THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 12, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter to the President dated February 11, 2003. In the letter, you renew your previous request for confidential Department of Justice memoranda in which Mr. Estrada provided appeal, certiorari, and amicus recommendations while he was a career attorney in the Office of Solicitor General for four years in the Clinton Administration and one year in the George H.W. Bush Administration. You also request that Mr. Estrada answer certain questions beyond the extensive questions that he already answered appropriately and forthrightly during his Committee hearing and in follow-up written responses.

We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate must make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. However, your requests have no persuasive support in the history and precedent of judicial appointments. Indeed, the relevant history and precedent convincingly demonstrate that a new and shifting standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

First, as the Department of Justice explained in its letters of June 5, 2002, October 8, 2002, and January 23, 2003, all living former Solicitors General (four Democrats and three Republicans) have strongly opposed your request for Solicitor General memoranda and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. Even more telling, we are informed that the Senate has not requested memos such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department (including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office). The few isolated examples you have cited – in which targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues were accommodated for nominees to positions other than the U.S. Courts of Appeals – similarly do not support your request here.

Second, as explained more fully below with respect to your request that Mr. Estrada answer additional questions, the only specific question identified in your letter refers to his judicial role models. You claim that Mr. Estrada refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in his written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject that Mr. Estrada submitted three months ago, he cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires (he clerked for Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse), and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question." Your letter to the President ignores Mr. Estrada's answer to this question. In any event, beyond this one query, your letter does not pose any additional questions to him. Additionally, neither of you has posed any written questions to Mr. Estrada in the more than three months since his all-day Committee hearing. Since the hearing, Mr. Estrada also has met (and continues to meet) with numerous Democrat Senators interested in learning more about his record. Finally, as I will view that would keep me from applying that case law faithfully." When asked whether Roe v. Wade was "settled law," Mr. Estrada replied, "I believe so."

General Approach to Judging

When asked by Senator Edwards about judicial review, Mr. Estrada explained: "Courts take the laws that have been passed by you and give you the benefit of understanding that you take the same oath that they do to uphold the Constitution, and therefore they take the laws with the presumption that they are constitutional. It is the affirmative burden of the plaintiff to show that you have gone beyond your oath. If they come into court, then it is appropriate for courts to undertake to listen to the legal arguments – why it is that the legislature went beyond [its] role as a legislat[ure] and invaded the Constitution."

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Edwards that there are 200 years of Supreme Court precedent and that it is not the case that "the appropriate conduct for courts is to be guided solely by the bare text of the Constitution because that is not the legal system that we have."

When asked by Senator Edwards whether he was a strict constructionist, Mr. Estrada replied that he was "a fair constructionist" – meaning that "I don't think that it should be the goal of courts to be strict or lax. The goal of courts is to get it right. . . . It is not necessarily the case in my mind that, for example, all parts of the Constitution are suitable for the same type of interpretative analysis. . . . [T]he Constitution says, for example, that you must be 35 years old to be our chief executive. . . . There are areas of the Constitution that are more open-ended. And you adverted to one, like the substantive component of the due process clauses, where there are other methods of interpretation that are not quite so obvious that the court has brought to bear to try to bring forth what the appropriate answer should be."

When Senator Kohl asked him about environmental statutes, for example, Mr. Estrada explained that those statutes come to court "with a strong presumption of constitutionality."

In response to Senator Leahy, Mr. Estrada described the most important attributes of a judge: "The most important quality for a judge, in my view Senator Leahy, is to have an appropriate process for decisionmaking. That entails having an open mind. It entails listening to the parties, reading their briefs, going back beyond those briefs and doing all of the legwork needed to ascertain who is right in his or her claims as to what the law says and what the facts [are]. In a court of appeals court, where judges sit in panels of three, it is important to engage in deliberation and give ear to the views of colleagues who may have come to different conclusions. And in sum, to be committed to judging as a process that is intended to give us the right answer, not to a result. And I can give you my level best solemn assurance that I firmly think I do have those qualities or else I would not have accepted the nomination."

In response to Senator Durbin, Miguel Estrada stated that "the Constitution, like other legal texts, should be construed reasonably and fairly, to give effect to all that its text contains."

Mr. Estrada indicated to Senator Durbin that he admired the judges for whom he clerked, Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse, as well as Justice Lewis Powell.

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Durbin that "I can absolutely assure the Committee that I will follow binding Supreme Court precedent until and unless such precedent has been displaced by subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court itself."

In response to Senator Grassley, Mr. Estrada stated: "When facing a problems for which there is a not a decisive precedent from a higher court, my cardinal rule would be to seize aid from anyplace where I could get it. Depending on the nature of the problem, that would include related case law in other areas that higher courts had dealt with that had had some insights to teach with respect to the problem at hand. It could include the history of the enactment, including in the case of a statute legislative history. It could include the custom and practice under any predecessor statute or document. It could include the views of academics to the extent that they purport to analyze what the law is instead of – instead of prescribing what it should be. And in sum, as Chief Justice Marshall once said, to attempt not to overlook anything from which aid might be derived."

In response to Senator Sessions, Estrada stated: "I am very firmly of the view that although we all have views on a number of subjects from A to Z, the first duty of a judge is to self-consciously put that aside and look at each case by starting withholding judgment with an open mind and listen to the parties. So I think that the job of a judge is to put all of that aside, and to the best of his human capacity to give a judgment based solely on the arguments and the law."

In response to Senator Sessions, Mr. Estrada stated that "I will follow binding case law in every case. . . . I may have a personal, moral, philosophical view on the subject matter. But I undertake to you that I would put all that aside and decide cases in accordance with binding case law and even in accordance with the case law that is not binding but seems constructive on the area, without any influence whatsoever from any personal view I may have about the subject matter."

Miranda/Stare Decisis

Mr. Estrada stated that United States v. Dickerson – a case raising the question whether Miranda should be overruled – reflected a "reasonable application of the doctrine of stare decisis. In my view, it is rarely appropriate for the Supreme Court to overturn one of its own precedents."

Affirmative Action

With respect to affirmative action, Mr. Estrada responded to Senator Kennedy that "any policy views I might have as a private citizen on the subject of affirmative action would not enter into how I would approach any case that comes before me as a judge. Under controlling Supreme Court authority, particularly Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995), if a government program creates a racial classification, it will be subject to strict scrutiny. Whether the program survives that sort of scrutiny will often involve a highly contextual and fact-specific inquiry into the nature of the justifications asserted by the government and the fit between those justifications and the classification at issue. Adarand and similar cases provide the framework that I would be required to apply, and would apply, in considering these issues as a judge."

Asked by Senator Leahy about the strict scrutiny test, Mr. Estrada replied, "the Supreme Court in the Adarand case stated, as a general rule, that the consideration of race is subject to strict scrutiny. That means that though it may be used in some cases, it has to be justified by a compelling state interest. And with respect to the particular context, there must be a fairly fact-bound individual assessment of the fit between the interest that is being asserted and the category being used. That is just another way of saying that it is a very fact-intensive analysis in the context of a specific program and in the context of the justifications that are being offered in support of the program."

Congressional Authority

With respect to the outer limits of Congress' power to confer authority on other governmental bodies, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that the Supreme Court has said that "particular factual context is significant in analyzing the appropriateness of a particular delegation. . . . Of course, the fact that the Supreme Court only rarely has struck down statutes on this ground suggests that the Court has been quite deferential to congressional judgments about the types of delegations that reasonably might be needed to carry on the business of government."

When Senator Kohl asked Mr. Estrada about the 1995 Lopez case concerning the scope of Congress' power to regulate, Mr. Estrada pointed out that he had argued in a companion case "for a very expansive view of the power to Congress to pass statutes under the Commerce Clause and have them be upheld by the court. . . . Lopez has given us guidance on when it is appropriate for the court to exercise the commerce power. It is binding law and I would follow it."

Ethnicity

With respect to the fact that the President had noted Miguel's ethnicity, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy: "The President is the leader of a large and diverse country, and it is accordingly appropriate for him, in exercising his constitutional nomination and appointment powers, to select qualified individuals who reflect the breadth and diversity of our Nation."

With respect to the Democrat Congressional Hispanic Caucus's criticism of him, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that "I strongly disagree, however, with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus' view that I lack an understanding of the role and importance of courts in protecting the legal rights of minorities, of the values and mores of Latino culture, or the significance of role models for minority communities."

Racial Discrimination

With respect to race discrimination, Mr. Estrada stated in response to Senator Kennedy: "I take a backseat to no one in my abhorrence of race discrimination in law enforcement or anything else."

Senator Feingold asked Mr. Estrada whether he believed that racial profiling and racially motivated law enforcement misconduct are problems in this country today. Mr. Estrada replied, "I am – I will once again emphasize I'm unalterably opposed to any sort of race discrimination in law enforcement, Senator, whether it's called racial profiling or anything else. . . . I know full well that we have real problems with discrimination in our day and age."

Senator Leahy asked Mr. Estrada about whether statistical evidence of discriminatory impact is relevant in establishing discrimination. Mr. Estrada replied: "I am not a specialist in this area of the law, Senator Leahy, but I am aware that there is a line of cases, beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Griggs, that suggests that in appropriate cases that [such evidence] may be appropriate. . . . I do understand that there is a major area of law that deals with how you prove and try disparate-impact cases."

Congressional Authority to Regulate Firearms

Senator Feinstein asked whether Congress may legislate in the area of dangerous firearms, and Mr. Estrada responded that the Supreme Court had ruled that "if the government were to prove that the firearm had at any time in its lifetime been in interstate commerce even if that had nothing to do with the crime at issue, that that would be an adequate basis for the exercise of Congress' power."

Right to Counsel

Senator Edwards asked about Gideon v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court case guaranteeing the right to counsel for poor defendants who could not afford counsel. Although Senator Edwards appeared to question the reasoning in that landmark case, Mr. Estrada responded that "I frankly have always taken it as a given that that's – the ruling in the case."

C. Answers by President Clinton's Nominees

Your criticism of Miguel Estrada's testimony creates a double standard. You did not require nominees of President Clinton to answer questions of this sort (keeping in mind that you have not identified what your additional questions to Mr. Estrada are). President Clinton's appeals court nominees routinely testified without discussing their views of specific issues or cases. A few select examples, including of several nominees who had no prior judicial experience, illustrate the point. (Please note that these are isolated examples; there are many more we can provide if necessary.)

Merrick Garland (no prior judicial experience). In the nomination of Merrick Garland to the D.C. Circuit, Senator Specter asked him: "Do you favor, as a personal matter, capital punishment?" Judge Garland replied only that he would follow Supreme Court precedent: "This is really a matter of settled law now. The Court has held that capital punishment is constitutional and lower courts are to follow that rule." Senator Specter also asked him about his views of the independent counsel statute's constitutionality, and Judge Garland responded: "Well, that, too, the Supreme Court in Morrison v. Olson upheld as constitutional, and, of course, I would follow that ruling." Judge Garland did not provide his personal view of either subject.

Judith Rogers. In the hearing on Judge Judith Rogers' nomination to the D.C. Circuit, Judge Rogers was asked by Senator Cohen about the debate over an evolving Constitution. Judge Rogers responded: "My obligation as an appellate judge is to apply precedent. Some of the debates which I have heard and to which I think you may be alluding are interesting, but as an appellate judge, my obligation is to apply precedent. And so the interpretations of the Constitution by the U.S. Supreme Court would be binding on me." She then was asked how she would rule in the absence of precedent and responded: "When I was taking my master's in judicial process at the University of Virginia Law School, one of the points emphasized was the growth of our common law system based on the English common law judge system. And my opinions, I think if you look at them, reflect that where I am presented with a question of first impression, that I look to the language of whatever provision we are addressing, that I look to whatever debates are available, that I look to the interpretations by other Federal courts, that I look to the interpretations of other State courts, and it may be necessary, as well, to look at the interpretations suggested by commentators. And within that framework, which I consider to be a discipline, that I would reach a view in a case of first impression." Finally, Judge Rogers was asked her view of the three-strikes law and stated: "As an appellate judge, my obligation is to enforce the laws that Congress passes or, where I am now, that the District of Columbia Council passes." Judge Rogers did not provide her personal view of these subjects.

Marsha Berzon (no prior judicial experience). Senator Smith asked her views on Roe v. Wade and whether "an unborn child is a human being." Judge Berzon stated: "[M]y role as a judge is not to further anything that I personally believe or don't believe, and I think that is the strength of our system and the strength of our appellate system. The Supreme Court has been quite definitive quite recently about the applicable standard, and I absolutely pledge to you that I will follow that standard as it exists now, and if it is changed, I will follow that standard. And my personal views in this area, as in any other, will have absolutely no effect." When Senator Smith probed about their personal views on abortion and Roe v. Wade, Chairman Hatch interrupted: "I don't know how they can say much more than that at this point in this meeting."

Richard Tallman (no prior judicial experience). In response to written questions, Judge Tallman explained that "[j]udicial nominees are limited by judicial ethical considerations from answering any question in a manner that would call for an 'advisory opinion' as the courts have defined it or that in effect ask a nominee to suggest how he or she would rule on an issue that could foreseeably require his or her attention in a future case or controversy after confirmation." He was asked how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson. He stated: "It is entirely conjectural as to what I would have done without having the opportunity to thoroughly review the record presented on appeal, the briefs and arguments of counsel, and supporting legal authorities that were applicable at that time." He gave the same response when asked how he would have ruled on Roe v. Wade. When asked his personal view on abortion, he wrote: "I hold no personal views that would prevent me from doing my judicial duty to follow the precedent set down by the Supreme Court." He gave the same answer about the death penalty.

Kim Wardlaw. In the hearing on Judge Kim Wardlaw's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Judge Wardlaw was asked about the constitutionality of affirmative action. She stated (in an answer similar to Miguel Estrada's answer to the same question): "The Supreme Court has held that racial classifications are unconstitutional unless they are narrowly tailored to meet a compelling governmental interest."

Maryanne Trump Barry. In the hearing on Judge Maryanne Trump Barry's nomination to the Third Circuit, Senator Smith asked for her personal opinion on whether "an unborn child at any stage of the pregnancy is a human being." Judge Barry responded: "Casey is the law that I would look at. If I had a personal opinion – and I am not suggesting that I do – it is irrelevant because I must look to the law which binds me."

Raymond Fisher. In the hearing on Judge Raymond Fisher's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Senator Sessions asked Judge Fisher's own personal views on whether the death penalty was constitutional. Judge Fisher responded that "My view, Senator, is that, as you indicated, the Supreme Court has ruled that the death penalty is constitutional. As a lower appellate court judge, that is the law that I am governed by. I don't want in my judicial career, should I be fortunate enough to have one, to inject my personal opinions into whether or not I follow the law. I believe that the precedent of the Supreme Court is binding and that is what my function is."

V. Conclusion

Miguel Estrada is a well-qualified and well-respected judicial nominee who has very strong bipartisan support. Based on our reading of history, we believe that you have ample information about this nominee and have had more than enough time to consider questions about his qualifications and suitability. We urge you to stop the unfair treatment, end the filibuster, allow an up-or-down vote, and vote to confirm Mr. Estrada.

Sincerely,

explain below, Mr. Estrada forthrightly answered numerous questions about his judicial approach and views in a manner that matches or greatly exceeds answers demanded of previous appeals court nominees.

With respect, it appears that a double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. That is highly unfair and inappropriate, particularly for this well-qualified and well-respected nominee.

I will turn now in more detail to the various issues raised by your letter. I will address them at some length given the importance of this issue and the nature of your requests.

I. Miguel Estrada's Qualifications and Bipartisan Support

Miguel Estrada is an extraordinarily qualified judicial nominee. The American Bar Association, which Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. The ABA rating was entirely appropriate in light of Mr. Estrada's superb record as Assistant to the Solicitor General in the Clinton and George H.W. Bush Administrations, as a federal prosecutor in New York, as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and in performing significant pro bono work.

Some who are misinformed have seized on Mr. Estrada's lack of prior judicial experience, but five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial experience, including two appointees of President Clinton and one appointee of President Carter. Miguel Estrada has tried numerous cases before federal juries, argued many cases in the federal appeals courts, and argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. That is a record that few judicial nominees can match. And few lawyers, whatever their ideology or philosophy, have volunteered to represent a death row inmate pro bono before the Supreme Court as did Miguel Estrada.

Mr. Estrada's excellent legal qualifications are all the more extraordinary given his personal history. Simply put, Miguel Estrada is an American success story. He came to this country at age 17 from Honduras speaking little English. Through hard work and dedicated service to the United States, Miguel Estrada has risen to the very pinnacle of the legal profession. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic judge to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Given his record, his background, and his integrity, it is no surprise that Miguel Estrada is strongly supported by the vast majority of national Hispanic organizations. The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), for example, wrote to Senator Leahy to urge Mr. Estrada's confirmation and explain that he "is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth." A group of 19 Hispanic organizations, including LULAC and the Hispanic National Bar Association, recently wrote to the Senate urging "on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country" that "both parties in the U.S. Senate . . . put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land."

The current effort to filibuster Mr. Estrada's nomination is particularly unjustified given that those who have worked with Miguel -- including prominent Democrat lawyers whom you know well -- strongly support his confirmation. For example, Ron Klain, who served as a high-ranking adviser to former Vice President Gore and former Chief Counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent. . . . [T]he challenges that he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need."

President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, wrote: "During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. . . . In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected any consideration other than the long-term interests of the United States. I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity."

A bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice wrote: "We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints." One former colleague, Richard Seamon, wrote that he is a pro-choice, lifelong Democrat with self-described "liberal views on most issues" who said he would "consider it a disgrace" if Mr. Estrada is not confirmed.

Similarly, Leonard Joy, head of the Federal Defender Division of the Legal Aid Society of New York, wrote that "Miguel would make an excellent Circuit Court Judge. He is as fine a lawyer as I have met and, on top of all his intellectual abilities and judgment he would bring to bear, he would bring a desirable diversity to the Court. I heartily recommend him."

Beyond the extensive personal testimony from those who worked side-by-side with him for many years, the performance reviews of Miguel for the years that he worked in the Office of Solicitor General gave him the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. The reviews stated that Miguel:

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

REV_00373367

In the two years that Miguel Estrada and Paul Bender worked together, Mr. Bender signed those reviews. These employment reviews thus call into serious question some press reports containing a negative comment from Mr. Bender about Mr. Estrada's temperament (which is the only negative comment made by anyone who actually knows Mr. Estrada). Just as important, President Clinton's Solicitor General Seth Waxman expressly refuted Mr. Bender's statement.

In sum, based on his experience, his intellect, his integrity, and his bipartisan support, Miguel Estrada should be confirmed promptly.

II. The Senate's Role

President Bush nominated Miguel Estrada nearly two years ago on May 9, 2001. As explained above, he is well-qualified and well-respected. By any traditional measure that the Senate has used to evaluate appeals court nominees, Miguel Estrada should have been confirmed long ago. Your letter and public statements indicate, however, that you are applying both a new standard and new tactics to this particular nominee.

As to the standard, the Senate has a very important role in the process, but the Senate's traditional approach to appeals court nominees, and the approach envisioned by the Constitution's Framers, is far different from the standard that you now seek to apply. Senator Biden stated the traditional approach in 1997: "Any person who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life, and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court." Congressional Record, March 19, 1997. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist No. 76. It was anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." No. 76.

As to tactics, you have indicated that some Senate Democrats intend to filibuster to prevent a vote on this nominee. As you know, there has never been a successful filibuster of a court of appeals nominee. Only a few years ago, Senator Leahy and other Democrat Senators expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee was entitled to an up-or-down floor vote within a reasonable time. On October 3, 2000, for example, Senator Leahy stated:

> Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this.

Senator Daschle similarly stated on October 5, 1999, that "[t]he Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down. An up or down vote, that is all we seek for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much."

In his East Room speech of October 30, 2002, President Bush reiterated that every judicial nominee deserves a timely up-or-down floor vote in the Senate, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. Contrary to President Bush's attempts at permanent reform to bring order to the process, your current effort to employ a filibuster and block an up-or-down vote on the Estrada nomination may significantly exacerbate the cycle of bitterness and recrimination that President Bush has sought to resolve on a bipartisan basis. We fear that the damage caused by a filibuster could take many years to undo. To continue on this path would also be, in Senator Leahy's words, "a terrible disservice" to Mr. Estrada. We urge you to reconsider this extraordinary action, to end the filibuster of Mr. Estrada's nomination, and to allow the full Senate to vote up or down.

III. Request for Confidential Solicitor General Memos

You have suggested that Mr. Estrada's background, experience, and support are insufficient to assess his suitability for the D.C. Circuit. You have renewed your request for Solicitor General memos authored by Mr. Estrada. But every living former Solicitor General signed a joint letter to the Senate opposing your request. The letter was signed by Democrats Archibald Cox, Walter Dellinger, Drew Days, and Seth Waxman. They stated: "Any attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests – a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself. . . . Although we profoundly respect the Senate's duty to evaluate Mr. Estrada's fitness for the federal judiciary, we do not think that the confidentiality and integrity of internal deliberations should be sacrificed in the process."

It bears mention that the interest asserted here is that of the United States, not the personal interest of Mr. Estrada. Indeed, Mr. Estrada himself testified that "I have not opposed the release of those records. . . . I am exceptionally proud of every piece of legal work that I have done in my life. If it were up to me as a private citizen, I would be more than proud to have you look at everything that I have done for the government or for a private client."

The history of Senate confirmations of nominees who had previously worked in the Department of Justice makes clear that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada's nomination. Since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Of those 67 nominees, 38 had no prior judicial experience, like Miguel Estrada. The Department of Justice's review of those nomination records disclosed that in none of those cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the Department. In fact, the Department's review disclosed that the Senate did not even request such materials for a single one of these 67 nominees.

Of this group of 67 nominees, seven were nominees who had worked as a Deputy Solicitor General or Assistant to the Solicitor General. These seven nominees, nominated by Presidents of each party and confirmed by Senates controlled by each party, included Samuel Alito, Danny Boggs, William Bryson, Frank Easterbrook, Daniel Friedman, Richard Posner, and Raymond Randolph.

The five isolated historical examples you have cited do not support your current request. In each of those five cases, the Committee made a targeted request for specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Even in those isolated cases, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda written by those nominees were neither requested nor produced. With respect to Judge Bork's nomination, for example, the Committee received access to certain particular memoranda (many related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues). The vast majority of memoranda authored by Judge Bork were never received. With respect to Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents unrelated to Judge Trott's service to the Department. So, too, in the three other examples you cite, the Committee requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Of course, no such allegations have been made in the case of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the examples you have cited only highlight the lack of precedent for the current request. As the Justice Department has explained to you previously, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memos from the Office of Solicitor General – and deliberative Department of Justice memoranda more broadly – must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process. That is a fundamental principle that has been followed irrespective of the party that controls the White House and the Senate.

Your continued requests for these memoranda have provoked a foreseeable and inevitable conflict that, in turn, has been cited as a basis for obstructing a vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination. Respectfully, the conflict is unnecessary because your desire to assess the nominee can be readily accommodated in many ways other than intruding into and severely damaging the deliberative process of the Office of Solicitor General. For example, you can review Mr. Estrada's written briefs and oral arguments both as an attorney for the United States and in private practice. As you know, those documents are publicly available and easily accessible; that said, we would be pleased to facilitate your access to them. (Mr. Estrada's hearing transcript suggests that no Democrat Member of the Committee had read Mr. Estrada's many dozens of Solicitor General merits briefs, certiorari petitions, and opposition briefs or the transcripts of his 14 oral arguments when he represented the United States.) You also may consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time (discussed above) and examine the nominee's written performance reviews (also discussed above). There is more than ample information for you to assess Mr. Estrada's qualifications and suitability for the D.C. Circuit based on the traditional standards the Senate has employed.

It also is important to recognize that political appointees of President Clinton have read virtually all of the memoranda in question – namely, the Democrat Solicitors General Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman. None of those three highly respected Democrat lawyers has expressed any concern whatever about Mr. Estrada's nomination. Indeed, Mr. Waxman wrote a letter of strong support, and Mr. Days made public statements in support of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the historical record and past precedent convincingly demonstrate that this request creates and applies an unfair double standard to Miguel Estrada.

IV. Request that Miguel Estrada Answer Additional Questions

Your letter also suggests that Miguel Estrada should answer certain questions that he allegedly did not answer in his hearing. To begin with, we do not know what your specific questions are. In addition, this request frankly comes as a surprise given that (i) Senator Schumer chaired the hearing on Mr. Estrada, (ii) the hearing lasted an entire day, (iii) Senators at the all-day hearing asked numerous far-reaching questions that Mr. Estrada answered forthrightly and appropriately, and (iv) only two of the 10 Democrat Senators then on the Committee even submitted any follow-up written questions, and they submitted only a few questions (in marked contrast to other nominees who received voluminous follow-up questions).

It also bears mention that Mr. Estrada has personally met with a large number of Democrat Senators, including Senators Landrieu, Lincoln, Bill Nelson, Ben Nelson, Leahy, Feinstein, Kohl, and Breaux; is scheduled to meet with Senator Carper; and would be pleased to meet with additional Senators.

The only specific question your letter identifies refers to Mr. Estrada's judicial role models, and you claim that he refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in Mr. Estrada's written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject, Mr. Estrada cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires, and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question."

In our judgment, moreover, Mr. Estrada answered the Committee's questions in a manner that was both entirely appropriate and entirely consistent with the approach that judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have taken for many years. Your suggestions to the contrary do not square with the hearing record or traditional practice.

A. Judicial Ethics and Traditional Practice

In assessing your request that Miguel Estrada did not answer appropriate questions, we begin with rules of judicial ethics that govern prospective nominees. Canon 5A(3)(d) provides that prospective judges "shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court"

(emphasis added). Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point well in 1967 when asked about the Fifth Amendment: "I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself." Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel to President Carter and President Clinton, has stated that "candidates should decline to reply when efforts are made to find out how they would decide a particular case."

In 1968, in the context of the Justice Abe Fortas' nomination to be Chief Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee similarly stated: "Although recognizing the constitutional dilemma which appears to exist when the Senate is asked to advise and consent on a judicial nominee without examining him on legal questions, the Committee is of the view that Justice Fortas wisely and correctly declined to answer questions in this area. To require a Justice to state his views on legal questions or to discuss his past decisions before the Committee would threaten the independence of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system itself. It would also impinge on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers among the three branches of Government as required by the Constitution." S. Exec. Rep. No. 8, 90th Cong. 2d Sess. 5 (1968).

Even in the context of a Supreme Court confirmation hearing, Senator Kennedy defended Sandra Day O'Connor's refusal to discuss her views on abortion: "It is offensive to suggest that a potential Justice of the Supreme Court must pass some presumed test of judicial philosophy. It is even more offensive to suggest that a potential justice must pass the litmus test of any single-issue interest group." Nomination of Sandra O'Connor: Hearings Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on the Nomination of Judge Sandra Day O'Connor of Arizona to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, 97th Cong. 6 (1981) (statement of Sen. Kennedy).

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg likewise declined to answer certain questions: "Because I am and hope to continue to be a judge, it would be wrong for me to say or to preview in this legislative chamber how I would cast my vote on questions the Supreme Court may be called upon to decide. Were I to rehearse here what I would say and how I would reason on such questions, I would act injudiciously." Similarly, Justice John Paul Stevens stated in his hearing: "I really don't think I should discuss this subject generally, Senator. I don't mean to be unresponsive but in all candor I must say that there have been many times in my experience in the last five years where I found that my first reaction to a problem was not the same as the reaction I had when I had the responsibility of decisions and I think that if I were to make comments that were not carefully thought through they might be given significance that they really did not merit."

Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice in a case decided last year: "In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be 'on interest' to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Court declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well." Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, 122 S. Ct. 2528, 2552 n.1 (2002) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Justice Ginsburg added that this adherence to this "longstanding norm" was "crucial to the health of the Federal Judiciary." Id. In his majority opinion, Justice Scalia did not take issue with that description and added: "Nor do we assert that candidates for judicial office should be compelled to announce their views on disputed legal issues." Id. at 2539 n.11 (emphasis in original).

In some recent hearings, including Mr. Estrada's, Senator Schumer has asked that nominees identify particular Supreme Court cases of the last few decades with which they disagree. But the problems with such a question and answer were well stated by Justice Stephen Breyer. As Justice Breyer put it, "Until [an issue] comes up, I don't really think it through with the depth that it would require. . . . So often, when you decide a matter for real, in a court or elsewhere, it turns out to be very different after you've become informed and think it through for real than what you would have said at a cocktail party answering a question." 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 425, 462.

Senator Schumer also has asked nominees how they would have ruled in particular Supreme Court cases. Again, a double standard is being applied. The nominees of President Clinton did not answer such questions. For example, Richard Tallman, a nominee with no prior judicial service who would now serves on the Ninth Circuit, not only would not answer how he would have ruled as a judge in Roe v. Wade – but even how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson, the infamous case that upheld the discredited and shameful "separate but equal" doctrine. So, too, in the hearing on President Clinton's nomination of Judges Barry and Fisher, Senator Smith asked whether the nominees would have voted for a constitutional right to abortion before Roe v. Wade. Chairman Hatch interrupted Senator Smith to say "that is not a fair question to these two nominees because regardless of what happened pre-1973, they have to abide by what has happened post-1973 and the current precedents that the Supreme Court has."

B. Answers by Miguel Estrada

Miguel Estrada answered the Committee's questions forthrightly and appropriately. Indeed, Miguel Estrada was more expansive than many judicial nominees traditionally have been in Senate hearings, and he was asked a far broader range of questions than many previous appeals court nominees were asked. We will catalogue here a select sample of his answers.

Unenumerated rights, privacy, and abortion

When asked by Senator Edwards about the Constitution's protection for rights not enumerated in the Constitution, Mr. Estrada replied: "I recognize that the Supreme Court has said [on] numerous occasions in the area of privacy and elsewhere that there are unenumerated rights in the Constitution, and I have no view of any sort, whether legal or personal, that would hinder me from applying those rulings by the court. But I think the court has been quite clear that there are a number of unenumerated rights in the Constitution. In the main, the court has recognized them as being inherent in the right of substantive due process and the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

When asked by Senator Feinstein whether the Constitution encompasses a right to privacy and abortion, Mr. Estrada responded, "The Supreme Court has so held, and I have no view of any nature whatsoever, whether it be legal, philosophical, moral, or any other type of

WASHINGTON

February 24, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

Based on your public comments yesterday, I am concerned that you may have inaccurate and incomplete information about Miguel Estrada's qualifications and about the historical practice with respect to judicial confirmations. Therefore, I write to respectfully reiterate and explain our conclusion that you and certain other Senators are applying an unfair double standard -- indeed, a series of unfair double standards -- to Miguel Estrada.

First, your request for confidential attorney-client memoranda Mr. Estrada wrote in the Office of Solicitor General seeks information that, based on our review, has not been demanded from past nominees to the federal courts of appeals. We are informed that the Senate has not requested memoranda such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department -- including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office. Nor have such memoranda been demanded from nominees in similar attorney-client situations: The Senate has not demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as Senate lawyers, such as memoranda written by Stephen Breyer as a Senate counsel before Justice Breyer was confirmed to the First Circuit in 1980. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as law clerks to Supreme Court Justices or other federal or state judges. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had worked for private clients.

The very few isolated examples you have cited were not nominees for federal appeals courts. Moreover, those situations involved Executive Branch accommodations of targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues that were primarily related to allegations of malfeasance or misconduct in a federal office. We respectfully do not believe these examples support your request. Our conclusion about the general lack of support and precedent for your position is buttressed by the fact that every living former Solicitor General (four Democrats and three Republicans) has strongly opposed your request and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. In short, the traditional practice of the Senate and the Executive Branch with respect to federal appeals court nominations stands in contrast to your request here and supports our conclusion that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. (Also, contrary to your suggestion yesterday, please note that no one in the Executive Branch has reviewed these memoranda since President Bush took office in January 2001.)

Second, you suggested that "no judicial nominee that I'm aware of, for such a high court, has ever had so little of a record." I respectfully disagree. Miguel Estrada has been a very accomplished lawyer, trying cases before federal juries, briefing and arguing numerous appeals before federal and state appeals courts, and arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court, among his other significant work. His record and breadth of experience exceeds that of many judicial nominees, which is no doubt why the American Bar Association -- which you have labeled the

"gold standard" -- unanimously rated him "well-qualified." In noting yesterday that Mr. Estrada's career had been devoted to "arguing for a client," you appeared to imply that only those with prior judicial service (or perhaps "a lot of [law review] articles") may serve on the federal appeals courts. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial service at the time of their appointments. Indeed, Supreme Court Justices Rehnquist, White, and Powell -- to name three of the most recent -- had not served as judges before being confirmed to the Supreme Court. And like Mr. Estrada, two appointees of President Clinton to the D.C. Circuit (Judge David Tatel and Judge Merrick Garland) had similarly spent their careers "arguing for a client," but were nonetheless confirmed.

As the Chief Justice noted in his 2001 Year-End Report, moreover, "[t]he federal Judiciary has traditionally drawn from a wide diversity of professional backgrounds." The Chief Justice cited Justice Louis Brandeis, Justice John Harlan, Justice Byron White, Judge Thurgood Marshall (as nominee to the Second Circuit), Judge Learned Hand, and Judge John Minor Wisdom as just a few examples of great judges who had spent virtually their entire careers "arguing for a client" before becoming Supreme Court Justices or federal appeals court judges. As these examples show, had the "arguing for a client" standard been applied in the past, it would have deprived the American people of many of our most notable appellate judges. Based on our understanding, this standard has not been applied in the past. This further explains why we have concluded that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

Third, you stated that "when you went to those hearings, Mr. Estrada answered no questions." The record demonstrates otherwise. Mr. Estrada answered more than 100 questions at his hearing (and another 25 in follow-up written answers). He explained in some detail his approach to judging on many issues, and did so appropriately without providing his personal views on specific legal or policy questions that could come before him – which is how previous judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have appropriately answered questions. Indeed, at his hearing, Mr. Estrada was asked and answered more questions, and did so more fully, than did President Clinton's appointees to this same court. Judge David Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Judith Rogers and Merrick Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions. The three appointees of President Clinton – combined – thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, like Mr. Estrada, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions at the hearing. Judge Rogers refused to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Mr. Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty, stating that he would follow precedent. In short, we believe that your criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing reveals that another unfair double standard is being applied to Mr. Estrada.

Fourth, you stated that the Founding Fathers "came to the conclusion that the Senate ought to ask a whole lot of questions" of judicial nominees. We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate should make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. But your characterization of the Senate's role with respect to judicial nominations is not consistent with our reading of historical or traditional practice. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." The Federalist 76. The Framers anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." Id. Moreover, the Senate did not hold hearings on judicial nominees for much of American history, and the hearings for lower-court nominees in modern times traditionally have not included the examination of personal views that you have advocated. (My letter of February 12, 2003, to Senators Daschle and Leahy contains more detail on this point.) Indeed, just a few years ago, Senator Biden made clear, consistent with the traditional practice, that he would vote to confirm an appeals court judge if he were convinced that the nominee would follow precedent and otherwise was of high ability and integrity.

In short, it appears that you are seeking to change the Senate's traditional standard for assessing judicial nominees. We respect your right to advocate a change, but we do not believe that the standard you seek to apply is consistent with the Framers' vision, the traditional Senate practice, or the Senate's treatment of President Clinton's nominees. Rather, we believe a new standard is being devised and applied to Miguel Estrada.

Fifth, you stated yesterday that a "filibuster" is not an appropriate term to describe what has been occurring in the Senate. We respectfully disagree. Democrat Senators have objected to unanimous consent motions to schedule a vote, and they have indicated that they will continue to do so. That tactic is historically and commonly known as a filibuster, and is a dramatic escalation of the tactics used to oppose judicial nominees. Indeed, in 1998, Senator Leahy stated: "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators." 144 Cong. Rec. S6522 (June 18, 1998). In our judgment, the tactics now being employed again show that Miguel Estrada is receiving differential treatment.

Sincerely,

/s/

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:

I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. We respectfully do not think this "accusation" is credible or supported. In fact, Mr. Estrada explained at his hearing that he in fact had been very supportive, for example, of the hiring of one law clerk for Justice Kennedy who at the time worked for President Clinton, is a strong Democrat, and now works for Senator Leahy on the Judiciary Committee.

Fourth, you noted concern among "Hispanic organizations." In fact, the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic organizations have supported Mr. Estrada. That includes the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, and the Latino Coalition, among many others. To be sure, MALDEF and PRLDEF do oppose Mr. Estrada. As to Hispanic members of the House, we understand that all of the Republican Hispanics support him while the Democrat Hispanics do not. In any event, LULAC's statement is noteworthy, as it states: "[Estrada] is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth."

Thank you for considering this nominee in light of the above information. This is an historic nomination, as Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. We urge you to vote to confirm him.

Sincerely,

/s/

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:

I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. FEC FEC Asked for New Guidance as Concerns About BCRA Limit State, Local Fund Raising Responding to complaints that the new federal campaign finance law has severely restricted national leaders' participation in state and local campaign fund-raising, a prominent Republican election lawyer has asked the Federal Election Commission to clarify the new law's limits on soliciting contributions.
Jan Baran of the firm Wiley Rein & Fielding sent a letter to the FEC Feb. 21 asking the commission to provide clear guidance about what the new law and regulations mean for federal officials who want to help raise money for state and local candidates. Specifically, Baran asked the FEC if federal officials can attend fund-raising events or participate in other fund-raising efforts to benefit non-federal candidates and, if so, what limits they face.
Baran sent the letter on behalf of U.S. House member Rep. Eric Cantor (R-Va.), two Virginia state legislators, and a county school board member. The letter explained that Virginia state and local officials face elections this year, and Cantor wants to know what he can do to help his Republican colleagues under the new federal law, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act.
Baran's letter requested a formal FEC advisory opinion on the questions it posed. Once the FEC accepts such a request for an advisory opinion, the six-member commission is legally required to consider the matter and issue a ruling within 60 days.

Hopes for Prompt FEC Ruling
"The new law allows federal candidates to help state and local candidates; however, it doesn't explain how they can do this," Baran said in a telephone interview with BNA Feb. 25. "My clients need clear, practical guidance from the FEC."
Baran indicated he was optimistic that the FEC would act expeditiously to accept the request for an advisory opinion and issue a ruling. An FEC spokesman said Feb. 25 that the request was still being evaluated. The commission sometimes asks for more information before accepting a request for a ruling. Baran said any such inquiries from the commission would be answered promptly.
Without FEC guidance about what types of activities are legal, federal officeholders now are simply unable to attend any events where contributions for state and local candidates are being raised, according to Baran. Officials do not want to go to such "soft money" events and face the prospect of being accused later of violating the new campaign finance law.
Such fears may be exacerbated by the fact that BCRA sharply increased potential penalties for campaign finance violations.

Among the key provisions of the new law were a ban on soft money contributions to the national political parties and restrictions on the solicitation of soft money by federal candidates, including incumbent officeholders. One provision of the law, however, specifically allows federal candidates to attend state and local party fund-raising events.

What Does 'Solicit' Mean?
The law also allows a federal candidate to raise money in connection with a non-federal election but says such funds must comply with federal "hard money" restrictions. Hard money must come in limited amounts only from individuals or FEC-regulated political committees, while soft money can come in unlimited amounts from corporations, unions, or wealthy individuals. BCRA stipulates that federal candidates, officeholders, or their agents must not "solicit, receive, direct, transfer, or spend funds" that do not comply with hard money limits.
But, Baran's letter suggests the law and FEC regulations adopted last year do not make it clear enough what it means for a lawmaker to "solicit" funds that may not be in compliance with hard money limits. The letter asks, for example, if a federal official merely may ask for money without specifying an amount. It also asks if the official could face legal jeopardy for attending an fund-raising event or having his or her name appear on a fund-raising letter if the effort results in contributions exceeding the hard money limits.
FEC regulations now in place define "to solicit" as "to ask," and the rules also state that the FEC will not delve into private conversations to try to determine whether a lawmaker intended to solicit a contribution. Baran's letter said the FEC regulatory provisions and explanatory text "provide a theoretical justification for regulation in this area based only upon actual words spoken or written by federal candidates or officeholders." However, the letter suggested the FEC must further clarify what it means for an official to "solicit" or "ask" for a contribution."

Baran: Fund-Raising Now Restricted
As a practical matter, federal officials and candidates now are limited to attending only hard-money fund-raisers and official state and local party events, such as the annual Jefferson-Jackson Day or Lincoln Day dinners held across the country, Baran said. He added that, as far as he knows, members of Congress are "simply refraining" from participating in other types of fund-raising efforts.
Baran said the FEC needs to tell federal officials whether they can participate in state and local fund raising and what restrictions they face. "All my clients want are clear answers," he said.
Restrictions on fund-raising solicitations proved to be one of the most controversial issues dealt with by the FEC when it considered regulations to implement BCRA. Last summer, the commission adopted a definition for "solicit" that even FEC General Counsel Lawrence Norton suggested was too narrow. The divided FEC commissioners adopted a proposal saying that "to solicit means to ask" for money. The provision dropped language saying that "to solicit" could include "to request or suggest or recommend" that someone make a contribution or donation.
Critics of the provision adopted by the FEC suggested it would make it too easy to avoid restrictions on directing soft money to a political party or other organization intending to influence national elections. A member of Congress, for example, could merely hint where the money should go, while saying that he or she is not "asking" for anything.
But, Republican FEC Commission Bradley Smith, who backed the definition adopted by the FEC, said at the time that concerns about the definition of "solicit"--as exemplified by news stories, editorials, and comments from campaign reform groups--amounted to hysteria. He said the substantive impact of the definition adopted by the FEC was small, adding that an ask "does not have to end with a question mark."

Noble Sees Opportunity for FEC

Larry Noble, executive director of the watchdog Center for Responsive Politics, said Baran's letter could provide an opportunity to for the FEC to settle some concerns that have roiled the political community since BCRA took effect late last year. Noble, a former FEC general counsel, said that, if and when the FEC accepts the letter as an official advisory opinion request, his group and others may provide formal comments to the commission stating where they think the lines ought to be drawn on the issues raised.

Noble noted that breaking a link between federal officials and unlimited soft money contributions was a central purpose of the campaign reform law enacted last year, which was sponsored in the Senate by Sens. John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Russell Feingold (D-Wis.).

"One of the key parts of the McCain-Feingold bill was the prohibition on federal candidates soliciting soft money," Noble told BNA. "But, by the same token, there is clearly room for state and local activity" under the new law, he said.

Noble criticized party officials who he said have been engaging in "scare tactics" since BCRA took effect by trying to create an impression that the new law will shut down legitimate state and local political activity. He said the new advisory opinion request could give the FEC a chance to confirm that state and local political activity can continue under the new law, while drawing "clear lines" telling federal officials what they can and cannot do in terms of helping to raise money. <<ole1.bmp>>

I'll call you later this morning. I am at my father-in-law's in McLean and am headed downtown shortly. Boyden Gray and I will be lobbying on the Hill today for money for ABA/CEELI's project in Prague. I am going to try and head out tomorrow. Spent some time yesterday with Dan Sutherland at Education. We gave our report to the Secretary on Title IX. I hear that the White House is uneasy over this.

David: Hope you are well. I am in town for the final meeting of the Title IX Commission. We meet with Secretary Paige today to give our final report. Tomorrow I will stick around to do some lobbying on the Hill with Boyden Gray. We are trying to get money for ABA/CEELI's institute in Prague. I picked up yesterday's Washington Post and read Walter Dellinger's op-ed piece on the Senate confirmation process for judges. I thought his proposal truly horrible; however, I agree that the current system is unacceptable. Last year when we were in the minority and I was lobbying Hill staffers on behalf of McConnell, I suggested to a number of them (Cohen with Leahy; Hoppe with Lott) that the Senate should amend its rules to allow the President a floor vote on a certain to-be-agreed upon number or type of nominees. For example, the Senate could determine that the President would be entitled to a floor vote - regardless of committee action - on nominees to the SCOTUS, federal courts of appeals, cabinet secretaries, etc. In this proposal, I differ from some who have argued that the Constitution entitles the President to such deference. They argue that the Federalist Papers implies such an understanding. In my view, Article I, section 5, clause 2 ("Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings. . .") governs, and I understand that clause to allow the Senate to determine how best to discharge its Advice and Consent duties. My proposal has been generally well received as a proposition of "good government", but has been met with skepticism by political realists who recognize that the political incentives are low for those who can take advantage of the status quo to advance their aims. The only way out of such an impasse would be to have the Senate amend its rules in this fashion to be effective following the next presidential election. That compromise would allow those who are satisfied with the status quo to play out their strategies for two more years. After that, it would enhance the power of the President. It would also make the nomination process an important part of the next presidential election. It seems to me that is a gamble worth taking. In my view, the Senate should allow a President to get a floor vote on his judicial nominees. If you would like, after the dust settles from the Estrada confirmation, I would be happy to run this idea by Seth Waxman, Walter Dellinger, Ab Mikva (the usual suspects) to see if they would sign off on an op-ed piece supporting this.

Need to find out (i) Clinton circuit noms who were nominated "of a state" different from the state of the judge being replaced and (ii) which state got the blue slips. We presume that the state of the nominee (and where he/she would sit) rather than of the judge being replaced received the blue slips, but wanted to make sure.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 27, 2003

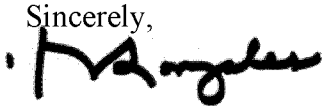
Dear Senator Frist, Senator Daschle, Senator Hatch, and Senator Leahy:

I write in connection with the nomination of Miguel Estrada. Some Democrat Senators have indicated that they would like to know more about Mr. Estrada's record before a vote occurs. As I stated in my letter of February 12 to Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy, we believe that the Senate has had sufficient time and possesses sufficient information to vote on Miguel Estrada. More important, a majority of Senators have indicated that they possess sufficient information and would vote to confirm him.

But if some Senators believe they must have more information before they will end the filibuster of this nomination, we respectfully suggest that there are three different and important sources of information that have been and remain available and that would appropriately accommodate the request for additional information. We ask that you encourage interested Senators to avail themselves of these sources as soon as possible.

First, as I have written to you previously, individual Senators who wish to meet with Miguel Estrada may and should do so immediately. We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to Senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character.

Second, Senators who have additional questions for Mr. Estrada should immediately pose such questions in writing to him. We propose that additional questions (in a reasonable number) be submitted in writing to Mr. Estrada by Friday, February 28. Mr. Estrada would endeavor to answer such questions in writing by Tuesday, March 4. He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before.



Third, Senators who wish to know more about Mr. Estrada's performance and approach when working in the United States Government -- and, in particular, how that relates to his possible future performance as a Circuit Judge -- should immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and Judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4. In particular, interested Senators could immediately send a joint letter to each of the following individuals for whom Mr. Estrada has worked in the United States Government: Judge Amalya Kearse, Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, former Solicitor General Ken Starr, former Solicitor General Drew Days, former Solicitor General Walter Dellinger, and former Solicitor General Seth Waxman. In our judgment, these men and women could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a Circuit Judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office. And their views could assist Senators who seek more information about Mr. Estrada.

We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee. We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information. And we respectfully ask that the Senate vote up or down as soon as possible on Mr. Estrada's nomination, which has been pending for nearly two years.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL LIU
Assistant Secretary
Public and Indian Housing
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development

BEFORE THE
UNITED STATES SENATE
COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

March 5, 2003

REV_00374419

INTRODUCTION

Chairman Campbell, Vice Chairman Inouye, and Members of the Committee, thank you for inviting me to provide comments on President Bush's fiscal year 2004 budget for HUD's Indian Housing and Community Development programs.

My name is Michael Liu, and I am the Assistant Secretary for Public and Indian Housing, Department of Housing and Urban Development. We are responsible for the management, operation and oversight of HUD's Native American programs. These programs are available to over 550 Federally-recognized, and a limited number of state-recognized Indian tribes. We serve these tribes directly, or through tribally designated housing entities (TDHE), by providing grants and loan guarantees designed to support affordable housing, community and economic development activities. Our tribal partners are diverse; they are located on Indian reservations, in Alaska Native Villages, in other traditional Indian areas, and most recently, on the Hawaiian Home Lands.

It is a pleasure to again appear before you, and I would like to express my appreciation for your continuing efforts to improve the housing conditions of American Indian, Alaska Native and native Hawaiian peoples. As you heard at last year's NAHASDA reauthorization hearing, much progress is being made and tribes are taking advantage of new opportunities to improve the housing conditions of the Native American families residing on Indian reservations, on trust or restricted Indian lands, and in Alaska Native Villages. This momentum needs to be sustained as we continue to work together toward creating a better living environment throughout Indian Country.

OVERVIEW

At the outset, let me reaffirm the Department of Housing and Urban Development's support for the principle of government-to-government relations with Indian tribes. HUD is committed to honoring this fundamental precept in our work with American Indians and Alaska Natives.

You may recall that when I testified before you last year, I was searching for a Deputy Assistant Secretary for Native American Programs. I am very pleased to report that the search is over. In early October 2002, Mr. Rodger Boyd joined my staff. An architect by training, he brings to the position a wealth of experience, most recently as CDFI Manager at the Department of Treasury, but also as an economic advisor to the President of the Navajo Nation, and as director of their Washington, DC office.

BUDGET SYNOPSIS

For Fiscal Year 2004, the President's budget for HUD proposes a total of $738.7 million, specifically for Native American and Native Hawaiian housing, community and economic development, and education programs. Of that amount, approximately $639 million is for direct formula allocations under the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act's (NAHASDA) Indian Housing Block Grant Program, $72.5 million is for grants under the Indian Community Development Block Grant Program, and $2 million is for the Native American Section 184 and Title VI loan guarantees. That loan authority will leverage an additional $31 million in loan guarantees for Section 184 and $8 million for Title VI.

The budget proposes $10 million for the Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program and $1 million for the Section 184(A) Native Hawaiian Home Loan Guarantee Fund, which will leverage approximately $40 million in loan guarantees.

The budget also proposes $5 million for training and technical assistance to support all the above programs.

The Department also requests $5.4 million to support American Indian, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian-oriented higher education institutions.

INDIAN HOUSING BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM (IHBG)

Adjustments within the Indian Housing Block Grant (IHBG) program account have been made to allow more funds to be available for direct tribal use. The FY 2004 budget includes $646.6 million for the IHBG program. This is the same as the FY 2003 request. As with last year's request, reducing set-asides will actually allow for an increase in grant dollars available to tribes. The decrease of $1 million from the Title VI set-aside goes directly into the IHBG formula fund.

HUD TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Training and Technical Assistance remains a critical component of the IHBG program. The Training and Technical Assistance set-aside has been increased to $5 million, which is $2 million more than last year's request. In the coming year ONAP is planning to provide additional training and technical assistance to assist tribes.

NAIHC TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

The President's Budget includes a $2.2 million set-aside from CDBG to continue the same level of support provided in last year's budget to the National American Indian Housing Council. No funds are provided under the IHBG training and technical assistance set-aside, as the Department wishes to encourage all qualified organizations, including those at the regional and local level, to seek to provide training and technical assistance.

TITLE VI TRIBAL HOUSING ACTIVITIES LOAN GUARANTEE FUND

The Title VI Tribal Housing Activities Loan Guarantee Fund (Title VI) is also a set-aside under the IHBG Program. There is a set-aside of $1 million to continue program activities. This budget recognizes that until the program is more fully subscribed, it is more effective to use available funds in the IHBG Program and allocate it by formula directly to IHBG grantees. There is sufficient carry-over of unused guarantee authority which, when combined with this year's budget request, will support anticipated future program needs. We intend to use some of the increase in the TA/Training to develop tribal capacity in the Title VI program.

WORKING CAPITAL FUND

The Department's request of $2.7 million for the Working Capital Fund will help provide information technology and data resources to support enhanced program assessments, performance measurements and accountability.

SECTION 184 INDIAN HOUSING LOAN GUARANTEE FUND

Two years ago, the Section 184 Indian Housing Loan Guarantee Fund received its first annual credit subsidy re-estimate, as required by the Credit Reform Act. The re-estimate resulted in a reduced subsidy rate, which tripled loan amounts available for guarantees while holding Budget Authority constant. The subsidy rate declined due in part to the low number of defaults. The $1 million requested in FY 2004 will provide an additional $38 million in loan guarantee authority.

INDIAN COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

The President's FY 2004 Budget request for the Indian Community Development Block Grant (ICDBG) Program is $72.5 million. This is identical to the FY 2003 request, and an increase of $1.5 million over the amount appropriated in FY 2003.

NATIVE HAWAIIAN HOUSING BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

For FY 2004, the Department is requesting $10 million for the Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program. This budget recognizes the unique housing needs of native Hawaiian families eligible to reside on the Hawaiian Home Lands, and the Department is now beginning to meet those needs. A further acknowledgement of the unique status of native Hawaiians is the establishment of a separate program account for the Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program. An interim regulation implementing the new Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program was published in the Federal Register on June 13, 2002. This action allowed us to distribute funds and implement the program while public comments are being considered and incorporated into the final regulations.

SECTION 184A NATIVE HAWAIIAN HOUSING LOAN GUARANTEE FUND

The budget requests that $1 million be allocated to the Section 184A Native Hawaiian Housing Loan Guarantee Fund. At that level of funding this new loan guarantee program, modeled after the Section 184 Program, will provide up to $40 million in loan guarantee authority to guarantee market-rate mortgage loans and similar projects to eligible entities, including the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands (DHHL), non-profit organizations and income-eligible Native Hawaiian families who choose to reside on the Hawaiian Home Lands. The DHHL, a State agency, is the primary program partner. DHHL is the agency responsible for allocation of leasehold interests on the Hawaiian Home Lands. Until direct-endorsement lenders are approved, the ONAP National

Programs Office will work closely with DHHL qualified program partners and individual borrowers to review, underwrite and issue guarantee certificates for all loans.

TRIBAL COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES AND ALASKA NATIVE AND NATIVE HAWAIIAN SERVING INSTITUTIONS

The President's budget request includes, under the Community Development Fund, $3 million for competitive grants to tribal colleges and universities to provide resources to build, expand, renovate and equip their facilities, and $2.4 million to assist Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian serving institutions, as they are defined under the Higher Education Act, as amended.

FUNDING PIPELINE AND PRODUCTION OF UNITS

As of September 30, 2002, it has been reported that the expenditure rate for the Indian Housing Block Grant Program from FY'98 through FY'01 is 63% or $1.5 billion. This leaves an unexpended rate of 37% or $885.6 million. I would note that grant recipients have 2 years from the initial awarding of the grant to obligate 90% of the grant. As of September 30, 2002 grant recipients have reported through ONAP that new construction starts that have been completed were 6,219 including rental and homeownership units, with an additional 3,720 units under construction. Funds have also been used to complete the rehabilitation of 14,226 existing housing units including rental and homeownership units, with an additional 1,654 under construction. Combining all of the production numbers reported for the first four years of funding for the IHBG program there have been 25,819 new and rehabilitated housing units constructed through September 30, 2002. Regarding the unexpended rate of 37%, ONAP over the past several months has been in the process of developing the baseline data to determine the level and extent of obligated and unobligated funds by tribe. This information will also allow ONAP to identify related issues that may be confronting tribes, and enable ONAP to become more proactive in assisting these tribes in their construction efforts.

CONCLUSION

Finally, let me state for the record that the President's budget request for HUD's Indian housing, community development and education programs supports the progress being made by tribes in providing housing and housing-related activities in Indian Country.

This concludes my prepared remarks. I would be happy to answer any questions you may have.

Senator won't pursue U.S. attorney job

Sen. Charles Larson Jr. of Cedar Rapids said Thursday he would not pursue an appointment to be U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Iowa.

Last week, U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley said Larson had approached him about the job, now held by Steve Colloton. Colloton has been nominated to a judgeship on the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. Larson, 34, is a lawyer and state Republican Party chairman.

"My priorities are re-electing our president and Senator Grassley, and representing the people of District 19 in the Iowa Senate," Larson said.

A New Move on Estrada
The White House challenges Democrats to put up or shut up.

n perhaps its most forceful effort yet to break the stalemate over the appeals-court nomination of Miguel Estrada, the White House has now invited every member of the Senate who has doubts about Estrada's legal views to submit written questions to Estrada by the close of business Friday. In a letter delivered Thursday to all 100 senators, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales said Estrada will respond by next Tuesday.

"He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before," Gonzales wrote.
Gonzales also renewed a White House offer to set up personal meetings between Estrada and any senator who wants to have a one-on-one talk. "We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character," Gonzales wrote.
Finally, Gonzales asked that Democrats with questions about Estrada's work "immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4." Gonzales specifically named appeals-court judge Amalya Kearse, Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, and former Solicitors General Ken Starr, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman.
The last three names * Days, Dellinger, and Waxman * are particularly significant. All were high-ranking appointees of President Clinton, and their inclusion on the list suggests that the White House is confident they will not voice any objections to Estrada.
In addition, all three have seen at least some, if not all, of the internal memos Estrada wrote while working in the Solicitor General's office. In recent weeks, Democrats have argued that the memos might reveal some heretofore unknown aspect of Estrada's legal views, and thus must be made public before Estrada is confirmed. The White House has refused, calling the documents "highly privileged" * a position endorsed by all seven living former Solicitors General.

In his letter, Gonzales wrote that the former officials "could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a circuit judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office."

"We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee," Gonzales concluded. "We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information."

The letter is the White House's clearest move yet to call the bluff of Democrats who have been demanding more information on Estrada before they will allow a vote on his nomination. In the letter, the administration is saying to Democrats: You want more information, you can ask for more information.

What is not stated, however, is that the letter will give the White House a powerful argument against any Democrats who oppose Estrada and do not ask for more information. You said you wanted more information, the administration will be able to argue, and yet when we offered it you didn't even bother to ask.

still made no decision on whether or when to call for a vote to cut off debate and force an up-or-down vote on the nomination. At the moment, Republicans, who have all 51 of their own votes plus four Democrats, would fall five votes short of the 60 needed to cut off debate. But Republicans believe they are making progress and that the filibuster is beginning to take a political toll on moderate Democrats who are so far supporting the filibuster. Thus, the talking will continue. "We are on this next week," one Republican says. "We're committed to it."

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 27, 2003

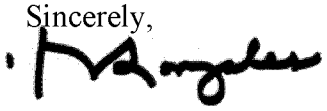
Dear Senator Frist, Senator Daschle, Senator Hatch, and Senator Leahy:

I write in connection with the nomination of Miguel Estrada. Some Democrat Senators have indicated that they would like to know more about Mr. Estrada's record before a vote occurs. As I stated in my letter of February 12 to Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy, we believe that the Senate has had sufficient time and possesses sufficient information to vote on Miguel Estrada. More important, a majority of Senators have indicated that they possess sufficient information and would vote to confirm him.

But if some Senators believe they must have more information before they will end the filibuster of this nomination, we respectfully suggest that there are three different and important sources of information that have been and remain available and that would appropriately accommodate the request for additional information. We ask that you encourage interested Senators to avail themselves of these sources as soon as possible.

First, as I have written to you previously, individual Senators who wish to meet with Miguel Estrada may and should do so immediately. We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to Senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character.

Second, Senators who have additional questions for Mr. Estrada should immediately pose such questions in writing to him. We propose that additional questions (in a reasonable number) be submitted in writing to Mr. Estrada by Friday, February 28. Mr. Estrada would endeavor to answer such questions in writing by Tuesday, March 4. He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before.



Third, Senators who wish to know more about Mr. Estrada's performance and approach when working in the United States Government -- and, in particular, how that relates to his possible future performance as a Circuit Judge -- should immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and Judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4. In particular, interested Senators could immediately send a joint letter to each of the following individuals for whom Mr. Estrada has worked in the United States Government: Judge Amalya Kearse, Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, former Solicitor General Ken Starr, former Solicitor General Drew Days, former Solicitor General Walter Dellinger, and former Solicitor General Seth Waxman. In our judgment, these men and women could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a Circuit Judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office. And their views could assist Senators who seek more information about Mr. Estrada.

We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee. We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information. And we respectfully ask that the Senate vote up or down as soon as possible on Mr. Estrada's nomination, which has been pending for nearly two years.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 24, 2003

Dear Senator Schumer:

Based on your public comments yesterday, I am concerned that you may have inaccurate and incomplete information about Miguel Estrada's qualifications and about the historical practice with respect to judicial confirmations. Therefore, I write to respectfully reiterate and explain our conclusion that you and certain other Senators are applying an unfair double standard -- indeed, a series of unfair double standards -- to Miguel Estrada.

First, your request for confidential attorney-client memoranda Mr. Estrada wrote in the Office of Solicitor General seeks information that, based on our review, has not been demanded from past nominees to the federal courts of appeals. We are informed that the Senate has not requested memoranda such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department -- including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office. Nor have such memoranda been demanded from nominees in similar attorney-client situations: The Senate has not demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as Senate lawyers, such as memoranda written by Stephen Breyer as a Senate counsel before Justice Breyer was confirmed to the First Circuit in 1980. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had served as law clerks to Supreme Court Justices or other federal or state judges. Nor has the Senate demanded confidential memoranda written by judicial nominees who had worked for private clients.

The very few isolated examples you have cited were not nominees for federal appeals courts. Moreover, those situations involved Executive Branch accommodations of targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues that were primarily related to allegations of malfeasance or misconduct in a federal office. We respectfully do not believe these examples support your request. Our conclusion about the general lack of support and precedent for your position is buttressed by the fact that every living former Solicitor General (four Democrats and three Republicans) has strongly opposed your request and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. In short, the traditional practice of the Senate and the Executive Branch with respect to federal appeals court nominations stands in contrast to your request here and supports our conclusion that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. (Also, contrary to your suggestion yesterday, please note that no one in the Executive Branch has reviewed these memoranda since President Bush took office in January 2001.)

Second, you suggested that "no judicial nominee that I'm aware of, for such a high court, has ever had so little of a record." I respectfully disagree. Miguel Estrada has been a very accomplished lawyer, trying cases before federal juries, briefing and arguing numerous appeals before federal and state appeals courts, and arguing 15 cases before the Supreme Court, among his other significant work. His record and breadth of experience exceeds that of many judicial nominees, which is no doubt why the American Bar Association -- which you have labeled the

"gold standard" -- unanimously rated him "well-qualified." In noting yesterday that Mr. Estrada's career had been devoted to "arguing for a client," you appeared to imply that only those with prior judicial service (or perhaps "a lot of [law review] articles") may serve on the federal appeals courts. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial service at the time of their appointments. Indeed, Supreme Court Justices Rehnquist, White, and Powell -- to name three of the most recent -- had not served as judges before being confirmed to the Supreme Court. And like Mr. Estrada, two appointees of President Clinton to the D.C. Circuit (Judge David Tatel and Judge Merrick Garland) had similarly spent their careers "arguing for a client," but were nonetheless confirmed.

As the Chief Justice noted in his 2001 Year-End Report, moreover, "[t]he federal Judiciary has traditionally drawn from a wide diversity of professional backgrounds." The Chief Justice cited Justice Louis Brandeis, Justice John Harlan, Justice Byron White, Judge Thurgood Marshall (as nominee to the Second Circuit), Judge Learned Hand, and Judge John Minor Wisdom as just a few examples of great judges who had spent virtually their entire careers "arguing for a client" before becoming Supreme Court Justices or federal appeals court judges. As these examples show, had the "arguing for a client" standard been applied in the past, it would have deprived the American people of many of our most notable appellate judges. Based on our understanding, this standard has not been applied in the past. This further explains why we have concluded that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

Third, you stated that "when you went to those hearings, Mr. Estrada answered no questions." The record demonstrates otherwise. Mr. Estrada answered more than 100 questions at his hearing (and another 25 in follow-up written answers). He explained in some detail his approach to judging on many issues, and did so appropriately without providing his personal views on specific legal or policy questions that could come before him – which is how previous judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have appropriately answered questions. Indeed, at his hearing, Mr. Estrada was asked and answered more questions, and did so more fully, than did President Clinton's appointees to this same court. Judge David Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Judith Rogers and Merrick Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions. The three appointees of President Clinton – combined – thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, like Mr. Estrada, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions at the hearing. Judge Rogers refused to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Mr. Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty, stating that he would follow precedent. In short, we believe that your criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing reveals that another unfair double standard is being applied to Mr. Estrada.

Fourth, you stated that the Founding Fathers "came to the conclusion that the Senate ought to ask a whole lot of questions" of judicial nominees. We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate should make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. But your characterization of the Senate's role with respect to judicial nominations is not consistent with our reading of historical or traditional practice. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." The Federalist 76. The Framers anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." Id. Moreover, the Senate did not hold hearings on judicial nominees for much of American history, and the hearings for lower-court nominees in modern times traditionally have not included the examination of personal views that you have advocated. (My letter of February 12, 2003, to Senators Daschle and Leahy contains more detail on this point.) Indeed, just a few years ago, Senator Biden made clear, consistent with the traditional practice, that he would vote to confirm an appeals court judge if he were convinced that the nominee would follow precedent and otherwise was of high ability and integrity.

In short, it appears that you are seeking to change the Senate's traditional standard for assessing judicial nominees. We respect your right to advocate a change, but we do not believe that the standard you seek to apply is consistent with the Framers' vision, the traditional Senate practice, or the Senate's treatment of President Clinton's nominees. Rather, we believe a new standard is being devised and applied to Miguel Estrada.

Fifth, you stated yesterday that a "filibuster" is not an appropriate term to describe what has been occurring in the Senate. We respectfully disagree. Democrat Senators have objected to unanimous consent motions to schedule a vote, and they have indicated that they will continue to do so. That tactic is historically and commonly known as a filibuster, and is a dramatic escalation of the tactics used to oppose judicial nominees. Indeed, in 1998, Senator Leahy stated: "I have stated over and over again on this floor that I would refuse to put an anonymous hold on any judge; that I would object and fight against any filibuster on a judge, whether it is somebody I opposed or supported; that I felt the Senate should do its duty. If we don't like somebody the President nominates, vote him or her down. But don't hold them in this anonymous unconscionable limbo, because in doing that, the minority of Senators really shame all Senators." 144 Cong. Rec. S6522 (June 18, 1998). In our judgment, the tactics now being employed again show that Miguel Estrada is receiving differential treatment.

Sincerely,

/s/

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 12, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy:

On behalf of President Bush, I write in response to your letter to the President dated February 11, 2003. In the letter, you renew your previous request for confidential Department of Justice memoranda in which Mr. Estrada provided appeal, certiorari, and amicus recommendations while he was a career attorney in the Office of Solicitor General for four years in the Clinton Administration and one year in the George H.W. Bush Administration. You also request that Mr. Estrada answer certain questions beyond the extensive questions that he already answered appropriately and forthrightly during his Committee hearing and in follow-up written responses.

We respect the Senate's constitutional role in the confirmation process, and we agree that the Senate must make an informed judgment consistent with its traditional role and practices. However, your requests have no persuasive support in the history and precedent of judicial appointments. Indeed, the relevant history and precedent convincingly demonstrate that a new and shifting standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada.

First, as the Department of Justice explained in its letters of June 5, 2002, October 8, 2002, and January 23, 2003, all living former Solicitors General (four Democrats and three Republicans) have strongly opposed your request for Solicitor General memoranda and stated that it would sacrifice and compromise the ability of the Justice Department to effectively represent the United States in court. Even more telling, we are informed that the Senate has not requested memos such as these for any of the 67 appeals court nominees since 1977 who had previously worked in the Justice Department (including the seven nominees who had previously worked in the Solicitor General's office). The few isolated examples you have cited – in which targeted requests for particular documents about specific issues were accommodated for nominees to positions other than the U.S. Courts of Appeals – similarly do not support your request here.

Second, as explained more fully below with respect to your request that Mr. Estrada answer additional questions, the only specific question identified in your letter refers to his judicial role models. You claim that Mr. Estrada refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in his written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject that Mr. Estrada submitted three months ago, he cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires (he clerked for Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse), and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question." Your letter to the President ignores Mr. Estrada's answer to this question. In any event, beyond this one query, your letter does not pose any additional questions to him. Additionally, neither of you has posed any written questions to Mr. Estrada in the more than three months since his all-day Committee hearing. Since the hearing, Mr. Estrada also has met (and continues to meet) with numerous Democrat Senators interested in learning more about his record. Finally, as I will

When asked by Senator Edwards about judicial review, Mr. Estrada explained: "Courts take the laws that have been passed by you and give you the benefit of understanding that you take the same oath that they do to uphold the Constitution, and therefore they take the laws with the presumption that they are constitutional. It is the affirmative burden of the plaintiff to show that you have gone beyond your oath. If they come into court, then it is appropriate for courts to undertake to listen to the legal arguments – why it is that the legislature went beyond [its] role as a legislat[ure] and invaded the Constitution."

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Edwards that there are 200 years of Supreme Court precedent and that it is not the case that "the appropriate conduct for courts is to be guided solely by the bare text of the Constitution because that is not the legal system that we have."

When asked by Senator Edwards whether he was a strict constructionist, Mr. Estrada replied that he was "a fair constructionist" – meaning that "I don't think that it should be the goal of courts to be strict or lax. The goal of courts is to get it right. . . . It is not necessarily the case in my mind that, for example, all parts of the Constitution are suitable for the same type of interpretative analysis. . . . [T]he Constitution says, for example, that you must be 35 years old to be our chief executive. . . . There are areas of the Constitution that are more open-ended. And you adverted to one, like the substantive component of the due process clauses, where there are other methods of interpretation that are not quite so obvious that the court has brought to bear to try to bring forth what the appropriate answer should be."

In response to Senator Leahy, Mr. Estrada described the most important attributes of a judge: "The most important quality for a judge, in my view Senator Leahy, is to have an appropriate process for decisionmaking. That entails having an open mind. It entails listening to the parties, reading their briefs, going back beyond those briefs and doing all of the legwork needed to ascertain who is right in his or her claims as to what the law says and what the facts [are]. In a court of appeals court, where judges sit in panels of three, it is important to engage in deliberation and give ear to the views of colleagues who may have come to different conclusions. And in sum, to be committed to judging as a process that is intended to give us the right answer, not to a result. And I can give you my level best solemn assurance that I firmly think I do have those qualities or else I would not have accepted the nomination."

In response to Senator Durbin, Miguel Estrada stated that "the Constitution, like other legal texts, should be construed reasonably and fairly, to give effect to all that its text contains."

Mr. Estrada indicated to Senator Durbin that he admired the judges for whom he clerked, Justice Kennedy and Judge Kearse, as well as Justice Lewis Powell.

Mr. Estrada stated to Senator Durbin that "I can absolutely assure the Committee that I will follow binding Supreme Court precedent until and unless such precedent has been displaced by subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court itself."

In response to Senator Grassley, Mr. Estrada stated: "When facing a problems for which there is a not a decisive precedent from a higher court, my cardinal rule would be to seize aid from anyplace where I could get it. Depending on the nature of the problem, that would include related case law in other areas that higher courts had dealt with that had had some insights to teach with respect to the problem at hand. It could include the history of the enactment, including in the case of a statute legislative history. It could include the custom and practice under any predecessor statute or document. It could include the views of academics to the extent that they purport to analyze what the law is instead of – instead of prescribing what it should be. And in sum, as Chief Justice Marshall once said, to attempt not to overlook anything from which aid might be derived."

In response to Senator Sessions, Estrada stated: "I am very firmly of the view that although we all have views on a number of subjects from A to Z, the first duty of a judge is to self-consciously put that aside and look at each case by starting withholding judgment with an open mind and listen to the parties. So I think that the job of a judge is to put all of that aside, and to the best of his human capacity to give a judgment based solely on the arguments and the law."

In response to Senator Sessions, Mr. Estrada stated that "I will follow binding case law in every case. . . . I may have a personal, moral, philosophical view on the subject matter. But I undertake to you that I would put all that aside and decide cases in accordance with binding case law and even in accordance with the case law that is not binding but seems constructive on the area, without any influence whatsoever from any personal view I may have about the subject matter."

Miranda/Stare Decisis

Mr. Estrada stated that United States v. Dickerson – a case raising the question whether Miranda should be overruled – reflected a "reasonable application of the doctrine of stare decisis. In my view, it is rarely appropriate for the Supreme Court to overturn one of its own precedents."

Affirmative Action

With respect to affirmative action, Mr. Estrada responded to Senator Kennedy that "any policy views I might have as a private citizen on the subject of affirmative action would not enter into how I would approach any case that comes before me as a judge. Under controlling Supreme Court authority, particularly Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995), if a government program creates a racial classification, it will be subject to strict scrutiny. Whether the program survives that sort of scrutiny will often involve a highly contextual and fact-specific inquiry into the nature of the justifications asserted by the government and the fit between those justifications and the classification at issue. Adarand and similar cases provide the framework that I would be required to apply, and would apply, in considering these issues as a judge."

Asked by Senator Leahy about the strict scrutiny test, Mr. Estrada replied, "the Supreme Court in the Adarand case stated, as a general rule, that the consideration of race is subject to strict scrutiny. That means that though it may be used in some cases, it has to be justified by a compelling state interest. And with respect to the particular context, there must be a fairly fact-bound individual assessment of the fit between the interest that is being asserted and the category being used. That is just another way of saying that it is a very fact-intensive analysis in the context of a specific program and in the context of the justifications that are being offered in support of the program."

Congressional Authority

With respect to the outer limits of Congress' power to confer authority on other governmental bodies, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that the Supreme Court has said that "particular factual context is significant in analyzing the appropriateness of a particular delegation. . . . Of course, the fact that the Supreme Court only rarely has struck down statutes on this ground suggests that the Court has been quite deferential to congressional judgments about the types of delegations that reasonably might be needed to carry on the business of government."

When Senator Kohl asked Mr. Estrada about the 1995 Lopez case concerning the scope of Congress' power to regulate, Mr. Estrada pointed out that he had argued in a companion case "for a very expansive view of the power to Congress to pass statutes under the Commerce Clause and have them be upheld by the court. . . . Lopez has given us guidance on when it is appropriate for the court to exercise the commerce power. It is binding law and I would follow it."

Ethnicity

With respect to the fact that the President had noted Miguel's ethnicity, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy: "The President is the leader of a large and diverse country, and it is accordingly appropriate for him, in exercising his constitutional nomination and appointment powers, to select qualified individuals who reflect the breadth and diversity of our Nation."

With respect to the Democrat Congressional Hispanic Caucus's criticism of him, Miguel responded to Senator Kennedy that "I strongly disagree, however, with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus' view that I lack an understanding of the role and importance of courts in protecting the legal rights of minorities, of the values and mores of Latino culture, or the significance of role models for minority communities."

Racial Discrimination

With respect to race discrimination, Mr. Estrada stated in response to Senator Kennedy: "I take a backseat to no one in my abhorrence of race discrimination in law enforcement or anything else."

Senator Feingold asked Mr. Estrada whether he believed that racial profiling and racially motivated law enforcement misconduct are problems in this country today. Mr. Estrada replied, "I am – I will once again emphasize I'm unalterably opposed to any sort of race discrimination in law enforcement, Senator, whether it's called racial profiling or anything else. . . . I know full well that we have real problems with discrimination in our day and age."

Senator Leahy asked Mr. Estrada about whether statistical evidence of discriminatory impact is relevant in establishing discrimination. Mr. Estrada replied: "I am not a specialist in this area of the law, Senator Leahy, but I am aware that there is a line of cases, beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Griggs, that suggests that in appropriate cases that [such evidence] may be appropriate. . . . I do understand that there is a major area of law that deals with how you prove and try disparate-impact cases."

Congressional Authority to Regulate Firearms

Senator Feinstein asked whether Congress may legislate in the area of dangerous firearms, and Mr. Estrada responded that the Supreme Court had ruled that "if the government were to prove that the firearm had at any time in its lifetime been in interstate commerce even if that had nothing to do with the crime at issue, that that would be an adequate basis for the exercise of Congress' power."

Right to Counsel

Senator Edwards asked about Gideon v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court case guaranteeing the right to counsel for poor defendants who could not afford counsel. Although Senator Edwards appeared to question the reasoning in that landmark case, Mr. Estrada responded that "I frankly have always taken it as a given that that's – the ruling in the case."

C. Answers by President Clinton's Nominees

Your criticism of Miguel Estrada's testimony creates a double standard. You did not require nominees of President Clinton to answer questions of this sort (keeping in mind that you have not identified what your additional questions to Mr. Estrada are). President Clinton's appeals court nominees routinely testified without discussing their views of specific issues or cases. A few select examples, including of several nominees who had no prior judicial experience, illustrate the point. (Please note that these are isolated examples; there are many more we can provide if necessary.)

Merrick Garland (no prior judicial experience). In the nomination of Merrick Garland to the D.C. Circuit, Senator Specter asked him: "Do you favor, as a personal matter, capital punishment?" Judge Garland replied only that he would follow Supreme Court precedent: "This is really a matter of settled law now. The Court has held that capital punishment is constitutional and lower courts are to follow that rule." Senator Specter also asked him about his views of the independent counsel statute's constitutionality, and Judge Garland responded: "Well, that, too, the Supreme Court in Morrison v. Olson upheld as constitutional, and, of course, I would follow that ruling." Judge Garland did not provide his personal view of either subject.

Judith Rogers. In the hearing on Judge Judith Rogers' nomination to the D.C. Circuit, Judge Rogers was asked by Senator Cohen about the debate over an evolving Constitution. Judge Rogers responded: "My obligation as an appellate judge is to apply precedent. Some of the debates which I have heard and to which I think you may be alluding are interesting, but as an appellate judge, my obligation is to apply precedent. And so the interpretations of the Constitution by the U.S. Supreme Court would be binding on me." She then was asked how she would rule in the absence of precedent and responded: "When I was taking my master's in judicial process at the University of Virginia Law School, one of the points emphasized was the growth of our common law system based on the English common law judge system. And my opinions, I think if you look at them, reflect that where I am presented with a question of first impression, that I look to the language of whatever provision we are addressing, that I look to whatever debates are available, that I look to the interpretations by other Federal courts, that I look to the interpretations of other State courts, and it may be necessary, as well, to look at the interpretations suggested by commentators. And within that framework, which I consider to be a discipline, that I would reach a view in a case of first impression." Finally, Judge Rogers was asked her view of the three-strikes law and stated: "As an appellate judge, my obligation is to enforce the laws that Congress passes or, where I am now, that the District of Columbia Council passes." Judge Rogers did not provide her personal view of these subjects.

Marsha Berzon (no prior judicial experience). Senator Smith asked her views on Roe v. Wade and whether "an unborn child is a human being." Judge Berzon stated: "[M]y role as a judge is not to further anything that I personally believe or don't believe, and I think that is the strength of our system and the strength of our appellate system. The Supreme Court has been quite definitive quite recently about the applicable standard, and I absolutely pledge to you that I will follow that standard as it exists now, and if it is changed, I will follow that standard. And my personal views in this area, as in any other, will have absolutely no effect." When Senator Smith probed about their personal views on abortion and Roe v. Wade, Chairman Hatch interrupted: "I don't know how they can say much more than that at this point in this meeting."

Richard Tallman (no prior judicial experience). In response to written questions, Judge Tallman explained that "[j]udicial nominees are limited by judicial ethical considerations from answering any question in a manner that would call for an 'advisory opinion' as the courts have defined it or that in effect ask a nominee to suggest how he or she would rule on an issue that could foreseeably require his or her attention in a future case or controversy after confirmation." He was asked how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson. He stated: "It is entirely conjectural as to what I would have done without having the opportunity to thoroughly review the record presented on appeal, the briefs and arguments of counsel, and supporting legal authorities that were applicable at that time." He gave the same response when asked how he would have ruled on Roe v. Wade. When asked his personal view on abortion, he wrote: "I hold no personal views that would prevent me from doing my judicial duty to follow the precedent set down by the Supreme Court." He gave the same answer about the death penalty.

Kim Wardlaw. In the hearing on Judge Kim Wardlaw's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Judge Wardlaw was asked about the constitutionality of affirmative action. She stated (in an answer similar to Miguel Estrada's answer to the same question): "The Supreme Court has held that racial classifications are unconstitutional unless they are narrowly tailored to meet a compelling governmental interest."

Maryanne Trump Barry. In the hearing on Judge Maryanne Trump Barry's nomination to the Third Circuit, Senator Smith asked for her personal opinion on whether "an unborn child at any stage of the pregnancy is a human being." Judge Barry responded: "Casey is the law that I would look at. If I had a personal opinion – and I am not suggesting that I do – it is irrelevant because I must look to the law which binds me."

Raymond Fisher. In the hearing on Judge Raymond Fisher's nomination to the Ninth Circuit, Senator Sessions asked Judge Fisher's own personal views on whether the death penalty was constitutional. Judge Fisher responded that "My view, Senator, is that, as you indicated, the Supreme Court has ruled that the death penalty is constitutional. As a lower appellate court judge, that is the law that I am governed by. I don't want in my judicial career, should I be fortunate enough to have one, to inject my personal opinions into whether or not I follow the law. I believe that the precedent of the Supreme Court is binding and that is what my function is."

V. Conclusion

Miguel Estrada is a well-qualified and well-respected judicial nominee who has very strong bipartisan support. Based on our reading of history, we believe that you have ample information about this nominee and have had more than enough time to consider questions about his qualifications and suitability. We urge you to stop the unfair treatment, end the filibuster, allow an up-or-down vote, and vote to confirm Mr. Estrada.

Sincerely,

explain below, Mr. Estrada forthrightly answered numerous questions about his judicial approach and views in a manner that matches or greatly exceeds answers demanded of previous appeals court nominees.

With respect, it appears that a double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada. That is highly unfair and inappropriate, particularly for this well-qualified and well-respected nominee.

I will turn now in more detail to the various issues raised by your letter. I will address them at some length given the importance of this issue and the nature of your requests.

I. Miguel Estrada's Qualifications and Bipartisan Support

Miguel Estrada is an extraordinarily qualified judicial nominee. The American Bar Association, which Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. The ABA rating was entirely appropriate in light of Mr. Estrada's superb record as Assistant to the Solicitor General in the Clinton and George H.W. Bush Administrations, as a federal prosecutor in New York, as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and in performing significant pro bono work.

Some who are misinformed have seized on Mr. Estrada's lack of prior judicial experience, but five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no prior judicial experience, including two appointees of President Clinton and one appointee of President Carter. Miguel Estrada has tried numerous cases before federal juries, argued many cases in the federal appeals courts, and argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. That is a record that few judicial nominees can match. And few lawyers, whatever their ideology or philosophy, have volunteered to represent a death row inmate pro bono before the Supreme Court as did Miguel Estrada.

Mr. Estrada's excellent legal qualifications are all the more extraordinary given his personal history. Simply put, Miguel Estrada is an American success story. He came to this country at age 17 from Honduras speaking little English. Through hard work and dedicated service to the United States, Miguel Estrada has risen to the very pinnacle of the legal profession. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic judge to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Given his record, his background, and his integrity, it is no surprise that Miguel Estrada is strongly supported by the vast majority of national Hispanic organizations. The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), for example, wrote to Senator Leahy to urge Mr. Estrada's confirmation and explain that he "is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth." A group of 19 Hispanic organizations, including LULAC and the Hispanic National Bar Association, recently wrote to the Senate urging "on behalf of an overwhelming majority of Hispanics in this country" that "both parties in the U.S. Senate . . . put partisan politics aside so that Hispanics are no longer denied representation in one of the most prestigious courts in the land."

The current effort to filibuster Mr. Estrada's nomination is particularly unjustified given that those who have worked with Miguel -- including prominent Democrat lawyers whom you know well -- strongly support his confirmation. For example, Ron Klain, who served as a high-ranking adviser to former Vice President Gore and former Chief Counsel to the Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote: "Miguel is a person of outstanding character, tremendous intellect, and with a deep commitment to the faithful application of precedent. . . . [T]he challenges that he has overcome in his life have made him genuinely compassionate, genuinely concerned for others, and genuinely devoted to helping those in need."

President Clinton's Solicitor General, Seth Waxman, wrote: "During the time Mr. Estrada and I worked together, he was a model of professionalism and competence. . . . In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the analyses he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected any consideration other than the long-term interests of the United States. I have great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity."

A bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues in the Office of the Solicitor General at the U.S. Department of Justice wrote: "We hold varying ideological views and affiliations that range across the political spectrum, but we are unanimous in our conviction that Miguel would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with the applicable legal principles and precedents, not on the basis of personal preferences or political viewpoints." One former colleague, Richard Seamon, wrote that he is a pro-choice, lifelong Democrat with self-described "liberal views on most issues" who said he would "consider it a disgrace" if Mr. Estrada is not confirmed.

Similarly, Leonard Joy, head of the Federal Defender Division of the Legal Aid Society of New York, wrote that "Miguel would make an excellent Circuit Court Judge. He is as fine a lawyer as I have met and, on top of all his intellectual abilities and judgment he would bring to bear, he would bring a desirable diversity to the Court. I heartily recommend him."

Beyond the extensive personal testimony from those who worked side-by-side with him for many years, the performance reviews of Miguel for the years that he worked in the Office of Solicitor General gave him the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. The reviews stated that Miguel:

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."

REV_00374595

In the two years that Miguel Estrada and Paul Bender worked together, Mr. Bender signed those reviews. These employment reviews thus call into serious question some press reports containing a negative comment from Mr. Bender about Mr. Estrada's temperament (which is the only negative comment made by anyone who actually knows Mr. Estrada). Just as important, President Clinton's Solicitor General Seth Waxman expressly refuted Mr. Bender's statement.

In sum, based on his experience, his intellect, his integrity, and his bipartisan support, Miguel Estrada should be confirmed promptly.

II. The Senate's Role

President Bush nominated Miguel Estrada nearly two years ago on May 9, 2001. As explained above, he is well-qualified and well-respected. By any traditional measure that the Senate has used to evaluate appeals court nominees, Miguel Estrada should have been confirmed long ago. Your letter and public statements indicate, however, that you are applying both a new standard and new tactics to this particular nominee.

As to the standard, the Senate has a very important role in the process, but the Senate's traditional approach to appeals court nominees, and the approach envisioned by the Constitution's Framers, is far different from the standard that you now seek to apply. Senator Biden stated the traditional approach in 1997: "Any person who is nominated for the district or circuit court who, in fact, any Senator believes will be a person of their word and follow stare decisis, it does not matter to me what their ideology is, as long as they are in a position where they are in the general mainstream of American political life, and they have not committed crimes of moral turpitude, and have not, in fact, acted in a way that would shed a negative light on the court." Congressional Record, March 19, 1997. Alexander Hamilton explained that the purpose of Senate confirmation is to prevent appointment of "unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity." Federalist No. 76. It was anticipated that the Senate's approval would not often be refused unless there were "special and strong reasons for the refusal." No. 76.

As to tactics, you have indicated that some Senate Democrats intend to filibuster to prevent a vote on this nominee. As you know, there has never been a successful filibuster of a court of appeals nominee. Only a few years ago, Senator Leahy and other Democrat Senators expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee was entitled to an up-or-down floor vote within a reasonable time. On October 3, 2000, for example, Senator Leahy stated:

> Governor Bush and I, while we disagree on some issues, have one very significant issue on which we agree. He gave a speech a while back and criticized what has happened in the Senate where confirmations are held up not because somebody votes down a nominee but because they cannot ever get a vote. Governor Bush said: You have the nominee. Hold the hearing. Then, within 60 days, vote them up or vote them down. Don't leave them in limbo. Frankly, that is what we are paid to do in this body. We are paid to vote either yes or no – not vote maybe. When we hold a nominee up by not allowing them a vote and not taking any action one way or the other, we are not only voting 'maybe,' but we are doing a terrible disservice to the man or woman to whom we do this.

Senator Daschle similarly stated on October 5, 1999, that "[t]he Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down. An up or down vote, that is all we seek for Berzon and Paez. And after years of waiting, they deserve at least that much."

In his East Room speech of October 30, 2002, President Bush reiterated that every judicial nominee deserves a timely up-or-down floor vote in the Senate, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. Contrary to President Bush's attempts at permanent reform to bring order to the process, your current effort to employ a filibuster and block an up-or-down vote on the Estrada nomination may significantly exacerbate the cycle of bitterness and recrimination that President Bush has sought to resolve on a bipartisan basis. We fear that the damage caused by a filibuster could take many years to undo. To continue on this path would also be, in Senator Leahy's words, "a terrible disservice" to Mr. Estrada. We urge you to reconsider this extraordinary action, to end the filibuster of Mr. Estrada's nomination, and to allow the full Senate to vote up or down.

III. Request for Confidential Solicitor General Memos

You have suggested that Mr. Estrada's background, experience, and support are insufficient to assess his suitability for the D.C. Circuit. You have renewed your request for Solicitor General memos authored by Mr. Estrada. But every living former Solicitor General signed a joint letter to the Senate opposing your request. The letter was signed by Democrats Archibald Cox, Walter Dellinger, Drew Days, and Seth Waxman. They stated: "Any attempt to intrude into the Office's highly privileged deliberations would come at the cost of the Solicitor General's ability to defend vigorously the United States' litigation interests – a cost that also would be borne by Congress itself. . . . Although we profoundly respect the Senate's duty to evaluate Mr. Estrada's fitness for the federal judiciary, we do not think that the confidentiality and integrity of internal deliberations should be sacrificed in the process."

It bears mention that the interest asserted here is that of the United States, not the personal interest of Mr. Estrada. Indeed, Mr. Estrada himself testified that "I have not opposed the release of those records. . . . I am exceptionally proud of every piece of legal work that I have done in my life. If it were up to me as a private citizen, I would be more than proud to have you look at everything that I have done for the government or for a private client."

The history of Senate confirmations of nominees who had previously worked in the Department of Justice makes clear that an unfair double standard is being applied to Miguel Estrada's nomination. Since the beginning of the Carter Administration in 1977, the Senate has approved 67 United States Court of Appeals nominees who previously had worked in the Department of Justice. Of those 67 nominees, 38 had no prior judicial experience, like Miguel Estrada. The Department of Justice's review of those nomination records disclosed that in none of those cases did the Department of Justice produce internal deliberative materials created by the Department. In fact, the Department's review disclosed that the Senate did not even request such materials for a single one of these 67 nominees.

Of this group of 67 nominees, seven were nominees who had worked as a Deputy Solicitor General or Assistant to the Solicitor General. These seven nominees, nominated by Presidents of each party and confirmed by Senates controlled by each party, included Samuel Alito, Danny Boggs, William Bryson, Frank Easterbrook, Daniel Friedman, Richard Posner, and Raymond Randolph.

The five isolated historical examples you have cited do not support your current request. In each of those five cases, the Committee made a targeted request for specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Even in those isolated cases, the vast majority of deliberative memoranda written by those nominees were neither requested nor produced. With respect to Judge Bork's nomination, for example, the Committee received access to certain particular memoranda (many related to Judge Bork's involvement in Watergate-related issues). The vast majority of memoranda authored by Judge Bork were never received. With respect to Judge Trott, the Committee requested documents unrelated to Judge Trott's service to the Department. So, too, in the three other examples you cite, the Committee requested specific documents primarily related to allegations of misconduct or malfeasance identified by the Committee. Of course, no such allegations have been made in the case of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the examples you have cited only highlight the lack of precedent for the current request. As the Justice Department has explained to you previously, the existence of a few isolated examples where the Executive Branch on occasion accommodated a Committee's targeted requests for very specific information primarily related to allegations of misconduct does not in any way alter the fundamental and long-standing principle that memos from the Office of Solicitor General – and deliberative Department of Justice memoranda more broadly – must remain protected in the confirmation context so as to maintain the integrity of the Executive Branch's decisionmaking process. That is a fundamental principle that has been followed irrespective of the party that controls the White House and the Senate.

Your continued requests for these memoranda have provoked a foreseeable and inevitable conflict that, in turn, has been cited as a basis for obstructing a vote on Mr. Estrada's nomination. Respectfully, the conflict is unnecessary because your desire to assess the nominee can be readily accommodated in many ways other than intruding into and severely damaging the deliberative process of the Office of Solicitor General. For example, you can review Mr. Estrada's written briefs and oral arguments both as an attorney for the United States and in private practice. As you know, those documents are publicly available and easily accessible; that said, we would be pleased to facilitate your access to them. (Mr. Estrada's hearing transcript suggests that no Democrat Member of the Committee had read Mr. Estrada's many dozens of Solicitor General merits briefs, certiorari petitions, and opposition briefs or the transcripts of his 14 oral arguments when he represented the United States.) You also may consider the opinions of others who served in the Office at the same time (discussed above) and examine the nominee's written performance reviews (also discussed above). There is more than ample information for you to assess Mr. Estrada's qualifications and suitability for the D.C. Circuit based on the traditional standards the Senate has employed.

It also is important to recognize that political appointees of President Clinton have read virtually all of the memoranda in question – namely, the Democrat Solicitors General Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman. None of those three highly respected Democrat lawyers has expressed any concern whatever about Mr. Estrada's nomination. Indeed, Mr. Waxman wrote a letter of strong support, and Mr. Days made public statements in support of Mr. Estrada.

In sum, the historical record and past precedent convincingly demonstrate that this request creates and applies an unfair double standard to Miguel Estrada.

IV. Request that Miguel Estrada Answer Additional Questions

Your letter also suggests that Miguel Estrada should answer certain questions that he allegedly did not answer in his hearing. To begin with, we do not know what your specific questions are. In addition, this request frankly comes as a surprise given that (i) Senator Schumer chaired the hearing on Mr. Estrada, (ii) the hearing lasted an entire day, (iii) Senators at the all-day hearing asked numerous far-reaching questions that Mr. Estrada answered forthrightly and appropriately, and (iv) only two of the 10 Democrat Senators then on the Committee even submitted any follow-up written questions, and they submitted only a few questions (in marked contrast to other nominees who received voluminous follow-up questions).

It also bears mention that Mr. Estrada has personally met with a large number of Democrat Senators, including Senators Landrieu, Lincoln, Bill Nelson, Ben Nelson, Leahy, Feinstein, Kohl, and Breaux; is scheduled to meet with Senator Carper; and would be pleased to meet with additional Senators.

The only specific question your letter identifies refers to Mr. Estrada's judicial role models, and you claim that he refused to answer a question on this topic. In fact, in Mr. Estrada's written responses to Senator Durbin's question on this precise subject, Mr. Estrada cited Justice Anthony Kennedy, Justice Lewis Powell, and Judge Amalya Kearse as judges he admires, and he further pointed out, of course, that he would seek to resolve cases as he analyzed them "without any preconception about how some other judge might approach the question."

In our judgment, moreover, Mr. Estrada answered the Committee's questions in a manner that was both entirely appropriate and entirely consistent with the approach that judicial nominees of Presidents of both parties have taken for many years. Your suggestions to the contrary do not square with the hearing record or traditional practice.

A. Judicial Ethics and Traditional Practice

In assessing your request that Miguel Estrada did not answer appropriate questions, we begin with rules of judicial ethics that govern prospective nominees. Canon 5A(3)(d) provides that prospective judges "shall not . . . make statements that commit or appear to commit the candidate with respect to cases, controversies or issues that are likely to come before the court"

(emphasis added). Justice Thurgood Marshall made the point well in 1967 when asked about the Fifth Amendment: "I do not think you want me to be in a position of giving you a statement on the Fifth Amendment and then, if I am confirmed and sit on the Court, when a Fifth Amendment case comes up, I will have to disqualify myself." Lloyd Cutler, who served as Counsel to President Carter and President Clinton, has stated that "candidates should decline to reply when efforts are made to find out how they would decide a particular case."

In 1968, in the context of the Justice Abe Fortas' nomination to be Chief Justice, the Senate Judiciary Committee similarly stated: "Although recognizing the constitutional dilemma which appears to exist when the Senate is asked to advise and consent on a judicial nominee without examining him on legal questions, the Committee is of the view that Justice Fortas wisely and correctly declined to answer questions in this area. To require a Justice to state his views on legal questions or to discuss his past decisions before the Committee would threaten the independence of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system itself. It would also impinge on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers among the three branches of Government as required by the Constitution." S. Exec. Rep. No. 8, 90th Cong. 2d Sess. 5 (1968).

Even in the context of a Supreme Court confirmation hearing, Senator Kennedy defended Sandra Day O'Connor's refusal to discuss her views on abortion: "It is offensive to suggest that a potential Justice of the Supreme Court must pass some presumed test of judicial philosophy. It is even more offensive to suggest that a potential justice must pass the litmus test of any single-issue interest group." Nomination of Sandra O'Connor: Hearings Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary on the Nomination of Judge Sandra Day O'Connor of Arizona to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, 97th Cong. 6 (1981) (statement of Sen. Kennedy).

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg likewise declined to answer certain questions: "Because I am and hope to continue to be a judge, it would be wrong for me to say or to preview in this legislative chamber how I would cast my vote on questions the Supreme Court may be called upon to decide. Were I to rehearse here what I would say and how I would reason on such questions, I would act injudiciously." Similarly, Justice John Paul Stevens stated in his hearing: "I really don't think I should discuss this subject generally, Senator. I don't mean to be unresponsive but in all candor I must say that there have been many times in my experience in the last five years where I found that my first reaction to a problem was not the same as the reaction I had when I had the responsibility of decisions and I think that if I were to make comments that were not carefully thought through they might be given significance that they really did not merit."

Justice Ginsburg described the traditional practice in a case decided last year: "In the context of the federal system, how a prospective nominee for the bench would resolve particular contentious issues would certainly be 'on interest' to the President and the Senate . . . . But in accord with a longstanding norm, every Member of this Court declined to furnish such information to the Senate, and presumably to the President as well." Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, 122 S. Ct. 2528, 2552 n.1 (2002) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Justice Ginsburg added that this adherence to this "longstanding norm" was "crucial to the health of the Federal Judiciary." Id. In his majority opinion, Justice Scalia did not take issue with that description and added: "Nor do we assert that candidates for judicial office should be compelled to announce their views on disputed legal issues." Id. at 2539 n.11 (emphasis in original).

In some recent hearings, including Mr. Estrada's, Senator Schumer has asked that nominees identify particular Supreme Court cases of the last few decades with which they disagree. But the problems with such a question and answer were well stated by Justice Stephen Breyer. As Justice Breyer put it, "Until [an issue] comes up, I don't really think it through with the depth that it would require. . . . So often, when you decide a matter for real, in a court or elsewhere, it turns out to be very different after you've become informed and think it through for real than what you would have said at a cocktail party answering a question." 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 425, 462.

Senator Schumer also has asked nominees how they would have ruled in particular Supreme Court cases. Again, a double standard is being applied. The nominees of President Clinton did not answer such questions. For example, Richard Tallman, a nominee with no prior judicial service who would now serves on the Ninth Circuit, not only would not answer how he would have ruled as a judge in Roe v. Wade – but even how he would have ruled in Plessy v. Ferguson, the infamous case that upheld the discredited and shameful "separate but equal" doctrine. So, too, in the hearing on President Clinton's nomination of Judges Barry and Fisher, Senator Smith asked whether the nominees would have voted for a constitutional right to abortion before Roe v. Wade. Chairman Hatch interrupted Senator Smith to say "that is not a fair question to these two nominees because regardless of what happened pre-1973, they have to abide by what has happened post-1973 and the current precedents that the Supreme Court has."

B. Answers by Miguel Estrada

Miguel Estrada answered the Committee's questions forthrightly and appropriately. Indeed, Miguel Estrada was more expansive than many judicial nominees traditionally have been in Senate hearings, and he was asked a far broader range of questions than many previous appeals court nominees were asked. We will catalogue here a select sample of his answers.

When asked by Senator Edwards about the Constitution's protection for rights not enumerated in the Constitution, Mr. Estrada replied: "I recognize that the Supreme Court has said [on] numerous occasions in the area of privacy and elsewhere that there are unenumerated rights in the Constitution, and I have no view of any sort, whether legal or personal, that would hinder me from applying those rulings by the court. But I think the court has been quite clear that there are a number of unenumerated rights in the Constitution. In the main, the court has recognized them as being inherent in the right of substantive due process and the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

When asked by Senator Feinstein whether the Constitution encompasses a right to privacy and abortion, Mr. Estrada responded, "The Supreme Court has so held, and I have no view of any nature whatsoever, whether it be legal, philosophical, moral, or any other type of

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 3, 2003

Dear Senator Feinstein:

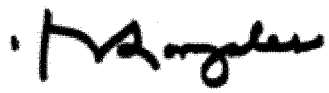
I write in response to your vote in the Judiciary Committee on the nomination of Miguel Estrada and to respectfully urge that you reconsider this important nomination when you vote on it in the full Senate. I write in particular because it appears from your statement in the Committee (and on your web site) that you may possess inaccurate or incomplete information on certain issues that you have deemed important to the Estrada nomination.

First, it appears you relied on the fact that Estrada has no previous judicial service. But five of the eight judges currently serving on the D.C. Circuit had no previous judicial experience when appointed. That includes two of President Clinton's nominees, Merrick Garland, whose Justice Department record was quite similar to that of Miguel Estrada, and David Tatel. In addition, Judge Harry Edwards had no prior judicial experience when he was nominated by President Carter in 1979, and he was younger than Estrada. In addition, several Ninth Circuit judges from California who were appointed by President Clinton, and had your support, had no prior judicial experience. That includes Judge William Fletcher, Judge Raymond Fisher, and Judge Marsha Berzon.

The American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard," unanimously rated Estrada "well qualified" for the D.C. Circuit, the ABA's highest possible rating. We think the ABA rating was quite appropriate in light of Estrada's excellent record, including his work as an Assistant Solicitor General in the Clinton and Bush Administrations, his record as a federal prosecutor in New York, his service as a law clerk to Justice Kennedy, and his pro bono work including his volunteer representation of a death row inmate before the Supreme Court. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, a figure that few lawyers can match, and particularly impressive for someone who immigrated to this country at age 17 speaking little English.

Second, you also referenced a news report quoting the views of Paul Bender, a former Deputy Solicitor General. Mr. Bender has not written a letter to the Committee or otherwise publicly explained his views, so we are unclear whether this news report was accurate. But more important, as I explained in a September 17, 2002, letter to then-Chairman Leahy and Senator Hatch, Paul Bender in fact signed the performance reviews of Miguel Estrada for the two years that they worked together. The performance reviews for those years gave Estrada the highest possible rating of "outstanding" in every possible category. Significantly, the performance reviews that Bender signed also stated the following to support the judgment that Estrada's performance was "outstanding."

- "states the operative facts and applicable law completely and persuasively, with record citations, and in conformance with court and office rules, and with concern for fairness, clarity, simplicity, and conciseness."
- "[i]s extremely knowledgeable of resource materials and uses them expertly; acting independently, goes directly to point of the matter and gives reliable, accurate, responsive information in communicating position to others."
- "[a]ll dealings, oral and written, with the courts, clients, and others are conducted in a diplomatic, cooperative, and candid manner."
- "[a]ll briefs, motions or memoranda reviewed consistently reflect no policies at variance with Departmental or Governmental policies, or fails to discuss and analyze relevant authorities."
- "[i]s constantly sought for advice and counsel. Inspires co-workers by example."



Apart from the contemporaneous reviews that Mr. Bender himself signed, it also bears mention that the Committee has received letters from Seth Waxman, President Clinton's Solicitor General, and a bipartisan group of 14 former colleagues of Mr. Estrada in the Solicitor General's office. Seth Waxman wrote to the Committee that Estrada is a "model of professionalism and competence" and that he has "great respect both for Mr. Estrada's intellect and for his integrity." He continued: "In no way did I ever discern that the recommendations Mr. Estrada made or the views he propounded were colored in any way by his personal views – or indeed that they reflected anything other than the long-term interests of the United States." And the bipartisan group of former colleagues from the Office of Solicitor General wrote to the Committee that Estrada "would be a fair and honest judge who would decide cases in accordance with applicable legal principles and precedents." Finally, to the extent Mr. Bender's own personal political and ideological views are relevant, we call your attention to Senator Hatch's opening statement at the hearing on September 26, 2002.

Third, you referenced the fact that Miguel Estrada has been "accused" of using an ideological litmus test when assisting Justice Kennedy in the selection of his law clerks. We respectfully do not think this "accusation" is credible or supported. In fact, Mr. Estrada explained at his hearing that he in fact had been very supportive, for example, of the hiring of one law clerk for Justice Kennedy who at the time worked for President Clinton, is a strong Democrat, and now works for Senator Leahy on the Judiciary Committee.

Fourth, you noted concern among "Hispanic organizations." In fact, the overwhelming majority of national Hispanic organizations have supported Mr. Estrada. That includes the Hispanic National Bar Association, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, and the Latino Coalition, among many others. To be sure, MALDEF and PRLDEF do oppose Mr. Estrada. As to Hispanic members of the House, we understand that all of the Republican Hispanics support him while the Democrat Hispanics do not. In any event, LULAC's statement is noteworthy, as it states: "[Estrada] is truly one of the rising stars in the Hispanic community and a role model for our youth."

Thank you for considering this nominee in light of the above information. This is an historic nomination, as Miguel Estrada would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. We urge you to vote to confirm him.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

February 27, 2003

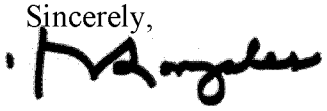
Dear Senator Frist, Senator Daschle, Senator Hatch, and Senator Leahy:

I write in connection with the nomination of Miguel Estrada. Some Democrat Senators have indicated that they would like to know more about Mr. Estrada's record before a vote occurs. As I stated in my letter of February 12 to Senator Daschle and Senator Leahy, we believe that the Senate has had sufficient time and possesses sufficient information to vote on Miguel Estrada. More important, a majority of Senators have indicated that they possess sufficient information and would vote to confirm him.

But if some Senators believe they must have more information before they will end the filibuster of this nomination, we respectfully suggest that there are three different and important sources of information that have been and remain available and that would appropriately accommodate the request for additional information. We ask that you encourage interested Senators to avail themselves of these sources as soon as possible.

First, as I have written to you previously, individual Senators who wish to meet with Miguel Estrada may and should do so immediately. We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to Senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character.

Second, Senators who have additional questions for Mr. Estrada should immediately pose such questions in writing to him. We propose that additional questions (in a reasonable number) be submitted in writing to Mr. Estrada by Friday, February 28. Mr. Estrada would endeavor to answer such questions in writing by Tuesday, March 4. He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before.



Third, Senators who wish to know more about Mr. Estrada's performance and approach when working in the United States Government -- and, in particular, how that relates to his possible future performance as a Circuit Judge -- should immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and Judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4. In particular, interested Senators could immediately send a joint letter to each of the following individuals for whom Mr. Estrada has worked in the United States Government: Judge Amalya Kearse, Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, former Solicitor General Ken Starr, former Solicitor General Drew Days, former Solicitor General Walter Dellinger, and former Solicitor General Seth Waxman. In our judgment, these men and women could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a Circuit Judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office. And their views could assist Senators who seek more information about Mr. Estrada.

We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee. We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information. And we respectfully ask that the Senate vote up or down as soon as possible on Mr. Estrada's nomination, which has been pending for nearly two years.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

A New Move on Estrada
The White House challenges Democrats to put up or shut up.

n perhaps its most forceful effort yet to break the stalemate over the appeals-court nomination of Miguel Estrada, the White House has now invited every member of the Senate who has doubts about Estrada's legal views to submit written questions to Estrada by the close of business Friday. In a letter delivered Thursday to all 100 senators, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales said Estrada will respond by next Tuesday.

"He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before," Gonzales wrote.
Gonzales also renewed a White House offer to set up personal meetings between Estrada and any senator who wants to have a one-on-one talk. "We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character," Gonzales wrote.
Finally, Gonzales asked that Democrats with questions about Estrada's work "immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4." Gonzales specifically named appeals-court judge Amalya Kearse, Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, and former Solicitors General Ken Starr, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman.
The last three names * Days, Dellinger, and Waxman * are particularly significant. All were high-ranking appointees of President Clinton, and their inclusion on the list suggests that the White House is confident they will not voice any objections to Estrada.
In addition, all three have seen at least some, if not all, of the internal memos Estrada wrote while working in the Solicitor General's office. In recent weeks, Democrats have argued that the memos might reveal some heretofore unknown aspect of Estrada's legal views, and thus must be made public before Estrada is confirmed. The White House has refused, calling the documents "highly privileged" * a position endorsed by all seven living former Solicitors General.

In his letter, Gonzales wrote that the former officials "could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a circuit judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office."

"We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee," Gonzales concluded. "We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information."

The letter is the White House's clearest move yet to call the bluff of Democrats who have been demanding more information on Estrada before they will allow a vote on his nomination. In the letter, the administration is saying to Democrats: You want more information, you can ask for more information.

What is not stated, however, is that the letter will give the White House a powerful argument against any Democrats who oppose Estrada and do not ask for more information. You said you wanted more information, the administration will be able to argue, and yet when we offered it you didn't even bother to ask.

still made no decision on whether or when to call for a vote to cut off debate and force an up-or-down vote on the nomination. At the moment, Republicans, who have all 51 of their own votes plus four Democrats, would fall five votes short of the 60 needed to cut off debate. But Republicans believe they are making progress and that the filibuster is beginning to take a political toll on moderate Democrats who are so far supporting the filibuster. Thus, the talking will continue. "We are on this next week," one Republican says. "We're committed to it."

The White House challenges Democrats to put up or shut up.

n perhaps its most forceful effort yet to break the stalemate over the appeals-court nomination of Miguel Estrada, the White House has now invited every member of the Senate who has doubts about Estrada's legal views to submit written questions to Estrada by the close of business Friday. In a letter delivered Thursday to all 100 senators, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales said Estrada will respond by next Tuesday.

"He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before," Gonzales wrote.

Gonzales also renewed a White House offer to set up personal meetings between Estrada and any senator who wants to have a one-on-one talk. "We continue to believe that such meetings could be very useful to senators who wish to learn more about Mr. Estrada's record and character," Gonzales wrote.

Finally, Gonzales asked that Democrats with questions about Estrada's work "immediately ask in writing for the views of the Solicitors General, United States Attorney, and judges for whom Mr. Estrada worked and ask them to respond by Tuesday, March 4." Gonzales specifically named appeals-court judge Amalya Kearse, Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, former United States Attorney Otto Obermaier, and former Solicitors General Ken Starr, Drew Days, Walter Dellinger, and Seth Waxman.

The last three names — Days, Dellinger, and Waxman — are particularly significant. All were high-ranking appointees of President Clinton, and their inclusion on the list suggests that the White House is confident they will not voice any objections to Estrada.

In addition, all three have seen at least some, if not all, of the internal memos Estrada wrote while working in the Solicitor General's office. In recent weeks, Democrats have argued that the memos might reveal some heretofore unknown aspect of Estrada's legal views, and thus must be made public before Estrada is confirmed. The White House has refused, calling the documents "highly privileged" — a position endorsed by all seven living former Solicitors General.

In his letter, Gonzales wrote that the former officials "could provide their views on Mr. Estrada's background and suitability to be a circuit judge by March 4 without sacrificing the integrity of the decisionmaking processes of the Judiciary, United States Attorney's office, and Solicitor General's office."

"We believe that these sources of information, which have been available for some time, would readily accommodate the desire for additional information expressed by some Senators who have thus far supported the filibuster of a vote on this nominee," Gonzales concluded. "We ask that you encourage Senators who have objected to the scheduling of a vote to avail themselves of these sources of information."

The letter is the White House's clearest move yet to call the bluff of Democrats who have been demanding more information on Estrada before they will allow a vote on his nomination. In the letter, the administration is saying to Democrats: You want more information, you can ask for more information.

What is not stated, however, is that the letter will give the White House a powerful argument against any Democrats who oppose Estrada and do not ask for more information. You said you wanted more information, the administration will be able to argue, and yet when we offered it you didn't even bother to ask.

still made no decision on whether or when to call for a vote to cut off debate and force an up-or-down vote on the nomination. At the moment, Republicans, who have all 51 of their own votes plus four Democrats, would fall five votes short of the 60 needed to cut off debate. But Republicans believe they are making progress and that the filibuster is beginning to take a political toll on moderate Democrats who are so far supporting the filibuster. Thus, the talking will continue. "We are on this next week," one Republican says. "We're committed to it."

Q Ari, there is a new 30-second radio spot which was reported in its entirety by the Washington Times, which notes -- to summarize it -- in 1998, Pat Leahy said he opposed any filibuster against any judge, even somebody he opposed, and he said the Senate has a duty to give every judicial nominee a vote, and allowing a minority of senators to block a vote on a judicial nominee shamed all senators.

Now that was 1998. Today, Pat Leahy is blocking a Senate vote on Miguel Estrada. Shame on you Pat Leahy, shame. The question, does the President -- the President doesn't disagree with this shame on Leahy spot by American Renewal, does he, Ari? He agrees with it, doesn't he?

MR. FLEISCHER: I think there is no question that you have accurately quoted Patrick Leahy. Patrick Leahy, in 1998, did say, emphatically, that it was wrong to engage in filibuster of judges and that it should not be done and that he would not do it. And, frankly, I do --

Q And that's shameful, isn't it, Ari? Isn't that shameful?

MR. FLEISCHER: I do think it's also accurate to say he has gotten away with changing his position scott-free.

Q Ari, some experts in the Senate are now saying the Miguel Estrada nomination is dead, that there is no way there will be sufficient votes for cloture. How long does the President intend to leave the nomination on the floor? And would he consider a recess appointment?

MR. FLEISCHER: The President has said that he will do this for as long as it takes. The President believes very deeply in the importance of the Senate taking action to confirm Miguel Estrada, and not to engage in these obstructionist tactics that Chairman Leahy said he would never engage in, in the first place, which he is now the leader of the engagement.

And just yesterday, another letter was sent from Judge Gonzales to Democrat leaders on the Hill, suggesting ways to break the impasse if only they would avail themselves of it.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL LIU
Assistant Secretary
Public and Indian Housing
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development

BEFORE THE
UNITED STATES SENATE
COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

March 5, 2003

REV_00375531

INTRODUCTION

Chairman Campbell, Vice Chairman Inouye, and Members of the Committee, thank you for inviting me to provide comments on President Bush's fiscal year 2004 budget for HUD's Indian Housing and Community Development programs.

My name is Michael Liu, and I am the Assistant Secretary for Public and Indian Housing, Department of Housing and Urban Development. We are responsible for the management, operation and oversight of HUD's Native American programs. These programs are available to over 550 Federally-recognized, and a limited number of state-recognized Indian tribes. We serve these tribes directly, or through tribally designated housing entities (TDHE), by providing grants and loan guarantees designed to support affordable housing, community and economic development activities. Our tribal partners are diverse; they are located on Indian reservations, in Alaska Native Villages, in other traditional Indian areas, and most recently, on the Hawaiian Home Lands.

It is a pleasure to again appear before you, and I would like to express my appreciation for your continuing efforts to improve the housing conditions of American Indian, Alaska Native and native Hawaiian peoples. As you heard at last year's NAHASDA reauthorization hearing, much progress is being made and tribes are taking advantage of new opportunities to improve the housing conditions of the Native American families residing on Indian reservations, on trust or restricted Indian lands, and in Alaska Native Villages. This momentum needs to be sustained as we continue to work together toward creating a better living environment throughout Indian Country.

At the outset, let me reaffirm the Department of Housing and Urban Development's support for the principle of government-to-government relations with Indian tribes. HUD is committed to honoring this fundamental precept in our work with American Indians and Alaska Natives.

You may recall that when I testified before you last year, I was searching for a Deputy Assistant Secretary for Native American Programs. I am very pleased to report that the search is over. In early October 2002, Mr. Rodger Boyd joined my staff. An architect by training, he brings to the position a wealth of experience, most recently as CDFI Manager at the Department of Treasury, but also as an economic advisor to the President of the Navajo Nation, and as director of their Washington, DC office.

For Fiscal Year 2004, the President's budget for HUD proposes a total of $738.7 million, specifically for Native American and Native Hawaiian housing, community and economic development, and education programs. Of that amount, approximately $639 million is for direct formula allocations under the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act's (NAHASDA) Indian Housing Block Grant Program, $72.5 million is for grants under the Indian Community Development Block Grant Program, and $2 million is for the Native American Section 184 and Title VI loan guarantees. That loan authority will leverage an additional $31 million in loan guarantees for Section 184 and $8 million for Title VI.

The budget proposes $10 million for the Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program and $1 million for the Section 184(A) Native Hawaiian Home Loan Guarantee Fund, which will leverage approximately $40 million in loan guarantees.

The budget also proposes $5 million for training and technical assistance to support all the above programs.

The Department also requests $5.4 million to support American Indian, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian-oriented higher education institutions.

INDIAN HOUSING BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM (IHBG)

Adjustments within the Indian Housing Block Grant (IHBG) program account have been made to allow more funds to be available for direct tribal use. The FY 2004 budget includes $646.6 million for the IHBG program. This is the same as the FY 2003 request. As with last year's request, reducing set-asides will actually allow for an increase in grant dollars available to tribes. The decrease of $1 million from the Title VI set-aside goes directly into the IHBG formula fund.

HUD TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Training and Technical Assistance remains a critical component of the IHBG program. The Training and Technical Assistance set-aside has been increased to $5 million, which is $2 million more than last year's request. In the coming year ONAP is planning to provide additional training and technical assistance to assist tribes.

The President's Budget includes a $2.2 million set-aside from CDBG to continue the same level of support provided in last year's budget to the National American Indian Housing Council. No funds are provided under the IHBG training and technical assistance set-aside, as the Department wishes to encourage all qualified organizations, including those at the regional and local level, to seek to provide training and technical assistance.

TITLE VI TRIBAL HOUSING ACTIVITIES LOAN GUARANTEE FUND

The Title VI Tribal Housing Activities Loan Guarantee Fund (Title VI) is also a set-aside under the IHBG Program. There is a set-aside of $1 million to continue program activities. This budget recognizes that until the program is more fully subscribed, it is more effective to use available funds in the IHBG Program and allocate it by formula directly to IHBG grantees. There is sufficient carry-over of unused guarantee authority which, when combined with this year's budget request, will support anticipated future program needs. We intend to use some of the increase in the TA/Training to develop tribal capacity in the Title VI program.

WORKING CAPITAL FUND

The Department's request of $2.7 million for the Working Capital Fund will help provide information technology and data resources to support enhanced program assessments, performance measurements and accountability.

SECTION 184 INDIAN HOUSING LOAN GUARANTEE FUND

Two years ago, the Section 184 Indian Housing Loan Guarantee Fund received its first annual credit subsidy re-estimate, as required by the Credit Reform Act. The re-estimate resulted in a reduced subsidy rate, which tripled loan amounts available for guarantees while holding Budget Authority constant. The subsidy rate declined due in part to the low number of defaults. The $1 million requested in FY 2004 will provide an additional $38 million in loan guarantee authority.

The President's FY 2004 Budget request for the Indian Community Development Block Grant (ICDBG) Program is $72.5 million. This is identical to the FY 2003 request, and an increase of $1.5 million over the amount appropriated in FY 2003.

NATIVE HAWAIIAN HOUSING BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

For FY 2004, the Department is requesting $10 million for the Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program. This budget recognizes the unique housing needs of native Hawaiian families eligible to reside on the Hawaiian Home Lands, and the Department is now beginning to meet those needs. A further acknowledgement of the unique status of native Hawaiians is the establishment of a separate program account for the Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program. An interim regulation implementing the new Native Hawaiian Housing Block Grant Program was published in the Federal Register on June 13, 2002. This action allowed us to distribute funds and implement the program while public comments are being considered and incorporated into the final regulations.

SECTION 184A NATIVE HAWAIIAN HOUSING LOAN GUARANTEE FUND

The budget requests that $1 million be allocated to the Section 184A Native Hawaiian Housing Loan Guarantee Fund. At that level of funding this new loan guarantee program, modeled after the Section 184 Program, will provide up to $40 million in loan guarantee authority to guarantee market-rate mortgage loans and similar projects to eligible entities, including the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands (DHHL), non-profit organizations and income-eligible Native Hawaiian families who choose to reside on the Hawaiian Home Lands. The DHHL, a State agency, is the primary program partner. DHHL is the agency responsible for allocation of leasehold interests on the Hawaiian Home Lands. Until direct-endorsement lenders are approved, the ONAP National

Programs Office will work closely with DHHL qualified program partners and individual borrowers to review, underwrite and issue guarantee certificates for all loans.

TRIBAL COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES AND ALASKA NATIVE AND NATIVE HAWAIIAN SERVING INSTITUTIONS

The President's budget request includes, under the Community Development Fund, $3 million for competitive grants to tribal colleges and universities to provide resources to build, expand, renovate and equip their facilities, and $2.4 million to assist Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian serving institutions, as they are defined under the Higher Education Act, as amended.

FUNDING PIPELINE AND PRODUCTION OF UNITS

As of September 30, 2002, it has been reported that the expenditure rate for the Indian Housing Block Grant Program from FY'98 through FY'01 is 63% or $1.5 billion. This leaves an unexpended rate of 37% or $885.6 million. I would note that grant recipients have 2 years from the initial awarding of the grant to obligate 90% of the grant. As of September 30, 2002 grant recipients have reported through ONAP that new construction starts that have been completed were 6,219 including rental and homeownership units, with an additional 3,720 units under construction. Funds have also been used to complete the rehabilitation of 14,226 existing housing units including rental and homeownership units, with an additional 1,654 under construction. Combining all of the production numbers reported for the first four years of funding for the IHBG program there have been 25,819 new and rehabilitated housing units constructed through September 30, 2002. Regarding the unexpended rate of 37%, ONAP over the past several months has been in the process of developing the baseline data to determine the level and extent of obligated and unobligated funds by tribe. This information will also allow ONAP to identify related issues that may be confronting tribes, and enable ONAP to become more proactive in assisting these tribes in their construction efforts.

CONCLUSION

Finally, let me state for the record that the President's budget request for HUD's Indian housing, community development and education programs supports the progress being made by tribes in providing housing and housing-related activities in Indian Country.

This concludes my prepared remarks. I would be happy to answer any questions you may have.

THE FORTAS FILIBUSTER: Is the Senate filibuster of Abe Fortas a precedent for the filibuster against against D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals nominee Miguel Estrada? In 1968, President Lyndon Johnson nominated then-Associate Justice Abe Fortas to replace Earl Warren as Chief Justice. The nomination was controversial, in no small part, due to concerns that Fortas might continue the "activist" practices of the Warren Court. This made Fortas a dicey choice with many Republicans and southern Democrats. But Fortas' fate was sealed by allegations of financial improprieties -- allegations that would eventually drive Fortas from the bench altogether.

In July 1968, Fortas became the first sitting justice to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee to answer questions at a nomination hearing. It did not go well. The hearing confirmed that Fortas engaged in substantial political activity while sitting as a justice -- attending White House staff meetings and briefing President Johnson about court deliberations. The subsequent revelation that Fortas accepted $15,000 for a series of lectures funded by his former law partners and clients sealed the fate of his nomination. A cloture motion failed, and the nomination was withdrawn.

It seems to me there are important differences between the Fortas nomination fight and that of Estrada. First, the stakes were higher as Fortas was nominated to the Supreme Court. Second, there were specific and credible allegations of impropriety against Fortas. On the other hand, the explicit basis for the Estrada filibuster -- the need for more information about his views -- is disingenuous on its face, as this letter by White House counsel Al Gonzales makes clear. If Senate Democrats wanted more information, they would have posed more questions to Estrada and those that have seen the disputed memoranda from the Solicitor General's office.

Although the Fortas filibuster is, in my view, clearly distinguishable, that doesn't mean Fortas' opponents were right. For myself, I am uncomfortable with the use of a filibuster against any judicial nominee of either party. Fortas may have merited a filibuster, insofar as the alleged ethical improprieties made him unfit for the bench, but this would only make it the exception that proves the rule. Senators of both parties have unduly obstructed the judicial nominations -- and it's only getting worse.

Graham, Bush tussle over marshals

The senator, feeling that the president ignored recommendations, stalls three confirmations.

published March 1, 2003

TALLAHASSEE -- A political battle between the White House and U.S. Sen. Bob Graham is holding up the appointments of Florida's three U.S. marshals.

Graham is blocking Senate confirmation of the nominees because one of them was not recommended by a nominating commission set up to handle such appointments.

It's a matter of principle, a Graham spokesman said Friday.

"We have highly respected, bipartisan groups who have volunteered to serve on nominating commissions," said spokesman Paul Anderson. "The senator wants an adequate explanation from the White House for why they circumvented this well-respected process."

The White House overruled the nominating commission's choice for South Florida U.S. marshal for the sake of diversity. The president nominated a Hispanic woman instead of the white men the commission recommended.

Caught up in the political battle are Tom Hurlburt Jr. and Dennis Williamson, two widely respected law enforcement officers who gave up high-powered careers six months ago to take the posts in Tampa and Tallahassee. Both were recommended by the nominating commission.

Hurlburt, 57, who was a longtime police chief in Orlando, gave up his $140,000-a-year job as Orange County director of public safety in September to become U.S. marshal in Tampa.

Williamson, 52, deputy commissioner at the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, gave up a $104,000 job the same month to take over the marshal's job in Tallahassee.

Both are still waiting.

"I've been mowing my grass, working on the fence, painting the house and trimming the trees," Hurlburt said Friday when asked how he has used the time off. "It's a pretty sad scenario."

"I'm down to insulating the pipes underneath my house," Williamson said. "I've painted everything, rearranged my garage, cut trees down; it's ridiculous."

Both were advised by federal authorities to leave their old jobs so they would be ready to take their new posts. Hurlburt said he thought it was only fair to step aside so Orlando officials could replace him.

James T. "Tim" Moore, head of the FDLE and chairman of the federal nominating committee, said the appointments should be immediately approved.

"We are the fourth-largest state in the country, and we have two vacancies unfilled," Moore complained. "We had a good process and got two quality individuals that are well-respected and highly regarded."

Moore said he has no problem with Christina Pharo, a deputy marshal in Miami the president nominated for the South Florida post.

Anderson said Graham is concerned that the White House ignored the nominating process set up when former Republican U.S. Sen. Connie Mack was in office and Democrat Bill Clinton was in the White House.

Graham would like "an adequate explanation" from the White House, Anderson added. "He doesn't feel he has put any undue burden on security at courthouses."

The three incumbent marshals remain on the job until their successors are confirmed.

I have a couple. Not sure how this will work logistically. I think the earlier version was already distributed, and the "sign-ups" were to that letter. Plus I think Downer is going out of town for a week. May have to get Stetson involved.

HEADLINE: From humble beginnings to Senate storm;
Nominee Miguel Estrada is seen as conservative, driven and an impressive lawyer. His mother says he's not 'the kind of person that stirs controversy.'

BYLINE: By Jan Crawford Greenburg, Washington Bureau.

DATELINE: WASHINGTON

BODY:
For as long as she can remember, Clara Castaneda preached a message of unlimited potential and possibility to her children--powerful words from a woman who arrived in New York City from Honduras after a bitter divorce, toddler in tow, with no job and no place to call home.

Within weeks of her arrival in 1969, Castaneda had a job as a bank secretary and a small, one-bedroom Brooklyn apartment. And she immediately began writing to her 8-year-old son, Miguel Estrada, who had stayed behind with his father.

Nearly a decade later, the 17-year-old Estrada joined his mother and sister to study in New York. In the years since, he has soared through the American system, working his way through top Ivy League schools, a Supreme Court clerkship as well as prestigious government and law firm jobs.

"I always told them, 'You can go as far as you want to go,'" Castaneda said.

Miguel Estrada, nominated by President Bush to a federal appeals court post that would make him the nation's most prominent Hispanic jurist, now has found himself testing the truth of those words.

Senate Democrats are filibustering his nomination, painting him as a "stealth candidate" who they fear is a conservative extremist. They say they will not budge until Estrada gives more information about his views.

Furious, Senate Republicans said Estrada would easily be confirmed if Democrats stopped the filibuster and dropped their demand. They said the nominee is no more conservative than previous Bush choices who were approved.

The president weighed in last week, calling the filibuster a "travesty."

It takes 60 votes among the 100 senators to stop a filibuster.

The acrimonious debate has taken on a highly personal tone among senators and has slowed other work in the chamber. The issue also has become embroiled in racial politics, with Republicans and Democrats citing support from various Hispanic organizations.

With the sides increasingly bitter, the outcome of the battle is certain to reach far beyond Estrada and affect future Bush judicial nominees, particularly to the Supreme Court.

In the middle of this struggle is Estrada, a private man with a quick, dry wit and somewhat formal bearing frequently described by acquaintances as "principled" and "honorable." Now 41, he is a partner in the Washington office of a prestigious national law firm and is married to a federal prosecutor in northern Virginia.

If Democrats succeed, Estrada would be the first appeals court nominee in history to be defeated through a filibuster, a refusal to yield the Senate floor. That her son would be in that position is difficult for Castaneda, 65, to understand.

Unflinching in his opinions

"My son has always had his own opinions, and he has been firm," said Castaneda, who has moved to Ohio and lives with her daughter, a doctor. "But he has never been the kind of person that stirs controversy."

The storm over Estrada has raged for reasons that go beyond the nominee. After losing control of the Senate in the November elections, Democrats are looking to send the White House and their loyalists a message that they still have power.

Estrada, whose nomination by Bush in 2001 had stalled with Democrats in control, was the first appeals court nominee to go before the new Congress.

In fact, Estrada's strengths--his drive and his intellectual firepower--may have contributed to the campaign against him. His credentials, coupled with his youth and Hispanic ethnicity, stir fears among Democrats that if confirmed he would land on a short list of Supreme Court candidates.

Estrada, who is known for being gracious with friends and colleagues, has not cultivated the political connections of a schmoozing Washington insider. Much like his straight-talking mother, he has always been outspoken about his views. Whether it is a law review article or a brief by a top legal colleague, Estrada does not sugarcoat criticism, friends say.

"Miguel has spent zero time courting favor. If he thinks things are stupid, he says they're stupid," a former colleague in the Justice Department said.

Estrada clearly is a conservative. His mother said that "much to my chagrin" she voted for Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) before he began leading the charge against her son's nomination.

Of her son, Castaneda said, "Definitely, he's to my right."

Classmates at Harvard Law School and colleagues from Estrada's jobs as a federal prosecutor and in the U.S. Solicitor General's office say Estrada frequently took conservative positions but was not ideologically rigid. While being generally sympathetic to law enforcement in criminal cases, for example, he also was quick to attack legal errors by prosecutors.

"He is an extremely impressive lawyer, among the most impressive lawyers I have ever met," said Randolph Moss, who served in the Clinton administration's Justice Department and clerked on the Supreme Court with Estrada.

"I think he will be a conservative judge, but I think he is a very principled, intellectually thoughtful person," he added.

Conservative label

Estrada got the ultraconservative label early in his confirmation battle, when Paul Bender, a former supervisor in the Solicitor General's office, was quoted as saying Estrada was too extreme to be confirmed.

Bender, a law professor at Arizona State University, has declined to comment further, but opponents quickly picked up on his statement.

But others from the Solicitor General's office, which represents the administration before the Supreme Court, said Bender's gripes with Estrada were his alone.

They said Bender was reflexive in his strong liberal views, the most ideological lawyer in the office at the time. Estrada did not back away from criticizing them, especially when Bender's views might interfere with evaluating a case, they said.

"Miguel is someone who is very outspoken when there's a bull session going on. He's not a wallflower," said Paul Engelmayer, once a law school classmate and co-worker of Estrada's.

"But is he more conservative than the conservative appointees on most of the courts of appeals? I doubt it," said Engelmayer, a New York attorney.

Estrada also has a reputation for frankness. At a Washington dinner party in 1993 with leaders of abortion rights organizations, Estrada told the assembled guests he did not share their views on abortion, one woman recalled.

The group had gathered after a Supreme Court hearing earlier that day in the National Organization for Women's case against abortion protesters. Estrada had defended NOW's position on behalf of the Clinton administration, arguing that the group should be able to pursue a lawsuit against the protesters.

During his Senate Judiciary Committee hearing last year, Estrada said that he held personal views on abortion but, like judicial candidates before him, declined to discuss them. He testified that Roe vs. Wade, which upheld a woman's right to an abortion, was established law and that he would faithfully apply it.

Overcame obstacles

Estrada came to the United States in 1979, joining his mother and sister, Maria, after graduating from a Catholic school with the highest grades in his class.

He had grown up in a three-bedroom house in a suburb of the Honduran capital, with his father, his stepmother and their daughters. Estrada's maternal grandparents were teachers, so his middle-class family emphasized education.

When he arrived in New York, Estrada spoke rudimentary English and struggled with a stutter, in Spanish and English, which he has been able to tame. Because he hadn't taken the SAT, he went to the local SUNY campus, which did not require the test for admission. He took math classes while he worked on his English.

Within months, Estrada was tutoring students at the request of the math department.

"I used to say he was 15 going on 32. He was always older and more serious than his age," his mother said. "He studied like there was no tomorrow. He had very high standards for himself. I used to laugh because he would come home after a test and say, 'Oh, I think I blew that one.' And I would say, 'Oh, another "A," eh, Miguel?'"

In jobs after law school, he was described by colleagues as straightforward and intellectually demanding yet thoughtful--the kind of person, said one, who remembers to ask about your dog.

During Estrada's clerkship with Justice Anthony Kennedy after law school, he volunteered to help with Justice Lewis Powell's cases. A moderate justice, Powell had retired and was hearing cases in a federal appeals court in Virginia. His lone clerk was overworked.

Powell came to consider him one of his own, said Sally Smith, the judge's secretary for 35 years.

Story about Durbin in Chicago paper

HEADLINE: Durbin favors vote if Estrada clarifies views

BYLINE: By Liam Ford, Tribune staff reporter.

BODY:
Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) said Friday that he will support bringing President Bush's stalled judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada to a vote--if Estrada answers more questions about his legal views.

Durbin, in a meeting with Exito!, a Spanish-language weekly newspaper published by Tribune Co., said Estrada has "ample experience" to rise to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

If confirmed by the Senate, Estrada would be one of the highest-ranking Hispanic judges in the nation.

A graduate of Harvard Law School, Estrada came to the U.S. from Honduras as a teenager and has held top government and law firm jobs.

Opponents of the nomination, including several leading Hispanic groups, have said they believe Estrada has avoided answering some questions to mask the extent of his conservative leanings. Senate Democrats are filibustering the nomination, blocking a vote.

Despite endorsing the nominee's qualifications, Durbin, who voted with other Judiciary Committee Democrats against recommending Estrada's nomination, echoed other party members, saying he would support a vote by the full Senate only if Estrada's views on key legal questions are made more clear.

"He is entitled to a vote when he produces the information and answers the questions. I don't believe he should be filibustered because I disagree with his philosophy," Durbin said. "But as far as I'm concerned, I think he owes us answers to the questions."

Estrada could answer questions formally and clear up Democrats' objections, Durbin said.

Or the White House could change its position, and allow Judiciary Committee leaders to see memos Estrada wrote about cases while with the solicitor general's office. The solicitor general acts as the president's lawyer before the Supreme Court.

Not Hispanic enough?
By Anthony Fuentez
At first glance, there appears to be nothing unusual about the opposition among Senate Democrats and liberals in general to President Bush's nomination of Miguel Estrada to a U.S. Court of Appeals seat. Estrada simply seems to be another victim of the periodic ideological clash between liberals and conservatives over appointing judges whose political views one side considers too far out of the mainstream.
Estrada is partly to blame for the Senate deadlock over his nomination because he refused to be forthcoming with senators about his political views and his understanding of established case law. But some of his opponents * particularly, some Hispanic liberals * make a disturbing argument: that Estrada, a Honduran-American, should be denied an appointment because he is not truly Hispanic.
In two news conferences, one with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and the other featuring Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., and leaders of several Hispanic organizations, Rep. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., not only complained that Estrada did not embrace the political beliefs that good Hispanics supposedly should, but also that he did not engage in community activism on behalf of Hispanics. Estrada didn't belong to any group that works to advance Hispanics; he had never litigated on behalf of Hispanic causes; and he had never mentored a Hispanic youth. Estrada's sole claim to a Hispanic identity, Menendez suggested, was his surname.
Historian Rodolfo Acuna similarly claimed in an Op-Ed that Estrada was not Hispanic enough because he did not "identify with the struggles or aspirations of most U.S. Latinos." Hispanics, Acuna said, "cannot afford to have people in high office who do not know our community, who are not a part of it, yet who can be considered representatives (of) Latinos by virtue of having a Spanish surname."
Self-appointed critics
Such arguments resemble some of U.S. politics' worst tendencies * racism, for one. Racism reduces a complex individual personality to a stereotype, as when Harry Belafonte accused Colin Powell of turning his back on the African-American community because he works for the Bush administration.
But the argument against Estrada's nomination bears an even closer resemblance to another bad tendency in U.S. politics: McCarthyism. That virulent strain of patriotism denounced individuals as un-American simply because they held political views or behaved in ways that some self-appointed judges of patriotism despised. In the fight over the Estrada nomination, some Hispanic liberals have embraced McCarthyism's rhetorical style by essentially calling Estrada un-Hispanic.

Pressure to conform

History explains why this is so dangerous. As a strict ideological conformity settled over American society in the early 1950s, politicians and intellectuals shied away from raising controversial issues for fear of being targeted by McCarthyites as unpatriotic or even traitors. What is to happen to Hispanic intellectual life if Hispanic McCarthyism gains legitimacy? Will Hispanics hesitate to propose new ideas for fear of having not just their views, but also their identities, challenged? Worse yet, will Hispanics tomorrow be called traitors because they do not speak Spanish, do not eat Hispanic foods, do not marry Hispanic spouses? Do the Hispanic liberals opposing Estrada's nomination really want to see their community turn on itself and start ostracizing individuals as less than pure Hispanics?

The problem some Hispanic liberals really have with Estrada is not that he lacks familiarity with the Hispanic experience, but that his experiences have led him to political beliefs different from theirs. It is enough simply to charge that Estrada's political beliefs and judicial philosophy would not lead to decisions beneficial to the Hispanic community. It is not necessary to make the argument, so fraught with poor consequences, that Estrada is not adequately Hispanic.

Hispanics, Acuna said, "cannot afford to have people in high office who do not know our community, who are not a part of it, yet who can be considered representatives (of) Latinos by virtue of having a Spanish surname."

Self-appointed critics

Such arguments resemble some of U.S. politics' worst tendencies — racism, for one. Racism reduces a complex individual personality to a stereotype, as when Harry Belafonte accused Colin Powell of turning his back on the African-American community because he works for the Bush administration. But the argument against Estrada's nomination bears an even closer resemblance to another bad tendency in U.S. politics: McCarthyism. That virulent strain of patriotism denounced individuals as un-American simply because they held political views or behaved in ways that some self-appointed judges of patriotism despised. In the fight over the Estrada nomination, some Hispanic liberals have embraced McCarthyism's rhetorical style by essentially calling Estrada un-Hispanic.

early 1950s, politicians and intellectuals shied away from raising controversial issues for fear of being targeted by McCarthyites as unpatriotic or even traitors. What is to happen to Hispanic intellectual life if Hispanic McCarthyism gains legitimacy? Will Hispanics hesitate to propose new ideas for fear of having not just their views, but also their identities, challenged? Worse yet, will Hispanics tomorrow be called traitors because they do not speak Spanish, do not eat Hispanic foods, do not marry Hispanic spouses? Do the Hispanic liberals opposing Estrada's nomination really want to see their community turn on itself and start ostracizing individuals as less than pure Hispanics?

The problem some Hispanic liberals really have with Estrada is not that he lacks familiarity with the Hispanic experience, but that his experiences have led him to political beliefs different from theirs. It is enough simply to charge that Estrada's political beliefs and judicial philosophy would not lead to decisions beneficial to the Hispanic community. It is not necessary to make the argument, so fraught with poor consequences, that Estrada is not adequately Hispanic.

Brett, how does Tues. April 1, Wed. April 2, or Thurs. April 3 look to you?

Subject:	Article on the Primary Challenge Specter Faces From Pat Toomey

From the current Weekly Standard

A Spectre Haunts Specter

Rep. Pat Toomey challenges Pennsylvania's senior Republican senator.

by Rachel DiCarlo

03/10/2003, Volume 008, Issue 25

PAT TOOMEY has faced some long odds in his career. A conservative Republican, the 41-year-old congressman has run three House campaigns in Allentown, Pennsylvania, a Democratic-leaning, big labor district, and won every time. Last fall, he even ran on Social Security reform--an issue that terrifies most Republicans--in a state with the largest elderly population outside of Florida. Now he's announced plans to run against Pennsylvania's four-term senior senator, Arlen Specter, in what likely will be next year's only competitive primary challenge of an incumbent Republican senator.

Specter starts out with a lot of advantages. As the incumbent he's already locked down the support of the Republican establishment. The White House, Pennsylvania's junior senator Rick Santorum, the National Republican Senatorial Committee, and four Pennsylvania GOP House members have lined up behind him. Specter has almost $6 million in campaign funds, compared with Toomey's $663,000 bankroll. Moreover, Specter has a 60 percent approval rating, and high statewide name recognition. In a general election he would be strongly favored over any Democrat.

But Toomey has something Specter can't compete with in a GOP primary: Toomey is a conservative and he votes like one. So in the closed primary, he can appeal to social and fiscal conservatives who have long been leery of Specter's left-leaning record. (In 2001 the American Conservative Union gave Toomey a 100 percent rating; Specter received 56.) "In a Republican primary, the majority will agree with me," Toomey says. "I am a pro-growth conservative and [Specter] is a big government liberal. We have fundamental differences across the board."

Take taxes. In his first House race, Toomey brought blue-collar conservatives to the polls by calling his opponent "the tax man" and attacking him for supporting state tax increases. One of Toomey's campaign pledges was that he would never vote to raise taxes. In 2001 he voted for the original version of the Bush tax cut package.

In what promises to be a major theme of the upcoming campaign, Toomey points out that Specter has wavered on the tax issue. In 2001, Specter voted with the Democrats and four other liberal Republicans to slash the president's tax cut proposal by 20 percent, from $1.6 trillion to $1.25 trillion. With Democrats Dianne Feinstein of California and Mary Landrieu of Louisiana, Specter also supported a proposal that would make tax cuts contingent on government debt reduction.

A social conservative, Toomey opposes abortion and has cosponsored legislation to ban all human cloning.

Specter is pro-choice, and he's flip-flopped on cloning. In July 2001, he said on "Face the Nation," "I certainly would never agree to cloning. I certainly would never agree to destroying a stem cell if there was any chance at all, any chance at all, that the embryo would turn into a human being." But at a press conference last April, he said that he "disagrees with President Bush's statement in opposition to reproductive cloning." And now he's a leading sponsor of legislation that would authorize research cloning.

Toomey says that these issues and Specter's ambivalence on others such as affirmative action and school choice have put Specter "out of step with a big majority of Pennsylvania Republicans." Toomey acknowledges that he's the underdog, but says he has done his "homework" and would not enter the race if he "was not absolutely certain" he "had a great shot at winning."

It's understandable why he might think so. Specter has shown surprising weakness in his last two primaries, when he faced obscure challengers. In 1992, Steve Freind, an underfunded state representative, got 35 percent of the vote. And in 1998, in a three-way race, Specter's two unknown challengers together got 33 percent. "They had no money, no political offices, and no base," Toomey says. "And they still got a third of the vote."

Specter cites those races as reasons for confidence: "I am used to contested primaries, and I am traveling the state, all 67 counties, maintaining a nearly 100 percent voting record and raising money," he said in a press statement. "So I will be ready in 2004."

But Specter doesn't appear completely sure of himself. He's already met with the Pennsylvania Pro-Life Federation to ask for its endorsement. He's also reached out to the Club for Growth, the anti-tax conservative group with a history of backing primary challengers to liberal Republicans. "He's nervous," Club for Growth president Steve Moore says. "He's a liberal for five years and then in the sixth year he moves aggressively to the right. It's already begun."

Toomey, by contrast, has never wavered about his beliefs. He promised at the outset to limit himself to three House terms and hasn't reneged on that commitment. He says that America would be better served if more politicians imposed term limits on themselves. That way men and women from various backgrounds could contribute their real world experiences in Congress. Being term-limited liberates him from outside groups and his party's own leadership. "I can vote my conscience without worrying about what other members think," he says.

Outside of Allentown Toomey doesn't have much of a base and isn't well known. A recent Quinnipiac poll in Pennsylvania showed that 87 percent of respondents hadn't heard enough about him to form an opinion. And since no Republican House members are publicly backing him, he doesn't have any allies to campaign with. He'll have to build his base, particularly in the rural areas between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and he'll have to figure out how to compete with Specter in the suburbs. It's still a long shot, but Moore says it's viable. "Will it be hard? Yes. But Toomey's well-positioned. This is a race between a Republican who has been a thorn in the side of his party for 22 years versus a rising Republican superstar who for five years has been carrying his party's torch."

Questions? What Questions?

Given the chance, Democrats ask no questions of Miguel Estrada.

Last week, in response to Democratic complaints that appeals-court nominee Miguel Estrada has failed to answer questions about his legal views, the White House invited any senator who has doubts about Estrada's views to send him written questions. The White House asked that questions be sent in by the close of business last Friday, and pledged that Estrada would answer them by Tuesday, March 4. "He would answer the questions forthrightly, appropriately, and in a manner consistent with the traditional practice and obligations of judicial nominees, as he has before," wrote White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales in a letter to all 100 senators.

As of Monday afternoon, the administration had not received any questions from any senators, according to administration sources.

The non-response from Democrats casts doubt on the party leadership's repeated contentions that Democrats object to Estrada because he has failed to answer questions about his legal views. Sen. Tom Daschle, the minority leader, last month accused Estrada of "stonewalling" and said, "Our issue primarily is ensuring that we have the information upon which to base a decision on Mr. Estrada."

Now, it is likely that Republicans will argue that when the White House gave Democrats the chance to ask any question of Estrada — something Democrats had said they dearly wanted — Democrats did not respond.

The administration has also said that Estrada will meet personally with any senator who requests a meeting.

> RE: "ASK THE QUESTIONS"
> As we all know, filibustering Democrats insist that they lack sufficient information and that Mr. Estrada failed to answer questions. Consider these statements by Democrats, for example:
> "When a nominee does not answer basic questions, the Senate clearly has a constitutional responsibility to ask for the answers." -- Senator Patrick Leahy, Congressional Record, February 26, 2003 (emphasis added).
> "I believe questions ought to be asked and answered and Senators have a right to ask questions and Senators have a right to have those questions answered. It is pretty simple." -- Senator Barbara Boxer, Congressional Record, February 26, 2003.
> "[W]e don't have any idea of how he thinks on any issue at all." -- Senator Charles Schumer, This Week, February 23, 2003.
> "[W]e are straining to find some information on which to base a reasoned judgment about his nomination to the second highest court of the land for a lifetime appointment." -- Senator Richard Durbin, Congressional Record, February 26, 2003.

> "If he answers some questions, I'll vote for him." -- Senator Biden, Fox News Sunday, March 2, 2003.
>
> "Is it too much to ask of a person who is being offered a lifetime position to simply answer a few questions?" -- Senator Blanche Lincoln, Congressional Record, February 13, 2003.
> "I am saying we have a responsibility to know who this fellow is: What makes him tick? What does he really think about? What are his values? What does he stand for? Will he be impartial? What does he think about our Constitution? What does he think about the court as the third branch of Government? There are tons of questions one could come up with, and we have that responsibility." -- Senator Max Baucus, Congressional Record, February 13, 2003.
> "The Senate has a right to complete and responsive answers to its questions before confirming someone to a life term on such an important court." -- Senator Russell Feingold, Congressional Record, February 10, 2003.
> Last Thursday evening the White House invited all Senators to ask any outstanding questions they had, either by meeting with the nominee privately or by putting questions in writing. The White House promised prompt responses to any questions. Obviously both options would facilitate the answering of questions that some Democrats claim to want answered. (See http://gop2/rpc/estrada/Whitehousefeb27letter.pdf). But the filibusterers declined to do either. As Senator Hatch put it this morning during debate:
> "As far as I know, none of the Senators who have sought more information about Mr. Estrada have availed themselves of any of these sources. This brings to mind the story of a young man who killed both his parents and then threw himself on the mercy of the court because he was an orphan. Here my Democrat colleagues who are complaining the loudest about not having enough information about Mr. Estrada are the very ones who are apparently not interested in finding out more about him through readily available means. Meanwhile, the filibuster goes on and on."
> Because of this rather brazen refusal to cooperate, at least three questions can fairly be raised in floor debate either through speeches or direct questions of filibustering Senators:
>
> -- Did the Senator submit any written questions to Mr. Estrada after the White House invited him/her to do so?>
>
> -- Did the Senator ask the White House to meet with Mr. Estrada privately?
>
> -- If the distinguished Senator did not, then why shouldn't we all conclude that the Senator HAS no questions for Mr. Estrada, and that he or she agrees with the majority of the Senate that it is now appropriate to vote up-or-down?
> Democrats claim they somehow lack information, yet they have passed on prime opportunities to obtain more information. They refused to ask questions. How serious can the "no information" argument be at this point?

Sen Estrada (R, NY) (WSJournal)

If the Democratic effort to kill the appointment of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals succeeds, Mr. Estrada should return the favor by moving back to New York State and challenging his chief tormentor, Sen. Charles Schumer, in the 2004 elections.

Mr. Estrada, a Honduran immigrant who graduated from Columbia and served in the U.S. Attorney's office in the Southern District of New York, would be a formidable candidate against Mr. Schumer. He could at one stroke derail the ambitious senator's political career and solidify the Republican hold on the Senate.

It would be justice well served. A Harvard Law graduate, Mr. Estrada practiced at a high-powered New York firm before joining the U.S. Attorney's office. He served in the Justice Department under both Democratic and Republican administrations. As a judicial nominee, he has earned the highest ratings possible from the American Bar Association.

Democrats are not opposing Mr. Estrada because he is unqualified, but because he is their worst nightmare: a moderate Hispanic Republican who, if he distinguishes himself on the Court of Appeals, would make an imposing candidate for the Supreme Court. Led by Mr. Schumer, the Democrats are trying to derail his judicial appointment by applying standards to his nomination that are beyond those asked of less threatening candidates -- and by filibustering his confirmation.

Leaving aside the fact that the filibuster expands the Senate's advise and consent role in nominations beyond what the Constitution envisioned, Mr. Schumer and the Democrats may be turning the Estrada gun on themselves. Republicans had been making recent inroads with Hispanic voters: President Bush captured 35% of the Hispanic vote in 2000, and his approval ratings among Hispanics have been growing during his presidency. The tactics against Mr. Estrada could well endanger Hispanics' traditional allegiance to the Democrats.

Several New York Republicans have already exploited Democratic weaknesses among Hispanic voters. Gov. George Pataki captured 40% of the Hispanic vote last November, which is credited with helping him win his landslide re-election victory. Rudy Giuliani won 43% in 1997.

Ronald Reagan once said that most Hispanics were Republicans who "just don't know it yet." It isn't merely ethnic pride that would attract Hispanics to Mr. Estrada, but a growing sense that New York's increasingly radical Democratic Party is out of step with the cultural values and upwardly mobile aspirations of many Latinos.

Mr. Schumer must run for re-election next year, when an Estrada candidacy in New York would be especially powerful. President Bush will be running for re-election, and the Republican National Convention will take place in Gotham. Having Mr. Bush campaigning with Mr. Estrada throughout the state's Hispanic enclaves can give a Democrat cold sweats.

If the current Democratic jihad against Mr. Estrada fails, the Republican Party should still consider recruiting another talented Latino candidate to challenge Mr. Schumer in 2004. The party might even consider doing what the Democrats did in the 2000 Senate race: importing their best candidate from somewhere else to vie for the New York seat. Hillary Clinton showed the Republicans how to play that game. Now why not turn the tables?

Sen Estrada (R, NY) (WSJournal)

If the Democratic effort to kill the appointment of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals succeeds, Mr. Estrada should return the favor by moving back to New York State and challenging his chief tormentor, Sen. Charles Schumer, in the 2004 elections.

Mr. Estrada, a Honduran immigrant who graduated from Columbia and served in the U.S. Attorney's office in the Southern District of New York, would be a formidable candidate against Mr. Schumer. He could at one stroke derail the ambitious senator's political career and solidify the Republican hold on the Senate.

It would be justice well served. A Harvard Law graduate, Mr. Estrada practiced at a high-powered New York firm before joining the U.S. Attorney's office. He served in the Justice Department under both Democratic and Republican administrations. As a judicial nominee, he has earned the highest ratings possible from the American Bar Association.

Democrats are not opposing Mr. Estrada because he is unqualified, but because he is their worst nightmare: a moderate Hispanic Republican who, if he distinguishes himself on the Court of Appeals, would make an imposing candidate for the Supreme Court. Led by Mr. Schumer, the Democrats are trying to derail his judicial appointment by applying standards to his nomination that are beyond those asked of less threatening candidates -- and by filibustering his confirmation.

Leaving aside the fact that the filibuster expands the Senate's advise and consent role in nominations beyond what the Constitution envisioned, Mr. Schumer and the Democrats may be turning the Estrada gun on themselves. Republicans had been making recent inroads with Hispanic voters: President Bush captured 35% of the Hispanic vote in 2000, and his approval ratings among Hispanics have been growing during his presidency. The tactics against Mr. Estrada could well endanger Hispanics' traditional allegiance to the Democrats.

Several New York Republicans have already exploited Democratic weaknesses among Hispanic voters. Gov. George Pataki captured 40% of the Hispanic vote last November, which is credited with helping him win his landslide re-election victory. Rudy Giuliani won 43% in 1997.

Ronald Reagan once said that most Hispanics were Republicans who "just don't know it yet." It isn't merely ethnic pride that would attract Hispanics to Mr. Estrada, but a growing sense that New York's increasingly radical Democratic Party is out of step with the cultural values and upwardly mobile aspirations of many Latinos.

Mr. Schumer must run for re-election next year, when an Estrada candidacy in New York would be especially powerful. President Bush will be running for re-election, and the Republican National Convention will take place in Gotham. Having Mr. Bush campaigning with Mr. Estrada throughout the state's Hispanic enclaves can give a Democrat cold sweats.

If the current Democratic jihad against Mr. Estrada fails, the Republican Party should still consider recruiting another talented Latino candidate to challenge Mr. Schumer in 2004. The party might even consider doing what the Democrats did in the 2000 Senate race: importing their best candidate from somewhere else to vie for the New York seat. Hillary Clinton showed the Republicans how to play that game. Now why not turn the tables?

Nominee gets boost in Georgia
Jason Embry and Carlos Campos - Cox Washington Bureau
Tuesday, March 4, 2003
Senators began their fourth week of debate Monday on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. All 51 Senate Republicans and four Democrats have said publicly they support Estrada and would vote to confirm him. But they lack the 60 votes necessary to overcome a Democratic filibuster.
The Bush administration has offered to make Estrada available for meetings with Democratic senators, who say Estrada hasn't given them enough information about his views. But "hardly any" of the Democrats have expressed interest, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said.
"The president will continue to make the case for somebody he views as a very good man," Fleischer said.
In concert with the president's effort, some Hispanic leaders in Atlanta held a news conference at the Georgia Capitol to express their support for Estrada.
They included representatives of the Georgia Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Mexican-American Business Chamber, the Atlanta Latino Lions Club, the Hispanic Contractors of Georgia, the Republican Association of Georgia Hispanics and the National Republican Hispanic Assembly of Georgia. Some state legislators joined in, including Rep. David Casas (R-Lilburn).
Vernadette Ramirez Broyle, a former candidate for Georgia secretary of state, said Estrada is not only qualified for the judgeship, but would be "an inspiration to every new Latino immigrant and child who has dreamed the American dream."

ESTRADA AND THE PLEDGE

March 4, 2003 -- The Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals' decision last week on the Pledge of Allegiance offers a strong - and colorful - argument for common-sense jurists.
The kind that President Bush's candidate for the D.C. Circuit Court, Miguel Estrada, likely would be.
And the kind that Democrats will do anything to stop - including changing the political rules.
The court's decision upholds a finding that the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance are unconstitutional.
As The Wall Street Journal noted, the timing couldn't have been worse: As hundreds of thousands of U.S. troops prepare to go to war to free Iraq and demonstrate American values, school kids in the West will be barred from reciting the pledge in class starting next week.
This is just the kind of absurdity that might be expected from the Ninth Circuit, which oversees nine Western states - and happens to be both the most liberal, and the most frequently overturned, circuit court in the nation.
Which brings up the shenanigans going on in the East - specifically on Capitol Hill - involving Estrada.
Democrats - led by New York's own Sen. Chuck Schumer - have launched a filibuster, an unprecedented action for a judicial nomination.
They are, in effect, raising the bar for confirmation to 60 votes (the number needed to bust a filibuster), up from a simple majority, thus upending the constitutional concept of "advice and consent" as long understood.
Democrats claim that Estrada hasn't given them enough information.
It's an unusual claim, considering - as White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales notes - Schumer hasn't put forward any written follow-up questions for Estrada to answer.
Instead, the Democrats are demanding confidential memos Estrada produced while in the solicitor general's office - a demand that seven former solicitor generals, Democrat and Republican alike, criticized as an inappropriate reach.

But this battle isn't about memos; it's about whether the Dems can change the rules and manipulate the process to stop a well-qualified Bush nominee on strictly partisan grounds.

And it's about whether judges will be appointed who'll make common-sense decisions - or ludicrous ones, like that of the Ninth Circuit.

Republicans have done a pretty good job of building a war room to push the confirmation of Bush judicial nominee Miguel Estrada, in that they have kept the troops rallied and gotten some favorable press. But they don't seem to have moved public opinion or scared enough Democrats into ending the impasse.

The Estrada war room thus has succeeded in execution, but not in terms of results. Which is v-e-r-y Washington.

The GOP Changes Its Estrada Strategy
They,ll now force Democrats to vote on ending the filibuster.

Republican Sen. Rick Santorum has just announced a major change in the party's strategy in the Miguel Estrada confirmation fight. Santorum told reporters minutes ago that Republicans will file for cloture today, which will lead to a vote on Thursday.

So far, Republicans can count on just four Democratic votes in favor of Estrada, which will leave them short of the 60 votes needed to stop the Democratic filibuster. "We've sort of hit a wall now," Santorum said. "We haven't had anybody come forward in a week and a half, and at some point, you're going to have to change strategies to make this happen."
Santorum said the Republican strategy now "will be to put people on the record" through a cloture vote. Anticipating that Republicans will at first fail to reach 60 votes, Santorum added, "This will be one of many cloture votes."
"My guess is we will do another cloture vote next week and wait and see what happens," Santorum said. "If we're successful and pick up a vote, we may have some other options."
In the meantime, the GOP will continue to work on moderate Democrats who might be persuaded to help end the filibuster. "We're hopeful that once [a cloture vote] happens, we'll be able to focus some pressure on some key senators in some key states," Santorum said.

GOP Forcing Vote to End Judge Filibuster

JESSE J. HOLLAND
The Associated Press
Tuesday, March 4, 2003; 1:03 PM
Republicans decided Tuesday to force a Senate vote on ending a Democratic filibuster against Miguel Estrada, one of President Bush's prized judicial nominees.
Though Republicans apparently do not have the 60 votes needed to end the Democrats' delaying tactic, a GOP spokesman said the new strategy is intended to identify senators who might be persuaded to support Estrada's nomination to the federal appeals court.
"The purpose of this is to enter the next phase, put people on record and redouble our efforts," said Bob Stevenson, spokesman for Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn. "Once people are on record, we'll know who we might be able to speak to see who might want to talk, and at that point continue pressing the issue."
He said Republicans plan to force the Estrada filibuster vote on Thursday.
A solid Democratic bloc has refused to allow a confirmation vote on Estrada, despite three weeks of pressure from the White House, the Senate's GOP majority, conservative television and radio ads and threats of Election Day retaliation from conservative Hispanic groups. Estrada would become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.
Democrats say their votes against an Estrada confirmation are solid and have been calling on Republicans to end the debate. Republicans do "not have the (60) votes to stop this filibuster," said Sen. Barbara Boxer of California.
Republicans have insisted for weeks that getting 60 Senate votes to end a filibuster on the Washington lawyer would be requiring more than the simple majority vote needed in the 100-member Senate to confirm judicial nominees. There are 51 Republicans, 48 Democrats and one independent in the Senate.

Only four Democrats have said publicly that they would vote against continuing a filibuster: Sens. Zell Miller of Georgia, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Bill Nelson of Florida and John Breaux of Louisiana.
Although they all support Estrada, some Republicans say the Senate has to deal with other issues in March, including a bill banning a late-term abortion procedure.
"The Senate has told us that in the next two or three weeks they will pass a partial birth abortion bill," House Majority Leader Tom DeLay said.
Bush's $695 billion, 10-year tax cut plan also was introduced last week, and the Senate's version of the federal budget is likely to soon head to the floor. "We have to do the budget," said Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., one of Estrada's biggest supporters.
And then there is the war in Iraq.
"How much are we debating that?" said Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. "Scarce to nothing is being said on the Senate floor as we prepare to go to war in all likelihood in a foreign land."
Republicans could always delay Estrada's confirmation until later in the year, or debate Estrada and another issue at the same time, aides said.
However, Republicans have no plans to move on yet.
"We're going to wait to see how this thing plays out this week. Next week, I don't know," Senate GOP caucus leader Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania said Monday.
Democrats insist they will not allow a final vote on Estrada until the Washington appellate lawyer answers more of their questions in a public hearing, or the White House releases Estrada's working papers from his time at the Justice Department solicitor general's office. Republicans have refused those requests.

Senator Frist announced today that Republicans will seek cloture Thursday to end the filibuster of President Bush's nominee to the DC Circuit Court of Appeals Miguel Estrada. White House officials will be available to discuss the Estrada nomination Wednesday, March 5.

Miguel Estrada is an American success story. He has bipartisan support from a broad range of groups and individuals. He received the American Bar Associations highest rating of "well-qualified" and has argued more than 15 cases before the Supreme Court.

No Circuit Court nominee has ever been successfully filibustered. Miguel Estrada deserves a straight up or down vote on the Senate floor.

Make 'em talk ÿÿÿÿÿThe fight over federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada is now entering a new phase. According to GOP caucus leader Sen. Rick Santorum, the Republicans will attempt to force the issue this week by filing a cloture motion on the Democrat's gentleman's filibuster against Mr.
Estrada's nomination.
ÿÿÿÿÿRepublicans hope that putting their Democratic colleagues officially on the record against Mr. Estrada, the first Hispanic to sit on the U.S.
Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and a likely candidate for the Supreme Court, may be enough to change a few minds. Only five votes would be enough to end the debate, and it's hoped that those Democrats up for re-election next year, such as Sens. Barbara Boxer, Blanche Lincoln, Ernest Hollings, Ron Wyden and Bob Graham, might be particularly pliable. ÿÿÿÿÿHowever, such a demonstration is, at best, a consolation prize, since the cloture vote could have been taken at any time since Feb. 5, when Mr.
Estrada's nomination was taken up on the Senate floor. There's also the possibility that a series of cloture votes (Mr. Santorum promised that, if the Thursday vote failed, there would be at least one more) could have the opposite effect, hardening the minds of those Democrats anxious to placate their party's special interests. Besides, if they wish to really put their colleagues on the spot, Republicans have a more dramatic means to such a demonstration * a real filibuster. ÿÿÿÿÿSuch a filibuster forces Democrats to talk about anything they want to, so long as they are willing to continue to be seen by their constituents as obstructing the Senate's business and blocking an amply qualified candidate who has put himself at their disposal for almost two years.
ÿÿÿÿÿDespite a few late-night sessions since Mr. Estrada's nomination hit the floor, Republicans have not forced their filibustering fellows to talk all night, allowing a gentleman's measure to serve in this less-than-genteel debate. Even a series of cloture votes won't have the same effect, since Senate business will still go on. ÿÿÿÿÿRepublicans' reluctance seems to be based in the simple fact that filibusters are so inconvenient. Democrats would only need a few members to hold their place on the floor, while all 51 Republicans would have to be present, awaiting the first opportunity to force the vote.
Unfortunately, during a lengthy filibuster, it's more likely that a few Republicans will take breaks than a few Democrats will break ranks.
ÿÿÿÿÿThus, the anticipated cloture vote represents not so much a failure of Republican Senate leadership as of followership. While some Republican leaders have expressed a desire to force a full-fledged filibuster, they really have rather small cudgels to hold their rank and file in place, much less penalize them if they break ranks. Besides, senators are notoriously independent, preferring to lead a glorious but doomed calvary charge than march along with their fellow foot soldiers in a crushing phalanx. The cloture vote is a tacit admission that Republicans have failed to coalesce into the disciplined fighting force needed to overcome obstructionism on judgeships.

ÿÿÿÿÿAs worrisome is the fact that the nomination fight appears to be approaching a critical juncture. The war in Iraq will undoubtedly sweep other matters aside, and the Senate has other legislation it should take up soon, including the president's tax-cut plan and a ban on partial-birth abortion.

ÿÿÿÿÿThis weekend would seem to be an opportune time for Republicans to put up a full-fledged floor flight against a filibuster on Mr. Estrada. It's time for Republicans to go to the mattresses * figuratively and literally. It's time for Republicans to march like the majority they are. It's time for Republicans to make 'em talk.

The socially conservative but Democratic-leaning 7th Legislative District snaking along the Delaware River in Burlington County and a sliver of Camden County is given to odd elections.

Gallagher, a Navy reservist, reported for active duty on Oct. 9 in the Bush administration's war on terrorism. He said his wife, Karen, would carry on the campaign for the two-year seat.

That changed everything in a district already known for political topsy-turviness.

The biggest question may be what happens to the seat if Gallagher wins.

Gallagher's campaign said his seat could be filled temporarily until he returns -- and that his wife would be the right person for the job.

But it might not be so simple. Len Lawson, assistant legislative counsel, said if Gallagher couldn't make it to Trenton to be sworn in Jan. 8, the fate of the seat could be up to the state Senate -- or the courts.

In a year when the legislative elections are so close that no one has a good guess at who will control either house, the outcome if it's sent to the Senate could be as murky as if it's up to the courts.

Lawson said the Senate could have Gallagher sworn in wherever he is.

The problem with that might be that his mission is covert and even his campaign doesn't know his location.

Lawson said one possibility would be that the party that last controlled the seat -- the Republicans -- would fill it until a special election could be held next November.

In any case, Lawson said, it's complicated to find direction from the federal and state constitutions, laws, and case law.

"The case law is all over the place," Lawson said. "What happens, I think is people get so confounded with patriotism and people wonder, 'How can you penalize someone who wants to serve their country?ª" The campaign has taken some turns as well.

The Democratic campaign that pushed all summer for more debates was happy the two sides agreed to just four of them -- with Karen Gallagher, 43, a legal assistant at a Moorestown law firm, filling in.

"She's not a public speaker, she's not a politician," said Michael Muller, Gallagher's campaign manager. "She talks about the issues she and Lou talk about across the table all the time. " Muller said U.S. Sens. Jon Corzine and Robert Torricelli would probably appear on Gallagher's behalf before the Nov. 6 election -- something he said would have been unlikely if Gallagher were home for the end of the race.

Other politicians have been lending help to the campaign.

Assemblyman Herbert C. Conaway Jr. represented Gallagher at an interview with the editorial board of The Burlington County Times.

Chris Russell, campaign manager for Allen, said it's unfair to have different people filling in for Gallagher during the race -- especially if one of them might serve in his stead.

"The people who are voting should have an idea who they're voting for," Russell said.

Registered Democrats outnumber their Republican counterparts in the district, but their candidates can be out of step with their national platforms.

Allen supports abortion rights; Gallagher, who became the chairman of the Burlington County Democratic committee last year, does not in most cases.

But in this race, the issues that hit home for voters don't necessarily square with partisan ideology.

The Trenton outsider, Gallagher spent the summer hammering away at issues such as insurance and property tax reform -- two New Jersey political staples.

Another issue has been the light rail line under construction through the district. Allen supports it; Gallagher says the people who live along its route did not have enough say in whether it would be built.

One analyst said voters could view Gallagher's service as a plus or a minus.

"On the one hand, certainly people say, 'Wow, here's a nice kind of role model, a Navy SEAL who's putting his fanny on the line,â" said Rider University political scientist David Rebovich. But he said there's another practical matter for voters: "Would the country be better served with Lou Gallagher in the service and Diane Allen, who has a pretty good record, in the Legislature? " This isn't the first time a race in the 7th District has been odd.

Between 1991 and the 1999 election, when Democrats Conaway and Jack Conners were reelected, no one served in the district's two Assembly seats for two consecutive terms.

The 1997 Assembly race was so close, it took a full year and a special election before Conners was seated for good.

Scalia Criticizes Politics in Nominations

By GINA HOLLAND
Associated Press Writer

March 4, 2003, 7:46 PM EST

WASHINGTON -- Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia on Tuesday predicted an acrimonious confirmation fight over the court's next vacancy and blamed politics for unfilled openings in lower courts.

Scalia said conservatives and liberals created such logjams by supporting activist judges who do not strictly interpret the Constitution.

The justice, who turns 67 next week, frequently complains that the Constitution is treated by courts as a "living document" that evolves over time. He said that Supreme Court decisions involving abortion, the death penalty and assisted suicide illustrate that philosophy.

Many court districts are now operating with judge shortages, he said, because judge nominations have become "such a politically controversial issue."

"It didn't used to be like that. I hate to think what the next Supreme Court nomination hearings are going to be like because what both sides are looking for are judges who agree with them as to what the new Constitution that they create ought to be," Scalia said during a speech to the American Medical Association. "It's a very sad ending to the game."

Scalia's comments came on the same day that Republicans decided to force a Senate vote on ending a Democratic filibuster against Miguel Estrada, one of President Bush's prized judicial nominees.

Democrats have refused for three weeks to allow a confirmation vote on Estrada, who would become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Scalia, one of the most conservative and outspoken justices, served four years on that appeals court before President Reagan named him to the Supreme Court in 1986.

Bush has mentioned Scalia as a model for justices, and his name has come up as a potential choice for chief justice if William H. Rehnquist retires this year. Rehnquist is 78. The last Supreme Court vacancy was in 1994.

Scalia told the doctor's group that he was not surprised by fights over judges.

"I've been predicting this for 20 years, that ultimately this theory of the living Constitution will destroy us, it will destroy the federal courts," he said. "Once the people figure out what the game is, they will say, 'We will select our judges on the basis of who will create the Constitution that we desire.'"

Scalia Criticizes Politics in Nominations

WASHINGTON -- Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia on Tuesday predicted an acrimonious confirmation fight over the court's next vacancy and blamed politics for unfilled openings in lower courts.

Scalia said conservatives and liberals created such logjams by supporting activist judges who do not strictly interpret the Constitution.

The justice, who turns 67 next week, frequently complains that the Constitution is treated by courts as a "living document" that evolves over time. He said that Supreme Court decisions involving abortion, the death penalty and assisted suicide illustrate that philosophy.

DEMOCRAT INSTATE SENATE RACE CALLED UP AFTER SEPT. 11ATTACKS

BODY:
The socially conservative but Democratic-leaning 7th Legislative District snaking along the Delaware River in Burlington County and a sliver of Camden County is given to odd elections.

Gallagher, a Navy reservist, reported for active duty on Oct. 9 in the Bush administration's war on terrorism. He said his wife, Karen, would carry on the campaign for the two-year seat.

That changed everything in a district already known for political topsy-turviness.

The biggest question may be what happens to the seat if Gallagher wins.

Gallagher's campaign said his seat could be filled temporarily until he returns -- and that his wife would be the right person for the job.

But it might not be so simple. Len Lawson, assistant legislative counsel, said if Gallagher couldn't make it to Trenton to be sworn in Jan. 8, the fate of the seat could be up to the state Senate -- or the courts.

In a year when the legislative elections are so close that no one has a good guess at who will control either house, the outcome if it's sent to the Senate could be as murky as if it's up to the courts.

Lawson said the Senate could have Gallagher sworn in wherever he is.

The problem with that might be that his mission is covert and even his campaign doesn't know his location.

Lawson said one possibility would be that the party that last controlled the seat -- the Republicans -- would fill it until a special election could be held next November.

In any case, Lawson said, it's complicated to find direction from the federal and state constitutions, laws, and case law.

"The case law is all over the place," Lawson said. "What happens, I think is people get so confounded with patriotism and people wonder, 'How can you penalize someone who wants to serve their country?â" The campaign has taken some turns as well.

The Democratic campaign that pushed all summer for more debates was happy the two sides agreed to just four of them -- with Karen Gallagher, 43, a legal assistant at a Moorestown law firm, filling in.

"She's not a public speaker, she's not a politician," said Michael Muller, Gallagher's campaign manager. "She talks about the issues she and Lou talk about across the table all the time. " Muller said U.S. Sens. Jon Corzine and Robert Torricelli would probably appear on Gallagher's behalf before the Nov. 6 election -- something he said would have been unlikely if Gallagher were home for the end of the race.

Other politicians have been lending help to the campaign.

Assemblyman Herbert C. Conaway Jr. represented Gallagher at an interview with the editorial board of The Burlington County Times.

Chris Russell, campaign manager for Allen, said it's unfair to have different people filling in for Gallagher during the race -- especially if one of them might serve in his stead.

"The people who are voting should have an idea who they're voting for," Russell said.

Registered Democrats outnumber their Republican counterparts in the district, but their candidates can be out of step with their national platforms.

Allen supports abortion rights; Gallagher, who became the chairman of the Burlington County Democratic committee last year, does not in most cases.

But in this race, the issues that hit home for voters don't necessarily square with partisan ideology.

The Trenton outsider, Gallagher spent the summer hammering away at issues such as insurance and property tax reform -- two New Jersey political staples.

Another issue has been the light rail line under construction through the district. Allen supports it; Gallagher says the people who live along its route did not have enough say in whether it would be built.

One analyst said voters could view Gallagher's service as a plus or a minus.

"On the one hand, certainly people say, 'Wow, here's a nice kind of role model, a Navy SEAL who's putting his fanny on the line,â" said Rider University political scientist David Rebovich. But he said there's another practical matter for voters: "Would the country be better served with Lou Gallagher in the service and Diane Allen, who has a pretty good record, in the Legislature? " This isn't the first time a race in the 7th District has been odd.

Between 1991 and the 1999 election, when Democrats Conaway and Jack Conners were reelected, no one served in the district's two Assembly seats for two consecutive terms.

The 1997 Assembly race was so close, it took a full year and a special election before Conners was seated for good.

FLORENCE, N.J. (AP) - A former Democratic state Senate candidate and U.S. Navy reservist has returned home after missing the final weeks of the campaign because he was called up to active duty.

Lou Gallagher, who had been on active duty with the Navy SEALS since Oct. 9, returned to his Florence home on Friday. He declined to comment on his tour of duty and whether it derailed his chances of unseating Burlington County Republican Sen. Diane Allen.

"I just want to say I was proud to serve my country," Gallagher, 43, told the Courier-Post of Cherry Hill for Wednesday's editions.

The father of three said he was looking forward to Christmas shopping and taking his 3-year-old son to see Santa Claus.

I guess your email below was a tease. Sorry for being a nudge, but I would have thought that, if it's "signed and approved and coming shortly," it would have arrived here by now. If you're still stuck in the Senate, can you get someone to fax it to 301-837-0293? Thanks.

THE WHITE HOUSE

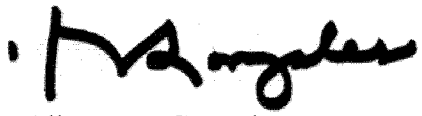
WASHINGTON

March 5, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle:

As you know, some Democrat Senators have engaged in a filibuster to prevent a vote on Miguel Estrada's nomination. They have stated that they want more information about Mr. Estrada's record before they will end the filibuster and allow the full Senate to vote up or down on the nomination. We strongly believe that the Senate has sufficient information and should hold an immediate up or down vote. In an effort to be responsive, however, I wrote to you on February 27 to indicate that Senators who want more information can and should avail themselves of three different and important sources: Senators should meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. Since my offer of February 27, however, I understand that no Senator has submitted any questions to Mr. Estrada and that no Senator has submitted any inquiries to his former superiors. And only one Senator, Senator Byrd, has scheduled a meeting with Mr. Estrada.

We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which Senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada. Being respectful of those who have stated that they want more information, however, I want to reiterate what I stated in my letter of February 27. I urge Senators engaged in the filibuster to avail themselves of the existing opportunities to gather additional information. Senators who want more information can and should promptly meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, Senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information.



My renewed invitation is not to suggest that we find merit in the contention that Senators currently do not have sufficient information to vote up or down on Mr. Estrada. In that regard, I ask all Senators who have engaged in the filibuster to carefully compare the extensive transcript of Mr. Estrada's hearing, as well as his subsequent written answers, to the transcripts of the hearings of President Clinton's three appointees to the D.C. Circuit: David Tatel, Judith Rogers, and Merrick Garland. (Two of these three nominees had no prior judicial experience, like Mr. Estrada.) Such a comparison demonstrates beyond any reasonable debate that Mr. Estrada was asked for and has already provided far more information than any of those three appointees. Judge Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Rogers and Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions at their hearings. The three appointees of President Clinton -- combined -- thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions. Judge Rogers refused even to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And

Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Causes and Effects of the Judicial Confirmation Crisis

Featuring:

Senator Orrin Hatch (R - UT)
Judiciary Committee Chairman
United States Senate

Hosted by:

Phillip N. Truluck
Executive Vice-President,
The Heritage Foundation

The filibuster over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Circuit Court for the District of Columbia has tied up the Senate for almost a month. This follows a two-year slowdown in the confirmation process by the former Democratic Senate majority that has resulted in a serious backlog of unconfirmed circuit judges and a judicial vacancy crisis in some areas of the country. Throughout this frustrating process, current Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch has tirelessly defended qualified nominees and urged his fellow Senators to act fairly, reasonably, and promptly on all judicial nominees.

As the Estrada filibuster drags on, Chairman Hatch has grown increasingly concerned over the consequences of this breakdown in the confirmation process and the failure in the Senate's constitutional obligation to provide its advice and consent to presidential nominations. Chairman Hatch will relate his concerns and discuss what can be done to repair the confirmation process before further damage is done.

THE WHITE HOUSE

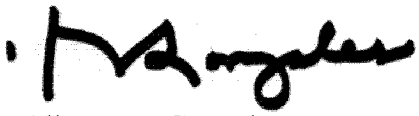
WASHINGTON

March 5, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle:

As you know, some Democrat Senators have engaged in a filibuster to prevent a vote on Miguel Estrada's nomination. They have stated that they want more information about Mr. Estrada's record before they will end the filibuster and allow the full Senate to vote up or down on the nomination. We strongly believe that the Senate has sufficient information and should hold an immediate up or down vote. In an effort to be responsive, however, I wrote to you on February 27 to indicate that Senators who want more information can and should avail themselves of three different and important sources: Senators should meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. Since my offer of February 27, however, I understand that no Senator has submitted any questions to Mr. Estrada and that no Senator has submitted any inquiries to his former superiors. And only one Senator, Senator Byrd, has scheduled a meeting with Mr. Estrada.

We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which Senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada. Being respectful of those who have stated that they want more information, however, I want to reiterate what I stated in my letter of February 27. I urge Senators engaged in the filibuster to avail themselves of the existing opportunities to gather additional information. Senators who want more information can and should promptly meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, Senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information.



My renewed invitation is not to suggest that we find merit in the contention that Senators currently do not have sufficient information to vote up or down on Mr. Estrada. In that regard, I ask all Senators who have engaged in the filibuster to carefully compare the extensive transcript of Mr. Estrada's hearing, as well as his subsequent written answers, to the transcripts of the hearings of President Clinton's three appointees to the D.C. Circuit: David Tatel, Judith Rogers, and Merrick Garland. (Two of these three nominees had no prior judicial experience, like Mr. Estrada.) Such a comparison demonstrates beyond any reasonable debate that Mr. Estrada was asked for and has already provided far more information than any of those three appointees. Judge Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Rogers and Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions at their hearings. The three appointees of President Clinton -- combined -- thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions. Judge Rogers refused even to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And

Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

March 5, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle:

As you know, some Democrat Senators have engaged in a filibuster to prevent a vote on Miguel Estrada's nomination. They have stated that they want more information about Mr. Estrada's record before they will end the filibuster and allow the full Senate to vote up or down on the nomination. We strongly believe that the Senate has sufficient information and should hold an immediate up or down vote. In an effort to be responsive, however, I wrote to you on February 27 to indicate that Senators who want more information can and should avail themselves of three different and important sources: Senators should meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. Since my offer of February 27, however, I understand that no Senator has submitted any questions to Mr. Estrada and that no Senator has submitted any inquiries to his former superiors. And only one Senator, Senator Byrd, has scheduled a meeting with Mr. Estrada.

We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which Senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada. Being respectful of those who have stated that they want more information, however, I want to reiterate what I stated in my letter of February 27. I urge Senators engaged in the filibuster to avail themselves of the existing opportunities to gather additional information. Senators who want more information can and should promptly meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, Senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information.

My renewed invitation is not to suggest that we find merit in the contention that Senators currently do not have sufficient information to vote up or down on Mr. Estrada. In that regard, I ask all Senators who have engaged in the filibuster to carefully compare the extensive transcript of Mr. Estrada's hearing, as well as his subsequent written answers, to the transcripts of the hearings of President Clinton's three appointees to the D.C. Circuit: David Tatel, Judith Rogers, and Merrick Garland. (Two of these three nominees had no prior judicial experience, like Mr. Estrada.) Such a comparison demonstrates beyond any reasonable debate that Mr. Estrada was asked for and has already provided far more information than any of those three appointees. Judge Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Rogers and Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions at their hearings. The three appointees of President Clinton -- combined -- thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions. Judge Rogers refused even to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

THE WHITE HOUSE

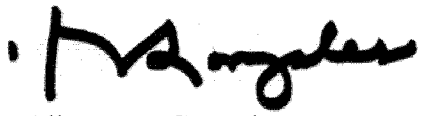
WASHINGTON

March 5, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle:

As you know, some Democrat Senators have engaged in a filibuster to prevent a vote on Miguel Estrada's nomination. They have stated that they want more information about Mr. Estrada's record before they will end the filibuster and allow the full Senate to vote up or down on the nomination. We strongly believe that the Senate has sufficient information and should hold an immediate up or down vote. In an effort to be responsive, however, I wrote to you on February 27 to indicate that Senators who want more information can and should avail themselves of three different and important sources: Senators should meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. Since my offer of February 27, however, I understand that no Senator has submitted any questions to Mr. Estrada and that no Senator has submitted any inquiries to his former superiors. And only one Senator, Senator Byrd, has scheduled a meeting with Mr. Estrada.

We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which Senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada. Being respectful of those who have stated that they want more information, however, I want to reiterate what I stated in my letter of February 27. I urge Senators engaged in the filibuster to avail themselves of the existing opportunities to gather additional information. Senators who want more information can and should promptly meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, Senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information.



My renewed invitation is not to suggest that we find merit in the contention that Senators currently do not have sufficient information to vote up or down on Mr. Estrada. In that regard, I ask all Senators who have engaged in the filibuster to carefully compare the extensive transcript of Mr. Estrada's hearing, as well as his subsequent written answers, to the transcripts of the hearings of President Clinton's three appointees to the D.C. Circuit: David Tatel, Judith Rogers, and Merrick Garland. (Two of these three nominees had no prior judicial experience, like Mr. Estrada.) Such a comparison demonstrates beyond any reasonable debate that Mr. Estrada was asked for and has already provided far more information than any of those three appointees. Judge Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Rogers and Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions at their hearings. The three appointees of President Clinton -- combined -- thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions. Judge Rogers refused even to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And

Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

THE WHITE HOUSE

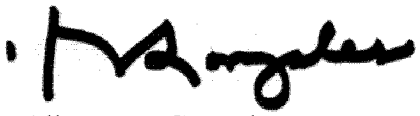
WASHINGTON

March 5, 2003

Dear Senator Daschle:

As you know, some Democrat Senators have engaged in a filibuster to prevent a vote on Miguel Estrada's nomination. They have stated that they want more information about Mr. Estrada's record before they will end the filibuster and allow the full Senate to vote up or down on the nomination. We strongly believe that the Senate has sufficient information and should hold an immediate up or down vote. In an effort to be responsive, however, I wrote to you on February 27 to indicate that Senators who want more information can and should avail themselves of three different and important sources: Senators should meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. Since my offer of February 27, however, I understand that no Senator has submitted any questions to Mr. Estrada and that no Senator has submitted any inquiries to his former superiors. And only one Senator, Senator Byrd, has scheduled a meeting with Mr. Estrada.

We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which Senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada. Being respectful of those who have stated that they want more information, however, I want to reiterate what I stated in my letter of February 27. I urge Senators engaged in the filibuster to avail themselves of the existing opportunities to gather additional information. Senators who want more information can and should promptly meet with Mr. Estrada, pose written questions to him, and/or pose inquiries to his former superiors in the Department of Justice and Judiciary. If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, Senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information.



My renewed invitation is not to suggest that we find merit in the contention that Senators currently do not have sufficient information to vote up or down on Mr. Estrada. In that regard, I ask all Senators who have engaged in the filibuster to carefully compare the extensive transcript of Mr. Estrada's hearing, as well as his subsequent written answers, to the transcripts of the hearings of President Clinton's three appointees to the D.C. Circuit: David Tatel, Judith Rogers, and Merrick Garland. (Two of these three nominees had no prior judicial experience, like Mr. Estrada.) Such a comparison demonstrates beyond any reasonable debate that Mr. Estrada was asked for and has already provided far more information than any of those three appointees. Judge Tatel was asked a total of three questions at his hearing. Judges Rogers and Garland were each asked fewer than 20 questions at their hearings. The three appointees of President Clinton -- combined -- thus answered fewer than half the number of questions at their hearings that Mr. Estrada answered at his hearing. What is more, both Judge Rogers and Judge Garland declined to give their personal views on disputed legal and policy questions. Judge Rogers refused even to give her views when asked about the notion of an evolving Constitution. And

Judge Garland did not answer questions about his personal views on the death penalty and on various Supreme Court precedents, stating only that he would follow the precedents. In short, we believe that the criticism of Mr. Estrada's answers at his hearing is misplaced and reveals an unfair double standard being applied to Mr. Estrada.

We strongly believe that the record justifies an immediate up or down vote. I also respectfully urge those Senators who continue to filibuster on the ground that they need more information to avail themselves of the existing sources of information.

Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable Thomas A. Daschle

GOP Pushing Estrada's Hispanic Heritage

DAVID ESPO
The Associated Press
Wednesday, March 5, 2003; 2:06 PM
Republicans are stressing Miguel Estrada's Hispanic heritage in the battle over his appointment to the federal appeals court, angling for political gain at the same time they seek votes to overcome a Democratic filibuster.
The racially tinged appeal is muted at times. As when President Bush, flanked by Hispanic officials in his administration, said that Democrats were "applying a double standard to Miguel Estrada" in demanding that he answer more questions than past nominees.
On other occasions, the rhetoric is more pointed. As when Sen. Orrin Hatch characterized the Democratic position this way in remarks on the Senate floor: "We do not care what we do to this Hispanic man, even though he is highly qualified."
And when Sen. George Allen of Virginia, the chairman of the GOP senatorial committee, says that in addition to his legal qualifications, Estrada carries an "added bonus, that he's an inspiration, particularly to Hispanics."
In addition to motivating core supporters, Allen said in an interview, the GOP effort for Estrada "also helps us with independents and moderates, not only Hispanics, because this is appealing to fairness, and having senators have the guts to actually take a stand and not hide behind the skirts of a filibuster."
Republicans point to their own polling data to support such claims, but no independent surveys have yet been made public on the subject and Democrats dispute GOP claims of political advantage.

Whatever the long-term political implications, Republicans remain short of the votes needed to cut off the filibuster against Estrada, a 41-year-old Honduran immigrant who graduated from Harvard Law School, served in the Justice Department and practices law.
After a month of debate, GOP officials have set a first test vote for Thursday, and expect to lose. They are counting on all 51 Senate Republicans and four Democrats to support Estrada. That leaves them short of the 60 needed to cut off the filibuster, but Majority Leader Bill Frist said on Tuesday, "the battle is just beginning."
Many Democrats reject the claims that they are fighting a losing political battle, and say they support policies on education, immigration and other issues that Hispanics favor. If Republicans "are looking at the election, they're going to have to come up with more than lip service," said Rep. Ciro Rodriguez, D-Texas, chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus.
Others see a cloudier picture.
"It's less likely a downside for a Democrat but rather an upside for Bush," said David Beatty, a Democratic pollster with experience in Florida. That's particularly the case, he said, in states such as Florida, New Mexico, and Arizona, where Hispanics make up a relatively large percentage of the population.
Bush won Arizona with 51 percent of the vote two years ago. He lost New Mexico by less than one percent. Florida went to a recount that ultimately decided the election.
Overall, Bush won 35 percent of the Hispanic vote in 2000, according to exit polls, compared with 21 percent for the 1996 presidential nominee, Bob Dole.
Sergio Bendixen, a Democratic pollster with experience in Hispanic public opinion surveys, said that in general, "Latino voters, especially immigrants, do think it's important, very important to appoint other Latinos to judicial positions." At the same time, he said of the Estrada nomination struggle, "The arguments that are being used for and against and the power games are not getting a lot of coverage in the media, or even in the Spanish media."
The ethnic component is only a part of the debate over Estrada, nominated to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for Washington, D.C. The court is viewed as the second most important in the country, and a possible stepping stone to the Supreme Court.
Democrats say Bush is trying to win confirmation for a string of conservative nominees who are less than forthcoming about their own views, but may go on to rule against abortion rights, for example.
In addition, they have demanded release of papers that Estrada wrote while working in the Justice Department solicitor general's office, memoranda that former solicitors general of both parties say should remain confidential.
Republicans argue that Democrats oppose Estrada because he is a conservative, and say Bush should be given a yes-or-no vote on his nominees.
Either way the confirmation fight turns out, GOP strategists say they have a politically winning issue.
GOP sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that in a recent survey, more people said they would view Democratic candidates less favorably as a result of the filibuster than said they would view them more favorably.
Allen, in an interview, said he had on his desk a breakdown of states with Senate elections in 2004, along with their percentage of Hispanic residents. In some, Nevada, New York and California for example, Democrats seeking re-election support the filibuster.
In Florida, Sen. Bob Graham remains undecided. Graham may run for president, a campaign that would require him to seek support from abortion rights groups, organized labor and other Democratic-aligned organizations who oppose Estrada.
But Graham hasn't ruled out seeking re-election in Florida, and the state's other Democratic senator, Bill Nelson, supports Estrada.
"The question should be posed to Senator Graham on why he is not for Miguel Estrada," said Allen. "Maybe this will pressure him."

URGENT ACTION ALERT:
CONTACT YOUR SENATOR ON THE NOMINATION OF JAY BYBEE

HRC opposes the nomination of Jay Bybee to the United States Cour t of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Bybee's record shows a lack of respect for Supreme Court precedent on the constitutional rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender Americans, and he has characterized sexual orientation-inclusiv e civil rights laws as "preferences" for "homosexuals." Bybee helped drafted a brief for the Justice Department regarding security clearance for gays and lesb ians working in defense-related jobs. The Department of Defense labeled homosex uality "deviant sexual conduct" and lumped it together with "bestiality, fetish ism, exhibitionism, necrophilia, nymphomania or satyriasis, masochism, sadism, pedophilia, transvestism, and voyeurism." In addition, Bybee exhibited further disregard for civil rights protections with his critical views regarding a cour t ruling in Bob Jones University v. United States, which stated that the IRS could deny tax-exempt status to a university that banned interracial datin g. For further background on Jay Bybee, click here.

On Feb. 27, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 12-6 to approve Bybee's nomina tion. If your senator sits on the Judiciary Committee, please see how he or she voted in the list below.

Voting "NO" were Sens. Biden (D-Delaware), Durbin (D-IL), Edwards (D-NC), Feingold (D-WI), Feinstein (D-CA), and Kennedy (D-MA). Senator Leahy (D-VT) voted "present/pass."

Causes and Effects of the Judicial Confirmation Crisis

Featuring:

Senator Orrin Hatch (R - UT)
Judiciary Committee Chairman
United States Senate

Hosted by:

Phillip N. Truluck
Executive Vice-President,

The filibuster over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Circuit Court for the District of Columbia has tied up the Senate for almost a month. This follows a two-year slowdown in the confirmation process by the former Democratic Senate majority that has resulted in a serious backlog of unconfirmed circuit judges and a judicial vacancy crisis in some areas of the country. Throughout this frustrating process, current Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch has tirelessly defended qualified nominees and urged his fellow Senators to act fairly, reasonably, and promptly on all judicial nominees.

As the Estrada filibuster drags on, Chairman Hatch has grown increasingly concerned over the consequences of this breakdown in the confirmation process and the failure in the Senate's constitutional obligation to provide its advice and consent to presidential nominations. Chairman Hatch will relate his concerns and discuss what can be done to repair the confirmation process before further damage is done.

Claremont Institute Scholar Offers Legislative Proposal to End
Confirmation Stalemate

Dr. John Eastman, director of the Claremont Institute's Center for Constitutional Jurisprudence, offers a novel suggestion to end the Senate's obstruction of President Bush's judicial nominees, a practice that violates the Senate's constitutional "advice and consent" role. In an article first published in the Wall Street Journal, Dr. Eastman argues that the House of Representatives could call upon its own constitutional authority to break the gridlock: Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution requires Senate confirmation for appointment of all principal officers, but "Congress may by Law vest the appointment of ... inferior officers"-including, as a matter of the Constitution's text, all lower court judges-"in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." As the text specifies, this can be done 'by law,' which means the House of Representatives can initiate legislation that would vest in the President alone the sole power to appoint lower court judges whenever the Senate has failed either to confirm or reject the President's nominees in a reasonable period of time, say, six months.

Such an action "would force a return of the advice and consent role to the place where the Constitution assigns in-to the Senate as a body rather than to an individual Senator or committee." Moreover, Eastman explains, "[a]ssigning the appointment power to the President alone after six months of inaction by the Senate would not unduly interfere with internal procedures of the Senate. The committee system would still have its role to play, but that role could not be abused by abject refusals to even hold hearings or votes on nominees who enjoy majority support."
Dr. Eastman's Wall Street Journal article, "'In the President Alone' A Legislative Proposal to End the Confirmation Stalemate," can be read on the Claremont Institute's website, <http://www.claremont.org/projects/jurisprudence/021018eastman.html> here.
(See also, <http://www.claremont.org/projects/jurisprudence/020602eastman_sandefur.html> "The Senate Is Supposed to Advise And Consent, Not Obstruct and Delay," by John Eastman and Timothy Sandefur.)
In addition to his work at the Claremont Institute, Eastman is a professor at Chapman University Law School, and former Supreme Court clerk for Justice Clarence Thomas.. He frequently comments on politics and the law in such venues as "The O'Reilly Factor" and his regular Wednesday appearances on the "Hugh Hewitt Show." He was called upon to testify before the Florida Legislature's Select Committee on the 2000 Election. Dr. Eastman filed briefs on behalf of the Claremont Institute in several cases of constitutional importance, including Boy Scouts of America v. Dale, Zelman v. Simmons-Harris (the Ohio School voucher case), and Grutter v. Bollinger (the Michigan affirmative action case).

POLITICS: Facing choices

If he were to help sabotage the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada, Bob Graham might gain some political capital from the liberal electorate in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination. But it would be a major snub of his constituents, and could prove costly in the long run.
Estrada should have been con- firmed quickly to a seat on the D.C. Court of Appeals.
He has impressive credentials, in- cluding tenure as a clerk for a U.S. Supreme Court justice and a successful stint arguing cases before the high court.
The American Bar Association gives him its highest possible rating -- and at least five former solicitors general, representing both major political parties, have enthusiastically endorsed him.
Several Democrats in the Senate, including Florida's junior senator, Bill Nelson, back Estrada. Even such bastions of liberal thought as The Washington Post and Atlanta Journal-Constitution editorial pages have voiced support.
Estrada has more than enough votes for confirmation. The hard-line Democratic leadership, however, is trying to block a vote, leaving Estrada on the verge of becoming the first judicial nominee in American history to be defeated by a filibuster.
Yet, his is an inspirational story.
As a teenager, he came to this country speaking little English but he graduated from law school with honors. He is so widely respected that he is considered likely to get a spot on the Supreme Court one day if he should prove himself competent on the appellate court. That would make him the first Hispanic on the high court, and a tremendous role model.
Liberals haven't been clear on why they are willing to bring Congress to a standstill and shatter centuries of precedent.
They say they want more assurances that Estrada isn't conservative. But when Democratic presidents have named liberal judges, Dems have insisted the Senate evaluate nominees purely on the basis of judicial expertise and temper- ament, without regard to philosophy.
"Now, every senator can vote against any nominee ... But it is the responsibility of the U.S. Senate to at least bring them to a vote," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., declared in 1997.

Nearly 17 percent of all Floridians are Hispanic. Florida will be a crucial state in the 2004 presidential election, and Graham isn't assured of carrying it if he gets the nomination.

Republicans plan to call for a cloture vote Thursday. Throughout his long career, Graham has adhered to principle. That gives us hope that he will join Nelson and other senators in voting to cut off debate.

Bush's White House speaks fluent Latino
By Ruben Navarrette Jr.

DALLAS * Supposedly, no less a heavyweight than presidential adviser Karl Rove orchestrates White House efforts to win over Latino voters.
This is the same Karl Rove who is on the cover of the March issue of Texas Monthly, under the provocative headline: "George W.'s &#$@!% Genius." And it's the same Karl Rove who is the subject of the new book, "Bush's Brain," by Texas journalists James Moore and Wayne Slater. The authors say that the leader of the free world, before making policy decisions, often asks: "Where's Karl on this?"
So one can assume that Rove is behind recent efforts to use the plight of the "Honduran hostage" * federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada * to help President Bush rack up more points with Latinos. And if that's true, the word "genius" doesn't do Karl Rove justice.
You remember Estrada. He is President Bush's choice to sit on the prestigious U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. He's also the Latino overachiever with the fabulous personal story: immigrated from Honduras barely able to speak English, graduated magna cum laude from Columbia University and Harvard Law School, clerked for a Supreme Court justice, argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court and so on. In fact, the 42-year-old lawyer would himself be wearing a black robe by now had he not become persona non grata among Senate Democrats, who want to defeat his nomination. It's not personal. It's just politics; Democrats flatly resent President Bush's appeal to Latino voters, and they won't do anything that enhances it, like helping Bush make history by putting the first Hispanic on an appeals court considered a farm club for the Supreme Court.

It has been fascinating. Democrats, who love to drone on about how much they want Latinos and other minorities to achieve, have had to swallow their words. What Democrats really mean is that they want Latinos to achieve * just so long as achievers humbly let the party of John Kennedy take credit for their achievements.

Estrada, whose reluctance to answer questions about specific cases before the Senate Judiciary Committee may have come off as arrogance, flunks the Democrats' test. And so the man who went from Honduras to Harvard has been on ice since Bush first nominated him in May 2001.

Now Bush is fighting back. He's pleading Estrada's case to Hispanic audiences, and this strategy has Rove's fingerprints all over it. The latest pleading was at a White House reception last week for about 150 members of the Latino Coalition, a Washington, D.C.-based consortium of Latino organizations.

Bush seized the opportunity to talk about his stalled nominee.

It's not fair what Senate Democrats are doing to Miguel Estrada, Bush told the group. He noted the double standard, saying that Democrats are unfairly "requiring (Estrada) to answer questions that other judicial nominees ... have not been forced to answer."

And then Bush hit on the one thing that most Latinos appreciate, regardless of their politics: loyalty. The president promised, "I will stand by that man's side until he is sworn in as a judge." At that, the Latino crowd rose to its feet with thunderous applause.

Watching this unfold on television, I had to wonder: Do Democrats know what they're doing in launching an attack that could backfire?

By contrast, it seems somebody in the White House really does know what they're doing when it comes to appealing to Latino voters. And odds are, that someone is Karl Rove.

In their book, Moore and Slater insist that Rove understands the power of loyalty * especially as it relates to his influence over Bush.

"There's nothing more important in the Bush camp than loyalty," says Slater.

Ditto for the Latino community. Either Rove has done his homework with regard to the nation's largest minority, or he has access to people who have done theirs. Either way, Democrats have their work cut out for them in taking on a White House that has learned to speak to Latinos in their own language. And I don't mean Spanish.

W.House Offers Dems New Chance to Question Estrada

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The Bush administration on Wednesday offered Senate Democrats another opportunity to ask questions of conservative lawyer Miguel Estrada a day ahead of a showdown vote on Capitol Hill aimed at breaking the deadlock on his nomination to a federal judgeship.

Senate Democrats have not accepted repeated offers to ask questions of Estrada after they complained he had refused to answer a number of questions at a confirmation hearing in 2002, which they said made him a "stealth candidate."

The Democrats are fighting Estrada's nomination through a vote-blocking filibuster in a battle that is seen as a possible dress rehearsal for Bush's first U.S. Supreme Court nominee, who could be Estrada, if he wins the seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"We are deeply disappointed by and do not understand the near-uniform lack of response thus far to my suggestion of ways in which senators could gather more information about Mr. Estrada," White House counsel Al Gonzales told Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle in a letter.

He said senators who want more information can meet with him, pose written questions to him and ask questions of his former superiors in the Justice Department.

"If the asserted basis for the filibuster -- the need for more information -- is the actual motivation, senators who have engaged in the filibuster should avail themselves of these existing sources of information," Gonzales said.

Senate Republicans have scheduled for Thursday what may be the first of many showdown votes on Estrada. Democrats have predicted they would prevail and keep the nomination bottled up in a divided Senate, which has already debated it for nearly a month.

Republicans said they would hold as many "cloture votes" as needed in coming weeks to end debate and clear the way for a confirmation vote on the 41-year-old Estrada.

To succeed on cloture, Republicans would need the support of 60 of the chamber's 100 senators. A top Democratic aide said Republicans would fall at least three short on Thursday.

Democrats charge that Estrada, whose nomination has drawn a split response from the Hispanic community, is part of Bush's effort to pack the court with right-wing ideologues.

Bush and fellow Republicans contend that the Honduran-born, Harvard-educated Estrada deserves to be confirmed, noting the American Bar Association gave him its highest rating.

In their book, Moore and Slater insist that Rove understands the power of loyalty — especially as it relates to his influence over Bush.

"There's nothing more important in the Bush camp than loyalty," says Slater.

Ditto for the Latino community. Either Rove has done his homework with regard to the nation's largest minority, or he has access to people who have done theirs. Either way, Democrats have their work cut out for them in taking on a White House that has learned to speak to Latinos in their own language. And I don't mean Spanish.

GOP Pushing Estrada's Hispanic Heritage

DAVID ESPO

The Associated Press

Wednesday, March 5, 2003; 2:06 PM

Republicans are stressing Miguel Estrada's Hispanic heritage in the battle over his appointment to the federal appeals court, angling for political gain at the same time they seek votes to overcome a Democratic filibuster.

The racially tinged appeal is muted at times. As when President Bush, flanked by Hispanic officials in his administration, said that Democrats were "applying a double standard to Miguel Estrada" in demanding that he answer more questions than past nominees.

On other occasions, the rhetoric is more pointed. As when Sen. Orrin Hatch characterized the Democratic position this way in remarks on the Senate floor: "We do not care what we do to this Hispanic man, even though he is highly qualified."

And when Sen. George Allen of Virginia, the chairman of the GOP senatorial committee, says that in addition to his legal qualifications, Estrada carries an "added bonus, that he's an inspiration, particularly to Hispanics."

In addition to motivating core supporters, Allen said in an interview, the GOP effort for Estrada "also helps us with independents and moderates, not only Hispanics, because this is appealing to fairness, and having senators have the guts to actually take a stand and not hide behind the skirts of a filibuster."

Republicans point to their own polling data to support such claims, but no independent surveys have yet been made public on the subject and Democrats dispute GOP claims of political advantage.

Whatever the long-term political implications, Republicans remain short of the votes needed to cut off the filibuster against Estrada, a 41-year-old Honduran immigrant who graduated from Harvard Law School, served in the Justice Department and practices law.

After a month of debate, GOP officials have set a first test vote for Thursday, and expect to lose. They are counting on all 51 Senate Republicans and four Democrats to support Estrada. That leaves them short of the 60 needed to cut off the filibuster, but Majority Leader Bill Frist said on Tuesday, "the battle is just beginning."

Many Democrats reject the claims that they are fighting a losing political battle, and say they support policies on education, immigration and other issues that Hispanics favor. If Republicans "are looking at the election, they're going to have to come up with more than lip service," said Rep. Ciro Rodriguez, D-Texas, chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus.

"It's less likely a downside for a Democrat but rather an upside for Bush," said David Beatty, a Democratic pollster with experience in Florida. That's particularly the case, he said, in states such as Florida, New Mexico, and Arizona, where Hispanics make up a relatively large percentage of the population.

Bush won Arizona with 51 percent of the vote two years ago. He lost New Mexico by less than one percent. Florida went to a recount that ultimately decided the election.

Overall, Bush won 35 percent of the Hispanic vote in 2000, according to exit polls, compared with 21 percent for the 1996 presidential nominee, Bob Dole.

Sergio Bendixen, a Democratic pollster with experience in Hispanic public opinion surveys, said that in general, "Latino voters, especially immigrants, do think it's important, very important to appoint other Latinos to judicial positions." At the same time, he said of the Estrada nomination struggle, "The arguments that are being used for and against and the power games are not getting a lot of coverage in the media, or even in the Spanish media."

The ethnic component is only a part of the debate over Estrada, nominated to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for Washington, D.C. The court is viewed as the second most important in the country, and a possible stepping stone to the Supreme Court.

Democrats say Bush is trying to win confirmation for a string of conservative nominees who are less than forthcoming about their own views, but may go on to rule against abortion rights, for example.

In addition, they have demanded release of papers that Estrada wrote while working in the Justice Department solicitor general's office, memoranda that former solicitors general of both parties say should remain confidential.

Republicans argue that Democrats oppose Estrada because he is a conservative, and say Bush should be given a yes-or-no vote on his nominees.

Either way the confirmation fight turns out, GOP strategists say they have a politically winning issue.

GOP sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that in a recent survey, more people said they would view Democratic candidates less favorably as a result of the filibuster than said they would view them more favorably.

Allen, in an interview, said he had on his desk a breakdown of states with Senate elections in 2004, along with their percentage of Hispanic residents. In some, Nevada, New York and California for example, Democrats seeking re-election support the filibuster.

In Florida, Sen. Bob Graham remains undecided. Graham may run for president, a campaign that would require him to seek support from abortion rights groups, organized labor and other Democratic-aligned organizations who oppose Estrada.

But Graham hasn't ruled out seeking re-election in Florida, and the state's other Democratic senator, Bill Nelson, supports Estrada.

"The question should be posed to Senator Graham on why he is not for Miguel Estrada," said Allen. "Maybe this will pressure him."

Sen. Harkin Distorts Jeff Sutton's Record, Says Committee for Justice

Washington, D.C. – C. Boyden Gray, Chairman of the Committee for Justice, a group supporting the President's judicial nominees, today criticized Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa) for urging his fellow Democrats to stall the nomination of one of the best lawyers in America, Sixth Circuit nominee Jeffrey S. Sutton, of Columbus, Ohio.

"Both as a government lawyer and in private practice, Jeff Sutton has skillfully represented clients from across the political spectrum," said Gray. "He defended a blind woman who was denied admission to a state medical school. He sued state colleges and universities for failing to give their disabled students voter-registration materials. He received a 'well-qualified' rating from the American Bar Association. And The American Lawyer named him one of the top 45 lawyers in the country under the age of 45."

"In 2000, Senator Harkin repeatedly called on his Senate colleagues to confirm Eighth Circuit nominee Bonnie Campbell—who is one of Jeff Sutton's strongest backers," Gray continued. "Now the shoe's on the other foot, and Senator Harkin wants Jeff Sutton to be treated as shabbily as he believes his protégé was treated."

Campbell is one of many Democrats to write in support of Jeff Sutton's nomination, describing him as "eminently qualified" and predicting that he "would be a great asset to the federal judiciary." "Having recent experience myself with the judicial confirmation process," she continued, "I strongly urge the Senate to reject any unfair inference that Mr. Sutton's personal views must coincide with positions he has advocated on behalf of clients. . . . I am confident that Mr. Sutton has the ability, temperament, and objectivity to be an excellent judge."

"There was a time when Bonnie Campbell's opinion carried great weight with Senator Harkin," Gray emphasized. On October 23, 2000, Senator Harkin said: "She has had a hearing. Let's bring her out for a vote; do the decent thing. Bring her out and vote it up or down. That's the decent thing."

"An up-or-down vote remains the 'decent thing' to do today—even for a candidate nominated by a Republican President," Gray concluded. "The Senate needs to confirm Jeff Sutton, and it needs to do so now. I call on Senator Harkin and all other Democrats to live up to the standards they set for Senate Republicans three years ago."

The Committee for Justice is a group created to support the president's judicial nominees. C. Boyden Gray is available for interviews on the Sutton nomination and other judicial questions at the number listed above.

State GOP asks Estrada to run against Schumer in 2004

By DEVLIN BARRETT
Associated Press Writer

March 6, 2003, 2:50 PM EST

WASHINGTON -- New York state GOP chairman Alexander Treadwell on Thursday urged stalled judicial nominee Miguel Estrada to challenge Sen. Charles Schumer in the 2004 election.

Treadwell's suggestion came after Senate Republicans tried and failed to break a Democratic filibuster against Estrada. Schumer, as a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has been a leader in the Democratic effort.

Democrats complain Estrada failed to fully answer questions about his views when questioned by the committee, and have sought to review internal memos Estrada wrote while working for the Justice Department's solicitor general.

Thursday's 55-44 vote was five votes short of the required 60 needed to override Democrats. President Bush called the result "a disgrace" and accused Democrats of "playing politics" with Estrada's nomination.

Bush nominated him two years ago to become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Treadwell said Schumer should pay at the polls for his stance.

"What Senator Chuck Schumer did leading the fight against Miguel Estrada was wrong and appalling and he should be held accountable," Treadwell said in a statement. "I am going to ask Miguel Estrada to return home to New York and run against Chuck Schumer."

Asked about the possibility of a challenge from Estrada, Schumer spokesman Phil Singer said, "Mr. Treadwell is once again playing politics while Sen. Schumer is doing his job, working hard and serving the people of New York."

Treadwell called the Senate vote "an outrage to every American, particularly Hispanic Americans."

The Republican party leader said he looks forward to "sitting down and having a very serious conversation with him" about challenging Schumer.

"I'd love him to consider the race. He's an extraordinarily distinguished New Yorker," Treadwell said.

Estrada attended Columbia University, Harvard Law School and practiced law in New York City for a number of years.

Rep. Peter King, R-Long Island, is considering running against Schumer in 2004, but few other names have surfaced among Republicans.

Stop Stalling On Nominations

South Florida Sun-Sentinel Editorial Board
Posted March 6 2003

Memo to U.S. Senate Democrats: Drop the political hack job on the Miguel Estrada nomination.

Estrada, a Honduran-born, Harvard-educated attorney, is President Bush's nominee to the federal court of appeals in Washington, D.C. Democrats unhappy that Estrada has refused to divulge details about his views on legal issues are stalling an up-or-down vote in the chamber.

The debate is degenerating into ugliness. Deep-pocketed political advocacy groups on both sides are planning TV ad campaigns to sling mud at each other. Republicans say they will try to force a vote on his nomination today, but they expect to fall short by a few votes.

This type of partisan bickering over judges has gone on way too long, is unhealthy and doesn't serve the public interest. Judicial nominees need to be chosen depending on their qualifications and knowledge of the law, not on how they answer litmus test questions to see if they are too liberal or too conservative.

That type of ideological nit-picking needs to end, on both sides of the aisle. Republicans who now decry the handling of the Estrada nomination did plenty of bullying during the Clinton years. They blocked a fair number of President Clinton's picks, including a Hispanic who had been chosen for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal in New Orleans.

Now, in the Estrada nomination, Democrats are demanding to read internal Justice Department memoranda written by Estrada. The administration refuses to do so. Precedent, such an important word in the legal jargon, suggests why: The Reagan administration did so in the disastrous Robert Bork nomination.

No one denies there is a lot at stake. The federal courts are the third leg of the American government's checks-and-balances system. Because the GOP has ruled the White House for 22 of the past 34 years, Republican presidents have been able to shape not only the Supreme Court but also the all-important federal circuit and appeals courts as well.

But trying to ideologically gerrymander the judicial nominating process is the wrong way to go. Rather than producing better rulings and opinions, it politicizes the bench and dissuades earnest and promising future nominees from seeking a spot on a federal court. In the aftermath of the bitter and divisive 2000 elections, the country is in dire need of a nonpartisan governmental branch. The courts must rule on law, not politicking. The Senate must choose judges on their ability, not political crystal ball speculating.

It's time for a vote on Estrada, yea or nay. And it's time the Senate gets its focus straight on dealing with judicial appointments.

State GOP asks Estrada to run against Schumer in 2004

By DEVLIN BARRETT
Associated Press Writer

March 6, 2003, 2:50 PM EST

WASHINGTON -- New York state GOP chairman Alexander Treadwell on Thursday urged stalled judicial nominee Miguel Estrada to challenge Sen. Charles Schumer in the 2004 election.

Treadwell's suggestion came after Senate Republicans tried and failed to break a Democratic filibuster against Estrada. Schumer, as a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has been a leader in the Democratic effort.

Democrats complain Estrada failed to fully answer questions about his views when questioned by the committee, and have sought to review internal memos Estrada wrote while working for the Justice Department's solicitor general.

Thursday's 55-44 vote was five votes short of the required 60 needed to override Democrats. President Bush called the result "a disgrace" and accused Democrats of "playing politics" with Estrada's nomination.

Bush nominated him two years ago to become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Treadwell said Schumer should pay at the polls for his stance.

"What Senator Chuck Schumer did leading the fight against Miguel Estrada was wrong and appalling and he should be held accountable," Treadwell said in a statement. "I am going to ask Miguel Estrada to return home to New York and run against Chuck Schumer."

Asked about the possibility of a challenge from Estrada, Schumer spokesman Phil Singer said, "Mr. Treadwell is once again playing politics while Sen. Schumer is doing his job, working hard and serving the people of New York."

Treadwell called the Senate vote "an outrage to every American, particularly Hispanic Americans."

The Republican party leader said he looks forward to "sitting down and having a very serious conversation with him" about challenging Schumer.

"I'd love him to consider the race. He's an extraordinarily distinguished New Yorker," Treadwell said.

Estrada attended Columbia University, Harvard Law School and practiced law in New York City for a number of years.

Rep. Peter King, R-Long Island, is considering running against Schumer in 2004, but few other names have surfaced among Republicans.

Of course this has always been included, but Graham believes we have acted outside the rules.

Thus, an agreement by us to abide by commission rules would incorporate this proviso on the President's powers and prerogatives.

Memo to U.S. Senate Democrats: Drop the political hack job on the Miguel Estrada nomination.

Estrada, a Honduran-born, Harvard-educated attorney, is President Bush's nominee to the federal court of appeals in Washington, D.C. Democrats unhappy that Estrada has refused to divulge details about his views on legal issues are stalling an up-or-down vote in the chamber.

The debate is degenerating into ugliness. Deep-pocketed political advocacy groups on both sides are planning TV ad campaigns to sling mud at each other. Republicans say they will try to force a vote on his nomination today, but they expect to fall short by a few votes.

This type of partisan bickering over judges has gone on way too long, is unhealthy and doesn't serve the public interest. Judicial nominees need to be chosen depending on their qualifications and knowledge of the law, not on how they answer litmus test questions to see if they are too liberal or too conservative.

That type of ideological nit-picking needs to end, on both sides of the aisle. Republicans who now decry the handling of the Estrada nomination did plenty of bullying during the Clinton years. They blocked a fair number of President Clinton's picks, including a Hispanic who had been chosen for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal in New Orleans.

Now, in the Estrada nomination, Democrats are demanding to read internal Justice Department memoranda written by Estrada. The administration refuses to do so. Precedent, such an important word in the legal jargon, suggests why: The Reagan administration did so in the disastrous Robert Bork nomination.

No one denies there is a lot at stake. The federal courts are the third leg of the American government's checks-and-balances system. Because the GOP has ruled the White House for 22 of the past 34 years, Republican presidents have been able to shape not only the Supreme Court but also the all-important federal circuit and appeals courts as well.

But trying to ideologically gerrymander the judicial nominating process is the wrong way to go. Rather than producing better rulings and opinions, it politicizes the bench and dissuades earnest and promising future nominees from seeking a spot on a federal court. In the aftermath of the bitter and divisive 2000 elections, the country is in dire need of a nonpartisan governmental branch. The courts must rule on law, not politicking. The Senate must choose judges on their ability, not political crystal ball speculating.

It's time for a vote on Estrada, yea or nay. And it's time the Senate gets its focus straight on dealing with judicial appointments.

Don't let mum be the word for Estrada
Tisha R. Tallman and Charles T. Lester Jr. - For the Journal-Constitution
Thursday, March 6, 2003
Too many people are treating the battle over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a powerful lifetime job on the federal appeals court as pure partisan politics. It is really an important struggle over the future of our federal courts, more specifically about whether the federal courts abandon the crucial role they have long played in protecting the civil rights of individual Americans against abuses by states or others.
That central issue is getting lost in accusations by Estrada supporters that opposition to his confirmation is somehow anti-Hispanic. Latino elected representatives, Latino civil rights groups and many others have concluded that it is important to oppose Estrada's confirmation in the Senate based on his troubling record on issues such as civil rights, racial profiling and affirmative action, along with his refusal to answer important questions about how he would approach the Constitution and his role as a federal judge.
So the question is not who Estrada is, but what he would do as a powerful federal judge.
There is also a broader context that makes Estrada's views and his stonewalling even more important. Far-right groups who are eager to use the federal courts to turn back the clock on civil rights protections and other crucial responsibilities of the federal government are championing Estrada's nomination.
Estrada is a member of the Federalist Society, the legal group leading the campaign to make states' rights a higher constitutional priority than the protection of individuals' constitutional rights and liberties. Many federal court judges are also pursuing this goal, and if they are successful, Americans will lose the federal courts as an important ally in preserving their rights and legal protections.
Of course, that is not how President Bush's federal court nominees, including Estrada, are described. They know the public would not support such a huge rollback of vital rights in our country. So the objective has been for Estrada to keep quiet. Administration officials have reportedly instructed nominees not to discuss any rulings about which they have not previously expressed their views in writing. Many nominees and potential nominees have been advised not to answer such questions and have been told that such a closed-mouth strategy worked well for past nominees, and will work well for them.
The administration has even refused to release memos Estrada wrote at the Justice Department, even though similar documents have been released by other Republican and Democratic administrations to help senators evaluate nominees for judgeships and other high-level jobs.
When there is so much at stake, it is deeply offensive for the administration and its allies to accuse Estrada's opponents of being anti-Hispanic or to imply, as they do in their television and radio ads, that his opponents are motivated by a bigoted desire to keep Hispanic judges off the bench.

It is also extremely hypocritical coming from Republican senators who blocked several Hispanic judicial nominees from even getting a hearing or a vote during the Clinton administration. Clinton nominee Richard Paez was forced to wait for four years; others, such as Enrique Moreno (Harvard Law School 1982) and Jorge Rangel (Harvard Law School 1973), never even had a committee hearing. Where was the outcry from Estrada's friends during that blockade against good Hispanic lawyers and judges?

Under the Constitution, the Senate has a very important role in confirming a president's nominees for lifetime jobs as federal judges. It is an essential part of our constitutional system of checks and balances. When you have a White House that refuses to cooperate with senators of both parties and resists any effort to reach agreement on a compromise plan for appointing more mainstream moderate judicial nominees, senators must take a stand.

Critics are complaining about senators' use of the filibuster. But their only other option would be to reward the stonewalling by Estrada and the Bush administration. That is what is at stake. And that's why we support senators who use every legitimate means to oppose this nominee.

Sen. Graham Delays Decision on Estrada

By NEDRA PICKLER
The Associated Press
Thursday, March 6, 2003; 2:42 PM
The Democratic senators vying for the party's presidential nomination voted Thursday to block Miguel Estrada's judicial nomination with one notable exception - Sen. Bob Graham.
Recuperating at his Florida home following Jan. 31 heart surgery, Graham's spokesman said the senator has not decided whether to support President Bush's nominee, who, if confirmed, would become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.
Graham has to decide whether to break party ranks to support Estrada at the same time he is pursuing the Democratic presidential nomination. But the senator has not ruled out running for re-election next year in Florida, where one in six residents is Hispanic, and he already is facing criticism from a possible Republican rival that he is undermining an Honduran immigrant's promotion to the bench.
"It's cowardly that Senator Graham didn't even bother to voice an opinion on this historic vote," said Rep. Mark Foley, R-Fla. "Now that he's launched his presidential campaign, we're seeing a new Bob Graham - a Bob Graham who is more concerned with pandering to liberal Democratic primary voters rather than standing up for a nominee who would make Florida's Hispanic community proud."
Graham spokesman Paul Anderson said the senator did not see the need to stop his recuperation and rush back to Washington when his vote would not have changed the outcome. Republicans fell five votes short of the 60 needed to end the filibuster and force a final vote.
"Rather than interrupt his exercise he says he'll be back next week and vote when he needs to vote," Anderson said.
Graham's indecision stems from his disenchantment with the politicization of judicial nominations, according to his aide. "He's deeply disturbed by that and trying to figure out if there is a way of confronting it," Anderson said.
The senator is considering whether he should join the Republicans in voting to end the filibuster, and then oppose Estrada's nomination. But Anderson acknowledged that an end to the filibuster would likely lead to Estrada's confirmation because Democrats lack the majority of votes to block his placement on the bench.
Graham's presidential rivals in the Senate - John Edwards of North Carolina, John Kerry of Massachusetts and Joe Lieberman of Connecticut - were among those who voted to continue the delay. Republicans say they will bring up the nomination repeatedly until Estrada gets a confirmation vote.

Estrada supporters have run ads on Florida radio stations in support of his nomination. The state's junior senator, Bill Nelson, is one of four Democrats who broke ranks with the party to support an end to the filibuster, and Florida Gov. Jeb Bush has urged Graham to support the nomination.

I'm sorry to bother you with this again. I believe that we've talked about mentioning the RNC in a letter, but I can't find a single email that says it's ok to do.

The letter I have is from a lady that sent a $200 donation to the RNC, but the contribution has not been credited to her account. She is writing the President to inquire about the check. I sent a copy of the letter to Kate Walters in Political Affairs, and she forwarded the information to the RNC. We would like to say, "We have forwarded a copy of your letter to the Republican National Committee Finance Department for review. They may contact you directly regarding your missing $200 donation."

Could you please advise on this language and let us know whether or not we can mention the RNC in our reply? Thank you so much.

Where was the outcry from Estrada's friends during that blockade against good Hispanic lawyers and judges?

Under the Constitution, the Senate has a very important role in confirming a president's nominees for lifetime jobs as federal judges. It is an essential part of our constitutional system of checks and balances. When you have a White House that refuses to cooperate with senators of both parties and resists any effort to reach agreement on a compromise plan for appointing more mainstream moderate judicial nominees, senators must take a stand.

Critics are complaining about senators' use of the filibuster. But their only other option would be to reward the stonewalling by Estrada and the Bush administration. That is what is at stake. And that's why we support senators who use every legitimate means to oppose this nominee.

State GOP asks Estrada to run against Schumer in 2004

By DEVLIN BARRETT
Associated Press Writer

March 6, 2003, 2:50 PM EST

WASHINGTON -- New York state GOP chairman Alexander Treadwell on Thursday urged stalled judicial nominee Miguel Estrada to challenge Sen. Charles Schumer in the 2004 election.

Treadwell's suggestion came after Senate Republicans tried and failed to break a Democratic filibuster against Estrada. Schumer, as a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has been a leader in the Democratic effort.

Democrats complain Estrada failed to fully answer questions about his views when questioned by the committee, and have sought to review internal memos Estrada wrote while working for the Justice Department's solicitor general.

Thursday's 55-44 vote was five votes short of the required 60 needed to override Democrats. President Bush called the result "a disgrace" and accused Democrats of "playing politics" with Estrada's nomination.

Bush nominated him two years ago to become the first Hispanic on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Treadwell said Schumer should pay at the polls for his stance.

"What Senator Chuck Schumer did leading the fight against Miguel Estrada was wrong and appalling and he should be held accountable," Treadwell said in a statement. "I am going to ask Miguel Estrada to return home to New York and run against Chuck Schumer."

Asked about the possibility of a challenge from Estrada, Schumer spokesman Phil Singer said, "Mr. Treadwell is once again playing politics while Sen. Schumer is doing his job, working hard and serving the people of New York."

Treadwell called the Senate vote "an outrage to every American, particularly Hispanic Americans."

The Republican party leader said he looks forward to "sitting down and having a very serious conversation with him" about challenging Schumer.

"I'd love him to consider the race. He's an extraordinarily distinguished New Yorker," Treadwell said.

Estrada attended Columbia University, Harvard Law School and practiced law in New York City for a number of years.

Rep. Peter King, R-Long Island, is considering running against Schumer in 2004, but few other names have surfaced among Republicans.

JACKSONVILLE (FL) TIMES UNION
POLITICS: Facing choices

If he were to help sabotage the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada, Bob Graham might gain some political capital from the liberal electorate in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination. But it would be a major snub of his constituents, and could prove costly in the long run.
Estrada should have been con- firmed quickly to a seat on the D.C. Court of Appeals.
He has impressive credentials, in- cluding tenure as a clerk for a U.S. Supreme Court justice and a successful stint arguing cases before the high court.
The American Bar Association gives him its highest possible rating -- and at least five former solicitors general, representing both major political parties, have enthusiastically endorsed him.
Several Democrats in the Senate, including Florida's junior senator, Bill Nelson, back Estrada. Even such bastions of liberal thought as The Washington Post and Atlanta Journal-Constitution editorial pages have voiced support.
Estrada has more than enough votes for confirmation. The hard-line Democratic leadership, however, is trying to block a vote, leaving Estrada on the verge of becoming the first judicial nominee in American history to be defeated by a filibuster.
Yet, his is an inspirational story.
As a teenager, he came to this country speaking little English but he graduated from law school with honors. He is so widely respected that he is considered likely to get a spot on the Supreme Court one day if he should prove himself competent on the appellate court. That would make him the first Hispanic on the high court, and a tremendous role model.
Liberals haven't been clear on why they are willing to bring Congress to a standstill and shatter centuries of precedent.
They say they want more assurances that Estrada isn't conservative. But when Democratic presidents have named liberal judges, Dems have insisted the Senate evaluate nominees purely on the basis of judicial expertise and temper- ament, without regard to philosophy.
"Now, every senator can vote against any nominee ... But it is the responsibility of the U.S. Senate to at least bring them to a vote," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., declared in 1997.
Nearly 17 percent of all Floridians are Hispanic. Florida will be a crucial state in the 2004 presidential election, and Graham isn't assured of carrying it if he gets the nomination.

Republicans plan to call for a cloture vote Thursday. Throughout his long career, Graham has adhered to principle. That gives us hope that he will join Nelson and other senators in voting to cut off debate.

Thanks for your email--would a phone conversation this Wednesday, Thursday after 11 am, or Friday be convenient? (I've appended my original email below for your reference; I contacted you in December about possible summer opportunities.)

I assume I can reach you through the White House switchboard; if that's not the case, please send me your direct line.

Cordially,

Dear Brett,

As you may remember, Damara Griffith introduced us briefly after you spoke at Yale Law on judicial selection a few weeks ago. I am still very interested in applying for a summer job in the White House Counsel's office, and would be delighted to talk to you about the possibility.

Per Damara's suggestion, I am also contacting Allison Riepenhoff about the logistics of the application process.

saw fit to publish a letter to the editor that I wrote recently. http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/articles/A8990-2003Jan17.html. Predictably, E.J. Dionne wrote yet another column criticizing W's nominees and judges--specifically Judge John Bates--without any examination of the facts. I merely pointed out one of the many misrepresentations in Dionne's article. Hopefully, with Senator Hatch as Judiciary Committee chairman, W's nominees will have an easier road to confirmation. Best of luck with everything going on.

Big Business vs. Estrada
Who the &Hispanics8 opposing the judicial nominee are.
By Christopher Morris & Timothy P. Carney

mong the slew of lies Democrats use to justify their unprecedented filibuster of judicial-nominee Miguel Estrada is the claim that prominent groups representing Hispanics oppose the D.C. lawyer's appointment to the federal appellate bench.

To be sure, some well-heeled Latino groups have joined the fight to keep him off the court, but these lobbyists do not speak for Hispanics. Rather than grassroots, member-supported organizations, Estrada's opponents are liberal interest groups who fill their coffers with huge grants from the Ford Foundation, AT&T, and a handful of other fat-cat organizations.
The Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund (MALDEF) has led the charge against Honduran-born Estrada. Joining MALDEF are the Southwest Voter Registration and Education Project (SVREP), and the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund (PRLDEF).
It is important to know, however, whom these groups speak for.
The aforementioned groups have no members. They do not represent any portion of the population. They are activists who take huge checks from liberal foundations and gigantic corporations. This is in contrast to the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), an outspoken advocate of Estrada, which has over 100,000 members.
MALDEF's money comes primarily from the Ford Foundation; the left-wing cash cow has given at least $12 million to MALDEF since 1998. The Fannie Mae Foundation apparently believes that bankrolling a filibuster of the first Hispanic nominee to the federal appeals court is part of the "American Dream Business": they've given nearly a quarter-million dollars to MALDEF in the past five years.

Estrada's opponents also get help from the Carnegie Corporation to the tune of a million to MALDEF and $750,000 to PRLDEF since 1998. British Petroleum, Shell Oil, and Verizon also bankroll these attack groups. SVREP has taken $400,000 in large grants in the past five years, mostly from phone companies.

In essence, then, Estrada's opponents are a handful of liberal lawyers who rely on a few left-wing deep pockets and have bamboozled big companies out of millions.

Beyond making the point that Estrada's opponents lack any credibility, this all raises another question: Why do AT&T, Verizon, Coca-Cola, Fannie Mae, Allstate Insurance, Shell Oil, British Petroleum, Bristol-Myers Squibb, Ford Motor, Bank of America, Wal-Mart, and others fund these groups * which have become little more than the ethnic arm of the Left's well-oiled attack machine?

It is interesting to note the importance of these groups for the Left. It is somewhat perilous for Tom Daschle, Chuck Schumer, and Ted Kennedy * white guys * to engage in their politics of personal destruction against women or minorities. This difficulty is a result of the current toxic racial environment crafted by the left itself * any attack on a minority can be spun to the credulous media as racist.

So the attack machine needs Hispanics if it wants to attack Hispanics. Unfortunately for them, Hispanics want Estrada on the bench. LULAC, Hispanic National Bar Association, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Hispanic Business Roundtable, the Latino Coalition, the Hispanic Engineers Business Corporation, and the Hispanic Contractors of America have all come out for the nominee.

LULAC, the nation's oldest Hispanic organization publicly endorsed Estrada wholeheartedly in February. LULAC has 115,000 members and has been active in the Hispanic community dating back to the 1920s. LULAC, while it has cordial relationships with MALDEF and PRDLF, differs from these anti-Estrada groups in one significant way: LULAC has a vast network of dues-paying members. In other words: LULAC speaks for real people, not just big money.

Gabriela Lemus, LULAC director of policy and legislation explains LULAC's endorsement of Estrada as a simple matter of qualifications.

MALDEF and PRLDF, on the other hand, are lawyers attempting to influence policy in Washington through legislative advocacy and class-action lawsuits. But they're all the Left has in their attack on Estrada, which is a smaller battle in the war over the Supreme Court * and ultimately over Roe v. Wade.

Hatch has tirelessly defended qualified nominees and urged his fellow Senators to act fairly, reasonably, and promptly on all judicial nominees.

March 9, 2003The Power of the FourthBy DEBORAH SONTAG

he 19th-century courthouse that houses the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit sits across from a CVS and a Dress Barn on a desultory stretch of Main Street in Richmond, Va. The entrance -- peeling ''Pull'' sign, metal detector, dim lobby -- is not awe-inspiring. But upstairs in the courtrooms, beneath the pendulous chandeliers and the oil portraits of former jurists, a hush prevails. Whether or not the judges are on the bench, people whisper. It is as if they tacitly accept that the atmosphere should continue to be rarefied even as the judicial process becomes increasingly polluted by politics.

This 148-year-old building, once the site of the Confederate Treasury, is where you go if you are appealing the decisions of federal judges or juries in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina or South Carolina.
It's the last stop before the Supreme Court, which, given how few cases the highest court actually hears, essentially makes it the court of last resort for those seeking justice in this region.. Let the plaintiff beware, though; the Fourth Circuit is considered the shrewdest, most aggressively

Wiggins to the murder, though there was unidentified forensic evidence -- fingerprints, hair, fibers and a baseball cap left at the scene. Still, in a bench trial, a state judge convicted Wiggins of robbery and murder.

During the subsequent sentencing trial, Wiggins's inexperienced public defenders decided to reargue his innocence instead of presenting a case for why he should get life not death. They did not even bother to investigate his background to discover whether he possessed the kind of ''social history'' that is routinely used to humanize a defendant and mitigate against the imposition of the death penalty.

Wiggins has now been on death row since 1989. In 1993, a high-powered Washington lawyer, Donald B. Verrilli, Jr., took on Wiggins's case pro bono, and it began wending its way through the postconviction review and then the state appeals process. Verrilli found the case against Wiggins to be weakly circumstantial at best, offering evidence only that Wiggins was a logical suspect. Verrilli said he came to believe that Wiggins did not commit the crime but rather served as the ''fall guy for people more clever than him.'' Specifically, there is a plausible alternative to the course of events involving Wiggins's girlfriend, who was 15 years his elder. All charges against her were dropped, and she testified against Wiggins; her brother, it seemed, lived in an apartment below the victim's.

The case's first stop in federal court was at the bench of Maryland's United States chief district judge, J. Frederick Motz, who happens to be married to Judge Diana Motz, a Clinton appointee on the Fourth Circuit. Judge Frederick Motz is a former federal prosecutor appointed by Reagan; he is not, as he said in court one day, ''an anti-capital punishment person.'' In a 55-page opinion, he concluded, ''No rational finder of fact could have found Wiggins guilty of murder beyond a reasonable doubt.'' He invalidated the murder conviction and threw out the death sentence too.

I asked Wiggins whether he was happy when Motz took his side. ''It's hard for me to be happy about anything,'' he said. Wiggins told me that he could remember only one joyful time in his life. It was after his mother burned him. Six years old, he awoke in a hospital bed, surrounded by nurses who clucked over him, petting his hair and bringing him cookies.

When Maryland prosecutors decided to appeal to the Fourth Circuit, Motz publicly questioned their desire to continue pursuing what he characterized as a flimsy case. ''Why isn't this case of moral concern to the state?'' he asked. ''Or don't you care?''

At the Fourth Circuit, Wiggins drew a panel of three Republican appointees -- Wilkinson, Widener and Niemeyer. In a hearing last winter, the judges appeared to be wrestling with the case; they doubled the time they usually allot attorneys to present their arguments. Last May, however, in a decision written by the 79-year-old Judge Widener, the panel ended up reinstating Wiggins's conviction and his death sentence. The panel gave the original trial judge the benefit of the doubt; it deferred to his assertion that he based his decision of Wiggins's guilt on a totality of evidence and that he did not infer Wiggins's guilt from his possession of the victim's property. And it ruled that the public defenders' failure to present Wiggins's background during the sentencing hearing was a trial tactic rather than negligence.

And yet the panel had some hesitations. Judge Wilkinson wrote that he couldn't ''say with certainty'' that Wiggins committed the murder. And Judge Niemeyer acknowledged that it was something of a close call to find that Wiggins had adequate counsel.

''I think that most circuit courts, if they have real doubts about what has happened in a capital case, they will reverse,'' Professor Liebman said. ''The Fourth Circuit doesn't have the same threshold. In this case, they saw the tripwire and stepped right over it.''

Verrilli petitioned the Supreme Court, and in a hearing scheduled for March 24, the court will pick up Wiggins's case, continuing its dialogue with the

Fourth Circuit's decision-making. Since 1996, the Supreme Court has reviewed far more death-penalty cases coming from the Fourth Circuit than from any other appeals court -- 9 from the Fourth Circuit alone and 12 from the other 11 appeals courts combined. The 1996 date is significant because in that year Congress passed the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, limiting federal courts' review of capital cases to those in which there's ''an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law.'' That ''unreasonableness,'' however, is open to interpretation, and while the Fourth Circuit has chosen to see its hands tied, other circuits have granted themselves more wiggle room. The Supreme Court is thus mediating the conflict between the circuits, trying to help them figure out when it is appropriate and inappropriate to defer to the state courts

Generally, the Supreme Court upholds the Fourth Circuit's tough stance in death-penalty cases by a 5-to-4 vote, dividing ideologically. Take the Virginia case of Walter Mickens Jr., whose lawyer, it turned out, had at one time defended Mickens's 17-year-old victim. A rare liberal panel of the Fourth Circuit found that Mickens's lawyer had a conflict of interest. But the Fourth Circuit did not want to let that reversal stand; it met en banc and reinstated his conviction. The case then went to the Supreme Court, which agreed, 5 to 4, with the Fourth Circuit's full panel: it held that the lawyer's conflict of interest didn't matter since Mickens couldn't prove that it adversely affected the outcome of his case. Last June, Mickens was executed by lethal injection.

In two important rulings on how to interpret the 1996 law, however, the Supreme Court reversed the Fourth Circuit, finding that the Richmond court had chosen to read the statute too narrowly. In one case, the Supreme Court, unlike the Fourth Circuit, found the state court's judgment ''unreasonable'' for failing to recognize that the legal representation of Terry Williams, a Virginia inmate, was so ineffective that it didn't meet minimum constitutional standards for competency. Like Wiggins's, Williams's lawyer didn't investigate his horrific childhood; his lawyer was subsequently disbarred for mental disability.

Many, if not most, appeals judges show a pattern to their judging over time.

Wilkinson has granted a new hearing to a death-row prisoner once in 19 years, according to a South Carolina Law Review article. In contrast, Judge Francis D. Murnaghan Jr. of Maryland, who used to be the Fourth Circuit's pre-eminent liberal, granted relief to about one out of three death-row prisoners who came before him.

Yet no judge wants to be seen as tailoring his decisions to his ideology, as bending the law to determine preconceived results. Every judge will tell you that he or she comes to each case with an open mind, seeing a distinct set of facts that raises distinct legal questions.

Wilkinson said he feels strongly that judges should never be rated and ranked as if they were politicians whose votes could be counted. He said that the statistical analyses of judges' decisions, followed by the affixing of a label of liberal or conservative, is reductive.

''I don't go on the bench as liberal or conservative,'' Wilkinson said. And yet he does not dispute that he is a conservative jurist. He acknowledges his place among those who came of age concerned about "the excessive activism" of the Warren Court. The Warren Court was seen as having overstepped its bounds with rulings that expanded equal protection, the right to vote, criminal defendants' rights and the right to privacy. Conservatives, in contrast, preached judicial restraint.
Yet with conservatives now controlling most of the nation's federal appeals courts, Wilkinson is one among many who have come to a new appreciation of judicial activism. Like the "new federalists" whose conservative thinking increasingly influences the legal mainstream, Wilkinson said he believes that the Constitution is more than just the Bill of Rights. He doesn't think that the Bill of Rights has been overemphasized, he is quick to say, but that what he calls "the structural Constitution" has been underemphasized.

"That body of the document that spells out the relationship between the federal government and the states was neglected for far too long," he said. "The power of Congress was seen as unlimited and that of the states as a virtual nullity." Wilkinson has found it exciting, he said, to be engaged in redressing this imbalance, which sometimes means striking down Congressional acts that seem to usurp state power unconstitutionally.

But he notes, because he is of judicious temperament, that judicial activism is "heady wine" and that restraint is still the greater virtue. Everything in moderation. Luttig takes exception to the view that striking down Congressional laws necessarily constitutes judicial activism. "Remember, it's sophomoric to think that invalidation of a statute equals judicial activism," he said. "Judicial activism means deciding a case based on one's own personal predilections, regardless. It might well take the form of sustaining a law that should be stricken." Several years ago, in an opinion written by Luttig, the Fourth Circuit struck down a key provision of the Violence Against Women Act. As Luttig saw it, Congress had established a federal civil right that didn't exist in the Constitution ? the right to be free of crimes of violence motivated by gender ? and then established the additional right for victims of such violence to sue their aggressors for damages in federal court. Congress had justified the law based Luttig ruled that Congress had overstepped its authority. A three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit originally heard the appeal, upholding the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, as had 17 of 18 federal district judges who had reviewed it. But the full Fourth Circuit vacated the liberal decision, taking the case en banc. Motz, the Clinton appointee, hinted in her dissent that her colleagues were motivated by their distaste for the act itself. "Judges' policy choices provide no basis for finding a statute unconstitutional," she wrote.

The case went up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court agreed with the Fourth Circuit, 5 to 4, striking down the right of rape victims and abused women to sue in federal court under this statute. The Supreme Courtversion of the Fourth Circuit's ruling became the law of the land, and the Fourth Circuit and the Supreme Court jointly reinforced the principle that Congress's powers are limited.

Luttig's opinion, though, went beyond the Supreme Court's rhetorically. He began, "We the People, distrustful of power, and believing that government limited and dispersed protects freedom best, provided that our federal government would be one of enumerated powers, and that all power unenumerated would be reserved to the several States and to ourselves."

Cass Sunstein, a University of Chicago law professor, said that no court had issued such a battle cry for states' rights since before the New Deal.

During the nearly two hours that the Fourth Circuit debated her case, Ocheltree, dressed in a pin-striped pants suit with a white handkerchief sewed into the breast pocket, sat anonymously on a pewlike bench, holding her husband's hand in a tight grip. The judges didn't even know she was there. Her feathered dirty blond hair fell over her eyes a few times, and she tossed it back. Other than that, she was frozen, riveted by the theater of the bench, which veered occasionally into Grand Guignol.

Chuck Thompson, the lawyer for Scollon Productions, who used to clerk for Senior Judge Clyde H. Hamilton, a Republican appointee to the Fourth Circuit, wore a red bow tie. "May it please the court," he said. He didn't get a chance to say very much more. This was the judges' show. Karen Williams, author of the pro-employer decision, spent more time arguing Scollon's case than Thompson did. Michael, the dissenter, rolled his eyes and defended Ocheltree; Motz fired a few one-line zingers. Luttig, wagging his finger, told his fellow judges where their legal reasoning proved inadequate and instructed the lawyers for both sides what their arguments should be. "I'd have to disagree with you," Thompson ventured at one point.

"You can't!" Luttig retorted. "You can't disagree!" Wilkinson, perennially concerned with civility, exuded disgust at the locker-room atmosphere being described and exasperation with his colleagues for rehashing the ugly details of the case. "Who enjoys what and who enjoys whom," he said, his voice booming, "that's not for an appellate court to decide." For Wilkinson, the bottom line seemed to be that there was a jury verdict, and his remarks hinted that he was disinclined to overturn it.

Luttig, however, didn't seem certain that the jury verdict was defensible, and he scolded Ocheltree's lawyer, William Elvin Hopkins Jr., 36, for failing to make his best case. As Luttig saw it, the crux of Hopkins's challenge was to explain why Ocheltree was discriminated against if the locker-room atmosphere predated her arrival at Scollon. "You'll lose if you don't better answer that before this panel," he said. Luttig suggested this theory: Most men would stop such salacious talk once a woman was in their midst and if they didn't, it was precisely because she was there. Their behavior may not have changed, but their motivation did, he said.

When the conversation became graphic, Widener, whose eyes had been closed, seemed to startle into participation. "You're asking us to hold that when there's an all-male shop, a woman can walk in and say, 'Give me the money!"'

Williams agreed: there was no reason for Ocheltree to have been any more offended than her male colleagues by sexually explicit conversation, not in an age when magazines feature articles about how much women enjoy oral sex.

As in most oral arguments I observed, Gregory, the African-American judge who joined the court in 2001, didn't grandstand. When he speaks, though, he doesn't mince words, slices to the core and if the subject is discrimination, he gets it. Title VII is not about sex or race, he said; it's about power. And the incidents with the mannequin speak volumes, he said: "The problem with the mannequin is that it became almost an effigy, if you will, of the plaintiff."

As Ocheltree left the courthouse, still holding her husband's hand, she said that she felt the court would do the right thing when it issued its decision later this year. There was no real basis for her optimism, though, not in the court's track record or in the questions the judges asked at her hearing. It could go either way, but the odds are not with the Lisa Ocheltrees or the Kevin Wigginses, not in the Fourth Circuit or, for that matter, in an ever increasing number of appellate courts in this country.

Legal scholars talk about the pendulum swinging from liberal to conservative, from a preoccupation with individuals' rights to a preoccupation with states' rights, and suggest that, in time, it will swing back once more. It would certainly help many Americans sustain their faith in the system if the courts could find their equilibrium, if they could become less ideological, less predictable and less political. That doesn't appear to be on the horizon, though, not in the foreseeable future. In the historic site in Richmond where the Confederacy once thrived, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is ushering in the 21st century.

On the last Tuesday in February, Lisa Ocheltree of Lexington, S.C., settled warily onto a hardwood bench in a courtroom carpeted in billiard-table green. Several years ago, Ocheltree won a substantial jury verdict in a sexual-harassment suit against her former employer. The jury found that vulgar language, crude sexual commentary and sexual acting-out created an extremely hostile working environment for Ocheltree as the sole woman in a costume-production workshop. But a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit overturned that verdict late last year. ''Were they telling me that I should have just sucked it up?'' Ocheltree asked. She petitioned the full court to reconsider the panel's 2-to-1 decision, and the judges agreed to take her case en banc, which they hardly ever do.

And so all 12 judges were about to file in and take the bench, affording a rare glimpse at the dynamic of the entire court. Ocheltree's lawyer was nervous: a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit provides a grilling, but this would be a full-court press. Ocheltree, however, was determined not to be intimidated. ''Just because I'm a blue-collar worker doesn't mean I'm gonna let the black robes scare me,'' she said. ''It may be the South, but it's the 21st century.''

Geographically, the Fourth Circuit, one of 13 federal courts of appeals, is not the most southern. But it is singularly genteel: its judges descend from the bench to shake lawyers' hands after oral arguments.. And as recently as 1999, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist led the Fourth Circuit's annual judicial conference in a traditional rousing sing-along that included ''Dixie.'' This always offended civil rights lawyers and the few African-American lawyers in attendance. But it never surprised them.

It was not until the year 2001 that the Fourth Circuit, which has the largest African-American population of any appellate jurisdiction, became the final federal appeals court to be racially or ethnically integrated. Many consider the court to be a legacy of Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms because the former senators from the Carolinas played a key role in shaping it through patronage appointments and obstructionism. Indeed, President Bush's most recent appointment to the Fourth Circuit, Dennis W. Shedd, is a former chief of staff to Thurmond; his pending nominee, Terrence Boyle, is a former Helms aide unsuccessfully nominated by Bush's father more than 10 years ago.

Although President Bush may or may not get the chance to name a new Supreme Court justice this year, he is busy trying to fill 25 federal appeals court vacancies, including 3 on the Fourth Circuit, with the backing of a newly Republican Senate. He already has 16 nominees waiting for confirmation. And despite the occasional Democratic filibuster, he appears poised to transform the federal judiciary -- which includes 179 appeals judges at full strength -- back into an overwhelmingly conservative bench. In 12 years between them, Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush established a Republican majority on every appeals court. Clinton, facing stiff resistance from an opposition Senate for six of his eight years, pushed that back somewhat so that Bush inherited a Republican majority on 8 of the 13 appellate courts, with 3 more poised to swing Republican through his appointments. And those appointments, because they are for life, could reverberate for generations. Judge H. Emory Widener Jr. of the Fourth Circuit, who i

As Bush makes his selections, his staunch conservative supporters tout the Fourth Circuit as a model to emulate, and liberals view it anxiously as a harbinger of doom. That's because the Fourth Circuit, which has eight Republican and four Democratic appointees, is not only conservative but also bold and muscular in its conservatism. It is confident enough to strike down acts of Congress when it finds them stretching the limits of the federal government's power and hardheaded enough to rule against nearly every death-row defendant who comes before it.

To critics, the Fourth Circuit lacks compassion for the individual. To admirers, the Fourth Circuit is a welcome corrective after years of soft, liberally activist benches, a brilliant court with a healthy respect for the concerns of prosecutors, of business owners, of state officials -- and of the Bush administration, which received deference from the court to treat a United States citizen captured in Afghanistan as an ''enemy combatant'' who could be detained without charges even on American soil.

Helms once told a North Carolina newspaper that the furor in Washington over judicial nominations was out of whack with the sentiments of the public: ''You go out on the street of Raleigh, N.C., and ask 100 people, 'Do you give a damn who is on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals?' They'll say, 'What's that?'''

He had a point. Few pay much attention to federal courts below the Supreme Court level. But they should. The appellate courts, created in the late 19th century to relieve overcrowding of the Supreme Court's docket, decide about 28,000 cases a year compared with the highest court's 75 or so. Practically speaking, they have the final say in most matters of law; their reach is broader, if not deeper, than the Supreme Court's itself.

Judges on the Fourth Circuit say that they just follow the Supreme Court's lead. And it is true that the Fourth Circuit is the appellate court closest in thinking to the Rehnquist Court. But the relationship is symbiotic: the Fourth Circuit does not just imitate; it also initiates. It pushes the envelope, testing the boundaries of conservative doctrine in the area of, say, reasserting states rights over big government. Sometimes, the Supreme Court reins in the Fourth Circuit, reversing its more experimental decisions, but it also upholds them or leaves them alone to become the law of the land. There is a cross-fertilization, which could see its apotheosis this spring: the Fourth Circuit is dominated intellectually by two very different conservative judges, J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd and J. Michael Luttig, both of whom are leading candidates for the next Supreme Court vacancy.

Judge Karen J. Williams, 52, a tall, slender woman with delicate features and a regal carriage, wrote the decision overturning the jury verdict in Lisa Ocheltree v. Scollon Productions. The federal law that prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace, as she phrased it ever so piquantly, is not a ''neo-Victorian chivalry code designed to protect'' the ''tender sensitivities of contemporary women.''

Williams eloped at 17 with her teenage sweetheart, gave birth to four children, taught school, commuted to law school and eventually became a lawyer in her husband's private practice in Orangeburg, S.C. She was appointed by former President Bush in 1992 on the recommendation of Strom Thurmond, a friend of her father-in-law's, then the president of the South Carolina State Senate. At Williams's investiture, Thurmond and her father-in-law reminisced about how they used to double-date.

Williams, in the self-mocking ''baby judge'' speech that newly appointed jurists make at the annual judicial conference, said that Thurmond ''maneuvered my hearings so that I would be the first woman on the circuit and his nominee.'' Thurmond, she said, liked to be on the cutting edge, and he just plain liked women too. In the course of the confirmation process, Williams added, a Justice Department official pointed out to her that her race was listed incorrectly on her driver's license. ''We finally knew then how I got it,'' she said jokingly, referring to the judgeship. ''Not only was I a female, but they had me as a black female.'' Some laughed; others cringed.

Once a month, the judges, whose annual salary of $164,000 is higher than that of senators, travel from their home states to Richmond to hear a week of oral arguments. They sit in three-judge panels randomly selected by a computer program and invariably encounter a rich menu of human dramas and hot-button issues. They hear everything from bankruptcy cases to international child-custody disputes, from race discrimination claims to environmental battles over wetlands. In the January hearings, they debated whether Norfolk, Va., could use an anti-loitering statute to keep an elderly couple from protesting abortion on a bridge over a highway and whether animal-control officers in High Point, N.C., were stripping pit bull owners of their Fourth Amendment rights by killing their dogs. They examined three cadets' contention that the mealtime prayer at the Virginia Military Institute was unconstitutional and an Israeli immigrant's appeal of his conviction for interfering with a flight crew when, on the three-month an

The full Fourth Circuit rarely sits to review the decision of one of its three-judge panels. When it does, though, critics say that it uses this en banc procedure to overturn liberal decisions that slip through, and there are plenty of supporting examples. But with Ocheltree, the judges were sitting in reconsideration of a quite conservative decision, one that would greatly limit the ability of employees in the region to make successful claims of sexual harassment. They were also addressing the sensitive issue of the sanctity of jury decisions.

Williams was the author of an infamous decision several years ago. The Fourth Circuit ruled that the liberal Warren Court's landmark 1966 ruling in Miranda v. Arizona was not constitutionally based, and as such that an obsolete Congressional statute trumped it. More than 30 years ago, the statute was a stillborn attempt to overrule the court's holding that criminal suspects must be apprised of their rights through what have become known as Miranda warnings. It was never enforced and largely forgotten until the Fourth Circuit resurrected it. And Williams's decision helped cement the Fourth Circuit's reputation as a judicially active conservative court. But the Supreme Court reversed it, 7 to 2, with Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, the two most conservative justices and President Bush's self-proclaimed favorites, dissenting. In that instance and several others, the Fourth Circuit's effort to nudge the Supreme Court toward greater conservatism backfired. Still, the Supreme Court has upheld 36.5 percent of

The Fourth Circuit does not march in conservative lock step, however, and its intellectually vibrant judges do not constitute an ideological cabal. The court often reaches consensus across the ideological divide; some of its work is nonideological in nature. Sometimes the majority lets liberal decisions stand; other times even the most conservative judges issue opinions that seem to betray their ideological stripes. And often the fiercest legal arguments are not between the liberals and the conservatives but between conservatives themselves.
Yet when it comes to high-profile decisions, the Fourth Circuit tends to divide neatly along party lines. And taken together, those decisions not only bespeak a conservative philosophy of law but also serve a conservative political agenda. Among its many decisions, the Fourth Circuit has upheld the minute of silence in Virginia schools; ended court-ordered busing in Charlotte; upheld state laws that stringently regulate abortion clinics or require parental notification or ban so-called partial-birth abortions; ruled that the Virginia Military Institute could remain all male as long as there was a separate but comparable education for women; upheld a Charleston, S.C., program that tested maternity patients for illegal drug use without their consent and turned the results over to the police; overturned a Virginia prohibition against license plates bearing the Confederate flag; ruled that the F.D.A. didn't have the authority to regulate nicotine as a drug; and, most recently, overruled a West Virginia federal

As the Ocheltree hearing opened in a packed courtroom, the bailiff intoned the traditional blessing: ''God save the United States and this honorable court.'' The judges took their seats in leather swivel chairs, with the brand-new chief judge, William W. Wilkins Jr. of South Carolina, in the center. Wilkins started his career as a clerk to Judge Clement Haynsworth of the Fourth Circuit (whose Supreme Court nomination by Nixon was rejected by Congress) and then went on to become an aide and campaign director for Thurmond. He was the first federal judge appointed by Reagan.

J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd had technically stepped down as chief judge after seven years, as required by law. But he was sitting just off-center, and he still dominated, he and Luttig, each in his own way.

A warm, gracious and patrician Virginian, Wilkinson, 58, appears slight and owlish in his civilian clothes -- blue blazer, gold buttons -- yet commanding in his robes. The son of a banker, the future judge attended boarding school at Lawrenceville and college at Yale before returning to Virginia to study law. While a law student, he ran as a Republican candidate for Congress; when he got 30 percent of the vote, he jokes, he took it as a mandate to finish law school. He eventually taught law and served as editorial-page editor of The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. (This didn't keep The Pilot from editorializing against his appointment to the bench in 1983, saying that he lacked courtroom experience.)

Wilkinson was confirmed at the age of 39, and he and Luttig share the experience of having been judicial Wunderkinds. Luttig points out that at the time of his appointment in 1991, he held the distinction of being the youngest judge on a federal appeals court. He was 37.
The two judges share other distinctions as well. They both clerked for Supreme Court justices they still revere -- Wilkinson for Lewis F. Powell Jr. and Luttig for Chief Justice Warren Burger as well as for Antonin Scalia when Scalia was an appeals court judge. Both worked for Republican Justice Departments and participated in judicial selections, Wilkinson under Reagan and Luttig under the first Bush. Luttig shepherded Clarence Thomas through his contentious confirmation, and pictures of Thomas hang on his chambers' walls, including one inscribed ''This would not have been possible without you! Thanks so much, buddy!'' (Luttig's three clean-cut male clerks will head to the Supreme Court next year to clerk for Thomas, Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.)

These similarities between Wilkinson and Luttig, and their keen legal minds, initially created a natural alliance between them. Luttig, a native of Tyler, Tex., said that he used to spend more time talking with Wilkinson than with any other judge on the court. They are still friends, he said. But the years have clarified the differences in the two judges' styles and their jurisprudence, and they often parry and thrust in their decisions, with Luttig going for the direct and Wilkinson the indirect jabs. Often Wilkinson and Luttig end up voting the same way, but ''there's this very antagonistic sideshow,'' said Rodney Smolla, a University of Richmond law professor.

Wilkinson writes essayish opinions filled with the kind of rhetorical flourishes that I imagine him composing with a quill pen. He often goes beyond facts and analysis to hold forth. He ponders, he digresses, he philosophizes. Wilkinson is the rare judge who speaks publicly and writes books; in his recent ''One Nation Indivisible,'' he assailed affirmative action and ethnic separatism. Occasionally he injects his personal views on, say, racial quotas into his legal opinions. When he takes issue with ''my fine colleagues,'' he does so in the most courtly manner possible, always striving to emulate Justice Powell as ''a healer and bridge builder,'' he said. In fact, taking me by surprise, he grew quite emotional when telling me how rancorously divided the legal community, the political community, even the country has become. His voice grew insistent, then caught, and his eyes moistened.

Luttig, in contrast, is not given to bursts of inspirational speaking and does no public speaking. Down-to-earth and likable in private, he comes across publicly as intense, austere and unsentimental. ''He goes out there with piercing ideas and steel-trap analysis,'' Smolla said. Luttig sees himself as a legal ''nerd,'' worships analytical rigor and composes a hard-boiled, sometimes mathematically logical opinion. He does not hesitate to gore his colleagues if he finds their thinking subpar. ''If any opinion is without reasoning or poorly reasoned, I want them to be embarrassed by their analysis so as to continually improve on the process,'' he told me.

He can be particularly scathing toward Wilkinson -- ''Judge Wilkinson misunderstands this issue altogether'' -- and he'll criticize him for contradicting himself or for making pronouncements that go beyond a specific case.

Attorneys who go before Luttig know about one central event in his life: that his father was brutally murdered nine years ago, that he moved his chambers to Texas during his father's killer's trial and that the killer became a cause c?l?bre for death-penalty opponents before he was executed. Some wonder if it makes him less objective; Luttig has never granted a new hearing to a death-row defendant. He brushes their concerns aside; the experience affected him -- how could it not have? -- but it didn't warp him.

Many lawyers also assume that Luttig is more conservative than Wilkinson. But the law journal Judicature recently evaluated the decisions of six possible Bush nominees for the Supreme Court and found Wilkinson to be furthest to the right -- exceptionally conservative. It found Luttig the second least conservative of the six. ''Did you see the Judicature article?'' Luttig asked me, and he also made sure that I had read some cases in which he took unexpectedly liberal positions. He is loath to be predictable and eager to be perceived as more moderate in anticipation of a Supreme Court opening.

In one case, Luttig took issue with Wilkinson's finding that police officers in Prince George's County, Md., couldn't be held liable for violating the constitutional rights of Nelson O. Robles. The officers had tied Robles to a pole in a parking lot in the middle of the night with a note at his feet stating that he was wanted on an outstanding traffic warrant by a neighboring county. Wilkinson, while condemning the officers for behaving like Keystone Kops, said that they could not have known that they were violating Robles's constitutional rights because it had never been specifically enunciated that what they did was such a violation.

Luttig argued pungently, but unsuccessfully, that Wilkinson's decision should be reviewed by the full court: ''I would like to have thought that at this point in our history no court would hold, as did this panel, that law enforcement officers need an opinion from this court in order for them to be on notice that handcuffing a pretrial detainee to a metal pole in a deserted shopping center at 3:00 a.m. in the morning, and abandoning him there, for no law enforcement purpose at all, is unconstitutional.''

Wilkinson and Luttig do not like to talk about the possibility that they will be competing for a nomination as soon as this spring if, say, Chief Justice Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, steps down. But during Ocheltree's hearing at the Richmond courthouse, the subject was in the air.

Since 1995, for so long that she is beginning to feel and sound like a crusader, Lisa Ocheltree, 41, has been pursuing her claim against Scollon Productions, a manufacturer of life-size costumes for mascots like the South Carolina Gamecock and characters like Tommy Pickles.

She filed suit under a civil rights law, Title VII, that sees sexual harassment as a violation of the prohibition against workplace discrimination because of sex. Some sexual-harassment claims involve a quid pro quo; others, like Ocheltree's, assert a hostile work environment.. Unfortunately for Ocheltree, she has ended up before the appeals court least likely to be sympathetic to any such claims.

Plaintiffs in sexual-harassment suits prevail in only 21 percent of their appeals before the Fourth Circuit, according to a recent Cornell Law Review article. They win, in contrast, 80 percent of the time in the New York-based Second Circuit, which is dominated by Democratic appointees, and 39 percent of the time nationwide.

When Ocheltree, now a U.P.S. employee, worked at Scollon Productions, she was the only woman in an otherwise all-male production shop. Over time, the atmosphere grew more coarse, she said, until it was dominated by sexually explicit conversation and behavior.

Ocheltree complained about the environment during an employee meeting, and she was rebuffed repeatedly when she tried to get an audience with the company's senior executives. After about 18 months at Scollon, she was fired. A federal judge summarily dismissed her complaint, but, representing herself, she appealed that judgment to the Fourth Circuit, which determined that she had grounds for trial. A jury awarded Ocheltree $7,280 in compensatory damages and $400,000 in punitive damages. The judge reduced the damages to $50,000 because Scollon is a small business. Nonetheless, Ocheltree said that her victory restored her ''sense of honor and dignity,'' even though the men at the plant ''are laughing to this day.''

Scollon Productions appealed the jury's verdict to the Fourth Circuit, contending that Ocheltree's description of the workplace environment was exaggerated and that the crude behavior wasn't directed at Ocheltree anyway. The three-judge panel assigned the case included Williams, Paul V. Niemeyer, appointed by Bush in 1990, and M. Blane Michael, a bow-tie-wearing Clinton appointee from West Virginia. Williams and Niemeyer voted to reverse the jury's decision, and Michael was the dissenter.

It is a role that Michael, who keeps a large photograph of Clinton's inauguration on his chambers' walls, often exercises. There have been other instances in which it has pitted him against Williams too, although he told me that their personal relations are cordial. Still, Michael wrote the dissent in the Miranda case and in one in which Williams found that people with symptom-free H.I.V. are not protected by the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Michael said that Williams and Niemeyer chose ''again and again'' to see the evidence in a light favorable to Ocheltree's employer rather than to Ocheltree. They were ignoring the fact that the jury found Ocheltree to be the credible party, and they were ignoring their obligation to respect a jury's finding, he said. There is, he wrote, ''a profound difference in our respective approaches to reviewing a jury verdict.''

In a spirited opinion, Williams wrote that there was no reason to believe that the vulgar atmosphere in the workshop had anything to do with Ocheltree's presence or the fact that she was a woman. The incidents were isolated, and the rest was banter, she said. The courts shouldn't treat women preferentially by insulating them from everyday insults. And further, she added, there was some indication that Ocheltree herself was not a ''model of femininity.''

In his dissent, Michael wrote that a reasonable jury would conclude that the men at Scollon Productions resented Ocheltree's intrusion into their workplace and had set out to make her unwelcome. He said that the ''overall tenor of the workplace banter conveyed the message that women exist primarily to gratify male desires for oral sex.'' In a workplace suffused with representations of women as sexual objects, a female worker ''would doubtless wonder,'' he wrote, whether her male co-workers were looking at her and asking themselves ''whether she 'swallows''' or whether she could '''suck a golf ball through a garden hose.'''

Ocheltree was devastated that the Fourth Circuit decision was written by a woman. ''Just because she sits up on that bench, she still puts her pantyhose on one leg at a time,'' she said. ''If all the male judges were sitting around talking about oral sex, I wonder how she'd feel then.''

Franklin Delano Roosevelt famously set out to overhaul the federal judiciary ideologically. Confronting courts that were thwarting his New Deal projects, he strove to create liberal ones that would grant the government more power to regulate the economy. Decades later, Reagan displayed a similar purposefulness, screening judicial candidates using ideological ''litmus tests'' in order to choose jurists who were strict constructionists, tough on crime, anti-abortion and pro-family..

Between them, Reagan and the first President Bush named six judges to the Fourth Circuit; those six joined Nixon's appointee, Widener, to form a solid conservative core. On other courts, the transformation to conservative has been more startling. The two Deep South appellate courts, for instance, used to be civil rights crusaders. But until the Carter judges retired, the Fourth Circuit was, if not liberal, at least more balanced.

Clinton put a priority on diversifying the federal bench, picking up where Carter had left off. Despite an uncooperative Senate, he succeeded in getting a record 9 black, 7 Hispanic and 20 female judges confirmed.
Yet the Clinton administration never saw its role as reasserting ideological balance on the courts. When Clinton took office, the appeals courts were solidly Republican, but his administration did not feel compelled to find liberal powerhouses to counter the conservative heavyweights appointed by Reagan and Bush. ''Some in the White House argued very forcefully that their job was not to put on the federal bench the liberal equivalents of the Luttigs and the Wilkinsons,'' said Nan Aron, president of Alliance for Justice, a liberal coalition. Clinton was not a die-hard liberal himself, and he tended to nominate centrist legal professionals in tune with his more centrist politics. Still, he faced intense partisan battles, particularly over his minority appointees, and the acrimony continued through Bush's first two years, affecting not just the political arena but also the courts themselves.

Luttig told me that he thinks the politics surrounding judicial appointments makes judges hyperconscious of their political sponsors. ''Judges are told, 'You're appointed by us to do these things.' So then judges start thinking, Well, how do I interpret the law to get the result that the people who pushed for me to be here want me to get?'' he said. ''I believe that there's a natural temptation to line up as political partisans that is reinforced by the political process. And it has to be resisted, by the judiciary and by the politicians.''

Clinton named four white judges to the Fourth Circuit without much battle, including one, William B. Traxler Jr., of Greenville, S.C., who was first elevated to the federal bench, on Thurmond's recommendation, by former President Bush. Traxler votes so often with the conservative majority that court watchers forget he's a Democratic appointee. The other three -- Blane Michael and Robert B. King of West Virginia and Diana Gribbon Motz of Maryland -- are unofficially the dissenters.

In contrast to his smooth experience with getting the white judges confirmed, Clinton tried at least four times to name an African-American to the Fourth Circuit. His nominees were blocked every time. Jesse Helms still bore a grudge from Clinton's failure to renominate his former aide Terrence Boyle, after Boyle's nomination by the first Bush had elapsed. Helms then blocked, as is the home state senator's power, every Clinton nominee from North Carolina, including two African-American judges. As a result, there is no one from North Carolina on the Fourth Circuit now, although proving that even a retired Helms can get his way, President Bush has a pending nominee from North Carolina -- and that is Boyle.
During his period of obstructionism, Helms insisted, and Thurmond publicly concurred, that the matter had nothing to do with race or politics. It would simply be a waste of taxpayer money, Helms said repeatedly, to fill vacancies on the Fourth Circuit when the chief judge, Wilkinson, thought the court would function less efficiently if it were bigger. (And clearly it would have if it became less ideologically homogeneous.)

Clinton finally tried an end run around Helms by nominating a Virginian, a soft-spoken African-American lawyer named Roger L. Gregory. Gregory comes from a small town in rural Virginia where his parents worked in the local tobacco factory. He grew up to found a Richmond law firm with L. Douglas Wilder, the former governor of Virginia. He gives inspirational speeches to black youths. His nomination had bipartisan support. But even Gregory couldn't get a hearing scheduled.

So Clinton resorted to an extraordinary tactic. During his last days in office, after Congress had recessed, Clinton unilaterally appointed Gregory to the bench. President Bush, eager to demonstrate bipartisanship and win support for his own candidates, eventually allowed Gregory's temporary appointment to become permanent. In July 2001, the Senate confirmed him 93 to 1, with Trent Lott casting the dissenting vote. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was officially integrated.

In his ''baby judge'' speech at the Fourth Circuit judicial convention last summer, Gregory cited Frederick Douglass and Harriet Tubman, setting a new kind of precedent for the court. He also joked that he was welcomed to the Richmond courthouse by someone who pointed out that the Confederate President Jefferson Davis's office used to be right near his new chambers. ''That was very reassuring, you can imagine that,'' Gregory said.

In a study of capital convictions and appeals between 1973 and 1995, Prof. James S. Liebman of Columbia University Law School found that the Fourth Circuit granted relief to death-row inmates less frequently than any other appeals court in the country. Even at that point, and it has gotten more restrictive since, the Fourth Circuit was overturning 12 percent of the death sentences it reviewed: that compared with an average 40 percent reversal rate for federal appeals courts. ''There are other conservative courts of appeal but none that are a black hole of capital litigation like the Fourth Circuit,'' said John H. Blume, director of the Cornell Death Penalty Project, who represents South Carolina prisoners.

When Kevin Wiggins's case came up before the Fourth Circuit in January 2002, he was on death row in Maryland, trying not to get his hopes up. A federal district chief judge had invalidated his death sentence and voided his conviction for murder. Theoretically, he should have gone free. But the state appealed. And Wiggins knew, because death-row prisoners know these things, that the odds of winning in the Fourth Circuit weren't good.

In February, I visited Wiggins in the C-pod of the Maryland Correctional Adjustment Center in downtown Baltimore. When a guard unlocked the door to a narrow concrete visiting cell, Wiggins was already there, staring blankly through a scratched glass partition. Wearing a white undershirt, his face round with a wisp of a mustache, he was itching to get talking. And talk he did, like a balloon releasing air, his words a jumble as he dizzyingly flicked back and forth in time.

Matter-of-factly, Wiggins described himself as ''a nobody with no family and no skills.'' He had a nightmarish childhood, according to information gathered by a forensic social worker hired by his present lawyer. His mother was alcoholic, neglectful and abusive. When he was 6, Wiggins was removed from his mother's home after she burned him severely with a hot plate in punishment for playing with matches. He then endured a series of foster homes in which he was beaten, locked in closets and repeatedly raped. He emerged into adulthood as a barely educated loner who lived in rented rooms and worked at minimum-wage jobs. He was of ''borderline intelligence,'' according to state social-service records.

Wiggins had no criminal record when he was arrested at age 27 for the murder of an elderly woman. The State of Maryland maintained that Wiggins drowned Florence Lacs, 77, in her bathtub in 1988: he was working as a painter in her building, and he and his girlfriend were found in possession of Lacs's credit cards and car. There was no forensic evidence linking acting-out created an extremely hostile working environment for Ocheltree as t he sole woman in a costume-production workshop. But a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit overturned that verdict late last year. "Were they telling me t hat I should have just sucked it up?" Ocheltree asked. She petitioned the full court to reconsider the panel's 2-to-1 decision, and the judges agreed to take her case en banc, which they hardly ever do. </P> <P>And so all 12 judges were about to file in and take the bench, affording a rare glimpse at the dynamic of the entire court. Ocheltree's lawye r was nervous: a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit provides a grilling, b ut this would be a full-court press. Ocheltree, however, was determined not to be intimidated. "Just because I'm a blue-collar worker doesn't mean I'm gonna let the black robes scare me," she said. "It may be the South, but it's the 2 1st century." </P> <P>Geographically, the Fourth Circuit, one of 13 federal courts of appeals, is not the most sout hern. But it is singularly genteel: its judges descend from the bench to shake lawyers' hands after oral arguments. And as recently as 1999, Chief Justice Wil liam H. Rehnquist led the Fourth Circuit's annual judicial conference in a trad itional rousing sing-along that included "Dixie." This always offended civil rights lawyers and the few African-American lawyers in attendance. But it never surprised them. </P> <P>It was not until the year 2001 that the Fourth Circuit, which has the larges t African-Ameri can population of any appellate jurisdiction, became the final federal appeals court to be racially or ethnically integrated. Many consider the court to be a gton lawyer, Donald B. Verrilli, Jr., took on Wiggins's case pro bono, and it b egan wending its way through the postconviction review and then the state appea ls process. Verrilli found the c ase against Wiggins to be weakly circumstantial at best, offering evidence only that Wiggins was a logical suspect. Verrilli said he came to believe that Wigg ins did not commit the crime but rather served as the "fall guy for people mor e clever than him." Specifically, there is a plausible alternative to the cour se of events involving Wiggins's girlfriend, who was 15 years his elder. All ch arges against her were dropped, and she testified against Wiggins; her brother, it seemed, lived in an apartment belo w the victim's. </P> <P>The case's first stop in federal court was at the bench of Maryland's United States chief district judge, J. Frederick Motz, who happens to be married to J udge Diana Motz, a Clinton appointee on the Fourth Circuit. Judge Frederick Mot z is a former federal prosecutor appointed by Reagan; he is not, as he said in court one day, "an anti-capital punishment person." In a 55-page opinion, he concluded, "No rational finder of fact could have found Wiggins guilty of murd er beyond a reas onable doubt." He invalidated the murder conviction and threw out the death se ntence too. </P> <P>I asked Wiggins whether he was happy when Motz took his side. "It's hard fo r me to be happy about anything," he said. Wiggins told me that he could remem ber only one joyful time in his life. It was after his mother burned him. Six y ears old, he awoke in a hospital bed, surrounded by nurses who clucked over him

, petting his hair and bringing him cookies. </P> <P>When Maryland prosecutors decided to appeal t o the Fourth Circuit, Motz publicly questioned their desire to continue pursuin g what he characterized as a flimsy case. "Why isn't this case of moral concer n to the state?" he asked. "Or don't you care?" </P> <P>At the Fourth Circuit, Wiggins drew a panel of three Republican appointees -
- Wilkinson, Widener and Niemeyer. In a hearing last winter, the judges appeare d to be wrestling with the case; they doubled the time they usually allot attor neys to present their arguments. Last May, however, in a dec ision written by the 79-year-old Judge Widener, the panel ended up reinstating Wiggins's conviction and his death sentence. The panel gave the original trial judge the benefit of the doubt; it deferred to his assertion that he based his decision of Wiggins's guilt on a totality of evidence and that he did not infer Wiggins's guilt from his possession of the victim's property. And it ruled tha t the public defenders' failure to present Wiggins's background during the sent encing hearing was a trial tactic rath er than negligence. </P> <P>And yet the panel had some hesitations. Judge Wilkinson wrote that he couldn
't "say with certainty" that Wiggins committed the murder.. And Judge Niemeye r acknowledged that it was something of a close call to find that Wiggins had a dequate counsel. </P> <P>"I think that most circuit courts, if they have real doubts about what has happened in a capital case, they will reverse," Professor Liebman said. "The Fourth Circuit doesn't have the same threshold. In this case, they s aw the tripwire and stepped right over it." </P> <P>Verrilli petitioned the Supreme Court, and in a hearing scheduled for March 24, the court will pick up Wiggins's case, continuing its dialogue with the Fou rth Circuit's decision-making. Since 1996, the Supreme Court has reviewed far m ore death-penalty cases coming from the Fourth Circuit than from any other appe als court -- 9 from the Fourth Circuit alone and 12 from the other 11 appeals c ourts combined. The 1996 date is significant because in that year Congress passed the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, limiting fed eral courts' review of capital cases to those in which there's "an unreasonabl e application of clearly established federal law." That "unreasonableness," however, is open to interpretation, and while the Fourth Circuit has chosen to see its hands tied, other circuits have granted themselves more wiggle room. Th e Supreme Court is thus mediating the conflict between the circuits, trying to help them figure out when it is approp riate and inappropriate to defer to the state cou <P>Generally, the Supreme Court upholds the Fourth Circuit's tough stance in de ath-penalty cases by a 5-to-4 vote, dividing ideologically. Take the Virginia c ase of Walter Mickens Jr., whose lawyer, it turned out, had at one time defende d Mickens's 17-year-old victim. A rare liberal panel of the Fourth Circuit foun d that Mickens's lawyer had a conflict of interest. But the Fourth Circuit did not want to let that reversal stand; it met en banc and reinstated his conviction. The case then went to the Supreme Court, which agreed, 5 to 4, with the Fourth Circuit's full panel: it held that the lawyer's conflict of in terest didn't matter since Mickens couldn't prove that it adversely affected th e outcome of his case. Last June, Mickens was executed by lethal injection. </P

>
<P>In two important rulings on how to interpret the 1996 law, however, the Supr eme Court reversed the Fourth Circuit, finding that the Richmond court had chos en to read the statute too narrowly . In one case, the Supreme Court, unlike the Fourth Circuit, found the state co urt's judgment "unreasonable" for failing to recognize that the legal represe ntation of Terry Williams, a Virginia inmate, was so ineffective that it didn't meet minimum constitutional standards for competency.. Like Wiggins's, William s's lawyer didn't investigate his horrific childhood; his lawyer was subsequent ly disbarred for mental disability.. </P>
<P>
Many, if not most, appeals judges show a pattern to their judging o ver time. </P> <P>Wilkinson has granted a new hearing to a death-row prisoner once in 19 years
, according to a South Carolina Law Review article. In contrast, Judge Francis D. Murnaghan Jr. of Maryland, who used to be the Fourth Circuit's pre-eminent l iberal, granted relief to about one out of three death-row prisoners who came b efore him. </P> <P>Yet no judge wants to be seen as tailoring his decisions to his ideology, as bending the law to determine preconceived results. Every judge will tell you t hat h e or she comes to each case with an open mind, seeing a distinct set of facts t hat raises distinct legal questions. </P> <P>Wilkinson said he feels strongly that judges should never be rated and ranke d as if they were politicians whose votes could be counted. He said that the st atistical analyses of judges' decisions, followed by the affixing of a label of liberal or conservative, is reductive. </P> <P>"I don't go on the bench as liberal or conservative," Wilkinson said. And yet he does not dispute that he is a conservative jurist. He acknowledges his place among those who came of age concerned about "the excessive activism" of the Warren Court. The Warren C ourt was seen as having overstepped its bounds with rulings that expanded equal protection, the right to vote, criminal defendants' rights and the right to pr ivacy. Conservatives, in contrast, preached judicial restraint.</P> <P>Yet with conservatives now controlling most of the nation's federal appeals courts, Wilkinson is one among many who have com e to a new appreciation of judicial activism. Like the "new federalists" whose conservative thinking increasingly influences the legal mainstream, Wilkinson s aid he believes that the Constitution is more than just the Bill of Rights. He doesn't think that the Bill of Rights has been overemphasized, he is quick to s ay, but that what he calls "the structural Constitution" has been underemphasiz
ed. </P> <P>"That body of the document that spells out the relationship between the fede ral government and the state s was neglected for far too long," he said. "The power of Congress was seen as unlimited and that of the states as a virtual nullity." Wilkinson has found it exciting, he said, to be engaged in redressing this imbalance, which sometimes means striking down Congressional acts that seem to usurp state power unconstitutionally. </P> <P>But he notes, because he is of judicious temperament, that judicial activism is "heady wine" and that restraint is still the greater virtue. Everything in moderation. Luttig takes exception to the view that striking down Congressional laws necessarily constitutes judicial activism. "Remember, it's sophomoric to think that invalidation of a statute equals judicial activism," he said. "Judicial activism means deciding a case based on one's own personal predilections, regardless.. It might well take the form of sustaining a law that should be stricken." Several years ago, in an opinion written by Luttig, the Fourth Circuit struck down a key provision of the Violence Against Women Act. As Luttig saw it, Congress had established a federal civil right that didn't exist in the Constitution the right to be free of crimes of violence motivated by gender and then established the additional right for victims of such violence to sue their aggressors for damages in federal court. Congress had justified the law bas

<P>Luttig ruled that Congress had overstepped its authority. A three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit originally heard the appeal, upholding the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, as had 17 of 18 federal district judges who had reviewed it. But the full Fourth Circuit vacated the liberal decision, taking the case en banc. Motz, the Clinton appointee, hinted in her dissent that her colleagues were motivated by their distaste for the act itself. "Judges' policy choices provide no basis for finding a statute unconstitutional," she wrote.</P>
<P>The case went up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court agreed with the Fourth Circuit, 5 to 4, striking down the right of rape victims and abused women to sue in federal court under this statute. The Supreme Court version of the Fourth Circuit's ruling became the law of the land, and the Fourth Circuit and the Supreme Court jointly reinforced the principle that Congress's powers are limited. </P>
<P>Luttig's opinion, though, went beyond the Supreme Court's rhetorically. He began, "We the People, distrustful of power, and believing that government limited and dispersed protects freedom best, provided that our federal government would be one of enumerated powers, and that all power unenumerated would be reserved to the several States and to ourselves." </P>
<P>Cass Sunstein, a University of Chicago law professor, said that no court had issued such a battle cry for states' rights since before the New Deal. </P>
<P>During the nearly two hours that the Fourth Circuit debated her case, Ocheltree, dressed in a pin-striped pants suit with a white handkerchief sewed into the breast pocket, sat anonymously on a pewlike bench, holding her husband's hand in a tight grip. The judges didn't even know she was there. Her feathered dirty blond hair fell over her eyes a few times, and she tossed it back. Other than that, she was frozen, riveted by the theater of the bench, which veered occasionally into <EM>Grand Guignol</EM>.</P>
<P>Chuck Thompson, the lawyer for Scollon Productions, who used to clerk for Senior Judge Clyde H. Hamilton, a Republican appointee to the Fourth Circuit, wore a red bow tie. "May it please the court," he said.
He didn't get a chance to say very much more. This was the judges' show. Karen Williams, author of the pro-employer decision, spent more time arguing Scollon's case than Thompson did. Michael, the dissenter, rolled his eyes and defended Ocheltree; Motz fired a few one-line zingers. Luttig, wagging his finger, told his fellow judges where their legal reasoning proved inadequate and instructed the lawyers for both sides what their arguments should be. "I'd have to disagree with you," Thompson ventured at one point.</P>

ribed and exasperation with his colleagues for rehashing the ugly details of th e case. "Who enjoys what and who enjoys whom," he said, his voice booming, "tha t's not for an appellate court to decide." For Wilkinson, the bottom line seeme d to be that there was a jury verdict, and his remarks hinted that he was disin clined to overturn it.</P>

<P>Luttig, however, didn't seem certain that the jury verdict was defensible, a nd he scolded Ocheltree's lawyer, William Elvin Hopkins Jr., 36, for failing to make his best case. As Luttig saw it, the crux of Hopkins's challenge was to e xplain why Ocheltree was discriminated against if the locker-room atmosphere pr edated her arrival at Scollon.. "You'll lose if you don't better answer that be fore this panel," he said. Luttig suggested this theory: Most men would stop su ch salacious talk once a woman was i n their midst and if they didn't, it was precisely <EM>because</EM> she was the re. Their behavior may not have changed, but their motivation did, he said.</P> <P>When the conversation became graphic, Widener, whose eyes had been closed, s eemed to startle into participation. "You're asking us to hold that when there' s an all-male shop, a woman can walk in and say, 'Give me the money!'"</P> <P>Williams agreed: there was no reason for Ocheltree to have been any more off ended than her male colleagues by sexua lly explicit conversation, not in an age when magazines feature articles about how much women enjoy oral sex. </P> <P>As in most oral arguments I observed, Gregory, the African-American judge wh o joined the court in 2001, didn't grandstand. When he speaks, though, he doesn

't mince words, slices to the core and if the subject is discrimination, he get s it. Title VII is not about sex or race, he said; it's about power. And the in cidents with the mannequin speak volumes, he said: "The problem with the manneq u
in is that it became almost an effigy, if you will, of the plaintiff."</P> <P>As Ocheltree left the courthouse, still holding her husband's hand, she said that she felt the court would do the right thing when it issued its decision l ater this year. There was no real basis for her optimism, though, not in the co urt's track record or in the questions the judges asked at her hearing. It coul d go either way, but the odds are not with the Lisa Ocheltrees or the Kevin Wig ginses, not in the Fourth Circuit or, for that matter, in an ever increasing number of appellate courts in this country.
 </P> <P>Legal scholars talk about the pendulum swinging from liberal to conservative , from a preoccupation with individuals' rights to a preoccupation with states' rights, and suggest that, in time, it will swing back once more. It would cert ainly help many Americans sustain their faith in the system if the courts could find their equilibrium, if they could become less ideological, less predictabl e and less political. That does n't appear to be on the horizon, though, not in the foreseeable future. In the historic site in Richmond where the Confederacy once thrived, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is ushering in the 21st century. </P> legacy of Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms because the former senators from the C arolinas played a key role in shaping it through patronage appointments and obs tructionism. Indeed, President Bush's most recent appointment to the Fourth Cir cuit, Dennis W. Shedd, is a former chief of staff to Thurmond; his pending nomi nee, Terrence Boyle, is a former Helms aide unsuccessfully nominated by Bush's father more than 10 years ago. </P> <P>Although President Bush may or may not get the chance to name a new Supreme Court justice this year, he is busy trying to fill 25 federal appeals court vac ancies, including 3 on the Fourth Circuit, with the backing of a newly Republic an Senate. He already has 16 nominees waiting for confirmation. And despite the occasional Democratic filibuster, he appears poised to transform the federal j udiciary -- which includes 179 appeals judges at full strength -- back into an overwhelmingly conservative bench. In 1 2 years between them, Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush established a Republic an majority on every appeals court. Clinton, facing stiff resistance from an op position Senate for six of his eight years, pushed that back somewhat so that B ush inherited a Republican majority on 8 of the 13 appellate courts, with 3 mor e poised to swing Republican through his appointments. And those appointments, because they are for life, could rever berate for generations. Judge H. Emory Widener Jr. of the Fourth Circuit, wh <P>As Bush makes his selections, his staunch conservative supporters tout the F ourth Circuit as a model to emulate, and liberals view it anxiously as a harbin ger of doom. That's because the Fourth Circuit, which has eight Republican and four Democratic appointees, is not only conservative but also bold and muscular in its conservatism. It is confident enough to strike down acts of Congress wh en it finds them stretching the limits of the federal government's power and hardheaded enough to rule against nearly every death-row defendant who comes before it. </P> <P>To critics, the Fourth Circuit lacks compassion for the individual.. To admi rers, the Fourth Circuit is a welcome corrective after years of soft, liberally activist benches, a brilliant court with a healthy respect for the concerns of prosecutors, of business owners, of state officials -- and of the Bush adminis tration, which received deference from the court to treat a Unit ed States citizen captured in Afghanistan as an "enemy combatant" who could b e detained without charges even on American soil. </P> <P>Helms once told a North Carolina newspaper that the furor in Washington over judicial nominations was out of whack with the sentiments of the public: "You go out on the street of Raleigh, N.C., and ask 100 people, 'Do you give a damn who is on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals?' They'll say, 'What's that?'"

</P>
<P>He had a point. Few pay much attention to federal co urts below the Supreme Court level. But they should. The appellate courts, crea ted in the late 19th century to relieve overcrowding of the Supreme Court's doc ket, decide about 28,000 cases a year compared with the highest court's 75 or s o. Practically speaking, they have the final say in most matters of law; their reach is broader, if not deeper, than the Supreme Court's itself. </P> <P>Judges on the Fourth Circuit say that they just follow the Supreme Court's l ead. And it is true that the Fourth Circuit i s the appellate court closest in thinking to the Rehnquist Court. But the relat ionship is symbiotic: the Fourth Circuit does not just imitate; it also initiat es. It pushes the envelope, testing the boundaries of conservative doctrine in the area of, say, reasserting states rights over big government. Sometimes, the Supreme Court reins in the Fourth Circuit, reversing its more experimental dec isions, but it also upholds them or leaves them alone to become the law of the land. There is a cross-fertilization, which could see its apotheosis this spring: the Fourth Circuit is dominated int ellectually by two very different conservative judges, J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd and J. Michael Luttig, both of whom are leading candidates for the next Supreme Court vacancy. </P>

<P>
Judge Karen J. Williams, 52, a tall, slender woman with delicate feature s and a regal carriage, wrote the decision overturning the jury verdict in Lisa Ocheltree v. Scollon Productions. The federal law that prohibits sexual harass ment in the work place, as she phrased it ever so piquantly, is not a "neo-Victorian chivalry c ode designed to protect" the "tender sensitivities of contemporary women." <
/P> <P>Williams eloped at 17 with her teenage sweetheart, gave birth to four childr en, taught school, commuted to law school and eventually became a lawyer in her husband's private practice in Orangeburg, S.C. She was appointed by former Pre sident Bush in 1992 on the recommendation of Strom Thurmond, a friend of her fa ther-in-law's, then the president of the South Carolina State Senate. At Williams's investiture, Thurmond and he r father-in-law reminisced about how they used to double-date. </P> <P>Williams, in the self-mocking "baby judge" speech that newly appointed jur ists make at the annual judicial conference, said that Thurmond "maneuvered my hearings so that I would be the first woman on the circuit and his nominee."
Thurmond, she said, liked to be on the cutting edge, and he just plain liked wo men too. In the course of the confirmation proce ss, Williams added, a Justice Department official pointed out to her that her r ace was listed incorrectly on her driver's license. "We finally knew then how I got it," she said jokingly, referring to the judgeship. "Not only was I a f emale, but they had me as a black female." Some laughed; others cringed. </P>

<P>Once a month, the judges, whose annual salary of $164,000 is higher than tha t of senators, travel from their home states to Richmond to hear a week of oral arguments. They sit in three-judge p anels randomly selected by a computer program and invariably encounter a rich m enu of human dramas and hot-button issues. They hear everything from bankruptcy cases to international child-custody disputes, from race discrimination claims to environmental battles over wetlands. In the January hearings, they debated whether Norfolk, Va., could use an anti-loitering statute to keep an elderly co uple from protesting abortion on a bridge over a highway and whether animal-con trol officers in High Point, N.C., wer e stripping pit bull owners of their Fourth Amendment rights by killing their d ogs. They examined three cadets' contention that the mealtime prayer at the Vir ginia Military Institute was unconstitutional and an Israeli immigrant's appeal of his conviction for interfering with a flight crew when, on the three-month

<P>The full Fourth Circuit rarely sits to review the decision of one of its thr ee-judge panels. When it does, though, critics say that it uses this en banc pr ocedure to overturn liberal decisions that slip through, and there are plenty of supporting examples. But with Ochel tree, the judges were sitting in reconsideration of a quite conservative decisi on, one that would greatly limit the ability of employees in the region to make successful claims of sexual harassment. They were also addressing the sensitiv e issue of the sanctity of jury decisions.. </P> <P>Williams was the author of an infamous decision several years ago. The Fourt h Circuit ruled that the liberal Warren Court's landmark 1966 rulin g in Miranda v. Arizona was not constitutionally based, and as such that an obs olete Congressional statute trumped it. More than 30 years ago, the statute was a stillborn attempt to overrule the court's holding that criminal suspects mus t be apprised of their rights through what have become known as Miranda warning s. It was never enforced and largely forgotten until the Fourth Circuit resurre cted it. And Williams's decision helped cement the Fourth Circuit's reputation as a judicially active conservative co urt. But the Supreme Court reversed it, 7 to 2, with Antonin Scalia and Clarenc e Thomas, the two most conservative justices and President Bush's self-proclaim ed favorites, dissenting. In that instance and several others, the Fourth Circu it's effort to nudge the Supreme Court toward greater conservatism backfired. S till, the Supreme Court has upheld 36.5 percent <P>The Fourth Circuit does not march in conservative lock step, however, and it s intellectually vibrant judges do not constitute an ideological ca bal. The court often reaches consensus across the ideological divide; some of i ts work is nonideological in nature. Sometimes the majority lets liberal decisi ons stand; other times even the most conservative judges issue opinions that se em to betray their ideological stripes. And often the fiercest legal arguments are not between the liberals and the conservatives but between conservatives th emselves. </P> <P>Yet when it comes to high-profile decisions, the Fourth Circuit tends to div ide neatly along party lines. And taken together, those decisions not only bespeak a conservative phi losophy of law but also serve a conservative political agenda. Among its many d ecisions, the Fourth Circuit has upheld the minute of silence in Virginia schoo ls; ended court-ordered busing in Charlotte; upheld state laws that stringently regulate abortion clinics or require parental notification or ban so-called pa rtial-birth abortions; ruled that the Virginia Military Institute could remain all male as long as there was a separa te but comparable education for women; upheld a Charleston, S.C., program that tested maternity patients for illegal drug use without their consent and turned the results over to the police; overturned a Virginia prohibition against lice nse plates bearing the Confederate flag; ruled that the F.D.A. didn't have the authority to regulate nicotine as a drug; and, most recently, overruled a West Virginia feder

As the Ocheltree hearing opened in a packed courtroom, the bailiff inton ed the traditional ble ssing: "God save the United States and this honorable court." The judges took their seats in leather swivel chairs, with the brand-new chief judge, William W. Wilkins Jr. of South Carolina, in the center. Wilkins started his career as a clerk to Judge Clement Haynsworth of the Fourth Circuit (whose Supreme Court nomination by Nixon was rejected by Congress) and then went on to become an aid e and campaign director for Thurmond. He was the first federal judge appointed by Reagan. </P>

n 3rd had technically stepped down as chief judge after seven years, as require d by law. But he was sitting just off-center, and he still dominated, he and Lu ttig, each in his own way. </P> <P>A warm, gracious and patrician Virginian, Wilkinson, 58, appears slight and owlish in his civilian clothes -- blue blazer, gold buttons -- yet commanding i n his robes. The son of a banker, the future judge attended boarding school at Lawrenceville and college at Yale before returning to Virginia to study law. Wh ile a law student, he ran as a Republican candidate for Congress; when he got 30 per cent of the vote, he jokes, he took it as a mandate to finish law school. He ev entually taught law and served as editorial-page editor of The Norfolk Virginia n-Pilot. (This didn't keep The Pilot from editorializing against his appointmen t to the bench in 1983, saying that he lacked courtroom experience.) </P> <P>Wilkinson was confirmed at the age of 39, and he and Luttig share the experi ence of having been judicial <EM>Wunderkin ds</EM>. Luttig points out that at the time of his appointment in 1991, he held the distinction of being the youngest judge on a federal appeals court. He was
37. </P>
<P>The two judges share other distinctions as well. They both clerked for Supre me Court justices they still revere -- Wilkinson for Lewis F. Powell Jr. and Lu ttig for Chief Justice Warren Burger as well as for Antonin Scalia when Scalia was an appeals court judge. Both worked for Republican Justice Departments and participated in judicial se lections, Wilkinson under Reagan and Luttig under the first Bush. Luttig shephe rded Clarence Thomas through his contentious confirmation, and pictures of Thom as hang on his chambers' walls, including one inscribed "This would not have b een possible without you! Thanks so much, buddy!" (Luttig's three clean-cut ma le clerks will head to the Supreme Court next year to clerk for Thomas, Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.) </P> <P>These similarities between Wilkinson and Luttig, and their keen legal minds, initia lly created a natural alliance between them. Luttig, a native of Tyler, Tex., s aid that he used to spend more time talking with Wilkinson than with any other judge on the court. They are still friends, he said. But the years have clarifi ed the differences in the two judges' styles and their jurisprudence, and they often parry and thrust in their decisions, with Luttig going for the direct and Wilkinson the indirect jabs. Often Wilkinson and Luttig end up voting the same way, but "there's this very antagoni stic sideshow," said Rodney Smolla, a University of Richmond law professor. </

P>
<P>Wilkinson writes essayish opinions filled with the kind of rhetorical flouri shes that I imagine him composing with a quill pen. He often goes beyond facts and analysis to hold forth. He ponders, he digresses, he philosophizes. Wilkins on is the rare judge who speaks publicly and writes books; in his recent "One Nation Indivisible," he assailed affirmative action and ethnic separatism. Occ asionally he injects his personal views on, say, racial quotas into his legal opinions. When he takes issue with "my fine colleagues," he does so in the most courtly manner possible, always striving to emulate Justice Powell as "a healer and bridge builder," he said.
In fact, taking me by surprise, he grew quite emotional when telling me how ra ncorously divided the legal community, the political community, even the countr y has become. His voice grew insistent, then caught, and his eyes moistened. </
P> <P>"I don't believe in throwing s alt in people's eyes," he said. "It's very important to me that the country c ome together. There are so many wounds, and we ought not pick at scabs. The leg al culture especially is too polarized. There's too much throwing of pitch and tar and mud." </P> <P>Luttig, in contrast, is not given to bursts of inspirational speaking and do es no public speaking. Down-to-earth and likable in private, he comes across pu blicly as intense, austere and unsentimental. "He goes out there with piercing ideas and steel-trap analysis," Smolla said. Luttig sees himself as a legal "nerd," worships analytical rigor and composes a hard-boiled, sometimes mathematically logical opinion. He does not hesitate to gore his colleagues if he finds their thinking subpar. "If any opinion is without reasoning or poorly reasoned, I want them to be embarrassed by their analysis so as to continually improve on the process
," he told me. He can be particularly scathing toward Wilkinson -- "Judge Wil kinson misunderstands this issue altog ether" -- and he'll criticize him for contradicting himself or for making pron ouncements that go beyond a specific case. </P> <P>Attorneys who go before Luttig know about one central event in his life: tha t his father was brutally murdered nine years ago, that he moved his chambers t o Texas during his father's killer's trial and that the killer became a <EM>cau se clbre</EM> for death-penalty opponents before he was executed. Some wonder i f it makes him less objective; Luttig has never granted a new hear ing to a death-row defendant. He brushes their concerns aside; the experience a ffected him -- how could it not have? -- but it didn't warp him. </P> <P>Many lawyers also assume that Luttig is more conservative than Wilkinson. Bu t the law journal Judicature recently evaluated the decisions of six possible B ush nominees for the Supreme Court and found Wilkinson to be furthest to the ri ght -- exceptionally conservative. It found Luttig the second least conservativ e of the six. "Did you see the Judicature art icle?" Luttig asked me, and he also made sure that I had read some cases in wh ich he took unexpectedly liberal positions.. He is loath to be predictable and eager to be perceived as more moderate in anticipation of a Supreme Court openi ng. </P> <P>In one case, Luttig took issue with Wilkinson's finding that police officers in Prince George's County, Md., couldn't be held liable for violating the cons titutional rights of Nelson O. Robles. The officers had tied Robles to a pole i n a parking lot in the middl e of the night with a note at his feet stating that he was wanted on an outstan ding traffic warrant by a neighboring county. Wilkinson, while condemning the o fficers for behaving like Keystone Kops, said that they could not have known th at they were violating Robles's constitutional rights because it had never been specifically enunciated that what they did was such a violation. </P> <P>Luttig argued pungently, but unsuccessfully, that Wilkinson's decision shoul d be reviewed by the full court: "I would li ke to have thought that at this point in our history no court would hold, as di d this panel, that law enforcement officers need an opinion from this court in order for them to be on notice that handcuffing a pretrial detainee to a metal pole in a deserted shopping center at 3:00 a.m. in the morning, and abandoning him there, <EM>for no law enforcement purpose at all</EM>, is unconstitutional.

" </P> <P>Wilkinson and Luttig do not like to talk about the possibility that they wil l be competing for a nominati on as soon as this spring if, say, Chief Justice Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sand ra Day O'Connor, 72, steps down. But during Ocheltree's hearing at the Richmond courthouse, the subject was in the air. </P>
<P>
Since 1995, for so long that she is beginning to feel and sound like a c rusader, Lisa Ocheltree, 41, has been pursuing her claim against Scollon Produc tions, a manufacturer of life-size costumes for mascots like the South Carolina Gamecock and characters like Tommy Pickles. </P> <P>She filed suit u nder a civil rights law, Title VII, that sees sexual harassment as a violation of the prohibition against workplace discrimination because of sex. Some sexual -harassment claims involve a quid pro quo; others, like Ocheltree's, assert a h ostile work environment. Unfortunately for Ocheltree, she has ended up before t he appeals court least likely to be sympathetic to any such claims. </P> <P>Plaintiffs in sexual-harassment suits prevail in only 21 percent of their ap peals before the Fourth Circuit, according to a recent Cornell Law Review article. They win, in contrast, 80 percent of th e time in the New York-based Second Circuit, which is dominated by Democratic a ppointees, and 39 percent of the time nationwide. </P> <P>When Ocheltree, now a U.P.S. employee, worked at Scollon Productions, she wa s the only woman in an otherwise all-male production shop. Over time, the atmos phere grew more coarse, she said, until it was dominated by sexually explicit c onversation and behavior. </P> <P>A co-worker pinched the ni pples of a mannequin while another fell to his knees and simulated oral sex on it. A co-worker teased her with a dirty song while others, including her superv isor, laughed at the show. A colleague tried to get her to react to a photograp h of a man with his genitalia pierced. During Ocheltree's trial, a male co-work er said that the other men would routinely fondle the mannequins because they k new it bothered Ocheltree. </P> <P>Ocheltree complained about the environment during an employee meeting, and s he wa s rebuffed repeatedly when she tried to get an audience with the company's seni or executives. After about 18 months at Scollon, she was fired. A federal judge summarily dismissed her complaint, but, representing herself, she appealed tha t judgment to the Fourth Circuit, which determined that she had grounds for tri al. A jury awarded Ocheltree $7,280 in compensatory damages and $400,000 in pun itive damages. The judge reduced the damages to $50,000 because Scollon is a sm all business. Nonetheless, Ocheltree s aid that her victory restored her "sense of honor and dignity," even though t he men at the plant "are laughing to this day." </P> <P>Scollon Productions appealed the jury's verdict to the Fourth Circuit, conte nding that Ocheltree's description of the workplace environment was exaggerated and that the crude behavior wasn't directed at Ocheltree anyway. The three-jud ge panel assigned the case included Williams, Paul V. Niemeyer, appointed by Bu sh in 1990, and M. Blane Michael, a bow-tie-wearing Clinton a ppointee from West Virginia. Williams and Niemeyer voted to reverse the jury's decision, and Michael was the dissenter. </P> <P>It is a role that Michael, who keeps a large photograph of Clinton's inaugur ation on his chambers' walls, often exercises. There have been other instances in which it has pitted him against Williams too, although he told me that their personal relations are cordial. Still, Michael wrote the dissent in the Mirand a case and in one in which Williams found that people with symptom-fre e H.I.V. are not protected by the Americans With Disabilities Act. </P> <P>Michael said that Williams and Niemeyer chose "again and again" to see the evidence in a light favorable to Ocheltree's employer rather than to Ocheltree

. They were ignoring the fact that the jury found Ocheltree to be the credible party, and they were ignoring their obligation to respect a jury's finding, he said. There is, he wrote, "a profound difference in our respective approaches to reviewing a jury verdict." </P> <P>In a spirited opinion, Williams wrote that there was no reason to believe that the vulgar atmosphere in the workshop had anything to do with Ocheltree's presence or the fact that she was a woman. The incidents were isolated, and the rest was banter, she said. The courts shouldn't treat women preferentially by insulatin g them from everyday insults. And further, she added, there was some indication that Ocheltree herself was not a "model of femininity." </P> <P>In his dissent, Michael wrote that a reasonable j ury would conclude that the men at Scollon Productions resented Ocheltree's int rusion into their workplace and had set out to make her unwelcome. He said that the "overall tenor of the workplace banter conveyed the message that women ex ist primarily to gratify male desires for oral sex." In a workplace suffused w ith representations of women as sexual objects, a female worker "would doubtle ss wonder," he wrote, whether her male co-workers were looking at her and aski ng themselves "whether she 'swallows'
" or whether she could '"suck a golf ball through a garden hose.'" </P> <P>Ocheltree was devastated that the Fourth Circuit decision was written by a w oman. "Just because she sits up on that bench, she still puts her pantyhose on one leg at a time," she said. "If all the male judges were sitting around ta lking about oral sex, I wonder how she'd feel then." </P>
<P> Franklin Delano Roosevelt famously set out to overhaul the federal judic iary ideologically. Confronting courts that were thwarting h is New Deal projects, he strove to create liberal ones that would grant the gov ernment more power to regulate the economy. Decades later, Reagan displayed a s imilar purposefulness, screening judicial candidates using ideological "litmus tests" in order to choose jurists who were strict constructionists, tough on crime, anti-abortion and pro-family. </P> <P>Between them, Reagan and the first President Bush named six judges to the Fo urth Circuit; those six joined Nixon's appointee, Widener, to form a solid conservative core. On other courts, the transformation to conservative has bee n more startling. The two Deep South appellate courts, for instance, used to be civil rights crusaders. But until the Carter judges retired, the Fourth Circui t was, if not liberal, at least more balanced. </P> <P>Clinton put a priority on diversifying the federal bench, picking up where C arter had left off. Despite an uncooperative Senate, he succeeded in getting a record 9 black, 7 Hispanic and 20 female judges confirmed. </P> <P>Yet the Clinton administration never saw its role as reasserting ideological balance on the courts. When Clinton took office, the appeals courts were solid ly Republican, but his administration did not feel compelled to find liberal po werhouses to counter the conservative heavyweights appointed by Reagan and Bush

. "Some in the White House argued very forcefully that their job was not to pu t on the federal bench the liberal equivalents of the Luttigs and the Wilkinson s," said Nan Aron, president of Alli ance for Justice, a liberal coalition. Clinton was not a die-hard liberal himse lf, and he tended to nominate centrist legal professionals in tune with his mor e centrist politics. Still, he faced intense partisan battles, particularly ove r his minority appointees, and the acrimony continued through Bush's first two years, affecting not just the political arena but also the courts themselves. <
/P> <P>Luttig told me that he thinks the politics surrounding judicial appointments makes judges hyperconscious of t heir political sponsors. "Judges are told, 'You're appointed by us to do these things.' So then judges start thinking, Well, how do I interpret the law to ge t the result that the people who pushed for me to be here want me to get?" he said. "I believe that there's a natural temptation to line up as political par tisans that is reinforced by the political process. And it has to be resisted, by the judiciary and by the politicians." </P> <P>Clinton named four white judges to the Fourth Circuit without muc h battle, including one, William B. Traxler Jr., of Greenville, S.C., who was f irst elevated to the federal bench, on Thurmond's recommendation, by former Pre sident Bush. Traxler votes so often with the conservative majority that court w atchers forget he's a Democratic appointee. The other three -- Blane Michael an d Robert B. King of West Virginia and Diana Gribbon Motz of Maryland -- are uno fficially the dissenters. </P> <P>In contrast to his smooth experience with getting the white judges confirmed , Clin ton tried at least four times to name an African-American to the Fourth Circuit . His nominees were blocked every time. Jesse Helms still bore a grudge from Cl inton's failure to renominate his former aide Terrence Boyle, after Boyle's nom ination by the first Bush had elapsed. Helms then blocked, as is the home state senator's power, every Clinton nominee from North Carolina, including two Afri can-American judges. As a result, there is no one from North Carolina on the Fo urth Circuit now, although proving tha t even a retired Helms can get his way, President Bush has a pending nominee fr om North Carolina -- and that is Boyle. </P> <P>During his period of obstructionism, Helms insisted, and Thurmond publicly c oncurred, that the matter had nothing to do with race or politics. It would sim ply be a waste of taxpayer money, Helms said repeatedly, to fill vacancies on t he Fourth Circuit when the chief judge, Wilkinson, thought the court would func tion less efficiently if it were bigger. (And clearly it would have if it became less ideologically homogeneous.) </P> <P>Clinton finally tried an end run around Helms by nominating a Virginian, a s oft-spoken African-American lawyer named Roger L. Gregory. Gregory comes from a small town in rural Virginia where his parents worked in the local tobacco fac tory. He grew up to found a Richmond law firm with L. Douglas Wilder, the forme r governor of Virginia. He gives inspirational speeches to black youths. His no mination had bipartisan support. But even Gregory couldn't get a hea ring scheduled. </P> <P>So Clinton resorted to an extraordinary tactic. During his last days in offi ce, after Congress had recessed, Clinton unilaterally appointed Gregory to the bench. President Bush, eager to demonstrate bipartisanship and win support for his own candidates, eventually allowed Gregory's temporary appointment to becom e permanent. In July 2001, the Senate confirmed him 93 to 1, with Trent Lott ca sting the dissenting vote. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was officially i ntegrated.. </P>

<P>In his "baby judge" speech at the Fourth Circuit judicial convention last summer, Gregory cited Frederick Douglass and Harriet Tubman, setting a new kind of precedent for the court. He also joked that he was welcomed to the Richmond courthouse by someone who pointed out that the Confederate President Jefferson Davis's office used to be right near his new chambers. "That was very reassur ing, you can imagine that," Gregory said. </P>
<P>
In a study of capital convictions and appeals between 1973 and 1995, Prof. James S. Liebman of Columbia University Law School found that t he Fourth Circuit granted relief to death-row inmates less frequently than any other appeals court in the country. Even at that point, and it has gotten more restrictive since, the Fourth Circuit was overturning 12 percent of the death s entences it reviewed: that compared with an average 40 percent reversal rate fo r federal appeals courts. "There are other conservative courts of appeal but n one that are a black hole of capital l itigation like the Fourth Circuit," said John H. Blume, director of the Cornel l Death Penalty Project, who represents South Carolina prisoners. </P> <P>When Kevin Wiggins's case came up before the Fourth Circuit in January 2002, he was on death row in Maryland, trying not to get his hopes up. A federal dis trict chief judge had invalidated his death sentence and voided his conviction for murder. Theoretically, he should have gone free. But the state appealed. An d Wiggins knew, because death-row prisoners k now these things, that the odds of winning in the Fourth Circuit weren't good. </P> <P>In February, I visited Wiggins in the C-pod of the Maryland Correctional Adj ustment Center in downtown Baltimore. When a guard unlocked the door to a narro w concrete visiting cell, Wiggins was already there, staring blankly through a scratched glass partition. Wearing a white undershirt, his face round with a wi sp of a mustache, he was itching to get talking. And talk he did, like a balloo n releasing air, his words a jum ble as he dizzyingly flicked back and forth in time. </P> <P>Matter-of-factly, Wiggins described himself as "a nobody with no family and no skills." He had a nightmarish childhood, according to information gathered by a forensic social worker hired by his present lawyer. His mother was alcoho lic, neglectful and abusive. When he was 6, Wiggins was removed from his mother 's home after she burned him severely with a hot plate in punishment for playin g with matches. He then endured a series of foster homes i n which he was beaten, locked in closets and repeatedly raped. He emerged into adulthood as a barely educated loner who lived in rented rooms and worked at mi nimum-wage jobs. He was of "borderline intelligence," according to state soci al-service records. </P> <P>Wiggins had no criminal record when he was arrested at age 27 for the murder of an elderly woman. The State of Maryland maintained that Wiggins drowned Flo rence Lacs, 77, in her bathtub in 1988: he was working as a painter in her buil ding, and he and his girlfriend were found in possession of Lacs's credit cards and car. Th ere was no forensic evidence linking Wiggins to the murder, though there was un identified forensic evidence -- fingerprints, hair, fibers and a baseball cap l eft at the scene. Still, in a bench trial, a state judge convicted Wiggins of r obbery and murder. </P>
e not death. They did not even bother to investigate his background to discover whether he possessed the kind of "social history" that is routinely used to humanize a defendant and mitigate against the imposition of the death penalty. </P> <P>Wiggins has now been on death row since 1989. In 1993, a high-powered Washin

he 19th-century courthouse that houses the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit sits across from a CVS and a Dress Barn on a desultory stretch of Main Street in Richmond, Va. The entrance -- peeling "Pull" sign, metal detector, dim lobby -- is not awe-inspiring. But upstairs in the courtrooms, beneath the pendulous chandeliers and the oil portraits of former jurists, a hush prevails. Whether or not the judges are on the bench, people whisper. It is as if they tacitly accept that the atmosphere should continue to be rarefied even as the judicial process becomes increasingly polluted by politics.

This 148-year-old building, once the site of the Confederate Treasury, is where you go if you are appealing the decisions of federal judges or juries in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina or South Carolina. It's the last stop before the Supreme Court, which, given how few cases the highest court actually hears, essentially makes it the court of last resort for those seeking justice in this region.. Let the plaintiff beware, though; the Fourth Circuit is considered the shrewdest, most aggressively conservative federal appeals court in the nation.

On the last Tuesday in February, Lisa Ocheltree of Lexington, S.C., settled warily onto a hardwood bench in a courtroom carpeted in billiard-table green. Several years ago, Ocheltree won a substantial jury verdict in a sexual-harassment suit against her former employer. The jury found that vulgar language, crude sexual commentary and sexual acting-out created an extremely hostile working environment for Ocheltree as the sole woman in a costume-production workshop. But a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit overturned that verdict late last year. "Were they telling me that I should have just sucked it up?" Ocheltree asked. She petitioned the full court to reconsider the panel's 2-to-1 decision, and the judges agreed to take her case en banc, which they hardly ever do.

And so all 12 judges were about to file in and take the bench, affording a rare glimpse at the dynamic of the entire court. Ocheltree's lawyer was nervous: a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit provides a grilling, but this would be a full-court press. Ocheltree, however, was determined not to be intimidated. "Just because I'm a blue-collar worker doesn't mean I'm gonna let the black robes scare me," she said. "It may be the South, but it's the 21st century."

Geographically, the Fourth Circuit, one of 13 federal courts of appeals, is not the most southern. But it is singularly genteel: its judges descend from the bench to shake lawyers' hands after oral arguments.. And as recently as 1999, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist led the Fourth Circuit's annual judicial conference in a traditional rousing sing-along that included "Dixie." This always offended civil rights lawyers and the few African-American lawyers in attendance. But it never surprised them.

Wilkinson, the bottom line seemed to be that there was a jury verdict, and his remarks hinted that he was disinclined to overturn it.

Luttig, however, didn't seem certain that the jury verdict was defensible, and he scolded Ocheltree's lawyer, William Elvin Hopkins Jr., 36, for failing to make his best case. As Luttig saw it, the crux of Hopkins's challenge was to explain why Ocheltree was discriminated against if the locker-room atmosphere predated her arrival at Scollon. "You'll lose if you don't better answer that before this panel," he said. Luttig suggested this theory: Most men would stop such salacious talk once a woman was in their midst and if they didn't, it was precisely because she was there. Their behavior may not have changed, but their motivation did, he said.

When the conversation became graphic, Widener, whose eyes had been closed, seemed to startle into participation. "You're asking us to hold that when there's an all-male shop, a woman can walk in and say, 'Give me the money!'"

Williams agreed: there was no reason for Ocheltree to have been any more offended than her male colleagues by sexually explicit conversation, not in an age when magazines feature articles about how much women enjoy oral sex.

As in most oral arguments I observed, Gregory, the African-American judge who joined the court in 2001, didn't grandstand. When he speaks, though, he doesn't mince words, slices to the core and if the subject is discrimination, he gets it. Title VII is not about sex or race, he said; it's about power. And the incidents with the mannequin speak volumes, he said: "The problem with the mannequin is that it became almost an effigy, if you will, of the plaintiff."

As Ocheltree left the courthouse, still holding her husband's hand, she said that she felt the court would do the right thing when it issued its decision later this year. There was no real basis for her optimism, though, not in the court's track record or in the questions the judges asked at her hearing. It could go either way, but the odds are not with the Lisa Ocheltrees or the Kevin Wigginses, not in the Fourth Circuit or, for that matter, in an ever increasing number of appellate courts in this country.

Legal scholars talk about the pendulum swinging from liberal to conservative, from a preoccupation with individuals' rights to a preoccupation with states' rights, and suggest that, in time, it will swing back once more. It would certainly help many Americans sustain their faith in the system if the courts could find their equilibrium, if they could become less ideological, less predictable and less political. That doesn't appear to be on the horizon, though, not in the foreseeable future. In the historic site in Richmond where the Confederacy once thrived, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is ushering in the 21st century.

It was not until the year 2001 that the Fourth Circuit, which has the largest African-American population of any appellate jurisdiction, became the final federal appeals court to be racially or ethnically integrated. Many consider the court to be a legacy of Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms because the former senators from the Carolinas played a key role in shaping it through patronage appointments and obstructionism. Indeed, President Bush's most recent appointment to the Fourth Circuit, Dennis W. Shedd, is a former chief of staff to Thurmond; his pending nominee, Terrence Boyle, is a former Helms aide unsuccessfully nominated by Bush's father more than 10 years ago.

Although President Bush may or may not get the chance to name a new Supreme Court justice this year, he is busy trying to fill 25 federal appeals court vacancies, including 3 on the Fourth Circuit, with the backing of a newly Republican Senate. He already has 16 nominees waiting for confirmation. And despite the occasional Democratic filibuster, he appears poised to transform the federal judiciary -- which includes 179 appeals judges at full strength -- back into an overwhelmingly conservative bench. In 12 years between them, Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush established a Republican majority on every appeals court. Clinton, facing stiff resistance from an opposition Senate for six of his eight years, pushed that back somewhat so that Bush inherited a Republican majority on 8 of the 13 appellate courts, with 3 more poised to swing Republican through his appointments. And those appointments, because they are for life, could reverberate for generations. Judge H. Emory Widener Jr. of the Fourth Circuit, who i

As Bush makes his selections, his staunch conservative supporters tout the Fourth Circuit as a model to emulate, and liberals view it anxiously as a harbinger of doom. That's because the Fourth Circuit, which has eight Republican and four Democratic appointees, is not only conservative but also bold and muscular in its conservatism. It is confident enough to strike down acts of Congress when it finds them stretching the limits of the federal government's power and hardheaded enough to rule against nearly every death-row defendant who comes before it.

To critics, the Fourth Circuit lacks compassion for the individual. To admirers, the Fourth Circuit is a welcome corrective after years of soft, liberally activist benches, a brilliant court with a healthy respect for the concerns of prosecutors, of business owners, of state officials -- and of the Bush administration, which received deference from the court to treat a United States citizen captured in Afghanistan as an "enemy combatant" who could be detained without charges even on American soil.

Helms once told a North Carolina newspaper that the furor in Washington over judicial nominations was out of whack with the sentiments of the public: "You go out on the street of Raleigh, N.C., and ask 100 people, 'Do you give a damn who is on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals?' They'll say, 'What's that?'"

He had a point. Few pay much attention to federal courts below the Supreme Court level. But they should. The appellate courts, created in the late 19th century to relieve overcrowding of the Supreme Court's docket, decide about 28,000 cases a year compared with the highest court's 75 or so. Practically speaking, they have the final say in most matters of law; their reach is broader, if not deeper, than the Supreme Court's itself.

Judges on the Fourth Circuit say that they just follow the Supreme Court's lead. And it is true that the Fourth Circuit is the appellate court closest in thinking to the Rehnquist Court. But the relationship is symbiotic: the Fourth Circuit does not just imitate; it also initiates. It pushes the envelope, testing the boundaries of conservative doctrine in the area of, say, reasserting states rights over big government. Sometimes, the Supreme Court reins in the Fourth Circuit, reversing its more experimental decisions, but it also upholds them or leaves them alone to become the law of the land. There is a cross-fertilization, which could see its apotheosis this spring: the Fourth Circuit is dominated intellectually by two very different conservative judges, J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd and J. Michael Luttig, both of whom are leading candidates for the next Supreme Court vacancy.

Judge Karen J. Williams, 52, a tall, slender woman with delicate features and a regal carriage, wrote the decision overturning the jury verdict in Lisa Ocheltree v. Scollon Productions. The federal law that prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace, as she phrased it ever so piquantly, is not a "neo-Victorian chivalry code designed to protect" the "tender sensitivities of contemporary women."

Williams eloped at 17 with her teenage sweetheart, gave birth to four children, taught school, commuted to law school and eventually became a lawyer in her husband's private practice in Orangeburg, S.C. She was appointed by former President Bush in 1992 on the recommendation of Strom Thurmond, a friend of her father-in-law's, then the president of the South Carolina State Senate. At Williams's investiture, Thurmond and her father-in-law reminisced about how they used to double-date.

Williams, in the self-mocking "baby judge" speech that newly appointed jurists make at the annual judicial conference, said that Thurmond "maneuvered my hearings so that I would be the first woman on the circuit and his nominee." Thurmond, she said, liked to be on the cutting edge, and he just plain liked women too. In the course of the confirmation process, Williams added, a Justice Department official pointed out to her that her race was listed incorrectly on her driver's license. "We finally knew then how I got it," she said jokingly, referring to the judgeship. "Not only was I a female, but they had me as a black female." Some laughed; others cringed.

Once a month, the judges, whose annual salary of $164,000 is higher than that of senators, travel from their home states to Richmond to hear a week of oral arguments. They sit in three-judge panels randomly selected by a computer program and invariably encounter a rich menu of human dramas and hot-button issues. They hear everything from bankruptcy cases to international child-custody disputes, from race discrimination claims to environmental battles over wetlands. In the January hearings, they debated whether Norfolk, Va., could use an anti-loitering statute to keep an elderly couple from protesting abortion on a bridge over a highway and whether animal-control officers in High Point, N.C., were stripping pit bull owners of their Fourth Amendment rights by killing their dogs. They examined three cadets' contention that the mealtime prayer at the Virginia Military Institute was unconstitutional and an Israeli immigrant's appeal of his conviction for interfering with a flight crew when, on the three-month an

The full Fourth Circuit rarely sits to review the decision of one of its three-judge panels. When it does, though, critics say that it uses this en banc procedure to overturn liberal decisions that slip through, and there are plenty of supporting examples. But with Ocheltree, the judges were sitting in reconsideration of a quite conservative decision, one that would greatly limit the ability of employees in the region to make successful claims of sexual harassment. They were also addressing the sensitive issue of the sanctity of jury decisions.

Williams was the author of an infamous decision several years ago. The Fourth Circuit ruled that the liberal Warren Court's landmark 1966 ruling in Miranda v. Arizona was not constitutionally based, and as such that an obsolete Congressional statute trumped it. More than 30 years ago, the statute was a stillborn attempt to overrule the court's holding that criminal suspects must be apprised of their rights through what have become known as Miranda warnings. It was never enforced and largely forgotten until the Fourth Circuit resurrected it. And Williams's decision helped cement the Fourth Circuit's reputation as a judicially active conservative court. But the Supreme Court reversed it, 7 to 2, with Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, the two most conservative justices and President Bush's self-proclaimed favorites, dissenting. In that instance and several others, the Fourth Circuit's effort to nudge the Supreme Court toward greater conservatism backfired. Still, the Supreme Court has upheld 36.5 percent of

The Fourth Circuit does not march in conservative lock step, however, and its intellectually vibrant judges do not constitute an ideological cabal. The court often reaches consensus across the ideological divide; some of its work is nonideological in nature. Sometimes the majority lets liberal decisions stand; other times even the most conservative judges issue opinions that seem to betray their ideological stripes. And often the fiercest legal arguments are not between the liberals and the conservatives but between conservatives themselves.

Yet when it comes to high-profile decisions, the Fourth Circuit tends to divide neatly along party lines. And taken together, those decisions not only bespeak a conservative philosophy of law but also serve a conservative political agenda. Among its many decisions, the Fourth Circuit has upheld the minute of silence in Virginia schools; ended court-ordered busing in Charlotte; upheld state laws that stringently regulate abortion clinics or require parental notification or ban so-called partial-birth abortions; ruled that the Virginia Military Institute could remain all male as long as there was a separate but comparable education for women; upheld a Charleston, S.C., program that tested maternity patients for illegal drug use without their consent and turned the results over to the police; overturned a Virginia prohibition against license plates bearing the Confederate flag; ruled that the F.D.A. didn't have the authority to regulate nicotine as a drug; and, most recently, overruled a West Virginia federal

As the Ocheltree hearing opened in a packed courtroom, the bailiff intoned the traditional blessing: "God save the United States and this honorable court." The judges took their seats in leather swivel chairs, with the brand-new chief judge, William W. Wilkins Jr. of South Carolina, in the center. Wilkins started his career as a clerk to Judge Clement Haynsworth of the Fourth Circuit (whose Supreme Court nomination by Nixon was rejected by Congress) and then went on to become an aide and campaign director for Thurmond. He was the first federal judge appointed by Reagan.

J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd had technically stepped down as chief judge after seven years, as required by law. But he was sitting just off-center, and he still dominated, he and Luttig, each in his own way.

A warm, gracious and patrician Virginian, Wilkinson, 58, appears slight and owlish in his civilian clothes -- blue blazer, gold buttons -- yet commanding in his robes. The son of a banker, the future judge attended boarding school at Lawrenceville and college at Yale before returning to Virginia to study law. While a law student, he ran as a Republican candidate for Congress; when he got 30 percent of the vote, he jokes, he took it as a mandate to finish law school. He eventually taught law and served as editorial-page editor of The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. (This didn't keep The Pilot from editorializing against his appointment to the bench in 1983, saying that he lacked courtroom experience.)

Wilkinson was confirmed at the age of 39, and he and Luttig share the experience of having been judicial Wunderkinds. Luttig points out that at the time of his appointment in 1991, he held the distinction of being the youngest judge on a federal appeals court. He was 37.

The two judges share other distinctions as well. They both clerked for Supreme Court justices they still revere -- Wilkinson for Lewis F. Powell Jr. and Luttig for Chief Justice Warren Burger as well as for Antonin Scalia when Scalia was an appeals court judge. Both worked for Republican Justice Departments and participated in judicial selections, Wilkinson under Reagan and Luttig under the first Bush. Luttig shepherded Clarence Thomas through his contentious confirmation, and pictures of Thomas hang on his chambers' walls, including one inscribed "This would not have been possible without you! Thanks so much, buddy!" (Luttig's three clean-cut male clerks will head to the Supreme Court next year to clerk for Thomas, Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.)

These similarities between Wilkinson and Luttig, and their keen legal minds, initially created a natural alliance between them. Luttig, a native of Tyler, Tex., said that he used to spend more time talking with Wilkinson than with any other judge on the court. They are still friends, he said. But the years have clarified the differences in the two judges' styles and their jurisprudence, and they often parry and thrust in their decisions, with Luttig going for the direct and Wilkinson the indirect jabs. Often Wilkinson and Luttig end up voting the same way, but "there's this very antagonistic sideshow," said Rodney Smolla, a University of Richmond law professor.

Wilkinson writes essayish opinions filled with the kind of rhetorical flourishes that I imagine him composing with a quill pen. He often goes beyond facts and analysis to hold forth. He ponders, he digresses, he philosophizes. Wilkinson is the rare judge who speaks publicly and writes books; in his recent "One Nation Indivisible," he assailed affirmative action and ethnic separatism. Occasionally he injects his personal views on, say, racial quotas into his legal opinions. When he takes issue with "my fine colleagues," he does so in the most courtly manner possible, always striving to emulate Justice Powell as "a healer and bridge builder," he said. In fact, taking me by surprise, he grew quite emotional when telling me how rancorously divided the legal community, the political community, even the country has become. His voice grew insistent, then caught, and his eyes moistened.

"I don't believe in throwing salt in people's eyes," he said. "It's very important to me that the country come together. There are so many wounds, and we ought not pick at scabs. The legal culture especially is too polarized. There's too much throwing of pitch and tar and mud."

Luttig, in contrast, is not given to bursts of inspirational speaking and does no public speaking. Down-to-earth and likable in private, he comes across publicly as intense, austere and unsentimental. "He goes out there with piercing ideas and steel-trap analysis," Smolla said. Luttig sees himself as a legal "nerd," worships analytical rigor and composes a hard-boiled, sometimes mathematically logical opinion. He does not hesitate to gore his colleagues if he finds their thinking subpar. "If any opinion is without reasoning or poorly reasoned, I want them to be embarrassed by their analysis so as to continually improve on the process," he told me. He can be particularly scathing toward Wilkinson -- "Judge Wilkinson misunderstands this issue altogether" -- and he'll criticize him for contradicting himself or for making pronouncements that go beyond a specific case.

Attorneys who go before Luttig know about one central event in his life: that his father was brutally murdered nine years ago, that he moved his chambers to Texas during his father's killer's trial and that the killer became a cause c?l?bre for death-penalty opponents before he was executed. Some wonder if it makes him less objective; Luttig has never granted a new hearing to a death-row defendant. He brushes their concerns aside; the experience affected him -- how could it not have? -- but it didn't warp him.

Many lawyers also assume that Luttig is more conservative than Wilkinson. But the law journal Judicature recently evaluated the decisions of six possible Bush nominees for the Supreme Court and found Wilkinson to be furthest to the right -- exceptionally conservative. It found Luttig the second least conservative of the six. "Did you see the Judicature article?" Luttig asked me, and he also made sure that I had read some cases in which he took unexpectedly liberal positions. He is loath to be predictable and eager to be perceived as more moderate in anticipation of a Supreme Court opening.

In one case, Luttig took issue with Wilkinson's finding that police officers in Prince George's County, Md., couldn't be held liable for violating the constitutional rights of Nelson O. Robles. The officers had tied Robles to a pole in a parking lot in the middle of the night with a note at his feet stating that he was wanted on an outstanding traffic warrant by a neighboring county. Wilkinson, while condemning the officers for behaving like Keystone Kops, said that they could not have known that they were violating Robles's constitutional rights because it had never been specifically enunciated that what they did was such a violation.

have thought that at this point in our history no court would hold, as did this panel, that law enforcement officers need an opinion from this court in order for them to be on notice that handcuffing a pretrial detainee to a metal pole in a deserted shopping center at 3:00 a.m. in the morning, and abandoning him there, for no law enforcement purpose at all, is unconstitutional."

Wilkinson and Luttig do not like to talk about the possibility that they will be competing for a nomination as soon as this spring if, say, Chief Justice Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, steps down. But during Ocheltree's hearing at the Richmond courthouse, the subject was in the air.

Since 1995, for so long that she is beginning to feel and sound like a crusader, Lisa Ocheltree, 41, has been pursuing her claim against Scollon Productions, a manufacturer of life-size costumes for mascots like the South Carolina Gamecock and characters like Tommy Pickles.

She filed suit under a civil rights law, Title VII, that sees sexual harassment as a violation of the prohibition against workplace discrimination because of sex. Some sexual-harassment claims involve a quid pro quo; others, like Ocheltree's, assert a hostile work environment.. Unfortunately for Ocheltree, she has ended up before the appeals court least likely to be sympathetic to any such claims.

Plaintiffs in sexual-harassment suits prevail in only 21 percent of their appeals before the Fourth Circuit, according to a recent Cornell Law Review article. They win, in contrast, 80 percent of the time in the New York-based Second Circuit, which is dominated by Democratic appointees, and 39 percent of the time nationwide.

When Ocheltree, now a U.P.S. employee, worked at Scollon Productions, she was the only woman in an otherwise all-male production shop. Over time, the atmosphere grew more coarse, she said, until it was dominated by sexually explicit conversation and behavior.

Ocheltree complained about the environment during an employee meeting, and she was rebuffed repeatedly when she tried to get an audience with the company's senior executives. After about 18 months at Scollon, she was fired. A federal judge summarily dismissed her complaint, but, representing herself, she appealed that judgment to the Fourth Circuit, which determined that she had grounds for trial. A jury awarded Ocheltree $7,280 in compensatory damages and $400,000 in punitive damages. The judge reduced the damages to $50,000 because Scollon is a small business. Nonetheless, Ocheltree said that her victory restored her "sense of honor and dignity," even though the men at the plant "are laughing to this day."

Scollon Productions appealed the jury's verdict to the Fourth Circuit, contending that Ocheltree's description of the workplace environment was exaggerated and that the crude behavior wasn't directed at Ocheltree anyway. The three-judge panel assigned the case included Williams, Paul V. Niemeyer, appointed by Bush in 1990, and M. Blane Michael, a bow-tie-wearing Clinton appointee from West Virginia. Williams and Niemeyer voted to reverse the jury's decision, and Michael was the dissenter.

It is a role that Michael, who keeps a large photograph of Clinton's inauguration on his chambers' walls, often exercises. There have been other instances in which it has pitted him against Williams too, although he told me that their personal relations are cordial. Still, Michael wrote the dissent in the Miranda case and in one in which Williams found that people with symptom-free H.I.V. are not protected by the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Michael said that Williams and Niemeyer chose "again and again" to see the evidence in a light favorable to Ocheltree's employer rather than to Ocheltree. They were ignoring the fact that the jury found Ocheltree to be the credible party, and they were ignoring their obligation to respect a jury's finding, he said. There is, he wrote, "a profound difference in our respective approaches to reviewing a jury verdict."

In a spirited opinion, Williams wrote that there was no reason to believe that the vulgar atmosphere in the workshop had anything to do with Ocheltree's presence or the fact that she was a woman. The incidents were isolated, and the rest was banter, she said. The courts shouldn't treat women preferentially by insulating them from everyday insults. And further, she added, there was some indication that Ocheltree herself was not a "model of femininity."

In his dissent, Michael wrote that a reasonable jury would conclude that the men at Scollon Productions resented Ocheltree's

intrusion into their workplace and had set out to make her unwelcome. He said that the "overall tenor of the workplace banter conveyed the message that women exist primarily to gratify male desires for oral sex." In a workplace suffused with representations of women as sexual objects, a female worker "would doubtless wonder," he wrote, whether her male co-workers were looking at her and asking themselves "whether she 'swallows'" or whether she could "'suck a golf ball through a garden hose.'"

Ocheltree was devastated that the Fourth Circuit decision was written by a woman. "Just because she sits up on that bench, she still puts her pantyhose on one leg at a time," she said. "If all the male judges were sitting around talking about oral sex, I wonder how she'd feel then."

Franklin Delano Roosevelt famously set out to overhaul the federal judiciary ideologically. Confronting courts that were thwarting his New Deal projects, he strove to create liberal ones that would grant the government more power to regulate the economy. Decades later, Reagan displayed a similar purposefulness, screening judicial candidates using ideological "litmus tests" in order to choose jurists who were strict constructionists, tough on crime, anti-abortion and pro-family..

Between them, Reagan and the first President Bush named six judges to the Fourth Circuit; those six joined Nixon's appointee, Widener, to form a solid conservative core. On other courts, the transformation to conservative has been more startling. The two Deep South appellate courts, for instance, used to be civil rights crusaders. But until the Carter judges retired, the Fourth Circuit was, if not liberal, at least more balanced.

Clinton put a priority on diversifying the federal bench, picking up where Carter had left off. Despite an uncooperative Senate, he succeeded in getting a record 9 black, 7 Hispanic and 20 female judges confirmed.

Yet the Clinton administration never saw its role as reasserting ideological balance on the courts. When Clinton took office, the appeals courts were solidly Republican, but his administration did not feel compelled to find liberal powerhouses to counter the conservative heavyweights appointed by Reagan and Bush. "Some in the White House argued very forcefully that their job was not to put on the federal bench the liberal equivalents of the Luttigs and the Wilkinsons," said Nan Aron, president of Alliance for Justice, a liberal coalition. Clinton was not a die-hard liberal himself, and he tended to nominate centrist legal professionals in tune with his more centrist politics. Still, he faced intense partisan battles, particularly over his minority appointees, and the acrimony continued through Bush's first two years, affecting not just the political arena but also the courts themselves.

Luttig told me that he thinks the politics surrounding judicial appointments makes judges hyperconscious of their political sponsors. "Judges are told, 'You're appointed by us to do these things.' So then judges start thinking, Well, how do I interpret the law to get the result that the people who pushed for me to be here want me to get?" he said. "I believe that there's a natural temptation to line up as political partisans that is reinforced by the political process. And it has to be resisted, by the judiciary and by the politicians."

Clinton named four white judges to the Fourth Circuit without much battle, including one, William B. Traxler Jr., of Greenville, S.C., who was first elevated to the federal bench, on Thurmond's recommendation, by former President Bush. Traxler votes so often with the conservative majority that court watchers forget he's a Democratic appointee. The other three -- Blane Michael and Robert B. King of West Virginia and Diana Gribbon Motz of Maryland -- are unofficially the dissenters.

In contrast to his smooth experience with getting the white judges confirmed, Clinton tried at least four times to name an African-American to the Fourth Circuit. His nominees were blocked every time. Jesse Helms still bore a grudge from Clinton's failure to renominate his former aide Terrence Boyle, after Boyle's nomination by the first Bush had elapsed. Helms then blocked, as is the home state senator's power, every Clinton nominee from North Carolina, including two African-American judges. As a result, there is no one from North Carolina on the Fourth Circuit now, although proving that even a retired Helms can get his way, President Bush has a pending nominee from North Carolina -- and that is Boyle.

During his period of obstructionism, Helms insisted, and Thurmond publicly concurred, that the matter had nothing to do with race or politics. It would simply be a waste of taxpayer money, Helms said repeatedly, to fill vacancies on the Fourth Circuit when the chief judge, Wilkinson, thought the court would function less efficiently if it were bigger. (And clearly it would have if it became less ideologically homogeneous.)

Clinton finally tried an end run around Helms by nominating a Virginian, a soft-spoken African-American lawyer named Roger L. Gregory. Gregory comes from a small town in rural Virginia where his parents worked in the local tobacco factory. He grew up to found a Richmond law firm with L. Douglas Wilder, the former governor of Virginia. He gives inspirational speeches to black youths. His nomination had bipartisan support. But even Gregory couldn't get a hearing scheduled.

So Clinton resorted to an extraordinary tactic. During his last days in office, after Congress had recessed, Clinton unilaterally appointed Gregory to the bench. President Bush, eager to demonstrate bipartisanship and win support for his own candidates, eventually allowed Gregory's temporary appointment to become permanent. In July 2001, the Senate confirmed him 93 to 1, with Trent Lott casting the dissenting vote. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was officially integrated.

In his "baby judge" speech at the Fourth Circuit judicial convention last summer, Gregory cited Frederick Douglass and Harriet Tubman, setting a new kind of precedent for the court. He also joked that he was welcomed to the Richmond courthouse by someone who pointed out that the Confederate President Jefferson Davis's office used to be right near his new chambers. "That was very reassuring, you can imagine that," Gregory said.

In a study of capital convictions and appeals between 1973 and 1995, Prof. James S. Liebman of Columbia University Law School found that the Fourth Circuit granted relief to death-row inmates less frequently than any other appeals court in the country. Even at that point, and it has gotten more restrictive since, the Fourth Circuit was overturning 12 percent of the death sentences it reviewed: that compared with an average 40 percent reversal rate for federal appeals courts. "There are other conservative courts of appeal but none that are a black hole of capital litigation like the Fourth Circuit," said John H. Blume, director of the Cornell Death Penalty Project, who represe nts South Carolina prisoners.

When Kevin Wiggins's case came up before the Fourth Circuit in January 2002, he was on death row in Maryland, trying not to get his hopes up. A federal district chief judge had invalidated his death sentence and voided his conviction for murder. Theoretically, he should have gone free. But the state appealed. And Wiggins knew, because death-row prisoners know these things, that the odds of winning in the Fourth Circuit weren't good.

In February, I visited Wiggins in the C-pod of the Maryland Correctional Adjustment Center in downtown Baltimore. When a guard unlocked the door to a narrow concrete visiting cell, Wiggins was already there, staring blankly through a scratched glass partition. Wearing a white undershirt, his face round with a wisp of a mustache, he was itching to get talking. And talk he did, like a balloon releasing air, his words a jumble as he dizzyingly flicked back and forth in time.

Matter-of-factly, Wiggins described himself as "a nobody with no family and no skills." He had a nightmarish childhood, according to information gathered by a forensic social worker hired by his present lawyer. His mother was alcoholic, neglectful and abusive. When he was 6, Wiggins was removed from his mother's home after she burned him severely with a hot plate in punishment for playing with matches. He then endured a series of foster homes in which he was beaten, locked in closets and repeatedly raped. He emerged into adulthood as a barely educated loner who lived in rented rooms and worked at minimum-wage jobs. He was of "borderline intelligence," according to state social-service records.

Wiggins had no criminal record when he was arrested at age 27 for the murder of an elderly woman. The State of Maryland maintained that Wiggins drowned Florence Lacs, 77, in her bathtub in 1988: he was working as a painter in her building, and he and his girlfriend were found in possession of Lacs's credit cards and car. There was no forensic evidence linking Wiggins to the murder, though there was unidentified forensic evidence -- fingerprints, hair, fibers and a baseball cap left at the scene. Still, in a bench trial, a state judge convicted Wiggins of robbery and murder.

During the subsequent sentencing trial, Wiggins's inexperienced public defenders decided to reargue his innocence instead of presenting a case for why he should get life not death. They did not even bother to investigate his background to discover whether he possessed the kind of "social history" that is routinely used to humanize a defendant and mitigate against the imposition of the death penalty.

Wiggins has now been on death row since 1989. In 1993, a high-powered Washington lawyer, Donald B. Verrilli, Jr., took on Wiggins's case pro bono, and it began wending its way through the postconviction review and then the state appeals process. Verrilli found the case against Wiggins to be weakly circumstantial at best, offering evidence only that Wiggins was a logical suspect. Verrilli said he came to believe that Wiggins did not commit the crime but rather served as the "fall guy for people more clever than him." Specifically, there is a plausible alternative to the course of events involving Wiggins's girlfriend, who was 15 years his elder. All charges against her were dropped, and she testified against Wiggins; her brother, it seemed, lived in an apartment below the victim's.

The case's first stop in federal court was at the bench of Maryland's United States chief district judge, J. Frederick Motz, who happens to be married to Judge Diana Motz, a Clinton appointee on the Fourth Circuit. Judge Frederick Motz is a former federal prosecutor appointed by Reagan; he is not, as he said in court one day, "an anti-capital punishment person." In a 55-page opinion, he concluded, "No rational finder of fact could have found Wiggins guilty of murder beyond a reasonable doubt." He invalidated the murder conviction and threw out the death sentence too.

I asked Wiggins whether he was happy when Motz took his side. "It's hard for me to be happy about anything," he said. Wiggins told me that he could remember only one joyful time in his life. It was after his mother burned him. Six years old, he awoke in a hospital bed, surrounded by nurses who clucked over him, petting his hair and bringing him cookies.

When Maryland prosecutors decided to appeal to the Fourth Circuit, Motz publicly questioned their desire to continue pursuing what he characterized as a flimsy case. "Why isn't this case of moral concern to the state?" he asked. "Or don't you care?"

At the Fourth Circuit, Wiggins drew a panel of three Republican appointees -- Wilkinson, Widener and Niemeyer. In a hearing last winter, the judges appeared to be wrestling with the case; they doubled the time they usually allot attorneys to present their arguments. Last May, however, in a decision written by the 79-year-old Judge Widener, the panel ended up reinstating Wiggins's conviction and his death sentence. The panel gave the original trial judge the benefit of the doubt; it deferred to his assertion that he based his decision of Wiggins's guilt on a totality of evidence and that he did not infer Wiggins's guilt from his possession of the victim's property. And it ruled that the public defenders' failure to present Wiggins's background during the sentencing hearing was a trial tactic rather than negligence.

And yet the panel had some hesitations. Judge Wilkinson wrote that he couldn't "say with certainty" that Wiggins committed the murder. And Judge Niemeyer acknowledged that it was something of a close call to find that Wiggins had adequate counsel.

"I think that most circuit courts, if they have real doubts about what has happened in a capital case, they will reverse," Professor Liebman said. "The Fourth Circuit doesn't have the same threshold. In this case, they saw the tripwire and stepped right over it."

Verrilli petitioned the Supreme Court, and in a hearing scheduled for March 24, the court will pick up Wiggins's case, continuing its dialogue with the Fourth Circuit's decision-making. Since 1996, the Supreme Court has reviewed far more death-penalty cases coming from the Fourth Circuit than from any other appeals court -- 9 from the Fourth Circuit alone and 12 from the other 11 appeals courts combined. The 1996 date is significant because in that year Congress passed the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, limiting federal courts' review of capital cases to those in which there's "an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law." That "unreasonableness," however, is open to interpretation, and while the Fourth Circuit has chosen to see its hands tied, other circuits have granted themselves more wiggle room. The Supreme Court is thus mediating the conflict between the circuits, trying to help them figure out when it is appropriate and inappropriate to defer to the state courts

Generally, the Supreme Court upholds the Fourth Circuit's tough stance in death-penalty cases by a 5-to-4 vote, dividing ideologically. Take the Virginia case of Walter Mickens Jr., whose lawyer, it turned out, had at one time defended Mickens's 17-year-old victim. A rare liberal panel of the Fourth Circuit found that Mickens's lawyer had a conflict of interest. But the Fourth Circuit did not want to let that reversal stand; it met en banc and reinstated his conviction. The case then went to the Supreme Court, which agreed, 5 to 4, with the Fourth Circuit's full panel: it held that the lawyer's conflict of interest didn't matter since Mickens couldn't prove that it adversely affected the outcome of his case. Last June, Mickens was executed by lethal injection.

In two important rulings on how to interpret the 1996 law, however, the Supreme Court reversed the Fourth Circuit, finding that the Richmond court had chosen to read the statute too narrowly. In one case, the Supreme Court, unlike the Fourth Circuit, found the state court's judgment "unreasonable" for failing to recognize that the legal representation of Terry Williams, a Virginia inmate, was so ineffective that it didn't meet minimum constitutional standards for competency. Like Wiggins's, Williams's lawyer didn't investigate his horrific childhood; his lawyer was subsequently disbarred for mental disability.

Many, if not most, appeals judges show a pattern to their judging over time.

Wilkinson has granted a new hearing to a death-row prisoner once in 19 years, according to a South Carolina Law Review article. In contrast, Judge Francis D. Murnaghan Jr. of Maryland, who used to be the Fourth Circuit's pre-eminent liberal, granted relief to about one out of three death-row prisoners who came before him.

Yet no judge wants to be seen as tailoring his decisions to his ideology, as bending the law to determine preconceived results. Every judge will tell you that he or she comes to each case with an open mind, seeing a distinct set of facts that raises distinct legal questions.

Wilkinson said he feels strongly that judges should never be rated and ranked as if they were politicians whose votes could be counted. He said that the statistical analyses of judges' decisions, followed by the affixing of a label of liberal or conservative, is reductive.

"I don't go on the bench as liberal or conservative," Wilkinson said. And yet he does not dispute that he is a conservative jurist. He acknowledges his place among those who came of age concerned about "the excessive activism" of the Warren Court. The Warren Court was seen as having overstepped its bounds with rulings that expanded equal protection, the right to vote, criminal defendants' rights and the right to privacy. Conservatives, in contrast, preached judicial restraint.

Yet with conservatives now controlling most of the nation's federal appeals courts, Wilkinson is one among many who have come to a new appreciation of judicial activism. Like the "new federalists" whose conservative thinking increasingly influences the legal mainstream, Wilkinson said he believes that the Constitution is more than just the Bill of Rights. He doesn't think that the Bill of Rights has been overemphasized, he is quick to say, but that what he calls "the structural Constitution" has been underemphasized.

"That body of the document that spells out the relationship between the federal government and the states was neglected for far too long," he said. "The power of Congress was seen as unlimited and that of the states as a virtual nullity." Wilkinson has found it exciting, he said, to be engaged in redressing this imbalance, which sometimes means striking down Congressional acts that seem to usurp state power unconstitutionally.

But he notes, because he is of judicious temperament, that judicial activism is "heady wine" and that restraint is still the greater virtue. Everything in moderation. Luttig takes exception to the view that striking down Congressional laws necessarily constitutes judicial activism. "Remember, it's sophomoric to think that invalidation of a statute equals judicial activism," he said. "Judicial activism means deciding a case based on one's own personal predilections, regardless. It might well take the form of sustaining a law that should be stricken." Several years ago, in an opinion written by Luttig, the Fourth Circuit struck down a key provision of the Violence Against Women Act. As Luttig saw it, Congress had established a federal civil right that didn't exist in the Constitution ? the right to be free of crimes of violence motivated by gender ? and then established the additional right for victims of such violence to sue their aggressors for damages in federal court. Congress had justified the law based Luttig ruled that Congress had overstepped its authority. A three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit originally heard the appeal, upholding the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, as had 17 of 18 federal district judges who had reviewed it. But the full Fourth Circuit vacated the liberal decision, taking the case en banc. Motz, the Clinton appointee, hinted in her dissent that her colleagues were motivated by their distaste for the act itself. "Judges' policy choices provide no basis for finding a statute unconstitutional," she wrote.

The case went up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court agreed with the Fourth Circuit, 5 to 4, striking down the right of rape victims and abused women to sue in federal court under this statute. The Supreme Court version of the Fourth Circuit's ruling became the law of the land, and the Fourth Circuit and the Supreme Court jointly reinforced the principle that Congress's powers are limited.

Luttig's opinion, though, went beyond the Supreme Court's rhetorically. He began, "We the People, distrustful of power, and believing that government limited and dispersed protects freedom best, provided that our federal government would be one of enumerated powers, and that all power unenumerated would be reserved to the several States and to ourselves."

Cass Sunstein, a University of Chicago law professor, said that no court had issued such a battle cry for states' rights since before the New Deal.

During the nearly two hours that the Fourth Circuit debated her case, Ocheltree, dressed in a pin-striped pants suit with a white handkerchief sewed into the breast pocket, sat anonymously on a pewlike bench, holding her husband's hand in a tight grip. The judges didn't even know she was there. Her feathered dirty blond hair fell over her eyes a few times, and she tossed it back. Other than that, she was frozen, riveted by the theater of the bench, which veered occasionally into Grand Guignol.

Chuck Thompson, the lawyer for Scollon Productions, who used to clerk for Senior Judge Clyde H. Hamilton, a Republican appointee to the Fourth Circuit, wore a red bow tie. "May it please the court," he said. He didn't get a chance to say very much more. This was the judges' show. Karen Williams, author of the pro-employer decision, spent more time arguing Scollon's case than Thompson did. Michael, the dissenter, rolled his eyes and defended Ocheltree; Motz fired a few one-line zingers. Luttig, wagging his finger, told his fellow judges where their legal reasoning proved inadequate and instructed the lawyers for both sides what their arguments should be. "I'd have to disagree with you," Thompson ventured at one point.

"You can't!" Luttig retorted. "You can't disagree!" Wilkinson, perennially concerned with civility, exuded disgust at the locker-room atmosphere being described and exasperation with his colleagues for rehashing the ugly details of the case. "Who enjoys what and who enjoys whom," he said, his voice booming, "that's not for an appellate court to decide." For

It is as if they tacitly accept that the atmosphere should continue to be rarefied even as the judicial process becomes increasingly polluted by politics. </P> <P>This 148-year-old building, once the site of the Confederate Treasury, is where you go if you are appealing the decisions of federal judges or juries in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina or South Carolina. It's the last stop before the Supreme Court, which, given how few cases the highest court actually hears, essentially makes it the court of last resort for those seeking justice in this region. Let the plaintiff beware, though; the Fourth Circuit is considered the shrewdest, most aggressively conservative federal appeals court in the nation. </P>
<P>On the last Tuesday in February, Lisa Ocheltree of Lexington, S.C., settled warily onto a hardwood bench in a courtroom carpeted in billiard-table green. Several years ago, Ocheltree won a substantial jury verdict in a sexual-harassment suit against her former employer. The jury found that vulgar language, crude sexual commentary and sexual acting-out created an extremely hostile working environment for Ocheltree as the sole woman in a costume-production workshop. But a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit overturned that verdict late last year. "Were they telling me that I should have just sucked it up?" Ocheltree asked. She petitioned the full court to reconsider the panel's 2-to-1 decision, and the judges agreed to take her case en banc, which they hardly ever do. </P>
<P>And so all 12 judges were about to file in and take the bench, affording a rare glimpse at the dynamic of the entire court. Ocheltree's lawyer was nervous: a three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit provides a grilling, but this would be a full-court press. Ocheltree, however, was determined not to be intimidated. "Just because I'm a blue-collar worker doesn't mean I'm gonna let the black robes scare me," she said. "It may be the South, but it's the 21st century." </P>
<P>Geographically, the Fourth Circuit, one of 13 federal courts of appeals, is not the most southern. But it is singularly genteel: its judges descend from the bench to shake lawyers' hands after oral arguments. And as recently as 1999, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist led the Fourth Circuit's annual judicial conference in a traditional rousing sing-along that included "Dixie." This always offended civil rights lawyers and the few African-American lawyers in attendance. But it never surprised them. </P>
<P>It was not until the year 2001 that the Fourth Circuit, which has the largest African-American population of any appellate jurisdiction, became the final federal appeals court to be racially or ethnically integrated. Many consider the court to be a legacy of Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms because the former senators from the Carolinas played a key role in shaping it through patronage appointments and obstructionism. Indeed, President Bush's most recent appointment to the Fourth Circuit, Dennis W. Shedd, is a former chief of staff to Thurmond; his pending nominee, Terrence Boyle, is a former Helms aide unsuccessfully nominated by Bush's father more than 10 years ago. </P>
<P>Although President Bush may or may not get the chance to name a new Supreme Court justice this year, he is busy trying to fill 25 federal appeals court vacancies, including 3 on the Fourth Circuit, with the backing of a newly Republican Senate. He already has 16 nominees waiting for confirmation. And despite the occasional Democratic filibuster, he appears poised to transform the federal judiciary -- which includes 179 appeals judges at full strength -- back into an overwhelmingly conservative bench. In 12 years between them, Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush established a Republican majority on every appeals court. Clinton, facing stiff resistance from an opposition Senate for six of his eight years, pushed that back somewhat so that Bush inherited a Republican majority on 8 of the 13 appellate courts, with 3 more poised to swing Republican through his appointments. And those appointments, because they are for life, could reverberate for generations. Judge H. Emory Widener Jr. of the Fourth Circuit, wh
<P>As Bush makes his selections, his staunch conservative supporters tout the Fourth Circuit as a model to emulate, and liberals view it anxiously as a harbinger of doom. That's because the Fourth Circuit, which has eight Republican and four Democratic appointees, is not only conservative but also bold and muscular in its conservatism. It is confident enough to strike down acts of Congress when it finds them stretching the limits of the federal government's power and hardheaded enough to rule against nearly every death-row defendant who comes before it. </P>
<P>To critics, the Fourth Circuit lacks compassion for the individual.. To admirers, the Fourth Circuit is a welcome corrective after years of soft, liberally activist benches, a brilliant court with a healthy respect for the concerns of prosecutors, of business owners, of state officials -- and of the Bush administration, which received deference from the court to treat a United States citizen captured in Afghanistan as an "enemy combatant" who could be detained without charges even on American soil. </P>
<P>Helms once told a North Carolina newspaper that the furor in Washington over judicial nominations was out of whack with the sentiments of the public: "You go out on the street of Raleigh, N.C., and ask 100 people, 'Do you give a damn who is on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals?' They'll say, 'What's that?'" </P> <P>He had a point. Few pay much attention to federal courts below the Supreme Court level. But they should. The appellate courts, created in the late 19th century to relieve overcrowding of the Supreme Court's docket, decide about 28,000 cases a year compared with the highest court's 75 or so. Practically speaking, they have the final say in most matters of law; their reach is broader, if not deeper, than the Supreme Court's itself. </P> <P>Judges on the Fourth Circuit say that they just follow the Supreme Court's lead. And it is true that the Fourth Circuit is the appellate court closest in thinking to the Rehnquist Court. But the relationship is symbiotic: the Fourth Circuit does not just imitate; it also initiates. It pushes the envelope, testing the boundaries of conservative doctrine in the area of, say, reasserting states rights over big government. Sometimes, the Supreme Court reins in the Fourth Circuit, reversing its more experimental decisions, but it also upholds them or leaves them alone to become the law of the land. There is a cross-fertilization, which could see its apotheosis this spring: the Fourth Circuit is dominated intellectually by two very different conservative judges, J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd and J. Michael Luttig, both of whom are leading candidates for the next Supreme Court vacancy. </P>

<P>
Judge Karen J. Williams, 52, a tall, slender woman with delicate features and a regal carriage, wrote the decision overturning the jury verdict in Lisa Ocheltree v. Scollon Productions. The federal law that prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace, as she phrased it ever so piquantly, is not a "neo-Victorian chivalry code designed to protect" the "tender sensitivities of contemporary women." </P>
<P>Williams eloped at 17 with her teenage sweetheart, gave birth to four children, taught school, commuted to law school and eventually became a lawyer in her husband's private practice in Orangeburg, S.C. She was appointed by former President Bush in 1992 on the recommendation of Strom Thurmond, a friend of her father-in-law's, then the president of the South Carolina State Senate. At Williams's investiture, Thurmond and her father-in-law reminisced about how they used to double-date. </P>
<P>Williams, in the self-mocking "baby judge" speech that newly appointed jurists make at the annual judicial conference, said that Thurmond "maneuvered my hearings so that I would be the first woman on the circuit and his nominee." Thurmond, she said, liked to be on the cutting edge, and he just plain liked women too. In the course of the confirmation process, Williams added, a Justice Department official pointed out to her that her race was listed incorrectly on her driver's license. "We finally knew then how I got it," she said jokingly, referring to the judgeship. "Not only was I a female, but they had me as a black female." Some laughed; others cringed. </P>
<P>Once a month, the judges, whose annual salary of $164,000 is higher than that of senators, travel from their home states to Richmond to hear a week of oral arguments. They sit in three-judge panels randomly selected by a computer program and invariably encounter a rich menu of human dramas and hot-button issues. They hear everything from bankruptcy cases to international child-custody disputes, from race discrimination claims to environmental battles over wetlands. In the January hearings, they debated whether Norfolk, Va., could use an anti-loitering statute to keep an elderly couple from protesting abortion on a bridge over a highway and whether animal-control officers in High Point, N.C., were stripping pit bull owners of their Fourth Amendment rights by killing their dogs. They examined three cadets' contention that the mealtime prayer at the Virginia Military Institute was unconstitutional and an Israeli immigrant's appeal of his conviction for interfering with a flight crew when, on the three-month
<P>The full Fourth Circuit rarely sits to review the decision of one of its three-judge panels. When it does, though, critics say that it uses this en banc procedure to overturn liberal decisions that slip through, and there are plenty of supporting examples. But with Ocheltree, the judges were sitting in reconsideration of a quite conservative decision, one that would greatly limit the ability of employees in the region to make successful claims of sexual harassment. They were also addressing the sensitive issue of the sanctity of jury decisions.. </P>
<P>Williams was the author of an infamous decision several years ago. The Fourth Circuit ruled that the liberal Warren Court's landmark 1966 ruling in Miranda v. Arizona was not constitutionally based, and as such that an obsolete Congressional statute trumped it. More than 30 years ago, the statute was a stillborn attempt to overrule the court's holding that criminal suspects must be apprised of their rights through what have become known as Miranda warnings. It was never enforced and largely forgotten until the Fourth Circuit resurrected it. And Williams's decision helped cement the Fourth Circuit's reputation as a judicially active conservative court. But the Supreme Court reversed it, 7 to 2, with Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, the two most conservative justices and President Bush's self-proclaimed favorites, dissenting. In that instance and several others, the Fourth Circuit's effort to nudge the Supreme Court toward greater conservatism backfired. Still, the Supreme Court has upheld 36.5 percent
<P>The Fourth Circuit does not march in conservative lock step, however, and its intellectually vibrant judges do not constitute an ideological cabal. The court often reaches consensus across the ideological divide; some of its work is nonideological in nature. Sometimes the majority lets liberal decisions stand; other times even the most conservative judges issue opinions that seem to betray their ideological stripes. And often the fiercest legal arguments are not between the liberals and the conservatives but between conservatives themselves. </P> <P>Yet when it comes to high-profile decisions, the Fourth Circuit tends to divide neatly along party lines. And taken together, those decisions not only bespeak a conservative philosophy of law but also serve a conservative political agenda. Among its many decisions, the Fourth Circuit has upheld the minute of silence in Virginia schools; ended court-ordered busing in Charlotte; upheld state laws that stringently regulate abortion clinics or require parental notification or ban so-called partial-birth abortions; ruled that the Virginia Military Institute could remain all male as long as there was a separate but comparable education for women; upheld a Charleston, S.C., program that tested maternity patients for illegal drug use without their consent and turned the results over to the police; overturned a Virginia prohibition against license plates bearing the Confederate flag; ruled that the F.D.A. didn't have the authority to regulate nicotine as a drug; and, most recently, overruled a West Virginia feder
<P>
As the Ocheltree hearing opened in a packed courtroom, the bailiff intoned the traditional blessing: "God save the United States and this honorable court." The judges took their seats in leather swivel chairs, with the brand-new chief judge, William W. Wilkins

Jr. of South Carolina, in the center. Wilkins started his career as a clerk to Judge Clement Haynsworth of the Fourth Circuit (whose Supreme Court nomination by Nixon was rejected by Congress) and then went on to become an aide and campaign director for Thurmond. He was the first federal judge appointed by Reagan. </P> <P>J. Harvie Wilkinson 3rd had technically stepped down as chief judge after seven years, as required by law. But he was sitting just off-center, and he still dominated, he and Luttig, each in his own way. </P>
<P>A warm, gracious and patrician Virginian, Wilkinson, 58, appears slight and owlish in his civilian clothes -- blue blazer, gold buttons -- yet commanding in his robes. The son of a banker, the future judge attended boarding school at Lawrenceville and college at Yale before returning to Virginia to study law. While a law student, he ran as a Republican candidate for Congress; when he got 30 percent of the vote, he jokes, he took it as a mandate to finish law school. He eventually taught law and served as editorial-page editor of The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. (This didn't keep The Pilot from editorializing against his appointment to the bench in 1983, saying that he lacked courtroom experience.) </P>
<P>Wilkinson was confirmed at the age of 39, and he and Luttig share the experience of having been judicial <EM>Wunderkinds</EM>. Luttig points out that at the time of his appointment in 1991, he held the distinction of being the youngest judge on a federal appeals court. He was 37. </P>
<P>The two judges share other distinctions as well. They both clerked for Supreme Court justices they still revere -- Wilkinson for Lewis F. Powell Jr. and Luttig for Chief Justice Warren Burger as well as for Antonin Scalia when Scalia was an appeals court judge. Both worked for Republican Justice Departments and participated in judicial selections, Wilkinson under Reagan and Luttig under the first Bush. Luttig shepherded Clarence Thomas through his contentious confirmation, and pictures of Thomas hang on his chambers' walls, including one inscribed "This would not have been possible without you! Thanks so much, buddy!" (Luttig's three clean-cut male clerks will head to the Supreme Court next year to clerk for Thomas, Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.) </P>
<P>These similarities between Wilkinson and Luttig, and their keen legal minds, initially created a natural alliance between them. Luttig, a native of Tyler, Tex., said that he used to spend more time talking with Wilkinson than with any other judge on the court. They are still friends, he said. But the years have clarified the differences in the two judges' styles and their jurisprudence, and they often parry and thrust in their decisions, with Luttig going for the direct and Wilkinson the indirect jabs. Often Wilkinson and Luttig end up voting the same way, but "there's this very antagonistic sideshow," said Rodney Smolla, a University of Richmond law professor. </P>
<P>Wilkinson writes essayish opinions filled with the kind of rhetorical flourishes that I imagine him composing with a quill pen. He often goes beyond facts and analysis to hold forth. He ponders, he digresses, he philosophizes. Wilkinson is the rare judge who speaks publicly and writes books; in his recent "One Nation Indivisible," he assailed affirmative action and ethnic separatism. Occasionally he injects his personal views on, say, racial quotas into his legal opinions. When he takes issue with "my fine colleagues," he does so in the most courtly manner possible, always striving to emulate Justice Powell as "a healer and bridge builder," he said. In fact, taking me by surprise, he grew quite emotional when telling me how rancorously divided the legal community, the political community, even the country has become. His voice grew insistent, then caught, and his eyes moistened. </P>
<P>"I don't believe in throwing salt in people's eyes," he said. "It's very important to me that the country come together. There are so many wounds, and we ought not pick at scabs. The legal culture especially is too polarized. There's too much throwing of pitch and tar and mud." </P>
<P>Luttig, in contrast, is not given to bursts of inspirational speaking and does no public speaking. Down-to-earth and likable in private, he comes across publicly as intense, austere and unsentimental. "He goes out there with piercing ideas and steel-trap analysis," Smolla said. Luttig sees himself as a legal "nerd," worships analytical rigor and composes a hard-boiled, sometimes mathematically logical opinion. He does not hesitate to gore his colleagues if he finds their thinking subpar. "If any opinion is without reasoning or poorly reasoned, I want them to be embarrassed by their analysis so as to continually improve on the process," he told me. He can be particularly scathing toward Wilkinson -- "Judge Wilkinson misunderstands this issue altogether" -- and he'll criticize him for contradicting himself or for making pronouncements that go beyond a specific case. </P>
<P>Attorneys who go before Luttig know about one central event in his life: that his father was brutally murdered nine years ago, that he moved his chambers to Texas during his father's killer's trial and that the killer became a <EM>cause célèbre</EM> for death-penalty opponents before he was executed. Some wonder if it makes him less objective; Luttig has never granted a new hearing to a death-row defendant. He brushes their concerns aside; the experience affected him -- how could it not have? -- but it didn't warp him. </P>
<P>Many lawyers also assume that Luttig is more conservative than Wilkinson. But the law journal Judicature recently evaluated the decisions of six possible Bush nominees for the Supreme Court and found Wilkinson to be furthest to the right -- exceptionally conservative. It found Luttig the second least conservative of the six. "Did you see the Judicature article?" Luttig asked me, and he also made sure that I had read some cases in which he took unexpectedly liberal positions.. He is loath to be predictable and eager to be perceived as more moderate in anticipation of a Supreme Court opening. </P>
<P>In one case, Luttig took issue with Wilkinson's finding that police officers in Prince George's County, Md., couldn't be held liable for violating the constitutional rights of Nelson O. Robles. The officers had tied Robles to a pole in a parking lot in the middle of the night with a note at his feet stating that he was wanted on an outstanding traffic warrant by a neighboring county. Wilkinson, while condemning the officers for behaving like Keystone Kops, said that they could not have known that they were violating Robles's constitutional rights because it had never been specifically enunciated that what they did was such a violation. </P> <P>Luttig argued pungently, but unsuccessfully, that Wilkinson's decision should be reviewed by the full court: "I would like to have thought that at this point in our history no court would hold, as did this panel, that law enforcement officers need an opinion from this court in order for them to be on notice that handcuffing a pretrial detainee to a metal pole in a deserted shopping center at 3:00 a.m. in the morning, and abandoning him there, <EM>for no law enforcement purpose at all</EM>, is unconstitutional." </P> <P>Wilkinson and Luttig do not like to talk about the possibility that they will be competing for a nomination as soon as this spring if, say, Chief Justice Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 72, steps down. But during Ocheltree's hearing at the Richmond courthouse, the subject was in the air. </P>

<P>
Since 1995, for so long that she is beginning to feel and sound like a crusader, Lisa Ocheltree, 41, has been pursuing her claim against Scollon Productions, a manufacturer of life-size costumes for mascots like the South Carolina Gamecock and characters like Tommy Pickles. </P> <P>She filed suit under a civil rights law, Title VII, that sees sexual harassment as a violation of the prohibition against workplace discrimination because of sex. Some sexual-harassment claims involve a quid pro quo; others, like Ocheltree's, assert a hostile work environment. Unfortunately for Ocheltree, she has ended up before the appeals court least likely to be sympathetic to any such claims. </P>
<P>Plaintiffs in sexual-harassment suits prevail in only 21 percent of their appeals before the Fourth Circuit, according to a recent Cornell Law Review article. They win, in contrast, 80 percent of the time in the New York-based Second Circuit, which is dominated by Democratic appointees, and 39 percent of the time nationwide. </P>
<P>When Ocheltree, now a U.P.S. employee, worked at Scollon Productions, she was the only woman in an otherwise all-male production shop. Over time, the atmosphere grew more coarse, she said, until it was dominated by sexually explicit conversation and behavior. </P>
<P>Ocheltree complained about the environment during an employee meeting, and she was rebuffed repeatedly when she tried to get an audience with the company's senior executives. After about 18 months at Scollon, she was fired. A federal judge summarily dismissed her complaint, but, representing herself, she appealed that judgment to the Fourth Circuit, which determined that she had grounds for trial. A jury awarded Ocheltree $7,280 in compensatory damages and $400,000 in punitive damages. The judge reduced the damages to $50,000 because Scollon is a small business. Nonetheless, Ocheltree said that her victory restored her "sense of honor and dignity," even though the men at the plant "are laughing to this day." </P>
<P>Scollon Productions appealed the jury's verdict to the Fourth Circuit, contending that Ocheltree's description of the workplace environment was exaggerated and that the crude behavior wasn't directed at Ocheltree anyway. The three-judge panel assigned the case included Williams, Paul V. Niemeyer, appointed by Bush in 1990, and M. Blane Michael, a bow-tie-wearing Clinton appointee from West Virginia. Williams and Niemeyer voted to reverse the jury's decision, and Michael was the dissenter. </P>
<P>It is a role that Michael, who keeps a large photograph of Clinton's inauguration on his chambers' walls, often exercises. There have been other instances in which it has pitted him against Williams too, although he told me that their personal relations are cordial. Still, Michael wrote the dissent in the Miranda case and in one in which Williams found that people with symptom-free H.I.V. are not protected by the Americans With Disabilities Act. </P>
<P>Michael said that Williams and Niemeyer chose "again and again" to see the evidence in a light favorable to Ocheltree's employer rather than to Ocheltree. They were ignoring the fact that the jury found Ocheltree to be the credible party, and they were ignoring their obligation to respect a jury's finding, he said. There is, he wrote, "a profound difference in our respective approaches to reviewing a jury verdict." </P>
<P>In a spirited opinion, Williams wrote that there was no reason to believe that the vulgar atmosphere in the workshop had anything to do with Ocheltree's presence or the fact that she was a woman. The incidents were isolated, and the rest was banter, she said. The courts shouldn't treat women preferentially by insulating them from everyday insults. And further, she added, there was some indication that Ocheltree herself was not a "model of femininity." </P>
<P>In his dissent, Michael wrote that a reasonable jury would conclude that the men at Scollon Productions resented Ocheltree's intrusion into their workplace and had set out to make her unwelcome. He said that the "overall tenor of the workplace banter conveyed the message that women exist primarily to gratify male desires for oral sex." In a workplace suffused with representations of women as sexual objects, a female worker "would doubtless wonder," he wrote, whether her male co-workers were looking at her and asking themselves "whether she 'swallows'" or whether she could "'suck a golf ball through a garden hose.'" </P>
<P>Ocheltree was devastated that the Fourth Circuit decision was written by a woman. "Just because she sits up on that bench, she still puts her pantyhose on one leg at a time," she said. "If all the male judges were sitting around talking about oral sex, I wonder how she'd feel then." </P>
<P>
Franklin Delano Roosevelt famously set out to overhaul the federal judiciary ideologically. Confronting courts that were thwarting his New Deal projects, he strove to create liberal ones that would grant the government more power to regulate the economy. Decades later, Reagan displayed a similar purposefulness, screening judicial candidates using ideological "litmus tests" in order to choose jurists who were strict constructionists, tough on crime, anti-abortion and pro-family. </P>
<P>Between them, Reagan and the first President Bush named six judges to the Fourth Circuit; those six joined Nixon's appointee, Widener, to form a solid conservative core. On other courts, the transformation to conservative has been more startling. The two Deep South appellate courts, for instance, used to be civil rights crusaders. But until the Carter judges retired, the Fourth Circuit was, if not liberal, at least more balanced. </P>

<P>Clinton put a priority on diversifying the federal bench, picking up where Carter had left off. Despite an uncooperative Senate, he succeeded in getting a record 9 black, 7 Hispanic and 20 female judges confirmed. </P>
<P>Yet the Clinton administration never saw its role as reasserting ideological balance on the courts. When Clinton took office, the appeals courts were solidly Republican, but his administration did not feel compelled to find liberal powerhouses to counter the conservative heavyweights appointed by Reagan and Bush. "Some in the White House argued very forcefully that their job was not to put on the federal bench the liberal equivalents of the Luttigs and the Wilkinsons," said Nan Aron, president of Alliance for Justice, a liberal coalition. Clinton was not a die-hard liberal himself, and he tended to nominate centrist legal professionals in tune with his more centrist politics. Still, he faced intense partisan battles, particularly over his minority appointees, and the acrimony continued through Bush's first two years, affecting not just the political arena but also the courts themselves. </P>
<P>Luttig told me that he thinks the politics surrounding judicial appointments makes judges hyperconscious of their political sponsors. "Judges are told, 'You're appointed by us to do these things.' So then judges start thinking, Well, how do I interpret the law to get the result that the people who pushed for me to be here want me to get?" he said. "I believe that there's a natural temptation to line up as political partisans that is reinforced by the political process. And it has to be resisted, by the judiciary and by the politicians." </P>
<P>Clinton named four white judges to the Fourth Circuit without much battle, including one, William B. Traxler Jr., of Greenville, S.C., who was first elevated to the federal bench, on Thurmond's recommendation, by former President Bush. Traxler votes so often with the conservative majority that court watchers forget he's a Democratic appointee. The other three -- Blane Michael and Robert B. King of West Virginia and Diana Gribbon Motz of Maryland -- are unofficially the dissenters. </P>
<P>In contrast to his smooth experience with getting the white judges confirmed, Clinton tried at least four times to name an African-American to the Fourth Circuit. His nominees were blocked every time. Jesse Helms still bore a grudge from Clinton's failure to renominate his former aide Terrence Boyle, after Boyle's nomination by the first Bush had elapsed. Helms then blocked, as is the home state senator's power, every Clinton nominee from North Carolina, including two African-American judges. As a result, there is no one from North Carolina on the Fourth Circuit now, although proving that even a retired Helms can get his way, President Bush has a pending nominee from North Carolina -- and that is Boyle. </P>
<P>During his period of obstructionism, Helms insisted, and Thurmond publicly concurred, that the matter had nothing to do with race or politics. It would simply be a waste of taxpayer money, Helms said repeatedly, to fill vacancies on the Fourth Circuit when the chief judge, Wilkinson, thought the court would function less efficiently if it were bigger. (And clearly it would have if it became less ideologically homogeneous.) </P>
<P>Clinton finally tried an end run around Helms by nominating a Virginian, a soft-spoken African-American lawyer named Roger L. Gregory. Gregory comes from a small town in rural Virginia where his parents worked in the local tobacco factory. He grew up to found a Richmond law firm with L. Douglas Wilder, the former governor of Virginia. He gives inspirational speeches to black youths. His nomination had bipartisan support. But even Gregory couldn't get a hearing scheduled. </P>
<P>So Clinton resorted to an extraordinary tactic. During his last days in office, after Congress had recessed, Clinton unilaterally appointed Gregory to the bench. President Bush, eager to demonstrate bipartisanship and win support for his own candidates, eventually allowed Gregory's temporary appointment to become permanent. In July 2001, the Senate confirmed him 93 to 1, with Trent Lott casting the dissenting vote. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was officially integrated.. </P>
<P>In his "baby judge" speech at the Fourth Circuit judicial convention last summer, Gregory cited Frederick Douglass and Harriet Tubman, setting a new kind of precedent for the court. He also joked that he was welcomed to the Richmond courthouse by someone who pointed out that the Confederate President Jefferson Davis's office used to be right near his new chambers. "That was very reassuring, you can imagine that," Gregory said. </P>
<P>
In a study of capital convictions and appeals between 1973 and 1995, Prof. James S. Liebman of Columbia University Law School found that the Fourth Circuit granted relief to death-row inmates less frequently than any other appeals court in the country. Even at that point, and it has gotten more restrictive since, the Fourth Circuit was overturning 12 percent of the death sentences it reviewed: that compared with an average 40 percent reversal rate for federal appeals courts. "There are other conservative courts of appeal but none that are a black hole of capital litigation like the Fourth Circuit," said John H. Blume, director of the Cornell Death Penalty Project, who represents South Carolina prisoners. </P>
<P>When Kevin Wiggins's case came up before the Fourth Circuit in January 2002, he was on death row in Maryland, trying not to get his hopes up. A federal district chief judge had invalidated his death sentence and voided his conviction for murder. Theoretically, he should have gone free. But the state appealed. And Wiggins knew, because death-row prisoners know these things, that the odds of winning in the Fourth Circuit weren't good. </P>
<P>In February, I visited Wiggins in the C-pod of the Maryland Correctional Adjustment Center in downtown Baltimore. When a guard unlocked the door to a narrow concrete visiting cell, Wiggins was already there, staring blankly through a scratched glass partition. Wearing a white undershirt, his face round with a wisp of a mustache, he was itching to get talking. And talk he did, like a balloon releasing air, his words a jumble as he dizzyingly flicked back and forth in time. </P>
<P>Matter-of-factly, Wiggins described himself as "a nobody with no family and no skills." He had a nightmarish childhood, according to information gathered by a forensic social worker hired by his present lawyer. His mother was alcoholic, neglectful and abusive. When he was 6, Wiggins was removed from his mother's home after she burned him severely with a hot plate in punishment for playing with matches. He then endured a series of foster homes in which he was beaten, locked in closets and repeatedly raped. He emerged into adulthood as a barely educated loner who lived in rented rooms and worked at minimum-wage jobs. He was of "borderline intelligence," according to state social-service records. </P>

<P>Wiggins had no criminal record when he was arrested at age 27 for the murder of an elderly woman. The State of Maryland maintained that Wiggins drowned Florence Lacs, 77, in her bathtub in 1988: he was working as a painter in her building, and he and his girlfriend were found in possession of Lacs's credit cards and car. There was no forensic evidence linking Wiggins to the murder, though there was unidentified forensic evidence -- fingerprints, hair, fibers and a baseball cap left at the scene. Still, in a bench trial, a state judge convicted Wiggins of robbery and murder. </P>
<P>During the subsequent sentencing trial, Wiggins's inexperienced public defenders decided to reargue his innocence instead of presenting a case for why he should get life not death. They did not even bother to investigate his background to discover whether he possessed the kind of "social history" that is routinely used to humanize a defendant and mitigate against the imposition of the death penalty. </P>
<P>Wiggins has now been on death row since 1989. In 1993, a high-powered Washington lawyer, Donald B. Verrilli, Jr., took on Wiggins's case pro bono, and it began wending its way through the postconviction review and then the state appeals process. Verrilli found the case against Wiggins to be weakly circumstantial at best, offering evidence only that Wiggins was a logical suspect. Verrilli said he came to believe that Wiggins did not commit the crime but rather served as the "fall guy for people more clever than him." Specifically, there is a plausible alternative to the course of events involving Wiggins's girlfriend, who was 15 years his elder. All charges against her were dropped, and she testified against Wiggins; her brother, it seemed, lived in an apartment below the victim's. </P>
<P>The case's first stop in federal court was at the bench of Maryland's United States chief district judge, J. Frederick Motz, who happens to be married to Judge Diana Motz, a Clinton appointee on the Fourth Circuit. Judge Frederick Motz is a former federal prosecutor appointed by Reagan; he is not, as he said in court one day, "an anti-capital punishment person." In a 55-page opinion, he concluded, "No rational finder of fact could have found Wiggins guilty of murder beyond a reasonable doubt." He invalidated the murder conviction and threw out the death sentence too. </P>
<P>I asked Wiggins whether he was happy when Motz took his side. "It's hard for me to be happy about anything," he said. Wiggins told me that he could remember only one joyful time in his life. It was after his mother burned him. Six years old, he awoke in a hospital bed, surrounded by nurses who clucked over him, petting his hair and bringing him cookies. </P>
<P>When Maryland prosecutors decided to appeal to the Fourth Circuit, Motz publicly questioned their desire to continue pursuing what he characterized as a flimsy case. "Why isn't this case of moral concern to the state?" he asked. "Or don't you care?" </P>
<P>At the Fourth Circuit, Wiggins drew a panel of three Republican appointees -- Wilkinson, Widener and Niemeyer. In a hearing last winter, the judges appeared to be wrestling with the case; they doubled the time they usually allot attorneys to present their arguments. Last May, however, in a decision written by the 79-year-old Judge Widener, the panel ended up reinstating Wiggins's conviction and his death sentence. The panel gave the original trial judge the benefit of the doubt; it deferred to his assertion that he based his decision of Wiggins's guilt on a totality of evidence and that he did not infer Wiggins's guilt from his possession of the victim's property. And it ruled that the public defenders' failure to present Wiggins's background during the sentencing hearing was a trial tactic rather than negligence. </P>
<P>And yet the panel had some hesitations. Judge Wilkinson wrote that he couldn't "say with certainty" that Wiggins committed the murder.. And Judge Niemeyer acknowledged that it was something of a close call to find that Wiggins had adequate counsel. </P>
<P>"I think that most circuit courts, if they have real doubts about what has happened in a capital case, they will reverse," Professor Liebman said. "The Fourth Circuit doesn't have the same threshold. In this case, they saw the tripwire and stepped right over it." </P>
<P>Verrilli petitioned the Supreme Court, and in a hearing scheduled for March 24, the court will pick up Wiggins's case, continuing its dialogue with the Fourth Circuit's decision-making. Since 1996, the Supreme Court has reviewed far more death-penalty cases coming from the Fourth Circuit than from any other appeals court -- 9 from the Fourth Circuit alone and 12 from the other 11 appeals courts combined. The 1996 date is significant because in that year Congress passed the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, limiting federal courts' review of capital cases to those in which there's "an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law." That "unreasonableness," however, is open to interpretation, and while the Fourth Circuit has chosen to see its hands tied, other circuits have granted themselves more wiggle room. The Supreme Court is thus mediating the conflict between the circuits, trying to help them figure out when it is appropriate and inappropriate to defer to the state cou
<P>Generally, the Supreme Court upholds the Fourth Circuit's tough stance in death-penalty cases by a 5-to-4 vote, dividing ideologically. Take the Virginia case of Walter Mickens Jr., whose lawyer, it turned out, had at one time defended Mickens's 17-year-old victim. A rare liberal panel of the Fourth Circuit found that Mickens's lawyer had a conflict of interest. But the Fourth Circuit did not want to let that reversal stand; it met en banc and reinstated his conviction. The case then went to the Supreme Court, which agreed, 5 to 4, with the Fourth Circuit's full panel: it held that the lawyer's conflict of interest didn't matter since Mickens couldn't prove that it adversely affected the outcome of his case. Last June, Mickens was executed by lethal injection. </P> <P>In two important rulings on how to interpret the 1996 law, however, the Supreme Court reversed the Fourth Circuit, finding that the Richmond court had chosen to read the statute too narrowly. In one case, the Supreme Court, unlike the Fourth Circuit, found the state court's judgment "unreasonable" for failing to recognize that the legal representation of Terry Williams, a Virginia inmate, was so ineffective that it didn't meet minimum constitutional standards for competency.. Like Wiggins's, Williams's lawyer didn't investigate his horrific childhood; his lawyer was subsequently disbarred for mental disability.. </P>
<P>
Many, if not most, appeals judges show a pattern to their judging over time. </P> <P>Wilkinson has granted a new hearing to a death-row prisoner once in 19 years, according to a South Carolina Law Review article. In contrast, Judge Francis D. Murnaghan Jr. of Maryland, who used to be the Fourth Circuit's pre-eminent liberal, granted relief to about one out of three death-row prisoners who came before him. </P>

<P>Yet no judge wants to be seen as tailoring his decisions to his ideology, as bending the law to determine preconceived results. Every judge will tell you that he or she comes to each case with an open mind, seeing a distinct set of facts that raises distinct legal questions. </P>
<P>Wilkinson said he feels strongly that judges should never be rated and ranked as if they were politicians whose votes could be counted. He said that the statistical analyses of judges' decisions, followed by the affixing of a label of liberal or conservative, is reductive. </P>
<P>"I don't go on the bench as liberal or conservative," Wilkinson said. And yet he does not dispute that he is a conservative jurist. He acknowledges his place among those who came of age concerned about "the excessive activism" of the Warren Court. The Warren Court was seen as having overstepped its bounds with rulings that expanded equal protection, the right to vote, criminal defendants' rights and the right to privacy. Conservatives, in contrast, preached judicial restraint.</P>
<P>Yet with conservatives now controlling most of the nation's federal appeals courts, Wilkinson is one among many who have come to a new appreciation of judicial activism. Like the "new federalists" whose conservative thinking increasingly influences the legal mainstream, Wilkinson said he believes that the Constitution is more than just the Bill of Rights. He doesn't think that the Bill of Rights has been overemphasized, he is quick to say, but that what he calls "the structural Constitution" has been underemphasized. </P>
<P>"That body of the document that spells out the relationship between the federal government and the states was neglected for far too long," he said. "The power of Congress was seen as unlimited and that of the states as a virtual nullity." Wilkinson has found it exciting, he said, to be engaged in redressing this imbalance, which sometimes means striking down Congressional acts that seem to usurp state power unconstitutionally. </P>
<P>But he notes, because he is of judicious temperament, that judicial activism is "heady wine" and that restraint is still the greater virtue. Everything in moderation. Luttig takes exception to the view that striking down Congressional laws necessarily constitutes judicial activism. "Remember, it's sophomoric to think that invalidation of a statute equals judicial activism," he said. "Judicial activism means deciding a case based on one's own personal predilections, regardless.. It might well take the form of sustaining a law that should be stricken." Several years ago, in an opinion written by Luttig, the Fourth Circuit struck down a key provision of the Violence Against Women Act. As Luttig saw it, Congress had established a federal civil right that didn't exist in the Constitution — the right to be free of crimes of violence motivated by gender — and then established the additional right for victims of such violence to sue their aggressors for damages in federal court. Congress had justified the law bas
<P>Luttig ruled that Congress had overstepped its authority. A three-judge panel of the Fourth Circuit originally heard the appeal, upholding the constitutionality of the Violence Against Women Act, as had 17 of 18 federal district judges who had reviewed it. But the full Fourth Circuit vacated the liberal decision, taking the case en banc. Motz, the Clinton appointee, hinted in her dissent that her colleagues were motivated by their distaste for the act itself. "Judges' policy choices provide no basis for finding a statute unconstitutional," she wrote.</P>
<P>The case went up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court agreed with the Fourth Circuit, 5 to 4, striking down the right of rape victims and abused women to sue in federal court under this statute. The Supreme Court version of the Fourth Circuit's ruling became the law of the land, and the Fourth Circuit and the Supreme Court jointly reinforced the principle that Congress's powers are limited. </P>
<P>Luttig's opinion, though, went beyond the Supreme Court's rhetorically. He began, "We the People, distrustful of power, and believing that government limited and dispersed protects freedom best, provided that our federal government would be one of enumerated powers, and that all power unenumerated would be reserved to the several States and to ourselves." </P>
<P>Cass Sunstein, a University of Chicago law professor, said that no court had issued such a battle cry for states' rights since before the New Deal. </P>
<P>During the nearly two hours that the Fourth Circuit debated her case, Ocheltree, dressed in a pin-striped pants suit with a white handkerchief sewed into the breast pocket, sat anonymously on a pewlike bench, holding her husband's hand in a tight grip. The judges didn't even know she was there. Her feathered dirty blond hair fell over her eyes a few times, and she tossed it back. Other than that, she was frozen, riveted by the theater of the bench, which veered occasionally into <EM>Grand Guignol</EM>.</P>
<P>Chuck Thompson, the lawyer for Scollon Productions, who used to clerk for Senior Judge Clyde H. Hamilton, a Republican appointee to the Fourth Circuit, wore a red bow tie. "May it please the court," he said. He didn't get a chance to say very much more. This was the judges' show. Karen Williams, author of the pro-employer decision, spent more time arguing Scollon's case than Thompson did. Michael, the dissenter, rolled his eyes and defended Ocheltree; Motz fired a few one-line zingers. Luttig, wagging his finger, told his fellow judges where their legal reasoning proved inadequate and instructed the lawyers for both sides what their arguments should be. "I'd have to disagree with you," Thompson ventured at one point.</P>
<P>"You can't!" Luttig retorted. "You can't disagree!" Wilkinson, perennially concerned with civility, exuded disgust at the locker-room atmosphere being described and exasperation with his colleagues for rehashing the ugly details of the case. "Who enjoys what and who enjoys whom," he said, his voice booming, "that's not for an appellate court to decide." For Wilkinson, the bottom line seemed to be that there was a jury verdict, and his remarks hinted that he was disinclined to overturn it.</P>
<P>Luttig, however, didn't seem certain that the jury verdict was defensible, and he scolded Ocheltree's lawyer, William Elvin Hopkins Jr., 36, for failing to make his best case. As Luttig saw it, the crux of Hopkins's challenge was to explain why Ocheltree was discriminated against if the locker-room atmosphere predated her arrival at Scollon.. "You'll lose if you don't better answer that before this panel," he said. Luttig suggested this theory: Most men would stop such salacious talk once a woman was in their midst and if they didn't, it was precisely <EM>because</EM> she was there. Their behavior may not have changed, but their motivation did, he said.</P>

<P>When the conversation became graphic, Widener, whose eyes had been closed, seemed to startle into participation. "You're asking us to hold that when there's an all-male shop, a woman can walk in and say, 'Give me the money!'"</P>
<P>Williams agreed: there was no reason for Ocheltree to have been any more offended than her male colleagues by sexually explicit conversation, not in an age when magazines feature articles about how much women enjoy oral sex. </P>
<P>As in most oral arguments I observed, Gregory, the African-American judge who joined the court in 2001, didn't grandstand. When he speaks, though, he doesn't mince words, slices to the core and if the subject is discrimination, he gets it. Title VII is not about sex or race, he said; it's about power. And the incidents with the mannequin speak volumes, he said: "The problem with the mannequin is that it became almost an effigy, if you will, of the plaintiff."</P>
<P>As Ocheltree left the courthouse, still holding her husband's hand, she said that she felt the court would do the right thing when it issued its decision later this year. There was no real basis for her optimism, though, not in the court's track record or in the questions the judges asked at her hearing. It could go either way, but the odds are not with the Lisa Ocheltrees or the Kevin Wigginses, not in the Fourth Circuit or, for that matter, in an ever increasing number of appellate courts in this country. </P>
<P>Legal scholars talk about the pendulum swinging from liberal to conservative, from a preoccupation with individuals' rights to a preoccupation with states' rights, and suggest that, in time, it will swing back once more. It would certainly help many Americans sustain their faith in the system if the courts could find their equilibrium, if they could become less ideological, less predictable and less political. That doesn't appear to be on the horizon, though, not in the foreseeable future. In the historic site in Richmond where the Confederacy once thrived, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is ushering in the 21st century. </P>

Judge's handling of one case gave his critics ammunition

Hattiesburg, Miss.
When court is not in session, Deborah Gambrell and U.S. District Judge Charles W. Pickering often hole up with other lawyers in a courthouse anteroom -- and debate the law.
They're there to schedule trials or sentencings. But Gambrell, a liberal African-American lawyer, and Pickering, a conservative white judge, invariably fall into spirited exchanges on legal issues and philosophies.
"We've had debates over everything from Clarence Thomas to the details of some case," Gambrell said. "Judge Pickering is a conservative, but he wants to hear your opinion. And he's amenable to having his mind changed, too."
Gambrell sees no racial bias in the judge. On the contrary, she said, he appoints motivated lawyers such as her to represent workers -- many of them black -- who claim they were wronged by employers. "He loves the law and wants you to represent your client well," Gambrell said, "and I don't think that's discriminatory."
Strange as it sounds, Gambrell is talking about the same Charles Pickering who made headlines last year as a reputed old-line Southern bigot. The liberal lobbying group People for the American Way, for example, claims Pickering is "hostile to civil rights." NAACP Chairman Julian Bond says Pickering uses "a racial lens to look at America."
Pickering drew the criticism after President Bush nominated him for a job on the New Orleans-based 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, one step below the Supreme Court. A Senate committee controlled by Democrats, heeding complaints about the judge's racial views, rejected him.
With the Senate now in Republican hands, Bush has renominated Pickering, prompting new Democratic charges that Republicans, even after the Trent Lott fiasco, are catering to racist Southern whites.
In Mississippi, however, many describe a different man than the one feared and vilified by critics inside the Beltway.
Rather, their up-close description of Pickering is that he is a relative progressive on race, a man who in the 1960s, when much of Mississippi was still fighting efforts to kill Jim Crow, testified against a murderous Ku Klux Klansman. He is a parent who, despite a poisonous racial atmosphere around Laurel, bucked white flight to send his four children to newly integrated public schools.

As a judge, he has sought reduced sentences not just for the white cross-burner Schumer mentions, but also for many black first offenders. He has pushed to establish a racial reconciliation center at the University of Mississippi, his alma mater. And, both on the bench and off, he has pressed white prison officials to ensure the rights of black inmates.
The judge's record is not spotless on race. In the infamous cross-burning case, he worried aloud how a tough sentence would play in the community -- apparently the white community.
And as a law student in 1959, he published a paper laying out a strategy for maintaining a ban on mixed-race marriages in Mississippi.
Yet these are two exceptions, the second more than four decades old, in an otherwise surprisingly upstanding history on race.
Pickering will not comment publicly, pending Senate action on his nomination, which is expected this month or next.
Roots: religion and race
Pickering, the son of a Laurel dairy farmer, has always stayed close to his south-central Mississippi roots. The New Orleans-based appeals court job would be his first post outside Mississippi.
A land of bayous and pine trees, the region around Laurel and Hattiesburg is a place where people take their religion seriously. Methodist and Baptist churches line the main streets; even today, when much of the Bible Belt has succumbed to secularism, day care centers are named "River of Life" and "Alpha Christian."
Pickering is a 42-year member at First Baptist Church of Laurel, where he has been a deacon, a Sunday school teacher and church treasurer. In the mid-'80s, he was president of the Southern Baptists in Mississippi and was allied with the "inerrantists," who maintain the Bible is the word of God and its accounts are factual.
Racism once had as strong a grip on the region as religion, and Pickering was reared during a period of open, unquestioned apartheid. That upbringing has lent some credibility to critics' charges.
Marilyn Huff, a white 66-year-old who lived next to the Pickering farm, recalls playing hopscotch and marbles with Pickering and several children of black sharecroppers who lived nearby. But the black kids attended a different school.
"We got on our bus and went to our school, and they got on their bus and went to theirs," she said. "I think the South accepted those things when other areas of the country did not."
Pickering's 1959 paper on "miscegenation," or mixed-race marriage, reflects that acceptance. In the article, which was based on a case of that era, Pickering suggests that Mississippi lawmakers could strengthen the state's anti-miscegenation law against legal challenges by reviewing similar laws in 23 other states. Pickering published the article in the Mississippi Law Journal, where he was a staff writer.
The judge's son, U.S. Rep. "Chip" Pickering, 39, explains the article as nothing more than an assigned "exercise" in which students "assessed laws on interracial marriage and told why the Mississippi law was struck down."
The congressman's account, however, does not fully convey the tone of the brief. The article did not simply analyze problems with the law, but suggested how it could better withstand court challenges. As People for the American Way points out, Pickering "expressed no moral outrage over laws prohibiting and criminalizing interracial marriage" but instead calmly offered a strategy for maintaining a ban -- as if the law were as ethically neutral as, say, restrictions on double-parking.
Elsewhere, by the 1950s, people inside and outside the state were beginning to question Mississippi's adherence to Jim Crow strictures. In 1955, Pickering's junior college near Laurel achieved a breakthrough of sorts when its all-white football team, in a quest for a national championship, decided to play an integrated squad from California despite protests from the state's racist establishment.
In 1962, as Pickering started his law practice, the federal government forced the University of Mississippi to admit James Meredith, a black Air Force veteran. Students and locals responded by staging a riot that killed two people and injured hundreds.
And that was in relatively genteel Oxford. Laurel, a rougher place to begin with, became a flash point of racial and class tensions, with leftist union and reactionary Ku Klux Klan organizers alike recruiting members from the 4,000 workers at the town's big Masonite plant. The toxic atmosphere soon presented Pickering with a chance to depart Mississippi's well-worn racial path.

Laurel was home to a man who combined fervor for both Christianity and apartheid to produce a vicious, ragtag holy war in defense of the status quo. In 1966, Sam Bowers, the Scripture-quoting imperial wizard of the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, led a gang of Klansmen to firebomb the home of Hattiesburg NAACP leader Vernon Dahmer, killing him.

Pickering, then serving as Jones County prosecutor, could have avoided the trial, as the slaying took place in a neighboring county. But Jim Dukes, the prosecutor who presented the case against Bowers, asked his colleague to testify to Bowers' violent character, and Pickering agreed -- despite the risk of Klan reprisals.

"He was putting himself at risk of bodily harm, social ostracism and economic destruction," Dukes said. "These were turbulent times, and testifying against the Klan was not a popular thing to do."

Pickering lost a race for a state House seat later that year. Bowers -- whose trial ended in a hung jury and who was not convicted until 1998 -- took credit for beating him.

Republican politics

Like many Mississippians of his generation, Pickering began political life as a Democrat and switched to the GOP. He did so, however, before the party had become a haven for Southern whites disaffected with the national Democrats' liberal racial policies.

Pickering changed parties in 1964, a time when Mississippi's Democratic leadership stood for continued segregation. Most notoriously, Democratic Gov. Ross Barnett had personally turned Meredith away from Ole Miss and helped provoke the later rioting. The Mississippi Democratic establishment, in the thrall of Jim Crow, sent an all-white delegation to the 1964 national convention and was denied seating.

The small but growing Mississippi GOP leaned to the right on many issues, as it still does, reflecting a pro-business bent. But compared with the Democratic leadership, many Republicans were moderate or even progressive on desegregation and on compliance with federal court orders.

The state GOP "was characterized by some very powerful business types who could afford to be more moderate in their political views," said Marty Wiseman, director of the John Stennis Institute of Government at Mississippi State University.

Laurel's powerful state senator, E.K. Collins, led the all-white delegation to the Democratic convention. In 1971, Pickering took Collins on and beat him. "It was considered nervy for a young upstart to run against an established longtime Dixiecrat like E.K.," recalled former Rep. Tucker Buchanan, a Democrat who became friends with Pickering in the Legislature.

In the Senate, Pickering developed a reputation for being able to talk with all sides and occasionally broker a deal -- even though, as one of only two Republicans, he was excluded from Senate leadership.

"He was right down the middle. He was a moderate," said former Gov. William Winter, a progressive Democrat who was lieutenant governor when Pickering arrived at the Legislature.

The new governor, Democrat William Waller, was the first in many years who had not made race the focus of his campaign, and as a prosecutor had heroically but unsuccessfully mounted two cases against white supremacist Byron de la Beckwith for the murder of the NAACP's Medgar Evers. "Charles was of that stripe," Winter said.

Robert G. Clark Jr., who is today the House speaker pro tem, in 1968 became the first African-American elected to the Legislature. He did not receive a warm welcome. "It was pretty lonely back then," Clark said. But Pickering was cordial. "He was one who didn't mind coming up to me to shake my hand and say, 'How are you doing today, Rep. Clark?' "

Pickering was elected state GOP chairman in 1976, serving with then-Executive Director Haley Barbour, who went on to become Republican national chairman, a powerful Washington lobbyist and -- this year -- a candidate for governor.

Pickering won credit as a party peacemaker after a bruising fight between supporters of Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan at the 1976 GOP convention. But he lost his one bid for federal office in 1978, when Thad Cochran defeated him in the U.S. Senate primary. He lost again in a run for state attorney general a year later, ending his career in elective politics.

The Sovereignty Commission

Pickering's terms as a state senator coincided with the final years of the infamous Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. Created in 1956 in reaction to the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation decision, the agency was supposed to protect Mississippi and her "sister states" from federal encroachment, by "any and all acts and things deemed necessary and proper."

The commission used its charge to spy on, intimidate and harass those considered to be racial troublemakers or outside "agitators." It helped fund the reactionary white Citizens Councils and kept up a system of informants who reported to the commission on the activities of the FBI as well as civil rights groups.

As a state senator Pickering voted twice, in 1972 and 1973, along with the majority, to continue funding for the commission -- votes his critics have highlighted during the confirmation hearings. By the early '70s, however, Mississippi had generally dismantled legal segregation, and the agency was trying to retool itself as a general investigative organization.

Waller vetoed the funding in 1973, and the commission was officially dissolved in 1977, its files sealed. In the end, Pickering voted with the majority to end the commission and seal the records.

In 1990, during hearings on his nomination as district judge, Pickering said he "never had any contact" with the commission and that he knew "very little about what is in those records." His opponents point out, however, that when the Sovereignty Commission's files were subsequently opened, an investigator's memo was found naming him.

The document suggested Pickering and two other legislators had communicated with the commission on its investigation of labor union activity in Laurel. The three lawmakers were "very interested" and "requested to be advised of developments," according to the memo.

Pickering's son, the congressman, says the agency had approached his father, not the other way around. "His only contact came in 1972, when a Sovereignty Commission employee approached him and said he had information about a radical group infiltrating a union in Jones County. My father's only response was, 'Keep me informed.' "

Again, this may be too easy a dismissal. The nature of the supposed union infiltration is in dispute. The commission memo says the agency was focusing on a pro-civil rights group, but in Pickering's confirmation hearing last year, the judge said he was concerned about Klan activity. Any alleged connection to the racism of the Sovereignty Commission sharply contrasts with Pickering's public and personal actions in support of integration in the same decade.

At home in Laurel

Even though they lived in racially polarized Jones County, Pickering and his wife, Margaret Ann, sent their four children to newly integrated public schools in the '70s.

Allison Montgomery, the judge's second-youngest child, recalls thinking her father had to set an example for other families by supporting integration. She was bused to the formerly all-black Oak Park High the year it debuted as an integrated elementary school.

"It was never discussed in our home, but my sense was that because Daddy had a reputation as being one who supported what was right, that it was what we were expected to do," said Montgomery, 35, a homemaker who lives in Shreveport, La.

"Even though it meant we would end up in a minority situation, I think the powers that be in our community knew he would still support the public school system."

Montgomery has fond memories of learning new games and chants with her black schoolmates, but she remembers several white parents moving their children out of her homeroom because the teacher was black. Some families enrolled their children in private schools. "Suddenly people were sending their kids to a little small academy called Heidelburg Academy," she said. "It was in Jasper County, and they probably had a 20- or 30-minute drive, at least."

Black people in the Laurel area took note of Pickering's stance on racial issues.

When Larry Thomas was a child, he watched his father, a local civil rights leader, work out the logistics of demonstrations with Pickering. Later, he dealt directly with Pickering as a fellow economic-development board member. Thomas, 49, a pharmacist, is a black Democrat.

Over the years, Pickering disregarded white criticism to make alliances with black people, Thomas said.
"When things were changing in the '60s and '70s, he always tried to reach a compromise. He was always trying to understand the thinking and concerns of the black community," Thomas said. "To me, that's the most I expect of a white man. The rest is our responsibility."
Melvin Mack, 53, a black county supervisor, grew up about four miles from Pickering's family and, over the years, has seen him at dozens of black gatherings. Pickering may have been reared in a era when discrimination was the rule, he said, but he has always been friendly with blacks.
"You will see him at black family reunions," Mack said. "You will see him at funerals when a black family's loved one has died."
In the '90s, Pickering was an early, prominent supporter for establishing what became the William Winter Institute for Racial Reconciliation at Ole Miss. Among its other functions, the institute promotes programs to combat racial prejudice.
Pickering has also responded to complaints about the abuse of black state prison inmates. Sometimes he has ordered changes from the bench and other times, when evidence did not fully substantiate the abuse, worked informally. Pickering "will call me afterward and ask that we look into what is going on," said Leonard Vincent, general counsel for the state Corrections Department.
In one case, such informal intervention led to the firing of at least two guards.
"Judge Pickering was the only white leader we could get to stand up against the guards and the penal system," said a local civic activist, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I mean, he called them on the carpet and cleaned them up."
Pickering, the activist said, did not seek to publicize his behind-the-scenes effort. "I'm not saying Judge Pickering is a saint," he said. "He is a conservative man. But he's not afraid to stand up for what is right."
The case against Pickering
Such sentiments do not sway opponents.
"Judge Pickering's record isn't erased just because he has African-American friends in his community," said NAACP Chairman Bond, a former Georgia legislator. "This is a question of what kind of federal judiciary are we going to have. Are we going to have one occupied by women and men who support justice and fairness, or who oppose it?"
Many Pickering opponents object to his nomination on grounds unrelated to his racial attitudes. The predominantly black Magnolia Bar Association of Mississippi is one such opponent.
The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has jurisdiction over Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, whose population is 45 percent nonwhite. But of 14 judges' seats that are filled, only two are Hispanic and only one is black. The Magnolia Bar has sought more diversity and more liberal voices on the court for years, President Melvin Cooper said, so Pickering -- a conservative white -- is the wrong choice.
"We're looking at . . . the decisions he would make on the bench," Cooper said.
Abortion-rights groups have joined the fight against Pickering, also because of his conservative personal views. As a state legislator in the mid-1970s, Pickering led an effort to make the national Republican platform anti-abortion, specifically opposing the U.S. Supreme Court's "intrusion" into the issue with Roe v. Wade.
"We're concerned that would color the attitude he would take to the appellate bench," said Judy Appelbaum, a vice president of the National Women's Law Center.
When asked about abortion at his confirmation hearing last year, the judge sounded less militant. "My personal views are immaterial and irrelevant," the judge responded. "I will tell you that I will follow the Constitution, and I will apply the Supreme Court precedent."
Pickering has yet to rule on an abortion matter. But the 5th U.S. Circuit may well consider the constitutionality of state statutes designed to make abortions more difficult to obtain. In Mississippi, for example, legislation is pending that would restrict the time when an abortion is legal and require abortion providers to be board-certified in obstetrics and gynecology.

Yet allegations of bigotry have hurt the judge's chances -- and damaged his reputation -- more than concerns about his general conservatism. His son says Pickering is willing to undergo another round of intense scrutiny and heated attacks to restore his good name.
"The stereotype of what Mississippi is can easily be used against someone like my father, who is a Southern Baptist and from an older generation of white Mississippians," he said. "But my father is not at all the man they try to say he is. We hope in this second go-round the truth catches up with the false accusations."
The law-review article on mixed-race marriage laws casts a cloud on that record. But the evidence suggests that the judge has moved on since he wrote it.
"That was 1959," said Angela Barnett. "Back in the day, everyone was taught to think that way."
Barnett, who is white, went before Pickering on drug charges in 1997 -- with her black husband, Harrell. The couple, who now live in Houston, say the judge helped them get their lives together with lenient sentences and advice.
"If he was racist, he wouldn't even be thinking about helping us," Barnett said. "He would have said 'Heck, no, she's married to a black man, I'm not going to help them.' "
When the Senate debates Pickering's nomination, his conservative views -- on abortion, federalism, the role of the judiciary and other matters -- will be fair game. The judge is quite conservative by most measures, and many people would prefer more moderate or liberal nominees.
But in Mississippi, the notion that Pickering is a racial throwback and a friend to cross-burners doesn't sell.
Pascagoula attorney Richard "Dickie" Scruggs, for example, is a believer in Pickering.
Scruggs is a "mass tort" trial lawyer -- the sort who signs up thousands of plaintiffs to join in class-action lawsuits -- who was lead litigator in Mississippi's multibillion-dollar tobacco suit.
"Judge Pickering has been in the camp that was considered liberal to moderate in the 1960s," said Scruggs, a Democrat who is also Trent Lott's brother-in-law. "He's a bright jurist and has a moral compass that gives him a real sense of fairness. . . .
"I think he would be a great [appeals court] judge. I just don't know why he would want to go through this process again."

Subject: Sen. Zell Miller on Estrada filibuster

Senate Math --
41 Is Greater Than 59!
By ZELL MILLER
A portly British statesman once famously said that "Democracy is based on reason and fair play." But there's nothing reasonable or fair about what's been happening in the Senate recently. The filibuster against Bush-nominee Miguel Estrada is not just an expensive waste of time and taxpayer money, it's also an affront to majority rule, the principle that Democracy operates on everywhere.
Everywhere, that is, but the Senate.
The Senate is the only place I know where 59 votes out of 100 cannot pass anything because 41 votes out of 100 can defeat it. Last week, of course, 55 senators -- a clear majority -- voted to end a filibuster against Mr. Estrada and still lost the day. Try explaining that at your local Rotary Club or to a constituent in the Wal-Mart parking lot or, for that matter, to the college freshman in Poly Sci 101. You can't because it stands democracy on its head.
The word "filibuster" comes from a Spanish word for "pirate," and that is exactly what the filibuster does; it hijacks the democratic process. The way it is being used in the Senate gives the minority an absolute veto on everything.
James Madison, the Father of the Constitution, feared some future political leaders would pervert the legislative process in just this way. And he warned in Federalist Paper Number 58 that when it happened, "The fundamental principle of free government would be reversed. It would be no longer the majority that would rule. The power would be transformed to the minority." I'm sure Madison is today spinning in his grave.
Some constitutional lawyers have argued that any kind of super majority vote is unconstitutional, other than for those five areas specified in the Constitution itself: treaty ratification, impeachment, override of a presidential veto, constitutional amendments, and expelling a member of Congress.
Perhaps it is time for someone to test its constitutionality. That's one possible remedy. There are others. We could abolish Rule XXII that protects this travesty and let the Senate operate under rules like every other democratic legislative body in the world.

That's about as likely as a day dawning in Washington without 10 fund-raisers.

Or we could modify what I call the Two-Track Trick, installed a few years ago, which allows a "filibuster-lite" to proceed without any heavy lifting while another piece of legislation is being considered at the same time. With this devious device the Senate avoids the inconvenience and pain of a real filibuster. Powder puff, 16-ounce gloves are used instead of bare knuckles, but it still can go on and on ad nauseam. It's just that the public doesn't notice it as much. And that's the point -- public debate is turned down real low.

Over the years, many respected veterans of the Senate, not a newcomer like myself, have expressed dismay with the process. Henry Clay did before the Civil War and the process then was nothing like it would become late in the 20th century. Barry Goldwater and even the loquacious Hubert Humphrey expressed misgivings from time to time.

In the mid-1990s, there was a bipartisan group of distinguished citizens called "Action, Not Gridlock" who came together with great ballyhoo, intent on reforming Senate rules. They had the shelf-life of a ripe banana. And in 1995, Democratic Sens. Tom Harkin and Joe Lieberman introduced a rule change that I believe is the best that's been proposed. It still kept 60 votes on the initial cloture vote, but decreased it by three votes with each of the next three cloture attempts until finally it got down to the majority of 51. They argued, logically I believe, that this would preserve the Senate tradition while still giving the minority plenty of time to plead its case without blocking the majority forever.

All of this came to naught, however, after the Republicans solidly opposed it and Sen. Robert Byrd enlightened his fellow Democratic senators with the story of how Cato II, in 60 B.C., got the floor in the Roman Senate at midday and spoke until sundown, the time of adjournment, in order to thwart one of Julius Caesar's proposals. And that was the end of the Harkin-Lieberman filibuster reform bill.

Never mind that Caesar was not thwarted and 14 years later, in 46 B.C., Cato committed suicide while Caesar was at the height of his power and still going strong. Perhaps it is worth noting that the First Filibusterer in history ended up taking his own life. He made his point -- as senators love to do -- but ended up killing himself. Now that, my filibustering friends, is a history lesson worth pondering.

Mr. Miller is a Democratic senator from Georgia.

The Free Congress Commentary
The President Must Lead The Fight To Confirm Miguel Estrada
By Paul M. Weyrich

I am given to believe that some folks at the White House read this column, so with that in mind, and with apologies to you, dear readers, I will address this offering in the form of a memo to them.

Memo to White House staff
Re: The Miguel Estrada Nomination
March 11, 2003

Let us briefly review where we are, how we got there, and then discuss a plan of action to win the nomination.

Right now, as you know, the Estrada nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals is the pending business in the Senate some of the time.

The first cloture motion was filed by the Republican leadership and there were 55 votes to shut off debate, 44 in favor of continuing debate. Those 55 included all 51 Republicans and 4 Democrats.

The Republican leadership says it will file as many cloture motions as is necessary to bring the Estrada nomination to a vote. Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle has announced, after a poll of his caucus, that he has at least 41 votes to continue debate ad infinitum.

A real filibuster is not contemplated at this time. Thus the Estrada nomination is set aside while the Senate conducts other business. I understand why the GOP leadership feels it can't conduct an around-the-clock filibuster at this time. What they tell me makes sense, but I regret it is the case because only with a real filibuster will there be a chance to win.

We got to this point, after Estrada was voted out of the Judiciary Committee on a party line vote, soon after Republicans took control of the U.S. Senate. The leadership felt that it had to file cloture in order to make it clear to the American public who was blocking Estrada's nomination and who was not. Their hope was that by publishing the vote, pressure could be put on some Senators in states with large Hispanic populations or Senators who are up for re-election. Unfortunately, the left has more resources than do the supporters of Estrada and right now the calls coming into Senate offices are actually running against Estrada. These are not spontaneous grass-roots calls. These are calls generated by the left-wing interest groups, using paid help.

Here is the problem. Mr. Estrada is the President's nominee. If he loses, the President loses. Senators will be disappointed -- a few of them even bitter. But the real effect of losing the battle over Estrada will be on President Bush himself. Not only will many of his other nominations be in jeopardy, but the precedent will have been set that it now takes 60 votes to confirm a judge to the court of appeals. This is probably unconstitutional but who is willing to take that issue on?

The point is, so much is at stake here that the President MUST win this fight. There is only ONE way that can happen. You know which Senators are most likely to tell their leadership that they can't stick with them because the pressure is too great. The President is going to have to go to those states and name those Senators and ask the people of the state to let the Senators know what they want them to do about Estrada. This can't be done long distance. What the President says about this matter here in Washington, even if he mentions Senators by name, gets drowned out. But when he goes to a state to specifically point to an obstructionist Senator, the President is guaranteed a day and half of wall-to-wall coverage.

I know we are on the verge of war. I know the President badly needs his legislation to move this economy. But the stakes are that high on this nomination. Lose Estrada and the President's tax package becomes a tougher sell. Should the President get the opportunity to nominate someone for the Supreme Court, unless he wants to anger his base and appoint a liberal, forget that nomination. No matter what the qualifications, no matter how sterling the record, no matter what the ABA says, the nomination would be dead in the water.

I could tell, with that somber press conference last Thursday evening, the President has a great deal on his mind. He is feeling the burden of office. I hate to have to commend this course of action to you. There is no other; as will become evident when the Senate has its 7th cloture vote (the most ever) and the stalemate stands.

I don't expect my advice is worth more than you pay to get it (for benefit of the readers: nothing). This time, however I hope you will pay attention to it. I see no other way to win and win we must.

Paul M. Weyrich is Chairman and CEO of the Free Congress Foundation.

Sheila is the repository of the historical knowledge, so I've cc'd her. I believe we consistently have told nominees that upon confirmation they are bound by the rules of judicial ethics, that they should not make court appearances, and that they have a reasonable amount of time to wrap up their legal practices. I am not sure that we have distinguished between confirmation and appointment -- i.e., I believe we have counseled that ethical restraints kick in at confirmation.

Sheila, is this summary correct and complete? Do you have this conversation with all confirmed nominees or only those that ask?

ED wants to do a conference on race neutral education approaches, to include the virtues of NCLB, advanced placement programs and percent plans.; They want to do this in Florida, April 7-8 because it is shortly after the arguments in the Michigan case.

Do we like this idea?; Obviously they need a quick reply.

Angela,

Enclosed is an updated proposal for a national conference on race-neutral approaches.; We are proposing that several senior officers in the Department address the conference (the Secretary, Under Secretary Hickock, Sally Stroup, Carol D'Amico, and Brian and Jerry as moderators).; We would also include state education officials who are implementing many innovative programs, and several leading people from private organizations that are putting race-neutral approaches into practice.;

We propose April 7 and 8.; This would give the Administration something very positive to point to as all the media attention on affirmative action swells around April 1, when the Supreme Court hears oral arguments in this case.; We believe that the Secretary's schedule could accomodate this, and we believe that we have a venue that would work (the Doral Resort in Miami).

If the Secretary and the WH agrees with our proposal, we need to begin making preparations immediately.

March 4

National Conference on Race Neutral Approaches to Educational Diversity

Objective:

The purpose of this conference would be to make education leaders aware of innovative race-neutral policies that they may be able to use in their elementary and secondary schools and postsecondary institutions. This conference will significantly support the President's January 15th remarks on affirmative action. The Department's role will not be to take positions on specific issues, but to facilitate the dialogue. A possible list of speakers and topics is below.

Audience:

An invitation-only conference for 75-100 top leaders in the education community, including perhaps some chief state school officers, university presidents, local school superintendents, university general counsels, and other similar officials. Billed as a private briefing from leading officials in the federal and state governments who are on the cutting edge of implementing race-neutral approaches to diversity.

Timing:

April 7 and 8 would be our first option. The oral argument in the Michigan cases will be held on April 1; if asked, the Secretary would be able to take the position that while advocates are debating and lawyers are arguing, he will be convening top education officials to constructively solve these problems. If we are to meet this timeframe, we must begin preparations immediately.

Venue:

It is important to hold the conference at a location where protestors would not be likely to disrupt the proceedings. We recommend somewhere in the state of Florida, since it is one of the leaders in the race-neutral innovations. We are aware that the Doral Resort and Golf Spa, in Miami, is available on April 7-8, and has favorable government rates available.

Action

We need approval from the White House and the Secretary to move forward.

The Office for Civil Rights is prepared to develop and arrange the conference, with assistance from a working group of senior officers at the Department. OCR will, of course, need assistance with logistical issues involved in the conference.

Possible content:

Host and welcoming remarks: Secretary Paige

State the Administration's vision on the role that race-neutral alternatives can play in constructively resolving the divisive debate about affirmative action, and connecting this to No Child Left Behind.

Moderators: Brian Jones, General Counsel, and Gerald A. Reynolds, Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights

Introduce speakers, facilitate Q and A sessions

Legal Context: Brian Jones, General Counsel

Explain that it is important to highlight these programs because implementing them will help to minimize litigation risks faced by educational institutions. Race-conscious programs are likely to produce costly and probably unsuccessful litigation. Given this legal context, it is prudent for educational institutions to carefully and seriously examine race-neutral approaches to achieving diversity.

Developmental Approaches:

This portion of the conference would examine projects being undertaken at the state and federal levels that help to expand the pool of competitive applicants. This will explain how states and the federal government are helping to prepare students from low performing schools for higher education through a variety of approaches. There should be sessions on at least the following:

- No Child Left Behind – how NCLB can effectively transform our educational system so that all children are receiving an effective education. Possible speaker: Under Secretary Hickok.
- The Advanced Placement Initiatives in Texas and Florida. Possible speakers: Raul Romero of the University of Texas Board of Regents and Prof. George LaNoue of the University of Maryland.
- The College Summit – this organization seeks to help increase the college enrollment rate of low-income students. Possible speakers: J.B. Schramm, founder of the organization.
- The University of California systems' partnerships with low-performing high schools (over 100,000 children are receiving direct tutoring and mentoring, and hundreds of schools are receiving direct aid). Possible speakers: an official(s) from California; an official(s) from Florida to talk about their "Opportunity Alliances," which also pair up colleges with low-performing schools; an official(s) from the University of Vermont and Christopher Columbus High School (Bronx, NY), which have entered into a partnership; and an official(s) from the University of Pennsylvania, which is a national leader in these types of partnerships.
- Florida's partnership with the College Board. Possible speakers: a Florida education official(s) plus Gaston Caperton, former Gov. of West Virginia and current President of the College Board.

- ED race-neutral initiatives such as GEAR-UP, the State Scholars Initiative, and the TRIO programs. Possible speakers: Sally Stroup, Carol D'Amico.

Admissions Approaches:

This portion of the conference would focus on various race-neutral efforts that have been made to determine which students are admitted and which are not.

- Class rank approaches. We could locate top officials from each of the three states to discuss these plans in depth:

  (1) Texas's "10 Percent Plan"
  (2) Florida's "Talented 20 Plan"
  (3) California's "4 Percent Plan."

- Preferences based on socioeconomic status. This approach, sometimes called "needs-based affirmative action," promotes diversity by conferring admissions preferences based on socioeconomic disadvantage. Possible speaker: Richard Kahlenberg of the New Century Foundation is the national expert on the subject. He could be joined by officials from various jurisdictions that have actually implemented these ideas.

Other potential speakers:

- On behalf of the Attorney General, Larry Thompson or Viet Dinh
- Ralph Boyd, the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights
- A White House official(s)

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

March 11, 2003

Dear Senator Frist:

The Senate is debating the nomination of Miguel A. Estrada to be a Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Miguel Estrada's life is an example of the American Dream. He came to this country from Honduras as a teenager barely speaking English and went on to graduate with honors from Harvard Law School. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States and served in the United States Department of Justice under Presidents of both political parties. The American Bar Association has given him its highest rating. When appointed, he will be the first Hispanic ever to serve on the D.C. Circuit.

I submitted Mr. Estrada's nomination to the Senate on May 9, 2001. But his nomination has been stalled for partisan reasons for nearly 2 years in which the Senate has not held a vote either to confirm or to reject the nomination.

The Senate has a solemn responsibility to exercise its constitutional advice and consent function and hold up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination. Senators who are filibustering a vote on Miguel Estrada are flouting the intention of the United States Constitution and the tradition of the United States Senate. The filibuster is the culmination of an escalating series of back-and-forth tactics that have marred the judicial confirmation process for years, as many judicial nominees have never received up or down Senate votes. And now, a minority of Senators are threatening for the first time to use ideological filibusters as a standard tool to indefinitely block confirmation of well-qualified nominees with strong bipartisan support. This has to end.

The judicial confirmation process is broken, and the consequences for the American people are real. Because of the Senate's failure to hold timely votes, the number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high during my Presidency and those of President Bill Clinton and President George H.W. Bush. The Chief Justice has warned that the high number of judicial vacancies, when combined with the ever-increasing caseloads, leads to crowded courts and threatens the administration of justice. When understaffed, the Federal courts cannot act in a timely manner to resolve disputes that affect the lives and liberties of all Americans. The courts cannot decide constitutional cases promptly, which harms people seeking to vindicate and protect their rights, and the courts cannot rule on commercial cases efficiently, which hurts the economy, businesses, and workers. Our system of equal justice under law administered fairly and efficiently is at risk. The American Bar Association in 2002 accurately described the situation as an "emergency."

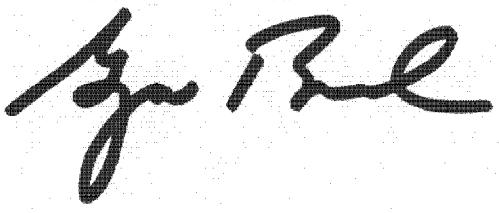
My concern about the state of the judicial confirmation process is not new. In June 2000, I proposed timely votes for all nominees, stating that the confirmation process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation." In May 2001, when I announced my first judicial nominations, I urged the Senate to rise above the bitterness of the past and again asked that every judicial nominee receive a timely up or down vote. In October 2002, after nearly two additional years in which too many nominees did not receive votes, I proposed a specific, commonsense plan involving all three Branches that, among other steps, would ensure that all judicial nominees receive an up or down Senate vote within 180 days of nomination.

Over the years, many Senators of both political parties have publicly agreed with the principle that every judicial nominee should receive a timely up or down Senate vote. Similarly, the Federal Judiciary, speaking through the Chief Justice in his 2001 Year-End Report, has stated that the Senate should "schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."

I ask Senators of both parties to come together to end the escalating cycle of blame and bitterness and to restore fairness, predictability, and dignity to the process. I ask that the Senate take action, including adoption of a permanent rule, to ensure timely up or down votes on judicial nominations both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. This is the only way to ensure that our Judiciary works and that good people remain willing to be nominated to the Federal bench.



All Senators should have a chance to have their voices heard and their votes counted. All Presidents should have their judicial nominees considered and voted upon in a reasonable time. All nominees should have the certainty of an up or down Senate vote within a reasonable time. All Judges should have the assurance that vacancies on their courts will not persist for years. And all Americans should have the assurance that the Federal courts will remain open and fully staffed to resolve their disputes and protect their rights and liberties.

As I stated last October, the current state of affairs in the United States Senate is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet a responsibility under the Constitution. Our country deserves better, the process can work better, and we can make it better. The Constitution has given us a shared duty, and we must meet that duty together. Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Bill Frist

Senators who are filibustering a vote on Miguel Estrada are flouting the intention of the United States Constitution and the tradition of the United States Senate. The filibuster is the culmination of an escalating series of back-and-forth tactics that have marred the judicial confirmation process for years, as many judicial nominees have never received up or down Senate votes. And now, a minority of Senators are threatening for the first time to use ideological filibusters as a standard tool to indefinitely block confirmation of well-qualified nominees with strong bipartisan support. This has to end.

The judicial confirmation process is broken, and the consequences for the American people are real. Because of the Senate's failure to hold timely votes, the number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high during my Presidency and those of President Bill Clinton and President George H.W. Bush. The Chief Justice has warned that the high number of judicial vacancies, when combined with the ever-increasing caseloads, leads to crowded courts and threatens the administration of justice. When understaffed, the Federal courts cannot act in a timely manner to resolve disputes that affect the lives and liberties of all Americans. The courts cannot decide constitutional cases promptly, which harms people seeking to vindicate and protect their rights, and the courts cannot rule on commercial cases efficiently, which hurts the economy, businesses, and workers. Our system of equal justice under law administered fairly and efficiently is at risk. The American Bar Association in 2002 accurately described the situation as an "emergency."

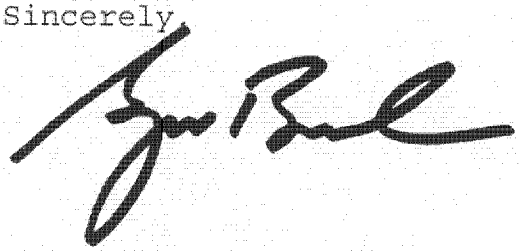
My concern about the state of the judicial confirmation process is not new. In June 2000, I proposed timely votes for all nominees, stating that the confirmation process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation." In May 2001, when I announced my first judicial nominations, I urged the Senate to rise above the bitterness of the past and again asked that every judicial nominee receive a timely up or down vote. In October 2002, after nearly two additional years in which too many nominees did not receive votes, I proposed a specific, commonsense plan involving all three Branches that, among other steps, would ensure that all judicial nominees receive an up or down Senate vote within 180 days of nomination.

Over the years, many Senators of both political parties have publicly agreed with the principle that every judicial nominee should receive a timely up or down Senate vote. Similarly, the Federal Judiciary, speaking through the Chief Justice in his 2001 Year-End Report, has stated that the Senate should "schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."



I ask Senators of both parties to come together to end the escalating cycle of blame and bitterness and to restore fairness, predictability, and dignity to the process. I ask that the Senate take action, including adoption of a permanent rule, to ensure timely up or down votes on judicial nominations both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. This is the only way to ensure that our Judiciary works and that good people remain willing to be nominated to the Federal bench.

All Senators should have a chance to have their voices heard and their votes counted. All Presidents should have their judicial nominees considered and voted upon in a reasonable time. All nominees should have the certainty of an up or down Senate vote within a reasonable time. All Judges should have the assurance that vacancies on their courts will not persist for years. And all Americans should have the assurance that the Federal courts will remain open and fully staffed to resolve their disputes and protect their rights and liberties.

As I stated last October, the current state of affairs in the United States Senate is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet a responsibility under the Constitution. Our country deserves better, the process can work better, and we can make it better. The Constitution has given us a shared duty, and we must meet that duty together. Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Thomas A. Daschle

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

March 11, 2003

Dear Senator Frist:

The Senate is debating the nomination of Miguel A. Estrada to be a Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Miguel Estrada's life is an example of the American Dream. He came to this country from Honduras as a teenager barely speaking English and went on to graduate with honors from Harvard Law School. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States and served in the United States Department of Justice under Presidents of both political parties. The American Bar Association has given him its highest rating. When appointed, he will be the first Hispanic ever to serve on the D.C. Circuit.

I submitted Mr. Estrada's nomination to the Senate on May 9, 2001. But his nomination has been stalled for partisan reasons for nearly 2 years in which the Senate has not held a vote either to confirm or to reject the nomination.

The Senate has a solemn responsibility to exercise its constitutional advice and consent function and hold up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination. Senators who are filibustering a vote on Miguel Estrada are flouting the intention of the United States Constitution and the tradition of the United States Senate. The filibuster is the culmination of an escalating series of back-and-forth tactics that have marred the judicial confirmation process for years, as many judicial nominees have never received up or down Senate votes. And now, a minority of Senators are threatening for the first time to use ideological filibusters as a standard tool to indefinitely block confirmation of well-qualified nominees with strong bipartisan support. This has to end.

The judicial confirmation process is broken, and the consequences for the American people are real. Because of the Senate's failure to hold timely votes, the number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high during my Presidency and those of President Bill Clinton and President George H.W. Bush. The Chief Justice has warned that the high number of judicial vacancies, when combined with the ever-increasing caseloads,

Dear Senator Graham:

I have appreciated the numerous opportunities to discuss our mutual efforts to ensure that Florida,s judicial vacancies are filled through an orderly process.
I know that you and Judge Gonzales have communicated previously about the important work and role of Florida,s Federal Judicial Nominating Commission. I want to reiterate that the President is committed to following the commission process in Florida and intends to abide by rules of procedure of the Florida Federal Judicial Nominating Commission, consistent with &the Constitutional and statutory powers, duties, or prerogatives of the President of the United States or the Senate in the filling of vacancies by nomination and confirmation8 (Rule 30).

The Administration shares your desire to promptly fill the federal judicial and United States Marshals vacancies in Florida.

Graham removes blockade on marshals, judge approvals

By LUCY MORGAN, Times Tallahassee Bureau Chief << mailto:morgan@sptimes.com >>

© St. Petersburg Times

published March 13, 2003

TALLAHASSEE -- U.S. Sen. Bob Graham has withdrawn his objections to all federal nominations in Florida, clearing the way for the appointment of three new U.S. marshals and two judges.

It was welcome news to Thomas Hurlburt Jr. and Dennis Williamson, nominees for marshal positions in Tampa and Tallahassee.

Hurlburt, a former public safety director and police chief in Orlando, and Williamson, former deputy director of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, quit their jobs in September, expecting to assume their new posts in October. But Graham objected when President Bush nominated Christina Pharo, a deputy marshal in Miami, to be U.S. marshal there. The nominating commission had not recommended Pharo.

"My complaint has never been with the qualifications of these individual nominees, but with the fact that the White House deviated from the nominating process which has so well served Floridians," Graham said.

Hurlburt and Williamson were both recommended by the commission, but their appointments got caught up in the controversy.

Wednesday, Graham said he is dropping his opposition to the three nominees for U.S. marshal positions as well as to judicial nominee Cecilia M. Altonaga, who would become the first Cuban-American woman to sit on the federal bench.

Graham also will accept the nominees to replace U.S. District Judge Lacey Collier of Pensacola, who is retiring later this year.

Graham attached a copy of a March 12 letter from White House chief of staff Andrew H. Card Jr., saying he wanted to "reiterate that the president is committed to following the commission process in Florida" and intends to follow it in the future.

U.S. to follow Florida way to pick judges

BY FRANK DAVIES

Miami Herald

WASHINGTON - Sen. Bob Graham said Wednesday that White House officials, after months of discussions, had agreed to follow Florida's nonpartisan process for selecting nominees to be federal judges, prosecutors and U.S. marshals.

The agreement means that Graham, a Florida Democrat, will not object to the nomination of Cecilia Altonaga of Miami to a federal judgeship in South Florida, or to three U.S. marshal nominees in Florida. Altonaga would be the first Cuban-American woman on the federal bench.

It was not clear whether the agreement would affect Graham's vote today when GOP leaders in the Senate try for a second time to end a Democratic filibuster that has blocked a vote on Miguel Estrada, President Bush's controversial nominee to an appellate judgeship in Washington, D.C.

Graham, who is recovering from heart surgery, was not present last week when Republicans mustered 55 votes, five short of the total needed to end debate. Graham did not say how he will vote today.

"There is no quid pro quo" for the agreement with the White House announced Wednesday, said Paul Anderson, a Graham spokesman.

Last year, Graham complained that the Florida Federal Nominating Commission's three candidates for the South Florida judgeship were set aside, and the White House asked for three more names, eventually nominating Altonaga.

In a letter to Graham, White House chief of staff Andrew Card said Bush ``is committed to following the commission process in Florida and intends to abide by the rules of procedure for the nominating commission."

"This is an important assurance," said Graham, who added that he had no objection to Altonaga, only to the circumvention of the process. ``This process has allowed the federal court system in Florida to retain public confidence and maintain its independence from political influence."

Owen Tries Again With Judiciary Committee

By JESSE J. HOLLAND, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Texas Supreme Court Judge Priscilla Owen is returning to the Senate Judiciary Committee in hopes that its new GOP majority finally can move her appellate nomination to the full Senate.

Democrats blocked President Bush's home-state candidate from a seat on the 5th U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans last year but Republicans said Owen's willingness to face more questions Thursday from Democrats shows she's ready to move up to the federal bench.

"She can handle it," said Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz. "Let's have a hearing so that there's no excuse and bring her forward for a vote."

The Senate's GOP majority will also try Thursday to get another U.S. Appeals Court nominee, Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada, past a Democratic filibuster.

Owen also will likely face resistance from Democrats when Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, brings her revived nomination up for a vote.

Democrats voted her nomination down last year on a 10-9 party line vote in the Judiciary committee, saying she has been an anti-abortion and pro-business judicial activist whose opinions and rulings are overly influenced by her personal beliefs.

One of Owen's defenders Thursday will a former colleague from the Texas Supreme Court, John Cornyn of Texas, who served with Owen on the court for three years. Cornyn is now the junior senator from Texas, and will vote on Owen's nomination as one of the newest members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Republicans now control the committee with a 10-9 majority.

They hope their new Senate majority will nudge Estrada's nomination past its second encounter Thursday with the Democratic filibuster.

"It is my hope that the other side of the aisle will decide it's time to conclude the debate," Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., said.

Republicans couldn't muster the 60 votes they needed a week ago to get past the filibuster, despite pressure from the White House, GOP lawmakers and conservative Hispanics and activists.

Democrats say they still have enough votes to keep Estrada's nomination for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia from moving forward until he answers more of their questions and turns over his working papers from his time at the Justice Department.

The GOP has offered to just let Estrada answer more questions, but "both parts have to be complied with," Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said.

Estrada would be the first Hispanic on the D.C. circuit if confirmed by the Senate. That court is considered the second most important in the nation because it decides cases that determine how federal agencies regulate topics like gas prices, clean air and water, labor practices and campaign finance reform.

The court currently has four vacancies and eight active judges: four Republicans and four Democrats.

EDITORIAL: Call end to filibuster

OUR VIEW: Don't set a new constitutional standard of demanding a supermajority vote.

North Dakota's congressional delegation has to walk a political tightrope. Sens. Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Rep. Earl Pomeroy are Democrats, while North Dakota itself trends heavily Republican. The GOP's supermajorities in both houses of the state Legislature, plus the fact that voters chose Republicans for president in 1992, 1996 and 2000, illustrate this.

But the delegation not only has walked that tightrope, it has done handstands and even an occasional flip. All three members are masters of wrangling federal dollars for North Dakota projects. Furthermore, they've chosen their party-line issues with care, voting with the Democrats on the budget but showing more independence on some social and environmental issues.

The Miguel Estrada filibuster in the Senate, however, may change that perception.

Because the filibuster is as nakedly partisan as an issue gets.

Estrada is President Bush's candidate for the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals. He's a Harvard Law School graduate who clerked for a Supreme Court justice, worked in the U.S. Solicitor General's office, argued cases in front of the Supreme Court, earned the top ranking of "well qualified" from the American Bar Association - and didn't speak English when he immigrated to the United States from Honduras, to boot.

Fifty-five senators (including four Democrats) support his nomination. But the other 45 Senators won't let it come to the floor for a vote. They've invoked a filibuster. They say they're doing it because Estrada hasn't answered enough questions, but that's patently false. Senators know as much or more about Estrada as they have about most nominees. Furthermore, when given the chance to ask Estrada more questions in writing, not one Democratic senator took the administration up on its offer.

No, the transparent reason for the filibuster is that Estrada's a conservative Hispanic lawyer who has a shot at being named to the U.S. Supreme Court.

And for the left wing of the Democratic party, that's do-or-die unacceptable.

Conrad and Dorgan should distance themselves from this scorched-earth tactic. The Constitution gives the president the power to appoint "with the Advice and Consent of the Senate ... Judges of the supreme Court and all other Officers of the United States." It does so in the same paragraph in which it lists a special power demanding a 2/3 majority Senate vote - namely, the power to ratify treaties.

The Founding Fathers could have held judicial confirmations to that higher standard. But they didn't. Clearly, they intended judges to be confirmed by a simple Senate majority. Just as clearly, 200 years of Senate practice call for the same thing.

The GOP won its Senate majority fair and square. The filibustering Democrats smack of being spoilers when they obstruct majority rule, especially because their objection in this case is not based on truth, justice or the American way, but on politics.

Fifty-five duly elected United States senators are willing to give Estrada the nod. That's enough.

Let his nomination come to the floor, and call the vote.

Forum editorial: Put an end to Estrada filibuster
The Forum - 03/09/2003
Notably absent among senators who voted to break a filibuster over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the nation's most important federal circuit court were North Dakota Democrats Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Minnesota Democrat Mark Dayton.

Their opposition to the highly qualified Estrada might make political sense as the nation moves toward a presidential campaign, but it makes no judicial sense. Playing politics with a president's judicial appointments is nothing new, but doing so with Estrada is a disservice to the judiciary and an insult to an eminently qualified, Harvard-educated, Hispanic American.

Fact is, most Democrats in the Senate don't like Estrada because (horrors!) he might be a conservative. But really, who knows? That much- reviled liberal Earl Warren was a conservative from California who was appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court by President Eisenhower in 1953. Justice David Souter, allegedly a New Hampshire conservative, was appointed to the high court by George Bush (Sr.), and promply took his place on the court as a reliable liberal.

If Democrats can block Estrada from a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, they effectively eliminate him from consideration for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court when a vacancy occurs. It's a foolish strategy that is sure to backfire next time a Democrat occupies the White House.

The rap against the nominee is that he has not been forthcoming enough about his judicial philosophy. That's nonsense that was blown away a few days ago when Sen. Lamar Alexander, R-Tenn., cited a long litany of questions from members of the Senate Judiciary Committee that were answered in eyes-glazed-over detail by Estrada. Yet, facts did not matter. All but four Democratic senators took their marching orders from Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., whose only priority these days seems to be to embarrass the president. The vote Thursday to continue the filibuster was 55-44. Sixty votes were needed to end it. Estrada received the highest rating the American Bar Association can give. He's been praised by Democrats and Republicans for his work in the Solicitor General's office in Democratic and Republican administrations.

He certainly is as qualified or more qualified than many judges in the federal judiciary. And more is known about him than was known about many nominees, including nominees who were confirmed for the Supreme Court, and most certainly for the circuit courts.

The Democratic obstructionism is blatant politics poorly disguised as cluck-clucking about Estrada's "qualifications." It's misuse of the filibuster and abuse of the public trust. Democratic senators - including those from North Dakota and Minnesota - should abandon the filibuster and allow a Senate vote on the Estrada nomination.

Hi Kate!~
I don't want to bother you on the phone today I called and no answer, You are a busy woman! SO, we can talk about this any time.....no rush.

We would like to know: You said that Sec. Snow might now be doing events. If so, we would absolutely like him to do something for the Majority fund.

Also, we would like to do an "afternoon briefing" for Majority Fund with WH leg affairs. we were thinking sometime in APirl (like, the 15-16), have it as a 3-4 or 2-3 timeframe and do it at the Hay adams over coffee with our members.

I used to just call mike and set these up after speaking to you.....but now their office is different.....so when you know if we could do this, let me know and I'll proceed as your office advises.

Thank you so much!
I looked for you on saturday at the chamber, were you and Logan there?
Have a good afternoon.

Importance: High

Attached is the second very positive editorial by the Grand Forks Herald that criticizes Senator Dorgan and Senator Conrad and now Rep Pomeroy for their stands on the Miguel Estrada nomination. I have already forwarded it to the rest of the ND and national media. You should have received a copy of an NDGOP Alert that we sent out yesterday urging our activists to call Dorgan and Conrad on this issue.

Dan had a letter drafted by the GOP lawyers association that is being signed by a prominent attorney today and will be sent to the ND media this week.

We are also working with Gov. Schafer as he wants to get into the fray on this issue so please be aware that you will see additional activity from us on this issue.

Hope you enjoy the editorial.

EDITORIAL: Call end to filibuster

OUR VIEW: Don't set a new constitutional standard of demanding a supermajority vote.

North Dakota's congressional delegation has to walk a political tightrope. Sens. Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Rep. Earl Pomeroy are Democrats, while North Dakota itself trends heavily Republican. The GOP's supermajorities in both houses of the state Legislature, plus the fact that voters chose Republicans for president in 1992, 1996 and 2000, illustrate this.

But the delegation not only has walked that tightrope, it has done handstands and even an occasional flip. All three members are masters of wrangling federal dollars for North Dakota projects. Furthermore, they've chosen their party-line issues with care, voting with the Democrats on the budget but showing more independence on some social and environmental issues.

The Miguel Estrada filibuster in the Senate, however, may change that perception.

Because the filibuster is as nakedly partisan as an issue gets.

Estrada is President Bush's candidate for the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals. He's a Harvard Law School graduate who clerked for a Supreme Court justice, worked in the U.S. Solicitor General's office, argued cases in front of the Supreme Court, earned the top ranking of "well qualified" from the American Bar Association - and didn't speak English when he immigrated to the United States from Honduras, to boot.

Fifty-five senators (including four Democrats) support his nomination. But the other 45 Senators won't let it come to the floor for a vote. They've invoked a filibuster. They say they're doing it because Estrada hasn't answered enough questions, but that's patently false. Senators know as much or more about Estrada as they have about most nominees. Furthermore, when given the chance to ask Estrada more questions in writing, not one Democratic senator took the administration up on its offer.

No, the transparent reason for the filibuster is that Estrada's a conservative Hispanic lawyer who has a shot at being named to the U.S. Supreme Court.

And for the left wing of the Democratic party, that's do-or-die unacceptable.

Conrad and Dorgan should distance themselves from this scorched-earth tactic. The Constitution gives the president the power to appoint "with the Advice and Consent of the Senate ... Judges of the supreme Court and all other Officers of the United States." It does so in the same paragraph in which it lists a special power demanding a 2/3 majority Senate vote - namely, the power to ratify treaties.

The Founding Fathers could have held judicial confirmations to that higher standard. But they didn't. Clearly, they intended judges to be confirmed by a simple Senate majority. Just as clearly, 200 years of Senate practice call for the same thing.

The GOP won its Senate majority fair and square. The filibustering Democrats smack of being spoilers when they obstruct majority rule, especially because their objection in this case is not based on truth, justice or the American way, but on politics.

Fifty-five duly elected United States senators are willing to give Estrada the nod. That's enough.

Let his nomination come to the floor, and call the vote.

Importance: High

Attached is the second very positive editorial by the Grand Forks Herald that criticizes Senator Dorgan and Senator Conrad and now Rep Pomeroy for their stands on the Miguel Estrada nomination. I have already forwarded it to the rest of the ND and national media. You should have received a copy of an NDGOP Alert that we sent out yesterday urging our activists to call Dorgan and Conrad on this issue.

Dan had a letter drafte d by the GOP lawyers association that is being signed by a prominent attorne y today and will be sent to the ND media this week.

We are also working with Gov. Schafer as he wants to get into the fray on this issue so please be aware that you will see additional activity from us on this issue.

Hope you enjoy the editorial.

EDITORIAL: Call end to filibuster

OUR VIEW : Don't set a new constitutional standard of demanding a supermajority vote.

North Dakota's congressional delegation has to walk a political tightrope. Sens. Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Rep. Earl Pomeroy are Democrats, while North Dakota itself trends heavily Republican. The GOP's supermajorities in both houses of the state Legislature, plus the fact that voters chose Republicans for presiden t in 1992, 1996 and 2000, illustrate this.

But the delegation not only has walked that tightrope, it has done handstands and even an occasional flip. All three members are masters of wrangling federal dollars for North Dakota projects. Furthermore, they've chosen their party-line issues with care, voting with the Democrats on the budget but showing more independenc e on some social and environmental issues.

The Miguel Estrada filibuster in the Senate, however, may change that perception.

Because the filibuster is as nakedly partisan as an issue gets.

Estrada is President Bush's candidate for the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals. He's a Harvard Law School graduate who clerked for a Supreme Court justice, worked in the U.S. Solicitor General's office, argued cases in front o f the Supreme Court, earned the top ranking of "well qualified" from the American Bar Association - and didn't speak English when he immigrated to the United States from Honduras, to boot.

Fifty-five senators (including four Democrats) support his nomination. But the other 45 Senators won't let it come to the floor for a vote. They've invoked a filibuster. They say they're doing it because Estrada hasn't answered enough questions, but that's patently false. Senators know as much or more abou t Estrada as they have about most nominees. Furthermore, when given the chance to ask Estrada more questions in writing, not one Democratic senator took the administration up on its offer.

No, the transparent reason for the filibuster is that Estrada's a conservative Hispanic lawyer who has a shot at being named to the U.S. Supreme Court.

And for the left wing of the Democratic party, that's do-or-die unacceptable.

Conrad and Dorgan should distance themselves from this scorched-earth tactic. The Constitution gives the president the power to appoint "with the Advice and Consent of the Senate ... Judges of the supreme Court and all other Officers of the United States." It does so in the same paragraph in which it lists a specia l power demanding a 2/3 majority Senate vote - namely, the power to ratify treaties.

The Founding Fathers could have held judicial confirmations to that higher standard . But they didn't. Clearly, they intended judges to be confirmed by a simple Senate majority. Just as clearly, 200 years of Senate practice call for the sam e thing.

The GOP won its Senate majority fair and square. The filibustering Democrats smack of being spoilers when they obstruct majority rule, especially because their objection in this case is not based on truth, justice or the American way, but on politics.

Fifty-five duly elected United States senators are willing to give Estrada the nod. That's enough.

Let his nomination come to the floor, and call the vote.

Forum editorial: Put an end to Estrada filibuster

The Forum - 03/09/2003

Notably absent among senators who voted to break a filibuster over the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the nation's most important federal circuit court were North Dakota Democrats Kent Conrad and Byron Dorgan and Minnesota Democrat Mark Dayton.

Their opposition to the highly qualified Estrada might make political sense as the nation moves toward a presidential campaign, but it makes no judicial sense. Playing politics with a president's judicial appointments is nothing new, but doing so with Estrada is a disservice to the judiciary and an insult to an eminently qualified, Harvard-educated, Hispanic American.

Fact is, most Democrats in the Senate don't like Estrada because (horrors!) he might be a conservative. But really, who knows? That much- reviled liberal Earl Warren was a conservative from California who was appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court by President Eisenhower in 1953. Justice David Souter, allegedly a New Hampshire conservative, was appointed to the high court by George Bush (Sr.), and promply took his place on the court as a reliable liberal.

If Democrats can block Estrada from a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, they effectively eliminate him from consideration for a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court when a vacancy occurs. It's a foolish strategy that is sure to backfire next time a Democrat occupies the White House.

The rap against the nominee is that he has not been forthcoming enough about his judicial philosophy. That's nonsense that was blown away a few days ago when Sen. Lamar Alexander, R-Tenn., cited a long litany of questions from members of the Senate Judiciary Committee that were answered in eyes-glazed-over detail by Estrada. Yet, facts did not matter. All but four Democratic senators took their marching orders from Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., whose only priority these days seems to be to embarrass the president. The vote Thursday to continue the filibuster was 55-44. Sixty votes were needed to end it. Estrada received the highest rating the American Bar Association can give. He's been praised by Democrats and Republicans for his work in the Solicitor General's office in Democratic and Republican administrations.

He certainly is as qualified or more qualified than many judges in the federal judiciary. And more is known about him than was known about many nominees, including nominees who were confirmed for the Supreme Court, and most certainly for the circuit courts.

The Democratic obstructionism is blatant politics poorly disguised as cluck-clucking about Estrada's "qualifications." It's misuse of the filibuster and abuse of the public trust. Democratic senators - including those from North Dakota and Minnesota - should abandon the filibuster and allow a Senate vote on the Estrada nomination.

ÿÿÿÿSEC. __. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING ROE V. WADE. ÿÿÿÿ (a) FINDINGS.--The Senate finds that-- ÿÿÿÿ (1) abortion has been a legal and constitutionally protected medical procedure throughout the United States since the Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade (410 U.S. 113 (1973)); and ÿÿÿÿ (2) the 1973 Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade established constitutionally based limits on the power of States to restrict the right of a woman to choose to terminate a pregnancy.
ÿÿÿÿ (b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.--It is the sense of the Senate that-- ÿÿÿÿ (1) the decision of the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade (410 U.S. 113 (1973)) was appropriate and secures an important constitutional right; and ÿÿÿÿ (2) such decision should not be overturned.

submitted, but I generally provide a courtesy notice that we plan to we going on Tuesday or is that a misread by me? I'm unsure we can get good coverage or have the schedule for both Senators work out, if we go

We keep a central file here, but I also think William does too.

Everybody should keep whatever comes to them, and we should do a letter exchange once a week (or more often if a particularly useful one comes in....)

Whoever receives the letters should ask the sender whether they can be quoted publicly. In the case of the SJC, I think the assumption is that if you send a letter to the Committee and do not ask that it be kept confidential, that it is part of the public record. William can correct me if I am wrong....

Attached are the letters that have made their way to me on Pryor. The copies are not ready for release given the taping over of various numbers that are placed on them by our mail tracking system -- also, I have not spoken to these folks about releasing/quoting from their letters as a courtesy, which needs to be done before next Tuesday.

1. Who is centrally collecting all the letters/materials? (of course, any letters that are mailed to the WH may take months to find their way to me, if ever. letters need to be faxed in.)
2. Who wants to speak to these three to make sure they are okay with us quoting/releasing their letters? I just think as a courtesy we should do that before we start citing Joe Reed's letter etc. at a WH Press Conference.

I can speak with them, but if anyone else wants to do this/is already speaking with

Reed and others, let me know.

Anytime a political office/group writes to the President, the question is raised whether it is appropriate to use of that political office's title in the address (both the inside address and outside address) on the President's response. From our conversation, I understood that it was okay to use the political office's title in the address if the correspondence was not political. Is this accurate? Thanks for your help!! Have a good weekend!

I put in some edits below. Also, I did not understand the following: "When the mail is not political, it is OKAY to have the political office cited in the mailing address."

While there are no hard and fast rules, here are some guidelines for political correspondence per Brett Kavanaugh -

- Mail addressed to a political group is NOT NECESSARILY political mail. If you would write the same response to a non-political group on a subject that is not related to political activity, then the correspondence is not political.

- Here are some examples of where the line is drawn for mail to a political group :

"Thank you for your support" - OKAY to send; we thank all supportive people for their support
"Thank you for your work on the campaign" - NOT OKAY
"Thank you on behalf of the Republican party" - NOT OKAY

Brett - Thanks for you advice. Here is are some of the points from our conversation. Please let me know if this is accurate so I can forward it to the other writers as a baseline for all correspondence to political groups.

The ITI board will be in town on the 19th (one week from today) for a series of meetings on the Hill (Hastert, Daschle et al). That same morning,

ITI President Rhett Dawson and ITI Chairman Dennis Roberson are tentatively scheduled to be a part of Secretary Evans' press conference to launch his Standards Initiative...

We are tentatively planning to host the board here at Commerce for some meetings the morning of the 19th so that they are nearby for the press event with our boss. Wondering if we could persuade Ken to come over that morning....say 8 or 8:30...to hold a briefing/give&take with them that morning. Let me know if it's possible.

(Nuala: Let me know if you see any problem with this. Want to make sure we are 110% appropriate.)

Brett - it is me again. I am really sorry for bombarding you. Ken's brother Bruce has asked Ken to speak to a bi-partisan group at the Department of Commerce next week- to discuss the President's agenda, not politics. Are you comfortable?

Topics are growing importance of wired workers and political landscape in the US.

The ITI board will be in town on the 19th (one week from today) for a series of meetings on the Hill (Hastert, Daschle et al). That same morning, scheduled to be a part of Secretary Evans' press conference to launch his Standards Initiative...

ITI President Rhett Dawson and ITI Chairman Dennis Roberson are tentatively

We are tentatively planning to host the board here at Commerce for some meetings the morning of the 19th so that they are nearby for the press event with our boss. Wondering if we could persuade Ken to come over that morning....say 8 or 8:30...to hold a briefing/give&take with them that morning. Let me know if it's possible.

Strategy Revealed!

A parody.

By Robert Alt

here seems to be a lot of confusion surrounding the judicial confirmations imbroglio. As luck would have it, I happened to stumble across what appears to be a strategy memo, shedding some light on the opposition to these nominees.

Re: Talking Points

So far, so good with the filibuster. Here's a recap of points to emphasize:

We Don't Know Anything About Miguel Estrada Because He Won't Answer our Questions . . .

Sure, Mr. Estrada answered over 125 questions during his marathon confirmation hearing, but what does that really tell us? O.K., I know that some of the questions asked were intended to bait Mr. Estrada to ignore the judicial-canons prohibitions regarding announcing how you would decide future cases (for example, Senator Leahy's question asking whether considering race or gender in hiring or selection would meet the strict scrutiny standard of Adarand v. Pena, despite the fact that this is an open question before the D.C. Circuit), but it was all in good fun. And never mind the fact that despite multiple invitations, few of you have actually submitted written questions to Mr. Estrada. Senator Blanche Lincoln did [note to TD: make sure she loses her parking spot]. Boy, I hope no one ever asks what these "unanswered questions" are . . . that would be a tough one. If that happens, the key is to repeat phrases like "Estrada hasn't filled out his application."

If Only He Would Turn Over the Justice Department Memos . . .

Yes, we all know that the memos are probably about as revealing as a burka . . . but that's why it's brilliant. You see, the Justice Department knows that they can't turn them over. But I don't need to tell you that: you've seen the letter signed by every living solicitor general saying what a terrible idea this is. Just keep on citing to the Bork hearings as a precedent, and soon you may be able to call those hearings "fair" without snickering.

Estrada Is A Right-Wing Extremist . . .

Forget everything we said about not knowing anything about Estrada. We know that he's an extremist. "How?" you may ask. Well, his old boss at the DOJ, Paul Bender, told us so. Yes, this is the same Paul Bender who gave him outstanding reviews, praising his legal analysis, but we can ignore that. And yes, this is the same Paul Bender who was such a liberal lightening rod that career staffers complained to the press that he had a tendency to "impugn people's work and their motives and their integrity," but no one really remembers that. And yes, this is the same Paul Bender who was chief counsel to a committee that recommended the abolition of pornography laws, and is thought responsible for the Clinton DOJ's more liberal position on child pornography. Let's try not to mention that last one.

Teddy, you seemed concerned about the contradiction here between not knowing anything, and at the same time saying that we know Estrada is an extremist. Just follow TD's lead: After the last vote, he said both things in the course of the same article, and no one even blinked.

We're Not Anti-Hispanic or Anti-Woman

Of course we're not. Who could possibly get that impression? Sure, we call Estrada a "Hispanic Clarence Thomas" and hold press conferences denouncing him as "not really Hispanic," but that doesn't make us anti-Hispanic. We're very pro-Hispanic, so long as we're sure we can count on you to issue what we deem to be Hispanic decisions.

Some people are stating that we've subjected Estrada to a double standard. Whatever you do, don't let people figure out that you peppered Estrada with over 100 questions because the D.C. Circuit is sooo important, but then when you had another D.C. Circuit nominee before you (who happened to be White), you chose to all-but-ignore him and instead to direct virtually all your questions to a Sixth Circuit nominee. If that comes to light, just blame the fact that there were three nominees before the committee. That really forced you to ask questions only of the Sixth Circuit nominee, after all.

Then there are all those accusations that you treat women candidates differently. Sure, Michael McConnell wrote that Roe is illegitimate and he gets confirmed, while Justice Owen applies Supreme Court precedent and gets voted down in committee. But it serves her right. Doesn't she understand how she's supposed to rule? Whatever you do, make sure that people don't realize that she never actually ruled against Roe and has made it clear that she would uphold it.

Oh, and while we're on the subject of how the Senate is treating women nominees, could you make sure that Senator Feinstein stops calling Justice Cook "Mrs. Cook?" She did it three times on the floor the other day. Pretty soon, people might start noticing, and that would be embarrassing.

I really don't know how anyone could honestly accuse the Democrats of being insensitive to minorities. I mean, sure, you opposed the Civil Rights Act, and you are the only party with a former Klansman and three former segregationists in Congress, but that's all old news. Don't people realize that when you are the party of Cynthia McKinney and James Moran, sensitivity comes as easy to you as, well, spelling and foreign policy.

Keep up the good work. Soon we'll be able to fill the bench with people we can count on.

Karl,
The op-ed by my young, twenty seven year-old colleague (and a superb lawyer), Rochelle Tedesco, about Justice Owen was just published. It is attached for your use and enjoyment. Rochelle is a first generation professional; her brother is a mechanic and her sister takes care of children. She is an outstanding attorney, with a great feel for grassroots and public thinking on key issues.
Rochelle's op-ed makes a key point on credibility because it comes from her. Ideologically left-wing women's groups, such as NOW, vehemently oppose Justice Owen's nomination. If such opposition is mounted against other similar female nominees, it would curtail and muzzle many young female attorneys who aspire to the Bench in the future. These same groups often give male nominees a slight shove, but they dirty-tackle their sisters. Rochelle's message needs to be repeated elsewhere. She can help if you wish. I hope you will find it of value.
Kind regards, Victor

The Power of the Sisterhood

The case of Priscilla Owen.

By Rochelle Tedesco

January 22, 2003, marked the 30th anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade. In Washington, women's organizations took the occasion to argue that a woman's "right to choose" is an important right that must be protected. Ironically, at the same time that these groups were organizing rallies and gatherings to protect a woman's "right to choose," these very same groups were actively opposing the judicial nomination of a woman who has exercised her right to choose not to fall in line with the political agenda of certain liberal women's groups.

Most people recognize that certain "women's organizations" do not actually support all women; they only support those women who agree with their political agenda. Thus, as a woman and an attorney in my late-20s who does not completely support the agenda of women's groups, I have long been aware that if I ever try to enter public life, I should not expect any support from "the sisterhood." Yet not until the nomination of Justice Priscilla Owen did I realize that not only would the sisterhood not support me, it would actively oppose me and stand as an obstacle in my path of professional success. I am not alone; these groups would also try to impede the success of any other women who does not totally agree with them. Even more surprisingly, facts suggest that this unique "sisterhood" works harder to oppose talented women jurists such as Justice Owen than it does to oppose conservative male jurists.

No one disputes that Judge Owen is eminently qualified to be a federal appellate judge. She wa s elected twice by the people of Texas to her position on the Texas supreme court. She was unanimously given the American Bar Association's highest rating, "well qualified." She graduated cum laude from Baylor Law School at a time when few women went to law school. She received the highest grade in the state on the Texas bar exam when she took it. Even Senator Schumer, who ultimately voted against Justice Owen's nomination, stated a t her hearing, "anyone who has listened to even ten minutes of [Justice Owen's confirmation hearing] has no doubt about the excellence in terms o f the quality of [her] legal knowledge and [her] intelligence."

The opposition to Justice Owen essentially comes down to this: She has not stated that she personally believes the political agenda of women's groups. A statement released by NOW shortly after Justice Owen was renominated labeled her a "staunch opponent of women's reproductive rights." Based on NOW's statement, one might think that Justice Owen has stated that she disagree s with Roe v. Wade, or would not follow it if she were confirmed to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. Yet at her hearing in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing last July, Justice Owen said exactly the opposite. She repeatedly explained that whatever her personal beliefs are, she is committed to applying controlling legal precedent, including precedent from the United States Supreme Court on th e issue of abortion.

This was not enough for the Democratic senators on the Judiciary Committee. Senator Maria Cantwell said that she was "trying to understand" Justice Owen's "persona l beliefs" on the right to privacy. Senator Schumer asked Justice Owen speculate about how she would have decided Griswold v. Connecticut, the landmark Supreme Court case recognizing the constitutional right to privacy, if she had been on the Supreme Court in 1965. Interestingly, neither the women's groups nor the Senate Judiciary Committee waged a similar full-scale attack when Michael McConnell, a former law professor who has criticized Roe v. Wade, was confirmed as a judge on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. They simply let him go "right on by."

The message to young women of my generation who have witnessed these confirmation hearings is clear: Women who do not subscribe to the political views of these few "women's organizations" will have stones cast in their path if they are nominated to the federal judiciary. One of the old mottos of the women's rights movement was "sisterhood is powerful." Yet for young women my age, the new message is that "the sisterhood" is powerful — and will blo ck women jurists who try to disagree with them. Today women make up 50 percent of law-school students. Therefore, logically one would expect tha t over time, women will eventually come to comprise 50 percent of the federal judiciary. Yet if liberal women's groups are successful in blocking those women who disagree with them, there will be fewer women to select as judges, and 20 years from now, women will still be a minority i n the federal bench. The irony will be there the under representation of women will have been caused by "select" women themselves.

This is an unfortunate message to women of my generation. It is a message that the Senate could easily combat. The confirmation of Justice Owen would send a counter message to young women, one which tells them that if they are bright and hardworking they can aspire to any position — even the f ederal bench — regardless of whether "the sisterhood" endorses them.

Oh my goodness - you are very kind, but there is absolutely no need to apologize. How could you know that I have such excellent sources -- a talent that comes in handy, by the way....

In any event, I was actually relieved to hear on Tuesday (it led to me being recommended for a mildly interesting A/S slot and other good things, plus I think Mike wants me around until he leaves). Of course, I was disappointed and my ego is a bit bruised, but I've heard that you've chosen a very talented woman, and I'm sure she'll be great.

Absolutely please keep me in mind if other spots open up. I would definitely be interested.

Thanks!

our decision before I called you. I'll spare you the whys and wherefores; it shouldn't have happened and I do apologize. Please know that both Judge Gonzales and I were very impressed by you, and that this was a very difficult decision for us. We are sincere in suggesting that we'd like to consider you in the future if you are still interested when additional spots open up.

Attached is a copy of a letter from Secretary Powell to Director Daniels on State's legislative proposal to compensate US victims of international terrorism. The letter urges completion of interagency review of the proposal. This proposal was submitted as part of State's Foreign Relations Authorization bill. Per guidance within EXOP, we advised State that the proposal was on hold and that State's Legal Advisor should pursue with Jay Lefkowitz.

We are close to final clearance of State's Authorization bill in anticipation of a House International Relations Committee markup possibly next week.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON

March 13, 2003

Dear Mr. Daniels:

We have corresponded with your office since December 2001 regarding the State Department's legislative proposal to establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate U.S. victims of international terrorism. We submitted our plan in November 2001 in connection with a provision in the FY 2002 Commerce, Justice, State (CJS) Appropriations Act (P.L. 107-77), requiring the President to submit such a proposal not later than submission of the 2003 budget. This proposal has yet to be approved by your office despite subsequent revisions addressing initial OMB concerns.

Deputy Secretary Armitage had several conversations with Deputy Director Dorn in May and June of 2002 regarding legislation to provide compensation for victims of international terrorism. Since we have not submitted a proposal to Congress, Senator Hollings has attempted to add language to the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations bill, as well as to the FY 2003 CJS Appropriations bill, that seeks to abrogate the 1981 Algiers Accords and permit the 1979 Tehran hostages to sue Iran for damages in U.S. court in violation of U.S. international obligations to the Accords. Each time, we successfully worked to get the language dropped, arguing that an Administration proposal on this matter would be forthcoming.

In June of 2002, Deputy Secretary Armitage sent a letter to key members, with OMB concurrence, outlining the Administration's principles for such a proposal. Senator Hollings and other members, however, are still awaiting the Administration proposal, in response to the FY 2002 directive. Just recently, at a hearing on March 6 before the Senate CJS Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator Hollings asked me about the status of our proposal.

The Honorable
Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.,
Director,
Office of Management and Budget.

In February, we again provided draft legislation to OMB as part of our proposed FY 2004/2005 Foreign Relations Authorization bill. On March 3, OMB advised us of its staff recommendation to defer a decision for further consideration.

Our failure to submit a proposal is increasingly problematic. I strongly urge you to complete your inter-agency review of this matter as soon as possible so that our proposed legislation can remain in the State Authorization bill. I am concerned that if the Administration is not more responsive to the FY 2002 CJS bill, we will not be able to deter more objectionable legislation during this year's appropriations process. Moreover, the current ad hoc approach favors large payments to a few victims who find assets, and large fees to their trial lawyers, with a high risk that the U.S. treasury will ultimately have to pay any amounts taken from blocked assets. The current approach also creates serious foreign policy difficulties, particularly since U.S. assets abroad risk similar treatment. I believe it is urgent that we change from that approach to a system without the foreign policy difficulties that provides a limited but equitable recovery to all victims of terrorism.

Sincerely,

Colin L. Powell

Attached is a copy of a letter from Secretary Powell to Director Daniels on State's legislative proposal to compensate US victims of international terrorism. The letter urges completion of interagency review of the proposal. This proposal was submitted as part of State's Foreign Relations Authorization bill. Per guidance within EXOP, we advised State that the proposal was on hold and that State's Legal Advisor should pursue with Jay Lefkowitz.

We are close to final clearance of State's Authorization bill in anticipation of a House International Relations Committee markup possibly next week.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON

March 13, 2003

Dear Mr. Daniels:

We have corresponded with your office since December 2001 regarding the State Department's legislative proposal to establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate U.S. victims of international terrorism. We submitted our plan in November 2001 in connection with a provision in the FY 2002 Commerce, Justice, State (CJS) Appropriations Act (P.L. 107-77), requiring the President to submit such a proposal not later than submission of the 2003 budget. This proposal has yet to be approved by your office despite subsequent revisions addressing initial OMB concerns.

Deputy Secretary Armitage had several conversations with Deputy Director Dorn in May and June of 2002 regarding legislation to provide compensation for victims of international terrorism. Since we have not submitted a proposal to Congress, Senator Hollings has attempted to add language to the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations bill, as well as to the FY 2003 CJS Appropriations bill, that seeks to abrogate the 1981 Algiers Accords and permit the 1979 Tehran hostages to sue Iran for damages in U.S. court in violation of U.S. international obligations to the Accords. Each time, we successfully worked to get the language dropped, arguing that an Administration proposal on this matter would be forthcoming.

In June of 2002, Deputy Secretary Armitage sent a letter to key members, with OMB concurrence, outlining the Administration's principles for such a proposal. Senator Hollings and other members, however, are still awaiting the Administration proposal, in response to the FY 2002 directive. Just recently, at a hearing on March 6 before the Senate CJS Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator Hollings asked me about the status of our proposal.

The Honorable
Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.,
Director,
Office of Management and Budget.

In February, we again provided draft legislation to OMB as part of our proposed FY 2004/2005 Foreign Relations Authorization bill. On March 3, OMB advised us of its staff recommendation to defer a decision for further consideration.

Our failure to submit a proposal is increasingly problematic. I strongly urge you to complete your inter-agency review of this matter as soon as possible so that our proposed legislation can remain in the State Authorization bill. I am concerned that if the Administration is not more responsive to the FY 2002 CJS bill, we will not be able to deter more objectionable legislation during this year's appropriations process. Moreover, the current ad hoc approach favors large payments to a few victims who find assets, and large fees to their trial lawyers, with a high risk that the U.S. treasury will ultimately have to pay any amounts taken from blocked assets. The current approach also creates serious foreign policy difficulties, particularly since U.S. assets abroad risk similar treatment. I believe it is urgent that we change from that approach to a system without the foreign policy difficulties that provides a limited but equitable recovery to all victims of terrorism.

Sincerely,

Colin L. Powell

JOHN C. ARMOR: End judicial filibusters
Published: Friday, March 14th, 2003
United Press International

(UPI) - The U.S. Senate is conducting an episodic filibuster against the nomination of Miguel Estrada to be a U.S. Circuit Court judge. But the Senate is not voting, only arguing about the subject for four weeks and counting - interrupted occasionally by other business.

What's happening here? Doesn't the Constitution require a majority vote for judicial nominees? Yes. Don't most senators favor confirming Estrada? Yes.

The Senate's filibuster rule requires 60 senators to end debate. Absent that, Senate opponents can hold the floor forever, so long as 40 agree to do so. The first vote to close debate on Estrada failed with 55 ayes, 44 nays, and one absent. There will be additional cloture votes.

All decisions by Congress must obey the Constitution. Unless it requires otherwise, all decisions are by majority vote. That's what democracy means.

However, many aspects of government are deliberately non-democratic.
There are 55 non-democratic clauses in the Constitution as amended. Some require supra-majorities; some forbid certain decisions regardless of majorities in favor. Based on these clauses, and one in particular, 44 senators are violating the Constitution by preventing a majority vote on this nomination.

An early non-democratic clause is Article I, Section 3, clause 1, which gives each state two senators regardless of population. In the abstract, it's 'unfair' that Alaska's half a million people have as many senators as California's 34 million. But that compromise was essential to the writing and ratification of the Constitution. The last non-democratic clause, the 27th

Amendment, bars a congressional pay raise until after the next election. (This was part of the original Bill of Rights but wasn't ratified until 1992.)

The First Amendment contains four non-democratic provisions. No matter how large the majority, Congress cannot vote to silence a speaker, or a newspaper, or forbid a religion, or halt a political demonstration.
Likewise, Article V is non-democratic. To amend the Constitution requires two-thirds of both Houses of Congress and three-fourths of the states.

This choice was deliberate. As Madison, Hamilton and Jay wrote in the Federalist, the Constitution should not be amended by 'the mere whim of a majority.' All non-democratic provisions were adopted to prevent certain decisions at 'the mere whim of a majority.'

The Advice and Consent Clause applies directly to the Estrada filibuster. Article II, Section 2, clause 2, gives the president the 'Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate ...
judges ....'

Note the difference between treaties and judges. The latter is democratic; the former isn't. None of the Democrats conducting the Estrada filibuster claims that confirming judges requires more than a majority. But they are using the non-democratic filibuster to prevent that vote.

Doesn't that mean that 44 senators are saying, in effect, 'democracy be damned,' and 'amending' the Constitution by force? Yes.

What can be done about this? Here's where the process gets tricky.
Article I, Section 5, clause 2, says, 'Each House shall determine the Rules of its Proceedings....' The Supreme Court will never tell either House it must change its rules. So the answer to this conundrum is not in court.

The current Republican tactic is to break the filibuster by embarrassing Democrats before immigrant and Hispanic citizens for blocking the Estrada vote. He is an immigrant and an Hispanic, an accomplished graduate of Harvard Law School, rated 'highly qualified' by the American Bar Association, and praised by Democratic and Republican solicitors general he worked for. But political pressure is not the only way to break this filibuster.

This week, President George W. Bush sent a letter to the Senate, read on the floor by Majority Leader Bill Frist. The president asserted that all judicial nominees by all presidents should receive a majority floor vote. This would solve the immediate problem and prevent its recurrence.

However, this is wishful thinking. A letter from the president plus $1.50 will get you a cup of coffee in the Senate cafeteria. Can the filibuster rule be changed to not apply to judicial nominees?

Senate rules provide that they continue in effect, 'unless changed by a vote of two thirds of the Senators.' That looks like an even higher burden, 67 senators to change the rules, rather than 60 to end a filibuster. Things aren't always as they seem.

Cloture requires 60 votes, regardless of how many senators are present.
The rule on rules requires 'two thirds of the Senators present and voting.' Let's say that the Republicans gain the support of three more Democrats, increasing the vote to close debate to 58, too few to break a filibuster.

Let's say that six Democrats are absent, in Iowa campaigning for president. Let's say that a snap vote is called at midnight during the filibuster, and seven other Democrats do not reach the floor in time.
Two-thirds of 87 senators present is 58, enough to eliminate the filibuster rule for all judicial nominees. Majority rule would be re-established where the majority is intended to rule, advise and consent on judicial nominees.

For 214 years, all judicial nominees to reach the Senate floor have received majority decisions (unless they withdrew). There was one exception: the bipartisan filibuster against Justice Abe Fortas, nominated by President Lyndon Johnson as chief justice. By tradition, the Senate has not allowed its rules to impede its constitutional role of majority votes on judicial nominees.

Tradition is fine, as long as it holds firm. For a century and a half, no president served more than two terms - because George Washington returned to private life after two terms. After Franklin D. Roosevelt's fourth term, the 22nd Amendment replaced the broken tradition with a constitutional requirement.

The same logic applies here. Democrats have killed a two-century tradition of democracy in the Senate. The broken precedent must be re-established by a Rule that no Senate is likely to break. The application of filibusters to judicial nominations should be stopped, not just for Miguel Estrada but for all judicial nominees, by all presidents, for all time to come.

Subject: Recent Asbestos Letters, etc. to the Hill/Biz Community

Brett, Kristen, Diana and Kevin,

I am enclosing copies of recent letters that have been exchanged on the Asbestos Issue. The first letter from above was sent from Bob Vagley, the head of the American Insurance Association, to the Asbestos Study Group CEOs on Monday of this week with the Insurance Companies Legislative Summary attached. The second letter is from the Asbestos Study Group to Senator Hatch with the outline of their proposal - the first we have seen.

I set up a time with Diana next week to discuss where I believe we are and would encourage each of you to sit in if you have time. I believe we are meeting Wednesday at 2pm. I am also bringing Leigh Ann Pusey from AIA with me to the meeting.

Thanks.

Address

Dear <>:

On behalf of the property/casualty insurance industry, I am writing to you and other members of the Asbestos Study Group to request a CEO-to-CEO meeting between our industry and members of your group. There is growing, bipartisan agreement on the urgent need for federal asbestos litigation reform, and both of our organizations are working hard to achieve it. Yet, we have been unable to reach a consensus as to the best way to move forward, either substantively or politically.

At last Wednesday's hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Chairman Hatch charged the business and insurance industries, as well as other interest groups, to reach consensus within two weeks, so that he can introduce and move a bill before the Judiciary Committee turns its attention to other matters (including highly contentious judicial nominations). We believe that a CEO-to-CEO meeting is essential if we are to reach such a consensus. We ask that this meeting take place as quickly as possible, and hopefully within the next week.

I believe that our organizations share the same goals regarding asbestos litigation reform: fair compensation to sick plaintiffs; elimination of litigation abuse; and greater financial certainty for corporate defendants and their insurers. Our disagreements seem to involve the most workable way of achieving these goals, from both a substantive and a political perspective. Our CEOs would like the opportunity to share their perspectives with you, and to learn about yours. We already have had such a meeting with members of the Asbestos Alliance, where we had a candid and salutary discussion of the importance of venue and consolidation reform.

To start the requested dialogue, I am enclosing a short paper which we prepared outlining a reform proposal that goes beyond the medical criteria, consolidation, and limited venue reform in the Asbestos Alliance bill. We will be happy to send you legislative language incorporating these concepts, should you desire to receive it. We are open to suggestions about the exact parameters of the proposal, but believe it addresses many concerns that members of the Asbestos Study Group have expressed about the current system and the more limited Asbestos Alliance approach. We also would welcome a dialogue with you on any proposals you wish to discuss, including the trust fund approach. If the Study Group has a written legislative proposal, we request that you provide us with a copy.

The insurance industry and the broader business community are partners on countless private sector and public policy initiatives, and we hope to stand with you in advancing meaningful, viable asbestos litigation reform. As an important step in that process, I hope you will agree to join in a meeting of Asbestos Study Group and insurance industry CEOs in finding a way to respond to Chairman Hatch's challenge and move a consensus bill forward.

We will be in touch with you shortly to discuss your availability for this meeting, and the logistics.

Sincerely,

Robert E. Vagley
President

CONFIDENTIAL DRAFT

American Insurance Association
Overview of Federal Asbestos Reform Proposal

Asbestos is the most significant, difficult mass tort issue facing the property-casualty insurance industry, and corporate America at large. Actuarial experts estimate that payments to individuals exposed to asbestos in the U.S., along with related expenses, ultimately could total $200 billion or more. The current estimates are nearly two thirds higher than those developed only a few years ago, and recent claim filings and litigation outcomes suggest further deterioration. Thus, asbestos reform has become a top public policy priority for the insurance industry and the business community.

For the past two years, the American Insurance Association (AIA) and a broader insurance industry coalition have been involved in an ambitious campaign to enact federal asbestos reform legislation. The legislation we are seeking would create a judicial mechanism to screen out medical claims from people who are not sick, liberalize the statute of limitations, eliminate huge consolidation actions that lead to shotgun settlements, and prevent venue selection abuse. In addition, we have developed additional reforms to address other serious legal abuses, some of which have emerged or worsened since our legislative proposal was first developed.

Medical Criteria: A critical element of today's asbestos litigation problem is the massive filing of lawsuits by plaintiffs who claim to have been harmed by asbestos (i.e., alleging asbestosis or pleural injury) but who have no discernable impairment and may never have one. Approximately 90% of all claims filed today are for non-malignant conditions, and the vast majority of these are made by unimpaired individuals. These claims are draining resources that could be used to compensate other plaintiffs who are sick as a result of exposure to asbestos. To address this problem, the proposal sets the minimum requirements for an "injury" in asbestos lawsuits. The medical criteria would be derived primarily from the AMA Guides for the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment, which Congress adopted by reference in the Longshore Act and which already serves a similar function under that Act. Some elements of the asbestos medical standard recently approved by the American Bar Association also would be included.

Statute of Limitations Extended: At the same time, the proposal preserves the legal rights of claimants who were exposed to asbestos and may become ill in the future. To do so, it liberalizes the statute of limitations to provide that the statute will not begin to run until the exposed person discovers that he or she is physically impaired due to exposure to asbestos. No longer would claimants be forced to file a lawsuit before they become ill in order to prevent the statute of limitations from running on a potential claim.

Venue Reform: There is a clear pattern for asbestos lawsuits to be filed in a few states that have the most favorable laws or have returned the most favorable verdicts. According RAND, five states (MS, NY, WV, OH, TX) accounted for 66% of filings between 1998 and 2000, and more recently, a single small county in Illinois (Madison County) has attracted hundreds of asbestos lawsuits. To address this problem, our proposal seeks to end the practice of "forum shopping"—i.e., filing claims in jurisdictions known to return more favorable results, rather than those with a real connection to the plaintiff or his injury—by requiring asbestos claims to be brought either in the state where the plaintiff resides, or where he or she was exposed to asbestos.

Elimination of Mass Consolidations: Asbestos claims are often consolidated for trial, sometimes with thousands of claims brought together in one action. This makes it difficult, if not impossible, for each individual claim to be fairly assessed on its merits and often leads to unimpaired individuals, or those whose illnesses were not caused by asbestos, being overcompensated. To address this problem, our proposal allows claims to be consolidated only with the consent of all parties.

Other Reforms: As we advance the aforementioned proposals, AIA has developed additional reforms that are needed to address other serious abuses in the asbestos litigation system. These include:

Lung cancer criteria: Over the past several years, there has been an increase in the number of lung cancer cases against asbestos defendants. There is growing concern among medical experts that many of these cancers, while representing real illness, were not caused by exposure to asbestos. Accordingly, Congress should enact exposure criteria for lung and other cancer based on medical findings and epidemiological data about relative risk in various industries.

Joint and several liability: Asbestos claims are also increasingly being extended to a wider array of firms. In 1983, RAND found that 300 firms had been listed as defendants in asbestos cases; by 2002, that estimate grew to more than 6,000. These defendants represent 75 of the 83 different types of industries in the U.S. Many defendants had little or no connection to asbestos but represent the "deepest pockets" available, particularly as more and more of the primary defendants file for bankruptcy. To address this concern, we suggest joint and several liability reform that limits the liability of defendants who are less than 50% responsible to their proportionate share.

Caps on damages: For some disease categories, there is a ten-fold difference in average settlement values across states. Asbestos is a national problem, and Congress should consider reasonable damage caps to provide greater equity. Using President Bush's medical malpractice proposals as a model, we would put forth a $250,000 cap on non-economic damages, except in the case of mesothelioma, where there would be a $500,000 cap on non-economic damages.

A ban on punitive damages also would be beneficial. The rationale for such a ban is the absence of deterrence value (asbestos has been largely eliminated from the workplace for more than twenty years) and the need to conserve resources for future claimants.

Protections for retailers: As the number of asbestos defendants grows ever larger, there is increasing concern about lawsuits against retailers who did not manufacture any asbestos products, such as hardware stores, home improvement centers, and auto parts outlets. As was the case with product and small business liability reform legislation that has been considered in Congress, it would be appropriate to take these peripheral defendants, many of them small businesses, out of the liability system, provided they did not fail to exercise reasonable care.

Collateral Source Payments: Many asbestos suits involve claims against hundreds of defendants. At the time of evaluating these suits, there often is no way for a defendant to know how much the plaintiff already has received through settlements with other defendants. Therefore, the legislation should require that, at the time of filing a complaint or other initial pleading in a case alleging an asbestos injury, the plaintiff must file a statement listing all asbestos settlements or judgments which have been received or to be received as a result of the claim; furthermore, these statements should be regularly updated to include asbestos settlements or judgments that subsequently are received.

Bankruptcy cases: According to a recent report prepared by Dr. Joseph Stigletz for AIA, more than 60 firms have filed for bankruptcy in order to address their asbestos liabilities. These bankruptcies have pernicious effects on workers and communities. They also create new legal rules for adjudicating asbestos claims. In order to assure a level playing field among all defendants regardless of whether they have filed for bankruptcy, the reforms outlined above should apply to all asbestos claims, including those against bankrupt defendants.

THE ASBESTOS STUDY GROUP

March 11, 2003

Via Hand Delivery

The Honorable Orrin Hatch
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
224 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Hatch:

Thank you for requesting that the Asbestos Study Group (ASG) provide the Senate Judiciary Committee with a detailed explanation of our proposal to address the asbestos litigation crisis. We appreciate the opportunity to present the attached more complete explanation of a privately funded claims facility that will pay victims fair compensation quickly, on a no-fault basis, for a range of asbestos-related diseases. This proposal is based on ongoing discussions with members of the ASG as well as outside experts, other asbestos defendants, insurance companies, and organized labor, in addition to Members of Congress from both parties and their staffs. We believe that a resolution based upon a claims facility instead of continued reliance on the tort system will be the best way to bring fairness, certainty, and finality for all stakeholders, including, most importantly, the victims of asbestos-related disease. Moreover, we believe such an approach will have the best chance of enactment.

The attached description lays out in detail legislation to create an Asbestos Injury Compensation Program. The key issues of who is eligible, how they would be compensated, and how the program would be funded are also described. The ASG has also reviewed possible approaches to solving the asbestos litigation crisis other than the one outlined in this submission. We believe this solution is best because it will (a) assure prompt and fair compensation for those with asbestos related diseases; (b) it will do so without delay and with minimum transaction costs; (c) it can solve the problem with certainty and finality for all, including the Congress; and (d) it has the best chances of garnering bipartisan support which we all agree is essential to enacting a solution to this terrible problem. We note that no other proposed solution has achieved consensus among the relevant constituencies.

Obviously, several components of our proposal must still be resolved. We have been working for months with representatives of many of the stakeholders to address the key issues and have made substantial progress, but we have not yet been able to reach consensus on all issues among all the parties. To meet the time frame established at the hearing, we believe the Committee will have to become more directly involved in the negotiations. However, prior to such discussion, we would appreciate an opportunity to explain to you in greater detail our proposal and our analysis of the options that remain outstanding.

variety of criteria from other contexts, including those of the Manville Trust, the Georgine settlement, the American Bar Association (ABA) standards, the standards in S.413 (Nickles), as well as those proposed by doctors representing organized labor and victims. The difficulty in resolving these issues is not unique to the ASG proposal as, for example, was demonstrated when Dennis Archer agreed at the recent hearing to reconsider some of the language in the ABA proposal. Resolution of this issue will require Congress to determine the appropriate policy choice after assessing various stakeholder positions.

3. Diagnostic Criteria: Claims must meet diagnostic criteria for a medical diagnosis to be accepted for purposes of Program eligibility. The Board must have reasonable confidence that the medical evidence provided in support of the claim is credible and consistent with recognized medical standards. Claimants would have to demonstrate the existence of a compensable disease by a treating physician diagnosed as part of an in-person medical exam by that physician. A claimant's complete work history, exposure pattern, and smoking history, among other factors, would be reviewed by the physician as part of the diagnosis. Other more likely causes of a claimant's condition would also have to be excluded by the physician submitting the diagnosis to the Program. The statute will instruct the Board to require the submission of x-rays, detailed results of pulmonary function tests, laboratory tests, tissue samples, results of medical examination or reviews of other medical evidence, and require that medical evidence submitted comply with recognized medical standards regarding equipment, testing methods, and procedure to assure that such evidence is reliable.

Note: There has been widespread criticism of the quality of medical evidence utilized to sustain awards for asbestos exposure in the tort system. This provision gives the Board authority to formulate standards insuring use of high quality medical evidence as a basis for awards of compensation. The Board may utilize existing standards when appropriate. For example, the statute could provide that pulmonary function testing must meet the quality criteria established by the American Thoracic Society and to be performed on equipment in material compliance with the Society's standards for technical quality and calibration. Other diagnostic criteria must also be included in the statute for individual compensable diseases, for example, to exclude other more likely causes of a claimant's medical condition.

B. Limitations Period:

1. Future Illness: In order to be eligible under the Program, a claimant must submit a claim to the Program within two years of having received a medical diagnosis of a Major Compensable Illness or of having discovered facts that would have led a reasonable person to obtain a medical diagnosis of a Major Compensable Illness.

2. Current Illness: A claimant who, at the commencement of the Program, has a pending timely-filed claim in state or federal court, must submit a claim to the Program within two years of the Program's commencement date. Claims that are already time-barred would not be revived by the legislation.

3. Separate Disease Rule: Victims that receive compensation for one asbestos-related disease, but who later develop another disease, will be eligible for additional compensation under the program (subject to setoff for prior, duplicative recoveries).

III. Compensation

Note: We have evaluated two possible schemes to determine the compensation level for each eligible claimant. The first is a standardized benefit, which would award statutory values for each scheduled disease independent of a claimant's individual circumstances. The second is an individualized program, which would utilize a formula to compensate victims based upon actual lost wages, medical expenses, and statutorily set values for pain and suffering. Pursuant to either approach, the fund can be managed to pay a single stated value for each disease category, or to pay a specified average for each disease category. Either can be included in the Program after Congress determines its preferred policy option. Provided below is an outline of each approach.

A. Standardized Benefit – Scheduled Values

1. The Board shall compensate claims for Major Compensable Illnesses according to the following schedule:

Mesothelioma	----------
Lung Cancer (Level 2)	----------
Lung Cancer (Level 1)	----------
Other Cancers	----------
Qualifying Non-Malignant Asbestosis
Level 3	----------
Level 2	----------
Level 1	----------

Note: The success of a national claims facility will depend on its ability to pay fair values for compensable diseases on an expedited basis. We have been working to determine the range of compensation that could be paid to claimants at a magnitude we believe can be funded. Necessarily, the exact value will depend on resolving both overall funding and compensable disease issues. For example, incidence levels for mesothelioma are predictable to a high degree; it is most clearly associated with asbestos, and is typically fatal. For these reasons, the primary policy goal of the Program is to compensate mesothelioma victims expeditiously. Once these claims values are set, the values of other disease categories (and the ultimate size of the fund) can be established. Whether a claims facility can be enacted will ultimately depend on the political process to determine how much money must go to how many people.

2. The statute will reduce compensation amounts to reflect recovery from collateral sources for the claimant's Major Compensable Illness. This adjustment will account for all collateral sources, including life and disability insurance, pension funds, and death benefit programs. Collateral sources will also be defined to include amounts received from defendants or their insurers, because compensation awards under this Program should not duplicate amounts already received through suit or settlement. This provision is intended prevent the funds from the Program from being used to provide double recoveries.

3. The statute will not preclude recovery for smokers but would provide significant discounts for smokers unless an individual claimant can demonstrate that the medical cause of the disease is not the result of smoking. In those cases, claimants will be eligible for standard levels of compensation.

B. Individualized Program -- Formulaic Approach

1. Elements of Victim Compensation:

a. Lost Earnings: Claimants suffering from a Major Compensable Illness will be eligible for compensation for past and future lost earnings caused by the Major Compensable Illness.

i. Past and future lost earnings will be based on actual employment history.

ii. Total past and future earnings loss will equal the number of work-months lost by the claimant as a result of the Major Compensable Illness, multiplied by the degree of work-related disability caused by the illness, multiplied by the per month value of the lost earnings.

(a) The number of work-months lost by the claimant will be based upon the average age of retirement for an American of the claimant's gender, less the age at which the claimant ceased working as the result of the Major Compensable Illness.

(b) If the claimant is deceased, the estate will receive 100% of the lost earnings up to the average age of retirement for an American of the claimant's gender in the relevant employment classification.

b. Medical Expenses: Eligible claimants suffering from a Major Compensable Illness will be compensated for reasonable medical expenses (past and future) related to the claimant's Major Compensable Illness and unreimbursed by third parties.

i. Past Expenses: Past medical expenses will be based on out-of-pocket, reasonable unreimbursed medical expenses related to the diagnosis and treatment of the claimant's Major Compensable Illness.

ii. Future Expenses: Future reasonable, unreimbursed medical expenses will be reimbursed to claimants under the Program.

c. Pain and Suffering:

Note: Award amounts for pain and suffering remain to be determined.

i. Mesothelioma: Eligible claimants suffering from mesothelioma will be compensated a lump sum amount of $_____.

ii. Other Major Compensable Illnesses: Eligible Claimants suffering from all other Major Compensable Illnesses will be compensated for pain and suffering as follows based on the listed disease categories:

Lung Cancer (Level 2) _____
Lung Cancer (Level 1) _____
Other Cancers _____
Qualifying Non-Malignant Asbestosis
Level 3 _____
Level 2 _____
Level 1 _____

(a) Past pain and suffering will be based on the number of months between the date the claimant's Major Compensable Injury was diagnosed and the date the claimant applied to the Program.

(b) Future pain and suffering will be based on the number of months between the claimant's age at application to the Program and the average life expectancy for an American of the claimant's age and gender suffering from the claimant's Major Compensable Illness.

(c) If the claimant is deceased, the estate will receive the applicable monthly amount multiplied by the number of months between the date the claimant's Major Compensable Illness was diagnosed and the claimant's date of death.

Note: The amount of compensation for pain and suffering awarded to claimants suffering from mesothelioma will not vary by duration of the illness because of the unique nature of mesothelioma. Currently, mesothelioma is considered incurable and causes death rapidly after diagnosis (usually within 24 months, often within a year). Cancer and other non-malignant asbestos-related diseases are unlike mesothelioma in that in some cases the illnesses are curable and/or the illnesses can often be managed for much longer periods of time. The injuries suffered by different persons with the same non-mesothelioma Major Compensable Illness may vary greatly depending on the age of diagnosis and course of the illness. Therefore, the Program compensates claimants with the same non-mesothelioma Major Compensable Illnesses according to the duration of the disease.

IV. Program Funding

Funding raised under the Program will be distributed to eligible claimants by the Board pursuant to the Program. The Board will also be responsible for establishing a financial reserve and for managing assets of the Program to ensure sufficient resources to compensate victims in the future. The statute would include the following funding provisions.

A. Mandatory Participants: Funding needed for the Program would be raised primarily from current defendants in asbestos litigation that have paid a threshold amount of total defense and indemnity costs in asbestos tort litigation and from their insurance carriers. The threshold spending amount will be calculated on a gross basis, rather than net of insurance.

1. Claims: After the commencement date of the Program, and except for claims already reduced to final judgment, no personal injury or death claims arising out of exposure to asbestos nor any related claims for contribution or indemnification may be asserted or prosecuted in any state or federal court against any participant in the program.

2. Funding Levels: Based on extensive discussions with most of the insurers providing the bulk of the coverage for asbestos claims, we have little doubt that insurers can provide tens of billions of dollars of funding over the life of the Program while remaining financially stable. We believe that we have a reasonable, equitable approach to the allocation between insureds and insurers and to the allocation within the universe of insureds. We would be pleased to share our ideas with you, but this is an issue where the Committee will need to aid the affected parties to achieve a just solution.

3. Feasibility: Obviously, Congress will ultimately need to decide the appropriate level of funding for and duration of the Program, but, based on negotiations to date, it appears that there is sufficient funding available to create a fair and just compensation program outside the tort system. We would welcome the opportunity to update the Committee on the current framework of our negotiations.

4. Annual Assessments: Participants in the Program will pay annual assessments over the duration of the Program. Projections indicate that the funding required during the early years will taper off as the projected incidence levels of asbestos-related disease decline. The Program is expected to last until 2049, when projections of excess mesothelioma incidence (and lung cancer) caused by asbestos decline to zero, but the bulk of the payments will be made over the next 30 years.

5. Congressional Authority: Congress has ample authority under the Commerce Clause to require defendant companies and their insurers to fund an administrative compensation system, particularly where, in exchange for such funding, the companies and their insurers are relieved from the expense of liabilities under the tort system.

B. Voluntary Participation: Current defendants that have not spent the minimum or threshold amount in the system and possible future defendants would not be forced into the program, but could elect to participate voluntarily.

1. Assessments: Voluntary participants would be assessed annual payments less than those assessed for mandatory participants, and would make annual payments to the fund over the life of the Program. In exchange, they will obtain the liability protections afforded to mandatory participants. We recognize that voluntary assessments will take into account the size of the participants so as not to unduly burden small businesses.

2. Non-Participants: Those that do not participate voluntarily will remain subject to litigation in the tort system. If any of these defendants later exceed the threshold spending amount triggering mandatory participation in the Program, they would then be legally obligated to participate in the Program at levels comparable to mandatory participants.

C. Bankruptcies: Because the Program is expected to provide full and fair compensation for all victims of asbestos-related disease, it is expected that the current bankruptcies would be incorporated into the Program. In other words, by creating a program to fully compensate victims, it would be duplicative to leave existing trusts outside that system, so the Program will provide for incorporating them into the structure.

1. Confirmed Plans/Existing Trusts: Subject to constitutional limits, the statute would provide for incorporating assets of existing trusts into the Program. 524(g)

2. Pending Bankruptcies: For defendants that have filed for bankruptcy protection but have not received confirmed plans as of the date of enactment, the Program will assess financial contributions and annual funding requirements under the statute. Some defendants may elect to terminate their bankruptcy proceedings and emerge from Chapter 11 with their funding contribution determined under the statute; others may elect to continue with their bankruptcy and emerge with a confirmed plan, in which case they will be incorporated into the Program pursuant to the provisions for confirmed plans (above). Non 524(g)

D. Insurance and Reinsurance. Defendant companies have tens of billions of dollars in insurance coverage for asbestos-related liabilities pursuant to insurance contracts they have bought and paid for with substantial premiums. Similarly, the insurers who issued those contracts have in many instances ceded their risks, in whole or in part, to reinsurers in exchange for substantial consideration. Neither the defendants' insurance rights nor the reinsurance rights of the direct insurers should be prejudiced by the fact that the payments for which coverage is sought arise from this legislation rather than from continued operation of the dysfunctional asbestos tort system. The benefits of a no-fault claims facility are more likely to be realized if: (1) the policyholders have comfort that their insurers will contribute a fair share to the fund in accordance with their existing contractual obligations either to pay directly, or to indemnify the policyholders against, liabilities to asbestos victims; and (2) insurers have comfort that their reinsurance rights will not be prejudiced.

Note: We believe that properly constructed federal legislation altering rights under existing insurance contracts can successfully be defended against challenges under the Contracts, Due Process or Takings Clauses.

1. Structure: We envision that the legislation would prohibit defendants from seeking recovery of their payments to the trust directly from their insurers. In return for protection from such claims, the legislation would require that the insurers contribute directly to the trust. The insurance industry contribution might be structured in several ways: (1) as a fixed amount; (2) as a fixed share of the annual total funding assessment for the fund as a whole; or (3) by providing the defendants with the statutory ability to offset their annual assessments with the exercise of insurance credits, with the insurers' collective required contribution established by the exercise of these credits. We believe that option (2) is the most equitable and least likely to cause insurance companies financial issues or to create unneeded complexity in the claims facility system.

2. Allocation and Exhaustion: Under any funding method, the insurers will need to develop an appropriate method of allocating the insurance industry payment, similar to the effort among the defendants to allocate their required assessments. Similarly, under any funding method, the legislation should provide a method by which the insurers can apply their payments to the fund toward the exhaustion of any applicable aggregate limits remaining on policies issued to participating defendants. The manner in which these credits would be calculated and applied would depend on the ultimate structure of the fund.

3. Reinsurance: The legislation would address reinsurance issues, with a view toward ensuring that insurers' payments to the trust would be recoverable under reinsurance treaties and policies to the same extent as an indemnity payment on the underlying asbestos claims would be.

4. Claims for Past Expenses: Notwithstanding the provisions above, nothing in the statute is expected to bar claims against insurance policies for reimbursement for expenses incurred prior to enactment.

E. Structural Considerations:

1. Optional v. Mandatory: We have analyzed whether the fund could be created as a voluntary "opt in." We believe for a variety of reasons that it is far preferable to create a fund in which a sufficient number of asbestos defendants and their insurance carriers must participate. Otherwise, the sufficiency of the fund will be difficult to assess because we cannot know in advance how many defendants would choose to stay in the tort system. A mandatory fund, on the other hand, can raise substantial funding.

2. Caps (Annual and Aggregate): The overall size of the Program, as well as annual funding requirements, would be set by statute.

Note: The ASG recognizes that many traditional defendants have gone bankrupt and some of the trusts established on their behalf have experienced an unanticipated flood of claims, resulting in reductions in compensation levels – some to as little as pennies on the dollar – thus increasing the unfairness to victims. The ASG is actively engaged in efforts to avoid that risk even as we develop a program providing the requisite affordability, predictability and certainty for the financial obligations of those funding the Program.

REV_00380017

3. Borrowing Authority: The Program will have limited borrowing authority to provide financial flexibility and to ensure compensation to eligible claimants in light of steady and predictable funding sources from Program participants.

F. Finality and Certainty for Funding Participants: Funding participants may elect to enter into a contract with the Board that will include at least the following terms:

1. The contracting funding participants, in the amounts allocated among them, will pay to the Board the funds that the Board will distribute to eligible claimants in the amounts and under the schedules specified in the statute.

Note: The final formula allocating Program costs among contracting funding participants will be incorporated in the statute and into the contract with the Board. We are working on funding formulas for differently situated defendants and are happy to share our current structure with you.

2. These payments will constitute the full and final extent of the contracting funding participants' liabilities for pending and future asbestos-related claims in the Program and, once made, the payments will fully and finally extinguish these liabilities.

3. If the contracting funding participants must sue the Board to enforce provisions of their contract, the Board will not assert any defenses based on its sovereign immunity or sovereign authority.

Note: In order to make secure the annual limitation on the funding participants' financial obligations, it is necessary to bind the government, insofar as that is possible, to the amounts and allocations specified by the statute. The general rule is that no Congress can bind its successors, but the Supreme Court recently held in the Winstar case that when Congress indicates in "unmistakable" terms that it intends a federal agency to relinquish its sovereign regulatory authority and bind itself by its contractual undertakings, it may do so. A number of lower courts have implemented Winstar's "unmistakability doctrine." A contractual device of the kind presented above appears to be the safest way to trigger this doctrine.

V. Federal Role

Despite the federal government's role with respect to asbestos exposure, the Program could be funded privately, without any direct government funding. We believe it is appropriate for the federal government to allow for tax-free accretion of the corpus of the fund, as proposed by Senators DeWine and Leahy in S. 1048 (107th Congress). Payments made to the fund should be construed as ordinary business expenses. Others have proposed additional roles for the federal government, which the Committee may wish to consider.

VI. Conclusion

There is broad agreement that asbestos litigation reform is urgently needed. The consequences of failing to act fall heavily on asbestos victims, the ever-increasing number of companies now defending asbestos actions even as the original producers of asbestos are bankrupt and gone, the insurance industry, which is weighed down by huge asbestos-related obligations, and all Americans who suffer the economic consequences of a system that is out of control.

The ASG has also reviewed possible approaches to solving the asbestos litigation crisis other than the one outlined in this submission. Many of them have aspects that are worthy of study and possibly may represent compromises that this Committee should consider if the approach outlined here is not feasible. We nonetheless believe that this approach is the best because (a) it assures prompt and full compensation for all the sick with the minimum amount of paperwork and delay, (b) other solutions inevitably involve more and higher wasteful transaction costs than a system that completely replaces the tort system, (c) other solutions are more difficult to price (and therefore provide less certainty for the defendants and insurers that would fund the system) due to the uncertainties inherent in litigation, and (d) more certain cost levels make it easier to assure that the funding mechanism will be sufficient to provide sufficient funds for victims and to avoid situations like the Manville Trust and the black lung program that have not been able to provide all of their promised benefits.

No public policy problem of this magnitude has ever been solved by private parties negotiating among themselves. Congress must be actively involved in any resolution as the only forum to resolve difficult political and policy questions. Of course, Congress cannot do it alone. Our efforts to explore workable solutions with key stakeholders has borne fruit. The issues that remain unresolved, while perhaps politically difficult, are by no means insurmountable unless stakeholders choose to make them so. There may yet be other issues we have not considered, and we look forward to meeting with the Judiciary Committee staff to discuss your thoughts as to this submission and other issues that you choose to raise. The ultimate merits of a claims facility, if it can be achieved, seems to be beyond dispute. We believe it is the best path to the bipartisan consensus to which the Chairman and Ranking Member committed at last week's hearing. We welcome further discussion.

ADDITIONAL SUBMISSION OF THE ASBESTOS STUDY GROUP to the

United States Senate
Committee on the Judiciary

The Asbestos Study Group (ASG) appreciates the opportunity to provide the Senate Judiciary Committee with a more complete explanation of our proposal to address the asbestos litigation crisis. The ASG proposal would establish a privately funded claims facility that will pay victims fair compensation quickly, on a no-fault basis, for a range of asbestos-related diseases. Our proposal is based on ongoing discussions with members of the ASG, as well as outside experts, other asbestos defendants, insurance companies, and organized labor, in addition to Members of Congress from both parties and their staffs. We believe that a resolution based upon a claims facility instead of continued reliance on the tort system will be the only way to bring fairness, certainty, and finality for all stakeholders, including, most importantly, the victims of asbestos-related disease. Moreover, we believe such an approach will have the best chance of securing bipartisan support and thus enactment.

Under the ASG proposal, victims of asbestos-related disease would be compensated on a no-fault basis, upon showing that they were exposed to asbestos and that they satisfy the other eligibility standards for compensation. Victim compensation would no longer be held hostage to bankruptcies or to years of expensive litigation over product identification, causation, and other difficult issues. Victims of asbestos-related diseases would be assured prompt and fair compensation with the minimum amount of paperwork and delay. The tort system would be replaced, reducing the heavy burden of transaction costs and saving money so that funds can be targeted much more directly to compensate those suffering from asbestos. Defendants and insurance companies currently caught in the litigation crisis would no longer face the uncertainty and the risk premium Wall Street imposes in order to deal with the unpredictable nature of asbestos litigation. Instead, they would accept somewhat "rough justice" in providing the private funding for the compensation system in exchange for financial predictability and relief from the uncertainties of the tort system. We believe that the certainty provided by this proposal would be welcomed by the financial markets.

In reviewing and analyzing our proposal from a public policy and a political standpoint, we ask that one critical factor be kept in mind. Our proposal represents a structure that can accommodate the decisions that Congress will reach on the issues of eligibility, compensation, and the overall size of the program. We fully recognize that several key issues must still be resolved, and we believe these will require the active participation of Congress. We have been working for months with representatives of many of the stakeholders to address these key issues, but we have not yet been able to reach consensus among all the parties. (This, of course, is also true with respect other legislative options proposed by other stakeholders.) Consequently, no matter which structure the Senate Judiciary Committee adopts, Congress clearly must engage actively in the debate to develop a consensus on any proposal.

The following reflects in greater detail our proposal for establishing a no-fault, privately funded claims facility. The description below is organized to reflect (I) the Asbestos Injury Compensation Program, (II) Eligibility, (III) Compensation, and (IV) Program Funding.

I. The Asbestos Injury Compensation Program

A. Legislative Findings: Asbestos claims have become a national crisis characterized by erratic and delayed compensation of asbestos-related diseases, over-compensation for the non-impaired, bankruptcy of major companies with more threatened, widespread unemployment and distress to local communities, high legal costs and court congestion, remedial demands on governments at all levels, and widespread economic uncertainties. This crisis, and its significant effect on the welfare of the people of the United States and on interstate commerce, compels Congress to create this national Asbestos Injury Compensation Program (the "Program") to supersede all existing methods to compensate those injured by asbestos.

B. Structure: The Program will consist of a privately funded, publicly administered fund that will provide the resources necessary for operation of the Program and payment of compensation to asbestos victims. The statute will establish within the Department of Justice an Asbestos Injury Compensation Board (the "Board"), whose members will be inferior officers of the United States, to implement and administer the Program.

1. Administrative Board: The Board created by the Act to administer the Program will be within the United States Department of Justice. The Attorney General shall exercise oversight of the Board, and shall require and publish periodic reports concerning the Program's performance.

2. Appointment of Board Members: The Board will have seven members, who will be appointed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

   a. The appointing Court will initiate the appointment process by soliciting comments and suggestions for appointees from defendant companies, victims' groups, organized labor, insurers and other interested members of the public during a 60-day period, after which the Court will appoint the Board members.

3. Board Rulemaking: Within 90 days of the appointment of its members, the Board will promulgate a list and brief discussion of the various issues that the Board must address in order to draft the Program's governing regulations, and invite public comment over a subsequent 60-day period.

   a. Thirty days after the close of the comment period, the Board will promulgate interim regulations. This will enable the Board to begin to process claims and make awards, so that the most seriously injured claimants are not subject to further delay while the Board considers further public comment. The Board will also invite public comment for a further 30-day period. Within 30 days after the close of the final comment period, the Board will issue its final regulations.

Note: The Board serves a narrowly circumscribed function with relatively little discretion.

(i) First, the Board is authorized to process individual asbestos personal injury and death claims associated with Major Compensable Illnesses (as defined below), but only pursuant to explicit statutory criteria governing eligibility and compensation amounts over which the Board can exercise no discretion (except in certain narrowly defined extraordinary circumstances set forth in the Act).

(ii) The Board has the responsibility, delegated to it by Congress, for establishing rules and procedures for determining eligibility.

(iii) The Board is responsible for issuing regulations regarding the documentation of claims, the conduct of hearings, and the other ministerial functions necessary to implement and carry out the process of receiving and processing claims.

(iv) The Board would have broad audit authority over claimants and other entities submitting information or diagnoses under the Program. The statute would provide substantial civil and criminal penalties for knowingly filing false information and for fraud.

(v) The Board will be authorized to retain private claims payment facilities to administer the claims payment aspects of the Program under the relevant statutory and regulatory standards. (See Section I.C.4. on Processing Units below).

C. Procedure - Claim Processing

1. Award Calculation: To the extent a formulaic approach to compensation is used (discussed below), the Board will develop a precise and detailed methodology for applying the statutory formula for the calculation of individual claimant awards based on information submitted by each claimant. There will be three considerations in determining a claimant's award: (1) lost wages, (2) medical expenses, and (3) pain and suffering.

Note: No such methodology is necessary if the statute prescribes scheduled amounts for all claimants for each compensable disease, which aggregate those elements into a single number.

2. Processing Method: Compensation will be awarded to eligible claimants upon the receipt and evaluation of applications and supporting evidence submitted in writing to the Board pursuant to its regulations.

3. Burden of Proof: Claimants shall bear the burden of proving the eligibility criteria and award amounts through the introduction of competent and persuasive evidence.

4. Processing Unit: After proposals have been solicited, received, and evaluated, a private entity will be engaged by the Board to receive and process claims on the Board's behalf. This is similar to the process now used for processing Medicare claims. The entity's responsibilities will include:

   a. setting up a claimant assistance program to respond to claimant inquiries and to assist claimants and counsel in preparing and submitting claim applications;

   b. confirming that all necessary documentation and other material has been submitted by each claimant;

   c. applying the eligibility criteria (exposure, medical, and diagnostic) to determine a claimant's eligibility to receive compensation under the Program;

   d. applying the award calculation methodology with respect to each eligible claim to calculate a claim award or applying a scheduled value for each disease category; and

   e. advising the claimant of the eligibility determination and amount of the award, if any, and responding to inquiries about the eligibility determination and award calculus.

   Note: The resources necessary for operation of the Processing Unit could be accommodated by existing claims resolution facilities and private companies that will no longer be utilized in the tort system for asbestos bodily injury claims. These entities already have the expertise needed for administration of such an operation.

D. Administrative Appeals and Judicial Review

1. Administrative Review: A claimant may request an administrative review of the Board's claim decision.

   a. Review Panel: The Board shall create a Review Panel to hear and decide administrative appeals by claimants dissatisfied with any eligibility or compensation decision of the Board. The Review

REV_00380006

Panel will consider only the materials considered by the Board in its claim decision, plus a written statement setting out the claimant's reasons for challenging the Board's decision.

b. Standard of Review: The Review Panel will affirm the Board's claim decision unless it finds that the decision is arbitrary and capricious.

c. Submission of Additional Material: A claimant may petition the Review Panel in writing for an opportunity to submit supporting evidence not available to the claimant at the time of application to the Program. The Review Panel will grant permission to submit additional material in extraordinary circumstances.

2. Judicial Review: Aggrieved parties may seek judicial review of the Program, of a funding participant's allocation, and of an individual eligibility determination as follows.

a. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit will have exclusive jurisdiction to hear challenges to the statute and the regulations implementing the Program. Not later than 30 days following promulgation of the final rules implementing the Program, any aggrieved party may seek judicial review of (1) the constitutionality of the Act or of the regulations promulgated by the Board, and (2) whether any of the regulations promulgated by the Board are arbitrary, capricious, or otherwise not in accordance with law, exceed statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitation, or are short of statutory right. The court will not have authority to issue a stay pending review. Issues that were or could have been raised in any such challenge may not be raised in subsequent challenges to individual eligibility determinations. The statute may also provide for immediate review of any constitutional action for declaratory or injunctive relief with expedited appellate review by the Supreme Court.

b. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit will have exclusive jurisdiction to hear challenges by individual funding participants to the funding assessments for that participant. The legislation will establish the allocation principles which may be challenged once under paragraph a. above. This provision allows individual entities to challenge only the application of those principles to their particular circumstance. Any such challenges must be filed within 30 days following the assessments of funding participants. The court will not have authority to stay the funding obligations of any party pending review.

c. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Circuit of the claimant's residence will have jurisdiction to hear challenges to individual eligibility decisions, but only after the claimant has received a final decision of the Review Panel. The reviewing court will set aside an individual eligibility decision only if, upon consideration of the record before the Review Panel, the court concludes the decision is arbitrary and capricious. The scope of judicial review does not include compensation awards; compensation will be determined solely under the standards of the Program.

Note: There is no constitutional requirement that claimants be afforded the opportunity to seek judicial review of the Board's individual claim decisions. If the legislative goal is to preclude such review, however, the statute must expressly include a provision such as the following: "Individual claim decisions by the Board are (1) final and conclusive for all purposes and with respect to all questions of law and fact other than constitutionality; and (2) not subject to review by another official of the United States or by a court by mandamus or otherwise."

E. Payment of Awards

1. Priority of Payment: The Program will allow for a substantial down payment of full claim value to all living mesothelioma victims on an accelerated basis. For exigent circumstances and in cases of extreme hardship caused by asbestos-related disease, the Program will allow for expediting payments made to such claimants.

2. Scheduled Payment of Awards: Individual claimants will receive structured payments.

II. Eligibility

Subject to the eligibility criteria set forth below, the statute will establish a no-fault compensation system under the Program. Claimants would not be required to show that the injury for which the claim is made resulted from the negligence or other fault of any other person. Under this provision, the Program avoids the time-consuming and expensive process of litigating product identification and fault. In this respect, the Program will operate in the same manner as a worker's compensation program, in which rapid and certain recovery is substituted for the uncertain, time-consuming, and expensive process of obtaining recoveries under the tort system.

A. Eligibility Standards: In order to be eligible for compensation under the Program, a claimant must (1) demonstrate significant occupational exposure to asbestos, and (2) suffer from a compensable medical condition, as (3) diagnosed pursuant to the standards in the Program.

1. Exposure Criteria: To be eligible for compensation under the Program, a claimant must establish sufficient exposure to asbestos to qualify for compensation.

   a. For mesothelioma claims, claimants must demonstrate medically sufficient levels of exposure. Mesothelioma victims with take-home exposures will qualify under the Program. The Program is expected to provide prompt compensation to mesothelioma victims that satisfy the criteria.

   b. For all other claims, claimants must demonstrate medically sufficient levels of "significant occupational exposure" appropriate for each disease category. The term "significant occupational exposure" means employment for a cumulative period of at least five years, in an industry and an occupation in which the claimant (i) handled raw asbestos fibers on a regular basis, (ii) fabricated asbestos-containing products so that the claimant in the fabrication process was exposed on a regular basis to raw asbestos fibers, (iii) altered, repaired or otherwise worked with an asbestos-containing product such that the claimant was exposed on a regular basis to raw asbestos fibers, or (iv) worked on a regular basis in close proximity to workers engaged in the activities described in (i), (ii), and/or (iii).

   c. Claimants will also be required to show that the delay between exposure and illness is consistent with Board-endorsed medical criteria concerning the latency periods typically associated with that disease category.

2. Medical Criteria:

   a. Major Compensable Illnesses: Claimants will be eligible for compensation under the Program for the following enumerated Major Compensable Illnesses:

      i. Mesothelioma
      ii. Lung cancer
      iii. Other compensable cancers
      iv. Qualifying non-malignant asbestos-related diseases.

Note: Like other legislative options, a national claims facility will need to establish medical criteria, but can have more flexibility to compensate victims among a variety of disease categories. Importantly, a facility can assure quick payment to these victims by avoiding the necessity for protracted and expensive litigation to establish product identification, causation and fault. We have worked for many months to establish appropriate criteria and standards with medical experts and those representing victims of asbestos exposure. We have been working with a

Matt, I have a problem which could seriously upset our work place. Please make a call for me to Brad Schlozman, a Deputy Attorney General. His number is 202-305-8060. We have an INS problem that has been hung up for a year. Ask him to have someone from D.C. INS to call Paul Novak, Jr., the Center Director of the Vermont INS office at 802-527-4913. The case involves Anna Tan, the art director for Crisis magazine. She has worked in the U.S. with a visa for the past five years but now needs a green card. She has filed a Petition for PRA 6 to classify as PRA 6 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. Her case number is PRA 6. On March 13, 2003 I received a letter addressed to me from Mr. Novak but contained a negative decision regarding the petition of the Iqra'Academy not the Morley Publishing Group, Inc. which publishes Crisis Magaziine. The petition of Iqra' Academy was for a muslim male. Anna Tan's attorney is Lilian Jiang, 805-493-1144,(ljlaw@adelphia.net).

We have only a few week or so to settle this matter or we will lose a very valued employee. I come to you because the INS wants us to refile our appeal in response to their mistake. This will take months and our employee has gone without pay now for three months. Thanks for all you can do, Deal

Jay: This letter will be sent to Karl next week signed by a handful of conservative activists. I hope you can help ensure that the racial preferences in the old legislation aren't carried forward. Thanks, as always.

Best, ;Edward Blum

Dear Karl:

As you may know, within a few weeks Congress will be considering the reauthorization of the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA 21). We are writing to express our hope that the racial preferences that were in the original bill are not carried forward to the new legislation.

These types of preferences were specifically at issue before the U.S. Supreme Court in Adarand Constructors v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995). In this case, the United States Supreme Court held that racial classifications, even if authorized by Congress, "must serve a compelling governmental interest8 and &be narrowly tailored to further that interest.8 ;This is the highest standard in the Court's equal protection jurisprudence. The current legislation does not meet either of these two standards.

We are not alone in this view. On March 5, 1998 the Republican Policy Committee of the United States Senate issued the following statement regarding the racial preference provisions of the original bill: &It is difficult to see how the Department of Transportation, which opposes the Adarand results, can take the current language and construe it to meet the constitutional requirement that it be +narrowly tailored, to +serve a compelling governmental interest., The current language sweeps broadly, making generalizations based on race.8

In addition, Senator Mitch McConnell offered an amendment to the 1998 bill that proposed to replace the race-, ethnicity-, and gender-based provisions with an Emerging Business Enterprise Program that would have provided expanded opportunities to all emerging small businesses without resorting to set-asides or preferences. Indeed, the McConnell amendment forbid discrimination and preferential treatment on the basis of race, color, national origin, or sex. And although the amendment failed, thirty-eight GOP senators voted for it.

The legislative remarks from Sen. McConnell and other Republican senators clearly indicate that they believed the preferences in the original bill were unconstitutional. If the reauthorized bill comes to floor with the same discriminatory provisions, it will be difficult for these members to support it without making the same principled fight.

In its recent friend-of-the-court briefs in Grutter v. Bolinger and Gratz v. Bolinger, the Bush administration set out an important standard the U.S. Supreme Court should use regarding racial and ethnic preferences in university admissions. In those briefs, the administration argues that race-neutral policies should be pursued before a school resorts to racial preferences in order to create a diverse student body. It is our belief that that standard should be applied to the TEA-21 legislation also. By substituting race-neutral contracting policies for the racial set-asides currently in place, the administration will remain consistent with the precepts offered in its Michigan briefs.

We respectfully urge the administration to offer the TEA-21 legislation without the discriminatory provisions that surely put the bill in violation of the U.S. Constitution and offer in their place provisions that provide affirmative access to contractors and subcontractors without regard to race, ethnicity or sex.

Sincerely yours,

The Judiciary Committee has prevented full Senate action on people such as Priscilla Owen, who has served brilliantly on the Texas Supreme Court since 1995, and was overwhelmingly reelected by the people of Texas in the year 2000. Mr. Roberts, Mr. Estrada and Justice Owen have the highest ratings from the American Bar Association, which some Democrat Senators have called, "the gold standard." They have broad support among lawyers in both political parties. Both Mr. Roberts and Mr. Estrada have the support of former President Clinton's Solicitor General. Justice Owen is supported by three former Democrat justices of the Texas Supreme Court.

In all, I have sent to the Senate 32 nominees for the Court of Appeals. They are well qualified men and women with experience, intelligence, character and bipartisan home state support. They represent the mainstream of American law and American values. Yet the Senate has confirmed only 14 of these 32 nominees, which is far below the pace of past Senates at the start of an administration. It's a lousy record. Not one of my nine pending nominees to fill vacancies on the Sixth and D.C. Circuit Courts has received a Senate vote, not one. As of November, 15 of my Appeals Court nominees will have been forced to wait over a year for a hearing. That's more in this Presidency than under the previous nine Presidents combined.

There's no good reason why any nominee should endure a year, a year-and-a-half, or more, without the courtesy of an up or down floor vote; there is not one good reason why. Whatever the explanation, we clearly have a poisoned and polarized atmosphere in which well qualified nominees are neither voted up or down; they are just left in limbo. This is unfair to the nominees and their families. This process discourages good people from serving as judges. It's also unfair to the courts themselves, which are forced to handle a growing caseload without the judges they need.

Nine percent of all federal judgeships in America are now vacant, nine percent. Of the 12 regional Courts of Appeals, the courts right below the Supreme Court, there is a 17 percent vacancy rate. The Court of Appeals for the D.C. Court, which rules on many significant Constitutional and regulatory issues, now operates with one-third of its judgeships empty. And the Sixth Court of Appeals which covers Kentucky and Ohio, Michigan and Tennessee, is nearly half empty, with nine active judges doing the work of 16.

Meanwhile, the number of federal appeal court filings reached an all-time high this year. Benches are empty, the number of court filings has increased to an all-time high. We can expect them to increase even further as a result of the war on terror, corporate fraud prosecutions, and issues arising out of the September the 11th attacks.

The judicial vacancies go unfulfilled, we will see more crowded dockets and longer delays. The federal courts will be unable to act in a timely manner to protect constitutional rights, to resolve civil disputes, and enforce the criminal laws, the environmental laws, and the civil rights laws that affects the lives and liberties of every single American. Chief Justice Rehnquist has called this situation alarming. The American Bar Association's report has described the current status of the federal judiciary as an emergency situation.

The judicial crisis is the result of a broken system, and we have a duty to repair it. I want to work with the Senate to fashion a new approach to filling federal court vacancies. We should leave behind the arguments and grievances of the past. We need to fix this problem together. That's why we've come to Washington, to fix problems. And each branch of government can contribute and must contribute to a better system.

So today, I'm offering four specific proposals to break the logjam in Washington and bring the federal courts of appeals and district courts to full strength.

First, I call on federal judges on the courts of appeals and district courts to notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, whenever this is possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a federal judge is a lengthy process under the best of circumstances, judges who retire without advance notice can unintentionally create a judicial vacancy that can last for many months. The request for one year advance notice builds on existing policy of the judiciary and will help us work toward a system in which a new federal judge is ready to take the bench on a day the sitting judge retires -- that's the goal.

Second, I propose that Presidents submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. In other words, we have a responsibility as well to make sure the judiciary is sound and whole. This will speed up the sometimes time-consuming process of obtaining recommendations and evaluations from home-state senators and representatives and governors and bar leaders, while leaving ample time for Presidents to vet and choose nominees of the highest quality.

Third, I call on the Senate Judiciary -- Senate Judiciary Committee to commit to holding a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. A strict deadline is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. And 90 days is more than enough time for the committee to conduct necessary research before holding a hearing -- that's plenty of time.

Finally, I call on the full Senate to commit to an up or down floor vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. This is a very generous period of time that will allow all the Senators to evaluate nominees and have their votes counted.

Our proposals would not favor Democrats or Republicans. The plan would be fair and would apply to -- regardless of who the President is. It doesn't matter who the President is. What matters is a system which works.

For the first time in years, the judicial confirmation process would work as it was intended to work. All Senators would have a chance to make their voices heard, and their views known, and that's important. All nominees would have the certainty of an up or down Senate floor vote within a reasonable period of time, and that is important. All Presidents would know that their judicial nominations would be addressed promptly. All Americans would see a more dignified process, and have their federal courts fully staffed to protect their rights and their liberties. And the vacancy crisis would be resolved once and for all.

I urge every member of the Senate, in particular those serving on the Judiciary Committee, to carefully consider this new beginning for the judicial nomination process, to weigh their responsibilities, to look at the vacancy problem we have, to act in a responsible fashion.

The failure of the judicial confirmation process is harming the administration of justice in America. That is a fact. The current state of affairs is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet our responsibilities under the Constitution. The Constitution has given us a shared duty and we must meet that duty together.

Thank you all for coming.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

October 30, 2002

The Honorable Thomas A. Daschle
Majority Leader
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Leader:

I write to propose a specific plan to address the problem of judicial vacancies and improve the judicial confirmation process. The plan would apply both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. The cooperation of all three Branches of the Federal Government is necessary for the plan to work.

There is a vacancy crisis in the Federal Judiciary. As of this week, there are 79 vacancies out of 849 authorized judgeships, which amounts to a 9 percent vacancy rate. The 12 regional Federal appeals courts face a particularly serious crisis, with 28 vacancies out of 167 judgeships, amounting to a 17 percent vacancy rate. The number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high throughout my Presidency. The Chief Justice's 2001 Year-End Report on the Federal Judiciary called the situation "alarming," and the Secretary of the Judicial Conference of the United States stated in May 2002 that the "overall shortage" of Federal judges is "staggering." Moreover, the caseloads in the Federal courts continue to grow dramatically; for example, filings in the Federal appeals courts reached an all-time high last year.

The high judicial vacancy numbers, when combined with the increasing caseloads, create crowded dockets and slow down the justice system. When judicial vacancies go unfilled, Federal courts cannot act in a timely manner to protect constitutional rights, resolve civil disputes, and enforce the criminal, environmental, and civil rights laws that affect the lives and liberties of all Americans.

Too many judicial nominees -- and particularly appeals court nominees -- have had to wait too long for their Senate hearings and up-or-down Senate floor votes. Speaking on behalf of the Judiciary in his 2001 Year-End Report, the Chief Justice "ask[ed] the Senate to schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination." Many outside entities with an interest in the Judiciary have made similar pleas. For example, the American Bar Association in August 2002 adopted a resolution that the Senate should promptly advise and consent to or reject the nominees. The accompanying ABA report stated: "Vote them up or down, but don't hang them out to dry." These concerns are not new.

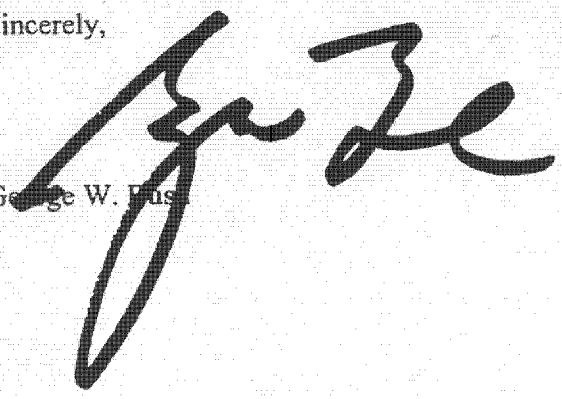
Today, I am advancing a new plan for the process of nominating and confirming Federal judges. We should have an even-handed, predictable procedure from the day a vacancy is announced to the day a new judge is sworn. This procedure should apply now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

First, Federal court of appeals and district court judges should notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, if possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a Federal judge is a lengthy process even under the best of circumstances, judges who retire without advance notice can unintentionally create a judicial vacancy that can last for many months. This proposal builds on existing policy of the Judiciary and will help us work toward a system in which a new Federal judge is ready to take the bench on the day a sitting judge retires.

Second, Presidents should submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a Federal court vacancy or intended retirement. This proposal will speed up the sometimes time-consuming process of obtaining recommendations and evaluations from home-State Senators, Representatives, Governors, and bar leaders -- while leaving ample time for Presidents to vet and choose nominees of the highest quality.

Third, the Senate Judiciary Committee should hold a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. A strict deadline is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly and fairly considered. And 90 days is more than enough time for the Committee to conduct necessary research before holding a hearing.

Finally, the full Senate should hold an up-or-down floor vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. That is a very generous period of time that will allow all Senators to evaluate nominees and have their votes counted.



If adopted and followed by all three Branches, this plan will help restore fairness and dignity to the judicial confirmation process. All Senators will have a chance to make their voices heard and their views known. All nominees will have the certainty of an up-or-down Senate floor vote within a reasonable amount of time. All Presidents will have their judicial nominees considered promptly. All Americans will see a more dignified process, and have their Federal courts fully staffed to protect their rights and liberties. And the judicial vacancy crisis will be resolved.

This plan requires everyone involved in the nomination and confirmation of Federal judges to commit to improving the system. I respectfully call on the Senate and the Judiciary, acting through the Chief Justice and the Judicial Conference of the United States, to join me in adopting and following this plan both now and in the future.

President Offers Solutions to Fix Judicial Crisis

Radio Address by the President to the Nation

THE PRESIDENT: Good morning. The federal courts play a central role in American justice -- protecting the innocent, punishing the guilty and upholding the rule of law. Yet, our federal courts today are in crisis. The judicial confirmation process does not work as it should. Nominees are too often mistreated. Votes are delayed, hearings are denied and dozens of federal judgeships sit empty, endangering the quality of justice in America.

Since coming into office, I have sent to the Senate 32 nominees for the federal courts of appeals. These nominees are men and women with experience, intelligence, character and bipartisan home-state support. They represent the mainstream of American law and American values. Yet the Senate has confirmed only 14 of these 32 nominees. As of this week, 15 of my appeals court nominees will have been forced to wait over a year for a hearing, which is more than under the previous nine Presidents combined.

There is no good reason why any nominee should endure a year, a year and a half, or more, without the courtesy of an up-or-down floor vote. Whatever the explanation, we clearly have a poisoned atmosphere in which well-qualified nominees are neither voted up nor voted down -- they're just left in limbo. If this situation persists and judicial vacancies go unfulfilled, the federal courts will be unable to act in a timely manner to enforce the criminal laws, the environmental laws and the civil right laws that affect the lives of every American.

The judicial crisis is the result of a broken system, and we have a duty to repair it. I want to work with the Senate to fashion a new approach to filling federal court vacancies -- a bipartisan approach that would apply now and in the future. This week, I have offered four proposals to break the logjam in Washington and bring the federal courts to full strength.

First, I call on federal judges to notify the President of their intention to retire at least a year in advance, whenever possible. Because the nomination and confirmation of a federal judge is a lengthy process, judges who retire without advance notice can unintentionally create a judicial vacancy for many months.

Second, I propose that Presidents submit a nomination to the Senate within 180 days of receiving notice of a federal court vacancy or intended retirement. This will continue, but speed up, the process of obtaining recommendations and evaluations from home state senators and others, while leaving ample time for Presidents to choose nominees of the highest quality.

Third, I called on the Senate Judiciary Committee to commit to holding a hearing within 90 days of receiving a nomination. A firm deadline is the best way to ensure that judicial nominees are promptly considered. And 90 days is more than enough time for the committee to conduct necessary research before holding a hearing, as Democrat senators have recognized in the past.

Finally, I called on the full Senate to commit to an up-or-down floor vote on each nominee no later than 180 days after the nomination is submitted. This is a very generous period of time that will allow all senators to evaluate nominees and have their votes counted.

My proposals are fair to all parties and would apply regardless of who is President or which party controls the Senate.

The current state of affairs is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet a responsibility under the Constitution, and it is harming the administration of justice in America. Our country deserves better, the process can work better and we can make it better. The Constitution has given us a shared duty, and we must meet that duty together.

Thank you for listening.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

March 11, 2003

Dear Senator Frist:

The Senate is debating the nomination of Miguel A. Estrada to be a Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Miguel Estrada's life is an example of the American Dream. He came to this country from Honduras as a teenager barely speaking English and went on to graduate with honors from Harvard Law School. He has argued 15 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States and served in the United States Department of Justice under Presidents of both political parties. The American Bar Association has given him its highest rating. When appointed, he will be the first Hispanic ever to serve on the D.C. Circuit.

I submitted Mr. Estrada's nomination to the Senate on May 9, 2001. But his nomination has been stalled for partisan reasons for nearly 2 years in which the Senate has not held a vote either to confirm or to reject the nomination.

The Senate has a solemn responsibility to exercise its constitutional advice and consent function and hold up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after nomination. Senators who are filibustering a vote on Miguel Estrada are flouting the intention of the United States Constitution and the tradition of the United States Senate. The filibuster is the culmination of an escalating series of back-and-forth tactics that have marred the judicial confirmation process for years, as many judicial nominees have never received up or down Senate votes. And now, a minority of Senators are threatening for the first time to use ideological filibusters as a standard tool to indefinitely block confirmation of well-qualified nominees with strong bipartisan support. This has to end.

The judicial confirmation process is broken, and the consequences for the American people are real. Because of the Senate's failure to hold timely votes, the number of judicial vacancies has been unacceptably high during my Presidency and those of President Bill Clinton and President George H.W. Bush. The Chief Justice has warned that the high number of judicial vacancies, when combined with the ever-increasing caseloads, leads to crowded courts and threatens the administration of justice. When understaffed, the Federal courts cannot act in a timely manner to resolve disputes that affect the lives and liberties of all Americans. The courts cannot decide constitutional cases promptly, which harms people seeking to vindicate and protect their rights, and the courts cannot rule on commercial cases efficiently, which hurts the economy, businesses, and workers. Our system of equal justice under law administered fairly and efficiently is at risk. The American Bar Association in 2002 accurately described the situation as an "emergency."

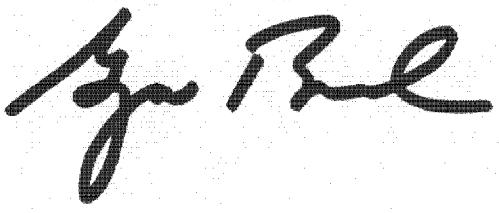
My concern about the state of the judicial confirmation process is not new. In June 2000, I proposed timely votes for all nominees, stating that the confirmation process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation." In May 2001, when I announced my first judicial nominations, I urged the Senate to rise above the bitterness of the past and again asked that every judicial nominee receive a timely up or down vote. In October 2002, after nearly two additional years in which too many nominees did not receive votes, I proposed a specific, commonsense plan involving all three Branches that, among other steps, would ensure that all judicial nominees receive an up or down Senate vote within 180 days of nomination.

Over the years, many Senators of both political parties have publicly agreed with the principle that every judicial nominee should receive a timely up or down Senate vote. Similarly, the Federal Judiciary, speaking through the Chief Justice in his 2001 Year-End Report, has stated that the Senate should "schedule up or down votes on judicial nominees within a reasonable time after receiving the nomination."

I ask Senators of both parties to come together to end the escalating cycle of blame and bitterness and to restore fairness, predictability, and dignity to the process. I ask that the Senate take action, including adoption of a permanent rule, to ensure timely up or down votes on judicial nominations both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. This is the only way to ensure that our Judiciary works and that good people remain willing to be nominated to the Federal bench.



All Senators should have a chance to have their voices heard and their votes counted. All Presidents should have their judicial nominees considered and voted upon in a reasonable time. All nominees should have the certainty of an up or down Senate vote within a reasonable time. All Judges should have the assurance that vacancies on their courts will not persist for years. And all Americans should have the assurance that the Federal courts will remain open and fully staffed to resolve their disputes and protect their rights and liberties.

As I stated last October, the current state of affairs in the United States Senate is not merely another round of political wrangling. It is a disturbing failure to meet a responsibility under the Constitution. Our country deserves better, the process can work better, and we can make it better. The Constitution has given us a shared duty, and we must meet that duty together. Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Bill Frist

Governor George W. Bush (R-TX) Delivers Remarks On Government Reform

Knoxville, Tennessee

Thank you very much. It is good to be in Knoxville.

It has been almost a year since my campaign began. Since that first trip to Iowa, I have laid out my agenda for America both at home and abroad.

My goals for America are clear. To make sure that every child is educated, by returning high standards and accountability to public schools.
To bring more economic growth and opportunity, by reducing the income tax burden on all Americans -- especially those aspiring to the middle class.

To keep our commitment to elderly Americans, and generations to come, by saving and strengthening social security.

To keep the peace, by building a national missile defense, modernizing our military, and establishing clear principles for the use of our power in the world.

These are things that must be done, the nation's pressing business.

Today I want to talk about the way we conduct the nation's business. Many Americans believe that Washington's way of doing things just isn't working. That government's purposes are too often forgotten, and opportunities too often squandered -- resulting in too few results.

In so many ways, America in the year 2000 is the picture of success. Our economy is more competitive than ever -- more efficient. Our technologies are marvels of creativity. Throughout the private sector, we're seeing what people can accomplish with strong leadership, clear goals, fair dealing, and cooperation.

This could hardly be said of the federal government. There is too much argument in Washington and not enough discussion. Too much polling and not enough decision making. Too much needless division, not enough shared accomplishment. Not enough final acts and resolutions, and lasting achievements.

There is blame enough to go around. I do not dismiss the serious disagreements that are part of politics, but the reality is that Americans look upon this spectacle and don't like what they see. They know that this is not the way the world's great power should conduct its affairs. I agree with them. It's time for change.

Consider, by contrast, many of our state and local governments, where the best ideas and boldest reforms of the last decade have taken place. All across America, governors, state legislators, and city officials have laid partisan differences aside and done what they were elected to do -- serve the people.

In New York City, Mayor Rudy Giuliani brought order and civility back to the streets -- cutting crime rates by 50 percent.

In Cleveland, Mayor Michael White's bipartisan leadership has led to a revitalized downtown area and a higher quality of life similar to Mayor Ash, here in Knoxville.

In Wisconsin, Governor Tommy Thompson led bipartisan reform and proved that welfare dependence could be reversed -- reducing the rolls in his state by 91 percent similar to Governor Sundquist, here in Tennessee.

In Texas, we never lack for partisan battles. Texas is a two- party state where tough politics comes naturally. But when it counts, we work to put the public interest first. In my first term as governor, I worked with a Democratic legislature to reform education, the legal system, juvenile justice, and welfare. These were joint accomplishments of a Republican governor and a Democratic legislature.

Politics has not been my career. And what I've learned in the private sector has proven true in government: a little good will goes a long way. Good will is earned by respecting your opponents, telling the truth, and leaving yesterday's quarrels behind.

And if good will is to prevail, a leader must set the right tone. A leader guided his convictions, not by the counsel of his pollster. A strong leader sets his mind to solving problems, not settling scores. Every successful mayor and governor understands this. And so should the next president.

With just seven months until the end of his term, we will leave our current president to the judgment of history. What matters now is whether the bitterness that now prevails in Washington will continue after his term.

There is a clear choice in this campaign, and the people are seeing it in the kind of tone we set, and how we talk about the big issues facing America. Take social security, for example. Recently I laid out a plan, a framework, to guide bipartisan reform in social security, to increase its value and keep our commitments to the elderly. There will be reasonable disagreements on this important issue. Surely, all can agree that this is a serious matter requiring the best efforts of both parties.

And yet all we have heard from my opponent are the familiar exaggerations and scare tactics. Ideas he doesn't share are never just the other side of an issue: They are "radical" or "reckless" ideas. Proposals he disapproves of are never just arguable; they are always "risky schemes."

This kind of unnecessary rhetoric is characteristic of the tone in Washington. It's the war-room mentality -- the hostile stance, the harsh charges, the lashing out at enemies. We have had eight years of this, and eight years is enough.

We need a clean break from the recent past. It is time for leadership that sets a new tone -- a tone of respect and bipartisanship.

A president can do this. He can refrain from personal attacks, and treat members of both parties with respect. He can reach across the partisan aisle and work with all for the good of the country.

In this same spirit, there are some practical steps we can take to change Washington. I am proposing today a set of six specific reforms relating to the budget process, pork-barrel spending, and nominations.

First, the budget process. I will propose that the federal budget be passed by both houses of Congress and signed by the president into law.

As it is now, the president and Congress work separately on their own budget proposals. Only very late in the year do these two branches begin working together on the details. Often their separate budgets are just a prelude to battle. A joint budget resolution signed by the legislative branch and the executive branch would start the process on the right footing, encouraging cooperation, and early agreement on fundamentals.

I also support a law putting the entire budget and appropriations process on a biennial basis, as is done in my state and 20 others.

If the discord in Washington never seems to end, this is partly because the budget process never seems to end. Lawmakers spend more than half of their time each year wrangling over budget resolutions, reconciliation bills, and appropriations bills. And often, as many legislators will tell you, they've hardly had time to examine the bills before the vote is taken.

By putting the process on a two-year schedule, we allow more time for thoughtful debate on the whole range of issues facing the Congress -- better oversight of the bureaucracy, confirmations, and other long term concerns.

I will also propose a bill ending the annual threat of shutting down the government.

These threats have given both parties some moments we all prefer to forget. Disagreements have become deadlocks, the entire budget process resulting in no budget at all. Americans have had to watch federal agencies close for business and national parks and monuments turn away visitors.

These standoffs have undermined public confidence in government. To ensure that the government does not shut down again, here is what I propose.

If an appropriations bill is not signed by October first of the new fiscal year, affected programs would continue to be funded at the level of the president's budget, or the previous year's level as approved by Congress -- whichever is lower.

Behind this reform is the simple principle that, above and beyond the quarrels of the moment, the United States government has certain basic commitments, and those commitments must be kept.

Next, I will address a longstanding source of public irritation and outrage -- the wasteful habit of pork-barrel spending.

It's often said that one politician's "pork" is another's vital project, one district's "corporate welfare" another district's vital federal investment. But we need a more objective definition of "vital."

This confusion is the source of too much waste, and too much haggling, bargaining, and resentment in Washington. We have all heard examples of wasteful spending, such as the $250,000 to research caffeinated chewing gum. Or the 750,000 dollars for grasshopper research. New examples come along every year. The process never seems to change.

I support the establishment of a bipartisan commission to eliminate pork throughout the federal government.

There is bipartisan support for such a commission, including the backing of Senators McCain, Thompson, Abraham, and Lieberman. But such an idea needs a presidential push, which I will give it. This panel will submit to Congress a list of all spending projects deemed frivolous and unnecessary. The Congress will then cast a simple "up" or "down" vote. No amendments, no back-scratching, no logrolling.

Further, to bring fiscal discipline to the budget, I will ask Congress to pass line-item veto legislation.

The Supreme Court has made clear how such legislation can pass constitutional muster. Congress cannot give the president a permanent line-item veto. But it can give the president authority to decline to spend wasteful appropriations. As president, I will seek that constitutional authority. And I will use it to prevent spending that fails to serve the public interest. And I will use the unspent money to pay down the national debt.

These reforms can take some of the friction out of our national politics -- and justify greater public confidence in Washington. But they are reforms of procedure only. In the end, only the spirit of the lawmakers themselves can bring real change to Washington. Above all else, we must call a truce to politics as combat -- where differences of principle give rise to unprincipled attacks on character.

A good place to start is the nomination and confirmation process.

The Constitution empowers the president to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation.

Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became -- lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. Often they are occasions for pushing larger agendas, having nothing to do with the merits of the nominee. At some memorable low points, hearings have become a gauntlet of accusation, interest-group warfare, and public humiliation. This has done enough harm to the process.

The president and the Senate have a joint responsibility here. The president must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them.

Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees a top priority. And I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November.

Public service is an honorable calling, and there are many now serving in Washington who view it just that way. But their voices are easily drowned out in the din of battle. Instead, the agenda is determined -- the tone set -- by the loud, the aggressive, the contentious.

This should not be the spirit of Washington. This is no way to encourage good people to serve, and no way to build a legacy of accomplishment.

None of us can control how others will conduct themselves. But each of us can control our own actions and our own words. As president, I will set a new tone in Washington. I will do everything I can to restore civility to our national politics -- a respect for honest differences, and a decent regard for one another.

Thank you very much.

Remarks by the President During Federal Judicial Appointees Announcement

The East Room

2:43 P.M. EDT

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all very much. Attorney General, it's good to see you, sir, and happy birthday. Today is his birthday. Also, Judge Al Gonzales. Judge Gonzales is a great friend of mine who, fortunately, is my lawyer and is a part of the process, judicial selection process. Thank you for being here, Judge.

I'm also honored to welcome members of the United States Senate who are here to welcome the nominees to Washington: of course, Senator Orrin Hatch, Chairman of the Judiciary; as well as Senator Patrick Leahy, ranking member on the Judiciary. It's good to see you men, thank you both for coming.

John Warner, George Allen, George Voinovich and last, but not least, Senator Strom Thurmond. Welcome. (Applause.) Thank you all for coming.

I'm pleased to welcome my judicial nominees to the White House. And I'm pleased to welcome their family and friends, as well.

This is a proud moment for all of you, and it's a proud moment for me, as well. A President has fewer greater responsibilities than that of nominating men and women to the courts of the United States. A federal judge holds a position of great influence and respect, and can hold it for a lifetime.

When a President chooses a judge, he is placing in human hands the authority and majesty of the law. He owes it to the Constitution and to the country to choose with care. I have done so.

With me this afternoon are my first 11 judicial nominees, individuals of experience and character. Four of them serve as United States district judges, all four confirmed by unanimous votes. Two others are sitting judges on state supreme courts. Four have served as law clerks in the Supreme Court of the United States. One has served here as an associate counsel to the President. One already holds the position for which I nominate him, by recess appointment of President Clinton.

These men and women have followed different paths to this nomination. They come from diverse backgrounds, and will bring a wide range of experience to the bench. All have sterling credentials and have met high standards of legal training, temperament and judgment.

As a group, they command broad, bipartisan support among those who know them and who have served with them. I submit their names to the Senate with full confidence that they will satisfy any test of judicial merit.

These first nominations are also an opportunity to outline the standards by which I will choose all federal judges. The American people expect judges of the highest caliber, and my nominees will meet that test. A judge, by the most basic measure, has an obligation shared by the President and members of Congress. All of us are constitutional officers, sworn to serve within the limits of our Constitution and laws. When we observe those limits, we exercise our rightful power. When we exceed those limits, we abuse our powers.

Every judge I appoint will be a person who clearly understands the role of a judge is to interpret the law, not to legislate from the bench. To paraphrase the third occupant of this house, James Madison, the courts exist to exercise not the will of men, but the judgment of law. My judicial nominees will know the difference. Understanding this will make them more effective in the defense of rights guaranteed under the Constitution, the enforcement of our laws, and more effective in assuming that justice is done to the guilty and for the innocent.

My standard is informed by the oath that each judge will take: to administer justice without respect to persons, and to do equal right to poor and to the rich. A good judge exercises these powers with discernment, courage and humility. These are commitments, not just to philosophy, but of character.

My nominees today and in the years to come will be notable for their distinction and accomplishments. And all will be exceptional for their humanity and their integrity. With today's 11 nominees, we continue a constitutional process that involves all three branches of government.

For many weeks now, we have sought and received advice from senators of both parties. I now submit these nominations in good faith, trusting that good faith will also be extended by the United States Senate. Over the years, we have seen how the confirmation process can be turned to other ends. We have seen political battles played out in committee hearings -- battles that have little to do with the merits of the person sitting before the committee.

This is not good for the Senate, for our courts or for the country.

There are, today, over a hundred vacancies on the federal courts, causing backlogs, frustration and delay of justice. I urge senators of both parties to rise above the bitterness of the past, to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to every nominee. That should be the case for no matter who lives in this house, and no matter who controls the senate.

I ask for the return of civility and dignity to the confirmation process. And with this distinguished group of nominees awaiting confirmation, there is no better opportunity than right now. I congratulate all of you on your service past, and for your service to come.

God bless. (Applause.)

Remarks by the President on Judicial Confirmations

The East Room

1:40 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you all very much. Thank you, Al. He's -- everybody must have a good lawyer, and I got one in Al Gonzales.

I want to welcome you all here to the White House. Thank you for coming.

The federal courts play a central role in American justice, protecting the innocent, punishing the guilty, resolving disputes and upholding the rule of law. Yet, today, our federal courts are in crisis. The judicial confirmation process does not work as it should. Nominees are too often mistreated, votes are delayed, hearings are denied, and dozens of federal judgeships sit empty, and this endangers the quality of justice in America.

Everyone knows these facts. Everyone knows the system isn't working. These concerns are not new. And we will not find a solution in an endless cycle of blame and bitterness.

Today, I'm proposing a clean start for the process of nominating and confirming federal judges. We must have an even-handed, predictable procedure from the day a vacancy is announced to the day a new judge is sworn in. This procedure should apply now and in the future, no matter who lives in this house or who controls the Senate. We must return fairness and dignity to the judicial confirmation process. I want to thank the Judge Al Gonzales for working on this initiative and I want to thank his team for working hard. I appreciate John Ashcroft's service to our country; he is a great Attorney General. (Applause.) And I'm not saying that just because his wife and her twin sister are here. (Laughter.)

I'm so pleased that Ted Olson, the Solicitor General, is with us. I thank Fred Fielding, the former counsel to President Ronald Reagan. Boyd Gray is with us, former counsel to Number 41. Dennis Archer is with us today, President-elect of the American Bar Association and, of course, the former mayor of Detroit. Mr. Mayor, thank you for coming. Thomas Hayward, Chair of the Committee of Federal Judicial Improvements for the American Bar Association. And all of you, thank you for your interest in this subject.

Nearly 18 months ago, at an event right here in the East Room, I introduced my first 11 nominees to the Court of Appeals. I urged Senators of both parties to provide a fair hearing and a prompt vote to each nominee. Thus far, only three of these 11 nominations have been brought to a vote in the United States Senate.

The eight who are stalled in the Judiciary Committee include people such as John Roberts. John Roberts has argued 38 cases before the Supreme Court. He has served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States. He's widely regarded as one of the best Supreme Court lawyers in America.

And they include Miguel Estrada, who has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and has served in the Justice Department under Presidents of both political parties as a federal prosecutor and as the Assistant to the Solicitor General.

Why is Bayh treating a Hispanic nominee so harshly?

U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh, D-Ind., is lying when he says Miguel Estrada, President Bush's embattled nominee to the U.S Court of Appeals in Washington, has refused to answer questions before being voted upon. The Senate Democrats are demanding Estrada turn over private working papers from his days at the Justice Department, an ultimatum that has never been made for an Anglo nominee.

A majority of senators would confirm Estrada, but the Democrats, in a dangerous precedent, are changing the rules for an Hispanic nominee. It's time for Bayh to answer some questions himself.

What is the appropriate constitutional role for the Senate in judicial nominations? Is he willing to subvert the Constitution and require a supermajority for the confirmation of conservative Hispanic judges?

What extreme views does Estrada hold? What question has he not answered? What does Bayh need to know to vote? Why did Bayh not need to know these things for, say, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who held the same post as Estrada? And why, when the White House invited all senators to submit additional questions with a guarantee that Estrada would answer them, did Bayh refuse to submit a single question?

Finally, why are Bayh and his fellow Democrats treating a Hispanic nominee much more harshly than they would treat an Anglo person?

Jay: This letter will be sent to Karl next week signed by a handful of conservative activists. I hope you can help ensure that the racial preferences in the old legislation aren't carried forward. Thanks, as always.

Best, ;Edward Blum

Dear Karl:

As you may know, within a few weeks Congress will be considering the reauthorization of the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA 21). We are writing to express our hope that the racial preferences that were in the original bill are not carried forward to the new legislation.

These types of preferences were specifically at issue before the U.S. Supreme Court in Adarand Constructors v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995). In this case, the United States Supreme Court held that racial classifications, even if authorized by Congress, "must serve a compelling governmental interest8 and &be narrowly tailored to further that interest.8 ;This is the highest standard in the Court's equal protection jurisprudence. The current legislation does not meet either of these two standards.

We are not alone in this view. On March 5, 1998 the Republican Policy Committee of the United States Senate issued the following statement regarding the racial preference provisions of the original bill: &It is difficult to see how the Department of Transportation, which opposes the Adarand results, can take the current language and construe it to meet the constitutional requirement that it be +narrowly tailored, to +serve a compelling governmental interest., The current language sweeps broadly, making generalizations based on race.8

In addition, Senator Mitch McConnell offered an amendment to the 1998 bill that proposed to replace the race-, ethnicity-, and gender-based provisions with an Emerging Business Enterprise Program that would have provided expanded opportunities to all emerging small businesses without resorting to set-asides or preferences. Indeed, the McConnell amendment forbid discrimination and preferential treatment on the basis of race, color, national origin, or sex. And although the amendment failed, thirty-eight GOP senators voted for it.

The legislative remarks from Sen. McConnell and other Republican senators clearly indicate that they believed the preferences in the original bill were unconstitutional. If the reauthorized bill comes to floor with the same discriminatory provisions, it will be difficult for these members to support it without making the same principled fight.

In its recent friend-of-the-court briefs in Grutter v. Bolinger and Gratz v. Bolinger, the Bush administration set out an important standard the U.S. Supreme Court should use regarding racial and ethnic preferences in university admissions. In those briefs, the administration argues that race-neutral policies should be pursued before a school resorts to racial preferences in order to create a diverse student body. It is our belief that that standard should be applied to the TEA-21 legislation also. By substituting race-neutral contracting policies for the racial set-asides currently in place, the administration will remain consistent with the precepts offered in its Michigan briefs.

We respectfully urge the administration to offer the TEA-21 legislation without the discriminatory provisions that surely put the bill in violation of the U.S. Constitution and offer in their place provisions that provide affirmative access to contractors and subcontractors without regard to race, ethnicity or sex.

Sincerely yours,

Anytime a political office/group writes to the President, the question is raised whether it is appropriate to use of that political office's title in the address (both the inside address and outside address) on the President's response. From our conversation, I understood that it was okay to use the political office's title in the address if the correspondence was not political. Is this accurate? Thanks for your help!! Have a good weekend!

I put in some edits below. Also, I did not understand the following: "When the mail is not political, it is OKAY to have the political office cited in the mailing address."

While there are no hard and fast rules, here are some guidelines for political correspondence per Brett Kavanaugh -

- Mail addressed to a political group is NOT NECESSARILY political mail. If you would write the same response to a non-political group on a subject that is not related to political activity, then the correspondence is not political.

- Here are some examples of where the line is drawn for mail to a political group :

"Thank you for your support" - OKAY to send; we thank all supportive people for their support
"Thank you for your work on the campaign" - NOT OKAY
"Thank you on behalf of the Republican party" - NOT OKAY

Brett - Thanks for you advice. Here is are some of the points from our conversation. Please let me know if this is accurate so I can forward it to the other writers as a baseline for all correspondence to political groups.

STATEMENT OF MARION C. BLAKEY
ADMINISTRATOR, FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION
BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE, SUBCOMMITTEE ON AVIATION ON REAUTHORIZATION OF FAA PROGRAMS
MARCH 27, 2003

Chairman Mica, Congressman DeFazio, Members of the Subcommittee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today to discuss the Administration's proposal to reauthorize our aviation programs. Before I begin my substantive statement, I would like to acknowledge the new Ranking Democrat of the Subcommittee, Congressman Peter DeFazio. Although new to the position of Ranking Democrat, Congressman DeFazio has been an active Member of this Subcommittee for many years and has been an aggressive advocate of aviation safety. I would also like to say that, although this is my first appearance before the Subcommittee in my capacity as Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), I have worked with you when I was Chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB). I look forward to building on the relationships that we established when I was Chairman and to working closely with you as Administrator on reauthorization and other important safety, efficiency and capacity issues.

On _____, Secretary Mineta transmitted to Congress the Administration's reauthorization proposal. I can't help but feel the presence of the Secretary as I speak today, but I assume that has something to do with his portrait hanging just over my shoulder. I would very much like to thank both Secretary Mineta and Deputy Secretary Michael Jackson for their tireless efforts in the development and clearance of this proposal and for their overall commitment to safety. I am especially grateful for their dedication and input, and that of Undersecretary Jeff Shane and his Policy office since, when my tenure as Administrator began, the consideration of a legislative proposal was already under way. I think you will find that the Administration's proposal will serve as an excellent basis for the development of reauthorization legislation. It goes without saying that I stand ready to work with you and industry stakeholders as Congress develops its own proposal.

When AIR-21 was passed almost three years ago, it contained some truly innovative provisions that improved safety, airport development and system efficiency. It was landmark legislation that has provided a firm foundation upon which to build. The Administration's reauthorization proposal does just that; it takes its direction from AIR-21 and proposes a four year authorization that would continue investment in air traffic control modernization and safety equipment, airport capacity improvements, and aviation operations that will reap significant safety and efficiency benefits for the traveling public.

Let me take a moment to describe for you the substance of our proposal.

Funding Levels

Continued investment in the aviation system is critical. Although the devastating events of September 11th continue to impact the number of people flying in this country, recovery of the system is inevitable. The temporary downturn in air travel affords us with a great opportunity to continue to focus on increasing airport capacity without unacceptable disruption to the system. Under AIR-21, the annual authorized levels for the Airport Improvement Program (AIP) increased substantially and FAA's other accounts also received appreciable increases. The funding levels the Administration recommends for AIP, Facilities and Equipment (F&E), and FAA Operations will support the achievement of several goals. They maintain the level of investment for major airport capacity projects that provide great benefits to the National Airspace System (NAS). They enable us to continue to update the NAS infrastructure, expand air traffic control automation and communications tools, and implement needed operational capability and risk mitigating precision landing navigation. They support implementation of FAA's Operational Evolution Plan (OEP) and efforts to accelerate airspace redesign, sector reconfiguration, and chokepoint solutions.

Although the proposed funding level for Research, Engineering and Development represents a decrease from current levels as a result of the transfer of security technology responsibilities to the Transportation Security Administration (TSA), it accurately reflects our focus on safety in FAA's research program.

I believe these funding recommendations are sound and represent a strong signal that investment in safety and in the NAS is critical to a healthy economy and the future of the country.

Programmatic Changes

With respect to the AIP, the Administration proposes a restructuring of the formulas and set asides to allow more funds to be targeted to those airports with the greatest dependence on Federal assistance. In fiscal year 2004, our proposal would transfer more than $87 million to small airports – those facilities essential to the vitality of the NAS that have limited funding options other than Federal assistance. We also recommend simplifying the grant formulas by eliminating unnecessary or outdated set asides. For example, the set aside for the Military Airport Program was created to ensure funding when it was a new concept and it was unclear if it would compete well for grant dollars. Today, the program is well established and its airports routinely receive more than the amount guaranteed by the existing formulas. The changes we propose will have the effect of increasing the amount of discretionary funding available which we believe is essential to help fund the key capacity projects we all agree are necessary to prevent future gridlock.

Another provision that we hope will help with potential gridlock is the section on collaborative decision making (CDM). This pilot program would authorize FAA to establish, in consultation with the Department of Justice, a two year program at Chicago O'Hare International Airport. O'Hare is unquestionably one of the most congested airports in the nation, especially in bad weather. This program will allow us to develop, test, and evaluate the benefits of processes to allow competing air carriers to communicate more openly with each other about adjustments to their flight schedules during periods that challenge the capacity of the airport, such as adverse weather or unexpected runway closings. The Secretary would be authorized to grant antitrust immunity to participating carriers as required for their participation in the program. Although this pilot program is limited, we believe it is a proactive way to assist in the management of air traffic during unique situations and will permit an excellent opportunity for us to evaluate whether the program should be extended or expanded.

While FAA's primary mission to ensure a safe and efficient NAS, we take our environmental responsibilities quite seriously. The environmental initiatives in this proposal will contribute to continued success of our investment in safety and capacity projects by reducing undue delays in the environmental review of projects while continuing to exercise strong environmental stewardship. This proposal is not only consistent with the President's Executive Order on Environmental Stewardship and Transportation Infrastructure Project Reviews, but also previous streamlining proposals developed by this Committee and industry.

We also propose new initiatives to mitigate the impacts of aviation emissions and noise. For example, we propose to establish voluntary programs to reduce aviation emissions by converting airport infrastructure, airport vehicles, and airport-owned ground-support equipment to new low emission technologies. In addition, our noise initiatives include using some of the AIP noise set-aside for research aimed at reducing community exposure to aircraft noise or emissions. We also hope to increase prospective homebuyers' awareness of areas near airports that are exposed to aircraft noise by requiring Federal lenders to inform prospective homebuyers of properties within airport noise contours.

Since September 11th, the aviation insurance program administered by the FAA has been critical to the continued operation of U.S. air carriers. In the past 17 months, FAA has insured almost all U.S. air carriers against third party liability arising from war risk. The underlying program authority is scheduled to expire at the end of 2003. In the past, reauthorizations of the program were enacted periodically and if the program lapsed between authorizations, the lapses were brief and without incident. In the current climate, a lapse in the aviation insurance program could have extreme consequences. To avoid that possibility, our bill would repeal the periodic renewal requirement of the basic program, thereby making the Secretary's authority permanent. We do not feel that it is necessary for those portions of the program that were expanded in response to the events of September 11th to be made permanent. The actual provision of insurance will remain at the discretion of the Executive Branch based on a Presidential Determination Order.

Title V of our proposal will be familiar to you. In response to this Committee's concerns, my predecessor testified before you suggesting certain structural reforms that could assist in agency efforts to transform air traffic control and its supporting functions into an effective, performance-based Air Traffic Organization (ATO). I agree that these reforms would be helpful and urge you to include them in your reauthorization bill. To remind you, there are five structural changes proposed. Modify the Management Advisory Council (MAC) by creating a stand-alone Air Traffic Organization Board (Board) that is separate from the Council, and add the Administrator as Chairperson of the Board to provide leadership. Modify the Board's existing approval authority and involvement in ATO's budget to reflect the Executive Branch's authority in these areas. Enable the Secretary to nominate members of the MAC by eliminating the requirement that original MAC positions be filled by Presidential nomination. Modify the statutory responsibilities of the Chief Operating Officer (COO) to make them consistent with standard COO responsibilities rather than CEO responsibilities. And finally, we recommend that, consistent with the practice applied to other modal agencies, the FAA Deputy Administrator be appointed by the Secretary with the approval of the President. This would eliminate the need for Senate confirmation.

Non-FAA Programmatic Changes

The proposal also contains provisions that affect programs that are partly or wholly the responsibility of the Office of the Secretary (OST), such as the sections that amend the programs that require the submission of airport competition plans and that provide subsidy for certain air service. While FAA has no substantive responsibility in some of these areas, I would like to talk a little bit about these provisions on behalf of the Secretary. AIR-21 required certain large and medium hub airports to submit a plan for increasing competition with any application for a PFC or an AIP grant. The Administration's proposal would expand the number of airports covered by this requirement from approximately 38 to 50 to include large gateway airports that had not been covered. In addition, the bill contains stronger requirements to ensure that all air carriers have reasonable and competitive access to airport facilities by adding new requirements, including that airports monitor gate use, adopt fair sublease arrangements, prevent the use of majority in interest clauses that limit the enhancement of carrier access, and implement dispute resolution procedures. These requirements will provide a framework by which new entrant carriers are given full and fair access to congested airports.

The Department is also proposing, consistent with the President's FY 2004 budget, major restructuring of the Essential Air Service (EAS) program in order to administer the program more efficiently and to add flexibility. With the proposed reforms, the Department would be able to ensure that small communities that need it the most maintain access to the national air transportation system. Under this proposal, for the first time, communities would be stakeholders in their air service. Although there is a modest contribution requirement which we believe will invest and incentivize local communities, it also provides communities with greater flexibility to use the money to tailor a program that works best for each unique situation.

Economic Problems of the Industry/FAA Oversight

While the topic of this hearing is reauthorization, I would like to take the opportunity of my first appearance before you as Administrator to discuss some important aviation issues that are not legislative in nature. Clearly, one of the most pressing challenges we face is the dire economic condition of the airline industry. The aftermath of September 11th has left two major carriers in bankruptcy and many others incurring significant financial losses. There continue to be many uncertainties that are likely to affect the public's willingness to travel and the airlines' ability to achieve economic stability. It is unclear how long the current conflict in the Middle East will last. It is unclear how that conflict will affect oil prices. It is unclear how long the public's fear of domestic disturbances will have a chilling effect on air travel. The downturn in air travel has also resulted in a decrease in the amount of revenue being contributed to the airport/airway trust fund at a time when FAA faces continued demands with respect to both safety and capacity.

While FAA has no authority over economic matters, it is critical to the FAA that the desperate economic condition of some airlines in no way be permitted to compromise safety. Under the superb leadership of Secretary Mineta, the Department's emphasis on safety has never been greater. As a modal Administrator within the Department, I consider myself to be, first and foremost, a safety advocate. Last year was one of the safest ever – no accidents of scheduled flights. While that record ended with the tragic accident in Charlotte earlier this year, the accident just served to emphasize that our focus on safety and preventing accidents cannot be affected by balance sheets. I'm sure my friends in the airlines would be the first to agree, cost cutting by the airline industry cannot apply to safety.

I have personally met with the FAA managers overseeing USAirways and United Airlines to satisfy myself that we have appropriately expanded our review of these carriers. The approach we are taking with these carriers is to focus our safety oversight on areas that may be more at risk during a financial crisis. For example, we want to ensure that employee training and internal oversight mechanisms are adequately supported. Any cuts by the airlines in these areas could signal a fundamental crack in the safety foundation of the airline that would require immediate FAA action. We are prepared to step in on a moment's notice if we have evidence of a deterioration of safety. To date, I am happy to report that we have seen both airlines maintain their commitment to safety analysis and audits even as they reduce other parts of their operation.

With respect to FAA's oversight of the industry as a whole, our challenge is to maximize our inspector workforce to make the most of our resources to ensure that unacceptable compromises are not being made by the airlines. We redirect our surveillance resources to areas of concern that have been identified through an analysis of our inspectors' observations, industry data bases and consideration of the airline's overall financial and management condition. This is a proactive approach to make sure that airlines have safety built into their operating systems and also ensure compliance with safety regulations that will improve upon our excellent safety record. I believe this approach will serve us well through the challenges, known and unknown, that lie ahead.

Importance of Being Data Driven

One of the things about which I feel very strongly, is that meaningful safety improvement will only be attained if we focus our efforts on making FAA a data driven, performance based organization. Our safe system can become even safer if FAA can get in front of accidents by using data to detect problems and disturbing trends. In our system safety approach we are identifying hazards, assessing and analyzing risks, prioritizing actions, and measuring and documenting results. This is a continuous, data driven approach that places an emphasis on information gathering and sharing. We need as much data as possible to make informed decisions, which is why FAA is committed to programs like the Flight Operational Quality Assurance (FOQA) and Aviation Safety Action Program (ASAP). AIR-21 contained a provision on FOQA that has greatly assisted us in our data collection efforts. Data analysis plays an important part in our Safer Skies initiative, which is all about taking actions that will achieve the greatest benefits in preventing accidents. When we started this initiative several years ago, the goal was to reduce the accident rate by 80% by 2007 and we are on track to do that.

Increasing FAA's International Profile

I also want to increase FAA's international profile. Aviation safety should be one of our most important exports. FAA is broadening our network of partnerships with civil aviation authorities, as well as promoting our relationships with regional safety organizations. We are in a position to be very helpful in providing technical assistance to those countries that want to improve aviation safety oversight or air traffic control services. We must also guard our position as a world leader in aviation safety, air traffic, and environmental issues. The world is getting ever smaller and if FAA can help improve safe air travel for U.S. citizens and citizens of the world no matter where they travel, we should embrace that role.

Toward that end, I recently created a separate International Office and hired Douglas Lavin to head it up and work on my goal of increasing our international profile. Doug comes to the FAA with extensive private and public sector experience. Most recently, Doug was Vice President of Portfolio Management Group for American Express where he managed the company's strategic venture capital portfolio. I am confident he will provide the leadership I am looking for in this important area.

The Offices of Policy and Environment & Energy are under the able direction of Sharon Pinkerton, and I only hope that Chairman Mica will forgive me for depriving him of her services after ten years. In her new role as Assistant Administrator, she will be helping to coordinate the agency's efforts on reauthorization, so will not be a stranger to this Committee.

Defenders of the Homeland

Finally, I would like to note that the shift of FAA's former security programs to the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) was a smooth one. FAA continues to work closely with TSA even as TSA transitioned from the Department of Transportation to the Department of Homeland Security. Although FAA's role with respect to security has changed, we remain defenders of the Homeland in a very real sense. Security remains a vital component of safety. The current threat level means we all have a role to play in protecting our country. On behalf of the FAA, I am committed to continuing to work closely with TSA to protect our country from having aviation used against us as a weapon of mass destruction.

Conclusion

In conclusion, this year marks the centennial of the Wright Brothers' historic flight at Kitty Hawk. The flight was marked in feet, not miles or time zones, yet it is hard to measure the impact of that moment on the way the world has evolved since that momentous day. When you look back on those early days of aviation and how dangerous air travel was compared with other modes of transportation and compare them with today when aviation is the safest way to travel, it is easy to pat ourselves on the back and feel content with how far we've come. While we can and should marvel at all that we and our forbearers have accomplished in the past 100 years, complacency has no place in aviation. We must continue to set and work to achieve goals with respect to safety, capacity and efficiency. I want to know that I was part of the unimaginable advancements in aviation that will take place in the next 100 years and I want you to know that I stand ready to work with you to take those first steps in the second century of flight to make our world a better place.

I conferred also with Judge Gonzales, and he agrees that Justice White would be a worthy recipient. Below is the beginning of New York Times obituary that captures some of his many attributes, although this excerpt does not mention his important role in civil rights enforcement in the Justice Department in the early 1960's before his appointment to the Supreme Court.

Byron R. White, the football legend who became one of the longest serving justices of the United States Supreme Court, died yesterday in Denver. He was 84, and the only living former Supreme Court justice.

The cause was complications from pneumonia, a statement from the Supreme Court said.

When Justice White stepped down nine years ago after 31 years on the court, he was the last veteran of the liberal era of Chief Justice Earl Warren. Though he was then the court's sole remaining Democrat, he was in many ways more at home in the conservative era of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist.

Joining the court in 1962 at the height of its liberal activism under Chief Justice Warren, Justice White was often in dissent during his early years as a justice and assumed a position of influence only after a series of appointments by Republican presidents shifted the court in a more conservative direction.

"Eventually, the court changed, society changed, the issues changed," Kate Stith Cabranes, a Yale Law School professor and one of his former law clerks, said after his retirement. "Byron White didn't change."

He cast dissenting votes in Miranda v. Arizona, the 1966 landmark decision that required a police officer to inform a suspect of his right to remain silent and to consult with a lawyer, and in Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision that established a constitutional right to abortion. Although he gradually came to accept the Miranda doctrine, Justice White never reconciled himself to Roe v. Wade and continued to dissent as the court applied and affirmed that decision over the years.

He found himself much more at home in the conservative 1980's and 1990's, writing majority opinions that cut back on the scope of federal civil rights laws, that upheld state laws prohibiting homosexual sex between consenting adults, and that permitted the use of evidence obtained with defective search warrants.

But no ideological label ever fit Justice White comfortably. Committed to the use of federal power to eradicate the legacy of school segregation, he wrote majority opinions upholding wide-ranging desegregation orders for Northern school districts and affirming the power of federal judges to order a school district to increase taxes to pay for the school improvements necessary to make an integration plan work.

He also believed that with power came accountability, filing a strong dissent from a 1982 decision that gave presidents absolute immunity from suits for damages for their official actions. He dissented from the court's 1983 decision in the Chadha case, which invalidated the legislative veto, a device widely used by Congress to block executive branch actions. "The history of separation-of-powers doctrine is also a history of accommodation and practicality," he wrote, objecting to the majority's insistence on maintaining the barrier between legislative and executive power.

After his retirement, Justice White sat occasionally as a visiting judge on federal appeals courts and served in 1998 as the chairman of a special commission that studied the structure of the federal appellate system. Last year, in failing health, he closed his chambers in Washington and moved with his wife, Marion, to their native Colorado.

A sports hero, Rhodes scholar, successful lawyer, triumphant political organizer and director of Robert F. Kennedy's Justice Department -- Byron R. White had been all of these before his friend John F. Kennedy named him to the Supreme Court in 1962.

Only 44 at the time of his appointment, Justice White was one of the youngest people ever named to the court, and his 31-year tenure was one of the longest in the court's history; among 20th-century justices, only Hugo L. Black, William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan Jr. served longer.

President Kennedy, calling his nominee "the ideal New Frontier judge," said Byron White "excelled in everything he has attempted." That was an understatement about a life that had a storybook quality -- so much so that his decades on the court sometimes appeared more an anticlimax than a crowning achievement.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

ELECTRONIC PRIVACY INFORMATION CENTER, Plaintiff, v. OFFICE OF HOMELAND SECURITY et al. Defendants.	)	02-CV-620 (CKK) (Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly)

DECLARATION OF SECRETARY TOM RIDGE

I, TOM RIDGE do hereby state and declare as follows:

1. I serve as Secretary of the United States Department of Homeland Security ("DHS"), and have served in that position since January 24, 2003. Prior to that, I served as Assistant to the President for Homeland Security (also referred to as "Homeland Security Advisor"), and served in that position from October 8, 2001 until January 24, 2003. During my service as Homeland Security Advisor, I was named in my official capacity as a defendant in this action along with the Office of Homeland Security ("OHS") at the White House.

2. I have been advised that the Court in this case is seeking to determine whether the Office of Homeland Security solely advises and assists the President of the United States, or whether it exercises legal authority that is independent of the President. My views are based on my experience and perspective as the first head of the Office of Homeland Security, as the official who led, designed, recruited, managed and was responsible for OHS. My views are also based on the experience and knowledge obtained during 12 years of service in the Congress of the United States, on nearly seven years experience in sovereign executive leadership as Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and in particular, today as the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security in the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

3. As Assistant to the President for Homeland Security, I was the President's chief advisor within the White House on homeland security matters and head of the Office of Homeland Security. My roles were to advise and assist the President directly on homeland security policies and activities in the wake of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, as well as to assist the President in the vital task of coordinating the numerous Executive branch departments and agencies that had some role in homeland security matters. Just as Dr. Condoleezza Rice serves as the President's National Security Advisor, I served as the President's Homeland Security Advisor. In my capacity as Assistant to the President for Homeland Security, my role and missions constituted, in terms of homeland security, what is basically an exact parallel to the national security role and missions of the Assistant to the President for National Security. Throughout my service at OHS, I did not have any authority independent of the President to issue directives and mandates to agencies, nor did anyone else in OHS.

4. I carried out my duties as Homeland Security Advisor in several different ways. First, I gave the President advice on issues, and received his views and direction on homeland security policies. Second, at the direction of the President, I helped develop specific homeland security initiatives. For example, at the President's direction and working with the assistance of the staff at the Office of Homeland Security and others, I developed the proposal for the Department of Homeland Security for the President, which was then transmitted to Congress. I also assisted the President in developing and drafting for his authority and signature specific Homeland Security Presidential Directives (HSPDs), including one establishing a homeland security advisory system (HSPD-3), and one coordinating U.S. immigration and border security policies in order to track foreign terrorists who seek to enter the United States (HSPD-2). Third, on the President's behalf and at his direction, I brought together Executive branch departments and agencies that had involvement in homeland security matters in order to help coordinate Executive branch policy and actions, as well as the flow of information. I also helped coordinate with State and local governments, again at the President's direction, to better prepare for and respond to terrorist attacks in the United States. Finally, I was directed by the President via Executive Order 13228 to offer my opinion and advice, in the form of a certification, on the adequacy of the homeland security budget, and provided recommendations on the budget directly to the Office of Management and Budget. In each of these activities my role was to assist the President in discharging his authority as Chief Executive, not to exercise authority independent of the President.

5. The staff of the Office of Homeland Security assisted me in carrying out my duties and responsibilities as Homeland Security Advisor, and it performed the same functions I did on the President's behalf on an even more specialized basis. OHS staff did not exercise authority or take actions independent of me or the President. Rather, OHS staff gathered information for me, assisted me in briefing the President, helped prepare specific Presidential initiatives (such as the proposal to create the Department of Homeland Security and HSPD 2 and 3), and assisted me in coordinating Executive branch departments and agencies on homeland security activities.

6. The specific mechanism that I and the OHS staff used to coordinate policy was the President's Homeland Security Council (HSC), which was established in Executive Order 13228. The President issued Homeland Security Presidential Directive 1, which established a three-tiered committee system for interagency coordination. I chaired the Principals Committee, which brought together agency heads such as the Attorney General and Treasury Secretary, to address homeland policies. The Deputy Homeland Security Advisor chaired the HSC Deputies Committee, and he worked with officials in the departments and agencies at the deputy secretary level.

7. Through the HSC committee process, I and the OHS staff brought officials from operational agencies together, literally in the same room, through the Policy Coordination Committee process to identify and discuss issues, such as threat detection and intelligence, border security, bio-terrorism, and public health preparedness. The staff would then seek consensus, develop recommendations, and provide information "up-the chain" to me, or my deputy, and ultimately to the President. Whatever policy was at issue, the HSC process is the President's instrument for bringing agencies together to ensure that his policy objectives are properly coordinated before being implemented by the responsible agency. Directives on homeland security policies are issued by the President, and Executive departments and agencies are responsible to the President, not the Homeland Security Advisor. I and my staff at OHS were very much aware that the actual operational responsibility to implement policy resided with agencies, which is why we spent so much time working with them to ensure that homeland security was being effectively pursued.

8. As a one-time Governor, Assistant to the President and now as a Cabinet Secretary, I understand the difference between serving as an advisor with no independent or operational legal authority (as I did at OHS) and serving in a position that does have independent and operational legal authority (such as while Governor of Pennsylvania). Understanding that difference, the bottom line is this: From the day the Office of Homeland Security was created when I took office as the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security, through my final hours in that position in January of this year, I did not have any legal authority independent of the President, nor did OHS staff.

9. While I continue to serve the President as Secretary of Homeland Security, I do so from a cabinet level position with specific statutory and operational authority over several homeland security programs, including for border and transportation security, emergency preparedness and response, State and local government coordination, and information analysis. Ultimately, twenty-two (22) agencies with over 170,000 employees and a budget of over $36 billion in FY04 have been brought together under me as a single agency head. In contrast to my more limited role as Homeland Security Advisor to the President, I not only seek to "coordinate" homeland security policy informally on the President's behalf, but now exercise the statutory operational authority enacted by Congress to direct these entities in implementing a homeland security policy.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Tony, these suggestions basically look fine. Since they need him to sign by 2:00, I'll get out of the middle and let you reconcile the final draft w/ Lucy (282-8000). I'm here if needed, Brett's around too.
My questions to you Tony are:

whether you want to use the word "direction" at bottom of p. 2 (maybe use "guidance" or "supervision"?), since we argue that the HSA had no authority to direct much of anything, whether you want to use the word "license" on p. 3, whether you want to make the HSC process present tense ("and still is") at para. 8,

Paragraph 9, does Justice want to delete:

some of the examples of DHS programs ("border and transportation security", etc.)?
the approx. number of employees and budget?
The phrase about "not only seek to 'coordinate' homeland security policy informally..."?
The phrase about "to direct these entities..."?

6. The specific mechanism that I and the OHS staff used to coordinate policy was the President's Homeland Security Council (HSC), which was established in Executive Order 13228. The President issued Homeland Security Presidential Directive 1, which established a three-tiered committee system for interagency coordination. I chaired the Principals Committee, which brought together agency heads such as the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury ~~Secretary~~, to address homeland policies. The Deputy Homeland Security Advisor chaired the HSC Deputies Committee, and he worked with officials in the departments and agencies at the deputy secretary level.

7. Through the HSC committee process, I and the OHS staff brought officials from operational agencies together, literally in the same room, through the Policy Coordination Committee process to identify and discuss myriad issues, ~~such as~~ for example threat detection and intelligence, border security, bio-terrorism, and public health preparedness. ~~The staff~~ We would ~~then~~ seek consensus, develop recommendations, ~~and~~ with the staff providinge information "up-the chain" to me, or my deputy, and ultimately to the President.

8. Whatever policy ~~was~~ is at issue, the HSC process was and still i~~i~~s the President's instrument for bringing agencies together to ensure that his policy objectives are properly coordinated before being implemented by the responsible agency. Directives on homeland security policies are issued by the President, and Executive departments and agencies are responsible to the President, not the Homeland Security Advisor. I and my staff at OHS were very much aware that the actual operational responsibility to implement policy resided with agencies, which is why we spent so much time working with them to ensure that homeland security was being effectively pursued.

8. As a one-time Governor, Assistant to the President and now as a Cabinet Secretary, I understand the difference between serving as an advisor with no independent or operational legal authority (as I did at OHS) and serving in a position that does have independent and operational legal authority (~~such as while~~ as I did as Governor of Pennsylvania). Understanding that difference, the bottom line is this: From the day the Office of Homeland Security was created when I took office as the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security, through my final hours in that position in January of this year, I did not have any legal authority independent of the President, nor did OHS staff.

9. While I continue to serve the President ~~as Secretary of Homeland Security~~, I do so as Secretary of Homleand Security, ~~from~~ a cabinet level position with specific statutory and operational authority over ~~several~~ homeland security and non-homeland security programs~~,~~ ~~including for border and transportation security, emergency preparedness and response, State and local government coordination, and information analysis~~. See Homeland Security Act of 2002, cite. Ultimately, twenty-two (22) agencies ~~with over 170,000 employees and a budget of over $36 billion in FY04~~ have been ~~brought together~~ consolidated in the Department of Homeland Security~~under me as a single agency head~~. In contrast to my more limited role as Homeland Security Advisor to the President, I now, in addition to advising the President as a member of his Cabinet, ~~not only seek to "coordinate" homeland security policy informally on the President's behalf, but now~~ exercise ~~the~~ statutory operational authority ~~enacted by Congress~~pursuant to the HSA and attendant statutory authorities inherent to the Department's component agencies ~~to direct these entities in implementing a homeland security policy~~.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Statement of
The Honorable Robert H. Roswell, M.D.
Under Secretary for Health Department of Veterans Affairs
Before the House of Representatives Committee on Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Health on the "Status of the Implementation of Public Law 107-287 and VA-DoD Efforts to Coordinate Force Protection in the Active Duty Military

March 27, 2003

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be here to testify before the Subcommittee on the "Status of the Implementation of Public Law 107-287 and VA-DoD efforts to coordinate force protection in the active duty military. With me today is Dr. Susan Mather, VA's Chief Officer for Public Health and Environmental Hazards. I will first address implementation of the provisions of Public Law 107-287.

Public Law 107-287 authorizes VA to furnish health care to victims during national disasters and emergencies declared by the President or when the National Disaster Medical System (NDMS) is activated. The law contains several other provisions intended to enhance VA's ability to identify, diagnose, respond to or prevent the medical consequences resulting from the use of weapons of mass destruction (WMD). Because of the large number of VA health care facilities located throughout the nation, the VA health care system is more likely than any other private or public health care system to be required to identify and respond to threats of chemical, biological, radiological or other threats to public health or safety.

developed Clinical Practice Guidelines (CPG's), which are based on the best scientifically supported practices, give health care providers the needed structure, clinical tools, and educational resources that allow them to diagnose and manage patients with deployment-related health concerns. Two post-deployment CPG's have been developed in collaboration with DoD, a general purpose Post-Deployment CPG and a CPG for unexplained fatigue and pain. Our goal is that all veterans who come to VA will find their doctors to be well informed about specific deployments and related health hazards. Information on Clinical Practice Guidelines are available online at www.va.gov/environagents. This web site also contains information about unique deployment health risks and new treatments.

Assessment of Difficult-to-Diagnose Illnesses

We have learned that sustained clinical care and research is needed to understand post-deployment health problems. Congress also understood this need and in legislation enacted as Public Law 105-368 required establishment of a plan to develop national centers for the study of war-related illness and post-deployment health issues. Subsequently, in 2002, VA established two such centers, known as "War-Related Illness and Injury Study Centers" (WRIISC's), in East Orange, NJ, and Washington, DC, to provide specialized health care for veterans from all combat and peace-keeping missions who suffer difficult-to-diagnose but disabling illnesses. These centers are available through referral to veterans from all eras, including veterans of a future war with Iraq. These centers also provide research into better treatments and diagnoses, develop education programs for health care providers, and develop specialized health care programs to meet veterans' unique needs, such as the National Center for PTSD.

The majority of veterans returning from combat and peacekeeping missions are able to make the transition to civilian life with few problems. Most who come to VA for health care receive conventional diagnoses and treatments, and leave satisfied with their health care. Nevertheless, VA has learned that some veterans have greater problems on their return to civilian life, and a small percentage of them develop difficult-to-diagnose symptoms. The two WRIISC's focus on determining the causes and most effective treatments for difficult-to-diagnose symptoms -- problems seen in veterans of all wars. More information on the WRIISC's can be found at the VA website, www.va.gov/environagents.

Veterans Health Initiative

VA has built upon the lessons learned from our experiences with Gulf War and Vietnam veterans' programs to implement an innovative new approach to health care for veterans. The Veterans Health Initiative (VHI) is a comprehensive program designed to increase recognition of the connection between military service and certain health effects, to better document veterans' military and exposure histories, to improve patient care, and to establish a database for further study.

The education component of VHI prepares VA healthcare providers to better serve their patients. We have completed modules on spinal cord injury, cold injury, traumatic amputation, Agent Orange, the Gulf War, PTSD, blindness/visual impairment and hearing loss, and radiation. We are currently developing modules on infectious disease health risks in Southwest Asia, sexual trauma, traumatic brain injury, and military occupational lung disease. These important tools are integrated with other VA educational efforts to enable VA practitioners to more quickly and accurately arrive at a diagnosis and to provide more effective treatment.

Enhanced Outreach

Outreach is critical, and the Gulf War made clear the value of timely and reliable information about wartime health risks for veterans and their families, elected representatives, the media, and the nation at large. VA has already developed a brochure that addresses the main health concerns for military service in Afghanistan and is preparing another brochure for the current conflict in the Gulf region. These brochures answer health-related questions that veterans, their families, and health care providers have about these hazardous military deployments. They also describe relevant medical care programs that

VA has developed in anticipation of the health needs of veterans returning from combat and peacekeeping missions abroad.

Another challenge for outreach is to address the specific concerns of veterans and their families over the potential health impact of environmental exposures during deployment. Veterans also have questions about their symptoms and illnesses following deployment. These concerns are addressed through newsletters and fact-sheets to veterans covering health and compensation issues, including environmental health issues; regular briefings of veterans service organizations; organization of national meetings on health and research issues; media interviews; other educational material and websites with information, like www.va.gov/environagents.

Recruit Assessment Program (RAP)

Based on the Department's experience providing health care and benefits to Gulf War veterans, VA recognizes the critical importance of health documentation and life-long medical records that cover pre-, during-, and post-deployment period. Previously, new health problems among Gulf War veterans were not readily verifiable due to a lack of detailed computerized records documenting enlistment and pre-deployment health status. Research efforts to understand Gulf War veterans' illnesses were also hampered by inadequate base-line health information, and inadequate documentation of health status during active duty.

DoD and VA have recognized these shortcomings and are attempting, through development and implementation of the Recruit Assessment Program (RAP), to collect comprehensive baseline health data from all U.S. military recruits. The RAP is a DoD program, which is under development with the support of VA. The goal is for the RAP to be the first module of a life-long health record for military personnel and veterans. The RAP will help DoD and VA to evaluate health problems among service-members and veterans after they leave military service, to address post-deployment health questions, and to document changes in health status for disability determination.

It is important to note that during the last two years all U.S. Marine Corps recruits initially trained on the West Coast have completed a RAP questionnaire as part of a pilot RAP development program. Therefore, baseline health data is available for over 31,000 Marines, many of whom are currently serving in the Gulf region.

VA Vet Center Program

VA's Vet Centers, originally conceived to provide a wide variety of readjustment services to Vietnam veterans, have been invaluable in providing similar services to veterans from more recent combat and peacekeeping missions. More than 115,000 veterans of Operations Desert Shield/Desert Storm have made use of their services. We fully expect that the VA Vet Centers will be available to help both veterans of the current hostilities in Afghanistan and Iraq and veterans of future conflicts elsewhere in the world.

Disability Compensation

To assist in disability determinations, VA has actively worked with DoD to develop separation physical examinations that thoroughly document a veteran's health status at the time of separation from military service and that also meet the requirements of the physical examination needed by VA in connection with a veteran's claim for compensation benefits. VA has also worked to provide fair compensation for Gulf War veterans with difficult-to-diagnose illnesses. Under 38 U.S.C. § 1117 (as amended by Public Law 107-103), VA has authority to compensate Gulf War veterans for chronic disabilities resulting from an undiagnosed illness or certain medically unexplained chronic multisymptom illnesses. It is our belief that service members serving in the Southwest Asia Theater of Operations during the current conflict with Iraq would, as veterans, also be eligible for compensation for disabilities resulting from undiagnosed illnesses.

Coordination with the Department of Defense

Enhanced Interagency Collaboration

REV_00382019

One of the important lessons learned from addressing Gulf War health issues was the need to significantly increase intergovernmental coordination among VA, DoD, and Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). The initial Government response to Gulf War veterans' concerns about their illnesses was not effectively coordinated among these Departments. As a consequence, the Persian Gulf Veterans Coordinating Board (PGVCB) was established in January 1994. This board, consisting of representatives from VA, DoD, and HHS, was created to coordinate Federal efforts in the areas of research, clinical care, and benefits. The initiation in 2000 of the tri-agency Military and Veterans Health Coordinating Board (MVHCB), replacing the PGVCB, served to institutionalize future interagency cooperation. In 2002, the MVHCB was disbanded and a special deployment-health working group of the VA-DoD Health Executive Council was established to further its work and ensure continued interagency coordination for all veteran and military deployment health issues. Governmental coordination will continue to play a critical role in addressing health problems among veterans in future conflicts and peacekeeping missions.

Increased collaboration has also extended beyond America's borders and strengthened coordination with Military and Veterans Affairs agencies in other countries. On post-war health issues, such as those arising after Operations Desert Shield/Desert Storm, VA scientists and policy makers collaborate and share lessons learned with their counterparts in Canada, the United Kingdom, and Australia. Because of the similarity of health problems among war veterans of different countries, these collaborations have focused on difficult-to explain-symptoms that consistently arise among military personnel returning from hazardous deployments.

Transmission of Health Data between DoD and VA

VA and DoD are closely collaborating to develop the ability to share medical information electronically. Recently, the VA/DoD Joint Executive Council and Health Executive Council approved the adoption of the Joint VA/DoD Electronic Health Records Plan. This Plan provides for the exchange of health data and development of a common health information infrastructure and architecture supported by common data, communications, security and software standards, and high performance health information systems. Since June 2002, the Departments have successfully been sharing electronic medical information. Key initiatives in the Electronic Health Records Plan are the Federal Health Information Exchange (FHIE) and HealthePeople (Federal).

FHIE (formerly known as the Government Computerized Patient Record) provides historical data on separated and retired military personnel from the DoD's Composite Health Care System (CHCS) to the FHIE Data Repository for use in VA clinical encounters, and potential future use for aggregate analysis. Patient data on laboratory results, radiology reports, outpatient pharmacy information, and patient demographics are now being sent from DoD to VA via secure messaging. This first phase of FHIE is fully deployed and operational at VA medical centers nationwide. The next phase is currently being deployed and includes admission discharge transfer data, discharge summaries, allergies, and consult tracking.

HealthePeople (Federal) is a strategy to achieve full interoperability among Federal health information systems, starting with the ability to provide a two-way exchange of health-related information between VA and DoD by 2005. VA and DoD are collaborating on several important health information applications in moving toward HealthePeople (Federal). Taken together, they will permit the Departments to offer a seamless electronic medical record.

- Clinical Data Repository/Health Data Repository (CHDR): This project seeks to ensure the interoperability of the DoD Clinical Data Repository with the VA Health Data Repository by FY 2005.
- Consolidated Mail-Out Pharmacy: The Departments are testing a system that allows VA to refill outpatient prescription medications from DoD's Military Treatment Facilities.
- Lab Data Sharing and Interoperability: VA and DoD are testing an application that will allow both Departments to combine resources and provide laboratory services to one another.

- Credentialing: A project team has identified common credentialing data to be exchanged between the DoD and VA. Software is being jointly developed and there are plans to begin testing at three sites by 4th Quarter FY 2003. This will decrease the time and resources needed to credential providers who need to practice in both health care systems.
- Scheduling: VA and DoD are sharing technical requirements to ensure interoperability between scheduling applications of each Department. This will allow providers to see all appointments a patient might have scheduled at both VA and DoD facilities and, where authorized, to schedule appointments in each other's clinics.
- E-portal Systems: The Departments are collaborating on a joint acquisition of health content for their electronic web portal systems. This will provide uniform patient health information to VA and DoD beneficiaries.

Deployment Health

VA applauds the efforts of DoD to prevent health problems among deployed troops and to provide immediate care for combat casualties. However, just as DoD has made substantial progress preventing morbidity and mortality on the battlefield, we also need to focus greater attention on the long-term health problems of veterans after the war. The trauma of warfare has lasting effects. The physical and psychological wounds of war can heal slowly, and toxic exposures on the battlefield may have enduring health consequences long after the actual war has ended.

The key to addressing the long-term needs of veterans is to improve medical record-keeping and environmental surveillance. To provide optimal health care and disability assistance after the current conflict with Iraq, VA needs the following:

- A complete roster of veterans who served in designated combat zones; and
- Data from any pre-deployment, deployment, or post-deployment health evaluation and screening of deployed troops.

REV_00382022

Furthermore, in the event Iraq uses weapons of mass destruction against U.S. troops, it will be vital for VA to have as much health and environmental information as possible on potential exposures and their health effects in order to provide appropriate health care and disability compensation for veterans of this conflict. Ideally, information would be available from representative environmental samples, biological samples obtained from exposed troops, clinical data from exposed troops who seek medical care, and data from an epidemiological survey of symptoms and illnesses among potentially exposed troops.

Conclusion

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my statement. Let me say again that I am grateful for this opportunity to address the progress has made in implementing the provisions of Public Law 107-287 and to share with you the lessons we have learned to improve the programs and policies we have developed to be better prepared for U. S. service members returning from combat and peacekeeping missions overseas. Dr. Mather and I will now be happy to respond to any questions that you or other members of the Subcommittee might have.

Implementation of the provisions of Public Law 107-287 has progressed more slowly than had been anticipated, due in large part to the uncertainty concerning language in VA's FY 2003 appropriations bill. Section 117 of H.R. 5605, as passed by the House, included language that would have prohibited the use of FY 2003 appropriations for implementation of all provisions of H.R. 3253, which was subsequently signed into law as Public Law 107-287. However, the final language enacted on February 20, 2003, prohibited the use of funds provided for FY 2003 for implementation of only sections 2 and 5 of Public Law 107-287. Accordingly, VA is now actively pursuing implementation of the "non-prohibited" provisions.

Section 2

Section 2 authorizes VA to establish four medical emergency preparedness centers with a mission to carry out research, education, to develop methods of detection, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of injuries, diseases, and illnesses arising from the use of chemical, biological, radiological weapons posing threat to public health and safety. As discussed above, VA's appropriations act specifically prohibits any funds provided for FY 2003 from being spent on these centers. Accordingly, VA must wait until designated resources for this program are appropriated. However, a detailed plan has been developed which will be implemented immediately upon receipt of appropriated funds.

Section 3

Section 3 requires VA to carry out a program to develop and disseminate a series of model education and training programs on the medical responses to the consequences of terrorist activities. That section further requires these programs to be modeled after programs established at DoD's Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences and shall include, at a minimum, include emergency preparedness training for health care professionals. Their content must include, among other things, training in the recognition of chemical, biological, and radiological agents that may be used in terrorist activities and identification of potential symptoms related to use of those agents. The training would also be required to address short-term and long-term health consequences, including psychological effects that may result from exposure to such agents and the appropriate treatment of those health consequences.

The programs must be designed for a wide range of health care professionals at all levels. To date we have developed satellite broadcasts covering biological and chemical warfare issues as well as other educational tools and programs for those who may be charged to render care for victims of terrorist incidents. Through our education infrastructure, we will share and disseminate these programs widely.

Involvement of education and training experts and representatives from involved disciplines/target groups is also essential as we continue to organize and develop a comprehensive education and training response. To this end, we have already held preliminary meetings with representatives from the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences to explore collaborative endeavors. We intend to assemble a committee of experts to further develop a plan to address priority educational needs through the use of multiple modalities. In the meantime, we have conducted several excellent videoconferences on WMD produced by DoD; further, we taped those videoconferences to have training videos for future use.

Section 4

Section 4 authorizes VA to furnish health care to persons responding to, involved in or otherwise affected by (including veterans), major disasters and medical emergencies. Formal mechanisms for VA health care of DoD casualties have been in place since the 1980's.

Under § 8111A of title 38, United States Code, VA has a so-called "fourth mission" - to serve as principal health care backup to DoD in the event of war or national emergency. Plans were developed jointly by VA and DoD to establish a VA/DoD Contingency Hospital System. An important objective of the planning effort is to assess VA's bed capacity to care for sick and wounded Armed Forces personnel in time of war or national emergency. VA medical centers assess five specific bed categories (Critical Care, Medical-Surgical, Psychiatry, Pediatrics, and Burn) required by DoD. Assessments take into account the impact on local operations of VA employees subject to mobilization.

VA's objective is to provide DoD with maximum bed availability in the specific contingency bed categories within 72 hours of activation of the VA/DoD Contingency Hospital System. VA may arrange care for some patients at civilian community hospitals or through activation of the NDMS. Secondary Support Centers (SSCs) would provide backup to the Primary Receiving Centers (PRCs) by accepting transfers of patients or by providing staff and other resources. Fifty-eight VAMCs and three outpatient clinics have been classified as Installation Support Centers. The Installation Support Centers could assist a neighboring DoD installation or medical facility with clinical needs during a military mobilization.

A system is in place to recover the costs of health care provided to DoD beneficiaries in such events. Furthermore, VA is developing an implementation plan to establish and support the business requirements at all VA medical centers, including information technology changes and registration and billing requirements during and immediately following a disaster or emergency.

As to the NDMS, in 1997, VA signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Department of Health and Human Services, and DoD, continuing the NDMS partnership. One of the NDMS missions is to provide a civilian backup component to the VA/DoD Contingency Hospital System, if needed. This is accomplished through care at civilian hospitals enrolled in NDMS and allows for DoD casualties to be treated at these facilities when DoD and VA health care facilities reach capacity.

VA medical facilities regularly test and upgrade emergency response plans through training and exercises, including conducting quarterly bed reporting exercises of available staffed VA beds, as well as bed reporting exercises of available staffed NDMS-enrolled civilian beds.

In the aftermath of the September 11, 2001, attacks in this country, VA and DoD have partnered in many ongoing initiatives that focus on diagnosing and treating casualties of potential domestic terrorist events. Examples include VA-DoD exercises and training on casualty reception and care, jointly sponsored satellite broadcasts on weapons of mass destruction and DoD-hosted training for VA and DoD NDMS Federal Coordinators. In addition, VA's office of Policy, Planning and Preparedness interfaces with counterparts at DoD, HHS, and other agencies involved in national preparedness initiatives, and the VA-DoD Health Executive Council Deployment Health Working Group regularly addresses issues of mutual concern and interest.

Section 5

Mr. Chairman, as stated above, VA may not use any of its FY 2003 appropriations to establish the new position of an Assistant Secretary overseeing operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions. However, that has not precluded activities to ensure the protection of VA facilities, employees, and patients.

A security workforce of over 2,000 personnel, including police officers and detectives, currently protects VA medical and research facilities. Department security and law enforcement policy is established and overseen by the Office of Security and Law Enforcement (OS&LE). OS&LE has conducted numerous studies of security vulnerabilities and police officer staffing needs in the last twelve months. In addition, we are reviewing the findings of contracted vulnerability assessments and other data developed as a result of Public Law 107-188. As a result, we have taken the following actions.

- As part of the President's 2004 Budget Submission, VA has requested additional funds to fortify the Department's police force.
- We are developing a new Department-wide policy addressing personnel suitability and security screening requirements. The appropriate sections of the USA Patriot Act will be included this policy.

- OS&LE worked with a multi-agency work group and developed specific physical security requirements for research and clinical laboratories. These requirements were communicated to VHA field facilities and are checked for compliance during routine police program inspections. The requirements will also be included in the next revision of security policy.

Section 6

Section 6 was a codification of already existing authorities. These authorities focus on VA's ability to respond to a terrorist attack involving use of WMD that could occur in the community of any VA medical center.

VA has developed policies and directives that address the appropriate response to a WMD attack occurring nearby, but not directly on, a VA medical center. VA has also provided specific policy to VA facilities on the key steps required to implement an appropriate medical center emergency mass-casualty decontamination capability based upon local and community needs as part of a decontamination plan. The intent of those policies and guidelines are to protect the veterans, the facilities, and VA staff, and to provide appropriate care to victims of such an attack who may present at a VA medical center within 24 hours of an incident.

We have selected seventy-eight medical centers for implementation of VA's mass-casualty decontamination program during the next 12 months. These facilities have submitted a list of four core decontamination team members who will receive a one-week training course on decontamination operations and on how to provide the same training to the other decontamination team members at their facilities.

An inaugural VA Decontamination Training Course was held March 10-14, 2003 in Reno, Nevada. The week-long session offered three days of basic emergency hospital decontamination operations, and two days of a train-the-trainer program that gives trainees important skills to take back to their facility. Twenty-four staff from six VA medical centers completed the course.

Subsequent training courses will be held at the Little Rock, AK and Bay Pines, FL VA medical centers.

Upon completion of the core-training program, facilities will be able to purchase the type and amount of decontamination units, and the personal protective equipment that they will need for their program. VA's Office of Acquisition and Materiel Management is currently soliciting vendors to supply this equipment. The core-training program includes guidance necessary to evaluate and identify the range of equipment best suited to individual medical center needs.

VA has established an extensive system to deploy, track, and restock pharmaceutical caches to ensure resources are available to respond to chemical, biological, and radiological attack or other terrorist attacks, as well as respond to a WMD attack within the first 72 hours. VA uses delivery of pharmaceuticals through a centrally controlled tracking system of medical supplies, equipment, and pharmaceutical inventories. The pharmaceutical stockpiles at VA medical centers lessen the time required to obtain critical medical and surgical supplies from external caches such as the National Pharmaceutical Stockpile (NPS) or from usual procurement sources.

VA has developed strategies for providing mental health counseling and assistance, including counseling for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, to any individuals who seek care at VA facilities following bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency. In preparation for providing these services, VA provides training for VA staff and mechanisms for providing care in a coordinated fashion.

The best way to combat harmful emotional effects of such attacks is through providing accurate information to the affected population and through efficient coordination of response to the attack. The clinical mental health role involves accurate diagnosis to differentiate delirium due to the physical effect of an agent from acute stress reactions or psychotic states. It involves the recognition of acute stress reactions, other anxiety disorders, grief and bereavement, and depressive disorders. In the aftermath of an attack, most individuals should be expected to recover from acute emotional responses to the fear and stress of an attack. Clinicians must be alert, however, to detect those who have persisting symptoms of stress, anxiety, depression, and the risk of substance abuse in an attempt to deal with their symptoms.

Over the past several years, VA has created a number of satellite presentations on management of casualties from biological and chemical attack. In the first week of April 2003, VA will broadcast two satellite programs designed to address management of possible casualties of the current war with Iraq. In addition, web-based materials will be made available to VA clinicians addressing both the physical and mental health aspects of war injuries. Issues of biological attacks will be included, since the skills required to deal with these types of injuries and issues in combat casualties are, in most cases, identical to those needed in response to a terrorist attack. We will, over the next weeks and months of 2003, train our mental health clinicians, using approaches acknowledged by our colleagues in HHS, DoD, and the American Red Cross to be most effective in managing response to terrorism. We will create in our Networks an infrastructure of trained clinicians, enduring educational materials, and local and national coordination to ensure that veterans, emergency responders, and others who come to VA for care in the event of a terrorist attack receive the help they need.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to turn my attention to issues involved in force protection for the active duty military forces. Because nearly 250,000 U.S. troops are engaged in renewed conflict in the Gulf region, I am grateful for the opportunity to emphasize that VA today is better prepared to provide high quality health care and disability assistance than at any other time in our history. Since Operations Desert Shield/Desert Storm in 1991, VA has developed and implemented the following policies and programs in response to the lessons learned from that conflict.

Health Care, Surveillance, Education, and Outreach

Health Care following Combat

REV_00382014

It is critical to provide informed, knowledge-based health care after every war. Congress has shown an appreciation for the importance of providing health care for combat veterans. Under 38 U.S.C. § 1710(e)(1)(D), added by Public Law 105-368, VA is authorized to provide health care for a two-year period to veterans who served on active duty in a theater of combat operations during a period of war after the Gulf War, or in combat against a hostile force during a period of hostilities after November 1, 1998. Under this provision, veterans of combat now have a two-year period of access to VA health care for any illness, regardless of whether there is sufficient medical evidence to conclude that the illness is attributable to that service. An exception to this general rule occurs when VA has found that a particular condition is not due to the period of service in question. Veterans of the current conflict with Iraq will be eligible for health care under this provision of law.

In addition to providing needed health care, VA has the capability to collect and analyze information on the health status and health care utilization patterns of veterans. The capability to collect this basic health information helps us evaluate specific health questions, such as determining the causes of difficult-to-explain symptoms experienced by some veterans returning from certain combat theaters or areas of hostilities. VA's medical record system now permits patient health information to be tracked for special groups of veterans. Moreover, standard health care databases allow VA to evaluate the health care utilization of veterans every time they obtain care from VA, not just on the one occasion that they elect to have a registry examination, as was the practice in the past. This will provide a much broader and longer-term assessment of the health status of these veterans because many veterans return frequently for VA health care and are often seen in different clinics or even different parts of the country for specialized health care.

Ensuring High Quality Post-Deployment Health Care

Specialized health care during the post-deployment period can help prevent long-term health problems. Therefore, VA has developed evidence-based clinical approaches for treating veterans following deployment. Newly

I didn't get the job I interviewed for with McKinsey in Brussels, Belgium, but they are hiring 20-30 people. My read on them was that they prefer more recent MBAs that they can 'mold'. Websites are www.mckinsey.com, www.mckinsey.be (an EU spouse makes it easy to work anywhere in the EU). You can call the Belgian office at 011 32 2645 4194 and speak with Ingrid Dehaen. The interviews are in English, the cases are not really business cases, or even similar to their sample on the web, but I'm willing to discuss it with anybody. They are still a good launching pad for future CEOs since they have the reputation and the connections.

19 ESTRADA: What Next?

The New Republic's Crowley writes, In "the most important judicial battle of the Bush administration to date" -- over Miguel Estrada's nomination -- the GOP has "few good options. Thanks to the careful spadework of" Sen. Min. Leader Tom Daschle, Dems "are prepared to sustain their filibuster indefinitely -- or at least until" GOPers "meet their one key demand": the Bush admin "must release dozens, perhaps hundreds, of internal memos Estrada wrote as a top lawyer in the solicitor general's office" from

'92 to '97. Dems "covet those memos," containing Estrada's "recommendations and legal opinions about a range of" SCOTUS cases involving the federal gov't, "because they're the only way to assess this genial cipher." Just 41, Estrada "has never been a judge and has hardly published an opinionated word. Because he is such a blank slate," many Dems are "convinced" Estrada is a "'stealth' ideologue who could wind up" on the SCOTUS as a Hispanic Clarence Thomas.

To hear GOPers tell it, the Dem memo request "is outrageous, unheard of, nothing less than a threat to the republic." Senate Dems "haven't been swayed by these arguments" because "they're really not true" -- Dem researchers "unearthed records from at least five judicial-confirmation hearings" in which gov't legal memoranda "were delivered to the Senate." Their "favorite example" is the DoJ's release of memos during Robert Bork's '87 confirmation battle, "written by a lawyer in the solicitor general's office who held precisely the same job as Estrada." Also, "instructive are memos written by" Justice William Rehnquist when he was a SCOTUS clerk in the '50s, "made available to the Senate" for his '71 and '86 hearings. Dems "don't know just what cases Estrada might have had a hand in," but they believe "he concentrated primarily on criminal cases" and may have "questioned or criticized a lot of landmark criminal decisions," according to one Judiciary Cmte aide.

Senior Dem Judiciary aides say "several" GOP senators "would prefer to release at least some of the memos; two GOPers, ex-Sen. Maj. Leader Trent Lott (R-MS) and Sen. Robert Bennett (R-UT) "have said as much publicly." However, as one Dem aide puts it: "The White House said no." This raises a question about the WH's "real motivation: Is it safeguarding Estrada's nomination or safeguarding the secrecy of executive branch documents? Time and again," from the papers of ex-presidents to notes from Dick Cheney's energy-plan meetings to DoJ deliberations over the Clinton scandals, "the Bush administration has viewed the privileged nature of its internal documents as inviolable."

This leaves Senate GOPers "in a tight spot: trying to shepherd through" a nominee the WH "very much supports but lacking any clear means, short of giving up the memos, to get him through. Little wonder, then, that they're contemplating extreme measures." Two "potential scenarios" have Dems "chewing their nails." The first would be an "audacious" GOP effort to change Senate rules to "outlaw filibusters" on judicial nominations. The other -- "arguably more plausible" -- option would be a recess appointment, "possibly as soon as next month's Easter recess." Estrada could serve until the end of '04 before having to face a Senate vote on his permanent confirmation, however, while a recess appointment would be "a short-term victory" for the WH, "it could come at a heavy cost -- Estrada's future" as a SCOTUS justice. Thus, GOPers "appear stuck with a bitter stalemate" and "'nuclear' options that could blanket them and their nominee in radioactive fallout. Their only way out would appear to be releasing Estrada's memos" (3/31 issue).

19 ESTRADA: What Next?

The New Republic's Crowley writes, In "the most important judicial battle of the Bush administration to date" -- over Miguel Estrada's nomination -- the GOP has "few good options. Thanks to the careful spadework of" Sen. Min. Leader Tom Daschle, Dems "are prepared to sustain their filibuster indefinitely -- or at least until" GOPers "meet their one key demand": the Bush admin "must release dozens, perhaps hundreds, of internal memos Estrada wrote as a top lawyer in the solicitor general's office" from '92 to '97. Dems "covet those memos," containing Estrada's "recommendations and legal opinions about a range of" SCOTUS cases involving the federal gov't, "because they're the only way to assess this genial cipher." Just 41, Estrada "has never been a judge and has hardly published an opinionated word. Because he is such a blank slate," many Dems are "convinced" Estrada is a "'stealth' ideologue who could wind up" on the SCOTUS as a Hispanic Clarence Thomas.

To hear GOPers tell it, the Dem memo request "is outrageous, unheard of, nothing less than a threat to the republic." Senate Dems "haven't been swayed by these arguments" because "they're really not true" -- Dem researchers "unearthed records from at least five judicial-confirmation hearings" in which gov't legal memoranda "were delivered to the Senate." Their "favorite example" is the DoJ's release of memos during Robert Bork's '87 confirmation battle, "written by a lawyer in the solicitor general's office who held precisely the same job as Estrada." Also, "instructive are memos written by" Justice William Rehnquist when he was a SCOTUS clerk in the '50s, "made available to the Senate" for his '71 and '86 hearings. Dems "don't know just what cases Estrada might have had a hand in," but they believe "he concentrated primarily on criminal cases" and may have "questioned or criticized a lot of landmark criminal decisions," according to one Judiciary Cmte aide.

Senior Dem Judiciary aides say "several" GOP senators "would prefer to release at least some of the memos; two GOPers, ex-Sen. Maj. Leader Trent Lott (R-MS) and Sen. Robert Bennett (R-UT) "have said as much publicly." However, as one Dem aide puts it: "The White House said no." This raises a question about the WH's "real motivation: Is it safeguarding Estrada's nomination or safeguarding the secrecy of executive branch documents? Time and again," from the papers of ex-presidents to notes from Dick Cheney's energy-plan meetings to DoJ deliberations over the Clinton scandals, "the Bush administration has viewed the privileged nature of its internal documents as inviolable."

This leaves Senate GOPers "in a tight spot: trying to shepherd through" a nominee the WH "very much supports but lacking any clear means, short of giving up the memos, to get him through. Little wonder, then, that they're contemplating extreme measures." Two "potential scenarios" have Dems "chewing their nails." The first would be an "audacious" GOP effort to change Senate rules to "outlaw filibusters" on judicial nominations. The other -- "arguably more plausible" -- option would be a recess appointment, "possibly as soon as next month's Easter recess." Estrada could serve until the end of '04 before having to face a Senate vote on his permanent confirmation, however, while a recess appointment would be "a short-term victory" for the WH, "it could come at a heavy cost -- Estrada's future" as a SCOTUS justice. Thus, GOPers "appear stuck with a bitter stalemate" and "'nuclear' options that could blanket them and their nominee in radioactive fallout. Their only way out would appear to be releasing Estrada's memos" (3/31 issue).

"(4) This subsection does not affect or discharge a responsibility of the Secretary under a law of the United States.".

SEC. 3010. FORMULA GRANTS FOR OTHER THAN URBANIZED AREAS.

Section 5311(a) would define an eligible recipient and subrecipient of other than urbanized area program funds.

Section 5311(b) would allow other than urbanized area formula grants to be used for capital transportation projects, or operating assistance projects, including the acquisition of transportation services, provided the projects are contained in a State program of public transportation service projects (including agreements with private providers of public transportation services).

Under current law, recipients of grants and contracts to carry out transportation research, technical assistance, training, and related support services (the Rural Transportation Assistance Program (RTAP)) have to compete annually for scarce National Planning and Research funds. Section 5311(b)(3), as redesignated, would provide up to two percent of section 5311 funds to carry out RTAP activities. Such an amendment would better correlate with the amount of rural service available, thereby stabilizing the program. If the formula funding level for rural transit increases, a proportionate level of funding for training and technical assistance delivered at the State level would be available. In short, as the rural program grows, more funds would be required for increased training needs; however, FTA expects that no more than the current two percent of the amount available to carry out section 5311 would be needed for RTAP expenses in future fiscal years. New paragraph (4) would allow the Secretary to use up to 15 percent of the two percent to sustain ongoing national project activities such as the National Transit Resource Center, production training modules, and occasional rural transit research projects of national interest.

New section 5311(c) would provide for an &incentive program.8 Pursuant to new section 5311(c)(2)(A), of the amounts that would be apportioned under the incentive program, the Secretary could use a portion to make grants to establish data collection systems capable of collecting the data necessary to determine whether there have been increases in public transportation patronage. As indicated in section 5311(c)(2)(C), these data are essential to the determination of whether a State may receive funds under the incentive program. In order to allow sufficient time to establish these data systems, the Secretary may use 100 percent of the amount apportioned in 2004, i.e., $2.5 million; $1.5 million in 2005; and $ .5 million in 2006. Section 5311(c)(2)(D) would also allow the Secretary to consider how well increases in public transportation patronage have been accommodated without reducing the efficiency of transit service. The provision would allow the performance awards to be varied depending on the changes in service provision efficiency, while still emphasizing that the performance incentives are based primarily on improving the outcomes of the Federal transit assistance programs by focusing first on public transportation patronage.

The basic section 5311 program amount apportioned to States would be distributed pursuant to the same formula currently being used and now set forth in section 5311(c)(3), as follows:

The total remaining amount to be apportioned in each fiscal year under 5311(c)(1)(A) would be multiplied by a ratio equal to the population of a State's non-urbanized areas divided by the population of all non-urbanized areas in the United States, as shown by the most recent Federal government decennial census of population.

Section 5311(f) would be amended to strike &after September 30, 1993,8 since that date has passed. Section 5311(f)((2) would require the State to consult with affected intercity bus service providers before certifying that the State,s intercity bus service needs are being met adequately. Such consultation would help to ensure the State,s awareness of any intercity bus service needs.

Subsection 5311(g) would retain the Federal share for any capital project at 80 percent or less of the net costs of such a project, as determined by the Secretary. Also retained would be the Federal share for operating assistance at 50 percent or less of the net costs of an operating project, as determined by the Secretary. Consistent with current law, the remainder would not include revenues from the operation of public transportation systems. Rather, the remainder could be provided from a variety of other sources including undistributed cash surpluses or from amounts appropriated or made available for transportation from any other Federal department or agency other than the Department of Transportation, except for Federal Lands Highway funds. Current section 5311(e)(2), which prohibits a State from limiting the level or extent of the Government,s share for operating expenses, would be moved to section 5311(g)(2) under the heading "Government,s Share of Costs.8

Current subsection (h), which allows section 5311 funds to be used for operating assistance, would be included under the General Authority provision at subsection (b). A new section 5311(h) would create an Indian Reservation Rural Transit program under which States would provide grants to Indian tribes to operate, maintain, and establish rural transit programs on reservations or other land under the jurisdiction of the Indian tribes. Of the $10 million available to carry out this subsection in fiscal years 2004 through 2009, $9.5 million would be available to States based on the formula, and $500,000 would be available to the Secretary to provide technical assistance, including best practices and outreach, to the States and Tribes through grants, contracts, or other arrangements. Any remaining funds available three years following the fiscal year in which they were apportioned would be reapportioned to the States.

Section 5311(i), "Relationship to other laws," would codify existing Department of Labor practice of using a Special Warranty that provides a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of employees without referring the application for negotiation. It also would authorize the Secretary to waive the Special Warranty for private non-profit subrecipients on a case-by-case basis as currently authorized under the section 5310 program.

I think this provision is not objectionable in the constitutional sense, give that it is directed at the political classification of Indian Tribes and not at some sort of racial classification.

As indicated in section 5311(c)(2)(C), these data are essential to the determination of whether a State may receive funds under the incentive program. In order to allow sufficient time to establish these data systems, the Secretary may use 100 percent of the amount apportioned in 2004, i.e., $2.5 million; $1.5 million in 2005; and $ .5 million in 2006. Section 5311(c)(2)(D) would also allow the Secretary to consider how well increases in public transportation patronage have been accommodated without reducing the efficiency of transit service. The provision would allow the performance awards to be varied depending on the changes in service provision efficiency, while still emphasizing that the performance incentives are based primarily on improving the outcomes of the Federal transit assistance programs by focusing first on public transportation patronage.

The basic section 5311 program amount apportioned to States would be distributed pursuant to the same formula currently being used and now set forth in section 5311(c)(3), as follows:

> The total remaining amount to be apportioned in each fiscal year under 5311(c)(1)(A) would be multiplied by a ratio equal to the population of a State's non-urbanized areas divided by the population of all non-urbanized areas in the United States, as shown by the most recent Federal government decennial census of population.

Section 5311(f) would be amended to strike "after September 30, 1993," since that date has passed. Section 5311(f)((2) would require the State to consult with affected intercity bus service providers before certifying that the State's intercity bus service needs are being met adequately. Such consultation would help to ensure the State's awareness of any intercity bus service needs.

Subsection 5311(g) would retain the Federal share for any capital project at 80 percent or less of the net costs of such a project, as determined by the Secretary. Also retained would be the Federal share for operating assistance at 50 percent or less of the net costs of an operating project, as determined by the Secretary. Consistent with current law, the remainder would not include revenues from the operation of public transportation systems. Rather, the remainder could be provided from a variety of other sources including undistributed cash surpluses or from amounts appropriated or made available for transportation from any other Federal department or agency other than the Department of Transportation, except for Federal Lands Highway funds. Current section 5311(e)(2), which prohibits a State from limiting the level or extent of the Government's share for operating expenses, would be moved to section 5311(g)(2) under the heading "Government's Share of Costs."

Current subsection (h), which allows section 5311 funds to be used for operating assistance, would be included under the General Authority provision at subsection (b). A new section 5311(h) would create an Indian Reservation Rural Transit program under which States would provide grants to Indian tribes to operate, maintain, and establish rural transit programs on reservations or other land under the jurisdiction of the Indian tribes. Of the $10 million available to carry out this subsection in fiscal years 2004 through 2009, $9.5 million would be available to States based on the formula, and $500,000 would be available to the Secretary to provide technical assistance, including best practices and outreach, to the States and Tribes through grants, contracts, or other arrangements. Any remaining funds available three years following the fiscal year in which they were apportioned would be reapportioned to the States.

Section 5311(i), "Relationship to other laws," would codify existing Department of Labor practice of using a Special Warranty that provides a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of employees without referring the application for negotiation. It also would authorize the Secretary to waive the Special Warranty for private non-profit subrecipients on a case-by-case basis as currently authorized under the section 5310 program.

The Cato Institute
invites you to a Hill Briefing

What's Up with the PATRIOT Act?
Concerns about the Legislative Response to 9/11 and the Prospect of a PATRIOT II

featuring

Tim Lynch
Director, Project on Criminal Justice
Cato Institute

Jim Dempsey
Executive Director
Center for Democracy and Technology

Less than seven weeks after the atrocity of September 11, 2001, Congress passed the U.S.A. PATRIOT Act. There are now rumors of a second PATRIOT Act.
Although the shock and anger over 9/11 that fueled the first act are understandable, some aspects of the legislation raise concerns. Tim Lynch will discuss the dangers that always follow such a national crisis, including the temptation to abandon procedural norms and the expansion and concentration of power in the executive branch. Jim Dempsey will discuss some specific concerns with the PATRIOT Act, recommend legislative responses to some of its more troublesome provisions, and comment on current proposals for further legislation (PATRIOT II).

The call to "hook" General Meese already has been scheduled for this Thursday, April 3, at 4:30 pm. Joel in my office is scheduling the call. The call-in number will be 1-800-498-2860, and you just ask for Federalist Society. I know Meese and Tim are available. I will be there. Boyden and Jay TBD, but we can go forward without them for the call if need be-they already are on board and we can all make that very clear. Bottom line is that Meese was very hard to schedule and we have to do it then.

In terms of lunch, Boyden, myself, and Goeglein are already scheduled to do just that on the 10th of April at noon. Do you think that would fit with your and the Judge's schedule? If so, I am sure we could reach critical mass with either Jay or Meese or both.

invites you to a Hill Briefing

You Can Fight City Hall Ending the District of Columbia?s Gun Ban

featuring

Robert Levy

Cato Institute

Gene Healy
Senior Editor
Cato Institute

For more than a quarter-century, the District of Columbia government has enforced one of the most draconian gun control regimes in the nation?effectively forbidding D.C. residents from keeping functional firearms within their own homes. Yet violent criminals continue to carry guns, and the law-abiding citizens whom the District has disarmed are at their mercy. Recently, six District residents brought suit in federal court seeking to vindicate their Second Amendment rights. Please join us to hear from two of their attorneys on the meaning of the Second Amendment, the theory behind the lawsuit, and the prospects for success.

Attached is an article (quite favorable) in the Hartford Courant reporting last week's nomination of Mark Kravitz to the D. Conn.

One amusing note: The article reports that "several sources said . . . that Bush nominated Kravitz at the request of Rehnquist." So that's what the POTUS meeting with the Chief was all about . . . .

Kravitz Nominated For Judgeship

By EDMUND H. MAHONY
COURANT STAFF WRITER

Mark R. Kravitz, a leading Connecticut appellate lawyer whose work colleagues describe as "brilliant," has been nominated by President Bush to become a U.S. District Court judge in Hartford.

Kravitz, 52, is a partner at Wiggin & Dana in New Haven and is a former clerk for William H. Rehnquist, the chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

"He has a brilliant mind. He is a good writer. He sees right through issues in very complicated cases," said Wesley W. Horton, another state appeals specialist who has worked with and against Kravitz. "It's nice to see somebody appointed because he is a real practitioner and not just because he knew somebody."

Hugh Keefe, a criminal defense lawyer who is chairman of a state commission that screens Superior Court judges, called Kravitz "a brilliant appellate lawyer."

Colleagues said that Kravitz's practice in recent years has become devoted almost exclusively to appeals work. He is described in legal publications as the top appellate litigator at Wiggin & Dana, a firm with a successful and growing appellate practice.

In 2000, Kravitz rescued his partners when he persuaded the state Supreme Court to reverse a multimillion-dollar judgment against Yale University on behalf of a Yale medical student. The student claimed lack of training caused her to become infected by the AIDS virus through an accidental needle prick. Wiggin & Dana, representing Yale, lost the case at the trial level.

Two years later, Kravitz invigorated trademark rights when he convinced the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals that a company rebuilding medical endoscopes was infringing on the trademark of the original manufacturer. The ruling, the first by a U.S. appeals court on the subject, was expected to influence how medical devices are labeled and regulated when unauthorized third-party repair firms do extensive repairing or "remanufacturing."

In Connecticut, Kravitz argued successfully that the state Appellate Court should permit seven Catholic priests suspected of sexual abuse to intervene in a lawsuit filed against another priest by abuse victims. The decision allowed the seven to argue against the public dissemination of their disciplinary files.

In general, however, Kravitz has been a forceful opponent of closing judicial proceedings to the public. He helped persuade a Superior Court judge not to close hearings that eventually embarrassed political figures in a case arising from the corruption investigation of former state Treasurer Paul Silvester. In 1995, Kravitz was honored by the state newspaper industry for his work preventing political interests from keeping government activities secret.

If his nomination is approved by the U.S. Senate, Kravitz will replace U.S. District Judge Alfred V. Covello, who is becoming a senior federal judge. Covello will continue to sit in Hartford and preside over a reduced caseload, if he chooses.

A few trial lawyers groused privately Monday that Kravitz's relatively limited trial experience could hamper his development as a judge. But more called it a plus.

"District judges have a lot of issues in the law and he is going to be five minutes ahead of the lawyers," Horton said.

Constitutional lawyer Ralph G. Elliot called Kravitz a "very bright and able lawyer with considerable experience in not only litigation, but also federal litigation." New Haven litigator Ira Grudberg said, "He's extremely capable. Bright as hell. Very, very good at the appellate stuff." Nell Jessup Newton, dean of the University of Connecticut School of Law, called Kravitz "a terrific lawyer."

Several sources said Monday that Bush nominated Kravitz at the request of Rehnquist. It would not be the first time that the chief justice has taken an interest in Kravitz's career. Kravitz clerked for Rehnquist from 1978 to 1979. In 2001, Rehnquist arranged the appointment of Kravitz to the U.S. Judicial Conference's Standing Committee on Rules of Practice. Kravitz became one of four attorneys on a 12-member committee — eight are federal judges — that recommends rules changes to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Kravitz writes a column for the National Law Journal on appellate practice and procedure and has published more than 40 articles in publications including the Connecticut Bar Journal and the University of Connecticut Law Review. He has lectured extensively on the practice of law. He taught at the University of Connecticut and Yale University schools of law in the late 1990s.

When he isn't writing or arguing the law, Kravitz runs, reads and spends time with his wife and children, who are 14, 22 and 24. They live in Guilford.

Kravitz was born in Philadelphia and studied at Wesleyan University and the Georgetown University Law Center. He joined Wiggin & Dana in 1976 and became a partner in 1980, after spending time away from the firm to clerk for Rehnquist.

A New Low As Senate Republicans Continue To Change, Bend And Even Break The Rules On Judicial Nominations --

The Republican-led Senate today (Tuesday) changed yet another longstanding Judiciary Committee practice in order to stack the deck for the Bush Administration's efforts to pack the courts with ideologically chosen judicial nominees: Today, FOR THE FIRST TIME, a hearing was held on a nominee (Carolyn Kuhl) for which both blue slips were not returned by the nominee's home-state senators. Never once during his earlier tenure as chairman of the Judiciary Committee did Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) allow a hearing on any judicial nominee when there was an objection to a hearing from one or both home-state senators. The difference then is that there was a Democratic President in office during Senator Hatch's earlier tenure as chairman, and today there is a Republican President. Blue slips are the enforcement mechanism for consultation by the President with senators about nominations to their home states. Unlike earlier Presidents of both parties, President Bush has refused to meaningfully consult with home-state senators of most of his candidates for judicial vacancies, particularly for the Circuit Courts. More often, White House "consultation" is essentially "notice" of White House intent to nominate someone, regardless of the objections or concerns of home-state Senators.

The Circuit Court nominee at today's hearing is Carolyn Kuhl, for the Ninth Circuit, and the Senator objecting to the hearing is a Democrat, Senator Boxer of California. Senator Hatch had a firm practice when he chaired the Committee and Republican home-state Senators objected to President Clinton's nominees ? no hearing, no consideration, no action. Next week it will be Senator Edwards' objections to Terry Boyle that are overridden, and after Easter it is possible that the objections of Senator Levin and Senator Stabenow to nominees for Michigan vacancies on the Sixth Circuit will be ignored.

Today's change in committee practice comes on top of other changes in Committee practices that Chairman Hatch had followed earlier -- and even the breaking of the Judiciary Committee's Rule IV, which for nearly a quarter of a century protected the minority's right to debate. All changes are being made on behalf of the most controversial of President Bush's judicial nominees.

Another significant development at today's hearing: The Kuhl nomination also raises the freshest evidence of precedents for the Executive Branch providing the Senate with attorney memos. For most of the last year, the Bush Administration has denied the existence of this or other such precedents, as it refused the Judiciary Committee's request for Miguel Estrada's work memos. As an attorney in the Justice Department, Kuhl had worked on the Reagan Administration's position on the Bob Jones University appeal (involving the university's tax-exempt status). The Reagan Administration subsequently submitted her work memos on the case to the Senate Finance Committee.

FOLLOWING is Senator Leahy's opening statement at today's hearing, in which he outlines the lengthening list of changes implemented by the Republican majority now that a Republican is in the White House:

Opening Statement of Senator Patrick Leahy,

Ranking Democratic Member,

Senate Judiciary Committee

Judicial Nominations Hearing

April 1, 2003

Today we meet to consider the nomination of California Judge Carolyn Kuhl to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, Florida Judge Cecilia Altonaga to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, and Louisiana Judge Patricia Minaldi to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana. The District Court nominees have the support of their home-state Senators, although, as I will discuss in a moment, Senators Graham and Nelson have had a most difficult time getting the White House to agree to continue the tradition of the Florida bipartisan selection commission, and have only recently come to a meeting of the minds with the White House.

The Circuit Court nominee before us today, Judge Carolyn Kuhl, however, is not supported by both of her home-state Senators. Her appearance before this Committee, despite that clearly stated opposition, is the latest in a string of transparently partisan actions taken by the Senate's new majority since the beginning of this Congress. In each of these actions ? each of them unprecedented -- Republicans have done something they never did while in the majority from 1995 to 2001. Each provocative step, taken in tandem with the White House, has broken new ground in politicizing the federal judiciary. The Republican majority has shown a corrosive and raw-edged willingness to change, bend and even break the rules that they themselves followed before when the judicial nominees involved were a Democratic president's choices, instead of a Republican president's choices. Lest some observers wrongly conclude that this sudden and orchestrated series of rules changes is just 'politics as usual,' it most certainly is not.

First, in January, one hearing was held for three controversial Circuit Court nominees, scheduled to take place in the course of a very busy day in the Senate. There was no precedent for this in the years that Republicans served in the majority and a Democrat was in the White House. In six years during the Clinton Administration, never once were three Circuit Court nominees, let alone three very controversial ones, before this body in a single hearing. But in this session, it is the very first hearing that was scheduled. Why the change in practice? The only conceivable difference is that now there is a Republican in the White House.

When there was a Democratic president in the White House, circuit nominees were delayed and deferred, and vacancies on the Courts of Appeals more than doubled under Republican leadership, from 16 in January 1995, to 33 when the Democratic majority took over partway through 2001.

Under Democratic leadership we held hearings on 20 Circuit Court nominees in 17 months. Indeed, while Republicans averaged 7 confirmations to the Circuit Courts every 12 months, the Senate under Democratic leadership confirmed 17 in its 17 months in the majority ? and we did so with a White House that was uncooperative in a magnitude of historic proportions.

This year with a Republican in the White House, the Republican majority has gone from idling -- the restrained pace it had said was required for Clinton nominees -- to overdrive for the most controversial of President Bush's nominees.

But that dramatic change in pace is not the only politicized action taken by the Senate's new majority this year. Next, the Republican majority supported and facilitated the re-nomination of Priscilla Owen to a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, for which she already had been rejected by this Committee. Then they brought her back for a hearing during which no new facts of any significance were introduced, but during which many leading questions were asked and accusations of unfairness made. This is a nomination that never should have been re-sent to the Senate, and which, if it succeeds, will only be because of a display of raw politics.

Now the Republican majority has scheduled this hearing for a nominee who does not have blue slips returned from both of her home-state Senators ? that is, a nominee for whom only one of her home-state Senators has indicated she agrees that a hearing should be held. Now, we will surely hear today, in defense of this hearing, a long recitation of the history of the blue slip. We will hear how it was used unfairly during the unfortunate past of the Committee, to keep the federal bench from being integrated. We will hear how other Chairmen, Senators Kennedy and Biden, modified their policies to allow for more fairness in the consideration of a more diverse federal bench. And, we will hear how the Chairman's real objection during the Clinton Administration was the so-called "lack of consultation" with Republican Senators, and how fairly and successfully President Bush's White House has consulted with obstreperous Democrats. The Chairman will tell us that he considers himself the heir to Democratic traditions, that he has always followed those policies and is only now acting consistent with his own past practice.

What I doubt we will hear from the other side of the aisle is the plain and simple truth of the two distinct practices the majority has followed. While it is true that various Chairmen of the Judiciary Committee have used the blue-slip in different ways, some to maintain unfairness, and others to attempt to remedy it, it is also true that each of those Chairmen was consistent in his application of his own policy -- that is, until now. Today is the first time that this Chairman will ever have convened a hearing for a judicial nominee who did not have two positive blue slips returned to the Committee. The first time, ever. Despite protestations that this has been the Chairman's consistent policy over time, the facts show exactly the opposite.

Without going through a dissertation-length statement on each blue slip and the policies they articulated, let me just show you examples of two different ones. These pieces of blue paper are what the Chairman uses to solicit the opinion of home-state Senators about the President's nominees. When President Clinton was in office, this was the blue slip sent to Senators, asking their consent. On the face of the form is written the following:

Please return this form as soon as possible to the nominations office. No further proceedings on this nominee will be scheduled until both blue slips have been returned by the nominee's home state senators.

When President Bush began his term, and Senator Hatch took over the Chairmanship at the start of the 107(superscript: th) Congress in late January, 2001, the blue slip sent out to Senators changed, and today says simply:

Please complete the attached blue slip form and return it as soon as possible to the Committee office.

The blue slip practice is an enforcement mechanism for consultation by the White House with Senators about nominees to their home states. This new blue slip contains no requirement that the President may have to engage in sufficiently meaningful consultation with home-state Senators in order to gain their consent, no rule that one Senator's agreement is enough to move a nominee, no distinction between District and Circuit Court nominees. All it contains is a simple, unsubtle, 180-degree turn in the direction of the policy, now that the person nominating the judges is a Republican.

I know my colleagues on the other side do not want to be reminded of what happened to so many of President Clinton's nominees, but I cannot entirely leave that part of this story out. The blue slip policy that was in effect and that was strictly enforced by the Chairman during the Clinton Administration operated as an absolute bar to the consideration of any nominee to any court unless both home-state Senators had returned positive blue slips. No time limit was set, no reason had to be articulated. Remember, before the Senate's change to Democratic majority in July of 2001, all of these decisions were being made in secret. Blue slips were not public, and they were allowed to function as an anonymous hold on otherwise qualified nominees.

A few examples of the operation of the blue slip and how it was scrupulously honored by the Committee during the Clinton Presidency are worth remembering. Remember, in the 106(superscript: th) Congress alone, more than half of President Clinton=s Circuit Court nominees in the 106(superscript: th) Congress were defeated through the operation of the blue slip or other such partisan obstruction. Perhaps the most vivid is the story of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, where Senator Helms was permitted by this Committee to resist President Clinton's nominees for six years. James Beaty was first nominated to the Fourth Circuit from North Carolina by President Clinton in 1995, but no further action was taken on his nomination in 1995, 1996, 1997, or 1998. Another Fourth Circuit nominee from North Carolina, Rich Leonard, was nominated in 1995, but no further action was taken on his nomination either in 1995 or 1996. James Wynn, again a North Carolina nominee to the Fourth Circuit, sent to the Senate by President Clinton in 1999, sat without action in 1999, 2000, and early 2001, until President Bush withdrew his nomination.

Why? Because one senator from the nominees' home state objected to their moving forward. Was this right or wrong? That is a question for another day and another history lesson. But it was done by a Republican Senate to the nominee of a Democratic President, and done by the same Chairman who today sees fit to ignore the protests, for very real and substantive reasons, of a Democratic Senator to the nominee of a Republican President.

As for the red herring of consultation, again the facts speak for themselves. No doubt we will hear today that during the Clinton Administration blue slip objections had to be honored because of what will now be called, in a bit of revisionism fit for study by Sovietologists, insufficient consultation with home-state Senators. But those of us who were here then know differently. We know that the Clinton White House bent over backwards to work with Republican Senators and seek their advice on appointments to both Circuit and District Court vacancies. There were many times when the White House made nominations at the direct suggestion of Republican Senators, and there are judges sitting today on the Ninth Circuit and the Fourth Circuit, in the District Courts in Arizona, Utah, Mississippi, and many other places only because the voices of Senators in the opposite party were heeded.

In contrast, since the beginning of its time in the White House, this Bush Administration has sought to overturn traditions of bipartisan nominating commissions and to run roughshod over the advice of Democratic Senators. They changed the systems in Wisconsin, Washington, and Florida that had worked so well for so many years. They ignored theprotests of Senators like Barbara Boxer and John Edwards who not only objected to the nominee proposed by the White House, but who, in attempts to reach a true compromise, also suggested their own Republican alternatives. But those overtures were flatly rejected, and today what we see is just another facet of that unfortunate policy.

Ignoring bipartisan judicial nominating commissions is just another step in the march to entirely politicizing the federal judiciary, and that is exactly what the Bush White House did to the State of Florida. Last year Senators Graham and Nelson were compelled to write in protest to the White House Counsel's flaunting of the time-honored procedures for choosing qualified candidates for the bench. A process that had worked to fill 29 District Court vacancies over ten years was bypassed by this President. I am pleased that the White House has finally agreed to the Florida Senators' proposals so that we can get on with processing the nomination of Cecilia Altonaga. I hope the White House will move to cooperate with other Democratic Senators and increase the almost non-existent level of consultation. We look forward to hearing from Judge Altonaga and Judge Minaldi today, and we welcome and congratulate them and their families.

And, although I object to this hearing being held, I will participate in the questioning of Judge Kuhl, whose nomination rightly raises concerns. Her past advocacy for aiding educational institutions which discriminate on the basis of race, as well as her work on cases involving fundamental constitutional rights, including the right to privacy, give me great concern about her willingness to follow the law, and about the extremism that is evident in her record. I look forward to hearing her answers today.

DRAFT

STATEMENT OF MEL MARTINEZ
SECRETARY
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

BEFORE THE
UNITED STATES HOUSE COMMITTEE ON FINANCIAL SERVICES, SUBCOMMITTEE ON HOUSING AND COMMUNITY OPPORTUNITY

APRIL 8, 2003

Chairman Ney, Ranking Member Waters, Distinguished Members of the Committee:

Thank you for the invitation to join you this afternoon. I appreciate this opportunity to outline the American Dream Downpayment Initiative. The Initiative is a powerful tool for increasing homeownership, and President Bush has proposed expanding its reach in Fiscal Year 2004 by increasing funding to $200 million.

Mr. Chairman, I applaud your leadership in calling this hearing. On a personal note, I want you to know how much I enjoyed visiting the City of Logan, Ohio, with you yesterday. Along with showing me the impressive work being done there to create new housing opportunities, you also showed me great hospitality.

I want to commend my fellow Floridian – Congresswoman Harris – for introducing H.R. 1276. Her bill has earned the support of 35 cosponsors from both sides of the political aisle, reflecting the point I often make that housing is a non-partisan issue – one that crosses the lines of politics and party.

Homeownership is a cornerstone of America, and the President and I are committed to helping more families know its many – and profound – benefits.

For families, homeownership represents the path to prosperity. Americans see a home not only as shelter, but also as a safe investment, and one that can be leveraged to finance other priorities, such as starting a business or sending a child to college. Homeownership creates stakeholders who make their communities stronger by involving themselves in local activities.

The implications of large-scale homeownership reach well beyond the benefits to individual families and communities, of course: homeownership is a powerful economic force for the entire nation.

Where many sectors of the economy have performed below expectations over the past two years, the housing market has remained extremely strong. Housing was key to bolstering our economy in the months following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. Housing helped to cushion many areas of the country from recession, as home sales and refinancings pumped hundreds of billions of dollars into the economy.

As a result of the exceptionally strong housing market and the best financing conditions available in decades, more Americans own homes today than at any time in our history: 68.3 percent of all Americans are homeowners. Yet, we see a persistent and troubling gap between the homeownership rates of minorities and non-minorities. By a significant margin, minority families are less likely to own their own homes.

Eliminating the minority homeownership gap is one of this Administration's top priorities... and a responsibility fundamental to HUD's mission as the nation's housing agency.

Last year, the President set a bold goal of creating an additional 5.5 million minority homeowners by the end of this decade. HUD responded by launching our Blueprint for the American Dream Partnership, and every segment of the housing industry has joined with us to help meet the President's challenge.

REV_00382999

The Administration and its partners are focused on removing the barriers that block too many families from achieving the American Dream of homeownership. These barriers include a lack of financing options for low-income families, a lack of information about the homebuying process, a lack of affordable housing in some communities, and the barrier we are specifically addressing through the American Dream Downpayment Initiative: high down payments and closing costs.

Coming up with enough cash to pay the upfront costs of homeownership is often the single greatest barrier to buying a home. In Fannie Mae's 2002 National Housing Survey, a high down payment was the barrier most frequently cited by those polled; 32 percent of Americans said they would have major difficulties making a down payment.

The lack of savings is a problem for lower-income and minority families. Oftentimes, the transfer of family assets from parents to their children can mean the difference in whether a family can buy a home. These intergenerational wealth transfers serve to boost homeownership by helping many younger families afford their first home.

In many cases, however, lower-income and minority families simply lack the accumulated wealth that can provide for down payment and closing costs. To help families overcome this barrier to homeownership, the Administration proposed the American Dream Downpayment Initiative for FY 2002, and is asking the Congress to boost its funding level to $200 million for FY 2004.

The President's commitment to lifting families into homeownership through down payment assistance dates back to his 2000 campaign. The American Dream Downpayment Initiative fulfills one of his long-standing housing goals.

The Initiative is housed within the HOME Investment Partnerships program, which helps communities across the country expand the supply of decent, affordable housing. American Dream Downpayment Initiative grants will be awarded to state and local governments to assist low-income, first-time homebuyers with closing costs and down payments. To receive assistance, families must have annual incomes that do not exceed 80 percent of the area median income.

We anticipate that the Initiative will help make homeownership a reality for 40,000 families annually, providing an average subsidy of $5,000. Although the American Dream Downpayment Initiative is not targeted specifically at minorities, we believe it will be particularly effective at reaching minority populations, based upon the history of the HOME program. Today, fully 55 percent of the families helped by HOME are minorities.

Congress appropriated $75 million for the American Dream Downpayment Initiative for the current fiscal year. I thank the Members for doing so. As a result of your support, 14,500 families who have perhaps only dreamed of homeownership will soon have homes of their own. We expect to be completed with the rulemaking process within the next few months and have the entire $75 million appropriation delivered by the end of Fiscal Year 2003.

REV_00383000

The Congress now has an opportunity to build on its commitment and guide even more families toward the American Dream of homeownership. I urge the Committee to fund the American Dream Downpayment Initiative at $200 million as requested by President Bush.

As always, I welcome your guidance as we continue our work together.

Thank you.

Brett --

I'm afraid I won't be able to attend your talk on judicial confirmations tonight, but I think you'll agree that I have a good excuse: I'm hard at work on your behalf, grappling with issues of filibuster and entrenchment. I look forward to discussing those issues with you and Ed later this week. And as for the judicial confirmation process, I hope that some day you will enlighten me privately, preferably over drinks.

Brett --

I just got invited by the YLSAA to hear you speak about "Selection and Confirmation of Bush Administration Judges" on February 26. I would love to attend, but Steve, Susan, Stacey, and I already have opera tickets for that night. Please let me know if you're ever doing a similar event in the future; I'd be very interested to hear your thoughts on the topic.

I'm having a great time at OLC, by the way. Thanks again for counseling me to come here. The work is, if anything, even more interesting than I anticipated, and my colleagues are first rate. I hope you are still enjoying the White House Counsel's Office, and I hope that our paths cross again soon.

You Don,t Need Quotas
Expanding opportunity without discrimination.

By Jeb Bush

s the Supreme Court considers the University of Michigan case, our state of Florida offers an inviting alternative to traditional race-based programs that are coming under growing constitutional scrutiny nationwide.

Just over four years ago, our state launched the One Florida <http://www.myflorida.com/myflorida/government/governorinitiatives/one_florida/> initiative with the ambitious goal of increasing opportunity and diversity in Florida's state universities and in state contracting, without relying on the divisive policies of the past such as quotas, racial preferences, and set-asides. The One Florida initiative is designed to level the education playing field for all Floridians by providing rewarding school experiences to all students regardless of race, gender, ethnicity, or zip code. We have broadened the search for talented minorities through greater outreach and recruitment, and increased access for and success of underrepresented students while employing race-neutral admissions criteria. Since 1999, we have pursued policies that empower and prepare all of our students while simultaneously targeting assistance to the most needy. The result has been that minority enrollment at our state universities has either risen or held steady under One Florida, including at our flagship universities. Our record of success clearly demonstrates that diversity can be attained through race-neutral means.

In stark contrast, the University of Michigan continues to use race as a determining factor for admissions at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. More specifically, the university awards extra points to minority candidates at the undergraduate level, while the law school uses race as one of the factors that can greatly enhance an applicant's chance of admission. Regardless of how one tries to explain the rationale behind the university's policy, this system is fundamentally flawed. As President Bush pointed out, the Michigan program "amounts to a quota system that unfairly rewards or penalizes prospective students solely on their race."

For those in search of a solution, we offer the One Florida approach. In striving to achieve greater diversity in our state universities, my administration never lost sight of two guiding principles: 1) Diversity is a worthy goal, and 2) Outreach and encouragement at the K-12 level is the key to success. As governor of one of the most racially diverse states in the country, I know firsthand that our classrooms and workplaces benefit greatly when opportunity is extended to all. By strengthening the pre-college education experience for all students, we can maintain and increase diversity without a formulaic, one-size-fits-all approach that serves no one's best interest. From the outset, I challenged all university presidents and admissions officers to implement new ways of reaching out to and recruiting minority students to maintain a diverse student population. Today, each of Florida's eleven public universities has established Opportunity Alliances with high schools that have high minority populations, relatively high proportions of dropouts, and relatively low performance on standardized tests. Students in these schools are now being actively recruited while curriculum reform strengthens their high-school experience. In addition, my administration has doubled funding for need-based financial aid over the past four years to help ensure access and the ability to pay for college go hand-in-hand.

In addition, we have entered into a partnership with the College Board to expand AP course opportunities statewide for students in low performing schools, provide free SAT test prep classes for low-income students, and free PSAT or PLAN testing for all tenth graders. The results speak for themselves: In the 2002-03 class of undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in the State University System, minorities comprise 36.2 percent of all new students and 23.5 percent of all new graduate students, respectively. In addition, from 2001-2002, the number of African-American and Hispanic students who took AP Examinations increased by 21 percent and 22 percent, respectively. Both of these increases are higher than the averages for U.S. public schools, as are the numbers of African-American and Hispanic students in Florida with scores of 3 or higher on the AP Examinations.

We are committed to diversity here in Florida, but it must be achieved in ways that both comply with the Constitution and truly benefit our students. Our track record under One Florida proves that it can be achieved through race-neutral means. Florida's programs, and the principles that they advance, are more than just another way of accomplishing true diversity. They provide a better way. Florida's plan is better in that it no longer accepts the lack of quality in the public schools that serve our underprivileged children; better because it encourages all students regardless of race or economic status to aspire to post-secondary education; and better because it looks forward to a day when racial classifications and separate standards are no longer deemed necessary by anyone.

* Jeb Bush <http://www.myflorida.com/b_eog/owa/b_eog_www.html.main_page> is the governor (R.) of Florida.

Subject: PRA 6

Jennifer Beverly (our government customer support rep at 1800 G St) says that PRA 6 is refusing to relinquish possession of his WHO (OHS); PC. He wants a CD of the data burned first. When he requested the CD originally, they went to his TPO computer, but there was no data on it. It seems he was using his WHO computer for his TPO work. So now he;has stated he will not give us back the WHO PC until he gets a CD burned of the data on the hard drive of the WHO computer. Jennifer has emailed Faisal since it is way past the agreed upon date, but has not heard back yet. Evidently, PRA 6 is putting on a lot of pressure on this issue, and Jennifer says he is getting nasty about it.;We are trying to verify whether he still has a WHO laptop. Does this need WHO and OHS (HSC) counsel concurrence? Just need some guidance. Thanks. Bart

The Senate is expected to vote on this amendment today, so we need to hear from you no later than the deadline. If you disagree with the Department's proposed position, please notify me immediately so that appropriate policy level discussions can be arranged.

The text of the Stevens amendment is as follows:"None of the funds in this Act or any other Act may be obligated or expended to pay for transportation described in section 41106 of title 49, United States Code, to be performed by any air carrier that is not effectively controlled by citizens of the United States. For purposes of that title, an air carrier shall not be considered to be effectively controlled by the citizens of the United States if the air carrier receives 50 percent or more of its operating revenues from a person not a citizen of the United States and such person, directly or indirectly, either owns a voting interest in the air carrier or is owned by an agency or instrumentality of a foreign state. This prohibition applies to transportation performed under any contract awarded or re-awarded after the date of enactment of this Act."

According to DOT, this amendment is designed to reverse a DOT decision that DHL qualifies as an "air carrier" (thus a "U.S. citizen") for regulatory purposes.

The Honorable William [Bill] Frist
Majority Leader
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Majority Leader:

I would like to advise you of the Department of Transportation's (DOT) significant concerns over a pending amendment to the Defense Supplemental measure now before the Senate. We oppose its inclusion in this legislation.

The troubling proposal would prohibit DOD from acquiring air services from any air carrier "not effectively controlled" by U.S. citizens as that term is newly defined in this legislation. This significant, new statutory limitation would eliminate DOD's access to the aircraft of air carriers currently licensed by DOT who may not meet the new standard. While DOD is in the middle of a major effort to move troops and materiel to the Persian Gulf region in support of the war effort, this provision could have an immediate and adverse effect on the Nation's airlift capabilities.

This amendment could potentially apply to a number of U.S. carriers (including those engaged in code-sharing with foreign carriers) because the revenue earned from code-sharing would count toward the determination of non-U.S. control, and because alliances between U.S. and foreign carriers may include equity investment that also could determine non-U.S. control. If that were the case, more than just the two carriers apparently targeted by this amendment would be affected.

Although perhaps not intended by the drafting, the provision would do more than bar services to DOD; it would likely require DOT to revoke overall authority to operate as a U.S. air carrier in some cases because the provision undermines the Department's determination that a described carrier is a U.S. citizen.

The provision would prevent U.S. air carriers from accepting certain types of business under a variety of circumstances. For example, if a cargo air carrier that is owned entirely by U.S. citizens were to enter into a major contract with a foreign government (e.g., Britain or Canada) and the portion of the operating revenues represented by that contract exceeded the 50% standard, which could fluctuate quickly or temporarily depending on the period of time reviewed, the carrier could be subject to having its certificate revoked.

Sincerely yours,

Norman Y. Mineta

This responds to your e-mail request for advice, below.; In addition, is this a matter for consideration also by Brett Kavanaugh, given the Hatch Act issues?

Penny Douglas is an Executive Assistant in the Office of Legislative Affairs, and is not a commissioned officer.; She plans to participate in VOLPAC events scheduled for April 25 to 27, 2003, in Nashville, Tennessee, and asks whether she may accept VOLPAC,s offer to pay her airfare to and from Nashville, so that she may attend the event.

Ms. Douglas explains that VOLPAC is the political action committee of Senator Bill Frist.; She also advises that she has, in the past, volunteered to assist VOLPAC with the logistics of its annual Spring weekend event.;

The Office of Special Counsel,s web-site notes that an employee may attend and be active at political rallies and meetings; join and be an active member of a political party or club; and, hold office in political clubs or parties.

If this event is a fundraiser, the Office of Special Counsel,s web-site also notes that, among other permissible activities, an employee may attend political fundraising functions and is allowed to organize a fundraiser, as long as she does not personally solicit, accept, or receive contributions.; She may even give a speech or keynote address at a political fundraiser, as long as she is not on duty, and does not solicit political contributions.; However, her name may not be shown on an invitation to such a fundraiser as a sponsor or point of contact.

Regarding the VOLPAC offer of travel expenses, ethics regulations provide that an employee who may take an active part in political management or in political campaigns under the Hatch Act, may accept meals, lodgings, transportation and other benefits, including free attendance at events, when provided, in connection with such active participation, by a political organization described in 26 U.S.C. 527(e).; See 5 C.F.R. õ 2635.204(f).

ú;;;;;; The term ''political organization'' in 26 U.S.C. 527(e) means &a party, committee, association, fund, or other organization (whether or not incorporated) organized and operated primarily for the purpose of directly or indirectly accepting contributions or making expenditures, or both, for an exempt function.8;

ú;;;;;; The term ''exempt function'' in 26 U.S.C. 527(e) means & the function of influencing or attempting to influence the selection, nomination, election, or appointment of any individual to any Federal, State, or local public office or office in a political organization, or the election of Presidential or Vice-Presidential electors, whether or not such individual or electors are selected, nominated, elected, or appointed. Such term includes the making of expenditures relating to an office described in the preceding sentence which, if incurred by the individual, would be allowable as a deduction under section 162(a).8

ú;;;;;; The term &political management8 is not otherwise defined.

It is not precisely clear from its web-site (http://www.volpac.com/index.html <http://www.volpac.com/index.html>) whether VOLPAC is actually a &527(e)8 organization, although that most likely is the case considering its mission and purpose statements.;

If Ms. Douglas ascertains that VOLPAC is such an organization, then she may accept the gift of free airfare, as well as any meals, lodgings, other transportation, and other benefits, from that group in connection with her participation in the event.; However, the event apparently begins on a Friday and, if she travels to or attends the event during her normal duty hours, she should be in a leave status during those hours.

Post-Hearing Questions
Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship
to
The Honorable Hector V. Barreto, Administrator,
U.S. Small Business Administration

"Small Businesses Continue to Lose Federal Jobs by the Bundle
March 18, 2003{tc \l1 "March 18, 2003}

Questions submitted by Senator Olympia J. Snowe, Chair

This Committee takes very seriously its responsibility to enhancing small business access to contracting dollars and holding agencies accountable to the 23 percent statutory goals. In your testimony, you state that small businesses received about 22.81 percent of Federal prime contracts. Yet, I hear from small business owners this number may actually be much lower. These small business owners express concerns about the SBA's decision to exclude certain types of contracts from the calculation. In addition, I understand that the SBA Office of Advocacy uses a different approach for calculating goal achievement.

1. Can you further explain the methodology the SBA uses to calculate the 22.81 percent achievement?

- The Small Business Act establishes small business procurement goals as a percentage of the total value of all prime contracts awarded to small businesses.

- As a matter of SBA policy, the goaling baseline includes only prime contracts awarded using appropriated funds in accordance with the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

- Therefore, SBA excludes several categories of procurements from the goaling baseline when establishing goals with the agencies. They are:

    - Non-appropriated fund procurements
    - Mandatory sources of supply (e.g., procurements from the blind and severely handicapped)
    - Contracts for foreign governments or international organizations
    - Contracts not covered by the Federal Acquisition Regulation
    - Transactions that are internal to an Agency (e.g., a DOD component orders from a DOD Supply Depot)

- SBA monitors the agencies goal achievement through procurement data reported to the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS). The FPDS is primarily applicable to contracts awarded using appropriated funds. Therefore, SBA determined that the goaling baseline should only be applicable to prime contract actions awarded using appropriated funds in accordance with the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

- The August 2001 GAO Report (More Transparency Needed in Prime Contract Goal

REV_00383743

Program) stated that SBA's decision to exclude certain contracts is within its discretion under the Small Business Act to administer the Goaling Program.

- At the end of the Fiscal Year, SBA obtains the FPDS data from GSA as a Special Report based on the above methodology. The Report shows each agency's achievements and the aggregate achievements for the Federal Government. There is a delay in receiving timely and accurate year-end FPDS information which makes it difficult to evaluate goal achievements in a timely manner.

- SBA publishes the goals and achievements on SBA's website. Also, we prepare a report to the President and the Congress that includes agencies' achievements against their goals. GSA also includes the data in its Annual Procurement Report.

Follow-up: Although small businesses may not have a reasonable opportunity to compete for certain procurements, isn't it true that small businesses have the ability to perform these procurements?

- Yes.

Follow-up: Wouldn't including these procurements in the calculation more accurately reflect the percentage of small businesses participating in the Federal procurement process?

- SBA does not believe we should include the above transactions in the baseline because small businesses, in most cases, do not have any opportunity to compete for these procurements.

- For example, small businesses probably would not have an opportunity to receive prime contracts for procurements from mandatory sources of supply. However, small businesses may be subcontractors to JWOD non-profit agencies.

- In addition, procurements conducted using non-appropriated funds are not required to follow the FAR. Therefore, those procurements may not follow the procedures for the small business programs.

- Contracts awarded by agencies not covered by the FAR such as the Federal Aviation Administration have flexibility in structuring small business programs that may be inconsistent with the FAR and the Small Business Act.

- Therefore, SBA believes it is the best policy to exclude the above transactions from the goaling baseline to achieve consistency in measuring small business performance in available Federal contracting opportunities.

REV_00383744

2. How does the SBA communicate agency goal achievements to senior agency management?

- SBA conducts mid-year reviews of agencies' accomplishments against their goals by sending letters to the Agency Heads of the top 20 agencies and offering to work with them to develop best practices for achieving small business goals.

- In addition, SBA works with the OSDBU Directors and provides quarterly updates on goal achievements. SBA's website has a link to the Federal Procurement Data Center's website which contains the quarterly goal achievements. However, there is a delay in receiving timely and accurate FPDS information which makes it difficult to evaluate goal achievements in a timely manner.

Follow-up: How often does the SBA communicate this information?

- Since Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS) prime contract data is collected on a quarterly basis, SBA communicates the information as soon as the FPDS data are available.

- SBA communicates the goaling information on prime contracts to the OSDBU Directors quarterly and the Agency Heads semi-annually. The subcontract information is collected in the FPDS on an annual basis.

3. What happens when agencies don't meet their goals?

- At the end of the fiscal year, agencies are required to submit a report to SBA that discusses their goals and achievements with an explanation of any small business program where goals were not met.

- Agencies are required to submit this information along with corrective action plans by May 30th. SBA includes this information in our Annual Report to the President and Congress which is included in the Office of Advocacy's State of Small Business Report.

- SBA continues to work with those agencies that fail to meet their goals to develop best practices and procurement strategies that will help them to achieve their goals in the future.

Follow-up: How does the SBA propose to enforce goal achievement without additional legislative action?

The Federal agencies are responsible for achieving the small business goals. SBA's role is to establish individual agency goals to meet or exceed the government-wide goals, monitor achievements, and report results to the President and the Congress. SBA is committed to seeking top level support for our small business programs from each agency and assisting them with developing procurement strategies to increase opportunities for small businesses. SBA's Deputy Administrator raises procurement issues (including goal achievements) at the President's Management Council meetings and is holding one-on-one meetings with the Senior Leadership at the major Department and Agencies.

Section 15(p)(4)(B) of the Small Business Act currently requires the SBA to annually transmit a report on contract bundling to the Committees on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The Senate Committee on Small Business understands that provisions contained in the 2001 Defense Re-authorization Bill may affect the SBA's ability to meet this requirement.

4. Please provide the status of the "Annual Report on Contract Bundling."

We expect to have it completed by April 30th. However, SBA faces limitations in obtaining the contract bundling data requirements set forth in Section 15(p) of the Small Business Act to complete the report. The statute states that SBA must use data collected in existing systems to comply with this statutory requirement. Consequently, SBA is using the limited information available from the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS) to draft the Annual Report. The FPDS only collects whether an agency indicates the contract action was bundled or not. There is no detailed information on costs savings achieved by bundling, if savings will continue if bundling occurs or the impact of bundling on small businesses.

Questions submitted by Senator John Kerry, Ranking Member:

1. Given the additional responsibilities assigned to procurement center representatives, small business specialists, and the Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBU), what personnel and monetary resources are you planning to commit to implementing the SBA's contract bundling rule once it is finalized, and what is your informal cost estimate to implement the full proposal? Please describe these cost estimates by fiscal year.

SBA does not anticipate the need for any additional personnel to implement our bundling rule. Currently, our PCRs review agency procurements that are not set-aside for small business. The proposed rule will also require the PCR to review certain orders placed against multiple award contracts. In addition, the proposed rule places more responsibility on the agencies to be accountable for avoiding unnecessary contract bundling. The Directors, Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization will direct additional efforts on bundling reviews. SBA will be able to leverage our existing resources through working with those offices.

2. Explain how the Small Business Administration came to the three-tiered threshold levels ($7 million for the DOD, $5 million for NASA, the GSA, and the Department of Energy, and $2 million for all other agencies) to trigger bundling reviews. When comparing these threshold levels to those in S.633, the Small Business Federal Contractor Safeguard Act, how many more bundled contracts would be reviewed by the DOD, NASA, the GSA, and the Department of Energy, if the thresholds for these agencies were at $2 million? Please describe these estimates in terms of contract dollars, by agency per fiscal year.

The Administration's strategy on contract bundling calls for review of acquisitions for bundling issues at agency-specific dollar thresholds between $2 million and $7 million based on an agency's volume of contracts. These thresholds are especially significant in that they trigger additional documentation and review requirements to ensure high level agency attention to potentially bundled acquisitions. In the proposed regulations, this oversight responsibility is assigned to agency OSDBUs, who work with our PCRs to ensure small business participation. SBA participated in the interagency group that developed the proposed regulations. The Interagency Group reviewed contract data from the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS). They determined that the most efficient and effective way to implement this strategy would be to establish in the regulations three thresholds for agency review (i.e., $7 million for DOD, $5 million for NASA, GSA, and DOE, and $2 million for all other agencies). These reviews require allocation of scarce agency resources and, thus, the need for the reviews must be balanced against the perceived benefits. The Administration believes that agency reviews at these thresholds will increase opportunities for small businesses without imposing unreasonable burdens on the agencies.

The levels set forth in the proposed regulations reflect a greater commitment of SBA and agency resources to increase opportunities for small businesses and avoid unnecessary contract bundling. It is not possible to provide the full impact of lowering the threshold to $2 million for DOD, NASA, GSA, and DOE. These federal agencies already review planned acquisitions that are not set-aside for small business. In the case of NASA and GSA, they review all planned acquisitions over $100,000 and for DOD the current threshold is $10,000. Therefore, the largest impact would be a review of certain orders under multiple award contracts, Federal schedule contracts, and other indefinite quantity contracts which are not being uniformly reviewed by the agencies. SBA believes the proposed regulations should be given an opportunity to succeed at the established thresholds.

Based on FY 2001 FPDS data, the below table shows estimated actions and dollars using the thresholds in the proposed rule compared to lowering thresholds as proposed in S.633. The figures cannot answer the question of how many more bundled contracts could be reviewed, but they reflect our best estimate of the potential numbers of actions that could be reviewed for bundling implications. The figures would be reduced for contracts set-aside for small business since these would not be bundled contracts and for orders where the basic contract was already reviewed for bundled. As mentioned above, some of the agencies are already reviewing contracts at lower dollar thresholds for small business participation.

	Actions* >$7 M	Actions* >$5M	Additional Actions* >$2M
DOD	1140 actions $27.7 billion		3,502 actions $9.2 billion
NASA		19 actions 824.4 million	39 actions $90.2 million
GSA		104 actions $2.7 billion	370 actions $1.1 billion
DOE		8 actions $247 million	10actions $31 million

*Actions include: New Definitive Contracts, Orders under Single Award Indefinite Delivery Contracts, Order/Modifications under GSA Schedule Contracts and Other Federal Schedules, and Orders under Multiple Award Contracts.

3. How many more bundled contracts would be reviewed by the DOD, if the threshold were at $5 million, as opposed to the proposed $7 million threshold? Pleased describe the review estimate in terms of the number of contracts and dollars per fiscal year.

Based on FPDS FY 2001 data, the estimated additional actions and dollars for DOD would be as follows.

	Actions* > $7M	Actions* >$5M	Additional Actions*
DOD	1140 actions $27.7 billion	1635 actions $30.6 billion	495 actions $2.9 billion

REV_00383748

*Actions include: New Definitive Contracts, Orders under Single Award Indefinite Delivery Contracts, Order/Modifications under GSA Schedule Contracts and Other Federal Schedules, and Orders under Multiple Award Contracts

4. What measures will you take to ensure that procuring agencies comply with the SBA's proposed rule once it is finalized?

SBA is involved in educating buying activities and the private sector as part of our commitment to ensure that small businesses obtain their share of Federal procurement dollars. For example, SBA staff teaches an advanced training course on small business at the Defense Acquisition University which includes contract bundling. We also participate in Government conferences held by agencies and the private sector where we give an overview of our small business programs. SBA is compiling best practices to share with agencies on maximizing prime and subcontracting opportunities for small businesses in justified bundled contracts.

Our Procurement Center Representatives (PCRs) will continue to review non set-aside procurements for small business opportunities and for bundling implications. We will continue to work closely with agency contracting offices and OSDBUs to mitigate the effects of contract bundling through small business teaming arrangements and promoting maximum subcontracting opportunities.

In addition, SBA has reinitiated surveillance reviews as one way of holding agencies accountable for complying with small business programs. The PCRs will review and analyze contract files to determine if buying activities made every effort to maximize contract opportunities for small businesses and the buying activities policies and procedures in support of small business programs.

5. Would changing the current definition of contract bundling to incorporate consolidated contracts result in more contracts being awarded to small businesses? Please explain.

The Administration has not formulated a position on changing the definition to include consolidation contracts. SBA believes the proposed regulations should be given a chance to succeed without statutory changes.

David --
John Bellinger asked me to look at the amendment that you brought to his attention, which we have now learned that Allen plans to take to the floor this afternoon. The amendment would permit suits against certain States -- those on the terrorism list -- even though such suits may be barred by an international agreement. The immediate practical effect of the amendment is to provide the Iran hostages a cause of action and result in a violation by the United States of its Algiers Accords obligations. John suggested that I ask you whether you have any thoughts on how we can best go about keeping this out. Many thanks, htm

Post-Hearing Questions
Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship
to
The Honorable Hector V. Barreto, Administrator,
U.S. Small Business Administration

"Small Businesses Continue to Lose Federal Jobs by the Bundle
March 18, 2003{tc \l1 "March 18, 2003}

Questions submitted by Senator Olympia J. Snowe, Chair

This Committee takes very seriously its responsibility to enhancing small business access to contracting dollars and holding agencies accountable to the 23 percent statutory goals. In your testimony, you state that small businesses received about 22.81 percent of Federal prime contracts. Yet, I hear from small business owners this number may actually be much lower. These small business owners express concerns about the SBA's decision to exclude certain types of contracts from the calculation. In addition, I understand that the SBA Office of Advocacy uses a different approach for calculating goal achievement.

1. Can you further explain the methodology the SBA uses to calculate the 22.81 percent achievement?

- The Small Business Act establishes small business procurement goals as a percentage of the total value of all prime contracts awarded to small businesses.

- As a matter of SBA policy, the goaling baseline includes only prime contracts awarded using appropriated funds in accordance with the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

- Therefore, SBA excludes several categories of procurements from the goaling baseline when establishing goals with the agencies. They are:

    - Non-appropriated fund procurements
    - Mandatory sources of supply (e.g., procurements from the blind and severely handicapped)
    - Contracts for foreign governments or international organizations
    - Contracts not covered by the Federal Acquisition Regulation
    - Transactions that are internal to an Agency (e.g., a DOD component orders from a DOD Supply Depot)

- SBA monitors the agencies goal achievement through procurement data reported to the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS). The FPDS is primarily applicable to contracts awarded using appropriated funds. Therefore, SBA determined that the goaling baseline should only be applicable to prime contract actions awarded using appropriated funds in accordance with the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

- The August 2001 GAO Report (More Transparency Needed in Prime Contract Goal

REV_00383804

Program) stated that SBA's decision to exclude certain contracts is within its discretion under the Small Business Act to administer the Goaling Program.

- At the end of the Fiscal Year, SBA obtains the FPDS data from GSA as a Special Report based on the above methodology. The Report shows each agency's achievements and the aggregate achievements for the Federal Government. There is a delay in receiving timely and accurate year-end FPDS information which makes it difficult to evaluate goal achievements in a timely manner.

- SBA publishes the goals and achievements on SBA's website. Also, we prepare a report to the President and the Congress that includes agencies' achievements against their goals. GSA also includes the data in its Annual Procurement Report.

Follow-up: Although small businesses may not have a reasonable opportunity to compete for certain procurements, isn't it true that small businesses have the ability to perform these procurements?

- Yes.

Follow-up: Wouldn't including these procurements in the calculation more accurately reflect the percentage of small businesses participating in the Federal procurement process?

- SBA does not believe we should include the above transactions in the baseline because small businesses, in most cases, do not have any opportunity to compete for these procurements.

- For example, small businesses probably would not have an opportunity to receive prime contracts for procurements from mandatory sources of supply. However, small businesses may be subcontractors to JWOD non-profit agencies.

- In addition, procurements conducted using non-appropriated funds are not required to follow the FAR. Therefore, those procurements may not follow the procedures for the small business programs.

- Contracts awarded by agencies not covered by the FAR such as the Federal Aviation Administration have flexibility in structuring small business programs that may be inconsistent with the FAR and the Small Business Act.

- Therefore, SBA believes it is the best policy to exclude the above transactions from the goaling baseline to achieve consistency in measuring small business performance in available Federal contracting opportunities.

REV_00383805

2. How does the SBA communicate agency goal achievements to senior agency management?

- SBA conducts mid-year reviews of agencies' accomplishments against their goals by sending letters to the Agency Heads of the top 20 agencies and offering to work with them to develop best practices for achieving small business goals.

- In addition, SBA works with the OSDBU Directors and provides quarterly updates on goal achievements. SBA's website has a link to the Federal Procurement Data Center's website which contains the quarterly goal achievements. However, there is a delay in receiving timely and accurate FPDS information which makes it difficult to evaluate goal achievements in a timely manner.

Follow-up: How often does the SBA communicate this information?

- Since Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS) prime contract data is collected on a quarterly basis, SBA communicates the information as soon as the FPDS data are available.

- SBA communicates the goaling information on prime contracts to the OSDBU Directors quarterly and the Agency Heads semi-annually. The subcontract information is collected in the FPDS on an annual basis.

3. What happens when agencies don't meet their goals?

- At the end of the fiscal year, agencies are required to submit a report to SBA that discusses their goals and achievements with an explanation of any small business program where goals were not met.

- Agencies are required to submit this information along with corrective action plans by May 30th. SBA includes this information in our Annual Report to the President and Congress which is included in the Office of Advocacy's State of Small Business Report.

- SBA continues to work with those agencies that fail to meet their goals to develop best practices and procurement strategies that will help them to achieve their goals in the future.

Follow-up: How does the SBA propose to enforce goal achievement without additional legislative action?

The Federal agencies are responsible for achieving the small business goals. SBA's role is to establish individual agency goals to meet or exceed the government-wide goals, monitor achievements, and report results to the President and the Congress. SBA is committed to seeking top level support for our small business programs from each agency and assisting them with developing procurement strategies to increase opportunities for small businesses. SBA's Deputy Administrator raises procurement issues (including goal achievements) at the President's Management Council meetings and is holding one-on-one meetings with the Senior Leadership at the major Department and Agencies.

Section 15(p)(4)(B) of the Small Business Act currently requires the SBA to annually transmit a report on contract bundling to the Committees on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The Senate Committee on Small Business understands that provisions contained in the 2001 Defense Re-authorization Bill may affect the SBA's ability to meet this requirement.

4. Please provide the status of the "Annual Report on Contract Bundling."

We expect to have it completed by April 30th. However, SBA faces limitations in obtaining the contract bundling data requirements set forth in Section 15(p) of the Small Business Act to complete the report. The statute states that SBA must use data collected in existing systems to comply with this statutory requirement. Consequently, SBA is using the limited information available from the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS) to draft the Annual Report. The FPDS only collects whether an agency indicates the contract action was bundled or not. There is no detailed information on costs savings achieved by bundling, if savings will continue if bundling occurs or the impact of bundling on small businesses.

Questions submitted by Senator John Kerry, Ranking Member:

1. Given the additional responsibilities assigned to procurement center representatives, small business specialists, and the Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBU), what personnel and monetary resources are you planning to commit to implementing the SBA's contract bundling rule once it is finalized, and what is your informal cost estimate to implement the full proposal? Please describe these cost estimates by fiscal year.

SBA does not anticipate the need for any additional personnel to implement our bundling rule. Currently, our PCRs review agency procurements that are not set-aside for small business. The proposed rule will also require the PCR to review certain orders placed against multiple award contracts. In addition, the proposed rule places more responsibility on the agencies to be accountable for avoiding unnecessary contract bundling. The Directors, Offices of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization will direct additional efforts on bundling reviews. SBA will be able to leverage our existing resources through working with those offices.

2. Explain how the Small Business Administration came to the three-tiered threshold levels ($7 million for the DOD, $5 million for NASA, the GSA, and the Department of Energy, and $2 million for all other agencies) to trigger bundling reviews. When comparing these threshold levels to those in S.633, the Small Business Federal Contractor Safeguard Act, how many more bundled contracts would be reviewed by the DOD, NASA, the GSA, and the Department of Energy, if the thresholds for these agencies were at $2 million? Please describe these estimates in terms of contract dollars, by agency per fiscal year.

The Administration's strategy on contract bundling calls for review of acquisitions for bundling issues at agency-specific dollar thresholds between $2 million and $7 million based on an agency's volume of contracts. These thresholds are especially significant in that they trigger additional documentation and review requirements to ensure high level agency attention to potentially bundled acquisitions. In the proposed regulations, this oversight responsibility is assigned to agency OSDBUs, who work with our PCRs to ensure small business participation. SBA participated in the interagency group that developed the proposed regulations. The Interagency Group reviewed contract data from the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS). They determined that the most efficient and effective way to implement this strategy would be to establish in the regulations three thresholds for agency review (i.e., $7 million for DOD, $5 million for NASA, GSA, and DOE, and $2 million for all other agencies). These reviews require allocation of scarce agency resources and, thus, the need for the reviews must be balanced against the perceived benefits. The Administration believes that agency reviews at these thresholds will increase opportunities for small businesses without imposing unreasonable burdens on the agencies.

The levels set forth in the proposed regulations reflect a greater commitment of SBA and agency resources to increase opportunities for small businesses and avoid unnecessary contract bundling. It is not possible to provide the full impact of lowering the threshold to $2 million for DOD, NASA, GSA, and DOE. These federal agencies already review planned acquisitions that are not set-aside for small business. In the case of NASA and GSA, they review all planned acquisitions over $100,000 and for DOD the current threshold is $10,000. Therefore, the largest impact would be a review of certain orders under multiple award contracts, Federal schedule contracts, and other indefinite quantity contracts which are not being uniformly reviewed by the agencies. SBA believes the proposed regulations should be given an opportunity to succeed at the established thresholds.

Based on FY 2001 FPDS data, the below table shows estimated actions and dollars using the thresholds in the proposed rule compared to lowering thresholds as proposed in S.633. The figures cannot answer the question of how many more bundled contracts could be reviewed, but they reflect our best estimate of the potential numbers of actions that could be reviewed for bundling implications. The figures would be reduced for contracts set-aside for small business since these would not be bundled contracts and for orders where the basic contract was already reviewed for bundled. As mentioned above, some of the agencies are already reviewing contracts at lower dollar thresholds for small business participation.

	Actions* >$7 M	Actions* >$5M	Additional Actions* >$2M
DOD	1140 actions $27.7 billion		3,502 actions $9.2 billion
NASA		19 actions 824.4 million	39 actions $90.2 million
GSA		104 actions $2.7 billion	370 actions $1.1 billion
DOE		8 actions $247 million	10actions $31 million

*Actions include: New Definitive Contracts, Orders under Single Award Indefinite Delivery Contracts, Order/Modifications under GSA Schedule Contracts and Other Federal Schedules, and Orders under Multiple Award Contracts.

3. How many more bundled contracts would be reviewed by the DOD, if the threshold were at $5 million, as opposed to the proposed $7 million threshold? Pleased describe the review estimate in terms of the number of contracts and dollars per fiscal year.

Based on FPDS FY 2001 data, the estimated additional actions and dollars for DOD would be as follows.

	Actions* > $7M	Actions* >$5M	Additional Actions*
DOD	1140 actions $27.7 billion	1635 actions $30.6 billion	495 actions $2.9 billion

REV_00383809

*Actions include: New Definitive Contracts, Orders under Single Award Indefinite Delivery Contracts, Order/Modifications under GSA Schedule Contracts and Other Federal Schedules, and Orders under Multiple Award Contracts

Ernie Fletcher . . . a Governor who will Restore Hope!

Glenna Fletcher at Enid Air Force

Meet ERNIE FLETCHER

- Born in Mount Sterling, Montgomery County, Kentucky, 1952
- Married to Glenna Foster, Lexington, Kentucky, 1971
- Graduate of the University of Kentucky College of Engineering, 1972
- Captain, United States Air Force, F-4E fighter jet pilot, 1974
- Graduate of the University of Kentucky College of Medicine, 1984
- Respected Physician in Lexington for 12 years
- Elected Kentucky State Representative in 1994
- CEO, Saint Joseph Medical Foundation, Lexington, 1997
- Elected Member of the United States House of Representatives, serving Kentucky's Sixth Congressional District, 1998
- Father of two, Grandfather of four

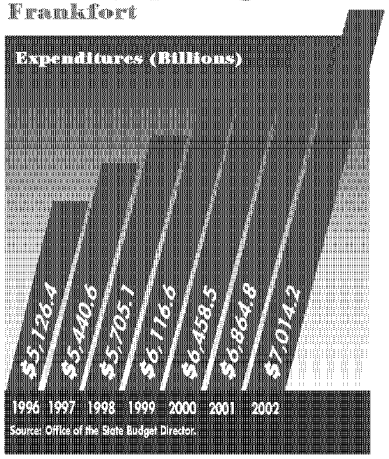
"A former Air Force Pilot, Fletcher takes a low-key approach to attaining his priorities, which have included federal funding for a cancer prevention center in his district. "Some people want to scream in your face, which I don't think is very effective," he said in 2000, according to The Washington Post. "I'm one who works by sitting down with people to make a consensus and compromise."



Politics in America — 2002.

"It's Time to Clean Up the Mess in Frankfort, and Restore Hope in Kentucky!"

Business as usual with the "Good Ol' Boys" in Frankfort isn't good enough for Kentucky any more. We have lost jobs and opportunity, and many have lost faith in our state government.

Decades of single-party control in Frankfort have led to nothing but scandals and arrogance. While they are obsessed with salvaging their political fortunes, they've done absolutely nothing as jobs leave the state, state spending explodes, the healthcare crisis worsens, and Kentucky slides to the bottom of national education rankings. Kentucky urgently needs a sound conservative leader who will bring jobs into the state, control spending, repair healthcare, invest in education and restore trust in our government. Only Ernie Fletcher has the leadership, skills and life experience to create new jobs for Kentuckians . . . and restore hope to Kentucky.

Runaway Spending in Frankfort

ERNIE FLETCHER — A Proven Leader, An Effective Conservative, A Man of Integrity

New Jobs,
Low Taxes,
A Commitment to Healthcare and Education Reform . . .
and Renewed Integrity in Government!

- As Governor, Ernie Fletcher will slash wasteful state spending, eliminate needless regulations, and stop tax increases to attract new businesses and jobs. As President Reagan used to say, "You can't tax yourself into prosperity." Unlike the gang in Frankfort, Ernie Fletcher knows we must keep taxes low and spending must be cut . . . and cut now . . . to create new jobs and new prosperity for Kentucky.

- When President George W. Bush needed help in Congress to build support for his plan to protect patients' rights and make healthcare affordable, he turned to Dr. Ernie Fletcher. Ernie knows the ins-and-outs of the healthcare system . . . and he will bring the same healthcare expertise to Frankfort that he brought to Congress. He's a doctor who can heal healthcare!

- Kentucky now ranks above only Mississippi in overall education. Ernie Fletcher is committed to rebuilding our schools, and restoring hope to our children's future, by giving control of education back to local school boards and committing resources to keep and hire the best teachers possible.

- Ernie Fletcher is a man of unquestioned integrity. Ernie will work with Kentuckians of all political beliefs to restore integrity to our state government and hope to our citizens!

Glenna Fletcher

For 32 years I've been married to Ernie Fletcher. We have been together through his military years, his career as a respected physician, and now his years of elected service in government. We've also shared in the raising of two great kids and are the grandparents of four.

When we met in high school, I saw in Ernie someone intelligent and caring. I wasn't wrong. That combination of "head" and "heart" that I wanted in a husband is what I believe Kentucky needs in a Governor.

We can do better. And frankly, Kentucky deserves better than we've seen lately in Frankfort.

As his wife, I can say proudly that Ernie Fletcher is both a decent, principled man and a dedicated public servant. But more importantly I know, with all my heart, that in electing him you will have a Governor in whom you can take pride.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE
MORE AND FASTER*NOW
The Crisis in the Federal Judiciary

BY ALFRED P. CARLTON JR.

Over the years, several partners and friends of mine have been considered for the federal bench. Some became federal judges, and some did not. All faced a conscious decision to limit their income for life and put their practices on hold during almost always protracted and invasive nomination and confirmation proceedings. All had to consider the reality of donning a somewhat monastic lifestyle along with judicial robes.

All had to consider the likelihood of a public life, punctuated by controversy and &no win8 judicial decision-making opportunities. As I have matured as a lawyer, the decision-making has gotten closer and closer to home, and I often find myself thinking, &If it were me, what would I do?8

I never really have answered the question but, instead, find myself admiring those who say yes to the sacrifice. And admiring those who say no to the toughest career decision they will ever make. What would you do?

The decision isn,t getting any easier. And for those who say yes, life is not getting any easier. In fact, it has become a life that starts with a searing political process, followed by a lifetime of hard work for less pay.

DANGER TO DEMOCRACY

As Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist has said in no uncertain terms to the last three Congresses: There is a crisis in our federal judiciary, constituting a clear and present danger to the uniquely American foundation of our tripartite democracy*an independent judiciary.

The crisis has a dual modality to it, and as the chief has noted in very explicit language, it can only be remedied if the accountable parties*the other two branches *cooperatively and responsibly respond to twin imperatives: expeditious nomination and confirmation, and adequate judicial pay.

As this page is being written, the spectacle of the Miguel Estrada & filibuster8 grinds on*a living testament to the inability of both sides to cooperatively fulfill the grave constitutional duty entrusted to them. But it is illustrative of what can happen to a judicial nominee who gets caught in bare-knuckled partisan kickboxing. This is to say nothing of the secondary effect current intramural disputes will have on a legion of other nominees*all awaiting hearings or confirmation, many for months or even years at a time, having all put professional careers and private lives on hold.

For those who have made it through the process*who put on their robes every day, and go competently and quietly about the business of dispensing American justice*paydays provide a constant reminder of an empty promise made by the American people in Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution: That their pay &shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.8 cf: Williams v. U.S., 240 F.3d 1019 (D.C. 2001), petition for cert. denied, 535 U.S. 911 (2002) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

THE FACTS ARE PLAIN

It is a fact that the purchasing power of judicial pay has diminished by 25 percent during the past three decades. It is a fact that more federal judges have quit the bench before qualifying for retirement in the last decade than in the preceding 40 years. It is a fact that the National Commission on the Public Service, headed by former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, cited federal judicial pay as &the most egregious example of the failure of federal compensation policies.8 The facts are that the members of the new national accounting industry oversight board will be paid $450,000 per year*and that U.S. district judges make $154,700 a year. Facts aside, it is an outrage.

I have great admiration and sympathy for my friends, each of whom I am sure made the right decision in saying yes or no. But under similar circumstances, I am almost sure that I would have said to myself, &All of that*for what?8

We have told Chief Justice Rehnquist that, at the very least, we at the ABA are listening to him and will do everything we can to rectify this outrageous state of affairs. We lawyers must speak up for our brothers and sisters at the bar who have accepted the challenge. They sacrifice daily to make our third branch the envy of the world. They earn our respect and admiration every day. They deserve our unswerving loyalty and support.

They need to be nominated and confirmed faster. They need to be paid more. And they need more and they need faster*now.

Here are a few sentences for the conference letter (probably a little long). We may not want to include the last sentence as we have not submitted legislation the Hill has requested on victims compensation. I will also fax you the talking points that came from State yesterday.

The Administration strongly opposes Section xxx of S. 762 that seeks to amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. The provision would permit suits against certain States even though such suits may be barred by an international agreement. This language undermines the President's ability to negotiate future international agreements, would call into question the reliability of U.S. commitments to such agreements and is contrary to the United States' national interests. Because the U.S. would remain bound under international law by the international agreements that bar such suits including the Algiers Accords, the U.S. could be exposed to significant liability for any breach of the agreement. In addition, the U.S. would be subject to reciprocal legal action worldwide as other countries could withdraw U.S. immunity from suit, citing our action. [While the Administration is very sympathetic to the suffering experienced by citizens that would be affected by this change in law, compensation should be addressed using the Administration's principles on the compensation to victims of international terrorism.]

CONCERNING

PRESENTED ON

REV_00384070

Testimony of Viet D. Dinh
Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Policy United States Department of Justice before
The United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary
April 8, 2003
Proposed Victims' Rights Constitutional Amendment

Good morning Mr. Chairman, and distinguished members of the Committee. Thank you for the opportunity today to reiterate the support of the Department of Justice and the Administration for S.J. Res. 1, the Crime Victims' Rights Amendment. As President Bush stated on April 16, 2002, "The protection of victims' rights is one of those rare instances when amending the Constitution is the right thing to do. And the Feinstein-Kyl Crime Victims' Rights Amendment is the right way to do it."

Both the Attorney General and the President strongly support guaranteeing rights to victims of violent crime, and we agree with the sponsors that these rights can only be fully protected by amending the Constitution of the United States. S.J. Res. 1 is the right way to do it because it strikes the proper balance between the rights of victims and the rights of criminal defendants.

As the principal Federal law enforcement agency, the Department of Justice is keenly aware of the effects that the Crime Victims' Rights Amendment would have on the landscape of the criminal justice system. There is no doubt that, were the amendment to pass, it would prompt significant adjustments in how Federal, State and local prosecutors discharge their responsibilities. Accordingly, the Department has reviewed the proposed amendment in light of our prosecutorial function within the criminal justice system, our commitment to fundamental fairness and justice for defendants, and our support of the rights of crime victims. We believe the language of the proposed amendment properly advances all of these interests.

The amendment would protect victims' rights before all levels of government in the United States. At least thirty-three States have recognized the importance of granting constitutional guarantees to victims of crime by amending their State constitutions. Additionally, most States have passed statutory protections for victims of crime. The proposed amendment respects the role of State and local governments because it does not bar them from providing additional or broader rights to victims. Instead, it provides a floor rather than a ceiling of the rights to be afforded to victims of crime.

Although there have been State and Federal legislative efforts to grant victims many of the rights contained within this amendment, in our view the statutory rights of crime victims are at times subjugated to the rights of criminal defendants. One example is the Oklahoma City bombing trial of Timothy McVeigh, where the judge barred victims from attending the trial because of the possibility that they might later be called to testify at sentencing.[1] This decision forced victims to choose either to testify at sentencing against the man accused of murdering their loved ones, or to witness his trial. They faced this untenable choice even though 42 U.S.C. § 10606(b)(4) provides victims a right to be present at "all public court proceedings related to the offense." Although the prosecutors, the Department of Justice, and various State Attorneys General asked the court to reconsider, the decision stood. And when the victims attempted to vindicate their rights under Federal law, the court ruled that they lacked standing to challenge the adverse decisions. Congress intervened and passed the Victims' Rights Clarification Act of 1997. However, it is impractical and unrealistic to expect that Congress can and will intervene to pass legislation each time a victim is denied his or her right to participate in the criminal justice system.

State efforts to protect the rights of crime victims also have proved as inadequate as Federal legislation. Even where States have passed strong victims' rights statutes or ratified victims' rights amendments to their constitutions, these efforts to secure victims' rights have been limited, undermined, or nullified by judicial decisions. This was best illustrated in a study conducted by the National Institute of Justice in 1998.[2] After surveying more than 1,300 crime victims, the study concluded that although "[s]trong victims' rights law make a difference, . . . even where there is strong legal protection, victims' needs are not fully met."[3] Consequently, the Department strongly supports the effort to amend our Federal Constitution to provide the highest possible level of protection for victims of violent crime.

I would like to summarize briefly the provisions of the amendment and articulate our understanding of and support for each of them:

Section 1 sets forth the important principle that the rights of victims of violent crime are "capable of protection without denying the constitutional rights of those accused of victimizing them." This section serves as a preamble and simply declares the rights of victims of violent crime "are hereby established," without further specification. The substantive rights granted by the amendment and the restrictions thereon are enumerated in section 2. Although as a preamble, this section does not confer upon victims any specific rights, the Department strongly supports the proposition it espouses: that the rights of both victims and accused can be protected and accommodated in the constitutional structure.

The Department believes that all victims of crime deserve to be treated with fairness and dignity in the criminal justice system. By focusing on victims of violent crime, however, the proposed amendment recognizes the more detrimental effects that violent crime has on the most vulnerable of victims.

The Department strongly supports the grant of specific constitutional rights to ensure that victims of violent crime have a voice in the criminal justice system. Section 2 delineates these rights in three categories and provides a specific standard for any restriction of these rights. This section defines the scope and strength of the rights to be established by the proposed amendment and, in the Department's view, advances the rights of victims while protecting the constitutional rights of the accused and ensuring the proper, orderly administration of criminal justice.

- "[T]he right to reasonable and timely notice of public proceedings involving the crime and of any release or escape of the accused."

This guarantee recognizes the importance of allowing victims the opportunity to be apprised of matters that concern their victimization. The "reasonable and timely notice" language places the responsibility of providing notice on the governmental entity but would not make prosecutors or courts the guarantors against circumstances that may prevent the victim from receiving actual notice. The reasonable notice requirement also allows the government to rely upon the current contact information provided by the victim or his or her representative. There are a number of situations where an actual notice requirement might prove untenable, such as in crimes involving mass casualties and where a victim has moved away without informing law enforcement officers or prosecutors. By guaranteeing notice to "public proceedings," moreover, the proposed amendment preserves flexibility for situations where prosecutorial and judicial concerns, for necessity, require that proceedings be closed to the public.

- "[T]he rights not to be excluded from such public proceeding and reasonably to be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, reprieve, and pardon proceedings."

For years, victims and their advocates have complained that the criminal justice system is indifferent to their interests because they are excluded from public proceedings that affect their well-being. The Department agrees with these sentiments. We therefore strongly support the right of victims of violent crime not to be excluded from public proceedings involving the crime.

By guaranteeing victims the right to be heard in the specified public proceedings, the amendment recognizes that victims should have an important voice in the criminal justice system and that expression of their voice both furthers the interests of justice and contributes to the victims' ability to cope with the crimes perpetrated against them. The "reasonably to be heard" language allows the judge or decision-maker to exercise his or her discretion to decide whether the right to be heard would best be satisfied orally or in writing, personally or through representatives.

- "[A]nd the right to adjudicative decisions that duly consider the victim's safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the offender."

The Department supports granting victims of violent crime the right to due consideration of certain interests that go to the very heart of their victimization--their safety, interest in finality, and restitution from their offenders. This clause ensures that in adjudicative decisions, including decisions of parole boards, proper consideration will be given to the three substantive interests enunciated. By limiting the clause to adjudicative decisions, the amendment properly does not regulate internal and deliberative decisions by law enforcement and prosecutorial personnel.

The Department is committed to ensuring the finality of judgments, and thus supports limiting restitution claims to those that are "just and timely." In previous versions of a proposed constitutional amendment, there was no such limitation. The result would have been to allow considerations of claims that were not warranted by the facts or were raised long after the adjudication of responsibility for the crime.

- "These rights shall not be restricted except when and to the degree dictated by a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice, or by compelling necessity."

Among the primary functions of the Department is the administration of the criminal justice system. In order to discharge this function, the Department believes that prosecutors and law enforcement officials must retain a certain amount of flexibility to carry out their duty to bring offenders to justice in a timely and efficient manner. In addition, we are cognizant of these same considerations faced by State and local entities in the administration of their duties. Therefore, our major concern with a constitutional amendment protecting the rights of victims is that our prosecutorial and law enforcement responsibilities are not unnecessarily burdened so as to impair our ability to prosecute criminals. This is especially true in cases involving thousands of victims, such as acts of terrorism or mass violence. In those cases, it would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, both to prosecute the defendants successfully and to ensure that the rights of each of the several thousand victims are individually protected.

I would like to thank the sponsors for acknowledging this concern. The proposed amendment, in the Department's view, protects the rights of victims and ensures the proper investigation and prosecution of crime by allowing for restrictions only where there is a substantial interest in public safety or the administration of criminal justice.

The Department agrees with the two-tiered approach contained in the exceptions clause of section 2. The Department fully supports the lower standard for overriding victims' interests ("substantial interest") when the matter concerns public safety or the administration of justice, while requiring the higher standard ("compelling necessity") for other possible justifications. Where the interest that competes with a victim's right is one that implicates public safety or the administration of justice, the "substantial interest" test strikes the proper balance between the competing concerns. For other types of interests, the more stringent "compelling necessity" test is the right standard to employ.

Although we support granting these rights as outlined above and trust that the proper enforcement mechanisms will be forthcoming in implementing legislation, the Department strongly supports the language contained in section 3 which states: "Nothing in this article shall be construed to provide grounds for a new trial or to authorize any claim for damages. Only the victim or the victim's lawful representative may assert the rights established by this article, and no person accused of the crime may obtain any form of relief hereunder."

The point and purpose of this amendment is to provide constitutional rights to victims, not to provide additional constitutional rights to criminal defendants. We would oppose any new cause of action that would be detrimental to our prosecutors and detrimental to the efficient management of the criminal justice system. State and local prosecutors would also be adversely affected if this amendment could be used in such a way as to hold them responsible when a victim felt that his or her rights were being deprived. The Department supports the need to protect the finality of judgments and believes that judgments should not be disturbed by the passage of this amendment. The Department also believes that the proposed amendment should not be used as a tool to slow down criminal proceedings (such as the use of injunctive relief to delay a proceeding) that would ultimately benefit the criminal defendant. Remedies for a violation of the rights specified in the proposed amendment should be unrelated to the outcome of the case.

Furthermore, the Department's view is that the amendment should confer standing only on those for whom it was intended to benefit. Therefore, the limiting language in the final sentence of this section is both appropriate and necessary. It precludes a criminal defendant from asserting the rights of victims under theories of third-party standing.

The Department fully supports the language contained in section 4 of the amendment, which provides that "Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article. Nothing in this article shall affect the President's authority to grant reprieves or pardons."

Although the amendment is self-executing to a large extent, and therefore the rights are seemingly enforceable even in the absence of specific legislation, the Department welcomes any implementing legislation that Congress may deem appropriate. It is the Department's hope that Congress, when considering any implementing legislation, will strive to minimize the difficulties that could arise if Federal, State and local prosecutors were unable to predict what their proper response should be in certain situations. The Department looks forward to working with the Congress on such implementing legislation.

In addition, the Department strongly supports the limiting language that will prevent Congress from enacting legislation that would affect the President's power to grant reprieves and pardons. The President's reprieve and pardon power under Article II of the Constitution is plenary and is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

The Department fully supports section 5's limitation on the ratification period to seven years from the time Congress submits the amendment to the States. The limitation is necessary to ensure that the ratification period does not remain open in perpetuity, possibly outliving the intent and circumstances of its original passage by the Congress. In addition, the Department supports the 180 day lapse period between the time of ratification and the time that the rights conferred will take effect. This language allows sufficient time for notifying all parties impacted by the amendment of its requirements and ensures that the proper framework is in place to accommodate the rights of victims.

Thank you once again for allowing me to appear before you today to voice the support of the President and the Department for this important measure. For too long, victims have been silenced by a criminal justice system that does not fully protect their rights, and I would like to thank Senators Feinstein and Kyl for their continued pursuit of this important objective. The Department looks forward to working with the Congress in the future to see that this measure is passed and to assisting in fashioning appropriate implementing legislation.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 4, 2003

Dear Senator Leahy:

I write in response to your recent remarks about the President's nominations to the United States Court of Federal Claims and the United States Sentencing Commission. Specifically, at the Judiciary Committee's Executive Business Meeting on March 27, 2003, you referred to the Court of Federal Claims and the Sentencing Commission and then stated that "the President continues to proceed unilaterally on what have traditionally been bipartisan boards and commissions." And at a judicial nominations hearing on March 12, 2003, you complained that "there has been no consultation with the Democratic leadership regarding the remaining nominations to the Court of Federal Claims" and that President Bush's nominations to the Sentencing Commission "are not based on recommendations of the Senate's Democratic Leader or leadership."

We agree that President Bush's nominations to the Court of Federal Claims and the Sentencing Commission are not based on recommendations from the Senate's Democratic Leader or leadership. We respectfully disagree, however, that this somehow is in breach of history or tradition, or otherwise is improper.

The Court of Federal Claims is not, and never has been, a board or commission with appointments split between Republicans and Democrats. To the contrary, it is a court established under Article I of the Constitution that, by statute, consists of judges that are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. See 28 U.S.C. § 171. Nothing in the statute purports to impose a qualification requirement that a fixed number of judges of the court either (1) be members of or affiliated with a particular political party or (2) be selected by the leadership of the political party opposite the President.

Moreover, there is no established history or tradition of Presidents appointing judges to the Court of Federal Claims who are members of the opposite party. After the Court was established in 1982, Presidents Reagan and Bush almost exclusively appointed Republicans to serve as judges of the Court of Federal Claims. Of the 19 judges appointed to the court by Presidents Reagan and Bush, at least 16 were Republicans. Three of the Reagan-Bush appointees may have been Democrats (they were of unknown political affiliation), but in any event were not recommended by the Senate's Democratic Leader or leadership. Similarly, President Clinton almost exclusively appointed Democrats. Of the six judges appointed to the court by President Clinton, all but one was a Democrat. It is true that, in 1998, President Clinton nominated a Republican, Edward J. Damich, who had been recommended by Chairman Hatch. That President Clinton one time considered and ultimately nominated a person suggested by Chairman Hatch, however, does not establish a tradition of bipartisan appointments to the Court of Federal Claims, nor does it establish a "long history of compromise and accommodation regarding appointments" to this court, as you claim.

In your statement at the judicial nominations hearing on March 12, 2003, you stated that the White House has "refused to accommodate" your request that President Bush nominate Sarah L. Wilson for a full 15-year term on the Court of Federal Claims. Ms. Wilson, a Democrat and former member of the Clinton White House staff, was recess appointed to the court by President Clinton on January 19, 2001 – President Clinton's last full day in office. She served as a judge of the court for nearly two years, until her recess appointment expired in November 2002. By declining to nominate Ms. Wilson to the Court of Federal Claims, President Bush has acted in a manner that is entirely consistent with that of past Presidents.

In contrast to the Court of Federal Claims, federal statute provides that, of the Sentencing Commission's seven members, "[n]ot more than four . . . shall be members of the same political party." 28 U.S.C. § 992. For such statutorily bipartisan boards and commissions, this Administration has, on a case-by-case basis and as a matter of comity, worked with the Senate's Democratic Leader to select mutually acceptable individuals for appointment to fill Democrat positions. The Administration has done so, notwithstanding the fact that the relevant statutory provisions for most bipartisan boards and commissions (including the Sentencing Commission) require only that a fixed number of appointees be of a particular political party, not that a fixed number of appointees be selected by the leadership of the political party opposite the President. Indeed, because the Constitution's Appointments Clause vests the appointment power exclusively in the President, the Courts of Law, or the Heads of Departments, see U.S. Const., art. II, § 2, Congress may not, as a constitutional matter, authorize anyone else – including itself – to appoint officers of the United States such as Members of the Sentencing Commission.

Currently, three of the seven seats on the Sentencing Commission are filled by Democrats, two are filled by Republicans, and two are vacant. As you know, President Bush has nominated Ricardo Hinojosa, a registered Republican, to fill one of the vacant seats, and Michael E. Horowitz, a registered Independent, to fill the other. Upon their respective confirmations, the Commission will consist of three Democrats (including the Chair and two Vice Chairs), three Republicans (including one Vice Chair), and one Independent. Accordingly, the composition of the Commission will conform to the statutory requirement that not more that four members be of the same political party. In addition, the Commission will consist of three members selected by Democrats and four members selected by Republicans. As such, the nominations of Judge Hinojosa and Mr. Horowitz also properly conformed to this Administration's practice of working, on a case-by-case basis and as a matter of comity, with the Senate's Democratic Leader to select mutually acceptable candidates to fill certain vacancies on statutorily bipartisan boards and commissions. By any reasonable measure, then, the President has proceeded appropriately in making nominations to the Sentencing Commission.

Please let me know if we have misstated your concerns, or if we misunderstand the legal requirements or history and practice of appointments to the Court of Federal Claims and the Sentencing Commission. We stand ready to meet with you on these or any other issues, if you so desire.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Joe, for some reason my strike-outs and underlinings do not show in the version I sent you; I don't know why. Here is a clean version with my suggested changes incorporated.

The Administration strongly opposes Section xxx of S. 762 that seeks to amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. The provision would permit suits against Iran by the former Tehran embassy hostages even though such suits are expressly barred by the Algiers Accords, the international agreement that achieved their release . This provision would undermine the President's ability to negotiate future international agreements, would call into question the reliability of U.S. commitments in such agreements and is contrary to the United States' national interests. Because the U.S. would remain bound under international law by the Algiers Accords, and because the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal can issue binding damage awards for breaches of the Accords, the U.S. could be exposed to significant liability.
In addition, the U.S. would be subject to reciprocal legal action worldwide as other countries follow our lead and withdraw U.S. immunity from suit, citing our action. [Moreover, creating a cause of action to allow claims against other countries to be pursued in U.S. courts is not the best way to provide compensation to victims of terrorism. While the Administration is very sympathetic to the suffering experienced by citizens that would be affected by this change in law, compensation should be addressed using the Administration's principles on the compensation to victims of international

Joe, thanks for faxing the amendment as adopted. As Holly mentioned, the final version requires some changes to your draft to account for the fact that it creates a cause of action in such cases generally but, unlike the earlier versions, abrogates only one international agreement, namely the Algiers Accords, that applies to only one category of such actions, namely the former Tehran embassy hostages. The mark-up below attempts to address both aspects of the amendment as adopted.

if the recently faxed text of the amendment stands -- limiting to algiers accords, it is still a problem. but, the language below for a conference letter would need to be tweaked accordingly -- new language appears to go only to algiers accords so language would need to reflect that. mark clodfelter offered

Here are a few sentences for the conference letter (probably a little long).
We may not want to include the last sentence as we have not submitted legislation the Hill has requested on victims compensation. I will also fax you the talking points that came from State yesterday.

The Administration strongly opposes Section xxx of S. 762 that seeks to amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. The provision would permit suits against certain States even though such suits may be barred by an international agreement. This language undermines the President's ability to negotiate future international agreements, would call into question the reliability of U.S. commitments to such agreements and is contrary to the United States' national interests. Because the U.S. would remain bound under international Joe, thanks for faxing the amendment as adopted. As Holly mentioned, the final version requires some changes to your draft to account for the fact that it creates a cause of action in such cases generally but, unlike the earlier versions, abrogates only one international agreement, namely the Algiers Accords, that applies to only one category of such actions, namely the former Tehran embassy hostages. The mark-up below attempts to address both aspects of the amendment as adopted.

The Administration strongly opposes Section xxx of S. 762 that seeks to amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. The provision would permit suits against Iran by the former Tehran embassy hostages certain States even though such suits may be are expressly barred by the Algiers Accords, an the international agreement that achieved their release . This language provision would undermines the President's ability to negotiate future international agreements, would call into question the reliability of U.S. commitments to in such agreements and is contrary to the United States' national interests. Because the U.S. would remain bound under international law by the international agreements that bar such suits including the Algiers Accords, and because the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal can issue binding damage awards for breaches of the Accords, the

could be exposed to significant liability for any breach of the agreement. In addition, the U.S. would be subject to reciprocal legal action worldwide as other countries follow our lead and could withdraw U.S. immunity from suit, citing our action. Joe, thanks for faxing the amendment as adopted. As Holly mentioned, the final version requires some changes to your draft to account for the fact that it creates a cause of action in such cases generally but, unlike the earlier versions, abrogates only one international agreement, namely the Algiers Accords, that applies to only one category of such actions, namely the former Tehran embassy hostages. The mark-up below attempts to address both aspects of the amendment as adopted.

The Administration strongly opposes Section xxx of S. 762 that seeks to amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. The provision would permit suits against Iran by the former Tehran embassy hostages certain States even though such suits may be are expressly barred by the Algiers Accords, an the international agreement that achieved their release . This language provision would undermines the President's ability to negotiate future international agreements, would call into question the reliability of U.S. commitments to in such agreements and is contrary to the United States' national interests. Because the U.S. would remain bound under international law by the international agreements that bar such suits including the Algiers Accords, and because the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal can issue binding damage awards for breaches of the Accords, the U.S.
could be exposed to significant liability for any breach of the agreement. In addition, the U.S. would be subject to reciprocal legal action worldwide as other countries follow our lead and could withdraw U.S. immunity from suit, citing our action. [Moreover, creating a cause of action to allow claims against other countries to be pursued in U.S. courts is not the best way to provide compensation to victims of terrorism. While the Administration is very sympathetic to the suffering experienced by citizens that would be affected by this change in law, compensation should be addressed using the Administration's principles on the compensation to victims of international terrorism.]

if the recently faxed text of the amendment stands -- limiting to algiers accords, it is still a problem. but, the language below for a conference letter

On Thursday, the Senate Judiciary Committee is slated to mark up class action reform legislation, which was held over from last week after Democrats complained they had not enough time to examine a new bipartisan compromise.

April 10, 9:30 a.m., 226 Dirksen Bldg. Thursday also marks the deadline Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch set last month for stakeholder feedback on an asbestos litigation reform bill he is drafting.

Class Action Bill Mark Up Will Include Feinstein Amendment

By Keith Perine, CQ Staff

The Senate Judiciary Committee will try once again to mark up a bill that would establish new rules for class action lawsuits.

The measure, which is expected to be considered April 10, has taken the lead among various pieces of legislation that together represent a conservative tort overhaul movement in the 108th Congress. The panel is expected to approve it.

It originally was scheduled to be marked up at a March 27 committee meeting. At the request of committee Democrats, some of whom fiercely oppose the bill, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, twice has postponed committee action.

The legislation (S 274) would steer many cases that are filed in state courts into federal courts if at least $2 million is at stake and if at least one plaintiff lives in a different state than does the defendant.

Some exceptions are possible, such as if a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs and the primary defendants are citizens of the state where the case is originally filed.

The legislation also would mandate that notices to class members be detailed and clearly written, and that courts could not approve settlements that would cause a "bounty" payment to be made to one class member.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., plans to offer an amendment that would raise the bar for transferring class action cases to federal courts.

The Feinstein amendment, which Hatch supports, would make cases eligible for removal to federal courts only if at least $5 million is at stake. It also would mandate that class action suits would remain in state courts if more than two-thirds of the plaintiffs live in the same state as the primary defendant.

Business lobbyists pushing for the bill say the White House, which strongly backs the measure, also has accepted the Feinstein language. There already are three Democratic co-sponsors of the bill — including Thomas R. Carper of Delaware, who has been championing it in the Democratic caucus. But Feinstein's support is seen as critical to securing a filibuster-proof 60-vote majority for the bill on the Senate floor. Business lobbyists believe they are already close to that number.

Patrick J. Leahy of Vermont, the committee's ranking Democrat, is expected to offer an amendment that would make it a crime to deliberately conceal or destroy documents and records related to class action cases. The offense would be punishable by a fine and or up to 20 years in prison.

Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., is expected to offer several amendments, including one that would exempt tobacco-related class action lawsuits.

Depending on the number of amendments offered and the press of other Senate business, the committee might not finish its markup on April 10.

Hatch said on April 2 that he had not yet sought a commitment for floor time for the measure from Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn.

The committee April 10 also is expected to consider several judicial nominations, as well as a bill (S 731 <<...>>) that would criminalize the possession or use of authentication features — such as watermarks or holograms — to make false identification. That bill originally was scheduled for committee action on April 3.

Kennedy wrote the majority opinion for 6 Justices; there were no concurring opinions. The 3 dissenters were Scalia, Thomas, and RB Ginsburg. (Scalia and Thomas reject any limits under DP clause.)

RB Ginsburg states the following, which further confirms significance of ruling: "In a legislative scheme or a state high court's design to cap punitive damages, the handiwork in setting single-digit and 1-to-1 benchmarks could hardly be questioned; in a judicial decree imposed on the States by this Court under the banner of substantive due process, the numerical controls today's decision installs seem to me boldly out of order."

"[F]ew awards exceeding a single-digit ratio between punitive and compensatory damages, to a significant degree, will satisfy due process. . . . [R]atios greater than those we have previously upheld may comport with due process where a particularly egregious act has resulted in only a small amount of economic damages. . . . The converse is also true, however. When compensatory damages are substantial, then a lesser ratio, perhaps only equal to compensatory damages, can reach the outermost limit of the due process guarantee." The Court later concludes that the $1 million compensatory award in that case was "substantial."

All of this suggests that a 1-to-1 punitive-to-compensatory damages ratio may now be constitutionally mandated when the compensatory award is considered "substantial." Important development.

Ideologues vs. Justice Owen

At least since the 1987 battle over Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court, judicial appointments have been a major arena for conflict in Washington. It doesn't matter if the White House is in Republican hands and the Senate under Democratic control, or the other way around: Whenever a nominee can be tarred as extreme, unethical or incompetent, ideologues paint the most appalling picture in the hope of killing the appointment.

It's not a good way to find the truth or to select good judges. Instead, it fosters irresponsible distortion and discourages strong-minded individuals from accepting judicial posts, while rewarding lawyers whose chief talent is never doing anything, good or bad, to make enemies. The latest fight is over Priscilla Owen, a Texas Supreme Court justice chosen by President Bush for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. She got the highest rating from the American Bar Association. To get that endorsement, says the ABA, a nominee "must be at the top of the legal profession in his or her legal community, have outstanding legal ability, breadth of experience, the highest reputation for integrity and either have demonstrated, or exhibited the capacity for, judicial temperament."

You'd never guess any of these qualities from the attacks on Owen. Senate Democrats and liberal activists have denounced her as a right-wing ideologue and a lap dog for big corporations, particularly Enron. Their favorite evidence is a quotation from fellow Justice Alberto Gonzales, now White House counsel, accusing her of "an unconscionable act of judicial activism" in voting to deny a minor permission to get an abortion without her parents' knowledge.

But judges accuse each other of judicial activism all the time. It's safe to assume that if Gonzales distrusted Owen's instincts, he would have lobbied his boss not to choose her. Today, he says, "She will exercise judicial restraint and understands the limited role of the judiciary."

In the abortion case they disagreed about the application of a Texas law that generally requires parents to be notified. Owen, dissenting from the court's decision to grant permission, made a perfectly rational case that the majority was reading the law too liberally.

As for her views about corporations, it's not surprising that a candidate picked by a conservative president has not been hostile to private business. It's true that, in running for the office, she got campaign contributions from Enron employees and then sat on cases involving the company. But people associated with Enron gave to lots of political candidates, and Owen didn't violate any ethics rules.

Owen is just one of many Bush nominees who have been inexcusably blocked from filling vacant seats on the bench—something that also happened, with equal lack of justification, to many of President Clinton's appointees.

But the only real argument against her is that she's not the sort of choice a Democratic president would make. That's no reason Bush shouldn't have picked her, or that the Senate shouldn't confirm her.

REV_00384450

A New Borking Excuse

Having sharpened their knives on Charles Pickering and D. Brooks Smith, Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee turn tomorrow to Priscilla Owen, President Bush's nominee for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. The accomplished judge had better wear her battle armor.

> This time the feminist groups are doing the dirty work.

Borking Svengali Ralph Neas is playing the gentleman this time and letting the ladies do the mugging. This is dirty work, but the gals at the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL), the National Abortion Federation and the National Organization for Women are more than up to the job. And when it comes to borking, Chairman Pat Leahy is an equal-opportunity interest-group mouthpiece.

The feminists have put their wiles to work and come up with a new excuse to disqualify Judge Owens: abortion on demand for teenagers. Judge Owen must be defeated, they charge, because her rulings on the Supreme Court of Texas prove she believes a parent usually ought to be informed if his or her daughter wants an abortion.

Judge Priscilla Owen

Judge Owen "is an opponent of abortion rights for minors without their parents' permission," explains NARAL president Kate Michelman, by which she means that the judge is "someone who exemplifies the most extreme hostility to reproductive rights of any of the nominees that President Bush has named."

By this definition, two-thirds of all Americans are dangerous, right-wing extremists. Every poll on abortion shows that most Americans—pro-life and pro-choice—think it's reasonable to let mothers and fathers have a role in such a momentous decision for a minor child. The U.S. Supreme Court has also ruled that parental consent does not violate Roe v. Wade.

Judge Owen's rulings on teen abortion have nothing to do with her personal opinion but are consistent with Texas law, which is very precise about the conditions under which a court may let a girl have an abortion without notifying a parent. She voted with the majority in nine of the 12 teen-abortion decisions to come before her court. And a teen-abortion case doesn't even get to the Texas Supreme Court unless two lower-court judges—a trial judge and an appeals judge—have rejected a girl's request not to notify her parents.

The pro-abortion groups are working hand in glove with Senator Leahy to defeat Judge Owen. When the Chairman rescheduled her hearing last week, that news was up on Planned Parenthood's Web site before it was even communicated to the Republicans on the committee or the Justice Department. Talk about teamwork.

In the 14 months Judge Owen has been waiting for a hearing, the opposition has had ample time to script other Senatorial attack lines: She's anti-consumer, pro-business and wants to make it easier for anti-abortion radicals to harass women at abortion clinics. Judges are elected in Texas (something Judge Owen has opposed) and it'll be worth the price of admission Thursday to see if any Democrat dares to mention the $8,800 she legally accepted from Enron during her 1994 campaign. That sum, less than 1% of her total contributions, pales in comparison with what Enron gave such Members of Congress as Judiciary Democrat Charles Schumer.

It's no disrespect to nominees who have already run the Judiciary gantlet to say that Judge Owen's fate matters more. At 47 years old, she is widely considered one of the best conservative legal minds of her generation. If she can't get confirmed, it bodes ill for other nominee-luminaries waiting for a hearing, such as Miguel Estrada, Jeff Sutton, John Roberts and Michael McConnell. These are the kind of intellects whose judicial influence would be large on the appeals courts—if they ever get there—and could be potential Supreme Court candidates.

But that, of course, is precisely why Democrats are out to bork every one of them. Of Mr. Bush's 32 appeals-court nominees, 17 haven't yet received a Senate hearing. Like Judge Owen, they'll get that privilege only after all the interest groups are lined up to maul them.

OWEN IS QUALIFIED FOR FEDERAL BENCH

Feingold and Kohl should stop their Senate Colleagues from "borking" Priscilla Owen. Why should Wisconsinites care about Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen, nominated by President Bush to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals?

* Because "borking" - judging a judicial nominee on political and ideological grounds rather than qualifications - is ugly no matter which party is doing it and must be stopped.

* Because Wisconsin's two senators, Herb Kohl and Russ Feingold, sit on the Senate Judiciary Committee, where the "borking" of Owen is under way. If these two Democrats take the high road and approve Owen even though (horrors!) she is a conservative, their courage could persuade their Senate colleagues to give up this nasty practice. The charge against Owen is being led by the extremist wing of the abortion-on-demand crowd, who are incensed that Owen voted several times to uphold a Texas law that allows teens to get abortions without notifying their parents only in extreme circumstances.

Polls show that a majority of Americans support parental notification laws, and the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that such laws do not violate the terms established by Roe vs. Wade. Nonetheless, National Abortion Rights Action League President Kate Michelman called Owen "someone who exemplifies the most extreme hostility to reproductive rights of any of the nominees that President Bush has named." My, my.

Other groups complain that Owen's rulings show her to be anti-consumer, anti-worker and pro-business. They say she too often voted to overturn huge jury verdicts in malpractice and product-liability cases. Considering that Texas juries' propensity for handing down outrageous verdicts makes the state a favorite filing-ground for trial attorneys pursuing dubious liability cases, Owen should be applauded for attempting to apply the brakes.

They say she is a "judicial activist" who will try to legislate from the bench. But when U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-California, asked her about that charge, Owen responded "If I am confirmed, I will do my utmost to apply the statutes you have written as you have written them, not as I would have written them or others might want me to interpret them."

But none of this should matter much to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is supposed to examine a nominee's qualifications, fitness for office, and temperament. No one has questioned (yet) her temperament; her qualifications include graduating cum laude from Baylor Law School, getting the top score on the Texas Bar Exam, practicing commercial litigation for 17 years before winning election to the Texas Supreme Court, and getting a unanimous "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association's Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

Every president has the right to nominate whomever he wants to the federal judiciary. The Senate has the right to grill the nominees over their qualifications, temperament, and fitness for office. Presumably it's that latter term that some senators believe justifies "borking" Owen on abortion rights, etc.

But it's still wrong.

Feingold knows it. That's why he made his courageous vote to confirm John Ashcroft as U.S. attorney general. Feingold didn't like Ashcroft's right-wing politics, but he believed in a president's right to choose his own nominees. Feingold was right.

Feingold and Kohl should both vote to confirm Owen, and should try to convince their colleagues to do likewise. She is well qualified, and that's all that should count.

Owen's Judicial Nomination Is Revealing Replay in Senate

Eight years ago, Florida Supreme Court Chief Justice Rosemary Barkett endured a tough six months after President Clinton nominated her to a seat on the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Barkett was well-known as one of the more liberal members of the Florida court, and conservatives fumed at the thought of her sitting on a federal court one step below the Supreme Court of the United States.

Opponents distorted Barkett's record, accusing her of being sympathetic to criminals and pornographers. Although she had followed state law and imposed the death penalty on many occasions, she personally opposed capital punishment. "I think critics are using selective cases to say that I'm not in the mainstream," Barkett told members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. "It's not true," she said.

Nor was it fair.

On Tuesday this familiar and increasingly nasty song and dance continued as committee members began the confirmation hearing of Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen, nominated by President Bush a year ago to a seat on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Unlike Barkett, Owen is a conservative and, like Barkett, is said by supporters to have one of the best judicial minds in the country. It is her conservatism and intellect that strike fear in the hearts of liberal Democrats and have led to her opposition by the same liberal interest groups that helped defeat Judge Charles Pickering a few months ago.

Like Barkett, Owen is seeing her record distorted. She is opposed basically for two reasons: her opinion that parents should be informed when their daughter seeks an abortion and her acceptance of campaign contributions from Enron during her run for the Texas Supreme Court.

Abortion is the key issue, with pro-abortion groups chanting that Owen is "a threat to the reproductive rights of women." But her support of parental consent laws under most circumstances does not prove conclusively that she opposes Roe vs. Wade. It suggests that she, like the U.S. Supreme Court and most Americans, believes that states have the power to limit abortion on demand.

As for the money from Enron, Texas, like other states that elect judges, permits judicial candidates to accept contributions. That does not make her pro-business or pro-crook. She has, in fact, been a vocal advocate for judicial reform in the Lone Star State.

Like Barkett in 1994, Owen enjoys the support of both senators from her home state. But the judiciary committee she faces is not controlled by the president's party.

The Balance Provided By Differences

So she faces an uphill and undoubtedly long fight for confirmation. We hope that somewhere within the ranks of the brutally partisan Democrats on the committee there sits a Connie Mack, a senator who can look beyond his or her party and differences in judicial philosophy to recognize that the strength of the American judiciary is the balance provided by those differences.

In 1994 Mack backed Barkett, remarking, "The question I ask myself is whether the nominee is capable, a person of integrity, and falls within reasonable philosophical bounds."

Representatives of both political parties in Texas say that for Justice Owen, the answer is yes.

A Fine Choice

Using legitimate criteria -- judicial expertise, temperament and reputation -- there is no finer candidate for a spot on a federal appeals court than Priscilla Owen, whose nomination was the subject of committee hearings this week.

Owen, an honors graduate who earned the highest grade on the bar exam, has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court since 1994 -- and is so respected that every major newspaper in Texas endorsed her successful campaign for re-election in 2000.

After she was nominated for the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, the American Bar Association unanimously gave her the highest possible rating for the job -- no small matter since the Senate Judiciary Committee chairman said previously that the ABA's rating is 'the gold standard by which judicial candidates are judged.' A bipartisan group of 15 past Texas Bar presidents endorsed her nomination, as have Democratic former justices.

Still, her nomination is in trouble because she is deemed insufficiently liberal by a few fringe special-interest groups that have considerable influence with the Senate's Democratic leadership.

The main complaint revolves around cases in which young girls wanted to have an abortion without either parent's knowledge.

Under Texas law, a parent must be told unless a judge rules a girl is sufficiently mature and informed to make the decision alone.

Owen contended some youngsters were not informed sufficiently.

That, extremist pro-abortion groups say, proves Owen is a 'judicial activist' who makes rulings based on ideology instead of what the law actually says. Never mind that they have enthusiastically supported judicial activism in the past and that Roe vs. Wade, the decision legalizing abortion, was in itself a blatant act of judicial activism.

Owen is under fire not because she is a judicial activist but because she is perceived as a conservative activist.

The facts are, however, that Owen based her opinion on U.S. Supreme Court guidelines -- and the author of the law said she had interpreted it the way the Legislature intended.

Parental notification laws are designed not just to protect children but also to keep pedophiles from coercing their young victims into destroying the evidence before they can be arrested, tried and locked up. They are not something that the courts should routinely circumvent, except under rather limited conditions prescribed by law.

Critics complain, less vociferously, about other Owen opinions -- that a person shouldn't collect insurance benefits on a house a spouse destroyed by arson, for example. That, critics insist, proves she is too pro-business. But why should an arsonist be allowed to profit from his own crime?

The appointment is being scandalously politicized. Owen deserves better. More importantly, the American people deserve better.

Judges Deserve Better than Senate Tactics

Justice Priscilla Owen of the Texas Supreme Court is the latest federal appellate court nominee to have her record distorted by Democratic Party interest groups. However, she at least received a hearing this week. More than half of President George W. Bush's nominees to the federal appellate bench have not been given that courtesy. Justice Owen's treatment illustrates the Democrats' stretching to deny the president the right to name judges to the federal appellate courts - a right vested in him by the Constitution. Justice Owen received top grades from the American Bar Association - which Senate Democrats had earlier declared would be crucial to their consideration of Bush nominees. Since she was deemed "well qualified" by the bar, opponents had to look for other issues.

So they began picking at her record on the Texas Supreme Court. She was declared "out of the mainstream" of the Texas high court by Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. But in fact, as she noted to the senators, she dissented in only 86 of the nearly 900 cases that have come before her, less than 10 percent.

Her opponents have fastened on one case involving parental notification in a teen abortion case in which she dissented and disagreed with her colleague Alberto Gonzales, who was in the court's majority and is now the president's White House counsel.

Addressing part of a dissenter's argument, Gonzales called it "judicial activism."

This disagreement has been seized upon by Justice Owen's detractors. But as columnist Terry Eastland pointed out in the Dallas Morning News, Gonzales was referring to another one of the dissenters, not Justice Owen, in that part of his opinion.

And it is hardly unusual for justices, even those who often think alike, to disagree on the interpretation of statutes and state constitutions. The cases that state supreme courts receive are often difficult, tangled and open to differing views. Just last month, Justices Clifford Taylor and Robert Young of the Michigan Supreme Court differed with Chief Justice Maura Corrigan and Justice Stephen Markman on a breaking and entering case. Banter was exchanged in their opinions. So what? There is little doubt they would support each other in their candidacies - as Gonzales is supporting the nomination of Owen.

What this fly-specking is really about is dragging out the nomination and hearing process for GOP-nominated judicial candidates and tarring them with the labels "controversial" and "out of the mainstream." There still may not be a vote on Justice Owen's nomination.

The three judges from Michigan nominated last November for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati still haven't received a hearing on the orders of Michigan's U.S. Senators Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow. The fourth Michigan nominee, named last month, can surely expect a long wait as well.

This is an illegitimate tactic. Yes, GOP senators did it to President Bill Clinton's nominees in the last half of his second term. That doesn't excuse it when Democrats do it - especially in the first half of this president's term.

It evades the senators' constitutional obligation to give the nominees a hearing and a vote. And in putting off votes, it allows the senators to escape accountability for what they are doing. It is unworthy of U.S. senators - particularly those from Michigan.

A New Borking Excuse

Having sharpened their knives on Charles Pickering and D. Brooks Smith, Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee turn tomorrow to Priscilla Owen, President Bush's nominee for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. The accomplished judge had better wear her battle armor.

Borking Svengali Ralph Neas is playing the gentleman this time and letting the ladies do the mugging. This is dirty work, but the gals at the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL), the National Abortion Federation and the National Organization for Women are more than up to the job. And when it comes to borking, Chairman Pat Leahy is an equal-opportunity interest-group mouthpiece.

> This time the feminist groups are doing the dirty work.

The feminists have put their wiles to work and come up with a new excuse to disqualify Judge Owens: abortion on demand for teenagers. Judge Owen must be defeated, they charge, because her rulings on the Supreme Court of Texas prove she believes a parent usually ought to be informed if his or her daughter wants an abortion.

Judge Priscilla Owen

Judge Owen "is an opponent of abortion rights for minors without their parents' permission," explains NARAL president Kate Michelman, by which she means that the judge is "someone who exemplifies the most extreme hostility to reproductive rights of any of the nominees that President Bush has named."

By this definition, two-thirds of all Americans are dangerous, right-wing extremists. Every poll on abortion shows that most Americans—pro-life and pro-choice—think it's reasonable to let mothers and fathers have a role in such a momentous decision for a minor child. The U.S. Supreme Court has also ruled that parental consent does not violate Roe v. Wade.

Judge Owen's rulings on teen abortion have nothing to do with her personal opinion but are consistent with Texas law, which is very precise about the conditions under which a court may let a girl have an abortion without notifying a parent. She voted with the majority in nine of the 12 teen-abortion decisions to come before her court. And a teen-abortion case doesn't even get to the Texas Supreme Court unless two lower-court judges—a trial judge and an appeals judge—have rejected a girl's request not to notify her parents.

The pro-abortion groups are working hand in glove with Senator Leahy to defeat Judge Owen. When the Chairman rescheduled her hearing last week, that news was up on Planned Parenthood's Web site before it was even communicated to the Republicans on the committee or the Justice Department. Talk about teamwork.

In the 14 months Judge Owen has been waiting for a hearing, the opposition has had ample time to script other Senatorial attack lines: She's anti-consumer, pro-business and wants to make it easier for anti-abortion radicals to harass women at abortion clinics. Judges are elected in Texas (something Judge Owen has opposed) and it'll be worth the price of admission Thursday to see if any Democrat dares to mention the $8,800 she legally accepted from Enron during her 1994 campaign. AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

The Owen Nomination

THE NOMINATION of Priscilla Owen to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals creates understandable anxiety among many liberal activists and senators. The Texas Supreme Court justice, who had a hearing yesterday before the Senate Judiciary Committee, is part of the right flank of the conservative court on which she serves. Her opinions have a certain ideological consistency that might cause some senators to vote against her on those grounds. But our own sense is that the case against her is not strong enough to warrant her rejection by the Senate. Justice Owen's nomination may be a close call, but she should be confirmed.

Justice Owen is indisputably well qualified, having served on a state supreme court for seven years and, prior to her election, having had a well-regarded law practice. So rather than attacking her qualifications, opponents have sought to portray her as a conservative judicial activist—that is, to accuse her of substituting her own views for those of policymakers and legislators. In support of this charge, they cite cases in which other Texas justices, including then-Justice Alberto Gonzales—now President Bush's White House Counsel—appear to suggest as much. But the cases they cite, by and large, posed legitimately difficult questions. While some of Justice Owen's opinions—particularly on matters related to abortion—seem rather aggressive, none seems to us beyond the range of reasonable judicial disagreement. And Mr. Gonzales, whatever disagreements they might have had, supports her nomination enthusiastically. Liberals will no doubt disagree with some opinions she would write on the 5th Circuit, but this is not the standard by which a president's lower-court nominees should be judged.

Nor is it reasonable to reject her because of campaign contributions she accepted, including those from people associated with Enron Corp. Texas has a particularly ugly system of judicial elections that taints all who participate in it. State rules permit judges to sit on cases in which parties or lawyers have also been donors—as Justice Owen did with Enron. Judicial elections are a bad idea, and letting judges hear cases from people who have given them money is wrong. But Justice Owen didn't write the rules and has supported a more reasonable system.

Justice Owen was one of President Bush's initial crop of 11 appeals court nominees, sent to the Senate in May of last year. Of these, only three have been confirmed so far, and six have not even had the courtesy of a hearing. The fact that President Clinton's nominees were subjected to similar mistreatment does not excuse it. In Justice Owen's case, the long wait has produced no great surprise. She is still a conservative. And that is still not a good reason to vote her down.

Owen Nomination; Critics Are Distorting Texan's Record

After hearing U.S. Court of Appeals candidate Priscilla Owen vilified in recent weeks - called everything from racist to nti-abortion to (gasp!) pro-business - the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee got the chance Tuesday to see for themselves what all the fuss is about. And, after a year in the deep freeze, the 47-year-old Texas Supreme Court justice finally got he chance to defend herself against liberal critics who have distorted her record and character in a bare-knuckled attempt to keepher off the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

One of the biggest distortions is that Justice Owen is a "judicial activist" intent on bending and twisting statutes to fit a rigid political agenda. That is the view of Sen. Richard Durbin, a Democrat from Illinois, who tore into Justice Owen for what he said was a tendency to "expand and embellish" in her written opinions. Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California was more polite but just as direct when she asked Justice Owen point-blank if she was, in fact, a "judicial activist." Justice Owen's response suggests that the Baylor Law School graduate is absolutely clear on what position she is applying for. She has no desire to legislate from the bench, she told Sen. Feinstein. If confirmed, she said, she would do only what the job calls for: interpret the law as written.

Justice Owen can be trusted to do exactly that, say those in Texas legal circles who know her best. Her supporters include Republicans and Democrats alike, and their vote of confidence should count for something - especially when weighed against the smear campaign engaged by the lobbies of the left.

As for Justice Owen's personal views on abortion, or on any issue, they remain totally irrelevant. By all accounts, she has spent the last eight years on the Texas high court doing precisely what she this week promised the Judiciary Committee she would continue to do at the federal level.

Those who oppose a judicial nominee have every right to challenge the nominee. But they do not have the right to - in legal terms - "assume facts not in evidence." For all their political games, grandstanding and name-calling, the assembled critics of Priscilla Owen have presented nothing to discredit her.

The committee should do its best to rectify this situation by scheduling a vote without further delay and approving Justice Owen's nomination. ----------

Justices Denied

Attacks on Judge Owen are unwarranted

There's a great saying about how everyone is entitled to one's own opinion, but not to one's own facts. Those intent on undermining President Bush's nominees to the federal judiciary need to remember that. In this free country, they are entitled to voice their concerns. And if they do so in a mature and constructive way, the nomination process and the country will be better off for it. Unfortunately, these days, that rarely happens.

It is not so surprising that the Senate confirmation process has, in the last two decades, gotten so destructive, hyper-partisan and downright nasty. It is terribly disconcerting.

Some say this whole trend started back in 1986 when Democrats savaged Robert Bork, President Reagan's nominee to the Supreme Court. Soon after, the word "Borking" made its way into the political lexicon. The shorthand definition: to do personal damage to the other guy's nominee for political gain. Both parties do it. Slander passing for political dissent.

It has to end, and now seems a good time to do it. After all, we have a popular chief executive halfway through his first four-year term and still the Democratic Senate continues to play childish games and hold up consideration of many of President Bush's nominees to the federal bench. They won't even give many a hearing, but their stalling tactics have served to give the left just enough time to devise the vile and shameful smear campaigns.

The latest target is Texas' Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen. A nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, Ms. Owen is a well-liked and highly respected jurist. Her legal colleagues, in both parties, call her fair, reasonable and "smart as a whip."

A coalition of liberal groups reportedly planning a caravan to Washington say she is a judicial activist who is — in their words — anti-consumer, pro-business and hostile to civil rights. If any of that were true, one suspects Texans might have caught wind of it during Ms. Owen's eight years on the Texas Supreme Court. Those who know her record best say she is being unfairly subjected to partisan mudslinging and misinformation

A typical example of distortion: Critics claim her opinion as a state high court justice in favor of Enron showed bias because of a campaign contribution from the Houston company. In truth, the ruling involved a technicality and the entire Texas Supreme Court concurred. The contribution had been made years before when she was a district judge.

For all this abuse, Ms. Owen has not even been given the courtesy of having a hearing date set. That is unacceptable. She should get a hearing at once. And her critics should hold their tongues until the president's nominee gets a chance to be heard.

Holding Up Judiciary

Priscilla Owen is far from a household name in Colorado, but residents of the state have reason enough to be interested in her nomination to the Louisiana-based 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Owen, who was nominated to the court more than a year ago, finally got a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Tuesday. She thus had her first opportunity to defend herself against criticism circulated by special-interest organizations, including the National Organization for Women. Owen told the committee her record on the Texas Supreme Court had been inaccurately portrayed, especially in regard to her positions on abortion and corporate matters.

No surprise there. Hearings on judicial nominations have come to be characterized by a well-established formula. A nomination is made, which, in turn, is a signal to opponents to get busy building a case against the nominee. Hearings are delayed long enough for the opponents to complete their work. Further delays are then ordered if it appears opponents need additional time to torpedo the nomination.

Both major parties have been guilty of using these ugly techniques.

The willingness of the Senate to engage in search-and-destroy politics carries a heavy price. In addition to debasing the constitutional process, it has left an inordinate number of vacancies in the federal courts. It also has worked a injustice on a number of nominees who continue to wait for the 'honor' of being the butt of one of these hearings.

Tim Tymkovich, a former Colorado solicitor general, was nominated well over a year ago for a spot on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals and is among those who have yet to even be given a date for a hearing. The Senate has a serious constitutional role to play in judicial appointments. We in no way suggest that it should be a rubber stamp for every nomination. We do suggest, however, that it forfeits its right to public respect when it virtually invites the partisan spectacles that have now become routine in the Senate Judiciary Committee

Let Senate decide on Owen

Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen finally had a hearing – a hostile one – on her nomination to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals Tuesday, 14 months after her name was sent to the Senate by President Bush.

By that narrow standard, she is one of the luckier Bush judicial nominees. Of his 30 circuit court nominations, 17 have not even reached the hearing stage, and only 10 have gotten the nod from the Democratic-controlled Judiciary Committee.

Senate Democrats are asserting payback time for the period when a GOP-controlled Senate rebuffed some of President Clinton's choices for the bench. This game playing reflects badly on the Senate. The nation's courts, and the rights of citizens to justice, are frustrated by the politicization of the nomination process, which ought to be confined to examining the qualifications of candidates. Judge Owen is ranked "well qualified" by the American Bar Association.

Even when the Democrats grant a hearing, it becomes a platform for personal attacks by special interest groups trying to paint the nominee as some sort of dangerous person. Liberal lobby groups determined to block "conservative" judicial nominees distorted the record of District Judge Charles Pickering beyond recognition in a successful effort to defeat his nomination to the circuit bench.

In Justice Owen's case, the lightning rods have been Enron and abortion. News reports have repeated an accusation that she granted Enron a $15 million tax break after accepting an Enron contribution to her campaign for election to the Texas Supreme Court. And the National Abortion Rights Action League has accused Justice Owen of "the most extreme hostility to reproductive rights."

The Enron case in question, which dealt with an interpretation of the Texas constitution, was decided by a unanimous court. The judgment saved Enron a whopping $225,000 in taxes, not the $15 million widely reported (and later retracted) in a study by a non-profit group that tracks campaign financing in Texas. And Justice Owen -- who has sought reform of the Texas law governing election of judges -- was not the only, or the largest, beneficiary of corporate contributions -- a fact of political life on the Texas court.

Criticism of Justice Owen's views on abortion focuses on her opinions regarding the application of a provision of a Texas law requiring parental notification before an abortion can be obtained by a minor.

At her hearing Tuesday, according to an Associated Press report, Justice Owen affirmed her respect for Roe vs. Wade as the controlling law on abortion rights, declared she would, as judge, "do my upmost to apply the statutes you [Congress] have written as you have written them," and complained that "the picture that some special interest groups have painted of me is wrong."

At the least the Judiciary Committee should agree to allow a full Senate vote on whether Justice Owen should sit on the federal bench, an opportunity that was refused Judge Pickering.

Judicial caricatures; Senate Democrats resort to their own litmus test

Sen. Orrin Hatch knows "deceptions, distortions and demagoguery," words the Utah Republican used last week to describe Democratic efforts to torpedo the nomination of Priscilla Owen to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Hatch launched his own missiles at the nominees of Bill Clinton. In this instance, the senator is right. Democrats strained to make their case that Owen, a justice on the Texas Supreme Court since 1994, represents a wayward judicial activist. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California and other Democrats disagree with Owen rulings. They highlighted the abortion issue (surely to the approving nods of interest groups). A simple difference of opinion isn't grounds for failing to confirm a nominee.

Owen is a conservative. You would expect as much from a nominee tapped by George W. Bush with the help of two Republican senators from Texas. She also carries impressive credentials, including a unanimous rating of "well-qualified" from an American Bar Association that Democrats have saluted in the past for its assessment of judicial nominees.

The federal bench has far too many vacancies, especially on the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, which serves Ohio, Michigan, Tennessee and Kentucky. The country is ill-served when senators become bogged down in squabbles over what are essentially litmus tests. Yes, Republicans did the same. That doesn't justify the caricaturing of nominees. The real Priscilla Owen deserves confirmation.

Rank Partisanship: Another Judicial Nominee is Savaged

WHEN President Bush retreats to Texas next month for some time away from Washington, he might think about how to deal with rank partisanship in the Senate, which is stiff-arming him on judicial appointments and hurting the country in the process.

Statistics tell the story: So far just 52 percent of Bush's judicial nominees have been confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate. According to figures released by the White House, at this point in their presidencies Bush's three most recent predecessors had seen 93.7 percent of their nominees confirmed. It's even worse for Bush's nominees at the appeals court level.

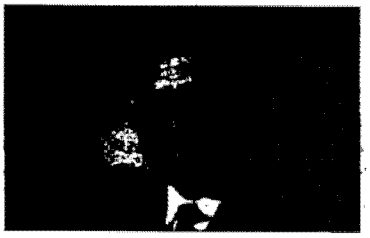
Of his 32 nominees, only 11 have been confirmed, a success rate of 34 percent. At this same juncture in time the three previous presidents had seen 92.3 percent of their nominees confirmed.

What's up with that? Partisan politics, which is why Bush might consider using the power of recess appointment - done while the Senate's in recess and temporary in nature - to get deserving people onto the federal bench.

The pending nomination of Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals shows what's happening to Bush's nominees. Despite an exemplary legal record and a "well-qualified" rating from the American Bar Association - its highest recommendation - Owen this week was savaged in her Senate Judiciary Committee hearing. Democrats insisted her rulings on abortion, with which they disagree, show she is a judicial activist, and a conservative one at that.

It's a shame. Even the Washington Post's liberal editorial page said that Owen's conservatism is no reason to block her nomination, which will be voted on by the panel in September. "While some of Justice Owen's opinions - particularly on matters related to abortion - seem rather aggressive, none seems to us beyond the range of reasonable judicial disagreement," the Post said.

We wonder how Democrats can look themselves in a mirror as they punish well-qualified individuals like Owen. Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy of Vermont called her "outside the mainstream."



Outside the Vermont mainstream, perhaps, but we wouldn't consider that a disqualification.

To the country's detriment, it's the narrow way Leahy and his allies define mainstream that counts. - The Editors.

From my experience, I know she is a jurist of integrity

ALBERTO GONZALES

Both the president and the Senate have constitutionally assigned roles in the appointment of federal judges. President Bush has fulfilled his responsibility by submitting highly qualified nominees who will be common-sense federal judges, such as Priscilla Owen, my former colleague on the Texas Supreme Court who has been nominated to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Justice Owen will receive her Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on Thursday, which regrettably is more than 14 months after the president submitted her nomination to the Senate. Although the Senate has made progress in confirming federal trial court judges, it has failed to act promptly on the president's appeals court nominees, as illustrated by its delay in considering Justice Owen's nomination. Indeed, 23 of the president's 32 appeals court nominees still haven't received Senate votes, and 11 of the president's appeals court nominees, including Justice Owen, have been forced to wait more than a year just for hearings.

As a result of those delays, our courts of appeals are nearly 20 percent vacant, and many of the vacancies, including the 5th Circuit vacancy in Texas, have been classified as emergencies by the Judicial Conference of the United States. Chief Justice William Rehnquist recently labeled the situation "alarming" and echoed Mr. Bush's call for the Senate to grant prompt hearings and up-or-down votes for all judicial nominees.

Now that she finally is receiving her hearing, Justice Owen should be promptly confirmed by the Senate. She possesses exceptional integrity, character and intellect; extensive experience as a judge and lawyer in private practice; and the strong support of both senators from Texas. She has served with distinction on the Texas Supreme Court since 1995 (where I served with her).

Texas holds elections for judges: Priscilla Owen was re-elected in 2000 by an overwhelming majority, and every major newspaper in Texas endorsed her. Before becoming a judge, Justice Owen practiced law at a leading firm in Texas for 17 years. Her academic credentials are impeccable, having graduated with honors from Baylor Law School. She received the highest grade on the Texas Bar Exam. The American Bar Association unanimously rated her "well qualified," its highest possible rating.

Justice Owen also has used her talents to benefit others. She served as the Texas Supreme Court liaison to statewide committees regarding legal services to the poor and pro bono legal services. She worked on a committee that successfully encouraged the Texas Legislature to enact legislation that has resulted in millions of dollars in additional funds for providers of legal services to the poor. She helped organize a group that seeks to lessen the adversarial nature of legal proceedings when a marriage is dissolved.

As someone who had the privilege of serving with Priscilla Owen on the Texas Supreme Court, I can say without hesitation that she is extraordinarily well qualified to serve as a judge on the federal appeals court. Some have questioned Justice Owen's qualifications because she and I disagreed at times on the interpretation of a new Texas parental notification statute in 2000. As all judges know, cases of statutory construction often result in disagreements among judges honestly struggling to interpret the statute, particularly when the statute is vague or ambiguous.

The fact that Justice Owen and I disagreed in some cases is unremarkable. My experience serving with Justice Owen squares with the combined judgment of the president, Sen. Phil Gramm, Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, the American Bar Association and many others: She is an outstanding jurist and will perform superbly as a federal appeals court judge.

The Senate should confirm Justice Owen promptly and then move quickly to schedule hearings and votes for all of the president's other long-pending nominees.

Alberto R. Gonzales is counsel to the president.

EDITORIALS

Justices Denied

Attacks on Judge Owen are unwarranted

There's a great saying about how everyone is entitled to one's own opinion, but not to one's own facts. Those intent on undermining President Bush's nominees to the federal judiciary need to remember that. In this free country, they are entitled to voice their concerns. And if they do so in a mature and constructive way, the nomination process and the country will be better off for it. Unfortunately, these days, that rarely happens.

It is not so surprising that the Senate confirmation process has, in the last two decades, gotten so destructive, hyper-partisan and downright nasty. It is terribly disconcerting.

Some say this whole trend started back in 1986 when Democrats savaged Robert Bork, President Reagan's nominee to the Supreme Court. Soon after, the word "Borking" made its way into the political lexicon. The shorthand definition: to do personal damage to the other guy's nominee for political gain. Both parties do it. Slander passing for political dissent.

It has to end, and now seems a good time to do it. After all, we have a popular chief executive halfway through his first four-year term and still the Democratic Senate continues to play childish games and hold up consideration of many of President Bush's nominees to the federal bench. They won't even give many a hearing, but their stalling tactics have served to give the left just enough time to devise the vile and shameful smear campaigns.

The latest target is Texas' Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen. A nominee to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, Ms. Owen is a well-liked and highly respected jurist. Her legal colleagues, in both parties, call her fair, reasonable and "smart as a whip."

A coalition of liberal groups reportedly planning a caravan to Washington say she is a judicial activist who is — in their words — anti-consumer, pro-business and hostile to civil rights. If any of that were true, one suspects Texans might have caught wind of it during Ms. Owen's eight years on the Texas Supreme Court. Those who know her record best say she is being unfairly subjected to partisan mudslinging and misinformation

A typical example of distortion: Critics claim her opinion as a state high court justice in favor of Enron showed bias because of a campaign contribution from the Houston company. In truth, the ruling involved a technicality and the entire Texas Supreme Court concurred. The contribution had been made years before when she was a district judge.

For all this abuse, Ms. Owen has not even been given the courtesy of having a hearing date set. That is unacceptable. She should get a hearing at once. And her critics should hold their tongues until the president's nominee gets a chance to be heard.

Brett,

I am attaching the African American Yearbook Congratulations from the President to be placed in the front of the yearbook. The African American Yearbook is a compilation of African American information. The author of the African American Yearbook is the same person that compiles the Hispanic Yearbook. Please review the language in this Congratulations letter from a legal perspective and then once approved, political affairs will send the letter over to the Staff Secretary for final approval. Your immediate attention is required because they are printing this yearbook shortly.

Thanks again,

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 4, 2003

Dear Senator Leahy:

I write in response to your recent remarks about the President's nominations to the United States Court of Federal Claims and the United States Sentencing Commission. Specifically, at the Judiciary Committee's Executive Business Meeting on March 27, 2003, you referred to the Court of Federal Claims and the Sentencing Commission and then stated that "the President continues to proceed unilaterally on what have traditionally been bipartisan boards and commissions." And at a judicial nominations hearing on March 12, 2003, you complained that "there has been no consultation with the Democratic leadership regarding the remaining nominations to the Court of Federal Claims" and that President Bush's nominations to the Sentencing Commission "are not based on recommendations of the Senate's Democratic Leader or leadership."

We agree that President Bush's nominations to the Court of Federal Claims and the Sentencing Commission are not based on recommendations from the Senate's Democratic Leader or leadership. We respectfully disagree, however, that this somehow is in breach of history or tradition, or otherwise is improper.

The Court of Federal Claims is not, and never has been, a board or commission with appointments split between Republicans and Democrats. To the contrary, it is a court established under Article I of the Constitution that, by statute, consists of judges that are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. See 28 U.S.C. § 171. Nothing in the statute purports to impose a qualification requirement that a fixed number of judges of the court either (1) be members of or affiliated with a particular political party or (2) be selected by the leadership of the political party opposite the President.

Moreover, there is no established history or tradition of Presidents appointing judges to the Court of Federal Claims who are members of the opposite party. After the Court was established in 1982, Presidents Reagan and Bush almost exclusively appointed Republicans to serve as judges of the Court of Federal Claims. Of the 19 judges appointed to the court by Presidents Reagan and Bush, at least 16 were Republicans. Three of the Reagan-Bush appointees may have been Democrats (they were of unknown political affiliation), but in any event were not recommended by the Senate's Democratic Leader or leadership. Similarly, President Clinton almost exclusively appointed Democrats. Of the six judges appointed to the court by President Clinton, all but one was a Democrat. It is true that, in 1998, President Clinton nominated a Republican, Edward J. Damich, who had been recommended by Chairman Hatch. That President Clinton one time considered and ultimately nominated a person suggested by Chairman Hatch, however, does not establish a tradition of bipartisan appointments to the Court of Federal Claims, nor does it establish a "long history of compromise and accommodation regarding appointments" to this court, as you claim.

In your statement at the judicial nominations hearing on March 12, 2003, you stated that the White House has "refused to accommodate" your request that President Bush nominate Sarah L. Wilson for a full 15-year term on the Court of Federal Claims. Ms. Wilson, a Democrat and former member of the Clinton White House staff, was recess appointed to the court by President Clinton on January 19, 2001 – President Clinton's last full day in office. She served as a judge of the court for nearly two years, until her recess appointment expired in November 2002. By declining to nominate Ms. Wilson to the Court of Federal Claims, President Bush has acted in a manner that is entirely consistent with that of past Presidents.

In contrast to the Court of Federal Claims, federal statute provides that, of the Sentencing Commission's seven members, "[n]ot more than four . . . shall be members of the same political party." 28 U.S.C. § 992. For such statutorily bipartisan boards and commissions, this Administration has, on a case-by-case basis and as a matter of comity, worked with the Senate's Democratic Leader to select mutually acceptable individuals for appointment to fill Democrat positions. The Administration has done so, notwithstanding the fact that the relevant statutory provisions for most bipartisan boards and commissions (including the Sentencing Commission) require only that a fixed number of appointees be of a particular political party, not that a fixed number of appointees be selected by the leadership of the political party opposite the President. Indeed, because the Constitution's Appointments Clause vests the appointment power exclusively in the President, the Courts of Law, or the Heads of Departments, see U.S. Const., art. II, § 2, Congress may not, as a constitutional matter, authorize anyone else – including itself – to appoint officers of the United States such as Members of the Sentencing Commission.

Currently, three of the seven seats on the Sentencing Commission are filled by Democrats, two are filled by Republicans, and two are vacant. As you know, President Bush has nominated Ricardo Hinojosa, a registered Republican, to fill one of the vacant seats, and Michael E. Horowitz, a registered Independent, to fill the other. Upon their respective confirmations, the Commission will consist of three Democrats (including the Chair and two Vice Chairs), three Republicans (including one Vice Chair), and one Independent. Accordingly, the composition of the Commission will conform to the statutory requirement that not more that four members be of the same political party. In addition, the Commission will consist of three members selected by Democrats and four members selected by Republicans. As such, the nominations of Judge Hinojosa and Mr. Horowitz also properly conformed to this Administration's practice of working, on a case-by-case basis and as a matter of comity, with the Senate's Democratic Leader to select mutually acceptable candidates to fill certain vacancies on statutorily bipartisan boards and commissions. By any reasonable measure, then, the President has proceeded appropriately in making nominations to the Sentencing Commission.

Please let me know if we have misstated your concerns, or if we misunderstand the legal requirements or history and practice of appointments to the Court of Federal Claims and the Sentencing Commission. We stand ready to meet with you on these or any other issues, if you so desire.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

All - left messages or spoke with each of you yesterday, but just to follow up...many of you have had questions about the duration of this new posture. My simple answer is this: We are to be in an "on-call" status until further notice. I can predict the future as well as the next person, but my guess is we stay like this for at least this week and probably next. Could be longer, but I don't want to get your hopes up...and again, it would only be a guess.

Regardless of on site vs. on call, please continue to send me your rotation schedule. I think most of you have the requisite number of personnel now, with the exception of a couple of folks that just came up for me to read on in Greg and Phil's section.

Thanks for the support these last few weeks. I'll call soon as I know of any anticipated changes.

Hatch Tries to Hurry Along Asbestos Settlement

By Keith Perine, CQ Staff

A coalition of defendants in asbestos-related lawsuits is proposing a $90 billion trust fund be created, paid in equal parts by businesses and insurers, to cover the avalanche of claims related to the cancer-causing substance.

The Asbestos Study Group's plan was timed to beat an April 10 deadline set by Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin G. Hatch for ideas he could incorporate into legislation.

The defendant group presented its proposal to the Asbestos Alliance — led by the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) — at an April 4 meeting.

The stakes are high. According to a 2002 study by the RAND Institute for Civil Justice, more than 600,000 people had filed claims for asbestos-related compensation by the end of 2000, at a cost to businesses of $54 billion. Dozens of companies have been forced into bankruptcy by such claims. The study's authors estimated that 2.4 million more claims could be filed, at a further cost of as much as $210 billion.

"It is a crisis that is spinning out of control," said Jan Amundson, NAM's senior vice president and general counsel. "It is a crisis that needs to be taken care of, and the only people who can take care of it [are in] Congress."

One participant in the April 4 meeting said there was a "muted and polite" reaction to the group's proposal. Labor unions probably will reject the $90 billion figure as too low.

According to meeting participants, the Asbestos Study Group sketched out a plan in which asbestos defendants and insurers initially would be responsible for paying $2.5 billion annually into the fund. Under the proposal, that amount gradually would decline during the 25 years that participants contribute, but would remain adjustable.

The group proposed dividing businesses' share of the annual payment into several slices, according to how much individual companies have spent on such lawsuits.

One category would include companies that have paid more than $50 million. Another would include companies that have paid between $10 million and $50 million. Those two categories would be subdivided into three different groups.

A third category would be for firms that have paid between $1 million and $10 million. The fourth category would include defendants that have filed for bankruptcy. Those firms would be responsible for 20 percent of the annual payment, or $500 million initially.

Companies that have paid less than $1 million in claims, and those firms classified as small businesses as defined by the Small Business Administration, would not have to pay into the trust fund.

All the participants in the trust fund would be liable only for their assigned payments. If a participant company goes bankrupt, the trust fund would become a priority creditor.

Meanwhile, insurance companies are trying to figure out how to divide their share among primary insurance firms and reinsurers, which insure the insurers.

The Asbestos Study Group has favored the trust fund approach as a way to create some certainty about how much money companies would have to pay. The alliance, on the other hand, has been advocating the medical criteria approach so that only people who are actually sick can bring claims.

Hatch has already outlined a framework for his bill that would combine elements of two approaches — establishing a trust fund and requiring plaintiffs to meet certain medical criteria before they could make a claim.

The Utah Republican envisions "some sort of tribunal" that would handle asbestos claims outside the regular court system.

Hatch said it would be "logical" for medical criteria to be part of the legislation. But no agreement has been reached on what medical criteria to use. Hatch has signaled he might favor guidelines established by the American Bar Association.

He intends to finish drafting a bill during the two-week spring recess, with the aim of shepherding it through the Senate by June.

"We can't keep playing with this," Hatch said. "We only have a limited window."

House Judiciary Chairman F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., has indicated he will wait for the Senate to pass its bill before moving legislation through his committee.

Rep. Chris Cannon, R-Utah, has introduced a bill (HR 1586 <>) that would establish medical criteria for asbestos claims.

It also would make defendants liable only for the portion of judgments equivalent to the percentage of their responsibility.

Defendants whose share of blame was fixed at more than 50 percent would be responsible for the entire judgment.

No problem. We've had this question asked several times over the years.

Our lawyers have dealt with it on several occasions.

WH Counsel should know,

1. GOPAC is a membership organization

2. The Charter Member's Meeting is not a fundraising event, nor is a fundraising event attached to it.

3. Charter Members, however, are donors to the organization in that they pay a membership fee of $10,000 per year, though we've expanded the membership class this year to include $5,000 and $25,000 members.

4. Ken's name would go the program of events for the two-day Annual Charter Member's Meeting and Chairman's Dinner as a speaker.

Let me know quickly as invites need to go out.

Robb- I am double checking with our Counsel's office to make sure Ken can speak to the Conference. Just so I have all the information, is this meeting a fundraiser or does it involve donors? Thanks.
Are you planning on sending anything out with Ken's name on it? thanks

Ken--
Thanks for meeting Wednesday. JC and I are focused on making GOPAC a major player in the Party. Next steps we discussed were:

1. You would discuss w/ Karl recommendations for GOPAC's board (mainly a finance role) (I'll send GOPAC's current list this afternoon) - a strong Bush person would be a subtle win/win.
2. I would put GOPAC's attorney (Randy Evans) together with your attorney to discuss the permissible scope of GOPAC's activities in 03' and 04' (who is the right person, Michael Toner?)
More immediately, though, JC and I have a huge favor to ask of you on behalf of GOPAC. GOPAC's Charter Member Meetings are April 27/28 in D.C. at the Ritz-Carlton. They begin Sunday afternoon with a senior-level members' meeting (100+ people) and close with a Chairman's Dinner (fundraiser) Monday night (300+ people).
3. Would you address the senior-level membership on Sunday at 4:00 p.m.? (other speakers are Ralph Reed and Frank Luntz)
4. Can you help us get Karen H. to be the Keynote Speaker at the Chairman's Dinner on Monday evening (Ritz-Carlton); she would be ideal to discuss communicating the Republican message; she would give special credibility to GOPAC at JC first Chairman's Dinner; and it would send the right message for JC and Karen to kick things off. JC is going to call her today, as well. We need a quick answer, as invites go out next Tuesday. If Karen is unable, maybe Karl?
Thanks Ken.

Subject: Court of Federal Claims Judges

Rena & Manny, a Senator Leahy staffer called me today to talk about Senator Leahy's opposition to filling any openings on the CFC until there has been a hearing to look at the Court's caseload. I wonder why they weren't worried about this under the Clinton Administration! Anyway, before I start to rant, I just wanted to let you know that fact and that Senators Leahy and Schumer are planning to make speeches in tomorrow's markup, saying that they won't vote for CFC judges until there has been a hearing to see if there is a sufficiency of judges on this court. I have asked both Leahy and Schumer to reconsider as to Charles Lettow.

Ok, just came out of a meeting with speaker staff. The TRIA language, which does not appear in either bill, will not be pushed by the speaker.
They will cite that they simply cannot anticipate the full impact.

As for allen, the speaker has constituent interest and he "will not be bound by a bad deal of a different admin. Moreover, someone needs to stand up for families whose rights were dealt away by carter. " We are not in a good spot on this one. The ONLY argument that has any traction is the Treasury exposure. Can I get someone who would be willing to "lawyer up" the spkr staff? Specifically, I need someone who can explain exactly how US Treasury could be on the hook for these claims.

This is from Newsweek's April 7 issue. My how quickly things can change.
ÿ ÿ ÿ

IRAQI QUICKSAND EDITION

Gee, that little war was easy, just like we told everybody. Now it's on to Iran, North Korea and... Wha!! They're fighting back? No fair!
ÿ
ÿ
C.W.
Bush

Steadfast, but his war cluelessly flings open the gates of hell, making any sort of victory Pyrrhic.

Blair

British P.M. can actually explain this thing coherently. He's Churchill to Bush's Red Buttons.
```

Cheney

Tells "Meet the Press" just before war, "We will be greeted as liberators." An arrogant blunder for the ages.

Rumsfeld

Taking fire from TV retired generals for flawed war plan. And how did you miss the fedayeen?

Wallace

Top general honest enough to admit U.S. misjudged the enemy. But bosses not honest enough to admit he's right.

Blogs

Internet diarists, both here and abroad, offer fresh, feisty angles. Beats Aaron Brown every time.

Romney sends White House 13 choices for US judgeship

Six state judges on the list for District Court seat

By Frank Phillips, Globe Staff, 4/11/2003

Governor Mitt Romney has recommended 13 Massachusetts candidates, including several with strong Democratic backgrounds, for consideration by the White House for a federal judgeship in Boston.

Three of the candidates are former prosecutors who worked with governor William F. Weld when he was the US attorney in Boston. Among them is Brackett B. Denniston III, now a vice president and senior counsel for General Electric, who also served as Weld's legal counsel at the State House.

The lifetime position, which pays $154,000 a year, requires Senate confirmation.

The opening on the federal bench has been created by the pending retirement of US District Judge Robert E. Keeton. Because Romney is the ranking elected GOP figure in the state, President Bush, following political tradition, is soliciting the governor's recommendations for the job.

A copy of the letter sent by Romney to the White House was obtained by the Globe. Romney's press aides said the administration had no comment.

The list includes six judges on the state Superior Court: Ralph D. Gants, who also was a federal prosecutor in Weld's office; S. Jane Haggerty; Jeffrey Locke, the former Republican district attorney of Norfolk County; Stephen E. Neel; Richard E. Welch, III; and Timothy S. Hillman.

Romney is also recommending Karen Green, a partner at the Boston firm Hale and Dorr. She was an assistant US attorney under Weld and was his chief of staff. Despite her ties to Weld, Green has donated to Senator John F. Kerry, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, and, in 2000, to Democrat Bill Bradley and Republican John McCain, who was in a bitter struggle with Bush in the primaries.

Also on the list are two minority candidates - Henry T. A. Moniz, a lawyer of Cape Verdean descent with the Boston firm Bingham McCutchen, who helped represent President Clinton during the impeachment proceedings, and Steven H. Wright, an African-American attorney at the Boston office of Holland & Knight. Both have made campaign contributions to liberal Democrats, in Massachusetts and around the country.

Two other attorneys on the list are patent lawyer Philip C. Swain of Concord, a partner at the Boston firm, Foley Hoag & Eliot, and F. Dennis Saylor of Weston, a partner at Goodwin Procter.

Concerned that not enough Republicans were represented on the list, the White House suggested yesterday that Romney add Superior Court Judge David A. Lowy, former assistant counsel to Weld and husband of his chief of staff, Virginia Buckingham, a Massachusetts Republican advisor said. Lowy was among those names that Romney recently sent for review to Kennedy and Kerry, but had been cut from the list.

Brett,

I am attaching the African American Yearbook Congratulations from the President to be placed in the front of the yearbook. The African American Yearbook is a compilation of African American information. The author of the African American Yearbook is the same person that compiles the Hispanic Yearbook. Please review the language in this Congratulations letter from a legal perspective and then once approved, political affairs will send the letter over to the Staff Secretary for final approval. Your immediate attention is required because they are printing this yearbook shortly.

Thanks again,

Very interesting markup today. Started class action, then held over because Leahy & Durbin claimed they hadn't been given enough time to review Feinstein's amendment (there were a little more fireworks and back and forth between Hatch and Leahy than I am conveying - always makes markups interesting)

So the agreement is we go forward with the markup next week, no new amendments except if they relate to Feinstein's amendment (so you can be sure we will get 20 second degrees) but they have to be circulated 24 hours in advance fortunately. And it continues.
OGH is determined to finish it next week and not let it hang over the recess.

x4479 COMMITTEE BUSINESS

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003

United States Senate,

Committee on the Judiciary,

Washington, D.C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:10 a.m., in room SD-226, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Orrin G. Hatch, Chairman of the Committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Hatch, Grassley, Specter, Kyl, DeWine, Craig, Chambliss, Cornyn, Leahy, Kennedy, Kohl, Feinstein, Feingold, Schumer, and Durbin.

Chairman Hatch. Let us get going this morning. We have enough people here to at least start talking.

We have decided the way to break some of the logjams on these judges is to bring Roberts back into the Committee for a one-day appearance, with the understanding that he could be put on the very next markup even if it is a very short time, with no put-over for a week, and we vote on him.

But Cook will have a right to be up at any time thereafter. In other words, from this day on, within a week, on the floor. She can be called up right after the Roberts' hearing, the day after if the majority leader wants to.

Let me just think what else there was to that. Mr. Sutton will be brought up tomorrow. Senator Harkin will be Senator Pryor talked about Mr. Holmes, they cited his qualifications, his ability to administer justice in a fair manner and above all his integrity. Most striking are the letters that the Committee has received from pro-choice attorneys, both men and women throughout Arkansas, who strongly believe that Mr. Holmes will fairly adjudicate any case including abortion cases that come before him. They personally attest to his integrity and character and commitment to following the law.

For example, Beth Deere, at attorney with Mr. Holmes' prior firm, Williams and Anderson, she wrote the Committee, quote, "I am proud to be a Democrat. I am also proud to recommend Leon Holmes as Federal District Judge even though he and I disagree on issues including a woman's right to choose," unquote. She concludes, quote, "Mr. Holmes is shot through with integrity. He will, I believe, uphold and apply the law with the utmost care and diligence," unquote.

Eileen Woods Harrison, a self-described pro-choice Democrat and a former administrative law judge with the Arkansas Workers Compensation Commission, had the opportunity to observe Mr. Holmes' legal work firsthand when he represented the opposing side in a lawsuit that she filed. She writes, quote, "I commend Mr. Holmes to you. He is a brilliant man and a great lawyer and a fine person. Mr. Holmes conducted himself in the most professional and ethical manner throughout my case. I gained a great respect for him during the course of the litigation."

I will put copies of those letters in the record.

[The letters follow:]

59 7 Chairman Hatch. Now, his former law partner, Philip Anderson, is a recent past President of the American Bar Association. He strongly supports Holmes, even though he disagrees with him on some of these issue. Now, Mr. Anderson has written the Committee, quote, "Mr. Holmes is a person or rock solid integrity and sterling character. He is compassionate and even-handed. He has an innate sense of fairness. He is temperamentally suited for the bench. In short, he has all of the qualities that one would hope to find in a Federal judge," unquote.

I will submit that as a copy for the record as well, without objection.

In addition to these attorneys, Mr. Holmes' local newspaper, the Arkansas Democrat Gazette has heartily endorsed him. What is interesting about this endorsement is that it was announced before he was even nominated. In endorsing Holmes the Democrat Gazette Editorial Board reviewed a list of seven district court candidates former Senator Hutchinson had submitted to the White House for consideration. Out of that, quote, "impressive list of possibles," unquote, the newspaper wrote, "One name stood out. One name was reminiscent of Judge Richard S. Arnold, formerly Chief Judge on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals." Now to quote the editorial, speaking of Judge Arnold, quote, "His is the kind of light that illuminates, not just flares. It isn't agreeing or disagreeing with where Judge Arnold has come out on a legal question that educates, but seeing how he got there. Great judges are like that," unquote.

The editorial continues, quote, "The same light settled on one name. The name might as well have been in italics, Leon Holmes," unquote. Quote, "What distinguishes Mr. Holmes is the rare blend of qualities he brings to the law, intellect, scholarship, conviction and detachment," unquote. The editorial concludes, quote, "Their politics and their approach to many aspects of the law may be different, yet Richard Arnold and Leon Holmes cast the same illuminating light," unquote.

I might add that Judge Arnold was appointed by President Carter to the U.S. District Court in Arkansas, and then the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, and is often mentioned as a U.S. Supreme Court candidate.

Now let me just add to that, during the Clinton years.r

Senator Specter. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt you for just a moment?

Chairman Hatch. Yes.

Senator Specter. As I had mentioned to you before we started, I have to go to chair another hearing at 11:00, and while we are hearing this matter, I had been advised by staff that the five nominees were all noncontroversial. I know this nominee has been held over for a week, but I would suggest that we hold him over beyond so we can examine this.

Chairman Hatch. If the Senator would just hold in abeyance that request, let me just finish here, because I have a suggestion.

Senator Durbin. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized too.

Chairman Hatch. Of course. Let me just end this because this bothers me too. I can say that I was Chairman during six years of President Clinton's administration, and I can tell you that Judge Arnold was really at the top of the list for the Supreme Court, there is no question. And I think the only reason--maybe I shouldn't comment on that. It was a legitimate reason by the President. There was only one reason why he wasn't chosen, and that was a concern about age and health. I certainly told the President that I would support him, that I thought he was an excellent judge. Well, they are comparing this man with Judge Arnold, so apparently the people in Arkansas know a lot more than we do.

Let me just make a suggestion to us. I would be happy to put him over for a week at the request of Senator Specter, but I think there is a way of resolving this perhaps, and that is, if you are willing, to report him out without recommendation, and then we all go to the Arkansas Senators, and they will have to move his nomination on the floor if they want to continue to push him.

We could do that or we can put him over for a week and study it a little bit more, but I am concerned about some of those remarks, but everything I hear about the man is that he is a person of inestimable legal ability, intellect, capacity, decency, honor. The fact that he has made some of these statements that are very questionable in my eyes, as has been explained by my colleagues, I have to rely a lot on the two Democrat Senators and I might add the vetting of the administration, and the fact that the American Bar Association gives him a well-qualified rating, a majority well-qualified rating, and I certainly want to rely on the home State Senators here if I can.ar Senator Durbin. Mr. Chairman?

Senator Leahy. I would like to say something too.

Chairman Hatch. Senator Leahy first and then Senator Durbin.

Senator Leahy. Just briefly, if I might-- Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, before we begin, could I just ask unanimous consent that my entire record--that my statement be put into the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection. We will put statements of anybody in the record without objection.

Senator Schumer. I don't need my entire record to be in the record.

[Laughter.]

[The prepared statement of Senator Schumer follows:]

REV_00386236

879 Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman, I apologize for stepping out. I have trouble with nosebleeds, not that you give them to me, I want to hasten to add.

Chairman Hatch. I would never claim that.

Senator Leahy. But if this is going to be put over I have a longer statement. I was listening to Senator Feinstein and Senator Schumer earlier, and one thing that stuck in my mind, and it also stuck in my mind last night as I was reading over some of the report on this--and I appreciate the concern of the Senator from Pennsylvania in wanting to look at it further. I would urge all Senators to. There is almost a flippant disregard of the question of rape. It brought me back to a memory, and I won't identify the victim any more closely than this because she was a juvenile at the time. It was a case I had as a young prosecutor, of a young woman, teenage, well under 16, where you would be an adult, she had been raped and did become pregnant, a very violent rape by a family member. The trauma, enormous trauma to this young woman, and I know that it took her years to get over this. I doubt if she ever fully got over it, but I know what she went through and what her family went through. The Senator from California is absolutely right in talking about these kind of issues. There seems almost sometimes, people sort of take this, well, rape, that is that. Unless you spent some time working with rape victims, as I have and several others around this table have, as horrible as it is, I don't think especially we men can fully grasp what a terrible traumatic event this is.

What bothers me so much with Mr. Holmes, of course everybody has a right to say whatever they want, but what he says seems to reflect a cavalier attitude to such a terrible, terrible traumatic incident. That bothers me. I don't mind that somebody disagrees with me on choice questions or a whole lot of other issues, assuming that they are going to be sensitive to people who hold differing views. But when you have something which appears to be a cavalier attitude toward what is a horrendous crime. We have had people here that I have been very much against who seemed very much concerned about property crimes, but not concerned about something that goes way beyond any property crime. So if this is going to be held over, I will speak further on it, but I wanted to compliment the Senator from California and the Senator from New York for their comments.

Chairman Hatch. If we are going to hold them over, could we reserve our comments for the next time, or do you really need to speak today, Senator? Senator Durbin.

Senator Durbin. Mr. Chairman, I will make it brief because I think this is the right thing to do, to hold him over. Words count in life and in the law particularly, and the words of a judge will determine the outcome of a trial and the rights of the parties in the courtroom, and the words of Leon Holmes convict him of insensitivity to some of the most basic values and issues that come before a Federal Court.

I know that we disagree, Mr. Holmes and I, on the issue of abortion, but I can certainly tell you that of the 115 nominees from President Bush, the vast majority of them don't hold the same position that I do on the issue of abortion, and yet I have given the President his nominees. But Mr. Holmes' views reach a much different level. Let me give you a specific illustration.

I asked Leon Holmes in a written question whether he would recuse himself as a Federal District Court Judge if any of the eight different anti-abortion organizations that he has represented as an attorney would come before him in the court. He refused. He will not recuse himself when these organizations that he has represented as an attorney come before him in the court. Nor is he willing to commit to recusing himself on any type of abortion cases, despite his long history.

I also asked a question which is not a trick question. It has become boilerplate. I asked Mr. Holmes to name three Supreme Court cases with which he disagreed. I hope that you will read his response, and I would like to read it.

given opportunity to make whatever statements he desires and then we will vote on Sutton when we come back, as I understand it.

We are going to recess for just a second or two. We will be right back.

[The Committee was recessed from 10:13 a.m. to 10:20 a.m.]

Chairman Hatch. I would like to welcome everybody to this markup. We have several important matters on today's agenda including five nominations that I would like to have voted on today. They are: J. Leon Holmes to be District Judge for the Eastern District of Arkansas; Cecilia Altonaga to be District Judge for the Southern District of Florida; Patricia Minaldi to be District Judge for the Western District of Louisiana; Susan Braden and Charles Lettow to be Judges for the Court of Federal Claims.

I am also looking forward to picking up where we left off last week on S. 274, the Bipartisan Class Action Fairness Act.

Is there any objection to these four judges? Senator Feinstein.

First let me have the ranking member make any remarks. He is allowed to say a few words here, isn't he?

Senator Leahy. Just to help speed things up, I will hold off my opening statement till after we have voted on

"As a citizen I am troubled by the Supreme Court decisions in Dred Scott, Buck v. Bell," which is a case of involuntary sterilization by the State, "and Roe v. Wade, because in my view, each of those decisions failed to respect the dignity and worth of the human person."

How can a person make that statement about Roe v. Wade and then quickly add that, "I will apply this law with objectivity." I think it is almost impossible.

Let me tell you, when you go into the specific issues that have been raised here, he did say, in fairness to Mr. Holmes--and I don't know if you have seen this, Mr. Chairman; you should, and I am certain that you will quote it back to me at some future point. But when he was asked about this statement, about the likelihood of rape victims conceiving, and was quoted as saying, "Because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami," he said, and I quote, "I have to acknowledge that my own rhetoric, particularly when I first became involved in the issue in 1980 and perhaps some years thereafter, but sometimes has been unduly strident and inflammatory. The sentence about rape victims which was made in a letter to an editor in 1980 is particularly troublesome to me from a distance of 23 years later. Regardless of the merits of the issue, the articulation in that sentence reflects an insensitivity for which there is no excuse and for which I apologize."

That was part of his response to me, and that should be part of the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection, that will be made part of the record.

[The information follows:]

tql Chairman Hatch. I appreciate you bringing that out.

Senator Durbin. But I do want to make another point, and my last point. When I asked him specifically about this statement that he made, that a wife is to subordinate herself to her husband and the woman is to place herself under the authority of the man, I am very troubled by his response to me. And his response, which I will make a part of the record, says that the article that I mentioned was a discussion of the historic teachings of the Catholic Church and is based on the sacramental theology of the Catholic Church. "In my view these teachings ennoble and dignify both men and women. They do not demean either." He goes on to explain that this was in the context of ordaining priests and so forth, but I will tell you, as a person with a Catholic background, that is a troubling statement for him to make. I don't believe that that type of statement, which reflects a narrow view of Catholic theology, should be used to in any way justify a statement which by contemporary standards should not be followed by any Federal District Court Judge in any State.

I will close by saying this: I am certain that of the millions of people in Arkansas and the thousands of attorneys in Arkansas, and maybe the thousands of Republican attorneys in Arkansas, there has to be a nominee that can be brought forward that can do that State proud. Mr. Holmes is not such a nominee.

Chairman Hatch. With that, we will put him over for a week, and I suggest that every member of the Committee chat with the two Senators from Arkansas, and hopefully they will be able to persuade us that the Arkansas Gazette is right and all of these others are right as well. But I have to admit I think probably most people have made some inappropriate statements during their lifetime that they wish they hadn't. I know I have, and especially in your younger years. There is no question about it. But let us look at it. I am troubled by the same statements that you are, and on the other hand, I do place great weight on the two Senators and also on the people down in Arkansas, and especially those who have worked with him in the courts and so forth. We are going to put him over.

What is would like to do is move to a vote on Susan G. Braden at this point. Is that okay with you, or do you want me--

Senator Specter. Mr. Chairman, I am going to have to leave to chair a hearing at 11 o'clock, and I would ask if we might take up a very brief amendment under the class action case. Senator Feinstein are prepared to offer and speak just a minute or two.

Chairman Hatch. Is there any objection?

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection. I just have a statement that I want to make before we go to the two Court of Federal Claims nominees, but I can wait.

Chairman Hatch. Then we will take that out of turn and the Senator can bring up his amendment.

Senator Specter. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you all. Senator Feinstein and I are moving to strike on page 19, lines 18 through 25, and on page 20, lines 1 through 7. These are additions to this class action bill, and I have had considerable comment, and Senator Feinstein advises me that she has also. These matters do not relate to class actions, but the (i) relates to private attorneys general, somebody who initiates a suit on behalf of other unnamed people, and (ii) refers to mass tort claims, which again doesn't involve class actions.

I support this class action bill for reasons that I have discussed before, but these are add-ons, and have not been considered by the Committee, and would make really very, very material changes.

[Mr. Specter's Amendment follows:]

ard I Senator Feinstein. Mr. Chairman, may I speak?

I would like to add my voice of support to what Senator Specter has said. I believe he is absolutely correct. This came to our attention late yesterday. I didn't catch it on my reading of the bill, and it has apparently been added to the bill a year or so ago. It was not in the original bill. It is really directed at California law, although other jurisdictions which have similar law it may be applied against. This law allows individuals to sue on behalf of a general public in lieu of the attorney general, so they are called private attorney general actions, and what they do is they allow individual groups or local district attorneys or Government officials or even individual consumers to sue corporations on behalf of the people of the State. These suits are generally to recover illegally gained profits or to enforce California law against companies that do business in my State. As Senator Specter said, they are not class actions, and this is a class action bill. But the bill essentially deems these suits to be class actions, and therefore moves many of them to Federal Court even if the plaintiffs are all in California.

Now, this is of great concern to me. Yesterday my staff, Mr. Chairman, worked with your staff to see if something could be worked out, but at this point it hasn't happened. Let me give you an example. If a California consumer sued Enron on behalf of the general public in an attempt to force Enron to disgorge illegally gotten profits and return that money to the Government of California, this bill would not change anything. While your staff was unwilling to agree to a compromise, which I understand because of the lateness of the hour, I just can't let this go ahead. As you know, I am prepared to support this bill with a diversity amendment that I will propose. But this is a direct strike against State law in a way that puts a whole category of actions that are not now class actions into the class action arena. In a sense it is an overreach, and I don't think it belongs in this bill.

Chairman Hatch. If I could comment, frankly, these are representative actions that are a little bit different from class actions, but in all honesty, it means that the out-of-state plaintiffs can't remove to Federal Court. I see very little difference. I see every reason to want to be able to do that, but I am prepared to vote on it.

Senator Grassley. Could I ask?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Grassley.

Senator Grassley. The impression here is that this is something new to this bill? This was in this bill that last--it wasn't in the bill three congresses ago.

Senator Feinstein. That is correct.

Senator Grassley. It was in this bill the last Congress.

Senator Feinstein. Correct.

Senator Grassley. And it has been in the bill all this year, so what is this story about you don't know what is in the bill?

Senator Feinstein. The story is I read the bill twice, and I am sorry I didn't catch it. It was brought to our attention yesterday by numerous phone calls by a whole host of organizations. I try to do my homework. I have read the bill. We just didn't catch it.

Senator Grassley. Well, I would like to have amendments filed so we know about them. This is the first time we have seen this amendment.

Chairman Hatch. Are there any other comments? Senator Kyl.

Senator Kyl. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, our Committee procedures are to circulate amendments in advance, and I don't have any idea what this amendment is. I am familiar with the provision in the bill. I am happy to vote. Apparently it is pretty important, and I would like to try to understand what the issue is.

Chairman Hatch. I wonder if you could make a good faith effort between now and the floor to resolve this to satisfy you, because I hate to take it out right now. It has been in there. Frankly, I can see a reason for it being in there. I don't really think it conflicts with California law. I really believe that it can be beneficial, but I will work in good faith to try and resolve it with you.

Senator Kyl. Mr. Chairman, might I just say, most states, under common law, had a provision like this. I don't know whether there are differences between California law and Arizona law, for example, but this is not unique to California.

Chairman Hatch. I would be happy to work--

Senator Kyl. There has always been a private attorneys general kind of action that can be taken.

Senator Specter. Mr. Chairman, the difference is that it confers Federal Court jurisdiction. This is a class action bill, and there has been general agreement that we need reform on class actions, but these provisions do not relate to class actions. They are not class actions, and (ii) is a provision for mass torts, and there is great concern about overburdening the Federal Courts. Where you have class actions we have had reasons to remove to the Federal Courts, and there has been a defeat of that when one plaintiff is a citizen of the same State as the defendant; diversity falls. That has been really a subterfuge to move a lot of cases to very questionable jurisdictions, but there has been no showing that on mass tort cases that that problem exists.

And on the private attorneys general, that is a very complex area. I used to be in the field as a district attorney as to bringing those actions. It is very hard. There has to be a showing of failure or refusal to act before, and some generalized public interest and a failure by the public official to act. But these are very, very important issues, and I don't think anybody has to apologize for not noticing all of the provisions of this complex bill. With what we have to do around here, we focus on it when we can, and it frequently is at the last minute. Other people read the bills and call the matters to our attention. I commend Senator Feinstein for reading the bill twice. I haven't read it once.

[Laughter.]

Senator Specter. I would like to take polygraphs as to how many people have read this bill.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. Well, we don't want to start that.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. Let me just say, before I turn to Senator Feinstein, that you still have to have diversity of citizenship. You still have to have 100 or more, and you still have to meet the requisite monetary amounts.

Senator Specter. No, Mr. Chairman, you don't have to have diversity. This confers Federal jurisdiction without diversity.

Chairman Hatch. I don't believe it does.

the judges. My understanding was Patricia Minaldi was being held over. We were going to have votes on-- Chairman Hatch. We will hold Patricia Minaldi.

Senator Leahy. We were going to have actual votes on the other four.

Chairman Hatch. That is right. The Senator is correct.

par Senator Leahy. Then I will make my opening statement after we have done that. I know how difficult it is to hold 10 people here.

Chairman Hatch. The clerk will call the roll on J. Leon Holmes.

I am sorry. Excuse me. Senator Feinstein. I am sorry. I apologize.

Senator Feinstein. Let me begin, Mr. Chairman, by saying that I have never voted against a district judge, and in reading this record and listening to the comments that this man has made, I do not see how anyone can divine from these comments that he has either the temperament or the wisdom to be a judge. Frankly, I was shocked by some of them. Let me read a couple.

In 1980 he wrote a letter to the editor stating that abortion should not be available to rape victims because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami. That may be a smart kind of statement to make,

Senator Specter. Without diversity, where somebody makes a representation they are representing a lot of people with similar interests. And you don't have to have diversity if you have 100 or more people on what is a mass tort. That is the point. Diversity goes, and I think it ought to go on class actions for what has happened.

Chairman Hatch. You still have to have an out-of-state defendant. That is diversity. I think diversity does apply. But look, I am willing to work with you, and it may be that we just take it out.

Senator Feinstein. And I really appreciate that, but let me say this. As you know, we have worked on the diversity provisions. I think we have worked something out hopefully which will gain the acceptance of the supporters of this bill, and I have taken a lot of flak to support this bill.

Chairman Hatch. Yes, you have.

Senator Feinstein. I cannot support it with this in it, and I cannot vote for it in this Committee with this in it.

Chairman Hatch. Then we will strike--

Senator Feinstein. I have even the district attorneys opposed to this section.

Chairman Hatch. Okay. Let me solve it this way. We will strike the provision, but we will between here and the floor. We will reverse the order. Instead of leaving it in and working together, we will work between here and the floor together to see if we can come up with language that will be more satisfactory because I do want the distinguished Senator to be a supporter of this bill.

Senator Specter. How about two distinguished--or how about one distinguished Senator and one other Senator?

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. I want two very distinguished Senators, along with everybody else, to be supportive of this bill. I will try to be a little more accurate in the future on those type of things, especially on--

Senator Leahy. I am not sure what we have done.

Chairman Hatch. Well, I move to strike the provision. Is there any objection?

Senator Leahy. Does that mean you accept the Specter/Feinstein amendment?

Chairman Hatch. I accept the language. He moved to strike. I accept the language. Is there any objection? Without objection, the provision will be stricken.

Now, let us go back to these judges and then let us get to the bill. The clerk will call the roll on--

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, I have a comment, as I mentioned earlier on the Court of Federal Claims nominees.

Chairman Hatch. Will the Senator be quite short on this?

Senator Schumer. I will try to be short. It is an important point.

Chairman Hatch. Because if he is not going to be, I would like to just go to the bill and we will wait. But go ahead.

Senator Schumer. Well, I will be less than 5 minutes. Is that short enough?

Chairman Hatch. Not for me, but I guess I have to--

[Laughter.]

Senator Schumer. For me that is short, for another nondistinguished Senator.

What I would like to talk about here today is the Court of Federal Claims. It is of real importance to the property rights movement, and environmental protection concerns, one on your side of the aisle, one on ours. And the court's rulings have a profound impact on the enforcement of environmental protection laws and regulations. I am not going to get into a fight today over what is happening ideologically on this CFC, because in my mind there is a bigger question.

I was reviewing the records of the four recent nominees to the CFC, and I asked my staff why we need a Court of Federal Claims at all. We were discussing the court, and it seems the work the CFC does is done by district court judges around the country. I asked my staff to explain the value of having a specialty court that doesn't do anything at all. Well, maybe I need to get better staff, but they couldn't the question.

[Laughter.]

Senator Schumer. So we started looking a little deeper and we learned some facts about this court. I just wish my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, would look at this chart. The average Federal District Court Judge carries 355 cases at a given time. The CFC, with the current staffing, it has 24 judges, each one carries 24--oh, it is up there. They are better than I thought.

[Laughter.]

Senator Leahy. You are lucky to have them.

Senator Schumer. I sure am.

Anyway, the average CFC under current staffing, 24, if we add these new nominees, the pending nominees, the average judge will have 19 cases. Now, a few of them are complicated cases; they are not run-of-the-mill Federal District Court cases, but many of them on the district court are just as complicated if not more. So it doesn't begin to explain the disparity.

par Then we did a little sleuthing, and we learned that no one is burning the midnight oil over at the CFC. It has been described to us by some who have served there as one of the cushiest places to work in Washington. Now, I have no problem with people getting their work done and going home to their families, but I do have a problem with Government wasting taxpayers' money. If we confirm these CFC nominees the President has sent us, the average caseload, as I mentioned, drops to 19 cases a judge. That is compared to 355 on the district court. They will barely have to come to the office at all.

Senator Grassley actually did research a few years back, and each Federal judgeship, according to his research, costs the taxpayers one million dollars a year, and that was a while ago, so probably the number has risen. As we continue to work out the details of the budget and we scrape for every extra dollar, I say there is an irony here. I believe in job creation, but this is going a little bit too far.

So I would just like to say that we have argued we shouldn't add a new judge a while ago to the D.C. Circuit. Many of my colleagues, Senator Grassley, Senator Sessions, Senator Kyl, had called for hearings about why we had to fill vacancies a year or two ago. Let us have some bipartisan agreement here. Let us not force the Treasury to spend money on these judges unless we really need them.

The Washington Post, which my friend from Utah quotes favorably time and time again when it comes to judges, editorialized yesterday in favor of abolishing the CFC. I don't know whether that is the right thing to do, but we should consider it.

The nominees here today have the votes to pass on the merits. I don't want anything I say to be taken the wrong way, because under normal circumstances they get my vote, but I don't know we are adding two more judges to a court that doesn't have hardly a caseload at all right now.

In my State of New York we desperately need Customs and Border Agents and DEA agents in Plattsburg. Those are vacant. I suggest we table these nominations, and that maybe Senator Sessions and I, on the Court Subcommittee, work to schedule hearings about whether we need these judges or we need these courts. We might be able to save some millions of dollars if we just hold off a few weeks and examine the situation, and that is what I would like us to do, whether you are for or against these nominees.

[The prepared statement of Senator Schumer follows:]

REV_00386255

879 Chairman Hatch. All right. Senator.

Senator DeWine. Could I ask a question to my colleague? Do those figures factor in senior status?

Senator Schumer. Yes, they do.

Senator DeWine. So you have taken out senior status; those do not include senior status?

Senator Schumer. No, they include senior status.

Senator DeWine. So they do include senior status?

Senator Schumer. Yes.

Senator DeWine. I have not done any of the research that you have done at all. It would seem to me that probably the best way to compare it would be apples to apples, would be if we factored out senior status in both district and--

Senator Schumer. I will be happy to do that.

Senator DeWine. I think that would be an interesting comparison as well. Senior status, they do do work.

Senator Schumer. Yes, no question.

Senator DeWine. What is hard to figure is some senior judges do a certain percent, and others do a different percentage, and so that makes it different.

Senator Schumer. Well, I would just say we factored it in on both sides, so we are not comparing apples and oranges. Maybe oranges and oranges is better than apples, apples. I would be happy to entertain that.r Senator DeWine. It would be interesting to see it both ways.

Senator Schumer. The disparity is so great, that I doubt it is going to change it too much.

So what I would like to do, Mr. Chairman, and I am not trying to be-- Chairman Hatch. If the Senator would hold his motions, let us have Senator Leahy make his remarks.

Senator Schumer. Okay, thanks.

Senator Leahy. I will be very brief. I will put my statement in the record, but the Senator from Ohio raises a good question. If these nominees pass out of here today, maybe we ought to, before we have any vote on the floor, either have a hearing on what the caseload is or just have the Republican and Democratic staff work together to get those exact numbers for us, because the question comes to my mind. The numbers that I have seen certainly establish what a number of senators in this Committee have said in both parties, that we ought to just get rid of the court. I think the Washington Post has called it a court of extravagance. An academic expert who specializes delivered a paper examining its redundant--and then he said--and incoherent caseload, speaking about mainly the same kind of numbers. Senator Sessions and Senator Grassley have both argued that vacancies should not be filled because of the million dollar a year cost to add a judge.

I wonder if perhaps though what may have motivated the White House more than anything else, we have always handled this in a bipartisan fashion, these judges. As the Chairman remembers, I worked with the White House under President Clinton to put in a staff member of his, then brought up, when I was a chairman, nominated another staff member of his to it. President Clinton had followed a bipartisan example we used before he renominated Christine Miller, who was a Reagan appointee, a Republican, to the Court of Federal Claims. That has usually been done. The current White House, the first one in six presidents I have served here with, has stopped doing that. I am not quite sure where, but maybe that is why we suddenly have these people up here. I wish somebody at the White House was brought in to talk to us on these issues. They seem unwilling. But maybe that is why we have them. The Democrats are summarily kicked off. The Republicans are put into these million dollar a year cost positions, and it is unfortunate that the procedures have not been followed the way they have always, at least in the 29 years I have been here, with both Republican and Democratic presidents have been followed, but the White House has decided that. It also doesn't obviate the issue that we have before us of whether we need to spend a million dollars for what one said an in coherent system, but I will Post article in the record.

Chairman Hatch. The statement is in the record.

[The prepared statement of Senator Leahy follows:]

but nonetheless, I think it shows what is beneath the surface. He co-wrote an article in which he stated that, "The wife is to subordinate herself to her husband," and "The woman is to place herself under the authority of the man." How could I ever vote for this man to be a judge?

In a recent article written with his son, Jeremy, he argues that, "Christianity in principle cannot accept subordination to the political authorities, for the end to which it directs men is higher than the end of the political order." He wrote that, "The abortion issue is the simplest issue this country has faced since slavery was made unconstitutional, and it deserves the same response."

He wrote a column attempting to recast the Lincoln-Douglas presidential debates in the 1850s as equivalent to the abortion debate, and stated that Douglas was "pro-choice on the slavery issue." He has compared abortion to the Holocaust, writing, "The pro-abortionists counsel us to respond to these problems by abandoning what little morality our society still recognizes. This was attempted by one highly-sophisticated historically christian nation in our century, Nazi Germany."

I have a very hard time seeing where this man has the temperament to take his personal views out of his judicial conduct. How could I as a woman ever bring a case before a man that says in everything I do I must be subordinate to Chairman Hatch. I am not going to spend any more time on this. I will just say one thing about it.

Senator Kyl. Well, Mr. Chairman, if you are going to say one more thing, could I say 30 seconds worth?

Chairman Hatch. Okay.

Senator Kyl. Go ahead.

Chairman Hatch. In a letter to the editor of the Washington Post yesterday the president of the Court of Claims Bar Association made a very strong point. He said that the docket of the court, quote, "consists of more than 4,000 cases, opinions by the judges are recognized as well written and well considered, and reflecting of the complexity of the caseload. Those practicing before the court know that its judges are busy." Now, this is a letter from an attorney who actually practices before the Court, who took direct issue with the Post recommendation.

Look, it is obvious to me that the criticism of the courts--

Senator Leahy. Is he sucking up to the court?

Chairman Hatch. Never know.

Senator Schumer. Wanted the judges to see his letter.r

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. I will put the letter in the record. Since he is literally the president of the Court of Claims Bar Association, I would give him a little more deference than saying he is sucking up to the court. But in any event, it is apparent that you are not going to.

[Laughter.]

Chairman Hatch. But in any event, I want to vote on these two nominees. We will give 30 seconds to Senator Kyl and then we will vote.

par Senator Kyl. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you know, I have thought for some time we have one too many judges on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. I also believe that we are almost of unanimous opinion that we are woefully short of staffing our district and in particular our circuit courts. The Ninth Circuit is either 8 or 10 judges short, according to everybody's consensus. So if we are going to take a look at these courts, I submit that we finally take a look at adding judges to those circuits where everyone agrees they are short.

Chairman Hatch. Well, I am going to try to do that.

If the clerk would call the roll on Susan G. Braden to be judge for the Court of Federal Claims.

Senator DeWine. Mr. Chairman, I have a written statement I would like to put in the record.

Chairman Hatch. It will be in the record.

15A [The prepared statement of Senator DeWine follows:]

REV_00386261

879 Senator Schumer. I had a motion to table.

Chairman Hatch. The Senator's motion to table of Susan G. Braden. An aye vote would be to table the Braden nomination; a no vote will be against tabling. I recommend that we vote no. The clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk. Mr. Grassley?

Senator Grassley. No.

The Clerk. Mr. Specter?

Chairman Hatch. No, by proxy.

par Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Leahy?

Senator Leahy. I want to commend both Senator Graham and Senator Nelson of Florida for their efforts on this the man? So if that is the case, it would leave 50 percent of our population out from any kind of fair decisionmaking. So I guess all things have a first, and I will cast my first "no" vote on a district court judge.

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. The Senator from New York.

Senator Schumer. Mr. Chairman, I feel the exact same way as Senator Feinstein. I am just amazed that this man is being nominated for district court judge. Again, me too. You give the benefit of the doubt on district court judges. I cannot think of one we have contested. Just look at my record. It is similar to all of us. Are we being obstructionist? We voted for 111 of 116 judges. I have voted for judge after judge who disagrees with my views on choice or the Commerce Clause of the First Amendment or the Second Amendment. We are not trying to have any kind of litmus test here, but sometimes you get someone who is so far off the deep end, that it is just amazing to me that this man has gotten this far. I find it hard to believe that we are nominating him here. I think it shows what some of us have been trying to say, that some of these nominees are so extreme, can we not do better? Can we not be consistent with what the President and the majority party believe, but not have someone who is so far off the deep end, this man is an embarrassment to be nominated. He is nominee. She becomes the first Cuban-American woman ever reported to be a Federal Judge. I suspect she will get through the Senate very easily. I would ask again that we move forward on the nomination of Judge Edward Prado to be the circuit judge. We have cleared all Democrats that said they have no objection to go forward on that.

He was reported unanimously out of this Committee and I would urge the Republican leadership to allow him to go forward. We have cleared it on our side of the aisle.

But I did especially want to commend not only Cecilia Altonaga, but also the Senators who worked closely with the White House and with the bar and others in Florida to bring her forward. She was in her hearing and is a very impressive person.

Chairman Hatch. All right. We will now move to S. 224, The Class Action Fairness Act of 2003. I won't make an opening statement, other than to say that this is a good bill. It is much-needed legislation to curb class action abuses that are all too rampant. I will put the rest of my statement in the record.

[The prepared statement of Chairman Hatch follows:]

tql Chairman Hatch. I will turn to Senator Leahy.

Senator Leahy. Mr. Chairman, I find difficulty with this even though there have been real efforts on the parts of the Senators on both sides to improve it. I would oppose it because I don't think it is fair. I think it makes it harder for citizens to protect themselves against violations of State civil rights and consumer, health and environmental protection laws. I think it puts those cases out of convenient State courts and into Federal courts with a lot of barriers.

I joined, I think it was two weeks ago now, with Senators Kennedy, Biden, Feingold, Durbin and Edwards in requesting a hearing on class action litigation to see if we could get some consensus on this subject in a way that could help both defendants and plaintiffs.

While my letter went unanswered, I would ask consent that it be made part of the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

[The letter follows:]

tql Senator Leahy. The reason for that was I was hoping the Committee could do a deliberate, careful review of information from parties actually involved in class action litigation, and we could get some idea of the benefits and burdens of such things. Instead, we are going ahead with legislation that really has failed to pass the Senate in recent years.

But I do want to acknowledge the hard work and dedication displayed by the Senator from California. She made a comment this morning about having read the bill. The Senator from California has a well-deserved reputation for not only reading the bills, but reading transcripts of hearings. And it is something I would commend to others on both sides. She undertook an enormous task in attempting through her amendment to rectify some of the harms created by S. 274, and I think she deserves our respect for that.

But at its core, I worry that S. 274 deprives citizens of the right to sue on State law claims in their own State courts if the principal defendant is a citizen of another State, even if that defendant has a substantial presence in the plaintiff's home State, and even if the harm was done in the plaintiff's home State. I don't think that the amendments take care of that.

I know that there has been a great deal of effort also by my friend from Wisconsin, Senator Kohl, and his efforts are appreciated.

I think some special interest groups--and the distinguished Chairman always likes to talk about special interest groups--I think some are distorting the state of class action litigation by relying on a few anecdotes in an ends-oriented attempt to bring class action cases. But that is all the more reason for having a hearing, have something where we find out what is fact and what is fiction.

We can and we should necessary steps to correct problems in class action litigation, and there are some. But if you simply shove most suits into Federal courts and then you have one-sided rules, that doesn't really correct the problems that are faced by both plaintiffs and defendants.ar Let's not forget that in 50 States, the State-based tort system remains one of the greatest and most powerful vehicles for justice anywhere in the world. I think of when the Soviet Union broke up and they started dealing with how you put together a real court system. I remember so many of those people coming to see me, as they did a number of other people around this table. They came to my own State of Vermont and they looked at our court system. They looked at the court systems in numerous other States and they were amazed at how well it works.

I recall one who sat in my office, from the Duma, who said, I have one question for you. We have heard that there are actually cases where somebody sues the government and the government loses. I said, yes, it happens all the time. He said, you mean you don't fire the judge and do it over again? I said, no, that is the integrity and independence of our courts.

par And, of course, in class actions that is how we get people who can band together; ordinary people can band together and bring it--defrauded investors, deceived consumers, victims of defective products, environmental torts. That is what happens.

I am old enough to remember the civil rights battles of the 1950s and 1960s, and the impact of class actions in validating basic rights through our courts. Brown v. Board of Education was the culmination of appeals from four class action cases, three from Federal court decisions in Kansas, South Carolina and Virginia, but one from the State Supreme Court of Delaware.

Interestingly enough, what happened is only the State Supreme Court of Delaware got the case right by deciding for the African American plaintiffs. They knew they were constrained by the existing Supreme Court law, but they held that the segregated schools of Delaware violated the 14th Amendment. Before any Federal court did so, a State court rejected separate and unequal schools, and then a unanimous U.S. Supreme Court upheld that.

Many civil rights advocates, including the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, the National Asian Pacific Legal Consortium, have written opposing this.

These civil rights advocates concluded that this legislation would discourage civil rights class actions, impose substantial barriers to settling class actions, and render Federal courts unable to provide swift and effective administration of justice.

I will place in the record their letter, if there is no objection.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

[The letter follows:]

tql Senator Leahy. Now, defense lawyers get paid by the hour, and are usually well paid. If you don't consolidate procedures, I am afraid that a lot of people aren't going to be able to afford lawyers. Plaintiffs' lawyers in this type of setting tend to work without pay for the possibility of obtaining some of the proceeds, if successful. It may well prove uneconomical for counsel to take on government or corporate defendants if they have to do it on a case-by-case basis.r You know, if you cheat a whole lot of people by just a little, it is still cheating. If you cheat by a cent or two on a gallon of gas when any one of us fills up or car, it doesn't cost very much, but it can be millions of dollars by the time you get done. If you cheat just a little bit on your phone bill or cable bill or whatever else, it may not cost the individual very much, but if you add it up, it gets into millions of dollars.

Class actions made it possible for individual tobacco victims to band together. It allows stockholders and small investors to join together. Think of the Firestone Tire debacle. A national tire recall was started, in part, from the disclosure of internal corporate documents on consumer complaints of tire defects, and then filing of litigation against Bridgestone/Firestone.

Then the plaintiffs' attorneys turned this over to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, and months later 6.5 million tires were recalled based on what was found in these plaintiff suits. But that was after 101 fatalities, 400 injuries, and 2,226 consumer complaints. As Time magazine pointed out at the time, it is doubtful that the internal corporate consumer complaint information would have ever seen the light of day if they hadn't had civil discovery.

So when you are talking about protecting consumers, investors and employees, whether it is in Enron, WorldCom or other corporate scandals, these rights aren't going to be protected in S. 274. This is not going to make corporate America more accountable. In fact, I think it undercuts Congress' other efforts to make companies more responsible.

Legislation that makes it more difficult for the victims of corporate wrongdoing--the kind of wrongdoing we saw in Enron and WorldCom and all--things that make it more difficult to join together and to make them accountable ought to be just the opposite of what we want to do.

I would include a letter from the Consumers Union, the Consumer Federation of America and U.S. PIRG, if I might, Mr. Chairman, in the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

[The letter follows:]

tql Senator Leahy. Last year, a group of investors recovered millions in lost investments under State corporate fraud laws. In Baptist Foundation of Arizona v. Arthur Andersen, mostly elderly investors banded together to successfully recoup $217 million from Arthur Andersen for questionable accounting things. That is just one example of how State-based class action litigation can hold corporate wrongdoers accountable.

I am concerned what it might do for those who want to stop pollution and other environmental damage. It will remove almost important environmental class actions from State to Federal court. It denies the State courts the ability to act.

This sort of runs roughshod over any question of States' rights. I think of the situation in Alabama, in Anniston, Alabama, when the Monsanto Company manufactured PCBs from 1929 to 1971. For 40 years, they dumped them, untreated and unfiltered, into the streams and landfills of Anniston. It caused enormous environmental and health damage. It wasn't until the residents sued in State court that they were able to recover. We have got a State court that handled it and this Act would say "get out of there."

The Judicial Conference, headed by Chief Justice Rehnquist, wrote a letter dated March 26, 2003, opposing this bill because its provisions would add substantially to the workload of the Federal courts, inconsistent with the principles of federalism. Chief Justice Rehnquist's letter singled out serious environmental disasters as an example of class actions that should remain in the State courts.

Mr. Chairman, I will put the rest of my statement in the record, but I am really concerned that what we are doing is telling the States, you know, you guys are all incompetent, all 50 States, and we here on the Senate Judiciary Committee know better. I can't accept that.

[The prepared statement of Senator Leahy follows:]

going to make a laughingstock, not of those of us who are opposing him, but of those who are supporting him, to say that--and I just want to get the quote exactly right--he said that, "Rape leads to pregnancy about as often as snow falls in Miami." It is not just insulting. I mean this guy just makes it up as he goes along. We checked the almanac. It snowed in Miami once in the last hundred years.

32,000 women became pregnant last year because of rape, 32,000. Imagine the anguish of each one of them, of each of their families. Now, we can have a debate on what the consequence of that should be, but the man is so blinded by his ideology he does not even look at the facts. These are real women. They are in pain. They have to make traumatic decisions. I am sure many of those women who were raped are not for abortion, and to take their agony, that is not 32,000 total, that is 32,000 a year. Then maybe you say, well, maybe that was a flip comment, but he does it over and over again as Senator Feinstein noted. He said that it's a woman's duty to subordinate herself to her husband and to place herself under the authority of the man. We have had a series of nominees who have done things that just show such disrespect for women.

I asked him some written questions. I asked him if a woman, who was advancing a battered woman's defense against her husband lacked confidence in his impartiality, and he Chairman Hatch. We will take Senator Kohl's speech and then we are going to go to amendments, and we will go the Feinstein amendment first.

Senator Kohl?

Senator Kohl. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for agreeing to mark up the Class Action Fairness Act. This legislation addresses several problems in class action litigation--perhaps most importantly, unfair and abusive settlements that short-change plaintiff class members. In class action cases, consumers often get the short end of the stick, recovering coupons or pocket change, while their lawyers oftentimes reap millions of dollars.

Our remedy is straightforward. Class action notices should be written in plain English so consumers understand their rights and responsibilities. State attorneys generals should be notified of proposed class action settlements to stop abusive cases, if they so choose. And a class action consumer bill of rights will help limit coupon and other unfair settlements.

Finally, we allow many class action lawsuits to be removed to Federal court. I believe this makes sense. These are oftentimes national cases affecting consumers in all 50 States. If the court rules were being drafted today, these are the types of cases that we would want and expect to be tried in Federal court.

No one can argue with a straight face that the class action process is not in serious need of reform. Take, for example, a big class action suit against Blockbuster Video. Consumer plaintiffs received coupons for one dollar off their next rental, while their lawyers received over $9 million.

Or consider Martha Preston, from Wisconsin, who was a member of the Bank of Boston case. When her class action suit was over, Mrs. Preston had technically won the case, but she ended up owing $75 to her lawyers and defending a lawsuit that her own lawyers filed against her in State court.

We do not claim that this bill is perfect. We have stated repeatedly that we are agreeable to other proposals which attempt to keep more cases in State court. The main sponsors of this bill have worked very closely with Senator Feinstein on her suggestions to do just that, and we are pleased that we have been able to reach a consensus that makes important improvements to the bill.

With Senator Feinstein's changes and the consumer protections in our bill, we are confident that we have gone a long way toward correcting the imbalance that tilts the benefits of class action lawsuits away from consumers that such cases are intended to protect.

One final point, Mr. Chairman. I would like to discuss another court reform proposal that I support and that a bipartisan majority of this Committee has supported in the past. The Sunshine in Litigation Act ensures that judges review secret settlements with an eye toward whether the information being kept secret may affect public health and safety.

For example, consumers did not know for years about the hidden dangers of Bridgestone/Firestone tires. In those cases, the defendant insisted as a part of the settlement on secrecy provisions which hid harmful product defects and then led to dozens more injuries.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am introducing this legislation today and I ask that a hearing from you on this important issue be granted.

I thank you very much.

Senator Feingold. Mr. Chairman?

Senator Feinstein. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Feingold, I think, was next.

Senator Feinstein. I beg your pardon?

Chairman Hatch. Senator Feingold wanted to say a few words.

Senator Feingold. Mr. Chairman, I will oppose S. 274, the Class Action Fairness Act, and the main reason is that I, just like the ranking member, don't think it is fair. I don't think it is fair to citizens who are injured by corporate wrongdoers and are entitled to prompt and fair resolution of their claims in a court of law.

I don't think it is fair to our State courts, which are treated by this bill as if they cannot be trusted to issue fair judgments in cases brought before them. I don't think it is fair to State legislatures, which are entitled to have the laws that they pass to protect their citizens interpreted and applied by their own courts. So, Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is not only mis-named; it is bad policy and it should be defeated.

I want to note first that the Committee is holding this markup, as was mentioned before, without the benefit of a hearing during this Congress. There was a hearing held last summer, chaired by Senator Leahy, but Senator Leahy and a number of other members of the Committee believe that the Committee would benefit from another hearing. We requested that a hearing be held in a letter to the Chairman. There are a number of members who are new to the Committee and this is not exactly the same bill that was reviewed in the hearing last year.

I am disappointed that we are in such a rush in April of the first year of this Congress that we cannot observe the normal legislative process and have a hearing on a major piece of legislation before marking it up. Why not give this bill the consideration it deserves?

Now, I would like to make a few comments on the bill before us. Make no mistake, by loosening the requirements for Federal diversity jurisdiction over class actions, Senate bill 274 will result in nearly all class actions being removed to Federal court, and this is actually a radical change in our Federal system of justice.

We have 50 States in this country, Mr. Chairman, with their own laws and courts. State courts are an integral part of our system of justice. They have worked well for our entire history as a Nation. It is hard to imagine why this Committee, which includes many ardent defenders of federalism and the prerogatives of State courts and State lawmakers, would support this wholesale stripping of jurisdiction from the States over class actions. In my opinion, the need for such a radical step has not been demonstrated.

Yes, of course, there are abuses in some class action suits. Some of the most disturbing have to do with class action settlements that offer only discount coupons to the members of the class and a big pay-off to the plaintiffs' lawyers. But those abuses have occurred, Mr. Chairman, in Federal cases as well as State class actions. This bill does nothing to address those problems. It just moves them all to the Federal court.

Mr. Chairman, class actions are an extremely important tool in our justice system. They allow plaintiffs with very small claims to band together to seek redress. Lawsuits are expensive, so without the opportunity to pursue a class action, a single plaintiff in many cases simply cannot afford his or her day in court. But with a class action, justice can be done and compensation can be obtained.

There are three possible outcomes if this bill goes into effect. Either the State courts will be deluged with individual claims, since class actions can no longer be maintained there, or there will be a huge increase in the workload of the Federal courts, or many injured people will simply never get redress for their injuries. I don't think any of these three choices are acceptable.

Particularly troubling is the increase in the workload of the Federal courts. As we talked about in an earlier part of this proceeding this morning, these courts are already overloaded. This Committee had led the way in bringing and more litigation to the Federal courts, particularly criminal cases. Criminal cases, of course, take precedence in the Federal courts because of the Speedy Trial Act.

So the net result of removing virtually all class actions to the Federal court will be to actually delay these cases. There is an old saying with which I am sure we are all familiar: justice delayed is justice denied. I hope my colleagues will think about that aphorism before voting for this bill. St the very least, we should provide in the bill some priority to class certification motions brought in Federal class actions.

Some in the business community have expressed concern about resolving nationwide class actions, like some of the tobacco litigation, in a single State court, and I can understand why that would seem unfair to some. But this bill doesn't just address that situation; it goes well beyond that. It also prevents a group of plaintiffs who are all from the same State from pursuing a class action in their own State courts even if one defendant is from another State.

Proponents of this bill have chosen a remedy that goes far beyond the alleged problem. That raises questions about what the intent behind the bill really is.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of amendments scheduled to be offered that will ease some of the harshness of the bill. One that I will propose will carve out from the bill class actions that raise claims under State consumer protection laws. This will allow State courts to interpret and apply the laws that their legislatures have passed to protect their citizens.

Another amendment that I intend to offer deals with a catch-22 that is set up for this bill for class actions that are removed to Federal court under the new lenient diversity jurisdiction rules, but then dismissed because for some reason the class cannot be certified under Rule 23.

The bill now provides that such cases will just be dismissed. If the plaintiffs re-file in State court, they can again be removed and again dismissed. This kind or revolving door or merry-go-round situation could actually prevent injured people from ever having their cases heard. My amendment would prohibit subsequent removals of a case that is removed, but then remanded for failure to satisfy Rule 23.

I have further remarks to make concerning the Feinstein amendment when it is offered. I just want to note now that having examined it over the last week--and I do appreciate the chairman having given us that additional time to look at it--none of what I would have said about this bill is lessened by that amendment.

I know that the Senator from California means well, but I think her amendment quite possibly makes this bill worse by providing more uncertainty and more opportunities for delay that will keep injured people from having their day in court. In any event, it certainly does not change this bill in a significant enough way to make the bill acceptable, at least to me.

par Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred to have had a hearing on the bill and the Feinstein amendment, and to have a chance to examine it carefully in the Committee, but I look forward to this debate and to acting on these amendments. It seems clear that this unfair Class Action Fairness Act will emerge from the Committee, but I believe that it should not be enacted.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman Hatch. Thank you, Senator.

Let me just make an announcement to the Committee. AOL is hosting a reception right here in this room at 4:30 for Shawn Bentley, who has served this Committee very, very well in the intellectual property area, but all other areas as well. So I hope we can get a lot of you to come to that reception tonight.

We will go to Senator Cornyn next.

Senator Cornyn. Mr. Chairman, I have a written statement which I would ask be made part of the record.

Chairman Hatch. Without objection.

17 [The prepared statement of Senator Cornyn follows:]

Senator Cornyn. I do want to say just a couple of things about this bill. I am pleased to be a cosponsor. I enthusiastically support it. If it were up to me, the bill would go much further than it goes now, but I understand the necessity of gaining consensus on the bill and I think it makes an important step in the right direction.

I believe Senator Kohl just a few moments ago identified some of those important steps, but I want to congratulate and commend Senator Grassley for his hard work and perseverance, as well as everyone, including the Chairman, who have worked to move this bill forward.

The reality of this bill is not that class actions will be prevented, but merely that they will get the sort of meaningful review, and especially appellate review, that is so important to assuring that they serve their intended purpose.

Class action litigation does serve an important purpose, and I think we are all familiar with that, allowing the aggregation of relatively small claims and being able to find some lawyer who will be willing to take it on in order to vindicate the rights of the persons who have been harmed.

But the reality of modern class action litigation today is that--well, I think it was a country and western song where, to paraphrase, the lawyers get the gold mine and the consumer gets the shift. That is what happens today in much said he does not see why anything he has written would justify any concern that he could not be impartial. Not only does this nominee refuse to disavow. We asked him would he disavow his assertion that women are bound to subordinate themselves to me. He did not. So these are not slips of the tongue. These are not little mistakes in an otherwise distinguished career. This is a pattern of thought to which he clings.r If a woman were in a legal dispute with a man and my case were assigned to Mr. Holmes, should he be confirmed, I would be worried if I were a woman in a dispute with a man. There is more to be worried about. He believes that the Supreme Court rulings banning prayer in public schools, those compelling public school busing, those guaranteeing a woman's right to choose, constituted a revolution, and he accused the judges behind those rulings of being authoritarians. He has defended and endorsed Booker T. Washington's view--this is 2003--that slavery was a consequence of divine providence designed to teach white people how to be more Christ-like. He is saying that the Almighty said that slavery was a good thing.

What is going on here? Have we lost all sense of reality? I do not know why this man was nominated. But this goes off the deep end. He said that in all the cases in history he would have wanted to argue, the creation case is right there at the top of the list. I am not sure why since class action litigation, and my own experience, as I will just mention very briefly, is some proof of that.

When I served for seven years on the Texas Supreme Court, we would get class action cases from time to time. The very last case we got that I wrote the majority opinion on, nine to zero, involved a claim for economic loss due to the existence of side-saddle gasoline pickup trucks on GMC vehicles.

General Motors figured out one way they could avoid any further litigation would be to agree to something that frankly would enrich the lawyers, who got $9.5 million in cold hard cash. The consumers got a coupon, redeemable upon the purchase of a new GMC pickup truck. It was a great marketing device for General Motors. They figured they would make the best they could out of a bad situation.

But the truth is many consumers who got the coupon were unable to use those, and so they were virtually worthless. And so what drives modern class action litigation today is in too many cases, not all, but in too many cases, entrepreneurial lawyers who are taking advantage of the current system to get rich and consumers don't get any meaningful relief. That is a travesty. It is a perversion of our civil justice system, and I believe this bill, although it doesn't go as far as I would like, is a demonstrable improvement.

For example, I don't see any reason why, in class action litigation, the rules shouldn't be people who want to litigate ought to opt in rather than opt out. Of course, class members are supposed to get notice. But as we all know, human nature being what it is, many class members aren't even aware that they have somehow become a member of a class and their rights litigated, in essence, or resolved by a settlement until they get some notice in the mail or they get a coupon or something else that has really no meaning and no value.

So I do support this legislation. I appreciate your letting me have these few moments to express my views on it. As we go to the floor, if there is debate, I will hope to participate in that. In the meantime, I don't think some of the statements that have been made about this being somehow the end of the world as we know it or that big corporations will romp and stomp on the rights of consumers or, as one Senator said last week, class action litigation is necessary to save the soul of corporate America--I don't think those sorts of outrageous comments have any relationship to reality.

With that, I yield. Thank you.

Chairman Hatch. Senator Durbin.

Senator Durbin. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the mission of this Senate Judiciary Committee is clear. Time and again we are locking the courthouse doors so that consumers, average taxpayers and the less financially articulate in our society are denied their day in court.

Second, we are appointing men and women to the bench so biased in favor of the entrenched and powerful, that if any citizen makes it to the court, they will be dispatched empty handed.

This law before us is a double-header win for our gilded Committee. We lock the doors of State courts so that the sick, the injured, the victims of discrimination, the victims of exploitation, are denied their day in court. And then we relegate those lucky few who make it to the Federal courts to the wisdom and compassion of those styptic-hearted nominees that parade through this Committee every week.

When I first started practicing law in Springfield, Illinois my firm represented a railroad. The first motion we would always file in State suits was to remove the case to Federal court. We wanted to sent our fate to the loving arms of the Federal District Court Judge we knew and loved, and we as a railroad would go into his chambers to argue our motion. He kept a bowl of lemon drops on his desk. He invited us to have one. And then as we argued the motion, he would suck loudly on the lemon drops and stare at the ceiling, and you knew that you only had as much time to argue the motion as he had to finish the lemon drop. And when the sucking noise stopped, he wheeled around, faced us, and ruled for the railroad every single time. That was our forum shopping, and it worked without fail, and that is exactly what this bill is all about. We want to force these class actions into the loving arms of the more conservative judiciary in the Federal Courts.

I listened a while ago when Senator Kyl was talking about the enormous caseload in the Federal Courts. I am sorry he is not here. I may be wrong, but doesn't this law result, won't it result in more cases being sent to Federal Courts? I think it might. But frankly, we have to accept the obvious. There are class action cases that are frivolous. They should be limited, but this bill will eliminate class actions that are worthy, cases asserting the rights of an aggrieved group which no single member of the group could or would pursue. Who wants this bill? I think it is fairly obvious. Phillip Morris, gun manufacturers, polluters, pharmaceutical companies, every insurance company in America, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Financial Services Roundtable and some Republican State Attorneys General.ar Now, who opposes the bill? This is an interesting list. Turns out the Judicial Conference. Well, that would be Chief Justice William Rehnquist. Why would he oppose this bill? Because we are channeling these class action cases into an already glutted docket in the Federal Courts. The American Heart Association opposes it, the Lung Association. The list just goes on and on, and I will submit it for the record.

I know the fate of this bill. With two Democrats co-sponsoring it, it is going to come sailing out of this Committee, and there will be more to follow. I think we are going to get this wonderful idea from the House soon that we are going to absolve gun manufacturers from civil liability. This is truly a gilded age for this Congress. I think this bill is consistent with that, and I am sorry that it is going to be reporting out of this Committee, but not with my vote.

[The list follows:]

fi-1440 | Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman?

| Chairman Hatch. Senator Kennedy.

| Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman, I want to say amen to what my friend from Illinois has pointed out. This is in a long line of activities that the Congress have been undertaking for some period of time. We found that it wasn't long ago we had regulatory reform to undermine the protection of consumers. We have regulatory reform. I can remember the day when a law firm that was being paid by major utilities in the State of Virginia came on up and briefed staff here in the Judiciary Committee room, and the next day we marked up the regulatory reform bill, which would have effectively undermined the protections for health and safety that were being provided by the Federal Government, and it was reported out, and came within one vote of getting cloture. It would have been passed, which would have undermined the food and safety laws, occupational health and safety laws, environmental safety laws, the whole range of different regulatory, the attempt to undermine it.ar | Secondly, we had the activities of the administration, once they recognized that they couldn't do that, to cut back on the support for the enforcement of these kinds of protections that were out there in terms of protecting consumers, and we saw the battles that took place as we saw the undermining, the targeting of resources that were out there to protect consumers. They don't want to have regulations that are going to be out there protecting, and they want to effectively close the courts. They want it both ways. This isn't, just as the Senator pointed out, a singular kind of activity. This is a continuum, a continuum. And this legislation falls into that category.

Consumers beware, my friends, because this is a continued march that has been undertaken for a number of years and will continue, and whether we like it or not--and I do--the trial bar is the one bar that is strong enough to be able to try and protect consumers, protect consumers. They are about the last institution that is out there that stands between the exploitation of consumers in so many instances involving life and death and people being maimed and the protection of consumers. The history will ref lect it.

Now, I regret that once again we are being asked to act on a proposal which makes drastic changes in an important area without the preparation information that the proposal deserves. The bill before us reflects a one-side approach of a difficult problem, and ignores the pleas of the Judicial Conference, the United States; represents the judges will have to interpret and apply the law, who are asking us to stop and think this through more thoroughly, pays too little attention to the years of thoughtful wor k of the advisory committee on civil rules on this issue, which goes to the heart of one of the most serious problems, collusive settlements. And once again, as with the gun carry bill, the proposal is a serious intrusion in State prerogative, in State institutions. It is a mystery that colleagues who say they are defenders of the States' rights are the first in line to intrude on the states' rights at the request of the special interest groups.

If we could genuinely work together, we could probably reach a consensus, make needed improvements in class action cases, probably get agreement on Section 3 of the bill, and Section 6 in a matter of days. If we are serious about Section 6, we want to know how the judges feel about the issue, why does the bill ignore the advice that they have already given us?

So I commend Senator Feinstein for her efforts to begin the process of accommodation and cooperation, but it is too important a subject to try to handle on a last-minute basis. Her amendment provides one approach, that we need the opinion of the judges and other experts on the implication and possible unintended consequence before we adopt it, so let us take the time to do it right. If we act on the bill now, I will be offering amendments to make two necessary changes, to exempt civil rights actions and exempt actions against gun manufacturers. In both of these areas State laws and State courts have much to contribute, and the rights of the public cannot be fully protected without access to the State courts as well as the Federal courts.

I am going to just take a moment, Mr. Chairman, on a matter that has been before this Committee, and which the Committee has taken action in a conference in this past week, and probably will be a matter that will be on the floor of the Senate probably this afternoon. That is the Amber bill, the Amber bill in terms of protecting abducted children.

As you remember, Mr. Chairman, the Senate passed the Amber bill on September 10th, 2002, and once again January 21st, 2003. So the Senate passed this legislation virtually unanimously without any kind of controversy, and it should be law, it should be law. But it was held up in the House of Representatives. It has been held up in the House of Representatives. In the last few moments of the floor consideration of the Amber bill the managers of the bill took what is called the Feeney Amendment, with 20 m inutes of debate, which effectively undermines all of the sentencing and Sentencing Guidelines that had been set up by this Committee years ago, years and years ago, took a great deal of time and bipartisan support.

I notified and indicated to the Chair that we were hopeful that we could work out some kind of procedures. If the concern was about the amount of sentencing time that was given to those found guilty, we ought to deal with those particular issues, and we were prepared to deal with those in the conference. We had suggested in the conference that we refer this matter to the Sentencing Commission for 180 days to let them get a review, and then we would be able to take action whether we wanted to accept those kinds of requirements, or we could have gone back and increased the penalties. Those requests were denied.

In the course of the conference I requested that this Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Graham, who is the Chairman of the Crime Subcommittee, hold specific hearings, and that we would agree to reporting out recommendations at that time, and that we could go to the floor of the United States Senate and have a debate on this, and then move ahead in a timely way. That was rejected. That was rejected.

Then you announced, Mr. Chairman, that you had a compromise. You labeled it as such and presented it as such, as restricting all of the various sentencing requirements, only to be limited to the provisions dealing with child abductions. That was a misrepresentation, a gross misrepresentation of what was in the proposal that was advanced in that conference.

It was only at 2 o'clock in the morning when the staff found out just how bad, that they began to bring about even alterations and changes. It still violates that. I believe

John Scopes was convicted back in 1920 whenever, but I guess he thinks he could have done a better job of defending a law that bans the teaching of evolution in our public schools, and he has not disavowed any of these views. He has continued to stand by them. In one sense I admire that. We are not getting somebody in this case who refuses to tell us what he thinks, but the bottom line is what he thinks is so bad.

That is one of the reasons we want to know people's views because there are going to be a few nominees that are off the deep end, and it is not enough in a case like this for him to say, I will follow the law, and we just march like soldiers and say any time any potential nominee utters that mantra, then we say, yes, sir, and approve it. That is not what we should be doing here. That is not some elixir that banishes all of these views.

I want to work with you. I want to support most judges, even when I don't agree with them. I don't like judges on the far left as well as the far right, and my own Judicial Committee has knocked out judges like that when they have been here. This guy is so far off the deep end, that can't we call a halt to this at some point?

Chairman Hatch. If I could just respond. I have to admit I am concerned about some of those comments. Mr. Holmes has taken public stands on many issues while in it exceeds the scope of the conference itself in a number of different ways, changing the makeup of the requirements with regards to the Sentencing Commission membership, which was never even debated or talked about.

The sentencing changes in guidelines were a result of the 1968 Brown Commission report that was done about the growth of crime in this country. They had a number of recommendations. One of the recommendations was the recodification of the criminal code. We did that on two different occasions. The House failed to do that. It will not be recodified for 200 more years. It has never been recodified. They made recommendations about the Police death benefit programs, which started off at 15, $25,000, is n ow up to $250,000, worthwhile. And they made the recommendations that we get busy in terms of the disparity in sentencing that was taking place in the Federal Courts and notoriously in the State courts. They believed that without that, that a key element in terms of crime was the fact that both criminal and victims alike has such little confidence in the sentencing provisions.

In the 1970s I introduced legislation; 1980s Senator Biden had legislation. And we passed that with the help and the assistance of the Reagan Administration, which you were a part of, Senator Thurmond was a part of in a bipartisan effort, and it has been put in place.

Chairman Hatch. Would the Senator yield for just one minute?

Senator Kennedy. Yes, I will.

Chairman Hatch. When we agreed to put this over for a week, we did so under the good faith that we would resolve this matter, and that we would vote on the amendments today.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman, I reclaim my time.

Chairman Hatch. No, let me--

Senator Kennedy. No, I haven't--

Chairman Hatch. I want to put through your bill. I want to put your resolution through, because we have one minute, and I will put it through for you. I will show you some courtesy that I am not being shown.

Senator Kennedy. Well, I object then. You don't have to do me any courtesy. I am not in here to be pandered to by the Chairman of it. I am looking out after the people that are interested in fairness in the court systems and in the sentencing provisions. So you don't have to be nice to me, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman Hatch. I am not trying to be nice to you. I just want to do it.

Senator Kennedy. Well, I am going to continue. I am going to continue.

Chairman Hatch. You are going to continue for one minute more, and then I am going to recess the Committee because somebody on your side has violated good faith after last week and after my good faith in doing this.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman--

Chairman Hatch. You go ahead. You have the time for another minute.

Senator Kennedy. I have the time for one minute, and I will tell the Chair that I was the one, and I will tell you why. Because I had been notified that the Amber bill will be on the floor of the United States Senate starting at noontime, and I feel that the Amber bill, which is a bill that is relevant to this Committee, that the sentencing provisions that have been put in there are absolutely outrageous and irresponsible, and I am going to meet my obligation to meet you on the floor of the United States Senate, and without that kind of protection, I wouldn't have that chance to do it. I would have thought fairness and justice would have said that you would have recessed this Committee for the consideration of that, and since you have shown so little kind of consideration for a matter that is before the Committee, then I took those steps and I have objected to it. I have objected to it.

I will look forward to continuing this debate and discussion on the floor of the United States Senate as soon as the Amber bill comes to the floor.

Chairman Hatch. Thank you, Senator.

We have 30 seconds left. I move that the resolution by Senator Kennedy and Senator Stevens, recognizing the 100th anniversary of the Laborers' International Union, be passed. Is there any objection?

[No response.]

Chairman Hatch. Without objection, we pass it.

par 9 [The resolution follows:]

99 Chairman Hatch. Now, let me just say one other thing. I didn't know that was coming up at 12 noon, but I am darn glad it has. I can tell you one this. I was the one who took that doggone problem of sentencing and worked it out to apply only to children--

Senator Kennedy. That is not true.

Chairman Hatch. Yes, it is true.

Senator Kennedy. No, it is not.

Chairman Hatch. And sexual matters, no question about it.

Senator Kennedy. No, it is not true.

Chairman Hatch. It is true. And I will tell you this, I worked hard to try and accommodate the distinguished Senator, not tried to hurt him. I am disappointed that he feels the way he does. He has a right to feel that way if he wants to, but I made a good faith effort to resolve that in conference, and I think I did. Now, we will debate it on the floor. I didn't know it was coming up at 12:00, but I would be willing to ask the majority leader to put it off for a while until we resolve this matter.

Senator Kennedy. Mr. Chairman, you brought that compromise up and dropped it in front of the conference, and then presented it as a compromise. What kind of activity is that? You dropped that out there and said, "This represents a compromise." The idea that these provisions only apply to children in this crime is absolutely, categorically false, and your representation of that was false on that. If that had been the kind of case, you would have had an agreement, you would have had an agreement for me, but you exceeded that, and there is chapter and verse on that matter. It has exceeded the scope, and we will wait for an opinion of the parliamentarian on that.

Chairman Hatch. I am sorry the Senator is disappointed in that, but like all conferences, we do have amendments at conferences, and this was an amendment that was trying to accommodate the Senator.

Now, look, I am sorry I disappointed you.

Senator Kennedy. I would ask for regular order, Mr. Chairman, because I will either--if you are going to talk, I would like to reclaim my time.

Chairman Hatch. Regular order. The Committee is recessed until further notice, and we will wait till the end of the session today, and then the Committee will meet again or tomorrow morning. I will call the Committee to order.

[Whereupon, at 12:03 p.m., the Committee was recessed until Chairman's call.]

private life and certainly had a right to do so as an American citizen, and I would encourage all of our citizens to express themselves freely in this democratic process, and I think we all recognize that these are divisive issues about which many persons feel strongly, very strongly on both sides. The issue today is not whether one view is right or wrong but whether Mr. Holmes is able to set aside his personal views, whatever they may be, and act as a judge should act.

Let me make a few points in this regard, and then I have a suggestion for the Committee. Mr. Holmes had unqualified support from his Democratic home State Senators, Senators Lincoln and Pryor. He has unqualified support from the Arkansas Democrat Gazette, and numerous Democratic and pro-choice lawyers. This all represents strong testimony of his ability to remain objective once a judge. Senator Lincoln testified at the hearing that Mr. Holmes is trusted, he is respected by his friends and colleagues. She looked at his skills, his experience, his intellect and ability to understand and apply the law, and she expressed her conviction that he is able to apply the law fairly and without bias.

Senator Pryor has known Mr. Holmes since 1986. He has worked with him. He has testified Mr. Holmes has a reputation for being one of Arkansas's best attorneys.

Do you know whether WHC or OLC ever issued a memo on DOT's Section 411 authority during the prior Bush Administration, especially a memo indicating that DOT would not bring enforcement actions against conduct permitted by the other antitrust laws? I don't know of such a memo, but Jay is hoping there might be one.

;;;;;;; ;;;;;;; The shorter answer is that yes, the DOT opinion is the only good example that Hew has been able to identify.; This is not entirely surprising, because DOT (like FTC) has institutional, public relations, and legal incentives not to state in writing that it has a policy of not using its section 411 authority to go beyond the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 14, 2003

Dear Senator Edwards:

I am writing in response to your March 31 letter to Chairman Hatch concerning the nomination of Chief Judge Terrence Boyle to the Fourth Circuit.

Chief Judge Boyle has served with distinction for nearly two decades on the United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, since his unanimous confirmation by the Senate in 1984. He has handled more than 10,000 cases in his career. He has served as Chief Judge of the Eastern District since 1997. In addition, during this tenure he has on twelve occasions been selected by the Fourth Circuit to sit by designation on that appellate court, which further attests to the high regard in which he is held by his colleagues in the federal judiciary. And, over the course of those sittings, he has authored more than 20 appellate opinions. We believe that this substantial and varied experience on the federal bench, as well as the record and reputation he has built over this lengthy career, make Chief Judge Boyle well suited to serve on the Fourth Circuit.

In your letter, you explain that your opposition to Chief Judge Boyle's nomination is based on his judicial record. In particular, your letter states that his decisions have been reversed or vacated "more than one hundred times" in his long career. As an initial matter, we do not share your apparent view that a bare tabulation of reversals and vacaturs, without reference to the circumstances that were involved in each case, is an appropriate basis on which to evaluate a judge's performance on the bench. There are a number of reasons why a judge's ruling might be reversed or vacated on appeal, many of which do not in any way call into question the quality of judging at the trial court level – such as an intervening change in the applicable law, the resolution of an open or novel question of law, or the intervening mootness of a case, such as by way of settlement.

In any event, even if bare reversal statistics were a legitimate consideration, the rate of reversal that you have posited for Chief Judge Boyle is on par with that of other District Judges confirmed to an appellate bench. Chief Judge Boyle has handled roughly 10,000 cases in his 19 years on the bench; over that number of cases, "more than one hundred" reversals would amount to a reversal rate of just over one percent. Comparably, Judge Diana Murphy, appointed by President Clinton to the Eighth Circuit, was reversed 84 times out of the approximately 6,700 cases she handled while on the District of Minnesota – a rate of roughly 1.25 percent. Judge A. Wallace Tashima, appointed by President Clinton to the Ninth Circuit, was reversed 96 times out of some 7,800 cases that came before him while he served on the Central District of California – a reversal rate of roughly 1.2 percent. Judge D. Brooks Smith, who was appointed by President Bush to the Third Circuit, was reversed 53 times in approximately 5,000 cases as a judge on the Western District of Pennsylvania – for a similar rate of about one percent. Judges Murphy and Tashima were confirmed by unanimous consent. And, as you know, Judge Smith was confirmed by the Senate in July 2002, with your vote in support of his confirmation.

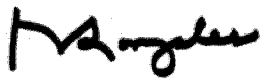
Your letter also states that Chief Judge Boyle's "record on civil rights is particularly troubling," and mentions two instances in which his decisions were reversed by the Supreme Court. Your letter does not give any specific examples supporting your concern about Chief Judge Boyle's record on civil rights. But, as to the two Supreme Court cases, we understand you to be referring to Hunt v. Cromartie, 526 U.S. 541 (1999), and Easley v. Cromartie, 532 U.S. 234 (2001), in which Chief Judge Boyle wrote the majority opinions on three-judge panels reviewing challenges to redistricting plans. As you know, these two cases were part of the lengthy litigation over North Carolina's 12th Congressional District – litigation that spanned most of the 1990s, involved numerous lower court judges, and four appeals to the Supreme Court, including two Supreme Court reversals even prior to Chief Judge Boyle's involvement in the matter. In Hunt, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the three-judge panel on procedural grounds, finding that there were issues of fact to be resolved, and did not reach the merits of Chief Judge Boyle's ruling. In Easley, following the remand, Chief Judge Boyle's opinion on behalf of the panel majority found substantial support at the Supreme Court, as the Court reversed by a narrow 5-4 margin. We do not believe that these cases suggest that Chief Judge Boyle is unqualified for the Fourth Circuit.

In addition to commenting on Chief Judge Boyle's record, your letter mentions the history regarding recent North Carolina nominees to the Fourth Circuit. We understand your position. President Bush has explained that too many of his nominees, as well as nominees of President Bill Clinton and President George H.W. Bush, have not received timely hearings and votes. The treatment afforded to Judge Boyle, for example, has been as bad as that afforded to any recent nominee. He was first nominated to the Court of Appeals by President George H.W. Bush in October 1991, and waited a year without receiving a hearing or vote. After waiting nine more years – while continuing to serve with distinction on the district court – Chief Judge Boyle was nominated by President Bush in May 2001. Nearly two years later, however, he still awaits his hearing and vote.

As the President, the Chief Justice, and the American Bar Association have repeatedly urged, no nominee should be forced to endure this kind of treatment, regardless of which party controls the Presidency or the Senate. To that end, the President last October put forward a plan involving all three Branches that would require, among other steps, the Senate to vote on nominees within 180 days of nomination. The plan would ensure a generous period of time for all Senators to gather information and have their voices heard and votes counted. This plan would provide a comprehensive and long-term solution to the cycle of recriminations that has plagued the judicial confirmation process in recent years. In the more immediate term, we respectfully submit that Chief Judge Boyle – having now waited in essence more than 11 years since he was first nominated – deserves a hearing and a vote on his nomination.



The final point I respectfully wish to make concerns the blue slip process. As I have explained in recent letters to some of your colleagues, it is my understanding that the blue slip is not a veto, but rather a device to ensure adequate pre-nomination consultation with home-state Senators. We understand this to have been the consistent Senate policy for at least the last 25 years – during the Chairmanships of Senators Kennedy, Thurmond, Biden, and Hatch. We agree strongly with this bipartisan policy. We respectfully believe that the tradition of consultation does not and should not entail a veto for home-state Senators, particularly a veto wielded for ideological or political purposes. Rather, the intention of the Constitution and the tradition of the Senate require, in our judgment, that the full Senate hold an up or down vote on each judicial nominee. If the objections of home-state Senators to a nominee are persuasive, those objections either will deter the President from submitting the nomination in the first instance or, alternatively, will convince a majority of the Senate that the nomination should be rejected. As Senator Kennedy stated in 1981, however, the Senate has not allowed and should not allow "individual Senators [to] ban, prohibit, or bar" consideration of a nominee.

* * *

We respectfully submit that, in nearly two decades on the federal bench, Chief Judge Boyle has rendered exemplary service to the country as a federal judge and has represented the mainstream of American law. We believe that by traditional measures he is well suited to serve on the Fourth Circuit, and that he deserves a Committee hearing and a floor vote. I remain hopeful that we can work together, with Chairman Hatch, to resolve this matter.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 14, 2003

Dear Senator Edwards:

I am writing in response to your March 31 letter to Chairman Hatch concerning the nomination of Chief Judge Terrence Boyle to the Fourth Circuit.

Chief Judge Boyle has served with distinction for nearly two decades on the United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, since his unanimous confirmation by the Senate in 1984. He has handled more than 10,000 cases in his career. He has served as Chief Judge of the Eastern District since 1997. In addition, during this tenure he has on twelve occasions been selected by the Fourth Circuit to sit by designation on that appellate court, which further attests to the high regard in which he is held by his colleagues in the federal judiciary. And, over the course of those sittings, he has authored more than 20 appellate opinions. We believe that this substantial and varied experience on the federal bench, as well as the record and reputation he has built over this lengthy career, make Chief Judge Boyle well suited to serve on the Fourth Circuit.

In your letter, you explain that your opposition to Chief Judge Boyle's nomination is based on his judicial record. In particular, your letter states that his decisions have been reversed or vacated "more than one hundred times" in his long career. As an initial matter, we do not share your apparent view that a bare tabulation of reversals and vacaturs, without reference to the circumstances that were involved in each case, is an appropriate basis on which to evaluate a judge's performance on the bench. Tale Of Two Judges

By David S. Broder

Wednesday, April 16, 2003; Page A27

Were it not for an old friend, I would have been as oblivious to the story of Judge Edward Prado of San Antonio as the rest of the Washington press corps.

Judge Tom Stagg of Shreveport, La., told me his pal was up for appointment to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit and suggested I go by and "see how they treat him" at his confirmation hearing.

Turns out it's like the Sherlock Holmes story of the dog that didn't bark. In the midst of the bitter partisan battle in which Democrats have repeatedly blocked a Senate confirmation vote on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Prado went through like gangbusters.

The story of why one Latino Republican has such an easy time while another creates such controversy is an instructive tale -- and one with hopeful implications.

Estrada has been denied an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor because Democrats call him "a stealth nominee," a man of high credentials but no judicial experience and one they say was unresponsive to their questions. Their demand to look at memos he wrote while serving in the Justice Department has been rejected by the administration, and neither side has yielded.

Given this background, I was expecting to see Prado, 55, put to the test at his Judiciary Committee hearing. His credentials are impressive: a graduate of the University of Texas and its law school, four years each as a prosecutor and a public defender, a short stint as a state judge, U.S. attorney for three years and, since 1984, a federal district judge -- the last two appointments coming from President Ronald Reagan.

But Prado is also a character. His courtroom is wired with the latest audiovisual equipment, which Prado, a music lover and showman, loves to demonstrate. Three years ago, during a murder-for-hire trial, he came onto the bench while a recording of "Happy Together" by the Turtles filled the air, and then sang: "Imagine me as God. I do. I was appointed by the president. Appointed forever. My decisions cannot be questioned by you. I'm always right."

Many judges may feel that way; few say so, and even fewer put it to music.

More seriously, in answering the committee's questionnaire, Prado noted controversial cases in which he ruled against a woman's claim of job discrimination by the San Antonio fire department, a diabetes patient's claim that he was unfairly found to be medically ineligible for a police officer's job, and a claim that the Texas high school graduation test discriminated against Hispanics.

In another part of the questionnaire, he listed 68 criminal, immigration and civil cases in which he had been reversed or criticized by the court of appeals. Plenty of fertile ground, one imagined, for liberal groups to challenge elevating a Reagan judge to a closely balanced and important bench just one level below the Supreme Court.

But in fact the Congressional Hispanic Caucus -- which has vigorously opposed the Estrada nomination -- wrote a letter endorsing Prado. Rep. Charlie Gonzalez, a Texas Democrat and co-signer of the letter, told me that he had known Prado for almost 40 years and "he has everything you want in a judge -- he's smart and articulate, he's not arbitrary, and he really understands people. Some of his rulings I would take issue with, but when the caucus interviewed him, he talked honestly about cases that have impacted minorities and he made it clear he knows how important the courts have been to us. It was so different from our hour's conversation with Estrada, who conveyed no sense of what we would think a Latino should appreciate about the historical role of courts in bringing us to where we are today and where we need to be tomorrow."

With the backing of the White House and the Hispanic caucus, Prado's confirmation hearing was perfunctory. Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the ranking Democrat and scourge of Estrada, read a statement complaining of past Republican treatment of President Bill Clinton's Latino nominees, then left without asking any questions. The two Republicans present -- Sens. John Cornyn of Texas and Jeff Sessions of Alabama -- said they had known Prado for years and simply congratulated him.

Prado was then unanimously confirmed by the Judiciary Committee.

When I asked Alberto Gonzales, the White House counsel, if there might be a lesson in Prado's easy approval, he replied, "It's hard to say. We view Judge Prado as no more qualified than Miguel Estrada or others they [the Democrats] have opposed."

But the lesson seems obvious. Conservatives can be confirmed for the courts when they are well known in their communities and a broad range of their constituents have reason to think them fair-minded. Even if they can't resist breaking into song.

HEADLINE: Tale Of Two Judges

BYLINE: David S. Broder

BODY:
Were it not for an old friend, I would have been as oblivious to the story of Judge Edward Prado of San Antonio as the rest of the Washington press corps.

Judge Tom Stagg of Shreveport, La., told me his pal was up for appointment to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit and suggested I go by and "see how they treat him" at his confirmation hearing.

Turns out it's like the Sherlock Holmes story of the dog that didn't bark. In the midst of the bitter partisan battle in which Democrats have repeatedly blocked a Senate confirmation vote on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Prado went through like gangbusters.

The story of why one Latino Republican has such an easy time while another creates such controversy is an instructive tale -- and one with hopeful implications.

Estrada has been denied an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor because Democrats call him "a stealth nominee," a man of high credentials but no judicial experience and one they say was unresponsive to their questions. Their demand to look at memos he wrote while serving in the Justice Department has been rejected by the administration, and neither side has yielded.

Given this background, I was expecting to see Prado, 55, put to the test at his Judiciary Committee hearing. His credentials are impressive: a graduate of the University of Texas and its law school, four years each as a prosecutor and a public defender, a short stint as a state judge, U.S. attorney for three years and, since 1984, a federal district judge -- the last two appointments coming from President Ronald Reagan.

But Prado is also a character. His courtroom is wired with the latest audiovisual equipment, which Prado, a music lover and showman, loves to demonstrate. Three years ago, during a murder-for-hire trial, he came onto the bench while a recording of "Happy Together" by the Turtles filled the air, and then sang: "Imagine me as God. I do. I was appointed by the president. Appointed forever. My decisions cannot be questioned by you. I'm always right."

Many judges may feel that way; few say so, and even fewer put it to music.

More seriously, in answering the committee's questionnaire, Prado noted controversial cases in which he ruled against a woman's claim of job discrimination by the San Antonio fire department, a diabetes patient's claim that he was unfairly found to be medically ineligible for a police officer's job, and a claim that the Texas high school graduation test discriminated against Hispanics.

In another part of the questionnaire, he listed 68 criminal, immigration and civil cases in which he had been reversed or criticized by the court of appeals. Plenty of fertile ground, one imagined, for liberal groups to challenge elevating a Reagan judge to a closely balanced and important bench just one level below the Supreme Court.

But in fact the Congressional Hispanic Caucus -- which has vigorously opposed the Estrada nomination -- wrote a letter endorsing Prado. Rep. Charlie Gonzalez, a Texas Democrat and co-signer of the letter, told me that he had known Prado for almost 40 years and "he has everything you want in a judge -- he's smart and articulate, he's not arbitrary, and he really understands people. Some of his rulings I would take issue with, but when the caucus interviewed him, he talked honestly about cases that have impacted minorities and he made it clear he knows how important the courts have been to us. It was so different from our hour's conversation with Estrada, who conveyed no sense of what we would think a Latino should appreciate about the historical role of courts in bringing us to where we are today and where we need to be tomorrow."

EDITORIAL: Not enough hours

As the nomination of Miguel Estrada to a federal appeals court in Washington, D.C., languishes in a filibuster, another judicial appointee is mired in partisan quicksand: Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen.

Justice Owen was selected in May 2001 to fill a vacancy on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Her appointment seemed dead in the water last fall, when the Democratic-led Senate Judiciary Committee rejected her on a party-line vote. But after the November election, when control of the Senate (and its committees) switched to the Republicans, the newly constituted Judiciary Committee approved Justice Owen's nomination and sent it to the Senate for a floor vote.

And so the stalling began anew. Last week, when Republicans tried to compel senators to vote up-or-down on the nomination -- some 23 months after the justice's name was first submitted -- Democrats again went into the capital's version of the Four Corners delay. Sen. Robert Bennett, R-Utah, made a suggestion that after Democrats and Republicans each received 10 hours to debate Ms. Owen's qualifications a confirmation vote would follow.

Nevada's own Harry Reid, D-Beltway, said no. "There is not a number (of hours) in the universe that would be sufficient," Sen. Reid said.

The reason for Democrats' opposition: an opinion authored by Justice Owen upholding a Texas law that requires any minor who seeks an abortion to notify one of her parents.

Is this alone sufficient grounds to disqualify Justice Owen for a federal appellate court? The American Bar Association must think not, since its Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary considers her "well qualified."

But any formal discussion of this appointment has been stifled for now, as Sen. Reid -- who's also point man for the filibuster stalling Mr. Estrada -- remains captive of narrow special interests whose views are far from those of the mainstream.

It's a shameful exhibition of partisan politics.

Subject: Follow up to termination notice

Dear Mr. Card:

My name is PRA 6 and I have been a Correspondence Analyst in the Department of Presidential Correspondence, Office of Mail Analysis since July 2001. I have always taken pride in my work as it is a reflection of one's character, and I have never been advised to the contrary by any of my superiors. However, this morning when I called my office, which is a prerequisite of my "Leave Restriction Memorandum," I was informed by the Correspondence Personnel Director that I could either resign, or be terminated.

I have been dealing with a medical problem that was irritated by a box that fell on my foot during a move the entire department made after the 9/11 tragedy. As a result of that injury, I have been dealing with problems that have prevented me from performing my duties as a correspondence analyst. Further, my Workers' Compensation claim with the Department of Labor's Office of Workers' Compensation Programs, is in its second reconsideration phase.

Mr. Card, I believe that I have been wrongfully terminated for several reasons. My attorney advised me to contact your office in an effort to bring my current situation to your attention.

Since the issue is my absenteeism, I have reviewed my document that Mrs. Getrude Roddick gave me in January 2003. According to the "Leave Restriction Memorandum, Family and Medical Leave" section, The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 "allows employees a total of 12 administrative work weeks of unpaid leave during a 12 month period for...a serious health condition which renders you unable to perform the essential functions of your position." It continues, "In an emergency when you are unable to request the leave in advance, you must contact me (Gertrude Roddick), or Sharon Lewis by 9:00am everyday, and....Upon your return, supporting documentation must be provided."

Ms. Anita Homan indicated that I have been absent for 49 days, which is within the 12 weeks requirement. I am trying to get back to the office as soon as possible, but every time I am about to do so, another catastrophe occurs.

Please consider this as a request for you to look into this matter. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

PRA 6

Dear Missouri Republican:

Thank you for your hard work on behalf of Republican candidates last fall. Your efforts were truly historic, giving our Party control of the U.S. Senate, two new seats in the state Senate, and a majority in the state House for the first time in over 50 years. As the President often says in encouragement, "Fine job – keep up the fight!"

Following the President's advice, I urge you to participate this summer in the Missouri Republican Party's new program: Grassroots: Republicans Out to Win (GROW).

GROW is a series of training conferences for grassroots leaders and activists where the latest campaign strategies and plans will be shared. Your active involvement is critical. Enclosed, you'll find this year's GROW conference schedule for Missouri: please be sure to register for the GROW conference nearest you!

You should have already received your registration packet for GROW conferences in the mail. If you have not, please contact the Party headquarters at (573) 636-3146 and sign up today!

The Missouri GOP has set a bold goal of registering 65,000 new Republican voters by the end of this year. The impact of so many new voters on the political landscape will be considerable, and your continued hard work – coupled with your participation in the GROW conferences – will make goals like this possible.

Thank you again for your involvement in Missouri politics: keep up the fight!

Sincerely,

Ken Mehlman

GOP tiring of judicial confirmation battles
Robert Novak (back to web version)

April 19, 2003

WASHINGTON -- Senate Republicans are tiring of the battle to confirm contested judicial nominees, indicating that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's Democratic plan to prevent President Bush from shaping the federal judiciary is succeeding.

Weekly meetings of Republican senators produce increased grumbling. The complaining senators ask the White House and the Republican leadership why they should keep fighting to confirm as appellate judges Washington, D.C., lawyer Miguel Estrada and Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen. Not only liberal GOP senators but also some old guard committee chairmen claim this fight is neither important nor politically prudent.

Kennedy's unprecedented plan to block Bush's judicial selections always has been based on the theory that Republican senators soon would tire of the struggle.

The Supreme Court's Recent Bombshell Punitive Damages Decision:

Its Important Holdings and Implications

By ANTHONY J. SEBOK <>

tsebok@findlaw.com <>

Monday, Apr. 21, 2003

On April 7, in the case of State Farm v. Campbell <> , the U.S. Supreme Court issued a decision that provoked a long sigh of relief from corporate America. It reversed a Utah punitive damage award of $ 145 million against State Farm Automobile Insurance Co.. The Supreme Court also ordered the Utah courts to recalculate the award in a way that did not offend the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause.

This decision is significant not only for what it says, but also for how it says it. The U.S. Supreme Court is saying to the state courts, in the words of one of my colleagues who follows the tort wars carefully, "you guys don't get it; now we're going to spell it out for you in black and white."

But what message, exactly, is the Supreme Court sending the state courts? That is what I will discuss in this column.

The Facts and Prior Proceedings in Campbell

The case arose when Curtis Campbell (now deceased) and his wife, Inez Preece Campbell, sued their insurer, State Farm. They alleged that State Farm, in handling a suit against Curtis Campbell in bad faith, intentionally inflicted emotional distress upon them.

Briefly, Curtis Campbell had been involved in a car accident that killed one person, whose family sued Campbell, and injured another man, who also sued Campbell State Farm refused to settle the case for $50,000, Campbell's policy limit - even though the evidence suggests that it knew he was at fault for the accident and he would do poorly at trial.

And indeed, Curtis Campbell was found liable for the injuries he caused in the car accident, and the damages were assessed at $136,000. State Farm offered to pay $50,000 of the judgment, and suggested that the Campbells sell their home to make up the difference.

Eventually State Farm changed its mind and paid all of the $136,000, but it took a year and a half to offer to do so. In the interim, the Campbells say, they suffered emotional distress, as a result of State Farm's refusing to take the lawsuit against Curtis Campbell seriously, and refusing the $50,000 pre-trial settlement offer.

Based on these allegations, the Campbells sued and won a huge judgment against State Farm. They won $2.6 million in compensatory damages (which the trial judge reduced to $1 million) and $145 million in punitive damages.

The Utah Supreme Court upheld the awards. State Farm then sought U.S. Supreme Court review, and the Court took the case.

The Court's Decision: Due Process Requires Low Punitive/Compensatory Ratios

In a 6-3 decision, the Supreme Court held in State Farm's favor. Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote a stinging opinion on behalf of the majority - an opinion that was greeted with glee by the defense bar whose goal in many tort cases is to keep punitive damages to a minimum.

Among other points, Kennedy asserted that it should be "obvious" that a "single digit" ratio between a punitive award and a compensatory award "is more likely to comport with due process" than a ratio of 145 to 1 - the ratio between the punitive award and the reduced compensatory award in Campbell.

Indeed, Kennedy suggested, where the compensatory award is "substantial" (as it was in State Farm), perhaps the ration between compensatory awards and punitive awards should be no more than 1 to1. In other words, according to Kennedy's reasoning, the Campbells should have gotten punitive damages of about $1 million, not $145 million.

Campbell* Implies that A Company Must Be Bad To the Plaintiff, Not Just Bad

Obviously, these pronouncements are significant. But I think another aspect of the decision is even more significant. Kennedy is sending a message to the state courts that the U.S. Supreme Court will no longer tolerate punitive damages being used to punish a company for just being just flat-out "bad." Instead, the company must have acted badly toward the particular plaintiff.

At oral argument, the Campbells' attorney, the very able Laurence Tribe, tried to argue that, indeed, the $145 million punitive damages award was based on State Farm's having acted reprehensibly toward Curtis Campbell in particular. But as Justice Kennedy points out in his opinion, that claim is simply implausible.

Quite to the contrary, "[f]rom their opening statements onward the Campbells framed this case as a chance to rebuke State Farm for its nationwide activities." Most notably, as I wrote in an earlier column on this case <> , Campbell told the jury about State Farm's corporate policies from around the country, even those that were basically unconnected to the legal dispute between him and State Farm.

An Effective Trial Strategy Backfires Before the U.S. Supreme Court

Until they got to the U.S. Supreme Court, the Campbells had very deliberately built their case around the theme that corporate wrongdoing around the country cannot be deterred unless large punitive damages are awarded.

That is why introduced evidence that suggested that State Farm had acted badly towards its customers in California and North Carolina. That is why introduced evidence that State Farm was rarely sued by customers whom it wronged. That is why they introduced evidence about State Farm's wealth--to show that only a big award would get State Farm's attention.

The Campbell's strategy at trial was very effective, and not at all unusual. It is a well-known trial strategy. It is also an approach endorsed by many academics and consumer activists.

Members of the law and economic movement have argued for a long time that large punitive damages--especially punitive damages that are very high relative to the compensatory damages awarded--are necessary to achieve the right level of deterrence to protect society from tortious conduct.

Members of the consumer movement, such as Ralph Nader and trial lawyers who are sympathetic to Nader's cause, take the same approach. They contend that punitive damages sometimes have to be very high in order to deter corporate wrongdoing.

A Strong Rejection of the "Send A Message" Punitive Damages Theory

For many years, the U.S. Supreme Court has been silent about the idea that punitive damages should be used to promote general deterrence--that is, that they should serve as a substitute form of public regulation. The Court neither endorsed nor vetoed this "send a message" theory of punitive damages.

Accordingly, over the past eight years, since the Court decided BMW v. Gore <> , the idea that punitive damages should be used to "send a message" to corporate America has been used in closings in numerous jury trials around America. The trials have involved Big Tobacco, asbestos litigation, and countless other topics. State Farm should go a long way to slowing down that trend.

In theory, using punitive damages to "send a message" to a big company like State Farm, when it acts badly, is a nice idea. The problem is trying to put it into practice.

For one thing, as Justice Kennedy noted in his Campbell opinion, sometimes the conduct that injured the plaintiff is actually legal in other states. For another thing, as Kennedy also noted, sometimes the plaintiff tries to sweep in conduct by the defendant that occurred elsewhere regardless of the fact that the conduct did not injury the plaintiff, and has only a tenuous connection to the conduct that did injured the plaintiff. This approach is used merely to inflame the passions of the jury.

Those who defend the use of punitive damages to deal with defendants' conduct that goes beyond the case at hand have a response to these points. They say that a good trial judge should be able to ameliorate the problems identified above by, for example, making evidentiary judgments as to relevance that keep truly irrelevant material out.

They may be right - but, again, only in theory. Recent history suggests that, in practice, trial judges have not done a particularly good job at deciding what sort of evidence of national conduct by the defendant is relevant. Instead, they have allowed plaintiffs' cases to sweep too wide.

What is the real import of the Court's in State Farm? The case certainly stands for the principle that punitive/compensatory ratios must be kept under control. But in my opinion, it also stands for another key principle: The "anything goes" attitude to introducing evidence of the defendant's bad behavior in assessing punitive damages will no longer be tolerated.

Is a meeting necessary? Aren't the basic answers: (1) a temporally limited executive order expires at the end of the last day specified in the order, just like CR's; and (2) that said, we should try to be clear up front in drafting orders to specify the precise time when the order expires so that future Exec Branch officials need not go through this same drill and to avoid general confusion?

Brett: Nice speech on the Hill today. I assume that the text below accurately reflects the June 2000 Knoxville speech you mentioned earlier today?

Excerpt from below:

These reforms can take some of the friction out of our national politics - and justify greater public confidence in Washington. But they are reforms of procedure only. In the end, only the spirit of the lawmakers themselves can bring real change to Washington. Above all else, we must call a truce to politics as combat - where differences of principle give rise to unprincipled attacks on character.

A good place to start is the nomination and confirmation process.

The Constitution empowers the president to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation.

Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became - lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. Often they are occasions for pushing larger agendas, having nothing to do with the merits of the nominee. At some memorable low points, hearings have become a gauntlet of accusation, interest-group warfare, and public humiliation. This has done enough harm to the process.

The president and the Senate have a joint responsibility here. The president must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them.

Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees a top priority. And I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November.

Governor George W. Bush
"A New Approach"
Knoxville, Tennessee
Thursday, June 8, 2000

Thank you very much. It is good to be in Knoxville.

It has been almost a year since my campaign began. Since that first trip to Iowa, I have laid out my agenda for America both at home and abroad.

My goals for America are clear. To make sure that every child is educated, by returning high standards and accountability to public schools.

To bring more economic growth and opportunity, by reducing the income tax burden on all Americans - especially those aspiring to the middle class.

To keep our commitment to elderly Americans, and generations to come, by saving and strengthening social security.

To keep the peace, by building a national missile defense, modernizing our military, and establishing clear principles for the use of our power in the world.

These are things that must be done, the nation's pressing business.

Today I want to talk about the way we conduct the nation's business. Many Americans believe that Washington's way of doing things just isn't working. That government's purposes are too often forgotten, and opportunities too often squandered - resulting in too few results.

In so many ways, America in the year 2000 is the picture of success. Our economy is more competitive than ever - more efficient. Our technologies are marvels of creativity. Throughout the private sector, we're seeing what people can accomplish with strong leadership, clear goals, fair dealing, and cooperation.

This could hardly be said of the federal government. There is too much argument in Washington and not enough discussion. Too much polling and not enough decision making. Too much needless division, not enough shared accomplishment. Not enough final acts and resolutions, and lasting achievements.

There is blame enough to go around. I do not dismiss the serious disagreements that are part of politics, but the reality is that Americans look upon this spectacle and don't like what they see. They know that this is not the way the world's great power should conduct its affairs. I agree with them. It's time for change.

Consider, by contrast, many of our state and local governments, where the best ideas and boldest reforms of the last decade have taken place. All across America, governors, state legislators, and city officials have laid partisan differences aside and done what they were elected to do - serve the people.

In New York City, Mayor Rudy Giuliani brought order and civility back to the streets - cutting crime rates by 50 percent.

In Cleveland, Mayor Michael White's bipartisan leadership has led to a revitalized downtown area and a higher quality of life similar to Mayor Ash, here in Knoxville.

In Wisconsin, Governor Tommy Thompson led bipartisan reform and proved that welfare dependence could be reversed - reducing the rolls in his state by 91 percent similar to Governor Sundquist, here in Tennessee.

In Texas, we never lack for partisan battles. Texas is a two-party state where tough politics comes naturally. But when it counts, we work to put the public interest first. In my first term as governor, I worked with a Democratic legislature to reform education, the legal system, juvenile justice, and welfare. These were joint accomplishments of a Republican governor and a Democratic legislature.

Politics has not been my career. And what I've learned in the private sector has proven true in government: a little good will goes a long way. Good will is earned by respecting your opponents, telling the truth, and leaving yesterday's quarrels behind.

And if good will is to prevail, a leader must set the right tone. A leader guided his convictions, not by the counsel of his pollster. A strong leader sets his mind to solving problems, not settling scores. Every successful mayor and governor understands this. And so should the next president.

With just seven months until the end of his term, we will leave our current president to the judgment of history. What matters now is whether the bitterness that now prevails in Washington will continue after his term.

There is a clear choice in this campaign, and the people are seeing it in the kind of tone we set, and how we talk about the big issues facing America. Take social security, for example. Recently I laid out a plan, a framework, to guide bipartisan reform in social security, to increase its value and keep our commitments to the elderly. There will be reasonable disagreements on this important issue. Surely, all can agree that this is a serious matter requiring the best efforts of both parties.

And yet all we have heard from my opponent are the familiar exaggerations and scare tactics. Ideas he doesn't share are never just the other side of an issue: They are "radical" or "reckless" ideas. Proposals he disapproves of are never just arguable; they are always "risky schemes."

This kind of unnecessary rhetoric is characteristic of the tone in Washington. It's the war-room mentality - the hostile stance, the harsh charges, the lashing out at enemies. We have had eight years of this, and eight years is enough.

We need a clean break from the recent past. It is time for leadership that sets a new tone - a tone of respect and bipartisanship.

A president can do this. He can refrain from personal attacks, and treat members of both parties with respect. He can reach across the partisan aisle and work with all for the good of the country.

In this same spirit, there are some practical steps we can take to change Washington. I am proposing today a set of six specific reforms relating to the budget process, pork-barrel spending, and nominations.

First, the budget process. I will propose that the federal budget be passed by both houses of Congress and signed by the president into law.

As it is now, the president and Congress work separately on their own budget proposals. Only very late in the year do these two branches begin working together on the details. Often their separate budgets are just a prelude to battle. A joint budget resolution signed by the legislative branch and the executive branch would start the process on the right footing, encouraging cooperation, and early agreement on fundamentals.

I also support a law putting the entire budget and appropriations process on a biennial basis, as is done in my state and 20 others.

If the discord in Washington never seems to end, this is partly because the budget process never seems to end. Lawmakers spend more than half of their time each year wrangling over budget resolutions, reconciliation bills, and appropriations bills. And often, as many legislators will tell you, they've hardly had time to examine the bills before the vote is taken.

By putting the process on a two-year schedule, we allow more time for thoughtful debate on the whole range of issues facing the Congress - better oversight of the bureaucracy, confirmations, and other long term concerns.

I will also propose a bill ending the annual threat of shutting down the government.

These threats have given both parties some moments we all prefer to forget. Disagreements have become deadlocks, the entire budget process resulting in no budget at all. Americans have had to watch federal agencies close for business and national parks and monuments turn away visitors.

These standoffs have undermined public confidence in government. To ensure that the government does not shut down again, here is what I propose.

If an appropriations bill is not signed by October first of the new fiscal year, affected programs would continue to be funded at the level of the president's budget, or the previous year's level as approved by Congress - whichever is lower.

Behind this reform is the simple principle that, above and beyond the quarrels of the moment, the United States government has certain basic commitments, and those commitments must be kept.

Next, I will address a longstanding source of public irritation and outrage - the wasteful habit of pork-barrel spending.

It's often said that one politician's "pork" is another's vital project, one district's "corporate welfare" another district's vital federal investment. But we need a more objective definition of "vital."

This confusion is the source of too much waste, and too much haggling, bargaining, and resentment in Washington. We have all heard examples of wasteful spending, such as the $250,000 to research caffeinated chewing gum. Or the 750,000 dollars for grasshopper research. New examples come along every year. The process never seems to change.

I support the establishment of a bipartisan commission to eliminate pork throughout the federal government.

There is bipartisan support for such a commission, including the backing of Senators McCain, Thompson, Abraham, and Lieberman. But such an idea needs a presidential push, which I will give it. This panel will submit to Congress a list of all spending projects deemed frivolous and unnecessary. The Congress will then cast a simple "up" or "down" vote. No amendments, no back-scratching, no logrolling.

Further, to bring fiscal discipline to the budget, I will ask Congress to pass line-item veto legislation.

The Supreme Court has made clear how such legislation can pass constitutional muster. Congress cannot give the president a permanent line-item veto. But it can give the president authority to decline to spend wasteful appropriations. As president, I will seek that constitutional authority. And I will use it to prevent spending that fails to serve the public interest. And I will use the unspent money to pay down the national debt.

These reforms can take some of the friction out of our national politics - and justify greater public confidence in Washington. But they are reforms of procedure only. In the end, only the spirit of the lawmakers themselves can bring real change to Washington. Above all else, we must call a truce to politics as combat - where differences of principle give rise to unprincipled attacks on character.

A good place to start is the nomination and confirmation process.

The Constitution empowers the president to nominate officers of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is clear-cut, straightforward language. It does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation.

Yet somewhere along the way, that is what Senate confirmations became - lengthy, partisan, and unpleasant. Often they are occasions for pushing larger agendas, having nothing to do with the merits of the nominee. At some memorable low points, hearings have become a gauntlet of accusation, interest-group warfare, and public humiliation. This has done enough harm to the process.

The president and the Senate have a joint responsibility here. The president must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them.

Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees a top priority. And I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November.

Public service is an honorable calling, and there are many now serving in Washington who view it just that way. But their voices are easily drowned out in the din of battle. Instead, the agenda is determined - the tone set - by the loud, the aggressive, the contentious.

This should not be the spirit of Washington. This is no way to encourage good people to serve, and no way to build a legacy of accomplishment.

None of us can control how others will conduct themselves. But each of us can control our own actions and our own words. As president, I will set a new tone in Washington. I will do everything I can to restore civility to our national politics - a respect for honest differences, and a decent regard for one another.

Thank you very much.

At some memorable low points, hearings have become a gauntlet of accusation, interest-group warfare, and public humiliation. This has done enough harm to the process.

The president and the Senate have a joint responsibility here. The president must be prompt in submitting his nominations, and the Senate prompt in acting upon them.

Starting next January, I will make the prompt submission of my presidential nominees a top priority. And I will ask the Senate to act on each nominee I submit within 60 days. I would ask Republicans and Democrats in the Senate to follow this standard regardless of who may be elected next November.

Public service is an honorable calling, and there are many now serving in Washington who view it just that way. But their voices are easily drowned out in the din of battle. Instead, the agenda is determined - the tone set - by the loud, the aggressive, the contentious.

This should not be the spirit of Washington. This is no way to encourage good people to serve, and no way to build a legacy of accomplishment.

None of us can control how others will conduct themselves. But each of us can control our own actions and our own words. As president, I will set a new tone in Washington. I will do everything I can to restore civility to our national politics - a respect for honest differences, and a decent regard for one another.

Thank you very much.

Brett- Someone just told me that GOPAC sent out an invite with Ken's name on it and "White House Political Director" as well as Sec. Elaine Chao. As you can see from the emails below, I told them I needed to check with Counsel and even asked if they were sending anything out with his name on it. I called them as soon as you told me he could not participate. I think it was 4/11. Please advise.

No problem. We've had this question asked several times over the years.

Our lawyers have dealt with it on several occasions.

WH Counsel should know,

1. GOPAC is a membership organization

2. The Charter Member's Meeting is not a fundraising event, nor is a fundraising event attached to it.

3. Charter Members, however, are donors to the organization in that they pay a membership fee of $10,000 per year, though we've expanded the membership class this year to include $5,000 and $25,000 members.

4. Ken's name would go the program of events for the two-day Annual Charter Member's Meeting and Chairman's Dinner as a speaker.

Let me know quickly as invites need to go out.

Thanks for meeting Wednesday. JC and I are focused on making GOPAC a major player in the Party. Next steps we discussed were:
1. You would discuss w/ Karl recommendations for GOPAC's board (mainly a finance role) (I'll send GOPAC's current list this afternoon) - a strong Bush person would be a subtle win/win.
2. I would put GOPAC's attorney (Randy Evans) together with your attorney to discuss the permissible scope of GOPAC's activities in 03' and 04' (who is the right person, Michael Toner?)
More immediately, though, JC and I have a huge favor to ask of you on behalf of GOPAC. GOPAC's Charter Member Meetings are April 27/28 in D.C. at the Ritz-Carlton. They begin Sunday afternoon with a senior-level members' meeting (100+ people) and close with a Chairman's Dinner (fundraiser) Monday night (300+ people).
3. Would you address the senior-level membership on Sunday at 4:00 p.m.? (other speakers are Ralph Reed and Frank Luntz)
4. Can you help us get Karen H. to be the Keynote Speaker at the Chairman's Dinner on Monday evening (Ritz-Carlton); she would be ideal to discuss communicating the Republican message; she would give special credibility to GOPAC at JC first Chairman's Dinner; and it would send the right message for JC and Karen to kick things off. JC is going to call her today, as well. We need a quick answer, as invites go out next Tuesday. If Karen is unable, maybe Karl?
Thanks Ken.

It was a very weak standard that allowed debtors pretty much carte blanche to reject contracts, as the standard was intepreted by the Supreme Court. The day the Supreme Court decision came out offering this interpretation, the unions went nuts and persuaded Congress to quickly pass legislation we now have.

Brett - Thank you so much for looking into this. So from a legal standpoint the '84 change has made it more difficult for airlines to cut its labor costs in bankruptcy. What exactly was the pre-'84 procedure? Did bankruptcy provide total protection to the debtor, allowing it to simply declare a contract void?

Subject: Re: bankruptcy

I can talk about your first question when you want.

It certainly appears that the amendment to the Bankruptcy Code in 1984, which undermined the Bildisco decision, has hindered the ability of airlines to reject collective bargaining agreements when in bankruptcy. The statute set forth a 3-part test that courts must apply before allowing a debtor to reject a CBA. (Note that this is not an airline-only carve-out.) Beyond the requirements of the statutory test itself, an added problem is that the standards used by courts in applying this test to assess when and under what circumstances a collective bargaining agreement may be rejected are vague and unpredictable. Indeed, there is a circuit split between the Second and Third Circuits on one key issue (the application of the "necessary" standard), with the Second Circuit granting the debtor more flexibility in modifying or rejecting a collective bargaining agreement.

I cannot describe with certainty the economic ramifications of all of this, but the ability of a debtor to reject collective bargaining agreements was significantly circumscribed by the 1984 statutory amendment; moreover, the standards outlined in the statute have caused great uncertainty in the courts. I am sure the airlines have described this to you in some depth. I would be happy to write this up in any form you wish.

Subject: Re: bankruptcy

We're looking into this as part of our effort to understand possible impediments to the health of the industry. I just need an understanding of how airline collective bargaining contracts are protected under bankruptcy law. My understanding is that pre-1984, labor contracts were the same as any other contract once an airline went into bankruptcy. They could be abrogated or rewritten by the company fairly easily. Since 1984 the labor contracts have been treated differently. Airlines must go to the bankruptcy judge to amend its contracts and 20 years of case law governs the judges ability to approve those amendments.
Does this restriction - that I think is a carve out for airline unions - seem to unnecessarily hamper their ability to cut labor costs in bankruptcy. Are their barriers to liquidation - could a bankruptcy judge force an airline to stay in business because of "public interest" even though its viability is in question? Do airlines emerge too weak because of the interference or rulings of bankruptcy judges? These are very subjective obviously, but could probably be explored if I had a better understanding of where the pressure points are in an airline bankruptcy.

Thanks a lot Brett.

Before the completion of the Senate Judiciary Committee markup of S. 274, the class action reform proposal, and the beginning of the current congressional recess I had started developing a sick feeling that "our" collective commitment and determination to wage and win the critical war on judicial nominations was loosing enthusiasm in the Senate. There were off hand comments, seemingly missed opportunities to press the case - - signs here and there.

I hoped my feeling was more a product of the influence of difficult efforts to deal with last minute speed bumps in the S. 274 markup than a real deflation of enthusiasm. In my view the cause is so important - - critical to the winning and survival of "our" agenda - - and so winnable and, perhaps for the first time in decades, a cause with the potential for political advantages - - that I assumed I would see things differently when I returned from a week off.

Now, however, catching up on reading, etc., I have seen Bob Novak's reference of last week.

WASHINGTON -- Senate Republicans are tiring of the battle to confirm contested judicial nominees, indicating that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's Democratic plan to prevent President Bush from shaping the federal judiciary is succeeding.

Weekly meetings of Republican senators produce increased grumbling. The complaining senators ask the White House and the Republican leadership why they should keep fighting to confirm as appellate judges Washington, D.C., lawyer Miguel Estrada and Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen. Not only liberal GOP senators but also some old guard committee chairmen claim this fight is neither important nor politically prudent.

Kennedy's unprecedented plan to block Bush's judicial selections always has been based on the theory that Republican senators soon would tire of the struggle.

Recess Time

With Senate Democrats taking obstructionism to new levels, the president should re-read Article II, Section 2, Paragraph 3.

by Hugh Hewitt

04/23/2003 12:00:00 AM

Hugh Hewitt, contributing writer

THE LEFT EDGE of the Senate Democratic caucus has taken control of the judicial-nomination process and has forced the entire Senate into what is, at best, an extra-constitutional swamp. With their filibuster of D.C. Circuit Court nominee Miguel Estrada, their threatened filibusters of Fifth Circuit nominees Priscilla Owen and Charles Pickering, and their obstruction of other nominees such as John Roberts, Carolyn Kuhl, and a half-dozen Sixth Circuit nominees, Senate Democrats have decided it is good policy to wreck a judicial nomination and confirmation process that has worked for more than two centuries.

The radical agenda of the Senate Democrats has escaped a great deal of attention, though it surely played a role in their historic defeats in November 2002 and will do so again in the more than half-dozen referendums on incumbent Democratic Senators looming in November 2004. The temptation to let the likes of Tom Daschle, Harry Reid, Patty Murray, Blanche Lincoln, and Chuck Schumer hang themselves on their extremist approach must be huge, but President Bush and his advisers would be better served by aggressively defending the Constitution at every step. There are many ways to do this, including a jam-down of new Senate rules with 51 votes. But a way-station to such a melt-down is found in the president's recess appointment power.

Article II, Section 2, Paragraph 3 provides: "The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session."

Thus the president can fill every judicial vacancy that presently exists, though these appointments will lapse in the fall of 2004. Nominees have traditionally been reluctant to fill such temporary posts as the Senate guarded its confirmation power jealously and was likely to turn a cold-shoulder to the recess appointees in much the way that the NFL veterans shunned the temporary players who took the field during their strike.

Bill Clinton broke the taboo against recess appointments to the bench, however, with his end-of-term appointment of Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals--an appointment President Bush made permanent through his nomination and the Senate's consent as a gesture of conciliation. That gesture and many others have been rejected as inadequate by the Leahy-Daschle-Schumer-Kennedy caucus. Kindness didn't--and won't--work. Stronger measures are called for, not only to meet real needs for judges, but also to bring the controversy to the public's attention. The Democrats have crashed the process and shredded the traditions because of the pressure of abortion absolutists. Their record is a sorry one, and attention generated via the recess-appointment power will help shine light on their excess.

At this writing there are 24 vacancies on the U.S. Courts of Appeals. The president would be wise not to launch too many recess appointments at first, but it would be a strong opening move to announce that, say, two of the six blocked nominees to the Sixth Circuit will be appointed over the Memorial Day Senate break if there is no movement with those nominees, and that the two vacancies without nominees on the D.C. Circuit (there are a total of four, with Estrada and Roberts having been nominated in May of 2001) will receive nominees in May and will be appointed during the holiday recess unless at least Roberts (and perhaps both Roberts and Estrada) gets a floor vote before then.

The Sixth Circuit nominees are all named, and two would have to volunteer for this sort of hardball, but the two D.C. open slots would be best used to serve up a couple of rock-ribbed conservatives who might be willing to serve 15 to 18 months for the good of the cause. With the freedom from pressure to conform to Chuck Schumer's strange reading of the Constitution, these two judges could provide an impressive legacy of opinions over their year-and-a-half of service. Readers are invited to suggest nominees to me from among the caucus of "They Couldn't Get Confirmed by This Senate in a Hundred Years" club because of their intellectual firepower. Perhaps Judge Bork hankers for a D.C. Circuit encore?

If the Senate radicals remain entrenched in their desire to overturn the Constitution, either the Senate can discipline itself with new rules or the president can increase the number of recess judges and announce a commitment to keep all such nominees on the bench through the recess process for as long as his power to extend their service endures. As Bill Clinton demonstrated, even a lame-duck president can employ the power just prior to his replacement's arrival. President Bush could keep using the recess power through December of 2004 even if defeated, and through December of 2008 if reelected.

This approach would announce a fundamental change in the nomination process, though a constitutional one. It would answer the Democrats' irresponsible absolutism with a measured and transparent reply. Conservative activists would be satisfied, as would moderate defenders of the clear design of the Constitution.

The battles over judicial appointments at home are not nearly as dramatic as those battles fought abroad, but the ability to wage the latter ultimately depends upon a healthy respect for the Constitution's rules at home. Democrats have abandoned that respect in their zeal to meet the demands of the abortion-rights caucus. The president should answer their challenge.

Hi Ken:

We have a Noon appointment with CIFA, a DOD intelligence agency and were hoping to stop by ANYTIME you could squeeze us in either befor or after.

On two fronts, we have issues/solutions that have political ramifications, especially the 2 million weekly listeners in Ohio and 38 million opt-in email addresses nationally.

On a personal level, I simply need your help. I screwed-up royally by holding on to a failing business too long and have paid a steep price for not getting out more quickly (a lesson learned) - this project has the potential to get me back on my feet...and frankly, its a "win/win" for you, me and W.

Ken, I know you are busy as hell, but I believe we have enough political value to offer you to warrant helping out "a brother." :) If this Friday doesnt work, pick a day/time and we will match up with you...

We simply want to help you with our Realtalknetwork.com show and see if you can help us open some doors to DHS, ONDCP, and perhaps DOD...Once you understand what we can do to help track & trace terrorists, you will be glad you pointed us in some right directions - there are political ramifications to winning the war on terorr???

Let me know. Ken Duberstein pointed to you and said, "he's your man..."

Thanks Ken...its the least you can do since you have my dream job :)

Marty

PS - I shall strive to attain its ideals, and by so doing to bring to it honor and credit. I shall be loyal to my college and my chapter and shall keep strong my ties to them that I may ever retain the spirit of youth...I shall try always to discharge the obligation to others which arises from the fact that I am a fraternity man. :)

Hi Ken:

We have a Noon appointment with CIFA, a DOD intelligence agency and were hoping to stop by ANYTIME you could squeeze us in either befor or after.

On two fronts, we have issues/solutions that have political ramifications, espe cially the 2 million weekly listeners in Ohio and 38 million opt-in email addre sses nationally.

On a personal level, I simply need your help. I screwed-up royally by hol ding on to a failing business too long and have paid a steep price for not gett ing out more quickly (a lesson learned) - this project has the potential to get me back on my feet...and frankly, its a "win/win" for you, me and W.

Ken, I know you are busy as hell, but I believe we have enough political value to offer you to warrant helping out "a brother." :) If this Friday doesnt work, pick a day/time and we will match up with you...

We simply want to help you with our Realtalknetwork.com show and see if you can help us open some doors to DHS, ONDCP, and perhaps DOD...Once you understand w hat we can do to help track & trace terrorists, you will be glad you pointe d us in some right directions - there are political ramifications to winning th e war on terorr???

Let me know. Ken Duberstein pointed to you and said, "he's your man..."
Thanks Ken...its the least you can do since you have my dream job :)

Marty

PS - I shall strive to attain its ideals, and by so doing to bring to it honor and credit. I shall be loyal to my college and my chapter and shall keep strong my ties to them that I may ever retain the spirit of youth...I shall try always to discharge the obligation to others whi ch arises from the fact that I am a fraternity man. :)

Brett: I understand through the rumor mill that you are one of the people who has been asked to look at S.887, the Kyl-Cornyn attorneys fee bill. I have also heard that some business groups have expressed concern that the bill sets a precedent for having the IRS regulate businessmen's salaries. To address this issue, I've written a memo (attached) that explains that the bill has courts, not the IRS, apply the fee formula to mass-tort attorneys. (This is one of the parts of the original Horowitz bill that Senator Kyl has changed.) The memo also quotes authorities making clear that courts have always distinguished lawyers, as fiduciaries, from ordinary businessmen, and that lawyers already are subject to ethical rules requiring them to charge only reasonable fees. The memo contains at the end the portion of Senator Kyl's speech addressing this issue in greater depth.

As for the question of how the tax purists will receive ISCRAA: Americans for Tax Reform is with us. ATR sent out a legislative alert to Senate offices yesterday declaring that it "strongly supports passage of S. 887." I am working with ATR (and other groups) to persuade state governors to ask their Senators to cosponsor the bill.

Additionally, I have included with this email our basic information packet on ISCRAA, and, for completeness, Senators Kyl and Cornyn's full, footnoted speeches introducing S.887. Senator Kyl's speech addresses issues of access to justice, freedom of contract, why ISCRAA will apply to only a few cases a year, and retrospective effect. Senator Cornyn's speech addresses (at the end) the issue of why the excessive portion of an attorneys fee is the property of (and must be restored to) the client. The bulk of Senator Cornyn's speech addresses the gross corruption involved in the tobacco settlement fee awards.

Please do not hesitate to call me if you have any questions about how ISCRAA works or any other aspect of the bill. We plan to try to do this bill on reconciliation, meaning that it will only need 50 votes. By our head count, it will be decided by just a few votes. How the Administration comes down could very well be decisive for this bill - and whether we allow 20 billionaire tort lawyers to turn this country into the ATLA version of post-Soviet Russia.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.
Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's muliplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.
Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

- "We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client."[1]

- "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."[2]

- "[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."[3]

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that "a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable." Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney "shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee." The Model Code further explains that an attorney's fee is "clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, "all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees."[4] (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- "Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so 'clearly excessive' as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules."[5]

- "[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness."[6]

- "[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client's challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside."[7]

- "Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law."[8]

- "[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny."[10]

- "As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney's fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client."[11]

[From Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys' rights to freedom of contract.

The first principle to keep in mind when questions of attorneys fees are considered is that "a fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law between attorney and client."[12] (Illinois Supreme Court.) As one academic commentator has noted:

> "[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise 'professional judgement' on the client's behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client's interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed."[13]

The lawyer's status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. "An attorney's freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations."[14] (New Jersey Supreme Court.) "In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts."[15] (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) "As a result of lawyers' special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts."[16] (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

[16]Joesph M. Perillo, The Law of Lawyers' Contracts is Different, 67 FORDHAM L. REV. 443, 445 (1998).

> "We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is 'a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.' ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12."[17]

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

> "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."[18]

In order to protect the lawyer's public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. "[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an 'unreasonable' fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client." G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

> "[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy,

They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear").

reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."[19]

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."[20] (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."[21] (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that "a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable." Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney "shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee." The Model Code further explains that an attorney's fee is "clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, "all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees."[4] (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- "Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so 'clearly excessive' as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules."[5]

- "[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness."[6]

- "[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client's challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside."[7]

- "Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law."[8]

- "Under a court's general supervisory power over attorneys as officers of the court, attorney fee contracts are subject to scrutiny for the reasonableness of their terms."[9]

[From Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys' rights to freedom of contract.

The first principle to keep in mind when questions of attorneys fees are considered is that "a fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law between attorney and client."[12] (Illinois Supreme Court.) As one academic commentator has noted:

> "[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise 'professional judgement' on the client's behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client's interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed."[13]

The lawyer's status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. "An attorney's freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations."[14] (New Jersey Supreme Court.) "In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts."[15] (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) "As a result of lawyers' special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts."[16] (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

> "We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business > contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is 'a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.' ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12."[17]

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

> "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."[18]

In order to protect the lawyer's public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. "[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an 'unreasonable' fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client." G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

> "[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."[19]

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."[20] (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."[21] (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

_____ISCRAA: The Kyl-Cornyn Bill to Enforce Fiduciary Attorney Fee Standards in Mass Tort Litigation

The Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act (ISCRAA) allows attorneys fees of no more than 500% of reasonable hourly rates in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA uses an existing provision of the tax code to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. To avoid punitive tax rates, an attorney would be required to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the client. Because ISCRAA applies to current and future fees paid pursuant to the state Medicaid tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states.

ISCRAA's Benefits:

- Limiting speculative, fee-driven mass tort litigation. The current mass-tort litigation crisis is driven in large part by the enormous and unethical fees commanded by some plaintiffs' attorneys. Because their fees are so grossly disproportionate to their actual efforts, these lawyers can pursue even speculative lawsuits that lack a legitimate foundation – even only an occasional victory produces massive profits. By requiring that fees be proportional to attorneys' actual work, ISCRAA inevitably will limit this type of litigation.

- Enforcing Pre-existing Fiduciary Standards. Attorneys undisputedly are fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation flowing from this status – a requirement that is established in the attorney ethics rules of all 50 states – is that a lawyer must not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts traditionally read a reasonableness requirement into every attorneys fee contract. ISCRAA does not change this pre-existing obligation – it simply makes the duty enforceable in large lawsuits.

- Helping the States. Because it applies to the fees still being paid in the state tobacco settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states. Tobacco companies will pay the same amount – but continuing excess fees will be restored to the clients (the states), not to lawyers who violated their fiduciary duties. Under ISCRAA, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. Our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

- Guaranteeing Mass-Tort Plaintiffs Access to Counsel. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA protects fiduciary interests, while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in large lawsuits.
