who's filing, her lawyer, they've won the case.

MS. OWEN: And the statute specifically says there's no appeal from a grant of the bypass.

SEN. DEWINE: So before these cases get to you, the lower court has found all three or has found that none of the three apply, then an appellate court has gone through and done a review.

MS. OWEN: That would be a three-judge panel.

SEN. DEWINE: Three-judge panel. That's how it works in Texas. All right. Now, as all lawyers know and judges know, and I think many people know, when a case gets to an appellate court, such as your Supreme Court, you're not retrying that case.

REV_00348688

JUSTICE OWEN: No, Senator, we're not.

SEN. DEWINE: And there are different standards. The majority came down with one standard. You came down with another standard of review. Those standards are not very dissimilar. Those are -- what are the basic standards?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, in terms of the factors on --

SEN. DEWINE: Yeah, what are you looking for to overturn a case? What do you have to find?

JUSTICE OWEN: On the "mature and sufficiently well-informed," there are two things. You first have to conclude that there was absolutely no evidence to support the trial court's failure to find. But then you also have to take the second step and look at the evidence and see if the minor established, from clear, direct, convincing evidence -- I may not be quoting exactly, but it's in the majority opinion -- and there's no factual dispute at all, before she's entitled to a bypass --

SEN. DEWINE: That is the law in Texas today.

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: That, though, in a sense, is not totally dissimilar to what we have in many appellate cases, where the basic principle of law that we have in this country is that we give deference to the lower court, the trier of fact, whether it is a jury or whether it is a judge who is -- has the opportunity to watch the witness, has the opportunity to judge the demeanor of the witness on the stand, has the opportunity to take all the totality of circumstances into account, isn't that true?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: So I think, Madam Chairman, it seems to me that when we look at and judge these cases, these parental notification cases, it seems to me that as we see whether or not these have any bearing on this justice's qualification to sit on the federal bench, it's good for us to be mindful of the fact that all appellate courts give a great deal of deference to the lower courts, that all appellate courts understand that the trial court judge has his job or her job, and they are the ones who are looking at the witnesses. And it would seem to me that particularly when we're dealing with such a very delicate case, and a case where the understanding of the young lady involved is so important, and what -- not just she has been told but what she truly understands, that the trial court judge is in a unique position to make -- make that decision. And I think that we all should consider that as we look at these cases.

Thank you very much.

REV_00348689

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator DeWine. Senator Feingold, you're next.

SEN. RUSSELL FEINGOLD (D-WI): I thank the chair. Welcome, Justice Owen.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINGOLD: Justice Owen, the independence of the Texas Supreme Court has recently been attacked for allowing its law clerks to accept large bonuses, as much as $45,000 from law firms that law clerks plan to join after completing their clerkships. And the potential for a conflict of interest here is very real and serious, I think. The clerks review and express opinion on cases brought by or against the firms paying their bonuses. I'm told this issue provoked an investigation by the Travis County attorney into whether the practice violates Texas criminal law. The Texas Ethics Commission ruled last year that the bonuses could be in violation of the state's bribery laws. In response, the supreme court issued new guidelines concerning these so-called clerk perks. I'm told that you, however, defended the clerk perks and dismissed the criticism as a, quote, "political issue that is being dressed up as a good government issue," unquote. Why do you believe that this was simply a political issue and not a genuine issue of ethics, fairness and independence of the judiciary?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, I'm glad you asked that question because, first of all, my quote, I do -- I do think I said it was a political issue, I don't remember the second part of it. But let me give some background, if I may, on the entire clerk issue. First of all, the -- there -- the investigation was not of my court or any judge on the court. That was an issue between the employers and the law clerks. The court or the justices were never under any kind of scrutiny at all from the criminal law standpoint. But this is a long-standing practice that I would say many if not most federal district courts, federal circuits, and I think even some judges on the U.S. Supreme Court -- law firms around the country typically give so-called "clerkship bonuses," to their lawyers who take their first year of practice and clerk for a court, not just my court, as I said federal district courts, federal courts of appeals, U.S. Supreme Court, and nobody -- that was a practice that's been around for a long time. Every -- since -- ever since I've been at my court, I mean, everybody -- it was a clearly understood rule, and certainly a hard and fast rule in my chambers, that if you had clerked for any law firm, if you were even thinking about taking a job offer from any law firm, you were completely recused from all of their cases permanently, as long as you were an employee of the court. You don't get near that file. You didn't work on memos, or when matters touching that case were brought up in conference, you'd have to leave the conference room so that there's just no opportunity at all for a law clerk that has any connection or any potential connection as an employee with a law firm to come into contact with those files. So --

SEN. FEINGOLD: So, the clerks have recused themselves in each of the cases?

JUSTICE OWEN: They have. And we -- we -- that's a -- that's been a rule for years, as far as to my knowledge --

REV_00348690

SEN. FEINGOLD: Let me -- I appreciate that background. Let me just return to my original question. Do you believe this is a simply political issue, or is it also a genuine issue of ethics, fairness, and independence of the judiciary?

JUSTICE OWEN: The reason I said it was a political issue is because it was only my court that was singled out, this practice -- they didn't criticize the federal courts. They didn't criticize any of the lower state courts of appeals who do it. They didn't criticize the criminal court. And they didn't criticize the U.S. Supreme Court. It was just my court that was singled out by a group who routinely issues press releases accusing my court of ethical violations.

SEN. FEINGOLD: Well let me ask you more broadly then, the broader practice, is it a -- simply a political question or is it a question of whether this creates potential problems, a legitimate question of ethics and fairness?

JUSTICE OWEN: I didn't think because of the way we always structured the clerkship program that it was an ethical issue because it was such a well-settled, long-standing practice, and because these clerks had no access whatsoever, I didn't think it was an ethical issue. The way it was resolved is, not -- again, this is mainly an issue between the employers and our clerks, not the court -- but we did say, put in new rules so that the clerks would be absolutely clear, wouldn't inadvertently get in trouble with anyone. We said -- the authorities said that if they could take the clerkships over -- their bonus over a period of a year after they leave the court. They -- it was -- it was -- they still get the bonus, it's just a question of timing.

SEN. FEINGOLD: I appreciate those answers. Let me turn to a different question. I understand that you are a member of a local church in Austin, Texas, the St. Barnabas Episcopal Church.

JUSTICE OWEN: I am.

SEN. FEINGOLD: According to Alliance for Justice, in 1998, while you were a sitting justice, you lobbied then-governor George W. Bush with a private meeting with your pastor for state funds for an evangelical prison ministry program, Alpha Prison Ministries. Now, according to Jose Juarez, a law professor at St. Mary's School of Law in Texas, this conduct is in -- a violation of Cannons 1, 2, 2(a), 2(b), 4(a), 4(b), 4(c) and 5 of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct. Cannon 2(b) states that a judge, quote, "shall not lend the prestige of a judicial office to advance the private interest of the judge or others," end of quote. Cannon 4(c) states that a judge, quote, "shall not solicit funds for any educational, religious, charitable, fraternal, or civic organization," unquote. Professor Juarez concludes by stating, quote, "Any Texas judge should have known that such a meeting would violate the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct." Could you please explain why you held this meeting in violation of the letter and the spirit of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, Senator, I respectfully submit that I didn't violate any ethical code at all.

I facilitated a meeting between my pastor and then-Governor Bush to ask if -- for my pastor to ask him if he would consider allowing a prison ministry, headed up by my church, in a -- in a prison. No state funds were asked for whatsoever. This -- the whole prison ministry was -- didn't cost the state any money. It was totally voluntary on the prisoners' part. They didn't get any special perks or any special treatment if they took part in the prison ministry. It was a small group of people, as I understand it -- I didn't participate -- but as I understand it, who ended up going to the women's prison in Barnett, Texas on Friday evenings for a period of I think six weeks or so to do this prison ministry. It didn't cost -- again, no funds were involved. It was simply, on Friday evenings -- again, as I understand it, (Justice ?) is here, he can give you the details if necessary, but --

SEN. FEINGOLD: So, there was no solicitation for funds at all?

JUSTICE OWEN: Absolutely none.

SEN. FEINGOLD: And that's why it's your contention that none of the cannons of ethics were violated?

JUSTICE OWEN: That, and the fact that although I am a judge, I am also a friend of then-Governor Bush, and we had discussed some of these issues, some of our respective beliefs before, and I had told him about my pastor. And I guess in my mind it was more friend-to- friend as opposed to judge-to-governor, but in either event, even if I had had my judge hat on, no fund -- no funding was involved at all. And it wasn't a lobbying effort, it was simply a -- would you consider letting us do this prison ministry?

SEN. FEINGOLD: I appreciate your answers to my questions, Justice.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Feingold. Senator Sessions is not here. Schumer, Brownback, and Senator Durbin, you're next up.

SEN. DURBIN: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Justice Owen, thank you for joining us. I have followed in the news reports a suggestion that the Texas Supreme Court has changed rather dramatically over the last 10 or 15 years. There have been suggestions that because of active political campaigns that those justices now serving on the court, at least a substantial majority, are certainly more sympathetic to business interests, and corporate interests, and insurance company interests than previous courts. In fact, some national news programs have suggested that it is nothing short of a statewide, coordinated, long-term campaign for those interests to make certain that they are well-represented on that Texas Supreme Court. Have you heard these same press reports?

JUSTICE OWEN: Certainly.

In reading Justice Owen's decisions, one sees a judge working hard to get it right, to get at the legislature's intent, and to apply binding authority in rules of judicial construction. It is apparent to me that of all of the sitting judges the president has nominated, that of all of them, Justice Owen is the most outstanding nominee.

She is, in my estimation, the best that every American, every consumer and every parent could hope for. Her opinions, whether majority concurrences or dissents, could be used as a law school textbook that illustrates exactly how and not what an appellate judge should think, how she should write, and just how she should do the people justice by effecting their will through the laws adopted by their elected legislatures.

Justice Owen clearly approaches these tasks with both scholarship and mainstream American common sense. She does not substitute her views for the legislature's, which is precisely the type of judge that the Washington groups who oppose her normally want.

She is precisely the kind of judge that our first two presidents, George Washington and John Adams, had in mind when they agreed that the justices on the state supreme courts would provide the most learned candidates for the federal bench. So in studying her record, the second reason for the militant and deceptive opposition to Justice Owen became quite plain to me. In this world turned upside-down, simply put, she is that good.

Another reason for the opposition against Justice Owen is the most demagogic, the issue of campaign contributions and campaign finance reform. Some of her critics are even eager to tie her to the current trouble with Enron, while she clearly has nothing to do with that. Neither Enron nor any other corporation has donated to her campaigns. In fact, they are forbidden by Texas law to make campaign contributions in judicial elections.

Despite the politics, I am certain that Justice Owen is quite eager to address this issue fully. And, being a Texas woman, I trust she will not embarrass the questioner too badly; not that there is a need for more questions. The Enron and campaign contributions questions were amply clarified in a letter to Chairman Leahy and the committee dated April 5th by Alberto Gonzales, the White House counsel.

I ask, Madam Chairman, to place this and other related letters into the record at this point.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: So ordered.

SEN. HATCH: And I would place into the record a retraction from the New York Times saying that they got the facts wrong on this Enron story. Such retractions don't come often, although the misstatement of facts by the destroyer groups do. So I would ask unanimous consent that that go in the record.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection.

REV_00348648

SEN. DURBIN: Do you believe they are true?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, Senator, I don't.

SEN. DURBIN: And so you would say that the court is -- how would you describe the court today?

JUSTICE OWEN: I would describe it as I think some of our colleagues in other states have described it, as a very good court. The justice -- a justice on the Massachusetts court has said when they start looking at common law issues in particular, they start with the Texas Supreme Court because our opinions are well researched and thoroughly reasoned. That's where they start.

SEN. DURBIN: And on -- on the court itself, where would you place yourself on the spectrum -- more conservative than the majority, or in the center position, or more liberal?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator Durbin, I -- I frankly don't -- I don't think it's very instructive to imply -- to apply words like conservative or liberal in terms of judging. I don't take a political viewpoint into my chambers or on to the bench when I judge cases or as I am sitting there reading the briefs.

SEN. DURBIN: Well, let me ask about a few of those cases to see if I can deduce my own conclusion from them. Let me ask you just directly, what is your position on abortion?

JUSTICE OWEN: My position is that Roe v. Wade has been the law of the land for many, many years. Now it's modified by Casey. And I -- none of my personal beliefs would get in the way of me applying that law or any other law.

SEN. DURBIN: And yet if someone were to take a look at the opinion that -- opinions that you've written on the parental notification statute in Texas, they would find, would they not, in the overwhelming majority of cases you have decided against allowing a minor to go forward with an abortion procedure under Texas law.

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator Durbin, there were -- there were only five girls that my -- my court has written on. And out of those five cases, I voted to grant the bypass in one case. And the first time that they came to the court in the other two, I voted to remand those cases to the trial court so that Jane Doe 1 and Jane Doe 2 could each get another shot at getting the bypass. And if the trial court had granted the bypasses a second time, that would have been the end of it. When the second time Doe 2 came back, I said it was a close call, but based on the record I had -- I felt like I had to go with the trial court's call. In five of the cases, as I think I talked about earlier, they came up to the court and without opinion the court affirmed the lower court. As I said, that would take at least six votes. There were not public dissents. If there had been, they would had to have -- all the judges would have had to have noted where they lined up. And I think it's a fair assumption, given -- given the amount that occurred on the other five cases that if they had been close cases we would have written on them. So, we're talk --

SEN. DURBIN: Is it not true that you've ruled against judicial bypass in every opinion you've offered -- authored, in 13 of the 14 cases you've considered on the court?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes sir, that's -- that's -- I voted in the first two cases -- I didn't say she doesn't get the bypass, I said she gets another chance to convince the trial court that she should get it --

SEN. DURBIN: Do you understand --

JUSTICE OWEN: -- and then I granted the bypass, I voted with the court with Doe 10 to outright grant the bypass.

SEN. DURBIN: Do you understand the timeliness of the decisions that the courts are making in these cases?

JUSTICE OWEN: The timeliness?

SEN. DURBIN: Yes.

JUSTICE OWEN: As soon as they come in, we drop everything and deal with these.

SEN. DURBIN: And remanding them for another court review --

JUSTICE OWEN: It's within two days. We told them that you've got two business days under the statute to resolve it.

SEN. DURBIN: In Jane Doe 2, you wrote in your concurrence, "the court has omitted any requirement that a trial court find an abortion to be in the best interest of the minor." The law says that the notification has to be in the best interest of the minor. Could you tell me where you came up with the notion that the legislature required that the abortion be in the best interest of the minor?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes sir, I can. The -- that's directly out of the U.S. Supreme Court case that said we construe notification to mean notif -- that -- I'm sorry, notification, best interest to mean that abortion without notification is in the best interest, and it's straight out of a majority opinion from the U.S. Supreme Court.

SEN. DURBIN: I find in each of these cases, though, that you have tended to expand and embellish on the state legislative decision in Texas. Now, Senator Gramm, your sponsor, one of your sponsors today, has said that he thinks the Texas legislature was trying to take three sides on a two-sided issue. That's a statement that's fairly critical of this legislature. Clearly, they have taken a position, and I take it from what you've said to us today that these court decisions, where you consistently find problems with the Texas parental notification statute, you're saying don't reflect any opposition on your part to a woman's right to choose?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, Senator, I don't think they do. Again, the -- the exact language that's in the statute, best interest, that exact same language was construed by the U.S. Supreme Court to mean that the abortion without notification was in the best interest. Sir, I followed what the U.S. Supreme Court had construed that to mean. And I thought that was a reasonable construction given that the legislature had taken the language out of -- if not that very case, it may have been that very case --

SEN. DURBIN: I'll have to say that I've been on this committee for a few years, and the issue of judicial activism has arisen when there were Republican chairs and Democratic chairs. And I have come to conclude that it is in the eye of the beholder that Republicans only want judges who are actively pursuing their agenda, and Democrats only want judges actively pursuing their agenda. I don't think it is an objective standard that is being used here. And so the term is being used back and forth here.

What I am looking for really are some fundamentals in terms of your philosophy. I believe the president has a right to fill vacancies. But I also believe the people of this country, and certainly the people in this circuit that you are aspiring to, deserve judges who are going to be moderate and centrist, and try to be reasonable and balanced in their decision-making.

Let me go to a specific case, if I can for a moment.

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, before we leave this area, can I make one point on this activist in this whole area of a woman's right to choose? Two cases that have come before my court that I would like you to be aware of -- one, I believe it was Sepulveda v. Krishnan. In that case the question was can a mother and a mother recover damages for the death of a fetus. And I think you can see the implications in all this debate over that particular issue. And my court had for many years construed the Texas wrongful death statute and the survival statute to say, no, you cannot recover for the death of a fetus. We were asked to reconsider that construction, and we pointed out that the vast majority of states now allow recovery in those circumstances. But I agreed with the majority that, no, that had been Texas law. We are not going to change it. You cannot recover for the death of a fetus. That's the law in Texas.

SEN. DURBIN: I'm sorry to interrupt you, but I have very little time here, and if you'd like to submit something along that point of view, I'll be happy to consider it.

I want to go to one specific case though, the Provident American case -- versus Castenada -- do you remember it?

JUSTICE OWEN: I do.

SEN. DURBIN: I read this case, and read your decision, and I often wondered how a court could come down, as you did, writing a majority opinion here in a case involving coverage on a health insurance plan where frankly the insurance company decided to try to find anything it could in its policy to avoid paying for a critical surgery that was needed by this family. In fact, you came down and found on the side of the insurance company, and said that there was an exclusion out of their policy. The dissent that was written in this case by Justice Raoul Gonzalez I think went to great lengths to point out facts that you chose to ignore. You said the court sustains -- let me find this -- the court ignores important evidence that supports the judgment, emphasizing evidence and indulging inferences contrary to the verdict -- resolves all conflicts in the evidence against the verdict for the family that was denied coverage. And it goes on to say, "I want to recite the facts the court chooses to ignore in its decision."

The reason I raise this issue -- and Justice Gonzalez was very forthright in believing that this was a slam-duck for the insurance company, that they got an opinion from you that he didn't believe was sustained by the policy or the evidence. In fact, he said he thought with your opinion you were destroying the bad faith tort in the state of Texas.

Going back to my original point, I think it is fairly well known that the Texas Supreme Court is much more conservative today than it once was, that it was an all-out effort by major corporations and by insurance companies to try to build a majority on that court. And as I read this decision, sometimes it's hard for me to imagine how someone in good faith can look at the facts as in this case and basically say to a family, after they had preapproval for a surgery, that an insurance company could come in and say no, we are not going to cover, and then have a Supreme Court in Texas stand behind them, and say to the family, You're out of luck -- they found a little provision in the policy here -- you're not covered. This troubles me, because frankly that kind of a finding reflects a philosophy that does not tell me there is a well balanced approach here. And certainly Justice Gonzalez felt the same in his dissent. And I invite you to comment.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you, senator, I really do appreciate the opportunity, because this case was not about coverage. They were covered. The only dispute here was bad faith. These people were covered under their policy. They got their attorney's fees for breach of contract, and they got either 12 percent or 18 percent penalty under the statute -- I can't remember which one applied at the time. They lost on the coverage question -- no doubt about it. That was not the issue in front of my court.

The issue was whether in addition to their coverage -- their full policy limits, plus attorney's fees, plus the penalty -- could they recover extra contractual damages for bad faith? And the standard there is that the insurance company had absolutely no reasonable basis whatsoever to deny the coverage. And the facts in this case were the family had two children who had been jaundiced all of their lives. They called up an insurance company and applied for a policy, after their uncle had told them that he had a hereditary blood disease called HS. The policy had a 30-day waiting period, and they didn't disclose to the insurance company anything about the hereditary disease.

Three days after -- or maybe it was two --

SEN. DURBIN: Three.

JUSTICE OWEN: Three days after the 30 days had run they took their children to a physician who on the spot diagnosed this hereditary disease and removed their -- I believe it was their spleen. So the question was under those circumstances -- not should the insurance -- could they deny coverage? -- but is there any reasonable basis for them to delay in paying policy limits? And we have said under all those circumstances that you can't say that there was no reasonable basis to delay. But they were covered. That was not the issue.

SEN. DURBIN: I could tell you that -- I think we are carping on a trifle here as to whether they're covered. The fact was the insurance company approved the surgery, did they not, before it took place?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DURBIN: And the fact is the insurance company then refused to pay. And you were arguing in your majority opinion here on behalf of the insurance company that waiting the three days after the 30-day period was not enough; that these -- that this family was deceiving the insurance company -- was operating in bad faith. And I think Justice Gonzalez and Justice Specter (ph) make a compelling argument here that the facts just don't come up that way. I have represented insurance companies. I have represented plaintiffs. You were the answer to the insurance company's prayer if you would buy this argument, if you would turn on a company -- turn on a family that is facing this kind of peril and make this kind of interpretation. And that is what troubles me about what you are asking for, is to be elevated to a court where you can make significant decisions involving insurance companies and major corporations, which I am afraid if you follow the logic, as you did in the Provident case, would not be in the best interests of serving the people and the court. Thank you for being here. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much. I don't see other senators here at the moment, but I thought I might just say something. I am deeply concerned, because I've read all the Doe cases, and I've read the notification law. And the notification law is pretty straightforward. One, the minor is mature, sufficiently well informed to make the decision to have an abortion performed without notification to either of her parents or managing conservator or guardian; or the notification would not be the best interests of the minor; or notification may lead to physical, sexual or emotional abuse of the minor. That's it's. And any one of the three factors has to be present. That's it. It seems to me on that basis you make a decision. But you really haven't done that. You've looked in other places, it seems to me, to find a rationale not to do what the Texas law called for -- you know, invoking a religious implication, invoking concern about the fetus, invoking, Well, the emotional wrongdoing was just threatened by the parents -- it may not have happened. It seemed to me that you -- maybe this is what being an activist means -- that you worked to come out where you came out in your opinion. And that's a very deep concern, because if the Texas legislature wanted to change "may" to "must," they could have. They could have said, "notification must lead to physical, sexual, or emotional abuse of the minor," but they didn't. They said it "may," which means it either may or may not. And this I find troubling.

Now, I had some Texas lawyers come to me who were consumer lawyers. And they said their concern was they didn't believe they could ever get a fair shot in your courtroom. And that was in ten years of serving on this committee no one has ever said that before. And the case that Senator Durbin just raised, which I was going to mention as well, the fact is that there was a judgment. The fact is that the family was entitled to coverage. But your invalidation of the trial verdict completely threw out their entire reward. And, again -- I mean, the law is there for little people. This is the remedy for little people, not for the providence of the world certainly have the right to be taken at face value. But what disturbs me is it's in so many places in these notification cases, in these health benefit cases, in other consumer related cases, in the Searcy (ph) case. These are people very much harmed, and their redress was cut off. Could you respond to that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator, I would like to. You know, there are a lot of cases that come before our court that I think tug at all of our hearts strings. And that's part of being a judge sometimes. But, again, I have committed and have got to apply the law, and there are guiding principles in contracts, in the bad faith area and other areas that have to dictate what the law says. Again, in the Castaneda case, let me emphasize it was not about their insurance coverage. They won on the coverage issue. They got all of their policy benefits. They recovered attorney's fees. There's a statutory penalty in Texas if the insurance company doesn't timely pay -- and I am assuming that they recovered that statutory penalty. The issue in my court was not policy benefits. The issue in my court was do they get extra contractual benefits for bad faith, which is a common law tort or sometimes it's brought under a statute, Article 2121. So we weren't -- it was not a coverage issue. They did get their policy benefits.

On the parental notification cases, let me make clear that I never advocated in my opinion or anywhere else that a young girl has to have religious beliefs of any type at all. I -- you know, I said, as the U.S. Supreme Court has said, these are weighed decisions, and that a minor ought to exhibit some awareness that there are philosophical, and moral, and religious issues out there. And I hasten to add if she doesn't have any, it's not an inquiry what they are -- simply that if she has those beliefs, has she thought about them, has she considered them? Has she considered the philosophical and social and moral arguments whether she agreed with them or not? Just an awareness that they exist. She doesn't have to adhere to any particular viewpoint. She doesn't have to explain or justify her viewpoint or her philosophy or her moral stance, or whether she has religious beliefs. The U.S. Supreme Court has said, and I tried to apply that, that it simply -- she needs to exhibit some awareness as a mature person, an adult -- you would hope an adult would exhibit - that there are at least these arguments out there on both sides, and that she's aware of both sides -- not that she agrees with it or again has to justify any of this.

And, again, the -- I really do -- I did think that given that the legislature had lifted word for word what mature and sufficiently well informed meant, best interests and all of this out of a statute that had been -- from another state that had been approved by the U.S. Supreme Court, that they were trying to adhere to all of that precedent. And sooner -- I think it's hard. If I were a trial judge and I was told, Well, decide if she's mature -- decide if she's sufficiently well informed -- well, without some guidance I think you are going to get varying results around the state, What does that mean? So I think it was necessary for my court to speak, so that girls in West Texas wouldn't be held to a different standard that girls in East Texas were. My court ultimately -- I didn't totally agree with the majority on every aspect, but I did my best to adhere to what I thought the legislature intended. It was not anti anything, it was not activism. Once the court made its decision in Doe, those are the factors, and I abide by that.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, I believe that this completes the testimony. Is there any -- I am going to adjourn the hearing, and we have two other --

SEN. : (Off mike.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Oh, we have more people coming? I would recess for the vote then and go down and vote, and just ask you to forbear, if you don't mind.

JUSTICE OWEN: Okay, not at all, senator.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: So we'll take a brief recess. Thanks everybody. (Sounds gavel.)

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

(Recess.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: (Sounds gavel.) The hearing will reconvene. And next on the list, Senator Schumer, then Brownback, Cantwell, and Edwards.

JUSTICE OWEN: Madam Chair? Before we proceed, can I amend an answer?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Certainly. Go right ahead.

JUSTICE OWEN: It was regarding the Provident American v. Castaneda case. I remembered that it was the only issue in front of my court was bad faith, and I had thought -- I incorrectly remembered -- I just assumed that they had won on the contract claim in the trial court, and that was not in front of us. I was right that the contract --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Are you talking about Castaneda now?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right.

REV_00348699

JUSTICE OWEN: I was right that the contract claim was not in front of us. They never pled breach of contract or asked for any refindings on breach of contract. They only sued on a bad faith denial of the claim. So I was wrong. It was incorrect -- I had not read the case in quite a while -- that I said that they recovered their contract damages. They just never pled that. They were seeking solely a so-called bad faith claim under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act and under the insurance code. They were statutory claims -- not under the policy but so-called extracontractual claims.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. And but they did not get the extra contractual claims?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, they did not get the extra contractual --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: But they did get the surgery paid for?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, that's my -- I thought they did, but they never pled --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: They did not?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, because they never asked or pled for policy benefits under the contract.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: So then they got nothing?

JUSTICE OWEN: They -- as it ended up, because they didn't ask or plead in the trial court, or ask for the jury to find breach of contract of the policy, we didn't have that in front of us, so we couldn't grant that for them. In other words --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Didn't the trial court grant it?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, senator, they never pled it. They went solely on noncontractual claims. They never pled in the trial court, or asked the jury to find if the insurance company owed the policy benefits under the policy. And I don't know why that was. And I had just assumed that the only thing that they had -- I assumed they had gotten the contract benefits, because I knew the only issue in front of us was bad faith. But as I reread -- someone handed me the opinion during the break, and they just didn't ever raise the contract claims in the trial court. SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you for clearing that up. Appreciate it.

Senator Schumer?

SEN. SCHUMER: Thank you, Madam Chairwoman, and I very much appreciate the opportunity to testify. And thank you, Judge Owen.

Before I get into what I want to ask you, I did want to make a few points in reference to what

REV_00348700

Senator Hatch said in his opening remarks. Unfortunately, he's not here. I tried to make them while he was here, but -- so he knows I am going to make them.

Three points. First, you know, let's try to keep this debate at a reasonable level. Senator Hatch keeps saying "left-wing pressure groups," "left-wing pressure groups." I don't hear anything about right-wing pressure groups or moderate pressure groups. There are a whole bunch of groups that support Judge Owen's nomination. They are doing their civic duty, but anybody who opposes it is a "left-wing ideological pressure group." Enough of that. That kind of foolishness should not go on in this committee room or anywhere else. Let's be fair about it. There are groups on both sides pushing everybody, and we are all independent and have to make our own decisions -- we may be influenced by them on one side of the aisle or the other. But this idea that the only pressure groups are from the left is a joke.

Second, related. Senator Hatch talked about something that I agree with, which is well, we are picking -- we are looking for little personal things about people, and they are going to put you through the wringer -- "Welcome to Washington," he said to you, judge. I am aghast. After eight years of them looking and turning President Clinton, his family, and everyone who worked for him inside-out about every single issue under the sun, now all of a sudden it's, "Welcome to Washington." Again, what's good -- I don't believe in it on either side, but let's have some semblance of fairness about this.

About not nominating women? What a canard. What kind of argument is that? I mean, I don't think anybody can -- anything -- any cursory look at what this committee has done has stood up to that. We have on the floor voted for 12 women. My guess is that's about as high a percentage in terms of the gender as the men who were sent to us. How about not voting for anyone who is pro life? My guess is of the 78 judges I voted for, the majority are pro life in this session. So let's cut out the games. Let's not try to beat people up with two- by-fours with specious arguments. Let's have a real discussion about what makes a good judge. And we'll have differing views on that, and that's fair, and that's why we have a Senate. But, I'll tell you, I'm not going to be bamboozled by arguments like that, and I don't think anybody should be. And I just wanted the record to show that. I thought that kind of hyperbole is not fair.

Okay, now to Judge Owen -- oh, and one other point, which I'll -- I'm glad Senator Hatch is here --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: You just missed it. (Laughter.)

SEN. SCHUMER: Sorry.

SEN. HATCH: Is he running me down again? (Laughter.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: -- responding.

REV_00348701

SEN. SCHUMER: I'm just responding.

SEN. HATCH: That's what we call it now? (Laughter.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: You're terrible.

SEN. SCHUMER: He is. But he's a nice guy. He is truly a nice guy.

SEN. HATCH: Not nearly as terrible -- (laughter) --

SEN. SCHUMER: His arguments are not as nice as he is. In any case, the other point that Senator Hatch made which I'll address as I address you, (Justice ?) Owen, is, What kind of questions are legitimate to ask and not ask to a candidate for a high lifetime position?

But let me say this to you, Judge Owen, and then I am going to make some statements and ask some questions, and weave them in together. Last week we had the pleasure to meet privately, and when we talked I told you I've had I think since I've come here three standards in terms of nominating, choosing, voting for judges. They are excellence -- legal excellence, moderation -- I don't like judges too far left, too far right -- and diversity -- I don't think the bench should be all white males. I don't think there's any question about your legal excellence. You've had a distinguished academic and professional career in the ABA, whose ratings reviews the nominee's legal excellence no more, no less, has rated you well qualified with good reason -- I think anyone who has listened to even 10 minutes of this hearing today has no doubt about the excellence in terms of the quality of your legal knowledge and your intelligence, your articulateness, et cetera.

On the diversity front, the population of the Fifth Circuit, the court you have been nominated to, the population within the body of the Fifth Circuit is the most racially diverse in the country -- even more so than in the Fourth Circuit. And President Clinton -- let the record just show -- made three nominations to that circuit, two of whom were Latino -- there is a large Latino population within the Fifth Circuit, namely in your home state of Texas -- none of them received confirmation hearings. So one of the reasons we don't have diversity on this court is that reason. But, obviously, in terms of gender diversity, you get an A-plus.

The third standard is moderation, and that's really where I have concerns, and that's where my focus will be. Now, there is some idea out there that all of a sudden has sort of taken root among people of a particular ideology I might add that you can look deep into space and divine the correct legal interpretation of a statute, that we all would come out with the same -- in the same exact place, that our ideology has nothing to do with how we interpret the law. We all know that's bunk. It's obvious when you look at any court. Judges bring their experiences, their biases, their ideology to the table when they decide cases. Whether it happens consciously or subconsciously, we know it happens. If it didn't, why would Justices Scalia and Thomas come out exactly almost the same way on so many cases -- so different than, say, Justice Breyer and Justice Ginsburg? If it was -- if ideology made no difference, the number of times -- they are all

SEN. HATCH: I also hope that Justice Owen will get a chance to address her views on election reform and judicial reform, of which she is the leading advocate in Texas. She is also a leader in gender-bias reform in the courts and a reformer on divorce and child-support proceedings. I hope she will have an opportunity to address these matters and about her acclaimed advocacy to improve legal services and funding for the poor.

All of these are aspects of her record her detractors would have us ignore. I don't know about my other colleagues, but I certainly did not read these positive attributes in those fancy documents, or, should I say, booklets released over the past several weeks by the People for the American Way and their co-conspirators in the Washington special-interest lobby.

I ask, Madam Chairman, to place in the record letters from the leaders of the Legal Society and 14 past presidents of the Texas Bar Association, many of whom are Democrats. So I ask unanimous consent for that as well.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection.

SEN. HATCH: The fourth reason for the opposition to Justice Owen is the most disturbing to me. For some months now, a few of my Democrat colleagues have strained to point out when they believe they're voting for judicial nominees that they believe to be pro-life.

I have disputed this when they have said it is because the record contains no such information of personal views from the judges we have confirmed. Each time they assert it, my staff has scoured the transcript of hearings and turned up nothing. What does turn up is that each time my colleagues have asserted this, they have done so only for nominees who are men.

I'm afraid that the main reason Justice Owen is being opposed is not that personal views, namely on the issue of abortion, are being false ascribed to her -- they are -- but rather because she is a woman in public life who is believed to have personal views that some maintain should be unacceptable for a woman in public life to have.

Such penalization is a matter of the greatest concern to me, because it represents, in my opinion, a new glass ceiling for women jurists. And they have come too far to suffer now, having their feet bound up just as they approach the tables of our high courts after long struggling careers.

I am deeply concerned that such treatment will have a chilling effect on women jurists that will keep them from weighing in on exactly the sorts of cases that (must?) invite their participation and their perspectives as women. Ironically, the truth is that the cases that her detractors point to as proof of apparently unacceptable personal views are a series of fictions. This is what I mean about exposing the misstatements of the left-wing activist groups in Washington. I will illustrate just three of these fictions.

very smart people, they are all great lawyers -- the number of times that Scalia would agree with Thomas would be about the same as the number he agreed with every one of the judges.

Look at the nominees that Presidents Reagan and Bush made to the court versus the nominees that President Clinton made to the court. How come they all seem to vote so similarly? It's because ideology does matter. We all know it. This administration knows it. How come they haven't sent up a single so-called liberal judge? If they were just looking for legal excellence, they'd send some judges from the left, some judges from the center, some judges from the right. The president said it himself. He said he wanted to send judges up in the mold of Scalia and Thomas. I give him credit for honesty. He's doing that. Whether that's good for the country or not, is the debate at least that I have chose to engage in over the last few years that we have been here.

That happens on your -- it happened in the Texas Supreme Court as well. You and Judge Hecht have frequently come down on the same side on the Texas Supreme Court. It's not accident. It's not simply that you went to the same law school, read the same law books. Philosophically you're in the same place -- similar places. So this idea that ideology shouldn't matter, that we shouldn't ask questions about someone's judicial philosophy, which is what my good friend from Utah said, I think is so, so wrong, that it is almost hard to -- hard to accept if you look at it in any way at all. And my guess is if we looked at the way my good friend from Utah voted on judges over the last years he's been in office, and the way I voted on judges -- we'd agree on most of them, because we agree on most judges as we vote. But it's clear that his philosophy would dictate he voted against certain judges and for others, and I probably did the mirror image, because our philosophy does influence how we vote. We are just not simply interpreting the legal excellence of the mind. I do agree with him, as I said before you came in, that I don't like this gotcha stuff. I think that's become a substitute for all of this. But how come it is when there is a Republican nominee it's the Democrats who focus on the gotcha stuff, and when it's a Republican -- when it's a Democratic nominee it's the Republicans who focus on the gotcha stuff? Again, if we weren't doing ideology -- whether someone smoked marijuana in college or went to some bookshop and got a certain book or movie, the votes should be evenly dispersed throughout the political spectrum. It's not, because it's sort of a kabuki game.

Well, what I've tried to do in the year that I've been chairman of the Court Subcommittee is bring some level -- at least I would call it -- of honesty to the debate. Let's admit that ideology should play a role. Let's ask those questions. I think it's my obligation to ask those questions. And I'll tell you I am the opposite of Senator Hatch. Any judge who doesn't answer questions about their philosophy, their views on the First, or Second or Fourth Amendments, should not be put in such an important and august position where there is a lifetime appointment. So let me --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator, your significant treatise took 10 minutes and 32 seconds.

SEN. SCHUMER: May I ask one question?

REV_00348703

SEN. HATCH: Could I as a point of personal privilege just make one note for the record? I only voted against one Clinton judge out of the 378 that we passed --

SEN. SCHUMER: Bet it wasn't --

SEN. HATCH: So I hardly used ideology --

SEN. SCHUMER: Bet it wasn't a conservative.

SEN. HATCH: Well, I don't know what it was, to be honest with you, other than I didn't feel it was right.

SEN. SCHUMER: Could I ask one question, Madam Chair?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. One question, and then we go to Senator Sessions.

SEN. SCHUMER: Okay. So here is my question, and maybe if we have a second round I'd like to ask some specific ones. I did not intend to take that long, but this is a subject that excites me.

Now, let us assume, because I think choice is a very legitimate issue for us to question judges on, and so I'd like to know your views. And here's the way I would phrase it. It's 1965. You are sitting in the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief Justice Warren comes into your chambers with a copy of the opinion in Griswold v. Connecticut, the seminal case that held there is a right to privacy in the Constitution. He asks for your thoughts on the opinion. Now, there is no law to follow right now, but he is asking for your opinion in terms of everything that has been part of you. What do you tell him? Do you agree with the holding? Do you agree with the outcome, but get there in a different way? In other words, that there is a constitutional right to privacy, the penumbra of which extends to at least the first two trimesters of a woman's pregnancy -- what do you tell Judge Griswold?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, senator, again, I responded somewhat to this question before, but I can assure you that nothing in my personal views on any topic has influenced or would influence my ability to read the U.S. Supreme Court precedent and to apply it. And, frankly, I don't --

SEN. SCHUMER: But this time there was no precedent. That's why I am asking you the question as I did --

JUSTICE OWEN: But I don't see it as my role as a judge on the Supreme Court of Texas or as an intermediate judge to delve into decisions and critique them or say this was wrong in the law or this was right on the law. And, frankly, when I have read those decisions, that's not the way I approached them as a lawyer, and that's not the way I've approached them as a judge: Are they right on the law? Are they wrong on the law? I have always approached them with trying to figure out what did they say in these opinions. What was the basis for their opinion? And how does that play out in the factual situation that either my client when I was a lawyer has or now as a judge in the case before me?

SEN. SCHUMER: Judge Owen, being on the Texas Supreme Court, certainly being on the Fifth Circuit -- as you know, the Supreme Court only deals with about 75 cases a year. You are going to be asked when you are a judge questions like this every day. To say -- to duck the question -- and that is what you did -- and I am not trying to surprise you. My staff told the people in the Justice Department I would ask you this very question. I don't think it's fair to us. I don't think it's fair to me. I don't think it's fair to the 19 million people I represent in New York. I want to know your opinion. This was a case where there was very little precedent that was directly relevant. The Supreme Court made a decision that is still with us in terms of its controversy, in terms of the heat that it generates on both sides. I think the American people, the people of the Fifth Circuit are entitled to know how you would advise Judge Griswold on that opinion, because it shows your view, something very important about whether you think there's a constitutional right to privacy, how far you think it extends, et cetera. And this is a case that's already been decided, but it can tell us how you think, and where you come down. And I don't think your answer -- I understand that you do that, but on the Texas Supreme Court, I'm -- you're much more familiar with it than I am, you have to make decisions like this all the time. You certainly will on the Fifth Circuit.

So I'd ask you again, can you give me something more specific rather than telling me that your methodology is not to answer questions like that?

MS. OWEN: Well, let me -- let me tell you --

SEN. SCHUMER: Because you'd have to answer them when you sat on the court, when you wrote opinions, when you agreed with the majority opinion, when you've dissented, and you've done it, and we all know you've done it.

MS. OWEN: But I don't approach decision-making that way. I've never -- I'm not asked to come in -- in a vacuum and say "well, what do you think" --

SEN. SCHUMER: Well, I'm not giving you a vacuum question.

MS. OWEN: Well --

SEN. SCHUMER: I'm giving you the specific facts of the case. I mean, we've talked a lot about parental consent. I mean, I'm sure you've read the Griswold decision.

MS. OWEN: Yes, I have.

SEN. SCHUMER: Okay.

REV_00348705

MS. OWEN: (Inaudible) --

SEN. SCHUMER: I'm asking -- all right, okay. Well, it's an important decision, even in terms of talking about parental consent. Obviously you're dealing with a different constitution here, Texas versus the United States, but you have to be able to tell us more than this is not the way I think. I mean --

MS. OWEN: Well, I was going --

SEN. SCHUMER: -- I just don't --

MS. OWEN: -- to expand on my answer, but when --

SEN. SCHUMER: (Inaudible.)

MS. OWEN: -- you say that that's the way -- you're going to have to think that way, and I respectfully --

SEN. SCHUMER: No, I'm asking you --

SEN. HATCH (?): Senator Schumer, let the lady answer the question. You've asked her --

SEN. SCHUMER: Well, I'm just trying -- okay, go ahead.

MS. OWEN: The way I would approach that case, had I been on the court then, is the same way that I approach constitutional issues today, and that is I read everything that the U.S. Supreme Court has written up to that point on the issue. And frankly, Senator, I don't know, I didn't read the briefs in Griswold, and I'm frankly so influenced by the existing body of law that we've had the right to privacy for so many years, my court has recognized a right to privacy under the Texas Constitution, I think it's kind of hard at this point for me to erase all of that out of my mind and put myself back in their shoes without -- without all of this case law that's come down the pipe, and not having the benefit of the briefs or (arguments ?) how would you have written, were you writing on a clean slate -- it's very difficult for me to write on a clean slate when I have all of this historical law now out there. And again, I don't write on a clean slate when I answer constitutional issues.

SEN. SCHUMER: What I'd like to do, because I know my time is up and I appreciate the indulgence, Madam Chairperson, is I'd like to submit some written questions that specifically ask some of these things and see if we can get a more specific answer, and give you a little time maybe to review the case law, whatever you would have to review, as if you were being a judge on the case, in some sense.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Schumer. Senator Sessions, you're next up.

REV_00348706

SEN. SESSIONS: Justice Owen, you recognize Griswold to be the law and would follow it?

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator.

SEN. SESSIONS: And if called upon to apply its principles, you would apply them in your decision-making process?

MS. OWEN: Absolutely.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think you handled this precisely right. And I'm sorry Senator Schumer was unhappy with your answer, but you were -- you handled it precisely like a judge should answer it. How should you -- how could you be expected to put yourself back into that circumstance, without having read all the briefs, without having studied the law carefully, and to render an opinion on a case of that importance. I note Senator Schumer left, and recently he complimented Justice Hugo Black of the Supreme Court on his views on the Constitution, and, of course, Hugo Black dissented in Griswold (sp). So, these things are of interest in -- I guess fun to talk about, but in reality, as a person who is being considered for a judgeship, I think you demonstrated the right characteristics in a judge, that is to be cautious not to express opinions until you've fully studied all the briefs, all the law involved, as your record demonstrates you do so skillfully.

And I would just note that your testimony has been extraordinary. I have been very impressed with your command of the cases you've handled, the hundreds that you've handled. I've been very impressed with your ability to articulate your thoughts in a reasoned and fair way. I see no hint of extremism or activism or some obsession with forcing some political agenda on anybody -- not one hint of it. And it's disturbing, actually, to have those comments being made. I just don't believe there's one hint of it.

Justice Owen, I've been also impressed, as Senator Gramm and Senator Hatch noted, that you came at this service to the Supreme Court of Texas because of a desire to serve. It cost you, I'm sure, financially significantly. You have won reelection with 84 percent of the vote. The American Bar Association, who this committee insisted must have a bigger role than they've had in recent years, and in the process has unanimously rated you well qualified -- that's the highest rating you can get -- and a unanimous vote for well qualified is very rare. And they had the opportunity to study your record. They've had -- they've seen you on the bench. And they've talked to your former law partners. They've talked to lawyers who have litigated against you. They know your reputation and your ability, and I think they made a well and a wise choice in rating you well qualified unanimously. I must -- I have to be impressed with your academic record -- number two or three in your class, the -- made the highest score on the bar exam. What an accomplishment that is in a big state like Texas particularly. So, I just think you have so much to be proud of, and I particularly like your demeanor and the way you've handled yourself under some of the questions that have been brought forward.

And I also note, it seems to me that you've not been just a potted plant, you have been a reformer in your life on the law about the rule of law. Tell me how you feel about the responsibility of a judge or a public official -- what is their responsibility about defending and strengthening the rule of law in America?

MS. OWEN: Well, I think that's the ultimate responsibility, is to defend and strengthen the rule of law in America. I think we all understand that our society is built on laws, and that that is what basically orders our society -- that helps us plan, that helps us have predictability. It helps us have stability. It helps us know that cases won't be decided randomly based on sympathy or passion or when they should be decided another way under the law. So I think the rule of law is very important, that it's consistently and fairly, but with common sense, applied in every case.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well now is that why when you are asked to rule on a case you just don't spout off the answer as some would have you do in this hearing -- but is that why go back and you take the Texas statute on notification, parental notification, and then you know that it passed during a time in which they were considering the Supreme Court ruling as they tried to craft a statute for Texas? Is that why you went back and studied the U.S. Supreme Court cases to try to understand what Texas was trying to do so that you could give a fair and objective answer as to what the statute really meant and what the legislature intended?

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator -- (inaudible) -- if I could explain this, maybe I have not done a very good job of it yet, but when the legislature used the words "mature and sufficiently well informed," that could mean a lot of different things to different judges all across Texas. And so given that that was of a Morpheus (?) definition, I thought where did they come up with these words? What did -- what definition did they have in their minds when they picked these words? And then when I went and read the Supreme Court cases that they pulled the exact language out of, I looked at how did the U.S. Supreme Court define informed? What did they say is relevant to an informed consent? How did they define informed consent? And I believed that the legislature was looking to the cases out of which it picked the words mature and sufficiently well informed, for us to glean what the actual definition was, what the factors that courts were to consider in deciding if someone was making an informed decision.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think that's what a great jurist does, and I think you've handled that -- you did it exactly right. That's precisely what should be done.

You know, you -- my -- looking at your background, I see a person who's worked hard to reform and improve the system. As Senator McConnell noted, your voluntary limiting your contribution, he did not mention the fact that after you had a relatively easy race last time, you gave back one-third of the contributions. I don't know anybody in this body that's ever done that, and that's a remarkable thing indeed.

I noticed that you work hard to encourage the Texas legislature to secure more legal service funding for the poor, and were successful in that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes sir. We were particularly hard hit in Texas when legal funding for LSC, the Legal Services Corporation, nationwide was cut back. Texas kind of got a double whammy. Not only were our traditional legal services officers cut back in budget, but Texas has a large migrant worker population and funding for the migrant workers was particularly hard hit. And a lot of people, including me, were concerned that the basic infrastructure through which legal services to the poor were delivered in Texas was going to collapse because we were that close to the line. So, we had to look for ways to put more money in the system to keep the professionals who were involved in through the backbone of the delivery system in place, because if we lost that, we would not be able to anywhere come near meeting the legal services needs of the poor in Texas. And so a group of folks, not just me, certainly, I was the court's liaison and was involved in it, but explored ways that we could get more funds, and ultimately the legislature passed a statute that put more money into legal services for the poor.

SEN. SESSIONS: And I noticed you helped organize Family Law 2000, a conference, an effort to educate parents about the effects of divorce on children. I have heard a lot of people in the know in the legal system express concern that too often a divorce proceeding becomes an adversarial gladiator sport, and that children are hurt unnecessarily in the process. Is that what you were dealing with there?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, Senator. I did not practice family law, but when I got to the court it was clear to me that 51 percent of the civil cases in Texas are family law matters, and that's sort of where the rubber hits the road, if you will, for most citizens in Texas. And they almost, you know, so many people have experience with the family law court, and a lot of lawyers and a lot of family law judges and psychologists have -- (AUDIO BREAK) -- that this is a -- that the adversarial process is really hard on the children, and that sometimes lawyers escalate the process. Sometimes the way the laws are designed -- (AUDIO BREAK) -- to the point of maybe really restructuring the way legal services are delivered, the family laws, to try to make this more a unified approach to divorces, not just from the legal standpoint, but from other aspects, and again try to focus on getting people to make consensus decisions, particularly for their children, in the divorce context, but in not such -- not in such an adversarial way.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think that's good. And I know you've served on the board of the Texas Hearing and Service Dogs, a program that helps the blind and those with disabilities. You teach Sunday School at St. Barnabas Episcopal Mission. You've given back to your community in a lot of different ways.

Let me ask you this. I know that my friend Dan Morales, the attorney general of Texas, we served together, and you were asked about the City of Austin case, and suggested that you were somehow doing something to -- I don't know, help polluters or evil groups, but I noticed, and I assume Texas is like Alabama, where the attorney general represents the state in legal matters and speaks for the state in court.

REV_00348709

JUSTICE OWEN: That's true.

SEN. SESSIONS: Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. SESSIONS: And the attorney general, Dan Morales, intervened in that case on the side of the state of Texas, and he took the position, as I understand it, that Texas state had entered into this area, and their law predominated, and that cities, the City of Austin did not have authority. And you eventually agreed with him in general on that -- (inaudible) --

JUSTICE OWEN: I did. Absolutely. I agreed that the state -- the state basically trumps the city, it was my view. And there were -- there were extensive regulations in this area above and beyond the water regulations that applies to everybody in the state. This was not a non-regulated area. This is the same regulations that apply to any landowner in Texas applied to these folks, plus they had to have a water quality plan under the TNR -- and subject to the TNRCC. They were subject to ongoing federal regulations. So this was -- this was far from an unregulated area. The question was whose law was going to control, the state statute or the city's ordinances, and it seemed to me that the state certainly could take away the ETJ, extra-territorial jurisdiction in it's entirety, and if that were so, why couldn't they regulate here and tell the city "No, our regulations -- we choose how to regulate, we don't want you regulating here."

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think you're right. And, of course, Mr. Morales is a Democrat and a capable attorney general who was advocating for the state's interest. And, of course, a lot of people don't think about this, and a lot of cities don't like to think about it, but cities are creatures of the state. The states are sovereign, have a sovereign power within the constitutional scheme, as does the national government, but cities are total creatures of the state, and if there's a conflict, I think you've come down on the right side between -- which is the preeminent authority within a state.

Well, I just think that's -- there's several other cases that I could go through. I do just want to say I think your ruling with regard to the Ford Motor Company case and venue was important. Venue is important. It's not correct and not just to allow a plaintiff to choose any county in the state of Texas to file a lawsuit just because there's a Ford dealership in that county. In this case, as I understood it, you ruled consistent with Texas law that case should be filed where the plaintiff lived, where the car was purchased, and where the accident occurred. All of those occurred in the country where venue was proper, and you did not deny them relief, but you simply sent the case back with an order to go to the correct county for venue purposes, is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator, your time is --

REV_00348710

SEN. SESSIONS: My time is up. And I would just say that I appreciate your candor. I appreciate your ability. I am impressed with the American Bar Association's evaluation of your performance. I'm impressed with the evaluation of the people in Texas of your performance, when you got 84 percent of the vote. And I believe we've had few nominees come before this committee ever who have testified more ably or who have better qualifications for the federal bench.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator. Senator Edwards.

SEN. EDWARDS: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chairman. Good afternoon, Justice Owen. You've been here a long time. I want to focus on your, if I can, on your judicial decisions.

JUSTICE OWEN: Okay.

SEN. EDWARDS: Tell me first, in cases involving the intentional infliction of emotional distress, whether you agree with the decisions in your court, in the Texas Supreme Court, that say, and I'm reading now from one of those, that the overwhelming weight of authority both in Texas and around the country is that conduct involved in any particular case should be evaluated as a whole in determining whether it's extreme.

JUSTICE OWEN: I think that's generally true, yes.

SEN. EDWARDS: The case that I want to ask you about that I -- (inaudible) -- you about today, is a case involving three women who brought a case against GTE -- the lead plaintiff was Bruce -- Rhonda Bruce, Linda Davis, and Joyce Pulstra (sp) -- based upon what they contended was extreme conduct in the workplace.

And the evidence in the case -- I'm looking at the opinion now, was that the employer -- the employer's manager, who was the person involved in the case, the defendant's manager, soon after arriving at work engaged in a pattern of grossly abusive, threatening and degrading conduct, and again, I'm reading from the decision now, and he began using the harshest vulgarity shortly after his arrival. He regularly heaped abusive profanity on the employees, including these three women. On one occasion when he was asked to curb his language because it was offensive, he positioned himself in front of one of the plaintiffs, one of the women, and screamed, "I'll do and say any blank thing I want, and I don't give a blank who likes it." At one point another female employee raised a question, and he said, "I'm tired of walking on blank eggshells, trying to make people happy around here." The opinion says, "More importantly, the employees testifies that Shields repeatedly physically and verbally threatened, abused and terrorized them."

And then the court, in considering that conduct as a whole, as you just indicated the law provides, found that the jury verdict against the defendant was -- was appropriate. And you wrote a concurring decision, where you agreed I part with the majority decision and dissented in part, disagreed in part -- you didn't dissent but you disagreed with some of the conclusions that the majority had raised. And among those disagreements, you found that the following conduct is not a basis for sustaining a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

And before I go through this long list of things that you said was not evidence to be considered, taken as a whole, in whether the defendant had acted outrageously, because I understand that you've told me that that's the legal standard -- the question is whether any of these things taken as part of the overall case is something that would constitute extreme behavior under the law.

The first thing you listed was not -- not to be included --

JUSTICE OWEN: But, Senator, my --

SEN. EDWARDS: Sure. Sure.

JUSTICE OWEN: I just want to make clear what -- that you understand, that everybody understands, what I was saying here. I was not saying that you can't consider the totality of the circumstances. And I absolutely agreed with the majority that this guy was way over the line in this case.

My only point in writing this was if you take -- my only point was if you take these things that I listed out of that -- the context of all of the other things that happened and standing alone, that you can't -- this would not support a judgement, standing alone, that -- and I was concerned particularly --

SEN. EDWARDS: Did you -- excuse me. Did you say that? What you just said?

JUSTICE OWEN: I said that "The following conduct is not a basis for sustaining a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, even when the employees who were upset by the conduct are women." And my point here was that if this is all that happened, I mean if you just have someone -- and we can go through them -- cursing, but it's not accompanied by sexual harassment, or cursing, but it's not directed at the woman, that by itself will not give you, I don't think, sufficient grounds for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

And I was concerned that people would read all the laundry list of what happened in the majority opinion and say, well, if I can prove any one of these things, then I'm there. And I wanted to make it clear that I did not agree that if this is what you had, without all of the other things that this man did --

SEN. EDWARDS: Let me -- excuse me, I'm sorry.

REV_00348712

The first sample fiction is the now often-cited comment attributed to then-Texas Supreme Court Justice Alberto Gonzales, written in a case opinion, that Justice Owen's dissent signified an unconscionable act of judicial activism. Someone should do a story about how often this little shibboleth has been repeated in the press and in several web sites of the professional smear groups. I would venture that some of my colleagues have it on the first page of their briefing memos even now.

The problem with it is that it isn't true. Justice Gonzales was not referring to Justice Owen's dissent but rather to the dissent of another colleague in the same case.

The second sample fiction is the smear groups' misrepresented portrayal of a case involving buffer zones and abortion clinics. In that case, the majority of the Texas Supreme Court ruled for Planned Parenthood and affirmed a lower court's injunction that protected abortion clinics and doctors' homes and imposed $1.2 million in damages against pro-life protesters.

In only a few instances, the court tightened the buffer zones against protesters. Justice Owen joined the majority opinion and was excoriated by dissenting colleagues, who were admittedly pro-life, by the way. When describing that decision then, abortion rights leaders hailed the result as a victory for abortion rights in Texas. Planned Parenthood's lawyer said the decision, quote, "isn't a home run; it's a grand slam," unquote.

Of course, that result hasn't changed, but the characterization of it has. This is how Planned Parenthood describes the same case in their fact sheet on Justice Owen. Quote: "Owen supports eliminating buffer zones around reproductive health-care clinics," unquote. In fact, her decision did exactly the opposite. And I think this committee deserves and should demand a formal apology and full explanation.

The third and most pervasive sample fiction concerns Justice Owen's rulings in a series of Jane Doe cases which first interpreted Texas's then-new parental-involvement law. The law, which I think is important to emphasize, was passed by the Texas legislature, not Justice Owen, with bipartisan support, and requires that an abortion clinic give notice to just one parent 48 hours prior to a minor's abortion.

Unlike states with more restrictive laws, such as Massachusetts, Wisconsin and North Carolina, consent of the parent is not required in Texas. A minor may be exempted from giving such notice if they get court permission. Since the law went into effect, over 650 noticed bypasses have been requested from the courts. Of these 650 cases, only 10 have had facts so difficult that two lower courts denied a noticed bypass. Only 10 have risen to the Texas Supreme Court.

Justice Owen's detractors would have us believe that in these cases, she would have applied standards of her own choosing. Ironically, in each and every example they cite, whether concurring with the majority or dissenting, Justice Owen was applying not her own standards but the standards enunciated in the Roe-versus-Wade line of decisions of the United States Supreme

JUSTICE OWEN: -- that you wouldn't get there. And that was all I was trying to make clear. Because there were some statements that I thought conflicted particularly with very recent decisions out of our court, and people might get confused. And so, I wrote separately to point that out.

SEN. EDWARDS: Well, I guess I would first point out that the majority opinion I don't think ever said that any of those things, standing alone, would be enough. They applied the law, as you have recognized it to be, which is you look at the totality of the circumstances.

JUSTICE OWEN: And I agreed with that.

SEN. EDWARDS: And they listed these things as things to be considered as part of the totality of the circumstances. And what you said, if I'm reading it correctly, in your decision, "The following conduct is not a basis for sustaining a cause of action." Can I just go through them and ask you about each one?

JUSTICE OWEN: Sure.

SEN. EDWARDS: The first one, you said, was cursing, profanity or yelling and screaming unless -- when it is not simultaneously accompanied by sexual harassment or physical threatening behavior.

The second you listed was pounding fists on a table when requesting employees to do things. Third was going into a rage when employees leave an umbrella or purse on a chair or a filing cabinet. The fourth you listed was screaming at employees if they don't get things picked up. Five -- I'm jumping around. You've got a long list and I'm not going to read them all -- is requiring an employee to clean a spot off the carpet while yelling at her. Another one is telling an employee that she must wear a Post-it note that says, "Don't forget your paperwork."

So this is a list of things that the majority, as I understand it, considered, taken as a whole, as evidence that would support a verdict in favor of these three women, which the jury had found, as I believe. You have listed these things and said that they -- in the language of your decision -- that they are "not a basis for sustaining a cause of action." And what I understand you to be saying today is that standing alone, these things are not a basis for a cause of action. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct. I also want to make it clear that we're not talking about sexual discrimination here or anything of the sort, because lots of these things obviously would be grounds. We are talking about a tort that's been reserved by my court for very extraordinary circumstances, the so-called tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress as defined by the restatement. So we're not -- this is not conduct that I would say that is okay in the workplace under other causes of action. We're looking at one --

SEN. EDWARDS: But you specifically said that each of those things that I just read would not --

JUSTICE OWEN: I specifically said standing -- again, my point was that if this is what a plaintiff shows, that would be insufficient. You can't just say, "Okay, in GTE v. Bruce, they said this, so therefore I've met the standard." I'd want to make sure there wasn't any confusion about what else would have to accompany that conduct to get to intentional infliction of emotional distress.

SEN. EDWARDS: Yes, ma'am. But I believe, as you said a few minutes ago, the majority never suggested that any of those things standing alone would be enough.

JUSTICE OWEN I --

SEN. EDWARDS: You didn't specifically say, unless I'm missing it in your opinion, that any of those things standing alone would not be enough.

JUSTICE OWEN: I didn't use the words "standing alone." The --

SEN. EDWARDS: No, ma'am. What you said was they would not sustain -- or form a basis for a cause of action -- which has legal meaning, as I understand it. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. EDWARDS: Okay.

Can I ask you about another area?

JUSTICE OWEN: Sure.

SEN. EDWARDS: There are some cases where you have dissented. I'll just mention some. Some have already been mentioned today, and I won't go over those again. But they are primarily cases where, you know, a child or a family or someone was involved bringing a case against either an insurance company or a manufacturer or a corporate defendant of some kind.

And in several of these cases that I'm looking at now, you dissented, you disagreed. And in each case, you sided with the defendants. You sided -- your ruling was against the person who brought the case, the individual who brought the case.

One was a boy who brought a malpractice case from having surgery with serious complications -- the Wiener (sp) versus Wasan (sp) case.

Another was the Wilkins versus Helena Chemical Company case, where a farmer sued a seed manufacturer because the seeds he bought didn't work. They didn't grow. Again, you sided with the chemical company.

Another was a worker's arm's -- the Sonnier (sp) case, versus Chisholm-Ryder Company, where a worker's arm was severed by a tomato chopper. He brought a case against the manufacturer. You sided -- you dissented against the worker, on behalf of the manufacturer.

And another was a man who was injured changing a tire when the tire exploded, and he brought a case against Uniroyal Goodrich Tire.

And in these -- some of these cases and some of the cases -- other cases that have been mentioned during the course of the day, your dissent was pretty sharply criticized by those in the majority, as -- for different reasons. But --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator?

SEN. EDWARDS: Yes?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Not only is your time up, but just so everybody knows, I'm really going to be strict on the time limit because we have two other judges to go. It is 10 minutes after 4:00, and we're going to adjourn at 5:00.

SEN. EDWARDS: Can I just get an answer to this question? Sure. That's fine.

Let me get an answer to this question. In these cases, all of which you dissented in favor and -- against individuals, in favor of the manufacturers' defendants -- companies, against individuals -- and in some of these cases, at least, there were some pretty sharp criticism of your decision -- your dissent, I should say -- as there were in some of the other cases that have been mentioned in the course of the day -- I just wondered if you can point us to any cases where you have been criticized by your colleagues on the court for having gone too far in favor of an individual, child, a family who brought a case against a defendant, a manufacturer or a corporation.

And if you don't know -- and in fairness to you, I know you can remember everything, sitting here today -- if you can tell me of any today, I would appreciate that. If you can't, I'll give you a chance to provide that information to us, because I would like to see it.

MS. OWEN: One case that comes to mind -- and I -- let me talk about it for a minute -- is the Sands v. Fidelity -- I don't want to say it's Guaranty. I'm not sure. It's Fidelity-something. It was a worker's compensation case. And the plaintiff ended up settling with the worker's comp carrier. And she later contended that she had been defrauded into entering that settlement, and she sued for bad faith. And the court, a majority of the court ended up saying for various reasons that she didn't have a bad faith cause of action. I agreed with that, but I dissented from the case because I said she's established fraud. And under the law, she's entitled to rescind that worker's comp decision and go back and claim her benefits and start all over again. And a majority of the court disagreed with me and said no, she does not get to rescind, she does not get to go back and start all over. And I've certainly ruled for -- you've named four cases; I can name cases where I've ruled in favor of workers, consumers --

SEN. EDWARDS: Can -- can I interrupt you just a -- I want to be very specific about --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator --

SEN. EDWARDS: I'm asking her to provide something very specific, cases where you have, in fact, been criticized -- these are -- some of these cases are cases where you've been criticized by your colleagues for going too far on one side of the equation.

MS. OWEN: Well, I --

SEN. EDWARDS: I'm just asking now whether you can point us to cases where -- you've just indicated one case, where I believe you actually ruled with the majority against the jury verdict, if I remember correctly: the Sands case. And --

MS. OWEN: That's correct. But I thought she should get a remand and be able to set aside the agreement and proceed with her cause of action. If I --

SEN. EDWARDS: Let me ask you, if you can't -- I know my time is up, and we need to let other people ask questions. If you have cases such as that, I would actually like to see them. I think all of us would like to see them.

MS. OWEN: You -- you want me to find cases where my colleagues have criticized me, even if I -- you don't care about the cases where I --

SEN. EDWARDS: Or disagreed with you. Disagreed with you is also okay.

MS. OWEN: So -- is there -- you just want cases -- you don't care if I rule for the consumer, as long as -- it has to be a case where I was criticized doing so. Is that the same question?

SEN. EDWARDS: No, ma'am. You have -- there are a series of cases where your colleagues on the court have been critical and strongly disagreed with what you did, where you ruled for one side, some of the ones I've mentioned today and some of the ones that have mentioned by others. I'm asking you whether there -- are there cases on the other side of that equation?

MS. OWEN: Well, there are certainly cases where I have ruled large verdicts for injured people. And I -- I guess -- I don't remember if people criticized that or not, but we've upheld -- and I've been part of it -- upheld holding rules of law in verdicts for plaintiffs of significant rules of law: statute of limitations areas, independent contractor areas. I don't remember if there were dissents, I don't remember if I was criticized for doing it, but I have certainly --

REV_00348716

SEN. FEINSTEIN: What you're asking is that she send those cases to us in writing --

SEN. EDWARDS: Right. That's correct.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: -- if you would.

And thank you very much, Senator Edwards.

SEN. EDWARDS: Thank you, Madame Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator Brownback?

SEN. SAM BROWNBACK (R-KS): Thank you, Madame Chairman.

And thank you as well, Justice Owen, for appearing here.

And you've waited a long time for the hearing -- 14 months to be able to get in front of the committee. So I'm delighted that we're holding the hearing and going to be able to talk with you today about your qualifications, your background and your service on the circuit court, which I hope we're able to affirm and move forward with.

If I could point out one thing, just in listening to the last discussion on the case -- I believe that was GTE versus Bruce, the case you were talking about -- I believe in that case you joined the unanimous court ruling on the court in affirming the $275,000 jury verdict for the female employees that had been sexually harassed. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: I did. I did.

SEN. BROWNBACK: So we're talking about a unanimous opinion by the court. You wrote a concurring opinion on that that did hold for the female employees. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, and the reason I wrote the concurring opinion again is, we had just recently issued in the last few years on the Hill -- right in front of this case -- cases involving intentional infliction of emotional distress in the workplace. And I was concerned that people would pick up GTE versus Bruce, pick up our prior decisions and say, "There's an inconsistency here. How could you have said in these cases it's not intentional infliction of emotional distress and then list the things that I listed and say that is?" And I wanted to try to square --

SEN. BROWNBACK: You didn't want to redefine the common-law tort. You didn't want to try to redefine that.

JUSTICE OWEN: I did not. I was just trying to make sure that I was explaining how I could square our prior decisions -- again, which were fairly recent -- in the employment context with the specific evidence that was in this case.

SEN. BROWNBACK: I just didn't want anybody to get the impression that you ruled against the female employees or held against their case. You held for their case.

JUSTICE OWEN: I did, absolutely.

SEN. BROWNBACK: You upheld a $275,000 verdict in the case by the plaintiffs against the defendant. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Okay. I think that's important, because we sometimes lose it in the factual setting that somehow you didn't find this bad behavior; you did, and you agreed with the court that this is illegal, wrongful behavior and that the jury verdict should be upheld. And I think that's important for us to get clear.

Another thing I want to go to -- because a lot of the outside groups that really -- trying to derail nominations in this town and pick apart people's records who are very well qualified -- and you certainly are well qualified for this position -- is the parental- notification Texas law. And we visited this a couple of times today, but I just -- I went to make sure that I'm clear and that we're all clear on this. The only cases that got applied on up to the Texas Supreme Court were those where the judicial review had been denied. In other words, the easier cases were taken at the lower court, and at the lower court, if a girl had come forward, wanted an abortion, wanted not to have her parents informed, the court had already ruled yes, you can do that. The only cases that were appealed were the ones where that had been denied. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct. If either the trial court of the intermediate court granted the bypass, that was the end of it.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Okay. So if the judicial bypass was granted, abortion's granted, it moves on forward.

And if I understand your numbers correctly, about 600 of those were done at the lower court level in the time period we've been talking about on your service in the Texas supreme court.

JUSTICE OWEN: We know that at least 650 bypass proceedings have occurred. There may be a lot more. We just don't know. But we know at least that many bypass proceedings have occurred.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Where the court ruled that the girl did not have to inform her parents to obtain the abortion, is that correct?

REV_00348718

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, we don't know because they're confidential, so we don't know the outcome. We -- out of the 650, only 10 girls have appealed to my court.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Okay.

JUSTICE OWEN: So --

SEN. BROWNBACK: So, somewhere in there. But out of 650, 10 were appealed to the Texas supreme court where judicial bypass had been denied.

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. BROWNBACK: And that was a requirement that it had to have been denied. So, you had 10 cases that got in front of you of 650, so you're looking at, you know, a small percentage. You're looking at less than 2 percent of the cases that get to the Texas supreme court. And in those 10 cases, how did you rule? What was your opinion on the 10? Do you recall how you split on those?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, I do. The first Jane Doe came to our court twice, Jane Doe 1. The first time that she came, I agreed with the majority of the court. Everybody on the court actually agreed that she did not meet the statutory standard, but I agreed with the majority of the court, was because mature and sufficiently well- informed was such a loose definition, and trial courts could apply it -- that could mean so many different things to so many different trial courts that we needed to put some parameters on it. And because she didn't have the benefit of that, she should be remanded to the trial court and have another hearing. So, if the trial court had granted her a bypass on the remand, I would never have seen the case again. The trial court denied the bypass again, the court of appeals again denied it. And the second go-round, I said it was a close call, but I looked at the record, and under our evidentiary standards, I said there's some evidence to support what the trial court did, so I would have denied it, and the majority granted it.

Doe 2, I voted with the majority to remand it for the same types of reasons, only this time it was a best interest issue. We don't know what happened to Doe 2. We never heard from her again. Doe 3, I voted to deny the bypass. Doe 4, I agreed with the majority of the court that she did not meet the statutory standard. Let me -- and then Doe 10, which was the last Doe to come to our court, I agreed unanimously -- or the court did, that she was entitled to the bypass as a matter of law.

And I think I've mentioned this before today, but there were five other Does that came in between Doe 4 and Doe 10, where the court did not write an opinion.

We affirmed the lower judgment of the court. And as I explained, it takes at least six votes to do that. No dissents were published or were noted. If they had been noted, we would have had to have wound up and said who voted which way.

But I think it's a fair inference, given our opinions on either side of those five Doe cases, that these probably weren't close cases or somebody would have written something.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Because of the 10 cases, these were already 10 cases who -- where two courts, the trial court and the appellate court, had already voted, already ruled to deny judicial bypass. So they had said no, you cannot bypass your parents. Two courts had already ruled that in these 10 cases, is that correct? In all of the 10 cases?

JUSTICE OWEN: Correct. In all of them, yes.

SEN. BROWNBACK: And then in these -- the 10 that came to you, and on the Texas Supreme Court, you and the court split on some of these cases and voted to remand to the lower court to look at again to see if they should grant the judicial bypass. And in a majority of cases, you agreed with the lower two courts, in essence, that a judicial bypass should not be granted. Would that be a correct characterization of the -- JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct. And I believe that out of the 12 cases, I was -- had a different view of the judgment than the majority did in three cases. So I was with the majority, I guess that means nine out of 12 times in terms of the judgment.

SEN. BROWNBACK: I just -- it seems to me to make something about this in your record as being outside the philosophical mainstream is really a far stretch. You've got 600-some cases; 10 that have been ruled against a judicial bypass at two lower courts, and then it comes in front of you and the court splits and you vote with the majority most of the time, and some of the cases are remanded for this reconsideration; others are not. It just seems to me striking that this would somehow say that you should be set apart on the issue of abortion when you're interpreting the law in tough cases, is what these cases amounted to.

And I would hope that my colleagues would look at the factual setting here and how you've ruled. I think very common sense and very broad-based and non-ideologically in these cases. Some cases you voted to remand, for it to be looked at again for judicial bypass; other cases, not. I think that's a very fair-minded way on your part.

Let me just say, Justice, I thank you for putting yourself through this process. You are extraordinarily qualified for this position. And to wait for the 14 months that you have and then go through having narrow points on cases picked apart and your record maligned, abused, and then trying to somehow point you out as an ideologue in any instance is totally unfair to you and something you didn't need to go through, and could have remained absent from. But yet you've gone ahead and submitted yourself to this process to be able to serve the public.

And I appreciate you doing that. You didn't have to do that. A lot of people don't like going through these sort of process, and I don't blame them. But thank you for staying in here and staying in the process. And I think you're going to make an outstanding circuit court judge. I hope we can move this on to the committee process and through the floor.

Thank you, Madame Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator.

Senator Cantwell.

SEN. MARIA CANTWELL (D-WA): Thank you, Madame Chair. And thank you, Justice Owen, for your time today and patience in answering these many questions.

I think several of my colleagues have brought up the specific issues relating to some of your decisions around parental consent, and I think some of my colleagues have asked a little bit broader questions as it relates to the issue of privacy, but I'm hoping that I can expound a little bit on and understand your judicial philosophy on these important issues that I think are growing in magnitude as they face our country. I think privacy, whether it's government intrusion in personal decisions, or nowadays government acquiring information about activities of American citizens, or businesses handling some of your most personal information, this issue is just growing in magnitude. So, understanding your broad philosophy on this is, I think, very helpful for this committee and for the Congress.

My first issue is really your general thoughts on the right to privacy, and whether you believe that that right exists in the Constitution, and where you think that right to privacy does exist in the Constitution.

JUSTICE OWENS: Well, of course I'm guided by the U.S. Supreme Court cases that have recognized the right to privacy. I think Griswold is one we discussed earlier that clearly recognizes that. And there are cases from my court that construe the Texas Constitution as having a right to privacy.

SEN. CANTWELL: I'm asking you whether -- I mean, because we've had lots of nominees come before the committee who have recited the same things about "We'll follow precedent and the recognition in various decisions." but, after being confirmed, have not followed those exact decisions or interpretations. So that's why I'm asking the broader question of whether you believe that the Constitution guarantees a right to privacy.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, I think that's the law of the land. And there's nothing in my personal beliefs at all that would keep me from understanding and applying that law.

SEN. CANTWELL: And where do you think that exists within the Constitution?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, I wish I -- because I do not want to misstep here. I'd like to have of the U.S. Supreme Court precedent in front of me on that particular issue because that's just -- I don't want to -- that's not a question I would answer as a judge off the cuff if I were deciding a case. I would certainly go pull the U.S. Supreme Court precedent, I would pull the Constitution, I would sit down and read it and then give an answer. But I --

SEN. FEINSTEN: Senator, if you'll excuse me just for a moment, wasn't your question, does the Supreme Court guarantee a right to privacy?

SEN. CANTWELL: The Constitution, I asked --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I mean the Constitution, guarantee a right to privacy?

SEN. CANTWELL: Yes.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: You can't answer that yes or no?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, yes, clearly it does. The U.S. Supreme Court has said it does. That's been the law for a long, long time. I thought that she was asking me specifically can you tell me where that is derived from, the specific language.

SEN. CANTWELL: Whether you believed that there existed such a right, because in interpreting these cases -- and I think when we get to follow up on some of your other cases and comments, I mean, that the issue. We're trying to find out whether you will follow precedent. And obviously, in a variety of cases, you've dissented, and dissented in such a way that it's left a question mark, at least in my mind and, I think, perhaps some of my colleagues, as to why you dissented and some of the issues that you brought into the dissent. And so this particular issue, it's not -- we've had other people who have said that they believe in upholding a woman's right to choose, and then when it came to major decisions, went in an opposite direction, obviously because they saw something within the case. And that's why I'm trying to understand your personal belief in that right.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, again, I don't let my personal views get into it, but I very clearly pointed out at several junctures, particularly my Doe 1 case, that there is a right to choose recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court. It applies to minors, that you cannot prevent a minor from going to court without the knowledge of her parents to get a judicial bypass. I pointed out that I had concerns about some of the Texas Family Code provisions in the divorce context when a minor -- a parent would be required to notify another parent under a divorce decree, if that might lead to some of the problems under sexual, physical, emotional abuse. I said that that would probably be unconstitutional. I think I clearly demonstrated that I have thought about the U.S. Supreme Court decisions and how they apply in this context and also how they might apply under other Texas laws that impact this area, and that I am willing and able to follow it.

SEN. CANTWELL: Well, let's -- let's go specifically to that. And I'm sorry I don't know exactly -- I know -- I have what your statement was earlier on the Doe case; I'm not sure which one,

REV_00348722

Court, which she followed and recognized as authority.

For example, detractors take pain to tell us that Justice Owen would require that to be sufficiently informed to get an abortion without a parent's knowledge, that the minors show that they are being counseled on religious considerations. They appear to think this is nothing more than opposition to abortion rights. They are so bothered with this religious language that various documents produced by the abortion-industry lobby italicize the word "religious."

But this standard is not Justice Owen's invention but rather the words of the Supreme Court's pro-choice decision in Casey. Should she not follow one Supreme Court decision but be required to follow another? Is that what we want our judges to do, pick and choose which decisions to follow? That appears to be the type of activist judge these groups want. And this committee should resist all such attempts to get that type of a judge.

The truth is that, rather than altering the Texas law, Justice Owen was trying to effect the legislators' intent. No better evidence of this is the letter of the pro-choice woman Texas senator stating her, quote, "unequivocal," unquote, support of Justice Owen. Senator Shapiro says of Justice Owen, quote, "Her opinions interpreting the Texas parental-involvement law serve as prime example of her judicial restraint," unquote.

I'm sorry I'm taking a little longer, but I'll finish in just a minute. I understand why the Washington left-wing groups don't like that in a judge. But this committee should applaud and commend such restraint and temperament.

The truth is that rather than being an activist foe of Roe, Justice Owen repeatedly cites and follows Roe and its progeny as authority. Compare this to Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who wrote in 1985 that the Roe-versus-Wade decision represented, quote, "heavy- handed judicial intervention," unquote, that was, quote, "difficult to justify," unquote.

Now, in relation to this, I would like to briefly comment on the mounting offensive of some to change the rules of judicial confirmation by asking nominees to share personal views or to ensure that nominees share the personal views of the senator on certain cases.

To illustrate my view, I'll tell you that many people have recently called on this committee to question nominees as to their views on the Pledge of Allegiance case. My full-throated answer to this is no, as much as I think that that case was wrongly decided.

I also happen to think that the recent school-voucher case is the most important civil rights decision since Brown. But I'm not going to ask people what they think about that case either. Such questions threaten the heart of the independent judiciary and attempt to accomplish by hidden indirection, which senators cannot do openly by constitutional amendment. It is an attempt to make the courts a mere extension of the Congress.

whether it was Doe I or Doe II. But you found that a woman seeking a judicial bypass should demonstrate that she has considered philosophical, social, moral and religious arguments that can be brought to bear when considering abortion, and that you were following the decision of the Supreme Court in Casey (sp). However, in Casey (sp) the court ruled that states can enact rules designed to encourage her to know that there are philosophical and social arguments of great weight that can be brought to bear in considering an abortion, but there is never any mention of religious implications.

MS. OWEN: That's in H.L. v. Matheson (sp). That -- the reference to religion is in H.L. v. Matheson (sp). I think they said -- I can give you the cite, but they talked about -- see if I can read it here for you. But that was a factor that they said, that there are religious concerns. People -- let's see: "As a general proposition that such consultations" --

SEN. CANTWELL: That's not -- that's not in Casey (sp).

MS. OWEN: It's in the U.S. Supreme Court decision H.L. v. Matheson (sp). In my opinion, these were -- as you -- I hope you understand, were drafted fairly quickly. I did cite H.L.-Matheson (sp) in my Doe I decision, not on this point. I cited Casey (sp), and I cited the second decision in City of Akron. And I cited Matheson (sp) on another point. But in Matheson (sp) they talk about that for some, people raise profound moral and religious concerns, and they're talking about the desirability or the state's interest in these kinds of considerations in making an informed decision. They don't say you have to have religious beliefs, and I don't for a minute advocate that. The only point I was making --

SEN. CANTWELL: I think there was -- I think there was detail in there that basically said that you didn't think that the physician would be the person who could give that kind of input or advice. And so I think you can our concern, obviously. And I want to get back to the broader question. But our concern is, you know, you're dissenting in these decisions about a major issue of privacy. And in this particular issue, you're injecting in, where, obviously, the others on the court didn't, this issue of religious -- religion and pulling it out. And so, I don't know -- I don't know the right example. I think on parental notification. I mean, these laws have been thought and passed by legislatures because they want to think of the extreme cases. And I'm obviously -- we've talked about the abuse issues and various things. But now we're saying to a young woman that she has to sit down not with her doctor, but some religious leader and have an explanation about this issue before she's going to have the ability to get this approval.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, let me make sure that we're talking about the same thing. If there's abuse, this all goes out the window. It's a separate ground. You don't --

SEN. CANTWELL: Say it's two 18-year-old cousins.

JUSTICE OWEN: I'm sorry?

REV_00348723

SEN. CANTWELL: Say it's two 18-year-old cousins.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, 18-year-olds aren't covered by the statute -- oh, you mean that she's consulting? Again, the U.S. Supreme Court has talked about getting counseling from a qualified source. And it was not me but Justice White --

SEN. CANTWELL: What if I'm not religious?

JUSTICE OWEN: I'm sorry?

SEN. CANTWELL: What if I'm --

JUSTICE OWEN: That's -- I'm not saying you have to get religious counseling. I never advocated that.

SEN. CANTWELL: Well who delivers the religious counseling?

JUSTICE OWEN: I never advocated that you have to have religious counseling. What the U.S. Supreme Court said, and what I followed, what I agreed was part of the definition of information, that it's not just information about the physical impact on the girl or the physical risks. And what Justice O'Connor wrote for the court was that there are "profound" -- and that's her word, not mine -- philosophical and moral and other considerations that go into an informed choice. And in the --

SEN. CANTWELL: That's exactly right. And that's where in your dissent -- again, your dissent from your colleagues -- threw in the word "religious consideration." So I'm trying to figure out -- you're telling me where you --

JUSTICE OWEN: And that came from H.L. versus Matheson (sp).

SEN. CANTWELL: And you believe it should be -- if you were the majority, it would have been implemented how?

JUSTICE OWEN: All I'm -- it would have implemented that the girl who is seeking an abortion should indicate to the trial court an awareness that there are arguments and issues. She doesn't have to agree with any of them, she doesn't have to explain what her philosophy is, she doesn't have to rationalize or justify her philosophy or her moral code or her religion, if she has any.

But all that I said was, and what I think is a fair reading of what Justice O'Connor said, is we're talking about awareness that there are arguments out there on both sides, philosophical, moral, and in H.L. versus Matheson (sp) arguments -- religious. If she doesn't have religious beliefs, that's no business of the court's. The only question is, if she does, has she thought about her own beliefs? Is she aware of the philosophical debate, the moral debate, just the issues. She doesn't have to get into does she agree with them and debate it with the judge, but simply is she aware --

SEN. CANTWELL: Is the doctor capable of giving that advice or not?

JUSTICE OWEN: I think it depends. I think it depends. I think it depends on -- and I'm not sure she has to identify where she got -- where she obtained her understanding of the philosophical and other issues. That doesn't necessarily have to be from a counselor, as long as she exhibits an understanding of it.

I think she may need a counselor to give her some help on her options, the physical risks, that sort of thing, but I'm not advocating that she have any particular set of values or morals or religious beliefs.

SEN. CANTWELL: Madam Chairman, I see my time has expired. So I don't know if we're going to -- if we're moving on or --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Did you have one more question, because this will be the last question before --

SEN. CANTWELL: Well, I just, if I could just -- just quickly, and obviously, if you're confirmed to the Fifth Circuit, you'll be responsible for determining the types of laws that are the undo burden on a woman's right to choose. And so given your record in this area, you know, I have some questions about, you know, recognizing when a statute imposes, particularly given some of the laws that are still on the books in the Fifth Circuit. So I guess I'm asking you, do you believe that you really have the ability to recognize what the Court has recognized in Casey, and that there are some laws that, you know, can prevent a woman from obtain abortion just as surely if they were outlawed? Do you think you're going to be able to recognize that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, I do. And I would point to you again other places in my Doe 1 decision where I've recognized that in some situations, even a notification statute can amount to a consent statute because of a particular girl's situation, and I quoted the Supreme Court on that. As I pointed out, I expressed concern about the impact, the undo burden on a minor's right to choose that might occur because of particular provisions in our family code that deal with divorce decrees.

So, I've -- yes, I do believe that I can apply Casey and Akron to -- and the other decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, I believe faithfully.

SEN. CANTWELL: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator. Justice Owen, believe it or not, this is going come to an end.

REV_00348725

JUSTICE OWEN: (Laughs.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And you have held up very well. And I want to say the audience has held up very well. I didn't note anybody going to sleep. And we have two additional judges to do, so I'm going to excuse you and thank you very much.

JUSTICE OWEN: Appreciate it. Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And ask the two other judges to please come forward. And those leaving the room, if you could do so quietly, we would be very appreciative.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you, Senator Feinstein, very much.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Justice.

SEN. : You did awful well, Judge.

SEN. HATCH: Madam Chairman, can I put some more material in the record.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes, certainly.

SEN. HATCH: Okay, thank you. And others as well.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. The record will remain open for one week.

END

REV_00348726

Now, I speak against this practice in the strongest terms. And in my view, any nominee who answers such questions would not be fit for judicial office and would not have my vote. The truth is that there are many who, like Justice Ginsburg, think that cases like Griswold or Roe were wrongly decided as a constitutional matter, even if they agree with the policy result, just as the great liberal Justice Hugo Black did in his dissent in Griswold.

A few weeks ago we heard testimony that Chief Justice Warren thought Brown versus Board of Education was his worst ruling as a matter of constitutional law but not his least necessary.

Again, I welcome Justice Priscilla Owen. Considering the opposition mounted so unfairly against you, I have to tell you that today you may be the bravest woman in America. I hope that there are young women watching you right now. You are an excellent role model for anyone, and especially young women.

Now, some of Justice Owen's detractors have made much about the fact that she is not afraid to dissent. Of course, they fail to mention dissents like her opinion in Hyundai Motor versus Alvarado, in which Justice Owen's reasoning was later adopted by the United States Supreme Court on the very same difficult issue of law.

They also overlooked her dissent in a repressed-memory sexual- abuse case where she took the majority to task with these words. Quote: "This is reminiscent of the days when the crime of rape went unpublished unless corroborating evidence was available. The court's opinion reflects the attitudes reflected in that era," unquote. Perhaps, Madam Chairman, they thought that dissent reflected too well the perspective of a woman to point out to senators like all of us up here.

Despite deceptive opposition, I think that Justice Owen should be confirmed, first because I believe that colleagues, like many on this committee -- and, in fact, hopefully all of us -- will be fair. I also believe my Democratic colleagues will be led by the time-tested standards, well-stated by Senator Biden, and look again to qualifications and judicial temperament, not base politics.

Whether the Biden standard will survive past our time will be tested in this case. If we fail the test, we will breach our responsibility as auditors of the Washington special-interest groups and the judiciary stewards on behalf of all people and not just some.

So I want to thank you, Madam Chairman. I know I took a little longer than I usually do, but I felt that it needed to be done in this case. And I look forward to the testimonies here today.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Hatch. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Leahy.

SEN. PATRICK LEAHY (D-VT): Madam Chair, I will not do as my friend from Utah did and give a long speech which simply delays these proceedings; I'll put my speech in the record. I also have great respect for the chair of this committee, the senator from California, and I know she'll hold a fair hearing. And, unlike my friend from Utah, I'll make up my mind after hearing the facts

SECTION: CAPITOL HILL HEARING

LENGTH: 17404 words

HEADLINE: PANEL ONE AND TWO OF A HEARING OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

SUBJECT: JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

CHAIRED BY: SENATOR DIANE FEINSTEIN (D-CA)

PANEL I: SENATOR PHIL GRAMM (R-TX); SENATOR KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON (R-TX); SENATOR BILL NELSON, (D-FL); AND REPRESENTATIVE KAY GRANGER (R-FL)

PANEL II: JUSTICE OWEN, TO BE A CIRCUIT COURT JUDGE FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

LOCATION: 325 RUSSELL SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C.

BODY:
SEN. FEINSTEIN: (Bangs gavel.) We'll begin the hearing. And members will be coming in from time to time. Before I make my opening statement, I would like to just quickly run through the protocol for this hearing.

There are three panels that we will be hearing today. Members will be called on the basis of the early bird rule. We will alternate from side to side. For those that don't know the early bird rule, is an incentive to get members to come to committee promptly so that they can respond to -- be responded to with questions.

There will be a vote I think around 10:30. We will recess for that vote. This session will run from 10:00 to 12:15. We will begin again at two o'clock and to through to five o'clock, at which point the hearing will end, and if we need an additional hearing, that could be determined at that time. There will be two votes this afternoon. I believe at 2:45, and we will do a similar thing. We will simply adjourn and go and cast our votes and promptly return here. I would like to begin by saying that there are three panels. If three distinguished members at the first panel. Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison is traveling and will arrive a little late, and I've agreed to take her statement as soon as she comes in. So, we'll stop whatever we're doing and listen to her when she comes in. We will then hear the statements from the members, and then a statement from the chairman of the committee and the ranking member.

was never allowed to have a hearing.

So then President Clinton nominated Ricky Moreno, another outstanding Hispanic attorney, to fill the same vacancy. But this committee, under Republic chairmen, did not allow him to even have a hearing over the 17 months that his name was pending here, and then President Bush withdrew his name. And now we have Judge Owen, who is the third vacancy.

I trust the distinguished senator from California to hold a fair hearing, something that the two nominees, two Hispanic nominees, two extremely well-qualified Hispanic nominees nominated by President Clinton, were never allowed to have hearings before this committee.

I commend the senator from California and this committee for holding a hearing and not doing as had been past practice -- we've heard a lot about past practice -- did not follow past practice and instead we are having a hearing. I'll make up my mind based on what we hear. I would hope that other senators would refrain from the kind of name-calling we've heard about people who express their views. I have had a lot of views expressed on this, both for and against, Justice Owen. While I may not have liked the tenor, and even some of the things I was called in those dues, I am one who depends on the First Amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We will now turn to the members of --

SEN. SCHUMER: Madam Chair? May I ask -- there are a couple of things that I would just like to mention here in response to Senator Hatch. May I have a minute or two to do that?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, we have a very long -- I think every other member probably has something they would like to say. What we generally do is turn to the members and then hear -- if you wouldn't mind, I think it would be appreciated.

SEN. SCHUMER: I'll defer to you, Madam Chair. I just thought certain things were on the record that were just so wrong that they need some refutation.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I'll give you ample time to complaint --
SEN. SCHUMER: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: -- later.

We now have three members of the Congress. I'd like to begin with the senior senator from Texas, the Honorable Phil Gramm, and then we'll proceed right down the line. Please, and if you could keep your statement to five minutes or so, that would be appreciated.

SEN. GRAMM: Well, Madam Chairman, first, thank you very much. I appreciate having an opportunity to be here. I am not going to waste your time telling you that Priscilla Owen is brilliant, that she's a distinguished student of the law. Everybody knows that. If she were a simpleton, there would not be all this opposition to her.

REV_00348736

I just want to talk about the Priscilla Owen that I know and that the people of my state know. First of all, normally when there is an effort to attack somebody, you find one little thing about them and you blow it out of all proportion. What is so basically disturbing to me about this case is there is no one little thing to blow out of proportion. This attack is created out of whole cloth. Priscilla Owen is not a political person. Priscilla Owen, when she was recruited by people who wanted to have outstanding jurists, was probably our state's greatest commercial litigator. She was living in River Oaks, which is the richest neighborhood in our state. She was extraordinarily successful. She was totally nonpolitical. When she was approached about running for the court, she wasn't sure what primary she had voted in. The idea that this good woman is some kind of political activist or kook is as far from the truth as it can be as you can get from the truth.

She made an extraordinary decision. She gave up probably the most successful commercial litigation practice that any female lawyer in my state had or ever had, moved out of River Oaks as a single mom, to become a justice of the Supreme Court of Texas.

Now, I want to address two areas that have been brought up. One is Enron. Now, Priscilla is from Houston. Enron was the largest and most successful company in my state. So, is anybody shocked that people who work for the largest and most successful company in Texas, a company domiciled in Houston, supported the most successful commercial litigator in the state when she ran for the Texas Supreme Court? What is amazing for me is that people who worked for Enron contributed only $8,600. That should have been the beginning of a message that maybe these weren't good people. (Laughter.)

Now, there has been a -- there has been an accusation that somehow, because employees of the largest and most successful -- at that point -- company in my state contributed $8,600 that somehow this induced her to make a political ruling. Well, the case was pretty simple. The state law sets out a procedure whereby inventories are evaluated. The case came before the Supreme Court. There was a unanimous decision -- and even the lawyer -- and I've got a copy of a letter from Robert Mott -- writes a letter and says, "Justice Owen authored the opinion of a unanimous" -- this is the lawyer who represented the other side of the case. "Justice Owen authored the opinion of a unanimous court, consisting of both Democrats and Republicans. While my client and I disagree with the decision, we were not surprised." So you read this propaganda being put out, you would get the idea that this person, bought and sold by Enron, and made a political ruling. You get down to the facts, it's insulting.

Second point, this abortion business. The Texas legislature wrote a law that basically said you have got to notify a parent when a minor is having an abortion. Now, to some people that is an extremist position. To most Americans that's a pretty straightforward position. I would have to say loving many members of the legislature, as I do, I would still have to say that the bill was written by people who were trying to be on three sides of a two-sided issue. It is a very poorly written law. It imposed very heavy burdens on the court. But if you go back and look at Priscilla Owen's rulings, if you listen to her, whether you agree or you don't agree with her efforts to try to bring logic and reason and precedent to a very poorly written law, you have got to be basically struck by the fact that this is a person who tried to follow precedent, which is what courts are supposed to be about.

Finally, let me say that if you need evidence that this is an extraordinary woman who has done a good job, who is basically nonpolitical, let me just give you some. When she ran for office, she was endorsed by every major newspaper in the state of Texas. There are a lot of newspapers in the state of Texas that never endorse me. Someone who is some kind of out of the mainstream person is not endorsed by the Austin American Statesman. In fact, most mainstream people are not endorsed by the Austin American Statesman. (Laughter.) The last Democrat who sat on the Texas Supreme Court is a strong supporter of Priscilla, and paid to come up here and tell people that. That was Raoul Gonzalez. The most respected living former chief justice, John Hill, came to Washington on his own initiative -- and he is a Democrat -- and was a Democrat candidate for governor, was attorney general, is one of the most loved former officeholders in our state -- came to Washington for the specific point of telling people that what they were saying about Priscilla Owen is simply not true.

So I want to urge my colleagues -- I know how these things work. I've been in this town for 24 years, and I've seen a lot of organized campaigns. And I know that this creates tremendous political pressure on both sides of the aisle. But I just want to say that if a group of special interests can convince people that this good woman is some kind of extremist, then these same groups could convince people that Chuck Schumer was a conservative or I was a liberal. There is no foundation to these charges that have been made. And I want to urge you to get the facts, look at them, and weigh them from the perspective of not what some advocate group says but in simply looking at the facts. If you will do that, I am confident that Priscilla Owen will be confirmed, and I think it will send a very good signal to America that when the facts don't comport to the charges that the Senate goes with the facts. And I thank you, Madam Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Senator Gramm. I should tell the witnesses that the light is now on. It is set at five minutes. And, Senator Nelson, you are next in line.
SEN. BEN NELSON (D-FL): Well, Madam Chairman, I am from Florida, and I am here for two noncontroversial nominations.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. I should tell everybody that we have two additional nominees following Justice Owen.

SEN. LEAHY: And I want to thank both Senator Nelson and Senator Graham of Florida for working out the situation with the White House so that we could have some noncontroversial nominees up here.

SEN. NELSON: And, Madam Chairman, if you would like I will be merciful and I will take a total of 30 seconds.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: We would appreciate that. Thank you for your mercy.

REV_00348738

SEN. NELSON: Well, I am here on behalf of Jose Martinez and Tim Corrigan. They are noncontroversial nominees to the district court, one from the Southern District and one from the Middle District.

The reason they are noncontroversial -- and I am here on behalf of Bob Graham and myself, and with my permission will insert both Senator Graham's and my written statements into the record. They are noncontroversial because we have a selection process in Florida, called a Judicial Nominating Commission, appointed by distinguished members of the bar and prominent citizens of the community that screen the applicants. They go through an extensive formal written application, extensive interviews. Then the three nominees come to Senator Graham and me, and we interview them and tell the White House if we have an objection. And then the White House makes its selection for a district judge from the three.

And so I am happy to be here on behalf of Senator Graham and myself to tell you that we enthusiastically support both of these nominees, and they will be very good additions to the federal bench. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Nelson. Representative Granger?

REP. GRANGER: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I am honored to be here today to support the nomination of Priscilla Owen, a highly qualified nominee from my state, home state of Texas. According to the Department of Justice, there are 91 vacancies in the federal court -- that's right, 91. Overall, the president has nominated 113 individuals to serve as federal judges, but only 59 of them have been confirmed, and 54 nominees are still pending. Specifically, the president nominated 32 individuals to the circuit courts, but only 11 have been confirmed. Today we have a chance to address that problem.
Today we can move to fill a vacancy that has been classified as a judicial emergency. The time has come to fill this seat, and fill it with a qualified, sensible nominee like Priscilla Owen -- Priscilla Owen, who received a unanimous rating of well qualified, the highest rating possible from the American Bar Association.

Justice Owen's academic achievements are remarkable, and her professional experience is exemplary. She graduated with honors from both Baylor University and Baylor Law School, and following graduation she received, as has been noted here, the highest score for that year on the Texas bar exam.

Justice Owen practiced commercial litigation for 17 years before her election to the Texas Supreme Court in 1994. She is well respected for her service to the highest state court. And in 2000 she was endorsed, as Ben said, by every major Texas newspaper for her successful reelection.

In her professional career, Justice Owen has worked to improve access to legal services to the poor, and increase funding for these programs. She served as the Texas Supreme Court liaison to statewide committees that strive to offer legal services to the poor. Justice Owen also participated in the state committee that successfully enacted legislation at the state level to significantly increase funding for indigent legal services.

Additionally, Justice Owen organized a group known as Family Law 2000. Family Law 2000 warns parents about the difficulties children face when parents go through a divorce. It's a program that also teaches parents how to address those difficulties and how to make the divorce process as painless as possible for children.

Madam Chairman, Justice Owen has proven herself to be the right candidate for this position. She has served the state of Texas with distinction, and I am confident she will serve our nation well in the federal court. In short, Justice Owen is an excellent choice for the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak for her.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Representative Granger. The chair will excuse the witnesses, and we'll ask Justice Owen to come forward. Justice Owen, before you sit down, if you would raise your right hand, and affirm the oath when I complete its reading. Do you swear that the testimony you are about to give before the committee will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

JUSTICE OWEN: I do. (Witness sworn.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Please be seated.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you very much.
SEN. FEINSTEIN: And I have put the clock on ten minutes, but we're -- my intention would be to give you as much time as you require. Generally around here people begin by introducing any family members they might wish to, and we'd be delighted to meet any of your family or friends you care to introduce. Then the time is yours to say whatever you might like to the committee. And then we will proceed with rounds of questions, and each member will have ten minutes for their questions.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you, Madam Chair, Chairman Leahy, members of the committee. I do want to, before I introduce my family, and my special guests today, I do want to take the opportunity to thank you very much for the hearing today, and for being able to talk to you about some of the issues that have been raised.

I also want to thank the president, of course, for the honor of nominating me to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. And I certainly want to thank Senator Gramm and Congresswoman Kay Granger for coming here today and for their kind words about me, and for introducing me.

And, as you mentioned, Madam Chair, Senator Hutchison will be here later this morning. But I did want to take this opportunity to express my thanks to Senator Hutchison for all that she has done and for her friendship and support throughout this process.

I also want to thank -- she's not here today, but the counsel to the president, who is also my former colleague, Alberto Gonzalez (ph), for his support and assistance throughout this process. And --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I am going to stop you for a minute. Pull the mike -- this is unidirectional. It has to be directly in front of you. And you have to talk directly into it, or it blurs --

JUSTICE OWEN: Is that better?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: If you could put the mike directly in front of you, and then speak --

JUSTICE OWEN: Is that better?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: That's much better.

JUSTICE OWEN: Okay. I would like to introduce my family and some of the folks who are with me today. My sister, Nancy Lacey (ph), is here. And my pastor, Jeff Black, who is from my church in Austin.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: If they would stand, we would like to acknowledge you.

JUSTICE OWEN: And I would certainly be remiss if I did not introduce the former chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court and the former Texas attorney general, John Hill, who is here today. And I want to thank him for his support and all that he has done. Some of my other friends who are here -- and I had hoped someone would help me with this, so I don't miss anyone -- because it's hard for me to see who all is here. Pat Meizel (ph), a former judge from Harris County; my special friend Harriett Myers, who is a former president of the State Bar of Texas, and who is now at the White House. Who am I missing? Oh, Judge Levi Benton, from Houston -- Harris County, Texas -- thank you, Levi for coming on short notice, and I appreciate it. Who else is? I am sorry I am not able to introduce everybody that's here. But thank you all for coming, and everybody who prepared to come last week -- and I thank you for changing your plans and getting here this week.

I also want to thank, although they couldn't make it this week, my former colleagues Raoul Gonzalez and Justice Jack Hightower. Jack Hightower is also a former congressman from Texas. And the 15 past state bar presidents, both Democrat and Republican, who have signed a letter of support and given that to the committee. And then last week there were a whole bunch of folks who came up from Texas to meet with senators and with their staffs, and I want to thank them for the effort and the time that they took to do that.

And, Madam Chair, Mr. Chairman and members, I also appreciate the opportunity to make an opening statement today. I know that that's not usually done, but for the reasons that have been discussed this morning, I think it's appropriate and necessary for me to at least give a brief opening statement.

Madam Chair, I truly believe that the picture that some special interest groups have painted of me is wrong, and I very much want the opportunity to try to set the record straight. I have been very honored to serve as a judge on the Supreme Court of Texas, and I am extremely humbled that the president has nominated me to serve on the U.S. Court of Appeals -- the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. But I have never forgotten where I've come -- where I came from and my basic values.

After my father died of polio when I was about 10 months old, my mother and I went to live with her parents and her brother on a farm in South Texas. And my family worked very hard for a living then, as they do now. That was a difficult time. But my mother eventually remarried to a wonderful man, and we moved to what I considered the big city, which was Waco. Some of you don't know where that is -- it's near Crawford. But even though we moved to Waco, I missed my family in South Texas and I spent my summers growing up on the farm. And I worked alongside a lot of folks from a very different background than mine, but I learned through that that all of us have a whole lot in common. It doesn't really matter much where we came from or how we make a living, but it does matter that we all respect one another.

I was fortunate enough to be able to go to Baylor University and Baylor Law School, and I started practicing law 24 years ago, when there weren't very many women in the profession. The law was very good to me. But, an opportunity came for me to run for the Supreme Court of Texas, and I decided that I should pursue that opportunity. I believe that people like me, who had the experience, and who had the academic credentials, and who didn't have any kind of axe to grind, should be willing to step out of private practice and serve the public as judges. So I ran for the Supreme Court of Texas, and the people of Texas elected me in 1994, and reelected me in 2000.

Although I'm a judge, I believe it's very important that I try to serve people in other ways. And one of the first things I have -- did after I got to the court, I was to work to increase legal aid to the poor, and to improve their access to the courts. I also, as you have heard today, helped form a group called Family Law 2000 that has been concerned about the adversarial nature of divorces. I've also served on the Board of Texas Hearing and Service Dogs, which is a charitable organization that provides and trains service dogs for paraplegics and quadriplegics and for those who are hearing impaired. As I mentioned, I am a member of St. Barnabas Episcopal Mission. I teach Sunday school there to elementary school children, and I serve as head of the Altar Guild.

But as a Judge, I have worked very hard to carry out my responsibilities to the people of Texas, and I believe that I have done so. There have been four, I would say basic principles that have guided my work as a judge. The first is I always remember that the people that come to my court are real people with real problems and real issues, and that when we decide their cases, we're going to decide cases that affect a lot of other real people because of the precedent those cases set. So, when I decide a case, I must do so on the basis of the fair and consistent application of the law, and my decisions cannot be based, and are not based on whether a party is rich or poor, or who their lawyer is. My decisions are based on the law -- whether that's a statute, or United States Supreme Court decision, or a prior decision from my court.

Second, when it's a statute that's before me, I must enforce it, as you in the Congress, or a state legislature, as the case may be, has written it, unless it's unconstitutional. I believe my decisions demonstrate that I do respect the division between the judicial and the legislative branches of government. If I am confirmed, I will do my utmost to apply the statutes you have written, as you have written them, not as I would have written them or as others might want me to interpret them.

Third, I must strictly follow United States Supreme Court precedent. I have taken a solemn oath to do so. I've upheld that oath in the past, and if confirmed, I will continue to do so as a Fifth Circuit judge.

Fourth, and finally, judges must be independent, both from public opinion and from the parties and the lawyers who appear before them. And as you've heard, Texas selects its judges through partisan elections. That means that judges necessarily preside over cases in which people appear before them as parties or lawyers who may have contributed to campaigns. That's a system that several other states have, but I don't believe it's the best system. I have long advocated that we change the way we select judges in Texas. I have advocated that we essentially follow an election -- and the retention election after the judge is initially appointed.
In the meantime, I have led reforms in the judicial campaigning area. When I first ran for the Supreme Court of Texas, I voluntarily imposed limits on my campaign contributions when there weren't any laws at all imposing any kind of limits. And in -- when I ran for reelection in 2000, I returned over one-third of my contributions where I did not receive a major party opponent.

In closing, Madam Chair, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I recognize the tremendous responsibility that judges have, and I have tried the very best I could for the last seven years to carefully and faithfully execute those responsibilities. Those who know my record the best have written to you in my support and express their judgment that I have been a fair an impartial judge on the Supreme Court of Texas.

I thank you for allowing me to make this statement, and I truly welcome the opportunity to answer all of your questions today. Thank you very much.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much. I know that Senator Hutchison has just arrived. If she'd take her place, and while she is, I'd like to spell out the early bird order. It is Feinstein, Hatch, Leahy, DeWine, Kennedy, Sessions, Feingold, McConnell, Schumer, Brownback, Durbin, and Cantwell.

Senator Hutchison, welcome. Your colleagues have all testified, but as you told me, you were going to be a little late, and we're delighted to have you here. And if you would like to make a statement, if you could possibly confine it to five minutes, we be appreciative.

SEN. KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON (R-TX): Thank you very much, Senator Feinstein. And thanks to you and Senator Leahy for allowing me to make this statement a little early. I got the earliest flight out of Dallas this morning and it just arrived, so I do thank you for that.

Madam Chairman, I am here in total and full support of my friend Justice Priscilla Owen. She's a seven-year veteran on the Supreme Court of Texas. I think you know her exemplary career, starting from when she graduated cum laude from Baylor Law School in 1977, and Justice Owen also made the highest grade on the state bar exam that year. I think her academic credentials are unmatched. She also has the experience to be a good circuit court of appeals judge, having been elected, reelected to the supreme court with 84 percent of the vote in Texas. She was endorsed by every major newspaper in Texas during her successful reelection bid.

I think she has the best qualifications of anyone that I've ever seen come before this committee for a court of appeals appointment. The Dallas Morning News called her record one of accomplishment and integrity. The Houston Chronicle wrote that she has the proper balance of judicial experience, solid legal scholarship, and real- world know-how.

But despite the fact that she is a well-respected judge who has received high praise, her nomination has been targeted by special interest groups. Justice Owen's views have been mischaracterized and her opinions distorted. Today this committee and Justice Owen have an opportunity to set the record straight. One particular area of misinformation concerns Enron. In Texas, we have statewide elections for judges. Whether any of us approve of that system or not, it is the current law in Texas, and as we all know, a person has to run a campaign and raise the funds to do that. Priscilla Owen has actually been a leader in trying to reform the way judges are elected in our state, having come out solidly against such elections. Like six other justices on the nine-member court, Justice Owen has received Enron contributions in her election bids. She not only received legitimate contributions from employees and the employee PAC, she didn't take corporate contributions, but at that time, Enron was one of our state's largest employers, and its employees were active. They were active politically. They were active civically, and they are -- they have been major charitable contributors in Texas and especially in Houston. So, it isn't -- it should be understandable that they did make political contributions which were absolutely legitimate. She only took $8,800 in Enron contributions out of a total of 1.2 million raised for her bid. Her opponent actually raised actually 1.5 million.

During her 2000 campaign, Priscilla imposed voluntary limits on herself, which included taking no more than $5,000 per individual and spouse, no more than $30,000 per law firm, and over half her total contributions were from non-lawyers. In fact, after she started the trend of voluntary limits, the state actually came in and made laws similar to her voluntary limits that she had led the way to make. After she did not have a major opponent in 2000, she returned over a third of her remaining contributions to her contributors.

I want to read the words of our former state supreme court chief justice, John L. Hill, who is a Democrat and was also elected attorney general of Texas as a democrat, denouncing the mischaracterization of Priscilla Owen's record by outside special interest groups. Their attacks on Justice Owen in particular are breathtakingly dishonest, ignoring her long-held commitment to reform and grossly distorting her rulings. Tellingly, the groups made no effort to assess whether her decisions are legally sound. I know Texas politics, and he can clearly say these assaults on Justice Owen's record are false, misleading, and deliberate distortions. As you know, Justice Owen enjoys bipartisan support and the ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary has unanimously voted Justice Owen well qualified.

So, Madam Chairman, I thank you for allowing me to sit in full support of my friend, Justice Priscilla Owen, a member of the Texas Supreme Court with an outstanding judicial record.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator, for the excellent statement. We appreciate it very much, and you're welcome to stay or be excused, whatever you wish.

I'm going to proceed with -- try to do two questions in this round, Justice Owen. The first, it relates to the Searcy case, and the second has to do with comments that were made.

My understanding of the Searcy case is this. Willie Searcy was a 14-year-old in a Ford pickup with a pickup -- with a seatbelt, when another car smashed into the pickup and the seatbelt severed. As a result, he became a quadriplegic. He was on a respirator. The case went to court. He received a $30 million judgment, which was then reduced to a $20 million judgment, and the case came up on appeal. The young man was in every difficult circumstances. He was on a respirator. I understand that his family could only pay for a nurse through 4:00 a.m. and there was a quiet hour with nobody attending him, and then the parents attended him from 5:00 a.m. in the morning. Well, he had been in there from the age of 14 to 22, and while the year-and-a-half dragged by that you were supposed to be writing that opinion, one morning the respirator went out and he died.

And, you wrote an opinion and the opinion you wrote said that the appeal should not be granted on the basis of faulty venue, that it was brought in the wrong venue, which had never been argued in either of the lower courts that handled the case.

This was a very surprising case for me to read about you because I thought you, and hope I'm right, were a person with a great deal of compassion, and yet here was someone that had two courts sustaining a verdict which could have gotten him the nursing help that he needed to sustain his life, but during the delay, he died. And there are those in the writings that have been presented that have said that the delay was unnecessary, a year-and-a-half delay was unnecessary to write that opinion.

Could you respond to that, and could you also tell us the average length of time that you take to write an opinion like this?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, I appreciate that question because I do -- would like the opportunity to respond since there's been so much in the press that's simply wrong about that case.

REV_00348745

I would like to welcome Priscilla Owen on behalf of the Judiciary Committee. Justice Owen comes to us with a distinguished record and with recommendations of many respected individuals within her state of Texas. She currently sits as one of nine justices on the Texas Supreme Court, which is the court of last resort for civil cases in that state. Justice Owen is a graduate of Baylor and Baylor Law School, and before joining the Texas Supreme Court in 1995, she was a partner in the law firm of Andrews and Kirk.

As indicated by the large number of people in this room -- in fact, as indicated by the size of the room itself, this is a nomination that's received a lot of interest. My office has received dozens of letters of support and of opposition from organizations within Texas and from national organizations as well on both sides of the debate. So feelings run very very strong. We will, of course, keep order, and we do not appreciate any comment from the audience.

I'm keeping an open mind on this nominee, as I do with all nominees. I first met with her several weeks ago. I found her to be personable, intelligent and well-spoken. It's clear to me that Justice Owen knows the law, that she's very capable and that she'd be an excellent advocate for a cause. But the question this committee must answer for this and all nominees is whether this individual would make a good federal judge, a federal appellate judge, and that determination includes questions beyond intelligence and character. We must also ask about temperament, and the ability to decide cases on the law, not on personal beliefs.

The concerns that have been raised about Justice Owen go to the heart of these questions. Accusations have been made that Justice Owen too often stretches or even goes beyond the law as written by the Texas legislature to meet her personal beliefs on several core issues, including abortion and consumer rights.

I've read through a great deal of the material about Justice Owen in preparation for this hearing, including a number of opinions she has written on a variety of subjects. So, I'm very interested to hear from Justice Owen on these issues today, after which I'll carefully review the record and make what is sure to be a very difficult decision, as well we -- as we will all do.

So, now I would like to turn to the ranking member and then to the chairman of the committee.

SEN. ORRIN HATCH (R-UT): Well, thank you, Madame Chairman. I want to welcome all nominees today as well as the members of the Congress that have come to testify on their behalf. And I ask that I be able to put statements for Misters Timothy Corrigan and Jose Martinez into the record?

I would ask unanimous consent for that.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection.

SEN. HATCH: I would like to go especially -- especially to welcome Justice Priscilla Owen of Texas, our lone star, lone circuit court nominee. I intend today to comment on Justice Owen's

REV_00348728

First of all, we remanded the case to the lower court, and it was three years later that Mr. Searcy unfortunately passed away. Now, the court -- the case had been in the lower court system quite a while before it got to our court. It was over a year after the accident before the lawsuit was even filed in the trial court, so he did not pass away while the case was pending in my court.

What -- and I also want to specifically address the allegation, I guess, you would say, not from you, Senator, but that's been printed in the press, that the issue of venue was never raised in the lower courts or in my court, which is just ludicrous, frankly. I would be happy to produce the briefs all the way up in our court. Venue was argued in the trial. It was briefed in the court of appeals. The court of appeals decision wrote on venue. Venue was in the briefs permanently in our court. We -- it was -- it was definitely briefed.

And Senator, though this is kind of a legal technical explanation that I'm going to try to explain the best I can, there were no rendition points in that case. In other words, Ford was not saying that we win as a matter of law, they were saying "We want a new trial." And under those circumstances, our court had to address the venue issue. We had no choice, because there's a statute in Texas that says if the case is filed in the wrong trial court, then -- then reversal is mandatory. It's not discretionary, it's mandatory.
And what happened in this case, the Ford vehicle, the pickup was purchased in Dallas, where Miles -- Mr. Searcy, his family, lived in Dallas. The accident occurred in Dallas. Everybody agreed that all the operative facts centered around Dallas, Texas. Yet, the plaintiff's lawyer decided to file in Rusk County, in Texarkana, which is, I think, 180 or 200 miles northeast of Dallas, in a county that had absolutely nothing to do with the vehicle or the accident. Everybody stipulated that. The only basis for filing in the other country, a long way away from Dallas, was that there was a Ford dealership there, as I'm sure there's a Ford dealership in almost every county in Texas. And we looked at existing precedent in Texas, my court did, and we said, Ford doesn't own the dealership. Under the statute, again, applying our prior supreme court precedent and other courts of appeals decisions, we said venue was in the wrong county. This was essentially forum shopping issue.

And we were required by the statute, having concluded that venue was in error, to remand to the trial court, which we did. Once it got back to the trial court, the trial court granted a partial summary judgment against Mr. Searcy and his family, and that went up on interlocutory appeal, and the court of appeals considered that. The case came back to our court. We denied the petition. It went back down to the trial court. And it was at that point, three years after our decision remanding it to the trial court, based on the venue ruling, the Mr. Searcy passed away. And there's -- to this date there's been no, it is my understanding, trial to adjudicate whether Ford is liable in the first instance.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you. Since the distinguished ranking member and my friend raised Justice Gonzales, I thought I would get his actual statement and read it in some context, because this relates around the Jane Doe cases. And this where I think there has developed a feeling among some that you are a, in a sense a judicial activist, that you went beyond the law, as the law was written in Texas, with respect to notification, in asking for additional things to be presented, that the law itself in its three prongs on notification did not require. But let me just quote this.

"To the contrary, every member of this court agrees that the duty of a judge is to follow the law as written by the legislature. This case is no different." And then it goes on to say, "Our role as judges requires we put aside our own personal views of what we might like to see enacted and instead do our best to discern what the legislature actually intended. We take the words of the statute as the surest guide to legislative intent. Once we discern the legislature's intent, we must put it into effect, even if we see our, even if we ourselves might have made different policy choices." And then it goes on to say, "The dissenting opinions, of which you were one in this case, suggest that the exceptions to the general rule of notification should be very rare and require a high standard of proof. I respectfully submit that these are policy decisions for the legislature, and I find nothing in this statute to directly show that the legislature intended such a narrow construction. As the court demonstrates, the legislature certainly could have written Section 33.033(I) to make it harder to bypass a 366 parent's right to be involved in decisions affecting their daughters, but it did not.
Likewise, part of the statute's legislative history directly contradicts the suggestion that the legislature intended bypasses to be very rare. Thus to construe the Parental Notification Act so narrowly as to eliminate bypasses or to create hurdles that simply are not to be found in the words of the statute would be an unconscionable act of judicial activism.

And, of course, in reading your opinions in these Doe cases, you did, in fact, insist on certain tests that were not present in the statute. Could you speak to that, please?

MS. OWEN: Well, Senator, let me start in reverse order with some of the things in your question. First of all, this was the third in a series or down the line in a series of Doe cases.

The first Doe case that came to the court was, of course, Doe I. And in that opinion, I tried my very best to give effect to legislative intent. And, Senator, I honestly believe that I did not go outside of what the legislature intended. I looked at the words they chose.

The legislature said that a girl who is under 18 who wants to have an abortion without notifying one of her parents may get a judicial bypass if one of three prongs are met. And the language that they chose to put in the statute for the judicial bypass was language that was almost verbatim, if not verbatim, taken out of a U.S. Supreme Court opinion. And the opinion had blessed a judicial-bypass provision in another, although it was a consent statute.

And so I looked at the context in which the legislature was deciding what to write and why. And these words were not written in a vacuum. To me they had meaning within the context of all these U.S. Supreme Court cases.

So I looked at the U.S. Supreme Court decisions in this area, primarily Casey and Akron I -- excuse me, the second decision in City of Akron -- and looked at what the U.S. Supreme Court had said about what it is that states may have an interest in information being supplied about the abortion decision. So everything in my Doe I opinion tracked language from the U.S. Supreme Court's decision, specifically, as I said --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I'm going to have to stop you mid-sentence, because we have three minutes to get to a vote. So I'm going to recess the committee, and we'll take up just where we left off.

MS. OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you.

(Recess.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Justice Owens -- Owen -- I interrupted you right in the middle of a response. Let me just quickly better state the question. The issue here is not what some hypothetical state could impose, but what in fact the state of Texas did enact into legislation. And while various Supreme Court cases may have indicated that requiring additional steps or information might be permissible, the Texas legislature, as Justice Gonzalez said, could have written that section, Section 33.0331, to make it harder to bypass a patient's right to be involved in decisions affecting their daughters. But the point is it did not. For instance, in one Jane Doe case you suggested a minor must show that she understands the impact the procedure will have on the fetus. I understand you point to the Casey case in support of this conclusion. But that case never said that such a requirement is mandatory. So what in the Texas statute itself would justify such an expansion of this statute?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, Senator Feinstein, again, the words that the legislature used on the first prong were "mature and sufficiently well informed." And they in fact took the entire bypass straight out of U.S. Supreme Court cases. And if you look at the backdrop against which this whole statute was enacted, it seemed to me -- and a majority of the court agreed on this, is it's in their opinion -- that they were looking at all the U.S. Supreme Court precedent on this point. And the words "sufficiently well informed" connoted, to me at least, that they wanted us to look at what the U.S. Supreme Court has said is relevant to being fully informed. I think the Texas legislature intended, as explained in another Supreme Court case -- it's HL v. -- and I can't remember the second name of it -- that they realized that in these situations there was not going to be a parent involved, that neither parent was going to be notified, that an adult, standing in the shoes of the parent was not going to be able to give mature advice and information to this minor. Again, we are talking about minors. And the U.S. Supreme Court at one point in its opinion said of course the states are entitled to presume that parents would give this kind of information and counseling, but of course that's not going to happen in these situations. So, again, it seemed to me that the Texas legislature, when they said fully -- or, excuse me, "sufficiently informed," wanted us to look at what the U.S. Supreme Court had said. States may encourage women to know about the abortion decision, to be informed, to make an informed choice.

And so I looked at, as I have indicated, primarily Casey and the second decision, City of Akron, to see what has the U.S. Supreme Court said about the words "informed." And when you go to those cases -- I lifted directly out of the cases the issues that the Supreme Court had identified that they thought it was okay for states to look at in making this decision. And it seemed to me, again, you are talking about a minor here. These legislators were concerned that mothers and fathers would want their daughters to make the decision with as much information as they could have -- constitutionally, since there was not going to be an adult involved in the process, only the court, and that that's what the legislature intended within constitutional bounds.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: My time is up. Senator Hatch.

SEN. HATCH: Thank you, Madam Chairman. Justice Owen, I will ask you more on this later, but let me make sure that everybody understands some of the answers you have just given on the Jane Doe cases. When you argued in Jane Doe, one, that for oar minor to be, quote, "sufficiently well informed," unquote, a minor would need to, quote, "demonstrate that she has sought and obtained meaningful counseling from a qualified source about the emotional and psychological impact," unquote, and so on. This was not your personal standard that you were imposing, but an application of the United States Supreme Court standard -- isn't that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, Senator Hatch, that's correct. That cane out of one of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

SEN. HATCH: Can we presume that when the justices of the Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court, established these standards that they had before them the best available medical and psychological information?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator, I agree with that.

SEN. HATCH: It just seems to me that your detractors are speaking -- not talking about people up here, who have a right to ask any questions they want -- but your detractors on the outside are seeking to retry Casey and every other Supreme Court case by attacking you. But what you were doing was applying Roe v. Wade and its progeny. Am I right about that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator. I quoted Roe v. Wade as modified by Casey, and I clearly recognize throughout the opinion that that is the law of the land, and I was trying faithfully to follow it. And I also pointed out in the course of the -- I think it was the Jane Doe I opinion, that if we applied that rationale of those cases it would probably mean some of our family law statutes were unconstitutional in this context.

SEN. HATCH: Well now, much has been made of your opinion that for a minor to be sufficiently informed for purposes of the judicial bypass, she must, quote, "exhibit an awareness that there are issues, including religious ones, surrounding the abortion decision," unquote. Now, I have to tell you that nothing panics your detractors --that is, these liberal special interest groups -- more than a judge suggesting that religion exists. I think they think that it's crazy talk. To be clear though, your language that a minor should, quote, "indicate to the court that she is aware of and has considered that there are philosophical, social, moral and religious arguments that can be brought to bear when considering abortion," unquote, is nothing but a faithful -- maybe I shouldn't use that term -- mere application of Sandra Day O'Connor's language in the Casey decision -- isn't that right?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator, it was in Casey. It was in -- I believe it was also in Akron 2 -- and the specific words, "religious beliefs" and "religion" was included in HL v. Matheson.

SEN. HATCH: You didn't wake up one morning and suddenly decide you were going to impose a standard that was all your own, did you?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, senator. Frankly, when this statute hit the court we were all a little caught unawares. And I went to the -- straight to the U.S. -- looked at the history of it, and went straight to the U.S. Supreme Court decisions and started reading to see what have they said about states' abilities to see that a minor is sufficiently informed in making the choice.

SEN. HATCH: Well, it would seem to me that your detractors would like you to cherry-pick among Supreme Court cases or precedents that you should follow and Supreme Court precedents you should ignore. Of course that's typical of how some of them actually read the Constitution.

Now, let me ask you this. On your decision in Ford Motor Company v. Miles, is it not true that a bipartisan majority of the Texas Supreme Court held that lawsuit, which arose out of a car accident, was filed in the wrong county, and therefore remanded for transfer and a new trial in a different county?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, senator.

SEN. HATCH: Now, the decision did not eliminate the plaintiff's ability to sue for the injuries they had suffered. It simply ordered that the case be reassigned to the appropriate venue. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, senator.

SEN. HATCH: Okay, well, I just wanted to make that clear.

Now, Justice Owen, I would like to ask you further about your decisions concerning the Texas statute that regulates the ability of minors to obtain abortions without telling their parents in certain circumstances. First, I want to make sure that we all understand exactly what that statute does. As I understand it, the statute codifies the right of minors to obtain abortions without permission from their parents, but requires that one of the young woman's parents simply be notified of their daughter's decision 48 hours before the procedure is performed. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, senator. It is not a consent statute, it's a notification statute.

SEN. HATCH: I see. In addition, the statute provides for what is called a judicial bypass, which means that a judge can allow the abortion to go forward without parental notification, provided that the girl ask the trial judge to do so, and proves with testimony or other evidence that she meets one of the stated reasons for such a bypass. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. HATCH: Okay. Now, Justice Owen, do you know how many cases have been found since that statute went into effect by girls seeking to obtain abortions without notifying their parents?

JUSTICE OWEN: We don't know the precise number, because they're confidential. In some -- we do know that there have at least been 650-some odd since the statute went into effect in 2000. And the reason we know that is that the statute provides that the court can appoint counsel or appoint guardian ad litems for these girls at state expense. And so we know that that number of reimbursements in that number of cases have been applied for. But we also know that there are quite a number of lawyers who do these cases for free on a pro bono basis. So we don't know the exact number, but we do know at least that many --

SEN. HATCH: And how many of these cases reached the Texas Supreme Court?

JUSTICE OWEN: Ten different minors have come to our court in 12 different cases. Jane Doe and Jane Doe 4 came back after the remand.

SEN. HATCH: I see. And what happened to the rest of the cases of the 650?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, the first two cases that came, Jane Doe and Jane Doe 2, a majority of the court, including me, believed that she, based on the evidence, that she had not met the statutory standards. But because our court had never written on either the "mature and sufficiently well informed" prong of the statute or the best interest statute, that she didn't -- and those were sort of amorphous concepts standing alone -- that she and her lawyer did not really know what standard they were trying to meet. So, in the interest of justice, we remanded those cases to the trial court for another hearing. And Jane Doe 3 -- that case was remanded. We don't know what happened to Jane Doe 3 -- she -- we just don't know because the confidentiality. Jane Doe 4 -- the court affirmed the two lower courts and denied the bypass.

And let me say -- I think it's been said, but let me make clear that none of these cases ever get to my court unless both the trial court and the Court of Appeals have denied the bypass. If the --

SEN. HATCH: I am correct in saying that the Texas Supreme Court hears such cases only after a trial court has heard them --that's the court that actually hears the testimony and the evidence -- and that trial court denies the bypass, and then the Court of Appeals reviews the trial court decision, and agrees that the bypass should be denied?

JUSTICE OWEN: Or, say, if they disagree and grant the bypass, that's the end of it. There are no further appeals. It would not come to my court.

SEN. HATCH: So is it safe to say, Justice Owen, that the cases reaching the Texas Supreme Court are the tough cases, because there have only been a few of them that have made it up there.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, yes, senator, with this caveat -- caveat, or however you pronounce it -- we have had some cases that came to the court that -- there were five of them actually -- where the court affirmed the lower court's judgment without opinion. And it takes under our rules at least six judges to agree to do that. And if any judge had dissented and noted their dissent publicly, then we would have reflected that. I can't get into the deliberations on our court or disclose what was at issue in those cases, but I think it's a fair inference from those circumstances, given the number of opinions written in all those other cases, that these were not close cases in those five instances.

SEN. HATCH: So it leads to the more difficult case, where evidence of maturity, best interests or abuse happens to be not very clear -- is that right?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator.

SEN. HATCH: And where the precise definition of words used by the Texas legislature has to be determined?

JUSTICE OWEN: That was the -- we had never obviously construed the statute before, and it needed to be construed by my court to give guidance to the trial courts and the courts of appeals.

SEN. HATCH: Of course some of the abortion rights advocacy groups would prefer that you simply always rule in favor of bypassing parents rather than look at the words of the statute. But I have got to say I think the method of your decisions, your principled examination of legislative intent, is exactly the kind of judging that most Americans really want from their judges -- and expect.

Now, the judicial bypass law in Texas has been in effect for a relatively short time. Am I right about that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, it came into effect in January of 2000.

SEN. HATCH: Okay, so it's only been a year or so. Therefore, disputes arising out of that law are cases of first impression, meaning that the court was deciding the proper standards that the Texas legislature intended for the first time. Is that right?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator.

SEN. HATCH: Okay. Now, Justice Owen, some of the liberal interest group lobbyists that oppose your nomination have accused you of lacking sympathy for the girls whose cases made it all the way up to the Supreme Court for review. Some of those groups want the public to believe that your decisions reflect an opposition to abortion itself, rather than a thoughtful and principled approach to applying the law as the legislature intended that are meant. I know that these accusations are false, but I have examined your record and your opinions, as I have done for a huge percentage of the judges sitting on the federal bench today, and I've concluded that some of these groups have set out to ruin your reputation, and they've simply gotten it wrong. But they don't always take my word for it, unfortunately. So let me just ask you when you were writing your judicial opinions in the Jane Doe cases, were you motivated simply by a desire to achieve a particular public policy result, or was your objective to ascertain and enforce the intent of the Texas legislature?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, my personal beliefs don't enter into any of my decisions. They certainly didn't enter into these decisions. We had a statute in front of us that again was enacted after long debate in the Texas legislature against a backdrop of a series of U.S. Supreme Court decisions that mapped out some of the perimeters of this area.

SEN. HATCH: Well, I'd like to pursue this further, but I just noticed the red light, and my time is up.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Before recognizing Senator Leahy -- after Senator Leahy, Senators DeWine, Kennedy, Sessions -- it is my understanding that, Senator McConnell, that you wanted to move up in that order. I'll leave it up to you to work out with --

SEN. DEWINE: That would be fine with me.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right, excellent. Then we'll move Senator McConnell up in place of Senator DeWine. DeWine will go into McConnell's place.

Senator Leahy.

SEN. LEAHY: Thank you, Madam Chair. I -- and, Justice Owen, good to have you here. I'm glad you are able to have this hearing.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. LEAHY: And, as I noted before, just to cut through the basic rhetoric, when the other party was in charge of this committee, Jorge Rangel and Enrique Moreno, who had been nominated by President Clinton for a seat, were never even allowed to have a hearing. And I mention that because of some of the -- as I hear some of the comments being made on my comment line by the White House supporters about you, they were probably unaware of that. And, also, to forestall some of the other comments that the White House is trying to get out on your behalf, that we did notify the White House of the various cases that I was going to ask you about -- about a week ago -- is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: I'm sorry?

REV_00348753

SEN. LEAHY: About a week ago we gave the White House a heads-up on the type of cases I was going to ask you about -- is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: I really don't know, Senator Leahy.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, then that's -- you should talk to them, because we did.

In FM Properties v. City of Austin -- let me go to that a bit, because you have developed a reputation for opinions which if not every time most of the time favor big business interests. And this is a case that doesn't change that reputation. A large majority of the Texas Supreme Court in FM Properties v. City of Austin found a section of the Texas water code unconstitutional because it gave too much legislative power to corporate land owners with large tracts of land. As a majority of your court saw it -- and I think very convincingly explained their legal reasoning for it, the code section simply went too far -- it allowed these large land owners to regulate themselves, even though that would affect their financial interests, even though it may adversely affect the environment of those around them. So the farmer is telling the fox to guard the henhouse. And the court said, and I am quoting, "that your dissent in that case was nothing more than inflammatory rhetoric." The six justices and the majority explained why your legal objections were mistaken. They said that no matter what the state legislature had the power to do on its own, it was simply unconstitutional to give the power of the people to a land owner. Now, could you tell me why you thought it was proper for the legislature to grant these large corporate land owners the power to regulate themselves? Because under this, as I understand it, with limited government review there would be very little opportunity for citizens to challenge the regulations. There's clear financial interests in those who would be regulating themselves. If that's not giving up too much to a private interest, what would be?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator Leahy, I know that some have tried to characterize this case as involving a fight between the City of Austin and big business, but in all honesty when you get down and look at it, what this was really a fight about was the state of Texas versus the City of Austin. And when this case hit our court, the then attorney general of Texas, Dan Rawlins, intervened in the case and filed a long, thorough brief in support of the constitutionality of the state statute. There had been a long-standing rivalry between the city of Austin and the state of Texas over Austin trying to regulate within its extraterritorial jurisdiction. And the legislature came back and said, you know, we want state regulations to apply in your ETJ, which they couldn't -- that's a technical term, but it wasn't technically part of the city of Austin, but it was their ETJ. The state said, Look, we gave you the ability to have an ETJ in the first place, and we want state regulations, not city regulations, to apply in that area. And this was not an unregulated area. The entire area was subject to all of the laws of the Texas natural resources code, all of the other water laws and conservation laws that apply to every piece of land in the state of Texas. So it was not regulated.

SEN. LEAHY: But just so on -- that's not really the way the majority saw it. They did refer to your opinion as being inflammatory rhetoric, your dissent. There was very limited ability for the citizens to question it. Frankly, if you followed your dissent, one could argue that the problems on Wall Street right now, there'd be no problem in delegating the power to the corporations and the accountants to regulate themselves, no matter what effect it might have on ordinary citizens, no matter the lack of regulation.

Let me ask you about another one, Read versus Scott Fetzer. The Texas Supreme Court, by a vote of 6-3, held a vacuum cleaner company liable when one of its dealers raped a customer after an in-home demonstration required by the company.
Now, a jury of Texans found the company should be held accountable. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Texas appellate court had agreed first. They said the company had a duty to exercise reasonable control over the vacuum sales representatives because in this case it required in-home sales. And in this case you had a person who had enough in his record to raise warning flags to the company.

But you said this was wrong, if I understand the dissent you joined; that it's a wrong view of corporate responsibility because it would impose liability on all in-home vendors, as if the outcome might provide too much justice and compensation to future victims, even though this case was a pretty blatant one. Do you think that's a fair basis to shield corporations from the actions of their agents?

MS. OWEN: Senator Leahy --

SEN. LEAHY: It seems to be going against basic horn book of tort law.

MS. OWEN: I was trying to follow basic horn book tort law. And I think this case was very sympathetic. There were terrible facts in the sense that this woman was raped in her home. But basic hornbook law is that when there are independent contractors involved that you don't have respondeat superior liability. And here we had not just one independent contractor but we had two layers of independent contractors.

The Kirby vacuum cleaner company, at the national level, hired or engaged distributors -- this is all stipulated that they were independent contractors -- this wasn't my view; the parties agreed to this; there was no issue about it -- that Kirby's distributors were independent contractors and that Kirby in turn contracted with other independent contractors to go door to door and make the sales. And under hornbook contract law, you're typically not liable for the acts of your independent contractor.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, this -- but the Texas trial court disagreed with you. The Texas appellate court disagreed with you. The Texas Supreme Court disagreed with you. I mention this only because I find so many of these things where you seem to be outside even the mainstream of what is arguably a very conservative supreme court, the Texas Supreme Court.

I saw this in the City of Garland versus Dallas Morning News on allowing -- you seemed to be wanting to write in such a large exception to any kind of public disclosure that anybody could hide anything from public disclosure. That is why -- and I will submit a number of questions for qualifications and to address some of the deceptions, distortions and demagoguery orchestrated against her nomination that we have all read in the national and local papers. I have long looked forward to this hearing, and I expect she has as well.

I would like first to comment on the two jingoes that are being used about her record, as if they had substance. Namely, that Justice Owen is, quote, conservative, unquote; and that she is, quote, out of the mainstream, unquote. Of course this comes from the Washington interest groups that we've seen year after year, in many cases, who think that the mainstream thought is more likely to be found in Paris, France than in Paris, Texas.

I must admit that it's curious to hear it argued that a nominee twice elected by the people of the most populous state in the circuit for which she is now nominated is, quote, out of the mainstream, unquote. Texans will no doubt be entertained by whoever says that. Listening to some of my commentary on judges, I sometimes think that mainstream for them is a northeastern river of thought that travels through New Hampshire early and often, widens in Massachusetts, swells in Vermont, and deposits in New York City.

Well, the mainstream that I know of, and that most Americans --

SEN. LEAHY (D-VT): That's (impossible to do ?) geographically, but that's okay.

SEN. HATCH: (Laughs.) Understand. Well, the mainstr -- that's -- that was the point.

Well, the mainstream that I know, and that most Americans relate to runs much broader and further than that. The other mantra repeated by Justice Owen's detractors is that she is, quote, conservative, unquote. Now, I believe that the use of political and ideological labels to distinguish judicial philosophies has become highly misleading and does a disservice to the public's confidence in the independent judiciary, of which this committee is the steward.

I endorse the words of my friend and former chairman, Senator Biden, when he said some years ago that, quote, "Judicial confirmation is not about pro-life or pro-choice, conservative or liberal. It is not about Democrat or Republican. It is about intellectual and professional confidence to serve as a member of the third co-equal branch of the government," unquote.

Now, I believe it is our duty to confirm judges who stand by the Constitution and the law as written, not as they would want to rewrite them. That was George Washington's first criterion for the federal bench and it is mine.

I also want common-sense judges who respect American culture. I believe that is what the American people want as well. I believe we do a disservice to the independence of the judiciary by using partisan or ideological terms in referring to judges.

My reason was well-stated by Senator Biden when he said that, quote, "It is imperative not to compromise the public perception that judges and courts are a forum for the fair, unbiased and the record, because I understand that there's time -- time is running out.

But I will submit a number of questions on these where you seem to be outside the mainstream even of your own court, and the other area being the area of campaign contributions. And I realize that judges are allowed to raise campaign contributions. You've raised over a million dollars for your 1994 and 2000 election campaigns from law firms, lawyers, litigants, including Enron and Halliburton. Many of them regularly appear and have interests before your court.

It appears that in many of the cases in which your past contributors were parties, you did not disqualify or recuse yourself. In our state, we would see this as a major conflict of interest. Apparently it is not in Texas.

So I'd just ask you this. While you don't have any duty to disclose contributions, did you make a full disclosure to the parties of campaign contributions that you received related to those who may have interest in the case?

MS. OWEN: Senator Leahy, all of my contributions are a matter of public record. For the 2000 election, they're all available on the Internet. Anybody -- I had 3,000 of them, individual contributors, in my 1994 campaign.

SEN. LEAHY: But some of these are fairly significant. I mean, the Enron ones, for example, were significant. Yet you, shortly after receiving them, were arguing a case. In 1994 you got 21 percent of your total campaign funds from non-law firm businesses, including individuals with political action committees -- Enron, Halliburton, Shell, Kinetic.

You -- my question is, whether required or not, did you ever have a case, one, where you recused yourself because of campaign contributions, first? Did you?

MS. OWEN: No.

SEN. LEAHY: Did you ever have a case where you noted, aside from whatever might be on a web site, that you noted to the parties involved that you'd had significant contributions from one of the parties?

MS. OWEN: Senator, again, they're a matter of public record. And everybody --

SEN. LEAHY: I know, but that's an easy --

MS. OWEN: And no one's ever asked me --

SEN. LEAHY: I'm not trying to do a trick question, Justice Owen, just a simple yes or no. Did you ever have a case where you went out of your way to make such a disclosure to the parties? And I would note that you're not required to. I'm just asking, did you ever?

REV_00348756

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, no one's ever asked me to recuse because of campaign contributions.

SEN. LEAHY: Well, did you ever -- no, that's not my question. And I posit this by saying, in fairness to you, you're not required to do this. But did you ever have a case where you had had significant contributions from one of the parties involved where you noted that fact to the litigants when they were before you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I did not.

SEN. LEAHY: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you.

MS. OWEN: Mr. Leahy?

SEN. HATCH: Could the witness answer some of the other questions that Senator Leahy raised? He cut her off.

SEN. HATCH: I wonder if -- Madam Chair, I tried to make -- I don't think I cut her off, but I'll leave that to the chair to determine. I will have a number of --

SEN. HATCH: Well, but if she would like to say more, I'd like her to have the opportunity.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Let me just ask, do you have anything else you'd like to say on that?

MS. OWEN: I would like to make -- there was a lot in there, but there are two points I would like to make quickly --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Please.

MS. OWEN: -- particularly about the comment that I'm out of the mainstream on my own court. We've had 890-something decisions or close to 900 that I've participated in since I've been on the court, and I have been in the dissent apparently -- I haven't counted them myself, but according to some of my opposition, 86 times, which means I've been in the dissent on my court less than 10 percent of the time.

SEN. LEAHY: A lot of those cases, though, were unanimous, were they not, and just -- there were no significant dissents?

MS. OWEN: I don't believe so, Senator Leahy.

SEN. LEAHY: Okay.

MS. OWEN: We split up quite frequently on my court. The second point I wanted to -- well, I can deal with FM Properties, I guess, in detail, but they were subject to a lot of regulation by the state, just like every land-owner in the state of Texas. And so I would like the opportunity at some point to fully address all of that, if not today in the hearing, certainly by --

SEN. LEAHY: Well, please understand that on the time, you have the opportunity -- and I'm sure that Senator Feinstein would agree with this -- you have an opportunity to expand on any of your answers. Nobody wants to cut you off. If you have an area where you feel you did not have an opportunity to fully answer, of course you can add that for the record. And I will be submitting other questions. And, of course, if you feel that they're not clear and you need more information, we'll do that too.

MS. OWEN: I appreciate it.

SEN. LEAHY: Nobody is trying -- as I said at the beginning, unlike Senator Hatch, I try to make up my mind after the hearing, not before.

MS. OWEN: I appreciate that.

SEN. HATCH: I've noticed that.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Now, now, gentlemen. Now, now. The next questioner is Senator McConnell. And directly -- finishing with his time, we will recess until 2:15. Senator McConnell.

SEN. MITCH MCCONNELL (R-KY): Justice Owen, I gather from your testimony and that of others that you share my view that judges ought not to be elected.

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator McConnell. From the very first time since I've been on the court, since the '95 legislature on upward, I have advocated that we allow the people of Texas to amend the state constitution, which is what it would take in Texas, to change the way we pick judges and allow them to choose to go to a system that's essentially an appointment system whereby the judges would then stand for retention in a totally nonpartisan manner.

SEN. MCCONNELL: You've probably noticed the U.S. Supreme Court decision a few weeks ago on the issue of whether or not states are permitted to have, in effect, gag rules on judges if they do elect them. The Supreme Court held -- I got the impression, from reading Justice Scalia's opinion, that he too was unenthusiastic about electing judges. But he said if you're going to elect them, you can't say they can't say anything.

And I was reminded, we have a similar rule in Kentucky. And I've noticed over the years judges showing up at events, standing up, introducing themselves, smiling sweetly and sitting down, because they are essentially not allowed to say anything.

I raise this because it is, of course, permissible to elect judges, and Texas has chosen to do that. And while that's maybe not how I would do it, the people of Texas didn't consult me on that. And this issue about your contributions, I find fascinating how one could run for office unless the taxpayers provide funding for an election, one could run for office without speaking, and having the funds available to speak to a large audience like you have in Texas is beyond me.

You were successful in raising funds in order to carry your message to the people of Texas. And now you are being, I gather, criticized for raising perfectly legal contributions to engage in perfectly permissible campaigns in order to hold the office that you have now.

You certainly received de minimis contributions from Enron, smaller amounts than at least one member of this committee. And there's no evidence whatsoever that Enron was given any favorable treatment in any of the cases that it might have had before you.

All evidence indicates that you've acted ethically and ruled correctly with respect to any matters involving Enron. You never received any contributions from the company or from Enron-affiliated corporations. And while you received some contributions from Enron employees, as I read it, it's less than 1 percent of the total amount of funds you raised.

The one opinion that I gather is frequently referred to, relating to Enron, that you wrote was unanimous and bipartisan and relied on two on-point Supreme Court decisions. So the notion that you somehow were tainted by any of these Enron employee corporations is utterly without any basis.

The committee has received a letter from two Democratic justices on the Texas Supreme Court, Raoul Gonzalez and Rose Specter, who joined in that unanimous decision and who confirm that there was nothing extraordinary, let alone improper, about it. And if no one else has put that letter in the record to date, I'd like to ask that that letter be put in the record.

Others have referred to the lawyer who lost that case and the letter he sent saying that he was disturbed by suggestions that your decision in the case was influenced by campaign contributions from Enron employees. The lawyer said, "I personally believe that such suggestions are nonsense." This was the guy who lost.

You could have taken a much more expansive view of what the contribution system allowed in Texas. But I hold up your pledge you made to the people of Texas when you ran in 1994, that you didn't have to make, with regard to the parameters that you were going to superimpose over your contributions during that campaign.

You unilaterally decided to accept no more than $5,000 from a PAC, a political party, any other entity, or an individual, together with his or her spouse and independent family members. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: That's correct, Senator. At that time there were no laws at all in Texas limiting judicial campaign contributions.

REV_00348759

SEN. MCCONNELL: And you pledged to have "no more than half my contributors be lawyers" and in a statewide race accept no more than 60 percent of your total contributions from lawyers. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: I met all the -- I met my pledge.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Yeah. But you didn't have to do that.

MS. OWEN: I did not have to do that.

SEN. MCCONNELL: This is something you chose to do because you were troubled by having to raise funds in order to run for a judicial race. But, of course, if you didn't, nobody would have known who the heck you were.

MS. OWEN: That's correct, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Third, you said you would allow no PAC or political party "to spend more than $5,000 pro-rated to aid my campaign." You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I didn't.

SEN. MCCONNELL: You, fourth, said you would accept no more than $25,000 from a law firm and all its employees and members, their spouses and dependent family members. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Fifth, you said you would accept no more than 15 percent of your total contributions from non-lawyer PACs. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Sixth, you said you would use no funds raised for any non-judicial office. You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Seventh, you said you'd spend or loan "no more than $10,000 of my money on my campaign." You didn't have to do that, did you?

MS. OWEN: No, sir.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Eight, you said you'd spend no more than $2 million. You didn't have to do that, did you?

REV_00348760

MS. OWEN: No, sir.

SEN. MCCONNELL: And, ninth, you said you'd make a good-faith effort to report the occupation and employer of each person who contributes more than $50. Did you have to do that?

MS. OWEN: I wasn't required by law to do it, no.

SEN. MCCONNELL: All right. So you were somewhat troubled by the fact that you had to run for office like a regular candidate here, and you were on your own trying to impose some standards in order to diminish the appearance, at least, of undue influence on the part of these contributors to your campaign. Is that correct?

MS. OWEN: Well, let me do say that when you say I was on my own, Senator -- one of my colleagues who also running at the same time also took the same pledge, and Chief Justice Phillips had not done exactly that, but he has imposed limit when he had run prior to that. So, I was certainly not the only one that had ever done it, but -- but not many of us have had.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Well, that's nice of you to say that. The others obviously had more trouble by -- by the process in some ways as well. And as several of the people who testified on your behalf pointed out, you've actually backed -- been a leader in trying to nudge Texas in the direction of adoption a different system, have you not?

MS. OWEN: I have.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Frankly, I think you ought to be sainted for your exemplary conduct in running for this office. Some people are insisting on painting you as some kind of a Ma Barker here, of a Depression Era gang land thing, and it's utterly absurd. So, just to explore how much attention you may have paid to these contributors, can you name for me your top five largest contributors?

MS. OWEN: I can -- I can name the top one because it was my former law firm, and the employees, including the mailroom people, contributed and they exceeded the cap and I gave a bunch of their money back. But I know -- I know because of that that they were my largest contributor, but other than that, I don't know.

SEN. MCCONNELL: You can't remember any of the rest of them, right?

MS. OWEN: I can remember some -- certainly I can remember some of the law firms that contributed because they are people I practiced law with for 17 years, but I don't know where they fell in terms of were they 100th, or 10th, or -- I don't remember.
SEN. MCCONNELL: And so the suggestions made that you should have somehow notified parties arguing cases before you of your -- the fact that you had received contributions when in fact that isn't required by Texas law and the contributions would be available in publicly disclosed forum to anybody who was curious enough to ask, and certainly including the lawyers who were appearing before you, correct?

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Well, I think these suggestions that you've somehow engaged in rulings that favor your donors is -- is absolutely absurd on its -- on its face. And I commend you for really traversing the waters here of elected politics for a judicial position in a very ethical manner. As I said, you know, at the risk of being repetitious, I don't think judges ought to be elected, but if we are going to elect them, they certainly ought to be free to speak, and the supreme court has made it clear they're free to speak. The supreme court also made it clear over 25 years ago that in order to speak you have to reach the audience. And the only way you're going to reach the audience is to raise funds to reach the audience, particularly in an enormous state like yours, with a population currently of what?

MS. OWEN: I -- I don't know --

SEN. MCCONNELL: Over 20 million?

MS. OWEN: Five million people, I think, close to five million people voted in my race.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Yeah, over 20 million people in Texas. You managed to do that in an extraordinarily thoughtful and ethical manner for which you ought to be commended, not condemned. And I think the suggestion that you have in any way been tainted by these contributions is completely and totally baseless -- completely and totally baseless. It -- it just troubles me greatly that you've even been subjected to this criticism because there is essentially nothing that I can find in the record that justifies it.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator, your time is up.

SEN. MCCONNELL: Madam President -- Madam Chairman, I think we are about to the end of our time here anyway, and I'll save the balance of my observations for another round.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right. And Senator Hatch, you have a question --

SEN. HATCH: Madam Chair, if I could, I feel compelled to respond to the questions raised earlier about the nominations of Judge Rangel and Enrique Moreno, because these nominations were made when I was chairman of this committee, and I understand those remarks as an attack on my record of fairness. Those -- Jorge Rangel voluntarily withdrew his nomination citing frustration with the pace of the confirmation process. It is interesting to note that his nomination was pending for fewer in-session days than Justice Owen's. Mr. Wrangler quit after waiting 192 days of Senate business while Justice Owen is here after 212 Senate business days. When Mr. Rangel, President Clinton decided not to allow the Texas Senators Federal Judiciary Advisory Group to review and recommend potential candidates. Instead, President Clinton nominated

REV_00348762

Enrique Moreno. This put the advisory group in the unprecedented position of interviewing someone who had already been nominated to determine his qualifications. And when the advisory group voted, two-thirds of the voting members opposed the nomination. Now, anyone acquainted with the history of Senate consultation on nominations would fully understand that bypassing the home state senators is not an effective strategy for confirmation. In contrast, Justice Owen enjoys the full and strong support of both of her home state senators, and, of course, many others in a bipartisan way as well.

So, I just wanted to set the record straight because I didn't want anybody walking out of here thinking that -- that there was a lack of fairness.

Thanks, Madam Chairman, for letting me make that point.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right. You're welcome.

SEN. HATCH: Could I also put in the record, Madam Chairman, a letter -- a letter to Senator Leahy from -- concerning the Ford Motor case that was raised earlier -- yes, written by Victor E. Schwartz, who, of course, is one of the true authorities on tort law in this country and knows what horn book law really is.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection. The hearing will recess until 2:15. I earlier said 2:00, but the party conferences generally don't end until 2:15, so we'll make it that. Thank you very much.

SECTION: CAPITOL HILL HEARING

LENGTH: 19648 words

HEADLINE: AFTERNOON SESSION OF PANEL II OF A SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE HEARING

CHAIRED BY: SEN. DIANNE FEINSTEIN (D-CA)

SUBJECT: NOMINATION OF PRISCILLA OWEN TO BE A CIRCUIT COURT JUDGE FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

WITNESSES: PRISCILLA OWEN, NOMINEE

BODY:

SEN. FEINSTEIN: The hearing will come to order. Justice Owen, just a reminder: You are still under oath. And we will resume the first round of questioning. I would remind the committee that we'll recess for any floor votes that occur during the remainder of the day. And once again we're following the early-bird order, and it begins with Senator Kennedy; after Senator Kennedy, Senators DeWine, Feingold, Sessions, Schumer, Brownback, Durbin, Cantwell and Edwards is what I have so far.

Senator Kennedy.

SEN. EDWARD KENNEDY (D-MA): Thank you very much, Senator Feinstein. Welcome, Judge Owen.

MS. OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. KENNEDY: I apologize not being here earlier. I was here in the very beginning of the hearing. We're, as you have heard, considering the prescription drug issue. And as the floor manager of that, I needed to be on the floor. So I'm going to ask questions and then, with permission of the chairman, submit some follow-on questions. But I'd like to cover, if I could, in the time that I do have, two areas. As I look at your cases, I see that you have a pattern of siding against the consumer or the victim of personal injury in favor of business and insurance companies. And I'm struck by the fact that when the court does rule in favor of consumers or victims of personal injury, you're frequently in dissent.

In a few instances you've gone along with the majority of the case and ruled in favor of injured individuals. But looking at the information over the last three years, you've dissented almost half the time that a consumer wins. And you've never dissented from a case in which the consumer loses.

Do you disagree that you're among the most likely on the Texas Supreme Court to dissent from favoring -- cases favoring a consumer or injured plaintiff?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I don't. I judge each case on its merits. I'd like to address one thing you said. One case that comes to mind where I was in the dissent in favor of the plaintiff was Sands versus Fidelity Guaranty, or I'm not sure what comes after Fidelity.

But it was a workers' compensation case, and the woman entered into a settlement agreement of her workers' compensation claim and she ultimately claimed that she was fraudulently induced into it and claimed damages for bad faith. And I agreed with the majority of the court that the bad-faith claim couldn't stand. But I dissented because she should have been entitled to rescind that settlement agreement and go back and reassert her original workers' compensation claim. That's one that comes to mind. I can go back and --

SEN. KENNEDY: Let's take the example where the majority found -- over the objections of the majority. Have you ever dissented over the objections of the majority and found for a consumer of plaintiff? Do you have any recollection of any cases?

MS. OWEN: Well, that would be one of them, the Sands versus Fidelity.

SEN. KENNEDY: That wasn't a majority case.

MS. OWEN: I was in the dissent in that case. You're asking me if I've been in the majority for consumers?

SEN. KENNEDY: Any time that -- can you point to a case in which you stood up for a consumer or individual plaintiff over the objections of the majority?

MS. OWEN: Well, there's --

SEN. KENNEDY: That is, a case in which the consumer lost and you dissented.

MS. OWEN: Well, I think the Sands case that I just described is one of them. I think there are probably others. Again, there are 900 of them. I don't remember them all. But I could go look.

SEN. KENNEDY: Well, if you could be good enough to provide some of those.

MS. OWEN: Now, I've certainly voted -- there are a number of opinions where I have -- obviously the consumer has recovered and I joined those opinions.

SEN. KENNEDY: In the past two years, the Texas Supreme Court has ruled on cases brought under the Texas Parental Notification Act, and the law passed by the state legislature in 2000 permits the young woman to have an abortion without notifying her parents if she proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, that she's mature and sufficiently well-informed to make the decision or if notification would not be in her best interest or if notification would lead to physical, sexual or emotional abuse.

Many, if not most, would describe members of the Texas Supreme Court as conservatives. And as cases have come before the court, it's clear that its members have struggled with the task of restraining their personal beliefs on abortion and parental notification to ensure they adhere to the letter of the law.

In fact, former Texas Supreme Court member, current White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, wrote, "I cannot rewrite the statute to make parental rights absolute or virtually absolute, particularly when, as here, the legislature has elected not to do so. However the ramifications of such a law and the results of the court's decision here may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the legislature." That's all his quote.

Now, Justice Owen, a majority of the court have applied the plain language of the parental-impartial adjudication of disputes," unquote.

We compromise that perception, I believe, when we play partisan or ideological tricks with the judiciary. Surely we can find other ways to raise money for campaigns and otherwise play at politics without dragging this nation's trust in the judiciary through the mud, as some of the outside groups continue to do.

All you have to do to see my point is read two or three of the fund-raising letters that have become public over the past couple of weeks that spread mistruths and drag the judiciary branch into the mud, as many recent political campaigns increasingly find themselves.

On a lighter note, while on ideology, let me pause to point out that one of the groups deployed against Justice Owen is the Communist Party of America. But then I don't know that they have come out in favor of any of President Bush's nominees. I suspect, after the fall of the Berlin Wall, they must have a lot of time on their hands these days.

Today I wish to address just why a nominee with such a stellar record of respected judicial temperament and as fine an intellect as Justice Owen has, who graduated third in her class from Baylor's law school, a great Baptist institution, when few women attended law school, let alone in the South, who obtained the highest score on the Texas bar examination and who has twice been elected by the people of Texas to serve on their Supreme Court, the last time with 83 percent of the votes and the support of every major newspaper of every political stripe, I would like to address just why such a nominee could be here today with as much organized and untruthful opposition from the usual leftist Washington special interest groups that we see.

I will peel through what is at play for these groups. We need to expose and repel what is at play for the benefit and independence of this committee. And I would like to address also the reasons why I am confident that she will be confirmed notwithstanding, not least of which is that this committee has never voted against a circuit nominee with the American Bar Association's unanimous rating of well- qualified, the highest rating they give. Justice Owen has that highest of ratings.

The first reason for the organized opposition, of course, is (plain?). Justice Owen is from Texas, and Washington's well-paid reputation destroyers cannot help but attempt to attack the widely-popular president of the United States at this particular time, in an election year, by attacking the judicial nominee most familiar to him, Justice Owen. Welcome to Washington.

But as I prepared more deeply for this hearing, the second reason became apparent to me. In my 26 years on this committee, I've seen no group of judicial nominees as superb as those that President Bush has sent to us, and he has sent both Democrats and Republicans, men and women, Hispanics, African-Americans and Caucasians.
In reading Justice Owen's decisions, one sees a judge working hard to get it right, to get at the legislature's intent, and to apply binding authority in rules of judicial construction. It is apparent to me that of all of the sitting judges the president has nominated, that of all of them, Justice notification statute to the relevant cases and they have refrained from legislating from the bench and placing new hurdles before young women who are already required to meet the stringent standards required by the statute.

On the other hand, you've repeatedly tried to impose new standards, standards not found in the statute, on the young women whose cases come before you. For example, you'd require young women to meet unusually high standards to prove "the direct, clear and positive," quote, proof of abuse instead of showing that the notification may lead to abuse.

Your standard is so high that four of your colleagues wrote, "Abuse is abuse. It is neither to be trifled with nor its severity to be second-guessed." Similarly, you would require a minor to exhibit an awareness of religious issues. In no place does the statute require such a showing.

So, Justice Owen, you seem to be making, not interpreting, the law. And, in fact, many might call your actions on the court activist. Can you tell the committee why, if you believe that your views reflect the plain language of the statute, you have been unable to persuade a majority of your colleagues to interpret the statute such that it includes the additional hurdles that you've grafted onto the parental-notification law?

MS. OWEN: Senator, obviously my court disagreed. We divided up initially on these cases. I -- let me go back and address the "clear, direct, positive." That was not the standard that -- the statute says "abuse may occur." And I looked for a definition of emotional abuse in another piece of the same family code. And I didn't say that you actually have to have that, but I said that's the definition of abuse if it may lead to that. That's all I was saying there.

The "clear, direct evidence" piece comes in to -- that's our standard of review as an appellate court, not in the trial court; not in the trial court. In the trial court, the burden of proof is preponderance of the evidence. And if there's some evidence to support what the trial court did, that's that.

But on appeal, if the trial court denies the minor the bypass, and even if there's no evidence to support that denial, she still must, under established law that the majority agrees with, she must still establish, by clear, direct evidence that's unequivocal as a matter of law, that she's entitled to that bypass. And a majority agrees with that. It's in our case law. That's just the standard of review, for her to establish, is a matter of law. She's entitled to it on appeal. That's not the standard that would be applied in the trial court.
SEN. KENNEDY: Well, are you saying that the four justices didn't have a different position than you had on this particular case?

MS. OWEN: I'm saying there are two different inquiries. In Doe I, I differed with the majority. I said that there are other factors that ought to be considered in deciding whether a minor is sufficiently informed. And once Doe was over, that was the standard that I applied in every case thereafter.

REV_00348766

A separate issue that we don't disagree on --

SEN. KENNEDY: These are other factors in the law? You were looking at the law and you found that there were other aspects of the law that you noticed that the other judges did notice?

MS. OWEN: I looked, again, at everything that the U.S. Supreme Court had said, that it's okay for states to include in ensuring that a minor is sufficiently well-informed to make this decision without the knowledge of either of her parents. There are factors that appear in at least three Supreme Court cases that I thought the legislature intended to reference when they used the word "sufficiently informed and mature."

And so I was looking, again, at what the U.S. Supreme Court had said in this whole area about being informed and being mature. The court did not agree with me. But after Doe I, I applied the court's standards that they pronounced. And then this "clear, direct evidence," it's not tied to the statute. That's an appellate standard that the majority agrees with. That's just -- she's not entitled to a bypass in our court unless she establishes in the record the evidence established by clear, direct, positive testimony, free from doubt, as a matter of law, she had met the standard.

SEN. KENNEDY: Well, if you had that, do you have the same ruling today as you had at that particular time? Do you still read that the way you did at that particular time?

MS. OWEN: No, Senator, I apply the -- after Doe I, in all the other Doe cases that have come up involving "mature and sufficiently well-informed," I apply the same -- I only look at the same factors that the court did. The big controversy the second time Doe came up was whether there was any evidence at all to support what the trial court did.

And I said it was a close case, but I said the trial court was actually there on the ground. He saw -- he or she saw the minor testify, judged her credibility. And I think maturity is something that's particularly hard to do from a cold record. And I said there's some evidence, even though it's close, to support what the trial court did. And under appellate standards of review, I felt I was bound to uphold what the trial court did, even though I might have ruled a different way had I been on the trial court.

SEN. KENNEDY: Madam Chair, I thank -- my time is up. I'll have a chance to examine this record further, but I'm troubled by this conclusion. Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much, Senator Kennedy. Senator DeWine.

SEN. MIKE DEWINE (R-OH): Justice Owen, thank you for being with us. I want to clarify something, to follow up on Senator Kennedy's questioning. You do now follow Roe I.

MS. OWEN: Yes. That's -- yes.

SEN. DEWINE: That is the law of Texas today.

REV_00348767

MS. OWEN: It is the law.

SEN. DEWINE: And you have followed that ever since Roe I was decided. Is that correct?

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator.

SEN. DEWINE: Now, in Roe I, both the minority and the majority were trying to decide what guidance to give the trial court.

MS. OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: Isn't that correct?

MS. OWEN: Yes. We were trying to --

SEN. DEWINE: And isn't it correct that the only dispute was what guidance to give? It wasn't a dispute over whether you were going to give guidance.

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: And, in fact, isn't it true that the majority did give guidance to the lower court?

MS. OWEN: They did.

SEN. DEWINE: And that's the guidance that you follow today.

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: There are a number of rules of construction that courts apply when interpreting a statute. Isn't it true that one of those rules is that a legislature is presumed to be aware of United States Supreme Court precedent in an area in which it has passed a statute?
MS. OWEN: That's where the standard presumption is in statutory construction.

SEN. DEWINE: Basic rule of construction, the courts will follow.

MS. OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: So in the case of the Texas parental-notification statute, the Texas court's presumption would be that the Texas legislature was, in fact, aware of Supreme Court precedent when it crafted its judicial-bypass process.

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator. And we all agreed on that. The majority agreed that that was true.

REV_00348768

SEN. DEWINE: Now, I'm looking at the end of Section -- Roman numeral IV in the Texas Supreme Court's majority opinion in the first Jane Doe case. In Section 4, your court's majority is discussing a line of U.S. Supreme Court cases on parental bypass, starting with Bellotti. Your court majority concludes, and I quote, "Our legislature was obviously aware of this jurisprudence when it drafted the statute before us," end of quote.

So you weren't alone in your conclusion that the Texas legislature drafted the parental-notification statute with the Supreme Court case in mind, were you?

MS. OWEN: No, sir.

SEN. DEWINE: The majority had the same opinion.

MS. OWEN: They did.

SEN. DEWINE: Let me really get back to basics in regard to this issue. I want to go back to the statute that was passed by the Texas legislature in this area. And I will quote from it. When a minor files this application for a bypass -- in other words, saying, "I do not want either one of my parents notified" -- and this is, in fact, a minor we're dealing with -- "When a minor files such an application, the court shall determine" -- I'm quoting from the statute -- "by a preponderance of the evidence, whether, one, the minor is mature and sufficiently well-informed to make the decision to have an abortion performed without notification to either of her parents, or, two, notification would not be in the best interest of the minor, or, three, notification may lead to physical, sexual or emotional abuse of the minor."

And the statute continues. "And if the court makes any of these determinations" -- that's my emphasis -- "any of these determinations, the court shall enter an order authorizing the minor to consent to the performance of the abortion."

So -- now, as the Supreme Court, you're not the trier of fact, are you?
MS. OWEN: No, we're not.

SEN. DEWINE: That is the lower court, the originating court.

MS. OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: And in Texas, you have three layers?

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: Okay. So before that case gets to you -- any of these, what, 10 cases, 12 cases?

MS. OWEN: Well, there were 10 girls.

REV_00348769

SEN. DEWINE: Whatever they were -- about that. Before they got to you, the trier of fact had already determined that none of these three items applied, because if any of them would have applied, the trier of fact, who was watching the witness, who was talking to the young lady, who was taking all the circumstances into consideration, if that trier of fact had found any of these three, that case never would have got to you, would it?

MS. OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: Now, is it my understanding, under Texas law, that once a lower court makes that determination, that ends the case --

MS. OWEN: That ends the case.

SEN. DEWINE: -- because there's no one to appeal the case?

MS. OWEN: That's correct. There's no one to --

SEN. DEWINE: The plaintiff has won or the person who's filing, the young lady who's filing, her lawyer, they've won the case.

MS. OWEN: And the statute specifically says there's no appeal from a grant of the bypass.

SEN. DEWINE: So before these cases get to you, the lower court has found all three or has found that none of the three apply, then an appellate court has gone through and done a review.

MS. OWEN: That would be a three-judge panel.

SEN. DEWINE: Three-judge panel. That's how it works in Texas. All right. Now, as all lawyers know and judges know, and I think many people know, when a case gets to an appellate court, such as your Supreme Court, you're not retrying that case.

JUSTICE OWEN: No, Senator, we're not.

SEN. DEWINE: And there are different standards. The majority came down with one standard. You came down with another standard of review. Those standards are not very dissimilar. Those are -- what are the basic standards?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, in terms of the factors on --

SEN. DEWINE: Yeah, what are you looking for to overturn a case? What do you have to find?

JUSTICE OWEN: On the "mature and sufficiently well-informed," there are two things. You first have to conclude that there was absolutely no evidence to support the trial court's failure to find. But then you also have to take the second step and look at the evidence and see if the minor established, from clear, direct, convincing evidence -- I may not be quoting exactly, but it's in the majority opinion -- and there's no factual dispute at all, before she's entitled to a bypass --

SEN. DEWINE: That is the law in Texas today.

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DEWINE: That, though, in a sense, is not totally dissimilar to what we have in many appellate cases, where the basic principle of law that we have in this country is that we give deference to the lower court, the trier of fact, whether it is a jury or whether it is a judge who is -- has the opportunity to watch the witness, has the opportunity to judge the demeanor of the witness on the stand, has the opportunity to take all the totality of circumstances into account, isn't that true?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. DEWINE: So I think, Madam Chairman, it seems to me that when we look at and judge these cases, these parental notification cases, it seems to me that as we see whether or not these have any bearing on this justice's qualification to sit on the federal bench, it's good for us to be mindful of the fact that all appellate courts give a great deal of deference to the lower courts, that all appellate courts understand that the trial court judge has his job or her job, and they are the ones who are looking at the witnesses. And it would seem to me that particularly when we're dealing with such a very delicate case, and a case where the understanding of the young lady involved is so important, and what -- not just she has been told but what she truly understands, that the trial court judge is in a unique position to make -- make that decision. And I think that we all should consider that as we look at these cases.

Thank you very much.
SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator DeWine. Senator Feingold, you're next.

SEN. RUSSELL FEINGOLD (D-WI): I thank the chair. Welcome, Justice Owen.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINGOLD: Justice Owen, the independence of the Texas Supreme Court has recently been attacked for allowing its law clerks to accept large bonuses, as much as $45,000 from law firms that law clerks plan to join after completing their clerkships. And the potential for a conflict of interest here is very real and serious, I think. The clerks review and express opinion on cases brought by or against the firms paying their bonuses. I'm told this issue provoked an investigation by the Travis County attorney into whether the practice violates Texas criminal law. The Texas Ethics Commission ruled last year that the bonuses could be in violation of the state's bribery laws. In response, the supreme court issued new guidelines concerning these so-called clerk perks. I'm told that you, however, defended the clerk perks and dismissed the criticism as a, quote, "political issue that is being dressed up as a good government issue," unquote. Why do you believe that this was simply a political issue and not a genuine issue of ethics, fairness and independence of the judiciary?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, I'm glad you asked that question because, first of all, my quote, I do -- I do think I said it was a political issue, I don't remember the second part of it. But let me give some background, if I may, on the entire clerk issue. First of all, the -- there -- the investigation was not of my court or any judge on the court. That was an issue between the employers and the law clerks. The court or the justices were never under any kind of scrutiny at all from the criminal law standpoint. But this is a long-standing practice that I would say many if not most federal district courts, federal circuits, and I think even some judges on the U.S. Supreme Court -- law firms around the country typically give so-called "clerkship bonuses," to their lawyers who take their first year of practice and clerk for a court, not just my court, as I said federal district courts, federal courts of appeals, U.S. Supreme Court, and nobody -- that was a practice that's been around for a long time. Every -- since -- ever since I've been at my court, I mean, everybody -- it was a clearly understood rule, and certainly a hard and fast rule in my chambers, that if you had clerked for any law firm, if you were even thinking about taking a job offer from any law firm, you were completely recused from all of their cases permanently, as long as you were an employee of the court. You don't get near that file. You didn't work on memos, or when matters touching that case were brought up in conference, you'd have to leave the conference room so that there's just no opportunity at all for a law clerk that has any connection or any potential connection as an employee with a law firm to come into contact with those files. So --

SEN. FEINGOLD: So, the clerks have recused themselves in each of the cases?

JUSTICE OWEN: They have. And we -- we -- that's a -- that's been a rule for years, as far as to my knowledge --
SEN. FEINGOLD: Let me -- I appreciate that background. Let me just return to my original question. Do you believe this is a simply political issue, or is it also a genuine issue of ethics, fairness, and independence of the judiciary?

JUSTICE OWEN: The reason I said it was a political issue is because it was only my court that was singled out, this practice -- they didn't criticize the federal courts. They didn't criticize any of the lower state courts of appeals who do it. They didn't criticize the criminal court. And they didn't criticize the U.S. Supreme Court. It was just my court that was singled out by a group who routinely issues press releases accusing my court of ethical violations.

SEN. FEINGOLD: Well let me ask you more broadly then, the broader practice, is it a -- simply a political question or is it a question of whether this creates potential problems, a legitimate question of ethics and fairness?

JUSTICE OWEN: I didn't think because of the way we always structured the clerkship program that it was an ethical issue because it was such a well-settled, long-standing practice, and because these clerks had no access whatsoever, I didn't think it was an ethical issue. The way it was resolved is, not -- again, this is mainly an issue between the employers and our clerks, not the court -- but we did say, put in new rules so that the clerks would be absolutely clear, wouldn't inadvertently get in trouble with anyone. We said -- the authorities said that if they could take the clerkships over -- their bonus over a period of a year after they leave the court. They -- it was -- it was -- they still get the bonus, it's just a question of timing.

JUSTICE OWEN: I am.

SEN. FEINGOLD: According to Alliance for Justice, in 1998, while you were a sitting justice, you lobbied then-governor George W. Bush with a private meeting with your pastor for state funds for an evangelical prison ministry program, Alpha Prison Ministries. Now, according to Jose Juarez, a law professor at St. Mary's School of Law in Texas, this conduct is in -- a violation of Cannons 1, 2, 2(a), 2(b), 4(a), 4(b), 4(c) and 5 of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct. Cannon 2(b) states that a judge, quote, "shall not lend the prestige of a judicial office to advance the private interest of the judge or others," end of quote. Cannon 4(c) states that a judge, quote, "shall not solicit funds for any educational, religious, charitable, fraternal, or civic organization," unquote. Professor Juarez concludes by stating, quote, "Any Texas judge should have known that such a meeting would violate the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct." Could you please explain why you held this meeting in violation of the letter and the spirit of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, Senator, I respectfully submit that I didn't violate any ethical code at all. I facilitated a meeting between my pastor and then-Governor Bush to ask if -- for my pastor to ask him if he would consider allowing a prison ministry, headed up by my church, in a -- in a prison. No state funds were asked for whatsoever. This -- the whole prison ministry was -- didn't cost the state any money. It was totally voluntary on the prisoners' part. They didn't get any special perks or any special treatment if they took part in the prison ministry. It was a small group of people, as I understand it -- I didn't participate -- but as I understand it, who ended up going to the women's prison in Barnett, Texas on Friday evenings for a period of I think six weeks or so to do this prison ministry. It didn't cost -- again, no funds were involved. It was simply, on Friday evenings -- again, as I understand it, (Justice ?) is here, he can give you the details if necessary, but --

SEN. FEINGOLD: So, there was no solicitation for funds at all?

JUSTICE OWEN: Absolutely none.

SEN. FEINGOLD: And that's why it's your contention that none of the cannons of ethics were violated?

JUSTICE OWEN: That, and the fact that although I am a judge, I am also a friend of then-Governor Bush, and we had discussed some of these issues, some of our respective beliefs before, and I had told him about my pastor. And I guess in my mind it was more friend-to- friend as opposed to judge-to-governor, but in either event, even if I had had my judge hat on, no fund -- no funding was involved at all. And it wasn't a lobbying effort, it was simply a -- would you consider letting us do this prison ministry?

SEN. FEINGOLD: I appreciate your answers to my questions, Justice.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Feingold. Senator Sessions is not here. Schumer, Brownback, and Senator Durbin, you're next up.

SEN. DURBIN: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Justice Owen, thank you for joining us. I have followed in the news reports a suggestion that the Texas Supreme Court has changed rather dramatically over the last 10 or 15 years. There have been suggestions that because of active political campaigns that those justices now serving on the court, at least a substantial majority, are certainly more sympathetic to business interests, and corporate interests, and insurance company interests than previous courts. In fact, some national news programs have suggested that it is nothing short of a statewide, coordinated, long-term campaign for those interests to make certain that they are well-represented on that Texas Supreme Court. Have you heard these same press reports?

JUSTICE OWEN: Certainly.
SEN. DURBIN: Do you believe they are true?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, Senator, I don't.

SEN. DURBIN: And so you would say that the court is -- how would you describe the court today?

JUSTICE OWEN: I would describe it as I think some of our colleagues in other states have described it, as a very good court. The justice -- a justice on the Massachusetts court has said when they start looking at common law issues in particular, they start with the Texas Supreme Court because our opinions are well researched and thoroughly reasoned. That's where they start.

SEN. DURBIN: And on -- on the court itself, where would you place yourself on the spectrum -- more conservative than the majority, or in the center position, or more liberal?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator Durbin, I -- I frankly don't -- I don't think it's very instructive to imply -- to apply words like conservative or liberal in terms of judging. I don't take a political viewpoint into my chambers or on to the bench when I judge cases or as I am sitting there reading the briefs.

SEN. DURBIN: Well, let me ask about a few of those cases to see if I can deduce my own conclusion from them. Let me ask you just directly, what is your position on abortion?

JUSTICE OWEN: My position is that Roe v. Wade has been the law of the land for many, many years. Now it's modified by Casey. And I -- none of my personal beliefs would get in the way of me applying that law or any other law.

SEN. DURBIN: And yet if someone were to take a look at the opinion that -- opinions that you've written on the parental notification statute in Texas, they would find, would they not, in the overwhelming majority of cases you have decided against allowing a minor to go forward with an abortion procedure under Texas law.

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator Durbin, there were -- there were only five girls that my -- my court has written on. And out of those five cases, I voted to grant the bypass in one case. And the first time that they came to the court in the other two, I voted to remand those cases to the trial court so that Jane Doe 1 and Jane Doe 2 could each get another shot at getting the bypass. And if the trial court had granted the bypasses a second time, that would have been the end of it. When the second time Doe 2 came back, I said it was a close call, but based on the record I had -- I felt like I had to go with the trial court's call. In five of the cases, as I think I talked about earlier, they came up to the court and without opinion the court affirmed the lower court. As I said, that would take at least six votes. There were not public dissents. If there had been, they would had to have -- all the judges would have had to have noted where they lined up. And I think it's a fair assumption, given -- given the amount that occurred on the other five cases that if they had been close cases we would have written on them. So, we're talk --

SEN. DURBIN: Is it not true that you've ruled against judicial bypass in every opinion you've offered -- authored, in 13 of the 14 cases you've considered on the court?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes sir, that's -- that's -- I voted in the first two cases -- I didn't say she doesn't get the bypass, I said she gets another chance to convince the trial court that she should get it --

SEN. DURBIN: Do you understand --

JUSTICE OWEN: -- and then I granted the bypass, I voted with the court with Doe 10 to outright grant the bypass.

SEN. DURBIN: Do you understand the timeliness of the decisions that the courts are making in these cases?

JUSTICE OWEN: The timeliness?

SEN. DURBIN: Yes.

JUSTICE OWEN: As soon as they come in, we drop everything and deal with these.

REV_00348775

Owen is the most outstanding nominee.

She is, in my estimation, the best that every American, every consumer and every parent could hope for. Her opinions, whether majority concurrences or dissents, could be used as a law school textbook that illustrates exactly how and not what an appellate judge should think, how she should write, and just how she should do the people justice by effecting their will through the laws adopted by their elected legislatures.

Justice Owen clearly approaches these tasks with both scholarship and mainstream American common sense. She does not substitute her views for the legislature's, which is precisely the type of judge that the Washington groups who oppose her normally want.

She is precisely the kind of judge that our first two presidents, George Washington and John Adams, had in mind when they agreed that the justices on the state supreme courts would provide the most learned candidates for the federal bench. So in studying her record, the second reason for the militant and deceptive opposition to Justice Owen became quite plain to me. In this world turned upside-down, simply put, she is that good.

Another reason for the opposition against Justice Owen is the most demagogic, the issue of campaign contributions and campaign finance reform. Some of her critics are even eager to tie her to the current trouble with Enron, while she clearly has nothing to do with that. Neither Enron nor any other corporation has donated to her campaigns. In fact, they are forbidden by Texas law to make campaign contributions in judicial elections.

Despite the politics, I am certain that Justice Owen is quite eager to address this issue fully. And, being a Texas woman, I trust she will not embarrass the questioner too badly; not that there is a need for more questions. The Enron and campaign contributions questions were amply clarified in a letter to Chairman Leahy and the committee dated April 5th by Alberto Gonzales, the White House counsel.

I ask, Madam Chairman, to place this and other related letters into the record at this point.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: So ordered.

SEN. HATCH: And I would place into the record a retraction from the New York Times saying that they got the facts wrong on this Enron story. Such retractions don't come often, although the misstatement of facts by the destroyer groups do. So I would ask unanimous consent that that go in the record.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection.
SEN. HATCH: I also hope that Justice Owen will get a chance to address her views on election reform and judicial reform, of which she is the leading advocate in Texas. She is also a leader in gender-bias reform in the courts and a reformer on divorce and child-support proceedings. I hope she will have an opportunity to address these matters and about her acclaimed advocacy to

REV_00348731

SEN. DURBIN: And remanding them for another court review --

JUSTICE OWEN: It's within two days. We told them that you've got two business days under the statute to resolve it.

SEN. DURBIN: In Jane Doe 2, you wrote in your concurrence, "the court has omitted any requirement that a trial court find an abortion to be in the best interest of the minor." The law says that the notification has to be in the best interest of the minor. Could you tell me where you came up with the notion that the legislature required that the abortion be in the best interest of the minor?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes sir, I can. The -- that's directly out of the U.S. Supreme Court case that said we construe notification to mean notif -- that -- I'm sorry, notification, best interest to mean that abortion without notification is in the best interest, and it's straight out of a majority opinion from the U.S. Supreme Court.

SEN. DURBIN: I find in each of these cases, though, that you have tended to expand and embellish on the state legislative decision in Texas. Now, Senator Gramm, your sponsor, one of your sponsors today, has said that he thinks the Texas legislature was trying to take three sides on a two-sided issue. That's a statement that's fairly critical of this legislature. Clearly, they have taken a position, and I take it from what you've said to us today that these court decisions, where you consistently find problems with the Texas parental notification statute, you're saying don't reflect any opposition on your part to a woman's right to choose?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, Senator, I don't think they do. Again, the -- the exact language that's in the statute, best interest, that exact same language was construed by the U.S. Supreme Court to mean that the abortion without notification was in the best interest. Sir, I followed what the U.S. Supreme Court had construed that to mean. And I thought that was a reasonable construction given that the legislature had taken the language out of -- if not that very case, it may have been that very case --

SEN. DURBIN: I'll have to say that I've been on this committee for a few years, and the issue of judicial activism has arisen when there were Republican chairs and Democratic chairs. And I have come to conclude that it is in the eye of the beholder that Republicans only want judges who are actively pursuing their agenda, and Democrats only want judges actively pursuing their agenda. I don't think it is an objective standard that is being used here. And so the term is being used back and forth here.

What I am looking for really are some fundamentals in terms of your philosophy. I believe the president has a right to fill vacancies. But I also believe the people of this country, and certainly the people in this circuit that you are aspiring to, deserve judges who are going to be moderate and centrist, and try to be reasonable and balanced in their decision-making.

Let me go to a specific case, if I can for a moment.

REV_00348776

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, before we leave this area, can I make one point on this activist in this whole area of a woman's right to choose? Two cases that have come before my court that I would like you to be aware of -- one, I believe it was Sepulveda v. Krishnan. In that case the question was can a mother and a mother recover damages for the death of a fetus. And I think you can see the implications in all this debate over that particular issue. And my court had for many years construed the Texas wrongful death statute and the survival statute to say, no, you cannot recover for the death of a fetus. We were asked to reconsider that construction, and we pointed out that the vast majority of states now allow recovery in those circumstances. But I agreed with the majority that, no, that had been Texas law. We are not going to change it. You cannot recover for the death of a fetus. That's the law in Texas.

SEN. DURBIN: I'm sorry to interrupt you, but I have very little time here, and if you'd like to submit something along that point of view, I'll be happy to consider it.

I want to go to one specific case though, the Provident American case -- versus Castenada -- do you remember it?

JUSTICE OWEN: I do.
SEN. DURBIN: I read this case, and read your decision, and I often wondered how a court could come down, as you did, writing a majority opinion here in a case involving coverage on a health insurance plan where frankly the insurance company decided to try to find anything it could in its policy to avoid paying for a critical surgery that was needed by this family. In fact, you came down and found on the side of the insurance company, and said that there was an exclusion out of their policy. The dissent that was written in this case by Justice Raoul Gonzalez I think went to great lengths to point out facts that you chose to ignore. You said the court sustains -- let me find this -- the court ignores important evidence that supports the judgment, emphasizing evidence and indulging inferences contrary to the verdict -- resolves all conflicts in the evidence against the verdict for the family that was denied coverage. And it goes on to say, "I want to recite the facts the court chooses to ignore in its decision."

The reason I raise this issue -- and Justice Gonzalez was very forthright in believing that this was a slam-duck for the insurance company, that they got an opinion from you that he didn't believe was sustained by the policy or the evidence. In fact, he said he thought with your opinion you were destroying the bad faith tort in the state of Texas.

Going back to my original point, I think it is fairly well known that the Texas Supreme Court is much more conservative today than it once was, that it was an all-out effort by major corporations and by insurance companies to try to build a majority on that court. And as I read this decision, sometimes it's hard for me to imagine how someone in good faith can look at the facts as in this case and basically say to a family, after they had preapproval for a surgery, that an insurance company could come in and say no, we are not going to cover, and then have a Supreme Court in Texas stand behind them, and say to the family, You're out of luck -- they found a little provision in the policy here -- you're not covered. This troubles me, because frankly that kind of a finding reflects a philosophy that does not tell me there is a well balanced approach here. And certainly Justice Gonzalez felt the same in his dissent. And I invite you to comment.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you, senator, I really do appreciate the opportunity, because this case was not about coverage. They were covered. The only dispute here was bad faith. These people were covered under their policy. They got their attorney's fees for breach of contract, and they got either 12 percent or 18 percent penalty under the statute -- I can't remember which one applied at the time. They lost on the coverage question -- no doubt about it. That was not the issue in front of my court.

The issue was whether in addition to their coverage -- their full policy limits, plus attorney's fees, plus the penalty -- could they recover extra contractual damages for bad faith? And the standard there is that the insurance company had absolutely no reasonable basis whatsoever to deny the coverage. And the facts in this case were the family had two children who had been jaundiced all of their lives. They called up an insurance company and applied for a policy, after their uncle had told them that he had a hereditary blood disease called HS. The policy had a 30-day waiting period, and they didn't disclose to the insurance company anything about the hereditary disease. Three days after -- or maybe it was two --

SEN. DURBIN: Three.

JUSTICE OWEN: Three days after the 30 days had run they took their children to a physician who on the spot diagnosed this hereditary disease and removed their -- I believe it was their spleen. So the question was under those circumstances -- not should the insurance -- could they deny coverage? -- but is there any reasonable basis for them to delay in paying policy limits? And we have said under all those circumstances that you can't say that there was no reasonable basis to delay. But they were covered. That was not the issue.

SEN. DURBIN: I could tell you that -- I think we are carping on a trifle here as to whether they're covered. The fact was the insurance company approved the surgery, did they not, before it took place?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes.

SEN. DURBIN: And the fact is the insurance company then refused to pay. And you were arguing in your majority opinion here on behalf of the insurance company that waiting the three days after the 30-day period was not enough; that these -- that this family was deceiving the insurance company -- was operating in bad faith. And I think Justice Gonzalez and Justice Specter (ph) make a compelling argument here that the facts just don't come up that way. I have represented insurance companies. I have represented plaintiffs. You were the answer to the insurance company's prayer if you would buy this argument, if you would turn on a company -- turn on a family that is facing this kind of peril and make this kind of interpretation. And that is what troubles me about what you are asking for, is to be elevated to a court where you can make significant decisions involving insurance companies and major corporations, which I am afraid if you follow the logic, as you did in the Provident case, would not be in the best interests of serving the people and the court. Thank you for being here. Thank you, Madam Chair.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you very much. I don't see other senators here at the moment, but I thought I might just say something. I am deeply concerned, because I've read all the Doe cases, and I've read the notification law. And the notification law is pretty straightforward. One, the minor is mature, sufficiently well informed to make the decision to have an abortion performed without notification to either of her parents or managing conservator or guardian; or the notification would not be the best interests of the minor; or notification may lead to physical, sexual or emotional abuse of the minor. That's it's. And any one of the three factors has to be present. That's it. It seems to me on that basis you make a decision. But you really haven't done that. You've looked in other places, it seems to me, to find a rationale not to do what the Texas law called for -- you know, invoking a religious implication, invoking concern about the fetus, invoking, Well, the emotional wrongdoing was just threatened by the parents -- it may not have happened. It seemed to me that you -- maybe this is what being an activist means -- that you worked to come out where you came out in your opinion. And that's a very deep concern, because if the Texas legislature wanted to change "may" to "must," they could have. They could have said, "notification must lead to physical, sexual, or emotional abuse of the minor," but they didn't. They said it "may," which means it either may or may not. And this I find troubling.

Now, I had some Texas lawyers come to me who were consumer lawyers. And they said their concern was they didn't believe they could ever get a fair shot in your courtroom. And that was in ten years of serving on this committee no one has ever said that before. And the case that Senator Durbin just raised, which I was going to mention as well, the fact is that there was a judgment. The fact is that the family was entitled to coverage. But your invalidation of the trial verdict completely threw out their entire reward. And, again -- I mean, the law is there for little people. This is the remedy for little people, not for the providence of the world certainly have the right to be taken at face value. But what disturbs me is it's in so many places in these notification cases, in these health benefit cases, in other consumer related cases, in the Searcy (ph) case. These are people very much harmed, and their redress was cut off. Could you respond to that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, senator, I would like to. You know, there are a lot of cases that come before our court that I think tug at all of our hearts strings. And that's part of being a judge sometimes. But, again, I have committed and have got to apply the law, and there are guiding principles in contracts, in the bad faith area and other areas that have to dictate what the law says. Again, in the Castaneda case, let me emphasize it was not about their insurance coverage. They won on the coverage issue. They got all of their policy benefits. They recovered attorney's fees. There's a statutory penalty in Texas if the insurance company doesn't timely pay -- and I am assuming that they recovered that statutory penalty. The issue in my court was not policy benefits. The issue in my court was do they get extra contractual benefits for bad faith, which is a common law tort or sometimes it's brought under a statute, Article 2121. So we weren't -- it was not a coverage issue. They did get their policy benefits.

On the parental notification cases, let me make clear that I never advocated in my opinion or anywhere else that a young girl has to have religious beliefs of any type at all. I -- you know, I said, as the U.S. Supreme Court has said, these are weighed decisions, and that a minor ought to exhibit some awareness that there are philosophical, and moral, and religious issues out there. And I hasten to add if she doesn't have any, it's not an inquiry what they are -- simply that if she has those beliefs, has she thought about them, has she considered them? Has she considered the philosophical and social and moral arguments whether she agreed with them or not? Just an awareness that they exist. She doesn't have to adhere to any particular viewpoint. She doesn't have to explain or justify her viewpoint or her philosophy or her moral stance, or whether she has religious beliefs. The U.S. Supreme Court has said, and I tried to apply that, that it simply -- she needs to exhibit some awareness as a mature person, an adult -- you would hope an adult would exhibit - that there are at least these arguments out there on both sides, and that she's aware of both sides -- not that she agrees with it or again has to justify any of this.

And, again, the -- I really do -- I did think that given that the legislature had lifted word for word what mature and sufficiently well informed meant, best interests and all of this out of a statute that had been -- from another state that had been approved by the U.S. Supreme Court, that they were trying to adhere to all of that precedent. And sooner -- I think it's hard. If I were a trial judge and I was told, Well, decide if she's mature -- decide if she's sufficiently well informed -- well, without some guidance I think you are going to get varying results around the state, What does that mean? So I think it was necessary for my court to speak, so that girls in West Texas wouldn't be held to a different standard that girls in East Texas were. My court ultimately -- I didn't totally agree with the majority on every aspect, but I did my best to adhere to what I thought the legislature intended. It was not anti anything, it was not activism. Once the court made its decision in Doe, those are the factors, and I abide by that.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Well, I believe that this completes the testimony. Is there any -- I am going to adjourn the hearing, and we have two other --

SEN. : (Off mike.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Oh, we have more people coming? I would recess for the vote then and go down and vote, and just ask you to forbear, if you don't mind.

JUSTICE OWEN: Okay, not at all, senator.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: So we'll take a brief recess. Thanks everybody. (Sounds gavel.)

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

(Recess.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: (Sounds gavel.) The hearing will reconvene. And next on the list, Senator Schumer, then Brownback, Cantwell, and Edwards.

REV_00348780

JUSTICE OWEN: Madam Chair? Before we proceed, can I amend an answer?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Certainly. Go right ahead.

JUSTICE OWEN: It was regarding the Provident American v. Castaneda case. I remembered that it was the only issue in front of my court was bad faith, and I had thought -- I incorrectly remembered -- I just assumed that they had won on the contract claim in the trial court, and that was not in front of us. I was right that the contract --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Are you talking about Castaneda now?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: All right.
JUSTICE OWEN: I was right that the contract claim was not in front of us. They never pled breach of contract or asked for any refindings on breach of contract. They only sued on a bad faith denial of the claim. So I was wrong. It was incorrect -- I had not read the case in quite a while -- that I said that they recovered their contract damages. They just never pled that. They were seeking solely a so-called bad faith claim under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act and under the insurance code. They were statutory claims -- not under the policy but so-called extracontractual claims.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. And but they did not get the extra contractual claims?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct, they did not get the extra contractual --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: But they did get the surgery paid for?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, that's my -- I thought they did, but they never pled --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: They did not?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, because they never asked or pled for policy benefits under the contract.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: So then they got nothing?

JUSTICE OWEN: They -- as it ended up, because they didn't ask or plead in the trial court, or ask for the jury to find breach of contract of the policy, we didn't have that in front of us, so we couldn't grant that for them. In other words --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Didn't the trial court grant it?

JUSTICE OWEN: No, senator, they never pled it. They went solely on noncontractual claims. They never pled in the trial court, or asked the jury to find if the insurance company owed the policy benefits under the policy. And I don't know why that was. And I had just assumed that the only thing that they had -- I assumed they had gotten the contract benefits, because I knew the only issue in front of us was bad faith. But as I reread -- someone handed me the opinion during the break, and they just didn't ever raise the contract claims in the trial court. SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you for clearing that up. Appreciate it.

Senator Schumer?

SEN. SCHUMER: Thank you, Madam Chairwoman, and I very much appreciate the opportunity to testify. And thank you, Judge Owen.

Before I get into what I want to ask you, I did want to make a few points in reference to what Senator Hatch said in his opening remarks. Unfortunately, he's not here. I tried to make them while he was here, but -- so he knows I am going to make them.

Three points. First, you know, let's try to keep this debate at a reasonable level. Senator Hatch keeps saying "left-wing pressure groups," "left-wing pressure groups." I don't hear anything about right-wing pressure groups or moderate pressure groups. There are a whole bunch of groups that support Judge Owen's nomination. They are doing their civic duty, but anybody who opposes it is a "left-wing ideological pressure group." Enough of that. That kind of foolishness should not go on in this committee room or anywhere else. Let's be fair about it. There are groups on both sides pushing everybody, and we are all independent and have to make our own decisions -- we may be influenced by them on one side of the aisle or the other. But this idea that the only pressure groups are from the left is a joke.

Second, related. Senator Hatch talked about something that I agree with, which is well, we are picking -- we are looking for little personal things about people, and they are going to put you through the wringer -- "Welcome to Washington," he said to you, judge. I am aghast. After eight years of them looking and turning President Clinton, his family, and everyone who worked for him inside-out about every single issue under the sun, now all of a sudden it's, "Welcome to Washington." Again, what's good -- I don't believe in it on either side, but let's have some semblance of fairness about this.

About not nominating women? What a canard. What kind of argument is that? I mean, I don't think anybody can -- anything -- any cursory look at what this committee has done has stood up to that. We have on the floor voted for 12 women. My guess is that's about as high a percentage in terms of the gender as the men who were sent to us. How about not voting for anyone who is pro life? My guess is of the 78 judges I voted for, the majority are pro life in this session. So let's cut out the games. Let's not try to beat people up with two- by-fours with specious arguments. Let's have a real discussion about what makes a good judge. And we'll have differing views on that, and that's fair, and that's why we have a Senate. But, I'll tell you, I'm not going to be bamboozled by arguments like that, and I don't think anybody should be. And I just wanted the record to show that. I thought that kind of hyperbole is not fair.

REV_00348782

Okay, now to Judge Owen -- oh, and one other point, which I'll -- I'm glad Senator Hatch is here --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: You just missed it. (Laughter.)

SEN. SCHUMER: Sorry.

SEN. HATCH: Is he running me down again? (Laughter.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: -- responding.
SEN. SCHUMER: I'm just responding.

SEN. HATCH: That's what we call it now? (Laughter.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: You're terrible.

SEN. SCHUMER: He is. But he's a nice guy. He is truly a nice guy.

SEN. HATCH: Not nearly as terrible -- (laughter) --

SEN. SCHUMER: His arguments are not as nice as he is. In any case, the other point that Senator Hatch made which I'll address as I address you, (Justice ?) Owen, is, What kind of questions are legitimate to ask and not ask to a candidate for a high lifetime position?

But let me say this to you, Judge Owen, and then I am going to make some statements and ask some questions, and weave them in together. Last week we had the pleasure to meet privately, and when we talked I told you I've had I think since I've come here three standards in terms of nominating, choosing, voting for judges. They are excellence -- legal excellence, moderation -- I don't like judges too far left, too far right -- and diversity -- I don't think the bench should be all white males. I don't think there's any question about your legal excellence. You've had a distinguished academic and professional career in the ABA, whose ratings reviews the nominee's legal excellence no more, no less, has rated you well qualified with good reason -- I think anyone who has listened to even 10 minutes of this hearing today has no doubt about the excellence in terms of the quality of your legal knowledge and your intelligence, your articulateness, et cetera.

On the diversity front, the population of the Fifth Circuit, the court you have been nominated to, the population within the body of the Fifth Circuit is the most racially diverse in the country -- even more so than in the Fourth Circuit. And President Clinton -- let the record just show -- made three nominations to that circuit, two of whom were Latino -- there is a large Latino population within the Fifth Circuit, namely in your home state of Texas -- none of them received confirmation hearings. So one of the reasons we don't have diversity on this court is that reason. But, obviously, in terms of gender diversity, you get an A-plus.

The third standard is moderation, and that's really where I have concerns, and that's where my focus will be. Now, there is some idea out there that all of a sudden has sort of taken root among people of a particular ideology I might add that you can look deep into space and divine the correct legal interpretation of a statute, that we all would come out with the same -- in the same exact place, that our ideology has nothing to do with how we interpret the law. We all know that's bunk. It's obvious when you look at any court. Judges bring their experiences, their biases, their ideology to the table when they decide cases. Whether it happens consciously or subconsciously, we know it happens. If it didn't, why would Justices Scalia and Thomas come out exactly almost the same way on so many cases -- so different than, say, Justice Breyer and Justice Ginsburg? If it was -- if ideology made no difference, the number of times -- they are all very smart people, they are all great lawyers -- the number of times that Scalia would agree with Thomas would be about the same as the number he agreed with every one of the judges.

Look at the nominees that Presidents Reagan and Bush made to the court versus the nominees that President Clinton made to the court. How come they all seem to vote so similarly? It's because ideology does matter. We all know it. This administration knows it. How come they haven't sent up a single so-called liberal judge? If they were just looking for legal excellence, they'd send some judges from the left, some judges from the center, some judges from the right. The president said it himself. He said he wanted to send judges up in the mold of Scalia and Thomas. I give him credit for honesty. He's doing that. Whether that's good for the country or not, is the debate at least that I have chose to engage in over the last few years that we have been here.

That happens on your -- it happened in the Texas Supreme Court as well. You and Judge Hecht have frequently come down on the same side on the Texas Supreme Court. It's not accident. It's not simply that you went to the same law school, read the same law books. Philosophically you're in the same place -- similar places. So this idea that ideology shouldn't matter, that we shouldn't ask questions about someone's judicial philosophy, which is what my good friend from Utah said, I think is so, so wrong, that it is almost hard to -- hard to accept if you look at it in any way at all. And my guess is if we looked at the way my good friend from Utah voted on judges over the last years he's been in office, and the way I voted on judges -- we'd agree on most of them, because we agree on most judges as we vote. But it's clear that his philosophy would dictate he voted against certain judges and for others, and I probably did the mirror image, because our philosophy does influence how we vote. We are just not simply interpreting the legal excellence of the mind. I do agree with him, as I said before you came in, that I don't like this gotcha stuff. I think that's become a substitute for all of this. But how come it is when there is a Republican nominee it's the Democrats who focus on the gotcha stuff, and when it's a Republican -- when it's a Democratic nominee it's the Republicans who focus on the gotcha stuff? Again, if we weren't doing ideology -- whether someone smoked marijuana in college or went to some bookshop and got a certain book or movie, the votes should be evenly dispersed throughout the political spectrum. It's not, because it's sort of a kabuki game.

Well, what I've tried to do in the year that I've been chairman of the Court Subcommittee is bring some level -- at least I would call it -- of honesty to the debate. Let's admit that ideology should play a role. Let's ask those questions. I think it's my obligation to ask those questions. And I'll tell you I am the opposite of Senator Hatch. Any judge who doesn't answer questions about their philosophy, their views on the First, or Second or Fourth Amendments, should not be put in such an important and august position where there is a lifetime appointment. So let me --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator, your significant treatise took 10 minutes and 32 seconds.

SEN. SCHUMER: May I ask one question?
SEN. HATCH: Could I as a point of personal privilege just make one note for the record? I only voted against one Clinton judge out of the 378 that we passed --

SEN. SCHUMER: Bet it wasn't --

SEN. HATCH: So I hardly used ideology --

SEN. SCHUMER: Bet it wasn't a conservative.

SEN. HATCH: Well, I don't know what it was, to be honest with you, other than I didn't feel it was right.

SEN. SCHUMER: Could I ask one question, Madam Chair?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. One question, and then we go to Senator Sessions.

SEN. SCHUMER: Okay. So here is my question, and maybe if we have a second round I'd like to ask some specific ones. I did not intend to take that long, but this is a subject that excites me.

Now, let us assume, because I think choice is a very legitimate issue for us to question judges on, and so I'd like to know your views. And here's the way I would phrase it. It's 1965. You are sitting in the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief Justice Warren comes into your chambers with a copy of the opinion in Griswold v. Connecticut, the seminal case that held there is a right to privacy in the Constitution. He asks for your thoughts on the opinion. Now, there is no law to follow right now, but he is asking for your opinion in terms of everything that has been part of you. What do you tell him? Do you agree with the holding? Do you agree with the outcome, but get there in a different way? In other words, that there is a constitutional right to privacy, the penumbra of which extends to at least the first two trimesters of a woman's pregnancy -- what do you tell Judge Griswold?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, senator, again, I responded somewhat to this question before, but I can assure you that nothing in my personal views on any topic has influenced or would influence my ability to read the U.S. Supreme Court precedent and to apply it. And, frankly, I don't --

SEN. SCHUMER: But this time there was no precedent. That's why I am asking you the question as I did -- improve legal services and funding for the poor.

All of these are aspects of her record her detractors would have us ignore. I don't know about my other colleagues, but I certainly did not read these positive attributes in those fancy documents, or, should I say, booklets released over the past several weeks by the People for the American Way and their co-conspirators in the Washington special-interest lobby.

I ask, Madam Chairman, to place in the record letters from the leaders of the Legal Society and 14 past presidents of the Texas Bar Association, many of whom are Democrats. So I ask unanimous consent for that as well.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Without objection.

SEN. HATCH: The fourth reason for the opposition to Justice Owen is the most disturbing to me. For some months now, a few of my Democrat colleagues have strained to point out when they believe they're voting for judicial nominees that they believe to be pro-life.

I have disputed this when they have said it is because the record contains no such information of personal views from the judges we have confirmed. Each time they assert it, my staff has scoured the transcript of hearings and turned up nothing. What does turn up is that each time my colleagues have asserted this, they have done so only for nominees who are men.

I'm afraid that the main reason Justice Owen is being opposed is not that personal views, namely on the issue of abortion, are being false ascribed to her -- they are -- but rather because she is a woman in public life who is believed to have personal views that some maintain should be unacceptable for a woman in public life to have.

Such penalization is a matter of the greatest concern to me, because it represents, in my opinion, a new glass ceiling for women jurists. And they have come too far to suffer now, having their feet bound up just as they approach the tables of our high courts after long struggling careers.

I am deeply concerned that such treatment will have a chilling effect on women jurists that will keep them from weighing in on exactly the sorts of cases that (must?) invite their participation and their perspectives as women. Ironically, the truth is that the cases that her detractors point to as proof of apparently unacceptable personal views are a series of fictions. This is what I mean about exposing the misstatements of the left-wing activist groups in Washington. I will illustrate just three of these fictions.
The first sample fiction is the now often-cited comment attributed to then-Texas Supreme Court Justice Alberto Gonzales, written in a case opinion, that Justice Owen's dissent signified an unconscionable act of judicial activism. Someone should do a story about how often this little shibboleth has been repeated in the press and in several web sites of the professional smear groups. I would venture that some of my colleagues have it on the first page of their briefing memos even now.

JUSTICE OWEN: But I don't see it as my role as a judge on the Supreme Court of Texas or as an intermediate judge to delve into decisions and critique them or say this was wrong in the law or this was right on the law. And, frankly, when I have read those decisions, that's not the way I approached them as a lawyer, and that's not the way I've approached them as a judge: Are they right on the law? Are they wrong on the law? I have always approached them with trying to figure out what did they say in these opinions. What was the basis for their opinion? And how does that play out in the factual situation that either my client when I was a lawyer has or now as a judge in the case before me?

SEN. SCHUMER: Judge Owen, being on the Texas Supreme Court, certainly being on the Fifth Circuit -- as you know, the Supreme Court only deals with about 75 cases a year. You are going to be asked when you are a judge questions like this every day. To say -- to duck the question -- and that is what you did -- and I am not trying to surprise you. My staff told the people in the Justice Department I would ask you this very question. I don't think it's fair to us. I don't think it's fair to me. I don't think it's fair to the 19 million people I represent in New York. I want to know your opinion. This was a case where there was very little precedent that was directly relevant. The Supreme Court made a decision that is still with us in terms of its controversy, in terms of the heat that it generates on both sides. I think the American people, the people of the Fifth Circuit are entitled to know how you would advise Judge Griswold on that opinion, because it shows your view, something very important about whether you think there's a constitutional right to privacy, how far you think it extends, et cetera. And this is a case that's already been decided, but it can tell us how you think, and where you come down. And I don't think your answer -- I understand that you do that, but on the Texas Supreme Court, I'm -- you're much more familiar with it than I am, you have to make decisions like this all the time. You certainly will on the Fifth Circuit.

So I'd ask you again, can you give me something more specific rather than telling me that your methodology is not to answer questions like that?

MS. OWEN: Well, let me -- let me tell you --

SEN. SCHUMER: Because you'd have to answer them when you sat on the court, when you wrote opinions, when you agreed with the majority opinion, when you've dissented, and you've done it, and we all know you've done it.

MS. OWEN: But I don't approach decision-making that way. I've never -- I'm not asked to come in -- in a vacuum and say "well, what do you think" --

SEN. SCHUMER: Well, I'm not giving you a vacuum question.

MS. OWEN: Well --

SEN. SCHUMER: I'm giving you the specific facts of the case. I mean, we've talked a lot about parental consent. I mean, I'm sure you've read the Griswold decision.

REV_00348786

MS. OWEN: Yes, I have.

SEN. SCHUMER: Okay.
MS. OWEN: (Inaudible) --

SEN. SCHUMER: I'm asking -- all right, okay. Well, it's an important decision, even in terms of talking about parental consent. Obviously you're dealing with a different constitution here, Texas versus the United States, but you have to be able to tell us more than this is not the way I think. I mean --

MS. OWEN: Well, I was going --

SEN. SCHUMER: -- I just don't --

MS. OWEN: -- to expand on my answer, but when --

SEN. SCHUMER: (Inaudible.)

MS. OWEN: -- you say that that's the way -- you're going to have to think that way, and I respectfully --

SEN. SCHUMER: No, I'm asking you --

SEN. HATCH (?): Senator Schumer, let the lady answer the question. You've asked her --

SEN. SCHUMER: Well, I'm just trying -- okay, go ahead.

MS. OWEN: The way I would approach that case, had I been on the court then, is the same way that I approach constitutional issues today, and that is I read everything that the U.S. Supreme Court has written up to that point on the issue. And frankly, Senator, I don't know, I didn't read the briefs in Griswold, and I'm frankly so influenced by the existing body of law that we've had the right to privacy for so many years, my court has recognized a right to privacy under the Texas Constitution, I think it's kind of hard at this point for me to erase all of that out of my mind and put myself back in their shoes without -- without all of this case law that's come down the pipe, and not having the benefit of the briefs or (arguments ?) how would you have written, were you writing on a clean slate -- it's very difficult for me to write on a clean slate when I have all of this historical law now out there. And again, I don't write on a clean slate when I answer constitutional issues.

SEN. SCHUMER: What I'd like to do, because I know my time is up and I appreciate the indulgence, Madam Chairperson, is I'd like to submit some written questions that specifically ask some of these things and see if we can get a more specific answer, and give you a little time maybe to review the case law, whatever you would have to review, as if you were being a judge on the case, in some sense.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Schumer. Senator Sessions, you're next up.
SEN. SESSIONS: Justice Owen, you recognize Griswold to be the law and would follow it?

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator.

SEN. SESSIONS: And if called upon to apply its principles, you would apply them in your decision-making process?

MS. OWEN: Absolutely.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think you handled this precisely right. And I'm sorry Senator Schumer was unhappy with your answer, but you were -- you handled it precisely like a judge should answer it. How should you -- how could you be expected to put yourself back into that circumstance, without having read all the briefs, without having studied the law carefully, and to render an opinion on a case of that importance. I note Senator Schumer left, and recently he complimented Justice Hugo Black of the Supreme Court on his views on the Constitution, and, of course, Hugo Black dissented in Griswold (sp). So, these things are of interest in -- I guess fun to talk about, but in reality, as a person who is being considered for a judgeship, I think you demonstrated the right characteristics in a judge, that is to be cautious not to express opinions until you've fully studied all the briefs, all the law involved, as your record demonstrates you do so skillfully.

And I would just note that your testimony has been extraordinary. I have been very impressed with your command of the cases you've handled, the hundreds that you've handled. I've been very impressed with your ability to articulate your thoughts in a reasoned and fair way. I see no hint of extremism or activism or some obsession with forcing some political agenda on anybody -- not one hint of it. And it's disturbing, actually, to have those comments being made. I just don't believe there's one hint of it.

Justice Owen, I've been also impressed, as Senator Gramm and Senator Hatch noted, that you came at this service to the Supreme Court of Texas because of a desire to serve. It cost you, I'm sure, financially significantly. You have won reelection with 84 percent of the vote. The American Bar Association, who this committee insisted must have a bigger role than they've had in recent years, and in the process has unanimously rated you well qualified -- that's the highest rating you can get -- and a unanimous vote for well qualified is very rare. And they had the opportunity to study your record. They've had -- they've seen you on the bench. And they've talked to your former law partners. They've talked to lawyers who have litigated against you. They know your reputation and your ability, and I think they made a well and a wise choice in rating you well qualified unanimously. I must -- I have to be impressed with your academic record -- number two or three in your class, the -- made the highest score on the bar exam. What an accomplishment that is in a big state like Texas particularly. So, I just think you have so much to be proud of, and I particularly like your demeanor and the way you've handled yourself under some of the questions that have been brought forward.

And I also note, it seems to me that you've not been just a potted plant, you have been a reformer in your life on the law about the rule of law. Tell me how you feel about the responsibility of a judge or a public official -- what is their responsibility about defending and strengthening the rule of law in America?

MS. OWEN: Well, I think that's the ultimate responsibility, is to defend and strengthen the rule of law in America. I think we all understand that our society is built on laws, and that that is what basically orders our society -- that helps us plan, that helps us have predictability. It helps us have stability. It helps us know that cases won't be decided randomly based on sympathy or passion or when they should be decided another way under the law. So I think the rule of law is very important, that it's consistently and fairly, but with common sense, applied in every case.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well now is that why when you are asked to rule on a case you just don't spout off the answer as some would have you do in this hearing -- but is that why go back and you take the Texas statute on notification, parental notification, and then you know that it passed during a time in which they were considering the Supreme Court ruling as they tried to craft a statute for Texas? Is that why you went back and studied the U.S. Supreme Court cases to try to understand what Texas was trying to do so that you could give a fair and objective answer as to what the statute really meant and what the legislature intended?

MS. OWEN: Yes, Senator -- (inaudible) -- if I could explain this, maybe I have not done a very good job of it yet, but when the legislature used the words "mature and sufficiently well informed," that could mean a lot of different things to different judges all across Texas. And so given that that was of a Morpheus (?) definition, I thought where did they come up with these words? What did -- what definition did they have in their minds when they picked these words? And then when I went and read the Supreme Court cases that they pulled the exact language out of, I looked at how did the U.S. Supreme Court define informed? What did they say is relevant to an informed consent? How did they define informed consent? And I believed that the legislature was looking to the cases out of which it picked the words mature and sufficiently well informed, for us to glean what the actual definition was, what the factors that courts were to consider in deciding if someone was making an informed decision.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think that's what a great jurist does, and I think you've handled that -- you did it exactly right. That's precisely what should be done.

You know, you -- my -- looking at your background, I see a person who's worked hard to reform and improve the system. As Senator McConnell noted, your voluntary limiting your contribution, he did not mention the fact that after you had a relatively easy race last time, you gave back one-third of the contributions. I don't know anybody in this body that's ever done that, and that's a remarkable thing indeed.

I noticed that you work hard to encourage the Texas legislature to secure more legal service funding for the poor, and were successful in that?

REV_00348789

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes sir. We were particularly hard hit in Texas when legal funding for LSC, the Legal Services Corporation, nationwide was cut back. Texas kind of got a double whammy. Not only were our traditional legal services officers cut back in budget, but Texas has a large migrant worker population and funding for the migrant workers was particularly hard hit. And a lot of people, including me, were concerned that the basic infrastructure through which legal services to the poor were delivered in Texas was going to collapse because we were that close to the line. So, we had to look for ways to put more money in the system to keep the professionals who were involved in through the backbone of the delivery system in place, because if we lost that, we would not be able to anywhere come near meeting the legal services needs of the poor in Texas. And so a group of folks, not just me, certainly, I was the court's liaison and was involved in it, but explored ways that we could get more funds, and ultimately the legislature passed a statute that put more money into legal services for the poor.

SEN. SESSIONS: And I noticed you helped organize Family Law 2000, a conference, an effort to educate parents about the effects of divorce on children. I have heard a lot of people in the know in the legal system express concern that too often a divorce proceeding becomes an adversarial gladiator sport, and that children are hurt unnecessarily in the process. Is that what you were dealing with there?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, Senator. I did not practice family law, but when I got to the court it was clear to me that 51 percent of the civil cases in Texas are family law matters, and that's sort of where the rubber hits the road, if you will, for most citizens in Texas. And they almost, you know, so many people have experience with the family law court, and a lot of lawyers and a lot of family law judges and psychologists have -- (AUDIO BREAK) -- that this is a -- that the adversarial process is really hard on the children, and that sometimes lawyers escalate the process. Sometimes the way the laws are designed -- (AUDIO BREAK) -- to the point of maybe really restructuring the way legal services are delivered, the family laws, to try to make this more a unified approach to divorces, not just from the legal standpoint, but from other aspects, and again try to focus on getting people to make consensus decisions, particularly for their children, in the divorce context, but in not such -- not in such an adversarial way.

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think that's good. And I know you've served on the board of the Texas Hearing and Service Dogs, a program that helps the blind and those with disabilities. You teach Sunday School at St. Barnabas Episcopal Mission. You've given back to your community in a lot of different ways.

Let me ask you this. I know that my friend Dan Morales, the attorney general of Texas, we served together, and you were asked about the City of Austin case, and suggested that you were somehow doing something to -- I don't know, help polluters or evil groups, but I noticed, and I assume Texas is like Alabama, where the attorney general represents the state in legal matters and speaks for the state in court.
JUSTICE OWEN: That's true.

REV_00348790

SEN. SESSIONS: Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. SESSIONS: And the attorney general, Dan Morales, intervened in that case on the side of the state of Texas, and he took the position, as I understand it, that Texas state had entered into this area, and their law predominated, and that cities, the City of Austin did not have authority. And you eventually agreed with him in general on that -- (inaudible) --

JUSTICE OWEN: I did. Absolutely. I agreed that the state -- the state basically trumps the city, it was my view. And there were -- there were extensive regulations in this area above and beyond the water regulations that applies to everybody in the state. This was not a non-regulated area. This is the same regulations that apply to any landowner in Texas applied to these folks, plus they had to have a water quality plan under the TNR -- and subject to the TNRCC. They were subject to ongoing federal regulations. So this was -- this was far from an unregulated area. The question was whose law was going to control, the state statute or the city's ordinances, and it seemed to me that the state certainly could take away the ETJ, extra-territorial jurisdiction in it's entirety, and if that were so, why couldn't they regulate here and tell the city "No, our regulations -- we choose how to regulate, we don't want you regulating here."

SEN. SESSIONS: Well, I think you're right. And, of course, Mr. Morales is a Democrat and a capable attorney general who was advocating for the state's interest. And, of course, a lot of people don't think about this, and a lot of cities don't like to think about it, but cities are creatures of the state. The states are sovereign, have a sovereign power within the constitutional scheme, as does the national government, but cities are total creatures of the state, and if there's a conflict, I think you've come down on the right side between -- which is the preeminent authority within a state.

Well, I just think that's -- there's several other cases that I could go through. I do just want to say I think your ruling with regard to the Ford Motor Company case and venue was important. Venue is important. It's not correct and not just to allow a plaintiff to choose any county in the state of Texas to file a lawsuit just because there's a Ford dealership in that county. In this case, as I understood it, you ruled consistent with Texas law that case should be filed where the plaintiff lived, where the car was purchased, and where the accident occurred. All of those occurred in the country where venue was proper, and you did not deny them relief, but you simply sent the case back with an order to go to the correct county for venue purposes, is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator, your time is --
SEN. SESSIONS: My time is up. And I would just say that I appreciate your candor. I appreciate your ability. I am impressed with the American Bar Association's evaluation of your performance. I'm impressed with the evaluation of the people in Texas of your performance, when you got 84 percent of the vote. And I believe we've had few nominees come before this committee ever who have testified more ably or who have better qualifications for the federal bench.

REV_00348791

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator. Senator Edwards.

SEN. EDWARDS: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chairman. Good afternoon, Justice Owen. You've been here a long time. I want to focus on your, if I can, on your judicial decisions.

JUSTICE OWEN: Okay.

SEN. EDWARDS: Tell me first, in cases involving the intentional infliction of emotional distress, whether you agree with the decisions in your court, in the Texas Supreme Court, that say, and I'm reading now from one of those, that the overwhelming weight of authority both in Texas and around the country is that conduct involved in any particular case should be evaluated as a whole in determining whether it's extreme.

JUSTICE OWEN: I think that's generally true, yes.

SEN. EDWARDS: The case that I want to ask you about that I -- (inaudible) -- you about today, is a case involving three women who brought a case against GTE -- the lead plaintiff was Bruce -- Rhonda Bruce, Linda Davis, and Joyce Pulstra (sp) -- based upon what they contended was extreme conduct in the workplace.

And the evidence in the case -- I'm looking at the opinion now, was that the employer -- the employer's manager, who was the person involved in the case, the defendant's manager, soon after arriving at work engaged in a pattern of grossly abusive, threatening and degrading conduct, and again, I'm reading from the decision now, and he began using the harshest vulgarity shortly after his arrival. He regularly heaped abusive profanity on the employees, including these three women. On one occasion when he was asked to curb his language because it was offensive, he positioned himself in front of one of the plaintiffs, one of the women, and screamed, "I'll do and say any blank thing I want, and I don't give a blank who likes it." At one point another female employee raised a question, and he said, "I'm tired of walking on blank eggshells, trying to make people happy around here." The opinion says, "More importantly, the employees testifies that Shields repeatedly physically and verbally threatened, abused and terrorized them."

And then the court, in considering that conduct as a whole, as you just indicated the law provides, found that the jury verdict against the defendant was -- was appropriate. And you wrote a concurring decision, where you agreed I part with the majority decision and dissented in part, disagreed in part -- you didn't dissent but you disagreed with some of the conclusions that the majority had raised. And among those disagreements, you found that the following conduct is not a basis for sustaining a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

REV_00348792

And before I go through this long list of things that you said was not evidence to be considered, taken as a whole, in whether the defendant had acted outrageously, because I understand that you've told me that that's the legal standard -- the question is whether any of these things taken as part of the overall case is something that would constitute extreme behavior under the law.

The first thing you listed was not -- not to be included --

JUSTICE OWEN: But, Senator, my --

SEN. EDWARDS: Sure. Sure.

JUSTICE OWEN: I just want to make clear what -- that you understand, that everybody understands, what I was saying here. I was not saying that you can't consider the totality of the circumstances. And I absolutely agreed with the majority that this guy was way over the line in this case.

My only point in writing this was if you take -- my only point was if you take these things that I listed out of that -- the context of all of the other things that happened and standing alone, that you can't -- this would not support a judgement, standing alone, that -- and I was concerned particularly --

SEN. EDWARDS: Did you -- excuse me. Did you say that? What you just said?

JUSTICE OWEN: I said that "The following conduct is not a basis for sustaining a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, even when the employees who were upset by the conduct are women." And my point here was that if this is all that happened, I mean if you just have someone -- and we can go through them -- cursing, but it's not accompanied by sexual harassment, or cursing, but it's not directed at the woman, that by itself will not give you, I don't think, sufficient grounds for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

And I was concerned that people would read all the laundry list of what happened in the majority opinion and say, well, if I can prove any one of these things, then I'm there. And I wanted to make it clear that I did not agree that if this is what you had, without all of the other things that this man did --

SEN. EDWARDS: Let me -- excuse me, I'm sorry.
JUSTICE OWEN: -- that you wouldn't get there. And that was all I was trying to make clear. Because there were some statements that I thought conflicted particularly with very recent decisions out of our court, and people might get confused. And so, I wrote separately to point that out.

SEN. EDWARDS: Well, I guess I would first point out that the majority opinion I don't think ever said that any of those things, standing alone, would be enough. They applied the law, as you have recognized it to be, which is you look at the totality of the circumstances.

JUSTICE OWEN: And I agreed with that.

SEN. EDWARDS: And they listed these things as things to be considered as part of the totality of the circumstances. And what you said, if I'm reading it correctly, in your decision, "The following conduct is not a basis for sustaining a cause of action." Can I just go through them and ask you about each one?

JUSTICE OWEN: Sure.

SEN. EDWARDS: The first one, you said, was cursing, profanity or yelling and screaming unless -- when it is not simultaneously accompanied by sexual harassment or physical threatening behavior.

The second you listed was pounding fists on a table when requesting employees to do things. Third was going into a rage when employees leave an umbrella or purse on a chair or a filing cabinet. The fourth you listed was screaming at employees if they don't get things picked up. Five -- I'm jumping around. You've got a long list and I'm not going to read them all -- is requiring an employee to clean a spot off the carpet while yelling at her. Another one is telling an employee that she must wear a Post-it note that says, "Don't forget your paperwork."

So this is a list of things that the majority, as I understand it, considered, taken as a whole, as evidence that would support a verdict in favor of these three women, which the jury had found, as I believe. You have listed these things and said that they -- in the language of your decision -- that they are "not a basis for sustaining a cause of action." And what I understand you to be saying today is that standing alone, these things are not a basis for a cause of action. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct. I also want to make it clear that we're not talking about sexual discrimination here or anything of the sort, because lots of these things obviously would be grounds. We are talking about a tort that's been reserved by my court for very extraordinary circumstances, the so-called tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress as defined by the restatement. So we're not -- this is not conduct that I would say that is okay in the workplace under other causes of action. We're looking at one --
SEN. EDWARDS: But you specifically said that each of those things that I just read would not --

JUSTICE OWEN: I specifically said standing -- again, my point was that if this is what a plaintiff shows, that would be insufficient. You can't just say, "Okay, in GTE v. Bruce, they said this, so therefore I've met the standard." I'd want to make sure there wasn't any confusion about what else would have to accompany that conduct to get to intentional infliction of emotional distress.

SEN. EDWARDS: Yes, ma'am. But I believe, as you said a few minutes ago, the majority never suggested that any of those things standing alone would be enough.

JUSTICE OWEN I --

SEN. EDWARDS: You didn't specifically say, unless I'm missing it in your opinion, that any of those things standing alone would not be enough.

JUSTICE OWEN: I didn't use the words "standing alone." The --

SEN. EDWARDS: No, ma'am. What you said was they would not sustain -- or form a basis for a cause of action -- which has legal meaning, as I understand it. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. EDWARDS: Okay.

Can I ask you about another area?

JUSTICE OWEN: Sure.

SEN. EDWARDS: There are some cases where you have dissented. I'll just mention some. Some have already been mentioned today, and I won't go over those again. But they are primarily cases where, you know, a child or a family or someone was involved bringing a case against either an insurance company or a manufacturer or a corporate defendant of some kind.

And in several of these cases that I'm looking at now, you dissented, you disagreed. And in each case, you sided with the defendants. You sided -- your ruling was against the person who brought the case, the individual who brought the case.

One was a boy who brought a malpractice case from having surgery with serious complications -- the Wiener (sp) versus Wasan (sp) case.

Another was the Wilkins versus Helena Chemical Company case, where a farmer sued a seed manufacturer because the seeds he bought didn't work. They didn't grow. Again, you sided with the chemical company.

Another was a worker's arm's -- the Sonnier (sp) case, versus Chisholm-Ryder Company, where a worker's arm was severed by a tomato chopper. He brought a case against the manufacturer. You sided -- you dissented against the worker, on behalf of the manufacturer.

And another was a man who was injured changing a tire when the tire exploded, and he brought a case against Uniroyal Goodrich Tire.

And in these -- some of these cases and some of the cases -- other cases that have been

REV_00348795

The problem with it is that it isn't true. Justice Gonzales was not referring to Justice Owen's dissent but rather to the dissent of another colleague in the same case.

The second sample fiction is the smear groups' misrepresented portrayal of a case involving buffer zones and abortion clinics. In that case, the majority of the Texas Supreme Court ruled for Planned Parenthood and affirmed a lower court's injunction that protected abortion clinics and doctors' homes and imposed $1.2 million in damages against pro-life protesters.

In only a few instances, the court tightened the buffer zones against protesters. Justice Owen joined the majority opinion and was excoriated by dissenting colleagues, who were admittedly pro-life, by the way. When describing that decision then, abortion rights leaders hailed the result as a victory for abortion rights in Texas. Planned Parenthood's lawyer said the decision, quote, "isn't a home run; it's a grand slam," unquote.

Of course, that result hasn't changed, but the characterization of it has. This is how Planned Parenthood describes the same case in their fact sheet on Justice Owen. Quote: "Owen supports eliminating buffer zones around reproductive health-care clinics," unquote. In fact, her decision did exactly the opposite. And I think this committee deserves and should demand a formal apology and full explanation.

The third and most pervasive sample fiction concerns Justice Owen's rulings in a series of Jane Doe cases which first interpreted Texas's then-new parental-involvement law. The law, which I think is important to emphasize, was passed by the Texas legislature, not Justice Owen, with bipartisan support, and requires that an abortion clinic give notice to just one parent 48 hours prior to a minor's abortion.

Unlike states with more restrictive laws, such as Massachusetts, Wisconsin and North Carolina, consent of the parent is not required in Texas. A minor may be exempted from giving such notice if they get court permission. Since the law went into effect, over 650 noticed bypasses have been requested from the courts. Of these 650 cases, only 10 have had facts so difficult that two lower courts denied a noticed bypass. Only 10 have risen to the Texas Supreme Court.

Justice Owen's detractors would have us believe that in these cases, she would have applied standards of her own choosing. Ironically, in each and every example they cite, whether concurring with the majority or dissenting, Justice Owen was applying not her own standards but the standards enunciated in the Roe-versus-Wade line of decisions of the United States Supreme Court, which she followed and recognized as authority.

For example, detractors take pain to tell us that Justice Owen would require that to be sufficiently informed to get an abortion without a parent's knowledge, that the minors show that they are being counseled on religious considerations. They appear to think this is nothing more than opposition to abortion rights. They are so bothered with this religious language that various documents produced by the abortion-industry lobby italicize the word "religious."

mentioned during the course of the day, your dissent was pretty sharply criticized by those in the majority, as -- for different reasons. But --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator?

SEN. EDWARDS: Yes?

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Not only is your time up, but just so everybody knows, I'm really going to be strict on the time limit because we have two other judges to go. It is 10 minutes after 4:00, and we're going to adjourn at 5:00.

SEN. EDWARDS: Can I just get an answer to this question? Sure. That's fine.

Let me get an answer to this question. In these cases, all of which you dissented in favor and -- against individuals, in favor of the manufacturers' defendants -- companies, against individuals -- and in some of these cases, at least, there were some pretty sharp criticism of your decision -- your dissent, I should say -- as there were in some of the other cases that have been mentioned in the course of the day -- I just wondered if you can point us to any cases where you have been criticized by your colleagues on the court for having gone too far in favor of an individual, child, a family who brought a case against a defendant, a manufacturer or a corporation.

And if you don't know -- and in fairness to you, I know you can remember everything, sitting here today -- if you can tell me of any today, I would appreciate that. If you can't, I'll give you a chance to provide that information to us, because I would like to see it.

MS. OWEN: One case that comes to mind -- and I -- let me talk about it for a minute -- is the Sands v. Fidelity -- I don't want to say it's Guaranty. I'm not sure. It's Fidelity-something. It was a worker's compensation case. And the plaintiff ended up settling with the worker's comp carrier. And she later contended that she had been defrauded into entering that settlement, and she sued for bad faith. And the court, a majority of the court ended up saying for various reasons that she didn't have a bad faith cause of action. I agreed with that, but I dissented from the case because I said she's established fraud. And under the law, she's entitled to rescind that worker's comp decision and go back and claim her benefits and start all over again. And a majority of the court disagreed with me and said no, she does not get to rescind, she does not get to go back and start all over. And I've certainly ruled for -- you've named four cases; I can name cases where I've ruled in favor of workers, consumers --

SEN. EDWARDS: Can -- can I interrupt you just a -- I want to be very specific about --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator --

SEN. EDWARDS: I'm asking her to provide something very specific, cases where you have, in fact, been criticized -- these are -- some of these cases are cases where you've been criticized by your colleagues for going too far on one side of the equation.

REV_00348796

MS. OWEN: Well, I --

SEN. EDWARDS: I'm just asking now whether you can point us to cases where -- you've just indicated one case, where I believe you actually ruled with the majority against the jury verdict, if I remember correctly: the Sands case. And --

MS. OWEN: That's correct. But I thought she should get a remand and be able to set aside the agreement and proceed with her cause of action. If I --

SEN. EDWARDS: Let me ask you, if you can't -- I know my time is up, and we need to let other people ask questions. If you have cases such as that, I would actually like to see them. I think all of us would like to see them.

MS. OWEN: You -- you want me to find cases where my colleagues have criticized me, even if I -- you don't care about the cases where I --

SEN. EDWARDS: Or disagreed with you. Disagreed with you is also okay.

MS. OWEN: So -- is there -- you just want cases -- you don't care if I rule for the consumer, as long as -- it has to be a case where I was criticized doing so. Is that the same question?

SEN. EDWARDS: No, ma'am. You have -- there are a series of cases where your colleagues on the court have been critical and strongly disagreed with what you did, where you ruled for one side, some of the ones I've mentioned today and some of the ones that have mentioned by others. I'm asking you whether there -- are there cases on the other side of that equation?

MS. OWEN: Well, there are certainly cases where I have ruled large verdicts for injured people. And I -- I guess -- I don't remember if people criticized that or not, but we've upheld -- and I've been part of it -- upheld holding rules of law in verdicts for plaintiffs of significant rules of law: statute of limitations areas, independent contractor areas. I don't remember if there were dissents, I don't remember if I was criticized for doing it, but I have certainly --
SEN. FEINSTEIN: What you're asking is that she send those cases to us in writing --

SEN. EDWARDS: Right. That's correct.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: -- if you would.

And thank you very much, Senator Edwards.

SEN. EDWARDS: Thank you, Madame Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Senator Brownback?

REV_00348797

SEN. SAM BROWNBACK (R-KS): Thank you, Madame Chairman.

And thank you as well, Justice Owen, for appearing here.

And you've waited a long time for the hearing -- 14 months to be able to get in front of the committee. So I'm delighted that we're holding the hearing and going to be able to talk with you today about your qualifications, your background and your service on the circuit court, which I hope we're able to affirm and move forward with.

If I could point out one thing, just in listening to the last discussion on the case -- I believe that was GTE versus Bruce, the case you were talking about -- I believe in that case you joined the unanimous court ruling on the court in affirming the $275,000 jury verdict for the female employees that had been sexually harassed. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: I did. I did.

SEN. BROWNBACK: So we're talking about a unanimous opinion by the court. You wrote a concurring opinion on that that did hold for the female employees. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, and the reason I wrote the concurring opinion again is, we had just recently issued in the last few years on the Hill -- right in front of this case -- cases involving intentional infliction of emotional distress in the workplace. And I was concerned that people would pick up GTE versus Bruce, pick up our prior decisions and say, "There's an inconsistency here. How could you have said in these cases it's not intentional infliction of emotional distress and then list the things that I listed and say that is?" And I wanted to try to square --

SEN. BROWNBACK: You didn't want to redefine the common-law tort. You didn't want to try to redefine that.

JUSTICE OWEN: I did not. I was just trying to make sure that I was explaining how I could square our prior decisions -- again, which were fairly recent -- in the employment context with the specific evidence that was in this case.

SEN. BROWNBACK: I just didn't want anybody to get the impression that you ruled against the female employees or held against their case. You held for their case.

JUSTICE OWEN: I did, absolutely.

SEN. BROWNBACK: You upheld a $275,000 verdict in the case by the plaintiffs against the defendant. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Okay. I think that's important, because we sometimes lose it in the factual setting that somehow you didn't find this bad behavior; you did, and you agreed with the court that this is illegal, wrongful behavior and that the jury verdict should be upheld. And I think that's important for us to get clear.

Another thing I want to go to -- because a lot of the outside groups that really -- trying to derail nominations in this town and pick apart people's records who are very well qualified -- and you certainly are well qualified for this position -- is the parental- notification Texas law. And we visited this a couple of times today, but I just -- I went to make sure that I'm clear and that we're all clear on this. The only cases that got applied on up to the Texas Supreme Court were those where the judicial review had been denied. In other words, the easier cases were taken at the lower court, and at the lower court, if a girl had come forward, wanted an abortion, wanted not to have her parents informed, the court had already ruled yes, you can do that. The only cases that were appealed were the ones where that had been denied. Is that correct?

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct. If either the trial court of the intermediate court granted the bypass, that was the end of it.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Okay. So if the judicial bypass was granted, abortion's granted, it moves on forward.

And if I understand your numbers correctly, about 600 of those were done at the lower court level in the time period we've been talking about on your service in the Texas supreme court.

JUSTICE OWEN: We know that at least 650 bypass proceedings have occurred. There may be a lot more. We just don't know. But we know at least that many bypass proceedings have occurred.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Where the court ruled that the girl did not have to inform her parents to obtain the abortion, is that correct?
JUSTICE OWEN: Well, we don't know because they're confidential, so we don't know the outcome. We -- out of the 650, only 10 girls have appealed to my court.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Okay.

JUSTICE OWEN: So --

SEN. BROWNBACK: So, somewhere in there. But out of 650, 10 were appealed to the Texas supreme court where judicial bypass had been denied.

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct.

SEN. BROWNBACK: And that was a requirement that it had to have been denied. So, you had 10 cases that got in front of you of 650, so you're looking at, you know, a small percentage. You're looking at less than 2 percent of the cases that get to the Texas supreme court. And in those 10 cases, how did you rule? What was your opinion on the 10? Do you recall how you split on those?

JUSTICE OWEN: Yes, I do. The first Jane Doe came to our court twice, Jane Doe 1. The first time that she came, I agreed with the majority of the court. Everybody on the court actually agreed that she did not meet the statutory standard, but I agreed with the majority of the court, was because mature and sufficiently well- informed was such a loose definition, and trial courts could apply it -- that could mean so many different things to so many different trial courts that we needed to put some parameters on it. And because she didn't have the benefit of that, she should be remanded to the trial court and have another hearing. So, if the trial court had granted her a bypass on the remand, I would never have seen the case again. The trial court denied the bypass again, the court of appeals again denied it. And the second go-round, I said it was a close call, but I looked at the record, and under our evidentiary standards, I said there's some evidence to support what the trial court did, so I would have denied it, and the majority granted it.

Doe 2, I voted with the majority to remand it for the same types of reasons, only this time it was a best interest issue. We don't know what happened to Doe 2. We never heard from her again. Doe 3, I voted to deny the bypass. Doe 4, I agreed with the majority of the court that she did not meet the statutory standard. Let me -- and then Doe 10, which was the last Doe to come to our court, I agreed unanimously -- or the court did, that she was entitled to the bypass as a matter of law.

And I think I've mentioned this before today, but there were five other Does that came in between Doe 4 and Doe 10, where the court did not write an opinion.

We affirmed the lower judgment of the court. And as I explained, it takes at least six votes to do that. No dissents were published or were noted. If they had been noted, we would have had to have wound up and said who voted which way.
But I think it's a fair inference, given our opinions on either side of those five Doe cases, that these probably weren't close cases or somebody would have written something.

SEN. BROWNBACK: Because of the 10 cases, these were already 10 cases who -- where two courts, the trial court and the appellate court, had already voted, already ruled to deny judicial bypass. So they had said no, you cannot bypass your parents. Two courts had already ruled that in these 10 cases, is that correct? In all of the 10 cases?

JUSTICE OWEN: Correct. In all of them, yes.

SEN. BROWNBACK: And then in these -- the 10 that came to you, and on the Texas Supreme Court, you and the court split on some of these cases and voted to remand to the lower court to look at again to see if they should grant the judicial bypass. And in a majority of cases, you agreed with the lower two courts, in essence, that a judicial bypass should not be granted. Would that be a correct characterization of the --

JUSTICE OWEN: That's correct. And I believe that out of the 12 cases, I was -- had a different view of the judgment than the majority did in three cases. So I was with the majority, I guess that means nine out of 12 times in terms of the judgment.

SEN. BROWNBACK: I just -- it seems to me to make something about this in your record as being outside the philosophical mainstream is really a far stretch. You've got 600-some cases; 10 that have been ruled against a judicial bypass at two lower courts, and then it comes in front of you and the court splits and you vote with the majority most of the time, and some of the cases are remanded for this reconsideration; others are not. It just seems to me striking that this would somehow say that you should be set apart on the issue of abortion when you're interpreting the law in tough cases, is what these cases amounted to.

And I would hope that my colleagues would look at the factual setting here and how you've ruled. I think very common sense and very broad-based and non-ideologically in these cases. Some cases you voted to remand, for it to be looked at again for judicial bypass; other cases, not. I think that's a very fair-minded way on your part.

Let me just say, Justice, I thank you for putting yourself through this process. You are extraordinarily qualified for this position. And to wait for the 14 months that you have and then go through having narrow points on cases picked apart and your record maligned, abused, and then trying to somehow point you out as an ideologue in any instance is totally unfair to you and something you didn't need to go through, and could have remained absent from. But yet you've gone ahead and submitted yourself to this process to be able to serve the public.

And I appreciate you doing that. You didn't have to do that. A lot of people don't like going through these sort of process, and I don't blame them. But thank you for staying in here and staying in the process. And I think you're going to make an outstanding circuit court judge. I hope we can move this on to the committee process and through the floor.

Thank you, Madame Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator.

Senator Cantwell.

SEN. MARIA CANTWELL (D-WA): Thank you, Madame Chair. And thank you, Justice Owen, for your time today and patience in answering these many questions.

I think several of my colleagues have brought up the specific issues relating to some of your decisions around parental consent, and I think some of my colleagues have asked a little bit broader questions as it relates to the issue of privacy, but I'm hoping that I can expound a little bit on and understand your judicial philosophy on these important issues that I think are growing in magnitude as they face our country. I think privacy, whether it's government intrusion in personal decisions, or nowadays government acquiring information about activities of American citizens, or businesses handling some of your most personal information, this issue is just growing in magnitude. So, understanding your broad philosophy on this is, I think, very helpful for this committee and for the Congress.

My first issue is really your general thoughts on the right to privacy, and whether you believe that that right exists in the Constitution, and where you think that right to privacy does exist in the Constitution.

JUSTICE OWENS: Well, of course I'm guided by the U.S. Supreme Court cases that have recognized the right to privacy. I think Griswold is one we discussed earlier that clearly recognizes that. And there are cases from my court that construe the Texas Constitution as having a right to privacy.

SEN. CANTWELL: I'm asking you whether -- I mean, because we've had lots of nominees come before the committee who have recited the same things about "We'll follow precedent and the recognition in various decisions." but, after being confirmed, have not followed those exact decisions or interpretations. So that's why I'm asking the broader question of whether you believe that the Constitution guarantees a right to privacy.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, I think that's the law of the land. And there's nothing in my personal beliefs at all that would keep me from understanding and applying that law.

SEN. CANTWELL: And where do you think that exists within the Constitution?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, I wish I -- because I do not want to misstep here. I'd like to have of the U.S. Supreme Court precedent in front of me on that particular issue because that's just -- I don't want to -- that's not a question I would answer as a judge off the cuff if I were deciding a case. I would certainly go pull the U.S. Supreme Court precedent, I would pull the Constitution, I would sit down and read it and then give an answer. But I --

SEN. FEINSTEN: Senator, if you'll excuse me just for a moment, wasn't your question, does the Supreme Court guarantee a right to privacy?

SEN. CANTWELL: The Constitution, I asked --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: I mean the Constitution, guarantee a right to privacy?

SEN. CANTWELL: Yes.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: You can't answer that yes or no?

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, yes, clearly it does. The U.S. Supreme Court has said it does. That's been the law for a long, long time. I thought that she was asking me specifically can you tell me where that is derived from, the specific language.

REV_00348802

SEN. CANTWELL: Whether you believed that there existed such a right, because in interpreting these cases -- and I think when we get to follow up on some of your other cases and comments, I mean, that the issue. We're trying to find out whether you will follow precedent. And obviously, in a variety of cases, you've dissented, and dissented in such a way that it's left a question mark, at least in my mind and, I think, perhaps some of my colleagues, as to why you dissented and some of the issues that you brought into the dissent. And so this particular issue, it's not -- we've had other people who have said that they believe in upholding a woman's right to choose, and then when it came to major decisions, went in an opposite direction, obviously because they saw something within the case. And that's why I'm trying to understand your personal belief in that right.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, again, I don't let my personal views get into it, but I very clearly pointed out at several junctures, particularly my Doe 1 case, that there is a right to choose recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court. It applies to minors, that you cannot prevent a minor from going to court without the knowledge of her parents to get a judicial bypass. I pointed out that I had concerns about some of the Texas Family Code provisions in the divorce context when a minor -- a parent would be required to notify another parent under a divorce decree, if that might lead to some of the problems under sexual, physical, emotional abuse. I said that that would probably be unconstitutional. I think I clearly demonstrated that I have thought about the U.S. Supreme Court decisions and how they apply in this context and also how they might apply under other Texas laws that impact this area, and that I am willing and able to follow it.

SEN. CANTWELL: Well, let's -- let's go specifically to that. And I'm sorry I don't know exactly -- I know -- I have what your statement was earlier on the Doe case; I'm not sure which one, whether it was Doe I or Doe II. But you found that a woman seeking a judicial bypass should demonstrate that she has considered philosophical, social, moral and religious arguments that can be brought to bear when considering abortion, and that you were following the decision of the Supreme Court in Casey (sp). However, in Casey (sp) the court ruled that states can enact rules designed to encourage her to know that there are philosophical and social arguments of great weight that can be brought to bear in considering an abortion, but there is never any mention of religious implications.

MS. OWEN: That's in H.L. v. Matheson (sp). That -- the reference to religion is in H.L. v. Matheson (sp). I think they said -- I can give you the cite, but they talked about -- see if I can read it here for you. But that was a factor that they said, that there are religious concerns. People -- let's see: "As a general proposition that such consultations" --

SEN. CANTWELL: That's not -- that's not in Casey (sp).

MS. OWEN: It's in the U.S. Supreme Court decision H.L. v. Matheson (sp). In my opinion, these were -- as you -- I hope you understand, were drafted fairly quickly. I did cite H.L.-Matheson (sp) in my Doe I decision, not on this point. I cited Casey (sp), and I cited the second decision in City of Akron. And I cited Matheson (sp) on another point. But in Matheson (sp) they talk about that for some, people raise profound moral and religious concerns, and they're talking about the desirability or the state's interest in these kinds of considerations in making an informed decision. They don't say you have to have religious beliefs, and I don't for a minute advocate that. The only point I was making --

SEN. CANTWELL: I think there was -- I think there was detail in there that basically said that you didn't think that the physician would be the person who could give that kind of input or advice. And so I think you can our concern, obviously. And I want to get back to the broader question. But our concern is, you know, you're dissenting in these decisions about a major issue of privacy. And in this particular issue, you're injecting in, where, obviously, the others on the court didn't, this issue of religious -- religion and pulling it out. And so, I don't know -- I don't know the right example. I think on parental notification. I mean, these laws have been thought and passed by legislatures because they want to think of the extreme cases. And I'm obviously -- we've talked about the abuse issues and various things. But now we're saying to a young woman that she has to sit down not with her doctor, but some religious leader and have an explanation about this issue before she's going to have the ability to get this approval.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, let me make sure that we're talking about the same thing. If there's abuse, this all goes out the window. It's a separate ground. You don't --

SEN. CANTWELL: Say it's two 18-year-old cousins.

JUSTICE OWEN: I'm sorry?
SEN. CANTWELL: Say it's two 18-year-old cousins.

JUSTICE OWEN: Well, 18-year-olds aren't covered by the statute -- oh, you mean that she's consulting? Again, the U.S. Supreme Court has talked about getting counseling from a qualified source. And it was not me but Justice White --

SEN. CANTWELL: What if I'm not religious?

JUSTICE OWEN: I'm sorry?

SEN. CANTWELL: What if I'm --

JUSTICE OWEN: That's -- I'm not saying you have to get religious counseling. I never advocated that.

SEN. CANTWELL: Well who delivers the religious counseling?

JUSTICE OWEN: I never advocated that you have to have religious counseling. What the U.S. Supreme Court said, and what I followed, what I agreed was part of the definition of information, that it's not just information about the physical impact on the girl or the physical risks. And what Justice O'Connor wrote for the court was that there are "profound" -- and that's her word, not mine -- philosophical and moral and other considerations that go into an informed choice. And in the --

REV_00348804

SEN. CANTWELL: That's exactly right. And that's where in your dissent -- again, your dissent from your colleagues -- threw in the word "religious consideration." So I'm trying to figure out -- you're telling me where you --

JUSTICE OWEN: And that came from H.L. versus Matheson (sp).

SEN. CANTWELL: And you believe it should be -- if you were the majority, it would have been implemented how?

JUSTICE OWEN: All I'm -- it would have implemented that the girl who is seeking an abortion should indicate to the trial court an awareness that there are arguments and issues. She doesn't have to agree with any of them, she doesn't have to explain what her philosophy is, she doesn't have to rationalize or justify her philosophy or her moral code or her religion, if she has any.

But all that I said was, and what I think is a fair reading of what Justice O'Connor said, is we're talking about awareness that there are arguments out there on both sides, philosophical, moral, and in H.L. versus Matheson (sp) arguments -- religious. If she doesn't have religious beliefs, that's no business of the court's. The only question is, if she does, has she thought about her own beliefs? Is she aware of the philosophical debate, the moral debate, just the issues. She doesn't have to get into does she agree with them and debate it with the judge, but simply is she aware --

SEN. CANTWELL: Is the doctor capable of giving that advice or not?

JUSTICE OWEN: I think it depends. I think it depends. I think it depends on -- and I'm not sure she has to identify where she got -- where she obtained her understanding of the philosophical and other issues. That doesn't necessarily have to be from a counselor, as long as she exhibits an understanding of it.

I think she may need a counselor to give her some help on her options, the physical risks, that sort of thing, but I'm not advocating that she have any particular set of values or morals or religious beliefs.

SEN. CANTWELL: Madam Chairman, I see my time has expired. So I don't know if we're going to -- if we're moving on or --

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Did you have one more question, because this will be the last question before --

SEN. CANTWELL: Well, I just, if I could just -- just quickly, and obviously, if you're confirmed to the Fifth Circuit, you'll be responsible for determining the types of laws that are the undo burden on a woman's right to choose. And so given your record in this area, you know, I have some questions about, you know, recognizing when a statute imposes, particularly given some of

But this standard is not Justice Owen's invention but rather the words of the Supreme Court's pro-choice decision in Casey. Should she not follow one Supreme Court decision but be required to follow another? Is that what we want our judges to do, pick and choose which decisions to follow? That appears to be the type of activist judge these groups want. And this committee should resist all such attempts to get that type of a judge.

The truth is that, rather than altering the Texas law, Justice Owen was trying to effect the legislators' intent. No better evidence of this is the letter of the pro-choice woman Texas senator stating her, quote, "unequivocal," unquote, support of Justice Owen. Senator Shapiro says of Justice Owen, quote, "Her opinions interpreting the Texas parental-involvement law serve as prime example of her judicial restraint," unquote.

I'm sorry I'm taking a little longer, but I'll finish in just a minute. I understand why the Washington left-wing groups don't like that in a judge. But this committee should applaud and commend such restraint and temperament.

The truth is that rather than being an activist foe of Roe, Justice Owen repeatedly cites and follows Roe and its progeny as authority. Compare this to Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who wrote in 1985 that the Roe-versus-Wade decision represented, quote, "heavy- handed judicial intervention," unquote, that was, quote, "difficult to justify," unquote.

Now, in relation to this, I would like to briefly comment on the mounting offensive of some to change the rules of judicial confirmation by asking nominees to share personal views or to ensure that nominees share the personal views of the senator on certain cases.

To illustrate my view, I'll tell you that many people have recently called on this committee to question nominees as to their views on the Pledge of Allegiance case. My full-throated answer to this is no, as much as I think that that case was wrongly decided.

I also happen to think that the recent school-voucher case is the most important civil rights decision since Brown. But I'm not going to ask people what they think about that case either. Such questions threaten the heart of the independent judiciary and attempt to accomplish by hidden indirection, which senators cannot do openly by constitutional amendment. It is an attempt to make the courts a mere extension of the Congress.
Now, I speak against this practice in the strongest terms. And in my view, any nominee who answers such questions would not be fit for judicial office and would not have my vote. The truth is that there are many who, like Justice Ginsburg, think that cases like Griswold or Roe were wrongly decided as a constitutional matter, even if they agree with the policy result, just as the great liberal Justice Hugo Black did in his dissent in Griswold.

A few weeks ago we heard testimony that Chief Justice Warren thought Brown versus Board of Education was his worst ruling as a matter of constitutional law but not his least necessary.

Again, I welcome Justice Priscilla Owen. Considering the opposition mounted so unfairly the laws that are still on the books in the Fifth Circuit. So I guess I'm asking you, do you believe that you really have the ability to recognize what the Court has recognized in Casey, and that there are some laws that, you know, can prevent a woman from obtain abortion just as surely if they were outlawed? Do you think you're going to be able to recognize that?

JUSTICE OWEN: Senator, I do. And I would point to you again other places in my Doe 1 decision where I've recognized that in some situations, even a notification statute can amount to a consent statute because of a particular girl's situation, and I quoted the Supreme Court on that. As I pointed out, I expressed concern about the impact, the undo burden on a minor's right to choose that might occur because of particular provisions in our family code that deal with divorce decrees.

So, I've -- yes, I do believe that I can apply Casey and Akron to -- and the other decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, I believe faithfully.

SEN. CANTWELL: Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chairman.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator. Justice Owen, believe it or not, this is going come to an end.
JUSTICE OWEN: (Laughs.)

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And you have held up very well. And I want to say the audience has held up very well. I didn't note anybody going to sleep. And we have two additional judges to do, so I'm going to excuse you and thank you very much.

JUSTICE OWEN: Appreciate it. Thank you.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: And ask the two other judges to please come forward. And those leaving the room, if you could do so quietly, we would be very appreciative.

JUSTICE OWEN: Thank you, Senator Feinstein, very much.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Justice.

SEN. : You did awful well, Judge.

SEN. HATCH: Madam Chairman, can I put some more material in the record.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes, certainly.

SEN. HATCH: Okay, thank you. And others as well.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Yes. The record will remain open for one week.

REV_00348806

against you, I have to tell you that today you may be the bravest woman in America. I hope that there are young women watching you right now. You are an excellent role model for anyone, and especially young women.

Now, some of Justice Owen's detractors have made much about the fact that she is not afraid to dissent. Of course, they fail to mention dissents like her opinion in Hyundai Motor versus Alvarado, in which Justice Owen's reasoning was later adopted by the United States Supreme Court on the very same difficult issue of law.

They also overlooked her dissent in a repressed-memory sexual- abuse case where she took the majority to task with these words. Quote: "This is reminiscent of the days when the crime of rape went unpublished unless corroborating evidence was available. The court's opinion reflects the attitudes reflected in that era," unquote. Perhaps, Madam Chairman, they thought that dissent reflected too well the perspective of a woman to point out to senators like all of us up here.

Despite deceptive opposition, I think that Justice Owen should be confirmed, first because I believe that colleagues, like many on this committee -- and, in fact, hopefully all of us -- will be fair. I also believe my Democratic colleagues will be led by the time-tested standards, well-stated by Senator Biden, and look again to qualifications and judicial temperament, not base politics.

Whether the Biden standard will survive past our time will be tested in this case. If we fail the test, we will breach our responsibility as auditors of the Washington special-interest groups and the judiciary stewards on behalf of all people and not just some.

So I want to thank you, Madam Chairman. I know I took a little longer than I usually do, but I felt that it needed to be done in this case. And I look forward to the testimonies here today.

SEN. FEINSTEIN: Thank you, Senator Hatch. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Leahy.

SEN. PATRICK LEAHY (D-VT): Madam Chair, I will not do as my friend from Utah did and give a long speech which simply delays these proceedings; I'll put my speech in the record. I also have great respect for the chair of this committee, the senator from California, and I know she'll hold a fair hearing. And, unlike my friend from Utah, I'll make up my mind after hearing the facts and not decide them before we even have the hearing.

We will have hearings today on the 79th, 80th and 81st judicial nominees we've held since I took over on July 11th. Judge Owen is the 17th court of appeals hearing we've had. I would point out that this is for the United States Court of Appeals for the fifth circuit. That was the seat vacated by William Garwood in January 1997.

President Clinton had nominated Jorge Rangel, a distinguished Hispanic attorney from Corpus Christi, to fill that vacancy. He had a unanimous rating of well-qualified by the ABA, something the senator from Utah says is very important, but the senator from Utah and the Republican-controlled Senate refused to give him a hearing, and after 15 months his name was returned. He

It does seem to me this is a somewhat misleading way to construct the list, since it means that Kagan counts but Snyder doesn't. It seems to me the relevant numbers--considering only circuit court nominees--would be the number of people who waited more than a year between nomination and a full senate vote (counting, of course, people who never got one).

Remember that this is circuit nominees who waited more than one year for a hearing. I need to re-check stats on how many were first-Term nominees; I think only Beaty, but I also seem to remember that White was a 1995 nominee. We'll check again, but my list (just did this) is as follows:

Beaty
White
Fletcher
Paez
McKeown
Rangle
Goode
Johnson
Kagan
Duffy
Wynn

Lewis

In the 8 years of the Clinton Administration, 13 circuit nominees were forced to wait more than a year for a hearing (3 of whom were subsequently confirmed). In the 4 years of George H.W. Bush Administration, the number was
2. In the 8 years of Reagan Administration, the number was 3.

In only 1.5 years of the Bush Administration, 11 circuit nominees already have been forced to wait more than a year for a hearing and the number will rise
to 15 by November 8 (with Steele and 3 Michigan CA6 nominees).

Yes, and what I'm saying is that the most appropriate comparison is a combination of (a) the raw number of judges confirmed (which reflects the pace at which vacancies are being addressed), (b) the rate, (c--and arguably most important) the average elapsed time between nomination and final Senate action, and (d) the number of nominees waiting too long (say, over a year) for final Senate action. It seems to me that all of these numbers are relevant to the comparison.

One way to assess the Senate's performance is by comparing confirmation rates. The current Senate in the first two years is well behind past Senates in their first two years. But some say that Senators have a duty not to vote for those they do not think should be on the bench, so you cannot compare mere confirmation rates. Even accepting that assertion arguendo, another analysis of good faith is whether the Senate is giving reasonably prompt hearings. And it turns out that the current Senate is smashing (not just breaking) records for delay in hearings for circuit nominees. In short, whether it is circuit confirmation rates or delays in granting hearings to circuit nominees, the current Senate is charting new territory.

Interesting...
It does seem to me this is a somewhat misleading way to construct the list, since it means that Kagan counts but Snyder doesn't. It seems to me the relevant numbers--considering only circuit court nominees--would be the number of people who waited more than a year between nomination and a full senate vote (counting, of course, people who never got one).

Remember that this is circuit nominees who waited more than one year for a hearing. I need to re-check stats on how many were first-Term nominees; I think only Beaty, but I also seem to remember that White was a 1995 nominee. We'll check again, but my list (just did this) is as follows:

Beaty
White
Fletcher
Paez
McKeown
Rangle
Goode
Johnson
Kagan
Duffy
Wynn
Lewis
Moreno

Can those number be right? Do they include people who never received a hearing during the Clinton administration? Can you send me lists of the people who make up the figures?

Thanks.

In the 8 years of the Clinton Administration, 13 circuit nominees were forced to wait more than a year for a hearing (3 of whom were subsequently confirmed). In the 4 years of George H.W. Bush Administration, the number was
2. In the 8 years of Reagan Administration, the number was 3.

In only 1.5 years of the Bush Administration, 11 circuit nominees already have been forced to wait more than a year for a hearing and the number will rise to 15 by November 8 (with Steele and 3 Michigan CA6 nominees).

Alternatively, they could do late Monday afternoon and evening.
Might be worth it to get this done. Let me know Monday morning.

1. The last two NSC types they want to interview (apparently) are Sean McCormick and Dick Clarke. Are you available Tuesday between 10:00 and 1:00? If so, can you check with them and slot them in for those times and let me know something by Monday morning? Thanks.

2. We also need to talk about documents.

John -- I discussed this in some detail with Brad, and followed up with Ken to make sure we were working off complete facts, which I believe Ken summarizes well below. Based on our discussions earlier this month (you were not available, but Brett, Brad and I met as you'll recall), and based on my understanding of our consensus at that meeting, I believe Bill Leary's brief analysis below best addresses this issue. I am in agreement with Bill's analysis and conclusions, and believe it comports with what Brett, Brad and I discussed. So my view is that Ken should be able to make use of an FBI system for FBI-only purposes from whatever locations his assignments have him working at. All OHS work should be conducted on an EOP system. Please call me if I can help in any other way. Thanks -- Ed

All, Access to the content of the FBI email system, items which are addressed generally and specifically to me, are about 80% FBI administrative. I estimate the balance and remainder are case, operations, intel or investigative related. They allow me to acquire more information on specifics for background, eg Director's briefing materials, messages from Legal Attaches and SACs on terrorism issues and communications between substantive HQ units and supervisors/analysts. These documents are not intended for publication outside of the FBI. I neither print them or transfer them via disks to any other system. A part of the information is from other agencies' LNOs, eg State, INS, CIA, etc. Using the system, I can ask questions and answer them, and, presumably, provide better answers to questions here.

This is a precious time saving means of keeping me better informed. It is in lieu of oral communications to my agency and to the LNOs of other agencies at the FBI. Information derived from those oral conversations is sometimes included here in the NSC/OHS record. The email, for my purposes, would be the same. Knowledge would be extracted and injected here as appropriate. Of course it is a matter of judgment on my part.

But, it seems to me that the FBI is unlikely to be willing to "lend" its internal communications to the NSC for capture as part of the Presidental Records. FBI emails are retained for record and archive internally and, I believe, preserved through other means. Most oral conversations are not. I make no pretense of understanding that aspect of bureacracy. When the FBI overtly shares a document, eg faxes it to the sitroom or sends a product over as is done daily, that, necessarily, is part of the NSC/OHS record and copies proliferate throughout the NSC, OHS and elsewhere.

How, then, can I expect the LNOs in the Intel Directorate/Threat Monitoring Center to maintain email connectivity to their agencies, especially when the NSC Lan will be proliferated at Nebraska Avenue? And are the contents and traffic of the CIA nodes with their version of email at Nebraska Ave a component of and integrated into the Presidential Records?

Rather than engage in a tussle within the the Berea Tar Pits, I will make alternative arrangements. Thank you all for your time and consideration. Ken.

Sorry to be slow to respond about this.

It is not clear to me that the communications would be only about FBI business. Presumably Ken will be sending and receiving information to/from the FBI about matters relating to his responsibilities as an NSC/OHS employee, and therefore these would be Presidential Records. This seems to me to be different from the situation where an intelligence agency "lends" certain sensitive information (such as the PDB) to the NSC. Is there a problem capturing and preserving the e-mails as Presidential Records?

It is my understanding that, officially, Ken is on detail from the FBI to OHS. I assume that the purpose of this connection would be to allow Ken to communicate with his FBI colleagues about FBI business, not about NSC business.

If this is correct, and since this would be a stand-alone connection, I do not think there would be any records management objections to this connection. We could fairly regard this as non-record e-mail that does not need to be captured and preserved by the NSC.

E-mail communications with the FBI about NSC business should take place via SIPRNET or OA's Unclass system to ensure that the NSC's recordkeeping requirements are fulfilled.

Deb, Mike has suggested I send this to you with copies to the others. I have requested this system, email only with no access to investigative case files, etc. I have one system installed at Nebraska Ave, and because 85% of my time is here, I need one here as well. With your approval, I hope to have this installed and have better communications with FBIHQ, comparable but not as efficient as the Secret Service email that co-suitmate, Pete McCauley had with his agency. Wtihout it, I miss many communications intended for me. Thanks. V/r Ken

Subject: Stuff for working more efficiently and install of FBI computer [UNCLASSIFIED, Non-Record]

Mike, per our conversation of the other day:

1. The FBI is prep'ed to install an computer for my email connectivity to FBIHQ here at EEOB. One is already at Nebraska Ave (and works as well as any ATARI my brother had). The project manager at FBIHQ was Rey Felix, pager 888.628.8554, office 202.324.9375. His rig for me includes a desktop and some kind of encryption thing for analog telephonic connection. His full name is Rinaldo Felix-Rivera, DOB PRA 6; SSN PRA 6.

2. Most of my secure tel calls need to be handled with a Stu3 or Ste. I would like one installed in my space, perhaps in lieu of the MLP, if you need the line or the unit. I rarely use the MLP presently.

3. My NAC NSC Lan did not have the intel stuff from the sitroom. I haven't a clue why.

Thanks. Ken

107TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 2043

[Report No. 107-____]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

MARCH 21, 2002

Mr. ROCKEFELLER introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

____ (legislative day, _____), 2002

Reported by Mr. ROCKEFELLER, with an amendment and an amendment to the title [Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italic]

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to extend by five years the period for the provision by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs of noninstitutional extended care services and required nursing home care, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00349044

(4) Under the State Home Grant Program, the contribution of the Federal Government to the construction of a new State home for veterans in the State of Alaska would be approximately $16,000,000.

(5) The Veterans Millennium Health Care and Benefits Act (Public Law 106–117) requires the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to take into account the distances veterans and their families must travel in determining the need for nursing home beds in any particular State under the State Home Grant Program.

(6) If a single State home for veterans were to be constructed in the State of Alaska, a significant number of veterans in the State of Alaska would be required to reside at extraordinary distances from their families in order to take advantage of the State home.

(7) Since 1913, the State of Alaska has maintained a residential program of housing, known as Pioneer Homes, for elderly citizens of the State of Alaska, with six such homes dispersed at six different locations throughout the State of Alaska.

(8) Many veterans and their spouses in the State of Alaska currently reside in one of the Pioneer Homes.

REV_00349053

(b) AUTHORITY FOR GRANT TO IMPROVE PIONEER HOMES.—(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs may, upon application therefor by the State of Alaska, make a grant to the State of Alaska to expand, remodel, or alter space in six separate Pioneer Homes in the State of Alaska that is identified in such application as dedicated for the provision of care for veterans in the State of Alaska.

(2) The purpose of the grant authorized by paragraph (1) is to permit the State of Alaska to improve the space referred to in that paragraph in order to permit the space, as so improved, to be treated in the aggregate as a State home facility for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 81 of title 38, United States Code, and other laws administered by the Secretary.

(c) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—(1) Notwithstanding section 8135(a)(1) of title 38, United States Code, the amount of the grant under subsection (b) may be the total estimated cost of the construction required to expand, remodel, or alter the space referred to in that subsection.

(2) The amount of the grant may not exceed $16,000,000.

(d) PRIORITY OF GRANT.—If the Secretary determines to make the grant authorized by subsection (b), the Secretary shall deem the application for the grant as having satisfied the requirements specified in section 8135(b)(2)(A) of title 38, United States Code, for purposes of determining the priority to be accorded the application.

(e) SOURCE OF FUNDS.—Amounts for the grant authorized by subsection (b) shall be derived from amounts authorized to be appropriated by section 8133 of title 38, United States Code.

(f) TREATMENT OF IMPROVED SPACE AS STATE HOME.—The Secretary shall treat the space expanded, remodeled, or altered using the grant authorized by subsection (b), in the aggregate, as a State home facility of the State of Alaska for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 81 of title 38, United States Code, and other laws administered by the Secretary.

TITLE III—GENERAL HEALTH CARE MATTERS

Subtitle A—Prescription Copayment Adjustment

SEC. 311. STANDARDIZATION OF INCOME THRESHOLDS FOR COPAYMENT FOR OUTPATIENT MEDICATIONS AND FOR INABILITY TO DEFRAY NECESSARY EXPENSES OF CARE.

(a) STANDARDIZATION.—Section 1722A(a)(3)(B) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) to a veteran whose attributable income is not greater than the amount provided for in subsection (b) of section 1722 of this title, as adjusted from time to time under subsection (c) of that section.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Subtitle B—Extensions of Authorities

SEC. 321. EFFECTIVE DATE OF MODIFICATION OF TREATMENT FOR RETIREMENT ANNUITY PURPOSES OF CERTAIN PART-TIME SERVICE OF CERTAIN DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS HEALTH-CARE PROFESSIONALS.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The effective date of the amendment made by section 132 of the Department of Veterans Affairs Health Care Programs Enhancement Act of 2001 (Public Law 107–135; 115 Stat. 2454) shall be as follows:

(1) January 23, 2002, in the case of health care professionals referred to in subsection (c) of section 7426 of title 38, United States Code (as so amended), who retire on or after that date.

(2) The date of the enactment of this Act, in the case of health care professionals referred to in such subsection (c) who retired before January 23, 2002, but after April 7, 1986.

(b) RECOMPUTATION OF ANNUITY.—The Office of Personnel Management shall recompute the annuity of each health-care professional described in the first sentence of subsection (c) of section 7426 of title 38, United States Code (as so amended), who retired before January 23, 2002, but after April 7, 1986, in order to take into account the amendment made by section 132 of the Department of Veterans Affairs Health Care Programs Enhancement Act of 2001. Such recomputation shall be effective only with respect to annuities paid after the date of the enactment of this Act, and shall apply beginning the first day of the first month beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 322. TEN-YEAR EXTENSION OF ELIGIBILITY FOR HEALTH CARE OF VETERANS WHO SERVED IN SOUTHWEST ASIA DURING THE PERSIAN GULF WAR.

Section 1710(e)(3)(B) is amended by striking "December 31, 2002" and inserting "December 31, 2012".

REV_00349057

Subtitle C—Other Matters

SEC. 331. COVERAGE OF EMPLOYEES OF VETERANS' CANTEEN SERVICE UNDER ADDITIONAL EMPLOYMENT LAWS.

Section 7802(5) is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: "Employees and personnel under this clause may be considered for appointment in Department positions in the competitive service in the same manner that Department employees in the competitive service are considered for transfer to such positions. An employee or individual appointed as personnel under this clause who is appointed to a Department position under the authority of the preceding sentence shall be treated as having a career appointment in such position once such employee or individual meets the three-year requirement for career tenure (with any previous period of employment or appointment in the Service being counted toward satisfaction of such requirement)".

SEC. 332. PILOT PROJECT ON MEDICAL CARE OUTREACH FOR VETERANS IN STATE OF WASHINGTON THROUGH OUTREACH CLINICS.

(a) PILOT PROJECT.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall, during fiscal years 2003 and 2004, carry out a pilot project to assess the feasibility and advisability of providing outreach on health care and services for veterans in the State of Washington through outreach clinics.

(b) COMMENCEMENT.—The Secretary shall commence the pilot project not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) LOCATIONS.—The Secretary shall carry out the pilot project at two clinics in the State of Washington selected by the Secretary for purposes of the pilot project, of which—

(1) one clinic shall be located in Whatcom County, Washington; and

(2) one clinic shall be located in north central Washington, in or near Leavenworth, Washington.

(d) SERVICES.—(1) At each clinic selected for the pilot project, the Secretary shall provide basic health care services (as determined by the Secretary for purposes of the pilot project) to veterans, including diagnosis and referral to other health care facilities of the Department of Veterans Affairs as appropriate.

(2) The Secretary shall provide services at each clinic selected for the pilot project not less frequently than one day each week.

(e) REPORT.—Not later than June 1, 2004, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the pilot project. The report shall include—

REV_00349059

(1) a description of the pilot project, including for each clinic selected for the pilot project the personnel utilized, the patient workload, and the costs; and

(2) a recommendation for such modifications or expansion of the pilot project as the Secretary considers appropriate in light of the pilot project.

REV_00349060

Amend the title to read as follows: "A Bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to enhance long-term care and mental health programs for veterans, to authorize major medical facility construction, projects, to modify and extend other authorities regarding health care for veterans, and for other purposes.".

REV_00349061

I cannot make it at 12:15. Can the three of us get on the phone instead?
I definitely want to talk to both of you. Thanks.

Subject: FYI -- Final Version of ATSA Amendments

- Young.pdf - Hollings.pdf

House and Senate versions of the final ATSA amendments package are attached. The document below is a draft version of a summary of the amendments. DOT advises that Donna McLean and Sean O'Hollaren are still calling relevant persons on the Hill and in the industry to alert them to the transmittal of this package, and asks that the amendments not be widely distributed until these calls have been completed.

Important Elements of DOT "technicals" Package

* Protecting "security sensitive information" from disclosure under FOIA: DOT has an existing, excellent provision protecting security information from inappropriate disclosure (49 USC 40119), but it has two defects: (1) Congress' expansion of it in the ATSA Act did not cover freight and pipelines (just passenger transportation); and (2) the shift of TSA to DHS will deprive DOT of this authority for remaining modes. Both problems are corrected.

* Use of State and local law enforcement officers at screening locations: In a significant departure from the ATSA requirement for all-Federal screening personnel, this proposal would allow continued reliance on State/local LEO's now being used. There are several reasons for this change. One is that it is simply not possible to recruit, hire, train and deploy enough Federal LEOs to cover all screening locations by the ATSA deadline of November 19, 2002. Secondly, at some locations it does not make sense to have full-time Federal LEOs and the existing State and local LEOs can provide adequate coverage. Finally, in some locations there is adequate full-time coverage available from State and local LEOs.

* Simplification of means to assess security charges on carriers: Applies a flat, aggregate $750-million fee total on air carriers in place of the existing carrier-by-carrier determinations. This is intended as a "shot across the bow" to get air carriers more cooperative in paying fees contemplated by Congress.

* Screener citizenship requirement: Current law permits hiring a "citizen of the United States" for screener positions, but not a U.S. National. In American Samoa, the only significant location where U.S. Nationals predominate, this will help meet screening requirements.

* Alignment of TSA administrative/legal tools with Customs and other "border" agencies: The ATSA did not provide TSA with several of the standard authorities enjoyed by comparable enforcement agencies. The amendments would (1) apply current Customs Service limits on liability for baggage inspection damages to the TSA; and (2) imposition of interest charges on outstanding assessments owed but not paid to the Government (air carrier fees).

* Aligns coverage of two security mandates with FAA safety mandates: The ATSA intended to adopt the FAA's "more than 12,500 pound" criterion for imposing stricter security in two areas: flight school training and security of charter aircraft operations, but the criterion was expressed as one pound lower, brining in numerous aircraft types inadvertently. This would be corrected.

* Increased maximum civil penalty levels for security violations; "emergency order" authority: The ATSA provided to TSA the identical civil penalty maximums as available to FAA for safety violations: $1000 in the case of an individual and $10,000 in the case of an air carrier. The proposal would increase these maximums for security violations, to $10,000 and $25,000, respectively. Also, the proposal would provide TSA with the same "emergency order" authority FAA has to take immediate actions, such as shutting an airport down for serious security violations.

* Return to September 21, 2001, enactment granting liability limits to screening contractors for that date (identical to those granted air carriers). Congress reversed course in November 2000 and deprived the screening companies we contract with (e.g., Globe) and Argenbright of coverage under the "Victim Compensation" arrangements for those subject to suit for the events of September 11, 2001. The proposal would undo the November change and put the screening companies on the same footing as the air carriers.

* Clarify flexibilities for a "trusted traveler" program: The current language in section 109(3) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act permits TSA to implement out a "trusted traveler" program, but clarification is needed that it can extend to property and that otherwise applicable screening requirements can be waived.

* Screening of U.S. mail by employees of the U.S. Postal Service: This corrects an oversight in ATSA by which employees of the U.S. Postal Service are technically not "Federal government employees" under 5 USC 2105.

* Exemption of Charter Operations by the Armed Services: This provision would provide special rules for charter flights operated by the Department of Defense and the U.S. Coast Guard since their charter flights already operate under heightened security. The rules in ATSA, if applied to DoD and the Coast Guard would have affected operations and readiness.

U.S. Department of Transportation
Office of the Secretary of Transportation

GENERAL COUNSEL

400 Seventh St., S.W.
Washington, D.C. 20590

July 30, 2002

The Honorable Don Young
Chairman, Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has been working aggressively to meet the requirements of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (ATSA). Despite a significant setback last week on the Congressional funding level provided to TSA for FY 2002, we will nevertheless continue to move forward and realign our strategies and plans in continuing our efforts to meet the Congressionally imposed requirements. As a critical part of efforts to meet the intent and spirit of ATSA, the Department of Transportation recommends that the enclosed technical and related changes to the law be considered by your Committee and Congress as soon as possible.

The centerpieces of the changes relate to the supplemental air carrier fee, requirements on Federal law enforcement officers (LEOs), and the ability to fully implement an effective registered traveler program. With respect to the supplemental air carrier fee, the proposal mandates the collection of up to $750 million annually, the approximate level envisioned at passage of the security law and supported by air carrier assertions prior to enactment. On LEOs, the proposal changes the wording of the statute to ensure that TSA has the ability to continue to use State and local law enforcement officers. Finally, a proposal clarifies our authority to carry out a "trusted" or registered traveler program, ensuring that the Under Secretary has sufficient discretion in shaping and implementing the program.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the submission of these views for the consideration of the Committee.

Sincerely,

Kirk K. Van Tine

Enclosure

(q) Section 44940(a)(2) is amended--

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking "may impose a fee" and substituting "shall impose a fee"; and

(2) by amending subparagraphs (B) and (C) to read as follows:

"(B) LIMITATIONS.--

"(i) OVERALL LIMIT.--The amounts of fees collected annually from carriers, in the aggregate, under this paragraph for each of fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004 may not exceed $750,000,000.

"(ii) ADJUSTMENT OF OVERALL LIMIT.--For fiscal year 2005 and subsequent fiscal years, the overall limit under clause (i) may be determined by the Under Secretary after consideration of the economic condition of the aviation industry, inflation, or other appropriate factors. The annual overall limit, as adjusted, may not exceed the difference between the Under Secretary's estimate of the amount necessary to pay the costs of providing civil aviation services in that fiscal year and the uniform passenger fee as set forth in subsection (a)(1).

"(iii) PER-CARRIER AMOUNT.--The annual fees authorized under subparagraph (A) for fiscal year 2002 and each fiscal year thereafter shall be apportioned by the Under Secretary among air carriers and foreign air carriers subject to the fee based on market share or any other appropriate measure, as determined by the Under Secretary.

"(iv) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.--Determinations of the Under Secretary under this subparagraph are not subject to judicial review. The Under Secretary may consult with affected air carriers and foreign air carriers in making these determinations.

"(C) SPECIAL RULES FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002.--

"(i) PROPORTIONAL PAYMENTS.--The amount of fees collected under this paragraph from any carrier for fiscal year 2002 may not exceed the carrier's per-carrier amount, as set forth in clause (iii), based on the ratio of the time period between February 18, 2002 and September 30, 2002, to twelve months.

(ii) PAYMENT MADE UNDER PRIOR FEES.--Any payments of the fee described in subparagraph (A) that are received from a carrier prior to the enactment of this clause shall be credited by the Under Secretary to the amount that the carrier owes for fiscal year 2002 for the fee imposed under subsection (a)(2).".

(r)(1) Section 44940(d) is amended--

(A) in paragraph (1),

(i) by striking--

"the Under Secretary shall impose the fee under subsection (a)(1), and may impose a fee under subsection (a)(2), through the publication of notice of such fee in the Federal Register and begin collection of the fee within 60 days of the date of enactment of this Act, or as soon as possible thereafter"; and

(ii) substituting--

"the Under Secretary shall impose any fees under subsection (a), or subsequent modifications, through the publication of notices of such fees in the Federal Register and begin collection of the fees within 30 days of the date of publication of any such notice";

(B) in paragraph (2), by inserting "FOR" in the catchline after "SPECIAL RULES";

(C) by striking paragraph (3); and

(D) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3) and amending it to read as follows:

"(3) FEE COLLECTION.--Fees may be collected under this section as provided in advance in an appropriations Act.".

(2) Section 44940(e) is amended by inserting the following at the end:

"(7) INTEREST CHARGE.--(A) The failure of an air carrier or foreign air carrier to remit the required fee by the due date for remittance specified in paragraph (3) shall result in the accrual of interest. The interest shall be computed at the rate of interest established by the Secretary of the Treasury, and published in the Federal Register, for interest payments under section 12 of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. 611), as in effect at the time the payment is due.

"(B) Interest shall be paid for the period beginning on the day after the required payment date and ending on the date on which payment is made.

"(C) The amount of interest unpaid after any 30-day period shall be added to the principal amount of the debt, and a penalty accrues thereafter on the added amount.

"(D) Any interest or penalties collected under this paragraph shall be available for the same purposes as set forth in paragraph (f) of this section.

"(E) The Under Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to implement this paragraph.".

(s) Section 44940 is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(i) CORPORATE CHANGES.--In the case of a merger, acquisition, bankruptcy, corporate restructuring, reorganization, name change, or the acquisition of major aviation assets or employee resources involving one or more carriers subject to the fee authorized in subparagraph (A), as determined by the Under Secretary, the successor entity or entities engaged in air transportation or intrastate air transportation, as determined by the Under Secretary, shall be responsible for all obligations imposed on carriers pursuant to subsection (a)(2), including the submission of information and the payment of fees. The determinations of the Under Secretary under this paragraph are not subject to judicial review.".

(t) Section 46301(a) is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(8) AVIATION SECURITY VIOLATIONS.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection , the maximum civil penalty for violating chapter 449 or another requirement under this title administered by the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall be $10,000, except that the maximum civil penalty shall be $25,000 in the case of a person operating an aircraft for the transportation of passengers or property for compensation (except an airman serving as an airman).".

(u)(1) Section 46301(g) is amended by inserting ", the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security," after "Secretary"."

(2) Section 46105(c) is amended by--

(1) inserting "(1)" before the first sentence; and

(2) adding a new paragraph at the end, as follows:

"(2) When the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security is of the opinion that an emergency exists relative to security and requires immediate action, the Under Secretary, on the initiative of the Under Secretary or on complaint, may issue orders immediately to meet the emergency, with or without regard to this part and subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5. The Under Secretary shall begin a proceeding immediately about an emergency under this subsection and give preference, when practicable, to the proceeding.".

(v) Section 46301(d)(2) is amended--

(1) in the first sentence, by striking "46302, 46303,"; and

(2) in the second sentence, by--

(A) striking "chapter 449" and inserting "section 114(l), section 40113, chapter 449"; and

(B) striking "or a regulation prescribed or order issued under such chapter 449" and inserting ", section 46302, 46303, or 46318 of this title, or a regulation prescribed or order issued under any of those provisions.".

(w) Chapter 465 is amended as follows:

(1) The word "screening" is deleted from the heading of section 46503; and

(2) the word "screening" is deleted from the item referring to section 46503 in the chapter analysis for chapter 465.

(x) Section 47115(i) is amended by striking "non-federal" each place it appears and substituting "non-Federal".

(y) Section 48107 is amended by striking " section 44912(a)(4)(A)" and substituting " section 44912(a)(5)(A)".

(z) Chapter 449 (and its analysis) are further amended as follows:

(1) In sections 44903(i)(1), 44942(b), and 44943(b) and (c), strike the words "Under Secretary for Transportation Security" wherever they appear and substitute "Under Secretary".

(2) In sections 44939(a)(1)(B) and (C), strike the words "Under Secretary of Transportation for Transportation Security" and substitute "Under Secretary".

(3) In sections 44942(a)(1), 44943(a), and 44944(a)(1), strike the words "Under Secretary for Transportation Security" and substitute "Under Secretary of Transportation for Security".

(4) In section 44943(c), strike the words "Aviation Security Act" and substitute "Aviation and Transportation Security Act".

(5) In section 44901, subsection (d)(1) is redesignated as subsection (d) and its subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) are redesignated as paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), respectively.

(6) In section 44902(b), strike "(1) Performance plan and report.--", redesignate subparagraphs (A) and (B) as subsections (1) and (2), respectively, and redesignate clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

(7) The analysis for chapter 449 is amended by inserting the following after the item for 44941:

"44942. Performance goals and objectives.
"44943. Performance management plans.".

SEC. 2. AVIATION AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS.

(a) Except as otherwise provided, a reference in this section to an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision is deemed to be a reference to a section or other provision of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; November 19, 2001).

(b) Section 106(b)(2) is amended--

(1) in paragraph (A), by inserting "or subparagraph (B) of this paragraph" after "paragraph (1)"; and

(2) by striking "Secretary" in the first sentence of paragraph (B) and substituting "Under Secretary".

(c) Section 109(a)(3) is amended by--

(1) striking "trusted passenger programs" and substituting "trusted passenger and property programs";

(2) inserting "and property, notwithstanding the screening requirements established by section 110," after "expedite the security screening of passengers"; and

(3) inserting "and property which" after "passengers who".

(d)(1) Section 110 is amended by striking subsection (a) and redesignating subsections (b), (c), and (d), as subsections (a), (b), and (c), respectively.

(2)(A) Section 110, as amended by this subsection, is further amended by striking "Federal law enforcement officers" in subsection (b)(1), as redesignated, and substituting "law enforcement officers".

(B) Section 44920(e) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "Federal Government law enforcement officers" and substituting "law enforcement officers".

(e) Section 119(c) is amended by striking "section 47192(3)(J)" and substituting "section 47102(3)(J)".

(f) Section 132 is amended by adding the following at the end:

"(c) EXEMPTION FOR CHARTER OPERATIONS TO PROVIDE TRANSPORTATION TO THE ARMED FORCES.--The provisions of this Act shall not apply to the operation of, or to the passengers and property carried by, aircraft when employed to provide charter transportation to the armed forces, except for an operation to or from an airport described in section 44903(c) of title 49, United States Code. For an operation to or from an airport described in section 44903(c), the screening, and passenger manifest provisions of this Act shall not apply to passengers and property loaded onto such aircraft. The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, shall establish security procedures relating to the operation of such aircraft to or from an airport described in section 44903(c) of title 49.".

(g) Section 143 is amended by striking the period at the end and inserting "dated April 30, 1996.".

SEC. 3. AIR TRANSPORTATION SAFETY AND SYSTEM STABILIZATION ACT AMENDMENTS.

(a) Section 402(1) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by deletion of the last sentence, as added by section 201(d)(1) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; Nov. 19, 2001).

(b) Section 408(c) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by deletion of the last sentence, as added by section 201(b)(3) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; Nov. 19, 2001).

(c) Section 201(b)(2) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by--

(1) inserting "or during the period specified by the last sentence of this paragraph" following "enactment of this Act" in the first sentence; and

(2) inserting the following at the end:

"The period specified by this sentence is the period that begins on the date of enactment of this sentence and ends one year after the date of enactment, except that the Secretary may, at the Secretary's discretion, extend the end of the period for up to 365 days beyond one year after the date of enactment.".

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect simultaneously with the enactment of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; November 19, 2001), with title 49, United States Code, deemed to read as amended by that Act. For purposes of all Federal laws, the amendments made by this Act shall be treated as being included in the Aviation and Transportation Security Act at the time of enactment of that Act.

Explanation of Amendments

The technical corrections contained in this enclosure range from literal typographical corrections to changes needed to clarify or effectuate the intention of particular provisions in the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (ATSA) and Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act. Unless otherwise indicated, all references are to title 49, United States Code.

Sec. 1(b): 49 U.S.C. 114(j) sets forth acquisition authorities of the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security (Under Secretary) but in paragraph (1)(D), incorrectly refers to the Secretary of Transportation rather than the Under Secretary. This reference is corrected by the amendment.

Sec. 1(c): 49 U.S.C. 114(o) directs the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to use the FAA acquisition system specified by 49 U.S.C. 40110 as to "acquisitions of equipment, supplies, and materials." That listing omits the authority to acquire "services, including personal services," which is listed as an acquisition authority of the TSA Under Secretary in 49 U.S.C. 114(j)(1)(D). In the interest of clarity, this amendment would list parallel authorities in the two subsections of section 114.

Also, the amendment clarifies that the same system used by the FAA for appeals of acquisition decisions will be used by the TSA.

Sec. 1(d): 49 U.S.C. 115 establishes the Transportation Security Oversight Board (TSOB) and assigns it duties, including the duty to review "emergency regulations and security directives" issued by the TSA without notice and comment by the public. However, the scope of review specified by section 115(c)(1) ("review and ratify or disapprove") burdens the TSOB with taking an action in each case. It is also inconsistent with the underlying emergency authority at 49 U.S.C. 114(l)(2), which provides "[a]ny regulation or security directive issued under this paragraph shall remain effective unless disapproved by the Board or rescinded by the Under Secretary." The amendment would provide the TSOB with review authority that only necessitates action in the case of a disapproval.

Sec. 1(e): 49 U.S.C. 326 contains long-standing authority for the Secretary of Transportation to accept and use gifts of property and, in the case of "aviation powers and duties," a gift of services. In implementing the TSA's complex new authorities over security in other modes of transportation, the Under Secretary needs comparable authority to accept, when proffered, an offer by a security or transportation expert to work without compensation for the TSA. This is consistent with the breadth of intermodal responsibility accorded the new Under Secretary. This amendment substitutes "Departmental powers and duties" for "aviation powers and duties" to make such a gift of services possible.

Sec. 1(f): This amendment deletes a superseded reference to chapter 449 from a listing of FAA authorities because every section of the chapter except 44918 has transferred to the Transportation Security Administration.

Sec. 1(g): As amended by ATSA, 49 U.S.C. 40119(a) provides that the Under Secretary must conduct research and development activities related to protecting passengers and property against acts of criminal violence and aircraft piracy. The original references to the FAA Administrator would be returned to section 40119(a) to meet the FAA's need for continued research and development activities to protect the FAA's air traffic control facilities and other facilities against acts that would endanger air transportation. This section also would add that a purpose of the research is protection against acts of terrorism.

Section 40119(b) provides protection against release to the public of security information and research information vital to improved transportation security systems. ATSA broadened the provision from aviation coverage to all modes of transportation and shifted its execution to the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security. However, continued reference to "passenger transportation" improperly restricts the effectiveness of the amended provision for all modes (e.g., pipelines, freight railroad and truck transportation, and sea-going container transportation do not involve passenger movements). This amendment would, first, remove the restrictions that limit the provision's effectiveness for all modes of transportation. Second, the authority vested in the Under Secretary would be elevated to the Secretary of Transportation so that, in the event the Under Secretary authorities shift to the proposed Department of Homeland Security, the Department will not lose this valuable authority. The proposed amendment in subsection (h) below assures that the authority is available to the TSA, whether or not a shift occurs. Third, the cross-references to certain FAA R&D authorities are removed, making clear that the authority covers security R&D for all modes, including the FAA.

Sec. 1(h): In tandem with the amendment proposed by subsection (g) to perfect the authority at the Department of Transportation to protect security-sensitive information across all modes, identical authority would be repeated at 49 U.S.C. 114 (enabling authority for the TSA) so that this valuable authority can follow the TSA to a new Department of Homeland Security, should such an action be taken by Congress and enacted. Whether or not legislation is passed, this amendment houses the needed authority with the TSA.

Sec. 1(i): Under 44901(a) (Screening of passengers and property carried aboard passenger aircraft), all screening must be carried out by Federal government employees starting on November 19, 2002, except for identifying passengers and baggage for screening under the CAPPS and known shipper programs. Under this provision, the term "Federal government employee" is defined by reference to 5 U.S.C. 2105, which excludes employees of the U.S. Postal Service. The exclusion of Postal Service employees as potential federal screeners precludes

TSA and the Postal Service from pursuing the possibility of having U.S. mail carried aboard passenger flights screened by Postal employees (in accordance with standards and procedures established by TSA). As TSA considers options for ensuring that such mail is screened, the involvement of the Postal Service may be part of the solution. Moreover, Postal Service employees are already federal employees for a number of purposes and they perform a federal function. Therefore, the inclusion of Postal Service employees as eligible screeners for U.S. mail aligns with the intent of Congress in assigning the screening function to federal employees. The proposed amendment would specify that, for purposes of section 44901(a), U.S. Mail carried aboard passenger aircraft may be screened by employees and officers of the Postal Service.

Sec. 1(j): This amendment corrects in one case, and deletes in another, incorrect cross-references in 49 U.S.C. 44901(e) and (g).

Sec. 1(k): While Federal customs law contains needed provisions dealing with the liability of the United States for unintentional damages incurred in passenger and property inspection, 49 U.S.C. 44901 does not contain such a provision. A comparable provision is needed for TSA inspections of personal property during the airport screening process, thereby permitting a passenger to be administratively compensated for property loss under the Small Claims Act up to $1000. The amendment makes this addition to section 44901.

Sec. 1(l): Among other things, section 44903 mandates establishment of 20 or more pilot programs for testing and evaluation of airport secure-area access-control technologies but, in subsection (c)(3), incorrectly refers to the FAA Administrator rather than the Under Secretary. This reference is corrected by the amendment. Also, the ATSA added three provisions to 49 U.S.C. 44903 as "subsection (h)." Items (2) and (3) of this amendment redesignate two of the three subsections.

Sec. 1(m): This amendment clarifies that the "Under Secretary" reference in 49 U.S.C. 44909(c)(2)(F) is a reference to the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security. Also, an obsolete deadline (March 1991) is deleted from the text of 49 U.S.C. 44909(a)(1).

Sec. 1(n): 49 U.S.C. 44935(e)(2)(A)(ii) requires that every security screening employee hired by the TSA be "a citizen of the United States." This excludes a "national of the United States," as defined in section 1101(a)(22) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(22)). That section defines a "national of the United States" as either a U.S. citizen or a non-citizen who "owes permanent allegiance to the United States." The citizens of American Samoa, a U.S. territory, are the principal remaining population that enjoy "U.S. national" status under our laws (along with residents of Swains Island). The amendment would permit hiring a citizen or a national of the United States for these positions.

Also, the designation of the last subsection of section 44935 is changed from (i) to (k) by this amendment to eliminate a conflict with another subsection (i) earlier in the section.

Sec. 1(o): Among other things, section 44936 mandates new employment investigation requirements but, in subsection (a)(1)(B)(iii)), incorrectly refers to the FAA Administrator rather than the Under Secretary regarding the designation of airport areas for which the investigation is required for access. This amendment corrects the reference. Also a typographical error is corrected.

Sec. 1(p): 49 U.S.C. 44939 establishes new restrictions on flight school training in order to verify the background of student pilots. The restrictions apply on the basis of the size of aircraft on which training is sought, using as a limit the standard maximum certificated takeoff weight limit (more than 12,500 pounds) relied on by the FAA and other certificating authorities world-wide to distinguish lighter-weight from heavier-weight aircraft. Unfortunately, the use of the terminology in ATSA differs by one pound from the standard terminology, bringing under regulation (in 44939 and also under section 132(a) of ATSA (security regulation of charter aircraft operations)) a large population of aircraft that were not intended to be covered by Congress. This amendment modifies the terminology in section 44939 and section 132(a) to align with the standard distinction.

Sec. 1(q): Section 44940(a)(2) specifies the basis for collection of a security fee on air carriers and foreign air carriers that approximates the aggregate expenditures by those carriers in the year 2000 relating to passenger and property screening services. Experience to date with the present process of attempting to allocate the expected fees of up to $750 million annually has shown that disagreements over cost allocation in the case of each carrier can be extensive, very technical, and extremely time-consuming, delaying an ultimate outcome that is already dictated and which is central to funding TSA operations as Congress directed. To foreclose this complex and lengthy process and achieve Congress' goal, this amendment amends section 44940(a)(2) to substitute a fixed, aggregate, annual fee level of up to $750 million for the historically based cost-allocation approach. Instead of being discretionary, the annual fees would be mandated if passenger fees do not fund all services.

The allocation of the aggregate fees of $750 million annually among the carriers would be based on market share or any other appropriate measure. For the benefit of domestic and foreign air carriers, a new requirement applicable in all years would be that the Under Secretary may consult with affected air carriers and foreign air carriers in making all determinations underlying the fees.

To assist in the mid-year 2002 transition to the new method of allocating the carrier charge, the treatment of partial year fees in existing 44940(a)(2)(C) would be modified to allow crediting of fees paid to date under the current method.

This amendment would also provide a basis for a potential increase in the aggregate annual fee above $750 million in 2005 and thereafter, taking into consideration the economic condition of the aviation industry, inflation, or other appropriate factors at the time, while limiting any potential increase to the level of total TSA expenditures for the security services involved in a particular year, minus the projected contribution of the passenger fee to covering that total.

Sec. 1(r): While the per-passenger fee established by section 44940(a)(1) would not be modified by this proposal, this amendment contains three administrative changes. First, section 44940(d) provides a means for directly imposing the initial per-passenger fee without reliance on the standard rulemaking process. This amendment would amend sections 44940(d)(1) and 44940(d)(3) to provide that the direct method of imposing fees would apply to both the per-passenger and the carrier fees, and to subsequent modifications of either fee. This is necessary and desirable to align the fees quickly with the cost structure of the TSA as it evolves.

Second, the wording of section 44940(d)(4) suggests a possibility that collections must stop if they exceed the appropriated funding level. Stopping and restarting the collections process is administratively difficult. This change would enable DOT to continue collections of passenger fees, while still reserving spending authority for appropriations legislation.

Third, while Federal tax and customs law contain standard provisions for the imposition of interest charges on outstanding assessments owed but not paid to the Government (See 26 U.S.C. 6621 and 6601, and 19 U.S.C. 1505), 49 U.S.C. 44940 does not contain such a provision. To induce timely payments and discourage unjustified litigation, a comparable provision is needed for both of the new security fees. This amendment adds authority to impose an interest charge for delayed payment to section 44940(e). The interest for which an air carrier would be liable would be equivalent to the interest that the Government owes to contractors for delayed payments beyond a contractually established due date, or to contractors for meritorious claims under the Contract Disputes Act.

Sec. 1(s): One other adjustment is proposed for the per-carrier fee in section 44940(a)(2). To address arguments that the successor to a bankrupt carrier is not responsible for the proportion of historical expenditures made by that carrier in 2000 for security services, a new subsection (i) would be added to section 44940 to state explicitly that the successor carrier is liable for the appropriate portion of these historical expenditures by the predecessor air carrier.

Sec. 1(t): Although section 140(d) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act amended the Penalties chapter of Subtitle VII of title 49 to cover violations of law enforced by the TSA as well as the FAA, the chapter was not updated with a penalty-level structure that would reflect the enormity of consequences that can follow from a terrorist act and therefore the importance of penalizing violations of TSA security regulations and orders. This amendment would raise the basic $1,000-per-violation level of the federal aviation statute (in place since the 1950's and only adjusted upward for inflation since 1997 to about $1,100 per violation) to $10,000 for aviation security violations by persons and $25,000 for air carriers. The proposal makes no change to (1) the penalty structure for safety violations or (2) the current-law maximum penalty of $25,000 for individuals that interfere with a cabin or flight crew.

Sec. 1(u) and (v): Section 140 of ATSA extended some of the enforcement and penalty provisions of the Aviation Subtitle in title 49 to apply also to TSA authorities. The amendments in subsection (o) perfect the section 140 amendments, by (1) adding a needed reference to the Under Secretary in section 46301(g) of title 49 with respect to judicial review, and (2) aligning the Under Secretary's and Administrator's general authority to issue and enforce orders and regulations under section 46105. The Administrator's authority to issue orders and regulations on an emergency basis is found in section 46105(c). The Under Secretary has authority under 49 U.S.C. 114(l) to issue regulations on an emergency basis. However, TSA authority to issue orders, e.g., cease and desist orders on an emergency basis, was not addressed. The amendment would revise section 46105(c) to provide TSA needed authority to issue orders on an emergency basis.

The amendments in subsection (v) also build on section 140 of ATSA by transferring from the FAA to the TSA administrative-civil-penalty responsibility for two violations in current law that are directed to aircraft security and should be enforced by the TSA. They prohibit an individual from (1) providing false information about hijackings and other matters (section 46302), and (2) carrying a weapon when on or attempting to board an aircraft (section 46303). In addition, the amendment of subsection (v) would also authorize the TSA to impose civil penalties against persons who interfere with a cabin or flight crew (section 46318).

Sec. 1(w): This amendment deletes the qualifier "screening" from the section heading of 49 U.S.C. 46503 because the coverage of the section is broader than screening personnel, and extends to any Federal, airport, or air carrier employee with security duties within an airport.

Sec. 1(x): This amendment corrects two typographical errors.

Sec. 1(y) and (z): These amendments correct a number of typographical errors in chapter 449.

Sec. 2(b): The reference in section 106(b)(2)(A) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act to "paragraph 1" airports covers only a subset of airports covered by the provision and needs to be expanded to also cover the airports listing in subsection (b)(2)(B). Also, the reference to "Secretary" in section 106(b)(2)(B) is inconsistent with the role of the Under Secretary under this provision in resolving conflicts over the security issue in question.

Sec. 2(c): Section 109(a)(3) of the ATSA provides discretionary authority in the Under Secretary to implement a "trusted passenger" program. This amendment clarifies that this program can be implemented without conflicting with the otherwise applicable screening requirements imposed by section 110 of ATSA and clarifies the authority to apply to property accompanying a passenger in the cabin or hold.

Sec. 2(d): Section 110(a) attempted to amend a provision of title 49 that is repealed by the ATSA and is therefore ineffective. This amendment would delete section 110(a).

Section 110 of the ATSA indicates that all checkpoint law enforcement officers (LEOs) must be Federal employees by November 19, 2002. At some airports around the country, it may make sense to have a Federal LEO workforce at screening checkpoints. For other airports, it may make more sense to indefinitely retain a full or partial State and local LEO workforce. Ultimately, TSA should have greater flexibility to address its LEO needs. Allowing the continued use of State and local officers has a variety of benefits, such as easing the transitional aspects of TSA's program, improving integration of airport law enforcement missions, and helping TSA target Federal personnel resources where they are needed most. Therefore, this section modifies the requirement in section 110 of ATSA that a sufficient number of "Federal law enforcement officers" be deployed by November 19, 2002, by dropping the word "Federal" (along with conforming changes to the pilot program in section 108 of the ATSA).

Sec. 2(e): This amendment corrects a typographical error.

Sec. 2(f): Section 132 requires, among other things, that the TSA implement an aviation security program for charter air carriers that operate large aircraft. Because the Department of Defense and the U.S. Coast Guard operate significant charter aircraft operations in support of cargo and personnel (and dependent) movements, section 132 should explicitly accommodate these specialized operations. This amendment would add a new subsection (c) to address armed services charter operations. Every year, DoD and Coast Guard contract or otherwise arrange with air carriers to perform hundreds of charter flights to provide transportation for DoD and Coast Guard passengers and cargo. These flights are performed by certificated air carriers operating in full compliance with applicable Federal Aviation Regulations and TSA regulations. However, defense operational and readiness needs have required development of procedures that vary from those used in the commercial context. The movement of large numbers of armed passengers, for example, is both common and necessary to meet mission requirements. In addition, DoD and Coast Guard charter flights frequently originate at general aviation or military airfields that lack the passenger, baggage, and cargo handling infrastructure found at commercial airports. Passenger, baggage, and cargo processing in such instances is significantly different than that used in commercial operations, and must often be performed by military personnel. Passenger manifests are compiled by DoD and Coast Guard rather than the air carrier, and may be accomplished in environments that do not lend themselves to automation or the collection of extensive passenger data. The proposed amendment would ensure that the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, would establish security procedures relating to the operation of chartered aircraft to or from an airport described in section 44903(c) of title 49.

Sec. 2(g): Section 143 of the ATSA could be misconstrued to apply to a large category of airports when it is intended to apply to a single situation. The amendment would properly tailor the coverage of the section.

Sec. 3: The Federal Government has recognized the enormity and singular nature of the September 11 attacks on New York City and the Pentagon by enactment of special procedures for compensation of victims of these events. Congress also acted to limit the liability of involved airlines to the limits of their insurance coverage for the events of that day. The defined term "air carrier" in federal law has long included "employees and agents" of an airline, consistent with agency law, and that definition was employed by section 402(1) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (40101 note). This arrangement was revised by amendments contained in section 201 of the ATSA, however, to intentionally exclude from the liability limitation any agent of the airlines other than "an airline or airport sponsor or director, officer, or employee of an airline or airport sponsor." This action has unfortunately had the serious adverse consequence of making the security firms now contracting with the TSA or airlines for passenger screener services (since transfer of screening responsibility to the federal government on or before February 17, 2002) the sole parties (other than knowing participants in the attacks) subject to unlimited liability for the events of that day. The potential for unlimited damage awards against these firms constitutes an unnecessary and destabilizing interference with the ability of these firms to provide critical security services in a transition period to full federal screening services by November 2002. Accordingly, this amendment simply returns the relevant provisions of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act to their originally enacted terms.

Also, Congress acted to provide a six-month transition period following September 11 in which the liability of U.S. air carriers can be limited to a maximum of $100 million in aggregate claims by third parties, at the discretion of the Secretary of Transportation, if the Secretary determines that the air carrier is the victim of an act of terrorism. In this event, the federal government is liable for claims above $100 million against air carriers. Also, punitive damages are not allowed in recognition that the air carrier employs its utmost efforts to prevent terrorist acts.

The transition period ended March 20, 2002, but it is evident that adequate commercial coverage for domestic terrorism is not readily available. Extension of the cap on claims would encourage private insurers to re-enter the market and would make private insurance coverage options more affordable.

U.S. Department of Transportation
Office of the Secretary of Transportation

GENERAL COUNSEL

400 Seventh St., S.W.
Washington, D.C. 20590

July 30, 2002

The Honorable Ernest F. Hollings
Chairman
Committee on Commerce,
Science, and Transportation
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has been working aggressively to meet the requirements of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (ATSA). Despite a significant setback last week on the Congressional funding level provided to TSA for FY 2002, we will nevertheless continue to move forward and realign our strategies and plans in continuing our efforts to meet the Congressionally imposed requirements. As a critical part of efforts to meet the intent and spirit of ATSA, the Department of Transportation recommends that the enclosed technical and related changes to the law be considered by your Committee and Congress as soon as possible.

The centerpieces of the changes relate to the supplemental air carrier fee, requirements on Federal law enforcement officers (LEOs), and the ability to fully implement an effective registered traveler program. With respect to the supplemental air carrier fee, the proposal mandates the collection of up to $750 million annually, the approximate level envisioned at passage of the security law and supported by air carrier assertions prior to enactment. On LEOs, the proposal changes the wording of the statute to ensure that TSA has the ability to continue to use State and local law enforcement officers. Finally, a proposal clarifies our authority to carry out a "trusted" or registered traveler program, ensuring that the Under Secretary has sufficient discretion in shaping and implementing the program.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the submission of these views for the consideration of the Committee.

Sincerely,

Kirk K. Van Tine

SEC. 1. TITLE 49 TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.

(a) Except as otherwise provided, a reference in this section to an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision is deemed to be a reference to a section or other provision of title 49, United States Code.

(b) Section 114(j)(1)(D) is amended by striking "Secretary" and substituting "Under Secretary".

(c) Section 114(o) is amended by striking "equipment, supplies, and materials" each place it appears and substituting "supplies, services and property", and by adding the following at the end:

"Any appeals of decisions made under the acquisition systems developed under this section and section 40110 of this title shall remain solely as provided for under section 46110 of this title.".

(d) Section 115(c)(1) is amended by striking "review and ratify or disapprove" and substituting "review", and by striking "Transportation security" and substituting "Transportation Security".

(e) Section 326(a) is amended by striking "aviation duties and powers" and substituting "Departmental duties and powers".

(f) Section 40109(b) is amended by striking "40103(b)(1) and (2), 40119, 44901, 44903, 44906, and 44935-44937" and substituting "40103(b)(1) and (2) and 40119".

(g) Section 40119 is amended as follows:

(1) in subsection (a), by striking--

(A) "Under Secretary of Transportation for Security" and substituting "Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration"; and

(B) "and aircraft piracy" and substituting ", aircraft piracy, and acts of terrorism"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking--

(A) "Under Secretary" the first time it appears and substituting "Secretary of Transportation, notwithstanding the establishment of a Department of Homeland Security,"

(B) "or research and development activities under section 44501(a) or (c), 44502(a)(1) or (3), (b), or (c), 44504, 44505, 44507, 44508, 44511, 44512, 44513, 44901, 44903(a), (b), (c), or (e), 44905, 44912, 44935, 44936, or 44938(a) or (b) of this title if the Under Secretary" and substituting "activities under this title if the Secretary; and

(C) "the safety of passengers in transportation" and substituting "transportation safety".

(h) Section 114 is amended by inserting the following at the end:

"(s) NON-DISCLOSURE OF SECURITY ACTIVITIES.-- (1) Notwithstanding section 552 of title 5, the Under Secretary shall prescribe regulations prohibiting disclosure of information obtained or developed in carrying out activities under authority of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; Nov. 19, 2001) or under chapter 449 of this title if the Under Secretary decides disclosing the information would--

"(A) be an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;

"(B) reveal a trade secret or privileged or confidential commercial or financial information; or

"(C) be detrimental to the security of transportation.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection does not authorize information to be withheld from a committee of Congress authorized to have the information.

"(3) Except as otherwise provided by law, the Under Secretary may not transfer a duty or power under this subsection to another department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government.".

(i) Section 44901(a) is amended by adding after "(as defined in section 2105 of title 5 of the United States Code)," the phrase "or, in the case of United States mail, by an employee or officer of the United States Postal Service under standards and procedures established by the Under Secretary".

(j) Section 44901 is further amended as follows:

(1) in section 44901(e), strike "subsection (b)(1)(A)" and substitute "subsection (d)(1)(A)";

(2) in section 44901(g)(2), strike "Except at airports required to enter into agreements under subsection (c), the" and substitute "The".

(k) Section 44901 is further amended by inserting the following at the end:

"(i) LIABILITY FOR SECURITY SCREENING INSPECTIONS.-- (1) An officer or employee of the United States, acting in good faith and acting within the scope of employment as determined by the Under Secretary, shall not be liable for any claim arising from the inspection of persons or property under the authority of this section, as determined by the Under Secretary or section 44903 of this title.

"(2) The provisions of chapter 171 and section 1346(b) of title 28, United States Code, shall not apply to any claim arising from the loss, detention, or negligent handling of property subject to security screening operations under this section or section 44903 of this title.".

(l) Section 44903 is amended as follows:

(1) in subsection (c)(3), strike "Administrator" and substitute "Under Secretary";

(2) redesignate subsection (h), as added by section 126(b) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, as subsection (j); and

(3) redesignate subsection (h), as added by section 144 of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, as subsection (k).

(m) Section 44909 is amended as follows:

(1) in section 44909(a)(1), strike "Not later than March 16, 1991, the" and substituting "The"; and

(2) in section 44909(c)(2)(F), strike "Under Secretary" and substitute "Under Secretary of Transportation for Security".

(n) Section 44935 is amended as follows:

(1) in section 44935(e)(2)(A)(ii), by striking "citizen of the United States" and substituting "citizen of the United States or a national of the United States, as defined in section 1101(a)(22) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(22))"; and

(2) by redesignating the last subsection, relating to accessibility of computer-based training facilities, as subsection (k).

(o) Section 44936(a)(1) is amended as follows:

(1) in subsection (a)(1)(A), by striking "Transportation Security,," and substituting "Security,"; and

(2) in subsection (a)(1)(B)(iii), by striking "Administrator" and substituting "Under Secretary".

(p)(1) Section 44939(a) is amended by striking "12,500 pounds or more" and substituting "more than 12,500 pounds".

(2) Section 132(a) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; November 19, 2001) is amended by striking "12,500 pounds or more" and substituting "more than 12,500 pounds".

(q) Section 44940(a)(2) is amended--

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking "may impose a fee" and substituting "shall impose a fee"; and

(2) by amending subparagraphs (B) and (C) to read as follows:

"(B) LIMITATIONS.--

"(i) OVERALL LIMIT.--The amounts of fees collected annually from carriers, in the aggregate, under this paragraph for each of fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004 may not exceed $750,000,000.

"(ii) ADJUSTMENT OF OVERALL LIMIT.--For fiscal year 2005 and subsequent fiscal years, the overall limit under clause (i) may be determined by the Under Secretary after consideration of the economic condition of the aviation industry, inflation, or other appropriate factors. The annual overall limit, as adjusted, may not exceed the difference between the Under Secretary's estimate of the amount necessary to pay the costs of providing civil aviation services in that fiscal year and the uniform passenger fee as set forth in subsection (a)(1).

"(iii) PER-CARRIER AMOUNT.--The annual fees authorized under subparagraph (A) for fiscal year 2002 and each fiscal year thereafter shall be apportioned by the Under Secretary among air carriers and foreign air carriers subject to the fee based on market share or any other appropriate measure, as determined by the Under Secretary.

"(iv) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.--Determinations of the Under Secretary under this subparagraph are not subject to judicial review. The Under Secretary may consult with affected air carriers and foreign air carriers in making these determinations.

"(C) SPECIAL RULES FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002.--

"(i) PROPORTIONAL PAYMENTS.--The amount of fees collected under this paragraph from any carrier for fiscal year 2002 may not exceed the carrier's per-carrier amount, as set forth in clause (iii), based on the ratio of the time period between February 18, 2002 and September 30, 2002, to twelve months.

(ii) PAYMENT MADE UNDER PRIOR FEES.--Any payments of the fee described in subparagraph (A) that are received from a carrier prior to the enactment of this clause shall be credited by the Under Secretary to the amount that the carrier owes for fiscal year 2002 for the fee imposed under subsection (a)(2).".

(r)(1) Section 44940(d) is amended--

(A) in paragraph (1),

(i) by striking--

"the Under Secretary shall impose the fee under subsection (a)(1), and may impose a fee under subsection (a)(2), through the publication of notice of such fee in the Federal Register and begin collection of the fee within 60 days of the date of enactment of this Act, or as soon as possible thereafter"; and

(ii) substituting--

"the Under Secretary shall impose any fees under subsection (a), or subsequent modifications, through the publication of notices of such fees in the Federal Register and begin collection of the fees within 30 days of the date of publication of any such notice";

(B) in paragraph (2), by inserting "FOR" in the catchline after "SPECIAL RULES";

(C) by striking paragraph (3); and

(D) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3) and amending it to read as follows:

"(3) FEE COLLECTION.--Fees may be collected under this section as provided in advance in an appropriations Act.".

(2) Section 44940(e) is amended by inserting the following at the end:

"(7) INTEREST CHARGE.--(A) The failure of an air carrier or foreign air carrier to remit the required fee by the due date for remittance specified in paragraph (3) shall result in the accrual of interest. The interest shall be computed at the rate of interest established by the Secretary of the Treasury, and published in the Federal Register, for interest payments under section 12 of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. 611), as in effect at the time the payment is due.

"(B) Interest shall be paid for the period beginning on the day after the required payment date and ending on the date on which payment is made.

"(C) The amount of interest unpaid after any 30-day period shall be added to the principal amount of the debt, and a penalty accrues thereafter on the added amount.

"(D) Any interest or penalties collected under this paragraph shall be available for the same purposes as set forth in paragraph (f) of this section.

"(E) The Under Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to implement this paragraph.".

(s) Section 44940 is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(i) CORPORATE CHANGES.--In the case of a merger, acquisition, bankruptcy, corporate restructuring, reorganization, name change, or the acquisition of major aviation assets or employee resources involving one or more carriers subject to the fee authorized in subparagraph (A), as determined by the Under Secretary, the successor entity or entities engaged in air transportation or intrastate air transportation, as determined by the Under Secretary, shall be responsible for all obligations imposed on carriers pursuant to subsection (a)(2), including the submission of information and the payment of fees. The determinations of the Under Secretary under this paragraph are not subject to judicial review.".

(t) Section 46301(a) is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(8) AVIATION SECURITY VIOLATIONS.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection , the maximum civil penalty for violating chapter 449 or another requirement under this title administered by the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall be $10,000, except that the maximum civil penalty shall be $25,000 in the case of a person operating an aircraft for the transportation of passengers or property for compensation (except an airman serving as an airman).".

(u)(1) Section 46301(g) is amended by inserting ", the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security," after "Secretary"."

(2) Section 46105(c) is amended by--

(1) inserting "(1)" before the first sentence; and

(2) adding a new paragraph at the end, as follows:

"(2) When the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security is of the opinion that an emergency exists relative to security and requires immediate action, the Under Secretary, on the initiative of the Under Secretary or on complaint, may issue orders immediately to meet the emergency, with or without regard to this part and subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5. The Under Secretary shall begin a proceeding immediately about an emergency under this subsection and give preference, when practicable, to the proceeding.".

(v) Section 46301(d)(2) is amended--

(1) in the first sentence, by striking "46302, 46303,"; and

(2) in the second sentence, by--

(A) striking "chapter 449" and inserting "section 114(l), section 40113, chapter 449"; and

(B) striking "or a regulation prescribed or order issued under such chapter 449" and inserting ", section 46302, 46303, or 46318 of this title, or a regulation prescribed or order issued under any of those provisions.".

(w) Chapter 465 is amended as follows:

(1) The word "screening" is deleted from the heading of section 46503; and

(2) the word "screening" is deleted from the item referring to section 46503 in the chapter analysis for chapter 465.

(x) Section 47115(i) is amended by striking "non-federal" each place it appears and substituting "non-Federal".

(y) Section 48107 is amended by striking " section 44912(a)(4)(A)" and substituting " section 44912(a)(5)(A)".

(z) Chapter 449 (and its analysis) are further amended as follows:

(1) In sections 44903(i)(1), 44942(b), and 44943(b) and (c), strike the words "Under Secretary for Transportation Security" wherever they appear and substitute "Under Secretary".

(2) In sections 44939(a)(1)(B) and (C), strike the words "Under Secretary of Transportation for Transportation Security" and substitute "Under Secretary".

(3) In sections 44942(a)(1), 44943(a), and 44944(a)(1), strike the words "Under Secretary for Transportation Security" and substitute "Under Secretary of Transportation for Security".

(4) In section 44943(c), strike the words "Aviation Security Act" and substitute "Aviation and Transportation Security Act".

(5) In section 44901, subsection (d)(1) is redesignated as subsection (d) and its subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) are redesignated as paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), respectively.

(6) In section 44902(b), strike "(1) Performance plan and report.--", redesignate subparagraphs (A) and (B) as subsections (1) and (2), respectively, and redesignate clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

(7) The analysis for chapter 449 is amended by inserting the following after the item for 44941:

"44942. Performance goals and objectives.
"44943. Performance management plans.".

SEC. 2. AVIATION AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS.

(a) Except as otherwise provided, a reference in this section to an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision is deemed to be a reference to a section or other provision of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; November 19, 2001).

(b) Section 106(b)(2) is amended--

(1) in paragraph (A), by inserting "or subparagraph (B) of this paragraph" after "paragraph (1)"; and

(2) by striking "Secretary" in the first sentence of paragraph (B) and substituting "Under Secretary".

(c) Section 109(a)(3) is amended by--

(1) striking "trusted passenger programs" and substituting "trusted passenger and property programs";

(2) inserting "and property, notwithstanding the screening requirements established by section 110," after "expedite the security screening of passengers"; and

(3) inserting "and property which" after "passengers who".

(d)(1) Section 110 is amended by striking subsection (a) and redesignating subsections (b), (c), and (d), as subsections (a), (b), and (c), respectively.

(2)(A) Section 110, as amended by this subsection, is further amended by striking "Federal law enforcement officers" in subsection (b)(1), as redesignated, and substituting "law enforcement officers".

(B) Section 44920(e) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "Federal Government law enforcement officers" and substituting "law enforcement officers".

(e) Section 119(c) is amended by striking "section 47192(3)(J)" and substituting "section 47102(3)(J)".

(f) Section 132 is amended by adding the following at the end:

"(c) EXEMPTION FOR CHARTER OPERATIONS TO PROVIDE TRANSPORTATION TO THE ARMED FORCES.--The provisions of this Act shall not apply to the operation of, or to the passengers and property carried by, aircraft when employed to provide charter transportation to the armed forces, except for an operation to or from an airport described in section 44903(c) of title 49, United States Code. For an operation to or from an airport described in section 44903(c), the screening, and passenger manifest provisions of this Act shall not apply to passengers and property loaded onto such aircraft. The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, shall establish security procedures relating to the operation of such aircraft to or from an airport described in section 44903(c) of title 49.".

(g) Section 143 is amended by striking the period at the end and inserting "dated April 30, 1996.".

SEC. 3. AIR TRANSPORTATION SAFETY AND SYSTEM STABILIZATION ACT AMENDMENTS.

(a) Section 402(1) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by deletion of the last sentence, as added by section 201(d)(1) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; Nov. 19, 2001).

(b) Section 408(c) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by deletion of the last sentence, as added by section 201(b)(3) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; Nov. 19, 2001).

(c) Section 201(b)(2) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by--

(1) inserting "or during the period specified by the last sentence of this paragraph" following "enactment of this Act" in the first sentence; and

(2) inserting the following at the end:

"The period specified by this sentence is the period that begins on the date of enactment of this sentence and ends one year after the date of enactment, except that the Secretary may, at the Secretary's discretion, extend the end of the period for up to 365 days beyond one year after the date of enactment.".

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect simultaneously with the enactment of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (P.L. 107-71; November 19, 2001), with title 49, United States Code, deemed to read as amended by that Act. For purposes of all Federal laws, the amendments made by this Act shall be treated as being included in the Aviation and Transportation Security Act at the time of enactment of that Act.

REV_00349162

Explanation of Amendments

The technical corrections contained in this enclosure range from literal typographical corrections to changes needed to clarify or effectuate the intention of particular provisions in the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (ATSA) and Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act. Unless otherwise indicated, all references are to title 49, United States Code.

Sec. 1(b): 49 U.S.C. 114(j) sets forth acquisition authorities of the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security (Under Secretary) but in paragraph (1)(D), incorrectly refers to the Secretary of Transportation rather than the Under Secretary. This reference is corrected by the amendment.

Sec. 1(c): 49 U.S.C. 114(o) directs the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to use the FAA acquisition system specified by 49 U.S.C. 40110 as to "acquisitions of equipment, supplies, and materials." That listing omits the authority to acquire "services, including personal services," which is listed as an acquisition authority of the TSA Under Secretary in 49 U.S.C. 114(j)(1)(D). In the interest of clarity, this amendment would list parallel authorities in the two subsections of section 114.

Also, the amendment clarifies that the same system used by the FAA for appeals of acquisition decisions will be used by the TSA.

Sec. 1(d): 49 U.S.C. 115 establishes the Transportation Security Oversight Board (TSOB) and assigns it duties, including the duty to review "emergency regulations and security directives" issued by the TSA without notice and comment by the public. However, the scope of review specified by section 115(c)(1) ("review and ratify or disapprove") burdens the TSOB with taking an action in each case. It is also inconsistent with the underlying emergency authority at 49 U.S.C. 114(l)(2), which provides "[a]ny regulation or security directive issued under this paragraph shall remain effective unless disapproved by the Board or rescinded by the Under Secretary." The amendment would provide the TSOB with review authority that only necessitates action in the case of a disapproval.

Sec. 1(e): 49 U.S.C. 326 contains long-standing authority for the Secretary of Transportation to accept and use gifts of property and, in the case of "aviation powers and duties," a gift of services. In implementing the TSA's complex new authorities over security in other modes of transportation, the Under Secretary needs comparable authority to accept, when proffered, an offer by a security or transportation expert to work without compensation for the TSA. This is consistent with the breadth of intermodal responsibility accorded the new Under Secretary. This amendment substitutes "Departmental powers and duties" for "aviation powers and duties" to make such a gift of services possible.

Sec. 1(f): This amendment deletes a superseded reference to chapter 449 from a listing of FAA authorities because every section of the chapter except 44918 has transferred to the Transportation Security Administration.

Sec. 1(g): As amended by ATSA, 49 U.S.C. 40119(a) provides that the Under Secretary must conduct research and development activities related to protecting passengers and property against acts of criminal violence and aircraft piracy. The original references to the FAA Administrator would be returned to section 40119(a) to meet the FAA's need for continued research and development activities to protect the FAA's air traffic control facilities and other facilities against acts that would endanger air transportation. This section also would add that a purpose of the research is protection against acts of terrorism.

Section 40119(b) provides protection against release to the public of security information and research information vital to improved transportation security systems. ATSA broadened the provision from aviation coverage to all modes of transportation and shifted its execution to the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security. However, continued reference to "passenger transportation" improperly restricts the effectiveness of the amended provision for all modes (e.g., pipelines, freight railroad and truck transportation, and sea-going container transportation do not involve passenger movements). This amendment would, first, remove the restrictions that limit the provision's effectiveness for all modes of transportation. Second, the authority vested in the Under Secretary would be elevated to the Secretary of Transportation so that, in the event the Under Secretary authorities shift to the proposed Department of Homeland Security, the Department will not lose this valuable authority. The proposed amendment in subsection (h) below assures that the authority is available to the TSA, whether or not a shift occurs. Third, the cross-references to certain FAA R&D authorities are removed, making clear that the authority covers security R&D for all modes, including the FAA.

Sec. 1(h): In tandem with the amendment proposed by subsection (g) to perfect the authority at the Department of Transportation to protect security-sensitive information across all modes, identical authority would be repeated at 49 U.S.C. 114 (enabling authority for the TSA) so that this valuable authority can follow the TSA to a new Department of Homeland Security, should such an action be taken by Congress and enacted. Whether or not legislation is passed, this amendment houses the needed authority with the TSA.

Sec. 1(i): Under 44901(a) (Screening of passengers and property carried aboard passenger aircraft), all screening must be carried out by Federal government employees starting on November 19, 2002, except for identifying passengers and baggage for screening under the CAPPS and known shipper programs. Under this provision, the term "Federal government employee" is defined by reference to 5 U.S.C. 2105, which excludes employees of the U.S. Postal Service. The exclusion of Postal Service employees as potential federal screeners precludes

TSA and the Postal Service from pursuing the possibility of having U.S. mail carried aboard passenger flights screened by Postal employees (in accordance with standards and procedures established by TSA). As TSA considers options for ensuring that such mail is screened, the involvement of the Postal Service may be part of the solution. Moreover, Postal Service employees are already federal employees for a number of purposes and they perform a federal function. Therefore, the inclusion of Postal Service employees as eligible screeners for U.S. mail aligns with the intent of Congress in assigning the screening function to federal employees. The proposed amendment would specify that, for purposes of section 44901(a), U.S. Mail carried aboard passenger aircraft may be screened by employees and officers of the Postal Service.

Sec. 1(j): This amendment corrects in one case, and deletes in another, incorrect cross-references in 49 U.S.C. 44901(e) and (g).

Sec. 1(k): While Federal customs law contains needed provisions dealing with the liability of the United States for unintentional damages incurred in passenger and property inspection, 49 U.S.C. 44901 does not contain such a provision. A comparable provision is needed for TSA inspections of personal property during the airport screening process, thereby permitting a passenger to be administratively compensated for property loss under the Small Claims Act up to $1000. The amendment makes this addition to section 44901.

Sec. 1(l): Among other things, section 44903 mandates establishment of 20 or more pilot programs for testing and evaluation of airport secure-area access-control technologies but, in subsection (c)(3), incorrectly refers to the FAA Administrator rather than the Under Secretary. This reference is corrected by the amendment. Also, the ATSA added three provisions to 49 U.S.C. 44903 as "subsection (h)." Items (2) and (3) of this amendment redesignate two of the three subsections.

Sec. 1(m): This amendment clarifies that the "Under Secretary" reference in 49 U.S.C. 44909(c)(2)(F) is a reference to the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security. Also, an obsolete deadline (March 1991) is deleted from the text of 49 U.S.C. 44909(a)(1).

Sec. 1(n): 49 U.S.C. 44935(e)(2)(A)(ii) requires that every security screening employee hired by the TSA be "a citizen of the United States." This excludes a "national of the United States," as defined in section 1101(a)(22) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(22)). That section defines a "national of the United States" as either a U.S. citizen or a non-citizen who "owes permanent allegiance to the United States." The citizens of American Samoa, a U.S. territory, are the principal remaining population that enjoy "U.S. national" status under our laws (along with residents of Swains Island). The amendment would permit hiring a citizen or a national of the United States for these positions.

Also, the designation of the last subsection of section 44935 is changed from (i) to (k) by this amendment to eliminate a conflict with another subsection (i) earlier in the section.

Sec. 1(o): Among other things, section 44936 mandates new employment investigation requirements but, in subsection (a)(1)(B)(iii)), incorrectly refers to the FAA Administrator rather than the Under Secretary regarding the designation of airport areas for which the investigation is required for access. This amendment corrects the reference. Also a typographical error is corrected.

Sec. 1(p): 49 U.S.C. 44939 establishes new restrictions on flight school training in order to verify the background of student pilots. The restrictions apply on the basis of the size of aircraft on which training is sought, using as a limit the standard maximum certificated takeoff weight limit (more than 12,500 pounds) relied on by the FAA and other certificating authorities world-wide to distinguish lighter-weight from heavier-weight aircraft. Unfortunately, the use of the terminology in ATSA differs by one pound from the standard terminology, bringing under regulation (in 44939 and also under section 132(a) of ATSA (security regulation of charter aircraft operations)) a large population of aircraft that were not intended to be covered by Congress. This amendment modifies the terminology in section 44939 and section 132(a) to align with the standard distinction.

Sec. 1(q): Section 44940(a)(2) specifies the basis for collection of a security fee on air carriers and foreign air carriers that approximates the aggregate expenditures by those carriers in the year 2000 relating to passenger and property screening services. Experience to date with the present process of attempting to allocate the expected fees of up to $750 million annually has shown that disagreements over cost allocation in the case of each carrier can be extensive, very technical, and extremely time-consuming, delaying an ultimate outcome that is already dictated and which is central to funding TSA operations as Congress directed. To foreclose this complex and lengthy process and achieve Congress' goal, this amendment amends section 44940(a)(2) to substitute a fixed, aggregate, annual fee level of up to $750 million for the historically based cost-allocation approach. Instead of being discretionary, the annual fees would be mandated if passenger fees do not fund all services.

The allocation of the aggregate fees of $750 million annually among the carriers would be based on market share or any other appropriate measure. For the benefit of domestic and foreign air carriers, a new requirement applicable in all years would be that the Under Secretary may consult with affected air carriers and foreign air carriers in making all determinations underlying the fees.

To assist in the mid-year 2002 transition to the new method of allocating the carrier charge, the treatment of partial year fees in existing 44940(a)(2)(C) would be modified to allow crediting of fees paid to date under the current method.

This amendment would also provide a basis for a potential increase in the aggregate annual fee above $750 million in 2005 and thereafter, taking into consideration the economic condition of the aviation industry, inflation, or other appropriate factors at the time, while limiting any potential increase to the level of total TSA expenditures for the security services involved in a particular year, minus the projected contribution of the passenger fee to covering that total.

Sec. 1(r): While the per-passenger fee established by section 44940(a)(1) would not be modified by this proposal, this amendment contains three administrative changes. First, section 44940(d) provides a means for directly imposing the initial per-passenger fee without reliance on the standard rulemaking process. This amendment would amend sections 44940(d)(1) and 44940(d)(3) to provide that the direct method of imposing fees would apply to both the per-passenger and the carrier fees, and to subsequent modifications of either fee. This is necessary and desirable to align the fees quickly with the cost structure of the TSA as it evolves.

Second, the wording of section 44940(d)(4) suggests a possibility that collections must stop if they exceed the appropriated funding level. Stopping and restarting the collections process is administratively difficult. This change would enable DOT to continue collections of passenger fees, while still reserving spending authority for appropriations legislation.

Third, while Federal tax and customs law contain standard provisions for the imposition of interest charges on outstanding assessments owed but not paid to the Government (See 26 U.S.C. 6621 and 6601, and 19 U.S.C. 1505), 49 U.S.C. 44940 does not contain such a provision. To induce timely payments and discourage unjustified litigation, a comparable provision is needed for both of the new security fees. This amendment adds authority to impose an interest charge for delayed payment to section 44940(e). The interest for which an air carrier would be liable would be equivalent to the interest that the Government owes to contractors for delayed payments beyond a contractually established due date, or to contractors for meritorious claims under the Contract Disputes Act.

Sec. 1(s): One other adjustment is proposed for the per-carrier fee in section 44940(a)(2). To address arguments that the successor to a bankrupt carrier is not responsible for the proportion of historical expenditures made by that carrier in 2000 for security services, a new subsection (i) would be added to section 44940 to state explicitly that the successor carrier is liable for the appropriate portion of these historical expenditures by the predecessor air carrier.

Sec. 1(t): Although section 140(d) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act amended the Penalties chapter of Subtitle VII of title 49 to cover violations of law enforced by the TSA as well as the FAA, the chapter was not updated with a penalty-level structure that would reflect the enormity of consequences that can follow from a terrorist act and therefore the importance of penalizing violations of TSA security regulations and orders. This amendment would raise the basic $1,000-per-violation level of the federal aviation statute (in place since the 1950's and only adjusted upward for inflation since 1997 to about $1,100 per violation) to $10,000 for aviation security violations by persons and $25,000 for air carriers. The proposal makes no change to (1) the penalty structure for safety violations or (2) the current-law maximum penalty of $25,000 for individuals that interfere with a cabin or flight crew.

Sec. 1(u) and (v): Section 140 of ATSA extended some of the enforcement and penalty provisions of the Aviation Subtitle in title 49 to apply also to TSA authorities. The amendments in subsection (o) perfect the section 140 amendments, by (1) adding a needed reference to the Under Secretary in section 46301(g) of title 49 with respect to judicial review, and (2) aligning the Under Secretary's and Administrator's general authority to issue and enforce orders and regulations under section 46105. The Administrator's authority to issue orders and regulations on an emergency basis is found in section 46105(c). The Under Secretary has authority under 49 U.S.C. 114(l) to issue regulations on an emergency basis. However, TSA authority to issue orders, e.g., cease and desist orders on an emergency basis, was not addressed. The amendment would revise section 46105(c) to provide TSA needed authority to issue orders on an emergency basis.

The amendments in subsection (v) also build on section 140 of ATSA by transferring from the FAA to the TSA administrative-civil-penalty responsibility for two violations in current law that are directed to aircraft security and should be enforced by the TSA. They prohibit an individual from (1) providing false information about hijackings and other matters (section 46302), and (2) carrying a weapon when on or attempting to board an aircraft (section 46303). In addition, the amendment of subsection (v) would also authorize the TSA to impose civil penalties against persons who interfere with a cabin or flight crew (section 46318).

Sec. 1(w): This amendment deletes the qualifier "screening" from the section heading of 49 U.S.C. 46503 because the coverage of the section is broader than screening personnel, and extends to any Federal, airport, or air carrier employee with security duties within an airport.

Sec. 1(x): This amendment corrects two typographical errors.

Sec. 1(y) and (z): These amendments correct a number of typographical errors in chapter 449.

Sec. 2(b): The reference in section 106(b)(2)(A) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act to "paragraph 1" airports covers only a subset of airports covered by the provision and needs to be expanded to also cover the airports listing in subsection (b)(2)(B). Also, the reference to "Secretary" in section 106(b)(2)(B) is inconsistent with the role of the Under Secretary under this provision in resolving conflicts over the security issue in question.

Sec. 2(c): Section 109(a)(3) of the ATSA provides discretionary authority in the Under Secretary to implement a "trusted passenger" program. This amendment clarifies that this program can be implemented without conflicting with the otherwise applicable screening requirements imposed by section 110 of ATSA and clarifies the authority to apply to property accompanying a passenger in the cabin or hold.

Sec. 2(d): Section 110(a) attempted to amend a provision of title 49 that is repealed by the ATSA and is therefore ineffective. This amendment would delete section 110(a).

Section 110 of the ATSA indicates that all checkpoint law enforcement officers (LEOs) must be Federal employees by November 19, 2002. At some airports around the country, it may make sense to have a Federal LEO workforce at screening checkpoints. For other airports, it may make more sense to indefinitely retain a full or partial State and local LEO workforce. Ultimately, TSA should have greater flexibility to address its LEO needs. Allowing the continued use of State and local officers has a variety of benefits, such as easing the transitional aspects of TSA's program, improving integration of airport law enforcement missions, and helping TSA target Federal personnel resources where they are needed most. Therefore, this section modifies the requirement in section 110 of ATSA that a sufficient number of "Federal law enforcement officers" be deployed by November 19, 2002, by dropping the word "Federal" (along with conforming changes to the pilot program in section 108 of the ATSA).

Sec. 2(e): This amendment corrects a typographical error.

Sec. 2(f): Section 132 requires, among other things, that the TSA implement an aviation security program for charter air carriers that operate large aircraft. Because the Department of Defense and the U.S. Coast Guard operate significant charter aircraft operations in support of cargo and personnel (and dependent) movements, section 132 should explicitly accommodate these specialized operations. This amendment would add a new subsection (c) to address armed services charter operations. Every year, DoD and Coast Guard contract or otherwise arrange with air carriers to perform hundreds of charter flights to provide transportation for DoD and Coast Guard passengers and cargo. These flights are performed by certificated air carriers operating in full compliance with applicable Federal Aviation Regulations and TSA regulations. However, defense operational and readiness needs have required development of procedures that vary from those used in the commercial context. The movement of large numbers of armed passengers, for example, is both common and necessary to meet mission requirements. In addition, DoD and Coast Guard charter flights frequently originate at general aviation or military airfields that lack the passenger, baggage, and cargo handling infrastructure found at commercial airports. Passenger, baggage, and cargo processing in such instances is significantly different than that used in commercial operations, and must often be performed by military personnel. Passenger manifests are compiled by DoD and Coast Guard rather than the air carrier, and may be accomplished in environments that do not lend themselves to automation or the collection of extensive passenger data. The proposed amendment would ensure that the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, would establish security procedures relating to the operation of chartered aircraft to or from an airport described in section 44903(c) of title 49.

Sec. 2(g): Section 143 of the ATSA could be misconstrued to apply to a large category of airports when it is intended to apply to a single situation. The amendment would properly tailor the coverage of the section.

Sec. 3: The Federal Government has recognized the enormity and singular nature of the September 11 attacks on New York City and the Pentagon by enactment of special procedures for compensation of victims of these events. Congress also acted to limit the liability of involved airlines to the limits of their insurance coverage for the events of that day. The defined term "air carrier" in federal law has long included "employees and agents" of an airline, consistent with agency law, and that definition was employed by section 402(1) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (40101 note). This arrangement was revised by amendments contained in section 201 of the ATSA, however, to intentionally exclude from the liability limitation any agent of the airlines other than "an airline or airport sponsor or director, officer, or employee of an airline or airport sponsor." This action has unfortunately had the serious adverse consequence of making the security firms now contracting with the TSA or airlines for passenger screener services (since transfer of screening responsibility to the federal government on or before February 17, 2002) the sole parties (other than knowing participants in the attacks) subject to unlimited liability for the events of that day. The potential for unlimited damage awards against these firms constitutes an unnecessary and destabilizing interference with the ability of these firms to provide critical security services in a transition period to full federal screening services by November 2002. Accordingly, this amendment simply returns the relevant provisions of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act to their originally enacted terms.

Also, Congress acted to provide a six-month transition period following September 11 in which the liability of U.S. air carriers can be limited to a maximum of $100 million in aggregate claims by third parties, at the discretion of the Secretary of Transportation, if the Secretary determines that the air carrier is the victim of an act of terrorism. In this event, the federal government is liable for claims above $100 million against air carriers. Also, punitive damages are not allowed in recognition that the air carrier employs its utmost efforts to prevent terrorist acts.

The transition period ended March 20, 2002, but it is evident that adequate commercial coverage for domestic terrorism is not readily available. Extension of the cap on claims would encourage private insurers to re-enter the market and would make private insurance coverage options more affordable.

David Addington will call you later. The only issue you have there, I believe, relates to a few documents with non-responsive portions.

See you at 1:30.

Brett: To facilitate our meeting tomorrow, I thought I'd lay out what I see as the outstanding issues we need to discuss; please let me know if you see others/different ones (or if I have anything wrong below). In addition, I'm
assuming David Addington is coming -- let us know if that's not the case, because some of the issues have to do with OVP documents.

(1) Redacted documents. As discussed, we believe that we need, at a minimum, to see the redacted portions of documents before being able to agree to an accommodation under which the EOP/OVP produces certain documents to the Committee in a redacted form. You have indicated that you intend to give us tomorrow unredacted versions of some documents previously produced in redacted form, show us others and explain why you believe there are some you cannot show us. Again, we'd like to go through document by document on those that you still wish to produce in redacted form.

(2) Withheld Counsel's Office and Press Office documents. You have indicated that you will produce some of the press office documents, give us logs of the others and logs of the Counsel's office documents, again, so that we can determine whether to agree to an accommodation that allows the withholding of certain documents. As mentioned, our position with respect to press office documents is that material that reflects recollections of events covered by the subpoena -- eg a timeline prepared for the press office, an email informing the office of events -- should be produced. As for purely internal press office material, we would like to see a log of the documents and discuss them. For tomorrow, we'd like to discuss the logs you bring on both Counsel's office and press office documents and assume you will be doing so for all such documents you'd like to withhold.

(3) Presidential schedules and briefing memos. We indicated at our last meeting that we believe we, at a minimum, need to see these before agreeing to an accommodation under which they may be withheld.

(4) Whether production is complete. In addition to the documents covered above, you indicated that you wanted to check to see whether any other responsive documents exist that need to be produced.

(5) Follow-up questions on some of the produced material. Pat and Dave asked you to check on some specific issues at our last meeting and check for documents related to particular individuals. We're hoping you had a chance to follow up on those. They may also have some additional follow-up questions about some of the documents.

Again, let me know if you have other issues to discuss or a different take on where we are.

See you tomorrow. Laurie

Hi Patrick,

We got a "no comment" from Brett on PTM 143 yesterday.

Could you please check to make sure that neither of these notes were intended as a reply to one of the other VA-related bills we circulated? The three LRM's were:

PTM 142 : S. 2043 - Extended Care Services and Nursing Home Care

PTM 143 : S. 2237 - Veterans Benefits Improvement Act

PTM 144 : S. 2132- Medical Emergency Preparedness Centers

Thanks,
Thad

Brett,

As we just discussed, if you could notify Fuller and the Alabama Senators of Fuller's nomination (assuming it goes late this afternoon), I would appreciate it. I am leaving at 3pm to fly to California to pack up the house, ship the cars, etc. I fly back on Sunday and will be in the office on Monday. (I am always available by cell phone -- number is PRA 6 I am waiting on a blackberry.)

Thanks,

Ben

Report from the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service

on

TAX LAW COMPLEXITY

Office of Research, Analysis, and Statistics
Internal Revenue Service

difficult to isolate the impact of a specific provision on IRS without also looking at its impact on taxpayers. Looking only at administrative complexity could also lead to options that would reduce the burden on IRS but significantly increase it on taxpayers. Accordingly, we looked at overall complexity.

We did not specifically address "undue and unnecessary" complexity. To do so would have required a series of value judgments regarding the goals of a particular provision and the complexity the provision introduces. Instead, we attempted to provide the analysis necessary for the reader to determine if the complexity is warranted.

In addition, because any recommendations for changing the Code must consider the full range of tax policy considerations including the impact of the changes on (1) budgetary costs or how the cost of these changes might compare with other important policy priorities; (2) economic efficiency, (3) which taxpayers are affected; (4) the degree to which the changes would affect the policy goals the provision was intended to meet; (5) the impact of the changes on the degree to which the affected tax provisions accomplish the purposes for which they were enacted; and (6) other related provisions, the report does not contain recommendations. The report only addresses complexity as it relates to administration of the Code and taxpayer's ability to comply with the Code. The options therefore are not policy recommendations. For example, one of the options presented in the report is to coordinate the income phaseout ranges for at least some credits and, hence, affect the overall distribution of the individual income tax burden. It also could lead to fairly high marginal tax rates within the phaseout range as multiple tax benefits are phased out simultaneously. Depending on the specifications of the new phaseout ranges, there could be significant revenue implications. And there may be complicated interactions of the proposal with other provisions of the tax law (such as the Alternative Minimum Tax). For all these reasons, the proposals listed would need substantial analysis before they could be evaluated in making tax policy decisions.

OVERVIEW OF APPENDICES

The appendices to this report were developed based on the requirements established in RRA98. Appendix A focuses on questions posed to IRS by taxpayers. Appendix B provides a summary of the common errors taxpayers make on their returns. Appendix C highlights areas of law, which frequently result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS. Appendix D covers areas of law in which there is no or incomplete guidance or in which the law is uncertain. Appendix E describes areas in which tax examiners make frequent errors interpreting or applying the law. Appendix F summarizes the impact of recent legislation on complexity. And finally, Appendix G relates tax forms to taxpayer burden.

REV_00349396

CHAPTER I
CREDIT ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS

A variety of definitions is used to determine a taxpayer's eligibility to claim the dependency exemptions and certain tax credits. Understanding these definitions and how to apply them is necessary for the taxpayer to file a correct return. In addition to the filing status designation required on individual tax returns, separate but sometimes related, determinations must be made regarding dependents and qualifying individuals for personal tax credits. The definitions associated with filing status and dependents and qualifying individuals are some of the more complex issues faced by over 124 million individual taxpayers. While on the surface this may appear to be a rather straightforward determination, for many taxpayers the correct answer depends on their economic and/or other relationships to other members of their family or household. For this reason, any complexity in the Code around credit eligibility that emanates from filing status definitions can result in substantial overall burden.

Tax credits provide policymakers with a channel for easily delivering tax incentives to specific groups. While tax credits can provide special incentives or relief for specific groups of taxpayers, the burden associated with understanding and applying various eligibility requirements, income phaseouts and thresholds, and many other special considerations significantly add to the complexity of the tax laws and the difficulty taxpayers have in understanding and complying with them

While personal credits have resulted in lower income taxes for many taxpayers, they also have greatly increased the complexity faced by those taxpayers. Legislative tradeoffs have been made based on equity, fairness, economic efficiency, revenue targets, compliance and social policy goals with a resulting increase in complexity. In addition, in some cases complexity has inadvertently crept into the Code as credits were added and modified over time. Unfortunately, items that appear simple or innocuous in isolation can create great complexity when considered in total. For example, specific definitions, phaseout ranges, and age limitations associated with various credits are implemented to ensure relief reaches a targeted group of taxpayers. But, the calculations and form completion requirements that flow from these limitations create enormous burden and complexity for taxpayers.

Credit complexity has also been created by frequent changes. The EITC, for example, has been changed almost annually since 1986. Changes are even more frequently proposed than enacted. For example, in the 106th Congress over 339 bills were introduced proposing new tax credits or modifying existing ones.[6] Most of the credits would have required detailed guidance from Treasury and IRS to define precisely the items and activities that were eligible for a particular credit, thereby adding complexity to the tax system.

[6] Tax Notes, December 15, 2000.

In addition to creating additional compliance burden for taxpayers and administrative burden for the Service, the complexities present within the personal credits also increase noncompliance by making it more difficult for taxpayers to file an accurate return.

The personal credits we analyzed for this report were the ones most commonly taken by individual taxpayers. They are the Adoption Credit, Child Tax Credit, Child and Dependent Care Credit, Earned Income Tax Credit, Education Credits (Hope and Lifetime Learning), and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled.[7] The EGTRRA legislation modified several of the credits effective in 2002 and after. These changes are noted as appropriate later in the report. Table 1.1 illustrates some of the differences in eligibility rules, income thresholds and phaseouts, and other features of these credits. We have simplified some exceptions and special conditions.

[7] EITC was enacted in 1975 (P.L. 94-12, Tax Reduction Act of 1975). The Child and Dependent Care Credit was enacted in 1976 (P.L. 94-455, Tax Reform Act of 1976). The Child Tax Credit and the Hope Scholarship Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit (Education credit) were enacted in 1997 (P.L. 105-34, Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997). The Adoption Expense Credit was enacted by The Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-188).

REV_00349398

Table 1.1: Personal Credit Characteristics (Tax Year 2000)

Item	Income Basis	Phaseouts/Thresholds	Maximum Credit	Qualifying Individuals	Other Characteristics
Adoption Credit	Modified AGI [b]	Between $75,000 - $115,000 credit is phased out ratably	$5,000 per adoption ($6,000 for special needs child)	Child under age 18 or an incapacitated person	Nonrefundable - May be carried over 5 years. Phaseout is determined in initial year and does not apply in carryover years.[f+]
Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit	AGI	Between $10,000 - $28,000 credit phases down from 30% to 20% of qualifying expenses	$480 -$720 for one child $960 - $1,440 for two or more children	Dependent under age 13, a disabled spouse, or a dependent of any age	Must have earned income; Married Filing Jointly both parties generally must have earned income; Nonrefundable
Child Tax Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Credit reduced by 5% for each $1,000 of Modified AGI over $55,000 - $110,000[d,e]	$500 per child	Dependent under age 17	Nonrefundable
Additional Child Tax Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Same as Child Tax Credit	Refundable extension of $500 Child Tax Credit	Taxpayer must have at least three qualifying children under age 17	Constitutes a refund of withheld Social Security and Medicare taxes.
Elderly or Disabled Credit	AGI	$12,500 - 25,000[d]	15% of credit base	Must be at least 65 years old or permanently and totally disabled and under mandatory retirement age	Credit base is AGI reduced by nontaxable retirement benefits and excess AGI over $5000-10,000; Nonrefundable
Earned Income Tax Credit	Earned Income and Modified AGI[b]	1 child between $12,700 and $27,413; 2 or more children - $12,700 - $31,152; no children $5,800 - $10,380. (A variety of rates apply to each group.)	One child - $2,353 Two or more children - $3,888 No children - $353	Child under age 19, students under age 24 or a disabled person of any age	Credit has phase-in, plateau and phase-out ranges that depend on the number of qualifying children; Refundable
Education (Hope and Lifetime Learning) Tax Credits	Modified AGI[c]	Between $40,000 - $50,000 or $80,000 – 100,000[d] the amount of the credit is reduced ratably.	Hope - $1,500 Lifetime Learning - $1,000	Taxpayers and dependents	Cannot take both credits for the same taxpayer in one year; Nonrefundable

Note: The adoption credit, child and dependent care credit, EITC, and education credits were modified by EGTRRA for future years.

[a] From Form 1040

[b] Taxpayer can have no more than $2,400 disqualified income.

[c] Modified AGI includes certain income from Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and certain other foreign earned income.

[d] Depending on Filing status

[e] For married filing separately, the credit reduction begins at $55,000 Modified AGI; for single, head of household, or qualifying widow(er), at $75,000; and for married filing jointly, at $110,000.

REV_00349399

[f] The amount of the credit, including adjustments, if any, due to phaseouts, is determined in the initial year. Thus, no additional phaseout calculations are required in the year carryover credits are used.

WHO FILES

All filers must make certain determinations regarding their filing status, dependents, and qualifying individuals for the personal credits. The number of taxpayers making each of these determinations is shown in Table 1.2.

Table 1.2: Filing Determinations (Tax Year 1998)

Type of Determination	Number of Taxpayer Returns
Filing Status (all 1040 Forms)	124,770,662
Married Filing Jointly	49,706,101
Married Filing Separately	2,531,742
Single	55,104,964
Head of Household	17,427,855
Claim Dependents	45,887,973
Married Filing Jointly	27,246,285
Married Filing Separately	660,936
Single	1,835,291
Head of Household	16,145,460
Personal Credits (total all returns)[1]	41,916,863
Adoption Tax Credit	40,668
Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit	6,128,155
Child Tax Credit	24,810,781
Additional Child Tax Credit	754,363
Earned Income Tax Credit[2]	19,704,707
Elderly or Disabled Credit	180,473
Education Tax Credit	4,652,596

[1] Individual components do not add to total because taxpayers can claim more than one of these credits.
[2] Includes taxpayers who have qualifying children and those who do not.

Table 1.3 shows the number of tax returns that claim various credits and combinations of credits.

REV_00349400

Table 1.3: Number of Returns with Various Credits and Credit Combinations (Tax Year 1999)

Credit/Combinations	Estimated Number of Returns (000's)	Percent of Total Returns
Child Tax Only	13,350.0	10.5%
Earned Income Only	12,208.3	9.6%
Child Tax, Earned Income	5,632.9	4.4%
Child Tax, Child and Dependent Care	3,930.7	3.1%
Education Only	4,269.6	3.4%
Child Tax, Education	1,308.8	1.0%
Child Tax, Child and Dependent Care, Earned Income	855.3	0.7%
Child and Dependent Care Only	567.1	0.4%
All Other Combinations	4,899.1	3.9%
Total Number of Returns with Credits or Credit Combinations	47,021.9	37.0%

As the tables illustrate, about one-third of all individual taxpayers claim one or more personal credits; in fact, more than that must determine their filing status and whether they have dependents in order to claim the credits. For taxpayers with AGI between $50,000 and $100,000, 43 percent claim at least one personal credit. In addition, almost 10 percent of all individual taxpayers claim multiple credits. This includes more than six million taxpayers with AGI of $25,000 or less.

TAXPAYER AND IRS BURDEN

Taxpayer

Taxpayers must file a number of forms and schedules and complete associated worksheets to determine if they qualify for a specific credit, calculate the amount of the credit, and claim it on their tax return. Table 1.5 identifies the forms, schedules, publications, and worksheets for each credit as well as the estimated time involved. The fact that each of the credits has its own publication explaining who is eligible and how to claim the credit is an indicator of the complexity each involves. Table 1.6 shows that many taxpayer inquiries relate to these tax credits. More striking, however, is that a large number of taxpayers make errors in claiming these tax benefits.

IRS

Frontline IRS employees dealing with taxpayers in either office or field audits cite definitions of eligibility for credits as one of the more persistently complex aspects of their job. Their comments pinpoint a lack of consistency across a number of tax provisions and credits.

As a further indication of burden, Table 1.7 below summarizes data from an H&R Block analysis of the type and number of questions its preparers asked the corporate tax research department about various complex tax issues. Of the 577 questions received relating to personal tax credits, over three-quarters related to EITC and the Education credits.

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

We analyzed six areas of complexity related to personal credits. The selection was based on the number of tax credits claimed on 1999 tax returns, the number of questions taxpayers asked IRS about credits, the questions tax practitioners had about credits, and information received in interviews with tax professionals. The areas of complexity we identified are definitional complexity, inconsistency in phaseout thresholds and calculations, differences in the Education credits, calculating the income basis for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled, when qualifying expenses can be taken for the Adoption Credit, and the rules for determining the order in which tax credits are applied to income tax liability (stacking rules).

REV_00349403

Complexity Issue: Definitions can create confusion about eligibility.

One of the most apparent areas of complexity associated with personal credits is the dissimilarity in how terms are defined. The identifying titles of some of the credits appear to overlap, but the tax law governing the credits is markedly different. For example, the definition of a "qualifying child" or "qualifying individual," used to determine eligibility to claim the child and dependent care tax credit, the child tax credit, and the earned income tax credit, is different for each credit. Therefore, taxpayers must fill out different worksheets or schedules and look to different instructions each time they claim similar-sounding credits to determine which definition applies and if their circumstances meet the requirements.

Prior attempts at simplification have not eliminated the confusion. For instance, the definition of a qualifying foster child for purposes of the child tax credit and earned income tax credit has been greatly simplified. An unmarried qualifying foster child need not be claimed as a dependent on the taxpayer's return for purposes of the earned income tax credit, but must be claimed as a dependent for the child tax credit. Table 1.8 summarizes the different tests that taxpayers must meet to qualify for the personal tax credits.

In addition to having varying qualification tests, the specific requirements for the tests also vary among the credits. For example, as discussed below the relationship test is different for dependents than for qualifying children under the Earned Income Tax Credit.

Relationship or Member of Household Test

To qualify a taxpayer for a dependency exemption the individual in question must be the taxpayer's child, stepchild, sibling, niece, nephew, grandchild or foster child. In 2000, other family members or persons who resided with the taxpayer for the entire year may also be claimed as dependents.[8] This definition is also generally used for the Head of Household filing status and the Child and Dependent Care, Child Tax and Education credit purposes. [9]

The relationship test for a qualifying child for the EITC and Adoption credit are different in that the qualifying child does not have to, and may not, qualify as a dependent. The qualifying child under the EITC does not have to be a dependent unless the child is married. But if the qualifying child is a foster child not related to the taxpayer, they must be placed in the home by an authorized placement agency, not simply live with the taxpayer for the entire year. Before Tax Year 2002, a qualifying child under the Adoption credit (e.g., an unrelated individual living with the taxpayer) may not qualify as a dependent if they do not live in the taxpayer's home for the entire year. This residency requirement was changed by EGTRRA, and beginning in 2002, a foster child must reside with the taxpayer for more than six months.

The over 16 million taxpayers with qualifying children who claim the EITC must make two subtle but important differentiations in correctly filing their return. The first is to recognize that not all of the children in the household may qualify the taxpayer for EITC even if the taxpayer provides all of their support, and the taxpayer maintains the household. The second is that a child may qualify the taxpayer for the EITC and not qualify as a dependent.

Support Test

To meet the support test for the dependency exemption, the taxpayer generally must provide more than half of the qualifying individual's support during the calendar year covered by the return.[10] Because the Child and Dependent Care, Child Tax, and Education credits require the qualifying individual to be a dependent, this support test also applies to these credits. There is no support test for the EITC or under most circumstances for the adoption credit.

[8] Cousins are eligible only if they live with the taxpayer as a family member for the entire year.
[9] Under certain limited conditions non-dependents may also be covered such as disabled spouses for the Child and Dependent Care credit.
[10] There are different rules for multiple support agreements and for children of divorced or separated parents.

REV_00349407

Residency or Keeping Up a Home Test

To qualify for HOH and the Child and Dependent Care credit the taxpayer must meet the "Keep Up a Home" test. This test requires the taxpayer to pay more than half the cost of running the home for the year.[11] The EITC, on the other hand, has a residency test that simply requires the qualifying child to live with the taxpayer in the United States for more than half of the year.[12] There is no residency test for dependents or the Child Tax credit except for qualifying foster children. Foster children must live with the taxpayer for the entire year to qualify for the credit. A residency test applies to the adoption credit only if the taxpayer uses the filing status Married Filing Separately (MFS).

Age Test

Recognizing that many of the personal credits are targeted to a "qualifying child" there is no consistent age definition for a child. The Child and Dependent Care credit is limited to qualifying individuals under 13 or who cannot care for themselves. The Child Tax credit is limited to those under 17. The EITC applies to qualifying children under 19 (24 if the child is a full-time student).[13] The adoption credit age test is under 18. While there is no age test for dependents or the Education credits, a taxpayer must be at least 25 but under 65 to claim the EITC with no qualifying children and 65 or over or fully disabled to qualify for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled.

Qualifying Income

Currently, taxpayers must calculate their qualifying income different ways to determine whether they qualify for specific personal credits. The Child and Dependent Care Credit and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled both use AGI (line 34 on Form 1040). The Adoption, Child Tax, and Education credits use a modified definition of AGI that adds to the income considered in determining credit eligibility certain foreign source income excluded when calculating AGI. For the EITC, taxpayers must calculate their earned income and a modified AGI that includes certain losses deducted and income excluded when calculating AGI.[14]

Filing Status

Taxpayers who are Married Filing Separately face additional limitations and complications in qualifying for the personal credits. These are illustrated in Table 1.9.

[11] The household maintenance test for the Child and Dependent Care credit can be prorated over the course of the year if the taxpayer and child did not reside together for the full year.
[12] For foster children, the residency was one year in 2000 but was changed to 'more than six months' in 2002.
[13] There is no age limit if the individual is permanently and totally disabled.
[14] In 2002, the income used to determine EITC eligibility changes to AGI and taxable earned income.

Options for Reducing Definitional Complexity

- Standardize the definitions of "qualified child" and "qualified individual" as they relate to the Child/Dependent Care, Child Tax, Adoption, and Earned Income Tax credits.

This option would obviously require tradeoffs. For example, there are two relationship tests, one for dependency and one for the EITC/Child Tax Credit. One obvious option for reducing complexity would be to use one or the other. If the dependency exemption test were used, more children would potentially be qualifying children for EITC and Child Tax credit purposes. Specifically, this would include siblings, nieces and nephews, who lived with the taxpayer more than half the year but not the entire year, and certain other family members and other individuals, who lived with the taxpayer for the entire year. How many additional individuals would be covered is difficult to estimate. The number would be limited, however, by other tests and provisions, specifically the age limits, and the EITC requirement that the qualifying child live with the taxpayer in the United States for more than half the year. The EGTRRA legislation reduced definitional complexity in 2002 by modifying the residency test for foster children from one year to more than six months. This is a first step in reducing definitional complexity.

Extending the more limited EITC/Child Tax credit relationship definition to dependents would have more dramatic effects. Taxpayers would no longer be able to claim as dependents many older family members or other individuals who lived in their household for the entire year. Fewer taxpayers would qualify as Head of Household or be eligible for other credits that require the qualifying individual to be a dependent.

REV_00349409

Making the residency, support, and relationship tests the same would reduce the time and money taxpayers spend on compliance. It could also make for more accurate returns.

- Use one age for defining a child.

Currently, there are four different criteria in the provisions analyzed. Recognizing there are potential revenue and other policy implications of choosing one age to define a child, consistency would make it much easier for taxpayers to determine whether a child qualifies them for credits. For example, it would simplify the Child and Dependent Care and the Adoption credits if the age of the qualifying child were determined at the end of the year like the other credits rather than when the care was provided, but this could affect the number of children receiving benefits.

- Consistently define qualifying income.

While few taxpayers may have to calculate their Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI), all must figure out what the difference is and whether they have any income to include. The use of MAGI instead of AGI for phasing out some of the personal tax credits may be intended to deny credits to persons with considerable incomes only a small portion of which is subject to federal tax.[15] Eliminating this provision would possibly make additional taxpayers eligible for the credits. By the same token, it would save a lot of time for other taxpayers.

- Make consistent the treatment of taxpayers that select the Married Filing Separately (MFS) filing status.

MFS taxpayers are subject to four different treatments in the credits analyzed. They

- are unable to claim the EITC and the Education credits,
- can take advantage of the Child Tax Credit without restrictions,
- can take advantage of the Child and Dependent Care and Adoption credits only if they lived apart from the spouse for the last 6 months of the year, and
- can take advantage of the Credit for Elderly or Disabled only if they lived apart from the spouse for the entire year.

Whether or not there is any rationale for the differences, treating MFS taxpayers consistently would simplify tax compliance for them.

[15] The EGTRRA legislation changed the basis for calculating the EITC from the Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI) to Adjusted Gross Income (AGI).

REV_00349410

Complexity Issue: Credits differ in how they are calculated and their phaseouts, both in terms of the income level at which the phaseout begins/ends and how the credit is phased out.

As illustrated in Table 1.10, the personal credits begin phasing out at different income levels. With the exception of the Child and Dependent Care credit, all of the credits also completely phase out at different levels. As a result, taxpayers must determine for each credit whether they are eligible to claim the credit based on their income.

Table 1.10 Credit Income Limits/Phaseout Thresholds[a] (Tax Year 2000)

Credit	Single/HOH	MFJ	MFS
Adoption	$75,000	$75,000	$75,000
Child Tax	75,000	110,000	55,000
Child and Dependent Care	10,000	10,000	10,000
Education	40,000	80,000	N/A
EITC – 1 qualifying child	12,690	12,690	N/A
EITC – 2 or more qualifying children	12,690	12,690	N/A
EITC -- No qualifying children	5,770	5,770	N/A
Elderly or Disabled	17,500	20,000-25,000[b]	12,500

Note: The phaseout thresholds for the adoption credit, the dependent care tax credit, and an education credit (HOPE) were changed by EGTRRA effective in future years.
[a]Income level at which phaseouts begin. The credits completely phase out at different amounts.
[b]Depends on whether one or both taxpayers are eligible.

In addition, the credits phase out in different ways. The Child and Dependent Care credit is available to taxpayers with all levels of income, but the percentage of eligible expenses declines from 30 percent to 20 percent at higher incomes. The other personal credits phase out entirely at set income levels but use different calculations to determine the actual amount of the credit.

An example may help make this clear. Mr. and Mrs. Cleaver have four children. They file a joint return. Their combined AGI is $110,150, with Mrs. and Mr. Cleaver having $4,000 and $96,150 in earned income respectively. Mr. Cleaver earned $15,000 of his income from foreign sources. The Cleavers had $7,000 in childcare expenses for two children and $6,000 in qualified adoption expenses during the tax year. The Cleavers also had $8,000 in education expenses; $2,000 for Mrs. Cleaver and $6,000 in college tuition for their son Wally. The Cleavers would determine the amount of credits they are eligible for as follows.

Adoption

The maximum Adoption credit of $5,000 is reduced by the ratio to $40,000 of the amount by which the taxpayer's MAGI exceeds $75,000. This is illustrated in the following calculations:

1. $110,150 – 75,000 = $35,150
2. $35,150/$40,000 = 88%
3. $5,000 X 88% = $4,393.
4. $5,000 - $4,393 = $607

The Cleavers are able to take an adoption credit of $607. If their total personal credits exceed their precredit tax liability, they can carry forward the adoption credit for up to five years.

Child and Dependent Care

Because their AGI exceeds $28,000, the percentage of qualifying child care expenses that the Cleavers can claim is 20 percent. In calculating their credit the Cleavers apply this percentage to the smaller of

- their qualified expenses ($7,000), or
- the yearly dollar limit for two or more children ($4,800) or
- the lesser of their earned incomes ($4,000).

For the Cleavers, their Child and Dependent Care credit would be $800 (20 percent of $4,000). It is interesting to note that if Mr. Cleaver was a single parent filing as Head of Household, his Child and Dependent Care credit would be $160 more because it would not be constrained by the lower earned income of Mrs. Cleaver.

Child Tax Credit

Computing the Child Tax credit is even more complicated. In this example, the Cleavers have 3 children under 17. This potentially makes them eligible for a $1,500 Child Tax Credit. However, this amount must be reduced because their MAGI exceeds the Married Filing Jointly threshold of $110,000. The credit amount is reduced by 5% of each $1000 (or any part thereof) of MAGI over the $110,000 threshold.[16] Accordingly the Cleavers have a Child Tax credit of $700 calculated as follows.

- $125,150 - $110,000 = $15,150 ($110,000 is the threshold for MFJ)
- $15,150 X .05 = $800 (The $15,150 is rounded up to $16,000)
- $1,500 - $800 = $700.

[16] In calculating their MAGI for this credit, the Cleavers must add back the foreign source income they had previously excluded in calculating their AGI.

REV_00349412

Because of their income level, the Cleavers are not eligible for the Additional Child Tax credit, the Education credits, or the EITC.

Other Personal Credits

The other personal credits also have complex phaseout rules. Education credits involve numerous steps and calculations such as determining the MAGI to see if the credit is phased out partially or completely. The EITC involves a recalculation of income as well as application of phase-in and phase-out rules.[17] Few of the steps or calculations for any of the credits are the same. To calculate the Additional Child Tax credit, the taxpayer must complete a two page worksheet that involves information not entered elsewhere on the return and 10 additional steps including four separate calculations.

The Additional Child Tax Credit is for certain individuals who get less than the full amount of the child tax credit. It is available only to the extent the taxpayers' Social Security and Medicare taxes exceed any refundable EITC. This not only makes it more complex to calculate, but low-income taxpayers whose EITC exceeds the amount of Social Security taxes they paid get no benefit from this provision. In fact, a married couple with three children with earned income of less than $22,850 receives no additional child tax credit. If the same family earned $26,000, their additional child tax credit would be $799.

Reducing Phaseout Complexity

- Use one set of phaseout thresholds and consistently calculate how credits are phased out.

Complexity for taxpayers could be reduced if phaseouts began and ended at the same income levels for all credits. Doing this would require that phaseouts also be calculated in the same way. This would also reduce complexity and taxpayer burden. The biggest changes under this option would be to the Child and Dependent Care Credit that does not currently phase out but is available to eligible taxpayers at all income levels.

An exception to this might be the EITC which is refundable and intended to provide income support to some of the lowest income workers. The other credits are designed to have a broader reach. Therefore, the income limits for the EITC would need to remain lower than those of the other credits, and the EITC would not be folded into this option. Other issues that would need to be resolved under this option are the start of the phaseout range and the amount of income over which the benefits would be phased out. Generally, a narrower phaseout range will increase the marginal tax rate on taxpayers whose incomes are, or potentially could be, within the range.

[17] Effective for tax year 2002, EGTRRA legislation changed the EITC so that taxpayers use the adjusted gross income, rather than the modified adjusted gross income for calculating the credit. Other changes include simplifying the eligibility rules by excluding nontaxable employee compensation from the earned income definition and eliminating the AMT as a factor.

REV_00349413

Complexity Issue: Hope and Lifetime Learning education credits differ in amount and whether they can be claimed by more than one taxpayer or dependent on the return.

The Hope Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit have the same qualifying expenses but differ in that the Hope Credit can be used for each of the eligible individuals—taxpayers and dependents—on a tax return, while the Lifetime Learning Credit amount is on a per family basis. In addition the Hope Credit can be as large as $1,500 per eligible student, while the Lifetime Learning Credit is limited to $1,000 per return.

As the two credits cannot be taken for the same student on the same return, having different amounts and availability requires the taxpayer to do additional calculations in order to determine which credit is most advantageous in their particular situation. And unless the taxpayer reads the instructions and associated publication closely, he or she may assume both credits apply to all individuals on the return. The complexity is increased by the inability of taxpayers to take a tax free distribution from an Education IRA and also claim an Education Tax Credit.

Reducing Education Credit Complexity

- Make education credit amounts and constraints on use consistent.

Making the amounts of the credits consistent, and either making both credits available to be taken on either a per student or per family basis would reduce the burden and complexity associated with these credits.

Complexity Issue: Determining when to claim eligible expenses under the Adoption Credit is difficult.

Qualifying adoption expenses are reasonable and necessary adoption fees, court costs, attorney fees, and other expenses directly related to, and whose principal purpose is for, the legal adoption of an eligible child. The maximum amount of the credit is $5,000 ($6,000 for a child with special needs). The credit is phased out ratably for those with modified adjusted gross income between $75,000 and $115,000.[18]

When claiming an Adoption Credit for a child who is a U.S. citizen or resident, qualifying expenses paid in the year before the adoption becomes final may be claimed in the year after the year of payment. Qualifying expenses paid in the year the adoption becomes final are claimed in that year. Qualifying expenses paid in the year after the adoption becomes final are claimed in the year of payment.

[18] The adoption credit and the beginning of the phase-out range were changed by EGTRRA legislation to a credit of $10,000 per year per child (TY2002), including special needs children (TY2003), and a beginning phase-out range of $150,000 of MAGI (TY2002).

If a taxpayer adopts a child who is not a U.S. citizen or resident at the time the adoption effort began, a credit may not be claimed until the year the adoption becomes final. If adoption expenses are paid after the tax year in which the adoption becomes final, a credit for such expenses is allowed for the tax year of payment.

The fact that the credit is per adoption, and adoptions can involve costs over several years can make these provisions very burdensome. The rules about timing are quite different for other provisions affecting individual taxpayers, most of which are included in the tax return in the year in which the expense is paid.

In addition, in calculating tax liability with the Adoption Credit the taxpayer must first consider other personal credits. If the remaining tax liability is less than the amount of the adoption credit, any remaining Adoption Credit amount can be carried forward for the next five years. In future years, there is no recalculation of the phaseout. The Adoption Credit is the only personal credit we analyzed with the carry forward option.

Reducing Adoption Credit Complexity

- Allow credit for adoption expenses to be taken in the year the qualifying expenses are paid regardless of whether it is a domestic or foreign adoption.

In most parts of the Code that affect non-business taxpayers, expenses are taken into account in the tax year in which they are paid. Using this rule for adoption expenses would eliminate much of the complexity associated when expenses can be claimed. It would also eliminate the differential between domestic and foreign adoptions.

Complexity Issue: Income basis of the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled difficult to calculate.

The credit for the Elderly or Disabled is a nonrefundable credit available to low-income taxpayers. A qualified individual is one who is age 65 or older; or, if under age 65, (1) is retired because of permanent and total disability, (2) had not reached the mandatory retirement age for his employer's retirement program at the beginning of the tax year, and (3) has received taxable disability benefits during the year.

The average credit received by the 159,270 taxpayers who claimed the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled in 1999 was $208. Complexity in the credit includes calculating the correct base amount to start from and calculating the ensuing reduction in that base amount as a function of nontaxable Social Security and pension payments and AGI.

The credit is figured starting with an initial amount that is set by statute. See Table 1.11 for the initial amounts.

[a] The lesser of this amount or taxable disability income.

After determining their initial amount (above), the taxpayer's next step is to subtract from this amount certain nontaxable pensions and benefits such as nontaxable social security payments, certain railroad retirement pension payments, and other nontaxable pension benefits.

Next taxpayers must determine their excess AGI by subtracting from their AGI $7500 if single, HOH, or qualifying widow(er), $10,000 if MFJ, and $5,000 MFS. This amount is then divided by two. If the final income amount is smaller than the initial amount, taxpayers may qualify for a credit that is limited by their tax after adjusting for the Foreign tax credit and the Child and Dependent Care Credit.

All of these calculations are required for a credit that averages about $200, in part because of the low income thresholds and the fact that the credit has not been adjusted for inflation since 1983. This means that as Social Security benefits are raised to keep pace with increases in the cost of living, eligibility thresholds erode the benefit. Even those taxpayers that are eligible for the credit do not receive much benefit. A married couple with one qualifying taxpayer who had $9,425 in taxable disability income, $5,196 of nontaxable disability, and an AGI of $14,004 gets a credit of $45.
The likelihood that a taxpayer will qualify for this credit is so small that one tax professional noted that there is a saying in her office: "If it worked, you did it wrong." This is borne out by the high number of contacts taxpayers make with IRS on the credit and the number of error notices that are sent in response to problems on the taxpayers' returns.

The credit also differs from other personal credits in that it requires MFS taxpayers to live apart for the entire year rather than the last six months of the year. This also increases the burden on a group of taxpayers that may be in a poor position to correctly determine their tax liability and corresponding eligibility for the credit.

Reducing the Complexity of the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled

- Base credit on qualifying individual's AGI.

The credit's complexity could be significantly reduced if eligibility for and the amount of the credit were based on the qualifying individual's AGI adjusted to reflect income from nontaxable sources such as Social Security benefits. This would eliminate the difficulties taxpayers face in determining eligibility based on a recalculated income base and allow the credit to be calculated from information on the return or otherwise readily available.

- Require MFS taxpayers to live apart only for the last six months of the year to make this credit consistent with the other personal credits.

Complexity Issue: In some instances certain personal credits must be taken before others in determining final income tax liability.

When claiming the Adoption Credit and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled, taxpayers must first adjust their tax liability to reflect any other personal credits they are eligible for. For the Adoption Credit, it appears the reason is to allow the taxpayer to carry forward into future tax years any credit amount in excess of their tax liability. The reasoning is not clear for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled. This credit "stacking" requires taxpayers taking the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled to determine if they can take the Child and Dependent Care Credit for which few are eligible.

Reducing Complexity Associated with Credit Stacking

- Eliminate order in which certain personal credits are taken.

By eliminating the stacking order for certain credits and simply limiting the availability of credits by the taxpayer's liability, taxpayers will have to undertake fewer unproductive steps in completing their tax returns. However, refundable tax credits, such as the Additional Child Tax Credit and the EITC, would have to be considered last to maintain their refundable nature.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

Complexity within the personal credits analyzed could be reduced by making the credits as consistent as possible in design, qualifications, income limits, phaseouts, and filing status eligibility. As currently enacted, each of the credits requires taxpayers to make a series of independent determinations and calculations, often for little financial benefit. This results in taxpayer confusion, errors on tax returns, and additional work for the Service.

Specifically, the personal credits could be less complex and burdensome on taxpayers if the following changes were made.

- Standardize the definitions of "qualifying child" and "qualified individual" as they relate to the Child/Dependent Care, Child Tax, Adoption, and Earned Income Tax credits.
- Use one age for defining a child.
- Consistently define qualifying income.
- Make consistent the treatment of taxpayers that select the Married Filing Separately filing status.
- Use one set of phaseout thresholds and consistently calculate how credits are phased out.
- Make education credit amounts and constraints on usage consistent.
- Base amount of and eligibility for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled on qualifying individual's AGI.
- Allow certain personal credits to be taken in any order (refundable credits would need to be considered after the others).

CHAPTER II
PERSONAL DEDUCTIONS AND EXEMPTIONS

Tax deductions and personal exemptions are the principal vehicles individual taxpayers use to reduce taxable income. Many personal deductions, such as those for charitable contributions and mortgage interest, are allowed only if the taxpayer itemizes deductions on Form 1040, Schedule A, rather than taking the standard deduction. About 30 percent of taxpayers itemize deductions. Taxpayers who itemize struggle with many of the same complexity issues as taxpayers that claim credits (See Chapter I). For example, like credits, various deductions and exemptions include definitional issues, differing value limits (floors and caps) and reductions (phaseouts), and differing income bases for determining their eligibility for and value of the deduction or exemption. For the 10 percent of individual taxpayers that itemize and claim at least one credit the impact of this complexity is compounded. In general, because itemized deductions and exemptions are claimed on over 30 million tax returns, even relatively minimal complexity can have a huge impact on the overall system.

Because of the strong links between personal exemptions and itemized deductions, we analyzed personal exemptions as well as the deductions for medical and dental expenses, home mortgage interest, charitable contributions, personal casualty loss, job and most other miscellaneous expenses and other miscellaneous deductions in light of these issues. Table 2.1 presents whether the exemption/deduction has a floor (minimum amount of expense before a deduction can be taken), cap (maximum amount that can be deducted), and whether there are other limitations or if the item is phased out at higher income levels.

The various limits on exemptions/deductions have been put into the code over time generally to limit the revenue impact of the exemption/deduction. In addition to the limitations discussed below, the personal exemption and certain deductions also interact with the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT). In the case of personal exemptions, a high number compared to AGI can trigger the AMT. Some deductions, such as medical and dental expenses, are treated differently than in the regular tax system in calculating the AMT adding further complexity. The EGTRRA legislation gradually eliminates the limitation on itemized deductions and phases out the restrictions on personal exemptions between Tax Year 2006 and Tax Year 2010.

[a] Certain itemized deductions are uniformly subject to the overall limit on deductions based on AGI. There is a single phaseout for all affected itemized deductions. This limitation will be reduced beginning in TY 2006 and eliminated after TY 2009.

WHO CLAIMS DEDUCTIONS

Generally, taxpayers are entitled to claim two types of deductions: (1) personal exemptions for themselves, their spouses, and any dependents; and (2) either a standard deduction or the total of their itemized deductions. For 1998, 38 million taxpayers chose to itemize deductions rather than take the standard deduction. Generally, taxpayers itemize deductions when the total of their itemized deductions exceeds the amount of the standard deduction to which they are otherwise entitled. However, some taxpayers may itemize even if their itemized deductions are less than their standard deduction.[19] The top 10 deductions claimed on returns in 1998 are listed in Table 2.2 below.

[19] One reason that some taxpayers may itemize deductions even when that does not appear to be tax-minimizing behavior is due to interactions with state income taxes. Some states do not permit a taxpayer to itemize on a state income tax return unless they do so on a federal income tax return. As a result, itemizing may reduce a taxpayer's state income taxes by more than it increases his or her federal income taxes.a taxpayer's state income taxes by more than it increases his or her federal income taxes.

Information on the number of returns having various combinations of deductions is shown in Table 2.4. The categories of itemized deductions included in the table are real estate taxes, charitable contributions, state and local taxes, home mortgage interest, and a combination of miscellaneous expenses. Real estate taxes with charitable contributions is the most frequently used combination of deductions, and the other

TAXPAYER AND ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

Taxpayers must file a number of forms and schedules and complete associated worksheets to determine if they qualify for a specific deduction, calculate the amount of the deduction, and claim it on their tax return. The amount of resulting burden varies according to the individual taxpayer's situation. For example, taxpayers who contribute money or appreciable property to charities will experience more burden than those taxpayers who give a similar amount weekly through employer deductions to a United Fund campaign. Table 2.5 identifies the forms, schedules, publications, and worksheets for each deduction we analyzed. All itemized deductions must be reported on Schedule A (Form 1040).

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

There are many issues associated with complexity of personal exemptions and itemized deductions. This report focuses on the many different approaches used to limit the value of certain deductions in some situations and on the recordkeeping requirements for charitable contributions.

Complexity Issue: Itemized deductions and the personal exemption have different limits and their value to taxpayers differs.

As illustrated in Table 2.6 a variety of limitations are imposed on a taxpayer's ability to take itemized deductions and personal exemptions. These include floors, caps, and other limits. In many cases these limitations are applied differently for different deductions. Specifically,

- some itemized deductions are limited based on AGI,
- some itemized deductions can only be taken after the amount of the expense has exceeded a set percentage of the taxpayer's AGI,
- some are limited by the value of the underlying financial transaction, and
- almost all are subject to a different combination of the above.

Limits on Itemized Deductions

Currently, the total amount a taxpayer can deduct of home mortgage interest, charitable contributions, taxes, job expenses, and most other miscellaneous deductions is limited for higher income taxpayers. For tax year 2000, taxpayers with an AGI above $128,950 ($64,475 if married filing separately) must reduce the total amount that they can deduct by the smaller of

- three percent of the amount by which their AGI exceeds the above thresholds or
- 80 percent of the itemized deductions that are subject to the limit.

REV_00349424

To figure the limit, taxpayers must complete a 10-step worksheet that includes five separate calculations. The EGTRRA legislation reduces the limitation on itemized deductions by one-third beginning in 2006 and eliminates it entirely beginning in 2010.

Floors on Deductions

Some items such as medical and dental expenses, job expenses, and other miscellaneous expenses can only be deducted if the amount of the expense exceeds a certain percentage of AGI. After that floor is reached, qualified expenses can be deducted subject to other limits in some cases. The floors are

- Medical and dental expenses - 7.5 percent of AGI (10 percent when calculating AMT),
- Job expenses and other miscellaneous expenses -- two percent of AGI, and
- Personal casualty loss - $100 per casualty plus the excess of all casualty losses for the year subject to a 10 percent of AGI floor.

Caps

Five deductions are capped; each in a different way. Specifically,

- The home mortgage interest deduction is limited to the interest on a loan amount of $ 1 million or $500,000 (MFS) unless grandfather rules apply,
- The home equity loan interest deduction is limited to a loan amount of $100,000 or $50,000 (MFS),
- The investment interest deduction cannot exceed net investment income,
- Gambling losses deducted cannot exceed winnings, and
- Charitable contributions are limited to 20, 30, or 50 percent of AGI depending on the type of contribution and type of qualifying organization.

Carry Forwards

Two deductions—charitable contributions and investment interest expenses—can be carried forward to the next year's tax returns[20].

Other Limits on Charitable Contributions

Charitable deductions may be the most complex in terms of calculating how much can be deducted. In part this is due to the many types of contributions that can be made and the different types of organizations involved. If the taxpayer's charitable contributions do not exceed 20 percent of income, there are no other limits on charitable [20] A casualty loss of a business which becomes part of a net operating loss can be carried forward.

INTRODUCTION

This report is the second on complexity called for by the Internal Revenue Service Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 (RRA98).[1] The Act requires that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue report on areas of complexity in the Tax Code (Code) and to make recommendations for reducing complexity.[2]

Complexity is well entrenched in the Federal tax system. Complicated provisions create confusing calculations and instructions that frustrate taxpayers and make it difficult for them to file accurate tax returns. Many circumstances contribute to the Code being complex. Complexity is added both knowingly and inadvertently as (1) tax laws are changed, (2) legislative tradeoffs are made, and (3) the economy and society as a whole become more complex.[3] Complexity is also introduced through the interactions among the varying code provisions that affect the same taxpayers.

Changes in individuals' circumstances also can introduce complexity. For example, marriage, having children, changing jobs, and relocating can all have significant effects on income tax liability that a taxpayer must work through. When taxpayers attempt to comply with the tax law in the face of changing circumstances, they often must deal with tax system complexity.

In a complex economy and social structure such as exists in the United States, many tax goals can only be achieved with tax provisions that reflect the underlying complexity of the financial transaction or goal. Complexity is frequently introduced as policymakers make trade-offs between simple tax designs and the desire to make the tax system fair and equitable in a fashion that supports social and economic as well as tax policy goals.

contributions except the overall limit on certain deductions.[21] If the value of the contributions is between 20 and 50 percent of AGI, a variety of conditions affect the amount that can be deducted. The amount deducted for charitable contributions cannot be more than 50 percent of the taxpayer's AGI for the year.

Depending on the nature of the organization and the donated property, a deduction cap of 50 percent, 30 percent, or 20 percent of adjusted gross income applies. Also, carry forward provisions and overall deduction limits apply. The box below summarizes this complex process.

[21] Ninety-seven percent of taxpayer returns with charitable contributions have charitable contributions that are less than 20 percent of AGI.

REV_00349426

Charitable Donation Deduction Rules:

The deduction caps identified below are applied in a specific order with a total deduction for the year limited to 50 percent of adjusted gross income.

1. 50 percent deduction caps for 50 percent limit organizations.[22]
2. 30 percent of adjusted gross income caps for contributions to organizations that are not 50 percent limit organizations, except for contributions of capital gain property subject to the 20 percent cap under "4" below. (Also, if any contributions to 50 percent limit organizations were made, including donations of capital gain property that are subject to the 30 percent cap under "3" below, this cap is the lesser of (1) 30 percent of adjusted gross income or (2) 50 percent of adjusted gross income minus the contributions to the 50 percent limit organizations.)
3. 30 percent of adjusted gross income cap for contributions of capital gain property to 50 percent limit organizations. (If contributions qualifying for the 50 percent cap (step 1) were made, the allowable deduction for these 30 percent limit contributions is the lesser of (1) 30 percent of adjusted gross income or (2) 50 percent of adjusted gross income minus the contributions qualifying for the 50 percent cap.)
4. 20 percent of adjusted gross income cap for contributions of capital gain property to organizations that are not 50 percent limit organizations. (If contributions are deductible under any of the other caps (steps 1-3) the taxpayer may deduct contributions subject to the 20 percent cap only to the extent that there is any adjusted gross income remaining under the overall adjusted gross limit.)

Further, even if none of the charitable contributions are subject to the caps, a taxpayer's overall charitable deduction is subject to the three percent reduction in itemized deductions if his or her 2000 adjusted gross income exceeds $128,950 ($64,475 for married filing separately).

If a taxpayer's deduction is limited by any of the caps, a five-year carry forward is allowed for the excess.

[22] Certain charitable organizations are designated as 50 percent limit organizations, because the amount of deduction that may be taken for contributions to them is 50 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. Some examples are churches, educational organizations, and hospitals. Other organizations are limited to 30 percent or 20 percent, depending on the type of property given and the type of organization.

REV_00349427

Personal Exemption Phaseout

The amount taxpayers can deduct in Tax year 2000 for personal exemptions begins to be phased out for taxpayers with AGI between $96,700 and $193,400 for tax year 2000 depending on filing status. It is completely phased out between $157,950 and $315,900 (for tax year 2000) again depending on filing status.

Reducing the Complexity of Itemized Deductions and Personal Exemptions

The many different limits on when and how many taxpayers can claim itemized deductions create multiple layers of complexity and burden. Except for casualty or theft loss from income producing property all itemized deductions are subject to some limit. Taxpayers must not only determine what limit or limits the deduction(s) are subject to, but also what the limit is, and how it is calculated. Personal exemptions are phased out in yet a different way. Many taxpayers must consult a number of publications, fill out multiple forms and make many calculations to determine whether it is advantageous to itemize and their ultimate tax liability.

One straightforward way to reduce this complexity and associated taxpayer burden would be to subject all itemized deductions to the same overall limit or limits. For example

- Itemized deductions could be limited to a certain percentage of the taxpayer's AGI either individually or in total. Currently, this is the limitation most frequently imposed.
- Taxpayers could be allowed to claim itemized deductions only in excess of a percentage of AGI, a common floor.
- Itemized deductions could be phased out at higher income levels.

What limit is imposed is less important than using a single limit. The impact of the limitations on lower income taxpayers could be eliminated or reduced by setting an AGI threshold only above which the limits apply as is currently done. Complexity could be further reduced if any AGI thresholds or phaseouts for itemized deductions and personal exemptions are the same as those for personal credits.

Complexity Issue: The recordkeeping requirements for charitable contributions are cumbersome.

Recordkeeping creates a large burden for taxpayers completing and filing Form 1040 and Schedule A. The rules related to recordkeeping for charitable donations and contributions can be extremely cumbersome. Different forms of proof are required for different types and amounts of contributions. These are explained in the box below.

REV_00349428

Recordkeeping Requirements For Charitable Contributions:

Donations made by cash or check for less than $250 require only a statement, receipt, or cancelled check. Donations of goods, clothing or other property also require a receipt from the organization to which the items were donated.

If the value of the donation is $250 or more, the taxpayer needs to get a letter or other written acknowledgement of their donation from the charity. This letter must show the name and address of the organization, the date and location of the donation, the amount of cash or a description of the items donated and whether or not the organization gave the taxpayer anything in return for their donation. If so, a description of the goods received and an estimate of their value is required.

Form 8283 must be completed if the amount of the deduction is more than $500, or donates less than the entire interest in property (e.g., charitable remainder trusts).

If the total deduction for the property is more than $5,000, the taxpayer must complete Section B of Form 8283 and may be required to attach an appraisal of the item(s) they donated. Form 8283, Section B also includes a section for the appraiser and donee organization to complete.

Many of the recordkeeping requirements are necessary because IRS does not receive any information from the charitable organizations on the contributions that they receive from taxpayers. If the charitable organization were allowed to provide the taxpayer and the IRS with this information then the recordkeeping requirements for individuals could be reduced. This could be done on a voluntary basis. Those charitable organizations who chose to do this type of third party reporting to IRS could market the reduced recordkeeping as a benefit to their contributors.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

As with the personal credits, complexity within itemized deductions and personal exemptions could best be reduced by making the specific deductions as consistent as possible in design, qualifications, income limits, and phaseouts. To the extent the rules surrounding deductions and exemptions mirror those applicable to personal tax credits, more simplification and reduced taxpayer burden would be achieved. Under current law, each of the deductions requires taxpayers to make a series of independent determinations and calculations. This results in taxpayer confusion, errors on tax returns, and additional work for the Service. In addition, if voluntary information reporting was allowed to substitute for other charitable contributions, recordkeeping requirements for individual taxpayers (and some amount of complexity) would also be reduced.

Specifically, itemized deductions and the personal exemption could be made less complex and burdensome on taxpayers if the following changes were made.

- Limit itemized deductions to a certain percentage of the taxpayer's AGI either individually or in total.
- Allow taxpayers to claim itemized deductions only in excess of a percentage of their AGI
- Change phaseouts for personal exemptions to be consistent with the income thresholds for itemized deductions.
- Allow charitable organizations to file information returns with taxpayers and the IRS.

CHAPTER III
CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES

Taxpayers are subjected to significant burden and complexity when reporting capital gains and losses from the sale of assets. They also do tax planning to offset the impact of capital gains tax provisions. This burden and complexity result from the need for the taxpayer to determine asset holding periods, figure cost basis, determine if capital losses can be used to offset capital gains or other income, distinguish among asset classes, and determine what tax rate to apply.

No need to differentiate. All taxpayers are subject to the burden.

The accuracy and completeness of reported capital gains/losses is negatively affected by the amount of recordkeeping and time needed to make calculations and understand rules and instructions for completing special forms and worksheets. This chapter identifies several areas of complexity relating to the treatment of capital gains and losses as well as options for reducing complexity and taxpayer burden. While both individual and corporate taxpayers have capital gains income, this discussion is limited to individual taxpayers.

TAXATION OF CAPITAL GAINS

In their simplest form, capital gains are profits from the sale or exchange of capital assets. Assets may include stocks, mutual funds and other financial instruments, real estate, collectibles and other property whether or not the property is used in a business or acquired for investment. Both Wage and Investment and Self-Employed taxpayers may have capital gains. Determining whether a taxpayer has a capital gain (or loss) is a multi-step process. The steps involved include determining:

- the amount of capital gain/loss,
- the holding period,
- the source of the gain/loss,
- whether the gain/loss can be offset against other capital gains/losses, and
- the tax rate to apply.

These types of complexity include maintaining records (potentially over long periods of time), Making multiple or complicated calculations to compute basis and the amount of tax, having to make judgements about complicated technical legal issues, and tax from issues (long forms, interactions between different forms).

Is there a gain or loss?

After selling assets, taxpayers must determine whether they sold their property for more than their "cost basis". In the simplest terms, cost basis, or basis, is what the taxpayer paid for the asset. However, in many cases this amount must be adjusted. For example, previous depreciation amounts and all nontaxable distributions must be subtracted from the taxpayer's basis. Purchase commissions, qualified improvements, and state and local transfer taxes paid by the taxpayer all increase the asset's basis. In addition, specific types of assets may be subject to other basis adjustments. After any adjustments to basis, taxpayers calculate the difference between the sales price and the basis to determine their capital gain or loss.

To determine their basis, taxpayers must keep adequate records for capital assets to be able to determine if, at the time of sale, they incurred a capital gain or loss. In many cases this can be a burdensome task, depending on the length of time the asset is held, the way the asset was acquired, the type of asset, the number of assets the taxpayer has, and other considerations.

What is the holding period?

A taxpayer's holding period is generally determined by the amount of time that elapses between the purchase date and the date of sale. In general the holding period begins on the day after an asset is acquired. But if the taxpayer acquired the property through means other than by purchase (e.g., through a like-kind exchange or gift), the computation of its holding period may begin at an earlier date. Wash sale and short sale rules may require a taxpayer to use a date other than the acquisition date.[23]

Inherited assets are always considered held long term.

Historically there have been two holding period categories for capital gains/losses. These are short term for assets generally held one year or less and long term for assets held longer than one year. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, as amended by RRA '98, created a third category for assets held for more than five years.

There are exceptions to the general definition of short-term gain. For instance:

- When a taxpayer disposes of stock acquired in the exercise of an incentive stock option, the sale results in a long-term capital gain or loss if the stock was held at least one year. As such the holding period for this asset begins on the day of acquisition---not the day after.
- A short-term loss on the sale or exchange of shares in a mutual fund held six months or less could incorporate a long-term loss if a capital gain dividend is distributed before the shares are sold. For example, assume a taxpayer purchases shares in a regulated investment company for $3,000 on July 30, 2000 and sells them on December 18, 2000 for $2,500. Also assume that the company distributes a $50 capital gain dividend to the taxpayer. Disregarding sales commissions, the $500 loss ($2,500 sales price - $3,000 basis) is reported as a $450 short-term loss and a $50 long-term loss.
- A gain or loss on the sale of cattle and horses that were held by the taxpayer for draft, breeding, dairy, or sporting purposes for less than 24 months is short term. However, a gain or loss on the sale of other livestock (not including poultry), held by [23] A "wash sale" is a financial transaction that involves selling a security at a loss and then buying the same security back within thirty days. A "short sale" refers to a financial transaction in which an investor borrows and sells a security they do not own with the hope of buying it back at a later date at a lower price.

the taxpayer for draft, breeding, dairy, or sporting purposes for less than 12 months is short term.

- Gain or loss with respect to a section 1256 contract[24] is treated as 40 percent short-term capital gain or loss, and 60 percent long-term capital gain or loss regardless of the taxpayer's holding period.

What is the source of the gain/loss?

The type of asset that is the source of the capital gain/loss also may have an impact on how it is taxed. For example, $250,000 of the gain ($500,000 for Married Filing Jointly) generated from the sale of a primary residence is in many circumstances excluded from income and therefore exempt from taxation. Other special rules apply to sales of stock in certain small businesses, exchanges of similar property, and collectibles such as art and jewelry.

Can the gain/loss be offset against other gains/losses?

Depending on the type of asset, the gain/loss may be offset against other gains or losses. In addition, under certain circumstances a capital loss that exceeds any potentially offsetting gain may be carried forward.

Gains from the sale of property used for personal use only, rather than for investment are taxed. However, any loss from the sale of personal use property cannot be deducted. Only losses from investment or business use property can be deducted.

In general, short-term capital gains can be offset by short-term losses. The same is true for long-term gains and losses. In addition, any long-term loss in excess of long-term gain can be used to reduce short-term gain. And, a net loss in excess of a net gain is deductible up to the $3,000 capital loss limit.

If a taxpayer's capital losses exceed the amount of capital gain, up to $3,000 annually ($1,500 if MFS) is deductible against other income.[25] Any capital loss not used is carried forward to the next tax year. Unused capital losses are carried over until they are used or the taxpayer dies.

What rate is applied?

Capital gains are taxed at a variety of rates depending on the holding period, when the assets are/were purchased/sold, the source of the gain, and the amount of the other [24] A section 1256 contract is defined as any regulated futures contract, any foreign currency contract, any nonequity option, dealer equity option, or any dealer securities futures contract.

[b] Lower rate only applies to the portion of the capital gain that would be taxed at 15% if there were no capital gains rates.

There are additional sub-categories of long-term gains and losses (e.g., long-term gains or losses resulting from the sale of collectibles) that are taxed at special rates. Table 3.2 summarizes the rates at which long-term capital gains from sales of some special assets are taxed.

Changed the order. Form 4797 is point of original entry.

Tax system simplification may occur either through legislation or administrative change. For example, the new Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) rules and definitions, effective after tax year 2001, will simplify claiming EITC for many filers. IRS' administrative change increasing the accrual accounting requirement to $5 million of gross receipts may simplify return preparation for those taxpayers who now can use the cash accounting method. However, change, in itself, generally adds complexity, and in 2001, there were 107 new provisions in tax legislation, including 87 in the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 (EGTRRA).[4] Many of the taxpayers, tax practitioners, scholars, and other stakeholders with whom we spoke emphasized that even the simplest of changes to the Code can have complex consequences if change is frequent and/or has a retroactive or short lead time for the effective date. These issues are also problems for the Service.
Consistent with the requirements of RRA'98, the objectives of this report are to:

- Provide an analysis of selected code provisions that impact large numbers of Wage and Investment and Small Business/Self-Employed taxpayers to determine the types of complexity present and the impact on taxpayers and IRS; and

- Develop options for reducing the complexity of those provisions.

This report is a companion piece to two recent reports on complexity. The December 2001 report of the National Taxpayer Advocate identified 23 issues considered the most serious problems encountered and identified by front-line employees, practitioners, and taxpayers. The Joint Committee on Taxation report of April 2001 is a comprehensive review of the Federal tax system, including both personal and corporate taxes, and many recommendations for tax simplification are put forth. This report, on the other hand, concentrates on three burdensome provisions of the Tax Code. In addition to the analysis, some options for reducing their complexity are discussed.

In the report we analyze the tax law complexity associated with (1) personal credits, (2) personal deductions and exemptions, and (3) capital gains associated with depreciable business assets. Each section is presented from a taxpayer's point of view and is organized in the same way—description of the area of complexity, taxpayer burden associated with each area of complexity, complexity issues requiring attention, and suggested options for alleviating the complexity. The illustrative data in this report are for various years, depending on the data availability when the report was written.

COMPLEXITY ROUNDTABLE

Many of the issues developed in this report first surfaced during a complexity roundtable co-sponsored by the IRS, Office of Program Evaluation and Risk Analysis (OPERA) and the National Society of Tax Professionals (NSTP) held in July 2000 at Georgetown [4] EGTRRA modifies several tax credits, including the adoption credit, child and dependent care tax credit, child tax credit, additional child tax credit, and the earned income tax credit.

Example

The following example illustrates the process for calculating capital gains.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson and their two children live in Springfield. Mrs. Nelson is the sole proprietor of a company that makes special tires for Sport Utility Vehicles. The Nelsons own their primary residence and a rental property at the beach. They jointly own a variety of securities including 1,000 shares of common stock in New Emerging Development Technology, Inc. (NEDTECH). Mr. Nelson collects coins.

The Nelsons have decided to liquidate several of their holdings. They decide to sell 100 shares of NEDTECH, Mr. Nelson's coin collection, and their rental property at the beach. What steps do they have to take to calculate their gains or losses and any tax they owe from the transactions?

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of their shares in NEDTECH?

Determine the cost basis of the stock. The Nelsons would need to retrieve and review brokerage statements to determine the price of the stock when it was purchased, the price when the stock was sold, and the amount of commission paid on the purchase and sale. If the Nelsons participated in NEDTECH's Dividend Reinvestment Plan, they would also need to determine how many shares were purchased, on what dates, and at what price.

Determine the holding period. The Nelsons would need to review brokerage statements to determine exactly how many years and months they owned the stock.

A short-term gain or loss (shares held one year or less) is reported in Part I of Schedule D. A long-term gain or loss (shares held more than one year) is reported in Part II of Schedule D. A short-term gain would be taxed at ordinary income rates while a long-term gain would be taxed at a maximum rate of 20%.

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of the coin collection?

Determine the cost basis of the collectibles. The Nelsons would need to find invoices that show how much they paid for each coin in the collection.

Determine the holding period. Calculate the number of years and months the Nelsons owned the collection before they sold it.

Losses on the sale of personal assets, such as personal coin collections, are not deductible although profits on the sale of collectibles meeting the holding requirement for long term gains are taxable at the same rates as ordinary income, but not to exceed a 28% rate. Any capital gain would be reported in Part II of Schedule D.

REV_00349436

- How would the Nelsons calculate the capital gain or loss on the sale of their rental property?

As the Nelsons did with their securities and coin collection, in order to report the capital gain or loss on the sale of their rental property they must first determine the asset's cost basis and holding period. The basis may have been reduced over time due to depreciation deductions claimed by the Nelsons or increased over time if the Nelsons made significant improvements to the property. Depreciable property used in a business, such as rental property held for more than one year, is referred to as a Section 1231 asset. A short-term gain or loss is reported on Form 4797, Part II and carried to Form 1040, page 1 as ordinary income. A long-term net loss is carried from Form 4797, Part 1 to Form 4797, Part II and then carried to Form 1040, page 1 and reported as an ordinary loss. A long-term net section 1231 gain is carried to Schedule D and reported as a long-term capital gain. This gain is taxed at a maximum rate of 25% to the extent of unrecaptured section 1250 gain. The remaining gain is taxed at 20%, 10%, or 8% rate, whichever applies.

WHO CLAIMS CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES

During their lifetime, most taxpayers will incur a capital gain or loss. For many taxpayers this will be limited to the sale of their primary residence and any gain may be wholly or partially excluded. But an increasing number of taxpayers are investing in capital assets such as mutual funds, stocks, and bonds. For 1999, 21 percent of all individual tax returns claimed capital gains or losses. Nineteen percent filed a Schedule D, and two percent either a form 4797 or both a Schedule D and form 4797. In 1996, 14 percent of taxpayers claimed a capital gain or loss, with 12 percent filing a Schedule D and 2 percent a form 4797 or both. Table 3.4 breaks down these taxpayers for 1999 by AGI.[27]

TAXPAYER AND ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

The two primary forms used by individual taxpayers to report capital gains and losses are Schedule D and Form 4797. The following publications are also available:

- 523 – Selling Your Home
- 537 – Installment Sales
- 544 – Sales and other Dispositions of Assets
- 550 - Investment Income and Expenses
- 551 – Basis of Assets

A recent survey of taxpayers shows that an average of 6 hours is spent completing Schedule D, for a total of 154 million hours. IRS currently estimates that the average time it takes a taxpayer to prepare, complete, and file Form 4797 is 49 hours. The 1.7 million taxpayers that filed this form are estimated to have spent 84 million hours completing it. Of the 49 hours taxpayers spend completing and filing Form 4797, two thirds of that time (33 hours) is spent creating and maintaining records. Additionally, 8.5 hours is spent preparing, copying and assembling the form, while another 7.5 hours is needed for learning the law and/or the form. Sixty-nine percent of Schedule D filers use a paid preparer. This increases to 84 percent for Form 4797 filers.

From an IRS perspective, Schedule D was one of the top 10 reasons taxpayers called or e-mailed for assistance.

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

We analyzed two complexity issues related to capital gains. They are multiple long-term capital gains rates, and differences in the tax treatment of gains and losses.

Complexity Issue: Multiple long-term capital gains tax rates can create confusion.

Historically, there have been two capital gains rates based on the holding period for the asset—short term and long term. In recent years however, additional long-term rate categories have been added. These are based on holding period as well as type of asset or gain. There are now six different long-term rates ranging from 8 percent to 28 percent.

Reducing Tax Rate Complexity

Replacing the existing rate structure for long-term gains with two rates (one for the 10 and 15 percent brackets and another for higher brackets) would greatly simplify what is required of taxpayers in determining their tax liability for capital gains. Building on the current rate structure that has one rate for taxpayers in the 10 and 15 percent tax brackets and another rate for taxpayers in all higher brackets and applying these rates to the gains from all types of assets would result in a two-thirds reduction in the number of long-term rates.

REV_00349438

Complexity Issue: Gains and losses from the same sale can have different tax treatments.

Whether the sale of an asset results in a gain or loss affects its tax treatment. For example, gains from personal assets (e.g., collectibles) are taxed, but losses from the sale of personal assets cannot be deducted. Losses from the sale of depreciable property that is used in a business are treated as ordinary losses, where as those that are sold at a gain are taxed as capital gains.

Reducing Complexity

Treating the gain/loss from the sale of capital assets consistently would help simplify this issue. This could involve allowing taxpayers to deduct losses from the sale of personal property or eliminating taxes on capital gains from personal property. For depreciable property used in a business this would include treating all losses and gains as either ordinary income/loss or capital income/loss.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

The complexity associated with capital gains could be reduced if

- The number of long-term capital gains rates were reduced to two, one for the 10 and 15 percent brackets for ordinary income and one for all other tax brackets.
- The gain/loss from the sale of capital assets were consistently determined to be either capital or ordinary.

APPENDICES

Introduction

The Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 provides a list of topics which may be included in IRS' analysis of the sources of complexity in administration of the Federal tax laws. Each of the Appendices in the report addresses one of these topics. The seven topics listed in Sec. 4022(a)(1) are:

(A)- questions frequently asked by taxpayers with respect to return filing,
(B)- common errors made by taxpayers in filling out their returns,
(C)- areas of law which frequently result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS,
(D)- major areas of law in which there is no (or incomplete) published guidance or in which the law is uncertain,
(E)- areas in which revenue agents make frequent errors interpreting or applying the law,
(F)- the impact of recent legislation on complexity,
(G)- forms supplied by the IRS, including the time it takes for taxpayers to complete, and review forms, the number of taxpayers who use each form, and how recent legislation has affected the time it takes to complete and review forms.

Several concerns arose as we examined IRS data systems to obtain current data relevant to each of these topics. First, the data were developed by various functions for their own purposes, and were not designed to answer tax policy questions such as these. We chose the data to use by how closely they would respond to the specific topics of interest. Nevertheless, the fact remains that these analyses are based on data sources that were not designed for this purpose. A second concern is that the data do not necessarily relate well to each other. Therefore, although we sometimes combined more than one data source for a specific issue, we must caveat the results. In the future, as IRS develops its new data systems, we expect they will be more comparable across business units and functions.

The Appendices of this report present the data which formed one piece of the decision-making process when choosing issues for this report from complex provisions. In each Appendix, we give an overview of each of the seven topics suggested by Congress.

Taxpayer Questions

Overview

IRS receives taxpayer questions on return filing via three communication channels: (1) customer service calls, (2) TeleTax calls, and (3) Internet e-mail correspondence. The IRS records the subject of each question asked and tracks the frequency with which a specific subject is received by each channel and reports them in the Customer Service Calls Report, the TeleTax Report, and the Internet E-mail Report. Each report is based on a different source and each categorizes questions uniquely for its own purposes and so are not directly comparable. Nevertheless, these are some of the best IRS data for analyzing specific taxpayer stumbling points.

Customer Service Calls Report

The Customer Service Calls report is compiled from data tracked via the IRS Telephone Routing and Interactive System (TRIS). When calling IRS on a Customer Service line, taxpayers access a "live" person. TRIS records the frequency of these incoming calls to IRS through its toll free lines and tabulates taxpayer questions by subject. In 2000, about 5 million of the 68 million calls received were inquiries relating to tax provisions.[28] These taxpayer questions were tracked among 40 subject categories related to tax law. The call descriptions of the ten most frequently asked questions of IRS by taxpayers using TRIS are shown in Table A.1.

[28] An example of questions not related to tax provisions would be, for example, refund inquiries which accounted for more than 22 million calls.

Internet E-mail Report

The IRS Internet site, at www.irs.gov, contains a Web page that allows taxpayers to submit questions by e-mail to Agency customer service representatives. Currently, questions relating to any of 18 tax categories can be submitted and answered. Based on the tax category selected, questions asked through the Web site are routed to one of five IRS locations to the representative best able to respond to it. Prepared answers to frequently asked questions are used to reply to routine questions but most questions require individual responses. Even though IRS historically has not advertised this service, other than in some IRS publications, and the Web page is not located in a prominent part of the site, IRS received and answered approximately 295,000 e-mail questions in FY00.

Data describing the subject and frequency of questions asked through the Web site are recorded in the Internet E-mail report. The ten most frequently asked questions of IRS though its Web site in FY00 as reported in the Internet E-mail report are listed in Table A.2.

Common Errors Taxpayers Make on Their Returns

Overview

Errors can occur at any stage of tax return processing—from the very beginning when taxpayers complete their returns through a three-year period in which adjustments to the returns can be made. IRS tracks the number of errors made by taxpayers during these various stages in two reports—the Math Error Notice Code Report and the Customer Service Adjustments Report. Together, these reports identify routine errors, including both math and clerical errors, made by taxpayers on their returns. A high number of errors may reflect difficulties taxpayers encounter due to complex provisions

The Math Error Notice Code Report

Errors in returns are found at different stages of processing. During the initial input processing of a return, a series of automated checks for errors is performed, and all returns are reviewed by an automated system for over 230 different types of errors. When errors are found, notices are generated and sent to taxpayers either alerting them to corrective actions already taken by the Agency or requesting their review of an apparent problem in their return. The Math Error Notice Code Report, produced by Forms and Submission Processing, records reasons for notices having been sent to taxpayers and where on a form or schedule the error appeared. Although the report is titled the Math Error Notice Code Report, it includes many non-computational errors, such as the reporting of an incorrect Social Security Number or errors in transferring numbers from supporting schedules and forms. The ten math errors made most frequently by taxpayers in 2000 are shown in Table B.1.a. Similarly, the ten math errors made most frequently by taxpayers in 1999 are shown in Table B.1.b. Together these ten errors account for 54 percent of all math errors recorded in the report. Together these ten math errors account for over half of the math errors recorded in the both years.

COMPLEXITY AND THE MISSION OF THE IRS

The mission of the Service is to Provide America's taxpayers top quality service by helping them understand and meet their tax responsibilities and by applying the tax law with integrity and fairness to all.

Three strategic goals and five principles guide the modernization of the Service and the accomplishment of its mission. The strategic goals are (1) service to each taxpayer, (2) service to all taxpayers, and (3) productivity through a quality work environment. The five guiding principles provide insights into how IRS will achieve its mission. The principles are (1) understand and solve problems from the taxpayer's point of view, (2) expect managers to be accountable, (3) use balanced measures of performance, (4) foster open and honest communication, and (5) insist on total integrity.

Reducing complexity will aid the Service in achieving all of its strategic goals. Reduced complexity can lead to reduced burden. By reducing burden, IRS better serves each taxpayer. Reduced complexity also can lead to a better understanding of the law, leading to increased compliance. By increasing compliance, IRS better serves all taxpayers. Finally, when the Code becomes less complex, the working environment for IRS employees becomes more productive.

THE IMPACT OF STATUTORY CHANGE

Many of the taxpayers, tax practitioners, scholars, and other stakeholders with whom we spoke emphasized that even the simplest of changes to the Code can have complex consequences if change is frequent and/or has a retroactive or short lead time for the effective date. These issues are also problems for the Service.

When tax laws change, individuals often face uncertainty as to how to comply with the changes, especially if they are frequent or if the individuals and IRS are given little time to prepare before the changes are effective. In 1986, the Code was rewritten for the first time in about 30 years. In the next fifteen years, there have been about 84 tax laws enacted. Just one of these, the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998, contained 25 sections of tax changes. Of these, 11 were effective retroactively and 4 were effective within 90 days of the end of the calendar year. The inability to stay current has

Taxpayer Errors and Complexity

The large number of errors made may reflect that a large number of people complete the form (e.g., for Earned Income Credit) and not necessarily that a large percentage of the taxpayers make errors. The percentage of taxpayers making errors, however, is a better indication of the complexity. Using data from the 1999 Math Error report, OPERA staff calculated the percentage of errors made by taxpayers completing a line on their tax return that related to an issue identified in the body of this report as complex. In constructing Table B.2, staff reviewed the 230 math error categories identified in the Math Error report and combined and sorted these categories according to a corresponding area of complexity. The results of this analysis show that the highest taxpayer error rate (9.3 percent) occurs in the process of calculating the Earned Income Tax Credit.

The data shown in Table B.3 are based on a separate review of data from the 1999 Math Error report. Grouping the errors by complexity category shows that in 1999, 45.6 percent of the total 8.9 million math errors made by taxpayers related to filing definitional issues. As a separate category, Earned Income Tax Credit errors accounted for the highest percentage (51.5 percent) of math errors related to categories of complexity.

The Adjustments Report

An adjustment is defined as a modification to a taxpayer's account. Adjustments can be initiated by the taxpayer or the IRS and can relate to any of five categories:

1) Taxpayer requested changes [e.g., amended return, claim],
2) Taxpayer response to an IRS Math Error Notice,
3) Change in legislation late in the year or a retroactive change,
4) IRS error, or
5) Taxpayer requested carryback.

The number and type of dollar adjustments (increase or decrease) made to taxpayers' accounts are listed in the Adjustments Report produced by Customer Service. This report consists of 45 adjustment categories. Unlike the Math Error Notice Code report which records errors during report processing, adjustments to taxpayer accounts can occur any time during the three years after a return is processed. Therefore, complete data for a specific tax year is not available from the Adjustments report for three years after the end of a tax year.

The ten most frequent adjustments based on taxpayer-requested adjustments and taxpayer responses to an IRS notice for tax year 1997 are shown in Table B.4.a. Together these ten adjustments account for about 73 percent of all adjustments reported in the 2000 Adjustment Report. According to the data from both the Math Error Notice Code Report and the Adjustment Report, the highest percentage of taxpayer errors occurred at some point in the process of calculating and reporting an Earned Income Tax Credit.

Appendix C
Areas of Law Which Frequently Result in Disagreements Between Taxpayers and the Internal Revenue Service

Overview

Provisions of federal tax law that, when implemented, result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS may result in litigation. The National Taxpayer Advocate's Annual Report to Congress identifies the top ten tax issues most litigated by taxpayers. Issues related to tax complexity discussed in this report are prominent in the lists of litigated issues.

Findings from Taxpayer Advocate Report

The following list identifies the ten most common areas in which court opinions were rendered. It should be noted that virtually all cases involved a penalty issue along with at least one of the other issues. In the absence of a penalty most taxpayers have no financial incentive to incur the high costs of litigation. Penalties, as an issue by itself, is probably not a top issue comparable to the other, non-penalty issues identified in the table below.

Table C.1. Areas in Which Court Opinions Were Rendered

Rank	Description
1	Penalty issues
2	Court Procedures
3	Deductible vs Not Deductible trade or business expenses
4	Earned income credit
5	Gross Income Inclusions and Exclusions)
6	Accounting Methods
7	Statute of Limitations
8	Abatements
9	Self Employed, Independent Contractor vs Employee
10	Last Known Address and Notice of Deficiency

Note: The data collection methodology for issues that are ranked as the most common represents a review of tax cases for a three month period, October 1, 1999 – December 31, 1999. This sample of 302 opinions comprised 22 percent of the nearly 1400 opinions for 1999. Opinions are from the U.S. Tax Court, U.S. Court of Federal claims, and U.S. District Court.

Appendix D
Major Areas of Law in Which There is No (or Incomplete) Guidance or in Which the Law is Uncertain

The Internal Revenue Service issues regulations and other published guidance to interpret and explain the Internal Revenue Code. The Office of Chief Counsel in IRS is the primary drafter of guidance published by the IRS and is responsible for coordinating its development with Treasury and other IRS offices. Through the published guidance process, the Office seeks to develop rules that are consistent with the language of the Code and the intent of Congress, that are reasonably administrable by the IRS, and that help taxpayers comply with the law.

The Role of Published Guidance in Tax Administration

Published guidance helps taxpayers better understand and meet their tax obligations. By providing interpretation and explanation of the law, published guidance also helps taxpayers plan their transactions to avoid controversy. This is increasingly important at a time when the complexity of tax law is often identified as both a burden on taxpayers and an impediment to compliance with the tax law. Published guidance also promotes the consistent interpretation and application of the tax law by the IRS.

How the Published Guidance Process Works

Published guidance can be issued in the form of proposed, temporary, or final regulations; revenue rulings; revenue procedures; notices; or announcements.

Annually, the IRS and Treasury publish a list of guidance priorities to identify the guidance projects scheduled for completion during the year. In 2000, the IRS and Treasury implemented a more formalized system for developing the Priority Guidance Plan (PGP). Each year, IRS and Treasury directly solicit suggestions from all interested parties, including taxpayers, tax practitioners and industry groups. All the proposals for guidance are then reviewed by the newly formed Published Guidance Advisory Committee (PGAC), which includes senior officials from the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury's Office of Tax Policy. The projects on the PGP (Exhibit D-1) are in response to newly enacted legislation, court opinions, changes in the market, changes in taxpayer behavior, and comments from taxpayers or their representatives. Accordingly, the projects are representative of areas of the tax law in which there is no (or incomplete) guidance or in which the tax law is uncertain. The PGP ensures that resources for published guidance focus on the highest priority projects. The PGP also serves as a means of communicating IRS guidance priorities to taxpayers. Publication of the PGP early in the year informs taxpayers and their representatives of IRS guidance priorities so that they have an opportunity to participate as the guidance is developed.

REV_00349452

The guidance process is open to public participation in a number of ways. Regulations are generally issued in proposed form, with the public invited to submit written comments and to testify at public hearings. In the past several years, the IRS has posted guidance on the Internet and accepted comments submitted though the Internet. The Service has also added a teleconferencing capability so taxpayers outside the Washington, D.C. area can participate in regulation hearings from alternate sites. In 2001, the plan year was changed to end on June 30, due, in part, to taxpayer concerns about a deluge of guidance at the end of the calendar year. Accordingly, the 2002 plan year will end on June 30, 2002.

been cited by small business owners and individuals as a primary reason for their use of paid preparers.

Both the Service and taxpayers are challenged in these situations. The Service needs to issue clear guidance and forms covering the changes in time for the next filing season. Taxpayers face the uncertainty that late changes introduce around their current and future tax obligations. With short lead times, both the Service and taxpayers have little time to become knowledgeable about the changes. This creates additional opportunities for error as well as heightened frustration and conflict

The Service faces its own challenges in making sure its systems, training, and other employee tools are current and reflect the most recent legislation. In addition, because the time between when a return is filed and when it is audited may be 1-2 years, taxpayers and Service employees must also accommodate circumstances where the Code has changed, sometimes significantly, in the intervening time period.
The enactment of provisions with retroactive or short effective lead times also increases complexity. Both taxpayers and the Service frequently must act quickly to accommodate these changes. For the Service, especially problematic are changes that come late in the calendar year when the forms and publications for the next filing season are ready to go or have gone to the printers. Short timeframes frequently do not allow the Service to consult with taxpayers and other stakeholders in developing new forms. This can result in the forms being more difficult for taxpayers to understand or complete than they would be under normal circumstances.

Time limitations also may affect our ability to make the systems changes necessary to support statutory change. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 and RRA98 are good examples of Acts with many tax-related changes and short effective date lead times. Table 2 details the changes made by recent acts.

Appendix E
Areas in Which Tax Examiners Make Frequent Errors Interpreting or Applying the Law

Overview

The IRS Examination Quality Measurement System (EQMS) provides quality review data from a nationwide sample of closed examination cases conducted in the field (field audits) or at the Service's thirty-three district offices (office audits). Most of the quality elements identified by EQMS cover various work processes and procedures. However, the number of errors made by Tax Examiners in interpreting or applying the law is tracked via EQMS Quality Element 6B.

EQMS Quality Element 6B Results

A sample of 8780 closed field audits and 4868 closed office audits were examined during FY 2000. A summary of these examinations contained 116 (1.3 percent) identifiable UIL code misinterpretations or misapplications of law made during field examinations and another 50 (1 percent) misinterpretations or misapplications made during office audits.

Top Misapplications and Misinterpretations of Law

The most frequent misapplications or misinterpretations of law by UIL description during a field examination for FY2000 are identified in Table E.1 below.

REV_00349472

Table E.1. Misapplications or Misinterpretations of Law Found Most Frequently in a Field Examination, FY 2000

Description	Number of Field Examination Misapplications or Misinterpretations
Trade or Business (Deductible vs Not Deductible)	9
Depreciation	9

The Impact of Recent Legislation on Complexity

The implementation of new tax laws, or even the modification of current tax laws, that impact issues related to a taxpayer's filing status or affect procedures for calculating estimated and alternative minimum taxes has a direct bearing on complexity. To assess the impact of recent congressional initiatives on complexity each piece of legislation must be assessed independently. While Congress has enacted tax law legislation recently that has added to complexity, they have also enacted other legislation that had minimal (if any) impact on complexity.

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (1997 Act) is an example of tax legislation that resulted in many new tax complexities. The 1997 Act contained many new tax credits that are beneficial to certain categories of taxpayers. These new tax credits required significant tax changes to the tax forms, schedules, and instructions for individuals. Because the credits were targeted to certain types of taxpayers or to certain types of activities, specific qualifications had to be met in order to qualify for the credits. In many cases taxpayers had to decipher complex rules in order to determine whether they qualified for the credits. Several of the credits phased in their maximum benefit over two years. In addition all of the new credits phased out at certain levels of adjusted gross income. These phase-ins and phase-outs lead to increased complexity in the tax law. In some cases taxpayers were given choices (for example, with respect to which of various educational tax incentives to claim), which created the complexity and the possibility of increased errors.

One of the most complex provisions of the 1997 Act was the reduction in the maximum capital gains rates. This provision presents many difficulties for tax payers largely because of the different maximum rates (10, 20, 25, or 28 percent) that apply depending on the nature of the capital asset sold and the taxpayers's marginal tax rate bracket. Part IV of 1999 Schedule D, which provides the tax computation reflecting these reduced rates, contains thirty-five line entries. New complexities are introduced after the year 2000 when the 10 and 20 percent rates dropped to 8 and 18 percent, respectively, for gain from property held for more than five years.

Examples of legislation that did not impact complexity include three new tax laws enacted in 1998: The Surface Revenue Transportation Act of 1998, The Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, and the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998. None of these Acts imposed significant new complexities on taxpayers as these pieces of legislation focused on changes within IRS.

SCOPE AND METHODOLOGY

For this report, we limited our analysis to provisions that affect individual taxpayers, both Wage and Investment (W&I) and the Self-Employed. In this way, we focused on provisions that affect large numbers of taxpayers who are less likely to have the resources necessary to deal with complex tax issues.

RRA98 suggests that certain information that reflects complexity and taxpayer burden be included in this report.[5] Using these criteria as a guide we developed and refined the list of areas of complexity we selected for this year's report by:

- Conducting interviews with senior managers from Jackson Hewitt, H&R Block, Padgett Business Services, Padgett Business Services Foundations who work with individual taxpayers regularly and can identify areas in the Code that create the most complexity for their clients.

- Conducting interviews with various Department of the Treasury and IRS employees who interact with taxpayers and can articulate how various areas of the Code cause confusion and frustration not only for taxpayers but for IRS employees as well.

- Co-sponsoring with the National Society of Tax Professionals a complexity roundtable held in July 2000, at Georgetown University. More than twenty public and private organizations and companies were represented during the roundtable discussion.

- Interviewing tax practitioners, by telephone and in person, willing to share their knowledge and experiences with us about areas of the tax law they considered unduly complex.

- Reviewing a wide range of literature in legal theory addressing complexity and its legal manifestations.

Based on the results of these activities we selected three specific provisions for in-depth analysis. These provisions are (1) personal credits, (2) personal exemptions and itemized deductions, and (3) capital gains.

It is important to note how we addressed two specific items contained in the statutory requirement to which this report responds. They are "administrative complexity" and "undue and unnecessary complexity." For administrative complexity, we found it was [5] Information suggested was: questions frequently asked by taxpayers when filing their return, common taxpayer errors, areas of law that frequently result in disagreement between taxpayers and IRS, areas of the law where there is no or incomplete guidance or where the law is uncertain, areas of the law where revenue officers make frequent mistakes, the impact of recent legislation on complexity, and the time required for taxpayers to complete forms.

Tax Forms and Burden on the Taxpayer

Overview

One of the indicators of complexity of the tax system is the burden encountered by taxpayers in completing tax forms and filing their returns. Estimates of the time to complete forms have been made based on a mathematical model, the Arthur D. Little model, developed in the 1980s. There are several weaknesses in the model. First, it relies on the number of forms, instructions, and words to be read or lines necessary to complete to comply with the tax code. Second, the model is out of date, and recent modifications to the tax system are not reflected in it. Third, the model contains certain peculiarities, such as counting lines added to instructions or forms for the purpose of clarification and simplification for the taxpayer as additional burden. However, the model is still relied on, because it is the only available current estimate of burden.

The estimates of the time to complete tax forms and the quantity of forms distributed are made by the Operations Division. Estimates of the number of taxpayers filing the forms are provided by the Statistics of Income Division.

Forms Supplied by the IRS

Taxpayers obtain tax forms from a variety of sources. These sources include tax form packages mailed to individual taxpayers; IRS distributed forms available, for example, at libraries, post offices, and IRS walk-in offices; IRS-approved computer software and electronic tax forms; and Internet web sites. Tax year 1999 is the latest year with the most complete information on mailings, distribution and filings of forms. The number and method for distributing selected tax forms is identified in Table G.1.

In general, mailing of tax forms to taxpayers continues to decline as electronic return filing increases. Mailings of tax packages containing a 1040 series form plus one or more other forms to targeted taxpayers have declined from approximately 77 million in 1995 to approximately 54 million in 1999. Approximately xx.x million returns were filed electronically in 1999. IRS expects to receive over 33 million electronically filed returns in TY00.

AMENDMENT NO. ___ Calendar No. ____

Purpose: To provide for a complete substitute.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES—107th Cong., 2d Sess.

S.2753

To provide for a Small and Disadvantaged Business Ombudsman for Procurement in the Small Business Administration, and for other purposes.

Referred to the Committee on _____ and ordered to be printed

Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE intended to be proposed by Mr. KERRY (for himself and Mr. BOND)

Viz:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Business Procurement Ombudsman Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. SMALL BUSINESS PROCUREMENT OMBUDSMAN.

Section 15 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644) is amended by adding at the end the following:

REV_00349665

"(A) personnel;

"(B) office space; and

"(C) dedicated financial resources, which shall be specifically identified in the annual budget request of the Administration.".

SEC. 3. OFFICE OF SMALL AND DISADVANTAGED BUSINESS UTILIZATION.

Section 15(k) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 644(k)) is amended to read as follows:

"(k) OFFICE OF SMALL AND DISADVANTAGED BUSINESS UTILIZATION.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established in each Federal agency (except for the Administration) having procurement powers an office to be known as the 'Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization'. The management of each such office shall be vested in an officer or employee of such agency who shall—

"(A) be known as the 'Director of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization' for such agency;

"(B) be well qualified, with experience assisting small business concerns with Federal procurement, and receive basic pay at a rate not to exceed the rate of pay for grade 15 of the General Schedule, under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code;

REV_00349674

"(C) be appointed by the head of such agency, be responsible to, and report only to, the head or deputy head of such agency for policy matters, personnel matters, budgetary matters, and all other matters;

"(D) be responsible for the implementation and execution of the functions and duties under sections 8 and 15 and all small business procurement programs under this Act, which relate to such agency;

Insert B

"(E) identify proposed solicitations that involve significant bundling of contract requirements, and work with the agency acquisition officials and the Administration to revise the procurement strategies for such proposed solicitations where appropriate to increase the probability of participation by small businesses as prime contractors, or to facilitate small business participation as subcontractors and suppliers, if a solicitation for a bundled contract is to be issued;

"(F) assist small business concerns to obtain payments, required late payment interest

Insert B:

To the Kerry/Bond Substitute to S. 2753, the Small and Disadvantaged Business Ombudsman Act.

On page 10, line 12, insert the following after "agency";

", and cooperate and consult on a regular basis with the Administration with respect to carrying out these functions and duties;"

penalties, or information regarding payments due to such concerns from an executive agency or a contractor, in conformity with chapter 39 of title 31, United States Code, or any other protection for contractors or subcontractors (including suppliers) that is included in the Federal Acquisition Regulation or any individual agency supplement to such Government-wide regulation;

"(G) have supervisory authority over personnel of such agency to the extent that the functions and duties of such personnel relate to functions and duties under sections 8 and 15 and all small business procurement programs under this Act;

"(H) assign a small business technical adviser to each office to which the Administration has assigned a procurement center representative—

"(i) who shall be a full-time employee of the procuring activity and shall be well qualified, technically trained and familiar with the supplies or services purchased at the activity; and

"(q) SMALL BUSINESS PROCUREMENT OMBUDSMAN.—

"(1) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section, the following definitions shall apply:

"(A) CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ADVOCACY.—The term 'Chief Counsel for Advocacy' means the chief counsel in the Office of Advocacy of the Administration.

"(B) MAJOR FEDERAL AGENCY.—The term 'major Federal agency' means an agency of the United States Government that, in the previous fiscal year, entered into contracts with non-Federal entities to provide the agency with a total of not less than $200,000,000 in goods or services.

"(C) PROCUREMENT OMBUDSMAN.—The term 'Procurement Ombudsman' means the Small Business Procurement Ombudsman, designated under paragraph (2).

"(2) APPOINTMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the Small Business Procurement Ombudsman Act of 2002, the Chief Counsel for Advocacy shall designate a Small Business Procurement Ombudsman (referred to in this subsection as the 'Procurement Ombudsman').

"(B) QUALIFICATIONS.—The Procurement Ombudsman shall be—

"(i) highly qualified, with experience assisting small business concerns with Federal procurement; and

"(ii) designated from among employees of the Federal Government, to the extent practicable.

"(C) LINE OF AUTHORITY.—The Procurement Ombudsman shall report directly to the Chief Counsel for Advocacy.

"(D) SENIOR EXECUTIVE SERVICE.—The Procurement Ombudsman shall be paid at an annual rate not less than the minimum rate, nor more than the maximum rate, for the Senior Executive Service under chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) DUTIES.—The Procurement Ombudsman shall—

"(A) work with each Federal agency with procurement authority to ensure that small business concerns are treated fairly in the procurement process by establishing a procedure for receiving, and keeping confidential, comments from small business concerns and personnel of the Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization of each Federal agency regarding the activities of agencies and prime contractors that are not small business concerns on Federal procurement ~~contracts, and~~

REV_00349667

"(B) establish a procedure for addressing the concerns received under subparagraph (A).

Insert A

"(4) ANNUAL REPORT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection, and not later than the last day of the first full week of March in subsequent years, the Procurement Ombudsman shall provide a report to the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate.

"(B) CONTENTS.—The report required under subparagraph (A) shall contain—

"(i) information from the Federal Procurement Data System pertaining to contracting and subcontracting goals of the Federal Government and each Federal agency with procurement authority;

REV_00349668

Insert A:

To the Kerry/Bond Substitute to S. 2753, the Small and Disadvantaged Business Ombudsman Act.

On page 4, between lines 9 and 10, add the following new subparagraphs (C) and (D);

"(C) complete and submit the annual report required under paragraph (4) of this subsection; and

"(D) have no other significant job duties beyond those described under this subsection.

"(ii) the goal attainment plan required under section 4(a) of the Small Business Procurement Ombudsman Act of 2002 and an evaluation of that plan;

"(iii) an evaluation of the success or failure of each major Federal agency in attaining its small business procurement goals, including ~~a total~~ an overall score for each agency on the attainment of such goals;

"(iv) a summary of the efforts of each major Federal agency to promote contracting opportunities for small business concerns by—

"(I) educating and training ~~pro-~~ con-~~curement~~ tracting officers on the importance of small business concerns to the economy and to Federal contracting; and

"(II) conducting outreach initiatives to promote prime and subcontracting opportunities for small business concerns;

"(v) an assessment of the knowledge of the procurement staff of each major Federal agency concerning programs that promote small business contracting and the efficacy of acquisition training programs (whether conducted electronically or in person) in enhancing that knowledge;

REV_00349670

"(vi) conclusions and recommendations based upon substantiated comments received from small business concerns and personnel of the Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization of each Federal agency regarding the treatment of small business concerns by Federal agencies on Federal contracts;

"(vii) an analysis of the responsiveness of each Federal agency to small business concerns with respect to Federal contracting and subcontracting;

"(viii) an assessment of the compliance of each Federal agency with subsection (k); and

"(ix) a description of any discrimination faced by small business concerns based on their status as small business concerns, qualified HUBZone small business concerns, small business concerns owned and controlled by disabled veterans, or the gender or the social or economic status of their owners.

"(C) NOTICE AND COMMENT.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Procurement Ombudsman shall provide notice to each Federal agency identified in the report prepared under subparagraph (A) that such agency has 60 days to submit comments on the draft report to the Procurement Ombudsman before the final report is submitted to Congress under subparagraph (A).

"(ii) INCLUSION OF OUTSIDE COMMENTS.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—The final report prepared under this paragraph shall contain a section in which Federal agencies are given an opportunity to respond to the report contents with which they disagree.

"(II) NO RESPONSE.—If no response is received during the 60-day comment period from a particular agency identified in the report, the final report under this paragraph shall indicate that the agency was afforded an opportunity to comment.

"(D) CONFIDENTIALITY.—In preparing the report under this paragraph and carrying out the duties under paragraph (3), the Procurement Ombudsman shall keep confidential all information that may expose a small business concern or an employee of an Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization to possible retaliation from the agency or prime contractor identified by the small business concern, unless the small business concern or employee of the Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization consents in writing to the release of such information.

"(5) EFFECT ON OTHER OFFICES.—Nothing in this subsection is intended to replace or diminish the activities of the Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization or any similar office in any Federal agency.

"(6) ADMINISTRATIVE RESOURCES.—To enable the Procurement Ombudsman to carry out the duties required under this subsection, the Administrator shall provide the Procurement Ombudsman with sufficient—

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

July 25, 2002
(House)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

(THIS STATEMENT HAS BEEN COORDINATED BY OMB WITH THE CONCERNED AGENCIES.)

H.R. 5005 – Homeland Security Act of 2002

(Rep. Armey (R) Texas and 118 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports House passage of H.R. 5005 as reported by the House Select Committee on Homeland Security. This bill reflects the President's proposal. The President commends the House and the bipartisan leadership for the speed with which this bill has been moved to the floor.

H.R. 5005 establishes the four main pillars of the President's proposal:

-- Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection. Under the bill, the Department of Homeland Security will be able to comprehensively assess the Nation's vulnerabilities to terrorism, analyze information regarding threats to the homeland, and map the threat information against the Nation's vulnerabilities.

-- Science and Technology. The bill supports the President's proposal to establish a network of national laboratories focused on homeland security science and technology and transfers most of the requested Department of Energy programs to the new Department.

-- Border and Transportation Security. The bill transfers the principal border-security agencies – the Coast Guard, the Customs Service, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service's (INS) law enforcement and border management functions (including border inspectors and the Border Patrol) – to the new Department, allowing the Secretary to establish seamless border security operations.

-- Emergency Preparedness and Response. Under the bill, the Department of Homeland Security, building on the strong foundation laid by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), will coordinate all major Federal response entities as proposed by the President, allowing for a more direct line of authority during incidents of national significance. However, the President strongly believes that FEMA needs to be part of the Department and would resist any effort not to include FEMA in the Department or any effort to break FEMA into separate parts.

H.R. 5005 establishes a strong framework for working closely with state and local governments, the private sector, and citizens, to ensure that public and private resources are properly aligned to secure the homeland.

REV_00349776

In addition, the bill provides the new Secretary with invaluable managerial flexibility. It provides budgetary flexibility that will enable the Department to stand up rapidly and to respond quickly to the threat posed by an agile, adaptive enemy. The bill permits the Secretary to reorganize the Department to improve security and reduce redundancy and inefficiency. The bill will also speed the procurement of new technologies vital to securing the homeland.

Most importantly, the bill provides the Secretary a prudent degree of flexibility in the area of personnel management while protecting vital employee rights, including protection from discrimination, veterans' preferences, whistleblower protections, and collective bargaining. This flexibility will allow the Secretary to ensure that every employee of the new Department is able to realize his or her full potential in the noble mission of securing the homeland.

The Administration is pleased that the Select Committee preserved the President's long-standing authority to exempt from the operation of the Federal Labor Relations Management Act particular agencies involved in important intelligence, investigative, or national security work, when necessary to protect national security. The Administration would strongly oppose any amendments that would impair or limit in any way these vital authorities, which have been used with care and restraint by every President beginning with Jimmy Carter. Any such limitation or impairment would be unwise and anomalous in an Act establishing a Department whose primary mission is to protect the homeland against terrorist attack. Moreover, no sound reason exists to provide rights beyond those enjoyed by other federal employees. Therefore, the President's senior advisors would recommend a veto if the final legislation included such a limitation.

The Administration strongly opposes an amendment which would provide indemnification for companies that sell counterterrorism technology to the Federal government, as well as state and local governments. Such an amendment is fiscally irresponsible due to the potential for excessive costs that can be neither reasonably estimated nor controlled.

The Administration is also pleased with the bipartisan agreement on the appropriate method for reassigning the authority to issue and deny visas to the Department of Homeland Security, which closely tracks the President's proposal.

The Administration believes that the Department of Homeland Security should be the lead agency for all homeland security threats -- including biological terrorism, potentially the gravest homeland security threat of the 21st century. It is important that the Secretary have the responsibility to set priorities to prepare for and respond to bioterrorism. While the Administration would have preferred that the Secretary have both the responsibility and authority at the Department of Homeland Security, the Administration appreciates the bill language enhancing the coordination between the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of Health and Human Services.

While the Administration strongly supports the bill as a whole, the Administration does not support certain significant features that will make the new Department less effective in fulfilling its missions.

REV_00349777

Immigration

The Administration appreciates that the Committee transferred INS enforcement functions to the new Department, but is deeply concerned that the bill retains INS' services functions in the Department of Justice. The services and enforcement functions of the INS are mutually supportive, are governed by the same provisions of immigration law, and rely for their effective operations on the same information systems. Therefore, both the service and enforcement elements of the INS should be moved to the new Department. The Administration also believes that it is important that the Executive Office of Immigration Review and associated adjudicatory functions be moved to the new Department, in order to maintain consistent and uniform control, interpretation, and application of immigration law and policy. Finally, the Administration is concerned with provisions of the bill relating to internal review of documents, qualifications for nominations, and legislative recommendations that are inconsistent with the President's constitutional authority to supervise the unitary executive branch and with his authority under the Appointments Clause and the Recommendations Clause of the Constitution.

Customs Service

The Administration commends the responsible committees for moving the entire Customs Service into the new Department of Homeland Security. However, the Administration is concerned that the reported bill inappropriately restricts the Secretary's operational flexibility with respect to certain defined functions of the Customs Service in ways that could have adverse unintended consequences for both security and trade facilitation. The Administration is also concerned that the bill generally leaves legal authority with the Secretary of the Treasury, even though all operational responsibility to enforce these authorities will rest with the Secretary of Homeland Security, and with the Customs Service. Although the Administration appreciates provisions to ensure that the legal authority retained by the Secretary of the Treasury would be delegable by him to the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Administration believes that legal authority and operational responsibility should be permanently aligned in a single Cabinet Department, with a single Cabinet official accountable for the border security and trade facilitation missions.

Intelligence

The Administration opposes the portion of the bill that separates the intelligence components of the Coast Guard, INS, the Transportation Security Administration (TSA), Customs, and the Federal Protective Service from their parent entities. These intelligence units are tightly integrated with the day-to-day operations of their parent entities, and their separation will undermine the effectiveness of these organizations. The Administration believes that the Secretary should be given the discretion to determine when and how to reallocate the intelligence units of the various components of the new Department, consistent with operational needs.

Cyber Security

The bill does not include the Computer Security Division of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), as requested in the President's proposal. The Administration believes inclusion of this function would strengthen the cyber security abilities of the new Department.

Transportation Security

The Administration waited four months for Congress to act on its emergency supplemental request. The emergency supplemental package agreed to by Congress is $1 billion short of what the Administration said it needed to implement a rational plan to meet current law deadlines, and additional resources will not be available for months, if they come at all. And Congress has imposed additional mandates in the supplemental that are stricter and more inflexible than the original law. Based on these facts, the TSA's ability to meet current law deadlines without major disruption to passengers, airports, airlines, and the overall economy has been severely undermined.

Managerial Flexibility

The new Secretary of Homeland Security must have the freedom and the flexibility to manage the new Department. The new Secretary must be able to move money and resources quickly in order to respond to real threats to the Nation's security. The new Secretary will require considerable flexibility in procurement, integration of information technology systems, and personnel issues, while maintaining critical civil service protections. The Administration opposes any further reduction to the managerial flexibility that is now provided in H.R. 5005, and the President's senior advisors would recommend he veto any bill that substantially diminishes the Secretary's flexibility to effectively manage the Department.

Statutory White House Office

The Administration accepts the Select Committee's action in establishing a statutory Homeland Security Council to coordinate Executive Branch homeland security policymaking. This Council is modeled on the National Security Council, which has served the Nation well and represents an appropriate balance between the need for statutory recognition and the need to preserve the President's authority, flexibility, and confidential relationship with Executive Office of the President staff and White House advisors. The Administration would strongly oppose more intrusive encroachments on the President's relationship with and authority over White House staff; such encroachments would impair his effectiveness in carrying out his constitutional responsibilities and protecting the homeland. The President's senior advisors would recommend a veto of any legislation that would establish a statutory Office of Homeland Security within the White House headed by an official subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, or which would erode the President's confidential relationship with his White House Homeland Security Advisor, or his ability to exercise proper control over the operations and functions of the Executive Office of the President including the preparation of the President's budget.

Intermezzo~ Judge Gonzales

Main Course~ Karl Rove remarks (see talking points below)

Dessert~ Ken Mehlman remarks (see talking points below)

Talking Points~ Karl Rove

- As Judge Gonzales said, Progress for America has proven over and over again to be helpful to this administration.
- The Administration has had some large successes in our less than two years in office. Many of which, PFA has played a substantial role ~ Tax Cut, 'No Child Left Behind' and most recently TPA. We actually had the bill signing this week for TPA, thanks to many of you that played a roll helping get that passed.

- PFA is what I like to call the administration's 'utility player'. There are so many groups out there doing wonderful things to help the President, but PFA plays a unique roll, they fill in what is not getting done. If we need letters to the editor in a particular state or district, PFA makes sure that gets done; if we need community leaders to meet with Members, they make sure to get that done, etc.
- In the early part of President Bush's term, there was much talk of President Bush's domestic legislative agenda. But the national conversation dramatically changed after our nation was attacked on September 11th. Our country went through a terrible tragedy that has changed us. The way we do business has changed forever. We are working very hard to put together a Department of Homeland Security so we are prepared to protect ourselves at home as well as we do abroad. While we will never forget those who gave so much for our country, while we must understand there is a war going on, we can not allow the President's campaign promises to fall by the wayside. .
- The President himself has made it clear there are still important domestic issues that must be addressed during this Congress. No matter what crises we face in foreign policy there are still issues we must address here at home.
- This President is committed to turning the economy around. We have a three prong approach- tax cut; trade promotion authority and an economic stimulus package that promotes jobs and promotes investment. Future economic initiatives on the President's agenda??
- Will tort reform be on the President's agenda? If so, comments on that.
- PFA has been successful thanks to so many of you- It is so important we do everything we can to help them be successful, because that in turn can mean, this Administration is successful.

Talking Points- Ken Mehlman

- PFA has a similar plan to the Bush campaign in '00- they understand that in this day with so many organizations and campaigns up on TV, grassroots is vitally important to get an issue passed and build support.

- They understand it is the person-to-person contact that gets legislation passed- PFA recognizes building support among Republicans is not enough, they engage Democrats and Independents as well.
- We all know grassroots is not always the sexiest part of this business and it is hard to quantify how much grassroots works, but the bottom line is, it has been proven time and time again, grassroots works. It makes the difference. Look at TPA, we won in the House by ONE vote, that did not happen due to luck.
- PFA works the grassroots at a level not rivaled by many. They help carry legislation through and they realize that it takes business leaders, lawyers, doctors, community leaders, educators etc. in order to be successful.
- PFA emphasizes the positive sides of the legislation and how it is helpful to folks at home- they are not out on the attack- going negative.
- There are so many groups out there against the WH; Progress for America is out there 100% fighting for the President's agenda. They are a true friend to this Administration.
- PFA has a unique capability of being able to engage at the last minute on projects where we need an additional boost of grassroots in key areas – such as the President's tax cut, No Child Left Behind, TPA, judicial nominees.
- PFA has proven time and time again, they are there for the long haul- and they need your help to be successful.
- Touch on what we expect to see from 2002 election

Judge Gonzales received separate talking points. He will be speaking on Judicial nominees and the role PFA has played in building grassroots support for that effort.

White House Mess Hours

Beginning Saturday, August 10, 2002, the White House Mess will be closed on Saturdays. There will be no other changes to the current Mess hours. The Mess will re-open for Saturday hours on September 7, 2002. In the event it is deemed necessary to change these arrangements, all Mess members will be notified.

Thank you.

BK -- Steve Branchflower, the point person in Alaska for passage of the US Victim's Rights Amendment, is a skilled homicide prosecutor, straight-shooter, and a buddy who worked for me in the DA's office there for 4 years. I'd like to help him out. Who is the most user-friendly point of contact for working with the folks in the 50 states on this? DOJ? Public liaison?
Please let me know -- I'm flying to Alaska tomorrow and would love to be able to answer his question.
Thanks -- McNally

Subject: US Victims' Right's Amendment

Hello Magda. Since we last spoke in May the Alaska Legislature has confirmed my nomination to be the director of the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights, a position I assumed on July 8th. If you click on this web page you will be taken to the press release which describes the appointment.

http://www.akrepublicans.org/22ndleg/press/prhalford105222002.shtml

The reason I'm writing is that I would like to get hooked up with the folks who are working on the President's initiative to amend the US Constitution by including a Victims' Right's provision. Our Alaska Constitution was so amended a few years ago and has proved to be a wonderful tool to advance crime victims' causes in criminal cases. As the state's Criminal Advocate I would like to spearhead the national effort with the Alaska Legislature but don't know who to contact. Would you please pass this message on the Eddie to see if he can assist.
Thanks.

same factors set forth at 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }(b). See ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 13-3988B{ TA \l "ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 13-3988B" \s "Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 13-3988B" \c 2 }. Because this Court's ruling in this case will affect the constitutionality of that parallel Arizona statute, amicus has a vital interest in the correct resolution of this case.

STATEMENT

A. The Law of Confessions Before Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }: "Voluntariness" And McNabb-Mallory

1. Voluntary confessions "are more than merely desirable; they are essential to society's compelling interest in finding, convicting, and punishing those who violate the law." McNeil v. Wisconsin, 501 U.S. 171, 181 (1991){ TA \l "McNeil v. Wisconsin, 501 U.S. 171 (1991)" \s "McNeil v. Wisconsin" \c 1 } (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court has long recognized, however, that confessions may sometimes be produced by tactics that offend federal law.

Beginning with Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278 (1936){ TA \l "Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278 (1936)" \s "Brown v. Mississippi" \c 1 }, a case in which a confession had been obtained by the use of beatings and other physical torture, the Court consistently relied on the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to rule that coerced confessions may not be admitted in evidence. Although the Court's initial rulings dealt with confessions produced by physical brutality or its threat, e.g., White v. Texas, 310 U.S. 530, 532 (1940){ TA \l "White v. Texas, 310 U.S. 530 (1940)" \s "White v. Texas" \c 1 } (beatings); Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 322 U.S. 143, 147 (1944){ TA \l "Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 322 U.S. 143 (1944)" \s "Ashcraft v. Tennessee" \c 1 } ("fear of violence at the hands of a mob"), the Court's "voluntariness" analysis also came to encompass confessions that were coerced by improper psychological ploys—i.e., ploys that unfairly exploited those characteristics of a suspect that rendered him less able to exercise free will. E.g., Leyra v. Denno, 347 U.S. 556 (1954){ TA \l "Leyra v. Denno, 347 U.S. 556 (1954)" \s "Leyra v. Denno" \c 1 } (abuse of physician-patient relationship to extract confession); Lynumn v. Illinois, 372 U.S. 528 (1963){ TA \l "Lynumn v. Illinois, 372 U.S. 528 (1963)" \s "Lynumn v. Illinois" \c 1 } (defendant offered leniency and the opportunity to retain her two young children and welfare assistance). In sum, the Court's "voluntariness" doctrine recognized that "certain interrogation techniques, either in isolation or as applied to the unique characteristics of a particular suspect, [were] so offensive to a civilized system of justice" that they could not be reconciled with due process. Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 163 (1987){ TA \l "Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157 (1987)" \s "Colorado v. Connelly" \c 1 } (internal quotation omitted).

2. Although this Court's "voluntariness" cases addressed the admissibility of confessions in State cases solely by insisting on observance of the basic requirements of due process, the Court adopted a different approach with respect to confessions introduced in federal prosecutions. In McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 341 (1943){ TA \l "McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332 (1943)" \s "McNabb v. United States" \c 1 }, "[i]n the exercise of its supervisory authority over the administration of criminal justice in the federal courts," the Court mandated exclusion of confessions that had been obtained during custodial interrogation—if the defendant's custody violated the rule (now set forth in FED. R. CRIM. P. 5) that requires an arrested person to be taken before a magistrate without undue delay. McNabb explained that the purpose of that prompt-presentment rule, to be vindicated by the new suppression remedy, was to "check[] resort to those reprehensible practices known as the 'third degree' which, though universally rejected as indefensible, still find their way into use." 318 U.S. at 344.

The McNabb{ TA \s "McNabb v. United States" } rule reached its apogee in Mallory v. United States, 354 U.S. 449 (1957){ TA \l "Mallory v. United States, 354 U.S. 449 (1957)" \s "Mallory v. United States" \c 1 }, where the Court reversed the defendant's rape conviction and death sentence solely because of a delay in presentment. The defendant in Mallory had been presented to a magistrate the morning immediately following the afternoon on which he was arrested, and he had confessed in the interim. Id. at 450-51. The Mallory Court explained the rationale for the McNabb exclusionary rule by pointing to FED. R. CRIM. P. 5, which requires{ TA \l "FED. R. CRIM. P. 5" \s "Fed. R. Crim. P. 5" \c 2 } (in language now found in Rule 5(c)) that, upon presentment, a defendant be advised that he has a right to counsel, that he need not make any statement, and that any statement he does make may be used against him. Id. at 453-54. The Court believed that the arresting officers improperly deprived Mallory of the safeguard provided by that "judicial caution" by delaying his appearance before a magistrate in order to obtain a confession. Id. at 455.

The lower federal courts construed Mallory{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } quite strictly, ruling that delays in presentment as short as a few minutes warranted suppression of a defendant's confession. Indeed, in a case that later became a focus of congressional concern, see S. REP. NO. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25{ TA \l "S. REP. NO. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" \s "S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" \c 3 }, a confession given within five minutes of arrest was ordered suppressed under the McNabb-Mallory rule even though the arresting officers had advised the defendant that "he need make no statement and if he did it would be used against him." Alston v. United States, 348 F.2d 72, 73 (D.C. Cir. 1965) (opinion of Bazelon, C.J.).

B. The Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } Decision

Seven years after its decision in Mallory,{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } this Court concluded in Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1 (1964){ TA \l "Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1 (1964)" \s "Malloy v. Hogan" \c 1 }, that the Fifth Amendment's privilege against compelled self-incrimination is binding on the States through the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. That ruling provided an essential predicate for Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966), where the Court held for the first time that the Fifth Amendment privilege may be implicated when State authorities question a suspect who is in police custody.[2]

1. The Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } Court concluded that custodial interrogation can generate "pressures which work to undermine the individual's will to resist and to compel him to speak where he would not otherwise do so freely." 384 U.S. at 467. To counteract those pressures, the Court devised a set of prophylactic rules intended to safeguard the Fifth Amendment privilege in the context of custodial interrogation. In particular, the Court held that police must advise a suspect that he has the right to remain silent, that he has the right to consult with counsel and to have such counsel present during interrogation, and that counsel can be appointed for the suspect if he is indigent. Police must also advise a suspect that if he waives those rights, anything he says can be used against him in Court. Id. at 467-73. Those warnings largely parallel the "caution" that a judicial officer must give the defendant under FED. R. CRIM. P. 5{ TA \s "Fed. R. Crim. P. 5" }. Indeed, the Miranda Court stated that the "prophylaxis" created by the McNabb-Mallory exclusionary rule, while anchored in the Court's "supervisory" authority, was "nonetheless responsive to the same considerations of Fifth Amendment policy" that prompted its Miranda ruling. Id. at 463.

[2] Between its decisions in Mallory and Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }, the Court decided Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478 (1964){ TA \l "Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478 (1964)" \s "Escobedo v. Illinois" \c 1 }. Escobedo ruled a custodial confession inadmissible on the ground that, in the circumstances of that case, the suspect's interrogation violated his Sixth Amendment right to the "Assistance of Counsel." The Court later disavowed Escobedo's Sixth Amendment rationale, and "in retrospect perceived that the prime purpose of Escobedo was not to vindicate the constitutional right to counsel as such, but, like Miranda, to guarantee full effectuation of the privilege against self-incrimination." Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412, 429-30 (1986){ TA \l "Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412 (1986)" \s "Moran v. Burbine" \c 1 } (internal quotation marks omitted).

2. As the Court's concern with the risk of compelled self-incrimination made clear, the warnings prescribed by Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } were "not themselves rights protected by the Constitution but were instead measures to insure that the right against compulsory self-incrimination was protected." Michigan v. Tucker, 417 U.S. 433, 444 (1974){ TA \l "Michigan v. Tucker, 417 U.S. 433 (1974)" \s "Michigan v. Tucker" \c 1 }. Indeed, Miranda itself expressly invited Congress and State legislatures to devise other procedures for protecting the privilege (384 U.S. at 467):

> It is impossible for us to foresee the potential alternatives for protecting the privilege which might be devised by Congress or the States in the exercise of their creative rule-making capacities. Therefore we cannot say that the Constitution necessarily requires adherence to any particular solution for the inherent compulsions of the interrogation process as it is presently conducted. Our decision in no way creates a constitutional straitjacket which will handicap sound efforts at reform, nor is it intended to have this effect. We encourage Congress and the States to continue their laudable search for increasingly effective ways of protecting the rights of the individual while promoting efficient enforcement of our criminal laws.

C. Congressional Response To Mallory And Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }: 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }

Congress reacted to this Court's rulings in both Mallory{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } and Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } with Title II of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, Pub. L. No. 90-351, 82 Stat. 210{ TA \l "Title II of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, Pub. L. No. 90-351, 82 Stat. 210" \s "Title II of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, Pub. L. No. 90-351, 82 Stat. 210" \c 3 }. The Senate Judiciary Committee conducted extensive hearings on the subject and formulated the provisions relating to the admissibility of confessions that are now codified at 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }.

The Senate Judiciary Committee Report that accompanied the legislation made clear that Section 3501 was intended to supersede the inflexible exclusionary rules invoked by this Court in McNabb{ TA \s "McNabb v. United States" }, Mallory{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } and Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }. Based on "the mass of evidence" adduced during hearings, the Judiciary Committee became "convinced * * * that the rigid and inflexible requirements of the majority opinion in the Miranda case are unreasonable, unrealistic, and extremely harmful to law enforcement." 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 2132{ TA \s "S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" }. The same was true, the Committee believed, with respect to the McNabb-Mallory rule, which imposed "a very high price * * * for a 'constable's blunder.'" Id. at 2124. In particular, "[i]nstance after instance [was] documented * * * where the most vicious criminals ha[d] gone unpunished, even though they had voluntarily confessed their guilt." Id. at 2132; see also ibid. ("testimony and statements from district attorneys, police chiefs, and other law enforcement officers in cities and towns all over the country[] demonstrat[e] beyond doubt the devastating effect upon the rights of society of the Miranda decision").[3]

[3] Indeed, "the testimony of many witnesses, and statements and letters of many other interested parties," persuaded the Committee that the decisions in Mallory and Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } had > resulted in the release of criminals whose guilt is virtually beyond question. This has had a demoralizing effect on law-enforcement officials whose efforts to investigate crimes and interrogate suspects have been stymied by th[ose] technical roadblocks * * *. The general public is becoming frightened and angered by the many reports of depraved criminals being released to roam the streets in search of other victims. For example, the infamous Mallory was convicted on another rape charge shortly after his rape conviction was reversed by the Supreme Court.

1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 2127{ TA \s "S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" }.

REV_00349977

The Judiciary Committee's hearings also revealed "that the so-called third-degree methods deplored by the Supreme Court and cited as a basis for the [Court's] opinion in Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } [were] not a correct portrayal of what actually goes on in police stations across the country." 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 2134{ TA \s "S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" } (citing testimony from Arlen Specter, then District Attorney for Philadelphia, Pennsylvania). To the contrary, the Committee found that "cases of police using coercive tactics" were "isolated" and very much "the exception rather than the rule." Ibid. Because coercive police practices that "might have been approved 30 years ago" were no longer in use, the Committee concluded that this "Court overreacted to defense claims that police brutality is widespread." Ibid.

That record led the Committee to conclude that the traditional "voluntariness" inquiry should govern the admissibility of all custodial confessions in federal court. The Committee noted that "[s]ince the McNabb-Mallory{ TA \s "McNabb v. United States" }{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } rule was formulated in the exercise of the Supreme Court's supervisory powers * * * and has never been considered a constitutional requisite, no constitutional obstacle is imposed in the way of its legislative repeal." 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 2126{ TA \s "S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" } (quoting testimony from Thomas C. Lynch, Attorney General of California). With respect to Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }, the Committee noted that "a few ha[d] expressed" doubts about Congress's authority to overturn Miranda's exclusionary rule, but that "the vast majority of the witnesses" who testified on the issue "expressed no doubt as to the constitutionality" of legislation requiring admission of all voluntary confessions, since this Court expressly contemplated that Congress could legislate in the area and "[v]oluntary confessions have been admissible in evidence since the early days of the Republic." 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 2137, 2124. { TA \s "S. Rep. No. 1097, 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2112, 2124-25" } The Committee also noted that Congress has the "power to prescribe rules of evidence in Federal courts," and that, by conducting hearings, it is "possible for Congress to examine all the facets of human experience that must be taken into account in solving the problem of confessions"; whereas courts "consider[] only the limited facts and issues of each particular case [and] do not have the opportunity to evaluate all these factors." Id. at 2133.

Congress adopted the Committee's view by enacting Section 3501 of Title 18. Subsection (a) of the statute repudiates the rigid exclusionary rules laid down in McNabb, Mallory{ TA \s "McNabb v. United States" }{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } and Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } by providing that, in any federal prosecution, "a confession * * * shall be admissible in evidence if it is voluntarily given." 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }(a). Subsection (a) goes on to endorse this Court's decision in Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368 (1964), by requiring that the trial judge determine the issue of voluntariness outside the hearing of the jury. In addition, subsection (a) gives the defendant a second opportunity to challenge the voluntariness of his confession by requiring that the jury be permitted to assess the voluntariness issue independently.

Subsection (b) provides that, in determining the issue of voluntariness, the trial judge must take into consideration all relevant circumstances, and further emphasizes five specific factors. In deference to the concerns articulated by this Court in the McNabb-Mallory{ TA \s "McNabb v. United States" }{ TA \s "Mallory v. United States" } cases, the trial court must consider the time between arrest and arraignment, if the confession occurred after arrest and before arraignment. See 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }(b)(1). In deference to the concerns articulated by this Court in Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }, the trial court must also consider whether the defendant knew the nature of the offense of which he was suspected when he made his confession; whether the defendant knew that he was not required to make a statement and that any statement could be used against him; whether the defendant had been advised prior to questioning of his right to the assistance of counsel; and whether the defendant was without counsel when he was questioned.

See 18 U.S.C. § 3501(b)(2)-(5){ TA \l "18 U.S.C. § 3501 (b)(2)-(5)" \s "18 U.S.C. § 3501 (b)(2)-(5)" \c 2 }.

D. Proceedings Below

1. On January 24, 1997, the First Virginia Bank in Alexandria, Virginia, was robbed at gunpoint. A witness took down the license plate for the getaway car, which was traced to petitioner. J.A. 36-37.

A team of FBI agents and local police visited petitioner at his apartment in Takoma Park, Maryland. Although petitioner refused the agents consent to search his apartment, he agreed to accompany them to the FBI's Washington, D.C., field office, where he was interviewed by FBI Special Agent Lawlor and Alexandria Detective Durkin. J.A. 37, 167-68. In that initial interview, petitioner admitted only that, on the morning of the bank robbery, he had parked his car in the Old Town area of Alexandria in order to purchase a bagel. Id. at 43, 168. Because that admission placed petitioner and his car near the scene of the robbery, Agent Lawlor left the interview room to obtain (by telephone) a warrant to search petitioner's apartment for evidence of the bank robbery. Ibid. Agent Lawlor then returned to the interview room and told petitioner that his apartment would be searched. Id. at 44-45, 170.[4]

There was conflicting testimony at the suppression hearing about what occurred next. Agent Lawlor testified that petitioner was advised of his rights under Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } and that petitioner waived those rights before he proceeded to describe how, on the morning of the robbery, he had been in Old Town with one Jimmy Rochester, whom petitioner knew to be a bank robber. According to Agent Lawlor, petitioner claimed that Rochester had put something in the trunk of petitioner's car, and that he had asked petitioner to run a red light as they drove away. Petitioner also claimed that Rochester had given him a pistol and dye-stained money. J.A. 45-47, 49-50, 170.

[4] The search of petitioner's apartment revealed "a silver .45-caliber handgun [like the one used in the robbery], dye-stained money, a bait bill from another robbery, ammunition, masks, and latex gloves." J.A. 170.

REV_00349980

Petitioner, on the other hand, testified that he made those statements before he was advised of his Miranda rights. Id. at 61, 171-72.

2. The district court credited petitioner's testimony that he received Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } warnings only after he had confessed, and it accordingly suppressed petitioner's statements. J.A. 154-55. The court also concluded, however, that petitioner's statements were voluntary, and for that reason it refused to suppress evidence found as a result of the statements. Id. at 158 n.1, 212.

The government sought reconsideration, contending, inter alia, that Section 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" } required admission of petitioner's voluntary statements "even if Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } warnings were required and not timely given." Id. at 94-95. The court denied the government's motion without addressing Section 3501. Id. at 157-61.

3. The court of appeals reversed. J.A. 162-225. The court found it "perfectly clear that Congress enacted § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" } with the express purpose of legislatively overruling Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } and restoring voluntariness as the test for admitting confessions in federal court." Id. at 163, 197. In finding that Congress has the power to overrule Miranda's inflexible exclusionary rule, the court noted that the Miranda opinion never "refer[s] to the warnings as constitutional rights," and that this Court "consistently (and repeatedly) has referred to the warnings as 'prophylactic,' and 'not themselves rights protected by the Constitution.'" Id. at 203 (citations omitted).

After surveying the history of Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s application by this Court—especially this Court's refusal to apply the "tainted fruits" doctrine to evidence obtained as a result of unwarned confessions—the court of appeals held that "the irrebuttable presumption created * * * in Miranda * * * is a fortiori not required by the Constitution." J.A. 207. The court further concluded that the voluntariness standard in Section 3501 will not "provide[] those in law enforcement with an incentive to stop giving the now familiar Miranda warnings" because "providing the four Miranda warnings is still the best way to guarantee a finding of voluntariness." Id. at 210-11. Because the district court had already determined that petitioner's statements were voluntary, the court of appeals reversed the district court's order suppressing them. Id. at 212, 217.

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \l "18 U.S.C. § 3501" \s "§ 3501" \c 2 }, which requires the admission in evidence of any confession that is found by the trial court to be "voluntary," violates the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Congress acted well within its constitutional authority in enacting 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }, because Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule is neither an interpretation of the Fifth Amendment nor otherwise required by the Constitution. Although Miranda itself suggested that the Court was interpreting the Fifth Amendment, that view is inconsistent with the traditional understanding of "compulsion," to which this Court has continued to adhere, and with many post-Miranda cases that have expressly disclaimed a constitutional basis for Miranda, particularly Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222 (1971){ TA \l "Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222 (1971)" \s "Harris v. New York" \c 1 }, New York v. Quarles, 467 U.S. 649 (1984){ TA \l "New York v. Quarles, 467 U.S. 649 (1984)" \s "New York v. Quarles" \c 1 }, and Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298 (1985){ TA \l "Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298 (1985)" \s "Oregon v. Elstad" \c 1 }. Those post-Miranda cases permit use of statements obtained in violation of Miranda, among other things, to impeach the defendant and to secure other evidence against him. Because the Fifth Amendment requires exclusion of all evidence derived from compelled testimony and forbids using such evidence even for impeachment, see, e.g., Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441 (1972){ TA \l "Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441 (1972)" \s "Kastigar v. United States" \c 1 }, this Court necessarily has held that Miranda's exclusionary rule does not remedy any Fifth Amendment violation. Indeed, this Court has expressly repudiated the standard for compulsion embraced by Bram v. United States, 168 U.S. 532 (1897){ TA \l "Bram v. United States, 168 U.S. 532 (1897)" \s "Bram v. United States" \c 1 }, the case on which the Miranda Court based its conclusion. Miranda, 384 U.S. at 461.

Moreover, if Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } were required by the Fifth Amendment, as petitioner and the Solicitor General contend, it would create another anomaly—this one in this Court's substantive due process jurisprudence. It is clear that a claim is not to be analyzed under substantive due process if it is "covered by a specific constitutional provision." County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 843 (1998){ TA \l "County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833 (1998)" \s "County of Sacramento v. Lewis" \c 1 }. Yet this Court has held that a defendant who received Miranda warnings may nevertheless seek to suppress his statements on the ground that they were "involuntary" under substantive due process standards. Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978){ TA \l "Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978)" \s "Mincey v. Arizona" \c 1 }.

The fact that this Court has applied Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } to the States and allowed it to be raised in habeas proceedings does not establish that Miranda's exclusionary rule is required by the Fifth Amendment. This Court has never expressly addressed the basis of its authority to apply Miranda to the States, and has, in any event, rejected the notion that Congress lacks authority to provide remedies for violation of the Constitution that are different from those prescribed by this Court. See, e.g., Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971){ TA \l "Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971)" \s "Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics" \c 1 }. Congress surely must possess similar power to create alternatives to prophylactic rules that guard against the mere risk of a constitutional deprivation.

Indeed, as this Court recently made clear in Smith v. Robbins, 120 S. Ct. 746 (2000){ TA \l "Smith v. Robbins, 120 S. Ct. 746 (2000)" \s "Smith v. Robbins" \c 1 }, judicially created prophylactic rules—even rules devised in State cases and consistently applied by this Court to the States—may be modified so long as the underlying constitutional right is vindicated. Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } itself invited Congress and the States to develop their own alternative approaches to the admissibility of custodial confessions, and disclaimed any intent to create a "constitutional straitjacket" that would "handicap sound efforts at reform." Miranda, 384 U.S. at 467. If, as the parties essentially contend, no alternative is permissible that does not incorporate Miranda's scheme of mandatory warnings and an inflexible exclusionary rule, the Court's invitation would be largely meaningless.

Even if Congress does not have the power to reject Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule, this Court should do so because the principles of stare decisis do not counsel in favor of retaining that rule. This Court's cases since Miranda have rejected its Fifth Amendment premises, and Congress has rejected its factual ones. In addition, Miranda runs afoul of this Court's teaching in City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997){ TA \l "City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)" \s "City of Boerne v. Flores" \c 1 }, that the federal government cannot impose prophylactic rules on States without showing congruence and proportionality between the injury and the remedy.

Law enforcement officers undoubtedly will continue their practice of giving the warnings as an efficient way of establishing voluntariness, but rejection of Miranda's inflexible exclusionary rule will ensure that the criminal process will have the benefit of competent, reliable and constitutional evidence in the rare cases in which officers fail to comply with the technical requirements of Miranda doctrine.

ARGUMENT

THE FIFTH AMENDMENT DOES NOT REQUIRE MIRANDA'S EXCLUSIONARY RULE

Petitioner and the Solicitor General spend the bulk of their respective briefs attempting to establish that—notwithstanding this Court's numerous statements to the contrary—Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule is somehow required by the Fifth Amendment, and that it therefore may not be modified by Congress or the States unless this Court "overrules" Miranda. SG Br. 11-26; Pet. Br. 13-27. Neither the Solicitor General nor petitioner, however, explains how that contention can be squared with any coherent analysis of elementary principles of Fifth Amendment doctrine that this Court has consistently followed both before and after Miranda.

REV_00349984

Those principles unmistakably show what this Court has, in any event, repeatedly conceded—i.e., that Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule cannot plausibly be viewed as a remedy for any Fifth Amendment "compulsion." Indeed, both the Solicitor General and petitioner cloak their contentions in gauzy terminology—repeatedly asserting, for example, that Miranda is "constitutionally based" or that it has "constitutional weight"—that tellingly exposes their utter inability to identify, either in the plain terms of the Fifth Amendment or in conventional Fifth Amendment doctrine, a home for Miranda's unyielding exclusionary rule. E.g., SG Br. 23; Pet. Br. 22.

Because the Fifth Amendment plainly does not require that inflexible rule of exclusion for voluntary, though unwarned, custodial statements, Congress acted well within its proper sphere of authority in enacting 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }. There is therefore no need to "overrule" Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } in order to sustain the constitutionality of the statute. Even were this Court to conclude otherwise, "the customary deference accorded the judgments of Congress," particularly where, "as here, Congress specifically considered the question of the Act's constitutionality," Rostker v. Goldberg, 453 U.S. 57, 64 (1981){ TA \l "Rostker v. Goldberg, 453 U.S. 57 (1981)" \s "Rostker v. Goldberg" \c 1 }, and the inconsistency of Miranda's rigid exclusionary rule with significant bodies of constitutional doctrine, should cause this Court to reconsider and reject that exclusionary rule.

A. This Court Has Rejected The Proposition That Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } Is Required By The Fifth Amendment

1. The Fifth Amendment provides that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." As is evident from its language, "[t]he constitutional guarantee is only that the witness be not compelled to give self-incriminating testimony," and therefore it "does not prohibit every element which influences a criminal suspect to make incriminating admissions." United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 187-88 (1977){ TA \l "United States v. Washington,

REV_00349985

431 U.S. 181 (1977)" \s "United States v. Washington" \c 1 }; see also Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391, 397 (1976){ TA \l "Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391 (1976)" \s "Fisher v. United States" \c 1 } ("[t]he Court has held repeatedly that the Fifth Amendment is limited to prohibiting the use of 'physical or moral compulsion' exerted on the person asserting the privilege"); Hoffa v. United States, 385 U.S. 293, 304 (1966){ TA \l "Hoffa v. United States, 385 U.S. 293 (1966)" \s "Hoffa v. United States" \c 1 } ("a necessary element of compulsory self-incrimination is some kind of compulsion"); United States v. Monia, 317 U.S. 424, 427 (1943){ TA \l "United States v. Monia, 317 U.S. 424 (1943)" \s "United States v. Monia" \c 1 } ("[t]he Amendment speaks of compulsion"). In particular, nothing in the Fifth Amendment "preclude[s] a witness from testifying voluntarily in matters which may incriminate him." Monia, 317 U.S. at 427{ TA \s "United States v. Monia" }.

At the outset, Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } fits uneasily within that basic framework, because it effectively requires that unwarned custodial statements be "presumed compelled and * * * excluded from evidence at trial in the State's case in chief" (Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298, 317 (1985){ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" }) even though the accused has never affirmatively claimed the privilege. Yet this Court has long held—both before and since Miranda—that a person who fails affirmatively to claim the protection of the Fifth Amendment is not "considered to have been 'compelled' within the meaning of the Amendment." Minnesota v. Murphy, 465 U.S. 420, 427 (1984){ TA \l "Minnesota v. Murphy, 465 U.S. 420 (1984)" \s "Minnesota v. Murphy" \c 1 } (quoting Monia{ TA \s "United States v. Monia" }, 317 U.S. at 427); Garner v. United States, 424 U.S. 648, 654 (1976){ TA \l "Garner v. United States, 424 U.S. 648 (1976)" \s "Garner v. United States" \c 1 } ("if a witness under compulsion to testify makes disclosures instead of claiming the privilege, the government has not 'compelled' him to incriminate himself"); United States ex rel. Vatjauer v. Commissioner of Immigration, 273 U.S. 103, 112-13 (1927){ TA \l "United States ex rel. Vatjauer v. Commissioner of Immigration, 273 U.S. 103 (1927)" \s "United States ex rel. Vatjauer

v. Commissioner of Immigration" \c 1 } (same). In other words, "a witness confronted with questions that the government should reasonably expect to elicit incriminating evidence ordinarily must assert the privilege rather than answer if he desires not to incriminate himself. * * * [I]f he chooses to answer, his choice is considered to be voluntary since he was free to claim the privilege and would suffer no penalty from his decision to do so." Murphy{ TA \s "Minnesota v. Murphy" }, 465 U.S. at 429.

Murphy suggested that the "extraordinary safeguard[s]" that Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } adopted are a "well-known exception" to conventional Fifth Amendment doctrine. 465 U.S. at 429-30. The Court has, however, often articulated a far more plausible explanation for Miranda's failure to meet the doctrinal requirements for "compulsion" that this Court repeatedly embraced both before and after Miranda—i.e., that "[t]he Miranda rule is not, nor did it ever claim to be, a dictate of the Fifth Amendment itself." Duckworth v. Egan, 492 U.S. 195, 209 (1989){ TA \l "Duckworth v. Egan, 492 U.S. 195 (1989)" \s "Duckworth v. Egan" \c 1 } (O'Connor, J., concurring). As the Court has repeatedly stated, "[t]he prophylactic Miranda warnings * * * are 'not themselves rights protected by the Constitution but [are] instead measures to insure that the right against compulsory self-incrimination [is] protected.'" New York v. Quarles, 467 U.S. 649, 654 (1984){ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } (quoting Michigan v. Tucker, 417 U.S. at 444); see also Connecticut v. Barrett, 479 U.S. 523, 528 (1987) ("Miranda * * * is not itself required by the Fifth Amendment's prohibition on coerced confessions, but is instead justified only by reference to its prophylactic purpose"); Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" }, 470 U.S. at 310 ("The failure of police to administer Miranda warnings does not mean that the statements received have actually been coerced"); Arizona v. Roberson{ TA \s "Arizona v. Roberson" }, 486 U.S. 675, 691 (1988) (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (Miranda "operates even absent constitutional violation").

Indeed, while Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } itself suggested that the Court's analysis of compulsion (and its consequent adoption of an exclusionary rule) reflected the Court's interpretation of the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment, this Court has been explicit in rejecting the precedent on which Miranda relied to suggest that the Clause is directed to the subject of custodial confessions. Bram v. United States, 168 U.S. 532 (1897){ TA \s "Bram v. United States" }, a case that Miranda described as "set[ting] down the Fifth Amendment standard for compulsion which we implement today" (Miranda, 384 U.S. at 461-62), long stood for the proposition that a statement must be deemed "compelled" if it was induced by any threat or promise or by the exertion of any improper influence "however slight." Bram, 168 U.S. at 542-43. That broad conception of "compulsion" best explains why Miranda was able to reason that pressures inherent in custodial interrogation may suffice to "compel" a confession. Yet this Court has expressly repudiated Bram, explaining that "under current precedent" that case "does not state the standard for determining the voluntariness of a confession." Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 285 (1991){ TA \l "Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279 (1991)" \s "Arizona v. Fulminante" \c 1 }. It is, to say the least, anomalous for petitioner and the Solicitor General to proclaim the existence of a "constitutional basis" for Miranda without even discussing this Court's express rejection of the principal precedential basis that decision ever purported to have.

2. This Court not only has said that Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule is not an interpretation of, nor otherwise required by, the Fifth Amendment; this Court's cases have necessarily so held. Miranda's exclusionary rule cannot be viewed as a remedy for any Fifth Amendment "compulsion," because, as demonstrated by this Court's immunity cases, true "compulsion" must be remedied by excluding all evidence derived directly or indirectly from the "compelled" statement. This Court, by contrast, has repeatedly held that such a remedy is not necessary for Miranda violations. Neither petitioner nor the Solicitor General attempts to reconcile those two lines of authority.

a. The quintessential example of true Fifth Amendment "compulsion" is a judicial order directing a citizen to answer on pain of punishment. In Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U.S. 547 (1892){ TA \l "Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U.S. 547 (1892)" \s "Counselman v. Hitchcock" \c 1 }, the first case in which this Court considered the constitutionality of immunity statutes, this Court made clear that such compulsion requires a broad suppression remedy. The immunity statute at issue in Counselman provided that no "evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding * * * shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used against him * * * in any court of the United States." Id. at 560. This Court construed that language as affording a witness protection only against use by the government of the specific testimony compelled from the witness under the grant of immunity, and thus as not "prevent[ing] the use of his testimony to search out" other evidence. Id. at 564. As so construed, the statute was found to violate the Fifth Amendment, because the prohibition on the government's use of the compelled testimony was not "a full substitute" for that amendment's prohibition. Id. at 585-86. In other words, the immunity provided by the statute in Counselman "was incomplete, in that it merely forbade the use of the testimony given and failed to protect a witness from future prosecution based on knowledge and sources of information obtained from the compelled testimony." Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422, 437 (1956){ TA \l "Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422 (1956)" \s "Ullmann v. United States" \c 1 }.

By contrast, in Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441 (1972){ TA \s "Kastigar v. United States" }, the Court upheld the constitutionality of the current federal immunity statute, 18 U.S.C. § 6002. Unlike the statute considered in Counselman{ TA \s "Counselman v. Hitchcock" }, Section 6002 provides immunity from the use of compelled testimony and from the use of any evidence derived "directly or indirectly" from such testimony. Kastigar{ TA \s "Kastigar v. United States" } reasoned that because Section 6002 "prohibits the prosecutorial authorities from using the compelled testimony in any respect," the immunity it provides "is coextensive with the scope of the privilege against self-incrimination, and therefore is sufficient to compel testimony over a claim of the privilege." 406 U.S. at 453.

Since its decision in Kastigar,{ TA \s "Kastigar v. United States" } the Court has repeatedly held that a witness who has been "compelled" to testify within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment must be accorded both "use" and "derivative use" immunity. See, e.g., United States v. Balsys, 524 U.S. 666, 692 (1998){ TA \l "United States v. Balsys, 524 U.S. 666 (1998)" \s "United States v. Balsys" \c 1 } (noting that the Fifth Amendment "requir[es] the Government to pay a price in the form of use (and derivative use) immunity"); Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248, 254-55 (1983){ TA \l "Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy, 459 U.S. 248 (1983)" \s "Pillsbury Co. v. Conboy" \c 1 } (same). As the Court explained in holding that such compelled statements may not be used even to impeach a witness, true "compulsion" implicates the Fifth Amendment "in its most pristine form. Balancing, therefore, is not simply unnecessary. It is impermissible." New Jersey v. Portash, 440 U.S. 450, 459 (1979){ TA \l "New Jersey v. Portash, 440 U.S. 450 (1979)" \s "New Jersey v. Portash" \c 1 }.

b. This Court's Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } cases cannot be reconciled with the proposition that Miranda redresses any form of Fifth Amendment "compulsion." In Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222 (1971){ TA \s "Harris v. New York" }—one of the Court's earliest Miranda cases—this Court held that unwarned custodial statements may be used to impeach the defendant if he takes the stand. Although Miranda itself had suggested that unwarned statements could not be so used, see Miranda, 384 U.S. at 477, this Court explained that that suggestion "was not at all necessary to the Court's holding and cannot be regarded as controlling." Harris{ TA \s "Harris v. New York" }, 401 U.S. at 224. Reasoning that "sufficient deterrence flows when the evidence in question is made unavailable to the prosecution in its case in chief," the Court refused to endorse a more sweeping exclusionary rule. Id. at 225-26. Thus, the Miranda doctrine expressly permits the use of unwarned custodial statements to impeach the defendant, and it does so on the basis of a balancing of interests that would be wholly impermissible if the Court were dealing with statements obtained in violation of the Fifth Amendment. See Portash{ TA \s "New Jersey v. Portash" }, 440 U.S. at 459. That "balance was struck in Harris" and the Court has not been "disposed to change it." Oregon v. Hass, 420 U.S. 714, 723 (1975){ TA \l "Oregon v. Hass, 420 U.S. 714 (1975)" \s "Oregon v. Hass" \c 1 }; see also Michigan v. Harvey, 494 U.S. 344, 350-51 (1990){ TA \l "Michigan v. Harvey, 494 U.S. 344 (1990)" \s "Michigan v. Harvey" \c 1 } (reaffirming Harris rule).

Nor are the impeachment cases isolated examples of Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s inconsistency with the rule that truly compelled statements may not be used for any purpose. In Quarles, supra, the Court adopted a "public safety" exception to Miranda, concluding that unwarned custodial statements and physical evidence derived from those statements need not be excluded—even from the prosecution's case-in-chief—if the interrogation that produced those statements was prompted by the officer's reasonable concern for public safety. Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" }, 467 U.S. at 654-57. The Court "conclude[d] that the need for answers to questions in a situation posing a threat to the public safety outweighs the need for the prophylactic rule protecting the Fifth Amendment's privilege against self-incrimination." Id. at 657. That conclusion, the Court observed, is consistent with the traditional Fifth Amendment rule that neither compelled statements nor evidence derived from them may be used at trial, because Miranda did not hold that unwarned custodial statements are in fact "compelled" or "coerced." Id. at 655 & n.5. Instead, the Miranda Court held merely that warnings "would reduce the likelihood that * * * suspects would fall victim to constitutionally impermissible practices of police interrogation in the presumptively coercive environment of the station house." Id. at 656.

The Court reaffirmed that view of Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } in Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" }, supra, where it again held that unwarned statements do not "taint" evidence subsequently derived from those statements, so as to make such derivative evidence inadmissible in the prosecution's case-in-chief. The Court emphasized that a "simple failure to administer Miranda warnings is not in itself a violation of the Fifth Amendment," and that Miranda "itself recognized this point when it disclaimed any intent to create a 'constitutional straitjacket' and invited Congress and the States to suggest 'potential alternatives for protecting the privilege.'" Elstad, 470 U.S. at 306-07 & n.1.

In sum, Harris{ TA \s "Harris v. New York" }, Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } and Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } necessarily establish that Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s inflexible exclusionary rule is not required by the Fifth Amendment. Although the Self-Incrimination Clause does require a rigid exclusionary rule for truly compelled statements, the Court's willingness to modify the Miranda rule on the basis of considerations of policy, as evidenced by its rulings on impeachment and derivative evidence, belies any argument that Miranda is the rule that the Constitution requires.[5] In other words, despite this Court's view that unwarned statements must be "presumed * * * compelled" (Elstad,{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } 470 U.S. at 317), the departure in Harris,{ TA \s "Harris v. New York" } Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } and Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } from the Counselman{ TA \s "Counselman v. Hitchcock" }-Kastigar{ TA \s "Kastigar v. United States" } rule demonstrates that the "presumption" does not reflect any conclusion that such unwarned statements are in fact "compelled" within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment.[6] [5] Indeed, Congress's decision to provide a remedy for compelled statements that mirrored the results obtained under Harris{ TA \s "Harris v. New York" }, Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } and Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } was the reason this Court struck down the immunity statute at issue in Counselman{ TA \s "Counselman v. Hitchcock" }. Neither petitioner nor the Solicitor General has explained how, if Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule is indeed required to remedy some form of Fifth Amendment "compulsion," this Court could lawfully assert (by ruling as it did in Harris, Quarles and Elstad) for itself the authority that it has long denied to Congress.

---

[6] The view that Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } does not remedy any Fifth Amendment "compulsion" also follows, of course, from the Court's

REV_00349992

Where there is no constitutional violation, Congress must be free to craft an alternative framework for the admissibility of those statements.

B. This Court's Substantive Due Process Decisions Are Inconsistent With The Proposition That Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } Defined The Fifth Amendment

The fact that unwarned custodial statements are simply not "compelled" within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment also explains another aspect of this Court's jurisprudence of confessions that both petitioner and the Solicitor General ignore: this Court's insistence that a defendant who receives warnings in accordance with Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } may nonetheless seek to suppress his statements on the ground that those statements were "involuntary" under due process standards. See Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 396-402 (1978){ TA \s "Mincey v. Arizona" } (suppressing statements on that theory); see also Elstad,{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } 470 U.S. at 307-08 ("Where an unwarned statement is preserved for use in situations that fall outside the sweep of * * * Miranda * * *, the primary criterion of admissibility remains the 'old' due process voluntariness test") (internal brackets, quotation marks and citation omitted).

1. The Court's retention of due process "voluntariness" as a claim that a defendant may make in addition to any claim he may have under Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } and its progeny strongly supports the view that unwarned custodial statements do not, as a general matter, violate any provision of the Fifth Amendment. That is because the Court has made clear that due process is a residual doctrine that may be invoked only when no specific provision of the Bill of Rights addresses the alleged deprivation at hand. See, e.g., Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S.

traditional rule that no such compulsion occurs unless the witness affirmatively claims the protection of the privilege. Monia{ TA \s "United States v. Monia" }, 317 U.S. at 427.

REV_00349993

386, 395 (1989){ TA \l "Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386 (1989)" \s "Graham v. Connor" \c 1 }.

As the Chief Justice has noted, because the Framers of our Constitution sought to restrict arbitrary or oppressive government action primarily through the Bill of Rights, only the specific Amendment that addresses a "particular sort of government behavior," rather than substantive due process principles, should be applied to claims challenging that particular behavior. See Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 273 (1994){ TA \l "Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266 (1994)" \s "Albright v. Oliver" \c 1 } (plurality opinion of Rehnquist, C.J., joined by O'Connor, Scalia, & Ginsburg, JJ.); see also id. at 281 (Kennedy, J., joined by Thomas, J., concurring in judgment) ("I agree with the plurality that [the] allegation * * * must be analyzed under the Fourth Amendment without reference to more general considerations of due process"). Thus, under settled doctrine, "if a constitutional claim is covered by a specific constitutional provision, such as the Fourth or Eighth Amendment, the claim must be analyzed under the standard appropriate to that specific provision, not under the rubric of substantive due process." County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 843 (1998){ TA \s "County of Sacramento v. Lewis" } (quoting United States v. Lanier, 520 U.S. 259, 272 n.7 (1997)).

2. The Court's continued reliance on substantive due process principles in assessing the voluntariness of custodial confessions necessarily means that such confessions are not "covered by" the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment—presumably because the Court continues to adhere to the conventional understanding of "compulsion" reflected in Monia{ TA \s "United States v. Monia" } and similar cases. Indeed, that reliance on substantive due process would be inexplicable if—as petitioner and the Solicitor General appear to believe—unwarned custodial statements violate some undefined component of the Self-Incrimination Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

C. That This Court Has Ruled On Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } Issues In State Cases Does Not Establish That Congress Lacks Power To Reject Miranda's Exclusionary Rule

The parties contend, however, that this Court's application of Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } to the States, and its conclusion that Miranda claims may be raised in habeas corpus proceedings, Withrow v. Williams, 507 U.S. 680 (1993){ TA \l "Withrow v. Williams, 507 U.S. 680 (1993)" \s "Withrow v. Williams" \c 1 }, conclusively show that Miranda is a rule of federal constitutional law that Congress is powerless to modify. See Pet. Br. 27; see also SG Br. 23-25. That argument is unavailing.

1. To begin with, while this Court has decided Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } issues in cases arising out of State courts, this Court has never clearly defined the basis for, or the contours of, its authority to apply Miranda's exclusionary rule to the States, and it certainly has not examined those questions in the wake of Harris{ TA \s "Harris v. New York" }, Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } and Elstad. { TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } Those State cases therefore have no precedential value on those antecedent questions, since, as the Court has frequently stated, "questions which merely lurk in the record are not resolved, and no resolution of them may be inferred." United States v. Shabani, 513 U.S. 10, 16 (1994){ TA \l "United States v. Shabani, 513 U.S. 10 (1994)" \s "United States v. Shabani" \c 1 } (internal quotation marks omitted); Illinois State Bd. of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173, 183 (1979){ TA \l "Illinois State Bd. of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party, 440 U.S. 173 (1979)" \s "Illinois State Bd. of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party" \c 1 }; Webster v. Fall, 266 U.S. 507, 511 (1925){ TA \l "Webster v. Fall, 266 U.S. 507 (1925)" \s "Webster v. Fall" \c 1 }. Indeed, even if those State cases were viewed as speaking to whether Miranda's exclusionary rule in fact remedies any Fifth Amendment violation, that would at most establish that they are inconsistent with Harris, { TA \s "Harris v. New York" }Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } and Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" }, which—unless this Court is to overrule Counselman{ TA \s "Counselman v. Hitchcock" } and Kastigar{ TA \s "Kastigar v. United States" }—necessarily stand for the contrary proposition. Yet neither petitioner nor the Solicitor General offers a persuasive reason for simply picking one line of authority and ignoring the other.

2. In any event, the argument advanced by petitioner and the Solicitor General proceeds from an erroneous premise. Although it is true that this Court lacks authority to impose "supervisory" rules (i.e., rules dictated solely by this Court's sense of desirable practice) on the State courts, it by no means follows that any rule that this Court bases on the Constitution, or that it decides to apply to the States, may never be overridden legislatively. In fact, this Court's cases are to the contrary.

To cite only the most obvious example, the Court has recognized private rights of action—based on the Constitution itself—for damages caused by violations of the Fourth, Fifth and Eighth Amendments, while consistently recognizing that Congress retains authority to "provide[] an alternative remedy which it explicitly declare[s] to be a substitute for recovery directly under the Constitution." Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 18-19 (1980){ TA \l "Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14 (1980)" \s "Carlson v. Green" \c 1 } (emphasis omitted) (Eighth Amendment); Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 245 (1979){ TA \l "Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228 (1979)" \s "Davis v. Passman" \c 1 } (Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment; "in the absence of affirmative action by Congress"); Bivens{ TA \s "Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics" }, 403 U.S. at 397 (Fourth Amendment; noting absence of an "explicit congressional declaration that persons injured * * * must instead be remitted to another remedy, equally effective in the view of Congress"). The rule could hardly be otherwise, because—even with respect to actual violations of the Constitution—Congress has undoubted authority to direct courts to employ one constitutionally adequate remedy rather than another. See U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 5. It would be strange indeed if Congress possessed no similar authority with respect to "prophylactic" rules intended merely to guard against the risk of a constitutional deprivation.

REV_00349996

D. Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } Itself Invited Congress And The States To Develop Their Own Approaches To The Admissibility Of Custodial Confessions

The parties' contention that Congress lacks authority to modify Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule rings especially hollow in light of this Court's invitation to Congress and the States, in Miranda itself, to frame their own approaches to the admissibility of confessions. Miranda, 384 U.S. at 467. The parties contend, however, that this Court's invitation permits only those alternative approaches that, like Miranda, expressly apprise a defendant of his rights. E.g., SG Br. 27. Although certain language in Miranda does support that proposition, this Court should reject the parties' argument.

1. There is no basis in this Court's cases for the parties' attempt to parse through the Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } opinion as though it were a statute. Cf. Duckworth v. Egan{ TA \s "Duckworth v. Egan" }, 492 U.S. at 203 ("courts * * * need not examine Miranda warnings as if construing a will or defining the terms of an easement"). That approach is especially inadvisable given that the parties' reading of Miranda would transform that opinion into the very "constitutional straitjacket" that the Court was at pains to disclaim (384 U.S. at 467), and would effectively nullify any alternative approach to the admissibility of confessions that does not take the Miranda framework as an unchangeable "floor." The result could stifle alternative frameworks—or new technologies—that may well be more efficacious than Miranda in assuring the voluntariness of confessions.

Far from being required by precedent, that inflexible approach to prophylactic rules was recently rejected by the Court in Smith v. Robbins, 120 S. Ct. 746, 756-59 (2000){ TA \s "Smith v. Robbins" }. Robbins, like this case, involved a claim that earlier opinions of this Court required States to use a particular "prophylactic framework" to vindicate a defendant's constitutional rights—in that case, the constitutional right to appellate counsel. Although the Court conceded that the claim was not without some support in its cases, it rejected the claim because it "contraven[ed] [the Court's] established practice, rooted in federalism, of allowing the States wide discretion, subject to the minimum requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment, to experiment with solutions to difficult problems of policy." Id. at 757.

In fact, Robbins{ TA \s "Smith v. Robbins" } completely devastates the parties' claim that this Court's application of a prophylactic rule to cases coming from the State courts necessarily establishes that such a rule is impervious to change save by this Court. The rule at issue in Robbins—which governed appeals by convicted indigents, see Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738 (1967){ TA \l "Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738 (1967)" \s "Anders v. California" \c 1 }—had, like Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }, been described by this Court as a "prophylactic framework" and "not 'an independent constitutional command.'" Robbins, 120 S. Ct. at 757. And, like Miranda, it had been announced by this Court in a State case; indeed, this Court had applied it only in State cases. Nonetheless, this Court concluded that the California courts had the authority to modify those procedures, so long as the alternative procedures "focus[ed] on the underlying goals that the procedure should serve," thus assuring compliance with the relevant constitutional norm. Id. at 760.

2. The parties cannot reasonably dispute that Section 3501 meets those requirements. The statute requires that two fact-finders—the trial judge and the jury—be persuaded that the defendant's confession meets the constitutional standard of voluntariness.[7] Although no single factor conclusively controls the

---

[7] In 1986, nearly twenty years after the passage of 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }, this Court for the first time squarely held that due process and the Sixth Amendment require that a defendant be permitted to reargue the voluntariness of his confession to the jury. In reaching that conclusion, the Court relied in part on Section 3501(a) and similar state statutes as evidence of a broad consensus within the federal system that such a procedure is needed to assure a fair trial. See Crane v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 683, 689 (1986){ TA \l "Crane v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 683 (1986)" \s "Crane v. Kentucky" \c 1 }.

REV_00349998

question of voluntariness, and courts are free to consider other factors, Congress's inclusion of five specific factors that trial courts must consider in assessing that question—including any delay in presentment and whether the defendant received Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } warnings—ensures that courts will remain alert to the factors that this Court has found most likely to assure that custodial statements will in fact be voluntary.

Indeed, while reviving the traditional "totality of the circumstances" approach to admissibility, Section 3501 emphasizes protections that are required neither by the Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } framework nor by the Constitution. Thus, the trial judge must consider whether the "defendant knew the nature of the offense" of which he was suspected (18 U.S.C. § 3501(b)(2){ TA \s "18 U.S.C. § 3501 (b)(2)-(5)" }), even though such knowledge is not required to ensure a valid waiver of Miranda rights under this Court's cases. See Colorado v. Spring, 479 U.S. 564, 577 (1987){ TA \l "Colorado v. Spring, 479 U.S. 564 (1987)" \s "Colorado v. Spring" \c 1 }. Section 3501(b)(1) goes even further by requiring express consideration of delay in presentment, thus retaining some elements of the non-constitutional McNabb-Mallory rule. In that manner, Congress assured that police officers will know that protracted custodial interrogation, without judicial intervention (through which the suspect will certainly be told of his rights, see FED. R. CRIM. P. 5{ TA \s "Fed. R. Crim. P. 5" }), places the admissibility of any ensuing confession at risk. Compare Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443, 476 (1953){ TA \l "Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443 (1953)" \s "Brown v. Allen" \c 1 } (under traditional voluntariness precedent, "[m]ere detention and police examination in private of one in official state custody do not render involuntary the statements or confessions made by the person so detained"), with 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }(c) (confession may be found inadmissible "solely because of delay" in presenting the accused to a magistrate if delay exceeds six hours). And, as the Fourth Circuit noted, law enforcement officers retain, under the statute, a strong incentive to "giv[e] the now familiar Miranda warnings." J.A. 210. Those procedures are plainly sufficient to meet the requirements of the Constitution.

REV_00349999

E. If This Court Concludes That Congress Lacks Power To Reject Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s Exclusionary Rule, The Court Should Do So Itself

Even if petitioner and the Solicitor General are correct in asserting that Congress lacks constitutional authority to modify Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s rigid exclusionary rule, this Court should do so to the extent necessary to sustain the constitutionality of Section 3501.

1. "Stare decisis is not an inexorable command," Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808, 828 (1991){ TA \l "Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991)" \s "Payne v. Tennessee" \c 1 }, but merely reflects a policy preference for stability in the law. Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 235 (1997){ TA \l "Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203 (1997)" \s "Agostini v. Felton" \c 1 }. That preference is "reduced * * * in the case of a procedural rule" such as Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }, "which does not serve as a guide to lawful behavior," United States v. Gaudin, 515 U.S. 506, 521 (1995){ TA \l "United States v. Gaudin, 515 U.S. 506 (1995)" \s "United States v. Gaudin" \c 1 }, and "cannot possibly be controlling when, in addition to those factors, the decision in question has been proved manifestly erroneous, and its underpinnings eroded, by subsequent decisions of this Court." Ibid.; Agostini{ TA \s "Agostini v. Felton" }, 521 U.S. at 235-36.

Those principles dictate abandonment of Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s inflexible exclusionary rule. Indeed, petitioner's contrary arguments are largely misdirected. The stare decisis issue in this case—if there is one—is not whether Miranda should be repudiated wholesale, but whether Miranda's exclusionary rule should be retained. No one contends that law enforcement officers should be precluded from giving the Miranda warnings. If it is indeed true that law enforcement officers find it easy and advantageous to administer Miranda warnings because they virtually assure the admission of a confession (SG Br. 33-38), then self-interest alone will suffice to ensure that officers will continue to use such warnings and that the flood of litigation feared by the Solicitor General (id. at 37) will fail to materialize.[8] Similarly, it is difficult to see what valid "[r]eliance" interests in Miranda's exclusionary rule conceivably could be claimed by a defendant who has suffered no actual constitutional harm—much less by society at large (SG Br. 38), whose "legitimate and compelling" interest is that the guilty be brought to justice. Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253, 264 (1984){ TA \l "Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253 (1984)" \s "Schall v. Martin" \c 1 }.

Moreover, neither petitioner nor the Solicitor General comes to grips with the significant factual and legal developments that have occurred since this Court decided Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }. Neither attempts to reconcile Miranda and its progeny with the larger body of this Court's Fifth Amendment doctrine, particularly Counselman{ TA \s "Counselman v. Hitchcock" } and Kastigar{ TA \s "Kastigar v. United States" }; instead, both parties treat this Court's decisions in Harris{ TA \s "Harris v. New York" }, Quarles{ TA \s "New York v. Quarles" } and Elstad{ TA \s "Oregon v. Elstad" } as more or less sui generis.

---

[8] Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule serves, if anything, to increase the number of issues over which parties can litigate. The Miranda doctrine requires a trial judge to determine (1) whether the arresting officers complied with Miranda and its complex progeny, including rules governing how police must react to a suspect's invocation of rights, see, e.g., Edwards v. Arizona{ TA \s "Edwards v. Arizona" }, 451 U.S. 477 (1981); Minnick v. Mississippi{ TA \s "Minnick v. Mississippi" }, 498 U.S. 146 (1990); (2) whether the suspect "voluntarily" waived his Miranda rights, see North Carolina v. Butler, 441 U.S. 369, 373 (1979){ TA \l "North Carolina v. Butler, 441 U.S. 369 (1979)" \s "North Carolina v. Butler" \c 1 }; and (3) whether the suspect's statements are "voluntary" under due process standards. Courts almost invariably will be called upon to make several of these determinations. If the court finds that the officer violated Miranda, it will be required to address (as the district court did in this case) the issue of voluntariness in order to assess whether the defendant's statements can be used for impeachment and whether the government is entitled to introduce evidence derived from those statements. If the officer complied with Miranda, the court must still address whether the defendant voluntarily waived his rights, and whether the statements are voluntary under due process standards.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 10

ARGUMENT 12

THE FIFTH AMENDMENT DOES NOT REQUIRE MIRANDA'S EXCLUSIONARY RULE 12

A. This Court Has Rejected The Proposition That Miranda Is Required By The Fifth Amendment 13

B. This Court's Substantive Due Process Decisions Are Inconsistent With The Proposition That Miranda Defined The Fifth Amendment 20

C. That This Court Has Ruled On Miranda Issues In State Cases Does Not Establish That Congress Lacks Power To Reject Miranda's Exclusionary Rule 21

D. Miranda Itself Invited Congress And The States To Develop Their Own Approaches To The Admissibility Of Custodial Confessions 23

E. If This Court Concludes That Congress Lacks Power To Reject Miranda's Exclusionary Rule, The Court Should Do So Itself 26

CONCLUSION 30

REV_00349966

Nor do the parties address this Court's repudiation of Bram's standard of compulsion (Fulminante{ TA \s "Arizona v. Fulminante" }, 499 U.S. at 285), even though the Miranda Court expressly based its decision on that standard. Miranda, 384 U.S. at 461. And although "Congress is a coequal branch of government whose Members take the same oath * * * to uphold the Constitution" as this Court does, and whose judgment is entitled to "great weight," Rostker{ TA \s "Rostker v. Goldberg" }, 453 U.S. at 64, neither petitioner nor the Solicitor General gives any weight to the fact that Congress, after conducting extensive hearings, not only rejected the "legislative facts" that underlay Miranda's conclusions but also concluded that Miranda inflicts unjustified harm on legitimate law enforcement practices. Those detailed conclusions, which are consistent with the experience of Maricopa County prosecutors and which are supported by contemporary scholarship, see Paul G. Cassell & Richard Fowles, Handcuffing the Cops? A Thirty-Year Perspective on Miranda*'s Harmful Effects on Law Enforcement*, 50 STAN. L. REV. 1055 (1998){ TA \l "Paul G. Cassell & Richard Fowles, Handcuffing the Cops? A Thirty-Year Perspective on Miranda*'s Harmful Effects on Law Enforcement*, 50 STAN. L. REV. 1055 (1998)" \s "Paul G. Cassell & Richard Fowles, Handcuffing the Cops? A Thirty-Year Perspective on Miranda's Harmful Effects on Law Enforcement, 50 Stan. L. Rev. 1055 (1998)" \c 3 }, deserve a more respectful treatment from this Court than the Executive Branch is willing to accord them. Indeed, petitioner and the Solicitor General dismiss even the vast change in public awareness of a defendant's rights vis-à-vis the criminal justice system that has occurred since Miranda—a change that recently prompted this Court to observe that, "[i]n the modern age of frequently dramatized 'Miranda' warnings," it is "implausible" to suggest that a "person may be unaware of his right to remain silent." Brogan v. United States, 522 U.S. 398, 405 (1998){ TA \l "Brogan v. United States, 522 U.S. 398 (1998)" \s "Brogan v. United States" \c 1 }.

2. Those considerations do not lose their force simply because the parties assert that this Court must have some authority to adopt "prophylactic" rules. E.g., SG Br. 43-47. As this Court recognized in City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997){ TA \s "City of Boerne v. Flores" }, the Constitution itself imposes limits on the federal government's ability to frame "prophylactic" rules, especially when those rules are made binding on the States. In particular, there must be "congruence and proportionality between the injury to be prevented or remedied and the means adopted to that end." Id. at 508.[9] Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s exclusionary rule cannot meet that test and should not be reaffirmed for that additional reason. Indeed, had Congress enacted Miranda's requirements itself, it is inconceivable that—after City of Boerne—such a statute would be upheld by this Court.

The constitutional harm that Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } is designed to prevent is the risk that suspects in custody will be "compelled" to make self-incriminating statements, which will then be used at trial in violation of the Fifth Amendment. Yet the record on which Miranda relied for supposing that this was a pervasive problem is significantly weaker than the legislative records that the Court found inadequate to establish the pervasiveness of the underlying harm in City of Boerne{ TA \s "City of Boerne v. Flores" } and in every subsequent case that has considered "prophylactic" legislation. See City of Boerne, 521 U.S. at 531 ("anecdotal evidence" that did not reveal a "widespread pattern of religious discrimination in this country");

[9] City of Boerne{ TA \s "City of Boerne v. Flores" } framed that test in order to determine whether Congress permissibly invoked its power under Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment. A judicially devised "prophylactic" measure must comply with City of Boerne because Congress's authority is, if anything, broader than this Court's implied power to devise remedies for constitutional violations. Compare Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641, 649-50 (1966){ TA \l "Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966)" \s "Katzenbach v. Morgan" \c 1 } (upholding congressional ban on literacy test under Section 5), with Lassiter v. Northampton County Bd. of Elections, 360 U.S. 45 (1959){ TA \l "Lassiter v. Northampton County Bd. of Elections, 360 U.S. 45 (1959)" \s "Lassiter v. Northampton County Bd. of Elections" \c 1 } (refusing to strike down literacy requirement under Court's own authority to enforce the Constitution).

REV_00350003

Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Educ. Expense Bd. v. College Sav. Bank, 119 S. Ct. 2199, 2207 (1999){ TA \l "Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Educ. Expense Bd. v. College Sav. Bank, 119 S. Ct. 2199 (1999)" \s "Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Educ. Expense Bd. v. College Sav. Bank" \c 1 } ("Congress identified no pattern of patent infringement by the States, let alone a pattern of constitutional violations"); Kimel v. Florida Bd. of Regents, 120 S. Ct. 631, 649 (2000){ TA \l "Kimel v. Florida Bd. of Regents, 120 S. Ct. 631 (2000)" \s "Kimel v. Florida Bd. of Regents" \c 1 } ("it is sufficient for these cases to note that Congress failed to identify a widespread pattern of age discrimination by the States").

In fact, the Court conceded in Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } that examples of brutality "were undoubtedly the exception" even thirty-four years ago, Miranda, 384 U.S. at 447, and based its conclusion primarily on "police manuals and texts" that, in its view, suggested widespread use of interrogation techniques capable of overbearing a suspect's free will. Id. at 448. As Justice White noted in dissent, however, "even if the relentless application of the described procedures could lead to involuntary confessions, it most assuredly [did] not follow that each and every case will disclose * * * this type of consequence." Id. at 533 (White, J., dissenting). The Court, for its part, did not contend otherwise, but was satisfied to treat the "potentiality for compulsion" (id. at 457) itself as the pervasive evil that justified the creation of a prophylactic rule. Because the Court failed to demonstrate that this "potentiality" was realized frequently enough to make compulsion pervasive, however, the Miranda "prophylactic" regime is essentially indistinguishable from the statutory regime this Court struck down in City of Boerne{ TA \s "City of Boerne v. Flores" }. See 521 U.S. at 531; cf. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 737 (1991){ TA \l "Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722 (1991)" \s "Coleman v. Thompson" \c 1 } ("the justification for a conclusive presumption disappears when application of the presumption will not reach the correct result most of the time").

In sum, given Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" }'s "infirmities, and its increasingly wobbly, moth-eaten foundations," State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 20 (1997){ TA \l "State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3 (1997)" \s "State Oil Co. v. Khan" \c 1 } (brackets omitted), no justification remains for retaining Miranda's inflexible exclusionary rule, particularly in the teeth of an Act of Congress that fully safeguards the underlying constitutional right while preserving society's compelling interest in the detection and prosecution of crime. If this Court should conclude that Congress lacks sufficient authority to modify that inflexible rule, this Court should itself reject that rule and sustain Congress's judgment.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the court of appeals should be affirmed.

BRIEF OF THE MARICOPA COUNTY ATTORNEY'S OFFICE AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING AFFIRMANCE

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE[1]

The question presented in this case is whether 18 U.S.C. § 3501{ TA \s "§ 3501" }, which requires trial courts to admit voluntary confessions in evidence, comports with the Fifth Amendment. Amicus curiae Maricopa County Attorney's Office is the largest prosecutors' office in the State of Arizona, and it initiated the prosecution that culminated in this Court's decision in Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966){ TA \s "Miranda" }. Maricopa County prosecutors have experienced the adverse effects of Miranda's rigid exclusionary rule in ways that may not be apparent to this Court from an examination of reported cases alone. Because prosecutors must make charging decisions on the basis of the legally admissible evidence likely to be available at trial, Maricopa County prosecutors have foregone bringing charges, or have brought reduced charges pursuant to plea bargains, in cases in which officers failed to comply with the technical requirements imposed by Miranda.

Arizona, like the United States, has enacted a statute that would ameliorate those untoward consequences of the Miranda{ TA \s "Miranda" } regime. Like Section 3501, Arizona's statute provides that "[i]n any criminal prosecution * * *, a confession shall be admissible in evidence if it is voluntarily given." ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 13-3988A. Arizona law instructs trial judges to consider all relevant circumstances in determining voluntariness, and it expressly highlights for the court's consideration the

I had three questions.

1. On the MOU: in the last paragraph, should it just be WHCA and not also WHTO in those 3 sentences.

2. Also in the MOU: why the 180 day requirement for notice? That seems long.

3. On the draft travel agreement, has the WHTO traditionally been a signatory?

Finally, one process question: Has counsel in OA (Greenstone) looked at this; should he?

WHITE HOUSE CORRESPONDENTS' ASSOCIATION

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

The White House ~~Travel Office (WHTO)~~ Correspondents' Association has appointed Air Partner Inc. a Florida Corporation to act as ~~the WHTO's~~ its nominated exclusive air charter broker providing aircraft charter broker services to ~~the WHTO on behalf of~~ the White House Correspondents'~~ee~~' Association through the White House Travel Office (WHTO).~~.~~

The WHTO will provide to Air Partner details of forthcoming trip requirements with as much notice as ~~practicable.~~ Ppractical.
~~(possible?)~~

Air Partner will research availability of qualified aircraft for press trips and provide the WHTO with; detailed breakdown of prices, aircraft availability, detailed aircraft descriptions and recommendations of the most suitable aircraft for the flight contemplated. ~~The WHTO acknowledges that all aircraft proposed at this stage will be subject to continued availability of aircraft and crew at the time booking instructions are received. Question: didn't we say we would only offer available planes and crews??~~

Air Partner will negotiate in the air charter market place and use its best endeavors to expand, over the medium term, the range of available options. Particular emphasis will be given to the obtaining of more availability from the major scheduled service airlines that are considered best able to meet the service requirements of the White House ~~Correspondence'~~Correspondents' Association.

The WHTO will pass proposals to the White House ~~Correspondence'~~Correspondents' Association for review and booking instructions. The decision on which aircraft to contract and from which carrier will rest with the White House ~~Correspondence'~~Correspondents' Association.

After receiving instructions from the White House ~~Correspondence'~~Correspondents' Association the WHTO will confirm the flight to Air Partner who will then ~~contract~~ arrange for the selected aircraft. The WHTO will then sign an individual air charter agreement (see appendix A) for the flight and will be subject to the selected air carrier's terms and conditions.

Once contracted, Air Partner will manage the setup of the flight by liaising with the contracted air carrier regarding, pre-positioning of the aircraft adequately in advance of the intended departure time, timely obtaining of airport slots, traffic rights and diplomatic clearances, catering, fueling, security, parking etc. Air Partner will provide an on-board trip coordinator for all international trips and domestic flights as deemed necessary to supervise service delivery and manage any last minute changes to schedule or routing.

Air Partner will advance pay on behalf of the WHTO, to the selected air carrier, in compliance with that air carrier's payment terms. Air Partner will invoice the WHTO for the charter price plus management fee, applicable taxes and any authorized sundry expenses immediately post flight. The WHTO accepts liability for all such costs and agrees to promptly settle all accounts.

Air Partner will add a ~~10%~~ management fee, in such percentage as approved by the WHTO to all net prices obtained from the air carriers. Air Partner will operate this air charter broker service on an "open book" basis. Air Partner will provide quarterly management reports detailing trips flown, air carriers contracted, prices paid, applicable taxes and the management fee. Air Partner will maintain full records of all flights contracted on behalf of the WHTO and agrees to make these records available to the WHTO for review upon request.

~~Mike: What about cancellation terms? Case by case? We'll really have to watch the carrier terms and maybe have a standard clause negotiated with all of them. Rarely cancelled but does happen. Press still have to pay but they will look to us to negotiate down.~~

This agreement will commence immediately upon execution of this letter by the parties~~Air Partner and the WHTO~~. This agreement does not have a specified life but may be terminated by either party without cause with notice of at least 180 days. In the event of dissatisfaction with the services provided by Air Partner, the WHTO agrees to notify Air Partner in writing and allow Air Partner a reasonable period to rectify the deficiency. Failure by Air Partner to rectify the service shortfall during the remedy period will automatically terminate this agreement.

Air Partner will designate a specific staff person whom the White House Correspondents' Association, or its designated representative, may contact in regard to any concerns about levels of service or response by Air Partner, and Air Partner agrees that it will reasonably deal with such concerns.

Air Partner will comply with all reasonable instructions from WHTO. The WHTO acknowledges that certain instructions on confidentiality and or choice of air carrier may limit the options Air Partner is able to provide for a trip and this may occasionally result in less favorable terms, service or price.

The WHTO and the White House Correspondents' Association acknowledge~~s~~ that for Air Partner to be able to fully perform its responsibilities under this agreement, in particular the expansion of the available aircraft market, Air Partner must be the exclusive provider of air charter broker services to the WHTO for contracts on behalf of the White House ~~Correspondence'~~Correspondents' Association. The WHTO and the White House Correspondents' Association agree~~s it will~~ not to solicit bids from other charter brokers or directly from Air Carriers during the life of this agreement. The WHTO and the White House Correspondents' Association will direct any solicitations ~~it~~ they receives to provide air charter service to Air Partner.

Important - Air Partner as Agent Only:

Air Partner is acting as Charterer's agent in arranging charter travel pursuant to Charterer's specifications and requirements. Air Partner does not guarantee that a charter which meets Charterer's specifications and requirements will be available. The presentation of one or more travel options to Charterer will be in Air Partner's discretion. Air Partner does not undertake to provide a comprehensive presentation of options unless Charterer makes special arrangements with Air Partner and pays a special fee. No representation is made on whether the travel arrangements which are presented will exactly meet the Charterer's specifications, nor the advantageousness of the price. Charterer acknowledges that airline pricing is often volatile and with consistency. Air Partner will not be responsible for non-performance or failure of any type by the air carrier, provided that Charterer will have preserved to Charterer such rights as may be provided by law and in the contract with the Air Carrier, nor will Air Partner, under any circumstances, be liable for indirect, incidental, consequential, special or exemplary damages, including loss of profits of Charterer. Should legal action arise between the parties, the prevailing party will be reimbursed its' attorneys fees by the other party. The parties waive trial by jury and venue for any legal action will be in Broward County, Florida. Charterer agrees that Air Partner will receive compensation by way of commission against or receipt of Chareterer's payment, consistent with the Air Carriers requirements and any applicable law and regulations. Charterers contract will be directly with the Air Carrier and will be governed by the Air Carrier's local terms and conditions which Air Partner will endeavor to supply upon request.

By signing this agreement, the Charterer authorizes Air Partner Inc as their agent, to conclude a binding contract on their behalf with the carrier.

Select List of Permitted Political Activities

Subject to applicable prohibitions, including the prohibitions on improper use of official title and solicitation of contributions, you may engage in the following political activities:

- participation in political organizations, which includes:
  - being a member of a political party;
  - serving as an officer of a political party;
  - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
  - participating in a political convention or rally; and
  - serving as a delegate to a political convention.
- participation in political campaigns, which includes:
  - displaying political pictures, signs, stickers, or buttons;
  - canvassing for votes;
  - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material;
  - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
  - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.
- participation in elections, including:
  - voting; and
  - driving voters to polling places.
- participation in fundraising:

  You may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. You may not host or sponsor fundraisers. You may:

  - make political contributions;
  - attend political fundraisers;
  - manage or organize political fundraisers;
  - speak at political fundraisers;
  - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser (but the invitation should not list your official title);
  - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she target a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency for provision of such services).

DRAFT

August __, 2002

MEMORANDUM FOR WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF
OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
BRETT M. KAVANAUGH

SUBJECT: REMINDER ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY

This memorandum is to remind you of the rules that you must follow with respect to political activity.

Basic Rule

The basic rule is straightforward. You may engage in a wide variety of political activity, as detailed in the attachment to this memorandum, subject to two main restrictions.

- First, you may not use your official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election. That means, for example, that you may not knowingly allow your official title to be used on invitations to political fundraisers. Nor may you coerce any person to engage in political activity -- for example, by conditioning a federal contract on political activity.

- Second, you may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions, and you may not host or sponsor political fundraisers. However, you may speak at, attend, and be the featured guest at political fundraisers.

On-Duty Activity

Most employees in the Cabinet departments and agencies can engage in political activity only when off duty and not in a government building. However, a different rule applies to: (i) PAS officials and (ii) those employees in the Executive Office of the President whose duties can continue after normal duty hours and away from the normal duty post. Officials in these two categories may engage in political activity while on duty and in the office. Therefore, a large percentage of WHO and OPD employees may engage in political activity while on duty and in the office, so long as the activity is not inconsistent with their official duties or otherwise inappropriate.

Travel and Costs

There are a few rules to keep in mind with respect to travel and costs.

- First, as a matter of policy, you should not travel on corporate aircraft for political trips. You may travel on charter aircrafts that the political entity leases from a charter company.

- Second, the government must be reimbursed for any non-incidental costs that it incurs as a result of your political activity. This issue arises primarily with respect to travel costs. The appropriate political entity ordinarily pays the relevant travel costs associated with political activity (or the costs for the political portion of mixed official-political travel).

    - The government need not be reimbursed for: (i) the costs that result from security arrangements; or (ii) the compensation or expenses of persons required to accompany or assist the official engaging in political activity.

- With respect to office equipment, the general policy on equipment usage permits you to use equipment such as computers, printers, telephones, and FAXes for reasonable and incidental personal activity, which may include reasonable and incidental political activity. If such use becomes more than reasonable and incidental, the appropriate political entity must provide appropriate reimbursement.

Dear Robyn,

The Senate Judiciary Committee has delayed a vote on the nomination of Priscilla Owen until after the August recess. This doesn't mean that we can forget about this important nomination! It is essential that you learn more about the issues so you are ready for the vote, which may happen in early September.

On July 23, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing on Owen's nomination. In a letter to Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee, a total of 14 progressive organizations, including Planned Parenthood, National <http://www.benchmarkcampaign.org> Council of Jewish Women, People for the American Way, and the NAACP stated: "Our exhaustive and careful review of Priscilla Owen's record on the Texas Supreme Court has left us with little alternative but to oppose her confirmation because of her activist and extreme views on important civil rights, worker's rights, consumer's rights, and women's rights issues." Source: Civilrights.org <http://www.civilrights.org/library/detail.cfm?id=9821> .

Planned Parenthood is working with a larger coalition of organizations concerned with Justice Owen's nomination. We have previously sent you information on Justice Owen's record on reproductive rights. Here are some of the other issues that have been raised:

*
Labor: "As a Justice on the Texas Supreme Court, Owen consistently votes to dismiss suits brought by workers for job-related injuries, discrimination and unfair employment practices." Source: Alliance For Justice <http://www.independentjudiciary.org/nominees/nominee.cfm?NomineeID=21> . Additionally, the AFL-CIO states that "Owen's decisions and dissents overwhelmingly favor business and insurance interests to the detriment of working men and women." Source: AFL-CIO <http://www.aflcio.org/bushwatch> .

*
Discrimination and Workers' Rights: "In several recent cases, Owen has dissented from rulings by the Texas Supreme Court affecting the rights of workers, including the right to be free from discrimination." Source: Alliance For Justice <http://www.independentjudiciary.org/nominees/nominee.cfm?NomineeID=21> . Additionally, the National Women's <http://www.nwlc.org> Law Center states that "Justice Owen's record on sex discrimination and other legal issues of importance to women displays a staunch conservatism that is well outside the mainstream."

*
Access to Justice: Several groups have expressed concerns about her propensity to overturn jury decisions. In a joint letter signed by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and 13 other organizations including Planned Parenthood it is stated that "In many of her opinions, Owen seeks to override jury verdicts or diminish the role of juries, especially when juries attempt to protect the rights of working families." Source: Civilrights.org <http://www.civilrights.org/library/detail.cfm?id=9605> .

*
Environment: "Environmental groups are seriously concerned with Justice Owen's record of favoring special interests over public health and ordinary citizens. Justice Owen is only the fourth of President Bush's many judicial nominees to raise such concerns among the environmental community." Source: Earth Justice <http://www.earthjustice.org/policy/judicial/owen.html> .

*
Rights of Consumers: "Her dissenting views would have seriously impaired the rights of ordinary citizens to have access to the courts and to obtain redress for a variety of injuries..." Source: People for the American Way <http://www.pfaw.com/issues/judiciary/owen/report/consumer.html> .

Make your voice heard in opposition to this nomination! We will be contacting you later this month with more information, and then will ask you to take action when the vote is near. Right now, you can take action by visiting our Action <http://www.plannedparenthood.org/action/takeaction.asp?step=2&item=1764> Center, where you can send a letter to your Senator expressing your opposition to Priscilla Owen's nomination.

TAX LAW COMPLEXITY

difficult to isolate the impact of a specific provision on IRS without also looking at its impact on taxpayers. Looking only at administrative complexity could also lead to options that would reduce the burden on IRS but significantly increase it on taxpayers. Accordingly, we looked at overall complexity.

We did not specifically address "undue and unnecessary" complexity. To do so would have required a series of value judgments regarding the goals of a particular provision and the complexity the provision introduces. Instead, we attempted to provide the analysis necessary for the reader to determine if the complexity is warranted.

In addition, because any recommendations for changing the Code must consider the full range of tax policy considerations including the impact of the changes on (1) budgetary costs or how the cost of these changes might compare with other important policy priorities; (2) economic efficiency, (3) which taxpayers are affected; (4) the degree to which the changes would affect the policy goals the provision was intended to meet; (5) the impact of the changes on the degree to which the affected tax provisions accomplish the purposes for which they were enacted; and (6) other related provisions, the report does not contain recommendations. The report only addresses complexity as it relates to administration of the Code and taxpayer's ability to comply with the Code. The options therefore are not policy recommendations. For example, one of the options presented in the report is to coordinate the income phaseout ranges for at least some credits and, hence, affect the overall distribution of the individual income tax burden. It also could lead to fairly high marginal tax rates within the phaseout range as multiple tax benefits are phased out simultaneously. Depending on the specifications of the new phaseout ranges, there could be significant revenue implications. And there may be complicated interactions of the proposal with other provisions of the tax law (such as the Alternative Minimum Tax). For all these reasons, the proposals listed would need substantial analysis before they could be evaluated in making tax policy decisions.

OVERVIEW OF APPENDICES

The appendices to this report were developed based on the requirements established in RRA98. Appendix A focuses on questions posed to IRS by taxpayers. Appendix B provides a summary of the common errors taxpayers make on their returns. Appendix C highlights areas of law, which frequently result in disagreements between taxpayers and the IRS. Appendix D covers areas of law in which there is no or incomplete guidance or in which the law is uncertain. Appendix E describes areas in which tax examiners make frequent errors interpreting or applying the law. Appendix F summarizes the impact of recent legislation on complexity. And finally, Appendix G relates tax forms to taxpayer burden.

CHAPTER I
CREDIT ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS

A variety of definitions is used to determine a taxpayer's eligibility to claim the dependency exemptions and certain tax credits. Understanding these definitions and how to apply them is necessary for the taxpayer to file a correct return. In addition to the filing status designation required on individual tax returns, separate but sometimes related, determinations must be made regarding dependents and qualifying individuals for personal tax credits. The definitions associated with filing status and dependents and qualifying individuals are some of the more complex issues faced by over 124 million individual taxpayers. While on the surface this may appear to be a rather straightforward determination, for many taxpayers the correct answer depends on their economic and/or other relationships to other members of their family or household. For this reason, any complexity in the Code around credit eligibility that emanates from filing status definitions can result in substantial overall burden.

Tax credits provide policymakers with a channel for easily delivering tax incentives to specific groups. While tax credits can provide special incentives or relief for specific groups of taxpayers, the burden associated with understanding and applying various eligibility requirements, income phaseouts and thresholds, and many other special considerations significantly add to the complexity of the tax laws and the difficulty taxpayers have in understanding and complying with them

While personal credits have resulted in lower income taxes for many taxpayers, they also have greatly increased the complexity faced by those taxpayers. Legislative tradeoffs have been made based on equity, fairness, economic efficiency, revenue targets, compliance and social policy goals with a resulting increase in complexity. In addition, in some cases complexity has inadvertently crept into the Code as credits were added and modified over time. Unfortunately, items that appear simple or innocuous in isolation can create great complexity when considered in total. For example, specific definitions, phaseout ranges, and age limitations associated with various credits are implemented to ensure relief reaches a targeted group of taxpayers. But, the calculations and form completion requirements that flow from these limitations create enormous burden and complexity for taxpayers.

Credit complexity has also been created by frequent changes. The EITC, for example, has been changed almost annually since 1986. Changes are even more frequently proposed than enacted. For example, in the 106th Congress over 339 bills were introduced proposing new tax credits or modifying existing ones.[6] Most of the credits would have required detailed guidance from Treasury and IRS to define precisely the items and activities that were eligible for a particular credit, thereby adding complexity to the tax system.

[6] Tax Notes, December 15, 2000.

In addition to creating additional compliance burden for taxpayers and administrative burden for the Service, the complexities present within the personal credits also increase noncompliance by making it more difficult for taxpayers to file an accurate return.

The personal credits we analyzed for this report were the ones most commonly taken by individual taxpayers. They are the Adoption Credit, Child Tax Credit, Child and Dependent Care Credit, Earned Income Tax Credit, Education Credits (Hope and Lifetime Learning), and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled.[7] The EGTRRA legislation modified several of the credits effective in 2002 and after. These changes are noted as appropriate later in the report. Table 1.1 illustrates some of the differences in eligibility rules, income thresholds and phaseouts, and other features of these credits. We have simplified some exceptions and special conditions.

[7] EITC was enacted in 1975 (P.L. 94-12, Tax Reduction Act of 1975). The Child and Dependent Care Credit was enacted in 1976 (P.L. 94-455, Tax Reform Act of 1976). The Child Tax Credit and the Hope Scholarship Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit (Education credit) were enacted in 1997 (P.L. 105-34, Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997). The Adoption Expense Credit was enacted by The Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-188).

Table 1.1: Personal Credit Characteristics (Tax Year 2000)

Item	Income Basis	Phaseouts/Thresholds	Maximum Credit	Qualifying Individuals	Other Characteristics
Adoption Credit	Modified AGI [b]	Between $75,000 - $115,000 credit is phased out ratably	$5,000 per adoption ($6,000 for special needs child)	Child under age 18 or an incapacitated person	Nonrefundable - May be carried over 5 years. Phaseout is determined in initial year and does not apply in carryover years.[f+]
Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit	AGI	Between $10,000 - $28,000 credit phases down from 30% to 20% of qualifying expenses	$480 -$720 for one child $960 - $1,440 for two or more children	Dependent under age 13, a disabled spouse, or a dependent of any age	Must have earned income; Married Filing Jointly both parties generally must have earned income; Nonrefundable
Child Tax Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Credit reduced by 5% for each $1,000 of Modified AGI over $55,000 - $110,000[d,e]	$500 per child	Dependent under age 17	Nonrefundable
Additional Child Tax Credit	Modified AGI[b]	Same as Child Tax Credit	Refundable extension of $500 Child Tax Credit	Taxpayer must have at least three qualifying children under age 17	Constitutes a refund of withheld Social Security and Medicare taxes.
Elderly or Disabled Credit	AGI	$12,500 - 25,000[d]	15% of credit base	Must be at least 65 years old or permanently and totally disabled and under mandatory retirement age	Credit base is AGI reduced by nontaxable retirement benefits and excess AGI over $5000-10,000; Nonrefundable
Earned Income Tax Credit	Earned Income and Modified AGI[b]	1 child between $12,700 and $27,413; 2 or more children - $12,700 - $31,152; no children $5,800 - $10,380. (A variety of rates apply to each group.)	One child - $2,353 Two or more children - $3,888 No children - $353	Child under age 19, students under age 24 or a disabled person of any age	Credit has phase-in, plateau and phase-out ranges that depend on the number of qualifying children; Refundable
Education (Hope and Lifetime Learning) Tax Credits	Modified AGI[c]	Between $40,000 - $50,000 or $80,000 – 100,000[d] the amount of the credit is reduced ratably.	Hope - $1,500 Lifetime Learning - $1,000	Taxpayers and dependents	Cannot take both credits for the same taxpayer in one year; Nonrefundable

Note: The adoption credit, child and dependent care credit, EITC, and education credits were modified by EGTRRA for future years.

[a] From Form 1040

[b] Taxpayer can have no more than $2,400 disqualified income.

[c] Modified AGI includes certain income from Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and certain other foreign earned income.

[d] Depending on Filing status

[e] For married filing separately, the credit reduction begins at $55,000 Modified AGI; for single, head of household, or qualifying widow(er), at $75,000; and for married filing jointly, at $110,000.

REV_00350207

[f] The amount of the credit, including adjustments, if any, due to phaseouts, is determined in the initial year. Thus, no additional phaseout calculations are required in the year carryover credits are used.

WHO FILES

All filers must make certain determinations regarding their filing status, dependents, and qualifying individuals for the personal credits. The number of taxpayers making each of these determinations is shown in Table 1.2.

Table 1.2: Filing Determinations (Tax Year 1998)

Type of Determination	Number of Taxpayer Returns
Filing Status (all 1040 Forms)	124,770,662
Married Filing Jointly	49,706,101
Married Filing Separately	2,531,742
Single	55,104,964
Head of Household	17,427,855
Claim Dependents	45,887,973
Married Filing Jointly	27,246,285
Married Filing Separately	660,936
Single	1,835,291
Head of Household	16,145,460
Personal Credits (total all returns)[1]	41,916,863
Adoption Tax Credit	40,668
Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit	6,128,155
Child Tax Credit	24,810,781
Additional Child Tax Credit	754,363
Earned Income Tax Credit[2]	19,704,707
Elderly or Disabled Credit	180,473
Education Tax Credit	4,652,596

[1] Individual components do not add to total because taxpayers can claim more than one of these credits.
[2] Includes taxpayers who have qualifying children and those who do not.

Table 1.3 shows the number of tax returns that claim various credits and combinations of credits.

REV_00350208

Table 1.3: Number of Returns with Various Credits and Credit Combinations (Tax Year 1999)

Credit/Combinations	Estimated Number of Returns (000's)	Percent of Total Returns
Child Tax Only	13,350.0	10.5%
Earned Income Only	12,208.3	9.6%
Child Tax, Earned Income	5,632.9	4.4%
Child Tax, Child and Dependent Care	3,930.7	3.1%
Education Only	4,269.6	3.4%
Child Tax, Education	1,308.8	1.0%
Child Tax, Child and Dependent Care, Earned Income	855.3	0.7%
Child and Dependent Care Only	567.1	0.4%
All Other Combinations	4,899.1	3.9%
Total Number of Returns with Credits or Credit Combinations	47,021.9	37.0%

As the tables illustrate, about one-third of all individual taxpayers claim one or more personal credits; in fact, more than that must determine their filing status and whether they have dependents in order to claim the credits. For taxpayers with AGI between $50,000 and $100,000, 43 percent claim at least one personal credit. In addition, almost 10 percent of all individual taxpayers claim multiple credits. This includes more than six million taxpayers with AGI of $25,000 or less.

TAXPAYER AND IRS BURDEN

Taxpayer

Taxpayers must file a number of forms and schedules and complete associated worksheets to determine if they qualify for a specific credit, calculate the amount of the credit, and claim it on their tax return. Table 1.5 identifies the forms, schedules, publications, and worksheets for each credit as well as the estimated time involved. The fact that each of the credits has its own publication explaining who is eligible and how to claim the credit is an indicator of the complexity each involves. Table 1.6 shows that many taxpayer inquiries relate to these tax credits. More striking, however, is that a large number of taxpayers make errors in claiming these tax benefits.

Table 1.5: Personal Credit Paperwork Requirements (Tax Year 2000)

Credit	Form/Schedule	Publication	Number of Worksheets	Estimated Time to Complete
Adoption	Form 8839		4	3.5 hours[a]
Child and Dependent Care	Form 2441 or Schedule 2 for Form 1040A filers	503	None	2.4 hours
Child Tax	None	972	1 or Pub 972 Worksheet	N/A[b]
Additional Child Tax[c]	Form 8812	972	None	.8 hours

IRS

Frontline IRS employees dealing with taxpayers in either office or field audits cite definitions of eligibility for credits as one of the more persistently complex aspects of their job. Their comments pinpoint a lack of consistency across a number of tax provisions and credits.

As a further indication of burden, Table 1.7 below summarizes data from an H&R Block analysis of the type and number of questions its preparers asked the corporate tax research department about various complex tax issues. Of the 577 questions received relating to personal tax credits, over three-quarters related to EITC and the Education credits.

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

We analyzed six areas of complexity related to personal credits. The selection was based on the number of tax credits claimed on 1999 tax returns, the number of questions taxpayers asked IRS about credits, the questions tax practitioners had about credits, and information received in interviews with tax professionals. The areas of complexity we identified are definitional complexity, inconsistency in phaseout thresholds and calculations, differences in the Education credits, calculating the income basis for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled, when qualifying expenses can be taken for the Adoption Credit, and the rules for determining the order in which tax credits are applied to income tax liability (stacking rules).

REV_00350211

Complexity Issue: Definitions can create confusion about eligibility.

One of the most apparent areas of complexity associated with personal credits is the dissimilarity in how terms are defined. The identifying titles of some of the credits appear to overlap, but the tax law governing the credits is markedly different. For example, the definition of a "qualifying child" or "qualifying individual," used to determine eligibility to claim the child and dependent care tax credit, the child tax credit, and the earned income tax credit, is different for each credit. Therefore, taxpayers must fill out different worksheets or schedules and look to different instructions each time they claim similar-sounding credits to determine which definition applies and if their circumstances meet the requirements.

Prior attempts at simplification have not eliminated the confusion. For instance, the definition of a qualifying foster child for purposes of the child tax credit and earned income tax credit has been greatly simplified. An unmarried qualifying foster child need not be claimed as a dependent on the taxpayer's return for purposes of the earned income tax credit, but must be claimed as a dependent for the child tax credit. Table 1.8 summarizes the different tests that taxpayers must meet to qualify for the personal tax credits.

Table 1.8: Comparison of Qualifying Tests for Personal Credits (Tax Year 2000)

Credit	Age	Residency	Relationship or Member of Household	Income Limits	Support	Filing Status[b]	Must be Claimed as a Dependent[c]
Adoption	Under 18 or disabled	IF Married Filing Separately (MFS), child must live with taxpayer more than half the year	N/A	$115,000[d]	None except if MFS must pay half the costs of keeping up home	Available to MFS if lived apart last 6 months of year	No
Child Tax	Under 17 at end of year	No except foster child must live with taxpayer for entire year	Child, stepchild, adopted child, grandchild, or foster child.	$55,000 - $110,000[a] (Points at which credit reduction begins)	Dependency test	Available to all filing status	Yes
Child and Dependent Care	Under 13 unless disabled spouse or dependent	IF Married Filing Separately (MFS) child must live with taxpayer more than half the year	Dependent or spouse	None Must have earned income	Dependency test	Available to MFS only if lived apart last 6 months of year	Yes
Earned Income	For qualifying child - Under 19 or under 24 if full-time student or any age if disabled Adults with no children - at least 25 but under 65	Child must live with taxpayer in the U.S. for more than half the year (All year if eligible foster child)	Child, stepchild, adopted child, grandchild, or eligible foster child.	$27,413 with one qualifying child $31,152 with two $10,380 with no children Must have earned income Limit on investment income	None	MFS cannot claim credit	No unless qualifying child is married
Elderly or Disabled	65 or older or under 65 and disabled	None	N/A	$12,500-25,000[a]	None	MFS cannot claim credit if lived together at any time during the year	N/A
Education	None	None	Taxpayer or dependent	$40,000-100,000[a]	Dependency test	MFS cannot claim credit	Yes

[a] Varies depending on filing status.
[b] There are certain exceptions which are discussed later.
[c] There are certain exceptions where credit can be claimed if dependency is waived to other parent.
[d] For the Adoption Credit, except for married taxpayers filing separate returns, the income limits for phasing out benefits are independent of filing status. The EGTRRA legislation changed the income limit to $150,000 beginning in 2002.

REV_00350196

In addition to having varying qualification tests, the specific requirements for the tests also vary among the credits. For example, as discussed below the relationship test is different for dependents than for qualifying children under the Earned Income Tax Credit.

Relationship or Member of Household Test

To qualify a taxpayer for a dependency exemption the individual in question must be the taxpayer's child, stepchild, sibling, niece, nephew, grandchild or foster child. In 2000, other family members or persons who resided with the taxpayer for the entire year may also be claimed as dependents.[8] This definition is also generally used for the Head of Household filing status and the Child and Dependent Care, Child Tax and Education credit purposes. [9]

The relationship test for a qualifying child for the EITC and Adoption credit are different in that the qualifying child does not have to, and may not, qualify as a dependent. The qualifying child under the EITC does not have to be a dependent unless the child is married. But if the qualifying child is a foster child not related to the taxpayer, they must be placed in the home by an authorized placement agency, not simply live with the taxpayer for the entire year. Before Tax Year 2002, a qualifying child under the Adoption credit (e.g., an unrelated individual living with the taxpayer) may not qualify as a dependent if they do not live in the taxpayer's home for the entire year. This residency requirement was changed by EGTRRA, and beginning in 2002, a foster child must reside with the taxpayer for more than six months.

The over 16 million taxpayers with qualifying children who claim the EITC must make two subtle but important differentiations in correctly filing their return. The first is to recognize that not all of the children in the household may qualify the taxpayer for EITC even if the taxpayer provides all of their support, and the taxpayer maintains the household. The second is that a child may qualify the taxpayer for the EITC and not qualify as a dependent.

Support Test

To meet the support test for the dependency exemption, the taxpayer generally must provide more than half of the qualifying individual's support during the calendar year covered by the return.[10] Because the Child and Dependent Care, Child Tax, and Education credits require the qualifying individual to be a dependent, this support test also applies to these credits. There is no support test for the EITC or under most circumstances for the adoption credit.

[8] Cousins are eligible only if they live with the taxpayer as a family member for the entire year.
[9] Under certain limited conditions non-dependents may also be covered such as disabled spouses for the Child and Dependent Care credit.
[10] There are different rules for multiple support agreements and for children of divorced or separated parents.

REV_00350215

Residency or Keeping Up a Home Test

To qualify for HOH and the Child and Dependent Care credit the taxpayer must meet the "Keep Up a Home" test. This test requires the taxpayer to pay more than half the cost of running the home for the year.[11] The EITC, on the other hand, has a residency test that simply requires the qualifying child to live with the taxpayer in the United States for more than half of the year.[12] There is no residency test for dependents or the Child Tax credit except for qualifying foster children. Foster children must live with the taxpayer for the entire year to qualify for the credit. A residency test applies to the adoption credit only if the taxpayer uses the filing status Married Filing Separately (MFS).

Age Test

Recognizing that many of the personal credits are targeted to a "qualifying child" there is no consistent age definition for a child. The Child and Dependent Care credit is limited to qualifying individuals under 13 or who cannot care for themselves. The Child Tax credit is limited to those under 17. The EITC applies to qualifying children under 19 (24 if the child is a full-time student).[13] The adoption credit age test is under 18. While there is no age test for dependents or the Education credits, a taxpayer must be at least 25 but under 65 to claim the EITC with no qualifying children and 65 or over or fully disabled to qualify for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled.

Qualifying Income

Currently, taxpayers must calculate their qualifying income different ways to determine whether they qualify for specific personal credits. The Child and Dependent Care Credit and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled both use AGI (line 34 on Form 1040). The Adoption, Child Tax, and Education credits use a modified definition of AGI that adds to the income considered in determining credit eligibility certain foreign source income excluded when calculating AGI. For the EITC, taxpayers must calculate their earned income and a modified AGI that includes certain losses deducted and income excluded when calculating AGI.[14]

Filing Status

Taxpayers who are Married Filing Separately face additional limitations and complications in qualifying for the personal credits. These are illustrated in Table 1.9.

[11] The household maintenance test for the Child and Dependent Care credit can be prorated over the course of the year if the taxpayer and child did not reside together for the full year.
[12] For foster children, the residency was one year in 2000 but was changed to 'more than six months' in 2002.
[13] There is no age limit if the individual is permanently and totally disabled.
[14] In 2002, the income used to determine EITC eligibility changes to AGI and taxable earned income.

Table 1.9: Impact of Married Filing Separately Status

Credit	MFS Lived Apart Last 6 Months of the Year	MFS Lived Apart All Year	Result
Adoption	Full Credit Allowed	Full Credit Allowed	Credit will be lost if taxpayers lived together at any time during the last 6 months of the year.
Child and Dependent Care	Full Credit Allowed	Full Credit Allowed	Credit is unavailable if taxpayers lived together at any time during the last 6 months of the year.
Child Tax	Full Credit Allowed	Full Credit Allowed	Full credit allowed if exemption for dependent allowed
Earned Income	Not Allowed	Not Allowed	EITC is unavailable if MFS filing status is used.
Education	Not Allowed	Not Allowed	Credits are unavailable if MFS filing status is used
Elderly/Disabled	Not Allowed	Full Credit Allowed	Credit is unavailable if taxpayers lived together any time during the year.

Options for Reducing Definitional Complexity

- Standardize the definitions of "qualified child" and "qualified individual" as they relate to the Child/Dependent Care, Child Tax, Adoption, and Earned Income Tax credits.

This option would obviously require tradeoffs. For example, there are two relationship tests, one for dependency and one for the EITC/Child Tax Credit. One obvious option for reducing complexity would be to use one or the other. If the dependency exemption test were used, more children would potentially be qualifying children for EITC and Child Tax credit purposes. Specifically, this would include siblings, nieces and nephews, who lived with the taxpayer more than half the year but not the entire year, and certain other family members and other individuals, who lived with the taxpayer for the entire year. How many additional individuals would be covered is difficult to estimate. The number would be limited, however, by other tests and provisions, specifically the age limits, and the EITC requirement that the qualifying child live with the taxpayer in the United States for more than half the year. The EGTRRA legislation reduced definitional complexity in 2002 by modifying the residency test for foster children from one year to more than six months. This is a first step in reducing definitional complexity.

Extending the more limited EITC/Child Tax credit relationship definition to dependents would have more dramatic effects. Taxpayers would no longer be able to claim as dependents many older family members or other individuals who lived in their household for the entire year. Fewer taxpayers would qualify as Head of Household or be eligible for other credits that require the qualifying individual to be a dependent.

REV_00350217

Making the residency, support, and relationship tests the same would reduce the time and money taxpayers spend on compliance. It could also make for more accurate returns.

- Use one age for defining a child.

Currently, there are four different criteria in the provisions analyzed. Recognizing there are potential revenue and other policy implications of choosing one age to define a child, consistency would make it much easier for taxpayers to determine whether a child qualifies them for credits. For example, it would simplify the Child and Dependent Care and the Adoption credits if the age of the qualifying child were determined at the end of the year like the other credits rather than when the care was provided, but this could affect the number of children receiving benefits.

- Consistently define qualifying income.

While few taxpayers may have to calculate their Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI), all must figure out what the difference is and whether they have any income to include. The use of MAGI instead of AGI for phasing out some of the personal tax credits may be intended to deny credits to persons with considerable incomes only a small portion of which is subject to federal tax.[15] Eliminating this provision would possibly make additional taxpayers eligible for the credits. By the same token, it would save a lot of time for other taxpayers.

- Make consistent the treatment of taxpayers that select the Married Filing Separately (MFS) filing status.

MFS taxpayers are subject to four different treatments in the credits analyzed. They

- are unable to claim the EITC and the Education credits,
- can take advantage of the Child Tax Credit without restrictions,
- can take advantage of the Child and Dependent Care and Adoption credits only if they lived apart from the spouse for the last 6 months of the year, and
- can take advantage of the Credit for Elderly or Disabled only if they lived apart from the spouse for the entire year.

Whether or not there is any rationale for the differences, treating MFS taxpayers consistently would simplify tax compliance for them.

[15] The EGTRRA legislation changed the basis for calculating the EITC from the Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI) to Adjusted Gross Income (AGI).

REV_00350218

Complexity Issue: Credits differ in how they are calculated and their phaseouts, both in terms of the income level at which the phaseout begins/ends and how the credit is phased out.

As illustrated in Table 1.10, the personal credits begin phasing out at different income levels. With the exception of the Child and Dependent Care credit, all of the credits also completely phase out at different levels. As a result, taxpayers must determine for each credit whether they are eligible to claim the credit based on their income.

Table 1.10 Credit Income Limits/Phaseout Thresholds[a] (Tax Year 2000)

Credit	Single/HOH	MFJ	MFS
Adoption	$75,000	$75,000	$75,000
Child Tax	75,000	110,000	55,000
Child and Dependent Care	10,000	10,000	10,000
Education	40,000	80,000	N/A
EITC – 1 qualifying child	12,690	12,690	N/A
EITC – 2 or more qualifying children	12,690	12,690	N/A
EITC -- No qualifying children	5,770	5,770	N/A
Elderly or Disabled	17,500	20,000-25,000[b]	12,500

Note: The phaseout thresholds for the adoption credit, the dependent care tax credit, and an education credit (HOPE) were changed by EGTRRA effective in future years.
[a]Income level at which phaseouts begin. The credits completely phase out at different amounts.
[b]Depends on whether one or both taxpayers are eligible.

In addition, the credits phase out in different ways. The Child and Dependent Care credit is available to taxpayers with all levels of income, but the percentage of eligible expenses declines from 30 percent to 20 percent at higher incomes. The other personal credits phase out entirely at set income levels but use different calculations to determine the actual amount of the credit.

An example may help make this clear. Mr. and Mrs. Cleaver have four children. They file a joint return. Their combined AGI is $110,150, with Mrs. and Mr. Cleaver having $4,000 and $96,150 in earned income respectively. Mr. Cleaver earned $15,000 of his income from foreign sources. The Cleavers had $7,000 in childcare expenses for two children and $6,000 in qualified adoption expenses during the tax year. The Cleavers also had $8,000 in education expenses; $2,000 for Mrs. Cleaver and $6,000 in college tuition for their son Wally. The Cleavers would determine the amount of credits they are eligible for as follows.

Adoption

The maximum Adoption credit of $5,000 is reduced by the ratio to $40,000 of the amount by which the taxpayer's MAGI exceeds $75,000. This is illustrated in the following calculations:

1. $110,150 – 75,000 = $35,150
2. $35,150/$40,000 = 88%
3. $5,000 X 88% = $4,393.
4. $5,000 - $4,393 = $607

The Cleavers are able to take an adoption credit of $607. If their total personal credits exceed their precredit tax liability, they can carry forward the adoption credit for up to five years.

Child and Dependent Care

Because their AGI exceeds $28,000, the percentage of qualifying child care expenses that the Cleavers can claim is 20 percent. In calculating their credit the Cleavers apply this percentage to the smaller of

- their qualified expenses ($7,000), or
- the yearly dollar limit for two or more children ($4,800) or
- the lesser of their earned incomes ($4,000).

For the Cleavers, their Child and Dependent Care credit would be $800 (20 percent of $4,000). It is interesting to note that if Mr. Cleaver was a single parent filing as Head of Household, his Child and Dependent Care credit would be $160 more because it would not be constrained by the lower earned income of Mrs. Cleaver.

Child Tax Credit

Computing the Child Tax credit is even more complicated. In this example, the Cleavers have 3 children under 17. This potentially makes them eligible for a $1,500 Child Tax Credit. However, this amount must be reduced because their MAGI exceeds the Married Filing Jointly threshold of $110,000. The credit amount is reduced by 5% of each $1000 (or any part thereof) of MAGI over the $110,000 threshold.[16] Accordingly the Cleavers have a Child Tax credit of $700 calculated as follows.

- $125,150 - $110,000 = $15,150 ($110,000 is the threshold for MFJ)
- $15,150 X .05 = $800 (The $15,150 is rounded up to $16,000)
- $1,500 - $800 = $700.

[16] In calculating their MAGI for this credit, the Cleavers must add back the foreign source income they had previously excluded in calculating their AGI.

Because of their income level, the Cleavers are not eligible for the Additional Child Tax credit, the Education credits, or the EITC.

Other Personal Credits

The other personal credits also have complex phaseout rules. Education credits involve numerous steps and calculations such as determining the MAGI to see if the credit is phased out partially or completely. The EITC involves a recalculation of income as well as application of phase-in and phase-out rules.[17] Few of the steps or calculations for any of the credits are the same. To calculate the Additional Child Tax credit, the taxpayer must complete a two page worksheet that involves information not entered elsewhere on the return and 10 additional steps including four separate calculations.

The Additional Child Tax Credit is for certain individuals who get less than the full amount of the child tax credit. It is available only to the extent the taxpayers' Social Security and Medicare taxes exceed any refundable EITC. This not only makes it more complex to calculate, but low-income taxpayers whose EITC exceeds the amount of Social Security taxes they paid get no benefit from this provision. In fact, a married couple with three children with earned income of less than $22,850 receives no additional child tax credit. If the same family earned $26,000, their additional child tax credit would be $799.

Reducing Phaseout Complexity

- Use one set of phaseout thresholds and consistently calculate how credits are phased out.

Complexity for taxpayers could be reduced if phaseouts began and ended at the same income levels for all credits. Doing this would require that phaseouts also be calculated in the same way. This would also reduce complexity and taxpayer burden. The biggest changes under this option would be to the Child and Dependent Care Credit that does not currently phase out but is available to eligible taxpayers at all income levels.

An exception to this might be the EITC which is refundable and intended to provide income support to some of the lowest income workers. The other credits are designed to have a broader reach. Therefore, the income limits for the EITC would need to remain lower than those of the other credits, and the EITC would not be folded into this option. Other issues that would need to be resolved under this option are the start of the phaseout range and the amount of income over which the benefits would be phased out. Generally, a narrower phaseout range will increase the marginal tax rate on taxpayers whose incomes are, or potentially could be, within the range.

[17] Effective for tax year 2002, EGTRRA legislation changed the EITC so that taxpayers use the adjusted gross income, rather than the modified adjusted gross income for calculating the credit. Other changes include simplifying the eligibility rules by excluding nontaxable employee compensation from the earned income definition and eliminating the AMT as a factor.

REV_00350221

Complexity Issue: Hope and Lifetime Learning education credits differ in amount and whether they can be claimed by more than one taxpayer or dependent on the return.

The Hope Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit have the same qualifying expenses but differ in that the Hope Credit can be used for each of the eligible individuals—taxpayers and dependents—on a tax return, while the Lifetime Learning Credit amount is on a per family basis. In addition the Hope Credit can be as large as $1,500 per eligible student, while the Lifetime Learning Credit is limited to $1,000 per return.

As the two credits cannot be taken for the same student on the same return, having different amounts and availability requires the taxpayer to do additional calculations in order to determine which credit is most advantageous in their particular situation. And unless the taxpayer reads the instructions and associated publication closely, he or she may assume both credits apply to all individuals on the return. The complexity is increased by the inability of taxpayers to take a tax free distribution from an Education IRA and also claim an Education Tax Credit.

Reducing Education Credit Complexity

- Make education credit amounts and constraints on use consistent.

Making the amounts of the credits consistent, and either making both credits available to be taken on either a per student or per family basis would reduce the burden and complexity associated with these credits.

Complexity Issue: Determining when to claim eligible expenses under the Adoption Credit is difficult.

Qualifying adoption expenses are reasonable and necessary adoption fees, court costs, attorney fees, and other expenses directly related to, and whose principal purpose is for, the legal adoption of an eligible child. The maximum amount of the credit is $5,000 ($6,000 for a child with special needs). The credit is phased out ratably for those with modified adjusted gross income between $75,000 and $115,000.[18]

When claiming an Adoption Credit for a child who is a U.S. citizen or resident, qualifying expenses paid in the year before the adoption becomes final may be claimed in the year after the year of payment. Qualifying expenses paid in the year the adoption becomes final are claimed in that year. Qualifying expenses paid in the year after the adoption becomes final are claimed in the year of payment.

[18] The adoption credit and the beginning of the phase-out range were changed by EGTRRA legislation to a credit of $10,000 per year per child (TY2002), including special needs children (TY2003), and a beginning phase-out range of $150,000 of MAGI (TY2002).

If a taxpayer adopts a child who is not a U.S. citizen or resident at the time the adoption effort began, a credit may not be claimed until the year the adoption becomes final. If adoption expenses are paid after the tax year in which the adoption becomes final, a credit for such expenses is allowed for the tax year of payment.

The fact that the credit is per adoption, and adoptions can involve costs over several years can make these provisions very burdensome. The rules about timing are quite different for other provisions affecting individual taxpayers, most of which are included in the tax return in the year in which the expense is paid.

In addition, in calculating tax liability with the Adoption Credit the taxpayer must first consider other personal credits. If the remaining tax liability is less than the amount of the adoption credit, any remaining Adoption Credit amount can be carried forward for the next five years. In future years, there is no recalculation of the phaseout. The Adoption Credit is the only personal credit we analyzed with the carry forward option.

Reducing Adoption Credit Complexity

- Allow credit for adoption expenses to be taken in the year the qualifying expenses are paid regardless of whether it is a domestic or foreign adoption.

In most parts of the Code that affect non-business taxpayers, expenses are taken into account in the tax year in which they are paid. Using this rule for adoption expenses would eliminate much of the complexity associated when expenses can be claimed. It would also eliminate the differential between domestic and foreign adoptions.

Complexity Issue: Income basis of the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled difficult to calculate.

The credit for the Elderly or Disabled is a nonrefundable credit available to low-income taxpayers. A qualified individual is one who is age 65 or older; or, if under age 65, (1) is retired because of permanent and total disability, (2) had not reached the mandatory retirement age for his employer's retirement program at the beginning of the tax year, and (3) has received taxable disability benefits during the year.

The average credit received by the 159,270 taxpayers who claimed the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled in 1999 was $208. Complexity in the credit includes calculating the correct base amount to start from and calculating the ensuing reduction in that base amount as a function of nontaxable Social Security and pension payments and AGI.

The credit is figured starting with an initial amount that is set by statute. See Table 1.11 for the initial amounts.

[a] The lesser of this amount or taxable disability income.

After determining their initial amount (above), the taxpayer's next step is to subtract from this amount certain nontaxable pensions and benefits such as nontaxable social security payments, certain railroad retirement pension payments, and other nontaxable pension benefits.

Next taxpayers must determine their excess AGI by subtracting from their AGI $7500 if single, HOH, or qualifying widow(er), $10,000 if MFJ, and $5,000 MFS. This amount is then divided by two. If the final income amount is smaller than the initial amount, taxpayers may qualify for a credit that is limited by their tax after adjusting for the Foreign tax credit and the Child and Dependent Care Credit.

All of these calculations are required for a credit that averages about $200, in part because of the low income thresholds and the fact that the credit has not been adjusted for inflation since 1983. This means that as Social Security benefits are raised to keep pace with increases in the cost of living, eligibility thresholds erode the benefit. Even those taxpayers that are eligible for the credit do not receive much benefit. A married couple with one qualifying taxpayer who had $9,425 in taxable disability income, $5,196 of nontaxable disability, and an AGI of $14,004 gets a credit of $45.
The likelihood that a taxpayer will qualify for this credit is so small that one tax professional noted that there is a saying in her office: "If it worked, you did it wrong." This is borne out by the high number of contacts taxpayers make with IRS on the credit and the number of error notices that are sent in response to problems on the taxpayers' returns.

The credit also differs from other personal credits in that it requires MFS taxpayers to live apart for the entire year rather than the last six months of the year. This also increases the burden on a group of taxpayers that may be in a poor position to correctly determine their tax liability and corresponding eligibility for the credit.

Reducing the Complexity of the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled

- Base credit on qualifying individual's AGI.

The credit's complexity could be significantly reduced if eligibility for and the amount of the credit were based on the qualifying individual's AGI adjusted to reflect income from nontaxable sources such as Social Security benefits. This would eliminate the difficulties taxpayers face in determining eligibility based on a recalculated income base and allow the credit to be calculated from information on the return or otherwise readily available.

- Require MFS taxpayers to live apart only for the last six months of the year to make this credit consistent with the other personal credits.

Complexity Issue: In some instances certain personal credits must be taken before others in determining final income tax liability.

When claiming the Adoption Credit and the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled, taxpayers must first adjust their tax liability to reflect any other personal credits they are eligible for. For the Adoption Credit, it appears the reason is to allow the taxpayer to carry forward into future tax years any credit amount in excess of their tax liability. The reasoning is not clear for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled. This credit "stacking" requires taxpayers taking the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled to determine if they can take the Child and Dependent Care Credit for which few are eligible.

Reducing Complexity Associated with Credit Stacking

- Eliminate order in which certain personal credits are taken.

By eliminating the stacking order for certain credits and simply limiting the availability of credits by the taxpayer's liability, taxpayers will have to undertake fewer unproductive steps in completing their tax returns. However, refundable tax credits, such as the Additional Child Tax Credit and the EITC, would have to be considered last to maintain their refundable nature.

SIMPLIFICATION OPTIONS

Complexity within the personal credits analyzed could be reduced by making the credits as consistent as possible in design, qualifications, income limits, phaseouts, and filing status eligibility. As currently enacted, each of the credits requires taxpayers to make a series of independent determinations and calculations, often for little financial benefit. This results in taxpayer confusion, errors on tax returns, and additional work for the Service.

Specifically, the personal credits could be less complex and burdensome on taxpayers if the following changes were made.

- Standardize the definitions of "qualifying child" and "qualified individual" as they relate to the Child/Dependent Care, Child Tax, Adoption, and Earned Income Tax credits.
- Use one age for defining a child.
- Consistently define qualifying income.
- Make consistent the treatment of taxpayers that select the Married Filing Separately filing status.
- Use one set of phaseout thresholds and consistently calculate how credits are phased out.
- Make education credit amounts and constraints on usage consistent.
- Base amount of and eligibility for the Credit for the Elderly or Disabled on qualifying individual's AGI.
- Allow certain personal credits to be taken in any order (refundable credits would need to be considered after the others).

REV_00350226

CHAPTER II
PERSONAL DEDUCTIONS AND EXEMPTIONS

Tax deductions and personal exemptions are the principal vehicles individual taxpayers use to reduce taxable income. Many personal deductions, such as those for charitable contributions and mortgage interest, are allowed only if the taxpayer itemizes deductions on Form 1040, Schedule A, rather than taking the standard deduction. About 30 percent of taxpayers itemize deductions. Taxpayers who itemize struggle with many of the same complexity issues as taxpayers that claim credits (See Chapter I). For example, like credits, various deductions and exemptions include definitional issues, differing value limits (floors and caps) and reductions (phaseouts), and differing income bases for determining their eligibility for and value of the deduction or exemption. For the 10 percent of individual taxpayers that itemize and claim at least one credit the impact of this complexity is compounded. In general, because itemized deductions and exemptions are claimed on over 30 million tax returns, even relatively minimal complexity can have a huge impact on the overall system.

Because of the strong links between personal exemptions and itemized deductions, we analyzed personal exemptions as well as the deductions for medical and dental expenses, home mortgage interest, charitable contributions, personal casualty loss, job and most other miscellaneous expenses and other miscellaneous deductions in light of these issues. Table 2.1 presents whether the exemption/deduction has a floor (minimum amount of expense before a deduction can be taken), cap (maximum amount that can be deducted), and whether there are other limitations or if the item is phased out at higher income levels.

The various limits on exemptions/deductions have been put into the code over time generally to limit the revenue impact of the exemption/deduction. In addition to the limitations discussed below, the personal exemption and certain deductions also interact with the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT). In the case of personal exemptions, a high number compared to AGI can trigger the AMT. Some deductions, such as medical and dental expenses, are treated differently than in the regular tax system in calculating the AMT adding further complexity. The EGTRRA legislation gradually eliminates the limitation on itemized deductions and phases out the restrictions on personal exemptions between Tax Year 2006 and Tax Year 2010.

[a] Certain itemized deductions are uniformly subject to the overall limit on deductions based on AGI. There is a single phaseout for all affected itemized deductions. This limitation will be reduced beginning in TY 2006 and eliminated after TY 2009.

WHO CLAIMS DEDUCTIONS

Generally, taxpayers are entitled to claim two types of deductions: (1) personal exemptions for themselves, their spouses, and any dependents; and (2) either a standard deduction or the total of their itemized deductions. For 1998, 38 million taxpayers chose to itemize deductions rather than take the standard deduction. Generally, taxpayers itemize deductions when the total of their itemized deductions exceeds the amount of the standard deduction to which they are otherwise entitled. However, some taxpayers may itemize even if their itemized deductions are less than their standard deduction.[19] The top 10 deductions claimed on returns in 1998 are listed in Table 2.2 below.

[19] One reason that some taxpayers may itemize deductions even when that does not appear to be tax-minimizing behavior is due to interactions with state income taxes. Some states do not permit a taxpayer to itemize on a state income tax return unless they do so on a federal income tax return. As a result, itemizing may reduce a taxpayer's state income taxes by more than it increases his or her federal income taxes.a taxpayer's state income taxes by more than it increases his or her federal income taxes.

TAXPAYER AND ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

Taxpayers must file a number of forms and schedules and complete associated worksheets to determine if they qualify for a specific deduction, calculate the amount of the deduction, and claim it on their tax return. The amount of resulting burden varies according to the individual taxpayer's situation. For example, taxpayers who contribute money or appreciable property to charities will experience more burden than those taxpayers who give a similar amount weekly through employer deductions to a United Fund campaign. Table 2.5 identifies the forms, schedules, publications, and worksheets for each deduction we analyzed. All itemized deductions must be reported on Schedule A (Form 1040).

REDUCING COMPLEXITY

There are many issues associated with complexity of personal exemptions and itemized deductions. This report focuses on the many different approaches used to limit the value of certain deductions in some situations and on the recordkeeping requirements for charitable contributions.

Complexity Issue: Itemized deductions and the personal exemption have different limits and their value to taxpayers differs.

As illustrated in Table 2.6 a variety of limitations are imposed on a taxpayer's ability to take itemized deductions and personal exemptions. These include floors, caps, and other limits. In many cases these limitations are applied differently for different deductions. Specifically,

- some itemized deductions are limited based on AGI,
- some itemized deductions can only be taken after the amount of the expense has exceeded a set percentage of the taxpayer's AGI,
- some are limited by the value of the underlying financial transaction, and
- almost all are subject to a different combination of the above.

Limits on Itemized Deductions

Currently, the total amount a taxpayer can deduct of home mortgage interest, charitable contributions, taxes, job expenses, and most other miscellaneous deductions is limited for higher income taxpayers. For tax year 2000, taxpayers with an AGI above $128,950 ($64,475 if married filing separately) must reduce the total amount that they can deduct by the smaller of

- three percent of the amount by which their AGI exceeds the above thresholds or
- 80 percent of the itemized deductions that are subject to the limit.

To figure the limit, taxpayers must complete a 10-step worksheet that includes five separate calculations. The EGTRRA legislation reduces the limitation on itemized deductions by one-third beginning in 2006 and eliminates it entirely beginning in 2010.

Floors on Deductions

Some items such as medical and dental expenses, job expenses, and other miscellaneous expenses can only be deducted if the amount of the expense exceeds a certain percentage of AGI. After that floor is reached, qualified expenses can be deducted subject to other limits in some cases. The floors are

- Medical and dental expenses - 7.5 percent of AGI (10 percent when calculating AMT),
- Job expenses and other miscellaneous expenses -- two percent of AGI, and
