Regina: WELCOME ON BOARD!!!!!!! We are glad that you are here and I look forward to working with you. Let me and Tracy know if we can be of any assistance in any way. I also want you to meet my new PDASG Neil Gorsuch who also just started today. Although he will not have direct responsibility for OJP, he will be getting involved in literally everything that I do. He may give you and Tracy a call to come by and meet you and your Deputies. Robt.

Everyone:
Last night the Senate confirmed Regina Schofield as the new Assistant Attorney General for OJP. I know that Regina is eager to arrive and become part of the OJP team. She will bring great enthusiasm and leadership to the organization. If everything proceeds accordingly, Regina will start on Monday. I know that you will provide her the same welcome and support you did me.

In conjuction with Regina's arrival, I will have one less hat to wear. I will return to my office at Main Justice and continue my role as Deputy Associate Attorney General. As you know, in this role I will continue my interaction with OJP.

Thank you for your support, assistance, and good work during my time back at OJP. I appreciate your efforts, your commitment, and most importantly, your kindness.
Please feel free to stop by and see me down at Main Justice. The office information will be in the system.

Thanks and best wishes.

Subject: Invitation to AG from ABA Pres Robert Grey

Andy: Heads up. You have already received and are considering an invitation (letter dated Feb 28th with a follow-up letter dated May 16th) from the Chair of the ABA House of Delegates, Stephen Zack, to the AG to address the House of Delegates on either Mon or Tues Aug 8-9 at the ABA annual convention in Chicago. Robert Grey, the ABA Pres, called me yesterday and issued a SECOND invitation to the AG: this second one is to address the Opening Assembly on Sunday evening Aug 7th as the keynote speaker. The Opening Assembly is a general meeting of all members who attend the convention whereas the House of Delegates is the 546 elected local, state, and regional reps to the ABA, sort of a large policy-making body who pass resolutions, etc in the name of the ABA. The AG is a member of the House of Delegates by virtue of his office. The Opening Assembly will be a much larger group and will be held in the Chicago Auditorium. Grey is going to fax me a letter regarding the keynote speech invited and send on a hard copy to the AG. I got yesterday from your office a copy of the letter from Zack dated May 16th following up on the Feb 28th letter, and you have requested my rec on the AG's attendance. I would rec doing one or the other of the two invites, but not both. My preference would be for the AG to address the larger group, the Opening Assembly, on the Sunday and thereby reach more ABA members. It is probably a less hostile group that the House of Delegates. For planning purposes, promo materials, etc, Grey would like to know as soon as possible whether the AG can do either, or both, or none. Let me know what you would like for me to do, if anything, regarding these invites. Robt.

I'm over at State this morning through a noon luncheon. I'm in meetings all afternoon. I'm schedule over here through 1:30 today, but I'm hoping to be back to Main early - say about 1pm. Would that work? I'd have 30 min then at 1pm. If that doesn't work, late this afternoon at 5:30 would work.

WEEKLY REPORT OF THE ANTITRUST DIVISION:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

THROUGH: THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL
THROUGH: THE ASSOCIATE ATTORNEY GENERAL

FROM: R. Hewitt Pate
Assistant Attorney General
Antitrust Division

DATE: June 20, 2005

A. Next Week

· United States v. Irving Materials, Inc. ("IMI"); Daniel C. Butler; John Huggins; Fred R. "Pete" Irving; and Price Irving*: On June 29, the Division plans to file a one-count information against the defendants for fixing prices of ready mixed concrete in the Indianapolis metropolitan area from 2000 until 2004. The defendants have agreed to plead guilty and cooperate with the ongoing investigation. Fred "Pete" Irving is the president and CEO of IMI; his son Price Irving is the vice president of operations; Butler is the vice president of sales; and Huggins is a former executive vice president of IMI. IMI has agreed to pay a $29.2 million fine; Fred Irving has agreed to pay a $200,000 fine; Price Irving, Dan Butler, and John Huggins have each agreed to pay a $100,000 fine; and each individual defendant has also agreed to serve a five-month jail sentence and five months of home confinement. At the request of the U.S. Attorney and FBI offices in Indianapolis, the Division will participate in a press conference in Indianapolis on June 29 to announce the filing of the case.

· Cincinnati OB-GYNs/Federation of Physicians*: AAG Pate has authorized filing a complaint against the Federation of Physicians, one of its employees, and three OB-GYN physicians practicing in Cincinnati, Ohio. The Division believes that these parties orchestrated a conspiracy among numerous Cincinnati OB-GYNs to collectively negotiate their rates with insurers, in violation of Sherman Act § 1 and a 2002 consent decree that the Federation and the Division entered into to resolve a similar complaint against the Federation in Delaware. The purpose and effect of their collective pricing has been to increase reimbursements paid by insurers to providers of OB-GYN services in Cincinnati. The Division has negotiated a settlement with the three physicians, but does not expect the Federation or its employee to agree to settle before the complaint is filed.

The Division expects to file the complaint, as well as a proposed final judgment and proposed consent decree concerning the three settling physicians, within the next few weeks.

· United States v. Denstply International, Inc.*: In January 1999, the Division sued Dentsply (a company that produces and sells 75%-80% of the prefabricated artificial teeth used by dental laboratories to make dentures), challenging Dentsply's policy of forbidding independent dealers that sell Dentsply's teeth from also selling the teeth of rival manufacturers. The Division alleged that the exclusionary practice unlawfully maintained Dentsply's monopoly and violated Sherman Act §§ 1 and 2 and Clayton Act § 3. After a bench trial, the district court ruled for Dentsply on all counts. The government appealed the § 2 claim. In February of this year, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed the district court and concluded that Dentsply had monopoly power and that its policy of exclusive dealing violated the Sherman Act by thwarting rivals' attempts to threaten its monopoly. The court of appeals remanded with instructions to enter an injunction against Dentsply. Dentsply then petitioned for rehearing and rehearing en banc, which was denied. Jurisdiction has now returned to the district court to implement a remedy, and the Division is drafting a proposed final judgment.

· National Association of Realtors' Virtual Office Website Policy*: Staff has recommended that the Division bring a civil action under Sherman Act § 1 to enjoin the National Association of Realtors ("NAR") from requiring that its 800 affiliated multiple listing services ("MLSs") adopt its proposed policy regarding "virtual office websites" ("VOWs"), which make real estate listings available to customers through the Internet. Currently, any broker that belongs to an MLS may offer its customers access to the MLS's full complement of real estate listings on-line, via the broker's VOW. NAR had passed but not implemented a rule that would require all NAR-affiliated MLSs to allow any listing broker to prohibit a competing broker from making available on a VOW listings that the listing broker has contributed to the MLS. The Division and NAR have been holding settlement talks, and a decision to settle or litigate will be made by the end of June.

B. This Week

· United States v. Patrick J. Crowe III*: During the week of June 20, the Division intends to file a two-count information in the Northern District of Georgia charging Crowe, a former salesman for a Georgia-based chemical manufacturer, with participating in two conspiracies to defraud his former employer. Crowe has agreed to plead guilty to the charges and cooperate with the ongoing investigation. The Division will recommend at sentencing that the court impose a sentence of 12-18 months imprisonment, up to a $30,000 criminal fine, and order Crowe to pay over $52,000 in restitution.

C. Last Week

· United States v. Microsoft Corp.*: On June 6, the Division, along with the States and Microsoft, appeared in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia

DOJ_NMG_ 0144277

(Kollar-Kotelly, J.) for a status conference on Microsoft's compliance with the Final Judgment. This was the ninth of such conferences, which are part of an ongoing procedure established with the court to monitor and ensure full implementation of the Final Judgment. At the status conference, and in a joint report filed with the court on June 1, the Division reported primarily on three issues. First, the Division updated the court on the status of the Microsoft Communications Protocol Program ("MCPP"), including Microsoft's efforts to address concerns expressed by the Division and the Technical Committee ("TC") regarding the sufficiency of the documentation that the company provides to its MCPP licensees. Plaintiffs also reported on the status of two TC projects agreed to by Plaintiffs and Microsoft to resolve remaining documentation issues. Second, Plaintiffs and the company reported to the court on the progress that they have made to ensure that Microsoft's Windows XP and Service Pack 2 products satisfactorily honor users' middleware and default choices, as required by Sections III.C and III.H of the Final Judgment. Finally, Plaintiffs reported to the court about the discussions that have begun with Microsoft regarding the details of the company's forthcoming operating system ("Longhorn"), which are intended to ensure that the product complies fully with the terms of the Final Judgment.

- NASDAQ's Proposed Acquisition of Instinet*: On June 17, the Division issued Second Requests to the parties in its investigation of the proposed $1.88 billion acquisition of Instinet Group Inc., the institutional brokerage and electronic trading network controlled by the Reuters Group, by the Nasdaq Stock Market, Inc., the nation's second-largest equities market. The Division is investigating whether the combination of these two major equities trading venues is likely to lessen competition substantially, in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act. The Division is simultaneously investigating the proposed merger of the New York Stock Exchange, the nation's largest equity market, and Archipelago Holdings Inc., which operates the largest all-electronic stock market in the world. The Securities and Exchange Commission will conduct separate investigations of the two transactions as well.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

THROUGH: THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL
THROUGH: THE ASSOCIATE ATTORNEY GENERAL

FROM: R. Hewitt Pate
Assistant Attorney General
Antitrust Division

DATE: June 13, 2005

A. Long Range Events

· Potential Collusion Among Actuarial Consulting Firms*: The Division has been conducting a civil investigation into information exchanges among actuarial consulting firms that provide professional risk analysis services to public and private pension funds and other employee benefit plans. The investigation is focused on allegations that major actuarial consulting firms have exchanged competitively sensitive information and otherwise cooperated with each other about the use of contractual limitations of liability, which are important terms under which the firms enter into client engagements. The staff is reviewing proposed terms of settlement offered by key subjects of the investigation.

· Merger of America West and USAirways*: America West and USAirways propose to merge in a deal that will bring USAirways out of bankruptcy. In related transactions, Air Canada, Air Wisconsin, PAR Investments, and The Wellington Group will invest in the merged carrier. The main transaction raises few competitive issues, as USAirways operates primarily in the eastern U.S., and America West in the west, and Southwest Airlines is a significant competitor on the few nonstop overlap routes. Staff is currently discussing with the parties concerns about the presence of an Air Canada representative on the board of the merged carrier and the post-merger status of the USAirways/United codesharing alliance. The merger requires a number of additional approvals, including confirmation of the reorganization plan by the bankruptcy court, and do not expect to close until September.

· Proposed SBC Communications Inc. Acquisition of AT&T Corp.*: The Division is investigating the proposed $16 billion merger of SBC Communications Inc. and AT&T Corp. The combined company would be the number one provider of wireless and business telecommunications services in the U.S., the number two provider of residential broadband services, and a leading provider of telephone-based Internet broadband access and residential long-distance services. The Division is reviewing the transaction to determine if it may substantially lessen competition in violation of Clayton Act § 7 and will work closely with the Federal Communications Commission and other government agencies in evaluating the merger. The Division's review will be completed before the expiration of the FCC's internal deadline in early September 2005. The Division has also been in contact with competition authorities in Mexico, who are investigating the transaction because of the significant interests the parties have in two of Mexico's three major service providers. The parties have stated they expect to close the transaction in the first half of 2006.

- Proposed Verizon Communications Acquisition of MCI*: The Division is investigating the proposed $6.8 billion merger of Verizon Communications, Inc. and MCI, Inc. MCI and Verizon are the third and fourth-largest providers of telephone services for enterprise customers in the country, respectively. If consummated, the transaction will create a new revenue leader in this market, surpassing current leaders AT&T and SBC. The Division is reviewing the transaction to determine if it may substantially lessen competition in violation of Clayton Act § 7 and will work closely with the Federal Communications Commission and other government agencies, including the European Commission, in evaluating the merger. The FCC expects to complete its review in late September 2005.

- Mergers in the Wireless Telecommunications Industry*: The Division is investigating the proposed $36 billion merger of Sprint Corp. and Nextel Communications, Inc., and Alltell Corporation's proposed $6 billion acquisition of Western Wireless Corporation. The Sprint/Nextel merger will create a wireless company with nearly 39 million customers, making it the nation's third-largest wireless carrier after Cingular Wireless and Verizon Wireless. The Alltell/Western transaction will create the nation's fifth largest wireless carrier, with over 10 million customers in 33 states and a further 1.6 million international customers in six other countries. The Division is reviewing the transactions to determine if either may substantially lessen competition in violation of Clayton Act § 7, and is working closely with the Federal Communications Commission, which is conducting its own investigations. The FCC expects to complete its reviews of the Alltell/Western and Sprint/Nextel transactions by the end of June and the middle of August, respectively. The Division is working to complete its investigations according to a similar schedule.

- National Association of Realtors' Virtual Office Website Policy*: Staff has recommended that the Division bring a civil action under Sherman Act § 1 to enjoin the National Association of Realtors ("NAR") from requiring that its 800 affiliated multiple listing services ("MLSs") adopt its proposed policy regarding "virtual office websites" ("VOWs"), which make real estate listings available to customers through the Internet. Currently, any broker that belongs to an MLS may offer its customers access to the MLS's full complement of real estate listings on-line, via the broker's VOW. NAR had passed but not implemented a rule that would require all NAR-affiliated MLSs to allow any listing broker to prohibit a competing broker from making available on a VOW listings that the listing broker has contributed to the MLS. The Division and NAR have been holding settlement talks, and a decision to settle or litigate will be made in the next few weeks.

B. Next Week

· United States v. Masaaki Ando a/k/a "Andy Ando"*: The Division plans to present a indictment on June 22 to a grand jury in the Western District of Kentucky charging Ando with obstruction of justice pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1512(c)(1) for document destruction during the Division's grand jury investigation of bid rigging and contract allocation among manufacturers of automotive brakes. Ando, a Japanese citizen, is the former president of brake manufacturer Ambrake Corporation of Elizabethtown, Kentucky, which is a joint venture between Delphi Corporation and Akebono Corporation North America. Ando has been suspended by Ambrake pending an internal investigation and has returned to Japan where he is working for a related company, Akebono Brake Industry Co., Ltd., although he travels to the United States frequently.

· United States v. Microsoft Corp.*: On June 6, the Division, along with the States and Microsoft, appeared in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia (Kollar-Kotelly, J.) for a status conference on Microsoft's compliance with the Final Judgment. This was the ninth of such conferences, which are part of an ongoing procedure established with the court to monitor and ensure full implementation of the Final Judgment. NEXT WEEK

- Trial on Asbestos Disposal Violations: Two defendants charged in a 16-count indictment with Clean Air Act and false statement violations related to an asbestos removal project in a low-income Virgin Islands neighborhood are scheduled for trial beginning June 20. Among other infractions, they are accused of falsely labeling asbestos as non-friable before sending it to Florida for disposal.

THIS WEEK

- Clean Air Act Settlement with Volkswagen: The Division will lodge a consent decree in connection with Volkswagen's failure to disclose promptly to the Environmental Protection Agency a defective component that increased emissions in 326,000 vehicles from model years 1999 to 2001. Volkswagen will pay a $1.1 million civil penalty and improve its reporting system. The affected vehicles were recalled voluntarily at a cost of over $26 million.

- Petroleum Refinery Initiative Settlements: The Division is working to finalize the latest settlements in this initiative. An agreement reached with Valero Refining Company would cover 14 facilities, the largest number in any settlement to date. Upon lodging this and a separate agreement with Sunoco covering 4 other refineries, the Division will have achieved settlements covering 72 refineries and 62% of domestic refining capacity.

LAST WEEK

- Supreme Court Decision in Submerged Lands Case: On June 6 the Supreme Court decided an original action in which the State of Alaska sought to quiet title to submerged lands. The Court granted summary judgment to the United States, finding that waters of the Alexander Archipelago do not constitute historic inland waters or juridical bays. The Court also found the United States retained title to submerged lands in Glacier Bay National Park on the date of Alaska statehood.

- Coal Bed Methane Project Enjoined: Plaintiffs in two related cases are challenging a Bureau of Land Management (BLM) decision to approve drilling applications and a development plan for the Tongue River Badger Hills coal bed methane project near Decker, Montana. On June 6 the district court granted summary judgment in favor of plaintiffs and enjoined operation of the project. The court held that its adverse decision several weeks ago regarding BLM's programmatic environmental impact statement required that it also find the site-specific assessment for this project invalid.

- Adverse Ruling in Columbia River Power System Dispute: On May 26 the District of Oregon entered summary judgment invalidating a National Marine Fisheries Service biological opinion under the Endangered Species Act for 14 federal dams on the Columbia and Snake Rivers. A hearing on plaintiffs' motion for injunctive relief was held June 10. Following the hearing, the court affirmatively enjoined the Corps of Engineers and Bureau of Reclamation to operate several of the dams to provide maximum spill to aid salmon smolt migration. However, the court denied a more sweeping request for enhanced flow. The relief granted would result in an estimated $67 million loss in power generation. The Division has requested Solicitor General authorization of an appeal from this order and an emergency stay request to the Ninth Circuit.

- Criminal Convictions in Clean Water Act Trial: A five-week trial in the Northern District of Alabama concluded June 10 with criminal convictions of three present and former McWane Inc. executives in connection with illegal discharges of process wastewater by an iron foundry. The defendants were charged with substantive violations and related conspiracy, false statement and obstruction counts.

Doug,
Hope all is well. Wanted to touch base with you and let you know that we have a new Principal Deputy Associate AG, Neil Gorsuch. Neil will be involved in the Monday afternoon meetings and in terrorism-related litigation matters overall for OASG. First thing's first, is there a particular level of clearance required to participate in the Monday afternoon meetings? Neil will have an interim clearance in short order, just wanted to double check with you. Next, where and exactly at what time are the Monday meetings? Maybe you could stop by Neil's office shortly before the next one for a quick introduction? (He is in Brian Boyle's old office). Thanks very much Doug. --Lou

Neil,
Here's what I did for my conflicts clearance. I sent Gloria Jenkins (Hew Pate's confidential assistant) a list of open matters I had with the Department. I didn't list all big clients because I don't think I'd necessarily be recused from a matter involving a former client if my firm did no work on that matter. For matters involving former clients I figured I could recuse myself on a case-by-case basis depending on the circumstances. I didn't list any private civil litigation matters that don't involve the Department for obvious reasons. (BTW, this is just my take on what my conflict obligations are, you may come down differently).

Gloria,

Here's a list of potentially open matters involving the Department that I worked on when I was at my firm. They were all with ATR. I've listed the firm's client next to the matter. Could you forward it to the right person? Thank you.

(1) Bathroom Fixtures investigation (American Standard Companies Inc.)
(2) Southern Powder River Basin Coal Transportation investigation (BNSF Railway Co.)
(3) Publication Papers investigation (Bowater Inc.)
(4) ATPCo investigation (United Air Lines)

Subject: Tentative Meet and Greet with White House Counsel's Office

In light of the fact that Robert is in town until Thurs late afternoon, AND in light of the fact that the AG meeting is cancelled for that day, this is a good time to piggy back on the 8:15 White House Counsel staff meeting on Thursday 6/16 for a meet and greet session. We would arrive at 8:45 and do a meet and greet with Bill Kelly, the associate counsels, and most likely Harriet Miers. Counsel's office is interested in doing this on Thursday if we are, but they are also amenable to other dates as the regularly convene for their staff meetings. I didn't see any conflicts on the RDM calendar. Any objections?

Let's put this as tentative on Robert's and Neil's calendars for Thurs. morning and once I hear from Robert, I will solidify with Counsel's office, or try to set up at a later date.

Peter,
JMD hesistated about letting CIV see the OIL study only because MPS did the study very quickly with an eye to pre-decisional use by leadership. They didn't want broader dissemination of the document without clearance. We're, of course, fine with CIV seeing it. Because of the some of the assumptions used in the study, JMD suggested having a meeting with CIV and OASG/ODAG/OAG to review and discuss MPS's conclusions, and to consider whether further study is warranted. We can set that up if you agree.

Bob I don't know if there's anyone on your team who tracks these issues related to terrorism risk insurance, but in any event pass this along, fyi.

On a completely unrelated matter, hopefully you've long since heard about how your decision to lend Logan Sawyer to us over at the White House utterly changed his life, and not only b/c he's now well along in his efforts to become a professor of law. In August he'll be marrying Shelley Reese, an exceptional UVA grad now at DHS, who Logan first met at the Homeland Security Council during the time he served in the GC's office there. I spoke to Logan not long ago and you shld know that your interest in and support for him as a young lawyer is something for which he remains deeply grateful.

RAND CORPORATION

The RAND Corporation Presents

Trends in Terrorism and the Architecture of TRIA

Presented by Peter Chalk and Robert Reville

Friday, June 17, 2005 from 10:00-11:30 am
2226 Rayburn House Office Building

Following the terrorist attacks on 9/11, Congress passed TRIA in order to stabilize the insurance markets, which were stung by $32 billion in damage claims. TRIA is scheduled to sunset at the end of this year, and Congress must decide whether to extend, modify, or let TRIA expire.

Peter Chalk, PhD, and Robert Reville, PhD and Director, RAND's Institute for Civil Justice, will present Trends in Terrorism and the Architecture of TRIA, which takes a unique look at the current relevance of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (TRIA) and whether it encourages a robust protection from the economic consequences of terrorism in light of the ever-evolving trends in terrorism, both international and domestic.

Since 9/11 and the passage of TRIA, the terrorism threat has evolved. Is the functionality of TRIA still relevant in light of these new trends?

The new study, conducted by RAND's Center for Terrorism Risk Management Policy, looks closely at the following questions:

- What are the trends in transnational terrorism? More specifically, how has al Qaeda reconfigured itself since 9/11 and the onset of the Global War on Terror?
- How do the changes in al Qaeda affect the risk to private sector property and businesses? What implications do these new trends have for the future of TRIA? Is there still a need for TRIA and if so, how could TRIA potentially be strengthened?
- How has the anti-globalism movement affected the evolving threat from domestic terrorism? Are there specific groups who are or could be more prone to violence?
- Should TRIA or its successor be expanded to included coverage for acts of domestic terrorism?

Light breakfast will be served. Please RSVP to Kristy Anderson at kristy_anderson@rand.org or 703-413-1100 x5196 if you plan on attending the briefing

Dear Old Members and Friends,

Just a final reminder for those of you who have not yet purchased tickets for the University College St Petersburg White Nights Ball on Saturday 25th June. Why not come and join nearly a hundred other Old Members and their guests for a night of St Petersburg elegance in the picturesque setting of the College, with everything from Ronnie Scott's jazz to ballet dancers to dodgems?! The evening promises plenty of music, food, drink, comedy and numerous other attractions and entertainments to cater for almost every taste, which makes this triennial ball the perfect venue for a reunion. There are still a handful of tickets available which you can buy online at www.univball.com or by contacting the Development Office. <http://www.univ.ox.ac.uk/cgi-bin/safeperl/univinfo/showevent.cgi?id=12>

Also fast approaching is the Henley Regatta during which Old Members are invited to join us onboard the Univ Barge on Wednesday 29th June. Space on the Barge is limited, so for those of you who have not yet let us know you are coming, please do so soon. The owners of the Barge, David and Clare Sherriff, are kindly operating a free river taxi from the regatta enclosure; there will also be a buffet style 'Lunch & Cream Tea' available for £30 per head on the river bank (this must be ordered in advance through the Development Office) or just 'Cream Tea' for £7.50. Alternatively, Old Members are welcome to bring their own picnics and hampers. Racing will be continuing throughout the day from 9am onwards.

Nick Tzitzon is CoS. She doesn't have a PDAAG yet. They did bring on board Cybele Daley (Pasco's wife) as a Deputy. From what I understand her role as deputy will be "outreach and communication" specifically with law enforcement.

On a separate note, Crystal Roberts has asked to meet with me to help her put in place a "policy" for OJP, OVW, and COPS interaction with outside groups and coordination with OIPL.

Everyone:
Last night the Senate confirmed Regina Schofield as the new Assistant Attorney General for OJP. I know that Regina is eager to arrive and become part of the OJP team. She will bring great enthusiasm and leadership to the organization. If everything proceeds accordingly, Regina will start on Monday. I know that you will provide her the same welcome and support you did me.

In conjuction with Regina's arrival, I will have one less hat to wear. I will return to my office at Main Justice and continue my role as Deputy Associate Attorney General. As you know, in this role I will continue my interaction with OJP.

Thank you for your support, assistance, and good work during my time back at OJP. I appreciate your efforts, your commitment, and most importantly, your kindness.
Please feel free to stop by and see me down at Main Justice. The office information will be in the system.

Thanks and best wishes.

Lou - FYI, per Robert's suggestion earlier this week that I introduce myself to Regina and other AAGs, I spoke with Regina and she offered to set something up a time for me to meet with her, her team, and Tracy in the very near future. When you speak to Regina, you might want to tell her that Robert's request below supersedes any need for a specific meeting with me so she doesn't feel a need to schedule us twice. Many thanks, Neil

Regina,
Neil has advised me that you all were setting up a meet and greet. Robert McCallum is interested in attending this meeting as well. Could you please have your staff coordinate with Currie Gunn, Robert's administrative assistant, so that we can get this scheduled in the near future? Thanks so very much and welcome to the Department! --Lou

Hey Neil,

Don't know if you've made it over to Justice or simply that they've set up an email account for you. But welcome!

This is not my permanent email address, but just a temporary one for me at USAO in Alexandria. My permanent email lacks the 2 at the end of my name.

Hope you're doing well, and I'm sure you're excited to be over here. I've had a really great experience so far.

One of my cases made the front page of the Post Monday -- the one on how we use immigration laws to prosecute all sorts of people (terrorists and non-terrorists alike).

Lou - FYI, per Robert's suggestion earlier this week that I introduce myself to Regina and other AAGs, I spoke with Regina and she offered to set something up a time for me to meet with her, her team, and Tracy in the very near future. When you speak to Regina, you might want to tell her that Robert's request below supersedes any need for a specific meeting with me so she doesn't feel a need to schedule us twice. Many thanks, Neil

Nick Tzitzon is CoS. She doesn't have a PDAAG yet. They did bring on board Cybele Daley (Pasco's wife) as a Deputy. From what I understand her role as deputy will be "outreach and communication" specifically with law enforcement.

On a separate note, Crystal Roberts has asked to meet with me to help her put in place a "policy" for OJP, OVW, and COPS interaction with outside groups and coordination with OIPL.

Everyone:
Last night the Senate confirmed Regina Schofield as the new Assistant Attorney General for OJP. I know that Regina is eager to arrive and become part of the OJP team. She will bring great enthusiasm and leadership to the organization. If everything proceeds accordingly, Regina will start on Monday. I know that you will provide her the same welcome and support you did me.

In conjuction with Regina's arrival, I will have one less hat to wear. I will return to my office at Main Justice and continue my role as Deputy Associate Attorney General. As you know, in this role I will continue my interaction with OJP.

Thank you for your support, assistance, and good work during my time back at OJP. I appreciate your efforts, your commitment, and most importantly, your kindness.
Please feel free to stop by and see me down at Main Justice. The office information will be in the system.

Thanks and best wishes.

I spoke with Mac who confirms that both litigation risk and environmental questions will likely be involved in the planning session, but the latter sort of questions seem to predominate. Someone from ENRD, thus, may be our best representative unless you'd prefer the direct involvement of Liz or Jeff. Mac specifically suggested a fellow named Jim Rubin in ENRD who has been involved in other international and national security issues. Should he and I call Kelly to ask for her approval to employ Rubin for this task?

ASSOCIATE ATTORNEY GENERAL ROBERT D. MCCALLUM, JR. ANNOUNCES APPOINTMENT OF NEW DEPUTY ASSOCIATE ATTORNEYS GENERAL

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Associate Attorney General Robert D. McCallum, Jr. announced today the appointment of three new Deputy Associate Attorneys General in the Office of the Associate Attorney General (OASG).

In announcing the new appointments to his office, Associate Attorney General Robert D. We are excited to have them aboard."

Neil M. Gorsuch has been appointed Principal Deputy Associate Attorney General. Mr. Gorsuch has been a partner at the Washington firm of Kellogg, Huber, Hansen, Todd, Evans & Figel, PLLC, since 1998 and served as an associate in that firm from 1995 to 1997. Mr. Gorsuch holds a doctorate in legal philosophy from Oxford, where he was a Marshall scholar; a J.D. from the Harvard Law School, where he studied as a Truman scholar; and a B.A. from Columbia University. Among other items in his new portfolio, Mr. Gorsuch will oversee terrorism-related litigation matters and advise the Associate Attorney General on all issues that reach the office for consideration.

Luis A. Reyes has been appointed Chief of Staff and Deputy Associate Attorney General. From 2003 to 2005, Mr. Reyes served as Counselor to the Assistant Attorney General for the Department's Civil Rights Division. As the Assistant Attorney General's senior legal counsel he was involved in a wide range of litigation, legislative, and policy-related matters. Mr. Reyes joined the Department of Justice in 2001, after serving as an Assistant Attorney General for the State of Texas for three years under then state Attorney General John Cornyn. Mr. Reyes is a graduate of the University of Texas at Austin, and the University of Texas School of Law. In his new role, Mr. Reyes will work with the Department's Tax Division, the Community Relations Service, and will be involved in internal and organizational issues as assigned by the Associate Attorney General.

Lily Fu Swenson has been appointed Deputy Associate Attorney General. Ms. Swenson joins the OASG from the Washington office of Mayer, Brown, Rowe and Maw LLP where she served as hiring partner and a member of the firm's antitrust and litigation practice groups. Ms. Swenson's practice focused on primarily on class action and appellate litigation, including antitrust, securities and professional liability matters. Ms. Swenson graduated from the University of Minnesota School of Law in 1993 and the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1990. Mr. Gorsuch's practice has focused on complex trials and appellate litigation, including antitrust and securities matters. He served as a law clerk to the Honorable Byron R. White and the Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy of the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as to the Honorable David B. Sentelle of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Mr. Gorsuch holds a doctorate in legal philosophy from Oxford, where he was a Marshall scholar; a J.D. from the Harvard Law School, where he studied as a Truman scholar; and a B.A. from Columbia University. Among other items in his new portfolio, Mr. Gorsuch will oversee terrorism-related litigation matters and advise the Associate Attorney General on all issues that reach the office for consideration.

Luis A. Reyes has been appointed Chief of Staff and Deputy Associate Attorney General. From 2003 to 2005, Mr. Reyes served as Counselor to the Assistant Attorney General for the Department's Civil Rights Division. As the Assistant Attorney General's senior legal counsel he was involved in a wide range of litigation, legislative, and policy-related matters. Mr. Reyes was heavily involved in the Department's efforts to combat human trafficking, appearing before state legislative bodies and civil rights groups to speak on the topic. Prior to joining the Civil Rights Division, Mr. Reyes served as Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division where he advised on administrative and litigation related matters. Mr. Reyes joined the Department of Justice in 2001, after serving as an Assistant Attorney General for the State of Texas for three years under then state Attorney General John Cornyn. Mr. Reyes is a graduate of the University of Texas at Austin, and the University of Texas School of Law. In his new role, Mr. Reyes will work with the Department's Tax Division, the Community Relations Service, and will be involved in internal and organizational issues as assigned by the Associate Attorney General.

Lily Fu Swenson has been appointed Deputy Associate Attorney General. Ms. Swenson joins the OASG from the Washington office of Mayer, Brown, Rowe and Maw LLP where she served as hiring partner and a member of the firm's antitrust and litigation practice groups. Ms. Swenson's practice focused on primarily on class action and appellate litigation, including antitrust, securities and professional liability matters. Ms. Swenson graduated from the University of Minnesota School of Law in 1993 and the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1990. Prior to joining Mayer, Brown, Rowe & Maw, she clerked for the Honorable Michael S. Kanne of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. In her new post, Ms. Swenson will oversee antitrust as well as commercial, health care fraud and immigration litigation matters.

At State, this has been handled thru [redacted] office. Specifically, [redacted] helped with the State to State agreement. [redacted] Office is in European Affairs.

The archival issue has not gone up thru the ranks of that office or elsewhere at State to our knowledge, except in the context of getting the state-to-state agreement done a year ago. [redacted] says we have been in direct touch with the Desk Officer only occasionally, since [redacted] office is the designated contact for our issues.

Most of our dealings have been directly thru the Embassy in Budapest. We briefed [redacted] before he went to post last year, and he accompanied us to our meeting with the Prime Minister's Political Counselor in April. We also briefed Ambassador Walker in April.

At State, this has been handled thru [redacted] office. Specifically, [redacted] helped with the State to State agreement. [redacted] Office is in European Affairs.

The archival issue has not gone up thru the ranks of that office or elsewhere at State to our knowledge, except in the context of getting the state-to-state agreement done a year ago. [redacted] says we have been in direct touch with the Desk Officer only occasionally, since [redacted] office is the designated contact for our issues.

Most of our dealings have been directly thru the Embassy in Budapest. We briefed DCM [redacted] before he went to post last year, and he accompanied us to our meeting with the Prime Minister's Political Counselor in April. We also briefed Ambassador Walker in April.

Prepared Remarks of Attorney General Alberto Gonzales
Sentencing Guidelines Speech
Washington, D.C.
June 21, 2005 – 12:00 PM

Thank you …

It's an honor to be here.

This is the second occasion in my short time as Attorney General of the United States that I have had the opportunity to address victims of crime. Being among you, and hearing your stories, always reminds me that your movement is mis-named.

My wife, Rebecca, and I have a long-standing concern for the issues facing victims of crime. Becky spent three-and-a-half years in the Texas Attorney General's Office supporting sexual assault programs across the state. Together we have met with hundreds of crime victims, heard their stories and worked to protect their rights.

We know from experience that there is nothing in the word "victim" that captures this movement.

True victimization requires the disinterest of leaders, the silence of good people, and, finally, the hopelessness of the victims themselves.

But there is a wonderful metamorphosis at the heart of the victims' rights movement. From the ranks of the powerless has emerged a movement of the empowered.

For decades, victims of crime in America lived in fear, and suffered in silence. So-called experts told us that high levels of crime were inevitable, especially among the poor. The message to victims of crime – who were disproportionately poor as well– was inescapable: learn to live with it.

But thanks to the pioneering work of victims' groups and other concerned Americans, the status of victims of crime in America began to change. Victims, and their friends and loved ones, began to demand more from our system of justice. One of their central demands has been that those convicted of crimes serve tough and fair sentences. And for the past twenty years we have constructed a sentencing system that met this demand – and has helped to achieve the lowest crime rates in a generation. But today that system is threatened.

The threat that hangs over our system of justice is best illustrated by the story of two defendants, both convicted of similar charges involving possession of child pornography, one in Manhattan, the other across the Hudson River in New Jersey.

The New Jersey defendant faced a sentencing range of 30 to 37 months but was given a sentence of 41 months in prison.

The other defendant, in Manhattan, was also convicted of possession of child pornography. In addition, he had been arrested in Pennsylvania, where he had traveled in an attempt to have sexual relations with a "child" he had met over the internet. The "child" turned out to be an undercover [TBD] officer.

The Manhattan defendant faced a sentencing range of 27 to 33 months in prison, but received only probation.

What made the difference? Two different judges, and a Supreme

DOJ_NMG_ 0144445

Court ruling that said they were not bound by guidelines that have governed federal sentencing for almost twenty years.

In January, the Supreme Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines mandated by bipartisan congressional majorities in 1984 are no longer mandatory for federal judges.

In U.S. v. Booker, the Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines violated a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury because they require that judges, not juries, make factual findings which increase a defendant's maximum prison sentence. The result is that, today, judges are no longer bound by the law to impose a sentence within the range prescribed by the guidelines.

So in the New Jersey child pornography case, the judge deemed it necessary to protect the public from the defendant and imposed a sentence that exceeded the guideline range. But in the Manhattan case, the judge reasoned that the defendant would benefit from continued psychological treatment and ordered probation only.

The story of these two defendants is just one case among many that illustrates a developing and troubling trend in the aftermath of the Booker decision. No longer bound by sentencing guidelines, judges are exercising their discretion to impose sentences that depart from the carefully considered ranges developed by the U.S. Sentencing Commission. In the process, two critical elements of our criminal justice system are being lost: the protection of the public from criminal offenders, and the protection of defendants from unfair sentences.

The federal sentencing guidelines were the result of

Republicans and Democrats coming together in response to the high crime rates of the 1960s and 1970s to propose, create and sustain an invaluable tool of justice.

As the rates of serious violent felonies more than tripled in the 1960s and 1970s, a consensus emerged that society needed to be protected from the early release of offenders.

Also undermining Americans' faith in the system was the fact that significant disparities existed in the sentences received by individuals guilty of equally serious, similar offenses.

A widespread and bipartisan consensus took hold that our system of sentencing was broken.

So in 1984, lawmakers from across the ideological spectrum passed the Sentencing Reform Act with two broad goals in mind.

The first was to increase the safety of law-abiding Americans by restoring in sentencing an emphasis on punishment, incapacitation and deterrence.

The second was to ensure fairness in sentencing. The statute's guiding principle was consistency – defendants who had committed equally serious crimes and had similar criminal backgrounds should receive similar sentences, irrespective of their race, location or economic background.

In the seventeen-plus years that they have been in existence, federal sentencing guidelines have achieved the ambitious goals of public safety and fairness set out by Congress.

In contrast to thirty years ago, the United States today is experiencing crime rates that are the lowest in a generation. Thirty-four million violent crimes were not committed in the last decade that would have been had violent crime rates remained the same. In 2003 alone, over six million Americans were not murdered, robbed, or assaulted.

No single piece of legislation or policy change is by itself responsible for today's historically low levels of violent crime. But multiple, independent studies of our criminal justice system confirm what our common sense tells us: increased incarceration means reduced crime, and federal and state sentencing reform has helped incarcerate the most violent, repeat offenders.

For federal prisoners, the average time spent behind bars has increased a full 68 percent since 1990. For state prisoners, the average time served is up 30 percent.

Studies have shown that each 10 percent increase in the prison population produces a 1-3 percent decrease in the number of serious crimes.

Federal sentencing guidelines, along with improved state sentencing systems based on the same model, have helped drive down the crime rate because they have helped us put in prison – and keep in prison – those who are most likely to commit future crimes.

Using the most recent data we have, the Bureau of Justice Statistics found that 89 percent of the people in state and federal prison are violent offenders, repeat offenders, or both. Another study from 2002 found that almost two-thirds of the increase in the state prison population between 1995 and 2001 was due to the increase in violent offenders incarcerated. As we have kept these dangerous offenders in prison instead of releasing them, not surprisingly, our communities have become safer.

Federal sentencing guidelines have helped keep Americans safe while also delivering on their promise to reduce unwarranted disparities in sentences. When the U.S. Sentencing Commission took stock of fifteen years of federal sentencing guidelines in 2004, it noted that careful studies by both the Commission itself and others have determined that the guidelines, quote, "have succeeded at the job they were principally designed to do: reduce unwarranted disparity arising from differences among judges."

In seventeen years, mandatory sentencing guidelines withstood multiple constitutional challenges. They have worked in coordination with state truth-in-sentencing laws and mandatory minimum sentences to drive down crime. Sentencing guidelines have not been static but have evolved over time to adapt to changing circumstances and better understanding. Judges, legislators, policy makers, prosecutors, defense lawyers and others have worked hard for two decades to develop, preserve, and strengthen a system of sentencing guidelines that has protected Americans and improved American justice. All of this effort – and all of this achievement – is now threatened.

In the five months since the Booker decision, the Department of Justice has viewed federal sentencing decisions with measured concern. We have been careful not to draw premature conclusions. The evidence, however, points toward two problematic trends: an increasing disparity in sentences, and a drift toward lesser sentences.

Our U.S. Attorneys consistently report that a critical law enforcement tool has been taken from them. Since the government is no longer the gatekeeper for granting leniency in return for cooperation under the guidelines system, major witnesses are increasingly less inclined to cooperate with prosecutors. We are witnessing a return to thirty years ago, when criminals and potential criminals were encouraged to "play the odds" in our criminal justice system, betting that the luck of the draw – the judge randomly assigned to their case – will result in a lighter sentence.

In addition, experience is already pointing toward an emerging judicial lottery, in which dramatically varying sentences are being determined on the basis of inappropriate factors – factors that could not be considered before Booker.

In one recent case a South Carolina man pled guilty to federal weapons and drug trafficking charges. After his arrest on these charges, this defendant was released on bond, failed a drug test and attempted to flee from South Carolina. Federal marshals caught up with him and, after a six-hour standoff, law enforcement authorities tear gassed him out the house where he was holed-up. When he was re-arrested, police discovered that he had a fully automatic machine gun in his possession. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, this armed, career criminal, who had a long history of state charges related to assault, drug trafficking, and weapons, faced between 22 and 27 years in prison. However, the judge sentenced him to only ten, offering no explanation. The Department is appealing this unreasonably low sentence.

In a case involving white collar crime, a Kansas rancher got $1.5 million in cattle loans, falsely claiming that he was using the money to buy live cattle. He was audacious enough to take bank officials to livestock pens falsely claiming that the cows he was showing them were purchased with loan proceeds, when, in fact he lost all the money betting on cattle futures. He pled guilty to defrauding the bank and faced a sentencing range of 3 to 4 years under the guidelines. But the judge gave him probation only, reasoning that the defendant had suffered enough when the bank foreclosed on his house.

We have also seen how the Booker decision led directly to a radically reduced sentence for a multi-millionaire convicted of evading federal taxes.

This New York defendant was convicted in 2003 for evading the payment of six million dollars in taxes by such means as moving out of the country valuable assets – namely, a fleet of Rolls Royces and a suit of armor made for King Henri the Second of France. Under the then-mandatory sentencing guidelines, the defendant was sentenced to 41 to 51 months in prison. The judge said he would have liked to impose a considerably lesser sentence, but felt constrained by the guidelines.

A year and half later, after the Booker decision, the defendant petitioned the court for re-sentencing and the judge reduced his sentence to seven months. The judge noted that the defendant's age and the need to take care of his wife – not normally relevant sentencing factors pre-Booker – now justified his lesser sentence.

These are not isolated examples. Initial statistics compiled by the U.S. Sentencing Commission seem to indicate that in the five months since the Booker decision, compliance with the sentencing guidelines is decreasing. According to the Sentencing Commission, sentencing within the guidelines by federal judges has fallen from almost 70 percent in 2003 to under 63 percent today.

As Attorney General, I have a responsibility both to protect the American people and to defend the protections afforded to them by our Constitution. After reviewing the data, consulting with our prosecutors in the field, and reaching out to other interested parties, I have come to the conclusion that the interests of justice – the safety of the American people and the fairness of our judicial system – are not served by a system of advisory sentencing guidelines.

The status quo is dangerous and untenable – not because our judges aren't trying to do that right thing. They are acting in good faith. But the goals of public safety and fairness sought by Congress in the Sentencing Reform Act are the expressed will of the American people. Our sentencing system works best when judges have some sentencing discretion, but discretion bound by sentencing guidelines created through the legislative process. The time has come for policy makers, jurists, attorneys, legislators and concerned Americans like you to work together to restore a system of mandatory sentencing guidelines. The alternative is, I fear, inevitable. Criminals will receive shorter sentences, and unwarranted disparities will again plague our justice system.

In the Booker decision, the Supreme Court invited Congress to consider legislation to construct a sentencing system that meets the requirements of the Sixth Amendment. As a matter of fact, the High Court put it quite bluntly: "The ball now lies in Congress's court." It is imperative that Congress accept this invitation. Justice demands that we work together to put public safety and fairness once again at the forefront of our federal sentencing.

Two options present themselves.

Congress could enact a series of mandatory minimum sentence statutes. For example, Congress could pass new mandatory minimums for crimes including fraud offenses, gun trafficking and gun possession in the commission of certain crimes, and for leaders of white collar offenses and for career criminals. And because these types of offenses account for nearly 66 percent of all federal cases, these statutory changes would mean that two-thirds of federal cases would carry mandatory minimum sentences consistent with the federal sentencing guidelines.

A system of statutory mandatory minimums would be simple and constitutional, provided that the factors that trigger the mandatory minimum sentences are based on facts proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

A second approach that would preserve the protections and principles of the Sentencing Reform Act would be the construction of a minimum guideline system.

This would involve a relatively simple legislative change. First, the sentencing court would be bound by the guidelines minimum, just as it was before the Booker decision. Second, the guidelines maximum would remain advisory, and the court would be bound to consider it, but not bound to adhere to it, just as it is today under Booker.

DOJ_NMG_ 0144453

Under this proposal, advisory maximum sentences would continue to give the courts the benefit of the Sentencing Commission's collective wisdom and statistical analysis. These guidelines would provide for sentences that would fall well below the statutory maximum in most cases.

The advantages of a minimum guideline system are many. It would preserve the traditional division of responsibility between judges and juries in criminal cases, and retain the important function of the U.S. Sentencing Commission. And most importantly, a minimum guideline system would be fully consistent with the Sixth Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in both Booker and Blakely v. Washington. These decisions only affect cases in which post-conviction judicial findings of fact mandate or authorize an increase in the maximum of the otherwise applicable sentencing range. In Harris v. the United States, the Court held that factors which increase the minimum sentence do not have to be submitted to a jury. In short, so long as facts found by judges applying the sentencing guidelines increase only the minimum sentence to be served, the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights would be fully protected.

I understand and recognize that defendants who are dissatisfied with their sentences will ask the Supreme Court to reconsider Harris, and challenge legislation providing for a minimum guidelines system. That possibility, however, does not call for inaction. Rather, it should be understood as an invitation for all concerned parties to work together to ensure a system that preserves the protections and principles of the federal sentencing guidelines.

Federal and state judges administer justice in the Nation's courtrooms every day. Deciding the fate of a defendant is a serious and difficult task, and our judges discharge this obligation conscientiously and with integrity. But it is inevitable that, with so many different individual judges involved, in so many different jurisdictions, shorter sentences and disparities among sentences will occur under a system of advisory guidelines.

The time has come for us to act. And as we go forward, we are guided by a fundamental fact: sentencing reform has been a success in both reducing crime and reducing unwarranted disparities. It has made Americans safer and our system of justice fairer. For the past two decades there has been an ongoing, healthy debate over the specifics of the sentencing guidelines. But there has also been a bipartisan consensus in support of the principles of sentencing reform. Today I pledge the resources of the Department of Justice toward the re-creation of such a system. The Department will work with Congress, the judiciary and other organizations – like this one – to design a sentencing system that responds to the needs and concerns of all those who share our commitment to providing protection to the American people and equal justice to defendants.

Our system of justice is predicated on the belief that every human being has dignity – and it is sustained by individuals such as you working in defense of this belief.

Your work, your commitment and your sacrifice have given the victims of crime a voice in our system of justice, and have helped drive violent crime to its lowest rate in three decades.

With your support and inspiration, victims of crime have come forward with the hope of building a better future. They have come forward in the belief that one person's injustice can inspire greater justice for all.

And so it falls to us to act. Not out of guilt, and not out of retribution, but in the firm belief that progress is possible. The system of sentencing we have built over the past twenty years teeters on the edge. May history record that we used this time to reach out and steady it; that we worked together to secure a system of tougher, fairer, and greater justice for all.

Thank you very much.

We know from experience that there is nothing in the word "victim" that captures this movement.

True victimization requires the disinterest of leaders, the silence of good people, and, finally, the hopelessness of the victims themselves.

But there is a wonderful metamorphosis at the heart of the victims' rights movement. From the ranks of the powerless has emerged a movement of the empowered.

For decades, victims of crime in America lived in fear, and suffered in silence. So-called experts told us that high levels of crime were inevitable, especially among the poor. The message to victims of crime – who were disproportionately poor as well– was inescapable: learn to live with it.

But thanks to the pioneering work of victims' groups and other concerned Americans, the status of victims of crime in America began to change. Victims, and their friends and loved ones, began to demand more from our system of justice. One of their central demands has been that those convicted of crimes serve tough and fair sentences. And for the past twenty years we have constructed a sentencing system that met this demand – and has helped to achieve the lowest crime rates in a generation. But today that system is threatened.

The threat that hangs over our system of justice is best illustrated by the story of two defendants, both convicted of similar charges involving possession of child pornography, one in Manhattan, the other across the Hudson River in New Jersey.

The New Jersey defendant faced a sentencing range of 30 to 37 months but was given a sentence of 41 months in prison.

The other defendant, in Manhattan, was also convicted of possession of child pornography. In addition, he had been arrested in Pennsylvania, where he had traveled in an attempt to have sexual relations with a "child" he had met over the internet. The "child" turned out to be an undercover [TBD] officer.

The Manhattan defendant faced a sentencing range of 27 to 33 months in prison, but received only probation.

What made the difference? Two different judges, and a Supreme

DOJ_NMG_ 0144460

Court ruling that said they were not bound by guidelines that have governed federal sentencing for almost twenty years.

In January, the Supreme Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines mandated by bipartisan congressional majorities in 1984 are no longer mandatory for federal judges.

In U.S. v. Booker, the Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines violated a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury because they require that judges, not juries, make factual findings which increase a defendant's maximum prison sentence. The result is that, today, judges are no longer bound by the law to impose a sentence within the range prescribed by the guidelines.

So in the New Jersey child pornography case, the judge deemed it necessary to protect the public from the defendant and imposed a sentence that exceeded the guideline range. But in the Manhattan case, the judge reasoned that the defendant would benefit from continued psychological treatment and ordered probation only.

The story of these two defendants is just one case among many that illustrates a developing and troubling trend in the aftermath of the Booker decision. No longer bound by sentencing guidelines, judges are exercising their discretion to impose sentences that depart from the carefully considered ranges developed by the U.S. Sentencing Commission. In the process, two critical elements of our criminal justice system are being lost: the protection of the public from criminal offenders, and the protection of defendants from unfair sentences.

The federal sentencing guidelines were the result of

DOJ_NMG_ 0144461

Republicans and Democrats coming together in response to the high crime rates of the 1960s and 1970s to propose, create and sustain an invaluable tool of justice.

As the rates of serious violent felonies more than tripled in the 1960s and 1970s, a consensus emerged that society needed to be protected from the early release of offenders.

Also undermining Americans' faith in the system was the fact that significant disparities existed in the sentences received by individuals guilty of equally serious, similar offenses.

A widespread and bipartisan consensus took hold that our system of sentencing was broken.

So in 1984, lawmakers from across the ideological spectrum passed the Sentencing Reform Act with two broad goals in mind.

The first was to increase the safety of law-abiding Americans by restoring in sentencing an emphasis on punishment, incapacitation and deterrence.

The second was to ensure fairness in sentencing. The statute's guiding principle was consistency – defendants who had committed equally serious crimes and had similar criminal backgrounds should receive similar sentences, irrespective of their race, location or economic background.

In the seventeen-plus years that they have been in existence, federal sentencing guidelines have achieved the ambitious goals of public safety and fairness set out by Congress.

DOJ_NMG_ 0144462

In contrast to thirty years ago, the United States today is experiencing crime rates that are the lowest in a generation. Thirty-four million violent crimes were not committed in the last decade that would have been had violent crime rates remained the same. In 2003 alone, over six million Americans were not murdered, robbed, or assaulted.

No single piece of legislation or policy change is by itself responsible for today's historically low levels of violent crime. But multiple, independent studies of our criminal justice system confirm what our common sense tells us: increased incarceration means reduced crime, and federal and state sentencing reform has helped incarcerate the most violent, repeat offenders.

For federal prisoners, the average time spent behind bars has increased a full 68 percent since 1990. For state prisoners, the average time served is up 30 percent.

Studies have shown that each 10 percent increase in the prison population produces a 1-3 percent decrease in the number of serious crimes.

Federal sentencing guidelines, along with improved state sentencing systems based on the same model, have helped drive down the crime rate because they have helped us put in prison – and keep in prison – those who are most likely to commit future crimes.

Using the most recent data we have, the Bureau of Justice Statistics found that 89 percent of the people in state and federal prison are violent offenders, repeat offenders, or both. Another study from 2002 found that almost two-thirds of the increase in the state prison population between 1995 and 2001 was due to the increase in violent offenders incarcerated. As we have kept these dangerous offenders in prison instead of releasing them, not surprisingly, our communities have become safer.

Federal sentencing guidelines have helped keep Americans safe while also delivering on their promise to reduce unwarranted disparities in sentences. When the U.S. Sentencing Commission took stock of fifteen years of federal sentencing guidelines in 2004, it noted that careful studies by both the Commission itself and others have determined that the guidelines, quote, "have succeeded at the job they were principally designed to do: reduce unwarranted disparity arising from differences among judges."

In seventeen years, mandatory sentencing guidelines withstood multiple constitutional challenges. They have worked in coordination with state truth-in-sentencing laws and mandatory minimum sentences to drive down crime. Sentencing guidelines have not been static but have evolved over time to adapt to changing circumstances and better understanding. Judges, legislators, policy makers, prosecutors, defense lawyers and others have worked hard for two decades to develop, preserve, and strengthen a system of sentencing guidelines that has protected Americans and improved American justice. All of this effort – and all of this achievement – is now threatened.

In the five months since the Booker decision, the Department of Justice has viewed federal sentencing decisions with measured concern. We have been careful not to draw premature conclusions. The evidence, however, points toward two problematic trends: an increasing disparity in sentences, and a drift toward lesser sentences.

Our U.S. Attorneys consistently report that a critical law enforcement tool has been taken from them. Since the government is no longer the gatekeeper for granting leniency in return for cooperation under the guidelines system, major witnesses are increasingly less inclined to cooperate with prosecutors. We are witnessing a return to thirty years ago, when criminals and potential criminals were encouraged to "play the odds" in our criminal justice system, betting that the luck of the draw – the judge randomly assigned to their case – will result in a lighter sentence.

In addition, experience is already pointing toward an emerging judicial lottery, in which dramatically varying sentences are being determined on the basis of inappropriate factors – factors that could not be considered before Booker.

In one recent case a South Carolina man pled guilty to federal weapons and drug trafficking charges. After his arrest on these charges, this defendant was released on bond, failed a drug test and attempted to flee from South Carolina. Federal marshals caught up with him and, after a six-hour standoff, law enforcement authorities tear gassed him out the house where he was holed-up. When he was re-arrested, police discovered that he had a fully automatic machine gun in his possession. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, this armed, career criminal, who had a long history of state charges related to assault, drug trafficking, and weapons, faced between 22 and 27 years in prison. However, the judge sentenced him to only ten, offering no explanation. The Department is appealing this unreasonably low sentence.

In a case involving white collar crime, a Kansas rancher got $1.5 million in cattle loans, falsely claiming that he was using the money to buy live cattle. He was audacious enough to take bank officials to livestock pens falsely claiming that the cows he was showing them were purchased with loan proceeds, when, in fact he lost all the money betting on cattle futures. He pled guilty to defrauding the bank and faced a sentencing range of 3 to 4 years under the guidelines. But the judge gave him probation only, reasoning that the defendant had suffered enough when the bank foreclosed on his house.

We have also seen how the Booker decision led directly to a radically reduced sentence for a multi-millionaire convicted of evading federal taxes.

This New York defendant was convicted in 2003 for evading the payment of six million dollars in taxes by such means as moving out of the country valuable assets – namely, a fleet of Rolls Royces and a suit of armor made for King Henri the Second of France. Under the then-mandatory sentencing guidelines, the defendant was sentenced to 41 to 51 months in prison. The judge said he would have liked to impose a considerably lesser sentence, but felt constrained by the guidelines.

A year and half later, after the Booker decision, the defendant petitioned the court for re-sentencing and the judge reduced his sentence to seven months. The judge noted that the defendant's age and the need to take care of his wife – not normally relevant sentencing factors pre-Booker – now justified his lesser sentence.

These are not isolated examples. Initial statistics compiled by the U.S. Sentencing Commission seem to indicate that in the five months since the Booker decision, compliance with the sentencing guidelines is decreasing. According to the Sentencing Commission, sentencing within the guidelines by federal judges has fallen from almost 70 percent in 2003 to under 63 percent today.

As Attorney General, I have a responsibility both to protect the American people and to defend the protections afforded to them by our Constitution. After reviewing the data, consulting with our prosecutors in the field, and reaching out to other interested parties, I have come to the conclusion that the interests of justice – the safety of the American people and the fairness of our judicial system – are not served by a system of advisory sentencing guidelines.

The status quo is dangerous and untenable – not because our judges aren't trying to do that right thing. They are acting in good faith. But the goals of public safety and fairness sought by Congress in the Sentencing Reform Act are the expressed will of the American people. Our sentencing system works best when judges have some sentencing discretion, but discretion bound by sentencing guidelines created through the legislative process. The time has come for policy makers, jurists, attorneys, legislators and concerned Americans like you to work together to restore a system of mandatory sentencing guidelines. The alternative is, I fear, inevitable. Criminals will receive shorter sentences, and unwarranted disparities will again plague our justice system.

In the Booker decision, the Supreme Court invited Congress to consider legislation to construct a sentencing system that meets the requirements of the Sixth Amendment. As a matter of fact, the High Court put it quite bluntly: "The ball now lies in Congress's court." It is imperative that Congress accept this invitation. Justice demands that we work together to put public safety and fairness once again at the forefront of our federal sentencing.

Two options present themselves.

Congress could enact a series of mandatory minimum sentence statutes. For example, Congress could pass new mandatory minimums for crimes including fraud offenses, gun trafficking and gun possession in the commission of certain crimes, and for leaders of white collar offenses and for career criminals. And because these types of offenses account for nearly 66 percent of all federal cases, these statutory changes would mean that two-thirds of federal cases would carry mandatory minimum sentences consistent with the federal sentencing guidelines.

A system of statutory mandatory minimums would be simple and constitutional, provided that the factors that trigger the mandatory minimum sentences are based on facts proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

A second approach that would preserve the protections and principles of the Sentencing Reform Act would be the construction of a minimum guideline system.

This would involve a relatively simple legislative change. First, the sentencing court would be bound by the guidelines minimum, just as it was before the Booker decision. Second, the guidelines maximum would remain advisory, and the court would be bound to consider it, but not bound to adhere to it, just as it is today under Booker.

Under this proposal, advisory maximum sentences would continue to give the courts the benefit of the Sentencing Commission's collective wisdom and statistical analysis. These guidelines would provide for sentences that would fall well below the statutory maximum in most cases.

The advantages of a minimum guideline system are many. It would preserve the traditional division of responsibility between judges and juries in criminal cases, and retain the important function of the U.S. Sentencing Commission. And most importantly, a minimum guideline system would be fully consistent with the Sixth Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in both Booker and Blakely v. Washington. These decisions only affect cases in which post-conviction judicial findings of fact mandate or authorize an increase in the maximum of the otherwise applicable sentencing range. In Harris v. the United States, the Court held that factors which increase the minimum sentence do not have to be submitted to a jury. In short, so long as facts found by judges applying the sentencing guidelines increase only the minimum sentence to be served, the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights would be fully protected.

I understand and recognize that defendants who are dissatisfied with their sentences will ask the Supreme Court to reconsider Harris, and challenge legislation providing for a minimum guidelines system. That possibility, however, does not call for inaction. Rather, it should be understood as an invitation for all concerned parties to work together to ensure a system that preserves the protections and principles of the federal sentencing guidelines.

Federal and state judges administer justice in the Nation's courtrooms every day. Deciding the fate of a defendant is a serious and difficult task, and our judges discharge this obligation conscientiously and with integrity. But it is inevitable that, with so many different individual judges involved, in so many different jurisdictions, shorter sentences and disparities among sentences will occur under a system of advisory guidelines.

The time has come for us to act. And as we go forward, we are guided by a fundamental fact: sentencing reform has been a success in both reducing crime and reducing unwarranted disparities. It has made Americans safer and our system of justice fairer. For the past two decades there has been an ongoing, healthy debate over the specifics of the sentencing guidelines. But there has also been a bipartisan consensus in support of the principles of sentencing reform. Today I pledge the resources of the Department of Justice toward the re-creation of such a system. The Department will work with Congress, the judiciary and other organizations – like this one – to design a sentencing system that responds to the needs and concerns of all those who share our commitment to providing protection to the American people and equal justice to defendants.

Our system of justice is predicated on the belief that every human being has dignity – and it is sustained by individuals such as you working in defense of this belief.

Your work, your commitment and your sacrifice have given the victims of crime a voice in our system of justice, and have helped drive violent crime to its lowest rate in three decades.

With your support and inspiration, victims of crime have come forward with the hope of building a better future. They have come forward in the belief that one person's injustice can inspire greater justice for all.

And so it falls to us to act. Not out of guilt, and not out of retribution, but in the firm belief that progress is possible. The system of sentencing we have built over the past twenty years teeters on the edge. May history record that we used this time to reach out and steady it; that we worked together to secure a system of tougher, fairer, and greater justice for all.

Thank you very much.

Prepared Remarks of Attorney General Alberto Gonzales
Sentencing Guidelines Speech
Washington, D.C.
June 21, 2005 – 12:00 PM

Thank you …

It's an honor to be here.

This is the second occasion in my short time as Attorney General of the United States that I have had the opportunity to address victims of crime. Being among you, and hearing your stories, always reminds me that your movement is mis-named.

My wife, Rebecca, and I have a long-standing concern for the issues facing victims of crime. Becky spent three-and-a-half years in the Texas Attorney General's Office supporting sexual assault programs across the state. Together we have met with hundreds of crime victims, heard their stories and worked to protect their rights.

We know from experience that there is nothing in the word "victim" that captures this movement.

True victimization requires the disinterest of leaders, the silence of good people, and, finally, the hopelessness of the victims themselves.

But there is a wonderful metamorphosis at the heart of the victims' rights movement. From the ranks of the powerless has emerged a movement of the empowered.

For decades, victims of crime in America lived in fear, and

In January, the Supreme Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines mandated by bipartisan congressional majorities in 1984 are no longer mandatory for federal judges.

In *U.S. v. When he was re-arrested, police discovered that he had a fully automatic machine gun in his possession. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, this armed, career criminal, who had a long history of state charges related to assault, drug trafficking, and weapons, faced between 22 and 27 years in prison. However, the judge sentenced him to only ten, offering no explanation. The Department is appealing this unreasonably low sentence.

In a case involving white collar crime, a Kansas rancher got $1.5 million in cattle loans, falsely claiming that he was using the money to buy live cattle. He was audacious enough to take bank officials to livestock pens falsely claiming that the cows he was showing them were purchased with loan proceeds, when, in fact he lost all the money betting on cattle futures. He pled guilty to defrauding the bank and faced a sentencing range of 3 to 4 years under the guidelines. But the judge gave him probation only, reasoning that the defendant had suffered enough when the bank foreclosed on his house.

We have also seen how the Booker decision led directly to a radically reduced sentence for a multi-millionaire convicted of evading federal taxes.

This New York defendant was convicted in 2003 for evading the payment of six million dollars in taxes by such means as moving out of the country valuable assets – namely, a fleet of Rolls Royces and a suit of armor made for King Henri the Second of France. Under the then-mandatory sentencing guidelines, the defendant was sentenced to 41 to 51 months in prison. The judge said he would have liked to impose a considerably lesser sentence, but felt constrained by the guidelines.

A year and half later, after the Booker decision, the defendant petitioned the court for re-sentencing and the judge reduced his sentence to seven months. The judge noted that the defendant's age and the need to take care of his wife – not normally relevant sentencing factors pre-Booker – now justified his lesser sentence.

These are not isolated examples. Initial statistics compiled by the U.S. Sentencing Commission seem to indicate that in the five months since the Booker decision, compliance with the sentencing guidelines is decreasing. According to the Sentencing Commission, sentencing within the guidelines by federal judges has fallen from almost 70 percent in 2003 to under 63 percent today.

As Attorney General, I have a responsibility both to protect the American people and to defend the protections afforded to them by our Constitution. After reviewing the data, consulting with our prosecutors in the field, and reaching out to other interested parties, I have come to the conclusion that the interests of justice – the safety of the American people and the fairness of our judicial system – are not served by a system of advisory sentencing guidelines.

The status quo is dangerous and untenable – not because our judges aren't trying to do that right thing. They are acting in good faith. But the goals of public safety and fairness sought by Congress in the Sentencing Reform Act are the expressed will of the American people. Our sentencing system works best when judges have some sentencing discretion, but discretion bound by sentencing guidelines created through the legislative process. The time has come for policy makers, jurists, attorneys, legislators and concerned Americans like you to work together to restore a system of mandatory sentencing guidelines. The alternative is, I fear, inevitable. Criminals will receive shorter sentences, and unwarranted disparities will again plague our justice system.

In the Booker decision, the Supreme Court invited Congress to consider legislation to construct a sentencing system that meets the requirements of the Sixth Amendment. As a matter of fact, the High Court put it quite bluntly: "The ball now lies in Congress's court." It is imperative that Congress accept this invitation. Justice demands that we work together to put public safety and fairness once again at the forefront of our federal sentencing.

Two options present themselves.

Congress could enact a series of mandatory minimum sentence statutes. For example, Congress could pass new mandatory minimums for crimes including fraud offenses, gun trafficking and gun possession in the commission of certain crimes, and for leaders of white collar offenses and for career criminals. And because these types of offenses account for nearly 66 percent of all federal cases, these statutory changes would mean that two-thirds of federal cases would carry mandatory minimum sentences consistent with the federal sentencing guidelines.

A system of statutory mandatory minimums would be simple and constitutional, provided that the factors that trigger the mandatory minimum sentences are based on facts proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

A second approach that would preserve the protections and principles of the Sentencing Reform Act would be the construction of a minimum guideline system.

This would involve a relatively simple legislative change. First, the sentencing court would be bound by the guidelines minimum, just as it was before the Booker decision. Second, the guidelines maximum would remain advisory, and the court would be bound to consider it, but not bound to adhere to it, just as it is today under Booker.

Under this proposal, advisory maximum sentences would continue to give the courts the benefit of the Sentencing Commission's collective wisdom and statistical analysis. These guidelines would provide for sentences that would fall well below the statutory maximum in most cases.

The advantages of a minimum guideline system are many. It would preserve the traditional division of responsibility between judges and juries in criminal cases, and retain the important function of the U.S. Sentencing Commission. And most importantly, a minimum guideline system would be fully consistent with the Sixth Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in both Booker and Blakely v. Washington. These decisions only affect cases in which post-conviction judicial findings of fact mandate or authorize an increase in the maximum of the otherwise applicable sentencing range. In Harris v. the United States, the Court held that factors which increase the minimum sentence do not have to be submitted to a jury. In short, so long as facts found by judges applying the sentencing guidelines increase only the minimum sentence to be served, the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights would be fully protected.

I understand and recognize that defendants who are dissatisfied with their sentences will ask the Supreme Court to reconsider Harris, and challenge legislation providing for a minimum guidelines system. That possibility, however, does not call for inaction. Rather, it should be understood as an invitation for all concerned parties to work together to ensure a system that preserves the protections and principles of the federal sentencing guidelines.

Federal and state judges administer justice in the Nation's courtrooms every day. Deciding the fate of a defendant is a serious and difficult task, and our judges discharge this obligation conscientiously and with integrity. But it is inevitable that, with so many different individual judges involved, in so many different jurisdictions, shorter sentences and disparities among sentences will occur under a system of advisory guidelines.

The time has come for us to act. And as we go forward, we are guided by a fundamental fact: sentencing reform has been a success in both reducing crime and reducing unwarranted disparities. It has made Americans safer and our system of justice fairer. For the past two decades there has been an ongoing, healthy debate over the specifics of the sentencing guidelines. But there has also been a bipartisan consensus in support of the principles of sentencing reform. Today I pledge the resources of the Department of Justice toward the re-creation of such a system. The Department will work with Congress, the judiciary and other organizations – like this one – to design a sentencing system that responds to the needs and concerns of all those who share our commitment to providing protection to the American people and equal justice to defendants.

Our system of justice is predicated on the belief that every human being has dignity – and it is sustained by individuals such as you working in defense of this belief.

Your work, your commitment and your sacrifice have given the victims of crime a voice in our system of justice, and have helped drive violent crime to its lowest rate in three decades.

With your support and inspiration, victims of crime have come forward with the hope of building a better future. They have come forward in the belief that one person's injustice can inspire greater justice for all.

And so it falls to us to act. Not out of guilt, and not out of retribution, but in the firm belief that progress is possible. The system of sentencing we have built over the past twenty years teeters on the edge. May history record that we used this time to reach out and steady it; that we worked together to secure a system of tougher, fairer, and greater justice for all.

Thank you very much.

Prepared Remarks of Attorney General Alberto Gonzales
Sentencing Guidelines Speech
Washington, D.C.
June 21, 2005 – 12:00 PM

Thank you …

It's an honor to be here.

This is the second occasion in my short time as Attorney General of the United States that I have had the opportunity to address victims of crime. Being among you, and hearing your stories, always reminds me that your movement is mis-named.

My wife, Rebecca, and I have a long-standing concern for the issues facing victims of crime. Becky spent three-and-a-half years in the Texas Attorney General's Office supporting sexual assault programs across the state. Together we have met with hundreds of crime victims, heard their stories and worked to protect their rights.

We know from experience that there is nothing in the word "victim" that captures this movement.

True victimization requires the disinterest of leaders, the silence of good people, and, finally, the hopelessness of the victims themselves.

But there is a wonderful metamorphosis at the heart of the victims' rights movement. From the ranks of the powerless has emerged a movement of the empowered.

For decades, victims of crime in America lived in fear, and suffered in silence. So-called experts told us that high levels of crime were inevitable, especially among the poor. The message to victims of crime – who were disproportionately poor as well– was inescapable: learn to live with it.

But thanks to the pioneering work of victims' groups and other concerned Americans, the status of victims of crime in America began to change. Victims, and their friends and loved ones, began to demand more from our system of justice. One of their central demands has been that those convicted of crimes serve tough and fair sentences. And for the past twenty years we have constructed a sentencing system that met this demand – and has helped to achieve the lowest crime rates in a generation. But today that system is threatened.

The threat that hangs over our system of justice is best illustrated by the story of two defendants, both convicted of similar charges involving possession of child pornography, one in Manhattan, the other across the Hudson River in New Jersey.

The New Jersey defendant faced a sentencing range of 30 to 37 months but was given a sentence of 41 months in prison.

The other defendant, in Manhattan, was also convicted of possession of child pornography. In addition, he had been arrested in Pennsylvania, where he had traveled in an attempt to have sexual relations with a "child" he had met over the internet. The "child" turned out to be an undercover [TBD] officer.

The Manhattan defendant faced a sentencing range of 27 to 33 months in prison, but received only probation.

What made the difference? Two different judges, and a Supreme

DOJ_NMG_ 0144497

Court ruling that said they were not bound by guidelines that have governed federal sentencing for almost twenty years.

In January, the Supreme Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines mandated by bipartisan congressional majorities in 1984 are no longer mandatory for federal judges.

In U.S. v. Booker, the Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines violated a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury because they require that judges, not juries, make factual findings which increase a defendant's maximum prison sentence. The result is that, today, judges are no longer bound by the law to impose a sentence within the range prescribed by the guidelines.

So in the New Jersey child pornography case, the judge deemed it necessary to protect the public from the defendant and imposed a sentence that exceeded the guideline range. But in the Manhattan case, the judge reasoned that the defendant would benefit from continued psychological treatment and ordered probation only.

The story of these two defendants is just one case among many that illustrates a developing and troubling trend in the aftermath of the Booker decision. No longer bound by sentencing guidelines, judges are exercising their discretion to impose sentences that depart from the carefully considered ranges developed by the U.S. Sentencing Commission. In the process, two critical elements of our criminal justice system are being lost: the protection of the public from criminal offenders, and the protection of defendants from unfair sentences.

The federal sentencing guidelines were the result of

Republicans and Democrats coming together in response to the high crime rates of the 1960s and 1970s to propose, create and sustain an invaluable tool of justice.

As the rates of serious violent felonies more than tripled in the 1960s and 1970s, a consensus emerged that society needed to be protected from the early release of offenders.

Also undermining Americans' faith in the system was the fact that significant disparities existed in the sentences received by individuals guilty of equally serious, similar offenses.

A widespread and bipartisan consensus took hold that our system of sentencing was broken.

So in 1984, lawmakers from across the ideological spectrum passed the Sentencing Reform Act with two broad goals in mind.

The first was to increase the safety of law-abiding Americans by restoring in sentencing an emphasis on punishment, incapacitation and deterrence.

The second was to ensure fairness in sentencing. The statute's guiding principle was consistency – defendants who had committed equally serious crimes and had similar criminal backgrounds should receive similar sentences, irrespective of their race, location or economic background.

In the seventeen-plus years that they have been in existence, federal sentencing guidelines have achieved the ambitious goals of public safety and fairness set out by Congress.

In contrast to thirty years ago, the United States today is experiencing crime rates that are the lowest in a generation. Thirty-four million violent crimes were not committed in the last decade that would have been had violent crime rates remained the same. In 2003 alone, over six million Americans were not murdered, robbed, or assaulted.

No single piece of legislation or policy change is by itself responsible for today's historically low levels of violent crime. But multiple, independent studies of our criminal justice system confirm what our common sense tells us: increased incarceration means reduced crime, and federal and state sentencing reform has helped incarcerate the most violent, repeat offenders.

For federal prisoners, the average time spent behind bars has increased a full 68 percent since 1990. For state prisoners, the average time served is up 30 percent.

Studies have shown that each 10 percent increase in the prison population produces a 1-3 percent decrease in the number of serious crimes.

Federal sentencing guidelines, along with improved state sentencing systems based on the same model, have helped drive down the crime rate because they have helped us put in prison – and keep in prison – those who are most likely to commit future crimes.

Using the most recent data we have, the Bureau of Justice Statistics found that 89 percent of the people in state and federal prison are violent offenders, repeat offenders, or both. Another study from 2002 found that almost two-thirds of the increase in the state prison population between 1995 and 2001 was due to the increase in violent offenders incarcerated. As we have kept these dangerous offenders in prison instead of releasing them, not surprisingly, our communities have become safer.

Federal sentencing guidelines have helped keep Americans safe while also delivering on their promise to reduce unwarranted disparities in sentences. When the U.S. Sentencing Commission took stock of fifteen years of federal sentencing guidelines in 2004, it noted that careful studies by both the Commission itself and others have determined that the guidelines, quote, "have succeeded at the job they were principally designed to do: reduce unwarranted disparity arising from differences among judges."

In seventeen years, mandatory sentencing guidelines withstood multiple constitutional challenges. They have worked in coordination with state truth-in-sentencing laws and mandatory minimum sentences to drive down crime. Sentencing guidelines have not been static but have evolved over time to adapt to changing circumstances and better understanding. Judges, legislators, policy makers, prosecutors, defense lawyers and others have worked hard for two decades to develop, preserve, and strengthen a system of sentencing guidelines that has protected Americans and improved American justice. All of this effort – and all of this achievement – is now threatened.

In the five months since the Booker decision, the Department of Justice has viewed federal sentencing decisions with measured concern. We have been careful not to draw premature conclusions. The evidence, however, points toward two problematic trends: an increasing disparity in sentences, and a drift toward lesser sentences.

Our U.S. Attorneys consistently report that a critical law enforcement tool has been taken from them. Since the government is no longer the gatekeeper for granting leniency in return for cooperation under the guidelines system, major witnesses are increasingly less inclined to cooperate with prosecutors. We are witnessing a return to thirty years ago, when criminals and potential criminals were encouraged to "play the odds" in our criminal justice system, betting that the luck of the draw – the judge randomly assigned to their case – will result in a lighter sentence.

In addition, experience is already pointing toward an emerging judicial lottery, in which dramatically varying sentences are being determined on the basis of inappropriate factors – factors that could not be considered before Booker.

In one recent case a South Carolina man pled guilty to federal weapons and drug trafficking charges. After his arrest on these charges, this defendant was released on bond, failed a drug test and attempted to flee from South Carolina. Federal marshals caught up with him and, after a six-hour standoff, law enforcement authorities tear gassed him out the house where he was holed-up. When he was re-arrested, police discovered that he had a fully automatic machine gun in his possession. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, this armed, career criminal, who had a long history of state charges related to assault, drug trafficking, and weapons, faced between 22 and 27 years in prison. However, the judge sentenced him to only ten, offering no explanation. The Department is appealing this unreasonably low sentence.

In a case involving white collar crime, a Kansas rancher got $1.5 million in cattle loans, falsely claiming that he was using the money to buy live cattle. He was audacious enough to take bank officials to livestock pens falsely claiming that the cows he was showing them were purchased with loan proceeds, when, in fact he lost all the money betting on cattle futures. He pled guilty to defrauding the bank and faced a sentencing range of 3 to 4 years under the guidelines. But the judge gave him probation only, reasoning that the defendant had suffered enough when the bank foreclosed on his house.

We have also seen how the Booker decision led directly to a radically reduced sentence for a multi-millionaire convicted of evading federal taxes.

This New York defendant was convicted in 2003 for evading the payment of six million dollars in taxes by such means as moving out of the country valuable assets – namely, a fleet of Rolls Royces and a suit of armor made for King Henri the Second of France. The judge said he would have liked to impose a considerably lesser sentence, but felt constrained by the guidelines.

A year and half later, after the Booker decision, the defendant petitioned the court for re-sentencing and the judge reduced his sentence to seven months. The judge noted that the defendant's age and the need to take care of his wife – not normally relevant sentencing factors pre-Booker – now justified his lesser sentence.

These are not isolated examples. Initial statistics compiled by the U.S. Sentencing Commission seem to indicate that in the five months since the Booker decision, compliance with the sentencing guidelines is decreasing. According to the Sentencing Commission, sentencing within the guidelines by federal judges has fallen from almost 70 percent in 2003 to under 63 percent today.

As Attorney General, I have a responsibility both to protect the American people and to defend the protections afforded to them by our Constitution. After reviewing the data, consulting with our prosecutors in the field, and reaching out to other interested parties, I have come to the conclusion that the interests of justice – the safety of the American people and the fairness of our judicial system – are not served by a system of advisory sentencing guidelines.

Second, the guidelines maximum would remain advisory, and the court would be bound to consider it, but not bound to adhere to it, just as it is today under Booker.

Under this proposal, advisory maximum sentences would continue to give the courts the benefit of the Sentencing Commission's collective wisdom and statistical analysis. These guidelines would provide for sentences that would fall well below the statutory maximum in most cases.

The advantages of a minimum guideline system are many. These decisions only affect cases in which post-conviction judicial findings of fact mandate or authorize an increase in the maximum of the otherwise applicable sentencing range. In Harris v. the United States, the Court held that factors which increase the minimum sentence do not have to be submitted to a jury. In short, so long as facts found by judges applying the sentencing guidelines increase only the minimum sentence to be served, the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights would be fully protected.

I understand and recognize that defendants who are dissatisfied with their sentences will ask the Supreme Court to reconsider Harris, and challenge legislation providing for a minimum guidelines system. That possibility, however, does not call for inaction. Prepared Remarks of Attorney General Alberto Gonzales
Washington, D.C.
June 21, 2005 – 12:00 PM

Thank you …

It's an honor to be here.

This is the second occasion in my short time as Attorney General of the United States that I have had the opportunity to address victims of crime. Being among you, and hearing your stories, always reminds me that your movement is mis-named.

My wife, Rebecca, and I have a long-standing concern for the issues facing victims of crime. Together we have met with hundreds of crime victims, heard their stories and worked to protect their rights.

We know from experience that there is nothing in the word "victim" that captures this movement.

True victimization requires the disinterest of leaders, the silence of good people, and, finally, the hopelessness of the victims themselves.

But there is a wonderful metamorphosis at the heart of the victims' rights movement. From the ranks of the powerless has emerged a movement of the empowered.

For decades, victims of crime in America lived in fear, and suffered in silence. So-called experts told us that high levels of crime were inevitable, especially among the poor. The message to victims of crime – who were disproportionately poor as well– was inescapable: learn to live with it.

But thanks to the pioneering work of victims' groups and other concerned Americans, the status of victims of crime in America began to change. Victims, and their friends and loved ones, began to demand more from our system of justice. One of their central demands has been that those convicted of crimes serve tough and fair sentences. And for the past twenty years we have constructed a sentencing system that met this demand – and has helped to achieve the lowest crime rates in a generation. But today that system is threatened.

The threat that hangs over our system of justice is best illustrated by the story of two defendants, both convicted of similar charges involving possession of child pornography, one in Manhattan, the other across the Hudson River in New Jersey.

The New Jersey defendant faced a sentencing range of 30 to 37 months but was given a sentence of 41 months in prison.

The other defendant, in Manhattan, was also convicted of possession of child pornography. In addition, he had been arrested in Pennsylvania, where he had traveled in an attempt to have sexual relations with a "child" he had met over the internet. The "child" turned out to be an undercover [TBD] officer.

The Manhattan defendant faced a sentencing range of 27 to 33 months in prison, but received only probation.

What made the difference? Two different judges, and a Supreme

DOJ_NMG_ 0144513

Court ruling that said they were not bound by guidelines that have governed federal sentencing for almost twenty years.

In January, the Supreme Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines mandated by bipartisan congressional majorities in 1984 are no longer mandatory for federal judges.

In U.S. v. Booker, the Court ruled that federal sentencing guidelines violated a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury because they require that judges, not juries, make factual findings which increase a defendant's maximum prison sentence. The result is that, today, judges are no longer bound by the law to impose a sentence within the range prescribed by the guidelines.

So in the New Jersey child pornography case, the judge deemed it necessary to protect the public from the defendant and imposed a sentence that exceeded the guideline range. But in the Manhattan case, the judge reasoned that the defendant would benefit from continued psychological treatment and ordered probation only.

The story of these two defendants is just one case among many that illustrates a developing and troubling trend in the aftermath of the Booker decision. No longer bound by sentencing guidelines, judges are exercising their discretion to impose sentences that depart from the carefully considered ranges developed by the U.S. Sentencing Commission. In the process, two critical elements of our criminal justice system are being lost: the protection of the public from criminal offenders, and the protection of defendants from unfair sentences.

The federal sentencing guidelines were the result of

Republicans and Democrats coming together in response to the high crime rates of the 1960s and 1970s to propose, create and sustain an invaluable tool of justice.

As the rates of serious violent felonies more than tripled in the 1960s and 1970s, a consensus emerged that society needed to be protected from the early release of offenders.

Also undermining Americans' faith in the system was the fact that significant disparities existed in the sentences received by individuals guilty of equally serious, similar offenses.

A widespread and bipartisan consensus took hold that our system of sentencing was broken.

So in 1984, lawmakers from across the ideological spectrum passed the Sentencing Reform Act with two broad goals in mind.

The first was to increase the safety of law-abiding Americans by restoring in sentencing an emphasis on punishment, incapacitation and deterrence.

The second was to ensure fairness in sentencing. The statute's guiding principle was consistency – defendants who had committed equally serious crimes and had similar criminal backgrounds should receive similar sentences, irrespective of their race, location or economic background.

In the seventeen-plus years that they have been in existence, federal sentencing guidelines have achieved the ambitious goals of public safety and fairness set out by Congress.

In contrast to thirty years ago, the United States today is experiencing crime rates that are the lowest in a generation. Thirty-four million violent crimes were not committed in the last decade that would have been had violent crime rates remained the same. In 2003 alone, over six million Americans were not murdered, robbed, or assaulted.

No single piece of legislation or policy change is by itself responsible for today's historically low levels of violent crime. But multiple, independent studies of our criminal justice system confirm what our common sense tells us: increased incarceration means reduced crime, and federal and state sentencing reform has helped incarcerate the most violent, repeat offenders.

For federal prisoners, the average time spent behind bars has increased a full 68 percent since 1990. For state prisoners, the average time served is up 30 percent.

Studies have shown that each 10 percent increase in the prison population produces a 1-3 percent decrease in the number of serious crimes.

Federal sentencing guidelines, along with improved state sentencing systems based on the same model, have helped drive down the crime rate because they have helped us put in prison – and keep in prison – those who are most likely to commit future crimes.

Using the most recent data we have, the Bureau of Justice Statistics found that 89 percent of the people in state and federal prison are violent offenders, repeat offenders, or both. Another study from 2002 found that almost two-thirds of the increase in the state prison population between 1995 and 2001 was due to the increase in violent offenders incarcerated. As we have kept these dangerous offenders in prison instead of releasing them, not surprisingly, our communities have become safer.

Federal sentencing guidelines have helped keep Americans safe while also delivering on their promise to reduce unwarranted disparities in sentences. When the U.S. Sentencing Commission took stock of fifteen years of federal sentencing guidelines in 2004, it noted that careful studies by both the Commission itself and others have determined that the guidelines, quote, "have succeeded at the job they were principally designed to do: reduce unwarranted disparity arising from differences among judges."

In seventeen years, mandatory sentencing guidelines withstood multiple constitutional challenges. They have worked in coordination with state truth-in-sentencing laws and mandatory minimum sentences to drive down crime. Sentencing guidelines have not been static but have evolved over time to adapt to changing circumstances and better understanding. Judges, legislators, policy makers, prosecutors, defense lawyers and others have worked hard for two decades to develop, preserve, and strengthen a system of sentencing guidelines that has protected Americans and improved American justice. All of this effort – and all of this achievement – is now threatened.

In the five months since the Booker decision, the Department of Justice has viewed federal sentencing decisions with measured concern. We have been careful not to draw premature conclusions. The evidence, however, points toward two problematic trends: an increasing disparity in sentences, and a drift toward lesser sentences.

Our U.S. Attorneys consistently report that a critical law enforcement tool has been taken from them. Since the government is no longer the gatekeeper for granting leniency in return for cooperation under the guidelines system, major witnesses are increasingly less inclined to cooperate with prosecutors. We are witnessing a return to thirty years ago, when criminals and potential criminals were encouraged to "play the odds" in our criminal justice system, betting that the luck of the draw – the judge randomly assigned to their case – will result in a lighter sentence.

In addition, experience is already pointing toward an emerging judicial lottery, in which dramatically varying sentences are being determined on the basis of inappropriate factors – factors that could not be considered before Booker.

In one recent case a South Carolina man pled guilty to federal weapons and drug trafficking charges. After his arrest on these charges, this defendant was released on bond, failed a drug test and attempted to flee from South Carolina. Federal marshals caught up with him and, after a six-hour standoff, law enforcement authorities tear gassed him out the house where he was holed-up. When he was re-arrested, police discovered that he had a fully automatic machine gun in his possession. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, this armed, career criminal, who had a long history of state charges related to assault, drug trafficking, and weapons, faced between 22 and 27 years in prison. However, the judge sentenced him to only ten, offering no explanation. The Department is appealing this unreasonably low sentence.

In a case involving white collar crime, a Kansas rancher got $1.5 million in cattle loans, falsely claiming that he was using the money to buy live cattle. He was audacious enough to take bank officials to livestock pens falsely claiming that the cows he was showing them were purchased with loan proceeds, when, in fact he lost all the money betting on cattle futures. He pled guilty to defrauding the bank and faced a sentencing range of 3 to 4 years under the guidelines. But the judge gave him probation only, reasoning that the defendant had suffered enough when the bank foreclosed on his house.

We have also seen how the Booker decision led directly to a radically reduced sentence for a multi-millionaire convicted of evading federal taxes.

This New York defendant was convicted in 2003 for evading the payment of six million dollars in taxes by such means as moving out of the country valuable assets – namely, a fleet of Rolls Royces and a suit of armor made for King Henri the Second of France. Under the then-mandatory sentencing guidelines, the defendant was sentenced to 41 to 51 months in prison. The judge said he would have liked to impose a considerably lesser sentence, but felt constrained by the guidelines.

A year and half later, after the Booker decision, the defendant petitioned the court for re-sentencing and the judge reduced his sentence to seven months. The judge noted that the defendant's age and the need to take care of his wife – not normally relevant sentencing factors pre-Booker – now justified his lesser sentence.

These are not isolated examples. Initial statistics compiled by the U.S. Sentencing Commission seem to indicate that in the five months since the Booker decision, compliance with the sentencing guidelines is decreasing. According to the Sentencing Commission, sentencing within the guidelines by federal judges has fallen from almost 70 percent in 2003 to under 63 percent today.

As Attorney General, I have a responsibility both to protect the American people and to defend the protections afforded to them by our Constitution. After reviewing the data, consulting with our prosecutors in the field, and reaching out to other interested parties, I have come to the conclusion that the interests of justice – the safety of the American people and the fairness of our judicial system – are not served by a system of advisory sentencing guidelines.

The status quo is dangerous and untenable – not because our judges aren't trying to do that right thing. They are acting in good faith. But the goals of public safety and fairness sought by Congress in the Sentencing Reform Act are the expressed will of the American people. Our sentencing system works best when judges have some sentencing discretion, but discretion bound by sentencing guidelines created through the legislative process. The time has come for policy makers, jurists, attorneys, legislators and concerned Americans like you to work together to restore a system of mandatory sentencing guidelines. The alternative is, I fear, inevitable. Criminals will receive shorter sentences, and unwarranted disparities will again plague our justice system.

In the Booker decision, the Supreme Court invited Congress to consider legislation to construct a sentencing system that meets the requirements of the Sixth Amendment. As a matter of fact, the High Court put it quite bluntly: "The ball now lies in Congress's court." It is imperative that Congress accept this invitation. Justice demands that we work together to put public safety and fairness once again at the forefront of our federal sentencing.

Two options present themselves.

Congress could enact a series of mandatory minimum sentence statutes. For example, Congress could pass new mandatory minimums for crimes including fraud offenses, gun trafficking and gun possession in the commission of certain crimes, and for leaders of white collar offenses and for career criminals. And because these types of offenses account for nearly 66 percent of all federal cases, these statutory changes would mean that two-thirds of federal cases would carry mandatory minimum sentences consistent with the federal sentencing guidelines.

A system of statutory mandatory minimums would be simple and constitutional, provided that the factors that trigger the mandatory minimum sentences are based on facts proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

A second approach that would preserve the protections and principles of the Sentencing Reform Act would be the construction of a minimum guideline system.

This would involve a relatively simple legislative change. First, the sentencing court would be bound by the guidelines minimum, just as it was before the Booker decision. Second, the guidelines maximum would remain advisory, and the court would be bound to consider it, but not bound to adhere to it, just as it is today under Booker.

Under this proposal, advisory maximum sentences would continue to give the courts the benefit of the Sentencing Commission's collective wisdom and statistical analysis. These guidelines would provide for sentences that would fall well below the statutory maximum in most cases.

The advantages of a minimum guideline system are many. It would preserve the traditional division of responsibility between judges and juries in criminal cases, and retain the important function of the U.S. Sentencing Commission. And most importantly, a minimum guideline system would be fully consistent with the Sixth Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in both Booker and Blakely v. Washington. These decisions only affect cases in which post-conviction judicial findings of fact mandate or authorize an increase in the maximum of the otherwise applicable sentencing range. In Harris v. the United States, the Court held that factors which increase the minimum sentence do not have to be submitted to a jury. In short, so long as facts found by judges applying the sentencing guidelines increase only the minimum sentence to be served, the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights would be fully protected.

I understand and recognize that defendants who are dissatisfied with their sentences will ask the Supreme Court to reconsider Harris, and challenge legislation providing for a minimum guidelines system. That possibility, however, does not call for inaction. Rather, it should be understood as an invitation for all concerned parties to work together to ensure a system that preserves the protections and principles of the federal sentencing guidelines.

Federal and state judges administer justice in the Nation's courtrooms every day. Deciding the fate of a defendant is a serious and difficult task, and our judges discharge this obligation conscientiously and with integrity. But it is inevitable that, with so many different individual judges involved, in so many different jurisdictions, shorter sentences and disparities among sentences will occur under a system of advisory guidelines.

The time has come for us to act. And as we go forward, we are guided by a fundamental fact: sentencing reform has been a success in both reducing crime and reducing unwarranted disparities. It has made Americans safer and our system of justice fairer. For the past two decades there has been an ongoing, healthy debate over the specifics of the sentencing guidelines. But there has also been a bipartisan consensus in support of the principles of sentencing reform. Today I pledge the resources of the Department of Justice toward the re-creation of such a system. The Department will work with Congress, the judiciary and other organizations – like this one – to design a sentencing system that responds to the needs and concerns of all those who share our commitment to providing protection to the American people and equal justice to defendants.

Our system of justice is predicated on the belief that every human being has dignity – and it is sustained by individuals such as you working in defense of this belief.

Your work, your commitment and your sacrifice have given the victims of crime a voice in our system of justice, and have helped drive violent crime to its lowest rate in three decades.

With your support and inspiration, victims of crime have come forward with the hope of building a better future. They have come forward in the belief that one person's injustice can inspire greater justice for all.

And so it falls to us to act. Not out of guilt, and not out of retribution, but in the firm belief that progress is possible. The system of sentencing we have built over the past twenty years teeters on the edge. May history record that we used this time to reach out and steady it; that we worked together to secure a system of tougher, fairer, and greater justice for all.

Thank you very much.

Robert thought you might want to peruse the remarks he made on sentencing guidelines last year before the ABA. I've left a copy on your chair. Some of the same points appear in the AG's draft speech, but there may be a couple that aren't in the AG's speech that may or may not be something you wish to consider including. Robert made the point, for example, that, far from locking up relatively benign petty offenders, under the guidelines regime 92% of those incarcerated were either violent offenders, repeat offenders, or both.

1. At page 7, in the first full paragraph, the phrase "return to thirty years ago" probably should be "return to twenty years ago," shortly before the Sentencing Guidelines went into effect.

2. At page 10, change the third paragraph to eliminate the implication that it is unconstitutional for judges to make factual findings in support of minimum sentences: "A system of mandatory minimum sentences would be simple and constitutional."

I would still prefer to have you introduce me. Our relationship goes back to the beginning of this administration. And, one of the most memorable experience of my life was our train trip together to New York City after 9-11 to meet with city officials and visit the disaster site. I saw both your strength and compassion.

If you receive a letter from the DC bar inviting you to either buy a table or pay for the June 23d event, please disregard. You and your wife (if she can attend) will be guests of the bar. There is a reception beforehand to promote pro bono activities, but the real Dinner starts at 7:00. You are being put on the program now as the individual introducting me (which will occur about 8:30 pm).

As I promised, I will give you draft talking points. If you believe the AG is willing to have you read a letter from him at the event, I am also willing to draft something for him.

Thanks again for agreeing to do this. We expect about 400 people including the Chief Judges of the DC Courts.

John

Here is the letter being sent out by the current Bar President:

Please join me for the installation of John C. Cruden as the 34th President of the D.C. Bar at the 2005 Annual Business Meeting and Awards Dinner on Thursday, June 23, at the Capital Hilton, 16th & K Streets, NW, Washington, D.C. I will be honored to pass the ceremonial gavel to John at this time-honored D.C. Bar event, which will begin with a reception at 7:00 p.m., followed by dinner at 7:30 p.m.

This year we also will present the prestigious Justice William J. Brennan Jr. Award for Public Service to [redacted] for [redacted] contributions and expertise in the areas of poverty, welfare, juvenile justice, and constitutional law. We will also acknowledge the extraordinary work of individual Sections, committees, pro bono lawyers and law firms, and others whose service to the Bar and the community deserves our special recognition.

We look forward to having you and your colleagues join us on this very special evening to salute outstanding members of our Bar. Tables of 10 can be purchased, at cost, for $900. To make your dinner reservation, please visit us online at www.dcbar.org/annual_meeting or use the enclosed flyer and return it with your check payable to the D.C. Bar by Thursday, June 16.

Sincerely,

[redacted]

For the Monday meetings (which are at 4:00 pm), we do discuss classified material sometimes, but normally only at the Secret level. We obviously can avoid donig that if there is any problem before Neil gains a full clearance. The meetings are in a conference room in the 5200 corridor, on the 10th St side of the building -- I cannot recall the exact number, but I think it is around 5224. I will check. And, I will stop by Neil's office today to introduce myself -- is there a good time for me to drop in? Again, I apologize for failing to follow up sooner.

Doug,
Hope all is well. Wanted to touch base with you and let you know that we have a new Principal Deputy Associate AG, Neil Gorsuch. Neil will be involved in the Monday afternoon meetings and in terrorism-related litigation matters overall for OASG. First thing's first, is there a particular level of clearance required to participate in the Monday afternoon meetings? Neil will have an interim clearance in short order, just wanted to double check with you. Next, where and exactly at what time are the Monday meetings? Maybe you could stop by Neil's office shortly before the next one for a quick introduction? (He is in Brian Boyle's old office). Thanks very much Doug. --Lou

Dear Friends,

You are invited to help celebrate the Dedication of McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area (MCNCA) on Thursday, June 23. Secretary of the Interior Gale Norton and former Congressman Scott McInnis will be keynote speakers at the Dedication. Scott will also introduce the newly formed â?? Friends of McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area,â?? the non-profit corporation established to assist the Bureau of Land Management in strengthening community stewardship.

Establishment of a Friends group has been a longtime goal for the NCA, and I am very pleased that the Dedication will also be their public debut. The mission statement of the Friends is an excellent fit with the goals that BLM and the community established for the NCA: â??The Friends of McInnis Canyons NCA is committed to enhancing personal and community stewardship of natural, recreational, cultural and heritage resources on public lands encompassing the McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area.â??

The Dedication will take place at the Devils Canyon Trailhead, beginning promptly at 9 a.m., and BLM Rangers will be on hand to assist visitors with parking. The Dedication will take place at the Devils Canyon Kiosk, a short Â¼-mile hike from the trailhead, and should last no more than 30 minutes.

To summarize:

What: Dedication of McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area
Where: Devils Canyon Trailhead Kiosk (just west of Kings View Estates)
When: 9 a.m., Thursday, June 23 (please arrive early to allow for parking and a brief walk to the Dedication site)

No RSVP is required. I look forward to seeing you there.

laundering (18 U.S.C. § 1956). The defendant and co-defendants held Vietnamese factory workers who were brought to American Samoa, to work as sewing machine operators in the Daewoosa Samoa garment factory in involuntary servitude. The workers were deprived of food, beaten and physically restrained in order to force them to work.

- Sentencing Scheduled in Texas Bias Motivated Crimes Case: On June 22nd, sentencing is scheduled to occur in United States v. Nunez-Flores (W.D. Tex.). On March 22, defendant Antonio Nunez-Flores entered a guilty plea to violating 18 U.S.C. § 247 (damage to religious property), and 18 U.S.C. § 844(h) (malicious damage and use of an explosive in the commission of a felony). Defendant Nunez-Flores admitted that he threw a Molotov cocktail at the Islamic Center of El Paso and placed a second, similar device near a gas meter on the Center's property.

LAST WEEK

- Indictment Returned in Colorado Involuntary Servitude Case: On June 10th, a federal grand jury returned a four count indictment in United States v. Al-Turki and Khonaizan (D. Colo.), charging defendants Homaidan Al-Turki and Sarah Khonaizan with violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1589 and § 1594 (forced labor and attempted forced labor), 18 U.S.C. § 1592 (document servitude), 8 U.S.C. § 1324 (harboring an alien). The defendants allegedly brought the victim, an Indonesian woman, to the United States to continue working for them as a domestic servant. During the next four years while in the United States, the victim was forced to work excessive hours for little or no pay, was not allowed to leave the house, and was subjected to repeated sexual assaults by defendant Al-Turki. Additionally, the victim's passport was seized and her visa was allowed to lapse, after which the defendants threatened her with deportation.

- Sentencing in Oregon Bias Motivated Crime Case: On June 13th, in United States v. Sigley and Smith (D. Ore.), defendant Steven Hale Smith was sentenced to 6 months home detention, 40 hours community service, and 3 years probation for his guilty plea to violating 18 U.S.C. § 247 (damage to religious property). On May 2nd, co-defendant Sean Andrew Sigley was sentenced to 12 months in prison for his guilty plea to violating one count of 18 U.S.C. § 241 (conspiracy). On May 24, 2003, the defendants spray painted swastikas and hate messages on pillars and other parts of the Congregation Shaarie Torah Cemetery.

- Division Contacts Georgia to Resolve School Desegregation Cases: On June 13th, the Division sent a letter to the Attorney General and Superintendent of Education of the State of Georgia requesting to meet with them to discuss ways of working together to resolve the current school desegregation cases in the State.

This is the Division's second letter to the State and it was prompted in part by the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Georgia asking the Division to move the cases in the judicial district toward closure.

- Complaint Filed in New York Fair Housing Act and RLUIPA Case: On June 10th, the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York filed a complaint in United States v. Village of Airmont, et al. (S.D.N.Y.) alleging that the Village of Airmont, New York, unlawfully discriminates on the basis of religion, in violation of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act ("RLUIPA") and the Fair Housing Act ("FHA") by maintaining a zoning code that prevents religious boarding schools from operating anywhere in the Village. The Complaint follows the Airmont's Planning Board denial of Congregation Mischknois Lavier Yakov's application to build a religious school, citing the zoning code's blanket prohibition against any residential student housing. The Complaint alleges that Airmont's ban on boarding schools and the treatment of Congregation Mischknois Lavier Yakov's application to build a religious boarding school amount to intentional discrimination in violation of both the FHA and RLUIPA Section 2(b)(2).

Subject: Invitation to McInnis Canyons NCA Dedication Event

Dear Friends,

You are invited to help celebrate the Dedication of McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area (MCNCA) on Thursday, June 23. Secretary of the Interior Gale Norton and former Congressman Scott McInnis will be keynote speakers at the Dedication. Scott will also introduce the newly formed â?? Friends of McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area,â?? the non-profit corporation established to assist the Bureau of Land Management in strengthening community stewardship.

Establishment of a Friends group has been a longtime goal for the NCA, and I am very pleased that the Dedication will also be their public debut. The mission statement of the Friends is an excellent fit with the goals that BLM and the community established for the NCA: â??The Friends of McInnis Canyons NCA is committed to enhancing personal and community stewardship of natural, recreational, cultural and heritage resources on public lands encompassing the McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area.â??

The Dedication will take place at the Devils Canyon Trailhead, beginning promptly at 9 a.m., and BLM Rangers will be on hand to assist visitors with parking. The Dedication will take place at the Devils Canyon Kiosk, a short Â¼-mile hike from the trailhead, and should last no more than 30 minutes.

To summarize:

What: Dedication of McInnis Canyons National Conservation Area
Where: Devils Canyon Trailhead Kiosk (just west of Kings View Estates)
When: 9 a.m., Thursday, June 23 (please arrive early to allow for parking and a brief walk to the Dedication site)

No RSVP is required. I look forward to seeing you there.

Sincerely,

Robert - thankyou again for trying to get this in front of the AG. If he would sign, then it could be read Thursday night. I addressed it to the Chief Judge as she will give me the oath of office, but it could have been addressed to anyone. I have also attached at the end of this e mail the interview of me that the Washington Lawyer just published. The one amusing thing in that interview that everyone has pointed out is that I took my LSAT in Saigon.

[redacted] Good luck on all of the tobacco litigation issues. Best. John

The Honorable Annice M. Wagner
Chief Judge
District of Columbia Court of Appeals
500 Indiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

Dear Chief Judge Wagner:

I understand that you will soon be swearing in John C Cruden to be President of the D.C. Bar. Although I was unable to come today and introduce John, I want you to know how proud all of the Department of Justice is to have John be the first government attorney to b serve as President of the D.C. Bar.

Those of you who know John are aware of his extraordinary accomplishments. A West Point Graduate, he first served in airborne, ranger, and Special Forces units in Germany and Vietnam before attending law school. After graduating summa cum laude from law school and clerking on the California Supreme Court, John attending the Army's Judge Advocate General's Graduate Course where he was selected outstanding graduate and simultaneously received his Masters in Government and Foreign Relations from the University of Virginia. His subsequent military assignments including being Chief of the Litigation Branch in Europe; General Counsel of the Defense Nuclear Agency; and the senior military attorney for a large jurisdiction in Germany. His last assignment in the military was as Chief Legislative Counsel of the Army, where he was awarded the Legion of Merit.

In the Department of Justice, John was named the Chief, Environmental Enforcement Section in 1991 where he led one of the largest litigating groups in the Department, supervising over 150 attorneys with nation-wide responsibilities to enforce the nation's environmental laws. Following a number of highly successful years, including his own accomplishments in the court room, John was selected as the career Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the Division. In that capacity he is responsible for all environmental litigation brought for or against the United States in federal district courts across the nation. For his work, John has been recognized a number of times as being one of the leading environmental litigators in the nations. You only need to search his name in the Westlaw index to find the large number of published cases in which he has played a key role.

At the beginning of this administration, John served as the Acting Assistant Attorney General from 2001 to 2002. Since that time, he has twice led the Environment and Natural Resources Division to the best years in their history in bringing successful enforcement cases, resulting in exceptional environmental results. For his great accomplishments during that time period, John was given the prestigious Presidential Rank Award and designated as a Distinguished Executive by President Bush. He is one of the few career attorneys to have received that award twice, by two successive Presidents.

Many of you also know that John has also promoted attorney professionalism and service. He is a frequent pro bono volunteer and has long encouraged others to provide legal service to the poor and disadvantaged. He has supported DC schools, and just last year lectured and participated in unique programs in Anacostia High School and Howard Law School. And, he is a swim coach in a Special Olympics program that has been quite successful. I would also be remiss if I did not point out that he [redacted]

I believe John will be an outstanding President and will well serve the over 80,000 members of the District of Columbia bar. We are proud of him and impressed that your Bar was wise enough to elect him as your leader.

Chief Justice Wagner, it gives me a great deal of personal pleasure to commend John Cruden to you and I highly recommend that you give him the oath of office.

Sincerely,

Meet the President: [redacted] C. Cruden
Interview by Kathryn Alfisi

[redacted] C. Cruden will begin [redacted] term as [redacted] D.C. Bar on [redacted]ne 23. Cruden is a senior official at the Department of [redacted]stice, serving as the career deputy assistant attorney general of the Environment and Natural Resources Division. [redacted] will be the first government attorney to serve as Bar president.

Prior to joining the Department of [redacted]stice in 1991, Cruden had a distinguished career in the military, serving as a criminal prosecutor, head of civil litigation in Europe, an agency general counsel, a staff judge advocate, and ultimately chief legislative counsel of the Army.

[redacted] is a West Point graduate. [redacted] received [redacted] law degree from the University of Santa Clara School of Law and master's degrees in government and foreign relations from the Woodrow Wilson School at the University of Virginia.

Where did you grow up?
I grew up in a small town in Michigan, which was then known as Taylor Township. It was one of the suburban communities around Detroit that sprung up before World War II when the auto industry dramatically increased and workers from across the United States were attracted to the promise of a job paying five dollars a day. [redacted]. It was a very nice childhood in a small town where people knew and depended upon each other.

What were your parents like?
I never knew my birth parents, as I was adopted when I was quite young. I was born in Kansas, and the family lore is that the birth mother was an unwed teenager. After my birth I apparently stayed in a Florence Crittenton home in Topeka until, as my aunt tells it, [redacted] received a call one day from a judge [redacted] knew who was aware that my parents wanted to adopt a child. After [redacted] agreed, I was immediately delivered to [redacted] by several court employees. My adopted parents then drove from Michigan to Kansas to pick me up, but it was months until they had an accurate birth certificate. My father was a Scottish immigrant and my mother's family was from Slovenia. They were wonderfully loving and supportive parents.

Growing up, did you have ambitions to become a lawyer?

DOJ_NMG_ 0144590

Not immediately. I had illusions of grandeur about becoming a professional basketball player, but despite endless hours of practice and playing on a few teams, I found I clearly lacked both height and talent. I didn't really develop an interest in the law until my time at West Point. While there I had several law classes that really sparked an interest. Later on, in my first assignment after West Point, I took additional law classes in the evening and became committed to becoming an attorney.

Why did you attend West Point?
Although my family was quite supportive, because I was the first person in my family to go to college, [redacted] had very little money. I received an academic and track scholarship from the University of Michigan, but it wasn't going to pay all of my expenses, so my track coach suggested that I consider a military academy. I then went through the process of applying to West Point, which included academic and physical requirements, but also required a congressional nomination. I was probably fortunate in that regard because I had been a speaker at an Eagle Awards banquet where I met the Michigan governor and [redacted] chief of staff and they supported me to obtain the necessary nomination.

Did you enjoy West Point?
It was an enormously challenging and exhilarating experience. Here I was, from a small town with absolutely no military experience, suddenly thrust into an intense military environment with a thousand other young people from across the United States and a number of foreign countries. It was very demanding physically and mentally, but I'm a better person for the experience.

My classmates from that time are still quite important to me. On my office wall right now is an original print by Paul R. Martin III depicting central West Point with a part of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial wall that includes the names of my 23 friends and classmates who died during that unfortunate war, including my roommate and debate partner, whose image is superimposed on the scene. It is entitled "Bond of Brothers."

How did you become interested in law at West Point?
West Point had a mandatory engineering curriculum then, but you could take a small number of electives each semester. The lead instructor in national security matters at that time was a very talented major named [redacted]. [redacted] had been a Rhodes scholar and a Heisman Trophy winner, and [redacted] all adored [redacted]. [redacted] was an absolutely excellent professor who taught us during the day and invited us into [redacted] home in the evening to talk about world events. [redacted] not only inspired me about the courses [redacted] taught, but also encouraged me in my interest in the law. I always thought [redacted] was a great example of what teachers can do to motivate and encourage young people.

What did you do after graduating from West Point?
The first, and best, thing that I did was to [redacted]

DOJ_NMG_ 0144591

[redacted]. After that I attended a bevy of military schools, including airborne, ranger, and jumpmaster training at Fort Benning, Georgia. From there I went to my first assignment, to a unique airborne unit located at Mainz, Germany.

When did you go to Vietnam?
I went directly from Germany to Vietnam, arriving there in early 1970. My first assignment was as the senior U.S. officer in a Vietnamese ranger battalion, and then later I transferred to the Special Forces. I'm still in contact with the Vietnamese officer I worked with, [redacted]. For my service in Vietnam, I received a number of awards, including the Bronze Star and the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry with Silver Star.

You took your LSAT in Saigon.
Yes. While still in Vietnam I decided I wanted to go to law school and learned, for the first time, that you had to take the LSAT in order to do that. I then learned there was going to be one offered in the spring of 1971 in Saigon.

What was it like taking the LSAT in Saigon?
The process was quite amusing. They required that everyone check their guns at the door and then passed out pencils for the test. A helicopter was waiting to transport individuals back to their unit when they finished. By the time I received the LSAT results, almost all of the law schools had stopped accepting applications. In fact, there were only two that were still accepting applications: Georgetown and Santa Clara. I applied to both and they accepted me. I went to Santa Clara because they have a wonderful clinic program, but to this day I'm enormously grateful to Georgetown and Santa Clara for accepting me, because if not for them I would have had to go to another military assignment.

How was the adjustment of going from Vietnam to law school?
As you can imagine, going from Saigon immediately to the Bay Area of California was quite a switch. There's a certain decompression period that you go through, but I had a month or two before law school started. As I was on a leave of absence without pay from the Army, [redacted] also needed some income. [redacted] I found this big apartment complex that [redacted] agreed to manage in exchange for free rent. We did that for three years, during which time [redacted].

Did you enjoy law school?
Yes, absolutely. It was everything I had hoped it would be. Again, it was because of excellent professors, people like [redacted], a great constitutional scholar; Professor Jerry Kasner, who recently died; and [redacted], whom I served as a teaching assistant. They gave you a sense of the higher calling of the legal profession. They instilled in us responsibility to the disadvantaged and the poor, to do more for others than our daily practice, and to make sure that the rule of law was advanced in every aspect of our professional life. Law school made me really proud of the profession and gave me a heightened sense of responsibility to public and private service.

Did you like Santa Clara Law?
It was a great school with a very diverse and talented student body united in a commitment to community improvement, equal protection, and the advancement of the rights of minorities. During that time I also worked as a public defender, supervised in a joint clinic between Stanford and Santa Clara. Interestingly enough, my supervising attorney in the program was [redacted], but who later became [redacted] became a friend and mentor. I was also fortunate enough to have a managing position in our law review and made excellent friends.

Then I clerked for Justice Stanley Mosk of the California Supreme Court, a wonderful professional who befriended me, taught me, and encouraged me in my career the rest of his life. He had me write in many of the speeches I drafted for him that "the California Supreme Court is to state supreme courts as UCLA is to basketball." Basketball aficionados will recognize this time as the [redacted] Wooden era at UCLA, so that phrase had a lot of significance. It was a truly superb state supreme court, led by legal giants.

What did you do after graduating from law school?
I knew I was going to go back in the military because my leave of absence also required more time in the military. What I didn't know is that the military had their own graduate law program at Charlottesville, Virginia. I went there, and it was a good family experience because [redacted] I pursued a dual master's at both the Army's school and the Woodrow Wilson School of Government Affairs. After [redacted] both graduated, I went to Germany as a prosecutor, which gave me an extraordinary amount of trial practice, much of it with juries. Later I became the chief of civil litigation for Germany and moved to Heidelberg, where I also became the equivalent of a general counsel for the intelligence community, traveling frequently to Bonn, Berlin, and Munich.

You returned to the University of Virginia later in your career.
Yes. First, to obtain my master's in government and foreign relations and later to teach civil litigation, national security law, and some environmental law. The master's degree was important because I was pretty confident that my career would include a significant amount of international law and foreign relations.
Ultimately, I lived overseas for seven years of my life in several different places. Just last week I was in Morocco leading the Department of Justice's delegation at an international environmental conference, and last year I was invited to attend the judicial conference of all environmental judges in Central and South America and give a series of lectures about litigating complex environmental matters. Each of these experiences, by the way, has made me even more proud of our independent judiciary that other countries are still trying to emulate.

You finished your military legal career as the chief legislative counsel of the Army. What did you do between your time in Germany as prosecutor and when you assumed that position as chief legislative counsel?
After Germany I returned to the United States and became a civil litigator in the Pentagon. I then went on a special assignment as the trial lawyer for the general counsel of the Department of Defense, and then became the general counsel of the Defense Nuclear Agency.

After my general counsel position, I taught at the Army's graduate school in Charlottesville, leading their largest division. From Charlottesville [redacted] moved to Frankfurt, Germany, where I became the lead attorney and staff judge advocate for all national and international legal matters for a large geographic jurisdiction that extended to the Holland border and included a main office in Frankfurt and four satellite offices.

What did you do as chief legislative counsel of the Army?
My office was responsible for all interaction with Congress, particularly the Armed Services committees, including hearings, legislation, and constituent requests. I also ran all the confirmations of political appointees for the Army, which gave me some interesting insights into the political process. It was an active, time-consuming, detail-oriented position where personal reputation and integrity meant a lot.

One interesting case was an unusual representation I did of a military officer where the tribunal convened in El Salvador under very difficult circumstances. You may recall there was a horrible murder of six Jesuit priests in El Salvador that received quite a bit of press attention in the early 1990s. While there was great suspicion that some members of the local government or military were involved, there was no proof. We then learned that a U.S. Special Forces major had information from a very senior Salvadoran official, whom [redacted] was advising, about the identity of the ringleader. After interviewing the major, and advising senior officials in both the Congress and the Pentagon, I represented the major in a grand jury investigation in El Salvador. Because of the danger, a Special Forces team met us at the airport and accompanied us to the ambassador's house, where the grand jury took place. It was, however, quite different from our practice, since it was really a mini-trial with attorneys representing both the Salvadoran government and identified officials. Subsequently, the commander of the military school in El Salvador was tried and jailed for the murders.

Why did you leave the military to work for the Department of Justice?
I left the Army because the DOJ gave me an offer I could not refuse. I had previously worked at the DOJ for one year as a special counsel to the assistant attorney general in the civil division, litigating drug enforcement and national security matters. The leadership of the environment division knew me and selected me to be the chief of the environmental enforcement section, a truly wonderful position. The section has 260 people including 160 lawyers, with nationwide responsibility for enforcing federal environmental laws. After four years in that position, I was chosen to be career deputy assistant attorney general for the division, and currently supervise the environmental enforcement and environmental defense sections. In that capacity I oversee all federal environmental civil litigation in federal courts that involve the United States.

When did you become involved in environmental law?
Much of environmental law as we know it today started in 1970 with the explosion of pollution abatement statutes, the original Earth Day, and the creation of the Environmental Protection Agency. My own involvement started in the seventies as I became involved in the implementation and litigation of the National Environmental Policy Act. One of the original environmental cases I litigated involved a very important military project in then West Berlin, which received a lot of press attention because I deposed the governing mayor of West Berlin and a key senator. The case ended up in a special tribunal, located in West Berlin, which was then considering an airplane hijacking case. The government attorneys from that litigation, all admitted to the Berlin court, formed the Berlin Bar, and we still meet annually.

Later, when I was general counsel of the Defense Nuclear Agency, I had significant environmental responsibilities for the environmental cleanup of the Enewetak Atoll in the Marshall Islands. Unlike other such cleanups, that has been a complete success, and I participated in the negotiations that led to the return of the Enewetak natives to newly constructed housing. Later, as chief legislative counsel of the Army, I established the very first environmental counsel position in that office. Also, when I was at the University of Virginia, I wrote part of a book about environmental law. Now I'm completely involved in litigating environmental matters, and supervising environmental attorneys. I remain completely committed to advancing and improving the environment of the United States and it remains my legal passion.

What are some of the well-publicized environmental cases you have been involved with?
I was involved in the Exxon and Love Canal cases, which understandably had a great deal of publicity and attention, but some of the other cases have actually been more environmentally significant. The settlements we did with some of the auto manufacturers—General Motors, Toyota, and Honda—were quite important. In addition, I was involved in a series of cases against all of the diesel truck manufacturers in the United States, which resulted in significant environmental improvement. More recently, I have been involved in significant actions involving the Clean Air Act and have led negotiating teams on a variety of important cases. I also now believe there are over a hundred reported cases in which I either have personally litigated or was part of the litigating team.

Which cases have been the most interesting?

That's not an easy question to answer because I have had quite a few, so I will answer with two cases that feature environmental justice issues.

Last year at the Bar's awards dinner another man I admire, [redacted], received an award for [redacted] law school's groundbreaking work in [redacted]. I talked to [redacted] afterwards because in [redacted] speech [redacted] spoke eloquently about one of the new civil rights areas of environmental justice. I asked [redacted] if [redacted] would be interested in hosting an environmental law course at Howard. [redacted] agreed and [redacted] have, over the course of last year, developed a pro bono environmental justice course taught by four members of the D.C. Bar.

When I went to the [redacted] as a guest lecturer, I spoke about one particular case in which the department sued the city of New Orleans for violations of the Clean Water Act. In the process of negotiating a multi-million-dollar cleanup project to correct the historic sewer problems, we also agreed to a specific project to help the local citizens. As part of the judicially approved consent decree, the parties agreed to restore Lincoln Beach, a historically segregated beach that had been closed years before because of pollution resulting from the city's sewer problems. The city has reopened the beach and it is now available to all the citizens of New Orleans.

The second case is quite recent and involves the District of Columbia. The department brought a lawsuit to correct historic sewer overflow problems. We were concerned that in heavy rainfall the existing infrastructure could not handle all of the wastewater, allowing untreated wastewater to flow into the Potomac River, Rock Creek, and Anacostia River. I led the negotiations and worked with the District's leadership to reach an agreement that will ultimately result in cleaner water in the District and a safer environment for the residents, particularly those around the Anacostia River. I'm proud of everyone involved in these negotiations, including several local citizen groups, as the result will advance human health and the environment for everyone in the District.

Do you enjoy being a lawyer?
I love being a lawyer. It's the fulfillment of a dream for somebody who grew up in a small town in Michigan to become a lawyer and join the profession. I always hearken back to all that we learned in law school about the responsibility of public service and of safeguarding the legal rights of disadvantaged or unrepresented people. Such activities make me proud of our profession, proud of the D.C. Bar, and cause me to promote and advance our pro bono program, following in the footsteps of past bar leaders, including heroes of mine like [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], and [redacted], who worked so diligently to make our pro bono program what it is today.

How did you start to become involved in the Bar other than as a member?
My involvement started with the Environment, Energy and Natural Resources Section, so I'm clearly a product of our active sections. Then [redacted], who was the [redacted] Association, encouraged me to run for the Board of Governors. I did so and have served on the board for four years, serving as chair of the Screening Committee and, when I became president-elect, as chair of the Budget Committee. So my route to becoming involved in the Bar was getting caught up by the section activities, having a mentor, getting elected to a key position, and finding that I really liked the people and respected the Bar. Ultimately I was asked to run for president by two people I value a lot: former bar presidents [redacted] and [redacted]. I agreed to run and was fortunate enough to be elected.

What do you think are the Bar's strengths?
I have described why I like the Bar in terms of [redacted], and what a quilter does is bring different and diverse pieces of fabric together in an intricate but cohesive patterns to make a beautiful and valuable product. Like a quilt, I believe, our strength is our diversity. We have a very strong federal presence, an active local attorney general's office, an enormous solo and small practitioner group, a whole array of corporate and nonprofit attorneys, and our own midsize and large talented law firms. We represent all races, faiths, sizes, shapes, and sexuality. That diversity is absolutely exciting. It provides a lot of energy and it makes us rather unique.

What do you see as the immediate priorities of the Bar during your year as president?
While the Bar has many important issues, let me single out three I consider quite important and the reason every member of the Bar should pay attention to these developments.

At a recent American Bar Association meeting in Salt Lake City, bar presidents were briefed on an ABA survey of the profession. One of the findings was that over 80 percent of the ABA members surveyed thought the practice of law was more like a business than a profession. I, on the other hand, strongly believe we are a profession; that is what attracted us to the practice and what motivates us to continue and improve. Being a profession gives us both rights and responsibilities that we must constantly address and protect. In particular, we have the right of self-regulation and self-discipline—the incredibly important benefit of being a unique and stellar profession. We have the shared responsibility of making certain that our own disciplinary system is exemplary and our rules of professional conduct are clear, understood, and followed. Those professional responsibilities lead to two of the three major priorities for the Bar. First, we have a blue-ribbon committee of experts, led by former Bar president [redacted] and Magistrate Joan Goldfrank, examining the disciplinary system. As a member of that committee, I can attest to their diligence and integrity, and look forward to a final recommendation that will promote both efficiency and justice in our disciplinary system.

Second, the Board of Governors is nearly finished examining and recommending changes to the Rules of Professional Conduct, based on the recommendations of an exceptional committee of experts chaired by [redacted] that have been examining the D.C. rules based on changes to the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct in 2002 and 2003.

And third, I'm pleased that I was able to be involved in both drafting and recommending the Access to Justice Commission, which has recently been announced by the D.C. Court of Appeals. I believe that its [redacted], and the members chosen to serve on the commission truly represent the District's best and brightest. This is an exciting opportunity to address in a more comprehensive and systematic way the needs of the underrepresented in the District.

What are your goals for the year?
I have chosen as the theme for my term "Lawyers Render Service." I believe that theme flows from what I was just saying about our responsibilities as a profession.

When I say lawyers render service, I want everybody to think of a three-legged stool. One leg is our responsibility and our advocacy on behalf of numerous and diverse clients. Every time a lawyer effectively represents a client, we are giving service, and I want the Bar to enhance and facilitate that role by our robust continuing legal education program and by encouraging and educating mentors for all new attorneys.

The second leg of my program is our responsibility to the poor, disadvantaged, and unrepresented of the District of Columbia. In that regard, advancing the D.C. Bar Pro Bono Program is my highest priority, to include attracting and motivating government attorneys to volunteer their services. We will also need to provide time, talent, and financial assistance to legal service providers and vigorously support the Access to Justice Commission.

The third part is community service. Serving the community through nonprofit associations, Special Olympic programs, and other volunteer work is critical. In addition, I invite a dialogue with the Bar and the District to develop new and additional ways lawyers can be involved in supporting and enhancing schools and education in the District.

So my theme is "Lawyers Render Service" and that applies to our clients, to the disadvantaged, and to the community.

Do you see the coming term as an exciting time to be Bar president?
This is a wonderful time for the Bar. We have the best bar executive and staff in the country, the finest pro bono program, and an exemplary and supportive judiciary. We have active sections, truly dedicated and involved voluntary bars, and a superb consortium of legal service providers. We are big enough to have an impact and still continue to grow. I think this is absolutely one of the best times to be Bar president because lawyers render service, and we have an opportunity every day to make a difference in the lives of others.

John: I have revised the letter slightly. See below. Let me know if you have any comments. I will present the revised draft to the AG's staff for review and approval. Robt.

The Honorable Annice M. Wagner
Chief Judge
District of Columbia Court of Appeals
500 Indiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

Dear Chief Judge Wagner:

I understand that you will be swearing in John C. Cruden to be President of the District of Columbia Bar Association. Although I am unable to attend the ceremony and introduce John, I want you and the DC Bar to know how proud all members of the Department of Justice family are to have John be the first government attorney to serve as President of the D.C. Bar.

Those of you who know John are aware of his extraordinary accomplishments. A West Point Graduate, he first served in airborne, ranger, and Special Forces units in Germany and Vietnam before attending law school. After graduating summa cum laude from law school and clerking on the California Supreme Court, John attending the Army's Judge Advocate General's Graduate Course where he was selected as the outstanding graduate and simultaneously received his Masters in Government and Foreign Relations from the University of Virginia. His subsequent military assignments include service as Chief of the Litigation Branch in Europe, General Counsel of the Defense Nuclear Agency, and the senior military attorney for a large jurisdiction in Germany. His last assignment in the military was as Chief Legislative Counsel of the Army, for which he was awarded the Legion of Merit.

In the Department of Justice, John was named the Chief of the Environmental Enforcement Section of the Environment and Natural Resources Division in 1991 where he led one of the largest litigating groups in the Department, supervising over 150 attorneys with nation-wide responsibilities to enforce the nation's environmental laws. John was then selected as the career Deputy Assistant Attorney General for that Division. In that capacity, he is responsible for all environmental litigation brought for or against the United States in federal district courts across the nation. John is recognized as one of the leading environmental litigators in the nation. You only need to search his name in the Westlaw index to find the large number of published cases in which he has played a key role.

At the beginning of this administration, John served as the Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Environment and Natural Resources Division from 2001 to 2002. Since that time, he has been a major factor in the Division's remarkable accomplishments over the past two years in bringing successful enforcement cases with exceptional environmental benefits for us all. For his outstanding work, John received the prestigious Presidential Rank Award and was designated as a Distinguished Executive by President Bush. He is one of the few career attorneys to have received that award twice, by two successive Presidents.

Many of you know that John has also promoted attorney professionalism and community service. He is a frequent pro bono volunteer and has long encouraged others to provide legal services to the poor and disadvantaged. He has supported DC schools and just last year lectured and participated in unique programs in Anacostia High School and Howard Law School. In addition, he is a swim coach in a Special Olympics program. I would also be remiss if I did not point out that he [redacted].

I know that John will be an outstanding Bar President and will well serve the over 80,000 members of the District of Columbia Bar. We at the Department of Justice are very proud of him and applaud the Bar's selection of John as your leader for the next year.

Chief Justice Wagner, it gives me a great deal of personal pleasure and institutional pride to recognize and support John Cruden's service to our profession and to the DC Bar as you administer the oath of office.

Sincerely,

Robert - thankyou again for trying to get this in front of the AG. If he would sign, then it could be read Thursday night. I addressed it to the Chief Judge as she will give me the oath of office, but it could have been addressed to anyone. I have also attached at the end of this e mail the interview of me that the Washington Lawyer just published. The one amusing thing in that interview that everyone has pointed out is that I took my LSAT in Saigon.

If I was writing this for you I would have been more personal drawing, in particular, on our trip to New York City and the sober experience of walking the world trade center site, punctuated by that incredible rainbow. Good luck on all of the tobacco litigation issues. Best. John

- Victim Notification: During the week of June 20, the Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) is scheduled to release a solicitation for the "Developing and Enhancing Statewide Automated Victim Information and Notification (SAVIN) Programs." In FY 2005, Congress appropriated $8 million for state victim notification systems, and BJA was selected to support this appropriation and to create a new grant program. SAVIN programs help to protect crime victims from further victimization and to ensure that victims' legal rights are honored. SAVIN programs also improve criminal justice decisions by ensuring that victims are given the timely and accurate information they need to fully participate in the judicial process (i.e., arrest, incarceration, prosecution, conviction, and/or placement in community supervision). Eligible grant recipients include any state government agency that has been authorized to manage the planning and implementation of a SAVIN program and state sheriff and state prosecutor associations. Indian tribes are eligible to receive funding for the creation of new automated victim notification programs in their territories.

- Gangs: On June 23 in Milwaukee, WI at a meeting of the Milwaukee Gang Reduction Program's Executive Committee, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) Administrator Flores will provide opening remarks emphasizing OJJDP's commitment to helping bring federal, state, and local services to each of the four Gang Reduction Program sites across the country.

  On June 20 in Baltimore, MD at the MAGLOCLEN (Mid-Atlantic Great Lakes Organized Crime Law Enforcement Network) Gang Symposium, Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) Deputy Director Burch participated in the opening ceremonies to share with law enforcement representatives priority issues and challenges in addressing gangs, including witness intimidation and intelligence sharing. MAGLOCLEN is a BJA-supported Regional Information Sharing System Center, and the gangs symposium was funded by BJA.

- Mental Health Courts: On June 21-22 in Los Angeles, CA at the BJA-sponsored Mental Health Courts and Beyond Conference, BJA Director Herraiz will give the keynote address on essential elements of a mental health court. BJA staff also will attend the conference, which will provide both BJA-funded and nonfunded courts with technical assistance. Specifically, the conference will enable court personnel to improve the design and operation of their drug courts, learn about methods to improve outcomes for offenders with mental illness, become familiar with available resources, and exchange ideas and resources, including court forms and manuals.

- Information Sharing: On June 20-21 in Miami, FL, Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) staff will attend the National Governors Association's Criminal Justice Information Services Policy Forum, which will provide training to several state teams on how to use the Department's Global Justice Extensible Markup Language Data Model (JXDM). This activity will further BJA and OJP efforts to achieve interoperability among states.

  On June 20 in Washington, DC, National Institute of Justice senior staff briefed Hans Ostberg, an intelligence database analyst with the Stockholm County Police, on DOJ's Global Justice Information Sharing Initiative.

- Statistics: On June 20-21 in Albany, NY at the State University of New York at Albany, Bureau of Justice Statistics senior staff will be a guest lecturer on the National Crime Victimization Survey.

- Victims: On June 20 in Washington, DC, Office for Victims of Crime (OVC) Director Gillis gave welcoming remarks at the National Center for Victims of Crime's first national conference. OVC staff demonstrated OVC's Web Forum, online Directory of Crime Victim Services, Strategic Planning Toolkit, and the OVC Training Calendar for Victim Service Providers.

DOJ_NMG_ 0144608

· Corrections: On June 20 in Alexandria, VA at the National Institute of Corrections Advisory Board meeting, Deputy Assistant Attorney General Nolan gave the OJP quarterly report.

LAST WEEK

· Statistics: On June 14 in Washington, DC, Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) Director Greenfeld and staff attended the National Prison Rape Elimination Commission Public Hearing, which focused on the impact prison sexual assaults have on survivors, their families, and the community. Federal, state, and local correctional administrators, professional correctional organization representatives, and prisoners' rights advocates attended.

On June 13, BJS released Traffic Stop Data Collection Policies for State Police, 2004, which presents findings from the 2004 Survey of State Police Agencies, which obtained data on their policies and procedures for collecting race and ethnicity data regarding motorists involved in traffic stops. The circumstances under which demographic data are collected for traffic-related contacts and violations are presented. The survey asked if the data collected were stored in an electronically accessible format. Findings are compared to those found during previous surveys conducted in 1999 and 2001. The study found that in 2004, 22 state police agencies required their officers to collect race or ethnicity data for all traffic stops, an increase of 6 agencies since 2001 and 13 agencies since 1999. An additional 7 agencies collected race or ethnicity data under more limited circumstances. Twenty-two of the twenty-nine state police agencies that collected race or ethnicity data under at least some traffic stop circumstances, made their data available to the public.

On June 13, BJS released Reporting by Prosecutors' Offices to Repositories of Criminal History Records, which examines the reporting of case dispositions by state court prosecutors to state criminal history repositories, based on a study conducted by the American Prosecutors Research Institute (APRI). The report looks at the type of final disposition information reported, the method used to transmit, and the length of time required to provide a final disposition. It describes the impediments that many prosecutors encounter that inhibit providing case declinations and other final disposition information to the repository. Of the 308 prosecutors surveyed in the APRI study, 141 (46 percent) responded. Forty-seven percent of those responding reported that they regularly submit final disposition information to agencies maintaining criminal history records. Eighty-six percent of responding prosecutors stated that the reason why they did not provide final disposition information to repositories was because of another agency being responsible for the task. The type of case disposition reported most frequently to the repository was a felony conviction (81 percent of respondents), followed by a declination to prosecute (80 percent), the dismissal of charges (76 percent), a felony acquittal (74 percent), and a guilty plea (72 percent).

On June 12, BJS released Family Violence Statistics, which compares family and nonfamily violence statistics from victimization through the different stages of the justice system. Family violence is defined as all types of violent crime committed by an offender who is related to the victim and includes spouse abuse, parental violence against a child, and violence among other family members. Nonfamily relationships used for comparison include boyfriends and girlfriends, friends and acquaintances, and strangers. Data are drawn from victimization surveys, official police statistics, state and federal court statistics, and surveys of inmates in state prisons and local jails. The study found that the number of victims of violence committed by family members declined from an estimated 1.1 million in 1993 to 500,000 in 2002. Throughout the period, family violence accounted for about 1 in 10 violent victimizations. Family violence accounted for 11 percent of all reported and unreported violence between 1998 and 2002. Of these roughly 3.5 million violent crimes committed against family members, 49 percent were crimes against spouses, 11 percent were sons or daughters victimized by a parent, and 41 percent were crimes against other family members. About 22 percent of murders in 2002 were family murders. Nearly 9 percent were murders of a spouse, 6 percent were murders of sons or daughters by a parent, and 7 percent were murders by other family members. Of the nearly 500,000 men and women in state prisons for a violent crime in 1997, 15 percent were there for a violent crime against a family member. Convicted family violence offenders made up about 22 percent of the nearly 86,500 convicted violent offenders in local jails in 2002.

NEXT WEEK

- Trial to Begin in Ozone-Depleting Chemicals Case: Dov Shellef, doing business as Poly Systems, Inc. and Polytuff, USA, Inc., William Rubenstein, operating as Dunbar Sales, Inc. and Steven Industries, Inc., are scheduled to begin trial in the Eastern District of New York on June 27. The defendants are variously charged with conspiracy to defeat excise taxes on ozone-depleting chemicals, money laundering, wire fraud and tax violations in connection with domestic sales of trichlorotrifluoroethane, an ozone-depleting chemical commonly referred to as CFC-113. This is the first criminal case involving CFC-113.

THIS WEEK

- Emergency Stay Motion Pending in Columbia River Power System Dispute: On May 26 the District of Oregon entered summary judgment invalidating a National Marine Fisheries Service biological opinion under the Endangered Species Act for 14 federal dams on the Columbia and Snake Rivers. A hearing on plaintiffs' motion for injunctive relief was held June 10. Following the hearing, the court granted the plaintiffs' request for a summer spill program at five projects. The spills would begin on June 20. The Division filed an emergency stay motion in the Ninth Circuit on June 15 asserting the spill plan could harm salmon and result in significant costs to the action agencies. Plaintiffs/appellees' opposition was filed June 17; the Division's reply is due June 20.

- Argument Set in United States v. American Electric Power Company: Trial on liability in this Clean Air Act/power plants case is set to begin July 6 in Columbus, Ohio. However, the court has scheduled oral argument on June 22 to address how the case may be affected by the Fourth Circuit's ruling last week in the Duke Energy appeal. (Outcome reported below.)

LAST WEEK

- Adverse Decision in Power Plant Enforcement Action: On June 15 the Fourth Circuit affirmed a district court judgment for the power plant defendant in a Clean Air Act (CAA) enforcement action against Duke Energy Corp. The appeals court determined that two sets of CAA regulations, the New Source Performance Standards (NSPS) and the New Source Review/Prevention of Significant Deterioration (PSD) regulations, must be the same with respect to "modifications" of existing sources because Congress used the same definition of "modification" in both underlying statutes. The court noted that it was not invalidating the PSD regulations, but offered no clear guidance on how to reconcile the many differing provisions of the NSPS and PSD regulations.

- Favorable Decision in Challenge to Stormwater Regulations: In deciding petitions for review of the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) general National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System permit for storm water discharges related to construction activities in Regions 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 affecting more than one acre, the Seventh Circuit ruled on June 13 that EPA permissibly interprets the Clean Water Act not to require publication of either notices of intent to operate under general permit or storm water pollution prevention plans.

A. Next Week

· Stolt-Nielsen S.A. & Stolt-Nielsen Transportation Group, Ltd., v. United States of America and Richard B. Wingfield v. United States of America*: The Division's reply brief is due July 7 in the Third Circuit. In January, the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania granted Stolt-Nielsen's and Richard Wingfield's motions for preliminary injunctions to enjoin the Division from indicting them, and the Division has appealed the decision to the Third Circuit. In their injunction motions, Stolt and Wingfield, Stolt's former Managing Director of Tanker Trading, claimed that the Division's unilateral revocation of their conditional amnesty in March 2004 violated due process. The Division revoked the conditional amnesty due to Stolt's violation of two conditions of the amnesty policy. Stolt failed promptly and effectively to terminate its participation in the parcel tanker shipping allocation conspiracy upon discovery and failed to provide full, continuing and complete cooperation in the Division's investigation by falsely representing the true duration of the conspiracy and failing to disclose fully the roles of some of its senior executives. Wingfield was charged by criminal complaint with the conspiracy in June 2003 due to a flight risk. Subsequent plea negotiations with Wingfield failed.

B. This Week

· New York Stock Exchange's Proposed Merger with Archipelago Holdings*: On June 27, the Division issued Second Requests to the parties in its investigation of the proposed merger of the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) with Archipelago Holdings,

DOJ_NMG_ 0144620

Inc. The NYSE is the world's leading equities market and the largest stock exchange in the country. Archipelago operates the largest all-electronic stock market in the world: Archipelago Exchange (ArcaEx). The Division is investigating whether the combination of these two major equities trading venues is likely to lessen competition substantially, in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act. The Division is simultaneously investigating the proposed $1.88 billion acquisition of Instinet Group Inc., the institutional brokerage and electronic trading network controlled by the Reuters Group, by the Nasdaq Stock Market, Inc., the nation's second-largest equities market. The Securities and Exchange Commission will conduct separate investigations of the two transactions as well.

· United States v. Irving Materials, Inc. ("IMI"), Daniel C. Butler, John Huggins, Fred R. "Pete" Irving, and Price Irving*: On June 29, the Division plans to file a one-count information against the defendants for fixing prices of ready mixed concrete in the Indianapolis metropolitan area from 2000 until 2004. The defendants have agreed to plead guilty and cooperate with the ongoing investigation. Fred "Pete" Irving is the president and CEO of IMI; his son Price Irving is the vice president of operations; Butler is the vice president of sales; and Huggins is a former executive vice president of IMI. IMI has agreed to pay a $29.2 million fine; Fred Irving has agreed to pay a $200,000 fine; Price Irving, Dan Butler, and John Huggins have each agreed to pay a $100,000 fine; and each individual defendant has also agreed to serve a five-month jail sentence and five months of home confinement. The corporate sentencing is scheduled for June 29. At the request of the U.S. Attorney and FBI offices in Indianapolis, the Division will participate in a press conference in Indianapolis on June 29 to announce the filing of the case.

· United States v. Denstply International, Inc.*: In January 1999, the Division sued Dentsply (a company that produces and sells 75%-80% of the prefabricated artificial teeth used by dental laboratories to make dentures), challenging Dentsply's policy of forbidding independent dealers that sell Dentsply's teeth from also selling the teeth of rival manufacturers. The Division alleged that the exclusionary practice unlawfully maintained Dentsply's monopoly and violated Sherman Act §§ 1 and 2 and Clayton Act § 3. After a bench trial, the district court ruled for Dentsply on all counts. The government appealed the § 2 claim. In February of this year, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit reversed the district court and concluded that Dentsply had monopoly power and that its policy of exclusive dealing violated the Sherman Act by thwarting rivals' attempts to threaten its monopoly. The court of appeals remanded with instructions to enter an injunction against Dentsply. Dentsply then petitioned for rehearing and rehearing en banc, which was denied. Jurisdiction has now returned to the district court to implement a remedy, and the Division is drafting a proposed final judgment.

C. Last Week

· United States v. Gosselin World Wide Moving N.V. and The Pasha Group*: On June 14, the Fourth Circuit reversed the district court's holding that a bid rigging agreement among U.S. freight forwarders and others that fixed the minimum "through rate" to be bid to the Department of Defense for the movement of military household goods from Germany to the U.S. was immune from the antitrust laws under several provisions of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C. app. 1701 et seq. The Fourth Circuit held that defendants' agreement was not immune from antitrust liability under any provision of the Shipping Act. The Fourth Circuit affirmed the defendant's conviction on the fraud count and remanded for resentencing on the antitrust count as well as the fraud count.

- National Association of Realtors' Virtual Office Website Policy*: Staff has recommended that the Division bring a civil action under Sherman Act § 1 to enjoin the National Association of Realtors ("NAR") from requiring that its 800 affiliated multiple listing services ("MLSs") adopt its proposed policy regarding "virtual office websites" ("VOWs"), which make real estate listings available to customers through the Internet. Currently, any broker that belongs to an MLS may offer its customers access to the MLS's full complement of real estate listings on-line, via the broker's VOW. NAR had passed but not implemented a rule that would require all NAR-affiliated MLSs to allow any listing broker to prohibit a competing broker from making available on a VOW listings that the listing broker has contributed to the MLS. The Division and NAR have been holding settlement talks, and a decision to settle or litigate will be made in the next few weeks.

- United States v. Patrick J. Crowe III*: On June 23, the Division filed a two-count information in the Northern District of Georgia charging Crowe, a former salesman for a Georgia-based chemical manufacturer, with participating in two conspiracies to defraud his former employer. Crowe has agreed to plead guilty to the charges and cooperate with the ongoing investigation. The Division will recommend at sentencing that the court impose a sentence of 12-18 months imprisonment, up to a $30,000 criminal fine, and order Crowe to pay over $52,000 in restitution.

- Merger of America West and USAirways*: On June 23, the Division closed its investigation into the proposed merger of America West and USAirways and related transactions by which Air Canada, Air Wisconsin, PAR Investments, and The Wellington Group will invest in the merged carrier. The Division concluded that the main transaction raises no competitive concerns requiring further investigation, as USAirways operates primarily in the eastern U.S., and America West in the west, and Southwest Airlines is a significant competitor on the few nonstop overlap routes. The Division also explored whether the presence of an Air Canada representative on the board of the merged carrier raised competitive issues, but concluded that any such concerns were speculative and did not require further investigation. The merger requires a number of additional approvals, including confirmation of the reorganization plan by the bankruptcy court, and the parties do not expect to close until September.

- United States v. Federation of Physicians and Dentists, et al.*: On June 24, the Division filed a complaint against the Federation of Physicians, one of its employees, and three OB-GYN physicians practicing in Cincinnati, Ohio. The Division believes that these parties orchestrated a conspiracy among numerous Cincinnati OB-GYNs to collectively negotiate their rates with insurers, in violation of Sherman Act § 1 and a 2002 consent decree that the Federation and the Division entered into to resolve a similar complaint against the Federation in Delaware. The purpose and effect of their collective pricing has been to increase reimbursements paid by insurers to providers of OB-GYN services in Cincinnati. The Division negotiated a settlement with the three physicians, and simultaneously filed a proposed final judgment and proposed consent decree concerning those defendants. The Federation and its employee have not agreed to settle at this time.

- United States v. Professional Consultants Insurance Co., Inc.*: On June 24, the Division filed a complaint, proposed final judgment and proposed consent decree that will resolve its civil investigation into information exchanges among actuarial consulting firms that provide professional risk analysis services to public and private pension funds and other employee benefit plans. The investigation focused on allegations that major actuarial consulting firms have exchanged competitively sensitive information and otherwise cooperated with each other about the use of contractual limitations of liability, which are important terms under which the firms enter into client engagements.

C. LAST WEEK

- Supreme Court Says Attack on IRS Deed Confers Federal-Question Jurisdiction: On June 13, the Supreme Court held that a purchaser of property the IRS sold at a federal tax sale could remove to federal court a quiet-title lawsuit attacking the deed's validity. The Court found that the deed's validity constituted a substantial and disputed question of federal law, the disposition of which belonged in federal court, because the construction of the relevant Internal Revenue Code provisions would affect the IRS's ability to collect taxes. [Grable & Sons Metal Products v. Darue Engineering (6th Cir. - Sup. Ct.)]

- Twentieth Telephone Excise Tax Case Filed: NCR Corp. seeks a $1.2 million excise-tax refund, contending that communications excise taxes do not apply to long-distance telephone calls. The Eleventh Circuit recently held that communications excise taxes do not apply to long-distance telephone calls. Other appeals are or shortly will be pending before the Second, Third, Sixth, Federal, and District of Columbia circuits. The Internal Revenue Code provision at issue in this and 19 other pending cases accounts for approximately $3 billion annually in federal excise taxes on long-distance phone services. [NCR Corporation v. United States (S.D. Ohio)]

- Appeals Court Reverses Damages Award to Taxpayers: On June 13, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a district court's order awarding a taxpayer $100,000 in damages for improper IRS collection activities, and vacated a litigation costs award of $317,000. The appeals court held that the district court misconstrued the appeals-court mandate from a prior appeal made in the case. [Dennis C. Gandy, et al. v. United States (E.D. Tex. - 5th Cir.)]

Assistant Attorney General
Civil Division

SUBJECT: Civil Division Weekly Report to the Attorney General

A. NEXT WEEK

· No items to report.

B. THIS WEEK

· En Banc* Ninth Circuit To Hear Oral Argument In Two Immigration Cases: Membreno v. Gonzales; Abebe v. Gonzales [9th Cir.]. On June 21, the en banc Ninth Circuit will hear oral argument in two immigration cases. Membreno v. Gonzales addresses the circumstances under which an alien's conviction under a California "wobbler" statute is a felony or a misdemeanor for immigration purposes. In Abebe v. Gonzales, the Court will consider whether alien parents may be eligible for asylum based on their fear that, if they are removed, their United States citizen daughter would be threatened with female genital mutilation in their home country.

C. LAST WEEK

· Fourth Circuit Concludes That "Due Care Exception" Bars False Imprisonment Claim Based On Alien's Mandatory Detention Pending Removal Proceedings:

Welch v. United States [4th Cir.]. On May 31, the Fourth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of the alien's claim under the Federal Tort Claims Act for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. The alien contended that the indefinite detention mandated by statute, previously determined to be unconstitutional as applied to him, also constituted the tort of false imprisonment under state law and that the Federal Tort Claims Act waived sovereign immunity. The Court held that the "due care" exception to the waiver of the government's sovereign immunity applied to prevent the alien from recovering on his false imprisonment theory.

- Special Master Denies Attorney's Fees And Costs In Vaccine Act Case: Blair v. Sec'y, HHS [Fed. Cl.] (Special Master Abell). On May 31, the Special Master found that the petitioners failed to provide any objective evidence from which the court could conclude that a Vaccine Act petition was filed in a timely manner with a reasonable basis. Thus, while fees are typically awarded even when the petition is dismissed, the Special Master took the unusual step here of denying the application for attorney's fees and costs.

- En Banc* Ninth Circuit Holds That A Nuclear Family Is A "Particular Social Group" Within The Meaning Of The Asylum Statute: Thomas v. Gonzales [9th Cir.]. On June 3, the en banc Ninth Circuit held that a family consisting of a mother, father, and two children is a "particular social group" within the meaning of the asylum statute. The Thomas family, who are white South Africans, alleged that they qualified for asylum as members of a "particular social group" because they were targeted for abuse by black workers in retaliation for the racism of Mr. Thomas's father. The Ninth Circuit agreed, and remanded the case for the Board to determine whether the alleged abuse rose to the level of persecution, and whether there was sufficient involvement by the government of South Africa to support an allegation of persecution.

- Fifth Circuit Holds That Habeas Corpus Relief Is Not Available To An Immigrant Who Has Other Procedural Devices: Lee v. Gonzales [5th Cir.]. On June 3, the Fifth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal of the alien's writ of habeas corpus. The alien pled guilty to a single count of trafficking in counterfeit goods or services. The Immigration Judge sustained the charge of deportation based upon the alien's conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude. The alien did not attempt to file a petition for review of the Board's decision, which affirmed the Immigration Judge's determination. The Court held that an alien must exhaust available avenues of relief and turn to habeas only when no other means of judicial review exists.

- District Court Refuses To Attach Consular Property To Satisfy Judgment Against Brazilian Consulate General: Copelco Capital, Inc. v. Brazilian Consulate General, No. 98-1357 (N.D. Cal.). On June 8, Chief Judge Vaughn R. Walker denied leave to plaintiff Copelco Capital, Inc., to attach a Brazilian Consulate account in satisfaction of the judgment. Although the Court expressed dissatisfaction with Brazil's continuing unwillingness to pay the more than $38,000 judgment, stemming from a contract dispute over a copy machine, the Court denied plaintiffs' motion out of deference to the United States "on an issue of diplomacy." The United States had filed a Statement of Interest in the litigation arguing that the Consulate's bank account could not be attached without violating the United States's obligations under the Vienna Conventions on the Consular Relations.

- Ninth Circuit Holds That Fraud On Visa Application Was Not An Allowable Basis For Negative Credibility Determination In Asylum Case: Marcos v. Gonzales [9th Cir.]. On June 9, the Ninth Circuit ruled that the Immigration Judge's adverse credibility determination was not supported by substantial evidence. The alien was determined not to be credible because he had filled out a visa application listing a current address in Virginia for the brother-in-law who had filed a visa petition for him, without disclosing that the brother-in-law had died years before. The Court held that the fraud was not on an issue that was central to the asylum claim and could not therefore be considered as evidence of a lack of credibility. Judge Graber dissented, stating that the fraud was properly considered by the Immigration Judge as a factor bearing on the alien's general propensity to tell the truth.

- Airplane Manufacturer Recovers Nothing After Trial: Short Brothers, PLC v. United States, 98-894C (Miller, C.) [Fed. Cl]. Short Brothers, PLC, a division of Bombardier ("Short"), modified 28 airplanes for the Army National Guard for approximately $150 million. Short sued to recover approximately $77 million in cost overruns, plus interest. Short alleged that the United States failed to disclose superior knowledge about the difficulty of the work, that the parties made a mutual mistake about the difficulty of the work, and that the contract was commercially impracticable. On June 10, 2005 in a 172-page opinion, Judge Miller ruled that the United States was not liable, concluding that Short should have known that its proposal was inadequate, and that Short assumed the risk that it had underbid the job.

- Federal Circuit Holds EPACT Tax Levied Improperly: PSI Energy, Inc. v. United States, No. O4-5079 [Fed. Cir. June 10, 2005] (Mayer and Newman, with Clevenger dissenting). To help defray the costs of decontamination and decommissioning DOE's uranium enrichment facilities, the Energy Policy Act of 1992 taxed utilities that used DOE's uranium enrichment services. The tax was allocated according to how many SWU a utility purchased from DOE. A SWU is a measure of the effort used to enrich uranium. Where the utility resold a SWU, the repurchaser was taxed instead. The court held that where a utility sold all its enriched uranium, but not all the associated SWU, it could not be taxed on the SWU it did not resell. The dissent followed the wording of the statute and language in prior cases and would have upheld imposition of the tax for any SWU that were not resold.

- Court Of International Trade Sustains, In Part, The Imposition Of Antidumping Duties Upon Imported Honey: Wuhan Bee Healthy Co. v. United States (Eaton, J.). On June 10, the Court of International Trade sustained, in part, and remanded in part, the final determination of the Department of Commerce in an antidumping duty administrative review of honey imported from China. The court concluded that Commerce's valuation of raw honey was supported by substantial evidence (i.e., a March 2000 newspaper article) and in accordance with law. Lastly, the court remanded Commerce's decision to use Indian import values to price coal used in the production of honey rather than domestic values because Commerce did not demonstrate that it used the best available information upon the record.

- Ninth Circuit Permits Bivens Claim Against An Immigration Official And Affirms

The Denial Of Qualified Immunity: Sissoko v. Rocha [9th Cir.; C.D. CA]. On June 13, the Ninth Circuit (Skopil, Noonan, Berzon, JJ.) held that the district court had jurisdiction over a Bivens claim arising from the decision to place an alien in expedited removal proceedings. The Court recognized that the review of a decision to commence removal proceedings was barred by statute, but held that a plaintiff could, nonetheless, challenge the fact he was placed in detention after the commencement of proceedings, even though detention was mandated by regulation.

· Tenth Circuit Affirms Denial, On Personal Privacy Grounds, Of Freedom Of Information Act Request For Electronic Mapping Files That Identify The Locations Of Structures Insured Under The National Flood Insurance Program: Forest Guardians v. FEMA [10th Cir.; D. NM]. On June 14, the Tenth Circuit (Kelly, Baldock; Hartz concurring), upheld FEMA's refusal under the FOIA privacy exemption, 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(6), to release digital mapping files of communities in the Albuquerque, New Mexico area containing electronic data pertaining to the locations of flood plains, special flood hazard areas, and structures that are insured under the National Flood Insurance Program, which FEMA administers. FEMA had already provided the plaintiffs hard copy maps showing all of this information, but the hard copy maps only showed the general location of each structure relative to the flood plain, and not its exact geographic point location, because that information could be used to identify individuals' names and home addresses coupled with personal financial information The Tenth Circuit agreed with the government that disclosure of this type of information could lead to unwanted disturbances of individuals in their homes, and that the public interest in the electronic data was "nonexistent" because the information already given to plaintiffs provided an "ample basis" for evaluating agency action.

· Court Of International Trade Sustains Commerce's Recision Of Its New Shipper Review Of A Chinese Exporter Of Glycine: Hebei New Donghua Amino Acid Co. v. United States (Restani, C.J.). On June 15, the Court of International Trade sustained the final determination of the Department of Commerce to rescind a new shipper review of a Chinese exporter of glycine. The court upheld Commerce's statutory authority to conduct a totality of the circumstances "bona fide" sales test in the course of a new shipper review. Further, the court held that substantial record evidence supported Commerce's determination that plaintiff's sale was not bona fide.

· Summary Judgment Recognizes Federal Entitlement To $12 Million In Proceeds From Shipyard Sale: O. Ahlborg & Sons, Inc. v. United States [D. Mass.] (Gorton, J.). On June 16, 2005, the court granted the government's summary judgment motion in a challenge to the Maritime Administration's retention of the proceeds (approximately $12 million) from a foreclosure sale of the real and personal property of a Massachusetts shipyard. The court rejected an asserted construction lien, holding that the Administration had a prior interest based on a private lender's placing the proceeds of an Administration guaranteed loan into escrow.

· Ninth Circuit Remands Case Challenging Beef Marketing Program In Light Of Recent Supreme Court Decision: Charter v. Johanns [9th Cir.; D. MT]. On June 16, the Ninth Circuit (Canby, Wardlaw, Gould, per curiam), issued an order vacating a district court decision upholding the Beef Promotion and Research Act and remanding to the district court to permit the plaintiffs to maintain an as-applied First Amendment challenge to the Act as violating their associational rights. The district court had upheld that Act as government speech, and recently the Supreme Court adopted a similar analysis in Johanns v. Livestock Marketing Association. Because Livestock Marketing left open the possibility of an as-applied challenge based upon the assertion that individual beef advertisements were attributed to the plaintiffs in violation of their associational rights, the court of appeals vacated the district court's decision and remanded for further proceedings.

· Tenth Circuit Denies Injunction Pending Appeal To Prevent Execution Of Court-Martial's Arrest Warrant: Bier v. Zahren [10th Cir.; D. CO]. On June 16, the Tenth Circuit denied an injunction pending appeal to a therapist seeking to prevent execution of a warrant of attachment (a form of arrest warrant) issued by a court-martial seeking the mental health records of the therapist's patient (the complaining witness in a rape case before the court) for in camera review. Adopting the position of the United States (in a submission prepared by the Criminal Division with assistance from the Appellate Staff of the Civil Division), the Tenth Circuit concluded that the military court followed appropriate procedures and that the therapist's concerns could be adequately addressed by the military · California Man Sentenced For Selling Hazardous Toys: United States v. Lotze [S.D. CA] (Houston). On June 17, Matthew Lotze was sentenced to 21 months in prison for fraudulently re-selling hazardous toys that he had been hired to destroy. Chevron Texaco Corporation had recalled the approximately 600,000 toys after the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) determined that they were banned hazardous substances because the toys contained small parts that could break off and pose a choking hazard to children under age three. Lotze was convicted of mail fraud, wire fraud, and making a false statement. The false statement was lying about what had happened to the cars when questioned by CPSC investigators.

· Ninth Circuit Rejects Challenge To Bankruptcy Petition Preparer Statute: Scott v. United States Trustee (In re Doser) [9th Cir.; D. ID]. On June 17, the 9th Circuit (Alarcon, W. Fletcher, Rawlinson), rejected constitutional challenges to 11 U.S.C. § 110, the provision of the Bankruptcy Code that regulates non-attorney bankruptcy petition preparers, and held that the petition preparer had violated the statute by charging excessive fees and by engaging in fraudulent, deceptive, and unfair practices. This is one of many cases involving franchisees of a nation-wide company (We The People) that offers bankruptcy petition preparation services, and was the first to reach a court of appeals.

· Supreme Court Adopts Government's Position As Amicus That Michigan Fee On Intrastate Commercial Hauling Does Not Violate Dormant Commerce Clause: American Trucking Ass'ns, Inc. v. Michigan Pub. Serv. Comm'n [S. Ct.; Mich. Ct. App.; Mich. Ct. Claims]. On June 20, the Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Michigan Court of Appeals that a flat $100 annual fee on trucks engaged in intrastate commercial hauling in Michigan did not violate the dormant Commerce Clause by discriminating against interstate carriers. Writing for the Court, Justice Breyer noted that the fee is applied evenhandedly to all carriers making domestic journeys and does not reflect an effort to tax activity taking place outside of Michigan. The Court analogized the fee to other flat fees that States impose on local business and service providers such as auctioneers. The Court noted that the record did not show that the fee unfairly discriminates against interstate trucking, nor did it provide any reason to infer that the fee on local activity erects an impermissibly discriminatory roadblock. Justice Scalia and Justice Thomas separately concurred in the judgment; Justice Scalia stated that he reached the same result under a separate test not employed by the majority, and Justice Thomas stated that he would affirm the state court decision because the dormant Commerce Clause has proven unworkable and cannot serve as the basis for striking down a state statute.

- Supreme Court Rejects Government's Position As Amicus And Holds That Michigan Fee On Michigan License -Plated Trucks Operating Entirely In Interstate Commerce Is Not Preempted By Federal Law: Mid-Con Freight Sys., Inc. v. Michigan Pub. Serv. Comm'n [S. Ct.; Mich. Ct. App.; Mich. Ct. Claims]. On June 20, the Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Michigan Court of Appeals that a $100 annual fee on each Michigan license -plated truck operating entirely in interstate commerce is not preempted by 49 U.S.C. § 14504. Section 14504 establishes the Single State Registration System, under which a trucking company can fill out one set of forms in one base State and thereby register its federal permit in every participating State through which its trucks travel. Writing for the Court, Justice Breyer narrowly construed § 14504, which prohibits a State from imposing any additional "State Registration requirement," as referring only to additional State requirements concerning those subjects expressly addressed by the SSRS (proof of federal permit, proof of insurance, name of an agent to receive service of process, and fee equal to sum of individual state fees). Because the State fee's requirements do not concern the SSRS's subject matter, Justice Breyer reasoned, the fee is not the type of "State Registration Requirement" to which federal law refers. Justice Breyer noted that Michigan adopted its fee before the SSRS existed, and that the fee did not represent an effort to circumvent the limitations imposed in connection with federal laws governing the State Registration of Federal Permits. Justice Kennedy, joined by the Chief Justice and Justice O'Connor, dissented, indicating they would have adopted the government's textual argument that § 14504, by its terms, saves from preemption only one class of state registration requirements imposed on interstate motor carriers: those completed under the standards of the Secretary under the SSRS.

- Supreme Court Holds That Retaliation Claims Under The False Claims Act Are Governed By State-Law Statutes Of Limitations: Graham County Soil & Water Conservation Dist. v. United States ex rel. Wilson [S. Ct.; 4th Cir.; D. NC]. On June 20, the Supreme Court held that retaliation claims under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(h), are not subject to the FCA's general six-year statute of limitations, but are instead governed by the most analogous state-law limitations period. Disagreeing with the government's arguments as amicus, the Court (per Thomas, J.) held that the statutory language was ambiguous and that, in the face of such ambiguity, the default rule in favor of borrowing state law should apply.

- Timber Company Agrees To Pay $8.35 Million To Settle Breach Of Contract Claims: Mt. Adams Veneer Co. v. United States [Fed. Cl.] (Bruggink, J.). Mt. Adams

Veneer Company agreed to pay the United States $8.35 million to settle three cases and five claims arising out if its failure to perform Forest Service timber sale contracts. We concluded the settlement after a recent trial. The Mt. Adams cases are part of a consolidated group that included 41 government claims against 11 companies for damages totaling approximately $31 million. The settlement with Mt. Adams brings our total recovery to over $20 million.

Judge Casey heard oral argument last week on the following defendants' motions to dismiss:

Only the first three defendants ([redacted]) raised immunity defenses. The other defendants moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and/or failure to state a claim.

The argument itself was completely uneventful. Other than ruling on an evidentiary issue, the Court asked no questions and gave no indication of its leanings. The arguments largely rehashed what was already in the papers. [redacted] and [redacted]s counsel focused on the paucity of allegations sufficient to demonstrate knowledge by [redacted] that any of the charities they oversaw directed funds to Al Qaeda. The [redacted] convincingly argued that it was an organ or instrumentality of [redacted].

I have the transcript of the immunity arguments, and can scan them into pdf if you are interested in reviewing them.

The Honorable Annice M. Wagner
Chief Judge
District of Columbia Court of Appeals
500 Indiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

Dear Chief Judge Wagner:

I understand that you will be swearing in John C. Cruden to be President of the District of Columbia Bar Association. Although I am unable to attend the ceremony and introduce John, I want you and the DC Bar to know how proud all members of the Department of Justice family are to have John be the first government attorney to serve as President of the D.C. Bar.

Those of you who know John are aware of his extraordinary accomplishments. A West Point Graduate, he first served in airborne, ranger, and Special Forces units in Germany and Vietnam before attending law school. After graduating summa cum laude from law school and clerking on the California Supreme Court, John attending the Army's Judge Advocate General's Graduate Course where he was selected as the outstanding graduate and simultaneously received his Masters in Government and Foreign Relations from the University of Virginia. His subsequent military assignments include service as Chief of the Litigation Branch in Europe, General Counsel of the Defense Nuclear Agency, and the senior military attorney for a large jurisdiction in Germany. His last assignment in the military was as Chief Legislative Counsel of the Army, for which he was awarded the Legion of Merit.

In the Department of Justice, John was named the Chief of the Environmental Enforcement Section of the Environment and Natural Resources Division in 1991 where he led one of the largest litigating groups in the Department, supervising over 150 attorneys with nation-wide responsibilities to enforce the nation's environmental laws. John was then selected as the career Deputy Assistant Attorney General for that Division. In that capacity, he is responsible for all environmental litigation brought for or against the United States in federal district courts across the nation. John is recognized as one of the leading environmental litigators in the nation. You only need to search his name in the Westlaw index to find the large number of published cases in which he has played a key role.

At the beginning of this administration, John served as the Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Environment and Natural Resources Division from 2001 to 2002. Since that time, he has been a major factor in the Division's remarkable accomplishments over the past two years in bringing successful enforcement cases with exceptional environmental benefits for us all. For his outstanding work, John received the prestigious Presidential Rank Award and was designated as a Distinguished Executive by President Bush. He is one of the few career attorneys to have received that award twice, by two successive Presidents.

Many of you know that John has also promoted attorney professionalism and community service. He is a frequent pro bono volunteer and has long encouraged others to provide legal services to the poor and disadvantaged. He has supported DC schools and just last year lectured and participated in unique programs in Anacostia High School and Howard Law School. In addition, he is a swim coach in a Special Olympics program. I would also be remiss if I did not point out that he has [redacted].

I know that John will be an outstanding Bar President and will well serve the over 80,000 members of the District of Columbia Bar. We at the Department of Justice are very proud of him and applaud the Bar's selection of John as your leader for the next year.

Chief Justice Wagner, it gives me a great deal of personal pleasure and institutional pride to recognize and support John Cruden's service to our profession and to the DC Bar as you administer the oath of office.

Sincerely,

AG Signature block

Robert - thankyou again for trying to get this in front of the AG. If he would sign, then it could be read Thursday night. I addressed it to the Chief Judge as she will give me the oath of office, but it could have been addressed to anyone. I have also attached at the end of this e mail the interview of me that the Washington Lawyer just published. The one amusing thing in that interview that everyone has pointed out is that I took my LSAT in Saigon.

[redacted] Good luck on all of the tobacco litigation issues. Best. John

For his great accomplishments during that time period, John was given the prestigious Presidential Rank Award and designated as a Distinguished Executive by President Bush. He is one of the few career attorneys to have received that award twice, by two successive Presidents.

Many of you also know that John has also promoted attorney professionalism and service. He is a frequent pro bono volunteer and has long encouraged others to provide legal service to the poor and disadvantaged. He has supported DC schools, and just last year lectured and participated in unique programs in Anacostia High School and Howard Law School. And, he is a swim coach in a Special Olympics program that has been quite successful. I would also be remiss if I did not point out that he has [redacted].

I believe John will be an outstanding President and will well serve the over 80,000 members of the District of Columbia bar. We are proud of him and impressed that your Bar was wise enough to elect him as your leader.

Chief Justice Wagner, it gives me a great deal of personal pleasure to commend John Cruden to you and I highly recommend that you give him the oath of office.

Sincerely,

Neil,

This is to follow-up our conversation earlier today. The ASG has asked you to serve as OASG's contact with OPR in responding to OPR's request for documents as part of its investigation of the Department's recent actions in the tobacco litigation. You have not participated in the tobacco litigation, you began serving in the Department, as the Principal DASG, on June 13, 2005, and at this time the ASG does not intend for you to participate in the tobacco litigation. As I advised, I see no reason that you may not collect the requested documents and provide them to OPR, and respond to additional requests should OPR make them, on behalf of OASG. If I have not accurately summarized the substance of our conversation, please let me know.

Hope all is well. When did we agree that you guys would have a draft memo on the privilege waiver issue? Just want to give Robert a time frame to equip him when he speaks to the DAG.

FORMER CHEMICAL SALESMAN AGREES TO PLEAD GUILTY TO CONSPIRACY CHARGES

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- A former salesman for a Georgia-based chemical manufacturer has agreed to plead guilty to participating in two conspiracies to defraud his former employer, the Department of Justice today announced.

According to the two-count felony charge filed today in the U. S. District Court in Atlanta, Patrick J. Crowe III, a former chemical salesman for the Cartersville, Georgia corporation Chemical Products Technologies, LLC (CPT), participated in two separate conspiracies to commit mail fraud and deprive CPT of its right to the honest services of its employees. While employed as a salesman by CPT, Crowe received kickback payments from the owner and operator of an independent Tennessee trucking company in exchange for ensuring that the trucking company received business from CPT. In addition to the kickback payments, Crowe diverted profits from CPT and used the money for his own personal benefit.

"These types of schemes deprive companies of their right to the honest services of their employees and to fair and competitive pricing," said Scott D. Hammond, Deputy Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division's Criminal Enforcement Program.

From approximately July 2000 to October 2003, Crowe and his co-conspirators participated in a kickback scheme involving the hauling of anthraquinone, a pulping additive used to increase production in the pulp and paper industry. Kickback payments were made to Crowe's shell corporation at an agreed-upon rate for each load of anthraquinone hauled for CPT. In order to facilitate this scheme, Crowe and his co-conspirators mailed and/or caused to be mailed inflated invoices, kickback checks, and other documents pertaining to the fraudulent scheme.

According to the second conspiracy charge, from April 2002 to December 2002, Crowe and his co-conspirators misled CPT to believe that CDFD Inc., a Wyoming corporation owned by Crowe, was an escrow agent with no ownership connection to Crowe or anyone else employed by CPT. CPT was also led to believe by Crowe and his co-conspirators that funds generated by CPT's glyphosate business and placed in a CDFD Inc. business account would be used to pay CPT's suppliers. Glyphosate is a herbicide used to control grasses and weeds. Crowe and his co-conspirators then diverted funds from the CDFD Inc. business account for their own personal use.

Crowe is charged with conspiracy, a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371, which carries a maximum term of imprisonment of five years and a maximum fine of $250,000 for an individual for each count. The maximum fine may be increased to twice the gain derived from the crime or twice the loss suffered by the victims of the crime, if either of those amounts is greater than the statutory maximum fine.

Today's charges are the first to arise out of an ongoing investigation in the Northern District of Georgia being conducted by the Antitrust Division's Atlanta Field Office. Anyone with information concerning price-fixing, bid-rigging or kickback schemes in the anthraquinone or glyphosate industries should contact the Atlanta Field Office of the Antitrust Division at (404) 331-7100.

INFORMATION

The United States of America, acting through its attorneys, charges:

COUNT ONE--CONSPIRACY
(18 U.S.C. § 371)

1. PATRICK JOSEPH CROWE III is hereby made a defendant on this charge.

I. DEFENDANT AND CO-CONSPIRATORS

2. During the period covered by this Information, defendant Crowe, a resident of Chattanooga, Tennessee, was employed as a salesman for Chemical Products Technologies, LLC ("CPT"), a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Georgia with its principal place of business in Cartersville, Georgia. Among other products, CPT sold anthraquinone, a pulping additive used to increase production in the pulp and paper industry, and glyphosate, an herbicide used to control grasses and weeds, to customers throughout the United States. The majority owner of CPT was Chemical Products Corporation ("CPC"), a Cartersville, Georgia company engaged in the business of mining and manufacturing various chemicals.

3. Co-Conspirator Number One ("CC-1) was employed as the general manager of CPT. In his position as general manager, CC-1 was responsible for the operation and profitability of the company. CC-1 was also the owner of Grey Bear, a Georgia corporation that owned 21% of CPT.

4. Co-Conspirator Number Two ("CC-2") was the sole owner and operator of an independent trucking company in Tennessee, who was hired to deliver anthraquinone for CPT.

II. DESCRIPTION OF THE OFFENSE

5. Beginning at least as early as July 2000, and continuing thereafter at least through October 10, 2003, the exact dates being unknown to the United States, in the Northern District of Georgia and elsewhere, the defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 did unlawfully, willfully, and knowingly combine, conspire, confederate, and agree in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 371, to commit offenses against the United States of America, to wit, to violate Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1341 and 1346.

6. It was a part and object of said conspiracy that the defendant, CC-1, and CC-2, having devised and intending to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud CPT and deprive CPT of its right to the honest services of its employees, executed such scheme and artifice to defraud by and through the use of the United States mail.

III. THE MANNER AND MEANS BY WHICH THE CONSPIRACY WAS CARRIED OUT

7. The defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 participated in a kickback scheme to defraud CPT, whereby they all agreed that CC-2 would make kickback payments to the defendant's shell corporation in exchange for ensuring that CC-2 received business from CPT. As a result of the scheme and artifice to defraud, CC-2 paid the defendant kickback payments totaling $69,428.27, a portion of which the defendant paid to CC-1. The defendant and CC-1 concealed the kickback agreement and kickback payments from CPT and CPC.

DOJ_NMG_ 0144698

8. The defendant and CC-1 had a fiduciary duty to transact business in the best interest of CPT, and to act honestly and faithfully in all of their dealings with CPT, including a duty to make full and fair disclosure to CPT of any kickbacks they received, or expected to receive, from CC-2 during the course of their employment. The defendant breached his fiduciary duty to CPT by receiving unauthorized kickback payments from CC-2.

9. For the purpose of forming and effectuating the aforesaid conspiracy, the defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 did those things that they combined and conspired to do, including, among other things:

(a) The defendant recruiting CC-2 to haul anthraquinone for CPT and then soliciting kickbacks from CC-2 in exchange for CC-2 obtaining and retaining business with CPT;

(b) The defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 agreeing that CC-2 would charge CPT an inflated price for each load of anthraquinone delivered by CC-2;

(c) The defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 agreeing that CC-2 would pay kickback money to the defendant's shell corporation for every load of anthraquinone delivered by CC-2;

(d) The defendant agreeing with CC-1 to share the kickback payments received from CC-2;

(e) The defendant and CC-1 retaining and using the kickback money for their own personal benefit;

(f) The defendant and CC-1 concealing from CPT and CPC the kickback agreement with CC-2 and the payments made by CC-2 to the defendant's shell corporation;

(g) The defendant and his co-conspirators mailing and/or causing to be mailed inflated invoices, kickback checks, and other documents pertaining to the scheme to defraud; and

(h) The defendant traveling across state lines into Georgia to deliver to CC-1 unlawfully obtained funds generated by their scheme to defraud CPT.

IV. OVERT ACTS

DOJ_NMG_ 0144700

10. In furtherance of the conspiracy and to effect the illegal objects thereof, the defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 committed overt acts in the Northern District of Georgia and elsewhere, including, but not limited to:

(a) CC-2 sending numerous inflated invoices to CPT, via United States mail, which were all received by CPT in Cartersville, Georgia;

(b) The defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 causing CPT to place checks into the United States mail in Cartersville, Georgia for delivery to CC-2 in payment of the inflated invoices;

(c) The defendant traveling across state lines on several occasions and hand-delivering kickback payments to CC-1 in Cartersville, Georgia;

(d) CC-1 depositing kickback payments received from the defendant into a personal account at Bartow County Bank in Cartersville, Georgia.

V. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

DOJ_NMG_ 0144701

11. The conspiracy charged in this Count was formed and carried out, in part, in the Northern District of Georgia within the five years preceding the filing of this Information.

ALL IN VIOLATION OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 371.

(18 U.S.C. § 371)

12. PATRICK J. CROWE III is hereby made a defendant on this charge.

DOJ_NMG_ 0144702

I. DEFENDANT AND CO-CONSPIRATORS

13. Paragraphs 2 and 3 of Count One of this Information are repeated, realleged, and incorporated in Count Two with the same force and effect as if fully set forth in this Count.

14. From at least March 2002 until at least December 2002, the defendant was the primary salesman for CPT's glyphosate business and reported directly to CC-1.

15. Co-Conspirator Number Three ("CC-3") was the owner of a Nevada corporation in the business of forming corporate entities and providing nominee services to such entities.

II. DESCRIPTION OF THE OFFENSE

16. Beginning at least as early as April 2002, and continuing thereafter at least through December 3, 2002, the exact dates being unknown to the United States, in the Northern District of Georgia and elsewhere, the defendant, CC-1, and CC-3 did unlawfully, willfully, and knowingly combine, conspire, confederate, and agree in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 371, to commit offenses against the United

DOJ_NMG_ 0144703

States of America, to wit, to violate Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1341 and 1346.

17. It was a part and object of said conspiracy that the defendant, CC-1, and CC-3, having devised and intending to devise a scheme and artifice to defraud CPT and deprive CPT of its right to the honest services of its employees, executed the scheme and artifice to defraud by and through the use of a commercial interstate carrier.

III. THE MANNER AND MEANS BY WHICH THE CONSPIRACY WAS CARRIED OUT

18. The defendant and CC-1 devised and, along with CC-3, participated in a scheme and artifice to defraud CPT out of profits from its glyphosate business. To execute the scheme, the defendant hired CC-3 to act as a nominee for CDFD, Inc., a Wyoming corporation owned by the defendant. At the instruction of the defendant, CC-3 opened a bank account for CDFD. The defendant and CC-1 concealed the defendant's ownership of CDFD and his control over the CDFD business account.

19. In furtherance of the scheme and artifice to defraud, the defendant and CC-1 misled CPT and CPC to believe that CDFD was an escrow agent, and arranged to have all funds generated by CPT's glyphosate business deposited into the CDFD business account set up by CC-3. It was CPT's intention that the funds deposited into the CDFD bank account would be used to pay CPT's glyphosate supplier, with the balance disbursed to CPT and Zetachem, U.S.A. (CPT's former partner in the glyphosate business). The defendant and CC-1, who were, at all times, aware that they were not authorized to use these funds for their personal benefit, diverted funds from the CDFD business account for their own personal use. As a result of the scheme and artifice to defraud, the defendant unlawfully received at least $17,416.59 from the CDFD account and CC-1 received at least $39,412.62. At the time these payments were made, CPT and CPC were unaware that the defendant and CC-1 were stealing profits from CPT's glyphosate business.

20. The defendant and CC-1 had a fiduciary duty to transact business in the best interest of CPT, and to act honestly and faithfully in all of their dealings with CPT, including a duty to disclose to CPT the defendant's ownership of CDFD, Inc., the defendant's control over the CDFD business account, and any payments the defendant and CC-1 received from the CDFD business account during the course of their employment. The defendant breached his fiduciary duty to CPT by stealing profits from CPT's glyphosate business for his own personal use.

21. For the purpose of forming and effectuating the aforesaid conspiracy, the defendant, CC-1, and CC-2 did those things that they combined and conspired to do, including, among other things:

(a) The defendant and CC-1 agreeing to use the defendant's corporation, CDFD, Inc., to divert profits from CPT's glyphosate business for their own personal use;

(b) The defendant hiring CC-3 to serve as a nominee for CDFD, Inc., and instructing CC-3 to open a bank account for the corporation;

(c) CC-3 setting up a bank account under the name CDFD, Inc. and concealing the defendant's ownership and control over the corporation and bank account;

(d) The defendant and CC-1 misleading CPT and CPC to believe that CDFD, Inc. was an independent corporation able to serve as an escrow agent for CPT's glyphosate business;

DOJ_NMG_ 0144706

(e) The defendant and CC-1 sending instructions to CC-3 to execute the scheme, including ordering CC-3 to charge CPT phony fees on behalf of CDFD, Inc.;

(f) The defendant sending instructions to CC-3 and his employees to send checks drawn on the CDFD bank account and made payable to the defendant and CC-1, to the defendant's residence in Tennessee;

(g) The defendant and CC-1 retaining and using funds from the CDFD bank account for their own personal benefit;

(h) The defendant and CC-1 concealing their relationship to CDFD, Inc. and their control over the CDFD bank account from CPT and CPC;

(i) The defendant, CC-1, and CC-3 mailing and/or causing to be mailed documents and checks relating to their scheme to defraud CPT;

(j) The defendant traveling across state lines into Georgia to deliver to CC-1 unlawfully obtained funds generated by their scheme to defraud CPT.

IV. OVERT ACTS

22. In furtherance of the conspiracy and to effect the illegal objects thereof, the defendant, CC-1, and CC-3 committed overt acts in the Northern District of Georgia and elsewhere, including, but not limited to:

(a) CC-1 sending documents, via facsimile, from Cartersville, Georgia to CC-3 in Nevada, instructing CC-3 to bill CPT for phony fees;

(b) The defendant causing checks drawn on the CDFD business account to be placed in the United States mail and delivered to the defendant's residence in Tennessee;

(c) The defendant hand-delivering funds stolen from the CDFD business account to CC-1 in Cartersville, Georgia;

(d) CC-1 depositing funds generated by the scheme and artifice to defraud CPT into his personal account at Bartow County Bank in Cartersville, Georgia.

V. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

Neil raises two issues, per Robert:

1) AG needs to decide whether he will be giving a speech at the upcoming ABA conference.

2) The President apparently hands out Medal of Valor awards to police officers, usually early in the year. He hasn't yet this year, and the issue is apparently sitting at the WH. We are getting inquiries about why this event hasn't yet happened. Tracy: can you add any more context to this?

The POTUS Medal of Valor is the highest award a public safety officer an receive. The Act establishing the Medal was signed prior to 9/11. This year is the third year for the awards. A Board (appointed by the POTUS and the Congress) makes recommendations to the AG and the AG sends forward to the POTUS. All of this was done prior to the election. I know that Jan Williams has talked to the WH about this event, but we still have nothing set and the Department is now accepting nominations for the next round of awards. The comments we are hearing is that we are accepting nominations for the next round and we haven't even awarded the last round. I note that in the draft AG speech for the Sheriff's conference he references MOV and that we are accepting nominations.

This event should be accomplished before March of each year. We are now way past that timeframe. Advance notice also needs to be given because the awardees have to make adjustments to their work schedules, childcare, travel for family members, etc. The department pays for the awardee and one guest only.

I am happy to give you any additional information you might need.

A Board (appointed by the POTUS and the Congress) makes recommendations to the AG and the AG sends forward to the POTUS. All of this was done prior to the election. I know that Jan Williams has talked to the WH about this event, but we still have nothing set and the Department is now accepting nominations for the next round of awards. The comments we are hearing is that we are accepting nominations for the next round and we haven't even awarded the last round. I note that in the draft AG speech for the Sheriff's conference he references MOV and that we are accepting nominations.

This event should be accomplished before March of each year. We are now way past that timeframe. Advance notice also needs to be given because the awardees have to make adjustments to their work schedules, childcare, travel for family members, etc. The department pays for the awardee and one guest only.

I am happy to give you any additional information you might need.
Tracy

Neil raises two issues, per Robert:

1) AG needs to decide whether he will be giving a speech at the upcoming ABA conference.

2) The President apparently hands out Medal of Valor awards to police officers, usually early in the year. He hasn't yet this year, and the issue is apparently sitting at the WH. We are getting inquiries about why this event hasn't yet happened. Tracy: can you add any more context to this?

§ 1393. Whether, indeed, independently of the constitution of the United States, the nature of republican and free governments does not necessarily impose some restraints upon the legislative power, has been much discussed. It seems to be the general opinion, fortified by a strong current of judicial opinion, that since the American revolution no state government can be presumed to possess the transcendental sovereignty, to take away vested rights of property; to take the property of A. and transfer it to B. by a mere legislative act. That government can scarcely be deemed to be free, where the rights of property are left solely dependent upon a legislative body, without any restraint. The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require, that the rights of personal liberty, and private property, should be held sacred. At least, no court of justice, in this country, would be warranted in assuming, that any state legislature possessed a power to violate and disregard them; or that such a power, so repugnant to the common principles of justice and civil liberty, lurked under any general grant of legislative authority, or ought to be implied from any general expression of the will of the people, in the usual forms of the constitutional delegation of power. The people ought not to be presumed to part with rights, so vital to their security and well-being, without very strong, and positive declarations to that effect.

Curries, let's get JMD to get up here and get the missing files asap. It seems that there are about half complete. After a review of the 3 disks that JMD generated of Robert's emails, here is what they contain:

Emails Sent and Received from all of 2002. (Great)

Emails Received from January 1, 2003 until July 7, 2003 (does not include any he Sent)

Emails Received from July 7, 2003 through September 5, 2003 (does not include any he Sent)

We still need:

Received and Sent for Fall of 2001 (9/20/2001 - 12/31/2001)
* There are a few of these on the disks above, but it is not comprehensive. For example, there records from 2002 start with a few from 9/25/01 then quickly skip to 2002 emails.

Sent from January 1, 2003 through September 2003.

Sent and Received from September 2003 to the Present.

Observations:

It could be that the reason they could not capture everything is that some files are located on Robert's actual computer in hard memory.

In particular, I know that emails dating from October 2004 to the present are located in Robert's Outlook regular "Deleted Items" folder. While all emails are or critical importance, these would be particularly usefull to have immediately.

Currie, let me know whatever I can do either over this weekend or bright and early Monday to help retrieve this. Thanks as always.

A copy of the letter is on its way to you, Kyle, and Ted. Since it is Sat and the House of Delegates in Monday-Tues., I definitely rec one or the other but not both. Fly out Sat pm, give the speech, get back on the plane, and come home that Sat. night. Robt.

Andy: Heads up. You have already received and are considering an invitation (letter dated Feb 28th with a follow-up letter dated May 16th) from the Chair of the ABA House of Delegates, Stephen Zack, to the AG to address the House of Delegates on either Mon or Tues Aug 8-9 at the ABA annual convention in Chicago. Robert Grey, the ABA Pres, called me yesterday and issued a SECOND invitation to the AG: this second one is to address the Opening Assembly on Sunday evening Aug 7th as the keynote speaker. The Opening Assembly is a general meeting of all members who attend the convention whereas the House of Delegates is the 546 elected local, state, and regional reps to the ABA, sort of a large policy-making body who pass resolutions, etc in the name of the ABA. The AG is a member of the House of Delegates by virtue of his office. The Opening Assembly will be a much larger group and will be held in the Chicago Auditorium. Grey is going to fax me a letter regarding the keynote speech invited and send on a hard copy to the AG. I got yesterday from your office a copy of the letter from Zack dated May 16th following up on the Feb 28th letter, and you have requested my rec on the AG's attendance. I would rec doing one or the other of the two invites, but not both. My preference would be for the AG to address the larger group, the Opening Assembly, on the Sunday and thereby reach more ABA members. It is probably a less hostile group that the House of Delegates. For planning purposes, promo materials, etc, Grey would like to know as soon as possible whether the AG can do either, or both, or none. Let me know what you would like for me to do, if anything, regarding these invites. Robt.

I know that Jan Williams has talked to the WH about this event, but we still have nothing set and the Department is now accepting nominations for the next round of awards. The comments we are hearing is that we are accepting nominations for the next round and we haven't even awarded the last round. I note that in the draft AG speech for the Sheriff's conference he references MOV and that we are accepting nominations.

This event should be accomplished before March of each year. We are now way past that timeframe. Advance notice also needs to be given because the awardees have to make adjustments to their work schedules, childcare, travel for family members, etc. The department pays for the awardee and one guest only.

We do have two packets out there. I believe one was signed by Tracy and this is probably the one that started this discussion. However, I signed the MOV packets for the 9/11 victims last week and that packet is slated to be announced as close to 9/11 as possible. That might be the packet that we would want the POTUS to announce.

Thanks, Jan. As I understand it, the award is typically made between Jan and March. Applications are already coming in for next year's award. And it seems that we've heard some dissatisfaction from our friends in law enforcement that nothing has happened this year. Robert suggested that, if the WH is too backed up (for entirely understandable reasons), it may want the AG to make the award. Thanks so much for your help with this. Neil

The POTUS Medal of Valor is the highest award a public safety officer an receive. The Act establishing the Medal was signed prior to 9/11. This year is the third year for the awards. A Board (appointed by the POTUS and the Congress) makes recommendations to the AG and the AG sends forward to the POTUS. All of this was done prior to the election. I know that Jan Williams has talked to the WH about this event, but we still have nothing set and the Department is now accepting nominations for the next round of awards. The comments we are hearing is that we are accepting nominations for the next round and we haven't even awarded the last round. I note that in the draft AG speech for the Sheriff's conference he references MOV and that we are accepting nominations.

This event should be accomplished before March of each year. We are now way past that timeframe. Advance notice also needs to be given because the awardees have to make adjustments to their work schedules, childcare, travel for family members, etc. The department pays for the awardee and one guest only.

I am happy to give you any additional information you might need.

As I understand it, typically the recipient plus one get to go to the WH for recognition by POTUS or his designee. The recipients then come here, with all their family and friends, for the larger award ceremony. The WH portion is special and appreciated; if possible, we really should, I think, try to get someone over there to stand in for POTUS. VP would of course be great, but others (e.g., Andy Card, Harriet Miers, Karl Rove) would be possibilities if VP proves impossible.

This request is still pending in scheduling at the WH. I ask Cabinet Liaison about the request often and am told that are trying to fit in sometime this summer. I will remind them about the time sensitivity of the event. Hopefully, we can firm up a date in the next week.

The POTUS Medal of Valor is the highest award a public safety officer an receive. The Act establishing the Medal was signed prior to 9/11. This year is the third year for the awards. A Board (appointed by the POTUS and the Congress) makes recommendations to the AG and the AG sends forward to the POTUS. All of this was done prior to the election. I know that Jan Williams has talked to the WH about this event, but we still have nothing set and the Department is now accepting nominations for the next round of awards. The comments we are hearing is that we are accepting nominations for the next round and we haven't even awarded the last round. I note that in the draft AG speech for the Sheriff's conference he references MOV and that we are accepting nominations.

This event should be accomplished before March of each year. We are now way past that timeframe.

Advance notice also needs to be given because the awardees have to make adjustments to their work schedules, childcare, travel for family members, etc. The department pays for the awardee and one guest only.

I am happy to give you any additional information you might need.
Tracy

Neil raises two issues, per Robert:

1) AG needs to decide whether he will be giving a speech at the upcoming ABA conference.

2) The President apparently hands out Medal of Valor awards to police officers, usually early in the year. He hasn't yet this year, and the issue is apparently sitting at the WH. We are getting inquiries about why this event hasn't yet happened. Tracy: can you add any more context to this?

STATEMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL ALBERTO R. GONZALES ON THE SUPREME COURT'S RULING IN MGM v. GROKSTER:

"I am pleased that the Supreme Court has considered this important case and determined that those who intentionally induce or encourage the theft of copyrighted music, movies, software, or other protected works may be held liable for their actions. As the Solicitor General argued in this case, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals had created a standard that was unduly narrow and prevented victims from bringing civil court cases even on the assumption that companies have actively induced others to violate federal copyright laws on a massive scale. The Department of Justice remains strongly committed to the enforcement of intellectual property rights, and we will continue to support the ability of victims of intellectual property theft to pursue remedies for infringement in the civil courts."

I just heard from Mary Neumayr in ENRD that the meeting will be rescheduled for next Wednesday, July 6 at 1 pm. A read ahead paper will supposedly be out tomorrow.

Mary is going to work off of my talking points to provide us with an updated version that will get you the latest information she has on agency positions. I also suggested to her that she plan to attend the ENRD bi-weekly on Wednesday, July 6 at 11 am so that we can brief you and answer any questions then. Does that sound good to you?

We could certainly do an earlier briefing if you like, but I don't think the issues are that complicated and it probably makes sense to do it that same day since agency positions tend to gel right before these meetings. Just let me know what you prefer, and I'll set it up.

U.S. Seeks $14 Billion `Remedy' From Cigarette Makers (Update1)

June 28 (Bloomberg) -- Cigarette makers should pay $14 billion to help smokers quit and to reduce youth smoking by 42 percent by 2013 as part of a remedy proposed by the Justice Department in its racketeering suit against tobacco companies.

The government filed a motion to that effect late yesterday, following an order by U.S. District Judge Gladys Kessler, who oversaw a nine-month trial that ended June 9. Kessler had asked the Justice Department to file ``a detailed proposed remedies order'' outlining the relief it wants if it wins the case.

The requested remedies were filed in the aftermath of assertions by anti-smoking advocates and Democrats that an earlier decision by the government to cut $120 billion from its claims was the result of political pressure from the Bush administration on the trial team.

Most of the money, $10 billion, would be earmarked to fund a 10-year, nationwide smoking cessation plan, which could be renewed if the companies break the law in the future. The remaining $4 billion would go to an anti-smoking public education campaign. In addition, the proposed order sets a goal of reducing the number of smokers under 21 years old and would fine companies $3,000 per smoker above the reduction targets.

The filing reflects the latest changes in the government's requested remedies in the case, which was brought in 1999 against Altria Group Inc.'s Philip Morris USA, Reynolds American Inc.'s R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. and other U.S. cigarette makers.

`Failed to Establish'

At that time, the government was seeking hundreds of billions of dollars in reimbursements for money it spent treating sick smokers and to recover what the Department of Justice called illegal industry profits.

``Philip Morris USA believes that the government has failed to establish basic liability, much less any reasonable likelihood of future wrongdoing,'' New York-based Philip Morris said in an e-mailed statement today. ``Regardless of what the government is asking for, the law and the facts applied to this case have not changed.''

The government's latest motion may signal that a settlement between the Justice Department and cigarette companies is unlikely, Smith Barney analyst Bonnie Herzog said today.

``Quite frankly, the industry is rolling the dice and allowing potentially the judge to rule on this case,'' Herzog said in an interview. ``It could work in their favor'' if the judge awards the government nothing or a relatively small amount.

Settlement Urged

Kessler had urged the two sides to settle the case, leading to a June 20 meeting in her Washington chambers with Michael Szymanczyk, chief executive of Philip Morris USA, Reynolds American CEO Susan Ivey, and industry and Justice Department lawyers.

In addition to Philip Morris and R.J. Reynolds, the defendants in the case are Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Loews Corp.'s Lorillard Tobacco Co., British American Tobacco Plc's British American Tobacco (Investments) Ltd. and Vector Group Ltd.'s Liggett Group.

Lorillard spokesman Ron Milstein, R.J. Reynolds spokesman Seth Moskowitz, and Liggett spokeswoman Carrie Bloom didn't immediately return voicemail messages seeking comment.

In 2000, Kessler threw out the government's cost-recovery claims, allowing the U.S. to proceed with a case based on allegations that the industry violated racketeering laws. The Justice Department responded by seeking $280 billion it claimed the industry improperly made from cigarette sales to smokers who were addicted before age 21.

Appeals Court Ruling

After the trial started, a Washington appeals court in February said the government couldn't seek the $280 billion. Circuit Court Judge David Sentelle, who was appointed to the Court of Appeals in 1987 by President Ronald Reagan, said the government is limited to ``forward-looking'' remedies that prevent future violations of the law, rather than punishing past conduct.

Kessler called the ruling, which required the government to rethink its strategy in the middle of the trial, a ``body blow'' to the U.S. case.

Then, on June 7, during closing arguments, Justice Department lawyer Stephen Brody asked Kessler to order the industry to fund a five-year, $10 billion smoking cessation program, dropping a request for a more expansive 25-year, $130 billion plan that had been advocated by a government witness less than a month before.

The government has said it reduced its request to comply with the February appeals court ruling. Anti-smoking advocates and congressional Democrats claimed the decision was the result of political pressure on the Justice Department.

``The government keeps changing its remedies on a day-to- day basis,'' Philip Morris lawyer Dan Webb said at the end of the trial. ``It's a moving target.''

The case is U.S. v. Philip Morris USA, No. 99-CV-2496, U.S. District Court, District of Columbia.

U.S. seeks $14 billion in tobacco racketeering case

WASHINGTON – The U.S. government has asked a federal judge to force cigarette makers to fund a $10 billion quit-smoking program and another $4 billion for an anti-smoking education campaign.

Lawyers for the Justice Department told U.S. District Judge Gladys Kessler late on Monday in a motion with the court that the smoking cessation program and other remedies were needed to correct decades of alleged tobacco industry fraud.

The $10 billion would pay for a nationwide program that would run for five years if Kessler concludes that the tobacco companies violated racketeering laws. The $4 billion education program would be spread over 10 years.

The department said the court should be allowed to extend the cessation program if it deems it necessary.

The government's proposal has been heavily criticized by anti-smoking groups since it was first outlined by Justice Department lawyers during closing arguments in the landmark case earlier this month.

Critics have complained that the program is only a fraction of the $130 billion, 25-year program recommended by a government witness.

The government also asked Kessler to ban tobacco product descriptions such as "light."

Targeted in the lawsuit, filed in 1999, are Altria and its Philip Morris unit; Loews Corp.'s Lorillard Tobacco unit, which has a tracking stock, Carolina Group; Vector Group Ltd.'s Liggett Group; Reynolds American's R.J. Reynolds Tobacco unit; and British American Tobacco Plc unit, British American Tobacco Investments Ltd.

The companies deny they illegally conspired to promote smoking and say the government has no grounds to pursue them or impose additional restrictions after they drastically overhauled marketing practices as part of a 1998 settlement.

Kessler has repeatedly urged the government and cigarette makers to settle the landmark racketeering case. The two sides held meetings earlier this year at Kessler's request in an unsuccessful effort to reach a settlement.

Guantanamo cases still in legal limbo

By Frank Davies, KNIGHT RIDDER

One year ago today, the Supreme Court issued a landmark ruling that opened the door to federal courts for 500-plus prisoners in the Guantanamo Bay prison camp to challenge their captivity.

But 200 detainees, including some held more than three years, who have filed habeas corpus petitions in federal court haven't been able to get through that door. After months of procedural battles, no judge has heard the merits of a single Guantanamo case.

As controversy mounts over the treatment of Guantanamo detainees, and the Bush administration argues that prisoners can be held indefinitely without being charged, even some Republican senators have called for a faster resolution of their cases.

"Our whole system is to get people to determine what the facts are, charge them and move ahead," said Sen. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, at a recent hearing. "What's going on here? This seems to be a horribly slow process."

A habeas corpus petition, in which a prisoner claims he's being improperly jailed, "is supposed to get fast-track consideration because personal liberty is an urgent issue," said Eugene Fidell, president of the National Institute of Military Justice.

But that hasn't happened.

The Center for Constitutional Rights, which helped organize 400 lawyers to represent detainees, has had little lasting success since the Supreme Court's ruling required hearings on the detentions.

"We've had some strong rulings in our favor on one hand, and then they're taken away on the other hand," said Michael Ratner, president of the center.

Several factors, including vagueness in the 2004 Supreme Court ruling, have slowed down the pace of litigation in the Guantanamo cases, according to Fidell and other legal and national security experts.

The court, in the 6-3 decision of Rasul v. Bush, settled one important question: It ruled that Guantanamo -- a naval base leased from Cuba -- isn't outside U.S. law and that U.S. courts could hear detainees' claims.

But it didn't set out a process to do that, leaving it to lower courts.

"It's not unusual for the Supreme Court to give a broad legal ruling and leave the details up to the district courts," said Scott Silliman, director of the Center on Law, Ethics and National Security at Duke University.

Fidell was more critical: "The court didn't do what it needed to do. Because it gave no blueprint, we have hundreds of detainees held for years, and their cases have no resolution in sight."

The Bush administration has resisted judicial review at every juncture. The Defense Department originally sought to bar lawyers' access to Guantanamo, then wanted to monitor their conversations with detainees, but lost on those issues.

"They have dug in their heels every step of the way," Ratner said. "They have ignored the clear thrust of the Supreme Court."

Justice attorneys argued that special military panels, set up last year, gave detainees adequate due process in reviewing their status as enemy combatants.

Two federal judges, Joyce Hens Green and James Robertson, rejected that argument; one, Richard J. Leon, agreed.

Even district judges who have ruled against the government have moved methodically, recognizing that appellate judges and eventually the Supreme Court will resolve the major issue of what rights a detainee has in federal court.

Green issued a strong ruling on Jan. 31 against the government, declaring that while she "would have welcomed a clearer declaration" from the Supreme Court, she decided that the prisoners had "enforceable constitutional rights."

But she then issued a stay, because her decision and one by Leon were in conflict, sending the habeas cases to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. That court is receiving final briefs but hasn't yet scheduled oral arguments.

In a related case, Robertson halted military trials of a handful of detainees in November, citing a lack of due process. A ruling from the appellate court on that case is expected this summer.

UPDATE

PAKISTAN FREES 17 MEN DETAINED AFTER RETURNING FROM GUANTANAMO: A group of 17 men who were arrested upon their return home to Pakistan after being released from the U.S. prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, were freed Monday after nine months in detention here, an official said.

"These are people who have been declared innocent by America. Our (intelligence) agencies have thoroughly interrogated them," said Tahir Ashrafi, a religious affairs adviser for the government in eastern Punjab province.

"They have not been found to be involved in any kind of terrorist activity," he told reporters outside the Kot Lakhpat jail.

Hundreds of Pakistanis went to Afghanistan to fight alongside the Taliban militia against the United States. After the U.S. military operation ousted the Taliban from power in 2001, many Pakistanis were jailed in Afghanistan, and some were sent to Guantanamo.

Since September 2004, some 35 Pakistanis have been freed from Guantanamo.

Groups back restraining orders amid ruling

Victims' advocates scrambled to reassure the public that restraining orders are still effective for preventing domestic violence, despite a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that police cannot be sued over the way they enforce them.

The 7-2 ruling Monday ended a lawsuit by a Colorado woman who claimed Castle Rock police did not do enough to prevent her estranged husband from killing their three young daughters. The ruling said Jessica Gonzales did not have a constitutional right to police enforcement of the court order against her husband.

"The second tragedy in this case could very well be that victims of domestic violence will read this opinion to mean that protection orders are not worth the paper they're printed on, and that impression would be false," said Richard Smith, a Washington lawyer who filed a brief in support of Gonzales.
Trish Thibodo, executive director of the Colorado Coalition Against Domestic Violence, said police still have a responsibility to enforce restraining orders and to take them seriously.

"Nothing's changed," she said.

City governments feared that a ruling in Gonzales' favor could open them to a flood of lawsuits. Judges in Colorado issued more than 14,000 restraining orders in fiscal 2004.

"The potential for liability was just completely out of this world," said Brad Bailey, an assistant city attorney in Littleton who filed a brief in support of the Castle Rock police department.

Gonzales' attorney, Brian Reichel, did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

On ABC's "Good Morning America," Gonzales said now that the Supreme Court has ruled, she is moving on.

"I'm going to continue my advocacy for other victims," she said. "I believe that there is a lot to be done, and this is a new beginning for me. And continuing to try to find some resolution for why my three children were murdered."

Gonzales sued the Castle Rock police department, claiming officers ignored her pleas to find her husband after he took the three girls, ages 10, 9 and 7, from the front yard of her home in June 1999 in violation of a restraining order. Hours later, Simon Gonzales died in a gunfight with officers outside a police station. The bodies of the girls were in his truck.

Gonzales argued that she was entitled to sue based on her rights under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and under a Colorado law that says officers must use "every reasonable means" to enforce a restraining order.

She contended that her restraining order should be considered property under the 14th Amendment and that it was taken from her without due process when police failed to enforce it.

A federal judge in Denver dismissed her lawsuit, but the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals revived it, saying the restraining order was a government benefit that should be treated like any other property.

But Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for the high court's majority, said Colorado's law does not entitle people who receive protective orders to police enforcement.

Smith, Gonzales' attorney, called the ruling "an open invitation to states to look at their statutes and enhance them and to provide the kind of protections that victims need."

He said lawmakers should ensure that police departments can be sued in state courts for failure to enforce protective orders. Under current state law, governments in Colorado and other states are immune from such lawsuits, forcing Gonzales to turn to the federal courts.

"The ultimate conclusion in this case is that states need to stand up and become accountable in protecting the innocent victims of domestic violence," Smith said.

Castle Rock officials contend they tried to help Gonzales. Police twice went to the estranged husband's apartment, kept an eye out for his truck and called his cellular phone and home phone.

Gonzales reached him on his cell phone, and he told her that he had taken the girls to an amusement park in nearby Denver. Gonzales maintains that police should have gone to the amusement park or contacted Denver police.

"We all still feel really bad about this whole situation, but in response to the allegations we were unresponsive and so on, these were all totally not true," said Police Chief Tony Lane, who was chief at the time of the slayings.

"The deaths of these girls, while tragic, I think the learning experience we gained from this will help us deal better with these situations in the future," he said.

Justices deny mom's right to sue police; Court: Castle Rock cops couldn't have known dad would kill kids

By Joey Bunch
Denver Post Staff Writer

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Jessica Gonzales does not have the right to sue Castle Rock police for not enforcing a restraining order against her husband just hours before he killed her three daughters in 1999.

In a 7-2 decision Monday, the court said police had no way of predicting - even after a worried Jessica Gonzales called the police - that Simon Gonzales would kill the couple's children and then start a shootout at a police station, where he was killed.

"The Supreme Court has spoken, and we're satisfied," said Castle Rock Police Chief Tony Lane. "It's time to move on."

Jessica Gonzales sought to sue the town for $30 million, arguing that the restraining order required police to arrest her husband to protect her children.

If Gonzales had prevailed, it would have had sweeping ramifications for departments nationwide, possibly making police liable when they fail to prevent a crime, legal observers say.

In Colorado, as in most other states, police are immune from lawsuits over the way they carry out their duties, except in cases of extreme negligence.

"This is a big win for local government," said Brad Bailey, an assistant city attorney for Littleton.

Municipal and police officials across the country had worried that a ruling in favor of Gonzales would spawn a slew of costly lawsuits that second-guess police actions.

"Anytime the cops don't get there fast enough, we're looking at a lawsuit," said Bailey, who wrote a brief to the court on behalf of the National League of Cities, the International Municipal Lawyers Association and the National Sheriffs' Association.

Writing for the majority, Justice Antonin Scalia cited another ruling that stated it is "simply 'common sense' that all police officers must use some discretion in deciding when and where to enforce city ordinances."

Writing in dissent, Justice John Paul Stevens, joined by Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, said police "lacked the discretion to do nothing."

Mandatory-arrest laws were passed in many states, including Colorado, because lawmakers found the "crisis of under-enforcement had various causes, not least of which was the perception by police departments and police officers that domestic violence was a private ... matter and that arrest was to be used as a last resort," Stevens wrote.

Since her children's deaths, Jessica Gonzales has remarried and moved to California. She said she would continue to push for enforcement of restraining orders, "so that my daughters will not have died in vain."

"We need to put pressure on our elected officials to pass laws that offer real protection to women and their families," she said in a statement released by the American Civil Liberties Union, which championed her cause.

After the court defeat, the ACLU urged state legislatures to adopt tougher laws on restraining orders and police negligence.

Gonzales' lawyer, Brian Reichel of Broomfield, doubted that would happen in Colorado, considering the immunity the state already has extended to police.

"For us, there's nowhere to go," Reichel said. "For Jessica Gonzales, the fight is over."

Reichel said the Supreme Court had "given the green light" to police to ignore restraining orders. "Police now have unfettered discretion to ignore these directives."

Police did all they could to help Jessica Gonzales as the facts unraveled the night her children were killed, said Lane, Castle Rock's police chief.

"Obviously, we have a difference in opinion on how this case was handled," he said. "But we all feel bad for Jessica because she lost her three children. The community feels horrible for her."

Courthouse removes Commandments

A framed copy of the Ten Commandments was removed from the Gallatin County, Ky., courthouse on Monday, hours after the Supreme Court ruled their display was unconstitutional in two other Kentucky court- rooms.

The display has been the focal point of a see-saw battle between advocates of a clearer separation of church and state and those who argue the Commandments are nothing more than a reflection of the basis for U.S. law.

No similar battles over the Ten Commandments were being fought in the tri-state, according to numerous court and government officials in Hamilton County, as well as Boone, Campbell and Kenton counties in Kentucky.

But the legal battle, in various forms, has been evolving for years in the region.

Monuments showing the Protestant version of the Ten Commandments were removed from the property of four public schools in Adams County, east of Brown County, in June 2003, by federal court order following a challenge by the ACLU of Ohio.

In the Gallatin County case, Edward Kagin, an attorney and head of the Kentucky branch of American Atheism, successfully requested that the commandments be removed from the Gallatin courthouse last year. Special Judge Stanley Billingsley granted Kagin's request and moved them into his chambers.

But the commandments were quietly replaced in the courtroom since then, Circuit Clerk Sue O'Connor said.

They were removed Monday by order of Gallatin Circuit Judge Linda Bramlage.

O'Connor disagreed with the decision to remove them.

"I'm sorry to see them go. I believe in the Ten Commandments, and I don't really understand what all the controversy is over. I think everybody has a right to their beliefs, and I don't know of any time they were used to change anyone's beliefs," she said.

Kagin had a very different view, commending the Supreme Court for its 5-4 ruling against the commandment's display in Kentucky courtrooms.

"It's very good for Kentucky because we do not have an establishment for religion clause in a Kentucky forum. (The legal battle) was really quite a waste of taxpayer money," he said. "There are too many important things to do to waste time with this."

Neither Bramlage nor Billingsley could be reached for comment Monday.

Leigh Anne Hiatt, a spokeswoman for the administrative office of the courts, which oversees state courts in Kentucky, said her office does not permit the display of any art work or other objects at courthouses with the exception of plaques or honorariums dedicated to deceased judges or attorneys and the like.

"Our policies that we have been enforcing have been consistent with (Monday's) Supreme Court ruling," Hiatt said.

"In shared facilities, where the local governments have space, we do not dictate what they do with their space," she added.

In Northern Kentucky, the Boone and Kenton county court- houses are operated solely by the state courts, while Campbell County courts share their facilities with the county government.

However, the county has not posted the Ten Commandments, County Attorney Justin Verst said, and has no plans to do so.

In Boone County, members of the fiscal court have discussed posting the Ten Commandments in county facilities. County Administrator Jim Parsons said Monday that no plans were in the works for such a move.

"We decided to do nothing while the issue was being played out in court. There's nobody really pushing to do anything one way or the other at this point (in Boone County)," he said.

A quarter-century ago, the Supreme Court struck down a Kentucky law that required public schools to post a copy of the Ten Commandments in every classroom.

The state argued that the statute was designed to illustrate for students the importance of the Ten Commandments in the nation's legal code.

But in what is now called the Stone decision, the court in 1980 rejected that argument, saying the statute had no plausible secular purpose.

Moore's monument wouldn't pass test, experts agree

By Ana Radelat

WASHINGTON -- The Ten Commandments display championed by former Alabama Chief Justice Roy Moore clearly would not pass muster under Monday's Supreme Court ruling defining which religious displays are constitutional and which are not, experts said Monday.

In two 5-4 rulings on cases out of Texas and Kentucky, the Supreme Court decided religious displays on public grounds are constitutional if they portray religion as part of the nation's legal history or offer a "neutral" acknowledgement of religion by the government.

The Supreme Court decisions leave it to observers to determine if a Ten Commandments display is predominantly secular in nature. That allows wiggle room for many displays, but not Moore's, said Lee Strang, a professor at the Ave Maria Law School in Ann Arbor, Mich.

"Roy Moore was very, very public with the fact that he wanted to promote Christianity with his display," Strang said.

The Supreme Court said Monday that a Texas display of the Ten Commandments is constitutional because it is a "passive" acknowledgement of religion and was placed in a "nonproselytizing" manner among other historical monuments on the grounds of the Texas state capitol.

"While the Commandments are religious, they have an undeniable historical meaning," wrote Chief Justice William Rehnquist in the decision on the Texas case.

Moore was ousted as chief justice on the Alabama Supreme Court after he refused to comply with an order from the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals to remove the Ten Commandments display he had installed in the Alabama Supreme Court building. The U.S. Supreme Court later rejected Moore's appeals.

Moore said Monday's court rulings will make it more difficult to keep Ten Commandments displays on private property. He accused the Supreme Court of denying God and said the rulings would lead to the slow loss of "your rights to life, liberty and property."

"The issue is and remains whether or not we can acknowledge God under the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States," Moore said.

Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Tuscaloosa, who introduced a Ten Commandments bill in Congress, also expressed disappointed in the high court's action.

"While I am not surprised by the close decision, I believe it further reinforces the need for passage of legislation that would clarify the role of the judiciary in cases regarding the acknowledgment of God, such as the Constitution Restoration Act."

Duke law professor Erwin Chemerinsky, the attorney who represented a Texas man who protested the Texas Ten Commandments display, lost his bid to have the monument considered unconstitutional.

But he said the Supreme Court upheld his argument that there are limits on government's ability to put religious symbols on government property.

"The court clearly held that the Ten Commandments are a religious symbol, but whether a particular Ten Commandments display is constitutional will depend on its history, purpose, and context," Chemerinsky said.

Under the new standard set by the Supreme Court, Moore's display would "no doubt" be considered unconstitutional, Chemerinsky said.

"His purpose was to unabashedly promote religion," he said.

The Supreme Court's two 5-4 decisions made it impossible for either the left or right to claim victory.

But Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way, said he was pleased with "the affirmation of the constitutional principle of government neutrality toward religion."

"While we disagree with how the court applied that principle to the facts in Texas, we are very pleased that the court has rejected efforts to dismantle church-state separation," Neas said.

The Christian right criticized the decision most heavily.

"Today's flawed Ten Commandments decision by the Supreme Court makes the confirmation of strict constructionists to that court more important than ever," said Roberta Combs, president of the Christian Coalition of America.

Justices Reinstate Suits on Internet File Sharing

By LINDA GREENHOUSE and LORNE MANLY

WASHINGTON, June 27 - The Supreme Court handed a major victory to the entertainment and recording industries on Monday by reinstating a copyright-infringement suit against two file-sharing services.

In a unanimous opinion, the court strongly suggested that the services, Grokster and StreamCast Networks, should be found liable for the vast copyright infringement committed by those using their software to download music and movies.

Two lower federal courts in California had ruled in favor of the two companies, dismissing the lawsuit without a trial on the basis of a legal analysis that the Supreme Court found seriously flawed.

In his opinion for the court on Monday, Justice David H. Souter suggested that when properly evaluated, the evidence against Grokster and StreamCast was, in fact, so strong that the entertainment-industry plaintiffs might be entitled to summary judgment.

At the least, he said, MGM Studios and the other plaintiffs - including the Recording Industry Association of America, the Motion Picture

Association of America and a class of 27,000 music publishers and songwriters - were entitled to a trial to prove their accusations that the file-sharing companies were in business primarily to enable and induce computer users to find and download copyrighted material.

In the Supreme Court's view, the plaintiffs have effectively made that case already. Justice Souter called the record "replete with evidence" that the companies "acted with a purpose to cause copyright violations by use of software suitable for illegal use." The opinion referred to "evidence of infringement on a gigantic scale" and said that "the probable scope of copyright infringement is staggering." [Excerpts, Page C5.]

The movie and music industries, even armed with a decision affirming their legal recourse, have a long way to go to capitalize on it, and they plan new efforts to persuade or force those actually doing the downloading to desist.

Digital rights advocates, while somewhat relieved that the court did not go further, were concerned that the ruling could invite a deluge of lawsuits and a risk that they would inhibit innovation.

There is no dispute that individual users violate copyright law when they share files of copyrighted material, and the industry has had some modest success in seeking fines from college students and others. But with millions of users downloading billions of files each month, retail prosecution proved inefficient, so the music and entertainment industries turned their attention several years ago to the commercial services that make the file sharing possible.

That effort led to the Supreme Court's most important copyright case since its ruling in 1984 that shielded the manufacturers of the videocassette recorder from copyright liability for possibly infringing use by home consumers.

The court based its decision then, in Sony v. Universal City Studios, on a finding that the VCR was "capable of substantial noninfringing uses," like time-shifting, in which home users simply recorded programs for viewing later.

In ruling last year for Grokster and StreamCast, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in San Francisco relied on the Sony decision, finding that the file-sharing software had possible noninfringing uses. Because the software operates in a decentralized way without using a central computer, the appeals court found, Grokster and StreamCast could not track users and had no direct knowledge of any specific instance of infringement.

The Supreme Court on Monday held that the appeals court had misapplied the Sony decision by focusing only on the technology, without regard to the business model that the technology served.

"One who distributes a device with the object of promoting its use to infringe copyright, as shown by clear expression or other affirmative steps taken to foster infringement, is liable for the resulting acts of infringement by third parties," Justice Souter wrote.

Movie and music industry executives hailed the decision. "If you build a business that aids and abets theft, you will be held accountable," said Dan Glickman, chief executive of the Motion Picture Association of America, the lobbying organization for the major Hollywood studios. BMI, representing more than 300,000 songwriters and composers, called the decision "good news indeed for the creative community whose work has been blatantly infringed."

The movie and music industries had warned that file sharing was hurting them financially, and could ultimately inhibit the creation of content. The music industry has blamed song-swapping over the Internet for its decade-long sales slump.

While movies and television shows are more difficult to trade online because of the size of their files, technological advances are making that easier and threatening the rich source of cash that DVD sales have become for the studios.

On the other hand, groups including the American Civil Liberties Union, Consumers Union, the Consumer Electronics Association and other elements of the computer and technology industries warned the court that too broad a rule of contributory copyright infringement would stifle innovation if there was a possibility that consumers might put a product to an infringing use.

It was clear from the opinion, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios Inv. v. Grokster Ltd., No. 04-480, that the justices had taken note of that argument and tried to draw a line that would protect both copyright holders and innovators. The court identified the line as "inducement" - deliberately urging consumers to make illicit use of the product or showing them how it could be done.

"Mere knowledge of infringing potential or of actual infringing uses would not be enough here to subject a distributor to liability," Justice Souter said. He added: "Nor would ordinary acts incident to product distribution, such as offering customers technical support or product updates, support liability in themselves. The inducement rule, instead, premises liability on purposeful, culpable expression and conduct, and thus does nothing to compromise legitimate commerce or discourage innovation having a lawful promise."

James Gibson, a professor of intellectual property and computer law at the University of Richmond School of Law, applauded what he called a balancing act between artistic creators and technological innovators.

By putting so much weight on proving companies' bad behavior, he said, the decision could create more legal expenses and unpredictability for technology companies. At the same time, he added, it should provide peace of mind to creators of technology that could be used for both legitimate and infringing uses.

But several technology advocates expressed concern, saying innovators would now be saddled with the befuddling notion of "intent." Matthew Neco, StreamCast's general counsel, said the ruling turned Hollywood and the recording industry into "thought police."

Michael Petricone, vice president for technology policy at the Consumer Electronics Association, said that without clear guidelines from the court on what a company must do to avoid being held liable for contributing to copyright infringement, "the legal clarity has decreased and the risk of litigation has increased."

Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales said he was pleased the court had "determined that those who intentionally induce or encourage the theft of copyrighted music, movies, software or other protected works may be held liable for their actions." The Bush administration joined the argument in support of the studios.

While the court's judgment was unanimous, the justices did not share the same view of how useful the Sony precedent remained after more than 20 years of changing technology. A concurring opinion by Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, which Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice Anthony M. Kennedy joined, suggested that the Sony case's reference to "substantial noninfringing use" was too easily misunderstood by lower courts and might have to be tailored for different types of technology.

The file-sharing software might be used to swap large numbers of noninfringing files, Justice Ginsburg said, but even a big number would be "dwarfed by the huge total volume of files shared."

Justice Stephen G. Breyer, in a concurring opinion also signed by Justices John Paul Stevens and Sandra Day O'Connor, said the Sony decision had basically achieved its "innovation-protecting objective" and struck the right balance between protecting copyrights and technology. It should be retained, he said.

Hollywood Can Sue Over Movie, Music Piracy

WASHINGTON -- Hollywood and the music industry can file piracy lawsuits against technology companies caught encouraging customers to steal music and movies over the Internet, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The justices, aiming to curtail what they called a "staggering" volume of piracy online, largely set aside concerns that new lawsuits would inhibit technology companies from developing the next iPod or other high-tech gadgets or services.

The unanimous ruling is expected to have little immediate impact on consumers, though critics said it could lead companies to include digital locks to discourage illegal behavior.

The justices left in place legal protections for companies that merely learn customers might be using products for illegal purposes.

The justices said copying digital files such as movies, music or software programs "threatens copyright holders as never before" because it's so easy and popular, especially among young people. Entertainment companies maintain that online thieves trade 2.6 billion songs, movies and other digital files each month.

"I am pleased that the Supreme Court has considered this important case and determined that those who intentionally induce or encourage the theft of copyrighted music, movies, software or other protected works may be held liable for their actions," Attorney General Alberto Gonzales said.

The ruling represents a significant victory for Hollywood and record labels, which have resorted to suing individually the thousands of computer users caught sharing music and movies online.

"We will no longer have to compete with thieves in the night whose businesses are built on larceny," said Andrew Lack, chief executive for Sony BMG Music Entertainment.

In a tweak at entertainment companies -- and a demonstration of legal purposes for file-sharing -- computer users circulated the court's published opinion over Internet file-sharing services. Government-produced documents generally are not protected by copyright.

The court said Grokster Ltd. and Streamcast Networks Inc., developers of leading Internet file-sharing software, can be sued because they deliberately encouraged customers to download copyrighted files illegally so they could build a larger audience and sell more advertising. Writing for the court, Justice David H. Souter said the companies' "unlawful objective is unmistakable."

The court noted as evidence of bad conduct that Grokster and Streamcast made no effort to block illegal downloads, which the companies maintained wasn't possible.

But the court also said a technology company couldn't be sued if it merely learns its customers are using its products for illegal purposes. That balancing test, the court said, is necessary so that it "does nothing to compromise legitimate commerce or discourage innovation having a lawful promise."

The court said it wanted to protect an inventor who must predict how consumers months or years in the future might use new technology.

"The price of a wrong guess ... could be large," Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote.

The lawyer for the software companies, Richard Taranto, said he will argue in a new trial that they did not encourage computer users to download music and movies illegally. He complained the Supreme Court's ruling was so vague it was impossible to know which companies might be sued.

"You can't be terribly sure how it might apply to you," Taranto said.

Taranto's partner in the case, Fred von Lohmann of the San Francisco-based Electronic Frontier Foundation, predicted the decision will "unleash a new era of legal uncertainty on America's innovators" and that unresolved questions "will probably tie up courts for a long time."

Justices said a federal appeals court in California mistakenly applied too broadly the landmark 1984 Supreme Court ruling. The court decided in the case that Sony Corp. could not be sued over consumers who used its VCRs to make illegal copies of movies because most people used VCRs legally to tape programs and watch them later.

"Nothing in Sony requires courts to ignore evidence of intent to promote infringement," the court said. It declined to go further, saying it wanted "to leave further consideration of the Sony rule for a day when that may be required."

Monday's decision did not affect the illegality of computer users downloading copyrighted materials over the Internet without permission. The ruling also was not expected to affect the thousands of copyright lawsuits filed already against computer users by the trade groups for Hollywood studios and the largest labels.

The case is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios v. Grokster, 04-480.

Press Release: People Injured by Hep A Vaccine Eligible For Compensation From HRSA

By Sandra Basu

WASHINGTON-The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) announced that individuals who are injured by the hepatitis A vaccine are eligible for compensation under HRSA's National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program (VICP).

Hepatitis A is a liver disease caused by the hepatitis A virus and can be spread from person to person. It is the most common type of hepatitis reported in the United States. The hepatitis A vaccine is recommended for children in certain states and communities with high incidence of the disease, for people with certain chronic diseases, or for those traveling to countries where the disease is common.

According to HRSA, to be eligible for compensation, claims must be filed within three years after the first symptoms of the vaccine injury; or within two years of the vaccine-related death; and not more than four years after the start of the first symptom of the vaccine-related injury from which the death occurred.

In addition, people who believe that the vaccine has injured them have two years from the date the vaccine is covered to file a claim for injuries or deaths that occurred up to eight years before the date the vaccine is covered. For the hepatitis A vaccine, claims must be filed by Dec. 1, 2006, for injuries or deaths that occurred on or after Dec. 1, 1996.

Congress created the VICP in 1986 as an alternative to traditional civil litigation. The VCIP provides financial compensation to eligible individuals who have been injured by vaccines. In addition, compensation may also be awarded for attorneys' fees and costs.

UNCLAS SECTION 01 OF 02 STATE 118425

INFORM CONSULS

E.O. 12958: N/A
TAGS: CASC, ASEC, OTRA, CG
SUBJECT: TRAVEL WARNING - DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE CONGO (CONGO-KINSHASA)

STATE 00118425 001.2 OF 002

1. This Travel Warning for the Democratic Republic of the Congo (Congo-Kinshasa) reiterates the Department of State's warning to U.S. citizens against traveling there in light of recent unrest and the potential for more unrest in the near future. This Travel Warning supersedes that of March 30, 2005.

2. The Department of State warns U.S. citizens against travel to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Despite efforts to advance the peace process following the 2003 formation of a transitional government, periodic fighting continues in North and South Kivu, Ituri District, and other areas of eastern Congo. Wide-scale civil unrest broke out in May and June 2004, with rioting and looting in many cities, including the capital Kinshasa, and resulted in United Nations (U.N.) peacekeeper and civilian casualties. There were also civilian and police casualties during demonstrations in several areas of Kinshasa in January 2005 and in Mbuji Mayi in May 2005.
The challenges of implementing national elections raise the possibility of further civil disturbance over the next several months. The extension of the transitional government beyond June 2005 has prompted some opposition groups to call for large-scale demonstrations in Kinshasa and throughout the country on or about June 30, 2005.

3. Though U.N. observer forces are deployed throughout the country, unofficial armed groups and active duty troops in parts of the country are known to pillage, carjack and steal vehicles, kill extra-judicially, rape, kidnap, stir up ethnic tensions, and carry out military/paramilitary operations. The large number of rebel and government soldiers to be decommissioned as a result of the peace process is also a security concern. Travelers may be detained and questioned by ill-disciplined security forces at numerous military roadblocks throughout the country.
Government-imposed curfews, not currently in effect, could be reinstated upon short notice if the security situation deteriorates. Visitors should restrict their travel, particularly at night, to areas of Kinshasa where they are familiar. In the event of political disturbances, they should avoid the parts of the city where the disturbances occur, especially at night. There are increased police patrols and checkpoints throughout Kinshasa as the government seeks to maintain order and quell any disturbances by those opposed to extending the transition.
This often results in long traffic delays and the payment of "fines" to be allowed to pass.

4. Travelers to the Democratic Republic of the Congo routinely experience difficulties at the airport and other ports of entry, such as temporary detention and demands by immigration and security personnel for unofficial "special fees." Visas are not available at ports of entry. All foreigners, including Americans, are required to register at the office of the Direction General de Migration (DGM) in the commune of their place of residence. Foreigners may be asked to show their "jeton" (registration ticket) at security checkpoints and when departing the country.

5. Travel in the eastern provinces, especially in rural areas, remains unsafe due to continued sporadic attacks by uncontrolled militias. Land borders with Rwanda may temporarily close with little or no notice.

6. Americans should avoid all public demonstrations and areas where crowds are gathered, exercise extreme caution, closely watch and listen for news from reliable sources, and continuously review their personal security posture.

Changes in security conditions occasionally restrict the travel of U.S. Embassy personnel.

7. U.S. citizens who travel to or remain in the Democratic Republic of the Congo despite this Travel Warning are strongly urged to register with the Embassy in Kinshasa or through the State Department's travel registration website at <https://travelregistration.state.gov>. By registering, American citizens make it easier for the Embassy or Consulate to contact them in case of emergency. The U.S. Embassy is located at 310 Avenue des Aviateurs; entrance to the Consular Section is on Avenue Dumi, opposite Ste.
Anne residence. The Embassy's 24-hour number is 243-81- 225-5872; callers within DRC should dial 081 225-5872.
Cell phones are best as landlines are often unreliable.
The Embassy website is <http://kinshasa.usembassy.gov/>.

8. U.S. citizens should also consult the Department of State's most recent Consular Information Sheet for the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Worldwide Caution Public Announcement, both located on the Department's Internet website at <http://travel.state.gov>. Up-to-date information on safety and security is available toll free at 1-888-407-4747, or at regular toll rates at 1-202-501- 4444 for callers outside the U.S. and Canada, from 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time, Monday through Friday (except U.S. federal holidays).

9. Minimize considered.

OPERATOR OF SEXUALLY ORIENTED BUSINESS PLEADS GUILTY TO FEDERAL OBSCENITY CHARGE

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Acting Assistant Attorney General John C. Richter of the Criminal Division and Richard B. Roper, U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Texas, announced that Leroy Moore, Sr., of Arlington, Texas, has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to engage in the business of selling or transferring obscene matter.

Moore, 64, of Arlington, Texas, entered the plea this morning in federal court in Dallas, Texas, before U.S. District Judge Ed Kinkeade. Moore, the operator of four adult bookstores in Tarrant County, Texas, faces a maximum statutory sentence of five years in prison, a $250,000 fine and restitution. Sentencing is scheduled for Sept. 29, 2005.

Moore pleaded guilty to one count of a 23-count indictment, returned in March 2005 by a federal grand jury in Dallas, that charged Moore and other individuals, including Edward Joseph Wedelstedt, of Littleton, Colorado, and Colorado-based Goalie Entertainment Holdings, Inc., with racketeering, obscenity and tax charges. Moore pleaded guilty today to the only count in which he was charged in the indictment. Generally, the indictment charges criminal activities related to the operation of dozens of video arcades across the United States where customers can pay with tokens or coins to view clips of obscene videos or DVDs. Moore has agreed to cooperate with the government's prosecution in this case and trial for the remaining defendants is set for January 2006.

Moore also pleaded guilty on June 22, 2005 to a separate indictment, filed in the Fort Worth, Texas, Division of the Northern District and unsealed in October 2004, charging him with conspiracy to evade federal taxes. Moore previously entered a guilty plea in yet another case in federal court in Fort Worth, Texas in which he was charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm, and is awaiting sentencing on that charge.

According to documents filed with the district court in Dallas, Moore managed and operated adult bookstores including the following businesses located in Tarrant County, Texas: Bright Lights I, Bright Lights II, Star Video and New Video. Each of Moore's stores contained a video arcade or "peep show," consisting of a dozen or more small, private booths containing video screens with channel controls and devices which accept coins or tokens. The video players permitted customers to view sexually explicit videos by placing money or tokens into a slot which activated the screen for a finite length of time, usually one minute or less. The customers could select from a variety of sexually explicit videos by pushing various channel buttons. Customer viewing time could be extended by inserting additional coins, currency or tokens. The adult bookstores and the video arcades operated 24 hours per day, seven days a week.

Moore has admitted that the six videos named in the indictment, which were displayed in his video arcades, are obscene. After reviewing the materials, Judge Kinkeade made a finding on the record that none of the materials in question were constitutionally protected. These videos are described as depicting hardcore sexual intercourse.

The case is being prosecuted by Trial Attorneys Steve Grocki and Alexandra Gelber of the Child Exploitation and Obscenity Section, Criminal Division, Department of Justice; Assistant U.S. Attorneys Linda Groves and Erin Nealy Cox and Special Assistant U.S. Attorney Tim Gallagher, U.S. Attorney's Office for the Northern District of Texas; and Trial Attorney Bob Kemins of the Tax Division, Department of Justice. Assistance was also provided by the Organized Crime and Racketeering Section and the Asset Forfeiture and Money Laundering Section, both part of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice.

The RICO-obscenity investigation was spearheaded by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, and the tax evasion investigation was handled by the Criminal Investigations Division of the Internal Revenue Service. Investigative assistance was also provided by several police departments and prosecutors' investigators from several states, including the Dallas District Attorney's Office.

FORMER SALVADORAN CONGRESSMAN CONVICTED OF CONSPIRACY TO IMPORT AND DISTRIBUTE COCAINE INTO THE UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Acting Assistant Attorney General John C. Richter of the Criminal Division announced today that a federal jury in Washington, D.C., has convicted former Salvadoran congressman William Eliu-Martinez on charges of conspiracy to import and distribute cocaine into the United States.

The jury deliberated less than eight hours over two days before returning the guilty verdicts Monday afternoon. The case was prosecuted by Department of Justice Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section Trial Attorneys Michael Mota, Patrick Hern and James Faulkner, during a two-and-a-half week trial before Judge Michael M. Mihm, visiting judge from the Central District of Illinois.

The two-count indictment charging Martinez was returned in October 2003, and Martinez was arrested by DEA agents in Panama the following month.

"Martinez, a significant Central American cocaine trafficker, now knows that he could not evade the long arm of international justice," said Acting Assistant Attorney General Richter. "These verdicts send a strong message that large-scale cocaine traffickers who send narcotics to the United States can be effectively prosecuted, no matter where they operate."

Martinez's co-defendant, Otto Herrera Garcia, is currently a fugitive and international efforts to locate and prosecute him continue.

The DEA investigation of Martinez's drug trafficking activities was conducted in close cooperation with several Central American law enforcement agencies. Investigators and prosecutors enjoyed particularly strong support from the government of El Salvador.

Martinez is scheduled to be sentenced on Sept. 12, 2005. He faces up to life in prison.

Fair questions. Sorry I wasn't clearer. The ABA is the major sponsor.
We have received funding commitments from GM, Pepsi and other such companies. We anticipate foundation funding. The goal is to bring a focus in the US on the important role that rule of law building should play in achieving world peace and a sustainable global society. Our invitees will be opinion leaders from the US government,CEOs, media, NGOs, foundations. We want prominent government leaders to speak(Justice O' Connor is helping us reach out to Secretary of State Rice). Of equal importance, I would like to see an informal dialogue within State and DOJ on the ideas side. What are the right issues to discuss?
Who are the most knowledgeable speakers? Who should be invited. This will be a nonpolitical event. We need to find the most knowledgeable thinkers in the rule of law arena who also are very practical in the real world sense, so we must have dialogue with key government leaders to make this exercise has the great impact that we are seeking.

Would it be helpful to discuss this further by phone or in person?
Thanks for your help[redacted]

Is it to provide a contact and entree with folks at State or elsewhere who might be participants in the Rule of Law Symposium scheduled for Nov.? Is it to provide a contact and entree to State Dept. policy makers regarding current or proposed Admin. foreign policy?
Is it to get you in contact with those at DOJ who are or have been in other countries trying to establish judicial/legal systems? Sorry to be confused but I am not clear on what I am to get the folks in the Admin familiar and involved with. Is this an ABA sponsored initiative or some other group? Robt.

Robert- Good talking with you today. Attached are the concept paper on rule of law as a part of the US foreign policy and a proposed agenda (plus white papers on 2 agenda items). I would very much like to get the right people in the Administration familiar with what this is and involved. Am on a train returning from a speech and just finished reading the sct decision in Kelo (eminent domain). I am blown away by Thomas's dissent. Brilliant stuff that completely demolishes the majority (and companion O'Connor dissent, incidentally). Reminds us of the plain textual meaning of the Constitution and then breathes life and vital purpose into it, explaining the weaknesses of misguided recent judicial glosses.

Of course, you know all this about your brilliant former boss. But I really enjoyed the read. Made amtrak bearable....

There were some more developments yesterday in terms of what the WH wants from us. Raul, I'll fill you in since it looks like I won't be able to make it to tomorrow's daily mtg. Also, I know that CRT is planning an event in late July commemorating the anniversary but I don't know details. Brad Schlozman could tell you.

Subject: A Message from the Attorney General

To: All Department of Justice Employees

From: Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales

The Justice Department's first priority is to protect America from another terrorist attack. The President has asked all of us in his Administration to respond boldly and creatively to the lethal threats presented by our enemies, and you have met that challenge. Thanks in large measure to your efforts, America is safer today than it was on September 11, 2001.

A critical reason for the Department's many successes in the War on Terror has been your willingness to answer the President's call to think continually about ways that we can be even more effective. Consistent with that spirit, and in order to build upon the already significant progress made by the Department, the President announced today his plan to restructure the Department of Justice (DOJ), including the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). This reorganization, recommended in the recent report of the Commission on the Intelligence Capabilities of the United States Regarding Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD Commission), will strengthen the Department's efforts to combat terrorism and other threats to national security.

The WMD Commission recommended that the divisions within DOJ that handle core national security matters - the Office of Intelligence Policy and Review (OIPR) and the Criminal Division's Counterterrorism and Counterespionage Sections - be consolidated into a new National Security Division. In the WMD Commission's view, such a reorganization would ensure greater coordination and unity of purpose among the affected components.

With regard to the FBI, the WMD Commission recommended that the FBI's primary national security functions - the Directorate of Intelligence and the Counterterrorism and Counterintelligence Divisions - be placed under a single senior FBI official. The WMD Commission concluded that such a reorganization would facilitate coordination between the FBI and the new Director of National Intelligence.

Under the planned reorganization, OIPR and the Criminal Division's Counterterrorism and Counterespionage Sections will be placed within the new National Security Division under the leadership of a new Assistant Attorney General. In that way, I believe we can maximize the effectiveness of our prosecutors handling cases in the core national security fields of counterterrorism and counterespionage - who will continue to carry out the same critical functions they handle today - and the Department's intelligence activities in those same areas. By consolidating the Department's intelligence resources into one division, the new Assistant Attorney General will be able to coordinate all of the Department's resources to help protect America from further attacks and ensure that critical information is shared as appropriate across the Department and the Administration in support of that effort.

At the FBI, a new senior position directly under the Deputy Director will be created to oversee the FBI's intelligence, counterterrorism, and counterintelligence components, which will be combined to form a National Security Service within the Bureau. This reorganization will preserve and build upon the significant progress the FBI has made in developing its intelligence program (which will continue to span all operational divisions), and will enable the FBI to work closely with the Director of National Intelligence. The reorganization represents the logical next step in bolstering the FBI's intelligence functions and integrating those functions into the Federal government's national intelligence enterprise.

We will implement these proposed changes without sacrificing in any way the Department's commitment to protecting the civil liberties and constitutional rights of all Americans.

These reorganizations will enhance our national security. But they will not be easy to accomplish. Many details remain to be worked out, and implementing the plans while continuing to meet our day-to-day national security obligations will present an additional challenge. I know that, as always, I can count on all of you as we work to make the Department even more effective and, ultimately, our Nation stronger and safer.

Check the Intranet, DOJNET, at http://10.173.2.12/ for additional information of Department-wide interest

Subject: U.S. District Court ECF Quality Control Update
Attachments: tmp.htm

Good Morning,

Thank you for registering for the District of Colorado's Electronic Case Filing (ECF) system. As an ECF User, you will be sent periodic e-mail updates from the court regarding ECF issues we consider important.

The United States District Court for the District of Colorado began allowing electronic filing on civil documents on June 20, 2005. To date, the court has registered 4008 attorneys for electronic filing. Since our live date, 419 attorneys have filed 679 documents electronically. There have been 0 applications by attorneys to file in paper. Listed below are some issues the court would like to bring to your attention that will help improve the quality of the work being submitted:

(1) The s/signature must be attached to a document for the document to have a valid signature. The login and password must match the s/signature. The s/signature must be typed in the format set down in Section V.C.1. of the ECF Procedures.

(2) Third party signature documents and multiple party signature documents (e.g., affidavits, joint motions, proposed scheduling orders) must follow the format set down in ECF Procedures, Section(s) V.C.5. and V.C.6.

(3) If a user is unsure of what event choice to use when filing a document, please call the court's ECF Help Desk (information below) instead of picking something just to get the document filed. For example, motions should be submitted using a motion event, responses to motions should be submitted using the response event, etc... If a document is submitted under an incorrect event, it may be difficult for chambers to quickly identify the issue and it may not get the prompt judicial attention an attorney desires. See ECF Procedures, Section V.J.1.

(4) Proposed Orders should be filed in ECF as separate attachments to the motion where appropriate as well as submitting promptly to the District Judge and Magistrate Judge e-mail account. Of the two file types allowed under the ECF Procedures, the court prefers WordPerfect. Attorneys should closely review the judicial officer e-mail accounts shown in Version 1.1 of the ECF Procedures and verify the e-mail address is correct (e.g., Babcock_Chambers@cod.uscourts.gov). See ECF Procedures, Section V.L.

(5) Attachments should be listed in a manner that is understandable. For example, if Exhibit is chosen as the document category then the word exhibit does not need to be added in the description line (e.g. Exhibit (category) Exhibit A (description)). The name of the attachment should be a short description of the document.

(6) Confidential Settlement Statements must be submitted in PDF format to the Magistrate Judge's e-mail account in the case, and not the District Judge.

(7) Documents filed before June 20, 2005, will not be available electronically on PACER. Attorneys get one free look at a document off the document number on the Notice of Electronic Filing. Attorneys must file an Entry of Appearance or sign a document in a case to receive notice. Making an oral appearance in court is not sufficient for notice purposes. See ECF Procedures, Section V.E.1.

(8) Documents should be filed using the case numbering protocol described in recently revised Local Rule 10.1. (e.g., 05-cv-00134-LTB-OES)

Please review the ECF Ten Most Common User Errors and ECF Quick Reference Sheet under the User Support section on the court's ECF Web Page: http://www.co.uscourts.gov/cmecf_frame.htm Attorneys and their staff may continue to sign up for ECF Classroom Training on the website. The court will continue to offer classes.

Please contact the court's ECF Help Desk toll free at 1-866-365-6381 or 303-335-2050 with any questions or concerns. You may also e-mail the court at cod_cmecf@cod.uscourts.gov.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

(202) 514-2008

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT SETTLES LAWSUIT REGARDING CONDITIONS OF CONFINEMENT AT TWO MARYLAND JUVENILE JUSTICE FACILITIES

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Justice Department today announced a settlement agreement with the State of Maryland regarding conditions of confinement in two juvenile justice facilities: the Cheltenham Youth Facility in Cheltenham, Maryland and the Charles H. Hickey, Jr. School in Baltimore County, Maryland. The settlement resolves a 20-month investigation into the facilities.

The agreement, filed with the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, requires the state to implement reforms to ensure that juveniles in the facilities are protected from harm and provided legally adequate services, including mental health care, medical care, and special education.

"We are pleased with the state's cooperation and willingness to implement meaningful reforms at these two facilities, both which have long and troubled histories," said Bradley J. Schlozman, Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division. "If juvenile offenders are to be put on the path to law abiding and productive lives, they must not be subjected to the kind of conditions that have plagued Hickey and Cheltenham in the past."

The Department's investigation revealed numerous civil rights violations, including physical abuse of juveniles by staff, deficient suicide prevention measures, inadequate medical and mental health care, and legally insufficient special education services. Under the terms of the agreement, the state will address and correct all of the violations identified by the Department.

The Civil Rights Division conducted its investigation pursuant to the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 and the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act of 1980 (CRIPA). These statutes allow the federal government to identify and root out systemic abuses such as those identified in this case, rather than focus on individual civil rights violations.

The Civil Rights Division has successfully resolved similar investigations of other juvenile justice facilities in Arkansas, Arizona, Georgia, Louisiana, Nevada, New Jersey, Puerto Rico, Saipan, and Mississippi. Investigations concerning juvenile justice facilities are pending in California, Hawaii, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, and Oklahoma.

The Department of Justice's enforcement effort reaches beyond juvenile facilities. Since 2001, the Department has opened 62 similar investigations into the terms and conditions of confinement at nursing homes, mental health facilities, residences for persons with developmental disabilities, jails, and prisons. These figures represent more than a 100 percent increase over the 20 such investigations initiated in the 1998-2000 time period.

My hope will be to meet with Clement, Bradbury, and whoever would like to represent the CIV division early on Tuesday, so that that braintrust can hash things out with each other -- getting the benefit of each other's views -- before the same group meets with the AG either later Tuesday or Wednesday. But all of this will depend on schedules and how the AG wants to proceed. I'll mention it to him tomorrow. Short version: if CIV is ready on Tuesday, that should be fine.

Neil, I'm so sorry I had to run out early yesterday. I hope that Chris Merriam was able to give you a snapshot of our IPR interests. I understand that CRM's interest in online gambling was also flagged for you. There is another area that we ought to talk about sometime. It involves CRM's representation of the Department before the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS). CFIUS conducts national security reviews of certain transactions involving foreign acquisitions of U.S. interests. If you've been keeping up with the CNOOC bid on UNOCAL you may have gotten some background. In any event, you ought to meet Laura Parsky, the DAAG in CRM responsible for CFIUS and related matters. She was unable to make yesterday's meeting, but will probably give you a ring to brief you up.

Welcome aboard and look forward to seeing you again.

We are doing an all-day event in the Great Hall on July 27. There will be a musical presentation, which was produced by the Museum of American History and is apparently "reminscent of the Selma march across teh Pettus bridge in 1965". We will then be having a series of speakers to talk about various aspects of, and their experiences with, the Voting Rights Act. For each of the speakers, I either know them personally (and am fully confident they will not do or say anything untoward), or I have vetted with colleagues who know them personally (and am, based on those conversations fully confident that the individuals will be fine). The speakers include:

 [redacted] prosecutor (prosecuted recent [redacted] case) (we invited [redacted]  [redacted] a retired probate judge in [redacted] and a [redacted]  [redacted], a former federal examiner in [redacted]  [redacted] National Ass'n of Latino Elected Officials ([redacted] loves us b/c of our 203 work)  [redacted] the Nat'l Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium [redacted] loves us b/c of our 203 work)  [redacted]  [redacted] the Alabama Democratic Conference (well known to the Division; [redacted]  [redacted] American Indian Affairs, [redacted] [redacted] ([redacted])

The audience at this event will be limited to DOJ employees. We do not plan on inviting any outsiders. Please let me know if this is an event at which you would like the AG to make some remarks. We obviously would be happy to fit him in if his schedule allows, although that of course does change the dynamic a bit.

If you need any additional information, don't hesitate to call. I'll be in San Francisco tomorrow but will return next week. Have a great holiday weekend, everyone.

U.S. INTERVENES IN SUIT AGAINST FIRMS INVOLVED IN MANUFACTURE OF DEFECTIVE BULLETPROOF VESTS SOLD TO FEDERAL, STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The United States has filed a complaint against Second Chance Body Armor and the Toyobo Company, seeking to recover damages relating to the sale of defective Zylon bulletproof vests to the United States, Peter D. Keisler, Assistant Attorney General for the Justice Department's Civil Division and Ken Wainstein, U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia, announced today. The vests were manufactured by Second Chance and were made of Zylon fiber manufactured by Toyobo.

The government's False Claims Act complaint alleges that the defendants provided defective Zylon bulletproof vests to federal, state and local law enforcement agencies with knowledge that the strength and bullet-stopping capacity of the Zylon vests were substantially weaker than represented. The complaint further alleges that Second Chance of Central Lake, Michigan and Toyobo of Japan entered into a conspiracy to suppress evidence that the Zylon fabric degraded faster than disclosed to the United States, particularly when exposed to light, heat and humidity. The United States bought the vests directly and partially reimbursed state and local law enforcement agencies for their purchases of the vests under the Bulletproof Vest Grant Partnership Act.

The qui tam or whistleblower lawsuit was originally brought by the former Director of Research and Composite Development of Second Chance, Dr. Aaron J. Westrick, in February, 2004. Under the False Claims Act, a private citizen can sue on behalf of the United States and may share in any recovery.

The United States is seeking civil fraud damages that are recoverable under the False Claims Act and common law. The investigation was conducted by the Department of the Treasury's Inspector General for Tax Administration, the General Services Administration's Office of Inspector General, the Detroit Fraud Resident

Lily --

Thanks for taking this over and for doing an excellent job. Your testimony involved immigration issues which are among the most difficult there are, you mastered them in record time, and you still did a great job.

I'm hoping OIL does get a chance to work with you again.

Regards,

Just wanted everybody to know that by all accounts, Lily did an excellent job testifying today. Thanks to all for your help in guiding her through this process. Before the hearing, the committee counsel who handled the hearing said her written testimony was "terrific". So great job!

Incidentally, CSPAN-2 is replaying the hearing tonight at 10:30. I am going to try and gerry-rig OLA's old VCR to record the hearing.

Thanks again for all your efforts.

I will be unable to attend Tuesday's component head weekly meeting b/c the AG has asked to meet with me. (I am told it is just a courtesy meeting.) Given that Wan will not return from his vacation until Wednesday, the Civil Rights Division will not be represented at your meeting. Of course, I will keep Neil and Mike fully in the loop and am happy to meet with you at another time if you'd like a CRT briefing. In the meantime, have a wonderful Independence Day. Thanks

Oh, yes you do, my friend . . . That's the one I mentioned that is the new cabinet-level group, which I doubt will stay cabinet level for anything more than this first meeting. It is the Committee on Marine Transportation Security. You and Robert apparently already agreed to go to the July 11 kick-off meeting in lieu of the AG. Secretary Minetta will be leading it, we're told, and Secretary Chertoff will also attend.

If you want to make sure I am tormented with this as well, we can just reschedule the briefing . . .

NEXT WEEK

· Trial Scheduled to Begin in Georgia Color of Law Violations Case: On July 11th, trial is scheduled to begin in United States v. Walker and Ramsey (N.D. Ga.). On May 1, 2004, former DeKalb County Detention Officer/ Deputy Sheriff Melvin Walker and co-defendant David Ramsey were charged for their role in the murder of DeKalb County Sheriff-elect Derwin Brown on December 15, 2000. The indictment charges the defendants with one count of conspiring to deprive Brown of his civil rights in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 241. The indictment also charges one count of the conspiracy provision and eight counts of the substantive provision of 18 U.S.C. § 1958 (interstate murder for hire); one count of 18 U.S.C. § 242 (constitutional violations while acting under color of law); and two counts of 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) (use of a firearm). Then-Sheriff Sidney Dorsey was convicted by a state jury in connection with the murder and is serving a life sentence.

· Trial Scheduled to Begin in Louisiana Color of Law Case: On July 11th, trial is scheduled to begin in United States v. Self (W.D. La.). On April 14, 2004, defendant Gilbert Self, a Captain of the Pine Prairie Correctional Center, was charged with violating 18 U.S.C. § 242 and 18 U.S.C. § 1512 (obstruction of justice). On July 26, 2003, the defendant allegedly struck and kicked Immigration and Customs Enforcement detainee Julio Castro-Ruebello, a Cuban national, causing severe bruising to both eyes. The defendant subsequently obstructed justice by attempting to persuade three fellow officers not to truthfully communicate information regarding the assault to federal law enforcement officials.

THIS WEEK

· Sentencing Scheduled in FACE Case: On July 7th, sentencing is scheduled to occur in United States v. Waagner (E.D. Pa.). On December 3, 2003, defendant Clayton Lee Waagner was convicted on 51 charges, including violations of the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, threatening the use of a weapon of mass destruction, mailing threatening communications, and interstate transmission of threatening communications. On June 18, 2001, Waagner posted a notice on an internet website that he was going to kill abortion clinic and Planned Parenthood employees. On October 12 and November 7, 2001, Waagner mailed, via the United States Postal Service and Federal Express, several hundred letters, which he claimed contained anthrax, to reproductive health care providers across the country.

LAST WEEK

· Large Anti-Trafficking Raid Undertaken and Sealed Indictments Unveiled in California: On June 23rd, the Civil Rights Division and the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Northern District of California jointly obtained a sealed indictment charging 29 defendants with various immigration-related and money laundering counts. The indictment also charged two defendants with sex trafficking counts. The indictment grew out of an extensive investigation of brothel operators who trafficked in women smuggled into the San Francisco area from Korea. The investigation has already resulted in guilty pleas to sex trafficking conspiracy from two brothel owners. On June 30th, the Department secured search warrants and conducted a massive raid of 11 brothels and 19 residences related businesses. Agents conducting the raid found approximately 100 women inside the brothels and are currently interviewing the women to determine how many are victims of human trafficking. (As of Monday night, approximately 15 women had been identified as victims and another 24 will be held as material witnesses.) Agents also arrested 26 subjects and seized around $2 million in cash. Hundreds of law enforcement personnel from the FBI, ICE, IRS, Diplomatic Security Service, and the San Francisco Police Department participated in this operation. The indictment was unsealed on July 1, and additional charges are anticipated as information is gathered and analyzed.

· Settlement Announced in Maryland Juvenile Facilities Case: On June 30th, the Division entered into a settlement agreement with the State of Maryland to resolve the Division's investigation of conditions of confinement in two state-operated juvenile justice facilities: the Cheltenham Youth Facility in Cheltenham, Maryland and the Charles H. Hickey, Jr. School in Baltimore County. The three-year agreement requires the State to ensure that youth in the facilities are protected from harm and to remedy deficiencies in medical care, mental health care, juvenile justice management and special education. Acting Assistant Attorney General Bradley Schlozman and Maryland Governor Mark Ehrlich jointly announced this agreement at a press conference in Baltimore.

· Consent Decree Entered in Texas Hiring Practices Case: On June 27th, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas approved and entered a consent decree resolving a complaint filed by the United States against the Weimar Independent School District ("Weimar ISD"). The complaint, filed under Section 706 of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, alleged that Weimar ISD failed to hire the charging party for a high school principal position because of her race, African-American. Pursuant to the consent decree, Weimar ISD has agreed to pay the charging party the sum of $64,000, and to implement hiring and selection procedures that ensure that neither race nor any other factors prohibited by Title VII are used to discriminate against qualified applicants for employment with Weimar ISD. Weimar also will provide training to employees involved in the hiring and selection process.

· CRIPA Findings Letter Released For Napa State Hospital: On June 27th, the Division notified the State of California of its findings concerning unlawful conditions at the Napa State Hospital, a large, state-run psychiatric hospital in Napa, California. The Division found, among other things, that the State fails to protect patients from harm from assaults and suicide; inappropriately uses seclusion, restraint and PRN ("pro re nata" or "as-needed") psychotropic medications; and provides inadequate medical, nursing and psychiatric care. Throughout the course of the CRIPA investigation, the State declined to provide the Division with access to the facility or its records. The Division's findings are based on recent on-site surveys by state and federal regulatory agencies and correspondence and interviews with patients, family members, advocates, and other professionals.

3. Visitor Emergency Information Cards
4. Emergency Power Interruption in Main

Justice Café Survey

Our new Justice Café has a general dining area and a separate dining room that we have named the Rotunda. Seating capacity in the Rotunda is 32 people in its current configuration (maximum seating capacity is 40). Currently, the room can be reserved for groups of 10 or more people and when the room is not reserved, all employees can use it for general dining.

We are considering several options for the best use of the Rotunda and want to hear directly from our customers before a decision is made. Please take a moment to respond to the survey by clicking on the following http://10.173.2.12/justice_cafe_survey.php.

The Attorney General's Summer Lecture Series

The Attorney General's Summer Lecture Series for the Department's Presidential Management Fellows, Honors Attorneys, and paid/volunteer student interns continues this Thursday, July 7th, and features Pete Williams, NBC News Justice Correspondent. All lectures begin promptly at 11:00 a.m., in the Great Hall of the Robert F. Kennedy Main Justice Building. All PMFs, Honors Attorneys, and interns in the Department are invited to attend each lecture. Supervisors are requested to provide adequate time for their interns to participate.

Participants are reminded that they must RSVP for these events through their component's Student Employment Program Manager (for a list, refer to http://www.usdoj.gov/jmd/ps/sel.htm). Contact your Personnel Office for additional information. Due to limited seating, this series is for Department of Justice employees only; non-Departmental guests may not attend. Departmental identification required for entry.

Visitor Emergency Information Cards at the Robert F Kennedy Main Justice Building

In an effort to promote emergency awareness, the Security and Emergency Planning Staff (SEPS) has prepared a Visitor Emergency Information Card that will be provided to all visitors upon arrival at the RFK Visitors Center. This card will provide clear instructions for emergency situations, such as building evacuations and shelter-in-place.

In addition, employees who sponsor visitors with disabilities (either escorted or unescorted) should know that some emergency procedures may be different:

- If hearing impaired, a visitor will not be able to hear the public address system instructions, so please stay with your visitor and communicate the instructions using written notes, sign, or other means.
- If a visitor is blind or has impaired vision, it may be necessary to escort the visitor to the closest exit or area of safe refuge.
- For evacuations, inform visitors with a mobility disability of the "safe-haven" areas located at stairwells 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 10 on all floors. These safe-havens are intended to provide a safe refuge during emergencies. Once it is determined that the elevators in the affected area are safe to operate, persons with disabilities may use the elevator to evacuate the building or remain there until the Area Monitor, Fire Department, or other emergency personnel directs them from the safe-haven area out of the building or back to their meeting.
- All employees should be aware of the quickest route to their component's staging area outside the building or to a designated shelter-in-place location. Please refer to the RFK Occupant Emergency Plan on the DOJNet, or contact your RFK component area monitor for additional information.

Thank you for your assistance and cooperation. Please contact Joan Kendrall, Associate Director, Emergency Management Operations and Policy Group, SEPS, on 616-7663 with questions.

EMERGENCY POWER INTERRUPTION IN MAIN

On Saturday, July 9th between 5:00 a.m. and 10:00 a.m., the emergency switchboard for the north side (Pennsylvania Avenue side) of the RFK MAIN Justice Building will be de-energized to replace a faulty breaker. The temporary outage will not affect building power to offices or corridors; however, all elevators on the north side of the building (passenger elevators 1, 2, 3 and 4 along with freight elevators 31 and 40) will not be in service during the outage. The upper floors and basement levels may be accessed by using the stairwells or any elevator on the south side of the building. If you have any questions concerning this temporary outage, please contact Justice Building Services at 514-2186 or 514-1611.

Library Staff Training

The DOJ Libraries offer training sessions tailored to your research needs. Expand your knowledge of legislative histories, company information, expert witnesses, public records, searching the web, online newspapers, journals, and more. The sessions are open to all DOJ staff. Please see the current class list at: http://10.173.2.12/jmd/lib/training/currentclasses.htm

Oh, yes you do, my friend . . . That's the one I mentioned that is the new cabinet-level group, which I doubt will stay cabinet level for anything more than this first meeting. It is the Committee on Marine Transportation Security. You and Robert apparently already agreed to go to the July 11 kick-off meeting in lieu of the AG. Secretary Minetta will be leading it, we're told, and Secretary Chertoff will also attend.

If you want to make sure I am tormented with this as well, we can just reschedule the briefing . . .

Just found out that I'll need to take my daughter to the pediatrician this afternoon. I won't be able to make our 3 pm CMTS briefing. Why don't you all go on without me, since Neil will be going to the meeting with Robert?

Alternatively, we could do this tomorrow afternoon or almost anytime Thursday. I defer to you all on preferences.

THROUGH: THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL

THROUGH: THE ASSOCIATE ATTORNEY GENERAL

FROM: Kelly A. Johnson
Acting Assistant Attorney General
Environment and Natural Resources Division

THIS WEEK

- Challenge to Biological Research Facility: The Division will file a brief with the Ninth Circuit on July 5 defending a Department of Energy (DOE) decision to operate a Biosafety Level 3 laboratory at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. The plaintiff argues DOE's environmental assessment understates the risk of pathogen release.

- Trial in Clean Air Act Case: Trial on liability is set to begin July 6 in Columbus, Ohio, in a Clean Air Act enforcement case against power plant owner American Electric Power Co.

- Briefing on Coal Bed Methane: The Division will lodge its opening brief on July 8 in an appeal to the Ninth Circuit of a district court holding that the Bureau of Land Management violated the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) by not considering a phased development alternative for coal bed methane in Montana.

- Challenge to Northwest Forest Plan: On July 8 the Division will move for summary judgment in a Western District of Washington case in which fishermen challenge the 2004 amendments to the Northwest Forest Plan's Aquatic Conservation Strategy.

NEXT WEEK

- Hearing on Arizona Snowbowl: Environmental groups and Native American tribes challenge U.S. Forest Service approval of improvements at the Arizona Snowbowl, a ski area operated under a Forest Service special use permit. Plaintiffs generally object to expansion of the resort and use of reclaimed waste water in snowmaking. They assert violations of NEPA, the National Forest Management Act, the National Historic Preservation Act, the federal government's trust responsibility, and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. A hearing on plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction is expected the week of July 11.

- Appellate Argument in Columbia River Power System Dispute: On May 26 the District of Oregon invalidated a National Marine Fisheries Service biological opinion under the Endangered Species Act for 14 federal dams located on the Columbia and Snake Rivers. The court then ordered a spill program at five projects. The Division has filed an interlocutory appeal with the Ninth Circuit; oral argument is set for July 13 in Seattle.

LAST WEEK

- Appellate Reversal on Cayuga Indian Nation Claim: On June 28 the Second Circuit issued a published opinion reversing a district court judgment that would have required the State of New York to pay $248 million for violation of the Nonintercourse Act in acquiring the Cayuga reservation two centuries ago.

- Adverse Decision on Pesticide Registrations: On June 29 the Ninth Circuit affirmed a district court holding that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) improperly failed to initiate consultation under the Endangered Species Act regarding the effect of pesticide registrations under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act on listed salmon species in the Pacific Northwest. The district court ordered consultation on 54 pesticide ingredients.

- Conviction in Criminal Trial: On June 30 a Virgin Islands jury returned guilty verdicts on all 16 counts of Clean Air Act and false statement violations against Cleve-Allan George and Dylan Starnes. Both men were charged in connection with improper removal and disposal of asbestos during a demolition project in a low-income neighborhood.

RDM revision 4 Memorandum Regarding Waiver Requests.wpd

MEMORANDUM

To: ALL UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND DEPARTMENT COMPONENT HEADS

From: James B. Comey
Deputy Attorney General

Robert D. McCallum, Jr.
Associate Attorney General

Subject: Guidance for Federal Prosecutors Regarding Requests for Corporate Waiver of the Attorney-Client Privilege and Work Product Protection

On January 20, 2003, former Deputy Attorney General Larry D. Thompson issued a Memorandum to all United States Attorneys ' Offices (USAOs) regarding Principles of Federal Prosecution of Business Organizations. This memorandum, commonly known as the Thompson Memorandum, found at USAM 9 -162, remains the Department 's policy on charging business organizations and includes factors to be considered in making charging decisions.

One of the nine factors the Thompson Memorandum sets forth in determining whether to charge a corporation or other business organization is "the corporation's timely and voluntary disclosure of wrongdoing and its willingness to cooperate in the investigation of its agents, including, if necessary, the waiver of corporate attorney -client and work product protection." Thompson Memorandum, Section II.B.4. The Thompson Memorandum elaborates on this factor by providing that a federal prosecutor may ensure the complete and truthful cooperation of a corporation by requesting, "in appropriate circumstances[,]" that the corporation waive the attorney-client privilege and attorney work -product protection, which the Memorandum recognizes also may be "critical in enabling the government to evaluate the completeness of a corporation's voluntary disclosure and cooperation." Id., Section VI.B. This memorandum clarifies the Thompson Memorandum and provides further guidance to federal prosecutors regarding waiver requests.

In applying the factors set forth in the Thompson Memorandum, federal prosecutors have always considered and should continue to consider carefully whether a request to a business entity for a waiver of attorney -client privilege or attorney work -product protection is necessary to establish corporate cooperation in an investigation. While cooperation is an critical and important factor in the Department's charging decision regarding a corporate target, the Thompson Memorandum recognizes that the attorney -client and work product privileges serve important, long-recognized public policies encouraging candid communications between counsel and client and promoting sound corporate governance. Accordingly, the Thompson memorandum acknowledges recognizes and that a business organization's full cooperation may does not always require a waiver, expressly stating. The Thompson Memorandum expressly states that the Department "does not . . . consider waiver of a corporation's attorney -client and work product protection an absolute requirement, and prosecutors should consider the willingness of a corporation to waive such protection when necessary to provide timely and complete information as one factor in evaluating the corporation's cooperation." Id. (emphasis added).

Because the Thompson Memorandum limits requests of such waivers to situations where they are necessary, federal prosecutors should first consider other available alternatives before seeking waivers. At the most basic level, a business organization may, for example, provide complete access to its employees, business records, organizational charts, compliance program, and any third -party witnesses over which it may have influence, such as customers, vendors, accountants, and former employees. In many cases, such action may be sufficient for the government to obtain timely and complete information concerning a suspected crime. In other instances involving complex business organizations or large volumes of evidence, obtaining timely and complete information may require the corporation to take additional steps, such as identifying for investigators specific witnesses and documents central to the suspected criminal conduct. A business organization could, without providing counsel 's notes or reports, identify promptly and make available to investigators all of the witnesses and documents involved in its own internal investigation by corporate counsel and provide assurances that the witnesses will make full disclosure. If such actions would be adequate for federal investigators to determine timely the complete underlying facts, then the federal prosecutors should, consistent with the Thompson Memorandum, consider this option before requesting a waiver.

If the alternatives to a waiver are insufficient to acquire timely and complete information, federal prosecutors should seek approval from the United States Attorney, Branch Director, or a specifically designated supervisory attorney before requesting that attorney -client privilege or work-product protection be waived.

If approval for a waiver request is obtained, the Thompson Memorandum instructs that the "waiver should ordinarily be limited to the factual internal investigation and any contemporaneous advice given to the corporation concerning the conduct at issue." Id., Section VI.B, n.3. The Thompson Memorandum further provides that, "[e]xcept in unusual circumstances, prosecutors should not seek a waiver with respect to communications and work product related to advice concerning the government's criminal investigation." Id. The Thompson Memorandum, therefore, draws an important distinction between the underlying factual information and factual work product, on the one hand, and opinion work product or attorney-client communications, on the other hand. It also draws a significant distinction between legal advice rendered "contemporaneous[ly]" with "the conduct at issue" and "advice concerning the government 's criminal investigation." Id. By drawing these distinctions, the Thompson Memorandum seeks to minimize, to the extent possible consistent with prosecutorial necessity, the intrusion into privileged communications.

Consistent with the Thompson Memorandum, a waiver, when deemed necessary, should be limited in most cases to factual information gleaned by the corporation's own investigation, including, where appropriate, corporate counsel's interview notes and other factual findings, as opposed to privileged communications or counsel's opinion work product.

As the Thompson Memorandum outlines, a waiver request seeking privileged communications or opinion work product created contemporaneously with the underlying conduct under investigation may also be sometimes appropriate. Id. (discussing "contemporaneous advice"). The necessity of such information, however, should be evaluated independently from the necessity of factual findings, interview notes, and other fact work product. Frequently, intrusion into "contemporaneous advice" may not be necessary.

Finally, the Thompson Memorandum indicates that a waiver request for opinion work product or attorney -client communications concerning the government 's criminal investigation itself may be warranted. The Memorandum instructs, however, that "prosecutorsions should not seek a waiver with respect" to such information except in "unusual circumstances." Id. It is similarly important that a pProsecutors should exercise similar care when evaluatingcarefully the necessity ofconsider seeking a waiver for opinion work product or attorney -client communications that were created after the transactions under investigation and involve self-evaluation activities, so that companies are not discouraged from candidly engaging in self-evaluation and assessing ways to improve corporate governance. Of course, there may be cases in which even information falling into these categories may be required. One example would be a case in which there is strong reason to believe that counsel's advice about the government's current investigation constitutes an obstruction of justice, though undoubtedly there will be others as well.

NEXT WEEK

· Technology: On July 13 at OJP, the National Institute of Justice (NIJ) will host a demonstration of the Brijot Imaging Systems' BIS-WDS millimeter waved-based concealed weapons detector, which uses technology developed by Lockheed Martin with about $3 million in NIJ funding over seven years. The Brijot BIS-WDS offers a revolutionary capability to detect metallic and non-metallic weapons hidden under clothing at ranges of three to nine meters away from the camera. The Brijot system does not emit any radiation; rather, it works by developing an image from the differences in the temperature of the human body and objects that are carried close to it. Although these images are grainier than a photograph, the shape of objects stands out clearly against the human body. The images are recorded at about 30 frames a second, providing a real-time video of the person or persons being observed.

· Counties: On July 15 in Honolulu, HI, Bureau of Justice Assistance Director Herraiz will attend the National Association of Counties (NACo) Annual Conference and deliver the keynote address to county officials and their staff. NACo is the only national organization that represents county governments in the United States. Its membership totals more than 2,000 counties, representing more than 80 percent of the nation's population.

This will be the third in a series of three training programs for communities interested in planning a juvenile drug court. Nine jurisdictions will participate. The training program's objective is to help jurisdictions move from the planning stage to the implementation stage. The program will be an intensive hands-on opportunity for courts to engage in the team process, clarify roles and responsibilities, build on the knowledge gained from previous training events, and complete their program design. At the end of the training, teams will be required to design an action plan and a program outline (the basis of policy and procedure development).

  On July 12-14 in Philadelphia, PA, the Bureau of Justice Assistance will sponsor an "Adult Operational" training program under the FY 2005 Drug Court Planning Initiative. This will be the third in a series of three training programs for communities interested in planning an adult drug court. Eleven jurisdictions will participate. The training programs focus on comprehensively educating the entire jurisdictional team on specialized drug court issues and how they relate to implementation. The training also will focus on the development of a "Jurisdictional Action Plan" to implement the drug court, as well as a "Policies and Procedures Manual." Training program participants also will learn how to develop a long-term sustainability plan that includes traditional and nontraditional funding, resource development, evaluation, and monitoring. Finally, all participants will visit an operational drug court, where they will observe a drug court team staffing and court session.

I tend to think the obvious solution is for us to upgrade your computer since that will be coming sooner or later anyway (in your case better sooner than later). In the meantime Bobby Marshall wants me to ask you who created your files in the first place. Bobby thinks that if we call them we might be able to better figure out what is going on as he is having troubles apparently with the files and at one point was telling me they were empty. I knew they were not empty as I was able to import them on my computer but he said he couldn't on his.

Interesting problem

GM Wins Ground In US Pension Suit

By Ellen E. Schultz

Jul 06, 2005 (Dow Jones Commodities News Select via Comtex) --A federal court has ruled in favor of General Motors Corp. in its bid to recover as much as $253 million from the federal government for one of its underfunded pension plans.

The decision, by Judge Nancy Firestone of the U.S. Court of Federal Claims, is the first of its kind and may precipitate moves by other government contractors to try to recoup some of the underfunding of pension funds that existed when the contractors closed or sold divisions.

GM's suit comes at a time when corporate pension plans, which were robustly overfunded in the 1990s, have become collectively underfunded for a variety of reasons, including stock-market losses, low interest rates and corporate decision-making. Pension plans in the Standard & Poor's 500 had a net underfunding of $159 billion at the end of 2004, compared with net overfunding of $263 billion at the end of 1999.

The U.S. government is likely to appeal the court's decision in the case of GM vs. U.S., and any potential recovery could take years. A spokesman for GM says it wouldn't be appropriate to comment until the matter has been fully resolved.

Still, the decision is significant. When companies have contracts with the government to provide goods or services, the government pays for salaries and pays a portion of the pension costs. When companies subsequently close or sell a unit with an overfunded pension plan, the government generally recovers the portion of the pension surplus attributable to the amounts it contributed to the pension fund.

GM argued that the government was similarly obligated to make contributions to an underfunded pension of a division GM sold in 1993, Allison Gas Turbine, which provided services to the government. In 1996, GM filed a claim for $253 million, and sued the government on Jan. 27, 2000, in the federal court of claims, which handles contract disputes.

In her decision, filed on June 28 in the Washington, D.C., court, Judge Firestone said the government should pay the allocable amount of the pension underfunding, though she didn't specify a dollar amount. However, the judge denied GM's motion to recover not only the underfunded amount, but a profit as well.

Contractors say that if the government was able to recover pension surplus during the good times, it is only fair that it share the pain in the bad times.

"The court rejected three of the arguments the government has asserted to avoid paying contractor pension claims," said Karen Manos, a lawyer with Howrey LLP, a global litigation firm that represents government contractors. Over the years, there have been numerous suits between contractors and the government over the disposition of surplus pension assets.

If the pension ruling is upheld by the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, it could also establish a significant loophole in government contracts: the decision says that ceilings on government spending under contracts would not apply to pension claims.

Consequently, if government agencies are required to pay for underfunded pensions of divisions sold or closed by companies that have -- or used to have -- government contracts, they would have to seek additional appropriations from Congress, or cut spending in other areas.

Gov't asked US to dismiss suit against Talisman for aiding genocide in Sudan

TORONTO (CP) -- As Prime Minister Paul Martin joins other world leaders in a summit focusing on aid for Africa, documents show his government asked the U.S. this year to persuade its courts to dismiss a suit against Talisman Energy Corp. for assisting genocide in Sudan.

The Calgary-based oil company is being sued in U.S. District Court in New York by the Presbyterian Church of Sudan and a number of Sudanese individuals for complicity in genocide perpetrated by the Sudanese government.

Talisman, which sold its Sudanese oil operations in 2003, denies the claim. Talisman spokesperson Barry Nelson told the Toronto Star Tuesday he couldn't comment on the diplomatic efforts because the U.S. judge had imposed a gag order on the litigants.

The company has persuaded Ottawa -- and through it, the U.S. government -- to weigh in on its side to have the case dismissed.

Documents obtained by the Toronto Star show Martin's government sent two diplomatic notes to Washington -- one last July and the most recent this year -- complaining that trying a Canadian company in a U.S. court raises serious foreign policy issues.

In a six-page diplomatic note to the U.S. State Department, Ottawa asked that U.S. officials intervene in an ongoing class-action lawsuit filed four years ago against Talisman by Sudanese refugees.

They claim the Calgary company stood by as Sudan's military murdered and displaced thousands of people living on or near prospective oil exploration sites.

``The `Talisman case' is problematic,'' says the note, which is initialled, bears the official seal of Canada's embassy in Washington and was sent Jan. 14.

The memo goes on to say the U.S. court's action ``infringes on Canada's conduct of foreign policy'' and that by assuming jurisdiction over Talisman, whose shares are widely available for trading on the New York Stock Exchange, the U.S. courts have created a ``chilling effect'' on Canadian companies considering investing in Sudan.

After receiving the recent missive from Canada, the State Department asked the U.S. Department of Justice to send a similar note of concern to the court, which it did on March 15.

The State Department said it took no position on whether Talisman was guilty of the allegations, but shared Ottawa's concern about trying a Canadian company in a U.S. court for activities that took place in another country.

The court has asked all parties involved in the case to file submissions on this question and will rule on this particular point later.

Talisman's roots in Sudan date to August 1998 when the Calgary company announced it had made a friendly $295 million bid to buy Arakis Energy Corp., whose assets included a one-quarter stake in the Greater Nile Petroleum Operating Co.

Within months of Talisman's arrival in the East African nation, the company came under fire amid charges it had been complicit in the Sudanese government's move to displace hundreds of thousands of civilians as it bolstered its control of more oilfields.

Challenge to "don't ask, don't tell" policy to be heard in Boston

During her first five years in the Navy, Jen Kopfstein avoided conversations about her personal life. In the collegiate atmosphere of the Naval Academy and the close quarters of a ship, that was difficult for Kopfstein. "I felt like I was being forced to lie and having to be dishonest," said Kopfstein. "I could never share anything about my family or my home life or even say what I did on the weekend. It is hurtful to do that."

So Kopfstein wrote a letter to her commanding officer telling him she was a lesbian. Under the military's

"don't ask, don't tell" policy, she was discharged from the Navy. Kopfstein and 11 other service members are challenging the 12-year-old policy, arguing in a federal lawsuit that it violates their constitutional rights to privacy, free speech, and equal protection of the law. "It's a terrible policy," said Kopfstein, 30, of San Diego. "It's very detrimental to morale. It turns people into second-class citizens."

"Don't ask, don't tell," established in 1993 under the Clinton administration, prohibits the military from asking about the sexual orientation of service members but requires discharge of those who acknowledge being gay or engaging in homosexual activity. On Friday the Bush administration will ask a federal judge in Boston to dismiss the lawsuit.

In court documents, the Justice Department argues that Congress, in approving "don't ask, don't tell," recognized that the military is characterized by its own rules and traditions, including some restrictions that would not be accepted in civilian society. The policy "rationally furthers the government's interest in maintaining unit cohesion, reducing sexual tensions, and promoting personal privacy," the government argues.

But the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, which filed the lawsuit, argues that the policy is clearly discriminatory. "The government has never produced a shred of evidence that this is necessary for military readiness," said executive director C. Dixon Osburn. "Don't ask, don't tell" punishes people for who they are, Osburn said. "You cannot say that you are gay if you are in the military. You cannot tell your mom, you cannot tell your colleagues, you cannot tell anyone."

Derek Sparks joined the Navy just after high school and earned more than a dozen medals and commendations during his 14-year career, which included deployments for Operation Desert Storm and Operation Enduring Freedom in Afghanistan. In 2002 a shipmate said he had seen Sparks and two other men engaging in homosexual activity in Sparks's office. All three men denied the accusation. During the investigation, Sparks acknowledged that he is gay. "It was out of frustration," Sparks said. "I had been hiding for so long and leading a double life in the Navy. At that point I had just kind of had enough."

"The atmosphere was one that forced you to hide," he said. "You would hear remarks every day--antigay remarks--so any person in their right mind would not want to reveal their sexuality." The Navy discharged Sparks, of Seattle, in April 2002.

"Don't ask, don't tell" has been upheld by appeals courts in several other jurisdictions. "The Department of Defense policy on homosexual conduct in the military implements a federal law enacted in 1993 following extensive hearings and debate. The law would need to be changed to affect the department's policy," said Lt. Col. Ellen Krenke, a Pentagon spokeswoman.

Osburn said one of the reasons they filed the lawsuit in Boston is because the appeals court here--the first circuit--has never been asked to rule in a case involving the policy. One of the plaintiffs, Laura Galaburda, a former second lieutenant in the Air Force Reserves, lives in Boston. Osburn's group is hoping a 2003 U.S. Supreme Court ruling will help their case. The ruling said state laws criminalizing homosexual sex were unconstitutional. The group is also arguing that with the country at war and recruitment lagging, it does not make sense to dismiss experienced gay and lesbian service members because of their sexual orientation.

Don’t Ask, Don't Tell Policy to be Challenged in Boston Court

A dozen former military service members are challenging the 12-year-old “don't ask, don't tell policy,” and will argue in a federal lawsuit on Friday that it violates their constitutional rights to privacy, free speech and equal protection of the law.

The Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, which filed the lawsuit, will argue that the policy is discriminatory.

"The government has never produced a shred of evidence that this is necessary for military readiness," said executive director C. Dixon Osburn.

"Don't ask, don't tell," established in 1993 under the Clinton administration, prohibits the military from asking about the sexual orientation of service members but requires discharge of those who acknowledge being gay or engaging in homosexual activity.

The military discharged 653 men and women in 2004 under the gay ban.

On Friday, the Bush administration will ask a federal judge in Boston to dismiss the lawsuit, reports the Associated Press.

The Justice Department will argue that the military is characterized by its own rules and traditions, including some restrictions that would not be accepted in civilian society.

The policy "rationally furthers the government's interest in maintaining unit cohesion, reducing sexual tensions and promoting personal privacy," the government argues.

"Don't ask, don't tell" has been upheld by appeals courts in several other jurisdictions.

Osburn said one of the reasons they filed the lawsuit in Boston is because the appeals court here - the 1st Circuit - has never been asked to rule in a case involving the policy.

Osburn's group is hoping the 2003 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that said state laws criminalizing homosexual sex were unconstitutional will help their case.

The group is also arguing that with the country at war and recruitment lagging, it does not make sense to dismiss experienced gay and lesbian service members because of their sexual orientation.

“The military continues to sacrifice national security and military readiness in favor of simple prejudice,” said SLDN Executive Director C. Dixon Osburn.

“Americans do not care if the helicopter pilot rescuing a wounded soldier or the medic treating that soldier is gay. Lesbian and gay service members have a valuable role to play on the home front and the frontlines. Their continued discharge weakens our national defense.”

The military discharged 653 men and women in 2004 under the gay ban, the second lowest total since “don’t ask, don’t tell” was implemented. The Pentagon discharges include at least 41 healthcare professionals, 30 sonar and radar specialists, 20 combat engineers, 17 law enforcement agents, 12 security guards and 7 biological and chemical warfare specialists who were fired because of sexual orientation. At least 9 language specialists were also discharged.

COLUMN: Traci Lords law an attack on free speech

By Jordan Niebur

LINCOLN, Neb., Jul 05, 2005 (Daily Nebraskan, U-WIRE via COMTEX) --The adult entertainment industry, an industry many people only have a glancing affair with, and many other companies that would not be readily included, dodged a very large salvo from the Justice Department a couple of weeks ago.

Using a law nicknamed the Traci Lords law (18 U.S.C. 2257), which requires all producers of pornographic images to insure and maintain records of their employees' maturity, the Justice Department attempted to expand the enforcement of the law to cover not only the maintenance of records for every employee or contributor of material at a company, but to require records for every picture, video, and other pieces retroactive to 1995.

Any forms of ID would be required to be American in origin, and all records would be subject to seizure without notice (read: no warrant). Not only would the producers of such material be required under the proposed new laws to maintain such records, but any second-hand distributors, e.g. personal Web sites, would be required as well. The amount of paperwork for most companies in the area would be staggering, especially for smaller businesses.

Although 18 U.S.C. 2257 does have a highly admirable reason for existence -- the combating of child exploitation (Lords was a minor when she began her career in adult films) -- the application the Bush Justice Department is attempting would force undue and unconstitutional restrictions upon the adult-oriented companies.

This battle actually began during the Clinton administration, with then-Attorney General Janet Reno attempting to include secondary distributors (not those who produced the material) as "producers" under law, and enforce the same requirements.

In Sundance Associates v. Reno, the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the plaintiff, a publisher of magazines for swingers, was not required to maintain the same records because the material was secondhand in nature.

Attorney General Roberto Gonzales, however, attempted to sidestep that decision with his own effort to expand 2257. That effort has been temporarily halted with an injunction overseen by Federal District Court Judge Walker Miller, and the case Free Speech Coalition v. Gonzales will be heard later this year.

The constitutionality of 2257 hinges on how Justice Miller (and likely the appellate court, onward) define the First, Fourth and Fifth amendments in this case. One concern many actors and actresses have aired has been one of their own personal privacy.

While adult companies have long maintained files confirming their employees' ages, the proposed requirements would force that information, the addresses, real names, ages, etc. of all those people to be in the hands of countless Web masters. The privacy that those people still manage to keep would be lost to the online world.

As the suit noted, "Indeed, requiring 20-, 30-, 40-, 50-, and 60-year-old performers to divulge personal information and identification documents to producers of regulated expressive works is not a narrowly-tailored means of promoting a legitimate and compelling government interest in child protection."

These regulations are not engineered to prevent child pornography, but to stifle free speech.

The few minors who have managed to infiltrate the industry, Traci Lords of course the most well known, have provided their employers with identification that, even under the stricter regulations, would still pass.

And that is the end result of these new regulations. This "pro-business" administration is seeking to cripple the adult entertainment industry under the guise of "protecting our children."

Rather than attacking child pornography in the areas it actually occurs, or attempting to infiltrate the sectors of pedophiles, the Bush Administration has decided to attack the people that offend them the most, to limit their rights, to destroy their livelihoods. Let's just hope that this assault on free speech fails, as it should have seven years ago.

Mr. Gorsuch,

I'm sure it seems that we have been giving you the run-around. But we have had some problems.

For starters I could not get your CD ROM drive to read your CD. But I was able to read it on my computer and then copy it to your hard drive.

The problem we are having now is apparently your PST (contact) files were created on computer running Microsoft Office 2003. Your current computer is running Microsoft Office 2000. Your PST files are not backward compatible. Bobby Marshall is working on them to see what he can do but I fear he won't be able to convert the files.

The other side of the coin would be to upgrade your computer to one of the new computers running Windows XP and Microsoft Office 2003. However in order to do this I need to get Andy Anderson's approval. I sent Andy an e-mail telling him what was going on with your PST files but Andy is out today and so far I have not gotten any response.

I was going to send you this e-mail to let you know we were taking your issue seriously when I heard that you wanted me to call you. I called and was told you were at lunch.

Thanks,

I tend to think the obvious solution is for us to upgrade your computer since that will be coming sooner or later anyway (in your case better sooner than later). In the meantime Bobby Marshall wants me to ask you who created your files in the first place. Bobby thinks that if we call them we might be able to better figure out what is going on as he is having troubles apparently with the files and at one point was telling me they were empty. I knew they were not empty as I was able to import them on my computer but he said he couldn't on his.

Interesting problem

Mr. Gorsuch,

I'm sure it seems that we have been giving you the run-around. But we have had some problems.

For starters I could not get your CD ROM drive to read your CD. But I was able to read it on my computer and then copy it to your hard drive.

The problem we are having now is apparently your PST (contact) files were created on computer running Microsoft Office 2003. Your current computer is running Microsoft Office 2000. Your PST files are not backward compatible. Bobby Marshall is working on them to see what he can do but I fear he won't be able to convert the files.

The other side of the coin would be to upgrade your computer to one of the new computers running Windows XP and Microsoft Office 2003. However in order to do this I need to get Andy Anderson's approval. I sent Andy an e-mail telling him what was going on with your PST files but Andy is out today and so far I have not gotten any response.

I was going to send you this e-mail to let you know we were taking your issue seriously when I heard that you wanted me to call you. I called and was told you were at lunch.

Thanks,

Mr. Gorsuch,

I'm helping Bil with the import of your contact information. I've run into some issues with the files that are on the cd that was supplied. One problem is that while extracting the files it is asking me to authenticate with a CRT server (CRTEX02) - I'm assuming it is one of the Exchange (mail) servers. I've called (and left message) with Jessica - I will update you as soon as I hear back from her……

Family sues to gain freedom of Los Angeles filmmaker detained in Iraq by U.S. military

By JEREMIAH MARQUEZ
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES_Cyrus Kar's family says his passion for a documentary film he was making about an ancient Persian ruler brought him to Iraq in May. Potential bomb parts found inside a taxi hired by the filmmaker have kept him there, locked up in a U.S. military jail outside Baghdad.

Now relatives of the 44-year-old Iranian-American have sued the U.S. government to gain his freedom. They contend his detention tramples his constitutional rights, and that FBI officials have cleared him of suspicion.

"I'm here to beg President Bush ... to release an innocent boy," Kar's aunt, Parvin Modarress, said at a news conference Wednesday to announce the filing of the lawsuit in Washington, D.C. "He went to Iraq to do his dream work, to make a documentary."

Born in Iran, Kar became as thoroughly immersed in American culture as any native-born citizen after immigrating here as a child, according to his family.

The Los Angeles resident served in the Navy for several years. He studied marketing at San Jose State University, business at Pepperdine University, and worked in the computer industry during Silicon Valley's tech boom.

And several years ago Kar decided to try his hand at filmmaking.

With help from independent director-producer Philippe Diaz, he began working on a documentary about Cyrus the Great, a Persian king during the 500s B.C.

He interviewed experts and scholars and shot up to 60 hours of footage at archaeological sites in Afghanistan, Iran and Tajikistan, according to his family and Diaz.

Diaz, chairman of the Los Angeles studio Cinema Libre, said Kar had spent close to $90,000 in savings and loans so far to shoot the film. The studio had paid about $10,000 and planned to put up another $100,000 or more in post-production.

Diaz thought Kar's detention was a mistake. A staunch supporter of the Iraq war, Kar was far more right of center than many left leaning colleagues and relatives, Diaz said.

"It was always a joke because Cyrus is much more conservative," Diaz said. "He always believed in everything which is American."

Among Kar's final tasks was shooting in and around the ancient city of Babylon, one of Cyrus the Great's conquests.

On May 17, officials and family say, he was traveling with an Iranian filmmaker after leaving a Baghdad hotel when their taxi was stopped at a checkpoint.

Iraqi security forces allegedly seized several dozen washing machine timers found in the taxi _ components frequently used in terrorist bombs.

"I think most people would agree that's somewhat suspicious," said Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. John Skinner. "All of the facts need to be thoroughly questioned. ... These are life and death situations, and when it comes to issues of security you need to be extremely cautious."

Kar's relatives say that FBI agents searched his home and that Agent John D. Wilson in Los Angeles told them weeks ago that Kar's story had checked out.

The agent allegedly told the family that Kar had passed a polygraph test, been cleared of any charges, and that the washing machine timers belonged to the taxi driver, who was transporting them to a friend.

FBI spokeswoman Cathy Viray declined to comment.

Kar is among five Americans detained for suspected insurgent activity by the U.S. military in Iraq, according to his family and government officials. Others include three Iraqi-Americans and a Jordanian-American.

Incarcerated at Camp Cropper, near Baghdad International Airport, Kar spoke several times with his family during monitored 10-minute conversations.

He sounded tired in the first call in May, irate in the second. He was frustrated that the military could hold him, saying "they had all the power," according to his family.

When his aunt asked why he was detained, Kar said, "It's because of the taxi driver," when an eavesdropping American official told him not to discuss the case.

"I'm hurt by our government," said Kar's cousin Shahrzad Folger. "I'm hurt that they would do this to one of their own citizens, to one of their veterans."

Chinese teen may stay in U.S. during appeal

A teenager who said he might be killed by smugglers in China if he is deported will be allowed to stay in the United States while his appeal is pending.

A teenager who said he might be killed by smugglers in China if he is deported will be allowed to stay in the United States while his appeal is pending.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia said Wednesday it will allow Young Zheng, 17, to remain in this country while it decides whether to order his case reopened.

Young is at a federal juvenile detention facility in Houston.

He came to the United States illegally in January 2003 and later attended Central-Hower High School in Akron, where he lived with an uncle.

Young's lawyers want the case reopened to argue that if he is returned to China, he and his family face death by the smugglers to whom he owes about $50,000.

A decision could take two months.

Young said his father chose to send him away from China because he faced "extreme discrimination" as the second child born to the family.

He was denied asylum by both an immigration judge and the Board of Immigration Appeals before the smugglers began to threaten him and his family, Young has said.

Guidant faces legal battles following recalls

By ASHLEY M. HEHER
Associated Press Writer

INDIANAPOLIS_Guidant Corp., which has recalled 87,600 implantable cardiac defibrillators in three weeks, is facing mounting legal pressure from angry shareholders and frightened patients.

Securities fraud lawsuits filed in June and July allege six executives at the Indianapolis-based company sold nearly $40 million worth of stock at "artificially inflated prices" while knowing about undisclosed flaws in thousands of implantable defibrillators.

Court documents show the leaders at Guidant sold a combined 537,571 shares of company stock between Jan. 31 and May 23. More than half the shares were sold by CEO Ronald Dollens.

The suits, filed in federal court in Indianapolis, are the latest salvos aimed at Guidant, which faces lawsuits from dozens of patients for failing to notify physicians about flaws in several defibrillators. The company also is under investigation by the Food and Drug Administration, which said July 1 that defects in 42,000 defibrillators could be deadly.

Analysts disagree about the impact of the suits, but nearly all say they're unlikely to affect a pending $24.5 billion acquisition offer from New Jersey-based Johnson & Johnson.

Jeffrey J. Leebaw, a J&J spokesman, said Wednesday that the company is reviewing Guidant data but still plans to close the deal in the third quarter.

John Putnam, an analyst with Stanford Group Co. in Boca Raton, Fla., said investors appear confident the deal will take place.

Between June 17, when the company announced its first recall, and June 24, Guidant stock traded between $73.83 and $59.94 on the New York Stock Exchange. On June 24, the day the company issued its second safety advisory, the stock closed at $63.90.

On Wednesday, Guidant stock fell $1.07 in trading to $65.03.

"Obviously, people are speculating that J&J is not going to walk away from the deal," Putnam said.

Guidant spokesman Steve Tragash declined to comment on the lawsuits. Officials have previously said patient safety is "paramount" for the company.

Many analysts said the flurry of lawsuits was expected after Guidant issued safety advisories for 11 models of its implantable defibrillators, which shock the heart back into a regular rhythm.

Keay Makae, a medical device analyst with C.E. Unterberg, Towbin, said the patient lawsuits could be more damaging.

"I would say statistically, the number of (securities fraud) lawsuits that end up damaging a company seems to be on the low side," he said. "The patient ones potentially are more serious."

Robert C. Hilliard, a Texas attorney who has filed suit against Guidant in Texas District Court, said the outcry isn't surprising.

"Most of these people are just very angry and betrayed," he said. "Most of them have heart conditions or preexisting heart problems, and now they're faced with going under the knife again or just hoping this one won't be a defective one."

But Bill Hicks, a professor at Indiana University's law school, said the shareholder lawsuits could pose more of a threat.

"Product liability is part of doing business," he said.

Philip T. Powell, a professor at Indiana University's Kelley School of Business, disagreed. Stock sales aren't unusual when a company is preparing for a merger, he said.

"These people are retiring," Powell said. "So they're going to move their portfolio around."

Experts predict the company ultimately will settle the complaints.

"Guidant is not going to fight it," Powell said of the consumer lawsuits. "There's admitted liability. They'd be stupid to fight it."

Repeated messages were left by The Associated Press with lawyers from the Connecticut firm Scott & Scott, Pennsylvania-based Schiffrin & Barroway and Maryland attorney Charles J. Pivens. All three firms have filed securities fraud cases against Guidant.

GM wins U.S. pension aid

BY ANDREW DUNN
BLOOMBERG

General Motors Corp. and other government contractors can recover some pension shortfalls from the U.S. government, a federal judge ruled.

U.S. Judge Nancy Firestone of the Court of Federal Claims in Washington, D.C., ruled that the federal government must pay some share of the pension funding deficit accrued under flexibly priced contracts it had with Allison Gas Turbine, which GM sold in 1993. GM claims the government owes it as much as $252.8 million in defined-benefit pension contributions.

GM has been seeking reimbursement of the costs, based on accounting adjustments as of the time of the Allison sale, since 2000.

"If the calculation results in a deficit, then the government's share must be increased," Firestone wrote in a June 28 opinion declining to dismiss the case. "The plaintiff is entitled to a settling-up."

The GM case parallels another involving Allegheny Teledyne Inc. and the carmaker. In that 2002 case, Firestone ruled that recovery of excess pension contributions or payment of shortfalls weren't available under fixed-price government contracts.

Firestone's more recent decision, denying the U.S. motion to dismiss GM's suit, rejected the government's contract-based objections to payment of GM pension shortfalls under flexibly priced contracts.

GM spokesman Jerry Dubrowski said the company would have no comment before the case was fully resolved. U.S. Justice Department spokesman Charles Miller had no comment.

GM shares fell 55 cents to $34.22 on the New York Stock Exchange. The stock has fallen about 14% this year.

I had understood that the AG and DAG had sent this down asking Robert to represent DOJ. If that direction has changed, though, I'd be happy to pass along the briefing books and share with the right folk(s) what I've gleaned. Just let me know to whom I should speak. As to the plus-one, that's entirely up to OAG, but based on what I know I'm not sure this meeting is particularly vital such that it merits the presence of both the AG and the Associate. Perhaps Jeff would make sense as the plus-one if the AG attends?

Let me know how you want to proceed.

Kiahna,

That is great news that the Attorney General will be attending the CMTS meeting on Monday. Jim Rubin (cc'd above) is the DOJ working group member, who has the briefing book for the Attorney General. Does this mean that Associate Attorney General Robert McCallum is his +1? Please contact me if I can be of further assistance.

Thanks so much,

Ted/Kyle/Raul: I'm not sure which of you may have heard of this, but we need some guidance soon. This meeting is scheduled for Monday at 2pm. Robert and Neil were planning to attend for DOJ. My understanding was that a request came to us from the AG's office for Robert to handle the meeting. While the meeting is Cabinet-level in theory, thus far the only Cabinet members confirmed to attend are Secretary Mineta (who is leading the group) and Secretary Chertoff (who has equities in the topic, particularly given the Coast Guard's role).

Neil Gorsuch and I were briefed on this yesterday by the ENRD staff attorneys who have been attending the planning sessions. We see no major DOJ issues at this time and no particular reason the AG should attend this meeting, which is largely a kick-off meeting for the group and not a decisional meeting.

Can you let us know if the AG is in fact planning to attend? If so, we'll need some idea of what sort of preparation he would like. Thanks for any help in straightening us out. - Liz

Andrew,

I had understood that the AG and DAG had sent this down asking Robert to represent DOJ. If that direction has changed, though, I'd be happy to pass along the briefing books and share with the right folk(s) what I've gleaned. Just let me know to whom I should speak. As to the plus-one, that's entirely up to OAG, but based on what I know I'm not sure this meeting is particularly vital such that it merits the presence of both the AG and the Associate. Perhaps Jeff would make sense as the plus-one if the AG attends?

Let me know how you want to proceed.

Neil

Just a reminder that we had previously received instructions that Robert should handle this. Given what we have learned about the meeting, that continues to make perfect sense to us. About the meeting --

The plan for the meeting is for the Secretary of Transportation to first make opening remarks on the "State of the Marine Transportation System." Those remarks are expected to emphasize the system's need for modernization, improved security, decreased congestion, and an improved ability to handle economic growth and increased trade. The following Departments will then make presentations providing an "overview" of their Departments' involvement with and interest in marine transportation: DHS (Secretary Chertoff); DOD (Undersecretary of Defense for Policy, Douglas Feith); Commerce (Undersecretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere, Vice Admiral Conrad Lautenbacher).

The group will then be asked to approve the Charter of the CMTS. The Charter is expected to be approved without changes. It is quite general (and exceedingly bureaucratic) and essentially provides that the group (and its various subgroups) will meet periodically and work to improve the marine transportation system.

Last, the meeting will proceed to a general discussion and open forum. We have identified no DOJ issues that should be raised in that forum.

Neil and I see no reason for the AG to attend. Please let us know how you would like it handled, however, and we'll provide whoever is going with whatever is needed.

Per your request, I reviewed the draft policy and some comments are attached in redline. Let me know if/how you'd like me to proceed from here. Safe travels.

30. THE DEPARTMENT'S INTERNET WEB SITES.

a. This section sets forth the Department's policy and responsibilities of components regarding the Department's publicly accessible Internet Web sites. It applies to the Department's publicly accessible Internet Web sites and all components that post information on those sites. It does not apply to Department Web sites that are not accessed by the general public or to the Department's Intranet sites. The policy of the Department of Justice is to maintain publicly accessible Internet Web sites that comply with all relevant law and guidance. See OMB Memorandum M-05-04, Policies for Federal Agency Public Websites (December 17, 2004), for additional information on relevant laws and guidance.

b. To satisfy these requirements, the Assistant Attorney General for Administration has established the following DOJ Web site policy:

(1) Web Hosting and Publishing Facilities. All Department Internet Web site content shall be hosted on and made available to the public (i.e., published) through Web site hosting services approved by the DOJ CIO.

(2) Domain Names. All Department Internet Web site content shall be published under domain names approved by the DOJ CIO.

(3) Content.

(a) The Department and its components shall comply with all relevant laws and guidance, and Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web site content, design and publishing formats, including OMB Memorandum M-05-04 and any associated guidance. Components shall certify quarterly to the DOJ CIO that all policies and guidance have been met. [Is quarterly certification really necessary or just more paperwork?]

(b) The Department and its components shall publish only the following content on the Department's Internet Web sites:

i) Content generated by the Department or another United States government agency;

ii) Content that is in the public domain;

iii) Content that the Department has obtained written permission from the original source to post on the Department's Internet Web sites, and for which the appropriate attribution and copyright notices are included; or

iv) Content used in accordance with "fair use" (17 U.S.C. Section 107) after consultation with component counsel.

(c) Components shall, prior to publishing any content on the Department's Internet Web site, submit such content for review and approval by the appropriate Component Web Content Authorizer.

i) In addition to approval by a Component Web Content Authorizer, components must also obtain approval from the Web Governance Group before publishing on the Department's Internet Web sites materials extraneous to the component's normal business operations. In addition, components should seek prior approval for materials that seek to comment on or offer opinions about the Department's policies; legislative matters (including pending legislation or Congressional testimony); as well as any matters pending before, or the policies or rulings of, any federal, state, or local court or agency.

[This policy doesn't seem to expressly address who is responsible for approving dept-wide (ie, not component-specific) materials. Do we want to assign that task to the Web Governance Group?]

(4) FOIA. The Department shall comply with the Freedom of Information Act by maintaining pages on its Web sites that include the information and documents that FOIA requires government agencies to post, in accordance with guidance provided by the Office of Information and Privacy.

(5) Privacy. The Department shall ensure that the privacy of visitors to its Internet Web sites is protected by complying with the relevant privacy laws and guidance, including OMB Memorandum M-03-22, OMB Guidance for Implementing the Privacy Provisions of the E-Government Act of 2002 (September 26, 2003) and any associated guidance. The Department shall also comply with its posted Privacy Policy, and its Internet Web sites shall provide links to this policy.

(6) Accessibility. The Department shall comply with all laws and guidance concerning the accessibility of its Internet Web sites to individuals with disabilities and to individuals with limited English proficiency, including Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act (29 U.S.C. Section 794(d)) and Executive Order 13166, Improving Access to Services for People with Limited English Proficiency.

(7) Security. The Department shall comply with all laws and guidance relating to Internet Web site security, including National Institute of

c. Responsibilities:

(1) The Web Governance Group is established to ensure that the content on the Department's Internet Web sites supports the Department's mission and is consistent with the Department's strategic objectives.

(a) Membership of the Web Governance Group is as follows:

(i) The Department Web Content Manager;

(ii) Representatives from each of the following offices: Office of the Associate Attorney General, Office of Legislative Affairs, Office of Legal Policy, and Office of Public Affairs.

(b) The Web Governance Group is responsible for:

(i) Consulting with the Assistant Attorney General for Administration on policies and guidance pertaining to Web content;

(ii) Reviewing and approving Web content described in section b(3)(d) above.

(c) The Web Governance Group shall be convened as needed to review proposed Web content provided by a Component Web Content Authorizer.

(2) The Assistant Attorney General for Administration shall be responsible for:

(a) Developing policies and guidance for all Department Internet Web sites;

(b) Appointing a Department Web Content Manager. This position resides within the Office of the CIO.

(3) The DOJ CIO shall be responsible for:

(a) Deploying, operating, and maintaining the information technology resources used to host the Department's Internet Web sites;

(b) Overseeing the operation of the Department's Internet Web sites to ensure that they comply with information technology statutes, regulations, policies and guidance;

(c) Reviewing component requests for component-specific domain names and hosting services.

(4) The Department Web Content Manager shall be responsible for:

(a) Overseeing the content on the Department's Internet Web sites;

(b) Ensuring that content on the Department's Internet Web sites not affiliated with a specific DOJ component is in compliance with relevant Federal laws and guidance, as well as Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web content;

(c) Working with Component Web Authorizers and Managers to ensure that the content on their component Web sites is in compliance with relevant Federal laws and guidance as well as Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web content.

(5) Component Heads shall be responsible for:

(a) Making all decisions for the component as to whether the content to be published on its public Web site is appropriate;

(b) Appointing Component Web Content Managers and Component Web Content Authorizers;

(c) Informing the Department's Web Content Manager of such appointments.

(6) Component Web Content Managers shall assist Component Heads in:

(a) Ensuring that the content on their component Web site is in compliance with relevant Federal laws and guidance as well as Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web content;

(b) Establishing procedures for publishing content on their component Web sites to ensure:

(i) Approval by the Component Head or the Component Content Authorizer;

(ii) Compliance with Federal laws and guidance as well as Department policies, guidance, and standards regarding Web content.

(c) Establishing FOIA pages for their component Web sites and ensuring that these pages include the required information and documents.

(7) Component Web Content Authorizers shall assist Component Heads in:

(a) Ensuring that the content on their component Web sites is appropriate by reviewing and approving all content prior to publication;

(b) Obtaining review and approval by the Web Governance Group for materials that require such approval.

(8) Component CIOs are responsible for:

(a) Ensuring that the operation of their component Web sites is in compliance with relevant information technology laws, policies and guidance.

(b) Submitting requests for approval of component-specific hosting services and domain names to the DOJ CIO.

Do we really need components to appoint web content managers, web authorizers, and web cios? Seems like a lot of layers. I assume that one person could carry out all three functions? But to avoid potentially creating another layer of bureaucracy, could we compress the manager and authorizer functions (items 6 and 7 above), for example, into one role?

a. This section sets forth the Department's policy and responsibilities of components regarding the Department's publicly accessible Internet Web sites. It applies to the Department's publicly accessible Internet Web sites and all components that post information on those sites. It does not apply to Department Web sites that are not accessed by the general public or to the Department's Intranet sites. The policy of the Department of Justice is to maintain publicly accessible Internet Web sites that comply with all relevant law and guidance. See OMB Memorandum M-05-04, Policies for Federal Agency Public Websites (December 17, 2004), for additional information on relevant laws and guidance.

b. To satisfy these requirements, the Assistant Attorney General for Administration has established the following DOJ Web site policy:

(1) Web Hosting and Publishing Facilities. All Department Internet Web site content shall be hosted on and made available to the public (i.e., published) through Web site hosting services approved by the DOJ CIO.

(2) Domain Names. All Department Internet Web site content shall be published under domain names approved by the DOJ CIO.

(3) Content.

(a) The Department and its components shall comply with all relevant laws and guidance, and Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web site content, design and publishing formats, including OMB Memorandum M-05-04 and any associated guidance. Components shall certify quarterly to the DOJ CIO that all policies and guidance have been met. [Is quarterly certification really necessary or just more paperwork?]

(b) The Department and its components shall publish only the following content on the Department's Internet Web sites:

i) Content generated by the Department or another United States government agency;

ii) Content that is in the public domain;

iii) Content that the Department has obtained written permission from the original source to post on the Department's Internet Web sites, and for which the appropriate attribution and copyright notices are included; or

iv) Content used in accordance with "fair use" (17 U.S.C. Section 107) after consultation with component counsel.

(c) Components shall, prior to publishing any content on the Department's Internet Web site, submit such content for review and approval by the appropriate Component Web Content Authorizer.

i) In addition to approval by a Component Web Content Authorizer, components must also obtain approval from the Web Governance Group before publishing on the Department's Internet Web sites materials extraneous to the component's normal business operations. In addition, components should seek prior approval for materials that seek to comment on or offer opinions about the Department's policies; legislative matters (including pending legislation or Congressional testimony); as well as any matters pending before, or the policies or rulings of, any federal, state, or local court or agency.

[This policy doesn't seem to expressly address who is responsible for approving dept-wide (ie, not component-specific) materials. Do we want to assign that task to the Web Governance Group?]

(4) FOIA. The Department shall comply with the Freedom of Information Act by maintaining pages on its Web sites that include the information and documents that FOIA requires government agencies to post, in accordance with guidance provided by the Office of Information and Privacy.

(5) Privacy. The Department shall ensure that the privacy of visitors to its Internet Web sites is protected by complying with the relevant privacy laws and guidance, including OMB Memorandum M-03-22, OMB Guidance for Implementing the Privacy Provisions of the E-Government Act of 2002 (September 26, 2003) and any associated guidance. The Department shall also comply with its posted Privacy Policy, and its Internet Web sites shall provide links to this policy.

(6) Accessibility. The Department shall comply with all laws and guidance concerning the accessibility of its Internet Web sites to individuals with disabilities and to individuals with limited English proficiency, including Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act (29 U.S.C. Section 794(d)) and Executive Order 13166, Improving Access to Services for People with Limited English Proficiency.

(7) Security. The Department shall comply with all laws and guidance relating to Internet Web site security, including National Institute of

c. Responsibilities:

(1) The Web Governance Group is established to ensure that the content on the Department's Internet Web sites supports the Department's mission and is consistent with the Department's strategic objectives.

(a) Membership of the Web Governance Group is as follows:

(i) The Department Web Content Manager;

(ii) Representatives from each of the following offices: Office of the Associate Attorney General, Office of Legislative Affairs, Office of Legal Policy, and Office of Public Affairs.

(b) The Web Governance Group is responsible for:

(i) Consulting with the Assistant Attorney General for Administration on policies and guidance pertaining to Web content;

(ii) Reviewing and approving Web content described in section b(3)(d) above.

(c) The Web Governance Group shall be convened as needed to review proposed Web content provided by a Component Web Content Authorizer.

(2) The Assistant Attorney General for Administration shall be responsible for:

(a) Developing policies and guidance for all Department Internet Web sites;

(b) Appointing a Department Web Content Manager. This position resides within the Office of the CIO.

(3) The DOJ CIO shall be responsible for:

(a) Deploying, operating, and maintaining the information technology resources used to host the Department's Internet Web sites;

(b) Overseeing the operation of the Department's Internet Web sites to ensure that they comply with information technology statutes, regulations, policies and guidance;

(c) Reviewing component requests for component-specific domain names and hosting services.

(4) The Department Web Content Manager shall be responsible for:

(a) Overseeing the content on the Department's Internet Web sites;

(b) Ensuring that content on the Department's Internet Web sites not affiliated with a specific DOJ component is in compliance with relevant Federal laws and guidance, as well as Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web content;

(c) Working with Component Web Authorizers and Managers to ensure that the content on their component Web sites is in compliance with relevant Federal laws and guidance as well as Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web content.

(5) Component Heads shall be responsible for:

(a) Making all decisions for the component as to whether the content to be published on its public Web site is appropriate;

(b) Appointing Component Web Content Managers and Component Web Content Authorizers;

(c) Informing the Department's Web Content Manager of such appointments.

(6) Component Web Content Managers shall assist Component Heads in:

(a) Ensuring that the content on their component Web site is in compliance with relevant Federal laws and guidance as well as Department policies, guidance and standards regarding Web content;

(b) Establishing procedures for publishing content on their component Web sites to ensure:

(i) Approval by the Component Head or the Component Content Authorizer;

(ii) Compliance with Federal laws and guidance as well as Department policies, guidance, and standards regarding Web content.

(c) Establishing FOIA pages for their component Web sites and ensuring that these pages include the required information and documents.

(7) Component Web Content Authorizers shall assist Component Heads in:

(a) Ensuring that the content on their component Web sites is appropriate by reviewing and approving all content prior to publication;

(b) Obtaining review and approval by the Web Governance Group for materials that require such approval.

(8) Component CIOs are responsible for:

(a) Ensuring that the operation of their component Web sites is in compliance with relevant information technology laws, policies and guidance.

(b) Submitting requests for approval of component-specific hosting services and domain names to the DOJ CIO.

Do we really need components to appoint web content managers, web authorizers, and web cios? Seems like a lot of layers. I assume that one person could carry out all three functions? But to avoid potentially creating another layer of bureaucracy, could we compress the manager and authorizer functions (items 6 and 7 above), for example, into one role?

The AG on April 19 wrote a letter to the AZ governor promising, among other things, that Hope Janke of BJA would be in touch regarding AZ's request for additional resources under the SCAAP program. I've just learned that, apparently, the promised contact did not occur (according to AZ). Could you look into this and make sure the contact happens ASAP? Please let me know what the upshot of the communication is. Also, is there a mechanism for providing AZ and border states like it with additional resources under SCAAP (eg through transfers from other states that don't need the resources as much)?

Thanks so much for your help on this.

I suggest that Hope call the DOC person today. We have sent two letters to the Governor responding to prior requests, one on December 6, 2004 and one on February 24, 2005 both under my signature. On April 19, 2005 Attorney General Gonzales sent his letter to the Governor as a response.

BJA at the same time had written a letter to Dora Schriro at the Arizona Department of Corrections explaining in detail the program and relevant issues. She had also previously corresponded regarding the same issue. BJA was told by OCOM not send that letter because an AG letter would be sent to the Governor directly and answered the questions. It is true that in the AG letter it is identified that Hope Janke of BJA would contact the Governor or her designate, however we were confused based on other directions that we received. We can call immediately if that is the direction you wish us to pursue. Our question is do we call Dora Schriro, Director, Arizona Department of Corrections or the Governor. Please advise how to proceed. All the details are readily available and contained in our original letter to Dora Schriro.

Tracy and Regina -- The AG received another letter dated June 27 from Governor Napolitano re: SCAAP, a copy of which was directed to OJP. The Governor says that Hope Jenke has not contacted her or her office as promised in the AG's letter of April 19. I hope that she is mistaken because it reflects poorly on the AG if he promises that a member of his staff will call and they do not. Can you help me find out whether Hope called? If so, who did she speak to? If not, why not? And, if not, please ask her to do so immediately.

Subject: RE: Ltr from Napolitano re SCAAP

Here are the details:

We have sent two letters to the Governor responding to prior requests, one on December 6, 2004 and one on February 24, 2005 both under my signature. On April 19, 2005 Attorney General Gonzales sent his letter to the Governor as a response.

BJA at the same time had written a letter to Dora Schriro at the Arizona Department of Corrections explaining in detail the program and relevant issues. She had also previously corresponded regarding the same issue. BJA was told by OCOM not send that letter because an AG letter would be sent to the Governor directly and answered the questions. It is true that in the AG letter it is identified that Hope Janke of BJA would contact the Governor or her designate, however we were confused based on other directions that we received. We can call immediately if that is the direction you wish us to pursue. Our question is do we call Dora Schriro, Director, Arizona Department of Corrections or the Governor. Please advise how to proceed. All the details are readily available and contained in our original letter to Dora Schriro.

Tracy and Regina -- The AG received another letter dated June 27 from Governor Napolitano re: SCAAP, a copy of which was directed to OJP. The Governor says that Hope Jenke has not contacted her or her office as promised in the AG's letter of April 19. I hope that she is mistaken because it reflects poorly on the AG if he promises that a member of his staff will call and they do not. Can you help me find out whether Hope called? If so, who did she speak to? If not, why not? And, if not, please ask her to do so immediately.

Thanks.

Sorry for the piecemeal response, but on rereading Mr. Herraiz's e-mail further questions/thoughts came to mind:

What is OCOM? Can someone send me a copy of the letter to Dora Schriro that was prepared but not sent.

Thanks.

Thanks Domingo for the quick reply.

I suggest that Hope call the DOC person today. Then a letter should be prepared for your signature or Regina's to the Governor referencing the conversation that Hope had with the DOC and that if there are additional questions to contact the person who signs the letter. That letter should go out the door within 48 hours of the phone call. Please provide a copy of that letter to Courtney and myself. Thanks.

I'd like for Hope to call the Governor's office today as well as DOC. At the start of the call, Hope can tell the Governor that she is prepared to call DOC contact if the Governor prefers. The AG's letter promised that Hope would contact the Governor or someone the Governor designates.

Pentagon told to quit supporting Scout fest

By Rudolph Bush
Tribune staff reporter

A federal judge in Chicago has ruled that the military's historic support of the national Boy Scout Jamboree is unconstitutional, issuing an injunction against the Pentagon's future participation in the event.

Ruling on a 1999 suit brought by the American Civil Liberties Union, U.S. District Judge Blanche Manning wrote that the plaintiffs in the suit had "shown irreparable injury that ... their constitutional rights as taxpayers are being violated."

She concluded that the Pentagon's participation in the jamboree violated the 1st Amendment because the Boy Scouts of America "excludes atheists and agnostics" and calls for members to believe in God.

"They're a religious organization by their own description," said Rev. Eugene Winkler, a retired Methodist pastor from Chicago and the primary plaintiff in the case.

Winkler has filed suit against other public organizations that support Scouting. Manning's ruling, issued June 22, is among his most significant victories.

The Department of Justice, which defended the Pentagon in the suit, has not yet decided whether to appeal.

The Pentagon plans to spend $7.3 million supporting this year's jamboree near Washington D.C. It defends its participation as a valuable training exercise for Scouts who must learn to quickly assemble "tent cities" in the field.

Manning's ruling won't affect plans for this year's jamboree, scheduled to begin July 25 and expected to involve 40,000 Boy Scouts.

If the ruling holds up, it will take effect in 2010, the year of the next jamboree.

Defense Department officials and the Boy Scouts are hopeful that the ruling will be overturned on appeal.

"It seems odd that the ACLU would defend the 1st Amendment rights of other organizations like Nazis and nudists ... but not the Boy Scouts," said Bob Bork, a Boy Scouts spokesman.

Judge: No gov't money for Boy Scout trip

By DAN CATERINICCHIA
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

CHICAGO -- A federal judge has ruled the Pentagon can no longer spend millions in government money to ready a Virginia military base for a national Boy Scout event typically held every four years, the American Civil Liberties Union announced Thursday.

U.S. District Judge Blanche Manning's June 22 order stems from a 1999 lawsuit by the ACLU of Illinois that claimed the Defense Department sponsorship violates the First Amendment because the Scouts require members to swear an oath of duty to God.

Justice Department spokesman Charles Miller said Thursday the government was still considering its options.

The order doesn't cover this year's National Scout Jamboree, which start July 25 and is expected to draw more than 40,000 people to the Army's Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia.

A Scouts spokesman said he expects the Pentagon's lawyers to appeal.

"We are confident that an appeal to the 7th Circuit will return everything to the status quo," Bob Bork said.

ACLU of Illinois spokesman Ed Yohnka said no other youth organization receives millions of dollars in government support, and that the injunction is the latest step toward ending the Scouts' unfair advantage.

The Defense Department notified the Chicago federal court in April that it would support this summer's jamboree, despite a ruling by Manning in March that the department's aid was unconstitutional. The government argued at the time that the ruling wasn't final.

The government aid, which amounted to $6 million and $8 million respectively for the jamborees in 1997 and 2001, was used to transport military personnel and other goods there, according to Manning's March order. The government expected to pay about $7.3 million for this year's jamboree.

Jamboree activities include archery, biking, a confidence course, environmental conservation programs and kayaking, according to the Scouts' Web site.

The Rev. Eugene Winkler, a Methodist minister who is one of the plaintiffs in the case, said he got involved because he did not agree with the use of taxpayer money to support the Scouts.

"We're not attacking the Scouts and neither is the ACLU," Winkler said. "This issue is not about the Boy Scouts at all. It's about government funding for religious purposes. It's about separation" of church and state.

Guam veterans may expect compensation under atomic amendment bill

07 JULY 2005 HAGATNA (Pacnews) ----- Thousands of Guam veterans who suffered disabilities as a result of radiation exposure would get compensated if a new bill filed in Congress, which would slacken the requirements for compensation eligibility is passed into law.

H.R. 2962, filed by Congressman Neal Abercrombie and cosponsored by Congresswoman Madeleine Bordallo last week, would remove the provision in the Atomic Veterans Relief Act that set high criteria for payment eligibility.

It requires that the payment applicant provide a record showing a certain level of exposure to ionizing radiation while in service during nuclear testing.

"This provision has hampered the ability of thousands of veterans from receiving benefits," said Robert Celestial, president of the Pacific Association of Radiation Survivors.

Celestial said that when the Atomic Veterans Relief Act was implemented, about 18,000 applied for compensation but only 50 got compensated because of the high criteria on the level of ionizing radiation that was set by the law.

"We expect that under the amendment bill, more veterans would qualify for compensation," Celestial said.

HR 2962 removes the requirement for "dose reconstruction record."

Any atomic veteran exposed to ionizing radiation due to residual contamination resulting from an atomic detonation would be eligible if the bill is enacted into law

A recent report by the Committee to Assess the Scientific Information for the Radiation Exposure

Screening and Education Program stated that Guam residents who were exposed to radiation fallout when the US conducted nuclear tests in the Pacific in the 1950s were eligible for compensation under RECA program.

The RECA program has two components-one covers compensation for "downwinders" or those who were exposed to radiation fallout, and the other for "onsite participants," or those who worked in areas where ships were decontaminated and those who mined and milled uranium for the nuclear weapons program.

Press Release: F.O.P. Request for Investigation of Second Chance Leads to Federal Lawsuit

WASHINGTON, Jul 7, 2005 (U.S. Newswire via COMTEX) --Chuck Canterbury, National president of the Fraternal Order of Police, welcomed the news that United States has filed a complaint against Second Chance Body Armor and the Toyobo Company seeking to recover damages relating to the sale of defective soft body armor manufactured with Zylon.

"The F.O.P. brought this to the attention of the Justice Department last summer," Canterbury said. "We suggested that an investigation of the company was definitely in order because they 'intentionally concealed a known defect' in their bullet-resistant vests and ignored the advice of their Director of Research to immediately notify their customers that the degradation of Zylon put the lives of officers wearing body armor manufactured from this material at risk."

The False Claims Act complaint alleges that the defendants provided defective Zylon bullet-resistant vests to Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies despite being aware that the strength and bullet-stopping capacity of the Zylon vests were substantially weaker than represented. The suit also alleges that Second Chance and Toyobo conspired to suppress evidence that Zylon degraded faster than disclosed to the Federal government, which bought the vests directly and partially reimbursed State and local law enforcement agencies for their purchases under the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act. The original law suit was brought by the former Director of Research and Composite Development of Second Chance, Dr. Aaron J. Westrick, last year.

"Second Chance has repeatedly demonstrated that its primary interest is protecting themselves, not the law enforcement officers in the field," Canterbury said. "I am glad to see that the Federal government is taking them to task for deceptions which put officers' lives at risk."

Scientist prepares support of R-CALF USA

R-CALF USA filed its reply brief in its litigation against the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) minimal risk region rule that would allow imports of cattle and beef from countries with BSE, specifically Canada.

The brief was filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of Montana. In support of its brief, R-CALF USA also submitted declarations prepared by four renowned scientists, including a declaration prepared by Stanley B. Prusiner, M.D. Ð winner of the 1997 Nobel Prize for medicine Ð and the world's preeminent expert in the field of neurodegenerative diseases caused by prions, the infectious protein that causes BSE. Prusiner's 10-page declaration provides clear scientific evidence in support of R-CALF USA's position in its litigation against USDA.

Currently, Prusiner is the director of the Institute for Neurodegenerative Diseases, a neurology professor at the University of California, San Francisco (UCSF), and founder of InPro Biotechnology, Inc.

In 1997, Prusiner was awarded the Nobel Prize in physiology or medicine for his discovery of the infectious protein agents (which he named "prions") that cause fatal neurodegenerative diseases such as BSE, scrapie in sheep, chronic wasting disease in deer and elk, and Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (CJD) in humans, as well as variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (vCJD) in humans. The human prion disease vCJD is caused by ingestion of BSE-infected beef and beef products.

Other scientists joining Prusiner in support of R-CALF USA's litigation and whose written declarations also were filed with R-CALF USA's reply brief were: Louis Anthony Cox, Jr., Ph.D., a Colorado statistician who examined the BSE risk to the United States by resuming beef imports from Canada; Gail Charnley, Ph.D., an internationally recognized scientist specializing in environmental health risk assessment and risk management science and policy; and, Gary A. Hopi to sue Forest Service

Late Tuesday evening, the Hopi Tribal Council authorized the tribe to pursue legal action against the U.S. Forest Service to protect the San Francisco Peaks in Flagstaff from the proposed Arizona Snowbowl expansion.

On June 24, DNA People's Legal Services Inc. on behalf of the Hualapai Tribe, Navajo Medicine Man Norris Nez, and Hopi leader, Bill Bucky Preston, filed a complaint in U.S. District Court alleging three potential adverse impacts from Alternative 2 of the Final Environmental Impact Statement (FEIS), chosen as the preferred alternative by the U.S. Forest Service.

In addition, they claim the FEIS admitted that a portion of those impacts are irreversible; that all written communication to tribes and Native Americans was provided only in the English language and that "despite explicit requests to do so, those documents were never translated by the Forest Service into any Native American language, whether written or by audio- or videotape."

Also, they claim that Defendant Nora Rasure, forest supervisor, failed to accommodate and extend the 60-day public comment period on the Draft EIS, and that the defendants Forest Service, Rasure, and Harv Forsgren, regional forester violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act by selecting Alternative 2.

They allege the defendants' actions are not in accordance with the federal government's trust responsibilities to tribes and Native Americans and violate the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, the National Historic Preservation Act, the National Environmental Policy Act, and three executive orders from the National Forest Management Act the Forest Service's own regulations.

Hopi Chairman Wayne Taylor Jr., expressed his "deep disappointment" last month when the Forest Service's regional office upheld Rasure's earlier decision to expand the Arizona Snowbowl.

"It is our duty and obligation to protect and preserve the spiritual integrity of 'Nuvatukyaovi' (San Francisco Peaks) as an afforded right of our First Amendment freedoms and we will never cease our efforts to defend our beliefs, religious and cultural properties," Taylor said.

Tuesday's action by the Hopi Tribal Council gives official sanction to the lawsuit filed June 30 naming the U.S. Forest Service as a defendant and seeking to overturn the decision regarding the expansion.

Leigh Kuwanwisiwma, director of the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office, endorsed the tribal council's decision. He previously has described the Forest Service action as an "attack on our place of worship."

Following Tuesday's action, Kuwanwisiwma said, "This step by the Hopi Tribal Council to pursue legal action shows a continuity of support and unity for the ongoing Snowbowl expansion issue by the tribal government and religious leaders. ...Their actions are very much appreciated by the Hopi people."

The Hopi believe the expansion will severely impact their ability to maintain their continued spiritual connection to the Peaks.

In the lawsuit filed by DNA, the plaintiffs allege the Forest Service failed to consider alternatives other than the chosen action "that in fact the process was a confirmation of a predetermined decision, and no alternatives other than one that contained snowmaking were truly considered."

The action as proposed would "substantially burden" the Plaintiff's religion by adding reclaimed wastewater to the mountain which would contain trace amounts of cadavers, human blood, feces, urine, pharmaceuticals, and a number of other materials, thus causing irreversible harm, DNA charged.

Levon Henry, executive director of the agency, said, "The focus of our complaint is to preserve sacred places for all tribes. The Forest Service should respect Native American religion. Their decision to go forward clearly demonstrates their focus is on economic gain not on respect of our traditions," Henry said.

The complaint states that Navajo elder Norris Nez, 75, a respected, practicing Navajo medicine man living near Tuba City, does not speak, read or write English and does not have or use a personal computer, "as is the situation with a great number of Navajo ... many of whom are likewise without telephones or access to the Internet and do not have personal vehicles."

The complaint also makes similar statements regarding Hualapai elders and Bill Bucky Preston, who resides in the Hopi Village of Walpi.

Kiahna,

That is great news that the Attorney General will be attending the CMTS meeting on Monday. Jim Rubin (cc'd above) is the DOJ working group member, who has the briefing book for the Attorney General. Does this mean that Associate Attorney General Robert McCallum is his +1? Please contact me if I can be of further assistance.

Thanks so much,

Thanks Domingo for the quick reply.

I suggest that Hope call the DOC person today. Then a letter should be prepared for your signature or Regina's to the Governor referencing the conversation that Hope had with the DOC and that if there are additional questions to contact the person who signs the letter. That letter should go out the door within 48 hours of the phone call. Please provide a copy of that letter to Courtney and myself. Thanks.

Here are the details:

We have sent two letters to the Governor responding to prior requests, one on December 6, 2004 and one on February 24, 2005 both under my signature. On April 19, 2005 Attorney General Gonzales sent his letter to the Governor as a response.

BJA at the same time had written a letter to Dora Schriro at the Arizona Department of Corrections explaining in detail the program and relevant issues. She had also previously corresponded regarding the same issue. BJA was told by OCOM not send that letter because an AG letter would be sent to the Governor directly and answered the questions. It is true that in the AG letter it is identified that Hope Janke of BJA would contact the Governor or her designate, however we were confused based on other directions that we received. We can call immediately if that is the direction you wish us to pursue. Our question is do we call Dora Schriro, Director, Arizona Department of Corrections or the Governor. Please advise how to proceed. All the details are readily available and contained in our original letter to Dora Schriro.

Tracy and Regina -- The AG received another letter dated June 27 from Governor Napolitano re: SCAAP, a copy of which was directed to OJP. The Governor says that Hope Jenke has not contacted her or her office as promised in the AG's letter of April 19. I hope that she is mistaken because it reflects poorly on the AG if he promises that a member of his staff will call and they do not. Can you help me find out whether Hope called? If so, who did she speak to? If not, why not? And, if not, please ask her to do so immediately.

Thanks.

Just curious, didn't we issue a release for the arrival of the Principal in the Deputy's Office? I believe there is value in announcing for Neil, the new Principal Deputy Associate, who just arrived in June. As to the other two folks on the release, there is a plus factor value, but no need to make exceptions to newly established procedures. Please let me and Neil know what you advise. Thanks.

Luis,

I think you're right in that it's too late to put this out; we would have to include something in the release about the date of the appointments. Also, we've standardized our release criteria for all offices and components, and -- while there have been a few exceptions in the past -- we are now issuing releases for component head matters (resignations, for example; appointments are usually announced by the White House) only.

Frank would like our comments by cob today. If you could please forward them to me by, say, 4, I will compile all of the various thoughts. DoD is providing comments apparently also stressing that the Admin has yet to come to any conclusion on whether legislation is a good idea. They seem to think a Specter bill an inevitability or a near inevitability.

I don't have a copy of the legislation yet. Also, a few questions -- When did it come over? Is this a DoD draft or a Specter draft? Is the White House fully aware of what DoD is up to on this? Is OLC in the loop on this? OLC has to review any draft legislation dealing with detainees, habeas rights, military commissions, etc.

SBA General Counsel Selected to Serve on Critical

Acquisition Advisory Panel

WASHINGTON - U.S. Small Business Administration General Counsel David Javdan has been appointed to replace former Deputy Administrator Melanie Sabelhaus as a member of the Acquisition Advisory Panel, authorized under Section 1423 of the Services Acquisition Reform Act. The panel's statutory charter is to review and recommend any necessary changes to federal acquisition laws, regulations charter is to review and recommend any necessary changes to federal acquisition laws, regulations and policies, including among other topics commercial practices, performance-based contracting, and interagency contracting.

David Safavian, Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy (OFPP) in the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) appointed 14 recognized experts in federal acquisition law and policy to serve as members of the nonpartisan panel. The panel members, which OMB formally announced on February 1, 2005, represent a wide variety of backgrounds from academia, government, and the private sector. In accordance with its statutory mandate, the panel will submit a report to OFPP and both houses of Congress by the end of the year.

"I am thrilled that OFPP Administrator Safavian has asked Mr. Javdan to serve on this critical panel of distinguished experts," said Administrator Barreto. "The panel is consistent with President Bush's strong support for government-wide management reform. Melanie Sabelhaus, who recently resigned from her position at SBA, remains a passionate advocate for small business interests. I am confident that Mr. Javdan will ensure that small business concerns are represented as the panel develops its recommendations and report."

The panel currently has six working groups consisting of Commercial Practices/Commercial Items; Performance-Based Contracting; Government-Wide Contracts and Interagency Contract Vehicles; Inherently Governmental Functions; and Cross-Cutting Issues - Federal Workforce and Small Business. The Small Business Working Group was established to consider small business issues that cut across the panel's statutory charter, such as access to fair competition. Panel Chair, Marcia Madsen, a partner at Mayer, Brown, Rowe, and Maw has asked Javdan to chair the Small Business Working Group.

For additional information concerning the panel, visit its official Web site located at http://www.acqnet.gov/aap/ <http://www.acqnet.gov/aap/> .

Tasia: Just following up on this. As per our brief conversation Friday afternoon, you mentioned that you wanted to discuss further with an eye towards setting some standards for these type of releases. As the office with departmental jurisdiction over civil litigation, the value of dissemination for us lies in apprising the myriad client agencies that we represent of new personnel in the Associate's office in one fell swoop. Likewise, a release would act to inform all those who interact with the Department, be it the legal community or other, of who the new relevant folks at Justice are, whether it be in the area of Civil, Civil Rights, Tax, ENRD, Anti-Trust, OJP, Bankruptcy, or other. I believe that these were some of the considerations behind putting these releases out in the recent past. (Last one was about a year ago). Please let me and Neil know when you are available to put our heads together discuss and resolve. Thanks as always. --Lou

Just curious, didn't we issue a release for the arrival of the Principal in the Deputy's Office? I believe there is value in announcing for Neil, the new Principal Deputy Associate, who just arrived in June. As to the other two folks on the release, there is a plus factor value, but no need to make exceptions to newly established procedures. Please let me and Neil know what you advise. Thanks.

Luis,

I think you're right in that it's too late to put this out; we would have to include something in the release about the date of the appointments. Also, we've standardized our release criteria for all offices and components, and -- while there have been a few exceptions in the past -- we are now issuing releases for component head matters (resignations, for example; appointments are usually announced by the White House) only.

Fair questions. Sorry I wasn't clearer. The ABA is the major sponsor.
We have received funding commitments from GM, Pepsi and other such companies. We anticipate foundation funding. The goal is to bring a focus in the US on the important role that rule of law building should play in achieving world peace and a sustainable global society. Our invitees will be opinion leaders from the US government,CEOs, media, NGOs, foundations. We want prominent government leaders to speak(Justice O' Connor is helping us reach out to Secretary of State Rice).
Of equal importance, I would like to see an informal dialogue within State and DOJ on the ideas side. What are the right issues to discuss?
Who are the most knowledgeable speakers? Who should be invited. This will be a nonpolitical event. We need to find the most knowledgeable thinkers in the rule of law arena who also are very practical

We need to find the most knowledgeable thinkers in the rule of law arena who also are very practical in the real world sense, so we must have dialogue with key government leaders to make this exercise has the great impact that we are seeking.

Would it be helpful to discuss this further by phone or in person?
Thanks for your help. [redacted]

Is it to provide a contact and entree with folks at State or elsewhere who might be participants in the Rule of Law Symposium scheduled for Nov.? Is it to provide a contact and entree to State Dept. policy makers regarding current or proposed Admin. foreign policy?
Is it to get you in contact with those at DOJ who are or have been in other countries trying to establish judicial/legal systems? Sorry to be confused but I am not clear on what I am to get the folks in the Admin familiar and involved with. Is this an ABA sponsored initiative or some other group? Robt.

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

_____ introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To provide comprehensive procedures for the adjudication of cases involving unprivileged combatants.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AUTHORITY; FINDINGS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Unprivileged Combatant Act of 2005''.

(b) AUTHORITY.—The requirements, conditions, and restrictions established by this Act are made under the authority of Congress under clauses 1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 18 of article I, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States.

(c) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Article I, section 8, of the Constitution provides that the Congress has the power to ''constitute Tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court; ... define and punish ... Offenses against the Law of Nations; ... make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water; ... make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof''.

(2) The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized military tribunals, as stated in Madsen v. Kinsella 343 U.S. 341, 1952, ''[s]ince our nation's earliest days, such tribunals have been constitutionally recognized agencies for meeting many urgent governmental responsibilities related to war....They have taken many forms and borne many names. Neither their procedure nor their jurisdiction has been prescribed by statute. It has been adapted in each instance to the need that called it forth.'' Madsen, citing In re Yamashita, 327 U.S. 1 (1946).

(3) The President has inherent authority to convene military tribunals arising from his role as Commander and Chief of the Armed Forces under article II of the Constitution and from title 10 of the United States Code. Due to the extraordinary circumstances of the ongoing war on terrorism, it is appropriate for Congress to provide additional and explicit authorization of and procedures for military tribunals to adjudicate and punish offenses relating to the war on terrorism.

(4) This Act is in direct response to the United State Supreme Court's ruling in Rasul v. Bush. With the passage of this Act, the 109th Congress will have addressed the concerns of the Supreme Court's Rasul majority, and there will no longer be any need for further cause or legal challenge by or concerning these detained individuals, excepting as allowed for by this Act.

Robert, Neil over the course of the last few weeks has been working with Frank Jimenez and has met and conversed with DoD GC Jim Haynes. I think this largely defeats the purpose of a meet and greet. Nevertheless, there is some value of course to you meeting with them and we can still go if you deem it worthy. Otherwise, we take this off the schedule for today. (DoD would be fine with that). My rec would be to shelf this one.

Fair questions. Sorry I wasn't clearer. The ABA is the major sponsor.
We have received funding commitments from GM, Pepsi and other such companies. We anticipate foundation funding. The goal is to bring a focus in the US on the important role that rule of law building should play in achieving world peace and a sustainable global society. Our invitees will be opinion leaders from the US government,CEOs, media, NGOs, foundations. We want prominent government leaders to speak(Justice O' Connor is helping us reach out to Secretary of State Rice).
Of equal importance, I would like to see an informal dialogue within State and DOJ on the ideas side.

What are the right issues to discuss?
Who are the most knowledgeable speakers? Who should be invited. This will be a nonpolitical event. We need to find the most knowledgeable thinkers in the rule of law arena who also are very practical in the real world sense, so we must have dialogue with key government leaders to make this exercise has the great impact that we are seeking.

Would it be helpful to discuss this further by phone or in person?
Thanks for your help. [redacted]

Is it to provide a contact and entree to State Dept. policy makers regarding current or proposed Admin. foreign policy?
Is it to get you in contact with those at DOJ who are or have been in other countries trying to establish judicial/legal systems? Sorry to be confused but I am not clear on what I am to get the folks in the Admin familiar and involved with. Is this an ABA sponsored initiative or some other group? Robt.

FORMER ENRON VICE PRESIDENT CHRISTOPHER CALGER PLEADS GUILTY TO CONSPIRACY AND AGREES TO COOPERATE

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Christopher Calger, a former Enron vice president, has pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to commit wire fraud, Acting Assistant Attorney General John Richter of the Criminal Division, Enron Task Force Director Andrew Weissmann, and Assistant Director Chris Swecker of the FBI announced today.

Calger, 39, of Westport, Connecticut, entered the guilty plea today before Judge Lynn Hughes at the U.S. District Court in Houston. As part of his plea, Calger has agreed to cooperate fully and truthfully with the Enron Task Force's ongoing criminal investigation into the collapse of Enron. Calger pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud and faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison and a fine of $250,000 or twice the loss incurred.

The information and plea documents signed by Calger state that he was a vice president in charge of the West Power Origination group of Enron North America (ENA). In that capacity, he supervised employees who negotiated the sale of an ENA project known as Coyote Springs II (CS2) to a subsidiary of Avista Corp. The CS2 project consisted of an equity interest in a power plant, a construction contract to build the plant, and a turbine to be placed in the plant. Calger admitted that he and others engaged in a scheme to recognize earnings prematurely and improperly. Specifically, Enron's auditors would not allow Enron to recognize immediate gain on the turbine sale unless that sale occurred at least two weeks before the equity sale in the plant (the "equity interest") and the signing of the construction contract. The reason for the two-week separation was to demonstrate that the turbine sale was independent from the equity sale and the construction contract.

However, Avista was concerned that it would buy the turbine and then would not be able to buy the equity interest two weeks later. Enron therefore arranged for LJM2, a company managed by Enron Chief Financial Officer Andrew Fastow, to provide a "put" option to Avista for the turbine. Under the put agreement, Avista would have the right to require LJM2 to buy the turbine if Enron did not sell the equity interest to Avista two weeks after the turbine sale from Enron to Avista.

Calger admitted that Enron, and not Avista, paid for the put by reducing the purchase price of the turbine that Enron sold Avista by the amount of the purchase price of the put, meaning that Avista was not paying any more than it would have if the deal had been consummated without the put. Calger also admitted that LJM2 orally agreed to refund approximately $3.1 million of the $3.54 million put payment to ENA if, as expected, the put agreement expired unexercised at the end of the 14-day put period. ENA also agreed that if Avista exercised the put, ENA would buy the turbine back from LJM2.

So as to avoid detection of the scheme, Calger admitted that ENA improperly hid LJM2's participation in this transaction, and the oral agreements referenced above, from Enron's outside auditor. Before the turbine sale closed, Calger admitted that he received a draft legal risk memorandum for the CS2 project, prepared by an internal Enron lawyer assigned to the deal. The legal risk memorandum spelled out LJM2's participation in the transaction, including the understanding that LJM2 would refund most of the put payment to ENA through other deals on a later date. The legal risk memorandum also stated in substance that this understanding between ENA and LJM2 could not be documented due to accounting concerns and was not reflected in the deal approval sheet for the turbine sale. Despite keeping this information from outside review, Calger admitted that Enron's internal lawyers and accountants agreed that the sale would go forward.

The put agreement between LJM2 and Avista expired unexercised and therefore, in accordance with the oral understanding, LJM2 owed $3.1 million to ENA for the put refund. Calger further admitted that Enron's Chief Accounting Officer agreed to "credit" ENA for this figure, since LJM2 had promised to make it up to Enron in future transactions.

Enron, at one time the seventh-ranked company in the United States with stock trading as high as $80 per share in August 1999, filed for bankruptcy protection on Dec. 2, 2001 and its stock became virtually worthless.

The investigation into Enron's collapse is being conducted by the Enron Task Force, a team of federal prosecutors within the Justice Department's Criminal Division, and agents from the FBI and the Internal Revenue Service Criminal Investigations Division. The Enron Task Force also has coordinated with the Securities and Exchange Commission. The Enron Task Force is part of the President's Corporate Fraud Task Force, created in July 2002 to investigate allegations of fraud and corruption at U.S. corporations.

To date, 34 defendants have been charged in connection with the work of the Enron Task Force, including 25 former Enron executives. With the plea today, 16 defendants have so far been convicted. The Enron Task Force has obtained more than $163 million in forfeiture for restitution to victims.

The Enron Task Force investigation is continuing.

VICE PRESIDENT DICK CHENEY AND ATTORNEY GENERAL ALBERTO R. GONZALES HONOR MEDAL OF VALOR RECIPIENTS

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Vice President Dick Cheney and Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales today honored the recipients of the Public Safety Officer Medal of Valor during a ceremony at the White House. The recipients of the award represent fire, law enforcement and emergency medical service providers from across the United States. The Medal of Valor is the highest national award for valor by a public safety officer, honoring outstanding heroic deeds performed above and beyond the call of duty.

"We are here today to honor Medal of Valor recipients who went above and beyond the call of duty -- putting their own lives at risk -- to earn this mark of heroism," said Attorney General Gonzales. "The commitment to service shown by these incredible public safety officers is indicative of the day-in and day-out dedication of police officers, sheriffs, emergency medical personnel, firefighters, and countless other first responders and public servants across our Nation."

The recipients of the 2003-2004 Public Safety Officer Medal of Valor are: Rodney Lee Chambers, Washington, D.C.; Jennifer Fulford-Salvano, Orange County, Fla.; Andrew J. Phillips, Marietta, Ga.; and Thomas D. Richards, Lexington, Ky. In addition, a team of six from Kansas City, Mo., includes Phillip Atwood, David Bradley, Marvin Donaldson, Stephen Johnson, Patrick Martin, and Sean McKarnin. A description of the acts of valor is attached.

The Medal of Valor, authorized by the Public Safety Medal of Valor Act of 2001, is awarded by the President of the United States to public safety officers cited by the Attorney General. Public safety officers are nominated by the chiefs or directors of their employing agencies and recommended by the Medal of Valor Review Board.

Public Safety Officer Medal of Valor
Synopses of Acts of Valor

Rodney Lee Chambers, Amtrak Police Department, Washington, D.C. On June 9, 2003, Officer Chambers was on patrol at Union Station when reports came in from dispatch regarding a man seen with a grenade. Officer Chambers located and stopped the man. Once stopped, the man pulled the pin on the grenade and attempted to drop it. Officer Chambers made a split- second decision and grabbed the grenade in the man's hand and squeezed it, not allowing it to detonate. Officer Chambers then wrestled the grenade from the suspect's control and moved away from bystanders and other public safety personnel. Officer Chambers held the grenade for 15-20 minutes waiting for the bomb disposal team to arrive. Bomb disposal officers arrived and took the device from Officer Chambers. The device was later determined to be inoperable, yet this was unknown to Chambers at the time of the incident.

Jennifer Fulford-Salvano, Orange County Sheriff's Office, Ocoee, Fla. On May 5, 2004, Deputy Fulford-Salvano responded to a burglary-in-progress call after an 8-year-old boy called to inform the police that "strange men" were in his home with weapons and that he and his sister were hiding inside a van in the garage. Deputy Fulford-Salvano, first on the scene, entered the garage to check on the child and his sister who were still hiding in the family van. As deputies took their positions, two men emerged from the house and fired upon the deputies. Deputy Fulford-Salvano became trapped in the garage between two vehicles and the assailants who were firing at her. Deputy Fulford-Salvano then returned fire. Although she was struck a total of ten times, including on her shooting hand, she was able to retrieve her weapon with her other hand and continue firing until both gunmen fell to the ground. The assailants were apprehended and the children were kept safe and unharmed throughout the incident.

Andrew J. Phillips, Marietta Police Department, Marietta, Ga. On March 11, 2004, while serving a warrant at a house to search for drugs, the team encountered four individuals. While securing the individuals, the team began taking fire from an unknown suspect. One agent was shot in the lower part of the body, and another was hit in his helmet. Agent Phillips witnessed the two agents going down and advanced through a blind hallway seeking the suspect and returning fire. Upon reaching the room where the suspect was hiding and armed with a rifle, Agent Phillips fired, causing the suspect to drop his weapon and surrender. Agent Phillips apprehended the suspect and protected his fellow agents from further harm. The wounded agent later recovered from his injuries.

Thomas D. Richards, Lexington-Fayette Urban County Division of Police, Lexington, Ky. On February 13, 2004, police, fire, and emergency services were dispatched to assist a woman with gunshot wounds to the head. The suspect, concealed inside the house, began to shoot at the team of public safety officers assembled. Six of the fire and emergency services team were pinned down by the suspect and two were shot, one fatally. Officer

Richards noticed that the firefighters were unable to move to safe positions and drove his police cruiser directly into the line of fire in an attempt to shield the wounded firefighters from the assailant's shots. The suspect fired again, shattering the cruiser's window, narrowly missing Officer Richards. The suspect then stopped firing, but Officer Richards remained with the firefighters until they could be safely evacuated by a police extraction team.

Team Members: Kansas City Missouri Fire Department, Kansas City, Mo.
Fire Capt. Phillip Atwood
Fire Capt. Patrick Martin
Firefighter David Bradley
Firefighter Marvin Donaldson
Firefighter Stephen Johnson
Fire Apparatus Operator Sean McKarnin
On February 23, 2004, firefighters were called to a residential fire that resulted from an explosion in south Kansas City. Arriving firefighters came under heavy and rapid gunfire shortly after arriving on the scene. A paramedic suffered injuries from the gunfire, but was pulled to safety by team members. The firefighters then remained pinned down by 20-30 minutes of automatic weapon fire before a second explosion destroyed the building and the gunfire ceased.

109TH CONGRESS

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

_____ introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To provide comprehensive procedures for the adjudication of cases involving unprivileged combatants.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AUTHORITY; FINDINGS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Unprivileged Combatant Act of 2005''.

(b) AUTHORITY.—The requirements, conditions, and restrictions established by this Act are made under the authority of Congress under clauses 1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 18 of article I, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States.

(c) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Article I, section 8, of the Constitution provides that the Congress has the power to ''constitute Tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court; ... define and punish ... Offenses against the Law of Nations; ... make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water; ... make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof''.

(2) The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized military tribunals, as stated in Madsen v. Kinsella 343 U.S. 341, 1952, ''[s]ince our nation's earliest days, such tribunals have been constitutionally recognized agencies for meeting many urgent governmental responsibilities related to war....They have taken many forms and borne many names. Neither their procedure nor their jurisdiction has been prescribed by statute. It has been adapted in each instance to the need that called it forth.'' Madsen, citing In re Yamashita, 327 U.S. 1 (1946).

(3) The President has inherent authority to convene military tribunals arising from his role as Commander and Chief of the Armed Forces under article II of the Constitution and from title 10 of the United States Code. Due to the extraordinary circumstances of the ongoing war on terrorism, it is appropriate for Congress to provide additional and explicit authorization of and procedures for military tribunals to adjudicate and punish offenses relating to the war on terrorism.

(4) This Act is in direct response to the United State Supreme Court's ruling in Rasul v. Bush. With the passage of this Act, the 109th Congress will have addressed the concerns of the Supreme Court's Rasul majority, and there will no longer be any need for further cause or legal challenge by or concerning these detained individuals, excepting as allowed for by this Act.

Federal Tort Trials and Verdicts, 2002-03

Q. What is the significance of this report?

Federal Tort Trials and Verdicts, 2002-03 is released as part of the Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) ongoing program to examine statistics on civil justice litigation at the State and Federal levels. This particular report focuses primarily on tort cases terminated by bench or jury trial in U.S. district courts during fiscal years 2002-03 as well as trends in tort cases terminated in U.S. district courts since 1970. Although the vast majority of tort litigation occurs in State courts, it is also important to examine tort trials in the Federal district courts because this litigation affects individuals, corporations, and government officials across the United States and in different countries. In addition, the availability of Federal data from the 1970's allows for an examination of nearly 35 years of tort trial trends in the Federal court system. Tort cases terminated by trial also provide a venue for examining key case outcomes including plaintiff win rates, damage award amounts, and other outcomes related to this type of civil litigation. These types of case outcomes are generally unavailable for the majority of tort cases that settle before or during trial.

Q. What is the scope of this study?

The Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) tracked nearly 1,647 tort cases terminated by bench or jury trial in U.S. district courts during fiscal years 2002-03. This report is the third in a series of BJS studies examining tort trials in U.S. district courts. Earlier reports focused on tort trials terminated in U.S. district courts during fiscal years 1994-95 and 1996-97. The study excludes tort cases that were settled, dismissed, or terminated by summary judgment in the Federal district courts.

Q. What does this report say about tort litigation generally in U.S. district courts from 1970 to 2003?

The total number of tort cases – both trials and non-trials – terminated in U.S. district courts has been marked by sharp upward and downward swings throughout the 1990's and early 2000's. Asbestos and non-asbestos product liability cases contributed substantially to the fluctuations in tort caseloads in U.S. district courts during this period.

Q. What does this report tell us about tort bench and jury trials terminated in U.S. district courts from 1970 to 2003?

The number of tort cases terminated by bench or jury trial in U.S. district courts has declined by nearly 80% from its peak of 3,600 trials in 1985. In fiscal year 2003, U.S. district courts terminated fewer than 800 tort cases by trial. The growing use of alternative dispute resolution (ADR) along with the complexity and costs inherent in taking a case to trial have been identified as contributing factors to the decline of tort trials in U.S. district courts.

Q. What does this report say about tort trials terminated in U.S. district courts 2002–03?

Diversity of citizenship was the jurisdictional basis for nearly two–thirds of tort trials terminated in U.S. district courts. Motor vehicle accident, product liability, marine, and medical malpractice were some of the most frequent types of personal injury tort cases concluded by trial in U.S. district courts. Plaintiffs won in about half of all tort trials terminated in U.S. district courts; however, plaintiffs prevailed less frequently in medical malpractice (37%) and product liability (34%) trials.

Q. What were the estimated median damage awards for plaintiffs who prevailed in tort trials terminated in U.S. district courts 2002–03?

Plaintiffs who prevailed at trial received an estimated median damage award of $201,000. In medical malpractice trials, plaintiff winners received a median damage award of $600,000, and in product liability trials, the median damage awards were $350,000.

Q. What are the differences between tort judge and jury trials in U.S. district courts?

Juries decided about 71% of tort cases brought to trial in U.S. district courts, while judges adjudicated the remaining 29%. Plaintiffs prevailed more frequently in judge than in jury tort trials; however, the estimated median damage awards were higher in jury ($244,000) compared to judge ($150,000) trials.

Q. What does this report say about non-asbestos and asbestos product liability trials terminated in U.S. district courts from 1990 to 2003?

Non-asbestos product liability trials have declined by about two-thirds from 279 trials in 1990 to 87 trials in 2003. On average, plaintiffs prevailed in nearly a third of non-asbestos product liability trials during this period. Since 1991, about five asbestos cases per year have been terminated by bench or jury trial in U.S. district courts. Plaintiffs won in nearly 3 out of 4 asbestos trials during this period.

Greg Katsas has talked to Jenny Brosnahan (an Associate Counsel to the President) about not seeking further review and hence ultimately releasing the opinion. But there has been no discussion with the WH, as far as we know, about the timing of the release. Also, I don't know how much Jenny may have raised the issue with Bill and Harriet.

MEMORANDUM

TO: H. Marshall Jarrett
Counsel

FROM: Neil Gorsuch
Principal Deputy Associate Attorney General

SUBJECT: Allegations of Professional Misconduct arising in connection with United States v. Philip Morris

Enclosed herewith please find certain materials responsive to the requests outlined in your memorandum of June 21, 2005 to the Associate Attorney General, Robert D. McCallum, Jr.

This production represents the result of a good faith search for materials in the possession of Mr. McCallum that are responsive to your request. Specifically, our search included a review of the physical file Mr. McCallum retains regarding the United States v. Philip Morris lawsuit; a search of all e-mails received or sent by Mr. McCallum from February 4, 2005 through June 21, 2005 that were found on his computer hard drive; a good faith examination of other relevant electronic files stored on, or readily accessible from, Mr. McCallum's computer terminal; and a review, using numerous relevant search terms, of all e-mails that were received or sent by Mr. McCallum since October of 2001, and that had been retained on his computer hard drive. In all, we expended approximately 35 hours reviewing and compiling responsive materials.

Please be advised that many of the documents attached hereto are subject to Order No. 512 in United States v. Philip Morris, which prohibits their disclosure to outside parties. A copy of this Order has been provided to you, and we understand that relevant members of your office have read it and signed the Confidentiality Acknowledgment attached to it. These documents are also subject to the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges.

I hope the enclosed is of assistance to you in your inquiry. If I can be of further assistance in any way, please do not hesitate to contact me at (202) 514-9500.

I keep finding myself bothered by two phrases, but I defer to all of you. They may not bother anyone else. First, "certain materials responsive to the request" suggests to me that we have other materials responsive to the request that we are not turning over. Second, I'm not sure why we are characterizing our search as a "good faith" search. I'd be inclined to just call it a search and leave it at that. It sounds a little defensive to me.

Also, I suggest modifying the last sentence to something like the following: "If you would like further information concerning our search or if I can be of other assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me at . . ." Since we are not getting into details about what search terms we used, or how the paper search I conducted may have differed from the electronic searches Jeff and Luis conducted, I like the idea of sounding open to providing more information on this.

Neil, I think we can put this to bed shortly. I would lean toward starting off with simply saying "responsive materials", without the word "certain" and closing with an overture of further cooperation. Let me know if you feel strongly against. I will put together a final and we can get this out.

This production represents the result of a good faith search for materials in the possession of Mr. McCallum that are responsive to your request. Specifically, our search included a review of the physical file Mr. McCallum retains regarding the United States v. Philip Morris lawsuit; a search of all e-mails received or sent by Mr. McCallum from February 4, 2005 through June 21, 2005 that were found on his computer hard drive; a good faith examination of other relevant electronic files stored on, or readily accessible from, Mr. McCallum's computer terminal; and a review, using numerous relevant search terms, of all e-mails that were received or sent by Mr. McCallum since October of 2001, and that had been retained on his computer hard drive. In all, we expended approximately 35 hours reviewing and compiling responsive materials.

Please be advised that many of the documents attached hereto are subject to Order No. 512 in United States v. Philip Morris, which prohibits their disclosure to outside parties. A copy of this Order has been provided to you, and we understand that relevant members of your office have read it and signed the Confidentiality Acknowledgment attached to it. These documents are also subject to the attorney-client and attorney work product privileges.

It is our hope that the enclosed is of assistance to you in your inquiry. If we can be of further assistance in any way, please do not hesitate to contact us at (202) 514-9500.

Have had a call in to Bill since this am, but for some reason he seems busy today with other matters... I also placed a recent call to Brett Gerry. Will let you know as soon as I connect with them.

Neil: You should give Bill a call to give him a head's up about La Raza's release on the 22nd. Greg Katsas has talked to Jenny Brosnahan (an Associate Counsel to the President) about not seeking further review and hence ultimately releasing the opinion. But there has been no discussion with the WH, as far as we know, about the timing of the release. Also, I don't know how much Jenny may have raised the issue with Bill and Harriet.

Let me know when you and Billhave connected.

Thanks.

Pretty sure Greg Katsas has been talking to Jenny Brosnahan.

Sorry, I opened this using quickview and didn't see the tracked changes. On first glance, seems that most of the problems remain. And the language change at the bottom of the first page simply isn't enough to divest courts of habeas jurisdiction. It remains hortatory rather than instructive. But thanks for passing this along.

Neil: You should give Bill a call to give him a head's up about La Raza's release on the 22nd. Greg Katsas has talked to Jenny Brosnahan (an Associate Counsel to the President) about not seeking further review and hence ultimately releasing the opinion. But there has been no discussion with the WH, as far as we know, about the timing of the release. Also, I don't know how much Jenny may have raised the issue with Bill and Harriet.

Let me know when you and Billhave connected.

As the office with departmental jurisdiction over civil litigation, the value of dissemination for us lies in apprising the myriad client agencies that we represent of new personnel in the Associate's office in one fell swoop. Likewise, a release would act to inform all those who interact with the Department, be it the legal community or other, of who the new relevant folks at Justice are, whether it be in the area of Civil, Civil Rights, Tax, ENRD, Anti-Trust, OJP, Bankruptcy, or other. Also, we've standardized our release criteria for all offices and components, and -- while there have been a few exceptions in the past -- we are now issuing releases for component head matters (resignations, for example; appointments are usually announced by the White House) only.

STATE AND LOCAL ASSISTANCE IN ENFORCING IMMIGRATION LAWS

Issue: As Deputy Attorney General, would you support the utilization of state and local law enforcement resources to enforce immigration laws?

Talking Points:

- Because state and local law enforcement officers may have interaction with illegal immigrants with criminal propensities, I support the Department of Justice's position that these officers have the inherent authority to arrest or detain these aliens based on any violation of immigration laws.

- I am not endorsing the idea of creating separate units in state or local police departments whose sole function would be the enforcement of immigration laws. But I believe that state and local officers who encounter illegal aliens in the course of their normal duties have the authority to arrest or detain aliens who have violated immigration laws, and that by doing so they perform a valuable service to our Nation.

- Any assistance that local law enforcement provides is entirely voluntary. If a state or municipality does not wish to assist in making arrests of immigration law violators, it retains the prerogative to do absolutely nothing.

- The Department of Justice has facilitated this voluntary cooperation by placing the names of certain aliens subject to removal in the FBI's National Crime Information Center (NCIC) database, which is used by virtually every law enforcement agency to ascertain and individual's criminal history and whether an arrest warrant exists for him.

Background:

- On June 6, 2002, the Attorney General announced a policy initiative to place the names of aliens of concern into the FBI's National Crime Information Center (NCIC) database. The legal basis for the initiative was advice from the Office of Legal Counsel in 2002 that States have inherent authority to arrest aliens whose names have been placed in the NCIC because they are removable from the country on the basis of either a civil or criminal violation of immigration law.

- The 2002 OLC opinion withdrew part of a published 1996 opinion that had concluded, on the ground of preemption, that state and local agencies had authority to arrest aliens only for suspected violations of the criminal immigration laws, not for civil violations. The published version of the 1996 opinion notes the fact of this partial withdrawal in an editor's note.

- In a Freedom of Information Act case, National Council of La Raza v. Ashcroft, Judge Kaplan (S.D.N.Y.) ordered the Department to produce part of the 2002 OLC opinion on the ground that the Department had publicly "adopted" the opinion as the official Justice Department position in connection with announcing that aliens who violate registration requirements or visa terms will be entered into the NCIC database. The Second Circuit affirmed on May 31, 2005, agreeing with the district court that the Department had publicly adopted and embraced the OLC opinion as official departmental policy.

- Neither court questioned that OLC opinions are subject to the deliberative-process privilege. The district court in fact found that the 2002 OLC opinion at issue met the requirements of the privilege.

- The 2002 OLC opinion has not been published or otherwise released. It therefore remains an internal advice document within the Department at least until the La Raza litigation concludes.

- Some have criticized using state and local law enforcement for immigration matters, arguing that this will breed more crime by making illegal immigrants afraid of local police and therefore unwilling to report crime.

- Two states—Oregon and Virginia—and various municipalities have statutes that expressly prohibit their police from arresting violators of immigration laws.

Defense Authorization Bill Next Up in Senate

By Anne Plummer and Jonathan Allen, CQ Staff

The fiscal 2006 defense authorization bill is expected to reach the Senate floor as early as Wednesday afternoon, according to a senior leadership aide.

The decision to proceed with the measure halted speculation that Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., would block consideration to stave off a potentially bitter fight among Republicans on the rights of enemy combatants and base closures.

Frist's green light for the bill (S 1042 - S Rept 109-69) means that the measure would be called up as soon as the Senate finishes work on the fiscal 2006 Foreign Operations bill (HR 3057).

A spokesman for Frist said there is no telling how long debate might last, leaving open the possibility the bill might not be finished before the August recess begins at the end of next week.

The status of the defense authorization bill had been in flux this week as it became clear several contentious amendments are likely to be offered to the measure.

Armed Services Committee Chairman John W. Warner, R-Va., has been drafting legislation that would outline the legal rights of military detainees and codify the interrogation procedures that could be used. Warner, who is working with Republican Sens. John McCain of Arizona and Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, said he thinks Congress should step in to clarify how the military should handle detainees.

Other Republicans remain opposed to that approach, contending that no new laws are needed and that the Bush administration cannot be blamed for allegations of abuse at military prisons.

While Warner said he is not sure whether his detainee legislation would be done in time to offer it as an amendment to the defense authorization bill, the topic remains a likely one for floor debate. McCain, for example, said he plans to offer his own detainee proposal. And Carl Levin of Michigan, the top Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, said he planned to introduce an amendment that would call for an independent commission to investigate the Bush administration's policy and the abuse allegations.

As though in a response to the amendments to come, the Senate Republican Policy Committee, chaired by Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., on Wednesday issued a "policy paper" with talking points that defended Bush's treatment of detainees at the military prison at Guantánamo Bay in Cuba.

Also likely to spur debate among senators is the upcoming round of military base closures. Viewed by some lawmakers as a necessary - albeit painful - cost-cutting move, the Base Realignment and Closure process is seen by others as misguided. Amendments to delay or block the BRAC review were considered likely.

Raul, we have met with the DAG and he agrees that some delegation to the components of the authority to approve Privacy Impact Assessments is appropriate. Can you please schedule a meeting with the AG, if possible for the week of August 8 (I am leaving today on an extravagantly long vacation), if that is the appropriate next step? The meeting should cover at the least the subject of PIA delegation, and should include Paul Corts, Van Hitch, Stu Frisch, and Dan Metcalfe or Dick Huff from OIP, as well as Neil Gorsuch, yours truly, and Bill Mercer. We should also do a briefing on the Department's current privacy set up and the issues we face, which could be part of the PIA meeting or conducted during a separate meeting soon afterwards.

Thanks.

The PIA delegation issue is relatively straightforward but if we plan to discuss privacy issues writ large with the AG, I think we first badly need to get our ducks in a row regarding what we are recommending. I would hope that some small group could get together for discussions before inviting many others. I'd recommend a meeting just as soon as John and Raul are back in town; Lily is, I believe, trying to set something up.

Defense Authorization Bill Next Up in Senate

By Anne Plummer and Jonathan Allen, CQ Staff

The fiscal 2006 defense authorization bill is expected to reach the Senate floor as early as Wednesday afternoon, according to a senior leadership aide.

The decision to proceed with the measure halted speculation that Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., would block consideration to stave off a potentially bitter fight among Republicans on the rights of enemy combatants and base closures.

Frist's green light for the bill (S 1042 - S Rept 109-69) means that the measure would be called up as soon as the Senate finishes work on the fiscal 2006 Foreign Operations bill (HR 3057).

A spokesman for Frist said there is no telling how long debate might last, leaving open the possibility the bill might not be finished before the August recess begins at the end of next week.

The status of the defense authorization bill had been in flux this week as it became clear several contentious amendments are likely to be offered to the measure.

Armed Services Committee Chairman John W. Warner, R-Va., has been drafting legislation that would outline the legal rights of military detainees and codify the interrogation procedures that could be used. Warner, who is working with Republican Sens. John McCain of Arizona and Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, said he thinks Congress should step in to clarify how the military should handle detainees.

Other Republicans remain opposed to that approach, contending that no new laws are needed and that the Bush administration cannot be blamed for allegations of abuse at military prisons.

While Warner said he is not sure whether his detainee legislation would be done in time to offer it as an amendment to the defense authorization bill, the topic remains a likely one for floor debate. McCain, for example, said he plans to offer his own detainee proposal. And Carl Levin of Michigan, the top Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, said he planned to introduce an amendment that would call for an independent commission to investigate the Bush administration's policy and the abuse allegations.

As though in a response to the amendments to come, the Senate Republican Policy Committee, chaired by Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., on Wednesday issued a "policy paper" with talking points that defended Bush's treatment of detainees at the military prison at Guantánamo Bay in Cuba.

Also likely to spur debate among senators is the upcoming round of military base closures. Viewed by some lawmakers as a necessary - albeit painful - cost-cutting move, the Base Realignment and Closure process is seen by others as misguided. Amendments to delay or block the BRAC review were considered likely.

Defense Authorization Bill Next Up in Senate

By Anne Plummer and Jonathan Allen, CQ Staff
The fiscal 2006 defense authorization bill is expected to reach the Senate floor as early as Wednesday afternoon, according to a senior leadership aide.

The decision to proceed with the measure halted speculation that Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., would block consideration to stave off a potentially bitter fight among Republicans on the rights of enemy combatants and base closures.

Frist's green light for the bill (S 1042 - S Rept 109-69) means that the measure would be called up as soon as the Senate finishes work on the fiscal 2006 Foreign Operations bill (HR 3057).

A spokesman for Frist said there is no telling how long debate might last, leaving open the possibility the bill might not be finished before the August recess begins at the end of next week.

The status of the defense authorization bill had been in flux this week as it became clear several contentious amendments are likely to be offered to the measure.

Armed Services Committee Chairman John W. Warner, R-Va., has been drafting legislation that would outline the legal rights of military detainees and codify the interrogation procedures that could be used. Warner, who is working with Republican Sens. John McCain of Arizona and Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, said he thinks Congress should step in to clarify how the military should handle detainees.

Other Republicans remain opposed to that approach, contending that no new laws are needed and that the Bush administration cannot be blamed for allegations of abuse at military prisons.

While Warner said he is not sure whether his detainee legislation would be done in time to offer it as an amendment to the defense authorization bill, the topic remains a likely one for floor debate. McCain, for example, said he plans to offer his own detainee proposal. And Carl Levin of Michigan, the top Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, said he planned to introduce an amendment that would call for an independent commission to investigate the Bush administration's policy and the abuse allegations.

As though in a response to the amendments to come, the Senate Republican Policy Committee, chaired by Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., on Wednesday issued a "policy paper" with talking points that defended Bush's treatment of detainees at the military prison at Guantánamo Bay in Cuba.

Also likely to spur debate among senators is the upcoming round of military base closures. Viewed by some lawmakers as a necessary - albeit painful - cost-cutting move, the Base Realignment and Closure process is seen by others as misguided. Amendments to delay or block the BRAC review were considered likely.

37. AN AMENDMENT TO BE OFFERED BY REPRESENTATIVE ROHRABACHER OF CALIFORNIA, OR HIS DESIGNEE, DEBATABLE FOR 10 MINUTES:

AMENDMENT TO H.R. 2601, AS REPORTED

OFFERED BY MR. ROHRABACHER

At the end of subtitle B of title XI, add the following new section:

SEC. 1127. CAPTURE, DETENTION, AND INTERROGATION OF TERRORISTS AT GUANTANAMO BAY, CUBA.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Usama bin Laden declared war on the United States in 1996.

(2) International terrorists, including al Qaida and its affiliated terrorists, have repeatedly attacked the United States and its coalition partners throughout the world and have killed and wounded thousands of innocent United States citizens and citizens from these coalition partners.

(3) The United States is exercising its rights to self-defense and to protect United States citizens both at home and abroad by waging war alongside its coalition partners against al Qaida and affiliated terrorists.

(4) International terrorists continue to pose an extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States and its coalition partners.

(5) International terrorists continue to commit and plan terrorist attacks around the world against the United States and its coalition partners;.

(6) In order to protect the United States and its citizens, the United States must identify terrorists and those individuals who support them, disrupt their activities, and eliminate their ability to conduct or support attacks against the United States, its citizens, and its coalition partners.

(7) Identifying, disrupting, and eliminating terrorist threats against the United States requires effective gathering, dissemination, and analysis of timely intelligence.

(8) The collection of information from detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, by the United States has improved the security of the United States and its coalition partners and is essential in fighting the Global War on Terrorism.

(9) The loss of interrogation-derived information would have a disastrous effect on the United States' intelligence collection and counterterrorism efforts and would constitute a damaging reversal in the Global War on Terrorism.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the capture, detention, and interrogation of international terrorists are essential to the successful prosecution of the Global War on Terrorism and to the defense of the United States, its citizens, and its coalition partners from future terrorist attacks;

(2) the detention and lawful, humane interrogation by the United States of detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, is essential to the defense of the United States and its coalition partners and to the successful prosecution of the Global War on Terrorism;

(3) the detention facilities and interrogations at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, play an essential role in the security of the United States and should not be closed or ended while the United States is waging the Global War of Terrorism.

PRIME MIN. HOWARD: Could I start by saying the prime minister and I were having a discussion when we heard about it. My first reaction was to get some more information. And I really don't want to add to what the prime minister has said. It's a matter for the police and a matter for the British authorities to talk in detail about what has happened here.

Can I just say very directly, Paul, on the issue of the policies of my government and indeed the policies of the British and American governments on Iraq, that the first point of reference is that once a country allows its foreign policy to be determined by terrorism, it's given the game away, to use the vernacular. And no Australian government that I lead will ever have policies determined by terrorism or terrorist threats, and no self-respecting government of any political stripe in Australia would allow that to happen.

Can I remind you that the murder of 88 Australians in Bali took place before the operation in Iraq.

And I remind you that the 11th of September occurred before the operation in Iraq.

Can I also remind you that the very first occasion that bin Laden specifically referred to Australia was in the context of Australia's involvement in liberating the people of East Timor. Are people by implication suggesting we shouldn't have done that?

When a group claimed responsibility on the website for the attacks on the 7th of July, they talked about British policy not just in Iraq, but in Afghanistan. Are people suggesting we shouldn't be in Afghanistan?

When Sergio de Mello was murdered in Iraq -- a brave man, a distinguished international diplomat, a person immensely respected for his work in the United Nations -- when al Qaeda gloated about that, they referred specifically to the role that de Mello had carried out in East Timor because he was the United Nations administrator in East Timor.

Now I don't know the mind of the terrorists. By definition, you can't put yourself in the mind of a successful suicide bomber. I can only look at objective facts, and the objective facts are as I've cited. The objective evidence is that Australia was a terrorist target long before the operation in Iraq. And indeed, all the evidence, as distinct from the suppositions, suggests to me that this is about hatred of a way of life, this is about the perverted use of principles of the great world religion that, at its root, preaches peace and cooperation. And I think we lose sight of the challenge we have if we allow ourselves to see these attacks in the context of particular circumstances rather than the abuse through a perverted ideology of people and their murder.

Your talk about the war effort prompted me to give you your patriotism boost for the day . . .

Can I also remind you that the very first occasion that bin Laden specifically referred to Australia was in the context of Australia's involvement in liberating the people of East Timor. Are people by implication suggesting we shouldn't have done that?

When a group claimed responsibility on the website for the attacks on the 7th of July, they talked about British policy not just in Iraq, but in Afghanistan. Are people suggesting we shouldn't be in Afghanistan?

When Sergio de Mello was murdered in Iraq -- a brave man, a distinguished international diplomat, a person immensely respected for his work in the United Nations -- when al Qaeda gloated about that, they referred specifically to the role that de Mello had carried out in East Timor because he was the United Nations administrator in East Timor.

Neil,

Until Nick told me yesterday that you were now with the Department, I had no idea that you were on board, so please let me extend to you a hearty welcome to DOJ. He passed along your "hello," which was much appreciated. I hope that all has been going well, and you have had a chance to settle in. I know that there is a lot going on, but I also know from my past experience that the folks in the Associate's Office are top notch. Tracy, in particular, has been great to work with and I have every confidence she will do great things at DHS. Should you have the opportunity to be up here at OJP, please feel free to stop by and say hello. In the alternative, and this may not be much of one given what is no doubt a ruthless schedule, we could grab a quick bite of lunch as well at your convenience. I could fill you in on the latest gyrations at Prep, or, as many would prefer, not talk about Prep at all and just catch up in general. Regardless, I wish you the only the best of luck and continued success.

Subject: FW: SAP RELEASE - S. 1042 - National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

July 21, 2005
(Senate)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

S. 1042 - National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006

(Sen. Warner (R) VA)

The Administration commends the Senate Armed Services Committee for its continued support of our national defense and supports passage of S. 1042. The Committee's strong support for the President's priorities is critical to the continued successful prosecution of the Global War on Terror.

The Administration appreciates the Committee's support of the President's overall Budget level for defense activities. Any significant reductions from this overall level of $419 billion, such as the levels proposed by the Senate Appropriations Committee's current 302(b) allocation for defense, would be strongly opposed. The Administration thanks the Committee for providing the requested 3.1 percent military pay raise, the authorized increase to the death gratuity and life insurance benefits, and the reauthorization of needed special pays and bonuses. We appreciate the Committee's support for many programs, especially acquisition programs critical to ensuring America's future military dominance – such as the DD(X) destroyer and other next-generation ships, Joint Strike Fighter, Heavy Lift Replacement Helicopter, and Future Combat Systems programs. We also appreciate the Committee's support for Defense Health, Cooperative Threat Reduction, and the Energy Conservation Investment Program.

The Administration also thanks Congress for providing the vital funds in the recently enacted FY 2005 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Tsunami Relief. The Administration appreciates Congress' strong commitment to our troops and the Global War on Terror and notes that the supplemental funding will be sufficient to pay for our efforts through the end of the current fiscal year. While the $50 billion bridge fund included in this bill is not needed for the remainder of FY 2005, the Administration looks forward to working with Congress to ensure that there is no interruption of resources for the Global War on Terror in FY 2006 and that funding is allocated in the most effective way to meet the needs of commanders in the field.

The Administration encourages the Senate to include the requested Administration priorities, including:

Security Partnerships with Other Nations: We strongly urge Congress to provide the Administration with the full set of authorities requested to build security partnerships to fight the Global War on Terror. The requested authorities include the Commander's Emergency Response Program (CERP) Fund, authority to train and equip foreign military or security forces, reimbursement for coalition support forces, logistics support to other nations, and support for emergency stabilization and reconstruction activities. Flexible authorities provided by Congress have proven critical in responding to needs in Afghanistan and Iraq. The requested authorities build upon this success but also would enable a broader range of responses to address the Global War on Terror, including new tools to ensure that foreign states do not become terrorist havens. While the Administration appreciates the Committee's authorization of $500 million in the CERP for Iraq and Afghanistan, we urge Congress to extend the CERP authority for use anywhere it is needed, make it permanent, and include the concurrence of the Secretary of State, as the Administration has requested.

Stabilization and Reconstruction Support: The Administration strongly urges the inclusion of its proposal to temporarily authorize the Department of Defense (DOD), at the request of the Secretary of State, to transfer funds, goods, and services to other U.S. departments and agencies, such as the new Office of the Coordinator for Reconstruction and Stabilization (S/CRS), for the purpose of restoring or maintaining peace and security in a foreign country. This authority would be used for unforeseen emergencies requiring immediate stabilization and reconstruction assistance where a response is in the U.S. national interest. At a time of increasing instability in many parts of the world, it is important that the U.S. Government has the ability to respond quickly to such situations. This emergency authority would enable DOD, the State Department, and other Federal agencies to work together during stabilization, security, and reconstruction operations and eliminate delays in deploying S/CRS and other U.S. Government elements in the critical stages of stabilization, security, and reconstruction efforts.

Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator: The Administration urges the Senate to approve the Administration's request to fund an integrated DOD and Department of Energy program to study the feasibility of adapting an existing warhead to a new precision penetrator casing and bomber platform integration.

Purchase and Destruction of Weapons Overseas: The Administration thanks the Committee for authorizing funds to purchase weapons abroad for force protection and to destroy them, but urges Congress to modify section 324 to include the concurrence of the Secretary of State, as the Administration had requested.

Protection of Sensitive Information: The Administration supports section 922, which would protect sensitive operational information of the Defense Intelligence Agency, and recommends that access by the space control advisory committee to Federal agency information under section 911(d)(1), apply only "to the extent permitted by law," in order to preserve existing protections for sensitive information, including personal information, intelligence sources and methods, and trade secrets.

Military Construction/Family Housing: The Administration supports the $12.1 billion authorized for military construction and family housing, which will help meet the Nation's military construction priorities for our forces at home and abroad. The Administration is concerned, however, that the bill does not provide the flexibility to use operation and maintenance funds for emergency construction requirements outside the United States.

The Administration has a number of concerns, including:

Amendments Interfering with Effective Conduct of War on Terror: The Administration understands that amendments may be offered to establish a national commission on the detainee operations or to regulate the detention, treatment or trial of terrorists captured in the war on terror. The Administration strongly opposes such amendments, which would interfere with the protection of Americans from terrorism by diverting resources from the war to answer unnecessary or duplicative inquiry or by restricting the President's ability to conduct the war effectively under existing law. The Constitution and the Authorization for Use of Military Force Joint Resolution (Public Law 107-40, September 18, 2001) provide the authority the President needs to conduct the war effectively and protect the American people. If legislation is presented that would restrict the President's authority to protect Americans effectively from terrorist attack and bring terrorists to justice, the President's senior advisers would recommend that he veto the bill.

Aircraft Carrier Force Structure: The Administration strongly opposes any further delay in the retirement of the carrier U.S.S. John F. Kennedy. The Senate is urged to eliminate section 321, which prohibits retirement of the carrier for at least another 180 days beyond currently imposed restrictions and perhaps longer. We would oppose any requirement to spend funds to maintain a ship that the Navy believes is no longer essential. In configuring the fleet for 11 carriers, the Navy will ensure that it makes effective use of existing carrier ports.

Base Realignment and Closure: The Administration strongly opposes the $376 million funding reduction for implementing recommendations of the 2005 Base Realignment and Closure (BRAC) Commission. This reduction would slow BRAC implementation and thus delay achievement of the mission improvements provided by BRAC changes, costing the DOD more money over the long term. Delaying the completion of base closures and realignments also would hinder community efforts to quickly reuse DOD facilities and mitigate the economic impact of BRAC actions.

The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment to weaken, delay, or repeal the authority for the 2005 BRAC round. If the President is presented a bill that weakens, delays, or repeals the BRAC authority, the Secretary of Defense, joining with other senior advisors, will recommend that the President veto the bill.

Buy American Act Amendments: The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment that would limit our flexibility in applying the Buy American Act or that would undermine the longstanding U.S. policy -- repeatedly affirmed by Congress -- to open U.S. procurement markets to suppliers from foreign countries that open their procurement markets to U.S. suppliers. Such amendments would harm U.S. companies and workers, as foreign governments would likely respond by restricting U.S. suppliers' access to their procurement markets. Such amendments also would decrease competition, increase costs for U.S. taxpayers, and unnecessarily add red tape to the procurement process. In the case of defense-related amendments, such legislation also could jeopardize our military readiness, when our objective should be to enhance our ability to get the best capability for the warfighter at the best value for the taxpayer. If the President is presented a bill that includes such an amendment, his senior advisors will recommend that he veto the bill.

End-Strength: The Administration strongly opposes increases in minimum Army and Marine Corps end-strength (sections 401 and 402). The President has sufficient authority to adjust the size of the Army and Marine Corps as necessary for the current national emergency. No changes to end-strength authorizations are needed at this time.

Acquisition Restrictions: The Administration is concerned with section 122, which would incrementally fund the Navy's future nuclear aircraft carrier, CVN 21, over four years. This marks a substantial move away from the Administration's full funding policy, and we urge the Senate to remove this provision. The Administration also opposes sections 132, 134, and 135, which would prohibit the retirement of any KC-135E tanker aircraft, F-117 fighter aircraft, or C-130E/H tactical airlift aircraft in FY 2006, because these prohibitions would unnecessarily limit

DOD's flexibility to manage its assets and meet combatant commander requirements in the most efficient manner.

Unrequested Additions: The Committee's bill would authorize increased funding for a large number of weapon systems and programs, including an additional $400 million for Science and Technology programs, $49 million for homeland defense initiatives, and $80 million for additional chemical and biological weapons defenses. Although some of these increases, in isolation, might seem to benefit U.S. defense capabilities, the Administration is concerned that the Committee reduced Service Operations and Maintenance funds to carry out these authorized increases. The Administration also objects to section 137, which would require the Air Force to procure up to two aircraft dedicated solely to aeromedical evacuation. This requirement is not only unnecessary, since the Air Force no longer needs dedicated aeromedical evacuation aircraft, but would restrict DOD's ability to effectively manage its resources. The Administration is especially troubled by the $1.3 billion general cut in section 1004 (based on unrealistic inflation projections) and reductions to transformational programs used to pay for these unrequested additions.

Reductions to Transformational Programs: The Administration is concerned by the Committee's reduction of the Joint Tactical Radio System by $308.3 million. Although the program has experienced difficulties and is being restructured this year, the full request will be needed in FY 2006 to avoid a delay of up to two years in fielding this transformational, networked tactical communication system, which is vital to our future coalition warfare operations. In addition, the Administration opposes the deep cuts in the Transformational Satellite Program and Space Radar, which have the potential to revolutionize future military operations.

Fissile Material Disposition Program: The Administration is concerned that the $200 million reduction in the Fissile Material Disposition program would prevent the start of construction of a mixed oxide (MOX) fuel-fabrication facility in South Carolina in FY 2006, and result in a two- to three-year delay in the project. While there were delays in reaching an agreement with the Russian government, agreement has now been reached on these protections, allowing the Fissile Material Disposition program to proceed. Reduction of funding for the U.S. facility could undermine Russian confidence in the MOX approach and put at risk international support and funding for the Russian MOX facility.

Capital Security Cost Sharing: The Administration strongly opposes section 1008 because it could prevent DOD from contributing to overseas cost sharing for critical security improvements under the Capital Security Cost Sharing program administered by the Department of State. This program requires all Federal agencies with authorized positions overseas to budget for and contribute to the construction of new secure embassy compounds for those positions.

Contract Support Acquisition Centers: The Administration strongly opposes Section 802, which would require DOD to establish a contract support acquisition center at the Defense Logistics Agency and each of the Military Departments, as premature and potentially inefficient. DOD continues to take active measures to improve the procurement of services, which include instituting management structure improvements. Currently, DOD is reviewing the implementation and effect of those improvements, which should be considered before statutorily mandating a new organizational structure for acquiring services. By mandating a new organization structure, section 802 would eliminate the flexibility that DOD needs to acquire services in the most efficient manner.

DOD Financial Improvements: The Administration supports the Committee's requirement that DOD have a comprehensive and integrated financial management improvement plan to guide expenditure of resources on improvement activities. However, the Administration is concerned that the Committee's expenditure restrictions and $200 million funding reduction contained in Sec. 328 would disrupt the Department's ongoing improvements. The Administration looks forward to working with Congress toward a successful implementation of DOD's financial improvement plan.

Competitive Sourcing: The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment that would unnecessarily subject private-sector bidders to intrusive data requirements concerning the provision of health benefits to their employees. While well-intentioned, such an amendment would ultimately undermine the efficiencies in private health plans and provide a disincentive for the private sector to participate in DOD's competitions. Further, by discouraging private-sector interest in competitive sourcing, it would place at risk significant savings -- $6 billion estimated to be generated from DOD competitions completed between FY 2001 and 2006 -- from the Competitive Sourcing initiative of the President's Management Agenda. Small business participation in competitions will be severely hampered since this provision makes it particularly burdensome to assemble competitive offers. The Administration urges the Senate to permit DOD to take advantage of government-wide OMB Circular A-76 policies to achieve the best value for the taxpayer.

Personnel Issues: While grateful that the Committee's bill provides support for our military and their families, the Administration is concerned about the following personnel issues:

Thrift Savings Plan Pilot: The Administration opposes section 652, which would establish a new pilot program to pay first-term enlistees matching Government contributions to their Thrift Savings Plan contributions. The unparalleled retirement benefits which service members already receive serve as a powerful retention tool. Any significant changes to retirement benefits should be part of a comprehensive review of compensation policy. Moreover, if this pilot program is intended primarily as a recruitment tool, the Department already has more cost-effective tools at its disposal.

Reservist Medical Exams: The new requirement in section 531 for yearly physical exams for non-activated reserve members would not enhance readiness, but would entail costs to the services of approximately $600 million over five years. Reservists currently receive a physical at least once every five years, with the Secretary of Defense ordering reservists to receive physicals more often if necessary. When activated, reservists already must undergo a physical to ensure they can deploy.

Acquisition Workforce Restriction: The Administration opposes section 832's mandated 15 percent increase in the DOD acquisition workforce over the next three fiscal years and section 572's restrictions on converting military to civilian positions in medical care. These provisions would impede the Secretary of Defense's ability to manage the workforce effectively.

Military-Civilian Conversion: The $285 million reduction in military-civilian conversion funds will eliminate the flexibility of the Secretary of Defense to use those converted positions to enhance the strength of operating units. This reduction in military-civilian conversions would have an adverse impact on all the services, especially Army transformation.

DOJ_NMG_ 0145544

Hardship Duty Pay: The Administration is concerned that the Committee has not authorized an increase in the ceiling on Hardship Duty Pay. This flexible pay is a valuable tool for enhancing retention of some of our most critical service members in a timely manner.

Promotion Board Information Credibility: Because promotion board consideration of adverse information that is not credible would be unfairly prejudicial to a military officer, section 504 should be amended to require submission to a board only of "credible" information of an adverse nature.

Finally, the Administration encourages the Senate not to adopt unrequested benefits. New or major expansion of benefits should await the results of the comprehensive review undertaken by the Secretary of Defense's Advisory Committee on Military Compensation and the results of the statutorily required Quadrennial Review of Military Compensation.

Defense Intelligence SES Positions: The Administration is disappointed the Committee did not include the Administration's proposal to increase the number of Defense Intelligence Senior Executive Service positions. These additional positions are essential to meeting the increased demands for intelligence support.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicle (UAV) Reconnaissance to Detect and Monitor Border Traffic: The Administration opposes section 1031, which would authorize DOD to conduct UAV reconnaissance to detect and monitor suspicious air, sea, and surface traffic along the U.S. border. This authority could imply a continuous mission requirement for DOD, which would place even greater demands on already heavily used UAV assets. Also, under Title 10, Section 374, the Department already is authorized to provide aerial reconnaissance support to civilian law enforcement agencies who request DOD support using the established Request for Assistance (RFA) process. Section 1031 could lead to a recurring border security mission for DOD outside the scope of Title 10, Section 374. The Administration would support express statutory authority for DOD to use UAVs in support of civilian law enforcement, but would not support a potentially continuous mission requirement directing DOD employment of these UAV assets in any particular way.

Support for Critical White House Communications Activities: The Administration strongly urges Congress to support the Administration's request to amend section 912 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201) to enable the White House Communications Agency (WHCA) to provide critical audiovisual support services for the President and the White House. These services help the President and senior White House staff in communicating with the American people and the world in executing his official duties during times of peace and national crisis by audio and visual means. The proposed change will enable the WHCA to streamline its operations and manage its personnel and resources more effectively and efficiently and eliminate a cumbersome process for requesting and billing for support provided. Accordingly, the Administration has determined that it would be most effective to fund these activities directly through WHCA, and the FY 2006 Budget submission for WHCA reflects this decision. Without this amendment, the WHCA will lack authority to expend FY 2006 funds expressly requested for this purpose.

Small Business Innovation Research Programs: The Administration is concerned about the intent of section 814, which would require that DOD maintain lists of Small Business Innovation

Research (SBIR) programs that have completed the research and development phase of the program (Phase II) and have the potential for rapid transition to an openly competitive commercial phase (Phase III). We are concerned that the intent to establish lists of Phase II projects will lead to expectations that DOD will fund Phase III projects, which are outside the scope of the SBIR program.

Grades of the Judge Advocates General: The Administration opposes section 505, which would elevate the Judge Advocates General to 3-star grade. This provision would: (1) undermine the flexibility of the President to determine what positions of importance and responsibility merit grades above the major general or rear admiral (upper half); (2) add unnecessary and rank-heavy bureaucracy; and (3) create unique selection procedures for one class of 3-star officers by imposing selection board procedures rather than permitting the Secretary of Defense to use his discretion. The Judge Advocates General, as 2-star officers, already participate fully in the legal affairs of their respective Military Departments and the entire DOD and would enjoy no greater access to senior officials as a result of their elevation to 3-star status.

Legal Services in DOD: To protect individuals receiving military legal assistance, section 1044(e)(1) of title 10, United States Code, as contained in section 553 of the bill – which grants the right to practice law anywhere in the United States to judge advocates or civilian attorneys authorized to provide military legal assistance – should be amended to provide that a judge advocate or civilian attorney must be a "member of the bar of the highest court in at least one State or Territory or the District of Columbia." In addition, section 923 should be stricken in order to preserve the authority of the Secretary of the Air Force to determine the appropriate functions and duties of his subordinates who provide legal services consistent with applicable law.

Classified Programs: The Administration opposes section 1002, which would incorporate the classified annex into the bill. The Administration discourages the practice of enacting secret laws and encourages instead appropriate non-binding uses of classified annexes to committee reports and the joint statements of managers that accompany final legislation, and therefore recommends striking section 1002(a).

The Administration looks forward to working with the Congress to address other concerns, including constitutional ones, such as concern with sections 212(d)(3), 537(e)(3), 591(d)(3), 902(c)(3)(C), and 1042(c), which seek submission of legislative recommendations by Executive Branch officials. These sections should be modified to require submission only of such recommendations "as the President judges necessary and expedient," in order to be consistent with the President's constitutional authority to supervise the unitary Executive Branch and the Recommendations Clause of the Constitution. The Administration also will work with Congress to eliminate the unintended and potentially discriminatory effects of section 581, so as to ensure the eligibility of U.S. citizen children of non-citizen DOD employees living abroad to enroll in DOD schools.

Budget Estimates and Enforcement

This bill would affect direct spending and receipts. To sustain the economy's expansion, it is critical to exercise responsible restraint over Federal spending. The Budget Enforcement Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002. The President's FY 2006 Budget includes a proposal to extend the discretionary caps through 2010, a pay-as-you-go requirement for direct spending, and a new mechanism to control the expansion of long-term unfunded obligations. OMB's cost estimate of this bill is currently under development.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

(Senate)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

S. 1042 - National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006

(Sen. Warner (R) VA)

The Administration commends the Senate Armed Services Committee for its continued support of our national defense and supports passage of S. 1042. The Committee's strong support for the President's priorities is critical to the continued successful prosecution of the Global War on Terror.

The Administration appreciates the Committee's support of the President's overall Budget level for defense activities. Any significant reductions from this overall level of $419 billion, such as the levels proposed by the Senate Appropriations Committee's current 302(b) allocation for defense, would be strongly opposed. The Administration thanks the Committee for providing the requested 3.1 percent military pay raise, the authorized increase to the death gratuity and life insurance benefits, and the reauthorization of needed special pays and bonuses. We appreciate the Committee's support for many programs, especially acquisition programs critical to ensuring America's future military dominance – such as the DD(X) destroyer and other next-generation ships, Joint Strike Fighter, Heavy Lift Replacement Helicopter, and Future Combat Systems programs. We also appreciate the Committee's support for Defense Health, Cooperative Threat Reduction, and the Energy Conservation Investment Program.

The Administration also thanks Congress for providing the vital funds in the recently enacted FY 2005 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Tsunami Relief. The Administration appreciates Congress' strong commitment to our troops and the Global War on Terror and notes that the supplemental funding will be sufficient to pay for our efforts through the end of the current fiscal year. While the $50 billion bridge fund included in this bill is not needed for the remainder of FY 2005, the Administration looks forward to working with Congress to ensure that there is no interruption of resources for the Global War on Terror in FY 2006 and that funding is allocated in the most effective way to meet the needs of commanders in the field.

The Administration encourages the Senate to include the requested Administration priorities, including:

Security Partnerships with Other Nations: We strongly urge Congress to provide the Administration with the full set of authorities requested to build security partnerships to fight the Global War on Terror. The requested authorities include the Commander's Emergency Response Program (CERP) Fund, authority to train and equip foreign military or security forces, reimbursement for coalition support forces, logistics support to other nations, and support for emergency stabilization and reconstruction activities. Flexible authorities provided by Congress have proven critical in responding to needs in Afghanistan and Iraq. The requested authorities build upon this success but also would enable a broader range of responses to address the Global War on Terror, including new tools to ensure that foreign states do not become terrorist havens. While the Administration appreciates the Committee's authorization of $500 million in the CERP for Iraq and Afghanistan, we urge Congress to extend the CERP authority for use anywhere it is needed, make it permanent, and include the concurrence of the Secretary of State, as the Administration has requested.

Stabilization and Reconstruction Support: The Administration strongly urges the inclusion of its proposal to temporarily authorize the Department of Defense (DOD), at the request of the Secretary of State, to transfer funds, goods, and services to other U.S. departments and agencies, such as the new Office of the Coordinator for Reconstruction and Stabilization (S/CRS), for the purpose of restoring or maintaining peace and security in a foreign country. This authority would be used for unforeseen emergencies requiring immediate stabilization and reconstruction assistance where a response is in the U.S. national interest. At a time of increasing instability in many parts of the world, it is important that the U.S. Government has the ability to respond quickly to such situations. This emergency authority would enable DOD, the State Department, and other Federal agencies to work together during stabilization, security, and reconstruction operations and eliminate delays in deploying S/CRS and other U.S. Government elements in the critical stages of stabilization, security, and reconstruction efforts.

Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator: The Administration urges the Senate to approve the Administration's request to fund an integrated DOD and Department of Energy program to study the feasibility of adapting an existing warhead to a new precision penetrator casing and bomber platform integration.

Purchase and Destruction of Weapons Overseas: The Administration thanks the Committee for authorizing funds to purchase weapons abroad for force protection and to destroy them, but urges Congress to modify section 324 to include the concurrence of the Secretary of State, as the Administration had requested.

Protection of Sensitive Information: The Administration supports section 922, which would protect sensitive operational information of the Defense Intelligence Agency, and recommends that access by the space control advisory committee to Federal agency information under section 911(d)(1), apply only "to the extent permitted by law," in order to preserve existing protections for sensitive information, including personal information, intelligence sources and methods, and trade secrets.

Military Construction/Family Housing: The Administration supports the $12.1 billion authorized for military construction and family housing, which will help meet the Nation's military construction priorities for our forces at home and abroad. The Administration is concerned, however, that the bill does not provide the flexibility to use operation and maintenance funds for emergency construction requirements outside the United States.

The Administration has a number of concerns, including:

Amendments Interfering with Effective Conduct of War on Terror: The Administration understands that amendments may be offered to establish a national commission on the detainee operations or to regulate the detention, treatment or trial of terrorists captured in the war on terror. The Administration strongly opposes such amendments, which would interfere with the protection of Americans from terrorism by diverting resources from the war to answer unnecessary or duplicative inquiry or by restricting the President's ability to conduct the war effectively under existing law. The Constitution and the Authorization for Use of Military Force Joint Resolution (Public Law 107-40, September 18, 2001) provide the authority the President needs to conduct the war effectively and protect the American people. If legislation is presented that would restrict the President's authority to protect Americans effectively from terrorist attack and bring terrorists to justice, the President's senior advisers would recommend that he veto the bill.

Aircraft Carrier Force Structure: The Administration strongly opposes any further delay in the retirement of the carrier U.S.S. John F. Kennedy. The Senate is urged to eliminate section 321, which prohibits retirement of the carrier for at least another 180 days beyond currently imposed restrictions and perhaps longer. We would oppose any requirement to spend funds to maintain a ship that the Navy believes is no longer essential. In configuring the fleet for 11 carriers, the Navy will ensure that it makes effective use of existing carrier ports.

Base Realignment and Closure: The Administration strongly opposes the $376 million funding reduction for implementing recommendations of the 2005 Base Realignment and Closure (BRAC) Commission. This reduction would slow BRAC implementation and thus delay achievement of the mission improvements provided by BRAC changes, costing the DOD more money over the long term. Delaying the completion of base closures and realignments also would hinder community efforts to quickly reuse DOD facilities and mitigate the economic impact of BRAC actions.

The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment to weaken, delay, or repeal the authority for the 2005 BRAC round. If the President is presented a bill that weakens, delays, or repeals the BRAC authority, the Secretary of Defense, joining with other senior advisors, will recommend that the President veto the bill.

Buy American Act Amendments: The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment that would limit our flexibility in applying the Buy American Act or that would undermine the longstanding U.S. policy -- repeatedly affirmed by Congress -- to open U.S. procurement markets to suppliers from foreign countries that open their procurement markets to U.S. suppliers. Such amendments would harm U.S. companies and workers, as foreign governments would likely respond by restricting U.S. suppliers' access to their procurement markets. Such amendments also would decrease competition, increase costs for U.S. taxpayers, and unnecessarily add red tape to the procurement process. In the case of defense-related amendments, such legislation also could jeopardize our military readiness, when our objective should be to enhance our ability to get the best capability for the warfighter at the best value for the taxpayer. If the President is presented a bill that includes such an amendment, his senior advisors will recommend that he veto the bill.

End-Strength: The Administration strongly opposes increases in minimum Army and Marine Corps end-strength (sections 401 and 402). The President has sufficient authority to adjust the size of the Army and Marine Corps as necessary for the current national emergency. No changes to end-strength authorizations are needed at this time.

Acquisition Restrictions: The Administration is concerned with section 122, which would incrementally fund the Navy's future nuclear aircraft carrier, CVN 21, over four years. This marks a substantial move away from the Administration's full funding policy, and we urge the Senate to remove this provision. The Administration also opposes sections 132, 134, and 135, which would prohibit the retirement of any KC-135E tanker aircraft, F-117 fighter aircraft, or C-130E/H tactical airlift aircraft in FY 2006, because these prohibitions would unnecessarily limit

DOD's flexibility to manage its assets and meet combatant commander requirements in the most efficient manner.

Unrequested Additions: The Committee's bill would authorize increased funding for a large number of weapon systems and programs, including an additional $400 million for Science and Technology programs, $49 million for homeland defense initiatives, and $80 million for additional chemical and biological weapons defenses. Although some of these increases, in isolation, might seem to benefit U.S. defense capabilities, the Administration is concerned that the Committee reduced Service Operations and Maintenance funds to carry out these authorized increases. The Administration also objects to section 137, which would require the Air Force to procure up to two aircraft dedicated solely to aeromedical evacuation. This requirement is not only unnecessary, since the Air Force no longer needs dedicated aeromedical evacuation aircraft, but would restrict DOD's ability to effectively manage its resources. The Administration is especially troubled by the $1.3 billion general cut in section 1004 (based on unrealistic inflation projections) and reductions to transformational programs used to pay for these unrequested additions.

Reductions to Transformational Programs: The Administration is concerned by the Committee's reduction of the Joint Tactical Radio System by $308.3 million. Although the program has experienced difficulties and is being restructured this year, the full request will be needed in FY 2006 to avoid a delay of up to two years in fielding this transformational, networked tactical communication system, which is vital to our future coalition warfare operations. In addition, the Administration opposes the deep cuts in the Transformational Satellite Program and Space Radar, which have the potential to revolutionize future military operations.

Fissile Material Disposition Program: The Administration is concerned that the $200 million reduction in the Fissile Material Disposition program would prevent the start of construction of a mixed oxide (MOX) fuel-fabrication facility in South Carolina in FY 2006, and result in a two- to three-year delay in the project. While there were delays in reaching an agreement with the Russian government, agreement has now been reached on these protections, allowing the Fissile Material Disposition program to proceed. Reduction of funding for the U.S. facility could undermine Russian confidence in the MOX approach and put at risk international support and funding for the Russian MOX facility.

Capital Security Cost Sharing: The Administration strongly opposes section 1008 because it could prevent DOD from contributing to overseas cost sharing for critical security improvements under the Capital Security Cost Sharing program administered by the Department of State. This program requires all Federal agencies with authorized positions overseas to budget for and contribute to the construction of new secure embassy compounds for those positions.

Contract Support Acquisition Centers: The Administration strongly opposes Section 802, which would require DOD to establish a contract support acquisition center at the Defense Logistics Agency and each of the Military Departments, as premature and potentially inefficient. DOD continues to take active measures to improve the procurement of services, which include instituting management structure improvements. Currently, DOD is reviewing the implementation and effect of those improvements, which should be considered before statutorily mandating a new organizational structure for acquiring services. By mandating a new organization structure, section 802 would eliminate the flexibility that DOD needs to acquire services in the most efficient manner.

DOD Financial Improvements: The Administration supports the Committee's requirement that DOD have a comprehensive and integrated financial management improvement plan to guide expenditure of resources on improvement activities. However, the Administration is concerned that the Committee's expenditure restrictions and $200 million funding reduction contained in Sec. 328 would disrupt the Department's ongoing improvements. The Administration looks forward to working with Congress toward a successful implementation of DOD's financial improvement plan.

Competitive Sourcing: The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment that would unnecessarily subject private-sector bidders to intrusive data requirements concerning the provision of health benefits to their employees. While well-intentioned, such an amendment would ultimately undermine the efficiencies in private health plans and provide a disincentive for the private sector to participate in DOD's competitions. Further, by discouraging private-sector interest in competitive sourcing, it would place at risk significant savings -- $6 billion estimated to be generated from DOD competitions completed between FY 2001 and 2006 -- from the Competitive Sourcing initiative of the President's Management Agenda. Small business participation in competitions will be severely hampered since this provision makes it particularly burdensome to assemble competitive offers. The Administration urges the Senate to permit DOD to take advantage of government-wide OMB Circular A-76 policies to achieve the best value for the taxpayer.

Personnel Issues: While grateful that the Committee's bill provides support for our military and their families, the Administration is concerned about the following personnel issues:

Thrift Savings Plan Pilot: The Administration opposes section 652, which would establish a new pilot program to pay first-term enlistees matching Government contributions to their Thrift Savings Plan contributions. The unparalleled retirement benefits which service members already receive serve as a powerful retention tool. Any significant changes to retirement benefits should be part of a comprehensive review of compensation policy. Moreover, if this pilot program is intended primarily as a recruitment tool, the Department already has more cost-effective tools at its disposal.

Reservist Medical Exams: The new requirement in section 531 for yearly physical exams for non-activated reserve members would not enhance readiness, but would entail costs to the services of approximately $600 million over five years. Reservists currently receive a physical at least once every five years, with the Secretary of Defense ordering reservists to receive physicals more often if necessary. When activated, reservists already must undergo a physical to ensure they can deploy.

Acquisition Workforce Restriction: The Administration opposes section 832's mandated 15 percent increase in the DOD acquisition workforce over the next three fiscal years and section 572's restrictions on converting military to civilian positions in medical care. These provisions would impede the Secretary of Defense's ability to manage the workforce effectively.

Military-Civilian Conversion: The $285 million reduction in military-civilian conversion funds will eliminate the flexibility of the Secretary of Defense to use those converted positions to enhance the strength of operating units. This reduction in military-civilian conversions would have an adverse impact on all the services, especially Army transformation.

DOJ_NMG_ 0145555

Hardship Duty Pay: The Administration is concerned that the Committee has not authorized an increase in the ceiling on Hardship Duty Pay. This flexible pay is a valuable tool for enhancing retention of some of our most critical service members in a timely manner.

Promotion Board Information Credibility: Because promotion board consideration of adverse information that is not credible would be unfairly prejudicial to a military officer, section 504 should be amended to require submission to a board only of "credible" information of an adverse nature.

Finally, the Administration encourages the Senate not to adopt unrequested benefits. New or major expansion of benefits should await the results of the comprehensive review undertaken by the Secretary of Defense's Advisory Committee on Military Compensation and the results of the statutorily required Quadrennial Review of Military Compensation.

Defense Intelligence SES Positions: The Administration is disappointed the Committee did not include the Administration's proposal to increase the number of Defense Intelligence Senior Executive Service positions. These additional positions are essential to meeting the increased demands for intelligence support.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicle (UAV) Reconnaissance to Detect and Monitor Border Traffic: The Administration opposes section 1031, which would authorize DOD to conduct UAV reconnaissance to detect and monitor suspicious air, sea, and surface traffic along the U.S. border. This authority could imply a continuous mission requirement for DOD, which would place even greater demands on already heavily used UAV assets. Also, under Title 10, Section 374, the Department already is authorized to provide aerial reconnaissance support to civilian law enforcement agencies who request DOD support using the established Request for Assistance (RFA) process. Section 1031 could lead to a recurring border security mission for DOD outside the scope of Title 10, Section 374. The Administration would support express statutory authority for DOD to use UAVs in support of civilian law enforcement, but would not support a potentially continuous mission requirement directing DOD employment of these UAV assets in any particular way.

Support for Critical White House Communications Activities: The Administration strongly urges Congress to support the Administration's request to amend section 912 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201) to enable the White House Communications Agency (WHCA) to provide critical audiovisual support services for the President and the White House. These services help the President and senior White House staff in communicating with the American people and the world in executing his official duties during times of peace and national crisis by audio and visual means. The proposed change will enable the WHCA to streamline its operations and manage its personnel and resources more effectively and efficiently and eliminate a cumbersome process for requesting and billing for support provided. Accordingly, the Administration has determined that it would be most effective to fund these activities directly through WHCA, and the FY 2006 Budget submission for WHCA reflects this decision. Without this amendment, the WHCA will lack authority to expend FY 2006 funds expressly requested for this purpose.

Small Business Innovation Research Programs: The Administration is concerned about the intent of section 814, which would require that DOD maintain lists of Small Business Innovation

Research (SBIR) programs that have completed the research and development phase of the program (Phase II) and have the potential for rapid transition to an openly competitive commercial phase (Phase III). We are concerned that the intent to establish lists of Phase II projects will lead to expectations that DOD will fund Phase III projects, which are outside the scope of the SBIR program.

Grades of the Judge Advocates General: The Administration opposes section 505, which would elevate the Judge Advocates General to 3-star grade. This provision would: (1) undermine the flexibility of the President to determine what positions of importance and responsibility merit grades above the major general or rear admiral (upper half); (2) add unnecessary and rank-heavy bureaucracy; and (3) create unique selection procedures for one class of 3-star officers by imposing selection board procedures rather than permitting the Secretary of Defense to use his discretion. The Judge Advocates General, as 2-star officers, already participate fully in the legal affairs of their respective Military Departments and the entire DOD and would enjoy no greater access to senior officials as a result of their elevation to 3-star status.

Legal Services in DOD: To protect individuals receiving military legal assistance, section 1044(e)(1) of title 10, United States Code, as contained in section 553 of the bill – which grants the right to practice law anywhere in the United States to judge advocates or civilian attorneys authorized to provide military legal assistance – should be amended to provide that a judge advocate or civilian attorney must be a "member of the bar of the highest court in at least one State or Territory or the District of Columbia." In addition, section 923 should be stricken in order to preserve the authority of the Secretary of the Air Force to determine the appropriate functions and duties of his subordinates who provide legal services consistent with applicable law.

Classified Programs: The Administration opposes section 1002, which would incorporate the classified annex into the bill. The Administration discourages the practice of enacting secret laws and encourages instead appropriate non-binding uses of classified annexes to committee reports and the joint statements of managers that accompany final legislation, and therefore recommends striking section 1002(a).

The Administration looks forward to working with the Congress to address other concerns, including constitutional ones, such as concern with sections 212(d)(3), 537(e)(3), 591(d)(3), 902(c)(3)(C), and 1042(c), which seek submission of legislative recommendations by Executive Branch officials. These sections should be modified to require submission only of such recommendations "as the President judges necessary and expedient," in order to be consistent with the President's constitutional authority to supervise the unitary Executive Branch and the Recommendations Clause of the Constitution. The Administration also will work with Congress to eliminate the unintended and potentially discriminatory effects of section 581, so as to ensure the eligibility of U.S. citizen children of non-citizen DOD employees living abroad to enroll in DOD schools.

Budget Estimates and Enforcement

This bill would affect direct spending and receipts. To sustain the economy's expansion, it is critical to exercise responsible restraint over Federal spending. The Budget Enforcement Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002. The President's FY 2006 Budget includes a proposal to extend the discretionary caps through 2010, a pay-as-you-go requirement for direct spending, and a new mechanism to control the expansion of long-term unfunded obligations. OMB's cost estimate of this bill is currently under development.

One more from DoD. If the President plans to veto this, I suppose we don't have any issue. But if there's any chance he'd sign something stuck to an approp rider or otherwise, I wonder whether we ought to start thinking about the contours of what we'd want, as well as how to tee that issue up internally.

The Administration appreciates the Committee's support of the President's overall Budget level for defense activities. Any significant reductions from this overall level of $419 billion, such as the levels proposed by the Senate Appropriations Committee's current 302(b) allocation for defense, would be strongly opposed. The Administration thanks the Committee for providing the requested 3.1 percent military pay raise, the authorized increase to the death gratuity and life insurance benefits, and the reauthorization of needed special pays and bonuses. We appreciate the Committee's support for many programs, especially acquisition programs critical to ensuring America's future military dominance – such as the DD(X) destroyer and other next-generation ships, Joint Strike Fighter, Heavy Lift Replacement Helicopter, and Future Combat Systems programs. We also appreciate the Committee's support for Defense Health, Cooperative Threat Reduction, and the Energy Conservation Investment Program.

The Administration also thanks Congress for providing the vital funds in the recently enacted FY 2005 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Tsunami Relief. The Administration appreciates Congress' strong commitment to our troops and the Global War on Terror and notes that the supplemental funding will be sufficient to pay for our efforts through the end of the current fiscal year. While the $50 billion bridge fund included in this bill is not needed for the remainder of FY 2005, the Administration looks forward to working with Congress to ensure that there is no interruption of resources for the Global War on Terror in FY 2006 and that funding is allocated in the most effective way to meet the needs of commanders in the field.

The Administration encourages the Senate to include the requested Administration priorities, including:

Security Partnerships with Other Nations: We strongly urge Congress to provide the Administration with the full set of authorities requested to build security partnerships to fight the Global War on Terror. The requested authorities include the Commander's Emergency Response Program (CERP) Fund, authority to train and equip foreign military or security forces, reimbursement for coalition support forces, logistics support to other nations, and support for emergency stabilization and reconstruction activities. Flexible authorities provided by Congress have proven critical in responding to needs in Afghanistan and Iraq. The requested authorities build upon this success but also would enable a broader range of responses to address the Global War on Terror, including new tools to ensure that foreign states do not become terrorist havens. While the Administration appreciates the Committee's authorization of $500 million in the CERP for Iraq and Afghanistan, we urge Congress to extend the CERP authority for use anywhere it is needed, make it permanent, and include the concurrence of the Secretary of State, as the Administration has requested.

Stabilization and Reconstruction Support: The Administration strongly urges the inclusion of its proposal to temporarily authorize the Department of Defense (DOD), at the request of the Secretary of State, to transfer funds, goods, and services to other U.S. departments and agencies, such as the new Office of the Coordinator for Reconstruction and Stabilization (S/CRS), for the purpose of restoring or maintaining peace and security in a foreign country. This authority would be used for unforeseen emergencies requiring immediate stabilization and reconstruction assistance where a response is in the U.S. national interest. At a time of increasing instability in many parts of the world, it is important that the U.S. Government has the ability to respond quickly to such situations. This emergency authority would enable DOD, the State Department, and other Federal agencies to work together during stabilization, security, and reconstruction operations and eliminate delays in deploying S/CRS and other U.S. Government elements in the critical stages of stabilization, security, and reconstruction efforts.

Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator: The Administration urges the Senate to approve the Administration's request to fund an integrated DOD and Department of Energy program to study the feasibility of adapting an existing warhead to a new precision penetrator casing and bomber platform integration.

Purchase and Destruction of Weapons Overseas: The Administration thanks the Committee for authorizing funds to purchase weapons abroad for force protection and to destroy them, but urges Congress to modify section 324 to include the concurrence of the Secretary of State, as the Administration had requested.

Protection of Sensitive Information: The Administration supports section 922, which would protect sensitive operational information of the Defense Intelligence Agency, and recommends that access by the space control advisory committee to Federal agency information under section 911(d)(1), apply only "to the extent permitted by law," in order to preserve existing protections for sensitive information, including personal information, intelligence sources and methods, and trade secrets.

Military Construction/Family Housing: The Administration supports the $12.1 billion authorized for military construction and family housing, which will help meet the Nation's military construction priorities for our forces at home and abroad. The Administration is concerned, however, that the bill does not provide the flexibility to use operation and maintenance funds for emergency construction requirements outside the United States.

The Administration has a number of concerns, including:

Amendments Interfering with Effective Conduct of War on Terror: The Administration understands that amendments may be offered to establish a national commission on the detainee operations or to regulate the detention, treatment or trial of terrorists captured in the war on terror. The Administration strongly opposes such amendments, which would interfere with the protection of Americans from terrorism by diverting resources from the war to answer unnecessary or duplicative inquiry or by restricting the President's ability to conduct the war effectively under existing law. The Constitution and the Authorization for Use of Military Force Joint Resolution (Public Law 107-40, September 18, 2001) provide the authority the President needs to conduct the war effectively and protect the American people. If legislation is presented that would restrict the President's authority to protect Americans effectively from terrorist attack and bring terrorists to justice, the President's senior advisers would recommend that he veto the bill.

Aircraft Carrier Force Structure: The Administration strongly opposes any further delay in the retirement of the carrier U.S.S. John F. Kennedy. The Senate is urged to eliminate section 321, which prohibits retirement of the carrier for at least another 180 days beyond currently imposed restrictions and perhaps longer. We would oppose any requirement to spend funds to maintain a ship that the Navy believes is no longer essential. In configuring the fleet for 11 carriers, the Navy will ensure that it makes effective use of existing carrier ports.

Base Realignment and Closure: The Administration strongly opposes the $376 million funding reduction for implementing recommendations of the 2005 Base Realignment and Closure (BRAC) Commission. This reduction would slow BRAC implementation and thus delay achievement of the mission improvements provided by BRAC changes, costing the DOD more money over the long term. Delaying the completion of base closures and realignments also would hinder community efforts to quickly reuse DOD facilities and mitigate the economic impact of BRAC actions.

The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment to weaken, delay, or repeal the authority for the 2005 BRAC round. If the President is presented a bill that weakens, delays, or repeals the BRAC authority, the Secretary of Defense, joining with other senior advisors, will recommend that the President veto the bill.

Buy American Act Amendments: The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment that would limit our flexibility in applying the Buy American Act or that would undermine the longstanding U.S. policy -- repeatedly affirmed by Congress -- to open U.S. procurement markets to suppliers from foreign countries that open their procurement markets to U.S. suppliers. Such amendments would harm U.S. companies and workers, as foreign governments would likely respond by restricting U.S. suppliers' access to their procurement markets. Such amendments also would decrease competition, increase costs for U.S. taxpayers, and unnecessarily add red tape to the procurement process. In the case of defense-related amendments, such legislation also could jeopardize our military readiness, when our objective should be to enhance our ability to get the best capability for the warfighter at the best value for the taxpayer. If the President is presented a bill that includes such an amendment, his senior advisors will recommend that he veto the bill.

End-Strength: The Administration strongly opposes increases in minimum Army and Marine Corps end-strength (sections 401 and 402). The President has sufficient authority to adjust the size of the Army and Marine Corps as necessary for the current national emergency. No changes to end-strength authorizations are needed at this time.

Acquisition Restrictions: The Administration is concerned with section 122, which would incrementally fund the Navy's future nuclear aircraft carrier, CVN 21, over four years. This marks a substantial move away from the Administration's full funding policy, and we urge the Senate to remove this provision. The Administration also opposes sections 132, 134, and 135, which would prohibit the retirement of any KC-135E tanker aircraft, F-117 fighter aircraft, or C-130E/H tactical airlift aircraft in FY 2006, because these prohibitions would unnecessarily limit

DOD's flexibility to manage its assets and meet combatant commander requirements in the most efficient manner.

Unrequested Additions: The Committee's bill would authorize increased funding for a large number of weapon systems and programs, including an additional $400 million for Science and Technology programs, $49 million for homeland defense initiatives, and $80 million for additional chemical and biological weapons defenses. Although some of these increases, in isolation, might seem to benefit U.S. defense capabilities, the Administration is concerned that the Committee reduced Service Operations and Maintenance funds to carry out these authorized increases. The Administration also objects to section 137, which would require the Air Force to procure up to two aircraft dedicated solely to aeromedical evacuation. This requirement is not only unnecessary, since the Air Force no longer needs dedicated aeromedical evacuation aircraft, but would restrict DOD's ability to effectively manage its resources. The Administration is especially troubled by the $1.3 billion general cut in section 1004 (based on unrealistic inflation projections) and reductions to transformational programs used to pay for these unrequested additions.

Reductions to Transformational Programs: The Administration is concerned by the Committee's reduction of the Joint Tactical Radio System by $308.3 million. Although the program has experienced difficulties and is being restructured this year, the full request will be needed in FY 2006 to avoid a delay of up to two years in fielding this transformational, networked tactical communication system, which is vital to our future coalition warfare operations. In addition, the Administration opposes the deep cuts in the Transformational Satellite Program and Space Radar, which have the potential to revolutionize future military operations.

Fissile Material Disposition Program: The Administration is concerned that the $200 million reduction in the Fissile Material Disposition program would prevent the start of construction of a mixed oxide (MOX) fuel-fabrication facility in South Carolina in FY 2006, and result in a two- to three-year delay in the project. While there were delays in reaching an agreement with the Russian government, agreement has now been reached on these protections, allowing the Fissile Material Disposition program to proceed. Reduction of funding for the U.S. facility could undermine Russian confidence in the MOX approach and put at risk international support and funding for the Russian MOX facility.

Capital Security Cost Sharing: The Administration strongly opposes section 1008 because it could prevent DOD from contributing to overseas cost sharing for critical security improvements under the Capital Security Cost Sharing program administered by the Department of State. This program requires all Federal agencies with authorized positions overseas to budget for and contribute to the construction of new secure embassy compounds for those positions.

Contract Support Acquisition Centers: The Administration strongly opposes Section 802, which would require DOD to establish a contract support acquisition center at the Defense Logistics Agency and each of the Military Departments, as premature and potentially inefficient. DOD continues to take active measures to improve the procurement of services, which include instituting management structure improvements. Currently, DOD is reviewing the implementation and effect of those improvements, which should be considered before statutorily mandating a new organizational structure for acquiring services. By mandating a new organization structure, section 802 would eliminate the flexibility that DOD needs to acquire services in the most efficient manner.

DOD Financial Improvements: The Administration supports the Committee's requirement that DOD have a comprehensive and integrated financial management improvement plan to guide expenditure of resources on improvement activities. However, the Administration is concerned that the Committee's expenditure restrictions and $200 million funding reduction contained in Sec. 328 would disrupt the Department's ongoing improvements. The Administration looks forward to working with Congress toward a successful implementation of DOD's financial improvement plan.

Competitive Sourcing: The Administration would strongly oppose any amendment that would unnecessarily subject private-sector bidders to intrusive data requirements concerning the provision of health benefits to their employees. While well-intentioned, such an amendment would ultimately undermine the efficiencies in private health plans and provide a disincentive for the private sector to participate in DOD's competitions. Further, by discouraging private-sector interest in competitive sourcing, it would place at risk significant savings -- $6 billion estimated to be generated from DOD competitions completed between FY 2001 and 2006 -- from the Competitive Sourcing initiative of the President's Management Agenda. Small business participation in competitions will be severely hampered since this provision makes it particularly burdensome to assemble competitive offers. The Administration urges the Senate to permit DOD to take advantage of government-wide OMB Circular A-76 policies to achieve the best value for the taxpayer.

Personnel Issues: While grateful that the Committee's bill provides support for our military and their families, the Administration is concerned about the following personnel issues:

Thrift Savings Plan Pilot: The Administration opposes section 652, which would establish a new pilot program to pay first-term enlistees matching Government contributions to their Thrift Savings Plan contributions. The unparalleled retirement benefits which service members already receive serve as a powerful retention tool. Any significant changes to retirement benefits should be part of a comprehensive review of compensation policy. Moreover, if this pilot program is intended primarily as a recruitment tool, the Department already has more cost-effective tools at its disposal.

Reservist Medical Exams: The new requirement in section 531 for yearly physical exams for non-activated reserve members would not enhance readiness, but would entail costs to the services of approximately $600 million over five years. Reservists currently receive a physical at least once every five years, with the Secretary of Defense ordering reservists to receive physicals more often if necessary. When activated, reservists already must undergo a physical to ensure they can deploy.

Acquisition Workforce Restriction: The Administration opposes section 832's mandated 15 percent increase in the DOD acquisition workforce over the next three fiscal years and section 572's restrictions on converting military to civilian positions in medical care. These provisions would impede the Secretary of Defense's ability to manage the workforce effectively.

Military-Civilian Conversion: The $285 million reduction in military-civilian conversion funds will eliminate the flexibility of the Secretary of Defense to use those converted positions to enhance the strength of operating units. This reduction in military-civilian conversions would have an adverse impact on all the services, especially Army transformation.

DOJ_NMG_ 0145566

Hardship Duty Pay: The Administration is concerned that the Committee has not authorized an increase in the ceiling on Hardship Duty Pay. This flexible pay is a valuable tool for enhancing retention of some of our most critical service members in a timely manner.

Promotion Board Information Credibility: Because promotion board consideration of adverse information that is not credible would be unfairly prejudicial to a military officer, section 504 should be amended to require submission to a board only of "credible" information of an adverse nature.

Finally, the Administration encourages the Senate not to adopt unrequested benefits. New or major expansion of benefits should await the results of the comprehensive review undertaken by the Secretary of Defense's Advisory Committee on Military Compensation and the results of the statutorily required Quadrennial Review of Military Compensation.

Defense Intelligence SES Positions: The Administration is disappointed the Committee did not include the Administration's proposal to increase the number of Defense Intelligence Senior Executive Service positions. These additional positions are essential to meeting the increased demands for intelligence support.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicle (UAV) Reconnaissance to Detect and Monitor Border Traffic: The Administration opposes section 1031, which would authorize DOD to conduct UAV reconnaissance to detect and monitor suspicious air, sea, and surface traffic along the U.S. border. This authority could imply a continuous mission requirement for DOD, which would place even greater demands on already heavily used UAV assets. Also, under Title 10, Section 374, the Department already is authorized to provide aerial reconnaissance support to civilian law enforcement agencies who request DOD support using the established Request for Assistance (RFA) process. Section 1031 could lead to a recurring border security mission for DOD outside the scope of Title 10, Section 374. The Administration would support express statutory authority for DOD to use UAVs in support of civilian law enforcement, but would not support a potentially continuous mission requirement directing DOD employment of these UAV assets in any particular way.

Support for Critical White House Communications Activities: The Administration strongly urges Congress to support the Administration's request to amend section 912 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201) to enable the White House Communications Agency (WHCA) to provide critical audiovisual support services for the President and the White House. These services help the President and senior White House staff in communicating with the American people and the world in executing his official duties during times of peace and national crisis by audio and visual means. The proposed change will enable the WHCA to streamline its operations and manage its personnel and resources more effectively and efficiently and eliminate a cumbersome process for requesting and billing for support provided. Accordingly, the Administration has determined that it would be most effective to fund these activities directly through WHCA, and the FY 2006 Budget submission for WHCA reflects this decision. Without this amendment, the WHCA will lack authority to expend FY 2006 funds expressly requested for this purpose.

Small Business Innovation Research Programs: The Administration is concerned about the intent of section 814, which would require that DOD maintain lists of Small Business Innovation

Research (SBIR) programs that have completed the research and development phase of the program (Phase II) and have the potential for rapid transition to an openly competitive commercial phase (Phase III). We are concerned that the intent to establish lists of Phase II projects will lead to expectations that DOD will fund Phase III projects, which are outside the scope of the SBIR program.

Grades of the Judge Advocates General: The Administration opposes section 505, which would elevate the Judge Advocates General to 3-star grade. This provision would: (1) undermine the flexibility of the President to determine what positions of importance and responsibility merit grades above the major general or rear admiral (upper half); (2) add unnecessary and rank-heavy bureaucracy; and (3) create unique selection procedures for one class of 3-star officers by imposing selection board procedures rather than permitting the Secretary of Defense to use his discretion. The Judge Advocates General, as 2-star officers, already participate fully in the legal affairs of their respective Military Departments and the entire DOD and would enjoy no greater access to senior officials as a result of their elevation to 3-star status.

Legal Services in DOD: To protect individuals receiving military legal assistance, section 1044(e)(1) of title 10, United States Code, as contained in section 553 of the bill – which grants the right to practice law anywhere in the United States to judge advocates or civilian attorneys authorized to provide military legal assistance – should be amended to provide that a judge advocate or civilian attorney must be a "member of the bar of the highest court in at least one State or Territory or the District of Columbia." In addition, section 923 should be stricken in order to preserve the authority of the Secretary of the Air Force to determine the appropriate functions and duties of his subordinates who provide legal services consistent with applicable law.

Classified Programs: The Administration opposes section 1002, which would incorporate the classified annex into the bill. The Administration discourages the practice of enacting secret laws and encourages instead appropriate non-binding uses of classified annexes to committee reports and the joint statements of managers that accompany final legislation, and therefore recommends striking section 1002(a).

The Administration looks forward to working with the Congress to address other concerns, including constitutional ones, such as concern with sections 212(d)(3), 537(e)(3), 591(d)(3), 902(c)(3)(C), and 1042(c), which seek submission of legislative recommendations by Executive Branch officials. These sections should be modified to require submission only of such recommendations "as the President judges necessary and expedient," in order to be consistent with the President's constitutional authority to supervise the unitary Executive Branch and the Recommendations Clause of the Constitution. The Administration also will work with Congress to eliminate the unintended and potentially discriminatory effects of section 581, so as to ensure the eligibility of U.S. citizen children of non-citizen DOD employees living abroad to enroll in DOD schools.

Budget Estimates and Enforcement

This bill would affect direct spending and receipts. To sustain the economy's expansion, it is critical to exercise responsible restraint over Federal spending. The Budget Enforcement Act's pay-as-you-go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002. The President's FY 2006 Budget includes a proposal to extend the discretionary caps through 2010, a pay-as-you-go requirement for direct spending, and a new mechanism to control the expansion of long-term unfunded obligations. OMB's cost estimate of this bill is currently under development.

Subject: U.S. District Court ECF Quality Control Update

Good Morning,

Thank you for registering for the District of Colorado's Electronic Case Filing (ECF) system. As an ECF User you will be sent periodic e-mail updates from the court regarding ECF issues we consider important.

Attorneys and staff will receive courtesy Notices of Electronic Filing on criminal cases if they are registered for ECF. The NEF is not official notice from the court on criminal cases until the criminal implementation date, which will be in the late fall of 2005. A paper notice will continue to be sent on criminal documents.

The United States District Court for the District of Colorado began allowing electronic filing on civil documents on June 20, 2005. To date, the court has registered 4232 attorneys for electronic filing. Since our live date, 1135 attorneys have filed 3041 documents electronically. There has been 1 application by an attorney to file in paper. Listed below are some of the issues the court would like to bring to your attention that will help improve the quality of work being submitted:

New Cases

(1) If a new case has been submitted to the court and you have received an e-mail reply or voicemail from the court about a problem, it is CRITICAL you respond as quickly as possible. A delay in the respose means a delay in the filing of your new case.

(2) Attorneys are strongly encouraged to sign up for the court's credit card system. The credit card information is securely held by our financial department and is not available otherwise. Cases e-mailed to the court that do not have payment authorization within the e-mail will get filed with the date of the receipt of payment per D.C.COLO.LCivR 3.3(A). If the check is not received until the next day, an attorney may miss a deadline. You may get more information on credit card payment here: http://www.co.uscourts.gov/forms/credit.pdf

(3) The PDF's sent in a new case e-mail must comply with the size and legibility requirements of the ECF Procedures. If a PDF is over 2 mb's then the court will not be able to file it. The state court record in actions removed to this court must be broken out by document filed in the state court and must comply with the PDF size requirements. PDF versions of any proposed orders must also be submitted. A WordPerfect copy of the proposed order is preferred and should be submitted attached to the e-mail so the clerk's office can forward that to the judicial officer.

(4) If a new case e-mail has over 5 PDF's attached, please index the documents in the body of the e-mail. This will allow the clerk's office to more efficiently process your case.

Data Quality

Data Quality

(1) If an attorney is attempting the second filing of one document, either at the direction of the clerk's office or because the attorney has noticed the original document was not complete, the document should be named "Amended" by using the drop down box on the text entry screen. For example, Amended Motion for Summary Judgment. Attorneys do not need to amend a document to add a certificate of service. They may file the certificate as a separate filing.

(2) When selecting multiple parties or multiple motion reliefs hold down the control key and left click on the second choice. This will allow multiple choices to be completed in the system.

(3) Though there is an opportunity to add text when document, there is no requirement to do so. For example, if you are filing an Answer to Complaint the standard text will not need to be enhanced.

(4) Please choose the correct filing event. For example, an objection to the ruling of a magistrate judge under Rule 72 is an Appeal of Magistrate Judge Decision to District Court. A response, opposition, objection, etc... to a motion should only use the Response to Motion event. A Proposed Bill of Costs should use that event, not motion and not a proposed order. Attorneys may find a report that lists all choices at Reports/Civil Events List. No PACER charges will be incurred for this report. If you cannot find a good fit for the document you are filing, call the court's help desk. Do not guess!

(5) Many document being filed must be linked to the document they are referring to. Some examples are Notices of Appeal, Responses to Motions, Replies to Motions, and Motions to Amend/Modify/Correct.

(6) On Service of Process, a Rule 4 waiver of service should use the Waiver of Service Executed event. If served by publication, use the Service by Publication event. All other returns, affidavits of service, etc... should use the Summons Returned Executed and Summons Returned Executed as to USA events. If you have any questions as to how to reflect service, call the court's help desk.

(7) An attorney's password will be the one submitted to the court as part of the registration process. The court will not e-mail attorneys their password. When the initial login screen appears for ECF/PACER use your ECF login and password first. If the screen comes up a second time, enter your PACER login and password.

(8) Documents should be filed using the case numbering protocol described in recently revised D.C.COLO.LCivR 10.1. (e.g. 05-cv-00123-LTB-OES) Documents that do not use this case numbering protocol are in violation of the local rules.

(9) Attorneys who wish for their electronic notice to be turned off on a case, either because an order to withdraw has been signed or the party represented is no longer active on the case, should send an e-mail to the court's help desk requesting the termination of notice.

Please contact the court's ECF Help Desk toll free at 1-866-365-6381 or 303-335-2050 with any questions or concerns. You may also e-mail the court at cod_cmecf@cod.uscourts.gov

I have left in my out box with a note to Wendell. I would send these right away to Peter Keisler for review; another good contact in Civil Division re Rules is Elizabeth "Betsy" Shapiro, who attended the Standing Committee meeting in Boston in June. Note the 8/1/05 response date. This should not be particularly controversial.

Despite IRS audit, NAACP chairman criticizes Bush in speech opening the group's convention

DATELINE: MILWAUKEE

BODY:

MILWAUKEE - Appearing unfazed by a pending IRS audit spurred by his stinging criticism of the Bush administration, NAACP Chairman Julian Bond continued to assault the president's policies in a speech last night opening the civil rights organization's 96th annual convention.

Calling the Bush administration's approach to civil rights "deceptive," Bond suggested that the White House has "tried an aggressive campaign to seduce black clergy" to support the administration through its faith-based grant campaign.

"The president likes to talk the talk, but he doesn't walk the walk," Bond told a crowd of about 3,000 gathered at Milwaukee's Midwest Airlines Center to hear his introduction to the annual convention.

Bond said the administration "at best has neglected civil rights issues, and at worst has been aggressively hostile to them" - buttressing that remark with mention of a recent U.S. Commission on Civil Rights report that was critical of the administration.

Bond landed the Baltimore-based National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in hot water with the Internal Revenue Service after a speech last summer, in which he attacked President Bush on the Iraq war and for being the first sitting president since Herbert Hoover not to address the group.

Bush declined an invitation to this year's convention as well - a point Bond underscored early in his speech.

The IRS has said its investigation is limited to whether Bond stepped over the line into partisan politics in his critique of Bush, which could cost the NAACP its tax-exempt status. But the NAACP is continuing to fight the federal investigation, and Bond - unapologetic for his remarks - has denounced the audit as partisan bullying.

Bond also gave a much-anticipated introduction of NAACP President-elect Bruce S. Gordon, a retired Verizon executive who has made repairing relations with the Bush administration one of his top goals.

Bond, known for his fiery addresses, didn't level criticism at Bush alone.

Bond named and condemned eight U.S. senators who he said dodged an apology for the federal government's failure to pass anti-lynching laws as the Senate - on a voice vote rather than a roll call - passed a nonbinding resolution of apology last month.

Judicial nominees

Bond also criticized Democrats for not blocking Bush's judicial nominees. He called confirmed U.S. Court of Appeals Judge Janice Rogers Brown the "female Clarence Thomas."

Bond accused black conservatives and blamed foundations that finance conservative groups for rolling back gains for which civil rights leaders have fought.

"Having stolen our vocabulary, they also want to steal the just spoils of our righteous war," he said. "They've had a collection of black hustlers and hucksters on their payrolls for more than 20 years, promoting them as a new generation of black leaders."

Reiterating comments from his keynote convention address two years ago about Bush and his black supporters, Bond said, "Like ventriloquists' dummies, they speak in the puppet master's voice, but we can see his lips moving, and we can hear his money talk."

Court replacement

Bond also called for a replacement for retiring Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor who will hold civil rights as a priority.

The seat being vacated by O'Connor is emerging as a big issue at this week's convention. Among others to be addressed by the more than 8,000 attendees are voting rights, health, juvenile justice and education.

Bond's address wasn't the only one to focus on politics. Most notably, Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., a Wisconsin Republican, received raucous applause when he promised to lead federal lawmakers in extending provisions of the voting rights act that are to expire in 2007.

Civil rights

Bond ended his speech by encouraging people of all backgrounds to fight for today's civil rights issues, including economic justice.

"Anyone who shares our mission and values is welcome," he said. "Our values are American values. We believe in tolerance, inclusion, equality, celebrating the worth of every human being."

Portia Johnson, vice president of the NAACP branch in Duluth, Minn., said Bond's speech is always the highlight of the convention.

"I think it's great; it's energizing," she said. "It encourages us to go home and do the work that needs to be done. He tells it like it is and how it should be told."

Don't know if you have had any feedback from ODAG on this, but if this is going to happen time is of the essence, as Jim is effectively gone in less than 3 weeks. Me or Neil can approach Bill and/or Jeff if we want to tee this back up.

DENVER MAN SENTENCED FOR ROLE IN SCHEME TO ENCOURAGE FOREIGN NATIONALS TO OBTAIN FRAUDULENT STUDENT VISAS

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Gaylon Dahn, the former president of Education Management Services of Denver, Colorado, has been sentenced to 48 months in prison for his role in a scheme that encouraged foreign nationals to acquire fraudulent student visas, the Department of Justice and U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement announced today.

Dahn was sentenced this afternoon by the Honorable David A. Faber, Chief U.S. District Judge for the Southern District of West Virginia.

Dahn pleaded guilty on Jan. 6, 2005 to two counts of encouraging between 25 and 99 foreign students to reside in the United States, knowing that the presence of those students in the United States would be illegal. Dahn admitted that he took money from Middle Eastern students to register them at Mountain State University in Beckley, West Virginia. Dahn and unidentified associates then sold to the students school credits the students needed to maintain their F-1 student visas, even though they did little or no course work.

The criminal charges arose out of a contractual relationship between Dahn and Mountain State University which began in late 1999. Dahn, through his Denver business, Educational Management Services, recruited Middle Eastern students nationwide to enroll in correspondence courses at the West Virginia school. Although no school work was actually graded, Dahn hired instructors for the Mountain State University classes who were supposed to grade the correspondence students' assignments and then forward the final grades to Mountain State University. Dahn admitted that he took money from the foreign students and allowed the transfer of Mountain State credits to other universities, thereby allowing the students to remain in the United States fraudulently on student visas.

"Those who abuse our immigration laws for personal gain do so at the potential expense of our nation's security," said Acting Assistant Attorney General John C. Richter of the Criminal Division. "Rest assured that this Department will vigorously enforce our laws against those who facilitate the illegal entry of foreign nationals through fraud."

"Fraudulent documents can be provided to terrorists and other criminals, posing a major homeland security vulnerability," said John P. Clark, Homeland Security Deputy Assistant Secretary for Immigration and Customs Enforcement. "ICE will continue working to restore integrity to our nation's immigration system by identifying and shutting down these vulnerabilities."

The sentencing is the culmination of an investigation initiated in 2001 by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents into allegations that Dahn was involved in a scheme to illegally bring Chinese students to a school in Denver. ICE agents investigating the activities of Dahn in Denver developed information that Dahn was also illegally selling grades to students registered at the West Virginia school. Dahn was convicted in October 2003 by a federal jury in Denver on federal criminal charges arising from the investigation into Chinese students.

On a macro level, I think this makes a lot of sense. It's sound policy, and it may blunt some (but by no means all) of the criticism DOJ has been taking for its allegedly cavalier attitude toward the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection.

On a micro level, I would suggest the following changes:

1. Last sentence of the second paragraph: I would delete the phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memorandum and". I do not think it's necessary to concede that the Thompson Memorandum is unclear.

2. Third paragraph, second sentence: This should read "the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection," not "the attorney-client and work product privileges."

3. First two full paragraphs, page 2: These paragraphs are written as if federal prosecutors can determine beforehand whether a particular level of disclosure will be sufficient. In most cases, though, this will be an educated guess informed by experience and knowledge of the situation. I would acknowledge this uncertainty by using phrases like "prosecutors believe" when discussing whether, e.g., "alternatives to a waiver are [would be] insufficient to acquire timely and complete information."

4. Page 2, third full paragraph, last sentence: I would refer to "privileged or protected communications."

5. Last sentence, penultimate paragraph: I would substitute "inquiry" for "intrustion."

6. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would substitute "events" for "transactions," as there is no certainty that all relevant events will be transactions.

7. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would add "and compliance" to the end of this sentence to include improvements that do not necessarily implicate corporate governance issues.

RDM revision 4 Memorandum Regarding Waiver Requests.wpd

MEMORANDUM

To: ALL UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND DEPARTMENT COMPONENT HEADS

From: James B. Comey
Deputy Attorney General

Robert D. McCallum, Jr.
Associate Attorney General

Subject: Guidance for Federal Prosecutors Regarding Requests for Corporate Waiver of the Attorney-Client Privilege and Work Product Protection

On January 20, 2003, former Deputy Attorney General Larry D. Thompson issued a Memorandum to all United States Attorneys' Offices (USAOs) regarding Principles of Federal Prosecution of Business Organizations. This memorandum, commonly known as the Thompson Memorandum, found at USAM 9-162, remains the Department's policy on charging business organizations and includes factors to be considered in making charging decisions.

One of the nine factors the Thompson Memorandum sets forth in determining whether to charge a corporation or other business organization is "the corporation's timely and voluntary disclosure of wrongdoing and its willingness to cooperate in the investigation of its agents, including, if necessary, the waiver of corporate attorney-client and work product protection." Thompson Memorandum, Section II.B.4. The Thompson Memorandum elaborates on this factor by providing that a federal prosecutor may ensure the complete and truthful cooperation of a corporation by requesting, "in appropriate circumstances[,]" that the corporation waive the attorney-client privilege and attorney work-product protection, which the Memorandum recognizes also may be "critical in enabling the government to evaluate the completeness of a corporation's voluntary disclosure and cooperation." Id., Section VI.B. This memorandum provides further guidance to federal prosecutors regarding waiver requests.

In applying the factors set forth in the Thompson Memorandum, federal prosecutors have always considered and should continue to consider carefully whether a request to a business entity for a waiver of attorney-client privilege or attorney work-product protection is necessary to establish corporate cooperation in an investigation. While cooperation is an important factor in the Department's charging decision regarding a corporate target, the Thompson Memorandum recognizes that the attorney-client privilege and work product protections serve important, long-recognized public policies encouraging candid communications between counsel and client and promoting sound corporate governance. Accordingly, the Thompson memorandum acknowledges that a business organization's full cooperation does not always require a waiver, expressly stating that the Department "does not . . . consider waiver of a corporation's attorney-client and work product protection an absolute requirement, and prosecutors should consider the willingness of a corporation to waive such protection when necessary to provide timely and complete information as one factor in evaluating the corporation's cooperation." Id. (emphasis added).

Because the Thompson Memorandum limits requests of waivers to situations where they are believed to be necessary, federal prosecutors should first consider other available alternatives before seeking waivers. At the most basic level, a business organization may, for example, provide complete access to its employees, business records, organizational charts, compliance program, and any third-party witnesses over which it may have influence, such as customers, vendors, accountants, and former employees. In many cases, such action may be sufficient for the government to obtain timely and complete information concerning a suspected crime. In other instances involving complex business organizations or large volumes of evidence, obtaining timely and complete information may require the corporation to take additional steps, such as identifying for investigators specific witnesses and documents central to the suspected criminal conduct. A business organization could, without providing counsel's notes or reports, identify promptly and make available to investigators all of the witnesses and documents involved in its own internal investigation by corporate counsel and provide assurances that the witnesses will make full disclosure. If such actions would be adequate for federal investigators to determine timely the complete underlying facts, then the federal prosecutors should, consistent with the Thompson Memorandum, consider this option before requesting a waiver.

If the alternatives to a waiver are believed to be insufficient to acquire timely and complete information, federal prosecutors should seek approval from the United States Attorney, Branch Director, or a specifically designated supervisory attorney before requesting that attorney-client privilege or work-product protection be waived.

If approval for a waiver request is obtained, the Thompson Memorandum instructs that the "waiver should ordinarily be limited to the factual internal investigation and any contemporaneous advice given to the corporation concerning the conduct at issue." Id., Section VI.B, n.3. The Thompson Memorandum further provides that, "[e]xcept in unusual circumstances, prosecutors should not seek a waiver with respect to communications and work product related to advice concerning the government's criminal investigation." Id. The Thompson Memorandum, therefore, draws an important distinction between the underlying factual information and factual work product, on the one hand, and opinion work product or attorney-client communications, on the other hand. It also draws a significant distinction between legal advice rendered "contemporaneous[ly]" with "the conduct at issue" and "advice concerning the government's criminal investigation." Id. By drawing these distinctions, the Thompson Memorandum seeks to minimize, to the extent possible consistent with prosecutorial necessity, the intrusion into privileged or protected communications.

Consistent with the Thompson Memorandum, a waiver, when deemed necessary, should be limited in most cases to factual information gleaned by the corporation's own investigation, including, where appropriate, corporate counsel's interview notes and other factual findings, as opposed to privileged communications or counsel's opinion work product.

As the Thompson Memorandum outlines, a waiver request seeking privileged communications or opinion work product created contemporaneously with the underlying conduct under investigation may also be sometimes appropriate. Id. (discussing "contemporaneous advice"). The necessity of such information, however, should be evaluated independently from the necessity of factual findings, interview notes, and other fact work product. Frequently, inquiry into "contemporaneous advice" may not be necessary.

Finally, the Thompson Memorandum indicates that a waiver request for opinion work product or attorney-client communications concerning the government's criminal investigation itself may be warranted. The Memorandum instructs, however, that "prosecutors should not seek a waiver with respect" to such information except in "unusual circumstances." Id. Prosecutors should exercise similar care when evaluating the necessity of a waiver for opinion work product or attorney-client communications that were created after the events under investigation and involve self-evaluation activities, so that companies are not discouraged from candidly engaging in self-evaluation and assessing ways to improve corporate governance and compliance. Of course, there may be cases in which even information falling into these categories may be required. One example would be a case in which there is strong reason to believe that counsel's advice about the government's current investigation constitutes an obstruction of justice, though undoubtedly there will be others as well.

These look fine to me and I'm pleased to see OLP's support.

I think the addition of "prosecutors believe" a sound one.

The only change that gives me even a moment's pause is the deletion of phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memo" in the second paragraph. Our original reason for employing that formulation was to tie this memo as closely to the Thompson Memo as possible. I can appreciate, however, Brent's point of view: our formulation can actually be misconstrued as suggesting that the Thompson Memo isn't clear, something we plainly don't want to do, a "backfire" on our original intent.

As it is, we repeatedly say that this memo only seeks to provide "further guidance," not replace or diminish the Thompson Memo in any way. To stress the point further, and do so without the "backfire" risk Brent notes, perhaps we could say we are providing "further guidance . . . consistent with the Thompson Memo." So the last sentence of the second para would read: "This memorandum provides further guidance to federal prosecutors regarding waiver requests consistent with the Thompson Memorandum." A revised draft reflecting this alteration is attached for your reference. NMG

Comment 3 memorializes an element of prosecutorial discretion when deciding whether alternatives to a waiver may not be sufficient. In other words, the OLP comment would have the memo state that waiver may be requested when "prosecutors believe" that other would have the memo state that waiver may be requested when "prosecutors believe" that other alternatives won't be sufficient, as opposed to just saying that waiver may be requested when other alternatives are not sufficient. We may want to kick this around some.

Subject: RE: Draft Memorandum Regarding Waiver Requests

On a macro level, I think this makes a lot of sense. It's sound policy, and it may blunt some (but by no means all) of the criticism DOJ has been taking for its allegedly cavalier attitude toward the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection.

On a micro level, I would suggest the following changes:

1. Last sentence of the second paragraph: I would delete the phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memorandum and". I do not think it's necessary to concede that the Thompson Memorandum is unclear.

2. Third paragraph, second sentence: This should read "the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection," not "the attorney-client and work product privileges."

3. First two full paragraphs, page 2: These paragraphs are written as if federal prosecutors can determine beforehand whether a particular level of disclosure will be sufficient. In most cases, though, this will be an educated guess informed by experience and knowledge of the situation. I would acknowledge this uncertainty by using phrases like "prosecutors believe" when discussing whether, e.g., "alternatives to a waiver are [would be] insufficient to acquire timely and complete information."

4. Page 2, third full paragraph, last sentence: I would refer to "privileged or protected communications."

5. Last sentence, penultimate paragraph: I would substitute "inquiry" for "intrustion."

6. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would substitute "events" for "transactions," as there is no certainty that all relevant events will be transactions.

7. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would add "and compliance" to the end of this sentence to include improvements that do not necessarily implicate corporate governance issues.

Neil,

Until Nick told me yesterday that you were now with the Department, I had no idea that you were on board, so please let me extend to you a hearty welcome to DOJ. He passed along your "hello," which was much appreciated. I hope that all has been going well, and you have had a chance to settle in. I know that there is a lot going on, but I also know from my past experience that the folks in the Associate's Office are top notch. Tracy, in particular, has been great to work with and I have every confidence she will do great things at DHS. Should you have the opportunity to be up here at OJP, please feel free to stop by and say hello. In the alternative, and this may not be much of one given what is no doubt a ruthless schedule, we could grab a quick bite of lunch as well at your convenience. I could fill you in on the latest gyrations at Prep, or, as many would prefer, not talk about Prep at all and just catch up in general. Regardless, I wish you the only the best of luck and continued success.

These look fine to me and I'm pleased to see OLP's support.

I think the addition of "prosecutors believe" a sound one.

The only change that gives me even a moment's pause is the deletion of phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memo" in the second paragraph. Our original reason for employing that formulation was to tie this memo as closely to the Thompson Memo as possible. I can appreciate, however, Brent's point of view: our formulation can actually be misconstrued as suggesting that the Thompson Memo isn't clear, something we plainly don't want to do, a "backfire" on our original intent.

As it is, we repeatedly say that this memo only seeks to provide "further guidance," not replace or diminish the Thompson Memo in any way. To stress the point further, and do so without the "backfire" risk Brent notes, perhaps we could say we are providing "further guidance . . . consistent with the Thompson Memo." So the last sentence of the second para would read: "This memorandum provides further guidance to federal prosecutors regarding waiver requests consistent with the Thompson Memorandum." A revised draft reflecting this alteration is attached for your reference. NMG

OLP comments on this. I have incorporated them into this version in red. Comments are described in email below as well. I don't have any objections to these, but there is one comment, Comment 3 below, worth discussing. Comment 3 memorializes an element of prosecutorial discretion when deciding whether alternatives to a waiver may not be sufficient. In other words, the OLP comment would have the memo state that waiver may be requested when "prosecutors believe" that other alternatives won't be sufficient, as opposed to just saying that waiver may be requested when other alternatives are not sufficient. We may want to kick this around some.

On a macro level, I think this makes a lot of sense. It's sound policy, and it may blunt some (but by no means all) of the criticism DOJ has been taking for its allegedly cavalier attitude toward the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection.

On a micro level, I would suggest the following changes:

1. Last sentence of the second paragraph: I would delete the phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memorandum and". I do not think it's necessary to concede that the Thompson Memorandum is unclear.

2. Third paragraph, second sentence: This should read "the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection," not "the attorney-client and work product privileges."

3. First two full paragraphs, page 2: These paragraphs are written as if federal prosecutors can determine beforehand whether a particular level of disclosure will be sufficient. In most cases, though, this will be an educated guess informed by experience and knowledge of the situation. I would acknowledge this uncertainty by using phrases like "prosecutors believe" when discussing whether, e.g., "alternatives to a waiver are [would be] insufficient to acquire timely and complete information."

4. Page 2, third full paragraph, last sentence: I would refer to "privileged or protected communications."

5. Last sentence, penultimate paragraph: I would substitute "inquiry" for "intrustion."

6. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would substitute "events" for "transactions," as there is no certainty that all relevant events will be transactions.

7. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would add "and compliance" to the end of this sentence to include improvements that do not necessarily implicate corporate governance issues.

Just wanted to follow up with you on this. As contemplated, it would be unprecedented from a process standpoint to make a presentationt directly to the SMC. Nevertheless, Robert is on the board and is well aware of where your coming from as a result of the briefing and briefing materials on Project Follow-Through. Likewise, OAG is aware as well. One other venue that may be useful would be to brief your ODAG POC, Wendell Taylor, to the extent that he could lay out the issue for the DAG who is also on the board. I have sent Wendell copies of the materials and can try and facilitate a meeting if you want to go that route. Let me know and I can call him, or you may want to reach out to him directly.

Luis:

Our executive officer advised me late yesterday afternoon that JMD told us that its recommendation to the SMC regarding our 2007 budget initiative would be to recommend a ceiling of 4 percent above our FY 2006 current services level. As we understand it, we had asked for a 6 percent increase, but JMD's recommendation may result in halving the increase for the program initiative we proposed. (In other words, again if I understand correctly, much of the 4% increase JMD is recommending would just allow us to tread water, allowing us to keep up with salary, rent and expense increases, and would not go to augmenting our attorney staff levels; in order to meet a cap of 4%, we would have to limit our personnel increase to half of what we requested).

We are also advised that the next step will be the review/approval by the SMC of all Departmental requests, which is scheduled to be completed before the end of the month. Can you advise as to the timing and process of the SMC's deliberations?

Thanks very much for your help.

Neil,

Until Nick told me yesterday that you were now with the Department, I had no idea that you were on board, so please let me extend to you a hearty welcome to DOJ. He passed along your "hello," which was much appreciated. I hope that all has been going well, and you have had a chance to settle in. I know that there is a lot going on, but I also know from my past experience that the folks in the Associate's Office are top notch. Tracy, in particular, has been great to work with and I have every confidence she will do great things at DHS. Should you have the opportunity to be up here at OJP, please feel free to stop by and say hello. In the alternative, and this may not be much of one given what is no doubt a ruthless schedule, we could grab a quick bite of lunch as well at your convenience. I could fill you in on the latest gyrations at Prep, or, as many would prefer, not talk about Prep at all and just catch up in general. Regardless, I wish you the only the best of luck and continued success.

Our executive officer advised me late yesterday afternoon that JMD told us that its recommendation to the SMC regarding our 2007 budget initiative would be to recommend a ceiling of 4 percent above our FY 2006 current services level. As we understand it, we had asked for a 6 percent increase, but JMD's recommendation may result in halving the increase for the program initiative we proposed. (In other words, again if I understand correctly, much of the 4% increase JMD is recommending would just allow us to tread water, allowing us to keep up with salary, rent and expense increases, and would not go to augmenting our attorney staff levels; in order to meet a cap of 4%, we would have to limit our personnel increase to half of what we requested).

We are also advised that the next step will be the review/approval by the SMC of all Departmental requests, which is scheduled to be completed before the end of the month. Can you advise as to the timing and process of the SMC's deliberations?

Thanks very much for your help.

North Dakota's Devils Lake Water Diversion Project

Status: The Office of the Attorney General has requested updated talking points on the Devils Lake matter. We recommend the following talking points.

Talking Points:

- The U.S. is not a party to any litigation relating to the project nor has any federal agency referred this matter to DOJ for action.

- DOJ is, however, continuing to participate in the ongoing process being carried out by the Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ).

- The CEQ process has involved (i) lengthy consultations between the relevant federal agencies (State, DOJ, EPA, OMB, Interior, and the Corps of Engineers); (ii) separate technical presentations made to the federal agencies by North Dakota, Minnesota, and Canada/Manitoba; (iii) review by CEQ of all technical aspects of the project; and (iv) consideration of whether there are potential measures to address Canada's concerns.

- We understand CEQ recently also sent a team of biologists to North Dakota to inspect and conduct a technical review the project.

- We also understand CEQ is working cooperatively with Manitoba, Canada, Minnesota, North Dakota, the Corps and Interior on a "Rapid Assessment" to collect additional water samples and carry out additional laboratory testing for potential biota or invasive species. The assessment is expected to begin next week and take several weeks to complete.

- CEQ is also continuing to engage in senior level communications with North Dakota, Minnesota, Canada, Manitoba, and our U.S. State Dept. A principals meeting is tentatively scheduled for early next week in Washington to discuss the status of the project.

- We will continue to monitor this matter and to remain in close consultation with CEQ and the State Dept. Legal Advisor's Office.

Background: Devils Lake is in northeastern North Dakota and is a closed basin with no natural outlet.[1] Due to unusually high rainfall, from 1993 through 2001 the lake level rose and there was considerable economic damage from flooding. To address future flooding, the North Dakota Congressional delegation sought to have a diversion built to connect the lake to the Sheyenne River which flows into the Red River and across the border into Canada and eventually empties into Lake Winnipeg. Canada, however, has always been concerned that any diversion project would violate the Boundary Waters Treaty (the "Treaty") between the U.S. and Canada because it would allow waters to flow into Canada which could include pollutants and invasive species. Canada is particularly concerned about impacts of invasive species to fisheries.

[1] Native Americans also refer to the lake as "Spirit Lake".

Several years ago, the Army Corps of Engineers ("Corps") proposed a federal diversion project and, following a lengthy federal interagency review process, then-Secretary of State Powell made a determination that the proposed federal project would not violate the Treaty. Ultimately, however, the Corps shelved the federal project because the Corps determined there was no longer an emergency and because costs were $180 million of which approximately $65 million would have been required to be contributed by North Dakota. Nevertheless, in March 2004 North Dakota elected to proceed with its own "emergency" $28 million diversion project that would substitute for the federal project. North Dakota did a more limited environmental assessment than would have been done for the federal project and did not install filters and other controls to prevent biota transfers that were proposed for the federal project. North Dakota believes there are already existing hydrological connections between the two lakes and that there will be no new introduction of invasive species.

Canada contends there is a risk of irreparable harm if project goes forward without further review and has requested that the project be referred for expedited review (9-12 months) to the International Joint Commission ("IJC"), which is a panel established under the Treaty to address transborder environmental issues. There is unanimous bipartisan opposition by the North Dakota governor and Congressional delegation, however, to such a referral, and State Department has not taken a position on the request for an IJC reference.

This matter has received attention at the highest levels of the Canadian government and received widespread press. During the past few months CEQ has undertaken to address Canada's concerns and has (1) convened meetings and consulted extensively with all the relevant federal agencies; (2) invited North Dakota, Minnesota, and Canada to provide separate presentations on the state outlet to the federal agencies; (3) dispatched a team of biologists to North Dakota to carry out a technical review of the project; ;(4) undertaken to coordinate a "Rapid Assessment" study to be funded by the U.S. and performed over the next few weeks to provide supplemental sampling and testing for potential invasive species; (5) communicated regularly with the North Dakota and Minnesota governors, and senior Manitoba and Canadian officials; (6) engaged technical personnel both within the U.S. government and third party contractors to analyze the feasibility and costs associated with potential mitigation measures, including a potential sand filter and/or ozone technology to prevent invasive species, if any, from passing through the outlet; and (7) requested assistance from DOJ on legal issues. Within DOJ, ENRD, OLC and Civil Division (Foreign Litigation) have been actively assisting CEQ and the State Dept.'s Legal Advisor's office in considering potential claims and/or litigation defenses that could be raised in U.S. or Canadian courts.

To date neither CEQ nor any of the federal agencies have advised us of specific objections to the state outlet project. While Canada has in the past requested that the U.S. consider filing an action seeking to enjoin North Dakota from completing the project on grounds that there is a risk of irreparable harm from the introduction of invasive species and the potential for North Dakota's actions to result in a Treaty violation, the State Department Legal Advisor's office has informed us that filing such a lawsuit would involve taking positions potentially inconsistent with State Department's prior interpretations of the Treaty, and State Department has not requested that we take such action. Nor has any other federal agency referred the matter to DOJ for action.

No litigation is currently pending relating to the project. While Manitoba had challenged a health department permit issued for the project, that permit was affirmed by the North Dakota Supreme Court in a ruling issued June 2, 2005. In June 2004, Manitoba and various citizens/environmental groups had also sent a 60-day notice of intent to sue to the Corps alleging the Corps should have required North Dakota to obtain a Section 404 Clean Water Act wetlands permit(s), but the Corps reconsidered and reaffirmed its position that no such permit(s) were required and the potential plaintiffs have not filed an action. Last week, there were also press reports regarding consideration of a potential citizens' group suit in Canadian federal court based on alleged Treaty violations but we are not aware such a suit has been filed, nor whether such a lawsuit would name the U.S. as a party. ENRD, OLC and the Civil Division (Foreign Litigation) believe there are significant obstacles to such a suit, whether it were to be filed against North Dakota or the U.S., but we are continuing to monitor closely for the filing of that or any other lawsuits in either country.

The project is nearly complete and press reports assert the outlet could be ready to be opened in early August. CEQ has tentatively scheduled a Principals meeting for next Monday or Tuesday to discuss the status of the project, and expects the North Dakota and Minnesota governors, senior officials from Manitoba/Canada, and State Dept. to attend. Given the ongoing CEQ process and the absence of any referral from any agency to DOJ to take action, we continue to believe it would not be appropriate for DOJ to take any action with respect to this matter at this time.

North Dakota's Devils Lake Water Diversion Project

Status: The Office of the Attorney General has requested updated talking points on the Devils Lake matter. We recommend the following talking points.

Talking Points:

- The U.S. is not a party to any litigation relating to the project nor has any federal agency referred this matter to DOJ for action.

- DOJ is, however, continuing to participate in the ongoing process being carried out by the Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ).

- The CEQ process has involved (i) lengthy consultations between the relevant federal agencies (State, DOJ, EPA, OMB, Interior, and the Corps of Engineers); (ii) separate technical presentations made to the federal agencies by North Dakota, Minnesota, and Canada/Manitoba; (iii) review by CEQ of all technical aspects of the project; and (iv) consideration of whether there are potential measures to address Canada's concerns.

- We understand CEQ recently also sent a team of biologists to North Dakota to inspect and conduct a technical review the project.

- We also understand CEQ is working cooperatively with Manitoba, Canada, Minnesota, North Dakota, the Corps and Interior on a "Rapid Assessment" to collect additional water samples and carry out additional laboratory testing for potential biota or invasive species. The assessment is expected to begin next week and take several weeks to complete.

- CEQ is also continuing to engage in senior level communications with North Dakota, Minnesota, Canada, Manitoba, and our U.S. State Dept. A principals meeting is tentatively scheduled for early next week in Washington to discuss the status of the project.

- We will continue to monitor this matter and to remain in close consultation with CEQ and the State Dept. Legal Advisor's Office.

Background: Devils Lake is in northeastern North Dakota and is a closed basin with no natural outlet.[1/] Due to unusually high rainfall, from 1993 through 2001 the lake level rose and there was considerable economic damage from flooding. To address future flooding, the North Dakota Congressional delegation sought to have a diversion built to connect the lake to the Sheyenne River which flows into the Red River and across the border into Canada and eventually empties into Lake Winnipeg. Canada, however, has always been concerned that any diversion project would violate the Boundary Waters Treaty (the "Treaty") between the U.S. and Canada because it would allow waters to flow into Canada which could include pollutants and invasive species. Canada is particularly concerned about impacts of invasive species to fisheries.

[1/] Native Americans also refer to the lake as "Spirit Lake".

Several years ago, the Army Corps of Engineers ("Corps") proposed a federal diversion project and, following a lengthy federal interagency review process, then-Secretary of State Powell made a determination that the proposed federal project would not violate the Treaty. Ultimately, however, the Corps shelved the federal project because the Corps determined there was no longer an emergency and because costs were $180 million of which approximately $65 million would have been required to be contributed by North Dakota. Nevertheless, in March 2004 North Dakota elected to proceed with its own "emergency" $28 million diversion project that would substitute for the federal project. North Dakota did a more limited environmental assessment than would have been done for the federal project and did not install filters and other controls to prevent biota transfers that were proposed for the federal project. North Dakota believes there are already existing hydrological connections between the two lakes and that there will be no new introduction of invasive species.

Canada contends there is a risk of irreparable harm if project goes forward without further review and has requested that the project be referred for expedited review (9-12 months) to the International Joint Commission ("IJC"), which is a panel established under the Treaty to address transborder environmental issues. There is unanimous bipartisan opposition by the North Dakota governor and Congressional delegation, however, to such a referral, and State Department has not taken a position on the request for an IJC reference.

This matter has received attention at the highest levels of the Canadian government and received widespread press. During the past few months CEQ has undertaken to address Canada's concerns and has (1) convened meetings and consulted extensively with all the relevant federal agencies; (2) invited North Dakota, Minnesota, and Canada to provide separate presentations on the state outlet to the federal agencies; (3) dispatched a team of biologists to North Dakota to carry out a technical review of the project; ;(4) undertaken to coordinate a "Rapid Assessment" study to be funded by the U.S. and performed over the next few weeks to provide supplemental sampling and testing for potential invasive species; (5) communicated regularly with the North Dakota and Minnesota governors, and senior Manitoba and Canadian officials; (6) engaged technical personnel both within the U.S. government and third party contractors to analyze the feasibility and costs associated with potential mitigation measures, including a potential sand filter and/or ozone technology to prevent invasive species, if any, from passing through the outlet; and (7) requested assistance from DOJ on legal issues. Within DOJ, ENRD, OLC and Civil Division (Foreign Litigation) have been actively assisting CEQ and the State Dept.'s Legal Advisor's office in considering potential claims and/or litigation defenses that could be raised in U.S. or Canadian courts.

To date neither CEQ nor any of the federal agencies have advised us of specific objections to the state outlet project. While Canada has in the past requested that the U.S. consider filing an action seeking to enjoin North Dakota from completing the project on grounds that there is a risk of irreparable harm from the introduction of invasive species and the potential for North Dakota's actions to result in a Treaty violation, the State Department Legal Advisor's office has informed us that filing such a lawsuit would involve taking positions potentially inconsistent with State Department's prior interpretations of the Treaty, and State Department has not requested that we take such action. Nor has any other federal agency referred the matter to DOJ for action.

No litigation is currently pending relating to the project. While Manitoba had challenged

a health department permit issued for the project, that permit was affirmed by the North Dakota Supreme Court in a ruling issued June 2, 2005. In June 2004, Manitoba and various citizens/environmental groups had also sent a 60-day notice of intent to sue to the Corps alleging the Corps should have required North Dakota to obtain a Section 404 Clean Water Act wetlands permit(s), but the Corps reconsidered and reaffirmed its position that no such permit(s) were required and the potential plaintiffs have not filed an action. Last week, there were also press reports regarding consideration of a potential citizens' group suit in Canadian federal court based on alleged Treaty violations but we are not aware such a suit has been filed, nor whether such a lawsuit would name the U.S. as a party. ENRD, OLC and the Civil Division (Foreign Litigation) believe there are significant obstacles to such a suit, whether it were to be filed against North Dakota or the U.S., but we are continuing to monitor closely for the filing of that or any other lawsuits in either country.

The project is nearly complete and press reports assert the outlet could be ready to be opened in early August. CEQ has tentatively scheduled a Principals meeting for next Monday or Tuesday to discuss the status of the project, and expects the North Dakota and Minnesota governors, senior officials from Manitoba/Canada, and State Dept. to attend. Given the ongoing CEQ process and the absence of any referral from any agency to DOJ to take action, we continue to believe it would not be appropriate for DOJ to take any action with respect to this matter at this time.

IRS QUESTIONS CHURCH ABOUT PRO-KERRY RALLY.

CODE: Section 501(c)(3) -- Charities; Section 7611 -- Church Tax Inquiry Restrictions

ABSTRACT: In a letter dated February 15, the IRS notified Friendship Missionary Baptist Church of its intent to open a church tax inquiry under section 7611 to determine whether an October 2004 rally on behalf of then Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John F. Kerry, D-Mass., jeopardized the church's tax-exempt status.

CERTIFIED MAIL
Dear Sir or Madam:

The Internal Revenue Service is responsible for administering the Internal Revenue laws of the United States, including those that apply to organizations exempt from federal income tax. To carry out that responsibility, section 7602 of the Internal Revenue Code (IRC) authorizes the Service to determine the correctness of any tax return, to make a return when none has been filed, and to determine the tax liability of any person or organization. However, IRC section 7611 imposes restrictions on the Service in conducting tax inquiries and examinations of churches and conventions or associations of churches.

In passing IRC section 7611, Congress intended to ensure that the Internal Revenue Service carry out its obligation to resolve questions concerning the tax liability, if any, and the tax-exempt status of churches and organizations claiming to be churches, with due regard for both the rights of church organizations and the responsibility of the Service to enforce the Internal Revenue laws.

Because a reasonable belief exists that Friendship Missionary Baptist Church has engaged in political activities that could jeopardize its tax-exempt status as a church described in section 501(c)(3) and exempt under section 501(a), this letter is notice of the beginning of a church tax inquiry described in IRC section 7611(a). We are sending it because we believe it is necessary to resolve questions concerning your tax-exempt status as a church described in section 501(c)(3) and in section 170(b)(1)(A)(i) of the Code.

Our concerns are based on a news article that appeared in Tax Analysts on Wednesday, October 13, 2004, which reported Friendship Missionary Baptist Church hosting a rally on behalf of Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry during an official church service, featuring the Reverends Jesse Jackson and Al Sharpton. The article reported the following:

> During the service, the church's pastor, the Rev. Gaston E. Smith, introduced Kerry as "the next president of the United States" and told the crowd, "To bring our country out of despair, despondency and disgust, God has sent John Kerry." Sharpton also praised Kerry and attacked President George W. Bush. He criticized the Florida recount of 2000, promising that voters in the state would deliver a "big payback" to the president on Nov. 2.

All section 501(c)(3) organizations, including churches, their integrated auxiliaries, conventions or associations of churches, are prohibited from participating in, or intervening in (including the publication or distribution of statements), any political campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for public office. This is an absolute prohibition, violation of which results in denial or revocation of exempt status and the imposition of certain excise taxes, if applicable.

The prohibition against political campaign activity does not prevent candidates from being invited to speak at an event of an organization described in section 501(c)(3). If a candidate is invited to speak in his or her capacity as a candidate, then other candidates running for the same office must also be invited to speak and there should be no indication of support for, or opposition to, any candidate by the organization. Also, the prohibition does not prevent an organization's officials from being involved in a political campaign, so long as those officials do not in any way utilize the organization's financial resources, facilities, or personnel and clearly indicate that the actions taken or the statements made are those of the individuals and not of the organization.

A list of specific questions about your operations/activities is attached. Please answer each question completely. If your response resolves our concerns about your exempt status and tax liability, it will not be necessary to pursue this matter further.

Attached as required by section 7611(a)(3)(B)(ii), is a statement of your administrative and constitutional rights during a tax inquiry and examination. Your rights include the right to a conference with Service representatives to discuss our concerns before the Service begins an examination. The Service will formally offer you the opportunity for a conference in the notice of examination, if a notice of examination is sent to you.

Please reply within 15 days of the date of this letter to:

Internal Revenue Service TEGE Division
Attn: Sharon Schaffer
1001 Liberty Avenue, Suite 1325
Pittsburgh, PA 15222

If we do not hear from you within that time, we may issue a Notice of Church Examination letter, which section 7611 requires to be Issued before we initiate an examination of your records or religious activities.
If you have any questions, please contact the person whose name and telephone number are shown above.

o No political fundraising occurs.

If so, please explain in detail the policy.

19. When a political candidate is invited to speak at Friendship Missionary Baptist Church in the capacity as a non-candidate, does the church have a policy to ensure that:

o The individual speaks only in a non-candidate capacity.

o Neither the individual nor any representative of the church makes any mention of his or her candidacy or the election, and o No campaign activity occurs in connection with the candidate's attendance.

If so, please describe the policy in detail.

20. All organizations granted exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code are expressly prohibited from engaging in any political campaign activity. This is an absolute prohibition, violation of which could result in revocation of exempt status and the imposition of certain excise taxes. Please provide your rationale for participating or hosting the events described in items 1 through 13 above, if applicable.

21. What is the church policy regarding participation in partisan political activities? If a written policy, please provide the text of that policy and indicate the church policy document where it is contained.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE AND CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

The First Amendment of the Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The first clause is referred to as the Establishment Clause, the second is the Free Exercise Clause. The Establishment Clause prohibits government sponsorship of religion. Central to this prohibition are the concepts of government neutrality and the separation between church and state. The Supreme Court has held that the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment is an absolute prohibition against the regulation of religious beliefs. The First Amendment provides substantial protection for lawful conduct grounded on religious beliefs. However, the government may limit religiously motivated conduct when the limitation is essential to accomplish an overriding governmental interest.

Section 7611 of the Internal Revenue Code provides the following protections to organizations claiming to be churches or conventions or associations of churches:

(1) The IRS may begin a church tax inquiry only if the Director, Exempt Organizations (EO) Examinations reasonably believes, on the basis of facts and circumstances recorded in writing, that an organization claiming to be a church or convention or association of churches may not qualify for exemption, may be carrying on an unrelated trade or business (within the meaning of section 513 of the Code), may otherwise be engaged in taxable activities or may have entered into an excess benefit transaction IRC 4958 with a disqualified person.

(2) If the Service begins a tax inquiry, the IRS is required to provide written notice at the beginning of the inquiry. The Notice of Church Tax Inquiry must contain an explanation of the concerns that gave rise to the inquiry and the general subject matter of the inquiry. It must also contain an explanation of the provisions of the Code that authorize the inquiry and a general explanation of applicable administrative and constitutional provisions with respect to the inquiry.

(3) If the IRS wishes to examine a church's records or religious activities, the Director, EO Examinations must personally approve the examination and must provide an additional written notice (Notice of Church Examination) to the church at least 15 calendar days prior to the examination. At the same time the Service gives notice to the church, the Director, EO Examinations must notify the appropriate IRS Counsel of the proposed examination. The Division Counsel is then allowed 15 days to file a non-binding advisory opinion about the examination. The church's Notice of Church Examination is required to include the following: a copy of the Notice of Church Tax Inquiry previously provided; a description of the church records and activities which the IRS wishes to examine; a copy of all documents collected or prepared by the IRS for use in the examination that are required to be disclosed under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. 552) as supplemented by section 6103 of the Code; and an offer of a conference with the IRS to discuss the concerns which gave rise to the inquiry and the general subject matter of the inquiry prior to the examination.

The Service may send the Notice of Church Examination to the church no less than 15 days after the Notice of Church Tax Inquiry. However, the IRS must generally mail the Notice of Church Examination, within 90 days after the Notice of Church Tax Inquiry or the IRS is required to end the inquiry without change to the church's tax status.

(4) Failure of the IRS to substantially comply with the above requirements may result in a stay of summons enforcement proceedings to gain access to church records until the requirements are satisfied.

(5) The IRS is generally required to complete any church inquiry or examination no later than two years after the date on which the Notice of Church Examination was mailed to the church. The two-year period may be extended by mutual agreement between the church and the IRS. It is also suspended during certain judicial proceedings and during any period in excess of 20 days but not in excess of six months, during which a church or its agents fail to comply with any reasonable IRS request for church records or other information. However, in the case of a church tax inquiry in which there is no Notice of Church Examination, the IRS is generally required to complete the inquiry within 90 days after the date on which the Notice of Church Tax Inquiry was mailed to the church.

(6) The IRS is limited initially to an examination of church records relevant to the church's tax-exempt status for the three most recently completed tax years preceding the date of the Notice of Church Examination. If the church is not exempt for any of these three years, the IRS may examine relevant records for the six completed tax years immediately preceding the Notice of Church Examination. The IRS may examine Church records of a year earlier than the third or sixth completed taxable years if material to a determination of tax-exempt status during the three or six-year period. For examinations relating to unrelated business taxable income, when no return is filed, the IRS may assess tax for the six most recently completed taxable years preceding the date of the Notice of Church Examination. The IRS may examine Church records of a year earlier than the sixth year if material to a determination of unrelated business income tax liability during the six-year period. For examinations involving issues other than determination of exempt status or unrelated business income tax liability, there is no limit on the taxable periods that may be examined if no return has been filed. If a church has filed a tax return, the normal rules for determining tax liability or assessing tax apply.

(7) IRS Counsel must approve, in writing, an adverse determination concerning the tax-exempt status of an organization claiming to be a church, an adverse determination concerning the right of an organization claiming to be a church to receive tax deductible contributions, or the issuance of a notice of tax deficiency to a church or disqualified person

(8) Organizations claiming to be churches are entitled to bring a declaratory judgement action under section 7428 once the IRS issues a revenue agent's final report proposing to revoke or deny the church's tax exempt status.

(9) An inquiry or examination begun within five years of the date of the Notice of Church Examination (or if no Notice of Church Examination is sent, a Notice of Church Tax Inquiry), must be approved by the Director, EO Examinations and the IRS Assistant Commissioner for Tax Exempt and Governmental Entities. This approval is not required if the second examination does not involve the same or similar issues as the preceding inquiry or examination or if the first inquiry or examination resulted in a change to the organization's exempt status, an assessment of unrelated business income tax or other tax, or a recommendation for a substantive change in the church's operations, including accounting practices.

Neil -

When we met, I mentioned that I had recently asked the FBI to quantify for me the number of 56C (election crime) cases they have opened since 1999. We started the Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative in the fall of 2002. The numbers follow and show, I think, the positive influence we have had:

FY1999 - 7 cases
FY2000 - 9 cases
FY2001 – 8 cases
FY2002 - 8 cases
FY2003 – 27 cases
FY2004 – 36 cases
FY2005 to date – 54 cases

Thought you might be interested in this.

These look fine to me and I'm pleased to see OLP's support.

I think the addition of "prosecutors believe" a sound one.

The only change that gives me even a moment's pause is the deletion of phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memo" in the second paragraph. Our original reason for employing that formulation was to tie this memo as closely to the Thompson Memo as possible. I can appreciate, however, Brent's point of view: our formulation can actually be misconstrued as suggesting that the Thompson Memo isn't clear, something we plainly don't want to do, a "backfire" on our original intent.

As it is, we repeatedly say that this memo only seeks to provide "further guidance," not replace or diminish the Thompson Memo in any way. To stress the point further, and do so without the "backfire" risk Brent notes, perhaps we could say we are providing "further guidance . . . consistent with the Thompson Memo." So the last sentence of the second para would read: "This memorandum provides further guidance to federal prosecutors regarding waiver requests consistent with the Thompson Memorandum." A revised draft reflecting this alteration is attached for your reference. NMG

OLP comments on this. I have incorporated them into this version in red. Comments are described in email below as well. I don't have any objections to these, but there is one comment, Comment 3 below, worth discussing. Comment 3 memorializes an element of prosecutorial discretion when deciding whether alternatives to a waiver may not be sufficient. In other words, the OLP comment would have the memo state that waiver may be requested when "prosecutors believe" that other alternatives won't be sufficient, as opposed to just saying that waiver may be requested when other alternatives are not sufficient. We may want to kick this around some.

On a macro level, I think this makes a lot of sense. It's sound policy, and it may blunt some (but by no means all) of the criticism DOJ has been taking for its allegedly cavalier attitude toward the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection.

On a micro level, I would suggest the following changes:

1. Last sentence of the second paragraph: I would delete the phrase "clarifies the Thompson Memorandum and". I do not think it's necessary to concede that the Thompson Memorandum is unclear.

2. Third paragraph, second sentence: This should read "the attorney-client privilege and the work product protection," not "the attorney-client and work product privileges."

3. First two full paragraphs, page 2: These paragraphs are written as if federal prosecutors can determine beforehand whether a particular level of disclosure will be sufficient. In most cases, though, this will be an educated guess informed by experience and knowledge of the situation. I would acknowledge this uncertainty by using phrases like "prosecutors believe" when discussing whether, e.g., "alternatives to a waiver are [would be] insufficient to acquire timely and complete information."

4. Page 2, third full paragraph, last sentence: I would refer to "privileged or protected communications."

5. Last sentence, penultimate paragraph: I would substitute "inquiry" for "intrustion."

6. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would substitute "events" for "transactions," as there is no certainty that all relevant events will be transactions.

7. Last paragraph, sentence beginning with "Prosecutors": I would add "and compliance" to the end of this sentence to include improvements that do not necessarily implicate corporate governance issues.

Liane,

I sent a request to NW3C for information in response to Tracy's request and they referred me to their web site. I looked over it and it does have a lot of information. http://summit.nw3c.org/

Here are a few things answers from your e-mail:

ATTENDEES: are usually Internet and Financial fraud investigators. The also get some prosecutors and administors. Thiis is an opportunity for both public and private sector fraud-prevention professionals to share knowledge, experiences, and expertise.

of ATTENDEES: usually have over 200 attendees. There were 750 total for 3 summits last year. The one in Minnesota is the second of three. The first was in Tampa.

SPEAKERS: Economic Crime Summit features objective, dynamic speakers who are enthusiastic about sharing knowledge with their peers. The event hosts speakers who are investigators, prosecutors, industry experts, researchers, practitioners, and authors.

SUBJECT MATTER: will included the latest techniques for investigating and prosecuting economic crime, including Identity Theft, Internet-Facilitated Fraud and Elder Fraud.

Let me know if you'd like anything else.

When we met, I mentioned that I had recently asked the FBI to quantify for me the number of 56C (election crime) cases they have opened since 1999. We started the Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative in the fall of 2002. The numbers follow and show, I think, the positive influence we have had:

FY1999 - 7 cases
FY2000 - 9 cases
FY2001 – 8 cases
FY2002 - 8 cases
FY2003 – 27 cases
FY2004 – 36 cases
FY2005 to date – 54 cases

Neil,

JMD forwarded me a copy of the attached letter from the Executive Director, Office of Economic Adjustment, Office of the Secretary of Defense, to the AG asking for support for a new Economic Adjustment Committee related to this round of base closures. (When opening it, please give it a few seconds to "warm up" -- had to do a little out-of-the-ordinary conversion.)

Upon examination of the letter and its attachments, it occurs to us that the matters that would be addressed by the EAC Advisory Group fall more into the Associate's bailiwick than the DAG's. While JMD's Management Planning Staff agrees to provide the working-level representative, the policy-level Advisory Group member is likely more appropriate coming from OASG. It seems that to the extent the EAC's activities have an impact on DOJ, they would be in areas related to litigation or other such matters, e.g., providing advice on whether proposed economic adjustment activities or environmental remediation proposals present litigation risks.

What are your views?

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
OFFICE OF ECONOMIC ADJUSTMENT
400 ARMY NAVY DRIVE, SUITE 200
ARLINGTON, VA 22202-4704

July 14, 2005

The Honorable Alberto R. Gonzales
Attorney General

Dear Attorney General Gonzales:

On May 12, 2005, President George W. Bush signed an Amendment to Executive Order 12788 (Enclosure), directing the Department of Defense to design and establish a Defense Economic Adjustment Program (DEAP) through the President's Economic Adjustment Committee (EAC) to assist communities, businesses, and/or workers adversely affected by major Defense base closures, realignments, and Defense contract-related adjustments. The amended Executive Order: designates the Secretary of Defense, or the Secretary's designee, as the permanent chair of the EAC; designates the Secretaries of Labor and Commerce to be co-vice chairs; and establishes regulatory matters, to the extent they impact local economic recovery, to be within their purview.

As one of 22 Federal Departments and Agencies comprising the EAC, the Department of Justice has specific programs of technical and financial assistance that may assist these affected areas. Accordingly, by August 1, 2005, we ask you to:

1. Designate an EAC Advisory Group member to represent you personally in these matters. Advisory Group members are generally policy officials at the Assistant Secretary or Deputy Assistant Secretary level who can speak for their Department or Agency. You should anticipate a meeting of the EAC Advisory Group to be scheduled shortly after the BRAC Commission presents its recommendations to the President this September.

2. Designate Working Group member(s) to represent the applicable programs of your Department. Working Group members are senior career or non-career program officials who will form the core interagency network for program information exchange, resolution of cross-cutting issues and day-to-day coordination of defense economic adjustment efforts. The first scheduled meeting of the EAC Working Group is to be held on August 16, 2005 at 10:00am in the Horizon Room at the Ronald Reagan Building / International Trade Center, 1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C.

As Director of the Office of Economic Adjustment, I also serve as the Executive Director for the EAC. On behalf of the Department of Defense, I want to express the Department's appreciation for the significant contributions to date from your Department and look forward to working with you to address the impacts of the current round of base closures.

For further information regarding the EAC, I may be reached by telephone at [redacted] or by email at [redacted]@wso.whs.mil, or you may contact [redacted] by telephone at [redacted] or by email at [redacted]@wso.whs.mil.

Thank you for your attention to this request. I look forward to your support and participation in this very important effort.

Sincerely,

[redacted]

Defense Economic Adjustment Program

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and the laws of the United States of America, including 10 U.S.C. 2391 and the Defense Economic Adjustment, Diversification, Conversion, and Stabilization Act of 1990, enacted as Division D, section 4001 et seq., of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991, Public Law 101-510, and to provide coordinated Federal economic adjustment assistance necessitated by changes in Department of Defense activities, it is hereby ordered as follows:

(d) Identify and strengthen existing agency mechanisms to coordinate employment opportunities for displaced agency personnel;

(f) Assure timely consultation and cooperation with Federal, State, regional, metropolitan, and community officials concerning Defense-related impacts on Defense-affected communities' problems;

(g) Assure coordinated interagency and intergovernmental adjustment assistance concerning Defense impact problems;

(h) Prepare, facilitate, and implement cost-effective strategies and action plans to coordinate interagency and intergovernmental economic adjustment efforts;

(i) Encourage effective Federal, State, regional, metropolitan, and community cooperation and concerted involvement of public interest groups and private sector organizations in Defense economic adjustment activities;

(j) Serve as a clearinghouse to exchange information among Federal, State, regional, metropolitan, and community officials involved in the resolution of community economic adjustment problems. Such information may include, for example, previous studies, technical information, and sources of public and private financing;

(k) Assist in the diversification of local economies to lessen dependence on Defense activities;

(l) Encourage and facilitate private sector interim use of lands and buildings to generate jobs as military activities diminish;

(m) Develop ways to streamline property disposal procedures to enable Defense-impacted communities to acquire base property to generate jobs as military activities diminish; and

(n) Encourage resolution of regulatory issues that impede encroachment prevention and local economic adjustment efforts.

Sec. 4. Economic Adjustment Committee.

(2) Afford priority consideration to requests from Defense-affected communities for Federal technical assistance, financial resources, excess or surplus property, or other requirements, that are part of a comprehensive plan used by the Committee.

Sec. 6. Judicial Review. This order shall not be interpreted to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, its agents, or any person.

Sec. 7. Construction. (a) Nothing in this order shall be construed as subjecting any function vested by law in, or assigned pursuant to law to, any agency or head thereof to the authority of any other agency or officer or as abrogating or restricting any such function in any manner.

(b) This order shall be effective immediately and shall supersede Executive Order No 12049.

What I know abouat the EAC is within the four corners of the document I sent your way. The Economic Adjustment Office is not new, though, nor is the EAC -- a variation of each has been around for at least 20 years and it appears DOJ has had a seat at the table. I just don't know how to run down which office has represented the Department during the last rounds of the process. You can take a look at the DoD Directive that addresses the process at http://www.dtic.mil/whs/directives/corres/pdf/d30301_112800/d30301p.pdf

Neil,

JMD forwarded me a copy of the attached letter from the Executive Director, Office of Economic Adjustment, Office of the Secretary of Defense, to the AG asking for support for a new Economic Adjustment Committee related to this round of base closures. (When opening it, please give it a few seconds to "warm up" -- had to do a little out-of-the-ordinary conversion.)

Upon examination of the letter and its attachments, it occurs to us that the matters that would be addressed by the EAC Advisory Group fall more into the Associate's bailiwick than the DAG's. While JMD's Management Planning Staff agrees to provide the working-level representative, the policy-level Advisory Group member is likely more appropriate coming from OASG. It seems that to the extent the EAC's activities have an impact on DOJ, they would be in areas related to litigation or other such matters, e.g., providing advice on whether proposed economic adjustment activities or environmental remediation proposals present litigation risks.

Mac's requested that we take this on, and that sounds sensible to me. I'm not sure it requires your personal involvement (they're ok with a Depty Assistant Secty), but it might make sense to have someone in this office involved given that issues may cut across divisions (esp Civ and ENRD). While JMD's Management Planning Staff agrees to provide the working-level representative, the policy-level Advisory Group member is likely more appropriate coming from OASG. It seems that to the extent the EAC's activities have an impact on DOJ, they would be in areas related to litigation or other such matters, e.g., providing advice on whether proposed economic adjustment activities or environmental remediation proposals present litigation risks.

What are your views?

OFFICE OF ECONOMIC ADJUSTMENT

ARLINGTON, VA 22202-4704

July 14, 2005

The Honorable Alberto R. Gonzales
Attorney General

Dear Attorney General Gonzales:

On May 12, 2005, President George W. Bush signed an Amendment to Executive Order 12788 (Enclosure), directing the Department of Defense to design and establish a Defense Economic Adjustment Program (DEAP) through the President's Economic Adjustment Committee (EAC) to assist communities, businesses, and/or workers adversely affected by major Defense base closures, realignments, and Defense contract-related adjustments. The amended Executive Order: designates the Secretary of Defense, or the Secretary's designee, as the permanent chair of the EAC; designates the Secretaries of Labor and Commerce to be co-vice chairs; and establishes regulatory matters, to the extent they impact local economic recovery, to be within their purview.

As one of 22 Federal Departments and Agencies comprising the EAC, the Department of Justice has specific programs of technical and financial assistance that may assist these affected areas. Accordingly, by August 1, 2005, we ask you to:

1. Designate an EAC Advisory Group member to represent you personally in these matters. Advisory Group members are generally policy officials at the Assistant Secretary or Deputy Assistant Secretary level who can speak for their Department or Agency. You should anticipate a meeting of the EAC Advisory Group to be scheduled shortly after the BRAC Commission presents its recommendations to the President this September.

2. Designate Working Group member(s) to represent the applicable programs of your Department. Working Group members are senior career or non-career program officials who will form the core interagency network for program information exchange, resolution of cross-cutting issues and day-to-day coordination of defense economic adjustment efforts. The first scheduled meeting of the EAC Working Group is to be held on August 16, 2005 at 10:00am in the Horizon Room at the Ronald Reagan Building / International Trade Center, 1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C.

As Director of the Office of Economic Adjustment, I also serve as the Executive Director for the EAC. On behalf of the Department of Defense, I want to express the Department's appreciation for the significant contributions to date from your Department and look forward to working with you to address the impacts of the current round of base closures.

For further information regarding the EAC, I may be reached by telephone at [redacted] or by email at [redacted]@wso.whs.mil, or you may contact [redacted] at OEA, by telephone at [redacted] or by email at [redacted]@wso.whs.mil.

Thank you for your attention to this request. I look forward to your support and participation in this very important effort.

Sincerely,

[redacted]

Defense Economic Adjustment Program

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and the laws of the United States of America, including 10 U.S.C. 2391 and the Defense Economic Adjustment, Diversification, Conversion, and Stabilization Act of 1990, enacted as Division D, section 4001 et seq., of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991, Public Law 101-510, and to provide coordinated Federal economic adjustment assistance necessitated by changes in Department of Defense activities, it is hereby ordered as follows:

(j) Serve as a clearinghouse to exchange information among Federal, State, regional, metropolitan, and community officials involved in the resolution of community economic adjustment problems. Such information may include, for example, previous studies, technical information, and sources of public and private financing;

(k) Assist in the diversification of local economies to lessen dependence on Defense activities;

(l) Encourage and facilitate private sector interim use of lands and buildings to generate jobs as military activities diminish;

(n) Encourage resolution of regulatory issues that impede encroachment prevention and local economic adjustment efforts.

Sec. 4. Economic Adjustment Committee.

Sec. 6. Judicial Review. This order shall not be interpreted to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, its agents, or any person.

Sec. 7. Construction. (a) Nothing in this order shall be construed as subjecting any function vested by law in, or assigned pursuant to law to, any agency or head thereof to the authority of any other agency or officer or as abrogating or restricting any such function in any manner.

(b) This order shall be effective immediately and shall supersede Executive Order No 12049.

Neil,

JMD forwarded me a copy of the attached letter from the Executive Director, Office of Economic Adjustment, Office of the Secretary of Defense, to the AG asking for support for a new Economic Adjustment Committee related to this round of base closures. Courtney--
Neil--

Below, for your review and comments, please find the following discussion drafts: (1) a new recommendation paragraph (1.C.) for the AG memo; and (2) revised NIJ 2005 Requirements. Please let me know if you have any questions. Thanks, Rafe

1. AG Recommendation 1.C.:

We recommend that NIJ be directed to prepare an audit plan within 45 days, to aid in ensuring that - pending completion of the new replacement standard and while the NIJ interim requirements are in effect - body armor models deemed compliant with such interim requirements, in fact maintain their ballistic performance during their respective declared warranty periods.

2. NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements for Bullet-Resistant Body Armor

Effective Date

These requirements will become effective on _____.

Purpose and Scope

These requirements modify and supplement National Institute of Justice (NIJ) Standard 0101.04 (Ballistic Resistance of Personal Body Armor). They are promulgated on an interim basis to address recent NIJ research findings that indicate that certain body armor models previously found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic resistance during their service life.

NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor after the effective date hereof select body armor models that comply with these interim requirements. A list of models that comply with these requirements will be made available on or before such effective date at: http://www.justnet.org. NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ (prior to the effective date hereof) to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04).

NIJ's efforts to ensure the safety of public safety officers are ongoing. NIJ intends to promulgate future modifications to these interim requirements as appropriate in light of its continued research and comments from the law enforcement and manufacturing communities. Comments and suggestions should be directed to the Director, Office of Science and Technology, National Institute of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice, 810 Seventh Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20531.

Requirements

Body armor models submitted to the NIJ Voluntary Compliance Testing Program on or after the effective date hereof shall be subject to the following requirements:

1. Satisfaction of all of the requirements of NIJ Standard 0101.04 (including Addendum B), except as such requirements may be modified hereby;

2. Either-

(a) Submission of evidence (e.g., design drawings and specifications, lists of materials of construction of each component of the model, research, ballistic testing, descriptions of performance characteristics of critical components or materials, etc.) that reasonably demonstrates, to the satisfaction of NIJ, that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; or

(b) Submission of a written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(1) the model contains no material listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice in effect at the time of submission;

(2) lists the materials of construction of each component of the model; and

(3) the manufacturer-

(A) reasonably believes (based on objective criteria or -evidence) that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; and

(B) agrees to provide NIJ, promptly on demand, the evidence described in ¶ 2(a);

3. Labeling of armor shall be in accordance with NIJ Standard 0101.04, except that any references to such standard thereon shall instead be to the "NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements"; and

4. Written acknowledgment by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(a) Recent NIJ research findings indicate that certain body armor models that were found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04)

ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic resistance during their service life;

(b) NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor select body armor models that comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements;

(c) NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04); and

(d) Any list or database of compliant body armor models published or sponsored by NIJ will include only models that are found by NIJ to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements.

Transition Provision

Any body armor model submitted by a manufacturer that was found by NIJ to be compliant with NIJ Standard 0101.04 prior to the effective date hereof shall be deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements (pursuant to an NIJ notice of such compliance) upon submission by such manufacturer to NIJ of-

1. A written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that labeling of armor manufactured after receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance shall comply with Requirements ¶ 3;

2. The written acknowledgment described in Requirements ¶ 4; and

3. Either-

(a) The evidence described in Requirements ¶ 2(a); or

(b) The written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(1) & (2), except that such body armor model shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) unless the written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(3) is submitted to NIJ within 180 days of receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance.

Loss of Compliance Status

Any body armor model found or deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements that contains any material subsequently listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) until satisfactory evidence is submitted as described in Requirements ¶ 2(a).

I attended the initial CMTS meeting with Robert and, from that experience, agree with Mac. This group is interested in commerce issues, leaving security issues largely (if not entirely) to a separate process.

It's really hard to say whether this is national security or not at this point. There is a completely separate process -- in which ODAG, CRM, and FBI are participants -- that is drafting a National Maritime Security Strategy, along with implementing plans related to port security, maritime operational threat response, and related activities. The MTS would appear to be related more to the infrastructure for and safe/legal/efficient operation of the maritime transportation system. Needless to say, one hopes that all these activities will be coordinated.....

Neil - As I understand it, this really concerns a natural security issue better served by the CrimDiv but if OASG feels otherwise, ENRD will staff it. Certainly feel free to send my name forward. (At some point, I'm going to have to put together a list of all the various committees I supposedly sit on.). Peter and Jim will help me out.

While others may have better ideas, my initial reaction would be that Kelly would be a very sensible candidate, understanding that she may wish to delegate the responsibility as seems sensible to her. Any other thoughts?

<< File: Attorney General_Final.pdf >> As you will see, it asks for the AG to designate someone to serve as agency rep on the MTS Coordinating Body at "assistant secretary level or above." (If you feel we really need to appoint someone at this level, perhaps we can do it in name only, and have that rep delegate any meeting attendance responsibilities to one of us underlings!) Pls advise on how you wish us to handle. This letter will no doubt go into Exec Sec and take its time coming to us all, but wanted to give you a heads up.

At this point in the process, I'd rather not add new data. Also, what do you mean by these numbers being "given informally"? I'm not sure what that means, but with release time scheduled for tomorrow morning, I'd seriously doubt that we should add data to the release until and unless it's been approved through proper channels (ie, not through me...)

Make sense?

They are in there in another form in that we report DOJ active matters at 125 which is pretty close to the FBI numbers if you add them up (the FBI numbers reflect the opening of a case as opposed to current status). For that reason I let it be. Plus these numbers were given informally and I decided to defer on battling the bureaucracy for release approval but maybe we should rethink. Bryan - Want to get these FBI numbers into the release somehow? They do show the upswing nicely.

Neil -

When we met, I mentioned that I had recently asked the FBI to quantify for me the number of 56C (election crime) cases they have opened since 1999. We started the Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative in the fall of 2002. The numbers follow and show, I think, the positive influence we have had:

FY1999 - 7 cases
FY2000 - 9 cases
FY2001 – 8 cases
FY2002 - 8 cases
FY2003 – 27 cases
FY2004 – 36 cases
FY2005 to date – 54 cases

Courtney--

Below, for your review and comments, please find the following discussion drafts: (1) a new recommendation paragraph (1.C.) for the AG memo; and (2) revised NIJ 2005 Requirements. Please let me know if you have any questions. Thanks, Rafe

1. AG Recommendation 1.C.:

We recommend that NIJ be directed to prepare an audit plan within 45 days, to aid in ensuring that - pending completion of the new replacement standard and while the NIJ interim requirements are in effect - body armor models deemed compliant with such interim requirements, in fact maintain their ballistic performance during their respective declared warranty periods.

2. NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements for Bullet-Resistant Body Armor

Effective Date

These requirements will become effective on _____.

Purpose and Scope

These requirements modify and supplement National Institute of Justice (NIJ) Standard 0101.04 (Ballistic Resistance of Personal Body Armor). They are promulgated on an interim basis to address recent NIJ research findings that indicate that certain body armor models previously found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic resistance during their service life.

NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor after the effective date hereof select body armor models that comply with these interim requirements. A list of models that comply with these requirements will be made available on or before such effective date at: http://www.justnet.org. NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ (prior to the effective date hereof) to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04).

NIJ's efforts to ensure the safety of public safety officers are ongoing. NIJ intends to promulgate future modifications to these interim requirements as appropriate in light of its continued research and comments from the law enforcement and manufacturing communities. Comments and suggestions should be directed to the Director, Office of Science and Technology, National Institute of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice, 810 Seventh Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20531.

Requirements

Body armor models submitted to the NIJ Voluntary Compliance Testing Program on or after the effective date hereof shall be subject to the following requirements:

1. Satisfaction of all of the requirements of NIJ Standard 0101.04 (including Addendum B), except as such requirements may be modified hereby;

2. Either-

(a) Submission of evidence (e.g., design drawings and specifications, lists of materials of construction of each component of the model, research, ballistic testing, descriptions of performance characteristics of critical components or materials, etc.) that reasonably demonstrates, to the satisfaction of NIJ, that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; or

(b) Submission of a written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(1) the model contains no material listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice in effect at the time of submission;

(2) lists the materials of construction of each component of the model; and

(3) the manufacturer-

(A) reasonably believes (based on objective criteria or -evidence) that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; and

(B) agrees to provide NIJ, promptly on demand, the evidence described in ¶ 2(a);

3. Labeling of armor shall be in accordance with NIJ Standard 0101.04, except that any references to such standard thereon shall instead be to the "NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements"; and

4. Written acknowledgment by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(a) Recent NIJ research findings indicate that certain body armor models that were found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic resistance during their service life;

(b) NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor select body armor models that comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements;

(c) NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04); and

(d) Any list or database of compliant body armor models published or sponsored by NIJ will include only models that are found by NIJ to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements.

Transition Provision

Any body armor model submitted by a manufacturer that was found by NIJ to be compliant with NIJ Standard 0101.04 prior to the effective date hereof shall be deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements (pursuant to an NIJ notice of such compliance) upon submission by such manufacturer to NIJ of-

1. A written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that labeling of armor manufactured after receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance shall comply with Requirements ¶ 3;

2. The written acknowledgment described in Requirements ¶ 4; and

3. Either-

(a) The evidence described in Requirements ¶ 2(a); or

(b) The written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(1) & (2), except that such body armor model shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) unless the written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(3) is submitted to NIJ within 180 days of receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance.

Loss of Compliance Status

Any body armor model found or deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements that contains any material subsequently listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) until satisfactory evidence is submitted as described in Requirements ¶ 2(a).

Rachel,

I was speaking to Courtney earlier and she mentioned that OLP has a useful occasional component meeting focused on policy initiatives that someone from OASG might productively attend. Now, let me assure you that I am not looking for another meeting to attend, or another meeting for a colleague of mine to attend. But, IF (and only if) you think it would be helpful to have someone from here participate, could you let me know? Please don't hesitate to let me know that if you think it isn't worthwhile.

They are promulgated on an interim basis to address recent NIJ research findings that indicate that certain body armor models previously found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic resistance during their service life.

NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor after the effective date hereof select body armor models that comply with these interim requirements. A list of models that comply with these requirements will be made available on or before such effective date at: http://www.justnet.org. NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ (prior to the effective date hereof) to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04).

NIJ's efforts to ensure the safety of public safety officers are ongoing. NIJ intends to promulgate future modifications to these interim requirements as appropriate in light of its continued research and comments from the law enforcement and manufacturing communities. Comments and suggestions should be directed to the Director, Office of Science and Technology, National Institute of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice, 810 Seventh Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20531.

Requirements

Body armor models submitted to the NIJ Voluntary Compliance Testing Program on or after the effective date hereof shall be subject to the following requirements:

1. Satisfaction of all of the requirements of NIJ Standard 0101.04 (including Addendum B), except as such requirements may be modified hereby;

2. Either-

(a) Submission of evidence (e.g., design drawings and specifications, lists of materials of construction of each component of the model, research, ballistic testing, descriptions of performance characteristics of critical components or materials, etc.) that reasonably demonstrates, to the satisfaction of NIJ, that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; or

(b) Submission of a written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(1) the model contains no material listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice in effect at the time of submission;

(2) lists the materials of construction of each component of the model; and

(3) the manufacturer-

(A) reasonably believes (based on objective criteria or -evidence) that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; and

(B) agrees to provide NIJ, promptly on demand, the evidence described in ¶ 2 (a);

3. Labeling of armor shall be in accordance with NIJ Standard 0101.04, except that any references to such standard thereon shall instead be to the "NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements"; and

4. Written acknowledgment by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(a) Recent NIJ research findings indicate that certain body armor models that were found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic resistance during their service life;

(b) NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor select body armor models that comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements;

(c) NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04); and

(d) Any list or database of compliant body armor models published or sponsored by NIJ will include only models that are found by NIJ to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements.

Transition Provision

Any body armor model submitted by a manufacturer that was found by NIJ to be compliant with NIJ Standard 0101.04 prior to the effective date hereof shall be deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements (pursuant to an NIJ notice of such compliance) upon submission by such manufacturer to NIJ of-

1. A written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that labeling of armor manufactured after receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance shall comply with Requirements ¶ 3;

2. The written acknowledgment described in Requirements ¶ 4; and

3. Either-

(a) The evidence described in Requirements ¶ 2(a); or

(b) The written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(1) & (2), except that such body armor model shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) unless the written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(3) is submitted to NIJ within 180 days of receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance.

Loss of Compliance Status

Any body armor model found or deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements that contains any material subsequently listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) until satisfactory evidence is submitted as described in Requirements ¶ 2(a).

Subject to Tracy and Courtney's comments, I have no further comment. As I told Regina this morning, I think we are very much headed in the right direction and I'm really grateful to you and all of the team at OJP for the hard work and resulting work product.

1. AG Memo Recommendation 1.C.:

We recommend that NIJ be directed to prepare an audit plan within 45 days, to aid in ensuring that - pending completion of the new replacement standard and while the NIJ interim requirements are in effect - body armor models found or deemed compliant with such interim requirements, in fact maintain their ballistic performance during their respective declared warranty periods.

2. NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements for Bullet-Resistant Body Armor

Effective Date

These requirements will become effective on _____.

Purpose and Scope

These requirements modify and supplement National Institute of Justice (NIJ) Standard 0101.04 (Ballistic Resistance of Personal Body Armor). They are promulgated on an interim basis to address recent NIJ research findings that indicate that certain body armor models previously found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic performance during their service life. In keeping with their interim character, these requirements rely (in significant part) for their enforcement mechanism on specific certifications from manufacturers of body armor. To help ensure the overall soundness of this mechanism and the accuracy of the certifications, NIJ intends to implement an appropriate plan for random or other audits.

NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor after the effective date hereof select body armor models that comply with these interim requirements. A list of models that comply with these requirements will be made available on or before such effective date at: <http://www.justnet.org>. NIJ will no longer publish lists of models found by NIJ (prior to the effective date hereof) to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04).

NIJ's efforts to ensure the safety of public safety officers are ongoing; NIJ intends to promulgate future modifications to these interim requirements as appropriate in light of its continued research and comments from the law enforcement and manufacturing communities. Also, further to these efforts, from time to time, NIJ may issue Body Armor Standard Advisory Notices, among other things to identify to the public body armor materials that appear to create a risk of death or serious injury as a result of degraded ballistic performance. Comments and suggestions should be directed to the Director, Office of Science and Technology, National Institute of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice, 810 Seventh Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20531.

Requirements

Body armor models submitted to the NIJ Voluntary Compliance Testing Program on or after the effective date hereof shall be subject to the following requirements:

1. Satisfaction of all of the requirements of NIJ Standard 0101.04 (including Addendum B), except as such requirements may be modified hereby;

2. Either-

(b) Submission of a written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(1) the model contains no material listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice in effect at the time of submission;

(2) lists the materials of construction of each component of the model; and

(3) the manufacturer-

(A) reasonably believes (based on objective criteria or -evidence) that the model will maintain ballistic performance (consistent with its originally declared threat level) over its declared warranty period; and

(B) agrees to provide NIJ, promptly on demand, the evidence described in ¶ 2(a);

3. Labeling of armor shall be in accordance with NIJ Standard 0101.04, except that any references to such standard thereon shall instead be to the "NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements"; and

4. Written acknowledgment by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that-

(a) Recent NIJ research findings indicate that certain body armor models that were found by NIJ to be compliant with earlier NIJ requirements for ballistic resistance of new body armor (including NIJ Standard 0101.04) may not adequately maintain ballistic performance during their service life;

(b) NIJ recommends that those who purchase new bullet-resistant body armor select body armor models that comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements;

(d) Any list or database of compliant body armor models published or sponsored by NIJ will include only models that are found by NIJ to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements.

Transition Provision

Any body armor model submitted by a manufacturer that was found by NIJ to be compliant with NIJ Standard 0101.04 prior to the effective date hereof shall be deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements (pursuant to an NIJ notice of such compliance) upon submission by such manufacturer to NIJ of-

1. A written certification by an appropriate officer of the manufacturer, in such form as may be prescribed by NIJ from time to time, that labeling of armor manufactured after receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance shall comply with Requirements ¶ 3;
2. The written acknowledgment described in Requirements ¶ 4; and
3. Either-
    (a) The evidence described in Requirements ¶ 2(a); or
    (b) The written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(1) & (2), except that such body armor model shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) unless the written certification described in Requirements ¶ 2(b)(3) is submitted to NIJ within 180 days of receipt from NIJ of the notice of compliance.

Loss of Compliance Status pursuant to Advisory Notice

Any body armor model found or deemed to comply with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements that contains any material subsequently listed in an NIJ Body Armor Standard Advisory Notice shall be deemed no longer to be in such compliance (and removed from any NIJ list of models that comply with the Requirements) until after evidence is submitted as described in Requirements ¶ 2(a).

Labeling after Loss of Compliance Status

Armor manufactured during a period in which the armor model does not comply (or is deemed not to comply) with the NIJ 2005 Interim Requirements shall not be labeled as compliant with them.

Reasonable Demonstration of Maintenance of Ballistic Performance
NIJ will determine the sufficiency of any submission described in Requirements ¶ 2(a).

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE TO HOLD BALLOT ACCESS AND VOTING INTEGRITY SYMPOSIUM

Conference to Focus on Election Fraud, Voting Rights

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Department of Justice announced today that the 4th annual Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Symposium will be held in Washington, D.C. on Oct. 4 and 5, 2005. The annual training conference is part of the Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative, which was established in October 2002 to spearhead the Department's expanded efforts to address election fraud and voting rights violations.

The initiative is headed by the Assistant Attorneys General of the Criminal and Civil Rights Divisions. The goal of the initiative is to protect the integrity of the election process by increasing the Department's efforts and effectiveness in combating election fraud by: publicizing election fraud convictions to deter similar crimes in the future; ensuring nationwide compliance with the federal laws protecting voting rights; and assuring the public that the Department will combat election fraud and voting rights abuses vigorously, fairly and effectively.

"The power to vote is one of the greatest opportunities we share as Americans," said Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales. "The very fiber of our Nation rests on the zealous protection of certain inalienable rights for every citizen, and we cannot grow complacent in the safeguarding of those rights. The Department of Justice will continue to aggressively protect each person's right to vote - and just as important - preserve the value of that vote from those who would corrupt the election process."

The Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative includes:

Annual Training. Prosecutors serving as District Election Officers in the 94 U.S. Attorneys' Offices are required to attend annual training conferences on fighting election fraud and voting rights abuses. Previous conferences were held in October 2002, September 2003 and July 2004. These conferences are sponsored by the Voting Section of the Civil Rights Division and the Public Integrity Section of the Criminal Division, and feature presentations by Civil Rights officials and senior prosecutors from the Public Integrity Section and the U.S. Attorneys' Offices. As a result of these conferences, there is a nationwide increase in Department expertise relating to the prosecution of election crimes and the enforcement of voting rights.

State Coordination. Each U.S. Attorney is required to meet with the state Attorney General, Secretary of State, or other state official responsible for handling election matters in his or her district. These meetings underscore the Department's commitments to: prosecute election fraud and to protect voting rights; coordinate investigation of criminal matters involving joint federal and state jurisdiction; help ensure state compliance with federal voting rights laws; and avoid interference with the administration of elections, a function left primarily to the states by the Constitution. In addition, several U.S. Attorneys have established task forces with their state counterparts to increase their effectiveness in addressing election fraud and in deterring both discrimination at the polls and electoral corruption.

Prioritization of Election Fraud Enforcement. The initiative requires that all components of the Department place a high priority on the investigation and prosecution of election fraud. The Criminal Division's Public Integrity Section oversees the national effort to ensure that election fraud investigations and charges have sufficient factual and legal predication, that they will not interfere with an ongoing election, and that a national standard is maintained in this critical area of criminal law enforcement. As a result of the initiative, nationwide enforcement of election fraud matters has increased dramatically.

More than 120 election fraud investigations are currently pending throughout the country, all but four of which were opened after the initiative began in October 2002. In addition, over 60 election fraud matters have been closed after investigation since the initiative began. Finally, since the start of the initiative, 89 individuals have been charged with election fraud offenses.
To date, 52 of these individuals have been convicted.

CRIMINAL DIVISION

- In Illinois, four precinct officials pleaded guilty to vote buying in the 2004 general election and five more people are awaiting trial on these charges. Also, an election official pleaded guilty to forging ballots in the 2002 general election.

- In Kentucky, seven persons were convicted of vote buying in the 1998 primary in Knott County, two at trial and five through guilty pleas. Another three persons recently were indicted for vote buying for a candidate for the state senate in the 2000 primary in Knott County and neighboring counties. Finally, four persons were convicted by juries of vote buying and related offenses in the 2002 general election in Pike County, including the county district judge. Another person also pleaded guilty to these charges.

- In New Hampshire, two political party officials and another person were indicted on charges relating to a scheme to prevent voters from getting to the polls in the November 2002 general election by jamming phone lines of local organizations. Two of the defendants pleaded guilty to telephone harassment charges and the third is awaiting trial for conspiring to violate the right to vote for federal officials and other related offenses.

- In Kansas and Missouri, three Kansas residents have been convicted, one in Kansas and two in Missouri, of voting in both Kansas and Missouri in the 2002 and 2000 elections.

- In Florida, 14 non-citizens, including a candidate for the state legislature, pleaded guilty or were convicted at trial of voting-related offenses in 1998 or later elections.

- In Louisiana, a candidate for St. Martinsville City Council pleaded guilty to conspiring to submit false voter registration information in 2002.

- In North Carolina, five persons were convicted of vote buying in the 2002 general election, three by a jury and two through guilty pleas.

- In West Virginia, four individuals, including the sheriff, the former chief of police, and the treasurer of a candidate for state representative, pleaded guilty to vote buying and related offenses in Logan County in the 2004 or 2002 elections. Also, five people have been indicted and are awaiting trial on charges of vote buying in Lincoln County in 2004 and earlier elections.

- In Wisconsin, four individuals have been charged with multiple voting, and six people have been charged with providing false information regarding their felon status, in the 2004 general elections.

CIVIL RIGHTS DIVISION

- Election Coverage. On Election Day in November 2004, the Division sent out 251 employees from the Division and 822 federal observers from the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to monitor elections in 86 political subdivisions in 25 states. The number of monitors and observers used for that election was more than were used in all of 2000. During all of 2004, the Division sent a total of 1,996 individuals (533 department personnel; 1,463 OPM observers) to monitor 163 elections in 105 political subdivisions in 29 states.

- Sections 203, 208 and 4(f)(4) of the Voting Rights Act. The Civil Rights Division has undertaken the most vigorous enforcement of section 203 in the history of the Act. Since 2001, the Division has filed as many section 203 cases as in the previous 23 years, and the pace is accelerating, with more cases filed and successfully resolved since May 2004 than in the previous 11 years. These latter lawsuits alone provided comprehensive minority language programs to more citizens than all previous Section 203 and 4(f)(4) cases combined. During this period the Civil Rights Division filed the first-ever cases to protect Filipino voters (San Diego, California) and Vietnamese voters (San Diego) and in addition it negotiated a private agreement in Harris County, Texas. The Division also used sections 2, 4(e) and 208 to protect the rights of Haitian voters (Miami-Dade, Florida), Arab voters (Hamtramck, Michigan), and Puerto Rican voters (Berks County, Pennsylvania).

- Section 2. In July 2005, the Civil Rights Division filed a case against Osceola, Florida under section 2 alleging that the at-large method of election for the county commission dilutes Hispanic voting strength. It also filed a case against Boston, Massachusetts for discriminatory treatment of Chinese, Vietnamese and Hispanic voters at the same time. In February 2005, the Division filed a case in Noxubee County, Mississippi under section 2, alleging that local officials routinely discriminated against white voters on the basis of their race. That case has already resulted in a consent decree with several local officials and litigation of the claims against remaining defendants is ongoing. The Noxubee County case marks the first time the Division has filed a case under the Voting Rights Act on behalf of white voters.

- HAVA. The Civil Rights Division is charged with enforcing the requirements of the Help America Vote Act of 2002, which mandates uniform and non-discriminatory election procedures for federal office. The Division has actively informed state and local officials of the Act's requirements through an extensive outreach effort, including the creation of a HAVA section on the Division website, responses to questions from election officials, and speeches given to election official conferences. The Division has worked closely with the Election Assistance Commission, which also has responsibilities under the Act, to ensure that the federal government gives consistent views to election officials about HAVA. The Division has obtained extensive voluntary compliance, but has also filed two lawsuits to ensure HAVA compliance, and has filed amicus briefs in several private HAVA cases to ensure consistency in interpretation of its provisions.

- UOCAVA. During 2004, the Civil Rights Division ensured that members of the armed forces and other persons protected by the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act were able to request, receive and cast a ballot for federal offices in a timely manner in the 2004 elections. The Voting Section was able to resolve problems with state officials without the necessity of litigation, and also initiated litigation against Pennsylvania in April 2004 and Georgia in July 2004, successfully obtaining court orders requiring changes in the deadlines for the return of ballots so that overseas and military ballots would be counted in each state's 2004 primary election.

- NVRA. The Division brought two lawsuits under the National Voter Registration Act, a law designed to expand registration opportunities for all citizens and to ensure proper maintenance of voter registration lists. In United States v. Pulaski County (E.D. Ark.), the Division obtained a consent decree requiring the county to establish procedures to ensure that eligible voters were not improperly removed from the list of registered voters. The second lawsuit, United States v. State of New York (N.D.N.Y.), challenged the state's failure to provide registration opportunities at public college offices that provide services to persons with disabilities. This case remains in litigation. A third NVRA lawsuit remains pending in New York.

"As these election fraud and voting rights cases demonstrate, the Department's Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative is a balanced law enforcement effort that is designed to make voting easier and cheating harder," said Acting Assistant Attorney General John C. Richter of the Criminal Division. "The Criminal Division, through the hard work of the Public Integrity Section, will continue its vigorous enforcement of voter fraud laws to ensure that elections are not corrupted and that every vote counts."

"Protecting access to the ballot for all eligible voters is a major priority of the Civil Rights Division," said Bradley J. Schlozman, Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division. "The Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative has been an important instrument in ensuring the effectiveness of our enforcement efforts."

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE TO HOLD BALLOT ACCESS AND VOTING INTEGRITY SYMPOSIUM

Conference to Focus on Election Fraud, Voting Rights

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Department of Justice announced today that the 4th annual Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Symposium will be held in Washington, D.C. on Oct. 4 and 5, 2005. The annual training conference is part of the Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative, which was established in October 2002 to spearhead the Department's expanded efforts to address election fraud and voting rights violations.

The initiative is headed by the Assistant Attorneys General of the Criminal and Civil Rights Divisions. The goal of the initiative is to protect the integrity of the election process by increasing the Department's efforts and effectiveness in combating election fraud by: publicizing election fraud convictions to deter similar crimes in the future; ensuring nationwide compliance with the federal laws protecting voting rights; and assuring the public that the Department will combat election fraud and voting rights abuses vigorously, fairly and effectively.

"The power to vote is one of the greatest opportunities we share as Americans," said Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales. "The very fiber of our Nation rests on the zealous protection of certain inalienable rights for every citizen, and we cannot grow complacent in the safeguarding of those rights. The Department of Justice will continue to aggressively protect each person's right to vote - and just as important - preserve the value of that vote from those who would corrupt the election process."

The Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative includes:

Annual Training. Prosecutors serving as District Election Officers in the 94 U.S. Attorneys' Offices are required to attend annual training conferences on fighting election fraud and voting rights abuses. Previous conferences were held in October 2002, September 2003 and July 2004. These conferences are sponsored by the Voting Section of the Civil Rights Division and the Public Integrity Section of the Criminal Division, and feature presentations by Civil Rights officials and senior prosecutors from the Public Integrity Section and the U.S. Attorneys' Offices. As a result of these conferences, there is a nationwide increase in Department expertise relating to the prosecution of election crimes and the enforcement of voting rights.

State Coordination. Each U.S. Attorney is required to meet with the state Attorney General, Secretary of State, or other state official responsible for handling election matters in his or her district. These meetings underscore the Department's commitments to: prosecute election fraud and to protect voting rights; coordinate investigation of criminal matters involving joint federal and state jurisdiction; help ensure state compliance with federal voting rights laws; and avoid interference with the administration of elections, a function left primarily to the states by the Constitution. In addition, several U.S. Attorneys have established task forces with their state counterparts to increase their effectiveness in addressing election fraud and in deterring both discrimination at the polls and electoral corruption.

Prioritization of Election Fraud Enforcement. The initiative requires that all components of the Department place a high priority on the investigation and prosecution of election fraud. The Criminal Division's Public Integrity Section oversees the national effort to ensure that election fraud investigations and charges have sufficient factual and legal predication, that they will not interfere with an ongoing election, and that a national standard is maintained in this critical area of criminal law enforcement. As a result of the initiative, nationwide enforcement of election fraud matters has increased dramatically.

More than 120 election fraud investigations are currently pending throughout the country, all but four of which were opened after the initiative began in October 2002. In addition, over 60 election fraud matters have been closed after investigation since the initiative began. Finally, since the start of the initiative, 89 individuals have been charged with election fraud offenses.
To date, 52 of these individuals have been convicted.

CRIMINAL DIVISION

- In Illinois, four precinct officials pleaded guilty to vote buying in the 2004 general election and five more people are awaiting trial on these charges. Also, an election official pleaded guilty to forging ballots in the 2002 general election.

- In Kentucky, seven persons were convicted of vote buying in the 1998 primary in Knott County, two at trial and five through guilty pleas. Another three persons recently were indicted for vote buying for a candidate for the state senate in the 2000 primary in Knott County and neighboring counties. Finally, four persons were convicted by juries of vote buying and related offenses in the 2002 general election in Pike County, including the county district judge. Another person also pleaded guilty to these charges.

- In New Hampshire, two political party officials and another person were indicted on charges relating to a scheme to prevent voters from getting to the polls in the November 2002 general election by jamming phone lines of local organizations. Two of the defendants pleaded guilty to telephone harassment charges and the third is awaiting trial for conspiring to violate the right to vote for federal officials and other related offenses.

DOJ_NMG_ 0145862

- In Kansas and Missouri, three Kansas residents have been convicted, one in Kansas and two in Missouri, of voting in both Kansas and Missouri in the 2002 and 2000 elections.

- In Florida, 14 non-citizens, including a candidate for the state legislature, pleaded guilty or were convicted at trial of voting-related offenses in 1998 or later elections.

- In Louisiana, a candidate for St. Martinsville City Council pleaded guilty to conspiring to submit false voter registration information in 2002.

- In North Carolina, five persons were convicted of vote buying in the 2002 general election, three by a jury and two through guilty pleas.

- In West Virginia, four individuals, including the sheriff, the former chief of police, and the treasurer of a candidate for state representative, pleaded guilty to vote buying and related offenses in Logan County in the 2004 or 2002 elections. Also, five people have been indicted and are awaiting trial on charges of vote buying in Lincoln County in 2004 and earlier elections.

- In Wisconsin, four individuals have been charged with multiple voting, and six people have been charged with providing false information regarding their felon status, in the 2004 general elections.

CIVIL RIGHTS DIVISION

- Election Coverage. On Election Day in November 2004, the Division sent out 251 employees from the Division and 822 federal observers from the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to monitor elections in 86 political subdivisions in 25 states. The number of monitors and observers used for that election was more than were used in all of 2000. During all of 2004, the Division sent a total of 1,996 individuals (533 department personnel; 1,463 OPM observers) to monitor 163 elections in 105 political subdivisions in 29 states.

- Sections 203, 208 and 4(f)(4) of the Voting Rights Act. The Civil Rights Division has undertaken the most vigorous enforcement of section 203 in the history of the Act. Since 2001, the Division has filed as many section 203 cases as in the previous 23 years, and the pace is accelerating, with more cases filed and successfully resolved since May 2004 than in the previous 11 years. These latter lawsuits alone provided comprehensive minority language programs to more citizens than all previous Section 203 and 4(f)(4) cases combined. During this period the Civil Rights Division filed the first-ever cases to protect Filipino voters (San Diego, California) and Vietnamese voters (San Diego) and in addition it negotiated a private agreement in Harris County, Texas. The Division also used sections 2, 4(e) and 208 to protect the rights of Haitian voters (Miami-Dade, Florida), Arab voters (Hamtramck, Michigan), and Puerto Rican voters (Berks County, Pennsylvania).

- Section 2. In July 2005, the Civil Rights Division filed a case against Osceola, Florida under section 2 alleging that the at-large method of election for the county commission dilutes Hispanic voting strength. It also filed a case against Boston, Massachusetts for discriminatory treatment of Chinese, Vietnamese and Hispanic voters at the same time. In February 2005, the Division filed a case in Noxubee County, Mississippi under section 2, alleging that local officials routinely discriminated against white voters on the basis of their race. That case has already resulted in a consent decree with several local officials and litigation of the claims against remaining defendants is ongoing. The Noxubee County case marks the first time the Division has filed a case under the Voting Rights Act on behalf of white voters.

- HAVA. The Civil Rights Division is charged with enforcing the requirements of the Help America Vote Act of 2002, which mandates uniform and non-discriminatory election procedures for federal office. The Division has actively informed state and local officials of the Act's requirements through an extensive outreach effort, including the creation of a HAVA section on the Division website, responses to questions from election officials, and speeches given to election official conferences. The Division has worked closely with the Election Assistance Commission, which also has responsibilities under the Act, to ensure that the federal government gives consistent views to election officials about HAVA. The Division has obtained extensive voluntary compliance, but has also filed two lawsuits to ensure HAVA compliance, and has filed amicus briefs in several private HAVA cases to ensure consistency in interpretation of its provisions.

- UOCAVA. During 2004, the Civil Rights Division ensured that members of the armed forces and other persons protected by the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act were able to request, receive and cast a ballot for federal offices in a timely manner in the 2004 elections. The Voting Section was able to resolve problems with state officials without the necessity of litigation, and also initiated litigation against Pennsylvania in April 2004 and Georgia in July 2004, successfully obtaining court orders requiring changes in the deadlines for the return of ballots so that overseas and military ballots would be counted in each state's 2004 primary election.

- NVRA. The Division brought two lawsuits under the National Voter Registration Act, a law designed to expand registration opportunities for all citizens and to ensure proper maintenance of voter registration lists. In United States v. Pulaski County (E.D. Ark.), the Division obtained a consent decree requiring the county to establish procedures to ensure that eligible voters were not improperly removed from the list of registered voters. The second lawsuit, United States v. State of New York (N.D.N.Y.), challenged the state's failure to provide registration opportunities at public college offices that provide services to persons with disabilities. This case remains in litigation. A third NVRA lawsuit remains pending in New York.

"As these election fraud and voting rights cases demonstrate, the Department's Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative is a balanced law enforcement effort that is designed to make voting easier and cheating harder," said Acting Assistant Attorney General John C. Richter of the Criminal Division. "The Criminal Division, through the hard work of the Public Integrity Section, will continue its vigorous enforcement of voter fraud laws to ensure that elections are not corrupted and that every vote counts."

"Protecting access to the ballot for all eligible voters is a major priority of the Civil Rights Division," said Bradley J. Schlozman, Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division. "The Ballot Access and Voting Integrity Initiative has been an important instrument in ensuring the effectiveness of our enforcement efforts."
