The Department invites comment on all aspects of these proposed regulations and on the policies that underlie them. The initial comment period is relatively brief (30 days) in order to permit the Department to begin implementation of this critical program as soon as possible. After reviewing the comments, the Department may issue an interim final rule and seek additional comment on some or all aspects of the program. In any event, the Department will begin implementation of the SAFETY Act immediately with regard to Federal acquisitions of anti-terrorism technologies and will begin accepting other SAFETY Act applications on July 15, 2003.

BACKGROUND

In recognition of this close relationship between the SAFETY Act and indemnification authority, in Section 73 of Executive Order 13286 of February 28, 2003, the President recently amended the existing Executive Order on indemnification-- Executive Order 10789 of November 14, 1958, as amended. The amendment granted the Department of Homeland Security authority to indemnify under Public Law 85-804. At the same time, it requires that all agencies – not just the Department of Homeland Security – follow certain procedures to ensure that the potential applicability of the SAFETY Act is considered before any indemnification is granted for an anti-terrorism technology. Specifically, the amendment provides that federal agencies cannot provide indemnification “with respect to any matter that has been, or could be, designated by the Secretary of Homeland Security as a qualified anti-terrorism technology” unless the Secretary of Homeland Security has advised whether SAFETY Act coverage would be appropriate and the Director of the Office and Management and Budget has approved the exercise of indemnification authority. The amendment includes an exception for the Department of Defense where the Secretary of Defense has determined that indemnification is “necessary for the timely and effective conduct of United States military or intelligence activities.”

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Executive Order 12866 – Regulatory Planning and Review

DHS has examined the economic implications of this proposed rule as required by Executive Order 12866. Executive Order 12866 directs agencies to assess all costs and benefits of available regulatory alternatives and, when regulation is necessary, to select regulatory approaches that maximize net benefits (including potential economic, environmental, public health and safety, and other advantages; distributive impacts; and equity). Executive Order 12866 classifies a rule as significant if it meets any one of a number of specified conditions, including: having an annual effect on the economy of $100 million, adversely affecting a sector of the economy in a material way, adversely affecting competition, or adversely affecting jobs. A regulation is also considered a significant regulatory action if it raises novel legal or policy issues.

DHS concludes that this proposed rule is a significant regulatory action under the Executive Order because it will have a positive, material effect on public safety under Section 3(f)(1), and it raises novel legal and policy issues under Section 3(f)(4). DHS tentatively concludes, however, that this proposed rule does not meet the significance threshold of $100 million effect on the economy in any one year under Section 3(f)(1), due to the relatively low estimated burden of applying for this technology program, the unknown number of certifications and designations that the Department will dispense, and the unknown probability of a terrorist attack that would have to occur in order for the protections put in place in this proposed rule to have a large impact on the public. The agency requests comments regarding this determination, and invites commenters to submit any relevant data that will assist the agency in estimating the impact of this rule.

Need for the Regulation and Market Failure

This regulation implements the SAFETY Act and is intended to implement the provisions set forth in that Act. DHS believes the current development of anti-terrorism technologies has been slowed due to the potential liability risks associated with their development and eventual deployment. In a fully functioning insurance market, technology developers would be able to insure themselves against excessive liability risk; however, the terrorism risk insurance market appears to be in disequilibrium. The attacks of September 11 fundamentally changed the landscape of terrorism insurance. Congress, in the findings of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (TRIA) of 2002, concluded that temporary financial assistance in the insurance market is needed to “allow for a transition period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses.” This rulemaking addresses a similar concern, to the extent that potential technology developers are unable to efficiently insure against large losses due to an ongoing reassessment of terrorism issues in insurance markets.

Even after a temporary insurance market adjustment, purely private terrorism risk insurance markets may exhibit negative externalities. Because the risk pool of any single insurer may not be large enough to efficiently spread and therefore insure against the risk of damages from a terrorist attack, and because the potential for excessive liability may render any terrorism insurance prohibitively expensive, society may suffer from less than optimal technological protection against terrorist attacks. The measures set forth in this proposed rule are designed to meet this goal; they will provide certain liability protection from lawsuits and consequently will increase the likelihood that businesses will pursue important technologies that may not be pursued without this protection.

Costs and Benefits to Technology Development Firms

Since this rulemaking puts in place an additional voluntary option for technology developers, the expected direct net benefits to firms of this rulemaking will be positive; companies presumably will not choose to pursue the designation of “anti-terrorism technology” unless they believe it to be a profitable endeavor. DHS cannot predict with certainty the number of applicants for this program. An additional source of uncertainty is the reaction of the insurance market to this designation. As mentioned above, insurance markets appear to currently be adjusting their strategy for terrorism risk, so little market information exists that would inform this estimate. DHS invites comments on these issues.

Given that a firm chooses to invest effort in pursuing SAFETY Act liability protection, the direct costs will be the time and money required to submit the required paperwork and other information to DHS. Only companies that choose to request this protection will incur costs. In the preliminary Paperwork Reduction Act analysis, we estimate the reporting burden assuming that each applicant will spend at least 40 hours, and perhaps 200 hours, to prepare the information required by DHS for consideration. For the purposes of this analysis, we assume a loaded labor rate of the personnel preparing the information package of $100 per hour. Consequently, the total cost of the application requirements is estimated to be at least $4,000 per application for a relatively simple application. DHS does not yet have sufficient information to estimate the number of applicants annually. If we assume 1,000 applications annually, the total cost of the application requirement is estimated to range from $4,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually (1,000 applicants X 40 to 200 hours X $100 per hour). The regulation further requires that firms conduct safety and hazard analyses and provide them to the Secretary in the course of applying for this designation. We do not have quantified estimates of the impact of this provision, but we expect that much of the safety and hazard analysis activity will already take place in the normal course of technology development, since the safety and hazards of a firm's products are fundamental characteristics. DHS

The direct benefits to firms include lower potential losses from liability for terrorist attacks, and as a consequence a lower burden from liability insurance for this type of technology. In this assessment, we were careful to only consider benefits and costs specifically due to the proposed rulemaking and not costs that would have been incurred by companies absent the proposed rulemaking. The SAFETY Act requires the sellers of the technology to obtain liability insurance “of such types and in such amounts” certified by the Secretary. The entire cost of insurance is not a cost specifically imposed by the proposed rulemaking, as companies in the course of good business practice routinely purchase insurance absent Federal requirements to do so. Any difference in the amount or price of insurance purchased as a result of the SAFETY Act would be a cost or benefit of this rule for firms.

The wording of the SAFETY Act clearly states that sellers are not required to obtain liability insurance beyond the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private liability sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of the seller’s anti-terrorism technologies. We tentatively conclude, however, that this rulemaking will impact both the prices and terms of liability insurance relative to the amount of insurance coverage absent the SAFETY Act. The probable effect of this rule is to lower the quantity of liability coverage needed in order for a firm to protect itself from terrorism liability risks, which would be considered a benefit of this rule to firms. This change will most likely be a shift back in demand that leads to a movement along the supply curve for technology firms already in this market; they probably will buy less liability coverage. This will have the effect of lowering the price per unit of coverage in this market.

DHS also expects, however, that this rulemaking will lead to greater market entry, which will generate surplus for both technology firms and insurers. DHS expects that the mandated amounts of liability coverage in the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 may be the best estimate of the structure of the future terrorism risk insurance market, and as stated in the preamble, the Secretary may presume that firms need not purchase liability insurance for terrorism-related claims in an amount greater than that required to be offered under TRIA. Again, this market is still in development, and DHS solicits comments on exactly how to predict the effect of this rulemaking on technology development.

Costs and Benefits to Insurers

DHS has little information on the future structure of the terrorism risk insurance market, and how this rulemaking will affect that structure. As stated above, this type of intervention could serve to lower the demand for insurance in the current market, thus the static effect on the profitability of insurers is negative. The benefits of the lower insurance burden to technology firms would be considered a cost to insurers; the static changes to insurance coverage would cause a transfer from insurers to technology firms. On the other hand, this type of intervention should serve to increase the surplus of insurers by making some types of insurance products possible that would have been prohibitive to customers or impossible for insurers to design in the absence of this rulemaking. DHS is interested in public comment on any possible negative or positive impacts to insurers caused by the SAFETY Act and this rulemaking, and whether these impacts would result in transfers within this market or an efficiency change not captured by another party. We encourage commenters to be as specific as possible.

Costs and Benefits to the Public

The benefits to the public of this proposed rulemaking are very difficult to put in dollar value terms since its ultimate objective is the development of new technologies that will help prevent or limit the damage from terrorist attacks. It is not possible to even determine whether these technologies could help prevent large or small scale attacks, as the SAFETY Act applies to a vast range of technologies, including products, services, software, and other forms of intellectual property that could have a widespread impact. In qualitative terms, the SAFETY Act removes a great deal of the risk and uncertainty associated with product liability and in the process creates a powerful incentive that will help fuel the development of critically needed anti-terrorism technologies. Additionally, we expect the SAFETY Act to reduce the research and development costs of these technologies.

The tradeoff, however, may be that a greater number of technologies may qualify for this program and be developed that have a lower average effectiveness against terrorist attacks than technologies currently on the market, or technologies that would be developed in the absence of this rulemaking. In the absence of this rulemaking, strong liability discouragement implies that the fewer products that are deployed in support of anti-terrorist efforts would be especially effective. Profit maximizing firms will always choose to develop the technologies with the highest demand first. It is the tentative conclusion of DHS that liability discouragement in this market is too strong or prohibitive, for the reasons mentioned above. DHS tentatively concludes that this rule will have positive net benefits to the public, since it serves to strike a better balance between consumer protection and technological development. DHS welcomes comments informing this tradeoff argument, and public input on whether this rulemaking does strike the correct balance.

Regulatory Flexibility Act

The Regulatory Flexibility Act requires DHS to determine whether this proposed rulemaking will have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities. Although we expect that many of the applicants for SAFETY Act protection are likely to meet the Small Business Administration's criteria for being a small entity, we do not believe this proposed rulemaking will impose a significant financial impact on them. In fact, we believe this proposed rule will be a benefit to technology development businesses, especially small businesses, by presenting them with an attractive, voluntary option of pursuing a potentially profitable investment by reducing the amount of risk and uncertainty of lawsuits associated with developing anti-terrorist technology. The requirements of this proposed rulemaking will only be imposed on such businesses that voluntarily seek the liability protection of the SAFETY Act. If a company does not request that protection, the company will bear no cost.

To the extent that demand for insurance falls, however, insurers may be adversely impacted by this rule. DHS believes that eventual new entry into this market and further opportunities to insure against terrorism risk implies that the long-term impact of this rulemaking on insurers is ambiguous but could very well be positive. We also expect that this rulemaking will affect relatively few firms and relatively few insurers either positively or negatively, as this appears to be a specialized industry. Therefore, we preliminarily certify this notice of proposed rulemaking will not have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities, and we request comments on this certification.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100 million or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. Therefore, no actions were deemed necessary under the provisions of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995

The Department of Homeland Security will submit the following information collection request to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for review in accordance with procedures of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995. The proposed information collection will be published to obtain comments from the public and affected agencies.

DHS will request comments on at least the following four points:

(1) Whether the proposed collection of information is necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the agency, including whether the information will have practical utility;

(2) The accuracy of the agency's estimate of the burden of the proposed collection of information, including the validity of the methodology and assumptions used;

(3) The quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected; and

(4) The burden of the collection of information on those who are to respond, including through the use of appropriate automated, electronic, mechanical, or other technological collection techniques or other forms of information technology, e.g., permitting electronic submission of responses.

(1) Type of Information Collection: New Collection

(2) Title of the Form/Collection: [Application Form for Designation of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology under the SAFETY Act; Application Form for Approval of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology under the SAFETY Act.]

(3) Agency form number and applicable component sponsoring the collection: Form Number: __-001, Directorate of Science and Technology, Department of Homeland Security.

(4) Affected public who will be asked or required to respond, as well as a brief abstract: Primary: Sellers and potential Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technology. Abstract: The Application Form for Designation and/or Approval of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology will be used to provide information to the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security in determining whether Sellers qualify for risk and litigation management protections under the SAFETY Act.

(5) An estimate of the total number of respondents and the amount of time estimated for an average respondent to respond: 1,000 applicants annually. 40 to 200 hours per application.

(6) An estimate of the total public burden (in hours) associated with the collection: 40,000 to 200,000 hours.

As part of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107-296, Congress enacted several liability protections for providers of anti-terrorism technologies. The SAFETY Act provides incentives for the development and deployment of anti-terrorism technologies by creating a system of “risk management” and a system of “litigation management.” The purpose of the Act is to ensure that the threat of liability does not deter potential manufacturers or Sellers of anti-terrorism technologies from developing and commercializing technologies that could save lives. Together, the risk and litigation management provisions provide the following protections:

- Exclusive jurisdiction in federal court for suits against the Sellers of “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” (§ 863(a)(2));
- A limitation on the liability of Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies to an amount of liability insurance coverage specified for each individual technology, provided that Sellers will not be required to obtain any more liability insurance coverage than is reasonably available “at prices that will not unreasonably distort the sales price” of the technology. (§ 864(a));
- A prohibition on joint and several liability for noneconomic damages, so that Sellers can only be liable for that percentage of noneconomic damages proportionate to their responsibility for the harm (§ 863(b)(2));
- A complete bar on punitive damages and prejudgment interest (§ 863(b)(1));

Small Business Regulatory Fairness Act of 1996

As noted above, the Department has tentatively determined that this proposed rule would not qualify as a "major rule" as defined by section 804 of the Small Business and Regulatory Enforcement Act of 1996.

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

The Department of Homeland Security does not believe this proposed rule will have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. States will, however, benefit from this rule to the extent that they are purchasers of approved anti-terrorism technologies. DHS requests comment on the federalism impact of this Rule. In particular, the Department seeks comment on whether this proposed rule will raise significant federalism implications and, if so, what is the nature of those implications.

PART __ -- SUPPORT ANTI-TERRORISM BY FOSTERING EFFECTIVE TECHNOLOGIES ACT OF 2002

[table of contents]

§ 101.1 Purpose.

This Part implements the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002, Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 (“the SAFETY Act” or “the Act”).

§ 101.2 Delegation.

All of the Secretary’s responsibilities, powers, and functions under the SAFETY Act may be exercised by the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security (“the Under Secretary”) or the Under Secretary’s designees.

§ 101.3 Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies.

(a) General- The Under Secretary may designate as a qualified anti-terrorism technology for purposes of protections set forth in Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 any qualifying product, equipment, service (including support services), device, or technology (including information technology) designed, developed, modified, or procured for the specific purpose of preventing, detecting, identifying, or deterring acts of terrorism or limiting the harm such acts might otherwise cause.

(b) Criteria to be Considered- In determining whether to grant the designation under paragraph (a) (a “Designation”), the Under Secretary may exercise discretion and judgment in interpreting and weighting the various criteria in each case in determining whether to grant a Designation:

(i) Prior United States Government use or demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness.

(ii) Availability of the technology for immediate deployment in public and private settings.

(iii) Existence of extraordinarily large or extraordinarily unquantifiable potential third party liability risk exposure to the Seller or other provider of such anti-terrorism technology.

(iv) Substantial likelihood that such anti-terrorism technology will not be deployed unless protections under the system of risk management provided under Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 are extended.

(v) Magnitude of risk exposure to the public if such anti-terrorism technology is not deployed.

(vi) Evaluation of all scientific studies that can be feasibly conducted in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm.

(vii) Anti-terrorism technology that would be effective in facilitating the defense against acts of terrorism, including technologies that prevent, defeat or respond to such acts.

(viii) Any other factor that the Under Secretary may consider to be relevant to the determination or to the homeland Security of the United States.

(c) Use of Standards- From time to time the Under Secretary may develop, issue, revise, and adopt safety and effectiveness standards for various categories of anti-terrorism technologies. Such standards will be published by the Department at www.dhs.gov, and copies may also be obtained by mail sending a request to

_____ . Compliance with any such standards that are applicable to a particular anti-terrorism technology may be considered before any Designation will be granted for such technology under paragraph (a); in such cases, the Under Secretary may consider test results produced by an independent laboratory or other entity engaged to test or verify the safety, utility, performance, or effectiveness of such technology.

(d) Consideration of Substantial Equivalence- In determining whether a particular technology satisfies the criteria in paragraph (b) and complies with any applicable standards referenced in paragraph (c), the Under Secretary may take into consideration evidence that the technology is substantially equivalent to other, similar technologies (“predicate technologies”) that have been previously designated as “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” under the SAFETY Act. A technology may be deemed to be substantially equivalent to a predicate technology if (i) it has the same intended use as the predicate technology, and (ii) it has the same or substantially similar technological characteristics as the predicate technology.

(e) Duration and Depth of Review- Recognizing the urgency of certain security measures, the Under Secretary will make a judgment regarding the duration and depth of review appropriate for a particular technology. This review will include submissions by the applicant for SAFETY Act coverage, along with information that the Under Secretary can feasibly gather from other sources. For technologies with which the Federal Government or other governmental entity already has substantial experience or data (through the procurement process or through prior use or review), the review may rely in part upon that prior experience and, thus, may be expedited. The Under Secretary may consider any scientific studies, testing, field studies, or other experience with the technology that he deems appropriate and that are available or can be feasibly conducted or obtained in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm. Such studies may, in the Under Secretary's discretion, include:

- (i) Public source studies;
- (ii) Classified and otherwise confidential studies;
- (iii) Studies, test, or other performance records or data provided by or available to the producer of the specific technology; and
- (iv) Proprietary studies that are available to the Under Secretary.

In considering whether or the extent to which it is feasible to defer a decision on a Designation until additional scientific studies can be conducted on a particular technology, the Under Secretary will bring to bear his or her expertise concerning the protection of the security of the American homeland and will consider the urgency of the need for the technology.

(f) Content of Designation- A Designation shall specify the technology and the Seller(s) of the technology. The Designation may, but need not, also specify others who are required to be covered by the liability insurance required to be purchased by the Seller. The Designation shall include the certification required by Section 101.4 herein. The Designation may also include such other specifications as the Under Secretary may deem to be appropriate. Failure to specify a covered person or party in a Designation will not preclude application of the Act's protections to that person or party.

(g) Government Procurements- The Under Secretary may coordinate a SAFETY Act review in connection with an agency procurement of an anti-terrorism technology in any manner he or she deems appropriate and consistent with the Act and other applicable laws.

(h) Pre-Application Consultations- To the extent that he or she deems it appropriate, the Under Secretary may consult with potential SAFETY Act applicants regarding the need for or advisability of particular types of anti-terrorism technologies, although no pre-approval of any particular technology may be given. The confidentiality provisions in Section 101.8 hereof shall be applicable to such consultations.

101.4 Obligations of Seller.

(a) Liability Insurance Required- Any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides a qualified anti-terrorism technology to Federal and non-Federal Government customers shall obtain liability insurance of such types and in such amounts as shall be required in accordance with this section and certified by the Under Secretary to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from, such act. The Under Secretary may request at any time (before or after the certification process established under this section) that the Seller or any other provider of qualified anti-terrorism technology submit any information that would (i) assist in determining the amount of liability insurance required, or (ii) show that the Seller or any other provider of qualified anti-terrorism technology otherwise has met all the requirements of this section.

(b) Maximum Amount- For the total claims related to one such act of terrorism, the Seller will not be required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world

market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of the Seller's anti-terrorism technology. The Under Secretary will determine the amount of liability insurance required for each technology, or, to the extent feasible and appropriate, a particular group of technologies. The Under Secretary or his designee may find that – notwithstanding the level of risk exposure for a particular technology, or group of technologies – the maximum amount of liability insurance from private sources on the world market is set at a price or contingent on terms that will unreasonably distort the sales price of a Seller's technology, thereby necessitating liability insurance coverage below the maximum amount available. In determining the amount of liability insurance required, the Under Secretary may consider any factor, including, but not limited to, the following:

- (i) the particular technology at issue;
- (ii) the amount of liability insurance the Seller maintained prior to application;
- (iii) the amount of liability insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller's business as a whole;
- (iv) the amount of liability insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies;
- (v) information regarding the amount of liability insurance offered on the world market;
- (vi) data and history regarding mass casualty losses;
- (vii) the intended use of the technology;

(viii) the requirements of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 regarding the provision of liability insurance for third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism;

(ix) the possible effects of the cost of insurance on the price of the product, and the possible consequences thereof for development, production, or deployment of the technology; and

(x) in the case of a Seller seeking approval to self-insure, the factors described in Section 28.308(d) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(c) Scope of Coverage- Liability insurance obtained pursuant to this subsection shall, in addition to the Seller, protect the following, to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from, an act of terrorism:

(i) Contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller.

(ii) Contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer.

(d) Third Party Claims- Any liability insurance required to be obtained under this section shall provide coverage against third party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when the applicable qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act.

(e) Reciprocal Waiver Of Claims- The Seller shall enter into a reciprocal waiver of claims with its contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers, and contractors and subcontractors of the customers, involved in the manufacture, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies, under which each party to the waiver agrees to be responsible for losses, including business interruption losses, that it sustains, or for losses sustained by its own employees resulting from an activity resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act.

(f) Information to be Submitted by the Seller— The Seller shall provide a statement, executed by a duly authorized representative of the Seller, of all liability insurance coverage applicable to third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when the Seller’s Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology has been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act, including:

- (i) Names of insurance companies, policy numbers, and expiration dates;
- (ii) A description of the types and nature of such insurance (including the extent to which the Seller is self-insured or intends to self-insure);
- (iii) Dollar limits per occurrence and annually of such insurance, including any applicable sublimits;
- (iv) Deductibles or self-insured retentions, if any, that are applicable;
- (v) Any relevant exclusions from coverage under such policies;
- (vi) The price for such insurance, if available, and the per-unit amount or percentage of such price directly related to liability coverage for the Seller’s Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology deployed in defense against or response or recovery from an act of terror;
- (vii) Where applicable, whether the liability insurance, in addition to the Seller, protects contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller and contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the customer to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use or operation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from an act of terrorism;

(viii) Any limitations on such liability insurance; and

(ix) In the case of a Seller seeking approval to self-insure, all of the information described in Section 28.308(a)(1)-(10) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(g) Seller's Continuing Obligation—The Seller must notify the Under Secretary of any changes in types or amounts of liability insurance coverage for any Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology.

(h) Under Secretary's Certification—For each Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology, the Under Secretary shall certify the amount of insurance required under Section 864 of the Act. The Under Secretary shall include the certification under this section as a part of the applicable Designation. The certification may specify a period of time for which the certification will apply. The Seller of a Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology may at any time petition the Under Secretary for a revision or termination of the certification under this section. The Under Secretary or his designee may at any time request information from the Seller regarding the insurance maintained by the Seller or the amount of insurance available to the Seller.

101.5 Procedures for Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies

(a) Application Procedure- Any Seller seeking a Designation shall submit all information supporting such request to the Assistant Secretary for Plans, Programs, and Budget of the Department of Homeland Security Directorate of Science and Technology,

- A reduction of plaintiffs’ recovery by amounts that plaintiffs received from “collateral sources,” such as insurance benefits or other government benefits (§ 863(c)); and
- A rebuttable presumption that the Seller is entitled to the “government contractor defense” (§ 863(d)).

The Act provides that these liability protections are conferred by two separate actions by the Secretary. The Secretary’s designation of a technology as a “qualified anti-terrorism technology” confers all of the liability protections except the rebuttable presumption in favor of the government contractor defense. The presumption in favor of the government contractor defense requires an additional “approval” by the Secretary under § 863(d) of the Act. In many cases, however, the designation and the approval can be conferred simultaneously.

This preamble to the Proposed Rule first addresses the two major aspects of the Act – the designation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies and the approval of technologies for purposes of the government contractor defense. Following that discussion, the preamble addresses specific issues regarding the Proposed Rule and the Department’s interpretation of the Act.

Designation of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technologies

As noted above, the designation of a technology as a qualified anti-terrorism technology confers all of the liability protections provided in the Act, except for the presumption in favor of the government contractor defense. The Act gives the Secretary broad discretion in determining whether to designate a particular technology as a or such other official of such Directorate as may be designated from time to time by the Under Secretary (“the Assistant Secretary”). The Under Secretary shall make application forms available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____.

(b) Initial Notification- Within 30 days after receipt of an Application for a Designation, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee shall notify the applicant in writing that (i) the Application is complete and will be reviewed, or (ii) that the Application is incomplete, in which case the missing or incomplete parts will be specified.

(c) Review Process- The Assistant Secretary or his or her designee will review each complete Application and any included supporting materials. In performing this function, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee may, but is not required to:

- (i) request additional information from the Seller;
- (ii) meet with representatives of the Seller;
- (iii) consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other federal or nonfederal entity;
- (iv) perform studies or analyses of the technology or the insurance market for such technology; and
- (v) seek information from insurers regarding the availability of insurance for such technology.

(d) Recommendation of the Assistant Secretary- Within 90 days after receipt of a complete Application for a Designation, the Assistant Secretary shall make one of the following recommendations to the Under Secretary regarding such Application: (i) that the Application be approved and a Designation be issued to the Seller; (ii) that the Seller be notified that the technology is potentially eligible for a Designation, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) that the Application be denied. If approval is recommended, the recommendation shall include a recommendation regarding the certification required by Section 101.4 of this Part. The Assistant Secretary may extend the time period beyond 90 days upon notice to the Seller; the Assistant Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension.

(e) Discretionary Notice of Recommendation- The Assistant Secretary may provide notice to the Seller of his recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of the Seller's Application. In no event is the Assistant Secretary required to provide such notice or opportunity to provide additional information.

(f) Action by the Under Secretary- Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation from the Assistant Secretary pursuant to paragraph (d) of this Section, the Under Secretary shall take one of the following actions: (i) approve the Application and issue an appropriate Designation to the Seller, which shall include the certification required by Section 101.4 of this Part; (ii) notify the Seller in writing that the technology is potentially eligible for a Designation, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) deny the Application, and notify the Seller in writing of such decision. The Under Secretary may extend the time period beyond 30 days upon notice to the Seller; the Under Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension. The Under Secretary's decision shall be final and not subject to review, except at the discretion of the Under Secretary.

(g) Term of Designation; Renewal- A Designation shall be valid and effective for a term of five to eight years (as determined by the Under Secretary based upon the technology) commencing on the date of issuance, and the protections conferred by the Designation shall continue in full force and effect indefinitely, after the expiration of the Designation, to all sales of qualified anti-terrorism technologies covered by the Designation that were consummated during such term. At any time after the third anniversary of such issuance, the Seller may apply for renewal of the Designation. The Under Secretary shall make the application form for renewals available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____.

(h) Transfer of Designation- Any Designation may be transferred and assigned to any other person or entity to which the Seller transfers and assigns all right, title, and interest in and to the technology covered by the Designation, including the intellectual property rights therein (or, if the Seller is a licensee of the technology, to any person or entity to which such Seller transfers all of its right, title, and interest in and to the applicable license agreement). Such transfer and assignment of a Designation will not be effective unless and until (i) the Under Secretary is notified in writing of the transfer using the “Application for Transfer of Designation” form issued by the Under Secretary (the Under Secretary shall make this application form available at www.dhs.gov, or by mail by written request sent to _____), and (ii) the transferee complies with all applicable provisions of the SAFETY Act, this Part, and the relevant Designation as if the transferee were the Seller. Upon the effectiveness of such transfer and assignment, the transferee will be deemed to be a Seller in the place and stead of the transferor with respect to the applicable technology for all purposes under the SAFETY Act, this Part, and the transferred Designation. The transferred Designation will continue to apply to the transferor with respect to all transactions and occurrences that occurred through the time at which the transfer and assignment of the Designation became effective, as specified in the applicable Application for Transfer of Designation.

(i) Application of Designation to Licensees- Any Designation shall apply to any other person or entity to which the Seller licenses (exclusively or nonexclusively) the right to manufacture and sell the technology, in the same manner and to the same extent that such Designation applies to the Seller, effective as of the date of commencement of the license, provided that the Seller notifies the Under Secretary of such license by submitting, within 30 days after such date of commencement, a “Notice of License of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____ . Such notification shall not be required for any licensee listed as a Seller on the applicable Designation.

(j) Termination of Designation Resulting from Substantial Modification- A Designation shall terminate automatically, and have no further force or effect, if the designated Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology is significantly changed or modified in design, components, or method of manufacture. A change or modification in the technology that could significantly affect the safety or effectiveness of the device (e.g., a significant change or modification in design, material, chemical composition, energy source, or manufacturing process) constitutes a significant change or modification. If a Seller is planning a significant change or modification to a designated technology as defined above, such Seller may apply for a corresponding modification of the applicable

Designation in advance of the implementation of such modification. Application for such a modification must be made using the “Application for Modification of Designation” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this application form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to

101.6 Government Contractor Defense.

The Under Secretary may certify a qualified anti-terrorism technology as an Approved Product for Homeland Security for purposes of establishing a rebuttable presumption of the applicability of the government contractor defense. In determining whether to grant such certification, the Under Secretary or his or her designee shall conduct a comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended. The Seller shall provide safety and hazard analyses and other relevant data and information regarding such technology to the Department in connection with an application. The Under Secretary or his designee may require that the Seller submit any information that the Under Secretary or his designee considers relevant to the application for approval. The Under Secretary or his designee may consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other governmental or non-governmental person or entity, and may consider test results produced by an independent laboratory or other person or entity engaged by the Seller.

101.7 Procedures for Certification of Approved Products for Homeland Security

(a) Application Procedure- A Seller seeking certification of anti-terrorism technology as an Approved Product for Homeland Security under Section 101.6 (a “Certification”) shall submit all information supporting such request to the Assistant Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make application forms available at www.dhs.gov, and copies may also be obtained by mail by sending a request to _____.

An Application for a Certification may not be filed unless the Seller has also filed an Application for Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology for the same technology. The two applications may be filed simultaneously and may be reviewed simultaneously.

(b) Initial Notification- Within 30 days after receipt of an Application for a Certification, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee shall notify the applicant in writing that (i) the Application is complete and will be reviewed, or (ii) that the Application is incomplete, in which case the missing or incomplete parts will be specified.

(c) Review Process- The Assistant Secretary or his or her designee will review each complete Application for a Certification and any included supporting materials. In performing this function, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee may, but is not required to:

- (i) request additional information from the Seller;
- (ii) meet with representatives of the Seller;
- (iii) consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other federal or nonfederal entity; and
- (iv) perform or seek studies or analyses of the technology.

(d) Recommendation of the Assistant Secretary- Within 90 days after receipt of a complete Application for a Certification, the Assistant Secretary shall make one of the following recommendations to the Under Secretary regarding such Application: (i) that the Application be approved and a Certification be issued to the Seller; (ii) that the Seller be notified that the technology is potentially eligible for a Certification, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) that the Application be denied. The Assistant Secretary may extend the time period beyond 90 days upon notice to the Seller; the Assistant Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension.

(e) Discretionary Notice of Recommendation- The Assistant Secretary may provide notice to the Seller of his or her recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of the Seller's Application. In no event is the Assistant Secretary required to provide such notice or opportunity to provide additional information.

(f) Action by the Under Secretary- Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation from the Assistant Secretary pursuant to paragraph (d) of this Section, the Under Secretary shall take one of the following actions: (i) approve the Application and issue an appropriate Certification to the Seller; (ii) notify the Seller in writing that the technology is potentially eligible for a Certification, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) deny the Application, and notify the Seller in writing of such decision. The Under Secretary may extend the time period beyond 30 days upon notice to the Seller, and the Under Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension. The Under Secretary's decision shall be final and not subject to review, except at the discretion of the Under Secretary.

(g) Designation is a Pre-Condition- The Under Secretary may approve an Application for a Certification only if the Under Secretary has also approved an Application for a Designation for the same technology under Section 101.3.

(h) Term of Certification; Renewal- A Certification shall be valid and effective for the same period of time for which the related Designation is issued, and shall terminate upon the termination of such related Designation. The Seller may apply for renewal of the Certification in connection with an application for renewal of the related Designation. An application for renewal must be made using the “Application for Certification of an Approved Product for Homeland Security” form issued by the Under Secretary.

(i) Application of Certification to Licensees- Any Certification shall apply to any other person or entity to which the Seller licenses (exclusively or nonexclusively) the right to manufacture and sell the technology, in the same manner and to the same extent that such Certification applies to the Seller, effective as of the date of commencement of the license, provided that the Seller notifies the Under Secretary of such license by submitting, within 30 days after such date of commencement, a “Notice of License of Approved Anti-Terrorism Technology” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____ . Such notification shall not be required for any licensee listed as a Seller on the applicable Certification.

(j) Transfer of Certification- In the event of any permitted transfer and assignment of a Designation, any related Certification for the same anti-terrorism technology shall automatically be deemed to be transferred and assigned to the same transferee to which such Designation is transferred and assigned. The transferred Certification will continue to apply to the transferor with respect to all transactions and occurrences that occurred through the time at which such transfer and assignment of the Certification became effective.

(k) Issuance of Certificate; Approved Product List- For anti-terrorism technology reviewed and approved by the Under Secretary and for which a Certification is issued, the Under Secretary shall issue a certificate of conformance to the Seller and place the anti-terrorism technology on an Approved Product List for Homeland Security.

101.8 Confidentiality/Protection of Intellectual Property

The Secretary, in consultation with the Office of Management and Budget and appropriate Federal law enforcement and intelligence officials, and in a manner consistent with existing protections for sensitive or classified information, shall establish confidentiality protocols for maintenance and use of information submitted to the Department under the SAFETY Act and this Part. Such protocols shall, among other things, ensure that the Department will utilize all appropriate exemptions from the Freedom of Information Act.

101.9 Definitions

(1) ASSISTANT SECRETARY– The term “Assistant Secretary” means the Assistant Secretary for Plans, Programs, and Budget of the Department of Homeland Security Directorate of Science and Technology, or such other official of such Directorate as may be designated from time to time by the Under Secretary.

(2) CERTIFICATION– The term “Certification” means a certification that a qualified anti-terrorism technology for which a Designation has been issued will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller’s specifications, and is safe for use as intended.

(3) CONTRACTOR– The term “contractor” of a Seller means any person or entity with whom or with which the Seller has entered into a contract relating to the manufacture, sale, use, or operation of anti-terrorism technology for which a Designation is issued (regardless of whether such contract is entered into before or after the issuance of such Designation), including, without limitation, an independent laboratory or other entity engaged in testing or verifying the safety, utility, performance, effectiveness of such technology, or the conformity of such technology to the Seller’s specifications.

(4) DESIGNATION– The term “Designation” means a designation of a qualified anti-terrorism technology under the SAFETY Act issued by the Under Secretary under authority delegated by the Secretary of Homeland Security.

(5) LOSS– The term 'loss' means death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, including business interruption loss (which is a component of loss of or damage to property).

(6) PHYSICAL HARM– The term 'physical harm' as used in the Act shall mean a physical injury to the body that caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement. In no event shall physical harm include mental pain, anguish, or suffering, or fear of injury.

(7) SAFETY ACT or ACT– The term “SAFETY Act” or “Act” means the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002, enacted as Subtitle G of Title VIII of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107-296.

(8) SELLER– The term “Seller” means any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides anti-terrorism technology to Federal and non-Federal Government customers for

“qualified anti-terrorism technology,” although the Act sets forth the following criteria that must be considered to the extent that they are applicable to the technology: (1) prior United States Government use or demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness; (2) availability of the technology for immediate deployment; (3) the potential liability of the Seller; (4) the likelihood that the technology will not be deployed unless the SAFETY Act protections are conferred; (5) the risk to the public if the technology is not deployed; (6) evaluation of scientific studies; and (7) the effectiveness of the technology in defending against acts of terrorism. These criteria are not exclusive – the Secretary may consider other factors that he deems appropriate. The Secretary has discretion to give greater weight to some factors over others, and the relative weighting of the various criteria may vary based upon the particular technology at issue and the threats that the technology is designed to address. The Secretary may, in his discretion, determine that failure to meet a particular criterion justifies denial of an application under the SAFETY Act. However, the Secretary is not required to reject an application that fails to meet one or more of the criteria. Rather the Secretary, after considering all of the relevant criteria, may conclude that a particular technology merits designation as a “qualified anti-terrorism technology” even if a particular criterion is not satisfied. The Secretary’s considerations will also vary with the constantly evolving threats and conditions that give rise to the need for the technologies.

The SAFETY Act applies to a very broad range of technologies, including products, services, software, and other forms of intellectual property, as long as the Secretary, as an exercise of discretion and judgment, determines that a technology merits designation under the statutory criteria. Further, as the statutory criteria suggest, a which a Designation has been issued under this Part (unless the context requires otherwise).

(9) UNDER SECRETARY– The term “Under Secretary” means the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security.

“qualified anti-terrorism technology” is not necessarily required to be newly developed – it may have already been employed (e.g. “prior United States Government use”) or may be a new application of an existing technology.

The Act also provides that, before designating a “qualified anti-terrorism technology,” the Secretary will examine the amount of liability insurance the Seller of the technology proposes to maintain for coverage of the technology at issue. Under Section 864(a), the Secretary must certify that the coverage level is appropriate “to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed.” § 864(a)(1). The Act further provides that “the Seller is not required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available in the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller’s anti-terrorism technologies.” § 864(a)(2).

The Secretary does not intend to set a “one-size-fits all” numerical requirement regarding required insurance coverage for all technologies. Instead, as the Act suggests, the inquiry will be specific to each application and may involve an examination of several factors, including the following: the amount of insurance the Seller has previously maintained; the amount of insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller’s business as a whole; the amount of insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies; data and history regarding mass casualty losses; and the particular technology at issue. The Secretary will not require insurance beyond the point at which the cost of coverage would “unreasonably distort” the price of the technology. Once the Secretary concludes the analysis regarding the appropriate level of insurance coverage (which might include discussions with the Seller in appropriate cases), the Secretary will identify in a short certification a description of the coverage appropriate for the particular qualified anti-terrorism technology. If, during the term of the designation, the Seller would like to request reconsideration of that insurance certification due to changed circumstances or for other reasons, the Seller may do so. If the Seller fails to maintain coverage at the certified level during that time period, the liability protections of the Act will continue to apply, but the Seller's liability limit will remain at the certified insurance level. Such failure, however, will be regarded as a negative factor in the consideration of any future application by the Seller for renewal of the applicable designation, and perhaps in any other application by the Seller.

Government Contractor Defense

The Act creates a rebuttable presumption that the government contractor defense applies to qualified anti-terrorism technologies "approved by the Secretary" in accordance with certain criteria specified in § 863(d)(2). The government contractor defense is an affirmative defense that immunizes Sellers from liability for certain claims brought under § 863(a) of the Act. See § 863(d)(1). The presumption of this defense applies to all "approved" qualified anti-terrorism technologies for claims brought in a "product liability or other lawsuit" and "arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies . . . have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." Id. While the government contractor defense is a judicially-created doctrine, Section 863's express terms supplant many of the requirements in the case law for application of the defense.

First, and most obviously, the Act expressly provides that the government contractor defense is available not only to government contractors, but also to sales to state and local governments and the private sector. See § 863(d)(1) (“This presumption of the government contractor defense shall apply regardless of whether the claim against the Seller arises from a sale of the product to Federal Government or non-Federal Government customers.”).

Second, Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies need not design their technologies to federal government specifications in order to obtain the government contractor defense under the SAFETY Act. Instead, the Act sets forth criteria for the Department's “approval” of technologies. Specifically, the Act provides that during the process of approval for the government contractor defense the Secretary will conduct a “comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended.” § 863(d)(2). The Act also provides that the Seller will “conduct safety and hazard analyses” and supply such information to the Secretary. Id. This express statutory framework thus governs in lieu of the requirements developed in case law for the application of the government contractor defense.

Third, the Act expressly states the limited circumstances in which the applicability of the defense can be rebutted. The Act provides expressly that the presumption can be overcome only by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology. See § 863(d)(1) (“This presumption shall only be overcome by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology under this subsection.”).

The applicability of the government contractor defense to particular technologies is thus governed by these express provisions of the Act, rather than by the judicially-developed criteria for applicability of the government contractor defense outside the context of the SAFETY Act.

While the Act does not expressly delineate the scope of the defense (i.e., the types of claims that the defense bars), the Act and the legislative history make clear that the scope is broad. For example, it is clear that any Seller of an “approved” technology cannot be held liable under the Act for design defects or failure to warn claims, unless the presumption of the defense is rebutted by evidence that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology.

The government contractor defense under Boyle and its progeny bars a broad range of claims. The Supreme Court in Boyle concluded that “state law which holds Government contractors liable for design defects” can present a significant conflict with federal policy (including the discretionary function exception to the Federal Tort Claims Act) and therefore “must be displaced.” Boyle v. United Technologies Corp., 487 U.S. 500, 512 (1988). The Department believes that Congress incorporated the Supreme Court's Boyle line of cases as it existed on the date of enactment of the SAFETY Act, rather than incorporating future developments of the government contractor defense in

Attached are draft regulations (please do not forward these outside the Administration) that DHS is about to send over to OIRA for clearance. These regulations would implement the SAFETY Act, which provides liability protections for anti-terrorism technologies that are designated or approved by DHS for SAFETY Act coverage. These regs largely track the statute. This is just a proposed rule w/ a short comment period, but DHS will begin accepting applications for coverage even before DHS issues a final rule. OIRA will clear this very quickly b/c they have already had a chance to review this informally. This could get some attention because the SAFETY Act contained significant tort reform measures. Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns. Thanks.

Action: Notice of Proposed Rulemaking

SUMMARY: This Proposed Rule would implement Subtitle G of Title VIII of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 – the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002 (“the SAFETY Act” or “the Act”). As discussed in detail below, the SAFETY Act, through regulations promulgated by the Department, will provide critical incentives for the development and deployment of anti-terrorism technologies by providing liability protections for Sellers of “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” and others.

DATES: Comments in response to this notice are due by [insert date of 30 days from publication in the Federal Register].

ADDRESSES: Comments on this Proposed Rule should be submitted by e-mail to: _____@dhs.gov, or by facsimile to _____. Comments may also be mailed to _____. The Department encourages commenters to submit their comments by e-mail or facsimile. Comments received are public records. the courts. Indeed, it is hard to imagine that Congress would have intended a statute designed to provide certainty and protection to Sellers of anti-terrorism technologies to be subject to future developments of a judicially-created doctrine. In fact, there is evidence that Congress rejected such a construction. See, e.g., 148 Cong. Rec. E2080 (November 13, 2001) (statement of Rep. Armev)("[Companies] will have a government contractor defense as is commonplace in existing law.") (emphasis added).

Procedurally, the presumption of applicability of the government contractor defense is conferred by the Secretary's "approval" of a qualified anti-terrorism technology specifically for the purposes of the government contractor defense. This approval is a separate act from the Secretary's "designation" of a qualified anti-terrorism technology. Importantly, the Seller may submit applications for both designation as a qualified anti-terrorism technology and approval for purposes of the government contractor defense at the same time, and the Secretary may review and act upon both applications simultaneously. The distinction between the Secretary's two actions is important, however, because the approval process for the government contractor defense includes a level of review that is not required for the designation of a qualified anti-terrorism technology. Specifically, the Act provides that during the process of approval for the government contractor defense the Secretary will conduct a "comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended." § 863(d)(2). The Department believes that certain Sellers will be able to obtain the protections that come with designation as a qualified anti-terrorism technology even if they have not satisfied the requirements for the government contractor defense.

Similarly, even if the applicability of the government contractor defense were rebutted under the test set forth in Section 863(d)(1) of the Act, the technology may still retain the designation and protections as a qualified anti-terrorism technology.

Specific Issues Regarding the Act and this Rule

1. Definition of Anti-Terrorism Technologies. The Department recognizes that the universe of technologies that can be deployed against terrorism includes far more than physical products. Rather, the defense of the homeland will require deployment of a broad range of technologies that includes services, software, and other forms of intellectual property. Thus, consistent with Section 865 of the Act, Section 101.3(a) of the proposed rule defines qualified anti-terrorism technologies very broadly to include “any products, equipment, service (including support services), device, or technology (including information technology)” that the Secretary, as an exercise of discretion and judgment, determines to merit designation under the statutory criteria.

2. Development of New Technologies. The Act’s success depends not only upon encouraging Sellers to provide existing anti-terrorism technologies, but also upon encouraging Sellers to develop new and innovative technologies to respond to the ever-changing threats to the American people. The proposed rule is thus designed to allow the Department to assist would-be Sellers during the invention, design, and manufacturing phases in two important respects. First, Section 101.3(h) of the proposal makes clear that the Department, within its discretion and where feasible, may provide feedback to manufacturers regarding whether proposed or developing anti-terrorism technologies might meet the qualification factors under the Act. To be sure, the Department cannot provide advance certification, as some of the factors for the Secretary's consideration cannot be addressed in advance. The Department may, however, provide feedback regarding other factors, with the goal of giving potential Sellers some understanding of whether it might be advantageous to proceed with further development of the technology. Departmental feedback at the design, prototyping, or testing stage of development, to the extent feasible, may provide manufacturers with added incentive to commence and/or complete production of cutting-edge anti-terrorism technology that otherwise might not be produced or deployed in the absence of the risk and litigation management protections in the Act. The Department will perform these consultations with potential Sellers in a manner consistent with the protection of intellectual property and trade secrets, as discussed below.

Second, Section 101.3(g) of the proposal recognizes that Federal agencies will often be the purchasers of anti-terrorism technologies. The Department recognizes that terms on which Sellers are able to provide anti-terrorism technologies to Federal agencies may vary depending on whether the technologies receive SAFETY Act coverage or not. The proposal thus provides that the Department may coordinate SAFETY Act reviews with agency procurements. The Department also intends to review SAFETY Act applications relating to technologies that are the subject of agency procurements on an expedited basis.

The Department requests public comments regarding the best way for the Department to provide feedback to potential Sellers regarding SAFETY Act coverage and the best way for the Department to coordinate SAFETY Act review with an agency procurement.

3. Protection of Intellectual Property and Trade Secrets. The Department believes that successful implementation of the Act requires that applicants' intellectual property interests and trade secrets remain protected in the application process and beyond. Toward that end, the Department will create an application and review process in which the Department maintains the confidentiality of an applicant's proprietary information. The Department notes that laws mandating disclosure of information submitted to the government generally contain exclusions or exceptions for such information. The Freedom of Information Act, for instance, provides specific exceptions for proprietary information submitted to federal agencies. The Department seeks further input on this issue.

4. Evaluation of Scientific Studies; Consultation with Scientific and Technical Experts. Section 862(b)(6) of the Act provides that, as one of many factors in determining whether to designate a particular technology under the Act, the Secretary shall consider evaluation of all scientific studies "that can be feasibly conducted" in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce the risks of harm. An important part of this provision is that it contemplates review only of such studies as can "feasibly" be conducted. The Department believes that the need to protect the American public by facilitating the manufacture and marketing of anti-terrorism technologies might render it infeasible to defer a designation decision until after every conceivable scientific study is completed. In many cases, existing information (whether based on scientific studies, experience with the technology or a related technology, or other factors) might enable the Secretary to perform an appropriate assessment of the capability of the technology to reduce risks of harm. In other cases, even where less information is available about the capability of a technology to reduce risks of harm, the public interest in making the technology available as soon as practicable may render it infeasible to await the conduct of further scientific studies on that issue. In considering whether or to what extent it is feasible to defer a designation decision until additional scientific studies can be conducted, the Department will bring to bear its expertise concerning the protection of the American homeland and will consider the urgency of the need for the technology and other relevant factors and circumstances.

5. "Exclusive Federal Jurisdiction" and "Scope" of Insurance Coverage under § 864(a)(3). The Act creates an exclusive Federal cause of action "for any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." § 863(a)(2); see also § 863(a)(1). This exclusive "Federal cause of action shall be brought only for claims for injuries that are proximately caused by Sellers that provide qualified anti-terrorism technology." § 863(a)(1). The best reading of § 863(a), and the reading the Department is inclined to adopt, is that (1) only one Federal cause of action exists for loss of property, personal injury, or death when a claim relates to performance or non-performance of the Seller's qualified and deployed anti-terrorism technology, and (2) such cause of action may be brought only against the Seller.

The exclusive Federal nature of this cause of action is evidenced in large part by the exclusive jurisdiction provision in § 863(a)(2). That subsection states: "Such appropriate district court of the United States shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim for loss of property, personal injury or death arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." Id. Any presumption of concurrent causes of action (between State and Federal law) is overcome by two basic points. First, Congress would not have created in this Act a Federal cause of action to complement State law causes of action. Not only is the substantive law for decision in the Federal action derived from State law (and thus would be surplusage), but in creating the Act Congress plainly intended to limit rather than increase the liability exposure of Sellers. Second, the granting of exclusive jurisdiction to the Federal district courts provides further evidence that Congress wanted an exclusive Federal cause of action. Indeed, a Federal district court (in the absence of diversity) does not have jurisdiction over state law claims, and the statute makes no mention of diversity claims anywhere in the Act.

Further, it is clear that the Seller is the only appropriate defendant in this exclusive Federal cause of action. First and foremost, the Act unequivocally states that a "cause of action shall be brought only for claims for injuries that are proximately caused by sellers that provide qualified anti-terrorism technology." § 863(a)(1) (emphasis added). Second, if the Seller of the qualified anti-terrorism technology at issue was not the only defendant, would-be plaintiffs could, in an effort to circumvent the statute, bring claims (arising out of or relating to the performance or non-performance of the Seller's qualified anti-terrorism technology) against arguably less culpable persons or entities, including but not limited to contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers of the Seller of the technology. Because the claims in the cause of action would be predicated on the performance or non-performance of the Seller's qualified anti-terrorism technology, those persons or entities, in turn, would file a third-party action against the Seller. In such situations, the claims against non-Sellers thus “may result in loss to the Seller” under § 863(a)(2). The Department believes Congress did not intend through the Act to increase rather than decrease the amount of litigation arising out of or related to the deployment of qualified anti-terrorism technology. The scope of federal preemption of state laws is highly relevant to the Department’s implementation of the Act, as the Department will have to determine the amount of insurance that Sellers must obtain. Accordingly, the Department seeks comment on that matter.

6. Amount of Insurance. The Act requires that Sellers obtain liability insurance “of such types and in such amounts” certified by the Secretary “to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed.” § 864(a)(1). However, the Act makes clear that Sellers are not required to obtain liability insurance beyond “the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller’s anti-terrorism technologies.” § 864(a)(2).

As explained above, the Department eschews any “one-size-fits all” approach to the insurance coverage requirement. Instead, the Department construes the Act as contemplating the examination of several factors. Section 101.4(b) of the proposed rule therefore sets forth a nonexclusive list of several factors that the Department may consider. These include the amount of insurance the Seller has previously maintained; the amount of insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller’s business as a whole; the amount of insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies; data and history regarding mass casualty losses; information regarding the amount of liability insurance offered on the world market; the particular technology at issue and its intended use; and the point at which the cost of coverage would “unreasonably distort” the price of the technology. The proposed rule also provides that the Secretary may consider the amount of terrorism-related liability insurance that insurance companies are required to provide under the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 (“TRIA”). This amount is relevant because Congress mandated the provision of certain amounts of insurance under TRIA in response to the unwillingness or inability of insurers to provide sufficient liability coverage for terrorism-related events. See TRIA § 101(a), (b) (statement of findings and purpose). While it is possible in some cases that insurers will provide more than the amount of insurance required under TRIA, it may be appropriate in many instances for the Secretary to presume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a Seller need not purchase liability insurance coverage for terrorism-related claims in an amount greater than that required to be offered under TRIA.

In the course of determining the amount of insurance required under the Act for a particular technology, the Department may consult with the Seller, the Seller’s insurer, and others. While the decision regarding the amount of insurance required will generally be specific to each Seller or each technology, the Department recognizes that the incentive-based purposes of the Act may be furthered if the Department provides information to potential Sellers regarding the types and amounts of insurance that they will likely be required to obtain. Thus the Secretary may, where appropriate, give guidance to potential Sellers regarding the type and amounts of insurance that may be sufficient under the Act for particular technologies or categories of technologies.

The Department also recognizes that the amount of insurance available at prices that will not unreasonably distort the price of the anti-terrorism technology may vary over time. Thus, the proposed rule is written to give the Department flexibility to address fluctuating insurance prices by providing that, during the term of the designation, the Seller may request reconsideration of the insurance certification due to changed circumstances or other reasons.

The Department believes that if the Seller fails to maintain coverage at the certified level during the effective period of the certification, the liability protections of the Act will continue to apply, but the Seller's liability limit will remain at the certified insurance level. This is because subsection (c) of Section 864 makes clear that the Seller's liability is capped at the amount of insurance "required" to be maintained under Section 864, rather than the amount of coverage actually obtained. The limitation of liability thus relates entirely to the amount of insurance required and makes no reference to whether such insurance is, in fact, maintained by the Seller.

It is also apparent that the technology is not stripped of any of the other protections of the SAFETY Act if the Seller fails to maintain the requisite insurance. The Act requires that Sellers obtain liability insurance to protect not only the Seller, but also to protect (to the extent specified under § 864(a)(3)) the contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers of the Seller, as well as the contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer. § 864(a)(3). It would be unjust to deprive all others covered by the SAFETY Act of their SAFETY Act protections because of the Seller's malfeasance. Of course, this does not mean that there are no consequences to a Seller's failure to maintain the required insurance. Rather, in addition to exposing the Seller to uninsured liability up to the amount of insurance that the Seller was required to maintain, the Seller's failure to maintain the insurance may adversely affect the Seller's ability to obtain a renewal of the designation for the technology, and may even adversely affect the Seller's ability to obtain future designations of "qualified anti-terrorism technologies."

The Department, as part of each certification, will specify the Seller or Sellers of the anti-terrorism technology for purposes of SAFETY Act coverage. The Department may, but need not, specify in the certification the others who are covered by the liability insurance required to be purchased by the Seller.

The Department recognizes that Congress intended that the SAFETY Act's liability protections would substantially reduce the need for the United States to provide indemnification under Public Law 85-804 to Sellers of anti-terrorism technology. The strong liability protections of the SAFETY Act should, in most circumstances, make it unnecessary to provide indemnification to Sellers. The Department recognizes, however, that there might be, in some limited circumstances, technologies or services with respect to which both SAFETY Act coverage and indemnification might be warranted. See 148 Cong. Rec. E2080 (statement by Rep. Arme y) (November 13, 2002) (stating that in some situations the SAFETY Act protections will "complement other government risk-sharing measures that some contractors can use such as Public Law 85-804").

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

INTRODUCTION

The Department intends to implement the SAFETY Act as quickly as possible.

Our twin aims are these:

- (1) To produce by regulation as much certainty as possible regarding the application of the liability protections created by the Act;
- (2) To provide the Department with sufficient program flexibility to address the specific circumstances of each particular request for SAFETY Act coverage.

The Department does not intend to resolve every conceivable programmatic issue through this proposed rule. Instead, the Department will set out a basic set of regulations and commence the implementation of the SAFETY Act program while considering possible supplemental regulations as experience with the Act grows.

The Department invites comment on all aspects of these proposed regulations and on the policies that underlie them. The initial comment period is relatively brief (30 days) in order to permit the Department to begin implementation of this critical program as soon as possible. After reviewing the comments, the Department may issue an interim final rule and seek additional comment on some or all aspects of the program. In any event, the Department will begin implementation of the SAFETY Act immediately with regard to Federal acquisitions of anti-terrorism technologies and will begin accepting other SAFETY Act applications on July 15, 2003.

BACKGROUND

In recognition of this close relationship between the SAFETY Act and indemnification authority, in Section 73 of Executive Order 13286 of February 28, 2003, the President recently amended the existing Executive Order on indemnification-- Executive Order 10789 of November 14, 1958, as amended. The amendment granted the Department of Homeland Security authority to indemnify under Public Law 85-804. At the same time, it requires that all agencies – not just the Department of Homeland Security – follow certain procedures to ensure that the potential applicability of the SAFETY Act is considered before any indemnification is granted for an anti-terrorism technology. Specifically, the amendment provides that federal agencies cannot provide indemnification “with respect to any matter that has been, or could be, designated by the Secretary of Homeland Security as a qualified anti-terrorism technology” unless the Secretary of Homeland Security has advised whether SAFETY Act coverage would be appropriate and the Director of the Office and Management and Budget has approved the exercise of indemnification authority. The amendment includes an exception for the Department of Defense where the Secretary of Defense has determined that indemnification is “necessary for the timely and effective conduct of United States military or intelligence activities.”

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Executive Order 12866 – Regulatory Planning and Review

DHS has examined the economic implications of this proposed rule as required by Executive Order 12866. Executive Order 12866 directs agencies to assess all costs and benefits of available regulatory alternatives and, when regulation is necessary, to select regulatory approaches that maximize net benefits (including potential economic, environmental, public health and safety, and other advantages; distributive impacts; and equity). Executive Order 12866 classifies a rule as significant if it meets any one of a number of specified conditions, including: having an annual effect on the economy of $100 million, adversely affecting a sector of the economy in a material way, adversely affecting competition, or adversely affecting jobs. A regulation is also considered a significant regulatory action if it raises novel legal or policy issues.

DHS concludes that this proposed rule is a significant regulatory action under the Executive Order because it will have a positive, material effect on public safety under Section 3(f)(1), and it raises novel legal and policy issues under Section 3(f)(4). DHS tentatively concludes, however, that this proposed rule does not meet the significance threshold of $100 million effect on the economy in any one year under Section 3(f)(1), due to the relatively low estimated burden of applying for this technology program, the unknown number of certifications and designations that the Department will dispense, and the unknown probability of a terrorist attack that would have to occur in order for the protections put in place in this proposed rule to have a large impact on the public. The agency requests comments regarding this determination, and invites commenters to submit any relevant data that will assist the agency in estimating the impact of this rule.

Need for the Regulation and Market Failure

This regulation implements the SAFETY Act and is intended to implement the provisions set forth in that Act. DHS believes the current development of anti-terrorism technologies has been slowed due to the potential liability risks associated with their development and eventual deployment. In a fully functioning insurance market, technology developers would be able to insure themselves against excessive liability risk; however, the terrorism risk insurance market appears to be in disequilibrium. The attacks of September 11 fundamentally changed the landscape of terrorism insurance. Congress, in the findings of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (TRIA) of 2002, concluded that temporary financial assistance in the insurance market is needed to “allow for a transition period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses.” This rulemaking addresses a similar concern, to the extent that potential technology developers are unable to efficiently insure against large losses due to an ongoing reassessment of terrorism issues in insurance markets.

Even after a temporary insurance market adjustment, purely private terrorism risk insurance markets may exhibit negative externalities. Because the risk pool of any single insurer may not be large enough to efficiently spread and therefore insure against the risk of damages from a terrorist attack, and because the potential for excessive liability may render any terrorism insurance prohibitively expensive, society may suffer from less than optimal technological protection against terrorist attacks. The measures set forth in this proposed rule are designed to meet this goal; they will provide certain liability protection from lawsuits and consequently will increase the likelihood that businesses will pursue important technologies that may not be pursued without this protection.

Costs and Benefits to Technology Development Firms

Since this rulemaking puts in place an additional voluntary option for technology developers, the expected direct net benefits to firms of this rulemaking will be positive; companies presumably will not choose to pursue the designation of “anti-terrorism technology” unless they believe it to be a profitable endeavor. DHS cannot predict with certainty the number of applicants for this program. An additional source of uncertainty is the reaction of the insurance market to this designation. As mentioned above, insurance markets appear to currently be adjusting their strategy for terrorism risk, so little market information exists that would inform this estimate. DHS invites comments on these issues.

Given that a firm chooses to invest effort in pursuing SAFETY Act liability protection, the direct costs will be the time and money required to submit the required paperwork and other information to DHS. Only companies that choose to request this protection will incur costs. In the preliminary Paperwork Reduction Act analysis, we estimate the reporting burden assuming that each applicant will spend at least 40 hours, and perhaps 200 hours, to prepare the information required by DHS for consideration. For the purposes of this analysis, we assume a loaded labor rate of the personnel preparing the information package of $100 per hour. Consequently, the total cost of the application requirements is estimated to be at least $4,000 per application for a relatively simple application. DHS does not yet have sufficient information to estimate the number of applicants annually. If we assume 1,000 applications annually, the total cost of the application requirement is estimated to range from $4,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually (1,000 applicants X 40 to 200 hours X $100 per hour). The regulation further requires that firms conduct safety and hazard analyses and provide them to the Secretary in the course of applying for this designation. We do not have quantified estimates of the impact of this provision, but we expect that much of the safety and hazard analysis activity will already take place in the normal course of technology development, since the safety and hazards of a firm's products are fundamental characteristics. DHS

The direct benefits to firms include lower potential losses from liability for terrorist attacks, and as a consequence a lower burden from liability insurance for this type of technology. In this assessment, we were careful to only consider benefits and costs specifically due to the proposed rulemaking and not costs that would have been incurred by companies absent the proposed rulemaking. The SAFETY Act requires the sellers of the technology to obtain liability insurance “of such types and in such amounts” certified by the Secretary. The entire cost of insurance is not a cost specifically imposed by the proposed rulemaking, as companies in the course of good business practice routinely purchase insurance absent Federal requirements to do so. Any difference in the amount or price of insurance purchased as a result of the SAFETY Act would be a cost or benefit of this rule for firms.

The wording of the SAFETY Act clearly states that sellers are not required to obtain liability insurance beyond the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private liability sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of the seller’s anti-terrorism technologies. We tentatively conclude, however, that this rulemaking will impact both the prices and terms of liability insurance relative to the amount of insurance coverage absent the SAFETY Act. The probable effect of this rule is to lower the quantity of liability coverage needed in order for a firm to protect itself from terrorism liability risks, which would be considered a benefit of this rule to firms. This change will most likely be a shift back in demand that leads to a movement along the supply curve for technology firms already in this market; they probably will buy less liability coverage. This will have the effect of lowering the price per unit of coverage in this market.

DHS also expects, however, that this rulemaking will lead to greater market entry, which will generate surplus for both technology firms and insurers. DHS expects that the mandated amounts of liability coverage in the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 may be the best estimate of the structure of the future terrorism risk insurance market, and as stated in the preamble, the Secretary may presume that firms need not purchase liability insurance for terrorism-related claims in an amount greater than that required to be offered under TRIA. Again, this market is still in development, and DHS solicits comments on exactly how to predict the effect of this rulemaking on technology development.

Costs and Benefits to Insurers

DHS has little information on the future structure of the terrorism risk insurance market, and how this rulemaking will affect that structure. As stated above, this type of intervention could serve to lower the demand for insurance in the current market, thus the static effect on the profitability of insurers is negative. The benefits of the lower insurance burden to technology firms would be considered a cost to insurers; the static changes to insurance coverage would cause a transfer from insurers to technology firms. On the other hand, this type of intervention should serve to increase the surplus of insurers by making some types of insurance products possible that would have been prohibitive to customers or impossible for insurers to design in the absence of this rulemaking. DHS is interested in public comment on any possible negative or positive impacts to insurers caused by the SAFETY Act and this rulemaking, and whether these impacts would result in transfers within this market or an efficiency change not captured by another party. We encourage commenters to be as specific as possible.

Costs and Benefits to the Public

The benefits to the public of this proposed rulemaking are very difficult to put in dollar value terms since its ultimate objective is the development of new technologies that will help prevent or limit the damage from terrorist attacks. It is not possible to even determine whether these technologies could help prevent large or small scale attacks, as the SAFETY Act applies to a vast range of technologies, including products, services, software, and other forms of intellectual property that could have a widespread impact. In qualitative terms, the SAFETY Act removes a great deal of the risk and uncertainty associated with product liability and in the process creates a powerful incentive that will help fuel the development of critically needed anti-terrorism technologies. Additionally, we expect the SAFETY Act to reduce the research and development costs of these technologies.

The tradeoff, however, may be that a greater number of technologies may qualify for this program and be developed that have a lower average effectiveness against terrorist attacks than technologies currently on the market, or technologies that would be developed in the absence of this rulemaking. In the absence of this rulemaking, strong liability discouragement implies that the fewer products that are deployed in support of anti-terrorist efforts would be especially effective. Profit maximizing firms will always choose to develop the technologies with the highest demand first. It is the tentative conclusion of DHS that liability discouragement in this market is too strong or prohibitive, for the reasons mentioned above. DHS tentatively concludes that this rule will have positive net benefits to the public, since it serves to strike a better balance between consumer protection and technological development. DHS welcomes comments informing this tradeoff argument, and public input on whether this rulemaking does strike the correct balance.

Regulatory Flexibility Act

The Regulatory Flexibility Act requires DHS to determine whether this proposed rulemaking will have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities. Although we expect that many of the applicants for SAFETY Act protection are likely to meet the Small Business Administration's criteria for being a small entity, we do not believe this proposed rulemaking will impose a significant financial impact on them. In fact, we believe this proposed rule will be a benefit to technology development businesses, especially small businesses, by presenting them with an attractive, voluntary option of pursuing a potentially profitable investment by reducing the amount of risk and uncertainty of lawsuits associated with developing anti-terrorist technology. The requirements of this proposed rulemaking will only be imposed on such businesses that voluntarily seek the liability protection of the SAFETY Act. If a company does not request that protection, the company will bear no cost.

To the extent that demand for insurance falls, however, insurers may be adversely impacted by this rule. DHS believes that eventual new entry into this market and further opportunities to insure against terrorism risk implies that the long-term impact of this rulemaking on insurers is ambiguous but could very well be positive. We also expect that this rulemaking will affect relatively few firms and relatively few insurers either positively or negatively, as this appears to be a specialized industry. Therefore, we preliminarily certify this notice of proposed rulemaking will not have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities, and we request comments on this certification.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100 million or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. Therefore, no actions were deemed necessary under the provisions of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995

The Department of Homeland Security will submit the following information collection request to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for review in accordance with procedures of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995. The proposed information collection will be published to obtain comments from the public and affected agencies.

DHS will request comments on at least the following four points:

(1) Whether the proposed collection of information is necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the agency, including whether the information will have practical utility;

(2) The accuracy of the agency's estimate of the burden of the proposed collection of information, including the validity of the methodology and assumptions used;

(3) The quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected; and

(4) The burden of the collection of information on those who are to respond, including through the use of appropriate automated, electronic, mechanical, or other technological collection techniques or other forms of information technology, e.g., permitting electronic submission of responses.

(1) Type of Information Collection: New Collection

(2) Title of the Form/Collection: [Application Form for Designation of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology under the SAFETY Act; Application Form for Approval of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology under the SAFETY Act.]

(3) Agency form number and applicable component sponsoring the collection: Form Number: __-001, Directorate of Science and Technology, Department of Homeland Security.

(4) Affected public who will be asked or required to respond, as well as a brief abstract: Primary: Sellers and potential Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technology. Abstract: The Application Form for Designation and/or Approval of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology will be used to provide information to the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security in determining whether Sellers qualify for risk and litigation management protections under the SAFETY Act.

(5) An estimate of the total number of respondents and the amount of time estimated for an average respondent to respond: 1,000 applicants annually. 40 to 200 hours per application.

(6) An estimate of the total public burden (in hours) associated with the collection: 40,000 to 200,000 hours.

As part of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107-296, Congress enacted several liability protections for providers of anti-terrorism technologies. The SAFETY Act provides incentives for the development and deployment of anti-terrorism technologies by creating a system of “risk management” and a system of “litigation management.” The purpose of the Act is to ensure that the threat of liability does not deter potential manufacturers or Sellers of anti-terrorism technologies from developing and commercializing technologies that could save lives. Together, the risk and litigation management provisions provide the following protections:

- Exclusive jurisdiction in federal court for suits against the Sellers of “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” (§ 863(a)(2));
- A limitation on the liability of Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies to an amount of liability insurance coverage specified for each individual technology, provided that Sellers will not be required to obtain any more liability insurance coverage than is reasonably available “at prices that will not unreasonably distort the sales price” of the technology. (§ 864(a));
- A prohibition on joint and several liability for noneconomic damages, so that Sellers can only be liable for that percentage of noneconomic damages proportionate to their responsibility for the harm (§ 863(b)(2));
- A complete bar on punitive damages and prejudgment interest (§ 863(b)(1));

Small Business Regulatory Fairness Act of 1996

As noted above, the Department has tentatively determined that this proposed rule would not qualify as a "major rule" as defined by section 804 of the Small Business and Regulatory Enforcement Act of 1996.

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

The Department of Homeland Security does not believe this proposed rule will have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. States will, however, benefit from this rule to the extent that they are purchasers of approved anti-terrorism technologies. DHS requests comment on the federalism impact of this Rule. In particular, the Department seeks comment on whether this proposed rule will raise significant federalism implications and, if so, what is the nature of those implications.

PART __ -- SUPPORT ANTI-TERRORISM BY FOSTERING EFFECTIVE TECHNOLOGIES ACT OF 2002

[table of contents]

§ 101.1 Purpose.

This Part implements the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002, Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 (“the SAFETY Act” or “the Act”).

§ 101.2 Delegation.

All of the Secretary’s responsibilities, powers, and functions under the SAFETY Act may be exercised by the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security (“the Under Secretary”) or the Under Secretary’s designees.

§ 101.3 Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies.

(a) General- The Under Secretary may designate as a qualified anti-terrorism technology for purposes of protections set forth in Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 any qualifying product, equipment, service (including support services), device, or technology (including information technology) designed, developed, modified, or procured for the specific purpose of preventing, detecting, identifying, or deterring acts of terrorism or limiting the harm such acts might otherwise cause.

(b) Criteria to be Considered- In determining whether to grant the designation under paragraph (a) (a “Designation”), the Under Secretary may exercise discretion and judgment in interpreting and weighting the various criteria in each case in determining whether to grant a Designation:

(i) Prior United States Government use or demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness.

(ii) Availability of the technology for immediate deployment in public and private settings.

(iii) Existence of extraordinarily large or extraordinarily unquantifiable potential third party liability risk exposure to the Seller or other provider of such anti-terrorism technology.

(iv) Substantial likelihood that such anti-terrorism technology will not be deployed unless protections under the system of risk management provided under Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 are extended.

(v) Magnitude of risk exposure to the public if such anti-terrorism technology is not deployed.

(vi) Evaluation of all scientific studies that can be feasibly conducted in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm.

(vii) Anti-terrorism technology that would be effective in facilitating the defense against acts of terrorism, including technologies that prevent, defeat or respond to such acts.

(viii) Any other factor that the Under Secretary may consider to be relevant to the determination or to the homeland Security of the United States.

(c) Use of Standards- From time to time the Under Secretary may develop, issue, revise, and adopt safety and effectiveness standards for various categories of anti-terrorism technologies. Such standards will be published by the Department at www.dhs.gov, and copies may also be obtained by mail sending a request to

_____ . Compliance with any such standards that are applicable to a particular anti-terrorism technology may be considered before any Designation will be granted for such technology under paragraph (a); in such cases, the Under Secretary may consider test results produced by an independent laboratory or other entity engaged to test or verify the safety, utility, performance, or effectiveness of such technology.

(d) Consideration of Substantial Equivalence- In determining whether a particular technology satisfies the criteria in paragraph (b) and complies with any applicable standards referenced in paragraph (c), the Under Secretary may take into consideration evidence that the technology is substantially equivalent to other, similar technologies (“predicate technologies”) that have been previously designated as “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” under the SAFETY Act. A technology may be deemed to be substantially equivalent to a predicate technology if (i) it has the same intended use as the predicate technology, and (ii) it has the same or substantially similar technological characteristics as the predicate technology.

(e) Duration and Depth of Review- Recognizing the urgency of certain security measures, the Under Secretary will make a judgment regarding the duration and depth of review appropriate for a particular technology. This review will include submissions by the applicant for SAFETY Act coverage, along with information that the Under Secretary can feasibly gather from other sources. For technologies with which the Federal Government or other governmental entity already has substantial experience or data (through the procurement process or through prior use or review), the review may rely in part upon that prior experience and, thus, may be expedited. The Under Secretary may consider any scientific studies, testing, field studies, or other experience with the technology that he deems appropriate and that are available or can be feasibly conducted or obtained in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm. Such studies may, in the Under Secretary's discretion, include:

- (i) Public source studies;
- (ii) Classified and otherwise confidential studies;
- (iii) Studies, test, or other performance records or data provided by or available to the producer of the specific technology; and
- (iv) Proprietary studies that are available to the Under Secretary.

In considering whether or the extent to which it is feasible to defer a decision on a Designation until additional scientific studies can be conducted on a particular technology, the Under Secretary will bring to bear his or her expertise concerning the protection of the security of the American homeland and will consider the urgency of the need for the technology.

(f) Content of Designation- A Designation shall specify the technology and the Seller(s) of the technology. The Designation may, but need not, also specify others who are required to be covered by the liability insurance required to be purchased by the Seller. The Designation shall include the certification required by Section 101.4 herein. The Designation may also include such other specifications as the Under Secretary may deem to be appropriate. Failure to specify a covered person or party in a Designation will not preclude application of the Act's protections to that person or party.

(g) Government Procurements- The Under Secretary may coordinate a SAFETY Act review in connection with an agency procurement of an anti-terrorism technology in any manner he or she deems appropriate and consistent with the Act and other applicable laws.

(h) Pre-Application Consultations- To the extent that he or she deems it appropriate, the Under Secretary may consult with potential SAFETY Act applicants regarding the need for or advisability of particular types of anti-terrorism technologies, although no pre-approval of any particular technology may be given. The confidentiality provisions in Section 101.8 hereof shall be applicable to such consultations.

101.4 Obligations of Seller.

(a) Liability Insurance Required- Any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides a qualified anti-terrorism technology to Federal and non-Federal Government customers shall obtain liability insurance of such types and in such amounts as shall be required in accordance with this section and certified by the Under Secretary to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from, such act. The Under Secretary may request at any time (before or after the certification process established under this section) that the Seller or any other provider of qualified anti-terrorism technology submit any information that would (i) assist in determining the amount of liability insurance required, or (ii) show that the Seller or any other provider of qualified anti-terrorism technology otherwise has met all the requirements of this section.

(b) Maximum Amount- For the total claims related to one such act of terrorism, the Seller will not be required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world

market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of the Seller's anti-terrorism technology. The Under Secretary will determine the amount of liability insurance required for each technology, or, to the extent feasible and appropriate, a particular group of technologies. The Under Secretary or his designee may find that – notwithstanding the level of risk exposure for a particular technology, or group of technologies – the maximum amount of liability insurance from private sources on the world market is set at a price or contingent on terms that will unreasonably distort the sales price of a Seller's technology, thereby necessitating liability insurance coverage below the maximum amount available. In determining the amount of liability insurance required, the Under Secretary may consider any factor, including, but not limited to, the following:

- (i) the particular technology at issue;
- (ii) the amount of liability insurance the Seller maintained prior to application;
- (iii) the amount of liability insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller's business as a whole;
- (iv) the amount of liability insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies;
- (v) information regarding the amount of liability insurance offered on the world market;
- (vi) data and history regarding mass casualty losses;
- (vii) the intended use of the technology;

(viii) the requirements of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 regarding the provision of liability insurance for third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism;

(ix) the possible effects of the cost of insurance on the price of the product, and the possible consequences thereof for development, production, or deployment of the technology; and

(x) in the case of a Seller seeking approval to self-insure, the factors described in Section 28.308(d) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(c) Scope of Coverage- Liability insurance obtained pursuant to this subsection shall, in addition to the Seller, protect the following, to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from, an act of terrorism:

(i) Contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller.

(ii) Contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer.

(d) Third Party Claims- Any liability insurance required to be obtained under this section shall provide coverage against third party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when the applicable qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act.

(e) Reciprocal Waiver Of Claims- The Seller shall enter into a reciprocal waiver of claims with its contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers, and contractors and subcontractors of the customers, involved in the manufacture, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies, under which each party to the waiver agrees to be responsible for losses, including business interruption losses, that it sustains, or for losses sustained by its own employees resulting from an activity resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act.

(f) Information to be Submitted by the Seller— The Seller shall provide a statement, executed by a duly authorized representative of the Seller, of all liability insurance coverage applicable to third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when the Seller’s Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology has been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act, including:

- (i) Names of insurance companies, policy numbers, and expiration dates;
- (ii) A description of the types and nature of such insurance (including the extent to which the Seller is self-insured or intends to self-insure);
- (iii) Dollar limits per occurrence and annually of such insurance, including any applicable sublimits;
- (iv) Deductibles or self-insured retentions, if any, that are applicable;
- (v) Any relevant exclusions from coverage under such policies;
- (vi) The price for such insurance, if available, and the per-unit amount or percentage of such price directly related to liability coverage for the Seller’s Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology deployed in defense against or response or recovery from an act of terror;
- (vii) Where applicable, whether the liability insurance, in addition to the Seller, protects contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller and contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the customer to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use or operation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from an act of terrorism;

(viii) Any limitations on such liability insurance; and

(ix) In the case of a Seller seeking approval to self-insure, all of the information described in Section 28.308(a)(1)-(10) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(g) Seller's Continuing Obligation—The Seller must notify the Under Secretary of any changes in types or amounts of liability insurance coverage for any Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology.

(h) Under Secretary's Certification—For each Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology, the Under Secretary shall certify the amount of insurance required under Section 864 of the Act. The Under Secretary shall include the certification under this section as a part of the applicable Designation. The certification may specify a period of time for which the certification will apply. The Seller of a Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology may at any time petition the Under Secretary for a revision or termination of the certification under this section. The Under Secretary or his designee may at any time request information from the Seller regarding the insurance maintained by the Seller or the amount of insurance available to the Seller.

101.5 Procedures for Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies

(a) Application Procedure- Any Seller seeking a Designation shall submit all information supporting such request to the Assistant Secretary for Plans, Programs, and Budget of the Department of Homeland Security Directorate of Science and Technology,

- A reduction of plaintiffs’ recovery by amounts that plaintiffs received from “collateral sources,” such as insurance benefits or other government benefits (§ 863(c)); and
- A rebuttable presumption that the Seller is entitled to the “government contractor defense” (§ 863(d)).

The Act provides that these liability protections are conferred by two separate actions by the Secretary. The Secretary’s designation of a technology as a “qualified anti-terrorism technology” confers all of the liability protections except the rebuttable presumption in favor of the government contractor defense. The presumption in favor of the government contractor defense requires an additional “approval” by the Secretary under § 863(d) of the Act. In many cases, however, the designation and the approval can be conferred simultaneously.

This preamble to the Proposed Rule first addresses the two major aspects of the Act – the designation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies and the approval of technologies for purposes of the government contractor defense. Following that discussion, the preamble addresses specific issues regarding the Proposed Rule and the Department’s interpretation of the Act.

Designation of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technologies

As noted above, the designation of a technology as a qualified anti-terrorism technology confers all of the liability protections provided in the Act, except for the presumption in favor of the government contractor defense. The Act gives the Secretary broad discretion in determining whether to designate a particular technology as a

or such other official of such Directorate as may be designated from time to time by the Under Secretary (“the Assistant Secretary”). The Under Secretary shall make application forms available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____.

(b) Initial Notification- Within 30 days after receipt of an Application for a Designation, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee shall notify the applicant in writing that (i) the Application is complete and will be reviewed, or (ii) that the Application is incomplete, in which case the missing or incomplete parts will be specified.

(c) Review Process- The Assistant Secretary or his or her designee will review each complete Application and any included supporting materials. In performing this function, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee may, but is not required to:

- (i) request additional information from the Seller;
- (ii) meet with representatives of the Seller;
- (iii) consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other federal or nonfederal entity;
- (iv) perform studies or analyses of the technology or the insurance market for such technology; and
- (v) seek information from insurers regarding the availability of insurance for such technology.

(d) Recommendation of the Assistant Secretary- Within 90 days after receipt of a complete Application for a Designation, the Assistant Secretary shall make one of the following recommendations to the Under Secretary regarding such Application: (i) that the Application be approved and a Designation be issued to the Seller; (ii) that the Seller be notified that the technology is potentially eligible for a Designation, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) that the Application be denied. If approval is recommended, the recommendation shall include a recommendation regarding the certification required by Section 101.4 of this Part. The Assistant Secretary may extend the time period beyond 90 days upon notice to the Seller; the Assistant Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension.

(e) Discretionary Notice of Recommendation- The Assistant Secretary may provide notice to the Seller of his recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of the Seller's Application. In no event is the Assistant Secretary required to provide such notice or opportunity to provide additional information.

(f) Action by the Under Secretary- Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation from the Assistant Secretary pursuant to paragraph (d) of this Section, the Under Secretary shall take one of the following actions: (i) approve the Application and issue an appropriate Designation to the Seller, which shall include the certification required by Section 101.4 of this Part; (ii) notify the Seller in writing that the technology is potentially eligible for a Designation, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) deny the Application, and notify the Seller in writing of such decision. The Under Secretary may extend the time period beyond 30 days upon notice to the Seller; the Under Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension. The Under Secretary's decision shall be final and not subject to review, except at the discretion of the Under Secretary.

(g) Term of Designation; Renewal- A Designation shall be valid and effective for a term of five to eight years (as determined by the Under Secretary based upon the technology) commencing on the date of issuance, and the protections conferred by the Designation shall continue in full force and effect indefinitely, after the expiration of the Designation, to all sales of qualified anti-terrorism technologies covered by the Designation that were consummated during such term. At any time after the third anniversary of such issuance, the Seller may apply for renewal of the Designation. The Under Secretary shall make the application form for renewals available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____.

(h) Transfer of Designation- Any Designation may be transferred and assigned to any other person or entity to which the Seller transfers and assigns all right, title, and interest in and to the technology covered by the Designation, including the intellectual property rights therein (or, if the Seller is a licensee of the technology, to any person or entity to which such Seller transfers all of its right, title, and interest in and to the applicable license agreement). Such transfer and assignment of a Designation will not be effective unless and until (i) the Under Secretary is notified in writing of the transfer using the “Application for Transfer of Designation” form issued by the Under Secretary (the Under Secretary shall make this application form available at www.dhs.gov, or by mail by written request sent to _____), and (ii) the transferee complies with all applicable provisions of the SAFETY Act, this Part, and the relevant Designation as if the transferee were the Seller. Upon the effectiveness of such transfer and assignment, the transferee will be deemed to be a Seller in the place and stead of the transferor with respect to the applicable technology for all purposes under the SAFETY Act, this Part,

and the transferred Designation. The transferred Designation will continue to apply to the transferor with respect to all transactions and occurrences that occurred through the time at which the transfer and assignment of the Designation became effective, as specified in the applicable Application for Transfer of Designation.

(i) Application of Designation to Licensees- Any Designation shall apply to any other person or entity to which the Seller licenses (exclusively or nonexclusively) the right to manufacture and sell the technology, in the same manner and to the same extent that such Designation applies to the Seller, effective as of the date of commencement of the license, provided that the Seller notifies the Under Secretary of such license by submitting, within 30 days after such date of commencement, a “Notice of License of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____ . Such notification shall not be required for any licensee listed as a Seller on the applicable Designation.

(j) Termination of Designation Resulting from Substantial Modification- A Designation shall terminate automatically, and have no further force or effect, if the designated Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology is significantly changed or modified in design, components, or method of manufacture. A change or modification in the technology that could significantly affect the safety or effectiveness of the device (e.g., a significant change or modification in design, material, chemical composition, energy source, or manufacturing process) constitutes a significant change or modification. If a Seller is planning a significant change or modification to a designated technology as defined above, such Seller may apply for a corresponding modification of the applicable

Designation in advance of the implementation of such modification. Application for such a modification must be made using the “Application for Modification of Designation” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this application form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to

101.6 Government Contractor Defense.

The Under Secretary may certify a qualified anti-terrorism technology as an Approved Product for Homeland Security for purposes of establishing a rebuttable presumption of the applicability of the government contractor defense. In determining whether to grant such certification, the Under Secretary or his or her designee shall conduct a comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended. The Seller shall provide safety and hazard analyses and other relevant data and information regarding such technology to the Department in connection with an application. The Under Secretary or his designee may require that the Seller submit any information that the Under Secretary or his designee considers relevant to the application for approval. The Under Secretary or his designee may consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other governmental or non-governmental person or entity, and may consider test results produced by an independent laboratory or other person or entity engaged by the Seller.

101.7 Procedures for Certification of Approved Products for Homeland Security

(a) Application Procedure- A Seller seeking certification of anti-terrorism technology as an Approved Product for Homeland Security under Section 101.6 (a “Certification”) shall submit all information supporting such request to the Assistant Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make application forms available at www.dhs.gov, and copies may also be obtained by mail by sending a request to _____.

An Application for a Certification may not be filed unless the Seller has also filed an Application for Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology for the same technology. The two applications may be filed simultaneously and may be reviewed simultaneously.

(b) Initial Notification- Within 30 days after receipt of an Application for a Certification, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee shall notify the applicant in writing that (i) the Application is complete and will be reviewed, or (ii) that the Application is incomplete, in which case the missing or incomplete parts will be specified.

(c) Review Process- The Assistant Secretary or his or her designee will review each complete Application for a Certification and any included supporting materials. In performing this function, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee may, but is not required to:

- (i) request additional information from the Seller;
- (ii) meet with representatives of the Seller;
- (iii) consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other federal or nonfederal entity; and
- (iv) perform or seek studies or analyses of the technology.

(d) Recommendation of the Assistant Secretary- Within 90 days after receipt of a complete Application for a Certification, the Assistant Secretary shall make one of the following recommendations to the Under Secretary regarding such Application: (i) that the Application be approved and a Certification be issued to the Seller; (ii) that the Seller be notified that the technology is potentially eligible for a Certification, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) that the Application be denied. The Assistant Secretary may extend the time period beyond 90 days upon notice to the Seller; the Assistant Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension.

(e) Discretionary Notice of Recommendation- The Assistant Secretary may provide notice to the Seller of his or her recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of the Seller's Application. In no event is the Assistant Secretary required to provide such notice or opportunity to provide additional information.

(f) Action by the Under Secretary- Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation from the Assistant Secretary pursuant to paragraph (d) of this Section, the Under Secretary shall take one of the following actions: (i) approve the Application and issue an appropriate Certification to the Seller; (ii) notify the Seller in writing that the technology is potentially eligible for a Certification, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) deny the Application, and notify the Seller in writing of such decision. The Under Secretary may extend the time period beyond 30 days upon notice to the Seller, and the Under Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension. The Under Secretary's decision shall be final and not subject to review, except at the discretion of the Under Secretary.

(g) Designation is a Pre-Condition- The Under Secretary may approve an Application for a Certification only if the Under Secretary has also approved an Application for a Designation for the same technology under Section 101.3.

(h) Term of Certification; Renewal- A Certification shall be valid and effective for the same period of time for which the related Designation is issued, and shall terminate upon the termination of such related Designation. The Seller may apply for renewal of the Certification in connection with an application for renewal of the related Designation. An application for renewal must be made using the “Application for Certification of an Approved Product for Homeland Security” form issued by the Under Secretary.

(i) Application of Certification to Licensees- Any Certification shall apply to any other person or entity to which the Seller licenses (exclusively or nonexclusively) the right to manufacture and sell the technology, in the same manner and to the same extent that such Certification applies to the Seller, effective as of the date of commencement of the license, provided that the Seller notifies the Under Secretary of such license by submitting, within 30 days after such date of commencement, a “Notice of License of Approved Anti-Terrorism Technology” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____ . Such notification shall not be required for any licensee listed as a Seller on the applicable Certification.

(j) Transfer of Certification- In the event of any permitted transfer and assignment of a Designation, any related Certification for the same anti-terrorism technology shall automatically be deemed to be transferred and assigned to the same transferee to which such Designation is transferred and assigned. The transferred Certification will continue to apply to the transferor with respect to all transactions and occurrences that occurred through the time at which such transfer and assignment of the Certification became effective.

(k) Issuance of Certificate; Approved Product List- For anti-terrorism technology reviewed and approved by the Under Secretary and for which a Certification is issued, the Under Secretary shall issue a certificate of conformance to the Seller and place the anti-terrorism technology on an Approved Product List for Homeland Security.

101.8 Confidentiality/Protection of Intellectual Property

The Secretary, in consultation with the Office of Management and Budget and appropriate Federal law enforcement and intelligence officials, and in a manner consistent with existing protections for sensitive or classified information, shall establish confidentiality protocols for maintenance and use of information submitted to the Department under the SAFETY Act and this Part. Such protocols shall, among other things, ensure that the Department will utilize all appropriate exemptions from the Freedom of Information Act.

101.9 Definitions

(1) ASSISTANT SECRETARY– The term “Assistant Secretary” means the Assistant Secretary for Plans, Programs, and Budget of the Department of Homeland Security Directorate of Science and Technology, or such other official of such Directorate as may be designated from time to time by the Under Secretary.

(2) CERTIFICATION– The term “Certification” means a certification that a qualified anti-terrorism technology for which a Designation has been issued will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller’s specifications, and is safe for use as intended.

(3) CONTRACTOR– The term “contractor” of a Seller means any person or entity with whom or with which the Seller has entered into a contract relating to the manufacture, sale, use, or operation of anti-terrorism technology for which a Designation is issued (regardless of whether such contract is entered into before or after the issuance of such Designation), including, without limitation, an independent laboratory or other entity engaged in testing or verifying the safety, utility, performance, effectiveness of such technology, or the conformity of such technology to the Seller’s specifications.

(4) DESIGNATION– The term “Designation” means a designation of a qualified anti-terrorism technology under the SAFETY Act issued by the Under Secretary under authority delegated by the Secretary of Homeland Security.

(5) LOSS– The term 'loss' means death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, including business interruption loss (which is a component of loss of or damage to property).

(6) PHYSICAL HARM– The term 'physical harm' as used in the Act shall mean a physical injury to the body that caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement. In no event shall physical harm include mental pain, anguish, or suffering, or fear of injury.

(7) SAFETY ACT or ACT– The term “SAFETY Act” or “Act” means the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002, enacted as Subtitle G of Title VIII of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107-296.

(8) SELLER– The term “Seller” means any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides anti-terrorism technology to Federal and non-Federal Government customers for

“qualified anti-terrorism technology,” although the Act sets forth the following criteria that must be considered to the extent that they are applicable to the technology: (1) prior United States Government use or demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness; (2) availability of the technology for immediate deployment; (3) the potential liability of the Seller; (4) the likelihood that the technology will not be deployed unless the SAFETY Act protections are conferred; (5) the risk to the public if the technology is not deployed; (6) evaluation of scientific studies; and (7) the effectiveness of the technology in defending against acts of terrorism. These criteria are not exclusive – the Secretary may consider other factors that he deems appropriate. The Secretary has discretion to give greater weight to some factors over others, and the relative weighting of the various criteria may vary based upon the particular technology at issue and the threats that the technology is designed to address. The Secretary may, in his discretion, determine that failure to meet a particular criterion justifies denial of an application under the SAFETY Act. However, the Secretary is not required to reject an application that fails to meet one or more of the criteria. Rather the Secretary, after considering all of the relevant criteria, may conclude that a particular technology merits designation as a “qualified anti-terrorism technology” even if a particular criterion is not satisfied. The Secretary’s considerations will also vary with the constantly evolving threats and conditions that give rise to the need for the technologies.

The SAFETY Act applies to a very broad range of technologies, including products, services, software, and other forms of intellectual property, as long as the Secretary, as an exercise of discretion and judgment, determines that a technology merits designation under the statutory criteria. Further, as the statutory criteria suggest, a which a Designation has been issued under this Part (unless the context requires otherwise).

(9) UNDER SECRETARY– The term “Under Secretary” means the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security.

“qualified anti-terrorism technology” is not necessarily required to be newly developed – it may have already been employed (e.g. “prior United States Government use”) or may be a new application of an existing technology.

The Act also provides that, before designating a “qualified anti-terrorism technology,” the Secretary will examine the amount of liability insurance the Seller of the technology proposes to maintain for coverage of the technology at issue. Under Section 864(a), the Secretary must certify that the coverage level is appropriate “to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed.” § 864(a)(1). The Act further provides that “the Seller is not required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available in the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller’s anti-terrorism technologies.” § 864(a)(2).

The Secretary does not intend to set a “one-size-fits all” numerical requirement regarding required insurance coverage for all technologies. Instead, as the Act suggests, the inquiry will be specific to each application and may involve an examination of several factors, including the following: the amount of insurance the Seller has previously maintained; the amount of insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller’s business as a whole; the amount of insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies; data and history regarding mass casualty losses; and the particular technology at issue. The Secretary will not require insurance beyond the point at which the cost of coverage would “unreasonably distort” the price of the technology. Once the Secretary concludes the analysis regarding the appropriate level of insurance coverage (which might include discussions with the Seller in appropriate cases), the Secretary will identify in a short certification a description of the coverage appropriate for the particular qualified anti-terrorism technology. If, during the term of the designation, the Seller would like to request reconsideration of that insurance certification due to changed circumstances or for other reasons, the Seller may do so. If the Seller fails to maintain coverage at the certified level during that time period, the liability protections of the Act will continue to apply, but the Seller's liability limit will remain at the certified insurance level. Such failure, however, will be regarded as a negative factor in the consideration of any future application by the Seller for renewal of the applicable designation, and perhaps in any other application by the Seller.

Government Contractor Defense

The Act creates a rebuttable presumption that the government contractor defense applies to qualified anti-terrorism technologies "approved by the Secretary" in accordance with certain criteria specified in § 863(d)(2). The government contractor defense is an affirmative defense that immunizes Sellers from liability for certain claims brought under § 863(a) of the Act. See § 863(d)(1). The presumption of this defense applies to all "approved" qualified anti-terrorism technologies for claims brought in a "product liability or other lawsuit" and "arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies . . . have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." Id. While the government contractor defense is a judicially-created doctrine, Section 863's express terms supplant many of the requirements in the case law for application of the defense.

First, and most obviously, the Act expressly provides that the government contractor defense is available not only to government contractors, but also to sales to state and local governments and the private sector. See § 863(d)(1) (“This presumption of the government contractor defense shall apply regardless of whether the claim against the Seller arises from a sale of the product to Federal Government or non-Federal Government customers.”).

Second, Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies need not design their technologies to federal government specifications in order to obtain the government contractor defense under the SAFETY Act. Instead, the Act sets forth criteria for the Department's “approval” of technologies. Specifically, the Act provides that during the process of approval for the government contractor defense the Secretary will conduct a “comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended.” § 863(d)(2). The Act also provides that the Seller will “conduct safety and hazard analyses” and supply such information to the Secretary. Id. This express statutory framework thus governs in lieu of the requirements developed in case law for the application of the government contractor defense.

Third, the Act expressly states the limited circumstances in which the applicability of the defense can be rebutted. The Act provides expressly that the presumption can be overcome only by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology. See § 863(d)(1) (“This presumption shall only be overcome by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology under this subsection.”).

The applicability of the government contractor defense to particular technologies is thus governed by these express provisions of the Act, rather than by the judicially-developed criteria for applicability of the government contractor defense outside the context of the SAFETY Act.

While the Act does not expressly delineate the scope of the defense (i.e., the types of claims that the defense bars), the Act and the legislative history make clear that the scope is broad. For example, it is clear that any Seller of an “approved” technology cannot be held liable under the Act for design defects or failure to warn claims, unless the presumption of the defense is rebutted by evidence that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology.

The government contractor defense under Boyle and its progeny bars a broad range of claims. The Supreme Court in Boyle concluded that “state law which holds Government contractors liable for design defects” can present a significant conflict with federal policy (including the discretionary function exception to the Federal Tort Claims Act) and therefore “must be displaced.” Boyle v. United Technologies Corp., 487 U.S. 500, 512 (1988). The Department believes that Congress incorporated the Supreme Court's Boyle line of cases as it existed on the date of enactment of the SAFETY Act, rather than incorporating future developments of the government contractor defense in

Attached are draft regulations (please do not forward these outside the Administration) that DHS is about to send over to OIRA for clearance. These regulations would implement the SAFETY Act, which provides liability protections for anti-terrorism technologies that are designated or approved by DHS for SAFETY Act coverage. These regs largely track the statute. This is just a proposed rule w/ a short comment period, but DHS will begin accepting applications for coverage even before DHS issues a final rule. OIRA will clear this very quickly b/c they have already had a chance to review this informally. This could get some attention because the SAFETY Act contained significant tort reform measures. Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns. Thanks.

SUMMARY: This Proposed Rule would implement Subtitle G of Title VIII of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 – the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002 (“the SAFETY Act” or “the Act”). As discussed in detail below, the SAFETY Act, through regulations promulgated by the Department, will provide critical incentives for the development and deployment of anti-terrorism technologies by providing liability protections for Sellers of “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” and others.

DATES: Comments in response to this notice are due by [insert date of 30 days from publication in the Federal Register].

ADDRESSES: Comments on this Proposed Rule should be submitted by e-mail to: _____@dhs.gov, or by facsimile to _____. Comments may also be mailed to _____. the courts. Indeed, it is hard to imagine that Congress would have intended a statute designed to provide certainty and protection to Sellers of anti-terrorism technologies to be subject to future developments of a judicially-created doctrine. In fact, there is evidence that Congress rejected such a construction. See, e.g., 148 Cong. Rec. E2080 (November 13, 2001) (statement of Rep. Armev)("[Companies] will have a government contractor defense as is commonplace in existing law.") (emphasis added).

Procedurally, the presumption of applicability of the government contractor defense is conferred by the Secretary's "approval" of a qualified anti-terrorism technology specifically for the purposes of the government contractor defense. This approval is a separate act from the Secretary's "designation" of a qualified anti-terrorism technology. Importantly, the Seller may submit applications for both designation as a qualified anti-terrorism technology and approval for purposes of the government contractor defense at the same time, and the Secretary may review and act upon both applications simultaneously. The distinction between the Secretary's two actions is important, however, because the approval process for the government contractor defense includes a level of review that is not required for the designation of a qualified anti-terrorism technology. Specifically, the Act provides that during the process of approval for the government contractor defense the Secretary will conduct a "comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended." § 863(d)(2). The Department believes that certain Sellers will be able to obtain the protections that come with designation as a qualified anti-terrorism technology even if they have not satisfied the requirements for the government contractor defense.

Similarly, even if the applicability of the government contractor defense were rebutted under the test set forth in Section 863(d)(1) of the Act, the technology may still retain the designation and protections as a qualified anti-terrorism technology.

Specific Issues Regarding the Act and this Rule

1. Definition of Anti-Terrorism Technologies. The Department recognizes that the universe of technologies that can be deployed against terrorism includes far more than physical products. Rather, the defense of the homeland will require deployment of a broad range of technologies that includes services, software, and other forms of intellectual property. Thus, consistent with Section 865 of the Act, Section 101.3(a) of the proposed rule defines qualified anti-terrorism technologies very broadly to include “any products, equipment, service (including support services), device, or technology (including information technology)” that the Secretary, as an exercise of discretion and judgment, determines to merit designation under the statutory criteria.

2. Development of New Technologies. The Act’s success depends not only upon encouraging Sellers to provide existing anti-terrorism technologies, but also upon encouraging Sellers to develop new and innovative technologies to respond to the ever-changing threats to the American people. The proposed rule is thus designed to allow the Department to assist would-be Sellers during the invention, design, and manufacturing phases in two important respects. First, Section 101.3(h) of the proposal makes clear that the Department, within its discretion and where feasible, may provide feedback to manufacturers regarding whether proposed or developing anti-terrorism technologies might meet the qualification factors under the Act. To be sure, the Department cannot provide advance certification, as some of the factors for the Secretary's consideration cannot be addressed in advance. The Department may, however, provide feedback regarding other factors, with the goal of giving potential Sellers some understanding of whether it might be advantageous to proceed with further development of the technology. Departmental feedback at the design, prototyping, or testing stage of development, to the extent feasible, may provide manufacturers with added incentive to commence and/or complete production of cutting-edge anti-terrorism technology that otherwise might not be produced or deployed in the absence of the risk and litigation management protections in the Act. The Department will perform these consultations with potential Sellers in a manner consistent with the protection of intellectual property and trade secrets, as discussed below.

Second, Section 101.3(g) of the proposal recognizes that Federal agencies will often be the purchasers of anti-terrorism technologies. The Department recognizes that terms on which Sellers are able to provide anti-terrorism technologies to Federal agencies may vary depending on whether the technologies receive SAFETY Act coverage or not. The proposal thus provides that the Department may coordinate SAFETY Act reviews with agency procurements. The Department also intends to review SAFETY Act applications relating to technologies that are the subject of agency procurements on an expedited basis.

The Department requests public comments regarding the best way for the Department to provide feedback to potential Sellers regarding SAFETY Act coverage and the best way for the Department to coordinate SAFETY Act review with an agency procurement.

3. Protection of Intellectual Property and Trade Secrets. The Department believes that successful implementation of the Act requires that applicants' intellectual property interests and trade secrets remain protected in the application process and beyond. Toward that end, the Department will create an application and review process in which the Department maintains the confidentiality of an applicant's proprietary information. The Department notes that laws mandating disclosure of information submitted to the government generally contain exclusions or exceptions for such information. The Freedom of Information Act, for instance, provides specific exceptions for proprietary information submitted to federal agencies. The Department seeks further input on this issue.

4. Evaluation of Scientific Studies; Consultation with Scientific and Technical Experts. Section 862(b)(6) of the Act provides that, as one of many factors in determining whether to designate a particular technology under the Act, the Secretary shall consider evaluation of all scientific studies "that can be feasibly conducted" in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce the risks of harm. An important part of this provision is that it contemplates review only of such studies as can "feasibly" be conducted. The Department believes that the need to protect the American public by facilitating the manufacture and marketing of anti-terrorism technologies might render it infeasible to defer a designation decision until after every conceivable scientific study is completed. In many cases, existing information (whether based on scientific studies, experience with the technology or a related technology, or other factors) might enable the Secretary to perform an appropriate assessment of the capability of the technology to reduce risks of harm. In other cases, even where less information is available about the capability of a technology to reduce risks of harm, the public interest in making the technology available as soon as practicable may render it infeasible to await the conduct of further scientific studies on that issue. In considering whether or to what extent it is feasible to defer a designation decision until additional scientific studies can be conducted, the Department will bring to bear its expertise concerning the protection of the American homeland and will consider the urgency of the need for the technology and other relevant factors and circumstances.

5. "Exclusive Federal Jurisdiction" and "Scope" of Insurance Coverage under § 864(a)(3). The Act creates an exclusive Federal cause of action "for any claim for loss of property, personal injury, or death arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." § 863(a)(2); see also § 863(a)(1). This exclusive "Federal cause of action shall be brought only for claims for injuries that are proximately caused by Sellers that provide qualified anti-terrorism technology." § 863(a)(1). The best reading of § 863(a), and the reading the Department is inclined to adopt, is that (1) only one Federal cause of action exists for loss of property, personal injury, or death when a claim relates to performance or non-performance of the Seller's qualified and deployed anti-terrorism technology, and (2) such cause of action may be brought only against the Seller.

The exclusive Federal nature of this cause of action is evidenced in large part by the exclusive jurisdiction provision in § 863(a)(2). That subsection states: "Such appropriate district court of the United States shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions for any claim for loss of property, personal injury or death arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." Id. Any presumption of concurrent causes of action (between State and Federal law) is overcome by two basic points. First, Congress would not have created in this Act a Federal cause of action to complement State law causes of action. Not only is the substantive law for decision in the Federal action derived from State law (and thus would be surplusage), but in creating the Act Congress plainly intended to limit rather than increase the liability exposure of Sellers. Second, the granting of exclusive jurisdiction to the Federal district courts provides further evidence that Congress wanted an exclusive Federal cause of action. Indeed, a Federal district court (in the absence of diversity) does not have jurisdiction over state law claims, and the statute makes no mention of diversity claims anywhere in the Act.

Further, it is clear that the Seller is the only appropriate defendant in this exclusive Federal cause of action. First and foremost, the Act unequivocally states that a "cause of action shall be brought only for claims for injuries that are proximately caused by sellers that provide qualified anti-terrorism technology." § 863(a)(1) (emphasis added). Second, if the Seller of the qualified anti-terrorism technology at issue was not the only defendant, would-be plaintiffs could, in an effort to circumvent the statute, bring claims (arising out of or relating to the performance or non-performance of the Seller's qualified anti-terrorism technology) against arguably less culpable persons or entities, including but not limited to contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers of the Seller of the technology. Because the claims in the cause of action would be predicated on the performance or non-performance of the Seller's qualified anti-terrorism technology, those persons or entities, in turn, would file a third-party action against the Seller. In such situations, the claims against non-Sellers thus “may result in loss to the Seller” under § 863(a)(2). The Department believes Congress did not intend through the Act to increase rather than decrease the amount of litigation arising out of or related to the deployment of qualified anti-terrorism technology. The scope of federal preemption of state laws is highly relevant to the Department’s implementation of the Act, as the Department will have to determine the amount of insurance that Sellers must obtain. Accordingly, the Department seeks comment on that matter.

6. Amount of Insurance. The Act requires that Sellers obtain liability insurance “of such types and in such amounts” certified by the Secretary “to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed.” § 864(a)(1). However, the Act makes clear that Sellers are not required to obtain liability insurance beyond “the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller’s anti-terrorism technologies.” § 864(a)(2).

As explained above, the Department eschews any “one-size-fits all” approach to the insurance coverage requirement. Instead, the Department construes the Act as contemplating the examination of several factors. Section 101.4(b) of the proposed rule therefore sets forth a nonexclusive list of several factors that the Department may consider. These include the amount of insurance the Seller has previously maintained; the amount of insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller’s business as a whole; the amount of insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies; data and history regarding mass casualty losses; information regarding the amount of liability insurance offered on the world market; the particular technology at issue and its intended use; and the point at which the cost of coverage would “unreasonably distort” the price of the technology. The proposed rule also provides that the Secretary may consider the amount of terrorism-related liability insurance that insurance companies are required to provide under the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 (“TRIA”). This amount is relevant because Congress mandated the provision of certain amounts of insurance under TRIA in response to the unwillingness or inability of insurers to provide sufficient liability coverage for terrorism-related events. See TRIA § 101(a), (b) (statement of findings and purpose). While it is possible in some cases that insurers will provide more than the amount of insurance required under TRIA, it may be appropriate in many instances for the Secretary to presume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a Seller need not purchase liability insurance coverage for terrorism-related claims in an amount greater than that required to be offered under TRIA.

In the course of determining the amount of insurance required under the Act for a particular technology, the Department may consult with the Seller, the Seller’s insurer, and others. While the decision regarding the amount of insurance required will generally be specific to each Seller or each technology, the Department recognizes that the incentive-based purposes of the Act may be furthered if the Department provides information to potential Sellers regarding the types and amounts of insurance that they will likely be required to obtain. Thus the Secretary may, where appropriate, give guidance to potential Sellers regarding the type and amounts of insurance that may be sufficient under the Act for particular technologies or categories of technologies.

The Department also recognizes that the amount of insurance available at prices that will not unreasonably distort the price of the anti-terrorism technology may vary over time. Thus, the proposed rule is written to give the Department flexibility to address fluctuating insurance prices by providing that, during the term of the designation, the Seller may request reconsideration of the insurance certification due to changed circumstances or other reasons.

The Department believes that if the Seller fails to maintain coverage at the certified level during the effective period of the certification, the liability protections of the Act will continue to apply, but the Seller's liability limit will remain at the certified insurance level. This is because subsection (c) of Section 864 makes clear that the Seller's liability is capped at the amount of insurance "required" to be maintained under Section 864, rather than the amount of coverage actually obtained. The limitation of liability thus relates entirely to the amount of insurance required and makes no reference to whether such insurance is, in fact, maintained by the Seller.

It is also apparent that the technology is not stripped of any of the other protections of the SAFETY Act if the Seller fails to maintain the requisite insurance. The Act requires that Sellers obtain liability insurance to protect not only the Seller, but also to protect (to the extent specified under § 864(a)(3)) the contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers of the Seller, as well as the contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer. § 864(a)(3). It would be unjust to deprive all others covered by the SAFETY Act of their SAFETY Act protections because of the Seller's malfeasance. Of course, this does not mean that there are no consequences to a Seller's failure to maintain the required insurance. Rather, in addition to exposing the Seller to uninsured liability up to the amount of insurance that the Seller was required to maintain, the Seller's failure to maintain the insurance may adversely affect the Seller's ability to obtain a renewal of the designation for the technology, and may even adversely affect the Seller's ability to obtain future designations of "qualified anti-terrorism technologies."

The Department, as part of each certification, will specify the Seller or Sellers of the anti-terrorism technology for purposes of SAFETY Act coverage. The Department may, but need not, specify in the certification the others who are covered by the liability insurance required to be purchased by the Seller.

7. Relationship of SAFETY Act to Indemnification under Public Law 85-804.

The Department recognizes that Congress intended that the SAFETY Act's liability protections would substantially reduce the need for the United States to provide indemnification under Public Law 85-804 to Sellers of anti-terrorism technology. The strong liability protections of the SAFETY Act should, in most circumstances, make it unnecessary to provide indemnification to Sellers. The Department recognizes, however, that there might be, in some limited circumstances, technologies or services with respect to which both SAFETY Act coverage and indemnification might be warranted. See 148 Cong. Rec. E2080 (statement by Rep. Arme y) (November 13, 2002) (stating that in some situations the SAFETY Act protections will "complement other government risk-sharing measures that some contractors can use such as Public Law 85-804").

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

INTRODUCTION

The Department intends to implement the SAFETY Act as quickly as possible. Our twin aims are these:

- (1) To produce by regulation as much certainty as possible regarding the application of the liability protections created by the Act;
- (2) To provide the Department with sufficient program flexibility to address the specific circumstances of each particular request for SAFETY Act coverage.

The Department does not intend to resolve every conceivable programmatic issue through this proposed rule. Instead, the Department will set out a basic set of regulations and commence the implementation of the SAFETY Act program while considering possible supplemental regulations as experience with the Act grows.

The Department invites comment on all aspects of these proposed regulations and on the policies that underlie them. The initial comment period is relatively brief (30 days) in order to permit the Department to begin implementation of this critical program as soon as possible. After reviewing the comments, the Department may issue an interim final rule and seek additional comment on some or all aspects of the program. In any event, the Department will begin implementation of the SAFETY Act immediately with regard to Federal acquisitions of anti-terrorism technologies and will begin accepting other SAFETY Act applications on July 15, 2003.

BACKGROUND

In recognition of this close relationship between the SAFETY Act and indemnification authority, in Section 73 of Executive Order 13286 of February 28, 2003, the President recently amended the existing Executive Order on indemnification-- Executive Order 10789 of November 14, 1958, as amended. The amendment granted the Department of Homeland Security authority to indemnify under Public Law 85-804. At the same time, it requires that all agencies – not just the Department of Homeland Security – follow certain procedures to ensure that the potential applicability of the SAFETY Act is considered before any indemnification is granted for an anti-terrorism technology. Specifically, the amendment provides that federal agencies cannot provide indemnification “with respect to any matter that has been, or could be, designated by the Secretary of Homeland Security as a qualified anti-terrorism technology” unless the Secretary of Homeland Security has advised whether SAFETY Act coverage would be appropriate and the Director of the Office and Management and Budget has approved the exercise of indemnification authority. The amendment includes an exception for the Department of Defense where the Secretary of Defense has determined that indemnification is “necessary for the timely and effective conduct of United States military or intelligence activities.”

Application of various laws and Executive Orders to this rulemaking.

Executive Order 12866 – Regulatory Planning and Review

DHS has examined the economic implications of this proposed rule as required by Executive Order 12866. Executive Order 12866 directs agencies to assess all costs and benefits of available regulatory alternatives and, when regulation is necessary, to select regulatory approaches that maximize net benefits (including potential economic, environmental, public health and safety, and other advantages; distributive impacts; and equity). Executive Order 12866 classifies a rule as significant if it meets any one of a number of specified conditions, including: having an annual effect on the economy of $100 million, adversely affecting a sector of the economy in a material way, adversely affecting competition, or adversely affecting jobs. A regulation is also considered a significant regulatory action if it raises novel legal or policy issues.

DHS concludes that this proposed rule is a significant regulatory action under the Executive Order because it will have a positive, material effect on public safety under Section 3(f)(1), and it raises novel legal and policy issues under Section 3(f)(4). DHS tentatively concludes, however, that this proposed rule does not meet the significance threshold of $100 million effect on the economy in any one year under Section 3(f)(1), due to the relatively low estimated burden of applying for this technology program, the unknown number of certifications and designations that the Department will dispense, and the unknown probability of a terrorist attack that would have to occur in order for the protections put in place in this proposed rule to have a large impact on the public. The agency requests comments regarding this determination, and invites commenters to submit any relevant data that will assist the agency in estimating the impact of this rule.

Need for the Regulation and Market Failure

This regulation implements the SAFETY Act and is intended to implement the provisions set forth in that Act. DHS believes the current development of anti-terrorism technologies has been slowed due to the potential liability risks associated with their development and eventual deployment. In a fully functioning insurance market, technology developers would be able to insure themselves against excessive liability risk; however, the terrorism risk insurance market appears to be in disequilibrium. The attacks of September 11 fundamentally changed the landscape of terrorism insurance. Congress, in the findings of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (TRIA) of 2002, concluded that temporary financial assistance in the insurance market is needed to “allow for a transition period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses.” This rulemaking addresses a similar concern, to the extent that potential technology developers are unable to efficiently insure against large losses due to an ongoing reassessment of terrorism issues in insurance markets.

Even after a temporary insurance market adjustment, purely private terrorism risk insurance markets may exhibit negative externalities. Because the risk pool of any single insurer may not be large enough to efficiently spread and therefore insure against the risk of damages from a terrorist attack, and because the potential for excessive liability may render any terrorism insurance prohibitively expensive, society may suffer from less than optimal technological protection against terrorist attacks. The measures set forth in this proposed rule are designed to meet this goal; they will provide certain liability protection from lawsuits and consequently will increase the likelihood that businesses will pursue important technologies that may not be pursued without this protection.

Costs and Benefits to Technology Development Firms

Since this rulemaking puts in place an additional voluntary option for technology developers, the expected direct net benefits to firms of this rulemaking will be positive; companies presumably will not choose to pursue the designation of “anti-terrorism technology” unless they believe it to be a profitable endeavor. DHS cannot predict with certainty the number of applicants for this program. An additional source of uncertainty is the reaction of the insurance market to this designation. As mentioned above, insurance markets appear to currently be adjusting their strategy for terrorism risk, so little market information exists that would inform this estimate. DHS invites comments on these issues.

Given that a firm chooses to invest effort in pursuing SAFETY Act liability protection, the direct costs will be the time and money required to submit the required paperwork and other information to DHS. Only companies that choose to request this protection will incur costs. In the preliminary Paperwork Reduction Act analysis, we estimate the reporting burden assuming that each applicant will spend at least 40 hours, and perhaps 200 hours, to prepare the information required by DHS for consideration. For the purposes of this analysis, we assume a loaded labor rate of the personnel preparing the information package of $100 per hour. Consequently, the total cost of the application requirements is estimated to be at least $4,000 per application for a relatively simple application. DHS does not yet have sufficient information to estimate the number of applicants annually. If we assume 1,000 applications annually, the total cost of the application requirement is estimated to range from $4,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually (1,000 applicants X 40 to 200 hours X $100 per hour). The regulation further requires that firms conduct safety and hazard analyses and provide them to the Secretary in the course of applying for this designation. We do not have quantified estimates of the impact of this provision, but we expect that much of the safety and hazard analysis activity will already take place in the normal course of technology development, since the safety and hazards of a firm's products are fundamental characteristics. DHS

The direct benefits to firms include lower potential losses from liability for terrorist attacks, and as a consequence a lower burden from liability insurance for this type of technology. In this assessment, we were careful to only consider benefits and costs specifically due to the proposed rulemaking and not costs that would have been incurred by companies absent the proposed rulemaking. The SAFETY Act requires the sellers of the technology to obtain liability insurance “of such types and in such amounts” certified by the Secretary. The entire cost of insurance is not a cost specifically imposed by the proposed rulemaking, as companies in the course of good business practice routinely purchase insurance absent Federal requirements to do so. Any difference in the amount or price of insurance purchased as a result of the SAFETY Act would be a cost or benefit of this rule for firms.

The wording of the SAFETY Act clearly states that sellers are not required to obtain liability insurance beyond the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private liability sources on the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of the seller’s anti-terrorism technologies. We tentatively conclude, however, that this rulemaking will impact both the prices and terms of liability insurance relative to the amount of insurance coverage absent the SAFETY Act. The probable effect of this rule is to lower the quantity of liability coverage needed in order for a firm to protect itself from terrorism liability risks, which would be considered a benefit of this rule to firms. This change will most likely be a shift back in demand that leads to a movement along the supply curve for technology firms already in this market; they probably will buy less liability coverage. This will have the effect of lowering the price per unit of coverage in this market.

DHS also expects, however, that this rulemaking will lead to greater market entry, which will generate surplus for both technology firms and insurers. DHS expects that the mandated amounts of liability coverage in the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 may be the best estimate of the structure of the future terrorism risk insurance market, and as stated in the preamble, the Secretary may presume that firms need not purchase liability insurance for terrorism-related claims in an amount greater than that required to be offered under TRIA. Again, this market is still in development, and DHS solicits comments on exactly how to predict the effect of this rulemaking on technology development.

Costs and Benefits to Insurers

DHS has little information on the future structure of the terrorism risk insurance market, and how this rulemaking will affect that structure. As stated above, this type of intervention could serve to lower the demand for insurance in the current market, thus the static effect on the profitability of insurers is negative. The benefits of the lower insurance burden to technology firms would be considered a cost to insurers; the static changes to insurance coverage would cause a transfer from insurers to technology firms. On the other hand, this type of intervention should serve to increase the surplus of insurers by making some types of insurance products possible that would have been prohibitive to customers or impossible for insurers to design in the absence of this rulemaking. DHS is interested in public comment on any possible negative or positive impacts to insurers caused by the SAFETY Act and this rulemaking, and whether these impacts would result in transfers within this market or an efficiency change not captured by another party. We encourage commenters to be as specific as possible.

Costs and Benefits to the Public

The benefits to the public of this proposed rulemaking are very difficult to put in dollar value terms since its ultimate objective is the development of new technologies that will help prevent or limit the damage from terrorist attacks. It is not possible to even determine whether these technologies could help prevent large or small scale attacks, as the SAFETY Act applies to a vast range of technologies, including products, services, software, and other forms of intellectual property that could have a widespread impact. In qualitative terms, the SAFETY Act removes a great deal of the risk and uncertainty associated with product liability and in the process creates a powerful incentive that will help fuel the development of critically needed anti-terrorism technologies. Additionally, we expect the SAFETY Act to reduce the research and development costs of these technologies.

The tradeoff, however, may be that a greater number of technologies may qualify for this program and be developed that have a lower average effectiveness against terrorist attacks than technologies currently on the market, or technologies that would be developed in the absence of this rulemaking. In the absence of this rulemaking, strong liability discouragement implies that the fewer products that are deployed in support of anti-terrorist efforts would be especially effective. Profit maximizing firms will always choose to develop the technologies with the highest demand first. It is the tentative conclusion of DHS that liability discouragement in this market is too strong or prohibitive, for the reasons mentioned above. DHS tentatively concludes that this rule will have positive net benefits to the public, since it serves to strike a better balance between consumer protection and technological development. DHS welcomes comments informing this tradeoff argument, and public input on whether this rulemaking does strike the correct balance.

Regulatory Flexibility Act

The Regulatory Flexibility Act requires DHS to determine whether this proposed rulemaking will have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities. Although we expect that many of the applicants for SAFETY Act protection are likely to meet the Small Business Administration's criteria for being a small entity, we do not believe this proposed rulemaking will impose a significant financial impact on them. In fact, we believe this proposed rule will be a benefit to technology development businesses, especially small businesses, by presenting them with an attractive, voluntary option of pursuing a potentially profitable investment by reducing the amount of risk and uncertainty of lawsuits associated with developing anti-terrorist technology. The requirements of this proposed rulemaking will only be imposed on such businesses that voluntarily seek the liability protection of the SAFETY Act. If a company does not request that protection, the company will bear no cost.

To the extent that demand for insurance falls, however, insurers may be adversely impacted by this rule. DHS believes that eventual new entry into this market and further opportunities to insure against terrorism risk implies that the long-term impact of this rulemaking on insurers is ambiguous but could very well be positive. We also expect that this rulemaking will affect relatively few firms and relatively few insurers either positively or negatively, as this appears to be a specialized industry. Therefore, we preliminarily certify this notice of proposed rulemaking will not have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities, and we request comments on this certification.

Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995

This rule will not result in the expenditure by State, local and tribal governments, in the aggregate, or by the private sector, of $100 million or more in any one year, and it will not significantly or uniquely affect small governments. Therefore, no actions were deemed necessary under the provisions of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995

The Department of Homeland Security will submit the following information collection request to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) for review in accordance with procedures of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995. The proposed information collection will be published to obtain comments from the public and affected agencies.

DHS will request comments on at least the following four points:

(1) Whether the proposed collection of information is necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the agency, including whether the information will have practical utility;

(2) The accuracy of the agency's estimate of the burden of the proposed collection of information, including the validity of the methodology and assumptions used;

(3) The quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected; and

(4) The burden of the collection of information on those who are to respond, including through the use of appropriate automated, electronic, mechanical, or other technological collection techniques or other forms of information technology, e.g., permitting electronic submission of responses.

(1) Type of Information Collection: New Collection

(2) Title of the Form/Collection: [Application Form for Designation of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology under the SAFETY Act; Application Form for Approval of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology under the SAFETY Act.]

(3) Agency form number and applicable component sponsoring the collection: Form Number: __-001, Directorate of Science and Technology, Department of Homeland Security.

(4) Affected public who will be asked or required to respond, as well as a brief abstract: Primary: Sellers and potential Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technology. Abstract: The Application Form for Designation and/or Approval of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technology will be used to provide information to the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security in determining whether Sellers qualify for risk and litigation management protections under the SAFETY Act.

(5) An estimate of the total number of respondents and the amount of time estimated for an average respondent to respond: 1,000 applicants annually. 40 to 200 hours per application.

(6) An estimate of the total public burden (in hours) associated with the collection: 40,000 to 200,000 hours.

As part of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107-296, Congress enacted several liability protections for providers of anti-terrorism technologies. The SAFETY Act provides incentives for the development and deployment of anti-terrorism technologies by creating a system of “risk management” and a system of “litigation management.” The purpose of the Act is to ensure that the threat of liability does not deter potential manufacturers or Sellers of anti-terrorism technologies from developing and commercializing technologies that could save lives. Together, the risk and litigation management provisions provide the following protections:

- Exclusive jurisdiction in federal court for suits against the Sellers of “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” (§ 863(a)(2));
- A limitation on the liability of Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies to an amount of liability insurance coverage specified for each individual technology, provided that Sellers will not be required to obtain any more liability insurance coverage than is reasonably available “at prices that will not unreasonably distort the sales price” of the technology. (§ 864(a));
- A prohibition on joint and several liability for noneconomic damages, so that Sellers can only be liable for that percentage of noneconomic damages proportionate to their responsibility for the harm (§ 863(b)(2));
- A complete bar on punitive damages and prejudgment interest (§ 863(b)(1));

Small Business Regulatory Fairness Act of 1996

As noted above, the Department has tentatively determined that this proposed rule would not qualify as a "major rule" as defined by section 804 of the Small Business and Regulatory Enforcement Act of 1996.

Executive Order 13132 - Federalism

The Department of Homeland Security does not believe this proposed rule will have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government. States will, however, benefit from this rule to the extent that they are purchasers of approved anti-terrorism technologies. DHS requests comment on the federalism impact of this Rule. In particular, the Department seeks comment on whether this proposed rule will raise significant federalism implications and, if so, what is the nature of those implications.

§ 101.3 Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies.

(a) General- The Under Secretary may designate as a qualified anti-terrorism technology for purposes of protections set forth in Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 any qualifying product, equipment, service (including support services), device, or technology (including information technology) designed, developed, modified, or procured for the specific purpose of preventing, detecting, identifying, or deterring acts of terrorism or limiting the harm such acts might otherwise cause.

(b) Criteria to be Considered- In determining whether to grant the designation under paragraph (a) (a “Designation”), the Under Secretary may exercise discretion and judgment in interpreting and weighting the various criteria in each case in determining whether to grant a Designation:

(i) Prior United States Government use or demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness.

(ii) Availability of the technology for immediate deployment in public and private settings.

(iii) Existence of extraordinarily large or extraordinarily unquantifiable potential third party liability risk exposure to the Seller or other provider of such anti-terrorism technology.

(iv) Substantial likelihood that such anti-terrorism technology will not be deployed unless protections under the system of risk management provided under Subtitle G of Title VIII of Public Law 107-296 are extended.

(v) Magnitude of risk exposure to the public if such anti-terrorism technology is not deployed.

(vi) Evaluation of all scientific studies that can be feasibly conducted in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm.

(vii) Anti-terrorism technology that would be effective in facilitating the defense against acts of terrorism, including technologies that prevent, defeat or respond to such acts.

(viii) Any other factor that the Under Secretary may consider to be relevant to the determination or to the homeland Security of the United States.

(c) Use of Standards- From time to time the Under Secretary may develop, issue, revise, and adopt safety and effectiveness standards for various categories of anti-terrorism technologies. Such standards will be published by the Department at www.dhs.gov, and copies may also be obtained by mail sending a request to

_____ . Compliance with any such standards that are applicable to a particular anti-terrorism technology may be considered before any Designation will be granted for such technology under paragraph (a); in such cases, the Under Secretary may consider test results produced by an independent laboratory or other entity engaged to test or verify the safety, utility, performance, or effectiveness of such technology.

(d) Consideration of Substantial Equivalence- In determining whether a particular technology satisfies the criteria in paragraph (b) and complies with any applicable standards referenced in paragraph (c), the Under Secretary may take into consideration evidence that the technology is substantially equivalent to other, similar technologies (“predicate technologies”) that have been previously designated as “qualified anti-terrorism technologies” under the SAFETY Act. A technology may be deemed to be substantially equivalent to a predicate technology if (i) it has the same intended use as the predicate technology, and (ii) it has the same or substantially similar technological characteristics as the predicate technology.

(e) Duration and Depth of Review- Recognizing the urgency of certain security measures, the Under Secretary will make a judgment regarding the duration and depth of review appropriate for a particular technology. This review will include submissions by the applicant for SAFETY Act coverage, along with information that the Under Secretary can feasibly gather from other sources. For technologies with which the Federal Government or other governmental entity already has substantial experience or data (through the procurement process or through prior use or review), the review may rely in part upon that prior experience and, thus, may be expedited. The Under Secretary may consider any scientific studies, testing, field studies, or other experience with the technology that he deems appropriate and that are available or can be feasibly conducted or obtained in order to assess the capability of the technology to substantially reduce risks of harm. Such studies may, in the Under Secretary's discretion, include:

- (i) Public source studies;
- (ii) Classified and otherwise confidential studies;
- (iii) Studies, test, or other performance records or data provided by or available to the producer of the specific technology; and
- (iv) Proprietary studies that are available to the Under Secretary.

In considering whether or the extent to which it is feasible to defer a decision on a Designation until additional scientific studies can be conducted on a particular technology, the Under Secretary will bring to bear his or her expertise concerning the protection of the security of the American homeland and will consider the urgency of the need for the technology.

(f) Content of Designation- A Designation shall specify the technology and the Seller(s) of the technology. The Designation may, but need not, also specify others who are required to be covered by the liability insurance required to be purchased by the Seller. The Designation shall include the certification required by Section 101.4 herein. The Designation may also include such other specifications as the Under Secretary may deem to be appropriate. Failure to specify a covered person or party in a Designation will not preclude application of the Act's protections to that person or party.

(g) Government Procurements- The Under Secretary may coordinate a SAFETY Act review in connection with an agency procurement of an anti-terrorism technology in any manner he or she deems appropriate and consistent with the Act and other applicable laws.

(h) Pre-Application Consultations- To the extent that he or she deems it appropriate, the Under Secretary may consult with potential SAFETY Act applicants regarding the need for or advisability of particular types of anti-terrorism technologies, although no pre-approval of any particular technology may be given. The confidentiality provisions in Section 101.8 hereof shall be applicable to such consultations.

101.4 Obligations of Seller.

(a) Liability Insurance Required- Any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides a qualified anti-terrorism technology to Federal and non-Federal Government customers shall obtain liability insurance of such types and in such amounts as shall be required in accordance with this section and certified by the Under Secretary to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from, such act. The Under Secretary may request at any time (before or after the certification process established under this section) that the Seller or any other provider of qualified anti-terrorism technology submit any information that would (i) assist in determining the amount of liability insurance required, or (ii) show that the Seller or any other provider of qualified anti-terrorism technology otherwise has met all the requirements of this section.

(b) Maximum Amount- For the total claims related to one such act of terrorism, the Seller will not be required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available from private sources on the world

market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of the Seller's anti-terrorism technology. The Under Secretary will determine the amount of liability insurance required for each technology, or, to the extent feasible and appropriate, a particular group of technologies. The Under Secretary or his designee may find that – notwithstanding the level of risk exposure for a particular technology, or group of technologies – the maximum amount of liability insurance from private sources on the world market is set at a price or contingent on terms that will unreasonably distort the sales price of a Seller's technology, thereby necessitating liability insurance coverage below the maximum amount available. In determining the amount of liability insurance required, the Under Secretary may consider any factor, including, but not limited to, the following:

- (i) the particular technology at issue;
- (ii) the amount of liability insurance the Seller maintained prior to application;
- (iii) the amount of liability insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller's business as a whole;
- (iv) the amount of liability insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies;
- (v) information regarding the amount of liability insurance offered on the world market;
- (vi) data and history regarding mass casualty losses;
- (vii) the intended use of the technology;

(viii) the requirements of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 regarding the provision of liability insurance for third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism;

(ix) the possible effects of the cost of insurance on the price of the product, and the possible consequences thereof for development, production, or deployment of the technology; and

(x) in the case of a Seller seeking approval to self-insure, the factors described in Section 28.308(d) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(c) Scope of Coverage- Liability insurance obtained pursuant to this subsection shall, in addition to the Seller, protect the following, to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from, an act of terrorism:

(i) Contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller.

(ii) Contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, and vendors of the customer.

(d) Third Party Claims- Any liability insurance required to be obtained under this section shall provide coverage against third party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when the applicable qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act.

(e) Reciprocal Waiver Of Claims- The Seller shall enter into a reciprocal waiver of claims with its contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors, and customers, and contractors and subcontractors of the customers, involved in the manufacture, sale, use, or operation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies, under which each party to the waiver agrees to be responsible for losses, including business interruption losses, that it sustains, or for losses sustained by its own employees resulting from an activity resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act.

(f) Information to be Submitted by the Seller— The Seller shall provide a statement, executed by a duly authorized representative of the Seller, of all liability insurance coverage applicable to third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when the Seller’s Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology has been deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from such act, including:

- (i) Names of insurance companies, policy numbers, and expiration dates;
- (ii) A description of the types and nature of such insurance (including the extent to which the Seller is self-insured or intends to self-insure);
- (iii) Dollar limits per occurrence and annually of such insurance, including any applicable sublimits;
- (iv) Deductibles or self-insured retentions, if any, that are applicable;
- (v) Any relevant exclusions from coverage under such policies;
- (vi) The price for such insurance, if available, and the per-unit amount or percentage of such price directly related to liability coverage for the Seller’s Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology deployed in defense against or response or recovery from an act of terror;
- (vii) Where applicable, whether the liability insurance, in addition to the Seller, protects contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the Seller and contractors, subcontractors, suppliers, vendors and customers of the customer to the extent of their potential liability for involvement in the manufacture, qualification, sale, use or operation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies deployed in defense against, response to, or recovery from an act of terrorism;

(viii) Any limitations on such liability insurance; and

(ix) In the case of a Seller seeking approval to self-insure, all of the information described in Section 28.308(a)(1)-(10) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(g) Seller's Continuing Obligation—The Seller must notify the Under Secretary of any changes in types or amounts of liability insurance coverage for any Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology.

(h) Under Secretary's Certification—For each Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology, the Under Secretary shall certify the amount of insurance required under Section 864 of the Act. The Under Secretary shall include the certification under this section as a part of the applicable Designation. The certification may specify a period of time for which the certification will apply. The Seller of a Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology may at any time petition the Under Secretary for a revision or termination of the certification under this section. The Under Secretary or his designee may at any time request information from the Seller regarding the insurance maintained by the Seller or the amount of insurance available to the Seller.

101.5 Procedures for Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technologies

(a) Application Procedure- Any Seller seeking a Designation shall submit all information supporting such request to the Assistant Secretary for Plans, Programs, and Budget of the Department of Homeland Security Directorate of Science and Technology,

- A reduction of plaintiffs’ recovery by amounts that plaintiffs received from “collateral sources,” such as insurance benefits or other government benefits (§ 863(c)); and
- A rebuttable presumption that the Seller is entitled to the “government contractor defense” (§ 863(d)).

The Act provides that these liability protections are conferred by two separate actions by the Secretary. The Secretary’s designation of a technology as a “qualified anti-terrorism technology” confers all of the liability protections except the rebuttable presumption in favor of the government contractor defense. The presumption in favor of the government contractor defense requires an additional “approval” by the Secretary under § 863(d) of the Act. In many cases, however, the designation and the approval can be conferred simultaneously.

This preamble to the Proposed Rule first addresses the two major aspects of the Act – the designation of qualified anti-terrorism technologies and the approval of technologies for purposes of the government contractor defense. Following that discussion, the preamble addresses specific issues regarding the Proposed Rule and the Department’s interpretation of the Act.

Designation of Qualified Anti-terrorism Technologies

As noted above, the designation of a technology as a qualified anti-terrorism technology confers all of the liability protections provided in the Act, except for the presumption in favor of the government contractor defense. The Act gives the Secretary broad discretion in determining whether to designate a particular technology as a

or such other official of such Directorate as may be designated from time to time by the Under Secretary (“the Assistant Secretary”). The Under Secretary shall make application forms available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____.

(b) Initial Notification- Within 30 days after receipt of an Application for a Designation, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee shall notify the applicant in writing that (i) the Application is complete and will be reviewed, or (ii) that the Application is incomplete, in which case the missing or incomplete parts will be specified.

(c) Review Process- The Assistant Secretary or his or her designee will review each complete Application and any included supporting materials. In performing this function, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee may, but is not required to:

- (i) request additional information from the Seller;
- (ii) meet with representatives of the Seller;
- (iii) consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other federal or nonfederal entity;
- (iv) perform studies or analyses of the technology or the insurance market for such technology; and
- (v) seek information from insurers regarding the availability of insurance for such technology.

(d) Recommendation of the Assistant Secretary- Within 90 days after receipt of a complete Application for a Designation, the Assistant Secretary shall make one of the following recommendations to the Under Secretary regarding such Application: (i) that the Application be approved and a Designation be issued to the Seller; (ii) that the Seller be notified that the technology is potentially eligible for a Designation, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) that the Application be denied. If approval is recommended, the recommendation shall include a recommendation regarding the certification required by Section 101.4 of this Part. The Assistant Secretary may extend the time period beyond 90 days upon notice to the Seller; the Assistant Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension.

(e) Discretionary Notice of Recommendation- The Assistant Secretary may provide notice to the Seller of his recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of the Seller's Application. In no event is the Assistant Secretary required to provide such notice or opportunity to provide additional information.

(f) Action by the Under Secretary- Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation from the Assistant Secretary pursuant to paragraph (d) of this Section, the Under Secretary shall take one of the following actions: (i) approve the Application and issue an appropriate Designation to the Seller, which shall include the certification required by Section 101.4 of this Part; (ii) notify the Seller in writing that the technology is potentially eligible for a Designation, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) deny the Application, and notify the Seller in writing of such decision. The Under Secretary may extend the time period beyond 30 days upon notice to the Seller; the Under Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension. The Under Secretary's decision shall be final and not subject to review, except at the discretion of the Under Secretary.

(g) Term of Designation; Renewal- A Designation shall be valid and effective for a term of five to eight years (as determined by the Under Secretary based upon the technology) commencing on the date of issuance, and the protections conferred by the Designation shall continue in full force and effect indefinitely, after the expiration of the Designation, to all sales of qualified anti-terrorism technologies covered by the Designation that were consummated during such term. At any time after the third anniversary of such issuance, the Seller may apply for renewal of the Designation. The Under Secretary shall make the application form for renewals available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____.

(h) Transfer of Designation- Any Designation may be transferred and assigned to any other person or entity to which the Seller transfers and assigns all right, title, and interest in and to the technology covered by the Designation, including the intellectual property rights therein (or, if the Seller is a licensee of the technology, to any person or entity to which such Seller transfers all of its right, title, and interest in and to the applicable license agreement). Such transfer and assignment of a Designation will not be effective unless and until (i) the Under Secretary is notified in writing of the transfer using the “Application for Transfer of Designation” form issued by the Under Secretary (the Under Secretary shall make this application form available at www.dhs.gov, or by mail by written request sent to _____), and (ii) the transferee complies with all applicable provisions of the SAFETY Act, this Part, and the relevant Designation as if the transferee were the Seller. Upon the effectiveness of such transfer and assignment, the transferee will be deemed to be a Seller in the place and stead of the transferor with respect to the applicable technology for all purposes under the SAFETY Act, this Part,

and the transferred Designation. The transferred Designation will continue to apply to the transferor with respect to all transactions and occurrences that occurred through the time at which the transfer and assignment of the Designation became effective, as specified in the applicable Application for Transfer of Designation.

(i) Application of Designation to Licensees- Any Designation shall apply to any other person or entity to which the Seller licenses (exclusively or nonexclusively) the right to manufacture and sell the technology, in the same manner and to the same extent that such Designation applies to the Seller, effective as of the date of commencement of the license, provided that the Seller notifies the Under Secretary of such license by submitting, within 30 days after such date of commencement, a “Notice of License of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____ . Such notification shall not be required for any licensee listed as a Seller on the applicable Designation.

(j) Termination of Designation Resulting from Substantial Modification- A Designation shall terminate automatically, and have no further force or effect, if the designated Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology is significantly changed or modified in design, components, or method of manufacture. A change or modification in the technology that could significantly affect the safety or effectiveness of the device (e.g., a significant change or modification in design, material, chemical composition, energy source, or manufacturing process) constitutes a significant change or modification. If a Seller is planning a significant change or modification to a designated technology as defined above, such Seller may apply for a corresponding modification of the applicable

101.6 Government Contractor Defense.

The Under Secretary may certify a qualified anti-terrorism technology as an Approved Product for Homeland Security for purposes of establishing a rebuttable presumption of the applicability of the government contractor defense. In determining whether to grant such certification, the Under Secretary or his or her designee shall conduct a comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended. The Seller shall provide safety and hazard analyses and other relevant data and information regarding such technology to the Department in connection with an application. The Under Secretary or his designee may require that the Seller submit any information that the Under Secretary or his designee considers relevant to the application for approval. The Under Secretary or his designee may consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other governmental or non-governmental person or entity, and may consider test results produced by an independent laboratory or other person or entity engaged by the Seller.

101.7 Procedures for Certification of Approved Products for Homeland Security

(a) Application Procedure- A Seller seeking certification of anti-terrorism technology as an Approved Product for Homeland Security under Section 101.6 (a “Certification”) shall submit all information supporting such request to the Assistant Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make application forms available at www.dhs.gov, and copies may also be obtained by mail by sending a request to _____.

An Application for a Certification may not be filed unless the Seller has also filed an Application for Designation of Qualified Anti-Terrorism Technology for the same technology. The two applications may be filed simultaneously and may be reviewed simultaneously.

(b) Initial Notification- Within 30 days after receipt of an Application for a Certification, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee shall notify the applicant in writing that (i) the Application is complete and will be reviewed, or (ii) that the Application is incomplete, in which case the missing or incomplete parts will be specified.

(c) Review Process- The Assistant Secretary or his or her designee will review each complete Application for a Certification and any included supporting materials. In performing this function, the Assistant Secretary or his or her designee may, but is not required to:

- (i) request additional information from the Seller;
- (ii) meet with representatives of the Seller;
- (iii) consult with, and rely upon the expertise of, any other federal or nonfederal entity; and
- (iv) perform or seek studies or analyses of the technology.

(d) Recommendation of the Assistant Secretary- Within 90 days after receipt of a complete Application for a Certification, the Assistant Secretary shall make one of the following recommendations to the Under Secretary regarding such Application: (i) that the Application be approved and a Certification be issued to the Seller; (ii) that the Seller be notified that the technology is potentially eligible for a Certification, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) that the Application be denied. The Assistant Secretary may extend the time period beyond 90 days upon notice to the Seller; the Assistant Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension.

(e) Discretionary Notice of Recommendation- The Assistant Secretary may provide notice to the Seller of his or her recommendation to the Under Secretary and an opportunity for the Seller to provide additional information in support of the Seller's Application. In no event is the Assistant Secretary required to provide such notice or opportunity to provide additional information.

(f) Action by the Under Secretary- Within 30 days after receiving a recommendation from the Assistant Secretary pursuant to paragraph (d) of this Section, the Under Secretary shall take one of the following actions: (i) approve the Application and issue an appropriate Certification to the Seller; (ii) notify the Seller in writing that the technology is potentially eligible for a Certification, but that additional specified information is needed before a decision may be reached; or (iii) deny the Application, and notify the Seller in writing of such decision. The Under Secretary may extend the time period beyond 30 days upon notice to the Seller, and the Under Secretary is not required to provide a reason or cause for such extension. The Under Secretary's decision shall be final and not subject to review, except at the discretion of the Under Secretary.

(g) Designation is a Pre-Condition- The Under Secretary may approve an Application for a Certification only if the Under Secretary has also approved an Application for a Designation for the same technology under Section 101.3.

(h) Term of Certification; Renewal- A Certification shall be valid and effective for the same period of time for which the related Designation is issued, and shall terminate upon the termination of such related Designation. The Seller may apply for renewal of the Certification in connection with an application for renewal of the related Designation. An application for renewal must be made using the “Application for Certification of an Approved Product for Homeland Security” form issued by the Under Secretary.

(i) Application of Certification to Licensees- Any Certification shall apply to any other person or entity to which the Seller licenses (exclusively or nonexclusively) the right to manufacture and sell the technology, in the same manner and to the same extent that such Certification applies to the Seller, effective as of the date of commencement of the license, provided that the Seller notifies the Under Secretary of such license by submitting, within 30 days after such date of commencement, a “Notice of License of Approved Anti-Terrorism Technology” form issued by the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary shall make this form available at www.dhs.gov or by mail upon request sent to _____ . Such notification shall not be required for any licensee listed as a Seller on the applicable Certification.

(j) Transfer of Certification- In the event of any permitted transfer and assignment of a Designation, any related Certification for the same anti-terrorism technology shall automatically be deemed to be transferred and assigned to the same transferee to which such Designation is transferred and assigned. The transferred Certification will continue to apply to the transferor with respect to all transactions and occurrences that occurred through the time at which such transfer and assignment of the Certification became effective.

(k) Issuance of Certificate; Approved Product List- For anti-terrorism technology reviewed and approved by the Under Secretary and for which a Certification is issued, the Under Secretary shall issue a certificate of conformance to the Seller and place the anti-terrorism technology on an Approved Product List for Homeland Security.

101.8 Confidentiality/Protection of Intellectual Property

The Secretary, in consultation with the Office of Management and Budget and appropriate Federal law enforcement and intelligence officials, and in a manner consistent with existing protections for sensitive or classified information, shall establish confidentiality protocols for maintenance and use of information submitted to the Department under the SAFETY Act and this Part. Such protocols shall, among other things, ensure that the Department will utilize all appropriate exemptions from the Freedom of Information Act.

101.9 Definitions

(1) ASSISTANT SECRETARY– The term “Assistant Secretary” means the Assistant Secretary for Plans, Programs, and Budget of the Department of Homeland Security Directorate of Science and Technology, or such other official of such Directorate as may be designated from time to time by the Under Secretary.

(2) CERTIFICATION– The term “Certification” means a certification that a qualified anti-terrorism technology for which a Designation has been issued will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller’s specifications, and is safe for use as intended.

(3) CONTRACTOR– The term “contractor” of a Seller means any person or entity with whom or with which the Seller has entered into a contract relating to the manufacture, sale, use, or operation of anti-terrorism technology for which a Designation is issued (regardless of whether such contract is entered into before or after the issuance of such Designation), including, without limitation, an independent laboratory or other entity engaged in testing or verifying the safety, utility, performance, effectiveness of such technology, or the conformity of such technology to the Seller’s specifications.

(4) DESIGNATION– The term “Designation” means a designation of a qualified anti-terrorism technology under the SAFETY Act issued by the Under Secretary under authority delegated by the Secretary of Homeland Security.

(5) LOSS– The term 'loss' means death, bodily injury, or loss of or damage to property, including business interruption loss (which is a component of loss of or damage to property).

(6) PHYSICAL HARM– The term 'physical harm' as used in the Act shall mean a physical injury to the body that caused, either temporarily or permanently, partial or total physical disability, incapacity or disfigurement. In no event shall physical harm include mental pain, anguish, or suffering, or fear of injury.

(7) SAFETY ACT or ACT– The term “SAFETY Act” or “Act” means the Support Anti-terrorism by Fostering Effective Technologies Act of 2002, enacted as Subtitle G of Title VIII of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Public Law 107-296.

(8) SELLER– The term “Seller” means any person or entity that sells or otherwise provides anti-terrorism technology to Federal and non-Federal Government customers for

“qualified anti-terrorism technology,” although the Act sets forth the following criteria that must be considered to the extent that they are applicable to the technology: (1) prior United States Government use or demonstrated substantial utility and effectiveness; (2) availability of the technology for immediate deployment; (3) the potential liability of the Seller; (4) the likelihood that the technology will not be deployed unless the SAFETY Act protections are conferred; (5) the risk to the public if the technology is not deployed; (6) evaluation of scientific studies; and (7) the effectiveness of the technology in defending against acts of terrorism. These criteria are not exclusive – the Secretary may consider other factors that he deems appropriate. The Secretary has discretion to give greater weight to some factors over others, and the relative weighting of the various criteria may vary based upon the particular technology at issue and the threats that the technology is designed to address. The Secretary may, in his discretion, determine that failure to meet a particular criterion justifies denial of an application under the SAFETY Act. However, the Secretary is not required to reject an application that fails to meet one or more of the criteria. Rather the Secretary, after considering all of the relevant criteria, may conclude that a particular technology merits designation as a “qualified anti-terrorism technology” even if a particular criterion is not satisfied. The Secretary’s considerations will also vary with the constantly evolving threats and conditions that give rise to the need for the technologies.

The SAFETY Act applies to a very broad range of technologies, including products, services, software, and other forms of intellectual property, as long as the Secretary, as an exercise of discretion and judgment, determines that a technology merits designation under the statutory criteria. Further, as the statutory criteria suggest, a which a Designation has been issued under this Part (unless the context requires otherwise).

(9) UNDER SECRETARY– The term “Under Secretary” means the Under Secretary for Science and Technology of the Department of Homeland Security.

“qualified anti-terrorism technology” is not necessarily required to be newly developed – it may have already been employed (e.g. “prior United States Government use”) or may be a new application of an existing technology.

The Act also provides that, before designating a “qualified anti-terrorism technology,” the Secretary will examine the amount of liability insurance the Seller of the technology proposes to maintain for coverage of the technology at issue. Under Section 864(a), the Secretary must certify that the coverage level is appropriate “to satisfy otherwise compensable third-party claims arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies have been deployed.” § 864(a)(1). The Act further provides that “the Seller is not required to obtain liability insurance of more than the maximum amount of liability insurance reasonably available in the world market at prices and terms that will not unreasonably distort the sales price of Seller’s anti-terrorism technologies.” § 864(a)(2).

The Secretary does not intend to set a “one-size-fits all” numerical requirement regarding required insurance coverage for all technologies. Instead, as the Act suggests, the inquiry will be specific to each application and may involve an examination of several factors, including the following: the amount of insurance the Seller has previously maintained; the amount of insurance maintained by the Seller for other technologies or for the Seller’s business as a whole; the amount of insurance typically maintained by sellers of comparable technologies; data and history regarding mass casualty losses; and the particular technology at issue. The Secretary will not require insurance beyond the point at which the cost of coverage would “unreasonably distort” the price of the technology. Once the Secretary concludes the analysis regarding the appropriate level of insurance coverage (which might include discussions with the Seller in appropriate cases), the Secretary will identify in a short certification a description of the coverage appropriate for the particular qualified anti-terrorism technology. If, during the term of the designation, the Seller would like to request reconsideration of that insurance certification due to changed circumstances or for other reasons, the Seller may do so. If the Seller fails to maintain coverage at the certified level during that time period, the liability protections of the Act will continue to apply, but the Seller's liability limit will remain at the certified insurance level. Such failure, however, will be regarded as a negative factor in the consideration of any future application by the Seller for renewal of the applicable designation, and perhaps in any other application by the Seller.

Government Contractor Defense

The Act creates a rebuttable presumption that the government contractor defense applies to qualified anti-terrorism technologies "approved by the Secretary" in accordance with certain criteria specified in § 863(d)(2). The government contractor defense is an affirmative defense that immunizes Sellers from liability for certain claims brought under § 863(a) of the Act. See § 863(d)(1). The presumption of this defense applies to all "approved" qualified anti-terrorism technologies for claims brought in a "product liability or other lawsuit" and "arising out of, relating to, or resulting from an act of terrorism when qualified anti-terrorism technologies . . . have been deployed in defense against or response or recovery from such act and such claims result or may result in loss to the Seller." Id. While the government contractor defense is a judicially-created doctrine, Section 863's express terms supplant many of the requirements in the case law for application of the defense.

First, and most obviously, the Act expressly provides that the government contractor defense is available not only to government contractors, but also to sales to state and local governments and the private sector. See § 863(d)(1) (“This presumption of the government contractor defense shall apply regardless of whether the claim against the Seller arises from a sale of the product to Federal Government or non-Federal Government customers.”).

Second, Sellers of qualified anti-terrorism technologies need not design their technologies to federal government specifications in order to obtain the government contractor defense under the SAFETY Act. Instead, the Act sets forth criteria for the Department's “approval” of technologies. Specifically, the Act provides that during the process of approval for the government contractor defense the Secretary will conduct a “comprehensive review of the design of such technology and determine whether it will perform as intended, conforms to the Seller's specifications, and is safe for use as intended.” § 863(d)(2). The Act also provides that the Seller will “conduct safety and hazard analyses” and supply such information to the Secretary. Id. This express statutory framework thus governs in lieu of the requirements developed in case law for the application of the government contractor defense.

Third, the Act expressly states the limited circumstances in which the applicability of the defense can be rebutted. The Act provides expressly that the presumption can be overcome only by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology. See § 863(d)(1) (“This presumption shall only be overcome by evidence showing that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology under this subsection.”).

The applicability of the government contractor defense to particular technologies is thus governed by these express provisions of the Act, rather than by the judicially-developed criteria for applicability of the government contractor defense outside the context of the SAFETY Act.

While the Act does not expressly delineate the scope of the defense (i.e., the types of claims that the defense bars), the Act and the legislative history make clear that the scope is broad. For example, it is clear that any Seller of an “approved” technology cannot be held liable under the Act for design defects or failure to warn claims, unless the presumption of the defense is rebutted by evidence that the Seller acted fraudulently or with willful misconduct in submitting information to the Secretary during the course of the Secretary's consideration of such technology.

The government contractor defense under Boyle and its progeny bars a broad range of claims. The Supreme Court in Boyle concluded that “state law which holds Government contractors liable for design defects” can present a significant conflict with federal policy (including the discretionary function exception to the Federal Tort Claims Act) and therefore “must be displaced.” Boyle v. United Technologies Corp., 487 U.S. 500, 512 (1988). The Department believes that Congress incorporated the Supreme Court's Boyle line of cases as it existed on the date of enactment of the SAFETY Act, rather than incorporating future developments of the government contractor defense in

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

KATE SNOW: They're neck and neck with the gang at "60 Minutes" in terms of age, averaging right around 70 years old. And the question of who will replace them when they retire is one of the most important and controversial questions facing the country today.

We're talking, of course, about members of the Supreme Court, and the intense speculation over who's staying, who's going, and who might one day join them.

Here's CNN's Jeff Greenfield.

(BEGIN VIDEOTAPE)

JEFF GREENFIELD, CNN SENIOR ANALYST (voice-over): Question, what makes this television ad attacking the president's Supreme Court nominee unusual?

Answer, the president doesn't have a Supreme Court nominee.

But the mere possibility or rumor or hunch that Chief Justice William Rehnquist or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor or some other Supreme Court justice might step down when the court term ends this summer, well, that was enough to start troop maneuvers in what will almost surely be the biggest domestic battle of this Bush's presidency.

While the Senate has battled over lower court federal judges for years, it's been more than nine years since a Supreme Court vacancy has occurred. That's the longest such gap since the 1820s.

And given the enormous power of these lifetime Supreme Court appointments, the power to strike down state and federal laws, the power to expand or limit or define rights, maybe it's not surprising that this nonpolitical branch of the federal government has in recent decades become an increasingly political battleground.

In 1968, after years of noncontroversial Supreme Court appointments, a Senate filibuster helped doom President Johnson's bid to elevate Justice Abe Fortas to chief justice. A Democratic Senate rejected both of President Nixon's first two high court nominees, Clement Haynesworth and Harold Carswell.

In 1987, another Democratic Senate turned down President Reagan's choice of Robert Bork. And in 1991, the Democratic-controlled Senate barely confirmed Clarence Thomas after perhaps the most bitter and divisive of fights.

Now, says former White House counsel Boyden Gray, who will help lead a political fight to confirm Bush's nominee, liberal interest groups are determined to block just about any choice.

C. BOYDEN GRAY, WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL, 1989-1993: What they have said is they will oppose anybody. They can't believe that the president will nominate someone who would be acceptable, so they're geared up to oppose whoever it is.

SEN. CHARLES SCHUMER (D), NEW YORK: The only time we really oppose things is when the president nominates someone way out of the mainstream. And this president, unfortunately, has chosen his judges through an ideological prism to a far greater extent than any president in history.

GREENFIELD: New York Senator Chuck Schumer says the Senate should quiz nominees about their views. But he's also submitted to the president a list of judges appointed by Republicans who would, he said, find support from most Democrats. But, he adds...

SCHUMER: If the president is going to try to change America not through the Congress, not through the presidency, but rather through filling the courts, stacking the courts with nominees who are so far over, then obviously there'll be a fight.

GREENFIELD: On that point, Boyden Gray agrees.

GRAY: If the president nominates a justice or a potential justice that we should be prepared, he, the White House, and outside supporters, should be prepared to support and oppose those who would misrepresent the candidate, the nominee.

GREENFIELD (on camera): Mr. Bush's conservative base well remembers how the first President Bush put a moderate liberal, David Souter, on the court. They want no such nominee this time. And President Bush himself has cited conservative heroes Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas as his favorite justices.

Liberals see the court as their only protection against a rollback of precedents in areas such as abortion. They want Democrats in the Senate to use every measure they can to block any justice with strong conservative views. When it comes, this battle is going to be a doozy.

Jeff Greenfield, CNN, New York.

(END VIDEOTAPE)

SNOW: A doozy of a battle, as Jeff put it, but it might be coming. There are also some big decisions we know are coming over the next few weeks, decisions that are expected in cases involving homosexuality, affirmative action, and free speech at public libraries.

Thanks so much -- we'll drop the recommendations clause point because it doesn't really further the ball much anyway, and you are certainly right about your concerns. I changed the last sentence to speak to Presidents generally; perhaps that helps?

Thanks again -- I take it you believe such a letter would be helpful?

Schumer, Clinton Block N.Y. Judges
SOUTHERN DISTRICT, S MUKASEY WRITES THE SENIOR SENATOR
By TIMOTHY STARKS Staff Reporter of the Sun

ÿÿÿÿWASHINGTON * Almost a year after President Bush nominated them, two candidates to fill federal judgeships in New York City have yet to receive endorsements from Senators Clinton and Schumer that would allow them to go forward for a Senate vote.

ÿÿÿÿThe situation means that other federal judges in the city are overworked and that it takes longer for some cases to be heard. The nonpartisan Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts has declared both vacancies "judicial emergencies" as a result of the heavy caseloads.

ÿÿÿÿIn an effort to move the situation along, the chief judge of the Southern District of New York, Michael Mukasey, recently sent a letter to Mr. Schumer asking for speedy confirmation of nominees for three vacancies in his court. One of the nominees, Richard Holwell, has been waiting since August of last year.

ÿÿÿÿ"Look, it, s not a crisis * on the other hand, it, s creating problems," Judge Mukasey told The New York Sun in a phone interview. "We need people."

ÿÿÿÿJudge Mukasey said his letter to Mr. Schumer noted that all three Bush nominees to the Southern District received the highest rating possible from the American Bar Association.

ÿÿÿÿAnd the chief judge of the Eastern District of New York, Edward Korman, said three vacancies on his court * particularly the one slated to be filled by Sandra Feuerstein, nominated in July of last year * "are really hurting."

ÿÿÿÿJudge Korman said the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts has proposed legislation adding three more active judges to the Eastern District, s current 15-judge roster.

ÿÿÿÿ"That means we have 12 judges doing the work that the office has assumed we need 18 to do," Judge Korman told the Sun in a phone interview.

ÿÿÿÿIn the case of Judge Feuerstein, the vacancy existed for almost a year and a half before she was nominated by Mr. Bush. "All of the vacancies are a problem, especially hers, since she, s been waiting so long," Judge Korman said.

ÿÿÿÿThe Southern District of New York includes Manhattan, Bronx, Westchester, and some other northern suburbs; the Eastern District includes Brooklyn, Queens, Long Island, and Staten Island.

ÿÿÿÿThe nominees are tied up in a complicated and long-standing feud between Governor Pataki, Mr. Schumer, the White House, and the Senate Judiciary Committee over who gets to select how many judges, sources said.

ÿÿÿÿQualifications also have factored in to the feud; last year, Mr. Schumer opposed Mr. Pataki's selection for U.S. attorney in the Northern District, he said, because she lacked experience as a prosecutor.

ÿÿÿÿOnly two of Mr. Bush's district court nominees across the country have been waiting longer for confirmation than Mr. Holwell and Ms. Feuerstein. Both candidates have received the highest possible "wellqualified" rating from the American Bar Association.

ÿÿÿÿBoth New York nominees, as well, have ties to Mr. Pataki, particularly Mr. Holwell. Mr. Holwell, a commercial litigator with the firm White and Case, graduated in 1970 from the same class as Mr. Pataki at Columbia University Law School, and the two are said to be friends. He also successfully represented the governor in court during a 1997 challenge of Mr. Pataki's authority to remove a district attorney who seemed hesitant to press the death penalty in a case involving the slaying of a police officer.

ÿÿÿÿMr. Pataki appointed Judge Feuerstein * who, before becoming a judge, ran an unsuccessful 1980 campaign as a Republican against a Long Island Assemblyman * in 1994 to a state appeals court.

ÿÿÿÿA spokeswoman for the Senate Judiciary Committee, Margarita Tapia, said neither Democratic senator had turned in their "blue slips" signaling they approve of the home state judicial nominees. The traditional policy is that no hearings are held on a judicial nominee unless both home state senators turn in the blue slips first.

ÿÿÿÿA spokesman for Mrs. Clinton did not respond to repeated phone calls and emails requesting comment on the reason she had not submitted her blue slips. A spokesman for Mr. Schumer said the senator was still looking at the nominations.

ÿÿÿÿ"Senator Schumer is still reviewing these nominations and is working with the White House to put the best qualified and fairest judges on New York's federal bench," the spokesman, Phil Singer, said.

ÿÿÿÿMr. Schumer and the White House have found increasing common ground on several nominees. Mr. Schumer has made announcements in recent months that the two parties have reached agreements on the nominations of Dora Irizarry and Richard Wesley to the Eastern District, and Stephen Robinson and Kevin Castel to the Southern District. Of those nominees, only Mr. Wesley has received a hearing in the Judiciary Committee and been confirmed.

ÿÿÿÿEarlier this year, the Republican chairman of that committee, Senator Hatch of Utah, said he would consider ignoring the blue-slip policy on some judicial nominees. However, he has not done so in the case of the Mr. Holwell and Ms. Feuerstein, and Ms. Tapia declined to comment on why he had not.

ÿÿÿÿA spokeswoman for the White House, Ashley Snee, said, "As the president has said, he hopes all of his nominees receive prompt up or down votes."

ÿÿÿÿNeither the Alliance for Justice nor People for the American Way, two groups that have opposed many of Mr. Bush's judicial nominees, have Mr. Holwell or Ms. Feuerstein on their radar of objectionable candidates, spokeswomen for the groups said.

ÿÿÿÿMr. Holwell was first nominated on August 1, 2002, and renominated in January of this year.

ÿÿÿÿJudge Feuerstein, an associate justice of the New York State Supreme Court, Appellate Division, was first nominated to the federal bench on July 26, 2002, and also renominated in January of this year.

ÿÿÿÿA spokesman for Mr. Pataki did not return calls seeking comment.

Sad to say, Josh would like to do a murder board Sunday afternoon to prepare for his Monday staff deal. Not a command performance for those who have out of town plans (like me), but if we could get some combination of Austin, Eric, Trent, Wendy (and anyone else you think might be particularly helpful--Robert Shea?) in for 90 minutes sometime late Sunday afternoon, that would be great. Please let me know who will be available. Thanks guys (and sorry).

President Bush plans to nominate White House lawyer Brett M. Kavanaugh, an author of independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr's report on President Bill Clinton, for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Republican sources said yesterday.

The disclosure came as Bush issued a curt rejection to Democratic senators who had offered to alleviate a fight over a future Supreme Court vacancy by working with him to find a nominee both sides could accept.

Kavanaugh's nomination would suggest Bush is spoiling for a fight with Senate Democrats while the administration's selection of judges is already a raw issue between the parties. The D.C. Circuit court is considered the second most powerful in the land. Kavanaugh, 38, was involved in many of the Clinton administration's legal controversies, and he has played a key role in choosing Bush's judicial nominees.

Kavanaugh is undergoing an FBI background check in preparation for his nomination, which will not be announced immediately. He was an appellate expert in Starr's office from 1994 to 1998, and worked on the investigation of Monica S. Lewinsky. He represented Starr in efforts to obtain notes from Hillary Rodham Clinton, now a senator, relating to the suicide of deputy White House counsel Vincent Foster. Kavanaugh's contribution to the Starr report was the section that outlined possible legal grounds for impeachment.

Kavanaugh was a partner with Kirkland & Ellis before becoming an associate White House counsel in January 2001. He has undergraduate and law degrees from Yale, and was a clerk for Justice Anthony M. Kennedy.

The D.C. Circuit court has openings on its 11th and 12th seats, and Republicans blocked Clinton from filling at least one of them by arguing that additional judges were not needed.

Bush's rebuff of the overture by Senate Democrats, a departure from his frequent contention that he is eager to work with Congress, is part of intense positioning by both parties for the possibility that a Supreme Court justice will retire at the end of this term. Senate Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) wrote to Bush on Tuesday to recommend that the president convene a meeting of Senate leaders to begin a bipartisan process of consultation.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer called the idea a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process, and said Bush plans no such meeting. The Constitution gives the president sole power to nominate justices, and then the Senate decides whether to confirm them.

The Constitution is clear, the Constitution will be followed, Fleischer said. We always welcome thoughts, but certainly no one wants to suggest that the Constitution be altered.

Fleischer said White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales is always happy to meet and talk with these individual senators. A twist is that Gonzales, a former justice of the Texas Supreme Court, is one of Bush's most obvious potential nominees.

Gonzales wrote to Daschle yesterday that in case of a vacancy, the Senate will have an opportunity to assess the president's nominee and exercise its constitutional responsibility. He has sent similar letters to other Senate Democrats.

The selection of judges, from federal district courts to the Supreme Court, is always a bitterly contested issue for the most ideologically committed wings of both parties. It is even more so now because of the GOP's narrow hold on the Senate, and because of rumors about the possible retirement of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, or even both.

A group called Faith2Action is linking with some of the nation's best-known conservative organizations for Project Rosebud, which plans to deliver thousands of roses to the White House next week in support of an antiabortion nominee for any Supreme Court vacancy.

Sen. Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.), a Judiciary Committee member, wrote Bush last week to suggest potential consensus nominees. Schumer suggested five moderate Republicans, including Sen. Arlen Specter (Pa.).

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (Vt.), ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, had first suggested the bipartisan summit in a separate letter to Bush last week. Leahy said that Democrats were ready to work with you to help select a nominee or nominees to the Supreme Court behind which all Americans, and all senators, can unite.

Bradford A. Berenson, a former associate White House counsel for Bush, called the letters a political stunt to help Democrats blame the president for the ugly confirmation fight it appears they already have planned.

Democrats, who contend they are not proposing anything radical, are circulating pages from a book by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) in which he takes credit for suggesting to Clinton the nomination of two sitting justices, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Hatch wrote last year in his memoir, Square Peg, that he had asked Clinton whether he had considered Breyer or Ginsburg. President Clinton indicated he had heard Breyer's name but had not thought about Judge Ginsburg, Hatch recounted.

Hatch said Tuesday on C-SPAN that Democrats were trying to preempt a conservative nominee. Even though President Clinton did consult with me as chairman of the committee, he made the final decisions, Hatch said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) said the best way for Bush to avoid a major fight would be to consult with the Senate and send up nominees

??without ideological chips on their shoulders.??

Purpose: PROPOSED MEDICAL CRITERIA — DRAFT LANGUAGE
NEW SECTION 124 This amendment replaces the current section 124 on medical criteria. It adds a level for severe asbestosis, and utilizes the weighted exposure framework, which recognizes the heavier exposure in earlier years. It also creates three categories for the lung cancer claimants — smoker, former smoker and non-smoker.

Viz:

- 1 On page 21, beginning after line 24, insert new section 114(h)
- 2 and redesignate existing section 114(h) as section 114(i), as
- 3 follows:
- 4 (h) Medical Advisory Committee. —
- 5 (A) The chief judge may appoint a Medical

1 purposes of providing appropriate medical advice relating

6 (B) To be eligible to be appointed to the Medical

8 (i) be a physician licensed in any State;

9 (ii) be board-certified in pulmonary medicine,
10 occupational medicine, internal medicine, oncology
11 or pathology; and

12 (iii) be actively and primarily practicing medicine in a
13 field directly related to the physician's board certification.]

15 follows:

16 (c) EXCEPTIONAL MEDICAL CLAIMS. — A claimant who
17 does not meet the medical criteria requirements under 18 subsections (a) and (b) may apply for designation of his or her 19 claim as an exceptional medical claim under this subsection. To 20 submit an application for review of an exceptional medical

2 medical criteria requirements in subsections (a) and (b), or (ii)
3 seek designation as an exceptional medical claim within sixty
4 (60) days after a determination that the claim is ineligible solely
5 for failure to meet the medical criteria requirements under
6 subsections (a) and (b).

7 (1) Any claimant applying for designation of his
8 or her claim as an exceptional medical claim must support
9 his or her application with a report from a physician
10 meeting the requirements of section 122. In addition to 11 the requirements of section 122, the report must include:
12 (i) a complete review of the exposed person's medical
13 history and current condition; (ii) such additional material
14 by way of analysis and documentation as shall be 15 prescribed by regulation; and (iii) a detailed explanation as 16 to why the claim meets the standard for acceptance under 17 paragraph (2).

18 (2) At regular intervals, the Asbestos Court shall 19 refer the applications and supporting documentation to the 20 Medical Advisory Committee established pursuant to

1 section 114(h) to review all applications for designation as
2 an exceptional medical claim that were submitted during
3 the prior relevant period. The standard to be applied for 4 designation as an exceptional medical claim shall be that
5 the claimant, for reasons beyond his or her control, cannot
6 satisfy the requirements under subsections (a) and (b), but
7 is able, through comparably reliable evidence that meets
8 the standards under section 122, to show that the claimant
9 has an asbestos-related condition that is substantially
10 comparable to that of a medical condition that would
11 satisfy the requirements of a category under subsection
12 (b). The Medical Advisory Committee, if it deems
13 necessary, may request additional, reasonable testing to 14 support the claimant's application.

15 (3) A claimant may submit a CT Scan in addition
16 to an x-ray.

17 (4) If the Medical Advisory Committee
18 determines that the medical evidence is sufficient to show
19 a comparable asbestos-related condition, it shall issue a
20 certificate of medical eligibility which shall designate the

1 disease category under subsection (b) as to which the
2 claimant may be eligible to seek compensation. Any
3 claim as to which such certificate shall issue shall then be
4 referred to a magistrate pursuant to section 114(b), who
5 shall determine whether the claimant meets all of the other
6 requirements for compensation under this Act.

7 (5) Any claimant whose application for
8 designation as an exceptional medical claim is rejected
9 may resubmit his or her application if new evidence
10 becomes available, but no more frequently than once every 11 two years. Upon resubmission of an application, the 12 claimant shall identify any prior applications and state the 13 new evidence that is the basis for the resubmission.

14 (6) The chief judge shall promulgate regulations

Viz:

1 On page 21, beginning after line 24, insert new section 114(h)

2 and redesignate existing section 114(h) as section 114(i), as

4 (h) Medical Advisory Committee. —

5 (A) The chief judge may appoint a Medical

6 Advisory Committee consisting of qualified physicians for

1 purposes of providing appropriate medical advice relating
2 to the review of claims. Magistrates and claims examiners 3 may refer questions concerning medical eligibility of 4 claimants to the committee for its advice and 5 recommendations.

6 (B) To be eligible to be appointed to the Medical 7 Advisory Committee, a person must —

8 (i) be a physician licensed in any State;

9 (ii) be board-certified in pulmonary medicine,
10 occupational medicine, internal medicine, oncology
11 or pathology; and

12 (iii) be actively and primarily practicing medicine in a
13 field directly related to the physician's board certification.]

15 follows:

16 (c) EXCEPTIONAL MEDICAL CLAIMS. — A claimant who
17 does not meet the medical criteria requirements under 18 subsections (a) and (b) may apply for designation of his or her
19 claim as an exceptional medical claim under this subsection. To 20 submit an application for review of an exceptional medical

3 seek designation as an exceptional medical claim within sixty
4 (60) days after a determination that the claim is ineligible solely
6 subsections (a) and (b).

7 (1) Any claimant applying for designation of his
8 or her claim as an exceptional medical claim must support
9 his or her application with a report from a physician
10 meeting the requirements of section 122. In addition to 11 the requirements of section 122, the report must include:
12 (i) a complete review of the exposed person's medical
13 history and current condition; (ii) such additional material
14 by way of analysis and documentation as shall be
15 prescribed by regulation; and (iii) a detailed explanation as 16 to why the claim meets the standard for acceptance under
17 paragraph (2).

18 (2) At regular intervals, the Asbestos Court shall 19 refer the applications and supporting documentation to the
20 Medical Advisory Committee established pursuant to

1 section 114(h) to review all applications for designation as
3 the prior relevant period. The standard to be applied for
4 designation as an exceptional medical claim shall be that
5 the claimant, for reasons beyond his or her control, cannot
6 satisfy the requirements under subsections (a) and (b), but
7 is able, through comparably reliable evidence that meets
8 the standards under section 122, to show that the claimant
9 has an asbestos-related condition that is substantially
10 comparable to that of a medical condition that would
11 satisfy the requirements of a category under subsection
12 (b). The Medical Advisory Committee, if it deems
13 necessary, may request additional, reasonable testing to 14 support the claimant's application.

15 (3) A claimant may submit a CT Scan in addition
16 to an x-ray.

17 (4) If the Medical Advisory Committee
18 determines that the medical evidence is sufficient to show
19 a comparable asbestos-related condition, it shall issue a
20 certificate of medical eligibility which shall designate the

1 disease category under subsection (b) as to which the
3 claim as to which such certificate shall issue shall then be
4 referred to a magistrate pursuant to section 114(b), who
5 shall determine whether the claimant meets all of the other
6 requirements for compensation under this Act.

7 (5) Any claimant whose application for
8 designation as an exceptional medical claim is rejected
9 may resubmit his or her application if new evidence
10 becomes available, but no more frequently than once every 11 two years. Upon resubmission of an application, the 12 claimant shall identify any prior applications and state the 13 new evidence that is the basis for the resubmission.

14 (6) The chief judge shall promulgate regulations
15 consistent with the statute governing the procedures for 16 seeking designation of a claim as an exceptional medical 17 claim.

18 (7) All claims filed by Libby, Montana claimants 19 shall be designated as exceptional medical claims and 20 referred to the Medical Advisory Committee for review.

1 In reviewing the medical evidence submitted by a Libby,
2 Montana claimant in support of his or her claim, and prior
3 to making a eligibility determination for a Libby, Montana
4 claimant, the Medical Advisory Committee shall 5 review the current medical and scientific literature relating 6 to the study, diagnosis and treatment of asbestos-related
7 diseases resulting from exposure to asbestos and other
8 fibers found in and around Libby, Montana, including 9 public health assessments prepared by the Agency for 10 Toxic Substances and Disease Registry for the Libby 11 Asbestos Site. The Medical Advisory Committee shall 12 take into consideration the unique and serious nature of 13 asbestos exposure in Libby, Montana, including the 14 debilitating nature of pleural disease related to asbestos-15 exposure in Libby, when making a determination of 16 eligibility and designating the disease category.

Medical Screening/Monitoring

This amendment would set up an efficient and reliable screening program for people in high risk occupations to be sure that those who were injured are identified and paid, and then to provide regular monitoring of those who have less serious medical problems that cannot yet be compensated under the bill.

Sec XXX: Education, Consultation, Screening and Monitoring

(a) General: - There is established within the Asbestos Trust Fund a program for the education, consultation, medical screening and medical monitoring of persons with exposure to asbestos. The program shall be funded by the Asbestos Trust Fund and administered by the Administrator.

(b) Outreach and Education Within 180 days after the implementation of this Act, the Administrator shall establish an outreach and education program designed to provide information about asbestos-related medical conditions to members of populations at risk of developing these conditions.

1. The information provided to these populations will include information about the signs and symptoms of asbestos-related medical conditions; the value of appropriate medical screening programs; and actions that the individuals at risk can take to reduce their future health risks related to asbestos.
2. The administrator is encouraged to contract with outside organizations to provide these educational programs. Preference shall be given to providers which are existing not-for-profit organizations with a history and experience of providing occupational health outreach and educational programs for asbestos-exposed workers.

(c) Coverage and Application: Each person who can demonstrate through work histories or other documentation an exposure to asbestos (as described below) his or hers voluntary discretion, is entitled to participate in the medical screening and medical monitoring program established by this Act.

(d ) Medical Screening Program: Within 180 days after the implementation of this act, the Administrator shall establish a medical screening program for persons with past exposure to asbestos who have not yet been diagnosed with an asbestos-related illness. For the purposes of this section medical screening program means an initial program consultation, medical examination and work history of persons previously exposed to asbestos who have not been diagnosed with an asbestos-related illness.

The Program shall establish:

1. Eligibility criteria for the medical screening program based on a past history of occupational exposure to asbestos. To the extent feasible (and in order to ease application to the program), such criteria shall establish eligibility for screening based on a history of work in an asbestos-related occupation and/or industry during a specific time period and for a minimum duration. These industries and occupations shall include, but not be limited to, the occupations and industries identified as meeting the weighted exposure criteria for lung cancer, (asbestosis and pleural disease) specified in Disease Categories Level I, II, III, VII and VIII.

2. Protocols for medical screening, which shall include but not be limited to:
  - i. Administration of a health evaluation and work history questionnaire;
  - ii. Physical examination including blood pressure measurement, chest examination and examination for clubbing.
  - iii. AP and lateral chest x-ray;
  - iv. Spirometry performed according to ATS standards;
  - v. Educational sessions on asbestos exposures, asbestos-related diseases and asbestos disease compensation criteria.
3. The frequency with this medical screening shall be provided or available to eligible individuals, which initially shall not be less than every five years.
4. The qualifications of the medical and/or program providers administering these protocols.
5. A list of medical and/or program providers eligible to provide these protocols who meet minimal medical and program standards established by the Administrator. Preference shall be given to medical providers and program providers which are existing not-for-profit organization with a history and experience of providing or contracting for medical screening programs for persons previously exposed to asbestos; and with a demonstrated capacity for identifying, contacting, and evaluating populations of workers or others previously exposed to asbestos; and with experience in establishing networks of medical providers to conduct medical screening and medical monitoring examinations. To the extent possible, these screening programs should be coordinated with the outreach and education programs described above.

Section (d) Medical Monitoring Program and Protocols: Within 180 days after the implementation of this act, the Administrator shall promulgate procedures (regulations) establishing a medical monitoring program for persons exposed to asbestos who have been approved for Category I and II compensation.

In consultation with the Directors of The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) and the National Cancer Institute (NCI), the Administrator shall promulgate procedures/regulations establishing:

1. Specific medical tests to be provided to eligible individuals and the periodicity of those tests. Initially these tests shall be provided every two years and include the following:
  - i. Administration of a health evaluation and work history questionnaire;
  - ii. Physical examination including blood pressure measurement, chest examination and examination for clubbing.
  - iii. AP and lateral chest x-ray;
  - iv. Spirometry performed according to ATS standards;
  - v. Educational sessions on asbestos exposures, asbestos-related diseases and asbestos disease compensation criteria.
2. Qualifications for medical providers to provide those tests.
3. A list of medical and/or program providers eligible to provide these protocols who meet minimal medical and program standards established by the Administrator. Preference shall be given to medical providers and program providers as defined in this section. Persons exposed to asbestos who elect to participate in the program shall be provided with the list of approved providers in their geographic area at the time they become eligible for the program.
4. Administrative provisions for reimbursing the costs of these monitoring tests.

Section (e): The Administrator may enter into contracts with qualified program providers that would permit the program providers to undertake large-scale medical screening and medical monitoring programs by means of subcontracts a network of medical providers and other health providers.

Section (f): The Administrator shall review and as necessary and appropriate update these requirements and protocols at least every five years.

Structured Payments Clarification

As we understand the desire of the bill's sponsors, awards may be paid out to successful claimants over a period of three years, in part to reduce the stress on the "front-end" of the fund. But as written, the bill requires payments to be made over at least three years, and they could be made over 5 or 10 or 25 years. This amendment would ensure that payments are made over a period not to exceed three years. (Presumably in later years, the Administrator could decide to make payments over two years or immediately, if the finances of the Fund made that possible. That would not be permissible under the current language.)

DURBIN AMENDMENT TO S. 1125

Purpose: To amend the definition of “prior asbestos expenditure.”

On page 46, lines 17-21, insert the underlined text:

(A) means the gross total amount paid by or on behalf of a person at any time before December 31, 2002, in settlement, judgment, defense, or indemnity costs related to all asbestos claims that ultimately resulted in an adverse judgment against that person or that were the subject of a settlement that required a payment to a plaintiff by or on behalf of that person;”

EXPLANATION: This amendment would exclude from the calculation of “prior asbestos expenditures” those costs incurred in cases where the defendant mounted a successful defense.

Proposed changes to “Fairness in Asbestos Injury Resolution Act of 2003”; changes are highlighted in purple.

(4) INDEMNITEE. — The term “indemnitee” means a person against whom any asbestos claim has been asserted before December 31, 2002, who has received from any other person, or on whose behalf a sum has been paid by such other person to any third person, in settlement, judgment, defense, or indemnity in connection with an alleged duty with respect to the defense or indemnification of such person concerning that asbestos claim, other than under a policy of insurance.

(5) INDEMNITOR. — The term “indemnitor” means a person who has paid under a written agreement at any time before December 31, 2002, a sum in settlement, judgment, defense, or indemnity to or on behalf of any person defending against an asbestos claim, in connection with an alleged duty with respect to the defense or indemnification of such person concerning that asbestos claim, except that payments by an insurer or reinsurer under a contract of insurance or reinsurance shall not make the insurer or reinsurer an indemnitor for purposes of this subtitle.

(6) PRIOR ASBESTOS EXPENDITURE. — The term “prior asbestos expenditures” —

(A) means the gross total amount paid by or on behalf of a person at any time before December 31, 2002, in settlement, judgment, defense, or indemnity costs related to all asbestos claims against that person;

(B) includes payments made by insurance carriers to or for the benefit of such person or on such person’s behalf with respect to such asbestos claims, except as provided in section 204(g);

(C) shall not include any payment made by a person in connection with or as a result of changes in insurance reserves as required by contract or any activities or disputes related to insurance coverage matters for asbestos-related liabilities; and

(D) shall not include any payment made by or on behalf of persons who are or were common carriers by railroad for asbestos claims brought under the Act of April 22, 1908 (45 U.S.C. 51 et seq.), commonly known as the Federal Employers’ Liability Act, including settlement, judgment, defense or indemnity costs associated with these claims.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the 'Asbestos Claims Criteria and Compensation Act of 2003'.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.

Sec. 3. Definitions.

facie showing of physical impairment as a result of a medical condition to which exposure to asbestos was a substantial contributing factor.

(2) REQUIREMENTS OF PRIMA FACIE SHOWING- A prima facie showing under this subsection shall include all of the following minimum requirements:

(A) PERMANENT RESPIRATORY IMPAIRMENT RATING- A determination by a qualified physician, on the basis of a medical examination and pulmonary function testing, that the exposed person has a permanent respiratory impairment rating of at least Class 2 as defined by and evaluated under the AMA Guides to the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment.

(B) DIAGNOSIS- A diagnosis by a qualified physician of asbestosis or diffuse pleural thickening, based at a minimum on pathological evidence of asbestosis, radiological evidence of asbestosis, or radiological evidence of diffuse pleural thickening.

(C) SUBSTANTIAL CONTRIBUTING FACTOR- A determination by a qualified physician that asbestosis or diffuse pleural thickening (rather than solely chronic obstructive pulmonary disease) is a substantial contributing factor to the exposed person's physical impairment, based at a minimum on a determination that the exposed person has either--

(i) a ratio of FEV1 to FVC that is equal to or greater than the predicted lower limit of normal; or

(ii) a chest x-ray showing small, irregular opacities (s,t) graded by a certified B-reader at least 2/1 on the ILO scale.

SEC. 5. EXPOSURE CRITERIA REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REQUIREMENT- To be eligible to receive an award under this title for an asbestos-related injury, the claim submitted by the asbestos claimant shall contain information to demonstrate that--

(1) the claimant meets the minimum exposure requirements under this subtitle; and

(2) such exposure to asbestos occurred within the United States, its territories, or possessions.

(b) BURDEN OF PROOF-

(1) IN GENERAL- An asbestos claimant has the burden of demonstrating meaningful and credible exposure to asbestos for purposes of this subtitle.

(2) EVIDENCE- The demonstration under paragraph (1) may be established by-

(A) an affidavit submitted by the claimant, a coworker of the claimant, or a family member, in the case of a deceased claimant;

(B) employment records;

(C) invoices;

(D) construction or other similar records; or

(E) other credible evidence.

(c) RULES-

(1) EXPOSURE INFORMATION- The Asbestos Court shall issue rules prescribing specific exposure information that shall be submitted to permit the Court to process an asbestos claim and prescribing a proof of claim form. Such rules may provide that a claims examiner or magistrate, as applicable, may require the submission of other or additional evidence of exposure when determined to be appropriate and necessary.

(2) REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTIONS- The Asbestos Court may prescribe rules identifying specific industries, occupations within those industries, time periods, and employment periods for which significant occupational exposure may be a rebuttable presumption for asbestos claimants who provide meaningful and credible evidence that the claimant worked in that industry and occupation for the requisite period of time. The Administrator may provide evidence to rebut this presumption.

(c) COMPLIANCE WITH TECHNICAL STANDARDS-

(1) IN GENERAL- Evidence relating to physical impairment under this section, including pulmonary function testing and diffusing studies, shall comply with--

(A) the technical recommendations for examinations, testing procedures, quality assurance and quality control, and equipment of the AMA Guides to the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment; or

(B) if the AMA Guides to the Evaluation of Permanent Impairment are not applicable, other authoritative standards.

(2) ADJUSTMENTS- No adjustments with respect to pulmonary function testing shall be made on the basis of race.

(d) NO PRESUMPTION AT TRIAL- Presentation of prima facie evidence of asbestos-related impairment meeting the requirements of this section shall not result in any presumption at trial that the exposed person is impaired by an asbestos-related condition, and evidence that the exposed person made a prima facie showing of impairment shall not be admissible at trial.

SEC. 6. PROCEDURES; REMOVAL.

(a) CONSOLIDATION- A court may consolidate for trial any number and type of asbestos claims with consent of all the parties. In the absence of such consent, the court may consolidate for trial only asbestos claims relating to the same exposed person and members of the household of the exposed person.

(b) VENUE-

(1) IN GENERAL- A civil action asserting an asbestos claim may only be brought in the State of the plaintiff's domicile or a State in which there occurred exposure to asbestos that is a substantial contributing factor to the physical impairment on which the claim is based.

(c) PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS- The plaintiff in any civil action involving an asbestos claim shall file with the complaint or other initial pleading a written report and supporting test results constituting prima facie evidence of the exposed person's asbestos-related impairment meeting the requirements of section 4(b). The defendant shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to challenge the adequacy of the proffered prima facie evidence of asbestos-related impairment. The plaintiff's claim shall be dismissed without prejudice upon a finding of failure to make the required prima facie showing.

SEC. 7. FILING OF CLAIMS.

(a) WHO MAY SUBMIT-

(1) GENERAL RULE- Any individual who has suffered from an eligible disease or condition that is believed to meet the requirements established (or the spouse, parent, child, or other relative of such individual in a representative capacity, or the executor of the estate of such individual) may file a claim with the court for an award with respect to such injury.

(2) LIMITATION- An asbestos claim may not be filed by any person seeking contribution or indemnity.

(5) a detailed description of the tobacco product use history of the claimant, including frequency and duration;

(6) an identification and description of the asbestos-related diseases of the claimant, including a written report by the claimant's physician with medical diagnoses and test results necessary to make a determination of medical eligibility that complies with the applicable requirements of this subtitle.

(7) a description of any prior or pending civil action or other claim brought by the claimant for asbestos-related injury or any other pulmonary, parenchymal or pleural injury, including an identification of any recovery of compensation or damages through settlement, judgment, or otherwise; and

(8) any other information that is required to be included under procedural rules issued by the court.

(d) REMOVAL-

(1) IN GENERAL- If a State court refuses or fails to apply this section, any party in a civil action for an asbestos claim may remove such action to a district court of the United States in accordance with chapter 89 of title 28, United States Code.

(4) REMAND- The district court shall remand any civil action removed solely under this subsection, unless the court finds that--

(A) the State court failed to comply with procedures prescribed by law; or

(B) the failure to dismiss by the State court lacked substantial support in the record before the State court.

SEC. 8. DISMISSAL OF PENDING CLAIMS.

(a) EFFECT ON PENDING CLAIMS- If an asbestos claimant has any timely filed claim for an asbestos-related injury that is pending in a Federal or State court or with a trust established under title 11, United States Code, on the date of enactment of this Act, such claimant shall file an asbestos claim under this section within 180 days or the pending suits shall be dismissed without prejudice.

SEC. 9. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS; TWO-DISEASE RULE.

(a) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS- Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with respect to any nonmalignant asbestos claim not barred on the effective date of this Act, the limitations period shall not begin to run until the exposed person discovers, or through the exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered, that the exposed person is physically impaired by an asbestos-related nonmalignant condition.

(b) TWO-DISEASE RULE- An asbestos claim arising out of a nonmalignant condition shall be a distinct cause of action from an asbestos claim relating to the same exposed person arising out of asbestos-related cancer. No damages shall be awarded for fear or risk of cancer in any civil action asserting only a nonmalignant asbestos claim.

(c) GENERAL RELEASES FROM LIABILITY PROHIBITED- No settlement of a nonmalignant asbestos claim concluded after the date of enactment of this Act shall require, as a condition of settlement, release of any future claim for asbestos-related cancer.

SEC. 10. PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

- Sec.10. Punitive damages.
- Sec.11. Miscellaneous provisions.
- Sec.12. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- Congress finds that--

- (1) asbestos is a mineral that was widely used before the 1980s for insulation, fireproofing, and other purposes;
- (2) millions of American workers and others were significantly exposed to asbestos, especially during and after World War II and before the advent of regulation by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration in the early 1970s;
- (3) exposure to asbestos has been associated with various types of cancer, including mesothelioma and lung cancer, and such nonmalignant conditions as asbestosis, pleural plaques, and diffuse pleural thickening;
- (4) the diseases caused by asbestos have latency periods of up to 40 years or more, but the most serious asbestos-related disease, mesothelioma, is fatal within 1 to 2 years, and other related cancers are often fatal;
- (5) although the use of asbestos has dramatically declined since 1980 and workplace exposures have been regulated since 1971 by the

Occupational Safety and Health Administration, past exposures will continue to result in significant death and disability from mesothelioma and other cancers well into the 21st century;

(6) exposure to asbestos has created a flood of litigation targeting approximately 8,400 defendant companies in Federal and State courts that the United States Supreme Court has characterized as 'an elephantine mass' of cases that 'defies customary judicial administration and calls for national legislation,' Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corporation, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 2302 (1999);

(7) the American Bar Association supports enactment of Federal legislation that would--

(A) allow persons alleging non-malignant asbestos-related disease claims to file a cause of action in Federal or State court only if those persons meet the medical criteria in the 'ABA Standard for Non-Malignant Asbestos-Related Disease Claims' dated February 2003 or an appropriate similar medical standard; and

(B) toll all applicable statutes of limitations until such time as the medical criteria in such standard are met;

(8) asbestos personal injury litigation can be unfair and inefficient, imposing a severe burden on litigants and taxpayers alike, in most cases involving defendant companies that were never involved in the production of asbestos;

(9) the extraordinary volume of nonmalignant asbestos cases continues to strain Federal and State courts, with over 200,000 cases pending and over 50,000 new cases filed each year;

(10) asbestos personal injury litigation has already contributed to the bankruptcy of more than 60 companies and the rate of asbestos-driven bankruptcies is accelerating;

(11) the vast majority of asbestos claims are filed by individuals who--

(A) have been exposed to asbestos;

(B) may have some physical sign of exposure; and

(C) suffer no present asbestos-related impairment;

(12) the cost of compensating exposed persons who are not sick--

(A) jeopardizes the ability of defendants to compensate people with cancer and other serious asbestos-related diseases, now and in the future; and

(B) strains the ability of courts to manage the deluge of cases involving nonimpaired plaintiffs;

(13) an estimated 50,000 to 60,000 workers have lost their jobs as a direct result of asbestos litigation and related bankruptcies of defendant companies and each displaced worker will, on average, lose between $25,000 and $50,000 in lost wages;

(14) employees of defendant companies declaring bankruptcy (who are often stockholders of those companies) will, on average, lose 25 percent of the value of their retirement investment under section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 because of lost stock value;

(15) concerns about statutes of limitations can force claimants who have been exposed to asbestos but who have no current injury to bring premature lawsuits in order to protect against losing their rights to future compensation should those claimants become impaired;

(16) consolidations, joinder, and similar procedures, to which some courts have resorted in order to deal with the mass of asbestos cases, can undermine the appropriate functioning of the judicial process and encourage the filing of thousands of cases by exposed persons who are not yet sick and who may never become sick;

(17) the availability of sympathetic forums in States with no connection to the plaintiff or to the exposures that form the basis of a lawsuit has encouraged the filing of thousands of cases on behalf of exposed persons who are not yet sick and may never become sick;

(18) asbestos litigation, if left unchecked by reasonable congressional intervention, will--

9 participant. The factors to be considered in determining whether a person is a successor
10 in interest include, but are not limited to: (i) retention of the same facilities or location, 11 (ii) retention of the same employees, (iii) maintaining the same jobs under the same 12 working conditions, (iv) retention of the same supervisory personnel, (v) continuity of 4 RENUMBER the rest of the subparagraphs accordingly.

Summary of “Successor in Interest” Amendment to S. 1125 –

This amendment would include among the “participants” in the Asbestos Trust Fund any “Successor in interest” to a participant. As developed in the case law, a successor in interest – one who is obliged to take on the obligations of the predecessor corporation – is one that carries on substantially continues the same business, with substantially the same people involved, assets utilized, and products produced. The amendment attempts to insure that mandatory participants will not be able to evade their responsibilities to the Fund by simple changes in their corporate structures or operations.

Summary of Amendment to S 1125 [PDF: SHU03.214]

The Amendment requires the Administrator to refer any information he obtains about possible asbestos violations under OSHA, the Toxic Substances Control Act or the Clean Water Act to the appropriate law enforcement authorities. The Amendment provides a sentencing enhancement for such environmental/health violations that involve asbestos.

Based on the new Title 18 crimes for fraud and false statements (included in the agreed-upon amendments), and the enhanced statutory maximums, the Amendment instructs the U.S. Sentencing Commission to consider appropriate amendments to the Sentencing Guidelines suggesting upward enhancements for asbestos-related crimes.

Summary of Agreed Amendments to S.1125

- X Sections 3(7) & 134 (Reduction in benefit payments for collateral sources): Strike Collateral Sources (Disability Insurance, Health Insurance, Medicare, Medicaid, and death benefit programs; keep as offsets payments from defendants, insurers and compensation trusts)
- X Section 124 (Take Home Exposure): Includes Take Home/Community Exposure (Manville in-shoes filing)
- X Section 122 (Diagnostic criteria Requirements): Strike independent physician verification on exposure, and add dead claimant exception for in-person exam.
- X Section 131 (Amount): Index all awards for annual future inflation based on CPI
- X Section 111 (Filing of Claims): Increase statute of limitations in which to file a claim from 2 to 4 years from the time claimant received a medical diagnosis of an eligible disease or should have known he would receive such a diagnosis. Deletes rule of construction paragraph of Administrator.
- X Section 125 (Exposure Criteria Requirements): include U.S. citizens exposed to asbestos while working for U.S. companies overseas or while on U.S.-flagged ships.
- X Section 204 (Assessment Administration): Add recoupment provision for any financial hardship or inequity adjustments in future years if company can afford it and limits term on inequity adjustment to 3 years.
- X Requires Administrator to provide Congress with annual report of trust funds payments, contributions, etc.
- X Section 401 (False information): Add crime and criminal penalties for defendant/insurer fraud and false statements
- X Section 224 (Enforcement of Contributions): Permits Administrator cause of action against contributing penalties; adds new remedies (punitive damages, injunctive relief – similar to PROTECT Act) to Administrator for failures to pay Fund and penalties for willful failures to pay.
- X Section 202 (Authority and Tiers/Treatment of Tier I Business entities in Bankruptcy): Replaces CEO Certification requirement that asbestos liability was not sole or precipitating cause of bankruptcy filing with bankruptcy court finding

Sunset of Liability Protection

This amendment would create a checkpoint relatively early on in the Fund's 27 year term where the Administrator has to certify that the Fund is operating as envisioned and claimants are being fully compensated. If the Fund isn't functioning properly either because of backlogs or inadequate funding, claimants are allowed to go back to the tort system.

On page 113 at the end of line 7 insert the following:

"The provisions of subsections (c) and (d) shall have no effect after January 1, 2010, unless the Administrator certifies prior to that date that at least 95 percent of all compensable claims filed on or before May 1, 2006 have been paid in full."

President Bush plans to nominate White House lawyer Brett M. Kavanaugh, an author of independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr's report on President Bill Clinton, for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Republican sources said yesterday.

The disclosure came as Bush issued a curt rejection to Democratic senators who had offered to alleviate a fight over a future Supreme Court vacancy by working with him to find a nominee both sides could accept.

Kavanaugh's nomination would suggest Bush is spoiling for a fight with Senate Democrats while the administration's selection of judges is already a raw issue between the parties. The D.C. Circuit court is considered the second most powerful in the land. Kavanaugh, 38, was involved in many of the Clinton administration's legal controversies, and he has played a key role in choosing Bush's judicial nominees.

Kavanaugh is undergoing an FBI background check in preparation for his nomination, which will not be announced immediately. He was an appellate expert in Starr's office from 1994 to 1998, and worked on the investigation of Monica S. Lewinsky. He represented Starr in efforts to obtain notes from Hillary Rodham Clinton, now a senator, relating to the suicide of deputy White House counsel Vincent Foster. Kavanaugh's contribution to the Starr report was the section that outlined possible legal grounds for impeachment.

Kavanaugh was a partner with Kirkland & Ellis before becoming an associate White House counsel in January 2001. He has undergraduate and law degrees from Yale, and was a clerk for Justice Anthony M. Kennedy.

The D.C. Circuit court has openings on its 11th and 12th seats, and Republicans blocked Clinton from filling at least one of them by arguing that additional judges were not needed.

Bush's rebuff of the overture by Senate Democrats, a departure from his frequent contention that he is eager to work with Congress, is part of intense positioning by both parties for the possibility that a Supreme Court justice will retire at the end of this term. Senate Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) wrote to Bush on Tuesday to recommend that the president convene a meeting of Senate leaders to begin a bipartisan process of consultation.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer called the idea a novel new approach to how the Constitution guides the appointment process, and said Bush plans no such meeting. The Constitution gives the president sole power to nominate justices, and then the Senate decides whether to confirm them.

The Constitution is clear, the Constitution will be followed, Fleischer said. We always welcome thoughts, but certainly no one wants to suggest that the Constitution be altered.

Fleischer said White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales is always happy to meet and talk with these individual senators. A twist is that Gonzales, a former justice of the Texas Supreme Court, is one of Bush's most obvious potential nominees.

Gonzales wrote to Daschle yesterday that in case of a vacancy, the Senate will have an opportunity to assess the president's nominee and exercise its constitutional responsibility. He has sent similar letters to other Senate Democrats.

The selection of judges, from federal district courts to the Supreme Court, is always a bitterly contested issue for the most ideologically committed wings of both parties. It is even more so now because of the GOP's narrow hold on the Senate, and because of rumors about the possible retirement of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73 or even both.

A group called Faith2Action is linking with some of the nation's best-known conservative organizations for Project Rosebud, which plans to deliver thousands of roses to the White House next week in support of an anti-abortion nominee for any Supreme Court vacancy.

Sen. Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.), a Judiciary Committee member, wrote Bush last week to suggest potential consensus nominees. Schumer suggested five moderate Republicans, including Sen. Arlen Specter (Pa.).

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (Vt.), ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, had first suggested the bipartisan summit in a separate letter to Bush last week. Leahy said that Democrats were ready to work with you to help select a nominee or nominees to the Supreme Court behind which all Americans, and all senators, can unite.

Bradford A. Berenson, a former associate White House counsel for Bush, called the letters a political stunt to help Democrats blame the president for the ugly confirmation fight it appears they already have planned.

Democrats, who contend they are not proposing anything radical, are circulating pages from a book by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) in which he takes credit for suggesting to Clinton the nomination of two sitting justices, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Hatch wrote last year in his memoir, Square Peg, that he had asked Clinton whether he had considered Breyer or Ginsburg. President Clinton indicated he had heard Breyer's name but had not thought about Judge Ginsburg, Hatch recounted.

Hatch said Tuesday on C-SPAN that Democrats were trying to preempt a conservative nominee. Even though President Clinton did consult with me as chairman of the committee, he made the final decisions, Hatch said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) said the best way for Bush to avoid a major fight would be to consult with the Senate and send up nominees without ideological chips on their shoulders.

But if this president wants a battle, Kennedy said, he'll get it.

OPPOSITION GEARING UP FOR FIGHT IF SHE'S NOMINATED FOR POSSIBLE VACANCIES
By Howard Mintz

Just seven years ago, an influential state judicial screening group didn't consider Janice Rogers Brown qualified to be on the California Supreme Court. Now, there is a real possibility Brown could vault from the highest court in the state to become the first black woman ever to serve on the highest court in the land.

As the U.S. Supreme Court winds down its latest term this month amid rampant speculation that at least one justice is preparing to retire, Brown, a 54-year-old conservative and daughter of an Alabama sharecropper, is one of a small number of potential Supreme Court nominees who have already been vetted by the White House.

Brown would fit the template of a judge that President Bush has favored in stocking the nation's federal bench. A staunch conservative on everything from affirmative action to the death penalty, she is an ideological match with the Bush administration and a political plus as a black woman who has risen from a childhood in the segregated South to the pinnacle of her profession.

``I think she is well-qualified for appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court,''' said State Supreme Court Justice Marvin Baxter, who is usually aligned with Brown's conservative positions.

But Brown, whose prickly prose has touched on hot-button issues ranging from abortion to affirmative action, already has attracted close scrutiny from civil rights groups and others girding for a confirmation fight. In fact, she's just one of six possible Supreme Court nominees whose records have been scoured by Alliance for Justice, the group that ordinarily leads political opposition to Bush's judicial picks.

Critics such as San Francisco's Eva Paterson, one of the nation's leading civil rights lawyers, have labeled Brown ``another Clarence Thomas,' ' in large part because of the way she came down in an affirmative action case out of San Jose three years ago.

``If she's the president's choice, it's going to be a huge battle,' ' observes Erwin Chemerinsky, a professor at the University of Southern California law school.

The attention on Brown has ramped up in recent months because of the strong belief in legal circles that the Supreme Court is about to end its longest stretch without turnover in 180 years. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 78, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, are viewed as likely to retire to give a Republican president a chance to replace them well before the next election.

How many retiring?

If Rehnquist retires, most predict, the White House might name the first Latino in the court's history, with the leading candidate being White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales. But most legal experts and leading Republicans agree that Brown leaps to the front of the list if both Rehnquist and O'Connor step down.

``It would be incredibly difficult for Democrats to go against a woman like Janice Brown,' ' said a top California Republican close to the judicial selection process. ``She has a very compelling personal story.' '

Consideration for the U.S. Supreme Court is a remarkable climb for Brown, who was rated not qualified for the California Supreme Court by a state bar group when former Gov. Pete Wilson nominated her in 1996. The bar group, which touched off a controversy over its rating, concluded that Brown, as an appeals court justice, too often injected her personal views into court cases.

Legal experts no longer question Brown's qualifications for the job, although the bar's complaint that she used her legal opinions as a personal bully pulpit remains one of the chief criticisms against her as a Supreme Court justice.

Brown declined to be interviewed for this story, but her background has been well documented. She grew up in rural Alabama in the 1950s, and eventually her family moved to California, where she attended law school at UCLA. A liberal in college, she became a conservative as a lawyer, working in the California Attorney General's Office and later rising to become Wilson's legal affairs secretary.

Wilson named Brown to a Sacramento state appeals court in 1994 and elevated her to the state Supreme Court two years later. She quickly found herself embroiled in the state's most controversial court case at the time, a 1997 ruling in which the justices, by a 4-3 vote, struck down California's law requiring minors to obtain parental consent to get an abortion.

In dissent, Brown chastised her colleagues: ``This case is an excellent example of the folly of courts in their role of philosopher kings.' '

Since that decision, Brown, who is reserved in person and typically the lowest-key justice in questioning lawyers, has cranked up the volume in her writing. Perhaps her signature case -- and one that may attract the most attention if she is nominated -- came in 2000, when she wrote the majority opinion invalidating San Jose's minority contracting program.

The ruling was the first to apply Proposition 209's anti-affirmative action provisions in the state. And while the court's conclusion in the case came as no surprise, Brown's writings did. She filled her decision with a scathing denunciation of past affirmative action decisions and their place in history, prompting an unusual rebuke from Chief Justice Ronald George, who called it ``unnecessary and inappropriate.''

``On the U.S. Supreme Court, they call them nine scorpions in a bottle,'' said Gerald Uelman, a Santa Clara University law professor and Supreme Court expert. ``She'd fit right in the scorpion mode.''

Criticism called unfair

Brown's supporters say her decisions and position in the Proposition 209 case have been unfairly criticized. Ward Connerly, who knows Brown well and was the chief sponsor of Proposition 209, said she was criticized for the ruling because she is a ``quote, unquote, black conservative."

``She knows who she is,''
Connerly said. ``She has a very clear compass and she follows it.''

Brown, who still lives in Sacramento and often limits her trips to the Supreme Court's headquarters in San Francisco to once or twice a week, is regarded as a lone wolf on the court.

According to knowledgeable state Supreme Court insiders, Brown's approach even rankles some of her colleagues, notably George, the chief justice, who has traded barbs with her in numerous court opinions.

``There is no doubt about her intelligence and gift with the pen,'' said one Supreme Court official. ``It's just a question of whether it is used in an appropriate way.''

Praise for scholarship

But despite the fiery rhetoric, Brown has earned plaudits for her legal scholarship and a libertarian streak that can flash when she believes government is going too far.

And her friends say that she is well-equipped to weather a bruising Senate confirmation battle.

``She's tough -- she wouldn't go home crying to Mommy,'' said Sacramento appeals court justice Vance Raye, a longtime friend.

To Doug Kmiec, a Brown friend, leading conservative scholar and dean of Catholic University's law school, Brown looks like somebody the White House would like.

In a commencement speech a few weeks ago at Catholic University, for Kmiec's law school, Brown showed signs of developing her public persona. Unlike some of her colleagues, Brown seldom speaks in public, but agreed to address Catholic University. There, she stressed the importance of law in a speech laced with religious references and patriotism.

Invoking Sept. 11, Brown warned the lawyers-to-be that in today's climate, ``nothing less than Western civilization and the rule of law are at stake.''

Brett - here is what Alexis sent to Ari.

Ari...Counsel Gonzales (Brett Kavanaugh) at the end of May/early June sent a memo (standard practice) to the White House staff and others describing what the law permits in terms of political activity, and what the President expects. You know the memo, since you got it. This follows memos of a similar nature from previous White House counsels (Fred Fielding, Boyden Gray, Ab Mikva) -- all of which we have seen in public over the years.

Since President Bush promised to restore dignity to the White House and have the most ethically high-minded crew on the planet, I was initially confident that no one in the West Wing would resist my efforts to write a story about how the President wants everyone to conduct themselves beyond reproach between now and November 2004, if they are on the federal payroll. We all remember the fun we had with the previous White House on this subject...

I was wrong; help from the Bush White House appears stuck somewhere.

Here's what I need: a copy of the Gonzales memo (or someone to read it to me, or funnel it outside to an intermediary who will give it to me, or some hand to fax it anonymously to me -- AND someone to describe how it compares with, say, the Mikva memo); someone for an interview to describe in detail how the White House and administration staff are to juggle governing and re-election/political activities (Mr. Rove's procedures are of particular interest here in accordance with Hatch Act and presidential expectations, so if he wants to take the high road and chat with NJ, that would be delightful); and related information from Cheney's office (I have talked to Jennifer M. about my questions, but have not heard back).

An article is going into the magazine next week one way or another, so perhaps you can persuade the reluctant into being helpful???

Thanks,

Alexis

Brett --

The Washington Post is reporting that the President intends to nominate you to the D.C. Circuit. If true, that is fantastic news for you and for the country. Congratulations!

Any thoughts on who would fill your slot in the WH Counsel's Office? For continuity, it should probably be someone who went to Yale College and Yale Law School, clerked for AMK, and worked for Ken Starr, don't you think? I'll let you know if I think of anybody....

Schumer and Bush administration stand by judicial nominee

WASHINGTON -- Sen. Charles Schumer said Wednesday that he still supported judicial nominee Dora Irizarry after the former prosecutor was reportedly voted "unqualified" by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

Irizarry, supported by both Gov. George Pataki, a Republican, and Schumer, D-N.Y., is awaiting a confirmation hearing before the U.S. Senate.

Schumer, who has met with Irizarry previously, said he would stand by the nomination and noted that Irizarry had the support of Pataki and the White House.

"If they'll stick with her, so will I," Schumer said. "I think she'll be a fine addition to the bench."

REV_00406446

A former candidate for New York state attorney general, Irizarry has been nominated by President Bush to the Eastern District of New York. A native of Puerto Rico, she would be the first Hispanic judge on that district's bench.

The City Bar's Judiciary Committee voted Monday night, and the vote was so lopsided Irizarry will not be able to appeal, the New York Law Journal reported in Wednesday's editions.

Jane Bigelsen, a spokeswoman for the association, declined to comment, saying the group's recommendations are meant to be private.

"It's confidential," she said.

Irizarry did not return a call seeking comment.

Justice Department spokeswoman Monica Goodling said the administration believes Irizarry "is fully qualified for the federal bench," citing her "diverse working experience" as a former prosecutor, state judge, and private lawyer.

Pataki, a strong backer of her nomination, reaffirmed his support, saying she's been "an excellent judge and I think she will be an excellent member of the federal judiciary."

Can the two of you talk about the VP's suite and let me know if we should handle the same way as the Presidents? Not sure if the VP uses it the same way that the President does. Thanks!

Is there a problem with posting the titles of federal officials (US Rep.,

TALKING POINTS on Medicare Reform

Talking Points: The President's Framework to Strengthen & Improve Medicare

Private Health Care Choices within Medicare — a Major Step in Medicare Reform

America has the world's best health care system because it relies on the innovations of the private sector. A competitive free market system provides incentives to develop better drugs, better treatments, better care, and better forms of health care delivery.

The President's Framework for Medicare reform would apply the best practices of the private health care market to Medicare. As successful as Medicare has been, it has not kept pace with dramatic improvements in health care because it is a government program immune to many market forces. Medicare still does not provide seniors with an outpatient prescription drug benefit, full coverage for preventive care, or limits on high out of pocket expenses. As a result, seniors lack many of the choices and benefits available to millions of Americans who have private health insurance.

The President's goal is a strong, up-to-date Medicare system that relies on innovation and competition, not bureaucratic rules and regulations. This would allow seniors more choices and better benefits. It would also help modernize the program and improve its long-term finances.

The leading Medicare bills in the House and Senate include the following key elements of reform from the President's Framework:

Individual Choice vs. One-size-fits-all

Seniors would be able to choose the health plan that best meets their own personal health needs—rather than having only the choice of a one-size-fits-all government plan. There would be flexibility for private plans to offer a variety of benefit designs, not just standard coverage.

Providing seniors with more choices will give them—not the government—more control. When seniors retain the power of choice, there will be competition among health care providers and insurers. The result? Seniors will get the best coverage, services and quality of care.

Private Sector Competition vs. Government Price Setting and Price Controls

Private insurers would deliver drug benefits to seniors, and costs would be controlled using marketplace competition, not government price setting. This is a fundamental departure from the current Medicare command and control pricing system.

Under the President's Framework and the House and Senate bills, health plans would compete for seniors' business on the basis of quality and price. Federal employees and members of Congress enjoy the benefits of a competitive market for their health insurance, as do millions of working Americans. Seniors should have the same opportunity.

Currently, Medicare fixes payments to doctors and hospitals. The result is that Medicare does not often cover the true cost of care. Under the President's Framework, private plans would bid against one another and then the government will select the lowest three bids that qualify. Such competition will be good for seniors and for taxpayers.

Innovation vs. Bureaucratic Delays

Whenever government gets involved in the business of micromanaging health care, innovation suffers and access to the newest and most effective treatments depends on the often arbitrary decisions of a slow-moving bureaucracy. When prescription drugs and medical devices are approved by the Food and Drug Administration, private insurers can adopt them for use soon after—but not Medicare. For example, Medicare did not cover mammograms until nearly a decade after private insurers made them a standard benefit. It even took an act of Congress to get Medicare to cover mammograms.

The participation of private health plans in Medicare will help ensure more up-to-date coverage for breakthrough medical technologies. This is a significant improvement over the way benefits are provided in the traditional Medicare program today—where politicians and regulators, rather than the market, decide what is covered.

Long-Term Savings vs. Spiraling Costs

The President and Congress have budgeted $400 billion over 10 years to make these reforms a reality. By contrast, Democratic leadership proposals in both the House and Senate would likely cost more than double the amount—perhaps nearly $1 trillion—pumped into an unreformed, one-size-fits-all government-run system.

Over time, reforming the Medicare system to allow more choices and private sector competition is expected to bring savings to the program. Medicare actuaries estimate that the most efficient private plans have the potential to beat Medicare's costs by an average of 2.3 percent.

Far from being an open-ended entitlement, most seniors will be responsible for a deductible, and co-pays, and, for the first time, the Medicare Part B deductible would be indexed to inflation, which will help reduce government expenditures. At the same time, seniors with the lowest incomes and the highest prescription drug bills will receive the most assistance and protection under the bill. This focuses resources on those individuals who need the most help.

Free Market vs. Government Dictates

The President's vision for a reformed Medicare stands in stark contrast to a centralized, government-run health care system that dictates coverage and stifles innovation and quality.

The President's Framework for Medicare reform would combine the best practices of traditional Medicare with those of the competitive free market system that benefits Americans so well. By keeping the existing government system, building on its strengths and incorporating the best ideas of the private sector, we can create a modern and efficient Medicare program for the 21st century.

The President is encouraged by the bipartisan progress that has been made to date and is urging Congress to seize the opportunity to pass legislation this year that will reform Medicare for the first time in its 38-year history.

Yes, actually DOD had some confusion about the legal rationale underlying this. Anyway, we would be fine with circulating the prohibition.

Thanks. With that understanding would it be ok if we circulate the email? Just want to be sure we don't have uniformed officers unwittingly violate the law by giving to Bush-Cheney 04 since they are military. Assume this would not be big news at DOD but I fear it's a thing that our people aren't as up to speed on. I thought that was not a bad story at all for you in the post today.

Hope my v/m message made sense.; Short answer: not necessarily; depends on who occupies the staff office.

P.S.; If I didn't have a baby screaming in the background, I would have given you some grief about this morning's Post. :)

Subject: Re: PRA Notice on Nixon NSC Records

We are just now sending him a copy of the notice that we sent you. For the last five years or so he has expressed no interest in, nor even reviewed, any portion of our textual openings, including NSC records; his only concern has been with reviewing the tapes for personal privacy information.

>>> <Brett_M._Kavanaugh@who.eop.gov> 6/6/03 3:49:40 PM >>>

One question: Did President Nixon's rep say anything about these?

Subject: PRA Notice on Nixon NSC Records

Brett, I wanted to give you a special heads up on the attached, and rather anomalous, PRA notice that we sent you today, because it concerns Nixon Administration NSC records. As we explain in more detail in the notice, these Nixon records (along with similar NSC records from Eisenhower through Clinton) were long treated as federal records, until 1996, when the DC Circuit in its last Armstrong decision ruled that all NSC records are governed by the PRA. 90 F.3d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

Bill Leary and Paul Colborn were both closely involved in the agreement that was subsequently worked out on how to handle these records, which was, in essence, to send all of the records to NARA for placement with the appropriate Presidential Library or collection, but still treat them as PRA records. This was done at the end of the Clinton Administration. In addition, Bill Leary's staff has retained the responsibility to do the declassification review of these records.

For this reason, the attached notice is under the PRA, rather than the Nixon statute, i.e., the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act (PRMPA). However, in all other respects, the records subject to this notice are no different in substance or sensitivity than any other Nixon NSC records that we have opened under the PRMPA, including through you over the last two years: e.g., last year we opened approximately 140,000 pages of Nixon NSC records.

Recall that under PRMPA, we give you a 30-day notice, and you have expressed no interest or concern in reviewing or inquiring about those records. Accordingly, I am hopeful that you will also have no interest or concern in reviewing these Nixon records. In addition, although the notice gives you 45 days to respond (because there is no notice to former President Clinton, who waived his rights in these records), we also hope that you can clear this notice more quickly (e.g., at least within the 30 days consistent with PRMPA, if not sooner).

Please feel free to call me if you would like to discuss anything about this notice. You should also feel free to discuss this matter with Paul Colborn, with respect to the legal aspect of this issue, and Bill Leary, with respect to the declassification review and other NSC considerations.

Thanks for your attention to this issue.

I'm great, and delighted by your news. As the confirmation process moves forward, please let me know if I can be of any help to you, in either an OLC or a personal capacity. I'd be happy to help in any way at all.

On my end, all is well, except that I'm still here in DC, in a strange sort of limbo. After frantically preparing for deployment to Iraq more than a month ago, I've been told to cool my heels indefinitely. Apparently, idiotically, DoJ and DoD can't reach an agreement about which of them would pay my salary while I'm over there. As of now, it looks like the whole thing will probably fall through.

It would be fascinating to go, but I won't be too heartbroken if I don't. I am enjoying OLC enormously and working on terrific stuff. Plus I am very excited about the prospect of Jack Goldsmith coming aboard; he is fantastic in my view. (Note the recent movement of AMK clerks to cool jobs: you, Jack, Hew Pate, Tom Hungar, etc.) I've talked to some people about throwing my hat in the ring for Counsel to the AG and/or Counsel to the DAG, but the truth is that I'm not sure I would enjoy those jobs as much as I enjoy this one. In short, I like it here, and I'm pretty sure that the only office I'd like better is yours....

Brett --

The Washington Post is reporting that the President intends to nominate you to the D.C. Circuit. If true, that is fantastic news for you and for the country. Congratulations!

Any thoughts on who would fill your slot in the WH Counsel's Office? For continuity, it should probably be someone who went to Yale College and Yale Law School, clerked for AMK, and worked for Ken Starr, don't you think? I'll let you know if I think of anybody....

This refers to my work on the (different) Starr report on the Foster suicide.

RE: KAVANAGH [Kathryn Jean Lopez <<mailto:klopez@nationalreview.com <mailto:klopez@nationalreview.com>>> ]
A continuation from the conversation yesterday. Quin Hillyer of the Mobile Register e-mails:

;;;;;; ;;;;;; The Dems should know that Brett Kavanaugh was hardly a rabid anti-Clintonite. Matter of fact, when I did a book review for the Wall Street Journal, a review which helped debunk the idea that Vince Foster's body was moved, etc.... in other words, one that supported the basic story of where and why the poor man committed suicide (okay, I bashed the Clintons on other matters during my book review, but not on that basic fact of this sad episode, and not on matters I discussed with Mr. Kavanaugh), the main person who walked me through the public evidence and the Starr report (with full authorization from his superiors), and thus who cleared up some of the anti-Clinton conspiracy theories (to the benefit of the Clintons), was Brett Kavanaugh. The Wash Post's portrayal of Kavanaugh as a part of the "vast right wing conspiracy" is thus just not accurate; I found him a helpful, fact-based, careful attorney. I assume his legal philosophy leans right, because the Bush administration seems to be considering him for a judgeship. But while on the Starr team dealing with me at least, he sure as heck gave no evidence of any ulterior agenda. He seems like a man of deep integrity.;;;;;;

- 2) Press Interviews in MA
- 3) Press Interviews in NH
- 4) NH GOP Party Building Event (RNC)

First, how did they travel? I believe campaign should pay for cost of trip back and forth to Boston since that was the only campaign-related event. RNC and govt should pay the remains. But let's make sure Josefiak is ok with that.

Kim -

In addition to a downtime suite for the President, there is usually a request for downtime rooms for Senior Staff, Video Teleconference, CODEL's, etc. If these room requests are not with the original room block, who gives the approval for the additions of these rooms? Which entity pays for these rooms?

Brett and Ashley --

Has the White House established a system of designated contact points between the re-election campaign and the government? Bush 41 established a system, for instance, that designated specific West Wing officials who were permitted to take calls and act on requests with/from campaign officials and transmit the campaign requests into the proper places inside the Executive Branch.

If the Bush-Cheney re-election campaign wanted to contact the public liaison person in charge of outreach to veterans, for instance, in order to arrange an event or meeting with President Bush, can a re-election campaign official call anyone in the West Wing or executive branch with that request, or would he/she first have to run through the White House counsel, the chief of staff, the senior adviser, or anyone else? If there are no required contact points, to clarify, the campaign can communicate with anyone in the West Wing, EOP, or Executive Branch without first checking with a gatekeeper for permission?

Thanks,

How to Head Off a Fight Over the High Court

By David S. Broder

Wednesday, June 25, 2003; Page A23

It would greatly disappoint the warring armies of interest groups in Washington, salivating for a fight over the next Supreme Court vacancy. But there is a way out of such a debilitating battle, with all its ominous implications for the independence and reputation of the judiciary, if key players at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue are willing to show some flexibility.

The path around such a knock-down, drag-out fight has been opened by Democratic senators who have urged President Bush to "consult" with Capitol Hill before deciding on his choice for the high court.

No one knows when there may be a vacancy to fill, but with the current term coming to an end, speculation is rife that Chief Justice William Rehnquist or Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, both in their seventies, may be ready to retire.

In anticipation of that possibility, Sen. Patrick Leahy, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, has written to Bush urging him to engage "in meaningful consultation with members of the Senate, including those in the other [Democratic] party, before deciding on nominees."

Leahy's proposal was quickly endorsed by Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle, who wrote the president that "should you be willing to convene a meeting of Senate leaders from both parties to begin a bipartisan process of consultation . . . we believe it is not necessary to have a divisive confirmation fight over a Supreme Court appointment."

The White House has given mixed signals in response to this overture -- a seeming brushoff from press secretary Ari Fleischer, followed by a more conciliatory but relatively noncommittal response from presidential counsel Alberto Gonzales.

The Republicans have reason for skepticism. Daschle and Leahy have organized filibusters against two Bush appointees to the circuit courts. Democratic presidential hopefuls John Kerry and Joseph Lieberman are threatening similar tactics against a Supreme Court choice they find objectionable.

But if Democrats are sincere, the door has not been closed to advance consultation. And one important Senate Republican, Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, has provided both precedent and endorsement for such a process.

Hatch wrote in his recent memoir, "Square Peg," that he had counseled President Clinton to avoid a nominee who would face "a tough political battle" for confirmation. What is more, Hatch said, he had, at Clinton's invitation, suggested both Stephen Breyer and Ruth Bader Ginsburg as people who could be easily confirmed -- the very people Clinton later named.

In a C-SPAN interview on June 17, Hatch repeated that "I was the one who recommended Breyer and Ginsburg to the president." And he lent his support to Leahy's suggestion.

Speaking of Bush, Hatch said: "I'm sure the president will discuss whoever he wants to put on the court with Senator Leahy and others as well -- that's just the way he is. He's a good man. I think it would be wise for him to do it, too."

But Hatch immediately added a disclaimer that suggests just how delicate this process may be. Referring to his Democratic colleagues, he said, "They want to pick the nominees. I don't blame them for that; it's just that's not the way the Constitution reads, that's not the way it should be implemented and, frankly, no self-respecting president is going to say we'll let you pick them."

Leahy's friends insist that he is not trying to bend the Constitution or usurp Bush's powers. But one sentence in his June 11 letter to the president leaves open that interpretation: "I stand ready to work with you to help select a nominee or nominees to the Supreme Court behind which all Americans and all senators can unite."

The Constitution makes it explicit that it is the president "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, [who] shall appoint . . . judges of the Supreme Court." It is the president's power, not one he can share or delegate. But the word "advice" is significant, clearly suggesting discussion prior to the selection.

Fleischer, in a rather offhand manner, dismissed the discussion as "idle chit-chat," as no one knows when or if a vacancy will occur, and implied that the senators were suggesting "that the Constitution be altered."

The next day, after meeting with Leahy, Gonzales wrote the senator that Fleischer "did not foreclose the possibility that senators might be consulted."

Leahy has declined to discuss his meeting with Gonzales, clearly hoping to keep the tenuous talks going. It will be difficult. Conservative groups are putting heavy pressure on Bush to pick one of their favorites for the high court, and liberal groups are at least as rabid to block any such nominee.

But the country -- and the court itself -- would be well served by the selection of a consensus candidate, and consultation is the obvious way to identify one.

1 court retirement could tip balance;

Observers whisper Stevens' name

BYLINE: By Jan Crawford Greenburg, Washington Bureau.

BODY:

Although the fevered talk of a possible retirement at the Supreme Court has centered on Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, sources knowledgeable about the court are quietly speculating that John Paul Stevens, the oldest and arguably most liberal justice, is considering stepping down.

If Stevens were to retire, President Bush could effect a seismic shift on the court when he named his replacement. Stevens, an 83-year-old Chicago native, anchors the court's liberal wing and is a key voice on religion, affirmative action and other civil liberties issues.

The court is narrowly divided on those and other controversial matters, often deciding them by a 5-4 vote. Replacing Stevens with a right-leaning justice would solidify the conservative bloc and diminish the importance of O'Connor, whose votes in some cases temper the positions of her four more conservative colleagues.

The outcome of church-state, affirmative action, voting rights and some abortion cases could be different with a conservative instead of Stevens. With so much at stake, the confirmation hearing for Stevens' replacement would be, in the words of one Republican lawyer, a "death cage match."

"He's the only one [whose retirement] has the clear potential to alter the overall ideological complexion of the court," said Bradford Berenson, a Washington lawyer and a former associate counsel in the Bush White House. "No matter who the president appoints, you have a conservative in for a liberal. With the others, it's a conservative for conservative."

Still, Berenson said he would be surprised if Stevens stepped down, despite the speculation.

None of the justices has announced plans to retire, and officials in the White House and Justice Department, as well as members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, say they have not been told about any impending departures. But if there is to be a retirement announcement during Bush's term, it likely would come this week, as the court wraps up its session.

Stevens active, in good health

Few court watchers, however, have focused their attention on Stevens as a prospect for retirement, despite his age. He is active on the court and off, and is said to be in good health.

More important, justices often want a president who shares a similar ideology to name their replacement.

That's why observers have speculated that Rehnquist, who worked in the Nixon administration and was named chief justice by President Ronald Reagan, or O'Connor, a former Republican state senator nominated by Reagan, may want to retire during Bush's tenure.

But sources knowledgeable about the court say it would be a mistake not to consider the prospect of Stevens' retirement. They note he would not want to retire during next year's presidential campaign because it would be all but impossible for a replacement to be confirmed before the election. That means his next window for departure comes in two years, when he will be 85.

Stevens was nominated by Republican President Gerald Ford and, some close to him say, considers himself a Republican in the old-world, Teddy Roosevelt mold.

"Does John Stevens think of himself as a Republican? Oh, absolutely," said Lawrence Rosenthal, a Chicago lawyer who was a Stevens' law clerk in 1984. "Justice Stevens would laugh to hear himself called a liberal."

Rosenthal said Stevens often talked about how, growing up in Hyde Park, he admired Chicago Ald. Charles Merriam, a reform Republican.

David Yalof, a political science professor at the University of Connecticut, said that historically justices have expressed a desire to retire when a like-minded president can nominate their successor. During the Reagan administration, Justice Thurgood Marshall reportedly told his law clerks, "If I die while that man's president, just prop me up and keep on voting."

Even justices who drifted away from the party that put them on the bench remained loyal at retirement time, Yalof said. Lewis Powell was nominated by President Richard Nixon but was nominally a Democrat who cast decisive votes on civil liberties and was in the majority in Roe vs. Wade, which legalized abortion nationwide. Still, Justice Powell wanted a Republican to replace him, Yalof said, so he retired in 1987, and Reagan named his successor, Anthony Kennedy.

On the other side, Justice Byron White, nominated by President John Kennedy, became conservative on the court when it came to civil liberties and criminal law. White dissented in Roe vs. Wade, opposed affirmative action and authored a controversial opinion that upheld a Georgia anti-sodomy law. Yet he retired during the first year of President Bill Clinton's tenure.

Some former Supreme Court clerks said this tendency has less to do with partisan politics than with the court itself: No justice, they say, would like to see his or her work undone by his successor.

To some extent the rancorous atmosphere on Capitol Hill, where Senate Democrats are filibustering two of Bush's appellate court nominees and threatening to do so against others, would argue in favor of a Stevens retirement. He would know that it would be difficult for Bush to get an ardent conservative to replace him.

Indeed, Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) has said he would support a filibuster of any Supreme Court nominee who would roll back advances on a woman's right to choose abortion, on civil rights and individual liberties, and on laws protecting workers and the environment.

A nominee who held conservative views on those issues would not dramatically affect the law if he were replacing Rehnquist. Indeed, Republicans fear that Bush could move the court to the left if Rehnquist retired because the Senate might not confirm a nominee as conservative as the chief justice.

'Tip the balance'

Still, interest groups already have mobilized to fight nominees they would consider too conservative to replace Rehnquist or the more moderate O'Connor. The retirement of Stevens would dramatically intensify the battle.

"This would be the replacement of a liberal justice with a conservative justice and would tip the balance of the court on all kinds of cases," said John Yoo, a law professor at the University of California-Berkeley and visiting scholar with the American Enterprise Institute.

For example, the court in 2000 struck down a state law banning a type of abortion procedure by a 5-4 vote, with Stevens in the majority. That issue is brewing again, since Bush has vowed to support a federal law banning the procedure, which opponents call "partial-birth abortion."

THE NOMINATION OF DAVID SOUTER

SG Kenneth Starr Left to Ponder His Prospects

BODY:

Solicitor General Kenneth Starr can be forgiven if he is feeling a little frustrated these days.

One week ago, the genial conservative was basking in national attention as the odds-on favorite to take retiring Justice William Brennan Jr.'s seat on the Supreme Court.

Today, Starr is just another also-ran, left to wonder how he was eclipsed by one of the darkest horses in the history of the high court -- and whether, given the ever-changing politics of judicial selection, his moment in history may have passed him by.

Nothing happened during that week to discredit Starr. Indeed, the man one former Justice Department official credited with "the best legal resume in America" has survived two Senate confirmations and the added scrutiny of being a finalist for Brennan's Supreme Court slot without as much as a hint that he harbors a smoking gun. Despite being passed over by the Bush administration this time, Starr automatically assumes his now customary spot on the Supreme Court short-list.

But Starr, more than any other candidate under consideration for Brennan's job, was a victim of the times.

Starr, who clerked for then Chief Justice Warren Burger, counseled then Attorney General William French Smith, and spent nearly six years on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, had the lengthiest and most visible paper trail among the serious contenders. He has ruled against affirmative action, defended First Amendment freedoms, and sent out the government's arguments against the abortion-rights ruling Roe v. Wade under his own name.

In an era heavily influenced by the memories of Robert Bork's bloody and ultimately failed Supreme Court confirmation battle, Starr's trail worked against him. When it comes to public exposure on controversial issues, David Souter, the little-known New Hampshire judge ultimately tapped by President George Bush, lies at the other end of the spectrum.

Administration officials insist there was no litmus test. No single legal proclamation, they argue, did Starr in. But at least one official close to the selection process grudgingly admits that when stacked up against other whose records raised fewer potential red flags, Starr's chances quickly faded.

"It probably was not lost on people that neither Souter nor Judge Edith Jones had addressed the abortion issue or affirmative action," says the official, who requests anonymity.

Starr's supporters are more forceful.

"Ken suffered from the fact that he'd written eloquently and deeply on the separation of church and state, abortion, prison overcrowding, and a whole host of other controversial issues," says conservative legal analyst Bruce Fein.

"It's a tragedy when someone gets punished for having thought hard and deep about these questions," adds Fein, who contributes a regular column to Legal Times. "If science and medicine selected its leaders the way they appear to be selecting Supreme Court nominees, we'd still be in the dark ages."

Starr declines comment.

Falling Starr

In some ways, it is difficult to do a post-mortem on Starr's fall from front-runner status, since there have been conflicting accounts of just how far he made it in the race.

According to several administration officials familiar with the events leading up to Souter's selection, Starr was knocked off the list as early as Saturday morning, following Brennan's announcement Friday night. One source suggests that while no one spoke in opposition to Starr, the solicitor general's name was given a cool reception by White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray. Gray could not be reached for comment.

Yet two other administration officials insist that Starr was a serious contender until the end, along with finalists Souter, and federal appellate judges Laurence Silberman of the D.C. Circuit and Edith Jones of the 5th Circuit.

The confusion may stem in part from the fact that Starr was never called in for an interview.

During the weekend between Brennan's announcement and President Bush's decision, both Souter and Jones were whisked to Washington, where they met with Bush, Gray, Attorney General Richard Thornburgh, and other Justice Department personnel.

Starr, by contrast, was far from the flurry of activity at the administration's command centers. According to a source close to the solicitor general, he spent the weekend quietly celebrating his 44th birthday with his family at his home in McLean, Va.

But an administration official cautioned against reading too much into the decision not to summon the solicitor general.

"Even though he did not get an interview, that was more a function of the fact that everyone knew Ken," says this source.

"The president didn't really know Edith Jones or Judge Souter," the official adds. "There wasn't much that Thornburgh or Boyden Gray were going to learn from Ken in a face-to-face interview."

Whatever the reasoning, it was clear that by that time, Starr was gone. Several hours after meeting with Souter, debating with his top advisers, and contemplating his choice alone, Bush called Souter into the Oval Office to deliver the good news.

The Public Servant

There is a certain irony in President Bush passing Starr over for a lower-profile nominee. For if Starr is seen as having produced too many controversial writings, the administration bears at least a share of the blame.

Some of Starr's most delicate positions have been staked out as briefs written on behalf of the government.

In his most visible act as solicitor general, Starr signed a brief arguing that Roe v. Wade had no credible legal foundation and ought to be overruled. More recently, Starr sought unsuccessfully to persuade the Supreme Court to uphold the constitutionality of a federal statute banning flag-burning.

Of course, Starr's stances in both cases merely reflect his duty as a lawyer to represent his client, the United States. But such fine distinctions likely would not stop liberals and conservatives alike from using the issues as fodder in a Senate confirmation fight.

Starr knew he ran such risks when he took the job. By leaving his lifetime court appointment for the solicitor general's office, Starr virtually guaranteed himself a spot on the short-list of prospective Supreme Court nominees. But he also placed himself in a position buffeted by political crosscurrents, a post which requires that he expose himself to controversy and regularly test his relations with people in high places.

"It's easy to make enemies," says Andrew Frey, a former deputy solicitor general and now a partner in the D.C. office of Chicago's Mayer, Brown & Platt. "Being solicitor general means being the flash point on controversial issues. You've got to make a lot of decisions in which you inevitably anger somebody in the government."

Starr carved out some of his other controversial positions on his own. During his tenure on the D.C. Circuit, Starr rankled liberals with his lead role in a 1987 decision declaring the D.C. Fire Department's affirmative-action plan to be illegal. He garnered liberal affection, however, by ruling to dismiss a libel verdict brought against The Washington Post by Mobil Oil Corp. executive William Tavoulaareas.

Starr's generally conservative but cautious jurisprudence has always stood him in good stead among conservative activists. But he is not the sort to inspire fans to fall on their swords. More courtly than crusading, Starr lacks the kind of "movement" support commanded by Bork, Jones, or even Patrick Higginbotham, another 5th Circuit Court of Appeals judge.

"It really helps if you've got an intensely devoted following dedicated to making your views happen," says one former Justice Department official, noting that such supporters can effectively act as campaign managers for prospective Supreme Court nominees.

"I can't think of anyone who fits that description for Ken," this former official adds.

Clouded Crystal Ball

Does Starr's fall from front-runner to also-ran this time affect his future chances for landing on the Supreme Court?

In principle, of course, the answer is no; each vacancy is a discrete episode, and failure in bidding for one open seat is no bar to success in obtaining the next.

But political landscapes change, and with them the forces affecting judicial selection.

The president choosing the next Supreme Court justice may face greater pressure to tap a woman, a black, or an Hispanic -- to fill an existing minority seat on the high court, or simply to meet pressures building because President Bush did not do so this time around.

Republicans may lose the White House. Or Starr himself may stumble, writing a brief on an issue so politically explosive that he will effectively be ruled out of the running.

Still, Starr's supporters argue his youth and his credentials suggest he will triumph one day.

"Starr is so well-known, so well-liked and so well-plugged in," says Judge Alex Kozinski of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit, who counts Starr as a close friend. "His reputation is his best campaign manager.

If anything, this strong showing, despite his relatively junior age, makes him a hot, strong prospect," adds Kozinski, who says that Starr was his choice for Brennan's seat, despite the fact that Kozinski himself was considered a candidate. "I'm quite sure he will end up on the Court."

Corrections

- An article on June 12 about confirmation hearings for William H. Pryor, Alabama's attorney general, who has been nominated for a federal judgeship, referred incorrectly to Senator Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, a member of the Judiciary Committee. He indeed appeared at the hearing, and questioned Mr. Pryor. (Mr. Specter had told a reporter that he was not going to attend because he was busy, but as the hearing was near an end, he decided to go.)

Board will name judicial candidates

Senators reactivate panel in light of appeals vacancy

By CRAIG GILBERT

Last Updated: June 25, 2003

Washington - After discussions with the White House and House Republican F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., Senate Democrats Herb Kohl and Russ Feingold have reactivated a bipartisan Wisconsin commission to recommend finalists for an important vacancy on the federal appeals court.

The move appears to avert for now a political collision over the sensitive judicial post, though a fight is certainly possible down the road.

The vacancy, on the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago, results from Judge John Coffey's decision to assume senior status and a reduced workload.

Over White House resistance, Kohl and Feingold have insisted on the commission process, which has been used over the past 20 years to vet most Wisconsin candidates for federal judge and prosecutor.

The two senators enjoy considerable leverage on the issue, because both sit on the Judiciary Committee, which approves new judges.

Kohl said he believed the White House concluded that fighting the commission process would lead to a "very, very difficult" nomination battle.

"They've got two senators on the Judiciary Committee, both senators taking the same position . . . It would be a bad idea to just say, 'We're going to wreck the commission.' They made a smart decision." "

Kohl said that in recent talks, the White House had signaled its willingness to send its preferred candidate through the commission.

"We're confident the nominee chosen by the president will receive the full support of senators Feingold and Kohl," said White House spokesman Scott Stanzel.

But Stanzel said the use of a nominating commission "is not up to the White House because this is the process the senators are using to help them in their duty to advise the president."

The White House has also said in recent weeks that when it comes to appellate vacancies, it would not be bound by the list of finalists coming out of a nominating commission.

So while Wednesday's announcement makes a smooth nomination possible, it does not guarantee one. The two senators could still find the president's preferred choice objectionable. The White House could choose to press ahead over those objections.

Much at stake

What makes either scenario possible is the high political stakes involved.

Appellate vacancies have provoked the sharpest battles between the Republican president and Senate Democrats, due to the crucial role appellate judges play in shaping law. The Court of Appeals is just one tier down in the federal judiciary from the Supreme Court.

Kohl and Feingold have defended the commissions as a bipartisan mechanism for recommending nominees. In practice, it also has given the senators a direct role in winnowing the names that are passed along to the White House.

Sensenbrenner said the White House is "willing to go through the (commission) process" but reserves the right to nominate whom it wants when it wants.

"That's why it is important for the commission to get down to work quickly," he said.

The 12-member commission will start taking applications immediately for the vacancy and hopes to produce a list of five or so finalists in as little as 30 days, said Jason Westphal of the State Bar of Wisconsin. The bar staffs the commission.

The nominating commission will be chaired by the incoming dean of Marquette University Law School, Joe Kearney, and the dean of the University of Wisconsin Law School, Ken Davis.

Two of its members were named by Kohl: Steve Glynn and Greg Conway.

Four were named by Sensenbrenner: Rick Graber, Mark Neumann, William Curran and John Savage.

SEC. 203. PROMOTION OF NEW RUNWAYS.

Section 40104 is amended by adding at the end the following:

SEC. 204. AIRPORT PROJECT STREAMLINING.

(a) IN GENERAL- Chapter 471 is amended by inserting after section 47153 the following:

`SUBCHAPTER III--AIRPORT PROJECT STREAMLINING

`Sec. 47171. DOT as lead agency

`(a) AIRPORT PROJECT REVIEW PROCESS- The Secretary of Transportation shall develop and implement a coordinated review process for airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports.

`(b) COORDINATED REVIEWS-

`(1) IN GENERAL- The coordinated review process under this section shall provide that all environmental reviews, analyses, opinions, permits, licenses, and approvals that must be issued or made by a Federal agency or airport sponsor for an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport will be conducted concurrently, to the maximum extent practicable, and completed within a time period established by the Secretary, in cooperation with the agencies identified under subsection (c) with respect to the project.

`(2) AGENCY PARTICIPATION- Each Federal agency identified under subsection (c) shall formulate and implement administrative, policy, and procedural mechanisms to enable the agency to ensure completion of environmental reviews, analyses, opinions, permits, licenses, and approvals described in paragraph (1) in a timely and environmentally responsible manner.

`(c) IDENTIFICATION OF JURISDICTIONAL AGENCIES- With respect to each airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport, the Secretary shall identify, as soon as practicable, all Federal and State agencies that may have jurisdiction over environmental-related matters that may be affected by the project or may be required by law to conduct an environmental-related review or analysis of the project or determine whether to issue an environmental-related permit, license, or approval for the project.

`(d) STATE AUTHORITY- If a coordinated review process is being implemented under this section by the Secretary with respect to a project at an airport within the boundaries of a State, the State, consistent with State law, may choose to participate in such process and provide that all State agencies that have jurisdiction over environmental-related matters that may be affected by the project or may be required by law to conduct an environmental-related review or analysis of the project or determine whether to issue an environmental-related permit, license, or approval for the project, be subject to the process.

`(e) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING- The coordinated review process developed under this section may be incorporated into a memorandum of understanding for a project between the Secretary and the heads of other Federal and State agencies identified under subsection (c) with respect to the project and the airport sponsor.

`(f) EFFECT OF FAILURE TO MEET DEADLINE-

`(1) NOTIFICATION OF CONGRESS AND CEQ- If the Secretary determines that a Federal agency, State agency, or airport sponsor that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to a project has not met a deadline established under subsection (b) for the project, the Secretary shall notify, within 30 days of the date of such determination, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, the Council on Environmental Quality, and the agency or sponsor involved about the failure to meet the deadline.

`(2) AGENCY REPORT- Not later than 30 days after date of receipt of a notice under paragraph (1), the agency or sponsor involved shall submit a report to the Secretary, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and the Council on Environmental Quality explaining why the agency or sponsor did not meet the deadline and what actions it intends to take to complete or issue the required review, analysis, opinion, permit, license, or approval.

`(g) PURPOSE AND NEED- For any environmental review, analysis, opinion, permit, license, or approval that must be issued or made by a Federal or State agency that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport and that requires an analysis of purpose and need for the project, the agency, notwithstanding any other provision of law, shall be bound by the project purpose and need as defined by the Secretary.

`(h) ALTERNATIVES ANALYSIS- The Secretary shall determine the reasonable alternatives to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport. Any other Federal or State agency that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to the project shall consider only those alternatives to the project that the Secretary has determined are reasonable.

`(i) SOLICITATION AND CONSIDERATION OF COMMENTS- In applying subsections (g) and (h), the Secretary shall solicit and consider comments from interested persons and governmental entities.

`(j) MONITORING BY TASK FORCE- The Transportation Infrastructure Streamlining Task Force, established by Executive Order 13274 (67 Fed. Reg. 59449; relating to environmental stewardship and transportation infrastructure project reviews), may monitor airport projects that are subject to the coordinated review process under this section.

`Sec. 47172. Categorical exclusions

`Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Transportation shall develop and publish a list of categorical exclusions from the requirement that an environmental assessment or an environmental impact statement be prepared under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) for projects at airports.

`Sec. 47173. Access restrictions to ease construction

`At the request of an airport sponsor for a congested airport, the Secretary of Transportation may approve a restriction on use of a runway to be constructed at the airport to minimize potentially significant adverse noise impacts from the runway only if the Secretary determines that imposition of the restriction--

`(1) is necessary to mitigate those impacts and expedite construction of the runway;

`(2) is the most appropriate and a cost-effective measure to mitigate those impacts, taking into consideration any environmental tradeoffs associated with the restriction; and

`(3) would not adversely affect service to small communities, adversely affect safety or efficiency of the national airspace system, unjustly discriminate against any class of user of the airport, or impose an undue burden on interstate or foreign commerce.

`(a) IN GENERAL- Notwithstanding section 47107(b), section 47133, or any other provision of this title, the Secretary of Transportation may allow an airport sponsor carrying out an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport to make payments, out of revenues generated at the airport (including local taxes on aviation fuel), for measures to mitigate the environmental impacts of the project if the Secretary finds that--

`(1) the mitigation measures are included as part of, or support, the preferred alternative for the project in the documentation prepared pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.);

`(2) the use of such revenues will provide a significant incentive for, or remove an impediment to, approval of the project by a State or local government; and

`(3) the cost of the mitigation measures is reasonable in relation to the mitigation that will be achieved.

`(b) MITIGATION OF AIRCRAFT NOISE- Mitigation measures described in subsection (a) may include the insulation of residential buildings and buildings used primarily for educational or medical purposes to mitigate the effects of aircraft noise and the improvement of such buildings as required for the insulation of the buildings under local building codes.

`Sec. 47175. Airport funding of FAA staff

`(a) ACCEPTANCE OF SPONSOR-PROVIDED FUNDS- Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration may accept funds from an airport sponsor, including funds provided to the sponsor under section 47114(c), to hire additional staff or obtain the services of consultants in order to facilitate the timely processing, review, and completion of environmental activities associated with an airport development project.

`(b) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION- Instead of payment from an airport sponsor from funds apportioned to the sponsor under section 47114, the Administrator, with agreement of the sponsor, may transfer funds that would otherwise be apportioned to the sponsor under section 47114 to the account used by the Administrator for activities described in subsection (a).

`(c) RECEIPTS CREDITED AS OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Notwithstanding section 3302 of title 31, any funds accepted under this section, except funds transferred pursuant to subsection (b)--

`(1) shall be credited as offsetting collections to the account that finances the activities and services for which the funds are accepted;

`(2) shall be available for expenditure only to pay the costs of activities and services for which the funds are accepted; and

`(d) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT- No funds may be accepted pursuant to subsection (a), or transferred pursuant to subsection (b), in any fiscal year in which the Federal Aviation Administration does not allocate at least the amount it expended in fiscal year 2002, excluding amounts accepted pursuant to section 337 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (115 Stat. 862), for the activities described in subsection (a).

`Sec. 47176. Authorization of appropriations

`In addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 106(k), there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation, out of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund established under section 9502 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 9502), $4,200,000 for fiscal year 2004 and for each fiscal year thereafter to facilitate the timely processing, review, and completion of environmental activities associated with airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports.

`Sec. 47177. Designation of aviation safety and aviation security projects for priority environmental review

`(a) IN GENERAL- The Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration may designate an aviation safety or aviation security project for priority environmental review. The Administrator may not delegate this designation authority.

`(b) PROJECT DESIGNATION CRITERIA- The Administrator shall establish guidelines for the designation of an aviation safety or aviation security project for priority environmental review. Such guidelines shall include consideration of--

`(1) the importance or urgency of the project;

`(2) the potential for undertaking the environmental review under existing emergency procedures under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.);

`(3) the need for cooperation and concurrent reviews by other Federal or State agencies; and

`(4) the prospect for undue delay if the project is not designated for priority review.

`(c) COORDINATED ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEWS-

`(1) TIMELINES AND HIGH PRIORITY FOR COORDINATED ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEWS- The Administrator, in consultation with the heads of affected agencies, shall establish specific timelines for the coordinated environmental review of an aviation safety or aviation security project designated under subsection (a). Such timelines shall be consistent with the timelines established in existing laws and regulations. Each Federal agency with responsibility for project environmental reviews, analyses, opinions, permits, licenses, and approvals shall accord any such review a high priority and shall conduct the review expeditiously and, to the maximum extent possible, concurrently with other such reviews.

`(2) AGENCY PARTICIPATION- Each Federal agency identified under subsection (c) shall formulate and implement administrative, policy, and procedural mechanisms to enable the agency to ensure completion of environmental reviews, analyses, opinions, permits, licenses, and approvals described in paragraph (1) in a timely and environmentally responsible manner.

`(d) STATE PARTICIPATION-

`(1) INVITATION TO PARTICIPATE- If a priority environmental review process is being implemented under this section with respect to a project within the boundaries of a State with applicable State environmental requirements and approvals, the Administrator shall invite the State to participate in the process.

`(2) STATE CHOICE- A State invited to participate in a priority environmental review process, consistent with State law, may choose to participate in such process and direct that all State agencies, which have jurisdiction by law to conduct an environmental review or analysis of the project to determine whether to issue an environmentally related permit, license, or approval for the project, be subject to the process.

`(e) FAILURE TO GIVE PRIORITY REVIEW-

`(1) NOTICE- If the Secretary of Transportation determines that a Federal agency or a participating State is not complying with the requirements of this section and that such noncompliance is undermining the environmental review process, the Secretary shall notify, within 30 days of such determination, the head of the Federal agency or, with respect to a State agency, the Governor of the State.

`(2) REPORT TO SECRETARY- A Federal agency that receives a copy of a notification relating to that agency made by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall submit, within 30 days after receiving such copy, a written report to the Secretary explaining the reasons for the situation described in the notification and what remedial actions the agency intends to take.

`(3) NOTIFICATION OF CEQ AND COMMITTEES- If the Secretary determines that a Federal agency has not satisfactorily addressed the problems within a reasonable period of time following a notification under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall notify the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate, and the Council on Environmental Quality.

`(f) PROCEDURAL PROVISIONS- The procedures set forth in subsections (c), (e), (g), (h), and (i) of section 47171 shall apply with respect to an aviation safety or aviation security project under this section in the same manner and to the same extent as such procedures apply to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport under section 47171.

`(g) DEFINITIONS- In this section, the following definitions apply:

`(1) AVIATION SAFETY PROJECT- The term 'aviation safety project' means an aviation project that--

`(A) has as its primary purpose reducing the risk of injury to persons or damage to aircraft and property, as determined by the Administrator; and

`(B)(i) is needed to respond to a recommendation from the National Transportation Safety Board; or

`(ii) is necessary for an airport to comply with part 139 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations (relating to airport certification).

`(2) AVIATION SECURITY PROJECT- The term 'aviation security project' means a security project at an airport required by the Department of Homeland Security.

`(3) FEDERAL AGENCY- The term 'Federal agency' means a department or agency of the United States Government.

`Sec. 47178. Definitions

`(3) AIRPORT CAPACITY ENHANCEMENT PROJECT- The term `airport capacity enhancement project' means--

`(A) a project for construction or extension of a runway, including any land acquisition, taxiway, or safety area associated with the runway or runway extension; and

`(B) such other airport development projects as the Secretary may designate as facilitating a reduction in air traffic congestion and delays.'

- `(c) GUIDELINES-

`(1) ISSUANCE- The Administrator shall issue guidelines concerning the pilot program. Such guidelines, at a minimum, shall define the criteria and process for determining when a capacity reduction event exists that warrants the use of collaborative decisionmaking among carriers at airports participating in the pilot program and that prescribe the methods of communication to be implemented among carriers during such an event.

`(2) VIEWS- The Administrator may obtain the views of interested parties in issuing the guidelines.

`(d) EFFECT OF DETERMINATION OF EXISTENCE OF CAPACITY REDUCTION EVENT- Upon a determination by the Administrator that a capacity reduction event exists, the Administrator may authorize air carriers and foreign air carriers operating at an airport participating in the pilot program to communicate for a period of time not to exceed 24 hours with each other concerning changes in their respective flight schedules in order to use air traffic capacity most effectively. The Administration shall facilitate and monitor such communication.

`(e) SELECTION OF PARTICIPATING AIRPORTS- Not later than 30 days after the date on which the Administrator establishes the pilot program, the Administrator shall select 3 airports to participate in the pilot program from among the most capacity-constrained airports in the country based on the Administration's Airport Capacity Benchmark Report 2001 or more recent data on airport capacity that is available to the Administrator. The Administrator shall select an airport for participation in the pilot program if the Administrator determines that collaborative decisionmaking among air carriers and foreign air carriers would reduce delays at the airport and have beneficial effects on reducing delays in the national airspace system as a whole.

`(f) ELIGIBILITY OF AIR CARRIERS- An air carrier or foreign air carrier operating at an airport selected to participate in the pilot program is eligible to participate in the pilot program if the Administrator determines that the carrier has the operational and communications capability to participate in the pilot program.

`(g) MODIFICATION OR TERMINATION OF PILOT PROGRAM AT AN AIRPORT- The Administrator may modify or end the pilot program at an airport before the term of the pilot program has expired, or may ban an air carrier or foreign air carrier from participating in the program, if the Administrator determines that the purpose of the pilot program is not being furthered by participation of the airport or air carrier or if the Secretary of Transportation finds that the pilot program or the participation of an air carrier or foreign air carrier in the pilot program has had, or is having, an adverse effect on competition among carriers.

`(h) EVALUATION-

`(1) IN GENERAL- Before the expiration of the 2-year period for which the pilot program is authorized under subsection (b), the Administrator shall determine whether the pilot program has facilitated more effective use of air traffic capacity and the Secretary shall determine whether the pilot program has had an adverse effect on airline competition or the availability of air services to communities. The Administrator shall also examine whether capacity benefits resulting from the participation in the pilot program of an airport resulted in capacity benefits to other parts of the national airspace system.

`(2) OBTAINING NECESSARY DATA- The Administrator may require participating air carriers and airports to provide data necessary to evaluate the pilot program's impact.

`(i) EXTENSION OF PILOT PROGRAM- At the end of the 2-year period for which the pilot program is authorized, the Administrator may continue the pilot program for an additional 2 years and expand participation in the program to up to 7 additional airports if the Administrator determines pursuant to subsection (h) that the pilot program has facilitated more effective use of air traffic capacity and if the Secretary determines that the pilot program has had no adverse effect on airline competition or the availability of air services to communities. The Administrator shall select the additional airports to participate in the extended pilot program in the same manner in which airports were initially selected to participate.'

SEC. 353. PILOT PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

Sec. 41745. Other pilot programs

(a) IN GENERAL- If the entire amount authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation by section 41785 is appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007, the Secretary of Transportation shall establish pilot programs that meet the requirements of this section for improving service to communities receiving essential air service assistance under this subchapter or consortia of such communities.

(b) Programs Authorized-

(1) COMMUNITY FLEXIBILITY- The Secretary shall establish a pilot program for not more than 10 communities or consortia of communities under which the airport sponsor of an airport serving the community or consortium may elect to forego any essential air service assistance under preceding sections of this subchapter for a 10-year period in exchange for a grant from the Secretary equal in value to twice the annual essential air service assistance received for the most recently ended calendar year. Under the program, and notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the Secretary shall make a grant to each participating sponsor for use by the recipient for any project that--

(A) is eligible for assistance under chapter 471;

(B) is located on the airport property; or

(C) will improve airport facilities in a way that would make such facilities more usable for general aviation.

(2) Equipment changes-

(A) IN GENERAL- The Secretary shall establish a pilot program for not more than 10 communities or consortia of communities under which, upon receiving a petition from the sponsor of the airport serving the community or consortium, the Secretary shall authorize and request the essential air service provider for that community or consortium to use smaller equipment to provide the service and to consider increasing the frequency of service using such smaller equipment. Before granting any such petition, the Secretary shall determine that passenger safety would not be compromised by the use of such smaller equipment. Any community that participates in a pilot program under this

subparagraph is deemed to have waived the minimum service requirements under section 41732(b) for purposes of its participation in that pilot program.

“(B) ALTERNATIVE SERVICES- For any 3 airport sponsors participating in the program established under subparagraph (A), the Secretary may establish a pilot program under which--

“(i) the Secretary provides 100 percent Federal funding for reasonable levels of alternative transportation services from the eligible place to the nearest hub airport or small hub airport;

“(ii) the Secretary will authorize the sponsor to use its essential air service subsidy funds provided under preceding sections of this subchapter for any airport-related project that would improve airport facilities; and

“(iii) the sponsor may make an irrevocable election to terminate its participation in the pilot program established under this paragraph after 1 year.

“(3) COST-SHARING- The Secretary shall establish a pilot program under which the sponsors of airports serving a community or consortium of communities share the cost of providing air transportation service greater than the basic essential air service provided under this subchapter.

“(c) CODE-SHARING- Under the pilot program established under subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized to require air carriers providing service to participating communities and major air carriers (as defined in section 41716(a)(2)) serving large hub airports (as defined in section 41731(a)(3)) to participate in multiple code-share arrangements consistent with normal industry practice whenever and wherever the Secretary determines that such multiple code-sharing arrangements would improve air transportation services. The Secretary may not require air carriers to participate in such arrangements under this subsection for more than 10 such communities.

“(d) TRACKING SERVICE- The Secretary shall require carriers providing subsidy for service under section 41733 to track changes in services, including on-time arrivals and departures, on such subsidized routes, and to report such information to the Secretary on a semi-annual basis in such form as the Secretary may require.

“(e) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS- In order to participate in a pilot program established under this section, the airport sponsor for a community or consortium of communities shall submit an application to the Secretary in such form, at such time, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.’.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT- The chapter analysis for chapter 417 of such title is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 41744 the following:

‘41745. Other pilot programs.’.

SEC. 354. EAS PROGRAM AUTHORITY CHANGES.

(a) RATE RENEGOTIATION- If the Secretary of Transportation determines that essential air service providers are experiencing significantly increased costs of providing service under subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, the Secretary of Transportation may increase the rates of compensation payable under that subchapter within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act without regard to any agreements or requirements relating to the renegotiation of contracts. For purposes of this subsection, the term `significantly increased costs' means an average annual total unit cost increase (but not increases in individual unit costs) of 10 percent or more in relation to the unit rates used to construct the subsidy rate, based on the carrier's internal audit of its financial statements.

(b) RETURNED FUNDS- Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, any funds made available under subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, that are returned to the Secretary by an airport sponsor because of decreased subsidy needs for essential air service under that subchapter shall remain available to the Secretary and may be used by the Secretary under that subchapter to increase the frequency of flights at that airport.

(c) SMALL COMMUNITY AIR SERVICE DEVELOPMENT PILOT PROGRAM- Section 41743(h) of such title is amended by striking `an airport' and inserting `each airport'.

SEC. 355. ONE-YEAR EXTENSION OF EAS ELIGIBILITY FOR COMMUNITIES TERMINATED IN 2003 DUE TO DECREASED AIR TRAVEL.

Notwithstanding the rate of subsidy limitation in section 332 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2000, the Secretary of Transportation may not terminate an essential air service subsidy provided under chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, before the end of calendar year 2004 for air service to a community--

- (1) whose calendar year ridership for 2000 was sufficient to keep the per passenger subsidy below that limitation; and*
- (2) that has received notice that its subsidy will be terminated during calendar year 2003 because decreased ridership has caused the subsidy to exceed that limitation.*

(c) Exemption for Armed Forces Charters-

(1) IN GENERAL- Subsections (a) and (b) of this section, and chapter 449 of title 49, United States Code, do not apply to passengers and property carried by aircraft when employed to provide charter transportation to members of the armed forces.

SEC. 405. ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This section may be cited as the 'Arming Cargo Pilots Against Terrorism Act'.

(b) FINDINGS- Congress makes the following findings:

(1) During the 107th Congress, both the Senate and the House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed measures that would have armed pilots of cargo aircraft.

(2) Cargo aircraft do not have Federal air marshals, trained cabin crew, or determined passengers to subdue terrorists.

(3) Cockpit doors on cargo aircraft, if present at all, largely do not meet the security standards required for commercial passenger aircraft.

(4) Cargo aircraft vary in size and many are larger and carry larger amounts of fuel than the aircraft hijacked on September 11, 2001.

(5) Aircraft cargo frequently contains hazardous material and can contain deadly biological and chemical agents and quantities of agents that cause communicable diseases.

(6) Approximately 12,000 of the nation's 90,000 commercial pilots serve as pilots and flight engineers on cargo aircraft.

(7) There are approximately 2,000 cargo flights per day in the United States, many of which are loaded with fuel for outbound international travel or are inbound from foreign airports not secured by the Transportation Security Administration.

(8) Aircraft transporting cargo pose a serious risk as potential terrorist targets that could be used as weapons of mass destruction.

(9) Pilots of cargo aircraft deserve the same ability to protect themselves and the aircraft they pilot as other commercial airline pilots.

(10) Permitting pilots of cargo aircraft to carry firearms creates an important last line of defense against a terrorist effort to commandeer a cargo aircraft.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS- It is the sense of Congress that members of a flight deck crew of a cargo aircraft should be armed with a firearm and taser to defend the cargo aircraft against an attack by terrorists that could result in the use of the aircraft as a weapon of mass destruction or for other terrorist purposes.

(d) ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM- Section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, is amended--

(1) in subsection (a), by striking 'passenger' each place that it appears; and

(A) in paragraph (2)--

(i) by striking 'or,' and all that follows; and

(ii) by inserting 'or any other flight deck crew member.'; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

(3) ALL-CARGO AIR TRANSPORTATION- For the purposes of this section, the term air transportation includes all-cargo air transportation.'

(e) TIME FOR IMPLEMENTATION- The training of pilots as Federal flight deck officers required in the amendments made by subsection (d) shall begin as soon as practicable and no later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS- The requirements of subsection (e) shall have no effect on the deadlines for implementation contained in section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

establishing the ADIZ, transmit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, a report containing an explanation of the need for the ADIZ. The Administrator shall provide the Committees an updated report every 60 days until the establishment of the ADIZ is rescinded. The reports and updates shall be transmitted in classified form.

(b) EXISTING ADIZ- If an ADIZ is in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall transmit an initial report under subsection (a) to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS- If a report required under subsection (a) or (b) indicates that the ADIZ is to be continued, the Administrator shall outline changes in procedures and requirements to improve operational efficiency and minimize the operational impacts of the ADIZ on pilots and air traffic controllers.

(d) DEFINITION- In this section, the terms 'Air Defense Identification Zone' and 'ADIZ' mean a zone established by the Administrator with respect to airspace under 18,000 feet in approximately a 15 to 38 mile radius around Washington, District of Columbia, for which security measures are extended beyond the existing 15-mile-no-fly zone around Washington and in which general aviation aircraft are required to adhere to certain procedures issued by the Administrator.

SEC. 408. REPORT ON PASSENGER PRESCREENING PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL- Within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Homeland Security, after consultation with the Attorney General, shall submit a report in writing to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the potential impact of the Transportation Security Administration's proposed Computer Assisted Passenger Prescreening system, commonly known as CAPPS II, on the privacy and civil liberties of United States citizens.

(2) How the Transportation Security Administration will treat the scores assigned to individual travelers to measure the likelihood they may pose a security threat, including how long such scores will be retained and whether and under what circumstances they may be shared with other governmental, nongovernmental, or commercial entities.

(3) The role airlines and outside vendors or contractors will have in implementing and operating the system, and to what extent will they have access, or the means to obtain access, to data, scores, or other information generated by the system.

(4) The safeguards that will be implemented to ensure that data, scores, or other information generated by the system will be used only as officially intended.

(5) The procedures that will be implemented to mitigate the effect of any errors, and what procedural recourse will be available to passengers who believe the system has wrongly barred them from taking flights.

(6) The oversight procedures that will be implemented to ensure that, on an ongoing basis, privacy and civil liberties issues will continue to be considered and addressed with high priority as the system is installed, operated and updated.

(a) PURPOSE- The purpose of this section is to permit the use of funds made available under subchapter 471 to encourage commercial service airports in air quality nonattainment and maintenance areas to undertake projects for gate electrification, acquisition or conversion of airport vehicles and airport-owned ground support equipment to acquire low-emission technology, low-emission technology fuel systems, and other related air quality projects on a voluntary basis to improve air quality and more aggressively address the constraints that emissions can impose on future aviation growth. Use of those funds is conditioned on airports receiving credits for emissions reductions that can be used to mitigate the air quality effects of future airport development. Making these projects eligible for funding in addition to those projects that are already eligible under section 47102(3)(F) is intended to support those projects that, at the time of execution, may not be required by the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501 et seq.), but may be needed in the future.

The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance describing eligible low-emission vehicle technology and stating how airport sponsors will demonstrate benefits. ## TITLE VI--SECOND CENTURY OF FLIGHT

SEC. 601. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Since 1990, the United States has lost more than 600,000 aerospace jobs.

(2) Over the last year, approximately 100,000 airline workers and aerospace workers have lost their jobs as a result of the terrorist attacks in the United States on September 11, 2001, and the slowdown in the world economy.

(3) The United States has revolutionized the way people travel, developing new technologies and aircraft to move people more efficiently and more safely.

(4) Past Federal investment in aeronautics research and development have benefited the economy and national security of the United States and the quality of life of its citizens.

(5) The total impact of civil aviation on the United States economy exceeds $900,000,000,000 annually--9 percent of the gross national product--and 11 million jobs in the national workforce. Civil aviation products and services generate a significant surplus for United States trade accounts, and amount to significant numbers of America's highly skilled, technologically qualified work force.

(6) Aerospace technologies, products and services underpin the advanced capabilities of our men and women in uniform and those charged with homeland security.

(7) Future growth in civil aviation increasingly will be constrained by concerns related to aviation system safety and security, aviation system capabilities, aircraft noise, emissions, and fuel consumption.

(8) The United States is in danger of losing its aerospace leadership to international competitors aided by persistent government intervention. Many governments take their funding beyond basic technology development, choosing to fund product development and often bring the product to market, even if the products are not fully commercially viable. Moreover, international competitors have recognized the importance of noise, emission, fuel consumption, and constraints of the aviation system and have established aggressive agendas for addressing each of these concerns.

(9) Efforts by the European Union, through a variety of means, will challenge the United States' leadership position in aerospace. A recent report outlined the European Union's goal of becoming the world's leader in aviation and aeronautics by the end of 2020, utilizing better coordination among research programs, planning, and funding to accomplish this goal.

(10) Revitalization and coordination of the United States' efforts to maintain its leadership in aviation and aeronautics are critical and must begin now.

(11) A recent report by the Commission on the Future of the United States Aerospace Industry outlined the scope of the problems confronting the aerospace and aviation industries in the United States and found that--

(A) Aerospace will be at the core of America's leadership and strength throughout the 21st century;

(B) Aerospace will play an integral role in our economy, our security, and our mobility; and

(C) global leadership in aerospace is a national imperative.

(12) Despite the downturn in the global economy, Federal Aviation Administration projections indicate that upwards of 1 billion people will fly annually by 2013. Efforts must begin now to prepare for future growth in the number of airline passengers.

(13) The United States must increase its investment in research and development to revitalize the aviation and aerospace industries, to create jobs, and to provide educational assistance and training to prepare workers in those industries for the future.

(14) Current and projected levels of Federal investment in aeronautics research and development are not sufficient to address concerns related to the growth of aviation.

The following are the diagrams and billing information for the White House Press Office (WHPO), Press Filing Center (PFC/AMEX), and the TV Networks.

Subject: Clinton statement on signing Defense of Marriage Act in 1996

September 30, 1996

Throughout my life I have strenuously opposed discrimination of any kind, including discrimination against gay and lesbian Americans. I am signing into law H.R. 3396, a bill relating to same-gender marriage, but it is important to note what this legislation does and does not do.

I have long opposed governmental recognition of same-gender marriages and this legislation is consistent with that position. The Act confirms the right of each state to determine its own policy with respect to same gender marriage and clarifies for purposes of federal law the operative meaning of the terms "marriage" and "spouse".

This legislation does not reach beyond those two provisions. It has no effect on any current federal, state or local anti-discrimination law and does not constrain the right of Congress or any state or locality to enact anti-discrimination laws. I therefore would take this opportunity to urge Congress to pass the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, an act which would extend employment discrimination protections to gays and lesbians in the workplace. This year the Senate considered this legislation contemporaneously with the Act I sign today and failed to pass it by a single vote. I hope that in its next Session Congress will pass it expeditiously.

I also want to make clear to all that the enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination, violence or intimidation against any person on the basis of sexual orientation. Discrimination, violence and intimidation for that reason, as well as others, violate the principle of equal protection under the law and have no place in American society.

Two things:

- 1) Make sure Brett's ok with their use of KR's title "Senior Advisor"
- 2) Not a huge deal, but when they use the Republican Elephant, they are supposed to have a trademark symbol next to it (i.e. a R in a circle).

National Archives and Records Administration

before the

Subcommittee on Technology Policy, Information Policy, Intergovernmental Relations, and the Census of the Committee on Government Reform
U. S. House of Representatives

July 8, 2003

I am John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States, and I wish to thank you Chairman Putnam for holding this important hearing today on the subject of Electronic Records Management. It is a pleasure to be with you, Congresswoman Miller, Congressman Clay and other distinguished members to discuss a subject of obviously great importance to the National Archives, and all of us as Americans. I feel at home here today. Your knowledge of technology has been clearly demonstrated even in your brief tenure as Chairman and I know that as a former Secretary of State, your vice chairman has very specific experience in this area. As for Congressman Clay, in the spirit of full disclosure, I go to work everyday on the campus of his alma mater, the University of Maryland, with which the National Archives enjoys a very good relationship and a very special partnership in the area of electronic records.

Defining the Challenges of Electronic Records

As you all know, the rapid evolution of information technology has produced huge volumes of diverse and complex digital records. These electronic records pose the biggest challenge ever to record keeping in the Federal Government. When you combine the rate of technological obsolescence with the explosive number of electronic records being created by the Government everyday, then you can begin to imagine the challenge that we face.

The very fact of this Committee hearing, and your opening statement, Mr. Chairman, demonstrate that this committee is well aware of both the character and the significance of the challenges posed by increasing reliance on digital technology. But let me highlight the uniqueness and the intensity of the challenge that the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) faces in this arena.

In the National Archives and the Presidential libraries, NARA is responsible for preserving and providing sustained access to records of all three Branches of the Federal Government. We share the common challenge entailed by rapid changes in the technology. This challenge is two-edged: on the one side, rapid obsolescence makes it difficult to maintain old hardware, software and digital formats; on the other, progress in technology offers better solutions which offer the possibility of improving service to customers. In NARA's case, this challenge is magnified by the need to preserve and deliver authentic records for generations of Americans who will not be born for a hundred years or more.

The ordinary person faces the dilemma of deciding whether to buy a new device today, or wait some months to take advantage of reduced prices and improved performance. So, not only does NARA have to deliver solutions critically needed to accomplish its mission, but we must also ensure that those solutions do not create future difficulties, recognizing that 5, 10, and more years in the future, Americans will want to use the best available technologies to access the records of their government.

The scope of NARA's responsibilities compounds the challenge. Under the provisions of the Clinger-Cohen Act and other statutes, each agency is required to acquire information technology that supports its core mission functions, reduces costs, improves effectiveness, and makes maximum use of commercial, off-the-shelf technology. NARA's challenge is not just to use the best available information technology for accomplishing its core mission, but also to cope successfully with the results of all other agencies' selections of technologies that optimally support their missions.

The historically valuable electronic records that come to the National Archives and the Presidential libraries come from applications deployed across the entire Federal Government. They can be in virtually any digital format -- not only those that result from common end-user applications like word processing and email, but also from web sites, databases, geographic information systems, digital photography and motion video, computer assisted engineering and manufacturing applications, from laboratory simulations, satellite observations, deep space probes, medical information and many others. Combining the variety of types of information that are produced and collected in the conduct of the Government's business with the recognition the digital formats in which the information is recorded change as rapidly as the software used to create and store it, leads to the conclusion that NARA needs to cope with thousands of different digital formats.

Initial Progress to Meet the Challenge

Within the past decade there has been significant progress in developing software products which enable agencies to apply records management discipline to electronic records that are typically produced on individual desktops. The Department of Defense has developed a program for certifying these products as complying with Federal records management requirements. I'm pleased to note that NARA has worked closely with the Defense Department on their Standard 5015.2 and has endorsed its use by all Federal agencies. However, implementing such a product is a time- and resource-intensive effort. As a result, agencies are trying to manage many records in paper filing systems, despite the fact that some of the new electronic formats cannot be rendered well, or in some cases at all, in a paper environment.

Through the e-Government Electronic Records Management (ERM) Initiative, NARA, working with its agency partners, is providing guidance on electronic records management applicable government-wide and enabling agencies to transfer their permanent electronic records to NARA in a variety of data types and formats.

Achieving Government-wide ERM requires a multi-year effort by all agencies. Differences in agency cultures and information technology infrastructures today make even an agency-wide implementation of ERM a challenging task. Moreover, as previously mentioned, the existing technology solutions for managing electronic records are not yet mature, and do not allow seamless integration into business processes. Clearly, for e-Government to be sustained over time, electronic records must be managed consistently within an agency as well as throughout the Government. We must not look only to solve the technological problems we face, but also to ensure that management, preservation, and reliable access to essential electronic records is built into the fabric of the next generation's national information infrastructure.

NARA's Statutory Responsibilities

The National Archives and Records Administration's statutory responsibilities relating to electronic records management are rooted in the Federal Records Act, which is codified under Title 44 of the United States Code. Under 44 U.S.C. 2904(a) the Archivist of the United States, as head of the National Archives and Records Administration, "shall provide guidance and assistance to Federal agencies with respect to ensuring adequate and proper documentation of the policies and transactions of the Federal Government and ensuring proper records disposition." Subsection 2904(c) specifies ways in which the Archivist carries out these guidance and assistance responsibilities.

The Archivist also has responsibilities under section 3303a to approve the disposal of any temporary Federal record and under section 2107 to take into the National Archives of the United States Federal records that "have sufficient historical or other value to warrant their continued preservation by the United States Government." And these statutory responsibilities apply to electronic records as well as other formats. Section 3301 includes in the definition of federal records "machine readable materials, or other documentary materials, regardless of physical form or characteristics."

Title 44 further specifies the kinds of records that Federal officials must create and preserve with NARA's guidance. Section 3101 stipulates that: the head of each Federal agency shall make and preserve records containing adequate and proper documentation of the organization, functions, policies, decisions, procedures, and essential transactions of the agency and designed to furnish the information necessary to protect the legal and financial rights of the Government and of persons directly affected by the agency's activities. Definitions in Section 2901 extend recordkeeping requirements to elements of the legislative and judicial branches, as well as executive branch agencies, and Section 2203 requires similarly that the President of the United States “assure that the activities, deliberations, decisions, and policies that reflect the performance of his constitutional, statutory, or other official or ceremonial duties are adequately documented . . .”

Thus, NARA shares responsibility with Federal officials throughout the government for “adequacy of documentation”--for seeing that certain kinds of records are created, kept, and made accessible. In Title 44 NARA has an additional and unique role to file centrally and to publish Federal laws and administrative regulations, the President's official orders, and the structure, functions, and activities of Federal agencies through the daily Federal Register. And in Section 2504 NARA, through the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, has the responsibility for making grants to manage, preserve, edit, and publish the papers of “outstanding citizens of the United States,” and “documentary sources significant to the history of the United States.” The Information Security Oversight Office (ISOO), which administratively is part of NARA, is responsible to the President for policy oversight of the Government-wide information security classification system and the National Industrial Security Program.

NARA’s Unique Mission: Ready Access to Essential Evidence

All this we have summed up in a simple, succinct statement of mission that both reflects our statutory mandates and expresses our sense of their significance:

The mission of the National Archives and Records Administration is to ensure, for the Citizen and the Public Servant, for the President and the Congress and the Courts, ready access to essential evidence.

This statement acknowledges our statutory responsibility for records in all three branches of the Federal Government. The statement acknowledges our statutory responsibility to help Federal officials manage records effectively for their own use as well as for the use of the public. And the statement acknowledges our commitment to making it as convenient as we can for officials and the public to get access to what sections 3101 and 3301 call “evidence” of “essential transactions” of the Federal Government.

The statutes quoted above speak of protecting rights, of maintaining adequate and proper documentation of what officials responsible to the public do, and of preserving records of historical and other value. Accordingly, we have defined “essential evidence” in our mission statement not just as documents needed for court cases, but as material generated by or received by the Federal Government, that documents: the rights of citizens; the actions of Federal officials; and the national experience.

Documentation of the rights of citizens means material that enables them to establish their identities, protect their rights, and claim their entitlements. Documentation of the actions of Federal officials means material that enables them to explain past decisions, form future policy, and be accountable for consequences. Documentation of the national experience means material of importance for understanding and evaluating the effects of Federal actions.

Essential evidence is not limited in form. It can include: written paper records; maps; drawings, and pictorial materials of documentary value; records generated in multiple formats by computers; artifacts as well as papers in Presidential library collections; and donated manuscripts, Federal Register publications, and other materials that help document rights and entitlements, Federal actions, and historical experience.

We use the term “essential evidence” to sum up, not to supplant, statutory definitions of records or traditional archival concepts. Recognizing that we cannot save everything, nor need to do so, our commitment to essential evidence in our mission statement underscores the particular importance we attach to safeguarding, within the body of Federal and Presidential records, those materials, informational as well as evidentiary, in technical archival terms, that document the identities, rights, and entitlements of citizens, the actions for which Federal officials are accountable, and the effects of those actions on shaping the national experience.

NARA alone is the archives of the Government of the United States, responsible for safeguarding records of all three branches of the Federal Government. The Smithsonian Institution maintains archives of its own as well as artifacts from a wide range of sources, on a wide range of subjects, including American history; and the Library of Congress preserves private manuscript and pictorial collections, as well as books, of an equally wide range. But neither the Library of Congress nor the Smithsonian has a mandate to protect Federal and Presidential records, or exercises responsibility for seeing that the activities of the three branches of the Federal Government are accessibly documented. Historians and other researchers make use of the holdings of NARA, the Smithsonian, and the Library of Congress, but there is virtually no overlap in what we statutorily have the responsibility to collect and preserve. NARA alone is mandated to provide ready access to essential records of what the Federal Government does--why, how, and with what consequences. Our mandate is unique.

Records Matter

Many of the records we hold have survived hundreds of years, but the same cannot be said of electronic records. As we know all too well, records created just a few years ago are already unreadable by today's technology. It is imperative that we find a way to authentically preserve and provide access to electronic records for as long as they are needed. Electronic records, like records in traditional forms, are critical for the effective functioning of a democracy. If they are not managed effectively throughout their lifecycle, vital records of the U.S. Government will be lost.

Thanks to the leadership of Chairman Davis, Congressman Turner and others, the role of the Archives in e-Government was furthered strengthened by our very visible role in the e-Government Act, now Public Law 107-347. We were pleased to be included in the Interagency Committee on Government Information and look forward to working with OMB and the CIO Council on the important issues of cataloging of information and access to electronic information. As the Archivist of the United States, I am required to issue policies based on recommendations from that Committee and the area of standards that we will talk a great deal about as our hearing goes on, is central to that policy requirement.

Currently we are working to address the challenges of electronic records in a comprehensive and strategic fashion, aiming to both preserving electronic records for the future, while at the same time striving to make effective electronic records management part of the infrastructure of e-government. The capability to create and maintain trustworthy records is an essential component of all government activities. Federal agencies require trustworthy records to meet their legal and internal business needs. Their business partners – whether an individual member of the public, a business, or another governmental entity – rely on the Government to have trustworthy records. Records management is the tool and process for providing such trustworthy records.

In a few moments, Mr. L. Reynolds Cahoon, the Assistant Archivist for Human Resources and Information will give you details on our programs and initiatives designed to effectively manage electronic records throughout their lifecycle.

In closing, I would like thank you all again for your interest in electronic records and the challenges they pose for agencies, the government as a whole, and our nation. The records of our country have played a vital role in our history, and it is imperative that we find solutions for electronic records. For I'm sure you will all agree with me when I say that records matter... for our citizens, our government and the future of our democracy.

Thank You.

July 8, 2003

I am L. Reynolds Cahoon, Assistant Archivist for Human Resources and Information Services, and Chief Information Officer of the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). I wish to join the Archivist in thanking you, Chairman Putnam, for recognizing the importance of Electronic Records Management and holding this hearing.

Two Perspectives on Records Management

As the Chief Information Officer of NARA, I have to maintain a dual perspective on the needs and responsibilities of this agency. In one direction, I have to see to it that NARA has the information technology that enables it to accomplish its mission and serve the citizens. In the other direction, I must take into account NARA's government-wide responsibility for leadership in the lifecycle management of records, which are critical information assets needed to make the U. S. Government work, to ensure that it is accountable to the citizens, and to document our national experience.

These two perspectives must coalesce in a comprehensive vision encompassing both how NARA accomplishes its own business and the direction NARA gives to other agencies. Only concerted, complementary efforts in both directions will enable the Federal Government to address the challenges posed by electronic records and make the transition to e-Government in a way that takes full advantage of the opportunities offered by networking and information technology while preserving what is best in our democratic traditions.

While my responsibilities as CIO focus on issues and topics related to information technology, there is not a shadow of a doubt that the goal of my efforts, and those of my staff, is not to acquire or deploy technology, but to help realize the contribution that effective records management can make in the transition to e-Government, in interagency

Our judgement that it is possible to start building the Electronic Records Archives is supported by market research and by our dialogue with the IT industry. Over the past three months, we have had representatives of 72 companies come to NARA, to tell us about their products and services, which they believe could contribute to the solution. We have had extensive discussions with a dozen major systems integrators who are candidates to lead the development of the Electronic Records Archives system.

What we heard from these companies is, in sum, that it is possible to build a digital archives, which not only can be sustained over the long-term, but which can grow and evolve in response to the dynamic challenge NARA faces. The need for the Electronic Records Archives system, the possibility of developing it, and the feasibility of an evolutionary development solution has also been affirmed recently in a study we have commissioned from the Computer Science and Technology Board of the National Academy of Science.

The Electronic Records Archives Program focuses on the archival end of the records lifecycle, on delivering historically valuable electronic records to Americans in the future. But it is not ignoring the front of the lifecycle in doing so. Just as, in generic terms, we are seeking archival solutions in mainstream developments in the National Information Infrastructure, we are specifically seeking to build an Electronic Records Archives that is optimally integrated with approaches and technologies used to manage records in active support of the Government's current business.

Partnering to Find Solutions

I would like to close with a final point. Throughout my remarks, I have mentioned many of NARA's partners across the Government and the Nation. NARA's Strategic Plan repeatedly recognizes the need for us to partner with others in addressing the challenge of electronic records. It not only recognizes the need, but also commits us to working in collaboration. We have wholeheartedly embraced this collaborative strategy in the Electronic Records Archives Program. The partners I have named do not by any means exhaust the list, and merely naming them does not do justice to the benefits NARA has derived from working with them.

Our research partners have opened our eyes to possibilities we had not conceived; they have expanded our horizons and strengthened our eagerness to move ahead. The managing partners in our research activities – DARPA, the National Science Foundation, and the Army Research Lab – have opened the doors to a wealth of knowledge, expertise and creativity while enabling us to avoid the need to develop within NARA the full administrative overhead needed to manage high technology research.

We have also been enriched by peer collaborations with other agencies and institutions that also need to preserve digital information for long periods of time. Our earliest partners in this area were NASA, the Patent and Trademark Office, and the InterPARES project. The InterPARES project focuses squarely on the preservation of authentic electronic records. Headquartered at the University of British Columbia, the project brings together archivists, records managers, information scientists, computer scientists and engineers, chemists, conservators, museum directors, and even artists from around the world.

We have also developed profitable partnerships with the library community. We are pleased to be collaborating with the Library of Congress in its initiative to preserve America's cultural and intellectual heritage in digital formats. We also profit from interactions with librarians and technologists from leading universities as a member of the Digital Library Federation.

We are also grateful to the many companies that have not only informed us about their products and capabilities, but have also shared with us the benefits of their experience and insights into the risks, the complexities, and the best practices for developing large, complex IT systems. We look forward to working even more closely with industry in the development of the ERA system in the near future.

Finally, I need to mention our relationship with the General Accounting Office. Two year ago, the Congress asked GAO to review the ERA Program, and they have been with us ever since. We are benefiting from GAO's understanding of systems development, gained in decades of experience across the Government. It is an enviable situation to have GAO going along with us in each step of the program, sharing its insight and recommendations so that we can avoid problems before they happen.

The Archives of the Future

One sign of the vitality and success of our commitment to approaching the challenge of electronic records through extensive partnerships is in the fact that, in 2001, for the first time in history, the Archivist of the United States was invited to give the keynote address at a Symposium of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers. I would like to close my testimony with a quote from Mr. Carlin's speech to the IEEE:

“The ‘Archives of the Future’ will not consist of many buildings scattered across the country. Instead, the ‘Archives of the Future’ will be available on the desktop of any American who chooses to explore the records of his or her country.... Building this new, digital archives is not and will not be easy. But we have no alternative....

“A society whose records are closed cannot be open. A people who cannot document their rights, cannot exercise them. A nation without access to its history cannot analyze itself. And, a government whose records are lost cannot accountably govern.”

Building the Electronic Records Archives is a difficult, serious endeavor, one which NARA could not achieve without the support contributions of our many partners, not the least of which is the Committee on Technology, Information Policy, Intergovernmental Relations, and the Census. I thank you for the opportunity you have given us to explain our strategy for ensuring that electronic records management becomes a critical and successful element in the infrastructure of e-Government, and that Americans will continue to have access to valuable records.

Mr. Chairman, I would be happy to answer any questions that you or your subcommittee might have.

and intergovernmental collaborations, and in the value that American citizens can realize in the information assets of their Government.

Legal Mandates for Records Management

The Archivist has described NARA's need to preserve and provide sustained access to key records of the U.S. Government in the National Archives and the Presidential libraries. Equally daunting is NARA's responsibility for guiding other agencies' management of the electronic records they create. This guidance must provide a sound and comprehensive basis for achieving the objectives of records management as set out in the Federal Records Act. Those objectives do not make records management a goal in its own right, and they do not divorce the preservation of historically valuable records from the on-going performance of the Government's business. The objectives of this law include:

- Accurate and complete documentation of the policies and transactions of the Federal Government;
- Effective and economical government operations;
- Simplification of activities, systems, and processes; and
- Prevention of unnecessary Federal paperwork; as well as
- judicious preservation and disposal of records. (44 U.S.C. 2902)

While these objectives were set out in the Federal Records Management Amendments of 1976 (H.R. 13828), they resonate well with key purposes of the E-Government Act of 2002. Among other worthy goals, the E-Government Act aims

- To improve the ability of the Government to achieve agency missions and program performance goals.
- To reduce costs and burdens for businesses and other Government entities.
- To promote better informed decisionmaking by policy makers.
- To make the Federal Government more transparent and accountable.
- To transform agency operations by utilizing, where appropriate, best practices from public and private sector organizations; and
- To provide enhanced access to Government information and services in a manner consistent with laws regarding protection of personal privacy, national security, records retention, access for persons with disabilities, and other relevant laws.

Government performance, decision-making, and accountability, as well as access to Government information all depend on how well the Government creates, retains, and manages the records that document its decisions and performance; in other words, how well agencies achieve the objectives of Federal records management.

NARA's responsibility for government-wide direction in records management makes it imperative for us to ensure that our guidance on managing electronic records is appropriate and effective. This is a strategic requirement which we address with as much seriousness and commitment as we apply to the task of preserving key electronic records of the U.S. Government for the citizens. In addressing this strategic requirement, we must remember that what makes something a federal record has nothing to do with its form – whether it’s a report or a web page, a letter or an email – and nothing to do with the information technology used to create, communicate or store it. What makes it a government record is either its connection to the conduct of government business or the value of the information it contains.

The often intricate connection between the technology and electronic records and the potential for improved service to the citizen and better return on investment offered by appropriate selection and use of information technology, compels us to adapt and enrich our records management guidance to make it highly useful to individual agencies as they implement IT solutions, and to align it with the government-wide objectives of the E-Government Act, the Government Performance and Results Act, and other key statutes.

Responding to the challenges of electronic records

Our response is comprehensive, multi-faceted, and future oriented. Like dual vision I mentioned earlier, this orientation aims both at delivering electronic records to future generations and at positioning electronic records management as an integral element in effective e-Government. It is essential to tackle both of these objectives in parallel. The solutions NARA adopts for preservation and sustained access must complement the solutions other agencies implement to improve the conduct of the Government’s current business.

NARA’s actions in the short-term to improve the lifecycle management of electronic records, from the moment of creation, are critical for its long-term goal of ensuring that the history of our time is accessible to future generations through authentic records. Without neglecting the importance of transmitting those electronic records that already exist to future generations, continuing expansion of the application of IT in government, combined with continuing expansion in the kinds and the complexity of information recorded in digital form mean, that we have to anticipate that the challenges entailed by electronic records will explode to a level that makes everything we have faced up to now look small by comparison.

NARA looks for a coherent solution to the challenge of electronic records because both electronic records management to support current business and archival preservation of electronic records for the long-term face the same, fundamental technical problem: the need to make digital information assets independent of the specific hardware and software used to process, store, or communicate them at any time. In the archival context, this problem manifests itself over time in the twin problems of obsolescence and progress. In the context of e-Government, this problem manifests itself in the need for systems to interoperate across agency lines, and more broadly for agencies to interact electronically with citizens, with businesses, and with state, local, and tribal governments, and with other nations.

For e-Government to achieve the goals which the Congress and the President have established in the areas of efficiency and timeliness, it is necessary that the systems involved in a transaction be able to interoperate and automatically exchange required information. Both far-reaching and fundamental differences in requirements and simple differences in the frequency and timing of when institutions and individuals acquire and replace technology make it extremely unlikely that all the stakeholders with whom the U.S. Government needs to interact will ever have fully compatible systems. Moreover, developments in information technology make that unnecessary. For example, an online transaction in e-government might involve, on one end, an agency application running on a sophisticated database management system and, on the other either a company using a system that is fine-tuned to its business, or a citizen using a personal computer.

Rather than requiring that all parties use the same, or compatible, systems, the technology is providing generic products that translate among disparate systems. Notably, many commercial products implement the eXtensible Markup Language (XML). The XML standard provides a simple, open way to identify what kinds of data are being exchanged online. For different systems to participate in electronic transactions, each one only needs to recognize the XML markup of the data it receives, and translates the data into its own internal format. Conversely, it needs to be able to export its data in the shared format. As predicted by industry analysts 5 years ago, this mediated approach is proving to be one of the major enablers of e-business and e-government.

The Need for Authenticity

But for quality of service, and ultimately for the trustworthiness of the Government, information assets must not suffer any diminution in authenticity or reliability as they go through repeated transformation from one internal format, to an intermediate common format, and to another internal form in the course of a transaction. Effective records management is in fact the discipline which can ensure that authenticity and reliability remain intact in transmission of information across time, space, and institutional and technological boundaries, and it can also contribute to timeliness and efficiency.

NARA is uniquely positioned and legally required to ensure that federal records management does make this contribution to e-government. Of itself, records management cannot satisfy the requirements for authenticity and reliability, but it provides a well-established framework for defining the requirements, for evaluating the solutions that technology offers, and for ensuring that the real-world results achieve their objectives.

In broad terms, we regard the mediated approach that technologists have developed to solve the problems of sharing information in real time as the most viable approach for sustained access to authentic electronic records over the long-term. No one can pretend to know what information technology will be like 25, 50, or more years in the future. But it is a reasonable assumption that Americans will want to use the best technologies available to them to access the electronic records of their Government, regardless of when those records were created. In effect, the solution NARA implements to provide sustained access to these records for the long-term must mediate between the myriad digital formats of federal electronic records that exist now, and that will be created in years to come, and the technologies that best serve the needs of citizens at any time in the future.

The most basic requirement for the architecture and the technology that NARA adopts to accomplish its core mission is that the system be able to evolve over time, keeping pace with progress in IT, and responding to citizens' expectations for the best available service. Building this solution will not be easy. Based on market research conducted over the past two years, an extensive dialogue with the IT industry, and continuing collaborations with leading researchers in computer science and engineering, we have learned that key technologies enabling such a solution are available today, and that it will be possible to develop a full solution gradually over time.

NARA's Initiatives on Electronic Records Management

NARA's comprehensive approach involves three major initiatives: the Records Management Initiatives, the Electronic Records Management project in the Administration's e-Government portfolio, and the Electronic Records Archives Program, as well as a number of other activities. It starts close to home with an open, everything-on-the-table review of our records management guidance.

Under the leadership of the Deputy Archivist, Dr. Lewis Bellardo, our Records Management Initiatives aim to create mutually supporting relationships with agencies, whereby

- records management is viewed as a normal part of asset and risk management;
- records are managed effectively for as long as they are needed;
- NARA's records management program adds value to the agency business processes; and
- records of archival value are preserved and made available for future generations.

We will adapt our guidance to the digital environment; make it adaptable by agencies to suit the specific needs entailed by their missions and the different constituencies they serve; and we are supplementing our government-wide guidance with targeted assistance to individual agencies.

Government-wide Records Collaborations

We are coordinating our efforts with other government-wide initiatives in furtherance of the President's Management Agenda, especially his e-Government goals, notably with the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and the Federal CIO Council. Our work with the Federal Enterprise Architecture (FEA) Program Management Office in OMB is reflected in the position of records management in the June 2003 release of the Business Reference Model (BRM) of the FEA.

Lifecycle management of records is positioned in all four of the main areas of business defined in the BRM. In the Services for Citizens area, it appears under the heading of "Cultural and Historic Preservation." In the Mode of Delivery area, it is part of "Information Infrastructure Management." The Support Delivery of Services area includes "Central Records and Statistics Management" under the General Government line of business. And the Management of Government Resources area includes Records Retention as a sub-function of Information and Technology Management. Thus the Business Reference Model simultaneously promotes records management and positions records management to contribute to e-Government.

Our coordination is not only at the intellectual level of elaborating the framework of the Federal Enterprise Architecture. It also has practical elements. Working with other agencies, NARA has undertaken four Electronic Records Management projects in the Administration's e-Government portfolio, providing specific examples of the contributions of good records management to e-Government.

The Electronic Records Management Initiative will provide the tools that agencies will need to manage their records in electronic form, addressing specific areas of electronic records management where agencies are having major difficulties. This project will provide guidance on electronic records management applicable government-wide and will enable agencies to transfer electronic records to NARA in a variety of data types and formats so that they may be preserved for future use by the government and citizens. Ultimately, to be successful, the management of electronic records must be an integral part not only of the FEA, but also of the information architecture and infrastructure of each agency.

The FEA includes a Technical Reference Model (TRM) which provides a foundation to support the construction, delivery, and exchange of business and application components, called 'Service Components', that may be used and leveraged in many different applications. Components can be large or small, written in different development environments, and may be platform independent. Components can be executed on stand-alone computers, or a LAN, Intranet, or the Internet. The FEA Service Component Framework provides for the definition, development and deployment of common service components which will be available for use and reuse of applications running in the FEA.

I have the privilege of serving as the co-chair of the Components Subcommittee of the Architecture and Infrastructure Committee, chartered by the CIO Council. The subcommittee's objective is "to foster the identification, maturation, use and reuse of Component-Based Architectures and Architectural Components in the federal government." In this context, NARA will lead the development of records management services which will be basic components of the FEA's Service Component infrastructure and available to any application. This will be a significant improvement over the current situation where records management is implemented as a stand-alone application which is not integrated with the applications which are used to conduct business.

Electronic records are, in fact, created in such business applications. Agencies will be better equipped to optimize the use of these information assets in e-Government if they can be retained and managed within the systems they actually use to transact business. Records management component services will make this possible, by identifying electronic records wherever they exist, by enabling both government officials and agency customers to navigate among records, and by ensuring that the integrity of the records is protected and that they are properly retained and destroyed.

Electronic Records Standards

We also aim to strengthen records management through support for the development of relevant standards and alignment with the emerging national information infrastructure.

First, standards. We have worked with NASA and representatives of other American and international organizations since 1995 in the development of the ISO standard for Open Archival Information Systems. NARA has also contributed to the development of the ISO standard on records management.

We are also working with the Association for Image and Information Management, International, to establish integrated EDMS/ERMS functional requirements for electronic document management system and electronic records management systems, and on a proposed standard for the use of the Adobe Portable Document Format (PDF), for the long term storage of multi-page documents that may contain a mixture of text, raster images and vector graphics.

NARA also has made substantial contributions to the development and the success of the DoD standard for Records Management Applications (DoD 5015.2-STD), the de facto standard for records management software, adopted by private companies, as well as by other governments, such as the State of Michigan. Currently there are over 40 commercial off-the-shelf software products certified as compliant with the Department of Defense standard. And NARA is supporting DoD in its efforts to update and enhance this standard.

NARA is also one of the original members of the Federal Geographic Data Committee (FGDC). We have contributed to the development of the FGDC's policies on data management and on historical data, as well as its data transfer and content standards. We are proud to be part of the nationwide effort to realize the vision of the National Spatial Data Infrastructure, an effort actively embraced by all levels of government in this country.

National Information Infrastructure

Second, development of the next generation national information infrastructure. The challenges NARA faces in the realm of electronic records are immense and complex, and rendered more so by the prospect of continuing, open-ended change in information technology. But developments in the technology also offer improving prospects for viable solutions. NARA does not have, and is not likely to obtain, the resources required to surmount these challenges by itself. Nor is it realistic to expect the market to develop specific solutions for all the problems we face. Instead, we are seeking to find solutions in mainstream developments that promise to become major elements in the emerging national information infrastructure needed to support not only e-Government and e-business, but also education and research in a networked world.

Rather than looking for specific archival and records management solutions, we have sought to identify mainstream developments that, with modest redirection, might be adapted to specific archival and records management requirements. We have pursued this approach since 1998. In it, we have gratefully ridden the coattails of major players in IT research and development, agencies such as NASA, the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, the National Science Foundations, the National Institute of Standards and Technology, and the Army Research Laboratory.

We do not claim extensive expertise in computer science or engineering, and we certainly have not made substantial contributions to the multi-billion dollar annual investment the U.S. Government makes in networking and information technology research and development. What we have brought is a convincing case of the need to look beyond current requirements, to factor in the expectation of continuing change and the need to address real world requirements that span considerable periods of time and generations of technology.

One of the major assets we have is the very nature of the challenge we face: its great complexity and the immense size. NARA's electronic records challenge has attracted the attention of world-class researchers in institutions around the country, such as the San Diego Supercomputer Center, the University of California /Berkeley, the Georgia Tech Research Institute, the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Ohio State University, and the University of Maryland's Institute for Advanced Computer Systems.

The importance of the dynamic challenge NARA faces has been recognized at the highest levels of government. Every year the White House issues what is known as the 'Blue Book.' This is an official supplement to the President's Budget which explains how the Executive Branch coordinates the Government's investment in networking and information technology research and development. In the Blue Books for the last two Fiscal Years, 2002 and 2003, the White House has identified digital preservation in general, and the appraisal and management of electronic records in particular, as significant areas of research. The Administration's recognition of the need for research in this area is critical because, as long as the technology continues to develop, and as agencies find new ways to apply it in conducting the public's business, NARA will have to continue to work with leaders in research and development to find new solutions to new problems.

But we cannot delay action. NARA needs to move ahead aggressively to acquire and implement solutions that will enable us to ensure that important records of our era are not lost. Records such as:

- the State Department's worldwide diplomatic correspondence, which was converted to digital form starting in 1972;
- the digital returns from the 2000 Census of Population;
- the digital map of the United States;
- operational and intelligence records of the war in Iraq; and,

- the automation of Congress's legislative process and the planned coverage of its proceedings in High Definition Television.

The Electronic Records Archives Program

The insights we have gained and the lessons we have learned to date from our research collaborations have emboldened us to launch a frontal assault on the technological challenges entailed in preserving and providing sustained access to valuable electronic records in the National Archives and in the Presidential libraries. This strategic initiative is our Electronic Records Archives (ERA) Program. This program includes three elements. It is responsible for the research partnerships I have just mentioned. It is managing the effort to acquire a system which will enable us to manage the lifecycle of electronic records and to preserve them for American citizens, and it supports business process redesign and change management activities to ensure that NARA and its staff are able to use the ERA system successfully.

NARA's vision for the ERA system is that it "will authentically preserve and provide access to any kind of electronic record, free from dependency on any specific hardware or software, enabling NARA to carry out its mission into the future." The key features of the Electronic Records Archives will be (1) an architecture which is scalable to expected growth in the volume of electronic records and evolvable both to accommodate new types of electronic records and to take advantage of improvements in technology, and (2) a system with the ability to accept, preserve, and provide sustained access to any kind of electronic record for as long as needed.

The information and expert advice we have received on the state of the art supports the conclusion that it is possible to develop such an architecture now. With respect to preserving and providing sustained access to electronic records, the proven methods that are currently available are limited to relatively few formats. But we are optimistic that we will be able, over the course of time, to expand the varieties of electronic records that we can preserve indefinitely. There are two elements to this optimism. One is that the requirements of e-Government and of e-business are driving the emergence of standards, products, and services that make information assets independent of any specific hardware or software. The other is that these same requirements will lead agencies increasingly to adopt open-standard, infrastructure-independent formats, such as XML.

In the interim, we will implement a flexible approach to preservation and access. We will start with guaranteed physical preservation of all electronic records in their native formats. While it is desirable to convert the records to formats which would be both infrastructure independent and immune to obsolescence over substantial lengths of time, until the market for products supporting such formats matures, we will adopt methods for replicating these records in formats that are either less sensitive to obsolescence or better for meeting short term demands for access. A number of open formats that are available now include the Portable Document Format for textual information, the Tagged Image File Format for scanned paper, and the relational or other standard database format not only for data files, but also for semi-structured records, such as e-mail.

My guess is that you want the campaign to pay for these costs that WHO usually incurs?

The following are the diagrams and billing information for the White House Press Office (WHPO), Press Filing Center (PFC/AMEX), and the TV Networks.

Being that he is a former Press Lead, Steve Atkiss would be a good source of information on how it all works.

We should include PPO. I think the briefings should be mandatory and people should be informed that they will out in under 30 minutes, guaranteed. I prefer afternoon briefings at 4:00 and 4:45 on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

Brett -- thanks for your comments on this. We would NOT base invitations on checking FEC records. Rather, it would be another source to supplement the other info we pull together -- hardly a disqualifying factor among the many others. My guess is that this would rarely be done, perhaps only for a high-profile event/person that we/campaign want to bring to an event.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Brett -- In our efforts to better serve the President and White House Staff, we wanted to get Counsel's Office guidance on whether it is appropriate for the Scheduling Office to vet FEC records on those meeting with the President at his various events. As you know, we currently vet venues, greeters, and major participants for Presidential events. Adding checks on FEC records would make our efforts to protect the President politically a bit more thorough.

Before we started doing this, we wanted your guidance on whether or not this is appropriate. Thanks.

September 30, 1996

Throughout my life I have strenuously opposed discrimination of any kind, including discrimination against gay and lesbian Americans. I am signing into law H.R. 3396, a bill relating to same-gender marriage, but it is important to note what this legislation does and does not do.

I have long opposed governmental recognition of same-gender marriages and this legislation is consistent with that position. The Act confirms the right of each state to determine its own policy with respect to same gender marriage and clarifies for purposes of federal law the operative meaning of the terms "marriage" and "spouse".

This legislation does not reach beyond those two provisions. It has no effect on any current federal, state or local anti-discrimination law and does not constrain the right of Congress or any state or locality to enact anti-discrimination laws. I therefore would take this opportunity to urge Congress to pass the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, an act which would extend employment discrimination protections to gays and lesbians in the workplace. This year the Senate considered this legislation contemporaneously with the Act I sign today and failed to pass it by a single vote. I hope that in its next Session Congress will pass it expeditiously.

I also want to make clear to all that the enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination, violence or intimidation against any person on the basis of sexual orientation. Discrimination, violence and intimidation for that reason, as well as others, violate the principle of equal protection under the law and have no place in American society.

MR. LEHRER -- New subject, new question, another vice-presidential debate follow-up. Governor, both Senator Lieberman and Secretary Cheney said they were sympathetically rethinking their views on same-sex relationships. What's your position on that?

MR. BUSH -- I'm not for gay marriage. I think marriage is a sacred institution between a man and a woman and I appreciated the way the administration signed the Defense of Marriage Act. I presume the vice president supported it when the president signed that bill and supports it now. But I think marriage is a sacred institution. I'm going to be respectful, for people who may disagree with me. I've had a record of doing so in the state of Texas. I've been a person that would have been called a uniter, not a divider, because I accepted some, I accept other people's points of view, but I feel strongly that marriage should be between a man and a woman.

MR. LEHRER -- Vice President Gore?

MR. GORE -- I agree with that, and I did support that law. But I think that we should find a way to allow some kind of civic unions. And I basically agree with Dick Cheney and Joe Lieberman, and I think the three of us have one view and the governor has another view.

MR. LEHRER -- Is that right?

MR. BUSH -- I'm not sure what kind of view he's ascribing to me. I can just tell you, I'm a person who respects other people. I respect their -- one day he says he agrees with me, then he says he doesn't, I'm not sure where he's coming from. But I will be a tolerant person. I've been a tolerant person all my life. I just happen to believe strongly that marriage is between a man and a woman.

MR. LEHRER -- Do you believe, in general terms, that gays and lesbians should have the same rights as other Americans?

MR. BUSH -- Yes. I don't think they ought to have special rights. But I think they ought to have the same rights.

MR. GORE -- Well, there's a law pending called the Employment Nondiscrimination Act. I strongly support it. What it says is that gays and lesbians can't be fired from their job because they're gay or lesbian. And it would be a federal law preventing that. Now, I wonder if the -- it's been blocked by the opponents in the majority in the Congress. I wonder if the governor would lend his support to that law.

MR. LEHRER -- Governor.

MR. BUSH -- . . . question . . .

MR. LEHRER -- Well, but it's a logical --

MR. BUSH -- Well, I have no idea. I mean, he can throw out all kinds of -- I don't know the particulars of this law. I will tell you, I'm the kind of person, I don't hire or fire somebody based upon their sexual orientation. As a matter of fact I'd like to take the issue a little further. I don't really think it's any of my -- you know, any of my concern what, how you conduct your sex life. And I think that's a private matter. And I think that's the way it ought to be. But I'm going to be respectful for people. I'll tolerate people. And I support equal rights but not special rights for people.

MR. LEHRER -- And special rights -- how does that affect gays and lesbians?

MR. BUSH -- Well, it'd be if they're given special protective status. And that doesn't mean we shouldn't fully enforce laws and fully protect people and fully honor people, which I will do as the President of the United States.

Subject: Question

I'm sorry...I have no idea who to ask this to, so I thought I would start with you.

1.; Can we (as the White House Press Office) release dubbed tape copies of the President's Campaign events?!?; We always have requests for Presidential events that we release with out hesitation, we just wanted to make sure that we weren't doing anything wrong releasing the Campaign events.

2.; Can we release dubbed tape copies of the President's Presidential events to Partisan organizations?!?; For example, we have RepublicanTV.org requesting some footage of some events.; Is that okay to release to them?!?;

We just want to make sure we aren't mixing in places we shouldn't and doing anything wrong.

I didn't know who to ask in our office so I thought you might!; You are

Enviros Sue Over Bush's Fire Plan

Greenwire (Online News Journal). July 2, 2003. A coalition of 18 environmental groups sued the Bush Administration for its Healthy Forests Initiative this week, saying the regulations block public involvement and give the Forest Service too much leeway to implement potentially destructive policies. The suit, filed June 30 in U.S. District Court in Montgomery, AL charges the Forest Service skirted the Federal environmental review process in writing the "arbitrary and capricious" regulations. Environmentalists said the lawsuit is the first of its kind. Click Here For Full Story

School Grading Concept Wins Parents' Approval

Gannett News Service via Detroit News. July 3, 2003. Most parents seem to support a critical provision of the Federal school-reform law: labeling public schools as needing improvement even if just one group of students falls behind, according to a poll released today. The national telephone poll, conducted for the Business Roundtable, also shows that the overwhelming majority of parents and voters said they would worry if poor and minority students struggled with reading and math – even if the majority of students in their communities did well in those subjects. Only one in four parents said they backed labeling a local school that had been considered excellent as now needing improvement because one group of students lagged behind. #### Head Start Lawsuit Against Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) Dropped

Associated Press via Atlanta Journal Constitution. July 2, 2003. An advocacy group dropped its lawsuit against HHS after the Department agreed to write a new letter to Head Start centers around the country clarifying limits on lobbying activities by teachers and staffs. The National Head Start Association sued the Department last month, alleging that a letter written in May by a top HHS official violated the First Amendment. After a court hearing Monday, the department and the association agreed on language in a new letter that was sent Wednesday to Head Start centers. Click Here For Full Story

License-Plate Spray Foils Traffic Cameras

Washington Times. July 3, 2003. Motorists have litigated against them, fired bullets at them and thrown garbage on them — all to get back at the traffic cameras that have caught them in the act of running a red light or speeding. Now they have a new weapon in their arsenal, and it comes in a can for $29.99. A clear spray called Photoblocker can be applied to license plates to make them hyper-reflective and unreadable when the camera flashes. Most states have laws against obscuring or distorting license plates, but Photoblocker obscures the license plate only in a photo, making it legal or at least difficult for police to detect with the naked eye. ### Department of Justice (DOJ) To Mediate In Aftermath Of Riots

Associated Press. July 2, 2003. DOJ plans to mediate differences between Benton Harbor residents and local authorities in the aftermath of two days of riots. The riots occurred two weeks ago following a high-speed police chase in which a local motorcyclist died after he crashed into a vacant building. The incident highlighted Benton Harbor's bleak economic outlook and focused attention on the stark contrasts between the primarily black city and St. Joseph, the mostly white city across the river. The Community Relations Service, a branch of DOJ that calls itself a "peacemaker" for community conflicts arising from racial tensions, organized a recent meeting of local police chiefs and city officials. ### Department Of Energy (DOE) To Hold Hearings On Proposed Site In Nevada

Greenwire (Online News Journal). July, 2, 2003. The National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) will hold a public hearing tonight in Las Vegas, NV to discuss a proposed nuclear "pit" factory that has come under fire recently for its potential to cause cancer deaths among workers. The DOE's Nevada Test Site is one of five proposed locations for the new facility, which would manufacture plutonium triggers for small nuclear weapons. NNSA plans to hold public hearings at each of the five proposed locations. Click Here For Full Story

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) Tightens Rules for Payday Lender Alliances

American Banker. July 3, 2003. The FDIC released guidelines on Wednesday that make it difficult for banks and payday lenders to establish partnerships. Payday lenders are service organizations that accept checks or similar instruments from a borrower as collateral on short-term loans in exchange for a fee. The final version is tougher in several respects than a proposal it issued in January. "It sets a very high standard," said George French, the FDIC's deputy director for policy and examination. "I don't think payday lenders are going to read this and get a warm, fuzzy feeling." Subscription Required

COMMERCE

New Manufacturing Orders Are Modestly Higher

The New York Times. July 3, 2003. Commerce reported that demand for products of American manufacturers rose modestly in May, providing some hope that manufacturing industries might be emerging from its slump. New orders to factories had a total value of $320.6 billion in May, a 0.4 percent increase from April. Today's data followed a report that the Institute for Supply Management's manufacturing index rose modestly in June, to a level that nonetheless indicated contraction. The index rose to 49.8 from 49.4 in May. A reading below 50 means manufacturing activity is slowing, while above 50 indicates growth. Subscription Required

Do you have a time for the meeting on the 17th, Brett. So far it doesn't appear as if there will be a Court vacancy so I am hoping our meeting is still on.

Let me know what the plans are as the group members from out of town want to make their travel reservations.

Warm Wishes,

Martha
