

II. ACCESS TO JUSTICE

Won't ISCRAA's fee formula prevent poor plaintiffs in large cases from being able to get a lawyer? Won't lawyers refuse to take case under ISCRAA's fee formula?

Short answer: ISCRAA is more generous than existing formulas used by courts. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts' practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers' professional associations.

- Federal courts almost never award a multiplier greater than 300% in $100 million cases:

In 2001, the Third Circuit “set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used.”<sup>8</sup> (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and “the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99.” And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.<sup>9</sup>

- Example (of excellent service provided despite applicability of lodestar formula):

In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). This RICO and Commodities Exchange Act case resulted in a recovery for the clients of $116 million. The attorneys reviewed millions of pages of documents located throughout the world, many of which had to be translated from Japanese. The federal district court awarded a multiplier of 250%, for a total fee of $32 million.

III. RETROSPECTIVE EFFECT

Isn't ISCRAA an unfairly retrospective change in the law? If these fees were legal when they were agreed to, why should we change them now?

Short answer: ISCRAA only enforces a liberal interpretation of pre-existing standards.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>10</sup> (Emphasis added.)

Tobacco lawyers still get 2.5 billion dollars under ISCRAA. Additionally, ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the tobacco settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. No tobacco lawyer will go broke because of this bill. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

IV. WHO OWNS THE FEE?

If a lawyer's fee award is unethical or excessive, wouldn't it go back to the defendant? Some of the tobacco lawyers argue that the money can't go back to the states. Wouldn't the lawyers money go back to the tobacco companies?

Short answer: Fee awards are the property of the client. The courts have made very clear that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured. Any other rule would invite collusion between the defendants and the plaintiffs' lawyers. Courts repeatedly have recognized that defendants would be more than happy to agree to higher plaintiffs' lawyers fee awards in exchange for a lower recovery from the plaintiffs. A number of commentators have noted that this is exactly what happened in the tobacco settlement. In recognition of the legal principle that a fee award belongs to the client – and that an excessive fee must be restored to the client – ISCRAA specifically provides that excess tobacco settlement attorneys fees shall be restored to the states.

According to the courts and legal-ethics experts:

- “The allowance of attorney fees in a judgment gives the attorneys no interest and ownership in the judgment to the extent of the amount of the fee allowed, but the judgment in its entirety is the property of the client. The award for fees is for the client, not the attorney.”<sup>11</sup>
- “[A] defendant is interested only in disposing of the total claims asserted against it, and the allocation between the [plaintiff's] payment and the attorneys' fees is of little or no interest to the defense. Moreover, the divergence in class members' and class counsel's financial incentives creates the danger that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than-optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees.”<sup>12</sup>
- “To the tobacco companies, dollars are dollars, whether paid to states or paid to lawyers. So the real amount on the bargaining table was not the $246 billion that the states settled for, but a larger sum, including the amount to be paid to the attorneys. * * * * Stated simply, because dollars are fungible, the fees are coming out of the settlements.”<sup>13</sup>

V. FEDERALISM

Why should the federal government be regulating attorneys fees in large lawsuits brought in state court? Isn't this purely a state matter?

Short answer: $100 million lawsuits, by their sheer size alone, substantially affect interstate commerce, and are a proper subject of congress's power to regulate and protect commerce between states. It is well-established that "Congress' commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress's power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

What Plaintiffs' Lawyers and Anti-Tobacco Activists Are Saying About the Tobacco-Settlement Attorneys Fees:

[From Senator Cornyn's Senate speech introducing ISCRAA]

There is widespread agreement that the fees awarded in the tobacco settlement are excessive and unreasonable. Perhaps the most damning indictments come from those who took the plaintiffs' side in this litigation – including from plaintiffs lawyers themselves.

- For example, Michael Ciresi, a pioneer in the tobacco litigation who represented the state of Minnesota in its lawsuit, and who is no doubt familiar with what these lawsuits actually require, has said that the Texas, Florida, and Mississippi lawyers' fee awards “are far in excess of these lawyers' contribution to any of the state results.”<sup>1</sup>
- Similarly, former Food and Drug Administration Commissioner David Kessler, another leader in the fight against tobacco, has said that the states' private lawyers “did a real service, but I think the fee is outrageous. All the legal fees are out control.”<sup>2</sup>
- Washington, D.C. lawyer and tobacco-industry opponent John Coale has denounced the fee awards as “beyond human comprehension” and stated that “the work does not justify them.”<sup>3</sup>
- Even the Association of American Trial Lawyers, the nation's premier representative of the plaintiffs bar, has condemned attorneys fees requested in the state tobacco settlement. The President of ATLA has noted:

“Common sense suggests that a one billion dollar fee is excessive and unreasonable and certainly should invite the scrutiny [of the courts]. [ATLA] generally refrains from expressing an institutional opinion regarding a particular fee in a particular case, but we have a strong negative reaction to reports that at least one attorney on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Florida case is seeking a fee in excess of one billion dollars.”<sup>4</sup>

This letter, written in 1997, only concerned one of the Florida lawyers' request for attorneys fees. Ultimately, Florida's private counsel was awarded a total of $3.4 billion in fees. These statements demonstrate beyond all doubt that there is real abuse going on here, and that the victim of this abuse is the client, the plaintiff – and not the defendant.

- Perhaps the best gloss on the tobacco fee awards is that provided by Professor Lester Brickman, a professor of law at Cardozo Law School and noted authority on legal ethics and attorneys fees. Professor Brickman has stated:

“Under the rules of legal ethics, promulgated partly as a justification for the legal profession's self-governance, fees cannot be ‘clearly excessive.’ Indeed, that standard has now been superseded in most states by an even more rigorous standard: fees have to be ‘reasonable.’ Are these fees, which in many cases amount to effective hourly rates of return of tens of thousands – and even hundreds of thousands – of dollars an hour, reasonable? I think to ask the question is to answer it.”<sup>5</sup>

The attorneys fees awarded in the state tobacco settlement are simply indefensible. And the process by which the fees were awarded partly explains how they came to be so. Outside counsel fees were determined by a private arbitration panel established by the Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) that resolved 46 of the states' litigation. (Four other states had settled their suits earlier. Their lawyers, however, also were paid out of the accounts created by the MSA.) Amazingly, the settlement agreement explicitly immunized all fee awards from judicial review. Even more amazingly, one of the three arbitrators who made the awards had a clear conflict of interests: he was the father of a South Carolina lawyer whose law firm has received the largest fee awards of all, believed to amount to over $2 billion. Another one of the arbitrators had no background in fee arbitrations or any related matter, and simply ignored the law in order to make outrageous awards, using the salaries of sports stars and entertainers as a basis of measure. The third arbitrator, a retired federal judge appointed by President Carter, dissented from the key fee decisions.

ISCRAA: RESTITUTION TO THE STATES

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the plaintiffs' attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

RESPONSES TO LIKELY ARGUMENTS AGAINST ISCRAA

I. FREEDOM OF CONTRACT

I. Shouldn't lawyers have freedom of contract to set whatever fee they can persuade a client to agree to? Why are we singling out lawyers for regulation and not CEOs?

Short answer: Attorneys are fiduciaries whose fee contracts have always been subject to reasonableness requirements. Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation.

ISCRAA is very generous – even by CEO standards. ISCRAA's fee formula still permits lawyers fees that would make many CEOs envious. In the tobacco litigation, many of the plaintiffs' lawyers filed claims that they have worked tens of thousands of hours. ISCRAA would allow reasonable hourly rates – which run as high as $500 an hour in large cities – to be multiplied by up to 500%. This translates into attorneys fees of tens of millions of dollars. Not bad, considering that many of the tobacco settlement lawyers worked on their cases for just one or two years.

Legal Standards

- As one court has stated:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."<sup>7</sup>

Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) ("A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client").

SENATOR KYL INTRODUCTION OF ISCRAA

Mr. KYL: I rise today to introduce the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA). This legislation will restore to the states billions of dollars in revenue due to them from a massive lawsuit recently conducted on their behalf – the tobacco-related Medicaid expenses litigation. ISCRAA amends an existing provision of the federal tax code in order to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. By applying these standards to the attorneys who represented the states in the tobacco settlement, ISCRAA reasonably can be expected to restore to the states income with a present value of approximately $9 billion. I have included at the end of my statement a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover.

ISCRAA's tax formula is borrowed from the 1996 Tax Act's Intermediate Sanctions Tax (IST), which applies a two-step excise tax to any excessive or unreasonable compensation that the managers of a trust pay to themselves from the assets of the trust. The IST framework encourages the trustee to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the trust – when he does so, the IST's punitive taxes do not apply.

ISCRAA extends the IST to another type of trust relationship: that between a lawyer and his client. ISCRAA applies the IST tax formula to any unreasonable or excessive income that a lawyer collects from litigation resulting in a judgment or settlement in excess of $100 million. To avoid IST taxes, an attorney must restore the excessive portion of the fee to the client.

As my colleague Senator CORNYN will explain today, the ethical and legal abuses that resulted from the 1998 state tobacco settlement make the need for this legislation manifest. Senator CORNYN also will discuss the law of attorneys' fiduciary obligations, which establishes that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured.

I will discuss today how ISCRAA will affect massive litigations generally. In order to gauge the reasonableness of a lawyer's fee award, ISCRAA adopts and codifies a liberal version of the lodestar-multiplier system. As I will later explain in greater detail, ISCRAA allows fee multipliers of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This limit is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA's fee formula guarantees that attorneys' fiduciary obligations will be respected, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in these types of cases.

Massive Litigations and the Prospect of Tax Farming

Federal supervision of fee awards resulting from $100 million litigations is appropriate for several reasons. First, because of their sheer size, these types of lawsuits inevitably operate as a tax on the consuming public. Few defendants actually can afford to pay such judgments with fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. “Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented.”<sup>29</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) “If an attorney’s fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is ‘clearly excessive’ * * * even though the client consented to such fee.”<sup>30</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney’s dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney’s fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA’s Effective Date

Another subject that I would like to address today is ISCRAA’s effective date. ISCRAA applies to attorney fee payments received after June 1, 2002. This effective date is appropriate under the circumstances of the state tobacco settlement for several reasons: first, Congress routinely enacts major tax legislation with effective dates that look back much further than does ISCRAA. The Supreme Court has “repeatedly upheld [such moderately] retroactive tax

Second, ISCRAA is not even truly retroactive. ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorneys fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>31</sup> (Emphasis added.)

As I described earlier, to enforce fiduciary standards, ISCRAA codifies and applies a very generous version of the fee multiplier system, allowing attorneys fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This is considerably more generous than what federal courts typically allow in large-judgment cases. No attorney can be heard to complain that he is subjected to a law that is more generous than his existing fiduciary obligations.

Further, none of the tobacco-settlement attorneys can reasonably maintain that they have a vested right to see their fiduciary duties to the states go unenforced. Nevertheless, in order to be fair to all parties, ISCRAA’s excise taxes are applied only to fees that were paid after June 1, 2002. By this date, all of the tobacco lawyers twice had received notice from George W. Bush that he intended to enact legislation to enforce their fiduciary obligations. In February 2000, then-candidate Bush promised that he would “extend[] the ‘excess benefits’ provision of the tax code to private lawyers who contract with states and municipalities,” with “the reasonableness of the fees * * * [to] be determined by the standard judicial ‘lodestar’ method.” And as early as February 2001, the current Administration announced that it anticipated providing “additional public health resources for the States from the President’s proposal to extend fiduciary responsibilities to the representatives of States in tobacco lawsuits.” See A BLUEPRINT FOR NEW BEGINNINGS: A RESPONSIBLE BUDGET FOR AMERICA’S PRIORITIES 80, Office of Management and Budget, February 28, 2001.

Under ISCRAA, all of the attorneys who participated in the state tobacco settlement still will be very liberally compensated. Because ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. Every one of the tobacco lawyers will have more than enough money left to pay for the yachts, luxury cars, and vacation homes that were purchased with the tobacco proceeds. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

<sup>31</sup>Vonde M. Smith Hitch, Ethics and the Reasonableness of Contingency Fees: A Survey of State and Federal Law Addressing the Reasonableness of Costs as They Relate to Contingency Fee Agreements, 29 LAND & WATER L. REV. 215, 218 n.22 (1994).

State Recovery of Excess MSA Payments

But most importantly, because ISCRAA applies to the last year's worth of tobacco fee payments, and to all future payments, it will return a substantial amount of funds to the states – money that already should belong to the states under any reasonable interpretation of fiduciary standards. It is critical that these funds be restored in this time of widespread fiscal crisis. Today a large number of the states face massive budget deficits that threaten their ability to provide health care to the indigent, to fully fund public education, and to guarantee adequate and effective law enforcement. When such needs risk going unmet, fee abuses that cost the states billions of dollars simply can no longer be ignored. The states must receive their fair share of the tobacco settlement proceeds – funds that are badly needed to support basic public services.

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

Here is how much each state can expect to recover:

cash on hand. Instead, the affected industries simply will raise the prices that they charge to their customers.

This is exactly what has happened in the state Medicaid tobacco settlement – according to the leading proponents of that litigation. The first state attorney general to file suit against the tobacco companies has admitted that “what always happens in these cases is the industry passes the costs to the consumer.”<sup>1</sup> Other commentators agree that this has occurred in the tobacco litigation. As one law-review article notes, “the [tobacco] settlement * * * is a tax because it’s a set of payments made by tobacco companies that depend on how many packs they sell; in short, it looks like a tax and quacks like a tax.”<sup>2</sup>

Because of the way that these massive judgments typically are satisfied, it is particularly important to ensure that attorneys are paid in proportion to the services that they provided – rather than solely on the basis of the size of the recovery. Again, the state tobacco settlement highlights the nature of the problem. As two of the leading academic commentators have noted, it is “very troubl[ing]” that under that agreement, “a group of private citizens [are] getting paid a percentage of a tax increase they helped pass.”<sup>3</sup> The sheer size of the tobacco settlement – and the fact that attorneys fees were based on this size, rather than on the attorneys’ actual efforts – has given the fee awards an uncanny resemblance to the medieval practice of tax farming. In all but name, the government has licensed a group of private individuals to collect a tax from the consuming public.

I would emphasize at this point that ISCRAA is not an attack on the state tobacco lawsuits. The bill does not pass judgment on the merits or the appropriateness of this type of litigation. ISCRAA simply is designed to ensure that when such lawsuits are brought on the public’s behalf, the public receive its fair share of the proceeds. If a state chooses to seek compensatory revenue from industry for past harms, then the resulting tax on the public – minus the reasonable value of the legal services actually provided – must go to the state treasury.

$100 Million Lawsuits Are Different

There are several reasons why $100 million is an appropriate threshold for applying ISCRAA's fee formula. First, the courts themselves have indicated that fee agreements based primarily on the size of the recovery tend to become unreasonable when judgements reach this size. As one court has stated, "in much smaller cases, a fee award of 33% does not present the danger of providing the plaintiff's counsel with the windfall that would accompany a 'megafund' settlement of $100 million or upwards. But it is quite different when the figures hit the really big time."<sup>4</sup> Or as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded [for attorneys fees] as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."<sup>5</sup>

The logic of avoiding judgment-based awards in these very large cases is straightforward. As one court explains, "it is not 150 times more difficult to prepare, try, and settle a $150 million case than it is to try a $1 million case, but the application of a percentage comparable to that in a smaller case may yield an award 150 times greater."<sup>6</sup> Thus (according to another court) "there is considerable merit" to disallowing standard percentage awards as the "size of the [recovery] fund increases. In many instances the increase [in the recovery] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel."<sup>7</sup>

It also bears mention that because of its $100 million threshold, ISCRAA applies to a fairly limited universe of cases. As courts have remarked, "there are few so-called 'megafund' cases with settlements over $100 million."<sup>8</sup> In 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third

Circuit attempted to catalogue all common-fund cases in federal court that resulted in recoveries greater than $100 million. Though such litigations have been more frequent in recent years, the Third Circuit identified only 22 such cases since 1985. See in re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 737 (3d Cir. 2001).

ISCRAA is somewhat broader than the criteria that Cendant Corp. employed to collect cases. ISCRAA is not limited to common-fund cases – it also applies to judgments won on behalf of tax-exempt entities or even single individuals. ISCRAA also applies to cases brought in state court, and it aggregates identical claims that are brought against common defendants in separate actions, in order to prevent evasion of its limits through the subdivision of actions. Nevertheless, ISCRAA’s scope remains fairly narrow. An academic specialist who is familiar with developments in this field has reviewed the bill and concluded that because of its “relatively high threshold,” ISCRAA probably would apply only to about 15-20 litigations per year. I will include a copy of this professor’s letter to me in the congressional record.

Finally, a $100 million threshold also is appropriate because it limits ISCRAA’s reach to litigations that are a natural subject of congress’s authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is well-established that “Congress’ commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce.” United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress’s power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

Guaranteeing Adequate Incentives to Plaintiffs’ Lawyers

Another point that I would like to emphasize today is that ISCRAA is not an anti-plaintiffs’ lawyer bill. It is not stingy toward trial attorneys. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs’ lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA’s fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts’ practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers’ professional associations.

Federal courts primarily rely on two systems for calculating attorneys fees in cases (such as class actions) in which they are required to set “reasonable fees:” the percentage method and the lodestar-multiplier method. The percentage method, as its name implies, calculates fees as a percentage of the total recovery. The lodestar system, by contrast, requires a court to first calculate a fee based on the number of hours that the lawyer worked multiplied by prevailing hourly rates (the “lodestar”). The court then multiplies this lodestar fee again in order to reward the attorney for the risk of nonpayment of fees that he assumed and for any exceptional services that he provided.

Over the last thirty years, courts have moved back and forth between these two systems.<sup>9</sup> Only a few courts make lodestar-multipliers the exclusive means of awarding attorneys fees. But as one academic commentator has noted, “lodestar, or hours-based methods, have been adopted in every [federal judicial] circuit.”<sup>10</sup>

And more importantly, in large-recovery cases, there has been very little difference between lodestar and percentage systems. This is because even when courts apply a percentage to calculate fees, and as judgements become very large, courts typically also calculate a reasonable lodestar in order to determine what constitutes a reasonable percentage. Thus, again, as the Third Circuit notes, “courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a ‘very large’ settlement.”<sup>11</sup>

Courts have been wary of awarding fees based on percentages alone. As one state supreme court explains:

“to begin the assessment by arbitrarily picking a percentage amount without any reliance on a cognizable structure invites decisions that are nonobjective and inconsistent. What constitutes a reasonable percentage may differ from one judge to another depending on each judge’s predilections, background, and geographical location in the state.”<sup>12</sup>

Thus “courts that employ the percentage approach appear to be motivated in part by a lodestar dynamic. Because courts are reluctant to give fee awards totally incommensurate with the efforts Integrated Resources, Inc.*, 209 F.3d 43, 49 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that in addition to Second Circuit, “six other circuits have reaffirmed that district courts enjoy the discretion to use either the lodestar or the percentage method”) (citing cases).

of the attorneys, percentage awards generally decrease as the amount of the recovery increases.”<sup>13</sup>

One result of the cross-use of the lodestar and percentage systems is that even when courts use the percentage system, those awards overwhelmingly tend to reflect a reasonable lodestar multiplier. Therefore, even percentage-based cases tend to provide evidence of the range of multipliers that the courts consider to be reasonable.

In 2001, the Third Circuit “set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used.”<sup>14</sup> (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and “the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99.” And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.<sup>15</sup>

Other courts, surveying smaller cases than the $100 million recoveries examined in Cendant Corp., have identified larger multipliers. One federal district court has “observe[d] that in virtually every case where the court notes a lodestar but awards fees based upon a percentage, the lodestar multiplier converted from this percentage is in the range of 1 to 4.”<sup>16</sup> Another federal district court has found that “the range of lodestar multipliers in large and complicated class actions runs from a low of 2.26 to a high of 4.5.”<sup>17</sup>

By contrast, some courts have declared that they would allow only lower multipliers. One federal court has stated that “only in the most exceptional circumstances would this court award a multiplier of 3 or greater. * * * this court believes that lodestars enhanced by multipliers less than 3 should adequately compensate even the most talented counsel.”<sup>18</sup> And the Seventh

Circuit has suggested that “it may be that a doubling of the lodestar would provide a sensible ceiling.”<sup>19</sup>

On the other hand, the Florida Supreme Court – which is generally regarded as one of the more plaintiff-friendly courts in the United States – has announced that:

“we set the maximum multiplier available in this common-fund category of cases at 5. * * * * [A] multiplier which increases fees to five times the accepted hourly rate is sufficient to alleviate the contingency risk factor involved and attract high level counsel to common fund cases while producing a fee that remains within the bounds of reasonableness. We emphasize that 5 is a maximum multiplier.”<sup>20</sup>

ISCRAA adopts this more liberal standard. It allows fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. ISCRAA awards multipliers based on two criteria: it allows up to 300% to be added onto the amount of reasonable hourly fees if a case that involved a substantial risk of nonrecovery of fees, and allows an additional 100% add-on if the attorney provided exceptional services that improved the plaintiff’s recovery.

The criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as necessary prerequisites to the legitimacy of a contingency fee. “Courts in general have insisted that a contingent fee be truly contingent. The typically elevated fee reflecting the risk to the lawyer of receiving no fee will be permitted only if the representation indeed involves a significant degree of risk.” Charles W. Wolfram, MODERN LEGAL ETHICS § 9.4, at 532 (1986). The risk requirement has been recognized ever since contingency fees first were allowed in the United States. The American Bar Association even noted at that time that “a contract for a contingent fee, where sanctioned by law, should be reasonable under all the circumstances of the case, including the risk and uncertainty of the compensation.” ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 13 (1908). Indeed, even the professional associations of plaintiffs’ attorneys have, at times, acknowledged that contingent fees should be based on an actual contingency. In a guide to its members, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America has “recommend[ed]” that attorneys “exercise sound judgment in using a percentage in the contingent fee contract that is commensurate with the risk, cost and effort required.” ATLA, KEYS TO THE COURTHOUSE: QUICK FACTS ON THE CONTINGENCY FEE SYSTEM 13 (1994).

The criteria that ISCRAA employs are universally accepted – and the limits that it sets should be universally acceptable. ISCRAA is not intended to alter the considered standards of any jurisdiction. Rather, it is intended to enforce those standards – and to correct the occasional extreme outlier. Because ISCRAA incorporates a fee formula that is substantially more liberal than the usual practices of the federal courts in $100 million cases, we can be confident that high-quality legal representation will remain available to plaintiffs in these large litigations. See, e.g. in re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. ### Fiduciary Restraints on Attorney Fee Contracts

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>22</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>23</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>24</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>25</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>26</sup>

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’

SENATOR CORNYN

INTRODUCTION OF LANDMARK LEGISLATION TO COMBAT GROSSLY ABUSIVE ATTORNEY FEE AGREEMENTS

Wednesday, April 10, 2003

Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator Kyl, to introduce today this landmark legislation to clean up our civil justice system. This legislation would enact a badly needed reform to the way in which attorneys are paid in some of the nation's largest cases. It is designed to address some of the worst abuses of our civil justice system that I have witnessed in my nearly thirty years in the legal profession as a lawyer in private practice, as a state trial and appellate judge, and as state attorney general.

This legislation, the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA), will combat the gross abuse of attorney contingent fee agreements, abuses which we have been witnessing at an increasing rate in recent years. The legislation will enforce attorneys' fiduciary duties to their clients in a small but important category of cases – those resulting in judgments greater than $100 million.

Contingent fee agreements can have an important role to play in our civil justice system. Sometimes, when people are injured but cannot afford to hire lawyers out of their own pockets, attorneys will accept the case with the expectation that, if their clients prevail, the attorney will be paid for his or her services out of the judgment or settlement that the attorney is able to secure for the client. Such agreements between attorneys and their clients are called contingent fee agreements, because the attorney's fee is contingent on the client obtaining a money judgment or settlement. Contingent fee agreements, properly understood and utilized, reward attorneys for their work in obtaining monetary recovery for their clients, and the risk that they take that, despite their hard work and best efforts, they are unable to obtain any recovery for the client at all.

Contingent fees can thus help ensure that plaintiffs with legitimate claims have the opportunity to obtain justice from our courts through the assistance of counsel. But contingent fees also present serious ethical problems for our legal system – particularly when the dollar amounts at stake are extraordinary, especially when compared to the relatively light or even negligible effort and risk actually undertaken by the attorneys.

Clients hire attorneys with the understanding and expectation that the attorney is ethically, legally, and morally obliged to represent their best interests, and that the attorney will use his or her legal skills in order to produce the best possible result – not for the attorney, but for the client.

Thus, as my colleague has noted, contingent fee agreements are no ordinary agreements between consumers and businesses. It is a bedrock principle and well-established tenet of our Anglo-American system of justice that attorneys are not ordinary businessmen who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers, as courts have made clear on countless occasions. Rather, attorneys are officers of the court who have a fiduciary duty to their clients. As fiduciaries, attorneys occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients.

One obligation that flows from this status as a fiduciary is the attorney's obligation not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. This obligation is a fundamental part of an attorney's lawyers. So the real amount on the bargaining table was not the $246 billion that the states settled for, but a larger sum, including the amount to be paid to the attorneys. . . . Stated simply, because dollars are fungible, the fees are coming out of the settlements.<sup>25</sup>

Even foreign commentators have noted that the state tobacco settlement's "arbitration is a mere figleaf. The money going to the lawyers was clearly part of the overall amount that the tobacco companies were willing to pay to settle the case. Whatever the lawyers get, the states do not."<sup>26</sup>

It is specious to argue that [billions of dollars] in fees are not being diverted out of funds available for public health and taxpayers. The tobacco industry is willing to pay a certain sum to get rid of these cases. That sum is the total cost of the payment to the plaintiffs and their lawyers. It is a matter of indifference to the industry how that sum is divided – 75% for the plaintiffs and 25% for their lawyers, or vice versa. That means that every penny paid to the plaintiffs' lawyers – whether it is technically 'in' the settlement or not – is money that the industry could have paid to the state or the private plaintiffs. Excessive attorneys' fees in this case will not be a victimless crime.<sup>27</sup>

I hope that these authorities and their reasoning are sufficient to permanently dispel the notion that an attorney fee agreement can be structured so as to evade the ethical obligation to charge only a reasonable fee. The defenders of the MSA fee payments are simply misleading the public and this distinguished body when they assert that a particular lawyer's award under the settlement does not come out of a particular state's recovery. That fee comes out of all of the state's recoveries. All excessive or unreasonable fees should be restored to all 50 of the states.

Senator Kyl has already presented estimates of the monetary recovery each state can expect if ISCRAA is enacted. I would simply point out here that, according to those estimates, Texas has been charged excessive and unreasonable attorney fees in the amount of $667 million, and therefore would recover those funds if this legislation is adopted.

ISCRAA's return of unethical tobacco-settlement fee awards to the states is manifestly proper in light of the fact that all fee awards are the property of the client, and the attorney is entitled only to a reasonable fee. No attorney is above these rules and obligations. They cannot be waived or ignored. And in light of our experience with the state tobacco settlement fee awards, and their effect on our public officials, these ethical duties must be carried out and enforced strictly and fully.

Our federal and state courts generally do a good job of protecting consumers and enforcing the rights of all Americans. But there are problems in our courts that require attention and significant reform. Class action abuse not only threatens the integrity and the perception of rationality in our nation's courts, it strongly hinders economic and job growth. Tort reform is badly needed to rescue many industries, especially our health care industry, from abuses of our legal system. The judicial confirmation process at the federal level has become bitter, severe and destructive, posing a threat to judicial independence and the quality and efficiency of our courts. And abusive attorney fee arrangements make a mockery of our civil justice system, all while enriching a small band of unscrupulous litigators at the expense of the real victims, their clients.

To enforce the longstanding fiduciary duty of all attorneys to charge only a reasonable fee, in a class of cases that poses heightened risks of abuse and special significance to the national economy, I urge that this Senate consider expediently, and approve quickly, this important measure, the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

ethical duties, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States. Courts have made clear, time and time again, that every attorney fee contract automatically and necessarily includes the requirement that the fee be a reasonable one, a requirement that no provision of such agreements may abrogate.

ISCRAA affirms and reinforces the longstanding substantive law of attorneys' fiduciary duties, by providing a special mechanism to enforce those duties in a particularly high risk category of cases – a category that the courts themselves have singled out as posing special risks of unethical, windfall fees. Courts have noted that allowing standard contingency fee agreements in cases involving judgments of $100 million or more have a distinct tendency of grossly overcompensating attorneys for their actual services rendered.

ISCRAA prevents attorneys from evading their obligation to charge a reasonable fee in extraordinarily large recovery cases, by limiting awards to a generous multiple of reasonable hourly fees. State courts, federal courts, and even trial lawyers' themselves have all recognized that a reasonable fee must be proportional to the attorney's actual efforts. ISCRAA codifies and enforces this principle, while continuing to guarantee lawyers ample and generous compensation for their efforts – using fee multipliers that are as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and which are considerably more generous than the limits set by federal courts in $100 million cases.

This legislation thus promises to clean up our civil justice system and to repudiate the grossest abuses of our legal system. Make no mistake: Although all attorneys are supposed to uphold a strict ethical code, under which they are strictly forbidden from charging their clients unreasonable or excessive attorney fees, the temptation to abuse contingent fee agreements is a strong one, and even more so when the dollar amounts are truly extraordinary – such as in the $100 million cases that would be covered by this legislation. And make no mistake: the victim of such attorney fee abuse, and the beneficiary of this legislation, is not the defendant who pays the judgment – after all, the defendant pays the same total amount whether the money goes to the attorney or to the client. Rather, the real victim of this abuse, and the real beneficiary of this legislation, is the injured client, whose money is being taken away from the lawyer through an abusive contingent fee arrangement.

As my colleague has also noted, ISCRAA is unquestionably an appropriate exercise of Congress's power to regulate and protect interstate commerce, especially considering the large size of the litigations to which it applies. $100 million is a standard threshold used by the federal government to determine whether an economic transaction significantly affects interstate commerce.

But the most important reason for federal intervention in this area I have not yet mentioned, and I would like to take a moment to discuss it here: the gross abuses that we have already witnessed in large litigation fee awards. Recent experience amply demonstrates that, if the federal government does not act to prevent unethical and grossly abusive fee awards in massive, nationwide lawsuits, no one will. Moreover, recent experience further demonstrates that unreasonable fee payments in such suits threaten not just the attorneys' fiduciary obligations; they also place at risk the integrity of our governmental institutions. The unwholesome incentives created by windfall, unethical fee awards in large-scale litigations have induced some public officials to abandon their civic obligations.

The textbook example of the types of abuses that make ISCRAA necessary is the attorneys fees awarded in the state lawsuits to recover tobacco-related Medicaid expenses. Individual law firms that represented the states in that litigation have been given hundreds of millions and sometimes even billions of dollars in fees. To date, approximately $15 billion in fees has been awarded to the tobacco settlement lawyers, to be paid out in $500-million-a-year increments. Attorneys representing just three of the states – Mississippi, Texas, and Florida – were awarded $8.2 billion in fees. In many cases, such fees were paid to attorneys who filed duplicate, copycat lawsuits at a time when settlement negotiations had already begun and the risk that the states would not recover any money was negligible. Yet these lawyers nevertheless received massive contingency fees, for suits that involved no real contingency. And for most of the tobacco settlement lawyers, the size of the fee awards bears no reasonable relation to the actual effort expended or risk involved.

There is widespread agreement that the fees awarded in the tobacco settlement are excessive and unreasonable. Perhaps the most damning indictments come from those who took the plaintiffs' side in this litigation – including from plaintiffs lawyers themselves. For example, Michael Ciresi, a pioneer in the tobacco litigation who represented the state of Minnesota in its lawsuit, and who is no doubt familiar with what these lawsuits actually require, has said that the Texas, Florida, and Mississippi lawyers' fee awards "are far in excess of these lawyers' contribution to any of the state results."<sup>1</sup> Similarly, former Food and Drug Administration Commissioner David Kessler, another leader in the fight against tobacco, has said that the states' private lawyers "did a real service, but I think the fee is outrageous. All the legal fees are out of control."<sup>2</sup> Washington, D.C. lawyer and tobacco-industry opponent John Coale has denounced the fee awards as "beyond human comprehension" and stated that "the work does not justify them."<sup>3</sup> Even the Association of American Trial Lawyers, the nation's premier representative of the plaintiffs bar, has condemned attorneys fees requested in the state tobacco settlement. The President of ATLA has noted:

Common sense suggests that a one billion dollar fee is excessive and unreasonable and certainly should invite the scrutiny [of the courts]. [ATLA] generally refrains from expressing an institutional opinion regarding a particular fee in a particular case, but we have a strong negative reaction to reports that at least one attorney on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Florida case is seeking a fee in excess of one billion dollars.<sup>4</sup>

This letter, written in 1997, only concerned one of the Florida lawyers' request for attorneys fees. Ultimately, Florida's private counsel was awarded a total of $3.4 billion in fees. These statements demonstrate beyond all doubt that there is real abuse going on here, and that the victim of this abuse is the client, the plaintiff – and not the defendant.

Perhaps the best gloss on the tobacco fee awards is that provided by Professor Lester Brickman, a professor of law at Cardozo Law School and noted authority on legal ethics and attorneys fees. Professor Brickman has stated:

Under the rules of legal ethics, promulgated partly as a justification for the legal profession's self-governance, fees cannot be 'clearly excessive.' Indeed, that standard has now been superseded in most states by an even more rigorous standard: fees have to be 'reasonable.' Are these fees, which in many cases amount to effective hourly rates of return of tens of thousands – and even hundreds of thousands – of dollars an hour, reasonable? I think to ask the question is to answer it.<sup>5</sup>

The attorneys fees awarded in the state tobacco settlement are simply indefensible. And the process by which the fees were awarded partly explains how they came to be so. Outside counsel fees were determined by a private arbitration panel established by the Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) that resolved 46 of the states' litigation. (Four other states had settled their suits earlier. Their lawyers, however, also were paid out of the accounts created by the MSA.) Amazingly, the settlement agreement explicitly immunized all fee awards from judicial review. Even more amazingly, one of the three arbitrators who made the awards had a clear conflict of interests: he was the father of a South Carolina lawyer whose law firm has received the largest fee awards of all, believed to amount to over $2 billion. Another one of the arbitrators had no background in fee arbitrations or any related matter, and simply ignored the law in order to make outrageous awards, using the salaries of sports stars and entertainers as a basis of measure. The third arbitrator, a retired federal judge appointed by President Carter, dissented from the key fee decisions.

As incredible as the MSA fee awards and the arbitration procedures may seem, even more dubious is the process by which many of the law firms that participated in this lucrative litigation were selected in the first place to represent the states.

In my home state of Texas, trial lawyers have accused the then-state attorney general of demanding $1 million in campaign contributions in exchange for their being hired to represent the state in the tobacco litigation. One prominent lawyer – a former president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association – has since said that the attorney general's solicitation was so blatant that "I knew th[at] instant . . . that I could not be involved in the matter." He even later wondered if the meeting had been a "sting operation." Another lawyer simply characterized his encounter with the attorney general as a bribery solicitation.

This former Texas attorney general was recently indicted on federal charges of attempting to fraudulently divert $260 million in tobacco-settlement legal fees to one of his personal friends. He had given a sworn affidavit that this lawyer had served as Texas's "primary adviser" in its tobacco lawsuit – despite the fact that the lawyer had attended no court hearings, depositions, or strategy meetings, wrote no memos or legal briefs about the case, and apparently never even spoke to any of the other attorneys. The attorney general even went so far as to forge and fraudulently backdate documents in order to win his friend a share of the tobacco settlement fee.

As for the five law firms that actually did represent Texas in the tobacco litigation, they filed relatively late lawsuits that were based on other lawyers' work – and yet, despite the minimal energy expended on those suits, were awarded $3.3 billion in attorneys fees. This award amounts to compensation that, even assuming that the attorneys worked all day every day during the entire period of the litigation, remains well in excess of $100,000 an hour. As one newspaper editorial has noted, for the amount of money that these lawyers were awarded, Texas could hire

Texas's experience is not an isolated example. In other states as well, lawyers' participation in the tobacco litigation appears to have been the product of political favoritism – and to have resulted in unfathomable fees that bear no reasonable relation to the services provided. For example:

- New Jersey: the private in-state lawyers who represented this state in the tobacco litigation have admitted that they had no mass-tort litigation experience and played no role in the state settlement talks. They have also admitted that all the key work in the state's lawsuit was done by out-of-state firms – the in-state firms' principal work was drafting pro hac vice motions to have these outside lawyers admitted in New Jersey courts. Any work that the New Jersey lawyers did was submitted to the outside lawyers, who made all of the substantive arguments. Result: these in-state lawyers were awarded $350 million in the MSA fee arbitration. Connections: the New Jersey lawyers were an inside group of past presidents of the New Jersey trial lawyers' association. The State refused to even consider hiring a nonprofit firm to conduct the New Jersey lawsuit.<sup>7</sup>
- Pennsylvania: settlement talks had already begun, the states' tobacco litigation was being resolved, and all of the legal theories already had been developed long before the Pennsylvania state suit was filed. Result: Pennsylvania's private lawyers were awarded $50 million in the MSA arbitration – equivalent to 1000% of a reasonable hourly rate. As one expert has noted, "there's not $50 million of work in there." Connections: the two law firms that the state Attorney General selected to conduct the litigation were among his top campaign contributors. The firms were awarded no-bid contracts. As one Pennsylvania commentator has noted, "obviously, it was a political kind of thing."<sup>8</sup>
- Maryland: billionaire tort lawyer Peter Angelos demanded a one billion dollar fee for his work on that state's case, even though, according to the state Senate President, the state legislature had retroactively "changed centuries of precedent to ensure [Angelos] a win in the case." Angelos ultimately receive an accelerated $150 million payment for this no-

- Louisiana: the private law firms that represented the state in the tobacco litigation were awarded $575 million. The MSA arbitration panel actually increased this award on the ground that the state government – the lawyers’ supposed client – was opposed to suing tobacco companies. The Louisiana fee award amounts to almost $7000 an hour, based on the lawyers’ estimate that they worked a total 85,000 hours. This estimate, however, is unverifiable, since the state’s private lawyers kept no billing records – as the attorney general explained, “I wasn’t that big on hourly or written reports.” The dissenting member of the arbitration panel simply noted that the Louisiana fee award “shocks the conscience.” The single biggest beneficiary of this largesse – receiving $115 million in attorneys fees – was a law firm based in Lake Charles, the hometown of the state’s attorney general. This firm and the next largest fee recipient had donated over $42,000 to the attorney general’s political campaigns. Together, all of the firms that represented Louisiana gave more than $100,000 to the attorney general in the years before they were selected to participate in the state’s tobacco team.<sup>10</sup>
- Ohio: the lawyers representing this state received fees estimated to exceed $50,000 per hour, despite the fact that, according to independent observers, “all of the legal issues were resolved long before these Ohio lawyers stepped up to the plate.” The state’s outside counsel had donated $26,000 in campaign contributions to the state attorney general prior to their appointment to the state’s tobacco team. After the attorney general chose one private lawyer to serve as the state’s “lead special counsel,” that lawyer hired one of the attorney general’s top aides for an undisclosed sum in order to – in the lawyer’s own words – “help me get acquainted with a technique called PowerPoint.” When told that “there were many people in Ohio capable of doing a PowerPoint presentation,” the state’s outside counsel responded that this particular attorney general’s aide “was the only one I knew of.”<sup>11</sup>
- Massachusetts: according to other tobacco plaintiffs’ lawyers, Massachusetts’s suit piggybacked on the work of other lawyers and was not pivotal to the outcome of the tobacco litigation. Result: $775 million was awarded to the Massachusetts lawyers in the MSA arbitration.<sup>12</sup>
- New York: when this state’s then-attorney general hired private counsel to represent the state in its tobacco lawsuit, tobacco companies already had paid $15 billion to Florida and Mississippi for identical claims and a national settlement agreement already was under discussion. As one local anti-tobacco leader has noted, “these were copycat lawsuits, there wasn't all that much work to do." The firms' primary job was to collect New York-specific data in order to calculate damages. Ultimately, the New York firms represented the state for just 13 months. And they received a fee award of $625 million. This amounts to at least $14,000 an hour, for a lawsuit that by all accounts involved no risk. The dissenting member of the arbitration panel has denounced the award as "an astronomical sum unrelated to [the attorneys'] efforts or achievements." The New York firms had contributed more than $250,000 to New York politicians and their campaign organizations in the years preceding their selection – and another $200,000 after the state settlement.<sup>13</sup>

- Wisconsin: the Wisconsin lawyers' tobacco litigation work has been described as chiefly consisting of media and public relations efforts on their own behalf. Their billing records included time spent selecting office space and buying furniture. One lawyer effectively billed $3000 to the state for reading an article in a Madison newspaper. The lawyers also billed the state for limousine rides around the state, trips on private jets, and stays at luxury hotels. Result: $75 million was awarded to the Wisconsin lawyers. Based on the law firms' records of the total number of hours they devoted to the case – including work by paralegals – this fee amounts to $3000 per hour.<sup>14</sup>
- Missouri: a state supreme court justice in Missouri resigned his post in order to join one of the private law firms expected to receive a portion of the MSA arbitrators' fee award. Ultimately, the firms representing the state spent just 5 months on the state's lawsuit. They received a fee award of $111 million. One state leader has described the award as "the biggest rip-off in the 180-year history of the state." The law firms receiving these fees had donated more than $500,000 to state politicians and parties in the years leading up to their selection as the state's outside counsel.<sup>15</sup>

These examples are too numerous to dismiss. In state after state, the temptations created by the massive, windfall fees awarded in the Medicaid tobacco settlement corrupted not only lawyers involved, but the government as well. The fee awards poisoned everything that they touched. No one who examines these events closely – who surveys the obscene fee awards, and the political cronyism that determined who benefited – can disagree that this must never be allowed to happen again.

As a final point, I would like to address a question that has been raised with regard to remedy. Some have argued that nothing can be done to correct the excesses of the tobacco settlement fee awards – even with regard to fees that are still being or have yet to be paid. On several occasions, state judges who were called upon to approve their state's tobacco settlement have also, on their own initiative, inquired into the apparent unreasonableness of the fees awarded. In each case, both the plaintiffs lawyers – and in some cases, even state officials – have challenged the state courts' authority to act. They have argued that these courts lack jurisdiction to review a national settlement, and that excessive fees cannot be restored to the state. One state's attorney general implicated in these events has argued that it is a "misconception" that the tobacco settlement "attorneys' fees are coming out of the public's pocket. That is not the case. They [sic] defendants have agreed to pay these fees."<sup>16</sup>

Because of the way that the MSA fee payments are structured, no lawyer's award comes out of any one particular, identifiable state's recovery. Instead, all of the lawyers are being paid from one of two separate accounts, each of which is funded by the tobacco companies.

It is a mistake, however, to contend that, because the MSA fee payments are made directly from defendants to plaintiffs' lawyers – without ever formally or actually passing through the plaintiffs' hands – they are immunized against ethical scrutiny or correction. It is well and long established in our law that fee awards originate as the property of the client regardless of how the fee agreements are structured. The courts have been very clear on this point. As they have stated:

- "The allowance of attorney fees in a judgment gives the attorneys no interest and ownership in the judgment to the extent of the amount of the fee allowed, but the judgment in its entirety is the property of the client. The award for fees is for the client, not the attorney."<sup>17</sup>
- "[A]ttorneys' fee provisions exist for the benefit of parties and not the attorneys . . . . Several jurisdictions have noted that the real party in interest with regard to fees is the client and not the attorney."<sup>18</sup>
- "A judgment for costs is a judgment in favor of the party, and not of his attorney, and the money represented by the costs is the property of the party."<sup>19</sup>
- "[T]he award of attorney fees [is] made not to the attorneys but to the litigant who was personally liable to the attorneys. This is also the view in other states when the courts award attorney fees."<sup>20</sup>
- "An award of attorney's fees belongs to the client and not the attorney."<sup>21</sup>

Mitchell*, 495 U.S. 82, 87 (1990) ("Section 1988 makes the prevailing party eligible for a discretionary award of attorney's fees. * * * it is the party, rather than the lawyer, who is so eligible") (citations omitted).

Indeed, an award of attorney fees is generally taxable as income to the client. In a recent case, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit noted that a plaintiff's obligation to compensate the law firm that represented him "was satisfied by [the defendant]. The payment was therefore to [the client]. The discharge by a third person of an obligation to him is equivalent to receipt by the person taxed." The Ninth Circuit emphasized that the fact "[t]hat [the client] never laid hands on the money paid to the lawyers does not obliterate their constructive receipt." In other words, the fee award belongs to the client, regardless of how the award is made.

The rule that fee awards belong to the client is strongly supported by important policy considerations. It is necessary because any other rule would be an invitation to collusion and self-dealing between plaintiffs' lawyers and defendants. Again, the courts have been very clear on this point. As the Third Circuit has noted:

[A] defendant is interested only in disposing of the total claims asserted against it, and the allocation between the [plaintiff's] payment and the attorneys' fees is of little or no interest to the defense. Moreover, the divergence in class members' and class counsel's financial incentives creates the danger that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than-optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees.<sup>22</sup>

The Second Circuit has made the same point, noting:

Defendants, once the settlement amount has been agreed to, have little interest in how it is distributed and thus no incentive to oppose the [attorneys] fee. Indeed, the same dynamic creates incentives for collusion – the temptation for lawyers to agree to a less than optimal settlement in exchange for [generous fees].<sup>23</sup>

The Ninth Circuit has also addressed the question of "whether a class member has standing to appeal class counsel's attorney fee and cost award when that award is payable by the defendant independently, and not out of the class settlement." The court concluded that "[e]ven if class counsel's attorney fees are not to be paid from the class settlement . . . , the aggregate amount of the attorney fees and the class settlement payments may be viewed as "a constructive common fund." The court reasoned that "[i]f . . . class counsel agreed to accept excessive fees and costs to the detriment of class plaintiffs, then class counsel breached their fiduciary duty to the class. If that were the case, any excessive award could be considered property of the class plaintiffs, and any injury they suffered could be at least partially redressed by allocating to them a portion of that award."<sup>24</sup>

As several commentators have noted, the policy considerations underpinning the rule that fee awards belong to the client apply with full force to the state tobacco settlement. Indeed, that settlement could serve as a textbook example for why this rule exists. As Professor Brickman has noted:

To the tobacco companies, dollars are dollars, whether paid to states or paid to

MEMORANDUM
VIA FAX AND EMAIL

TO: Jay Lefkowitz
Cesar Conda
Brett Kavanaugh
FROM: Michael Horowitz
DATE: April 23, 2003
RE: "Wage Regulation" arguments against Kyl-Cornyn

In addition to material previously sent, I'm attaching the memo prepared today by Joe Matal re the so-called "wage regulation" argument that might be used against Kyl-Cornyn. (Pages 8-10 of the Kyl floor statement address the same issue in further detail; the attachment to the e-mail version of this memo includes that excerpt.)

To give context to the Matal memo, and to make absolutely clear that Kyl-Cornyn is not a fee cap bill, consider the following hourly claims that have been made by the tobacco lawyers, and the fees they would be eligible to receive under the bill on the reasonable assumption of a court-authorized $400 per hour fee and 5x multiplier:

- ú Castano group lawyers: 400,000 hours - $800 million
- ú NY lawyers: 48,000 hours - $96 million
- ú Texas lawyers: 36,000 hours - $72 million

As can be seen, fees authorized under Kyl-Cornyn, even divided among lawyers and across the years of litigation, are well within current CEO compensation.

But entirely aside from the size of legitimate fees under Kyl-Cornyn, please examine Joe Matal's superb memo, compelling in making clear that the bill merely creates a means of enforcing existing law - one that, in recognition of the fiduciary character of the attorney-client relationship, currently requires judicial regulation/supervision/ review of all attorneys' fees in all states.

MEMORANDUM
VIA FAX AND EMAIL

TO: Jay Lefkowitz
Cesar Conda
Brett Kavanaugh
FROM: Michael Horowitz
DATE: April 23, 2003
RE: "Wage Regulation" arguments against Kyl-Cornyn

In addition to material previously sent, I'm attaching the memo prepared today by Joe Matal re the so-called "wage regulation" argument that might be used against Kyl-Cornyn. (Pages 8-10 of the Kyl floor statement address the same issue in further detail; the attachment to the e-mail version of this memo includes that excerpt.)

To give context to the Matal memo, and to make absolutely clear that Kyl-Cornyn is not a fee cap bill, consider the following hourly claims that have been made by the tobacco lawyers, and the fees they would be eligible to receive under the bill on the reasonable assumption of a court-authorized $400 per hour fee and 5x multiplier:

Castano group lawyers: 400,000 hours - $800 million
NY lawyers: 48,000 hours - $96 million
Texas lawyers: 36,000 hours - $72 million
Illinois and Ohio lawyers: 15,000-20,000 hours - $30 million
Michigan lawyers: 20,000 hours - $40 million
Wisconsin lawyers: 26,500 hours - $53 million
California lawyers: 128,000 hours - $256 million

As can be seen, fees authorized under Kyl-Cornyn, even divided among lawyers and across the years of litigation, are well within current CEO compensation.

But entirely aside from the size of legitimate fees under Kyl-Cornyn, please examine Joe Matal's superb memo, compelling in making clear that the bill merely creates a means of enforcing existing law - one that, in recognition of the fiduciary character of the attorney-client relationship, currently requires judicial regulation/supervision/ review of all attorneys' fees in all states.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>1</sup>

- “There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>2</sup>

King*, 975 F.Supp. 1147 (N.D.Ind.1997) (“there are legal rules that limit the ability of a lawyer and her client to contract freely. Under Indiana law, an attorney is entitled only to reasonable fees regardless of the existence of a contract between her and her client.”) (citing Trinkle v. Leeney, 650 N.E.2d 749, 754 (Ind.Ct.App.1995)).

Erickson*, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) (“A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client”).

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- “Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so ‘clearly excessive’ as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules.”<sup>5</sup>
- “[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client’s challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside.”<sup>7</sup>
- “Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law.”<sup>8</sup>

- “Under a court’s general supervisory power over attorneys as officers of the court, attorney fee contracts are subject to scrutiny for the reasonableness of their terms.”<sup>9</sup>
- “[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny.”<sup>10</sup>
- “As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney’s fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client.”<sup>11</sup>

[From Senator Kyl’s speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>13</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>14</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>15</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>16</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is ‘a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>17</sup>

“There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>18</sup>

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’ fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

<sup>18</sup>Kuhnlein v. Department of Revenue, 662 So.2d 309, 313 (Fla. 1995) (emphasis added). See also Gruber & Coabella, P.A. v. Erickson, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."<sup>20</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."<sup>21</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

Hi Ken:

We have a Noon appointment with CIFA, a DOD intelligence agency and were hoping to stop by ANYTIME you could squeeze us in either before or after.

On two fronts, we have issues/solutions that have political ramifications, especially the 2 million weekly listeners in Ohio and 38 million opt-in email addresses nationally.

On a personal level, I simply need your help. I screwed-up royally by holding on to a failing business too long and have paid a steep price for not getting out more quickly (a lesson learned) - this project has the potential to get me back on my feet...and frankly, it's a "win/win" for you, me and W.

Ken, I know you are busy as hell, but I believe we have enough political value to offer you to warrant helping out "a brother." :) If this Friday doesn't work, pick a day/time and we will match up with you...

We simply want to help you with our RealTalkNetwork.com show and see if you can help us open some doors to DHS, ONDCP, and perhaps DOD...Once you understand what we can do to help track & trace terrorists, you will be glad you pointed us in some right directions - there are political ramifications to winning the war on terror???

Let me know. Ken Duberstein pointed to you and said, "he's your man..."

Thanks Ken...it's the least you can do since you have my dream job :)

Marty

PS - I shall strive to attain its ideals, and by so doing to bring to it honor and credit. I shall be loyal to my college and my chapter and shall keep strong my ties to them that I may ever retain the spirit of youth...I shall try always to discharge the obligation to others which arises from the fact that I am a fraternity man. :)

i'm still waiting to hear from anyone on next week's plans....but in the meantime, we're trying to call the women and gauge interest in coming to DC.

again - i must reiterate that a WH event or a sit down meeting/briefing with KBH will help increase the numbers.

based on our email traffic - i've outlined the following agenda for the women when making calls (we do NOT mention pending WH event)

i will be traveling for the remainder of the week with minimal computer access (only at night). so please call my cell phone at PRA 6 with any updates. thanks.

- - - - -
Tues - arrive in DC

Wed - Senate office visits and press conference in the mansfield room of the capitol; owen's nomination scheduled to be on the senate floor

Thurs - nomination may carry over this day; meeting with KBH and press conference with ALL GOP women in House/Senate supportive of nomination

i'm still waiting to hear from anyone on next week's plans....but in the meantime, we're trying to call the women and gauge interest in coming to DC. again - i must reiterate that a WH event or a sit down meeting/briefing with KBH will help increase the numbers.

based on our email traffic - i've outlined the following agenda for the women when making calls (we do NOT mention pending WH event)

i will be traveling for the remainder of the week with minimal computer access (only at night). so please call my cell phone at 202-285-4392 with any updates. thanks.

Summary of Enrolled Bill S. 151 - Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to end the Exploitation of Children Today (PROTECT) Act of 2003

S. 151 would: (1) enhance the operation of the AMBER (America's Missing: Broadcast Emergency Response) Alert communications network in order to facilitate the recovery of abducted children; (2) provide for stronger penalties against and new crimes related to kidnapping and other crimes against children; (3) provide tools for the investigation and prosecution of child pornography offenses; and (4) attempt to reduce the volume of downward departures from sentencing guidelines in all criminal cases. The most significant provisions in S. 151 are summarized below. Other important provisions of the enrolled bill are detailed in an attachment.

AMBER Alert Communications Network

National Coordination of Amber Alert Communications Network. The enrolled bill would require the Department of Justice to assign an officer to act as the national coordinator of the AMBER Alert communications network regarding abducted children. The Coordinator would be required to: (1) seek to eliminate gaps in the network, including gaps in areas of interstate travel; (2) work with States to encourage the development of additional elements (known as local AMBER plans) in the network; (3) work with States to ensure appropriate regional coordination of various elements of the network; and (4) act as the nationwide point of contact for the development of the network and regional coordination of alerts on abducted children through the network.

The Coordinator would be required to notify and consult with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation concerning each child abduction for which an alert is issued through the network. Also, the Coordinator would be required to cooperate with the Secretary of Transportation and the Federal Communications Commission in carrying out these coordination activities.

Minimum Standards for Issuance and Dissemination of Alerts through AMBER Alert. The enrolled bill would require the Coordinator to establish, in cooperation with local broadcasters and State and local law enforcement agencies, minimum standards for the issuance and dissemination of alerts through the AMBER Alert communications network. The minimum standards established would be adoptable on a voluntary basis only. The minimum standards would provide that the dissemination of an alert through the AMBER Alert communications network be limited to the geographic areas most likely to facilitate the recovery of the abducted child concerned. The bill would provide that the Coordinator may not interfere with the current system of voluntary coordination between local broadcasters and State and local law enforcement agencies. The Coordinator would be required to cooperate with the Secretary of Transportation and the Federal Communications Commission in carrying out these activities.

Grant Program for Notification and Communications Systems. The enrolled bill would require the Secretary of Transportation to carry out a program to provide grants to States for the development or enhancement of notification or communications systems along highways for alerts and other information for the recovery of abducted children. Activities funded by grants could Additional Trial Attorneys. The enrolled bill would require the Attorney General to appoint, within six months of enactment, 25 additional trial attorneys who would have as their primary focus the investigation and prosecution of Federal child pornography and obscenity laws. The bill would authorize appropriations of such sums as may be necessary to carry out this provision. The bill would also require the Attorney General to report biennially to the Senate and House Judiciary Committees on Federal enforcement actions, including an outcome-based measure of performance and an analysis of the technology being used by the child pornography industry.

Misleading Domain Names on the Internet. The enrolled bill would make it a crime to knowingly use a misleading domain name on the Internet with the intent to deceive: (1) any person into viewing obscene material; and (2) a minor into viewing "material that is harmful to minors" on the Internet. Violators of the former provision would be subject to a fine or imprisonment of up to two years, or both. Violators of the latter provision would be subject to a fine or imprisonment of up to four years, or both. The enrolled bill would define "material that is harmful to minors" as any communication consisting of nudity, sex, or excretion that, taken as a whole: (1) predominantly appeals to the prurient interest of minors; (2) is patently offensive to prevailing standards in the adult community as a whole with respect to what is suitable material for minors; and (3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value for minors. For purposes of this provision, the enrolled bill would define "sex" as acts of masturbation, sexual intercourse, or physical contact with a person's genitals, or the condition of human male or female genitals when in a state of sexual stimulation or arousal.

Admissibility of Evidence. The enrolled bill would make non-physical information (including name, address, and social security number) identifying minors depicted in child pornography, other than age or approximate age, inadmissible and subject to redaction from any otherwise admissible evidence in any prosecution of such an act.

Investigative Authority Relating to Child Pornography. The enrolled bill would modify provisions regarding administrative subpoenas relating to child pornography to expand the matter an electronic communication or remote computing service would be required to disclose to a governmental entity to include the means and source of payment for such service, including any credit card or bank account number.

Civil Remedies. The enrolled bill would authorize civil remedies, including injunctive relief and punitive damages, for child pornography offenses.

Communications Decency Act of 1996. The enrolled bill would amend the Communication Decency Act by making it unlawful to use a telecommunications device to knowingly transmit child pornography to adults or minors with the intent to harass. In addition, the enrolled bill would make it a crime to knowingly send or display child pornography to persons under 18 years of age using an interactive computer service.

Sentencing Guidelines Related to Crimes Against Children

Enforcement of Sentencing Guidelines for Child Abduction and Sex Offense.

The enrolled bill would provide that in sentencing a defendant convicted of an offense involving obscenity, sexual abuse, sex trafficking of children, sexual exploitation and other abuse of children, or transportation for illegal sexual activity and related crimes, a Federal court would be required to impose a sentence of the kind and within the range of the applicable sentencing guidelines issues by the U.S. Sentencing Commission, unless the court finds: (1) that there exist aggravating or mitigating circumstances of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines that should result in a sentence greater or lower than that imposed; or (2) on a motion by the Government, that the defendant has provided substantial assistance in another investigation or prosecution that establishes a mitigating circumstance. The enrolled bill would provide that in determining whether a circumstance was adequately taken into consideration, a court would be required to consider only the sentencing guidelines, policy statements, and official commentary of the Sentencing Commission.

Downward Departures in Child Crimes and Sexual Offenses. The enrolled bill would amend the sentencing guidelines to allow courts, in cases involving child crimes and sexual offenses, to impose a sentence below the range established by applicable guidelines only if a court finds that there exists a mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, that: (1) has been identified as a permissible ground of downward departure in sentencing guidelines or policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission; (2) has not adequately been taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines; and (3) should result in a sentence different from that imposed. The enrolled bill would provide that grounds enumerated in the sentencing guidelines are the sole grounds identified as permissible for downward departure.

Under the enrolled bill, when sentencing a defendant convicted of an offense involving obscenity, sexual abuse, sex trafficking of children, sexual exploitation and other abuse of children, or transportation for illegal sexual activity and related crimes, age or an extraordinary physical impairment could be a reason to impose a sentence below an applicable guideline range only if and to the extent permitted by the sentencing guidelines. The enrolled bill would not allow a court to consider: (1) drug, alcohol, or gambling dependence or abuse; (2) family ties and responsibilities; or (3) community ties as relevant factors in determining whether a sentence should be imposed below the applicable guideline range.

Amendments to the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines. The enrolled bill would increase the base offense level for possession of materials depicting a minor engaged in sexually explicit conduct if the offense involves material that portrays sadistic or masochistic conduct or other depictions of violence. Also, the enrolled bill would further increase the base offense level according to the number of images found in the defendant's possession.

For offenses involving trafficking in material involving the sexual exploitation of a minor, receiving, transporting, shipping, or advertising material involving the sexual exploitation of a minor, or possessing material involving sexual exploitation of a minor with intent to traffic, the enrolled bill would increase the base offense level according to the number of images found in the defendant's possession.

The Sentencing Commission to amend the sentencing guidelines to ensure that the guidelines adequately reflect the seriousness of offenses involving sexual abuse of a minor or ward, abusive sexual contact, and sexual exploitation of children. The enrolled bill would also require the Sentencing Commission to review and, as appropriate, amend the Federal sentencing guidelines to ensure that guideline penalties are adequate to deter and punish conduct that involves interstate travel with the intent to engage in a sexual act with a juvenile.

Sex Offender Registry

State Internet Sites on Registered Sex Offenders. Current law requires each State, or any agency authorized by the State, to release information necessary to protect the public concerning persons required to register as sex offenders. The enrolled bill would require States to maintain an Internet site containing such information, along with instructions on the process for correcting information that a person alleges to be erroneous. States would be required to implement such an Internet site within three years after the enactment of the enrolled bill, although the Justice Department could grant an additional two years to a State that is making a good faith effort to implement this provision of the enrolled bill. The enrolled bill would require the Criminal Division of the Justice Department to create a national Internet site that would link all of the State Internet sites.

Registration of Child Pornographers in the National Sex Offender Registry. Under current law, a person convicted of certain criminal offenses against a minor or certain sexually violent offenses is required to register a current address with the sex offender registry. The enrolled bill would include in this program persons convicted of crimes relating to the production and distribution of child pornography. The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations to the Justice Department of such sums as may be necessary to carry out this provision of the enrolled bill for each of FYs 2004 through 2007.

Grants to States for New Sex Offender Registry Requirements. The Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 authorized appropriations of $25 million for each of FYs 1999 and 2000 to establish a grant program, the Sex Offender Management Assistance Program, to provide funds to States to offset the costs associated with establishing and maintaining a sex offender registry. The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations to the Justice Department of such sums as may be necessary for each of FYs 2004 through 2007 to continue to carry out this grant program.

Miscellaneous Provisions

Secured Authentication Feature and Enhanced Identification Defense (SAFE ID) Act. Under current law, it is illegal to knowingly produce, transfer, or possess unauthorized, false, or stolen identification documents. The enrolled bill would also make it a crime to knowingly produce, transfer, or possess unauthorized authentication features. Such authentication features would include any hologram, watermark, symbol, code, or image used by an issuing authority on an identification document to verify that the document is authentic. The enrolled bill would also make it a crime to knowingly traffic in false authentication features for use in false identification documents, document-making implements, or means of identification. The enrolled bill would also provide that, in addition to a fine and imprisonment, violators of these provisions would be subject to the forfeiture and destruction of all illicit authentication features, identification documents, document-making implements, or means of identification.

Illicit Drug Anti-Proliferation Act. Under current law, unless specifically authorized, it is unlawful to knowingly open or maintain any place for the purpose of manufacturing, distributing, or using any controlled substance. It is also unlawful to manage or control any place as an owner, lessee, agent, employee, or mortgagee, and knowing and intentionally make the place available for the purpose of unlawfully manufacturing, storing, distributing, or using a controlled substance. The enrolled bill would clarify that this provision of the law: (1) applies to both permanent and temporary management or control of a place; and (2) also applies to occupants of a place. The enrolled bill would also provide that, in addition to being subject to criminal penalties, any person violating this provision would be subject to a civil penalty of not more than the greater of $250,000 or two times the gross receipts, either known or estimated, that were derived from each offense that is attributable to a defendant.

The enrolled bill would require the United States Sentencing Commission to: (1) review the Federal sentencing guidelines with respect to offenses involving gamma hydroxybutyric acid (GHB) (a controlled substance often used to facilitate sexual assault); and (2) consider amending the Federal sentencing guidelines to provide for increased penalties to reflect the seriousness of offenses involving GHB and the need to deter them.

The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations of $5.9 million to the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) of the Justice Department for hiring a special agent in each State to serve as a Demand Reduction Coordinator. The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations to DEA of such sums as may be necessary to educate youth, parents, and other interested adults about club drugs. Your FY 2004 Budget did not include funding for DEA to hire a special agent in each State to serve as a Demand Reduction Coordinator.

include the development or enhancement of electronic message boards and the placement of additional signage along highways. The Federal share of the cost of any activities funded by a grant under the program could not exceed 80 percent. The bill would authorize appropriations of $20 million for FY 2004 for the Department of Transportation to carry out this grant program. Your FY 2004 Budget proposed no specific funding for AMBER Alert activities within the Department of Transportation, but funds from the Department's Federal Highway Administration's Research and Development programs are eligible for such activities.

Grant Program for Support of AMBER Alert Communications Plans. The bill would require the Department of Justice to carry out a program to provide grants to States for the development or enhancement of programs and activities for the support of AMBER Alert communications plans. Activities funded by grants could include education and training programs and law enforcement programs. The Federal share of the cost of any activities funded by a grant could not exceed 50 percent. The bill would authorize appropriations of $5 million for FY 2004 for the Department of Justice to carry this out this grant program and an additional $5 million for grants to States for the development and implementation of new technologies to improve AMBER Alert communications. Your Budget proposed $2.5 million in FY 2004 for AMBER Alert activities.

Increased Sanctions and New Offenses for Crimes Against Children

Two Strikes You're Out. The enrolled bill would establish a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment for certain twice-convicted child sex offenders. The bill would provide for a mandatory minimum sentence of life imprisonment for any person convicted of a "Federal sex offense" if they had previously been convicted of a similar offense under either Federal or State law. A Federal sex offense would include offenses committed against a person under the age of 17 years and involving the crimes of sexual abuse, aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse of a minor, abusive sexual contact, and the interstate transportation of minors for sexual purposes.

Post-Release Supervision of Sex Offenders. Under current law, the maximum period of post-release supervision is generally five years. The enrolled bill would extend the authorized term of supervised release to a maximum of life for any offenses involving kidnapping of a minor, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation and other abuse of children, transportation for illegal sexual activity and related crimes, or sex trafficking of children.

Presumption Against Pretrial Release. The enrolled bill would provide for a rebuttable presumption that a person charged with specified offenses involving minor victims, including child kidnapping or sex trafficking of children, would not be eligible for pre-trial release.

First Degree Murder in Cases Involving Children. The enrolled bill would add "child abuse" and "a pattern or practice of assault or torture against a child or children" that results in murder as predicates for first degree murder. Under current law, first degree murder can include murder committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, certain crimes including kidnapping, aggravated sexual abuse, and sexual abuse. The bill would define "child" as a person who has not attained the age of 18 years and is: (1) under the perpetrator's care or control; or (2) at least six years younger than the perpetrator. The bill would define "child abuse" as intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causing death or serious bodily injury to a child and "pattern or practice of assault or torture" as assault or torture engaged in on at least two occasions.

Attempt Liability For International Parental Kidnapping. The enrolled bill would amend current law, which prohibits removing a child from the United States with intent to obstruct the lawful exercise of parental rights. The enrolled bill would also make it a crime to attempt to remove a child from the United States with the intent to obstruct the lawful exercise of parental rights.

Penalties Against Sex Tourism. Current law requires the government to prove that a person who travels to foreign countries and engages in illicit sexual relations with a minor traveled with the intent to engage in the illegal activity. The enrolled bill would provide that the government would only have to prove that the defendant engaged in illicit sexual conduct with a minor while in a foreign country. The bill would also criminalize the actions of sex tour operators by prohibiting entities from arranging, inducing, procuring, or facilitating the travel of a person, for commercial advantage or financial gain, knowing that such person is traveling in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of engaging in illicit sexual conduct. Defendants convicted of these crimes would be subject to up to 30 years imprisonment.

Child Pornography and Obscenity

Prohibition of Virtual Child Pornography. The enrolled bill would amend the definitions, in the chapter in the Federal criminal code prohibiting sexual exploitation of children, of: (1) "child pornography" to include a visual depiction that is a digital, computer, or computer-generated image that is, or is indistinguishable from, that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct; and (2) "sexually explicit conduct" to include, for purposes of such depictions, graphic or lascivious simulated sexual intercourse, bestiality, masturbation, sadistic or masochistic abuse, or exhibition of the genitals or pubic area of any person. For purposes of these definitions, the enrolled bill would define "graphic" to mean a depiction of sexually explicit conduct in which a viewer can observe any part of the genitals or pubic area of any depicted person or animal during any part of the time that the sexually explicit conduct is being depicted, and "indistinguishable" to mean a depiction that is virtually indistinguishable such that an ordinary person would conclude that it is of an actual minor engaged in explicit conduct. This latter definition would not apply to depictions that are drawings, cartoons, sculptures, or paintings depicting minors or adults.

The enrolled bill would also amend provisions governing what constitutes an affirmative defense to: (1) include that the alleged child pornography was not produced using any actual minors; and (2) prohibit a defendant from asserting an affirmative defense unless specified notice is provided to the court and the United States prior to commencement of the trial.

The enrolled bill would provide for severability by specifying that, if any of its provisions are held unconstitutional, the remainder of the bill would not be affected by such a holding.

Materials Constituting or Containing Child Pornography. The enrolled bill would amend the Federal criminal code provisions regarding child pornography to prohibit knowingly: (1) advertising, promoting, presenting, distributing, or soliciting through the mails or in interstate or foreign commerce any material in a manner that reflects the belief, or that is intended to cause another to believe, that it contains an obscene visual depiction of a minor, or a visual depiction of an actual minor, engaging in sexually explicit conduct; and (2) offering or providing to a minor any visual depiction that is, or appears to be, of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of inducing or persuading the minor to participate in any illegal activity.

Visual Representations of Sexual Abuse of Children. The enrolled bill would prohibit knowingly producing, distributing, receiving, or possessing an obscene visual representation of the sexual abuse of children. These provisions would cover a visual depiction of any kind (including a drawing, cartoon, sculpture, or painting) that: (1) depicts a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct and is obscene; or (2) depicts an image that is, or appears to be, of a minor engaging in graphic bestiality, sadistic or masochistic abuse, or sexual intercourse, and lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

Extraterritorial Production of Child Pornography. The enrolled bill would make it a crime to employ, use, persuade, induce, entice, or coerce a minor to engage in, or have a minor assist any other person to engage in, sexually explicit conduct outside of the United States in order to produce any visual depiction of such conduct for transport to the United States by any means, including by computer or mail.

Recordkeeping Requirements. Under current law, whoever produces any book, magazine, periodical, film, videotape, or other matter which contains visual depictions of actual sexually explicit conduct for use in interstate or foreign commerce is required to create and maintain individually identifiable records pertaining to every performer portrayed in such visual depictions. The enrolled bill would specify that the record-keeping requirements also apply to production of computer-generated images, digital images, and pictures of such visual depictions. The enrolled bill would also increase penalties for violations of record-keeping requirements. Within one year after enactment of the enrolled bill, Justice would have to submit a report to the Congress detailing the number of times since January 1993 that the Department has inspected records of producers of materials that contain visual depictions of actual sexually explicit conduct. The report would also have to include the number of violations prosecuted as a result of inspections.

Sentencing Guidelines

Composition of the Sentencing Commission. The United States Sentencing Commission is an independent commission in the Judicial branch that establishes sentencing policies and practices for the Federal criminal justice system. The Commission consists of seven voting members and two non-voting members -- the Attorney General and the chair of the U.S. Parole Commission. The President appoints the voting members of the Commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Under current law, "at least three of the members" must be Federal judges. The enrolled bill would amend this provision such that "not more than 3 of the members" could be Federal judges. There are currently five voting members on the Commission, including three Federal judges and two vacancies.

Review of All Departures from Sentencing Guidelines. The enrolled bill would require a district court, when imposing a particular sentence, to provide reasons for the sentence imposed not only in open court, but with specificity in a written order, except to the extent the court relies upon statements received in camera in accordance with Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. If a sentence that is outside the applicable guideline range is appealed, the court of appeals would be required to determine whether the sentence departs from the guidelines for impermissible or unjustifiable reasons or to an unreasonable degree. In making this determination, the court of appeals would be required to review de novo the district court's application of the guidelines to the facts.

If a court of appeals determines that the district court imposed a sentence that is outside the applicable guideline range and the district court failed to provide a written statement of reasons for the sentence imposed, the departure is based on an impermissible factor, or the sentence was imposed for an offense for which there is no applicable sentencing guideline and is plainly unreasonable, the court of appeals would be required to state specific reasons for its conclusions. If the appeals court determines that the sentence is too high or too low, the court would be required to set aside the sentence and remand the case to the district court with appropriate instructions for further sentencing proceedings. However, the district court would not be permitted to impose a sentence outside the applicable guidelines range except on a ground that was: (1) included in the written statement of reasons for its decision prior to the appeal; and (2) was held by the court of appeals to be a permissible ground for departure.

Reporting Requirements. The enrolled bill would require the Chief Judge of each district court to ensure that, within 30 days following entry of judgment in every criminal case, the sentencing court submits to the Sentencing Commission a written report of the sentence. The Sentencing Commission would be required to make available, upon request, to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees, the written reports and all underlying records accompanying the reports. The enrolled bill would require the Sentencing Commission to submit to the Congress at least annually an analysis of these documents, any recommendations for legislation that the Sentencing Commission concludes is warranted by the analysis, and an accounting of the districts the Commission believes have not submitted appropriate information and documents. In addition, the enrolled bill would require the Sentencing Commission to make available to the Department of Justice, upon request, files that the Commission may assemble or maintain in electronic form that include any information submitted by district courts, including the identity of a sentencing judge.

Report by the Department of Justice on Downward Departures. For each case in which a district court grants a downward departure, other than cases involving downward departure for substantial assistance to authorities, the enrolled bill would require the Department of Justice to submit a report within 15 days to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees setting forth: (1) the identity of the district court judge; (2) the district court's stated reasons; and (3) the position of parties with respect to the downward departure decision. Within five days of any decision by the Solicitor General regarding authorization of an appeal of the departure, the Attorney General would be required to submit a report to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees describing the basis for the decision.

Sentencing Commission Review of Downward Departure. The enrolled bill would require the Sentencing Commission, within 180 days of enactment, to review the grounds of downward departure that are authorized by the sentencing guidelines, policy statements, and official commentary of the Commission, and to promulgate appropriate amendments to the sentencing guidelines, policy statements, and official commentary to ensure that incidents of downward departures are substantially reduced.

Other Provisions of S. 151

Attachment

Public Outreach

National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC). The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations of $20 million for each of FYs 2004 and 2005 to the NCMEC. Under current law, appropriations of $10 million are authorized for each of FYs 2000 through 2003. The enrolled bill would authorize officers and agents of the Secret Service, under the direction of the Department of Homeland Security, to provide forensic and investigative assistance in support of any investigation involving missing or exploited children, at the request of State or local law enforcement agencies or the NCMEC. The enrolled bill would amend the Missing Children's Assistance Act to provide that one of the uses of the annual Justice grant to the NCMEC would be to coordinate the operation of the Cyber Tipline to provide online users an effective means of reporting Internet-related child sexual exploitation, including distribution of child pornography, online enticement of children for sexual acts, and child prostitution. The enrolled bill would provide the NCMEC civil immunity arising out of any action in connection with activity it undertakes with, or at the direction of, a Federal law enforcement agency.

Service Provider Reporting and Disclosure of Stored Communications. The enrolled bill would amend: (1) the Federal criminal code to include, as an exception to the prohibition against the disclosure of the contents of a communication by an electronic communication service, disclosures to the Cyber Tip Line of the NCMEC; and (2) the Victims of Child Abuse Act of 1990 to authorize disclosure of child pornography by an electronic communication service provider and by the NCMEC to State or local officials for the purpose of enforcing State criminal law.

Sex Offender Apprehension Program. The enrolled bill would add, to the list of authorized objectives for the Justice Department's public safety and community policing grants, assistance to States in enforcing a requirement that a convicted sex offender register his or her address with a State or local law enforcement agency and be subject to criminal prosecution for failure to comply.

Missing Children Procedures in Public Buildings. Within 180 days of enactment, the specified authority for any building owned or leased for use by a Federal agency would have to establish procedures for locating any child under the age of 18 years that is missing in the building. These procedures would have to provide, at a minimum, for the following: (1) notifying security personnel that a child is missing; (2) obtaining a detailed description of the child, including name, age, eye and hair color, height, weight, clothing, and shoes; (3) issuing a Code Adam alert (i.e., a set of procedures used to alert employees and other users of a public building that a child is missing) and providing a description of the child, using a fast and effective means of communication; (4) establishing a central point of contact; (5) monitoring all points of egress from the building while a Code Adam alert is in effect; (6) conducting a thorough search of the building; (7) contacting local law enforcement; and (8) documenting the incident.

Child Advocacy Center Grants. The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations to the Justice Department of $15 million for each of FYs 2004 and 2005 for grants for Regional and Local Children's Advocacy Centers. These centers are intended to improve the resources available to children and families and to assist in the development and implementation of multidisciplinary child abuse investigation and prosecution programs. In addition, the enrolled bill would authorize appropriations of $5 million for each of FYs 2004 and 2005 for grants to national organizations to provide technical assistance and training to attorneys and others instrumental in the criminal prosecution of child abuse cases in State or Federal courts in order to improve the quality of these prosecutions. Your FY 2004 Budget does not include specific funding earmarked for grants to these organizations, but will provide support to organizations, which provide training to law enforcement officers and investigators working on missing and exploited children cases.

Reporting Missing Children. Under current law, law enforcement agencies are required to report missing children under the age of 18 to the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) of the Department of Justice. The enrolled bill would require law enforcement agencies to report missing children under the age of 21 to NCIC.

Transitional Housing Assistance Grants. The enrolled bill would establish in the Department of Justice a transitional housing assistance grant program to provide funds to State and local governments, Indian tribes, and other organizations to carry out programs to provide assistance to minors, adults, and their dependents: (1) who are homeless, or in need of transitional housing or other housing assistance, as a result of fleeing a situation of domestic violence; and (2) for whom emergency shelter services or other crisis intervention services are unavailable or insufficient. The enrolled bill would authorize appropriations of $30 million for each of FYs 2004 through 2008 for this grant program, of which not more than three percent may be used by Justice for salaries and administrative expenses.

Increased Sanctions for Crimes Against Children

Sexual Abuse Penalties. The enrolled bill would increase the maximum and minimum penalties for crimes related to sexual exploitation of children and sex trafficking of children.

Stronger Penalties Against Kidnapping. The enrolled bill would direct the United States Sentencing Commission to increase the base offense level for kidnapping from level 24 (51 to 63 months) to level 32 (121 to 151 months). The bill would also delete a provision in the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines that rewards kidnappers for releasing the victim within 24 hours by reducing the base offense level by one point. Also, under current law, if a defendant sexually exploits the kidnapping victim, then the defendant's base offense level is increased by three levels. The bill would increase the base offense level by six levels under these circumstances. Finally, the enrolled bill would provide for a mandatory minimum sentence of 20 years if the victim of a non-family kidnapping is under the age of 18.

Enhanced Penalties for Repeat Offenders. The enrolled bill would make persons previously convicted of obscenity or members of uniformed services previously convicted of sexual assault subject to enhanced recidivist penalties for child pornography, sexual abuse, and transportation for illegal sexual activity.

Increased Penalties for Use of Minors in Crimes of Violence. Any individual who is 18 years of age or older, who intentionally employs, hires, persuades, induces, entices, or coerces a person under 18 years of age to commit a crime of violence, or to assist in avoiding detection or apprehension for such an offense, would, for the first conviction, be subject to twice the maximum term of imprisonment and twice the maximum fine that would otherwise be authorized for the offense. For each subsequent conviction, an individual would be subject to three times the maximum term of imprisonment and three times the maximum fine that would otherwise be authorized for the offense. Under current law, a crime of violence is defined as: (1) an offense that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, or (2) any other offense that is a felony and that, by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.

Pilot Program for Criminal History Background Checks. The enrolled bill would establish pilot programs for conducting criminal history background checks and require the Justice Department to study the current state of fingerprinting technology and the capacity of Federal and state governments to perform these checks. The first pilot program would permit certain specified volunteer organizations designated in three States selected by the Attorney General to request State and Federal criminal background checks on their volunteers. The second pilot program would authorize three designated volunteer organizations to receive 100,000 Federal criminal background checks, equally allocated, to determine whether potential volunteers are fit to work with children. Each pilot program would last for 18 months. The enrolled bill would require the Attorney General to report to Congress on the implementation of the pilot programs at their conclusion.

Enhanced Investigations and Prosecutions

Interception of Communications. The enrolled bill would expand the list of crimes for which Federal law enforcement officials may obtain authorization to intercept wire, oral, or electronic communications in a criminal investigation to specified sex crimes against children, including sex trafficking, selling or buying of children, sexual exploitation, transportation for illegal sexual activity, and production of sexually explicit depictions of a minor for importation into the United States.

Elimination of Statute of Limitations for Child Abduction and Sex Crimes. Under current law, the statute of limitations applicable to most Federal crimes is five years, although prosecutions are not barred for offenses involving the sexual or physical abuse of a child under the age of 18 years before the child victim reaches the age of 25 years. The enrolled bill would provide that a prosecution may be instituted at any time during the life of the child victim for cases of sexual or physical abuse, or kidnapping.

Authorization of "John Doe/DNA" Indictments in Sexual Abuse Cases. Current law provides that a person cannot be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any non-capital offense unless an indictment is issued within five years of the date the offense was committed. The enrolled bill would provide that in any indictment for an offense involving sexual abuse for which the identity of the perpetrator is unknown, it is sufficient to describe the accused as an individual whose name is unknown, but who has a particular DNA profile. As a result, this provision would allow prosecution of a perpetrator identified through the DNA profile at a later date.

Brett: I understand through the rumor mill that you are one of the people who has been asked to look at S.887, the Kyl-Cornyn attorneys fee bill. I have also heard that some business groups have expressed concern that the bill sets a precedent for having the IRS regulate businessmen's salaries. To address this issue, I've written a memo (attached) that explains that the bill has courts, not the IRS, apply the fee formula to mass-tort attorneys. (This is one of the parts of the original Horowitz bill that Senator Kyl has changed.) The memo also quotes authorities making clear that courts have always distinguished lawyers, as fiduciaries, from ordinary businessmen, and that lawyers already are subject to ethical rules requiring them to charge only reasonable fees. The memo contains at the end the portion of Senator Kyl's speech addressing this issue in greater depth.

As for the question of how the tax purists will receive ISCRAA: Americans for Tax Reform is with us. ATR sent out a legislative alert to Senate offices yesterday declaring that it "strongly supports passage of S. 887." I am working with ATR (and other groups) to persuade state governors to ask their Senators to cosponsor the bill.

Additionally, I have included with this email our basic information packet on ISCRAA, and, for completeness, Senators Kyl and Cornyn's full, footnoted speeches introducing S.887. Senator Kyl's speech addresses issues of access to justice, freedom of contract, why ISCRAA will apply to only a few cases a year, and retrospective effect. Senator Cornyn's speech addresses (at the end) the issue of why the excessive portion of an attorneys fee is the property of (and must be restored to) the client. The bulk of Senator Cornyn's speech addresses the gross corruption involved in the tobacco settlement fee awards.

Please do not hesitate to call me if you have any questions about how ISCRAA works or any other aspect of the bill. We plan to try to do this bill on reconciliation, meaning that it will only need 50 votes. By our head count, it will be decided by just a few votes. How the Administration comes down could very well be decisive for this bill - and whether we allow 20 billionaire tort lawyers to turn this country into the ATLA version of post-Soviet Russia.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>1</sup>

- “There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>2</sup>
- “[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees.”<sup>3</sup>

King*, 975 F.Supp. 1147 (N.D.Ind.1997) (“there are legal rules that limit the ability of a lawyer and her client to contract freely. Erickson*, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) (“A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client”).

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- “Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so ‘clearly excessive’ as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules.”<sup>5</sup>
- “[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client’s challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside.”<sup>7</sup>
- “Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law.”<sup>8</sup>

- “Under a court’s general supervisory power over attorneys as officers of the court, attorney fee contracts are subject to scrutiny for the reasonableness of their terms.”<sup>9</sup>
- “[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny.”<sup>10</sup>
- “As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney’s fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client.”<sup>11</sup>

[From Senator Kyl’s speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>13</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>14</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>15</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>16</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is ‘a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>17</sup>

“There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>18</sup>

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’ fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

<sup>18</sup>Kuhnlein v. Department of Revenue, 662 So.2d 309, 313 (Fla. 1995) (emphasis added). See also Gruber & Coabella, P.A. v. Erickson, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."<sup>20</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."<sup>21</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client."<sup>1</sup>

- "There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."<sup>2</sup>

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that "a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable." Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney "shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee." The Model Code further explains that an attorney's fee is "clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, "all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees."<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- "Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so 'clearly excessive' as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules."<sup>5</sup>
- "[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness."<sup>6</sup>
- "[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client's challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside."<sup>7</sup>
- "Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law."<sup>8</sup>
- "Under a court's general supervisory power over attorneys as officers of the court, attorney fee contracts are subject to scrutiny for the reasonableness of their terms."<sup>9</sup>

[From Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys' rights to freedom of contract.

The first principle to keep in mind when questions of attorneys fees are considered is that "a fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law between attorney and client."<sup>12</sup> (Illinois Supreme Court.) As one academic commentator has noted:

"[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise 'professional judgement' on the client's behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client's interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed."<sup>13</sup>

The lawyer's status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. "An attorney's freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations."<sup>14</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) "In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts."<sup>15</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) "As a result of lawyers' special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts."<sup>16</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is 'a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.' ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12."<sup>17</sup>

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

"There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation."<sup>18</sup>

In order to protect the lawyer's public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. "[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an 'unreasonable' fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client." G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

"[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."<sup>19</sup>

"Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."<sup>20</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA: The Kyl-Cornyn Bill to Enforce Fiduciary Attorney Fee Standards in Mass Tort Litigation

The Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act (ISCRAA) allows attorneys fees of no more than 500% of reasonable hourly rates in lawsuits resulting in judgments greater than $100 million. ISCRAA uses an existing provision of the tax code to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. To avoid punitive tax rates, an attorney would be required to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the client. Because ISCRAA applies to current and future fees paid pursuant to the state Medicaid tobacco litigation settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states.

ISCRAA's Benefits:

- Limiting speculative, fee-driven mass tort litigation. The current mass-tort litigation crisis is driven in large part by the enormous and unethical fees commanded by some plaintiffs' attorneys. Because their fees are so grossly disproportionate to their actual efforts, these lawyers can pursue even speculative lawsuits that lack a legitimate foundation – even only an occasional victory produces massive profits. By requiring that fees be proportional to attorneys' actual work, ISCRAA inevitably will limit this type of litigation.
- Enforcing Pre-existing Fiduciary Standards. Attorneys undisputedly are fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation flowing from this status – a requirement that is established in the attorney ethics rules of all 50 states – is that a lawyer must not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts traditionally read a reasonableness requirement into every attorneys fee contract. ISCRAA does not change this pre-existing obligation – it simply makes the duty enforceable in large lawsuits.
- Helping the States. Because it applies to the fees still being paid in the state tobacco settlement, ISCRAA will restore approximately $9 billion to the states. Tobacco companies will pay the same amount – but continuing excess fees will be restored to the clients (the states), not to lawyers who violated their fiduciary duties. Under ISCRAA, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. Our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.
- Guaranteeing Mass-Tort Plaintiffs Access to Counsel. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA protects fiduciary interests, while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in large lawsuits.

II. ACCESS TO JUSTICE

Won't ISCRAA's fee formula prevent poor plaintiffs in large cases from being able to get a lawyer? Won't lawyers refuse to take case under ISCRAA's fee formula?

Short answer: ISCRAA is more generous than existing formulas used by courts. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs' lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA's fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts' practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers' professional associations.

- Federal courts almost never award a multiplier greater than 300% in $100 million cases:

In 2001, the Third Circuit “set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used.”<sup>8</sup> (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and “the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99.” And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.<sup>9</sup>

- Example (of excellent service provided despite applicability of lodestar formula):

In re Sumitomo Copper Litig., 74 F. Supp. 2d 393 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). This RICO and Commodities Exchange Act case resulted in a recovery for the clients of $116 million. The attorneys reviewed millions of pages of documents located throughout the world, many of which had to be translated from Japanese. The federal district court awarded a multiplier of 250%, for a total fee of $32 million.

III. RETROSPECTIVE EFFECT

Isn't ISCRAA an unfairly retrospective change in the law? If these fees were legal when they were agreed to, why should we change them now?

Short answer: ISCRAA only enforces a liberal interpretation of pre-existing standards.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer's fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>10</sup> (Emphasis added.)

Tobacco lawyers still get 2.5 billion dollars under ISCRAA. Additionally, ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the tobacco settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. No tobacco lawyer will go broke because of this bill. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

IV. WHO OWNS THE FEE?

If a lawyer's fee award is unethical or excessive, wouldn't it go back to the defendant? Some of the tobacco lawyers argue that the money can't go back to the states. Wouldn't the lawyers money go back to the tobacco companies?

Short answer: Fee awards are the property of the client. The courts have made very clear that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured. Any other rule would invite collusion between the defendants and the plaintiffs' lawyers. Courts repeatedly have recognized that defendants would be more than happy to agree to higher plaintiffs' lawyers fee awards in exchange for a lower recovery from the plaintiffs. A number of commentators have noted that this is exactly what happened in the tobacco settlement. In recognition of the legal principle that a fee award belongs to the client – and that an excessive fee must be restored to the client – ISCRAA specifically provides that excess tobacco settlement attorneys fees shall be restored to the states.

- “The allowance of attorney fees in a judgment gives the attorneys no interest and ownership in the judgment to the extent of the amount of the fee allowed, but the judgment in its entirety is the property of the client. The award for fees is for the client, not the attorney.”<sup>11</sup>
- “[A] defendant is interested only in disposing of the total claims asserted against it, and the allocation between the [plaintiff's] payment and the attorneys' fees is of little or no interest to the defense. Moreover, the divergence in class members' and class counsel's financial incentives creates the danger that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than-optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees.”<sup>12</sup>
- “To the tobacco companies, dollars are dollars, whether paid to states or paid to lawyers. So the real amount on the bargaining table was not the $246 billion that the states settled for, but a larger sum, including the amount to be paid to the attorneys. * * * * Stated simply, because dollars are fungible, the fees are coming out of the settlements.”<sup>13</sup>

V. FEDERALISM

Why should the federal government be regulating attorneys fees in large lawsuits brought in state court? Isn't this purely a state matter?

Short answer: $100 million lawsuits, by their sheer size alone, substantially affect interstate commerce, and are a proper subject of congress's power to regulate and protect commerce between states. It is well-established that "Congress' commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress's power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

What Plaintiffs' Lawyers and Anti-Tobacco Activists Are Saying About the Tobacco-Settlement Attorneys Fees:

There is widespread agreement that the fees awarded in the tobacco settlement are excessive and unreasonable. Perhaps the most damning indictments come from those who took the plaintiffs' side in this litigation – including from plaintiffs lawyers themselves.

- For example, Michael Ciresi, a pioneer in the tobacco litigation who represented the state of Minnesota in its lawsuit, and who is no doubt familiar with what these lawsuits actually require, has said that the Texas, Florida, and Mississippi lawyers' fee awards "are far in excess of these lawyers' contribution to any of the state results."<sup>1</sup>
- Similarly, former Food and Drug Administration Commissioner David Kessler, another leader in the fight against tobacco, has said that the states' private lawyers "did a real service, but I think the fee is outrageous. All the legal fees are out control."<sup>2</sup>
- Washington, D.C. lawyer and tobacco-industry opponent John Coale has denounced the fee awards as "beyond human comprehension" and stated that "the work does not justify them."<sup>3</sup>
- Even the Association of American Trial Lawyers, the nation's premier representative of the plaintiffs bar, has condemned attorneys fees requested in the state tobacco settlement. The President of ATLA has noted:

"Common sense suggests that a one billion dollar fee is excessive and unreasonable and certainly should invite the scrutiny [of the courts]. [ATLA] generally refrains from expressing an institutional opinion regarding a particular fee in a particular case, but we have a strong negative reaction to reports that at least one attorney on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Florida case is seeking a fee in excess of one billion dollars."<sup>4</sup>

This letter, written in 1997, only concerned one of the Florida lawyers' request for attorneys fees. Ultimately, Florida's private counsel was awarded a total of $3.4 billion in fees. These statements demonstrate beyond all doubt that there is real abuse going on here, and that the victim of this abuse is the client, the plaintiff – and not the defendant.

- Perhaps the best gloss on the tobacco fee awards is that provided by Professor Lester Brickman, a professor of law at Cardozo Law School and noted authority on legal ethics and attorneys fees. Professor Brickman has stated:

“Under the rules of legal ethics, promulgated partly as a justification for the legal profession's self-governance, fees cannot be ‘clearly excessive.’ Indeed, that standard has now been superseded in most states by an even more rigorous standard: fees have to be ‘reasonable.’ Are these fees, which in many cases amount to effective hourly rates of return of tens of thousands – and even hundreds of thousands – of dollars an hour, reasonable? I think to ask the question is to answer it.”<sup>5</sup>

The attorneys fees awarded in the state tobacco settlement are simply indefensible. And the process by which the fees were awarded partly explains how they came to be so. Outside counsel fees were determined by a private arbitration panel established by the Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) that resolved 46 of the states' litigation. (Four other states had settled their suits earlier. Their lawyers, however, also were paid out of the accounts created by the MSA.) Amazingly, the settlement agreement explicitly immunized all fee awards from judicial review. Even more amazingly, one of the three arbitrators who made the awards had a clear conflict of interests: he was the father of a South Carolina lawyer whose law firm has received the largest fee awards of all, believed to amount to over $2 billion. Another one of the arbitrators had no background in fee arbitrations or any related matter, and simply ignored the law in order to make outrageous awards, using the salaries of sports stars and entertainers as a basis of measure. The third arbitrator, a retired federal judge appointed by President Carter, dissented from the key fee decisions.

ISCRAA: RESTITUTION TO THE STATES

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the plaintiffs' attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

Here is how much each state can expect to recover:

RESPONSES TO LIKELY ARGUMENTS AGAINST ISCRAA

I. FREEDOM OF CONTRACT

I. Shouldn't lawyers have freedom of contract to set whatever fee they can persuade a client to agree to? Why are we singling out lawyers for regulation and not CEOs?

Short answer: Attorneys are fiduciaries whose fee contracts have always been subject to reasonableness requirements. Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation.

ISCRAA is very generous – even by CEO standards. ISCRAA's fee formula still permits lawyers fees that would make many CEOs envious. In the tobacco litigation, many of the plaintiffs' lawyers filed claims that they have worked tens of thousands of hours. ISCRAA would allow reasonable hourly rates – which run as high as $500 an hour in large cities – to be multiplied by up to 500%. This translates into attorneys fees of tens of millions of dollars. Not bad, considering that many of the tobacco settlement lawyers worked on their cases for just one or two years.

Legal Standards

- As one court has stated:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>6</sup>

contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees."<sup>7</sup>

Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) ("A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client").

SENATOR KYL INTRODUCTION OF ISCRAA

Mr. KYL: I rise today to introduce the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA). This legislation will restore to the states billions of dollars in revenue due to them from a massive lawsuit recently conducted on their behalf – the tobacco-related Medicaid expenses litigation. ISCRAA amends an existing provision of the federal tax code in order to enforce basic, universally accepted fiduciary standards governing the award of attorneys fees. By applying these standards to the attorneys who represented the states in the tobacco settlement, ISCRAA reasonably can be expected to restore to the states income with a present value of approximately $9 billion. I have included at the end of my statement a chart detailing how much each state can expect to recover.

ISCRAA's tax formula is borrowed from the 1996 Tax Act's Intermediate Sanctions Tax (IST), which applies a two-step excise tax to any excessive or unreasonable compensation that the managers of a trust pay to themselves from the assets of the trust. The IST framework encourages the trustee to restore the excessive portion of any fee to the trust – when he does so, the IST's punitive taxes do not apply.

ISCRAA extends the IST to another type of trust relationship: that between a lawyer and his client. ISCRAA applies the IST tax formula to any unreasonable or excessive income that a lawyer collects from litigation resulting in a judgment or settlement in excess of $100 million. To avoid IST taxes, an attorney must restore the excessive portion of the fee to the client.

As my colleague Senator CORNYN will explain today, the ethical and legal abuses that resulted from the 1998 state tobacco settlement make the need for this legislation manifest. Senator CORNYN also will discuss the law of attorneys' fiduciary obligations, which establishes that a fee award is the property of the client – and that any unethical fee must be restored to the client, regardless of how the fee award is structured.

I will discuss today how ISCRAA will affect massive litigations generally. In order to gauge the reasonableness of a lawyer's fee award, ISCRAA adopts and codifies a liberal version of the lodestar-multiplier system. As I will later explain in greater detail, ISCRAA allows fee multipliers of up to 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This limit is as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and considerably more generous than the limits that federal courts have applied in $100 million cases. ISCRAA's fee formula guarantees that attorneys' fiduciary obligations will be respected, while providing plaintiffs lawyers with ample incentive to provide high-quality legal representation in these types of cases.

Massive Litigations and the Prospect of Tax Farming

Federal supervision of fee awards resulting from $100 million litigations is appropriate for several reasons. First, because of their sheer size, these types of lawsuits inevitably operate as a tax on the consuming public. Few defendants actually can afford to pay such judgments with fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. “Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented.”<sup>29</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) “If an attorney’s fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is ‘clearly excessive’ * * * even though the client consented to such fee.”<sup>30</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney’s dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney’s fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

ISCRAA’s Effective Date

Another subject that I would like to address today is ISCRAA’s effective date. ISCRAA applies to attorney fee payments received after June 1, 2002. This effective date is appropriate under the circumstances of the state tobacco settlement for several reasons: first, Congress routinely enacts major tax legislation with effective dates that look back much further than does ISCRAA. The Supreme Court has “repeatedly upheld [such moderately] retroactive tax

Second, ISCRAA is not even truly retroactive. ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorneys fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>31</sup> (Emphasis added.)

As I described earlier, to enforce fiduciary standards, ISCRAA codifies and applies a very generous version of the fee multiplier system, allowing attorneys fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. This is considerably more generous than what federal courts typically allow in large-judgment cases. No attorney can be heard to complain that he is subjected to a law that is more generous than his existing fiduciary obligations.

Further, none of the tobacco-settlement attorneys can reasonably maintain that they have a vested right to see their fiduciary duties to the states go unenforced. Nevertheless, in order to be fair to all parties, ISCRAA’s excise taxes are applied only to fees that were paid after June 1, 2002. By this date, all of the tobacco lawyers twice had received notice from George W. Bush that he intended to enact legislation to enforce their fiduciary obligations. In February 2000, then-candidate Bush promised that he would “extend[] the ‘excess benefits’ provision of the tax code to private lawyers who contract with states and municipalities,” with “the reasonableness of the fees * * * [to] be determined by the standard judicial ‘lodestar’ method.” And as early as February 2001, the current Administration announced that it anticipated providing “additional public health resources for the States from the President’s proposal to extend fiduciary responsibilities to the representatives of States in tobacco lawsuits.” See A BLUEPRINT FOR NEW BEGINNINGS: A RESPONSIBLE BUDGET FOR AMERICA’S PRIORITIES 80, Office of Management and Budget, February 28, 2001.

Under ISCRAA, all of the attorneys who participated in the state tobacco settlement still will be very liberally compensated. Because ISCRAA does not apply to the first three-and-a-half years of fee payments under the settlement, it exempts the first two-and-a-half billion dollars that these lawyers received. Every one of the tobacco lawyers will have more than enough money left to pay for the yachts, luxury cars, and vacation homes that were purchased with the tobacco proceeds. ISCRAA might simply be described as the one-yacht-per-lawyer rule.

State Recovery of Excess MSA Payments

But most importantly, because ISCRAA applies to the last year's worth of tobacco fee payments, and to all future payments, it will return a substantial amount of funds to the states – money that already should belong to the states under any reasonable interpretation of fiduciary standards. It is critical that these funds be restored in this time of widespread fiscal crisis. Today a large number of the states face massive budget deficits that threaten their ability to provide health care to the indigent, to fully fund public education, and to guarantee adequate and effective law enforcement. When such needs risk going unmet, fee abuses that cost the states billions of dollars simply can no longer be ignored. The states must receive their fair share of the tobacco settlement proceeds – funds that are badly needed to support basic public services.

Under the terms of the November 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) between the states and tobacco companies, $500 million in cigarette taxes is set aside every year to pay the attorneys who chose to have their fees awarded in arbitration. Because extraordinarily high fees were awarded by the arbitrators – estimated to total $15 billion – the $500-million-a-year income stream (which is not adjusted for inflation) may have to be paid in perpetuity. In addition to this annuity, the MSA also sets aside an additional $1.25 billion in cigarette taxes to compensate those lawyers who choose to forego arbitration and negotiate their fees directly with the tobacco companies.

The present value of the $500-million-a-year fee stream – discounting all future payments for the time value of money – has been conservatively estimated at just over $8 billion. Current and future payments from the $1.25 billion fee fund are less certain, since the grants made from that fund and their disbursement schedule have been kept obscure from the public. Because ISCRAA's effective date is June 1, 2002, ISCRAA will probably recoup for the states an additional $1 billion above the present value of future $500 million-a-year payments. ISCRAA does not affect the first three-and-a-half years of fees paid under the MSA. Because these payments almost certainly are adequate to pay all reasonable fees incurred in the litigation, ISCRAA would restore to the states virtually all fees paid after its effective date. Thus the net present value of the sums that ISCRAA would provide to the states can conservatively be estimated at $9 billion.

By restoring these excess fee payments to the states' MSA escrow account and returning them to the states on a per capita basis, ISCRAA guarantees every state a very substantial recovery. Based on the estimates that I have described, even our nation's smallest state, Wyoming, would recoup at least $15 million in tobacco fee payments, and other small states, such as North Dakota, would receive approximately $20 million. On the other hand, our nation's largest state, California, can expect to recoup at least $1 billion. Other large states would also see generous returns: Florida, $511 million; Illinois, $397 million; Michigan, $318 million; New York, $607 million; Ohio, $363 million; and Texas, $667 million.

Here is how much each state can expect to recover:

cash on hand. Instead, the affected industries simply will raise the prices that they charge to their customers.

This is exactly what has happened in the state Medicaid tobacco settlement – according to the leading proponents of that litigation. The first state attorney general to file suit against the tobacco companies has admitted that “what always happens in these cases is the industry passes the costs to the consumer.”<sup>1</sup> Other commentators agree that this has occurred in the tobacco litigation. As one law-review article notes, “the [tobacco] settlement * * * is a tax because it’s a set of payments made by tobacco companies that depend on how many packs they sell; in short, it looks like a tax and quacks like a tax.”<sup>2</sup>

Because of the way that these massive judgments typically are satisfied, it is particularly important to ensure that attorneys are paid in proportion to the services that they provided – rather than solely on the basis of the size of the recovery. Again, the state tobacco settlement highlights the nature of the problem. As two of the leading academic commentators have noted, it is “very troubl[ing]” that under that agreement, “a group of private citizens [are] getting paid a percentage of a tax increase they helped pass.”<sup>3</sup> The sheer size of the tobacco settlement – and the fact that attorneys fees were based on this size, rather than on the attorneys’ actual efforts – has given the fee awards an uncanny resemblance to the medieval practice of tax farming. In all but name, the government has licensed a group of private individuals to collect a tax from the consuming public.

I would emphasize at this point that ISCRAA is not an attack on the state tobacco lawsuits. The bill does not pass judgment on the merits or the appropriateness of this type of litigation. ISCRAA simply is designed to ensure that when such lawsuits are brought on the public’s behalf, the public receive its fair share of the proceeds. If a state chooses to seek compensatory revenue from industry for past harms, then the resulting tax on the public – minus the reasonable value of the legal services actually provided – must go to the state treasury.

$100 Million Lawsuits Are Different

There are several reasons why $100 million is an appropriate threshold for applying ISCRAA's fee formula. First, the courts themselves have indicated that fee agreements based primarily on the size of the recovery tend to become unreasonable when judgements reach this size. As one court has stated, "in much smaller cases, a fee award of 33% does not present the danger of providing the plaintiff's counsel with the windfall that would accompany a 'megafund' settlement of $100 million or upwards. But it is quite different when the figures hit the really big time."<sup>4</sup> Or as the Third Circuit notes, "courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded [for attorneys fees] as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a 'very large' settlement."<sup>5</sup>

The logic of avoiding judgment-based awards in these very large cases is straightforward. As one court explains, "it is not 150 times more difficult to prepare, try, and settle a $150 million case than it is to try a $1 million case, but the application of a percentage comparable to that in a smaller case may yield an award 150 times greater."<sup>6</sup> Thus (according to another court) "there is considerable merit" to disallowing standard percentage awards as the "size of the [recovery] fund increases. In many instances the increase [in the recovery] is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel."<sup>7</sup>

It also bears mention that because of its $100 million threshold, ISCRAA applies to a fairly limited universe of cases. As courts have remarked, "there are few so-called 'megafund' cases with settlements over $100 million."<sup>8</sup> In 2001, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third

Circuit attempted to catalogue all common-fund cases in federal court that resulted in recoveries greater than $100 million. Though such litigations have been more frequent in recent years, the Third Circuit identified only 22 such cases since 1985. See in re Cendant Corp. PRIDES Litig., 243 F.3d 722, 737 (3d Cir. 2001).

ISCRAA is somewhat broader than the criteria that Cendant Corp. employed to collect cases. ISCRAA is not limited to common-fund cases – it also applies to judgments won on behalf of tax-exempt entities or even single individuals. ISCRAA also applies to cases brought in state court, and it aggregates identical claims that are brought against common defendants in separate actions, in order to prevent evasion of its limits through the subdivision of actions. Nevertheless, ISCRAA’s scope remains fairly narrow. An academic specialist who is familiar with developments in this field has reviewed the bill and concluded that because of its “relatively high threshold,” ISCRAA probably would apply only to about 15-20 litigations per year. I will include a copy of this professor’s letter to me in the congressional record.

Finally, a $100 million threshold also is appropriate because it limits ISCRAA’s reach to litigations that are a natural subject of congress’s authority to regulate interstate commerce. It is well-established that “Congress’ commerce authority includes the power to regulate * * * those [economic] activities that substantially affect interstate commerce.” United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 609 (2000). See also United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). Both the executive and the legislative branches previously have identified $100 million as guideline for determining whether a matter has a significant impact on interstate commerce. See, e.g. Executive Order 12866; Congressional Review Act, 5 U.S.C. § 804(2); Unfunded Mandates Act, 2 U.S.C. § 1532(a). Because it is limited to litigations of this size, ISCRAA is consistent with congress’s power and obligation to protect the flow of commerce between states.

Guaranteeing Adequate Incentives to Plaintiffs’ Lawyers

Another point that I would like to emphasize today is that ISCRAA is not an anti-plaintiffs’ lawyer bill. It is not stingy toward trial attorneys. ISCRAA is carefully designed to protect fiduciary interests while providing plaintiffs’ lawyers with ample incentives to provide high-quality legal representation in large litigations. ISCRAA’s fee formula is as generous as the limits set by the most liberal state courts that engage in meaningful review of attorneys fees, and is considerably more generous than the federal courts’ practices in $100 million cases. Moreover, the multiplier criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as legitimate prerequisites for a contingency fee – even by trial lawyers’ professional associations.

Federal courts primarily rely on two systems for calculating attorneys fees in cases (such as class actions) in which they are required to set “reasonable fees:” the percentage method and the lodestar-multiplier method. The percentage method, as its name implies, calculates fees as a percentage of the total recovery. The lodestar system, by contrast, requires a court to first calculate a fee based on the number of hours that the lawyer worked multiplied by prevailing hourly rates (the “lodestar”). The court then multiplies this lodestar fee again in order to reward the attorney for the risk of nonpayment of fees that he assumed and for any exceptional services that he provided.

Over the last thirty years, courts have moved back and forth between these two systems.<sup>9</sup> Only a few courts make lodestar-multipliers the exclusive means of awarding attorneys fees. But as one academic commentator has noted, “lodestar, or hours-based methods, have been adopted in every [federal judicial] circuit.”<sup>10</sup>

And more importantly, in large-recovery cases, there has been very little difference between lodestar and percentage systems. This is because even when courts apply a percentage to calculate fees, and as judgements become very large, courts typically also calculate a reasonable lodestar in order to determine what constitutes a reasonable percentage. Thus, again, as the Third Circuit notes, “courts have generally decreased the percentage awarded as the amount recovered increases, and $100 million seems to be the informal marker of a ‘very large’ settlement.”<sup>11</sup>

Courts have been wary of awarding fees based on percentages alone. As one state supreme court explains:

“to begin the assessment by arbitrarily picking a percentage amount without any reliance on a cognizable structure invites decisions that are nonobjective and inconsistent. What constitutes a reasonable percentage may differ from one judge to another depending on each judge’s predilections, background, and geographical location in the state.”<sup>12</sup>

Thus “courts that employ the percentage approach appear to be motivated in part by a lodestar dynamic. Because courts are reluctant to give fee awards totally incommensurate with the efforts of the attorneys, percentage awards generally decrease as the amount of the recovery increases.”<sup>13</sup>

One result of the cross-use of the lodestar and percentage systems is that even when courts use the percentage system, those awards overwhelmingly tend to reflect a reasonable lodestar multiplier. Therefore, even percentage-based cases tend to provide evidence of the range of multipliers that the courts consider to be reasonable.

In 2001, the Third Circuit “set forth a chart of fee awards given in federal courts since 1985 in class actions in which the settlement fund exceeded $100 million and in which the percentage of recovery method was used.”<sup>14</sup> (Cendant Corp.) The court identified 17 such cases. In almost every case, the Third Circuit could calculate the multiplier that was used, and “the lodestar multiplier in those cases never exceeded 2.99.” And in the direct lodestar-multiplier cases that court identified, the multiplier ranged from 1.2 to 3.25.<sup>15</sup>

Other courts, surveying smaller cases than the $100 million recoveries examined in Cendant Corp., have identified larger multipliers. One federal district court has “observe[d] that in virtually every case where the court notes a lodestar but awards fees based upon a percentage, the lodestar multiplier converted from this percentage is in the range of 1 to 4.”<sup>16</sup> Another federal district court has found that “the range of lodestar multipliers in large and complicated class actions runs from a low of 2.26 to a high of 4.5.”<sup>17</sup>

By contrast, some courts have declared that they would allow only lower multipliers. One federal court has stated that “only in the most exceptional circumstances would this court award a multiplier of 3 or greater. * * * this court believes that lodestars enhanced by multipliers less than 3 should adequately compensate even the most talented counsel.”<sup>18</sup> And the Seventh

Circuit has suggested that “it may be that a doubling of the lodestar would provide a sensible ceiling.”<sup>19</sup>

On the other hand, the Florida Supreme Court – which is generally regarded as one of the more plaintiff-friendly courts in the United States – has announced that:

“we set the maximum multiplier available in this common-fund category of cases at 5. * * * * [A] multiplier which increases fees to five times the accepted hourly rate is sufficient to alleviate the contingency risk factor involved and attract high level counsel to common fund cases while producing a fee that remains within the bounds of reasonableness. We emphasize that 5 is a maximum multiplier.”<sup>20</sup>

ISCRAA adopts this more liberal standard. It allows fees as high as 500% of reasonable hourly rates. ISCRAA awards multipliers based on two criteria: it allows up to 300% to be added onto the amount of reasonable hourly fees if a case that involved a substantial risk of nonrecovery of fees, and allows an additional 100% add-on if the attorney provided exceptional services that improved the plaintiff’s recovery.

The criteria that ISCRAA employs universally are recognized as necessary prerequisites to the legitimacy of a contingency fee. “Courts in general have insisted that a contingent fee be truly contingent. The typically elevated fee reflecting the risk to the lawyer of receiving no fee will be permitted only if the representation indeed involves a significant degree of risk.” Charles W. Wolfram, MODERN LEGAL ETHICS § 9.4, at 532 (1986). The risk requirement has been recognized ever since contingency fees first were allowed in the United States. The American Bar Association even noted at that time that “a contract for a contingent fee, where sanctioned by law, should be reasonable under all the circumstances of the case, including the risk and uncertainty of the compensation.” ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 13 (1908). Indeed, even the professional associations of plaintiffs’ attorneys have, at times, acknowledged that contingent fees should be based on an actual contingency. In a guide to its members, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America has “recommend[ed]” that attorneys “exercise sound judgment in using a percentage in the contingent fee contract that is commensurate with the risk, cost and effort required.” ATLA, KEYS TO THE COURTHOUSE: QUICK FACTS ON THE CONTINGENCY FEE SYSTEM 13 (1994).

The criteria that ISCRAA employs are universally accepted – and the limits that it sets should be universally acceptable. ISCRAA is not intended to alter the considered standards of any jurisdiction. Rather, it is intended to enforce those standards – and to correct the occasional extreme outlier. Because ISCRAA incorporates a fee formula that is substantially more liberal than the usual practices of the federal courts in $100 million cases, we can be confident that high-

Fiduciary Restraints on Attorney Fee Contracts

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>22</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>23</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>24</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>25</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>26</sup>

The same principle has been identified by the Florida Supreme Court:

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’

SENATOR CORNYN

INTRODUCTION OF LANDMARK LEGISLATION TO COMBAT GROSSLY ABUSIVE ATTORNEY FEE AGREEMENTS

Wednesday, April 10, 2003

Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator Kyl, to introduce today this landmark legislation to clean up our civil justice system. This legislation would enact a badly needed reform to the way in which attorneys are paid in some of the nation's largest cases. It is designed to address some of the worst abuses of our civil justice system that I have witnessed in my nearly thirty years in the legal profession as a lawyer in private practice, as a state trial and appellate judge, and as state attorney general.

This legislation, the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003 (ISCRAA), will combat the gross abuse of attorney contingent fee agreements, abuses which we have been witnessing at an increasing rate in recent years. The legislation will enforce attorneys' fiduciary duties to their clients in a small but important category of cases – those resulting in judgments greater than $100 million.

Contingent fee agreements can have an important role to play in our civil justice system. Sometimes, when people are injured but cannot afford to hire lawyers out of their own pockets, attorneys will accept the case with the expectation that, if their clients prevail, the attorney will be paid for his or her services out of the judgment or settlement that the attorney is able to secure for the client. Such agreements between attorneys and their clients are called contingent fee agreements, because the attorney's fee is contingent on the client obtaining a money judgment or settlement. Contingent fee agreements, properly understood and utilized, reward attorneys for their work in obtaining monetary recovery for their clients, and the risk that they take that, despite their hard work and best efforts, they are unable to obtain any recovery for the client at all.

Contingent fees can thus help ensure that plaintiffs with legitimate claims have the opportunity to obtain justice from our courts through the assistance of counsel. But contingent fees also present serious ethical problems for our legal system – particularly when the dollar amounts at stake are extraordinary, especially when compared to the relatively light or even negligible effort and risk actually undertaken by the attorneys.

Clients hire attorneys with the understanding and expectation that the attorney is ethically, legally, and morally obliged to represent their best interests, and that the attorney will use his or her legal skills in order to produce the best possible result – not for the attorney, but for the client.

Thus, as my colleague has noted, contingent fee agreements are no ordinary agreements between consumers and businesses. It is a bedrock principle and well-established tenet of our Anglo-American system of justice that attorneys are not ordinary businessmen who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers, as courts have made clear on countless occasions. Rather, attorneys are officers of the court who have a fiduciary duty to their clients. As fiduciaries, attorneys occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients.

One obligation that flows from this status as a fiduciary is the attorney's obligation not charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. This obligation is a fundamental part of an attorney's lawyers. So the real amount on the bargaining table was not the $246 billion that the states settled for, but a larger sum, including the amount to be paid to the attorneys. . . . Stated simply, because dollars are fungible, the fees are coming out of the settlements.<sup>25</sup>

Even foreign commentators have noted that the state tobacco settlement's "arbitration is a mere figleaf. The money going to the lawyers was clearly part of the overall amount that the tobacco companies were willing to pay to settle the case. Whatever the lawyers get, the states do not."<sup>26</sup>

It is specious to argue that [billions of dollars] in fees are not being diverted out of funds available for public health and taxpayers. The tobacco industry is willing to pay a certain sum to get rid of these cases. That sum is the total cost of the payment to the plaintiffs and their lawyers. It is a matter of indifference to the industry how that sum is divided – 75% for the plaintiffs and 25% for their lawyers, or vice versa. That means that every penny paid to the plaintiffs' lawyers – whether it is technically 'in' the settlement or not – is money that the industry could have paid to the state or the private plaintiffs. Excessive attorneys' fees in this case will not be a victimless crime.<sup>27</sup>

I hope that these authorities and their reasoning are sufficient to permanently dispel the notion that an attorney fee agreement can be structured so as to evade the ethical obligation to charge only a reasonable fee. The defenders of the MSA fee payments are simply misleading the public and this distinguished body when they assert that a particular lawyer's award under the settlement does not come out of a particular state's recovery. That fee comes out of all of the state's recoveries. All excessive or unreasonable fees should be restored to all 50 of the states.

Senator Kyl has already presented estimates of the monetary recovery each state can expect if ISCRAA is enacted. I would simply point out here that, according to those estimates, Texas has been charged excessive and unreasonable attorney fees in the amount of $667 million, and therefore would recover those funds if this legislation is adopted.

ISCRAA's return of unethical tobacco-settlement fee awards to the states is manifestly proper in light of the fact that all fee awards are the property of the client, and the attorney is entitled only to a reasonable fee. No attorney is above these rules and obligations. They cannot be waived or ignored. And in light of our experience with the state tobacco settlement fee awards, and their effect on our public officials, these ethical duties must be carried out and enforced strictly and fully.

Our federal and state courts generally do a good job of protecting consumers and enforcing the rights of all Americans. But there are problems in our courts that require attention and significant reform. Class action abuse not only threatens the integrity and the perception of rationality in our nation's courts, it strongly hinders economic and job growth. Tort reform is badly needed to rescue many industries, especially our health care industry, from abuses of our legal system. The judicial confirmation process at the federal level has become bitter, severe and destructive, posing a threat to judicial independence and the quality and efficiency of our courts. And abusive attorney fee arrangements make a mockery of our civil justice system, all while enriching a small band of unscrupulous litigators at the expense of the real victims, their clients.

To enforce the longstanding fiduciary duty of all attorneys to charge only a reasonable fee, in a class of cases that poses heightened risks of abuse and special significance to the national economy, I urge that this Senate consider expediently, and approve quickly, this important measure, the Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

ethical duties, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States. Courts have made clear, time and time again, that every attorney fee contract automatically and necessarily includes the requirement that the fee be a reasonable one, a requirement that no provision of such agreements may abrogate.

ISCRAA affirms and reinforces the longstanding substantive law of attorneys' fiduciary duties, by providing a special mechanism to enforce those duties in a particularly high risk category of cases – a category that the courts themselves have singled out as posing special risks of unethical, windfall fees. Courts have noted that allowing standard contingency fee agreements in cases involving judgments of $100 million or more have a distinct tendency of grossly overcompensating attorneys for their actual services rendered.

ISCRAA prevents attorneys from evading their obligation to charge a reasonable fee in extraordinarily large recovery cases, by limiting awards to a generous multiple of reasonable hourly fees. State courts, federal courts, and even trial lawyers' themselves have all recognized that a reasonable fee must be proportional to the attorney's actual efforts. ISCRAA codifies and enforces this principle, while continuing to guarantee lawyers ample and generous compensation for their efforts – using fee multipliers that are as generous as the most liberal limits adopted by state courts, and which are considerably more generous than the limits set by federal courts in $100 million cases.

This legislation thus promises to clean up our civil justice system and to repudiate the grossest abuses of our legal system. Make no mistake: Although all attorneys are supposed to uphold a strict ethical code, under which they are strictly forbidden from charging their clients unreasonable or excessive attorney fees, the temptation to abuse contingent fee agreements is a strong one, and even more so when the dollar amounts are truly extraordinary – such as in the $100 million cases that would be covered by this legislation. And make no mistake: the victim of such attorney fee abuse, and the beneficiary of this legislation, is not the defendant who pays the judgment – after all, the defendant pays the same total amount whether the money goes to the attorney or to the client. Rather, the real victim of this abuse, and the real beneficiary of this legislation, is the injured client, whose money is being taken away from the lawyer through an abusive contingent fee arrangement.

As my colleague has also noted, ISCRAA is unquestionably an appropriate exercise of Congress's power to regulate and protect interstate commerce, especially considering the large size of the litigations to which it applies. $100 million is a standard threshold used by the federal government to determine whether an economic transaction significantly affects interstate commerce.

But the most important reason for federal intervention in this area I have not yet mentioned, and I would like to take a moment to discuss it here: the gross abuses that we have already witnessed in large litigation fee awards. Recent experience amply demonstrates that, if the federal government does not act to prevent unethical and grossly abusive fee awards in massive, nationwide lawsuits, no one will. Moreover, recent experience further demonstrates that unreasonable fee payments in such suits threaten not just the attorneys' fiduciary obligations; they also place at risk the integrity of our governmental institutions. The unwholesome incentives created by windfall, unethical fee awards in large-scale litigations have induced some public officials to abandon their civic obligations.

The textbook example of the types of abuses that make ISCRAA necessary is the attorneys fees awarded in the state lawsuits to recover tobacco-related Medicaid expenses. Individual law firms that represented the states in that litigation have been given hundreds of millions and sometimes even billions of dollars in fees. To date, approximately $15 billion in fees has been awarded to the tobacco settlement lawyers, to be paid out in $500-million-a-year increments. Attorneys representing just three of the states – Mississippi, Texas, and Florida – were awarded $8.2 billion in fees. In many cases, such fees were paid to attorneys who filed duplicate, copycat lawsuits at a time when settlement negotiations had already begun and the risk that the states would not recover any money was negligible. Yet these lawyers nevertheless received massive contingency fees, for suits that involved no real contingency. And for most of the tobacco settlement lawyers, the size of the fee awards bears no reasonable relation to the actual effort expended or risk involved.

There is widespread agreement that the fees awarded in the tobacco settlement are excessive and unreasonable. Perhaps the most damning indictments come from those who took the plaintiffs' side in this litigation – including from plaintiffs lawyers themselves. For example, Michael Ciresi, a pioneer in the tobacco litigation who represented the state of Minnesota in its lawsuit, and who is no doubt familiar with what these lawsuits actually require, has said that the Texas, Florida, and Mississippi lawyers' fee awards "are far in excess of these lawyers' contribution to any of the state results."<sup>1</sup> Similarly, former Food and Drug Administration Commissioner David Kessler, another leader in the fight against tobacco, has said that the states' private lawyers "did a real service, but I think the fee is outrageous. All the legal fees are out of control."<sup>2</sup> Washington, D.C. lawyer and tobacco-industry opponent John Coale has denounced the fee awards as "beyond human comprehension" and stated that "the work does not justify them."<sup>3</sup> Even the Association of American Trial Lawyers, the nation's premier representative of the plaintiffs bar, has condemned attorneys fees requested in the state tobacco settlement. The President of ATLA has noted:

Common sense suggests that a one billion dollar fee is excessive and unreasonable and certainly should invite the scrutiny [of the courts]. [ATLA] generally refrains from expressing an institutional opinion regarding a particular fee in a particular case, but we have a strong negative reaction to reports that at least one attorney on behalf of the plaintiffs in the Florida case is seeking a fee in excess of one billion dollars.<sup>4</sup>

This letter, written in 1997, only concerned one of the Florida lawyers' request for attorneys fees. Ultimately, Florida's private counsel was awarded a total of $3.4 billion in fees. These statements demonstrate beyond all doubt that there is real abuse going on here, and that the victim of this abuse is the client, the plaintiff – and not the defendant.

Perhaps the best gloss on the tobacco fee awards is that provided by Professor Lester Brickman, a professor of law at Cardozo Law School and noted authority on legal ethics and attorneys fees. Professor Brickman has stated:

Under the rules of legal ethics, promulgated partly as a justification for the legal profession's self-governance, fees cannot be 'clearly excessive.' Indeed, that standard has now been superseded in most states by an even more rigorous standard: fees have to be 'reasonable.' Are these fees, which in many cases amount to effective hourly rates of return of tens of thousands – and even hundreds of thousands – of dollars an hour, reasonable? I think to ask the question is to answer it.<sup>5</sup>

The attorneys fees awarded in the state tobacco settlement are simply indefensible. And the process by which the fees were awarded partly explains how they came to be so. Outside counsel fees were determined by a private arbitration panel established by the Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) that resolved 46 of the states' litigation. (Four other states had settled their suits earlier. Their lawyers, however, also were paid out of the accounts created by the MSA.) Amazingly, the settlement agreement explicitly immunized all fee awards from judicial review. Even more amazingly, one of the three arbitrators who made the awards had a clear conflict of interests: he was the father of a South Carolina lawyer whose law firm has received the largest fee awards of all, believed to amount to over $2 billion. Another one of the arbitrators had no background in fee arbitrations or any related matter, and simply ignored the law in order to make outrageous awards, using the salaries of sports stars and entertainers as a basis of measure. The third arbitrator, a retired federal judge appointed by President Carter, dissented from the key fee decisions.

As incredible as the MSA fee awards and the arbitration procedures may seem, even more dubious is the process by which many of the law firms that participated in this lucrative litigation were selected in the first place to represent the states.

In my home state of Texas, trial lawyers have accused the then-state attorney general of demanding $1 million in campaign contributions in exchange for their being hired to represent the state in the tobacco litigation. One prominent lawyer – a former president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association – has since said that the attorney general's solicitation was so blatant that "I knew th[at] instant . . . that I could not be involved in the matter." He even later wondered if the meeting had been a "sting operation." Another lawyer simply characterized his encounter with the attorney general as a bribery solicitation.

This former Texas attorney general was recently indicted on federal charges of attempting to fraudulently divert $260 million in tobacco-settlement legal fees to one of his personal friends. He had given a sworn affidavit that this lawyer had served as Texas's "primary adviser" in its tobacco lawsuit – despite the fact that the lawyer had attended no court hearings, depositions, or strategy meetings, wrote no memos or legal briefs about the case, and apparently never even spoke to any of the other attorneys. The attorney general even went so far as to forge and fraudulently backdate documents in order to win his friend a share of the tobacco settlement fee.

As for the five law firms that actually did represent Texas in the tobacco litigation, they filed relatively late lawsuits that were based on other lawyers' work – and yet, despite the minimal energy expended on those suits, were awarded $3.3 billion in attorneys fees. This award amounts to compensation that, even assuming that the attorneys worked all day every day during the entire period of the litigation, remains well in excess of $100,000 an hour. As one newspaper editorial has noted, for the amount of money that these lawyers were awarded, Texas could hire

Texas's experience is not an isolated example. In other states as well, lawyers' participation in the tobacco litigation appears to have been the product of political favoritism – and to have resulted in unfathomable fees that bear no reasonable relation to the services provided. For example:

- New Jersey: the private in-state lawyers who represented this state in the tobacco litigation have admitted that they had no mass-tort litigation experience and played no role in the state settlement talks. They have also admitted that all the key work in the state's lawsuit was done by out-of-state firms – the in-state firms' principal work was drafting pro hac vice motions to have these outside lawyers admitted in New Jersey courts. Any work that the New Jersey lawyers did was submitted to the outside lawyers, who made all of the substantive arguments. Result: these in-state lawyers were awarded $350 million in the MSA fee arbitration. Connections: the New Jersey lawyers were an inside group of past presidents of the New Jersey trial lawyers' association. The State refused to even consider hiring a nonprofit firm to conduct the New Jersey lawsuit.<sup>7</sup>
- Pennsylvania: settlement talks had already begun, the states' tobacco litigation was being resolved, and all of the legal theories already had been developed long before the Pennsylvania state suit was filed. Result: Pennsylvania's private lawyers were awarded $50 million in the MSA arbitration – equivalent to 1000% of a reasonable hourly rate. As one expert has noted, "there's not $50 million of work in there." Connections: the two law firms that the state Attorney General selected to conduct the litigation were among his top campaign contributors. The firms were awarded no-bid contracts. As one Pennsylvania commentator has noted, "obviously, it was a political kind of thing."<sup>8</sup>
- Maryland: billionaire tort lawyer Peter Angelos demanded a one billion dollar fee for his work on that state's case, even though, according to the state Senate President, the state legislature had retroactively "changed centuries of precedent to ensure [Angelos] a win in the case." risk lawsuit.<sup>9</sup>

- Louisiana: the private law firms that represented the state in the tobacco litigation were awarded $575 million. The MSA arbitration panel actually increased this award on the ground that the state government – the lawyers’ supposed client – was opposed to suing tobacco companies. The Louisiana fee award amounts to almost $7000 an hour, based on the lawyers’ estimate that they worked a total 85,000 hours. This estimate, however, is unverifiable, since the state’s private lawyers kept no billing records – as the attorney general explained, “I wasn’t that big on hourly or written reports.” The dissenting member of the arbitration panel simply noted that the Louisiana fee award “shocks the conscience.” The single biggest beneficiary of this largesse – receiving $115 million in attorneys fees – was a law firm based in Lake Charles, the hometown of the state’s attorney general. This firm and the next largest fee recipient had donated over $42,000 to the attorney general’s political campaigns. Together, all of the firms that represented Louisiana gave more than $100,000 to the attorney general in the years before they were selected to participate in the state’s tobacco team.<sup>10</sup>
- Ohio: the lawyers representing this state received fees estimated to exceed $50,000 per hour, despite the fact that, according to independent observers, “all of the legal issues were resolved long before these Ohio lawyers stepped up to the plate.” The state’s outside counsel had donated $26,000 in campaign contributions to the state attorney general prior to their appointment to the state’s tobacco team. After the attorney general chose one private lawyer to serve as the state’s “lead special counsel,” that lawyer hired one of the attorney general’s top aides for an undisclosed sum in order to – in the lawyer’s own words – “help me get acquainted with a technique called PowerPoint.” When told that “there were many people in Ohio capable of doing a PowerPoint presentation,” the state’s outside counsel responded that this particular attorney general’s aide “was the only one I knew of.”<sup>11</sup>
- Massachusetts: according to other tobacco plaintiffs’ lawyers, Massachusetts’s suit piggybacked on the work of other lawyers and was not pivotal to the outcome of the tobacco litigation. Result: $775 million was awarded to the Massachusetts lawyers in the MSA arbitration.<sup>12</sup>
- New York: when this state’s then-attorney general hired private counsel to represent the state in its tobacco lawsuit, tobacco companies already had paid $15 billion to Florida and Mississippi for identical claims and a national settlement agreement already was under discussion. As one local anti-tobacco leader has noted, “these were copycat lawsuits, there wasn't all that much work to do." The firms' primary job was to collect New York-specific data in order to calculate damages. Ultimately, the New York firms represented the state for just 13 months. And they received a fee award of $625 million. This amounts to at least $14,000 an hour, for a lawsuit that by all accounts involved no risk. The dissenting member of the arbitration panel has denounced the award as "an astronomical sum unrelated to [the attorneys'] efforts or achievements." The New York firms had contributed more than $250,000 to New York politicians and their campaign organizations in the years preceding their selection – and another $200,000 after the state settlement.<sup>13</sup>

- Wisconsin: the Wisconsin lawyers' tobacco litigation work has been described as chiefly consisting of media and public relations efforts on their own behalf. Their billing records included time spent selecting office space and buying furniture. One lawyer effectively billed $3000 to the state for reading an article in a Madison newspaper. The lawyers also billed the state for limousine rides around the state, trips on private jets, and stays at luxury hotels. Result: $75 million was awarded to the Wisconsin lawyers. Based on the law firms' records of the total number of hours they devoted to the case – including work by paralegals – this fee amounts to $3000 per hour.<sup>14</sup>
- Missouri: a state supreme court justice in Missouri resigned his post in order to join one of the private law firms expected to receive a portion of the MSA arbitrators' fee award. Ultimately, the firms representing the state spent just 5 months on the state's lawsuit. They received a fee award of $111 million. One state leader has described the award as "the biggest rip-off in the 180-year history of the state." The law firms receiving these fees had donated more than $500,000 to state politicians and parties in the years leading up to their selection as the state's outside counsel.<sup>15</sup>

These examples are too numerous to dismiss. In state after state, the temptations created by the massive, windfall fees awarded in the Medicaid tobacco settlement corrupted not only lawyers involved, but the government as well. The fee awards poisoned everything that they touched. No one who examines these events closely – who surveys the obscene fee awards, and the political cronyism that determined who benefited – can disagree that this must never be allowed to happen again.

As a final point, I would like to address a question that has been raised with regard to remedy. Some have argued that nothing can be done to correct the excesses of the tobacco settlement fee awards – even with regard to fees that are still being or have yet to be paid. On several occasions, state judges who were called upon to approve their state's tobacco settlement have also, on their own initiative, inquired into the apparent unreasonableness of the fees awarded. In each case, both the plaintiffs lawyers – and in some cases, even state officials – have challenged the state courts' authority to act. They have argued that these courts lack jurisdiction to review a national settlement, and that excessive fees cannot be restored to the state. One state's attorney general implicated in these events has argued that it is a "misconception" that the tobacco settlement "attorneys' fees are coming out of the public's pocket. That is not the case. They [sic] defendants have agreed to pay these fees."<sup>16</sup>

Because of the way that the MSA fee payments are structured, no lawyer's award comes out of any one particular, identifiable state's recovery. Instead, all of the lawyers are being paid from one of two separate accounts, each of which is funded by the tobacco companies.

It is a mistake, however, to contend that, because the MSA fee payments are made directly from defendants to plaintiffs' lawyers – without ever formally or actually passing through the plaintiffs' hands – they are immunized against ethical scrutiny or correction. It is well and long established in our law that fee awards originate as the property of the client regardless of how the fee agreements are structured. The courts have been very clear on this point. As they have stated:

- "The allowance of attorney fees in a judgment gives the attorneys no interest and ownership in the judgment to the extent of the amount of the fee allowed, but the judgment in its entirety is the property of the client. The award for fees is for the client, not the attorney."<sup>17</sup>
- "[A]ttorneys' fee provisions exist for the benefit of parties and not the attorneys . . . . Several jurisdictions have noted that the real party in interest with regard to fees is the client and not the attorney."<sup>18</sup>
- "A judgment for costs is a judgment in favor of the party, and not of his attorney, and the money represented by the costs is the property of the party."<sup>19</sup>
- "[T]he award of attorney fees [is] made not to the attorneys but to the litigant who was personally liable to the attorneys. This is also the view in other states when the courts award attorney fees."<sup>20</sup>
- "An award of attorney's fees belongs to the client and not the attorney."<sup>21</sup>

Mitchell*, 495 U.S. 82, 87 (1990) ("Section 1988 makes the prevailing party eligible for a discretionary award of attorney's fees. * * * it is the party, rather than the lawyer, who is so eligible") (citations omitted).

Indeed, an award of attorney fees is generally taxable as income to the client. In a recent case, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit noted that a plaintiff's obligation to compensate the law firm that represented him "was satisfied by [the defendant]. The payment was therefore to [the client]. The discharge by a third person of an obligation to him is equivalent to receipt by the person taxed." The Ninth Circuit emphasized that the fact "[t]hat [the client] never laid hands on the money paid to the lawyers does not obliterate their constructive receipt." In other words, the fee award belongs to the client, regardless of how the award is made.

The rule that fee awards belong to the client is strongly supported by important policy considerations. It is necessary because any other rule would be an invitation to collusion and self-dealing between plaintiffs' lawyers and defendants. Again, the courts have been very clear on this point. As the Third Circuit has noted:

[A] defendant is interested only in disposing of the total claims asserted against it, and the allocation between the [plaintiff's] payment and the attorneys' fees is of little or no interest to the defense. Moreover, the divergence in class members' and class counsel's financial incentives creates the danger that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than-optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees.<sup>22</sup>

The Second Circuit has made the same point, noting:

Defendants, once the settlement amount has been agreed to, have little interest in how it is distributed and thus no incentive to oppose the [attorneys] fee. Indeed, the same dynamic creates incentives for collusion – the temptation for lawyers to agree to a less than optimal settlement in exchange for [generous fees].<sup>23</sup>

The Ninth Circuit has also addressed the question of "whether a class member has standing to appeal class counsel's attorney fee and cost award when that award is payable by the defendant independently, and not out of the class settlement." The court concluded that "[e]ven if class counsel's attorney fees are not to be paid from the class settlement . . . , the aggregate amount of the attorney fees and the class settlement payments may be viewed as "a constructive common fund." The court reasoned that "[i]f . . . class counsel agreed to accept excessive fees and costs to the detriment of class plaintiffs, then class counsel breached their fiduciary duty to the class. If that were the case, any excessive award could be considered property of the class plaintiffs, and any injury they suffered could be at least partially redressed by allocating to them a portion of that award."<sup>24</sup>

As several commentators have noted, the policy considerations underpinning the rule that fee awards belong to the client apply with full force to the state tobacco settlement. Indeed, that settlement could serve as a textbook example for why this rule exists. As Professor Brickman has noted:

In addition to material previously sent, I'm attaching the memo prepared today by Joe Matal re the so-called "wage regulation" argument that might be used against Kyl-Cornyn. (Pages 8-10 of the Kyl floor statement address the same issue in further detail; the attachment to the e-mail version of this memo includes that excerpt.)

To give context to the Matal memo, and to make absolutely clear that Kyl-Cornyn is not a fee cap bill, consider the following hourly claims that have been made by the tobacco lawyers, and the fees they would be eligible to receive under the bill on the reasonable assumption of a court-authorized $400 per hour fee and 5x multiplier:

- ú Castano group lawyers: 400,000 hours - $800 million
- ú NY lawyers: 48,000 hours - $96 million
- ú Texas lawyers: 36,000 hours - $72 million
- ú Illinois and Ohio lawyers: 15,000-20,000 hours - $30 million
- ú Michigan lawyers: 20,000 hours - $40 million
- ú Wisconsin lawyers: 26,500 hours - $53 million
- ú California lawyers: 128,000 hours - $256 million

As can be seen, fees authorized under Kyl-Cornyn, even divided among lawyers and across the years of litigation, are well within current CEO compensation.

But entirely aside from the size of legitimate fees under Kyl-Cornyn, please examine Joe Matal's superb memo, compelling in making clear that the bill merely creates a means of enforcing existing law - one that, in recognition of the fiduciary character of the attorney-client relationship, currently requires judicial regulation/supervision/ review of all attorneys' fees in all states.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>1</sup>

- “There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>2</sup>

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- “Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so ‘clearly excessive’ as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules.”<sup>5</sup>
- “[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client’s challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside.”<sup>7</sup>
- “Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law.”<sup>8</sup>

- “[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny.”<sup>10</sup>
- “As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney’s fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client.”<sup>11</sup>

[From Senator Kyl’s speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>13</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>14</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>15</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>16</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is ‘a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>17</sup>

“There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>18</sup>

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’ fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."<sup>20</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."<sup>21</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

MEMORANDUM
VIA FAX AND EMAIL

TO: Jay Lefkowitz
Cesar Conda
Brett Kavanaugh
FROM: Michael Horowitz
DATE: April 23, 2003
RE:;;;;; "Wage Regulation" arguments against Kyl-Cornyn

;;;;; In addition to material previously sent, I'm attaching the memo prepared today by Joe Matal re the so-called "wage regulation" argument that might be used against Kyl-Cornyn.; (Pages 8-10 of the Kyl floor statement address the same issue in further detail; the attachment to the e-mail version of this memo includes that excerpt.)

;;;;; To give context to the Matal memo, and to make absolutely clear that Kyl-Cornyn is not a fee cap bill, consider the following hourly claims that have been made by the tobacco lawyers, and the fees they would be eligible to receive under the bill on the reasonable assumption of a court-authorized $400 per hour fee and 5x multiplier:

ú Castano group lawyers:; 400,000 hours - $800 million
ú NY lawyers: 48,000 hours - $96 million
ú Texas lawyers: 36,000 hours - $72 million
ú Illinois and Ohio lawyers: 15,000-20,000 hours - $30 million
ú Michigan lawyers: 20,000 hours - $40 million
ú Wisconsin lawyers: 26,500 hours - $53 million
ú California lawyers: 128,000 hours - $256 million

;;;;; As can be seen, fees authorized under Kyl-Cornyn, even divided among lawyers and across the years of litigation, are well within current CEO compensation.

But entirely aside from the size of legitimate fees under Kyl-Cornyn, please examine Joe Matal's superb memo, compelling in making clear that the bill merely creates a means of enforcing existing law - one that, in recognition of the fiduciary character of the attorney-client relationship, currently requires judicial regulation/supervision/ review of all attorneys' fees in all states.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>1</sup>

- “There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>2</sup>
- “[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees.”<sup>3</sup>

King*, 975 F.Supp. 1147 (N.D.Ind.1997) (“there are legal rules that limit the ability of a lawyer and her client to contract freely. Under Indiana law, an attorney is entitled only to reasonable fees regardless of the existence of a contract between her and her client.”) (citing Trinkle v. Leeney, 650 N.E.2d 749, 754 (Ind.Ct.App.1995)).

Erickson*, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- “Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so ‘clearly excessive’ as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules.”<sup>5</sup>
- “[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client’s challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside.”<sup>7</sup>
- “Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law.”<sup>8</sup>

- “[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny.”<sup>10</sup>
- “As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney’s fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client.”<sup>11</sup>

Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

But entirely aside from the size of legitimate fees under Kyl-Cornyn, please examine Joe Matal's superb memo, compelling in making clear that the bill merely creates a means of enforcing existing law - one that, in recognition of the fiduciary character of the attorney-client relationship, currently requires judicial regulation/supervision/ review of all attorneys' fees in all states.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>1</sup>

- “There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>2</sup>
- “[A]n attorney is only entitled to fees which are fair and just and which adequately compensate him for his services. This is true no matter what fee is specified in the contract, because an attorney, as a fiduciary, cannot bind his client to pay a greater compensation for his services than the attorney would have the right to demand if no contract had been made. Therefore, as a matter of public policy, reasonableness is an implied term in every contract for attorney's fees.”<sup>3</sup>

King*, 975 F.Supp. 1147 (N.D.Ind.1997) (“there are legal rules that limit the ability of a lawyer and her client to contract freely. Erickson*, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- “Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so ‘clearly excessive’ as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules.”<sup>5</sup>
- “[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client’s challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside.”<sup>7</sup>
- “Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law.”<sup>8</sup>

- “Under a court’s general supervisory power over attorneys as officers of the court, attorney fee contracts are subject to scrutiny for the reasonableness of their terms.”<sup>9</sup>
- “[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny.”<sup>10</sup>
- “As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney’s fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client.”<sup>11</sup>

[From Senator Kyl’s speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>13</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>14</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>15</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>16</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is ‘a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>17</sup>

“There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>18</sup>

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’ fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

<sup>18</sup>Kuhnlein v. Department of Revenue, 662 So.2d 309, 313 (Fla. 1995) (emphasis added). See also Gruber & Coabella, P.A. v. Erickson, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."<sup>20</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."<sup>21</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

Subject: PRO CHOICE NOMINATIONS FOR FEDERAL JUDGESHIPs

REPUBLICAN COALITION FOR LIFE
COLLEEN PARRO

DEAR COLLEEN:

HERE ON TINY STATEN ISLAND, WE HAVE AN OUTGOING DISTRICT ATTORNEY, WILLIAM MURPHY, DEMOCRAT AND PRO CHOICE, HAS ANNOUNCED THAT HE WOULD LIKE TO BE CONSIDERED FOR A FEDERAL JUDGESHIP, AFTER SERVING AS THIS BOROUGH'S DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR THE LAST 21 YEARS. LAST WEEK HE WAS INTERVIEWED BY WHITE HOUSE DEPUTY COUNSEL DAVID LEITCH IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

MURPHY SAID HE EXPECTS TO HEAR "SOON" WHETHER PRESIDENT GEORGE W. BUSH WILL NOMINATE HIM TO A VACANCY ON THE U.S. DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT.

SEN. CHARLES SCHUMER HAD ASKED THE WHITE HOUSE TO MAKE THE NOMINATION. WHAT NERVE THIS SENATOR HAS AFTER HIS ATTEMPTS TO BLOCK PRESIDENT BUSH'S NOMINATION OF JUSTICE ESTRADA AND OWENS.

REV_00389487

MURPHY MET WITH LEITCH AND OTHER STAFF MEMBERS FOR 30 MINUTES ON THURSDAY IN LEITCH'S WEST WIN OFFICE. MURPHY SAID LEITCH ASKED "NO LITMUS-TEST QUESTIONS," SUCH AS HIS OPINION ABOUT ABORTION, BUT QUIZZED HIM ON WHETHER HE COULD ADHERE TO FEDERAL SENTENCING GUIDELINES.

HE WAS ALSO ASKED TO DESCRIBE HIS JUDICIAL PHILOSOPHY.

"I BELIEVE IN JUDICIAL RESTRAINT," MURPHY SAID HE TOLD LEITCH. "IT'S NOT THE PLACE OF A DISTRICT COURT JUDGE TO BE AN ACTIVIST, OR TO BE LOOKING TO CHANGE THE LAW HE'S LOOKING TO APPLY."

MURPHY WAS ALSO ASKED IF HE WOULD HAVE ANY DIFFICULTY BEING KNOWN AS A "BUSH APPOINTEE" TO THE BENCH. MURPHY SAID "HE'D BE HONORED," AND NOTED THAT WHEN HE FIRST "TOYED WITH THE IDEA" OF APPLYING FOR THE FEDERAL BENCH FIVE YEARS AGO, PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON, A DEMOCRAT, WAS IN OFFICE.

"ONE REASON I'M LOOKING TO GET INTO THE JUDICIARY IS TO GET OUT OF THE POLITICS," HE SAID.

THE FBI WILL NOW CONDUCT A BACKGROUND CHECK ON MURPHY.

NOT ONLY IS A PRO CHOICE DEMOCRAT GETTING CONSIDERATION FROM THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION WHILE THE LEFT WING PRO ABORTION SENATORS ARE HOLDING A FILIBUSTER AGAINST PREVIOUS AND POSSIBLY FUTURE BUSH NOMINEES, BUT FELLOW STATEN ISLAND REPUBLICAN, PRO LIFE CONGRESSMAN, VITO FOSSELLA TOLD MURPHY HE WOULD SUPPORT HIS JUDICIAL NOMINATION.

FOSSELLA SPOKESMAN, CRAIG DONNER STATED THAT FOSSELLA WOULD LIKE TO SEE NEW YORK STATE SUPREME COURT JUSTICE JOSEPH MALTESE ON THE BENCH WITH MURPHY. THERE ARE TWO VACANCIES ON THE BENCH AND POSSIBLY ONE MORE COMING UP SOON.

I BELIEVE THAT BILL CLINTON FORWARDED ENOUGH PRO ABORTION, FEDERAL JUDGES DURING HIS ADMINISTRATION AND THAT THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION SHOULD IN TURN, HAVE THEIR NOMINATIONS PROCEED WITHOUT THE LEFT WING INFLUENCE OF FEMINIST & ABORTION LOBBIES BEING OBSTRUCTIONISTS. ESPECIALLY NOW WHEN THE DEMOCRATS ARE SHOWING THEIR PARTISAN POLITICS, REPUBLICANS SHOULD NOT SUPPORT DEMOCRATIC APPLICANTS FOR FEDERAL NOMINATION TO THE BENCH.

PRESIDENT BUSH HAS SAID MANY TIMES THAT HE WOULD NOT APPLY A LITMUS TEST TO HIS NOMINEES. IF THE DEMOCRATS INSIST ON BLOCKING HIS NOMINEES, I WISH THAT HE WOULD RECONSIDER THE USE OF THE LITMUS TEST FOR PRO LIFE.

SINCERELY,

GENE COSGRIFF

Smith's pick stirs gay-rights controversy

April 21, 2003

Portland Oregonian

JIM BARNETT

WASHINGTON -- What once seemed like a slam-dunk nomination for the federal judiciary in Oregon could turn into a test of political wills for Oregon's two senators, Republican Gordon Smith and Democrat Ron Wyden.

Michael Mosman, the U.S. attorney in Portland, is Smith's choice for a vacant district judgeship and is still regarded as a favorite of the Bush White House. But recent revelations of Mosman's views on gay rights, first expressed in 1986, have delayed his selection and what otherwise would likely be easy Senate confirmation.

Now, gay-rights groups are demanding explanations from Mosman, putting Smith's carefully crafted reputation as a friend to the homosexual community on the line. Wyden, meanwhile, could be the only defense against a filibuster by the Senate's increasingly restive Democratic minority if he chooses to support Mosman's nomination.

The senators have cooperated in filling the vacancy created when U.S. District Judge Robert E. Jones took senior status in 2000. But they could face rough going if national gay-rights groups actively oppose Mosman's nomination.

"If the gay-rights community makes this nomination a litmus test, then quite frankly, they're in the middle of it and they're going to have to take sides," said Jim Moore, an independent political analyst in Portland. It's unclear whether that will happen. But gay-rights activists say they're still waiting for answers from Mosman.

"What I want him to show is that he has come to understand that relationships need to be judged on their quality, not whether they are gay or straight," said Roey Thorpe, executive director of Basic Rights Oregon, an advocacy group in Portland.

Mosman, 46, emerged as the top candidate in January after Ray Baum, a lawyer for Smith's family business, withdrew. But controversy erupted in March, when Basic Rights disclosed Mosman's role in a pivotal 1986 case, Bowers V. Hardwick.

The group uncovered and presented to Smith two "bench memos" that Mosman had written as a clerk to Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. Mosman urged Powell to uphold Georgia's anti-sodomy law against a claim that police invaded a man's privacy by arresting him in his home.

Memos to court's tie-breaker Mosman prepared the memos in March and June 1986, as it became clear Powell would be the court's tie-breaking vote. He wrote that striking down the Georgia law would lead to an unwarranted expansion of privacy rights under due process.

Such a ruling would leave "no limiting principle" against prosecution of other sex crimes such as prostitution, Mosman wrote. It also would jeopardize rights that society previously had reserved to heterosexuals.

"Without belaboring the point, I am convinced that the right of privacy as it relates to this case has been limited thus far to marriage and other family relationships," Mosman wrote to Powell. "So limited, the right of privacy does not extend to protect 'sexual freedom' in the absence of fundamental values of family and procreation."

Mosman has declined requests by The Oregonian to discuss the memos. But in a recent book about gay rights and the Supreme Court, Mosman is quoted as saying that his feelings about homosexuality were secondary to his concerns about the law.

"The battle was really about . . . what direction the court was taking on due process," Mosman said in "Courting Justice: Gay Men and Lesbians v. the Supreme Court.

Mosman added: "The (sodomy) issue could have come to the court as an equal protection case and would have had a better hearing. I would have been more receptive to it."

It's unclear exactly what impact the memos had on Powell's decision.

Powell joined a 5-4 majority in upholding the Georgia law, but later expressed regret. Gay-rights groups still regard the case as a devastating defeat for their cause.

Nevertheless, Thorpe and other advocates said they are willing to give Mosman an opportunity to update his views.

In the years since the Hardwick case, they note, society has become more accepting of homosexuals: Most states have repealed anti-sodomy laws, gay marriages and adoptions have become more widely accepted, and the court is debating a Texas case that could reverse its opinion in the Hardwick decision.

"He needs to clarify what his views are," said Winnie Stachelberg, political director for Human Rights Campaign, an advocacy group in Washington. "These are issues he will face not in the 1986 context but in the context of 2003 and beyond."

Added Thorpe: "We believe in change here. It wouldn't be right to not leave room for people to change."

Much is at stake for both Smith and Wyden, and both want Mosman to succeed.

Test on Smith's rights stand For Smith, the nomination could become a test of his credibility as an advocate for gay rights within the Republican Party. Smith won an important endorsement from Human Rights Campaign after supporting hate-crimes legislation, helping his re-election last year.

In a recent interview, Smith downplayed the significance of the Powell memos and suggested that given the opportunity, Mosman could explain himself to the satisfaction of critics.

"This is a decision that was rendered in 1986," Smith said. "Isn't it possible that Mike Mosman could also have an evolving view on these issues? I think Mosman is an outstanding legal scholar and an extraordinary U.S. attorney for Oregon."

The stakes could be higher for Wyden. Although his party controls neither the White House nor the Senate, Democrats are regarded as the chief defenders of gay rights. If Wyden endorses Mosman, his decision could be second-guessed by colleagues, including a handful of Democratic senators running for president in 2004.

Democrats have threatened to filibuster high-profile nominees, and they might be emboldened to take on others if they succeed, said Moore, the analyst. In that case, Mosman's nomination also could be held hostage to political concerns.

"It depends on what happens with the other filibusters going on," he said. Wyden hopes to avoid a national controversy over the nomination, said Josh Kardon, his chief of staff. But first, the senator plans to meet with Mosman to discuss the concerns raised by Basic Rights and decide whether to support him.

"Mike Mosman is someone Senator Wyden has supported in the past and someone he would like to support for the federal bench," Kardon said. "But legitimate questions have been raised that require thorough consideration."

Good morning Alicia:

I wanted to forward a draft of the e-mail we'd like to send out to students and staff regarding Mr. Rove's appearance. We usually have to do a bit more "selling" to promote events when the speakers are not as high profile as the candidates themselves. In addition, the appearance falls during exam week, so we'll need to be aggressive about getting the word out. We look forward to a great event! Please let me know if this e-mail copy is acceptable. Many Thanks! - Lou

On Wednesday, May 7th at 1:15 p.m., White House Senior Advisor and Assistant to The President Karl Rove will speak at the NHIOP Auditorium at Saint Anselm College...

Don't miss this unique opportunity to meet the man TIME magazine calls the GOP's "master strategist." Find out what this White House insider and trusted Presidential advisor has to say about the New Hampshire Primary and the 2004 Election.

Mr. Rove oversees the strategic planning, political affairs, public liaison, and intergovernmental affairs efforts of the White House. He is considered the closest person to the President in the West Wing. As one insider says, "Karl has the absolute, utter trust of the President of the United States."

Rove previously served as chief strategist for the Bush for President Campaign and for 18 years before that, president of Karl Rove & Company, an Austin, Texas-based public affairs firm that worked for Republican candidates, non-partisan causes, and non-profit groups. His clients have included over 75 Republican U.S. Senate, Congressional and gubernatorial candidates in 24 states.

As with all NHIOP speakers, the Karl Rove event is free and open to the public and the press. We hope to see you on Wednesday, May 7th at 1:15 p.m.

There may be other words that can be used to do this. But since they have already agreed not to re-file against these particular D's as to these particular docs unless a future trigger is met -- a material change in OHS functions -- that triggering question (of whether such a material change at OHS has indeed occurred) shld not be left to the whim/opinion of EPIC and whichever lawyers they're using next time around. To do so wld render their agreement meaningless and unenforceable -- otherwise they cld re-file next month, we'd move to dismiss based in part on their agreement, and once again we'd be arguing about whether the evidence shows that OHS is an office or an agency.

Attached is a revised stipulation of dismissal which reflects the language Shannen tentatively proposed to plaintiff, subject to your approval. I have added that each side would bear their own fees and costs. Please advise if we can finalize this today. I will be out of the office most of today from 11-12:15; 1:30-4:30. The best "in office" window for me is 12-130. I can be reached on my cell PRA 6 and by blackberry email. If OK to go ahead with this, just leave of voice mail or email. I will not be in tomorrow. Let's get it done today please.

STIPULATION OF DISMISSAL

The parties stipulate and agree that this action shall be and hereby is dismissed without prejudice but on the condition that the plaintiff has agreed not to re-file suit against these defendants seeking the particular documents at issue in this case absent a finding by a court of competent jurisdiction or a stipulation by the Executive Office of the President that there has been a relevant, material change in factual circumstances concerning the function of the Office of Homeland Security. Subject to this condition, all claims and defenses would be preserved in any such future action. Other than as stated herein, there are no other agreements in connection with this stipulation and dismissal. Each side shall bear their own fees and costs.

MEMORANDUM

VIA FAX AND EMAIL

TO: Jay Lefkowitz

Cesar Conda

Brett Kavanaugh

FROM: Michael Horowitz

DATE: April 23, 2003

RE: "Wage Regulation" arguments against Kyl-Cornyn

In addition to material previously sent, I'm attaching the memo prepared today by Joe Matal re the so-called

REV_00389634

"wage regulation" argument that might be used against Kyl-Cornyn. (Pages 8-10 of the Kyl floor statement address the same issue in further detail; the attachment to the e-mail version of this memo includes that excerpt.)

To give context to the Matal memo, and to make absolutely clear that Kyl-Cornyn is not a fee cap bill, consider the following hourly claims that have been made by the tobacco lawyers, and the fees they would be eligible to receive under the bill on the reasonable assumption of a court-authorized $400 per hour fee and 5x multiplier:

- Castano group lawyers: 400,000 hours - $800 million
- NY lawyers: 48,000 hours - $96 million
- Texas lawyers: 36,000 hours - $72 million
- Illinois and Ohio lawyers: 15,000-20,000 hours - $30 million
- Michigan lawyers: 20,000 hours - $40 million
- Wisconsin lawyers: 26,500 hours - $53 million
- California lawyers: 128,000 hours - $256 million

As can be seen, fees authorized under Kyl-Cornyn, even divided among lawyers and across the years of litigation, are well within current CEO compensation.

But entirely aside from the size of legitimate fees under Kyl-Cornyn, please examine Joe Matal's superb memo, compelling in making clear that the bill merely creates a means of enforcing existing law - one that, in recognition of the fiduciary character of the attorney-client relationship, currently requires judicial regulation/supervision/ review of all attorneys' fees in all states.

ISCRAA ISSUES: FREEDOM OF CONTRACT/ WAGE REGULATION

Question: Doesn't ISCRAA set a precedent for having the I.R.S. regulate professionals' salaries and incomes? Doesn't this violate freedom of contract?

Short answer: ISCRAA requires courts, not the I.R.S., to continue doing what they already do: to review attorneys fees for reasonableness. The courts have made very clear that attorneys fee agreements are not analogous to ordinary business contracts – attorneys are fiduciaries, who already are required to charge only reasonable fees by the ethics rules of all 50 States. ISCRAA does not change these substantive requirements; it merely makes them enforceable in an area where there has been gross abuse – the mass tort case.

1. Courts, not the I.R.S., apply the ISCRAA fee formula.

Unlike earlier versions of proposals similar to ISCRAA, the Kyl-Cornyn bill would require courts, not the I.R.S., to apply a fee formula in mass-tort cases. S. 887 requires the court to hire a legal auditing firm to review the attorney's billing records in order to determine a baseline lodestar fee. (See ISCRAA at pp.12-14, §4959(h).) The court then applies ISCRAA's multiplier formula to this lodestar. (See ISCRAA at pp.3-7, §4959(c).) ISCRAA's fee formula is merely a codification of a liberal interpretation of the courts' own practices when awarding reasonable fees in mass-tort cases. And so long as the court obtains and relies on the report of the legal auditing firm, and applies the ISCRAA fee formula, that fee is presumed correct for I.R.S. purposes. (See ISCRAA at p.7, §4959(c)(1)(D).) I.R.S. enforcement is merely a fail-safe mechanism under ISCRAA, designed to ensure that the court sets the fee in accordance with the fee formula. It is the court that has discretion to set the lodestar (the baseline reasonable hours) and to apply an appropriate multiplier; so long as the court does so, the I.R.S. plays no substantive role under ISCRAA.

2. Because lawyers are fiduciaries, courts have explicitly rejected analogies between attorneys fee agreements and other business contracts.

Attorneys long have been acknowledged to be fiduciaries who occupy a position of trust in their dealings with their clients. One obligation that flows from this status, universally recognized in the ethics rules of all 50 States, is the attorney's obligation not to charge an unreasonable or excessive fee. Courts have made very clear that attorneys are not equivalent to ordinary businessmen, who can engage in hard bargaining with their customers. Such behavior cannot be reconciled with an attorney's role as an officer of the court. The courts also have made clear that the requirement that a fee be reasonable will be read into every attorney fee contract, and will supercede terms that are inconsistent with this obligation. (See also Senator Kyl's speech introducing ISCRAA, attached.)

According to the courts:

profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client.”<sup>1</sup>

- “There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup>Kuhnlein v. Department of Revenue, 662 So.2d 309, 313 (Fla. 1995) (emphasis added). See also Gruber & Coabella, P.A. v. Erickson, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

<sup>3</sup>Missouri ex rel. Chase Resorts, Inc. v. Campbell, 913 S.W.2d 832 (Mo. App. 1996) (emphasis added). See also G. Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) (“A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client”).

3. The model rules, and the ethics rules of all 50 States, already require attorneys to charge only reasonable fees.

ISCRAA does not change the substantive law governing attorneys fee awards. Rather, it simply enforces established, pre-existing fiduciary standards that already bind every attorney in every state. The MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, at Rule 1.5(a), contain a clear, direct command that “a lawyer’s fee shall be reasonable.” Similarly, the MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY, at DR 2-106, directs that an attorney “shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee.” The Model Code further explains that an attorney’s fee is “clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee.” Finally, as academic commentators point out, in addition to the model rules, “all state rules of professional conduct prohibit attorneys from charging excessive fees.”<sup>4</sup> (Emphasis added.)

4. Courts already review attorneys fees for reasonableness.

According to the courts:

- “Courts have broad authority to refuse to enforce contingent fee arrangements that award excessive fees. A fee can be unreasonable and subject to reduction without being so ‘clearly excessive’ as to justify a finding of breach of ethical rules.”<sup>5</sup>
- “[R]egardless of how a fee is characterized[,] each fee agreement must be carefully examined on its own facts for reasonableness.”<sup>6</sup>
- “[F]ew propositions are better established than that our courts do retain power of supervision to consider, notwithstanding the agreement, a client’s challenge thereto as unreasonable, unconscionable, exorbitant or for any reason that would move a court of equity to modify it or set it aside.”<sup>7</sup>
- “Despite attorney fee contracts[,] courts may inquire as to the reasonableness of attorney fees as part of their prevailing, inherent authority to regulate the practice of law.”<sup>8</sup>

- “Under a court’s general supervisory power over attorneys as officers of the court, attorney fee contracts are subject to scrutiny for the reasonableness of their terms.”<sup>9</sup>
- “[A]lthough parties are permitted to contract with respect to attorney fees, attorney fees are subject to review and control by the courts. Moreover, the reasonableness of an attorney fee award is always subject to court scrutiny.”<sup>10</sup>
- “As a matter of public policy, courts pay particular attention to fee arrangements between attorneys and their clients[,] and the reasonableness of attorney’s fees is always subject to court scrutiny. An attorney has the burden of showing that a fee contract is fair, reasonable, and fully known and understood by the client.”<sup>11</sup>

[From Senator Kyl’s speech introducing ISCRAA in the Senate:]

Another issue that I will address today is the argument – occasionally raised in opposition to proposals to limit attorneys fees – that such restrictions violate attorneys’ rights to freedom of contract.

“[I]t is uncontroverted today that a lawyer is a fiduciary for, and therefore has a duty to deal fairly with, the client. * * * * Lawyers are fiduciaries because retention of an attorney to exercise ‘professional judgement’ on the client’s behalf necessarily involves reposing trust and confidence in the attorney. Exercising professional judgment requires that the lawyer advance the client’s interests as the client would define them if the client were well-informed.”<sup>13</sup>

The lawyer’s status as fiduciary places limits on his dealings with his client – including with regard to his fee. “An attorney’s freedom to contract with a client is subject to the constraints of ethical considerations.”<sup>14</sup> (New Jersey Supreme Court.) “In setting fees, lawyers are fiduciaries who owe their clients greater duties than are owed under the general law of contracts.”<sup>15</sup> (Massachusetts Appeals Court.) “As a result of lawyers’ special role in the legal system, contracts between lawyer and client receive special scrutiny. * * * * While freedom of contract is the guiding principle underlying contract law, contractual freedom is muted in the lawyer-client and lawyer-lawyer contexts.”<sup>16</sup> (Joseph M. Perillo, law professor.)

The unique status of attorney fee contracts has led courts to reject analogies between such agreements and other business or service contracts. Perhaps the fullest exposition is provided by the Arizona Supreme Court:

“We realize that business contracts may be enforced between those in equal bargaining capacities, even though they turn out to be unfair, inequitable or harsh. However, a fee agreement between lawyer and client is not an ordinary business contract. The profession has both an obligation of public service and duties to clients which transcend ordinary business relationships and prohibit the lawyer from taking advantage of the client. Thus, in fixing and collecting fees the profession must remember that it is ‘a branch of the administration of justice and not a mere money getting trade.’ ABA CANONS OF PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, Canon 12.”<sup>17</sup>

“There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently, and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.”<sup>18</sup>

In order to protect the lawyer’s public role and to enforce his fiduciary obligations, the courts read a reasonableness requirement into every attorney fee contract. “[T]he requirement that a fee be reasonable in amount overrides the terms of the contract, so that an ‘unreasonable’ fee cannot be recovered, even if agreed to by the client.” G. Hazard, Jr. & W. Hodes, THE LAW OF LAWYERING 1. 5:205 Fee Litigation and Arbitration 120 (1998 Supp.).

As one court has stated,

<sup>18</sup>Kuhnlein v. Department of Revenue, 662 So.2d 309, 313 (Fla. 1995) (emphasis added). See also Gruber & Coabella, P.A. v. Erickson, 784 A.2d 758, 760 (N.J.Sup.Ct. 2001) (“Attorneys have never had the right to enforce contractual provisions for more than a fair and reasonable fee. They are not businessmen entitled to charge what the traffic will bear”).

Finally, when assessing whether a fee is reasonable, courts ask whether the fee is proportional to the services that were actually provided. "Fees must be reasonably proportional to the services rendered and the situation presented."<sup>20</sup> (Arizona Supreme Court.) "If an attorney's fee is grossly disproportionate to the services rendered and is charged to a client who lacks full information about all of the relevant circumstances, the fee is 'clearly excessive' * * * even though the client consented to such fee."<sup>21</sup> (West Virginia Supreme Court.)

Because attorneys are fiduciaries, they simply do not have complete freedom of contract in negotiating their fees. An attorney's dealings with his client always must reflect that the client comes to him in a position of trust – and therefore, the attorney's fee always must be reasonable. ISCRAA will help ensure that this important obligation is respected.

Hazard, ETHICS IN THE PRACTICE OF LAW 99 (1978) ("A contract for a [legal] fee is, under general principles of law, a contract between a fiduciary and his protected dependent * * * [and] it is unenforceable unless its terms are fair to the client"); Trinkle v. Leeney, 650 N.E.2d 749, 754 (Ind.Ct.App.1995) ("Under no circumstances is a lawyer entitled to more than the reasonable value of his or her services. [Moreover,] [r]easonable fees are not necessarily determined by the terms of the attorney-client contract").

While it is difficult to believe that six months have nearly passed by since our last meeting, that is the case, Brett. We would like to have our off the record session with you and Judge Gonzales at a time when it is convenient for you both. You do an excellent job of catching us up on what is happening with the groups of records and with records issues. All of us look forward to the sessions.

Warm Wishes,

Martha

Red flags and courtesy
Star-Telegram

One of the Senate Democrats' goals in filibustering the judicial nomination of Miguel Estrada has been to send the Bush administration a wish for more consultation and moderation.

But apparently the White House either hasn't gotten the message or has disregarded it.

In essence, both sides are playing politics while accusing the other of throwing the first punch. This is no way to treat an independent federal judiciary.

The administration might have thought twice before putting forward nominees like James Leon Holmes, a former Arkansas Right to Life leader who has written about the need for women to subordinate themselves to their husbands, or Alabama Attorney General William Pryor Jr. who has advocated less separation between government and religion.

These views do not automatically disqualify someone from being a fair-minded federal judge. Indeed, both men have home-state supporters from both sides of the political aisle.

But by choosing nominees sure to raise red flags, the administration is making clear that it is focused on nominees' conservative views as much, if not more, than their basic qualifications for the bench. And the Democrats balk.

In reality, the majority of President Bush's judicial nominees have been approved with little Democratic opposition.

The Senate confirmed 14 district court judges and two for appellate courts between February and the April recess.

Some have moved forward with surprising speed. Unfortunately, some -- such as Washington, D.C., appellate specialist John Roberts -- are good candidates who have been unduly stalled.

Democrats haven't decided whether to indefinitely block a vote on Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen's nomination to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

They are right to require a full debate on Owen. She is an intelligent, capable jurist with strong academic credentials. But her writings on the Texas Supreme Court -- many of them in dissent on a conservative court -- suggest a judge who prefers narrow rights for plaintiffs but an expansive role for judges in some matters.

Republicans were deliberately provocative when they resurrected Owen's nomination after it had been defeated in the Judiciary Committee. But Democrats would be wrong to deny her the courtesy of an up-or-down Senate vote.

In the interest of the public and the judiciary, someone has to take the first step toward less partisan political wrangling over judicial appointments. How about both sides together?

PFAW: Santorum's Anti-Gay Remarks Fit Pattern of Discrimination; PFAW Calls on President, GOP to Repudiate Santorum's Remarks

REV_00389876

WASHINGTON, April 23 /U.S. Newswire/ -- Referring to the pending Supreme Court case on Texas' so-called "Homosexual Conduct" law, Pennsylvania Republican Senator Rick Santorum said in an Associated Press interview, "If the Supreme Court says that you have the right to consensual (gay) sex within your home, then you have the right to bigamy, you have the right to polygamy, you have the right to incest, you have the right to adultery. You have the right to anything." Later in the interview, Santorum said, "It all comes from, I would argue, this right to privacy that doesn't exist, in my opinion, in the United States Constitution...Whether it's polygamy, whether it's adultery, where it's sodomy, all of those things are antithetical to a healthy, stable, traditional family."

Following is a statement from People For the American Way President Ralph G. Neas.

"Senator Rick Santorum's remarks comparing the protection of Americans' privacy in their own homes to protecting bigamy and incest came as a disappointment, but, sadly, not as a surprise. Santorum's record demonstrates a history of hostility toward equal rights for all Americans, and that hostility is reflected in the attitudes of the Republican Party leaders and the many of the judicial nominees of President Bush."

"Santorum missed an opportunity to apologize for these insensitive comments. Instead, he claimed that his comments were in keeping with his belief that everyone is 'equal under the Constitution.' It is evident from his record that this is not the case. The White House and Santorum's colleagues in the GOP leadership also chose to maintain their silence on Santorum's attack on equal rights. They should repudiate his comments, and affirm an inclusive vision of America where privacy and equal rights are guaranteed for all.

"Since 2001, Santorum, with the president's blessing, has worked to include language specifically authorizing discrimination into a piece of so-called 'faith-based' legislation. Santorum previously admitted that he wanted to allow religious organizations to be able to take public funds but still discriminate against gay people. Fortunately, despite Santorum's position as third-highest ranking Republican in the Senate Leadership, he was forced to remove his divisive provisions from the final version passed in the Senate.

"Santorum's record closely matches that of other far right ideologues. Alabama Attorney General William Pryor -- who is one of President Bush's troubling federal appeals court nominees -- in his state's amicus curiae brief to the Supreme Court in the Texas case equated the right of gay Americans to engage in consensual sex within their own homes to 'activities like prostitution, adultery, necrophilia, bestiality, possession of child pornography, and even incest and pedophilia...'

"The comments of Santorum's spokesperson that he 'has no problem with gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender individuals' rings hollow. Santorum describes gay people as a threat to healthy families. His record supporting discrimination through charitable choice legislation, and his opposition to hate crimes legislation demonstrate instead that Santorum believes gay Americans don't deserve full equality with other Americans.

"The silence from the White House and Republican party leaders about Senator Santorum's comments, combined with Bush's troubling judicial nominees and his executive orders supporting discriminatory hiring in religious institutions, all point to the high stakes in this summer's likely battle for the future of the Supreme Court. Will the next justice support privacy and equal rights for all, or will these and other freedoms be restricted for generations to come?

Bush to nominate Raleigh lawyer

Selection would break impasse in 4th Circuit

By JOHN WAGNER, Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON -- President Bush on Monday intends to nominate Raleigh lawyer Allyson Duncan to serve on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, according to aides in North Carolina Senate offices who have been notified of the White House's plans.

Duncan's name first surfaced publicly in January in a news report in which U.S. Sen. John Edwards, a North Carolina Democrat, said he would likely support her nomination.

Duncan, a black Republican, is a former state appeals court judge and is president-elect of the N.C. Bar Association.

Her confirmation would end a long-running impasse that has kept North Carolina from having any judges on the 4th Circuit, which hears cases from five Southeastern states.

The court is the last stop for federal cases from those states before the U.S. Supreme Court.

In a letter sent this week both to Edwards and U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Dole, a North Carolina Republican, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales said Bush plans Monday to nominate two African-Americans for the 4th Circuit, including "one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina."

REV_00389961

Mike Briggs, Edwards' press secretary, said his office has been notified that Duncan is Bush's choice.

Gonzales describes the second nominee as someone "who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina." The identity of that individual could not be learned Thursday.

In his letter, Gonzales notes that ideally North Carolina should have four or five judges on the 15-member 4th Circuit and that he considers the panel "significantly out of geographic balance."

There are four vacancies on the court.

Feuding between North Carolina's senators has kept the state from having a judge on the panel since 1999. Under Senate tradition, senators have effective veto power over nominees from their states.

The nomination to the 4th Circuit of another North Carolinian, U.S. District Court Judge Terrence Boyle, has been stalled since May 2001.

Edwards has not consented to the nomination, partly in response to the blockage of a string of North Carolina nominees by U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, Dole's Republican predecessor, during the Clinton administration.

After Duncan is nominated, it is unclear how quickly she will get a confirmation hearing.

Mary Brown Brewer, a spokeswoman for Dole, said the senator prefers that Boyle be granted a hearing first since he was nominated first.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

April 23, 2003

Dear Senators Allen, Dole, Edwards, Mikulski, Sarbanes, and Warner:

I write about the status of the four vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

There are 15 authorized seats on the Court of Appeals. Federal law imposes only one requirement for allocation of seats within a circuit -- that each State have at least one judge. Each State in a circuit often has a number of judges sitting in that State that corresponds at least roughly to the State's percentage of the overall population in the circuit or to the percentage of the circuit's caseload that arises from that State. To be sure, such geographic balance is not established in law or binding on the President or Senate. And there often are deviations in some circuits for a variety of historical and other reasons. (I would note, in addition, that judges can move from one State to another State in the circuit after their appointment, as has happened on some occasions in the past.) But this measure is generally a rough baseline for assessing the geographic allocation of seats within a circuit.

Based on this measure, of the 15 authorized seats, it appears that the allocation would roughly resemble the following: North Carolina: 4 or 5, Virginia: 4 or 5, South Carolina: 2 or 3, Maryland: 2 or 3, and West Virginia: 1 or 2. As of now, taking into account that Judge Widener recently notified the President of his intended retirement, the Fourth Circuit is significantly out of geographic balance:

	Baseline Allocation	Current Number of Judges
North Carolina:	4 or 5	0
Virginia:	4 or 5	3
South Carolina	2 or 3	4
Maryland:	2 or 3	2
West Virginia:	1 or 2	2

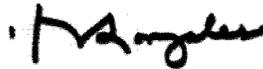

There are four current vacancies on the Court. The four judges who previously occupied these seats maintained their chambers in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland (which is why I have sent this letter to you as the Senators from those States). Judge Terry Boyle of North Carolina was nominated for one vacancy in May 2001. For the three additional vacancies, the President intends to nominate well-qualified and well-respected individuals in a manner that will bring the circuit closer to geographic balance, recognizing that it would take several years and additional vacancies for the circuit to achieve balance and recognizing further that absolute geographic balance is neither legally nor historically required. In particular, the President intends to nominate two such individuals on Monday, April 28 -- one who currently lives in Virginia and has strong roots in and ties to both Virginia and North Carolina and one who currently lives in North Carolina and has served on the state judiciary in North Carolina. Both are African-American, and their confirmations by the Senate will further dismantle an historic barrier. For the last remaining vacancy, the President would intend to submit a nomination no later than September 2003, consistent with the President's commitment to submit nominations within 180 days of receiving notice of an intended retirement or vacancy.

I remain disappointed that Judge Boyle's nomination has been pending for two years. But I am pleased that we otherwise have been able to consult extensively and work cooperatively on other circuit and district nominees in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland. Please feel free to contact me at any time with your thoughts regarding the Fourth Circuit or other issues of concern to you.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The Honorable George Allen
The Honorable Elizabeth Dole
The Honorable John R. Edwards
The Honorable Barbara A. Mikulski
The Honorable Paul S. Sarbanes
The Honorable John W. Warner

Can you have the appropriate person in counsel's office review this?
We have a tight turn around. The policy person on it is Kristen Silverberg, Jay Lefkowitz or Carol Thompson.

Thanks.

Melissa, Jurgen Schrempp, Chair of Daimler Chrysler, is coming from Germany to join the meeting with the President in the Roosevelt Room on Tuesday, 29. Because Schrempp is missing an important board meeting, he is asking to get a letter signed by the Chief to assure his board that the reason for missing his meeting is as important as it is. I am told that Schrempp and Andy know each other well. Marc Lampkin left you a voicemail to this effect today.

I've attached a draft letter that can be edited as you wish. Can you check w/the Chief and see if he is willing to sign this letter? They want to fax it to the board on Monday so that it will get to the board by the time of the meeting on Tuesday morning.

Thanks and let me know if you need additional information. ct

Jurgen E. Schrempp
Chairman, Board of Management
DaimlerChrysler AG
HPC 011

Germany

Dear Mr. Schrempp:

On behalf of the President, I would like to invite you to join him in a meeting at the White House on Tuesday, April 29 to discuss the HIV/AIDS crisis in Africa. The President would like to discuss his Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief to bring desperately needed care and treatment to the people of Africa and have a dialogue with a representative of African nations, medical, faith-based and global relief organizations, and corporate leaders.

DaimlerChrysler plays an active role in fighting the HIV/AIDS epidemic in the southern region of Africa through your comprehensive treatment and prevention work. As Chairman of the Global Business Coalition on HIV/AIDS and the International AIDS Trust, you understand the urgency of the President's effort and recognize the need for a broad based partnership to fight this epidemic. Together we can help in overcoming challenges that face humanity - and make an impact world-wide.

We commend you and DaimlerChrysler for your work to assist the people who live with HIV/AIDS. Hopefully you will be able to join us on April 29.

Sincerely,

Andrew H. Card, Jr.

Event has been formally approved for May 9 in morning in Rose Garden. I am not sure what other time may have been reserved on calendar. May 9 is the 2-year anniversary of his initial 11 nominations, including Estrada and Owen. He will speak on judges, vacancy crisis, confirmation process, judicial independence (which is theme of Law Day this year), etc. Some of the content depends on action in Senate this week. Invitees will be various Senators, bar leaders, etc. Basic ideas are continued advocacy for his well-qualified nominees on the merits and for a fair and constitutional Senate process.

Spurned Clinton nominee wants judge's seat to go to GOP choice Pickering

By JESSE J. HOLLAND

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Hispanic lawyer who was nominated to a federal appeals court by President Clinton but blocked by Republicans is urging Senate Democrats to confirm Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering to the same court despite accusations of racial insensitivity.

Texas lawyer Jorge Rangel called for the confirmation of Pickering, a U.S. District Court judge, for the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in an April letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

His appeal comes as Republicans prepare to step up pressure on Democrats to stop blocking President Bush's judicial nominations when the Senate resumes work Monday.

Rangel often is offered as an example by Democrats that Republicans used the same tactics when a Democrat was making the nominations.

Pickering's nomination to the New Orleans court was blocked last year by Democrats after fierce opposition by the NAACP and other groups criticizing his civil rights record. But Rangel, in a letter to the Judiciary Committee, said Pickering is "free from bias."

"The Charles W. Pickering that I have read about in press reports during the pendency of his current nomination does not comport with the Charles W. Pickering that I have come to know in the last 13 years," said Rangel, who sat on the American Bar Association review panel for Pickering's nomination to the District Court in 1990.

Bush renominated Pickering for the appeals court this year after Republicans took over the Senate, but several Democrats have threatened a filibuster. Republicans have promised to give Pickering another hearing but have not set a date.

"Competent, compassionate, sensitive and free from bias are terms that aptly describe him," said Rangel, a civil law attorney specializing in personal injury, libel and general media litigation.

But some Democrats are not convinced.

"To Senator Leahy and to many other senators, the record of Judge Pickering's poor performance as a federal judge, as well as his actions that violate judicial ethics, are still the most compelling arguments against promoting Judge Pickering to one of the highest courts in the land," said David Carle, spokesman for Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the top Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Meanwhile, Democrats continue to block Hispanic lawyer Miguel Estrada of Washington, D.C., who wants a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Republicans have failed four times to break the Democratic filibuster on Estrada in the almost three months his nomination has been on the Senate floor.

Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, who sits on the Judiciary Committee, said now that the war in Iraq is over, pressure must be increased on Democrats to get confirmation for Estrada and also Texas judge Priscilla Owen.

"We've got to find a way to hold them accountable," said Cornyn, who served on the Texas Supreme Court with Owen.

Senators will return Monday after a two-week recess to debate the nomination of Jeff Sutton of Ohio, who wants a seat on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, which covers federal appeals from Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and Michigan.

Democrats and advocacy groups have complained about Sutton's work as a lawyer against disability rights and federal civil rights, but "I would expect that he would pass," said liberal Democrat Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

Next on the list is Owen, who like Pickering wants a seat on the 5th Circuit in New Orleans, which covers appeals from Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana.

Democrats have not said whether they will filibuster Owen - who many Democrats and liberal groups say is an anti-abortion and pro-business judicial activist.

Owen, in fact, is nominated for the same seat that Clinton wanted for Rangel in July 1997.

But Rangel's blue slips - approval forms signed by home state senators - were never returned by Texas GOP Sens. Kay Bailey Hutchison and the now-retired Phil Gramm. Clinton withdrew his nomination after Republicans refused to schedule a hearing.

Rangel said Pickering tried to salvage his nomination by calling then-Majority Leader Trent Lott to unsuccessfully press for a hearing.

``To this day, I very much appreciate the fact that Judge Pickering reached out to me and offered to help at a time my pleas for a hearing had fallen on deaf ears,'' Rangel said.

Schumer brokers new judge pick

By JAMES GORDON MEEK
DAILY NEWS WASHINGTON BUREAU

Monday, April 28th, 2003

WASHINGTON - President Bush will tap a Hispanic lawyer today for New York's federal bench in a deal that may help Democrats fend off charges they unfairly rejected another Hispanic nominee pushed by Bush.

Sen. Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) said yesterday he has reached an agreement with the White House to nominate Dora Irizarry - a Republican who lost a bid for state attorney general last year - for a vacancy in Brooklyn federal court.

REV_00390500

Irizarry, who would be the first Hispanic in the Eastern District, is "instinctively moderate" and "not extreme in any way," Schumer said, in a reference to conservative Bush nominee Miguel Estrada.

Democratic insiders said Irizarry's nomination is a way for the White House and Democrats to save face by lining up behind a more mainstream Hispanic.

Nicolle Devenish, a White House spokeswoman, said the administration does not comment on judicial candidates.

Schumer has led opposition to the embattled Estrada's nomination to the District of Columbia appeals court.

Senate Democrats launched a filibuster after the White House refused to fork over confidential memos Estrada penned while working for the Bush and Clinton administrations.

Bush has accused Senate Democrats of holding the Honduran immigrant to a "double standard," and administration officials have insisted that such documents are never released.

Schumer called that jab a "cheap" attack, but wouldn't say whether there was a deal in the works to clear Estrada's nomination.

Irizarry, 48, was born in Puerto Rico and reared in New York City. A graduate of Yale and Columbia Law School, she has served as a state criminal and claims court judge and is now in private practice.

Her nomination must be approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate.

Estrada filibuster may galvanize Latino voters

After several failed attempts by Senate Republicans to break a Democratic filibuster, it's starting to look as if Miguel Estrada may never make it to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The controversial Bush nominee may have to settle for the strangest of consolation prizes: his name plastered on bumper stickers in the 2004 election.

Interestingly enough, both parties seem convinced they can use the Estrada saga to help them impress Latino voters. And that would be no small thing. Now the nation's largest minority, Latinos have gone from loyal Democrats to up-for-grabs swing voters who can help decide close races in critical battleground states like Florida, Illinois and New Mexico.

Republicans are sure they can get political mileage out of the fact that Senate Democrats treated Estrada inhospitably. And, just to make sure they don't miss their chance, they're calling out the big guns. Former President George H.W. Bush recently hosted a fund-raiser at his home in Houston to collect money for the political equivalent of an air assault. Guests forked over a quarter of a million dollars to buy television commercials targeting Democratic senators who targeted Estrada and other Bush judicial nominees.

In fact, some of the spots are already airing in four states: Nevada, Arkansas, Indiana and North Carolina. All those states have significant and growing Latino populations -- and Democratic senators seeking re-election in 2004. There are more ads coming in Louisiana, Florida, South Carolina, North Dakota and South Dakota. And just to make sure Latino voters don't miss the point about Democrats and their opposition to Estrada, some Republican spots are in Spanish.

About now, I bet Democrats are having second thoughts about the years they spent fighting the English-only movement.

All Republicans need for their investment to pay off is for Latinos to start asking tough questions -- like why the party of John Kennedy, for all its professed progressivism, seems to have decided that the nation's second-most prominent court is not ready for its first Latino judge. Or why it is that Democrats, even while they insist their beef with Estrada is over his lack of judicial experience, were happy to green-light white nominees who also had never served on the bench. Or why President Bill Clinton, in his two opportunities to appoint a justice to the Supreme Court, failed to nominate a Latino. And why President George W. Bush now seems primed to do just that.

It also wouldn't hurt Republicans if Latinos remembered who went to bat for Estrada. It was a Republican president who first put Estrada's nomination in play, and a Republican-controlled Senate that rallied in support of it. And even when it was clear that the nomination was in trouble, the GOP didn't give up.

You can expect Democrats to answer with their own battery of television commercials, and don't be surprised if they are among the most innovative in recent memory. Democrats have to charge that they actually did the Latino community a favor when they went after Estrada. And to do that, they'll have to tag him an activist whose views (were they only better known) would be so conservative as to put him outside the Latino mainstream.

Shouldn't someone let these guys in on the joke and tell them that -- judging from its views on everything from abortion to vouchers -- the Latino mainstream is conservative?

Besides, whom do Democrats think they're kidding? They were against Estrada's nomination from the moment they realized they couldn't control him, intimidate him or take credit for his success. After all, what fun is it for liberals to put minorities in powerful positions if doing so doesn't leave the benefactors feeling somehow empowered?

To cover their tracks, Senate Democrats managed to convince a handful of Latino advocacy groups to join them in opposing Estrada. But Democrats still have to worry about the people these groups insist they represent -- Latino voters. You remember them? They're the sort of folks who have been known to swell up with pride when one of their own tries to advance and respond angrily when someone else tries to hold him back.

We have 5 seats open tomorrow, but Linda is afraid to give them away w/o asking AMK in case he wants to bring in people for the last day of argument. She's going to ask him if it's ok, but I need their first names.

REV_00391015

United States Senate

WASHINGTON, DC 20510

April 30, 2003

Dear Senators Frist and Daschle,

As the ten newest members of the United States Senate, we write to express our concerns about the state of the federal judicial nomination and confirmation process. The apparent breakdown in this process reflects poorly on the ability of the Senate and the Administration to work together in the best interests of our country. The breakdown also disservices the qualified nominees to the federal bench whose confirmations have been delayed or blocked, and the American people who rely on our federal courts for justice.

We, the ten freshmen of the United States Senate for the 108th Congress, are a diverse group. Among our ranks are former federal executive branch officials, members of the U.S. House of Representatives, and state attorneys general. We include state and local officials, and a former trial and appellate judge. We have different viewpoints on a variety of important issues currently facing our country. But we are united in our commitment to maintaining and preserving a fair and effective justice system for all Americans. And we are united in our concern that the judicial confirmation process is broken and needs to be fixed.

In some instances, when a well qualified nominee for the federal bench is denied a vote, the obstruction is justified on the ground of how prior nominees – typically, the nominees of a previous President – were treated. All of these recriminations, made by members on both sides of the aisle, relate to circumstances which occurred before any of us arrived in the United States Senate. None of us were parties to any of the reported past offenses, whether real or perceived. None of us believe that the ill will of the past should dictate the terms and direction of the future.

Each of us firmly believes that the United States Senate needs a fresh start. And each of us believes strongly that we were elected to this body in order to do a job for the citizens of our respective states – to enact legislation to stimulate our economy, protect national security, and promote the national welfare, and to provide advice and consent, and to vote on the President's nominations to important positions in the executive branch and on our nation's courts.

Accordingly, the ten freshmen of the United States Senate for the 108th Congress urge you to work toward improving the Senate's use of the current process or establishing a better process for the Senate's consideration of judicial nominations. We acknowledge that the White House should be included in repairing this process.

All of us were elected to do a job. Unfortunately, the current state of our judicial confirmation process prevents us from doing an important part of that job. We seek a bipartisan solution that will protect the integrity and independence of our nation's courts, ensure fairness for judicial nominees, and leave the bitterness of the past behind us.

Yours truly,

MEASURING PENSION LIABILITIES

Testimony of the Honorable Peter R. Fisher
Under Secretary for Domestic Finance
U.S. Department of the Treasury

Before the Subcommittee on Select Revenue Measures
Committee on Ways and Means
United States House of Representatives

April 30, 2003

Chairman McCrery, Ranking Member McNulty, and members of the Committee, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss with you the need to strengthen Americans' retirement security by measuring accurately pension liabilities.

There is a pension funding problem in America today. Although Wall Street firms estimate that current pension underfunding runs to hundreds of billions of dollars, the markets do not have accurate, timely data on corporate pension liabilities. The absence of a clear picture of the extent of defined benefit pension underfunding creates a cloud of uncertainty in equity markets. Moreover, without an accurate measure of liabilities, the minimum funding rules, which rely upon an accurate measurement of pension liabilities, could lead to insufficient (or excessive) funding of pension promises.

To deal with this challenge, an important step is to develop a more accurate, reliable, and timely measure of pension liabilities.

As we go about this task, we must remember that behind all the technical details we will discuss is the retirement security of hardworking Americans. Our ultimate goal must be to improve pension security for workers and retirees by strengthening the financial health of the voluntary defined benefit pension system that they rely upon. That system is complex, with many interdependent parts. Achieving our objective of secure pensions requires that those pensions be well-funded, that plan sponsors be able and willing to support the defined benefit system, and that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation's financial integrity be assured. All three of these groups have an interest in a sustainable program, so all have an interest in getting to the right solution. In addition, any changes we undertake need to be implemented in a manner that promotes the stability and resiliency of our financial system and financial markets.

Before proceeding, let me first note that H.R. 1776, the Pension Preservation and Savings Expansion Act of 2003, recognizes the urgency of pension reform and of promoting retirement security. Its chief sponsors, Congressmen Portman and Cardin, are to be commended for their leadership in this complex, but critical area of public policy. I would also note that H.R. 1000, the Pension Security Act of 2003, introduced by Rep. Boehner advances principles for improving the defined contribution system that the President set forth last year. My testimony, however, will focus just on the issue of measuring pension liabilities.

In our view, overall pension reform that will lead to more secure pensions for American workers and retirees requires three steps: first, develop a more accurate, reliable, and timely measure of pension liabilities; second, fix the pension funding rules; and third, establish transition rules so as to avoid an abrupt change in firms' funding plans.

The predicate step to making pensions more secure is to develop a more precise measurement of pension liabilities. My testimony today will focus on this critical step and, in particular, on the issue of replacing the 30-year Treasury rate as the discount rate used in measuring pension liabilities. As I will explain, it is critical that Congress develop an appropriate, permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in measuring pension liabilities. However, there are many critical questions that need to be answered before settling upon that replacement. Thus, to give firms the certainty they need to plan for their short-term pension funding obligations, we recommend extending the current temporary corridor for two more years. At the same time, we need to begin work immediately on getting to that permanent replacement and to dealing with other problems with the current system.

Discounting Future Pension Benefit Payments to Today's Dollars

Making pensions more secure requires a more precise measurement of pension liabilities. The amount of pension liabilities determines a plan sponsor's annual funding obligation. Without a reliable measure of pension liabilities, plan sponsors may not contribute sufficient funds to their pension plan – or may contribute more than they need to for the obligations undertaken.

In addition, without accurate, reliable measures neither plan beneficiaries, investors, nor the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation know how big the pension obligation may be for a given firm. Investors that do not have a clear picture of a company's pension liabilities factor that uncertainty into their credit evaluation of the firm, raising its borrowing costs and lowering its stock price.

In order to get to a more accurate measure of pension liabilities, we need to agree on how to discount future benefit payments to today's dollars. After describing why this is so, I will then describe why we believe that we should be working towards a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in measuring pension liabilities.

Using a Discount Rate to Measure Pension Liabilities

Pension liabilities are measured as the discounted present value of the future benefit payments to be made to a pension plan's participants. These future benefit payments depend upon numerous factors, including the terms of the particular plan and actuarial and mortality assumptions about plan participants.

To get the present value – that is, the cost in today's dollars of these future payments – those future payments must be “discounted” by some interest rate to show how many dollars today are equivalent to those payments in the future. As the interest rate that is used to discount future benefit payments declines, the value of those liabilities increases.

A simple example explains this concept. Suppose someone was offered the choice between $100 today and $110 a year from now. If that person could invest $100 today at a 10 percent annual return, the two offers would have the same economic value. If however, interest rates were lower and the person could only earn 5 percent annually, the offers would not have the same economic value. Instead, the person would need to be offered $104.76 today for the offers to be economically equivalent. Thus as interest rates decline, the amount of money a pension plan needs today (to have in discounted present value terms the amount of money needed to make future benefit payments) increases.

Background on the Use of the 30-Year Treasury Rate

Federal law sets minimum funding rules for private pension plans. These rules reflect the complex actuarial work needed to determine the amount of assets that a plan should hold to meet its benefit obligations many years into the future. One of the most important of these rules is the interest rate for discounting pension liabilities. Since 1987, the law has used the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds as the basis for this interest rate. The measurement of a pension plan's liabilities calculated using this rate is the basis for the federal “backstop” funding rules applied to underfunded pension plans.

Congress chose the 30-year Treasury rate as an approximation of interest rates used in the group annuity market. In other words, Congress wanted a discount rate that would reflect how much an insurance company would charge a pension plan to assume responsibility for the plan's benefit obligations.

Although additional refinements have occurred since 1987, the rate on the 30-year Treasury bond continues to play a prominent role in determining pension liabilities for funding purposes. Until recently, pension plans could determine the value of their pension liabilities using any rate between 90 percent and 105 percent of the four-year moving average of the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds. As I will explain shortly, last year, Congress temporarily increased the upper end of this corridor to 120 percent. Note that the upper end of the corridor produces a larger discount rate and hence a smaller measured liability and a smaller funding requirement. The lower end of the corridor produces the reverse – a larger measured liability and hence greater required funding.

However, the Treasury Department does not believe that using the 30-year Treasury bond rate produces an accurate measurement of pension liabilities.

Why We Need to Replace the 30-Year Rate in Measuring Pension Liabilities

The discontinuation of the issuance of the 30-Year bond – which was part of much needed changes in Treasury financing of government debt – makes replacement of the 30-year rate in pension law necessary. However, we believe that regardless of whether the discontinuation had occurred or not, there was already growing evidence and concern that the 30-year Treasury was becoming less relevant as a benchmark for use in pension calculations.

One reason the 30-year Treasury has become less relevant is because of changes in pensions themselves. The lengthy time structure of the 30-year bond makes it less and less relevant when compared to the shortening time structure of the payments of many defined benefit pension plans. This shortened time structure is the consequence of the increasing average age of active and terminated deferred participants and the increased proportion of participants represented by retirees. Using a long-term rate to discount all pension obligations understates the true cost of obligations that will be paid sooner whenever the yield curve is upward sloping (as is true now and is generally the case).

In addition, changes in the Treasury bond market and in financial markets more broadly have made the 30-year Treasury rate less reflective of the cost of group annuities and less accurate as a benchmark for pension liabilities. The difference between the Treasury yield curve and a high-grade corporate bond curve is not fixed, and that spread is wider today than it was in 1987.

In response to these concerns, last year Congress provided for a temporary expansion of the upper range of the allowable corridor surrounding the 30-year Treasury for calculating the interest rate used to determine current liability. This temporary change expires at the end of this year. In the absence of a permanent replacement or an extension of last year's expansion of the upper range, the law will "snap back" to 105 percent as the upper end of the corridor.

Such an outcome would, in our view, increase the discrepancy between the discount rate mandated in the law and that used to price group annuities. And since minimum funding rules are based upon measured (current) liabilities, a discount rate that further distorts that measurement will also distort the funding requirements.

Consequently, we believe that Congress should take action this year to avoid this "snap back." And, since firms need to make plans now for the funding contributions they will make next year, we also believe that Congress needs to act quickly on this matter.

Finding a Permanent Replacement for the 30-year Treasury Rate

We need to get to a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in computing pension liabilities.

H.R. 1776 offers a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury with a measure based upon long-term high-quality corporate bond rates. We believe that moving from a Treasury full faith and credit discount rate to one based on rates on high-quality long-term corporate bonds could improve the accuracy of measuring pension liabilities. Pension benefit promises made by private sponsors are not without risk since pension sponsors, unlike the Federal government, can and do go out of business. We think that this risk should be reflected in the computation of pension liabilities. We also understand that high-grade corporate bond rates are used in group annuity pricing.

Before Congress selects any permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate, however, it will be necessary to consider several key issues, including the following.

First, different pension plans have different benefit payment schedules, some with quite immediate payment requirements and others whose expected payments are distant in the future. We know that the yields available on financial instruments are different for these different maturities; typically yields relevant to closer maturities are lower. Thus the question arises whether an accurate present value measurement of these different benefit payments – some made in the near-term and some in the distant future – should be discounted at rates appropriate to their respective timing.

Both economic theory and current practice in fixed-income markets suggest that the most accurate way to measure the present value of a stream of future cash flows would be to match the cash flows occurring at a particular time with a discount rate that reflects the interest rate on a portfolio of financial instruments with the same maturity date. In this way, the discount rates used would be reflecting the time structure of the cash flows. In principle, an accurate measurement of pension liabilities, which is the present value of a series of benefit payments to be made over time, could be more accurately measured if the discount rate used was related to the time structure of those benefit payments.

Thus, we suggest it would be important to consider whether and how to reflect the time structure of a pension plan's future benefit payments in determining the appropriate discount rate to use.

Second, under current law, the measurement of both assets and liabilities involve "smoothing" techniques, as do the funding requirements. Properly measured, pension liabilities are the cost in today's prices of meeting a pension plan's future obligations. If a pension plan's obligations were to be settled today in the group annuity market, their value would be determined using today's interest rates rather than an average of rates over the past several years, which is the current practice.

Using current, unsmoothed interest rates would promote transparency. An accountant or analyst evaluating a pension plan can readily determine the funded status of the plan if asset values are expressed at current market prices and liabilities are computed using current unsmoothed discount rates. When either or both of these measures are smoothed, however, it is very difficult to determine the plan's funded status with any degree of certainty. While there may be sound reasons to measure current interest rates for discounting purposes using something other than the spot rates on a particular trading day, the current practice of using a four-year average of interest rates raises important questions as to the accuracy of the resulting liability measurement.

Thus, we suggest that consideration be given to whether continuing this practice advances the ultimate objective. It may be that there are compelling arguments to allow for some smoothing with respect to the funding contributions that plan sponsors make to their pension plans. We need to carefully review whether four-year smoothing of the discount rate used for purposes of measuring a pension plan's liabilities continues to make sense.

Third, under current law, pension liabilities are calculated using one discount rate but lump sum payments made by pension plans are calculated using a different discount rate. The pension liability measurement we are discussing is the basis for funding contributions to be made by plan sponsors – some of which will ultimately fund workers' annuity pension payments but some of which will be paid to workers in the form of a lump sum. Thus, we suggest that it would be worth considering whether and how a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate in measuring pension liabilities should relate to any possible changes in the discount rate used to calculate lump sum payments.

To this point, my remarks have focused on issues to consider in selecting a permanent replacement discount rate for measuring pension liabilities. While these issues are critical to the goal of achieving an accurate measurement of those liabilities, there are additional issues unrelated to the discount rate replacement that should also be considered.

Thus, we suggest that, in the process of working towards a more accurate measurement of pension liabilities, the mortality table and the retirement assumptions that underlie the computation of current liability also be evaluated. There is also the question of whether a sponsor in computing current liability should be allowed to recognize that some retirees opt for lump sums rather than annuities at retirement. Under current law current liability assumes that all retirees take their retirement in the form of an annuity. These questions require further study.

I believe that we all need to consider the issues that I have just described to ensure that any permanent replacement to the 30-year Treasury rate results in an accurate measurement of pension liabilities. The consequence of failing to replace the 30-year Treasury rate with an appropriate discount rate methodology will lead to inaccurate measurement of pension liabilities. Such an outcome, in turn, will lead to under- or over-funding of pension plans. The former outcome would make pensions less secure for workers and retirees. The latter outcome could place an undue burden on plan sponsors by shifting more corporate funds to the pension plan than are necessary to fund the company's pension obligations.

Interim Steps

Companies have told us that they need to know what their cash requirements are for funding next year's funding obligation by the end of the second quarter of this year, but further work is needed to define an accurate measurement of pension liability. While we have considered alternatives to the discount rate methodology proposed in H.R. 1776, we are not yet to the point of offering a specific replacement. Yet we agree with those who say that quick congressional action on modifying current law is essential, both because in the absence of such action the law reverts to a discount rate methodology that would be even more distorting than the current rate and because plan sponsors need certainty soon in order to plan for next year's funding requirements.

To that end, we recommend that Congress enact legislation before the end of this June to extend the short-term interest rate corridor relief that Congress provided in 2002. We would propose that, for plan years beginning in 2004 and 2005, the upper bound of the interest rate corridor for the deficit reduction contribution continue to be 120 percent of the 4-year weighted average of the yield on 30-year Treasury securities.

During the time offered by the two year extension, we would look forward to working with Congress and pension stakeholders to work through the complex but critical issues I have described that must be addressed to ensure accurate pension liability measurement and, more importantly, advance our ultimate objective of making pensions more secure.

The change in the method of determining pension liabilities may result in changes in the annual contribution amounts, so transition relief will be required. In addition, these changes may lead us to consider changes in the current funding rules which would increase the security of the pension promises made to America's workers and their families.

I would like to stress the need for quick action on this temporary extension of the corridor. This action is needed to give companies time to budget for next year's funding obligation. At the same time, however, we must also move quickly to deal with the complex questions I have outlined in my testimony. We need to work expeditiously to come up with a permanent solution, not just for how best to measure liabilities but also for the funding rule changes that are needed. The testimony you are about to receive from PBGC's Executive Director Steve Kandarian illustrates the urgency of the work before us. We look forward working with you to advance this interim solution and to satisfy the long-term need for accuracy in the measurement of pension liabilities.

Conclusion

Defined benefit pensions are a valuable benefit and the cornerstone of many workers' retirement security. Recent financial market trends have exposed underlying weaknesses in the system, weaknesses that must be corrected if that system is to remain viable in the long run. It will take considerable time and effort to fix the system. Developing acceptable solutions will also require the cooperation and flexibility of all interested parties.

While we must avoid unnecessary delay, the seriousness of current pension problems and the complexity of the defined benefit system suggest that repairing the system will require time for study and for consensus building. That is why we recommend that Congress, rather than making a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate this year, extend for an additional two year period the temporary increase of the pension discount rate used to compute current liability.

During this two year period government, industry, and participants will have adequate time to develop a set of consistent coherent proposals that will insure that pension funding is adequate, that pension demands on firm finances are reasonable and that the financial integrity of the pension insurance system will be maintained for the workers and retirees that are counting on it for their retirement security. [To paraphrase Robert Frost, we have promises to keep, but we still have some miles to go before we can sleep. -- WA]

DOJ is threatening to "investigate" every Ohio state-owed facility, building, parking lot, etc. for allegedly failing to conduct a self-evaluation and transition plan for compliance under the American with Disabilities Act. This investigation is to begin in June.

This is a long story...bottom line is we need to have a conversation with someone above the Disability Rights Section in the DOJ Civil Rights Division to resolve the issue. My attorneys tell me DOJ is on unstable legal grounds but won't relent or have a reasonable discussion.

Downward spiral? J.J. Gass <> , Associate Counsel, Democracy Program, Brennan Center for Justice <> at NYU School of Law <> , sends an email bearing the title "Two Years is Too Long." In it, he writes:

A clever title for Sen. Cornyn's press release. It's a nice hook for a hearing to be held on the second anniversary of some appointments that haven't been finally acted upon (although I think it's not particularly fair to count Owen against the Democrats, since they did act definitively on her in the last Congress). But does it represent a "downward spiral of partisan obstruction," as the subtitle has it? I think these data are interesting. Credit goes to Professor Wendy Martinek and her colleagues for maintaining a database of federal judicial appointments from which these results have been drawn.

Nineteen of President Clinton's appointees waited for at least two years before being confirmed, returned (i.e., never voted on), or withdrawn (i.e., they waited more than two years, didn't get a vote, and gave up). Of those nineteen, eight were circuit court nominees and eleven were district court nominees. A further breakdown is at the end of this e-mail.

I think those of us who follow your blog are pretty familiar with the current nominees whom the Republicans consider their best (or worst) cases, e.g., Estrada or Cook. Here are some of the Democrats' potentially best (or worst) "you started it" cases:

Helene White was nominated to the Sixth Circuit shortly before President Clinton completed his first term, and the nomination died four years later, near the end of his second term, without ever being voted on (actually, it didn't formally die until President Bush withdrew the nomination in March 2001);

Richard Paez was confirmed to the Ninth Circuit 4 years, 1 month, and 13 days after being nominated;

Willie Fletcher was confirmed to the same court a little under 3 1/2 years after being nominated; and

James Beaty waited almost three years without a vote on his Fourth Circuit nomination, then gave up (he goes into the special category of North Carolina 4th Cir. appointees; whether and how to "count against the Republicans" Sen. Helms's blocking of all such nominees is a matter of interpretation).

Also interesting to note that some of the nominations that are currently controversial are to seats that Clinton also had a hard time filling. For instance, Estrada and Roberts are nominated to D.C. Circuit seats for which Clinton made nominations (Elena Kagan and Allen Snyder) in 1999. And there's the Fifth Circuit seat to which Justice Owen has been twice nominated: Clinton nominated Jorge Rangel to that seat in 1997, and then appointed Enrique Moreno to the same seat in 1999 after Rangel gave up (neither nomination is counted in the statistics above because neither was separately pending for more than two years). Clinton actually renominated Moreno in January 2001, during the 107th Congress, so President Bush had to withdraw the Moreno nomination in order to nominate Owen on May 9, 2001--one of the nominations whose second anniversary will be celebrated/decried at the hearing.

In all, fodder for interesting discussion, though whether we can expect much that's genuinely interesting or remotely disinterested from either side at Sen. Cornyn's hearing is at best uncertain. If the system as it operates today is broken, I think there's a good case to be made that it's been broken for a while. On the other hand, there is also an argument that the advent of the filibuster is qualitatively different from what the Republicans did with Clinton's nominee, hence the subtitle of Cornyn's hearing: "When a majority is denied its right to consent." And on the third hand, failing to hold hearings or bring nominees to the floor, to say nothing of honoring a single home-state senator's withholding of blue slips (see J. Helms) or even a non-home-state senator's anonymous holds (see C. Burns) on a large number of nominees can also be characterized as denying a majority its right to consent; Jeffrey Sutton's confirmation yesterday shows that even controversial nominees can pick up a few votes from the other party. But on the fourth hand, Bush has been in office only a little more than two years, so there hasn't been as much time for long-term languishing nominations to pile up. But on the fifth, there were more than a dozen Clinton nominees who were appointed between around 1 1/2 years before the end of Clinton's second term and who never got acted on, plus cases like Rangel & Moreno where vacancies existed for several years, but the Clinton administration switched nominees.

On the whole, my view of the evidence is that unless one is in principle against filibusters, it's hard to claim that the Democrats are behaving any worse than the Republicans did under Clinton. Whether that justifies what they're doing is another question, of course, and I suppose some people would say that neither party has done anything wrong and that these tactics are appropriate when dealing with lifetime appointments to the third branch.

The breakdown:

Five circuit court nominees were confirmed after waiting for two years or more, two had been pending for more than two years when the 106th Congress concluded in 2000, and one was pending for almost three years when the 105th Congress ended in 1998 and was not renominated in the 106th Congress. Three district court nominees were confirmed after a wait of at least two years, four had been pending for more than two years at the end of the 106th Congress, four had been pending for more than two years at the end of the 105th Congress and were not renominated, and one (Ronnie White) had been pending for more than two years when he was voted down. It should be noted that to be pending for two years, a nominee must have been renominated at least once; all of the nominees whose quests ended in the 105th Congress, therefore, were originally nominated in the 104th and didn't get a vote in either Congress.

There were also 14 nominations that had been pending between 15 and 21 months when the 106th Congress ended in December 2000 and nine nominations between 1994 and 1999 that were withdrawn before two years had passed.

Subject: ISCRAA (Kyl-Cornyn)

Brett: I understand through the rumor mill that you are one of the people who has been asked to look at S.887, the Kyl-Cornyn attorneys fee bill. I have also heard that some business groups have expressed concern that the bill sets a precedent for having the IRS regulate businessmen's salaries. To address this issue, I've written a memo (attached) that explains that the bill has courts, not the IRS, apply the fee formula to mass-tort attorneys. (This is one of the parts of the original Horowitz bill that Senator Kyl has changed.) The memo also quotes authorities making clear that courts have always distinguished lawyers, as fiduciaries, from ordinary businessmen, and that lawyers already are subject to ethical rules requiring them to charge only reasonable fees. The memo contains at the end the portion of Senator Kyl's speech addressing this issue in greater depth.

to Senate offices yesterday declaring that it "strongly supports passage of S. 887." I am working with ATR (and other groups) to persuade state governors to ask their Senators to cosponsor the bill.

Additionally, I have included with this email our basic information packet on ISCRAA, and, for completeness, Senators Kyl and Cornyn's full, footnoted speeches introducing S.887. Senator Kyl's speech addresses issues of access to justice, freedom of contract, why ISCRAA will apply to only a few cases a year, and retrospective effect. Senator Cornyn's speech addresses (at the end) the issue of why the excessive portion of an attorneys fee is the property of (and must be restored to) the client. The bulk of Senator Cornyn's speech addresses the gross corruption involved in the tobacco settlement fee awards.

Please do not hesitate to call me if you have any questions about how ISCRAA works or any other aspect of the bill. We plan to try to do this bill on reconciliation, meaning that it will only need 50 votes. By our head count, it will be decided by just a few votes. How the Administration comes down could very well be decisive for this bill - and whether we allow 20 billionaire tort lawyers to turn this country into the ATLA version of post-Soviet Russia.

On 1, we have made our position clear to the Senators and Senator Hatch that, consistent with the policy of the Committee for the last 25 years, a blue slip is not a veto and that hearings and votes should be held on all nominees at least when (as here) there has been adequate consultation.

I wanted to check with you to see if you thought we should comment on 3 additional questions by the reporter from the Free Press -

- 1 - Will the White House at some point ask Sen. Hatch to move forward, regardless of the blue slips?
- 2 - Would the White House consider moving the seats to another state in the 6th circuit?
- 3 - Is it true that the White House considered giving a district court seat to Judge Helen White?

The reporter will likely characterize the back and forth as a stalemate and indicate there is little hope for progress. Sens. Levin and Stabenow are particularly focused on the seat that White was nominated for. They claim this seat can't be legitimately claimed to be one where a GOP president could nominate because the delays were so extraordinary.

One other point about this email warrants mention. You say it is largely intended for WH and NSC use, but no one at the WH or NSC requested this work and some raised questions about the document request. We ultimately approved it, as you know, but I still wanted to note that point so that there was no confusion. Thx.

Brett:

To confirm our telephone conversation just now, we will be looking for a fax (to 202-663-1289) of the letter from the White House Counsel's Office paving the way for Department of State access to the Clinton White House records on the Middle East Peace Process, 1999-2001.

The timetable for our project, which is intended largely for White House and NSC use, has been adversely affected by the unexpected delays in the access process.

Brett,
I'd like to highlight the five nominees who were nominated two years ago
May 9, as you suggested.
After I talk about them, how many others are also waiting? I saw a number in here -- 22 nominees pending, total. So can I assume that in addition to the five who have been waiting two years, there are 17 others who have been waiting as well?
The document below hinted at that but I wanted to double-check.
Colleen

PRESIDENT BUSH'S 22 PENDING NOMINEES TO THE U.S. COURTS OF APPEALS SHOULD RECEIVE PROMPT SENATE CONFIRMATION
(April 30, 2003)

America is facing a judicial vacancy crisis in the federal courts of appeals.

- The U.S. Courts of Appeals are nearly 15% vacant, with 24 vacancies out of 167 authorized seats.
  - The Sixth Circuit (Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee) has 5 vacancies on a 16-judge court, and the D.C. Circuit has 4 vacancies on a 12-judge court.
- Caseloads in the federal courts continue to grow dramatically. Filings in the federal appeals courts reached an all-time high again last year.
- The Chief Justice recently warned that the current number of vacancies, combined with the rising caseloads, threatens the proper functioning of the federal courts. He asked the Senate to provide every nominee a prompt up-or-down vote.
- The Secretary of the Judicial Conference stated in 2002 that the shortage of judges is “staggering,” and the American Bar Association called the situation an “emergency.”

The President has proposed a commonsense plan that will end the vacancy crisis and ensure an orderly and predictable judicial appointments process, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.

- The President has proposed a plan in which judges provide at least one-year notice before retirement (which builds on existing Judicial Conference policy), Presidents submit nominations within 180 days of learning of a possible vacancy, and the Senate holds a hearing within 90 days of a nomination and holds an up-or-down vote within 180 days of a nomination. This plan should apply now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate.
- The President's plan ensures (i) that a new judge is ready to take office at or near the time that a current judge actually retires, (ii) that the Senate has ample time to evaluate nominees, and (iii) that all Senators have their voices heard and votes counted.
- The President's plan is consistent with and builds upon recommendations of the Chief Justice, the American Bar Association, and independent outside groups -- as well as statements on multiple occasions in 2000 by Senator Leahy in which he expressly agreed with then-Governor Bush that every judicial nominee is entitled to a timely up-or-down Senate vote. The 2002 ABA report stated the basic principle: “Vote them or down, but don't hang them out to dry.”

President Bush's 22 appeals court nominees have been subjected to extraordinary delays. They deserve up-or-down Senate votes as soon as possible.

- Of the 22 pending nominees, 10 were nominated in 2001 and have had to wait nearly two years for Senate votes. Indeed, 5 of the President's 11 original nominees from May 9, 2001, still await Senate votes (Estrada, Roberts, Boyle, Owen, and Cook).
- More appeals court nominees have had to wait over a year for a hearing in President Bush's Presidency than in the last 50 years combined.
- The delays have occurred despite the crisis in the appeals courts. Of the 22 nominees, 18 have been nominated to fill seats classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Judicial Conference of the United States.
- In recent months, Democrat Senators have filibustered Miguel Estrada to prevent an up-or-down Senate vote. They have sought memos never before sought from the Department of Justice for an appeals court nominee. And they have forced Estrada to answer questions about his personal views that past nominees have not been required to answer. This is an extraordinary escalation of the obstruction and bitterness that President Bush has sought to permanently overcome, including with his proposed plan for timely consideration of judicial nominees. There has never before been a successful filibuster to prevent an up-or-down floor vote on an appeals court nominee.
- Some Democrats are now filibustering Priscilla Owen, not because they do not know enough, but because they differ with her alleged philosophy. This ideological use of the filibuster is unprecedented.

President Bush's 22 pending appeals court nominees are highly qualified and respected individuals of experience, intellect, character, and bipartisan support.

- Of the 22 pending nominees, 15 have served as judges (including 3 on state supreme courts, 5 on federal district courts, and 7 on state lower courts). Of the 7 remaining nominees, 4 have served in high-ranking positions in the U.S. Department of Justice, two as state attorney generals, and one as Deputy Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services for President Bush.
- All of the nominees who have been rated have received "well-qualified" or "qualified" ratings from the American Bar Association, which Democrat Senators Leahy and Schumer have referred to as the "gold standard."

The 10 appeals court nominees who have been waiting since 2001 for a vote are:

- Miguel Estrada, nominee to the D.C. Circuit, has argued 15 cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and has worked as a federal prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Solicitor General, and Supreme Court law clerk for Justice Kennedy. Estrada came to America as a teenager who spoke virtually no English, and if confirmed would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit. He represented a capital defendant pro bono before the Supreme Court. He is supported by prominent Democrat lawyers such as Seth Waxman and Ron Klain and received a unanimous well-qualified ABA rating.

- John Roberts, nominee to the D.C. Circuit, is one of the nation's most respected Supreme Court lawyers, having argued 38 cases before the Supreme Court and served as Deputy U.S. Solicitor General and Associate White House Counsel. He clerked for Supreme Court Justice Rehnquist. He is supported by prominent Democrat lawyers such as Lloyd Cutler and Seth Waxman and received a unanimous well-qualified ABA rating.
- Judge Terrence Boyle, nominee to the 4th Circuit (North Carolina), was unanimously confirmed to be a federal district judge in 1984 and has served with distinction since, now as Chief Judge. Judge Boyle has been appointed twice by Chief Justice Rehnquist to serve on Judicial Conference committees and has sat by designation on the Fourth Circuit. The former chairman of the state Democratic Party supports Judge Boyle's nomination, stating that he gives everyone "a fair trial."
- Justice Priscilla Owen, nominee to the 5th Circuit (Texas), has served on the Texas Supreme Court since 1994. In her successful reelection bid in 2000, every major newspaper in Texas endorsed her. She is supported by a bipartisan group of 15 past Presidents of the state bar, 3 former Democrat Justices of the Texas Supreme Court, and the former head of Legal Aid of Central Texas. She received a unanimous well-qualified ABA rating.
- Judge Charles Pickering, nominee to the 5th Circuit (Mississippi), was unanimously confirmed to be a federal district judge in 1990. He was rated well-qualified by the ABA. He has a long record of advancing race relations in Mississippi: investigating and prosecuting the KKK in the 1960's, sending his daughters to newly integrated public schools, hiring the first African-American staffer for the state party in 1976, representing African-Americans in private practice, chairing a Jones County committee on racial progress, and serving on the board of the Mississippi Institute for Racial Reconciliation. He is strongly supported by local African-Americans and Democrats, including Democrat Governor Musgrove, Attorney General Moore, and former Clinton Administration Assistant Attorney General Frank Hunger, as well as Sixth Circuit Judge Damon Keith and U.S. District Judge Henry Wingate.
- Justice Deborah Cook, nominee to the 6th Circuit (Ohio), has served as a Justice on the Ohio Supreme Court since she was elected in 1994 and then re-elected in 2000. She served for four years before that as a state trial judge. Before becoming a judge, she was the first woman partner at Akron's oldest law firm. She also has been extensively involved in community service activities and has broad support in Ohio. She established a foundation to pay the college tuition for disadvantaged children currently in grade school. She received a qualified ABA rating.

- Judge David McKeague, nominee to the 6th Circuit (Michigan), was unanimously confirmed by the Senate to be a federal district judge in 1992. He served in private practice for 25 years before that and is widely respected for his intellect and integrity. He received a well-qualified ABA rating.
- Judge Susan Neilson, nominee to the 6th Circuit (Michigan), has been a judge on the Michigan 3rd Judicial Circuit Court since 1991. She has more than 10 years of experience in private practice and was co-editor and author of Michigan Civil Procedure, a two-volume treatise on all areas of Michigan civil practice that received an award from the State Bar of Michigan. Judge Neilson is also active in numerous community service organizations. She received a unanimous well-qualified ABA rating.
- Judge Henry Saad, nominee to the 6th Circuit (Michigan), has served since 1994 on the Michigan Court of Appeals. In his re-election, he received broad bipartisan support, including endorsements from the Michigan Chamber of Commerce and the UAW. Since 1996, Judge Saad has taught legal ethics at Wayne State University Law School. He received the Arab-American and Chaldean Council Civic and Humanitarian Award for Outstanding Dedication to Serving the Community with Compassion and Understanding in 1995. He received a qualified ABA rating.
- Judge Carolyn Kuhl, nominee to the 9th Circuit (California), currently serves as a state trial judge on the Superior Court in California. She clerked for then-Judge Anthony Kennedy on the 9th Circuit, worked as an adviser to Attorney General Smith, and served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States. She then became a partner at a leading Los Angeles law firm. She is supported by prominent Democrats such as Vilma Martinez, former President of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, and Ron Olson, as well as a bipartisan group of 23 women judges on the Los Angeles Superior Court. She received a well-qualified ABA rating.

The term "regional appeals courts" excludes the "U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit," which technically is a "U.S. Court of Appeals" but is a specialized court that handles patent cases and the like and is not usually considered of the same stature as the regional appeals courts (i.e., D.C. Circuit and First through Eleventh Circuits).

Good Morning - Attached, please find a letter for the DePelchin Luncheon - below is the background info on the request and organization.
Ideally, we would really like to have this in the mail on Monday.
Thank you!

- it was requested by Jack Oliver.
- for the 5th annual DePelchin Children's Center luncheon Thursday, May 8.
- at the luncheon Dr. Peggy B. Smith will be given the Kezia DePelchin award.
- President(41) & Mrs. Bush were the first recipients of the Kezia DePelchin
award.
- Jane Seymour is the guest speaker.

-A bit about DePelchin.
DePelchin has had the privilege of serving Houston for over 110 years. The agency was created in 1892 to shelter orphaned children, but, over the years, due to the ever changing needs of the community, they have expanded and adapted. DePelchin Children's Center is the largest and most comprehensive provider of children's social and mental health services in the greater Houston area serving more than 27,000 clients through 30 programs in 60 locations. (I have also attached a fact sheet)

April 29, 2003

I am pleased to send greetings to everyone gathered for the 5th annual DePelchin Children's Center Luncheon. Thank you and your members for the selfless service you have given to the greater Houston area for over 100 years. Service is an integral part of America's character and I am proud of your willingness to help provide needed services to better the social and emotional health of so many children and families.

May God bless you, and may God continue to bless America.

Sincerely,

George W. Bush

DePelchin has had the privilege of serving Houston for over 110 years. The agency was created in 1892 to shelter orphaned children, but, over the years, due to the ever changing needs of our community, we have expanded and adapted. DePelchin Children's Center is the largest and most comprehensive provider of children's social and mental health services in the greater Houston area serving more than 27,000 clients through 30 programs in 60 locations.

Our mission is: “Recognizing that a child’s needs are best met in a family environment, DePelchin Children’s Center strengthens the lives of children and their families in our community by providing a continuum of services to prevent and resolve social and emotional crises.”

DePelchin Children's Center provides a broad-based program of services to children and families in Harris, Ft. Bend, Montgomery and Waller counties in Texas. Programs are designed primarily to meet the needs of individuals and families in crisis requiring such services as:

- Parent education
- Teen pregnancy and teen parenting counseling services
- Adoption
- Post-adoption counseling and services
- Emergency shelters for housing abused, neglected, homeless and runaway children and adolescents.
- Foster care
- Therapeutic counseling and treatment services for emotionally disturbed children and adolescents.

The agency provides services to children and families in need, regardless of their ability to pay. DePelchin Children's Center receives funding from the United Way, the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services, other governmental agencies, program fees, community support and investment income.

'Conservative Values' Guide Court Appointee

By Michael D. Shear
Washington Post Staff Writer
Monday, May 5, 2003; Page B01

RICHMOND -- Claude A. Allen, nominated by President Bush last week to the nation's most conservative federal appeals court, was just out of college when he began to immerse himself in conservative policy and rough-and-tumble politics as the campaign pitchman for then-U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.).

"Knowing him has shaped me in many ways in terms of my values and how I conduct myself, all for the good," Allen told the Raleigh News & Observer last year.

Since leaving Helms's office, Allen's career in government has led him into the center of intensely political debates on public health policy.

Allen, 42, who is married and has three children who are home schooled, is one of several young, black, conservative politicians who have risen quickly through Republican administrations. He served as secretary of health and human resources for Virginia Gov. James S. Gilmore III (R) during the late 1990s and is second-in-command at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

As Gilmore's point man on issues such as Medicaid, welfare and child health insurance, Allen went to war with representatives of health organizations and consumer groups and with lawmakers. In his federal job, he has become a prime target of sex education activists for promoting abstinence programs, to the detriment, they say, of safe-sex education.

Now, Allen is one of two African Americans nominated by Bush for vacancies on the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a powerful panel one stop short of the U.S. Supreme Court that handles cases from Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the Carolinas. Republicans and Democrats have fought for years over the racial and political makeup of the court, which has but one black judge.

He faces a confirmation process in the U.S. Senate that could center on issues involving his legal skills and ideological history. Through a spokesman at HHS, Allen declined to comment. The spokesman said the White House did not want court nominees to speak publicly before confirmation hearings.

At Allen's hearing, supporters will present a nominee they see as a careful, measured thinker, while opponents will say he represents a right-wing fringe ideology.

Speaking about Allen's career last week, several of his University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill fraternity brothers saw his service to Helms as a pivotal moment in his political life. The 1984 Senate race was brutal, a nasty contest between Helms and then-Gov. James B. Hunt. Campaign ads for Hunt accused Helms of drawing his support from "right-wing nuts." Allen responded for Helms by accusing Hunt's campaign of having links "with the queers," a disparaging reference to homosexuals that has dogged Allen throughout his career.

Donald Beeson, a fraternity brother who was working on the Hunt campaign that year, said Allen loved the raw politics of campaigns, once pointing out how brilliantly Helms, a longtime smoker, hid his cigarettes whenever a camera pointed his way.

"He talked about what a masterful politician Jesse Helms was," Beeson said, "how strategically Jesse Helms would think about what he did."

But Allen left the world of elective politics after Helms won and went to law school at Duke University, where he became president of the student bar association. His professors remember him fondly, though several who are listed by the White House as Allen "supporters" say they are in no position to endorse him for the judgeship.

One man on the White House list, Walter Dellinger, a law professor at Duke who served as U.S. solicitor general under President Bill Clinton, said he enjoyed having Allen in his class but has little knowledge of his subsequent career.

"I was not even aware that he was in the [Bush] administration," Dellinger said.

Serving in Virginia's state government, Allen opposed efforts by many health groups to expand Medicaid coverage of children, calling it an expansion of welfare. He clashed with lawmakers over right-to-die legislation and efforts to improve state mental hospitals.

"He was often at odds with the health care providers and consumers," said Del. Philip A. Hamilton (R-Newport News), chairman of the House Committee on Health, Welfare and Institutions.

Lawmakers said he could be friendly and affable but also vindictive and partisan. Relations became so bad that the assembly considered legislation requiring that Allen's department communicate effectively with all interested parties.

"He was a typical ideological, Gilmore appointee," said former state senator Joseph V. Gartlan Jr., a Fairfax County Democrat known as an expert on health care issues. "That's the worst kind of mind you could put on a court, in my opinion."

Allen's supporters dismiss the criticism as partisan name-calling and sour grapes from health care activists who didn't get their way.

"When you try to construct a better way, you have to change the system," said David Anderson, Gilmore's policy director and a friend of Allen's. "He was not afraid to challenge the status quo."

Del. Terrie L. Suit (R-Virginia Beach) said the Allen she knows is a relaxed, approachable person who responded well under the pressure of running a 16,000-person bureaucracy.

"Any time I had any issue, Claude was the one that would take the call," Suit said. "He would handle it personally."

At HHS, Allen argues on a national stage that the best way to prevent pregnancy and AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases is to encourage young people to abstain from sex until they are married. He has pushed for a doubling of federal funds to pursue abstinence-only educational programs. That message infuriates advocates of sex education.

"There is no scientific evidence that [abstinence-only programs] have any impact," said Tamara Kreinin, president of the Sexuality Information and Education Council of the United States. "They are shame- and fear-based. Most Americans are not for them."

In addition, Allen's abstinence message has angered gay and lesbian groups. They say "abstinence until marriage" is a not-so-subtle attack on their lifestyle.

In a statement issued last week, White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales said Allen "has led a distinguished legal career, serving in both the private and public sectors. He has a solid understanding of the law and has earned the respect and admiration of those who know him the best."

Bush's other nominee for the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, Allyson K. Duncan, served as a North Carolina judge, and her nomination has met little resistance. But some legal scholars and lawmakers question whether Allen has the appropriate legal credentials to be a high-level judge.

"He fits the profile of a young ideologue without much of a legal or practice paper trail," said Michael J. Gerhardt, a law professor at the College of William and Mary and an expert on judicial nominations.

Allen spent four years as a lawyer at Baker Botts, a D.C. firm, and three years in the Virginia attorney general's office, where he worked on special projects, according to Anderson, who was Allen's boss at the time.

"One [project] that immediately comes to mind was the work on church burning," Anderson said, referring a nationwide concern about arsons against churches. "We did a national conference on church burning. Claude was the key guy in putting that together."

Gerhardt said Allen's confirmation could get bogged down in the debate about what makes a good judge. "The [political] parties lack common ground or consensus on what would be good judicial experience," he said.

Hamilton, the Republican lawmaker in Virginia who clashed with Allen on health care issues, said "it seems to me that judicial bench experience would be a strong consideration."

But supporters said his lack of judicial experience should not be a strike against him.

"It's important to have fresh thinkers, who can think outside the box, who haven't been running through the traditional career path," Suit said.

Anderson, now in private practice, said Allen "has a tremendously good mind. He has a breadth of experience that would serve him well on the 4th Circuit."

Beeson, the Democrat who worked on the Hunt campaign, said he and most other members of the Chi Psi fraternity were more liberal than Allen. Several went on to work for Democrats, including one as a spokesman for now-Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.).

"Many of us would probably be concerned if he were confirmed. But I always thought he was a wonderful person," Beeson said. "Sometimes we see individuals who are willing to alter their views to get ahead. I don't think Claude has ever been someone to alter what he believes. He follows his conservative values."

Hey Brett-

Personal - Non-PR

Was wondering if you could help me with something? George Bush has blown me away. The guy is making history every day. I love his style, his sense of ethics and incredible courage and determination. I'm an overboard patriotic, I love the constitution and am an avid fan of US/World history.

I want to work for this administration and for our country. I have an idea as to how. I have started a business with my wife and a friend. My wife was founder of J Crew. She stepped down as CEO of the company a couple of years ago. My other partner is a film producer who has produced 18 movies including Kids, Scream, Copland, Godzilla and Rudy. Our business is a combination of Entertainment and Marketing. We help our clients market their cause. We are extremely focused. We will have no more than three projects at any one time. Preferably it is one client and one project.

I want to help President Bush promote knowledge of American History. We consider it a great challenge, yet we know we can do this as well or better than anyone in the country. I have no idea how this kind of thing is handled. I am looking for help. This decision may have already been made and may not involve the private sector. I am hoping it does and that it is not too late.

We have access to the best of the best. We are passionate about ethical, honest communication. Performing a task we have the skill, the experience, and more importantly passion to carry off well, would be the professional and patriotic highlight of my career/life.

Please let me know if you can point me in the right direction.

Thanks for your consideration.

Tom Scott

Well, I am trying. I just don't want to reach out to others if we get Pryor. I think the message is clean. But, if you think we are getting too pushed for time, then I will call Miller and Nelson.

United States Senate

Washington, DC 20510

April 30, 2003

Dear Senators Frist and Daschle,

As the ten newest members of the United States Senate, we write to express our concerns about the state of the federal judicial nomination and confirmation process. The apparent breakdown in this process reflects poorly on the ability of the Senate and the Administration to work together in the best interests of our country. The breakdown also disserves the qualified nominees to the federal bench whose confirmations have been delayed or blocked, and the American people who rely on our federal courts for justice.

We, the ten freshmen of the United States Senate for the 108th Congress, are a diverse group. Among our ranks are former federal executive branch officials, members of the U.S. House of Representatives, and state attorneys general. We include state and local officials, and a former trial and appellate judge. We have different viewpoints on a variety of important issues currently facing our country. But we are united in our commitment to maintaining and preserving a fair and effective justice system for all Americans. And we are united in our concern that the judicial confirmation process is broken and needs to be fixed.

In some instances, when a well qualified nominee for the federal bench is denied a vote, the obstruction is justified on the ground of how prior nominees - typically, the nominees of a previous President - were treated. All of these recriminations, made by members on both sides of the aisle, relate to circumstances which occurred before any of us arrived in the

United States Senate. None of us were parties to any of the reported past offenses, whether real or perceived. None of us believe that the ill will of the past should dictate the terms and direction of the future.

Each of us firmly believes that the United States Senate needs a fresh start. And each of us believes strongly that we were elected to this body in order to do a job for the citizens of our respective states - to enact legislation to stimulate our economy, protect national security, and promote the national welfare, and to provide advice and consent, and to vote on the President's nominations to important positions in the executive branch and on our nation's courts.

Accordingly, the ten freshmen of the United States Senate for the 108th Congress urge you to work toward improving the Senate's use of the current process or establishing a better process for the Senate's consideration of judicial nominations. We acknowledge that the White House should be included in repairing this process.

All of us were elected to do a job. Unfortunately, the current state of our judicial confirmation process prevents us from doing an important part of that job. We seek a bipartisan solution that will protect the integrity and independence of our nation's courts, ensure fairness for judicial nominees, and leave the bitterness of the past behind us.

Yours truly,

Hypocrisy On Judicial Nominations: Senate Democrats Guilty As Charged

As Senate Democrats Continue Their Unprecedented Filibusters Against Miguel Estrada And Priscilla Owen—President Bush’s Highly Qualified Nominees To The U.S. Courts Of Appeals—A Closer Look At The Record Reveals A Level Of Hypocrisy Worthy Of Cloture. For Years, Democrat Senators Demanded “Up Or Down” Floor Votes For All Judicial Nominees.

PROMINENT DEMOCRAT SENATORS ON THE RECORD:

- ✓ Tom Daschle (D-SD): “I find it simply baffling that a Senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination.”
- ✓ Harry Reid (D-NV): “Once they get out of committee, let’s bring them here and vote up or down on them.”
- ✓ Patrick Leahy (D-VT): “I think the Senate is entitled to a vote in this matter, and I think the president is entitled for the Senate to vote, and I think the country is entitled for the Senate to vote.”
- ✓ Edward Kennedy (D-MA): “It is true that some Senators have voiced concerns about these nominations. But that should not prevent a roll call vote which gives every Senator the opportunity to vote ‘yes’ or ‘no.’”
- ✓ Barbara Boxer (D-CA): “I think, whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democratic side, let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote.”
- ✓ Tom Harkin (D-IA): “I’ll just close by saying that Governor [George W.] Bush had the right idea. He said the candidate should get an up or down vote within 60 days of their nomination.”
- ✓ Carl Levin (D-MI): “The truth of the matter is that the leadership of the Senate has a responsibility to do what the Constitution says we should do, which is to advise and at least vote on whether or not to consent to the nomination of nominees for these courts.”
- ✓ Blanche Lincoln (D-AR): “Honey, it’s rude!”

Kennedy Contended That Stalling And Refusing To Act On Judicial Nominations Was Not What The Founders Of The Constitution Had In Mind. “When the Founders wrote the Constitution and gave the Senate the power of advice and consent on Presidential nominations, they never intended the Senate to work against the President, as this Senate is doing, by engaging in a wholesale stall and refusing to act on large numbers of the President’s nominees.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Kennedy Once Argued That It Was “Especially Unfair To Nominees Who Are Women And Minorities” To Have Their Vote For Confirmation Delayed. “The delay has been especially unfair to nominees who are women and minorities.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Kennedy Accused Republican Leaders Of Playing “Politics With The Federal Judiciary” While “Justice Is Being Delayed And Denied In Courtrooms Across The Country.” “While Republican leaders play politics with the federal judiciary, countless individuals and businesses across the country are forced to endure needless delays in obtaining the justice they deserve. Justice is being delayed and denied in courtrooms across the country because of the unconscionable tactics of the Senate Republican majority.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

MASSACHUSETTS

JOHN KERRY

Senator John Kerry Recently Said The Senate Puts Aside Differences For Qualified Nominees, Whether Liberal or Conservative. “We routinely put aside our partisan differences to send qualified men and women to the federal bench because it is in the best interests of our country to fill seats with those individuals who have pledged to interpret the law objectively and without bias, whether or not they happen to be liberal or conservative in temperament.” (Senator John Kerry, Congressional Record, November 19, 2002)

MICHIGAN

CARL LEVIN

Senator Carl Levin: “The Senate Should Not Be Playing Politics With The Federal Judiciary.” “[J]udgeships are currently vacant, causing undue delays in justice for citizens served by the Court.... The Candidates for these vacancies...deserve to have an up or down vote on their nominations. The Senate should not be playing politics with the Federal Judiciary.” (Senator Carl Levin, Press Release, May 24, 2000)

Levin Claimed The Nation “Deserves To Have” Nominees “Acted On” By The Senate. “These nominees deserve a vote. The districts in which they will serve surely deserve to have their nominations acted upon. I believe the nation, as a whole, deserves to have these nominees, and other nominees awaiting hearings and votes acted on by this Senate as well. . . . [N]ominees wait in vain for years just for a hearing. That strikes me as being an arbitrary and inexplicable system, unfair to nominees awaiting hearings, awaiting votes, and unfair to the districts or the circuits in which they would serve if confirmed. I believe it is also unfair – perhaps this is most important of all – to the people who await justice in their courts.” (Senator Carl Levin, Congressional Record, October 3, 2000)

Levin Said Senate Leadership Had A “Responsibility” To “Advise And At Least Vote” On Judicial Nominees. “Two of the women who we’re focusing on today are from Michigan. They are nominees for the Sixth Court of Appeals....The truth of the matter is that the leadership of the Senate has a responsibility to do what the Constitution says we should do, which is to advise and at least vote on whether or not to consent to the nomination of nominees for these courts.” (Senator Carl Levin, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

MONTANA

MAX BAUCUS

Senator Max Baucus’ Spokesman Bill Lombardi Said Baucus Has Been Seeking To Expedite The Judicial Nomination Process. “Max has been pushing in the past several years to make sure that the Senate Judiciary Committee moves forward with naming judges to federal judgeships . . . . Justice delayed is justice denied.” (Mike Dennison, Mike. “Filling Montana’s Open Judgeship A Political Issue,” Great Falls Tribune, June 21, 2000)

NEVADA

HARRY REID

Senator Harry Reid: “I Think We Should Have Up-Or-Down Votes In The Committee And On The Floor.” “I don’t think we should have litmus tests for members of the sub-Cabinet, the Cabinet or the judges. . . . [Y]ou take the 106th Congress, it took 285 days on an average to get a judge approved; 103rd Congress when we controlled, it was 80 days. So you can see the difference there. Fifty five percent of President Clinton’s judicial nominations to the appellate court were turned down. We’re not going to do that. We’re going to have hearings. We’re going to have the process vetted as soon as possible. And I think we should have up-or-down votes in the committee and on the floor.” (Senator Harry Reid, CNN’s “Evans Novak Hunt & Shields,” June 9, 2001)

Reid: “Once They Get Out Of Committee, Let’s Bring Them Here And Vote Up Or Down On Them.” “[W]e now have 30 nominations pending. Once they get out of committee, let’s bring them here and vote up or down on them. I don’t know Richard Paez. I talked to him on the phone. I have talked to his mother. I think anybody who has to wait 4 years deserves an up-or-down vote. I say to my friend that if there is something wrong with Judge Paez or Ms. Berzon, come out here and vote them down.” (Senator Harry Reid, Congressional Record, March 7, 2000)

Reid Said That Democrats Wanted Judges Approved And That Republicans Were Holding Up Female And Minority Nominees. Harry Reid: “You know, this is unbelievable. Of course there’s only been one vote taken, but that’s all they’ll let us take. All the minorities are being held up – women – Judge Paez has been there almost four years waiting for a vote. We’re happy to vote on minorities or anyone. We want judges approved.” Mitch McConnell: “Harry, we’ve already approved more minorities and women than any Senate in history.” Harry Reid: “We want judges approved. They won’t let us do it.” (“Fox News Sunday,” October 31, 1999)

NEW JERSEY

FRANK LAUTENBERG

Senator Frank Lautenberg Said Timely Confirmations Ensure “Citizens Will Receive Justice Promptly and Fairly.” “We must ensure that the federal bench is at full strength so that our citizens will receive justice promptly and fairly.” (Senator Frank Lautenberg, Congressional Record, September 13, 1999)

Lautenberg Lamented That The Confirmation Process Is “Mired In Politics.” “The process for confirming federal judges is mired in politics, and prompt and efficient justice is denied our citizens. We risk entering the new century with crowded dockets, long delays and growing frustration on the part of those seeking justice in our nation’s federal courthouses.” (Senator Frank R. Lautenberg, “Justice Held Hostage In New Jersey,” New Jersey Law Journal, October 18, 1999)

Lautenberg Blasted A Colleague’s Hold On A Judicial Nominee, Calling It “Extremism Run Amok.” “This is extremism run amok. It’s outrageous . . . It’s almost unbelievable.” (Ron Hutchison, “Hutchison Block Of Judicial Nominee Deadlocks Senate,” Fort Worth Star-Telegram, August 3, 1996)

Lautenberg Declared That A Senator’s Political Views Should Not Affect The Confirmation Of Judicial Nominees. “But Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg, D-N.J., who criticized Republicans for opposing the nomination [of H. Lee Sarokin for the Third Circuit Court of Appeals] for partisan reasons, defended Sarokin. ‘He has not allowed his personal views to affect his judicial decision[s]. And we should not allow our personal or political views to affect our judgment on his fitness for the job,’ Lautenberg said.” (Jennifer Buksbaum, “Senate Confirms Judge H. Lee Sarokin For 3rd Circuit Court Of Appeals,” States News Service, October 4, 1994)

HILLARY CLINTON

As A Candidate For The Senate, Hillary Clinton Lamented That Nominees Were Not Given An “Up Or Down” Vote. “The Senate is bottling up people who deserve to be voted on - up or down.” (Paul Shepard, “In Poke At Bush, First Lady Tells NAACP Compassionate Isn’t Enough,” The Associated Press, July 11, 2000)

NEW YORK

CHARLES SCHUMER

In 2000, Senator Charles Schumer Pleaded With His Colleagues To Bring Judicial Appointments To A Vote “With Alacrity.” “The basic issue of holding up judgeships is the issue before us, not the qualifications of judges, which we can always debate. The problem is it takes so long for us to debate those qualifications. It is an example of Government not fulfilling its constitutional mandate because the President nominates, and we are charged with voting on the nominees. . . . I also plead with my colleagues to move judges with alacrity – vote them up or down. But this delay makes a mockery of the Constitution, makes a mockery of the fact that we are here working, and makes a mockery of the lives of very sincere people who have put themselves forward to be judges and then they hang out there in limbo.” (Senator Charles Schumer, Congressional Record, March 7, 2000)

Schumer Said Government Does Not Fulfill Its Constitutional Mandate When Judicial Nominees Do Not Receive A Vote. “The basic issue of holding up judgeships is the issue before us, not the qualifications of judges, which we can always debate. The problem is it takes so long for us to debate those qualifications. It is an example of Government not fulfilling its constitutional mandate because the President nominates, and we are charged with voting on the nominees.” (Senator Charles Schumer, Congressional Record, March 7, 2000)

NORTH CAROLINA*JOHN EDWARDS

Senator John Edwards Demanded That The Senate Act On Qualified Nominees Without Regard To Partisan Affiliation. “We should be nominating judges. Whether it is a Democratic or a Republican administration, it shouldn’t make any difference in nominating well-qualified judges. This body should act on the qualification of those men and women to serve on the court, not based upon the Republican or Democratic composition of the court. It is just that simple. This should be totally nonpartisan. My State has no one representing them on the Fourth Circuit. There is not, nor has there ever been, an African American judge on this court. The simple bottom line is that we have the responsibility of deciding how many judges should be authorized for that court.” (Senator John Edwards, Congressional Record, October 3, 2000)

NORTH DAKOTA*BYRON DORGAN

Senator Byron Dorgan Accused Senate Republicans Of Stalling On President Clinton’s Judicial Nominees. “Can I just make a point on this issue of stalling . . . because I think it’s important. . . . This Congress, in this area, has been dragging their feet and stalling because they don’t want to appoint or they don’t want to confirm judges that are sent down to the Congress by this president. And, I mean, I think that just lays bare the issue of who is doing what around here. On judicial appointments, the evidence is quite clear.” (Senator Byron Dorgan, Press Conference, October 12, 2000)

Dorgan Stated That There Would Be No “Foot Dragging” On President Bush’s Nominees. “We’re moving expeditiously on the president’s nominees, refusing to return in kind the foot dragging and delay accorded so many of then President Clinton’s nominees.” (Senator Byron Dorgan, “Senate Democrats Set To Accomplish Goals,” The Hill, July 25, 2001)

Dorgan Said That Democrats Were “Not Going To Hold Up Judicial Nominations.” “[M]y expectation is that we’re not going to hold up judicial nominations. . . . It is not our intention as a caucus to hold them up. . . . We’re not going to keep nominations bottled up for years, we’re just not going to do that.” (Senator Byron Dorgan, “Fox News Sunday,” June 3, 2001)

RHODE ISLAND*JACK REED

Senator Jack Reed Urged His Colleagues To “Take Their Constitutional Duty Seriously” And To Vote On Judicial Nominees Based Upon Their Qualifications. “I ask my colleagues today take their constitutional duty seriously and vote for these nominees on the basis of their objective qualifications, and not on the basis of petty politics. This process is much too important to the citizens of this great democracy to do otherwise.” (Senator Jack Reed, Congressional Record, March 9, 2000)

Reed Acknowledged That The Public Expects The Senate To Act Quickly On Judicial Nominations “Without Regard To Politics.” “More often than not, nominations move through the Senate the way they’re supposed to. However, in this case, the system has broken down. As a result, considerable public attention is being paid to this nomination, especially among members of the Latino community, because the Senate is not doing its job. This is troubling. In regards to nominations, the public rightly expects us to move judiciously and expeditiously and without regard to politics.” (Senator Jack Reed, Congressional Record, March 9, 2000)

SOUTH DAKOTA

TOM DASCHLE

Senator Tom Daschle Questioned Why A Senator Would Ever Oppose Voting On A Judicial Nominee, Calling For An Up-Or-Down Vote “On Every Nomination.” “I find it simply baffling that a Senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination. . . . Thus, today, I implore, one more time, every Senator to follow Senator Leahy’s advice, and treat every nominee ‘with dignity and dispatch.’ Lift your holds, and let the Senate vote on every nomination.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Congressional Record, October 5, 1999)

Daschle: “It Is Wrong Not To Have A Vote On The Senate Floor. What Are They Afraid Of?” “I don’t know how Members tell the Hispanic community we are being equally as fair with them as we are with all non-Hispanic judges when that simply is not true. If one is in a minority, that person has a bigger contest in getting confirmed. That is a fact. I won’t deal with all the perceptions that creates, but it is wrong. Hispanic or non-Hispanic, African American or non-African American, woman or man, it is wrong not to have a vote on the Senate floor. What are they afraid of? What are they afraid of? What is wrong with a vote? There is something wrong in our system when somebody has the right to tell somebody who is willing to commit him or herself to public service that we are going to make that person wait 3 1/2 years just to get a vote. We are not going to tell them what is wrong. We are not going to say if there is something wrong in their background. We are not going to debate whether they have qualifications or not. We are going to make them wait, and hopefully they will go away. Hopefully, they will go away. What does that say? What does that say about the intentions of people on the other side? Go away. Don’t make any noise. That is wrong. That is worse than a legislative landfill.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Congressional Record, October 28, 1999)

Daschle Quoted Chief Justice Rehnquist In Stating That The Senate Was Obligated To Have An Up-Or-Down Vote On Judicial Nominees. “As Chief Justice Rehnquist has recognized: ‘The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.’ An up-or-down vote, that is all we ask for Berzon and Paez.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Congressional Record, October 5, 1999)

Daschle Said That Senators Have “A Constitutional Outlet For Antipathy Against A Judicial Nominee – A Vote Against That Nominee.” “Today’s actions prove that we all understand that we have a constitutional outlet for antipathy against a judicial nominee – a vote against that nominee.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Congressional Record, October 5, 1999)

Daschle Pleaded With His Colleagues To Have A Vote On The Judicial Nominations, And Vowed To Continue Pressing For That Vote. “All we are asking of our Republican colleagues is to give these nominees the vote – and hopefully the fair consideration – they deserve. We will press this issue every day and at every opportunity until they get that vote.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Congressional Record, October 5, 1999)

Daschle Stated That Holding Up Judicial Nominees For Months Or Years Constituted “An Extraordinary Unfairness, Not Only To The Nominees But To The System Itself.” “These

[judicial nominations] are important matters. As the majority leader has heard me say, and others say, now for some time, in some cases they have been pending not for months but for years. For anyone to be held that long is just an extraordinary unfairness, not only to the nominees but to the system itself.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Congressional Record, October 1, 1999)

Daschle Said That It Was “Incredibly Unfair” To Block An Up-Or-Down Vote On Judicial Nominations. “It’s just so incredibly unfair to me that they would continue to persist in their determination not to allow these very qualified people to have even a vote.” (Senator Tom Daschle, Press Conference, September 22, 1999)

VERMONT

PATRICK LEAHY

Senator Patrick Leahy Declared That The Senate, The President And The American People Are Entitled To Have A Vote For Judicial Nominees. “I think the Senate is entitled to the recommendation of the committee and you made the recommendation by the vote just taken. But I think the Senate is entitled to a vote in this matter, and I think the president is entitled for the Senate to vote, and I think the country is entitled for the Senate to vote. I would hope it’d be sent to the Senate, let the full Senate act.” (Senator Patrick Leahy, Hearing Before The Senate Judiciary Committee, November 6, 1997)

“Vote Them Up Or Down,” Leahy Told The Senate. “But I think they have given the President of the United States the benefit of the doubt, and if the person is otherwise qualified, he or she gets the vote. . . . Vote them up or down.” (Senator Patrick Leahy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Quoting Chief Justice Rehnquist, Leahy Urged The Entire Senate To Have A Vote On Judicial Nominees. “Some current nominees have been waiting a considerable time for a Senate Judiciary Committee vote or a final floor vote. . . . ‘The Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry, it should vote him up or vote him down.’ Which is exactly what I would like.” (Senator Patrick Leahy, Congressional Record, March 7, 2000) (quoting Chief Justice Rehnquist)

In 1998, Leahy Reminded His Senate Colleagues That It Is The President’s Right To Appoint Judges. “That’s not the way it is. I mean, the Republicans didn’t win the election anymore than Ronald Reagan would have said Democrats ought to pick the judges he appoints. It’s whoever wins the election appoints the judges.” (NPR’s “Morning Edition,” July 20, 1998)

Leahy Called The Blocking Of Judicial Nominees Unprecedented And Begged Other Senators To Be Honest Enough To At Least Vote. “For some reason, about halfway through President Clinton’s first term, when Republicans took control of the Senate, they made a conscious decision to slow down and block as many of his nominations to the courts as they could, which is really an unprecedented position,” said Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee. . . . ‘We’re saying at least be honest enough to vote on him,’ Leahy said. ‘If you don’t want him, you’ve got 55 votes, you can defeat him.’” (John Berlau, “Partisanship Or Politics As Usual?” Investor’s Business Daily, October 18, 1999)

Senator Patty Murray Claimed That Inaction On Female And Minority Nominees Was Denying Justice And Holding The System Hostage. “We are here today to strongly object to the Republican majority who continues to block the confirmation of qualified judges, especially women and minorities. This is about justice, and justice delayed is justice denied. By failing to confirm nominees, the Republicans have delayed justice for those who rely on our overburdened court system. As a result of their inaction, cases are piling up in dockets across America. Our justice system is being held hostage, and America’s communities are paying the price.” (Senator Patty Murray, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Murray: Republicans Have Created A “Glass Ceiling” For Female And Minority Judicial Nominees. “This delay is especially troubling when we look at what’s happened to women and minorities. . . . Unfortunately, Republicans have created a glass ceiling that blocks the confirmation of women judges. It’s time to dismantle that glass ceiling and let qualified jurists take their place on the bench. We are here to send a message to the Republican leadership: Confirm the judicial nominees pending before the Senate, and let these qualified men and women fill the vacancies in courtrooms across America.” (Senator Patty Murray, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Senator Russ Feingold Said It Was A “Simple Courtesy” To Have An Up Or Down Vote On A Confirmation. “All Judge Paez, has ever asked for was this opportunity: an up or down vote on his confirmation. Yet for years, the Senate has denied him that simple courtesy.” (Senator Russ Feingold, Congressional Record, March 8, 2000)

Feingold Stated That A Nomination Delayed Was “Justice Delayed.” “A nomination delayed is justice delayed. As we know, justice delayed is justice denied. A vacancy unfilled is justice unfulfilled.” (Senator Russ Feingold, Hearing Before The Senate Judiciary Committee, June 10, 1999)

Feingold Stated That The Senate’s Failure To Confirm A Hispanic Nominee Would Send A Subtle Message To Hispanic Americans That “Circuit Court Judgeships Are Not Open To Them.” “And the subtle, even subconscious message sent to Hispanic Americans when they examine who hears their disputes in a court of law is that Circuit court judgeships are not open to them. Young Hispanic Americans hearing about Judge Paez will unfortunately learn the message without it ever being said out loud that there are limitations to their advancement in careers of public service.” (Senator Russ Feingold, Congressional Record, March 8, 2000)

Senator Herb Kohl Stated That Judicial Nominees Deserved An Up Or Down Vote. “Like Tim Dyk and Ted Stewart, there are many other deserving nominees out there. Let’s not play favorites. These nominees, who have to put their lives on hold waiting for us to act, deserve an ‘up or down’ vote. And, more importantly, the American people deserve prompt action, so that our courts can stay on top of their workload, and continue putting criminals behind bars.” (Senator Herb Kohl, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Kohl Declared The Judicial Confirmation Process “Shouldn’t Be About Politics.” “[W]e need these judges, both to prosecute and sentence violent criminals and to prevent more backlogs in civil cases. This is about justice – it shouldn’t be about politics.” (Senator Herb Kohl, Congressional Record, May 15, 1997)

Kohl Urged Votes On Nominees Who Had Been Approved By The Judiciary Committee. “[L]et’s breathe life back into the confirmation process. Let’s vote on the nominees who have already been approved by the Judiciary Committee, and let’s set a timetable for future hearings on pending judges. Let’s fulfill our constitutional responsibilities; justice demands that at a minimum.” (Senator Herb Kohl, Congressional Record, May 15, 1997)

Senator Blanche Lincoln Said It Was “Rude” And “Irresponsible” For Judicial Nominees To “Not Even Be Voted Up Or Down.” “Although there aren’t any judges in my home state awaiting confirmation, I’m here because I’m appalled, as a woman and as a senator, about the games that are being played with these people’s lives and with our judicial system. . . . I was taught at an early age that public service is a high calling and a noble profession. We need to encourage it, not discourage it. I was also taught at an early age that there is absolutely no good excuse to be rude. And the way that we’re handling these confirmations is irresponsible, it’s unacceptable and it’s rude, to think that we are asking these people to put their life on hold, to not even be heard, to not have a hearing, to not even be voted up or down.” (Senator Blanche Lincoln, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Lincoln Pleaded To Give President Clinton’s Nominees “The Up Or Down Vote That They Deserve.” “If we want people to respect their government again, then government must act respectably. It’s my hope that we’ll take the necessary steps to give these men and these women especially the up or down vote that they deserve.” (Senator Blanche Lincoln, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Lincoln: “We’re Not Asking Them To Vote For These Nominees, We’re Just Asking Them To Vote.” “Why should we have to trade progress for partisanship? I mean, this is our duty. This is something we should be doing. We’re not asking them to vote for these nominees, we’re just asking them to vote. Give these people the courtesy that they deserve of being heard, you know, instead of asking them to put their lives on hold for 1,300 days.” (Senator Blanche Lincoln, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Lincoln Said Democrats Were “Poised To Be Fair And Timely” On President Bush’s Judicial Nominees. “I don’t think [President Bush’s] judicial nominees will be treated like Bill Clinton’s were,” said Arkansas Sen. Blanche Lincoln, a Democrat. “The Democrats are poised to be fair and timely and hold fair hearings.” (Kevin Freking, “Bickering To Persist On Judges,” The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, June 10, 2001)

Lincoln, On Nominees Not Getting Their Day In The Senate: “Honey, It’s Rude!” “Sen. Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.) also offered comments on the nine women whose nominations await consideration by the Senate. ‘Just saying they’re gonna do it and not do it?’ an exasperated Lincoln asked, rolling her eyes in disgust. ‘Honey, it’s rude!’ She explained, “This is truly just people dragging their feet.” (Betsy Rothstein, “Senate Dems Upset By Shelved Bills,” The Hill, September 20, 2000)

Senator Barbara Boxer Told Her Fellow Senators That Judicial Nominees Deserved An Up Or Down Vote. “I make an appeal: If we vote to indefinitely postpone a vote on these two nominees or one of these two nominees, that is denying them an up-or-down vote. That would be such a twisting of what cloture really means in these cases. It has never been done before for a judge, as far as we know--ever. Again, it would undermine what Senator Lott said when he said these people deserve an up-or-down vote.” (Senator Barbara Boxer, Congressional Record, March 9, 2000)

Boxer: “Let These Names Come Up, Let Us Have Debate, Let Us Vote.” “Mr. President, I am very glad that we are moving forward with judges today. We all hear, as we are growing up, that, ‘Justice delayed is justice denied,’ and we have, in many of our courts, vacancies that have gone on for a year, 2 years, and in many cases it is getting to the crisis level. So I am pleased that we will be voting. I think, whether the delays are on the Republican side or the Democratic side, let these names come up, let us have debate, let us vote.” (Senator Barbara Boxer, Congressional Record, January 28, 1998)

In 2000, Boxer Called The Treatment Of Women Nominated To The Bench A “Nightmare.” “I want to thank Senator Mikulski, I want to thank the American Association of University Women for organizing this effort to call attention to the shameful way that women nominees to the federal judiciary have been treated by this Republican Senate. Senator Mikulski has pointed out the long time that women and minorities have had to wait to get their day, if you will, in the Senate court, so they can take their seats on the judiciary. . . . So we’re here today to end that nightmare, to give the Republican Senate a wake-up call, to let the people of America know how these fine women are being treated, and we are here to say we are going to focus the light on this matter.” (Senator Barbara Boxer, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

CALIFORNIA

DIANNE FEINSTEIN

In 1999, Senator Dianne Feinstein Said That “A Nominee Is Entitled To A Vote.” “A nominee is entitled to a vote. Vote them up; vote them down. To keep them hanging on – the court has 750 cases waiting for a judge. These judges are necessary.” (Senator Dianne Feinstein, Congressional Record, September 16, 1999)

Feinstein: “The Honest Thing To Do” Would Be To Have Votes On The Nominees, And “If We Don’t Like Them, We Can Vote Against Them.” “It is our job to confirm these judges. If we don’t like them, we can vote against them. That is the honest thing to do. If there are things in their background, in their abilities that don’t pass muster, vote no. I think every one of us on this side is prepared for that. The problem is, we have a few people who prevent them from having a vote, and this goes on month after month, year after year.” (Senator Dianne Feinstein, Congressional Record, September 16, 1999)

Feinstein Said That “Our Institutional Integrity Requires An Up-Or-Down Vote.” “Chief Justice Rehnquist recently said that ‘the Senate is surely under no obligation to confirm any particular nominee, but after the necessary time for inquiry it should vote him up or vote him down.’ . . . Our institutional integrity requires an up-or-down vote.” (Senator Dianne Feinstein, Congressional Record, October 4, 1999)

Feinstein, Commenting Specifically On Women And Minority Nominees: “Have The Decency To Give These People A Floor Vote.” “Women and minorities come up in the law in a different way . . . . Many male nominees have a background almost entirely in corporate law. Women and minorities are more likely to have a background in public service. But there are senators trying to block the confirmation of anybody with that kind of background. All we have said is have the decency to give these people a floor vote.” (Joel Connelly, “Sen. Feinstein Sees Senate GOP As Dangerously Rigid,” Seattle Post-Intelligencer, October 25, 1999)

Feinstein Said That “A Nominee Should Not Be Held Up Interminably By A Handful Of Senators.” “If a Senator has a problem with particular nominees, he or she should vote against them. But a nominee should not be held up interminably by a handful of Senators.” (Senator Dianne Feinstein, Congressional Record, October 4, 1999)

Feinstein Said It Was “A Disturbing Fact That Women And Minority Nominees Are Having A Difficult Time Getting Confirmed By The Senate.” (Senator Dianne Feinstein, Congressional Record, October 4, 1999)

CONNECTICUT

CHRISTOPHER DODD

Senator Christopher Dodd Warned That Slow Confirmations Of Judicial Nominations Would Cause “A Shutdown Of The Federal Judiciary.” “Connecticut’s two U.S. senators say their picks for the federal bench should be confirmed swiftly to combat a backlog of court cases facing the state and the nation. ‘You can’t have, in effect, a shutdown of the federal judiciary which is what we’re approaching if we don’t end up having the people in place,’ said Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, during a news conference Monday.” (Evan Berland, “Senators Tap U.S. Attorney, Litigator For Federal Benches,” The Associated Press, March 18, 1997)

Along With Senator Lieberman, Dodd Accused Republicans Of Holding The “Judicial System Hostage,” Costing Taxpayers Millions Of Dollars. “‘Republicans are holding our judicial system hostage, which sends the wrong message to criminals and costs taxpayers millions of dollars. It’s critical that we move these nominations through and end this dangerous backlog,’ Dodd and Lieberman said.” (Senator Christopher Dodd, Press Release, “White House Officially Nominates Connecticut Attorneys,” June 5, 1997)

CONNECTICUT

JOSEPH LIEBERMAN

Senator Joseph Lieberman Noted That Politicizing The Confirmation Process Was “Hurtful.” “‘I certainly hope there’s nothing political about the slowdown and, if there is, it’s silly—not silly, it’s hurtful,’ Lieberman said.” (Evan Berland, “Senators Tap U.S. Attorney, Litigator For Federal Benches,” The Associated Press, March 18, 1997)

In 2000, Lieberman Said He’d “Love” To See It Made “A Bit Harder To Filibuster.” “The centrist group also discussed lessening the power of individual senators in the next Congress by restricting the use of filibusters, cloture votes and other procedural maneuvers often used to thwart the will of the majority. ‘I’d love to see us make it a bit harder to filibuster,’ Lieberman said. ‘But I also want to make sure you figure out some ways for the minority to offer its programs.’ . . . This year, for example, senators have placed holds on a record number of judicial nominees and federal appointments. Similarly, both filibusters and cloture votes -- votes that end debate often before it has even begun -- have also sky-rocketed in the last several years. ‘There are always ways to frustrate rules that are intended to provide fairness,’ Lieberman said. ‘But it’s worth a try.’” (Allison Stevens, “Senate Centrists Seek To Defuse Partisan Strife,” The Hill, June 21, 2000)

Senator Joseph Biden Stated That All Nominees Are Entitled To A Vote On The Senate Floor. “But I also respectfully suggest that everyone who is nominated is entitled to have a shot, to have a hearing and to have a shot to be heard on the floor and have a vote on the floor.” (Senator Joseph Biden, Congressional Record, March 19, 1997)

Biden Said That It Is Inappropriate For The Senate To Not Bring Nominations To The Floor And Allow For A Vote. “It is totally appropriate for Republicans to reject every single nominee if they want to. That is within their right. But it is not, I will respectfully request, Madam President, appropriate not to have hearings on them, not to bring them to the floor and not to allow a vote, and it is not appropriate to insist that we, the Senators-we, the Senators-get to tell the President who he must nominate if it is not in line with the last 200 years of tradition.” (Senator Joseph Biden, Congressional Record, March 19, 1997)

Biden Believes Nominees Should Not Have To Answer How They Would Rule On Controversial Legal Issues. “I do not believe that the nominee should have to answer how he would rule on Roe. I do not believe he should have to do that because I think that sets a precedent that may very well come back and bite everything I believe in, even though I would like to know how he would rule on Roe.” (Senator Joseph Biden, Hearing Before The Senate Judiciary Committee, September 18, 1990)

Senator Bob Graham: “I Consider It A Judicial Emergency When A Judgeship Is Vacant For One Day More Than Necessary.” “The ability of the judiciary to do its job is significantly diminished by the slow speed at which judicial vacancies are filled. . . . The Judicial Conference declares a judicial emergency if a judgeship has been vacant for 18 months. Mr. President, I consider it a judicial emergency when a judgeship is vacant for one day more than necessary.” (Senator Bob Graham, Congressional Record, April 24, 1991)

In 1991, Senator Graham Introduced Legislation That Would Have Required A Full Senate Vote On Judicial Nominees Within 30 Days Of Committee Action. (S. 910, Introduced April 24, 1991)

In 1997, Graham Stated That He Would Work To Confirm Judicial Nominations “Without Needless Delay.” “The selection of federal judges—who are appointed for life—should be a thoughtful and deliberate process. I will continue to work to ensure that judicial nominations receive proper scrutiny, and to fill judicial vacancies in Florida without needless delay.” (Senator Bob Graham, Letter to the Editor, St. Petersburg Times, October 22, 1997)

Senator Daniel Akaka Called For Bipartisanship To Eliminate The “Backlog of Vacancies.” “I hope we will eliminate the existing backlog of vacancies at all levels of the federal court system in a bipartisan manner.” (Senator Daniel Akaka, Press Release, “Akaka Introduces Fairness In Judiciary Appointments,” March 5, 1997)

Senator Richard Durbin Sought To Impose Accountability On The Senate For Nominees And Demanded, “Vote The Person Up Or Down.” “I think that responsibility requires us to act in a timely fashion on nominees sent before us. The reason I oppose cloture is I would like to see that the Senate shall also be held to the responsibility of acting in a timely fashion. If, after 150 days languishing in a committee there is no report on an individual, the name should come to the floor. If, after 150 days languishing on the Executive Calendar that name has not been called for a vote, it should be. Vote the person up or down. They are qualified or they are not. But to impose all of the burden on the executive branch and to step away from our responsibility I don’t think is fair.” (Senator Richard Durbin, Congressional Record, September 28, 1998)

Durbin Sponsored An Amendment To Force A Vote On Excessively Delayed Nominations. ”I have filed and certainly hope to have an opportunity to offer some relevant amendments designed to address those instances of dilatory Senate Committee processing and floor inaction once a nominee is advanced to the calendar. . . . [One] amendment would require the Senate to take up for a vote any nomination which has been pending on the Executive Calendar in excess of 150 days. Such Senate consideration must occur within 5 calendar days of the 150th day. In effect, it creates an end point after which we can no longer hold up a nominee. I am not suggesting that we would give our consent to all of these nominees. I am basically saying that this process should come to a close. The Senate should vote. It should make its decision.” (Senator Richard Durbin, Congressional Record, September 28, 1998)

Durbin Lamented The Scrutiny Of Nominees As “Sad” And “Tragic.” “I also want to comment for a moment on the period of time that this very able nominee has waited for confirmation. It is unfortunate. In fact, it is sad, and it borders on tragic, that men and women who are prepared to give their lives to public service, who have gone through a withering process of investigation, by the FBI, by the Judiciary Committee, by the White House, by the American Bar Association, and so many others, still must wait over a year, in many cases, for their nominations to be considered by the Judiciary Committee and by this Chamber. . . . It does a great disservice to this country and to the judiciary for us to create a process that is so demanding that ordinary people would be discouraged from trying.” (Senator Richard Durbin, Congressional Record, March 19, 1997)

In 1998, Durbin Thought Failure To Confirm Judicial Nominees Imposed A “Hardship” On “Ordinary People In America.” “When the Senate fails to do its work and confirm judges, the hardship is imposed on ordinary people in America and they are puzzled: ‘Well, why is this the case? Why does it take so long for me to get my day in court?’ Is justice delayed truly justice denied? In many cases, it is. In this situation, unfortunately, the burden is on us, those men and women who sit in this Chamber and have the singular responsibility to confirm Federal judges.” (Senator Richard Durbin, Congressional Record, March 13, 1998)

In 1997, Durbin Complained About The Lack Of Movement On A D.C. Circuit Court. “I rise today to support the nomination of Merrick Garland to be judge on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. It is interesting today in this debate that many people have spoken and no one has questioned his integrity nor his ability. He was born in Chicago, graduated from Harvard College magna cum laude, Harvard Law School and . . . had a distinguished career both as a lecturer at Harvard Law School and partner in a prestigious firm, and then prosecuting cases in the District of Columbia during the past few years, served as well in the Department of Justice. Despite Mr.

Garland's obvious and many qualifications for this job, we must vote on whether he will serve on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Frankly, we should leap at the opportunity to have him on that court." (Senator Richard Durbin, Congressional Record, March 19, 1997)

TOM HARKIN

Senator Tom Harkin Declared That Filibustering Nominations Was Tantamount To Blackmail. "We had nominations that were filibustered. This was almost unheard of in our past. . . . It is used, Mr. President, as blackmail for one Senator to get his or her way on something that they could not rightfully win through the normal processes." (Senator Tom Harkin, Congressional Record, January 4, 1995)

Harkin Agreed That A Judicial Nominee "Should Get An Up Or Down Vote Within 60 Days Of Their Nomination." "I'll just close by saying that Governor Bush had the right idea. He said the candidate should get an up or down vote within 60 days of their nomination." (Senator Tom Harkin, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

In 2000, Harkin Urged "The Republican Leadership To Take The Steps Necessary To Allow The Full Senate To Vote Up Or Down On These Important Nominations." (Senator Tom Harkin, Congressional Record, September 11, 2000)

Harkin Just Wanted A Vote, Regardless Of The Outcome. "If they want to vote against them, let them vote against them. That's their prerogative. But at least have a vote." (Senator Tom Harkin, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Harkin Used To Think That The Process Of Judicial Nominations Dragged On For Too Long. "Again, I'm sure I'm just going to echo the sentiments expressed by my colleagues on these judicial nominations. This process has been dragging on too long. The Senate should act promptly to fill these vacancies." (Senator Tom Harkin, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Harkin Vowed To Fight "Every Day" To Get Judicial Nominees A Vote. "I intend to make my point every day." (Jake Thompson, "Harkin Vows To Keep Fighting For Controversial Nomination," Omaha World-Herald, October 8, 2000)

LOUISIANA

MARY LANDRIEU

Senator Mary Landrieu Declared That The Federal Court System Should Not Suffer Because Of Partisan Differences. "Landrieu expressed hope that the vote for [James] Brady and other long-waiting judicial nominees signaled an end to 'partisan delays.' 'I am optimistic that this is a sign that both parties are willing to work together to ensure our federal court system does not suffer because of partisan differences in Washington,' Landrieu said." (Bruce Alpert, "Former Head of LA. Democrats Finally Confirmed To Judgeship," The [New Orleans] Times-Picayune, May 25, 2000)

In 2000, Senator Barbara Mikulski Urged Her Colleagues To Hold Hearings On Judicial Nominations And “Have Votes.” “[T]his is not only about color; it is about ensuring that there’s competency on the judicial bench. We’ve encouraged them to hold hearings, have votes, move this out.” (Senator Barbara Mikulski, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Mikulski Declared That Neither The Courts Nor America Have Time For Judicial Delays. “What we now have is a judicial emergency. Four of the 15 seats are vacant. Every woman and minority has delayed. We don’t have time for delays; the courts don’t have time for delays; America doesn’t have time for delays.” (Senator Barbara Mikulski, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

Mikulski Criticized Republicans For Putting Minority Nominees At The “Back Of The Bus” For Judicial Hearings. “[I]n the Republicanly [sic]-controlled Congress, if you are a woman or a minority, you wait at the back of the bus. This party seems to forget that it was once the party of Lincoln, and now it is the party of judicial block.” (Senator Barbara Mikulski, Press Conference, September 14, 2000)

In 1998, Mikulski Likened Republicans To Klansmen For “Hiding In Processes” To Bottle Up President Clinton’s Judicial Nominations. “Then, U.S. Sen. Barbara Mikulski, a Maryland Democrat, compared Republicans in Congress holding up President Clinton’s judicial and Cabinet appointments to Klansmen... Mikulski, the keynote speaker, accused Republicans of ‘hiding in committees and hiding in processes’ to anonymously bottle up Clinton appointments, then criticized Klansmen for ‘hiding behind hoods and white sheets.’” (Tom Pelton, et. al., “Image Is Everything,” The Baltimore Sun, January 25, 1998)

Senator Paul Sarbanes Said That Denying Judicial Nominees “An Up Or Down Vote On The Senate Floor” Was The Equivalent Of Politicizing The Process. “This politicization, Mr. President, has been extended to include the practice of denying nominees an up or down vote on the Senate floor, or even in the Judiciary Committee. If the majority of the Senate opposes a judicial nominee enough to derail a nomination by an up or down vote, then at least the process has been served. Instead, however, the President’s nominees are not even receiving that courtesy from this Senate: Some of the individuals whose nominations are pending before the Judiciary Committee or the full Senate have not been allowed a vote on the floor, much less in committee, for close to 2 years. It is especially troubling that of the 14 nominees who have been held up the longest by the Republican majority in the Senate, 12 are women or minorities.” (Senator Paul Sarbanes, Congressional Record, December 15, 1997)

Sarbanes Said The Federal Judicial System Is The One Subject “That Should Remain Immune From Political Games.” “I submit to my colleagues, however, that if there is one subject that should remain immune from political games and pressure it is our Federal judicial system, which is the envy of the world for its independence and integrity, and which is absolutely fundamental to our system of government. It is essential for the maintenance of public confidence in this system that the confirmation process be as far removed from politics as possible.” (Senator Paul Sarbanes, Congressional Record, December 15, 1997)

Sarbanes Complained That Nominees Were Not Even Allowed To “Be Considered By The Senate For An Up-Or-Down Vote.” “It is not whether you let the President have his nominees confirmed. You will not even let them be considered by the Senate for an up-or-down vote. That is the problem today. In other words, the other side will not let the process work so these nominees can come before the Senate for judgment. (Senator Paul Sarbanes, Congressional Record, March 19, 1997)

Sarbanes Called On Senators To Stop “Playing With The Federal Courts” and If They Object To A Nominee To “Voice That Objection and Vote Against Them.” “I just submit to you this game ought to stop. We ought not to be playing with the Federal courts in this way. If people have a legitimate objection to a particular nominee, they ought to voice that objection and vote against them and try to persuade their colleagues to vote against them. But this is crippling the courts.” (Senator Paul Sarbanes, Congressional Record, May 14, 1997)

Sarbanes Maintained That Politicizing The Confirmation Process Would Undermine “Public Confidence In the Judicial System.” “I just submit that we are not going to maintain public confidence in the judicial system, and we ought not to politicize the judicial process the way it is being done.” (Senator Paul Sarbanes, Congressional Record, May 14, 1997)

MASSACHUSETTS

EDWARD KENNEDY

Senator Edward Kennedy Said That Voting On Judicial Nominees Was Something That The Senate Owed To All Americans. “We owe it to Americans across the country to give these nominees a vote. If our Republican colleagues don’t like them, vote against them. But give them a vote.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, February 3, 1998)

Kennedy Advocated A Vote On Judicial Nominees, Even If Some Senators Had “Concerns” About A Nominee. “It is true that some Senators have voiced concerns about these nominations. But that should not prevent a roll call vote which gives every Senator the opportunity to vote ‘yes’ or ‘no.’” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Kennedy Thought That Delaying Nominees Was An “Abdication Of The Senate’s Constitutional Responsibility.” “[D]elays can only be described as an abdication of the Senate’s constitutional responsibility to work with the President and ensure the integrity of our federal courts.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Kennedy Called Stonewalling On Judicial Nominations A “Do Nothing” Tactic Used By A “Do Nothing” Senate. “This kind of partisan, Republican stonewalling is irresponsible and unacceptable. It’s hurting the courts and it’s hurting the country. It’s the worst kind of ‘do nothing’ tactic by this ‘do nothing’ Senate.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Kennedy Saw Delays In The Confirmation Process As A “Gross Perversion.” “The continuing delays are a gross perversion of the confirmation process that has served this country well for more than 200 years.” (Senator Edward Kennedy, Congressional Record, September 21, 1999)

Brett -

Attached is a letter that Governor Taft will send to about 300 key supporters in Ohio, after your approval.

The subject is a fundraiser that Barry Jackson will attend (and Karl Rove will call into) on May 22 in Columbus.

your thoughts?

Dear /SALUTATION/,

This letters serves as a reminder of the upcoming Ohio Republican Party Executive Finance Committee Meeting on Thursday, May 22nd at the Columbus Club. You are among an elite group of strong Republican supporters invited to attend as we discuss the needs and challenges facing the Ohio Republican Party as we prepare for the 2004 Presidential Election.

Knowing that Ohio is a key battleground state, Ohio's 20 electoral votes will prove pivotal because it's a fact of political life that no Democrat can win the White House without carrying Ohio. That is why we must prepare right now.

Along with Chairman Bob Bennett, Finance Chairman Jim Dicke and myself, ~~Director of Strategic Initiatives for the White House Barry Jackson~~ – a longtime political advisor to both the state of Ohio and to George W. Bush - will be in attendance.

Karl Rove is expected to address the meeting via phone and Speaker Larry Householder and Senate President Doug White have been invited to present a legislative briefing. Statewide office holders have been invited to attend the dinner following the meeting.

I hope you will join me for this very important meeting. Please confirm your attendance with Annie Gardecki at ([REDACTED] PRA 6) by May 16th.

Sincerely,

Governor Bob Taft

NH GOP wants Karl to sit down with 20 of their "platinum members" tomorrow-- basically companies that donate $10,000 to their state account.

This is not a problem--correct?

They did not do any written invitation-just via phone calls.

108th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 1926

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

May 1, 2003

Mr. HAYWORTH introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means

A BILL

To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to apply an excise tax to excessive attorneys fees for legal judgments, settlements, or agreements that operate as a tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the 'Intermediate Sanctions Compensatory Revenue Adjustment Act of 2003' (ISCRAA).

SEC. 2. EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter D of chapter 42 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to failure by certain charitable organizations to meet certain qualification requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

`SEC. 4959. TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

`(a) INITIAL TAXES- There is hereby imposed on the collecting attorney in each excess fee transaction a tax equal to 5 percent of the excess fee. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(b) ADDITIONAL TAX ON THE COLLECTING ATTORNEY- In any case in which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) on an excess fee transaction and the excess fee involved in such transaction is not corrected within the taxable period, there is hereby imposed a tax equal to 200 percent of the excess fee involved. The tax imposed by this paragraph shall be paid by any collecting attorney referred to in subsection (f)(1) with respect to such transaction.

`(c) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION; EXCESS FEE- For purposes of this section-

`(1) EXCESS FEE TRANSACTION-

`(A) IN GENERAL- The term 'excess fee transaction' means any transaction in which a fee is provided by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff if the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor or subsection (g)(1) applies.

`(B) DETERMINATION OF VALUE- For purposes of subparagraph (A), in determining whether the amount of the fee provided exceeds the value of the services received in exchange therefor, the value of the services shall be the sum of--

`(i) the reasonable expenses incurred by the collecting attorney in the course of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, and

`(ii) a reasonable fee based on--

`(I) the number of hours of non-duplicative, professional quality legal work provided by the collecting attorney of material value to the outcome of the representation of the applicable plaintiff, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (B) and (D) of subsection (h)(2),

`(II) reasonable hourly rates for the individuals performing such work based on hourly rates charged by other attorneys for the rendition of comparable services, including rates charged by adversary defense counsel in the representation, taking into account the factors described in subparagraphs (A), (C), (E), and (G) of subsection (h)(2), and

`(III) to the extent such items are not taken into account in establishing the reasonable hourly rates under subclause (II), an appropriate adjustment rate determined in accordance with subparagraph (C) to compensate the collecting attorney for periods of substantial risk of non-payment of fees and for skillful or innovative services which increase the amount of the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(C) ADJUSTMENT RATE-

`(i) IN GENERAL- For purposes of this paragraph, an appropriate adjustment rate is a percentage of the reasonable hourly rate under subparagraph (B)(ii)(II) which is added to the amount of such rate and which is not more than the sum of one risk percentage and one skill percentage described in clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively.

`(ii) RISK PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'risk percentage' means a percentage rate that is proportional to the collecting attorney's risk of nonrecovery of fees and which is--

`(I) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees, not more than 100 percent,

`(II) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 8,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 2 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 200 percent, or

`(III) in the case of a collecting attorney who assumed a substantial risk of nonpayment of fees and devoted more than 15,000 hours of legal work (as described in subparagraph (B)(ii)(I)) and more than 4 years to the case before resolution of all claims, not more than 300 percent.

`(iii) SKILL PERCENTAGE- For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'skill percentage' means, in the case of a collecting attorney who has demonstrated exceptionally skillful or innovative legal service which generated a recovery for the applicable plaintiff substantially greater than the typical recovery in similar cases, a percentage rate that is proportional to the increase in the applicable plaintiff's recovery and that is not more than 100 percent.

`(iv) LIMITATION- An appropriate adjustment rate shall not increase the collecting attorney's fee above an amount that is proportional to the applicable plaintiff's recovery.

`(D) COURT APPROVAL OF FEES- Fee payments approved by any court shall be presumed to not be in excess of the value of the services received in exchange therefor if the court approving the fee--

`(i) did not approve an adjustment rate greater than that determined to be appropriate under subparagraph (C) in a case where such fee included an adjustment rate, and
` (ii) obtained and relied upon a report of a legal auditing firm with respect to such fee in accordance with the procedures in subsection (h).

`(2) EXCESS FEE- The term `excess fee' means the excess referred to in paragraph (1)(A).

`(d) JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY- For purposes of this section, if more than 1 person is liable for any tax imposed by subsection (a), all such persons shall be jointly and severally liable for such tax.

`(e) APPLICABLE PLAINTIFF- For purposes of this section, the term `applicable plaintiff' means any person represented by a collecting attorney with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1).

`(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND RULES- For purposes of this section--

`(1) COLLECTING ATTORNEY- The term `collecting attorney' means any person engaged in the practice of law who represents--

`(A) any governmental entity, including any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or any person acting on such entity's behalf, including pursuant to Federal or State Qui Tam statutes, in a claim for recoupment of payments made or to be made by such entity to or on behalf of any natural person by reason, directly or indirectly, of a breach of duty that causes damage to such natural person,

`(B) any organization described in paragraph (3) or (4) of section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), in a claim for damages based on a breach of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such organization,

`(C) any natural person seeking to recover damages in a claim based on breaches of duty, whether civil or criminal, causing damage to such natural person, or when 1 or more of such claims, whether or not joined in 1 action, involve the same or a coordinated group of plaintiff's attorneys or similarly situated defendants, arise out of the same transaction or set of facts or involve substantially similar liability issues, and result in settlements or judgments aggregating at least $100,000,000.

`(2) TAXABLE PERIOD- The term `taxable period' means, with respect to any excess fee transaction, the period beginning with the date on which the transaction occurs and ending 90 days after the earliest of--

`(A) the date of the mailing of a notice of deficiency under section 6212 with respect to the tax imposed by subsection (a), or `(B) the date on which the tax imposed by subsection (a) is assessed.

`(3) CORRECTION-

`(A) GENERAL RULE- Any excess fee transaction is corrected by undoing the excess fee to the extent possible and taking any additional measures necessary to place the applicable plaintiff in a financial position not worse than that in which such plaintiff would be if the collecting attorney were dealing under the highest fiduciary standards.

`(B) PAYMENT OF EXCESS FEES-

`(i) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in clause (ii), a collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the applicable plaintiff.

`(ii) CERTAIN SETTLEMENTS- In the case of excess fees arising from or related to that certain Master Settlement Agreement of November 23, 1998, and other, concluded Settlement Agreements based on State health care expenditures pursuant to title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396 et seq.), including lawsuits involving the States of Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas, the collecting attorney corrects an excess fee transaction by paying any excess fees plus interest to the 50 States in proportion to each State's share of the United States population.

`(C) NO WAIVER OF FEE- No collecting attorney may avoid imposition of any tax imposed by this section by transferring any portion of the excess fee or refusing to accept any portion of the excess fee.

`(4) LIMITED REASONABLE CAUSE- For purposes of section 4962(a), an excess fee transaction shall not be treated as an event which was due to reasonable cause if the amount of the fee provided would exceed the value of the services received in exchange therefor determined with the maximum adjustment rate allowed under subsection (c)(1)(C).

`(g) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS-

`(1) TREATMENT AS EXCESS FEE- Any fee provided after the date of the enactment of this subsection by an applicable plaintiff (including payments resulting from litigation on behalf of an applicable plaintiff determined on an hourly or percentage basis, whether such fee is paid from the applicable plaintiff's recovery, pursuant to a separately negotiated agreement, or in any other manner), directly or indirectly, to or for the use of any collecting attorney with respect to such applicable plaintiff shall be deemed to be an excess fee provided in an excess fee transaction unless the disclosure requirements described in paragraph (2) are met.

`(2) CONTENTS OF STATEMENT- The disclosure requirements of this paragraph are met for any taxable year in which a collecting attorney receives any fees with respect to a claim described in subsection (f)(1), if such collecting attorney--

`(A) includes in the return of tax for such taxable year a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) with respect to such claim, and

`(B) provides a statement including the information described in subsection (c)(1) to the applicable plaintiff prior to the deadline (including extensions) for filing such return.

`(h) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM-

`(1) IN GENERAL- In any case before a Federal district court or a State court in which the court approves fees paid to a collecting attorney, the court shall seek bids from legal auditing firms with a specialty in reviewing attorney billings and select 1 such legal auditing firm to review the billing records submitted by the collecting attorney, under the same standards the firm would use if it were hired by a private party to review legal bills submitted to the party, for the reasonableness of such attorney's billing patterns and practices. The court shall require the collecting attorney to submit billing records, cost records, and any other information sought by such firm in its review.

`(2) REVIEW BY LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In reviewing the billing records and work performed by the collecting attorney, the legal auditing firm shall address all relevant matters, including--

`(A) the hourly rates of the collecting attorney compared with the prevailing market rates for the services rendered by the collecting attorney,

`(B) the number of hours worked by the collecting attorney on the case compared with other cases that the collecting attorney worked on during the same period,

`(C) whether the collecting attorney performed tasks that could have been performed by attorneys with lower billing rates,

`(D) whether the collecting attorney used appropriate billing methodology, including keeping contemporaneous time records and using appropriate billing time increments,

`(E) whether particular tasks were staffed appropriately,

`(F) whether the costs and expenses submitted by the collecting attorney were reasonable,

`(G) whether the collecting attorney exercised billing judgment, and

`(H) any other matters normally addressed by the legal auditing firm when reviewing attorney billings for private clients.

`(3) FILING OF REPORT; RESPONSE; BURDEN OF PROOF- The court shall set a date for the filing of the report of the legal auditing firm, and allow the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff to respond to the report within a reasonable time period. The report shall be presumed correct unless rebutted by the collecting attorney or any applicable plaintiff by clear and convincing evidence.

`(4) FEE FOR LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- The fee for the report of the legal auditing firm shall be paid from the collecting attorney's fee award, the applicable plaintiff's recovery, or both in a manner determined by the court.

`(i) REGULATIONS- The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations to prevent avoidance of the purposes of this section and regulations requiring recordkeeping and information reporting.'

(b) CONFORMING AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS-

(1) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 4963 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by inserting `4959,' after `4958,'.

(2) Subsection (e) of section 6213 of such Code is amended by inserting `4959 (relating to excess fee transactions),' before `4971'.

(3) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 7422(g) of such Code are each amended by inserting `4959,' after `4958,'.

(4) The heading for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended to read as follows:

`Subchapter D--Failure by Certain Charitable Organizations and Persons to Meet Certain Qualification Requirements and Fiduciary Standards'.

(5) The table of subchapters for chapter 42 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to subchapter D and inserting the following:

`SUBCHAPTER D. Failure by certain charitable organizations and persons to meet certain qualification requirements and fiduciary standards'.

(6) The table of sections for subchapter D of chapter 42 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to excess fees paid on or after June 1, 2002.

SEC. 3. DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO EXCISE TAXES ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Subchapter B of chapter 76 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to judicial proceedings) is amended by redesignating section 7437 as section 7438 and by inserting after section 7436 the following new section:

`SEC. 7437. DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO TAX ON EXCESS FEE TRANSACTIONS.

- `(a) IN GENERAL- In a case of actual controversy involving--
- `(1) a determination by the Secretary or the collecting attorney with respect to the imposition of the excise tax on excess fee transactions on such collecting attorney under section 4959, or
  - `(2) a failure by the Secretary or the collecting attorney to make such a determination,
- upon the filing of an appropriate pleading by an applicable plaintiff, the Tax Court may make a declaration with respect to such determination or failure. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a decision of the Tax Court and shall be reviewable as such.
- `(b) DEFERENTIAL REVIEW- If a collecting attorney's fee has been approved by a court in accordance with section 4959(c)(1)(D) or by the Secretary pursuant to section 4959, the Tax Court shall review the fee only for an abuse of discretion.
- `(c) LEGAL AUDITING FIRM- In any petition for a declaration referred to in subsection (a):
- `(1) NO PREVIOUS REPORT- If a report by a legal auditing firm that meets the requirements of section 4959(h) has not been previously produced and relied on by another court, the Tax Court shall hire such a legal auditing firm and rely on its report pursuant to the procedures in section 4959(h).
  - `(2) SECOND REPORT-
    - `(A) IN GENERAL- If a report by a legal auditing firm has been approved by a court in accordance with section 4959, the Tax Court shall hire a second legal auditing firm upon the request of the petitioner.
    - `(B) FEE FOR REPORT- The Tax Court may direct the petitioner to pay the fee for any report of a legal auditing firm provided pursuant to subparagraph (A).
- `(d) TIME FOR BRINGING ACTION- No proceeding may be initiated under this section by any person until 90 days after such person first notifies the Secretary of the excess fee transaction with respect to which the proceeding relates.
- `(e) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section, any term used in this section and also in section 4959 shall have the meaning given such term by section 4959.'
- (b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT- The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 76 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking the item relating to section 7437 and by inserting the following new items:
- `Sec. 7437. Declaratory judgments relating to tax on excess fee transactions.
  - `Sec. 7438. Cross references.'
- (c) EFFECTIVE DATE- The amendments made by this section shall apply to actions after the date of the enactment of this Act.

An AP reporter, Paul Chavez, told me that there will be a press conference tomorrow at "a law office" at which Ms. Sanchez-Scott will be talking about her case. He also had a list of other topics (Roe v. Wade, Bob Jones, VMI) that he thought might be covered. I have sent him materials including the original Boxer responses, Justice Turner's letter, responses to Senators' questions re VMI, list of support letters and Vilma's letter.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Senator Kyl

FROM: Judiciary Staff

DATE: May 6, 2003

RE: Review of Sutherland, Asbill Law Firm's Constitutional Critique of ISCRAA

You have asked me to review a 29-page memorandum produced by the Atlanta-based law firm of Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan, which makes several arguments that your and Senator Cornyn's fiduciary attorney fee standards bill, ISCRAA (S. 887), is unconstitutional. None of these arguments has any merit.

ISCRAA operates entirely through the tax code, imposing high marginal excise taxes on the excessive portion of an attorneys fee in very large lawsuits. The Sutherland memo avoids addressing the question of Congress's power to tax until page 19, when it finally presents its main authority: Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co., 259 U.S. 29 (1922), which struck down a federal excise tax on products made with child labor. Drexel Furniture applied a test that asks whether regulation (as opposed to revenue production) was Congress's "primary motive" or an "incidental motive" in imposing the tax. See Sutherland Memo at 20 (quoting Drexel Furniture, 259 U.S. at 38). The child-labor tax was invalid because Congress had "exhibit[ed] its intent" to regulate the use of child labor. Id.

The Sutherland memo fails to note that Drexel Furniture's regulatory-intent test is no longer good law. Citing two of Drexel Furniture's companion cases from that same term, the Supreme Court more recently has noted that "[i]t is true that the Court in * * * [the past] drew what it saw at the time as distinctions between regulatory and revenue-raising taxes. But the Court has subsequently abandoned such distinctions." Bob Jones University v. Simon, 416 U.S. 725, 741 n.12 (1974). The Court now cites "the oft-repeated principle that the judiciary should not infer a legislative attempt to exercise a forbidden power in the form of a seeming tax from the fact, alone, that the tax appears excessive or even so high as to threaten the existence of an occupation or business." City of Pittsburgh v. Alco Parking Corp., 417 U.S. 369, 376 (1974). See also Department of Revenue of Montana v. Kurth Ranch, 511 U.S. 767, 779 (1994) ("We have cautioned against invalidating a tax simply because its enforcement might be oppressive or because the legislature's motive was somehow suspect").

ISCRAA's status as a tax disposes of the Sutherland memo's two principal arguments, which are based on the Takings Clause<sup>1</sup> and retroactivity. First, as the Supreme Court made clear over a century ago, “neither is taxation for a public purpose, however great, the taking of private property for public use, in the sense of the Constitution.” Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U.S. 691, 703 (1880). Second, as you noted in your speech introducing ISCRAA, the Supreme Court has “repeatedly upheld [moderately] retroactive tax legislation against a due process challenge.” United States v. Carlton, 512 U.S. 26, 30-31 (1994). Carlton upheld a tax whose “actual retroactive effect * * * extended for a period only slightly greater than one year.” Id. at 33. ISCRAA only taxes income received since June 1, 2002 – well within Carlton’s limit.

Since ISCRAA is based entirely on Congress’s power to tax, it bears describing in greater detail the scope of Congress’s tax authority. The following cases are instructive:

- Sonzinsky v. United States, 300 U.S. 506 (1937), involved multiple, punitive federal taxes imposed on the sale of sawed-off shotguns, machineguns, and silencers. The party challenging the tax “insist[ed] that the present levy is not a true tax, but a penalty imposed for the purpose of suppressing traffic in a certain noxious type of firearms, the local regulation of which is reserved to the states because not granted to the national government.” Id. at 512. The litigant argued that:

[t]he cumulative effect on the distribution of a limited class of firearms, of relatively small value, by the successive imposition of different taxes, one on the business of the importer or manufacturer, another on that of the dealer, and a third on the transfer to a buyer, is * * * prohibitive in effect and * * * disclose[s] unmistakably the legislative purpose to regulate rather than to tax.

The Supreme Court did not reject this characterization of the tax’s effect. Instead, it simply held that:

“[A] tax is not any the less a tax because it has a regulatory effect; and it has long been established that an Act of Congress which on its face purports to be an exercise of the taxing power is not any the less so because the tax is burdensome or tends to restrict or suppress the thing taxed.

“Inquiry into the hidden motives which may move Congress to exercise a power constitutionally conferred upon it is beyond the competency of courts. They will not undertake, by collateral inquiry as to the measure of the regulatory effect of a tax, to ascribe to Congress an attempt, under the relied on the Due Process Clause in that case. The other four Justices in the majority all based their decision on the Takings Clause. See Eastern Enterprises, 524 U.S. at 529.

guise of taxation, to exercise another power denied by the Federal Constitution.

“Here the annual tax of $200 is productive of some revenue. We are not free to speculate as to the motives which moved Congress to impose it, or as to the extent to which it may operate to restrict the activities taxed. As it is not attended by an offensive regulation, and since it operates as a tax, it is within the national taxing power.”

Id. at 513-514.

- United States v. Kahriger, 345 U.S. 22 (1953), overruled on other grounds, Marchetti v. United States, 390 U.S. 39 (1968), involved a heavy federal tax on gambling proceeds. The party challenging the tax argued that “Congress, under the pretense of exercising its power to tax has attempted to penalize illegal intrastate gambling through the regulatory features of the Act, and has thus infringed the police power which is reserved to the states.” Id. at 23 (citation omitted). The litigant argued that “because there is legislative history indicating a congressional motive to suppress wagering, this tax is not a proper exercise of such taxing power.” Id. at 27.

The Court responded:

The intent to curtail and hinder, as well as tax, was also manifest in the following cases, and in each of them the tax was upheld: Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 19 L.Ed. 482 (tax on paper money issued by state banks); McCray v. United States, 195 U.S. 27, 59, (tax on colored oleomargarine); United States v. Doremus, 249 U.S. 86 and Nigro v. United States, 276 U.S. 332 (tax on narcotics); Sonzinsky v. United States, 300 U.S. 506 (tax on firearms); United States v. Sanchez, 340 U.S. 42 (tax on marihuana).” Id. at 27.

The Court continued: “a federal excise tax does not cease to be valid merely because it discourages or deters the activities taxed. Nor is the tax invalid because the revenue obtained is negligible.” Id. at 28 (emphasis added). And to give some indication of what would constitute a negligible tax, the Court noted that it had upheld, in the McCray case, a tax on adulterated butter that collected only $3,501. Id.

The Kahriger Court concluded that:

“It is axiomatic that the power of Congress to tax is extensive and sometimes falls with crushing effect on businesses deemed unessential or inimical to the public welfare * * * * As is well known, the constitutional restraints on taxing are few * * * * The remedy for excessive taxation is in the hands of Congress, not the courts.” Id. See also id. at 30 (noting precedent upholding federal that “obliterated from circulation all state bank notes”) (citing Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 19 L.Ed. 482).

With regard to ISCRAA, it bears mention that: 1. ISCRAA on its face is a tax, and all of its provisions are adapted to the raising of revenue. The fee formula simply determines the amount subject to the tax; the declaratory judgment provisions help to enforce the tax. 2. ISCRAA will raise more than negligible revenue. Even the 200% tax is likely to be paid in some instances – e.g., when it applies to an excess-fee payment that is marginal and minor, and the attorney is loathe to return the amount to the client. The very fact that ISCRAA will draw a revenue score will confirm its constitutional status as a tax. 3. Even if the issue were relevant to ISCRAA’s constitutionality, the bill hardly impose a “crushing burden” on lawyers. Its high tax rates are marginal rates, applying only to the excessive portion of the fee. And 500% of reasonable hourly rates cannot reasonably be characterized as “confiscatory” or “crushing.”

The Sutherland memo’s remaining legal arguments all border on the frivolous. The memo argues that ISCRAA is a bill of attainder. Yet the memo concedes that the Constitution’s ban on bills of attainder only proscribes laws that “inflict punishment on identifiable individuals” – and that ISCRAA is made applicable on the basis of “judgements exceeding a certain size.” Sutherland Memo at 15. The Sutherland memo argues that ISCRAA violates the Ex Post Facto Clause. Since the 18th century, that clause has been construed to only apply to criminal penalties, not to civil legislation. See Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 386 (1798).

The memo argues that ISCRAA violates federalism. Even if Congress’s regulatory intent were relevant to the validity of the ISCRAA tax, the memo makes no effort to explain why Congress can regulate the minimum wage of every worker in the United States, but cannot apply fiduciary fee standards in a category of lawsuits that manifestly affect interstate commerce. As you noted in your speech introducing ISCRAA, the bill’s fee formula is more liberal than the federal court’s standards in $100 million cases, and as liberal as the most plaintiff-friendly state courts. The Sutherland memo’s only authority for the proposition that ISCRAA would prevent states from securing legal counsel is the opinion of a former state attorney general who has recently been indicted for fraud related to the tobacco settlement attorneys fees. See Sutherland memo at 30 n.6.

Finally, the Sutherland memo argues that ISCRAA improperly reverses a judicial determination because the tobacco settlement attorneys fees were approved by a court. Sutherland memo at 21-25. Curiously, the one judgment that the memo cites as approving an attorneys fee award predates not only the first of the tobacco-settlement attorneys fee awards – this judgment predates the very existence of the Master Settlement Agreement (MSA) that created the fee-arbitration panels. See Sutherland memo at 23 n.4. The fact is that while courts approved the MSA itself, they did not approve the fee awards. Indeed, the MSA specifically precludes judicial review of the arbitration panels' fee awards.

Particular provisions of the tobacco settlement also raise questions about the nature of the states' approval of that agreement. As one commentator has pointed out, the states had little real choice whether to enter the MSA, and the MSA's provisions explicitly attempt to punish any state whose courts invalidate that agreement:

Several features of the MSA raise compelling constitutional concerns that are not reported in the press at all or otherwise are not generally known or understood. First, the MSA punishes states that refuse to join (or drop out of) the MSA. Although consumers in any state that refuses to join the MSA must nevertheless pay collusively raised tobacco prices, their state receives no "damage" payments. Moreover, if a state court invalidates the Qualifying Statute [endorsing the MSA] because it is illegal or unconstitutional, that state's "damages" payments can be reduced by up to sixty-five percent.

Margaret A. Little A Most Dangerous Indiscretion: the Legal, Economic, and Political Legacy of the Governments' Tobacco Litigation CONNECTICUT LAW REVIEW 1143, 1172 Summer, 2001.

Regardless of whether the MSA fees had been approved by a court, Congress can tax those fees. But even so, it is surprising that the tobacco lawyers today would argue that their future fee payments are protected by past judicial approval, when in creating the MSA they went to such extraordinary lengths to prevent meaningful judicial review of either their attorneys fees or the tobacco settlement itself.

Hatch group may go +nuclear, on judges

Plan would limit use of Rule XXII in Dem filibusters

By Alexander Bolton and Geoff Earle

Several senior Republican senators are seeking wider party backing for a bold plan that would break the Democrats, filibuster of President Bush, s judicial nominees.

Their approach calls for employing a rarely used parliamentary tactic to overturn current Senate procedures.

Under the strategy envisioned by Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), among others, the Republicans would strip any Senate minority * currently the Democrats * of their ability to filibuster presidential nominees.

Approval by Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (Tenn.), which is being sought, would all but assure that the plan would go forward.

Under the most likely scenario now under discussion, they would secure a ruling from the chair that Senate Rule XXII does not apply to executive submissions to the Senate * and that includes judicial nominees. Rule XXII provides for unlimited debate on all legislative issues that reach the floor unless three-fifths of the Senate calls a halt.

With such an approach, a favorable ruling from the chair on limiting the scope of Rule XXII could stand after only a simple majority approved it. Anticipating these moves, Democrats have already asked the Senate parliamentarian to weigh in on the issue in their defense.

From the standpoint of the proponents, the appeal of this &silver-bullet& strategy is that it would quash the Democratic blockade without requiring 60 votes, the number needed by current rules to halt such delaying tactics, or 67 votes, the number needed to change a filibustered Senate rule.

One drawback of this proposed tactic is that it might destroy whatever is left of the working relationship between Democrats and Republicans. That is why some legislative experts liken the parliamentary tool to a legislative nuclear bomb.

Under the most likely scenario, the presiding officer of the Senate * perhaps Vice President Dick Cheney * would rule that a filibuster of presidential nominees is unprotected by Rule XXII.

Democrats would need 51 votes to overturn that ruling. In practical terms, that means they would need the help of two GOP defectors * three if Sen. Zell Miller (D-Ga.) votes with Republicans, as he often has.

Another alternative would be to change the rule through the Senate Rules Committee. But that process would entail extensive hearings and negotiations, and would be unlikely to attract Democratic support.

Democrats would view any change of Senate rules that circumscribed the rights of the minority party and was not approved by two-thirds of the chamber as an abuse of majority power.

However, with few exceptions, Senate Republicans view the filibuster of circuit court nominees, a tactic that until recently was rarely used, as an abuse of minority power.

Democrats are filibustering Bush's nominations of Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, respectively. This has prompted an outcry from conservatives in Congress and around the country.

And Republicans on the Judiciary Committee expect Democrats soon to filibuster two more Bush nominees: Bill Pryor, nominated to the 11th Circuit Court, and Carolyn Kuhl, nominated to the 9th Circuit Court, said Margarita Tapia, spokeswoman for the panel.

However, what may be really at stake is the future makeup of the Supreme Court. The justices on the high tribunal have now served together for nearly a decade. Three of the nine justices are over 70 years old.

Although Senate Republican leaders have kept their parliamentary strategy close to the vest, Hatch offered an insight into it in during an interview Friday with The Hill.

Hatch said the Democratic filibuster is &violative of the Constitution& and &totally politicizing of the judicial selection process,& adding: &I know how to break it, and I will when the time comes.&

When asked how he would break the Democratic blockade, Hatch said: &You've got to deny Rule XXII on the executive calendar. I think you'll see this in the not-too-distant future because the process is broken and it can't continue like this.&

All regular Senate business*that is to say all public and private bills*is placed on the legislative calendar. Business sent to the Senate from the White House, such as treaties, executive branch nominees and judicial branch nominees, are placed on the executive calendar.

Hatch believes the Senate has a right to set its own rules * in this case the right to filibuster * for the legislative calendar but not for the executive calendar because that would entail imposing Senate rules on the executive branch and would violate the Constitution,s separation of powers.

&The executive branch and the judicial branch are co-equal [with the legislative branch],& Hatch said.

However, when pressed later about how specifically he would curtail Rule XXII, Hatch said: &Rule XXII should not apply to the executive calendar. I, m not going to go into the plan. There are a variety of methodologies we, re looking at.&

The current Senate stalemate over nominees is the culmination of the increasingly intense battle over the ideological makeup of the federal judiciary, and a sign, many GOP lawmakers say, that the judicial nominating process is &broken.&

&I think it,s a big problem,& said Sen. Trent Lott (R-Miss.), the chairman of the Senate Rules Committee. &I think it,s unconstitutional, but I would defer to Senator Hatch about what is the best way to deal with the problem. I don,t think we can let this stand. We cannot let the Democrats set this [precedent] in perpetuity for them and for us, requiring 60 votes to confirm a judge.&

Lott said the Senate Republican leadership &has to make the final call, but there are a number of us who think we've got to take some further action*I think Ted Stevens [of Alaska], Orrin Hatch and a number of others.&

Lott said that there are ways to change how the Senate does business without enlisting the support of 67 senators, the number needed for a filibustered rule change, but he would not reveal any specific details: &I don,t want to get into it right now. I don,t want to reveal our hand because if we say what exactly we are entertaining, the Democrats will try to find a way to block it.8

One GOP leadership aide said Frist is open to the suggestions of Hatch and others but will not make any hasty decisions.

&We,re not going to rule out any rules changes,8 said the aide. &Mr. Frist may do something later but he,s not going to tear up the rules book. He is going to proceed in a very slow and deliberative way.8

&We,ve learned in the past just because a member or aide says he knows the way to do something that may not be what the parliamentarian says,8 the aide added.

However, when asked if he has solicited the parliamentarian about curbing Rule XXII, Hatch said: &I know what the parliamentarian is going to say.8

A Senate Democratic leadership aide warned against an attempt by Hatch to exempt judicial nominees from the Senate,s filibuster rules. &Rule XXII obviously does apply to nominees, no matter how he wants to parse it.8

If Republicans were able to force a change by jamming through a procedural ruling, &It would be a nuclear winter in the Senate,8 said the aide. &This place would fall apart. It would be dire consequences if that happened, in my opinion.8

The aide said that Hatch doesn,t have the case he thinks he has to win a ruling of the chair, based on the Senate,s precedents, because Republicans have in effect already acknowledged the Democratic filibuster of Miguel Estrada.

&He,s got a precedent of five cloture votes on Estrada, so he doesn,t have a very good precedent,8 said the aide.

The aide also pointed to other times when there have been filibusters and cloture votes on judicial nominees. He called &ludicrous8 GOP claims that the ongoing Democratic filibusters of Estrada and Owen were unprecedented. Cloture was filed to end a filibuster against Abe Fortas,s elevation to chief justice of the Supreme Court. Cloture was also filed and invoked on Stephen Breyer when he was a federal appeals court nominee in 1980.

Those arguments aside, the aide conceded that it might be possible for Republicans to force a rules change by moving that Rule XXII does not apply to judicial nominees and then getting a favorable ruling from the chair.

Then the key question would be, &How would the chair rule, and how would the parliamentarian rule, and would the chair listen to his ruling?8 said the aide. The chair would not necessarily have to hew to that advice ) although the aide said it would be extraordinary to ignore the parliamentarian,s ruling.

Can I offer the White House press corps to the reconstruction effort in Iraq? Any interesting in having Iraq host them for a while?

And you probably know that "Smallpox Bob" Kadlec, from the Biodefense Directorate at HSC, is now TDY in Iraq interviewing former bioweapons scientists. --Ken

Thanks, Josh and all the best to Kristen. We in DPC are contributing to the cause by offering up Reuben Jeffery to the Iraq reconstruction effort. His Washington D.C. portfolio will be handled by Terrell Halaska and his New York issues will be managed by Jay Lefkowitz in his absence. See you at 5:30. Margaret

As many of you know, Kristen Silverberg is shipping out this week for Baghdad. She will serve as policy advisor to the new Presidential Envoy to Iraq, Amb. Jerry Bremer, who will be the senior Coalition official in Iraq. We wish Kristen well in this important adventure, confident that the reconstruction operation is in good hands.

Filling in for Kristen during her absence will be Jeffrey Kupfer, on generous loan from the Treasury Department, where he is Deputy Chief of Staff. Jeff will be in the same COS office space on the first floor WW, at extension 6-5773. We're grateful to have Jeff in this role; please make him welcome.

There will be drinks in the Chief's office at 5:30 this afternoon, to celebrate Kristen and other departing soldiers in the armies of reconstruction.

Brett-
Your friends in the library are working on compiling a list of every nominee to the US Court of Appeals between 1891 and/including 1950, along with the date of their Senate Confirmation Vote. I don't know how good I feel about that. I think DOJ and the Admin. Office of the US Courts are the better bet. I have put 2 calls into Sheila this morning, and she has yet to respond.

Jon

Have any of you worked on the Flag Burning amendment?

The House Judiciary committee is having a markup on a constitutional amendment.

Thanks, Josh and all the best to Kristen. We in DPC are contributing to the cause by offering up Reuben Jeffery to the Iraq reconstruction effort. His Washington D.C. portfolio will be handled by Terrell Halaska and his New York issues will be managed by Jay Lefkowitz in his absence. See you at 5:30. Margaret

Subject: COS staff

As many of you know, Kristen Silverberg is shipping out this week for Baghdad. She will serve as policy advisor to the new Presidential Envoy to Iraq, Amb. Jerry Bremer, who will be the senior Coalition official in Iraq. We wish Kristen well in this important adventure, confident that the reconstruction operation is in good hands.

Filling in for Kristen during her absence will be Jeffrey Kupfer, on generous loan from the Treasury Department, where he is Deputy Chief of Staff. Jeff will be in the same COS office space on the first floor WW, at extension 6-5773. We're grateful to have Jeff in this role; please make him welcome.

There will be drinks in the Chief's office at 5:30 this afternoon, to celebrate Kristen and other departing soldiers in the armies of reconstruction.

Subject: COS staff

As many of you know, Kristen Silverberg is shipping out this week for Baghdad.; She will serve as;policy advisor to the new Presidential Envoy to Iraq, Amb.;Jerry Bremer, who will be the senior Coalition official in Iraq.; We wish Kristen well in this important adventure, confident that the reconstruction operation is in good hands.

Filling in for Kristen during her absence will be Jeffrey Kupfer, on generous loan from the Treasury Department, where he is Deputy Chief of Staff.; Jeff will be in the same COS office space on the first floor WW, at extension;6-5773.; We're grateful to have Jeff in this role; please make him welcome.

There will be drinks in the Chief's office at 5:30 this afternoon, to celebrate Kristen and;other departing soldiers in the armies of reconstruction.

Subject: COS staff

As many of you know, Kristen Silverberg is shipping out this week for Baghdad. She will serve as policy advisor to the new Presidential Envoy to Iraq, Amb. Jerry Bremer, who will be the senior Coalition official in Iraq. We wish Kristen well in this important adventure, confident that the reconstruction operation is in good hands.

Filling in for Kristen during her absence will be Jeffrey Kupfer, on generous loan from the Treasury Department, where he is Deputy Chief of Staff. Jeff will be in the same COS office space on the first floor WW, at extension 6-5773. We're grateful to have Jeff in this role; please make him welcome.

There will be drinks in the Chief's office at 5:30 this afternoon, to celebrate Kristen and other departing soldiers in the armies of reconstruction.

final?

I'll have to send a revised version to Harriet once we receive confirmation on Senator attendance.

Also, I told the Judge about the revised plan re: introduction of the President. He was fine with it.

REMARKS ON JUDICIAL INDEPENDENCE AND THE JUDICIAL CONFIRMATION PROCESS

Friday, May 9, 2003
10:30 a.m. – 11:00 a.m.
Rose Garden
Alberto R. Gonzales

I. PURPOSE

To speak about the importance of judicial independence and to advocate timely and appropriate Senate confirmation of your judicial nominees.

II. BACKGROUND

The process for Senate confirmation of judges remains broken. Of your original 11 appeals court nominees from May 9, 2001, only 7 have received Senate votes (one other may receive a vote Thursday or Friday), and all of those receiving votes have been confirmed. Overall, only 22 of your 42 appeals court nominees have received votes.

Many observers, including the Chief Justice and the American Bar Association as well as Senators of both parties, have called for the Senate to give every judicial nominee a timely hearing and up-or-down vote. At your initial announcement of judicial nominees on May 9, 2001, you called for the Senate to ensure a timely hearing and vote for all judicial nominees, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. You reiterated that principle on October 30, 2002, and proposed a specific 3-Branch plan for the nomination and confirmation of judges that involves the Judiciary, Executive, and Senate.

Since October 30, the Judicial Conference of the United States has adopted your recommendation for judges to provide advance notice of retirements. In addition, you have submitted nominations within 180 days of receiving such notice consistent with your proposal for timely Executive Branch nominations. As to the Senate, however, the process has not improved, although many Senators – particularly those new to the Senate – have expressed the need for the Senate to agree on set procedures along the lines that you proposed.

III. PARTICIPANTS

Judge Alberto Gonzales
Attorney General John Ashcroft
Senator Orrin Hatch
Senator Zell Miller
Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson (invited)
Solicitor General Ted Olson
Bar leaders, Justice Department officials, lawyers, and others to be determined

IV. PRESS PLAN

Open

V. SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

You and Judge Gonzales are introduced into Rose Garden by WHCA and proceed from Oval Office to stage.

Judge Gonzales delivers opening remarks and introduces you.

Note: Judge Gonzales steps to the right and remains on stage during your remarks.

You deliver remarks.

You conclude remarks and depart.

Brett,
David is only free from 10:30-1:30 today. What do you want to do about Ruben and Titus? David may be able to go at 4:30 and 5:00, but I can't be sure until Charlotte gets back (she is giving a tour right now).

The Judge would indeed like 5 minutes with the President prior to our event.

Thanks for asking!

I noticed you did not ask for a Pre-Brief before tomorrow's event.

Does the Judge need 5 minutes prior to brief the President? Or, do you feel comfortable without one?

Thanks.

Federalist Society should NOT be calling people in government (Justice and Senate) to invite them. This is presenting protocol issues at Senate and with DOJ. Thanks.

They were NEVER asked to do that. I was very specific with Leonard on what we wanted from them. I think Joel is taking a license.

They were NEVER asked to do that. I was very specific with Leonard on what we wanted from them. I think Joel is taking a license.

Federalist Society should NOT be calling people in government (Justice and Senate) to invite them. This is presenting protocol issues at Senate and with DOJ. Thanks.

Judge: In pre-brief, I think you should mention to President that when he acknowledges Attorney General in his speech, he should also mention all the great help and hard work of Department of Justice and FBI personnel in vetting nominees. This will be very nice and very helpful and very deserving for those folks.

Any chance that the White House will give some sort of positive comment about Senator Cornyn and his desire to call this hearing, either before or after the hearing? Any chance someone from the WH (perhaps you) will be there? Thanks for any info!

Over the last weeks, as you may know, Senator Leahy - - and his little band of mischief makers - - have been pressing the Judicial Conference for what they hoped would be material that could, in turn, be used against S. 274.

The Judicial Conference's formal reply to Leahy's "invitation" is attached.

JUDICIAL CONFERENCE OF THE UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON, D.C. 20544

THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES
Presiding

April 25, 2003

LEONIDAS RALPH MECHAM
Secretary

Honorable Patrick J. Leahy
Ranking Member
Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
152 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510-6275

Dear Senator Leahy:

Thank you for your letters of April 9, 2003, and April 11, 2003. In those letters, you requested that the Judicial Conference provide the Senate Judiciary Committee with legislative language implementing the Judicial Conference's March 2003 recommendations on class-action litigation and the views of the Conference on S. 274, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003," as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee on April 11, 2003.

As you know, at its March 18, 2003, session, the Judicial Conference adopted the following resolution:

That the Judicial Conference recognize that the use of minimal diversity of citizenship may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-state class action litigation in the federal courts, while continuing to oppose class action legislation that contains jurisdictional provisions that are similar to those in the bills introduced in the 106th and 107th Congresses. If Congress determines that certain class actions should be brought within the original and removal jurisdiction of the federal courts on the basis of minimal diversity of citizenship and an aggregation of claims, Congress should be encouraged to include sufficient limitations and threshold requirements so that the federal courts are not unduly burdened and states' jurisdiction over in-state class actions is left undisturbed, such as by employing provisions to raise the jurisdictional threshold and to fashion exceptions to such jurisdiction that would preserve a role for the state courts in the handling of in-state class actions. Such exceptions for in-state class actions may appropriately include such factors as whether substantially all members of the class are citizens of a single state, the relationship of the defendants to the forum state, or whether the claims arise from death, personal injury, or physical property damage within the state. Further, the Conference should continue to explore additional approaches to the consolidation and coordination of overlapping or duplicative class actions that do not unduly intrude on state courts or burden federal courts.

S. 274, as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, generally provides for federal jurisdiction of a class action based on minimal diversity of citizenship if the matter in controversy exceeds the sum of $5 million, exclusive of interest and costs. (S. 274 as introduced established a $2 million minimum amount in controversy.) The bill also now permits a federal district court, in the interests of justice, to decline to exercise jurisdiction over a class action in which greater than one-third but less than two-thirds of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate and the primary defendants are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed. The court would be required to consider five specified factors when exercising this discretion. (This discretionary provision was not included in the bill as introduced.)

In addition, S. 274 as reported provides that the federal district courts shall not have original jurisdiction over any class action in which: (A) two-thirds or more of the members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate and the primary defendants are citizens of the state in which the action was originally filed; (B) the primary defendants are states, state officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or (C) the number of members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than one hundred. As introduced, the second and third exceptions were the same, but the first one originally precluded federal jurisdiction where "the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed" and "the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of" that state. The replacement language in essence substitutes a numerical ratio for "substantial majority" and eliminates the choice-of-law requirement.

We are grateful that Congress is working to resolve the serious problems generated by overlapping and competing class actions. The Judicial Conference "recognizes that the use of minimal diversity of citizenship may be appropriate to the maintenance of significant multi-state class action litigation in the federal courts." At the same time, the Judicial Conference does not support the removal of all state law class actions into federal court. Appropriate legislation should "include sufficient limitations and threshold requirements so that federal courts are not unduly burdened and states' jurisdiction over in-state class actions is left undisturbed." Finding the right balance between these objectives and articulating that balance in legislative language implicate important policy choices.

Any minimal-diversity bill will result in certain cases being litigated in federal court that would not previously have been subject to federal jurisdiction. The effects of this transfer should be assessed in determining the appropriateness of various limitations on the availability of minimal diversity jurisdiction.

Certain kinds of cases would seem to be inherently "state-court" cases—cases in which a particular state's interest in the litigation is so substantial that federal court jurisdiction ought not be available. At the same time, significant multi-state class actions would seem to be appropriate candidates for removal to federal court.

The Judicial Conference's resolution deliberately avoided specific legislative language, out of deference to Congress's judgment and the political process. These issues implicate fundamental interests and relationships that are political in nature and are peculiarly within Congress's province. Notwithstanding this general view, we can, however, confirm that the Conference has no objection to proposals: (1) to increase the threshold jurisdictional amount in controversy for federal minimal diversity jurisdiction; (2) to increase the number of all proposed plaintiff class members required for maintenance of a federal minimal-diversity class action; and (3) to confer upon the assigned district judge the discretion to decline to exercise jurisdiction over a minimal-diversity federal class action if whatever criteria imposed by the statute are satisfied. Finally, the Conference continues to encourage Congress to ensure that any legislation that is crafted does not "unduly intrude on state courts or burden federal courts."

We thank you for your efforts in this most complex area of jurisdiction and public policy.

Sincerely,

Leonidas Ralph Mecham
Secretary

Department of Transportation
For the Week of May 12, 2003

Key Agency News

DOT to Unveil Reauthorization of Surface Transportation Programs. On Wednesday, May 14, the Department of Transportation is scheduled to announce the Administration's proposed reauthorization of federal highway, transit and other surface transportation programs. The Safe, Accountable, Flexible and Efficient Transportation Equity Act (SAFETEA), highlights the Administration's key transportation messages of safety in surface transportation, and efficiency in the construction of highway and transit systems. In furtherance of the Secretary's top safety priority, the legislation will provide incentives to states to increase safety belt usage. The announcement takes place during National Transportation Week, and senior DOT officials will appear at events nationwide to highlight the legislation and the Administration's priorities in transportation.

DOT Officials to Cross Country with Administration's Transportation Message. During National Transportation Week (May 12 through 19), the Department of Transportation has scheduled a series of high-visibility events and announcements across the country to highlight the Administration's key transportation messages – safety and saving lives, innovative technology, environmental sensitivity, local flexibility in decision making, commerce and moving freight and the efficient building of roads and transit systems.

May 12. (Washington, D.C.) Secretary Mineta speaks at a "Click It or Ticket" safety belt enforcement event. Secretary Mineta, the Federal Aviation Administrator and the Federal Maritime Administrator address the National Defense Transportation Association conference. (Miami, Florida) DOT's Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization holds a transportation procurement fair with the Miami Congressional delegation. (New York, New York) The National Highway Traffic Safety Administrator speaks at a "Click It or Ticket" safety belt enforcement event.

May 13. (Tacoma, Washington) The Deputy Maritime Administrator speaks at the Propeller Club's Maritime Day Luncheon. (Washington, D.C.) DOT's Chief of Staff, the Federal Highway Administrator and the Under Secretary for Transportation Policy speak to the National Defense Transportation Association's conference. (Tallahassee, Florida) The NHTSA Administrator speaks at a "Click It or Ticket" safety belt enforcement event.

May 14. (Washington, D.C.) Secretary Mineta announces the Administration's surface transportation reauthorization proposal, and holds meetings with key state and local transportation stakeholders. (Boston, Massachusetts) The Federal Highway Administrator and the Federal Transit Administrator will speak to the Women's Transportation Seminar. (Cleveland, Ohio) The St. Lawrence Seaway Administrator will speak to maritime stakeholders in the Great Lakes area.

(Madison, Wisconsin) The Acting Administrator of the Research and Special Programs Administration will present a transportation research grant to the University of Wisconsin. (Washington, D.C.) The Federal Railroad Administrator will present a grant to Operation Lifesaver for safety improvements at railroad grade crossings. The Assistant Secretary for Policy will speak to the Tour de Sol alternative energy festival.

May 15. (Washington, D.C.) Secretary Mineta testifies before the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee on surface transportation reauthorization and SAFETEA. (New Orleans, Louisiana) The Under Secretary for Transportation Policy speaks to a conference of the American Association of Port Authorities. (Boston, Massachusetts) The Federal Transit Administrator meets with the editorial board of the Boston Globe.

May 16. (Manchester, New Hampshire) The Under Secretary and Assistant Secretary for Transportation Policy will tour area bus facilities. (Nagoya, Japan) The NHTSA Administrator will speak to the 18th International Technology Conference on Enhanced Vehicle Safety.

DOT to Dedicate Consolidated Air Traffic Control Facility for the Baltimore-Washington Area. On May 17, DOT's Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) will dedicate a new air traffic control facility that consolidates the operations of five airport terminal radar facilities in the Washington-Baltimore area. The consolidation is designed to provide better service to pilots operating in the area and reduce overhead and operating costs to the FAA. The new Potomac terminal radar approach control facility (TRACON) at Warrenton, Va., consolidates the staff and operations of five formerly separate facilities, including Dulles International, Reagan Washington National, Andrews Air Force Base, Baltimore-Washington International, and Richmond International airports, and will manage 5,000 flights per day over 23,000 square miles of airspace.

DOT Continues Support for Iraq Reconstruction Efforts. The Deputy Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration, retired U.S. Army Corps of Engineers General Richard Capka has arrived in the Middle East to coordinate DOT assistance to the Iraq Reconstruction Team. A Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) technical advisor, dispatched to work with the Team onsite, will serve as an on-site source of civil aviation expertise and a conduit to sources in the U.S. to help re-establish Iraq's air traffic control system and reopen its airports.

Press Activity

Heavy press interest is expected in response to the Wednesday, May 14, announcement of the Administration's plans for surface transportation reauthorization.

Gannett News Service is preparing a story on the regulation on the .08 sanctions program.

KNBC is preparing a story on NHTSA's policy on side air bags and children.

The Detroit News called for information on roof crush problems on Ford f150 trucks from 1996-2003. He was told we had no investigations or recalls, but that we planned an NPRM on the issue in early 2004.

The Los Angeles Times is preparing to do a story on seat belt use by vehicle body type.

FAA spoke with Reuters, AP, the Chicago Tribune, the Chicago Sun Times, the Daily Herald, AvWeb, WMAQ-TV (NBC), WLS-TV (ABC), the AeroNews Network, the Boston Globe and NBC Washington concerning allegations that the level of safety at the O'Hare tower and Chicago air traffic control facility has dropped to unacceptable levels.

CIO Dan Matthews was interviewed May 2 for an article that will run in Federal Times.

The Secretary's Schedule

May 12. Participate in "Click It or Ticket" safety belt enforcement national mobilization news conference; Address the National Defense Transportation Association Conference.

May 14. Hold press conference announcing the Safe, Accountable, Flexible and Efficient Transportation Equity Act (SAFETEA); Address the Department of Transportation's Opening Ceremony for National Asian Pacific American Heritage Month; Attend Congressman Billy Tauzin's and John Dingell's congressional dinner.

May 15. Testify before the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee regarding SAFETEA.

May 19. Remarks at swearing in ceremony for National Transportation Safety Board Chairman Ellen Engleman; Meet with leadership of railroad unions.

May 20. (tentative) Testify before the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on SAFETEA.

May 22. Keynote address at National Maritime Day observance at the Navy Memorial in Washington, D.C.

Congressional Activity

May 15. The House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure will hold a hearing on the reauthorization of federal surface transportation programs, and the Administration's proposed reauthorization legislation. Secretary Mineta will testify.

May 15. The Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee will hold a hearing on reauthorization of the Maritime Administration the agency's management of the Title XI ship construction financing program. Maritime Administrator Bill Schubert and DOT Inspector General Ken Mead will testify.

FOIA Inquiries

Nothing to report.

Any chance that the White House will give some sort of positive comment about Senator Cornyn and his desire to call this hearing, either before or after the hearing? Any chance someone from the WH (perhaps you) will be there? Thanks for any info!

Matt,

Can you find out the answer to the following: Dora Irizarry is listed on the DOJ site (<http://www.usdoj.gov/olp/nominations.htm#districtcourt>) as a nominee for the Southern District of NY. All the press stories seemed to indicate that President Bush nominated her for the Eastern District of New York. Which is correct. Thank you.

Subject: Judicature Article Draft: The Selection Process Section

Dear Brett, Viet and Makan,

The wheels grind slowly but they do grind. Copied below is a draft of one of the substantive sections (The Selection Process) for the Judicature article that Sheldon Goldman and I have written with, of course, the help of your interview input. In a separate e-mail, I will forward the section drafted on "The Confirmation Process." As we promised, we are giving you an advance look at these two sections and, of course, we are interested in any comments or concerns that you might have.

These two sections represent the major portions of the article drawn from our interviews. Other sections of the piece, as in the past, will present "the numbers" documenting judicial selection during the first two years of President Bush's term. Much of the data for those sections was derived from the DOJ web site and/or the Judiciary Committee questionnaires.

Thanks, again, for all of your assistance in our preparation of this piece. I anticipate that we will be back in the field towards the latter part of President Bush's term to work on a summary piece covering the full four years. Again, we welcome your comments (return e-mail would be fine) and hope that you find these sections of interest. I will forward the "Confirmation Process" section draft right behind this material. I should also note that I will be out of town next week from Monday afternoon through Thursday morning. Thus, it would be very helpful if any comments that you send my way during this period are copied as well to Sheldon Goldman at

>I have finally finished editing the selection process and the confirmation process. I may have to do a bit more cutting but I am sending the selection process in this e-mail and the confirmation process in another e-mail. Would you be able to send both out to the people we interviewed and told we would run their quotes by them? I hope to wrap things up this weekend and send the ms to David on Monday.

>The Selection Process

> Any assessment of the processes utilized for selecting judges during the first two years of the Bush presidency must start with the recognition that staffing the judiciary was a central component of the President's domestic policy agenda. As stated by Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh:

> "The legal legacy that the president leaves [is as] important as anything else we do in terms of legislative policy . . . . We want to ensure that the highest quality judges, the highest quality intellects, men and women with the highest integrity, populate the federal bench. And let's be clear about it, we want to ensure that the President's mandate to us that the men and women who are nominated by him to be on the bench have his vision of the proper role of the judiciary. That is, a judiciary that will follow the law, not make the law, a judiciary that will interpret the Constitution, not legislate from the bench." 3

> Associate White House Counsel Brett Kavanaugh added that the President,

> "is very interested in this and thinks it is one of his most important responsibilities on the domestic side. Obviously, he has a lot of things going on, but he has devoted more attention to the issue of judges than any other president." 4

> Such a characterization stands, for some, in sharp contrast to the place of judicial selection in the presidential priorities of the Clinton White House where, according to Nan Aron, Executive Director of the Alliance for Justice, the administration could be accused of "not making judgeships a priority. . . ."5 In the Bush administration, however, "it was very clear from the outset that judges were going to be such a visible part of the President's program. Judgeships were both symbolically and actually symbols of presidential power."

> For Aron, these differences are reflective of broader differences >in the generic approach to the issue of judicial selection in Democratic >and

REV_00393602

>Republican administrations. "It's my view Republicans care about results.
>They care about, at the end of the day, will this person do what I want >them to do on the bench in terms of carrying out my political imperatives.
>And to the Democrats, it's still largely patronage. There's no vision there >for the Democrats. There's no sense of guiding principles."
> For its part, of course, the Bush administration would >characterize its judicial vision in terms of the way in which nominees >view the scope of judicial power and not through an orientation towards >reaching particular results. Indeed, as Viet Dinh noted,
> "We are also extremely clear in following the President's > mandate that we should not, and do not, and can not > employ any litmus test on any one particular issue, because > in doing so we would be guilty of politicizing the judiciary > and that is as detrimental as if we were unable to identify > men and women who would follow the law rather than > legislate from the bench."
> Structurally, at the most basic level, the processes utilized by >the Bush administration for designating judicial nominees are not >dramatically different than recent presidencies in their reliance upon >senior personnel from the White House, primarily the Office of the White >House Counsel, where both Alberto Gonzalez, White House Counsel, and Brett >Kavanaugh, Associate White House Counsel, are deeply involved in judicial >selection matters, and the Department of Justice, primarily through the >Office of Legal Policy (OLP), a division headed by Assistant Attorney >General Viet Dinh. The OLP replaced the Office of Policy Development >(OPD) from the Clinton and Bush Sr. years, a change that has been seen as >symbolically significant by some.
> The Office of Legal Policy was the name given to the new Justice >Department division created by the Reagan administration. By returning to >the original name of the office, this perhaps signalled that this >President Bush's judicial selection behavior would be more like that of >President Reagan, known for his aggressive pursuit of a conservative >agenda through judicial appointments, than that of his two successors. C.
>Boyden Gray, who served as the White House Counsel during the first Bush's >tenure did not see any such motivation in the change, noting that "Every >Justice Department is slightly different. I think it's just a question of >personal style."<sup>6</sup> Viet Dinh opined that the change underscored that it >was "important to us to get back to the history of the establishment of >the office. The day I was sworn into office, the Attorney General signed >the order renaming the office, the Office of Legal Policy. That's the >name [that] . . . reflects the fact that what we do is not simply >development policy, but also evaluating, implementing and generating >policy."
> At the heart of the Bush administration's judicial selection >processes is the Judicial Selection Committee, a joint enterprise between >White House personnel and OLP chaired by Alberto Gonzalez. In our >interviews with Viet Dinh and Brett Kavanaugh we attempted to ascertain >the precise membership of this group but, beyond confirming their own >participation and that of Gonzalez, we were unable to identify the other >participants. This stance was taken, Dinh explained, "in order to >preserve the deliberative process for the President. But suffice it to >say that the primary participants are from the White House Counsels Office >and the Department of Justice comprising both this office and the Attorney >General when appropriate." Kavanaugh explained that not identifying names >was "part of a larger principle that we don't usually discuss who is >involved in the deliberative process and who is making what >recommendations to the President."
> When we noted that our research during the Clinton administration >revealed that representatives from the First Lady's office, the >Vice-President's office, legislative affairs, and the President's Chief of >Staff, among others, were present at meetings of the Judicial Selection >Committee during the Clinton years, Dinh added that, "the people who would >have an interest in this process are represented" but did not offer >further elaboration.
> The Judicial Selection Committee, according to Kavanaugh, "gets >together and discusses just where we stand on both the nominations side >and the confirmation side." At the outset of the selection process, the >Committee oversees the development of names to take to the President for >his initial approval, what Dinh labeled, "the presidential check-off."

>Characterizing the level of presidential involvement at this relatively >early stage of judicial selection Dinh noted that, "I do know that he has >[exercised] direct, personal and specific decision making authority on >each and every candidate. So when I say it is a presidential check-off, I >mean it is [literally] a presidential check-off." As in past >administrations, the names of potential District Court nominees are >initially submitted, according to Dinh, "from the [home state] senators, >or whoever the relevant player is. . . ." For the circuit courts the names >tend to be generated more by the administration.
> Once the president approves to move forward, the Department of >Justice oversees a two-pronged background investigation of the potential >nominee including an internal vetting process conducted by OLP staff as >well as a field investigation conducted by the FBI which is characterized >by Dinh as "your normal background investigation for presidential >personnel but specifically targeted toward judicial nominees going into >issues of temperament and impartiality in addition to the normal >background check. In describing the OLP investigation, Dinh noted that it >"is quite similar, actually, to the activities of interest groups such as >the >American Bar Association where we contact members of the bench and bar in >the affected community and do a staff vetting report." The American Bar >Association's own vetting of candidates, however, historically done prior >to their nomination by the president, has been removed from the Bush >selection processes, a matter that will be explored further below.
> Dinh reported that the meetings of the Judicial Selection >Committee were held "as necessary and once a week unless there is no >business," a luxury rarely if ever enjoyed during the first two years of >the Bush administration when large numbers of nominees were processed to >be sent to the Senate. All interviews of potential nominees were >conducted at the White House although both Viet Dinh and Brett Kavanaugh >characterized the Judicial Selection Committee as completely collaborative >in its >operation, with no distinct role played by White House as distinct from >Justice Department participants. According to Dinh,
> "We do not think of ourselves as separate offices serving > different functions. We do have primary responsibilities, > we do have specific expertise, but when we introduce > ourselves to the candidates or other people we may introduce >ourselves as being from the Department of Justice or we > may not. We do not think of our participation as part of the > White House Counsel's Office or part of the Department of > Justice. I think it is just a concerted effort to serve the > President the best way we can."
> Kavanaugh concurred, describing the process as "really >collaborative, we work together, [and] try to be a seamless whole."
> Significantly under Clinton the political facets of judicial >selection were openly avowed to be the province of White House personnel >while the more professional facets of the evaluation of candidate >credentials were handled by the Justice Department. Under Bush, it >appears, no such >distinctions are recognized. As assessed by Dinh,
> "It's just a matter of we're all sitting here contributing > to the decision-making process. There's not a separate > Department of Justice interview and then a White House > interview. There's a joint interview, with joint input, > with joint assessment that is not divided between politics > and qualifications."
> Dinh did concede, however, that there was one important facet >of the process where some distinction of function could be found:
> "The outreach to senators, the liaisons for senators, > are done by the White House Counsel's Office, and that > may be more in regard to what you mean by politics, > whether it [the nomination ]is going to fly or not.
> The White House Counsel's Office handles the contact and >consultations to all home state senators, even on > circuit courts, and even if the person is from the > opposite party."

>And it is in the performance of this consultative role that one finds the >greatest divide between the characterization of the process by the >administration and its supporters, and the perception of Senate Democrats >and the administration's critics. Viet Dinh put it quite succinctly. " We >recognize home state senators' prerogatives, that's why we consult." Brett >Kavanaugh concurred, noting, "We consult with the home state senators on >both district court and courts of appeals and run by them, before an FBI >background check, names of people who are under consideration to get their >reactions ahead of time, and that helps avoid problems down the road." >Kavanaugh added, "We maintain consultation logs, and I think there's been >extensive consultation."
> Consultation does not, in any sense, convey, however, that >senators have a veto power over the administration's choices, whether the >senators are Democrats or Republicans. According to Kavanaugh
> "Consultation doesn't mean, obviously, that the home > state senator picks. . . the judge, but it does mean that > we consult in the sense of discussing potential names > with them and hear what they have to say. If someone > says, 'Well, gee, I wish you would pick my person,' and > that's an overstatement just to give you a flavor, > that's different from a home state senator [saying]
> 'Gee, that person has real problems, let me tell you > about the problems. ' That kind of thing we take very > seriously. Sometimes home state senators have specific >information that may not have come to us."
> Sharing this view of extensive White House consultation with home >state senators was Judiciary Committee Republican Chief Counsel Makan >Delrahim, a senior staff assistant serving Senator Orrin Hatch:
> "I don't think we have to worry about this White House.
> They've been just incredible, the amount of consultation > they've had with the home state senators . . . ."<sup>7</sup>
> As noted, however, the area of consultation is one about which >there is considerable disagreement concerning the performance of the >President's judicial selection team. According to Elliot >Mincberg, Legal Director of People For the American Way, for example,
>"What you saw was almost a complete abandonment of Clinton's efforts to >put the advice back into advice and consent. Unfortunately, what we've >been seeing from the president is confrontation rather than consultation >and cooperation." <sup>8</sup> Marcia Kuntz, of the Alliance For Justice, linked
>the >issue of consultation with broader concerns.
> "The administration's penchant for secrecy is very much > evident in its conduct of the judicial selection process, > both in cutting out the ABA and not circulating these > names ahead of time, and in its failure to consult > with the Senate before nomination. The names just > don't get out there in the same way. There's no public > discussion, there's no vetting outside the administration." <sup>9</sup> > Democratic staff members in the Senate who were involved in >discussions of potential nominees in consultative processes raised similar >themes. One noted:
> "There is no interest or evidence that there will be > balance or moderation coming from the White House.
> They don't want a check and balance on this, they want > a blank check. Their view of consultation, negotiation, > building relationships, is a very narrow view. It remains a >unilateralist view of how to create a relationship. There > were times, fairly early in the process, where suggestions > were being made, arrangements could have been made, > nobody was trying to rub anybody's face in anything, > where we thought accommodations on all sides could > have been worked out. But there was no interest in > doing that. There was a lot of the 'permanent campaign' going >on." If, indeed, the fundamental approach to the nature of consultative >processes has been altered from the Clinton years, and we must note that >none of the parties interviewed and quoted here are disinterested, there >are important consequences that can follow. A Democratic staffer >observed:

> "The President has every right to nominate . . . , but all > we're asking is, 'Don't send us the worst guys.' Hatch used > to call up Clinton and say, 'Don't send me that guy. I don't > think I can get him through.' Or, 'I'm not going to be able > to support him.' And they'd listen. Now I've had a federal > judge tell me 'You know what? I give the Republicans > their due. They play hardball. That's why they are going > to win.' Clinton certainly didn't [play hardball]. And we > don't. We believe in this institution too much. There was > a check and balance . . . that is pretty much going to go > away. What we're going to be left with is when you can > get 51 guys to vote against a judicial nominee or 41 > people to filibuster a judicial nominee, that's the only > time they're in trouble."

> When the Administration's vetting of a potential nominee, through >its Judicial Selection Committee, is completed, and there is satisfaction >that appropriate consultations have been held and the candidate passes >muster, the name will be forwarded to the President for his signing off on >the formal nomination. At this stage, according to Brett Kavanaugh, the >President

> "is very involved in the process. Obviously, you don't > discuss things with a president, this president > or any president, till you have everything refined and > the decision and options tied up in a way that's appropriate > for his time, particularly now since there are a number of > issues on his plate, since September 11th particularly."

> There remain two areas of judicial selection processes under Bush >that warrant additional exploration because they represent potentially >significant departures from the status quo characterizing the approach of >past administrations. First, at the outset of his administration, >President Bush ended the formal role played by the American Bar >Association in the rating of candidates before final decisions on >nominations were made by the President. More recently, the President >offered a timetable proposal suggesting the parameters for the flow of all >phases of the judicial >selection process from notification requirements suggested for sitting >judges regarding their plans for stepping down from the bench through the >time taken to conduct various facets of the confirmation process.

> From the administration's perspective, the swirl of controversy >that surrounded the removal of the ABA's formal participation in the >presidential stages of judicial selection could be characterized as much >ado about very little. Viet Dinh noted that the administration recognized >that the ABA,

> "through the Senate Judiciary Committee and through > individual senators, had a role in this process. It was > very clear when I took office that Senator Leahy, then > Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee would not > clear any person for a hearing unless and until that person > had received a rating from the ABA. So the ABA was an > integral part of the Senate Judiciary Committee's > consideration of the candidacy and we did everything in > our power to cooperate in that process."

>Towards that end, Dinh established a procedure whereby when a nomination >was sent to the Senate for confirmation consideration, the name was >concurrently sent to the ABA so that they could start their review >processes.

> Brett Kavanaugh further elaborated on the administration's >position >on ABA involvement in judicial selection, a position he felt was > "widely mischaracterized. The President felt it was > unfair and unwise to give one group preferential access > to the process, particularly when there are a number of > bar associations that we hear from and the ABA had this > preferred role, which seemed unwise. It was not a > suggestion that the ABA shouldn't be rating judges. In fact, the > President has touted on numerous occasions the fact that > the ABA has rated people like Justice Owen well qualified, >unanimously. So it wasn't commentary on whether it was >appropriate for the ABA to rate judges. It was commentary > on the fact that no one group should really be part of the > nomination process, and it goes, in some ways, to a broader > issue of presidential prerogatives and what's appropriate.

> It was obviously interpreted as a way of kicking the ABA > out. And, obviously, the ABA would rather be involved > in the front end rather than the confirmation side, the > back end. But we felt, the President certainly felt, that > the appropriate thing was for the ABA and every other > group that was to rate the President's nominees, to have > the same shot. I think there was a sense at the beginning > that this means that the President is going to be turning > to people who are not qualified because he's scared or > afraid of the rating process. Nothing could be further > from the truth. We welcome an examination of the > qualifications of his nominees. So I think it was, > as things often are when decisions are made by a > president, there was a lot of politics going on. But > it was really a principled decision about what the > appropriate role for the ABA was and not a decision > about what kind of nominees there would be nor a > decision about whether the ABA appropriately could > rate the judges."
> Boyden Gray succinctly summarized the view that little has really >changed. "The ABA, I think, is just as honored now as it was when I was >there. The only thing is that they don't get the upfront knowledge about >it, but they're full players. They're getting everything they've always >had." A similar assessment was offered by Makan Delrahim from his >perspective as Republican Chief Counsel of the Judiciary Committee which, >when first chaired by Orrin Hatch during the Clinton years, had ended the >ABA
>Committee's "most favored" status in the process, a change lasting until >the Democrats regained control of the Senate chamber and Patrick Leahy >assumed the Judiciary Committee chairmanship.
> "Senator Hatch looked at it as a matter of equity.
> Should the Hispanic Bar Association do a vetting > before the Committee acts on it or the president > sends it down? What about the Minority Law Students > Association? Any association could provide useful > advice and they should. And the ABA is just one of > them. . . . They've provided their service and it > has been valuable."
> Since the advent of the 108th Congress, with the ABA removed from >the presidential facets of judicial selection, the Republicans back in >control of the Senate, and Senator Orrin Hatch again chairing the >Judiciary Committee, the question of what status the ABA's post-hoc >ratings will play in the confirmation process looms both larger and on >somewhat more tenuous footing. Indeed, as Delrahim underscored,
> "The ABA can do its work, but we're not going > to allow the ABA to delay our consideration of > judicial nominees. I mean there's no constitutional > reason . . . to allow any outside group to delay the > advice and consent process of the Senate."
> Critics of the administration's posture towards the ABA see the >implications of its removal from the front end of the selection process in >a much more negative light with unhappy consequences. Nan Aron, for >example, argues that,
> "One difference between now and years before is the > chilling effect that excluding the ABA has had on the > desire and ability of lawyers to be upfront, to share > their views of the nominees. It's staggering. I > remember from the '80s lawyers would call and say,
> 'Just got word from the ABA that so and so had been > nominated. You guys ought to take a look.'" >Now, as Marcia Kuntz added, "there is a lot of pressure on people not to >be candid .Once somebody is nominated, there is an inevitability to >confirmation, so why would they stick their necks out and say anything >negative."

> In Aron's view, this reality is consistent with a broader >administration motivation for altering the ABA's role in the process in >the first place:
> "I am convinced, I am absolutely convinced, that > the reason the administration removed the ABA, > I don't care what they say, is not because they are > afraid of the rating, because we all know that > ratings were uniformly high .It wasn't the ratings > that caused them to take them out. It was their > desire for total and complete secrecy, and that's > another thing that's a huge departure. It's a > major change. It's shrouding the entire judicial > selection process in secrecy."
> The second major departure of the Bush approach to judicial >selection, the nascent effort to regulate the time parameters of the >process, was not unveiled until October 31, 2002 , just one week before >the 2002 congressional elections. The President's proposal, stemming, in >part, from his view that the Senate had displayed a poor record in >confirming his nominees, contained four central recommendations, >collectively targeted at filling vacancies expeditiously as seats on the >federal bench became open. To succeed, the President's proposal would >require behavioral changes not only in the administration's own behavior, >in some instances, but in the institutional behavior of the senate and the >judiciary as well.
> 1. Federal judges should give a year's notice of their intention to > take retirement or senior status.
> 2. The president should nominate a replacement judge within 180 days > of receiving such notice.
> 3. The Senate Judiciary Committee should hold hearings within 90 days > of receiving a nomination.
> 4. The full Senate should hold a floor vote within 180 days of the > initial receipt of the nomination.
> From the perspective of the Judiciary Committee and a newly >seated Republican majority, Makan Delrahim welcomed the proposal, noting >that the President,
> "doesn't come at this with any baggage. He wasn't part > of the Senate before, during the Clinton administration.
> He wasn't, certainly, in the White House during the Clinton > administration. So he comes to this like a businessman and > a manager does, looks at this, and goes 'What's wrong with > this process? ."
>Adding to its luster was the notion that the proposal was targeted at the >process irrespective of the occupant of the White House. Viet Dinh >emphasized this point. "I think it's a perfectly sensible plan. It >operates irrespective of who is in power, either in the administration or >in the Senate." Recognizing that the plan required considerable >cooperation from participants in the process outside of White House >control, Dinh noted the administration's flexibility in how meeting the >guidelines might be >accomplished:
> "We would support a Senate rule change to codify this, > but we would support anything short of a rule change. A > Judiciary Committee rule change, a bipartisan gentlemen's >agreement, Judicial Conference resolutions, whatever it > is in order to get as close to the ideal that there should be > an orderly process of at least giving a person a full day > hearing and an up or down vote."
> In a similar vein, Associate White House Counsel Brett Kavanaugh > noted that, "things rarely happen overnight, but he has set out a > marker. The President ultimately would like to see the Senate come > around to the view that it would make sense to have a standard > process that applies to every judicial nominee." In Kavanaugh's > view, such a standardized process would enable the judicial selection > process to emerge from the tit for tat obstructionism that has > characterized both the Clinton and Bush administration's selection > efforts. Kavanaugh added:

> "Have a process that people know the rules in advance, > the rules of the road. We're going to have hearings;
> we're going to have votes. And if you think someone is out > of the mainstream, it is incumbent upon you to make that > case, whether you are a Republican objecting to a Clinton > nominee or a Democrat objecting to a Bush nominee. And, > ultimately, you have to convince your colleagues that > is the case and not bottle up a nominee. That's not fair > to the nominee, it's unfair to the president, it hurts the > courts, [and] breaks down the whole process. It deters good people > from getting involved."
> While committed, in the long run, to the necessity for a Senate rule > change as an ultimate goal, Kavanaugh admitted, > "That takes time. A lot of times, ideas like this, you > keep plugging, you keep plugging and, ultimately, it > may come to fruition. And that's what we plan to do > with this. The President said the goal is to have > a new judge ready to take office the day the old judge > retires. That's the seamless transition we're seeking.
> That's a process. Perfection will probably never be > achieved. But improving the process significantly, > we think, can be achieved in these kind of timetables."
> In analyzing the President's mandate, it is important to > underscore > the critical "end game" of the proposed process, floor action on a > nomination. According to Viet Dinh,
> "This process is not meant as a way to override
> . . . prerogatives of home state senators. To the > extent that we can accommodate those interests > and also succeed in expeditious resolution, great!.
> With respect to holds, a hold is nothing but an > intention to filibuster. And its only force is the > prerogative to filibuster on the floor. We have > absolutely no intention of disturbing [the] century > old tradition of Senators to filibuster on the floor.
> . . . [T]he call for a vote on the floor within 180 days > is nothing but a statement, 'Hey, let's get it out in > the open.' It's not necessarily a call that you have > to have passed cloture within 180 days. If you > want to exercise the floor prerogative of denying > cloture, fine, just do it. Do it within 180 days, > according to normal rules of floor debate, including > filibuster, but do it out in the open."
> Some skepticism about the President's proposal can be seen among > the administration's supporters. Boyden Gray, for example, noted that, > "I think they'll try and hold to it. Maybe they'll be > able to. But I, myself, am a little bit skeptical of > finite timetables that you have to get so and so out.
> It's just not quite susceptible to such precision.
> In addition to such practical concerns about the plan's operation, > substantive criticisms of the proposal were also offered, in this > instance, from the Democratic side of the Senate aisle. One aide noted > that,
> "The proposal doesn't take into account when a > president stacks nominations, numerous nominees > at the beginning. There is no regard to how > controversial they may be, how time consuming the > records may be. They are just supposed to get a > hearing pretty quickly."
> Another Senate aide offered,
> "Portraying it as a situation that has gotten worse > is just playing into their argument. Their argument > has now gotten to the point where the President is > seriously committed to the proposal that he made > right before the election. 'Okay, let's just take > politics out of this; I'll just take all the marbles.
> Forget about blue slips, forget about hearings, forget > about everybody. We'll just have this arbitrary time

I gather the President is doing a judges event tomorrow. It's probably too late for me to get on the list for this one, but in the future, if you think of it as similar things are planned, I'd love to be included, if only to stay in contact with the issues, the players, and the WH. (My partner, George Jones, a Dem, is going -- I suppose because he's the President of the D.C. Bar.) If there's some mechanism for notifying the Social Office of my interest, I'd be much obliged if you'd let them know.

Hope all is going well. I'll catch up with you soon.

Regards,

Brad

President Criticizes Filibusters
Senate Majority Leader Offers Plan to Get Judges Confirmed

By Amy Goldstein and Helen Dewar
Washington Post Staff Writers
Saturday, May 10, 2003; Page A06

President Bush yesterday used the second anniversary of his earliest judicial nominations to deliver a fresh attack on Senate Democrats, saying it was a "disgrace" that they have impeded the confirmation of two of his selections for federal courts. Meanwhile, the Senate's top Republican proposed a plan that would make it easier for the White House to win approval of the judges it wants.

Democrats immediately opposed the idea of changing the way judges are confirmed, saying lawmakers have approved virtually all of Bush's judicial nominees who have come to a vote.

"What's broken is not the Senate confirmation process, it's the White House nomination process," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), a Judiciary Committee member. "The process isn't working now because President Bush is trying to stack the courts with right-wing nominees."

Yesterday's sharp rhetoric, which has become typical of debate over the federal judiciary's makeup, came as the GOP seeks ways to overcome Democrats' opposition to nominees they considers too conservative.

Bush restated his assertion that the Senate has a constitutional duty to guarantee an "up or down vote" by the full Senate to all judicial nominees, regardless of whether the Judiciary Committee supported them. And, in a new proposal, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) introduced a plan that would essentially guarantee such a vote to any nominee -- for judgeships or other appointive jobs -- as long as at least half the senators agree.

While the president did not explicitly endorse Frist's plan during his speech from the White House Rose Garden, both men's proposals would circumvent a Senate rule that Democrats have used lately to prevent votes on at least two nominees. Through a filibuster, a final vote can be blocked, by means of delay, unless 60 of the 100 senators vote to end debate. Republicans hold 51 Senate seats, and the GOP has been unable recently to break filibusters thwarting confirmation votes on Miguel Estrada, for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and Patricia R. Owen, for the New Orleans-based 5th Circuit.

Frist, backed by fellow GOP leaders, proposed gradually reducing the 60-vote requirement on successive "cloture" votes, until a filibuster could eventually be broken by a simple majority of 51 votes. The rule change would apply only to nominations, not to legislation.

"The need to reform the filibuster on nominations is obvious, and it is now urgent," Frist told the Senate. His proposal faces considerable hurdles, because, under the Senate's rules, the change probably would require 67 votes for approval -- which is impossible without substantial Democratic support.

Democrats yesterday did not sound amenable. Senate Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) noted that 124 of Bush's judicial nominees had been confirmed and only two have been filibustered. The confirmation system "ain't broke," he said, and does not need changing.

REV_00393640

Sen. Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) was more pointed, saying Frist's plan had "not a snowball's chance in Hades" of getting the two-thirds majority.

Bush couched the dispute in broad terms, saying, "the obstructionist tactics of a small group of senators are setting a pattern that threatens judicial independence."

Bush said the Senate has not voted on 18 of his 42 choices for appeals courts, eight of whom were nominated at least a year ago. He said that has exacerbated what he and other Republicans call a judicial "vacancy crisis."

Democrats countered that the vacancy rate on federal courts is at its lowest in more than a decade, and that the Judiciary Committee has acted on Bush's nominees more swiftly than it had during portions of President Bill Clinton's tenure.

Bush said Democrats were threatening the "design of a separate and independent judicial branch" of government by trying "to force nominees to take positions on controversial issues before they even take the bench." Democrats, meanwhile, have accused the administration of not sending the Judiciary Committee adequate background materials to help the Senate evaluate some of the nominees.

REMARKS BY
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

NSA LAW DAY

FORT MEADE, MD

FRIDAY
MAY 2, 2003

From the lawyers perspective, the integrity and honesty of the client sets the tone for the lawyer. And I believe that is true for every lawyer in this Administration.

It is hard to be around George W. Bush and not learn, simply by watching and listening. It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

When you interact with a client on a daily basis ... when you weather storms and celebrate achievements together ... you develop a good understanding of the client's priorities and needs, the client's strengths and weaknesses, whether they are gracious in success and resilient in defeat. There are few people I admire more than our President and like everyone I know in the White House, I offer no apology for that statement.

You will be assured to know that George W. Bush is deliberate and serious about his duties in these extraordinarily difficult times. But he has a wonderful sense of humor and charm - like his mother - that is disarming and comforting.

The President also has an insightful sense of his destiny ... his place in time, and he has a remarkable skill in choosing wisely the battles to fight, knowing that there is so much good that can be achieved through the majestic power of the Presidency, but accepting that there are limits to what can be accomplished – even for the President of the United States.

This President does the very best that he can
... and he is very comfortable knowing that is all he can do. I think that serenity and quite confidence comes from his very real and strong faith.

As the President's lawyer, I am responsible for a wide variety of issues that affect the White House:

- Ethics Advisor
- Clearance Counsel
- Litigation
- Legislation
- Policy
- Clemency
- Protecting the powers of the Presidency –Executive Privilege
- Nomination of federal judges, U.S. Attorneys, and U.S. Marshals
- National Security

It is this responsibility that I want to focus on this afternoon.

The phrase, of course, “the war on terror” had little meaning to most Americans in the domestic context prior to September 11th.

I was scheduled to speak at a government ethics conference in Norfolk, Virginia that morning at the invitation of Amy Comstock. Like you I had no idea of the extraordinary events that were about to unfold when I flew out of Dulles airport less than an hour before American Flight 77 departed that same airport and crashed into the Pentagon.

I arrived at 8:45 at the hotel in Norfolk for a 9:00 am speech.

As I made my way up to the ballroom, my assistant called on my cell phone to tell me to get to a television.

I really did not know what to think as I watched those initial pictures of the airplane hitting the first tower.

While I was not sure of the cause of this tragedy, I was certain that I should get back to Washington as quickly as possible.

Immediately following my shortened remarks, I was again hustled to a television set. By this time the second plane had hit the other tower, thus confirming our worst fears.

During the next hour, before most cell phone communication in and out of Washington was shut down, I stayed on the phone trying to collect the most current information from my deputy who had been moved into the Situation Room in the basement of the West Wing. I was told the President was safe in Florida, but beyond that details were sketchy as the fog of war started to settle in.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. Last month, on the morning of March 19th, I sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House with the President of the United States. He was surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

When I arrived at the gate at the Norfolk airport to return to D.C. I was advised that the airport had been closed by the FAA. I remember strangers stood huddled together quietly staring at television sets in the terminal as reports began to confirm that the Pentagon had been hit.

Fortunately, a navy officer graciously offered to drive me to Norfolk Naval Station. There was a lot of activity when we arrived. The base like other military installations around the country was transitioning to the highest state of military alert.

Because I am an Assistant to the President and a civilian commissioned officer, the military recognized the need to assist me and offered to fly me back to Washington in a Navy helicopter.

One of the senior military officers asked me where exactly did I want to go - and I said as close as you can get me to the White House. He said they would arrange to land me on the South Lawn of the White House. I said no immediately. I knew that any aircraft approaching the White House might well be shot down and I knew that nobody but the President lands on the South Lawn.

For over an hour I waited in frustration as the Navy worked to obtain flight clearance.

Finally at half past noon we boarded the military helicopter and headed for Andrews Air Force Base. Nothing was said during the ride. I wondered how the President was doing and what I would find when I got back to my office.

When I arrived at the White House I went immediately to an underground secure location where the Vice President, most of the Senior staff, and other senior administration officials were working.

The situation appeared stable, Congressional leaders and cabinet secretaries in the line of Presidential succession had been located and moved to secure locations, and, except for essential personnel, the White House staff had either been relocated to various buildings in Washington or told to go home.

Later in the afternoon we had a secure video call with the President and he announced that he was coming home.

The rest of the day is a blur. I remember at some point in the early evening finding Karen Hughes, one of the President's advisors, and walking with her to the Oval Office to meet the President who was by then en route to the White House aboard Marine One.

She and I waited outside of the Oval Office as it was being prepared for an address to the nation that night. When the President landed on the South Lawn, we immediately went back into his study behind the Oval and worked on his remarks - Karen and I, Ari Fleischer, Andy Card, Condi Rice and the President. Everybody was serious and we began the work of assessing what had happened and deciding the appropriate response.

So much changed that day, lives were lost, our way of life was transformed permanently as many of us were painfully exposed to terrorism for the first time.

Not surprisingly my responsibilities as the President's lawyer also transitioned. The Counsel's Office still deals with all the issues I listed earlier, but more of my personal attention is devoted to the war on terror.

American history, like the history of all great powers, is full of examples of difficult choices that must be made by our leaders in times of war or emergency to safeguard our most cherished liberties.

Whether it be Lincoln's surrounding of the Maryland State Legislature with federal troops to prevent Maryland's succession from the Union or Truman's dropping of the atomic bomb on two cities, few can doubt the debt that we owe to past Presidents who have taken difficult steps in order to preserve the long-term survival of our freedoms.

As other Presidents have done during times of war or emergency, this President has taken difficult steps to preserve the long-term survival of this country.

Some of these decisions, while controversial in a few circles, were absolutely necessary in my judgment. Can anyone seriously dispute that the President's first responsibility is to protect American lives? The President, as the head of the executive branch and the Commander in Chief of our armed forces -- and the only political leader directly accountable to all Americans -- has a unique personal responsibility to ensure our safety and security.

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each general gave a short briefing and announced their troops fit and ready to go.

Respectfully, no individual member of Congress, no member of the media, nor any legal organization or military expert is or can be personally responsible for the outcome of this war in the way the President is.

That responsibility is even more difficult when as here the unique nature of this conflict challenges certain basic legal principles that form the foundation of our domestic and international systems of justice.

We've already discovered this new type of conflict doesn't always fit neatly within our traditional notions of civil liberties, and so your colleagues within the Administration continually strive to find the right balance between protecting our country and preserving our freedoms.

Lawyers have been involved in every major decision by this President and by the CIA, DOJ, DoD, and State:

- We have given advise on interpretation of treaties and international agreements such as the Geneva Convention and the Hague Regulations,
- Targeting decisions,
- Treatment of detainees at Guantanamo,
- Interrogation of detainees,
- intelligence collection,
- covert activities,
- post-war reconstruction and governance,
- ownership and disposition of seized assets,
- Arrest, confinement and disposition of American citizens,

- Justification for use of force,
- Negotiation and drafting of congressional authorization to use force,
- Negotiation and drafting of UN resolutions.

Members of the media, legal groups and scholars have weighed in with opinions – sometimes strong opinions - about the legality of certain decisions by this Administration in our war against terrorism. We welcome these opinions with confidence because we are guided by the principle that even a President exercising his Commander-in-Chief powers must abide by the Constitution. Yes, the world has changed, but the words of the Constitution have not.

The debates that have arisen are not new or unexpected and they certainly are not unimportant. To the contrary they are an absolutely necessary check in ensuring that the actions of our government are consistent with the rule of law. And lawyers play the preeminent role in protecting and defending the precious words of the Constitution.

Your work in this endeavor arguably is no less patriotic than the actions of our soldiers on the battlefield – both are in defense of our freedoms.

But as the American people tally the successes and failures of our work, let me remind you of the circumstances in which this President makes his decisions.

We are at war. I sit in on the meetings of the National Security Council, I read the intelligence reports, and the threat we face as a nation from terrorists are as grave as any we have faced since World War II.

Our enemies are not constrained by civilian authority or a state actor. Nor are they constrained by ordinary human concerns for their own safety or lives. They are fanatics who employ a high level of indiscriminate violence. Our enemies do not respect Western values. They do not love liberty, they do not respect law, they do not cherish life.

Despite this new type of threat, some assert that it is obvious that people waging war on America are entitled to lawyers, it is obvious they claim that foreign nationals doing battle against America have a right of access to our courts, it is obvious they say that all government proceedings over the fate of our enemies should be open to the public.

Respectfully, it is not so obvious as a matter of law.

Some of the issues we litigate today have not been before a federal judge in over 50 years ... some have never been litigated. The novel questions generated by this conflict are not always easily answered.

History may show that a particular decision by the President was unwise or unnecessary. I do not think so, but we will see. I am confident history will confirm that the Administration did what it believed it lawfully could to safeguard our long-term freedoms and to prevent another horrific attack.

The President asked whether they had everything necessary to win the war in Iraq. To a man, the answer was yes. After everyone had briefed, the President turned to the largest of the half dozen television monitors and said, “Tommy, I have been fully briefed by the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of the peace of the world, and for the sake of the peace and freedom of the Iraqi people, I hereby give the order to execute Operation Iraqi Freedom.”

Pausing, the President said with emotion, “Tommy, may God bless the troops.”

Twenty months ago I never worried about the legality of interrogation techniques at Guantanamo Bay or whether the Geneva Convention prohibits the televising of captured American soldiers. The intersection of domestic and international obligations and customs that arise during war produces a multitude of legal issues.

And from my vantage point, the role of the lawyer may be most important during times of hostilities.

I close by confessing that I have the best legal position in America. If I could afford to, I would serve this President and our country for free. But despite the Oval Office meetings, the rides on Air Force One and the Camp David retreats, this is only a job and like every other job it will end someday. As my wife Rebecca is quick to remind me, the Office of the Presidency did just fine before the arrival of Al Gonzales and it will survive long after I am no longer the White House Counsel.

I have a great deal of respect and affection for our President, but I also love my family. They need me and I have an obligation to them as well as a duty to my client. That is something lawyers all too often forget.

As I grow older I realize more and more the importance of finding the right balance between responsibilities to family and to the profession, mindful of the irrefutable truth that nothing in work, nothing, – no closing, no jury verdict, no paycheck – is, or ever will be, as satisfying as the adoring hug of your child, or as comforting as the warm embrace of a loyal and loving spouse.

Let us not forget that in the past few years we have witnessed the impeachment and trial of a sitting President, endured a contested Presidential election with a recount battle that required the involvement of our courts, including two Supreme Court decisions; we have suffered through the horrific attacks of September 11th and we successfully waged war in Afghanistan and now Iraq. It has been an unbelievable and historic period for our nation. For many countries just one of these events might have toppled a government.

But our country is even stronger today and I consider it the best evidence yet of the strength of our system of government and the enduring spirit of our citizens. We should all be proud.

Every time I drive through the gates into the White House compound, or whenever I walk into the Oval Office to brief the most powerful person in the world, I think about the awesome responsibility that the President has -- and the corresponding duty that falls upon all of us who serve him.

Those are indescribable moments, and I will hold this privilege near my heart for the rest of my life just as I am sure you will hold special your service to America.

Thank you for inviting me to speak and for your work to secure our freedoms. I pray that God watches over you and your family, may he guide your future decisions, and may he continue to bless the United States of America.

General Franks replied, “Mr. President, May God Bless America.” Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room.

We sat there quietly, motionless for several seconds. Knowing we had just witnessed history. That order began the final phase of disarming Saddam Hussein after twelve years of defiance. And that meeting is just one of many memorable moments I have experienced in the White House in two years as the President's lawyer.

People from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television. And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time.

Of course, part of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there ... and that is particularly true now during this historic period for our country.

Today I want to share thoughts about my job as the President's Lawyer in the context of Law Day, the annual celebration to our constitution, to the rule of law and to the rule of lawyers in our society. But before I do, I want to recognize the work of General Hayden and all of his team at the NSA for their important work in protecting our country. I know that a lot of what you do is unknown to the general public, so the agency often does not get the appropriate credit when a terrorist is captured or a terrorist plot is discovered and destroyed. But I assure you the President knows what you do. Because your work is often in the shadows, the role of the lawyers at this agency are even more important in ensuring that the protection of our national security does not come at the cost of protecting the civil liberties that we enjoy under our Constitution.

REMARKS BY
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

WASHINGTON & LEE

LEXINGTON, VA

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2003

George W. Bush is thoughtful, deliberate and serious about his duties in these extraordinarily difficult times. But he has a wonderful sense of humor and charm - like his mother - that is disarming and comforting.

The President also has an insightful sense of his destiny ... his place in time, and he has a remarkable skill in choosing wisely the battles to fight, knowing that there is so much good that can be achieved through the majestic power of the Presidency, but accepting that there are

Thank you for the hospitality. I pray that God watches over you, may he guide your future decisions, and may he continue to bless the United States of America.

limits to what can be accomplished – even for the President of the United States.

This President does the very best that he can ... and he is very comfortable knowing that is all he can do. I think that serenity and quite confidence comes from his very real and strong faith.

History is made every day in the White House. This morning I am going to try to sketch, in broad strokes, some of the issues that I deal with as the President's lawyer.

But before I do, let me say that I am pleased to be here as an honored guest of the students of Washington & Lee in beautiful Lexington, Virginia. And it is a special privilege to be the inaugural speaker in the Justice Lewis Powell lecture series.

On this date 35 years ago – March 31, 1968
– President Lyndon Johnson announced to a stunned Nation that he would not stand for reelection. Soon thereafter, the Senate blocked the nomination of Abe Fortas, President
Johnson’s friend and his nominee to replace
Earl Warren as Chief Justice. When Fortas
resigned from the Court in 1969 and the Senate rejected President Nixon’s nominee, Clement
Haynsworth, the President’s sights turned to
Lewis F. Powell, Jr.

It was only natural that President Nixon would consider Powell. Having led the growth and development of a preeminent law firm, and served as President of the ABA and of the American College of Trial Lawyers, Powell was, at the age of 62, one of the most accomplished attorneys in the country. But when he was approached by Attorney General Mitchell about the Supreme Court, Powell said no.

Worried about both his age and potential controversy as a Southerner, Powell wrote to Mitchell and advised him – with characteristic humility and grace – of his “considered judgment that the nomination of a younger man less subject to controversy would best serve the public interest.” President Nixon soon nominated Harry Blackmun to fill the Fortas seat.

Fortunately for the Nation, fate would not let Lewis Powell escape the Supreme Court. Nixon again sought out Powell when in 1970 he encountered two more vacancies on the Court. As John Jeffries recounts in his authoritative biography of Justice Powell, Powell again attempted to rebuff entreaties from the White House, but this time a personal appeal by the President to Powell's sense of duty finally led Powell to relent and agree to the nomination.

It was the same call to duty that Powell had answered when, in his mid-30s, he volunteered for the service following Pearl Harbor and went on to win the Legion of Merit and a Bronze Star as an intelligence officer.

Although he was a reluctant nominee, Powell went on to serve with distinction on the high court for 15 years. I was not fortunate enough to have the privilege of meeting him personally, but by all accounts he brought to the Court undiluted the same characteristics that had already sealed his reputation as a member of the bar – a gentle graciousness, a legendary work ethic, a keen mind, and a humble spirit.

I can tell you from personal experience that these are qualities on which our President places high value. It is therefore a distinct honor for me to join you today in tribute to a man who remained true to these core values throughout his tenure of service to our Nation.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. On the morning of March 19th, just 12 days ago I sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House with the President of the United States. He was surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

Given the gentlemanly manner and respectful nature of Justice Powell, a man who always seemed to labor to find compromise, it is almost ironic to discuss with you some of the issues that we must deal with in the White House ... where it seems at times that we are in a constant state of conflict.

I pray no one needs to be reminded that America is still engaged in a global war on terror and, of course, U.S. military forces continue to fight in Iraq. Tomorrow the United States weighs in on the debate over affirmative action in arguments before the U.S. Supreme Court. And as we meet today, the White House and Senate Republicans are still battling a filibuster in the U.S. Senate over the President's nomination of Miguel Estrada to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Each of these conflicts provide an interesting case study of executive power and the role of the Counsel's Office in ensuring that the legitimate authorities of the Presidency are respected. But such a study is helpful only if the relationship between the President and the Congress is framed in its proper context.

Last year, the Wall Street Journal published a story with the headline “Assertive President Engineers shift in Capital’s Power.” The article begins by acknowledging that throughout American history, Presidents have tussled with Congress. But then goes on to say that the past year has seen a fundamental shift of power to the White House, the biggest in at least a generation.

Admittedly, the confluence of a strong willed President, an evenly divided Congress, and the prosecution of a war has affected the way we do business in Washington.

But having survived 26 months of negotiation and compromise with Congress over a variety of issues, and in light of our continued struggle to get the President's judicial nominees confirmed – even with a Republican controlled Senate, I can testify to the continued vitality of Congressional power.

But it is certainly true that today there is a healthy give and take between the President and Congress. From the perspective of the Counsel's office, the courage, integrity and honesty of the President are of overriding importance to the protection of the office he holds and the tone for the entire White House. And this President makes it relatively easy to advocate principled positions in defense of Presidential power.

As previous Counsels have observed, much of my job is necessarily reactive, responding to the crisis or issue of the day. But that said, standing here with the benefit of two years of service, I can say that there are two core principles that I have sought to pursue in serving the Presidency and this President.

The first principle is fidelity to the rule of law. Sounds simple and obvious -- even trite -- until you remember that one of the preceding six Presidents was impeached and another resigned under the threat of certain impeachment. And in both situations, Counsels to the President were criticized for dissembling the Presidency by subordinating the rule of law to the personal interests of the Administration and, indeed, of the President himself.

The lawyers in the Counsel's Office have studied this history. We know that our job is to protect the institution of the Presidency and the White House, it is not to protect the personal or political conduct of the person who occupies the office - and we fully understand that the first principle that must influence and determine everything we do is fidelity to the rule of law.

And we strive to do just that. We owe the American people, the Presidency and this President no less.

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each general gave a short briefing and announced their troops fit and ready to go.

The second principle is to recognize that the constitutional prerogatives of the Presidency are tested and challenged day after day in myriad ways... and that these challenges must be met so that the principle of separation of powers ... the checks and balances envisioned by the framers of our Constitution... will be respected.

As the Wall Street Journal article observed, the history of this country has seen a continuing shift back and forth in the balance of powers between Presidents and Congresses. In recent times, particularly in the wake of Watergate, Presidential authority has diminished as Congress has reacted with outrage – often with justifiable outrage, it bears emphasis – to abuses by the Executive Branch.

It seems clear to me, however, that Congress has also, on occasion, taken advantage of a particular President's momentary political vulnerability to draw power to itself and away from the President. In Washington, power always moves to the strongest actor... the person or institution who has the dominant political will and strength.

And to illustrate, I invite you to join me in examining the President's role as the commander-in-chief, and his role in making judicial appointments.

I was scheduled to speak at a government ethics conference in Norfolk, Virginia on the morning of September 11th. Like you I had no idea of the extraordinary events that were about to unfold when I flew out of Dulles airport less than an hour before American Flight 77 departed that same airport and crashed into the Pentagon.

American history, like the history of all great powers, is full of examples of difficult choices that must be made by our leaders in times of war or emergency to safeguard our most cherished liberties.

Whether it be Lincoln's surrounding of the Maryland State Legislature with federal troops to prevent Maryland's succession from the Union or Truman's dropping of the atomic bomb on two cities, few can doubt the debt that we owe to past Presidents who have taken difficult steps in order to preserve the long-term survival of our freedoms.

As other Presidents have done during times of war or emergency, this President has taken difficult steps to preserve the long-term survival of this country.

Some of these decisions, while controversial in a few circles, were absolutely necessary in my judgment. Can anyone seriously dispute that the President's first responsibility is to protect American lives? The President, as the head of the executive branch and the Commander in Chief of our armed forces -- and the only political leader directly accountable to all Americans -- has a unique personal responsibility to ensure our safety and security.

Respectfully, no individual member of Congress, no member of the media, nor any legal organization or military expert is or can be personally responsible for the outcome of this war in the way the President is.

That responsibility is even more difficult when as here the unique nature of this conflict challenges certain basic legal principles that form the foundation of our domestic and international systems of justice.

We've already discovered this new type of conflict doesn't always fit neatly within our traditional notions of civil liberties, and so your government continually works striving to find the right balance between protecting our country and preserving our freedoms.

Members of the media, legal groups and scholars have weighed in with opinions – sometimes strong opinions - about the legality of certain decisions by this Administration in our war against terrorism. We welcome these opinions with confidence because we are guided by the principle that even a President exercising his Commander-in-Chief powers must abide by the Constitution. Yes, the world has changed, but the words of the Constitution have not.

The President asked whether they had everything necessary to win the war in Iraq. To a man, the answer was yes. After everyone had briefed, the President turned to the largest of the half dozen television monitors and said, “Tommy, I have been fully briefed by the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of the peace of the world, and for the sake of the peace and freedom of the Iraqi people, I hereby give the order to execute Operation Iraqi Freedom.”

The debates that have arisen are not new or unexpected and they certainly are not unimportant. To the contrary they are an absolutely necessary check in ensuring that the actions of our government are consistent with the rule of law. And lawyers play the preeminent role in protecting and defending the precious words of the Constitution.

Your work in this endeavor arguably is no less patriotic than the actions of our soldiers on the battlefield – both are in defense of our freedoms.

But as the American people tally the successes and failures of our work, let me remind you of the circumstances in which this President makes his decisions.

We are at war. I sit in on the meetings of the National Security Council, I read the intelligence reports, and the threat we face as a nation from terrorists as grave as any we have faced since World War II.

Our enemies are not constrained by civilian authority or a state actor. Nor are they constrained by ordinary human concerns for their own safety or lives. They are fanatics who employ a high level of indiscriminate violence. Our enemies do not respect Western values. They do not love liberty, they do not respect law, they do not cherish life.

Despite this new type of threat, some assert that it is obvious that people waging war on America are entitled to lawyers, it is obvious they claim that foreign nationals doing battle against America have a right of access to our courts, it is obvious they say that all government proceedings over the fate of our enemies should be open to the public.

Respectfully, it is not so obvious as a matter of law.

Some of the issues we litigate today have not been before a federal judge in over 50 years ... some have never been litigated. The novel questions generated by this conflict are not always easily answered.

History may show that a particular decision by the President was unwise or unnecessary. I do not think so, but we will see. I am confident history will confirm that the Administration did what it believed it lawfully could to safeguard our long-term freedoms and to prevent another horrific attack.

Recent headlines have focused our attention on a more traditional form of conflict in Iraq. And like other traditional conflicts, this one has generated numerous legal issues. One relates to the President's fundamental authority as a matter of domestic and international law to use force against Iraq – a question the lawyers began studying in earnest in the spring of 2002.

With respect to domestic law, the President has two mutually reinforcing sources of authority – his Constitutional authority as Commander in Chief and the statutory authority provided by Congress in resolutions passed in 1991 and 2002.

The authority of the President to use force without a formal declaration of war has been recognized several times in our courts and was most recently reaffirmed by the First Circuit just weeks ago.

The question of legal authority in the eyes of the international community is more complicated.

We believe the President may use force in Iraq under two sources under international law. The first is under existing United Nations Security Council resolutions and the second is under the doctrine of self defense under Article 51 of the UN Charter.

Prior to the Gulf War, the Security Council adopted Resolution 678, authorizing use of all necessary means to force Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait and to restore international peace and security in the area. This was the basis of use of force against Iraq during the 1991 Gulf War.

At the end of the Gulf War, the Security Council imposed weapons of mass destruction disarmament obligations on Iraq as a condition of the cease-fire declared in 1991. Because Iraq has materially breached these WMD obligations, Administration lawyers believe the basis for the cease-fire has been removed, and the use of force is re-authorized under Resolution 678.

Pausing, the President said with emotion,
“Tommy, may God bless the troops.”

General Franks replied, “Mr. President, May God Bless America.” Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room.

We sat there quietly, motionless for several seconds. Knowing we had just witnessed history.

This has been the longstanding position of the United States and has been reflected in Security Council's practice. For example, when coalition forces used force against Iraq in 1993 in response to Iraqi violations, the UN Secretary General stated publicly that the coalition "had receive a mandate from the Security Council according to Resolution 678, and the cause of the raid was the violation by Iraq of the conditions the cease-fire.

No new resolution authorizing use of force was deemed necessary in 1993.

Coalition forces also relied on Iraq's material breaches of the cease-fire conditions as the international legal basis for air strikes against Iraq in 1998, in Operation Desert Fox.

Again, there was no objection from the Security Council.

Last fall, the Security Council unanimously decided again in Resolution 1441 that Iraq has been and remains in material breach of its obligations under the cease fire. The Council recalled that it had repeatedly warned Iraq that it would face serious consequences as a result of its continued violations of its obligations.

The Council decided, however, to afford Iraq a “final opportunity” to comply with its disarmament obligations but warned that violations of Resolution 1441 “shall constitute a further material breach.” Regrettably, Iraq failed to seize this opportunity by failing to submit a currently accurate and complete declaration of its WMD holdings and failing to cooperate fully in the implementation of the resolution. So contrary to some reports, the use of force in Iraq has already been sanctioned by the U.N.

In addition to these preexisting UN resolutions, we believe use of force is justified to protect the national security of the United States.

Self-defense has been a fundamental right long recognized in the customs and practices of nations.

Some international scholars have questioned the United States reliance upon what they claim to be a new theory of self-defense, referred to as preemption, in order to justify its use of force. In truth, the doctrine of preemption is not so novel. The 1837 “Caroline Case” is generally cited as establishing the right of “anticipatory self-defense” under customary international law.

The steamer Caroline had been supplying armed insurgents against British rule in Canada with reinforcements of men and materiel from the United States. In response to the threat of more activity of this sort, a British force from Canada entered U.S. territory at night, seized the Caroline, set the ship on fire, and sent it over Niagara Falls, killing two U.S. citizens in the process.

The British claimed they were acting in self-defense. The Caroline case has been distilled into two principal requirements for using force in anticipatory self-defense:

The use of force must be necessary because of both the imminent nature of the threat and the absence of peaceful alternatives, and, the response to the threat must be proportionate.

- There are several examples of recent U.S. practice that support this principle:
- During the Cuban Missile Crisis – nuclear missile bases in Cuba were labeled an “immediate threat” and the United States took the position that imposition of a blockade was a justifiable act of self-defense.
  - In connection with the 1989 military action in Panama – President Bush explained the action was necessary to protect American lives in imminent danger.
  - Finally, the 1998 cruise missile strikes in Afghanistan in response to U.S. embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania were justified as “a necessary and proportionate response to the imminent threat of future terrorist attacks against U.S. personnel and facilities.”

With the advent of nuclear and other sophisticated weapons and the potential for terrorists to obtain such weapons, we believe the degree of imminence required to justify using force in anticipatory self-defense should be seen differently: the threat need not be as demonstrably imminent if there is an increased risk of occurrence and an increased magnitude of harm.

That order began the final phase of disarming
Saddam Hussein after twelve years of defiance.

And that meeting is just one of many memorable moments I have experienced in the White House in two years as the President's lawyer.

Taking those changed circumstances and the practice among nations into account, we believe the appropriate analysis should be stated as follows:

Anticipatory self-defense is justified if a state reasonably believes that it will be the subject of attack by weapons of mass destruction or terrorism; pursues nonmilitary remedies to no avail; waits until further delay would unreasonably increase the chances of significant harm; and uses force proportional to the threat.

It is not for me to speculate whether the United States would have initiated force in Iraq absent prior UN action. I can say with confidence that the President is convinced the threat from Iraq is real for the United States and its interests. So even without universal international support he believes the forced disarmament of the Hussein regime is in the national security interests of the U.S.

A second, often overlooked role that lawyers perform during hostilities is providing advice about appropriate targeting. Under the laws of war certain types of facilities cannot intentionally be targeted. For example, it would be unlawful to target intentionally a mosque, a hospital or a school. Military facilities and command and control facilities, on the other hand, are legitimate targets.

However, the legal authority becomes more complicated if Saddam Hussein houses senior members of his military in a hospital or if a commercial building contains a communications center that may have both a civil and military use. Under the laws of war both of these targets are legitimate military targets in my judgment. But even with legitimate targets, the United States has additional obligations to use proportional force and to take steps to minimize any collateral damage to civilians.

And of course, there are political and diplomatic consequences that are weighed and considered in connection with every high collateral damage target.

In the Iraqi conflict senior American commanders have avoided bombing dozens of high priority Iraqi targets for fear of civilian casualties, arguably making it harder to achieve some of the air campaign's important goals.

As you may have read every target on the Pentagon's strike list undergoes a rigorous review. Using a sophisticated computer program, military planners estimate the blast area of a particular weapon, and then tailor the attack accordingly, matching the size of the bomb, its detonation fuse, its angle of attack and the time of day for the strike to minimize the risk to civilians.

For example, if an important military facility is located near a school, we bomb the target at night when there are no children in the school. If the target is located near a mosque, then we approach the target from an angle that minimizes the possibility that the bomb blast will damage the mosque.

The targeting list is reviewed by lawyers at multiple levels beginning with the JAG Officer for General Franks, the General Counsels of the Joints Chiefs and the Department of Defense and finally the lawyers at the White House.

I assure you we do not approve targets. The military planners and the Secretary of Defense develop the target list and the President approves those targets that are potentially high collateral targets. The lawyers are there to remind the President and others that there may be legal consequences that flow from targeting decisions.

Federal criminal statutes make it a crime for a U.S. person to violate specified international conventions governing the rules of war.

One final thought relating to the President's role as Commander in Chief. Beginning on September 11th, more and more of my personal attention has been focused on terrorism and war-related issues. Two years ago I never worried about the legality of interrogation techniques at Guantanamo Bay or whether the Geneva Convention prohibits the televising of captured American soldiers. The intersection of domestic and international obligations and customs produce a multitude of legal issues.

And from my vantage point, the role of the lawyer may be most important during times of hostilities.

People from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television. And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they first step into the White House.

As the President's lawyer I am also responsible for protecting the President's constitutional role in the appointment of federal judges. In my judgment, there are few presidential decisions more important than the men and women a President appoints to the bench. Many of a President's policies and initiatives can be amended or eliminated by the next Congress or changed by subsequent Administrations, no matter how popular the President, no matter how effective the policy.

But an appointment to the federal bench represents a lifetime decision that will affect the lives of millions of Americans – it represents perhaps the President’s most lasting legacy. I cannot give you a better example of the power of federal judges to affect the lives of Americans than the recent 9th Circuit decision concerning the constitutionality of a phrase in the Pledge of Allegiance.

You may have read that there is some disagreement between the President and certain Democratic senators over some of the President's judicial nominees. Let me give you my thoughts.

I begin with the Constitution, which gives to the President the authority to nominate judges, not the Senate or some subcommittee of the Senate.

Recently I was asked whether this President, elected by the narrowest of margins, lacked a mandate to nominate his type of judge to the federal bench, a proposition I have heard advocated by a few Senators. The answer of course is that, beyond advice and consent, the Constitution does not recognize a power-sharing agreement between a President and the Senate regarding judicial appointments. Nor is there anything in the Constitution that limits the President's discretion based on the margin of his election.

Although the President was praised for the quality of his appointments to the State courts in Texas some claim that his federal appointments are outside the mainstream.

Well let's look at what a compassionate conservative looks for in his judicial nominees?

Consistent with his public statements during the 2000 presidential campaign, this President looks for someone who possesses unquestionable character, integrity, and professional excellence. The President expects judges to respect precedent and follow the law as written in the Constitution and by Congress, and not subordinate the law to their own policy predilections.

The President's approach to judging is politically and ideologically neutral in the sense that he does not believe a judge should seek to bend the law in either a conservative or liberal direction, that a judge should follow the law to its proper result no matter its policy or political ramifications. We do not impose a litmus test. We do not ask nominees their views on controversial issues such as abortion or affirmative action.

The framers of the Constitution envisioned a separate third branch of government where judges would be independent and impartial. Of course, there is a price for that independence: federal judges are virtually unaccountable for their decisions.

This is why it is so important that judges not come to the bench with an agenda. We should all be on guard against a process that allows people who are unaccountable to have an active role in developing public policy. That, ladies and gentlemen is the role of the Congress and the President ... because if they get it wrong, the American people can address it on Election Day.

But there are no checks when a federal judge goes beyond the mere interpretation of law and becomes involved in deciding what is best and fair for you and your family as a matter of policy.

Of course, part of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there ... and that is particularly true now during this historic period for our country. It is hard to be around George W. Bush and not learn, simply by watching and listening.

It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

We have a fairly exhaustive judicial selection process in the White House. It includes interviews, examination of prior opinions, speeches and writings, and discussions with other members of the bar. But the selection of a nominee is not a science, it is more an art and it is admittedly imperfect. We are attempting to predict human behavior – how a judge is going to discharge her responsibilities not just in the next term, but five years, even 20 years from now.

And if you believe as I do that judges grow and change over time, and if you accept that events may occur in one's personal life that may have an impact on the way a judge approaches certain types of issues, then you will appreciate how difficult it is to predict sometimes what kind of judge a nominee is going to be. One need look only at certain Supreme Court Justices and the Presidents who appointed them to the court to understand that sometimes it is hard to predict future performance.

What is known is that differences in the approach to judging is critical in the outcome of cases. It really does matter who serves on the judiciary. Changes to a court sometimes mean changes in the law. Some purists would argue that the law should not depend on the judge or composition of a court. I agree for the most part, in an ideal world the Constitution would not change just because there is a new majority on the Supreme Court.

Predictability in the law is important in maintaining confidence in our legal system and judiciary, but we know sometimes changes in law have to be made to correct previous mistakes or changed circumstances. Often that change occurs in connection with the reexamination of controversial issues.

Decades ago we saw this happen, thankfully, in Brown v. Board of Education. Tomorrow, the Supreme Court will hear arguments over affirmative action in education.

In the Grutter and Gratz cases, the Supreme Court will address whether the University of Michigan's race-based admissions policies violate the Fourteenth Amendment. The college at Michigan awards students 20 points on a 150-point scale for being a minority. Michigan's law school admits a "critical mass" of minority students.

The question presented is whether these racial preferences are narrowly tailored to achieving a compelling governmental interest.

President Bush believes that diversity in higher education is important. All Americans, regardless of their race, should have the opportunity to attend college and graduate schools – the keys to the American dream. At the same time, he understands the divisiveness that inevitably accompanies programs that treat individuals differently because of their race.

The United States thus filed a brief that recognizes these competing principles. In particular, we argue that regardless of whether diversity is a “compelling” governmental interest, governments must first use available race-neutral alternatives that are capable of realizing that interest.

The President believes that these race-neutral alternatives are a way to bring both sides of the affirmative action debate together. They allow all Americans, of all races, the opportunities of a college degree. They result in broadly diverse student bodies. And they do so without dividing individuals along racial lines.

That these race-neutral programs work has been demonstrated in three of the largest States in America: Texas, Florida, and California. Each of these States has implemented some version of a percentage plan – guaranteeing admission to students who graduate from the top of their high school classes. These programs focus on drawing students from all parts of the State, rather than from a handful of “elite” high schools. And they have been fairly successful in providing broadly diverse student bodies.

These percentage plans are by no means an exhaustive list of race-neutral programs that would produce racially diverse classes.

Programs based on socioeconomic factors favor students who have performed well despite having faced various social and economic obstacles, like poverty, actual discrimination, or being of the first generation of their family to attend college. California and Florida includes this approach as part of their overall reforms.

As you will soon come to learn as lawyers,
when you interact with a client on a daily basis
... when you weather storms and celebrate achievements together ... you will develop a good understanding of the client's priorities and needs, the client's strengths and weaknesses and that is true of my relationship with the President. There are few people I admire more and like everyone I know in the White House, I offer no apology for that statement.

The United States' position in this case not only provides a way to unify the competing sides of this debate. It also allows the Court to avoid the difficult, divisive question of whether race can ever be a factor in university admissions. That is an issue that divided the Supreme Court in the Bakke case, and an issue that would likely divide the Court today.

Some may say that our position merely kicks the can down the road – postpones decision on an important issue that will inevitably have to be resolved by the Court. I'm not so sure. I believe that these race-neutral alternatives will work, as they have in the States that have tried them. If so, this could be one of those rare instances where creative thinking brings about a consensus solution – one where everybody's goals are achieved.

And if, contrary to experience, they don't work, I believe that we will have been the better for trying – for making sure we treat people differently because of their race only as a last resort, if ever.

Some also argue that the percentage plans in Texas, California, and Florida, will not work in other States, in graduate and professional schools, or in private schools. Maybe not. But as I said, these aren't the only race-neutral alternatives available. And once we release the creative powers in the States and in academia, the President has confidence that we will discover even more innovative admissions programs that will unite us, rather than divide us, along racial lines.

In this endeavor we must not fail. Our country cannot afford to leave uneducated significant portions of our society.

But in doing so the important goal of diversity does not automatically require resorting to divisive racial preferences as an initial matter. Race-neutral programs can and have worked.

And by pursuing them, we move closer to the dream of one of America's martyrs in the fight for racial equality: that Americans "not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character." Don't we owe it to ourselves to try?

I close by confessing that I have the best legal position in America. If I could afford to, I would serve this President and our country for free. But despite the Oval Office meetings, the rides on Air Force One and the Camp David retreats, this is only a job and like every other job it will end someday. As my wife Rebecca is quick to remind me, the Office of the Presidency did just fine before the arrival of Al Gonzales and it will survive long after I am no longer the White House Counsel.

Every time I drive through the gates into the White House compound, or whenever I walk into the Oval Office to brief the most powerful person in the world, I do think about the awesome responsibility that the President has -- and the corresponding duty that falls upon all of us who serve him. Those are indescribable moments, and I will hold this privilege near my heart for the rest of my life.

I have a great deal of respect and affection for our President, but I also love my family. They need me and I have an obligation to them as well as a duty to my client. That is something lawyers all too often forget and it is a lesson that you should learn now if you want to be happy.

In time, some of you will be consumed with trials and deals. The climb to partnership and titles will dominate your ambitions. It did for me.

As I grow older I realize more and more the importance of finding the right balance between responsibilities to family and to the profession, mindful of the irrefutable truth that nothing in work, nothing, – no closing, no jury verdict, no paycheck – is, or ever will be, as satisfying as the adoring hug of your child, or as comforting as the warm embrace of a loyal and loving spouse.

REMARKS BY
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

U.S. NAVY JAGS

WASHINGTON, D.C.

WEDNESDAY
APRIL 30, 2003

As members of our armed forces, you will be assured to know that George W. Bush is deliberate and serious about his duties in these extraordinarily difficult times. But he has a wonderful sense of humor and charm - like his mother - that is disarming and comforting.

The President also has an insightful sense of his destiny ... his place in time, and he has a remarkable skill in choosing wisely the battles to fight, knowing that there is so much good that can be achieved through the majestic power of the Presidency, but accepting that there are limits to what can be accomplished – even for the President of the United States.

This President does the very best that he can
... and he is very comfortable knowing that is all he can do. I think that serenity and quite confidence comes from his very real and strong faith.

As the President's lawyer, I am responsible for a wide variety of issues that affect the White House:

- Ethics Advisor
- Clearance Counsel
- Litigation
- Legislation
- Policy
- Clemency
- Protecting the powers of the Presidency –Executive Privilege
- Nomination of federal judges, U.S. Attorneys, and U.S. Marshals
- National Security

Given recent events overseas and the composition of today's audience, I want to give you my thoughts about the lawyer's role in relation to the war on terror.

That phrase, of course, “the war on terror” had little meaning to most Americans in the domestic context prior to September 11th.

I was scheduled to speak at a government ethics conference in Norfolk, Virginia that morning. Like you I had no idea of the extraordinary events that were about to unfold when I flew out of Dulles airport less than an hour before American Flight 77 departed that same airport and crashed into the Pentagon.

I arrived at 8:45 at the hotel in Norfolk for a 9:00 am speech.

As I made my way up to the ballroom, my assistant called on my cell phone to tell me to get to a television.

I really did not know what to think as I watched those first pictures of the airplane hitting the first tower. Like some of you, I found it hard to believe that this kind of accident could happen.

While I was not sure of the cause of this tragedy, I was certain that I should get back to Washington as quickly as possible.

Immediately following my shortened remarks, I was again hustled to a television set. By this time the second plane had hit the other tower, thus confirming our worst fears.

During the next hour, before most cell phone communication in and out of Washington was shut down, I stayed on the phone trying to collect the most current information from my deputy who had been moved into the Situation Room in the basement of the West Wing. I was told the President was safe in Florida, but beyond that details were sketchy as the fog of war started to settle in.

When I arrived at the gate at the Norfolk airport to return to D.C. I was advised that the airport had been closed by the FAA. I remember strangers stood huddled together quietly staring at television sets in the terminal as reports began to confirm that the Pentagon had been hit.

Fortunately, I quickly found a military office at the airport and a navy officer graciously offered to drive me to Norfolk Naval Station. There was a lot of activity when we arrived. The base like other military installations around the country was transitioning to the highest state of military alert.

Because I am an Assistant to the President and a civilian commissioned officer, the military recognized the need to assist me and offered to fly me back to Washington in a Navy helicopter.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. Last month, on the morning of March 19th, I sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House with the President of the United States. He was surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

One of the senior military officers asked me where exactly did I want to go - and I said as close as you can get me to the White House. He said they would arrange to land me on the South Lawn of the White House. I said no immediately. I knew that any aircraft approaching the White House might well be shot down and I knew that nobody but the President lands on the South Lawn.

For over an hour I waited in frustration as the Navy worked to obtain flight clearance.

Finally at half past noon we boarded the military helicopter and headed for Andrews Air Force Base. Nothing was said during the ride. I wondered how the President was doing and what I would find when I got back to my office.

When I arrived at the White House I went immediately to an underground secure location where the Vice President, most of the Senior staff, and other senior administration officials were working.

The situation appeared stable, Congressional leaders and cabinet secretaries in the line of Presidential succession had been located and moved to secure locations, and, except for essential personnel, the White House staff had either been relocated to various buildings in Washington or told to go home - but all of us in that bunker were aware that the President still was not home.

Later in the afternoon we had a secure video call with the President and he announced that he was coming home.

The rest of the day is a blur. I remember at some point in the early evening finding Karen Hughes, one of the President's advisors, and walking with her to the Oval Office to meet the President who was by then en route to the White House aboard Marine One.

She and I waited outside of the Oval Office as it was being prepared for an address to the nation that night. When the President landed on the South Lawn, we immediately went back into his study behind the Oval and worked on his remarks - Karen and I, Ari Fleischer, Andy Card, Condi Rice and the President. Everybody was serious and we began the work of assessing what had happened and deciding the appropriate response.

So much changed that day, lives were lost, our way of life was transformed permanently.

Not surprisingly my responsibilities as the President's lawyer also transitioned. The Counsel's Office still deals with all the issues I listed earlier, but more of my personal attention is devoted to the war on terror.

American history, like the history of all great powers, is full of examples of difficult choices that must be made by our leaders in times of war or emergency to safeguard our most cherished liberties.

Whether it be Lincoln's surrounding of the Maryland State Legislature with federal troops to prevent Maryland's succession from the Union or Truman's dropping of the atomic bomb on two cities, few can doubt the debt that we owe to past Presidents who have taken difficult steps in order to preserve the long-term survival of our freedoms.

As other Presidents have done during times of war or emergency, this President has taken difficult steps to preserve the long-term survival of this country.

Some of these decisions, while controversial in a few circles, were absolutely necessary in my judgment. Can anyone seriously dispute that the President's first responsibility is to protect American lives? The President, as the head of the executive branch and the Commander in Chief of our armed forces -- and the only political leader directly accountable to all Americans -- has a unique personal responsibility to ensure our safety and security.

Respectfully, no individual member of Congress, no member of the media, nor any legal organization or military expert is or can be personally responsible for the outcome of this war in the way the President is.

That responsibility is even more difficult when as here the unique nature of this conflict challenges certain basic legal principles that form the foundation of our domestic and international systems of justice.

We've already discovered this new type of conflict doesn't always fit neatly within our traditional notions of civil liberties, and so your colleagues within the Administration continually strive to find the right balance between protecting our country and preserving our freedoms.

Lawyers have been involved in every major decision by this President and by the CIA, DOJ, DoD, and State:

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each general gave a short briefing and announced their troops fit and ready to go.

- We have given advise on interpretation of treaties and international agreements such as the Geneva Convention and the Hague Regulations,
- Targeting decisions,
- Treatment of detainees at Guantanamo,
- Interrogation of detainees,
- intelligence collection,
- covert activities,
- post-war reconstruction and governance,
- ownership and disposition of seized assets,
- Arrest, confinement and disposition of American citizens,
- Justification for use of force,
- Negotiation and drafting of congressional authorization to use force,
- Negotiation and drafting of UN resolutions.

Members of the media, legal groups and scholars have weighed in with opinions – sometimes strong opinions - about the legality of certain decisions by this Administration in our war against terrorism. We welcome these opinions with confidence because we are guided by the principle that even a President exercising his Commander-in-Chief powers must abide by the Constitution. Yes, the world has changed, but the words of the Constitution have not.

The debates that have arisen are not new or unexpected and they certainly are not unimportant. To the contrary they are an absolutely necessary check in ensuring that the actions of our government are consistent with the rule of law. And lawyers play the preeminent role in protecting and defending the precious words of the Constitution.

Your work in this endeavor arguably is no less patriotic than the actions of our soldiers on the battlefield – both are in defense of our freedoms.

But as the American people tally the successes and failures of our work, let me remind you of the circumstances in which this President makes his decisions.

We are at war. I sit in on the meetings of the National Security Council, I read the intelligence reports, and the threat we face as a nation from terrorists are as grave as any we have faced since World War II.

Our enemies are not constrained by civilian authority or a state actor. Nor are they constrained by ordinary human concerns for their own safety or lives. They are fanatics who employ a high level of indiscriminate violence. Our enemies do not respect Western values. They do not love liberty, they do not respect law, they do not cherish life.

Despite this new type of threat, some assert that it is obvious that people waging war on America are entitled to lawyers, it is obvious they claim that foreign nationals doing battle against America have a right of access to our courts, it is obvious they say that all government proceedings over the fate of our enemies should be open to the public.

Respectfully, it is not so obvious as a matter of law.

Some of the issues we litigate today have not been before a federal judge in over 50 years ... some have never been litigated. The novel questions generated by this conflict are not always easily answered.

History may show that a particular decision by the President was unwise or unnecessary. I do not think so, but we will see. I am confident history will confirm that the Administration did what it believed it lawfully could to safeguard our long-term freedoms and to prevent another horrific attack.

Two years ago I never worried about the legality of interrogation techniques at Guantanamo Bay or whether the Geneva Convention prohibits the televising of captured American soldiers. The intersection of domestic and international obligations and customs produce a multitude of legal issues.

And from my vantage point, the role of the lawyer may be most important during times of hostilities.

I close by confessing that I have the best legal position in America. If I could afford to, I would serve this President and our country for free. But despite the Oval Office meetings, the rides on Air Force One and the Camp David retreats, this is only a job and like every other job it will end someday. As my wife Rebecca is quick to remind me, the Office of the Presidency did just fine before the arrival of Al Gonzales and it will survive long after I am no longer the White House Counsel.

I have a great deal of respect and affection for our President, but I also love my family. They need me and I have an obligation to them as well as a duty to my client. That is something lawyers all too often forget.

The President asked whether they had everything necessary to win the war in Iraq. To a man, the answer was yes. After everyone had briefed, the President turned to the largest of the half dozen television monitors and said, “Tommy, I have been fully briefed by the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of the peace of the world, and for the sake of the peace and freedom of the Iraqi people, I hereby give the order to execute Operation Iraqi Freedom.”

Pausing, the President said with emotion, “Tommy, may God bless the troops.”

As I grow older I realize more and more the importance of finding the right balance between responsibilities to family and to the profession, mindful of the irrefutable truth that nothing in work, nothing, – no closing, no jury verdict, no paycheck – is, or ever will be, as satisfying as the adoring hug of your child, or as comforting as the warm embrace of a loyal and loving spouse.

Twenty months ago we were reminded that the price of freedom is very high. Those costs primarily have historically been paid by men and women in our military and I am afraid that you will continue to bear the primary responsibility for our freedom in the future. I talked earlier about the some of what I do ... in many ways my efforts pale in comparison to the work that you do – the pressures of dealing with an irate Senator over a judicial nominee seems so insignificant to the sadness of a father leaving a family for a six month tour of duty in a foreign country. The President is proud of you ... more importantly the nation is grateful for your sacrifices.

Every time I drive through the gates into the White House compound, or whenever I walk into the Oval Office to brief the most powerful person in the world, I think about the awesome responsibility that the President has -- and the corresponding duty that falls upon all of us who serve him.

Those are indescribable moments, and I will hold this privilege near my heart for the rest of my life just as I am sure you will hold special your service to America.

Thank you for inviting me to speak and for your work to secure our freedoms. I pray that God watches over you and your family, may he guide your future decisions, and may he continue to bless the United States of America.

General Franks replied, “Mr. President, May God Bless America.” Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room.

We sat there quietly, motionless for several seconds. Knowing we had just witnessed history. That order began the final phase of disarming Saddam Hussein after twelve years of defiance. And that meeting is just one of many memorable moments I have experienced in the White House in two years as the President's lawyer.

People from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television. And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time.

Of course, part of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there ... and that is particularly true now during this historic period for our country. It is hard to be around George W. Bush and not learn, simply by watching and listening.

It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

As lawyers, you know when you interact with a client on a daily basis ... when you weather storms and celebrate achievements together ... you develop a good understanding of the client's priorities and needs, the client's strengths and weaknesses, whether they are gracious in success and resilient in defeat.

There are few people I admire more than our President and like everyone I know in the White House, I offer no apology for that statement.

He hasn't spoken to any administration groups (assuming that's what you mean by domestic?) in a long time. I'll send some older ones in a min.

I gather the President is doing a judges event tomorrow. It's probably too late for me to get on the list for this one, but in the future, if you think of it as similar things are planned, I'd love to be included, if only to stay in contact with the issues, the players, and the WH. (My partner, George Jones, a Dem, is going -- I suppose because he's the President of the D.C. Bar.) If there's some mechanism for notifying the Social Office of my interest, I'd be much obliged if you'd let them know.

Hope all is going well. I'll catch up with you soon.

Daschle: Not All Judge Picks Merit Vote

WASHINGTON - Not every one of a president's judicial nominees has the right to a straight up-or-down vote in the Senate, Democratic leader Tom Daschle said Sunday.

Democrats have held up votes on two of President Bush's picks, leading majority Republicans to propose last week a change in Senate rules to restrict the use of delaying tactics to block nominations.

In theory and practice, senators should have the chance to cast a direct vote on all nominees for the federal bench, said Daschle, D-S.D.

"That should be the rule but sometimes there are ... exceptions to the rule," he said. "There are extreme cases when extreme judges deserve no more than a cloture vote and these two cases fit that category."

A cloture vote is one to end debate and move to an immediate vote. Under current Senate rules, it takes 60 votes to end a filibuster blocking final action on legislation or a nomination.

Republicans have failed to reach that number in six cloture votes on appeals court nominees Miguel Estrada and two on Priscilla Owen, both opposed by Democrats for what they say is their conservative judicial activism.

"We have made all kinds of offers to the administration on Judge Estrada. If he just fills out his job application, there would be no filibuster," Daschle said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"He refuses to do it. You wouldn't hire somebody that wouldn't fill out their job application. It's unprecedented that he would deny us the right to the information that so many of his predecessors have provided."

President Bush last week deplored the delays, saying the current Senate process was "a disgrace."

Changing the Senate rules would take two-thirds of voting senators.

Democrats note that the Senate had approved 124 of Bush's 126 judicial nominations that have reached the full Senate, and that Republicans prevented 60 of President Clinton's nominees from ever coming to a vote.

While Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said he had not seen two simultaneous filibusters before, "I've seen Republicans who have neglected to even have a hearing on nominees in the Clinton administration. It's the same effect."

Breaux said presidents are entitled to direct votes on their judicial picks.

"I think that what we're trying to say is that, look, give us the information on the judges and we'll have a record vote," Breaux told "Fox News Sunday."

Breaux said he thinks the Senate will get a chance to vote on Estrada's nomination.

"And on nominees that you do not like their philosophy, and I think there's a real argument on some of them, I think eventually you get to a vote," he said.

Democrats, who want more information about Estrada, have asked him to answer more questions and have urged the White House to release memos Estrada wrote while working for the Justice Department.

The Bush administration has refused to release those memos. Republicans have accused Democrats of treating Estrada unfairly because he is a conservative Hispanic.

Frist, R-Tenn., said changes in the rules that have governed the Senate the past 28 years were the only way to resolve an issue that has disrupted other Senate business and intensified partisan discord in the body.

REMARKS BY
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

NSA LAW DAY

FORT MEADE, MD

FRIDAY
MAY 2, 2003

From the lawyers perspective, the integrity and honesty of the client sets the tone for the lawyer. And I believe that is true for every lawyer in this Administration.

It is hard to be around George W. Bush and not learn, simply by watching and listening. It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

When you interact with a client on a daily basis ... when you weather storms and celebrate achievements together ... you develop a good understanding of the client's priorities and needs, the client's strengths and weaknesses, whether they are gracious in success and resilient in defeat. There are few people I admire more than our President and like everyone I know in the White House, I offer no apology for that statement.

You will be assured to know that George W. Bush is deliberate and serious about his duties in these extraordinarily difficult times. But he has a wonderful sense of humor and charm - like his mother - that is disarming and comforting.

The President also has an insightful sense of his destiny ... his place in time, and he has a remarkable skill in choosing wisely the battles to fight, knowing that there is so much good that can be achieved through the majestic power of the Presidency, but accepting that there are limits to what can be accomplished – even for the President of the United States.

This President does the very best that he can
... and he is very comfortable knowing that is all he can do. I think that serenity and quite confidence comes from his very real and strong faith.

As the President's lawyer, I am responsible for a wide variety of issues that affect the White House:

- Ethics Advisor
- Clearance Counsel
- Litigation
- Legislation
- Policy
- Clemency
- Protecting the powers of the Presidency –Executive Privilege
- Nomination of federal judges, U.S. Attorneys, and U.S. Marshals
- National Security

It is this responsibility that I want to focus on this afternoon.

The phrase, of course, “the war on terror” had little meaning to most Americans in the domestic context prior to September 11th.

I was scheduled to speak at a government ethics conference in Norfolk, Virginia that morning at the invitation of Amy Comstock. Like you I had no idea of the extraordinary events that were about to unfold when I flew out of Dulles airport less than an hour before American Flight 77 departed that same airport and crashed into the Pentagon.

I arrived at 8:45 at the hotel in Norfolk for a 9:00 am speech.

As I made my way up to the ballroom, my assistant called on my cell phone to tell me to get to a television.

I really did not know what to think as I watched those initial pictures of the airplane hitting the first tower.

While I was not sure of the cause of this tragedy, I was certain that I should get back to Washington as quickly as possible.

Immediately following my shortened remarks, I was again hustled to a television set. By this time the second plane had hit the other tower, thus confirming our worst fears.

During the next hour, before most cell phone communication in and out of Washington was shut down, I stayed on the phone trying to collect the most current information from my deputy who had been moved into the Situation Room in the basement of the West Wing. I was told the President was safe in Florida, but beyond that details were sketchy as the fog of war started to settle in.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. Last month, on the morning of March 19th, I sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House with the President of the United States. He was surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

When I arrived at the gate at the Norfolk airport to return to D.C. I was advised that the airport had been closed by the FAA. I remember strangers stood huddled together quietly staring at television sets in the terminal as reports began to confirm that the Pentagon had been hit.

Fortunately, a navy officer graciously offered to drive me to Norfolk Naval Station. There was a lot of activity when we arrived. The base like other military installations around the country was transitioning to the highest state of military alert.

Because I am an Assistant to the President and a civilian commissioned officer, the military recognized the need to assist me and offered to fly me back to Washington in a Navy helicopter.

One of the senior military officers asked me where exactly did I want to go - and I said as close as you can get me to the White House. He said they would arrange to land me on the South Lawn of the White House. I said no immediately. I knew that any aircraft approaching the White House might well be shot down and I knew that nobody but the President lands on the South Lawn.

For over an hour I waited in frustration as the Navy worked to obtain flight clearance.

Finally at half past noon we boarded the military helicopter and headed for Andrews Air Force Base. Nothing was said during the ride. I wondered how the President was doing and what I would find when I got back to my office.

When I arrived at the White House I went immediately to an underground secure location where the Vice President, most of the Senior staff, and other senior administration officials were working.

The situation appeared stable, Congressional leaders and cabinet secretaries in the line of Presidential succession had been located and moved to secure locations, and, except for essential personnel, the White House staff had either been relocated to various buildings in Washington or told to go home.

Later in the afternoon we had a secure video call with the President and he announced that he was coming home.

The rest of the day is a blur. I remember at some point in the early evening finding Karen Hughes, one of the President's advisors, and walking with her to the Oval Office to meet the President who was by then en route to the White House aboard Marine One.

She and I waited outside of the Oval Office as it was being prepared for an address to the nation that night. When the President landed on the South Lawn, we immediately went back into his study behind the Oval and worked on his remarks - Karen and I, Ari Fleischer, Andy Card, Condi Rice and the President. Everybody was serious and we began the work of assessing what had happened and deciding the appropriate response.

So much changed that day, lives were lost, our way of life was transformed permanently as many of us were painfully exposed to terrorism for the first time.

Not surprisingly my responsibilities as the President's lawyer also transitioned. The Counsel's Office still deals with all the issues I listed earlier, but more of my personal attention is devoted to the war on terror.

American history, like the history of all great powers, is full of examples of difficult choices that must be made by our leaders in times of war or emergency to safeguard our most cherished liberties.

Whether it be Lincoln's surrounding of the Maryland State Legislature with federal troops to prevent Maryland's succession from the Union or Truman's dropping of the atomic bomb on two cities, few can doubt the debt that we owe to past Presidents who have taken difficult steps in order to preserve the long-term survival of our freedoms.

As other Presidents have done during times of war or emergency, this President has taken difficult steps to preserve the long-term survival of this country.

Some of these decisions, while controversial in a few circles, were absolutely necessary in my judgment. Can anyone seriously dispute that the President's first responsibility is to protect American lives? The President, as the head of the executive branch and the Commander in Chief of our armed forces -- and the only political leader directly accountable to all Americans -- has a unique personal responsibility to ensure our safety and security.

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each general gave a short briefing and announced their troops fit and ready to go.

Respectfully, no individual member of Congress, no member of the media, nor any legal organization or military expert is or can be personally responsible for the outcome of this war in the way the President is.

That responsibility is even more difficult when as here the unique nature of this conflict challenges certain basic legal principles that form the foundation of our domestic and international systems of justice.

We've already discovered this new type of conflict doesn't always fit neatly within our traditional notions of civil liberties, and so your colleagues within the Administration continually strive to find the right balance between protecting our country and preserving our freedoms.

Lawyers have been involved in every major decision by this President and by the CIA, DOJ, DoD, and State:

- We have given advise on interpretation of treaties and international agreements such as the Geneva Convention and the Hague Regulations,
- Targeting decisions,
- Treatment of detainees at Guantanamo,
- Interrogation of detainees,
- intelligence collection,
- covert activities,
- post-war reconstruction and governance,
- ownership and disposition of seized assets,
- Arrest, confinement and disposition of American citizens,

- Justification for use of force,
- Negotiation and drafting of congressional authorization to use force,
- Negotiation and drafting of UN resolutions.

Members of the media, legal groups and scholars have weighed in with opinions – sometimes strong opinions - about the legality of certain decisions by this Administration in our war against terrorism. We welcome these opinions with confidence because we are guided by the principle that even a President exercising his Commander-in-Chief powers must abide by the Constitution. Yes, the world has changed, but the words of the Constitution have not.

The debates that have arisen are not new or unexpected and they certainly are not unimportant. To the contrary they are an absolutely necessary check in ensuring that the actions of our government are consistent with the rule of law. And lawyers play the preeminent role in protecting and defending the precious words of the Constitution.

Your work in this endeavor arguably is no less patriotic than the actions of our soldiers on the battlefield – both are in defense of our freedoms.

But as the American people tally the successes and failures of our work, let me remind you of the circumstances in which this President makes his decisions.

We are at war. I sit in on the meetings of the National Security Council, I read the intelligence reports, and the threat we face as a nation from terrorists are as grave as any we have faced since World War II.

Our enemies are not constrained by civilian authority or a state actor. Nor are they constrained by ordinary human concerns for their own safety or lives. They are fanatics who employ a high level of indiscriminate violence. Our enemies do not respect Western values. They do not love liberty, they do not respect law, they do not cherish life.

Despite this new type of threat, some assert that it is obvious that people waging war on America are entitled to lawyers, it is obvious they claim that foreign nationals doing battle against America have a right of access to our courts, it is obvious they say that all government proceedings over the fate of our enemies should be open to the public.

Respectfully, it is not so obvious as a matter of law.

Some of the issues we litigate today have not been before a federal judge in over 50 years ... some have never been litigated. The novel questions generated by this conflict are not always easily answered.

History may show that a particular decision by the President was unwise or unnecessary. I do not think so, but we will see. I am confident history will confirm that the Administration did what it believed it lawfully could to safeguard our long-term freedoms and to prevent another horrific attack.

The President asked whether they had everything necessary to win the war in Iraq. To a man, the answer was yes. After everyone had briefed, the President turned to the largest of the half dozen television monitors and said, “Tommy, I have been fully briefed by the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of the peace of the world, and for the sake of the peace and freedom of the Iraqi people, I hereby give the order to execute Operation Iraqi Freedom.”

Pausing, the President said with emotion, “Tommy, may God bless the troops.”

Twenty months ago I never worried about the legality of interrogation techniques at Guantanamo Bay or whether the Geneva Convention prohibits the televising of captured American soldiers. The intersection of domestic and international obligations and customs that arise during war produces a multitude of legal issues.

And from my vantage point, the role of the lawyer may be most important during times of hostilities.

I close by confessing that I have the best legal position in America. If I could afford to, I would serve this President and our country for free. But despite the Oval Office meetings, the rides on Air Force One and the Camp David retreats, this is only a job and like every other job it will end someday. As my wife Rebecca is quick to remind me, the Office of the Presidency did just fine before the arrival of Al Gonzales and it will survive long after I am no longer the White House Counsel.

I have a great deal of respect and affection for our President, but I also love my family. They need me and I have an obligation to them as well as a duty to my client. That is something lawyers all too often forget.

As I grow older I realize more and more the importance of finding the right balance between responsibilities to family and to the profession, mindful of the irrefutable truth that nothing in work, nothing, – no closing, no jury verdict, no paycheck – is, or ever will be, as satisfying as the adoring hug of your child, or as comforting as the warm embrace of a loyal and loving spouse.

Let us not forget that in the past few years we have witnessed the impeachment and trial of a sitting President, endured a contested Presidential election with a recount battle that required the involvement of our courts, including two Supreme Court decisions; we have suffered through the horrific attacks of September 11th and we successfully waged war in Afghanistan and now Iraq. It has been an unbelievable and historic period for our nation. For many countries just one of these events might have toppled a government.

But our country is even stronger today and I consider it the best evidence yet of the strength of our system of government and the enduring spirit of our citizens. We should all be proud.

Every time I drive through the gates into the White House compound, or whenever I walk into the Oval Office to brief the most powerful person in the world, I think about the awesome responsibility that the President has -- and the corresponding duty that falls upon all of us who serve him.

Those are indescribable moments, and I will hold this privilege near my heart for the rest of my life just as I am sure you will hold special your service to America.

Thank you for inviting me to speak and for your work to secure our freedoms. I pray that God watches over you and your family, may he guide your future decisions, and may he continue to bless the United States of America.

General Franks replied, “Mr. President, May God Bless America.” Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room.

We sat there quietly, motionless for several seconds. Knowing we had just witnessed history. That order began the final phase of disarming Saddam Hussein after twelve years of defiance. And that meeting is just one of many memorable moments I have experienced in the White House in two years as the President's lawyer.

People from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television. And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time.

Of course, part of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there ... and that is particularly true now during this historic period for our country.

Today I want to share thoughts about my job as the President's Lawyer in the context of Law Day, the annual celebration to our constitution, to the rule of law and to the rule of lawyers in our society. But before I do, I want to recognize the work of General Hayden and all of his team at the NSA for their important work in protecting our country. I know that a lot of what you do is unknown to the general public, so the agency often does not get the appropriate credit when a terrorist is captured or a terrorist plot is discovered and destroyed. But I assure you the President knows what you do. Because your work is often in the shadows, the role of the lawyers at this agency are even more important in ensuring that the protection of our national security does not come at the cost of protecting the civil liberties that we enjoy under our Constitution.

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2003

George W. Bush is thoughtful, deliberate and serious about his duties in these extraordinarily difficult times. But he has a wonderful sense of humor and charm - like his mother - that is disarming and comforting.

The President also has an insightful sense of his destiny ... his place in time, and he has a remarkable skill in choosing wisely the battles to fight, knowing that there is so much good that can be achieved through the majestic power of the Presidency, but accepting that there are limits to what can be accomplished – even for the President of the United States.

This President does the very best that he can ... and he is very comfortable knowing that is all he can do. I think that serenity and quite confidence comes from his very real and strong faith.

History is made every day in the White House. This morning I am going to try to sketch, in broad strokes, some of the issues that I deal with as the President's lawyer.

But before I do, let me say that I am pleased to be here as an honored guest of the students of Washington & Lee in beautiful Lexington, Virginia. And it is a special privilege to be the inaugural speaker in the Justice Lewis Powell lecture series.

On this date 35 years ago – March 31, 1968
– President Lyndon Johnson announced to a stunned Nation that he would not stand for reelection. Soon thereafter, the Senate blocked the nomination of Abe Fortas, President
Johnson’s friend and his nominee to replace
Earl Warren as Chief Justice. When Fortas
resigned from the Court in 1969 and the Senate
rejected President Nixon’s nominee, Clement
Haynsworth, the President’s sights turned to
Lewis F. Powell, Jr.

It was only natural that President Nixon would consider Powell. Having led the growth and development of a preeminent law firm, and served as President of the ABA and of the American College of Trial Lawyers, Powell was, at the age of 62, one of the most accomplished attorneys in the country. But when he was approached by Attorney General Mitchell about the Supreme Court, Powell said no.

Worried about both his age and potential controversy as a Southerner, Powell wrote to Mitchell and advised him – with characteristic humility and grace – of his “considered judgment that the nomination of a younger man less subject to controversy would best serve the public interest.” President Nixon soon nominated Harry Blackmun to fill the Fortas seat.

Fortunately for the Nation, fate would not let Lewis Powell escape the Supreme Court. Nixon again sought out Powell when in 1970 he encountered two more vacancies on the Court. As John Jeffries recounts in his authoritative biography of Justice Powell, Powell again attempted to rebuff entreaties from the White House, but this time a personal appeal by the President to Powell's sense of duty finally led Powell to relent and agree to the nomination.

It was the same call to duty that Powell had answered when, in his mid-30s, he volunteered for the service following Pearl Harbor and went on to win the Legion of Merit and a Bronze Star as an intelligence officer.

Although he was a reluctant nominee, Powell went on to serve with distinction on the high court for 15 years. I was not fortunate enough to have the privilege of meeting him personally, but by all accounts he brought to the Court undiluted the same characteristics that had already sealed his reputation as a member of the bar – a gentle graciousness, a legendary work ethic, a keen mind, and a humble spirit.

I can tell you from personal experience that these are qualities on which our President places high value. It is therefore a distinct honor for me to join you today in tribute to a man who remained true to these core values throughout his tenure of service to our Nation.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. On the morning of March 19th, just 12 days ago I sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House with the President of the United States. He was surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

Given the gentlemanly manner and respectful nature of Justice Powell, a man who always seemed to labor to find compromise, it is almost ironic to discuss with you some of the issues that we must deal with in the White House ... where it seems at times that we are in a constant state of conflict.

I pray no one needs to be reminded that America is still engaged in a global war on terror and, of course, U.S. military forces continue to fight in Iraq. Tomorrow the United States weighs in on the debate over affirmative action in arguments before the U.S. Supreme Court. And as we meet today, the White House and Senate Republicans are still battling a filibuster in the U.S. Senate over the President's nomination of Miguel Estrada to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Each of these conflicts provide an interesting case study of executive power and the role of the Counsel's Office in ensuring that the legitimate authorities of the Presidency are respected. But such a study is helpful only if the relationship between the President and the Congress is framed in its proper context.

Last year, the Wall Street Journal published a story with the headline “Assertive President Engineers shift in Capital’s Power.” The article begins by acknowledging that throughout American history, Presidents have tussled with Congress. But then goes on to say that the past year has seen a fundamental shift of power to the White House, the biggest in at least a generation.

Admittedly, the confluence of a strong willed President, an evenly divided Congress, and the prosecution of a war has affected the way we do business in Washington.

But having survived 26 months of negotiation and compromise with Congress over a variety of issues, and in light of our continued struggle to get the President's judicial nominees confirmed – even with a Republican controlled Senate, I can testify to the continued vitality of Congressional power.

But it is certainly true that today there is a healthy give and take between the President and Congress. From the perspective of the Counsel's office, the courage, integrity and honesty of the President are of overriding importance to the protection of the office he holds and the tone for the entire White House. And this President makes it relatively easy to advocate principled positions in defense of Presidential power.

As previous Counsels have observed, much of my job is necessarily reactive, responding to the crisis or issue of the day. But that said, standing here with the benefit of two years of service, I can say that there are two core principles that I have sought to pursue in serving the Presidency and this President.

The first principle is fidelity to the rule of law. Sounds simple and obvious -- even trite -- until you remember that one of the preceding six Presidents was impeached and another resigned under the threat of certain impeachment. And in both situations, Counsels to the President were criticized for dis-serving the Presidency by subordinating the rule of law to the personal interests of the Administration and, indeed, of the President himself.

The lawyers in the Counsel's Office have studied this history. We know that our job is to protect the institution of the Presidency and the White House, it is not to protect the personal or political conduct of the person who occupies the office - and we fully understand that the first principle that must influence and determine everything we do is fidelity to the rule of law.

And we strive to do just that. We owe the American people, the Presidency and this President no less.

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each general gave a short briefing and announced their troops fit and ready to go.

The second principle is to recognize that the constitutional prerogatives of the Presidency are tested and challenged day after day in myriad ways... and that these challenges must be met so that the principle of separation of powers ... the checks and balances envisioned by the framers of our Constitution... will be respected.

As the Wall Street Journal article observed, the history of this country has seen a continuing shift back and forth in the balance of powers between Presidents and Congresses. In recent times, particularly in the wake of Watergate, Presidential authority has diminished as Congress has reacted with outrage – often with justifiable outrage, it bears emphasis – to abuses by the Executive Branch.

It seems clear to me, however, that Congress has also, on occasion, taken advantage of a particular President's momentary political vulnerability to draw power to itself and away from the President. In Washington, power always moves to the strongest actor... the person or institution who has the dominant political will and strength.

And to illustrate, I invite you to join me in examining the President's role as the commander-in-chief, and his role in making judicial appointments.

I was scheduled to speak at a government ethics conference in Norfolk, Virginia on the morning of September 11th. Like you I had no idea of the extraordinary events that were about to unfold when I flew out of Dulles airport less than an hour before American Flight 77 departed that same airport and crashed into the Pentagon.

Despite this new type of threat, some assert that it is obvious that people waging war on America are entitled to lawyers, it is obvious they claim that foreign nationals doing battle against America have a right of access to our courts, it is obvious they say that all government proceedings over the fate of our enemies should be open to the public.

Respectfully, it is not so obvious as a matter of law.

Some of the issues we litigate today have not been before a federal judge in over 50 years ... some have never been litigated. The novel questions generated by this conflict are not always easily answered.

History may show that a particular decision by the President was unwise or unnecessary. I do not think so, but we will see. I am confident history will confirm that the Administration did what it believed it lawfully could to safeguard our long-term freedoms and to prevent another horrific attack.

Recent headlines have focused our attention on a more traditional form of conflict in Iraq. And like other traditional conflicts, this one has generated numerous legal issues. One relates to the President's fundamental authority as a matter of domestic and international law to use force against Iraq – a question the lawyers began studying in earnest in the spring of 2002.

With respect to domestic law, the President has two mutually reinforcing sources of authority – his Constitutional authority as Commander in Chief and the statutory authority provided by Congress in resolutions passed in 1991 and 2002.

The authority of the President to use force without a formal declaration of war has been recognized several times in our courts and was most recently reaffirmed by the First Circuit just weeks ago.

The question of legal authority in the eyes of the international community is more complicated.

We believe the President may use force in Iraq under two sources under international law. The first is under existing United Nations Security Council resolutions and the second is under the doctrine of self defense under Article 51 of the UN Charter.

Prior to the Gulf War, the Security Council adopted Resolution 678, authorizing use of all necessary means to force Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait and to restore international peace and security in the area. This was the basis of use of force against Iraq during the 1991 Gulf War.

At the end of the Gulf War, the Security Council imposed weapons of mass destruction disarmament obligations on Iraq as a condition of the cease-fire declared in 1991. Because Iraq has materially breached these WMD obligations, Administration lawyers believe the basis for the cease-fire has been removed, and the use of force is re-authorized under Resolution 678.

Pausing, the President said with emotion,
“Tommy, may God bless the troops.”

General Franks replied, “Mr. President, May God Bless America.” Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room.

We sat there quietly, motionless for several seconds. Knowing we had just witnessed history.

This has been the longstanding position of the United States and has been reflected in Security Council's practice. For example, when coalition forces used force against Iraq in 1993 in response to Iraqi violations, the UN Secretary General stated publicly that the coalition "had receive a mandate from the Security Council according to Resolution 678, and the cause of the raid was the violation by Iraq of the conditions the cease-fire.

No new resolution authorizing use of force was deemed necessary in 1993.

Coalition forces also relied on Iraq's material breaches of the cease-fire conditions as the international legal basis for air strikes against Iraq in 1998, in Operation Desert Fox.

Again, there was no objection from the Security Council.

Last fall, the Security Council unanimously decided again in Resolution 1441 that Iraq has been and remains in material breach of its obligations under the cease fire. The Council recalled that it had repeatedly warned Iraq that it would face serious consequences as a result of its continued violations of its obligations.

The Council decided, however, to afford Iraq a “final opportunity” to comply with its disarmament obligations but warned that violations of Resolution 1441 “shall constitute a further material breach.” Regrettably, Iraq failed to seize this opportunity by failing to submit a currently accurate and complete declaration of its WMD holdings and failing to cooperate fully in the implementation of the resolution. So contrary to some reports, the use of force in Iraq has already been sanctioned by the U.N.

In addition to these preexisting UN resolutions, we believe use of force is justified to protect the national security of the United States.

Self-defense has been a fundamental right long recognized in the customs and practices of nations.

Some international scholars have questioned the United States reliance upon what they claim to be a new theory of self-defense, referred to as preemption, in order to justify its use of force. In truth, the doctrine of preemption is not so novel. The 1837 “Caroline Case” is generally cited as establishing the right of “anticipatory self-defense” under customary international law.

The steamer Caroline had been supplying armed insurgents against British rule in Canada with reinforcements of men and materiel from the United States. In response to the threat of more activity of this sort, a British force from Canada entered U.S. territory at night, seized the Caroline, set the ship on fire, and sent it over Niagara Falls, killing two U.S. citizens in the process.

The British claimed they were acting in self-defense. The Caroline case has been distilled into two principal requirements for using force in anticipatory self-defense:

The use of force must be necessary because of both the imminent nature of the threat and the absence of peaceful alternatives, and, the response to the threat must be proportionate.

- There are several examples of recent U.S. practice that support this principle:
- During the Cuban Missile Crisis – nuclear missile bases in Cuba were labeled an “immediate threat” and the United States took the position that imposition of a blockade was a justifiable act of self-defense.
  - In connection with the 1989 military action in Panama – President Bush explained the action was necessary to protect American lives in imminent danger.
  - Finally, the 1998 cruise missile strikes in Afghanistan in response to U.S. embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania were justified as “a necessary and proportionate response to the imminent threat of future terrorist attacks against U.S. personnel and facilities.”

With the advent of nuclear and other sophisticated weapons and the potential for terrorists to obtain such weapons, we believe the degree of imminence required to justify using force in anticipatory self-defense should be seen differently: the threat need not be as demonstrably imminent if there is an increased risk of occurrence and an increased magnitude of harm.

That order began the final phase of disarming
Saddam Hussein after twelve years of defiance.

And that meeting is just one of many memorable moments I have experienced in the White House in two years as the President's lawyer.

Taking those changed circumstances and the practice among nations into account, we believe the appropriate analysis should be stated as follows:

Anticipatory self-defense is justified if a state reasonably believes that it will be the subject of attack by weapons of mass destruction or terrorism; pursues nonmilitary remedies to no avail; waits until further delay would unreasonably increase the chances of significant harm; and uses force proportional to the threat.

It is not for me to speculate whether the United States would have initiated force in Iraq absent prior UN action. I can say with confidence that the President is convinced the threat from Iraq is real for the United States and its interests. So even without universal international support he believes the forced disarmament of the Hussein regime is in the national security interests of the U.S.

A second, often overlooked role that lawyers perform during hostilities is providing advice about appropriate targeting. Under the laws of war certain types of facilities cannot intentionally be targeted. For example, it would be unlawful to target intentionally a mosque, a hospital or a school. Military facilities and command and control facilities, on the other hand, are legitimate targets.

However, the legal authority becomes more complicated if Saddam Hussein houses senior members of his military in a hospital or if a commercial building contains a communications center that may have both a civil and military use. Under the laws of war both of these targets are legitimate military targets in my judgment. But even with legitimate targets, the United States has additional obligations to use proportional force and to take steps to minimize any collateral damage to civilians.

And of course, there are political and diplomatic consequences that are weighed and considered in connection with every high collateral damage target.

In the Iraqi conflict senior American commanders have avoided bombing dozens of high priority Iraqi targets for fear of civilian casualties, arguably making it harder to achieve some of the air campaign's important goals.

As you may have read every target on the Pentagon's strike list undergoes a rigorous review. Using a sophisticated computer program, military planners estimate the blast area of a particular weapon, and then tailor the attack accordingly, matching the size of the bomb, its detonation fuse, its angle of attack and the time of day for the strike to minimize the risk to civilians.

For example, if an important military facility is located near a school, we bomb the target at night when there are no children in the school. If the target is located near a mosque, then we approach the target from an angle that minimizes the possibility that the bomb blast will damage the mosque.

The targeting list is reviewed by lawyers at multiple levels beginning with the JAG Officer for General Franks, the General Counsels of the Joints Chiefs and the Department of Defense and finally the lawyers at the White House.

I assure you we do not approve targets. The military planners and the Secretary of Defense develop the target list and the President approves those targets that are potentially high collateral targets. The lawyers are there to remind the President and others that there may be legal consequences that flow from targeting decisions.

Federal criminal statutes make it a crime for a U.S. person to violate specified international conventions governing the rules of war.

One final thought relating to the President's role as Commander in Chief. Beginning on September 11th, more and more of my personal attention has been focused on terrorism and war-related issues. Two years ago I never worried about the legality of interrogation techniques at Guantanamo Bay or whether the Geneva Convention prohibits the televising of captured American soldiers. The intersection of domestic and international obligations and customs produce a multitude of legal issues.

And from my vantage point, the role of the lawyer may be most important during times of hostilities.

People from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television. And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they first step into the White House.

As the President's lawyer I am also responsible for protecting the President's constitutional role in the appointment of federal judges. In my judgment, there are few presidential decisions more important than the men and women a President appoints to the bench. Many of a President's policies and initiatives can be amended or eliminated by the next Congress or changed by subsequent Administrations, no matter how popular the President, no matter how effective the policy.

But an appointment to the federal bench represents a lifetime decision that will affect the lives of millions of Americans – it represents perhaps the President’s most lasting legacy. I cannot give you a better example of the power of federal judges to affect the lives of Americans than the recent 9th Circuit decision concerning the constitutionality of a phrase in the Pledge of Allegiance.

You may have read that there is some disagreement between the President and certain Democratic senators over some of the President's judicial nominees. Let me give you my thoughts.

I begin with the Constitution, which gives to the President the authority to nominate judges, not the Senate or some subcommittee of the Senate.

Recently I was asked whether this President, elected by the narrowest of margins, lacked a mandate to nominate his type of judge to the federal bench, a proposition I have heard advocated by a few Senators. The answer of course is that, beyond advice and consent, the Constitution does not recognize a power-sharing agreement between a President and the Senate regarding judicial appointments. Nor is there anything in the Constitution that limits the President's discretion based on the margin of his election.

Although the President was praised for the quality of his appointments to the State courts in Texas some claim that his federal appointments are outside the mainstream.

Well let's look at what a compassionate conservative looks for in his judicial nominees?

Consistent with his public statements during the 2000 presidential campaign, this President looks for someone who possesses unquestionable character, integrity, and professional excellence. The President expects judges to respect precedent and follow the law as written in the Constitution and by Congress, and not subordinate the law to their own policy predilections.

The President's approach to judging is politically and ideologically neutral in the sense that he does not believe a judge should seek to bend the law in either a conservative or liberal direction, that a judge should follow the law to its proper result no matter its policy or political ramifications. We do not impose a litmus test. We do not ask nominees their views on controversial issues such as abortion or affirmative action.

The framers of the Constitution envisioned a separate third branch of government where judges would be independent and impartial. Of course, there is a price for that independence: federal judges are virtually unaccountable for their decisions.

This is why it is so important that judges not come to the bench with an agenda. We should all be on guard against a process that allows people who are unaccountable to have an active role in developing public policy. That, ladies and gentlemen is the role of the Congress and the President ... because if they get it wrong, the American people can address it on Election Day.

But there are no checks when a federal judge goes beyond the mere interpretation of law and becomes involved in deciding what is best and fair for you and your family as a matter of policy.

Of course, part of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there ... and that is particularly true now during this historic period for our country. It is hard to be around George W. Bush and not learn, simply by watching and listening.

It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

We have a fairly exhaustive judicial selection process in the White House. It includes interviews, examination of prior opinions, speeches and writings, and discussions with other members of the bar. But the selection of a nominee is not a science, it is more an art and it is admittedly imperfect. We are attempting to predict human behavior – how a judge is going to discharge her responsibilities not just in the next term, but five years, even 20 years from now.

And if you believe as I do that judges grow and change over time, and if you accept that events may occur in one's personal life that may have an impact on the way a judge approaches certain types of issues, then you will appreciate how difficult it is to predict sometimes what kind of judge a nominee is going to be. One need look only at certain Supreme Court Justices and the Presidents who appointed them to the court to understand that sometimes it is hard to predict future performance.

What is known is that differences in the approach to judging is critical in the outcome of cases. It really does matter who serves on the judiciary. Changes to a court sometimes mean changes in the law. Some purists would argue that the law should not depend on the judge or composition of a court. I agree for the most part, in an ideal world the Constitution would not change just because there is a new majority on the Supreme Court.

Predictability in the law is important in maintaining confidence in our legal system and judiciary, but we know sometimes changes in law have to be made to correct previous mistakes or changed circumstances. Often that change occurs in connection with the reexamination of controversial issues.

Decades ago we saw this happen, thankfully, in Brown v. Board of Education. Tomorrow, the Supreme Court will hear arguments over affirmative action in education.

In the Grutter and Gratz cases, the Supreme Court will address whether the University of Michigan's race-based admissions policies violate the Fourteenth Amendment. The college at Michigan awards students 20 points on a 150-point scale for being a minority. Michigan's law school admits a "critical mass" of minority students.

The question presented is whether these racial preferences are narrowly tailored to achieving a compelling governmental interest.

President Bush believes that diversity in higher education is important. All Americans, regardless of their race, should have the opportunity to attend college and graduate schools – the keys to the American dream. At the same time, he understands the divisiveness that inevitably accompanies programs that treat individuals differently because of their race.

The United States thus filed a brief that recognizes these competing principles. In particular, we argue that regardless of whether diversity is a “compelling” governmental interest, governments must first use available race-neutral alternatives that are capable of realizing that interest.

The President believes that these race-neutral alternatives are a way to bring both sides of the affirmative action debate together. They allow all Americans, of all races, the opportunities of a college degree. They result in broadly diverse student bodies. And they do so without dividing individuals along racial lines.

That these race-neutral programs work has been demonstrated in three of the largest States in America: Texas, Florida, and California. Each of these States has implemented some version of a percentage plan – guaranteeing admission to students who graduate from the top of their high school classes. These programs focus on drawing students from all parts of the State, rather than from a handful of “elite” high schools. And they have been fairly successful in providing broadly diverse student bodies.

These percentage plans are by no means an exhaustive list of race-neutral programs that would produce racially diverse classes.

Programs based on socioeconomic factors favor students who have performed well despite having faced various social and economic obstacles, like poverty, actual discrimination, or being of the first generation of their family to attend college. California and Florida includes this approach as part of their overall reforms.

As you will soon come to learn as lawyers,
when you interact with a client on a daily basis
... when you weather storms and celebrate
achievements together ... you will develop a good understanding of the client's priorities and needs, the client's strengths and weaknesses and that is true of my relationship with the President. There are few people I admire more and like everyone I know in the White House, I offer no apology for that statement.

The United States' position in this case not only provides a way to unify the competing sides of this debate. It also allows the Court to avoid the difficult, divisive question of whether race can ever be a factor in university admissions. That is an issue that divided the Supreme Court in the Bakke case, and an issue that would likely divide the Court today.

Some may say that our position merely kicks the can down the road – postpones decision on an important issue that will inevitably have to be resolved by the Court. I'm not so sure. I believe that these race-neutral alternatives will work, as they have in the States that have tried them. If so, this could be one of those rare instances where creative thinking brings about a consensus solution – one where everybody's goals are achieved.

And if, contrary to experience, they don't work, I believe that we will have been the better for trying – for making sure we treat people differently because of their race only as a last resort, if ever.

Some also argue that the percentage plans in Texas, California, and Florida, will not work in other States, in graduate and professional schools, or in private schools. Maybe not. But as I said, these aren't the only race-neutral alternatives available. And once we release the creative powers in the States and in academia, the President has confidence that we will discover even more innovative admissions programs that will unite us, rather than divide us, along racial lines.

In this endeavor we must not fail. Our country cannot afford to leave uneducated significant portions of our society.

But in doing so the important goal of diversity does not automatically require resorting to divisive racial preferences as an initial matter. Race-neutral programs can and have worked.

And by pursuing them, we move closer to the dream of one of America's martyrs in the fight for racial equality: that Americans "not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character." Don't we owe it to ourselves to try?

I close by confessing that I have the best legal position in America. If I could afford to, I would serve this President and our country for free. But despite the Oval Office meetings, the rides on Air Force One and the Camp David retreats, this is only a job and like every other job it will end someday. As my wife Rebecca is quick to remind me, the Office of the Presidency did just fine before the arrival of Al Gonzales and it will survive long after I am no longer the White House Counsel.

Every time I drive through the gates into the White House compound, or whenever I walk into the Oval Office to brief the most powerful person in the world, I do think about the awesome responsibility that the President has -- and the corresponding duty that falls upon all of us who serve him. Those are indescribable moments, and I will hold this privilege near my heart for the rest of my life.

I have a great deal of respect and affection for our President, but I also love my family. They need me and I have an obligation to them as well as a duty to my client. That is something lawyers all too often forget and it is a lesson that you should learn now if you want to be happy.

In time, some of you will be consumed with trials and deals. The climb to partnership and titles will dominate your ambitions. It did for me.

As I grow older I realize more and more the importance of finding the right balance between responsibilities to family and to the profession, mindful of the irrefutable truth that nothing in work, nothing, – no closing, no jury verdict, no paycheck – is, or ever will be, as satisfying as the adoring hug of your child, or as comforting as the warm embrace of a loyal and loving spouse.

REMARKS BY
ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

U.S. NAVY JAGS

WASHINGTON, D.C.

WEDNESDAY
APRIL 30, 2003

As members of our armed forces, you will be assured to know that George W. Bush is deliberate and serious about his duties in these extraordinarily difficult times. But he has a wonderful sense of humor and charm - like his mother - that is disarming and comforting.

The President also has an insightful sense of his destiny ... his place in time, and he has a remarkable skill in choosing wisely the battles to fight, knowing that there is so much good that can be achieved through the majestic power of the Presidency, but accepting that there are limits to what can be accomplished – even for the President of the United States.

This President does the very best that he can
... and he is very comfortable knowing that is all he can do. I think that serenity and quite confidence comes from his very real and strong faith.

As the President's lawyer, I am responsible for a wide variety of issues that affect the White House:

- Ethics Advisor
- Clearance Counsel
- Litigation
- Legislation
- Policy
- Clemency
- Protecting the powers of the Presidency –Executive Privilege
- Nomination of federal judges, U.S. Attorneys, and U.S. Marshals
- National Security

Given recent events overseas and the composition of today's audience, I want to give you my thoughts about the lawyer's role in relation to the war on terror.

That phrase, of course, “the war on terror” had little meaning to most Americans in the domestic context prior to September 11th.

I was scheduled to speak at a government ethics conference in Norfolk, Virginia that morning. Like you I had no idea of the extraordinary events that were about to unfold when I flew out of Dulles airport less than an hour before American Flight 77 departed that same airport and crashed into the Pentagon.

I arrived at 8:45 at the hotel in Norfolk for a 9:00 am speech.

As I made my way up to the ballroom, my assistant called on my cell phone to tell me to get to a television.

I really did not know what to think as I watched those first pictures of the airplane hitting the first tower. Like some of you, I found it hard to believe that this kind of accident could happen.

While I was not sure of the cause of this tragedy, I was certain that I should get back to Washington as quickly as possible.

Immediately following my shortened remarks, I was again hustled to a television set. By this time the second plane had hit the other tower, thus confirming our worst fears.

During the next hour, before most cell phone communication in and out of Washington was shut down, I stayed on the phone trying to collect the most current information from my deputy who had been moved into the Situation Room in the basement of the West Wing. I was told the President was safe in Florida, but beyond that details were sketchy as the fog of war started to settle in.

When I arrived at the gate at the Norfolk airport to return to D.C. I was advised that the airport had been closed by the FAA. I remember strangers stood huddled together quietly staring at television sets in the terminal as reports began to confirm that the Pentagon had been hit.

Fortunately, I quickly found a military office at the airport and a navy officer graciously offered to drive me to Norfolk Naval Station. There was a lot of activity when we arrived. The base like other military installations around the country was transitioning to the highest state of military alert.

Because I am an Assistant to the President and a civilian commissioned officer, the military recognized the need to assist me and offered to fly me back to Washington in a Navy helicopter.

Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. Last month, on the morning of March 19th, I sat in the Situation Room in the basement of the White House with the President of the United States. He was surrounded by his war council: the Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA Director, Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor.

One of the senior military officers asked me where exactly did I want to go - and I said as close as you can get me to the White House. He said they would arrange to land me on the South Lawn of the White House. I said no immediately. I knew that any aircraft approaching the White House might well be shot down and I knew that nobody but the President lands on the South Lawn.

For over an hour I waited in frustration as the Navy worked to obtain flight clearance.

Finally at half past noon we boarded the military helicopter and headed for Andrews Air Force Base. Nothing was said during the ride. I wondered how the President was doing and what I would find when I got back to my office.

When I arrived at the White House I went immediately to an underground secure location where the Vice President, most of the Senior staff, and other senior administration officials were working.

The situation appeared stable, Congressional leaders and cabinet secretaries in the line of Presidential succession had been located and moved to secure locations, and, except for essential personnel, the White House staff had either been relocated to various buildings in Washington or told to go home - but all of us in that bunker were aware that the President still was not home.

Later in the afternoon we had a secure video call with the President and he announced that he was coming home.

The rest of the day is a blur. I remember at some point in the early evening finding Karen Hughes, one of the President's advisors, and walking with her to the Oval Office to meet the President who was by then en route to the White House aboard Marine One.

She and I waited outside of the Oval Office as it was being prepared for an address to the nation that night. When the President landed on the South Lawn, we immediately went back into his study behind the Oval and worked on his remarks - Karen and I, Ari Fleischer, Andy Card, Condi Rice and the President. Everybody was serious and we began the work of assessing what had happened and deciding the appropriate response.

So much changed that day, lives were lost, our way of life was transformed permanently.

Not surprisingly my responsibilities as the President's lawyer also transitioned. The Counsel's Office still deals with all the issues I listed earlier, but more of my personal attention is devoted to the war on terror.

American history, like the history of all great powers, is full of examples of difficult choices that must be made by our leaders in times of war or emergency to safeguard our most cherished liberties.

Whether it be Lincoln's surrounding of the Maryland State Legislature with federal troops to prevent Maryland's succession from the Union or Truman's dropping of the atomic bomb on two cities, few can doubt the debt that we owe to past Presidents who have taken difficult steps in order to preserve the long-term survival of our freedoms.

As other Presidents have done during times of war or emergency, this President has taken difficult steps to preserve the long-term survival of this country.

Some of these decisions, while controversial in a few circles, were absolutely necessary in my judgment. Can anyone seriously dispute that the President's first responsibility is to protect American lives? The President, as the head of the executive branch and the Commander in Chief of our armed forces -- and the only political leader directly accountable to all Americans -- has a unique personal responsibility to ensure our safety and security.

Respectfully, no individual member of Congress, no member of the media, nor any legal organization or military expert is or can be personally responsible for the outcome of this war in the way the President is.

That responsibility is even more difficult when as here the unique nature of this conflict challenges certain basic legal principles that form the foundation of our domestic and international systems of justice.

We've already discovered this new type of conflict doesn't always fit neatly within our traditional notions of civil liberties, and so your colleagues within the Administration continually strive to find the right balance between protecting our country and preserving our freedoms.

Lawyers have been involved in every major decision by this President and by the CIA, DOJ, DoD, and State:

During that morning's meeting the President received a status briefing through video teleconferencing from the Commander of Central Command, General Tommy Franks and the other area commanders in the Gulf Region. Each general gave a short briefing and announced their troops fit and ready to go.

- We have given advise on interpretation of treaties and international agreements such as the Geneva Convention and the Hague Regulations,
- Targeting decisions,
- Treatment of detainees at Guantanamo,
- Interrogation of detainees,
- intelligence collection,
- covert activities,
- post-war reconstruction and governance,
- ownership and disposition of seized assets,
- Arrest, confinement and disposition of American citizens,
- Justification for use of force,
- Negotiation and drafting of congressional authorization to use force,
- Negotiation and drafting of UN resolutions.

Members of the media, legal groups and scholars have weighed in with opinions – sometimes strong opinions - about the legality of certain decisions by this Administration in our war against terrorism. We welcome these opinions with confidence because we are guided by the principle that even a President exercising his Commander-in-Chief powers must abide by the Constitution. Yes, the world has changed, but the words of the Constitution have not.

The debates that have arisen are not new or unexpected and they certainly are not unimportant. To the contrary they are an absolutely necessary check in ensuring that the actions of our government are consistent with the rule of law. And lawyers play the preeminent role in protecting and defending the precious words of the Constitution.

Your work in this endeavor arguably is no less patriotic than the actions of our soldiers on the battlefield – both are in defense of our freedoms.

But as the American people tally the successes and failures of our work, let me remind you of the circumstances in which this President makes his decisions.

We are at war. I sit in on the meetings of the National Security Council, I read the intelligence reports, and the threat we face as a nation from terrorists are as grave as any we have faced since World War II.

Our enemies are not constrained by civilian authority or a state actor. Nor are they constrained by ordinary human concerns for their own safety or lives. They are fanatics who employ a high level of indiscriminate violence. Our enemies do not respect Western values. They do not love liberty, they do not respect law, they do not cherish life.

Despite this new type of threat, some assert that it is obvious that people waging war on America are entitled to lawyers, it is obvious they claim that foreign nationals doing battle against America have a right of access to our courts, it is obvious they say that all government proceedings over the fate of our enemies should be open to the public.

Respectfully, it is not so obvious as a matter of law.

Some of the issues we litigate today have not been before a federal judge in over 50 years ... some have never been litigated. The novel questions generated by this conflict are not always easily answered.

History may show that a particular decision by the President was unwise or unnecessary. I do not think so, but we will see. I am confident history will confirm that the Administration did what it believed it lawfully could to safeguard our long-term freedoms and to prevent another horrific attack.

Two years ago I never worried about the legality of interrogation techniques at Guantanamo Bay or whether the Geneva Convention prohibits the televising of captured American soldiers. The intersection of domestic and international obligations and customs produce a multitude of legal issues.

And from my vantage point, the role of the lawyer may be most important during times of hostilities.

I close by confessing that I have the best legal position in America. If I could afford to, I would serve this President and our country for free. But despite the Oval Office meetings, the rides on Air Force One and the Camp David retreats, this is only a job and like every other job it will end someday. As my wife Rebecca is quick to remind me, the Office of the Presidency did just fine before the arrival of Al Gonzales and it will survive long after I am no longer the White House Counsel.

I have a great deal of respect and affection for our President, but I also love my family. They need me and I have an obligation to them as well as a duty to my client. That is something lawyers all too often forget.

The President asked whether they had everything necessary to win the war in Iraq. To a man, the answer was yes. After everyone had briefed, the President turned to the largest of the half dozen television monitors and said, “Tommy, I have been fully briefed by the Secretary of Defense. For the sake of the peace of the world, and for the sake of the peace and freedom of the Iraqi people, I hereby give the order to execute Operation Iraqi Freedom.”

Pausing, the President said with emotion, “Tommy, may God bless the troops.”

As I grow older I realize more and more the importance of finding the right balance between responsibilities to family and to the profession, mindful of the irrefutable truth that nothing in work, nothing, – no closing, no jury verdict, no paycheck – is, or ever will be, as satisfying as the adoring hug of your child, or as comforting as the warm embrace of a loyal and loving spouse.

Twenty months ago we were reminded that the price of freedom is very high. Those costs primarily have historically been paid by men and women in our military and I am afraid that you will continue to bear the primary responsibility for our freedom in the future. I talked earlier about the some of what I do ... in many ways my efforts pale in comparison to the work that you do – the pressures of dealing with an irate Senator over a judicial nominee seems so insignificant to the sadness of a father leaving a family for a six month tour of duty in a foreign country. The President is proud of you ... more importantly the nation is grateful for your sacrifices.

Every time I drive through the gates into the White House compound, or whenever I walk into the Oval Office to brief the most powerful person in the world, I think about the awesome responsibility that the President has -- and the corresponding duty that falls upon all of us who serve him.

Those are indescribable moments, and I will hold this privilege near my heart for the rest of my life just as I am sure you will hold special your service to America.

Thank you for inviting me to speak and for your work to secure our freedoms. I pray that God watches over you and your family, may he guide your future decisions, and may he continue to bless the United States of America.

General Franks replied, “Mr. President, May God Bless America.” Franks then smartly saluted the Commander in Chief. The President returned the salute, stood and left the situation room.

We sat there quietly, motionless for several seconds. Knowing we had just witnessed history. That order began the final phase of disarming Saddam Hussein after twelve years of defiance. And that meeting is just one of many memorable moments I have experienced in the White House in two years as the President's lawyer.

People from all over the world travel to Washington for a look at the President's home. They stand outside the black iron rod gates peering in for just a glimpse of the President or First Lady. Like most Americans I can chronicle my life by White House events I have watched unfold on television. And I have yet to meet an American who is not in awe when they step into the White House for the first time.

Of course, part of the inspiration comes from the fact that the President of the United States is there ... and that is particularly true now during this historic period for our country. It is hard to be around George W. Bush and not learn, simply by watching and listening.

It is also hard to be around the President and not like him.

As lawyers, you know when you interact with a client on a daily basis ... when you weather storms and celebrate achievements together ... you develop a good understanding of the client's priorities and needs, the client's strengths and weaknesses, whether they are gracious in success and resilient in defeat.

There are few people I admire more than our President and like everyone I know in the White House, I offer no apology for that statement.

Tim's out of the office today. Durbin plans to offer a medical liability amendment to the tax bill--as early as tomorrow--which would provide for physician med mal insurance tax credits. 10% for low risk specialities; 20% for high risk specialties; and 15% for hospitals. He has asked us for information on med mal insurance rates which we will provide. We will not support the amendment. Just a heads up. Julius

Bush already stumping for Daniels

;By Mary Beth Schneider

May 11, 2003

Indianapolis Star

Mitch Daniels isn't even officially running for Indiana governor yet, but he's already become the man to beat.

Last Tuesday, Daniels announced he will step down June 6 as the White House budget director, all but guaranteeing that his next move will be to step into the race for governor.

The news completely overshadowed the other political news of that day -- a primary election so boring that fewer than 10 percent of Marion County voters bothered to cast a ballot.

Daniels will be entering a field of Republicans that includes former U.S. Rep. David McIntosh, trying for a comeback after losing the governor's race in 2000; conservative activist Eric Miller; state Sens. Murray Clark and Luke Kenley; and Petersburg Mayor Randy Harris.

Daniels has some baggage. Democrats and even some Republicans will point out that the federal surplus that was blossoming when he became budget director is now a burgeoning federal deficit. And Daniels is among 30 former IPALCO directors and officers subpoenaed as part of an Indiana Securities Division investigation into the unloading of stock by company insiders about the time the utility was sold to a company whose stock plummeted.

But Daniels will have on his side the biggest heavy lifter in American politics today -- President Bush.

On Tuesday, Daniels demurred to discuss the race for governor as long as he is still a federal employee. Bush wasn't so shy.

"This administration's loss is the gain of the people of Indiana," said Bush.

The next day, the White House announced Bush was coming to Indianapolis.

The reason is to tout his plan to eliminate the taxes on stock dividends.

But the dividend for Daniels is immeasurable.

He'll be with the president as several thousand Hoosiers fill the Pepsi Coliseum. They'll hear Bush praise the men and women in uniform. They'll hear his case that eliminating the tax on dividends will help senior citizens who live on pensions and investments.

And how much do you bet that they'll also hear what a great guy Mitch Daniels is and how lucky the state is to have him coming back?

As they say, you can't buy publicity like that.

Just as important for Daniels, Bush will be making a private endorsement Monday night. He'll arrive in Indianapolis that evening and meet with a couple dozen of the deep-pocketed business leaders who have bankrolled Republican candidates in the past.

It's a meeting Bush personally asked for. It's not a fund-raiser. It's a chance for the kind of people who support Bush to meet both him and Daniels -- paving the way for them to financially back Daniels once he launches a campaign.

"This is not the 'Frugal Hoosiers for Mitch' crowd," one Republican familiar with the event said with a laugh.

The "Frugal Hoosiers" are a grass-roots group of Hoosiers -- who think $10 is a deep financial commitment -- who have been urging Daniels to run.

The question Daniels is asked most often: "When will you announce?" The question his GOP opponents are asked most often -- by reporters, anyway: "When will you get out?"

Kenley says he is weighing whether to continue, while the others say they are in the race to stay. The test for them is how they withstand the blast from Air Force One.

Trouble On The Pickering Front

;;;; Salon.com's Wilentz reports, there is "new evidence" that Bush jud. nominee Judge Charles Pickering "has lied about his efforts 'to establish better race relations' in the 1960s, discovered in the papers of" Pickering ex-law partner J. House Judiciary Committee hearing on H.R. 1115 - Class Action Fairness Act of 2003

Here's the earlier information I passed along - comparing HR1115 to S274, although S274 as you know has been changed by committee. (I still don't have reported text yet of S. 274)

Subject: FYI - Class Action Bills

FYI, here is some basic information on class action bills from the 107th and 108th Congress:

In the 107th - the Senate introduced S. 1712 and the House passed H.R. 2341.

In the 108th - the Senate has introduced S.274 and the House H.R. 1115. S. 274, which was scheduled to be marked up this morning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is, for all practical purposes, identical to S.1712 from the 107th.

H.R. 1115 from this Congress is a mix between the last years House bill and the Senate bills.

The Administration issued a SAP strongly supporting H.R. 2341 in March 2002. Here is a link to the SAP:

<http://www.whitehouse.gov/omb/legislative/sap/107-2/HR2341-r.html>

I have attached a side-by-side comparison of S. 274 (as introduced), H.R. 1115 (as introduced), and H.R. 2341 (as passed the House in the 107th), as well as individual comparisons so you can track the exact word changes between the bills if so desired. Also, below, are several recent stories on the topic. (I will update this information if necessary based on what happens in today's markup.) I hope you find this helpful.

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 6, 2003

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the 'Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.

(b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

- (c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:
- Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
  - Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
  - Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
  - Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
  - Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
  - Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
  - Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

- (a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:
- (1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.
  - (2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--
    - (A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;
    - (B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and
    - (C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.
  - (3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--
    - (A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;
    - (B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and
    - (C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.
  - (4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--
    - (A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;
    - (B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and
    - (C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

CHAPTER 114--CLASS ACTIONS

Sec.

1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.

1712. Protection against loss by class members.

1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.

1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.

1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.

1716. Definitions.

Sec. 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

`Sec. 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

`The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

`Sec. 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

`(a) IN GENERAL- The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

`(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

`(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain--

`(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating `LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and

`(A) the subject matter of the class action;

`(B) the members of the class;

`(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;

`(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement--

`(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

- `(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
- `(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
- `(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
- `(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

`(E) any other material matter.

`(b) TABULAR FORMAT- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)--

- `(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
- `(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
- `(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

`(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE- Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language--

- `(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
- `(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

`Sec. 1716. Definitions

`In this chapter--

- `(1) CLASS ACTION- The term `class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.

- `(2) CLASS COUNSEL- The term `class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.

- `(3) CLASS MEMBERS- The term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT- The term `proposed settlement' means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval, and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.'.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT- The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:

--1711'.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION- Section 1332 is amended--

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

`(d)(1) In this subsection--

`(A) the term `class' means all of the class members in a class action;

`(B) the term `class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

`(C) the term `class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

`(D) the term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which--

`(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

`(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

`(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

`(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which--

`(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

`(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

`(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

- `(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.
- `(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.
- `(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.
- `(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.
- `(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.
- `(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.
- `(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to--
  - `(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;
  - `(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or
  - `(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).
- `(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

- `(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if--

`(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

`(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).'

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS-

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting '(a) or (d)' after '1332'.

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking '(d)' and inserting '(e)'.

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL- Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

`Sec. 1453. Removal of class actions

`(a) DEFINITIONS- In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

`(b) IN GENERAL- A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed--

`(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

`(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

`(c) WHEN REMOVABLE- This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

`(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL- The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

`(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS- The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

`(f) EXCEPTION- This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves--

`(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

`(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

`(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).'

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION- Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting `(a)' after `section 1332'.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS- The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:

`1453. Removal of class actions.'

SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

`(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.'

(b) DISCOVERY STAY- All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— ~~The Congress finds as follows the following:~~

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the our~~ our judicial system ~~in the United States.~~

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where ~~have been harmed by a number of actions taken by~~

“(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action brought by ~~shareholders that solely involves—~~

“(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

“(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

“(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).”.

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting “(a)” after “section 1332”.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following: “1453. Removal of class actions.”.

SEC. 6. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on class action settlements.

(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members that the settlements are supposed to benefit;

(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—

(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and

(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and

(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.

(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorneys’ fees.

~~SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:~~

~~“(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.”.~~

~~“(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.”.~~

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

~~plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including—~~

~~(A) counsel are awarded large fees plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while leaving class members with coupons or other awards of little or no value;~~

~~(B) unjustified awards are made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and~~

~~(C) confusing notices are published the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.~~

~~—(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~—(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~—(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~—(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~—(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~—(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

~~—(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—~~

~~(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;~~

~~(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and~~

~~(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.~~

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are ~~to—~~

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

~~(2) (3) to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate ~~class actions~~ cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and~~

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

~~(3) (4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.~~

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

~~“(6)(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term ‘proposed settlement’ means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, regarding a class action that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on some or all the class members.~~

“§ 1712 ~~1711~~. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

“The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

“§ 1713 ~~1712~~. Protection against loss by class members

“The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss.

“§ 1714 ~~1713~~. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

“The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

“§ 1715 ~~1714~~. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

“(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit ~~any~~ a payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling ~~his or her~~ the obligations of that person as a class representative.

“(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

“(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point or ~~Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type~~ greater bold type, stating ‘LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.’; ~~and~~

“(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

“(A) the subject matter of the class action;

“(B) the members of the class;

“(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class action;

“(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

“(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

“(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

“(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

“(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney’s fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney’s fee class counsel will be seeking; and

“(v) an explanation of how any attorney’s fee will be calculated and funded; and

“(E) any other material matter.

“(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

“(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

“(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

“(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

“(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from a the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

“(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

“(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person’s inclusion in the class action or settlement.

“§ 1717. Notifications to appropriate Federal and State officials

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—

“(1) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term ‘appropriate Federal official’ means—

“(A) the Attorney General of the United States; or

“(B) in any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a State depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a nondepository institution subsidiary of the foregoing (as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

“(2) APPROPRIATE STATE OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term ‘appropriate State official’ means the person in the State who has the primary regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, or who licenses or otherwise authorizes the defendant to conduct business in the State, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation by that person. If there is no primary regulator, supervisor, or licensing authority, or the matters alleged in the class action are not subject to regulation or supervision by that person, then the appropriate State official shall be the State attorney general.

“(b) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement shall serve upon the appropriate State official of each State in which a class member resides and the appropriate Federal official, a notice of the proposed settlement consisting of—

“(1) a copy of the complaint and any materials filed with the complaint and any amended complaints (except such materials shall not be required to be served if such materials are made electronically available through the Internet and such service includes notice of how to electronically access such material);

“(2) notice of any scheduled judicial hearing in the class action;

“(3) any proposed or final notification to class members of—

“(A)(i) the members’ rights to request exclusion from the class action; or “(ii) if no right to request exclusion exists, a statement that no such right exists; and

“(B) a proposed settlement of a class action;

“(4) any proposed or final class action settlement;

“(5) any settlement or other agreement contemporaneously made between class counsel and counsel for the defendants;

“(6) any final judgment or notice of dismissal;

“(7)(A) if feasible, the names of class members who reside in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement to that State’s appropriate State official; or

“(B) if the provision of information under subparagraph (A) is not feasible, a reasonable estimate of the number of class members residing in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement; and

“(8) any written judicial opinion relating to the materials described under subparagraphs (3) through (6).

“(c) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS NOTIFICATION.—

“(1) FEDERAL AND OTHER DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a non-depository institution subsidiary of the foregoing, the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

“(2) STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a State depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the State bank supervisor (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)) of the State in which the defendant is incorporated or chartered, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person, and upon the appropriate Federal official.

“(d) FINAL APPROVAL.—An order giving final approval of a proposed settlement may not be issued earlier than 90 days after the later of the dates on which the appropriate Federal official and the appropriate State official are served with the notice required under subsection (b).

“(e) NONCOMPLIANCE IF NOTICE NOT PROVIDED.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—A class member may refuse to comply with and may choose not to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree in a class action if the class member demonstrates that the notice required under subsection (b) has not been provided.

“(2) LIMITATION.—A class member may not refuse to comply with or to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree under paragraph (1) if the notice required under subsection (b) was directed to the appropriate Federal official and to either the State attorney general or the person that has primary regulatory, supervisory, or licensing authority over the defendant.

“(3) APPLICATION OF RIGHTS.—The rights created by this subsection shall apply only to class members or any person acting on a class member’s behalf, and shall not be construed to limit any other rights affecting a class member’s participation in the settlement.

“(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to expand the authority of, or impose any obligations, duties, or responsibilities upon, Federal or State officials.”.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:
“114. Class Actions
1711”.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION ~~OF~~ FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

“(d)(1) In this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘class’ means all of the class members in a class action;

“(B) the term ‘class action’ means any civil action filed ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representative persons ~~on behalf of a class as a class action~~;

“(C) the term ‘class certification order’ means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of some or all aspects of a civil action as a class action; and

“(D) the term ‘class members’ means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

“(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

“(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

“(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

“(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

“(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

“(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

“(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

“(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

“(C) the number of ~~proposed plaintiff class members~~ of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than 100

“(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

“(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

“(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the ~~requirements~~-prerequisites of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

“(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

“(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

“(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to—~~

“(A) ~~a claim~~ concerning a covered security as defined under 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

“(B) ~~that relates to~~ the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and ~~that~~ arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

“(C) ~~that relates to~~ the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

“(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

“(9)(A) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) ~~of this subsection~~ shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

“(i) ~~“(A)~~ the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

“(ii) ~~“(B)~~ monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

“(B)(i) In any ~~such case,~~ civil action described under subparagraph (A)(ii), the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members.

~~“(ii) The provisions of Paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)(i).~~

~~“(iii) The provisions of Paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)(ii). (B).”.~~

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting “(a) or (d)” after “1332”.

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking “(d)” and inserting “(e)”.

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following: “§ 1453. Removal of class actions

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms ‘class’, ‘class action’, ‘class certification order’, and ‘class member’ shall have the meanings given such ~~these~~ terms under ~~in~~ section 1332(d)(1).

“(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

“(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

“(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

“(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, ~~except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.~~

“(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.—~~The provisions of Section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.~~

“(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.—~~The provisions of Section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that notwithstanding section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.~~

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.— The Congress finds the following:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of the legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—

(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly, and that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) that have thereby undermined public respect for our judicial system.

(3) Class members often receive little or no benefit from class actions, and are sometimes harmed, such as where have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs’ lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including—

~~“(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.~~

~~“(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.— The provisions of sSection 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.~~

~~“(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.—The provisions of sSection 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.~~

~~“(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves—~~

~~“(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;~~

~~“(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or~~

~~“(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).”.~~

~~(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting “(a)” after “section 1332”.~~

~~(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following: “1453. Removal of class actions.”.~~

~~SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.~~

~~—(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:~~

~~—“(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.”.~~

~~—(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.~~

SEC. 67. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on class action settlements ~~in the Federal courts.~~

(b) CONTENT.—The report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members ~~whom~~ that the settlements are supposed to benefit;

(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—

(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and

(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and

(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.

(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorney's' fees.

SEC. 78. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of ~~the~~ enactment of this Act.

~~(A) counsel are awarded large fees, while leaving class members plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;~~

~~(B) unjustified awards are being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and~~

~~(C) confusing notices are published that prevent class members the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.~~

~~(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—~~

~~(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;~~

~~(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and~~

~~(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.~~

~~(5) These abuses undermine our Federal system and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—~~

~~(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;~~

~~(4) Abuses in class actions undermine the national judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the concept of diversity jurisdiction as intended by the framers of the United States Constitution, in that State and local courts are—~~

~~(A) keeping cases of national importance out of Federal court;~~

~~(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and~~

~~(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.~~

~~(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.~~

~~(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—~~

~~(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;~~

~~(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;~~

~~(2)(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the United States Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate cases of national importance under diversity jurisdiction; and~~

~~(3)(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.~~

~~“1716. Disclosure of attorney’s fees.~~
~~“1717. Sunshine in court records.~~

“§17111718. Definitions

“In this chapter:

~~“(1) CLASS.—The term ‘class’ means all of the class members in a class action.~~

~~“(2)(1) CLASS ACTION.—The term ‘class action’ means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed under pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of as a class action.~~

~~“(3)(2) CLASS COUNSEL.—The term ‘class counsel’ means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.~~

~~“(4)(3) CLASS MEMBERS.—The term ‘class members’ means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.~~

~~“(5)(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term ‘plaintiff class action’ means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.~~

~~“(6)(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term ‘proposed settlement’ means an agreement that resolves claims in regarding a class action that is subject to court approval and that, if approved, would be binding on the some or all class members~~

“§17121711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

“The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

“§17131712. Protection against loss by class members

“The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member substantially outweigh the monetary loss.

“§17141713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

“The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

“§17151714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

“(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit ~~any~~ a payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling ~~his or her~~ the obligations of that person as a class representative.

“§17161715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

“(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

“(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point ~~Times New Roman or greater bold type or other functionally similar type~~, stating ‘LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.’;

“(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

“(A) the subject matter of the class action;

“(B) the members of the class;

“(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class action;

“(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—

“(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

“(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;

“(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;

“(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney’s fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney’s fee class counsel will be seeking; and

“(v) an explanation of how any attorney’s fee will be calculated and funded; and

“(E) any other material matter.

“(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—

“(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;

“(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and

“(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

“(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the a class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—

“(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and

“(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person’s inclusion in the class action or settlement.

“§ 1717. Notifications to appropriate Federal and State officials

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—

“(1) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term ‘appropriate Federal official’ means—

“(A) the Attorney General of the United States; or

“(B) in any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a State depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a nondepository institution subsidiary of the foregoing (as such terms are defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

“(2) APPROPRIATE STATE OFFICIAL.—In this section, the term ‘appropriate State official’ means the person in the State who has the primary regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, or who licenses or otherwise authorizes the defendant to conduct business in the State, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation by that person. If there is no primary regulator, supervisor, or licensing authority, or the matters alleged in the class action are not subject to regulation or supervision by that person, then the appropriate State official shall be the State attorney general.

“(b) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 10 days after a proposed settlement of a class action is filed in court, each defendant that is participating in the proposed settlement shall serve upon the appropriate State official of each State in which a class member resides and the appropriate Federal official, a notice of the proposed settlement consisting of—

“(1) a copy of the complaint and any materials filed with the complaint and any amended complaints (except such materials shall not be required to be served if such materials are made electronically available through the Internet and such service includes notice of how to electronically access such material);

“(2) notice of any scheduled judicial hearing in the class action;

“(3) any proposed or final notification to class members of—

“(A)(i) the members’ rights to request exclusion from the class action; or “(ii) if no right to request exclusion exists, a statement that no such right exists; and

“(B) a proposed settlement of a class action;

“(4) any proposed or final class action settlement;

“(5) any settlement or other agreement contemporaneously made between class counsel and counsel for the defendants;

“(6) any final judgment or notice of dismissal;

“(7)(A) if feasible, the names of class members who reside in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement to that State’s appropriate State official; or

“(B) if the provision of information under subparagraph (A) is not feasible, a reasonable estimate of the number of class members residing in each State and the estimated proportionate share of the claims of such members to the entire settlement; and

“(8) any written judicial opinion relating to the materials described under subparagraphs (3) through (6).

“(c) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS NOTIFICATION.—

“(1) FEDERAL AND OTHER DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a Federal depository institution, a depository institution holding company, a foreign bank, or a non-depository institution subsidiary of the foregoing, the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the person who has the primary Federal regulatory or supervisory responsibility with respect to the defendant, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person.

“(2) STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In any case in which the defendant is a State depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)), the notice requirements of this section are satisfied by serving the notice required under subsection (b) upon the State bank supervisor (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813)) of the State in which the defendant is incorporated or chartered, if some or all of the matters alleged in the class action are subject to regulation or supervision by that person, and upon the appropriate Federal official.

“(d) FINAL APPROVAL.—An order giving final approval of a proposed settlement may not be issued earlier than 90 days after the later of the dates on which the appropriate Federal official and the appropriate State official are served with the notice required under subsection (b).

“(1) IN GENERAL.—A class member may refuse to comply with and may choose not to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree in a class action if the class member demonstrates that the notice required under subsection (b) has not been provided.

“(2) LIMITATION.—A class member may not refuse to comply with or to be bound by a settlement agreement or consent decree under paragraph (1) if the notice required under subsection (b) was directed to the appropriate Federal official and to either the State attorney general or the person that has primary regulatory, supervisory, or licensing authority over the defendant.

“(3) APPLICATION OF RIGHTS.—The rights created by this subsection shall apply only to class members or any person acting on a class member’s behalf, and shall not be construed to limit any other rights affecting a class member’s participation in the settlement.

“(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to expand the authority of, or impose any obligations, duties, or responsibilities upon, Federal or State officials.”.

~~“§ 1716. Disclosure of attorney’s fees~~

~~—“Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that, if there is a settlement of the class action or a judgment for the plaintiffs, the attorneys for the plaintiffs shall disclose to each plaintiff—~~

~~—“(1) at the time when any payment or other award is transmitted to the plaintiff in accordance with the settlement of judgment, or~~

~~—“(2) in a case in which no such payment or award is made to a plaintiff, at the time when notice of the final settlement or judgment is transmitted to such plaintiff, the full amount of the attorney’s fees charged by the attorneys for services rendered in the action.~~

~~“§ 1717. Sunshine in court records~~

~~—“No order, opinion, or record of the court in the adjudication of a class action, including a record obtained through discovery, whether or not formally filed with the court, may be sealed or subjected to a protective order unless the court makes a finding of fact—~~

~~—“(1) that the sealing or protective order is narrowly tailored, consistent with the protection of public health and safety, and is in the public interest; and~~

~~—“(2) if the action by the court would prevent the disclosure of information, that disclosing the information is clearly outweighed by a specific and substantial interest in maintaining the confidentiality of such information.~~

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:

“114. Class Actions

1711”. SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION ~~OF~~ FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

“(d)(1) In this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘class’ means all of the class members in a class action;

“(B) the term ‘class action’ means any civil action filed ~~pursuant to~~ under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by ~~one~~ 1 or more representative persons ~~on behalf of a class as a class action;~~

“(C) the term ‘class certification order’ means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of some or all aspects of a civil action as a class action; and

“(D) the term ‘class members’ means the persons (named or unnamed) who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

“(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

“(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

“(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

“(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

“(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

“(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

“(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

“(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

“(C) the number of ~~proposed plaintiff class~~ members of all proposed plaintiff classes in the aggregate is less than 100.

“(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

“(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

“(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the ~~requirements~~ prerequisites of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

“(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

“(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

“(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action ~~brought by shareholders~~ that solely involves a claim ~~that relates to~~—

“(A) ~~a claim~~ concerning a covered security as defined under 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

“(B) ~~that relates to~~ the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and ~~that~~ arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

“(C) ~~that relates to~~ the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

“(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

“(9)(A) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) ~~of this subsection~~ shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

“(i) ~~“(A)~~ the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

“(ii) ~~“(B)~~ monetary relief claims in the action ~~are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.~~

“(B)(i) In any ~~such case~~ civil action described under subparagraph (A)(ii), the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members.

“(ii) ~~The provisions of p~~Paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)(i).

“(iii) ~~The provisions of p~~Paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to any civil actions described under subparagraph (A)(ii) ~~(B)~~.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting “(a) or (d)” after “1332”.

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking “(d)” and inserting “(e)”.

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

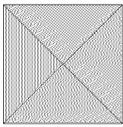

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:
“§ 1453. Removal of class actions

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms ‘class’, ‘class action’, ‘class certification order’, and ‘class member’ shall have the meanings given ~~these such~~ terms ~~in~~ under section 1332(d)(1).

“(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

“(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

“(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

The Honorable F. James Sensenbrenner, Jr.
Chairman
Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter presents the views of the Department of Justice on H.R. 2341, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2001" (counterpart to S. 1712 in the Senate). We appreciate your timely consideration of this important measure. The Department and the Administration support both of these bills.

Class action abuses have taken a toll on our legal system. All too often, class actions represent a lawyer's rush to the courthouse in order to select the most favorable State forum before other, duplicative actions purporting to represent the same class with the same claims are filed in other States. In essence, it becomes a race for the attorneys to see who among them can settle his or her case the fastest, thereby getting any attorneys' fees and binding all class members in perpetuity. In addition, this race to the preferred State courthouse results in class action filings in jurisdictions known for generous awards (and thus settlements). The resolution of these class actions in State court results in the first State to adjudicate a claim imposing its laws on class members from other States and on those other States themselves, which may have similar actions pending. Such interstate litigation is exactly that for which diversity jurisdiction sought to provide a Federal forum, preventing bias against out-of-State defendants and out-of-State plaintiff class members.

H.R. 2341 would close the gap in diversity jurisdiction that has resulted from the interpretation and application of diversity requirements in the unique class action world. The bill would prevent attorneys from avoiding removal through artful pleading that eliminates full diversity or minimizes the claimed damages of the individual class members, actions that fail to serve the plaintiff class members and actions that prejudice the defendants.

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill provide much needed amendments to Federal diversity jurisdiction and removal procedures that would permit, but not require, removal by any class member and any defendant in actions where minimal diversity existed and the total amount in controversy totaled at least $2 million. The Department fully supports this change, which recognizes the Federal interest in such significant litigation. In addition, providing for consistent and uniform Federal adjudication of these claims will protect States and their citizens from other State courts' legal rulings from which there is no recourse.

Section 3, entitled "Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions," would establish long needed protections for class members whose rights are often being adjudicated by lawyers not of their choosing and in fora with which the class members have no connection, where settlements are, in effect, imposed on class members. Too often class members receive notices of class action settlement proposals that are too confusing to provide useful notice about the proposed settlement. This section appropriately would guard against settlements that were unreasonable or even harmful to individual class members by providing for thorough review by the courts. To ensure that class members receive adequate information, this section would establish more specific pleading requirements in appropriate circumstances and require settlement notices provided to class members to be in plain English and in a specified, easy-to-read format.

Section 6 would permit immediate appeal of class certification decisions but – avoiding concerns voiced about previous legislation – would not encourage or permit the destruction of documents or other evidence during the appeal of the certification decision. On the contrary, discovery would be stayed under this section unless it was necessary to preserve evidence. Thus, immediate appeal of certification decisions would be crucial to efficient management of class actions and to permit the re-filing of a proper class action or the filing of an individual action.

Opponents of class action reform similar to H.R. 2341 (such as H.R. 1875, passed by the House in the previous Congress), incorrectly assert that the expansion of Federal diversity jurisdiction infringes on State courts and will result in a flood of class action litigation in Federal courts. Such criticism overlooks both the valid interest Federal courts have in cases that involve interstate commerce and defendants and plaintiffs from many States, as well as the inefficiency that duplication in State courts causes in the current system. The Constitution's provision for diversity jurisdiction was intended to prevent just the sort of local biases that have resulted from State court class actions that often award higher settlements to in-State class members and award unsupportable damages against out-of-State defendants. The unique circumstances of class actions, a modern phenomenon, could not have been foreseen when section 1332 was initially enacted.

In sum, H.R. 2341 is an important step in reforming class action litigation. It would update diversity jurisdiction appropriately to account for class action litigation, while permitting State court actions to proceed in cases where no party sought removal and in specified circumstances involving a relatively small class where the primary defendants were within the State. Thus, State courts would be able to offer redress and provide a convenient forum for their citizens, while Federal courts would provide a forum for those class actions involving parties from numerous States.

As a result of the Department's review of H.R. 2341, we do have some suggested technical amendments, particularly with respect to sections 3 and 4, that we would be happy to discuss with the members of the Committee.

Thank you for this opportunity to present our views. We greatly appreciate your efforts in support of meaningful class action reform. Please do not hesitate to call upon us if we may be of further assistance. The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to submission of this letter.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

STATEMENT OF NORMAN Y. MINETA
SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION
BEFORE THE
SUBCOMMITTEE ON HIGHWAYS, TRANSIT AND PIPELINES
COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
REAUTHORIZATION OF SURFACE TRANSPORTATION PROGRAMS
May 15, 2003

Chairman Petri, Congressman Lipinski, Members of the Subcommittee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today to discuss the Administration's proposal to reauthorize our surface transportation programs. I am happy to report that yesterday I sent to Congress the Administration's reauthorization proposal, the Safe, Accountable, Flexible, and Efficient Transportation Equity Act of 2003, or "SAFETEA."

Nothing has as great an impact on our economic development, growth patterns, and quality of life as transportation. This is equally true at the national, state and local levels. A safe and efficient transportation system is critical to keeping people and goods moving and cities and communities prosperous. Reauthorization will supply the funds and the framework for investments needed to maintain and grow our vital transportation infrastructure.

In addition to improving the quality of our lives and enhancing the productivity of our economy, our proposed legislation seeks to place a central focus on transportation safety. Although we have made improvements in the rates of fatalities and injuries on our highways, the total numbers remain intolerable, and they are rising. In 2002, nearly 43,000 people lost their lives on our highways and roads. Families are destroyed and promise is lost.

The economic costs are unacceptable as well. The total annual economic impact of all motor vehicle crashes exceeds $230 billion, a staggering figure.

For these reasons, the President and I have made saving lives an essential priority for the Department and for the reauthorization of the Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA-21). Nothing would make a greater difference in these numbers than to increase the use of safety belts everywhere in America.

If safety belt use were to increase from the national average of 75 percent to 90 percent -- an achievable goal -- 4,000 lives would be saved each year. For every one percentage point increase in safety belt use -- that is 2.8 million more people "buckling up" -- we would save 250 lives, suffer significantly fewer injuries, and reduce economic costs by hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

government-wide enforcement effort. If we are successful in curbing fuel tax evasion, it has the potential to increase resources for investment in the transportation system.

Last, but certainly not least, our proposal strengthens stewardship of Federal funds without treading on State prerogatives or creating red tape. Increased accountability will ensure that every dollar spent will yield the maximum benefit in terms of lives saved, reduced congestion or increased mobility. These proposals include:

- Requiring that project management plans and annual financial plans be submitted for all Federal-aid projects costing $1 billion or more;
- Requiring that annual financial plans be prepared for all projects receiving $100 million or more in Federal-aid funds;
- Establishing minimum cost-estimating standards in order to provide more reliable and consistent project cost expectations;
- Strengthening the Department's suspension and debarment policies to prevent contractors from continuing to defraud the government; and
- Allowing States to share in monetary recoveries from Federal fraud cases.

This legislative proposal builds upon the principles, values, and achievements of ISTEA and TEA-21, yet recognizes that there are new challenges to address. We urge Congress to reauthorize the surface transportation programs before they expire on September 30, 2003. Any delay would cause uncertainty and likely reduce infrastructure investment at the State and local levels at a time when such investment is particularly critical.

Finally, let me return to the subject of safety for a final point. For the past year and a half this Department, with the critical and timely help of this Committee, has dedicated itself to improving transportation security for Americans. Faced with the scourge of terrorism, our Department responded by creating unprecedented partnerships with the private sector, with Congress, and other groups and federal agencies. Together we succeeded in decreasing the dangers of terrorism through new and better technology, more personnel, improved laws, and increased education.

Well, we are going to do the same thing with car crashes. 43,000 Americans dying each year and thousands more injured are statistics we cannot let go unaddressed. This year we are going to take the same passion, call on similar partnerships, and build the same record of success through enforcement, education and engineering. Why? Because we can – and we should.

Last year, Congress gave my Department 36 mandates to improve transportation security. I gave the people in my Department one. My mandate was to find a way to meet every one of the 36 Congressional mandates. They did.

Well now, as we commemorate Transportation Week in 2003, I have given another mandate to my Department. Dramatically reduce the number of Americans killed and injured by car crashes.

If we succeed, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of lives will be saved and serious injuries reduced each year. And the futures of thousands of our fellow citizens will be better secured. It is a mandate I ask this Committee and this Congress to join our Department and this Administration in achieving.

Thank you, again, for giving me the opportunity to testify, and I look forward to working with Congress to pass this legislation.

We have a moral, as well as an economic, obligation to address immediately the problem of transportation safety. The Bush Administration is committed to reducing highway fatalities, and our bill offers proposals to increase safety belt use and to take those actions that can make the achievement of this goal possible.

Our proposals include creation of a new core funding category dedicated to safety within the Federal-aid highway program. This new category will increase visibility and funding beyond the current safety set-aside provisions. We are also seeking to consolidate and simplify the safety programs administered by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA). This proposal will enhance the capacity and flexibility of States to use Federal grants and their own funds to improve safety. Incentive bonuses will reward those States that achieve demonstrable safety results. Enactment of this bill would be an important step, we believe, in reducing highway fatalities and injuries, and providing greater flexibility to State and local governments to use these funds consistent with a comprehensive strategic highway safety plan.

Our Nation's transportation system obviously faces significant challenges in other areas as well, such as congestion, timely project delivery, freight efficiency, and intermodal connectivity. Our proposal will create a safer, simpler, and smarter Federal surface transportation program by addressing transportation problems of national significance, while giving State and local transportation decisionmakers more flexibility to solve transportation problems in their communities.

SAFETEA calls for a record Federal investment in surface transportation, spending over $201 billion on highway and safety programs, and nearly $46 billion on public transportation programs, from fiscal year 2004 through fiscal year 2009.

These funding levels would be achieved by: 1) continuing the financial guarantees of TEA-21 that linked highway funding with the receipts generated by transportation excise taxes; 2) redirecting to the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund the 2.5 cents per gallon of the gasohol tax currently deposited in the General Fund; and 3) dedicating an additional $1 billion a year of Highway Trust Fund dollars over and above each year's estimated receipts into the Highway Trust Fund to improve highway infrastructure performance and maintenance.

Thanks in large part to the hard work of many of you and your predecessors, SAFETEA builds on the tremendous successes of the previous two pieces of surface transportation legislation. Both the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 (ISTEA), a bill with which I am proud to have played a role, and TEA-21, provided an excellent framework to tackle the surface transportation challenges that lie ahead.

ISTEA set forth a new vision for the implementation of the Nation's surface transportation programs. Among other things, ISTEA gave State and local officials unprecedented flexibility to advance their own goals for transportation capital investment. Instead of directing outcomes from Washington, DC, the Department shifted more of its focus to giving State and local partners the necessary tools to solve their unique problems while still pursuing important national goals. SAFETEA not only maintains this fundamental ISTEA principle, it goes further by giving States and localities even more discretion in key program areas.

TEA-21's financial reforms have proven equally significant. By providing certainty, predictability, and of course, increased funding, TEA-21 paved the way for State and local transportation officials to undertake strategic transportation improvements on a record scale.

TEA-21 achieved this by reforming the treatment of the Highway Trust Fund to ensure that, for the first time, spending from the Highway Trust Fund for infrastructure improvements would be linked to tax revenue. The financial mechanisms of TEA-21 — firewalls, Revenue Aligned Budget Authority (RABA), and minimum guarantees — provided greater equity among States in Federal funding and record levels of transportation investment. SAFETEA maintains the core TEA-21 financial structure, while moderating the wide swings in program levels that resulted from the RABA mechanism.

The total size of the program is and will continue to be a matter of debate. As that debate progresses, it should not be permitted to cloud a meaningful and necessary discussion of the many programmatic reforms contained in SAFETEA. Moreover, any proposal that jettisons the important linkage between tax revenues and spending in an effort to achieve higher overall funding puts the landmark victory of guaranteed funding at risk.

The following are the major programmatic elements of the Administration's proposal to reauthorize the Nation's surface transportation program:

Creating a Safer Transportation System

President Bush and this Administration are committed to fostering the safest, most secure national transportation system possible, even as we seek to enhance mobility, reduce congestion, and expand our economy. These are not incompatible goals. Indeed, it is essential that the Nation's transportation system be both safe and secure while making our economy both more efficient and productive.

While formulating the Department's reauthorization proposal, the Federal Highway Administration and NHTSA came together on a different approach to addressing the Nation's substantial highway safety problems. Under that approach, States would receive more resources to address their own, unique transportation safety issues; would be strongly encouraged to increase their overall safety belt usage rates; and would be rewarded for performance with increased funds and greater flexibility to spend those funds on either infrastructure safety or behavioral safety programs.

SAFETEA establishes a new core highway safety infrastructure program, in place of the existing Surface Transportation Program safety set-aside. This new program, called the Highway Safety Improvement Program, will more than double funding over comparable TEA-21 levels. In addition to increased funding, States would be encouraged and assisted in their efforts to formulate comprehensive safety plans.

In an attempt to make our grant programs more performance-based, we have proposed a major consolidation of NHTSA's Section 402 safety programs. Two important elements of this revised Section 402 are a General Performance Grant and a Safety Belt Performance Grant. The Safety Belt Performance Grant rewards States for passing primary safety belt laws or achieving 90% safety belt usage rates in their States. Any State that receives a Safety Belt Performance Grant for the enactment of a primary safety belt law is permitted to use up to 100% of those funds for infrastructure investments eligible under the Highway Safety Improvement Program. Also, States can receive additional grants for improving their safety belt use rates. Any State that receives a General Performance Grant for the achievement of various other safety performance measures is permitted to use up to 50% of those funds for activities eligible under the new Highway Safety Improvement Program.

Overall, this groundbreaking proposal offers States more flexibility than they have ever had before in how they spend their Federal-aid safety dollars. It would reward them for accomplishing easily measurable goals and encourage them to take the most effective steps to save lives. It is exactly the kind of proposal that is needed to begin tackling the tragic problem of highway fatalities.

SAFETEA also provides increased funding for commercial vehicle safety and research programs in order to enhance the quality, stability, continuity, and uniformity of State commercial vehicle safety and enforcement programs. In addition, our proposal expands and improves safety auditing of "new entrant" motor carriers.

Simplifying Programs by Expanding State and Local Flexibility and Improving Project Delivery

The President and I strongly believe that Federal transportation programs must be simpler. This belief is manifested in two types of proposals that appear throughout SAFETEA: 1) those that increase State and local flexibility and 2) those that seek to increase the efficiency of transportation project delivery.

As the successes of ISTEA and TEA-21 have shown, State and local decisionmakers have the greatest capability to address State and local transportation problems. SAFETEA continues this principle and expands upon it. The Federal Government should facilitate and enable State and local transportation decisionmakers, but it is also in a position to bring multiple States to the table in addressing regional issues, and to take a proactive lead in areas of national concern.

The President and I believe that we can and must protect our environment while improving the efficiency of transportation project delivery, consistent with the President's Executive Order on Environmental Stewardship and Transportation Infrastructure Project Reviews.

SAFETEA eliminates most discretionary highway grant programs and makes these funds available under the core formula highway grant programs. States and localities have tremendous flexibility and certainty of funding under the core programs. Unfortunately, Congressional earmarking has frustrated the intent of most of these discretionary programs, making it harder for States and localities to think strategically about their own transportation problems.

SAFETEA also establishes a new performance pilot program under which States can manage the bulk of their core formula highway program funds on a performance basis, cutting across the programmatic lines by which the Federal-aid highway program is normally structured. Under the pilot program, States would work with the Department to develop and meet specific performance measures that reflect both State and national interests.

Public transportation programs would undergo a significant restructuring under SAFETEA in an effort to make them more effective and responsive to customer and grantee needs. Under that restructuring, Federal Transit Administration (FTA) programs would fall under three major areas:

- Urbanized area formula grants, which would include the current formula grants as well as formula Fixed Guideway Modernization funding;
- Major Capital Investments, which would broaden the current New Starts program to include non-fixed guideway corridor improvements, such as Bus Rapid Transit; and
- State-Administered Programs, including the Rural, Elderly and Disabled, Job Access and Reverse Commute, and New Freedom Initiative programs. The Job Access and Reverse Commute and New Freedom Initiative programs would be supported through flexible formula grants to the States.

As with the highway program, the restructuring of FTA programs includes shifting discretionary grant programs to formula programs and merit-based funding programs. Funds from the heavily earmarked bus discretionary program will be shifted to four different areas: (1) the Urbanized area formula program; (2) the Rural formula program; (3) the newly expanded New Starts program; and (4) Performance incentive grants. Consistent with the bill's strong overall customer orientation, SAFETEA also proposes a new performance incentive program that rewards increases transit ridership.

SAFETEA will give communities the flexibility to choose less expensive major transit investment alternatives, while ensuring that all projects meet New Starts financial and project justification criteria. This is accomplished by:

- Expanding the New Starts program to include non-fixed guideway corridor-based transit systems;

- Eliminating the $25 million New Starts funding threshold, making all projects seeking New Starts funds subject to the evaluation criteria established in law; and
- Simplifying the evaluation process for projects requesting less than $75 million in New Starts funds.

SAFETEA also would promote independence and opportunity by enhancing programs that serve our most vulnerable populations. For example, SAFETEA --

- Increases relative funding levels for rural formula programs to assist the 40 percent of rural counties that have no public transportation, especially since one-third of residents in all rural communities are transit-dependent;
- Implements the transportation provisions of the President's New Freedom Initiative by creating a stable and reliable source of funding to States for community-based solutions that address the unmet transportation needs of persons with disabilities;
- Makes the Job Access and Reverse Commute program a stable and reliable source of formula funds in every State to help meet the employment-related transportation needs of welfare recipients and other low income individuals. Currently, JARC is a heavily earmarked discretionary grant program;
- Sustains the Elderly and Persons with Disabilities formula program to help meet transportation needs that go beyond those provided for under the Americans with Disabilities Act; and
- Ensures a more coordinated and cost-effective approach to meeting the needs of transit-dependent persons by (1) requiring communities to develop a local prioritized project plan to serve elderly persons with disabilities and low-income individuals, which must be honored by States as they make decisions about sub-allocating State-administered funds; and (2) making mobility management an eligible expense.

We all know that it takes far too long to take a transportation project from concept to completion, and this Administration is committed to streamlining this process. Projects that were cutting edge while in the concept stage too often end up turning into "catch-up" projects after years of delay. The Department has made great strides in addressing this problem through the President's Executive Order on Environmental Stewardship issued last fall, but certain legislative changes are necessary. In the environmental review area, SAFETEA provides a menu of solutions, all of which should help reduce the time it takes for a sponsor to deliver a transportation project. These include:

- Strengthening the provisions of current law that establish time frames for resource agencies to conduct environmental reviews and make decisions on permits;
- Improving the linkage between the transportation planning and project development processes;

- Simplifying the processing of Categorical Exclusion approvals;
- Clarifying the legal standard applicable to determinations as to whether a possible project alternative is feasible and prudent;
- Resolving the current overlap between Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act and “section 4(f)”;
- Establishing an exemption for the Interstate Highway System as an historic resource, unless the Secretary deems an individual element worthy of protection under the National Historic Preservation Act. The Advisory Council on Historic Preservation and the Federal Highway Administration are working to achieve the objective of this section through an administrative exemption, using a provision of the regulations that implement Section 106. If we are able to make progress towards such an administrative solution, we will advise Congress that this additional legislation is no longer needed.
- Providing for timely resolution of outstanding legal disputes by establishing a six-month statute of limitations for appeals on the adequacy of projects’ environmental impact statements and other environmental documents; and
- Expanding the ability of States to provide Federal-aid highway funds to resources agencies to expedite the environmental review process.

While making the environmental review process more efficient, SAFETEA also offers important proposals to protect and enhance the environment. Those proposals include:

- Revising the CMAQ program to better address the new air quality standards;
- Continuing a major emphasis on improving public transportation;
- Revising the High Occupancy Vehicle (HOV) lane provisions to encourage the use of cleaner and more fuel-efficient vehicles;
- Encouraging the active consideration and implementation of context-sensitive design principles and practices in all Federally aided transportation projects; and
- Establishing a new Transportation, Energy, and Environment program to carry out a multi-modal energy and climate change research program.

The transportation planning process has become overly burdensome as well. To address this problem, SAFETEA proposes the following:

- Combining the long-range metropolitan transportation plan and shorter term Transportation Improvement Program into a single document;
- Aligning the transportation and air quality planning horizons for purposes of transportation conformity; and
- Creating a single set of requirements applicable to both highway and public transportation planning.

Making the Federal Transportation Program Smarter

The President has urged every Federal agency to be more results-oriented, guided not by process but performance. In the context of transportation, that means: using Federal surface transportation programs to increase the efficiency with which people and goods move throughout the transportation system; expanding innovative financing options; enhancing operational capacity; rewarding grantees that meet important, measurable goals; promoting a seamless system in which different transportation modes are efficiently connected; and increasing oversight and accountability to ensure large Federal investments are being protected.

Recent estimates indicate that Import/Export Freight Tonnage could double by 2020 and Domestic Freight Tonnage could increase by about 70 percent over that same period. International trade now comprises over 25 percent of the U.S. Gross Domestic Product and is expected to rise to one-third in less than 20 years. The days when trade issues could be ignored as irrelevant to overall U.S. wealth creation are long gone.

Ensuring efficient global supply chains therefore becomes of paramount importance for the world economy as manufacturing industries respond to a growing goods trade through the implementation of just-in-time manufacturing. Moreover, end products are increasingly comprised of component parts being shipped from all over the world. As a result, the container, by far the most popular means to transport cargo, takes on heightened significance.

Through the implementation of sophisticated logistics policies to manage massive numbers of containers, an inventory management revolution is currently taking place that we must be very careful to protect and promote.

The goal of linking production decisions to the shifting pace of consumer demand that seemed elusive just 20 years ago is suddenly very attainable. With it comes the even more elusive hope of smoothing out business cycles. The ability to actually move freight quickly across various modes of the transportation system, however, is the linchpin of this revolution. The benefits attributable to dramatically lower inventory costs and increased liquidity for businesses that do not need to spend capital on unused inventory can be severely compromised by an inefficient transportation system.

Although carriers and shippers are by and large private entities, their financial health is inextricably linked to the health of public transportation infrastructure. As a result, cooperation between the private sector and government must be improved through an increase in public-private partnerships. The United States, with the most vibrant and dynamic private sector in the world, is unique in its lack of private sector involvement in transportation infrastructure. In addition to improving the overall condition of the Nation's surface transportation network, SAFETEA specifically targets the capacity and efficiency of the Nation's freight system by:

- Establishing a National Highway System (NHS) set-aside to fund highway connections between the NHS and intermodal freight facilities, such as ports and freight terminals;
- Continuing the Transportation Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act of 1998 (TIFIA) and allowing rail freight projects to qualify for TIFIA credit assistance;
- Lowering the TIFIA program's project threshold from $100 million to $50 million; and
- Expanding the availability of tax-exempt private activity bonds to include highway projects and freight transfer facilities.

While virtually every other industry in the world has gone through a technological revolution, transportation by and large still lags behind in the area of technology deployment. Our proposal continues to foster the research, development, and implementation of Intelligent Transportation Systems technologies but places a much greater emphasis on using these technologies to improve the performance and operation of transportation systems and motor vehicles in a way that directly benefits transportation customers.

These technologies can be particularly effective in the implementation of innovative demand management strategies. SAFETEA provides more resources to expand capacity, but also provides new tools to States and localities to manage existing capacity more rationally. Our proposal would allow States to establish user charges on Federal-aid highways, including the Interstate System, if certain conditions are met. It would also allow States to permit Single Occupancy Vehicles (SOVs) on HOV lanes, so long as time-of-day variable charges are assessed on SOVs for such access.

Despite their critical role in the surface transportation system, intercity buses have been largely a “forgotten mode.” SAFETEA addresses this anomaly by establishing requirements to improve intercity bus access to significant intermodal facilities. Our proposal also authorizes a $425 million grant program to fund capital improvements related to such access.

While not specifically addressed in this legislative proposal, we should address the future of the Highway Trust Fund (HTF) as the Nation moves to a transportation system less dependent on fossil fuels. The President has called for major resources to be devoted to the development of a hydrogen-fuel based transportation system. Obviously, as we achieve success with this initiative, it will have implications for the HTF. To that end, we will be establishing a blue ribbon task force to examine the future of the HTF. The Department looks forward to working with the Department of Energy and other Federal agencies in meeting the goals of the President's Hydrogen Fuel Initiative, providing a safe transition for vehicles and infrastructure to the hydrogen economy.

Evasion of Federal fuel taxes is a serious and growing problem that requires an equally serious Federal response. This has been, I know, a major concern of Congress. SAFETEA reduces legal loopholes and dedicates more resources to a collaborative

EDITORIALS : How to bork a nominee Leon Holmes gets the treatment

BORK IS no longer a proper noun in Washington, as in Judge Robert Bork, but a verb. It means to launch a vicious, irrelevant, roundhouse campaign against a judicial nominee, throwing in everything, including a couple of kitchen sinks.

The term stems from the treatment of Judge Bork when he was nominated to the Supreme Court. Not satisfied with relevant criticisms, the judge's more partisan critics reached back to criticize everything he'd said or done from approximately the age of three, and quite a few things he hadn't.

That borking has become a Washington tradition by now-indeed, an addiction-is illustrated by the sharp but impressively mean-spirited editorial we reprint on today's page from the Washington Post. It's a textbook example of borking; students in political science classes should cut it out and save it, like a ripe specimen of that low art.

Notice that, unable to find anything contemporary to criticize about Little Rock's Leon Holmes-an outstanding scholar, advocate and thinker who has just been nominated to the federal bench-the Post has had to go back years and even decades to dig up any utterance it could use against him, including one that went back to 1980-yes, 1980-and for which he apologized as soon as it was brought to his attention.

The other citation-a quote from Scripture in an article co-written with his wife in April of 1997-is so wrenched out of context that you might never guess it was a philosophical rumination on the Book of Ephesians.

As any smear artist knows, there's no need to go into detail. Especially relevant detail. In this case the innocent reader would be left with no idea of what kind of nominee, or man, Leon Holmes really is. Which is the whole purpose of borking: to make the nominee look like the biggest, scariest menace that ever came down confirmation road. Instead, to quote an informal recommendation from a colleague, Leon Holmes is the kind of guy he'd be willing to shoot dice with over the phone.

The charge that Mr. Holmes is in favor of the subjugation of women would amuse anyone who's ever met Susan Holmes, his wife and co-author, or any of the women in the law for whom he has been mentor, role model, supporter and encourager.

But we're glad to see that the Post has not lost its talent for irony. Alas, in this case it's unintended irony.

For the Post accuses the president of radicalizing judicial nominations by his choice of Leon Holmes for the bench, when it is the one being radical, going back or decades to find words from a much younger Leon Holmes that fail to show the proper reverence for the politically correct gods of today.

In the process, the Post has ignored the legal acumen and philosophical learning that the mature Leon Holmes has demonstrated day after day, year after year, in his career and life. Forget all that; the Post is determined to crucify this nominee even if it has to use old, rusty nails. It takes a couple of stray quotes and equates them with the man's whole career. A neat trick, if a low one.

A confession: In recent years we've found ourselves growing soft on the Post's editorial page; on its good days it started to look like one of those old-fashioned liberal organs not beyond the reach of reason. Clearly we were mistaken.

When the chance to do a little borking came up, the Post has leaped at it. As if it couldn't help itself. Even if it means using low means to attain a purely ideological end. Which may be the worst thing about borking; it's habit-forming. Once it becomes ingrained in a paper's character, there's no telling when it will seep out again.

New York Times 1995:

"Once a rarely used tactic reserved for issues on which senators held passionate convictions, the filibuster has become the tool of the sore loser, dooming any measure that cannot command the 60 required votes."

Who are today's sore losers?

Nan Aron, Alliance for Justice:

"Well, I would certainly acknowledge that there is a group of law professors around the country that do believe this President, because he did not win the election, does not have the authority to select Supreme Court justices, and I think that view holds among many."

Abner Mikva:

"First, this president does not have the mandate of a national plurality. While the court did resolve the dispute about Florida's electoral votes, giving President Bush an electoral college majority, it could not alter the popular vote."

Senator Kennedy, Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing, 5/6/03:

"The 2000 election was very close, the Senate is very closely divided as well and it's no surprise that we are divided over the appointment of judges. President Bush has no mandate from the American people to stack the courts with judges who share his ideological agenda and the Senate has no obligation to acquiesce in that agenda."

Senator Schumer, Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing, 5/6/03:

"But this idea of majority power, well maybe we should hold hearings on the election of the President in the year 2000, or make that the second chapter in this."

TESTIMONY OF VIET D. DINH,
ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, OFFICE OF LEGAL POLICY,
BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
OF THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
ON THE "CLASS ACTION FAIRNESS ACT OF 2003."

May 15, 2003

Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to be here this morning to present the views of the Department of Justice on H.R. 1115, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003." The Department of Justice supports this bill, which is virtually identical to H.R. 2341 passed by the House of Representatives in the 107th Congress, also with our strong support. Mr. Chairman, we appreciate your leadership on this important legislation, and the leadership of the bill's bi-partisan group of sponsors.

Class action abuses have taken a toll on our legal system. All too often, class actions represent a lawyer's rush to the courthouse in order to select the most favorable State forum before duplicative actions purporting to represent the same class with the same claims are filed in other States. In essence, it becomes a race to the courthouse for the attorneys to see who among them can file and then settle his or her case the fastest and thereby collect millions in attorneys fees. The losers in this race are the class members who often gain little or nothing through the settlement, yet are bound in perpetuity.

The Class Action Fairness Act of 2003 contains three distinct, but necessary components: (1) a number of provisions relating to the administration of class actions in Federal courts, which have been collectively dubbed a "Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights;" (2) expanded federal court diversity jurisdiction to ensure that class actions with national implications can be heard in federal courts; and (3) expedited appellate review of class certification decision. I would like to briefly address each in turn.

Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights

Section 3 of H.R. 1115, entitled the "Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions," would establish long needed protections for class members whose rights are often adjudicated by lawyers not of their choosing in fora with which the class members have no connection, and where settlements are, in practical effect, imposed on class members. Too often class members receive notices of class action settlement proposals that are too confusing to provide any meaningful information about the proposed settlement. This section appropriately would guard against settlements that were unreasonable or even harmful to individual class members by providing for thorough review by the courts. To ensure that class members receive adequate information, this section would require settlement notices provided to class members to be in plain English and in a standardized, easy-to-read format.

Federal Court Jurisdiction for National Class Actions

In addition to the problem of duplicative class actions being filed in numerous states, certain local courthouses have become known for particularly generous. The threat of these large awards often coerces defendants to agree to disproportionately high settlement amounts. Often, these tiny jurisdictions are the first to adjudicate a class action claim and impose their laws on class members from other States and on those States themselves, where similar actions may be pending. Such interstate litigation is exactly why the Founders created diversity jurisdiction: to provide a Federal forum preventing bias against out-of-State defendants and out-of-State plaintiff class members.

H.R. 1115 would close the gap in diversity jurisdiction that has resulted from the interpretation and application of diversity and jurisdictional amount requirements in the unique class action world. The bill would prevent attorneys from avoiding removal through artful pleading that eliminates full diversity or minimizes the claimed damages of the individual class members – actions that fail to serve the plaintiff class and prejudice the defendants. Specifically, sections 4 and 5 of H.R.1115 provide much needed amendments to Federal diversity jurisdiction by relaxing the "complete diversity" rule. The Act would permit, but not require, removal by any class member and any defendant, so long as there is "minimal diversity," the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2 million, and the lawsuit is not primarily intra-state in nature.

Importantly, H.R. 1115 also contains an anti-circumvention measure. Section 4 provides that – regardless of the label placed on a lawsuit by the State court – an action will be "deemed" a class action if: (1) the named plaintiff (exclusive of a State attorney general) purports to act for the interests of its members who are not named parties to the action; or (2) the monetary relief claims of 100 or more other persons are proposed to be tried jointly in the action on the grounds the claims involve common questions of law or fact. This definition would appropriately encompass "private attorney general suits" in which an individual seeks to recover on behalf of the general public, as well as "mass actions" brought on behalf of plaintiffs who claim that their suits present common questions of law or fact that should be resolved in a single proceeding.

The Department fully supports these changes to Federal diversity jurisdiction and removal procedures, which recognize the Federal interest in significant class action litigation that truly involves multiple interstate plaintiffs and defendants. In addition, providing for consistent and uniform Federal adjudication of these claims will protect each State and its citizens from other State courts' legal rulings from which there is no recourse.

Prior witnesses before this committee have described the multi-billion dollar judgment awarded in Madison County, Illinois against State Farm Insurance for repairing automobiles with "aftermarket parts" as distinguished from original manufacturers' parts. That decision applied Illinois law to plaintiffs in all 50 states, even though such a ruling was contrary to state insurance regulations in New York, Massachusetts, and Hawaii among other places. The State Farm case is not an isolated example. Right now, for instance, we are following with interest a case in Oklahoma where a nationwide class has been certified against DaimlerChrysler Corporation. The Oklahoma courts plan to apply Michigan law to adjudicate, on behalf of residents of all 50 states, claims that Chrysler should not have installed certain airbags that comply federal safety standards.

Opponents of class action reform similar to H.R. 1115, incorrectly assert that the expansion of Federal diversity jurisdiction infringes on State courts and will result in a flood of class action litigation in Federal courts. Such criticism overlooks both the valid interest Federal courts have in cases that involve interstate commerce and parties from many States, as well as the inefficiency that duplication in State courts causes in the current system. The Constitution's provision for diversity jurisdiction was intended to prevent just the sort of local biases that have resulted from State court class actions that often award higher settlements to in-State class members and award unsupportable damages against out-of-State defendants. The unique circumstances of class actions, a modern phenomenon, could not have been foreseen when 28 U.S.C. § 1332 was initially enacted.

Interlocutory Appeal of Class Certification Decision

Because the court's certification decision often is decisive — a decision to certify may place insurmountable pressure on the defendant to settle, while a refusal to certify may force the plaintiffs to abandon their claims — the bill permits immediate appeal of certification decisions as a matter of right. Immediate appeals of certification decisions can be crucial to efficient management of class actions, preventing the nightmare situation where parties engage in years of expensive litigation under a ruling on the class certification, only to have the appeals court reverse the class certification determination. Contrary to concerns voiced about previous legislative proposals, H.R. 1115 would not encourage or permit the destruction of documents or other evidence during the appeal of the certification decision. On the contrary, discovery would be stayed under this section unless the court finds that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice.

Conclusion

In sum, H.R. 1115 is an important step in reforming class action litigation. It would update diversity jurisdiction appropriately to account for class action litigation, while permitting State court actions to proceed in cases where no party sought removal and in specified circumstances such as where the class is relatively small or where the primary plaintiffs and defendants are within the State. Thus, State courts would be able to offer redress and provide a convenient forum for their citizens, while Federal courts would provide a forum for truly interstate class actions.

Thank you for this opportunity to present our views. We greatly appreciate your efforts in support of meaningful class action reform. I would be pleased to answer any questions that the Committee may have on this subject.

Mr. GOODLATTE (for himself, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. MORAN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DOOLEY of California, Mr. HYDE, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. COX, and Mr. CRAMER) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- (a) SHORT TITLE- This Act may be cited as the 'Class Action Fairness Act of 2003'.
- (b) REFERENCE- Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

- (c) TABLE OF CONTENTS- The table of contents for this Act is as follows:
- Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.
  - Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
  - Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.
  - Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.
  - Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.
  - Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.
  - Sec. 7. Effective date.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

- (a) FINDINGS- The Congress finds as follows:
- (1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.
  - (2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have--
    - (A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;
    - (B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and
    - (C) undermined public respect for the judicial system in the United States.
  - (3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs' lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including--
    - (A) plaintiffs' lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;
    - (B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and
    - (C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.
  - (4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where--
    - (A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;
    - (B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and
    - (C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine the Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are--

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

CHAPTER 114--CLASS ACTIONS

Sec.

1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.

1712. Protection against loss by class members.

1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.

1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.

1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.

1716. Definitions.

Sec. 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

`Sec. 1712. Protection against loss by class members

`The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

`Sec. 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

`The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

`Sec. 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

`(a) IN GENERAL- The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

`(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION- The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

`Sec. 1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information

`(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain--

`(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating `LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.'; and

`(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing--

`(A) the subject matter of the class action;

`(B) the members of the class;

`(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;

`(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement--

`(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;

- `(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
- `(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
- `(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney's fee class counsel will be seeking; and
- `(v) an explanation of how any attorney's fee will be calculated and funded; and

`(E) any other material matter.

`(b) TABULAR FORMAT- Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)--

- `(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
- `(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
- `(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.

`(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE- Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language--

- `(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
- `(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person's inclusion in the class action or settlement.

`Sec. 1716. Definitions

`In this chapter--

- `(1) CLASS ACTION- The term `class action' means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal

Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.

- `(2) CLASS COUNSEL- The term `class counsel' means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.

- `(3) CLASS MEMBERS- The term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION- The term `plaintiff class action' means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.

`(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT- The term `proposed settlement' means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval, and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.'.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT- The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:

--1711'.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION- Section 1332 is amended--

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

`(d)(1) In this subsection--

`(A) the term `class' means all of the class members in a class action;

`(B) the term `class action' means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

`(C) the term `class certification order' means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

`(D) the term `class members' means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

`(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which--

`(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

`(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

`(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

`(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which--

`(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

`(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

`(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

- `(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.
- `(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.
- `(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.
- `(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.
- `(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.
- `(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.
- `(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to--
  - `(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;
  - `(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or
  - `(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).
- `(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

- `(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if--

`(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

`(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).'

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS-

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting '(a) or (d)' after '1332'.

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking '(d)' and inserting '(e)'.

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL- Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:

`Sec. 1453. Removal of class actions

`(a) DEFINITIONS- In this section, the terms 'class', 'class action', 'class certification order', and 'class member' have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

`(b) IN GENERAL- A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed--

`(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

`(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

`(c) WHEN REMOVABLE- This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

`(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL- The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

`(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS- The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

`(f) EXCEPTION- This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves--

`(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

`(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

`(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).'

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION- Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting `(a)' after `section 1332'.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS- The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following:

`1453. Removal of class actions.'

SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

`(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.'

(b) DISCOVERY STAY- All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

HR 1115 108th Congress-Introduced House (blue, underlined text) as compared to
HR 2341 107th Congress-Passed House (~~red, strikethrough text~~)

To amend the procedures that apply to consideration of interstate class actions to assure fairer outcomes for class members and defendants, to outlaw certain practices that provide inadequate settlements for class members, to assure that attorneys do not receive a disproportionate amount of settlements at the expense of class members, to provide for clearer and simpler information in class action settlement notices, to assure prompt consideration of interstate class actions, to amend title 28, United States Code, to allow the application of the principles of Federal diversity jurisdiction to interstate class actions, and for other purposes.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the “Class Action Fairness Act of 2003~~2~~”.

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act reference is made to an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 28, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; reference; table of contents.

Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.

Sec. 3. Consumer class action bill of rights and improved procedures for interstate class actions.

Sec. 4. Federal district court jurisdiction of interstate class actions.

Sec. 5. Removal of interstate class actions to Federal district court.

Sec. 6. Appeals of class action certification orders.

Sec. ~~7~~. Effective date.

Sec. ~~7~~. ~~Report on class action settlements.~~

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) Class action lawsuits are an important and valuable part of our legal system when they permit the fair and efficient resolution of legitimate claims of numerous parties by allowing the claims to be aggregated into a single action against a defendant that has allegedly caused harm.

(2) Over the past decade, there have been abuses of the class action device that have—
(A) harmed class members with legitimate claims and defendants that have acted responsibly;

(B) adversely affected interstate commerce; and

(C) undermined public respect for ~~the our~~ judicial system in the United States.

(3) Class members have been harmed by a number of actions taken by plaintiffs’ lawyers, which provide little or no benefit to class members as a whole, including—

(A) plaintiffs’ lawyers receiving large fees, while class members are left with coupons or other awards of little or no value;

(B) unjustified rewards being made to certain plaintiffs at the expense of other class members; and

(C) the publication of confusing notices that prevent class members from being able to fully understand and effectively exercise their rights.

(4) Through the use of artful pleading, plaintiffs are able to avoid litigating class actions in Federal court, forcing businesses and other organizations to defend interstate class action lawsuits in county and State courts where—

(A) the lawyers, rather than the claimants, are likely to receive the maximum benefit;

(B) less scrutiny may be given to the merits of the case; and

(C) defendants are effectively forced into settlements, in order to avoid the possibility of huge judgments that could destabilize their companies.

(5) These abuses undermine ~~the our~~ Federal judicial system, the free flow of interstate commerce, and the intent of the framers of the Constitution in creating diversity jurisdiction, in that county and State courts are—

(A) handling interstate class actions that affect parties from many States;

(B) sometimes acting in ways that demonstrate bias against out-of-State defendants; and

(C) making judgments that impose their view of the law on other States and bind the rights of the residents of those States.

(6) Abusive interstate class actions have harmed society as a whole by forcing innocent parties to settle cases rather than risk a huge judgment by a local jury, thereby costing consumers billions of dollars in increased costs to pay for forced settlements and excessive judgments.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to assure fair and prompt recoveries for class members with legitimate claims;

(2) to protect responsible companies and other institutions against interstate class actions in State courts;

(3) to restore the intent of the framers of the Constitution by providing for Federal court consideration of interstate class actions; and

(4) to benefit society by encouraging innovation and lowering consumer prices.

SEC. 3. CONSUMER CLASS ACTION BILL OF RIGHTS AND IMPROVED PROCEDURES FOR INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part V is amended by inserting after chapter 113 the following:

“CHAPTER 114—CLASS ACTIONS

“Sec.

“1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements.

“1712. Protection against loss by class members.

“1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location.

“1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties.

“1715. Clearer and simpler settlement information.

“~~1716+718~~. Definitions.

“~~1716~~. Disclosure of attorney’s fees.

“~~1717~~. Sunshine in court records.

“§ 1711. Judicial scrutiny of coupon and other noncash settlements

“The court may approve a proposed settlement under which the class members would receive noncash benefits or would otherwise be required to expend funds in order to obtain part or all of the proposed benefits only after a hearing to determine whether, and making a written finding that, the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate for class members.

“§ 1712. Protection against loss by class members

“The court may approve a proposed settlement under which any class member is obligated to pay sums to class counsel that would result in a net loss to the class member only if the court makes a written finding that nonmonetary benefits to the class member outweigh the monetary loss.

“§ 1713. Protection against discrimination based on geographic location

“The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of greater sums to some class members than to others solely on the basis that the class members to whom the greater sums are to be paid are located in closer geographic proximity to the court.

“§ 1714. Prohibition on the payment of bounties

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The court may not approve a proposed settlement that provides for the payment of a greater share of the award to a class representative serving on behalf of a class, on the basis of the formula for distribution to all other class members, than that awarded to the other class members.

“(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The limitation in subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit any payment approved by the court for reasonable time or costs that a person was required to expend in fulfilling his or her obligations as a class representative.

“(a) PLAIN ENGLISH REQUIREMENTS.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that any written notice concerning a proposed settlement of the class action provided to the class through the mail or publication in printed media contain—

“(1) at the beginning of such notice, a statement in 18-point Times New Roman type or other functionally similar type, stating ‘LEGAL NOTICE: YOU ARE A PLAINTIFF IN A CLASS ACTION LAWSUIT AND YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE SETTLEMENT DESCRIBED IN THIS NOTICE.’; and

“(2) a short summary written in plain, easily understood language, describing—

“(A) the subject matter of the class action;

“(B) the members of the class;

“(C) the legal consequences of being a member of the class;

“(D) if the notice is informing class members of a proposed settlement agreement—
“(i) the benefits that will accrue to the class due to the settlement;
“(ii) the rights that class members will lose or waive through the settlement;
“(iii) obligations that will be imposed on the defendants by the settlement;
“(iv) the dollar amount of any attorney’s fee class counsel will be seeking, or if not possible, a good faith estimate of the dollar amount of any attorney’s fee class counsel will be seeking; and
“(v) an explanation of how any attorney’s fee will be calculated and funded; and
“(E) any other material matter.
“(b) TABULAR FORMAT.—Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that the information described in subsection (a)—
“(1) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on the notice;
“(2) contain clear and concise headings for each item of information; and
“(3) provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each heading.
“(c) TELEVISION OR RADIO NOTICE.—Any notice provided through television or radio (including transmissions by cable or satellite) to inform the class members in a class action of the right of each member to be excluded from the class action or a proposed settlement of the class action, if such right exists, shall, in plain, easily understood language—
“(1) describe the persons who may potentially become class members in the class action; and
“(2) explain that the failure of a class member to exercise his or her right to be excluded from a class action will result in the person’s inclusion in the class action or settlement.

“§ ~~1716~~1718. Definitions

“In this chapter—
“(1) CLASS ACTION.—The term ‘class action’ means any civil action filed in a district court of the United States pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or any civil action that is removed to a district court of the United States that was originally filed pursuant to a State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representatives on behalf of a class.
“(2) CLASS COUNSEL.—The term ‘class counsel’ means the persons who serve as the attorneys for the class members in a proposed or certified class action.
“(3) CLASS MEMBERS.—The term ‘class members’ means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.
“(4) PLAINTIFF CLASS ACTION.—The term ‘plaintiff class action’ means a class action in which class members are plaintiffs.
“(5) PROPOSED SETTLEMENT.—The term ‘proposed settlement’ means an agreement that resolves claims in a class action, that is subject to court approval, and that, if approved, would be binding on the class members.”.

“§ ~~1716~~. Disclosure of attorney’s fees

~~“Any court with jurisdiction over a plaintiff class action shall require that, if there is a~~

~~settlement of the class action or a judgment for the plaintiffs, the attorneys for the plaintiffs shall disclose to each plaintiff—~~

~~“(1) at the time when any payment or other award is transmitted to the plaintiff in accordance with the settlement or judgment, or~~

~~“(2) in a case in which no such payment or award is made to a plaintiff, at the time when notice of the final settlement or judgment is transmitted to such plaintiff, the full amount of the attorney’s fees charged by the attorneys for services rendered in the action.~~

“§ 1717. Sunshine in court records

~~“No order, opinion, or record of the court in the adjudication of a class action, including a record obtained through discovery, whether or not formally filed with the court, may be sealed or subjected to a protective order unless the court makes a finding of fact—~~

~~“(1) that the sealing or protective order is narrowly tailored, consistent with the protection of public health and safety, and is in the public interest; and~~

~~“(2) if the action by the court would prevent the disclosure of information, that disclosing the information is clearly outweighed by a specific and substantial interest in maintaining the confidentiality of such information.~~

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part V is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 113 the following:

“114. Class Actions
1711”.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS.

(a) APPLICATION OF FEDERAL DIVERSITY JURISDICTION.—Section 1332 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

“(d)(1) In this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘class’ means all of the class members in a class action;

“(B) the term ‘class action’ means any civil action filed pursuant to rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or similar State statute or rule of judicial procedure authorizing an action to be brought by one or more representative persons on behalf of a class;

“(C) the term ‘class certification order’ means an order issued by a court approving the treatment of a civil action as a class action; and

“(D) the term ‘class members’ means the persons who fall within the definition of the proposed or certified class in a class action.

“(2) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action in which the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is a class action in which—

“(A) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State different from any defendant;

“(B) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state and any defendant is a citizen of a State; or

“(C) any member of a class of plaintiffs is a citizen of a State and any defendant is a foreign state or a citizen or subject of a foreign state.

“(3) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any civil action in which—

“(A)(i) the substantial majority of the members of the proposed plaintiff class and the primary defendants are citizens of the State in which the action was originally filed; and

“(ii) the claims asserted therein will be governed primarily by the laws of the State in which the action was originally filed;

“(B) the primary defendants are States, State officials, or other governmental entities against whom the district court may be foreclosed from ordering relief; or

“(C) the number of proposed plaintiff class members is less than 100.

“(4) In any class action, the claims of the individual class members shall be aggregated to determine whether the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $2,000,000, exclusive of interest and costs.

“(5) This subsection shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order by the court with respect to that action.

“(6)(A) A district court shall dismiss any civil action that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court solely under this subsection if the court determines the action may not proceed as a class action based on a failure to satisfy the requirements of rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

“(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall prohibit plaintiffs from filing an amended class action in Federal court or filing an action in State court, except that any such action filed in State court may be removed to the appropriate district court if it is an action of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.

“(C) In any action that is dismissed under this paragraph and is filed by any of the original named plaintiffs therein in the same State court venue in which the dismissed action was originally filed, the limitations periods on all reasserted claims shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed class action was pending. The limitations periods on any claims that were asserted in a class action dismissed under this paragraph that are subsequently asserted in an individual action shall be deemed tolled for the period during which the dismissed action was pending.

“(7) Paragraph (2) shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves a claim that relates to—

“(A) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

“(B) the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

“(C) the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).

“(8) For purposes of this subsection and section 1453 of this title, an unincorporated association shall be deemed to be a citizen of the State where it has its principal place of business and the State under whose laws it is organized.

“(9) For purposes of this section and section 1453 of this title, a civil action that is not otherwise a class action as defined in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall nevertheless be deemed a class action if—

“(A) the named plaintiff purports to act for the interests of its members (who are not named parties to the action) or for the interests of the general public, seeks a remedy of damages, restitution, disgorgement, or any other form of monetary relief, and is not a State attorney general; or

“(B) monetary relief claims in the action are proposed to be tried jointly in any respect with the claims of 100 or more other persons on the ground that the claims involve common questions of law or fact.

In any such case, the persons who allegedly were injured shall be treated as members of a proposed plaintiff class and the monetary relief that is sought shall be treated as the claims of individual class members. The provisions of paragraphs (3) and (6) of this subsection and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (A). The provisions of paragraph (6) of this subsection, and subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 1453 shall not apply to civil actions described under subparagraph (B).”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1335(a)(1) is amended by inserting “(a) or (d)” after “1332”.

(2) Section 1603(b)(3) is amended by striking “(d)” and inserting “(e)”.

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF INTERSTATE CLASS ACTIONS TO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 89 is amended by adding after section 1452 the following:
“§ 1453. Removal of class actions

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms ‘class’, ‘class action’, ‘class certification order’, and ‘class member’ have the meanings given these terms in section 1332(d)(1).

“(b) IN GENERAL.—A class action may be removed to a district court of the United States in accordance with this chapter, without regard to whether any defendant is a citizen of the State in which the action is brought, except that such action may be removed—

“(1) by any defendant without the consent of all defendants; or

“(2) by any plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member without the consent of all members of such class.

“(c) WHEN REMOVABLE.—This section shall apply to any class action before or after the entry of a class certification order in the action, except that a plaintiff class member who is not a named or representative class member of the action may not seek removal of the action before an order certifying a class of which the plaintiff is a class member has been entered.

“(d) PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL.—The provisions of section 1446 relating to a defendant removing a case shall apply to a plaintiff removing a case under this section, except that in the application of subsection (b) of such section the requirement relating to the 30-day filing period shall be met if a plaintiff class member files notice of removal within 30 days after receipt by such class member, through service or otherwise, of the initial written notice of the class action.

“(e) REVIEW OF ORDERS REMANDING CLASS ACTIONS TO STATE COURTS.—The provisions of section 1447 shall apply to any removal of a case under this section, except that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1447(d), an order remanding a class action to the State court from which it was removed shall be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

“(f) EXCEPTION.—This section shall not apply to any class action brought by shareholders that solely involves—

“(1) a claim concerning a covered security as defined under section 16(f)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 and section 28(f)(5)(E) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

“(2) a claim that relates to the internal affairs or governance of a corporation or other form of business enterprise and arises under or by virtue of the laws of the State in which such corporation or business enterprise is incorporated or organized; or

“(3) a claim that relates to the rights, duties (including fiduciary duties), and obligations relating to or created by or pursuant to any security (as defined under section 2(a)(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations issued thereunder).”.

(b) REMOVAL LIMITATION.—Section 1446(b) is amended in the second sentence by inserting “(a)” after “section 1332”.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 89 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 1452 the following: “1453. Removal of class actions.”.

SEC. 6. APPEALS OF CLASS ACTION CERTIFICATION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1292(a) is amended by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

“(4) Orders of the district courts of the United States granting or denying class certification under rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if notice of appeal is filed within 10 days after entry of the order.”.

(b) DISCOVERY STAY.—All discovery and other proceedings shall be stayed during the pendency of any appeal taken pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a), unless the court finds upon the motion of any party that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice to that party.

SEC. 78. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action commenced on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

~~SEC. 7. REPORT ON CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS.~~

~~(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this~~

~~Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States, with the assistance of the Director of the Federal Judicial Center and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on class action settlements in the Federal courts.~~

~~—(b) CONTENT.— The report under subsection (a) shall contain—~~

~~—(1) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that proposed class action settlements are fair to the class members whom the settlements are supposed to benefit;~~

~~—(2) recommendations on the best practices that courts can use to ensure that—~~

~~—(A) the fees and expenses awarded to counsel in connection with a class action settlement appropriately reflect the extent to which counsel succeeded in obtaining full redress for the injuries alleged and the time, expense, and risk that counsel devoted to the litigation; and~~

~~—(B) the class members on whose behalf the settlement is proposed are the primary beneficiaries of the settlement; and~~

~~—(3) the actions that the Judicial Conference of the United States has taken and intends to take toward having the Federal judiciary implement any or all of the recommendations contained in the report.~~

~~—(c) AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL COURTS.— Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the authority of the Federal courts to supervise attorney's fees.~~

FYI, today the Chief denied NRA's request for an emergency stay, with leave to re-file on May 20. Bottom line is the Chief wanted to give the district court a week to figure out the stay motions before he would consider jumping in. He made this ruling before DOJ filed its papers with him seeking an emergency stay of the whole decision (as opposed to NRA's request for a stay only of Title II). In any event, he has basically deferred getting involved for a week.

DOJ plans to file a reply in support of its stay motion in the district court tomorrow.

Subject: Class Action Testimony

Y'all,

Just got word that House Judiciary wants me to testify on class action reform on Thursday. This is easy, as we have a previously cleared letter of support for the bill in the 107th, and we will base the testimony on that letter. Just wanted to give you a heads up and ask for you help in clearing the testimony (going to OMB tomorrow morning) by Wednesday morning. thanks, viet

TESTIMONY OF THE HONORABLE VIET D. DINH, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL, OFFICE OF LEGAL POLICY,
BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
OF THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
ON THE "CLASS ACTION FAIRNESS ACT OF 2003."

May 15, 2003

Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to be here this morning to present the views of the Department of Justice on H.R. 1115, the "Class Action Fairness Act of 2003." The Department of Justice supports this bill, which is nearly identical to H.R. 2341 passed by the House of Representatives in the 107th Congress, also with our strong support. Mr. Chairman, we appreciate your leadership on this important legislation, and the leadership of the bill's bi-partisan group of sponsors.

Let me emphasize at the outset that the problem is not the class action device itself. If that were the case, then we could simply repeal Rule 23 and all go home. Everyone recognizes that class actions can serve a very important goal. As one former Solicitor General has stated, "their true purpose is noble – to vindicate the rights of large groups of individuals who sought justice for civil rights violations and other wrongs, but who could not achieve such justice individually."

Class action abuses, however, have taken a toll on our legal system. All too often, class actions represent a lawyer's rush to the courthouse in order to select the most favorable State forum before duplicative actions purporting to represent the same victims with the same claims are filed in other States. In essence, it becomes a race to the courthouse for the attorneys to see who among them can file and then settle his or her case the fastest and thereby collect attorney's fees. The losers in this race are the consumers who often gain little or nothing through the settlement, yet are bound in perpetuity.

As explained by committees of the Judicial Conference, overlapping and duplicative class actions in federal and state courts threaten the resolution and settlement of such actions on terms that are fair to victims, burden both plaintiffs and defendants with the expenses of multiple litigation of the same issues, and place conscientious class counsel at a potential disadvantage. Certainly we can all agree that consumers such as Bank of Boston account holders do not benefit when plaintiffs are each awarded $8.76, but then each must pay $90 to the attorneys who purportedly brought the action on their behalf. The goal of class action reform, then, must be to stop the abuses which have frustrated the class action device's noble purpose.

The Class Action Fairness Act of 2003 contains three distinct, but necessary components: (1) a "Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights" which addresses the administration of class actions in Federal courts, which have been collectively dubbed (2) expanded federal diversity jurisdiction to ensure that class actions with national implications can be heard in federal courts; and (3) expedited appellate review of decisions whether to certify a class. I would like to briefly address each in turn.

Consumer Class Action Bill of Rights

Section 3 of H.R. 1115, entitled the "Class Action Bill of Rights and Improved Procedures for Interstate Class Actions," would establish long needed protections for consumers whose rights are often adjudicated by lawyers not of their choosing in fora with which they have no connection, and where settlements are, in practical effect, imposed on those consumers. Too often victims receive notices of class action settlement proposals that are too confusing to provide any meaningful information about the proposed settlement. This section appropriately would guard against settlements that were unreasonable or even harmful to individual class members by providing for thorough review by the courts. To ensure that victims receive adequate information, this section would require settlement notices be in plain English and in a standardized, easy-to-read format.

Federal Court Jurisdiction for National Class Actions

In addition to the problem of duplicative class actions being filed in numerous states, certain local courthouses have become known for particularly generous awards. The threat of these large awards often coerces defendants to agree to disproportionately high settlement amounts. Often, these tiny jurisdictions are the first to adjudicate a class action claim and impose their laws on class members from other States and on those States themselves, where similar actions may be pending. Such interstate litigation is exactly why the Founders created diversity jurisdiction: to provide a Federal forum preventing bias against out-of-State defendants and out-of-State plaintiffs.

H.R. 1115 would close the gap in diversity jurisdiction that has resulted from the interpretation and application of diversity and jurisdictional amount requirements in the unique class action world. The bill would prevent attorneys from avoiding removal through artful pleading that eliminates full diversity or minimizes the claimed damages of the individual class members – actions that fail to serve the victims and prejudice the defendants. Specifically, sections 4 and 5 of H.R.1115 provide much needed amendments to Federal diversity jurisdiction by relaxing the "complete diversity" rule. The Act would permit, but not require, removal by any class member and any defendant, so long as there is "minimal diversity," the aggregate amount in controversy exceeds $2 million, and the lawsuit is not primarily intra-state in nature.

Importantly, H.R. 1115 also contains an anti-circumvention measure. Section 4 provides that – regardless of the label placed on a lawsuit by the State court – an action will be "deemed" a class action if: (1) the named plaintiff (exclusive of a State attorney general) purports to act for the interests of its members who are not named parties to the action; or (2) the monetary relief claims of 100 or more other persons are proposed to be tried jointly in the action on the grounds the claims involve common questions of law or fact. This definition would appropriately encompass "private attorney general suits" in which an individual seeks to recover on behalf of the general public, as well as "mass actions" brought on behalf of plaintiffs who claim that their suits present common questions of law or fact that should be resolved in a single proceeding.

The Department fully supports these changes to Federal diversity jurisdiction and removal procedures, which recognize the Federal interest in significant class action litigation that truly involves multiple interstate plaintiffs and defendants. In addition, providing for consistent and uniform Federal adjudication of these claims will protect each State and its citizens from other State courts' legal rulings from which there is no recourse.

Prior witnesses before this committee have described the multi-billion dollar judgment awarded in Madison County, Illinois against State Farm Insurance for repairing automobiles with "aftermarket parts" as distinguished from original manufacturers' parts. That decision applied Illinois law to plaintiffs in all 50 states, even though such a ruling was contrary to state insurance regulations in New York, Massachusetts, and Hawaii among other places. The State Farm case is not an isolated example. Right now, for instance, we are following with interest a case in Oklahoma where a nationwide class has been certified against DaimlerChrysler Corporation. The Oklahoma courts plan to apply Michigan law to adjudicate, on behalf of residents of all 50 states, claims that Chrysler should not have installed certain airbags that comply with federal safety standards.

Expansion of Federal diversity jurisdiction, of course, will shift some state class actions to the Federal courts. However, Federal courts have significant interests in cases that involve interstate commerce and parties from many States, and federal adjudication avoids costly and inefficient duplication in State courts. The Constitution's provision for diversity jurisdiction was intended to prevent just the sort of local biases that have resulted from State court class actions that often award higher settlements to in-State victims and award excessive damages against out-of-State defendants. The unique circumstances of class actions, a modern phenomenon, have outstripped the original conception of 28 U.S.C. § 1332, when that provision was initially enacted.

Interlocutory Appeal of Class Certification Decision

Because a district court's decision whether to certify a class often is decisive — a decision to certify may place insurmountable pressure on the defendant to settle, while a refusal to certify may force the plaintiffs to abandon their claims — the bill permits immediate appeal of certification decisions as a matter of right. Immediate appeals of certification decisions can be crucial to efficient management of class actions, preventing the nightmare situation where parties engage in years of expensive litigation under a ruling on the class certification, only to have the appeals court reverse the class certification determination. Contrary to concerns voiced about previous legislative proposals, H.R. 1115 would not encourage or permit the destruction of documents or other evidence during the appeal of the certification decision. On the contrary, discovery would be stayed under this section unless the court finds that specific discovery is necessary to preserve evidence or to prevent undue prejudice.

Conclusion

In sum, H.R. 1115 is an important step in returning common sense to the nation's class action system and providing greater protections for the victims the system originally was designed to benefit. The bill would update diversity jurisdiction appropriately to account for class action litigation, while permitting State court actions to proceed in cases where no party sought removal and in specified circumstances such as where the class is relatively small or where the primary plaintiffs and defendants are within the State. Thus, State courts would be able to offer redress and provide a convenient forum for their citizens, while Federal courts would provide a forum for truly interstate class actions.

Thank you for this opportunity to present our views. We greatly appreciate your efforts in support of meaningful class action reform. I would be pleased to answer any questions that the Committee may have on this subject.

Please review the enclosed document for accuracy in the way Secretary Evans prefers to be referred. It is my understanding that we may not use the words U.S. Secretary of Commerce or anything like that. Please let me know if there are other preferred ways, as well. We hope to send these out by the end of the week.

UNITED STATES SENATOR
DON NICKLES

May 16, 2003

Name
Address
City, State Zip

Dear First Name:

When I was elected to the United States Senate, I committed myself to represent the values of Oklahomans and fight to protect our freedoms. We have won many victories on behalf of individuals, families and businesses, but the challenge to guard our freedoms and ensure greater achievements still exists.

None of my past successes would have been possible, nor could we meet our future challenges without your faithful support. It is with heartfelt gratitude that I thank you for standing with me in our effort to build an even brighter future for our children and grandchildren.

Following my tenure as Assistant Majority Leader, I now serve as the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee where I am working with President Bush to create jobs and grow the economy. It is a tremendous honor to serve in the leadership, but my un-compromised dedication is to those who elected me, the people of Oklahoma. With the 2004 election fast approaching, I must begin to prepare now. That is why I am writing you today.

On your calendar, please reserve Monday, June 16 as an important day. I will contact you in the coming days to invite you to a 5:30 p.m. reception that will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Cameron. I hope you will be able to attend this important event. My special guest will be the Honorable Donald L. Evans, who is the point man for the President's economic plan.

I hope I can count on your continued support and look forward to seeing you June 16.

Sincerely,

Don Nickles
U.S. Senator

P.S. I hope you will consider being a member of the Senate Club 2004 or a host for my June 16 event. We will follow this letter with more specific information and a formal invitation soon. If you wish to RSVP now or if you have any questions, please call 405/834-8295, e-mail nickles2004@cox.net or use the enclosed response device.

An Unfair Double Standard

Last week, the Senate confirmed John Roberts to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Roberts has served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States, Associate Counsel to President Reagan, and Law Clerk to then-Justice Rehnquist. He has argued numerous cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and is widely recognized as one of the very best appellate lawyers in America. The American Bar Association unanimously rated him well qualified. In short, John Roberts exemplifies the kind of judge President Bush has nominated to the federal courts, and will be a distinguished judge on the D.C. Circuit.

The Senate's confirmation of Roberts is noteworthy for two additional reasons, however, both of which demonstrate the breakdown in the Senate confirmation process for federal appeals court nominees about which President Bush and many Senators of both parties have spoken in recent years.

First, the long road from Roberts' initial nomination to his confirmation vote was unfair and impossible to defend -- and is an excellent example of the broken state of the Senate's judicial confirmation process for appeals court nominees. Roberts was first nominated to the D.C. Circuit in January 1992, yet did not receive a hearing before the end of President George H.W. Bush's term a year later. President George W. Bush then nominated Roberts on May 9, 2001, shortly after taking office. But the Senate Judiciary Committee did not hold a hearing on Roberts' nomination during the entire last Congress, even though no serious objections were lodged against him. President Bush then re-nominated Roberts on January 7, 2003. After two hearings this year, Roberts received his Senate vote on May 8, 2003 -- two years after nomination by President George W. Bush and more than 11 years after his first nomination. And when Roberts finally received that elusive vote, the Senate unanimously confirmed him, which makes the many years of delay all the more difficult to explain and justify.

The Senate's delays and denials of votes on appeals court nominees ) which have been too common in recent Administrations -- flout the intention of the Constitution and the tradition of the Senate. No judicial nominee ever should have to wait years for a vote in the Senate. So that the federal courts are fully staffed to do their jobs for the American people and in order to attract the best and brightest to judicial service, the Senate should fulfill its constitutional responsibility and ensure that every judicial nominee receives an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable period of time after nomination.

Second, the confirmation of John Roberts also dramatically exposes the double standard being applied to the President's other D.C. Circuit nominee, Miguel Estrada. The career records of Roberts and Estrada are strikingly similar. Both Estrada and Roberts were unanimously rated well-qualified by the ABA. Both have argued numerous cases before the Supreme Court, including as attorneys in the Solicitor General's office. Both have devoted large portions of their legal careers to public service and also been partners at major Washington law firms. Both have clerked for Supreme Court Justices. Both have the very strong support of prominent Democrat attorneys who served in high-ranking positions in the Clinton Administration. Neither has served previously as a judge or a professor and therefore neither has written widely about their personal views on legal issues. Both have served instead as superb and well-respected lawyers for public and private clients throughout their careers.

Despite the similarities between Roberts and Estrada, 45 Senate Democrats have treated them very differently. Senate Democrats never requested memoranda written by Roberts from his time in the Solicitor General's office. Yet they are insisting on reviewing memoranda written by Estrada from his tenure in the Solicitor General's office as a condition of ending a 3-month filibuster of his nomination. Consistent with judicial independence and the traditional practice of judicial nominees, Senate Democrats also did not demand that Roberts answer questions about his personal views on legal and policy issues before they voted on him. Yet these Senators are demanding that Estrada answer the same questions that Roberts did not answer as a condition of ending the filibuster on Estrada.

The 45 Senate Democrats who are filibustering Estrada's nomination are applying a double standard. There is no rational or legitimate justification for the disparate treatment of Roberts and Estrada -- particularly by means of the extraordinary and unprecedented filibuster of Estrada, who would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit and has the clear support of a majority of Senators. The President has asked that the Senate Democrats halt the filibuster and allow an up-or-down vote on Estrada. As the President has said, let each Senator vote as he or she thinks best, but end the double standard, stop the unfair treatment, and give the man a vote.

I talked to Jim Haynes and asked whether DoD would object to the following proposal being submitted by State. This is very time sensitive because Rep.
Wolf now will introduce something much worse if we do not submit something by this week. Jim asked me to forward summary to you. An Armitage letter cleared and sent last summer made clear Admin. support for these principles; this would be the follow-on actual proposal. I am at 456-7984.

American victims of international terrorism are currently compensated through a patchwork system that allows a small group of victims to receive enormous judgments in court, but provides no avenue for relief for the vast majority of victims and victims

A BILL

To establish a comprehensive federal program to provide benefits to U.S. victims of international terrorism, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 101 SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the “Benefits for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2003”.

SEC. 102 ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

There is established the Benefits for Victims of International Terrorism Program (“Program”) under which monetary awards shall be made in accordance with this Act to eligible individuals who are physically injured, killed, or held hostage as a result of an act of international terrorism.

SEC. 103 DEFINITIONS

In this Act, the following definitions apply:

(a) Act of International Terrorism. - The term "act of international terrorism" means an activity that constitutes terrorism within the definition provided in Section 2(15) of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 and that was committed by foreign nationals or foreign governments (or the agents thereof) and directed, in whole or in part, at the United States or at an individual because of the individual's status as a national of the United States.

(b) Claimant. - The term "claimant" means an individual filing a claim for benefits under this Act. In the case of an individual who died as the direct result of the act of international terrorism, any individual who is eligible to recover under section 107(a) may be a claimant. In the case of an individual who suffered physical injury or was held hostage as the direct result of an act of international terrorism, the claimant shall be the individual who suffered the physical injury or was held hostage, except that a parent or legal guardian may file a claim on behalf of an individual who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent or incapacitated.

(c) Child. – The term “child” shall have the meaning given to it by 42 U.S.C. 3796b(2).

(d) Department. - The term " Department" means the Department of State.

(e) National of the United States. - The term "national of the United States" has the meaning given in section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)).

(f) Physical injury. -The term “physical injury” means an injury to the body, from a source external to the body, that directly results in partial or total physical disability, incapacity, or disfigurement.

(g) United States. - The term "United States" means the States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Mariana Islands, the territories and possessions of the United States, the territorial sea of the United States, and the airspace above them.

SEC. 104      ADMINISTRATION

(a)      Threshold Determination. -

(1) Upon the occurrence of a terrorist incident, the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Secretary of Defense, and the Attorney General, shall promptly determine in writing whether an act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(a) of this Act has taken place. Any such determination shall be published in the Federal Register.

(2) The Secretary of State's determination under this section shall be final and conclusive, and it shall not be subject to review in any judicial, administrative or other proceeding.

(b)      Adjudication and Payment. -- When a threshold determination set forth in subsection (a) is made, the Department shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, adjudicate, and render final decisions, and pay awards with respect to claims filed under section 105 in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 105      FILING OF CLAIMS

(a) In General. -- Claims for benefits under the Program shall be filed with the Department on the form developed under subsection (b).

(b) Claim Form. –

(1)      The Department shall develop a form that claimants shall use when submitting claims under subsection (a).

(2)      The claim form at a minimum shall request -

(A)      in the case of a claim filed for a death benefit with respect to a decedent, information demonstrating the decedent's death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism and information demonstrating that the claimant is eligible to recover under the Act;

- (B) in the case of a claim not involving a death, information demonstrating the physical harm that the claimant suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism or information demonstrating the period the claimant was held hostage as a direct result of the act of international terrorism; and
  - (C) in the case of a claim filed by a parent or legal guardian, information demonstrating the claimant's status as a parent or legal guardian.
- (3) The claim form shall state clearly and conspicuously the information contained in section 112 of this Act.

SEC. 106 ELIGIBILITY

(a) In General. - The Department shall review each claim filed under this Program and determine whether the claimant is an eligible individual under subsection (b) of this section.

(b) Eligible Individuals. -- An eligible individual is a victim who, as of the date on which the act of international terrorism occurred, (1) was a national of the United States or any person hired pursuant to section 2669(c) or section 3943 of title 22 of the United States Code; and (2)(A) died as the direct result of the act of international terrorism, (B) suffered physical injury as the direct result of the act of international terrorism, or (C) was held hostage as a direct result of an act of international terrorism and not solely for ransom.

(c) Exclusion for Participants or Conspirators in Acts of Terrorism. -- A participant or conspirator in any act of international terrorism, or a representative of such individual, shall not be an eligible individual.

(d) Exclusion for Military Personnel. B This Program does not apply to any claim arising out of injury, death, or period as a hostage sustained by a member of the U.S. Armed Forces while serving on active duty.

(e) September 11th Victim Compensation Fund. -- Notwithstanding any other provision in this Act, no individual who is or was eligible to recover under the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund of 2001 shall be eligible to recover under this Act.

SEC. 107 NATURE OF AWARDS

(a) Death Benefit. -- In any case in which the Department determines, under regulations issued pursuant to this Act, that an eligible individual has died as the direct and proximate result of an act of international terrorism, the Department shall award a benefit equal to that amount payable as a death benefit to public safety officers pursuant to section 3796 of title 42, United States Code, as amended, as follows:

- (1) if there is no surviving child of the victim, to the surviving spouse of such victim;
- (2) if there is a surviving child or children and a surviving spouse, one-half to the surviving child or children of such victim in equal shares and one-half to the surviving spouse;

(3) if there is a surviving child or children and no surviving spouse, to the child or children of such victim in equal shares; or

(4) if none of the above conditions apply and there is a surviving parent or parents, to the parent or parents of such victim in equal share.

(b) Injury or Hostage Benefit. -- In the event the claimant was physically injured or held hostage as a direct result of an act of international terrorism, the Department shall award a benefit to the claimant in an amount determined by the Department up to, but not to exceed, the amount provided for under the preceding subsection. If the claimant dies while the claim is pending, and the death is not a direct result of the act of terrorism, any award made after that death under this subsection shall be paid to the persons specified in paragraphs (a)(1) through (4) of this section. The Secretary of State may issue regulations regarding the amount of benefits to be provided under this subsection for categories of injuries or for durations of time as a hostage.

(c) No Fault Program. -- Awards shall be made without regard to the negligence or any other theory of liability of the claimant or of the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim.

(d) Reversion of Amounts to the Fund. -- If no person is entitled to receive the amount awarded under the above subsections, the amount shall revert to the Fund.

SEC. 108      LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS

(a) Prohibition on Double Recovery. -- No benefit is payable under this Act with respect to a victim having been injured or held hostage if a benefit is payable under this Act with respect to the death of such victim. In the event that a payment is made under this Act on account of death or period as a hostage and a death benefit subsequently becomes payable for the death of the same victim, such death benefit shall be reduced by amounts previously awarded.

(b) Time Limitation for Filing. -- No claim may be filed on the basis of an act of international terrorism after the date that is 2 years after the date of publication in the Federal Register of the relevant determination under section 104(a) of this Act.

SEC. 109      INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE

(a) International Terrorism Before Effective Date. -- Benefits may be awarded under this Act, subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, to eligible individuals for acts of international terrorism that took place before the effective date of this Act and which occurred on or after November 1, 1979.

(b) Determination. -- The Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Secretary of Defense, and the Attorney General, shall issue, promptly upon the request of a claimant potentially covered under subsection (a), a determination whether an incident that occurred on or after November 1, 1979, and before the date of enactment of this Act was an act of international terrorism. Such requests will be considered only if made within one year after the date of enactment of this Act. Any such determination shall be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 110 AUTHORIZATION.

(a) Authorization. -- There is established for the purpose of providing benefits under this Act a Victims of International Terrorism Benefits Fund ("Fund").

(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State for deposit into the Fund such sums as may be necessary to pay awards under this Act.

(2) Amounts in the Fund shall be available until expended.

(3) Contributions. -- The Secretary of State is authorized to accept such amounts as may be contributed by individuals, business concerns, foreign governments, or other entities for the payment of awards certified under this Act and such amounts may be deposited directly into the Fund.

(4) Unexpended balances of expired appropriations available to the Department of State may be transferred directly into the Fund for the payment of awards under this Act.

(b) Administrative Expenses. -- In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated for the Department of State, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State such sums as may be necessary to administer this Program.

SEC. 111 SUBROGRATION

The United States shall be subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to any recovery in litigation or settlement of litigation related to an injury, death, or period of a hostage for which payment was made under the Program. Any amounts recovered under this subsection shall be deposited into the Fund established by section 110(a).

SEC. 112 ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

(a) Rule and Procedures. -- The Secretary of State may issue such rules and procedures as may be necessary to carry out this Act, including rules with respect to choice of law principles, admitting agents or other persons to representation before the Department of claimants under this Act, and the nature and maximum amount of fees that such agent or other person may charge for such representation.

(b) Acts Committed to Officer's Discretion. -- Any action taken or omitted by an officer of the United States under this Act is committed to the discretion of such officer.

(c) Civil Actions Against Foreign States.—

(1) A person who by a civil action has obtained and received full satisfaction of a judgment against a foreign state for death or injury due to an act of international terrorism shall not receive an award under this Act based on the same act of international terrorism.

(2) A person who has accepted an award under this Act relating to an act of international terrorism shall not thereafter commence or maintain in a court of the United States a civil action against a foreign state based on the same act of international terrorism.

SEC. 113 NO JUDICIAL REVIEW

Decisions made under this Act shall not be subject to review in any judicial, administrative or other proceeding.

SEC. 114 CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

(a) Section 201 of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002 (Public Law 107-297) is amended by adding the following as new subsection (e):

“(e) Subsection (a) shall not apply to any judgment obtained pursuant to a complaint filed after [the date of submission of the Benefits for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2003].”

(b) Section 1610(f) of Title 28, United States Code (28 U.S.C. 1610(f)), is amended by adding the following at the end as new subparagraph (4):

“(4) Subsection (f) shall not apply to any judgment obtained pursuant to a complaint filed after [the date of submission of the Benefits for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2003].”

Senator Seeks Dem. Backing for Asbestos Bill
Reuters
May 15, 2003

WASHINGTON, May 15 (Reuters) - The Republican senator spearheading an effort to write bipartisan asbestos legislation said on Thursday he was still courting potential Democratic support but hoped to introduce a bill by Monday.
Sen. Orrin Hatch, a Utah Republican, said he planned to meet later Thursday with Sen. Patrick Leahy, a Vermont Democrat, to ask him to support a proposal for a $108 billion trust fund to pay asbestos injury claims. "We'll talk about it today and hopefully he (Leahy) will be" backing the proposed legislation, Hatch told Reuters outside the Senate chamber. "I don't think I have Sen. Dodd, either," Hatch said, referring to Sen. Chris Dodd, a Connecticut Democrat who, like Leahy, has expressed interest in finding a solution to the massive number of asbestos injury claims clogging U.S. courts.
Asbestos was widely used for fireproofing and insulation until the 1970s, when scientists concluded that inhaled fibers could be linked to cancer and other diseases.
Hatch did not elaborate on what objections the Democrats may have to his trust fund proposal, and their offices had no immediate comment. "Basically, I'm going to file a bill tomorrow or Monday," Hatch said. "As usual, it's a very difficult task. There's plenty of people trying to kill it."
Hatch, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said last week he was trying to get labor and industry groups to agree with his proposal for a trust fund to compensate asbestos victims, cap liability for companies and relieve the courts.
Hatch selected the figure of $108 billion, which was an attempted compromise between a business proposal for a $90 billion fund and a

labor proposal that amounted to $120 billion to $130 billion. But neither side has publicly embraced Hatch's compromise figure, and neither has any Senate
Democrat.
Defendant companies, insurers and unions have been negotiating with Hatch; the committee's ranking Democrat, Leahy; and other lawmakers to try to craft a legislative solution to the soaring number of asbestos lawsuits
that have driven dozens of companies into bankruptcy.
Among companies that have filed for bankruptcy protection in recent years because of asbestos liability claims are building materials company Owens Corning <OWENQ.OB> and auto parts supplier Federal-Mogul
Corp. <FDMLQ.OB>
Oil services and construction company Halliburton Co. <HAL.N> and bubble
wrap maker Sealed Air Corp. <SEE.N> have crafted settlement plans with plaintiffs. Swiss-based engineering group ABB <ABBZn.VX> is trying to conclude a $1.2 billion settlement.

UNITED STATES SENATOR
DON NICKLES

May 16, 2003

Name
Address
City, State Zip

Dear First Name:

When I was elected to the United States Senate, I committed myself to represent the values of Oklahomans and fight to protect our freedoms. We have won many victories on behalf of individuals, families and businesses, but the challenge to guard our freedoms and ensure greater achievements still exists.

None of my past successes would have been possible, nor could we meet our future challenges without your faithful support. It is with heartfelt gratitude that I thank you for standing with me in our effort to build an even brighter future for our children and grandchildren.

Following my tenure as Assistant Majority Leader, I now serve as the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee where I am working with President Bush to create jobs and grow the economy. It is a tremendous honor to serve in the leadership, but my un-compromised dedication is to those who elected me, the people of Oklahoma. With the 2004 election fast approaching, I must begin to prepare now. That is why I am writing you today.

On your calendar, please reserve Monday, June 16 as an important day. I will contact you in the coming days to invite you to a 5:30 p.m. reception that will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Cameron. I hope you will be able to attend this important event. My special guest will be the Honorable Donald L. Evans, who is the point man for the President's economic plan.

I hope I can count on your continued support and look forward to seeing you June 16.

Sincerely,

Don Nickles
U.S. Senator

P.S. I hope you will consider being a member of the Senate Club 2004 or a host for my June 16 event. We will follow this letter with more specific information and a formal invitation soon. If you wish to RSVP now or if you have any questions, please call 405/834-8295, e-mail nickles2004@cox.net or use the enclosed response device.

HEADLINE: EDITORIALS : How to bork a nominee Leon Holmes gets the treatment

BODY:

BORK IS no longer a proper noun in Washington, as in Judge Robert Bork, but a verb. It means to launch a vicious, irrelevant, roundhouse campaign against a judicial nominee, throwing in everything, including a couple of kitchen sinks.

The term stems from the treatment of Judge Bork when he was nominated to the Supreme Court. Not satisfied with relevant criticisms, the judge's more partisan critics reached back to criticize everything he'd said or done from approximately the age of three, and quite a few things he hadn't.

That borking has become a Washington tradition by now-indeed, an addiction-is illustrated by the sharp but impressively mean-spirited editorial we reprint on today's page from the Washington Post. It's a textbook example of borking; students in political science classes should cut it out and save it, like a ripe specimen of that low art.

Notice that, unable to find anything contemporary to criticize about Little Rock's Leon Holmes-an outstanding scholar, advocate and thinker who has just been nominated to the federal bench-the Post has had to go back years and even decades to dig up any utterance it could use against him, including one that went back to 1980-yes, 1980-and for which he apologized as soon as it was brought to his attention.

The other citation-a quote from Scripture in an article co-written with his wife in April of 1997-is so wrenched out of context that you might never guess it was a philosophical rumination on the Book of Ephesians.

As any smear artist knows, there's no need to go into detail. Especially relevant detail. In this case the innocent reader would be left with no idea of what kind of nominee, or man, Leon Holmes really is. Which is the whole purpose of borking: to make the nominee look like the biggest, scariest menace that ever came down confirmation road. Instead, to quote an informal recommendation from a colleague, Leon Holmes is the kind of guy he'd be willing to shoot dice with over the phone.

The charge that Mr. Holmes is in favor of the subjugation of women would amuse anyone who's ever met Susan Holmes, his wife and co-author, or any of the women in the law for whom he has been mentor, role model, supporter and encourager.

But we're glad to see that the Post has not lost its talent for irony. Alas, in this case it's unintended irony.

For the Post accuses the president of radicalizing judicial nominations by his choice of Leon Holmes for the bench, when it is the one being radical, going back or decades to find words from a much younger Leon Holmes that fail to show the proper reverence for the politically correct gods of today.

In the process, the Post has ignored the legal acumen and philosophical learning that the mature Leon Holmes has demonstrated day after day, year after year, in his career and life. Forget all that; the Post is determined to crucify this nominee even if it has to use old, rusty nails. It takes a couple of stray quotes and equates them with the man's whole career. A neat trick, if a low one.

A confession: In recent years we've found ourselves growing soft on the Post's editorial page; on its good days it started to look like one of those old-fashioned liberal organs not beyond the reach of reason. Clearly we were mistaken.

When the chance to do a little borking came up, the Post has leaped at it. As if it couldn't help itself. Even if it means using low means to attain a purely ideological end. Which may be the worst thing about borking; it's habit-forming. Once it becomes ingrained in a paper's character, there's no telling when it will seep out again.

An Unfair Double Standard

Last week, the Senate confirmed John Roberts to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Roberts has served as Deputy Solicitor General of the United States, Associate Counsel to President Reagan, and Law Clerk to then-Justice Rehnquist. He has argued numerous cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and is widely recognized as one of the very best appellate lawyers in America. The American Bar Association unanimously rated him well qualified. In short, John Roberts exemplifies the kind of judge President Bush has nominated to the federal courts, and will be a distinguished judge on the D.C. Circuit.

The Senate's confirmation of Roberts is noteworthy for two additional reasons, however, both of which demonstrate the breakdown in the Senate confirmation process for federal appeals court nominees about which President Bush and many Senators of both parties have spoken in recent years.

First, the long road from Roberts' initial nomination to his confirmation vote was unfair and impossible to defend -- and is an excellent example of the broken state of the Senate's judicial confirmation process for appeals court nominees. Roberts was first nominated to the D.C. Circuit in January 1992, yet did not receive a hearing before the end of President George H.W. Bush's term a year later. President George W. Bush then nominated Roberts on May 9, 2001, shortly after taking office. But the Senate Judiciary Committee did not hold a hearing on Roberts' nomination during the entire last Congress, even though no serious objections were lodged against him. President Bush then re-nominated Roberts on January 7, 2003. After two hearings this year, Roberts received his Senate vote on May 8, 2003 -- two years after nomination by President George W. Bush and more than 11 years after his first nomination. And when Roberts finally received that elusive vote, the Senate unanimously confirmed him, which makes the many years of delay all the more difficult to explain and justify.

The Senate's delays and denials of votes on appeals court nominees -- which have been too common in recent Administrations -- flout the intention of the Constitution and the tradition of the Senate. No judicial nominee ever should have to wait years for a vote in the Senate. So that the federal courts are fully staffed to do their jobs for the American people and in order to attract the best and brightest to judicial service, the Senate should fulfill its constitutional responsibility and ensure that every judicial nominee receives an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable period of time after nomination.

Second, the confirmation of John Roberts also dramatically exposes the double standard being applied to the President's other D.C. Circuit nominee, Miguel Estrada. The career records of Roberts and Estrada are strikingly similar. Both Estrada and Roberts were unanimously rated well-qualified by the ABA. Both have argued numerous cases before the Supreme Court, including as attorneys in the Solicitor General's office. Both have devoted large portions of their legal careers to public service and also been partners at major Washington law firms. Both have clerked for Supreme Court Justices. Both have the very strong support of prominent Democrat attorneys who served in high-ranking positions in the Clinton Administration. Neither has served previously as a judge or a professor and therefore neither has written widely about their personal views on legal issues. Both have served instead as superb and well-respected lawyers for public and private clients throughout their careers.

Despite the similarities between Roberts and Estrada, 45 Senate Democrats have treated them very differently. Senate Democrats never requested memoranda written by Roberts from his time in the Solicitor General's office. Yet they are insisting on reviewing memoranda written by Estrada from his tenure in the Solicitor General's office as a condition of ending a 3-month filibuster of his nomination. Consistent with judicial independence and the traditional practice of judicial nominees, Senate Democrats also did not demand that Roberts answer questions about his personal views on legal and policy issues before they voted on him. Yet these Senators are demanding that Estrada answer the same questions that Roberts did not answer as a condition of ending the filibuster on Estrada.

The 45 Senate Democrats who are filibustering Estrada's nomination are applying a double standard. There is no rational or legitimate justification for the disparate treatment of Roberts and Estrada -- particularly by means of the extraordinary and unprecedented filibuster of Estrada, who would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit and has the clear support of a majority of Senators. The President has asked that the Senate Democrats halt the filibuster and allow an up-or-down vote on Estrada. As the President has said, let each Senator vote as he or she thinks best, but end the double standard, stop the unfair treatment, and give the man a vote.

Senator Seeks Dem. Backing for Asbestos Bill
Reuters
May 15, 2003

WASHINGTON, May 15 (Reuters) - The Republican senator spearheading an effort to write bipartisan asbestos legislation said on Thursday he was still courting potential Democratic support but hoped to introduce a bill by Monday.
Sen. Orrin Hatch, a Utah Republican, said he planned to meet later Thursday with Sen. Patrick Leahy, a Vermont Democrat, to ask him to support a proposal for a $108 billion trust fund to pay asbestos injury claims. "We'll talk about it today and hopefully he (Leahy) will be" backing the proposed legislation, Hatch told Reuters outside the Senate chamber. "I don't think I have Sen. Dodd, either," Hatch said, referring to Sen. Chris Dodd, a Connecticut Democrat who, like Leahy, has expressed interest in finding a solution to the massive number of asbestos injury claims clogging U.S. courts.
Asbestos was widely used for fireproofing and insulation until the 1970s, when scientists concluded that inhaled fibers could be linked to cancer and other diseases.
Hatch did not elaborate on what objections the Democrats may have to his trust fund proposal, and their offices had no immediate comment. "Basically, I'm going to file a bill tomorrow or Monday," Hatch said. "As usual, it's a very difficult task. There's plenty of people trying to kill it."
Hatch, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said last week he was trying to get labor and industry groups to agree with his proposal for a trust fund to compensate asbestos victims, cap liability for companies and relieve the courts.
Hatch selected the figure of $108 billion, which was an attempted compromise between a business proposal for a $90 billion fund and a

labor proposal that amounted to $120 billion to $130 billion. But neither side has publicly embraced Hatch's compromise figure, and neither has any Senate
Democrat.
Defendant companies, insurers and unions have been negotiating with Hatch; the committee's ranking Democrat, Leahy; and other lawmakers to try to craft a legislative solution to the soaring number of asbestos lawsuits
that have driven dozens of companies into bankruptcy.
Among companies that have filed for bankruptcy protection in recent years because of asbestos liability claims are building materials company Owens Corning <OWENQ.OB> and auto parts supplier Federal-Mogul
Corp. <FDMLQ.OB>
Oil services and construction company Halliburton Co. <HAL.N> and bubble
wrap maker Sealed Air Corp. <SEE.N> have crafted settlement plans with plaintiffs. Swiss-based engineering group ABB <ABBZn.VX> is trying to conclude a $1.2 billion settlement.

George Bush and the social conservatives

A troubled marriage

May 15th 2003 | WASHINGTON, DC
From The Economist print edition

A conservative president has more problems with one section of his party's right-wing than you might think

GEORGE BUSH's relationship with his business supporters could hardly be more straightforward. Business people give him huge piles of money. In return he cuts their taxes and shreds red tape. But there is nothing straightforward about his dealings with another big part of the Republican Party: its social conservatives.

Mr Bush's relationship with these voters is like a troubled marriage: tantrums and tearful apologies, long sulks and periodic fireworks, trial separations and loving affirmations that they can't live without each other. Think of Richard Burton's relationship with Elizabeth Taylor (without the jewellery) and you get the idea.

Social conservatives have two defining issues: "life" (which has to be protected from abortion) and "marriage" (from homosexuals). They are now terrified that the Republican establishment is preparing to sell them down the river on marriage, all because of Mr Bush's need to lure in moderate voters. Earlier this month, leading social conservatives met the party's chairman, Mark Racicot, to make their unhappiness clear. They extracted a promise from him to meet with a group of "reformed" ex-gays.

The current furore was provoked by Rick Santorum, the third-ranking Republican in the Senate. Last month he linked gay sex to bigamy, polygamy, incest and adultery, asserted that sodomy was "antithetical" to a healthy family and declared: "I have no problem with homosexuality. I have a problem with homosexual acts."

Mr Santorum got a predictable roasting in what conservatives call the liberal media. In fact his remarks merely reflect Republican orthodoxy: the party platform, for example, goes out of its way to define marriage in a way that rules out gay unions. Yet Mr Bush's people hardly rushed to defend their senator. Phyllis Schlafly, who brought down the Equal Rights Amendment in the 1970s, describes the establishment's defence as "limp". Paul Weyrich, head of the Free Congress Foundation, characterises it as "tepid".

For social conservatives this is just the latest in a long series of attempts by Mr Bush's advisers to make his party more "gay-friendly". At the 2000 convention there was a minor purge of anti-homosexual rhetoric; there will be another in 2004. Mr Bush has appointed several openly gay people to his administration, including an ambassador and two successive heads of the Office of National AIDS Policy. Social conservatives are particularly angry about a secret meeting in March between Mr Racicot and Human Rights Campaign, a gay lobbying group.

Gary Bauer, a one-time presidential candidate, thunders that the "grass-roots will not stand for continued ambivalence on these moral issues." His successor as head of the Family Research Council, Kenneth Connor, says "a house divided against itself cannot stand." The Rev Don Wildmon, who owns nearly 200 radio stations, declares that, if the Republicans continue to beam at gays, "we will walk".

Gay marriage is not the only "betrayal". Mr Bush has been far more willing to spend his political capital on tax cuts than on faith-based initiatives (which have been allowed to wither on the vine). Many fundamentalists dislike his insistence that Islam is a peaceful religion. Some are even angry that John Ashcroft, their main man in the cabinet, has taken such a draconian line on civil liberties: they worry that a future attorney-general may be able to spy on conservative religious organisations.

Does all this noise matter? Some of the smartest observers of the political scene doubt it. Norm Ornstein, of the American Enterprise Institute, calls it a "toothless bark". Would social conservatives really be willing to hand the White House over to the pro-abortion, pro-gay Democrats?

Besides, most social conservatives still like Mr Bush. He enjoys approval ratings of more than 95% among Republicans; he also enjoys something that his father never had: trust. Mr Weyrich, the man who invented the "moral majority", thinks that Mr Bush's record on social issues is even better than the sainted Ronald Reagan's. This trust is there largely because Mr Bush has fought harder on the other big social issue, abortion.

One of Mr Bush's first acts as president was to cut off money for organisations providing abortions overseas. He has supported several measures to restrict abortion rights, ban partial-birth abortion and define human fetuses as children (with attendant government-provided health benefits). He has imposed restrictions on stem-cell research and he used religious language in calling for a ban on cloning ("Life is a creation, not a commodity"). And he has bullied the Department of Health and Human Services into promoting sexual abstinence and marriage.

Mr Bush has done other righteous things. His judicial nominations have included several evangelical Christians, such as Charles Pickering and Claude Allen, a leading advocate of abstinence-education. He has done all he can to accommodate conservative worries about his $15 billion initiative to fight AIDS in the developing world. A third of the money will be spent on abstinence-education. Religious groups that participate in the scheme will not have to promote anything they see as morally objectionable.

The threat of staying at home

Yet there are still three good reasons to think that the barking from the right may not be entirely toothless. To begin with, social conservatives are not as pragmatic as the deal-doing business conservatives are. They are absolutists, who are willing to go to the stake for certain issues.

Second, social conservatives are now buried deeper inside the Republican establishment than ever before. In the 1990s conservative Christians tended to work through outside organisations such as the Christian Coalition. More recently they have worked from within, taking the battle to precinct meetings and the like. According to a study in Campaigns and Elections, a Washington magazine, Christian conservatives now exercise either "strong" or "moderate" influence in 44 Republican state committees, compared with 31 committees in 1994, the last time the survey was conducted. They are weak in only six states, all in the north-east. Ralph Reed, the Christian Coalition leader until 1997, now runs the Georgia Republican Party.

Anyone who doubts the clout of these Christian conservatives within the party should study the fate of last year's bankruptcy-reform legislation, which the business wing of the party wanted. Social conservatives destroyed the bill because it included a provision designed to crack down on anti-abortion protesters.

A third reason for Mr Bush to worry about social conservatives is that they do have an alternative to voting Republican: they can stay at home. Karl Rove points out that some 4m Christian conservatives who voted in 1994 failed to vote in 2000. The return of many of these voters to the fold in 2002 helped the Republicans pick up vital Senate seats in Georgia and Missouri. If they feel let down in 2004, it could hand a close election to the Democrats.

It will not get any easier. The White House's strategy for the next year is to focus on conservative causes that have overwhelming public support—such as opposition to cloning and late-term abortion. But it will also have to deal with several issues that could drive a wedge between conservative activists and swing voters.

The most important decision will involve the Supreme Court. At least one Supreme Court justice may retire in the next year or so. Conservatives see the selection of a new justice as an issue on which they are prepared to break with the president. "We will not put up with another [David] Souter," says Ms Schlafly, referring to a judge appointed by George Bush senior who has since voted in a liberal manner. On the other hand, moderate suburban women would be horrified by the idea of another conservative in the court, particularly an anti-abortion one.

Sexual politics will also crop up in two other decisions. The Massachusetts Supreme Court will decide (in the Goodridge case) whether to legalise same-sex marriage. The federal Supreme Court will decide (in the Lawrence case) whether to overturn a Texas law that criminalises sodomy between same-sex couples. Social conservatives and moderates will want to know Mr Bush's opinion.

Mr Bush is better placed than anybody else in his party to manage the religious right. But some spouses are not amenable to even the most enlightened management. The Republican Party currently looks like an extraordinary electoral machine. But it would be foolish to forget that the party is an amalgam of lots of different groups—and that one of the most important of these groups, the social conservatives, has a mind and a will of its own.

Brett,

do you have language rejecting the S.C. GOP's request for a Rove recipe for a cook book they are selling for fundraising purposes? KR does not want to do this.

What will the role of Andy Card and Karl Rove be?

The law expressly permits White House officials to engage in appropriate political activity, including while on duty and in their offices. White House officials therefore may participate in issues related to the President's re-election campaign and White House officials have done so for past Presidents.

[NOTE: The main restriction on White House officials is that they may not solicit contributions.]

Who pays for travel costs when the President travels on campaign activity?

A long-standing formula is employed to divide costs between the government and the campaign. Past Presidents running for re-election have employed the same formula. [NOTE: Costs related to security and secure communications such as the costs of Air Force One are always paid by the government, and certain travelers are always deemed official, such as the Secret Service, personal aide, Chief of Staff, and National Security Advisor.]

What about communications between campaign officials and White House officials?

There are no specific legal restrictions on communications between campaign officials and White House officials, so long of course as confidential government information is not inappropriately released.

UNITED STATES SENATOR
DON NICKLES

May 16, 2003

Name
Address
City, State Zip

Dear First Name:

When I was elected to the United States Senate, I committed myself to represent the values of Oklahomans and fight to protect our freedoms. We have won many victories on behalf of individuals, families and businesses, but the challenge to guard our freedoms and ensure greater achievements still exists.

None of my past successes would have been possible, nor could we meet our future challenges without your faithful support. It is with heartfelt gratitude that I thank you for standing with me in our effort to build an even brighter future for our children and grandchildren.

Following my tenure as Assistant Majority Leader, I now serve as the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee where I am working with President Bush to create jobs and grow the economy. It is a tremendous honor to serve in the leadership, but my un-compromised dedication is to those who elected me, the people of Oklahoma. With the 2004 election fast approaching, I must begin to prepare now. That is why I am writing you today.

On your calendar, please reserve Monday, June 16 as an important day. I will contact you in the coming days to invite you to a 7:00 p.m. reception that will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Cameron. I hope you will be able to attend this important event. The special guest will be the Honorable Donald L. Evans.

I hope I can count on your continued support and look forward to seeing you June 16.

Sincerely,

Don Nickles
U.S. Senator

P.S. I hope you will consider being a member of the Senate Club 2004 or a host for my June 16 event. We will follow this letter with more specific information and a formal invitation soon. If you wish to RSVP now or if you have any questions, please call 405/834-8295, e-mail nickles2004@cox.net or use the enclosed response device.

UNITED STATES SENATOR
DON NICKLES

May 16, 2003

Name
Address
City, State Zip

Dear First Name:

When I was elected to the United States Senate, I committed myself to represent the values of Oklahomans and fight to protect our freedoms. We have won many victories on behalf of individuals, families and businesses, but the challenge to guard our freedoms and ensure greater achievements still exists.

None of my past successes would have been possible, nor could we meet our future challenges without your faithful support. It is with heartfelt gratitude that I thank you for standing with me in our effort to build an even brighter future for our children and grandchildren.

Following my tenure as Assistant Majority Leader, I now serve as the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee where I am working with President Bush to create jobs and grow the economy. It is a tremendous honor to serve in the leadership, but my un-compromised dedication is to those who elected me, the people of Oklahoma. With the 2004 election fast approaching, I must begin to prepare now. That is why I am writing you today.

On your calendar, please reserve Monday, June 16 as an important day. I will contact you in the coming days to invite you to a 7:00 p.m. reception that will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Cameron. I hope you will be able to attend this important event. The special guest will be the Honorable Donald L. Evans.

I hope I can count on your continued support and look forward to seeing you June 16.

Sincerely,

Don Nickles
U.S. Senator

P.S. I hope you will consider being a member of the Senate Club 2004 or a host for my June 16 event. We will follow this letter with more specific information and a formal invitation soon. If you wish to RSVP now or if you have any questions, please call 405/834-8295, e-mail nickles2004@cox.net or use the enclosed response device.

Subject: CEO certification of tax returns

Kevin, hope you're well -- no doubt busy with the tax legislation!

Wanted to know if the WH has a position on Zell Miller's provision requiring CEO's to certify tax returns?

FEI has been working with the Senator's office to slightly modify his original provision which has been reflected in the JTC report. The Senator has been supportive of this modification. I've attached a copy of the legislative language. Basically, FEI proposes that the CEO's sign, only once, on the front of the consolidated tax return instead of having the sign each and every schedule.

My concern is that other business groups might try and kill this provision which I think could backfire on the Republicans. Our sense is that Zell Miller is not going to let this issue go -- he feels very strongly that CEO's sign returns just like "Joe six-packs". My worry is if the business community pushes too hard on this he might walk from the Conference which wouldn't do anyone any good.

I think that the FEI position is a good compromise because Miller gets what he wants, accountability by the CEO, yet it doesn't take up the amount of time that the original provision would require, which is what the business community wants.

Current language of the Baucus Amendment

SEC. 722. SIGNING OF CORPORATE TAX RETURNS BY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6062 (relating to signing of corporation returns) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following new sentence: “The return of a corporation with respect to income shall be signed by the chief executive officer of such corporation (or other such officer of the corporation as the Secretary may designate if the corporation does not have a chief executive officer). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any return of a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to returns filed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SUGGESTED ALTERNATIVE:

SEC. 722. SIGNING OF CORPORATE TAX RETURNS BY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6062 (relating to signing of corporation returns) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following ~~at the beginning of that section:~~ “The annual Federal income tax return of a corporation required under section 6012(a)(1) shall be signed by the chief executive officer of such corporation (or other such officer of the corporation as the Secretary may designate if the corporation does not have a chief executive officer). The requirement of the preceding sentence shall be limited to the first page of the return requiring a signature. Such other returns, statements or documents required to be made under any provision of the internal revenue laws or regulations shall be signed by the president, vice-president, treasurer, assistant treasurer, chief accounting officer or any other officer duly authorized to so act.” The preceding sentence shall not apply to any return of a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to returns filed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

JOINT TAX EXPLANATION

Chief Executive Officer Required To Sign Corporate Income Tax Returns (sec. 722 of the bill and sec. 6062 of the Code)

Present Law

The Code requires that the annual Federal income tax return of a corporation must be signed by either the president, the vice-president, the treasurer, the assistant treasurer, the chief accounting officer, or any other officer of the corporation authorized by the corporation to sign the return.

The Code also imposes a criminal penalty on any person who willfully signs any tax return under penalties of perjury that that person does not believe to be true and correct with respect to every material matter at the time of filing. If convicted, the person is guilty of a felony; the Code imposes a fine of not more than $100,000 ($500,000 in the case of a corporation) or imprisonment of not more than three years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

Reasons for Change

The Committee believes that the filing of accurate Federal tax returns is essential to the proper functioning of the tax system. The Committee believes that requiring that the chief executive officer of a corporation sign its annual Federal corporate income tax returns will elevate the level of care given to the preparation of those returns.

Explanation of Provision

The bill requires that the chief executive officer of a corporation sign the corporation's annual Federal income tax return (i.e., -Form 1120 of the corporation's income tax returns). If the corporation does not have a chief executive officer, the IRS may designate another officer of the corporation; otherwise, no other person is permitted to sign the income tax return of a corporation. The Committee intends that the IRS issue general guidance, such as a revenue procedure, to (1) address situations when a corporation does not have a chief executive officer, and (2) define who the chief executive officer is, in situations (for example) when the primary official bears a different title or when a corporation has multiple chief executive officers. The Committee intends that, in every instance, the highest ranking corporate officer (regardless of title) sign the tax return.

The provision does not apply to the income tax returns of mutual funds; they are required to be signed as under present law.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for returns filed after the date of enactment.

1 Sec. 6062.

1 Sec. 7206.

1 Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 3571, the maximum fine for an individual convicted of a felony is $250,000.

1 The provision does, however, apply to the income tax returns of mutual fund management companies and advisors.

Provision as approved by the Senate Finance Committee in S. 476

A motion to waive germaneness and attach a modified Kyl-Cornyn attorneys fee bill to the tax package was defeated, 37-61. We had modified the bill so that it only applies to fees received after enactment, and so that it guarantees the tobacco lawyers $20,000 an hour (the bill wouldn't apply to their fees until they reach that level).

We didn't have much of a chance once it became clear that we couldn't get Hatch. His vote gives cover to all of the trial-lawyer friendly Republicans - we have no leverage with them without Hatch. And for another half dozen Republicans, Hatch is a bellwether on tort-reform issues. We also lost a few guys who are a mystery - Crapo of Idaho, Allen of Virginia. We didn't work the issue hard enough, and the other side worked it very hard. (Al D'Amato visited with at least two Senators that we know of to lobby against the bill. ATLA came out in full fury.)

We did everything that we could to get Hatch. And his staff was very helpful to us. (Kevin O'Scannlain in particular made heroic efforts to persuade Hatch to join us.) We even offered to carve out Hatch's friends from the bill's scope (distasteful as that would be). But he said that he wouldn't support the bill no matter how high an hourly rate the tobacco lawyers were guaranteed. The one ray of hope with Hatch is that he indicated that he wouldn't have voted to strike the provision if it had been in the Chairman's mark of the tax bill, as a part of the state aid package. Why this would have made a difference isn't entirely clear, but it does suggest some flexibility.

Hatch is still critical for any prospects for any version of this bill. Even if this got into a House tax bill in the future in some form, Hatch would almost certainly be on the conference.

One of the arguments that was used against us with some effect is that courts have approved the tobacco fees. This isn't true - no court has approved the actual MSA fee awards, and although courts approved the MSA itself (before the fee awards were made), they did so with a gun to their heads: the MSA has a provision reducing a state's MSA payments by 35% if that state's court strikes down part of the MSA. No state really had an option whether to join the MSA, either. All states' smokers pay the higher cigarette costs to fund the MSA, whether their state joins or not. The states' only option was whether or not to collect MSA payments.

In order to address factual arguments about whether courts have approved the fees and what they would do if they did review the fees, we are considering changing the bill to provide that, with regard to the tobacco MSA, any fee payment that has not yet been judicially reviewed shall be subject to review in federal court. The court would be directed to ask whether the fees are legal in light of the lawyers' ethical and fiduciary obligations, and would have discretion to return any improper fee payments to the states. (The MSA currently bars judicial review of fee awards.) Such a provision would at least preempt the argument that courts have approved the MSA awards. It might be worth voting the bill out of Finance with such a change if it can win over Hatch.

We had modified the bill so that it only applies to fees received after enactment, and so that it guarantees the tobacco lawyers $20,000 an hour (the bill wouldn't apply to their fees until they reach that level).

We didn't have much of a chance once it became clear that we couldn't get Hatch. His vote gives cover to all of the trial-lawyer friendly Republicans – we have no leverage with them without Hatch. And for another half dozen Republicans, Hatch is a bellwether on tort-reform issues. We also lost a few guys who are a mystery – Crapo of Idaho, Allen of Virginia. We didn't work the issue hard enough, and the other side worked it very hard. (Al D'Amato visited with at least two Senators that we know of to lobby against the bill. ATLA came out in full fury.)

We did everything that we could to get Hatch. And his staff was very helpful to us. (Kevin O'Scannlain in particular made heroic efforts to persuade Hatch to join us.) We even offered to carve out Hatch's friends from the bill's scope (distasteful as that would be). But he said that he wouldn't support the bill no matter how high an hourly rate the tobacco lawyers were guaranteed. The one ray of hope with Hatch is that he indicated that he wouldn't have voted to strike the provision if it had been in the Chairman's mark of the tax bill, as a part of the state aid package. Why this would have made a difference isn't entirely clear, but it does suggest some flexibility.

Hatch is still critical for any prospects for any version of this bill. Even if this got into a House tax bill in the future in some form, Hatch would almost certainly be on the conference.

One of the arguments that was used against us with some effect is that courts have approved the tobacco fees. This isn't true – no court has approved the actual MSA fee awards, and although courts approved the MSA itself (before the fee awards were made), they did so with a gun to their heads: the MSA has a provision reducing a state's MSA payments by 35% if that state's court strikes down part of the MSA. No state really had an option whether to join the MSA, either. All states' smokers pay the higher cigarette costs to fund the MSA, whether their state joins or not. The states' only option was whether or not to collect MSA payments.

In order to address factual arguments about whether courts have approved the fees and what they would do if they did review the fees, we are considering changing the bill to provide that, with regard to the tobacco MSA, any fee payment that has not yet been judicially reviewed shall be subject to review in federal court. The court would be directed to ask whether the fees are legal in light of the lawyers' ethical and fiduciary obligations, and would have discretion to return any improper fee payments to the states. (The MSA currently bars judicial review of fee awards.) Such a provision would at least preempt the argument that courts have approved the MSA awards. It might be worth voting the bill out of Finance with such a change if it can win over Hatch.

MEMORANDUM FOR BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

FROM: M. Edward Whelan III
Acting Assistant Attorney General

RE: 18 U.S.C. § 603

You have asked whether our 1995 opinion that 18 U.S.C. § 603 would not bar civilian executive-branch employees from making contributions to a President's authorized re-election campaign committee<sup>1</sup> retains continued vitality in light of the D.C. Circuit's opinion in Haddon v. Walters, 43 F.3d 1488 (D.C. Cir. 1995).

In our Section 603 Opinion, we construed the scope of the exception to section 603 coverage set forth in subsection (c) of section 603. Subsection (c) provides that the prohibition set forth in subsection (a) shall generally not apply to "any activity of an employee (as defined in section 7322(1) of title 5 ." 18 U.S.C. § 603(c). Section 7322(1) of title 5 of the United States Code in turn defines "employee" to mean (in relevant part) "any individual, other than the President and the Vice President, employed or holding office in . . . an Executive agency other than the General Accounting Office . . . but does not include a member of the uniformed services." 5 U.S.C. § 7322(1). We concluded that the subsection (c) exception "applies to the entire Executive Branch with the possible exception of members of the uniformed services." Section 603 Opinion at ___. Under this analysis, employees of the White House Office could make contributions to a President's authorized re-election campaign committee without violating section 603.

In Haddon, the D.C. Circuit ruled that the Executive Residence is not an "executive agency" within the meaning of 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-16. Section 2000e-16 proscribes (among other things) racial discrimination against employees in "executive agencies as defined in section 105 of Title 5." In the course of determining that the Executive Residence was not an "executive agency" within the meaning of section 105, the court offered reasoning that would appear equally applicable to the White House Office. See Haddon, 43 F.3d at 1489-90.

There is arguable tension between our Section 603 Opinion, which treats the White House Office as an "Executive agency" for purposes of 5 U.S.C. § 7322(1), and Haddon, which suggests that the White House Office is not an "Executive agency" for purposes of 5 U.S.C. § 105 (which definition, by its terms, is "[f]or the purpose of this title" -- i.e., title 5). For the following reasons, we think that the Section 603 Opinion continues to apply with full force.

First, the Section 603 Opinion was issued some four months after the ruling in Haddon. We are reliably informed that this Office was well aware of Haddon at the time the Section 603 Opinion was issued, and we therefore regard the omission of any discussion of Haddon in that opinion to be the result of a considered decision that Haddon was not relevant, rather than an oversight.

Second, there would have been good reason to regard Haddon as not relevant to the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 7322(1). If the White House Office is not an "Executive agency" under section 7322(1), then employees of the White House Office would be entirely free from the restrictions of the Hatch Act Reform Amendments [proper name??] and would be able to engage in all sorts of partisan political activity. [Add sentence why this would be anomalous.] Moreover, the definition of "employee" in section 7322(1) expressly excludes "the President and the Vice President." There would be no purpose to this exclusion if the President and Vice President were not otherwise understood to be "holding office in . . . an Executive agency." In addition, the exception to the substantive restriction on political activities in 5 U.S.C. § 7324(a) applies to certain employees who are "paid from an appropriation for the Executive Office of the President." Id. 7324(b)(2)(B)(1). This provision appears to presuppose that employees paid by the Executive Office of the President (which includes employees of the White House Office) are employees of an "Executive agency" under section 7322(1).

Third, for similar reasons, even if Haddon were given a robust reading, the rule of lenity would appear to require that the section 603(c) exception be construed to apply to all civilian executive-branch employees. [add cite]

Just received a heads up call from Hill staff that they have heard that Allen will put the below amendment on State Authorization, which I gather is being marked up on Wed. Looks to me like the amendment would expand the definition of "blocked asset" under TRIA to include property/assets licensed and regulated. I think that this means that the regulated and licensed assets of separate entities would be available to pay the judgments against states. Strikes me as a very bad idea and one that we should oppose. I know that State is already doing points in opposition -- they think that it would make it difficult for state owned businesses of the new Iraqi government to do business here -- that any assets they brought into the US that were subject to license or regulation could be seized to pay for the wrongs of the old regime. I assume that State will take the first steps in opposing, though we may well get asked to help.

By Alberto Gonzales

On May 9, President Bush addressed the American people from the Rose Garden on the subject of judicial nominees. The process, he explained, is broken. In the past three administrations, too many nominees to the federal appeals courts have languished for years without a vote; other nominees never received votes at all. The president called for the Senate to perform its constitutional responsibility to hold timely up or down votes on judicial nominees. That should hold, he emphasized, no matter who is president or which party controls the Senate.

Democrat Leader Tom Daschle quickly responded to the president's call by claiming that the Senate's judicial confirmation process "ain't broke." We respectfully disagree.

To begin with, Sen. Daschle's statements are flatly inconsistent with the views of many other Democrat senators. For example:

* New York Sen. Chuck Schumer in his April 30 letter to the president stated that he "could not agree more" with President Bush that the process is "broken" and that we are in a "vicious cycle" of "delayed" confirmations.

* California Sen. Diane Feinstein in her May 5 letter to the president stated that she believes the judicial confirmation process is "going in the wrong direction" and is potentially "spiral\[\ing\] out of control."

* Arkansas Sen. Mark Pryor in his April 30 letter to Tennessee Sen. Bill Frist agreed-together with all 10 of the new senators-that the "judicial confirmation process is broken and needs to be fixed" and that the "United States Senate needs a fresh start."

* Georgia Sen. Zell Miller in his May 9 statements to the media said the Senate was becoming the "world's greatest obstructionist body" because a minority of senators was denying votes on judicial nominees.

These Democrat senators are not alone. Speaking on behalf of the federal judiciary, Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist said in January that the judicial confirmation process does not work as it should. The American Bar Association made the same point last August.

The Senate's actions in the last two years amply demonstrate the problems in the process. Senate Democrats are currently engaged in unprecedented simultaneous filibusters to block votes on Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen-nominees who have the support of a majority of senators and whose nomination have been pending for more than two years without a vote. More filibusters are apparently likely, according to Democrat senators.

The filibusters are occurring despite statements like Sen. Daschle's on Oct. 5, 1999 that "I find it simply baffling that a Senator would vote against even voting on a judicial nomination."

Beyond the filibusters, some senators are seeking access to confidential Justice Department information never before demanded for appeals-court nominees even though every living former solicitor general including four Democrats opposes this request as harmful to the U.S. What's more, these senators are demanding such memos only for select nominees like Mr. Estrada and not for similarly situated nominees like John Roberts-even though both men have spent their careers as advocates for clients, including for the U.S., and were nominated to the same D.C. Circuit Court.

In addition, by demanding answers to questions about nominees' personal views on legal questions, some senators are threatening to compromise judicial independence, as Justice Anthony Kennedy recently warned and as justices like Ruth Bader Ginsburg have explained in the past.

The overall delays in holding hearings and votes on appeals-court nominees have also risen to new and extraordinary levels: The 107th Congress was the least efficient in modern history in holding hearings and votes on appeals court nominations, according to a recent independent study by leading judicial historian Sheldon Goldman. In this presidency, more appeals-court nominees have had to wait at least a year for a hearing than in the last 50 years combined. Today, as a result of these delays, 12% of the federal appeals-court seats are vacant, and 9% are classified as judicial emergencies.

As President Bush has repeatedly explained since June 2000 when President Clinton was still in office, excessive delays in the judicial confirmation process need to be corrected. The delays harm the courts and the American people, and deter good people from being willing to be considered for service on the bench.

The solution to the problem should be very simple. As the ABA said, "Vote them up or down, but don't hang them out to dry."

A system with timely up or down votes for all nominees is fair to all senators, allowing each to have his voice heard and vote counted. It also is fair to the president, the judiciary, the nominees, and the American people who depend on a fully staffed judiciary. As Senator Bob Graham said in 1991, "I consider it a judicial emergency when a judgeship is vacant for one day more than necessary." A Senate majority vote is the approach that our Founders established in the Constitution and that the Senate has followed for most of the nation's history.

The judicial confirmation system will remain broken and subject to abuse until judicial nominees are ensured a prompt up or down vote within a reasonable and set time after nomination. It is time for the Senate to do so for the benefit of the country.

[SHIRT]Mr. Gonzales is counsel to the president.

Bush's Supreme Challenge

With a court retirement likely, Al Gonzales is a Bush favorite. But is that enough?

By JOHN F. DICKERSON AND VIVECA NOVAK

Even for a White House in which staff members pride themselves on being low-key, Alberto Gonzales is inconspicuous. The flashiest thing he has done recently is briefly regrow his mustache. And yet the modest, Harvard-educated lawyer has a riveting story. The son of migrant workers in Texas, he grew up in a house his dad built, sharing two bedrooms with seven siblings. With no running hot water, the family boiled their bathwater on the stove. No phone meant that Gonzales had to walk to the corner pay phone to call his friends. Even the town's name was Humble. Gonzales, 47, has all the traits of the people George W. Bush brought up from Austin - loyalty, discretion and self-effacement - but his personal history is what really captures the President. "It isn't that Waspy 'Isn't that lovely?' kind of thing," says a source close to Gonzales, "but something the President feels in his heart and soul. He gets emotional about it."

Bush has an almost mystical faith in his ability to take the measure of people by looking them in the eye. Within the next few months, he may be measuring some candidates for a long black robe. It is almost certain that by the end of June, when the Supreme Court adjourns for summer recess, at least one Justice will have announced his or her retirement. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 79, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, have expressed a desire to leave. Rehnquist has serious back trouble, and O'Connor would like to return to Arizona with her husband. Both want a Republican President to name their replacement, and they know that retiring in 2004, an election year, would provoke a confirmation storm that could keep the court in limbo for months. Then there's the wild card, John Paul Stevens, 83, a liberal who is likely to stay but is the court's oldest member.

Among the many names floated for the post, no candidate has the President's trust like Gonzales. But the irony is that Bush may have a harder time selling his first choice to his allies than to his antagonists. Democrats, who are locked in a pitched battle with the White House over lower-court nominations, would find it tough to block the first Hispanic nominee to the high court, who has a short and unrevealing record on the bench. They might give him a hard time as payback for his treatment of them while he was White House counsel, but a rejection would play badly with Hispanic voters, whom the Democrats are eager to court.

For conservative Republicans, however, Gonzales is not even on the top10 list. They crave a Justice who is strict and outspoken on core conservative issues, namely abortion and affirmative action, and for them Gonzales is too much of a cipher, perhaps too moderate. "To Bush's core constituency," says Phyllis Schlafly, president of the conservative action group the Eagle Forum, "the appointment to the Supreme Court ranks as the No. 1 issue that they care about. Bush went through the campaign saying his favorite Justices were [Antonin] Scalia and [Clarence] Thomas. We are not going to put up with another [David] Souter." Bush the elder's first Supreme Court pick was Souter, and the fact that he has turned out to be a more liberal Justice than anyone expected deeply upsets conservatives.

The fuss may seem a little curious, given that Bush's nominations to the lower courts have been so solidly planted on the right. In fact, some skeptical conservatives believe that Bush has been true blue on the lower courts in order to pave the way for nominating the more moderate Gonzales. And perhaps to burnish his conservative credentials, Gonzales has helped select and then sell these judicial nominees. He has personally met nearly all the candidates for district and appellate seats and says they are never asked their opinions on any hot-button issues.

Overall, 124 of Bush's judicial nominations have been approved, and the judiciary has its lowest vacancy rate in 13 years. But those numbers belie the intensity of the struggle over the White House selections. Senate Democrats have in recent months filibustered two nominees for appellate-court seats: Priscilla Owen, who is fiercely antiabortion, and Miguel Estrada, who has given Senators too little information about how or what he thinks. Republicans are irate and are considering trying to bar filibusters of judicial nominations.

Despite the laurels Bush wins from his base for seeding the lower courts with judges it considers ideologically correct, the Supreme Court pick is seen in a different league. "It doesn't do any good to pick good lower-court guys and throw the Supreme Court" to a moderate, says conservative activist Grover Norquist. The Supreme Court is the Holy Grail for the right and not to be bargained or traded away. The firmness of conservatives on the high court casts some doubt on one option that White House strategists are considering: elevating Scalia to Chief Justice if Rehnquist leaves, thereby earning enough credit with the right to put Gonzales in the vacancy.

So what's the problem with unassuming Al? Pro-life advocates believe that if the right jurist replaces either O'Connor or Stevens, the court will finally have a chance to overturn Roe v. Wade, the 1973 ruling that established the right to have an abortion. Though Gonzales' views on the matter are not known, opponents cite his vote - and the concurring opinion he wrote - as a Texas Supreme Court judge allowing a girl to use a bypass provision of a state parental notification to get an abortion. "Pro-life conservatives will oppose him for that," says Terry Jeffrey, editor of Human Events, a conservative magazine.

Gonzales opponents also see the White House counsel as having a hidden hand in what they regard as the President's too soft position on the Michigan affirmative-action case. For that case, the White House filed a Supreme Court brief opposing the University of Michigan's admissions program but did not push to end affirmative action outright. And Gonzales did not help himself with a speech to a group of Evangelical leaders last year in which he did not strongly call for reversing Roe. The rock ribbed just find him squishy. "He is the counsel to a conservative President rather than a conservative counsel to the President," says Clint Bolick, vice president of the libertarian Institute for Justice.

The judge's defenders argue that he has had a strong hand in many issues that have pleased the Republican base: the order setting up military tribunals to try suspected terrorists, the fight with Congress over releasing information about Dick Cheney's energy task force and ending the American Bar Association's role in rating potential judicial nominees. More important, they point out, he's not a legal activist but a strict constructionist - one of the sacred judicial tenets of conservatives. "He was ruling on the existing statute, not legislating," a conservative Washington lawyer says of the Texas abortion ruling. "We've complained about legislating from the bench for years. We can't now start doing it ourselves." On affirmative action, top White House aides say Gonzales was not pushing his own views but finding the legal rationale for what the President believes, which is that race should be a factor in hiring but not the deciding one. It's a rule Bush believes he applied to Gonzales back in 1995 for the first of four jobs that Bush has given him. "Of course it mattered what his ethnicity is," said Bush when he appointed Gonzales to the Texas Supreme Court, "but first and foremost, what mattered is, I've got great confidence in Al. I know him well. He's a good friend."

Gonzales' resume isn't going to provide much fodder for conservatives - or liberals, for that matter - looking to deep-six Bush's close ally. He was a pro-business jurist in Texas for two years but no ideologue on social issues. He spent 13 years at Enron's law firm, Vinson & Elkins, doing deals in the go-go Houston of the 1980s but before the controversial Enron transactions took place. He was generally known as a stick-to-the-law kind of attorney in Bush's office. "Very seldom, if ever, did I hear his personal views on issues," said Terral Smith, who worked with Gonzales in Austin. "He was very careful in staff meetings to stay within the law."

Why should conservative dissent worry a President who is so wildly popular with members of his party? If the President isn't good enough for them, what are they going to do - sign on with Howard Dean? The answer is simple - and plenty scary for the White House. "We'll stay home," says Schlafly.

That is not an idle threat. Since arriving in Washington, political adviser Karl Rove has pointed out that 4 million Evangelicals who voted for Republicans in the G.O.P. congressional rout of 1994 stayed home in 2000, contributing to the closest election in modern history. Bush's displays of faith have brought many of those voters back into the fold, but they are still alert for an apostasy. Rove also wants to attract Hispanic voters. In the case of a Gonzales nomination, his two aims could clash.

Ultimately, what Gonzales has going for him is that Bush has looked him in the eye for years and liked what he has seen. He also seems to like what his support for Gonzales seems to say about himself: that the aristocratic President is an egalitarian guy capable of rewarding up-by-the-bootstraps achievement. All this may be important enough to Bush that he's willing to take some political heat for his loyal pal, whose life story he cited in his second inaugural address as Governor of Texas. "I think of my friend Al Gonzales, recently sworn in as a supreme-court justice," Bush said back in 1999. "His parents reared eight children in a two-bedroom house in Houston. They sacrificed so that their children would have a chance to succeed. Al Gonzales has realized their dream." They are words one can imagine hearing again this summer in the Rose Garden if Bush decides to make another dream come true.

Bush's displays of faith have brought many of those voters back into the fold, but they are still alert for an apostasy. Rove also wants to attract Hispanic voters. In the case of a Gonzales nomination, his two aims could clash.

Ultimately, what Gonzales has going for him is that Bush has looked him in the eye for years and liked what he has seen. He also seems to like what his support for Gonzales seems to say about himself: that the aristocratic President is an egalitarian guy capable of rewarding up-by-the-bootstraps achievement. All this may be important enough to Bush that he's willing to take some political heat for his loyal pal, whose life story he cited in his second inaugural address as Governor of Texas. "I think of my friend Al Gonzales, recently sworn in as a supreme court justice," Bush said back in 1999. "His parents reared eight children in a two-bedroom house in Houston. They sacrificed so that their children would have a chance to succeed. Al Gonzales has realized their dream." They are words one can imagine hearing again this summer in the Rose Garden if Bush decides to make another dream come true.

Bush's Supreme Challenge

With a court retirement likely, Al Gonzales is a Bush favorite. But is that enough?

By JOHN F. DICKERSON AND VIVECA NOVAK

Even for a White House in which staff members pride themselves on being low-key, Alberto Gonzales is inconspicuous. The flashiest thing he has done recently is briefly regrow his mustache. And yet the modest, Harvard-educated lawyer has a riveting story. The son of migrant workers in Texas, he grew up in a house his dad built, sharing two bedrooms with seven siblings. With no running hot water, the family boiled their bathwater on the stove. No phone meant that Gonzales had to walk to the corner pay phone to call his friends. Even the town's name was Humble. Gonzales, 47, has all the traits of the people George W. Bush brought up from Austin - loyalty, discretion and self-effacement - but his personal history is what really captures the President. "It isn't that Waspy 'Isn't that lovely?' kind of thing," says a source close to Gonzales, "but something the President feels in his heart and soul. He gets emotional about it."

REV_00396351

Bush has an almost mystical faith in his ability to take the measure of people by looking them in the eye. Within the next few months, he may be measuring some candidates for a long black robe. It is almost certain that by the end of June, when the Supreme Court adjourns for summer recess, at least one Justice will have announced his or her retirement. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, 79, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, have expressed a desire to leave. Rehnquist has serious back trouble, and O'Connor would like to return to Arizona with her husband. Both want a Republican President to name their replacement, and they know that retiring in 2004, an election year, would provoke a confirmation storm that could keep the court in limbo for months. Then there's the wild card, John Paul Stevens, 83, a liberal who is likely to stay but is the court's oldest member.

Among the many names floated for the post, no candidate has the President's trust like Gonzales. But the irony is that Bush may have a harder time selling his first choice to his allies than to his antagonists. Democrats, who are locked in a pitched battle with the White House over lower-court nominations, would find it tough to block the first Hispanic nominee to the high court, who has a short and unrevealing record on the bench. They might give him a hard time as payback for his treatment of them while he was White House counsel, but a rejection would play badly with Hispanic voters, whom the Democrats are eager to court.

For conservative Republicans, however, Gonzales is not even on the top10 list. They crave a Justice who is strict and outspoken on core conservative issues, namely abortion and affirmative action, and for them Gonzales is too much of a cipher, perhaps too moderate. "To Bush's core constituency," says Phyllis Schlafly, president of the conservative action group the Eagle Forum, "the appointment to the Supreme Court ranks as the No. 1 issue that they care about. Bush went through the campaign saying his favorite Justices were [Antonin] Scalia and [Clarence] Thomas. We are not going to put up with another [David] Souter." Bush the elder's first Supreme Court pick was Souter, and the fact that he has turned out to be a more liberal Justice than anyone expected deeply upsets conservatives.

The fuss may seem a little curious, given that Bush's nominations to the lower courts have been so solidly planted on the right. In fact, some skeptical conservatives believe that Bush has been true blue on the lower courts in order to pave the way for nominating the more moderate Gonzales. And perhaps to burnish his conservative credentials, Gonzales has helped select and then sell these judicial nominees. He has personally met nearly all the candidates for district and appellate seats and says they are never asked their opinions on any hot-button issues.

Overall, 124 of Bush's judicial nominations have been approved, and the judiciary has its lowest vacancy rate in 13 years. But those numbers belie the intensity of the struggle over the White House selections. Senate Democrats have in recent months filibustered two nominees for appellate-court seats: Priscilla Owen, who is fiercely antiabortion, and Miguel Estrada, who has given Senators too little information about how or what he thinks. Republicans are irate and are considering trying to bar filibusters of judicial nominations.

Despite the laurels Bush wins from his base for seeding the lower courts with judges it considers ideologically correct, the Supreme Court pick is seen in a different league. "It doesn't do any good to pick good lower-court guys and throw the Supreme Court" to a moderate, says conservative activist Grover Norquist. The Supreme Court is the Holy Grail for the right and not to be bargained or traded away. The firmness of conservatives on the high court casts some doubt on one option that White House strategists are considering: elevating Scalia to Chief Justice if Rehnquist leaves, thereby earning enough credit with the right to put Gonzales in the vacancy.

So what's the problem with unassuming Al? Pro-life advocates believe that if the right jurist replaces either O'Connor or Stevens, the court will finally have a chance to overturn Roe v. Wade, the 1973 ruling that established the right to have an abortion. Though Gonzales' views on the matter are not known, opponents cite his vote - and the concurring opinion he wrote - as a Texas Supreme Court judge allowing a girl to use a bypass provision of a state parental notification to get an abortion. "Pro-life conservatives will oppose him for that," says Terry Jeffrey, editor of Human Events, a conservative magazine.

Gonzales opponents also see the White House counsel as having a hidden hand in what they regard as the President's too soft position on the Michigan affirmative-action case. For that case, the White House filed a Supreme Court brief opposing the University of Michigan's admissions program but did not push to end affirmative action outright. And Gonzales did not help himself with a speech to a group of Evangelical leaders last year in which he did not strongly call for reversing Roe. The rock ribbed just find him squishy. "He is the counsel to a conservative President rather than a conservative counsel to the President," says Clint Bolick, vice president of the libertarian Institute for Justice.

The judge's defenders argue that he has had a strong hand in many issues that have pleased the Republican base: the order setting up military tribunals to try suspected terrorists, the fight with Congress over releasing information about Dick Cheney's energy task force and ending the American Bar Association's role in rating potential judicial nominees. More important, they point out, he's not a legal activist but a strict constructionist - one of the sacred judicial tenets of conservatives. "He was ruling on the existing statute, not legislating," a conservative Washington lawyer says of the Texas abortion ruling. "We've complained about legislating from the bench for years. We can't now start doing it ourselves." On affirmative action, top White House aides say Gonzales was not pushing his own views but finding the legal rationale for what the President believes, which is that race should be a factor in hiring but not the deciding one. It's a rule Bush believes he applied to Gonzales back in 1995 for the first of four jobs that Bush has given him. "Of course it mattered what his ethnicity is," said Bush when he appointed Gonzales to the Texas Supreme Court, "but first and foremost, what mattered is, I've got great confidence in Al. I know him well. He's a good friend."

Gonzales' resume isn't going to provide much fodder for conservatives - or liberals, for that matter - looking to deep-six Bush's close ally. He was a pro-business jurist in Texas for two years but no ideologue on social issues. He spent 13 years at Enron's law firm, Vinson & Elkins, doing deals in the go-go Houston of the 1980s but before the controversial Enron transactions took place. He was generally known as a stick-to-the-law kind of attorney in Bush's office. "Very seldom, if ever, did I hear his personal views on issues," said Terral Smith, who worked with Gonzales in Austin. "He was very careful in staff meetings to stay within the law."

Why should conservative dissent worry a President who is so wildly popular with members of his party? If the President isn't good enough for them, what are they going to do - sign on with Howard Dean? The answer is simple - and plenty scary for the White House. "We'll stay home," says Schlafly.

That is not an idle threat. Since arriving in Washington, political adviser Karl Rove has pointed out that 4 million Evangelicals who voted for Republicans in the G.O.P. congressional rout of 1994 stayed home in 2000, contributing to the closest election in modern history. Bush's displays of faith have brought many of those voters back into the fold, but they are still alert for an apostasy. Rove also wants to attract Hispanic voters. In the case of a Gonzales nomination, his two aims could clash.

Ultimately, what Gonzales has going for him is that Bush has looked him in the eye for years and liked what he has seen. He also seems to like what his support for Gonzales seems to say about himself: that the aristocratic President is an egalitarian guy capable of rewarding up-by-the-bootstraps achievement. All this may be important enough to Bush that he's willing to take some political heat for his loyal pal, whose life story he cited in his second inaugural address as Governor of Texas. NATIONAL MARITIME DAY, 2003

- - - - -

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

Today, as in the past, America depends on our maritime services to help ensure our security, protect our interests, promote our prosperity, and advance the universal hope of freedom. We honor the service and proud history of our merchant mariners and also recognize their important contributions in strengthening our economy through their work in the maritime transportation industry.

For generations, merchant marines and commercial sailors have assisted in the defense of our Nation. Most recently, more than 5,000 merchant mariners supported Operations Enduring Freedom and Iraqi Freedom by serving aboard 157 ships moving essential supplies to our troops. As they continue to support our troops in the ongoing war on terror, their mission continues to be dangerous and difficult, and remains vital to our efforts to defend the peace.

We also remember the vital role the Merchant Marine has played in past conflicts. More than 6,000 merchant mariners lost their lives during World War II, and more than 700 U.S. merchant marine ships fell to enemy action. Even before the United States declared war, merchant mariners were making perilous runs to Europe with desperately needed supplies. President Franklin Roosevelt, the first President to issue a proclamation honoring merchant mariners, wrote of their role during wartime: "They have delivered the goods when and where needed in every theater of operations and across every ocean in the biggest, the most difficult and dangerous transportation job ever undertaken." We are grateful for the contributions and sacrifices of America's merchant mariners before and after World War II, in Korea, Vietnam, the Persian Gulf, and around the world today.

An Unfair Double Standard

Last week, the Senate confirmed John Roberts to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Roberts has served as Principal Deputy Solicitor General of the United States, Associate Counsel to President Reagan, and Law Clerk to then-Justice Rehnquist. He has argued numerous cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and is widely recognized as one of the very best appellate lawyers in America. The American Bar Association unanimously rated him well qualified. In short, John Roberts exemplifies the kind of judge President Bush has nominated to the federal courts, and will be a distinguished judge on the D.C. Circuit.

The Senate's confirmation of Roberts is noteworthy for two additional reasons, however, both of which demonstrate the breakdown in the Senate confirmation process for federal appeals court nominees about which President Bush and many Senators of both parties have spoken in recent years.

First, the long road from Roberts' initial nomination to his confirmation vote was unfair and is impossible to defend. Roberts was first nominated to the D.C. Circuit in January 1992, yet did not receive a hearing before the end of President George H.W. Bush's term a year later. President George W. Bush then nominated Roberts on May 9, 2001, shortly after taking office. But the Senate Judiciary Committee did not hold a hearing on Roberts' nomination during the entire last Congress, even though no serious objections were lodged against him. President Bush then re-nominated Roberts on January 7, 2003. After two hearings this year, Roberts received his Senate vote on May 8, 2003 -- two years after nomination by President George W. Bush and more than 11 years after his first nomination. And when Roberts finally received that elusive vote, the Senate unanimously confirmed him, which makes the many years of delay all the more difficult to explain and justify.

The Senate's delays and denials of votes on appeals court nominees -- which have been too common in recent Administrations -- flout the intention of the Constitution and the tradition of the Senate. No judicial nominee ever should have to wait years for a vote in the Senate. So that the federal courts are fully staffed to do their jobs for the American people and in order to attract the best and brightest to judicial service, the Senate should fulfill its constitutional responsibility and ensure that every judicial nominee receives an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable period of time after nomination.

Second, the confirmation of John Roberts also dramatically exposes the double standard being applied to the President's other D.C. Circuit nominee, Miguel Estrada. The career records of Roberts and Estrada are strikingly similar. Both Estrada and Roberts were unanimously rated well-qualified by the ABA. Both have argued numerous cases before the Supreme Court, including as attorneys in the Solicitor General's office. Both have devoted large portions of their legal careers to public service and also been partners at major Washington law firms. Both have clerked for Supreme Court Justices. Both have the very strong support of prominent Democrat attorneys who served in high-ranking positions in the Clinton Administration. Neither has served previously as a judge or a professor and therefore neither has written widely about their personal views on legal issues. Both have served instead as superb and well-respected lawyers for public and private clients throughout their careers.

Despite the similarities between Roberts and Estrada, 45 Senate Democrats have treated them very differently. Senate Democrats never requested confidential case memoranda written by Roberts during his time in the Solicitor General's office. Yet they are insisting on reviewing memoranda written by Estrada during his tenure in the Solicitor General's office as a condition of ending a 3-month filibuster of his nomination. Consistent with judicial independence and the traditional practice of judicial nominees, Senate Democrats also did not demand that Roberts answer questions about his personal views on legal and policy issues before they voted on him. Yet these Senators are demanding that Estrada answer the same questions as a condition of ending the filibuster on Estrada.

The 45 Senate Democrats who are filibustering Estrada's nomination are applying a double standard. There is no rational or legitimate justification for the disparate treatment of Roberts and Estrada -- particularly by means of the extraordinary and unprecedented filibuster of Estrada, who would be the first Hispanic to serve on the D.C. Circuit and has the clear support of a majority of Senators. The President has asked that the Senate Democrats halt the filibuster and allow an up-or-down vote on Estrada. As the President has said, let each Senator vote as he or she thinks best, but end the double standard, stop the unfair treatment, and give the man a vote.

Brett:

I'm charged with classifying Ken's files and sending them to Records Management.

I've already found many files that are clearly government business and I've dealt with them accordingly. However, many files exist that are finance/RNC specific that don't necessarily fit into (how I interpret) the Presidential Records Act to cover, and we don't need to bring them to the new office.

What should /can we do with them?

Thanks
Napo

Dear Abel,

I got your email address from Nina Bishop and you are remembered at US Soccer as a soccer fan and someone who has helped our teams.

There is a good possibility that the USA will be hosting the 2003 Womens World Cup and I want to know if you are interested on serving on the host organizing committee. Service will involve some conference calls and helping with international relations.

We should know by this weekend if we are getting the Cup. If we do, we will need to hit the ground running and your help especially with government relations will be invaluable. I also left a voice mail in your office.

Looking forward to hearing from you.

Warmest regards,

Bob Contiguglia

Have you heard the latest on Specter? This is unbelievable. We sent them a very reasonable proposal two weeks ago, dealing with what we thought was his concern, we have heard nothing. Vogel and Abegg met with Specter staff today, were blunt with them, and the below email is the response they get. They don't even know what they want. Specter is jerking everyone around and stalling the one civil justice reform bill that has a chance of passing. This is incredibly unbelievable. You would almost think that Specter made a deal with ATLA, ?????

Consistent with the position agreed to at our meeting with the Chamber of Commerce, the Senator believes the "mass action" provision should be written so that the mass action provision would not apply in a state that has a class action procedure, such as the class action procedure found in Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

DOJ COMMENTS ON H.R. 2115, FLIGHT 100-CENTURY OF AVIATION REAUTHORIZATION ACT

DOJ has serious concerns with two sections of H.R. 2115, the "Flight 100 - Century of Aviation Reauthorization Act." First, the language in section 204(c) "Judicial Review" amends 49 U.S.C. 46110 to correct a separate problem identified by DOT, but does NOT include the change requested by TSA. This language, if adopted as written, will actually damage positions we are currently taking in litigation, as Congress will have reviewed and amended sec. 46110 without correcting TSA's problem. Accordingly, we strongly recommend that the following language --- which encompasses both the FAA's and TSA's amendments to 46110 --- be substituted for the existing language of section 204(c):

(c) Judicial Review. The first sentence of sec. 46110(a) is amended to replace "under this part" with "in whole or in part, pursuant to this part, Part B of this subtitle, or subsection (l) or (s) of section 114 of this title,"

Second, section 409 of the bill would promote coordination among competing airlines of their flight schedules - potentially including coordinated reduction in the number of flights - as a means of dealing with congestion at airports. While the Department appreciates the concerns over airport congestion and flight delays underlying section 409, and could support a provision similar to section 409 with appropriate limits and safeguards, great care must be taken in drafting such a provision to ensure that it does not exacerbate competitive problems in the airline industry, resulting in diminished service and higher prices for the traveling public.

Scheduling is a critical element of competition among airlines, and airport congestion during peak travel times can be a byproduct of airlines competing to offer a substantial number flights at convenient times, especially for business passengers who pay significantly higher fares. If legislation is enacted permitting airlines to coordinate reductions in output, they will predictably endeavor to do so in the manner most profitable to themselves. It should be expected that each airline will negotiate for an arrangement that maximizes its ability to obtain, exert, or protect its market power in its "home" or "hub" airports - indeed, they would have little incentive to do otherwise.

By their nature, output-limiting agreements among competitors result in inflated prices. In the current hub-and-spoke system, where most hub airports are dominated by a few airlines at most and a particular city-pair market is often more important to one airline than to another, airlines will have a strong incentive to make anticompetitive "trades" where each agrees to reduce service in markets important to the others. And they can accomplish this without overtly doing so, and without even communicating directly with each other.

Experience shows that this concern is well-founded. In 1992, the Department sued the major airlines for using their electronic tariff publishing system to negotiate similar "trades" on fares. That is, one carrier proposed fare increases in markets important to another carrier, in exchange for the other carrier making fare increases in markets important to the first carrier. Having condemned such coordinated fare increases, it would be ironic to encourage coordinated output reductions, which can be just as harmful to consumers, and could also lead to "spill-over" cartel effects into other aspects of conduct on which the airlines should be competing.

In spite of these general concerns, the Department recognizes the legitimacy and persistence of concerns regarding airport congestion and flight delays. The Department would not be opposed to a narrowly focused provision similar to section 409, on an experimental basis and limited to short-term ad hoc responses to adverse weather conditions that the Secretary or FAA Administrator anticipates will severely disrupt the airlines' ability to make use of normal airport capacity. The Department believes that the provision as currently drafted can and should be tightened in order to avoid undue risk of harm to competition. We would be happy to work with the Committee to accomplish this goal.

The attached piece from today's Wall Street Journal makes a key point that we have stressed with the media about the meaning of the State Farm case and its progeny: plaintiffs' attorneys can no longer obtain high punitive damage awards by vilifying a defendant and its general practices. Punitive damage proof must be returned to its traditional focus and purpose: what wrong was done to a particular plaintiff. Now, this is an interpretation of the State Farm case, and the awards that have been subsequently vacated by the Supreme Court in other cases, but I want lower courts to appreciate the State Farm in the way it is described in the Journal today.

Ford Damage Cases Are Remanded

By ROBERT S. GREENBERGER

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court, in an important action underscoring its distaste for hefty punitive damage awards, ordered lower courts to reconsider two multimillion-dollar judgments against Ford Motor Co.

Ford had challenged punitive awards in two cases in state courts—$290 million in a California court and $15 million in Kentucky. Both exceeded the single-digit ratio of punitive-to-compensatory damages that the high court suggested was appropriate in an April case it cited in the remand order. Punitive damages are supposed to punish defendants and deter similar behavior; compensatory damages compensate victims for actual losses.

The action is part of a much bigger trend: After decades of trying, lobbyists and lawyers for American businesses are making quiet but steady gains in the battle to roll back hefty punitive-damage awards. "The stakes are huge for business," said Robin Conrad, senior vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's litigation arm.

The Supreme Court's powerful signal is being picked up in courthouses and state legislatures across the nation, lawyers and other experts say. Driving the trend, they say, are rising medical costs, recent Republican electoral victories in state legislatures and the crisis over asbestos litigation, which has driven numerous companies out of business.

The American Tort Reform Association, a pro-business group, says that there are serious efforts to cap punitive damages under way in Texas, Colorado, Idaho, South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas, Missouri and elsewhere.

In the April case, the Supreme Court struck down as excessive a $145 million punitive-damages award against State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co., a case that resulted in $1 million in compensatory damages. The justices said the sheer size of the punitive award, which was calculated by taking into account State Farm's net worth, violated the Constitution guarantee of due process. Justice Anthony Kennedy, writing for the majority, said, "the wealth of a defendant cannot justify an otherwise unconstitutional punitive damages award."

The ruling ended a string of cases in which the Supreme Court had often been vague in such rulings—prompting a number of state courts to ignore limits when setting punitive damages. "Now, there is a much more crisp line," said Victor Schwartz, a Washington lawyer who works to lower such awards. "The courts are being instructed to focus on what happened to an individual plaintiff, not put an entire industry on trial."

The court's actions on the Ford cases yesterday were significant for another reason. The State Farm case was about economic loss suffered by the plaintiffs. Both Ford cases concern product liability and personal injury. The high court was making clear that the guidelines that it set in State Farm applied as well to other kinds of litigation.

Plaintiff's lawyers said yesterday's ruling, while significant, didn't represent a total defeat. C. Tab Turner, a Little Rock, Ark., trial lawyer, said the vast majority of cases are settled before a judge or jury ever rules on punitive damages. Besides, he added, "everyone worked under the [assumption] that there is some limit to punitive damages, and we always guesstimated it was 10 to 15 times" actual damages. None of this has changed anything we do on a daily basis."

In a statement yesterday, Ford acknowledged the standard laid out in the State Farm case and said, "we believe [the compensatory and punitive awards] will be substantially reduced or eliminated in the next stage of the proceedings."

The ruling will give more leverage to defendants in massive tort cases such as asbestos litigation, where outraged juries have routinely handed out huge punitive damages to punish companies that they were persuaded knew about the harmful health effects of asbestos, but didn't protect workers. Earlier this year, a court in Madison County, Illinois, awarded $200 million in punitive damages to a single defendant, on top of $50 million in compensatory damages, in a case against U.S. Steel Corp. The case was later settled for an undisclosed amount.

While the Supreme Court's ruling may not reduce juries' inclination to award such damages at the trial level, it will spur more defendants to appeal those verdicts, with a better chance of having the awards reduced, says Richard Faulk, a Houston defense attorney specializing in asbestos cases. "There have been some very large punitive damage verdicts recently—and those sorts of results are going to be very carefully scrutinized by the appellate courts now."

The court's ruling may have an even stronger impact outside the courtroom, says Randy Maniloff, a Philadelphia attorney who represents insurers hit by asbestos and toxic-mold claims. Reducing the threat of huge punitive damages at trial will give defendants a stronger bargaining position in settlement talks. "If the courts will only uphold smaller punitive awards, then the size of the plaintiff's hammer at the settlement table is reduced," Mr. Maniloff says.

1. On 2003-18 and 2003-21, President Bush will not assert a privilege over those documents, so please make those available to the public.

2. Can you and Bill Leary coordinate about the re-classification of certain documents he identified wrt 2002-024? When that is completed, we can resolve that notice.

3. On the other, will keep you posted.

Brett, fyi, I wanted to check in with you about pending notices. Attached is the (fairly short) list of notices that have cleared the formers, and are pending only with you (one of which was just sent today).

In particular, it is my understanding that Bill Leary of the NSC has completed his review of the 1898 pages of declassified Reagan NSC records (NLMS 2002-024), and has determined that a couple of them should be reclassified. Can you now clear the remaining records, so we can release them?

Also, I was still unclear as to whether you were intending to take final action on the 74 pages (NLMS 2002-023), or were waiting on the court? (There does not appear to have been any public notice of our latest filing.)

Thanks for your attention on these notices.

Statement of the Asbestos Study Group Regarding Senator Hatch's Asbestos Reform Proposal

“Chairman Hatch’s asbestos reform proposal embodies the principles of fairness and justice for all sides in this debate. The Senator has outlined a plan that can ensure prompt and generous payments to the truly sick, while restoring certainty and sanity to a compensation system that is no longer sustainable. We congratulate him for his leadership and vision, and believe he has laid out a path that leads to consensus and legislative success at long last.

First as Chairman, and now as Ranking Member, Senator Leahy, in particular, has provided leadership and pivotal momentum on this matter. We stand ready to work through the issues that remain outstanding with Senator Leahy and his colleagues on the Committee. And as participants in the recent Asbestos Summits convened by Senator Dodd, we are eager to continue our dialogue with him, Senators DeWine, Voinovich, Carper, Nelson, and other Senators both on and off the Judiciary Committee.

As the Judiciary Committee process moves forward, we are committed to continuing our work with all the parties that the asbestos tragedy has touched – victims and workers, labor and business – in the same spirit of bipartisan cooperation that has resulted in so much progress to date.”

Statement of the Asbestos Study Group Regarding Senator Hatch's Asbestos Reform Proposal

“Chairman Hatch’s asbestos reform proposal embodies the principles of fairness and justice for all sides in this debate. The Senator has outlined a plan that can ensure prompt and generous payments to the truly sick, while restoring certainty and sanity to a compensation system that is no longer sustainable. We congratulate him for his leadership and vision, and believe he has laid out a path that leads to consensus and legislative success at long last.

First as Chairman, and now as Ranking Member, Senator Leahy, in particular, has provided leadership and pivotal momentum on this matter. We stand ready to work through the issues that remain outstanding with Senator Leahy and his colleagues on the Committee. And as participants in the recent Asbestos Summits convened by Senator Dodd, we are eager to continue our dialogue with him, Senators DeWine, Voinovich, Carper, Nelson, and other Senators both on and off the Judiciary Committee.

As the Judiciary Committee process moves forward, we are committed to continuing our work with all the parties that the asbestos tragedy has touched – victims and workers, labor and business – in the same spirit of bipartisan cooperation that has resulted in so much progress to date.”

In case you haven't already seen it, here is agreed language from BRT, NAM, and the Chamber on CEO tax signatures. They recognize it is late in the game, but wanted to put it in the mix. I assume they're shopping it with House and Senate leadership as well.

Tax Return

Mike, as you know, Section 332 of S. 1054, the Jobs and Growth Tax Act, requires the CEO to sign the principle tax return (Form 1120) or its equivalent. The sponsors of the provision believe that the filing of accurate tax returns is essential to the proper functioning of the tax system, and that requiring the chief executive officer (CEO) of a corporation to sign its corporate income tax return will elevate the level of care given to the preparation of those returns.

REV_00396990

The BRT does not oppose Sec. 332. However, we do believe it can be improved significantly in a way that strengthens the objectives of the sponsors without hampering the ability of CEOs to manage their companies. Specifically, we urge retaining the present-law signature requirement while adding a new requirement that the CEO sign, under penalties of perjury, a declaration concerning the corporation's Federal income tax return, as described as follows:

CEO DECLARATION

Under penalties of perjury, I declare that as Chief Executive Officer I have taken steps to ensure that this return, including accompanying schedules and statements, complies with the Internal Revenue Code; to the best of my knowledge and belief, this return is true, correct, and complete; and the officer signing this return did so under no compulsion to adopt any tax position with which such officer did not agree.

[For info: An authorized officer would continue to sign the present jurat on the Form 1120 that reads as follows: Under penalties of perjury, I declare that I have examined this return, including accompanying schedules and statements, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, it is true, correct, and complete.]

This alternative has the support of the U.S. Chamber and the National Association of Manufacturers. Further the FEI tax committee put the two proposals to a vote last week (see attachment) and I am told that the declaration approach won by a comfortable margin.

Consistent with the Senate's goal of accurate tax returns, the proposed change would retain the present-law requirement that an authorized officer sign the return, under penalties of perjury, so that the corporation can authorize an officer to sign the return who has the necessary tax expertise and detailed information about the corporation. At the same time, the proposed change reflects the need to elevate the level of care given by the authorized signing officer and other corporate employees in preparing accurate tax returns by specifying involvement by the CEO in significant aspects of the return.

Whereas under present law the income tax return of a corporation must be signed by either the president, the vice-president, the treasurer, the assistant treasurer, the chief accounting officer, or any other officer of the corporation authorized by the corporation to sign the return, and whereas under Sec. 322 only the CEO is required to sign the principle return, under the proposed alternative accountability is improve by doing both. Further, this will improve accuracy because the chief tax officer is much more qualified to know what's in the tax return. The CEO's job is to run the company, not the tax department. The more time he/she spends examining and the tax return and its accompanying schedules, the less time he/she has to effectively run the company.

Thanks for considering this proposal.

Topic: Call for Vote on CEO Certification Issue

As Joe Luby mentioned in a memo you received yesterday, the Senate Finance Committee reported out their Jobs and Growth package last week. Section 332 of the bill contains the CEO certification requirement. However, the JCT report accompanying the bill contains a footnote which reads as follows:

“Because the provision amends Section 6062, it applies only to the Form 1120 itself (or its equivalent) and any disclosures required under section 6662 or related provisions. It does not apply to any other schedules or attachments.”

Assuming the Senate goes to conference with this report language intact, we must now decide how we will continue to work this issue with the House Ways and Means Committee and the conference committee. I ask each member of the COT to complete the accompanying ballot by expressing a preference for one of the two options discussed below. Please email or fax your reply to me by 3:00 pm on Wednesday, May 14th.

Option #1: FEI’s COT will continue to advocate the position adopted by the JCT report, which calls for limiting the CEO signature requirement to one place on Form 1120.

Option #2: FEI’s COT will urge the House Ways and Means Committee to require CEOs to sign a declaration on the face of Form 1120 stating that the CEO has taken steps to ensure that the return, including accompanying statements and schedules, complies with the Internal Revenue Code.

Please respond via fax or email no later than 3:00 pm on Wednesday, May 14th. As you would expect, this legislation has been fast-tracked, with Congressional leaders promising to have a final bill ready for the President by the Memorial Day recess.

Kevin, hope you're well -- no doubt busy with the tax legislation!

Wanted to know if the WH has a position on Zell Miller's provision requiring CEO's to certify tax returns?

FEI has been working with the Senator's office to slightly modify his original provision which has been reflected in the JTC report. The Senator has been supportive of this modification. I've attached a copy of the legislative language. Basically, FEI proposes that the CEO's sign, only once, on the front of the consolidated tax return instead of having the sign each and every schedule.

My concern is that other business groups might try and kill this provision which I think could backfire on the Republicans. Our sense is that Zell Miller is not going to let this issue go -- he feels very strongly that CEO's sign returns just like "Joe six-packs". My worry is if the business community pushes too hard on this he might walk from the Conference which wouldn't do anyone any good.

I think that the FEI position is a good compromise because Miller gets what he wants, accountability by the CEO, yet it doesn't take up the amount of time that the original provision would require, which is what the business community wants.

When you get a second, let me know your thoughts.....

Current language of the Baucus Amendment

SEC. 722. SIGNING OF CORPORATE TAX RETURNS BY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6062 (relating to signing of corporation returns) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following new sentence: “The return of a corporation with respect to income shall be signed by the chief executive officer of such corporation (or other such officer of the corporation as the Secretary may designate if the corporation does not have a chief executive officer). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any return of a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to returns filed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SUGGESTED ALTERNATIVE:

SEC. 722. SIGNING OF CORPORATE TAX RETURNS BY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6062 (relating to signing of corporation returns) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following ~~at the beginning of that section:~~ “The annual Federal income tax return of a corporation required under section 6012(a)(1) shall be signed by the chief executive officer of such corporation (or other such officer of the corporation as the Secretary may designate if the corporation does not have a chief executive officer). The requirement of the preceding sentence shall be limited to the first page of the return requiring a signature. Such other returns, statements or documents required to be made under any provision of the internal revenue laws or regulations shall be signed by the president, vice-president, treasurer, assistant treasurer, chief accounting officer or any other officer duly authorized to so act.” The preceding sentence shall not apply to any return of a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to returns filed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

JOINT TAX EXPLANATION

Chief Executive Officer Required To Sign Corporate Income Tax Returns (sec. 722 of the bill and sec. 6062 of the Code)

Present Law

The Code requires that the annual Federal income tax return of a corporation must be signed by either the president, the vice-president, the treasurer, the assistant treasurer, the chief accounting officer, or any other officer of the corporation authorized by the corporation to sign the return.

The Code also imposes a criminal penalty on any person who willfully signs any tax return under penalties of perjury that that person does not believe to be true and correct with respect to every material matter at the time of filing. If convicted, the person is guilty of a felony; the Code imposes a fine of not more than $100,000 ($500,000 in the case of a corporation) or imprisonment of not more than three years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

Reasons for Change

The Committee believes that the filing of accurate Federal tax returns is essential to the proper functioning of the tax system. The Committee believes that requiring that the chief executive officer of a corporation sign its annual Federal corporate income tax returns will elevate the level of care given to the preparation of those returns.

Explanation of Provision

The bill requires that the chief executive officer of a corporation sign the corporation's annual Federal income tax return (i.e., -Form 1120 of the corporation's income tax returns). If the corporation does not have a chief executive officer, the IRS may designate another officer of the corporation; otherwise, no other person is permitted to sign the income tax return of a corporation. The Committee intends that the IRS issue general guidance, such as a revenue procedure, to (1) address situations when a corporation does not have a chief executive officer, and (2) define who the chief executive officer is, in situations (for example) when the primary official bears a different title or when a corporation has multiple chief executive officers. The Committee intends that, in every instance, the highest ranking corporate officer (regardless of title) sign the tax return.

The provision does not apply to the income tax returns of mutual funds; they are required to be signed as under present law.

Effective Date

The provision is effective for returns filed after the date of enactment.

1 Sec. 6062.

1 Sec. 7206.

1 Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 3571, the maximum fine for an individual convicted of a felony is $250,000.

1 The provision does, however, apply to the income tax returns of mutual fund management companies and advisors.

Provision as approved by the Senate Finance Committee in S. 476

Kevin, hope you're well -- no doubt busy with the tax legislation!

Wanted to know if the WH has a position on Zell Miller's provision requiring CEO's to certify tax returns?

FEI has been working with the Senator's office to slightly modify his original provision which has been reflected in the JTC report. The Senator has been supportive of this modification. I've attached a copy of the legislative language. Basically, FEI proposes that the CEO's sign, only once, on the front of the consolidated tax return instead of having the sign each and every schedule.

My concern is that other business groups might try and kill this provision which I think could backfire on the Republicans. Our sense is that Zell Miller is not going to let this issue go -- he feels very strongly that CEO's sign returns just like "Joe six-packs". My worry is if the business community pushes too hard on this he might walk from the Conference which wouldn't do anyone any good.

I think that the FEI position is a good compromise because Miller gets what he wants, accountability by the CEO, yet it doesn't take up the amount of time that the original provision would require, which is what the business community wants.

When you get a second, let me know your thoughts.....

Brett -

Doug Turner of the Buffalo News has called looking - yet again - to speak with someone about judges/judicial nominations - he has made this request several times in the past - and then he has backed out - however - he just sat down with Sen. Schumer and discussed matters and would like to hear from someone from the WH about "Schumer's allegations."

Do you have time to speak with him on background today?

Consistent with the position agreed to at our meeting with the Chamber of Commerce, the Senator believes the "mass action" provision should be written so that the mass action provision would not apply in a state that has a class action procedure, such as the class action procedure found in Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

How about this as standard disclaimer language to be in the program at events for state and local candidates with P or VP where the state limits are above federal limits. ## The Great Media Gulp

By WILLIAM SAFIRE

ASHINGTON

The future formation of American public opinion has fallen into the lap of an ambitious 36-year-old lawyer whose name you never heard. On June 2, after deliberations conducted behind closed doors, he will decide the fate of media large and small, print and broadcast. No other decision made in Washington will more directly affect how you will be informed, persuaded and entertained.

His name is Kevin Martin. He and his wife, Catherine, now Vice President Dick Cheney's public affairs adviser, are the most puissant young "power couple" in the capital. He is one of three Republican members of the five-person Federal Communications Commission, and because he recently broke ranks with his chairman, Michael Powell (Colin's son), on a telecom controversy, this engaging North Carolinian has become the swing vote on the power play that has media moguls salivating.

The F.C.C. proposal remains officially secret to avoid public comment but was forced into the open by the two commission Democrats. It would end the ban in most cities of cross-ownership of television stations and newspapers, allowing such companies as The New York Times, Washington Post and Chicago Tribune to gobble up ever more electronic outlets. It would permit Viacom, Disney and AOL Time Warner to control TV stations with nearly half the national audience. In the largest cities, it would allow owners of "only" two TV stations to buy a third.

We've already seen what happened when the F.C.C. allowed the monopolization of local radio: today three companies own half the stations in America, delivering a homogenized product that neglects local news coverage and dictates music sales.

And the F.C.C. has abdicated enforcement of the "public interest" requirement in issuing licenses. Time was, broadcasters had to regularly reapply and show public-interest programming to earn continuance; now they mail the F.C.C. a postcard every eight years that nobody reads.

Ah, but aren't viewers and readers now blessed with a whole new world of hot competition through cable and the Internet? That's the shucks-we're-no-monopolists line that Rupert Murdoch will take today in testimony before the pussycats of John McCain's Senate Commerce Committee.

The answer is no. Many artists, consumers, musicians and journalists know that such protestations of cable and Internet competition by the huge dominators of content and communication are malarkey. The overwhelming amount of news and entertainment comes via broadcast and print. Putting those outlets in fewer and bigger hands profits the few at the cost of the many.

Does that sound un-conservative? Not to me. The concentration of power * political, corporate, media, cultural * should be anathema to conservatives. The diffusion of power through local control, thereby encouraging individual participation, is the essence of federalism and the greatest expression of democracy.

Why do we have more channels but fewer real choices today? Because the ownership of our means of communication is shrinking. Moguls glory in amalgamation, but more individuals than they realize resent the loss of local control and community identity.

We opponents of megamergers and cross-ownership are afflicted with what sociologists call "pluralistic ignorance." Libertarians pop off from what we assume to be the fringes of the left and right wings, but do not yet realize that we outnumber the exponents of the new collectivist efficiency.

That's why I march uncomfortably alongside CodePink Women for Peace and the National Rifle Association, between liberal Olympia Snowe and conservative Ted Stevens under the banner of "localism, competition and diversity of views." That's why, too, we resent the conflicted refusal of most networks, stations and their putative purchasers to report fully and in prime time on their owners' power grab scheduled for June 2.

Must broadcasters of news act only on behalf of the powerful broadcast lobby? Are they not obligated, in the long-forgotten "public interest," to call to the attention of viewers and readers the arrogance of a regulatory commission that will not hold extended public hearings on the most controversial decision in its history?

So much of our lives should not be in the hands of one swing-vote commissioner. Let's debate this out in the open, take polls, get the president on the record and turn up the heat.;;
