THE CLERK: Buntrock versus Terra. 00 CH 1359.

THE COURT: Good afternoon.

MR. QUINLAN: Good afternoon, Your Honor. William R. Quinlan with Michael Rothstein and James Carroll on behalf of the plaintiffs.

MR. GRIMM: My name is Terry Grimm, G-r-i-m-m. And we have now seen what a bad idea casual Friday is, Your Honor, because I'm the only person over there with a suit and tie on this afternoon and about half an hour ago, I got this document.

THE COURT: Who are you here behalf of?

MR. GRIMM: Our firm represents the Terra Foundation for the Arts.

THE COURT: Just the Terra Foundation?

MR. GRIMM: We have no authority to appear for anyone else, Your Honor, and before I get too deep in it, one of the plaintiffs, in this case Mr. Gidwitz, is a good client of Winston & Strawn. So unless Judge Quinlan has a waiver for me, there is a real question now how Winston & Strawn would be able to stay in this case.

MR. PERKINS: Judge, Floyd Perkins and Terry

Goldberg, for the People of the State of Illinois.

We are not named in the caption but we intend to intervene.

THE COURT: You have received a notice of motion for today for this afternoon?

MR. PERKINS: Yes.

THE COURT: And what do you intend to intervene as a party defendant with a position or a bystander or what are the attorney general be doing here?

MR. PERKINS: Judge, we would likely be intervening as a party plaintiff although we will have to look at our own allegations. In that regard, it is a situation where we are looking at the first instance.

So in that regard, we want to be cautious in what we plead, but we will be intervening in the sense that we see this as a serious matter. That involves substantial charitable organization here in Illinois. Last report we had was $400 million.

THE COURT: 450 I think.

MR. PERKINS: $450 million. Some of the allegations cause us concern and we need to look into those matters so we would like to do so.

vote from taking place because as we alleged all the way through here this has been part of the plan and scheme all along is to push this through in a setting where they feel they have the votes and have manipulated the votes in such away that they will get this passed at that time. We don't think that's proper.

We agree with Your Honor there has been no real discussion of this anywhere. And that is the very concern that we have and the propriety of this action taking that action would be ultra virus and that is what we are alleging.

And the Attorney General himself is here to say he is concerned about the taking of any ultra virus steps which would be removing the assets from the City of Chicago.

THE COURT: I don't mean to interrupt you, sir, but there's 11 people at most. What I'm hearing in the pleadings that you've got is that some of them you think are really bad and they're going to do something horrible maybe on Tuesday. What about all the rest of them?

I would think that there is going to be a discussion. I would think if there is any kind of evidence again today that this is exactly what the intent is to do is to push this through at that board meeting.

And that is why we ask both to stop the meeting and then to prevent any action on taking removal of any directors at the second meeting if that were to go forward and to prevent them from voting on an ultra virus act that they cannot do.

It does not disrupt them from conducting any other business, doing a lot of things that would be generally beneficial, but not from taking any improper or inappropriate actions.

THE COURT: Is there a history in the case law of not -- maybe Mr. Perkins can help me out on this one. If a not for profit organizations charitable organizations in Illinois wishing to move outside the state and being stopped by force from doing so?

MR. PERKINS: Judge, I think it is a matter -- I have looked for cases myself on that particular area, and I think you have to look at -- I think it really comes down to who gave the money to the charity and for what purposes and the restrictions are that very trust instrument itself.

In this particular case our quick look at this we are pretty familiar with this foundation, because we were involved in the Dan Terra estate.

Most of the money -- almost all the money as far as I can see came from Dan Terra. This foundation started with I think with three directors, Dan Terra, his son Jim Terra, and a third person I can't remember who that was.

I understand from Jim Terra that he believes that the foundation is to stay in Illinois. We see everything that we have ever seen with regard to this.

This was left for the benefit of the People of the State of Illinois. The People of the State of Illinois is the ultimate beneficiary of every charitable trust by the common law that's the way the common law reads.

Unfortunately, it may be a question in some people's mind, but common law says the people are the one who are the ultimate beneficiary and they certainly have no interest in having a charitable trust that's in the state leave the state.

The public here has a right to enjoin the benefits of its charitable trust. The founders here put the money in established this foundation here in this city, in this state and we believe that there are enough indicia of facts that would lead one to believe that the intent of the trust was that it remain in Illinois and that would be what we would try to put together.

I can't say to you, judge, this is the case of Smith and something else that would be definitive on that, but we will be looking to give you what we can in that regard as well.

We believe that under these circumstances, that this board shouldn't be considering this issue.

THE COURT: Well, then maybe they should consider whatever they want to consider, but are you saying they should be allowed to take a definitive vote?

MR. PERKINS: Take a definitive vote? Judge, the interesting thing about this is the history of the board itself. This is a fairly new board of people. This is not a long running list of these people having run and stayed with this museum for many, many years.

Dan Terra died I believe in 1996. And at that time, he was probably the person who steered the ship all the time and at that time, there were -- the board was I believe only five or six people.

Jim Terra was on the board at the time. I'm not sure if Judith Terra was on the board while Dan was alive. I believe in fact she was not. There was some agreement that she wouldn't be on the board.

So we have since 1996 a big change in who's running this organization. And quite frankly, the direction that the founder and the people would -- the settlers so to spoke of this charitable trust I think we need to step back and visit what was the intent and really where this foundation should remain.

THE COURT: Mr. Grimm, you have been very patient. Thank you. Tell me about -- do you all want to work all weekend putting together a response for a motion to be heard on Monday?

MR. GRIMM: The direct question is do I? No, but will somebody will it be ready, yes.

THE COURT: So you want to be able to Simpson can possibly participate by phone any way. I mean I don't know the circumstances. It was moved as a convenience to him, this information that we received.

Now, that does not necessarily mean that he may not be able to do it by phone, but it was his preference not to do it on Tuesday.

THE COURT: Is anybody from the plaintiffs' side planning to bring anyone else to this meeting like counsel or anyone? Are you going to have anybody there on Tuesday?

MR. CARROLL: I volunteer, Your Honor.

MR. QUINLAN: I don't think we have any standing, but we would like to mention one thing.

MR. GRIMM: That happens all the time.

MR. QUINLAN: Mr. Mulac is here who represents Mr. Jim Terra who is here to support our position and to indicate in fact as the Attorney General has stated that he could and would be able to endorse and testify to his father's position that this was to be logically within Chicago, within Illinois and that was part of his vision.

Also, Your Honor asked about a particular case. I'd like to invite Your Honor to take a look foundation purposes. That this clearly is a public Illinois trust.

THE COURT: I'm just wondering whether there is going to be someone here, there all of those other boards members, that you have suggested that might be easily influenced?

MR. QUINLAN: Could be.

THE COURT: Are they going to have the benefit of knowing what this case is about or what the issues that are raised here and that the Attorney General is here and that they are indicating they are seeking to intervene as a party plaintiff to stop the very things that they are going to be talking about? Does everybody who is supposed to vote know the seriousness at this time?

MR. QUINLAN: I have no idea. Surely there will be discussions. We do not control the process. That is controled by the people whom are here suing who are in positions to control this and to control the information that is transmitted on behalf of the group.

Again I merely go back to the statement again if in fact as we have alleged and this is a summary proceeding of course as Your Honor knows and there really is no difference whether there is an answer or not because it is --

THE COURT: All right.

MR. QUINLAN: My whole point is whether or not we have established a fair question although I would be very interested in what Mr. Grimm can ascertain in the interim and what the position is.

And I'm more than happy to act in any reasonable way to work something out. The same time as we have to establish and we need to establish to have a right to prevent them taking actions that are arising and a fair question of the impropriety of what is being done and the basis upon which they have been acting.

And as the Attorney General said we have raised some very serious questions regarding the propriety of their management and use of fiduciary duties and responsibilities to the museum itself and to their operation of the board in manner in which it has been operating that if and of itself is grounds for removal of trustees and director under the state law by the Attorney General.

And it is the same thing that happened in the Hardy Museum case. All I'm saying this is a

So we are in a situation here where we are trying to do is just let this stand still long so Your Honor can take care of it, look at these -- these are serious allegations. Whether they go ahead with the meeting or they don't and there are serious allegations talking about the continued viability of certain people, service upon their board, and I think the Attorney General's presence here surely indicates the concern of the State of Illinois about the very thing that we are alleging.

So in terms of taking a small action here to insure that the status quo is maintained for Your Honor to consider this case, I'm not so sure it is that kind of a reach or is that kind of inconvenience. The inconvenience to the people in France here.

Your Honor herself has indicated this is something ought well be discussed and we encourage that. That's fine. But it does not need to have a vote taken and that of course is exactly what the documents that we receive clearly indicates is their intent.

THE COURT: Are what you suggesting you don't come back Monday? We will recess now and

He presently serves as Terra Foundation's treasurer, is chairman of its finance and investment committee, and is a member of its Executive Committee.

Since 1982, Gidwitz has served as a director and officer of Terra Foundation. He presently serves as chairman of Terra Foundation's strategic planning committee and is a member of its Executive Committee.

5 Defendant Paul Hayes Tucker ("Mr. Tucker") is a resident of Massachusetts. Mr. Tucker is a director, chairman and president of Terra Foundation and is a member of its Executive Committee.

6 Defendant Judith Terra is a resident of Washington, D.C. Judith Terra is a director and vice chairman of Terra Foundation, and is a member of its Executive Committee.

7 Defendant Senator Alan K. Simpson is a resident of Wyoming and a former United States senator from that state. Sen. Simpson is a director of Terra Foundation and a member of its finance and investment committee.

8 Defendant Naftali Michaeli ("Mr. Michaeli") is an Israeli citizen and a resident of Washington, D.C. Mr. Michaeli is a close personal friend of Judith Terra, and has no official position with Terra Foundation.

9 Defendant Terra Foundation is an Illinois not-for-profit charitable corporation established in 1978 by Daniel J. Terra (deceased) ("Dan Terra") to preserve and exhibit collections of American Art, to expand the artistic horizons of the Illinois art public through educational programs, and to operate museums in Chicago and France.

10 Because of Dan Terra's extraordinarily generous gifts to Terra Foundation in his lifetime, and his bequest to Terra Foundation of most of his estate, Terra Foundation's assets now total approximately $450 million, including investments, real estate, and a priceless collection of American art.

11 Terra Foundation owns and operates the Terra Museum of American Art (the "Terra Museum") located at 664 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

12 Terra Foundation currently has eleven directors, the maximum number allowed under the by-laws of Terra Foundation. The Board includes Margaret Daley, a well-known benefactor of education and the arts and the wife of Mayor Richard M. Daley, and Arthur A. Hartman, the former United States Ambassador to France. The Board also includes Helene Ahrweiler, Jacques Andreani, Stephanie Marshall and Theodore Stebbins. Catherine A. Stevens, the wife of United States Senator Ted Stevens, was the Executive Director of Terra Foundation from August of 1996 through April, 2000 until terminated by Tucker.

Creation of Terra Foundation

13 Dan Terra established Terra Foundation in December 1978 under the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act. It was Dan Terra's intent and purpose to provide a Museum in the Chicago area that would exhibit collections of American art and educate the public generally on issues of American art. As set forth in the original Articles of Incorporation, the purpose of Terra Foundation was:

> to form, preserve, and exhibit collections of paintings, sculpture, graphic arts, architecture, and design representing American art; expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public through such activities which will include lectures, symposia, talks, demonstrations, films, and related educational programs designed to further these purposes; establish, conduct, operate, and maintain a school of instruction and any and all artistic and technical educational fine arts courses and other subjects relating thereto; build, erect, maintain, equip, manage, lease, and operate a museum and all component parts deemed advisable or necessary to provide space for these activities and exhibitions; engage in any and all other activities and exhibitions.

14 To ensure that the primary mission and purpose of Terra Foundation was carried out, the Terra Museum was opened in 1982 in Evanston, Illinois. In 1987, the Museum relocated to 664 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and remains at that location until today.

15 Throughout the 1980s and early to mid-1990s, Dan Terra contributed cash, stock and art for the continued growth and viability of the Terra Foundation and the Terra Museum in Chicago. To ensure that his contributions would further the goals and mission of Terra Foundation for the benefit of the public, Dan Terra created two restricted endowments, the "B2 Endowment," restricted to the acquisition of art for Terra Foundation, and the D4 Endowment restricted to education endeavors relating to American art.

16 In the early 1990s, Terra Foundation constructed and developed the Musee d'Art Americain Giverny ("Giverny Museum"), an art museum in Giverny, France dedicated to the exhibition of American art and American art education.

17 Primarily because of Dan Terra's gifts and bequests, the value of Terra Foundation has grown substantially since its creation. Currently, Terra Foundation holds net assets worth approximately $450 million. The value of the art alone located at the Terra Museum in Chicago exceeds $100 million, with the overall value of Terra's Foundation's art collection exceeding $173 million.

18 Pursuant to its by-laws, the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation is required to hold an annual meeting during the month of September of each year for the purpose of electing directors and officers and for the transacting of other business. If the election of the directors and officers is not held at such meeting, the Board of Directors may cause the election to be held at a meeting of the Board of Directors as soon thereafter as may be convenient. The Board of Directors may only elect officers and directors by a majority vote.

19 In periods of time between the quarterly Board of Director Meetings, the by-laws provide that as Terra Foundation's Executive Committee has the authority to take action on behalf of Terra Foundation, except on specific issues delegated to the Board of Directors pursuant to the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act. Since October, 1999, Terra Foundation's Executive Committee has consisted of plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz, defendants Edith Terra and Mr. Tucker, and director Stephanie Marshall.

Dan Terra's Dedication To Chicago

20 Dan Terra was a successful entrepreneur and businessman who resided predominately in the Chicago area. A large portion of his wealth enured through investments in companies located in and around Chicago. As result, Dan Terra made the decision to start the Terra Foundation with the intent to benefit of the citizens of Illinois and the Chicago area. Terra Foundation became Terra's principal charitable endeavor.

21 Dan Terra described his decision to establish Terra Foundation in Illinois and to open Terra Museum in the Chicago area for the people of Illinois as follows:

> [W]hat's exciting is that it's a deep commitment. There's not another museum of American art within 400 miles of Chicago, and we have a real educational job to do.

(See Grace Glueck, American-Art Museum Opening in Chicago, N.Y. Times, April 19, 1987 at B14, attached hereto as Exhibit 2). On many occasions, Dan Terra articulated his intent to benefit the people of Illinois through the creation of Terra Foundation in Illinois and the opening of Terra Museum as " major institution in Chicago." (See, e.g., Dodie Kazanjian, Daniel J. Terra, America's First Ambassador-at-large for Cultural Affairs Pursues the Best in American Painting for His New Museum in Chicago, House & Garden, May 1987, at 52, attached hereto as Exhibit 3).

22 Shortly after the creation of Terra Foundation, Dan Terra's first wife, Adeline died. In 1986, Dan Terra married Judith Terra. Judith Terra acknowledged in a prenuptial agreement that she fully understood that the bulk of Dan Terra's estate would go to the Terra Foundation, and she unequivocally promised that after his death she would not seek any assets of his Estate other than those given to her under the prenuptial agreement. Under the prenuptial agreement, Judith Terra agreed she would receive only a fixed amount of money and assets upon Dan Terra's death. Judith Terra became a member of the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation.

23 On information and belief, after Judith Terra became a member of the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation, she suggested to Dan Terra that the Terra Museum be closed and Terra Foundation be moved out of Chicago. This was never done during Dan Terra's lifetime.

Terra's Death And The Will Contest

24 On June 28, 1996, Dan Terra died after suffering a stroke. As the sole residuary beneficiary under his will, Terra Foundation was to receive $125 million.

25 As the first step in a plan to seize control of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra immediately attempted to transfer Dan Terra's probate proceedings from the Circuit Court of Cook County to Washington, D.C. After a five-day trial, the Chief Judge of the Probate Division denied the motion to transfer, finding that the motion was without merit in law or fact.

26 Judith Terra next embarked on a scheme to seize tens of millions of dollars that Dan Terra intended for Terra Foundation.

27 Under the prenuptial agreement between Dan Terra and Judith Terra, Judith Terra was to receive $4.5 million in cash plus approximately $2.6 million in other assets, for a total of $7.1 million.

28 Contrary to her promise in the prenuptial agreement, after Dan's death, Judith Terra immediately filed an action challenging the prenuptial agreement and contesting Dan Terra's will. Judith Terra sought for herself $43 million of the $125 million bequest to Terra Foundation.

29 Judith Terra's attempt to seize $43 million of Dan Terra's bequest to Terra Foundation put her in irreconcilable conflict with the interests of Terra Foundation and, therefore, with the people of the State of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the charitable trust created by Dan Terra. As a result, Judith Terra was forced to take a leave of absence as a director of Terra Foundation.

30 The Terra Foundation hired Tyrone Fahner, former Attorney General of Illinois, and Howard McCue III of Mayer, Brown & Platt as special counsel with respect to Judith Terra's attempt to seize the $43 million bequest. Both Terra Foundation's special counsel and the counsel for Dan Terra's estate found that Judith Terra's claims lacked substantial merit. However, to avoid protracted litigation, the estate and Terra Foundation entered into a settlement with Judith Terra whereby she received approximately $1 million more than she was entitled to under the prenuptial agreement. This allowed Terra Foundation to receive virtually all of Dan Terra's $125 million bequest as intended under Dan Terra's will.

Mismanagement of Terra Museum After Dan Terra's Death

31 Following the settlement of her claims against the Dan Terra's Estate, Judith Terra sought reinstatement to her position as director of Terra Foundation. Thereafter, changes were made within Terra Foundation and the Museum that were contrary to the best interests of Terra Foundation and therefore contrary to the public interest that was intended to benefit from Terra Foundation.

32 Beginning in mid-1998, Judith Terra launched a scheme to gain control of Terra Foundation to carry out her own agenda of closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. Judith Terra owns a home in Washington, D.C. and desires to move the Foundation there to obtain a prominent place in the social circles of Washington, D.C. Judith Terra believes that if she is able to move a foundation as large as Terra Foundation to

Washington, D.C., she would be able to establish herself in Washington, D.C. as a large benefactor of the arts, thereby placing herself in the elite social circles of Washington, D.C.

33 To accomplish her scheme of seizing control of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra began stacking Terra Foundation's Board with persons loyal to her alone. For example, Judith Terra recommended and sought the election of her friend Sen. Simpson to the Board. Sen. Simpson became a director in mid-1999. At his first Board of Directors meeting in October 1999, Sen. Simpson announced to the Board that his purpose for being on Terra Foundation's Board of Directors was "to protect Mrs. Terra's interests."

34 Prior to October 1999, Judith Terra orchestrated a plan to replace Arthur Hartman as Terra Foundation's president and chairman with her loyalist, Mr. Tucker. Although Terra Foundation had been searching for a new president for more than two years from outside the Board of Directors, Judith Terra and her new allies on the Board replaced Arthur Hartman as president and chairman with Mr. Tucker. As was later discovered, the decision to place Mr. Tucker in the position of president and chairman was made to further Judith Terra's attempt to gain control of Terra Foundation and to further her own agenda contrary to the mission and intent of Dan Terra in creating Terra Foundation.

35 Mr. Tucker and Judith Terra further entrenched their power through the hiring of Donald Ratner and the unauthorized expansion of his authority within Terra Foundation. Mr. Ratner was originally retained as a consultant to the Foundation on an interim basis. During the January 25, 2000 meeting of the Board of Directors a motion was made to give Mr. Ratner the title of vice president of finance and administration. The Board members present at the meeting voted in favor of the motion. However, because not all Board Members were present, the motion was made subject to the ratification by each of the absent Board members. In a subsequent poll of Board members, the motion failed to receive unanimous approval as required by the vote at the January 25, 2000 meeting. Nonetheless, pursuant to Mr. Tucker's dictate, Mr. Ratner has continued to serve as a purported officer of Terra Foundation, and has taken direction from Board members loyal to Judith Terra.

36 Judith Terra also furthered her scheme to gain control of Terra Foundation by causing the removal of the attorneys that had counseled and represented Terra Foundation since its inception. In 1982, Dan Terra asked James Collins, an attorney at the law firm of Bell, Boyd & Lloyd, to act as both general counsel and an officer of Terra Foundation. Collins served in the capacity of general counsel and secretary of Terra Foundation from 1978 until his removal in October 1999. He also served as treasurer from August 1996 through October 1999. During this time, Collins had represented the interests of Terra Foundation through many difficult issues, including Judith Terra's attempt to confiscate $43 million of Dan Terra's bequest to Terra Foundation.

37 Defendants next forced the resignation of Terra Foundation's special counsel, Ty Fahner and Howard McCue III of Mayer, Brown & Platt. Terra Foundation hired Mayer, Brown & Platt as special counsel when Judith Terra sued Dan Terra's estate for the $43 million residual bequest to Terra Foundation. Mayer, Brown & Platt also represented Terra Foundation in connection with its interests in the now defunct Mercury Finance Company.

38 Specifically, on or about August 11, 2000, Mr. Ratner, acting in his ultra vires capacity at the direction of defendants, told Mayer, Brown & Platt that Terra Foundation would not pay its fees for any time incurred in dealing with or responding to any issues not specifically requested by either Mr. Tucker or Mr. Ratner. Mayer, Brown & Platt rejected this arrangement recognizing that it would be contrary to its duties and obligations as special counsel to Terra Foundation and its directors. In resigning its position as special counsel to Terra Foundation, Mayer, Brown & Platt stated in a letter to Mr. Tucker:

> In our original engagement letter of December 11, 1996, sent by Ms. Ahrweiler and ourselves, the Foundation requested that we act as special counsel to the Foundation. It was clear that the client was the foundation, not merely its President and Chairman. That letter also made clear that we were to provide legal advice and representation to the Board of the Foundation. As special counsel, we have worked with three different Chairmen, a number of board members, staff and counsel. We owe professional obligations to the institution and all of its directors. It would not be consistent with our professional obligations to decline to respond to the concerns of directors.

39 In furtherance of her plan to seize control of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson have ignored the requirements of Terra Foundation's by-laws regarding management of Terra Foundation. Article III, Section 11 of the by-laws provides that the executive committee is to operate Terra Foundation between the quarterly Board of Director meetings. (See By-laws of Terra Foundation, attached hereto as Exhibit 5, at Article IV, Section 9). With few exceptions relating to bringing in new counsel for Terra Foundation, issues were not brought before the executive committee. By not having meetings of the executive committee, Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker, Sen. Simpson were able to control the operations of Terra Foundation for their own benefit, contrary to the provisions of the by-laws.

40 Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker, Sen. Simpson have also consulted with and taken advice from Mr. Michaeli. Mr. Michaeli has been making decisions for Terra Foundation even though he is not an officer or director of Terra Foundation, or even an employee. Mr. Michaeli's only connection to Terra Museum is his relationship with Judith Terra.

41 Judith Terra also began treating the art collection of Terra Foundation as if it were her own personal property. Judith Terra ordered that art from the collection held by Terra Foundation be transported from the Giverny Museum to her personal residence. The curator of the Giverny Museum objected to any piece of the collection leaving the Giverny Museum. However, at Judith Terra's direction, Mr. Tucker ordered the curator of the Giverny Museum to transport the art to Judith Terra's residence for her personal use.

42 Under the control of Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Michaeli, substantial waste and mismanagement has occurred which jeopardizes the continued viability of Terra Museum. This waste and mismanagement includes, but is not limited to, the following:

a. Grossly mismanaging Terra Museum in a manner that has resulted in the loss or turnover of almost half the employees, including key persons responsible for Terra Museum's day-to-day operations and continued success;

b. Causing the primary individuals in charge of security at Terra Museum to quit resulting in an inexperienced and understaffed security staff, and jeopardizing the security of the $100 million of art displayed and collected at Terra Museum;

c. Permitting a director of Terra Foundation to engage in a conflict of interest in representing Terra Foundation at art auctions while, on information and belief, representing the interests of private clients at the same auction;

d. Expending significant monies on the purchases of art without obtaining the input or approval of the Board of Directors or the Collections Committee charged with the responsibility of advising the Board of Directors on issues involving art acquisition;

e. Attempting to invade the D4 Endowment restricted to educational purposes for the unauthorized purpose of acquiring art;

f. Bypassing the lawfully elected Executive Committee operating Terra Foundation and Terra Museum;

g. Wastefully incurring excessive legal fees by retaining inexperienced counsel in replacement of Terra Foundation's long-standing counsel;

h. Misusing the art collection of Terra Foundation for Judith Terra's own personal use and in a manner that placed the collection in danger and jeopardy; and

i. Allowing Mr. Michaeli to participate the management, control and operation of Terra Foundation and Terra Museum.

43 Members of the Board of Directors have repeatedly questioned the manner in which Mr. Tucker, Judith Terra and Sen. Simpson have been operating Terra Foundation in the past year. For example, on March 2, 2000, Margaret Daley wrote to John Neff, Director of Terra Museum, regarding the significant problem occurring at Terra Museum as a result of the high turnover of key employees. Specifically, Mrs. Daley stated:

> Having just returned from out of town, I am disheartened about the news concerning Ginny Spindler. John, Ginny worked tirelessly on the School Resource Guide. I was very impressed with her work and Rachel's as well. In fact, without their herculean efforts, it would not have been a worthwhile publication. In fact, it would have been an embarrassment to the Foundation. Your letter to Ginny was, from my point of view, unkind and uncalled for. It distressed me to see people treated in such a manner. In my working with her on education issues, I believe she has always gone "above and beyond" her duties .... I couldn't leave without letting you and the Board know my feelings and deep concerns.

44 Other members of the Board of Directors, including Buntrock, as well employees of both Terra Foundation and Terra Museum have repeatedly and vigorously challenged the manner and lack of direction in which Terra Foundation has been operated and managed under the direction of Mr. Tucker. (See Arthur A. Hartman letter dated November 7, 1999, attached hereto as Exhibit 7).

45 On information and belief, the pattern of mismanagement and waste occurring at Terra Museum is a conscious effort on the part of Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson to cause the failure of Terra Museum in Chicago to justify closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation from Chicago to Washington, D.C. for their own purposes and in utter disregard for the people of Illinois intended to benefit from Dan Terra's museum and foundation.

Judith Terra's Plan To Move Terra Museum From Chicago To Washington

46 Despite the fact that Terra during his life had rejected any suggestion of moving Terra Museum from Chicago and therefore depriving the people of the State of Illinois of the charitable trust that he had created, Judith Terra has never abandoned her personal scheme to close Terra Museum in Chicago and move Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. In the last year, after Mr. Tucker obtained the position of president and chairman, Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Mr. Michaeli have been actively seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago.

47 To this end, and in breach of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois, Judith Terra and Mr. Tucker have engaged in negotiations relating to a merger or affiliation between Terra Foundation and The Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. ("the Corcoran"). As part of the proposed merger of affiliation, certain positions on the Board of The Corcoran would be filled by individuals on the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation. Also, the proposal provides that the president and chairman of Terra Foundation, Mr. Tucker, would assume the position of vice-chairman of The Corcoran.

48 The overall plan and method whereby Judith Terra and Mr. Tucker would secure their mission of obtaining prominent positions in Washington, D.C., in breach of their fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois, was clearly evidenced at the recent Board of Directors meeting held on August 24, 2000. There, Mr. Tucker made clear that it was his intention to close Terra Museum in Chicago. Mr. Tucker stated that under his thinking, there were potential problems with the continued operation of the museum in Chicago. Mr. Tucker went to state clearly and unambiguously, > the best way to maximize our resources and fulfill our mission is to align with another institution, close the Chicago museum and focus on Giverny and educational initiatives of the Foundation.

(Emphasis added) (See Minutes of August 24, 2000 Board of Directors Meeting, attached hereto as Exhibit 8, p. 2). In fact, many of the "problems" with the Chicago museum were of the defendants' own making.

49 Buntrock objected to Mr. Tucker's improper interpretation of the mission of Terra Foundation and stated that the closing of Terra Museum in Chicago had never been discussed or considered by the full Board of Directors. Mr. Tucker agreed that this critical issue had never been discussed by the full Board of Directors, but stated that a decision had already been reached to close Terra Museum in Chicago. According to Mr. Tucker, the Strategic Planning Committee was prepared to make a recommendation on this issue to the Board of Directors. Mr. Tucker stated that the Board of directors "definitely" must make a decision on the closing of the Chicago museum during the annual Board of Directors meeting in September 2000.

50 In conjunction with their overall plan, Judith Terra and Mr. Tucker have attempted to create the impression that Terra Museum in Chicago needs to be abandoned as a mission of Terra Foundation.

Defendants' Plan To Remove Buntrock
From Board Of Directors To Further Their Goals

51 Notice was mailed to the directors informing them that the annual Board of Directors meeting of Terra Foundation was scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, 2000 in France. Although various events and committee meetings were scheduled to occur between September 23, 2000 and September 26, 2000, the annual meeting of the Board of Directors was scheduled for September 26, 2000.

52 As set forth in the agenda for the annual Board meeting that was distributed to each Board member, the election of officers and directors for the upcoming year was to be held during the September 26, 2000 meeting. (See Agenda for September 26, 2000 Board of Directors Meeting, attached hereto as Exhibit 9). As set forth in the agenda, the elections were to occur and then the chairman of each committee would make a presentation to the Board. (Id.) As indicated in the agenda, Mr. Buntrock was scheduled to give a presentation to the Board as the chairman of the finance and investment committee immediately subsequent to the election of the directors and officers.

53 The defendants have now contrived a plan to ensure that the directors are elected with the exception of Buntrock. Defendants intend to see that Buntrock is not retained as a director in order to allow them to more easily accomplish their unlawful personal objective of closing the museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. Buntrock has recognized defendants' efforts and has continued to question the Board's authority to move the charitable assets of the people of the State of Illinois to Washington, D.C. in contravention of the Board's fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois.

54 Plaintiffs have just recently learned of the defendants' improper plan to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Board of Directors. Subsequent to the dissemination of the agenda for the September 26, 2000 meeting of the Board of Directors, and only days prior to the directors leaving for France, Mr. Ratner was directed to send a letter to all directors, without any consultation, informing them that a 30-minute Board of Directors meeting was scheduled for September 24, 2000, two days prior to the properly noticed and scheduled meeting of the Board of Directors. (See September 15, 2000 Letter, attached hereto as Exhibit 10). This improperly noticed meeting has been scheduled because defendants will not have a sufficient number of directors available on September 26, 2000 to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Board of Terra Foundation.

55 Defendants' attempt to hold the elections for directors and/or officers at a Special Meeting of the Board of Directors on September 24, 2000, is violative of the by-laws of Terra Foundation for at least two reasons. First, Ratner does not have the authority to provide notice of a meeting of the Board of Directors as he is not the secretary of Terra Foundation, nor is he even a duly elected officer or director. Pursuant to the by-laws of Terra Foundation, only the secretary of Terra Foundation is empowered to provide notices required under the by-laws. (Exhibit 5, Article IV, Section 9). Any attempt by Ratner to send notice of a meeting of the Board of Directors constitutes an ultra vires act.

56 Second, under the by-laws an election of the officers and directors may occur only at one of two occasions. First, the election may take place at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors. Second, if the election is not held at the scheduled annual meeting, a special meeting may be held subsequent to the annual meeting. (Id. at Article III, Section 3). The by-laws provide no authority for the holding of elections of officers or directors prior to the scheduled annual meeting. For this additional reason, defendants' attempt to hold the elections of directors and officers at the improperly noticed meeting on September 24, 2000 constitutes and ultra vires act, as well as a clear breach of their fiduciary duty to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois.

57 Without relief from this Court, defendants will carry out their improper plan to ensure that Buntrock does not remain as a director and officer, to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and to undermine the effort of the other directors to ensure that fiduciary duties to the Terra Foundation, and its beneficiaries -- the people of the State of Illinois -- are followed. The Defendants' plan is motivated by their own self-interests and desires, and inconsistent with their fiduciary obligations as directors of a charitable trust intended to benefit the people of Illinois.

58 Moreover, if defendants are permitted to carry out their plan to remove Buntrock there is a real and serious danger that other members of the Board of Directors will resign their positions thereby leaving the Terra Foundation in great jeopardy, and leaving the people of Illinois without protection on the Board. Once Buntrock and other similar "obstructionist" directors are removed or resign, defendants will have no opposition to carrying out their plan of depriving the people of Illinois of the public trust created over twenty years ago by Dan Terra for their benefit.

COUNT I
(Declaratory Relief)

59 Plaintiffs repeat and reallege the allegations contained in Paragraphs 1 through 58 of this Complaint as though fully set forth in this Paragraph 59.

60 By and through the creation Terra Foundation as a not-for-profit Illinois corporation, Dan Terra intended that a museum of American art be operated in the Chicago area to be held in trust for the benefit of the people of the State of Illinois.

61 At various times after the creation of Terra Foundation, Terra reaffirmed his mission of operating a museum in the Chicago area for the benefit of the people of Illinois through the collection of American art and the education generally of the public on the issue of American art.

62 The Board of Directors of Terra Foundation are the trustees of the charitable trust created by Dan Terra responsible to the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the public trust.

63 As directors of Terra Foundation, plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz, as well as many others, have donated their time, efforts and resources to accomplish the goals and mission started over twenty years ago by Terra.

64 Plaintiffs as directors of Terra Foundation have a fiduciary duty and an obligation to protect Terra Foundation from waste and mismanagement caused by defendants.

65 Plaintiffs as directors of Terra Foundation have a fiduciary duty and an obligation to see that Terra Foundation continues to carry out the mission for which it was started for the benefit of the people of Illinois.

66 By virtue of their positions as directors and/or officers of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker owed fiduciary duties to the Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois to protect the charitable assets of Terra Foundation and to act in their interests by furthering the charitable purpose and mission started by Terra more than twenty years ago.

67 Notwithstanding their fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois to further the charitable purpose and mission started by Dan Terra more than twenty years ago, Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker used their positions as directors and/or officers of Terra Foundation to intentionally mismanage Terra Museum in Chicago to further their own self interests in closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C.

68 The foregoing improper conduct of Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker has caused, and will continue to cause, irreparable harm to Terra Foundation, and irreparable harm to the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the public trust established for Terra Museum in Chicago as a unique center for American art.

69 Plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law.

70 An actual controversy exists between the parties hereto concerning Terra Foundation's obligation and purpose to maintain a museum in the Chicago area for the benefit of the people of Illinois as originally intended by Dan Terra at the time of the creation of Terra Foundation.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray for the following relief:

A. A declaration that:

(1) Daniel Terra created Terra Foundation as a public trust for the benefit of the people of Illinois on or before December 13, 1978;

(2) The intent of Dan Terra in creating Terra Foundation was to operate the museum of American art in the Chicago area for the benefit of the people of Illinois;

(3) Defendants are precluded from closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving the Foundation to a location outside of the Chicago area;

(4) The closure of Terra Museum in Chicago or the transfer of the museum or its art to Washington, D.C. or any other location outside of the Chicago area would violate the Illinois Charitable Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/1 et seq. (West 1995)) and the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act of 1986 (805 ILCS 105/101.01 et seq. (West 1995)).

B. A temporary, preliminary and permanent injunction enjoining defendants from closing Terra Museum in Chicago or transferring the museum or its art to Washington, D.C. or any other location outside of Illinois.

C. For such additional relief as the Court deems fair and just.

COUNT II
(Statutory Ultra Vires Acts)

71 Plaintiffs repeat and reallege the allegations contained in Paragraphs 1 through 70 of this Complaint as though fully set forth in this Paragraph 71.

72 The above acts and conduct of defendants have been taken without lawful authority, capacity, or power and will continue unless enjoined.

73 Section 103.15 of the General Not for Profit Corporation Act of 1986 allows this Court to enjoin defendants' unlawful acts.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray for the following relief:

A. A temporary, preliminary and permanent injunction enjoining defendants from the following:

(1) Holding a meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors in violation of Terra Foundation's by-laws;

(2) Taking any action to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors or changing any committee assignment;

(3) Taking any action to close the Terra Museum in Chicago or move Terra Foundation or any of its assets outside the State of Illinois; and

(4) Taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation.

B. The appointment of a receiver to operate and maintain Terra Foundation pursuant to the Court's equitable powers and the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act of 1986 (805 ILCS 105/101.01 et seq. (West 1995)).

C. An accounting of all assets of the Terra Museum and Terra Foundation.

D. For such additional relief as the Court deems fair and just.

COUNT III
(Breach of Fiduciary Duty)

74 Plaintiffs repeat and reallege the allegations contained in Paragraphs 1 through 73 of this Complaint as though fully set forth in this Paragraph 74.

75 By virtue of their positions as directors and/or officers of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker owed fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois to act in their interests by furthering the charitable purpose and mission started by Dan Terra more than twenty years ago.

76 Defendants Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker breached their fiduciary duties by acting in a manner that was intended to further their own personal interests to the detriment of the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the charitable trust. Defendants improper conduct included, but is not limited to, the following acts:

a. Mismanaging Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed;

b. Seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer the art to some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals;

c. Attempting to defeat Buntrock's re-election as director to enable defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois contrary to Illinois law;

d. Contrary to the by-laws of Terra Foundation, attempting to improperly reschedule the vote for the election of directors to ensure that defendants have enough votes to defeat Buntrock's nomination and therefore further their personal agenda to the detriment of the intended beneficiaries of Terra Foundation.

77 The foregoing breaches of fiduciary duty of Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker have caused, and will continue to cause, irreparable harm to Terra Foundation, and irreparable harm to the people of Illinois, as the beneficiaries of the public trust by endangering the future of Terra Foundation and the continued viability of Terra Museum in Chicago as a unique center for American art.

78 Plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray for the following relief:

A. A declaration that:

(1) Daniel Terra created Terra Foundation for the benefit of the people of Illinois on or before December 13, 1978;

(2) The intent of Terra in creating Terra Foundation was to operate a museum of American art in the Chicago area for the benefit of the people of Illinois;

(3) Defendants have no authority to close Terra Museum in Chicago or transfer the museum or its art to Washington, D.C. or any other location outside of Illinois;

(4) The closure of Terra Museum in Chicago or the transfer of the museum or its art to Washington, D.C. or any other location outside of Illinois would violate the Illinois Charitable Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/1 et seq. (West 1995)) and the Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act of 1986 (805 ILCS 105/101.01 et seq. (West 1995)).

(5) Defendants Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker have breached their fiduciary duty to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of Terra Foundation;

(6) Irreparable injury will result to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of Terra Foundation if defendants are permitted to continue breaching their fiduciary duties;

(7) Defendants have acted improperly and breached their fiduciary duties by seeking to defeat Mr. Buntrock's re-election as director in order to further their own agenda;

(8) The letter sent by Ratner to the members of the Board of Directors dated September 15, 2000 is a nullity and does not comply with the by-laws of Terra Foundation for scheduling a meeting of the Board of Directors for the election of directors and/or officers.

B. A temporary, preliminary and permanent injunction enjoining defendants from the following:

(1) Holding a meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors in violation of Terra Foundation's by-laws;

(2) Taking any action to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors or changing any committee assignment;

(3) Taking any action to close the Terra Museum in Chicago or move Terra Foundation or any of its assets outside the State of Illinois; and

(4) Taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation.

C. The appointment of a receiver to operate and maintain Terra Foundation pursuant to the Court's equitable powers and the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act of 1986 (805 ILCS 105/101.01 et seq. (West 1995)).

D. An accounting of all assets of the Terra Museum and Terra Foundation.

E. For such additional relief as the Court deems fair and just.

COUNT IV
(Inducing A Breach of Fiduciary Duty)

79 Plaintiffs repeat and reallege the allegations contained in Paragraphs 1 through 78 of this Complaint as though fully set forth in this Paragraph 79.

80 As set forth more fully above, defendants Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker breached their fiduciary duties by acting in a manner that was intended to further their own personal interests to the detriment of the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the charitable trust established by Dan Terra. Defendants improper conduct included, but is not limited to, the following acts:

a. Intentionally mismanaging Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed;

b. Seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer or re-establish the museum to Washington, D.C. or some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals;

c. Attempting to defeat Buntrock's re-election as director to enable defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois;

d. Attempting to improperly reschedule the vote for the election of directors to ensure that defendants have enough votes to defeat Buntrock's nomination and therefore further their personal agenda to the detriment of the intended beneficiaries of Terra Foundation

81 Defendant Mr. Michaeli colluded with Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker in committing breaches of fiduciary duty, or otherwise induced or participated in their breaches of duty to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois as the various ways, including, but not limited to the following:

a. Knowingly providing advice to Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson that was contrary to the fiduciary duties owed by them as directors of Terra Foundation;

b. Acting with Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson to make decisions for Terra Foundation in contravention of the by-laws of Terra Foundation;

c. Advising Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson to take action relating to Terra Foundation that constituted waste and mismanagement in an attempt to justify the closure of Terra Museum in contravention of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois;

d. Colluding with or advising Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson in the decision to replace Jim Collins and the law firm of Bell, Boyd & Lloyd in order to gain control over the operations of Terra Foundation for their own improper purpose in contravention of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois;

e. Colluding with, advising or participating in the plan to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Board of Directors in order to remove opposition to their plan to close Terra Museum in Chicago and move Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. in contravention of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois;

82 The conduct of Mr. Michaeli has caused, and will continue to cause, damage to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois. If the conduct of Mr. Michaeli is not stopped, the public trust created by Dan Terra may be destroyed to the detriment of the people of Illinois.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray for the following relief:

A. A temporary, preliminary and permanent injunction enjoining Mr. Michaeli, his agents or assigns from colluding with, inducing or participating in any further breaches of fiduciary duty with Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker.

B. An award of exemplary damages for Mr. Michaeli's intentional, deliberate, and ongoing inducement of Judith Terra's, Sen. Simpson's and Mr. Tucker's breaches of its fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation.

American-Art Museum Opening in Chicago

By GRACE GLUECK
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, April 19 — For a cultural institution, the Terra Museum of American Art has had a meteoric career. The latest entry in what seems to be an increasing trend toward private museums, it started out seven years ago with a highly personal selection of paintings — dating mainly from 1850 to 1900 — installed in a former florist's shop in nearby Evanston. Tuesday, at four times its original size and with holdings more oriented to the needs of a public institution, it opens in a pair of elegantly refurbished buildings on North Michigan Avenue, part of a $25 million real-estate package in the heart of Chicago's "Magnificent Mile."

"Someone said that Dan Terra has made up his mind he'll be a force in American art, and I don't deny it," Mr. Terra said. The museum's ebullient founder is a 75-year-old industrialist who since 1981 has been a cultural ambassador-at-large for President Reagan.

"Sure, I suppose you could characterize the museum as a personal monument," he said. "But what's exciting is that it's a deep commitment. There's not another museum of American art within 400 miles of Chicago, and we have a real educational job to do."

Although Mr. Terra and his wife, Adeline, who died in 1982, had been acquiring 18th- and 19th-century American paintings for many years, he came to national attention as a collector in 1982 by paying $3.25 million for Samuel F. B. Morse's 1832 canvas "The Gallery of the Louvre." It was then the highest auction price ever paid for an American work of art. The painting stars in the museum's opening show, which combines works from the Terra collection with a distinguished group borrowed from the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. "God knows what we'd pay for the Morse today," said Mr. Terra, whose holdings of some 800 works are valued, for insurance purposes, at more than $100 million. "It's not at all unusual to spend $2.5 to $3 million for top American paintings now."

Stores Help Pay Expenses

The new museum at present occupies two of the four buildings on North Michigan Avenue owned by Mr. Terra. The elegant five-story entrance building at No. 664, a former Helena Rubinstein salon of rather shallow interior space, was gutted and handsomely redone by the architect Larry Booth. Entrance is through a ground-floor museum bookshop, and a ramp-and-stair system with a dramatic arrangement of railings guides the viewer up the four gallery levels. A four-story glass window on the facade gives a full view of the bustling street and the Saks Fifth Avenue store across from the museum.

The entrance building is connected to an older, 11-story structure next door, which also houses four floors of galleries, along with museum offices and education, library and workshop facilities. A shoe store that occupies the ground floor will remain for the present, since its lease helps pay for the museum's operation.

"I got the idea from Paul Mellon's Yale Center for British Art in New Haven, which has retail stores on its ground level," Mr. Terra said.

The two other Terra-owned buildings, one across the street to the south, the other immediately north of the two now used for the museum, will figure in later plans. At present, they are leased to retail tenants who sell shoes, haberdashery, popcorn and books and produce a substantial income for the new museum. So far, real estate and renovation expenses have cost Mr. Terra and his son, James, an electronics entrepreneur, more than $30 million, with an additional $3 million contributed by individuals and corporations.

Before making firm plans for the new facility, Mr. Terra — the founder, president and chief executive officer of Lawter Chemicals Inc. — had thought of merging his collection with the Art Institute of Chicago, which has impressive holdings in American art and is building a new wing to house them. But after some months of negotiations, discussions broke off.

"The hang-up was that I insisted that we have our own board, raise our own money and make our own decisions," Mr. Terra said, then laughed. "Many times since, I've wondered if I didn't make a mistake."

The director of the Art Institute, James Wood, said: "He really wanted to have his own identity. After all, there's only so much you can do in an existing institution. But as a separate museum, there's a wonderful role he can play. In Chicago, we don't have many of the smaller, more specially focused institutions that are a vital part of urban culture."

'Flabbergasted by the Interest'

It was the success of the small museum in low-profile Evanston that brought about the move to Chicago, Mr. Terra said. "After we started the Evanston museum, I was flabbergasted by the interest it excited and the number of people who showed up for symposia we held. We said to ourselves, if this excitement exists, now would be the time to open a museum with the highest visibility and accessibility, in Chicago. So we began to broaden the collection from a public viewpoint, and we bought the first property on Michigan Avenue in 1981."

He rejected the idea of seeking city-owned park land for the museum because — partly inspired by the Whitney Museum branches in New York — he wanted it in a "high density" area, Mr. Terra said. "I hope it draws lots of people who have never seen a museum or looked at American art before," he said. "But we're going to have to prove that locating a museum of this character on a very valuable commercial piece of land is viable. If we do it well, the public will support it."

If the present facilities meet Mr. Terra's hopes in terms of such support, there will be a Phase 2 and then a Phase 3 to the project.

Actually, Phase 2 is already in the planning stage. It would involve razing the low structure immediately to the north of the entrance building, and putting up a nine-story one instead. Cantilevering over the top of the entrance building, it would not only add to the present exhibition space, but would provide room for a 900-seat concert hall, which Mr. Terra said was sorely needed in Chicago. Altogether the museum's space would be increased to around 100,000 square feet from its present 60,000. To carry out these plans, some $25 million will be sought from individuals, corporations and foundations.

Phase 3: Unification

Phase 3, perhaps to be the subject of an architectural competition, would presumably involve unification of the various buildings into a large museum complex. "When all the elements are in place, we project an income of $3 million a year from retail tenants," the museum's director, Michael H. Sanden, said. "It will help considerably toward operational expenses."

So far Mr. Terra, whose collection will not actually be given to the museum until after his death, has borne the brunt of those expenses. The Evanston museum, which will be retained as a branch, costs $900,000 a year, and it is hoped that corporate sponsorship can be found for it. Estimated costs for both Evanston and Chicago are between $3 million and $4 million a year. "I sell properties and securities and I borrow," Mr. Terra said. "I don't beg, I don't steal, but I do everything else."

The museum's staff now comprises some 30 professionals, headed by Mr. Sanden and including three curators and a director of education. "We need to build strong education and exhibition programs so that people don't think of the Terra as just one man's collection," Mr. Sanden said.

There is general agreement, too, that the six-member board, closely associated with Mr. Terra, needs broadening. Already, on the educational side, the museum runs symposiums for the general public as well as programs for schoolteachers and children. On the exhibition side, apart from the collection itself, several shows are being organized, among them one on the Ashcan school and another on the work of William Merritt Chase. In December, a show of art by three generations of the Wyeth family, now in the Soviet Union, is to open at the Terra.

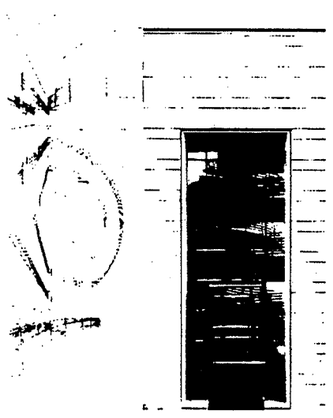
DANIEL J. TERRA

America's first ambassador-at-large for cultural affairs pursues the best in American painting for his new museum in Chicago

By Dodie Kazanjian

Ambassador Terra, above, on the dramatic central staircase of his Chicago museum. Below: Details of interior ramp and elevation by architect Laurence Booth.



We have more frontage on North Michigan Avenue than Neiman-Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Field's, Lord & Taylor, or—what's the name of that other one?—Bloomingdale's," says Daniel J. Terra looking down from the rooftop of his new Terra Museum of American Art. Even the wind that Chicago is famous for and subzero winter weather can't stifle his enthusiasm. "We have more frontage than the Whitney. Yes, we do. But we don't have as much frontage as the Metropolitan . . . yet," he laughs uproariously. His explosive laugh has an infectious quality that makes any listener want to join in.

For more than three years Ambassador Terra and I have been talking about the opening of his North Michigan Avenue museum. Beneath us on this cold January day, the museum that bears his name is far from finished. The skeleton of a ramp system is in place, but welding, hammering, plastering, and painting continue at an accelerated pace so that the museum can be ready for its scheduled opening on April 21. (See the opening feature of this issue for a selection of American Impressionist paintings from the museum.) We, along with his wife, Judith, are on top of the tallest of four buildings (eleven stories) that will make up the Terra Museum. These buildings take up 245 feet along Chicago's Magnificent Mile where Terra plans to attract as many as he can of the estimated 14.5 million pedestrians who pass by here every year. He says the museum "will ultimately be the tallest known art museum. This land is so valuable, we had to go vertical." His idea is to bring American art to the people. That's why he picked a site on the avenue that has one of the highest pedestrian traffic counts in the nation, second only to Fifth Avenue between 48th and 57th streets.

Don't be fooled by Dan Terra's age, 75, or his full white head of hair or his diminutive stature. He has more energy than a Fourth of July firecracker. He is, first of all, chairman of his own company, Lawter International, the printing-ink manufacturing company in Northbrook, Illinois, which he started in the 1930s. The son of an immigrant Italian lithographer, Terra at age 25 pioneered a printing process with fast-drying ink that "revolutionized magazine printing" and made it possible to substantially shorten deadlines "so that news items in national magazines wouldn't be stale by the time the magazines came out." In 1936, using his new process, Life magazine began publication. "I had a cot for a six-week period in the plant where it was being printed so I could be there all night if they had problems."

In 1981, President Reagan appointed him America's first ambassador-at-large for cultural affairs. His office is at the State Department, and last year he gave 109 speeches around the world promoting the importance of America's cultural achievements and urging private-sector support for the arts in this country. And to make sure his museum opens on time, he's been commuting for the past year at least twice a week between his two homes in Washington and Kenilworth, near Chicago.

A longtime collector of American paintings, Terra has had a museum in Evanston, Illinois, since 1980 (it will remain open as a branch of the new one on North Michigan Avenue). His first wife, the late Adeline Evans Richards, was an art historian and inspired Terra to begin collecting more than fifty years ago. But it wasn't until a New York dealer mentioned to him that there wasn't a museum of American art within 400 miles of Chicago that he got the idea to open his own museum. "One of the problems with the little museum in Evanston is its location," he says. "We don't even have bus service there on Sundays, and weekends are the biggest part of museum attendance. We were in a quiet hard-to-find spot, and we were getting excellent crowds. So we decided that we had to go to the other extreme. Imagine what American art would draw if you had the best location. And when you start thinking in terms of Chicago, the best location has to be North Michigan Avenue."

Many of Dan Terra's paintings—his collection now numbers more than eight hundred important American works—are on loan elsewhere and are being reassembled for the museum opening. The most famous, The Gallery of the Louvre by Samuel F. B. Morse ("It's the icon of America," he says), which he purchased in 1982 for $3.25 million—a then-record price for an American painting—is returning from Cincinnati. Brace's Rock, Brace's Cove by Fitz Hugh Lane, which National Gallery Deputy Director John Wilmerding says is one of the finest examples of Luminism, and The Jolly Flatboatmen by George Caleb Bingham are being hand-carried from Sweden. And Lilies by Frederick Carl Frieseke, Terra's most recent acquisition, is being framed at the Berry Hill Gallery in New York, but will be ready on time. The opening exhibition, "A Proud Heritage: Two Centuries of American Art," will feature about a hundred paintings from the Terra collection along with more than sixty major paintings from the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts in Philadelphia. ("It's the longest-standing museum of American art in the country, and we're the newest," explains Terra.) "It's very unusual for the Pennsylvania Academy to lend a substantial group of paintings like this," says Michael Sandin, director of the Terra Museum and former director of the Oklahoma Art Center.

The museum opening in April is the first phase of a three-phase plan and will involve two of the existing four buildings—a 1927 limestone building by architect Philip B. Maher and the five-story building that Helena Rubenstein built in 1957. The third building sits next to the Helena Rubenstein building to the north, and the fourth is across Erie Street to the south. Architect Laurence Booth of the noted Chicago firm Booth/Hansen & Associates has gutted the interior of the eleven-story corner building and connected it with a new five-story building constructed on the foundations of the Helena Rubenstein building. "We wanted something that would catch people's attention," says Booth, "so we chose white Vermont marble to brighten that stuffy part of the avenue. We wanted it to be appropriately visible, exciting and intriguing, and at the same time not jarring and aggressive—creating the appropriate presence that establishes the Terra as a major institution in Chicago."

Booth's white marble building houses the main entrance and a winding ramp that runs from top to bottom. Descending through the interior, the ramp—unlike the Guggenheim's spiral, it's more like a sculpture combining stairs and ramps—makes a dramatic statement. "Larry Booth deserves the credit for coming up with the ramp system," says Dan Terra. "It is really quite brilliant because it allows plenty of wall space for large paintings and for receptions, too."

The museum's second phase is expected to begin in 1988. This will involve tearing down the third building to the north and replacing it with a new structure that will connect with and add four stories to the white marble center building. "The second phase has to unify the three buildings," says Ambassador Terra. The third and final phase will involve the fourth building across Erie Street and will not begin until the second phase is finished.

Dan Terra's passion for Lilies is apparent. "This is a drop-dead picture. It really is. Frieseke didn't always make it but this time he was absolutely superb. And there isn't anybody in American art who I think paints these magnificent flowers like Frieseke did. And beautiful, beautiful female figures."

Later during lunch Terra says, "I know the story behind all the paintings before I buy them," he says. For instance, if there is a house in the painting, the ambassador often visits the site before buying the painting.

"That's part of learning what these artists were all about because of all the information you can get out of these visits. We went to Shinnecock Hall [the Long Island home of William Merritt Chase] and spent two days at that house just exploring it before we bought that great Chase pastel. It's so fabulous." He lowers his voice to a near whisper and says, "Let me tell you, as great he was, Degas never did any better."

You can't talk about the Terra collection without mentioning Maurice Prendergast. "The last non-American paintings we collected were the French Impressionists, and there was something about Prendergast that resembled the Impressionists and Post-Impressionists," says Terra. He has acquired about eighty works (considered to be the most comprehensive collection) by Prendergast, 58 of which are monotypes. These are now traveling in a show that first opened at the National Gallery of Art in Washington in January 1985.

In the past year Daniel Terra has bought more than twenty important works to fill gaps in his collection. Through one collector in Zürich he found several paintings by early modern artists Marsden Hartley, Joseph Stella, Stuart Davis, and Patrick Henry Bruce. "I don't think it's compulsive buying," he says. "I think it's very careful, deliberately planned buying to fill out the collection. There are always gaps in all of these periods, and that acquisition was a fine step forward in the early modern collection.

"I'm aware of where probably ninety percent of the last remaining American historical works, perhaps a hundred, are in private hands. I never stop trying to negotiate a purchase." Right now he's trying to obtain several

Chairman and President
Terra Foundation for the Arts
664 N. Michigan Avenue
Chicago, IL 60611

Dear Dr. Tucker:

We are in receipt of Donald H. Ratner's letter of August 11, 2000. In that letter, Mr. Ratner, purporting to speak for you, has indicated that the Foundation will not pay Mayer, Brown & Platt "for any time incurred in dealing with or responding to any issues not specifically requested by either Paul Tucker or Donald Ratner as his agent." We have spoken to Mr. Ratner about this letter. He has indicated to us that the Foundation wishes to reduce the substantial level of its professional fees; he has suggested that you intend to make our task easier and less time consuming by encouraging us to decline to communicate with other officers and directors.

With all due respect to you and Mr. Ratner, we conclude that we cannot continue to act as special counsel to the Foundation under these circumstances and therefore withdraw from our representation. In our original engagement letter of December 11, 1996, sent to us by Catherine A. Stevens on behalf of Helene Ahrweiler, Chairman of the Board, and signed by Ms. Ahrweiler and ourselves, the Foundation requested that we act as special counsel to the Foundation. It was clear that the client was the Foundation, not merely its President and Chairman. That letter also made clear that we were to provide legal advice and representation to the Board of the Foundation. As special counsel, we have worked with three different Chairmen, a number of board members, staff and counsel. We owe professional obligations to the institution and all its directors. It would not be consistent with our professional obligations to decline to respond to the concerns of directors.

Most recently, we have been engaged in three tasks. We have been providing information to your new general counsel at Winston & Strawn. We have represented the Foundation in connection with the administration of the Estate of Ambassador Terra (which is ready to close, awaiting only final action by the Foundation). We have given advice to the Foundation with regard to its claim as a member of the "holder class" in the Mercury Finance bankruptcy matter.

As to the transition to new general counsel, we have made all of our files available to your new counsel. They and Mr. Ratner have examined them extensively and requested voluminous copies. We have complied with all of their requests, and they have acknowledged our complete cooperation. These files remain available to you and your counsel.

As to the Estate of Daniel Terra, you have asked your new general counsel to review the matters as to which we were previously asked to give counsel. We should arrange for a prompt substitution of counsel in the Estate so that the Foundation can be represented by Winston & Strawn in these matters. You do not require both firms.

We understand that Winston & Strawn has a potential conflict of interest in the Mercury bankruptcy. Note, however, that we have never filed an appearance in any of these matters, but have gathered information from Bell, Boyd & Lloyd and other sources. Under these circumstances, we recommend that you retain another firm to act as special counsel to advise you with respect to these matters.

We have enjoyed the opportunity to work with the Terra Foundation for the Arts.

Very truly yours,

Tyrone C. Fahner

A director elected to fill a vacancy shall be elected for the unexpired term of his predecessor in office, and a director elected by reason of an increase in the number of directors shall be elected for a term expiring on the date of the next annual meeting of the Board of Directors.

Section 9. Informal Action by Directors. Unless specifically prohibited by the articles of incorporation or bylaws, any action required to be taken at a meeting of the board of directors, or any other action which may be taken at a meeting of the board of directors or any committee thereof, may be taken without a meeting if a consent in writing, setting forth the action so taken, shall be signed by all the directors entitled to vote with respect to the subject matter thereof, or by all the members of such committee, as the case may be. Any such consent signed by all the directors or all the members of the committee shall have the same effect as a unanimous vote, and may be stated as such in any document filed with the Secretary of State.

Section 10. Participation by Telecommunications Equipment. Directors or nondirector committee members may participate in and act at any meeting of the board or committee through the use of a conference telephone or other communications equipment by means of which all persons participating in the meeting can communicate with each other. Participation in such meeting shall constitute attendance and presence in person at the meeting of the person or persons so participating.

Section 11. Executive Committee. The board of directors may, by resolution passed by a majority of the whole board, designate an executive committee consisting of two or more of the directors of the corporation. The executive committee shall have and may exercise all the authority of the board of directors in the management of the corporation between meetings of the board of directors, provided the committee shall not have the authority of the board of directors in reference to (a) amending the articles of incorporation, (b) adopting a plan of merger or adopting a plan of consolidation with another corporation or corporations, (c) authorizing the sale, lease, exchange or mortgage of all or substantially all of the property and assets of the corporation, (d) authorizing the voluntary dissolution of the corporation or revoking proceedings therefor, (e) adopting a plan for the distribution of the assets of the corporation, (f) amending, altering or repealing the bylaws of the corporation, (g) electing, appointing or removing any director or officer of the corporation or any member of the executive committee or (h) amending, altering or repealing any resolution of the board of directors which by its terms provides that it shall not be amended, altered or repealed by the executive committee. The executive committee shall keep minutes of each of its meetings and report the same at the next meeting of the board of directors.

Section 12. Other Committees. The board of directors may from time to time establish other committees and specify the scope of their authority.

Section 13. Compensation. Directors as such shall not receive any stated salaries for their services, but by resolution of the Board of Directors, a fixed sum may, and expenses of attendance, if any, shall be allowed for attendance at each regular or special meeting of the Board or committee thereof; except that nothing herein contained shall be construed to preclude any director from serving the corporation in any other capacity and receiving compensation therefor.

ARTICLE IV

Officers

Section 1. Officers. The officers of the corporation shall be a chairman, one or more vice chairmen, a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary and a treasurer. The Board of Directors may appoint such other officers, including one or more assistant secretaries and one or more assistant treasurers as it shall deem desirable, such appointed officers to have the authority to perform the duties prescribed from time to time by the Board of Directors. Each elected officer shall hold office until the next annual meeting of the Board of Directors or until his successor shall have been duly elected and shall have qualified. Election or appointment of an officer or agent shall not of itself create contract rights.

Section 3. Removal. Any officer or agent elected or appointed by the Board of Directors may be removed by the Board of Directors whenever in its judgment the best interests of the corporation would be served thereby, but such removal shall be without prejudice to the contract rights, if any, of the person removed.

Section 4. Chairman. The chairman shall be the chief executive officer of the corporation and shall in general supervise and control all of the affairs of the corporation. He shall preside at all meetings of the Board of Directors. He shall have the power to execute all documents that the board of directors has authorized to be executed, except in cases where the signing and execution thereof shall be expressly delegated by the board of directors or by these bylaws to some other officer or agent of the corporation, or shall be required by law to be otherwise signed or executed, and in general shall perform all duties incident to the office of chairman and such other duties as the board of directors may from time to time prescribe.

These duties shall not include the duty to preside at meetings of the Board of Directors in the event of the absence, inability or refusal to act of the chairman, which is expressly granted to the president. Each vice chairman shall perform such other duties as from time to time may be assigned to him by the chairman or the Board of Directors.

Section 6. President. The president shall be the principal operating officer of the corporation and shall in general supervise and control all the day-to-day business and affairs of the corporation. In the absence of the chairman or in the event of his inability or refusal to

He may sign, with the secretary or any other proper officer of the corporation authorized by the Board of Directors, any deed, mortgages, bonds, contracts, or other instruments which the Board of Directors have authorized to be executed, except in cases where the signing and execution thereof shall be expressly delegated by the Board of Directors or by these Bylaws or by statute to some other officer or agent of the corporation; and in general shall perform all duties incident to the office of president and such other duties as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors from time to time.

Section 7. Vice Presidents. In the absence of the president or in the event of the inability or refusal to act of the president, the vice presidents in the order designated by the Board of Directors (or if none, in the order of election) shall perform the duties of the president, and when so acting shall have all the powers of the president. Each vice president shall perform such other duties as from time to time may be assigned to him by the president or by the Board of Directors.

Section 8. Treasurer. If required by the Board of Directors, the treasurer shall give a bond for the faithful discharge of his duties in such sum and with such surety or sureties as the Board of Directors shall determine. He shall have charge and custody of and be responsible for all funds and securities of the corporation; receive and give receipts for moneys due and payable to the corporation from any source whatsoever, and deposit all such moneys in the name of the corporation and in such banks, trust companies or other depositories as shall be selected in accordance with the provisions of ARTICLE V of these Bylaws; and in general perform all the duties incident to the office of treasurer and such other duties as from time to time may be assigned to him by the president or by the Board of Directors.

Section 9. Secretary. The secretary shall keep minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors in one or more books provided for that purpose; see that all notices are duly given in accordance with the provisions of these Bylaws or as required by law; be custodian of the corporate records and of the seal of the corporation and see that the seal of the corporation is affixed to all documents, the execution of which on behalf of the corporation under its seal is duly authorized in accordance with the provisions of these Bylaws; and in general perform all duties as from time to time may be assigned to him by the president or by the Board of Directors.

Section 10. Assistant Treasurers and Assistant Secretaries. If required by the Board of Directors, the assistant treasurers shall give bonds for the faithful discharge of their duties in such sums and with such sureties as the Board of Directors shall determine. The assistant treasurers and assistant secretaries, in general, shall perform such duties as shall be assigned to them by the treasurer or the secretary, as the case may be, or by the president or the Board of Directors.

Section 2. Checks, Drafts, Etc. All checks, drafts or other orders for the payment of money, notes or other evidences of indebtedness issued in the name of the corporation, shall be signed by such officer or officers, agent or agents of the corporation and in such manner as shall from time to time be determined by resolution of the Board of Directors. In the absence of such determination by the Board of Directors, such instruments shall be signed by any two elected officers of the corporation.

Section 3. Deposits. All funds of the corporation shall be deposited from time to time to the credit of the corporation in such banks, trust companies or other depositaries as the Board of Directors may select.

Section 4. Gifts. The Board of Directors may accept on behalf of the corporation any contribution, gift, bequest or devise for the general purposes or for any special purpose of the corporation.

Section 5. Loans. No loan of money shall be contracted on behalf of the corporation and no evidence of indebtedness shall be issued in its name unless authorized by the board of directors. Such authority may be general or confined to specific instances.

ARTICLE VI

Books and Records

The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of account and shall also keep minutes of the proceedings of its Board of Directors and its committees.

Waiver of Notice

Whenever any notice whatever is required to be given under the provisions of the General Not For Profit Corporation Act of Illinois or under the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation or the Bylaws of the corporation, a waiver thereof in writing signed by the person or persons entitled to such notice, whether before or after the time stated therein, shall be deemed equivalent to the giving of such notice.

ARTICLE X

Indemnification

(a) The corporation shall indemnify any and all of its directors or officers or the directors or members of the boards or committees of the constituent museums or schools of the corporation or any person who may have served at its request or by its election as a director or officer of another corporation (an "indemnified person") against expenses actually and necessarily incurred by them in connection with the defense or settlement of any action, suit or proceeding in which they, or any of them, are made parties, or a party, by reason of being or having been an indemnified person except in relation to matters as to which any such indemnified person shall be adjudged in such action, suit or proceeding to be liable for willful misconduct in the performance of duty and to such matters as shall be settled by agreement predicted on the existence of such liability.

(b) Except as provided in paragraph (a) above, the termination of any litigation by judgment, settlement, conviction or upon a plea of nolo contendre, or its equivalent, shall not create a presumption that the person seeking indemnification did not meet the applicable indemnification standard as set forth in paragraph (a) above.

(c) Advances may be made by the corporation against costs, expenses and fees arising out of, or in connection with, such litigation at the discretion of, and upon such terms (but always subject to the final determination of a person's right to indemnification) as may be determined by the Board of Directors.

(d) The right of indemnification provided hereunder shall not be deemed exclusive of any other right to which any person may be entitled, or of any other indemnification which may lawfully be granted to any person in addition to the indemnification provided hereunder. Indemnification provided hereunder shall, in the case of the death of the person entitled to indemnification, inure to the benefit of his heirs, executors or other lawful representative.

(e) The corporation may purchase and maintain insurance on behalf of any and all of its indemnified persons against any liability, incurred by them by reason of being or having been an indemnified person, whether or not the corporation would have the power to indemnify them against such liability or settlement under the provisions of this ARTICLE X.

ARTICLE XI

Interchangeability

Whenever the context requires or permits, the gender and number of words shall be interchangeable.

ARTICLE XII

Amendments to Bylaws

These Bylaws may be altered, amended or repealed and new Bylaws may be adopted by a majority of the directors then in office and present at any regular meeting or at any special meeting, if at least two days' written notice is given of intention to alter, amend or repeal or to adopt new Bylaws at such meeting.

Dear John

Having just returned from out of town, I am disheartened about the news concerning Ginny Spindler.

John, Ginny worked tirelessly on the Sibal Resource Guide. I was very impressed with her work and Rachel's as well. In fact, without their tireless efforts it would not have been a worthwhile publication. In fact, it would have been an embarrassment to the Foundation.

Your letter to Ginny was, from my point of view, unkind and uncalled for. It distressed me to see people treated in such a manner.

In my dealings with her on education issues, I believe she has always gone "above and beyond" her duties.

I am leaving today for my Aunt's funeral in Pittsburgh.

But I couldn't leave without letting you and the Board know my feelings and deep concerns.

November 7, 1999 CONFIDENTIAL

MEMORANDUM to the Board of the Terra Foundation

On my return from Moscow, I find the concerns that I expressed to all of you both prior to our meeting and at the meeting itself have now come true. We are once again embarked on an argument that is seriously dividing the Board and keeping us from carrying on the fulfillment of our mandate. This is due in my opinion to the hasty action of transferring authorities without each of the members taking the time to get properly briefed on the functions and the activities of the previous Board leadership. I am not counting in this the charges made by Alan Simpson, which I can only describe as off the wall. Thus, after what I had seen as progress at our recent retreat, we are now engaged in a review of past history and not focused on the search for a President. So be it.

I would like to state for the record that I agree with the description of events and actions in Jim Collins' memorandum. I have always said to you that, despite my occasional differences with Jim, this Foundation owes him a debt of gratitude for the effective and scrupulously honest way that he has brought our finances together. If anything, his memo understates the efficient and creative effort that he and his colleagues made to assure that the intentions of Dan Terra (as he directly related it to me) to leave the bulk of his estate to this Foundation, was carried out. Lest we forget, that was and is the duty of all those on this Board. (Here I must say that I found Alan's statements totally out of line and contrary to the law under which this Foundation is chartered in the State of Illinois.) Some of our new members might not have been present when we briefed the Board (and sought appropriate approval) on the various stages of the settlement of the estate and the sale of assets. The reason for the participation of special counsel—Scott McCue and Ty Fahner—a former Attorney General of Illinois—was to assure ourselves that our duties were being properly carried out. Since Dan had put me on the Lawter Board, I was particularly concerned that there might even be the appearance of a conflict of interest with my position as President/Chairman of the Foundation. On the advice of special counsel, I was always careful to tell my colleagues what actions were proper for me to take and those on which I had to recuse myself. Jim did the same. But we were both able to work with the Lawter Board to get them first to buy back the estate shares and then, finally, to help in the mutually advantageous sale of Lawter itself to Eastman Chemical. Jim's efforts in all these endeavors, to say nothing of his handling of Dan's outstanding bank loans, saved this Foundation millions of dollars in assets which might have been lost or reduced in value. These efforts were at all times in the interest of this Foundation. And I reject any notion that his efforts on our behalf met anything other than the highest ethical standards.

Several of you have commented on the question of continuity. As I informed you, I was in the process of attempting to effect a seamless transition on the financial side by hiring A.T. Kearney to search for a Vice President for Finance and Administration in order to provide the necessary continuity in the functions that Jim had performed. I did this with complete accord of the Finance Committee even though we all recognized that such a hire should logically follow that of the President. The intention was to assure that our Finance Committee and Chairman would have the most competent professional advice at all times. This was naturally to be followed by the election of a Board member as Treasurer. I hope this process will continue but I fear our current controversy may make that search more difficult. In any case, it is urgent to build into the Foundation staff an ability to backstop our Finance Committee and to look after our resources properly.

With respect to the Secretary, Stephanie should obviously have access to all records. This too was in process as I read Dean's memo after his conversations with a senior partner in Bell/Boyd. Incidentally, these records are not only at Bell/Boyd, as Cathy could have told anyone willing to be briefed. They are also indexed and in the possession of the Foundation. On the subject of counsel, I should point out that Jim Collins was not our sole resource at Bell/Boyd. Rick Sevcik has been of invaluable assistance to us on matters as varied as getting employment manuals and human relations policies in place in the Chicago Museum to settling employment issues in France and the U.S. Others in the firm have helped us with many problems that have arisen because the Foundation and its properties were not in the best shape from a documentary and regulatory point of view when Dan died. He had many great qualities but as with other founders he was more focused on long-term objectives and was very impatient with what he considered bureaucratic detail. We can thank Jim and his staff for getting much of this straightened out, with help from Cathy. On personnel issues, several of these are still outstanding and require continuity of treatment.

As you all know, I spent a great amount of time over the last six months, particularly on the problems of Chicago. It is essential that these matters be dealt with and followed through along the lines that on behalf of the Foundation I have set out contractually with John Neff. We should not let our current discussions deflect us from the progress that has been made. I clearly have much less concern about MAAG than I do about Chicago which is not well led. Again, someone must pick up with Cathy to prevent this situation from deteriorating.

You may ask if I have any positive suggestions. My feeling at this point is that the Chairman/President should call another Board meeting prior to January 18th to review our proposed candidates for President, the status of the search for a Vice President for Finance and Administration and thrash out the other matters before us. This would get us back to the point I thought we had reached at the end of our retreat.

Terra Foundation Board Meeting Minutes
August 24, 2000

In attendance by Conference Call:

Dr. Paul Tucker, Chair
Hon. Jacques Andreani
Mr. Dean Buntrock
Mrs. Margaret Daley
Senator Alan Simpson
Dr. Theodore Stebbins, Jr.
Dr. Stephanie Pace Marshall
Mrs. Judith Terra

By Invitation:
Mr. Mark Heatwole
Mr. Ralph Lerner

Staff:

Mr. Donald Ratner

By Invitation:

Dr. Derrick Cartwright
Dr. John Hallmark Neff

The meeting was called to order at 1:08 PM. Dr. Tucker indicated that the purpose was to review the four proposals and detailed data we had received from our four potential partners allow us to be better prepared for the September meeting. The minutes from the August 7, 2000 Strategic Plan meeting were reviewed and unanimously approved by the Strategic Planning Committee.

There were significant discussions around whether Giverny was "central" to the focus of the Foundation's mission. A decision was made to examine this question at the Board meeting in September.

Dr. Stebbins suggested that we had already decided on the central importance of Giverny.

Dr. Tucker reviewed the background that resulted in the decision of making Giverny central. Mr. Buntrock indicated that he saw that there is a difference between the importance of Giverny and making it central. Dr. Marshall discussed alternatives at this point:

1. Agree that there are unresolved issues and put them aside and then look at the proposals in front of us; or
2. Focus on the issues and then refer them back to a small group to make a presentation at the next meeting and end the call now.

Dr. Marshall agreed that we had not discussed the centrality of Giverny as a Board but had discussed it in Strategic Plan Committee meetings and that Committee has come to the conclusion of Giverny as being central.

Dr. Marshall also suggested we ask Helene to write "her perception of Dan's vision of Giverny". In other words, what is the purpose of Giverny?

Dr. Cartwright indicated that he has Helene's paper and will send it out as soon as Helene reviews it.

The Board asked Dr. Cartwright to write his view of Giverny's future relating to education.

Mrs. Daly said that she did not recall that we had discussed "abandoning" Chicago.

Dr. Tucker indicated that the thinking had gone along these lines:

- The Chicago facility needs a great deal of money to be brought up to par with other museums;
- There are problems with the Chicago museum's configuration;
- We have a problem attracting attendance in Chicago;
- There is considerable cost involved in supporting the Chicago museum;
- The collection is not adequate to be split between two institutions;
- Therefore, the best way to maximize our resources and fulfill our mission is to align with another institution, close the Chicago museum and focus on Giverny and educational initiatives of the Foundation.

Mr. Buntrock said that we had never discussed this at the Board level.

Dr. Tucker agreed but noted that it was a conclusion of the Strategic Planning Committee and that they were going to make a recommendation to the Board.

Dr. Marshall said that we could make a decision on this call if we so chose. She further indicated that we should make sure that there are two issues on the agenda at the September meeting:

- Giverny as being central;
- Closing Chicago

Dr. Tucker suggested that we definitely make a decision in September.

Dr. Marshall suggested we change the order of the agenda to go through Ralph's contract. Mr. Andreani indicated that two of the proposals need more detail. Mr. Lerner then discussed the strategic alliance contract. One premise of his draft was that there would be no museum in the U.S. and that would relieve us of the administrative burden of running that museum. He also indicated that the education portion had not yet been sufficiently developed. And the final premise was that we would ultimately turn the works of art over to the new/aligned institution.

3. Get more information on the existing educational programs of the four institutions.

4. Reduce the four institutions to two or three and then focus on those and discuss.

In September we will need:

1. White papers on education from any Board member who would like to prepare one.

2. Educational information.

The meeting was adjourned at 4:00 PM.

Respectively submitted,

Defendants.	)

EMERGENCY MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

Plaintiffs, Dean L. Buntrock ("Buntrock") and Ronald Gidwitz ("Gidwitz"), Directors of the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("Terra Foundation" or "Foundation"), by their attorneys, Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd., respectfully move this Court for the entry of a temporary restraining order to maintain the status quo until this Court can rule on the merits of plaintiffs' claims. Specifically, plaintiffs seek an order restraining defendants from: (1) holding an illegal meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for this Sunday, September 24, 2000; (2) taking any action at the annual Board of Directors meeting scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, 2000, to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors and taking action to change any committee assignment; (3) closing the Terra Museum in Chicago; (4) transferring any assets or artwork of the Terra Museum or Terra Foundation outside of the State of Illinois; and (5) taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation, all until further order of Court. In support of this motion, plaintiffs submit their Verified Complaint and the exhibits attached thereto, and their memorandum of law in support of this motion, and further state as follows:

1. By this action, Buntrock and Gidwitz seek to enjoin defendants' continuing improper and wasteful conduct in connection with the management and operation of the Terra Foundation, an Illinois not-for-profit corporation dedicated to preserving and exhibiting American art, and to promoting the appreciation and awareness of American art in Illinois and, specifically, the Chicago area. Buntrock and Gidwitz are both directors of the Foundation committed to furthering these specific intended goals of the Foundation as recognized in its original articles of incorporation.

2. Contrary to the intended purpose of the Foundation, defendants have taken various actions in furtherance of a plan to gain control of the Foundation and use its assets to carry out their own personal agenda. In culmination of this improper and illegal plan, defendants have, in violation of the Foundation's by-laws, scheduled a Board of Directors' meeting for this Sunday, September 24, 2000 in France.

3. On information and belief, defendants plan to use the September 24, 2000 meeting to remove Buntrock from the Board of Directors because of his persistent criticism of defendants' mismanagement and waste of assets of the Foundation and their improper efforts to close the Chicago museum and, on information and belief, defendants intend to use the September 26 meeting to vote to close the Foundation's Chicago Museum and move the Foundation and its assets to Washington, D.C.

4. As set forth below and in the accompanying memorandum of law, Buntrock and Gidwitz meet all the requisite elements for the issuance of temporary injunctive relief under Illinois law. The issuance of a temporary restraining order is appropriate where the facts demonstrate a "fair question" that: (1) the party seeking relief has a protected right; (2) the party will suffer irreparable injury if injunctive relief is not granted; (3) the party has an inadequate remedy at law; and (4) there is a likelihood that the party seeking injunctive relief will succeed on the merits. Tierney v. Village of Schaumburg, 182 Ill. App. 3d 1055, 538 N.E.2d 904, 907 (1st Dist. 1989). Moreover, a temporary restraining order is properly issued where it is necessary to maintain the status quo. People's Gas, Light & Coke v. City of Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 3d 353, 355, 453 N.E.2d 740, 741 (1st Dist. 1983). Here, each of the above factors is met.

6. Plaintiffs will also suffer irreparable injury with no adequate remedy at law if temporary injunctive relief is not granted in this case. Under Illinois law, "an injury is irreparable when it is of such a nature that the injured party cannot be adequately compensated or when damages cannot be measured by any pecuniary standard." Falcon Ltd. v. Corr's Nat'l Beverages, Inc., 165 Ill. App. 3d 815, 820, 520 N.E.2d 831, 835 (1st Dist. 1987); A.W. Chesterton Co., Inc. v. Chesterton, 128 F.3d 1, 8-9 (5th Cir. 1997); Petrzilka v. Gorscak, 199 Ill. App. 3d 120, 124, 556 N.E.2d 1265 (2d Dist. 1990) (finding that showing irreparable harm "is the most common method of proving an inadequate remedy at law . . ."). Without this Court's intervention, defendants will be free to close the Terra Museum in Chicago, thereby violating the purpose of the Foundation and depriving the people of Illinois of the intended benefits of the museum. An improper closing of the museum will also result in a loss of jobs, as well as loss in goodwill of benefactors and patrons. Moreover, directors Buntrock and Gidwitz will be unable to fulfill their fiduciary duties to prevent the mismanagement of the Foundation by defendants without injunctive relief from this Court.

7. Buntrock and Gidwitz also have a strong likelihood of success on the merits of their underlying claims against defendants. Notably, plaintiffs are not required at this juncture to "make out a case that would entitle them to relief on the merits." Mister v. A.R.K. Partnership, 197 Ill. App. 3d 105, 553 N.E.2d 1152, 1155 (2d Dist. 1990). Rather, they need only raise a "fair question" about the existence of their rights and the need for this Court to preserve the status quo. Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d 519, 523, 532 N.E.2d 464, 467 (1st Dist. 1988) (holding that a plaintiff only need show a "fair question"). As detailed in the accompanying memorandum of law, Buntrock and Gidwitz raise more than a fair question as to the following claims:

- That the purported meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for this Sunday, September 24, 2000 is unlawful and violative of the by-laws of the Foundation because (1) notice of the meeting was not provided in the form and manner required by the by-laws; (2) notice was not provided by the Secretary of the Foundation as required by the by-laws; and (3) the meeting's sole purpose is to conduct elections for directors of the Foundation prior to the scheduled annual meeting, in violation of the by-laws.

- That the Terra Foundation for the Arts is a charitable corporation established under the laws of the State of Illinois for the benefit of its citizens, and that under Illinois law, the defendants cannot take any action contrary to the Foundation's charitable purpose.

- That the members of the Foundation's board of directors owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation and its benefactors to preserve the corporate assets for use in the stated charitable purpose of the corporation, and that defendants' mismanagement of the Foundation and their efforts to deprive the people of

Chicago and the State of Illinois of the Terra Museum are contrary to the purpose for which the Foundation was formed, and violate the fiduciary duties of defendants.

- That defendants' efforts to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer its assets out of state, as well as the exclusion of Buntrock from the Board of Directors to facilitate this closure and transfer of assets, are ultra vires acts of the corporation and are therefore void.

8. Finally, the balance of harm in this case clearly weighs in favor of plaintiffs and supports the issuance of temporary injunctive relief. Defendants will suffer no harm if a temporary restraining order is entered to preserve the status quo in this case. On the other hand, plaintiffs and the public at large will suffer greatly if this Court does not maintain the status quo. As discussed more fully in plaintiffs' memorandum of law, if plaintiffs are allowed to carry their improper plans to fruition, the charitable purpose of the Foundation will be frustrated, jobs will be lost, and the people of the State of Illinois, as well as the benefactors of the Foundation, will lose a unique center for American Art if the Terra Museum in Chicago is closed.

WHEREFORE, plaintiffs Dean Buntrock and Ronald Gidwitz respectfully request that this Court enter an order temporarily restraining and enjoining the Terra Foundation and all officers, directors and employees of the Terra Foundation, including, but not limited to Judith Terra, Paul Hayes Tucker, and Allan K. Simpson, as well as third parties with knowledge of this order, including Neftali Michaeli, from: (1) holding an illegal meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for this Sunday, September 24, 2000; (2) taking any action at the annual Board of Directors meeting scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, 2000, to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors and taking action to change any committee assignment; (3) closing the Terra Museum in Chicago; (4) transferring any assets or artwork of the Terra Museum or Terra Foundation outside of the State of Illinois; and (5) taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation, until further order of Court, as well as for any other relief this Court deems fair and just.

Dated: September 22, 2000

Terra switch gives edge to Chicago

Board now backs plan to keep art, close museum

A director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts is switching sides in the long-running dispute over the foundation's future, tilting the balance of power to a board faction determined to keep its collection of American art in Illinois.

The flip by Stephanie Pace Marshall, who is president of the Illinois Mathematics and Science Academy in Aurora, appears to ensure that a majority of the board will vote Friday for a mediated settlement requiring the foundation and its artworks to stay here for at least 50 years.

The settlement also calls on the Terra board to close its North Michigan Avenue museum and seek a home for the collection in another local art museum — most likely the Art Institute of Chicago.

Ms. Marshall didn't return phone calls, but sources say she endorsed the settlement in a mediation session last week, after previously siding with a board group that was exploring potential new sites for the museum in other cities. That group includes Judith Terra of Washington D.C., widow of museum founder Daniel Terra, who funneled some of his chemical-company fortune into a 900-piece collection of paintings and sculptures by American artists.

Conflict broke out last summer when a group of directors led by Dean BUNTROCK and Ronald Gidwitz accused Ms. Terra and other board members of plotting to spirit the museum out of town. The dispute landed in court when the two business heavyweights filed suit seeking control of the foundation.

Until now, the dissident group was one vote short of a majority on the 11-member board. Ms. Marshall's shift gives that faction the votes to push through a settlement plan opposed by Ms. Terra, board Chairman Paul Hayes Tucker and three other board members — setting up the endgame in a feud that clearly has engendered ill will on both sides.

"This is the most stupid, bizarre, asinine, puerile thing I've been in in 70 years of life," says former U.S. Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., a member of Ms. Terra's board group, which has steadfastly denied having ruled out keeping the museum in Chicago.

'On the side of the angels'

If the settlement is approved as expected at a board meeting scheduled for Friday morning, it will go to Cook County Circuit Judge Dorothy Kirie Kinnaird for approval next Monday. Her imprimatur would appear to leave Ms. Terra's group little recourse beyond appealing the decision.

The settlement requires all 11 Terra board members to step down next year. The board would be expanded to 16 members, at least eight of whom would have to be Illinois residents approved by the Illinois attorney general's office. Attorney General Jim Ryan entered the case last fall on behalf of the plaintiffs, arguing that, as the overseer of charitable activity in the state, his office had a stake in the proceedings.

Citing a February order by Judge Kinnaird barring parties involved in the mediation from talking to the press — and a motion filed last week by Ms. Terra's group seeking an investigation into previous leaks — board members say they are leery of discussing the case.

While Ms. Marshall's motives aren't clear, sources say she has come under pressure from local civic and business leaders who don't want to lose the Terra collection. While not commenting on her specifically, Mr. Tucker acknowledges that the battle has been a bruising one.

"This has been a very pressurized situation," he says, "with a lot at stake, including the opportunity to remain as a stand-alone facility and the possible distribution of some significant assets."

But Mr. Gidwitz, former CEO of Helene Curtis Industries Inc., insists that no undue pressure was brought to bear on any board members.

"We have not strong-armed anyone," he says. "We are on the side of the angels; those who have joined us have seen the light and come to God."

Forcing the $450-million foundation and museum to stay in Illinois and requiring an alliance that would close the poorly attended North Michigan Avenue facility would limit the foundation's leverage in negotiating with potential partners, Mr. Tucker says. While the foundation was exploring options with the Art Institute before the lawsuit, it was also talking with museums in Boston and Washington.

"If our opportunities (to remain a stand-alone museum or merge with out-of-state partners) are limited, that would constitute an abrogation of our responsibility as a board that borders on illegal," says Mr. Tucker.

Broader ramifications

Sources say the foundation discussed two scenarios with the Art Institute before talks broke off last fall. Both provided for a Terra wing at the South Michigan Avenue museum, and one also included a $60-million payment to the Art Institute by the Terra Foundation.

The Art Institute declined to comment beyond a statement that "we have no awareness of any settlement of this lawsuit."

Meanwhile, the involvement of the attorney general in the case is causing concern among those who fear that blocking an Illinois-chartered trust from leaving the state will encourage charities to form trusts elsewhere.

"Even if a charitable organization begins in Illinois, there is no legal requirement that it always be based here unless that condition is written into the bylaws," says Janice Rodgers, a partner in the Chicago office of law firm Quarles & Brady.

But Floyd Perkins, chief of the attorney general's charitable trust bureau, points out that state law makes the people of Illinois the beneficiaries of charitable trusts set up here.

"As their lawyers," he says, "we have a hard time letting people take those trusts away."

Terra would not have been so firma had it added this trustee

Chicago Observer

June 25, 2001
By Steven R. Strahler

Aiming to add more local trustees to the board of the Terra Foundation for the Arts in hopes of preserving the Chicago home of the Terra Museum of American Art (see story, this issue), trustee Dean L. BUNTROCK suggested someone he knew well, according to insiders: Robert Allgyer.

Mr. Allgyer had headed the Arthur Andersen LLP audit team at Waste Management Inc., where Mr. BUNTROCK was once chairman and CEO. But last week, it became apparent that the 56-year-old Mr. Allgyer would not have been a good choice, at least from a public-image perspective.

He was among current and former Andersen partners who settled a Securities and Exchange Commission complaint alleging accounting practices that improperly inflated earnings of the garbage hauler. Otherwise, Mr. Allgyer might have found the time to serve: He's now retired from Andersen.

Moreover, as part of the settlement, under which defendants paid more than $7 million in fines but did not admit or deny the charges, Mr. Allgyer agreed not to audit a public company for five years. He did not return a phone call to his home. Mr. BUNTROCK also did not respond.

Not too old, however, to move up to a new challenge

Dear Mr. Hilliard:

I also object to the meeting you have called for 2:00PM Tuesday, June 5, 2001 for the purpose of discussing nominations of "new Directors" for the Board.

We have not agreed to any settlement of this litigation. Therefore, I believe that it is completely inappropriate to implement one possible component of an overall package that has not been agreed to by the Board of Directors.

I join with my fellow Board members in requesting you and directing our colleague, Theodore E. Stebbins, Jr., of the "nominating committee" to abandon this meeting and try once more to find a solution which respects the independence, integrity and identity of Dan Terra's legacy.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Hilliard:

We, the undersigned, a majority of the Board of the Terra Foundation for American Art, object most strenuously to the meeting you have called for 2 p.m., Tuesday, June 5, for the purpose of discussing nominations of "new Directors" for the Board. We have never agreed to this.

The nomination / election process to which you refer in your letter of June 1, 2001 is but one of many parts of a settlement agreement you proposed which has yet to be, in our opinion, appropriately committed to paper, let alone accepted by a Board majority. We have serious questions about the procedure by which this negotiation is and has been operating, about substantive issues, and about the relative importance you have assigned the various parties to this matter. Clearly, the meeting you call is ad hoc, unauthorized, possibly illegal and unquestionably deleterious to our efforts to avoid a trial by finding common ground.

By this letter we request you and direct our colleague, Theodore E. Stebbins, Jr., the other non-plaintiff member of the "nominating committee" to abandon this meeting and try once more to find a solution which respects the independence, integrity and identity of Dan Terra's legacy.

PLAINTIFF'S MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF EMERGENCY MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

NOW COMES the Plaintiff, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS ex rel. JAMES

16di-000228

E. RYAN, Attorney General of Illinois, and in support of his Emergency Motion For Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction, and states as follows:

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff is requesting that this Honorable Court enter an order imposing a Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction on Defendants JUDITH TERRA, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, ALAN K. SIMPSON, and the TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS (hereinafter "FOUNDATION"), in conjunction with its Complaint, which Plaintiff has filed in this case pursuant to the Charitable Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/1 et seq. (1997)) (hereinafter "the Trust Act") and his common law duty to safeguard charitable assets. Plaintiff is seeking to prevent Defendants from (a) mismanaging the Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed; (b) seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer the art to some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals; (c) attempting to remove employees and directors of the Museum that opposed the self interested acts aforesaid and to enable defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois contrary to Illinois law; and (d) endangering the assets of the Terra Foundation, as well as to prevent Defendants from engaging in ongoing violations of the Trust Act which Plaintiff has set out in his Complaint.

Plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief to prevent Defendants from holding any further meetings of the Foundation's Board of Directors, until a new board is constituted ; taking any action to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors or changing any committee assignment or governing instruments; taking any action to close the Terra Museum in Chicago or move Terra Foundation or any of its assets outside the State of Illinois; and taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation.

ARGUMENT

A Temporary Restraining Order is appropriate in this case in order to protect charitable assets held by the FOUNDATION and to prevent Defendants from engaging in any further breach of their fiduciary duties and misuse or waste of charitable funds. Such injunctive relief is necessary to preserve the status quo pending a hearing on the case to prevent Defendants from effectively divesting the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS of their charitable interests in the FOUNDATION, and closing the FOUNDATION's Illinois facilities and moving the FOUNDATION to Washington D.C. in violation of the Trust's Purpose. Plaintiff is seeking this injunctive relief pursuant to his statutory and common law powers and duty to protect and safeguard charitable assets and to ensure that monies designated for charitable purposes are devoted to their proper use. Such relief is proper under traditional common-law standards of equity and also because such relief is expressly authorized by a statute under which Plaintiff is suing.

A Temporary Restraining Order is an emergency remedy issued upon a summary showing of the necessity of the order to prevent immediate and irreparable harm. (Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d 524 (1st Dist. 1988).) A temporary restraining order requires only a summary showing by a plaintiff that the order is necessary to prevent immediate and irreparable harm and that there is no adequate remedy at law. (Id.) It is well established that a party seeking a Temporary Restraining Order is not required to make out a case which would entitle him to relief on the merits, but needs only to show that he raises a "fair question" regarding the existence of his right and that the court should preserve the status quo until the case can be decided on the merits to prevent immediate and irreparable harm. (Buzz Barton & Associates, Inc. v. Giannone, 108 Ill. 2d 373 (1985.); Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d at 524.) A motion for Temporary Restraining Order is properly granted on the uncontroverted facts of a complaint. (Id.)

In the present action, Plaintiff has filed a complaint alleging significant wrongdoing by Defendants regarding the misuse of charitable assets. To satisfy the requirements of a Temporary Restraining Order as requested in Plaintiff's Motion, all Plaintiff would need to show at common law is (1) that there is a "fair question" regarding the existence of the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS' right or interest in the charitable assets at issue here, (2) that the Court should preserve the status quo to prevent immediate and irreparable harm, and (3) that there is no adequate remedy at law. (Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d at 524.)

A. The PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS Have A Clear And Ascertainable Right To The Charitable Assets In Question And Therefore Raise A Fair Question Regarding The Plaintiff's Right Or Interest In the Terra Foundation.

At common law, the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS are the ultimate beneficiaries of charitable trusts and charitable assets held in Illinois. (In re Estate of Laas, 171 Ill. App.3d 916, 920-921 (1st Dist. 1988).) In this connection, it is well established that the Attorney General's authority under the Charitable Trust Act to protect a public charity to prevent or correct abuses cannot be denied. (People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d 269, 276 (1st Dist. 1984).) The Attorney General is the sole officer authorized to represent the People of this State in any litigation in which the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS are the real party in interest pursuant to article V, section 15 of the Illinois Constitution (In re Estate of Stern, 240 Ill. App. 3d 834, 836 (1st Dist.1992); People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d 269, 275 (1st Dist. 1984)), and it has been judicially recognized that the Attorney General is the proper representative of the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS in all actions concerning the enforcement or administration of a charitable trust. (In re Estate of Laas, 171 Ill. App. 3d 916, 920 (1st Dist. 1988); People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.) Since, at common law, the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS are the ultimate beneficiary of charitable assets and property held for charitable purposes, the Attorney General of Illinois has standing to enforce charitable trusts and to see that charitable funds are applied to their intended charitable uses. (People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.)

In the present action, the PEOPLE's Complaint has alleged specific facts showing that Defendants have engaged in multiple acts in breach of their fiduciary duties to the FOUNDATION, and a need to safeguard such charity. Taking such allegations as true, as they must be in the absence of an answer to the Complaint, Plaintiff has clearly satisfied the requirement of showing the existence of a "fair question" regarding the existence of Attorney General's right or interest in charitable assets wrongfully taken.

B. The PEOPLE Will Suffer Immediate and Irreparable Harm If The Status Quo Is Not Preserved.

As already stated, Plaintiff's Complaint alleges that Defendants have mismanaged the Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed; have sought to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer the art to some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals; have attempted to remove employees and directors of the Museum that opposed the self interested acts aforesaid and to enable defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois contrary to Illinois law; and have endangered the assets of the Terra Foundation. The injury that would be perpetrated on the FOUNDATION and its beneficiaries the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS would be to irreparably deprive them of the benefit of the art collection held at the Terra Museum in Chicago. In effect, without the imposition of a Temporary Restraining Order, the

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS will suffer a loss of at least $450 million in charitable assets, and based on the allegations of past wrongdoing, will be prevented from truly discovering the extent to which charity has been harmed. Only the imposition of a Temporary Restraining Order pending the holding of a hearing or further action by the Court will enable the PEOPLE to safeguard the charity which Defendants have wronged.

C. There Is No Adequate Remedy At Law.

Plaintiff's Complaint alleges that extensive harm to the public at large has occurred, the full extent to which is unknown at the present time. The Complaint shows that while Defendants have engaged in multiple acts of wrongdoing against the charitable trust, Plaintiff does not know the full extent of the wrong committed by Defendants and therefore needs an accounting at equity as part of the relief sought. Furthermore, immediate and irreparable injury will occur in the absence of a Temporary Restraining Order. Plaintiff has alleged that the FOUNDATION, and the Defendant directors are at risk of escaping out of an Illinois jurisdiction. If injunctive relief is not granted to prevent Defendants from divesting the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS of its charitable interest, Defendants may succeed avoiding a need to fully account and the PEOPLE will never know the full extent to which they have been wronged and may be permanently precluded from recovering their assets. The public has already suffered injury in that Defendants have breached their fiduciary duties to the FOUNDATION. If equitable relief is not granted immediately, then charity will likely suffer further in that funds devoted for public benefit purposes will never reach their intended charitable destination. Because the full extent of Plaintiff's injury is as yet unknown and because the risk of irreparable injury to Plaintiff is so great, there is no adequate remedy at law that will cure the harm caused to the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS. Only the imposition of a Temporary Restraining Order will enable the PEOPLE to safeguard its charitable interest.

II. THE COURT SHOULD ALSO GRANT A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF ATTORNEY GENERAL IS SEEKING INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AUTHORIZED BY A STATUTE.

In addition to a temporary restraining order entered based on common-law equitable grounds as aforesaid, a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction should also be entered because Plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief pursuant to specific statutory authority.

Traditionally, the equitable remedy of preliminary injunction is granted where plaintiff shows: (1) he has a right which needs protection; (2) he will suffer irreparable harm without the protection; (3) he has no adequate remedy at law; and (4) he is likely to succeed on the merits. ((People ex rel. Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d 575, 580 (2nd Dist. 1985); People ex rel. Edgar v. Miller, 110 Ill. App. 3d 264, 269 (4th Dist.1982).) However, because Plaintiff is a public official or body seeking injunctive relief pursuant to a statute, the requirements of the statute authorizing the injunctive relief control rather than the traditional equitable factors enumerated above. (People ex rel. Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d at 580; People ex rel. Edgar v. Miller, 110 Ill. App. 3d at 269; People ex rel. Carpentier v. Goers, 20 Ill.2d 272, 276 (1960); People v. Keeven, 68 Ill. App.3d 91, 96-97 (5th Dist.1979).)

Courts issue statutory injunctions to public bodies to restrain violations of a statute because irreparable harm to the public at large is presumed from the statutory violation alone. (People ex rel. Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d at 580.) To impose a preliminary injunction when a statute authorizes injunctive relief, the plaintiff need only allege and show (1) that the there has been a violation of the statute by the defendant and (2) that the plaintiff has standing to bring the action; It is not necessity to prove irreparable harm or the absence of an adequate remedy at law. (People v. Keeven, 68 Ill. App.3d at 97.)

In the instant case, the Attorney General is seeking injunctive relief as specifically provided for in the Charitable Trust Act. Plaintiff has brought suit against the Defendants seeking injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16(b) of the Trust Act, which authorizes injunctive relief in circumstances where it is alleged that a charitable trust needs to be protected or a trustee of a charitable trust has engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty. Section 16(b) provides:

> "Sec. 16(b) Upon application to the chancery division of the circuit court in which the Attorney General alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or the trustees of a charitable organization or trust have engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty toward the organization, and injunctive relief and removal of such trustees is sought, the Court shall exercise its discretion as the equities require and may as part of the injunctive relief, and after a hearing where such trustees shall have an opportunity to be heard, appoint temporarily or permanently a receiver or additional trustees to protect and operate the organization and may temporarily, or as ultimate relief for breach of duty or to protect the trust, permanently remove any charitable organization's trustees, corporate officers, directors and members from office and appoint replacements to protect the public interest." (760 ILCS 55/16 (1997).)

1. The Plaintiff Has Presented Facts Showing That Defendant Engaged In Statutory Violations Of The Illinois Charitable Trust Act Which Entitles Plaintiff To Injunctive Relief Pursuant To Statute.

Plaintiff-Intervenor's Complaint has sufficiently shown that the Defendant has and continues to violate provisions of the Trust Act thereby entitling the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief. The Complaint alleges that Defendants multiple actions of breach of fiduciary duty constitute violations of Section 15(a) of the Trust Act.

In support of such allegations, Plaintiff adopts and incorporates the verified pleadings of the Plaintiffs GIDWITZ and BUNTRCK, who are current directors of the FOUNDATION, and who alleged and verify that Defendants JUDITH TERRA, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, and ALEN L. SIPMSON, have and are engaging in actions ultra vires and against the interest and purposes of the FOUNDATION, alleging said Directors are:

a) Attempting to cause the closing of TM operations in Illinois contrary to the long standing promise of its founder that such would be an institution for the public here in Illinois.

b) Attempting to gain position and self recognition in a Washington DC charitable organization in exchange for the delivery of the assets of TM, the termination of operations in Chicago and the end of a Terra museum in the United States..

c) Attempting to cause the closing of the Terra Museum operations in Illinois contrary to its name sakes, Mr. Dan Terra's intentions and suggesting a use of its assets contrary to the use Dan terra intended.

d) Grossly mismanaging Terra Museum in a manner that has resulted in the loss or turnover of almost half the employees, including key persons responsible for Terra Museum's day-to-day operations and continued success;

e) Caused the primary individuals in charge of security at Terra Museum to quit resulting in an inexperienced and understaffed security staff, which jeopardizes the security of the $100 million of art displayed and collected at Terra Museum;

f) Permitted a director of Terra Foundation to engage in a conflict of interest in representing Terra Foundation at art auctions while, on information and belief, representing the interests of private clients at the same auction;

g) Expending significant monies on the purchases of art without obtaining the input or approval of the Board of Directors or the Collections Committee charged with the responsibility of advising the Board of Directors on issues involving art acquisition;

h) Attempting to invade endowment funds restricted to public art educational purposes for the unauthorized purpose of acquiring art;

i) Bypassing the lawful authority of the Board and the Executive Committee in operating Terra Foundation.

J. Wastefully incurring excessive legal fees by retaining inexperienced counsel in replacement of Terra Foundation's long-standing counsel; and

k) Misusing the art collection of Terra Foundation and allowing Judith Terra to personally possess and use museum art items and in a manner that placed the collection in danger and jeopardy.

As a consequence of the aforesaid, violations of the Trust Act have occurred and are continuing to occur, which violations are verified and supported by the Verified Complaint of Plaintiffs GIDWITZ and BUNTRCK. Defendants are therefore subject to the injunctive relief authorized under Section 16(b) of the Trust Act for violations of the Act.

2. The Attorney General Has Standing To Enforce The Statute Providing For Injunctive Relief In This Matter.

Having shown that the Illinois Charitable Trust Act expressly authorizes injunctive relief in circumstances where it is alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or a trustee of a charitable trust has engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty, and having shown that the Plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence to show that the Defendant breached his fiduciary duty and violated the Trust Act requiring the monies he wrongfully took to be protected, the Plaintiff must also show that he has standing to exercise the authority given to seek injunctive relief by the Illinois Charitable Trust Act.

The purpose of the Charitable Trust Act is to assist the Attorney General in carrying out his common law powers and duties to enforce charitable trusts and to see the application of their funds to their intended charitable uses. (People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.) The Act is intended to give the Attorney General the tools with which to discharge his responsibilities. (Id.) As stated previously herein, the Attorney General has been judicially recognized as the proper representative of the State, which is the ultimate beneficiary of charitable assets collected and held for charitable purposes, in all actions concerning the enforcement or administration of a charitable trust. (In re Estate of Laas, 171 Ill. App. 3d at 920; People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.) At common law, the Attorney General is charged with the duty to see that charitable funds are applied to their intended charitable uses. (Id.) As noted earlier, the right of the State, acting through the Attorney General's authority under the Charitable Trust Act to protect a public charity to prevent or correct abuses of charitable assets on the PEOPLE's behalf cannot be denied. (Id, at 276.) Furthermore, Section 16(b) of the Trust Act specifically authorizes the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief in circumstances where he alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or the trustee of a charitable trust has engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty and he is the proper plaintiff to seek such relief.

For all of these reasons, Plaintiff has standing to exercise the authority given to seek injunctive relief by the Illinois Charitable Trust Act.

3. The Attorney General Has Satisfied All Requirements For Injunction Pursuant To Statutory Authority And This Court Should Issue A Preliminary Injunction.

Because injunctive relief is authorized in the Illinois Charitable Trust Act, there has been a violation of that statute by the Defendants, and the Attorney General has standing under the statute to bring an action for injunctive relief, Plaintiff is entitled to a preliminary injunction to stop defendants from engaging in harm to the public at large, which harm is presumed from the statutory violation.

In People v. Keeven, 68 Ill. App. 3d 91 (1979), the Attorney General brought an action to enjoin two defendants, Leonard and Agnes Keeven, from violating certain sections of the Illinois Environmental Protection Act. The trial court refused to enter a preliminary injunction because the Plaintiff failed to allege or prove facts showing irreparable injury and lack of an adequate remedy at law. (Id. at 96.) On appeal, the Appellate Court determined that because the Statute in question specifically authorized the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief, he needed only allege and show that the there had been a violation of that statute by the defendants. (Id. at 97.) Since the

Similarly, in People ex rel Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d 575 (2nd Dist. 1985), the Attorney General sought a preliminary injunction against the defendants for violating the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, which authorized the Attorney General to enjoin any person engaged in a trade or commerce who engaged in unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of that trade or commerce. (131 Ill. App. 3d at 580.) The Appellate Court found that the Plaintiff had alleged sufficient facts to show that the defendants had engaged in unfair and deceptive acts in violation of the Act. It thereafter held that a preliminary injunction was appropriate because the Attorney General needed only to allege and prove what the statute required in order to obtain the authorized injunctive relief. (Id, at 581-582.)

Like People v. Keeven and People v. Stianos, the present action concerns a request for temporary injunctive relief pursuant to statutory authority that provides for injunctive relief. Such conduct, described in detail in Plaintiff's Complaint constitutes a breach of the Defendant's fiduciary duties to the charity and a violation of Sections 15 of the Illinois Charitable Trust Act, and injunctive relief is authorized pursuant to Section 16(b) of said Act. (760 ILCS 55/16(b) (1997).) As in People v. Keeven and People ex rel Hartigan v. Stianos, the Court should enter a temporary injunction against the Defendant to prevent ongoing and continuous harm cause by Defendants' violations of Illinois statutory law.

CONCLUSION

For all of the reasons stated herein, the Plaintiff, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS ex rel. JAMES E. RYAN, Attorney General of Illinois requests this Honorable Court to grant its Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF COOK COUNTY, ILLINOIS
COUNTY DEPARTMENT, CHANCERY DIVISION

DEAN L. BUNTROCK, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, and RONALD GIDWITZ, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, Plaintiffs,

v.

JUDITH TERRA, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, ALAN K. SIMPSON, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, NAFTALI MICHAELI and the TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS, an an Illinois Not-For-Profit Corporation

Defendants.

No. 00 CH 13859

EMERGENCY MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

Plaintiffs, Dean L. Buntrock ("Buntrock") and Ronald Gidwitz ("Gidwitz"), Directors of the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("Terra Foundation" or "Foundation"), by their attorneys, Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd., respectfully move this Court for the entry of a temporary restraining order to maintain the status quo until this Court can rule on the merits of plaintiffs' claims. Specifically, plaintiffs seek an order restraining defendants from: (1) holding an illegal meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for this Sunday, September 24, 2000; (2) taking any action at the annual Board of Directors meeting scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, 2000, to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors and taking action to change any committee assignment; (3) closing the Terra Museum in Chicago; (4) transferring any assets or artwork of the Terra Museum or Terra Foundation outside of the State of Illinois; and (5) taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation, all until further order of Court. In support of this motion, plaintiffs submit their Verified Complaint and the exhibits attached thereto, and their memorandum of law in support of this motion, and further state as follows:

1. By this action, Buntrock and Gidwitz seek to enjoin defendants' continuing improper and wasteful conduct in connection with the management and operation of the Terra Foundation, an Illinois not-for-profit corporation dedicated to preserving and exhibiting American art, and to promoting the appreciation and awareness of American art in Illinois and, specifically, the Chicago area. Buntrock and Gidwitz are both directors of the Foundation committed to furthering these specific intended goals of the Foundation as recognized in its original articles of incorporation.

2. Contrary to the intended purpose of the Foundation, defendants have taken various actions in furtherance of a plan to gain control of the Foundation and use its assets to carry out their own personal agenda. In culmination of this improper and illegal plan, defendants have, in violation of the Foundation's by-laws, scheduled a Board of Directors' meeting for this Sunday, September 24, 2000 in France.

3. On information and belief, defendants plan to use the September 24, 2000 meeting to remove Buntrock from the Board of Directors because of his persistent criticism of defendants' mismanagement and waste of assets of the Foundation and their improper efforts to close the Chicago museum and, on information and belief, defendants intend to use the September 26 meeting to vote to close the Foundation's Chicago Museum and move the Foundation and its assets to Washington, D.C.

4. As set forth below and in the accompanying memorandum of law, Buntrock and Gidwitz meet all the requisite elements for the issuance of temporary injunctive relief under Illinois law. The issuance of a temporary restraining order is appropriate where the facts demonstrate a "fair question" that: (1) the party seeking relief has a protected right; (2) the party will suffer irreparable injury if injunctive relief is not granted; (3) the party has an inadequate remedy at law; and (4) there is a likelihood that the party seeking injunctive relief will succeed on the merits. Tierney v. Village of Schaumburg, 182 Ill. App. 3d 1055, 538 N.E.2d 904, 907 (1st Dist. 1989). Moreover, a temporary restraining order is properly issued where it is necessary to maintain the status quo. People's Gas, Light & Coke v. City of Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 3d 353, 355, 453 N.E.2d 740, 741 (1st Dist. 1983). Here, each of the above factors is met.

6. Plaintiffs will also suffer irreparable injury with no adequate remedy at law if temporary injunctive relief is not granted in this case. Under Illinois law, "an injury is irreparable when it is of such a nature that the injured party cannot be adequately compensated or when damages cannot be measured by any pecuniary standard." Falcon Ltd. v. Corr's Nat'l Beverages, Inc., 165 Ill. App. 3d 815, 820, 520 N.E.2d 831, 835 (1st Dist. 1987); A.W. Chesterton Co., Inc. v. Chesterton, 128 F.3d 1, 8-9 (5th Cir. 1997); Petrzilka v. Gorscak, 199 Ill. App. 3d 120, 124, 556 N.E.2d 1265 (2d Dist. 1990) (finding that showing irreparable harm "is the most common method of proving an inadequate remedy at law . . ."). Without this Court's intervention, defendants will be free to close the Terra Museum in Chicago, thereby violating the purpose of the Foundation and depriving the people of Illinois of the intended benefits of the museum. An improper closing of the museum will also result in a loss of jobs, as well as loss in goodwill of benefactors and patrons. Moreover, directors Buntrock and Gidwitz will be unable to fulfill their fiduciary duties to prevent the mismanagement of the Foundation by defendants without injunctive relief from this Court.

7. Buntrock and Gidwitz also have a strong likelihood of success on the merits of their underlying claims against defendants. Notably, plaintiffs are not required at this juncture to "make out a case that would entitle them to relief on the merits." Mister v. A.R.K. Partnership, 197 Ill. App. 3d 105, 553 N.E.2d 1152, 1155 (2d Dist. 1990). Rather, they need only raise a "fair question" about the existence of their rights and the need for this Court to preserve the status quo. Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d 519, 523, 532 N.E.2d 464, 467 (1st Dist. 1988) (holding that a plaintiff only need show a "fair question"). As detailed in the accompanying memorandum of law, Buntrock and Gidwitz raise more than a fair question as to the following claims:

- That the purported meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for this Sunday, September 24, 2000 is unlawful and violative of the by-laws of the Foundation because (1) notice of the meeting was not provided in the form and manner required by the by-laws; (2) notice was not provided by the Secretary of the Foundation as required by the by-laws; and (3) the meeting's sole purpose is to conduct elections for directors of the Foundation prior to the scheduled annual meeting, in violation of the by-laws.

- That the Terra Foundation for the Arts is a charitable corporation established under the laws of the State of Illinois for the benefit of its citizens, and that under Illinois law, the defendants cannot take any action contrary to the Foundation's charitable purpose.

- That the members of the Foundation's board of directors owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation and its benefactors to preserve the corporate assets for use in the stated charitable purpose of the corporation, and that defendants' mismanagement of the Foundation and their efforts to deprive the people of

Chicago and the State of Illinois of the Terra Museum are contrary to the purpose for which the Foundation was formed, and violate the fiduciary duties of defendants.

- That defendants' efforts to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer its assets out of state, as well as the exclusion of Buntrock from the Board of Directors to facilitate this closure and transfer of assets, are ultra vires acts of the corporation and are therefore void.

8. Finally, the balance of harm in this case clearly weighs in favor of plaintiffs and supports the issuance of temporary injunctive relief. Defendants will suffer no harm if a temporary restraining order is entered to preserve the status quo in this case. On the other hand, plaintiffs and the public at large will suffer greatly if this Court does not maintain the status quo. As discussed more fully in plaintiffs' memorandum of law, if plaintiffs are allowed to carry their improper plans to fruition, the charitable purpose of the Foundation will be frustrated, jobs will be lost, and the people of the State of Illinois, as well as the benefactors of the Foundation, will lose a unique center for American Art if the Terra Museum in Chicago is closed.

WHEREFORE, plaintiffs Dean Buntrock and Ronald Gidwitz respectfully request that this Court enter an order temporarily restraining and enjoining the Terra Foundation and all officers, directors and employees of the Terra Foundation, including, but not limited to Judith Terra, Paul Hayes Tucker, and Allan K. Simpson, as well as third parties with knowledge of this order, including Neftali Michaeli, from: (1) holding an illegal meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for this Sunday, September 24, 2000; (2) taking any action at the annual Board of Directors meeting scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, 2000, to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors and taking action to change any committee assignment; (3) closing the Terra Museum in Chicago; (4) transferring any assets or artwork of the Terra Museum or Terra Foundation outside of the State of Illinois; and (5) taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation, until further order of Court, as well as for any other relief this Court deems fair and just.

THE COURT: Good afternoon. You may be seated.
THE CLERK: Buntrock versus Terra, 00 CH 13859.
THE COURT: Is everyone here? I am told we were waiting for the Attorney General. Is everybody now here?
MR. CARROLL: Yes, sir.
THE COURT: Would you step up and identify yourselves, please.
MR. GRIMM: Your Honor, my name is Terry Grimm from Winston & Strawn. I was before Your Honor on Friday, and I regret to tell Your Honor when I raised the question that one of the named plaintiffs, Mr. Gidwitz, was a client of Winston & Strawn and he might raise the issue of conflict and not waive it, he will not waive the conflict. So we are withdrawing in favor of the firm of Sidley & Austin.
THE COURT: Okay. Just wait one moment, please. And let's start, to make it easier for the reporter, start on the right side, please.
MR. ROTHSTEIN: Michael Rothstein on behalf of the plaintiffs.

MR. CARROLL: James Carroll on behalf of the plaintiffs.
MR. QUINLAN: William R. Quinlan on behalf of the movants, plaintiffs.
MR. MULACK: Donald Mulack on behalf of James Terra, the sole surviving son of Dan Terra, seeking to intervene.
THE COURT: Is there a petition to intervene from James?
MR. MULACK: I do have that, Your Honor.
THE COURT: I haven't gotten that with all the things that have come in in the last couple hours.
MR. MULACK: I hand that to the court now.
THE COURT: Has everyone seen that one?
MR. QUINLAN: Yes, Your Honor.
THE COURT: Okay. Keep going. Mr. Perkins.
MR. PERKINS: Yes, Judge, Floyd Perkins and Barry Goldberg on behalf of the People of the State of Illinois and the Attorney General. We are here on a motion to intervene and bring our complaint, a motion for temporary restraining order. We sent over courtesy copies.

Your Honor,
THE COURT: I am just trying to get everybody identified. Okay. And we have Mr. Gidwitz.
MR. CARLSON: No, Your Honor. I am Steve Carlson from the firm of Sidley & Austin, here solely on behalf of the Terra Foundation for the Arts.
THE COURT: Okay. Let me tell you what I have received. On Friday, as you know, I had only the complaint and an emergency motion for temporary restraining order and a memorandum in support. Later that afternoon I received copies of cases from the plaintiff.
Today, this morning, I received from Sidley an opposition to the emergency motion for a temporary restraining order, and that was followed by the Attorney General's motion to intervene as a matter of right, the Attorney General's complaint, the Attorney General's emergency motion for a TRO, the Attorney General's memorandum in support of its motion, and cases that were in there, I already had or already read.

I received about half an hour ago, the plaintiffs' motion to disqualify counsel, and that is seeking to disqualify Sidley & Austin, and also plaintiffs' reply, which has Mr. James Terra's affidavit attached to it. And I have just now received Mr. James Terra's emergency petition to intervene as a matter of right or permissively, and I assume there is an initial pleading?
MR. MULACK: There is a motion attached, Your Honor, and we didn't have time to prepare a complaint, but we have a motion for temporary restraining order tracking the language of the one that is before the court at the present time.
THE COURT: Okay.
Before we start with any of this, I need to find out who is representing who, and mostly we have to find out who is representing the defendants. I take it that there is no counsel here representing any of the individual defendants; is that correct?
MR. CARLSON: As far as I know, that is correct, Your Honor.

Page 9

THE COURT: And we have Sidley representing the Terra Foundation?
MR. CARLSON: That's correct, Your Honor.
THE COURT: And you want them not to do that?
MR. QUINLAN: Well, we don't care if they were to represent them. We challenge their authority to do so, and what they are doing is, in fact, using the Foundation to represent the interests of the three directors who have been sued and charged with irregularities and improprieties in exercising their fiduciary duty, which is an inherent conflict and they couldn't possibly be joined together, but, in any event, because of what took place over the weekend, there is no possibility that any appropriate action could have taken place.
First of all, my clients received no notification, no information whatsoever about the appointment process.
THE COURT: Let me stop you for one second.
MR. QUINLAN: Yes.
THE COURT: The board couldn't meet because we had an agreed order. I didn't enter a temporary restraining order as such on Friday. We had an agreed order that there wasn't going to be this half hour meeting on Sunday. So that left only the executive committee who possibly could have met. As I see it, everyone exists; is that right?

MR. QUINLAN: That's right.
THE COURT: The executive committee is Stephanie Marshall, Paul Tucker, Judith Terra and Dean Buntrock.
MR. CARROLL: And Mr. Gidwitz.
MR. QUINLAN: Ron Gidwitz, as well.
THE COURT: That wasn't in your motion. Okay. So two of the five didn't get notice of any kind of a meeting.
MR. QUINLAN: They clearly didn't get any notice, at least two of the five.
THE COURT: Was there a meeting of the Executive Committee to retain Sidley?
MR. CARLSON: Your Honor, I cannot answer that question. Sidley was retained through one of my partners, Susan Stone. I don't see anything. I have just gotten this motion to disqualify, and I haven't had a chance to study it or read it.

Mr. Quinlan is absolutely wrong that I am here representing any of the individual defendants. I am here solely on behalf of the Foundation, and I have been retained, Sidley & Austin has been retained solely on behalf of the Foundation. I would think as an ordinary matter, officers of a corporation are entitled to retain counsel to represent the corporation when they have a matter that needs representation on. I don't know if we were retained by an officer, or officers of the Foundation or exactly who was involved in the discussions.
THE COURT: I assume when everybody gets together in a meeting tomorrow, this lawsuit might be the subject matter of that meeting and there might be a vote about having counsel represent the Foundation.
I mean, we had an emergency situation Friday afternoon. What was the Terra Foundation supposed to do? Were they supposed to — I don't mean to be facetious, but were they supposed to call a committee meeting and have a formal vote to see who should get over here to respond?

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, I think what they should have done, what we have been after them to do all along, is follow their requirements under the articles of incorporation and the process they followed in the past; namely, counsel is only appointed by the board of directors and has only been appointed by the board of directors in the past.
That's the procedure that has been followed when everybody was appointed. When Winston & Strawn was appointed, when Mayer, Brown was appointed. All of these appointments are by the board of directors. It is the only way it can be done. It is only inviting all the members to participate in this. Surely, they could have had a conference, surely they could discuss this, and surely this issue could be addressed.
That's what I am really arguing about here is that they are continuing to do the very thing that we have argued about before, they run this as their own personal charity, their own personal fund. And that's what they are doing.

THE COURT: What should they have done on Friday afternoon when they got served by you with papers that they were coming over here? How should they have gotten a lawyer to get over here within a half hour, whatever notice they got?
MR. QUINLAN: There was counsel at that time, and that was — Winston & Strawn was counsel, and they did come over and appear. We did serve them. And we did serve their registered agent. By the way, Your Honor — and they were appointed by the board. By the way, Your Honor, though, all of these things are not our problems. They chose to hold this important meeting in France. The meetings, the normal annual meetings are not held in France.
What we are doing is the two most important things taking place here; namely, about moving outside of the State of Illinois and doing away with a director, at least one, and maybe two, who have raised significant issues, we do this in France.
Do our corporations in Illinois have their annual meetings in France? No.

And so we didn't know anything about the process or procedure of what was going to be taking place, so we end up in France at this meeting, which is a nice social place to have a meeting, but what we find out is the two most critical things that are taking place, are taking place there, out of the light of the press, out of the light of the Attorney General, out of the light of anybody, in Paris, France, for an annual meeting of this nature. And you are suggesting —
THE COURT: Is there anything wrong with having an annual meeting in France? Is that prohibited by law? They have another museum over there. They have another property. Are any members of this board upset this meeting got called in France?
MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, nobody had any idea what was going to take place, and that is what everybody is upset with, and that is the important thing here. That is what caused everybody to be concerned. That is why the Attorney General is here. That's why we have

Jim Terra here. We only found these things out, and, yes, it is improper if those type of significant things and those things that go to the very existence of this Foundation, and its situs is here in Illinois, is being — taking place in France, yes, there is something wrong with that. It should be taking place here in Illinois, in front of the public in Illinois, in front of the Attorney General in Illinois, and if these issues are going to be discussed and somebody is going to try to move this out of Illinois, it should be done here where everybody knows what is going on.
The appointment of this counsel in this instance is exactly what is going on in terms of the running of this Foundation, and that is what we are arguing about. And Your Honor is suggesting that somehow this is unfair to these people. They surely could hire people to represent themselves, use their own money to do it, to represent their own interests. What I am suggesting here is that Sidley & Austin, who purports to represent the Foundation, cannot argue the case on behalf of the individual members who are being charged with serious matters. There is a direct conflict.

THE COURT: I don't see anything in here that —
MR. QUINLAN: That's what the whole argument is about is, Your Honor.
THE COURT: — that they are arguing something on behalf of the individual directors.
MR. QUINLAN: They are arguing that these are not ultra vires acts, that these people didn't engage in ultra vires acts, that they are doing nothing other than what they are authorized to do. That is — the Foundation's position on that is really neutral, Your Honor. The Foundation's position is protect the Foundation and to protect the Foundation's interest.
And it is the same as when the City of Chicago is charged with representing police officers who have been charged with acting beyond the scope of their authority. These are allegations of intentional acts. When a police officer is charged with that, the City of Chicago cannot represent them. They must be represented by individual counsel. It is the same thing here.

But, Your Honor, they didn't even attempt to follow the process here. I have nothing against Sidley & Austin. I have nothing against the Foundation being represented. But, Your Honor, it is the very thing that we have been complaining about. That's what's wrong with what's going on in this Foundation. That's what's taking place and has taken place over the last year.

MR. GRIMM: May it please the court. As Your Honor noted on Friday, I was relatively patient while I sat — I am Terry Grimm.

I am now trying to be the first lawyer out of this case because Mr. Gidwitz has objected to our representing the Foundation in this litigation as counsel. But, Your Honor, I know my personal knowledge, that Mr. Gidwitz does know and did know that the board was seeking counsel to represent it, individuals were seeking counsel to represent it, and I was told that Mr. Gidwitz had no objection to Sidley coming in to represent the Foundation.

That doesn't answer the questions of the other defendants. But Mr. Gidwitz did know that Sidley wanted to come in for Winston & Strawn to meet his objection that Winston & Strawn had a conflict, and Mr. Gidwitz, and I could be sworn on this, raised no objection to Sidley, didn't feel they had a conflict, and I know that happened over the weekend.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, let me respond to that. Of course, I talked to Mr. Gidwitz, too. He said that he had personal issues with Sidley and there are personal matters in which Sidley has represented him in the past and may represent him in the future. He said he would not raise that objection. I queried him about that. He did not waive the process issue, which is exactly what I am arguing about, and he was not included in any process. He is unaware of how they were appointed or whether there was any kind of board meeting, any kind of contact with anybody.

THE COURT: Let's go back to the process. You want to stop something tomorrow. I have individual defendants who are in Paris, and I have a Foundation that is outside of Paris. We will say Paris.

MR. QUINLAN: The Foundation is located there. Their situs is in Illinois. It cannot be moved from Illinois other than changing the articles of incorporation.

THE COURT: And I have all the members of it, shall we say right now of the board, is out of the country; is that correct?

MR. QUINLAN: Members of this are the public for the State of Illinois.

THE COURT: The members of the board. All members of the board today are not located in the state of Illinois.

MR. QUINLAN: That may well be true.

THE COURT: The board is the one that decides who their attorney is going to be. There was an order saying the board couldn't meet over the weekend. So that leaves it up, I guess, to the Executive Committee and, quite frankly, if the Executive Committee had some kind of meeting to try to take some action, you probably would have been in there on a contempt thing, wouldn't you?

MR. QUINLAN: No, Your Honor, if —

THE COURT: If they'd done something over the weekend?

MR. QUINLAN: No, Your Honor, I would not have objected if there was a meeting, an effort was made to include everybody in that to appoint Sidley & Austin to be counsel. I am not complaining about that. What I am complaining about is that they didn't even bother to go through that process. They didn't bother to include my clients in that process. They did not include Mrs. Daley, who is on the board.

THE COURT: She is not on the Executive Committee.

MR. QUINLAN: She is a member of the board, though, and she was not included with any information about this. She didn't know any more than any of the other people. And what we are seeing here is exactly the things that we have alleged in our complaint.

THE COURT: Are you suggesting that there should be nobody here representing the defendants in today's hearing?

MR. QUINLAN: I guess I am not suggesting anything, Your Honor.
THE COURT: I am trying to figure out, should I have a hearing today with nobody representing, able to talk on their side or take the best of what I have got?
MR. QUINLAN: Well, Your Honor —
MR. CARLSON: Thank you, Your Honor, for your confidence.
MR. QUINLAN: You know, with all due respect, Your Honor, I don't think they could be heard. And I don't think it is a problem that you have to worry about. The problem that has to be worried about is by the defendants who have been charged with illegal activities that they have engaged in, and they have continued to engage in it by trying to hire counsel to represent the Foundation and indirectly represent them. That's the real issue. They are using Sidley & Austin's representation of the Foundation to represent them. That's what is wrong.
Sidley was not properly appointed because they must have chosen to pick up the phone and call and say, Sidley, we are hiring you. They cannot do that. I think we should have more concern about what they're doing. They chose to be in Paris, Your Honor. We didn't chose to be in Paris. We didn't chose to address those issues in Paris. They choose to address those issues in Paris.
What we are asking you to do is to stay this, to give us and the Attorney General time to prove our case on these serious allegations. And somehow we're worried about whether or not we are putting an inconvenience on these people who have been charged with these activities, that somehow they had a problem hiring counsel for the Foundation.
I assure you that will not be a problem. It may be a problem in terms of what the Foundation can say in terms of representing them or in participating in any way in the defense of them for the allegations that have been made.
No corporation can do that. And they can't under these circumstances properly represent them. They are supposed to be represented by independent counsel. Somebody has to step up and represent them apart from the Foundation. And we shouldn't be here worrying about how they go about getting this counsel over here. Easily, talk to all the members, include the people who should have been included in all of these decisions all along. This can be resolved.
I am not trying to take unfair advantage of the Foundation. That's not the issue here. And I take no exception to Sidley & Austin, but Sidley & Austin, I think, as being good lawyers and being good members of the Bar, should be just as concerned as I am about the process about how this has been done. Counsel himself says he has no idea how this has been done, and I can tell you that my board, my board members were not participants, and they are on the executive committee, and neither was Mrs. Daley, who is also on the board of directors. So none of this was discussed with them.
THE COURT: Let me just ask. I know you are not in yet. That's the next item of business.

Let's assume you are in, Mr. Perkins, on behalf of the Attorney General. Is the Attorney General joining in this motion to disqualify?
MR. PERKINS: Judge, we did not prepare that motion and, therefore, we did not really focus on that issue. We are not as familiar with all the facts that come to the issue about who chose Sidley & Austin, so we find ourselves standing here this afternoon understanding why the plaintiff here is concerned, understanding why the court is concerned that the Foundation have somebody. I can tell you this, Your Honor, I spoke with lawyers from Mayer, Brown & Platt today who tell me they are still of record for the Foundation in the probate proceeding of the Dan Terra estate. So I do know there are other law firms in the city that have represented this Foundation for a period of time, and what is a very big concern to us, is that we have an awful lot of issues that are starting to pile up, and we need to get some kind of order entered against the Foundation.
I understand Your Honor's concern that the Foundation have a —

MR. CARLSON: No objection.
MR. PERKINS: — lawyer here this afternoon. I don't know if lawyers from Mayer, Brown want to come up here as well. I don't know what the answer is in this regard, but I do know that we need to proceed against the Foundation this afternoon.
THE COURT: Let's go back to last week before this whole thing was filed.
There is a probate case, and Mayer, Brown is the counsel who is representing the Foundation in the probate case?
MR. PERKINS: That's correct, Your Honor.
THE COURT: And there is a lawyer who is over there with the Foundation assisting them and advising them in this board meeting; is that correct?
MR. PERKINS: In the probate estate of — Daniel Terra's probate estate.
THE COURT: Not just on that, but I believe it was Mr. Grimm told me that there was someone from Winston?
MR. GRIMM: You're correct, Your Honor.

Mr. Heatwole, H-e-a-t-w-o-l-e, who was hired as corporation counsel for the Foundation.
THE COURT: First name is Mark?
MR. GRIMM: Mark.
THE COURT: And he is in minutes, the minutes —
MR. GRIMM: Yes.
THE COURT: — of the meeting in August. He attended the —
MR. GRIMM: He attended —
THE COURT: — board meeting.
MR. GRIMM: — as general counsel for that board meeting, yes.
THE COURT: Okay. So the general counsel attending at least at the last time — was that the last time the board met?
MR. GRIMM: That's the last meeting of the board before the one scheduled for tomorrow, Your Honor.
THE COURT: That was August 24th. And Mark Heatwole, H-e-a-t-w-o-l-e, was there and he is —
MR. GRIMM: My partner.
THE COURT: — from Winston. And he was —

is to be there at the board meeting tomorrow?
MR. GRIMM: Absolutely. They are all together in a room about the size of this courtroom.
THE COURT: Okay. And is there anyone, any other lawyer who is there on behalf of the board in the meeting in France tomorrow?
MR. GRIMM: I am unaware of that, Your Honor.
MR. CARLSON: Your Honor, I believe that one of my partners, Mr. Ralph Lerner from our New York office —
THE COURT: He was also there by invitation on August 24th.
MR. CARLSON: That's correct, Your Honor. I don't know the details of Mr. Lerner's involvement with the Foundation, either. I do know, however, Mr. Lerner, I believe, is acting as counsel on art related matters to the Foundation. And I don't believe anyone has ever objected to Mr. Lerner of Sidley & Austin assisting the Foundation in that regard.
THE COURT: Okay. For —
MR. CARLSON: And I know Mr. Lerner is there because I spoke with Mr. Lerner over the weekend.

THE COURT: So both Mr. Heatwole and Mr. Lerner are going to be at the meeting that takes place tomorrow?
MR. CARLSON: That is my understanding, Your Honor.
THE COURT: And Sidley is here, as far as you are concerned, only representing the Foundation and not representing the individual interests of any of the defendants?
MR. CARLSON: That's absolutely correct, Your Honor. In fact, I don't think that the court file shows there has even been service on any of the individuals yet. And I am certainly not here on behalf of any of the individuals.
THE COURT: Okay. I am going to deny the motion to disqualify Sidley for purposes of today. If tomorrow, at tomorrow's board meeting there is a vote taken and it turns out that Sidley's representation is ratified, there is no issue whatsoever. If it turns out that Sidley's representation is not ratified and the board says we don't want Sidley, at least we have a situation where the Foundation is represented by able counsel for purposes of today.

MR. QUINLAN: I appreciate Your Honor's concern and I appreciate Your Honor's decision in this matter. And we, of course, will abide by that.
THE COURT: Next, to the Attorney General. Petition as a matter of right for leave to intervene. Does anyone think that the Attorney General doesn't have a matter — doesn't have a right to intervene?
MR. CARLSON: Your Honor, I am not willing to say that. What I would say, if I have a chance, is I just received these papers at about noon today. Obviously, I have had no opportunity to study them in any detail or to review them with the Foundation itself, I frankly would ask the court for time to respond to the petition to intervene, and I don't believe that anybody will suffer any prejudice in any way, because it's obvious on the face of the papers, even the little bit I was able to look at them, that they are basically a derivative of the plaintiffs' papers. They start with the verified, supposedly verified allegations of the complaint, they seek for purposes of the TRO, essentially the same relief, and I would like some relatively short period of time to respond to the petition to intervene.

THE COURT: The only issue that anybody, I think, might take with that, is the standards for a TRO are somewhat different when the Attorney General is here seeking to enforce a statute. There are certain things that don't need to be proven. They are just assumed.
MR. CARLSON: That may be true, Your Honor. I, frankly, think that the argument, though, will proceed essentially the same, whether it is totally Mr. Quinlan arguing on behalf of the individual directors who have sued, or whether Mr. Perkins is involved in any way.
THE COURT: Mr. Perkins?
MR. PERKINS: Judge, with regard to that, Judge, we came to this court last Friday finding out the things that were alleged by certain plaintiff directors. We had heard some facts about that, but we learned a great deal of facts through those papers, and it is real clear to the Attorney General that the people of the State of Illinois need to be in the case. This is a charitable trust that belongs to the people, and as our papers show, the directors who are the directors of this Foundation today, only two of them were directors at the time Dan Terra was alive and a director. At the time Dan Terra, last time, in 1996, when Dan Terra was alive and he was a director, there were six directors. Only two of those people are currently on the board of 11 people. And we have 11 people who have only been stewarding this organization for a short period of time. There are terrific allegations from some of the directors lodged against the others. There are facts that we know about certain acts of the directors, particularly Judith Terra, that we find are actionable, and we believe that this trust is in jeopardy and the principal concern and the reason it is of an emergency nature, are particularly twofold.

One is the serious concern that the collection and the materials that are compromising the museum's collection, are in the hands of people who are no longer impugned with the long-term institutional knowledge of this organization. They are new employees. The head of security is not there, the long-term head of security. We are concerned about what happened to the — what is happening to the collection. We are told that people have brought the collection, parts of the collection to their homes. We are very concerned about where the collection is. We think we need quick relief to ascertain and account for the collection, find out exactly where it is and if it is all still in the possession of the Foundation.

In addition, this thought in these papers that we received on Friday and some other papers that we managed to obtain over the weekend, show that there is definitely an intent by a number of the people on this board to move this Foundation out of Chicago. It's very clear from the papers that there is a group of people who are on that board, brand new to that board in terms of running an institution of this sort, who want to move it to Washington, D.C., want to combine it with other organizations, want to take $400 million worth of assets from Chicago —

THE COURT: They are not all in Chicago.
MR. PERKINS: Well —
THE COURT: Some of them are already in Paris, correct?
MR. CARLSON: Absolutely. They are in Giverny.
THE REPORTER: I'm sorry?
THE COURT: Giverny.
MR. CARLSON: G-i-v-e-r-n-y, Monet's home.
MR. PERKINS: Judge, you are correct. Some of the artwork is there. However, artwork is exchanged because the purpose of a museum is for people to see different pictures. If you only had a certain set on the wall forever, people would only come once and they wouldn't come back again. These museums often trade art pieces so that the public gets a greater array of them. Yes, there are some in France, however —
THE COURT: Isn't the 450 million, the property in Chicago, the property in Giverny, if I'm pronouncing it right, and the collections at both places? So it is not all collections. It is not all art.

MR. MULACK: Cash and collections.
MR. PERKINS: The art — I think the art is 180 million, somewhere in that neighborhood. The money is in the 200 million plus range situation.
THE COURT: Some of it is real estate, right?
MR. MULACK: Yes, there is real estate, also.
MR. PERKINS: There is real estate.
MR. CARROLL: 30 to 40 million here, Your Honor. And whatever Giverny is.
MR. CARLSON: It's my understanding, Your Honor, that the Foundation owns one-third of the real estate in the town of Giverny. We have a very substantial presence.
THE COURT: Go ahead, Mr. Perkins.
MR. MULACK: That is an exaggeration, but that is okay.
MR. PERKINS: In any event, Judge, the center here is in Chicago. That is where Dan Terra intended it to be.

Today we received James Terra's affidavit which clearly sets that forth. He was with his father when it was founded. This Foundation is a family founded foundation in the name of Daniel Terra who made hundreds of millions of dollars and donated them to an art museum and located it here in the City of Chicago, and we know from both his son and newspaper accounts and his actions, that he wanted that museum here in Chicago.
To allow certain people to just decide that it is better that it's in Washington, DC, that maybe the collection is merged with the national gallery or given to some other institution like some other art museum in Washington, DC, and they will join the boards and they will be part of the social circle in Washington, DC, is certainly against the interest of the people of the State of Illinois.
THE COURT: We are just talking right now about whether or not you need to be in today.
MR. PERKINS: And, Judge, therefore, whether Mr. Quinlan can persuade Your Honor and his clients have enough facts and ability to persuade Your Honor, the people cannot depend upon that. So we, with all due respect, would like to represent ourselves and our interest with regard to this Foundation in this case with regard to the allegations. So we believe we definitely need to be in here today. I don't think there is any question that we have a right to be here.

THE COURT: You have been in this business and the charitable section for a long time, Mr. Perkins, right?
MR. PERKINS: Yes, Your Honor.
THE COURT: Are you aware of any case law where the court ever said the Attorney General doesn't have a right to intervene in a case involving the charitable trust?
MR. PERKINS: At the trial court level, a few, Judge, which were reversed in Appellate Court and the Supreme Court has said we have the right to be here. It is very clear in Illinois law that the Attorney General is, with a few exceptions, the only person who can enforce a charitable trust. Maybe the family of the founder has a right to also appear and try to enforce a charitable trust, but certainly the public and the Attorney General's representative have a right.

THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, I know you are at a disadvantage. You just got the papers several hours ago. There are quite a lot. I did get through them myself this morning, as soon as they came, and I am not aware of any case law that says that they wouldn't be able to come in. And in looking at all of the cases that have been cited, including the one in — I think there is only one involving another museum, the Harding Museum, the Attorney General was in on one. Has your quick research in your firm found anything that would justify their not being able to be here?

MR. CARLSON: I am not quite that quick, Your Honor, and, frankly, on behalf of the Foundation, I don't know that we would have any objection to their intervention. On behalf of the Foundation, all I wanted was a chance to study the papers, study the case law, respond in some way. In fact, paragraph 9 of Mr. Perkins' petition says basically that the Attorney General doesn't know whether and to what extent any of the individual defendants or the Foundation may have violated the Charitable Trust Act. We are, in fact, an Illinois not-for-profit corporation, and on behalf of the Foundation, I have no problem answering whatever questions Mr. Perkins or his office may have about the Foundation, the Foundation's activities, their plans or anything of that sort.

The board of the Foundation is over in France, as are the officers, but if Mr. Perkins would get me whatever questions he may have about the conduct of the Foundation sometime this week, as soon as the people from the Foundation are back here in the United States, I will start to provide him whatever answers he may be seeking as indicated in paragraph 9. And that would at least give me a chance to take a look at his papers and decide, talk to the Foundation and decide what our response to the petition is.

THE COURT: Okay. I am going to let the Attorney General in as a matter of right. Just for the record, when you all dropped off the orders on Friday, I was also presented with a one sentence order granting the Attorney General leave to intervene, and I refused to sign that order because I had no petition. I had no initial pleading, and it wasn't with any kind of notice, so that notice did not get entered. An order will be entered today granting leave to come in as a matter of right, and I am certainly willing to reconsider at a later time if the Foundation comes in with some authority that says they don't belong here, I am always open to being educated.

MR. CARLSON: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You can do that at another time.

MR. GRIMM: May it please the court.

THE COURT: You don't have to hang around if you don't want to.

MR. GRIMM: That's what I was going to ask, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Anybody feel that Mr. Grimm needs to stay here?

MR. GRIMM: Unless they want to put me on the stand, I would like to escape back to the friendly confines of Winston & Strawn.

THE COURT: Anybody have any objection?

MR. CARROLL: It's not raining today.

MR. QUINLAN: I guess the weather improved today, Terry.

THE COURT: Now, we have petition to intervene of James Terra, and that one I am not going to rule on today. I have not read it. I don't know that any counsel read it. It just came in, and although, I have read Mr. James Terra's affidavit, which just came in this afternoon, I think that anybody who wants to object should be given an opportunity to do that. That's not necessarily the slam dunk situation that the Attorney General wants.

MR. MULACK: May I respond, Your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. MULACK: Donald Mulack on behalf of James Terra. Mr. Terra is, by way of background information, probably the only person who can shed light on what happened back in 1978 when the museum was first created. Jim Terra is the sole surviving family member who was instrumental and part of the creation of the museum in 1978. His daughter — his sister, I should say, Penny, died, his mother died and his father has died. So Jim was there when it was originally incorporated.

THE COURT: And he is the executor.

MR. MULACK: And he happens to be the executor.

THE COURT: And he may be a key witness if we ever get to an evidentiary hearing in this case. The only issue I have today is, does he have a standing, should I let him come in right now and intervene without letting anybody else object?

MR. MULACK: Well, our position is that he certainly has the right as a matter of right to intervene because — representation of his interests and his family's interest and his father's and mother's intent, who created the museum back in 1978, is not adequately represented. Based on that position alone, we think he would have a right to come in. Falling short of that, Your Honor, if Your Honor should decide that that should not be the case, he should have a right to intervene as a matter of discretion because the facts, the law are the same with respect to his position, and what has been filed in this case so far. So he would bring a perspective to this, Your Honor, and protect the family and be able to tell this court and advocate those interests very vociferously, that he should — that the court should look to this intent that was created by Daniel Terra and Adeline Terra when they set up this museum and when he was incorporated, as well, to keep this museum in Chicago.

This was a gift to the City of Chicago, the Chicagoland area, and the people of this area, and that is what he is very strong on. His mother and his father talked about it. Jim was part of those conversations, and they said, it should stay here in Chicago, because there is not, within a 400 mild radius of this area, a museum devoted exclusively to American art. And so we believe that no one else has the intimate knowledge that he does to be able to articulate and develop those points before this court and, therefore, he seeks intervention on that.

THE COURT: It doesn't say whether he is seeking to intervene as party plaintiff or party defendant.

MR. MULACK: Party plaintiff. If it's not in there, it is a mistake, Your Honor, an oversight, Your Honor. And that is party plaintiff. We support the position of the plaintiffs in this case, and Mr. Terra, frankly, is quite shocked about the conduct of what he read over the weekend, alleged in this complaint, verified complaint, that these things are taking place, that they are trying to take his mother's and father's gift from this City to another city where there is just no family connection with respect to Jim or his mother.

THE COURT: Mr. Quinlan, does the — do the plaintiffs believe that James Terra has standing in their — as a matter of right or permissively to be a party to this case?

MR. QUINLAN: We surely would believe that they have at least permissively, and maybe as a right. I have not sat down and investigated that.

THE COURT: And what about the Attorney General?

MR. PERKINS: Your Honor, we are very familiar with the law with regard to that and, generally, I would be standing here telling Your Honor in any court, that the Attorney General is the exclusive party to protect the charitable trust. However, if one reads the cases, there are — I think it is Castle versus The Art Institute, I think, might be the case that it is referenced, and it — there is clearly — or Ferguson versus Russell, one of those two.

MR. MULACK: It's Ferguson.

THE COURT: Ferguson.

MR. PERKINS: In any event, there is a right by the family members to enforce family gifts to charity. At least the courts have recognized the family members can come forward, and, in certain circumstances, have a right to participate to attempt to enforce the charitable intent of their ancestors.

THE COURT: And do the courts allow those as

interventions as party plaintiffs in those cases?
MR. PERKINS: Judge, I can't say that I have studied exactly how they come in, but I would think that in a situation, but there were cases, I am sure, where the Attorney General was both a party and the family member was attempting to participate, as well, and whether they were by intervention or — I presume at some point it would have been by intervention, because it is generally not the situation where the Attorney General would be — be in filing a pleading with the people and somebody else initially, so I presume that those cases come about in that way in which someone is trying to enforce the family charity intent.
Normally, Your Honor, and I probably will be sorry I say this today, but, you know, there are a few instances when other people have a right to come in and try to enforce a charitable trust. And I think it is true when it is a family member. Having said that —
THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, have you read the paper?

MR. CARLSON: I have not read the paper, Your Honor, especially because Your Honor has deduced and I guess he has revealed here, that he is not seeking to come in to help me, and I am standing here all by myself. I would like some short period of time, perhaps 10 to 14 days, to review the paper and respond.
THE COURT: Well, I think it is reasonable to give you a short period of time. I am not granting the intervention right now. But we will talk about the short time after we see what else happens.
MR. CARLSON: That's fine, Your Honor.
THE COURT: And, Mr. Mulack, you we are welcome to stand, however, you are welcome to have a seat if you want to, however you feel more comfortable.
MR. MULACK: No problem standing.
THE COURT: Now, let's get to the motions for a temporary restraining order. I have a couple questions. One, there is definitely a board meeting that is going ahead tomorrow; is that correct?
MR. CARLSON: That is my understanding,

Your Honor.
THE COURT: And all of the board members received this agenda that is attached to the defendant's — I'm sorry, the plaintiffs' complaint, which is tab 9, which is the board meeting agenda?
MR. CARLSON: That is my understanding, Your Honor.
THE COURT: Now, did the board members receive anything else with this agenda?
MR. CARLSON: I believe they may have, Your Honor. The agenda itself indicates that there were tabs involved, so there may have been the documents that relate to this particular agenda.
THE COURT: Has anyone seen any of — the complete packet? And the reason I ask that, is If is, review and approval, acceptance of minutes, and there are a whole bunch of board minutes of committee meetings there. And in the pleadings that I have been given, I have strategic planning minutes of March 13th, which I have read, the strategic planning minutes of April 5th, which I've read, I do not have the ones from May 10th, which looks like maybe the last meeting of the strategic planning committee. So I don't know whether or not — it is very, very preliminary discussions. These discussions were about The Art Institute. They were about all kinds of things, and they weren't just simply, let's close up and move to Washington.

Does anybody know if the board was given — that's my first question — all these minutes?
MR. QUINLAN: We don't know that, Your Honor.
THE COURT: Has anybody seen the meeting minutes?
MR. CARLSON: Yes.
MR. QUINLAN: We have a packet of materials — I am trying to pull out for Your Honor now — which are primarily the minutes, and Your Honor is correct, but I did not go through and check them off as to whether each one of those were part of it.
THE COURT: I was wondering whether they made any more progress because they weren't very far along by April 5th. So I am interested what happened on May 10th.

And then the other thing was, there was going to be a committee report from the strategic planning committee. I think that is where all the action is. Does anybody have a report from the strategic planning committee? Does anybody have a clue what they are going to be talking about tomorrow?
MR. CARLSON: I know, Your Honor, Mr. Gidwitz, one of the plaintiffs here, is, in fact, chairman of that committee. I don't know if he prepared a written report or not. I haven't seen one. I do have with me here today here in court strategic planning minutes from May 10th of the year 2000, Your Honor, and I do have in my possession, although not with me in court, what may very well be the set of minutes that were given to the board members prior to this meeting. I know this meeting was scheduled since last June. I know that materials were distributed and that everybody got long in advance of tomorrow's scheduled meeting.
MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, I can tell you

Page 51

Mr. Gidwitz —
MR. QUINLAN: Right.
THE COURT: — is head of strategic planning, and they are giving their report tomorrow. And I assume that they are either recommending something or not.
MR. QUINLAN: On that issue, they are not.
THE COURT: Okay. So where on the agenda is this item going to come up tomorrow?
MR. QUINLAN: I do not know. What we presented to you the other day, which was called the white paper —
MR. CARROLL: Exhibit 2, which we sent to you today, Your Honor.
MR. QUINLAN: Exhibit 2 was what they had just received when they arrived there and they faxed us — faxed it to us.
THE COURT: Hold it one second.
MR. CARROLL: With our reply that we just filed a short time ago.
THE COURT: With the reply you filed right now. Just a second.
MR. CARROLL: That's Exhibit 2.
THE COURT: You mean B?

this, and, as I say, we are looking for our packet. There was a packet of materials many of the people got when they were there. Some people got it immediately prior to when they went over, but on the agenda, the agenda is normally this way, and it does not detail and does not say what is going to be discussed, did not discuss some of the material. The backup material is helpful in ascertaining that, but what was not included anywhere, and that — my people have advised me that, is any discussion about removing the procedure from or moving the Foundation from Chicago, away from Chicago to Washington. There has been general discussions in the past about other facilities, other uses, other relationships. I think Mr. Terra attested to that himself, and that generally is all that has taken place.
There has been continuing discussion about other facilities, other arrangements, the possibilities of making some arrangements with other people, some here, sometimes some other places, but never moving this out of Chicago.
THE COURT: Well, your gentleman,

Page 52

MR. CARROLL: Yes, excuse me, B.
THE COURT: A vision of the future?
MR. CARROLL: Yes, ma'am.
THE COURT: Okay.
MR. CARLSON: Probably also, Your Honor, Exhibit E to the Attorney General's petition. The Attorney General has attached Exhibit E to his petition or to his complaint, board meeting minutes from August 24, 2000.
THE COURT: I have read those. I have read those, but did that — did those board minutes, board meeting minutes in August say we are all going to vote on this issue in France in September?
MR. CARLSON: No, there is discussion about recommendations and suggestions that a decision be made in September, but there is nothing in these minutes, Your Honor, that a decision will definitely be made in September.
THE COURT: This is everybody talking on the telephone?
MR. PERKINS: I might want to point out, on page 3 of that, it says, the board concluded it will have to address the above 12 issues, as well as the issue of determining the strategic partner. That is two-thirds of the way, right at the bottom of the list of 12 and it says, ownership of the collection, where the collection would be housed, the question of office space.

And when you read through these, these 12 things, and you read the two pages that precede it, it is about closing Chicago and moving to Washington, DC, and the 12 things are who will own the collection, how will it all be done. And then it says, the board concluded it will have to address the above 12 issues, and it goes on and says —

THE COURT: As well as the issue of determining a strategic planner. I mean, I —

MR. PERKINS: Partner.

THE COURT: Partner, I'm sorry. As I am looking at this, I am not seeing anything to suggest that something is going to happen tomorrow. And that's what we are here for. I have a complaint that is pled and a motion that is pled on information and belief.

MR. CARROLL: No, Your Honor,

MR. QUINLAN: That's not correct. If you look at the complaint, it is not on information and belief, and we have struck the other ones that were in inadvertently when going through and preparing this in the motion for temporary restraining order.

The complaint is not on information and belief. The complaint itself is, and they don't even suggest that, Sidley does not suggest —

THE COURT: The motion, then. The motion is.

MR. QUINLAN: But as you know, Your Honor —

MR. CARROLL: Two times.

MR. QUINLAN: — it is based on the complaint, not on the motion, and the motion we are striking and substituting a clarified copy.

THE COURT: Paragraph 3 is not meant to be on information and belief?

MR. QUINLAN: No, strike that.

MR. CARROLL: We have a corrected copy, Judge. We can substitute right now. We were going to do it later, but we have a corrected copy here with us that we can substitute that we gave to counsel before we started.

THE COURT: So the allegation is that defendants plan to use tomorrow's meeting to close the museum and move the Foundation and its assets to Washington?

MR. QUINLAN: That is correct. And that — and with the vision for the future it becomes clear that that is —

THE COURT: Help me out on this. Vision for the future. Whose document is this?

MR. QUINLAN: This is Paul Tucker's, who passed this out.

THE COURT: The president.

MR. QUINLAN: Passed it out, I believe.

MR. CARROLL: Chairman, too, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Chairman.

MR. QUINLAN: Chairman and president. The first introduction of that that we are aware of, it was submitted to Mrs. Daley for consideration at her committee on education, which really, this isn't the jurisdiction of that committee. It was brought to the attention of the other members, that is, our other members, right after she had received it.

THE COURT: Excuse me, I am sorry to keep interrupting. This isn't new. This has been around for a couple months.

MR. QUINLAN: No, this vision, absolutely, brand new. What is not new is the discussion of various things about where they are going to be, what they are going to do, looking for partners, all of those kind of things, that these were issues to be discussed. But there also was to be a study committee who were going to be involved in studying these issues, getting the study committee to make a report, and this report was then going to be presented to all the members.

The report then turns out to be Mr. Tucker's vision of the future, and this is what caused the great concern of our members when they received this for the first time about two or three days ago.

MR. CARROLL: When they arrived.

MR. QUINLAN: When they arrived in Paris. And, as Your Honor can see from looking at this, this is a comprehensive plan and scheme which Mr. Tucker talks about having gone through, and found a place, having talked to people about placing it there. He personally is engaged in all these conversations, and that it has come down — he has decided that the best thing to do is move the Foundation, to move it to the Pharmaceutical Building, and at the same time to then go to the National Gallery with the art museum. None of this was discussed. None of this was part and parcel of the strategic planning discussion.

Mr. Gidwitz is not aware of anything in here having been completed by Mr. Tucker. And this is dropped on them at the very last minute. Now, this is to be the new program and this is what we are going to consider.

THE COURT: That was drafted some day last week is what you are saying?

MR. QUINLAN: I don't know.

THE COURT: Or received. This is — the first time any of you heard anything about it was sometime last week.

MR. QUINLAN: Any of our people heard about it. That's all I can say. I cannot say what any others may know or what they don't know. I do not know the date of this document. I don't know who it went to besides Mrs. Daley, who was the first one we were aware of.

THE COURT: So this is a document that may or may not be the subject of discussion tomorrow?

MR. QUINLAN: Well, we assume that this is, then — the intention was to discuss this and to make this decision and that is what my people were led to believe was going to take place tomorrow.

THE COURT: That's what I am trying to find out, your people were led to believe. How? Was it somebody — I don't have an affidavit from any of those people that said, you know, it is going to be called for a vote. We have been — we have been informed there is going to be a vote tomorrow. Normally, when I get TROs, the first thing I do is flip to the affidavits. I don't have any of that here.

They are going to have a meeting, an annual meeting. They are going to elect their officers. I don't even have an officer — I don't even have an affidavit who's running, who is withdrawing, there may be some people on this board that don't want to be on this board anymore. People may have submitted their resignations. You want me to stop their election. You don't want me — you want me stop them from making, you know, new terms. You want me to stop committee assignments and you want me to really stop them from doing anything tomorrow.

MR. QUINLAN: No. I don't want you —

THE COURT: Maybe I don't understand it right.

MR. QUINLAN: Right.

THE COURT: That's the way that it seems to be pled.

MR. QUINLAN: What I am talking about — well, first of all, we don't know. Okay. We don't have the nominations even. The normal procedure is the same people are nominated, unless there is some indication that they weren't going to be nominated.

THE COURT: Is there an indication that they are not going to be nominated?

MR. QUINLAN: Yes, on Mr. Buntrock. Now,

Mr. Gidwitz was talked to, Mr. Buntrock was talked to, I guess Mrs. Daley was talked to as well, and they were informed of that through Mr. Tucker. Now, the intention was not to replace him but just to remove him, and that was clearly the intent that they had to conduct this meeting on Sunday. And I was told that last night.

THE COURT: Is that the intent for tomorrow?

MR. QUINLAN: As far as my plaintiffs know at the present time, if, in fact, you do not enjoin them from doing so, they will remove Mr. Buntrock and may well remove Mr. Gidwitz, who has also filed this lawsuit in retaliation as they believe for taking these positions and raising these issues. That's the reason for the emergency.

None of this information has been shared. None of this information has been made known to the board, generally. It is selectively handled. That's our allegation. That's what we are contending is the problem here and that's what's taken place. We are not trying to stop all the work of the meeting tomorrow. The only thing we are trying to stop are those things that directly go to the allegations of our complaint.

THE COURT: Do I have a verified allegation that it is the intention of this board to kick off Mr. Gidwitz or Mr. Buntrock tomorrow against their will?

MR. QUINLAN: You have nothing in relation to Mr. Gidwitz because Mr. Gidwitz has only come to that belief now. He was not the target prior to the filing of this lawsuit. He now believes, based on his discussions there and the people that he has talked to on his side, apparently, having talked to Mr. Tucker, that he may well also be the target if we go forward, and he informed me of that last night.

THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, are there any plans, to your knowledge, to remove any directors against their will tomorrow?

MR. CARLSON: Your Honor, what I assume is going to take place is the — if we are lucky enough to not have the court enjoin us, is the annual meeting of the board and the election of officers, I assume Mr. Gidwitz can nominate Mr. Buntrock if he wishes to, and Mr. Buntrock could nominate Mr. Gidwitz. And there will be a vote. I don't have any idea what the result of that vote will be. But there are 11 directors, as I understand it, two plaintiffs here and only three directors have been sued as defendants. There are at least six other directors who aren't even in this litigation, who I guess the plaintiffs don't even have a complaint against. And I assume there will be an election, and I don't know if Mr. Buntrock or Mr. Gidwitz or anyone, particularly, will be elected or not.

MR. PERKINS: Judge, I just want to point back to the August 24, 2000, board meeting minutes. Page 2, where the discussion says, there are two issues on the agenda and in September we should make sure there are two issues on the agenda at the September meeting: Giverny and —

THE COURT: I'm sorry, which page?

MR. PERKINS: Page 2, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Where on this page?

MR. PERKINS: Down at the bottom. There is like two little dots towards the very bottom.

THE COURT: I see it, all right.

MR. PERKINS: Giverny and being central, and closing Chicago, and Dr. Tucker suggested that we definitely make a decision in September about closing Chicago. And when you read the totality of these minutes of August 24, 2000, there is no question, that there is an intent to vote in the September meeting about closing the museum here in Chicago. They talk about strategic partners. We receive a vision statement of the future from Mr. Tucker that says, we want to take the collection, give it to National Gallery. We want to buy some building on the Mall in Washington, DC, to have some kind of teaching facility there. We want to get out of Chicago.

And that's why the Attorney General spent the weekend putting these papers together and has come here this afternoon to point out to Your Honor that this isn't really — this is their minutes, and it is clearly their intention to have this discussion. They set forth that they are going to do it in September. Now, we have the additional benefit of Mr. Gidwitz and Mr. Buntrock explaining their surprise by these things, the concern about these things. This is not a decision that should be made by this board under the allegations and circumstances we have here. And to let them go forward and remove the two directors who have brought this to light, of course, that is what is probably going to happen.

Would they not do that? Wouldn't they be foolish to tomorrow say, let's continue to have these two directors who have sued us on the board so they can continue their lawsuit? They are not going to do that, Judge. It is a situation where if you permit them to go forward tomorrow and remove directors, and permit them to have a vote on whether they are closing Chicago, we face a very grave danger to this Foundation, and that is why we are here on an emergency basis. It is based on their own papers, and we are not asking Your Honor to remove people today.

THE COURT: You are asking me — you are asking me to do two limited things, which is prevent the Terra Foundation board tomorrow from removing any director against his will —

MR. PERKINS: That's correct.
THE COURT: — period.
MR. PERKINS: That's correct.
THE COURT: And prevent them from taking a final vote to close Chicago.
MR. PERKINS: That's correct, Judge.
THE COURT: Is that what you are really look —
MR. QUINLAN: Essentially the same thing.
THE COURT: What is all this business about committee assignments, changing committee assignments, all that?
MR. QUINLAN: Well, the reason for that, though, is what we are trying to do is, we have alleged a plan or scheme. As part of that plan or scheme, which is in paragraph 53 of our complaint, they are trying to silence those people who have an objection to them violating their duties under the articles of incorporation and in the mission statement of Dan Terra. Plus, they are trying to stifle any debate here or any question of their procedures and their activities, such as acting without board approval involve, acting without Executive Committee approval and conducting business as their own private business, so they want to shut down those voices and removing people as the chair people of the various committees, who happen to be supportive of our clients. My clients do not stand alone.

There is probably at least two other members and maybe three other members who are supportive, at least, of their issues here that we raise in court. But to have them identified and to be part of that, they could well become targets, so we are not getting into that kind of discussion. But the point of changing chairs is that by them restructuring, they would then be harmful, harming the entire operation of this and be taking sanctions against those people who they believed are part of this process of basically saying we have to obey the law and we have to abide by fiduciary duty, and we would be we regarding — all we are asking, that those kind of assignments, that those — removing anybody against their will and taking final vote be deferred. This is an important vote and these important decisions should be taking place here in Chicago under the eyes of the Attorney General, under the eyes of the public of the State of Illinois.

THE COURT: Is the Attorney General allowed to attend their meeting?
MR. QUINLAN: He has reason to intervene to raise the issue.
THE COURT: I mean, are these public meetings, you say, under the right of the public and press and Attorney General? These are Foundation meetings. I mean, in their own minutes they ask, by invitation, their own attorney to show up. It sounds, I mean, it sounds good but does — if it is here in Chicago, does the Attorney General get to walk in?
MR. QUINLAN: The Attorney General can go in by court order as he is trying to do here. What I am saying, in taking place here in Chicago, just as you're suggesting it is very difficult for you to make judgments about what is taking place and what isn't taking place, and, quite frankly, it is quite difficult for us because we have to communicate with our clients, the seven-hour difference, which has already been anticipated, they are already in the next day there, so for us to be dealing with our —

THE COURT: No, about that time. Isn't —
MR. CARROLL: About 11 o'clock.
THE COURT: 11 o'clock at night.
MR. QUINLAN: Basically, the next day. Dealing with them, dealing with that type of situation is difficult for counsel, it is difficult for the court. And we appreciate that there is very little harm, if any, to do this, found to this Foundation to be in a situation of just merely conducting that at a later time. They have done that in the past. And the bylaws basically provide that if they don't elect the officers at the annual meeting, they are to do it later, not sooner.
THE COURT: Okay. You have asked in your motion that I enjoin them from electing anyone. What if they elect — what if they want to elect the same board? Are you seeking to prevent that, to have an election of the same board?

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, the problem is, I don't know what the scheme or plan is. We are trying to take the most limited relief possibly to prevent them from effectuating an illegal plan or scheme. And it is the status quo that we are trying to preserve, which is merely what has been operating as it is. There is no emergency here to change anybody. There is no emergency to fire anybody.

They don't have any compelling interest to do this. It isn't suggested. There isn't anything. The Foundation will not fall apart. The annual meetings normally replace, continue to reelect the same people unless there is somebody who is desirous to step down, and there is nobody that, I am aware of, that does.

THE COURT: That is what you just said a moment ago, you said, traditionally, this hasn't been always done at the annual meeting, isn't this board traditionally every annual meeting elects its officers.

MR. QUINLAN: That is when they are supposed to elect them. I am saying that it doesn't necessarily and hasn't — in the past, it has not always happened. I don't mean to say that it is regularly it doesn't happen, but regularly meetings are held here in Chicago.

THE COURT: But I don't have anything in the paper that say they have in the past elected officers other than their September meeting, do I?

MR. QUINLAN: Oh, no. That's true. But the bylaws themselves provide that they can. They are empowered to do that, and all I am saying, is the bylaws themselves envision it is not a critical date to do it. All they are saying is you can do it later. It is no big deal. At the convenience of the board. So it doesn't say you have to do it within ten days, you must do it within 30, it says at the convenience of the board.

THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, I think we have limited it down, now. What I understand is being talked about is, they can meet tomorrow, they can have their meeting, they can do their committee reports, they can do whatever else that they were planning to do, they can even have an election, as long as they do not elect — I mean vote to remove someone against their will, which could then be interpreted as retaliatory measure for this lawsuit. And they can discuss all they want moving out of Chicago or moving to Washington or doing whatever. They just cannot take a final vote or a vote to — take any steps that would effectuate that move.

What would be your response to that?

MR. CARLSON: I was following Your Honor until the last comment about not taking steps to effectuate that vote.

THE COURT: I could conceive of a situation where they might not take a final vote but they could also take a vote to start moving paintings out of Chicago elsewhere.

MR. CARLSON: Well, frankly, Your Honor, the collections that are owned by the Foundation —

THE COURT: Goes back and forth all the time.

MR. CARLSON: They go back and forth all the time. They are loaned out and everything else. I am terribly concerned about the motion for TRO that would tell this private not-for-profit corporation that operates two museums — the one in Giverny is probably more substantial than the one here in Chicago — that we can't move any of our artwork.

THE COURT: Well, I am worried — I was concerned also about whether or not you have any inner museum agreements in effect right now, where you have some kind of agreement that —

MR. CARLSON: We have obligations.

THE COURT: — next week you have got to loan a painting to New York, or something like that?

MR. CARLSON: What also concerns me, as I like at Exhibit D and Exhibit E —

THE COURT: To the complaint.

MR. CARLSON: That's to the Attorney General's complaint, Your Honor, and I believe I guess they are also attached to the reply belief handed to me this afternoon, but I haven't had a chance to look at it, the white paper memo from Mr. Tucker —

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. CARLSON: — and the minutes of August 24th, counsel makes all sorts of assertions about how these documents show we are going to do a terribly evil thing and we are going to close the museum tomorrow. These documents to me, on their face, are nothing more — look at D, for example — than an expression of opinion by one board member out of 11 that he thinks certain things might make sense. He talks about how he believes things, he believes the Foundation should do certain things. And, in fact, he believes certain things are wise.

In the end, he simply expressed an interest in reviewing all of this at Giverny, and as I read the board meeting minutes of August 24th, we said Mr. Tucker — Dr. Tucker is just suggesting a decision in September. That is an these documents show is just mere suggestions, mere considerations of possibilities that have existed since last March and before. And yet plaintiffs' counsel comes in and argues that these show that were plans and plots and schemes — I heard that word a lot — to accomplish certain things tomorrow, and I am concerned about moving in any direction where the court intervenes in a properly constituted, properly called annual meeting. And there is no allegation that this annual meeting hasn't been properly called or is proceeding improperly.

All of the board members that are there in Giverny support it. It is not that easy, Your Honor, to get the board of this Foundation together. We have many French nationals who serve on our board. It makes perfect since while all there to conduct an annual meeting and to do an election of officers, such as they ordinarily do, and to do whatever other things they would do to review or consider proposals or options, whatever business might come before the board. And I have some concern if the court is suggesting that the meeting can go ahead, but there shouldn't be the election of officers. You know, Mr. Buntrock and Mr. Gidwitz are free to convince their other two or three friends. All they need is one more friend, just four, and it will be a majority of the board and they can reelect themselves. And they are free to say whatever they want to.

MR. CARROLL: There are 11 members, Your Honor.

THE COURT: There are 11 members.

MR. CARLSON: Well, I thought if they had four friends and they added the two, that is six, and that becomes a majority of 11.

THE COURT: Is it majority vote for officers?

MR. QUINLAN: It is, but it would be six to five, Your Honor. And, frankly, if counsel is saying this is nothing more than just their intent to talk about it, then what is he concerned about an injunction?

THE COURT: That was going to be next question.

MR. CARLSON: That was going to be the final point I was coming to, Your Honor. I was getting around to it, Your Honor. I apologize.

Courts do not ordinarily enter orders prohibiting the boards of not-for-profit corporations or any other kind of corporation from going ahead and conducting the business of the corporation. I understand, perhaps, the court's feeling or Mr. Quinlan's feeling, hat if there is no intention to do these things, what difference does a court order make?

I come to court under a flurry of motions alleging all sorts of things, including how I wasn't properly retained. I hesitate to agree.

THE COURT: You couldn't possibly agree. You couldn't possibly agree. I am not asking you to agree.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor —

THE COURT: Wait one second. I have got to go back to the issue. I am still not really sure, though, that as far as you know, that there is really even a definitive plan to place before this board tomorrow a vote to finalize, this is it, we are closing the museum.

MR. CARLSON: In fact, Your Honor, it is my understanding that there will not be any final vote on plans or proposals for any of the museum facilities, particularly the Chicago facility or any the Foundation's facilities tomorrow. There is certainly no intention, as far as I understand, to vote to close the Terra museum on Michigan Avenue tomorrow at the annual meeting.

THE COURT: Is there going to be — I think you told me, yes, a moment ago, a few minutes ago, that there is going to be counsel from Sidley going to this meeting tomorrow?

MR. CARLSON: Your Honor, I believe Mr. Lerner may, in fact, be present. I know he is present in Giverny. I spoke to him in Giverny yesterday. I frankly don't know for sure if he was going to be present at the board meeting, but I can find out.

THE COURT: I take it that when the board was — had been considering over the months in committee meetings and then in this telephone meeting in August, the possible closing of the museum, it was doing so without the knowledge that it is — that is it the position of the Attorney General that they can't close the museum and move out of Illinois?

MR. CARLSON: I am shocked that the Attorney General takes that position. It is so contrary to the articles of incorporation and bylaws. So it is certainly not the belief of the Foundation that the Attorney General has any problem whatsoever with a decision like that.

THE COURT: But I would assume that that knowledge that the Attorney General has come into court and is trying to stop them from closing the museum, would perhaps make counsel do some research or discuss or look into the situation for the board tomorrow. I mean, I can't imagine that the board would be voting to close the museum.

MR. CARLSON: You are correct, Your Honor. The Foundation is certainly interested in the opinions and beliefs of the Attorney General's office of the State of Illinois. We are an Illinois not-for-profit corporation. To the degree I have had a chance to look at Mr. Perkins' papers, I believe they are simply wrong as a matter of law. I believe we are entitled, pursuant to our articles of incorporation, pursuant to our bylaws, pursuant to the Illinois Not-For-Profit Corporation Act, to close the facility on North Michigan Avenue if that is what the board chose to do, but no one has any intention to do that tomorrow, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Let me just go back to

Mr. Perkins for a moment. I take it that ultimately you are suggesting that this case is going to get resolved through a preliminary injunction hearing or permanent injunction hearing where the issue is going to be the intent of those who have contributed to the museum and the intent of he who — those who created it, and that that would be not a summary judgment motion, that would be an evidentiary matter that the court would have to hear testimony on?

MR. PERKINS: Yes, Judge, it is not something that I believe can be resolved by summary judgment and to just correct a couple quick remarks. Articles of incorporation say many things, and, in fact, it permits the board to just dissolve the corporation to give it to another 501(c)(3). I suppose they could give it to some animal charity if they thought that was — because that's what the articles, really, I guess, under some interpretations would permit.

However, we would not agree with that, and we believe that as Your Honor has just stated, it is often necessary to consider who gave the money and for what purposes. In this particular instance, our papers are replete with that, but I won't repeat it for Your Honor. But it is pretty clear that the founders, in our opinion, did not want it to leave Chicago.

And just to correct the record in one respect, the museum here in Chicago is quite substantial. Giverny may be a wonderful place and it may have some of the collections, but the Chicago museum is no stepchild to the Foundation's activity. It is a jewel for Chicago and it is an important part of Chicago and it is an important part of Chicago's charitable treasures.

THE COURT: And you would be seeking a permanent injunction hearing to prove that that was the original intent, and it is your position that once you prove that, that will be sufficient and you also want a declaratory judgment that they may not close the museum and move the collection outside the state, period?

MR. PERKINS: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And would we be at that time talking about how much could be closed, how much of the collection could be moved? What is your position going to be at that point?

MR. PERKINS: Well, Your Honor, I think we all recognize that this is a situation where a museum can have other locations and they exchange collections not only among those locations, but with other institutions. We are expecting there to be this substantial museum that we see in Chicago in perpetuity, and that that is the intent Dan Terra when he founded it, when he went out and personally selected all of this art. This is the situation. He probably picked 90 percent of the pieces of art that are in this museum, and we will be able to prove that. We have the son, who is — who has been with him through the entire process, and this is the situation where I don't think the facts, really, are going to be that much in dispute. It may become a question for a chancellor or a trier of fact, so to speak, to decide what that is and apply the law, but I think it is very clear what Dan Terra had in mind. He named it after himself. He put it in he city that he grew up in and did business in and became successful in and I think he wanted to give back.

THE COURT: Except for the Harding case, has there been any other museum case in Illinois where private or a not-for-profit— you don't want me to use the word "private," a not-for-profit corporation is precluded from closing if it chose to do so?
MR. PERKINS: Judge, I think it is a question of when we say closing, a great example are not-for-profit hospitals that find themselves in situations where they must close down.
THE COURT: Because they can't make it financially, and this is not that situation.
MR. PERKINS: But in the question — the reason I point that out, Judge, there is money left over, substantial moneys often. In fact, they sell often to a for-profit or they sell to another not-for-profit to gather back a whole bunch of money for a foundation. And the question is, always, what will that money go for. And I can tell you this, it is always very parochial, I mean, it can be such that a Southern Illinois community isn't interested in seeing that money migrate up into the Chicagoland area to be given for other purposes.

And so I think these concepts are very rooted in community and very rooted in the common law, which is the state, the sovereign state, and the community that creates the charitable trust should remain the beneficiary of that charitable trust. That is the heart of what the common law provided. And, true, as we move forward in society and we have United States with different states and different locations, it becomes a little harder always to apply that in each circumstance. But I think when the founder has so clearly indicated his intent, and I think when the situation is so clear that it belongs in the State and in the City of Chicago, I think it is a situation where that trust must stay under the protection of the people of the State of Illinois, under its representatives, under the protection of this court.

THE COURT: So it is going to be your position, ultimately, let's assume it is not this particular case, but let's assume there is a museum in town that is simply not making it. There is not attendance, it is not doing well. It just is not supporting its efforts, it is not growing and, for whatever reason, it has to close. It is your position that even if that were the case, the assets would have to ultimately remain in the State of Illinois or the collection would be sold for the benefit of the people of the State of Illinois.
MR. PERKINS: Yes, Judge, absolutely.
THE COURT: And that is really what it comes down to. They can't ever move these assets elsewhere.
MR. PERKINS: Your Honor, I have been on many cases and that is our position in every case.
THE COURT: Okay. Is there anything else? Mr. Quinlan, you have been very patient.
MR. QUINLAN: No, not at all. I obviously concur with what the Attorney General says and his perspective, obviously, is a little different than ours, but I think maybe counsel representing the Foundation here does not really offer the court anything other than it is offering form over substance.

I would note that the cases that he cites are really private corporation cases, not corporations that are charged with a public purpose and a not-for-profit situation. As Your Honor knows, obviously, in the not-for-profit situation, they are treated as charitable trusts when it is the public who is the one that is the foundation or the trust is dedicated for whose purpose it is they are furthering. They receive tax deductions, obviously, from the State of Illinois. And in this case, Mr. Terra chose to put it here, chose to incorporate it here, and chose to take advantage of the tax deductions and the benefits which were available to him, and that was his intent to have it here. We see nothing else other than that.

And, frankly, that's what my people have been trying to do, is to further the interest of making that Foundation or museum and display of that art available here in Illinois for the educational purposes that he founded. And that is what would happen if, in fact, they take any final action.

The fact of enjoining the corporation from taking actions, enjoining them from holding a board meeting. Your Honor, we have cited you some cases in our packet that surely say that can be done. And, surely, in a situation to try to remove somebody for purpose of trying to exercise their rights under the statute and to call upon others to respond to their obligations and their rights in a fiduciary obligation, the Winston & Strawn case I think is clear in that situation, surely they have a right to, in that instance, even if they have an absolute right in ordinary circumstances to fire somebody, they can't do it in that setting.

THE COURT: Let me try one other thing, and I am sorry to interrupt you again.

MR. QUINLAN: That's all right.

THE COURT: But let's assume that the board, as a whole, except for the three that you mostly complain of, are really upset about this lawsuit and they are really mad tomorrow, and they get to their meeting and they want to oust Mrs. Terra and Mr. Tucker and Senator Simpson. They couldn't do that under the injunction that you are asking for?

MR. QUINLAN: No. I would rather that we take the time here to look at this in a responsible, reasonable way and not allow motions on either side to make these choices. I am very comfortable with the Attorney General speaking on behalf of the people of the State of Illinois. My people, my clients, are really just trying to do what they believe the law requires and trying to exercise their fiduciary responsibilities.

Both of these gentlemen sit on major boards and major art foundations and museums in this city and around the country. And they are no come to this table without a great deal of experience and knowledge of their responsibilities in this setting, and they have so exercised them in prior situations on boards and art foundations and groups. Some of the major ones in this country, both Mr. Buntrock and Mr. Gidwitz, sit on. So they are not people who are not aware of what their obligations and responsibilities are.

So what they are asking is merely that they have the right to make these observations, these objections, and if the board acts as a responsible board. Their fear is primarily that nobody will serve on this board if this is allowed to continue. That has been part of the problem since the new administration has taken over. A lot of changes are taking place, a lot of people that have come and gone.

Most of the people will not take the step to file a suit. Not say this is enough, we want to do something about it. These people are here this Chicago, residents of the City of Chicago, the State of Illinois, business people from here, and they are gravely concerned about what they have seen that has taken place.

All we ask Your Honor to do is to put this off for a reasonable period of time so Your Honor can look at this case, listen to our arguments and, of course, the Attorney General's arguments as to why we needed the protections we need and why these things should be changed.

We have filed a verified affidavit alleging these things are going to take place, and I think under the rules that Your Honor knows, those stand as the evidence in this case, and that is the basis upon which we should decide this. And I do believe it's fair and reasonable, and there is no harm. And balancing the harm in this instance surely does not harm the Foundation. If there is any kind of transfer of something to meet a schedule, surely that can be addressed by this court. Surely, that can be addressed in a more proper setting, than 5,000 miles away in this type of setting and all of a sudden it all has to happen on Tuesday. There is no in the meeting minutes here, there is nothing in the agenda that suggests any of those things.

THE COURT: Does the board meet every month?

MR. CARROLL: Quarterly.

MR. QUINLAN: Quarterly, Your Honor. But the executive continue continues, and that is one of the reasons.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, they did meet in August by phone. Was that a special meeting called for some reason? Do they do telephone meetings frequently?

MR. CARLSON: I am afraid I don't know the answer to that.

MR. QUINLAN: They do them. I don't know how frequently. Their normal meeting schedule is quarterly, but they do meet from time to time, and the executive committee, of course, exits in the interim to take up thing that needs. to be taken.

THE COURT: And the executive committee does not have authority to close the museum?

MR. QUINLAN: That's correct.

THE COURT: And get rid of the collection, os it can only be done in a board meeting?

MR. QUINLAN: That is correct.

THE COURT: Do you want the last shot?

MR. CARLSON: I would appreciate it, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. CARLSON: Your Honor obviously has read my opposition papers and I will not spend the time to go through every point made in the opposition papers. As a factual matter or as a legal matter, I would simply like to state for the record, Your Honor, that is, of course, true that a TRO is a drastic emergency remedy that should be issued only with the utmost care and not in the case that is doubtful.

This is a lawsuit brought by two individual members of an 11-member board against three other individual members of that board and against the Foundation, itself. They purport to bring it as individuals. They apparently have no complaint with the other six members of the board who aren't involved in this lawsuit. I, frankly, Your Honor, believe there is substantial legal question as to whether these plaintiffs even have the standing to bring this lawsuit. And I do intend to address that.

Your Honor was asking Mr. Perkins about evidentiary hearings and things of that sort. At least my preliminary examination of this causes me to wonder whether the plaintiffs even have a legally cognizable claim or whether we cannot dispose of this on behalf of the Foundation on the motion. And to sort of highlight that problem, and I think it is a problem that relates to a request for a TRO, they cite only one source of any protectible right, any protectible interest. They cite that portion of the Not-For-Profit Corporation Act dealing with actions that are ultra vires and they are coming in this court, Your Honor, seeking to prohibit the Foundation's board from conducting its board election at its annual meeting. And two other things, closing the Terra Museum on Michigan Avenue and transferring or moving around any artwork or assets. As we have demonstrated in our opposition papers, Your Honor, it is clearly not ultra vires for the Foundation to do any one of those three things, conduct an election tomorrow, close the Terra Museum, transfer the Terra Museum's assets. It is specifically authorized by the Not-For-Profit Corporation Act, and Mr. Quinlan makes all these comments about how can you be doing this in France, why don't you do it here in Chicago. Somebody may suggest we have got to have the Attorney General present and everything else.

805 ILCS 105/103.10(j) specifically allows this foundation and any not-for-profit corporation to carry on its operations either within or without this state to exercise any of its powers, either in a foreign country or in any part of the United States. It is really preposterous, Your Honor, to argue that anyone has alleged any possible action by the Foundation that is truly ultra vires.

It doesn't make any difference what Mr. Terra's son may say in an affidavit or any of the other supposedly factual matters that they refer to in the complaint. There are two documents to look at to see what Mr. Terra's intent was, if that intent is relevant, the articles of incorporation and the bylaws. Nothing in the articles of incorporations or the bylaws requires this Foundation to conduct a museum facility where it is on North Michigan Avenue, to have a museum anywhere in the City of Chicago. It was, in fact, started in Evanston, not in Chicago, nor is there anything in the articles of incorporation or bylaws that requires us to even have a museum anywhere in the United States.

Now, the fact of the matter is, that Your Honor's initial questions were exactly right, all that is happened is preliminary discussion and consideration of a number of possibilities and options, many of which were proposed by Mr. Gidwitz himself at the March 13, 2000, strategic planning committee meeting.

The board would like to consider the possibility of possibly making changes to the Michigan Avenue facility, perhaps building another museum facility somewhere else in Chicago, possibly entering into an arrangement with The Art Institute of Chicago where the collection would be housed there.

On the basis of the complaint they have filed and on the basis of their motion, they have not proven any of the elements that is necessary for them to prove in order to get a TRO from this court, that extraordinary remedy. They haven't demonstrated any emergency, any need for this type of relief. And contrary to what Mr. Quinlan says about balance of the hardships, for Your Honor to interfere in the board election tomorrow would mean that

Your Honor is in effect entering a mandatory injunction that the existing board has to continue in place as the board of this, the Foundation, for Your Honor to enter any kind of an order that the board can't debate and decide and do whatever it may deem appropriate tomorrow in terms of moving artwork or transferring assets or closing the Michigan Avenue facility, whether or not the board intends to do that, and I do represent to the court that the board does not intend to do that, but for this court to enter an order saying that they can't do those kinds of things runs dangerously close to having this court come in and start to manage the affairs of a not-for-profit corporation.

And I would just make reference again to the argument we have made in the balancing hardship argument on papers. I think it is clearly, ordinarily the courts defer to the business judgment of the boards of directors, courts do not interfere in the internal affairs of private, not-for-profit corporations, and I would assert, Your Honor, that the plaintiffs have not established the elements they need to establish in order to get a temporary restraining order such as they are seeking in their motion.

THE COURT: Thank you.

Is there anything further?

MR. QUINLAN: If you want me to respond. He is challenging our right under 103.15. And it clear any director has the right to, any act, it says, in any proceeding by a member entitled vote or by a director —

THE COURT: Slow down. Slow down.

MR. QUINLAN: I'm sorry. It is 103.15(a). In a proceeding by a member entitled to vote or by a director against the corporation to enjoin the doings of any act or acts and including the transfer of real property or personal property, we may challenge and raise the issue and seek injunctive relief against an ultra vires act or raise the capacity of the person to do that. And what we are doing is we are raising that, the act being ultra vires, which is outside the authority that they received through the articles and through the mission statement. And in determining what is the mission statement and what is the intent of the testator, then you have to look also to surrounding circumstances and that's the reason that we have raised those issues about statements that he has made in the past, his statements at the time of making the transfer, his statements at the time of setting it up and Mr. Jim Terra's affidavit clearly sets forth his personal knowledge of its intent.

So surely the intent of this to be located in Chicago, in Illinois, is crystal clear. And the only thing we have to do, we don't have to prove our case, as counsel suggested, all we have to do is raise a fair question about whether or not, a fair question concerning our right to this relief. And we have no problem about discussions and considering this. What we have a problem with, as Your Honor has clearly stated, taking any final decision or making a final decision to do something that would be, as we allege and the Attorney General, ultra vires and outside of their authority to do that and they cannot do it. All it has to be is a fair question. All we ask is for a reasonable period of time to get our case and present is to Your Honor to allow Your Honor to rule on those things.

THE COURT: Okay. I am going to grant a very limited temporary restraining order in this case. The courts are not supposed to interfere with corporations and their operations unless there is some real reason to do so. In this case, as I see it, the issue is whether or not the closing of the museum and the moving of its assets and collection outside of the State of Illinois, whether that act is an ultra vires act. That is the only issue in the case, whether they can do it or whether they can't do it.

And, as I see it, the plaintiffs have at least raised enough of a fair question to entitle them to very limited relief. I am not going to tell this corporation that they can't elect officers tomorrow. I am not going to tell them that they can't elect directors tomorrow. I am going to say that they may not remove any current director from office against his or her will, and only that. They can do their committee assignments. They can take whatever kinds of votes in leadership that they think is appropriate. They may not take any final action to close the Terra Museum in the State of Illinois or to remove the bulk of its collections or assets from the State of Illinois. And I say the bulk of it, because I am not going to interfere with any contracts that may be in existence or inner museum loans or anything else that they would normally be doing in their regular course of business.

MR. QUINLAN: Would you limit your order to that, so there can't be any exercise of this unless there are prior committed obligations to do something?

THE COURT: They may make a commitment tomorrow for a new museum. There may be some types of negotiations that have been going on. I know there are allegations in these pleadings which counsel cannot address, since he is representing the Foundation and not the individuals, about certain pieces having been in improperly used. I assume that these — this complaint and these allegations have now been made available to all board members, and I assume there is going to be some discussions about some of these issues tomorrow. I am not going to squelch any of those discussions. I am not going to prevent the board from — from in any way talking about what all the alternatives might be. They can certainly do that, but they can't take any final action, at least for a period, and that is what we need to talk about, 10, 20 days, whatever. I am concerned that there is no notice here or there is question of notice to the unserved individual defendants, so my preference is to do this for only about ten days.

MR. QUINLAN: Well, We gave the best practical notice, Your Honor, under the circumstances, and we do everything we possibly could. They have been served by mail, telephonic communication, where those efforts attempted to be made, has been sent to Giverny, France. I am sure they know what is taking placement. These things —

MR. CARROLL: Federal Express, Your Honor.

MR. QUINLAN: Overnight Federal Express. Under those circumstance, that is a TRO with notice, Your Honor. Frankly, ten days under these circumstances, just getting people back here so that we can have some ability to deal with this situation is going to take at least that kind of time. And, also, Your Honor —

THE COURT: Let me just ask. I know counsel hasn't had a chance to talk to his client very much, is it going to make much of a difference whether it is 10 or 20? I assume some of these folks have vacations planned. I also have a motion for expedited discovery, that I have to deal with next, and they are going to want to take somebody's deposition real quick.

MR. CARLSON: I think, Your Honor, for the first time this afternoon I agree with Mr. Quinlan on something. I think ten days probably is unrealistically short. Without conceding that the entry of the order was proper, Your Honor, it frankly is the case, we weren't intending to do any of the things that the court has enjoined, except I don't know how board election would come out.

THE COURT: There may still be a board election of officers and you could still, and I want to make it clear, you can elect all the people that are still there, and if some officers wish to resign, they can elect replacements.

MR. CARLSON: I don't know, frankly, Your Honor, whether Mr. Gidwitz or Mr. Buntrock want reelection or not want reelection, and I don't know whether they wish to be reelected or not. Be that as it may, Your Honor, I was going to suggest, I think the Foundation would be interested, as I indicated I think there are legal deficiencies with this complaint. And there may way well be legal deficiency with Mr. Perkins' complaint that I just received and haven't had a chance to take a look at.

So from the Foundation's perspective, I can't say for the individual defendants, if Your Honor is going to schedule a preliminary injunction hearing, we would almost rather have that be sometime in the middle or latter time part of October than sometime as quickly as ten days from how.

THE COURT: Well, I won't — what I am going to do is, why don't I enter an order for only ten days and have you back at the conclusion of those ten days for the purpose of extending the order. You will know, there will not be a preliminary injunction hearing at that time. The purpose of that will be to extend the order to a time that is reasonable after you have had an opportunity to — well, first of all, after counsel has had a chance to find out whether or not Sidley is representing the board.

MR. CARLSON: This may be the last time you see me, Your Honor.

THE COURT: There may be motions to dismiss. I don't have to deal in any event with the motion on the intervention of James Terra. And until the individual defendants are served, I really don't want to deal with that issue until I know that they are properly here and before the court. And I will know that more in ten days.

Can I have my book, please.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, one other thing I would ask, I don't know if Your Honor decided not to do this or overlooked it, but I will address the issue of the executive committee which has the right to take management decisions in the interim, and I ask that they not be allowed to make any changes in makeup of that committee, which we have alleged would only take place on the basis of them taking unauthorized action in retaliatory action against our clients, both of whom are on that same —

THE COURT: I'm sorry. You lost me. The executive committee isn't empowered under the bylaws to make final decisions about the collection and the museum?

MR. QUINLAN: About moving.

THE COURT: About moving. But the executive committee can pretty much run the corporate or the Foundation —

MR. QUINLAN: Right.

THE COURT: — in between meetings?

MR. QUINLAN: Right.

THE COURT: Right now the executive committee is different than what — who is on the executive committee?

MR. QUINLAN: The executive committee is — where is our list?

MR. CARROLL: Gidwitz, Buntrock.

Page 105

MR. ROTHSTEIN: Terra.
MR. CARROLL: Terra, Tucker.
MR. QUINLAN: Tucker.
MR. CARROLL: And Stephanic.
MR. QUINLAN: Marshall.
THE COURT: Marshall. Okay. So the two plaintiffs, Judith Terra and Paul Hayes Tucker and —
MR. CARROLL: Two plaintiffs, two defendants Your Honor. There is one independent left, so to speak.
THE COURT: Okay,, and you are seeking that they not be able to change that composition?
MR. QUINLAN: During this same time.
THE COURT: Do you want to be heard on that one?
MR. CARLSON: On behalf of the Foundation, Your Honor, I would object to that. Your Honor has already put her finger on what is, in fact, the central issue in the lawsuit, and, that is, whether it is ultra vires to close Michigan Avenue and/or move its assets, its artwork out of the State of Illinois. The executive committee, as Your Honor suggested, I don't believe, has the authority to do that in any event. So it doesn't make much difference on one issue that exists in this lawsuit, what the composition of the executive committee is. And I would not agree that on behalf of the Foundation, it would be proper on the basis of anything alleged here, for the court to enter an order to interfering with the day-to-day management of the Foundation by ordering the executive committee to stay the way it is if the board chooses to change the composition of the executive committee.

THE COURT: Now, the only thing that I remember from these papers that the executive committee might have done wrong over this period of time, is have they actually approved the participation in the Foundation of the defendant, is it Michaeli.
MR. QUINLAN: Yes, he participates with them, Naftali Michaeli?
THE COURT: Yes.
MR. QUINLAN: He is a nonemployee, he is a nondirector, a nonofficer and he participates in the decision-making process and direction of employees, and that is our allegation, as well.

THE COURT: And he was the one who was involved in removal of the staff and all of the — the loss of the staff?
MR. QUINLAN: He is not the only one, but he was involved in that, in those activities, and clearly acts without any portfolio with any — without any authority, without any justification, and so we were asking — we would ask that we continue this because they conduct the business here, and they can do anything and have done anything.
THE COURT: Okay. But —
MR. QUINLAN: And they make all the decisions regarding any of the board activities during the interim.
THE COURT: But the ones who have been doing it and making these decision in the interim, you want to prohibit the board tomorrow from changing that?
MR. QUINLAN: The only reason I would do that, is at least we would have, arguably, notice. They actually have been operating around the board. They have been operating around the committee. They don't call the committee meeting during this. We are asking that be enjoined from doing that, that they could not bypass the executive committee. That was one of the things we were asking as our relief. Hence, I would want to at least keep it the same. We surely aren't going to be able to get them to get off the executive committee, but the last thing in the world we want is to have them stack the executive committee, and then, of course, once you have enjoined, they may accomplish almost everything else during the interim and go on with their business.

And we alleged that is part of the mismanagement and the waste that is taking place because they are making critical decisions regarding the use of the facilities, all of the art, those type of things, and that is exactly what the Attorney General is complaining about. If this is allowed to go on during this period of time without even knowledge that it is taking place, I don't know how we protect our interest and protect the Attorney General's interest. I think it speaks to themselves.

And these are the kind of acts the statute specifically envisions us complaining about when it talks about facts to be enjoined when they are acting without authority. And they are acting without authority when they go without the executive committee. But the problem is, that if we don't maintain the status quo now, we won't even get any notice. And then they can go about doing whatever they want, and their intention is to accomplish these other goals and we're just asking for a standstill. We don't think that that is any way that kind of a stretch.

MR. CARLSON: If I could say one more thing about the executive committee, Your Honor, I think that is a bizarre argument. There are only four out of 11 directors who have been sued and who are alleged to have done anything improper in connection with the Foundation.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, only three directors sued.

MR. CARLSON: I'm sorry, three, you are correct.

THE COURT: Because Mr. Michaeli is not a director.

MR. CARLSON: That is correct, Your Honor. Simply arithmetic, I miscounted. There are only three out of 11. The eight other directors, none of whom are alleged to have done anything improper ought to be free at tomorrow's annual meeting to compose the executive committee however they see fit. If fact, the entirety of the 11-member board ought to be free to compose the executive committee as they see fit. And for counsel to suggest there has somehow been all sorts of bad things that have happened under the stewardship of the current five person executive committee and to ask that court to enter an order requiring that same executive committee to stay in place, just seems to me truly bizarre. And I think the corporation ought to be left alone to manage its internal affair as its own board sees fit.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, I would agree to just have — that Mr. Gidwitz and Mr. Buntrock cannot be removed from the executive committee. Because that would be consistent with your order because if counsel is suggesting that maybe his people would step down, that is fine. The Attorney General has raised questions about their removal as members of the board because of these activities.

My clients have to this under oath. My clients have alleged these acts, which is justified in finding at least a fair question. If consistent with your order, then, what we ought to have is, Mr. Buntrock and Mr. Gidwitz cannot be removed other if they request to do so, just as you provided in your order.

THE COURT: I have no problem with putting an addition to the order that no member can be removed from the executive committee without his or her consent, and that includes Ms. Terra and that includes Paul Hayes Tucker and Ms. Marshall, is that?

MR. QUINLAN: I don't know it.

MR. CARROLL: Stephanie Marshall.

THE COURT: Stephanie Marshall, okay.

MR. QUINLAN: Ms., I think, would be correct.

THE COURT: If it includes those, great, but I am not going to enjoin them from electing a different executive committee if the individuals who are on it no longer choose to serve on it.

MR. QUINLAN: That's fine, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And now we need to talk about your discovery. There is a motion for expedited discovery.

MR. QUINLAN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And I don't know whether or not Mr. Perkins is joining in that, but who do you want to depose? Or who do you want to get answers from and when?

MR. QUINLAN: At the moment we are asking for documents.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. QUINLAN: And that was the first thing that we were asking for and we have a set of interrogatories that we would address based upon the documents but our initial request was for the documents and, obviously, the first three people will be deposing would be more likely than not be the defendants in this action.

THE COURT: Have there been any problem getting documents from the —

MR. QUINLAN: We — our documents —

Page 112

Page 113

THE COURT: — corporation or Foundation?
MR. QUINLAN: There are documents that we just don't know where they are, if they exist or done exist. And these are requests to see if there are any documents of such.
MR. CARLSON: I frankly am at a disadvantage, Your Honor. I have not seen any proposed expedited discovery. I received a motion.
THE COURT: There is just a motion.
MR. CARLSON: So I don't know what documents counsel is talking about.
MR. QUINLAN: Well, if Your Honor grants the expedited discovery, we also have a request for documents that we are happy to file.
MR. CARLSON: Just briefly, Your Honor, I would say again that for the same reasons that the motion for TRO doesn't demonstration any true emergency, the motion for expedited discovery doesn't demonstrate any true emergency. They don't demonstrate any specific harm that will occur if they are allowed to proceed on their extraordinarily expedited schedule if they are allowed to proceed that

THE COURT: Well, I am going to grant the motion in part by allowing plaintiffs to serve its discovery immediately, but only that. And then once it gets served and you see what it is, you can discuss compliance dates.
MR. QUINLAN: That's fine.
THE COURT: Now, ten days from today is going to take us to when? Counting October 5th, and let me just see what that day looks like.
MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, I am not available on October 5th or 6th. I am out of town. Do you want to do it on the 4th.
MR. QUINLAN: Do you know what — that makes it what, about eight days. Can we kick it over to Monday?
MR. CARLSON: I, frankly, on behalf of the Foundation would prefer to kick it over to Monday.
MR. CARROLL: The 11th.
THE COURT: Monday — we don't want the 9th. That is a court holiday.
MR. CARLSON: That is why I want to be here.

Page 115

THE COURT: Okay. Monday, the 10th, is totally out of the question here. So is the 11th.
MR. QUINLAN: The 12th, Your Honor?
MR. CARLSON: Again, I would have no problem on behalf of the Foundation to do it on Thursday, the 12th.
THE COURT: That's fine. Why don't we do Thursday, the 12th, at 11 o'clock. TRO expires Thursday, the 12th, at 5:00, and that —
MR. QUINLAN: Unless continued by the court?
THE COURT: And the purpose of the October 12th hearing is to extend the TRO, to discuss the status of the expedited discovery, and to schedule a preliminary injunction hearing which will be scheduled on the 12th.
MR. QUINLAN: I appreciate that. I am sure what Your Honor is suggesting that you recognize we have no way to prove our case in that short period of time and, frankly, don't have a hearing date.
THE COURT: So you will get a hearing date on the 12th, but I want, since the case law says

I have to set a preliminary hearing or I have to set a preliminary injunction hearing when I issue a temporary restriction order, I want to make clear, it is the intent of the court to extend the TRO on that date. But we will be dealing at that time with any motions that might have been filed by the defendant. Hopefully, all individuals will be served by that time. If I have everybody in front of me on that day, we will set down James Terra's motion for petition for leave to intervene, the question just being when we are going to hear it, not hearing it that day. So it is a status on discovery, extend the TRO, set any pending motions, including a petition for leave to intervene filed by James Terra.
And I am going to need some specific findings in today's injunction, the slowing down and hardship because I put that in all my TROs. Mr. Carlson?
MR. CARLSON: I was just going to ask Your Honor, it is probably self-evident under the rules, but I haven't had a chance to pull them out, since the plaintiffs are granted leave to go ahead and file their discovery, I submit we be given the appropriate discovery leave.

THE COURT: Sure. Expedite discovery on both sides.

And, of course, just add the words that this TRO is entered without bond.

MR. CARROLL: Judge, I believe earlier, just one housekeeping matter, we talked about the corrected emergency motion that we would like to —

THE COURT: Right. You have leave to file an amended or corrected emergency motion and this is the original?

MR. QUINLAN: Original, yes. We can file the original.

THE COURT: I will give the original to the clerk and ask her to stamp it.

MR. QUINLAN: Thank you very much, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And I will get the copy. Please draw me up an order.

MR. QUINLAN: Judge, given the hour of the day, can we bring up our order first thing tomorrow morning?

THE COURT: Definitely not. There is a meeting. There is a time change.

Do it right now.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, the problem is, I don't know what the scheme or plan is. We are trying to take the most limited relief possibly to prevent them from effectuating an illegal plan or scheme. And it is the status quo that we are trying to preserve, which is merely what has been operating as it is. There is no emergency here to change anybody. There is no emergency to fire anybody.

They don't have any compelling interest to do this. It isn't suggested. There isn't anything. The Foundation will not fall apart. The annual meetings normally replace, continue to reelect the same people unless there is somebody who is desirous to step down, and there is nobody that, I am aware of, that does.

THE COURT: That is what you just said a moment ago, you said, traditionally, this hasn't been always done at the annual meeting. Isn't this board traditionally every annual meeting elects its officers.

MR. QUINLAN: That is when they are supposed to elect them. I am saying that it doesn't necessarily and hasn't — in the past, it has not always happened. I don't mean to say that it is regularly it doesn't happen, but regularly meetings are held here in Chicago.

THE COURT: But I don't have anything in the paper that say they have in the past elected officers other than their September meeting, do I?

MR. QUINLAN: Oh, no. That's true. But the bylaws themselves provide that they can. They are empowered to do that, and all I am saying, is the bylaws themselves envision it is not a critical date to do it. All they are saying is you can do it later. It is no big deal. At the convenience of the board. So it doesn't say you have to do it within ten days, you must do it within 30, it says at the convenience of the board.

THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, I think we have limited it down, now. What I understand is being talked about is, they can meet tomorrow, they can have their meeting, they can do their committee reports, they can do whatever else that they were planning to do, they can even have an election, as long as they do not elect — I mean vote to remove someone against their will, which could then be interpreted as retallatory measure for this lawsuit. And they can discuss all they want moving out of Chicago or moving to Washington or doing whatever. They just cannot take a final vote or a vote to — take any steps that would effectuate that move.

What would be your response to that?

MR. CARLSON: I was following Your Honor until the last comment about not taking steps to effectuate that vote.

THE COURT: I could conceive of a situation where they might not take a final vote but they could also take a vote to start moving paintings out of Chicago elsewhere.

MR. CARLSON: Well, frankly, Your Honor, the collections that are owned by the Foundation —

THE COURT: Goes back and forth all the time.

MR. CARLSON: They go back and forth all the time. They are loaned out and everything else. I am terribly concerned about the motion for TRO that would tell this private not-for-profit corporation that operates two museums — the one in Giverny is probably more substantial than the one here in Chicago — that we can't move any of our artwork.

THE COURT: Well, I am worried — I was concerned also about whether or not you have any inner museum agreements in effect right now, where you have some kind of agreement that —

MR. CARLSON: We have obligations.

THE COURT: — next week you have got to loan a painting to New York, or something like that?

MR. CARLSON: What also concerns me, as I like at Exhibit D and Exhibit E —

THE COURT: To the complaint.

MR. CARLSON: That's to the Attorney General's complaint, Your Honor, and I believe I guess they are also attached to the reply belief handed to me this afternoon, but I haven't had a chance to look at it, the white paper memo from Mr. Tucker —

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. CARLSON: — and the minutes of August 24th, counsel makes all sorts of assertions about how these documents show we are

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S EMERGENCY MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

NOW COMES the Plaintiff-Intervenor, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, ex rel. JAMES E. RYAN, Attorney General of Illinois, and moves this Court to enter an Order temporarily restraining and preliminarily enjoining Defendants JUDITH TERRA, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, ALAN K. SIMPSON, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, and the TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS, an Illinois Not-For-Profit Corporation, and in support thereof states as follows:

1. The Attorney General has filed a Complaint For Injunction, Breach of Fiduciary Duty, Removal, Accounting, Receiver, and Appointment of New Directors (hereinafter referenced as the Complaint).

2. The Complaint alleges that the Defendant the TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS, an Illinois not-for-profit corporation (hereinafter "the FOUNDATION"), was incorporated on December 13, 1978, and that it was created specifically as an Illinois charitable trust with certain obligations and commitments to the ultimate beneficiaries, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, taken from Illinois statutory law as specifically referenced in and incorporated by the Trust's Illinois not-for-profit Articles of Incorporation as well as by its By-laws. The Complaint also alleges that said charity has been subjected to fiduciary breach and abuse by certain of its directors; that the assets of the FOUNDATION have been misused, that the assets of the FOUNDATION are in jeopardy and danger; and that certain directors have acted to try to cause the closing of the Terra Museum of Art in Chicago here in Illinois.

3. The Complaint alleges that The FOUNDATION's specific charitable purpose is to preserve and exhibit collections of American art, to expand the artistic horizons of the public through educational programs, and that in furtherance of its charitable purpose and obligations to the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, the FOUNDATION owns and operates the Terra Museum of American Art (the "Terra Museum") located at 664 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

4. The Complaint alleges that the FOUNDATION was established by Daniel Terra, a successful Chicago area businessman in December 1978 and that from the time of its inception the FOUNDATION has had as its central and core purpose the establishment of an art museum in the Chicagoland area, specializing in bringing American art to the public and the People of the State of Illinois. The Complaint alleges that it was Daniel Terra's intent and purpose to provide a Museum in the Chicago area that would exhibit collections of American art and educate the public generally on issues of American art and that Daniel Terra publicly stated that the FOUNDATION was committed to building and operating a world class museum in the Chicagoland area.

5. The Complaint alleges that from its inception the FOUNDATION was substantially funded by Daniel Terra who contributed hundreds of millions of dollars to and for the Terra Museum, and that as a result of Daniel Terra's efforts, others became supportive and made contributions to the FOUNDATION.

6. The Complaint alleges that the FOUNDATION is an Illinois not for profit corporation, which is governed and controlled by a board of directors, each of whom are elected to serve a term of one year, and chosen and elected by the sitting directors in office at the time of election, and that the board of directors is the ultimate corporate authority controlling the FOUNDATION. The Complaint alleges that Defendants, by serving as Directors of the FOUNDATION and by their actions holding charitable assets as alleged herein, have each became a trustee and fiduciary at common law over the charitable assets held by the FOUNDATION and are each a charitable "trustee" as that term is defined in Section 3 of the Charitable Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/3 (1997), and as such owe statutory fiduciary duties to the charitable trust beneficiaries, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, as provided in Section 15(a) of the Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/15(a) (1997).)

7. The Complaint alleges that from the time of the FOUNDATION's inception through Daniel

Terra's death on June 28, 1996, the FOUNDATION had been controlled a small board of directors of no more than six, whose members were substantially influenced by Daniel Terra, but that following Daniel Terra's death in 1996 the Board of Directors of the FOUNDATION has substantially changed and the FOUNDATION currently now has eleven directors.

8. The Complaint alleges that Plaintiffs GIDWITZ and BUNTRCK, who are current directors of the FOUNDATION, have alleged and verified that certain and several directors of the board of directors of the FOUNDATION, including Defendants JUDITH TERRA, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, and ALEN L. SIPMSON, have and are engaging in actions ultra vires and against the interest and purposes of the FOUNDATION, alleging said Directors are:

a) Attempting to cause the closing of the Terra Museum operations in Illinois contrary to the long standing promise of its founder that such would be an institution for the public here in Illinois.

b) Attempting to gain position and self recognition in a Washington DC charitable organization in exchange for the delivery of the assets of FOUNDATION, the termination of operations in Chicago and the end of a Terra museum in the United States..

c) Attempting to cause the closing of the Terra Museum operations in Illinois contrary to its name sakes, Mr. Dan Terra's intentions and suggesting a use of its assets contrary to the use Dan terra intended.

d) Grossly mismanaging Terra Museum in a manner that has resulted in the loss or turnover of almost half the employees, including key persons responsible for Terra Museum's day-to-day operations and continued success;

e) Caused the primary individuals in charge of security at Terra Museum to quit resulting in an inexperienced and understaffed security staff, which jeopardizes the security of the $100 million of art displayed and collected at Terra Museum;

f) Permitted a director of Terra Foundation to engage in a conflict of interest in representing Terra Foundation at art auctions while, on information and belief, representing the interests of private clients at the same auction;

g) Expending significant monies on the purchases of art without obtaining the input or approval of the Board of Directors or the Collections Committee charged with the responsibility of advising the Board of Directors on issues involving art acquisition;

h) Attempting to invade endowment funds restricted to public art educational purposes for the unauthorized purpose of acquiring art;

i) Bypassing the lawful authority of the Board and the Executive Committee in operating Terra Foundation.

j) Wastefully incurring excessive legal fees by retaining inexperienced counsel in replacement of Terra Foundation's long-standing counsel; and

k) Misusing the art collection of Terra Foundation and allowing Judith Terra to personally possess and use museum art items and in a manner that placed the collection in danger and jeopardy.

10. The Complaint then incorporates the verified allegations of Plaintiffs GIDWITZ and BUNTROCK as summarized in paragraph 9 of this motion and thereby shows that the Defendant members of the Board of Directors of the FOUNDATION have been acting towards, or have been otherwise distracted by, self interest matters and have ignored and/or have permitted the Terra Museum in Chicago to lose its key staff and to jeopardize its charitable purposes and to place the organization in jeopardy without proper security for the collection and without sufficient historical institutional knowledge to assure the assets are safe and accounted for.

11. The Complaint alleges and shows that Defendant JUDITH TERRA had a history of conflict with the FOUNDATION. The Complaint alleges that shortly after the creation of the FOUNDATION in 1978 as aforesaid, Daniel Terra's first wife, Adeline, died, and that Daniel Terra subsequently married Defendant JUDITH TERRA on June 28, 1996. The Complaint alleges that prior to his marriage to Defendant JUDITH TERRA, Daniel Terra entered into a prenuptial agreement signed by Defendant JUDITH TERRA, whereby JUDITH TERRA acknowledged that she fully understood that the bulk of Daniel Terra's estate would go to the FOUNDATION in the event of his predeceasing her, and she unequivocally promised that after his death she would not seek any assets of his Estate other than those given to her under the said prenuptial agreement. The Complaint alleges that under the aforesaid prenuptial agreement, Defendant JUDITH TERRA agreed she would receive only a fixed amount of money and assets upon Daniel Terra's death, and that the bulk of his estate would go to the FOUNDATION.

12. The Complaint alleges that several days prior to his death on June 28, 1996, Daniel Terra was confined to a hospital, his life being sustained by the use of life supporting devices, and that shortly after midnight on June 28, 1996, the tenth anniversary date of his marriage to JUDITH TERRA, the life supporting devices employed to keep Daniel Terra alive were ceased, allowing JUDITH TERRA to seek and receive from Daniel Terra's Estate $4.5 million pursuant to the terms of the aforesaid prenuptial agreement. The Complaint also alleges that the aforesaid prenuptial agreement also provided that while Daniel Terra was alive, JUDITH TERRA would not agree to be a member of the board of directors of the FOUNDATION, and that she was not a member of the FOUNDATION's Board of Directors until Daniel Terra's aforesaid illness and death in 1996.

13. The Complaint alleges that in January 1997, Defendant JUDITH TERRA filed four further and additional claims for money against Dan Terra's estate despite the express terms of her

Prenuptial agreement with Daniel Terra, and amounts paid thereunder, and in said claims, Defendant JUDITH TERRA sought art work and in excess of $42 million, which would otherwise pass as a bequest to the FOUNDATION, to be kept at the Terra Museum in Chicago, and that James Terra, Daniel Terra's son, and a founding Director of the FOUNDATION, who was named as the Executor of the Daniel Terra Estate, and who was represented by Bell, Boyd and Lloyd as counsel to the Executor, denied JUDITH TERRA's claims against the Estate and defended and litigated her $ 42 million in claims, asserting that none of her claims had any merit. The Complaint alleges that such litigation settled in the amount of $ 1 million, paid to JUDITH TERRA.

14. The Complaint alleges that JUDITH TERRA acted out of self interest and in breach of her fiduciary duty to the FOUNDATION in that:

(a) the funds paid to JUDITH TERRA under the prenuptial and the $1 million settlement of her claims would otherwise have passed to the FOUNDATION, and that her actions in filing the aforesaid claims was against the interest of the FOUNDATION;

(b) She caused the law firm of Bell, Boyd and Lloyd to be terminated as regular counsel for the FOUNDATION after 20 years of service out of retaliation for the adverse position James Terra and Bell Boyd and Lloyd took against Defendant JUDITH TERRA in the aforesaid litigation of JUDITH's claims against the Estate of Daniel Terra;

(c) She caused art pieces of the FOUNDATION and Terra Museum in Chicago to be brought to her home, despite objection from Museum staff; and

(d) She has engaged in discussions with defendant Director PAUL HAYES TUCKER to have the FOUNDATION close the Terra Museum in Chicago and move its operation to Washington D.C., where JUDITH TERRA resides, and/or to cause the FOUNDATION to merge with another institution in Washington D.C., which intended acts are contrary to Daniel Terra's intent.

15. The Complaint alleges that Defendant PAUL HAYES TUCKER acted out of self interest and in breach of her fiduciary duty to the FOUNDATION in that:

(a) He sent his white paper entitled " A Vision for The Future" to the FOUNDATION's Board of Directors which states that PAUL HAYES TUCKER seeks to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and to move the FOUNDATION and its art collection to Washington D.C., give its collections to the national Gallery and set up an educational facility in Washington D.C.;

(b) He made remarks suggesting that the FOUNDATION should move to Washington D.C. and that it should close down the Terra Museum in Chicago;

(c) He has allowed and/or caused the FOUNDATION's staff to be depleted of long term staff, has allowed and/or caused the FOUNDATION's long term security personnel to quit, has allowed and/or caused its executive director to quit, and has directed that art belonging to the FOUNDATION be delivered from France to Defendant JUDITH TERRA's home.

16. The Complaint alleges that Defendant ALAN K. SIMPSON acted out of self interest and in breach of her fiduciary duty to the FOUNDATION by supporting the plan to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and to move the FOUNDATION's operations and assets to Washington D.C. in defense of JUDITH TERRA, and in complete disregard of the intent of Daniel Terra.

17. The Complaint alleges that the totality of the issues presented in the Complaint establish that the FOUNDATION is a charitable trust in jeopardy, whose long term institutional employees have quit, whose controlling number of Board members are more interested in their own vision, self interest, and/or personal goals of promoting their status in society, than in properly safeguarding the FOUNDATIONS mission. The Complaint also alleges that a small group of Directors, loyal to the announced purposes of the organizations principal benefactor, Daniel Terra, are being subjected to retaliation, removal or neutralization.

18. The Complaint alleges that the Defendants acting in a manner that in endangering the trust's assets, and that based on the totality of the equities, new fiduciaries are needed to protect the trust from the self interest and improper action of the aforesaid Defendant Board members of the FOUNDATION. The Complaint alleges that Defendants JUDITH TERRA, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, ALEN L. SIPMSON, and the FOUNDATION have breached their fiduciary duties to the FOUNDATION as a consequence of the aforesaid, and that the FOUNDATION is in need of protection from Defendants pursuant to Section 16(b) of the Trust Act. (760 ILCS 55.16(b) (1977).)

19. Section 16 of the Trust Act provides that the actions of Defendants as set forth in the Complaint, which are violations of Section 15 of the Trust Act, subject Defendants to statutory injunction, said section providing as follows:

"Sec. 16 (b) Upon application to a court of competent jurisdiction, in which the Attorney General alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or the trustees of a charitable organization or trust have engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty toward the organization, and he seeks injunctive relief and removal of such trustees, the Court may, as part of the injunctive relief, and after a hearing where such trustees shall have an opportunity to be heard, appoint temporarily or permanently a receiver or additional trustees to protect and operate the organization and may temporarily, or as ultimate relief for breach of duty or to protect the trust, permanently remove any charitable organization's trustees, corporate officers, directors and members from office and appoint replacements to protect the public interest."

(760 ILCS 55/16(b) (1997).)

20. The conduct of Defendants have caused, is causing, and will continue to cause THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS immediate and irreparable harm for which there is no remedy at law.

16di-000299

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff-Intervenor prays that this Honorable Court Enter an Order :

A. Temporary restraining defendants from the following:

(1) Holding any further meetings of the Foundation's Board of Directors, until a new board is constituted by this court;

(2) Taking any action to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors or changing any committee assignment or governing instruments;

(3) Taking any action to close the Terra Museum in Chicago or move Terra Foundation or any of its assets outside the State of Illinois; and

(4) Taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation.

(5) Transferring, moving, disbursing, selling or exchanging any assets of the Terra Foundation.

B. Preliminarily and permanently enjoining defendants from the following:

(1) Holding any further meetings of the Foundation's Board of Directors, until a new board is constituted by this court;

(2) Taking any action to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors or changing any committee assignment or governing instruments;

(3) Taking any action to close the Terra Museum in Chicago or move Terra Foundation or any of its assets outside the State of Illinois; and

(4) Taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation.

(5) Transferring, moving, disbursing, selling or exchanging any assets of the Terra Foundation.

C. Appointing, temporarily, a receiver to operate and maintain Terra Foundation pursuant to: the Court's equitable powers, the common law, the Charitable Trust Act and the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act of 1986 (805 ILCS 105/101.01 et seq. (West 1995)).

D. Temporarily appointing a receiver to conduct an accounting of all assets of the Terra Museum and Terra Foundation and determine and locate all assets of the Foundation.

E. And such additional relief as the Court deems just and equitable.

PLAINTIFF'S MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF EMERGENCY MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

NOW COMES the Plaintiff, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS ex rel. JAMES

16di-000302

E. RYAN, Attorney General of Illinois, and in support of his Emergency Motion For Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction, and states as follows:

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff is requesting that this Honorable Court enter an order imposing a Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction on Defendants JUDITH TERRA, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, ALAN K. SIMPSON, and the TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS (hereinafter "FOUNDATION"), in conjunction with its Complaint, which Plaintiff has filed in this case pursuant to the Charitable Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/1 et seq. (1997)) (hereinafter "the Trust Act") and his common law duty to safeguard charitable assets. Plaintiff is seeking to prevent Defendants from (a) mismanaging the Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed; (b) seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer the art to some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals; (c) attempting to remove employees and directors of the Museum that opposed the self interested acts aforesaid and to enable defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois contrary to Illinois law; and (d) endangering the assets of the Terra Foundation, as well as to prevent Defendants from engaging in ongoing violations of the Trust Act which Plaintiff has set out in his Complaint.

Plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief to prevent Defendants from holding any further meetings of the Foundation's Board of Directors, until a new board is constituted ; taking any action to elect or remove any member of the Board of Directors or changing any committee assignment or governing instruments; taking any action to close the Terra Museum in Chicago or move Terra Foundation or any of its assets outside the State of Illinois; and taking any other action contrary to the by-laws of the Terra Foundation.

ARGUMENT

A Temporary Restraining Order is appropriate in this case in order to protect charitable assets held by the FOUNDATION and to prevent Defendants from engaging in any further breach of their fiduciary duties and misuse or waste of charitable funds. Such injunctive relief is necessary to preserve the status quo pending a hearing on the case to prevent Defendants from effectively divesting the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS of their charitable interests in the FOUNDATION, and closing the FOUNDATION's Illinois facilities and moving the FOUNDATION to Washington D.C. in violation of the Trust's Purpose. Plaintiff is seeking this injunctive relief pursuant to his statutory and common law powers and duty to protect and safeguard charitable assets and to ensure that monies designated for charitable purposes are devoted to their proper use. Such relief is proper under traditional common-law standards of equity and also because such relief is expressly authorized by a statute under which Plaintiff is suing.

A Temporary Restraining Order is an emergency remedy issued upon a summary showing of the necessity of the order to prevent immediate and irreparable harm. (Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d 524 (1st Dist. 1988).) A temporary restraining order requires only a summary showing by a plaintiff that the order is necessary to prevent immediate and irreparable harm and that there is no adequate remedy at law. (Id.) It is well established that a party seeking a Temporary Restraining Order is not required to make out a case which would entitle him to relief on the merits, but needs only to show that he raises a "fair question" regarding the existence of his right and that the court should preserve the status quo until the case can be decided on the merits to prevent immediate and irreparable harm. (Buzz Barton & Associates, Inc. v. Giannone, 108 Ill. 2d 373 (1985.); Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d at 524.) A motion for Temporary Restraining Order is properly granted on the uncontroverted facts of a complaint. (Id.)

In the present action, Plaintiff has filed a complaint alleging significant wrongdoing by Defendants regarding the misuse of charitable assets. To satisfy the requirements of a Temporary Restraining Order as requested in Plaintiff's Motion, all Plaintiff would need to show at common law is (1) that there is a "fair question" regarding the existence of the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS' right or interest in the charitable assets at issue here, (2) that the Court should preserve the status quo to prevent immediate and irreparable harm, and (3) that there is no adequate remedy at law. (Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d at 524.)

A. The PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS Have A Clear And Ascertainable Right To The Charitable Assets In Question And Therefore Raise A Fair Question Regarding The Plaintiff's Right Or Interest In the Terra Foundation.

At common law, the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS are the ultimate beneficiaries of charitable trusts and charitable assets held in Illinois. (In re Estate of Laas, 171 Ill. App.3d 916, 920-921 (1st Dist. 1988).) In this connection, it is well established that the Attorney General's authority under the Charitable Trust Act to protect a public charity to prevent or correct abuses cannot be denied. (People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d 269, 276 (1st Dist. 1984).) The Attorney General is the sole officer authorized to represent the People of this State in any litigation in which the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS are the real party in interest pursuant to article V, section 15 of the Illinois Constitution (In re Estate of Stern, 240 Ill. App. 3d 834, 836 (1st Dist.1992); People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d 269, 275 (1st Dist. 1984)), and it has been judicially recognized that the Attorney General is the proper representative of the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS in all actions concerning the enforcement or administration of a charitable trust. (In re Estate of Laas, 171 Ill. App. 3d 916, 920 (1st Dist. 1988); People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.) Since, at common law, the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS are the ultimate beneficiary of charitable assets and property held for charitable purposes, the Attorney General of Illinois has standing to enforce charitable trusts and to see that charitable funds are applied to their intended charitable uses. (People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.)

In the present action, the PEOPLE's Complaint has alleged specific facts showing that Defendants have engaged in multiple acts in breach of their fiduciary duties to the FOUNDATION, and a need to safeguard such charity. Taking such allegations as true, as they must be in the absence of an answer to the Complaint, Plaintiff has clearly satisfied the requirement of showing the existence of a "fair question" regarding the existence of Attorney General's right or interest in charitable assets wrongfully taken.

B. The PEOPLE Will Suffer Immediate and Irreparable Harm If The Status Quo Is Not Preserved.

As already stated, Plaintiff's Complaint alleges that Defendants have mismanaged the Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed; have sought to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer the art to some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals; have attempted to remove employees and directors of the Museum that opposed the self interested acts aforesaid and to enable defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois contrary to Illinois law; and have endangered the assets of the Terra Foundation. The injury that would be perpetrated on the FOUNDATION and its beneficiaries the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS would be to irreparably deprive them of the benefit of the art collection held at the Terra Museum in Chicago. In effect, without the imposition of a Temporary Restraining Order, the

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS will suffer a loss of at least $450 million in charitable assets, and based on the allegations of past wrongdoing, will be prevented from truly discovering the extent to which charity has been harmed. Only the imposition of a Temporary Restraining Order pending the holding of a hearing or further action by the Court will enable the PEOPLE to safeguard the charity which Defendants have wronged.

C. There Is No Adequate Remedy At Law.

Plaintiff's Complaint alleges that extensive harm to the public at large has occurred, the full extent to which is unknown at the present time. The Complaint shows that while Defendants have engaged in multiple acts of wrongdoing against the charitable trust, Plaintiff does not know the full extent of the wrong committed by Defendants and therefore needs an accounting at equity as part of the relief sought. Furthermore, immediate and irreparable injury will occur in the absence of a Temporary Restraining Order. Plaintiff has alleged that the FOUNDATION, and the Defendant directors are at risk of escaping out of an Illinois jurisdiction. If injunctive relief is not granted to prevent Defendants from divesting the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS of its charitable interest, Defendants may succeed avoiding a need to fully account and the PEOPLE will never know the full extent to which they have been wronged and may be permanently precluded from recovering their assets. The public has already suffered injury in that Defendants have breached their fiduciary duties to the FOUNDATION. If equitable relief is not granted immediately, then charity will likely suffer further in that funds devoted for public benefit purposes will never reach their intended charitable destination. Because the full extent of Plaintiff's injury is as yet unknown and because the risk of irreparable injury to Plaintiff is so great, there is no adequate remedy at law that will cure the harm caused to the PEOPLE OF ILLINOIS. Only the imposition of a Temporary Restraining Order will enable the PEOPLE to safeguard its charitable interest.

II. THE COURT SHOULD ALSO GRANT A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF ATTORNEY GENERAL IS SEEKING INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AUTHORIZED BY A STATUTE.

In addition to a temporary restraining order entered based on common-law equitable grounds as aforesaid, a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction should also be entered because Plaintiff is seeking injunctive relief pursuant to specific statutory authority.

Traditionally, the equitable remedy of preliminary injunction is granted where plaintiff shows: (1) he has a right which needs protection; (2) he will suffer irreparable harm without the protection; (3) he has no adequate remedy at law; and (4) he is likely to succeed on the merits. ((People ex rel. Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d 575, 580 (2nd Dist. 1985); People ex rel. Edgar v. Miller, 110 Ill. App. 3d 264, 269 (4th Dist.1982).) However, because Plaintiff is a public official or body seeking injunctive relief pursuant to a statute, the requirements of the statute authorizing the injunctive relief control rather than the traditional equitable factors enumerated above. (People ex rel. Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d at 580; People ex rel. Edgar v. Miller, 110 Ill. App. 3d at 269; People ex rel. Carpentier v. Goers, 20 Ill.2d 272, 276 (1960); People v. Keeven, 68 Ill. App.3d 91, 96-97 (5th Dist.1979).)

Courts issue statutory injunctions to public bodies to restrain violations of a statute because irreparable harm to the public at large is presumed from the statutory violation alone. (People ex rel. Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d at 580.) To impose a preliminary injunction when a statute authorizes injunctive relief, the plaintiff need only allege and show (1) that the there has been a violation of the statute by the defendant and (2) that the plaintiff has standing to bring the action; It is not necessity to prove irreparable harm or the absence of an adequate remedy at law. (People v. Keeven, 68 Ill. App.3d at 97.)

for in the Charitable Trust Act. Plaintiff has brought suit against the Defendants seeking injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16(b) of the Trust Act, which authorizes injunctive relief in circumstances where it is alleged that a charitable trust needs to be protected or a trustee of a charitable trust has engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty. Section 16(b) provides:

> "Sec. 16(b) Upon application to the chancery division of the circuit court in which the Attorney General alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or the trustees of a charitable organization or trust have engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty toward the organization, and injunctive relief and removal of such trustees is sought, the Court shall exercise its discretion as the equities require and may as part of the injunctive relief, and after a hearing where such trustees shall have an opportunity to be heard, appoint temporarily or permanently a receiver or additional trustees to protect and operate the organization and may temporarily, or as ultimate relief for breach of duty or to protect the trust, permanently remove any charitable organization's trustees, corporate officers, directors and members from office and appoint replacements to protect the public interest." (760 ILCS 55/16 (1997).)

1. The Plaintiff Has Presented Facts Showing That Defendant Engaged In Statutory Violations Of The Illinois Charitable Trust Act Which Entitles Plaintiff To Injunctive Relief Pursuant To Statute.

Plaintiff-Intervenor's Complaint has sufficiently shown that the Defendant has and continues to violate provisions of the Trust Act thereby entitling the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief. The Complaint alleges that Defendants multiple actions of breach of fiduciary duty constitute violations of Section 15(a) of the Trust Act.

In support of such allegations, Plaintiff adopts and incorporates the verified pleadings of the Plaintiffs GIDWITZ and BUNTRCK, who are current directors of the FOUNDATION, and who alleged and verify that Defendants JUDITH TERRA, PAUL HAYES TUCKER, and ALEN L. SIPMSON, have and are engaging in actions ultra vires and against the interest and purposes of the FOUNDATION, alleging said Directors are:

a) Attempting to cause the closing of TM operations in Illinois contrary to the long standing promise of its founder that such would be an institution for the public here in Illinois.

b) Attempting to gain position and self recognition in a Washington DC charitable organization in exchange for the delivery of the assets of TM, the termination of operations in Chicago and the end of a Terra museum in the United States..

16di-000309

c) Attempting to cause the closing of the Terra Museum operations in Illinois contrary to its name sakes, Mr. Dan Terra's intentions and suggesting a use of its assets contrary to the use Dan terra intended.

d) Grossly mismanaging Terra Museum in a manner that has resulted in the loss or turnover of almost half the employees, including key persons responsible for Terra Museum's day-to-day operations and continued success;

e) Caused the primary individuals in charge of security at Terra Museum to quit resulting in an inexperienced and understaffed security staff, which jeopardizes the security of the $100 million of art displayed and collected at Terra Museum;

f) Permitted a director of Terra Foundation to engage in a conflict of interest in representing Terra Foundation at art auctions while, on information and belief, representing the interests of private clients at the same auction;

g) Expending significant monies on the purchases of art without obtaining the input or approval of the Board of Directors or the Collections Committee charged with the responsibility of advising the Board of Directors on issues involving art acquisition;

h) Attempting to invade endowment funds restricted to public art educational purposes for the unauthorized purpose of acquiring art;

i) Bypassing the lawful authority of the Board and the Executive Committee in operating Terra Foundation.

J. Wastefully incurring excessive legal fees by retaining inexperienced counsel in replacement of Terra Foundation's long-standing counsel; and

k) Misusing the art collection of Terra Foundation and allowing Judith Terra to personally possess and use museum art items and in a manner that placed the collection in danger and

jeopardy.

As a consequence of the aforesaid, violations of the Trust Act have occurred and are continuing to occur, which violations are verified and supported by the Verified Complaint of Plaintiffs GIDWITZ and BUNTRCK. Defendants are therefore subject to the injunctive relief authorized under Section 16(b) of the Trust Act for violations of the Act.

2. The Attorney General Has Standing To Enforce The Statute Providing For Injunctive Relief In This Matter.

Having shown that the Illinois Charitable Trust Act expressly authorizes injunctive relief in circumstances where it is alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or a trustee of a charitable trust has engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty, and having shown that the Plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence to show that the Defendant breached his fiduciary duty and violated the Trust Act requiring the monies he wrongfully took to be protected, the Plaintiff must also show that he has standing to exercise the authority given to seek injunctive relief by the Illinois Charitable Trust Act.

The purpose of the Charitable Trust Act is to assist the Attorney General in carrying out his common law powers and duties to enforce charitable trusts and to see the application of their funds to their intended charitable uses. (People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.) The Act is intended to give the Attorney General the tools with which to discharge his responsibilities. (Id.) As stated previously herein, the Attorney General has been judicially recognized as the proper representative of the State, which is the ultimate beneficiary of charitable assets collected and held for charitable purposes, in all actions concerning the enforcement or administration of a charitable trust. (In re Estate of Laas, 171 Ill. App. 3d at 920; People v. National Anti-Drug Coalition, 124, Ill. App. 3d at 275.) At common law, the Attorney General is charged with the duty to see that charitable funds are applied to their intended charitable uses. (Id.) As noted earlier, the right of the State, acting through the Attorney General's authority under the Charitable Trust Act to protect a public charity to prevent or correct abuses of charitable assets on the PEOPLE's behalf cannot be denied. (Id. at 276.) Furthermore, Section 16(b) of the Trust Act specifically authorizes the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief in circumstances where he alleges that a charitable trust needs to be protected or the trustee of a charitable trust has engaged in a breach of fiduciary duty and he is the proper plaintiff to seek such relief.

For all of these reasons, Plaintiff has standing to exercise the authority given to seek injunctive relief by the Illinois Charitable Trust Act.

3. The Attorney General Has Satisfied All Requirements For Injunction Pursuant To Statutory Authority And This Court Should Issue A Preliminary Injunction.

Because injunctive relief is authorized in the Illinois Charitable Trust Act, there has been a violation of that statute by the Defendants, and the Attorney General has standing under the statute to bring an action for injunctive relief, Plaintiff is entitled to a preliminary injunction to stop defendants from engaging in harm to the public at large, which harm is presumed from the statutory violation.

In People v. Keeven, 68 Ill. App. 3d 91 (1979), the Attorney General brought an action to enjoin two defendants, Leonard and Agnes Keeven, from violating certain sections of the Illinois Environmental Protection Act. The trial court refused to enter a preliminary injunction because the Plaintiff failed to allege or prove facts showing irreparable injury and lack of an adequate remedy at law. (Id. at 96.) On appeal, the Appellate Court determined that because the Statute in question specifically authorized the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief, he needed only allege and show that the there had been a violation of that statute by the defendants. (Id. at 97.) Since the

Similarly, in People ex rel Hartigan v. Stianos, 131 Ill. App. 3d 575 (2nd Dist. 1985), the Attorney General sought a preliminary injunction against the defendants for violating the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, which authorized the Attorney General to enjoin any person engaged in a trade or commerce who engaged in unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of that trade or commerce. (131 Ill. App. 3d at 580.) The Appellate Court found that the Plaintiff had alleged sufficient facts to show that the defendants had engaged in unfair and deceptive acts in violation of the Act. It thereafter held that a preliminary injunction was appropriate because the Attorney General needed only to allege and prove what the statute required in order to obtain the authorized injunctive relief. (Id, at 581-582.)

Like People v. Keeven and People v. Stianos, the present action concerns a request for temporary injunctive relief pursuant to statutory authority that provides for injunctive relief. Such conduct, described in detail in Plaintiff's Complaint constitutes a breach of the Defendant's fiduciary duties to the charity and a violation of Sections 15 of the Illinois Charitable Trust Act, and injunctive relief is authorized pursuant to Section 16(b) of said Act. (760 ILCS 55/16(b) (1997).) As in People v. Keeven and People ex rel Hartigan v. Stianos, the Court should enter a temporary injunction against the Defendant to prevent ongoing and continuous harm cause by Defendants' violations of Illinois statutory law.

CONCLUSION

For all of the reasons stated herein, the Plaintiff, the PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS ex rel. JAMES E. RYAN, Attorney General of Illinois requests this Honorable Court to grant its Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction.

No. 00 CH 13859

JAMES D. TERRA'S EMERGENCY PETITION TO INTERVENE AS OF RIGHT AND/OR PERMISSIVELY

James D. Terra, by his attorneys, McBride, Baker and Coles, files this emergency petition under 735 ILCS 5/2-408(a)(2) and (3) and (b)(2) to intervene as of right and/or permissively as a plaintiff in this action. James Terra only recently learned the nature and extent of this litigation and the direct effect it has on the assets of the Terra Foundation For The Arts ("Foundation"). James D. Terra seeks leave to intervene so that he may present a motion for a temporary restraining order to prevent the defendants from closing the Terra Museum of American Art ("Terra Museum") and removing Dean L. Buntrock from the Board of Directors of the Terra Foundation. The closing of the Terra Museum and the removal of a Chicago civic leader like

D.O.D.

Mr. Buntrock who favors keeping the Terra Museum in Chicago is directly contrary to the purpose of Daniel L. Terra and Adeline E. Terra in establishing the Terra Foundation. In support of this petition, Intervenor attaches the Affidavit of James D. Terra as Exhibit A, and also states:

INTRODUCTION

James D. Terra is the son of Daniel J. Terra and Adeline E. Terra, founders of the Terra Museum of American Art. He was one of three incorporators of the Foundation in 1978. (Affidavit, ¶3). In that capacity he was part of the planning and is acutely knowledgeable of his parent's intent in creating the Terra Museum and of the donation of their art to the people of Chicago. (Id., ¶3, 5-8). He has both a statutory right to intervene in these proceedings because the parties to this litigation do not adequately represent the Terra family interests, and permissively because there are common questions of law and fact between Intervenor's claim and plaintiffs' claims. These interests will be affected by an adverse order or judgment of this Court. The merits of plaintiffs' Complaint and Motions address the validity of the closure of the Terra Museum and the defendants' scheme to transfer the Terra Foundation's assets to Washington, D.C. However, said plaintiffs do not fully and adequately represent the settlors' intent.

Any judgment that affects the permanent transfer of assets of the Terra Foundation from the Chicagoland area materially affects the Terra family's rights to insure that the original intent of Daniel J. Terra and his wife Adeline E. Terra in protecting their gift to Chicago is carried out. The original gift and subsequent gifts to the Foundation by Daniel J. Terra approximate $450 Million. Consequently, this Court should grant the present Petition to Intervene.

I. BACKGROUND

1. On September 22, 2000, the plaintiffs filed a four-count Complaint which alleges that defendants have illegally concocted and participated in a scheme to close the Terra Museum and transfer the assets of the Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C.

2. The plan or scheme at issue in this litigation is only a single component of the improprieties that the plaintiffs allege to have occurred in the management of the Foundation. Also pleaded in the complaint are allegations of intentional waste and depletion of the Foundation's assets. In conjunction with the closure and transfer of assets, the defendants are alleged to have intentionally deteriorated the infra-structure and assets of the museum.

3. As set forth in the James Terra's Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order, attached hereto as Exhibit B, this Court should enter an order enjoining the defendants from (i) illegally proceeding with their scheme to close the Terra Museum, (ii) transferring Terra Foundation assets to Washington, D.C., and (iii) removing Dean L. Buntrock as director.

II. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT JAMES TERRA'S PETITION TO INTERVENE IN THIS LITIGATION.

4. The Illinois Code of Civil Procedure provides that a party, in certain circumstances, has the right to intervene in pending litigation:

> Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted as of right to intervene in an action . . .when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant will or may be bound by an order or judgment in the action; or when the applicant is so situated as to be adversely affected by a distribution or other disposition of property . . . subject to the control or disposition of the court . . .

735 ILCS 5/2-408(a)(2) and (3). In other cases, the Code allows a party to intervene by permission of the Court:

> Upon timely application anyone may in the discretion of the court be permitted to intervene in an action . . .when an applicant's claim . . . and the main action have a question of law or fact in common.

735 ILCS 5/2-408(b)(2).

5. The purpose of intervention is to expedite litigation by fully disposing of an entire controversy among the persons involved in one action. Serio v. Equitable Life Assurance, 184 Ill. App. 3d 432, 435, 540 N.E.2d 800, 802 (1st Dist. 1989). The intervention statutes "are remedial and should be liberally construed to allow one to protect an interest jeopardized by pending litigation to which they are not a party." City of Chicago v. John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., 127 Ill. App. 3d 140, 468 N.E.2d 428 (1st Dist. 1984). Under Illinois law, "the allegations of an applicant's petition to intervene are to be taken as true in determining whether the interests of the applicant are sufficient." Redmond v. Devine, 152 Ill. App. 3d 68, 74, 504 N.E.2d 138, 142 (1st Dist. 1987); Schwechter v. Schwechter, 138 Ill. App. 3d 602, 606, 486 N.E.2d 340, 343 (2d Dist. 1985). "[D]oubts regarding intervention . . .should generally be resolved in favor of the applicant." People ex. rel. Davis v. Chambers, 125 Ill. App. 3d 451, 453, 466 N.E.2d 260, 262 (5th Dist. 1984).

A. Because James Terra's Interest In Protecting the Settlor's Intent Differs From The Plaintiffs' Interests In Fulfilling Their Fiduciary Duties; And Because Any Judgment Will Adversely Affect Those Interests, James D. Terra Has A Right To Intervene In This Litigation.

6. Intervention is "committed to the sound discretion of the trial court." City of Chicago, 127 Ill. App. 3d at 143. But in construing a statutory right to intervene under Section 408(a)(2), this Court's sound discretion is limited to determining (1) whether the Petition is timely; and (2) whether it meets the conditions set forth in 735 ILCS 5/2-408, the Illinois intervention statute. Id. Once a petition meets these threshold requirements, "the plain meaning of the statute directs that the petition be granted." Id at 144.

1. The James Terra's petition is timely.

7. As stated above, plaintiffs filed their Complaint on September 22, 2000. Intervenor only recently received notice of the nature of this action on that date. Consequently, Intervenor's petition is timely filed. City of Chicago, 127 Ill. App. 3d at 144.

16di-000319

2. The Terra Estate has a sufficient interest in the claims at issue.

8. To establish an interest sufficient to justify intervention as a matter of right, Intervenor need not show a direct interest in the pending suit. Rather, Intervenor need only establish an enforceable and recognizable right, and an interest in the subject matter of the suit greater than that of the general public, so that they may stand to lose or gain by the direct legal operation and effect of a judgment in the suit. Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. Lenckos, 84 Ill.2d 102, 112, 417 N.E.2d 1343, 1349 (1980).

9. James D. Terra has sufficiently demonstrated herein an interest in protecting his family's rights and to protect his parent's intent in the manner effectuated by his father, Daniel J. Terra and mother Adeline E. Terra. Further, as demonstrated by the defendants' plans to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Foundation Board of Directors, to close the Terra Museum, and to transfer property from the Foundation to Washington, D.C., the interests of Daniel J. Terra, and his wife as settlors and donors are presently in jeopardy.

10. As demonstrated in the attached Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order (Exhibit B), defendants must be enjoined from continuing to proceed in their unlawful actions that are against the intentions of the Daniel J. Terra and Adeline E. Terra and the purpose of the Foundation to maintain a Chicagoland museum. Consequently, because James D. Terra's interest in protecting his parent's intent differs from the Plaintiffs' interests in fulfilling their fiduciary obligations; and, because an adverse judgment will materially and adversely affect James D. Terra's rights, causing an "injury in fact to a legally recognized interest," James D. Terra has a right to intervene in these proceedings as a matter of right. People ex rel. Collins v. Burton, 282 Ill. App. 3d 649, 653, 668 N.E.2d 1185, 1186 (4th Dist. 1996) (internal quotation omitted); 735 ILCS 5/2-408(a)(2),(3).

B. Alternatively, James D. Terra Estate Should Be Allowed To Intervene Permissively.

11. In any event, it is clear that James D. Terra has satisfied "the less stringent requirements for permissive intervention" in these proceedings. People ex. rel. Hanrahan v. Village of Wheeling, 42 Ill. App. 3d 825, 356 N.E.2d 806 (1st Dist. 1976). James D. Terra's interest in protecting Daniel J. Terra's and Adeline E. Terra's intent arises out of the same facts which are at issue in Plaintiffs' Complaint, filed in this Court on September 22, 2000. Consequently, petitioner's intervention will not inject any new and complicated issues into the proceedings, or "unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties." 735 ILCS 5/2-408(e). Other than intervention, James D. Terra has no adequate avenue to safeguard his interest in protecting his rights. Schwechter, 138 Ill. App. 3d at 608.

WHEREFORE, James D. Terra, requests that this Court enter an order permitting him to intervene in these proceedings, in order to, among other things, protect his parent's intent and seek the relief requested in its Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order (Exhibit B), attached pursuant to 735 ILCS 5/2-408(e).

AFFIDAVIT OF JAMES D. TERRA

James D. Terra, being duly sworn on oath deposes and states that if called as a witness in the above case he would testify as follows:

1. I am the only son of Daniel J. Terra and Adeline E. Terra, both deceased, their only daughter (and my sister) Penelope "Penny" Terra having predeceased them.

2. I am currently serving as the Executor of the estate of Daniel J. Terra, presently pending in the Probate Division, Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. The Terra Foundation For The Arts ("Foundation") is the sole beneficiary of the estate. When the estate is closed the Foundation will have received approximately $129 Million in artwork and cash from the estate, in addition to over $294 Million that my father gave the Foundation during his lifetime.

3. In 1978 I became one of three founding incorporators and directors of the "Foundation For The Daniel J. Terra Museum," now known as The Terra Foundation For The Arts. As a result of said involvement, I became and was knowledgeable about the intent and the purpose of creating the Foundation.

4. My mother was a graduate of Northwestern University with a degree in art history. She had a very keen eye for quality art. Over the years while my father became successful in building his business, Lawter International, Inc., a specialty ink printing company, my mother acquired the paintings of various artists with a primary focus on nineteenth century American art, some of which were impressionist paintings. As the collection grew, my father became interested in this activity both as a hobby and as an investment. I learned from him that some of the American art, particularly the impressionist paintings, was artistically comparable to French paintings, and that they were less expensive during the period that my parents assembled their collection.

5. In 1978 my parents realized that their hobby had grown to become one of the best collections of early American paintings in the United States, and elsewhere. My mother believed that these treasures should be shared with others and prevailed upon my father to consider creating a museum devoted to early American Art.

6. In 1978 my parents told me of their plans and asked that I participate. They were aware that the Chicagoland area did not have many museums compared to other major cities, and most importantly, that a museum devoted exclusively to early American art was rare. This fact intrigued my parents and they saw the possibilities of crating and maintaining a niche position that was not intended to rival any other museum. Both their actions and express intent was to create a museum of American Art in the Chicagoland area for people in this area. They chose Chicago because of their long residence here, and because of their social, civic and business ties to the community.

7. In discussions with my parents I learned that they intended to give their artwork to that museum as a gift to this community for the purposes of educating the public about early American art, and also to create local pride in such art which they dearly loved. I agreed that it was a good idea.

8. To carry out my parents' expressed intent as stated above, the Foundation was created in 1978 as an Illinois not for profit corporation and I signed the Articles of Incorporation. My father then worked with his lawyer, Robert Sugrue, to set up the museum. He chose to temporarily locate the museum in Evanston, Illinois rather than Chicago because the cost of real estate was less expensive there, and he needed to gain experience in running a museum before moving to downtown Chicago. The museum was then opened in Evanston in 1980 as the Terra Museum of American Art ("Museum"). At the grand opening of the Museum, it was repeatedly stated to the guests that the Museum was the Terra family's gift to this community. My parents were overjoyed with the reception and acceptance of that gift. Thereafter, in 1982 my mother died.

9. In 1987, the Museum moved to Michigan Avenue in Chicago and has remained in that location until the present date where it displays the majority of the Foundation's art collection, and where it has conducted educational programs for the people of the Chicagoland area in accordance with my parent's wishes.

10. From 1978 to my father's death on June 28, 1996, I either attended board meetings of the Foundation or reviewed the minutes from the meetings. As I recall, there never was any discussion of closing and moving the Museum from the Chicagoland area. However, there were discussions and steps taken by my father to find other locations for the Museum off Michigan Avenue to a smaller building to lessen the costs of operations of the Museum.

11. When the Museum was first opened it was clear that it was always meant to have a presence in the Chicagoland area. At no time during any board meetings, or in the minutes of said meetings, up to my resignation from the Foundation's board of Directors in September, 1998, or during all of my discussions with my father about Museum or Foundation matters, did he ever express any intent to move the Museum from Chicago.

12. Based upon my relationship with my father, and his connection to Chicago, I know that he would not have closed the Museum in Chicago and moved it elsewhere because he found the Museum to benefit people of the Chicagoland area as he and my mother originally planned. Although he did not discuss all Museum matters with me, I also know that he would have mentioned such a major action as closing or moving the Museum from Chicago.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

Affidavit of John M. Breen

Case Type: Fiduciary Duty >> Business Organizations
Jurisdiction: Cook County, Illinois
Name of Expert: John M. Breen
Area of Expertise: Legal >> Attorney Fees

Representing: Plaintiff

Honorable Dorothy Kirie Kinnaird.

The undersigned, upon oath, does hereby depose and state as follows:

1. I am John M. Breen, Assistant Professor of Law at Loyola University Chicago School of Law. I am over 18 years of age and have personal knowledge of the facts set forth herein and will testify truthfully thereto if called as a witness to do so.

2. I have been asked by attorneys at Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd., counsel for plaintiffs in the above-captioned matter, to render an opinion with respect to certain questions involving legal ethics that are at issue in the case. Specifically, I have been asked to determine (a) whether, under the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct and other applicable law, the attorneys at Sidley & Austin suffer from a conflict of interest that prohibits them from representing the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("Terra Foundation" or "Foundation") in the action brought against the Foundation and three sitting directors, Paul Tucker, Judith Terra and Alan Simpson, by plaintiffs Dean L. Buntrock and Ronald Gidwitz?; and, (b) whether, under the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct and other applicable law, the attorneys at Winston & Strawn can continue to represent the Terra Foundation as corporate counsel despite their current relationship with Mr. Gidwitz?

Scope of Opinions

3. For the reasons set forth in detail below, it is my professional opinion that both Sidley & Austin and Winston & Strawn suffer from conflicts of interests that preclude each firm from continuing to represent the Terra Foundation, either in the present litigation or as corporate counsel. Under the rules of ethics that govern attorneys here in Illinois, Sidley & Austin is materially limited in its representation of the Foundation and so is precluded from continuing as its counsel in the above-captioned matter. This conflict of interest stems from the manner in which Sidley & Austin was retained as well as from the fact that Sidley & Austin takes direction in the litigation from another interested party, namely, defendant Paul Tucker. Likewise, the attorneys at Winston & Strawn will be materially and severely limited in what they can do on behalf of the Foundation because of their ongoing attorney-client relationship with Mr. Gidwitz. Moreover, in the case of both Sidley & Austin and Winston & Strawn, these conflicts of interest cannot be cured by waiver or otherwise. Accordingly, disqualification of Sidley & Austin and Winston & Strawn is required in each instance.

4. In reaching these conclusions, I have reviewed a number of papers involved in the case including the following: (a) Plaintiffs' Verified Complaint for Declaratory, Injunctive and Other Relief; (b) Opposition to James D. Terra's "Emergency" Petition to Intervene as of Right; (c) Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts' Motion to Dismiss the Attorney General's Complaint; (d) Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz's Complaint; (e) Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts' Consolidated Memorandum in Support of its Motion to Dismiss the Complaint; (f) Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint an Independent Litigation Committee and Independent Litigation Counsel for the Terra Foundation, and/or Receiver; (g) Opposition by Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts to Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint a Special Litigation Committee, Independent Litigation Counsel, and/or Receiver; (h) Transcript of Proceedings for September 22, 2000; and, (i) Transcript of Proceedings for September 25, 2000.

5. The lawsuit filed by Mr. Buntrock and Mr. Gidwitz contains serious allegations of wrongdoing with respect to the actions taken by Terra Foundation directors Paul Tucker, Judith Terra, and Alan Simpson. I have no opinion as to the truth of these allegations and I take no position with respect to the merits of the case. Nevertheless, the plaintiffs clearly contend that the individual defendants have engaged in ultra vires acts that have been harmful to the Foundation, and that they have violated their fiduciary duties to the Foundation through deliberate waste, mismanagement, and self-dealing. By any estimation, these allegations are serious and as such are worthy of investigation.

Professional Qualifications

6. In reaching the conclusions summarized above, I have also drawn upon my expertise in the field of legal ethics. I received my undergraduate degree from the University of Notre Dame and my law degree from Harvard Law School. I now serve on the full-time faculty at Loyola University Chicago School of Law where I teach courses in legal ethics and professional responsibility. I also serve as the Reporter to the Illinois Supreme Court Committee on Professional Responsibility. A copy of my Curriculum Vitae is attached hereto as Exhibit 1.

Analysis of the Ethical Obligations of Sidley & Austin

7. The lawyer who represents an organizational client such as a corporation, partnership, trade association or union owes his or her professional duties of loyalty, confidentiality, and competence to the organization that is the client and not to the directors, officers, employees or other constituents who work on behalf of the organization. When a lawsuit is filed against an organizational client and one or more of the directors for the organization, the role of the organization's counsel is clear. Under the rules of legal ethics, counsel for the organization must work to protect the interests of the entity and not the interests of the individual director named as a defendant. This fundamental duty is reflected in the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct ("IRPC"). Rule 1.13(a) states that "[a] lawyer employed or retained by an organization represents the organization acting through its duly authorized constituents."

8. It may be possible for the lawyer who represents an organizational entity in a lawsuit to also represent the "constituents" who work on behalf of the entity. These constituents may include the organization's directors, officers, employees, or other agents. Nevertheless, the organization's interests are always distinct from and may be adverse to the interests of the individual constituent. Accordingly, Rule 1.13(e) of the IRPC provides:

 © 2017 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A lawyer representing an organization may also represent any of its directors, officers, employees, members, shareholders or other constituents, subject to the provisions of Rule 1.7. If the organization's consent is required by Rule 1.7, the consent shall be given by an appropriate official of the organization other than the individual who is to be represented, or by the shareholders.

As an Illinois not-for-profit corporation, the Terra Foundation is precisely the kind of organizational client contemplated by Rule 1.13 of the IRPC.

9. The Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct are based on the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct (the "ABA Model Rules"). In adopting the IRPC, the Supreme Court of Illinois did not adopt the ABA's commentary. Nevertheless, Illinois courts often look to the ABA comments as persuasive authority in interpreting the rules. See, e.g., Schwartz v. Cortelloni, 177 Ill. 2d 166, 179-80, 685 N.E.2d 871, 877-78 (1997). Comment 12 to ABA Model Rule 1.13 notes that "derivative actions are a normal incident of an organization's affairs" but that "if the claim involves serious charges of wrongdoing by those in control of the organization, a conflict may arise between the lawyer's duty to the organization and the lawyer's relationship with the board. In those circumstances, Rule 1.7 governs who should represent the directors and the organization."

10. Rule 1.7 of the IRPC is of course the main rule that addresses attorney conflicts of interest in concurrent representation. In general, Rule 1.7(a) prohibits a lawyer from representing two clients at the same time where their interests are "directly adverse." Likewise, Rule 1.7(b) prohibits a lawyer from representing a client where the lawyer would be limited in his or her representation of the client because of "the lawyer's responsibilities to another client or to a third person, or by the lawyer's own interests." In its entirety, IRPC 1.7 provides as follows:

(a) A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of that client will be directly adverse to another client, unless:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation will not adversely affect the relationship with the other client; and

(2) each client consents after disclosure.

(b) A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of that client may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibility to another client or to a third person, or by the lawyer's own interests, unless:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation will not be adversely affected; and

(2) the client consents after disclosure.

(c) When representation of multiple clients in a single matter is undertaken, the disclosure shall include explanation of the implications of the common representation and the advantages and risks involved.

11. The vast majority of reported decisions prohibit the same lawyer from representing both the organizational client and the organization's directors, officers or shareholders. Indeed, courts routinely grant motions to disqualify the lawyer who tries to represent both the individual directors named as defendants in a stockholder derivative action and the corporate entity itself. See, e.g., Musheno v. Gensemer, 897 F. Supp. 833 (M.D. Pa. 1995); In re Par Pharmaceutical, Inc. Derivative Litigation, 750 F. Supp. 641 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); Messing v. FDI, Inc., 439 F. Supp. 776 (D.N.J. 1977); Lewis v. Shaffer Stores Co., 218 F. Supp. 238 (S.D.N.Y. 1963); Forrest v. Baeza, 67 Cal.Rptr.2d 857 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 1997); Tydings v. Berk Enterprises, 565 A.2d 390 (Md. App. 1989). Courts in Illinois have likewise found that counsel must be disqualified where he or she attempts to represent both the corporate entity and the individual named defendant who has interests that are adverse or potentially adverse to the interests of the corporate client. See, Cannon v. U.S. Acoustics Corp., 398

F. Supp. 209 (N.D. Ill. 1975), aff'd in relevant part, 532 F.2d 1118 (7th Cir. 1976); Lower v. Lanark Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 114 Ill. App. 3d 462, 448 N.E.2d 940 (2d Dist. 1983).

12. Where a lawsuit is filed against an organization and its directors, the better reasoned approach taken is for the board of directors to appoint a special litigation committee to evaluate the merits of the lawsuit and to recommend a course of action. Depending on the recommendation of the special litigation committee, the organization may then either move to dismiss the action or join the action as a plaintiff. See, e.g., Byers v. Baxter, 419 N.Y.S.2d 497 (Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1979); In re Par Pharmaceutical. Inc. Derivative Action, 750 F. Supp. 641 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); see also Stepak v. Addison, 20 F.3d 398 (11th Cir. 1994) (wherein Sidley & Austin served as "independent counsel" to a group of "outside directors").

13. Among the many cases in which courts have recognized the need for separate counsel when both the organization and its constituents are named as defendants, courts have adopted a variety of approaches as to how the organization's counsel should be selected.

(a) In one case, the court appointed independent counsel for the organization on its own because the court was convinced that if it did not, "[c]ounsel for the corporation would be subject to the control of those accused of wrongdoing." Rowen v. LeMars Mutual Ins. Co., 230 N.W.2d 905, 916 (Iowa 1975).

(b) Some courts have tolerated the participation of directors who have been named as individual defendants in the selection of counsel for the organization. See, e.g., Lewis v. Shaffer Stores Co., 218 F. Supp. 238 (S.D.N.Y. 1963); Cannon v. U.S. Acoustics Corp., 398 F. Supp. 209 (N.D. Ill. 1975), aff'd in relevant part, 532 F.2d 1118 (7th Cir. 1976); Lower v. Lanark Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 114 Ill. App. 3d 462, 448 N.E.2d 940 (Ill. App. 3d Dist. 1983). Even in these cases, however, the lawyer appointed by a majority of the board to represent the organization was not required to report directly and exclusively to an individual director named as a defendant in the lawsuit. By contrast, Sidley & Austin has been directed to report to Paul Tucker, an individual director named as a defendant in the lawsuit. See Opposition by Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts to Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint a Special Litigation Committee, Independent Litigation Counsel, and/or for a Receiver, Exhibit A, Terra Foundation Board Meeting Minutes, September 26, 2000 pp. 2-3 ("giving authorization to the Chair [Paul Tucker] for any and all actions regarding the lawsuit except for the settlement").

(c) Other courts have simply insisted that the board deal with the problem in the way that it would typically address other issues involving conflicts of interest. See, e.g., Musheno v. Gensemer, 897 F. Supp. 833, 838-39 (M.D. Pa. 1995); Messing v. FDI Inc., 439 F. Supp. 776, 783 (D.N.J. 1977). The Verified Complaint indicates that the Terra Foundation has dealt with serious conflicts of interest in the past by excluding the person suffering from the conflict from the work of the Foundation. Paragraph 29 of the Verified Complaint states that as a result of "Judith Terra's attempt to seize $43 million of Dan Terra's bequest to Terra Foundation" she "was forced to take a leave of absence as a director of Terra Foundation." By contrast, no similar steps were taken to exclude Paul Tucker, Judith Terra or Alan Simpson with respect to the Terra Foundation's involvement in the lawsuit. On the contrary, each of the named defendants voted on the appointment of counsel for the Foundation and Paul Tucker was given authority to direct the litigation on behalf of the Foundation.

14. The best reasoned cases have held that the special litigation committee be composed of disinterested and independent members of the board of directors. See, e.g., In re Oracle Securities Litigation, 829 F. Supp. 1176, 1190 (N.D. Cal. 1993); Miller v. Register and Tribune Syndicate, 336 N.W.2d 709, 717-18 (Iowa 1983); Zapata Corp. v. Maldonado, 430 A.2d 779, 788-89 (Del. 1981); Auerbach v. Bennett, 393 N.E.2d 994, 1001 (N.Y. 1979). While respecting corporate governance, this approach ensures as much as possible that counsel is truly independent "unshackled by any ties to the [interested] directors [and] in the unique position of having only the corporation's interest at stake." Messing, 439 F. Supp. at 782. Moreover, this approach largely avoids the prospect of having to "apply to the court for additional relief" should further "difficulties arise." Cannon, 398 F. Supp. at 220.

 © 2017 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

15. Even if the board of directors for an organization properly takes some action within the scope of its authority, legal counsel for the organization is not thereby relieved of the duty of examining its own ethical obligations with respect to the matter. "Resolving questions of conflicts of interest is primarily the responsibility of the lawyer undertaking the representation. ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 15. Indeed, "[t]he lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures ... to determine whether there are actual or potential conflicts of interest." ABA Model Rule 1.7. cmt. 1.

16. Sidley & Austin argues that it does not suffer from a conflict of interest because it does not formally represent any of the Foundation's co-defendants. This analysis is wholly inadequate for resolving the ultimate question of whether or not the firm suffers from a conflict of interest. As noted above, an attorney may suffer from a conflict of interest under Rule 1.7(b) in that the lawyer "may be materially limited" by the responsibilities that the lawyer owes to another client, to a third person or by the lawyer's own interests. That is to say, the lawyer's relationship with a non-client, such as a co-defendant may give rise to a conflict of interest just as easily as the concurrent representation of two distinct clients. Such a relationship may interfere with the lawyer's fundamental duty to "exercise independent professional judgment and render candid advice" on behalf of the client. See Rule 2.1 of the IRPC.

17. The materials I have reviewed, including the Verified Complaint, demonstrate that Sidley & Austin suffers from precisely this sort of conflict. Sidley & Austin is unable to exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of the Terra Foundation. They cannot provide genuinely candid advice to the Foundation because of the influence of Mr. Tucker.

18. During the September 26th annual meeting of the board of directors the board authorized Paul Tucker "to deal with all matters regarding the litigation and to defend the Foundation against the charges brought by Mr. Buntrock and Mr. Gidwitz." See Opposition by Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts to Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint a Special Litigation Committee, Independent Litigation Counsel and/or for a Receiver, Exhibit A, Terra Foundation Board Meeting Minutes, September 26, 2000, pp. 2-3. This of course is the opposite of the approach taken by the majority of cases described above. See also Ivy v. Illinois State Police, 263 Ill. App. 3d 12, 636 N.E.2d 738, 744 (1st Dist. 1994) (impermissible conflict existed where same lawyer represented three defendants); Illinois Mun. League Risk Mgt: v. Siebert, 223 III. App. 3d 864, 585 N.E.2d 1130 (4th Dist. 1992) (impermissible conflict where nonprofit association represented municipality and police officer). Here, the conflict is actual and concrete because Tucker directs Sidley & Austin in this litigation. This materially limits the representation that Sidley & Austin is able to provide to the Terra Foundation. Rather than appoint a group of disinterested board members to oversee the litigation with the advice of independent counsel, the board for the Terra Foundation selected the man whose conduct is at the center of the lawsuit. Because he is a named defendant, Mr. Tucker cannot help but be keenly interested in the outcome of the lawsuit. More importantly, this personal interest cannot help but influence how he will direct Sidley & Austin to conduct the litigation on behalf of the Foundation.

19. Sidley & Austin's inability to provide the Foundation with independent professional advice is apparent in the way that the law firm has conducted the litigation thus far. Because the nature of the allegations against Paul Tucker, Judith Terra and Alan Simpson are gravely serious, truly independent counsel would take the time to investigate these matters before taking any decisive action. Indeed, such an investigation would be necessary in order for the lawyer to advise the Foundation as to how it should proceed. Thus, "[t]he initial decision then as to what role if any the corporation should take must in the first instance be made completely free from any actual or apparent conflict." Messing, 439 F. Supp. at 782.

20. Instead of taking the time to investigate the allegations behind the lawsuit, Sidley & Austin immediately filed a Section 2-615 motion to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint. Sidley & Austin could not have filed this motion to dismiss without first consulting with Mr. Tucker and receiving his approval to proceed. After all, the board voted to give Mr. Tucker authority "for any and all actions regarding the lawsuit except for settlement."

It is clear that Mr. Tucker is an interested party in this litigation. He is a named defendant who is alleged to have violated his fiduciary duties to the Foundation. Nevertheless, the attorneys at Sidlev & Austin must, in effect, treat Mr. Tucker as if he were their client.

Consequently, Sidley & Austin suffers from an intractable conflict of interest. The firm's representation of the Foundation is, in the language of Rule 1.7(b) "materially limited" by its relationship with Mr. Tucker. Sidley & Austin cannot provide candid advice to the Foundation because that advice might be adverse to the interests of Mr. Tucker. It might, for example, be in the best interests of the Foundation to join Mr. Buntrock and Mr. Gidwitz as a plaintiff in the lawsuit. Similarly, it might be in the best interests of the Foundation to not oppose the intervention of James Terra in the lawsuit. Sidley & Austin cannot provide this advice to the Foundation because Mr. Tucker stands in the way. When a lawyer "cannot consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client because of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests," the lawyer cannot ethically proceed with the representation. ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 4. In effect, the conflict "forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to the client." Id. These alternatives should be available to the Terra Foundation, but they will only become available when Sidley & Austin is disqualified and an independent litigation committee is permitted to select its own counsel to represent the Foundation.

21. Finally, this is not the kind of conflict of interest that can be waived. Rule 1.7(b) demands that the lawyer who wishes to avoid a conflict of interest must both obtain client consent and "reasonably believe[] [that] the representation will not be adversely affected" by the lawyer's other responsibilities. Sidley & Austin could not satisfy the "reasonable belief" requirement of Rule 1.7(b) even if a group of disinterested board members consented to Sidley & Austin's continued representation. This is because Sidley & Austin cannot take any new positions that contradict its current litigation position even if such an alternative position would be in the best interest of the Foundation. For example, it may be in the best interest of the Foundation to join plaintiffs in this action. This contradicts Sidley & Austin's current stance. Therefore, Sidley & Austin is materially limited in asserting this new position. Consequently, any such waiver under Rule 1.7 would be without effect and Sidley & Austin must be disqualified from further representation of the Foundation. See In re American Printers & Lithographers, Inc., 148 B.R. 862 (Bkrtcy. N.D. Ill. 1992) (waivers of conflicts by clients are "irrelevant" where law firm will still be affected by its representation of one client by its responsibilities to another).

Analysis of the Ethical Obligations of Winston & Strawn

22. Winston & Strawn appeared as counsel for the Foundation immediately after the lawsuit began. Even at this early stage the lawyers at the firm recognized that they suffered from a conflict of interest that precluded their continued presence in the case. As counsel from Winston & Strawn stated at the first hearing in the matter held on September 22, 2000: "we have no authority to appear for anyone else [other than the Terra Foundation], Your Honor, and before I get too deep in it, one of the plaintiffs, in this case Mr. Gidwitz, is a good client of Winston & Strawn. So unless Judge Quinlan has a waiver for me, there is a real question now how Winston & Strawn would be able to stay in this case." Transcript of Proceedings, September 22, 2000, p. 3. During the following hearing on September 25th, counsel from Winston & Strawn stated that he was "trying to be the first lawyer out of this case because Mr. Gidwitz has objected to our representing the Foundation in this litigation as counsel." Transcript of Proceedings, September 25, 2000, p. 17. He then withdrew from the proceedings. Nevertheless, although Winston & Strawn agreed to step aside as litigation counsel, the firm purports to continue to represent the Foundation as "corporate counsel."

23. Winston & Strawn's decision to withdraw from representing the Terra Foundation in the present action was the only appropriate action the firm could take under the rules of legal ethics. Rule 1.7(a) of the IRPC provides that an attorney may not represent a client "if the representation of that client will be directly adverse to another client." Winston & Strawn correctly concluded that, in the current posture of the case, the Terra Foundation's interests were directly adverse to the interests of Mr. Gidwitz, another current client of the firm. It does not matter that the subject matter of the firm's representation of Mr. Gidwitz has nothing to do with its work on behalf of the Terra Foundation. Ordinarily, a lawyer

"may not act as advocate against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even if it is wholly unrelated." ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 3. See also Ransburg Corp. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 648 F. Supp. 1040 (N.D. Ill. 1986) (disqualifying law firm from bringing patent infringement lawsuit on behalf of Ransburg against Champion Spark Plug where firm currently represented Champion in unrelated patent matters). Rule 1.7 does allow the lawyer to avoid the conflict by obtaining the consent of each client to the representation following disclosure. Because Mr. Gidwitz declined to provide such consent, Winston & Strawn had no alternative but to withdraw.

24. Winston & Strawn's withdrawal from the representation of the Foundation in the current lawsuit was correct, but it was not complete. Attorneys at Winston & Strawn continue to advise the Foundation on matters closely associated with the subject matter of the litigation. For example, at the September 26th board meeting, Mark Heatwole of Winston & Strawn advised the Foundation that it was appropriate to give Mr. Tucker authority to act for the Foundation in the litigation as "there was no conflict in this matter." Opposition by Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts to Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint a Special Litigation Committee, Independent Litigation Counsel, and/or for a Receiver, Exhibit A, Terra Foundation Board Meeting Minutes. September 26. 2000. p. 2. As the case law set forth in detail above demonstrates, this advice was simply incorrect. It is inappropriate for interested parties within an organization to select counsel for the organization. As a primary defendant in the lawsuit, Mr. Tucker is clearly an interested party. Moreover, under these circumstances it was improper for Sidley & Austin to accept the representation.

25. Mr. Heatwole's advice concerning an issue very much in dispute within the litigation shows that Winston & Strawn's withdrawal from its representation of the Foundation in the litigation was not a clean break. Indeed, it demonstrates that it will be impossible for Winston & Strawn to extricate itself from the litigation so long as it continues to represent the Foundation as corporate counsel. If it continues in this capacity it will not be able to avoid rendering legal advice with respect to matters that are at issue in the lawsuit. Indeed, it cannot decline to represent the Foundation with respect to the lawsuit and continue to represent the Foundation with respect to "other matters." For example, as corporate counsel Mr. Heatwole or some other attorney at Winston & Strawn may be asked to render legal advice with respect to the sale of the Foundation's artwork or property in Chicago. These matters touch on the very heart of the subject matter of the litigation. If Winston & Strawn takes a position that is adverse to the position advocated by Mr. Gidwitz in the lawsuit then the firm will, once again, be representing interests that are "directly adverse" to the interests of a current client. If on the other hand it is unable to render such advice to the Foundation, then it will be "materially limited" in its representation under Rule 1.7(b). In either case, Winston & Strawn cannot continue to represent the Foundation.

26. Significantly, the advice Winston & Strawn provided to the Foundation with respect to Mr. Tucker's management of the litigation was "directly adverse" to the interests of its current client, Ron Gidwitz. It is clearly adverse to Mr. Gidwitz's interest for Winston & Strawn to approve of the management of the lawsuit on behalf of the Terra Foundation by someone who is himself a defendant in the dispute. As noted above, a disinterested person might wish to have the Foundation join the action as a plaintiff, together with Mr. Gidwitz and Mr. Buntrock. Winston & Strawn's erroneous advice renders this scenario highly unlikely if not impossible because the subject matter of the litigation is the future of the Terra Foundation in every aspect. Winston & Strawn cannot continue as corporate counsel for the Terra Foundation under these circumstances.

Conclusion

For all the reasons stated above, I conclude that Sidley & Austin must be disqualified from further representation of the Terra Foundation in the above-captioned matter. I also conclude that Winston & Strawn must be disqualified from further representing the Terra Foundation as corporate counsel. Instead, the Terra Foundation should be represented by truly independent counsel who is free to exercise independent professional judgment and render candid advice in support of the best interests of the Foundation.

Supplemental Affidavit of John M. Breen

Name of Expert: John M. Breen
Area of Expertise: Legal >> Other Legal Case Type: N/A >> N/A
Case Type: Fiduciary Duty >> Business Organizations
Jurisdiction: Cook County, Illinois

Representing: Plaintiff

Honorable Dorothy Kirie Kinnaird.

The undersigned, upon oath, does hereby depose and state as follows:

1. I am John M. Breen, Assistant Professor of Law at Loyola University Chicago School of Law. I am over 18 years of age and have personal knowledge of the facts set forth herein and will testify truthfully thereto if called as a witness to do so.

2. I understand that at a meeting of the board of directors held on November 30, 2000, an Independent Litigation Committee was elected, comprised of two current directors, Ted Stebbins and Jacques Andreani. I also understand that during a brief conference call meeting held on December 4, 2000, the Independent Litigation Committee decided to retain Sidley & Austin as counsel for the Terra Foundation in the above-captioned matter. Despite this selection, the ethics rules do not permit Sidley & Austin to accept this representation.

3. In light of this development I have been asked by attorneys at Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd., attorneys for plaintiffs in the above captioned matter, to supplement the Affidavit that I prepared and signed and which they filed with the court in support of Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint an Independent Litigation Committee and Independent Litigation Counsel for the Terra Foundation, and/or Receiver.

4. At a hearing held on Friday, October 20, 2000, Judge Kinnaird granted this motion in part and denied it in part. I make this Supplemental Affidavit in light of the comments made by Judge Kinnaird and by counsel at this hearing. I have read a transcript of the October 20th proceeding in its entirety. A copy of this transcript is attached hereto as Exhibit A. I have also reviewed the transcripts of proceedings before the court that took place on November 1, 2, and 6, 2000.

WESTLAW © 2017 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

5. As in my prior Affidavit, my opinion concerns whether, under the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct ("IRPC") and other applicable law, the attorneys at Sidley & Austin suffer from a conflict of interest that prohibits them from representing the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("Terra Foundation" or "Foundation") in the action brought against the Foundation and its directors Dr. Paul Tucker, Ms. Judith Terra and Senator Alan Simpson by plaintiffs Dean Buntrock and Ronald Gidwitz.

6. After reviewing the materials described above, including the transcript for the October 20, 2000 hearing, it remains my professional opinion that Sidley & Austin suffers from an incurable conflict of interest that precludes the law firm from representing the Foundation in the current lawsuit. The Independent Litigation Committee's decision to retain Sidley & Austin cannot supercede the requirements of Rule 1.7(b). Rule 2.1 of the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct requires every attorney to "exercise independent professional judgment and render candid advice" on behalf of his or her client. The facts demonstrate that Sidley & Austin is incapable of doing this with respect to the Terra Foundation. Consequently, Sidley & Austin is "materially limited" in its representation of the Foundation, a state of affairs that is prohibited under Rule 1.7(b) of the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct. Thus, even though the Independent Litigation Committee decided to retain Sidley & Austin as litigation counsel, the attorneys at Sidley & Austin still suffer from an irreconcilable conflict of interest that precludes their representation of the Foundation in this case.

Sidley & Austin's Defense of Mr. Tucker as Litigation Director

7. At the hearing held on October 20, 2000, the court found that it was inappropriate for the individual parties in the lawsuit to vote in the selection of litigation counsel for the Foundation. The court further held that it was improper for Dr. Tucker to direct the litigation on behalf of the Foundation. Indeed, Judge Kinnaird made clear at the hearing that it was "not even a close call" that Mr. Tucker "should not be directing Sidley in this litigation." Transcript of Proceedings, October 20, 2000 (hereinafter "Transcript") p.1 12. Yet, Sidley & Austin defended Dr. Tucker's authority to direct the litigation. The fact that the law firm took this position demonstrates that Sidley & Austin is materially limited in its representation of the Foundation. A disinterested lawyer capable of exercising truly independent professional judgment on the part of the Foundation would have conceded, as the court found, that it was inappropriate for another named defendant like Dr. Tucker to act as the litigation director for the Foundation.

8. Sidley & Austin adamantly opposed the appointment of an Independent Litigation Committee. Although it cited no case law or other authority in support of its position, Sidley & Austin opposed the creation of such a committee in its brief and during argument before the court. Sidley & Austin even argued that the plaintiffs cited no authority for the court's power to order the creation of such a committee. At the hearing, Judge Kinnaird quickly corrected this misstatement noting that "for the special litigation committee, [the plaintiffs] have overwhelmed [the court] with authority at this point." Transcript, p. 59. If the lawyers at Sidley & Austin had been capable of rendering independent professional legal advice they would have acknowledged the existence of the overwhelming weight of authority filed by plaintiffs in support of the appointment of a special litigation committee. This, of course, would have required Sidley & Austin to tell Dr. Tucker that it was inappropriate for him to serve as director of the litigation on behalf of the Foundation. Sidley & Austin was unwilling to do this. That Sidley & Austin instead chose to advocate on behalf of Dr. Tucker's role as litigation director demonstrates that Sidley is materially limited in its representation of the Foundation.

Sidley & Austin's "Investigation" of the Allegations in the Complaint

9. Sidley & Austin's inability to render independent professional judgment is also demonstrated by its failure to conduct an investigation with respect to the allegations made against Dr. Tucker, Ms. Terra and Senator Simpson set forth in Plaintiffs' Verified Complaint. At the hearing held on October 20th, Sidley & Austin argued that it had conducted an investigation with respect to the allegations of ultra vires acts simply by looking at the Foundation's articles of incorporation and by-laws and the Illinois Not-for-Profit Corporation Act. Such minimal work on the part of Sidley & Austin is inadequate to constitute an "investigation" into the allegations of ultra vires acts. For example, no mention is made of Dan Terra's will or the restrictions on the different accounts that are at issue in the lawsuit.

10. Regardless of the adequacy of this conduct, in defending its purported "investigation" of the alleged ultra vires acts, Sidley & Austin ignored the bulk of the Complaint. As Judge Kinnaird pointedly told Sidley & Austin, the ultra vires claims are "not the only issue." Transcript, p. 106. As part of her ruling at the end of the hearing, Judge Kinnaird denied the motions to dismiss the case filed by Sidley & Austin. In denying these motions sua sponte Judge Kinnaird made clear: "There is a lot more in this complaint than just those ultra vires issues. There is a serious breach of fiduciary duty allegations which are not even addressed in this motion." Transcript, p. 115.

11. As Judge Kinnaird observed, the Complaint contains serious allegations with respect to the individual defendants' breach of their fiduciary duties. The Complaint alleges that Dr. Tucker, Ms. Terra, and Senator Simpson violated their fiduciary duties to the Foundation through deliberate waste, mismanagement and self-dealing. These allegations are factual in nature. Accordingly, the Foundation needs independent litigation counsel to conduct a factual investigation in order to determine whether or not these allegations are true. Only then can the Foundation make an informed decision as to whether or not it should file a motion to dismiss the complaint or instead support the plaintiffs in their case against the individual defendants. Indeed, the overwhelming weight of authority demonstrates that where a complaint is filed against an organization and its directors, a genuine investigation into the allegations conducted by truly independent counsel often requires months of work. See e.g. Einhorn v. Culea, 612, N.W.2d 78, 83 (Wis. 2000) (special litigation committee met for 500 hours over five months); Byers v. Baxter, 419 N.Y.S.2d 497, 499 (N.Y. App. Div. 1979) (litigation committee and special counsel investigated matter for nearly nine months); Bell Atlantic Corporation v. Bolger, 2F.3d 1304, 1316 (3d Cir. 1993) (noting importance of independent counsel's "exhaustive investigation" prior to determination that suit was not in corporate best interests); Weiland v. Illinois Power Company, 1990 WL 267364 (C. D. Ill. 1990) (board appointed special litigation committee which conducted a thirteen month investigation, met 39 times, spent more than 700 hours investigating the merits of the claim and filed a 236 page report to the court); See also In re Par Pharmaceutical. Inc. Derivative Litigation 750 F.Supp. 641, 647-48 (S.D. NY 1990) (committee's investigation only from November, 1989 to January, 1990, failure to seek independent counsel and failure to document procedures, reasoning or conclusions deemed inadequate). Alford v. Shaw, 320 N.C. 465, 358 S.E.2d 323 (N.C. 1987) (court is required to evaluate the merits and adequacy of the special litigation committee's recommendation); Zapata Corp. v. Maldonado, 430 A.2d 779, 788 (Del. 1980) (requiring that an independent litigation committee perform an objective and thorough investigation prior to any pretrial motion to dismiss, and that the motion to dismiss include a thorough written record of the investigation and its findings); Auerbach v. Bennett, 47 N.Y.2d 619, 393 N.E.2d 994 (1979) (business judgment rule only protects boards when proper procedures and methodologies have been followed by special litigation committee). Plainly, a cursory examination of the organization's articles of incorporation and by-laws will not suffice.

12. Rather than conduct an independent investigation into the facts of the case, Sidley & Austin chose instead to align itself with Dr. Tucker, Ms. Terra and Senator Simpson. Immediately after being hired, Sidley & Austin filed a motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' Verified Complaint. Sidley & Austin did not assume the neutral and disinterested perspective required by the ethics rules. As litigation counsel for the Terra Foundation, Sidley & Austin has an obligation to act in the best interests of the Foundation, but it cannot know for certain what those interests are in the absence of a real investigation as to the allegations in the Complaint. The fact that Sidley & Austin deliberately chose not to initiate such a thorough factual investigation - and then chose to defend its failure to do so - demonstrates that the firm is not capable of providing the Foundation with the kind of independent professional judgment and candid advice required by Rule 2.1. Thus, under Rule 1.7(b), Sidley & Austin suffers from a conflict of interest in that it is "materially limited" in its representation of the Foundation. Moreover, it would not be reasonable for the attorneys at Sidley & Austin to believe that they are not impaired in their representation of the Foundation. Their actions demonstrate their severe limitations in this matter. Consequently, it would be unethical for Sidley & Austin to continue to represent the Terra Foundation.

Sidley & Austin's New Legal Position Demonstrates its Incurable Conflict of Interest

13. In addition to the materials described in paragraph 4 of my original Affidavit and in paragraph 4 above, I have also reviewed Terra Foundation's Motion to Continue Stay of Proceedings Pending Independent Litigation Committee Investigation, as well as the attached exhibits. These exhibits include: (1) Terra Foundation for the Arts Partial Minutes of the November 30, 2000 Board Meeting and (2) Terra Foundation for the Arts Independent Litigation Committee December 4, 2000 Meeting Minutes and Resolutions. In the Independent Litigation Committee meeting, the two members chose to retain Sidley & Austin as counsel.

14. Following Mr. Andreani and Mr. Stebbins' decision to retain Sidley & Austin as counsel, a lawyer from Sidley & Austin joined the meeting by phone. The minutes state that this lawyer "discussed the possibility of Sidley & Austin investigating the allegations [in the Complaint]" and that "[b]oth members of the committee agreed with this idea." This advice is clearly at odds with counsel's earlier position on the matter and demonstrates Sidley & Austin's lack of independence requiring its removal from the case.

15. Earlier in the case, counsel from Sidley & Austin argued that the law firm had already conducted all the investigation that was necessary in order to conclude that the Complaint should be dismissed. During the October 20th hearing, counsel argued:

They say we have done no investigation, that we filed this motion to dismiss willy-nilly, I guess is their point. Your Honor, we were charged with having committed an ultra vires and what did we do? We looked at the governing documents of the Foundation, the articles, the bylaws, the Not-For-Profit Corporation Act and lo and behold we find out that nothing that what is contained in the pleadings is an ultra vires act. We don't need to do more investigation that that.

Transcript, p. 103-04. That Sidley & Austin now believes that further investigation is required shows that the firm suffered from a conflict of interest when it appeared before the court in October. During this time, Sidley & Austin was directly under the control of Dr. Tucker. At the October 20th hearing, Sidley & Austin informed the court that it did not "need to do [any] more investigation" of the matter. Presumably this represented Sidley & Austin's best, professional, legal advice in the interest of the Foundation. Yet this advice was wholly at odds with what the law requires. The overwhelming weight of legal authority discussed above provides that a corporate entity should thoroughly investigate serious allegations of wrong-doing made against its directors. In arguing to the court that it had already conducted a sufficient investigation by reading the articles of incorporation and by-laws, Sidley & Austin chose to ignore this law. Because Sidley & Austin willingly took a position that it now implicitly concedes was not in the best interest of the Foundation, Sidley & Austin impliedly admits that it was "materially limited" because of its relationship with Dr. Tucker.

16. Although Dr. Tucker has been removed as litigation director, Sidley & Austin cannot avoid the conflict of interest from which is continues to suffer. The control Dr. Tucker had over Sidley & Austin dissuaded the law firm from conducting any factual investigation at all into the allegations made against Dr. Tucker, Ms. Terra and Senator Simpson. It is unreasonable to believe that this influence has suddenly disappeared. It is untenable to believe that Sidley & Austin can now conduct a thorough and impartial investigation as to whether Dr. Tucker, Ms. Terra and Senator Simpson engaged in deliberate waste, mismanagement and self-dealing. Indeed, a disinterested lawyer could not reasonably believe that Sidley & Austin's representation of the Foundation will not be "adversely affected" by the law firm's relationship with Dr. Tucker. See IRPC 1.7(b). This serious conflict of interest cannot be made to disappear simply by Mr. Andreani and Mr. Stebbins' vote to retain the law firm.

Sidley & Austin's Prior Work and Its Impaired Representation

 © 2017 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

17. Under the court's October 20th ruling, the Independent Litigation Committee was to consider the selection of counsel to represent the Foundation throughout the remainder of the case. Although, as a technical matter, the court's order did not prohibit the Independent Litigation Committee from retaining Sidley as its litigation counsel, the Illinois Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit Sidley & Austin from accepting this representation. By deliberately refusing to conduct a meaningful investigation as to the allegations in the Complaint and by filing a motion to dismiss the lawsuit, Sidley & Austin has already committed itself to a certain view of the litigation. Further, Sidley & Austin has already taken direction from Dr. Tucker, a named defendant in the case whose interests may well be adverse to the interests of the Foundation. Sidley & Austin cannot now represent the Foundation consistent with the requirements of Rule 1.7(b) because Sidley & Austin may be required to repudiate its own prior work in the case. This work includes not only the motion to dismiss, but also Sidley & Austin's opposition to the appointment of a receiver, its opposition to the intervention of James Terra, and its opposition to the entry and enforcement of the temporary restraining order entered by the court. Sidley & Austin lost the ability to fairly evaluate the current lawsuit and exercise independent professional judgment when it agreed to take direction in the case from Dr. Tucker. Thus, notwithstanding the Independent Litigation Committee's decision to reappoint Sidley & Austin, the law firm is still "materially limited" in its representation of the Foundation because it "cannot consider, recommend or carry out" certain courses of action that may be in the client's best interest. See ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 4. It would be unethical for Sidley & Austin to attack its own prior work product in this case. See e.g. In re Williams, 57 Ill. 2d 63, 66, 309 N.E.2d 579, 581, (1974) (noting that attorney cannot attempt to nullify the effectiveness of prior legal services that the attorney provided); Sullivan County Regulation Refuse Disposal Dist. v. Town of Acworth, 686 A.2d 755, 758 (N.H. 1996) (noting that "an attorney owes a duty of loyalty to former client that prevents that attorney from attacking or interpreting work [the attorney] performed or supervised, for the former client"). Legitimate litigation counsel, however, must be free to consider all alternatives that are available to the Foundation, including alternatives foreclosed by Sidley & Austin's prior work product. Because Sidley's prior actions have "foreclose[d] alternatives that would otherwise be available to the client", the conflicts rules require that Sidley & Austin may no longer represent the Foundation. See ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 4.

Ralph Lerner and Sidley & Austin's Conflict of Interest

18. Wholly apart from its involvement in the litigation to date, Sidley & Austin also suffers from an irreconcilable conflict of interest because of the work of one of its partners, Ralph Lerner. Mr. Lerner is a partner in Sidley's New York office. At the October 20th hearing, Sidley & Austin characterized Mr. Lerner's work on behalf of the Foundation as only providing "certain strategic advice about art law." Transcript, p. 52. Indeed, Sidley & Austin attempted to minimize Mr. Lerner's involvement, describing him as a sort of "technician" who merely suggested "possible contract language." Transcript, pp. 54-55.

19. Notwithstanding Sidley & Austin's characterization of Mr. Lerner's work on behalf of the Foundation, a review of the minutes for the board of directors meeting on August 24, 2000 reveals that Mr. Lerner provided extensive legal advice to the Foundation on a subject central to this litigation – the possible relocation of the Foundation. Indeed, Mr. Lerner's advice involved such issues as the sale or donation of the Terra Foundation's art collection and the Foundation's continued presence in Chicago. The minutes also show that Mr. Lerner's advice to the Foundation was premised upon the closure of the Terra Museum in Chicago. Thus, it is apparent that Mr. Lerner served as an attorney for the Foundation and rendered legal advice to the Foundation.

20. However, because this legal advice is at the heart of the present lawsuit, as litigation counsel Sidley & Austin finds itself in the awkward position of having to review both the soundness and the legal validity of Mr. Lerner's advice. Indeed, this position is not only awkward it is untenable. Because Mr. Lerner provided the Foundation with transactional advice with respect to the subject matter of the litigation, Sidley & Austin suffers from an incurable conflict of interest as litigation counsel. The firm is "materially limited" under Rule 1.7(b) because it "cannot consider, recommend or carry out" certain courses of action that may be in the best interest of the Foundation. See ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 4. It cannot, for example, challenge the validity of the work provided by its partner Mr. Lerner. This conflict cannot be cured under Rule 1.7(b) by the consent of the Foundation since under Rule 1.7(b), it would be unreasonable to think that Sidley's representation would be unimpaired.

Sidley & Austin's Failure to Satisfy the Objective Standard

21. Near the end of the October 20th hearing, a lawyer for Sidley & Austin, argued: "Why is it that I am not representing the Foundation ethically? I would still like to know that, because I believe in my heart of hearts as I stand here, that I am representing this Foundation ethically." Transcript, p. 109. This argument is unfounded because it relies upon a subjective standard. The rules of ethics do not contain such a subjective standard. Rule 1.7(b) employs an objective standard. The standard is what a "disinterested lawyer would conclude." See ABA Model Rule 1.7, cmt. 5. The rule provides that if a lawyer is materially limited in his or her representation of a client because of the lawyer's responsibilities "to another client or to a third person, or by the lawyer's own interest", then the lawyer cannot continue with the representation. See IRPC 1.7(b). The lawyers at Sidley & Austin have a responsibility to preserve the reputation of Mr. Lerner and the law firm as a whole. They cannot repudiate the advice rendered by Mr. Lerner or undermine their own prior work on the case. Moreover, the lawyers at Sidley & Austin have acted in a way that evidences a loyalty to Dr. Tucker and a disregard for the best interests of the Terra Foundation. Under the objective standard set forth in Rule 1.7(b), they are materially limited in their representation of the Foundation. Therefore, as an ethical matter, Sidley & Austin may not represent the Foundation further.

Conclusion

For all the reasons stated above, I conclude that the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit Sidley & Austin from representing the Foundation in this case, and that the Independent Litigation Committee's decision to appoint Sidley & Austin does not supercede these ethical rules.

Hon. Jacques Andreani

Dr. Theodore Stebbins, Jr.

Independent Litigation Committee

Terra Foundation for the Arts

664 North Michigan Avenue

Chicago, Illinois 60611

Dear Ambassador Andreani and Dr. Stebbins,

As you requested, I am writing to formalize my opinion, conveyed to you earlier through Stephen Carlson, that the Independent Litigation Committee ("ILC") of the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("the Foundation") is not barred by any legal or ethical principles from choosing to retain Sidley & Austin to represent the Foundation in the above-captioned litigation. It is my understanding that you were informed of my opinion during a meeting held earlier this month, and that you requested that I reduce these views to writing as soon as possible. I had intended to do this upon my return to Chicago on December 14, but in view of the motion to disqualify Sidley & Austin that Messrs. Buntrock and Gidwitz filed on December 6, I am writing this from Florida where I am vacationing with my family.

Before I set forth the reasoning that supports my opinion, I offer the following synopsis of my position: One of the positions that Professor Breen expressed in his initial affidavit was that it was improper for Dr. Tucker-one of the named individual-defendants in this action-to be the person controlling the litigation on behalf of the Foundation. I do not disagree with that proposition, and I believe that Judge Kinnaird acted properly in ordering the independent directors of the Foundation to name an ILC. Professor Breen and the plaintiffs go further, however, and also argue that the ILC is precluded from choosing Sidley & Austin to represent the Foundation. I disagree strongly with this claim. Nothing that Sidley & Austin has done in this case limits its ability to zealously represent the Foundation and to pursue the goals that will be set by the ILC.

When I initially expressed my opinion on this matter, I had the benefit of reviewing the pleadings in the case that had been filed as of late November, particularly the initial affidavit of John M. Breen. Several days ago, I received Professor Breen's Supplemental Affidavit, as well as some recently-filed pleadings, and I have now reviewed them carefully. Nothing in that Supplemental Affidavit or in the new pleadings has caused me to modify my opinion that there is no bar, legal or ethical, to Sidley & Austin continuing to represent the Foundation under the direction of the new ILC.

As I read the plaintiffs' pleadings and the affidavits of Professor Breen, the question of whether Sidley & Austin is disqualified here boils down to three questions. First, does the fact that Sidley & Austin represented the Foundation in this litigation during the period in which Dr. Tucker was directing the litigation on behalf of the Foundation preclude Sidley & Austin from representing the Foundation now that the ILC is directing the litigation? Second, does the fact that Sidley & Austin took certain legal positions on behalf of the Foundation at earlier phases of this litigation preclude Sidley & Austin from continuing to represent the Foundation which might, at the direction of the ILC, choose to pursue different goals in the litigation? Third, does the fact that Ralph Lerner, a partner in Sidley & Austin's New York office, advised the Foundation about how to effectuate certain possible courses of conduct preclude Sidley & Austin from representing the Foundation which might now, at the direction of the ILC, take the position that these previously-contemplated courses of conduct are inappropriate? For the reasons that I will now explain, it is my view that the answer to each of these questions is no.

L The Effect of Sidley & Austin Having Represented the Foundation During the Period in which Dr. Tucker was Directing the Litigation.

The plaintiffs argue that because Sidley & Austin represented the Foundation during the period in which Dr. Tucker had been responsible for directing the litigation, Sidley & Austin is now precluded from representing the Foundation under the direction of the ILC. I do not believe that the governing law or ethical provisions supports this claim in any way. The relevant inquiry at this moment is whether Sidley & Austin's current ability to advise and represent the Foundation is impaired by virtue of any duties that Sidley & Austin owes to other clients, any duties that Sidley & Austin owes to third parties, or by Sidley & Austin's own interests. There are no such duties or interests implicated here.

The critical fact here is that Sidley & Austin has never represented anyone in this litigation other than the Foundation. Sidley & Austin owes no duties to anyone else-its only responsibility here is to represent the Foundation as directed by the Foundation's duly authorized corporate representative. At one time-by virtue of the vote of the Foundation's Board of Directors-that duly authorized corporate representative was Dr. Tucker. That has now changed. What has not changed, however, is the fact that Sidley & Austin's duty then and now was to represent the Foundation. The change in the makeup of those who are responsible within the Foundation to direct the litigation creates no conflict on the part of Sidley & Austin (much less a conflict that is so severe that it cannot be remedied by consent of the ILC). Notwithstanding plaintiffs' accusations, Sidley & Austin did nothing wrong and displayed no lack of independence when it took direction from the person that the Bard (advised by senarate corporate counsel) had designated.

The following analogy drives the point home. Assume that a corporation's board of directors retains outside counsel on behalf of the corporation and instructs counsel to work under the direction of the corporation's in-house counsel. Assume further that the board later loses trust in the in-house counsel (even to the point of suspecting that person of wrongdoing) and replaces him with new in- house counsel. Obviously, there is no prohibition on the board choosing to proceed with the same outside counsel that has been representing the corporation. In this example, outside counsel's obligations have always been to the corporation-not to the in-house counsel who was directing the representation on behalf of the corporation. The same is true in this case: Sidley & Austin's duties were and are to the Foundation-it has never owed any duties to Dr. Tucker. There is no evidence whatsoever that Sidley & Austin ever compromised this loyalty. There are no conflicting duties at this time, and there is no reason that Sidley & Austin's having taken direction form Dr. Tucker now precludes it from continuing to represent the Foundation.

IL The Effect of Sidley & Austin Having Taken Certain Legal Positions on Behalf of the Foundation at Earlier Phases of this Litigation.

The plaintiffs and Professor Breen point to two specific legal positions that Sidley & Austin maintained earlier in this litigation as support for their claim that Sidley & Austin is now precluded from representing the Foundation. First, they point to the fact that Sidley & Austin defended Dr. Tucker's authority to direct the litigation on behalf of the Foundation, and thus opposed the creation of an independent litigation committee. Second, they point to the fact that Sidley & Austin filed a motion to dismiss the complaint without having undertaken an intense factual investigation into all of the facts asserted therein. According to Professor Breen, these facts demonstrate that Sidley & Austin is "incapable" of fulfilling its duty to "exercise independent professional judgment and render candid advice" on behalf of the Foundation. Breen Supplemental Affidavit at 3. Moreover, Professor Breen asserts that "Sidley & Austin has already committed itself to a certain view of this litigation" and that it cannot represent the Foundation because it is precluded from repudiating its own prior positions in the litigation. In other words, Professor Breen asserts that these prior positions show (a) that Sidley & Austin's loyalty to Dr. Tucker impairs its ability to represent the Foundation at the direction of the ILC, and (b) that Sidley & Austin's self-interest limits its ability to effectively represent the Foundation at the direction of the ILC. These claims miss the mark by a wide margin.

It is one thing to disagree with some of the legal positions that Sidley & Austin has taken in this litigation. It is quite another to use such disagreements to support a claim that Sidley & Austin was disloyal or was acting unethically. Lawyers often take positions on behalf of clients that do not prevail. At times, judges even declare that the position that the lawyer took was plainly wrong. But so long as those positions were taken in furtherance of the client's interests – then expressed by the person or persons authorized to speak on behalf of the client-there is no basis for suggesting that the lawyer was disloyal to the client, or otherwise violated his duties to the client, by taking these positions.

In this case, the Foundation's Board of Directors had voted to have Dr. Tucker direct the litigation, and the Foundation had decided to try to have the lawsuit against the Foundation (dealing with the claim that the Foundation was not allowed to close the Chicago museum) dismissed as soon as possible. There is nothing inappropriate about Sidley & Austin, in its capacity as litigation counsel, having agreed to advance this position in the courts, and Sidley & Austin's willingness to do so does not suggest that it was impaired in any way. The Foundation was a defendant in this action, and most defendants try mightily to have cases against them dismissed. This was not obviously a derivative action-the Foundation was simply a named defendant, and the majority of the Board plainly found no merit in the allegations that it would be ultra vires for the Foundation to close the Chicago museum. Indeed, the Board made its decisions, including the decision to appoint Dr. Tucker to direct the litigation on behalf of the Foundation upon the advice of its corporate counsel (a firm other than Sidley & Austin). Sidley & Austin's role was to act as litigation counsel it hired to fulfill its client's clearly-stated goals vis-a-vis the litigation. Consistent with its duty to represent the Foundation in the litigation, Sidley & Austin took positions designed to expedite dismissal of the suit. There was nothing the least bit unethical about that. Indeed, I am very disturbed that any one would use that conduct as a basis for alleging that Sidley & Austin was disloyal to the Foundation.

Now, circumstances have changed and the ILC has asked Sidley & Austin to investigate the factual allegations-particularly as they relate to waste and mismanagement--so that the ILC can decide what positions to take henceforth. In other words, the Foundation is now considering whether it ought to take a new position in the litigation, including on the issues of waste and mismanagement This possible change of position does not demand disqualification of prior counsel. Clients often change their minds in the middle of litigation, and lawyers are often in a position of having to take positions different from the ones they took earlier in the litigation. There is no rule of law or ethics that tells a lawyer not to represent the client any longer simply because the clients views about the objectives of the litigation have changed, or because a court has rejected some of the claims that the lawyer advanced earlier in the case. [a]

In sum, nothing about the prior positions that Sidley & Austin took in this litigation suggest (a) that Sidley & Austin was disloyal to the Foundation at any time; (b) that Sidley & Austin is incapable of providing representation to the Foundation that is free of any divided loyalty between the Foundation and any other clients or third parties; or (c) that Sidley & Austin is limited in its ability to represent the Foundation because of the positions it took at earlier stages of the litigation.

III. The Effect of Ralph Lerner Having Advised the Foundation About how to Effectuate Certain Possible Courses of Conduct.

This challenge has no merit on the current record. Contrary to the plaintiffs' assertions, the litigation at issue here does not turn on the validity of the advice that Mr. Lerner gave the Board on August 24, 2000. Based upon the minutes of that meeting as well as Mr. Lerner's affidavit, it is cear that Mr. Lerner never gave any advice on whether it was permissible, as a matter of Illinois law or general principles, for the Board to close the Chicago museum or to enage in any of the other acts about which plaintiff have complained. from ever indication. Mr. Lemer simply advised the Board on how it would go about accomplishing certain goal* should it choose to adopt those goals It is simply inaccurate, then, to conclude that Sidley & Austin will be in a position of having to challenge the advice that Mr.Lcmer gave No one has ever suggested that any of the advice that Mr. Lemer gave-or the subject of that advice-subject to attack.

In any event, Mr. Lerner's role as counsel to the Board at a time in which he was asked to advise on certain courses of conduct does not bar him or Sidley & Austin from playing different roles at the direction of the ILC. There is no suggestion that Mr. Lerner was anything but loyal to the Foundation, and there is no reason that Sidley & Austin is precluded from representing the Foundation even if it rs out that the ILC concludes that the course of conduct that the Board had earlier contemplated was improper or impermissible.

CONCLUSION

The decision on whether the ILC should retain Sidley & Austin to represent the Foundation in this litigation is, in my view, a decision that is up to the ILC. I see no basis fur any claim that you have no right to proceed with Sidley & Austin should you so cboose. On the other hand, it is obviously your prerogative to choose other counsel, should you wish.

Thank you for giving me this opportunity to advise you. I would be pleased to provide any further assistance that you may deem helpful.

Footnotes

a rofessor Breen cites two cases in his Supplemental Affidavit for the proposition that “it would be unethical for Sidley & Austin to attack its own prior work product in this case.” Supplemental Affidavit at 10. As it turns out, both of these cases involve lawyers who have gone from representing one party to representing another party in the same matter-a classic example of prohibited conduct. Neither of these cases remotely suggests that a law firm must withdraw from representing its client because the vicissitudes of litigation have caused the client or the attorney to rethink some of the positions that the attorney previously advocated on that very client's behalf.

Affidavit of Thomas More Donnelly

Jurisdiction: Cook County, Illinois
Name of Expert: Thomas More Donnelly
Area of Expertise: Legal >> Law Professor
Area of Expertise: Legal >> Attorney Fees

Representing: Plaintiff

Honorable Dorothy Kirie Kinnaird.

1. I am Thomas More Donnelly, an attorney licensed to practice law in the State of Illinois and a former Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County. I serve as an adjunct professor at Loyola University of Chicago School of Law. The Illinois Supreme Court appointed me to the position of Reporter to the Supreme Court's Committee on Professional Responsibility in 1994, and I served until the year 2000. I also served as Chairman of the Chicago Bar Association Professional Responsibility Committee from 1999-2000. I am co-author of the Cornell Law School Illinois Legal Ethics Annotation.

2. I have reviewed several documents that have been provided me by the law firm of Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd.:

(a) Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint an Independent Litigation Committee and Independent Litigation Counsel for the Terra Foundation, and/or Receiver;

(b) Opposition by Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts to Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint a Special Litigation Committee, Independent Litigation Counsel and/or for a Receiver;

(c) Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint an Independent Litigation Committee and Independent Litigation Counsel for Terra Foundation and/or Receiver;

(d) Plaintiffs' Reply in Further Support of their Motion to Appoint an Independent Litigation Committee and Independent Litigation Counsel, and/or Receiver;

(e) Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to Supplement Plaintiffs' Motion to Appoint an Independent Litigation Committee and Independent Litigation Counsel for the Terra Foundation, and/or Receiver Instanter;

(f) Handwritten and conforming typed order of October 20, 2000; and

(g) Emergency Motion to Appoint Receiver and for a Temporary Restraining Order and Objection to Motion for Stay.

3. In reviewing Terra Foundation's Opposition to Emergency Motion to Appoint Receiver and for Temporary Restraining Order as it Relates to the Retention of Sidley & Austin, payment of legal bills and payment pursuant to the Dilenschneider Contract, I was suiprised on page 11 to read footnote 3 which states:

"Even if the Court at this juncture were to allow plaintiffs to interfere with the attorney-client relationship and find that Sidley & Austin should now be disqualified, Sidley & Austin would clearly still be entitled to be compensated for its past work in this case." (emphasis added)

4. Not only may this violate Illinois Rule of Professional Conduct Rule 3.3(a)(3) in that it fails to disclose to this Court legal authority in the controlling jurisdiction known to the lawyer to be directly adverse to the position that they are asserting, it also may indicate that Sidley & Austin is failing to provide the appropriate legal authority regarding their entitlement to fees to the Foundation.

5. If the plaintiffs' allegations are taken as true, Sidley & Austin has breached a fiduciary duty to its principal. See In reMarriage of Pogano, 154 I1*I.*2d at 174, 185-186, 607 N.E.2d 1242, 1249-50 (1993). Where a fee agreement or the basis of representation was illegal, the fee agreement becomes unenforceable and the attorney is not entitled to any fees. See Leoris v. Dicks, 150 Ill. App. 3d 350, 353-354, 501 N.E.2d 901 (1st Dist, 2d Div., 1986).

6. Sidley & Austin's entitlement to fees is anything but clear. As Judge Learned Hand said 50 years ago:

"it had become a commonplace that an attorney must not represent opposed interests; and the usual consequence has been that he is debarred from receiving any fee from either no matter how successful his labors. Nor will the court hear him urge or let him prove that in fact the conflict of his loyalties has had no influence upon his conduct; the prohibition is absolute and the consequence is a forfeiture of all pay."

Silbiger v. Prudents Bonds Corporation, 180 F.2d 917, 920 (2d Cir. 1950). Indeed, clients are not required to show injury in seeking forfeiture of fees in this circumstance. See Hendry v. Pelland & Sadur, Pelland & Rubenstein, P.C., 73 F.3d 397, 401-402 (DC. Cir. 1996).

7. Moreover, because plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order regarding the payment of legal bills raises an issue with regard to fees, Sidley & Austin's attempt to settle or resolve this dispute may raise a presumption of undue influence. See In re Marriage of Pogano, 154 Ill.2d at 185. Thus, it becomes incumbent upon Sidley & Austin to rebut this presumption by a showing of clear and convincing evidence. Id.

8. The Court looks to several factors in determining whether such a presumption is overcome, including (1) whether "the attorney made a full and frank disclosure of all relevant information, (2) the client's agreement was based on adequate consideration, and (3) the client had independent advice before completing the transaction." See Id.

9. In light of footnote 3 on page 11, it is doubtful that Sidley & Austin has made a full and frank disclosure of all relevant information. Among the most relevant considerations for the Foundation would be the fact that Sidley & Austin may not be entitled to any compensation for work done from the date upon which a conflict reasonably should have been determined to exist. See ISBA Advisory Opinion on Professional Conduct, Op. No. 90-26 (March 9, 1991).

 © 2017 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

10. This is especially true here where the representing lawyer is affiliated with a testifying lawyer (Mr. Lerner) and the lawyer's testimony may be adverse to the client's interest, i.e., an ultra vires act. See Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers, Section 186, Comments (f) and (i), citing Cottonwood Estates, Inc. v. Paradise Builders, Inc., 624 P.2d 296 (Ariz. 1981) (client consent does not cure adverse testimony conflict).

11. Thus, Sidley & Austin's statement in footnote 3 of page 11 raises two problems. First, it indicates that the attorney in frank disclosure of relevant information and that the client's agreement was not based on adequate consideration. Because Sidley & Austin is ignorant of the law regarding their entitlement to fees for work done before a disqualification order, Sidley is unable to give the client full and frank disclosure of all relevant information and that, based on Sidley's advice, the Foundation is unable to give adequate consideration to its options. Moreover, it is unclear from the record before us whether subsequent to the filing of this motion regarding fees, the client had independent advice before making the decision as to how to proceed with respect to this Emergency Motion in which Sidley & Austin has an undeniable interest.

12. With respect to the Affidavit of Larry Marshall and his attached letter, Mr. Marshall makes two errors. On page 2 of his letter, Mr. Marshall identifies as the critical fact that Sidley & Austin has never represented anyone in this litigation other than the Foundation. Apparently, Mr. Marshall believes that Sidley & Austin's filing an appearance on behalf of the Foundation is dispositive of the question of who they represent within the corporate family. Secondly, he indicates in a conclusory fashion that Sidley & Austin owes no duties to anyone else. As the American Bar Association has made clear many times, the question of who is the client in the corporate family is a complicated factual matter. The ABA Formal Opinion 95-390, Conflicts of Interest in the Corporate Family Context.

13. Mr. Marshall appears to believe that whether Dr. Tucker is a client is determinative of whether he might be owed possible fiduciary responsibilities. However, this is certainly not the case. In many context, a lawyer may owe duties to non-clients. See Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers, Sections 36, 27, 213. Hence, these are factual matters that are yet to be resolved. Thus, Mr. Marshall's dismissive and conclusory statements with regard to Sidley & Austin's representation and duties without a thorough investigation of the facts is premature. Similarly, his remark on the footnote on page 4 that the cases cited by Professor Breen are distinguishable because “both of these cases involve lawyers who have gone from representing one party to representing another party in the same matter” begs the question. The question indeed is, “Who does Sidley & Austin represent?” As the Restatement and the ABA recognizes, this presents a complex, factual question.

14. For these reasons, Professor Marshall's Affidavit and letter assume away the central problem in this litigation, and thus is not helpful in addressing the issue presented here.

15. Based on my review of the documents presented to me, I believe the Foundation must receive independent legal advice with respect to its position with regard to the Emergency Motion.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S MEORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF HIS MOTION TO ENJOIN THE TERRA FOUNDATION'S USE OF THE CURRENT SPECIAL LITIGATION COMMITTEE AND FOR APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER TO CONDUCT THE INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION

NOW COMES the People of the State of Illinois by the Attorney General in Response to certain claims stated by Defendant's counsel in open court on Wednesday December 27, 2000 and states:

1) A verbal statement was made by counsel for the Defendant Foundation while referring to the Attorney General's pending motion stating that "this (the Attorney General's motion) is almost a sanctionable pleading". While such is perhaps a lawyerly attempt to deflect consideration of the allegations found in the attached Neff memos, the Attorney General takes such a charge made before the court about his actions most seriously and is compelled to respond. (Transcript page 75)

2) After asserting the Attorney General's motion is almost sanctionable, counsel for the Foundation further related that Mr. Stebbins was not in a conflict and his ethics had not slipped. (Transcript page 75.)

3) Counsel for the Foundation asserted that the Attorney General should have talked to Mr. Neff and/or Mr. Stebbins. When Assistant Attorney General Perkins explained he had no right to talk to the employees and directors of defendant Foundation, the Foundation's counsel stated " Sure they can. Absolutely, Judge. Judge, that was offered to them in September, it was renewed in October. All you have to do is dial seven numbers. That offer was made to them and they never accepted it. Instead we have this on the public record which has no basis". (Transcript page 76)

4) First, there was never an offer that the Attorney General could conduct interviews of Foundation employees and directors. Sidley & Austin counsel did verbally say sometime in October to Assistant Attorney General Floyd Perkins that he could ask Sidley about anything and they would attempt to get an answer. However, at that time Sidley was telling the Attorney General's office that Sidley needed the Foundation records then still at Bell, Boyd & Lloyd, because Sidley was new to this client and did not have Foundation records. The offer from Sidley was not in writing and was a verbal remark, ask us and we will inquire for you. Also at that time the Attorney General did not have the Neff memos or know of their existence.

5) Second, this informal process now suggested is not how adversarial matters proceed. Indeed, as this court well knows an elaborate system to conduct discovery under sworn oath and court sanction exists so that the truth is compelled from witnesses. The method Sidley & Austin suggests would not place any of the safeguards of discovery upon the answers Sidley obtained from the Foundation employees and directors. Further the delivery of questions from the Attorney General to Sidley, then delivered by Sidley to its client, followed then by the client's response to Sidley, which would then relate the answer back to the Attorney General is not an acceptable method to gather facts in litigation. When serious charges such as those made by Mr. Neff exist, discovery must be employed.

6) Third, even assuming that Sidley was willing to bring in Mr. Neff and Mr. Stebbins for a sit down discussion (which was never offered until after the filing on December 22, 2000) we would not have the protections of on oath testimony or the ability to assure that all related documents were there and/or available. Further Mr. Neff is an employee of the Foundation working under the direction of certain defendants. Clearly every day experience makes clear he would be an uncomfortable witness in an informal interview session detailing conflicts he observed and memorialized in his memos. In addition, there is often a need to proceed in a certain order of questioning and at times a need to be in a position to make a witness answer a question then, rather than allow the witness to defer an answer until he/she has consulted with others. A deposition allows some control; an interview does not. While more complex a deposition is a more thorough method to resolve facts, and a necessary step in litigation.

7) Fourth, Sidley & Austin's status as counsel for the Foundation has been at issue since October. All discovery has been stayed. If Sidley had not been re-chosen by the special litigation committee or if the committee is enjoined from using Sidley, its verbal offer to allow the Attorney General to interview Foundation employees and directors would be subject to attack by new counsel for the Foundation. New counsel would have every right to point out that the Attorney General was aware of the issues raised as to Sidley's status and should not have proceeded until the Foundation's counsel's status were finally resolved. Indeed, if we had been meeting and interviewing Foundation employees and the special litigation committee had picked a new counsel, the Attorney General's actions would have been called into question.

8) Part of the basis for the Attorney General's motion are the statements made by Curator and director of Art at the Chicago museum, John Neff. Mr. Neff is a highly paid employee, its day to day supervisor of the Chicago museum , and his statements are found and made in his notes to his file.(Attached to the Motion). These statements in part constitute admissions against interest by the Terra Foundation itself , as they are found in its business records made by a chief executive (a person whose statements are admissions by the Terra). Neff's memos in part provide:

a) "the process (acquisition of art for the Terra) is unacceptable and raises serious questions of potential conflicts of interest that do not help our efforts to build a solid reputation for the Terra". ... " these issues fall into three categories : 1) the review process; 2) conservation review; 3) bidding procedures, both at auction and negotiations with dealers." (memo 5/28/99; para. 1 & 2). (Emphasis added).

b) " it is a process that is fundamentally compromised by the fact that Ted (Stebbins) not only is potentially an advisor of his own museum, the MFA, Boston, himself as a private collector, three private collectors he advises, and the Terra, but that the collectors were present during the viewing process (with Derrick and Ted) and at the Chritie's sale May 26th " (memo 5/28/99; para 5).

c) "one never knows where he is on something: are we getting his best judgement? Where does the Terra fit in with the MFA (this was potentially an issue to judge from his comments on the Benson I found at Godel: he said to Derrick (Terra's curator in Giverney) that it was a great little picture and that the MFA didn't have one: when I arrived at Godel after the Christie's sale ... " Ted was already there and looking at a number of pictures not on our list. The Johnson was brought out but I had to ask to have the Benson brought out as well". (Memo 5/28/99 ; para 6).

d) "The consulting conservator who reviews potential acquisitions in New York is Jim Wright" ... " who works with Ted at the MFA, Boston. Because the relationship with Jim is as unclear as is Ted's relationship with the collectors, CAS (Catherine Stevens) and I discussed at length how to pin this down. I sent Ted a memo on May 14 that included a direct request to clarify the relationship , fees and our requirement for timely written reports." ... " Ted brushed this off ".. "he did not respond to my follow up questions about written reports and a direct request to clarify whether Jim was also looking at pictures for 1) MFA 2) Ted personally, or 3) the collectors Ted advises. Under the circumstances I have to wonder if the Terra is in fact paying for Jim Wright to cover a number of Ted's bases." ... "As of this writing I still do not know if Jim Wright was informed of the condition for his services." (

e) " Ted is an employee of another museum and should under no circumstances be bidding for the Terra. I'm very surprised the MFA condons it. Nor should he be authorizing dealers to bid on our behalf." ... " The Directors (curators) or their agents should do the bidding." ... " The situation at the Christie's sale on Wednesday May 28th, would have been comical if it hadn't been so indicative of Ted's unwillingness to take direction from the Board. After the Fiance meeting Arthur Hartman, Judith Terra and I called Ted" ... " at the conclusion of the call Arthur and Judith both said that I should be bidding, not a dealer." ... " I conveyed that my instruction were to do the bidding. Ted was not pleased and said that , no, he was going to bid. He then took the paddle and walked away. When I caught up with him he had been joined by one of his collectors"... "As Lot 41 approached, the Ives sculpture, Ted suddenly said " Here, you bid on the Ives and handed me the paddle". ... " Ted addressed me as though I were someone completely unaware of auction rules and protocol" . (Memo 5/28/99; page 3; para 1).

f) "as Director and Curator of collections I should be directing the bidding, either personally or through an appropriate agent. It was extremely uncomfortable to have to contest this obvious issue with a Board member who seemed not to care about my instructions from the Chairman and Executive Director, it is essential that this be clarified at once." (Memo 5/28/99; page 3; para. 3)

g) "Ted's ambiguous role in the market is an ongoing issue and a cause of concern. Yesterday I was told that a staff member at the Art Institute raised a concern about his ongoing appearance of conflict of interest"... " Beyond full disclosure, he needs to advise, not bid." (memo 5/28/99; page 3; paragraph 4) (Emphasis added)

9) These statements by Neff shared with Tucker show his belief that a serious conflict of interest exists in actions taken by Stebbins. A member of the board of directors has no authority to act for the corporation outside a board or committee meeting unless authority is expressly granted by the board. No member of the board of directors had authority to employ agents such as Jim Wright to review potential acquisitions for the Terra, much less be the sole recepient of the advice, when the job of acquisition is a process delegated to art curators. As Neff recognizes Stebbins has no authority to bid or authorize dealers to bid.

As the Neff memo shows, Stebbins represents himself as a potential buyer and as a representative of other buyers. Any frank bidding discussion by Neff and Derrick Cartwright about potential acquisitions by the Terra made with Stebbins when he represents himself as a potential buyer and other potential buyers causes confidential information of the Terra plans to be inappropriately available to others. Stebbins thrusting himself into the evaluating and bidding process as related in the Neff memos is conflict of interest. As example: If Mr. A instructed Broker B to bid at auction up to $300,000 for a specific house and Broker B also represented Mr. C who wanted to bid on the same house, Broker B would have a conflict and could not represent Mr. A and Mr. C. If several houses were for sale and Mr. A asked Broker B to select the best house for re-sale and bid for it on Mr. A's behalf, and Mr. C also asked Broker B to be his broker to bid for Mr. C upon the best house for re-sale, Broker B could not represent Mr. A and Mr. C.

10) The charges by Neff show conflicts of interest by Ted Stebbins and suggest that such was detrimental to the reputation of the Terra museum. These are not allegations manufactured during litigation; they were ordinary business records maintained in due course. Why Stebbins engaged in these conflicts needs to be explored. The relationship between Stebbins and Jim Wright (the consulting conservator mentioned in Neff's May 28, 1999 memo) needs to be determined.

11) Stebbins is clearly in no position to control the investigation into these matters of his conflict. We are advised Neff is resigning his position at the Terra. Recently the Curator at Giverney, Derrick Cartwright, announced his plan to resign. He is a person involved in the movement of Foundation to Mrs. Terra's house in France. While Neff is still an employee and has access to his files, his deposition should be taken. This is not something that can be done by mere interview.

12) Counsel for the Foundation was quite direct in stating that the ethics of Mr. Stebbins had not slipped. If Sidley has already investigated this matter and has already obtained statements from Stebbins, Neff, or Jim Wright directly on this matter, we ask that those materials be made available immediately.

13) The Attorney General filed his motion within three weeks of Mr. Stebbins being placed on the special litigation committee. The need to review and verify facts, the need to review and analyze other matters filed herein, certain other legal matters assigned to the assistant attorney generals involved and several personal matters prevented the presentation of the subject motion sooner. While we would prefer to have done more discovery, circumstances prevented same. The case law involved requires that the special litigation committee be reviewed for independence. In light of the concern set forth in our motion , the Attorney General felt duty bound to show to the court the lack of independence of Mr. Stebbins.

14) The conflicts alleged arise from the business record memos of the Foundation. Mr. Neff's says " the process is unacceptable and raises serious questions of potential conflicts of interest", Bringing these admissions against interest to the court's attention was not a sanctionable act, but rather a duty.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff the Attorney General of Illinois prays that the court:

a) enjoin the Foundation's use of the current special litigation committee;

b) order a limited hearing on this matter;

c) allow limited discovery on these matters;

d) appoint a receiver to conduct the independent investigation and litigation on behalf of the Foundation;

e) enter such further relief that the court deems necessary and equitable under the circumstances.

Respectfully submitted,

Case No. 00 CH 13859

PROCEEDINGS DECEMBER 27, 2000

Mr. -- what's his name -- Mr. Stebbins takes the paddle from him. We get these memos. This almost, your Honor, and I have the greatest respect for Mr. Perkins in the attorney general's office -- this is almost a sanctionable pleading, to suggest based on this memorandum for Mr. Neff without any understanding of the way the process works that Mr. Stebbins is in a conflict of interest or somehow his ethics have slipped. They have not. They absolutely have not.

THE COURT: And that's when you have an opportunity to get a response or an affidavit you would put in a response.

MR. CONLON: Your Honor, we want to do that. Instead of just reading it in the office on the Friday before Christmas and reading about it in the newspapers, when Mr. Stebbins is besmirched, in fairness somebody should have been talked to, at a minimum Mr. Neff. Mr. Stebbins was available, they were.

THE COURT: Well, I thought maybe Mr. Neff wasn't around anymore; that there was no way anybody could talk to him --

MR. PERKINS: Judge, we cannot speak -- in all fairness, Judge, and that's one of the things I wanted to speak to, we have no right to talk to Mr. Stebbins or Mr. Neff. We can't talk to their client.

MR. CONLON: Sure, they can. Absolutely, Judge. Judge, that was offered to them in September, it was renewed in October. All you have to do is dial seven numbers. That offer was made to them and they never accepted it. Instead we have this on the public record which has no basis.

THE COURT: Okay. Mr. Perkins, I know we're not arguing this. I just wanted to find out the answers to those few questions, when you got the memos, why you didn't sue Mr. Stebbins, and why you didn't tell me about Mr. Stebbins before. Okay. Let me just hear the final thing from Mr. Quinlan.

MR. MICHAELI: Your Honor, can I -- I'm the defendant --

THE COURT: Sir, if you'd like to just step up and just identi- --

MR. MICHAELI: Only two words.

THE COURT: I'm sorry, sir. You need to

THE COURT: Counsel, approach the bench, please. Have you all had an opportunity to read all of the materials that have been drafted and dropped off this morning?

MR. KENNEDY: Good morning, your Honor.

THE COURT: By that, I mean we have the letter that came in at 8:22 this morning from Shefsky & Froelich, a letter that came in at 9:02 this morning from Sidley & Austin, a letter that came in at 10:30 this morning from the Attorney General, a letter that came in at 11:03 from the Quinlan firm, and the Attorney General's emergency motion to compel certain discovery that came in at 10:40, and it has an attachment to it.

Has everybody seen all that?

MR. CARLSON: I have not seen the Attorney General's letter.

Stephen Carlson, I'm sorry, for —

THE COURT: Why don't we do this. I thought the court reporter had everyone's name. Let's start at the far right and go across, so she can make a chart.

MR. CARROLL: James Carroll, on behalf of the plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz.

going, when, and how fast.

I need to ask Mr. Carlson, have you had a chance to discuss with Mr. Stebbins whether he is going to be retaining separate counsel to provide you all with the affidavit that we were talking about on Friday?

MR. CARLSON: Mr. Stebbins does have or Dr. Stebbins does have separate counsel, who will assist him in responding to the Attorney General's motion, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. Is Sidley & Austin, on behalf of the Special Litigation Committee, as it now exists, prepared to proceed and defend the Attorney General's motion for an appointment of a receiver?

MR. CARLSON: We have started to prepare our response, your Honor. As we said on December 27th, we would have liked some period of time, ten to 14 days. We intend to submit certain affidavits to the Court in response to that motion. And so we are prepared to move ahead.

But again, I would ask for ten to 14 days to get the evidentiary submissions to the Court.

MR. KENNEDY: Good morning, your Honor. John Kennedy, on behalf of the plaintiffs.

MR. PERKINS: Floyd Perkins on behalf of the Attorney General.

MR. CARLSON: Steve Carlson for The Terra Foundation for the Arts.

MR. CROWE: Brian Crowe, on behalf of Alan Simpson and Judith Terra and Professor Tucker.

MR. WILSON: James Wilson on behalf of the same.

THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, what is it that you have not seen?

MR. CARLSON: I believe the Court indicated there was a letter from the Attorney General.

THE COURT: It is a one-line thing.

MR. PERKINS: We Fax'd it over to counsel. But I just handed him a copy. It is pretty short compared to the others.

THE COURT: On the subject matter of the letters, since we are talking about an individual also, and we did not want to have that necessarily aired publicly at this point, I'm going to put that aside for just a moment, because what is, seems to be of a little bit more urgency is where we are

THE COURT: And what is the position that you are taking on the Attorney General's request for the immediate discovery, particularly the deposition of Mr. Neff before he leaves the employ of the Foundation, which is sometime this month?

MR. CARLSON: It may be true; I don't have personal knowledge for sure, your Honor, when he ceases to be an employee of the Foundation.

Frankly, we would have preferred that the Attorney General asked us some questions, asked to talk to Mr. Neff, asked to talk to other relevant people ahead of time. Your Honor has stayed discovery since about the middle of October.

If for purposes of this motion the Court deems it appropriate for discovery to go ahead as relates to that motion, that would be all right, your Honor, as far as the Foundation is concerned.

We don't believe that the motion as it is styled even raises any significant evidentiary questions. But if the Attorney General wants to take discovery on that motion, that's all right with us.

THE COURT: We have two different motions for receiver pending. And we need to know who is defending those motions. One of the motions questions the appropriateness of the very group that is seeking to defend the motion and, the main motion in the case.

As best as I am able to tell from my discussions in court, and when we did a discussion with the court reporter, but out of the courtroom, the other day, it appears that the Attorney General is seeking an evidentiary hearing on a receiver issue, for the sole purpose of getting a receiver to defend — conduct an investigation and defend the main case.

Is that correct?

MR. PERKINS: That's correct, Judge.

THE COURT: So in other words, you want a receiver appointed to defend the plaintiffs' motion for receiver.

MR. PERKINS: I want a receiver appointed, Judge, to conduct the independent investigation, and determine from that what course of action the Foundation should take.

It is our belief, since we are somewhat joined at the hip with the plaintiff, that a lot of what they have to say is true.

THE COURT: And the focus of your motion at this point is the appropriateness or the inappropriateness of the Special Litigation Committee.

MR. PERKINS: That's correct, Judge.

THE COURT: And the focus is Mr. Stebbins, and the unavailability of Ambassador Andreani, is that correct?

MR. PERKINS: As were laid out in their papers, Judge; we don't believe, if we are using — if we were to go back and read all the papers and all the statements that were made, everybody kept throwing the word "independent" out. And Mr. Stebbins, no matter what he wants to say, cannot be independent about allegations about him.

And in addition, his affidavit isn't going to be sufficient for us.

THE COURT: No matter what it says, it is not going to be sufficient. You want an evidentiary hearing.

MR. PERKINS: We need to at least gather the evidence from Mr. Neff and others as to what did occur and how it occurred, so that we can fully prepare to rebut whatever is presented by the appointee.

THE COURT: And that evidentiary hearing would only be related to the Mr. Stebbins issue, or Dr. Stebbins issue, and the Ambassador Andreani issue, if there is an issue with regard to him, is that correct?

I'm trying to limit or figure out what the limitations of the discovery that you are seeking is, right? What the limitations are.

MR. CARLSON: May I make another comment?

THE COURT: One second.

I'm trying to find out from Mr. Perkins, you asked in this motion for a whole bunch of discovery. And not all of them relate to Mr. Neff and Mr. Stebbins, or Dr. Stebbins.

So I'm trying to figure out how we can move this case as quickly as we can move this case, and get this issue either behind us or resolved.

MR. PERKINS: Judge, I was looking at that issue myself.

There is a need for us to take Mr. Tucker's deposition on these issues, just to find out how Mr. Neff and Mr. Stebbins resolved some of these things, and what it was that was told to Tucker.

I understand what your Honor is saying, the limited scope of what we are talking about. But to discover the facts appropriate to that limited scope set of issues might require more than just Mr. Neff and more than just Mr. Stebbins.

THE COURT: Okay. You don't necessarily need employment records, termination records, all of those other things at this point, in order to decide — in order to place in front of the Court your motion for receiver. Your focus is Dr. Stebbins and Ambassador Andreani.

So you would be, you would need a deposition of Dr. Stebbins, a deposition of Dr. Tucker, a deposition of Mr. Wright? Is he involved in that whole issue, Jim Wright?

MR. PERKINS: He was —

THE COURT: He is mentioned in the memo.

MR. PERKINS: He is mentioned in the memos, Judge. I would certainly want to see what he had to say.

THE COURT: And a deposition of John Neff. So I'm counting — and I'm not quite sure. Who is Eric Cartwright?

MR. KENNEDY: He is the director of the museum in Giverny. He is scheduled to leave Giverny at year's end.
THE COURT: Last year?
MR. KENNEDY: This year, I believe. I believe he is departing —
MR. WILSON: Last year.
MR. CARLSON: He is no longer at Giverny.
MR. PERKINS: He was the other curator of the second Terra museum, who has come and gone now.
THE COURT: So you don't need him for the Dr. Stebbins issue, do you?
MR. PERKINS: Judge, I wouldn't want to rule this out, only for this reason: If you look in the memos, he is mentioned. He was curator of the Giverny museum. As a consequence, he is familiar with what Mr. Neff was talking about, because he was present during some of those events.
THE COURT: So there are four, possibly five depositions that you need, plus any and all records that relate, I assume, to authorization of Dr. Stebbins to bid on behalf of the museum; any issues around those questions, is that correct?
MR. PERKINS: Right, Judge, anything to do we'd answer those questions informally, just if he would ask us those questions.

MR. CARROLL: It is all part of the same thing.
THE COURT: Let me just ask, so essentially, a good portion of No. 9 is what you need, plus four to five depositions, is that correct?
MR. PERKINS: That's correct, Judge.
THE COURT: Now, Mr. Carlson, I know that you and Mr. Conlon have stepped up in court and said, if they'd just ask us, we would answer. Why isn't anyone talking to each other?
MR. CARLSON: I don't know, your Honor. Mr. Perkins has never called me with a single question.
The first day I was in court, September 25, I said most of the Board of the Foundation is in France for the annual meeting, but if the Attorney General wants to ask me any questions this week, as soon as they get back, I will get them answers. Mr. Perkins never called.
I followed up in writing with a letter, again inviting the Attorney General, that if they had any legitimate questions, to put those questions to me, and offered to get answers.

with acquisitions, commissions paid, that kind of thing.
THE COURT: And is there a time period? Is there — which one of these numbers 1 through 12 are there discovery requests that relate to that? Are we talking about 9-A? Are we talking about 9-C? 9-D?
MR. PERKINS: A, your Honor, is the art acquisitions. B, the bank records, that $4 million was used to do an acquisition, and there are some reasons we would like to look at those records.
THE COURT: Are you saying you want all of 9?
MR. PERKINS: All of 9 to the — yes, all of 9. But in honesty, your Honor, some of those things do get into, in G, we get into employment termination.
THE COURT: Yes, a lot of that stuff doesn't have anything to do.
MR. CARLSON: The memo has to do solely with conduct at one particular auction in May of 1999.
If Mr. Perkins had had other questions about the recent acquisition of the Copley by the Terra Foundation or the sale of the art that they sold to get the money to buy the Copley, again,

I have never received any letter from Mr. Perkins asking any questions whatsoever. The first time Mr. Perkins decided to try to make an issue out of Mr. Neff and Mr. Neff's memos was on September — or December 22nd, almost Christmas Eve, when he filed that motion. And I would have been happy to answer questions about Mr. Neff's memo if he had only asked.
MR. PERKINS: All I can say, Judge, it is a good thing perhaps for Mr. Neff that I didn't ask in October, because he got fired.
MR. CARLSON: That is absolutely untrue, absolutely untrue. Mr. Neff was not fired. He is not going to be fired. The memo that he wrote in May of 1999 has nothing to do with his employment situation at the Foundation; never has and never would.
THE COURT: I've read the memo that was written last week on the 27th, or the night of the 27th. I know what it says. It is now going to be part of the court record, unfortunately, in this case. So I don't know that we need to talk about that any more.
What I'm trying to figure out is, there

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Plaintiffs seek to enjoin the Defendants from engaging in the conduct alleged in this paragraph, but denies that such conduct would violate the Terra Foundation's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws, the Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act, the laws of the State of Illinois, and any fiduciary duty of the directors of the Terra Foundation. Michaeli denies even potential ability to intervene with such actions.

3. Plaintiff Buntrock is a resident of DuPage County, Illinois, a prominent businessperson, and a benefactor of the arts. Since 1998, Buntrock has served as a director and officer of Terra Foundation. He presently serves as Terra Foundation's treasurer, is chairman of its finance and investment committee, and is a member of its Executive Committee.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in the first sentence of this paragraph; admits that since 1998 Buntrock has served as a director of the Terra Foundation; admits that Buntrock is a member of the Terra Foundation's Executive Committee; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph especially the favorite description of Mr. Dean Buntrock as "prominent businessperson". In numerous publications that Michaeli obtained about Buntrock and the company he founded and controlled for 37 years of his life – "Waste Management" – it shows otherwise.

4. Plaintiff Gidwitz is a resident of Chicago, Cook County, Illinois, a former CEO of Helene Curtis Corporation, and a benefactor of the arts. Since 1982, Gidwitz has served as a director and officer of Terra Foundation. He presently serves as chairman of Terra Foundation's strategic planning committee and is a member of its Executive Committee.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph; denies that since 1982 Gidwitz has served as a director and officer of Terra Foundation.

5. Defendant Paul Hayes Tucker ("Mr. Tucker") is a resident of Massachusetts. Mr. Tucker is a director, chairman and president of Terra Foundation and is a member of its Executive Committee.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in this paragraph.

6. Defendant Judith Terra is a resident of Washington, D.C. Judith Terra is a director and vice chairman of Terra Foundation, and is a member of its Executive Committee.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in this paragraph and adds to it that Judith Terra also serves as vice president of Terra Foundation.

7. Defendant Senator Alan K. Simpson is a resident of Wyoming and a former United States senator from that state. Sen. Simpson is a director of Terra Foundation and a member of its finance and investment committee.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in this paragraph.

8. Defendant Naftali Michaeli ("Mr. Michaeli") is an Israeli citizen and a resident of Washington, D.C. Mr. Michaeli is a close personal friend of Judith Terra, and has no official position with Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies that he is a resident of Washington DC, but admits all other allegations contained in this paragraph.

9. Defendant Terra Foundation is an Illinois not-for-profit charitable corporation established in 1978 by Daniel J. Terra (deceased) ("Dan Terra") to preserve and exhibit collections of American Art, to expand the artistic horizons of the Illinois art public through educational programs, and to operate museums in Chicago and France.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Terra Foundation is an Illinois Not For Profit corporation established in 1978 by Daniel J. Terra (deceased) ("Dan Terra"); admits all allegations contained in this paragraph that accurately restate the Terra Foundation's purposes as set out in its Articles of Incorporation and its Bylaws, but denies all allegations inconsistent therewith.

10. Because of Dan Terra's extraordinarily generous gifts to Terra Foundation in his lifetime, and his bequest to Terra Foundation of most of his estate, Terra Foundation's assets now total approximately $450 million, including investments, real estate, and a priceless collection of American art.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in this paragraph.

11. Terra Foundation owns and operates the Terra Museum of American Art (the "Terra Museum") located at 664 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in this paragraph, and, answering further, states that Terra Foundation also operates the Musée dart American, located in Giverny, France, and cooperated with the University of the Arts in Philadelphia.

12. Terra Foundation currently has eleven directors, the maximum number allowed under the by-laws of Terra Foundation. The Board includes Margaret Daley, a well-known benefactor of education and the arts and the wife of Mayor Richard M. Daley, and Arthur A. Hartman, the former United States Ambassador to France. The Board also includes Helene Ahrweiler, Jacques Andreani, Stephanie Marshall and Theodore Stebbins. Catherine A. Stevens, the wife of United States Senator Ted Stevens, was the Executive Director of Terra Foundation from August of 1996 through April 2000 until terminated by Tucker.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Terra Foundation's Board of Directors currently numbers 11 directors, the maximum number allowed under its Bylaws, and which Board includes Margaret Daley, Arthur A. Hartman, Helene Ahrweiler, Jacques Andreani, Stephanie Marshall, and Theodore Stebbins; and lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations contained in this paragraph. Michaeli finds the description of the persons that are serving on the board intentionally arrogant and ridiculously bias. With all due respect to the description: "the wife of" – Michaeli does not think it shows something about the women it refers to – they deserve more respect from the Plaintiffs. But, isn't this entire claim about arrogance and being malicious?

13. Dan Terra established Terra Foundation in December 1978 under the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act. It was Dan Terra's intent and purpose to provide a Museum in the Chicago area that would exhibit collections of American art and educate the public generally on issues of American art. As set forth in the original Articles of Incorporation, the purpose of Terra Foundation was:
to form, preserve, and exhibit collections of paintings, sculpture, graphic arts, architecture, and design representing American art; expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public through such activities which will include lectures, symposia, talks, demonstrations, films, and related educational programs designed to further these purposes; establish, conduct, operate, and maintain a school of instruction and any and all artistic and technical educational fine arts courses and other subjects relating thereto; build, erect, maintain, equip, manage, lease, and' operate a museum and all component parts deemed advisable or necessary to provide space for these activities and exhibitions; engage in any and all other activities and exhibitions,
(See Articles of Incorporation, attached hereto as Exhibit 1).

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Dan Terra established Terra Foundation in December 1978 under the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act; admits all allegations contained in this paragraph that accurately restate the provisions of the Terra Foundation's Articles of Incorporation, and denies all allegations inconsistent therewith; and denies all remaining allegations.

14. To ensure that the primary mission and purpose of Terra Foundation was carried out, the Terra Museum was opened in 1982 in Evanston, Illinois, In 1987, the Museum relocated to 664 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and remains at that location until today.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Terra Foundation opened the Terra Museum in 1982 in Evanston, Illinois; admits that in 1987 the Museum relocated to 664 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, where it remains today; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

15. Throughout the 1980s and early to mid-1990s, Dan Terra contributed cash, stock and art for the continued growth and viability of the Terra Foundation and the Terra Museum in Chicago. To ensure that his contributions would further the goals and mission of Terra Foundation for the benefit of the public, Dan Terra created two restricted endowments, the "B2 Endowment" restricted to the acquisition of art for Terra Foundation, and the D4 Endowment restricted to education endeavors relating to American art.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies that throughout the 1980s and early to mid-1990s Dan Terra contributed cash, stock and art solely for the continued growth and viability of the Terra Foundation and the Terra Museum in Chicago; is without sufficient knowledge to admit or denies that Dan Terra created two restrictive endowments, the B2 Endowment, restricted to the acquisition of art for the Terra Foundation, and the D4 Endowment, restricted to education endeavors relating to American Art; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

16. In the early 1990s, Terra Foundation constructed and developed the Musée dart American Giverny ("Giverny Museum"), an art museum in Giverny, France dedicated to the exhibition of American art and American art education.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegation "In the early 1990s"; Michaeli admits all other allegations contained in this paragraph.

17. Primarily because of Dan Terra's gifts and bequests, the value of Terra Foundation has grown substantially since its creation. Currently, Terra Foundation holds net assets worth approximately $450 million. The value of the art alone located at the Terra Museum in Chicago exceeds $100 million, with the overall value of Terra's Foundation's art collection exceeding $173 million.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in this paragraph as for the current situation. Michaeli will further adds that Dan Terra's gift to the Foundation worth about $900 million at the time of his death – half of this gift was lost without proper investigation either by the Foundation or by the State Attorney office. The demand of some members of the board to investigate this loss was vigorously refused by the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs attempt to help the cover up of that loss is the true reason for this claim and the reason for the State Attorney intervention in favor of the Plaintiffs. Michaeli do not suggest that the Plaintiffs are personally responsible for that loss.

18. Pursuant to its by-laws, the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation is required to hold an annual meeting during the month of September of each year for the purpose of electing directors and officers and for the transacting of other business. If the election of the directors and officers is not held at such meeting, the Board of Directors may cause the election to be held at a meeting of the Board of Directors as soon thereafter as may be convenient. The Board of Directors may only elect officers and directors by a majority vote.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits all allegations contained in this paragraph; Michaeli denies any conduct that is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws, and the Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act,

19. In periods of time between the quarterly Board of Director Meetings, the by-laws provide that as Terra Foundation's Executive Committee has the authority to take action on behalf of Terra Foundation, except on specific issues delegated to the Board of Directors pursuant to the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act. Since October, 1999, Terra Foundation's Executive Committee has consisted of Plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz, Defendants Edith Terra and Mr. Tucker, and director Stephanie Marshall.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits the allegations contained in the first sentence of this paragraph. Michaeli would like to point out an innocent mistake in the writing of the name of defendant Judith Terra – "Judith" should replace "Edith". Michaeli denies any conduct that is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and the Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act - or advising others to do so.

20. Dan Terra was a successful entrepreneur and businessman who resided predominately in the Chicago area. A large portion of his wealth enured through investments in companies located in and around Chicago. As result, Dan Terra made the decision to start the Terra Foundation with the intent to the benefit of the citizens of Illinois and the Chicago area. Terra Foundation became Terra's principal charitable endeavor.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies that Dan Terra's intent in founding the Terra Foundation was solely to benefit the citizens of Illinois and the Chicago area, affirmatively stating that under its Bylaws, the Terra Foundation is intended to, and does, benefit "a growing art public... in the United States and abroad;" Michaeli adds that Dan Terra established his business mostly outside of Illinois. The companies he founded and gained his fortune from - where International ("Lawter International" - a company registered in Delaware, had plants and offices in 26 countries around the world, the company maintained its international headquarters in Belgium) and nationwide ("Mercury Finance" - a company registered in Delaware, operated 139 offices in every state in the US). Dan Terra was born (1911) and raised in Philadelphia. Short time after Dan Terra established the "Foundation for the Daniel J. Terra Museum" (12/1978). Dan Terra moved to Washington DC (1982). While opening the Museum in Chicago (1986) he started to develop his project in France (one day after the grand opening).

21. Dan Terra described his decision to establish Terra Foundation in Illinois and to open Terra Museum in the Chicago area for the people of Illinois as follows:
[W]hat's exciting is that it's a deep commitment. There's not another museum of American art within 400 miles of Chicago, and we have a real educational job to do.
(See Grace Glueck, American-Art Museum Opening in Chicago, N.Y. Times, April 19, 1987 at B14, attached hereto as Exhibit 2). On many occasions, Dan Terra articulated his intent to benefit the people of Illinois through the creation of Terra Foundation in Illinois and the opening of Terra Museum as "major institution in Chicago." (See, e.g., Dodie Kazanjian, Daniel J. Terra, America's First Ambassador-at-large for Cultural Affairs Pursues the Best in American Painting for His New Museum in Chicago, House & Garden, May 1987, at 52, attached hereto as Exhibit 3).

ANSWER: Michaeli denies that Dan Terra's sole purpose in founding the Terra Foundation was to benefit the citizens of Illinois and the Chicago area, affirmatively staling that under its Bylaws and the Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act, the Terra Foundation is intended to, and does, benefit "a growing art public... in the United States and abroad;" admits the quoted material to the extent that this paragraph accurately restates material contained in the cited articles; and denies all allegations inconsistent therewith.

22. Shortly after the creation of Terra Foundation, Dan Terra's first wife, Adeline died. In 1986, Dan Terra married Judith Terra. Judith Terra acknowledged in a prenuptial agreement that she fully understood that the bulk of Dan Terra's estate would go to the Terra Foundation, and she unequivocally promised that after his death she would not seek any assets of his Estate other than those given to her under the prenuptial agreement. Under the prenuptial agreement, Judith Terra agreed she would receive only a fixed amount of money and assets upon Dan Terra's death. Judith Terra became a member of the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that in 1986 Dan Terra and Judith Terra married; admits that Judith Terra became a member of the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation; Michaeli denies all other allegations contained in this paragraph. Michaeli does not understand the purpose of these allegations and denies the relevance of these allegations to this case.

23. On information and belief, after Judith Terra became a member of the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation, she suggested to Dan Terra that the Terra Museum be closed and Terra Foundation be moved out of Chicago, This was never done during Dan Terra's lifetime.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that during Dan Terra's lifetime the Terra Museum was not closed nor was the Terra Foundation moved out of Chicago; and denies the remaining allegations contained in this paragraph. Michaeli adds that prior to his death, Dan Terra planed to move the Foundation headquarters and the Museum from Chicago to Washington DC. He purchased a building in Jefferson Street and furnishers it for the offices of the headquarters of the Foundation. He also bought land in Culver Street for the Museum new location. He engaged architects to this project and the drawings where already made before he died - unfortunately he died before he was able to fulfill his wishes.

24. On June 28, 1996, Dan Terra died after suffering a stroke. As the sole residuary beneficiary under his will, Terra Foundation was to receive $125 million.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegations contained in this paragraph.

25. As the first step in a plan to seize control of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra immediately attempted to transfer Dan Terra's probate proceedings from the Circuit Court of Cook County to Washington, D.C. After a five-day trial, the Chief Judge of the Probate Division denied the motion to transfer, finding that the motion was without merit in law or fact.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegation that the attempt to change the venue of the hearing of the Estate matter, meant to close the Museum in Chicago. Dan Terra lived in Washington DC 13 years of the last years of his life and that was the only reason for that attempt. Michaeli denies that there was a trial before the "Chief Judge of the Probate Division," affirmatively stating that there is no "chief judge" of the Circuit Court of Cook County, Probate Division, there being only one chief judge, a constitutional officer, of each of the circuit courts of the State of Illinois.

26. Judith Terra next embarked on a scheme to seize tens of millions of dollars that Dan Terra intended for Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the existence of any "scheme" as alleged in this paragraph, Michaeli knows from documents and other people that Dan Terra ordered his lawyer at the time (Mr. James Collins), to establish a trust fund for Judith Terra's benefit and for the benefit of his only grandson. Michaeli does not understand the purpose of these allegations and denies the relevance of these allegations to this case.

27. Under the prenuptial agreement between Dan Terra and Judith Terra, Judith Terra was to receive $4.5 million in cash plus approximately $2.6 million in other assets, for a total of $7.1 million.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the numbers stated as they appear in the allegations in this paragraph; Michaeli does not understand the purpose of these allegations and denies the relevance of these allegations to this case.

28. Contrary to her promise in the prenuptial agreement, after Dan's death, Judith Terra immediately filed an action challenging the prenuptial agreement and contesting Dan Terra's will. Judith Terra sought for herself $43 million of the $125 million bequest to Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegation that the action challenged the prenuptial agreement and "Contrary to her promise". Michaeli denies each and every one of the allegations contained in this paragraph; Michaeli does not understand the purpose of these allegations and denies the relevance of these allegations to this case.

29. Judith Terra's attempt to seize $43 million of Dan -Terra's bequest to Terra Foundation put her in irreconcilable conflict with the interest of Terra Foundation and, therefore, with the people of the State of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the charitable trust created by Dan Terra. As a result, Judith Terra was forced to take a leave of absence as a director of Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that there came a time when Judith Terra took a leave of absence as a director of the Terra Foundation, from her own free will – that was after the agreement between her and the Estate was agreed but not yet performed. The leave of absence was taken because she could not perform any positive duty while being hostage in the hands of the Foundation lawyer. That lawyer controlled the Foundation and almost destroyed it completely. Michaeli denies all remaining allegations. Michaeli does not understand the purpose of these allegations and denies the relevance of these allegations to this case.

30. The Terra Foundation hired Tyrone Fahner, former Attorney General of Illinois, and Howard McCue III of Mayer, Brown & Platt as special counsel with respect to Judith Terra's attempt to seize the $43 million bequest. Both Terra Foundation's special counsel and the counsel for Dan Terra's estate found that Judith Terra's claims lacked substantial merit. However, to avoid protracted litigation, the estate and Terra Foundation entered into a settlement with Judith Terra whereby she received approximately $1 million more than she was entitled to under the prenuptial agreement. This allowed Terra Foundation to receive virtually all of Dan Terra's $ 125 million bequest as intended under Dan Terra's will.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that the Terra Foundation engaged Tyron Fahner and Howard McCue III of Mayer, Brown & Platt with regard to the Estate of Dan Terra including the legal claims raised by Judith Terra. Michaeli admits that Terra Foundation and Judith Terra entered into an agreement settling Judith Terra's claims. Michaeli denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph. The lawyers mentioned in this paragraph mislead Michaeli on a number of issues. They failed to investigate the loss of about $400 million by the Estate and the Foundation after the death of Dan Terra. Michaeli adds that though "this allowed... $ 125 million" the Foundation never got this money. Michaeli does not understand the purpose of these allegations and denies the relevance of these allegations to this case.

31. Following the settlement of her claims against the Dan Terra's Estate, Judith Terra sought reinstatement to her position as director of Terra Foundation. Thereafter, changes were made within Terra Foundation and the Museum that were contrary to the best interests of Terra Foundation and therefore contrary to the public interest that was intended to benefit from Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that after Judith Terra and the Terra Foundation entered into an agreement settling her claims, Judith Terra once again attended the board meetings of the Terra Foundation; and admits that the major change that she supported in order to strengthen the status of the Foundation in Chicago proved to be disastrous – entering the Plaintiffs to the board. Michaeli denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

32. Beginning in mid-1998, Judith Terra launched a scheme to gain control of Terra Foundation to carry out her own agenda of closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. Judith Terra owns a home in Washington, D.C. and desires to move the Foundation there to obtain a prominent place in the social circles of Washington, D.C. Judith Terra believes that if she is able to move a foundation as large as Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C., she would be able to establish herself in Washington, D.C. as a large benefactor of the arts, thereby placing herself in the elite social circles of Washington, D.C.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the existence of any "scheme" as alleged in this paragraph; Admits that Judith Terra owns a home in Washington, D.C.; on 1998 Judith Terra supported three people that other board members suggested for presidency of the Foundation including one from Chicago. Michaeli likes to add that (knowing from first hand) Mrs. Terra does not need any boost to her social life – she refuses more invitations then she accepts. This allegation is malicious and false. Mrs. Terra did more to the Chicago Museum and initiated and sponsored more artistic events in Chicago, during the last two years, then she did in her hometown. Mrs. Terra did her utmost to improve the situation in the Chicago Museum even after this claim was filed. Michaeli denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

33. To accomplish her scheme of seizing control of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra began stacking Terra Foundation's Board with persons loyal to her alone. For example, Judith Terra recommended and sought the election other friend Sen. Simpson to the Board. Sen. Simpson became a director in mid-1999. At his first Board of Directors meeting in October 1999, Sen. Simpson announced to the Board that his purpose for being on Terra Foundation's Board of Directors was "to protect Mrs. Terra's interests."

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the existence of any "scheme" as alleged in this paragraph; Admits that Judith Terra supported Senator Allan K. Simpson for the position of director of the Terra Foundation Board; admits that Senator Simpson became a member of the Board in mid-1999; and regrets that the board contains along with some of the best persons in this country and the great City of Chicago two of the worst examples of powerful businessmen persons coming from Chicago. Michaeli admits from hearsay that Senator Simpson is quoted in the minutes as stating that his purpose for being on Terra Foundation's Board was to "protect Mrs., Terra's interests;" and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

34. Prior to October 1999, Judith Terra orchestrated a plan to replace Arthur Hartman as Terra Foundation's president and chairman with her loyalist, Mr. Tucker. Although Terra Foundation had been searching for a new president for more than two years from outside the Board of Directors, Judith Terra and her new allies on the Board replaced Arthur Hartman as president and chairman with Mr. Tucker. As was later discovered, the decision to place Mr. Tucker in the position of president and chairman was made to further Judith Terra's attempt to gain control of Terra Foundation and to further her own agenda contrary to the mission and intent of Dan Terra in creating Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Tucker was elected to the position of President and Chairman of the Terra Foundation Board of Directors in October 1999; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

35. Mr. Tucker and Judith Terra further entrenched their power through the hiring of Donald Ratner and the unauthorized expansion of his authority within Terra Foundation. Mr. Ratner was originally retained as a consultant to the Foundation on an interim basis. During the January 25, 2000 meeting of the Board of Directors a motion was made to give Mr. Ratner the title of vice president of finance and administration. The Board members present at the meeting voted in favor of the motion. However, because not all Board members were present, the motion was made subject to the ratification by each of the absent Board members. In a subsequent poll of Board members, the motion failed to receive unanimous approval as required by the vote at the January 25, 2000 meeting. Nonetheless, pursuant to Mr. Tucker's dictate, Mr. Ratner has continued to serve as a purported officer of Terra Foundation, and has taken direction from Board members loyal to Judith Terra.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that the Terra Foundation hired Donald Ratner as a consultant to the Terra Foundation; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph. Michaeli also remembers Buntrock saying to him in the Museum premises in Chicago during an opening of a new exhibition, that he was the one who brought Mr. Ratner to the Foundation and as treasurer advised the board to establish Mr. Ratner's post as well as bringing him to the job.

36. Judith Terra also furthered her scheme to gain control of Terra Foundation by causing the removal of the attorneys that had counseled and represented Terra Foundation since its inception, hi 1982, Dan Terra asked James Collins, an attorney at the law firm of Bell, Boyd & Lloyd, to act as both general counsel and an officer of Terra Foundation. Collins served in the capacity of general counsel and secretary of Terra Foundation from 1978 until his removal in October 1999. He also served as treasurer from August 1996 through October 1999. During this time, Collins had represented the interests of Terra Foundation through many difficult issues, including Judith Terra's attempt to confiscate $43 million of Dan Terra's bequest to Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the existence of any "scheme" as alleged in this paragraph; Lack of sufficient knowledge to form a belief as to the truth of the allegation that from 1978 to October 1999 James Collins of the law firm of Bell, Boyd & Lloyd acted as general counsel and, in one capacity or another, acted as an officer of the Terra Foundation between 1978 and October 1999; Adds that it seems impossible that in 1982 Dan Terra asked... to act fron 1978...; Michaeli admits that from 1996 until his removal Collins carried an unbelievable combination of duties, namely:

- General counsel to the Foundation.
- Treasurer of the Foundation.
- Secretary of the Foundation.
- Lawyer of the Estate of Dan Terra.
- Special counsel the board of Lawter Int.
- Attended Mercury Finance board meeting as representative of Dan Terra Estate with director authority and acting special counsel to the board.
- Lawyer of Dan Terra and Judith Terra for 10 years – buying property on her name and advising her on numerous issues and yet counselor for the Estate and the Foundation against her.
- Initiating this lawsuit against Judith Terra and cooperating with the Plaintiffs to harm and create enormous damage to her and the Foundation.

- Using privileged information he obtained as a lawyer to her and her husband and the Foundation and reviling it to the Plaintiffs and their Attorneys. While doing it he lied constantly about facts and events.

Carrying these duties caused Mr. Collins a constant situation of conflict of interests but more important, an unheard-of loss of money to the Estate and the Foundation – Just on the face of it, here are some facts:

a) The Estate reported to the Tax Return Office (signed by Mr. James Terra, the executor on 9/24/97) that the total gross value of the Estate, at the day of the death of Dan Terra is $476,611,796.72;

b) The Estate managed to liquidate all its assets for $223 million. (Executor final report 4/20/2000);

c) Out of that amount the Estate managed to transfer $40 million to the Foundation (6/29/99) and will transfer another $5.5 million. If the amount that paid to Judith Terra (see paragraph 27 above) $7.1 million is true - it means that the whole amount that was paid by the Estate to the two only beneficiaries is $52.6 million.

d) $424 million of the original Estate value was lost or paid as fees, expenses and debts.

e) The executor of the Estate, reported in his final report that $150 million paid as debts and $22 million spent as fees and other expenses – this means that the total amount that the Estate of Dan lost was $254 million;

f) Mr. Collins and Mr. Fahner reported that the Foundation lost $82 million during the first seven months after the death of Dan Terra.

g) Under the 7 hats that Mr. Collins had on his head, the Foundation by its own and through the Estate lost about half of its value – at least $336 million.

h) The number of $125 million stated above in paragraphs 24 and 28 is an invention that came out from wild imagination or pure lie.

Michaeli denies any connection to any of the board actions but would wonder if the board would not put an end to this individual activity and that the loss of so much money would not be investigated.

16di-000389

Michaeli admits that Collins represented the Terra Foundation with regard to Judith Terra's claims relating to Dan Terra's Estate; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

37. Defendants next forced the resignation of Terra ' Foundation's special counsel, Ty Fahner and Howard McCue III of Mayer, Brown & Platt. Terra Foundation hired Mayer, Brown & Platt as special counsel when Judith Terra sued Dan Terra's estate for the $43 million residual bequest to Terra Foundation. Mayer, Brown & Platt also represented Terra Foundation in connection with its interests in the now defunct Mercury Finance Company.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Terra Foundation hired Mayer, Brown & Platt as special counsel to the Foundation with regard to Judith Terra's claims relating to Dan Terra's Estate; admits that Mayer, Brown & Platt also represented Terra Foundation in connection with its interests in the now-defunct Mercury Finance Company; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

38. Specifically, on or about August 11, 2000, Mr. Ratner, acting in his ultra vires capacity at the direction of Defendants, told Mayor, Brown &. Platt that Terra Foundation would not pay its fees for any time incurred in dealing with or responding to any issues not specifically requested by either Mr. Tucker or Mr. Ratner. Mayer, Brown & Platt rejected this arrangement recognizing that it would be contrary to its duties and obligations as special counsel to Terra Foundation and its directors. In resigning its position as special counsel to Terra Foundation, Mayer, Brown & Platt stated in a letter to Mr. Tucker:
In our original engagement letter of December 11, 1996, sent by Ms. Ahrweiler and ourselves, the Foundation requested that we act as special counsel to the Foundation. It was clear that the client was the foundation, not merely its President and Chairman. That letter also made clear that we were to provide legal advice and representation to the Board of the Foundation. As special counsel, we have worked with three different Chairmen, a number of board members, staff and counsel. We owe professional obligations to the institution and all of its directors. It would not be consistent with our professional obligations to decline to respond to the concerns of directors.
(Emphasis added) (See August 18,2000 Letter, attached hereto as Exhibit 4).

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph.

39. In furtherance of her plan to seize control of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson have ignored the requirements of Terra Foundation's by-laws regarding management of Terra Foundation. Article III, Section 11 of the by-laws provides that the executive committee is to operate Terra Foundation between the quarterly Board of Director meetings. (See By-laws of Terra Foundation, attached hereto as Exhibit 5, at Article IV, Section 9). With few exceptions relating to bringing in new counsel for Terra Foundation, issues were not brought before the executive committee. By not having meetings of the executive committee, Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker, Sen. Simpson were able to control the operations of Terra Foundation for their own benefit, contrary to the provisions of the by-laws.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegations contained in this paragraph.

40. Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker, Sen. Simpson have also consulted with and taken advice from Mr. Michaeli. Mr. Michaeli has been making decisions for Terra Foundation even though he is not an officer or director of Terra Foundation, or even an employee. Mr. Michaeli's only connection to Terra Museum is his relationship with Judith Terra.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegations contained in this paragraph.

41. Judith Terra also began treating the art collection of Terra Foundation as if it were her own personal property. Judith Terra ordered that art from the collection held by Terra Foundation be transported form the Giverny Museum to her personal residence. The curator of the Giverny Museum objected to any piece of the collection leaving the Giverny Museum. However, at Judith Terra's direction, Mr. Tucker ordered the curator of the Giverny Museum to transport the art to Judith Terra's residence for her personal use.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies the allegations contained in this paragraph; Michaeli was present in the one time event when three painting where brought to Judith Terra's residence in France, by guards of the Giverny Museum accompanied by the director of the Museum for a three-hour time period, so that art could be included in a videotape for a television program to promote the Giverny Museum and the Terra Foundation, which art was safely returned to the Giverny Museum after the videotaping. That videotape speaks for itself and could show the malicious nature of this allegation.

42. Under the control of Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Michaeli, substantial waste and mismanagement has occurred which jeopardizes the continued viability of Terra Museum. This waste and mismanagement includes, but is not limited to, the following:

a. Grossly mismanaging Terra Museum in a manner that has resulted in the loss or turnover of almost half the employees, including key persons responsible for Terra Museum's day-to-day operations and continued success;

b. Causing the primary individuals in charge of security at Terra Museum to quit resulting in an inexperienced and understaffed security staff, and jeopardizing the security of the $100 million of art displayed and collected at Terra Museum;

c. Permitting a director of Terra Foundation to engage in a conflict of interest in representing Terra Foundation at art auctions while, on information and belief, representing the interests of private clients at the same auction;

d. Expending significant monies on the purchases of art without obtaining the input or approval of the Board of Directors or the Collections Committee charged with the responsibility of advising the Board of Directors on issues involving art acquisition;

e. Attempting to invade the D4 Endowment restricted to educational purposes for the unauthorized purpose of acquiring art;

f. Bypassing the lawfully elected Executive Committee operating Terra Foundation and Terra Museum;

g. Wastefully incurring excessive legal fees by retaining inexperienced counsel in replacement of Terra Foundation's long-standing counsel;

h. Misusing the art collection of Terra Foundation for Judith Terra's own personal use and in a manner that placed the collection in danger and jeopardy; and

I. Allowing Mr. Michaeli to participate the management, control and operation of Terra Foundation and Terra Museum.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

43. Members of the Board of Directors have repeatedly questioned the manner in which Mr. Tucker, Judith Terra and Sen. Simpson have been operating Terra Foundation in the past year. For example, on March 2, 2000, Margaret Daley wrote to John Neff, Director of Terra Museum, regarding the significant problem occurring at Terra Museum as a result of the high turnover of key employees. Specifically, Mrs. Daley stated:
Having just returned from out of town, I am disheartened about the news concerning Ginny Spindler. John, Ginny worked tirelessly on the School Resource Guide. I was very impressed with her work and Rachel's as well. In fact, without their Herculean efforts, it would not have been a worthwhile publication. In fact, it would have been an embarrassment to the Foundation. Your letter to Ginny was, from my point of view, unkind and uncalled for. It distressed me to see people treated in such a manner. In my working with her on education issues, I believe she has always gone "above and beyond" her duties.... I couldn't leave without letting you and the Board know my feelings and deep concerns.
(See March 2, 2000 Letter, attached hereto as Exhibit 6)

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

44. Other members of the Board of Directors, including Buntrock, as well employees of both Terra Foundation and Terra Museum have repeatedly and vigorously challenged the manner and lack of direction in which Terra Foundation has been operated and managed under the direction of Mr. Tucker. (See Arthur A. Hartman letter dated November 7,1999, attached hereto as Exhibit 7).

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Exhibit 7 to Plaintiffs' Complaint is a letter from Arthur Hartman; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

45. On information and belief, the pattern of mismanagement and waste occurring at Terra Museum is conscious effort on the part of Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson to cause the failure of Terra Museum in Chicago to justify closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation from Chicago to Washington, D.C. for their own ' purposes and in utter disregard for the people of Illinois intended to benefit from Dan Terra's museum and foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies all allegations contained in this paragraph.

46. Despite the fact that Terra during his life had rejected any suggestion of moving Terra Museum from Chicago and therefore depriving the people of the State of Illinois of the charitable trust that he had created, Judith Terra has never abandoned her personal scheme to close Terra Museum in Chicago and move Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. In the last year, after Mr. Tucker obtained the position of president and chairman, Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Mr. Michaeli have been actively seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

47. To this end, and in breach of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois, Judith Terra and Mr. Tucker have engaged in negotiations relating to a merger or affiliation between Terra Foundation and The Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. ("the Corcoran"). As part of the proposed merger of affiliation, certain positions on the Board of The Corcoran would be filled by individuals on the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation. Also, the proposal provides that the president and chairman of Terra Foundation, Mr. Tucker, would assume the position of vice-chairman of The Corcoran.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

4 8. The overall plan and method whereby Judith Terra and Mr. Tucker would secure their mission of obtaining prominent positions in Washington, D.C., in breach of their fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois, was clearly evidenced at the recent Board of Directors meeting held on August 24,2000. There, Mr. Tucker made clear that it was his intention to close Terra Museum in Chicago. Mr. Tucker stated that under his thinking, there were potential problems with the continued operation of the museum in Chicago. Mr. Tucker went to state clearly and unambiguously, the best way to maximize our resources and fulfill our mission is to align with another institution, close the Chicago museum and focus on Giverny and educational initiatives of the Foundation.
(Emphasis added) (See Minutes of August 24, 2000 Board of Directors Meeting, attached hereto as Exhibit 8, p. 2). In fact, many of the "problems" with the Chicago museum were of the Defendants' own making.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

49. Buntrock objected to Mr. Tucker's improper interpretation of the mission of Terra Foundation and stated that the closing of Terra Museum in Chicago had never been discussed or considered by the full Board of Directors. Mr. Tucker agreed that this critical issue had never been discussed by the full Board of Directors, but stated that a decision had already been reached to close the Terra Museum in Chicago. According to Mr. Tucker, the Strategic Planning Committee was prepared to make a recommendation on this issue to the Board of Directors. Mr. Tucker stated that the Board of Directors "definitely" must make a decision on the closing of the Chicago museum during the annual Board of Directors meeting in September 2000.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

50. In conjunction with their overall plan, Judith Terra and Mr. Tucker have attempted to create the impression that Terra Museum in Chicago needs to be abandoned as a mission of Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies all allegations contained in this paragraph.

51. Notice was mailed to the directors informing them that the annual Board of Directors meeting of Terra Foundation was scheduled for Tuesday, September 26, 2000 in France. Although various events and committee meetings were scheduled to occur between September 23/2000 and September 26, 2000, the annual meeting of the Board of Directors was scheduled for September 26, 2000.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

52. As set forth in the agenda for the annual Board meeting that was distributed to each Board member, the election of officers and directors for the upcoming year was to be held during the September 26, 2000 meeting. (See Agenda for September 26, 2000 Board of Directors Meeting, attached hereto as Exhibit 9). As set forth in the agenda, the elections were to occur and then the chairman of each committee would make a presentation to the Board. (Id.) As indicated in the agenda, Mr. Buntrock was scheduled to give a presentation to the Board as the chairman of the finance and investment committee immediately subsequent to the election of the directors and officers.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits that Exhibit 9 to Plaintiffs' Complaint is the Agenda for the September 26,2000, Meeting of the Board of Directors of Terra Foundation; admits all allegations contained in this paragraph consistent therewith; and denies all allegations contained in this paragraph inconsistent therewith.

53. The Defendants have now contrived a plan to ensure that the directors are elected with the exception of Buntrock. Defendants intend to see that Buntrock is not retained as a director in order to allow them to more easily accomplish their unlawful personal objective of closing the museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. Buntrock has recognized Defendants' efforts and has continued to question the Board's authority to move the charitable assets of the people of the State of Illinois to Washington, D.C. in contravention of the Board's fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies all allegations contained in this paragraph regarding purported unlawful conduct or conduct in breach of fiduciary duties owed to Terra Foundation; denies participating in the contrivance of any plan regarding the composition of Terra Foundation's Board; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

54. Plaintiffs have just recently learned of the Defendants' improper plan to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Board of Directors. Subsequent to the dissemination of the agenda for the September 26, 2000 meeting of the Board of Directors, and only days prior to the directors leaving for France, Mr. Ratner was directed to send a letter to all directors, without any consultation, informing them that a 30-minute Board of Directors meeting was scheduled for September 24, 2000, two days prior to the properly noticed and scheduled meeting of the Board of Directors. (See September 15, 2000 Letter, attached hereto as Exhibit 10). This improperly noticed meeting has been scheduled because Defendants will not have a sufficient number of directors available on September 26, 2000 to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Board of Terra Foundation.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to what Plaintiffs "have just recently learned"; admits that Exhibit 10 to Plaintiffs' Complaint is a September 15, 2000 memo from Ratner to the Board of Directors; admits all allegations contained in this paragraph consistent with the terms of Exhibit 10; denies all allegations inconsistent therewith; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

55. Defendants' attempt to hold the elections for directors and/or officers at a Special Meeting of the Board of Directors on September 24, 2000, is violative of the by-laws of Terra Foundation for at least two reasons. First, Ratner does not have the authority to provide notice of a meeting of the Board of Directors as he is not the secretary of Terra Foundation, nor is he even a duly elected officer or director. Pursuant to the by-laws of Terra Foundation, only the secretary of Terra Foundation is empowered to provide notices required under the by-laws. (Exhibit 5, Article IV, Section 9). Any attempt by Ratner to send notice of a meeting of the Board of Directors constitutes an ultra vires act.

ANSWER: Michaeli lacks knowledge sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in this paragraph;

56. Second, under the by-laws an election of the officers and directors may occur only at one of two occasions. First, the election may take place at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors. Second, if the election is not held at the scheduled annual meeting, a special meeting may be held subsequent to the annual meeting. (Id. at Article III, Section 3). The by-laws provide no authority for the holding of elections of officers or directors prior to the scheduled annual meeting. For this additional reason, Defendants' attempt to hold the elections of directors and officers at the improperly noticed meeting on September 24, 2000 constitutes an ultra vires act, as well as a clear breach of their fiduciary duty to Terra Foundation and the people of the State of Illinois.

ANSWER: Michaeli admits all allegations contained in this paragraph consistent with the terms of the Terra Foundation's Bylaws; denies all allegations inconsistent therewith; denies participation in any attempt to hold the election of the directors and officers of the Terra Foundation outside of the terms of the Terra Foundation's Bylaws; and denies all remaining allegations contained in this paragraph.

57. Without relief from this Court, Defendants will carry out their improper plan to ensure that Buntrock does not remain as a director and officer, to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and to undermine the effort of the other directors to ensure that fiduciary duties to the Terra Foundation, and its beneficiaries - the people of the State of Illinois - are followed. The Defendants' plan is motivated by their own self-interests and desires, and inconsistent with their fiduciary obligations as directors of a charitable trust intended to benefit the people of Illinois.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

16di-000395

58. Moreover, if Defendants are permitted to carry out their plan to remove Buntrock, there is a real and serious danger that other members of the Board of Directors will resign their positions thereby leaving the Terra Foundation in great jeopardy, and leaving the people of Illinois without protection on the Board. Once Buntrock and other similar "obstructionist" directors are removed or resign, Defendants will have no opposition to carrying out their plan of depriving the people of Illinois of the public trust created over twenty years ago by Dan Terra for their benefit.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph. Michaeli do agree that the people of Illinois needs protection but not from the Defendants....

Simpson and Mr. Tucker owed fiduciary duties to the Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois to protect the charitable assets of Terra Foundation and to act in their interests by furthering the charitable purpose and mission started by Terra more than twenty years ago.*

67. Notwithstanding their fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois to further the charitable purpose and mission started by Dan Terra more than twenty years ago, Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker used their positions as directors and/or officers of Terra Foundation to intentionally mismanage Terra Museum in Chicago to further their own self interests in closing Terra Museum in Chicago and moving Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

68. The foregoing improper conduct of Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker has caused, and will continue to cause, irreparable harm to Terra Foundation, and irreparable harm to the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the public trust established for Terra Museum in Chicago as a unique center for American art.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

75. By virtue of their positions as directors and/or officers of Terra Foundation, Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker owed fiduciary duties to the people of Illinois to act in their interests by furthering the charitable purpose and mission started by Dan Terra more than twenty years ago.

ANSWER: To the extent this paragraph states a legal conclusion, Michaeli denies those allegations; denies the inferential allegation contained in this paragraph that the charitable purpose and mission of Terra Foundation is solely to benefit the people of the State of

16di-000398

Illinois and, accordingly, denies that officers and directors of Terra Foundation owe any fiduciary duty to the people of Illinois, affirmatively stating that Terra Foundation's Bylaws, its Articles of Incorporation, the Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act specifically state its purpose is to, among other things, benefit "a growing art public ... in the United States and abroad."

76. Defendants Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker breached their fiduciary duties by acting in a manner that was intended to further their own personal interests to the detriment of the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the charitable trust. Defendants improper conduct included, but is not limited to, the following acts:

a. Mismanaging Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed;

COUNT IV
(Inducing A Breach of Fiduciary Duty)

79. Plaintiffs repeat and reallege the allegations contained in Paragraphs 1 through 78 of this Complaint as though fully set forth in this Paragraph 79.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

80. *As set forth more fully above, Defendants Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker breached their fiduciary duties by acting in a manner that was intended to further their own personal interests to the detriment of the people of Illinois as the beneficiaries of the charitable trust established by Dan Terra. a. Intentionally mismanaging Terra Museum in Chicago to create the impression that the museum needs to be closed;

b. Seeking to close Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer or re-establish the museum to Washington, D.C. or some other location outside of Illinois to further their own personal goals;

c. Attempting to defeat Buntrock' s re-election as director to enable Defendants to carry out their plan of moving or transferring Terra Museum from Chicago to a location outside of Illinois;

d. Attempting to improperly reschedule the vote for the election of directors to ensure that Defendants have enough votes to defeat Buntrock's nomination and therefore further their personal agenda to the detriment of the intended beneficiaries of Terra Foundation

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

81. Defendant Mr. Michaeli colluded with Judith Terra, Sen. Simpson and Mr. Tucker in committing breaches of fiduciary duty, or otherwise induced or participated in their breaches of duty to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois as the various ways, including, but not limited to the following:

a. Knowingly providing advice to Judith. Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen.- Simpson that was contrary to the fiduciary duties owed by them as directors of Terra Foundation;

b. Acting with Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson to make decisions for Terra Foundation in contravention of the by-laws of Terra Foundation;

c. Advising Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson to take action relating to Terra Foundation that constituted waste and mismanagement in an attempt to justify the closure of Terra Museum in contravention of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois;

d. Colluding with or advising Judith Terra, Mr. Tucker and Sen. Simpson in the decision to replace Jim Collins and the law firm of Bell, Boyd & Lloyd in order to gain control over the operations of Terra Foundation for their own improper purpose in contravention of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois;

e. Colluding with, advising or participating in the plan to remove Mr. Buntrock from the Board of Directors in order to remove opposition to their plan to close Terra Museum in Chicago and move Terra Foundation to Washington, D.C. in contravention of their fiduciary duties to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois;

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph. Michaeli never attended any Foundation board meeting or its comities. Never asked to give advice or volunteered any advice to any board member. Further more:

a) In view of the current events and the enormous damage that the Plaintiffs are doing to the city of Chicago, the people of Illinois, the Foundation, the Defendants and other board members, and mostly to the great legal system of this great country and state just by using the enormous power of their wealth (compared to the total inability of all other board members in this respect) Michaeli regrets today that he did not have the courage and or the power to advise, nor did he give advise, to any of the board members, to remove Mr. Collins, his client Buntrock and their big supporter Gidwitz - long time ago.

b) Michaeli found out about the past of Mr. Buntrock and Waste Management and the fact that Buntrock is a client of Bell, Boyd & Lloyd only after the filing of this complaint.

c) Michaeli never thought that Mr. Collins should be removed from the board before a full investigation of his activity was preformed. Instead, the board did let him step aside – He came back to the scene through this complaint and this may do the justice that was not done when he left the Foundation.

d) If the Honorable court will learn about those board members that do not cooperate with the Plaintiffs, their values, integrity, determination and personal weight – The Court will know the absurdness of these allegations.

e) Even the Plaintiffs don't claim that decisions where not made by majority – this means that Michaeli has a kind of magical power that works over people like Dr. Tucker - (world authority on Art and Impressionist painters), Senator Alan Simpson - (Old Cowboy from Wyoming), Mrs. Helene Ahrweiler - the former head of the Sorbonne and the Pompidou Center (Old Greek & French resistance worrier), Dr. Theodore Stebbins world authority on Art and American Painters (long time teacher), Mr. Jack Andreani – former Ambassador of France to the US (long time leader and great statesman in his country), Mrs. Stephanie Marshal – head of one of the most important education centers of Illinois, and Judith Terra – Whose strong character described largely in this complaint (the cofounder of the French Museum the person who did not waste a second working for this Foundation and mostly the Chicago Museum). Nobody on this board did more to carry on the legacy of Dan Terra than her. Especially the effort that Dan himself gave-up before his death – saving the Chicago Museum up to the point that the whole Foundation is in jeopardy because of this false absurd complaint.

f) Where is the long planned "scheme"?

- After the death of Dan Terra, the death of Mr. Archibald, and the resignation of Mr. James Terra not one board member was from Chicago. It was Mrs. Terra that supported the joining of four members from Illinois (the Plaintiffs, Mrs. Daley & Mrs. Marshal).
- After two long years of a presidential search, Ambassador Hartman admitted that he failed (Michaeli knows these facts from learning and not from first hand) It was Judith Terra that warmly supported Ambassador Hartman idea to appoint Mrs. Marshal as president. Mrs. Marshal was brought to the board by Mr. Buntrock... and is an Illinois citizen – guess who rejected this idea – Mr. Ronald Gidwitz.
- Mrs. Terra did not bring or initiate the joining of any other board member except Senator Simpson (the last on board – about one year ago).
- It was Senator Simpson himself that was aware of the impossible situation of the board with such counsel that controlled everything in the Foundation. Knowing how important to Mrs. Terra the Foundation, its original goals and the legacy of her husband he felt that she needs his help to guard her goals that are identical to those of the Foundation – against an evil power that threatens to destroy it completely.
- It was Mr. Collins himself and his holding so many duties that caused his resignation. He chose to leave his counseling job when he was removed from the positions of treasurer and secretary. He left a board meeting in the middle and did not give the Foundation any other choice but to change the counseling firm.
- No "scheme" but objective events lead to the removal of the law firm.

g) Michaeli lacks information about the idea to close the Chicago Museum and cannot contribute to this issue. From a professional point of view it seems that this case is not about an attempt to remove the Museum and the Foundation from its current location. It is about preventing a legal board from discussing it.

82. The conduct of Mr. Michaeli has caused, and will continue to cause, damage to Terra Foundation and the people of Illinois. If the conduct of Mr. Michaeli is not stopped, the public trust created by Dan Terra may be destroyed to the detriment of the people of Illinois.

ANSWER: Michaeli denies each and every allegation contained in this paragraph.

DEFENDANT TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS ON COUNTS I AND II OF PLAINTIFFS BUNTROCK AND GIDWITZ'S COMPLAINT

Defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts (the "Foundation"), by and through its attorneys, hereby moves this Court for judgment on the pleadings on Counts I and II of plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz's complaint pursuant to 735 ILCS 5/2-615(e) upon the grounds that the complaint itself establishes that the Foundation is entitled to judgment on Counts I and II as a matter of law. In support of its motion, the Foundation states as follows:

1. The Foundation is a private Illinois not-for-profit corporation organized under the General Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act, 805 ILCS 105 et seq. The Foundation owns and operates the Terra Museum of American Art (the "Terra Museum") located at 664 North Michigan Avenue in Chicago, Illinois, as well as the Musee d'Art Americain Giverny (the "Giverny Museum") in Giverny, France. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 11, 16).

2. Plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz are two members of the Foundation's 11 member board of directors (the "board") who have brought a four count complaint for declaratory, injunctive, and other relief against the Foundation, three members of the board, Judith Terra, Dr. Paul Hayes Tucker and Senator Alan Simpson, as well as another unrelated third party, Naftali Michaeli.

3. In their complaint, plaintiffs allege that the individual defendant directors and the Foundation have undertaken a purported "scheme" to close the Terra Museum located on Michigan Avenue in Chicago and move the Foundation and its assets to Washington D.C. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 32-39, 45-50, 53), an act which plaintiffs claim is outside the powers and purpose of the Foundation and thus would be an ultra vires act.

4. Count I ("Declaratory Relief") seeks the issuance of a declaration that the Foundation is precluded from closing the Terra Museum and moving the Foundation outside the Chicago area on the grounds that any such action would be in violation of the law and an injunction in support of that declaration. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 59-70). Count II ("Statutory Ultra Vires Acts") asks this Court to enjoin the Foundation from taking any action to close the Terra Museum or move the Foundation out of the State of Illinois on the grounds that such action would be ultra vires.

5. As a matter of law, however, the actions alleged by plaintiffs are not outside the purpose and powers of the Foundation and are therefore not ultra vires acts. The Foundation is thus entitled to judgment on the pleadings on Counts I and II of the Buntrock and Gidwitz complaint.

6. Because the Foundation is a corporation, its purpose and powers are controlled by its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws. See Stroh v. Blackhawk Holding Corp.,

48 Ill. 2d 471, 475, 272 N.E.2d 1, 2 (1971); Scott v. Harding Museum, 58 Ill. App. 3d 408, 410, 374 N.E.2d 756, 758 (1st Dist. 1978) (relied upon by the plaintiffs, see Plaintiffs' Emergency Mot. for TRO, filed 9/22/00 at pp. 15-17) ("The purposes of the [museum] are set forth in its articles of incorporation."). The Foundation's Articles of Incorporation are a contract and must be construed the same as any contract – in accordance with the document's clear language. See Stroh, 48 Ill. 2d at 474-75.

7. Moreover, the General Assembly has conferred upon the Foundation as an Illinois not-for-profit corporation all of the rights and powers conferred upon Illinois not-for-profit corporations by the General Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act, 805 ILCS 105 et seq., along with all the powers that have been granted to the Foundation by its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws.

8. The purpose of the Foundation is clearly and unambiguously laid out in its founding documents which state: "the purposes of the corporation are to form, preserve, and exhibit collections of paintings . . . expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public through . . . related educational programs" (Buntrock Complaint, Ex.1 Articles of Incorporation) and "operate museums and schools, both in the United States and abroad" (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 2 By-Laws) (emphasis added). Nothing in either the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation or By-Laws requires the Foundation to maintain a museum or conduct its activities on Michigan Avenue in Chicago or anywhere else in the State of Illinois for that matter. In fact, neither the City of Chicago nor the State of Illinois are even mentioned in these documents as a location in which the Foundation's activities might take place. The Foundation exists for the express purpose of "expand[ing] the artistic horizons of a growing art public" – not the art public of Chicago or the State of Illinois. (See Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 1, Ex. 2, Art. I).

9. Indeed, the General Assembly has specifically granted the Foundation, as it has all Illinois not-for-profit corporations, the power to "conduct its affairs, carry on its operations, and have offices within and without [Illinois] and to exercise in any other state . . . of the United States, or in any foreign country, the powers granted by [the General Illinois Not For Profit Corporation] Act." 805 ILCS 105/103.10 (j) (emphasis added). Nothing in the General Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act prohibits the Foundation from choosing to close the Michigan Avenue facility or from conducting its activities elsewhere, and in fact the statute specifically authorizes the Foundation to conduct its affairs and exercise its powers anywhere. Id.

10. The Foundation is a not-for-profit corporation, not a legal trust, and should not be construed as such. Even if the Foundation might be a "trustee" for purposes of the reporting requirements of the Charitable Trust Act, as defined in that Act, the purpose of the Foundation is governed solely by its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws. See Scott, 58 Ill. App. 3d at 415-16, 374 N.E.2d at 758 (relied upon by plaintiffs) (holding that the Harding Museum, a not-for-profit corporation, was subject to the Charitable Trust Act; however, a determination of the purpose and intent of the corporation was determined solely by looking to the articles of incorporation).

11. In any event, the purpose of the Foundation as expressly defined in its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, which are attached as exhibits to plaintiffs' complaint, negate any contrary allegations contained in the complaint. See Chicago Style Products, Inc. v. Chicago Sun Times, Inc., 313 Ill. App. 3d 45, 50, 728 N.E.2d 1204, 1208 (1st Dist. 2000). Plaintiffs' allegations that the purpose of the Foundation is "to provide a Museum in the Chicago area" (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 13) are directly contradicted by the Articles of Incorporation and

By-Laws which contain no such limitation and specifically provide for a much more broad use of the Foundation's assets. The exhibits control. Id. As a matter of law, plaintiffs have not established any genuine issue of material fact as to whether any alleged actions by the Foundation to close or move the Terra Museum are ultra vires acts outside the purpose and powers of the Foundation.

12. In further support of its motion, the Foundation submits herewith a memorandum of law.

WHEREFORE, defendant Terra Foundation for the Arts respectfully moves this Court to grant it judgment on the pleadings on Counts I and II of plaintiffs Buntrock's and Gidwitz's complaint.

DEFENDANT TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS' MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF ITS MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS ON COUNTS I AND II OF PLAINTIFFS BUNTROCK AND GIDWITZ'S COMPLAINT

Defendant the Terra Foundation for the Arts, an Illinois Not For Profit Corporation, by its attorneys, moves this Court pursuant to 735 ILCS 5/2-615(e) for judgment on the pleadings on Counts I and II of the complaint filed by plaintiffs Dean L. Buntrock and Ronald Gidwitz on the grounds that the complaint itself establishes that the Foundation is entitled to judgment on Counts I and II as a matter of law.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The Terra Foundation for the Arts (the "Foundation") is an Illinois not-for-profit corporation established by Ambassador Daniel J. Terra in 1978. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 9). The Foundation was established for the stated purposes of, among other things, preserving and exhibiting "collections of American art" to "expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public through . . . educational programs" (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 1, Articles of Incorporation) and to "operate museums and schools, both in the United States and abroad." (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 5, By-Laws, Art. I). In 1982, the Foundation opened the Terra Museum in Evanston, Illinois. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 14). In 1987, the Museum was relocated to 664 North Michigan Avenue in Chicago, Illinois. (Id.)

In the early 1990s, in furtherance of the Foundation's purpose of propagating American art, expanding artistic horizons and operating museums abroad, the Foundation opened a museum of American art in Giverny, France. (Id. at ¶ 16). The Buntrock Complaint alleges that the Foundation's art collection is currently worth over $173 million. (Id. at ¶ 17). Roughly half of those assets are located in the Giverny Museum. (See Id.)

The Foundation is currently comprised of an eleven member board of directors. (Id. at ¶ 12). On September 22, 2000, plaintiffs Dean L. Buntrock ("Buntrock") and Ronald Gidwitz ("Gidwitz"), two members of the board, chose to file this lawsuit against three other members of the board, Judith Terra, Dr. Paul Hayes Tucker and Senator Alan K. Simpson as well as the Foundation and another unrelated third party, Naftali Michaeli.

Plaintiffs' complaint is two-fold. In Counts I ("Declaratory Relief") and II ("Statutory Ultra Vires Acts"), plaintiffs ask this Court for declaratory, injunctive and other relief designed to prevent the Foundation from taking any action to close or move the Foundation's Michigan Avenue museum from the State of Illinois. In Counts III ("Breach of Fiduciary Duty") and IV ("Inducing A Breach of Fiduciary Duty"), plaintiffs claim that the individual directors breached and/or were induced to breach alleged fiduciary duties allegedly owed to the people of the State of Illinois.

Plaintiffs allege that the individual defendant directors have engaged in a purported "scheme" in the hopes of closing the Terra Museum in Chicago and moving the Foundation to Washington D.C. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 32-39, 45-50, 53). Despite the fact that the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws,[1] as well as the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act, state otherwise, plaintiffs claim that to move the Terra Museum out of Illinois would be inconsistent with the purpose of the Foundation and would thus be an ultra vires act. (Id. at ¶ 72).

It is not alleged, nor could it be alleged, that the Foundation's substantial and longstanding activities in Giverny, France are ultra vires. (See Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 16). Nor is it alleged how a minority of three members of the board of directors could even conceivably cause the Foundation to close its Michigan Avenue facility or otherwise control the deliberations or actions of an 11-person board, eight of whom plaintiffs have no complaint against.

The Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws of the Foundation unambiguously speak for themselves and state: "the purposes of the corporation are to form, preserve, and exhibit collections of paintings . . . representing American art; expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public through . . . related educational programs" (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 1) and "operate museums and schools, both in the United States and abroad." (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 5, Art. I). Nothing in either the Articles of Incorporation or the By-Laws says that the Foundation must operate a museum in Chicago. Nowhere do the Articles of Incorporation or the By-Laws say that the Foundation is prohibited from conducting its activities or operating museums in locales outside of Chicago. The By-Laws specifically empower the Foundation to operate museums anywhere inside or outside the United States. (Id.) Additionally, the By-Laws explicitly allow the Foundation to maintain offices outside the State of Illinois; to elect directors who are not residents of Illinois; and to hold meetings outside of Illinois. (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 5, Art. II, III). Moreover, the Illinois General Assembly has specifically granted the Foundation, as it has all Illinois not-for-profit corporations, the power to "conduct its affairs, carry on its operations, and have offices within and without [Illinois] and to exercise in any other state . . . of the United States, or in any foreign country, the powers granted by [the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation] Act." 805 ILCS 105/103.10 (j).

ARGUMENT

Count I ("Declaratory Relief") of Plaintiffs' complaint asks this Court to issue a declaration that the Foundation is precluded from closing the Terra Museum and moving the Foundation outside of the Chicago area alleging that any such action would be in violation of the law and for injunctive relief in support of that declaration. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 59-70). In Count II ("Statutory Ultra Vires Acts") of their complaint, Plaintiffs' seek to enjoin the Foundation from taking any action to close the Terra Museum or move the Foundation out of the State of Illinois claiming that such action would be ultra vires. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 71-73). On the face of the Buntrock and Gidwitz complaint, there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether the Foundation is entitled to decide to close or move the Terra Museum out of Illinois. As evidenced by the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, any such action is as a matter of law not ultra vires. See Stroh v. Blackhawk Holding Corp., 48 Ill. 2d 471, 475 , 272 N.E.2d 1, 2 (1971) (holding that the powers and limitations of a corporation are found in its articles of incorporation and by-laws); Scott v. Harding Museum, 58 Ill. App. 3d 408, 410, 374 N.E.2d 756, 758 (1st Dist. 1978) (a not-for-profit corporation's charter, articles of incorporation and by-laws control whether a corporate action is ultra vires). Judgment on the pleadings is proper if there are no factual questions and the only dispute concerns a question of law. Bd. of Trustees of the Univ. of Ill. v. City of Chicago, 2000 WL 1736958 *1 (1st Dist. Nov. 20, 2000); Pekin Ins. Co. v. Richard Marker Assoc., Inc., 289 Ill. App. 3d 819, 821, 682 N.E.2d 362, 364 (2nd Dist. 1997). The only matters to be considered in ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings are the allegations of the pleadings along with the instruments attached as exhibits to the pleadings. M.A.K. v. Rush-Presbyterian St. Luke's Med. Ctr., 249 Ill. Dec. 287, 289, 736 N.E.2d 129, 131 (3rd Dist. 2000). The exhibits attached to the complaint control over any conflicting allegations contained in the complaint. Chicago Style Products v. Chicago Sun Times, Inc., 313 Ill. App. 3d 45, 50, 728 N.E.2d 1204, 1208 (1st Dist. 2000). The Foundation is accordingly entitled to judgment on the pleadings with respect to Counts I and II of plaintiffs' complaint pursuant to 735 ILCS 5/2-615(e).[2]

Plaintiffs allege that the Foundation has undertaken a plan to close the Terra Museum on Michigan Avenue in Chicago and move it to Washington D.C. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 32-39, 45-50, 53). Without alleging any facts supporting their claim that closing the museum or moving it to Washington, D.C. could conceivably be outside the express powers of the corporation, plaintiffs simply conclude that such purported actions would be ultra vires and ask this Court to enter a declaratory judgment and enjoin the Terra Foundation from making any such decision or taking any such action. Whether the Foundation has the authority to close its Michigan Avenue museum or move its assets and operations which may now be in Illinois out of the State of Illinois is a question of law which can be decided on the face of the complaint and in light of the rights and powers conferred upon the Foundation by its Articles of Incorporation, By-Laws, and by the Illinois General Assembly in the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act, 805 ILCS 105 et seq.

[2] It is well established under Illinois law that a trial court may grant judgment on the pleadings in favor of a defendant who has not answered the complaint when the complaint itself establishes that the defendant is entitled to judgment in his favor. Mitchell v. Norman James Construction Co., 291 Ill. App. 3d 927, 931, 684 N.E.2d 872, 877 (1st Dist. 1997); Pollack v. Marathon Oil Co., 34 Ill. App. 3d 861, 867, 341 N.E.2d 101, 107 (5th Dist. 1976).

I. Because the Actions Alleged by Plaintiffs Are Not Expressly Prohibited by the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, as a Matter of Law, Such Acts Are Not Ultra Vires.

An ultra vires act is one that is expressly prohibited and beyond the powers of the corporation. Sherrard State Bank v. Vernon, 243 Ill. App. 122, 1926 WL 3986 *2 (2nd Dist. 1926). The powers and limitations of a corporation are found in its articles of incorporation, its by-laws and in applicable constitutional and statutory provisions. Stroh, 48 Ill. 2d at 475, 272 N.E.2d at 2; Bowman v. Armour & Co., 17 Ill. 2d 43, 47, 160 N.E.2d 753, 755 (1959). A not-for-profit corporation is no different in this regard – its charter, articles of incorporation and by-laws control whether a corporate action is ultra vires. See Scott, 58 Ill. App. 3d at 410, 374 N.E.2d at 758 (the principal case relied upon by plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz (see Mem. in Support of Emergency Motion for TRO, pp. 15-17)) ("The purposes of the [museum] are set forth in its articles of incorporation."); Southern Illinois Univ. Foundation v. Booker, 98 Ill. App. 3d 1062, 1064, 425 N.E.2d 465, 467 (5th Dist. 1981) (court determined the purpose of a not-for-profit corporation by looking to its by-laws); Bertram v. Berger, 1 Ill. App. 3d 743, 746, 274 N.E.2d 667, 668 (1st Dist. 1971) (court looked only to the charter of a not-for-profit corporation to determine whether action was ultra vires); Harrison v. Barker Annuity Fund, 90 F.2d 286, 289 (7th Cir. 1937) (holding the character and purpose of charitable corporation must be ascertained by reference to the terms of its charter).

Plaintiffs attached to their complaint the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws as exhibits. "Exhibits that conflict with allegations in a pleading negate those allegations." Chicago Style Products, Inc. v. Chicago Sun Times, Inc., 313 Ill. App. 3d 45, 50, 728 N.E.2d 1204, 1208 (1st Dist. 2000); McGuire v. Ameritech Cellular Corp., 314 Ill. App. 3d 83, 86, 731 N.E.2d 343, 345 (1st Dist. 2000); Sangamon County Fair v. Standard, 9 Ill. 2d 267, 276, 137 N.E.2d 487, 493 (1956) (holding that an exhibit attached to a complaint controls over any allegations in conflict with the facts contained in the exhibit). To the extent that plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the purpose of the Foundation was "to provide a Museum in the Chicago area" (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 13), those allegations are of no effect in light of the attached exhibits to the contrary. Id.

The articles of incorporation are a contract and must be construed the same as any contract – in accordance with the document's clear language. Stroh, 48 Ill. 2d at 474-75, 272 N.E.2d at 3; Clarendon Group, Ltd. v. Smith Laboratories, 741 F. Supp. 1449, 1452 (S.D. Cal. 1990) (applying Illinois law). Construction of the articles of incorporation is a question of law for the court, and it is the plain meaning of the words used in the contract that govern its interpretation. Clarendon, 741 F. Supp. at 1452. As the Illinois Supreme Court has repeatedly held, both the meaning of the contract and the "intent of the parties is to be gathered from the face of the document without assistance from any extrinsic evidence." Air Safety, Inc. v. Teachers Realty Corp., 185 Ill. 2d 457, 462, 706 N.E.2d 882, 884 (1999) quoting Rakowski v. Lucente, 104 Ill. 2d 317, 323, 472 N.E.2d 791, 794 (1984).

Courts must look solely to the plain and ordinary meaning of the language of the contract to determine the intent of the parties, unless the contract is ambiguous. Air Safety, 185 Ill. 2d at 462, 706 N.E.2d at 884. In re Estate of Powless, 248 Ill. Dec. 403, 734 N.E.2d 111, 115 (Ill. App. Ct. 5th Dist. 2000). However, where no ambiguity exists, construction of the instrument is a matter of law without the use of outside evidence. Air Safety, 185 Ill. 3d at 462, 706 N.E.2d at 884; Hurd v. Wildman, Harrold, Allen & Dixon, 303 Ill. App. 3d 84, 89, 707 N.E.2d 609, 613 (1st Dist. 1999); Gavery v. McMahon & Elliott, 283 Ill. App. 3d 484, 487, 670 N.E.2d 822, 824 (1st Dist. 1996). A court will not find an ambiguity in the language of an instrument where none exists. Powless, 734 N.E.2d at 116.

There is nothing ambiguous about the purpose of the Foundation as stated specifically and clearly in both the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws. If Ambassador Daniel Terra had intended the Foundation to forever operate a museum in Chicago and only in Chicago, he certainly and simply could have included such limiting language in the Foundation's incorporating documents. To the contrary, however, Ambassador Terra initially located the Terra Museum in Evanston – not Chicago – (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 14) and expressly stated in the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation that the purpose of the Foundation was far broader than the narrow and parochial interpretation plaintiffs are seeking to impose. As the Articles of Incorporation make clear, the purpose of the Foundation is to reach a broadly-based public without regard to city, state or national borders:

> [T]he purposes of the corporation are to form, preserve, and exhibit collections of paintings, sculpture, graphic arts, architecture, and design representing American art; expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public through such activities which will include lectures, symposia, talks, demonstrations, films, and related educational programs designed to further these purposes; establish, conduct, operate, and maintain a school of instruction and . . . build, erect, maintain, equip, manage, lease, and operate a museum and . . . engage in any and all other activities . . . permitted by law.

(Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 1) (emphasis added). The Foundation's By-Laws echo this language and even more specifically state that the "purposes of the corporation are to . . . operate museums and schools, both in the United States and abroad." (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 5, Art. I).

Neither the City of Chicago nor the State of Illinois are mentioned anywhere in any of the Foundation's creating documents. Rather, the By-Laws unequivocally give the Foundation the power to establish a museum anywhere inside or outside the United States. The Articles of Incorporation refer to the "growing art public" – not the art public of Chicago or Illinois. The By-Laws also specifically provide that the Foundation may maintain offices outside of the State of Illinois, hold its annual meetings outside of Illinois, and may elect directors who do not reside in Illinois. (Buntrock Complaint, Ex. 5, Art. II, III). There is nothing in the Articles of Incorporation or By-Laws geographically restricting the Foundation or requiring that it conduct its activities in Chicago or in Illinois

It would be absurd to construe the governing documents to mean that the Foundation must operate exclusively in Chicago, when the Foundation itself and its first museum were originally based outside of Chicago. It would be similarly absurd to construe the documents in such a way as to deem operating a museum outside of Chicago ultra vires, when plaintiffs admit themselves in their complaint and do not object to the fact that the Foundation has for years owned and operated another museum in Giverny, France – outside not only Chicago and the State of Illinois but the United States. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 16). Language of corporate charters should not be construed to reach an absurd result. City of St. Louis v. Institute of Med. Edu. and Research, 786 S.W.2d 885, 888 (Mo. Ct. App. 1990).

A construction of the Articles of Incorporations and By-Laws that they somehow contain language preventing the Foundation from sharing its collection of art with anyone who does not choose to come within the boundaries of the City of Chicago is not only absurd, but cannot possibly be reconciled with a plain reading of the documents. Moreover, the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act specifically authorizes the Foundation to conduct activities and operations, maintain offices and exercise any of its powers outside of not only the State of Illinois but the United States, and does not require that there be any museum here at all. See 805 ILCS 105/103.10(j).[3]

II. The Foundation is Not a Legal Trust and Thus Should Not Be Construed as Such.

The Terra Foundation is not a legal trust, and thus should not be construed as such in determining whether a corporate action is ultra vires. The Foundation is a private Illinois not-for-profit corporation with all the rights and powers of such a corporation which have been conferred upon the Foundation by the General Assembly of the State of Illinois through the General Not For Profit Corporation Act, along with all the powers that have been granted to the Foundation by its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws. In their complaint, plaintiffs themselves recognize the Foundation as a corporation and not a trust. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 9). The crux of their complaint is that the Foundation should be enjoined from taking any alleged ultra vires acts. Ultra vires is a corporate doctrine – not a trust doctrine. At the same time plaintiffs are suing the Foundation under a corporate theory of recovery, they illogically and inconsistently allege that the Foundation is somehow a "public trust."[4] (Buntrock Complaint at ¶¶ 46, 57, 58, 62). The fact that the Foundation is a not-for-profit rather than a for-profit corporation makes no

[3] Tellingly, on the very first day that the parties were before this Court, Mr. Perkins, Assistant Attorney General, was specifically asked by the Court whether there existed any case law where a "charitable organization[] in Illinois wish[ed] to move outside the state and [was] stopped by force from doing so." Tr. of Proceedings 09/22/00 at p. 17. Mr. Perkins could not offer the Court any such authority because no such authority exists. See Tr. of Proceedings 9/22/00 at pp. 17-19.

[4] The Federal government also recognizes the Foundation as a private foundation. Under section 509(a) of the Internal Revenue Code, the Foundation is defined as a private foundation and not a public charity (I.R.C. § 509(a)) and it has been specifically found by the IRS to be a private foundation rather than a public charity. (See Cumulative List of Organizations, Exhibit A, difference. The statutory provision governing ultra vires acts of an Illinois not-for-profit corporation is essentially identical to the provision governing ultra vires acts of any other Illinois corporation. See 805 ILCS 5/3.15; 805 ILCS 105/103.15; 19 C.J.S. § 576 (Corporations) n. 19 (The defense of ultra vires for a nonprofit corporation is the same as that of a corporation for profit).

Plaintiffs have not and cannot allege the necessary elements to prove that Ambassador Terra intended to create a trust when he explicitly created the Foundation as an Illinois not-for-profit corporation. The elements of an express trust are: (1) intent of the parties to create a trust; (2) a definite subject matter or trust property; (3) ascertainable beneficiaries; (4) a trustee; (5) specification of trust purpose and how the trust is to be performed; and (6) delivery of the trust property to the trustee. In re Estate of Zuckerman, 218 Ill. App. 3d 325, 329, 578 N.E.2d 248 (1st Dist. 1991). Plaintiffs have not (and cannot) allege specific facts establishing these requirements because they themselves admit that Ambassador Terra created a not for profit corporation. (Buntrock Complaint at ¶ 9). He prepared Articles of Incorporations and By-Laws, not a trust document. Plaintiffs themselves chose to file their complaint supposedly based upon those Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, which they attached as exhibits to their complaint. Plaintiffs did not file suit upon and did not attach to their complaint any declaration of trust or other trust document.

While the Foundation may be defined as a "trustee" for purposes of the reporting requirements of the Charitable Trust Act, this does not transform the Foundation into a trust. See 760 ILCS 55/3. The 1963 amendment to section three of the Act, which redefined "trustee" to include not-for-profit corporations, was intended to bring such entities holding property for attached hereto).

"charitable" purposes within the scope of the Act and thus the Attorney General's authority. Scott, 58 Ill App. 3d at 413, 374 N.E.2d at 760. However, this Act neither turns all "charitable" not-for-profit corporations into trusts, nor allows this Court to disregard the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation issued by the State of Illinois and "pretend" the Foundation is actually a trust.[5] Nor does the Charitable Trust Act allow the Court to disregard the Foundation's own By-Laws or the rights and powers conferred upon it by the General Assembly through the Illinois General Not for Profit Corporation Act.

The fact that the Foundation may be subject to the Charitable Trust Act for purposes such as complying with the Act's statutory reporting requirements is wholly irrelevant in defining the extent of the Foundation's purposes and powers. In fact, the Illinois Appellate Court has previously addressed this very issue in the case relied upon by plaintiff, Scott v. Harding Museum, 58 Ill. App. 3d 408, 374 N.E.2d 756 (1978) (see Buntrock Mem. in Support of Emergency Motion for TRO at pp. 15-17). In that case, the court found that because the purpose of the George F. Harding Museum, an Illinois not-for-profit corporation, as stated in the museum's articles of incorporation, constituted a "charitable" purpose, the museum was subject to the Charitable Trust Act. Id. at 415-16. However, in determining the purpose of the museum, the court looked solely to the museum's articles of incorporation. Id. The court quoted the language of the articles of incorporation in holding that in "the establishment of this museum, the express intent of the donor was the 'collection, preservation and exhibition of . . . art'." Id. Moreover, the court specifically rejected the "sophistical reading of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation suggested by the defendants" and instead based its holding on a plain and ordinary reading of the articles of incorporation. Id. at 416.

[5] A not-for-profit corporation and a legal trust are clearly not one and the same. The restrictions that apply to trustees are not applicable to directors of not-for-profit corporations which may happen to be subject to the Charitable Trust Act. For example, the "statutory investment restrictions applicable to trustees of charitable trusts are not applicable to the investment of these funds by [a] charitable corporation." RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF TRUSTS § 389, cmt. b (1999).

Just as in Scott v. Harding Museum, this Court should also find that notwithstanding the fact that the Foundation may fall within the scope of the Charitable Trust Act for reporting purposes, the Foundation's purpose and powers must be determined by its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws alone. See Scott, 58 Ill. App. 3d at 415-416, 374 N.E.2d at 761. Plaintiffs' "interpretation" of the Foundation's powers through their revisionist allegations of Daniel Terra's intent should be rejected. The intent of Ambassador Terra must be determine by looking solely to the Foundation's founding documents, just as the Illinois Appellate Court did in Scott. Id.

Even if this Court chooses to ignore the fact that the operative documents governing the Terra Foundation created a not-for-profit corporation and not a "trust" and decides to somehow treat the Foundation as a "trust," the Foundation is still entitled to judgment on the pleadings. The documents creating the purported "trust" and attached as exhibits to the complaint would still control and require a holding that it was not the intent of Ambassador Terra to limit the scope of the Foundation to operating exclusively within the geographical limits of Chicago, and exclusively for the benefit of the residents of Chicago, and that it was not his intent to require the Foundation and its operations to stay within Chicago or the State of Illinois at all.

Even the otherwise inapplicable case law cited by plaintiffs for the proposition that the Court may look to "surrounding circumstances" to determine the intent of a trust settlor holds that in determining the intent of a trust settlor, "the court must consider the plain and ordinary meaning of the words used." First Nat'l Bank of Chicago v. Canton Council of Campfire Girls, Inc., 85 Ill. 2d 507, 514 426 N.E.2d 1198, 1201 (1981) (emphasis added); see also Northern Ill.

Med. Ctr. v. Home State Bank of Crystal Lake, 136 Ill. App. 3d 129, 145, 482 N.E.2d 1085, 1097 (2nd Dist. 1985); Stuart v. Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago, 68 Ill. 2d 502, 528, 369 N.E.2d 1262, 1273 (1977); (Buntrock Mem. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for TRO, pg. 14). If the settlor's intent may be gathered from the language of the "trust" documents themselves, that is where the inquiry stops.

In the absence of ambiguity, which does not exist here, extrinsic evidence is impermissible. Nat'l Bank of Chicago, 85 Ill. 2d at 514, 426 N.E.2d at 1201 see also In re Estate of Mendelson, 298 Ill. App. 3d 1, 3, 697 N.E.2d 1210, 1212 (1st Dist. 1998) (holding that courts should attempt to determine the settlor's intent solely by reference to the plain language of the trust agreement); Mitchell v. Snyder, 402 Ill. 279, 284, 83 N.E.2d 680; 682 (1949) (finding that the intent of the testator is to be drawn from the language of the document itself, and surrounding circumstances will not be permitted to import a different meaning from that expressed, unless there exists such an ambiguity as to require a construction by the court).[6] Even assuming arguendo that the Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws created some sort of "trust" – which they did not – there is no ambiguity in those documents. Nowhere in those controlling documents is it stated that the Foundation was created for the specific and exclusive benefit of residents of Chicago or, indeed, for their benefit at all as opposed to the benefit of residents of wherever the Foundation might choose to conduct its activities.

[6] Moreover, it is an objective standard – a "trust provision is not ambiguous merely because the parties disagree on its meaning." Espevik v. Kaye, 277 Ill. App. 3d 689, 694; 660 N.E.2d 1309, 1313 (2nd Dist. 1996).

CONCLUSION

Because a plain and ordinary reading of the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, which are attached to the complaint as exhibits and are controlling, establishes that the Foundation is not required to operate a museum in the City of Chicago or even Illinois, and because the Illinois General Not For Profit Corporation Act specifically authorizes the Foundation to conduct its affairs anywhere, plaintiffs have, as a matter of law, failed to raise any genuine issue of material fact as to whether any decision or plan to close the Terra Museum or move the Foundation out of the State of Illinois would be an ultra vires act. Accordingly, the Foundation respectfully requests that this Court grant its motion for judgment on the pleadings on Counts I and II of plaintiffs Buntrock and Gidwitz's complaint, enter judgment in its favor on those counts, and grant such other relief that this Court deems appropriate.

Cumulative List of Organizations

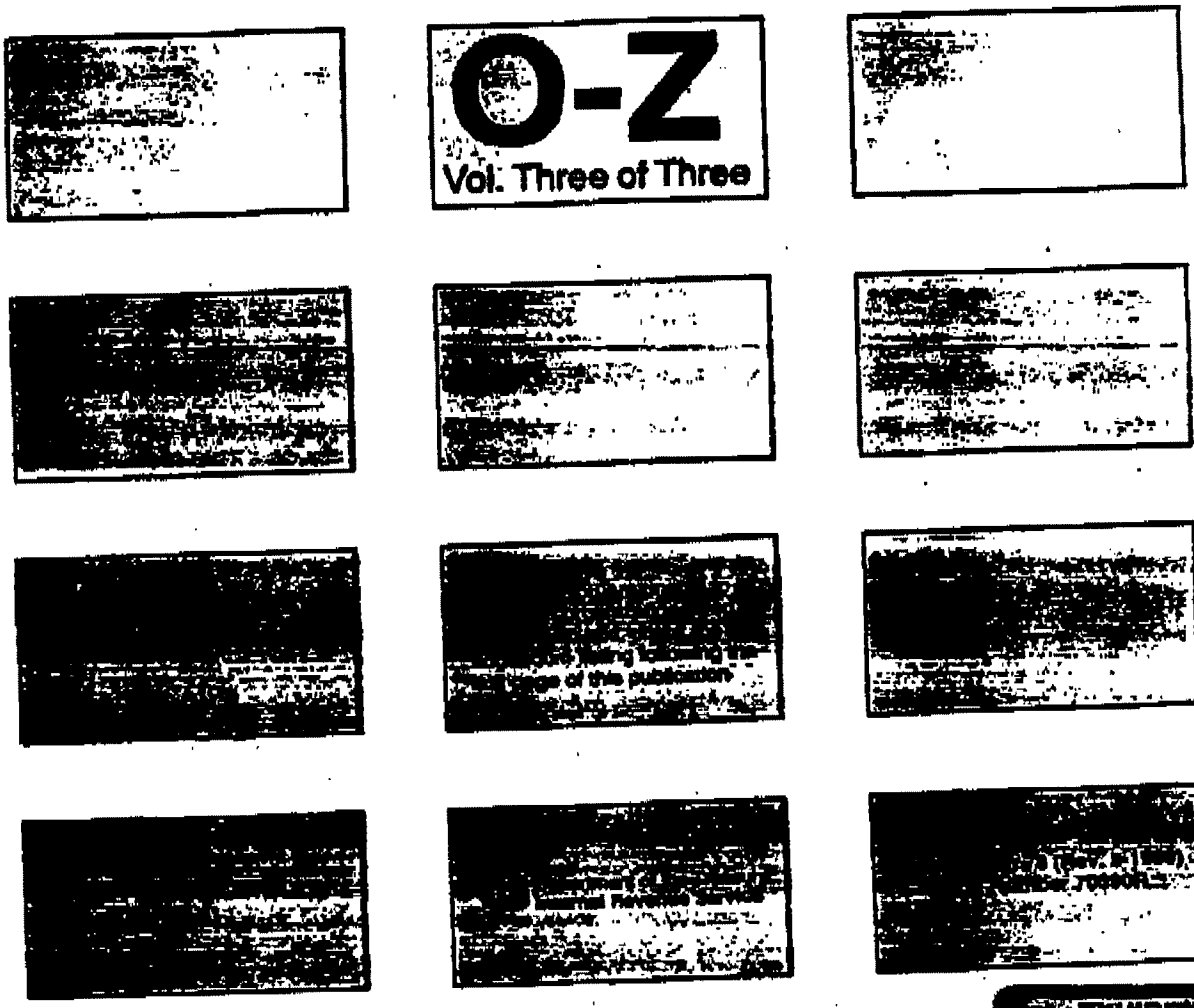
Revised to September 30, 1999



Cumulative List of Organizations

described in Section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986

Preface

Part I of this preface contains a description of codes used in the individual listings. Part II contains a general explanation of the rules covering deductions for contributions for Federal income tax purposes.

Part I

This publication contains a list of organizations to which contributions are deductible. The list is not all-inclusive. If an organization is not listed but has a ruling or determination letter holding contributions to be deductible, generally the letter will serve as evidence to contributors of the deductibility of their contributions. Contributions to an organization described in section 170(c)(1) for exclusively public purposes will be allowed regardless of whether the organization has received a letter confirming its status. The organizations described in section 170(c)(1) are a state, a possession of the United States, or any political subdivision of the foregoing, or the United States or the District of Columbia.

This publication employs a coding system to identify each organization listed by type and limitation on deductibility. The codes, which appear to the right of the organization's name, are explained below. The significance and effect of the limitations on deductibility are explained in Part II.

Code Meaning

None—A public charity with a 50% deductibility limitation.

1 Generally, a central organization holding a group exemption letter, whose subordinate units covered by the group exemption are also included as having contributions deductible, even though they are not separately listed.

2 A fraternal organization contributions to which are deductible by an individual but only if they are to be used exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals.

3 A private operating foundation with a 50% deductibility limitation.

4 A private foundation, generally with a 30% deductibility limitation.

5 A charitable organization whose status as a public charity (rather than a private foundation) has not been determined. Most of these organizations have not sought formal recognition as public charities, even though many of them, such as churches or P.T.A.'s, may qualify as public charities. This code also includes some organizations that have formally claimed public charity status but that status has not yet been determined to be correct by the Internal Revenue Service.

6 An organization described in section 170(c) of the Code other than a charity.

7 An organization to which contributions are deductible if made for the use of a governmental unit. These have a 30% deductibility limitation.

8 A foreign-addressed organization.

OTHER CODING—A four-digit number appearing after the name of an organization and following the legend "Until" indicates the Advance Ruling Expiration Date. The entry represents organizations receiving a "public charity" advance ruling under section 501 (c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. The first two-digit number represents the year and the last two-digit number represents the month in which the "public charity" advance ruling is scheduled to terminate (e.g. 9906 indicates a June 30, 1999 expiration date). Additionally, for advance ruling dates expiring in the year 2000, this date will be indicated by a four-digit number representing the year, and the last two digits representing the month (e.g., 200012 indicates a December 31, 2000 expiration date).

The following examples, using fictitious names, illustrate the use of this coding system:

Doe Foundation, The John (4)
Columbia, Md.

Explanation:

Code (4) denotes that this is a private foundation with a 30% deductibility limitation.

Royal order of Falcons (1) (2) (6)
South Orange, N.J.

Explanation:

Code (1) denotes that contributions to subordinate units included under the group exemption are deductible; code (2) limits deductibility to contributions used exclusively for religious, charitable, and other designated purposes; and code (6) denotes a 30% deductibility limitation.

Metatarsal Society of America, Inc.
Washington, D.C.

Explanation:

No code means a public charity with a 50% deductibility limitation.

Tree Public Society, Until 9909,
Yuma, AZ

Explanation:

Until 9909 denotes a 50% deductibility limitation until September 1999. Deductibility after this date will depend on a final determination or ruling on foundation status.

Publication No. 78 is updated and reissued annually. Additions are published in cumulative quarterly supplements. However, when the Internal Revenue Service withdraws recognition of status or when it recognizes a change in an organization's status, the cumulative quarterly supplements do not reflect such changes. Status changes are published by announcements in the Internal Revenue Bulletin. Bulletin announcements also provide the public with current information on the status of protested contributions, where an organization has timely filed suit for declaratory judgment under section 7428 of the Code challenging its revocation of exemption.

Organizations which are required to file annual information returns on either Form 990 (Return for Organization Exempt from Income Tax) or Form 990-PF (Return for Private Foundation Exempt from Income Tax) as required by section 6033 of the Code, but which have not done so for two years (extensions of time to file considered) prior to the extension date of this edition, may not be included in this listing. However the exclusion of an organization from the Cumulative List because of this does not constitute the termination of the Internal Revenue Service's recognition of its exempt status.

The extent to which contributors may rely on the listing of organizations in this

1 Confidential Attorney Client Work Product In Anticipation of Litigation

MEETING MINUTES:

LG: Len Garment
LL: Larry Levinson
DR: Donald Ratner
P: Paul Hayes Tucker (Via Phone)
J: Judith Terra
N: Naftali Micheali

L.G.:

- This is the dissenting minority from the agreement
- Tentative plan to fight for self-rule of Foundation on Constitutional Grounds seeking injuntive relief and damages in Federal Court
- The first question is about fees, how are they affected?

L.L.:

- Why isn't this within the scope of the indemnification provision? It's germane to the future of the foundation... will preserve it?

L.G.:

- Plaintiff will have to find at some point
- Fees can be allowed
- Court can say? May allow fees as to the future? There is the possibility that it may deny fees

D.R.

- Everyone is being paid except us by the Foundation
- Quinlan, the plaintiff's attorney is not beingpaid by the foundation

CL

- Our attorney is clearly under the indemnification clause. Plaintiff not according to the court, they have been blocked

D.R.

- Possible to be paid curently

L.G.:

- Desire is to proceed grounded in constitutional law, it's credible
- Present lawyers working are: Allen, Freeman, Larry, Myself
- To sume up: at the June 29th meeting, judicial intervention notwithstanding, the trustees vote will affirm judgement and change the foundation structure. In effect the foundation will sail away from Terra moorings to be controlled by Chicago

CL:

- Originally Simpson will resign immediately
- Other agreements also
- She (Stephanie Marshall) will unwillingly vote for the agreement

L.G.

- When did notice regarding the Attorney General inviting her come to her attorney?

N:

- 2 weeks ago
- 1st letter then a 2nd letter

J:

- Attorney General made "threats" to Marshall
- Heavy impact on her

L.L:

- These meetings were not transcribed?

J:

- No

N:

- Conversation between Terra and Marshall afterwards

LL

- Where is the documentation if any?

J:

- There is none

L.G.:

- To summarize: there is a temporary agreement. Stephanie Marshall, we've temporarily agreed that Marshall was opposed to the agreement a few weeks ago sometime after her position of opposition evidenced by a letter. She was called to the Attorney General's and advised of a conflict of interest regarding her connection to Terra and a connection elsewhere. Subsequent to that advice, at a mediation meeting, she took the position that she would agree to mediation proposal due to her concern about litigation predicated by per his… sticking only to her insistance that Allen Singleton not be singled out for termination. This is evidenced in a letter.
- Final stage/vote she agreed to everything
- She prevailed in her opposition and the whole board was removed

J:

- This is a draft of the letter that was actually sent (See Attached letter marked DRAFT dated 6/4/01)

DR

- I have signed copies

LG

- Documentation is needed to show Stephanie Marshall's coercion into submission

LL

- Series of meetings prior to all this
- Every board has a right to self examination
- Discussions framed regarding their future strategic direction about: the future, Terra's desires, by-laws, … a give and take, no decisions
- Did it occur to Gidwitz and Buntrock that there was a plan afoot to move the foundation to Chicago or Washington?

N:

- There was a proposal

DR

- Art institute approached the foundation for an affiliation

LG:

- There were generic discussions?

DR:

- There were a number of meetings 3-5 items of concern: attendance down, not enough funds to support two locations, not enough art to support two locations, the commitments in Paris
- Maggie Daley and Ron (Gidwitz) were there
- John Bryant of the Art Institute of Chicago, a major Chicago player, approached Gidwitz
- Art world has a culture… it calls from lots of museums
- Brought to the committee, was to discuss at the September board meeting. Had not yet been discussed

LG:

- What was the next major event that occurred?

DR:

- In July or August, Gidwitz suggested a meeting: what would be the best avenue for the museum, he asked for white paper on the subject from everyone. No one but Tucker sent one

N:

- Dean Buntrock also sent a letter

DR:

- Tucker's proposal was to go to D.C.

LG:

- Nothing was said regarding an intent to go to court?

DR:

- No...
- The board did not agree...

J:

- Finance committee earlier
- Allen Simpson uncovered this and had questions about it
- There is documentation of this

N:

- At the last moment after discussion, and the Tucker and Buntrock letter, it was put to the board not to elect Buntrock to next year
- The September election

DR

- There was no idea of a suit

-- Paul Hayes Tucker Via Phone Joins Meeting --

P:

- I've gone through the material

LG:

- What are the feasible options?

P:

- Taking of property is the only defense
- It is legitimate
- Coercion issue is critical
- Her stepping down: not necessarily affect thesuit
- If Stephanie Marshall removed herself from the board, the next meeting would be a tie vote

LG

- This is strategic to tactival

- Focus on certaintly issues for the complaint, on strategic level to stop what's taking palce
- We are in general agreement that the strongest suit is regarding Taking
- And the 2nd cause of action is without compensation under color of law
- Our goal is to secure damages, both compensatory and exemplary
- And to stop it
- Where is the core of the state action located?
- Detail on the way it started, the TRO…
- Cateorized by Carson, with no facts, and no justification,
- The judge does not want this issue
- It has been held in abeyance
- There has been a strategy of peeling away the support and inertia
- All of this can go into the complaint, taking of the ability to govern itself and its future
- The moment of truth was when Stephanie Marshall got called into the Attorney General
- What is your spin?

P:

- I agree with the characterization and stratgic initial assessment
- Motion to dismiss was the best document out of Sidley
- Pressure on Marshall long standing: her initial reaction to being pressed prior to the action took place
- A measure of Gidwitz desire for control

??

- Action here is to demonstrate a time line of actions for control
- Including the Marshall, AG contact
- Concerns are: court ordered mediation

P

- Cause of that was the Sunday phone call with Stu(??), Ted, Stephanie, Paul and one more person.
- A strategy session to get out from the barrage of motions they were filing
- Ask the court for mediation
- We agreed via phone
- That could come back at us.
- Mediation could help develop an exit strategy for the foundation

??:

- Complicit agreement for mediation that colors the a paragraph in the document

LG

- Can be treated as peripheral
- Understandable that people make temporary concessions

- What justification was there for the foundation to not self govern for the AG to enter the case

P:

- Don't know if the documents were ever recovered

DR

- AG attacks complaint to Quinlan

LG

- What is Stephania Marshall's background?

P:

- She is compassionate, moral
- Was at the academy of science
- Put on the baord by Dean Buntrock
- She is impressive, organizational
- She founded the Academy of Science, and built it, chaired for 20 years
- It was totally funded by state finds
- Ron controls all the funds.

LG

- Her role and relationship with Ron is key, especially early on

DR

- Ron agreed to mediation
- Ted Stebbins issue
- Ted conflicted because Quinlan, the plaintiff's attorney, said Ted had done something illegal
- Alleged that Ted had done something improper
- Quinlan said he would investigate Ted
- Ted sought a no court option
- He pushed for mediation
- Did not want to go to court

P:

- He (Ted) reiterated that he could not go on the stand
- Threatened to resign a week prior to nomination committee meeting
- Did not want reputation or standing in the art community to be affected

LG

- Did he say that?

P:

- Yes

- Previously a director had raised questions
- The director and Ted had had personal squirmishes going on
- Ted blamed it on personal distaste
- It was legitimate, there was no conflict
- The former director was upset so he wrote a memo
- Problem was the suggestion was that Ted was on the take had circulated in the art world already
- Evidence did not develop, but Ted was scared

DR

- Mediation of a motion to dismiss
- Ted didn't want to go to court
- Ted said go for mediation
- Paul had no vote and Stephanie had not vote

LG:

- What was the scandal he was haunted by?

DR

- Jim Collins and Kathrine Stevens asked John Neff to write a memo against Ted
- Neff was the fired director

P:

- Katherine Stevens encouraged Neff to write the memo

DR

- Quinlan turns up with the memo in court

LG

- And Ted becomes alarmed…

P

- Ted purchased a painting from or had sold a painting to the same dealer that the Foundation had purchased a painting from
- Whether he got a deal is hard to know, but it caused him issues.
- He had stayed in the dealer's condo at the time

LG

- Second point: Ted Stebbins was another important, gradual defection form the original seven
- He was caused to shift his position on pressure of potential public scandal because of documents that were leaked

P

- Neff said he did not send it to anyone

- Jim Collins or Katherine Stevens...
- Probably Collins to Quinlan

LG

- Attorney General used it in the motion
- Stebbins refused to have matters used in court proceeding because of a fear of scandal

J

- Ted was intent on getting rid of Buntock

N

- They put Ted on strategic planning committee for the future

LG

- This helps the argument
- Stebbins, despite a record of alleged conflict of interests is put forward as head of the Strategic Planning Committee and mediated Settlement committee and the Nomination committee

N

- (Regarding Hartman) He became close with Collins and part of the Gidwitz and Buntrock group
- reasoning was an exoneration letter Hartman wanted to be part of. Gidwitz and Buntrock helped Hartman get the letter

LG

- This cuts both ways

P

- Maggie Daley

LL

- Four directors hostile to exploration of outside alternatives...

DR

- Buntrock was always against it
- Gidwitz and Daley and others were for it initially...

LG

- Who/Why was the animating figure behind the efforts to tie everything down leading to the attorney General situation...

DR

- He and Maggie grew up together, he told her not to go for it
- Gidwitz was enlisted to "carry the water"

- Jim Collins, former General Counsel, gets to Maggie who gets to Gidwitz and Buntrock to carry the ball
- Jim Collins said he was going to get Judith

J

- Jim Collins controlled everything. He nominated Maggie Daley, Dean Buntrock, and ultimately Gidwitz

N

- Bell was Buntrock's personal attorney in the claims on waste management, they are his lawyers

LG:

- The spine: the state action, individuals pursuing private motions to get control of an independent voluntary Foundation and using the attorney general's office to implement the paln
- Systematic defection to show a step by step effect
- We are looking for color of law: intimidation, access to important people, evidentiary support, to show them we will take depositions, etc, to ultimately prevail

N

- In the complaint, the Foundation was enjoined form tossing out Buntrock
- More important than staying in Chicago

P

- I suggested, because Buntrock was constantly against decisions
- He was the "kelp on the keel"
- I spoke with people prior to the September meeting, I did not eel we had the votes to remove him
- I thought I should call him and tell him not to come to the meeting, that it would be embarrassing
- He said he was coming and they could settle things personally
- Maggie and others: by getting rid of Buntrock, would help.

LG

- We have covered the generalities
- The elements we need
- Regarding Damges:
- The right is a property right: the ability to self govern
- Legitimate areas of parochial law. Sometimes one can't separate the community from the institution
- This is the Kind of public action that should concern a federal court
- Greenbay Journal: "A government that Robs Peter to pay Paul can always count on the support of Paul." Sums up the color of law issue
- Ways and Means:

- First locate Chicago counsel, we must prepare under full draft prepare a temporary injunction
- We need to "enter the lists" with this change of course
- Paul leaves Tuesday for Florence, we can arrange to get his testimony and have him sign it

DR

- Will fax a 2 page list of talking issues

P

- Claim was that there were 6 votes that were pro mediation

DR

- They all counted Arthur's vote, claim was that he was on the phone for the last ten minutes

N/J

- He was not there

DR

- Should we reincorporate outside Illinois…

LG:

- Is it a technical or tactical issue
- Issue turns on a question of power
- The right to come in and use the attorney general's power to prevent the ability to leave Illinois
- That's the issue the 4th Circuit in Illinois will have
- These are property rights
- Free foundation to move

P

- H looks at it as a parochial foundation

N

- The Terra Name would disappear

-- Did not attend Lunch discussion --

DR:

- Precedent with another not for profit moving out of Illinois perhaps would be helpful (see 526 US 687)

N

- Also cases where Not for Profit's tried to and failed are not helpful

LG
- Also with the Attorney General Involved?

N
- Yes, but on the state level, not the federal level

LG
- Not the Federal Level

LL
- Federal Constitutional Claim using the 4th, 14th, and the 6th …
- But must have Chicago counsel to take this on
- Hopefully force a compromise
- Attorney General would be subject to heavy ramifications if they lose.

DR
- The Attorney General is running for governor and doesn't want exposure
- A threat of court may shake things up because of bad publicity

N
- There are also issues on the buyback of shares by the estate

DR
- An issue, but we must have documentation

N
- Foundation persuaded to sell to Lawter International and then sold to Eastman at a higher price
- A conflict
- He got money by giving options at a low price
- $8.50 sold for $13.75

DR
- May not be put in, but will add a sentence to the paperwork

N
- With the Hartman issue

DR
- We should name Hartman in the suit
- He thinks we sold Mercury shares in proper sequence, if he had known, he could not have acted on it because of his conflict.
- He had a strong belief that Collins sold his own shares based on insider information

- Had he sold others' shares on the information, the whole foundation could have been wiped out

N/J

- Board decided to sell the shares, they didn't have the inside information

N

- Indiana Commerce Committee approached Collins to buy half the foundation shares for $2 million (+-)
- Heavy buying and selling of the same in the market each day

J

- Foundation was owner of the shares, not Collins
- In the mediation process (unrecorded) when the Attorney General threatened, he threatened about the Mercury issue

LL

- Must have a Chicago Lawyer so as not to be paralyzed by the inability to put this (Taking) issue before the Chicago court
- The violation, illegitimacy of public purpose, as a constitutional issue

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S MOTION TO ALLOW BIFURCATED DEPOSITIONS AND DEPOSITIONS IN EXCESS OF THREE HOURS UNDER RULE 206

NOW COMES the People of the State of Illinois by the Attorney General and moves pursuant to Illinois Supreme Court Rule 206 for an order concerning discovery and certain depositions as follows:

16di-000457

1) The ATTORNEY GENERAL has filed his Motion to Enjoin the Terra Foundation's Use of the Current Special Litigation Committee and for Appointment of a Receiver to Conduct the Independent Investigation and that motion concerns a limited part of the matters herein, and such limited matters are the subject of expedited limited discovery. These matters were discussed before the court and the parties have agreed to an expedited discovery schedule and the matter is set by order of court to proceed on a limited expedited manner.

2) Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 201 (k) the parties have met and discussed the methods and timing of discovery on this limited matter, and a comprehensive plan has been agreed to.

3) In the course of discussing the discovery schedule, Plaintiffs requested that the Defendants agree that any depositions being taken for the limited purpose of the Attorney General's aforesaid pending motion would not limit or prevent the Plaintiffs from conducting only a limited depositions on the matters related to the Attorney General's motion and reserving the right to depose such persons again at a later date, as a continued deposition.

4) Counsel for the defendants Tucker, Simpson and Terra refused to agree and contends that plaintiffs shall be entitled to one deposition. The parties counsel discussed such but could not agree.

5) Plaintiffs seek to reserve the right to bifurcate the depositions and to limit the expedited deposition examinations to the issues in the subject motion, and to have said depositions adjourned after a limited examination on the matters in the motion , with a right in Plaintiffs to continue the deposition to another date to deal with the other matters in this case.

6) The depositions of certain of the defendant board members , specifically defendant Tucker and Defendant Terra will involve many issues involving complex activities and their depositions as to the matters of the total case will require more than the three hours allowed without order by Rule 206, and with the extra issues presented by this additional limited subject motion, three hours as provided by rule 206 (d) will not be sufficient to complete a proper and complete deposition.

Wherefore the Attorney General pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 206 seeks an order that:

1) The depositions taken pursuant to the expedited discovery schedule on the limited issue before the court on the matters raised in the subject Attorney General's motion shall be taken in a bifurcated manner to allow examination on the matters related to the motion, with a right in the Plaintiffs to adjourn the depositions after examination , and with a right in the Plaintiffs to reschedule and reconvene said depositions at a later date and time.

2) The three hour rule under Supreme Court Rule 206 shall not apply to the depositions herein of the party defendants , their agents, servants or employees, and that the parties be allowed to conduct said depositions without a restriction on the time.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, Plaintiff-Intervenor, vs. TERRA, et al., Defendants.	)

JOINT EMERGENCY MOTION AND MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER TO ENJOIN BOARD MEETING SCHEDULED FOR JUNE 8 - 9, 2001

Plaintiffs, Dean L. Buntrock ("Buntrock") and Ronald Gidwitz ("Gidwitz"), Directors of the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("Terra Foundation" or "Foundation"), by their attorneys, Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd., and Plaintiff-Intervenor, the People of the State of Illinois by James E. Ryan, Attorney General ("Attorney General")(collectively "Plaintiffs"), respectfully submit this motion and memorandum of law in support of a temporary restraining order to enjoin the Board of Directors meeting of the Terra Foundation that is scheduled for June 8 - 9, 2001.

INTRODUCTION

On May 21, 2001, the parties informed this Court of the status of the mediation process and, based on that information, the Court advised the parties to continue the mediation process. The Court set this matter for further status on June 18. 2001. Three days later, Judith Terra attempted to unilaterally terminate the mediation process. At virtually the same time, Ratner (who takes direction from Tucker) began the process to schedule a "mid-year meeting" of the board. The meeting is now scheduled for June 8-9. Although Judith Terra and certain other board members did not make themselves available for conclusion of the mediation process, they have made themselves available for the meeting and other Foundation functions. The Defendants persist in holding the meeting even though Mr. Gidwitz, Mrs. Daley and possibly Ambassador Hartman are unable to attend the meeting--given such short notice and prior commitments that could not be changed. Moreover, the Foundation's delivery of the board materials was untimely and Mr. Gidwitz' request for the materials last week was rejected out of hand.

The meeting should be enjoined. The meeting alters the status quo and violates the stay order of February 5, 2001. The meeting is an attempt to subvert the mediation process, interfere with the mediated agreement reached on May 11, 2001, and usurps the Court's jurisdiction to hear the Attorney General's expedited request for a receiver.

I. STATEMENT OF FACTS

The Plaintiffs and the Attorney General have each filed verified complaints alleging, among other things, that the Defendants have breached their fiduciary duties as members of the Board of Directors for the Terra Foundation.[1] The verified pleadings allege that the Defendants have grossly mismanaged the affairs of the Foundation, and have unilaterally attempted to divest the People of the State of Illinois of their exclusive beneficial interest in the Foundation by closing the Terra Museum in Chicago and relocating the Foundation outside of Illinois. The Plaintiffs and the Attorney General have also alleged that the Defendants have breached their fiduciary duties and

[1] The facts are undisputed and based largely on the documents authorized by the Defendants. Plaintiff, Ronald Gidwitz', affidavit is also attached hereto as Exhibit A.

engaged in numerous conflicts of interest with respect to the Foundation's acquisition of art. The Attorney General and Plaintiffs have requested that this Court appoint a receiver for the Foundation and remove the Defendant Directors from the Board of Directors.

On February 5, 2001, this Court stayed the litigation, including discovery and the Attorney General's expedited hearing on a receiver, and entered an order appointing David C. Hilliard to mediate this dispute between the parties. See Exhibit A, attached. On Friday, May 11, 2001, the Board of Directors reached an agreement on all material terms, thus resolving this matter.

On May 21, 2001, this Court conducted a status hearing regarding the mediated settlement agreement. Plaintiffs and the Attorney General advised the Court that agreement had been reached on the material terms necessary to resolve this matter and that further clarification and explanation was indicated. At the conclusion of the status hearing, the Court advised the parties to continue to cooperate to bring the mediation to a conclusion. The Court also set the matter for further status on June 18, 2001 to accommodate the mediation process.

The Plaintiffs and the Attorney General have made themselves available to conclude the mediation process with the Defendant Directors and the board members, to no avail.

Three days after the status hearing before the Court, on May 24, 2001, Judith Terra delivered a letter to the mediator and Foundation board members in which she declared the mediation process to be "against justice, moral values, basic integrity....stupid [and] insulting," among other things. Judith Terra further declared:

> I hereby instruct my lawyers to do the necessary steps to put an end to the mediation process and set a date to properly hear evidence and finalize this lawsuit based on real facts and legal rights."

A copy of Judith Terra's letter is attached as Exhibit B1 hereto.

16di-000465

While Judith Terra was indicting the mediation process, Donald Ratner, a Foundation staff member who takes direction from Defendant Tucker, informed the board members on May 23, 2001 that a "mid-year board meeting" was to be scheduled. Ratner proposed that the meeting take place on June 8 and 9 or June 11 and 12, 2001. Ratner provided no agenda for the meeting at that time. A copy of Ratner's scheduling memo is attached Exhibit B2.

On May 31, 2001, Ratner scheduled the "mid-year meeting" for June 8 and 9, 2001, again without an agenda. Mr. Gidwitz, Mrs. Daley and possibly Ambassador Hartman are unavailable to participate in the meeting because of prior obligations which could not be altered on such short notice. Further, only two or three of the board members will even be in Chicago of the meeting.

Mr. Gidwitz had requested a copy of the board materials last week and his request was denied. On June 5, 2001, three days before the meeting is to occur, Ratner finally issued the agenda for the meeting. The agenda includes the following:

- Board "approval/acceptance" of meeting minutes of no less than 37 Board, Executive, Finance, Collections, Education and Strategic Planning meeting minutes ranging in dates from March 13, 2000 through May 15, 2001.
- Approval of the Terra Foundation budget for 2002.
- A nondescript reference to "old business/new business."
- Informational items such as a director's report and the report of committees.

A copy of the agenda for the June 8-9, 2001 "mid-year meeting" is attached hereto as Exhibit B4. Ratner failed to deliver the "board packet" to the board members for the meeting until June 5, 2001.

It is improper for this board to approve the voluminous minutes, while the mediation is pending and before hearing on the Attorney General's motion to appoint a receiver, among other motions. The agenda also does not allow the directors reasonable time to review the minutes.

Moreover, "approval/acceptance" of the minutes are at issue in this litigation and alter the status quo. Defendants are attempting to obtain approval of the minutes to ratify their improper conduct and justify their litigation position. Further, many minutes are sanitized, failing to accurately reflect the subject meetings.

In addition, an agenda item includes "Approval of Budget." The Defendants' intention is to approve this budget before the mediation is concluded. This is improper for several reasons, including the following:

- The budget is the product of a tainted board. The Illinois Attorney General and Plaintiffs have alleged that several Defendant Directors are unfit to continue to serve on the board. The Defendant Directors therefore are unfit to deliberate on the budget.
- The Attorney General and Plaintiffs have requested that the Court appoint a receiver to protect the Foundation. Discovery and a hearing on the appointment of a receiver has been stayed pending mediation. The subject meeting and proposed budget should be stayed until the issues involved in the mediation and/or receivership are concluded.
- The budget documents project that the Foundation will spend $2.4 million in "litigation expenses" through 2001; yet the proposed actual budget provides for only $60,000 in "litigation expenses." This gross disparity in the use of charitable funds requires further investigation by, among others, the Attorney General.
- No budget should be approved by this board until the mediation is concluded because any budget approved now will irreparably prejudice the Board's implementation of the May 11 agreement.

On June 4, 2001, Mrs. Daley also requested that the meeting dates be deferred, to no avail. On June 4, 2001, Mrs. Daley wrote to her fellow board members and requested that the meeting be deferred. Mrs. Daley had informed the board that she was unavailable to attend the meeting scheduled for June 8 and 9 based on prior commitments which could not be altered. In Mrs. Daley's letter, she suggests to the board that the meeting be deferred to the week of June 25. This would not only allow Mrs. Daley and Mr. Gidwitz to participate in the meeting, but it would also coincide with the visit by the Terra Fellows to Chicago. Mrs. Daley writes, as follows:

> And I suspect that many of the board members will agree with me that it will be an opportunity lost if we do not reconsider holding our meeting at that time. If we had known about the week's activities of our Terra Fellows when we originally asked for dates, many of us, I'm sure, would have considered changing schedules.

Mrs. Daley also explained that she was unfairly prejudiced by the failure to provide the agenda for the subject meeting on a timely basis, as follows:

> Since it is June 4th and we still do not have an agenda for the 9th of June...why not re-think this? It shouldn't hamper travel arrangements, since I was told only two directors were to be present at the Foundation Office for this Saturday.
> Let's try to work this out. All of us will benefit and enjoy the possibilities of gathering with our scholars.

Mrs. Daley's request to defer the meeting was rejected. A copy of Mrs. Daley's letter is attached as Exhibit B6.

ARGUMENT

II. PLAINTIFFS ARE ENTITLED TO INJUNCTIVE RELIEF TO ENJOIN THE BOARD MEETING AND STRIKE ITS AGENDA.

The issuance of a temporary restraining order is appropriate where the facts demonstrate a "fair question" that: (1) the party seeking relief has a protected right; (2) the party will suffer irreparable injury if injunctive relief is not granted; (3) the party has an inadequate remedy at law; and (4) there is a likelihood that the party seeking injunctive relief will succeed on the merits. Tierney v. Village of Schaumburg, 182 Ill. App. 3d 1055, 538 N.E.2d 904, 907 (1st Dist. 1989). Moreover, a temporary restraining order is properly issued where it is necessary to maintain the status quo. People's Gas Light & Coke v. City of Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 3d 353, 355, 453 N.E.2d 740, 741 (1st Dist. 1983). Plaintiffs clearly meet each of the elements required for the issuance of the injunctive relief sought here.

A temporary restraining order is issued upon a showing of the necessity to maintain the status quo until a hearing can be held on an application for a preliminary injunction. People's Gas, Light & Coke v. City of Chicago, 117 Ill. App. 3d 353, 355, 453 N.E.2d 740, 742 (1st Dist. 1983). Illinois law is clear that consideration of entry of a temporary restraining order is a summary proceeding and must be granted based on the strength of the movants' papers alone. See Passon v. TCR, Inc., 242 Ill. App. 3d 259, 263, 608 N.E. 2d 1346, 1349 (2d Dist. 1993)(even if Defendant files an answer, the court is to proceed in summary fashion and hear argument only on the motion for TRO); Stanton v. City of Chicago, 177 Ill. App. 3d 519, 524, 532 N.E. 2d 464, 467 (1st Dist. 1988)(order entered by trial court was TRO and required only a summary showing by Plaintiff that the order was necessary to prevent immediate and irreparable harm). See also Hon. Thomas J. O'Brien and Richard A. Jurczyk, TRO Petitions: Is an Evidentiary Hearing Required? 81 Ill. B.J. 572, 575 (Nov. 1993).

A. The People of Illinois Are the Beneficiaries of the Foundation and Require the Court's Protection.

Plaintiffs Gidwitz and Buntrock, as directors of the Terra Foundation, possess a protectible right in that they are expressly authorized by section 103.15 of the Not for Profit Corporation Act, 805 ILCS 105/103.15, to "enjoin the doing of any act or acts or the transfer of real or personal property by or to the corporation."

The Attorney General is vested with a protectible interest by virtue of the common law and the Illinois Charitable Trust Act (760 ILCS 55/1 et seq.), that authorizes the Attorney General to protect the interests of the People of the State of Illinois as the ultimate beneficiaries of the Foundation, a charitable trust within the State of Illinois. The Foundation is a not-for-profit corporation holding property for charitable purposes and is an Illinois trustee under common law and pursuant to section 3 of the Charitable Trust Act, 760 ILCS 55/3. The Foundation has in the past acknowledged that it is an Illinois charitable trust and has registered and reported to the Attorney General pursuant to the Charitable Trust Act.

The People are the sole and exclusive vested beneficiaries of the charitable assets held by the Foundation and thus, have a protectible interest that warrants injunctive relief. Charitable trust law is the foundation of all modern trust law with respect to fiduciary duty and the obligation to adhere to specific purposes of a trust. The common law rule of decision related to charitable trusts establishes and provides that the People are the fully vested beneficiaries as equitable owners of a fee simple interest of the charitable estate, as a matter of law. The Foundation was created, exists and operates as a charitable trustee of a charitable trust. Under Illinois law, it serves as merely a trustee for all of the charitable assets which it holds such in trust exclusively for the benefit of the People. Id. Consequently, by operation of law, the People are the sole and exclusive vested beneficiaries of the charitable assets held by the Foundation.

B. The Board Meeting Must be Enjoined Because it was Scheduled for an Improper Purpose.

The Board meeting scheduled for June 8 - 9, 2001 and its purported agenda is intended solely to undermine the mediation efforts and to advance Defendants' legal positions in this litigation. Thus, the meeting does not further the Foundation's charitable purpose, is ultra vires, and Defendants efforts to use the Board meeting to advance this litigation amounts to a breach of fiduciary duty that should be enjoined. Defendants must not be permitted to use the Foundation's Board meetings and its agenda as a means to further their personal agenda and mismanagement of the Foundation. This Court may enjoin the Board meeting if it is based on an improper purpose. Illinois law explicitly recognizes that the exercise of corporate rights and governance must comply with good faith and a proper purpose. See, e.g., Briskin v. Ogden-Kildare Building Corporation, 132 Ill. App. 2d 679, 270 N.E.2d 520 (1st Dist. 1971) (court must consider evidence of good faith and motive of shareholder when determining whether corporation properly refused to comply with stockholder's statutory request for inspection of books and records); see also 805 ILCS 105/107.75 (providing for right to inspect records of not-for-profit corporation for proper purpose).

In addition, under the Charitable Trust Act, the court should "exercise its discretion as the equities require" when the Attorney General has alleged that the trustees of a charitable organization have breached their fiduciary duties and has sought injunctive relief. 760 ILCS 55/16(b).

Further, in actions alleging the grounds for dissolution but where dissolution is not sought, the Illinois Business Corporation Act specifically provides that a court may order "the submission of the dispute to mediation or other forms of non-binding alternative dispute resolution." 805 ILCS 5/12.56(b)(8). The General Not for Profit Corporation Act provides generally that under similar circumstances, a circuit court may take such action "as is necessary to preserve the corporate assets and carry on the affairs of the corporation until a full hearing can be had." 805 ILCS 105/112.60. Moreover, this Court has the inherent, equitable power to order the parties to submit to mediation. In American Re-Insurance Company v. MGIG Investment Corporation, 73 Ill. App. 3d 316, 391 N.E.2d 532 (1st Dist. 1979); County of Cook v. Barrett, 36

Ill. App. 3d 623, 344 N.E.2d 540 (1st Dist. 1975); First National Bank of Chicago v. Bryn Mawr Beach Bldg. Corp., 365 Ill. 409, 6 N.E.2d 654 (1937).

Any attempt to engage in or fund activities outside the specific purpose of a non-profit corporation is ultra vires, void, and subject to restraint. Harrison v. Barker Annuity Fund, 90 F.2d 286 (7th Cir. 1927); see also, 805 ILCS 105/103.15 (allowing a director of a not-for-profit corporation to bring an action to enjoin an ultra vires action be the corporation). Furthermore, any action by the not-for-profit corporation that fails to directly serve the beneficiaries is also ultra vires and void. See People ex rel. Scott v. George F. Harding Museum, 58 Ill.App.3d 408, 374 N.E.2d 756 (1st Dist. 1978).

The People, as beneficiaries of the Foundation, and Plaintiffs Gidwitz and Buntrock, as Foundation directors, seek to protect the Foundation and its assets from further mismanagement and abuse by Defendants. Thus, Plaintiffs seek to restrain the Terra Foundation from: 1) conducting the meeting scheduled for June 8 and 9, 2001; and (2) striking Item IV of the purported agenda. Plaintiffs also seek an order compelling Defendants to proceed with mediation efforts with Mr. Hilliard on June 8 -9, 2001, or as soon as practicable. The Defendants' attempt to mask their personal agenda as proper business for the Foundation is contrary to the Foundation's charitable purpose and thus, amounts to an ultra vires act and a violation of the individual Defendants' own fiduciary duties.

C. The Defendants' Actions are Contrary to the Charitable Purpose of the Terra Foundation and Must be Enjoined.

Certain Defendants' attempt to schedule a Board meeting undermines the mediation efforts. That the Board meeting is premised on the self-interest of Defendants is evident when one considers the purported agenda for that meeting. One of the action items of the agenda involves the approval of the budget. Prior to the mediation discussions, the People requested the appointment of a receiver, in light of the serious allegations of misconduct alleged against the individual director Defendants. The motion was intended to ensure that the Foundation and its assets were protected. Clearly the approval of a budget, including the allocation of litigation expenses and other Foundation assets, is precisely the type of action that should be reserved to a receiver. Defendants are attempting to take advantage of the stay imposed by this Court on the People's motion, by passing a budget before this Court rules on the motion. The "rush" approval of a budget by the current Board ensures the Defendants' continued control of the Foundation's assets. The Defendants' actions to schedule the approval of a budget undermines the settlement negotiations in furtherance their own self-interest and to the detriment of the Foundation.

It is well established that a not-for-profit corporation is created by law for a definite purpose, and that the assets held by the corporation in trust can be used only to carry out the purpose for which the corporation was created. See, e.g., Riverton Area Fire Protection Dist. v. Riverton Volunteer Fire Dep't, 208 Ill. App. 3d 944, 950, 566 N.E.2d 1015, 1019 (4th Dist. 1991) (assets held in trust by volunteer fire department, a charitable trust, could be used only to provide fire protection services for citizens from whom it solicited funds). The Defendants' plan to approve a budget at this time cannot be said to further the Foundation's purpose. Instead, the approval of the budget is simply an attempt to ensure that this current Board can continue their management of the Foundation without conclusion of mediation or implementation of the May 11 agreement or this Court's hearing of the motion for a receiver. Indeed, the allegations of mismanagement against the Defendants clearly raise a fair question that this Board should not determine the distribution of the Foundation's assets at this time.

Equally troubling is the scheduled approval and acceptance of minutes as another action item at the June 8 - 9 meeting. Defendants have scheduled the approval of thirty-seven Board and committee meetings that occurred over the course of the past year. The Board has not approved the minutes prior to this time and the Defendants' attempt to do so now is consistent with Judith Terra's direction to her attorneys to proceed with litigation. Defendants are attempting to ensure that the minutes that reflect their litigation position are approved to advance their litigation strategy. The proper approval of minutes is to establish an accurate record of Board actions and not an "after the fact" attempt to posture for litigation. This Court must enjoin the meeting and strike its agenda to prevent Defendants from using the corporate procedures and formality as a means to improve their legal positions in this action.

D. The Board Meeting Should Be Enjoined And Item IV Of Its Agenda Stricken Because Defendants Are Attempting To Further Their Own Self-Interest In Violation Of Their Fiduciary Duty To The Foundation.

The Defendants should also be enjoined because their actions violate their fiduciary duties. Illinois recognizes that the directors and officers of a not-for-profit corporation owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation and its beneficiaries to preserve the assets of the corporation for use exclusively in the stated mission of the corporation. Mile-O-Mo Fishing Club, Inc. v. Noble, 62 Ill. App. 2d 50, 210 N.E.2d 12 (5th Dist. 1965). As stated in Noble, "the officers and directors of a not-for-profit corporation should therefore, be charged the same degree of fidelity to the interests of the corporation as are the officers and directors of a business corporation." Noble, 62 Ill. App. 2d at 57, 210 N.E.2d at 15.

Here, the Terra Foundation's assets must be preserved for the operation and maintenance of the Terra Museum, as well as for the education of Illinois citizens in the arts. Any act by the Defendants to deplete the assets of the Foundation as well as transfer those assets away from the citizens of Illinois would constitute a flagrant breach of the Defendants' fiduciary obligations. The Defendants cannot lawfully take action or force action by the Foundation which is contrary to the mission of the Foundation. Accordingly, any attempt to pass a budget for the Foundation directly involves the use of Foundation assets and must be consistent with the Foundation's purpose and not to further Defendants' self-interest and litigation goals.

Plaintiffs, themselves fiduciaries of the Terra Foundation, seek a temporary restraining order prohibiting the Defendants from taking any action on behalf of the Foundation to benefit their self-interest and litigation strategy. By attempting to pass a budget at this time, Defendants are clearly attempting to preserve their control and further facilitate their continued mismanagement of the Foundation.

Defendants, as directors of the Foundation, owe a fiduciary duty to act in the Foundation's best interest. Defendants' attempt to use the Board meeting as a vehicle to advance their own agenda and litigation strategy is clearly improper and inconsistent with the fiduciary duties that Defendants are bound by. Such a budget, approved at this time, will irreparably harm the implementation of the May 11 agreement. Accordingly, this Court must enjoin the Board meeting scheduled for June 8 and 9, 2001 and strike the agenda for that meeting.

III. IN THE ALTERNATIVE, THIS COURT SHOULD DELAY THE BOARD MEETING AND PRESERVE THE STATUS QUO UNTIL SUCH TIME AS THE MEDIATION HAS CONCLUDED.

Alternatively, if this Court does not enjoin the Board meeting, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court preserve the status quo and allow the meeting to occur for informational purposes only: that is; agenda items V.A (Director's Report) and V.B (Report of Finance, Collections and Education Committees). The agenda of the board meeting allows consideration of old and new business, and in that regard the issue of making Foundation loans to the Defendant directors to allow them to use Foundation funds to pay their personal legal fees has been on past agendas, and presumably could be revisited at this recently called meeting. Thus, no "old business/new business" should be addressed given the procedural posture of the mediation and the litigation.

Defendants have seemingly decided to abandon the mediation and to resume the litigation of this matter. Although Defendants may certainly decide to pursue such action, Defendants should be required to inform the Court of their intent so that this Court may disband the mediation process and reschedule all pending motions and issues related to this litigation on its calendar.

To date, Plaintiffs have been exercising good faith efforts to resolve this matter while Defendants have been engaged in a scheme to improve their litigation positions and strategy by using a Board meeting to alter the status quo. The parties are scheduled to appear before this Court on June 18, 2001 to advise the Court as to the status of the mediation. If this Court does not enjoin the meeting altogether, Plaintiffs request that this Court delay any Board meetings until after the June 18, 2001 date. Such a delay would be minimal and thus, there would be no real harm incurred by the Foundation or Defendants.

At the time that this Court entered a temporary restraining order enjoining Defendants' efforts to transfer the Foundation from Chicago, Illinois, this Court indicated that the normal day to day operations of the Foundation would continue. The agenda for the June 8 - 9 meeting does not involve the day to day operations of the Foundation. Rather, the meeting is an improper effort to alter the status quo of this matter. Defendants must not be permitted to use the Foundation as a means of posturing in this litigation. Accordingly, Plaintiffs request that this Court delay the meeting scheduled for June 8 - 9, 2001 until such time as this Court determines that the mediation has been concluded.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court enter an order restraining the Terra Foundation from: (1) conducting a meeting of the Foundation's Board of Directors scheduled for June 8 - 9, 2001; and (2) striking the agenda for the June 8 - 9, 2001 meeting. Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court order Defendants to meet with Mr. Hilliard on June 8 -9, 2001, or as soon as practicable, to discuss settlement of this matter. In the alternative, Plaintiffs request that this Court delay the meeting scheduled for June 8 -9, 2001 until after the mediation has been concluded.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE UNDER SEAL EMERGENCY MOTION AND MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER TO ENJOIN BOARD MEETING SCHEDULED FOR JUNE 8-9, 2001

Plaintiffs, Dean L. Buntrock ("Buntrock") and Ronald Gidwitz ("Gidwitz"), Directors of the Terra Foundation for the Arts ("Terra Foundation" or "Foundation") by their attorneys Quinlan & Crisham, Ltd., and Plaintiff-Intervenor, the people of the State of Illinois by James E. Ryan, Attorney General (collectively "Plaintiffs"), respectfully move this Court to allow plaintiffs to file their Emergency Motion and Memorandum of Law in Support of Temporary Restraining Order to Enjoin Board Meeting Scheduled for June 8-9, 2001 under Seal. In support of their motion, plaintiffs state:

1. Plaintiffs require emergency injunctive relief to enjoin the individual defendants and the Terra Foundation from proceeding with the Board meeting scheduled for June 8-9, 2001 because the meeting and its purported agenda does not further the charitable purpose of the Foundation, threatens to harm the public good, and will undermine the parties' lengthy settlement negotiations.

2. Plaintiffs have therefore prepared their emergency motion to enjoin the Board meeting scheduled for June 8-9, 2001. Plaintiffs wish to be heard on that motion on Thursday, June 7, 2001 at 9:15 a.m.

3. Plaintiffs' motion may contain information relating to the parties' mediation process. On May 21, 2001, this Court stated that its February 5, 2001 order "provided that this mediation process is a private proceeding and no party to the action, no member of the Board, no employee or agent of the Board, or any attorneys for them or any parties therein, are to discuss this mediation process, given out any materials, or do anything at all that would jeopardize the success of what has been a very, very long and difficult process and which I believe may be close to an end here." (5/21/2001 Transcript of Proceedings at p. 5).

4. Plaintiffs therefore file this precautionary motion requesting that their emergency motion to enjoin the Board meeting scheduled for June 8-9, 2001 be filed under seal so as to be in full compliance with this Court's statements from the bench on May 21, 2001.

WHEREFORE plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court enter an Order granting plaintiffs leave to file their Emergency Motion and Memorandum of law in support of temporary restraining order to enjoin the Board Meeting Scheduled for June 8-9, 2001 under seal and

Affidavit of John Walsh

Case Type: Fiduciary Duty >> Business Organizations
Jurisdiction: Cook County, Illinois
Name of Expert: John Walsh
Area of Expertise: Art, Entertainment & Media >> Other Art, Entertainment & Media

Representing: Defendant

Hon. Dorothy Kiric Kinnaird.

The underiersigned upon oath, hereby deposes and states as follows:

1. I am John Walsh. I recently retired from the J. Paul Getty Museum in Los Angeles, California, where I had served as Director since 1983. Prior to that, my career included curatorial positions at the Frick Collection in New York, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, and the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. I have taught at Columbia University, Barnard College and Harvard University. I have been a member of the Governing Board of the Yale Art Gallery since 1975 and of the Smithsonian Council since 1990. The professional organizations to which I belong include the American Association of Museums and the Association of Art Museum Directors, of which I served as a trustee from 1986 to 1992 and of which I was president from 1989 to 1990.

2. I have known Dr. Theodore Stebbins for over 40 years. He is a distinguished scholar and expert in the field of American art. He is, and has a reputation as, a man of impeccable honesty and ethies.

3. From my own experience and my knowledge of art museums, I know that curators and directors commonly serve on boards of museums other than those that employ them.

4. It is perfectly proper for the chairman of a museum's collections committee, or a trustee or member of the board of directors of a museum, to bid at an auction for the museum. It is not improper for a representative of a museum to bid at an auction or behalf of, or offer advice to a number of different interests, provided that the customary precautions against conflict of interest are taken.

5. I have never known Dr. Stebbins to find bimself in a situation involving conflict of interest.

6. Under penalties provided by law pursuant to Section 1-109 of the Illinois Code of Civil Procedures, I certify that the statements set forth in this affidavit are true and correct

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF COOK COUNTY, ILLINOIS
COUNTY DEPARTMENT, CHANCERY DIVISION

DEAN L. BUNTROCK, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, et al., Plaintiffs, v. JUDITH TERRA, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, et al., Defendants.	)	No. 00 CH 13859
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, ex rel. JAMES E. RYAN, Attorney General of Illinois, Plaintiff-Intervenor, v. JUDITH TERRA, a Director of the Terra Foundation for the Arts, et al., Defendants.	)	Hon. Dorothy Kirie Kinnaird

DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE WRITTEN OBJECTIONS AND FOR AN EVIDENTIARY HEARING ON THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

Defendants, through their undersigned counsel, in support of their subject Motion, state as follows:

OVERVIEW

On Friday, June 29, 2001, the Board of Directors of the Terra Foundation (the "Foundation") approved a purported settlement fashioned in conjunction with the Illinois Attorney General's Office. The settlement was approved by a bare majority of Directors (the "Director Majority") required by the Foundation's bylaws. In anticipation that this Court would approve their act, the Director Majority voted to change the structure of the Foundation in ways that would, if accepted by the Court, defeat the stated purpose of the Foundation. Of equal importance, Friday's activities serve to ratify and advance a series of improper actions that make the change of structure a nullity. Those actions could not have been contemplated by this Court when it: permitted the intervention by the Attorney General; selected mediation as a way to resolve many of the issues; or, appointed distinguished counsel as Mediator.[1]

Defendants Paul Hayes Tucker, Alan K. Simpson, and Judith Terra object to the proposed settlement on their own behalf, and as fiduciaries for the Foundation. The within request for a briefing schedule and evidentiary hearing on Defendants' objections is intended to assist the Court in reviewing the fairness and adequacy of the proposed settlement. (Point A, infra)

Defendants intend to demonstrate that the proposed settlement is substantively and procedurally unsound. Substantively, the settlement is inconsistent with the Foundation's charter, the Founder's clear intentions, the Foundation's best interests, the best interests of the art public worldwide that the Foundation was established to serve, and sound Illinois public policy. (Point B, infra)

Procedurally, the settlement process was tainted by conflicts of interests that destroyed the efficacy of its results. Having once insinuated itself into these proceedings, ostensibly to protect the People of Illinois, the Attorney General's Office thereafter perverted the mediation process to keep the Foundation from fulfilling its charter and bylaws. Perhaps of greater import to the present

[1]The undersigned are too new to this matter to presume to disagree with this Court for its apparent reliance upon the mediation process to resolve the breadth of issues that the cause eventually presented. We are equally loathe to criticize its Mediator for not excusing himself from the proceedings the instant that the words "art" and "institute" were co-joined. Having thus reaffirmed our respect and regard for this Court and its agent, we believe that the proposed settlement presents an horrific result that unquestionably would have been avoided had the Court redirected the stated objectives of the Attorney General during the hearing on September 25, 2000 (Transcript of Proceedings, p. 84) (Exhibit 1, attached hereto).

outcome, the Attorney General's office decided that it had the legal authority to have the Foundation, through Illinois directors, serve the People of Illinois, almost to the exclusion of others, for 50 years, regardless of the Foundation's charter and bylaws, and regardless of the extra legal means employed; to wit: two Board members, Drs. Stebbins and Marshall, were palpably conflicted as a result of intimidation by the Attorney General's Office. Lastly, the ordinary business practices necessary to optimize the assets of the Foundation were truncated because of the insistence that the place where the Founder earned his fortune, and none other, house his collection into perpetuity.

A. A Fairness Hearing Is Required

Under settled law, a court may not approve a pending settlement agreement without first finding that it is "suitable for the corporation, its purpose, and . . . in the best interest of its members." See, the trial court's ruling as recited in Palencia v. Navarro, 243 Ill. App. 3d 290, 611 N.E.2d 1191 (App. Ct. 1st Dist. 1993). See also Northern Trust Co. v. Thompson, 336 Ill. 137, 168 N.E. 116 (1929) (in trust disputes, question for the court is whether settlement "under all the circumstances is fair and equitable and result[s] in substantial . . . advantage").

Under similar circumstances, courts have required evidentiary hearings and permitted adequate time to allow interested parties to file written objections. Palencia, 243 Ill. App.3d at 295 (permitting written objections and hearing after receipt of proposed bylaw changes); Northern Trust Co., 336 Ill. at 138, 168 N.E. at 117 (evidentiary hearing held on settlement).

The same procedures should be followed here. Specifically, Defendants seek sufficient time to file written objections and to have an evidentiary hearing. Such process is required because:

- The Court has not been sufficiently involved directly in the "decisional" process and, thus lacks full information necessary to assess the fairness of its result;

- Defendants have not had time to consult among themselves or prepare a full set of objections;

- Many important witnesses are scattered around the world. Whether they testify live or by declaration, there must be sufficient time to contact them and obtain their testimony;

- No attempt was made to explore alternative arrangements for the Foundation's collection out of State;

- The proposed settlement would place onerous and long-lasting restrictions on the future operations of a $500 million foundation; and,

- The proposed settlement was approved with the bare minimum of votes required by the Foundation's bylaws and only over substantial objection.

Before the Court approves a settlement that will substantially alter the future of such a substantial charity, it should ensure that all objectors seeking to discharge their fiduciary obligations to the Foundation and its beneficiaries have a full and fair opportunity to be heard.

B. The Proposed Settlement is "Not Suitable for the Corporation, its Purposes, and in [its] Best Interests"

The proposed settlement expressly requires, among other things, that the Foundation: (1) maintain its collection "in the Chicago metropolitan area" for at least 50 years; (2) amend its bylaws to expand the Board to include fifteen members, a majority of whom must at all times be residents of Illinois; and, (3) pursue a "partnership" with another local Chicago museum (likely the Art Institute of Chicago) that will result in the transfer of the Foundation's property and autonomy to another institution.

Given a full opportunity to be heard, Defendants intend to establish that such provisions are not "suitable for the [Foundation], its purposes, and in [its] best interests." Palencia, 243 Ill. App. 3d at 295. Defendants will show that the proposed settlement is antithetical to the Foundation's charter, the Founder's controlling intentions, the best interests of the Foundation and its intended beneficiaries, and sound Illinois public policy. For example:

1. Nothing in the Foundation's charter suggests that the Foundation's art collection should be isolated in any one state or location, or that its Board members should come only from Illinois. In fact, such restrictions are directly contrary to the Foundation's stated purpose in its Articles of Incorporation. The Foundation was formed to "expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public" without geographic limitation. See, Articles of Incorporation. (Exhibit 2, attached hereto). A 1994 Amendment to the Articles of Incorporation further clarified that the Foundation's purpose is to

> [b]uild, erect, maintain, equip, manage, lease, and operate museums and schools, both in the United States and abroad, and all components deemed advisable or necessary to provide space for these activities and exhibitions.

Articles of Incorporation (Aug. 26, 1994) (emphasis added) (Exhibit 3, attached hereto).

Plainly, the Foundation's mission is meant to be world-wide and its board members equally diverse, not given over specially to Illinois and its citizenry.

2. It is fundamental learning that a founder's charitable intentions should be honored in any action to reform a charity unless to do so would require the charity to fail. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank of Chicago v. King Edward's Hosp. Fund for London, et al., 1 Ill. App. 2d 338, 117 N.E.2d 656 (1954) (courts will "carry out the donor's charitable intent" wherever possible); Kemmerer v. Kemmerer, 233 Ill. 327, 84 N.E. 256 (1908) (same).

The evidence is legion that approving the settlement would directly undermine the Founder's intentions. Defendants will prove that by the time of his death in 1996, Mr. Terra "felt that the Chicago museum was simply underappreciated" and was actively taking efforts to "relocat[e] his art collection." Decl. Of Alan Simpson ¶ 2 (Exh. 4).[2]

Between 1990 and 1995, Mr. Terra spoke with the President of the Corcoran Museum in Washington, the President of the University of the Arts in Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and the Whitney Museum in New York about moving the Foundation's collection to their facilities. See, Decl. of Paul Tucker (Exh. 1), Decl. of David Levy (Exh. 5), Decl. of Peter Solmssen (Exh. 8). In the end, Mr. Terra rejected these offers because each would require the Foundation to forfeit control over its collection.

In 1996, the last year of his life, Mr. Terra decided to establish an independent museum in Washington, D.C., where he then resided, and move his collection there. Exh. 8 ¶ 7. He spoke with the President of the University of the Arts in Philadelphia "at length about his desire to move the Foundation to Washington, D.C." Id. In early 1996, Mr. Terra bought a building on Thomas Jefferson Street in Georgetown for the purpose, as testimony will establish, of serving as the new interim corporate headquarters of the Foundation. Decl. of Joseph Zorc (Exh. 6) ¶¶ 2-4. At the same time, Mr. Terra commissioned an architect to draw plans for a new museum facility and headquarters on his existing property on Connecticut Avenue; the plans were completed in May 1996. Decl. of Belinda Reeder (Exh. 9) ¶¶ 2-4 & attachments thereto (appending plans). Mr. Terra even distributed change of address forms to friends and colleagues announcing the move of the Foundation's headquarters to the Thomas Jefferson Street location, sometimes with handwritten annotations. Exh. 10 (address notification). However, Mr. Terra was unable to complete his contemplated move of the Foundation's collection because of his death in June 1996. Exh. 1 ¶ 7; Exh. 6 ¶ 4.

Plainly, the Founder had no intention of locking the Foundation into Chicago at all, let alone for 50 years. Plainly, too, as exhibited by his rejection of the offer by the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and others, he did not wish his collection to become subsumed in another museum's collection (as will happen in any arrangement with the Art Institute).

3. The proposed settlement dangerously compromises the Foundation's flexibility to fulfill its charter. Evidence shows that the Foundation's collection does not stimulate much interest in Chicago. In 1990, for example, Mr. Terra noted that a mere 60,000 visitors went through the museum, meaning the Foundation spent "in excess of $5,000 per visitor." See Exh. 3 at 6-7. Defendants will present evidence from art experts nationwide that if the Foundation is to remain viable it must have the flexibility to consider other venues where its collection may attract more interest.

Likewise, the Foundation has benefitted tremendously from the participation of art experts worldwide on its board of directors -- including, among others, the curator of American art at Harvard's Fogg Museum; a leading expert on Claude Monet; and the president of a major Parisian art museum. Under the proposed settlement, the benefit of such experts would be diluted by a board controlled by individuals whose selection depends on their being residents of Illinois. Again, Defendants intend to present evidence that this limitation is not in the Foundation's best interests.

4. The Illinois public has a strong incentive to avoid precedents that discourage charities from settling in this State. The proposed settlement will have just that effect. The proposed settlement will suggest to other charities that individual board members and the Illinois Attorney General's Office can and will use litigation and its threat as a weapon against charities that settle here. Defendants intend to present proof from experts in the study of charitable institutions and leaders of significant art charities nationwide that this settlement, if approved, will deter foundations, present and future, from considering Illinois as its domicile.

5. The intended beneficiaries of the Foundation are the members of the art public nationwide and worldwide. See, Articles of Incorporation (purpose is to "expand the artistic horizons of a growing art public" both "in the United States and abroad"). Defendants will present evidence that it is contrary to the interests of this public to force the Foundation into remaining in Chicago; the collection is demonstrably underappreciated here and would be more appreciated elsewhere. Defendants will also show that it is also contrary to the best interests of the Foundation's intended beneficiaries that it should have a board dominated other than by the most qualified members from a worldwide selection process.

C. The Settlement Process Was Fatally Tainted

Defendants intend to establish that the settlement process was tainted in multiple ways that undermine the enforceability of its result. By way of example:

1. There is evidence that the Attorney General's office suffered from a fundamental conflict of interest between enforcing the laws of Illinois and serving some xenophobic concerns. Indeed, the unnecessary insertion of the Attorney General's bias against a not-for-profit's freedom of choice to conduct its affairs outside of the State does a greater disservice to Illinois than losing an art collection, no matter its importance.

Mr. Perkins intervened purportedly to ensure the enforcement of Illinois law. Illinois law, however, guarantees corporate self-governance, promises respect for a foundation's corporate charter and for its founder's intentions. Defendants will show that Mr. Perkins pursued none of these legitimate interests in the mediation process, but instead sought solely to keep the Foundation in Illinois, without regard to the propriety of the methods he employed.

2. The Mediator has long-standing ties to the Art Institute of Chicago. Yet that institution is a likely beneficiary of the proposed settlement's provision that requires the Foundation to "partner" with another local museum. Defendants are prepared to present testimony that the Art Institute is the obvious, if not expressly stated, beneficiary of this settlement provision.

3. Defendants will establish that members of the Board voting on the proposed settlement also suffered from an unfortunate, irreconcilable conflict of interest created by Mr. Perkins.

Throughout the mediation process, Mr. Perkins demanded that any settlement rewrite the Foundation's bylaws so as to deprive the Foundation of self-governance, force it to remain an Illinois corporation located in Illinois for 50 years, exhibit its collection in the Chicago area for 50 years, insure that a majority of the board be Illinois residents without time limit, and form a partnership with another Chicago art institution with the goal of terminating its ability to operate a free-standing museum altogether. Mr. Perkins's proposals initially had the support of only four of the six Board members required to effect any change in the Foundation's bylaws. See Bylaws Article XII (requiring 6 of 11 votes to change bylaws). Defendants intend to demonstrate that, after learning this fact, Mr. Perkins took menacing steps against two hold-outs, Dr. Stebbins and Dr. Marshall. Mr. Perkins began with the highly improper step of circulating an internal "draft" amended complaint that named Dr. Stebbins as an individual defendant in this action and charged Dr. Stebbins with breaching a duty of loyalty to the Foundation by representing multiple parties at art auctions -- a common and entirely proper practice in the art world. Exh. 21 pp. 28-29 ("Draft Complaint"). Nothing was done to investigate the activities of either named Plaintiffs or Defendants for mismanagement, waste and other breaches of fiduciary duty.

Defendants further intend to show that, as recently as June 5, 2001, Dr. Marshall wrote to the Mediator expressing her refusal to support the Attorney General's proposals. Exh. 19 ("We have not agreed to any settlement"). At approximately the same time, however, the Attorney General launched an investigation into the Illinois Mathematics and Science Academy, of which Dr. Marshall is president and which depends on public funds.

Mr. Perkins took these actions against Dr. Stebbins and Dr. Marshall at the very time he was purporting to negotiate a settlement with these two individuals. Within weeks, both changed their votes. See Exh. 20 (Crain's report that Dr. Marshall "flipped."). While Dr. Stebbins and Dr. Marshall understandably deny that these investigations influenced their decision to change their votes, both expressed their "abhorrence" of the Attorney General's threats. And, both were undeniably and palpably conflicted between their fiduciary duty to the Foundation and their personal interests.[3]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should hold an evidentiary hearing on the fairness of the settlement and order any other and further relief that the Court may deem appropriate. Absent such procedures, the Court should reject the proposed settlement as substantively unfair and procedurally tainted and follow a process similar to that followed in Palencia, 243 Ill. App. 3d at 294, without interference by the Attorney General's Office.

[3]In this regard, whether threat of personal loss entered into their respective votes is not the important issue; what is important is that they cannot resolve the conflict. Moreover, any activity of the Board since at least June 1, 22991 is a nullity. Defendants intend to file counterclaims against Messrs. Buntrock, Gidwitz, and Perkins for violation of 28 U.S.C. § 1983, breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, and related causes of action. At a minimum, the Court should afford sufficient time for Defendants to present their counterclaims before entering judgment. See Illinois Code, at 735 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/2-616 ("[a]t any time before final judgment amendments may be allowed on just and reasonable terms"); Mem. Op. and Order, Terra v. Perkins, at 4 (N.D. Ill. June 28, 2001) (denying TRO in part because "there was--and as far as I know still is--ample opportunity to raise" such claims "in the state court proceedings"). Defendants could not have raised their counterclaims earlier because the actions that form the basis of those claims took place only recently, only gradually came to Defendants' attention, and resulted in concrete injury only with the vote on June 29, 2001.

talking about how much could be closed, how much of the collection could be moved? What is your position going to be at that point?
MR. PERKINS: Well, Your Honor, I think we all recognize that this is a situation where a museum can have other locations and they exchange collections not only among those locations, but with other institutions. We are expecting there to be this substantial museum that we see in Chicago in perpetuity, and that that is the intent Dan Terra when he founded it, when he went out and personally selected all of this art. This is the situation. He probably picked 90 percent of the pieces of art that are in this museum, and we will be able to prove that. We have the son, who is — who has been with him through the entire process, and this is the situation where I don't think the facts, really, are going to be that much in dispute. It may become a question for a chancellor or a trier of fact, so to speak, to decide what that is and apply the law, but I think it is very clear what Dan Terra had in mind. He named it after himself. He put it in he city that he grew up in and did business in and became successful in and I think he wanted to give back.

THE COURT: Except for the Harding case, has there been any other museum case in Illinois where private or a not-for-profit— you don't want me to use the word "private," a not-for-profit corporation is precluded from closing if it chose to do so?
MR. PERKINS: Judge, I think it is a question of when we say closing, a great example are not-for-profit hospitals that find themselves in situations where they must close down.
THE COURT: Because they can't make it financially, and this is not that situation.
MR. PERKINS: But in the question — the reason I point that out, Judge, there is money left over, substantial moneys often. In fact, they sell often to a for-profit or they sell to another not-for-profit to gather back a whole bunch of money for a foundation. And the question is, always, what will that money go for. And I can tell you this, it is always very parochial. I mean, it can be such that a Southern Illinois community isn't interested in seeing that money migrate up into the Chicagoland area to be given for other purposes.

And so I think these concepts are very rooted in community and very rooted in the common law, which is the state, the sovereign state, and the community that creates the charitable trust should remain the beneficiary of that charitable trust. That is the heart of what the common law provided. And, true, as we move forward in society and we have United States with different states and different locations, it becomes a little harder always to apply that in each circumstance. But I think when the founder has so clearly indicated his intent, and I think when the situation is so clear that it belongs in the State and in the City of Chicago, I think it is a situation where that trust must stay under the protection of the people of the State of Illinois, under its representatives, under the protection of this court.

THE COURT: So it is going to be your position, ultimately, let's assume it is not this particular case, but let's assume there is a museum in town that is simply not making it. There is not attendance, it is not doing well. It just is not supporting its efforts, it is not growing and, for whatever reason, it has to close. It is your position that even if that were the case, the assets would have to ultimately remain in the State of Illinois or the collection would be sold for the benefit of the people of the State of Illinois.
MR. PERKINS: Yes, Judge, absolutely.
THE COURT: And that is really what it comes down to. They can't ever move these assets elsewhere.
MR. PERKINS: Your Honor, I have been on many cases and that is our position in every case.
THE COURT: Okay. Is there anything else? Mr. Quinlan, you have been very patient.
MR. QUINLAN: No, not at all. I obviously concur with what the Attorney General says and his perspective, obviously, is a little

REPORTED BY: KAY A. LEVINE, M.A., C.S.R., R.P.R.
Certificate No. 84-3654.

THE COURT: After everybody gets in position, I'm going to ask if we could start on the far right and go across for the benefit of the court reporter. And if we have two rows, that's fine. I just want to do the front row first and the second row second. It makes it easier for the court reporter if that's possible.

MR. CARROLL: Good afternoon, your Honor. James Carroll on behalf of the plaintiffs, Gidwitz and Buntrock.

MR. KENNEDY: Good afternoon, Judge. John Kennedy on behalf of the plaintiffs.

MR. QUINLAN: William R. Quinlan on behalf of plaintiffs.

MR. PERKINS: Floyd Perkins and Therese Harris on behalf of the Attorney General.

MR. CARLSON: Steve Carlson, your Honor, on behalf of the Terra Foundation for the Arts.

MS. STONE: Susan Stone on behalf of the Terra Foundation.

MR. BELLOWS: I'm Joel Bellows. I'm here for the named defendants.

MS. BELLOWS: Laurel Bellows, the same, for the named defendants.

MR. GARMENT: Leonard Garment, the same, for the named defendants.

MR. TODD: Chris Todd, for the same.

MR. WILSON: James Wilson for Judith Terra, Alan Simpson, and Paul Tucker.

MR. CROWE: Brian Crowe here on the last-mentioned defendants.

MR. BELLOWS: Your Honor, is there some significance to the fact that Mr. Crowe has one foot out of the courtroom?

THE COURT: None whatsoever.

Counsel, since you were here on Friday, I've received three filings, and I don't really know yet what has been filed and what hasn't been. There was quite a bit of confusion after Friday's court proceeding, so I want to clarify some of that confusion, first of all.

What I've received since Friday is Mr. Crowe and Mr. Wilson's emergency motion to withdraw on behalf of the individual defendants, and I assume that everybody has received that.

I also received at 1:15 today, right before I went and did my 1:30 case, from Bellows & Bellows a motion for leave to file written objections and for an evidentiary hearing on a proposed settlement. And there are some attachments to that, and in this short period of time I haven't gotten through all the attachments on that one.

And then while I was hearing my 1:30 case, I received from the mediator a letter dated July 2nd. And I assume that all of you have received that letter?

SEVERAL ATTORNEYS: We have not, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. And then I also received what is the first notification officially that I have of a proposed consent judgment and order. I realize that on the papers that were tendered as courtesy copies on Friday, there are included in there some proposed drafts of things that had been circulating in the mediation process. I didn't deem it appropriate to read those on Friday or to read anything until I received something firsthand from the mediator.

What I've received from the mediator is a one-page letter and a proposed consent judgment and order which I have just started to get through and which I haven't gotten through in the short period of time that I've been off the bench.

Now, is there anybody here from the mediator's office? Are there extra copies of this document -- oh, Mr. Hilliard is in the courtroom. Do you have extra copies for everyone, sir?

MR. HILLIARD: I have some extra copies, yes.

THE COURT: It's a one-page letter and then a proposed consent judgment. I don't have anything official as to what took place, if anything, on Friday, so I don't know if there was a vote on bylaw changes and I don't know what the vote was. And I don't know if there's anything else I'm supposed to be reading.

And then the last thing I just wanted to bring up is I'm not quite certain from the Bellows & Bellows firm what was filed on Friday. I asked my staff to call on Friday. There were a number of telephone calls back and forth.

I received Friday morning a notice of a motion for a temporary restraining order, and my staff asked two or three times the attorney who dropped it off, Is this the courtesy copy or is this the original? And we were told this is the courtesy copy, so I proceeded to start to mark it up.

Later in the afternoon I checked with the court clerk and was told she had no original. So this is signed by Joel Bellows and -- originally, it looks like -- and it appears to be the original. So if this is to be filed with the clerk of the court, I have to give it to the clerk.

MS. BELLOWS: May I speak to this, your Honor, to straighten up some of the housekeeping matters that are before you? We are prepared to substitute a copy for you to work on as a courtesy copy. Because you've begun to mark it up, we can arrange as to how you want to handle that.

THE COURT: Why don't you put these two pages on the end of that, the original signed, and give me the other.

MS. BELLOWS: Right. Because we would like --

THE COURT: To file it under seal.

MS. BELLOWS: We would like to file it under seal. Thank you, your Honor. So if we could have an order that gives us authority to file those papers under seal, we will do so.

THE COURT: And those papers would be the document entitled Notice of Motion for Temporary Restraining Order. Let me give you the other, if you don't mind, a copy of the other signed one for Mr. Bellows. Those are the originals.

MR. BELLOWS: Thank you.

THE COURT: Just give me the body, you know, something to complete that.

MS. BELLOWS: I have that here.

THE COURT: Then this document, Additional Appearance, was that ever filed?

MS. BELLOWS: I thought that we have an appearance that is filed.

THE COURT: So this is -- even though this is an original, this is meant to be my courtesy copy.

MS. BELLOWS: It's meant to be your courtesy copy and --

THE COURT: And you're going to file under seal the document I handed you back, reshuffled, with the signature pages and your plaintiffs' memorandum and your exhibits that were filed in the federal court case; is that right?

MS. BELLOWS: Precisely. Attached as exhibits to the motion that I filed under seal.

THE COURT: Okay. We need a separate court order that has nothing else in it but that these documents are to be filed under seal and kept separate under seal by the clerk of the court. And then that gets put on the front of the envelope. So they'll be put in an envelope sealed with that on top and give them to the clerk.

MS. BELLOWS: We have come prepared to do that today, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. So that was the first issue from Friday.

The second issue from Friday, when I left, I had a copy of the motion. The original, the clerk tells me from her phone call, was filed on the pro hac vice. And I did not get an order on Friday and the clerk said that an order has just been brought in on that. Anybody have a problem if I sign that order now?

MS. BELLOWS: It has been faxed to everybody for advanced notice, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. So the counsel from Washington are in, and I just want to make sure that before we deal with Mr. Crowe's motion, everybody's in who's supposed to be in.

Now, Mr. Crowe, you want to leave us?

MR. CROWE: I do.

THE COURT: And, Mr. Wilson, you want to go along with him?

MR. WILSON: That's correct, your Honor. We are taking this as if it were a motion for substitution, since there is other counsel in at this point. The strictures of the Supreme Court rule regarding withdrawal we didn't feel applied here at the time because of the fact there's more than competent counsel from three law firms in two cities representing these clients.

THE COURT: And I assume that no one wants to say anything about that?

MR. CROWE: Plus, Judge, we'll assert no attorneys' lien on the file.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MS. BELLOWS: Your Honor, we have authority from our clients to enter an additional appearance.

As your Honor may recall, we began in federal court with authority to file that action by our client. Our clients, two of them, one is in Florence, the other is somewhere in Russia.

That would be Senator Alan Simpson in Russia.

And as I indicated to your Honor at the close of court at the hearing on this matter on Friday, we do not have the ability to get authority for a substitute, only ability at least for the near future to serve as additional counsel in this matter.

THE COURT: Okay. And you've got your additional appearance on file as to the counsel from Washington. Everybody is from Washington, right? And you have leave to withdraw.

The only issue I want to deal with is or talk about is, you have a pending motion for fees, which if the settlement is approved, will be mooted. And if the settlement is not approved, it will be the first matter I deal with.

MR. CROWE: We have a petition for you today, Judge, to be filed.

THE COURT: What is that?

MR. CROWE: A petition for our fees, whether the settlement is approved or not.

THE COURT: Okay. Should that be filed with the clerk of the court?

MR. CROWE: I assume it should, Judge. We'd give a copy to you, of course.

THE COURT: Anybody have a problem with that petition being filed at this juncture with the clerk of the court?

MR. QUINLAN: No, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. You can go ahead and then drop off a copy.

THE COURT: There is a motion now for an evidentiary hearing on the settlement issue. Let me hear, first of all, from counsel for the Foundation as to what happened on Friday.

And is there anything else I'm supposed to read, and does the Foundation concur that there is the need for a fairness hearing?

MS. STONE: Your Honor, on Friday there was a properly noticed, properly called board meeting. Due notice had been given. There was a meeting held, convened at approximately 12:45.

The board met, discussed the proposed settlement. There was lively debate about certain aspects of the proposed consent judgment and language of resolution that would be needed to amend the bylaws in order to allow the board to enter into the proposed consent judgment. After some vigorous debate, the board voted and by a vote of 6 to 2 voted to enter into the proposed consent order.

THE COURT: And that was with three individuals not present.

MS. STONE: That's correct. Those individuals were Senator Simpson, Ambassador Jacques Andreani and Madame Helene Ahrweiler. All three had been given proper notice. The Foundation administrative staff talked to all three before and after the meeting and confirmed that they had indeed been given notice of the meeting.

I do not believe -- we only received the motion that the Bellows & Bellows firm is filing a few moments before court began, but I do not believe from my quick perusal of that document that they are raising any particular concerns about the way in which the notice was given. I believe notice was appropriate, and the meeting was appropriately called in strict conformity with the bylaws.

THE COURT: Was a vote taken to change the bylaws?

MS. STONE: Yes, it was, your Honor.

THE COURT: And was a vote taken to elect new directors?

MS. STONE: Yes, it was, your Honor.

THE COURT: So as far as the Foundation is concerned right now, there are how many directors?

MR. CARLSON: It doesn't change, your Honor.

THE COURT: It doesn't change anything until I sign this, right?

MR. CARLSON: That's correct, your Honor.

THE COURT: And right now the Foundation is continuing to operate as it has.

MR. CARLSON: Exactly right, your Honor.

THE COURT: Does anybody feel that we should have an oral report from the mediator? Do you want to take a brief recess and read his letter and then decide how you want to proceed? I know you all just received the Bellows & Bellows documents.

MR. CARROLL: We haven't even received the exhibits, your Honor. We just received a fax of --

THE COURT: Do you have a complete copy to give counsel?

MS. BELLOWS: We do.

THE COURT: I have moved my 3:00 o'clock to 3:30 with the hopes that we would be done a little bit before -- I mean relatively soon because I'm not certain this is going to be concluded today.

I want to find out what you believe is the best way that we should proceed on this, but you're not all informed because you don't all have the document. Do you want to take a few moments and look at the document and see whether an oral report is called for from the mediator today?

MR. QUINLAN: I think some sort of report from the mediator would be appropriate.

THE COURT: That was my intent. I intended to hear from him.

MR. QUINLAN: Maybe if we heard from him now, it might help us when we see the documents and where we are.

THE COURT: Okay. Mr. Hilliard, are you prepared to give us an oral report today?

MR. HILLIARD: The mediator's report is necessarily abbreviated because of the proceedings in mediation that are confidential. But I can report that a vote was taken on the 19th of June on which a majority approved of a settlement agreement. That agreement was -- modifications were made to it and -- in order that it could be a subject of resolutions.

And it was brought before the board of the Foundation on Friday for ratification and for the election of additional members of the board, five additional members, and it has just been reported to you that took place on Friday.

The mediators were informed of this at about 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon. This morning we sent around the document to attempt to get signatures. We weren't able to get all the signatures, but that is the document which we tendered to the Court this afternoon.

THE COURT: The mediation process started on February 6th?

MR. HILLIARD: Correct.

THE COURT: And it's now the beginning of July and during this almost -- what is it? -- four months' period, you have had, I understand, extensive meetings with all of the parties involved and individual meetings with them, meetings with their counsel as well as group meetings of this board.

MR. HILLIARD: We've had individual meetings with all of the members of the board, all the directors of the board, and we have had group meetings in March, again in May, and again in June when we would get everyone together.

THE COURT: And when one refers to a mediated settlement, the settlement is based on a vote on the board; is that correct? I mean, there's no issue that eleven people are not 100 percent happy about this. There are dissenters?

MR. HILLIARD: That's correct.

THE COURT: But this was a proceeding in which everybody had, as far as you're concerned, a full opportunity to participate.

MR. HILLIARD: Oh, yes.

THE COURT: Do you have any concerns about the integrity off this mediation process or presenting the settlement to the court?

MR. HILLIARD: I do not.

THE COURT: Does anybody want to just take a brief recess and get the one-page letter from the mediator, and then we will resume after you have exchanged some documents?

MR. GARMENT: May I say something first, your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes, sir.

MR. GARMENT: And what I say is, I hope your Honor will take it in the spirit in which it is intended, which is to make a contribution to this proceeding and with respect. But I understand -- I understood and still understand why your Honor would have started the mediating proceeding, mediation process, with an order that the proceedings be sealed in the hope and perhaps a reasonable expectation that this would facilitate the discussions of the parties and permit free and open discussion without the intervention of outsiders and outside pressures of one sort or another of publicity and debate.

And what happened thereafter is a very strong argument -- I say respectfully -- for the centrality of press access of proceedings of this nature. And I think that at this time the sealing provision should end. I can understand why the press and press comment was, in effect, prevented in order to --

THE COURT: I don't mean to interrupt you, sir, but I don't think anybody is anticipating anything to be sealed from now on, is there?

MS. BELLOWS: Your Honor, we aren't anticipating, but we have been cautious about our filing today. The mediation process -- it's our understanding the mediation process is terminated --

MR. GARMENT: Well, I can conclude very quickly then.

THE COURT: And I didn't mean any disrespect in cutting you off, sir, but the order said the board couldn't meet until -- or the board couldn't meet or do anything until the mediator reported back. And that during the course of the mediation process, the parties were supposed to be dealing with the mediator and working this case out.

MR. GARMENT: And, of course, your Honor, precisely what we have alleged in the district court proceeding under the Section 1983 claims relating to the interventions and not only improper and unlawful interventions by the Attorney General's office is precisely the reason why open, free access to the processes of law, whether in court or in a mediation proceeding are best aired publicly. And that is the nature of the First Amendment, sometimes abused but always exercised in the interest of public information.

THE COURT: Were these documents that were filed in federal court filed under seal?

MR. GARMENT: We filed them under seal.

MS. BELLOWS: We filed them under --

THE COURT: Because mine aren't marked that, so I have --

MR. GARMENT: In deference to your Honor's --

THE COURT: I assumed that since everyone was talking about things that have come out in the newspaper that there had been plenty of access to these documents. Because how else would anybody know about this stuff?

MS. BELLOWS: Your Honor, we filed them under seal. Judge Bucklo did not accept them under seal; that's as far as the federal court proceeding.

As far as the filings that we have, I have submitted a courtesy copy to your Honor this afternoon. We have pursuant to your clerk's suggestion --

THE COURT: Just brought it here to court.

MS. BELLOWS: -- brought it to court, and assume that it will not be filed under seal. But if we have no motion to do so, we would intend to have your Honor -- we would intend to file it in the normal course.

But in deference to your Honor and our new place here among you, with an abundance of caution we have provided your Honor with a courtesy copy, counsel with copies by fax, and no one else.

THE COURT: I am one of the strongest advocates in this building on the public's right to know, and anybody who routinely practices here knows that I virtually never seal anything in this courtroom. And the only time I do it is if I feel that there is a really important reason to have it done.

And in this case the only thing that was sealed is while this case was in mediation. I wanted to give it a chance. And I didn't want the parties or anyone or the attorneys talking to anyone except the mediator about what was going on.

Now, lots of people, as I understand it, have violated that order, and that's another issue that we're going to have to deal with about that. That's a whole separate issue.

But now the mediator has reported. That's one of the reasons I wanted to make sure you all have what the appropriate papers are here. The plaintiffs are saying they don't know what you want to file today, Ms. Bellows, because they don't have the exhibits. So I want to take a few moments and make sure that everybody sees this document, which is being sought to be filed with the clerk of the court not under seal and see if there's any objection and whether it's -- whether there is a desire on behalf of anyone to file anything under seal from now on.

The proposed consent decree, that's not supposed to be sealed, is it?

MR. CARLSON: No, it is not.

THE COURT: Am I missing something here?

MR. CARLSON: No, it is not.

THE COURT: When we talked about that one, you all came to me and you wanted to have a certain portion of the mediated settlement not public. And I said you can go ahead and try it, but I'm not signing anything that's not going to be public. And so you went back to the drawing board and talked some more.

MS. STONE: There was one aspect of the consent, proposed consent judgment, that we should draw to your Honor's attention. That the parties who are entering into this proposed consent judgment, assuming your Honor approves it --

THE COURT: This is all they're going to say.

MR. CARLSON: That's correct.

MS. STONE: -- have agreed that there is a mutually agreeable statement that will be released to the press. And that is all that people will say. And that will be binding on those who -- the parties who are parties to this particular agreement.

THE COURT: That's the Attorney General, Mr. Buntrock, Mr. Gidwitz, and the Foundation.

MR. CARLSON: That's correct.

THE COURT: And that's all you're going to say. And this is not binding on the three individual defendants because they haven't bought into it.

MS. STONE: Or Mr. Michaeli.

THE COURT: Oh, Mr. Michaeli. Okay. What I would like to do if we could is, Mr. Hilliard, if you could make available to them whatever copies of the letter that you had, I would assume that I would file this letter with the clerk of the court unless someone has a problem with doing that. But I want you all to see it.

And the proposed consent judgment and order is something I'm going to have to take a little bit of time to at least read more than the 15 minutes that I was allotted today after you spent four months putting it together.

And there is a motion which is seeking an evidentiary hearing and a fairness hearing about this, and you all get to be heard as to -- unless you feel that you're barred by the consent decree judgment. You're not, are you?

Okay. I want to hear what you all have to say about their proposed motion and we can go from there. But first let's just see the motion and all the attachments. And as soon as you're ready, please let me know.

(WHEREUPON, a recess was had.)

THE COURT: Anybody have any problem if we file the letter from the mediator?

SEVERAL ATTORNEYS: No, your Honor.

MR. BELLOWS: It is what it is. We have a problem with the content, but the letter itself is what it is.

THE COURT: Okay. Well, I will file that with the clerk of the court.

Has everybody had a chance to see the exhibits that are attached to the individual defendants' motion for leave to file written objections and for an evidentiary hearing?

ATTORNEYS: (Nodding.)

THE COURT: That apparently was what the concern was, that you didn't have the exhibits.

MS. BELLOWS: Your Honor, may I speak for one moment to the exhibits. The exhibits themselves were simply the original articles of incorporation, the amended articles of incorporation, and a page of the transcript.

But counsel, Mr. Quinlan, has reminded me that also referred to in our motion are portions of the exhibits that were filed with this court that were going to be filed under seal.

Now, frankly, your Honor, there are three exhibits that were attached to the federal court proceeding and are now filed under seal in connection with our Friday's motion, three exhibits which do have something to do with the mediation process, Exhibits 17, 18, and 19 of those documents attached to our motion for TRO. Those are letters which involve the mediation process.

Other than those, we do not believe that there is anything else in the exhibit book that your Honor has that should be filed under seal. We would like to then have permission to remove those documents and attach the exhibits as an additional exhibit to our motion today for an objections and evidentiary hearing.

THE COURT: You're talking removing only Exhibits 17, 18 and 19?

MS. BELLOWS: Yes.

THE COURT: And that would be the things you would be filing today. So what you would file today is this motion for leave to file written objections. Would you also be including that memorandum from Friday or just the exhibits?

MS. BELLOWS: No, your Honor. Just the exhibits.

THE COURT: Just the exhibits with the exception of 17, 18 and 19. Is everybody on board as to what Ms. Bellows is talking about?

MR. BELLOWS: Her husband's not. If I could be heard on this. I thought I understood the Court to say that it did not want to in any way impede the mediation process. As you know, the things that we have been filing with the court have made repeated references to the mediation process.

THE COURT: Well, as of yet, nothing's filed. You haven't filed anything except an appearance on Friday.

MR. BELLOWS: That doesn't have anything to do with it.

THE COURT: Nothing made it to the clerk's office yet. So nothing -- whatever was filed in federal court was filed in federal court. The mediation process, as I'm seeing it, is concluded as of the report of the mediator today, is it not?

MR. CARLSON: I think it is, your Honor.

MR. BELLOWS: And then at that point is everything released from seal? Can we feel free to refer to it in arguments before the Court?

THE COURT: That's what I want. I want to have an opportunity to have everyone be heard on that also. Is there any desire to keep any of these documents confidential for purposes of now?

MR. QUINLAN: Which -- I'm sorry.

THE COURT: Any documents. The only reason that I wanted the things filed under seal Friday was we were still in the mediation process. And they should have been filed Friday, and if they were filed Friday, they should have been filed under seal.

MR. QUINLAN: I guess the only question I have, your Honor, is if the mediation process has been terminated merely by filing the report of the mediator -- are we at that point or -- before you consider whether you enact the agreement of the parties pursuant to the mediation. You have not addressed the issue of the resolution that has been adopted by the board.

THE COURT: Well, first of all, I haven't seen the resolution that's been adopted by the board.

MR. QUINLAN: Well, you've seen the consent judgment, which is the --

THE COURT: I've seen the consent decree.

MR. QUINLAN: -- which is the result of the resolution.

THE COURT: As I indicated on Friday, I'm going to consider anybody's argument that they may want to present as to whether or not I should sign this consent decree or not. Now, I didn't anticipate an evidentiary hearing. I could possibly see this all being done with affidavits.

It suggests that there's the need for an evidentiary hearing, and that's what I want to talk about today with all of you. Is anybody going to publicly air the entire mediation process, contemplating with your evidentiary hearing calling the mediator as a witness? What are we doing here?

MR. GARMENT: Indeed we do.

MR. BELLOWS: I don't see any way to avoid that, particularly since the mediator has recognized that the mediation could not have succeeded without inter alia the Attorney General.

And I think that that's really the point of it.

My own feeling on this is that we don't necessarily have to take the Court's time in having a hearing as long as we are able to develop -- I mean, the affidavits that we get, we can get from third parties and things of that nature by virtue of the people who would not otherwise be able to get them.

I would not be reluctant or opposed to, if the Court gave us an expedited discovery schedule, to taking their depositions and avoid having to drag this thing out in court.

THE COURT: Mr. Bellows, you say that you need to take depositions of people from all over the world on this motion. And are you talking about --

MR. BELLOWS: I don't think so.

THE COURT: Well, that's what you said in this document. You said of the people that would need to be in an evidentiary hearing, witnesses are spread throughout the world. Are you talking about board members or are you talking about people that -- similar to these declarations where you're talking about Dan Terra's intent? What are we talking about as a hearing?

MR. BELLOWS: It breaks into two parts, so the answer is yes. It breaks into two parts. The affidavits of declaration from people all over the world, obviously we don't have to depose them.

With regard to the people who were intimately involved in the mediation process itself -- and I would think certainly Mr. Hilliard would be one of those persons -- we could either call him as a witness if the Court wanted to be involved in the give-and-take of it, or we could take his deposition and several others and just argue from those. The people all over the world, as I say, are people from whom we would get affidavits.

THE COURT: About?

MR. BELLOWS: The various points raised in the -- the various points raised in our motion as to the effect of this order on entities wishing to do business in the future in Illinois, not-for-profits most particularly, foundations.

We would also bring in people who would -- the Court will recall that part of the -- you see, if you don't get me right then and there, it's gone.

The Court will recall that one of the things that was not done in this very slow rush to judgment was to find out --

THE COURT: What very slow rush to judgment? The mediation process?

MR. BELLOWS: Yes. -- was to get alternatives to the arrangement that is proposed in this consent decree. And I think that, for example, and this has been a very large concern of mine, although it's not exclusively.

You've got a major asset here. You've got people on the board, particularly the named plaintiffs, who are used to disposing of assets of substantial size. I have to believe that neither of them, for that matter no one else, would really undertake to make the kind of a decision that had been presented here in the consent decree without considering alternatives.

Now, part of the problem, of course, is that if you start out with the Attorney General of the State of Illinois saying that this entity will remain here, that this will be its focus, that this is where the art will be displayed, that this is where we're going to enter into an arrangement with another entity here in Chicago, I don't know that the board members would even appreciate the fact that it would be in the Foundation's best interest to consider alternatives from places outside of the state. And I think that that is something that the Court's entitled to consider when it determines the fairness of the result of this process.

THE COURT: Now, Mr. Bellows, I don't know how much of an opportunity you all had to discuss the history of the case with your predecessor counsel.

I know from their motion today that their client has stopped communicating with them, and I know that they did not know that you all were going into court on the motion today on Thursday until they read about it in the newspaper.

But we had in this case I would say at least half a dozen sessions with the Court and with counsel from each side to talk about whether or not this case was mediatable, and we had some pretty long sessions about that.

And one of the fiercest proponents for the mediation process, one of the most vociferous, "Let's go to mediation," was from your clients' counsel who wanted this case mediated.

Well, right from the very beginning the Attorney General made the statement that they were not going to be participating in any mediated agreement if it meant that this collection would be lost to the state of Illinois. That was up front from day one.

And there were many discussions about that. And that was the ground rule from their perspective pretty much when we -- not the ground rule, because I don't mean to say that it was a rule that they were setting, but that was their concern from the very beginning. And there was a full airing of that with the Court about whether or not there should be a mediation to begin with because there are unresolved legal issues here.

And the Attorney General may be right or may be wrong in its view of the law, and the plaintiffs may right or wrong. But there was a substantial concern about the cost of dragging this litigation on for years, and there was a substantial concern about the stakes of not trying to settle this.

But everybody went into the process, as I understand it, with the understanding that the Attorney General was going to have to sign on at the end to this agreement, and in order to sign on to this agreement, there was going to have to be some kind of concession made about Illinois.

That was how it started. So when you say that things were not aired, we all had a number of discussions about where the Foundation was before this lawsuit started and about negotiations with a number of other institutions throughout the country and whether or not this was the right thing or the wrong thing to do to try and settle this case.

And a decision was made by all counsel on behalf of all parties that, yes, let's give this a chance. And this was pretty much the starting point. So I know you're shaking your head yes, but I don't understand. You're suggesting that this was something that got hammered in at the last minute. Well, this was from the very beginning.

MR. BELLOWS: Pardon me for a moment, your Honor. The reason I was nodding is I thought that was the purpose of mediation. People start out with a certain position. The Attorney General started out with a position that some concession had to be made. I don't fault our predecessors in any way for agreeing to the mediation process. That's the first point of it, and the recognition that it is the process itself that is supposed to get people to change their positions. That's the first thing.

The second thing about it is I don't think that anyone really contemplated at the beginning of the process that it could be perverted to the -- and that was the word I used in our motion -- to the extent that it was. So I think that on two grounds -- yes, I appreciate the fact that our predecessors agreed to it. We probably would have for the same reasons that they did.

But to wind up in a position where you're saying, Well, gee, the Attorney General made its views clear at the beginning of the process. Yes, that's why you have this kind of a process, to get them to change their position.

And during that process all kinds of things happen that were not really part of a normal mediation process. You don't have people going outside of this process to attempt to intimidate people. And it is by virtue of the conflicts that arose that there's some very, very severe problems with the validity of any agreement that would be reached.

But when I say, for example, that -- and only as an example -- that we would want to present the Court with evidence of alternatives of places from without the state, the Court may very well decide, after having heard that evidence or alternatively reading it by way of written submissions, that anyplace that -- if it turns out to be, for example, the Art Institute, that that might be a superior way of dealing with this.

A whole bunch of things, Judge, got started with bare allegations, with allegations that we believe have no basis in fact. That Dan Terra, for example, wanted his collection here when the evidence is just the opposite.

And so I think these are things that the Court should understand and appreciate. And if you say, well, gee, there are all these people that have signed on to the result of the mediation, I would say to you, Judge, you know, when you've got the Attorney General of the State of Illinois saying, This is what the law is, this is what the rules are, this is what's going to happen here, you get these participants -- I'm beginning to think, well, gee, you know, if that's where this is going to wind up, I mean if it's only going to -- if it's going to wind up where the Attorney General is going to be able to keep us here in Illinois so that we can't do other things, then that's what's going to -- that's the result. That's what's going to happen as a result of the mediation.

And if, in fact, that had been dispelled at the beginning, if the people who participated in the process understood that they did not have to capitulate on those points, if in fact those people did not have inherent conflicts that precluded them from taking a role in the decisional process, then, your Honor, the non-majority directors would still have the numerical majority at this point.

THE COURT: Let me hear briefly from each side. Everyone is being very silent here.

MS. STONE: May I speak on behalf of the Foundation, your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes.

MS. STONE: The Foundation's position is today what it has always been in this case, which is that the board of directors should be able to run the affairs of the Foundation without undue influence from this Court, or quite frankly, from unhappy directors who happen to be in the minority. And that's as true today as it was at the start of the case.

It doesn't matter who the individuals are who may be in the minority. The fact is that a board of directors determines the face of an organization through the majority will.

And here you have a situation where there was a duly constituted, duly called board meeting. A quorum was present. There was vigorous discussion and a vote was held. And 6 to 2, the directors voted, exercising their free will that this -- and in accordance with their fiduciary duties that this was in the best interests of the Foundation as they understood it.

Now, Mr. Bellows may disagree that it's in the best interests, Mrs. Terra may disagree, you may disagree, or I may disagree, your Honor. None of that is relevant. The question is whether or not the majority's will of this board will be respected.

And, your Honor, no one ducked the issue of whether or not there was coercion. That was an issue which had been discussed in federal court on Thursday and Friday morning in front of your Honor. And that matter was specifically addressed at the board meeting.

And I would like to read your Honor a portion, a very short portion, from the transcript of the board meeting. Now, this is a rough draft and we haven't had time to refine it, but this is our best understanding of what was said at the board meeting that was taped.

Corporate counsel for the Foundation, Mr. Heatwole, Mark Heatwole of Winston & Strawn, specifically advised all of the directors of their need to vote their fiduciary duty.

And he stated: In light of the allegations that have been brought forward in federal court yesterday, to a certain extent I was not there, but I understand that that sort of the same substantive comments were made in the Cook County courts this morning, about the coercion that some of the members of this board may feel or may not feel from the action of the Attorney General.

I think it's important for each of you to, I think, indicate before you take this vote, that you are voting freely and that you are voting your fiduciary obligations to this board and this institution and without that pressure. And if anyone feels they can't do that, I don't think we should vote. But if you are voting freely and if you do not feel that compulsion, then I think you are free to vote.

And this is specifically what Stephanie Pace Marshall and Dr. Ted Stebbins said in response to that.

Dr. Marshall: Just in response to what you've just said, Mark, I have felt in the past that despite the desire of some board members over the last year or so to try to peg me into an alleged camp or an alleged side, one side or the other, I have always walked my own path and I have always spoken with my own voice to represent the integrity of my own convictions. And I have done it throughout this arduous process, and I do so now with full knowledge of my fiduciary responsibilities.

It is true that the Attorney General's office has asked the Illinois Mathematics and Science Academy to respond to a fact-finding investigation. This has not played a part in my decision-making with respect to my fiduciary responsibilities as a board member of this Foundation. I believe now, as I have said before, that this motion and settlement to be in the best long-term and sustainable interest of this remarkable Foundation.

And then Dr. Stebbins spoke. And it's interesting, your Honor, that in his comments he does criticize the tactics, as I believe he calls them, of the Attorney General. He specifically criticizes the Attorney General, but he says that that is not what is influencing his vote. And he talks about his history throughout this process, about how he has been more of a centrist or someone who is exploring different options. He talks about his history on the board.

I came to the board. I knew Dan Terra. I came to the board at the request of Jim Collins and Judith Terra. I've served as chair of the collections committee and I think I served effectively. And I brought some wonderful new paintings, helped to bring some wonderful new paintings to the Foundation collection.

I've done this without any iota of a conflict of interest. I've always felt free to form my own judgments. And either last August or early September when Paul Tucker first told me about his enthusiasm for the building in Washington and wanting to move there, I disagreed. I long argued to explore a variety of stand-alone options in Chicago. I was willing to consider as part of the strategic planning going elsewhere, but I've always been a defender of Chicago.

And then he goes on: I abhor the threatening tactics of the Attorney General, but I am voting my own conscience and for what I believe is the best interest of the Foundation for its future as an independent, viable force in Chicago and in France for the promulgation of American art.

So, your Honor, these particular directors clearly and unequivocally stated that they believed they were voting in the best interests of the Foundation and in accordance with their fiduciary duties as they understood it.

I think the board has spoken. It was a 6 to 2 vote, and I think the board process should be respected.

THE COURT: I have one question. I'm going to go on and let the plaintiffs speak in just a moment.

The consent decree which I just received, I have read again during the breaks here. This, as I read it -- and tell me if I'm wrong -- has a new board, once it's elected, essentially negotiating to partner with another institution in Chicago. It doesn't require it, does it?

MS. STONE: That's correct, your Honor.

THE COURT: So if something can't be worked out, the Terra would be its own separate museum.

MS. STONE: That's absolutely an option for the board.

THE COURT: And there's absolutely nothing in here that restricts the Foundation's ability to continue to run its programs, activities, and operations in Giverny, France?

MS. STONE: That's particularly reserved for the board. The board's ability and freedom to conduct its activities, operations, and programs in Giverny, France, which ability and freedom the Illinois Attorney General specifically acknowledges and agrees to.

THE COURT: It can also lend its collection, as it always had, to other museums throughout the United States and continue its educational efforts in other places of the United States.

MS. STONE: That's correct, your Honor.

THE COURT: The only thing that this really is making a difference, as I understand it, is the Foundation can't close up shop and move outside of Illinois permanently. I mean --

MS. STONE: Right. I think --

THE COURT: -- there's a number of other changes, new board members --

MS. STONE: -- paragraph 5 of the consent judgment and order probably identifies what limitations may exist now with respect to the Foundation's activities for a 50-year period.

THE COURT: For a 50-year period.

MS. BELLOWS: And self-governing, your Honor. Which is one of the things that we would speak to when everyone else has a chance to be heard.

THE COURT: Okay. And this document is the board of the Terra Foundation amending its own bylaws to put some restrictions on its activities that Dan Terra didn't put in there when he set it up.

MS. STONE: That's correct, your Honor.

THE COURT: And any board can do that if it chooses to do that, can it not?

MS. STONE: That's correct, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. Let me hear from the plaintiffs and the need for -- I really want you also to address whether you have a problem with anything being filed with the clerk of the court at this juncture. I can tell you that what I'm going to need to do is to read this very carefully. I want the transcript of the board meeting and --

MR. CARLSON: We'll be happy to give you the resolution that was passed.

THE COURT: Right. -- and the resolution, the amended bylaws, whatever else that you have from Thursday. But let me hear from Plaintiff. Is it Mr. Quinlan I'm looking at?

MR. QUINLAN: Yes, your Honor. Well, first of all, the issue here is their motion for leave to file objections to this agreement or consent decree.

And the problem is that what you really have here is an agreement. I don't think there's any question -- and I don't even think that the defendant directors raise the issue whether there's agreement or the terms of the agreement.

What they tell you is that they don't like the agreement and they don't like the terms of the agreement. But we have a 6 to 2 vote, which is here by the attorneys representing the Foundation who attest to the validity of that. We have the terms which are in front of your Honor; there's no objection to that.

And the problem is that what they present is really a question that they would like to try in front of this Court, which they had the opportunity to try; namely, what was the intent of Mr. Terra and what was the law on these issues, et cetera.

And that's the reason we went into mediation is the parties agreed to set those things aside, put them off the table, and get together to see if we couldn't resolve this dispute in a way that didn't necessarily require addressing what were some concerns and issues on both sides.

And what we had here was an agreement to mediate by all the parties, including the defendant directors. Counsel now would like to come in and say, Let's take a look at what took place. Let's go out and take depositions. Let's depose the people that were there, including the mediator.

As your Honor knows, that would, in fact, destroy and undercut the ability to have any mediation in any case again, which they agreed to.

This was a mediated process, and they were agreeing in that mediation that nothing in the mediation would be used against anybody involved in this, including anything that was ever said in there.

So the mediation statements and the reason for your order barring disclosure of this was that these couldn't be used in court or in any other proceeding against anybody. Again, a commonplace type of procedure in mediation because no one is going to get into the mediation process if, in fact, this is going to be something to be used against them. The same thing as a settlement. This is a settlement process.

Your Honor herself in a settlement process in any case would say, Ladies and gentlemen, you know that nothing said here is going to be anything that can be used one way or the other. People will make statements, compromise their positions, make offers, make proposals that can't be used later on to show that they were willing to at least agree to that or agree to something else, again, because it would never work.

The public policy of the state, the public policy of the United States, the public policy of the United States expressed in the Arbitration Act are that these things are to be encouraged, not discouraged. That's exactly what they would have here. If they want to complain about this agreement, and if they want to complain about this process, they can say it was fraud, they can say it was duress. They can say those things, but they need evidence of proof that's clear and convincing.

There is nothing proffered anywhere here that even offers a scintilla of evidence that nobody agreed to this or it wasn't properly agreed to. In fact, the people that they allege that were somehow coerced are not here. They were not in the federal court. They don't file an affidavit. The very people who supposedly were intimidated or hurt not only do not file an affidavit or appear; in fact, they make a statement that their vote has nothing to do with it. That they were not coerced into making this vote. They make their vote because it's a hard question. And we think on a better analysis here, it's the right result. And that's what they said. The federal district court judge said, Look, there's nothing unlawful about that.

What we have as a situation is they complain about the lawful activity of the Attorney General and they complain about the lawful activity of two directors that are both lawful. And to somehow say that that is unlawful has in no way been demonstrated. And it has not.

It is indicated here clearly what we have is a party who has agreed because they didn't prevail. Their views didn't win out. But it was one of those compromise decisions, and they were subject to the same requirements as everybody else. They were part of the board, and the board chose to do this.

THE COURT: Are you saying that you're objecting to them filing a motion?

MR. QUINLAN: I see no basis for it, your Honor. There is no proper tactic here. What they're asking in that motion is to come forward with evidence that is totally irrelevant to whether or not there was an agreement or whether or not the terms were agreed to. That's what it's about.

And if they want to say this was a coerced type of thing, it requires clear and convincing evidence. And that's after they admit there's an agreement; you must have to set it aside. There is no evidence of that at all. At all. All they have is affidavits of third parties, affidavits of an individual, Mr. Tucker, who himself can't testify to what these people feel or don't feel.

He said, I think they were coerced. They just told us they weren't. And in fact the federal court couldn't see any basis to this. Nothing's new. They filed the same things in the federal court. So there's nothing here in front of your Honor to warrant any kind of allowing them to file these matters or to be heard.

These are things that they are just dissatisfied with. Well, they're dissatisfied with a lot of things. Frankly, we're dissatisfied with a lot of things.

THE COURT: Do you believe that it would be different if they came forward with a motion that was seeking to have the Court not approve the settlement because it was not a settlement, not agreed to, something wrong?

MR. QUINLAN: They showed that it had not been agreed or not settled to, and there was substantial evidence -- that is what the Illinois law requires is substantial evidence. It might require a hearing. But there's no substantial evidence of this. In fact, it's admitted.

THE COURT: What about an argument that perhaps there's something illegal about this settlement? I know there were some statements made about that the other day, but I don't really see that necessarily here in terms of something -- cases that are cited that says that there's some provision of this agreement that is contrary to Illinois law.

MR. QUINLAN: Well, if you notice in their pleading that they have filed -- actually it's a pleading, there's no complaint on file. There's actually nothing in front of your Honor other than a request to file a motion. So that there's no request to file a pleading. There's nothing that brings this case in front of the Court other than their motion.

And, your Honor, if the illegality of this -- I don't see any evidence of anything that's illegal. There's nothing here that radically changes the bylaws and says anything that's dramatic. We can never do "X" or we can never do "Y," or we immediately agree that we changed the law, the body of the law of Illinois, or whatever it might be. They're organized under the laws of the State of Illinois.

As any corporation, the laws of the state in which you are organized under are the laws that apply. They are organized under this state, and they are venued here in Illinois. Can they change it? Well, they have to look to the law of Illinois. That's where they chose to come and where they chose to do it. But they make no allegations in any way that this is wrong, illegal, or we're doing anything improper here in this particular consent decree.

All we're doing is articulating some things. That is the extent of the -- to change the number of directors, to agree to do something for a period of time. That does not in any way bind them to anything else. They have voluntarily agreed to do certain things. Other parties have voluntarily agreed not to do things which enabled us to go forward. So there is nothing here in terms of the law that is set forward. There's nothing that would contest that. There's nothing illegal. And if they did that, they'd have to do it by some motion as set forth, some basis for an illegal act of the body.

But this was mediation. There is nothing illegal about mediation, there is nothing illegal about the topics, there is nothing illegal about what was being done. As counsel for the Foundation pointed out, this is what's done all the time. This is a typical type of thing a board would consider. It's a typical type of thing going forward that you'd look at. A decree, a mediation, a resolution of this. Boards across the world consider these type of things all the time.

And for counsel to come in here and suggest at the eleventh hour that there is something strange that's going on here and to suggest deposing the mediator, I think is just outlandish, your Honor. There is absolutely no basis for that. You know, the whole point here, they talk about stuff that's outside the state. We can take all of these depositions of people around the world. I don't know what they can add. I really don't. And I don't see how they can add anything to it, other than to say they have opinions about what might happen, et cetera.

I also would ask that even the documents that have been filed by architects and others and real estate brokers, all they talk about is what somebody might have wanted to do about renting property, of using property, et cetera.

As we all know from anything to dealing with the states, a lot of people met and intended to do a lot of things that they never got around to doing. And it didn't happen. Nobody changed the location of the Foundation from Illinois. Nobody changed the bylaws, nobody moved.

It was a question of what everybody was thinking. Everybody was looking for a better place and a better forum for the Terra Museum. And they had talked about that before, which all the parties admit. Can we find a better place in Chicago? How can we move this? How can we move around to get this out and get a better exposure?

And these are the things that were mediated, and these were the things that were resolved. So to suggest now that we could come in and just raise it at the eleventh hour -- they say they never knew about the intent of the Attorney General. They never realized this is what he wanted.

They knew from the very beginning, your Honor. They knew throughout this. These were things that if they wanted to raise to you, if they wanted to object, they could have done so. They agreed and they entered into the order to fully participate in this mediation and never withdrew that until they came in at the eleventh hour and attempted to file these pleadings in federal court.

THE COURT: No, they gave directions to their counsel to stop participating in meetings.

MR. QUINLAN: On the 4th of June. So we're talking about something that never took place at this time. And of course we have contrary affidavits that could attest to just the contrary intent. That was the issue that would need to be tried and need to be resolved. But that wasn't really part of the mediation. The approach of mediation is to remove the issues of which people are in contest about and to seek those things that you are in agreement about. And that's how you resolve it.

THE COURT: Mr. Quinlan, have you ever heard of a situation where there's been a court-ordered mediation, and then everybody comes in and puts the mediator on the stand and has all the mediation completely aired? Have you all been able to find any cases where that's been done?

MR. QUINLAN: No, your Honor.

THE COURT: How about you all? Have you ever been able to --

MR. BELLOWS: I haven't researched it, your Honor, but I would say in that regard that certainly the Court's entitled to go beyond -- behind any settlement to determine whether it was obtained by fraud.

If the Court feels that Mr. Hilliard is, by virtue of his appointment, sacrosanct in these proceedings -- I'm not saying that in the pejorative -- then I could understand that. I could even sympathize with it. But that does not mean in and of itself that the Court's not entitled to some of the other information that can be obtained from this hearing. I've heard all kinds of things, your Honor. Well, you know, there's really nothing fundamentally changed here. Nothing fundamentally changed here.

THE COURT: Well, there's a lot that's changed. There is no issue that there is a lot that has changed. One of the most significant things and, quite frankly, one of the things that surprised me the most is this board agreed that the entire board was going to resign. When I read that, I was very surprised. But that's what was decided and voted on by the majority. I didn't expect that to come out of this.

MR. BELLOWS: Well, I'd like to speak to whether it was voted on by the majority. First of all, as the Court has heard from Mr. Hilliard, at the very beginning of this session today, Mr. Hilliard said the vote was taken on June 19. It was ratified on June 29th. That's what Mr. Hilliard said.

THE COURT: Well, perhaps it wasn't --

MR. BELLOWS: I don't know whether you agree with it or don't agree with it, but what I'm saying is that on June the 19th it was a 6 to 5 vote.

THE COURT: Well, it wasn't a vote of the board because there was no board meeting. It was a mediation session on June 19th. The board did not meet till Friday.

MR. BELLOWS: Your Honor, I think, you know, that Mr. Hilliard was certainly capable of articulating what it was. His position was that it was ratified. I don't really care, your Honor, if it was unanimous.

I still think, your Honor, notwithstanding the statement of counsel, that it doesn't matter what the Court believes. That's insane. This Court is here to determine questions of this nature. Is this corporation acting pursuant to its charter, to its bylaws, and just going out and changing the charter and the bylaws? If that action of changing the charter and the bylaws is inappropriate, if the vote could change the charter and the bylaws it participated in by people who should not have been voting, should not have been voting. And to sit here and say, I haven't been coerced.

But, you know, the interesting thing about it, Judge, is that these statements were made in the context of all this pressure has been applied to me, but I'm voting my conscience.

That's the very point of this thing. It doesn't make any difference whether people felt that they were being coerced; they had something to lose by not making that vote. And what they had to lose, your Honor, was something that didn't have anything to do with the business of the Foundation. It was personal, their personal exposure. And as a result of that, your Honor, they should not have participated in the vote.

THE COURT: Who should not have participated?

MR. BELLOWS: I'm talking about the two people who made the statement that they weren't being coerced even though -- it's semicolon -- however, I think that what the Attorney General has done as far as attempting to coerce me, I think is terrible. I'm voting this way of my own conscience but I think it's terrible that he attempted to coerce me.

I think that the point of it, Judge, is they should not have participated in that vote by virtue of the fact that they had an inherent conflict between being threatened personally and participating in the vote on the Foundation.

Counsel has also indicated we're going to be taking depositions around the world. I said just the opposite. That the people from around the world are people whose affidavits we can get fully and freely.

But with regard to the evidence I think that the Court should hear is the same evidence that it would hear in determining whether a settlement agreement had been procured by inappropriate means, by coercion, by fraud, by any of those things.

And I think that the Court has the responsibility, Judge, notwithstanding the fact that there has been this mediation process, to objectively review the result, notwithstanding the vote.

THE COURT: Are you suggesting that I interview those two board members to find out whether or not they were coerced?

MR. BELLOWS: That's not the issue.

THE COURT: Have you even spoken to either of them to -- I have no affidavits from them. I have absolutely nothing to suggest --

MS. BELLOWS: Your Honor, if I may. We see this -- and I will answer your questions directly. But we see this in two large categories at least. We see the acts that led up to the mediation process. I should say three categories; the acts which led to the mediation process to which all agreed, the decision to mediate.

But those acts involved misrepresentations to this Court which led this Court to grant a motion for intervention on the Attorney General's behalf to begin with. And those misrepresentations, it is our position, involved the intent of Dan Terra to keep the museum in Illinois.

But for that representation and the decision of this Court to give the Attorney General access to the mediation process, not so much to protect the citizens of Illinois from the -- not so much to assure the citizens of Illinois the enforcement of the laws and the regulations and the proper conduct of foundations, which the citizens of Illinois are entitled to, but more to the point to enforce an intent which was not proven by any evidentiary proceeding before your Honor.

So we have the pre-mediation. We have what happened during the mediation, and counsel -- Mr. Quinlan -- has -- and we strongly agree that evidence and proof are what are needed in this instance.

The acts which took place to which Dr. Stebbins referred, the threatening -- these are not my words, counsel read them -- threatening tactics of the Attorney General, the only attorney seated throughout that mediation process. When somebody states that in the same sentence that they indicate the incredible importance of the preservation of their credibility, and in the next sentence says, And I abhor the threatening tactics, but I agree of my own free will, I believe it is the Court's duty to question what that meant.

Now, you could bring Dr. Stebbins and

Dr. Marshall into this court and question them under oath, but it is the essence of intimidation; the better the intimidation, the less this Court will hear that they voted for anything other than by their own free will. The more successful the intimidator, the less likely the intimidatee to come forward and say, You're right, your Honor, I was intimidated. I felt I would lose 90 percent of my funding which I receive from the State of Illinois -- in Dr. Stebbins' position -- and perhaps be subject to continued inquiry by the Attorney General, which Dr. Marshall said right in the same sentence, probably a semicolon.

Yes, of my own free will, but I would like to acknowledge that the Attorney General has come into my academy and is in the process of making inquiries. The very same office of the Attorney General that is seated at the mediation, your Honor.

Those to me are the beginnings of pretty substantial evidence and proof that there is something wrong with the free discussion that should be taking place in the mediation.

And then I have my third category if you'll permit me, your Honor. And that third category is, is the agreement that was reached something that the Court should in fact sign, agree to, consent to? And for a number of reasons the answer is no.

Let's start with a simple one, the power of negotiation. One of the provisions that your Honor asked Mr. Quinlan and Ms. Stone about earlier was, is it a fact that as part of this order that I just -- I saw a few minutes ago, so I'm absorbing it as we go.

But is it a fact that one of the provisions of this order is that the Terra Foundation will be asked to negotiate with some -- perhaps somebody could help me with the exact wording -- but some entity as to the future of the collection?

Now, the only entity in this city, the one that we regard very, very highly, but the only entity that I know of, your Honor, that would be a likely candidate to accept this collection, would be the Art Institute of Chicago. Putting aside for the moment that our esteemed mediator is in fact a well-known lover and board member committed to the Art Institute -- and when this came up, frankly, I have to say might well have considered when the word "art" came slashed with "institute" that perhaps as far as the appearance of a fair and open discussion might have suggested that another mediator come forward.

THE COURT: This was also very fully discussed with all of the parties before the mediator was selected, and everybody agreed, including Mr. Crowe. And no mediator was even considered unless we had agreement. And Mr. Hilliard's association with the Art Institute was disclosed from day one.

MS. BELLOWS: Absolutely, your Honor. I think that Mr. Hilliard's resume is well known to everyone in the city of Chicago and his lack of bias generally accepted. However, combine that with the tactics of the Attorney General to which Mr. Hilliard could never have assumed.

I don't think that Mr. Hilliard would ever have anticipated that right smack dab toward the end of his mediation process would the Attorney General choose that time to file an inquiry directed at one of the participants in the mediation, specifically Dr. Marshall.

What curious timing that at the end of May, as the mediation is coming to a close, the people who have the control over the timing of that inquiry would choose to file an inquiry as opposed to two or three weeks later.

Putting that aside -- not totally aside -- but moving back to the power of negotiation, how difficult it is, what common sense it is, to understand that no entity has the ability to negotiate if there is only one side negotiating. If there is nothing -- no other entity in the city of Chicago able to accept this collection -- and they are being directed only to negotiate with an art entity for partnership in the city of Chicago, limited to that --

THE COURT: I don't read that the Art Institute is the only entity. There were lots of discussions in this mediation process. You're just assuming the Art Institute.

MS. BELLOWS: No, I am assuming the Art Institute because of the phrasing of the consent judgment, your Honor.

THE COURT: Which paragraph?

MS. BELLOWS: If somebody could help me find it, I would.

MR. CARLSON: It's paragraph 11, your Honor, right at the end. Not to interrupt counsel in her argument, but the words there are "Chicago metropolitan area." I was involved in the drafting of the order, and it was intended to allow the corporation to talk with Northwestern University. I don't know how far the Chicago metropolitan area extends, but it was designed to be much broader than just the city of Chicago.

MS. BELLOWS: To that point, your Honor, the only entity of the caliber that would accept this collection in the metropolitan area of the city of Chicago is undeniably the Art Institute.

If I am incorrect, then again I submit that evidence and proof would be a discussion for what other entities the Terra Foundation's board would have the ability to negotiate freely so that they could determine the simple items, such as what commitment will an institution make to the Terra collection when it arrives. In what way will it be displayed and as a whole or piecemeal? What kind of money will they spend to ensure that it is properly marketed and that it is properly -- that the public not only in the city of Chicago and state of Illinois, but according to Dan Terra's intent, the global public and certainly the national public would have the opportunity.

The type of institute that if your Honor probably in her discussions relating to would be the Corcoran Museum or the National Gallery or the Philadelphia Art Museum. There are a number of museums of the caliber of the Art Institute, those in Chicago. And I would say none compare. Nonetheless, there was no beauty contest.

And this agreement forecloses the free and powerful negotiation of the kind of agreement that would be undeniably part of any situation where you would put a collection out to bid, so to speak. It is to me so much a matter of common sense that that small sentence should be read very carefully by this Court as it recognizes whether or not this Court should sign this agreement.

Let me speak to self-governance. I cannot say at this moment what the composition of the major boards of significant foundations are in the Chicago area, much less the United States at this moment. Evidence and proof will show that.

I suspect, your Honor, that it will be hard to show foundations of this character who are precluded from choosing -- or who are precluded from choosing board members who are not -- a majority of whom are not members of the citizens of the state of Illinois.

I would submit, your Honor, though without evidence today, and that's one of the reasons we would like to go forward with this hearing, that the Field Museum, that the Art Institute itself perhaps, that the Museum of Contemporary Art, and the Science and Industry Museum, and the Aquarium do not have in their bylaws a governance position where they are required to have a majority of their members from the State of Illinois.

THE COURT: Is there anything illegal about that?

MS. BELLOWS: Is it illegal? It is certainly overreaching, and it might -- I would hope that counsel for the Foundation wouldn't draft something that they thought was illegal.

But the question is, if the Attorney General of the state of Illinois now comes into a private foundation without proof of wrongdoing in any way and takes over the governance of the foundation to the extent that they're able to negotiate an agreement which names the parties on the board, requires the Attorney General to have approval as to where the Attorney General's office -- not the board, the board has given up its right to self-governance -- to require the Attorney General to say yea or nay as to whether this organization can stay in the state of Illinois in the future.

MS. STONE: Your Honor, may I respond very briefly?

THE COURT: Yes.

MS. STONE: I have four points. First, let me correct a misimpression about my earlier statement. Of course, what the Court thinks about the validity of the settlement --

THE COURT: Oh, I didn't take offense at that at all. But --

MS. STONE: My point is an important --

THE COURT: -- I agree with --

MS. STONE: -- board should run the organization.

THE COURT: Right. As long as they're doing it properly.

MS. STONE: Right. And the point is that your Honor cannot substitute her business judgment; none of us can substitute our business judgment or the business judgment of the directors of the Foundation. That's point one, and that was all I intended, your Honor.

Number two, as your Honor pointed out, a corporation can through the majority of its directors, decide to actually limit its powers by voting amendments to its bylaws. And we do believe, your Honor, that what the board has agreed to is indeed a further restriction of its powers far beyond what existed when this case was first filed.

The Foundation has never agreed with the very crabbed and limited and, quite frankly, far-fetched interpretation that the plaintiffs in the AG had of the bylaws that were in existence at the time this case was filed.

At the time this case was filed, this Foundation was free to operate outside of Illinois. However, the board of directors, exercising its business judgment, has agreed to this agreement, this settlement, that does contemplate certain restrictions for 50 years.

The third point, your Honor -- and included within that restriction is also the residency requirement. Again, Ms. Bellows points out that this is somewhat unusual. It may be, your Honor, but it is what the board of directors exercising their business judgment has decided to do.

The third point, your Honor, is that the Court should not, and counsel in their zeal should not, impose further restrictions upon the board and the board has agreed. The board has not agreed to partner with the Art Institute. That should be very clear.

All the board has done is to set up a strategic planning committee with certain directors and shall try to negotiate a partnership with another Chicago metropolitan area institution with the goal of ceasing to operate a stand-alone museum in Chicago. There is no guarantee it's going to be the Art Institute, there's no guarantee it's going to be with anyone. And that should be abundantly clear to this Court, and that should be understood by everyone. That was the deal that was struck. An attempt to arrange a forced marriage with the Art Institute was not the end result of the mediation process.

And then the final point, your Honor, has to do with the comments of Dr. Marshall and Dr. Stebbins at the board meeting. I believe it was Ms. Bellows, and perhaps Mr. Bellows as well, who made the point that you can't really trust what these directors are saying because they are so intimidated that they're not going to 'fess up to the fact that they're being coerced.

I think that, your Honor, you need to look at the totality of what they said. Dr. Marshall readily admitted to the fact-finding investigation, and Dr. Stebbins took specific pointed issue with the tactics -- his words -- used by the Attorney General.

I think that sort of vigorous attack on the Attorney General shows that, in fact, he was not cowed, he was not silenced. He felt that he could indeed express his free will and point out that he did not appreciate the way the Attorney General has conducted himself during this litigation and during the mediation, but that nevertheless, for all of the reasons he articulated, for all the reasons he thought it was important to remain in Chicago, he thought this was the best outcome for the Foundation.

Again, it's not what I think, it's not what anyone else thinks. It's what Dr. Stebbins, Dr. Marshall, and the four other people who voted for this think. We had a vote, it was 6 to 2. This is what the board wants to do.

MR. TODD: Your Honor --

THE COURT: One second. Very briefly, I'm just about to wrap this up. But I realize I haven't heard from the Attorney General, but I'm even going to hold off on doing that unless Mr. Perkins strongly objects.

But go ahead.

MR. TODD: Your Honor, may I just reply to the issue of coercion and the fact that Dr. Stebbins and Dr. Marshall have both apparently said that they were not coerced; this was of their free will.

It is rare, indeed exceedingly rare, that one who has been the victim of coercion, particularly coercion by a state and a state prosecutor then says, after having been victimized in that sense and their free will been taken away from them and they're both corrupted and deluded, then to come in and say, And by the way, effectively I didn't have the moral courage to stand up to the pressures that brought to bear on me by the Attorney General of the State of Illinois.

You, I submit, are not going to hear in either sworn testimony or through affidavits or declarations Dr. Stebbins or Dr. Marshall saying that. That brings us to the fact that that is a fact issue for this Court, as are many issues that we have raised in the pleadings, fact issues for the Court.

For example, the Attorney General injected himself into this case in what I submit was merely a misrepresentation to the Court that, namely, that Dan Terra wanted this Foundation to remain here in Chicago or in Illinois. The overwhelming evidence is to the contrary.

Let me just show you, hand up to the Court, this is a change of address that Dan Terra --

THE COURT: I've seen that document, yes.

MR. TODD: Well, I submit to you, your Honor, that Mr. Quinlan argues that there's no evidence on these fact issues. There is already substantial evidence on each one of the fact issues on coercion, the fact that this vote that occurred last Friday was, as a matter of law, under Illinois law, a nullity.

It was unlawful, and therefore the purported change in the bylaws is also unlawful. It requires six people on that board to vote in favor of a change in bylaws, i.e. the settlement.

That didn't happen if Dr. Marshall and Dr. Stebbins were coerced. And that's the evidence that we merely want an opportunity to present to the Court.

THE COURT: And how are you going to develop that further than what you have? You have the two individuals who have said, We are not coerced.

MR. BELLOWS: It doesn't matter, Judge.

THE COURT: Well, what else are you going to do? What are you planning to do?

MR. BELLOWS: I think it's important for the Court to understand what kind of power was brought to bear against them, okay? And then the Court will determine whether there was a conflict. Whether the person acknowledges it, understands it, appreciates what happened, there is a purpose that is contrary --

THE COURT: But how are you going to present --

MR. BELLOWS: -- to the purpose of the Foundation. A fiduciary cannot serve the Foundation if he or she has a personal interest that is 180 degrees opposed to their responsibility as a fiduciary. Counsel --

THE COURT: I understand that. I'm trying to figure out. You've got two people saying, We were not coerced. Most of the affidavits, declarations, things you've given me, have nothing to do with that issue; they have to do with Dan Terra's intent.

I'm talking about the coercion issue.

Certainly deposing a mediator isn't going to get you anything on the coercion issue. So what are you talking about as far as proceeding on coercion?

MR. TODD: For one thing, we have heard from Dr. Marshall and Dr. Stebbins -- apparently, we only have it secondhand -- of what their position was at the board meeting. We haven't gotten sworn testimony and/or a declaration from them that, Yes, indeed, that is my position. That's what happened.

We also haven't examined the circumstances surrounding how they purportedly came from a position of opposing such a settlement which had such a draconian difference in the intent of Dan Terra to one of, Okay, lock it up in Illinois, we're switching gears.

Okay. Take all the board members that are here now and change them completely and make sure that the Attorney General -- make sure that only people -- that a majority are from the state of Illinois. That I submit to you, the force of the common sense of the difference between the original position and their position last Friday despite the fact that they say, Well, the Attorney General's threats to me, which I abhor, didn't have anything to do with it, is a fact issue for this Court. And the circumstances around the change have to be aired and have to be aired publicly in this proceeding.

Secondly, we have proof or we develop proof about what the Attorney General did and when he did it and why he did it. And the proof before the Court right now is, that yes, mediation originally was agreed to, but it became clear to the Attorney General during that mediation that he may not or did not have the votes to force through a lockup in Illinois. And then, and only then, do we see the intimidation that was brought to bear against Dr. Stebbins and Dr. Marshall.

And then, again, as I say, a change in, I would submit, heart and mind, at least objectively -- but I submit it was only a change in what these people did, not in their hearts, and it was not a change in their mind; that was of their own free will. And that's what makes this vote unlawful.

MS. BELLOWS: On what basis, for instance, did the Attorney General commence its inquiry against the Academy?

THE COURT: Has anybody spoken to the Attorney General? Have you all even talked to Mr. Perkins about any of this?

MS. BELLOWS: Mr. Perkins, remember, was in Canada last week.

THE COURT: Well, he's back now, and you've been making an awful lot of very serious allegations. And I don't know whether you've even -- as far as I know, and I know nothing about this -- they have been contemplating some action of what -- against this Academy or thinking about looking into whatever they were looking into -- and I don't know even know what they've done -- for quite sometime.

You know, you've come into court and you've filed a number of things, and they sound very, very dramatic. But I don't see anything here supported by affidavit. I don't see anything here supportive of any substance. You've got lots of affidavits about Dan Terra's intent. That's how this whole lawsuit started out.

And I rejected James Terra from coming into this case and said he couldn't because we were going to go to mediation. And I was going to let him come in in the event mediation didn't work out, and we were going to talk about Dan Terra's intent. Maybe.

And there were some other issues in this case, much, much -- equally as significant as Mr. Terra's intent. And that was the plaintiff and the Attorney General's verified pleadings about waste and mismanagement here. Those issues were very much the subject of the mediation also. So there were -- everything ended up going in and being talked about in this mediation --

MR. BELLOWS: But not business judgment, your Honor. Ms. Stone is sitting there saying the board was exercising its business judgment. Your Honor, of all of the numbered paragraphs, fourteen numbered paragraphs, with the exception of the jurisdictional statement, what business judgment, what did the Terra Foundation get for the agreement for a 50-year lockup? What did it get for agreeing that the Foundation conduct its affairs in accordance with the wishes of the Attorney General? What did it get for at least 50 years that the Foundation shall maintain and exhibit the Terra collection of American art either by itself or through partnerships with institutions in the Chicago area?

THE COURT: Mr. Bellows, I don't want to speak right now to the Foundation's -- the board members who voted, but it seems obvious to me that what this foundation may get from an approval of this mediation is the ability to move on and the ability to keep an important collection together to avoid what is starting out very slowly, but would go years before this litigation would be done.

There are issues right now of this board not even being able to meet, not even being able to have an executive committee meeting, not even being able to go on with its business. There's a lot that it would have gotten.

But this is what I need to do based on the pleadings that I have right now. And I realize that I haven't even asked the Attorney General to speak.

So I don't think anybody's spoken to you, and I don't think it's fair for you to have to defend yourself without them even having spoken to you about this first.

I need a motion to approve the consent decree because I don't have that. I have a one-page letter from the mediator, and I have a proposed consent decree. And attached to that motion I need the copies of whatever the bylaw changes were and the transcript.

And I'm going to allow any party to this case to file a written objection supported by affidavits as to why the consent decree should not be approved. However, the issues are coercion and illegality and those issues only.

I do not want to hear anything more about intent of the original founder or anything about any of these affidavits from people all over the world and change of address and all of that. That is not before the Court on this motion to approve the consent decree, so the defendants do not have leave to file these objections.

So this motion for leave to file these objections is going to be denied. Let's get the proposed consent decree. Let's get the attachments to it, whatever is to be read. When you get those, by all means, Mr. Perkins isn't under any kind of a gag order.

Are you willing to speak to counsel for the defendants about this?

MR. PERKINS: I'll be glad to, Judge.

MS. BELLOWS: About the investigation that's taking place against himself?

MR. PERKINS: To the extent I can, Judge, I'll be glad to share some information. However, that's a private person who has a right to be protected.

THE COURT: I understand.

MR. PERKINS: And these people perhaps have no basis or they obviously have no knowledge about what's going on. So we'll get to that. But I'll be glad to answer some questions.

THE COURT: Okay. And then the other thing that I just want to make sure. I want to make it absolutely clear, we are not at any time in this proceeding deposing the mediator in this case.

And as of right now, the documents that were granted leave to be filed under seal on Friday, they're going to stay that way for now. You don't have leave to file these documents today because let's get their motion. I think it would be very, very helpful before you file a motion objecting to what went on Friday, you really knew what went on Friday. So why don't you get the transcript because I assume that hasn't been made available to any one of --

MS. STONE: No, it's not. We only have a very rough draft, your Honor.

MR. GARMENT: We have heard the tape recording of it. I mean, it was recorded.

Your Honor, may I just say this. The Attorney General said he does not want to get into the matter of something involving a private person. I think your Honor is right, that issues such as Dan Terra's intent are secondary to what is the central issue in this case. And that is whether or not crucial votes were obtained by the improper intervention by the Attorney General.

We are entitled to examine the Attorney General representative and the persons who were involved in the initiation under these more than coincidental circumstances in the switch of the crucial votes that turned this Foundation from one level of management to another. With all of its implications to fasten the property here in the state of Illinois, make no suggestion that it would not be properly administered in the state of Illinois. But it is a taking of property of a very serious order involving acts, undeniable acts on the part of the Attorney General's Office at the time that the question of the exercise of discretion was being considered by the crucial parties --

THE COURT: I'm sorry, counsel, you're saying "undeniable act." We haven't even let him talk.

MR. GARMENT: Your Honor, may I just finish? We are entitled as a matter of law to take testimony to have people testify about the circumstances in which this dramatic shift, which spells the extinction of a long-standing foundation, which destroys its ability to operate freely, which sends a message to the world that if you bring a foundation to Illinois, you are subject to the intervention of the Attorney General to fasten those assets in the state of Illinois on pretext. And so far it's all pretext.

There has not been an evidentiary hearing with respect to the central issues since the beginning of this case nor has the public through the press been empowered to make its own judgments about what is going on in this case.

THE COURT: This entire record with the exception of the mediation has been fully open to the press and --

MR. GARMENT: But the mediation is the heart of the problem. The mediation has been infected by the actions of the Attorney General. That is our allegation, and we are entitled to have a day in court to prove it.

THE COURT: And I'm not saying that you may or you may not have a day in court. I'm saying you need to have a verified pleading directed to these issues before the Court. And once I see a verified pleading directed to the issues of intimidation from the Attorney General, it will determine whether or not there needs to be some additional discovery regarding those allegations.

But that's not this document. I don't have any affidavits in this document. I don't have anything from anybody that suggests that the Attorney General has exercised pressure. I have a hearsay affidavit that was attached or a declaration that was attached in a federal court paper from the defendant Tucker. And I think that's essentially it.

MR. GARMENT: We may ask the Attorney General who is here whether or not these proceedings were started and that draft complaint circulated under the circumstances --

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor --

MR. GARMENT: -- contained in our pleading.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, we object. This maligning of the Attorney General --

THE COURT: Okay. Rather than ask him --

MR. QUINLAN: -- without any basis whatsoever is really outlandish. And, first of --

THE COURT: Slow down.

MR. QUINLAN: -- all, those documents --

THE COURT: I said slow down. She didn't get that and you want this in the transcript. Slow down.

MR. QUINLAN: The documents that he's talking about and the contentions he's talking about were found to be lawful acts by the federal court and also were the changing of the vote found to be lawful acts.

MR. GARMENT: Not right.

MR. QUINLAN: I don't know what the burden of proof is elsewhere, your Honor, but the burden of proof here is on Mr. Garment, not on the Attorney General to disavow something. We're talking about a McCarthy type of proceeding here. We come and make an accusation and the Attorney General is supposed to now come up and disavow himself of doing anything wrong in his life.

THE COURT: The Attorney -- just one second --

MR. GARMENT: It is not an accusation. Your Honor, it is --

THE COURT: Counsel. The Attorney General --

MR. GARMENT: -- not an accusation. It is an admission on the part of the Attorney General --

THE COURT: You can stop the transcript if you want. She's not taking any of that down.

There have been some very serious allegations lodged against the Attorney General in this case. These documents were filed in federal court presumably on Thursday when Mr. Perkins wasn't even in the country. He has not had an opportunity because you all have not even talked to him about any of this. And he does not have to defend himself in any way today in front of this Court based on the status of what I have in front of me. Because right now there's nothing in front of me verified to defend.

You will have an opportunity to file something. Once they file -- and that means the Foundation -- a petition to approve the consent decree, the only thing I need to talk to you about is the scheduling of this. I'm only here for a couple of weeks. How long will it take the Foundation to make the motion for me to approve the consent decree?

MS. STONE: Your Honor, in order to -- the mechanics, in order to file that motion, we need the original signatures from Messrs. Buntrock and Gidwitz and the Attorney General before anyone from the Foundation is authorized to sign. That is what the resolution states.

So I see that the mediator, I think, tried to kind of cut to the chase in terms of what he submitted to you, and he has something that purports to be Stephanie Pace Marshall's signature on it. That's not actually accurate as a matter of corporate law. She's not actually empowered to sign it yet until we have the signatures from all three of the other signing parties.

THE COURT: Is that going to be a big deal? Can we just get their signatures?

MS. STONE: We have a clean form here. We could get -- well, I think we need Mr. Buntrock's and Mr. Gidwitz's signatures.

MR. CARLSON: Would it be faxed around to counsel for all of the parties this morning, your Honor? Or -- yes, a copy of the consent judgment, the decree. And if we get signatures, we can have it on file Friday, Monday, whenever it's --

THE COURT: So by Friday perhaps can you get on file a petition to approve the consent decree with the transcript and everything ready?

MS. STONE: Yes, your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. And then I assume --

MS. STONE: Assuming we get the signatures.

THE COURT: And I assume that the only parties that want to file any objections to this are the defendants. And when -- I don't know who to look to because there have been so many of you. When do you wish to file objections to the proposed consent degree?

MR. BELLOWS: 21 days.

THE COURT: 21? I leave on July 27th. And I would like to have a chance to decide whether or not there's going to be any kind of discovery or evidentiary proceeding here because I would expect that you would do that while -- perhaps while I was gone.

This consent decree provides for the new board to take over and for everything to be done by August 1st. And I'm willing to expedite this as much as I need to in order to get this done.

MR. BELLOWS: Are you ordering the Attorney General to submit himself -- or the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Perkins, to submit himself to interrogation by us.

THE COURT: I am not ordering the Attorney General, based on what I have in front of me, to do anything. But he has indicated to you that he is willing to talk to you, and I think a good starting point is to talk to him first. He is a public official. He will not compromise any ongoing investigation, but I would expect that he will cooperate with you as fully as he can and answer any concerns you have.

MR. BELLOWS: You have that on the record. Not your statements, his statement.

THE COURT: Well, I have no doubt that Mr. Perkins is going to cooperate and answer whatever questions you have without compromising ongoing investigations.

MR. PERKINS: That's correct, Judge.

THE COURT: Now, can you within a week of -- I mean, this isn't any big surprise here. You know what they're going to file. Within a week can you file some type of a verified document to see whether or not we even need to have --

MR. TODD: Your Honor, may we have two weeks for this reason? I'm scheduled to leave on Thursday for a long, planned trip, a business trip, where I'm going to be meeting with over 200 of my clients in the Mideast, and it would be extremely difficult for me to change that. I will be back here July 12th, so if your Honor could compromise and give us two weeks from Friday and we will get it done.

MR. CARLSON: Your Honor, as far as we're concerned, all our petition is going to be is a petition for the Court to approve the consent judgment, the decree, and I will attach probably the resolution that was passed by the board. To get all the formalities done, I would probably like until Friday to do it, but counsel can assume -- he already knows what we're going to be filing, and if two weeks from today is some time in which he can be done with whatever he wants, maybe we could speed it up a little bit.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, there are things under the consent decree that are expected to be done speedily so that the board can continue to operate and operate appropriately.

We also note there's three different sets of counsel here. I would imagine that somebody could pick up for counsel who's not available.

MR. GARMENT: Your Honor, may I just make a brief statement?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. GARMENT: I know I've spoken with a certain amount of vehemence today, but this case started with some demonstrably false and very serious allegations against the defendants. They have not been proved. There has not been a hearing to present a bit of evidence in support of those allegations.

THE COURT: And they remain unproven.

MR. GARMENT: And it is our intention, and we ask leave to file an amended answer which will raise those issues in terms of -- our present contemplation is to assert counterclaims, which we are entitled to do under an amended pleading.

These issues have never come into focus, and what has happened is through the intervention of the Attorney General, in cooperation with Messrs. Gidwitz and Buntrock, who were the dissenting directors who did not want consideration given to any kind of change in the venue of the museum activities, this process was brought to a halt.

Your Honor understandably tried to find a solution through a mediation process. That mediation process stopped everything except the actions that were necessary in the view of the Attorney General to bring the process to the conclusion he wanted.

And we have standing out inexplicably, but clearly demonstrated, the fact of two crucial votes being switched in the last few weeks on the basis or in absolute concurrence with interventions on the part of the Attorney General that were threatening to these two directors.

That I submit is enough for us to ask leave to present evidence, to ask for witnesses to come forward and testify about the circumstances of their intervention, Messrs. Gidwitz and Buntrock, the Attorney General, and the votes that were switched. That will not take much time. That does not involve affidavits from all over the world. That involves a discrete hearing process under oath where people have to explain why they did it, when they did it, so that your Honor can determine whether or not this is a free voluntary action of a majority of the board of a huge and extremely important national art collection that happens to be temporarily lodged in Chicago.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, first of all --

THE COURT: I'm sorry, what you really were saying was two different things. If you're at this point asking leave to file additional pleadings in this case, as far as a counterclaim, that leave is not granted. You would have to come in the way we normally do it here on a motion for leave to file with a document proposed. I need to know who it is against and what the cause of action is, and whether or not it's affected one way or the other by this mediated settlement. That's a totally separate issue.

What you've said about the opportunity to take discovery, I have not foreclosed that. I'm saying based on what you filed, there's nothing to take discovery on right now. I have nothing verified from these defendants to suggest that this Court should not approve this settlement, and I am willing to let you file something.

But the date that I have available to hear this is -- the date I have is July 24th in the afternoon, and that's moving a case that I already have. And I want to be able to seriously consider anything that you're going to file. And I don't want, like I had today, ten minutes before I have to come out here and be given a document. I would like to be able to take it home and review it.

So you can file the motion to approve the consent decree by July 6th, and if you can all get a response filed on time by the 19th of July -- can you do July 19th?

MS. BELLOWS: May I remind the Court that one of our clients, Dr. Tucker, is in Italy and the second of our clients is available; Judith Terra is in Washington, D.C. But the third of our clients is presently somewhere in Russia. So I do not want to make the setting of the date a cause celebre. On the other hand, I do believe that we should be able to be in touch with those clients prior to filing.

THE COURT: Well, today is the 2nd, and your response would not be due until the 19th. And if you can't get in touch with your clients by the 19th, then there's a big problem.

MS. BELLOWS: Oh, I'm sorry, your Honor. I thought that you were looking to us to file a pleading on July 6th.

THE COURT: No. Just the --

MS. BELLOWS: I apologize, your Honor.

THE COURT: -- and your response would be the 19th, and if the plaintiffs or the parties seeking to enforce this settlement want to file any kind of reply, because I would expect whatever the response is, it's going to have case law. It's going to have an affidavit. There's going to be some type of a firsthand affidavit that says the Attorney General's done something wrong here.

And there's going to be case law that there might be something illegal about this settlement. Because I haven't even seen a trace of that yet. And any case law that you give or that you cite, you've got to give me a copy of the cases because I'm going to have to take them home.

And everybody else, if you want to respond to their cases or whatever, I'm going to give you until noon of the 23rd. I'm sorry it's going to wreck a weekend in July, but it's the best I can do for you. And I would see you July 24th at 2:00 o'clock. And I need somebody to draw an order.

In the meantime, those documents that were filed in Court on Friday, or were supposed to be filed, can just still be filed as they were supposed to have been on file, under seal.

I do not want to have any of the papers that relate to the mediation process made public at this time. I don't see any reason why we need to have that. I will entertain any kind of a motion to open them. Is there anything that -- I mean, if you all want it opened, then that's another thing.

MR. GARMENT: It should be opened.

THE COURT: Mr. Carlson, you wanted to say something?

MR. CARLSON: I was going to say now maybe this motion is moot in light of the fact that the individual defendants apparently have changed counsel. But previous counsel -- you know, they had a motion they noticed up for today for an order referring the matter to the State's Attorney of Cook County for investigation relating to breaches of the confidentiality provision, your Honor's order of February 5th.

THE COURT: I haven't seen that. I never got that motion.

MR. CARLSON: Oh, you didn't?

THE COURT: No. Nobody ever gave it to me.

MR. CARLSON: Well, we may very well file a motion on behalf of the Foundation, your Honor, relating to what are apparent breaches of your Honor's February 5th confidentiality order. There are articles that appeared in Crain, Chicago Business, and elsewhere suggesting that certain members of the board perhaps have been violating the confidentiality provisions that are currently in place. And that is of concern to the Foundation, getting the confidentiality provisions that are included in the consent judgment, which we hope to have that. I just want to alert the Court to the fact that we'll take a look at it and prepare an appropriate motion.

THE COURT: Okay. Please file that other document like you were supposed to have filed it on Friday. And the document you seek to file today, I'm not going to grant leave to file it. There's nothing objectionable or unconfidential in it; it's just that let's get their motion, and most of what this is all about is Dan Terra's intent. That's not what I'm going to look at when I either approve or not approve the settlement.

MR. QUINLAN: Your Honor, one other thing. You had mentioned about filing a counterclaim.

We'd object to that from a procedure point --

THE COURT: Well, he's not going to file it without a motion for leave, and you'd have a chance to see it and then come and tell me what --

MR. QUINLAN: Plus it would be procedurally out of place at this time because the mediation process obviously substituted here, and any motion for a counterclaim frankly is not timely. They never answered to this, so that any answer they'd have to seek --

MR. GARMENT: The injunction took the place of an answer.

MR. QUINLAN: No, the injunction didn't take the place --

THE COURT: There are individual defendants I don't believe ever filed an answer.

MR. QUINLAN: Never filed an answer.

MR. CARLSON: Dr. Tucker did.

MR. QUINLAN: Only Tucker did. But there was no counterclaim filed at that time. But no counterclaim would be appropriate at this time because the mediation process stopped all that.

So to get to that point, you'd have to set aside all the mediation process, the consent decree, the mediation, et cetera, and then if you wanted to file a counterclaim, we'd be back to square one to file this.

My only reason for raising this is that we're going to have enough to respond to in this short period of time, and I'd prefer we don't get into these collateral issues before they're appropriately in front of the Court.

MS. STONE: Your Honor, I do want to again -- we would have to object whenever anyone tries to seek to impose additional limitations on the proposed consent decree. The proposed consent decree does not release -- I'm sorry, does not in any way force the individual defendants to release any claims or rights they might have. I just need to point that out to the Court.

MR. QUINLAN: That has nothing to do with the counterclaim.

MS. BELLOWS: Well, your Honor, clearly you're correct. I mean, in such time as we file a motion for a counterclaim and attach a counterclaim if that's what we decide to do.

THE COURT: That's my 9:15 call. You give them notice. You bring it in and -- they'll have a chance to file a written response and objection to that.

Before we adjourn today, I want to express my sincere appreciation to Mr. Hilliard.

Mr. Hilliard, you've done a yeoman's effort since February, and I know it hasn't been easy. And I don't know whether or not you've ever been paid because I don't have access to that. But I assume that you are sending your bills to the Foundation, and in due course someone will have a vote and approve the payment of that if that's necessary.

And I want to make it clear if anybody -- I assume that if any counsel wants to have any discussion with Mr. Hilliard -- Mr. Hilliard, how do you feel about informal discussions with any counsel, or have you just about had it at this point?

MR. HILLIARD: They should meet me in my hotel room in London. I'm leaving tonight.

THE COURT: Good for you. Have a wonderful trip.

MR. KENNEDY: Just one last housekeeping matter. The September 25 is scheduled to expire today. We recommend until this is resolved to extend it to the 24th of July.

THE COURT: That's fine. Make it 5:00 o'clock. And if you'd draw me up some orders. And I would ask if you could kind of maybe do that in the conference room.

TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS, an Illinois Not-For-Profit Corporation, and James Ryan, Attorney General of Illinois,	)	Hon. Richard J. Billik
Defendants.	)

PLAINTIFF'S MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO TERRA FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Plaintiff, James D. Terra, as Independent Executor of the Estate of Daniel J. Terra, deceased, and individually, by his attorneys McBride Baker & Coles, submits this memorandum in opposition to defendant Terra Foundation For The Arts' motion to dismiss plaintiff's Complaint For Reformation.

I. BACKGROUND

The Terra Foundation For The Arts ("Foundation"), a not-for-profit corporation organized under the Illinois General Not-For-Profit Corporation Act, operates the Terra Museum of American Art in Chicago, Illinois and a related museum, Musee d'Art American Giverny, located in Giverny, France. (Complaint, ¶ 2.) Plaintiff is one of the three original incorporators of the Foundation, originally known as the Foundation for the Daniel J. Terra Museum. (Id., ¶ 1.) The other incorporators were plaintiff's father Daniel J. Terra and Robert Sugrue. (Id., ¶ 5.)

The Complaint alleges that prior to the creation of the Terra Museum in December 1978, the incorporators discussed the fact that the American art collection owned by Daniel J. Terra and plaintiff's mother Adelaine E. Terra was to be a gift to the people of Chicago and, accordingly, that the Terra Museum should always have a presence in the Chicago area to display the gift. (Id., ¶¶ 4, 6.) Contrary to that expressed intent and agreement of the incorporators, however, Article 5 of the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation ("Article 5") did not contain such a limitation. (Id., ¶ 6.)

Despite this mistake in Article 5, the Foundation has acted in accordance with the incorporators' intent by displaying its art in the Chicago area from its inception in 1978 to the present. It was only in September of 2000 that some of the directors of the Foundation planned to close the Terra Museum in Chicago and transfer its assets to Washington, D.C. or elsewhere. (Id., ¶ 7.)

Plaintiff first learned of the mistake in Article 5 at the time a lawsuit was filed in this court by two Foundation directors who seek to enjoin the planned closing of the Terra Museum in Chicago. (Complaint, ¶ 7.) After discovering that Article 5 did not contain the incorporators' original understanding and agreement that the Terra Museum would always have a presence in the Chicago area, plaintiff filed this Complaint for Reformation.

The Foundation has moved to dismiss plaintiff's Complaint under 735 ILCS 5/2-619 upon grounds of mootness and laches, and under 735 ILCS 5/2-615 for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, arguing that in Illinois corporate articles of incorporation are not subject to reformation. For the reasons that follow, the Foundation's motion to dismiss misstates the background facts, misapplies chancery principles, and should therefore be denied.

II. THE 1994 AMENDMENT TO ARTICLE 5 DOES NOT RENDER PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR REFORMATION MOOT BECAUSE THE ARTICLE WAS NOT "RESTATED"

The Foundation correctly points out that the original 1978 Article 5 was amended in 1994 by its board of directors (Foundation's Motion to Dismiss, ¶ 3). The Foundation then argues that plaintiff has improperly filed a claim for reformation of that original Article. According to the Foundation, plaintiff's claim for reformation is moot, because the amended Article 5 supercedes the original 1978 Article 5, which no longer has any continuing legal effect. Foundation's Memorandum In Support of Motion To Dismiss ("Memo."), pp. 5-6. According to the Foundation,

> The Article 5 that Plaintiff seeks to have reformed is no longer in force. Any legal issues between Plaintiff and the Foundation relating to Article 5 have ceased to exist.

(Id., p. 6.). The foundation is plainly incorrect because it bases its argument on the false premise that Article 5 and the entire Articles of Incorporation were "restated" by the Foundation board in 1994 and therefore have been superceded (Memo., p. 5, 8).[1] Section 105/110.35(2)(c) of the Not-For-Profit Corporation Act states:

> (c) If the amendment restates the articles of incorporation, such restated articles of incorporation shall, upon such amendment becoming effective, supersede and stand in lieu of the corporation's preexisting articles of incorporation. (Emphasis added).

(805 ILCS 105/110.35(2)(c)). In the present case, contrary to the Foundation's argument the 1978 articles were not restated, nor amended out of existence. Only a few words of Article 5 were changed or added.

[1] Only the by-laws of the Foundation were restated in 1994 (see Exhibit A attached hereto). The amendment to Article 5 that was filed on August 26, 1994 with the Illinois Secretary of State is attached to the Foundation's Motion to Dismiss as Exhibit 1. It does not state that Article 5 is "restated" as required by Section 105/110.35(2)(c) of the Act in order to legally "supercede" the original Articles.

But amendment of Article 5 by changing a few words does not render plaintiff's claim for reformation moot. A substantial and relevant part of Article 5, is still in existence.[2] That fact distinguishes the cases relied on by the Foundation. In both Amoco Oil Co. v. Johnstone, 856 F.2d 967 (7th Cir. 1988) and Leon's Fine Foods, Inc. v. McClearin, 2000 WL 277135 (Tex. App. 3/15/2000), (Memo, p. 5), the claims for reformation were moot because the agreements had expired, not because the agreements sought to be reformed had been amended but were otherwise still on existence. In short, the claims for reformation in the cases cited by plaintiff were moot because there was nothing to reform. That plainly is not the case here.

Although amended, the substance of the original Articles of Incorporation, including Article 5, are still in existence. Moreover, Article 5, as amended, does not state that the museum may be removed from the Chicagoland area. More importantly, it still does not contain the original agreement of the incorporators that the Terra Museum will always have a presence in the Chicago area. Thus, there is a present controversy between the parties regarding Article 5, and the relief sought by plaintiff can be granted by reforming said Article, as amended, and as in existence today.

It should be noted, however, that the Foundation makes no argument that a claim to reform the present amended Article 5 also is moot. Thus, simple amendment of the Complaint to reform amended Article 5 also disposes of the Foundation's mootness argument. See 4300 Marine Drive Condominium Association v. Tenenblatt, 221 Ill.App.3d 877, 884, 582 N.E.2d 1173, 1178 (1st Dist. 1991) (Claim against successor trustee was not moot because successor was not named as a defendant in original complaint. Instead, plaintiff granted leave to amend complaint to explain the liability of successor trustee.).

[2] Only those words that were amended cease to exist. The original Article 5 contained 187 words. The Amendment in 1994 deleted 12 words from the original Article, but added 29 new words. Moreover, none of the added or deleted words addressed whether the museum should or should not remain in the Chicagoland area.

For these reasons, plaintiff's claim for reformation is not moot.

III. PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR REFORMATION IS NOT BARRED BY LACHES

The Foundation argues that plaintiff's claim for reformation is barred by laches because plaintiff failed to plead any facts in justification of his failure to pursue his claim for over 22 years. (Memo., pp. 7-9.) The Foundation also argues that the reformation claim is barred by plaintiff's alleged failure to read or learn the contents of the Articles of Incorporation before he signed them. (Id., pp. 7-8.) The Foundation is incorrect in each of these arguments.

A. Laches Is Not Simply A Matter Of Delay Or Passage Of Time

As the Foundation itself acknowledges, laches is not simply a matter of delay or passage of time. That delay also must cause prejudice. (Memo., p. 6.) These requirements for barring a claim under laches are well established. According to the Illinois Supreme Court, > Laches is not simply a matter of delay, and to bar the action 'it must appear that plaintiff's unreasonable delay in asserting his rights has prejudiced and misled the defendant, or caused him to pursue a course different from what he would otherwise have taken.'

Bruyn v. Elrod, 84 Ill.2d 128, 136, 418 N.E.2d 413, 417 (Ill. 1981). See also, Blisset v. Blisset, 123 Ill.2d 161, 170, 526 N.E.2d 125, 129 (Ill. 1988) ("Laches is not available as a defense ... unless the party asserting the doctrine has suffered injury or prejudice as a result of the other party's delay in instituting the action."); People v. Wells, 182 Ill.2d 471, 490, 696 N.E.2d 303, 312 (Ill. 1998) ("Application of the laches doctrine requires a showing of lack of due diligence by the party asserting the claim and prejudice to the party asserting the doctrine.")

Despite paying lip service to this well-established law, the Foundation then ignores it, arguing, in effect, that plaintiff's claim for reformation is barred solely by the passage of time from the signing of the original Articles of Incorporation in 1978. (Memo., pp. 6-9.) The Foundation makes no argument whatsoever that it was prejudiced as a result of that delay.[3] That failure alone requires denial of the Foundation's motion to dismiss based on laches. Bruyn v. Elrod, supra; Blisset v. Blisset, supra; People v. Wells, supra. See also, Patrick Media Group, Inc. v. City Of Chicago, 255 Ill.App.3d 1, 7, 626 N.E.2d 1066, 1071 (1st Dist. 1993) (Defendant neither properly pleaded nor proved laches where it relied solely on the length of the alleged delay.).

B. Plaintiff's Complaint Does Not Establish Laches

1. Laches Requires Prejudice

Despite this well-established law, the Foundation argues that a complaint may be dismissed on the pleadings if plaintiff fails to plead facts in justification for the delay. (Memo., p. 7-9.) That is partly true. A complaint may be dismissed for laches if plaintiff does not plead justification for the delay, if the elements of laches are apparent from the face of the complaint. As discussed above (pp. 5-6), laches requires a showing of both delay and prejudice. Thus, in In re Adoption of Miller, 106 Ill.App.3d 1025, 436 N.E.2d 611 (1st Dist. 1982), the court dismissed the complaint on a motion to dismiss where the complaint established both delay and prejudice. 106 Ill.App.3d 1025, 1031, 1033, 436 N.E.2d 611, 615, 617. See also, Schoenbrod v. Rosenthal, 36 Ill.App.2d 112, 121-122, 183 N.E.2d 188, 193 (1st Dist. 1962).

However, a motion to dismiss based on laches must be denied where the elements of laches, including prejudice, are not apparent from the complaint. People v. Claar, 293

[3] The Foundation likewise claims no prejudice in its Motion to Dismiss. The Motion merely states:

> 7. Plaintiff's complaint must also be dismissed ... as barred by the equitable doctrine of laches. Laches precludes a party from pursuing an action in the face of an unjustified delay in filing suit. People v. Wells, 182 Ill.2d 471, 490, 696 N.E.2d 303, 312 (Ill. 1998). Plaintiff has totally failed to plead any specific facts which justify his delay in bringing this claim for over 22 years. (Motion To Dismiss, ¶ 7).

Ill.App.3d 211, 219, 687 N.E.2d 557, 562 (3rd Dist. 1997) (Motion to dismiss based on laches denied where prejudice from the delay not apparent from the face of the complaint.) Even the cases cited by the Foundation agree. Beckham v. Tate, 61 Ill.App.3d 765, 767-768, 378 N.E.2d 588, 590 (5th Dist. 1978) (In dismissing complaint based on laches for failure to plead justification for the delay, court expressly found prejudice to opposing party); also see Shapiro v. Grosby, 25 Ill.2d 245, 249, 184 N.E.2d 855, 857 (Ill. 1962).

The result is the same under a §2-619 motion to dismiss. See Summers v. Village Of Durand, 267 Ill.App.3d 767, 771, 643 N.E.2d 272, 275-276 (2nd Dist. 1994) (Dismissal of complaint based on laches reversed where laches was not apparent from face of the complaint, and defendant did not establish prejudice by affidavit under §2-619.).

2. Plaintiff Has Pleaded Justification For The Delay

In any event, plaintiff has pleaded justification for the delay. According to the Complaint, although Article 5 did not contain the incorporators' understanding and agreement that the Terra Museum should always have a presence in the Chicago area, there was no attempt to operate the Museum in violation of that agreement until the fall of 2000. (Complaint, ¶ 7.) At that time, after plaintiff had received notice of litigation challenging an attempt to close the Museum in Chicago, plaintiff recognized that the Articles of Incorporation did not contain the agreed limitation, and promptly filed this action for reformation. (Id.) Those facts justify the delay and are sufficient to defeat a claim for laches.

For example, in Ballard v. Granby, 90 Ill.App.3d 13, 412 N.E.2d 1067 (3rd Dist. 1980), dismissal of a complaint for reformation was reversed on appeal. According to the complaint, plaintiffs made a quitclaim deed of certain property to defendants in 1965. The deed was made in furtherance of an alleged agreement between the parties that defendants would build a dormitory for workers on that property, not on property adjacent to plaintiff's home, and would build no other structure on the conveyed property. However, the deed contained no such limitation. Thirteen years later, in 1978, plaintiff learned that defendants planned to build a house for their personal use on the conveyed property, in violation of the alleged agreed limitation, and filed the complaint for reformation of the deed.

Based on those allegations, plaintiffs' complaint for reformation was not barred by laches. According to the court,

> There is no indication that ... [plaintiffs] had knowledge of the variance between the deed and their alleged understanding with respect to the conveyance, until that time in 1978, when they learned of ... [defendants'] intent to construct a residence on the property. Until that time, no violation of the parties' understanding had occurred. The ... suit for reformation was promptly filed thereafter. (Emphasis added)

90 Ill.App.3d at 17, 412 N.E.2d at 1070. Similarly, in the present case, from 1978 until 2000 there was no violation of the incorporators' understanding to keep the Museum in Chicago, and thus there was no unwarranted delay in bringing the present action.

In People v. Wells, supra, a case cited by the Foundation (Memo., p. 6) the court reached the same result. There, the State claimed defendant's motion to suppress was barred by laches, because the search at issue occurred in 1967 but defendant did not file the motion until 1992, twenty-five years later. The Illinois Supreme Court rejected that argument. Although the search occurred in 1967, defendant was not indicted until 1992. According to the court, "defendant had absolutely no need to move to suppress items removed from his home unless and until the State lodges a complaint or indictment against him." 182 Ill.2d at 490, 696 N.E.2d at 312.

Finally, in Millspaugh v. Cassedy, 181 N.Y.S.276, 282 (App. Div. 1920) a New York court addressed an almost identical issue to the present case. There, a complaint was filed in 1918 to reform corporate articles of incorporation prepared 20 years earlier in 1898 to conform to the parties' agreement that preferred stockholders had no right to vote in corporate elections. The court held that the claim was not barred by laches because there had been no attempt by preferred shareholders to vote or otherwise challenge the common stock's right to control until the election of 1918.

Thus, in the present case, even if plaintiff is required to plead justification for the delay in filing this action, he has done so. (Complaint, ¶7).

C. Plaintiff's Purported Negligence Does Not Bar The Reformation Claim

The Foundation also argues that plaintiff's negligence in failing to ascertain the mistake in the Articles of Incorporation bars the claim for reformation. (Memo., pp. 7-8.) That argument must also be rejected.

1. Negligence Does Not Bar A Claim For Reformation

Negligence in failing to notice the alleged mistake in the document to be reformed does not bar a claim for reformation. For example, in Blumenfeld v. Neuman, 350 N.E.2d 306, 112 N.E.2d 742 (4th Dist. 1953), defendant argued that a claim for reformation was barred by plaintiff's failure to read the lease and discover the alleged mistake. The court rejected that argument, first noting that "this is not an argument that no mistake was made, but rather that relief should be denied because of the negligence." 350 N.E.2d at 312, 112 N.E.2d at 745. According to the court, negligence is not a defense to reformation, "since there would then be no ground for reformation because of mutual mistake, inasmusch as mistakes nearly always presuppose negligence." (Id.)[4]

[4] The authority cited by the Foundation, Magnus v. Lutheran General Health C are System, 235 Ill.App.3d 173, 601 N.E.2d 907 (1st Dist. 1992) (Memo., pp. 7-8) is not on point. That case concerned a claim for reformation based on unilateral mistake and fraud, not mutual mistake, as here. 235 Ill.App.3d at 183-184, 601 N.E.2d at 914-915. In a unilateral mistake and fraud case, the failure to learn the contents of the document rebuts the claim of fraud. (Id.) However, that rule simply does not apply to a mutual mistake claim, for the reasons discussed in Blumenfeld v. Neuman, supra.

2. Negligence By One Of The Parties In Drafting The Document To Be Reformed Does Not Bar Reformation

In a related argument, with no citation of authority, the Foundation boldly argues "there can be no basis for a claim of 'mutual mistake' because Robert Sugrue, one of the incorporators, drafted the original Articles of Incorporation. (Memo., p. 7, fn. 1.) But the law is clear that negligence by one of the parties in preparing the instrument does not bar reformation. In fact, one of the cases cited by the Foundation is directly on point against its argument. In Marengo Federal Savings & Loan Association v. First National Bank of Woodstock, 172 Ill.App.3d 859, 527 N.E.2d 121 (2nd Dist. 1988), defendant argued that plaintiff's claim for reformation of loan documents was barred by "plaintiff's negligence in drafting the loan documents." 172 Ill.App.3d at 860, 527 N.E.2d at 122. The court rejected that argument, and granted reformation to the bank that had drafted the mistaken loan documents. See also, Harden v. Desideri, 20 Ill.App.3d 590, 315 N.E.2d 235 (1st Dist. 1974) (Negligence of party to contract in preparing contract in manner that did not reflect agreement of the parties did not bar claim for reformation.). The Foundation's unsupported argument must therefore be rejected.

D. The Claim For Reformation Is Not Barred Because Plaintiff Owed Fiduciary Duties To The Foundation

Finally, the Foundation argues that the claim for reformation is barred by plaintiff's failure to discover the mistake when he signed the Articles of Incorporation or while he served as a director of the Foundation, allegedly in violation of his fiduciary duties to the Foundation. (Memo., p. 8, fn. 2.) According to the Foundation, "Under Illinois law, negligence that amounts to a violation of a legal duty bars reformation. (Id.)

Once again, the authority cited by the Foundation is not on point. Neither Marengo Federal Savings & Loan Association v. First National Bank of Woodstock, 172 Ill.App.3d 859, 527 N.E.2d 121 (2nd Dist. 1988), nor Korosic v. Pearson, 377 Ill. 413, 36 N.E.2d 744 (Ill. 1941) (Memo., p. 8, fn. 2) involved a purported breach of fiduciary duty. More importantly, neither case therefore held that the failure of a fiduciary to notice or correct a mistake bars a claim for reformation.

Numerous cases, however, have allowed reformation where a fiduciary allegedly failed to correct the mistake. For example, in Kolkovich v. Tosolin, 19 Ill.App.3d 524, 311 N.E.2d 782 (4th Dist. 1974), a claim by decedent's son to reform his father's will was granted, even though the son failed to take action to correct the mistake while he served as executor of his father's estate and, in fact, closed the estate in accordance with the mistaken will. In fact, although acknowledging the same "positive legal duty" test relied on by the Foundation, the court nevertheless held that reformation was proper for the son, who was clearly a fiduciary to his father and his estate. 19 Ill.App.3d at 529, 311 N.E.2d at 786-787.

Likewise, in Stoerger v. Ivesdale Co-op Grain Co., 15 Ill.App.3d 313, 304 N.E.2d 300 (4th Dist. 1973), the court held that reformation of debentures was proper, even though they were signed in blank by officers of the defendant corporation. Again, this clear breach by fiduciaries did not bar their claim for reformation. See also, Remus v. Schwass, 406 Ill. 63, 92 Ill.2d 127 (Ill. 1950), where the Illinois Supreme Court upheld the claim of the administratrix of an estate to reform a contract for the purchase of real estate to make her a joint tenant, even though she had listed the property as an asset of her husband's estate following his death.

For all of these reasons, plaintiff's claim for reformation of Article 5 of the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation is not barred by laches.

IV. THE FOUNDATION'S ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION ARE SUBJECT TO REFORMATION

The Foundation also argues that the its Articles of Incorporation are not subject to reformation as a matter of law. (Memo., pp. 9-10.) That argument must also be rejected.

1. Reformation Of The Articles Of Incorporation Is Not Barred By The Illinois Not For Profit Corporation Act

The Foundation erroneously argues that reformation by the court of the articles of incorporation of an Illinois not-for-profit corporation is barred by §105/110.05 of the Act itself, (805 ILCS 105/110.05) merely because it provides that the articles of incorporation may be changed by an amendment passed by the board of directors. (Memo., p. 9.) That argument is fatally flawed, because amendment by the board is not the equivalent of, nor a substitute for, reformation by the court, nor does the Act preclude such remedy. This distinction is apparent in a case such as this, where the majority of a new board, or a board adverse to the incorporators, can frustrate the intent of the incorporators by simply not correcting the mistake in the articles of incorporation by amendment. In fact, plaintiff has pleaded such futility in this case. (Complaint, ¶ 8.)

The equitable remedy of reformation is designed for instances in which one party to a knowingly incorrect agreement refuses to correct the error, even though he knows that the proposed change would reflect the actual agreement of the parties.

> The basis for a reformation action is an understanding between the parties. What is sought to be reformed is not this understanding, but rather an instrument which inaccurately reflects it.

Harden v. Desideri, supra, 20 Ill.App.3d at 596, 315 N.E.2d at 240. Thus, reformation is a narrow remedy limited to correcting mistakes in the expression of the parties'agreement which one of the parties themselves will not agree to correct by amendment. As such, given the broad powers of a court of equity, reformation by the court is appropriate to correct mistakes in corporate articles of incorporation.

2. A Court Of Equity Has The Inherent Power To Reform Corporate Articles Of Incorporation

Like the Foundation, plaintiff could find no Illinois case that considered reformation of corporate articles of incorporation. But that should not decide the issue. In Millspaugh v. Cassedy, 181 N.Y.S. 276 (App. Div.), the court likewise had no precedent for reformation of corporate articles of incorporation. According to the court, however, "the novelty of the exercise of equitable power is no reason for disaffirming it." 181 N.Y.S. at 279. The court then proceeded to reform the articles of incorporation to conform to the parties' original intent that preferred stockholders had no voting rights. 181 N.Y.S. at 230.

Millspaugh does not stand alone. The Delaware Supreme Court, perhaps the most respected and widely cited court in the country regarding issues of corporate law and governance, has also held that corporate articles of incorporation may be reformed by the Court. Waggoner v. Laster, 581 A.2d 1127 (Del. 1990). According to the court,

> It is a basic principle of equity that the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to reform a document to make it conform to the original intent of the parties. [Citations omitted] That includes a certificate of incorporation.

581 A.2d at 1135. See also, In the Matter of Farm Industries, Inc., 41 Del. Ch. 379, 196 A.2d 582 (Del. Ch. 1963) (Court reformed certificate of incorporation to reflect original intent with respect to voting rights.).

3. The Interest Of The Public In Public Documents Is Represented By The Illinois Attorney General

Finally, the Foundation argues that reformation is not authorized because the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation is "not a two party contract, but serve as the official charter granted by the State of Illinois." (Memo., p. 9.) To the extent this argument is meant to raise the interest of the State or the public in the Foundation's charter, those interests are represented by the Illinois Attorney General (Complaint, ¶ 3), who, it should be noted, has not opposed plaintiff's claim nor challenged this court's authority to reform the Foundation's Articles of Incorporation.

For these reasons, the Foundation's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted must be dismissed.[5]

V. STANDARD OF LAW

"A motion to dismiss admits all facts well pleaded and the reasonable inferences which may be drawn therefrom are taken as true for the purposes of the motion." Theodosakis v. Austin Bank of Chicago, 93 Ill.App.3d 634, 417 N.E.2d 806, 808, 49 Ill.Dec. 116 (1st Dist. 1981). A complaint should only be dismissed if it appears that the pleadings disclose no set of facts, which if proved, would entitle the plaintiff to relief sought. (Id.) As demonstrated herein, plaintiff has adequately pleaded facts upon which relief can be granted.

VI. CONCLUSION

It is ironic to say the least that the Foundation would aggressively argue that plaintiff has violated fiduciary duties to the Foundation, while it is the Foundation which defiantly seeks to bar any inquiry into whether its own Articles of Incorporation do not accurately reflect the agreement of its founders and incorporators that the Terra Museum shall always have a presence in the Chicago area. However, for all the reasons discussed in this memorandum, the Foundation's effort must fail, and its motion to dismiss plaintiff's Complaint for Reformation must be denied.

[5] The Foundation's other assertions have no merit. Thus, the Foundation's rehash of the argument concerning the delay in filing this action (Memo., p. 10) is disposed of by plaintiff's arguments regarding laches in Section III, (pp. 5-11.) Likewise, the Foundation's assertion that plaintiff's claim is based on his own mistake, not that of Daniel J. Terra or Robert Sugrue, is contradicted by the Complaint, in which plaintiff has alleged that both his father and Mr. Sugrue also signed the Articles of Incorporation in the mistaken belief that they contained the agreed upon limitation regarding the Museum's perpetual presence in the Chicago area. (Complaint, ¶ 8.) Those allegations must be accepted as true for purposes of the Foundation's motion to dismiss.

The Board of Directors shall be divided into two classes until the 2002 Annual Meeting, consisting of (I) eleven Class I Directors, who shall be elected for a term to expire at the 2002 Annual Meeting and (II) five Class II Directors who shall initially be elected for a term to expire at the 2005 Annual Meeting of Directors. At the 2002 Annual Meeting the Board of Directors shall be divided into four classes, consisting of (i) three Class I Directors, who shall initially be elected for a term to expire at the 2003 Annual Meeting of Directors, (ii) five Class II Directors (i.e., the Class II Directors elected as contemplated in clause (II) of the preceding sentence) whose term shall expire at the 2005 Annual Meeting of Directors, (iii) three Class III Directors, who shall initially be elected for a term to expire at the 2004 Annual Meeting of Directors, and (iv) four Class IV Directors, who shall initially be elected for a term to expire at the 2006 Annual Meeting of Directors. Each elected director shall hold office until such director's successor is elected and qualified or until such director's earlier resignation or removal.

(d) Residency. Prior to the 2002 Annual Meeting at least one-half of the elected directors shall be residents of the State of Illinois. Thereafter until at least 25 years after the Effective Date have elapsed, at least a majority of the elected directors shall be residents of the State of Illinois.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that Section 8 of Article III of the Bylaws of the Foundation shall be amended and restated in its entirety, effective as of the Effective Date, to read as follows:

Court of Appeals of New York.

Elias AUERBACH, Plaintiff, and Stanley Wallenstein, as Executor of Ida S. Wallenstein, Deceased, Respondent,
v.
William F. BENNETT et al., Appellants.

July 9, 1979.

Shareholder's derivative action was brought against directors of corporation and its auditor. The Supreme Court, Westchester County, Isaac Rubin, J., granted summary judgment in favor of defendants, and stockholder other than one who instituted action sought to intervene and appeal. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, 64 A.D.2d 98, 408 N.Y.S.2d 83, held that intervening stockholder was aggrieved party who could appeal and that business judgment doctrine could not properly be invoked to permit summary dismissal of suit, and appeal was taken by permission. The Court of Appeals, Jones, J., held that no basis was shown to warrant judicial inquiry as to disinterested independence of members of special litigation committee, who were appointed by corporation's board of directors after shareholder's derivative action was filed against certain corporate directors, or as to appropriateness and sufficiency of investigative procedures chosen and pursued by committee, and thus business judgment rule shielded from judicial scrutiny decision of committee not to prosecute shareholder's derivative action.

Affirmed as modified.

Cooke, C. J., filed a dissenting opinion.

West Headnotes

[1] Corporations ⚿320(1)
101k320(1)

While substantive aspects of decision to terminate shareholders' derivative action against corporate directors made by a committee of disinterested directors employed by corporation's board of directors are beyond judicial inquiry under business judgment doctrine, court may inquire as to disinterested independence of members of that committee and as to appropriateness and sufficiency of investigative procedures chosen and pursued by committee.

[2] Corporations ⚿202
101k202

[2] Corporations ⚿207
101k207

[2] Corporations ⚿207.1
101k207.1

In a stockholder's derivative suit, judicially regarded as in nature of class action, interest of stockholder and corporation are united and when stockholder undertakes to sue on behalf of corporation, his action concerns other stockholders as well.

[3] Appeal and Error ⚿151(2)
30k151(2)

In view of established rule that dismissal on merits of derivative action generally bars suits by other stockholders of same corporation on same cause of action, one stockholder, who was within class for whose benefit a derivative action had been instituted, was party aggrieved by dismissal of complaint and thus could file notice of appeal after it appeared that stockholder who originally filed action had no intention of appealing. CPLR 5511.

[4] Appeal and Error ⚿329
30k329

Where it was not until stockholder decided not to appeal from dismissal by special term of shareholder's derivative action that inadequacy of his representation of another stockholder became apparent, such other stockholder could not be faulted for not theretofore having sought intervention, and for then serving notice of appeal to the Appellate Division and moving for permission to intervene to secure panoply of rights which attach to named party in an action, and thus Appellate Division, which is vested with all the power of Supreme Court to grant motion for intervention, properly granted such relief.

[5] Appeal and Error ⚿151(6)
30k151(6)

Because stockholder, whose application was one for intervention as coplaintiff and not as successor replacement for stockholder who originally filed shareholder's derivative action, came within ambit of "party aggrieved" by dismissal of complaint, no jurisdictional defect existed that prevented Appellate Division from permitting intervention nunc pro tunc, on theory that it lacked jurisdiction by reason of stockholder's lack of standing to serve and file valid, timely notice of appeal after original stockholder failed to appeal. CPLR 5511.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[6] Corporations ⚿310(1)
101k310(1)

Business judgment doctrine bars judicial inquiry into actions of corporate directors taken in good faith, in exercise of honest judgment and in lawful and legitimate furtherance of corporate purposes.

[7] Corporations ⚿310(1)
101k310(1)

By definition, responsibility for business judgment must rest with corporate directors, whose individual capabilities and experience peculiarly qualify them for discharge of that responsibility, and thus, absent evidence of bad faith or fraud, courts must and properly should respect their determinations under business judgment doctrine.

[8] Corporations ⚿320(1)
101k320(1)

As with other questions of corporate policy and management, decision whether and to what extent to explore and prosecute derivative claims against corporate directors, which belongs to corporation itself, lies within judgment and control of board of directors, and court may not intrude to interfere in decision, which must be predicated on weighing and balancing of variety of disparate considerations to protect and advance interests of corporation.

[9] Corporations ⚿310(1)
101k310(1)

Business judgment rule does not foreclose inquiry by courts into disinterested independence of those members of board chosen by it to make corporate decision on its behalf; indeed, the rule shields deliberations and conclusions of chosen representatives of board only if they possess disinterested independence and do not stand in dual relation which prevents an unprejudicial exercise of judgment.

[10] Corporations ⚿202
101k202

Special litigation committee, members of which did not have any prior affiliation with corporation, could be delegated power to terminate shareholder's derivative action by board of directors, some of whom had been sued in derivative action, especially since to disqualify entire board would have been to render corporation powerless to make effective business judgment with respect to prosecution of derivative action.

[11] Corporations ⚿320(1)
101k320(1)

Substantive decision by special litigation committee, members of which were not members of corporation's board of directors at time of transactions in question, not to pursue shareholder's derivative action alleging that present and former members of corporation's board of directors and auditor were liable to corporation for bribe and kickback payments, fell within embrace of business judgment doctrine, involving as it did weighing and balancing of legal, ethical, commercial, promotional, public relations, fiscal and other factors, and thus court could not inquire as to which factors were considered or relative weights accorded them in reaching decision.

101k320(1)

Business judgment doctrine did not prevent court from inquiring into adoption of procedures by special litigation committee, which was created by board of directors to determine position to be taken by corporation with respect to shareholder derivative claims against certain directors but, although court could properly inquire as to adequacy and appropriateness of committee's investigative procedures and methodologies, it could not under guise of consideration of such factors trespass in domain of business judgment.

623 OPINION OF THE COURT

JONES, Judge.

[1] While the substantive aspects of a decision to terminate a shareholders' derivative action against defendant corporate directors made by a committee of disinterested directors appointed by the corporation's board of directors are beyond judicial inquiry under the business judgment doctrine, the court may inquire as to the disinterested independence of the 624 members of that committee and as to the appropriateness and sufficiency of the investigative procedures chosen and pursued by the committee. In this instance, however, no basis is shown to warrant either inquiry by the court. Accordingly we hold that it was error to reverse the lower court's dismissal of the shareholders' derivative action.

In the summer of 1975 the management of General Telephone & Electronics Corporation, in response to reports that numerous other multinational companies had made questionable payments to public officials or political parties in foreign countries, directed that an internal preliminary investigation be made to ascertain whether that corporation had engaged in similar transactions. On the basis of the report of this survey, received in October, 1975, management brought the issue to the attention of the corporation's board of directors. At a meeting held on November 6 of that year the board referred the matter to the board's audit committee. The audit committee retained as its special counsel the Washington, D. C., law firm of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering which had not previously acted as counsel to the corporation. With the assistance of such special counsel and Arthur Andersen & Co., the corporation's outside auditors, the audit committee engaged in an investigation into the corporation's worldwide operations, focusing on whether, in the period January 1, 1971 to December 31, 1975, corporate funds had been (1) paid directly or indirectly to any political party or person or to any officer, employee, shareholder923 or director of any governmental or private customer, or (2) used to reimburse *997 any officer of the corporation or other person for such payments.

On March 4, 1976 the audit committee released its report which was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and disclosed to the corporation's shareholders in a proxy statement prior to the annual meeting of shareholders held in April, 1976. The audit committee reported that it had found evidence that in the period from 1971 to 1975 the corporation or its subsidiaries had made payments abroad and in the United States constituting bribes and kickbacks in amounts perhaps totaling more than 11 million dollars and that some of the individual defendant directors had been personally involved in certain of the transactions.[FN1]

FN1. The audit committee made a brief supplemental report under date of November 4, 1976, which also was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and was publicized through a press release.

625 Almost immediately Auerbach, a shareholder in the corporation, instituted the present shareholders' derivative action on behalf of the corporation against the corporation's directors, Arthur Andersen & Co. and the corporation. The complaint alleged that in connection with the transactions reported by the audit committee defendants, present and former members of the corporation's board of directors and Arthur Andersen & Co., are liable to the corporation for breach of their duties to the corporation and should be made to account for payments made in those transactions.[FN2]

FN2. It appears that only 4 of the 13 named individual defendants, all present directors, have been served. By stipulation plaintiff agreed not to serve the other individual defendants and not to make them parties to this action unless and until their involvement in the actions alleged in the complaint appeared.

On April 21, 1976 the board of directors of the corporation adopted a resolution creating a special litigation committee "for the purpose of establishing a point of contract between the Board of Directors and the Corporation's General Counsel concerning the position to be taken by the Corporation in certain litigation involving shareholder derivative claims on behalf of the Corporation against certain of its directors and officers" and authorizing that committee "to take such steps from time to time as it deems necessary to pursue its objectives including the retention of special outside counsel." The special committee comprised three disinterested directors who had joined the board after the challenged transactions had occurred. The board subsequently additionally vested in the committee "all of the authority of the Board of Directors to determine, on behalf of the Board, the position that the Corporation shall take with respect to the derivative claims alleged on its behalf" in the present and similar shareholder derivative actions.

The special litigation committee reported under date of November 22, 1976. It found that defendant Arthur Andersen & Co. had conducted examination of the corporation's affairs in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards and in good faith and concluded that no proper interest of the corporation or its shareholders would be served by the continued assertion of a claim against it. The committee also concluded that none of the individual defendants had violated the New York State statutory standard of care, that none had profited personally or gained in any way, that the claims asserted in the present action are without merit, that if the 626 action were allowed to proceed the time and talents of the corporation's senior management would be wasted on lengthy pretrial and trial proceedings, that litigation costs would be inordinately high in view of the unlikelihood of success, and that the continuing publicity could be damaging to the corporation's business. The committee determined that it would not be in the best interests of the corporation for the present derivative action to proceed, and, exercising the authority delegated to it, directed the corporation's general counsel to take that position in the 924 present litigation as well as in pending comparable shareholders' derivative actions.

On December 17, 1976 the corporation and the four individual defendants who had been served moved for an order pursuant to *998 CPLR 3211 (subd. (a), pars. (3), (7)) dismissing the complaint or in the alternative for an order pursuant to CPLR 3211 (subd. (c)) for summary judgment. On January 7, 1977 Arthur Andersen & Co. made a similar motion. On May 13, 1977 Supreme Court, Special Term, granted the motions of all defendants and dismissed the complaint on the merits.

When it appeared that plaintiff Auerbach had no intention of appealing from the determination of Special Term, on June 13, 1977 Stanley Wallenstein, as executor of the estate of Ida S. Wallenstein, a stockholder of the corporation, filed and served a "Notice of Appeal" from the order and judgment of Special Term. On July 11, 1977 defendants moved in the Appellate Division to dismiss the purported Wallenstein appeal on the ground that he was not an aggrieved party. Thereupon Wallenstein cross-moved for an order pursuant to CPLR 1012 to intervene in the present action, Nunc pro tunc, for the purpose of appealing from the judgment of Special Term pursuant to his notice of appeal da June 13, 1977. Wallenstein predicated his right to intervene and to appeal on the grounds that Ida S. Wallenstein had been a stockholder of the corporation continuously from 1959 until her death in 1976 and that her estate, of which Stanley Wallenstein is sole executor, had continuously owned the corporate shares since her death, that in January, 1977 Wallenstein had commenced a shareholders' derivative action against the corporation, and that on May 24, 1977 the defendants in the Wallenstein action had moved for dismissal of that action on the ground that the order and judgment of Special Term in the present action was Res judicata and resulted in collateral estoppel. On August 3, 1977 defendants' motion to dismiss the appeal and Wallenstein's *627 cross motion for intervention were denied with leave to renew on argument of the appeal.

On August 7, 1978 the Appellate Division denied defendants' motion to dismiss the appeal, granted Wallenstein's cross motion for leave to intervene, and reversed the May 13, 1977 order of Special Term and denied defendants' motions for summary judgment. On October 12, 1978 that court granted defendants' motions for leave to appeal to our court. For the reasons stated below we now modify the order of the Appellate Division to the extent of reversing its reversal of the order of Special Term granting defendants summary judgment dismissing the complaint on the merits and reinstate the order of Special Term. We do not disturb those portions of the order at the Appellate Division which denied defendants' motion to dismiss the Wallenstein appeal and granted the cross motion for leave to intervene.

Appellant Arthur Andersen & Co. poses the threshold question whether an error of law was committed by the Appellate Division in permitting intervention by Wallenstein and entertaining the appeal taken by him from Special Term's dismissal of the complaint. Because Andersen's challenge to the Appellate Division's exercise of authority in Wallenstein's favor, if successful, would dispose of the present appeal without reaching the merits of the attack on defendants' conduct with respect to the derivative actions, we turn first to that aspect of the appeal and there find no error of law in the disposition by the court below.

[2][3] As to the status of Wallenstein as an appellant and intervenor we agree with the analysis of Mr. Justice Hopkins and particularly his statements that in a stockholder's derivative action, traditionally regarded as in the nature of a class action, the interest of the stockholder and the corporation are united and that "when a stockholder undertakes to sue on behalf of the corporation, his action concerns the other stockholders as well". (64 A.D.2d 98, 104, 408 N.Y.S.2d 83, 86). The extent of that 925 concern with respect to the present Auerbach action on stockholder Wallenstein on the strength of Special Term's dismissal of this suit by Auerbach. In view of the established rule that a dismissal on the merits of one derivative 999 action is generally a bar to suits by other stockholders of the same corporation on the same cause of *628 action (Grant v. Greene Cons. Copper Co., 169 App.Div. 206, 215-216, 154 N.Y.S. 596, 603, affd. 223 N.Y. 655, 119 N.E. 1049), we have no difficulty in recognizing one of the stockholders, who is within the class for whose benefit a derivative action has been instituted, as a party aggrieved by whom a notice of appeal may be filed under CPLR 5511.

The applicable rule has been well stated by a leading authority on New York practice: "Although ordinarily one not a party to the proceeding below will not be aggrieved because he will not be found by the determination, in some situations a nonparty may be adversely affected, as in stockholders' suits * * * In most such cases the real question is one of proper representation; if the person's interests are not being adequately represented, or for any other reason he should be heard, the matter should properly be raised below, as by a motion for intervention (CPLR 1012-1013). If he had notice of the proceedings below and did nothing, considerations of orderly procedure will usually dictate that his subsequent attempt to appeal from the resulting judgment be denied, Though intervention may be allowed in the appellate court in a proper case " (7 Weinstein-Korn-Miller, N.Y.Civ.Prac., par. 5511.04 (emphasis supplied)). It cannot be disputed that, absent Wallenstein, his interests would not have been adequately represented in the Appellate Division; Auerbach's decision not to appeal would have meant that such interests would not have been represented at all!

[4] Appellant Andersen argues that, under the principles quoted, Wallenstein's failure to have sought intervention earlier at Special Term is fatal to his appeal and to his application to intervene made to the Appellate Division. However, under the circumstances of this case when it was not until plaintiff Auerbach's decision not to appeal from the dismissal by Special Term that the inadequacy of Auerbach's representation of Wallenstein became apparent, Wallenstein cannot be faulted for not theretofore having sought intervention and for serving a notice of appeal to the Appellate Division time for which was limited and if not complied with would have precluded any procurement of appellate review of Special Term's dismissal then moving in the Appellate Division for permission to intervene to secure to himself the full panoply of rights which attach to a named party in an action. The Appellate Division was vested with all the power of Supreme Court to grant the motion for intervention, and in the circumstances 629 here present this was "a proper case" for the grant of such relief by the appellate court. (For a similar grant in the Court of Appeals see Soto v. Lenscraft Opt. Corp. (Rayex), 7 N.Y.2d 747, 193 N.Y.S.2d 655, 162 N.E.2d 740.)

[5] In reaching the conclusion we do we reject Andersen's contention that the Appellate Division lacked power to permit intervention Nunc pro tunc because that court lacked jurisdiction of the case by reason of Wallenstein's lack of standing to serve and file a valid, timely notice of appeal. Because Wallenstein came within the ambit of a "party aggrieved" as that term is employed in CPLR 5511, no jurisdictional defect existed. The case of Matter of Benson Realty Corp. v. Walsh (40 A.D.2d 592, 335 N.Y.S.2d 444, mot. for lv. to app. den. 31 N.Y.2d 645, 340 N.Y.S.2d 1025, 293 N.E.2d 98), relied on by appellant Andersen, is distinguishable; there no notice of appeal had been filed within the period mandated by statute. Also without relevance is the reference tendered on oral argument to legislative intent reflected in the alteration 926 made in CPLR 5511 from its predecessor statute (Civ.Prac.Act, s 557), with respect to the right of a substituted party to file notice of appeal. No substitution is involved in the present case; Wallenstein's application was one for intervention as a coplaintiff with Auerbach, not as a successor replacement for him. Insofar as the Appellate Division admitted him to the litigation and entertained the appeal, notice of which was filed by him, there was no error.

[6] As all parties and both courts below recognize, the disposition of this case on the 1000 merits turns on the proper application of the business judgment doctrine, in particular to the decision of a specially appointed committee of disinterested directors acting on behalf of the board to terminate a shareholders' derivative action. That doctrine bars judicial inquiry into actions of corporate directors taken in good faith and in the exercise of honest judgment in the lawful and legitimate furtherance of corporate purposes. "Questions of policy of management, expediency of contracts or actic adequacy of consideration, lawful appropriation of corporate funds to advance corporate interests, are left solely to their honest and unselfish decision, for their powers therein are without limitation and free from restraint, and the exercise of them for the common and general interests of the corporation may not be questioned, although the results show that what they did was unwise or inexpedient." (Pollitz v. Wabash R. R. Co., 207 N.Y. 113, 124, 100 N.E. 721, 724.)

630 In this instance our inquiry, to the limited extent to which it may be pursued, has a two-tiered aspect. The complaint initially asserted liability on the part of defendants based on the payments made to foreign governmental customers and privately owned customers, some unspecified portions of which were allegedly passed on to officials of the customers, i. e., the focus was on first-tier bribes and kickbacks. Then subsequent to the service of the complaint there came the report of a special litigation committee, particularly appointed by the corporation's board of directors to consider the merits of the present and similar shareholder' derivative actions, and its determination that it wou. not be in the best interests of the corporation to press claims against defendants based on their possible first-tier liability. The motions for summary judgment were predicated principally on the report and determination of the special litigation committee and on the contention that this second-tier corporate action insulated the first-tier transactions from judicial inquiry and was itself subject to the shelter of the business judgment doctrine. The disposition at Special Term was predicated on this analysis; its decision focused on the actions of the special litigation committee, and the motions for summary judgment were granted on the ground that the business judgment doctrine precluded the courts from going back of the decision of the special litigation committee on behalf of the corporation not to pursue the claims alleged in the complaint. Similarly the reversal at the Appellate Division was based on that court's perception of the proper application of the business judgment rule to the actions and determination of the special litigation committee. We proceed on the same analysis, concluding, however, on the record before us, at variance with the Appellate Division, that t' determination of the special litigation committe. forecloses further judicial inquiry in this case.

[7] It appears to us that the business judgment

doctrine, at least in part, is grounded in the prudent recognition that courts are ill equipped and infrequently called on to evaluate what are and must be essentially business judgments. The authority and responsibilities vested in corporate directors both by statute and decisional law proceed on the assumption that inescapably there can be no available objective standard by which the correctness of every corporate decision may be measured, by the courts or otherwise. Even if that were not the case, by definition the responsibility for business judgments *631 must rest with the corporate 927 directors; their individual capabilities and experience peculiarly qualify them for the discharge of that responsibility. Thus, absent evidence of bad faith or fraud (of which there is none here) the courts must and properly should respect their determinations.

[8] Derivative claims against corporate directors belong to the corporation itself. As with other questions of corporate policy and management, the decision whether and to what extent to explore and prosecute such claims lies within the judgment and control of the corporation's board of directors. Necessarily such decision must be predicated on the weighing and balancing 1001 of a variety of disparate considerations to reach a considered conclusion as to what course of action or inaction is best calculated to protect and advance the interests of the corporation. This is the essence of the responsibility and role of the board of directors, and courts may not intrude to interfere.

In the present case we confront a special instance of the application of the business judgment rule and inquire whether it applies in its full vigor to shield from judicial scrutiny the decision of a three-person minority committee of the board acting on behalf of the full board not to prosecute a shareholder's derivative action. The record in this case reveals that the board is a 15-member board, and that the derivative suit was brought against four of the directors. Nothing suggests that any of the other directors participated in any of the challenged first-tier transactions. Indeed the report of the audit committee on which the complaint is based specifically found that no other directors had any prior knowledge of or were in any way involved in any of these transactions. Other directors had, however, been members of the board in the period during which the transactions occurred. Each of the three director members of the special litigation committee joined the board thereafter.

[9] The business judgment rule does not foreclose inquiry by the courts into the disinterested independence of those members of the board chosen by it to make the corporate decision on its behalf here the members of the special litigation committee. Indeed the rule shields the deliberations and conclusions of the chosen representatives of the board only if they possess a disinterested independence and do not stand in a dual relation which prevents an unprejudicial exercise of judgment. (Cf. Koral v. Savory, Inc., 276 N.Y. 215, 11 N.E.2d 883.)

We examine then the proof submitted by defendants. It is *632 not disputed that the members of the special litigation committee were not members of the corporation's board of directors at the time of the first-tier transactions in question. Howard Blauvelt, chairman of the board of Continental Oil Company, had been elected to the corporation's board of directors on October 9, 1975. Dr. John T. Dunlop, Lamont University professor at the Graduate School of Business Administration of Harvard University had been elected to the board on April 21, 1976. James R. Barker, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Moore McCormack Resources, Inc., was added as the third member of the committee when he was elected to the board on July 19, 1976. None of the three had had any prior affiliation with the corporation. Notwithstanding the vigorous and imaginative hypothesizing and innuendo of counsel there is nothing in this record to raise a triable issue of fact as to the independence and disinterested status of these three directors.

[10] The contention of Wallenstein that any committee authorized by the board of which defendant directors were members must be held to be legally infirm and may not be delegated power to terminate a derivative action must be rejected. In the very nature of the corporate organization it was only the existing board of directors which had authority on behalf of the corporation 928 to direct the investigation and to assure the cooperation of corporate employees, and it is only that same board by its own action or as here pursuant to authority duly delegated by it which had authority to decide whether to prosecute the claims against defendant directors. The board in this instance, with slight adaptation, followed prudent practice in observing the general policy that when individual members of a board of directors prove to have personal interests which may conflict with the interests of the corporation, such interested directors must be excluded while the remaining members of the board proceed to consideration and action. (Cf. Business Corporation Law, s 713, which contemplates such situations and provides that the interested directors may nonetheless be included in the quorum count.) Courts have consistently held that the business judgment rule 1002 applies where some directors are charged with wrongdoing, so long as the remaining directors making the decision are disinterested and independent. (Swanson v. Traer, 249 F.2d 854, 858-859; Gall v. Exxon Corp.,418 F.Supp. 508, supplemented 75 Civ. 3582 (U.S.Dist.Ct., S.D.N.Y., Jan. 17, 1977); Issner v. Aldrich, *633 254 F.Supp. 696, 701-702; Republic Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Beasley, 73 F.R.D. 658, 668-669; Gilbert v. Curtiss-Wright Corp., 179 Misc. 641, 645, 38 N.Y.S.2d 548, 552.)

To accept the assertions of the intervenor and to disqualify the entire board would be to render the corporation powerless to make an effective business judgment with respect to prosecution of the derivative action. The possible risk of hesitancy on the part of the members of any committee, even if composed of outside, independent, disinterested directors, to investigate the activities of fellow members of the board where personal liability is at stake is an inherent, inescapable, given aspect of the corporation's predicament. To assign responsibility of the dimension here involved to individuals wholly separate and apart from the board of directors would, except in the most extraordinary circumstances, itself be an act of default and breach of the nondelegable fiduciary duty owed by the members of the board to the corporation and to its shareholders, employees and creditors. For the courts to preside over such determinations would similarly work an ouster of the board's fundamental responsibility and authority for corporate management.

[11] We turn then to the action of the special litigation committee itself which comprised two components. First, there was the selection of procedures appropriate to the pursuit of its charge, and second, there was the ultimate substantive decision, predicated on the procedures chosen and the data produced thereby, not to pursue the claims advanced in the shareholders' derivative actions. The latter, substantive decision falls squarely within the embrace of the business judgment doctrine, involving as it did the weighing and balancing of legal, ethical, commercial, promotional, public relations, fiscal and other factors familiar to th resolution of many if not most corporate problems. To this extent the conclusion reached by the special litigation committee is outside the scope of our review. Thus, the courts cannot inquire as to which factors were considered by that committee or the relative weight accorded them in reaching that substantive decision "the reasons for the payments, the advantages or disadvantages accruing to the corporation by reason of the transactions, the extent of the participation or profit by the respondent directors and the loss, if any, of public confidence in the corporation which might be incurred" (64 A.D.2d, at p. 107, 408 N.Y.S.2d at pp. 87-88). Inquiry into such matters would go to the very core of the *634 business judgment made by the committee. To permit judicial probing of such issues would be to emasculate the business judgment doctrine as applied to the actions and determinations of the special litigation committee. Its substantive evaluation of the problems posed and its judgment in their resolution are beyond our reach.

929 [12] As to the other component of the committee's activities, however, the situation is different, and here we agree with the Appella Division. As to the methodologies and procedures best suited to the conduct of an investigation of facts and the determination of legal liability, the courts are well equipped by long and continuing experience and practice to make determinations. In fact they are better qualified in this regard than are corporate directors in general. Nor do the determinations to be made in the adoption of procedures partake of the nuances or special perceptions or comprehensions of business judgment or corporate activities or interests. The question is solely how appropriately to set about to gather the pertinent data.

While the court may properly inquire as to the adequacy and appropriateness of the committee's investigative procedures and methodologies, it may not under the guise of consideration of such factors trespass in the domain of business judgment. At the same time those responsible for the procedures 1003 by which the business judgment is reached may reasonably be required to show that they have pursued their chosen investigative methods in good faith. What evidentiary proof may be required to this end will, of course, depend on the nature of th particular investigation, and the proper reach disclosure at the instance of the shareholders will in turn relate inversely to the showing made by the corporate representatives themselves. The latter may be expected to show that the areas and subjects to be examined are reasonably complete and that there has been a good-faith pursuit of inquiry into such areas and subjects. What has been uncovered and the relative weight accorded in evaluating and balancing the several factors and considerations are beyond the scope of judicial concern. Proof, however, that the investigation has been so restricted in scope, so shallow in execution, or otherwise so Pro forma or halfhearted as to constitute a pretext or sham, consistent with the principles underlying the application of the business judgment doctrine, would raise 635 questions of good faith or conceivably fraud which would never be shielded by that doctrine.

In addition to the issue of the disinterested independence of the special litigation committee, addressed above, the disposition of the present appeal turns, then, on whether on defendants' motions for summary judgment predicated on the investigation and determination of the special litigation committee, Wallenstein by tender of evidentiary proof in admissible form has shown facts sufficient to require a trial of any material issue of fact as to the adequacy or appropriateness of the Modus operandi of that committee or has demonstrated acceptable excuse for failure to make such tender. (Friends of Animals v. Associated Fur Mfrs., 46 N.Y.2d 1065, 416 N.Y.S.2d 790, 390 N.E.2d 298; CPLR 3212, subd. (b).) We conclude that the requisite showing has not been made on this record.

[13] At the outset we observe that Wallenstein, the intervenor, must accept the record in the state in which he finds it at the time he was granted leave to intervene in the Appellate Division. No application for intervention was made prior thereto, nor did the application when made seek any relief other than the right to appeal from the order of Special Term. (Cf. Matter of Martin v. Ronan, 47 N.Y.2d 486, 419 N.Y.S.2d 42, 392 N.E.2d 1226). Thus, because plaintiff Auerbach had submitted none, the record in this case is devoid of any affidavits or documentary evidence in opposition to the motions for summary judgment.

[14] On the submissions made by defendants in support of their motions, we do not find either insufficiency or infirmity as to the procedures and methodologies chosen and pursued by the special litigation committee. That committee promptly engaged eminent special counsel to guide its deliberations and to advise it. The committee reviewed the prior work of the audit committee, testing its completeness, accuracy and thoroughness by interviewing representatives 930 of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, reviewing transcripts of the testimony of 10 corporate officers and employees before the Securities and Exchange Commission, and studying documents collected by and work papers of the Washington law firm. Individual interviews were conducted with the directors found to have participated in any way in the questioned payments, and with representatives of Arthur Andersen & Co. Questionnaires were sent to and answered by each of the corporation's nonmanagement directors. At the conclusion of its investigation the special litigation committee sought and obtained 636 pertinent legal advice from its special counsel. The selection of appropriate investigative methods must always turn on the nature and characteristics of the particular subject being investigated, but we find nothing in this record that requires a trial of any material issue of fact concerning the sufficiency or appropriateness of the procedures chosen by this special litigation committee. Nor is there anything in this record to raise a triable issue of fact as to the good-faith pursuit of its examination by that committee.

[15] Finally, there should be a word as to the contention advanced by the intervenor that summary judgment should at least be withheld until there has been opportunity *1004 for disclosure. We note preliminarily as a matter of procedure that there was no application at Special Term for any such relief nor is there in the record any opposing affidavit from which it appears that essential facts may exist which could be obtained by disclosure (CPLR 3212, subd. (f)). It is also significant that neither in his brief nor on oral argument did Wallenstein identify any particulars as to which he desires discovery relating to the disinterestedness of the members of the special litigation committee or to the procedures followed by that committee. To speculate that something might be caught on a fishing expedition provides no basis to postpone decision on the summary judgment motions under the authority of CPLR 3212 (subd. (f)). The disclosure proposed and described by Wallenstein on oral argument would go only to particulars as to the results of the committee's investigation and work, the factors bearing on its substantive decision not to prosecute the derivative actions and the factual aspects of the underlying first-tier activities of defendants all matters falling within the ambit of the business judgment doctrine and thus excluded from judicial scrutiny.

For the reasons stated the order of the Appellate Division should be modified, with costs to defendants, by reversing so much thereof as reversed the order of Supreme Court, and, as so modified, affirmed.

COOKE, Chief Judge (dissenting).

There should be an affirmance for the reasons set forth in the excellent analysis of Mr. Justice James D. Hopkins who wrote for a unanimous Appellate Division. In response to the majority opinion, a few remarks are added.

True, the "business judgment rule" is potentially applicable 637 in these circumstances. But this case differs markedly from the typical situation in which that rule would be invoked. Here, the alleged wrongdoers are directors of the corporation. Of course, it would be most inappropriate to allow these interested directors to vote to preclude a shareholder's suit and thereby insulate themselves from liability (see Koral v. Savory, Inc., 276 N.Y. 215, 217-218, 11 N.E.2d 883, 885; see, also, United Copper Co. v. Amalgamated Copper Co., 244 U.S. 261, 263, 37 S.Ct. 509, 61 L.Ed. 1119). Hence, the lawsuit should be terminated only if a sufficient number of disinterested directors (cf. Business Corporation Law, s 713; Rapoport v. Schneider, 29 N.Y.2d 396, 402, 328 N.Y.S.2d 431, 436, 278 N.E.2d 642, 645), in this case the special litigation committee, rendered a good faith, " 'unprejudiced exercise of judgment' ", determining that maintenance of the action would not be in the best interests of the corporation (see Koral v. Savory, Inc., supra, 276 N.Y. at p. 217, 11 N.E.2d at p. 885).

931 Since the continuation of the suit is dependent, in large measure, upon the motives and actions of the defendants and the special litigation committee, and since knowledge of these matters "is peculiarly in the possession of the defendants themselves", summary judgment should not be granted prior to disclosure proceedings (Terranova v. Emil, 20 N.Y.2d 493, 496-497, 285 N.Y.S.2d 51, 54, 231 N.E.2d 753, 755). That the intervenor has not proposed potentially fruitful areas for disclosure should not, contrary to the majority holding, be determinative (see Udoff v. Zipf, 44 N.Y.2d 117, 122, 404 N.Y.S.2d 332, 334, 375 N.E.2d 392, 394). It is precisely because certa defendants and the members of the committee are possessed of exclusive knowledge of the facts that the intervenor is now unable to suggest the possible avenues which might successfully be pursued upon pretrial disclosure. And it is for this reason that we have formulated a rule precluding a grant of summary judgment where the case is likely to turn on "knowledge in the possession of the" moving party (e. g., Udoff v. Zipf, 44 N.Y.2d 117, 122, 404 N.Y.S.2d 332, 334, 375 N.E.2d 392, 394, Supra; Terranova v. Emil, supra, 20 N.Y.2d at p. 497, 285 N.Y.S.2d at p. 53, 231 N.E.2d 753, 755; 4 Weinstein-Korn-Miller, N.Y.Civ.Prac., par. 3212.18). No reason can be discerned for denying application of that rule at this early stage in these obvious circumstances. The result of the majority ruling is to place the intervenor in a classic "Catch-22" situation, denying him disclosure because he has not come forward with *1005 facts facts which by their very nature are discernible only after disclosure.

In sum, to deny the intervenor an opportunity for pretrial disclosure is to mistakenly group this ca with the typical case involving the business 63 judgment rule. Since the business judgment rule is only conditionally applicable here, and since certain defendants as well as the members of the special litigation committee have the sole knowledge of the facts upon which its applicability turns, summary judgment should be withheld pending disclosure proceedings. The result reached by the majority not only effectively dilutes the substantive rule of law at issue, but may also render corporate directors largely unaccountable to the shareholders whose business they are elected to govern.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

KOCORAS, District Judge:

1 On February 15, 1996, this court preliminarily approved partial settlements between the Class Plaintiffs and many of the Manufacturer Defendants (collectively, the "settling defendants"). [FN1] Notice to the Class Plaintiffs was thereafter effectuated, and Class Plaintiffs were given the opportunity formally to state their objections in written form and/or via a fairness hearing which convened before the court on March 27, 1996. After careful examination of the proposed partial settlements and the submitted objections, we reject the settlements for the reasons stated below.

DISCUSSION

In evaluating the propriety of a class action settlement, a district court must determine whether the proposed settlement is "lawful, fair, reasonable, and adequate." See E.E.O.C. v. Hiram Walker & Sons, Inc., 768 F.2d 884, 889 (7th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 478 U.S. 1004 (1986); Gautreaux v. Pierce, 690 F.2d 616, 631 (7th Cir. 1982). When making this "fairness" determination, several factors warrant consideration. These include: a comparison of the strengths of the plaintiffs' case versus the amount of the settlement offer; the likely complexity, length, and expense of the litigation; the amount of opposition to the settlement among affected parties; the opinion of competent counsel; and the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery already undertaken at the time of settlement. Hiram Walker, 768 F.2d at 889. Unless the settlement is unfair, unreasonable, or inadequate, the district court may not deny approval. Id.

The present litigation involves a plaintiff class consisting of tens of thousands of retail pharmacies, ranging in size from individual, small pharmacies to large, multi-state chains. These plaintiffs have charged virtually all of the leading manufacturers and wholesalers of brand name prescription drugs with participation in a massive price-fixing conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The magnitude of this multi-district antitrust litigation is enormous, as is its complexity. To date, the litigation has progressed through exhaustive discovery and numerous motions. A tentative trial date on the Sherman Act claims has been set for May 1996.

According to the Class Plaintiffs, 3,371 communications criticizing the Settlements have been received. These communications reportedly represent approximately seven percent of the notices mailed. The settling parties note that most of the objections appear to be "boilerplate" and are in a form solicited by trade associations such as the National Association of Retail Druggists ("NARD") and the Pharmacy Freedom Fund ("PFF"). Given the massive effort undertaken by the opponents of the settlements to solicit objections, the settling parties attest that the number of objections recorded is remarkably low. Nevertheless, several recurrent themes emerge from the submitted objections, the most pervasive of which will be addressed below. While we reject nearly all of the plaintiffs' primary objections, we believe that, under the circumstances here presented and given the spirit of the relief originally sought, the absence of any statement as to how the defendants' behavior must be reevaluated renders the proposed settlements unacceptable.

A. The Scope of the Release

2 Paragraph 15 of the proposed settlements includes a general release, whereby the settling defendants are released from further pursuit of the Class Plaintiffs' existing Sherman Act claims, as well as "without limitation, claims which have been asserted or could have been asserted in any litigation against the Released Parties or any one of them, or which arise under or relate to any federal or state antitrust, unfair competition, unfair practices, price discrimination, unitary pricing or trade practice law, or other law or regulation, or common law, including, without limitation, the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. and the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) et seq. .... Each member of the class hereby covenants and agrees that it shall not, hereafter, seek to establish liability against any

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Released Party based, in whole or in part, upon any of the Released Claims." Settlement Agreement at ¶ 15. The scope of this release, which, in addition to extinguishing the Sherman Act claims, relinquishes any further claims which the class may have had under the Robinson-Patman Act or state law, forms the basis for numerous objections by class members. Although we sympathize with the plight of the objectors, we nevertheless cannot agree that the scope of the release is here improper.

For the settling defendants, the essential element of the Settlement Agreement is the release of all claims, asserted and unasserted, which arise out of the pricing practices that have been the subject of this class action. This includes Robinson-Patman claims. It may also include state law claims. Such releases have been found to be "reasonable and customary, and without them settlement of large antitrust actions would not be desirable." In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Lit., 643 F.2d 195, 222 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 998 (1982). See McDermott, Inc. v. AmClyde, 114 S.Ct. 1461, 1467 (U.S. 1994) (noting that defendants have no incentive to settle unless settlement precludes the possibility of further liability).

Objecting class members argue that a class release can be no broader than the scope of issue or claim preclusion that would result from a judgment on the merits. The objectors conclude that because a trial of Sherman Act claims might not be res judicata with respect to the Robinson-Patman claims, release of the latter is inappropriate. Such a conclusion, however, runs afoul of Seventh Circuit caselaw. See Richards Lumber and Supply Co. v. United States Gypsum, 545 F.2d 18, 20-21 (7th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 915 (1977) (rejecting contention that class settlement release cannot constitutionally release claims beyond those that would be barred by res judicata); Patterson v. Stovall, 528 F.2d 108, 110 n.2 (7th Cir. 1976) (affirming approval of class action settlement releasing all claims which could have been alleged by any class member by reason of or in connection with any matter or fact set forth or referred to in the class action complaint); see also Oswald v. McGarr, 620 F.2d 1190, 1198 (7th Cir. 1980) ("[I]t is entirely proper for the offer to include a release for claims not yet adjudicated. A settlement offer is a compromise and may include release of claims not before the Court"). Were the objectors here correct, rather than finding repose in settlements, settling defendants would face new and widespread litigation based on the same course of conduct. Under such circumstances, settlement negotiations would simply not ensue.

3 In any case, the breadth of the settlement's release is not beyond the class' authority. As a matter of law, where absent class members are accorded due process and are adequately represented, they are bound by the resulting class action judgment. See, e.g., Phillips Petroleum v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 806, 808, 811-12 (1985). Adequate representation requires that the named plaintiffs must "be part of the class and possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members," General Tel. Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 156 (1982), so "that the interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence." Id. at 157 n.13. Here, it is not contested that each member of the class could have asserted a Robinson-Patman claim. Indeed, the same factual predicate-- differential pricing-- was employed in the conspiracy claims alleged by the class. Because the interests of the objecting class members mirror the interests of the named plaintiffs in this respect, the release of all claims was within the authority of the class representatives and was n therefore inappropriate.

B. The Opportunity to Opt-Out

Related to the scope of the negotiated release is the assertion that objectors should be afforded a second opportunity to opt out of the class, given that the class notice did not inform the Class Plaintiffs that they had Robinson-Patman claims which might be settled if they remained in the class. The objectors attest that due process requires a second opt-out period. We disagree. As the Ninth Circuit observed in Officers For Justice v. Civil Service Com'n, 688 F.2d 615, 634-35 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1217 (1983):

> [W]e have found no authority of any kind suggesting that due process requires that members of a Rule 23(b)(3) class be given a second chance to opt out. We think it does not. [Objectors'] rights are protected by the mechanism provided in the rule: approval by the district court after notice to the class and a fairness hearing at which dissenters can voice their objections, and the availability of review on appeal. Moreover, to hold that due process requires a second opportunity opt out after the terms of the settlement have been disclosed to the class would impede the settlement process so favored in the law.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Officers For Justice v. Civil Service Com'n, 688 F.2d 615, 634-35 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1217 (1983); see also Wright, Miller, Kane Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 2d, § 1797 at p. 376 ("Since plaintiff was given notice and an opportunity to opt out at an earlier stage due process does not require that a second opportunity be given after the settlement terms are disclosed. At that point the parties' interests are protected by the Rule 23(e) requirements of court approval of the settlement with notice and a fairness hearing at which dissenters can voice their objections").

The Notice of Class Determination approved by this court complied fully with the requirements of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The class notice described the claim asserted, advised class members of their right to opt-out of the class, informed them that if they remained class members they would be bound by this court's rulings and judgments, informed them that they were entitled to enter an appearance through their own counsel, and told them that the pleadings and other records in the case were available for examination.

4 At the time the Notice of Class Determination was disseminated there were no settlements or releases, proposed or otherwise, to be disclosed. Neither Rule 23 nor due process requires that the objectors now be afforded a second opportunity to opt out simply because they now oppose settlements which did not exist at the time the original Notice of Class Determination was disseminated.

As we have previously observed, "Class notice is not intended to serve as a complete source of information as to each and every alternative a class member may have in pursuing any potential claim against named defendants." Mem. Op., Nov. 12, 1995, at 3. Further discussion concerning the possible consequences of a decision whether to opt out is appropriately left to "the marketplace of ideas." Tr. of Proceedings, Feb. 2, 1995, at 21. The fact that plaintiffs representing 14,400 stores (including 3,200 independents) opted out of the class and filed suits containing Robinson-Patman claims exemplifies the effectiveness of such an approach. See Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 813 (1985) (presence of 3,400 opt outs indicates that opt-out procedures were effective). Due process demands only that the class be given notice of the settlement and an opportunity to be heard. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(d), (e). Where these objectives are satisfied, due process does not warrant a second chance to opt-out of the plaintiff class. [FN2]

C. The Adequacy of the Cash Settlement

The proposed partial settlements involve a cash amount equal to $408 million. This figure represents a total five times the largest settlement in any antitrust class action not preceded by a prior governmental investigation and represents only seventy-five percent of the class purchases for which the class seeks damages. [FN3] Relying on a report filed in the opt out plaintiffs' cases describing alleged damages sustained by opt out Robinson-Patman plaintiffs, the objectors argue that the class' damages are in the range of $23-32 billion, before trebling. Based upon the Class Plaintiffs' experts' reports, class counsel have estimated $6 billion in potential class damages stemming from the settling defendants. Such well-founded or ill-founded estimates alone, however, do not warrant the conclusion that the $408 million proposed by the settlements is inadequate. Whether a jury would return a verdict remotely close to the asserted overcharges is far from certain, as is whether a multi-billion dollar judgment would ultimately be sustained on appeal. See EEOC v. Hiram Walker & Sons, Inc., 768 F.2d 884, 890 (7th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 478 U.S. 1004 (1986) ("the parties to a settlement will not be heard to complain that the relief afforded is substantially less than what they would have received from a successful resolution after trial"). Although the $408 million assessed in the proposed partial settlement is significantly smaller than the plaintiffs' own estimated assessment of damages, the amount remains sufficiently large to warrant attention. That this is true is reflected by the Federal Trade Commission's ("FTC") recent announcement that the FTC is conducting an investigation into drug industry pricing. Twenty-two drug manufacturers have been targeted by the investigation, most of whom are defendants in the present litigation. The $408 million involved in the proposed partial settlements is not inadequate.

D. The Foundation

5 Paragraph 12 of the proposed partial settlement provides that five percent of the settlement funds shall be set aside for the establishment and operation of a not-for-profit Foundation. The objectors maintain that the creation of such a Foundation, which may not engage in litigation or lobbying activities, is virtually worthless. We do not agree.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The asserted purpose of the Foundation is to advance the competitive position of retail pharmacies in the brand name prescription drug marketplace. The composition of the board and the Foundation's activities will be subject to court approval and supervision. As set forth by the settling parties, the Foundation advances several goals common to the Class Plaintiffs. For example, one goal of the Foundation might be to assist retail pharmacies in developing market share and cognitive services programs with a view toward generating lower pricing and improving the competitive position of retail pharmacies in the market place. The Foundation might also monitor industry pricing of brand name prescription drugs for purposes of developing materials that could be used in future litigation or for obtaining favorable legislation.

For purposes designed to assist the class, a court may set aside a portion of the settlement proceeds in order to maximize the beneficial impact of a settlement fund on the needs of a class. An allocation for such purposes as the Foundation here proposed is not improper.

E. Confidentiality Restrictions on Discovery Materials

The objectors maintain that the settlements impose extraordinary confidentiality restrictions on discovery materials which could hinder future drug pricing litigation. Although the settlements do provide for the return or destruction of sensitive materials, these proclamations merely comport with an earlier protective order entered by this court. On May 26, 1994, in order to facilitate discovery, this court entered a protective order extending confidential treatment for commercially sensitive documents and information produced by the defendants. See Pretrial Order No. 4 and Revised Pretrial Order No. 4. The proposed settlements operate in accordance with earlier court directives, and provide assurances to the defendants that privileged information will not be made public following resolution. Any objection as to the disposition of documents must be rejected.

F. Allocation of the Settlement

The settlements do not set forth any plan or formula for allocation of settlement proceeds. Although the objectors maintain that such an allocation plan is necessary to evaluate the fairness of the partial settlements, we disagree. As was noted in In re Washington Public Power Supply System Securiti Litigation, 1988 WL 158947, [1989 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 94,326 at 92,143 (W.D. Wash. 1988):

> Deferral of allocation decisions is routinely followed in partial settlements where the appropriate allocation among class members can best be determined when further settlements have been achieved or the litigation is completely resolved.

6 In re Washington Public Power Supply System Securities Litigation, [[1989 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 94,326 at 92,143 (W.D. Wash. 1988). We agree with the Washington court's assessment. The overall fairness of the partial settlements does not hinge upon a preliminary analysis of the precise manner in which the proceeds of a settlement are to be distributed or the amount which counsel will ultimately collect in fees. Such matters may be more readily examined after further resolution.

G. The Necessity of Injunctive Relief

The most substantial objection to the settlements, and that which ultimately determines their fate, involves the absence of an injunction or other provision eliminating the two-tiered system of pricing pharmaceutical drugs. Many Class Plaintiffs object to the continued maintenance of discounts to managed care entities and argue that such practices unfairly prevent Plaintiffs from competing with those entities. The plaintiffs seek what they describe as a level playing field. They maintain that without some change in the two-tiered pricing system, especially when compared to the modest per store recovery which the cash settlements provide, the settlements fail to accomplish the essential goal of the lawsuit. The druggists who appeared at the March 27, 1996 hearing proffered this view without exception-- and often with great passion.

Because consideration of whether final approval should be given to the settlements comes at a time when discovery has been completed and after substantial briefing and oral arguments on motions for summary judgment, the Court has the benefit of a complete evidentiary record to guide its decision. The defendants assert that the discounts afforded managed care entities are based on their ability to affect market share, an ability which the retail pharmacies purportedly do not possess. The plaintiffs maintain that such discounts are violative of the Sherman Act and likewise assert that the plaintiffs' ability to affect market share has been foreclosed by the actions of the defendants. Not surprisingly, evidence exists in support of each side's position.

There is substantial evidence that managed care providers possess considerable influence over the prescribing decision, and a manufacturer's failure to discount may result in the elimination of its products from the managed care formularies designed to influence that prescribing decision. Accordingly, the manufacturer's discounting decision in these cases is often a response to competitive pressures and reflects the epitome of a competitive system. As a matter of law, there is nothing improper about discounting the costs of pharmaceutical drugs to a purchaser for the purpose of receiving or maintaining that customer's business. And nothing in the law requires the manufacturer to provide a similar discount to a customer without a similar ability to affect market share.

On the other hand, there is evidence in this record that the refusal to discount is sometimes based on the status of the purchaser and irrespective of that purchaser's ability to affect market share. In these circumstances, the retail pharmacy is denied the opportunity to demonstrate an ability to show its affect on the market and, accordingly, denied the opportunity to compete effectively in the market place with managed care providers. The denial of the discount in these circumstances is not only manifestly unfair, but it is also illegal.

7 What many plaintiffs really seek-- a one price policy for themselves and managed care-- is not legally attainable in this or any other court. Any injunction or requirement along these lines would discourage competition, not enhance it. What the plaintiffs are entitled to, however, is the opportunity to earn the same or similar discounts upon a showing that the plaintiffs possess the same or similar abilities to affect market share as purchasers receiving discounts for those reasons.

As indicated above, we believe the settlement amount committed to by the defendants will surely counsel deterrence. The recent announcement of an FTC investigation into drug industry pricing evidences this fact, as do recent, limited instances where discounts have been afforded to retailers. Conspicuously, however, no commitment exists on the part of the settling defendants to bring about the fairness in opportunity which we believe the law requires and, as asserted by the objectors, forms the ultimate purpose for the plaintiffs' lawsuit. In unadorned form, we believe the following commitments on the part of the settling defendants to be entirely appropriate:

1. That a manufacturer shall not refuse to discount its goods based solely on the status of the buying entity; and
2. To the extent that retail pharmacies and retail buying groups can demonstrate an ability to affect market share in the same or similar manner in which managed care entities are able, retailers will be entitled to the same types of discounts given to managed care entities for this reason.

Although we do not believe that the plaintiffs are legally entitled to more than this with respect to pricing practices, we do not believe they are entitled to less. The absence of this or any other commitment with respect to future discount practices renders the settlements less than fair, reasonable, and adequate, and dooms them accordingly. Thus, even though we believe most of the objections to the settlements are without merit, the failure of the settling parties to provide, in any way, for the future pricing practices of the settling defendants is of such sufficient magnitude as to preclude approval by this court.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the settlements reached between the Class Plaintiffs and the Settling Defendants are not approved.

FN1. The settling defendants include Abbott Laboratories, American Cyanamid Company, American Home Products Corporation, Bristol-Myers Squibb Company, Burroughs Wellcome Co. (now merged into Glaxo Wellcome Inc.), Ciba-Geigy Corporation, Eli Lilly and Company, Glaxo Inc. (now merged into Glaxo Wellcome Inc.), Knoll Pharmaceutical Company, Merck & Co., Inc., Pfizer Inc., Schering-Plough Corporation, SmithKline Beecham Corporation, Warner-Lambert Company, and Zeneca Inc.

FN2. The notion that class members were unaware of other possible claims or available options defies logic. Over the course of the litigation, Class Plaintiffs were barraged with an assortment of mailings by class counsel, solicitations by the Robinson-Patman attorneys, and articles scattered throughout trade magazines and the national press-- all of which provided the plaintiffs with valuable information concerning the litigation.

FN3. The remaining twenty-five percent are attributable to the non- settling defendants. As to these defendants, the Class Plaintiffs' Sherman Act cases remain undisturbed.

April 3, 1981.

The United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas at Houston, John V. Singleton, Jr., Chief Judge, approved settlements in class actions brought under the Clayton Act, and appeal was brought by objectors. The Court of Appeals, Tjoflat, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) plaintiff negotiators were not shown to have had conflicts of interest which would render them inadequate representatives of subclasses; (2) lack of presettlement discovery does not alone invalidate settlements; (3) District Court had power to approve settlements releasing defendants from federal and state claims, though state claims were not pending in federal District Court; (4) alleged defects in notice to subclasses did not invalidate settlement; and (5) settlements were properly considered for approval prior to judicial resolution of issue whether nonsettling defendant had right to bring contribution action against settling defendants.

In view of fact that, notwithstanding status of discovery, plaintiffs' negotiators in class action had access to plethora of information regarding facts of their case, formal discovery was not necessary ticket to bargaining table, and even if there was imbalance of information between defendants and plaintiffs, settlements were not necessarily thereby invalidated, but, rather, if terms of settlement were fair, cour could reasonably conclude that counsel performe adequately. Federal district court in deciding if settlements in class action are reasonable in light of necessary determinations is not confined to mechanistic process of comparing settlement to estimated recovery times multiplier derived from likelihood of prevailing on merits, but should be guided also by other factors, relevancy of which will vary from case to case, including complexity, expense and likely duration of litigation, reaction of class to settlement and stage of proceedings, and, after court identifies such factors and explains their relevance to settlement, court should proceed to explain why it is either approving or disapproving settlement. Appeals from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas.

202 Before TJOFLAT, FAY and FRANK M. JOHNSON, Jr., Circuit Judges.

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

The appellate saga of the Corrugated Container antitrust litigation continues. [FN1] In this chapter, we consider two district court orders approving settlements between plaintiff-class representatives and twenty-four of the thirty-seven defendants.[FN2] The appellants in this appeal include two groups of dissident plaintiffs who argue that the settlements are invalid and must be set aside, and that even if they are valid, the formula by which they are to be distributed must be modified; a third group of plaintiffs who ask us to void those parts of the settlement that prevent them from pursuing state law remedies based on the same operative facts that underlie the settled federal claims; a fourth group of plaintiffs (comprised of one of the first two groups and the third group) who claim the notice informing the class of the settlement was defective; and various defendants who ask that we delay either approval of the settlements or distribution of the settlement proceeds [FN3] until there is final judicial clarification of the rights of non-settling defendants to bring actions for contribution against the settling defendants. [FN4] None of these arguments persuades us that the settlements must be set aside or modified; we are, however, in agreement with certain objectors that the district court's findings are insufficiently detailed to allow us to determine whether the district court abused its discretion in concluding that the terms of the settlements, and the plan to distribute the settlement proceeds to class members, are fair, reasonable and adequate.[FN5] We therefore remand the case to the district court for more detailed findings explaining its approval of the settlements. We retain jurisdiction during this limited remand.

FN1. The district court proceedings have already generated the following decisions: In Re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 606 F.2d 319 (5th Cir. 1979) (appeal dismissed without published opinion); In Re Corrugated Antitrust Litigation, 611 F.2d 86 (5th Cir. 1980); In Re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 614 F.2d 958 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 101 S.Ct. 244, 66 L.Ed.2d 114 (1980); In Re Corrugated Container Litigation, 620 F.2d 1086 (5th Cir. 1980).

FN2. Since the district court issued the orders involved in this appeal, twelve more defendants have settled. After this appeal was taken, the remaining defendant proceeded to trial before a jury and was found liable to plaintiffs.

FN3. Amounts paid toward the settlement have been deposited in an escrow account pending resolution of this appeal.

FN4. These settling defendants claim that in the event they are held liable for contribution, they could rescind the settlement under the doctrine of commercial frustration.

FN5. We find the court's findings on matters other than the terms of the settlement adequate. Thus, we are able to affirm the court's rejection of settlement attacks premised upon attorney conflicts of interest or the lack of presettlement discovery.

I
The Facts

We begin with a description of this litigation's general history. In 1976, the government convened a grand jury to investigate possible criminal antitrust violations occurring in the corrugated container industry. Several purchasers of corrugated containers and corrugated sheets subsequently filed treble damages actions against thirty-seven defendants under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. s 15 (1976). These cases, most of which were class actions, were consolidated in the Southern District of Texas in the fall of 1977. On December 6, 1977, the District Court ordered the formation of a plaintiffs' steering committee consisting of thirteen of the lawyers for plaintiffs in the consolidated actions. The district court order vested the committee with broad authority to control the continuing conduct of plaintiffs' cases; thi authority included the power to enter into settlement discussions with interested defendants.

On January 25, 1978, the grand jury returned indictments against fourteen of the defendants. The indictments charged that these defendants (and several individuals who had been employed by the defendants) conspired to fix corrugated container and sheet prices between 1960 and 1974.

In addition to the consolidated antitrust actions described, a group of container purchasers filed a state-law antitrust action in the Court of Common Pleas for Spartanburg County, South Carolina. The defendants in this action were also defendants in the consolidated cases. The state-court plaintiffs in these actions resisted efforts to remove their case to federal court, where it would have been transferred to the Southern District of Texas for consolidation. After successfully resisting removal, the plaintiffs moved the South Carolina court to enjoin the defendants from entering a settlement 203 with the federal plaintiffs that released the South Carolina claims. This motion was granted.

In March 1978, plaintiffs in forty of the pending consolidated cases filed a single complaint (in the suit now before us) on behalf of all purchasers of corrugated container and sheet products. Soon thereafter, a motion for certification of a class was filed. The motion had not been ruled upon when, on July 28, 1978, Great Northern Packaging Corporation (Great Northern) and Huron Packaging Corporation (Huron), purchasers of sheets, filed a separate antitrust class action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas against the defendants named in the unified class action. The plaintiff class in this new suit, however, was definitionally limited to sheet plants, that is, sheet purchasers who fabricate containers from their purchases. According to Great Northern and Huron, container purchasers rather than sheet plants had filed, and were prosecuting, the earlier consolidated actions.

Here we digress to consider the differences between the two purported classes. To do this, we must first look at the corrugated container industry. There are three steps in the manufacture of corrugated containers. In the first step, wood pulp is conver into containerboard. In the second step, the containerboard is confected into corrugated sheets. And, finally, in the third step, the sheets are fabricated into containers. The defendants in this appeal perform all three of these functions; that is, they begin with wood pulp and wind up with corrugated boxes. They are thus fully integrated operations.

The defendants sell their finished corrugated boxes to purchasers ranging from "ma and pa" grocery stores to such multinational corporations as Xerox Corporation. This group of purchasers composes the class denominated as container purchasers.

The defendants also sell corrugated sheets to independent enterprises that fabricate and sell their own containers.[FN6] These corrugated sheet purchasers comprise the sheet plant class. It should be noted that many container purchasers purchase some sheets, and, similarly, many sheet plants will purchase finished containers.

FN6. The container purchasers who buy from these independent fabricators are different from those that purchase from defendants, although there is some overlap between the two groups.

The various actions that had been consolidated, with one exception [FN7], had been filed by container purchasers. Most of these actions, however, were class actions, and the class definitions were arguably broad enough to include sheet plants. In any event, the plaintiffs' steering committee that was formed pursuant to the district court's December 6, 1977, order was composed entirely of lawyers for container purchasers.

FN7. After the initial consolidation of the various pending actions, and after the formation of the plaintiffs' steering committee, five container purchasers and one sheet plant, Atlas Container Corporation, filed still another federal antitrust suit against the defendants. This case was transferred to the Southern District of Texas to be consolidated with the other cases.

During the summer of 1978, and prior to class certification, the steering committee entered into settlement discussions with St. Regis Paper Corporation, which had not been indicted in the criminal case. These discussions culminated in St. Regis agreeing to pay $1.7 million, which represented $428,000 for each percentage point of the corrugated container market (market point) controlled by St. Regis, to settle the claims against it. St. Regis also made certain concessions and agreed, orally, to cooperate in plaintiffs' discovery effort. [FN8] Later that 204 summer, plaintiffs concluded a second settlement, with International Paper, which had been indicted in the criminal case. International Paper agreed to pay.$8.3 million, which reflected $1 million for each percentage point of the corrugated market controlled by the company. [FN9]

FN8. At the time of the settlement, Congress was considering legislation that could have conferred standing on indirect purchasers to pursue price-fixing claims and, concomitantly, to permit defendants to assert a pass-through defense against price fixing claims waged by direct purchasers. Plaintiffs represented to the district court that St. Regis, in negotiations, sought to obtain the right to rescind the settlement if such legislation was enacted and exposed it to a possibility of double liability. The negotiated settlement, however, provides a right to rescission only if such legislation were to be enacted before December 31, 1978. A second concession was that St. Regis had no right of rescission in the event the class was not certified or, if certified, later decertified. The settlement was, however, contingent on the court's initial approval of a settlement class of plaintiffs.

FN9. The terms of International Paper's settlement were similar to those agreed to by St. Regis. See note 8, supra. The discovery concessions, however, were reduced to writing.

At the time the steering committee negotiated the aforementioned settlements, it had undertaken no discovery going to the merits of the case. (Such discovery was effectively precluded by restrictions imposed by the district court during the pendency of the criminal prosecution.) The steering committee had available to it certain information, however, which, according to the settlement proponents, was adequate for it to make an informed judgment concerning the value of the claims.[FN10]

FN10. In urging the district court to accept the settlements, the steering committee claimed it had had access to the following sources of information:
(a) The indictments and, in the case of International Paper, the extensive bill of particulars filed recently by the Government in the criminal case.
(b) Documents produced by defendants to the Record Excerpts at 276 (footnote omitted).

On September 6, 1978, after the first two settlements had been concluded, the district court entered an order certifying a single class in the consolidated litigation. Great Northern believed the parameters of the class were imprecisely drawn and, in particular, ambiguous concerning whether sheet plants were included in the class. In response to these concerns, Great Northern, on October 6, 1978, filed a motion to clarify the class definition by excluding sheet plants, or, alternatively, to create a subclass for sheet plants. The court took this motion under advisement. Then, on October 26, 1978, without ruling on Great Northern's motion, the district court designated representatives of the class it had already certified. These class representatives included Atlas Container Corporation, which represented itself as a sheet plant.[FN11]

FN11. See note 7, supra.

The class representatives immediately embarked on an exploration of further settlement possibilities. This led, in December, to settlements with seven additional unindicted defendants. These settlements ranged from $2 million per market point to $2.75 million. In addition, a misdemeanor indictee settled for $3.5 million per point, and a felony indictee for.$4.5 million.

On December 26, 1978, the district court responded to Great Northern's motion by certifying two subclasses, one of container purchasers and the other of sheet plants. The court named Great Northern as one representative of the sheet plant subclass; Atlas Container, which previously had been designated a class representative, was also named a sheet plant representative.[FN12] With the exception of Atlas Container, the representatives of the containe purchaser subclass were the plaintiffs who had been designated on October 26, 1978 to represent the initial unitary class. Also on December 26, the two subclasses declared moratoriums on further negotiations.

FN12. The attorney for Atlas, who had also been representing five container purchasers, withdrew his representation of the container purchasers.

The container purchasers lifted their moratorium on January 5, 1979, and throughout 205 the month conducted settlement discussions, but strictly on behalf of their subclass. This created a problem for defendants, who desired settlements that would release them from the claims of both subclasses. This problem was compounded by the container subclass's per-point dollar demands, which were in excess of what the single class had received in the December settlements. Defendants refused to negotiate on these terms, at least without the sheet plants' participation in the discussions.

The sheet plants, however, were unwilling to discuss settlement pending resolution of the investigation into damages suffered by their class. In order to break the resulting deadlock between the container class and defendants, a compromise was reached. The compromise was that a portion of any negotiated settlement would be available to the sheet class if the sheet class applied to participate in it, thus providing the defendants a possibility that the settlement they negotiated would release both subclasses' claims.[FN13] Eleven settlements, ranging from $1.5 million to $4 million per point, were negotiated on these terms.[FN14]

FN13. If the sheet subclass elected not to participate, the container class would receive the entire settlement proceeds, even that portion earmarked for the sheet plants; the sheet plants could proceed to trial.

FN14. The sheet plant subclass representatives voted two votes to one to participate in the settlements; after inter-class negotiation, it was agreed that $11 million would be earmarked for sheet plant claims. The sheet plant objectors challenge the sheet plant participation in these settlements in a separate appeal docketed 80-1476, 80-1521. The briefing on that appeal w. not completed until after the issues on this appeal had been briefed and orally argued.

Late in January, the two classes negotiated additional settlements with two defendants who claimed an inability to pay large amounts in settlement because of borderline solvency. The plaintiff classes retained two accounting firms to investigate these hardship claims. After the firms reported that the claims were founded in fact, the plaintiffs settled at rates lower than those used in earlier settlements.

The criminal trial immediately followed these settlements, and no further settlements were reached while the trial was in progress. In April, 1979, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty against the defendants who stood trial. (Several of the indicted defendants had previously pleaded nolo contendere.)

On April 16, 1979, the plaintiff class representatives filed a motion for preliminary approval of the settlements. Several members of each of the two subclasses opposed the motion. Among the objections were that the settlements were contaminated by conflicts of interest; that the dollar amounts were inadequate; that even if the post-class certification settlements were adequate in amount, the pre-certification settlements with St. Regis and International Paper were clearly inadequate; that the negotiating attorneys lacked data necessary to evaluate the settlements; and that the objectors were denied the right to explore the settlement negotiations through discovery. By order dated May 30, 1979, the district court rejected these objections as obstacles to preliminary settlement approval, and held that "these settlements are within the range of possible approval and that notice of them should be given to the class members." In Re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 1979-1 Trade Reg.Rep.(CCH) P 62,690 at 77,881 (S.D.Tex.1979).

The class representatives thereafter sent a single notice to the class members, advising them they were potential members of a class and that settlements with 24 of the defendants had been reached and preliminarily approved by the court. The notice indicated that the total value of the settlements was $300,000,000. Recipients of the notice were given options of participating, of opting out of the class, or of participating in the class but objecting to the settlements. The sheet plant and South Carolina objectors contended that the notice was defective because it omitted relevant information concerning the settlements and because separate notices should have been used to advise the class of the pendency of the 206 actions and of the proposed settlements. In any event, the vast majority of potential class members chose to participate in the class, and only a very small percentage of the class members objected to the settlements.

The court, on December 3 and 4, 1979, presided over a hearing on whether final approval should be given to the settlements. At this hearing, the objections to the settlements raised at the preliminary approval stage were renewed. In addition, new objections were raised. Several defendants objected to approval of the settlements prior to final judicial resolution of the validity of the claims for contribution that certain non-settling defendants had raised against them; other defendants requested that the court approve the settlements, but delay distribution of the proceeds until judicial resolution of the contribution issue, thus preserving the assets until such time as a right of rescission might arise. The group of plaintiffs that had filed an antitrust action in South Carolina objected to a settlement provision releasing state law claims. Some sheet plants objected to the manner in which the proceeds were to be divided between the subclasses; some container purchasers made similar objections. The district court, nonetheless, approved the settlements and the objectors have brought this appeal.

We discuss these various objections in the following sections of this opinion. Before beginning this discussion we add, parenthetically, that since the district court's approval of these settlements, twelve of the then thirteen non-settling defendants settled their lawsuits. The plaintiffs proceeded against the thirteenth defendant, Mead Corporation, in a jury trial. The jury found that Mead had conspired to fix prices in the corrugated container industry with eighteen of the settling defendants.

II
Arguments that the District Court Abused Its Discretion in Approving These Settlements

Rule 23(e) of the Rules of Civil Procedure requires that a settlement or compromise of a class action be approved by the district court. The district court below, in its 31st pretrial order, found the twenty-four settlements involved in this appeal to be fair, reasonable and adequate and, therefore, approved them. Two groups of plaintiffs, one comprised of certain members of the sheet subclass and the other of members of the container purchaser subclass, contend that the district court's findings and its concomitant approval of the settlements were erroneous. We are, accordingly, asked to set aside the court's approval.

The objecting plaintiff groups, between them, advance three reasons why the district court should not have given these settlements its imprimatur. The first two reasons do not relate directly to the terms of the settlement, but rather to the manner in which those terms were negotiated by the class representatives. Specifically, the objecting plaintiffs contend that the settlements should be set aside because they were negotiated by attorneys who (1) attempted to represent both subclasses as a single client, a representation that, because of the inherent conflicts between the subclasses, could not adequately be undertaken; and (2) lacked sufficient data to evaluate the settlement value of their cases against each of the defendants. We hold that neither of these objections provides grounds for reversing the district court's approval.

The dissident plaintiffs' third objection is to the adequacy of the terms of each of these settlements. The plaintiffs argue that on the record before us, we must find that the district court abused its discretion in holding that the settlements were adequate. We are unable to evaluate this contention, however, because the district court's findings and conclusions on adequacy were insufficiently detailed to inform us of why the court acted as it did. Although we are reluctant to delay further ultimate judgment on these settlements, we are, under these circumstances, compelled to remand to the district court for findings of fact sufficient for us to determine whether 207 its approval of the settlements was a proper exercise of discretion. We will retain jurisdiction of this appeal during the limited remand.

Standard of Review

[1] Rule 23(e) provides no standard by which a court is to consider the settlement of a class action; rather, the rule states only that "(a) class action shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court ...." Decisional law, however, provides us with a general measuring rod for considering settlements:

> In determining whether to approve a proposed settlement, the cardinal rule is that the District Court must find that the settlement is fair, adequate and reasonable....

Cotton v. Hinton, 559 F.2d 1326, 1330 (5th Cir. 1977). See also: Young v. Katz, 447 F.2d 431 (5th Cir. 1971). Approval of a settlement under this standard is not to be upset unless "the trial court clearly abused its discretion." Young v. Katz, supra at 432. Thus, our appellate function respecting the various arguments presented on this appeal is a limited one, especially in light of the strong judicial policy favoring settlement of disputes. United States v. City of Miami, Florida, 614 F.2d 1322, 1344 (5th Cir. 1980).

B.
Conflict of Interest

We turn to the dissidents' first argument: that the district court should have disapproved these settlements because they were negotiated by attorneys with conflicts of interest that adversely affected their representation of one or both classes. As might be expected, the two classes have somewhat different views on which class was hu and how the hurt was inflicted. The sheet plant dissidents argue that the pre-January 5, 1979, settlements, covering both classes, were negotiated by attorneys representing container purchasers only, and that those attorneys subordinated the interest of sheet plants to the interests of their clients. The container purchaser dissidents present a more subtle argument. They believe that the attempt to negotiate the pre-January 5 settlements on behalf of both subclasses, with their allegedly diverging and irreconcilable interests, made it impossible for negotiating counsel to "have represented the interests of both container purchasers and sheet plants adequately in settlement negotiations." Brief of Plaintiff-Appellant Container Purchasers, at 23. Moreover, the dissident container purchasers also challenge the post-January 5 settlements, arguing that the container purchasers' negotiation of a set-aside fund to be allocated among the sheet plants upon their application polluted those settlements with conflicts of interest. [FN15]

> FN15. The sheet plant dissidents do not challenge the post-January 5 settlements on this appeal, b rather do so in related appeals. See note 14, supr.

1. Pre-January 5 Settlements

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[2] We can assume, for purposes of considering the conflicts argument, that the two subclasses had significantly diverging interests and that an attorney could not adequately represent all these interests throughout the litigation. [FN16] This does not mean that the settlements are necessarily void, however, because even "irregular settlement negotiations may ... form the basis 208 for a judicially acceptable class action settlement ... if the record clearly indicates that representation of the class during the negotiations was adequate and that the settlement itself is fair." In Re General Motors Corp. Engine Interchange Litigation, 594 F.2d 1106, 1131-32 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 870, 100 S.Ct. 146, 62 L.Ed.2d 95 (1979) (emphasis supplied). The question of fairness of the settlement terms is considered in a separate section of this opinion. We consider, in this section, the question of adequacy of representation.

> FN16. The district court, however, would dispute this. According to the court,
>
> The order carving out a separate subclass of sheet plants was entered because there was some suggestion that a conflict could arise between the two groups, and because the court was not at that time familiar enough with the corrugated industry to be sure that such a conflict would not arise. It now appears clear that although differences may exist between the sheets plants and other corrugated purchasers, there are no inherent conflicts between them.

Recognizing that the allegedly differing interests of the two subclasses might have conflicted at some point in the litigation, we think the question before the district court was whether these interests conflicted at the point of settlement negotiation, and thus deprived either class of the vigorous and unqualified advocacy in settlement negotiations to which both were entitled. In deciding whether the settlements resulted from proper advocacy, we must inquire, first, whether the general interests of the subclasses respecting the settlements were the same and amenable to being achieved by unified representation; and, second, whether any specific features of the settlement sacrificed the interests of one class in favor of the interests of the other.

[3] The way we have framed our first inquiry indicates our agreement with the district court that "so long as all class members are united in asserting a common right, such as achieving the maximum possible recovery for the class, the class interests are not antagonistic for representation purposes." In Re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 1980-1 Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P 63,163 at 77,788 n.10 (S.D.Tex.1979). We think it clear that the primary settlement goal of each class was to cause defendants to agree to pay substantial compensation in exchange for the most limited possible release from their obligations and potential liabilities as parties to the litigation.

We have carefully reviewed the objectors' appellate briefs, and their submissions to the district court in opposition to the settlements, and have not been pointed to anything suggesting that other significant subclasses' settlement interests existed.[FN17] Neither has there been a suggestion that two sets of negotiators leading to two sets of settlements might have better achieved the common aims of the two subclasses. On the contrary, in these circumstances, logic dictates that one set of negotiators, with the authority to release defendants from all claims, would be in a better bargaining position than negotiators with authority to compromise only part of the action.

> FN17. The district court noted that the only benefit the sheet plants separate representation achieved was injunctive relief.

[4] We next consider whether the negotiators, despite the uniformity of the two subclasses' settlement interests, somehow sacrificed, advertently or inadvertently, the interests of one subclass for those of the other. While objectors from each class argue that the dollar values of the settlements were inadequate, neither class suggests that this inadequacy resulted from a tradeoff of its rights in order to realize the interests of the other class. In fact, the only suggested illustration of potential class conflict evolving into actual prejudice concerns the settlement with St. Regis. The sheet-class objectors contend that this settlement should have been larger because St. Regis, while a small container manufacturer, is the nation's third largest manufacturer of corrugated sheets.[FN18]

> FN18. The sheet plant objectors also allege that the settlement with International Paper illustrates the sacrifice of their interests for those of the container-purchaser subclass. The objectors, however, do not suggest that International Paper was a larger manufacturer of sheets than Defendants-Appellants (the Continental Group, Inc.) at 2. The second group believes the district court properly placed its final imprimatur on the settlements, but should have delayed distribution of the settlement proceeds until all issues concerning rights of recission were resolved. Brief for Settling Defendants-Appellants Owens-Illinois, Inc., etc. at 8. At this time, we hold only that the district court acted properly in deciding whether to approve the settlements when it did. We do not, in this opinion, reach the question whether the district court should have delayed distribution of the settlement proceeds, since this question will be mooted 225 if the settlements are ultimately disapproved.[FN44] Our retained jurisdiction will permit us to review the question of distribution when the district court, on limited remand, complies with our request as iterated in Part II, supra.

> FN44. We consider whether the district court should have considered approving the settlements when it did because a negative answer to this question would require us to vacate the order approving the settlements.

[36][37] The argument that the district court should have delayed approving these settlements until the non-settling defendant's right of contribution is finally resolved is without merit. The district court's inherent power to manage the class action gives it the discretion to decide when to review the adequacy of a settlement. In exercising this discretion, the court's most important consideration is whether the proponents are ready to demonstrate that the settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate. If they are, the district court should proceed to consider the settlement at an early date, particularly when approval or disapproval bears on the interests of other parties who are preparing for trial. Here, as in other contexts, justice unnecessarily delayed can be justice diminished.

[38] The settling defendants, however, claim that the court could not determine whether the settlements were fair and reasonable as to them until the contribution claims were resolved. These defendants misconstrue the court's role in passing on the fairness, adequacy and reasonableness of a settlement. The reason the court is called on to review a settlement is to protect the rights of the many absent class members who were not involved in the negotiations leading to settlement. See Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 33 (3d Cir. 1971). A defendant who negotiates a settlement, however, does not need the c to in a fiduciary role to protect its interest. T e provides other remedies if the settlement is ega objectionable from the defendant's standpoint instance, it can seek rescission.

Thus, defendants here, are wrong in claiming t the court abused its discretion in reviewing settlements for final approval in December, 1 79 the defendants' interests in bringing a res iss action required protection, the court could h delayed distribution of the settlement pr ee Whether the court had the duty to ro defendants' interests on rescission, and whet failing to exercise that duty was reversible err , i question we reserve until the district court c api with out limited remand order.

VII
Conclusion

We conclude by summarizing our holdings:

(1) We affirm the district court's holding t at plaintiff negotiators did not have conflicts of inter that rendered them inadequate representat s of subclasses;

(2) We affirm the district court's holding t at lack of pre-settlement discovery does not i its invalidate the settlements;

(3) We affirm the district court's holding tha it h the power to approve settlements that rele defendants from federal and state claims;

(4) We affirm the district court's approval f notice to the subclasses;

(5) We affirm the district court's decis n consider the settlements for final approval prior judicial resolution of whether the non-settli defendant has a right to bring a contribution cti against the settling defendants;

(6) We remand to the district court to ente mo detailed findings and conclusions concerni g t adequacy of all but the two "hardship settlements";

(7) We remand to the district court to ente mo detailed findings and conclusions con ing t reasonableness of the formula by ic t settlement proceeds for the pre-January 5, 197 , a the hardship settlements are to be distributed subclass members;

226 (8) We reserve judgment on whether the district court should delay distribution of the settlement proceeds until there is judicial resolution of the non-settling defendant's right to bring a contribution action against the settling defendants;

Appellate Court of Illinois.
First District. First Division.

Joseph F. ELWARD, Appellant,
v.
PEABODY COAL COMPANY, an Illinois corporation, et al., Appellees.

No. 46717.

March 5, 1956
Rehearing Denied March 21, 1956.

Action by shareholder, for himself, and in representative capacity, attacking validity of stock purchase option issued by corporation. The Superior Court, Cook County, Frank M. Padden, J., entered order dismissing complaint, and plaintiff appealed. The Appellate Court, Burke, J., held that corporate directors as intended beneficiaries of stock option were disqualified from voting on resolution authorizing option, and where corporation had seven directors, five of whom attended meeting at which resolution was adopted, and it was adopted by five votes including votes of intended beneficiaries, there was no affirmative action by qualified majority of directors.

Decree reversed and cause remanded with directions.

BURKE, Judge.

237 Joseph F. Elward, for himself and in a representative capacity, filed his second and amended supplemental complaint (hereinafter called the complaint) against Peabody Coal Company, an Illinois corporation, and its seven directors for a declaratory decree that a stock option is invalid, injunctive relief and discovery. He appeals from an order dismissing the complaint on defendants' motion that it is substantially insufficient in law.

The capital stock consists of 562,608 shares of prior preferred 5% comulative $25 par, convertible into common stock at the holder's option at the rate of 2 1/2 shares of common for each share of preffered, and 828,835 1/2 shares of common at $5 par value. Sufficient shares of common stock are reserved for conversion of the preferred stock. The by-laws provide for a board of directors of seven members and that a majority shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. In October, 1951, Otto Gressens, one of the defendants, became an employee of the corporation. In 1951 the charter of the corporation was amended to provide that any shares of common or preferred stock may, in the discretion of the board of directors, be issued and disposed of from time to time in such manner, to such persons of corporations and for such consideration as may be determined by the board, wihtout first being offered to any class or classes of shareholders. At a special meeting of the directors held December 21, 1953, a resolution was adopted giving Stuyvesant Peabody and Gressens an option during a nine year period commencing December 21, 1954, to purchase common stock at $3 a share, Peabody's option being for 20,000 and Gressens' for 40,000 shares. At this special meeting five out of seven directors attended. Peabody and Gressens were two of the five directors voting for the resolution.

The next day Peabody wrote a letter directing the cancellation of his stock option. On the day of the 238 special meeting an agreement was executed by the corporation and Gressens, whereby in consideration of the sum of $1 paid by Gressens as optionee to the corporation and the other good and valuable consideration, including the continued service of the optionee at least until December 21, 1954, the corporation granted to him an option to purchase on or before December 31, 1963, 40,000 shares of common stock at $3 a share. On the following day Gressens wrote the president of the corporation a letter stating that in consideration of and as a part of the option agreement he agreed to remain in the employ of the corporation for at least five years "under the salary arrangement suggested by you." On the day the option was granted the market price of the common stock was $3 a share; on June 28, 1954, it was $5 1/8 a share. The parties agree that in June, 1955, the market price was $8 a share.

On January 18, 1954, plaintiff wrote to defendants objecting to the option. On February 8, 1954, plaintiff requested the defendants to annul the option transaction. In May, 1954, plaintiff and the management of defendants sent separate letters to the shareholders soliciting proxies for the annual shareholders' meeting to be held on June 28, 1954. In these communications the shareholders were informed about the option. The management statement said that inasmuch as the statute requires that the corporation must receive as consideration "not less than the par value of $5" that the company has three alternatives. At the annual shareholders' meeting of June 28, 1954, a resolution was adopted approving, ratifying and confirming the option agreement. The vote was 920,404 1/2 shares in favor of the option and 313,761 shares against the option. The vote for the option was 66.15% of all the outstanding *552 shares and 57.91% of the persons holding stock voted their shares in favor of the option.

[1][2] 239 The plaintiff asserts that the Business Corporation Act does not empower a corporation to issue a stock option; that this power is not granted in express terms or by implication; that a shareholder is entitled under the common law to preemptive rights; and that the Act should be construed strictly so as not to impair the preemptive rights of stockholders. The public policy of this state is found in the Constitution, the statutes and the decisions of the courts. Plaintiff cites cases pointing out the distinction between the power to sell and the power to give an option. The preemptive rights of shareholders to share pro rata in any new issue of corporate stock so that their interest will not be diluted but continue proportionately, is part of the common law of this State. Eidman v. Bowman, 58 Ill. 444; Tennant v. Epstein, 271 Ill.App. 204. Section 24 of the Business Corporation Act (Par. 157.24, Ch. 32, Ill.Rev.Stat.1955) reads: "The preemptive right of a shareholder to acquire additional shares of a corporation may be limited or denied to the extent provided in the articles of incorporation. Unless otherwise provided by its articles of incorporation, any corporation may issue and sell its shares to its employees or the the employees of any subsidiary corporation, without first offering the same to its shareholders, for such consideration and upon such term and conditions as shall be approved by the holders of two-thirds of its shares entitled to vote with respect thereto or by its board of directors pursuant to like approval of the shareholders."

[3][4] The first sentence of Section 24 provides that the charter of an Illinois corporation may limit or deny the preemptive right of a shareholder to acquire additional shares of stock. The second sentence of the section allows a corporation which does not have an express charter denial or limitation of preemptive rights, to issue and sell stock to its employees free of preemptive rights for such consideration and upon 240 such terms and conditions as shall be approved by the holders of two-thirds of its shares entitled to vote with respect therto or by its board of directors pursuant to like approval of the shareholders. Plaintiff inquires that, keeping in mind the doctrine that corporate powers are to be construed strictly and that no power is to be implied unles reasonably necessary to an express power, under what section or sections could the power to issue stock options be regarded as implied? Section 5 of the Business Corporation Act states that each corporation shall have power to make contracts and incur liabilities, to elect or appoint officers and agents of the corporation, to define their duties and fix their compensations, and to exercise all powers necessary or convenient to effect any or all of the purposes for which the corporation is formed. It cannot be doubted that Illinois corporations are empowered to enter into contracts relating to employment. The implied powers which a corporation has in order to carry into effect those expressly granted and to accomplish the purposes of its creation are not limited to such as are indispensable for these purposes, but comprise all that are necessary, in the sense of appropriate and suitable, including the right of reasonable choice of means to be employed. 13 Am.Jur., Corporations, Sec. 740. We are of the opinion that there is ample implied power in Sections 5 and 24 of the Business Corporation Act and in Article 9 of the amended charter to sustain the action of the defendant corporation in entering into a valid contract with an officer or employee for a stock option.

[5][6] Having decided that under the Business Corporation Act a corporation has the right to impair the preemptive rights of shareholders by granting stock option to officers and employees and that the charter of the defendant corporation as amended authorized the directors to exercise that power, we 241 turn to a consideration of plaintiff's contention that the stock option granted violates provisions of the statute. We are of the opinion that in granting stock options a corporation is required to comply with the provisions of Section 24 of the *553 Business Corporation Act and its charter. Plaintiff says that the stock option granted in the instant case violates that section in that it does not run to employees but to one employee. Section 1.03 of the Act governing the construction of statutes (Ch. 131, Ill.Rev.Stat.1955) states that "the plural number may include the singular." We think that an Illinois corporation may grant stock options to one or more persons.

Plaintiff maintains that the proper construction of Section 24 requires that to deny a shareholder's preemptive right by issuing shares to its employees, there must be a determination to that effect and of the consideration therefor by the board of directors and an approval by two-thirds of the outstanding shares, and that satisfaction of one of these conditions is insufficient. Pursuant to the provisions of the first paragraph of Section 24, the corporate charter was amended to provide, among other things, that the board of directors could deny preemptive rights to the shareholders, and we have held that by implication these provisions authorize the making of contracts for stock options to officers and employees. The second paragraph of Section 24 would be operative if there were no denial of preemptive rights as set forth in Article 9 of the charter. The second paragraph of that section commences "Unless otherwise provided by its articles of incorporation" and then goes on to state that shares may be offered to employees "without first offering the same to its shareholders" upon the approval of two-thirds of the total shares. If preemptive rights have been completely denied to the shareholders under a charter provision pursuant to the authority 242 provided by the first paragraph of Section 24, as in the case at bar, then no requirement exists that the stock be first offered to shareholders.

[7] Plaintiff asserts that the stock option must fail because it is not upon terms and conditions approved by a qualified majority of the directors. At the meeting held on December 21, 1953, wherein the stock option was approved, five of the seven directors attended. These five included Peabody and Gressens, who were the optionees and beneficiaries. The resolution was adopted by five votes. Peabody and Gressens were disqualified to vote on this benefaction to themselves. Without counting these two votes there were only three directors voting for the resolution. Plaintiff argues that of the three directors, two others could be fairly regarded as interested and dominating, leaving only one clearly disinterested director. We agree with plaintiff that under the allegations of the complaint there was never any affirmative action by a qualified majority of directors. Luthy v. Ream, 190 Ill.App. 315; Id., 270 Ill. 170, 110 N.E. 373. Defendants answer that any defect which might have occurred in the action of the directors in adopting the resolution was vitiated by the subsequent approval overwhelmingly voted by the shareholders," citing Kerbs v. California Eastern Airways, Del., 90 A.2d 652, 34 A.L.R.2d 839; Federal Life Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 173

Ill.App. 5. The action of the board of directors in granting the stock option was approved by 66.15% of all outstanding shares at the annual stockholders' meeting.

[8] Plaintiff insists that the stock option is illegal for the reason that it provides for the issuance at a price of $3 of shares having a par value of $5, in violation of Section 17 of the Business Corporation Act, which requires that shares having a par value may be issued for such consideration, not less than the par value thereof, as 243 shall be fixed from time to time by the board of directors. The par value of the common shares of the corporation is $5 per share. Plaintiff states that under the stock option the corporation agrees to sell 40,000 shares to Gressens at his option up to December 31, 1963, at a price of $3 per share, and that this is a clear violation of the statute. Defendants say that the option is not illegal. They concede that under the statute stock may not be issued for consideration of less than the par value thereof, and that the corporation must receive consideration totaling in value $5 for each share of stock issued to Gressens under the option. Defendants say that the option agreement provides *554 that "the corporation shall always receive, prior to the issuance of any shares, that amount of Consideration legally required to make such shares full paid and nonassessable." Section 2 of the option agreement specifically provides that the purchase price of the shares of common stock shall be $3. This section further states that under " certain circumstances such purchase price per share is subject to adjustment as provided in Section 9." Section 9 (a) provides that if prior to the expiration date of the option ending December 31, 1963, "any of the events hereinafter shall occur, the stock purchasable under this agreement and the unit purchase price payable upon the exercise of the option granted herein shall be adjusted as provided in this Section 9." The section then goes on in (b) to provide that in the event the corporation shall issue a stock dividend or a stock split-up, there shall be an adjustment of the "per share or per unit price of the securities which the optionee shall be thus entitled to receive." The section further provides in (c) that in case the corporation shall be merged or consolidated that the optionee shall be merged or consolidated that the optionee shall be entitled to receive the securities which he would have been entitled to receive had he exercised his option prior to the effective 244 date of the merger of consolidation. The section provides in (d) that in the event of a dispute as to whether an increase of decrease of the per share or per unit price of securities is required under paragraphs (b) and (c), the decision of the independent public accountants who, at the time regularly audit the books of the corporation, shall be final and conclusive. Paragraph (c) of the section concludes with this sentence: "If appropriate, due adjustment shall be made in the per share or per unit price of the securities purchased, provided, however, that the corporation shall always receive, prior to the issuance of any shares, that amount of consideration legally required to make such shares fully paid and nonassessable." In our opinion the option agreement, after fixing the "purchase price" of $3, requires that the "full purchase price of shares purchased shall be paid upon the exercise of the option." The "full purchase price" means the purchase price at $3 a share. The concluding sentence of the paragraph that "under certain circumstances such purchase price per share is subject to adjustment, as provided in Section 9" relates to the adjustment to be made in the per share or per unit price under the contingencies provided for in Section 9, namely, adjustment for stock dividend, stock split-up, merger or consolidation. A careful reading of the option agreement convinces us that the corporation's promise is unequivocal that the purchase price of the shares shall be $3. This construction of the agreement is consistent with the action of the board of directors at the meeting of December 21, 1953, wherein the chairman proposed that consideration be given to the matter of authorizing options to purchase the shares of common stock hereinbefore mentioned "at a price of $3 per share, the present market price of the company's common shares on the New York Stock Exchange." The resolution then adopted, authorized and 245 directed the officers to enter into an option agreement with Gressens for 40,000 shares, and provides that the officers are authorized to make such changes in the form of agreements as are considered advisable by counsel, provided that the terms shall be " substantially the same as those provided for the instruments submitted to the meeting." The option agreement bears the date of the meeting and was presumably signed immediately after the meeting. In the resolution the officers were authorized and directed to carry out the option agreements according to their terms and to file any reports and give any notices that may be necessary from time to time with the New York Stock Exchange or any governmental agencies. We agree with the plaintiff that it would be reasonable to expect that if there were any qualifications or conditions in the corporation's promise to Gressens, such as the defendants now suggest, namely, that the promise included a provision that the corporation is always to receive "consideration totaling in value $5," that somewhere in the agreement or in the minutes of the meeting there would be a reference to this qualification or condition.

*555 Defendants invite attention to the following from the proxy statement of the management sent to the shareholders prior to the annual meeting of June 28, 1954: "The option price is $3 per share, which was the market price on the New York Stock Exchange on December 21, 1953, the day the option was granted, subject however, to the requirement of Illinois law that the company must receiver as consideration not less than the par value ($5.00) for any theretofore unissued shares. * * * In the opinion of counsel for the Company, there is an obligation on the Company before delivery of shares under the option agreement not only to have received $3.00 per share from the optionee but also that the shares delivered be legally issued." 246 The statement sets forth three of the "alternatives available to the directors in order to fulfill the requirements of Illinois law" in this respect. Plaintiff argues that defendants' position that they have three alternatives to avoid the statute is without merit because each of the alternatives recognizes that the present promise of the corporation is a mere "illusory promise" and therefore void and unenforceable.

The proxy solicitation letter continued: "One of the alternatives available to the directors in order to fulfill the requirement of Illinois law is to recognize at the time Mr. Gressens alects to exercise all or any part of the option that the Company has received services of Mr. Gressens not covered by his current salary equal in value to the spread between the $3.00 a share to be paid by him in cash and the $5.00 par value of those shares. If this were done, there would be a transfer of the aggregate amount of such spread from the Company's surplus (income) account to its capital account." The plan thus outlined depends upon an uncertain future event over which Gressens has no control and which may or may not happen. When and if Gressens decides to exercise his option the future board of directors is under no legal obligation to give him a bonus covering the "spread" between the $3 purchase price and the $5 par value price of the shares. The proxy solicitation letter suggested that a second alternative "could be the delivery of treasuty shares, if available at the time of the exercise of all or any part of the option." At no time since December 21, 1953, has the corporation had any treasury shares of common stock. The corporation is under no legal obligation to acquire shares of common stock to be held in its treasury. The proxy solicitation letter said that a "third alternative could be that the par value of the shares at the time of the exercise of all or any part of this option would be $3 or less per share or no par. 247 The last alternative would require shareholders' approval by amendment of the charter. If present circumstances continue, neither the second nor third alternative will be adopted." This alternative recognizes that in order to make a valid contract to purchase the common stock at $3 a share, it would be necessary that the charter be amended to change the par value of the common stock to "$3 or less per share or no par value," which would require approval by two-thirds of the shareholders. As the promise of the corporation and Gressens' right to compel performance are conditional upon an uncertain future event which may never take place, it is obvious that there is now no binding promise. "The fundamental element of promise seems to be an expression of intention by the promisor that his future conduct shall be in accordance with his present expression, irrespective of what his will may be when the time for performance arrives." Corbin on Contracts, Sec. 16. The suggested alternatives do not contemplate an intention by the corporation that its future actions with relation to the payment of the consideration for the shares of common stock shall be in accordance with its present expression, irrespective of what its decision may be when the time for performance arrives. We conclude that the proposed alternatives constitute an illusory promise that requires further legal action on the part of the board to implement, which action the board is legally free to take or not to take and that therefore the promise is unenforceable.

[9] Defendants urge that it is premature to entertain the question of a consideration *556 for the issuance of the stock, pointing out that Section 18 of the Business Corporation Act provides that the judgment of the board of directors or shareholders, as the case may be as to the value of the consideration received for shares shall 248 be conclusive. No part of the option has as yet been exercised. The defendants say that if and when Gressens exercises the option the directors will then determine how the agreement may be performed so that the shares issued to him will be fully paid anc nonassessable, and that it is impossible to know now the circumstances which will confront the directors at the time the option is exercised. They suggest that if at that time plaintiff has reason to believe that

"actual fraud" entered into the judgment of the directors in determining the value of the consideration, then he would have a remedy. We are of the opinion that plaintiff is entitled to a declaratory decree as to whether the stock option agreement is illegal. Section 57.1 of the Civil Practice Act (Par. 57.1, Ch. 110, Ill.Rev.Stat. 1955) provides that no action or proceeding in any court of record shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree, judgment or order is sought thereby, and the court may, in cases of actual controversy, make binding declarations of rights having the force of final judgments, whether or not any consequential relief is or could be claimed, including the determination, at the instance of anyone interested in the controversy, of the construction of any deed, will contract or other written instrument, and a declaration of the rights of the parties interested, but the foregoing enumeration shall not exclude other cases of actual controversy. As there is an actual controversy involving the construction and validity of the stock option agreement, the complaint is properly brought. Exchange National Bank of Chicago v. County of Cook, 6 Ill.2d 419, 129 N.E.2d 1.

[10] Defendants say that consideration may not be given on this appeal to plaintiff's theory that the option agreement is void as containing mere " illusory promises" because no such theory was raised below. The complaint alleged and discussed the three alternatives 249 suggested in the management proxy statement and set out the basis for the contentions advanced by him in this court. These allegations sufficiently informed the defendants that plaintiff claimed that the transaction was in violation of the statute, and that the three alternatives suggested had no validity.

[11][12][13] Defendants state that it is elementary that a contract supported by a consideration will not fail merely because one of several promises therein may be subject to a condition. In an option agreement there is the consideration for the granting of the option and the consideration for the purchase of the stock, namely, the purchase price, without which the option could not be consummated. Gottlieb v. Heyden Chemical Corp., Del.Ch., 99 A.2d 507; 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 100, page 450. It is unnecessary at this time to consider the adequacy of the consideration for the option because the contract must fail for the reason that the corporation could not contract to sell $5 stock for $3. Defendants cite Armstrong Paint & Varnish Works v. Continental Can Co., 301 Ill. 102, 133 N.E. 711, for the proposition that while consideration is essential to the validity of a contract, mutuality of obligation is not. We do not regard this authority as having any bearing on the power of the corporation to contract to grant a stock option to sell $5 stock for $3. There is no disagreement with the defendants' proposition that contracts will, wherever possible, be construed to be lawful. They say that it will be presumed that the parties intended to makethe option subject to the requirements of Illinois law that stock may not be issued for the consideration of less than par value. In the instant case this presumption cannot be invoked because the option agreement specifically provides that the purchase price will be $3 per share. We agree with the statement of defendants on the general proposition that the courts will not substitute their judgment for that of the directors 250 on the issue of consideration. Holthusen v. Edward G. Budd Mfg. Co., D.C.E.D.Pa., 53 F.Supp. 488; Kaufman v. Shoenberg, Del. *557 Ch., 91 A.2d 786. The directors, however, cannot grant stock options to sell the stock for a consideration of less than the par value.

[14] As hereinbefore states, a substantial majority of the shareholders approved the granting of the stock option. Defendants insist that where shareholders have approved an option it will not be set aside except for fraud. Where a stock option is granted under the authority of the first paragraph of Section 24 of the Business Corporation Act and a provision such as Article 9 of the amended charter, it is unnecessary to obtain approval of the shareholders. Defendants cite Eliasberg v. Standard Oil Co., 12 N.J. 467, 97 A.2d 437; Kerbs v. California Eastern Airways, Del., 90 A.2d 652, 34 A.L.R.2d 839; Federal Life Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 173 Ill.App. 5, to support their argument that where shareholders have approved an option it will not be set aside except for fraud. However, in Voorhees v. Mason, 148 Ill.App. 647, 655, a suit brought by a dissenting shareholder to compel restitution by directors who had voted stock to themselves as compensation for services in promoting the company, in answer to the contention that the acts of the directors had been retified by the shareholders the court said:

> "Officers of a corporation occupy the position of trustees for the stockholders with respect to the business and property of the corporation, and cannot have or acquire any pecuniary interest in conflict with their duties as such trustees. Hooker v. Midland Steel Co., 215 Ill. 444 [74 N.E. 445].

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> The voting of the stock by the directors to themselves as compensation for services in promoting the company after the work was done, was voting back pay to themselves and is illegal. 'It is the same as giving away the assets of the company.' Cook on 251 Stock and Stockholders, sec. 657; Brown v. DeYoung, 167 Ill. 549 [47 N.E. 863]. The acts of the directors in illegally voting stock to themselves could not be ratified by a majority of the stockholders as against a dissenting stockholder of one who had no knowledge of such fraudulent action."

In this case the Appellate Court required an accounting to the plaintiff for his pro rata part of the assets diverted. On appeal, 245 Ill. 256, 91 N.E. 1056, the Supreme Court held that the accounting should be to the corporation for the full amount of the assets diverted and reversed on that point only, approving the rest of the Appellate Court holding. See also Farwell v. Pyle- National Electric Headlight Co., 289 Ill. 157, 124 N.E. 449, 10 A.L.R. 363; Ingebretsen v. Lenc, 308 Ill.App. 510, 32 N.E.2d 329. The Griffin case is not authority for the proposition that the shareholders can ratify an illegal act of the board of directors. On the trial of a case on its merits a chancellor may consider many factors, including the important one that the action of the board of directors has been approved by the stockholders in determining whether the action of the board of directors in a given situation should be sustaines. It is manifest, however, that the shareholders cannot approve the action of the board of directors of a corporation agreeing to sell $5 par value stock at $3.

In Holthusen v. Edward G. Budd Mfg. Co., D.C., 52 F.Supp. 125, 129, the district judge said:

> "There can be no doubt that the granting of bonuses to employees may have a legitimate and valid function in a business whether conducted by a corporation or any other legal entity. It is likewise true that the board of directors of the corporation should have wide discretion in determining the amount of bonuses to be granted to its employees and the terms and conditions upon which they may be granted. But the amount of a bonus and the terms and conditions on 252 which it is to be computed must have some reasonable relation th the services to be rendered."

In a case of the same title reported in 53 F.Supp. 488, 490, the same district judge said:

> "The burden is on a minority stockholder of a corporation who seeks to *558 have the courts intervene in corporate management and restrain action approved by the board of directors, to establish that such action transcends the point where the will of the majority may properly be imposed on the minority. Unless this be so, the floodgates would be opened to a surge of litigation by which the courts would be called upon to review the action of corporate directors with respect to all contracts of employment and an unlimited number of other matters."

In Clamitz v. Thatcher Mfg. Co., 158 F.2d 687, 692, Second Circuit, the court said:

> "Of course the directors were fiduciaries who were bound to act at all times fairly and honestly for the best interest of the corporation and could not take advantage of their position as 'insiders' for their own personal gain. They had to see to it that the corporation should have the benefit of their best judgment and act solely and always in good faith to promote its welfare. Pollitz v. Wabash R. Co., 207 N.Y. 113, 100 N.E. 721. Incentive compensation must bear a reasonable relation to the value of the services it is made to obtain. Such reasonable relationship is in the first instance an affair of business to be handled in the light of all the relevant circumstances in the exercise of th unbiased judgment of those in charge of the business itself. * * * Whether these defendants exercised their own sound judgment collectively as directors in granting the options is a matter of fact to be determined like any other fact from the evidence in the case."

253 In Gottlieb v. Heyden Chemical Corp., De.Ch., 99 A.2d 507, 510, the chancellor in answer to the argument that the optionees were adequately compensated before they received the stock option, he said:

> "Once again, within reason, it is a matter of business judgment and plaintiffs have not sustained the burden showing that such judgment was exercised unlawfully."

It is unnecessary to discuss other points argued in the briefs. For the reasons stated the decree of the Superior Court of Cook County is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to overrule defendants' motion to strike and dismiss the complaint, and for further proceedings nc inconsistent with the views expressed herein.

Decree reversed and cause remanded with directions.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF CHICAGO
v.
KING EDWARD'S HOSPITAL FUND FOR LONDON et al.

Gen. No. 46056.

Jan. 11, 1954.

Proceedings on trustee's complaint in chancery for instructions. The Superior Court, Cook County, Samuel B. Epstein, J., rendered a decree adverse to the individual defendants, and they appealed. The Appellate Court, Burke, J., held that where it was clear that testator's dominant intent had been to promote health of English community in which he was born rather than to benefit specific entities which owned and operated three hospitals, fact that hospitals had been nationalized after vesting of their equitable remainders but prior to deaths of life income beneficiaries would not cause gifts to hospitals to fail.

Affirmed.

E. Stanley Holland was born in 1867 near Leominster, in Herefordshire, England. He came to the United States when he was 26 years old, became a citizen and maintained his residence in Chicago up to the time of his death. He engaged successfully in the contract construction business. He made and published his last will and testament at Chicago on April 4, 1936. He died on June 2, 1936, and left a substantial fortune. He was a member of a large family and left him surviving several brothers and sisters and nieces and nephews. He had never married. His sister, Ethel Gwendoline Holland, lived with him and had charge of and cared for his home for 23 years. Ethel was naturally the object of the first dispositive provisions of the will. The next 9 articles (7 through 15) contain gifts ranging from 500 pounds to 1,000 pounds each for his brothe and sisters and nephews and nieces. There are tv small remembrances to friends (Articles 16 and 17). After these provisions are four specific charitable gifts to English charities, one of which was an immediate gift to the Cottage Hospital at Leominster, which is also a beneficiary under the residuary trust. Article 343 23 establishes a fund of 2,000 pounds to be known as the 'E. Stanley Holland Easter Charity,' a 'Fund for the relief of 40 poor persons residing in the Borough of Leominster aforesaid.' It sets forth detailed directions as to a board of trustees to administer the Fund and for the trustees' conduct in distributing the income equally among 40 poor persons in the opinion of the trustees deserving and in need. The will then makes gifts of $1,000 each to 5 American charities and devises the residue of the estate under Article 30 to the First National Bank of Chicago as trustee.

The trust period is to be measured by the lives of 3 brothers and 4 sisters named as income beneficiaries under this article. During the trust period the income is to be distributed in stated proporitions to those brothers and sisters and, in addition, to 6 nieces and nephews and 2 grandnieces. The share income of any of these beneficiaries who may die .. to be distributed to the charitable beneficiaries who are ultimately to receive the principal of Share B, hereinafter mentioned, in the same proportions as they are to receive that principal. On the death of the last brother and sister whose lives measure the trust period, the principal of the trust (after payment of one small contingent legacy) is to be divided into 2 equal parts designated Share A and Share B. Share A is thereupon distributable to the lawful descendants of a brother, 2 sisters and a nephew in various proportions, and with various gifts over, not here important, Share B at the same time is to be distributed among the following, to be held and used by them, subject to the following provisions: 'One half (1/2) thereof to King Edward's Hospital Fund of London, England; One fourth (1/4) thereof to Hereford General Hospital at Hereford, England; One eighth (1/8) thereof to Leominster Cottage Hospital, at Leominster, Herefordshire, England; *344 One eighth (1/8) thereof to Hereford Eye and Ear Hospital, at Hereford, England. Said King Edward's Hospital Fund of London, England, said Hereford General Hospital, said Leominster Cottage Hospital, and said Hereford Eye and Ear Hospital shall each use its respective share of said Share B as an Endowment Fund and the income only thereof shall be used for the current expenditures of said respective beneficiary.'

The First National Bank of Chicago, as trustee, entered upon the performance of the trust when the estate was closed in March, 1938. The individual beneficiaries who were to receive certain percentage proportions of life income under the trust were, at the date of the testator's death, residents of England. One of these died in August, 1936, another in November, 1944, and a third in November, 1946. In consequence, the trustee remitted to the 4 charitable institutions, including the 3 hospitals, shares of net income in accordance with the terms of the will. In 1946 Parliament passed the National Health Service Act, effective July 5, 1948. The Act's announced purpose was to promote the establishment in England and Wales 659 of a comprehensive health service designed to secure improvement in the physical and mental health of the people of England and Wales and the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of illness, and for that purpose, to provide or secure the effective provision of services in accordance with the Act. The National Health Service Act did not affect the property or management of King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, hereinafter called the Fund, and none of its funds or properties, endowment or otherwise, was taken over under the Act. This corporation, following the passage of the Act, retained all its original charter powers and purposes and continued to act as a charitable corporation. Pursuant to Section 6 *345 of the Act the physical premises of the hospitals were transferred to the Minister of Health.

In November, 1949, the trustee filed its complaint in chancery, seeking instructions whether certain charitable interests established under Article 30 of the will for the 3 hospitals and the fund failed by reason of the nationalization of those hospitals and of medical care in general under the National Health Service Act. Following a hearing before the chancellor, he entered a decree sustaining the claims of representatives of the British Government to succeed to the gifts originally intended for the 3 hospitals which were taken over by the Government, and finding that the gift to the Fund had not failed. The decree conditioned the payment of the gifts to the British Government upon the making of an undertaking by the appropriate agencies of that Government to apply the money exclusively for the benefit of the particular hospitals named in the will in the manner directed by the will. The 3 hospitals were made defendants but entered no appearance and were defaulted. The Minister of Health, the Attorney General of England, the Birmingham Regional Hospital Board (hereinafter called the 'Regional Board') and the Herefordshire Hospital Management Committee (hereinafter called the 'Management Committee') were also made defendants. They entered their appearances and are represented by counsel. The Regional Board and the Management Committee are administrative bodies of the British Government, appointed under the Act to administer the hospital properties once belonging severally to, and operated independently by, the 3 hospital institutions designated in the will. The Fund, a charitable corporation formed by Act of Parliament in 1907 (after a ten-year existence as an unincorporated association) is the fourth beneficiary named in the will. It was made a party defendant, has entered *346 its appearance and is represented by counsel. The individual defendants, who appeal, are now the living heirs-at-law of the testator, including the widow and daughter of a deceased nephew who was an heir-at-law. The heirs ask that the decree be reversed and that we find that the property which is the subject of the charitable trusts made by Article 30 of the will, be paid to them as the testator's heirs-at-law. The Attorney General of Illinois now disclaims any interest in the case.

The individual defendants' theory of the case is that since the gifts under the will were to specific institutions, for a particular purpose and cannot literally be carried out, they failed and revert to the testator's heirs, because: (a) as to the gifts to the 3 voluntary hospitals, those institutions have ceased to exist and for that and other reasons it is impossible to carry out the particular intention the donor had in mind; (b) as to the gift to the Fund, the nationalization of the voluntary hospitals under the National Health Service Act of 1946 creates a situation in which it is impossible to carry out the particular intention the donor had in mind, although the Fund, as such, continues its corporate existence. Further, that since these were specific gifts it is improper to apply any theory of cy pres or 'broad construction'; that the doctrine of judicial cy pres will be applied only where it is possible to carry out the testator's assumed general purpose, and where it is possible for the court applying the doctrine to have certainty that the trusts established will be fully executed; that the assumption by the British Government of all costs of all medical service for all *660 persons renders it completely impossible to carry out the testator's intention; and that any plan which the court might work out could not be enforced by the court, but would be subject to the future whim of the British Parliament, 347 which has already destroyed one gift in trust made under the will.

[1][2] The ultimate issue in the case is whether as a consequence of the nationalization of the hospitals and the socialization of medicine, the gifts fail and the property reverts to the testator's heirs-at-law, the appellants herein. The law looks with favor upon charitable trusts and the courts apply liberal rules of construction to sustain them. They are liberal in adjudging a purpose charitable if there is any reasonable amount of social benefit accruing from the trust. In construing such gifts, if there are two possible methods of construction, one of which will render the gift valid and the other invalid, the courts will adopt the construction which will sustain it. Stubblefield v. Peoples Bank, 406 Ill. 374, 384, 94 N.E.2d 127; Village of Hinsdale v. Chicago City Missionary Society, 375 Ill. 220, 231, 30 N.E.2d 657; Webb v. Webb, 340 Ill. 407, 420, 172 N.E. 730, 71 A.L.R. 404; Skinner v. Northern Trust Co., 288 Ill. 229, 232, 123 N.E. 289. The intention must be ascertained from the words of the will itself, the purpose being to arrive at the intention as expressed by its language and not an intention which may have existed in the testator's mind apart from such language but which he failed to express. Turek v. Mahoney, 407 Ill. 476, 482, 95 N.E.2d 330; Appleton v. Rea, 389 Ill. 222, 226, 58 N.E.2d 85 Cahill v. Michael, 381 Ill. 395, 400, 45 N.E.2d 657. Upon the completion of extensive hearings the chancellor wrote a thorough opinion, based upon which a detailed decree was entered. A careful study of the record, the briefs and authorities cited satisfies us that the findings and decree of the chancellor are right.

The provisions of the Act having reference to the gifts involved in this case are Section 59 and 60. By Section 59 a hospital management committee shall have power to accept, hold and administer any property upon trust for purposes relating to hospital service. 348 Section 60 of the Act provides: '(1) Where property, other than property transferred to the Minister or to the Board of Governors of a teaching hospital, or to a hospital management committee under Section 6 or Section 7 of this Act, is held on trust immediately before the appointed day, and the terms of the trust instrument authorize or require the trustees, whether immediately or in the future to apply any part of the capital or income of the trust property for the purposes of any hospital to which Section 6 of this Act applies, the tr instrument shall be construed as authorizing or, the case may be, requiring the trustees to apply the trust property to the like extent and at the like times, for the purpose of making payments, whether of capital or income--(a) in the case of a hospital designated as a teaching hospital or included in a group of hospitals so designated, to the Board of Governors of that teaching hospital; (b) in the case of any other hospital, to the Regional Hospital Board for the area in which the hospital is situated or to the Hospital Management Committee for the hospital or for the group of hospitals in which it is comprised. (2) Any sums paid as aforesaid to any such Board or Committee shall, so far as practicable, be applied by them for the purposes specified in the trust instrument.'

The Herefordshire Hospital functions as a hospital on the same premises as before the Act, with the same facilities and the same wards. In the large wards there is no payment and in the smaller wards some are pay beds and some amenity beds. If the patient wishes to have use of the smaller wards other than for medical reasons, there is payment. The wards bear the same plaques as they always bo The other accommodations that were maintain prior to the Act are still maintained for substantially the same purpose. The hospital has medical officers, house surgeons and house 349 physicians.

The management of the hospital is now carried on by the Herefordshire Hospital Management Committee. The Hospital Association itself has never 661 been dissolved due to the fact that there are certain funds not transferred to the Minister of Health which the Association has been arranging to dispose of. The physical premises have been transferred to the Ministry of Health, but there have been no changes other than a change in management. The Leominster and District Hospitals function as a hospital on the same premises as before the Act. There have been no substantial changes in the premises, with the wards remaining the same and patients in the large wards being treated free, and a private ward and amenity beds, for which a charge is made. The operating room and other accommodations are there as before the passage of the Act. The hospital is now managed by the Management Committee. The hospital has a medical and surgical staff, a consultant-surgeon and an anesthetist. The Victoria Eye Hospital still operates on the same premises under the same name, with the elimination of the word 'Incorporated.' There have been no changes in the premises. There is little or no payment by any patient in the large wards and in the smaller wards. The private patients pay if they can afford to do so. The same ophthalmic surgeon is at the hospital as was there immediately before the Act. The Management Committee conducts the hospital since the effective date of the Act. Many of the members of the hospital management committees were formerly members of the governing boards of the hospitals when they were private institutions. Seven of the present members of the Management Committee were members of boards of the three hospitals prior to the passage of the Act.

Each of the three hospitals was what was known in England as a voluntary hospital. They were private *350 charitable enterprises and each was run by its own governing body which controlled the administration of the property and the functions of the hospital, including the selection and appointment of the medical staff and all other employees. Each of them had endowment funds of substantial amounts. Their income came from these endowments, from annual gifts, from payments by patients who could afford to pay and from contributory 'schemes,' which were a kind of voluntary insurance system somewhat similar to Blue Cross and other systems in this country. The specialists and consultants at the hospital gave their services free and any patient who could not afford to pay received his hospital care free. The voluntary hospitals had been for some 200 years the 'heart of medicine' in England for the treatment of the acute sick. The Act dissolved the old governing bodies except as they might have other functions, not related to the hospitals, which they could carry on. None of the three governing boards has any powers with respect to the hospitals now being run on the premises which they formerly owned and operated, and none has attempted to exercise such power. The hospital properties are now owned by the Minister of Health and operated by the Management Committee as agent for the Regional Board in Birmingham.

[3][4] Appellants maintain that the testator's gifts under Article 30 of the will were to particular institutions and were to be used for particular purposes. The income was to be used for defraying current expenditures. Clearly, the gifts to the three hospitals are charitable gifts. Under Illinois law there can be no failure of such gifts so long as the charitable purpose embodied therein may be fulfilled. The particular mode or method of application of the gifts is not treated as controlling in the eyes of equity. Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425; Crerar v. Williams, 145 Ill. 625, 34 N.E. 467, 21 L.R.A. 454; Jansen v. *351 Godair, 292 Ill. 364, 127 N.E. 97; Burke v. Burke, 259 Ill. 262, 102 N.E. 293; Webb v. Webb, 340 Ill. 407, 172 N.E. 730, 71 A.L.R. 404. 'The general intention of the testator in favor of charity will be allowed to prevail, even though his particular intention as to the manner of managing the gift falls to the ground.' Ingraham v. Ingraham, 169 Ill. 432, 48 N.E. 561, 566, 49 N.E. 320. The efforts of the courts of this state have always been to sustain a gift for charity if it can be done, and while our courts do not assume to exercise the prerogative powers 662 which the courts of England have at times exercised, if a trust for charity is sufficiently certain to enable the courts, in the exercise of their ordinary chancery powers, to carry out the donor's charitable intent, they will not allow the trust to fail. Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425; Kemmerer v. Kemmerer, 233 Ill. 327, 84 N.E. 256.

In this state the test of failure of the charitable gift involves the question of whether the charitable purpose embodied in the gift can be fulfilled. We agree with the chancellor that the testator's charitable purpose embodied in his gift to the three hospitals can be fulfilled. As the cases indicate, the rule with respect to charitable gifts is somewhat different than with respect to noncharitable gifts. The courts will make every effort to sustain a charitable gift, and changes in the mode of administration or management of the gift are not treated as controlling. Appellants call attention to the fact that during the lifetime of the testator the hospitals were administered and managed by a private board of managers and today they are administered and managed by the Herefordshire Management Committee under the Act. The important question is not who manages the hospitals but are they still functioning as hospitals, serving substantially the same people and furnishing the same hospital service and whether the funds will be applied for the benefit of the hospitals 352 as desired by the testator. Under Illinois law doubts will be resolved in favor of upholding the gifts.

We find that the testator's charitable purpose embodied in his gifts to the three hospitals can be fulfilled. The three hospitals continue to function as hospitals in the same premises, with the same facilities and serving the same people as they did prior to the effective date of the Act. In no substantial sense can it be said that the hospitals have ceased to exist. They continue to exist and function as hospitals as they always did. It is only the method of administration or management that has been altered or changed. Mr. Holland did not make the gifts to the board of managers of the hospitals or to any particular entity or administration, nor with any limitation that their use was conditioned upon any particular form of administration. The gifts were absolute and not upon any condition precedent or subsequent and without any gift over under any circumstances. The only qualification imposed by law would be that the income be used for the purposes of the hospital with respect to the principal of the trust fund. He specified only that the hospitals should use their respective shares as an endowment fund and that the income be used for the current expenditures of the respective beneficiaries. He left entirely unconditioned the matter of who was to apply the income or in what manner other than it be expended on a current basis. Since he made these gifts in perpetuity, he must have assumed that the management or administration might change. He did not designate them as voluntary hospitals, or hospitals run by any particular board of managers, or in any particular fashion. He made the gifts to the hospitals by the names by which they were known in the area in which they were located. Section 60 of the Act provides, in substance, that property of a type herein involved shall be applied by the board or committee, so far as practicable, 353 for the purposes specified in the trust instrument. The record shows that the gifts will be applied for the benefit of the three hospitals desired by the testator.

The regulations promulgated under the Act establish that funds coming to the Management Committees under Section 60 are to be accounted for and handled separately, and there are frequent admonitions in those regulations that they are trust funds and are to be applied in accordance with the terms of the trust instrument. The Act iself provides that any sums paid under Section 60 to a board or committee shall, so far as practicable, be applied for the purposes specified in the trust instrument. It appears that the words 'so far as practicable' were inserted in Section 60 with the thought that being a statute of very wide application there might be gifts made attaching conditions to the use of property *663 that it might not be possible to fulfill. In the instant case there are no such conditions. The testimony and the exhibits establish that the gifts will be applied to the benefit of the three hospitals in the manner desired by the testator. The Herefordshire Hospital Management Committee has filed an undertaking which is attached to the decree, stating unequivocally that monies received by the Committee will be applied for the benefit of the three hospitals in the manner specified in the will and the decree, and further providing that the principal of the fund, when the same is distributed, will be maintained and the income only applied, as specified in the will and the decree. The fact that under the decree the funds will be applied by the Management Committee, which is a Committee appointed by the Minister of Health, does not in any sense make the application any the less charitable. The important fact is that the three hospitals are performing a charitable work, namely, the furnishing of hospital 354 service, and it was to aid such purpose that the gifts were made.

In Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425, the court was concerned with charitable gifts to the poor of Madison County and to a school district. Both of the gifts were upheld as charitable gifts despite the fact that in both instances the support of the poor and the maintenance of a school district were and are normal governmental functions. The County Court was decreed to make and manage the funds for the benefit of the poor of Madison County. In In re Estate of Graves, 242 Ill. 23, 89 N.E. 672, L.R.A.,N.S., 283, the court upheld a charitable gift which was to be administered by the Board of South Park Commissioners in the erection and maintenance of a drinking fountain. In Grear v. Sifford, 289

Ill.App. 450, 7 N.E.2d 371 (petition for leave to appeal denied), a charitable gift was made to an institution known as the Union Academy of Southern Illinois, a private school. Subsequently, the functions of this private school were, for all practical purposes, assumed by a community high school, which was a tax supported institution, and the trustees of the private school applied the income from this endowment fund to the support of the community high school. The court held that there was no failure of the charitable gift to the private school despite the use of the income from the endowment fund for the support of a tax supported community high school. In Rush Medical College v. University of Chicago, 312 Ill. 109, 143 N.E. 434, our Supreme Court approved transfer to and use by the university, an entirely different educational institution, of the charitable gifts that had been made to the Rush Medical School in order to carry out the latter's charitable purposes. The case was decided within the general equity powers of the court. The court said, 312 Ill. 117, 143 N.E. 437:

'The transfer of the property of the college to a similar charity under conditions which assure continuation 355 of the use of the property in accordance with the purposes of the charter of the college, so that the fulfillment of the charitable purpose will be accomplished and the efficiency of this educational institution increased, is not a diversion of the funds to a purpose foreign to that to which they were dedicated.'

From the case of In re Harrington's Will, decided by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, 243 App.Div. 235, 276 N.Y.S. 868, 869, it appears that the testator gave to her niece the life use of certain real and personal property and the remainder (converted into money) at the death of the niece to the "Rome Hospital and the managers and trustees thereof by whatsoever name known in trust however to build with said monies and proceeds as annex or addition to said Rome Hospital building in memory of my late husband George A. Harrington and for no other use of purpose said annex or addition to be known as the 'Harrington Annex' or 'Harrington Addition."' The 'Rome Hospital' mentioned in the will was a charitable institution incorporated in 1884 and was operated as a charitable institution until January 1, 1929, when, for the annual rental of $1 and upon certain conditions and covenants all the real and personal property *664 was leased to the City of Rome for two years, with renewal privileges. The lease continued until, by a deed of December 11, 1930, the lessor, for a consideration of $1, deeded the property to the City of Rome. The deed provided that the premises conveyed "shall either be maintained forever by the City of Rome as a municipal hospital, or if sold, the proceeds of the sale shall be used for the establishment of another municipal hospital and for no other purpose", and that the hospital or its substitutes should bear the name "Rome Hospital and Murphy Memorial Hospital." Since that time the City of Rome has operated the property in connection 356 with the Murphy Hospital as a single municipal hospital. Decedent's will was dated in 1901 and she died in 1903. The Rome Hospital (the original charitable institution) had not been dissolved at the time the opinion was filed. It has never been operated as a hospital since it deeded its property to the City, but continued to exist for the purpose of administering certain trust funds. The surrogate held that the gift lapsed and that there was a lapsing of the legacy because it expressed no general charitable purpose such as would prompt the court to apply the cy pres doctrine if possible. The Appellate Division said, 276 N.Y.S. 871:

'Primarily the gift was to an institution charitable by the very terms of its charter, and its work was one of the highest types of charities. * * * But the will, in the instant case, took effect in 1903, at the date of the death of testatrix. The Rome Hospital was then in existence, and, as a legal entity, is still in existence, and then was, and still is, legally capable of accepting this gift. * * * The very real estate which it formerly owned is now being used as a hospital. What difference that it has changed hands and is now operated by the city of Rome? It is said, in answer to the question, that the city of Rome may use the money to pay nurses or buy drugs and thus defeat the whole aim of the testator, both in its memorial and in its charitable features, and that the only purpose that the gift will serve is to relieve the taxpayer's burden. I see only this one impediment in the way of carrying out the purposes of this charitable gift. It is the impediment that must always exist, whenever it is sought to attach a charitable gift to some one's property other than the testator's. If I choose to provide for the creation of a college or hospital, and make a valid will to that end, that is no one's business but the court's to see that the plan is carried out. But if I provide by will for annexing 357 a library to some one else's college or a sun parlor to some one else's hospital, my plan may be met with objection from the incidental donee. The owner of the property designed to be incidentally benefited by a charitable gift may renounce the gift so far as he is concerned, and no one can make him accept it. If the city of Rome, the present owner of the hospital building in question, does not want an annex or addition substantially as testatrix intended it, it need not have it. But, if it is willing to accept it, no reason is apparent why the wishes of testatrix cannot be substantially carried out. * * * A further proceeding, either in Supreme Court or Surrogate's Court, may hereafter be had to apply the cy pres doctrine, and in that proceeding, with the proper parties in court, the court may direct the trustees of the original Rome Hospital in the carrying out of a plan to use the legacy in a manner substantially carrying out the benevolent aim of the testatrix.'

From the language of the Holland will it appears that the testator had in mind only that the principal of the fund be kept intact and that the income be expended on a current basis. He did not specify that the income be used for any particular purpose or impose any limitation as to the type of expenditure. The only requirement is that the principal remain intact. The regulations comprehend that the gifts administered by the hospital management committee are to be applied for such hospital *665 purposes as the committee managing the hospital shall determine. The funds would be used for 'general or special hospital purposes' or for 'research' or for 'laboratories' or for 'extras or amenities.' The determination of the specific hospital purposes for which the funds will be used will be made by the Hospital Management Committee, the agency administering the hospitals. The gifts would be used for 358 such hospital purposes or services as the committee managing the hospital would determine, and this is the intention that the testator had in mind. He left the funds to the hospital without specifying the purpose for which they were to be used, except that the income from the principal was to be expended on a current basis.

Appellants rely heavily on Quimby v. Quimby, 175 Ill.App. 367, and Chicago Daily News Fresh Air Fund v. Kerner, 305 Ill.App. 237, 27 N.E.2d 310. In the Quimby case the charitable donee had wholly ceased to carry on the work for which it was organized prior to the time that the bequest was to take effect. In the Kerner case the court said, 305 Ill.App. 244, 27 N.E.2d 313: 'The legatee having renounced the gift, it does not take effect and is as if it had never been made.' We agree with the appellees that these cases are not applicable to t case at bar. In this case there has been no failure of the gifts to the hospitals since the charitable purpose embodied in the gifts can be fulfilled. Appellants also cite Board of Education v. City of Rockford, 372 Ill. 442, 24 N.E.2d 366. There the question was whether a charitable gift of property for educational purposes to benefit persons in a particular area could be used for non-educational purposes to benefit a different class of persons. The case is not in point. In the instant case the appellees do not propose that the gifts to the hospitals be used for other than hospital services and the record shows that the gifts will be used for the purposes the testator desired to benefit.

Appellants assert that the exact question of the failure of a specific gift made to an English hospital which had been nationalized was decided by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island in the case of Pennsylvania Co. for Banking and Trusts v. Board of Governors of London Hospital, 79 R.I. 74, 83 A.2d 881. That court held that the nationalization of these hospitals had brought about a failure of the gifts to two 359 former voluntary hospitals London. The court in the Rhode Island case stat that if the interests granted had been absolute interests, they would have passed to the Minister of Health or to the successor boards by virtue of the provisions of the Act. The court said, 83 A.2d 888:

'Finally we are unable to agree with the arguments of the English hospitals that, even if in the circumstances the gifts to them have failed, they are entitled to have this cause remanded to the superior court for the application of the doctrine of cy pres. It may be granted that the testator's will reveals a general charitable intent, Pell v. Mercer, supra [14 R.I. 412], thus meeting that requirement for the application of such doctrine. However, in Section XI of his will the testator named the respondent churches as his residuary legatees saying: 'so that in case any of my preceding gifts, specially my gifts to Public purposes should fail * * * my property shall surely go, in such event, to the work of establishing the Knowledge & following of Jesus Christ among our American People.' Such provision in effect obviates the application of that doctrine since the testator himself shows clearly his own intent and the alternative disposition of his property in the eve of the failure of the gifts referred to. In t circumstances we see no reason why the above-expressed intent of the testator should not be carried out. It is generally held that when a testator makes a specific alternative bequest to take effect if a primary charitable one fails, the doctrine of cy pres is not applied, but the estate is distributed in accordance with the testator's express direction. * * * Having determined, in view of the conditions appearing herein and the 666 changes resulting from the passage of the health act, that the gifts to the English hospitals have failed and that this cause is not a proper one for an application *360 of the cy pres doctrine under our statute, we find that the assets of the trust now in the hands of the complainant trustee and ready for distribution should be paid, in accordance with the express direction of the testator as contained in Section XI of his will * * *.'

The Rhode Island case is not applicable to the situation presented to us. The gifts to the three hospitals in the case at bar were absolute gifts, were vested equitable remainders, and had vested prior to the passage of the Act. In the Rhode Island case the court found that the gifts were limited to specific uses and by express conditions as part of the essence of the gift so that they failed if such uses and purposes were not to be fulfilled. The Rhode Island opinion discloses that the court would have applied the gifts for the charitable donees under the cy pres doctrine except that there was an alternative disposition contained in the will.

[5][6] We agree with the contention of the appellees that the gifts to the three hospitals were absolute interests with possession and enjoyment only postponed for the purpose of letting in the interests of the individual life income beneficiaries. An estate is vested not only where there is an immediate right of present enjoyment but a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Possession and enjoyment were to take effect upon the happening of the event to occur, namely, the death of testator's brothers and sisters who were the life income beneficiaries. The postponement of possession and enjoyment was provided for as a convenience to the estate and not for reasons personal to the hospitals as legatees. The interest bequeathed to the hospitals were vested equitable remainders. Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 362, 11 N.E. 351; Ashmore v. Newman, 350 Ill. 64, 183 N.E. 1; Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. v. Kane, 308 Ill.App. 110, 31 N.E.2d 351.

[7] *361 A court of equity has inherent powers with respect to charitable gifts within the general equity powers of the court, aside from the doctrine of cy pres. A court of equity within its general equity powers will act to supply any deficiencies in order to preserve the gifts. Webb v. Webb, 340 Ill. 407, 172 N.E. 730, 71 A.L.R. 404. In Hitchcock v. Board of Home Missions, 259 Ill. 288, 298, 102 N.E. 741, 745, the court said: 'It is sufficient to say that to sustain this gift does not require the exercise of any prerogative power of a nature sometimes exercised in England, but requires only the exercise of the ordinary jurisdiction of a court of equity.' In First National Bank of Chicago v. Elliott, 406 Ill. 44, 63, 92 N.E.2d 66, 76, the court said:

'It is usually where the charity has entirely failed that the extraordinary power of cy pres is used to designate another like charity to be aided or supported by the fund. Here, had the parties so desired, most of the relief could have been obtained by exercise of the court's inherent equity powers, although, since there is a change in location and size of the institution, a decree based upon the doctrine of cy pres is proper.'

[8][9] In our opinion the chancellor was correct in finding that the testator's dominant intent was for the general charitable purpose of promoting the health of the community in which he was born rather than to benefit the specific entities which owned and operated the three hospitals at the time of the execution of the will. The findings are amply supported by the evidence. It is significant that the testator made no provision for a gift over to his heirs of the gifts to the hospitals under any condition. Having made ample provision for his heirs he made the gifts to the hospitals absolute in form and without expressing any intention that his heirs should share therein. The voluntary hospitals such as the three hospitals in question, were in dire need of financial help at the time of the passage of the *362 Act. The hospitals are still functioning as hospitals and the application of Mr. Holland's gifts is not an application to a 667 different charitable use but to the same charitable use. We are in accord with the chancellor's statement that 'The wisdom or lack of wisdom of the adoption by the English Parliament of the National Health Service Act is of no concern to this court in determining the issues herein involved. Nor is this court endorsing, by this decision, the system known as 'Social Medicine.' * * * Regardless of the type of government under which people live, whether in accord with our concepts or not, the furnishing of medical and hospital service to human beings, in a worthy charitable purpose. If, as a matter of fact, there to exist deficiencies and inadequacies in the services rendered by the hospitals in question, the income from the funds bequeathed by the testator's will should help materially to lessen such deficiencies and should result in better hospital service to that community.'

The chancellor, in finding for the hospitals, places his principal reliance on the cy pres doctrine. We are of the opinion that the relief afforded in the instant case could have been obtained by the exercise of the court's inherent equity powers. However, we agree with the appellees that a decree based on the doctrine of cy pres is proper. First National Bank of Chicago v. Elliott, 406 Ill. 44, 92 N.E.2d 66; Village of Hinsdale v. Chicago City Missionary Society, 375 Ill. 220, 30 N.E.2d 657; Bruce v. Maxwell, 311 Ill. 479, 143 N.E. 82. These hospitals are identical institutions designated by the testator, rendering the same type of medical service to the same community, in the same buildings and using the same facilities. Only management and ownership of the hospitals have changed by reason of the Act. The award of these funds to these hospitals under the present management and ownership is not just an application of these funds 363 to institutions of a similar charitable purpose, but to the identical purpose contemplated by the testator.

[10] The testimony of Miss Ethel Holland, sister of the testator and one of the individual defendants, was excluded by the chancellor as incompetent under Section 2 of the Evidence Act, Ill.Rev.Stat.1953, c. 51, § 2. Miss Holland, if permitted, would have testified that her brother had never given money to government-operated charities; that he was emotionally and politically opposed even to the mild policies of the Labour Party in the 1930's; that his only gifts for medical purposes were to voluntary hospitals; that his only gifts for medical purposes in the Herefordshire area were to the three hospitals named in his will; and that he never gave money to convalescent homes, homes for the aged, sick, etc., or to provide 'amenities' in hospital service or for any hospital purpose not concerned with the provision of essential medical service for the acutely ill by voluntary hospitals; and that her brother thought of the Fund simply as an organization which aided the voluntary hospitals in London through contributions to the operating expenses. Appellants say that the proffered testimony would have confirmed that Mr. Holland's intention was to aid certain voluntary hospitals in Hereford and to aid the voluntary hospitals in London and that the situation brought about by the Act would have been anathem to him. Appellants argue that the Illinois courts make one clear exception to the apparent phraseology of Section 2 of the Evidence Act, namely that the statute does not apply to contests concerning the relative rights of devisees as among themselves, so long as no one is asserting a right to the property which is founded outside or against the will. Citing Pigg v. Carroll, 89 Ill. 205; 364 Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142; Fleming v. Mills, 182 Ill. 464, 55 N.E. 373; Alward v. Woodard, 315 Ill. 150, 146 N.E. 154. Appellants assert that the position of Miss Holland and the other individual defendants falls clearly within the ambit of this exception because this is a controversy solely among various claimants under the testator's will and the individual defendants claim through a construction of the will and not against it. We find that the chancellor properly excluded the testimony of Miss Holland . Appellants are claiming not as legatees under the will but as heirs of the testator. Their theory is that upon failure of the specific gifts, there is a reverter to them as the testator's heirs-at-law.

*668 Appellants urge that the gift to the Fund fai because the testator's specific purpose, to aid t voluntary hospitals in London, can no longer be accomplished by the Fund either in the manner intended by the testator or otherwise. Our views as to the gifts to the three hospitals are applicable to the contentions concerning the Fund. The heirs say that what Mr. Holland had in mind was defraying the current expenditures of the voluntary hospitals; that the Fund had over a long period of time identified itself completely and exclusively with the voluntary hospitals of London; that it aided all of the voluntary hospitals; that the testator had no reason to differentiate in the use of the term 'current expenditures' between the three hospitals and the Fund; and that the only reasonable construction of the language of the will is that the testator wanted the income intended for the Fund to be used for the principal activity of the Fund-payments towards the operating expenses of the voluntary hospitals in London. Appellants insist that the extinction of the voluntary hospitals of London makes it impossible for the Fund to carry out the purposes Mr. Holland intended, and that the nationalization of those 365 hospitals has created a situation in which the use of the income for 'extras' connected with t nationalized hospitals and not for 'curre expenditures' is equally in conflict with the intention. They state that the testator could not have contemplated that the voluntary hospitals, rather than evolving throughout the years so as best to fulfill their function of treating the acute sick, would be exterminated and that these hospitals as social and charitable organizations would come to an untimely end. They state that for the reasons urged, the gifts must be held to have failed.

After the passage of the National Health Service Act the Fund continued its charitable existence corporatively and otherwise, and continued to function as a charitable institution. The Fund's corporate charter authorizes it to apply the capital and income of the funds and property of the corporation in or towards the support, benefit or extension of the hospitals of London, or some or any of them (whether for the general or any special purposes of such hospitals) and to do all such things as may be incidental or conducive to the attainment of these objects. In the charter the expression 'hospitals of London' is defined to mean and include such present and future hospitals, convalescent homes, mursing homes, nursing institutions, lying-in institutions, dispensaries, medical missions, societies for the provision of surgical or medical aid or appliances and institutions for rest, relief or cure of sick persons as shall be instituted within London.

At the time the Holland will was made it was the administrative practice of the Fund, long established, to commingle in a common fund all the receipts (of the same general character as the trust estate net income and later endowment income involved in the instant case) that had come to it free of any restriction against what the practice entailed. Each year witnessed a sizeable 366 aggregate sum put together in this way. It was and is the administrative practice to pay Fund administrative expenses and to disburse the various charities from the common fund without regard to the source from whence the disbursed sum came and without any studied effort to fit each disbursement into a pattern of what had gone on before with respect to disbursement of an equivalent sum. This practice arose out of a composite of experience and gradual growth over the years and developed from within the Fund as a desirable thing from a management standpoint, and therefore, originated and endures not at all by reason of outside compulsion. The practice tends towards minimizing the administrative expense burden and contributes to employment of its expendable funds to the charitable maximum. It is purely administrative in nature and the practice is observed where contributions to the Fund, by will or otherwise, are unaccompanied by restriction. We have no hesitancy in saying that under the will and the record in the case at bar the income becomes a part of this common fund when it is received and is subject to being so disbursed. The principal of the trust estate income never becomes a part of that common fund. When *669 the testator of the will chose to say nothing in negation or prohibition of this common fund practice, he tacitly bestowed his approval on the method of administering if he was aware of the practice. If he was not aware of it, then he nevertheless bestowed his approval by reason of having directed that the income therefrom be used for 'current expenditures.'

The Act did not affect the property or management of the King Edward's Hospital Fund for London. None of its funds or properties, endowment or otherwise, was taken over under the Act. The corporation retains all of its original charter powers and continues to act 367 as a charitable corporation. The fund is now concerned principally with hospitals in the National Health Service which, by reason of the inclusion of hospitals formerly governmentally operated in addition to voluntary hospitals, has substantially expanded the possible scope of Fund assistance in regard to the number of hospitals that could benefit therefrom. The Fund still assists hospitals with the problem of obtaining nurses, with dietary problems, bookkeeping problems and the like. It renders financial assistance to 13 small hospitals in London which were not taken over by the Minister of Health. The Fund renders substantial assistance to convalescent homes and defrays part of the cost of emergency bed service. It makes substantial grants for amenities to patients and the purchase of special equipment in nationalized hospitals is London. It is in the process of setting up a college for the training of hospital administrators, nurses and dieticians.

In the field of financial grants to voluntary hospitals a conspicuous change took place when the Act went into operation. That type of charitable activity was and is substantially curtailed because of the elimination of private financing characteristic when the government took over many of the hospitals. Other charitable activities, or more intense activity in other fields, have been substituted. The long established administrative features, including resort to the common fund, are in vogue substantially as they were in 1936. The Fund's preeminence was attained in ways less spectacular than direct financial grants. Administrative practices are at the bottom of its greatest successes.

[11][12] There is no limitation in the will upon the nature or type of administration that should manage the fund, nor upon the manner in which the gifts are to be applied, except that the corpus remain as an endowment368 fund with only the income thereof to be used for current expenditures. Nothing is said concerning the use to which the Fund shall put the income it is to receive out of the trust estate. With respect to the income the testator confines himself to the designation of the Fund by its correct name. The language used does not impose a restriction in the nature of a condition subsequent. The term 'voluntary' in relation to hospitals does not appear in the will, nor is there any reference in the will to 'direct' financial aid to hospitals nor to financial 'grants' in aid of them. The term 'current expenditures' has the signification that it meets obligations of a day-to-day character as they arise and not that it is something to be set aside for long range future requirements to await the obligation. In giving the direction he did about endowment income the testator was looking ahead many years, saying what he wanted done with the income then. It is unreasonable to assume he invoked the term 'current expenditures' in any other sense than with reference to the expenditures that would be current then, the future times when endowment income would become available. It would be unreasonable to say that, looking forward, his firm disposition was that the income be expended then precisely as the Fund had been expending income from its other endowments in 1936. We agree with the chancellor that the words 'current expenditures' mean the current expenditures of the Fund itself in the sense of the outlays is makes from its common fund, and that the language does not comprehend the current expenditures of the hospitals the Fund aids, nor any other institution it aids. Since conditions *670 subsequent, especially as applied to charities, are not favored by the law, the intention to create such a condition must clearly appear from the instrument, and in case of reasonable doubt the vested estate will not be divested. 369 Gredig v. Sterling, 5 Cir., F.2d 832, 835; 14 C.J.S., Charities, § 44, pages 495, 496.

Appellants suggest that any plan which the court might work out could not be enforced by our courts but would be 'subject to the future whim of the British Parliament.' We recognize that after the delivery of the corpus of the trusts our courts would not have any effective control over the trust funds. That is true in any case where funds are delivered beyond the jurisdiction of the United States and where there are no parties within the jurisdiction subject to the directions of the court. Mr. Holland accumulated his wealth in the United States. He made four modest bequests to American charities for a total of $6,500. Of the private persons named legatees all but two are relatives and all but one are English residents. That one, an American, was given $1,000. The will disposed of a million dollar estate, all of it personalty, consisting of cash and securities. Mr. Holland visited England frequently. He knew that under the English constitutional system Parliament is supreme, yet he chose to leave nearly all of his estate to his relatives and charities in England. He and the draftsmen of the will knew that after the delivery of the corpus of the estate to individuals and institutions in England that Parliament might pass laws which would affect the funds so distributed. They also knew that whatever bequests were made to American legatees would be protected by the provisions of our state and federal constitutions.

The chancellor was right and the decree of the Superior Court of Cook County is affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

In re GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION ENGINE INTERCHANGE LITIGATION.
Appeal of Betty OSWALD, on her own behalf and on behalf of all other persons similarly situated, and Phil Miller and Eileen Miller, on their behalf and on behalf of all other persons similarly situated, Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION,
Defendant-Appellee.

No. 78-2036.

Argued Sept. 28, 1978.
Decided Feb. 26, 1979.

In engine interchange litigation brought against automobile manufacturer, an appeal was taken from an order of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, Frank J. McGarr, J., approving a subclass settlement. The Court of Appeals, Harlington Wood, Jr., Circuit Judge, held that: (1) the trial court's order approving subclass settlement was an appealable collateral order, since it was not tentative, was capable of review without extensive examination of the merits, raised issues which could not be effectively reviewed later, and presented important, unresolved legal questions for appellate consideration; (2) the conduct of the negotiations was relevant to the fairness of subclass settlement, and the trial court's refusal to permit discovery or examination of the negotiations constituted an abuse of discretion; in addition, the record failed to adequately support the court's conclusion that the seemingly irregular conduct of the negotiations did not prejudice the interests of the class; (3) where, under the settlement order, a subclass member was presented with an accept-or-else situation, i. e., if he did not accept, his federal claim was lost even though he could not receive the benefits of the settlement package, the dismissal of the action was fundamentally unfair to nonconsenting subclass members and, therefore, the settlement could not be permitted to stand in its present form, and (4) despite the Court of Appeals' reversal of order approving subclass settlement, the district court could approve communication of the manufacturer's offer of settlement to individual members of the class.

Reversed.

Requirements of the collateral order doctrine established in Cohen are: that the matter appealed from must have been finally determined by the district court; that the matter must be separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action and neither affect nor be affected by decision on the merits; that the rights asserted would be lost, probably irreparably, if review were delayed until the conclusion of proceedings in the district court, and that the order must present important and unresolved legal questions.

170Bk571

As regards the collateral order doctrine's first requirement, viz., that the matter appealed from must have been finally determined by the district court, this does not require that the trial court be without power to reverse its ruling; it only requires that no further consideration be likely.

[9] Federal Courts ⚿571

Ordinarily, settlements of civil litigation are not reviewed by federal courts; thus, as regards the collateral order doctrine, the issue of whether the matter appealed is "separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action" is raised almost exclusively in class or derivative actions.

Since, in engine interchange litigation brought against automobile manufacturer, notice of proposed subclass settlement informed subclass members that if they neither opted out of the subclass nor intervened in the lawsuit "attorneys for the named plaintiffs will represent your interest in these suits," subclass members who received the notice could reasonably rely on class counsel to protect their interests by prosecuting an appeal from the judgment of the district court if necessary; therefore, absentee subclass members did not waive their right to have the settlement reviewed by the Court of Appeals.

In 1976 the defendant, General Motors (GM), began substituting engines produced by its Chevrolet Division in many of the 1977 model year cars produced by its Oldsmobile Division. The discovery of the engine switch culminated in the commencement of a plethora of lawsuits against GM in the state and federal courts. The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred those actic which had been filed in the federal courts to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois for consolidated pretrial proceedings with several actions which were already pending there.

See 28 U.S.C. s 1407. The district court certified that the actions could be maintained as a class action and later approved the settlement of the actions as to one of two subclasses of Oldsmobile purchasers.

This appeal is from the order of the district court approving the subclass settlement. Although the facts are lengthy, the litigation's history complex, and the resolution of the issues difficult, the issues may be stated with relative simplicity:

First, is the district court's order approving the subclass settlement appealable?

Second, should counsel prosecuting the appeal be limited to representing the interests of those class members who objected to the settlement before the district court?

Third, did the district court err by refusing to permit appellants' counsel to inquire into the conduct of the negotiations that led to the settlement?

Fourth, did the district court err by dismissing with prejudice the federal claims of those class members who declined to release their state law claims pursuant to the settlement agreement?

We find that this court does have jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and hold that the trial court erred in approving the subclass settlement. Consequently, we reverse and remand the order of the district court with instructions.

I. Facts

A. The Engine Interchange Litigation

Beginning in 1974, GM planners began considering the manufacturing requirements for GM cars for the 1977 model year. By 1976 various GM management committees began planning for extensive interdivisional engine exchanges. Because the Chevrolet Division had a significant surplus production capacity, GM planners decided to rely on Chevrolet produced engines to meet part of the engine requirements of GM's Buick, Oldsmobile and Pontiac Divisions.

1114 To institute the engine interchange in the Oldsmobile Division, GM used codes to identify the different engines that would be used in its 1977 Oldsmobiles. The Rocket 350 V-8 engine produced by Oldsmobile, for example, was given the code name "L34"; the Chevrolet engine used in place of the Rocket was given the code "LM1." [FN1] Moreover, GM, over some objections by the Chevrolet Division, decided to adopt a common engine color for all of its engines. Thus, the distinctive red Chevrolet engine became blue. Despite the planned Oldsmobile-Chevrolet engine change, GM's advertising, EPA gas mileage disclosures and communications to Oldsmobile dealers referred to the changes by the use of the codes.

> FN1. Three Chevrolet produced V-8 engines were used in 1977 Oldsmobiles: the LM1, a 350 engine equipped with a four-barrel carburetor, the L65, a 350 engine equipped with a two-barrel carburetor, and the LG3, a 305 cubic inch displacement engine. The class eventually certified by the district court includes all purchasers of Oldsmobiles with Chevrolet engines regardless of which of the three Chevrolet engines the purchasers actually received.

The switch from standard components to different components in Oldsmobiles was not confined to engines. GM used different components than it had used in previous years for other parts of the power train (the engine, transmission, and drive axle) in some of its Oldsmobiles. For reasons which do not appear with clarity in the record, GM decided in 1976 to install in all 1977 Oldsmobile Delta 88 coupes and sedans the THM 200 transmission instead of the THM 350, the transmission traditionally used in those cars. The THM 200, like the THM 350, is produced by GM's Turbohydramatic Division. The THM 200, originally designed for use in the subcompact Chevette, was used in all 1977 Delta 88 coupes and sedans regardless of whether they contained Oldsmobile or Chevrolet engines. The appellants maintain that GM's advertising materials nevertheless indicated that the THM 350 was standard equipment in all 1977 Deltas.

[1][2] The case before this court is a subset of the Oldsmobile litigation spawned by the discovery of the engine interchange. After filing suit in the Cook County Circuit Court alleging violations of the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act, Ill.Rev.Stat. ch. 121 1/2, ss 261-272, the Illinois Attorney General filed suit in the federal court for the Northern District of Illinois on behalf of the State of Illinois, which had purchased a 1977 Oldsmobile with a Chevrolet engine, and more than 100 other Oldsmobile purchasers.[FN2] The complaint alleged that the sale of the Oldsmobiles without disclosure of their engine source violated the Magnuson-Moss Act, 15 U.S.C. ss 2301-2312, and sought certification of the action as a nationwide class action.[FN3] The Oswald and Miller actions were later brought to the federal district 1115 court and consolidated with the State of Illinois action before Judge McGarr. Upon GM's petition, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred seven actions then pending in other federal courts to the Northern District for consolidated pretrial proceedings. [FN4]

FN2. The Magnuson-Moss Act limits federal court jurisdiction over class actions prosecuted under the Act to those actions in which the amount of each individual claim is at least $25, the total amount in controversy is at least $50,000, and the number of named plaintiffs is at least 100. 15 U.S.C. s 2310(d)(3). Otherwise, presumably every consumer complaint alleging a violation of the Act could have been maintained in the federal courts, without regard to the amount in controversy, under 28 U.S.C. s 1337. Compare Barnette v. Chrysler Corp., 434 F.Supp. 1167 (D.Neb.1977) (individual action alleging a violation of the Act and seeking recovery of the purchase price of a defective car could not be maintained in federal court, because it failed to meet the $50,000 requirement). On the other hand, the Act's amount in controversy requirements, by lowering from the usual $10,000 to $25 the amount necessary for individual claims but requiring an aggregate amount of at least $50,000, reduce the obstacles normally encountered in meeting the jurisdictional amount necessary to maintain a class action. See Snyder v. Harris, 394 U.S. 332, 89 S.Ct. 1053, 22 L.Ed.2d 319 (1969); Zahn v. International Paper Co., 414 U.S. 291, 94 S.Ct. 505, 38 L.Ed.2d 511 (1973). The number of named plaintiffs required, however, remains a substantial barrier to maintaining class actions under the Act. It was enacted by Congress to prevent "trivial or insignificant" class actions from being brought in the federal courts. H.R.Rep.No. 93-1107, 93d Cong., 2d Sess., Reprinted in (1974) U.S.Code Cong. & Ad.News 7702, 7724. Although the Illinois Attorney General's complaint was the only complaint to satisfy the last jurisdictional requirement, we attach no particular significance to this fact.

FN3. General Motors characterizes the case before this court as "only the tip of a litigation iceberg" over GM's interdivisional engine use. The widespread publicity given to the engine switch by the initial lawsuits bred additional lawsuits. Other Attorneys General soon filed st court actions against GM under state consumer protection statutes. Furthermore, many individual car buyers started state court proceedings seeking individual and sometimes class relief. Altogether, GM estimates, over 300 engine interchange actions were filed against GM since March 1977. Forty- one of the suits were filed as class actions and thirty-three were brought by state Attorneys General. Some of the actions were initiated by purchasers of 1977 Buicks and Pontiacs which, like the Oldsmobiles in this suit, were equipped with Chevrolet engines. At least two suits were filed by owners of 1977 Buicks and Cadillacs, alleging that they received cars equipped with Oldsmobile engines. See In re GMC Engine Interchange Litigation, 441 F.Supp. 933 (J.P.M.D.L.1977) (transferring actions to the Northern District of Illinois for consolidated pretrial proceedings). GM's interdivisional engine program also prompted investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. See GMC v. FTC, 1978-1 Trade Cas. P 62,005 (N.D.Ohio 1977) (rejecting GM's challenge to the authority of the Commission to undertake the investigation). The bulk of the lawsuits, however, appear to involve 1977 Oldsmobiles, the subject of the litigation before this court.

FN4. The Oldsmobile actions that eventually were consolidated for pretrial proceedings are: State of Illinois v. GMC, No. 77-C-927 (N.D.Ill.); Oswald v. GMC, No. 77-C-1006 (N.D.Ill.); Miller v. GMC, No. 77-C-1436 (N.D.Ill.); Skokie Central Traditional Congregation v. GMC, No. 78-C-1457 (N.D.Ill.); State of Alabama ex rel. Baxley v. GMC, No. 77-P-0881-S (N.D.Ala.); Creel v. GMC, No. CA-77-P-0440-S (N.D.Ala.); Natter v. GMC, No. CA-77-P-0659-S (N.D.Ala.); Balog v. GMC, No. 77-443 (W.D.Pa.); Hannan v. GMC, No. 77-C-265 (E.D.Wis.); King v. The various federal actions were consolidated before the district court for pretrial purposes only. Although the actions have not been consolidated for trial purposes, the appellants do not contest, and we do not question, the district court's authority to approve a settlement of all the actions before it. See 15 C. Wright, A. Miller & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure s 3866 at 374-76 (1976); Weigel, The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, Transferor Courts Transferee Courts, 78 F.R.D. 575, 582-83 (1978).

The order certifying the class action found that each of the named plaintiffs would adequately represent the class and confirmed the representative status of each. Therefore we need not decide whether all of the actions are technically before us, because we find that the appeal of some of the named plaintiffs is sufficient to permit this court to consider the interests of all class members. See also Part III of this opinion Infra.

On July 22, 1977, the district court entered an order adopting an agreement of the numerous counsel for the plaintiffs in the consolidated cases. The order created an executive committee of six attorneys to represent the plaintiffs in all pretrial proceedings. See generally Manual for Complex Litigation ss 1.92- 1.93.[FN5] Although the committee was given broad power in the pretrial proceedings, the order provided that the committee could conduct settlement negotiations only with the consent of all counsel for the named plaintiffs.

On October 13, 1977, the district court certified the consolidated cases as a class action. The order defined the class as "(a)ll persons . . . who purchased 1977 Oldsmobile automobiles which without their knowledge or consent, contained V-8 engines manufactured by the Chevrolet Motor Division . . ." The court dismissed all federal claims except the Magnuson-Moss claim and declined to exercise its power to take pendent jurisdiction over the related state law claims. The trial court recognized that parallel state court actions were pending, but rejected GM's position that the state proceedings should prevent class certification on the Magnuson-Moss claim. Despite the certification of the class, no notice to class members was mailed to inform them of the pendency of the class action at that time.

B. The Settlement

Sometime during the fall of 1977, General Motors entered into settlement negotiations 1116 with representatives of the various state Attorneys General who had filed or were contemplating filing actions against GM.[FN6] A representative of the Illinois Attorney General who was also a member of the executive committee participated in the negotiations without leave of the district court or other counsel for the plaintiffs in the federal class action. On December 13, 1977, one of the counsel for the plaintiffs received word that a tentative settlement agreement had been reached by GM and the Attorneys General. The attorney, in essence, requested the district court to order immediate disclosure of the progress of the settlement negotiations or any agreements that had been reached. The trial court, however, regarded the motion as premature. Unwilling to interfere with communications between GM and the Attorneys General before an agreement was reached, the district court declined to order the requested relief. The trial judge remarked that he believed he had sufficient power over the approval of any settlement to protect the interests of class members.

FN6. GM maintains that the negotiations were begun at the suggestion of the Consumer Protection Committee of the National Association of State Attorneys General.

Six days later on December 19, the Illinois Attorney General in his capacity as one of the class counsel moved that the district court consider the settlement agreement between GM and all but five of the fifty state Attorneys General. [FN7] The proposed settlement provided that GM would provide to each consumer who had purchased a 1977 Oldsmobile, Buick or Pontiac equipped with a Chevrolet engine on or before April 10, 1977, $200 plus a 36-month or 36,000-mile extended warranty on the power train. In return each purchaser would be required to sign a release of all state and federal claims concerning the substitution of engines, components, parts, and assemblies in the car. GM also agreed to disclose the source of all engines of new GM cars for the next three years. The Attorneys General, in turn, promised to secure dismissals with prejudice of all actions prosecuted by them.

FN7. Several other state Attorneys General have since joined in the agreement.

The district court showed itself willing to consider the agreement as a basis for settling the class action. Although the court afforded private counsel time to conduct discovery to determine whether the settlement was fair, it denied the motion of some of plaintiffs' counsel for discovery into the negotiations between the Attorneys General and GM. The court maintained that the negotiation process was irrelevant to the central issue of the fairness of the settlement.

Furthermore, the district court entertained GM's motion to redefine the class to include only those Oldsmobile purchasers to whom the settlement agreement contemplated payment. The class originally included all 1977 Oldsmobile purchasers who bought their cars before October 13, 1977, without knowledge that the cars had Chevrolet engines. The settlement agreement contemplated narrowing the class to purchasers before April 11, 1977. In an order dated March 14, 1978, the trial court denied GM's motion to redefine and narrow the class. The court did, however, designate "for purposes of sending the settlement notice" a subclass of pre-April 11 purchasers.[FN8] Notices informing class members of the pendency of the class action were sent out shortly thereafter. The notice to settlement subclass members, in addition to informing them of the pendency of the action, informed them of the proposed settlement and gave them the opportunity, Inter alia, to opt-out of the action or to object to the proposed settlement. The notice to class members not in the settlement subclass merely provided notice of the action and the opportunity to opt-out.

FN8. The trial court also agreed with GM to broaden the class in one respect. The court, for the purpose of settlement only, struck the no-knowledge-or-consent requirement of the original class certification as to members of the settlement subclass. This conformed the subclass to the precise class of Oldsmobile purchasers contemplated by the GM-Attorneys General agreement.

1117 In May 1978, pursuant to its authority under Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e), the district court held a fairness hearing to determine whether it should approve the settlement. Because some of the private counsel objected to the settlement, the hearing was contested and lasted twelve days. The order of proof was irregular. Both sides submitted numerous exhibits. The plaintiff- objectors presented, among others, several 1977 Oldsmobile owners who objected to the settlement and two mechanics who testified that the substituted power train was inferior to the one GM allegedly warranted. GM relied largely on exhibits and the testimony of a Chevrolet staff engineer who testified that the power trains warranted and those provided were comparable.

On July 17, 1978, after considering post-hearing memoranda of the various sides in the litigation, the district court entered an order approving the subclass settlement as fair. Adopting GM's proposed findings of fact almost verbatim, the district court found that the engines and other parts included in the Oldsmobiles were "comparable" to those warranted. Resolving most of the other contested issues in favor of GM, the district court ordered the action dismissed as to all members of the subclass and directed GM to send an approved notice of settlement to each member of the subclass. Before the notice could be mailed, however, some of the plaintiff-objectors prosecuted this appeal. [FN9]

FN9. After the notice of appeal was filed, the Illinois Attorney General made a motion before the trial court requesting permission to send the settlement notice (with additional language indicating the pendency of the appeal) to subclass members. The trial court held that the appeal deprived it of jurisdiction to entertain the motion, but indicated that if it had had jurisdiction, it would have granted the motion. The Attorney General then, with the apparent acquiescence of the plaintiff-proponents and GM, moved this court for relief under Fed.R.App.P. 8(a). Because the contents of the notice were at issue on this appeal, we took the motion under advisement. C decision on the merits of the appeal necessari precludes sending out the notice in its present form. Accordingly, we hereby deny the motion.

II. Appealability

[3] The plaintiff-objectors prosecuting this appeal and GM agree that this court has jurisdiction to hear this appeal. The attorney for one of the plaintiffs and an objector to the settlement before the trial court, however, maintains that the trial court's order approving the settlement is neither a final decision nor a collateral order within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. s 1291.[FN10] Of course, we cannot determine this court's jurisdiction by majority vote of counsel appearing before us and, even if the parties unanimously agreed to appeal the order, we would be required to raise the issue Sua sponte. Levin v. Baum, 513 F.2d 92 (7th Cir. 1975).

FN10. Disagreement between attorneys for the class, as will become apparent, has become the norm in the conduct of this litigation. For our purposes, counsel for the class may be divided into basically three groups. Those who objected to the proposed settlement in the trial court sl be referred to as plaintiff-objectors. Despite the division over the appealability issue, the attorney contesting the jurisdiction of this court to entertain the appeal is a member of this group. Those private counsel who supported the settlement shall be referred to as plaintiff-proponents. Finally, the Attorneys General from Illinois and Alabama who represented named plaintiffs in the trial court constitute the third group. The latter two groups have aligned themselves with GM on many of the issues in this appeal.

[4] There is only one apparent obstacle to our hearing this appeal. The trial court's division of the class into two subclasses arguably makes this a multi-party action subject to the requirements of Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(b). [FN11] In an order following its approval 1118 of the subclass settlement, the trial court refused to make a determination that there was no just reason for delay and to direct entry of judgment. We hold that, despite the refusal of the trial court to enter judgment pursuant to Rule 54(b), we have jurisdiction to review the order approving the subclass settlement as a collateral order.[FN12]

FN11. There is considerable doubt whether Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(b) was intended to govern the situation when two distinct subclasses are created from a single class and one subclass' right to recover under a settlement neither affects nor is affected by the merits of the other subclass' claim. Aside from the difficulty of construing "multiple parties" to encompass separate subclasses, the settlement of one subclass' suit arguably should be treated as a separate lawsuit outside the ambit of Rule 54(b). This practical view of the position of the subclasses accords with the legal effect of creating subclasses under Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(c)(4). That rule provides that when a class is subdivided "each subclass (shall be) treated as a class, and the provisions of this rule shall then be construed and applied accordingly." Each subclass must independently meet the requirements of Rule 23 in order to be maintained as a class action, 7A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure s 1790 at 191-92 (1972), and therefore it seems consistent with the spirit of the rules to treat each subclass action as a separate action for all purposes.

FN12. Because we find that even if Rule 54(b) encompasses the present litigation that an independent basis for jurisdiction exists, we need not attempt to reconcile Rule 23 with Rule 54(b). Collateral orders are appealable without the express entry of judgment under Rule 54(b). See Swanson v. American Consumer Industries, Inc., 517 F.2d 555, 560-61 (7th Cir. 1975).

[5][6] The Supreme Court has taken an "intensely practical" approach when deciding whether judgments are appealable. Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 331 n. 11, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18 (1976). In close cases the determination must be made by balancing the "inconvenience and costs of piecemeal review" against "the danger of denying justice by delay." Gillespie v. United States Steel Corp., 379 U.S. 148, 152-53, 85 S.Ct. 308, 311, 13 L.Ed.2d 199 (1964). We are cognizant that the federal policy against piecemeal review admits no exception merely because the judgment appealed from affects the conduct of a class action. See Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 98 S.Ct. 2454, 57 L.Ed.2d 351 (1978) (striking the death knell for the death knell doctrine); Weit v. Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust, 535 F.2d 1010 (7th Cir. 1976) (order requiring notice to class members is not a collateral order). We believe, however, that although the federal courts have narrowly interpreted the collateral order doctrine established in Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 69 S.Ct. 1221, 93 L.Ed. 1528 (1949), that this case falls within "that small class which finally determine claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require that appellate consideration be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated." Id. at 546, 69 S.Ct. at 1226.

[7][8] The first requirement of the collateral order doctrine is that the matter appealed from must have been finally determined by the district court. [FN13] This does not require that the trial court be without power to reverse its ruling; it only requires that no further consideration be likely. 15 C. Wright, A. Miller & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure s 3911 at 470 (1976). The record amply indicates the trial judge's resolve not to reconsider the fairness of the subclass settlement. After the long fairness hearing, the trial court approved the settlement in an order with fairly extensive findings of fact. The order purported to immediately dismiss the claims of all subclass members. Afterward, the trial court on two occasions declined to reconsider its decision. Moreover, although the trial court retained jurisdiction over the settlement subclass action to supervise the implementation of the settlement, this left the trial court with only the ministerial task of executing its judgment. The trial court's order, therefore, is not tentative and it finally determines the matter appealed to this court.

FN13. "There are two aspects of the final judgment rule. One is that the order be the final disposition of the entire case. The other is that the order be the final disposition of the issue. The Cohen rule permits a limited exception with respect to the first aspect but not with respect to the second." Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 508 F.2d 152, 159 (3d Cir.), Cert. denied, 423 U.S. 832, 96 S.Ct. 54, 46 L.Ed.2d 50 (1975)

[9][10] The second requirement of the collateral order doctrine is that the matter appealed must be "separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action" and neither affect nor be affected by decision on the merits. 337 U.S. at 546, 69 S.Ct. at 1225-1226. Application of this requirement 1119 to appeals from decisions on the fairness of a settlement presents some difficulties. Ordinarily settlements of civil litigation are not reviewed by federal courts. Thus, the issue is raised almost exclusively in class or derivative actions. [FN14] One court of appeals, however, has held that a refusal of a trial court to approve a class action settlement to be "collateral," Norman v. McKee, 431 F.2d 769 (9th Cir. 1970), Cert. denied, 401 U.S. 912, 91 S.Ct. 879, 27 L.Ed.2d 811 (1971), and another has reviewed such a refusal without expressly considering the appealability issue, In re International House of Pancakes Franchise Litigation, 487 F.2d 303 (8th Cir. 1973).[FN15]

FN14. Court approval of settlements is also necessary in bankruptcy reorganization proceedings. See, e. g., Protective Committee for Independent Stockholders of TMT Trailer Ferry, Inc. v. Anderson, 390 U.S. 414, 88 S.Ct. 1157, 20 L.Ed.2d 1 (1968).

FN15. The Second Circuit has recently rejected the position taken by the Eighth and Ninth Circuits and refused to review a trial court's refusal to approve a settlement of a shareholders derivative action. Seigal v. Merrick, 590 F.2d 35 (2d Cir. 1978). Because this appeal challenges the trial court's approval of a settlement, we need not align this court on one side of this conflict between the Circuits. This appeal because of the subclassing of Oldsmobile purchasers for the purposes of settlement presents a situation unlike those which ordinarily confront class members or shareholders after the trial court's approval or disapproval of a proposed settlement of a representative action. In Seigal the court stated that "(an approved) settlement . . . is not a deviation from the main path of the litigating process. It is a step on that path directly leading to final judgment. An approval of a compromise, after appropriate notice, becomes a final judgment." 590 F.2d 38. In the case at bar, the trial court's approval of the subclass settlement does not lead directly to final judgment. But unlike a disapproval of a settlement, the trial court's order looks toward neither a renewal of settlement negotiations nor a trial on the merits. Thus, the danger of appellate court interference with proceedings before the trial court is small in comparison with the danger of denying justice by delay.

[11] Although in Norman the court maintained that appellate review of the initial determination of the settlement's fairness was completely divorced from the merits of the claim, adequate review of the fairness of a settlement necessarily requires some examination of the underlying cause of action. 15 C. Wright, A. Miller & E. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure s 3911 at 385 (1976); See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 56. See also Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. at 469, 98 S.Ct. at 2458 ("the class determination generally involves considerations that are 'enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action' "). Nevertheless, several factors bring this appeal within the separateness requirement. Fir the Supreme Court has not applied the requiremen that the issue be "separate" from the merits to require the precise division of the issues presented on appeal and the elements of the underlying cause of action that a semanticist might expect. See National Socialist Party v. Village of Skokie, 432 U.S. 43, 97 S.Ct. 2205, 53 L.Ed.2d 96 (1977). Moreover, to the extent that this appeal raises issues about the regularity of the conduct of the settlement negotiations or the fairness hearing, consideration of the merits of the plaintiffs' cause of action is unnecessary. Similarly, because appellate courts will reverse a trial court's determination on the fairness of a settlement only if there is a clear abuse of discretion, consideration of the merits is necessarily something less than penetrating.

Finally, the order approving the settlement is, in one sense, completely separate from the merits of the action. The trial court's approval of the settlement precludes any decision on the merits of the settlement subclass' claim because the claim will never go to trial.

The third requirement of the collateral orc doctrine is that the rights asserted would be lost, probably irreparably, if review were delayed until the conclusion of proceedings in the district court. It is unlikely that the claims of the post-April 10, 1977, Oldsmobile purchasers will be decided any time soon. GM has made clear its intention not to settle with that subclass. Therefore years of litigation before the entire class action is concluded is possible. In 1120 the meantime, the settlement, if executed, contemplates the release of state and federal claims by those class members who accept the settlement package and dismissal of the Magnuson-Moss claims for those who do not. If the settlement is later undone on appeal, ordering reimbursement by those who accepted the $200 and received benefits under the mechanical insurance policy would be practically impossible.[FN16] Those signing releases might also lose their state claims against GM because of the running of the statutes of limitation. Conversely, those who decline to sign the release, may file and pursue state claims. Any judgment in the state courts may possibly bar subsequent action on their Magnuson-Moss claims.

FN16. These characteristics of the settlement approved by the trial court distinguish this appeal from the appeal which was dismissed for lack of an appealable order in Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 541 F.2d 365 (3d Cir. 1976). In Rodgers the trial court permitted the defendant to communicate to individual members of the class an offer to enter into individual settlements. See Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 70 F.R.D. 639 (W.D.Pa.1976). See also Part VI of this opinion Infra. The trial court merely approved the communication of the offer; it did not finally determine the rights of any member of the class. See 541 F.2d at 370. In the present case, the trial court dismissed the federal claims of all settlement subclass members and effectively terminated their participation in the class action whether they released their claims or not. Moreover, the settlement offer in Rodgers merely promised payment of back pay in return for signed releases. The Court of Appeals, dismissing the appeal, noted that the parties could be returned to their original positions if the release was subsequently invalidated. Id. at 371. Here, we cannot say with any degree of certainty that we could later return to GM the benefits that class members received under the mechanical insurance policy.

We conclude that "delay of perhaps a number of years in having (their) rights determined might work a great injustice" to the subclass members. Gillespie v. United States Steel Corp., 379 U.S. 148, 153, 85 S.Ct. 308, 311, 13 L.Ed.2d 199 (1964). They "cannot make important decisions about . . . further participation in this suit without having (their) rights determined now." Diaz v. Southern Drilling Corp., 427 F.2d 1118, 1123 (5th Cir.), Cert. denied, 400 U.S. 878, 91 S.Ct. 118, 27 L.Ed.2d 115 (1970). [FN17] The possibility that later appellate review would be effective is simply too slight.

FN17. Cf. Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 576 F.2d 1157, 1221 (5th Cir. 1978), Cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 99 S.Ct. 1020, 59 L.Ed.2d 74 (1979):

The court's November 20 order required awardees wishing to opt into the settlement to do so by December 15, 1975 or be deemed to have opted out of the subclass. This created a dilemma for dissatisfied subclass members, who were faced with the equally unpalatable alternatives of opting into a possibly invalid settlement or being relegated to individual lawsuits. A decision to opt into the settlement by endorsing the back pay check and thereby releasing the company of all liability for past discrimination might preclude entitlement to a share in a new agreement or award if the settlement were invalidated on appeal. On the other hand, a decision to opt-out of the subclass by failing to cash the tendered check would create the possibility of receiving no back pay award if the appeal were unsuccessful and an individual lawsuit proved unrealistic. . . .

The procedure adopted by the district court, by requiring claimants to choose whether or not to opt into the settlement Before they could exercise their right to appellate review, unfairly burdened the rights of awardees to appeal the settlement and thereby significantly undermined one of the most important procedural protections associated with the approval of a settlement. We hold that the ability of subclass members to opt into a back pay settlement may not be terminated before a final determination of the propriety of that settlement is made.

[12] A final requirement of the collateral order doctrine is that the order must present "important and unresolved legal questions." Weit v. Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co., 535 F.2d 1010, 1015 (7th Cir. 1976); Weight Watchers, Inc. v. Weight Watchers International, Inc.,455 F.2d 770, 773 (2d Cir. 1972). We think this appeal raises at least two important questions concerning the proper balance between the general policy of encouraging settlements and a court's specific duty to insure the fairness of class action settlements. The first question involves the scope of discovery which should be afforded 1121 to objectors to proposed class settlements which were negotiated under questionable circumstances. Because adequate representation is the foundation of all representative actions, See Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(4), Hansberry v. Lee, 311 U.S. 32, 61 S.Ct. 115, 85 L.Ed. 22 (1940) , we think this question is appropriately reviewed at this time. The second question concerns the nature of the "settlement" that Rule 23(e) authorizes the trial court to approve. Because this question goes to the power of the district court in the settlement of representative actions, we believe it is sufficiently important to receive appellate consideration now.

[13] In conclusion, the trial court's order is not tentative; it is capable of review without extensive examination of the merits; it raises issues which could not be effectively reviewed later; and it presents important, unresolved legal questions for consideration by this court. We hold that the trial court's order approving the subclass settlement is an appealable collateral order.

III. Motion to Limit the Appeal

Before oral argument, the attorney representing the State of Alabama in this litigation presented to this court a "motion to limit appeal to certain named appellants." The motion seeks to have the effect of this court's decision limited to (1) only the named plaintiffs, Oswald and Miller, the plaintiff- objectors prosecuting this appeal or, alternatively, (2) only those class members who filed objections to the proposed settlement in the district court. We consider the arguments in support of the second alternative first.

It is argued that this court's decision in Research Corp. v. Asgrow Seed Co., 425 F.2d 1059 (7th Cir. 1970), compels this court to restrict the representative standing of the named plaintiffs who prosecute this appeal to those class members who objected to the settlement in the trial court. In Research, the appellants were members of a defendant class represented in the district court by numerous named defendants. Despite adequate notice, the appellants failed either to request exclusion from the defendant class or to object to a proposed settlement negotiated by the named defendants; the appellants attacked the fairness of the settlement for the first time on appeal. This court held that the failure of the appellants to intervene in the action foreclosed their right to appeal. Here it is argued by analogy that each individual subclass member who failed to object to the settlement before the trial court has waived the right to appeal and the right to be represented by others on appeal. We think the argument is without merit.

There is no doubt that the named plaintiffs, Oswald and Miller, preserved the right to appeal. They are parties to the lawsuit; intervention was obviously unnecessary. Moreover, through their attorneys they vigorously objected to the settlement in the district court and created a record adequate for appellate review. Thus, the issue raised by the motion may be refined to whether Oswald and Miller through their counsel may represent the interests of absent subclass members on this appeal.

[14] We would be reluctant to hold that absentee class members waive appellate review merely because they failed to take affirmative action when their interests were already being adequately represented by participants in the lawsuit. Cf. Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 32- 33 (3d Cir. 1971) (objectors' failure to opt-out of a class action does not preclude appellate review). To do so would unnecessarily restrict the representational character of all class actions. We need not reach the issue here, however, because the notice of the proposed subclass settlement inform subclass members that if they neither opted out or the subclass nor intervened in the lawsuit that "attorneys for the named plaintiffs will represent your interest in these suits." We think subclass members who received the notice could reasonably rely on class counsel to protect their interests by prosecuting an appeal from the judgment of the district court if necessary. See Gonzales v. Cassidy, 474 F.2d 67 (5th Cir. 1973) (failure to appeal approval of an 1122 unfair settlement constitutes inadequate representation). We therefore decline to hold that absentee subclass members waived their right to have the settlement reviewed by this court.

The second argument advanced in favor of limiting the representative capacity of the plaintiff-objectors on this appeal is that the pretrial order of the trial court vested the power to conduct all pretrial actions on behalf of the class in the attorneys' executive committee. Because the executive committee did not authorize the prosecution of the appeal, it is argued, the authority of counsel for the plaintiff-objectors must be confined to representing the individual named plaintiffs before this court.

[15][16] We question initially the premise that it is the attorney, not the named plaintiff, who possesses the power to appeal the approval of a settlement. "(T)he decision to appeal a class action judgment must rest with the class plaintiffs," not class counsel. Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 576 F.2d 1177-78 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 99 S.Ct. 1020, 59 L.Ed.2d 74 (1979). Since the pretrial order did not purport to restrict the representative capacity of the named plaintiffs prosecuting this appeal, it would seem that the argument misses the mark. The court in Pettway, however, acknowledged that "no clear concept of the allocation of decision-making responsibility between the attorney and the class members has yet emerged." Id. at 1176. Consequently, assuming Arguendo the premise that the class attorney is the Dominus litus, we consider and reject the argument that the pretrial order prohibits counsel for Oswald and Miller from representing the interests of the class before this court.

The pretrial order does not on its face vest the power to appeal in the executive committee. The order itself only lists the committee's various duties and powers relating to pretrial proceedings. We would be extremely reluctant to imply a provision that restricts the right to appeal decisions of the trial court. Furthermore, even if the pretrial order contemplated giving the executive committee the power to prohibit individual attorneys from appealing, whether the executive committee has done so is unclear. The minutes of the committee meeting show that the committee did pass a motion that no appeal be taken from the trial court's approval of the settlement. Nevertheless, those minutes also indicate that before passage of the motion "(t)he chair ruled that the motion does not proclude (Sic) anyone from appealing but states the position of the majority of plaintiffs' counsel."

We believe that the question of whether an appeal should be made and the scope of that appeal should be answered by determining the best interests of the class. The plaintiff-proponents maintain that the settlement is fair, that the approval of the trial court is correct, and that the matter is best left unreviewed by this court. Plaintiff-objectors, of course, disagree. The purpose of Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e) is to protect the interests of absentee class members; the danger of abuse is high and the protection of their interests cannot be left to class counsel alone. Rule 23 imposes on the trial court in the first instance, and on this court eventually, the duty to examine the fairness of proposed settlements. Limiting the representative capacity of the appellants on this appeal would effectively negate this court's obligation to act as the guardian of the class. We do not believe that the interests of class members are best served by leaving the settlement unreviewed. Cf. McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 417 n. 1 (7th Cir. 1977) (permitting briefs and oral arguments by parties who failed to file a separate notice of appeal because the case involved "issues inextricably bound up with" those properly before the court). Restricting the appeal would only leave the door open to additional individual appeals by those who decline to accept the settlement offer. A series of individual and possibly conflicting appellate decisions on the propriety of the settlement would undermine the representative nature of class actions significantly and sacrifice the public's interest in judicial economy unnecessarily. 1123 We hold that plaintiff-objectors Oswald and Miller are parties who through their counsel will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class in this appeal. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(4) (requirement for class certification).

We do not hold "that each individual plaintiff and lawyer must be permitted to do what he pleases in litigation as complex as this, and can behave in total disregard of the interest of other litigants and of the class . . . ." Farber v. Riker-Maxson Corp., 442 F.2d 457, 459 (2d Cir. 1971). We note the following factors which convince us that the interests of the class will be well represented on this appeal. Cf. Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 576 F.2d 1157, 1178-80 (5th Cir. 1978), Cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 99 S.Ct. 1020, 59 L.Ed.2d 74 (1979) (discussing factors relevant to determining whether the named plaintiff may appoint new counsel to appeal the approval of a settlement negotiated by former class counsel). First, the named plaintiffs and their counsel were among the first to file engine switch suits against GM. Second, counsel for the appellants was a member of the class executive committee and is well acquainted with the litigation. Despite suggestions and innuendoes of ulterior motives in some of the briefs which we can only regard as symptoms of "the 'brief writer's hyperbole' syndrome," United States ex rel. Sims v. Sielaff, 563 F.2d 821, 824 n. 6 (7th Cir. 1977), nothing in the record indicates that appellants' counsel has acted with other than the best interests of the class in mind. Third, although vocal objection to the settlement among class members was not widespread, "the sentiment of the class is but one factor in our analysis of the appealability question." Pettway, 576 F.2d at 1178. In Patterson v. Stovall, 528 F.2d 108 (7th Cir. 1976), this court heard the appeal of objectors to a class action settlement even though the objectors constituted only .0018% Of all class members and their claims constituted only .0022% Of all claims. Id. at 109 n. 1. See also Mandujano v. Basic Vegetable Products, Inc., 541 F.2d 832 (9th Cir. 1976) (reversing settlement even though only 4% Of the class was in active opposition to it). Fourth and finally, we find that the issues raised on appeal are far from meritless.[FN18]

> FN18. In Patterson v. Stovall, 528 F.2d at 109 n. 1, we noted:
> "Although in terms of the class and settlement (appellants') number and size might be considered miniscule, the serious issues raised before this Court are not reduced in their magnitude."

[17] We conclude that the best interests of the class warrant that this court review the fairness of the settlement as it affects the entire class. Consequently, we consider the merits of the objections to the trial court's approval of the proposed settlement.

IV. Conduct of the Settlement Negotiations

The plaintiff-objectors challenge the refusal of the trial court to permit them to conduct discovery into the settlement negotiations. They contend that the trial court's order prohibiting discovery and the court's limitation of examination of the Assistant Illinois Attorney General during the fairness hearing prevented them from being able to determine whether the proposed settlement was fair, reasonable and adequate. The trial court's order limiting discovery evidences its belief that how the settlement was reached was irrelevant to the issue of the fairness of the settlement.[FN19] 1124 The court's findings of fact, although finding the irregular method of negotiating the settlement did not prejudice subclass members, reaffirmed the court's belief that the objection was irrelevant to the adequacy of the settlement "and would not constitute sufficient grounds to withhold an otherwise fair settlement from consideration by the subclass members."

> FN19. The plaintiffs' second set of interrogatories requested that GM identify all documents that it relied upon during the course of the negotiations. The interrogatories also asked GM to state "the highest demand made by the various State Attorneys General in the course of the negotiations with defendant and identify all factual support for such demand, as well as any documents which relate to such demand or factual support." The trial court entered an order ruling that the proce of the negotiations was not open to discovery. During the fairness hearing, although the court permitted some questioning of the Assistant Illinois Attorney General about the time, place and other aspects of the negotiations, it refused to permit inquiry into what transpired during the negotiations.
> GM maintains that the plaintiff-objectors waived this issue by failing to recall the Assistant Illinois Attorney General after being given the opportunity to do so. The record, however, clearly indicates that, given the trial court's limitation on the scope of examination, any further questioning by the objectors would have been futile. The objectors brought the issue to the attention of the trial court and cannot be deemed to have waived it.

[18][19][20] We think that the conduct of the negotiations was relevant to the fairness of the settlement and that the trial court's refusal to permit discovery or examination of the negotiations constituted an abuse of discretion.[FN20] In addition, we do not think that the record adequately supports the court's conclusion that the seemingly irregular conduct of the negotiations did n prejudice the interests of the class. We mus therefore, reverse the trial court's order approving the settlement.

> FN20. Neither GM nor the Illinois Attorney General has argued that the conduct of the settlement negotiations is protected from examination by some form of privilege, and we find no convincing basis for such an objection here. Although particular documents or discussions conceivably could be immune from discovery as attorney work product or as privileged attorney-client communications, the existence of such privileges is best determined in the context of particular demands for discovery. Inquiry into the conduct of the negotiations is also consistent with the letter and the spirit of Rule 408 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. That rule only governs admissibility. It simply bars admission of evidence of compromise negotiations to prove liability or damages and expressly provides that it "does not require exclusion when evidence is offered for another purpose. . . ." The rule is grounded on the policy of encouraging the settlement of disputed claims without litigation. That policy is not undermined by our decision here. Participants in negotiations to settle cl actions are aware that Rule 23(e) requires the t court's approval of any settlement reached. Moreover, they are or should be aware that the court will inquire into the conduct of the negotiations. See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 53-54. To the extent such inquiry discourages settlements, it should only discourage those negotiated in circumstances so irregular as to cast substantial doubt on their fairness.

[21][22] This court has several times commented on the trial court's continuing duty to undertake a stringent examination of the adequacy of representation by the named class representatives and their counsel at all stages of the litigation. McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 419 (7th Cir. 1977); Susman v. Lincoln American Corp., 561 F.2d 86, 89- 90 (7th Cir. 1977). The trial court's duty to undertake such an inquiry arises from the requirement that it find that "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(4). The trial court's duty is heightened by its responsibility to review the fairness of any compromise of the class action. Id. 23(e).[FN21]

FN21. "Before approving a settlement, therefore, the judge must assure himself that the class has been adequately represented during the settlement talks, a conclusion which will not follow automatically from a finding of adequacy for litigation purposes." Developments in the Law Class Actions, 89 Harv.L.Rev. 1318, 1537-38 (1976). See also Wolfram, The Antibiotics Class Actions, 1976 A.B. Foundation Research J. 251, 361.

[23][24][25][26] The Manual for Complex Litigation provides that inquiry into the conduct of settlement negotiations is pertinent to the court's examination of the settlement. Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 53-54. [FN22] It recommends that before sending a notice to class members of a proposed settlement and before considering the substantive fairness of the settlement, the trial court should conduct a preliminary hearing to determine whether the proposed settlement is "within the range of possible approval." Id. Among the questions which merit judicial examination at the "probable cause hearing," the Manual lists:

FN22. We recognize that the Manual does not provide "an inflexible formula or mold into which all . . . pre-trial procedure must be cast." Manual for Complex Litigation at xix; See McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 420 (1977). In appropriate cases, however, the Manual does provide a rough guide by which to measure whether the trial judge acted within his discretion. We rely on it in that manner here.

1125 Who were the negotiating parties and to what extent were they authorized to proceed with the settlement of their class' claims and possibly those of other classes? [FN23]

FN23. Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 53 (Consideration 4).

Among the reasons for examining whether settlement negotiations were authorized is the danger of defendant "attorney-shopping."

> (A) person who unofficially represents the class during settlement negotiations must be under strong pressure to conform to the defendants' wishes . . . . (A) n individual, lacking official status, knows that a negotiating defendant may not like his "attitude" and may try to reach a settlement with another member of the class.

Id. at 59 Quoting Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 33 (3d Cir. 1971). Thus, unauthorized settlement negotiations create the possibility of negotiation from a position of weakness by the attorney who purports to represent the class.[FN24] In addition, the prestige attendant upon negotiating a large settlement against a corporate defendant and thereby acquiring reputations as consumer advocates may place public attorneys in a situation analogous to private counsel who hope to win large fee awards. [FN25] The possibility of such a conflict of interest as a general rule warrants judicial scrutiny of unauthorized settlement negotiations. Furthermore, settlement negotiations with less than all class counsel weaken the class' tactical position even if the attorney who enters into the negotiations attempts to represent the class' interests vigorously.[FN26]

FN24. The court, to be sure, will not approve a settlement if it is unfair, but "fairness" may be found anywhere within a broad range of lower and upper limits. No one can tell whether a compromise found to be "fair" might not have been "fairer" had the negotiating (attorney) possessed better information or been animated by undivided loyalty to the cause of the class. The court can reject a settlement that is inadequate; it cannot undertake the partisan task of bargaining for better terms. The integrity of the negotiating process is, therefore, important.
Haudek, The Settlement and Approval of Stockholders' Actions Part II: The Settlement, 23 Sw.L.J. 765, 771-72 (1969).

FN25. Cf. Developments in the Law Class Actions, 89 Harv.L.Rev. 1318, 1552 (1976) (noting the conflict of interest created not only by counsel seeking large fees after settlement, but also by counsel pursuing "his own ideological goals without regard to the desires of class members").

FN26. A time-honored litigating tactic for a defendant encircled by multiple claimants is to weaken the total force of the attack little by little. The defendant first enters into settlements with the strongest of the plaintiffs. Then it faces the remaining plaintiffs, now isolated and abandoned, with the threat of long and lonely litigation to force a final round of settlements at terms favorable to the defendant.
Wolfram, The Antibiotics Class Actions, 1976 A.B. Foundation Research J. 251, 264.

Finally, unauthorized settlement negotiations deny other class counsel access to information about the negotiations which is helpful in evaluating the fairness of the settlement. "(T)he options considered and rejected, the topics discussed, the defendant's reaction to various proposals, and the amount of compromise necessary to obtain a settlement" [FN27] were all matters which class counsel excluded from the negotiations needed to consider before exercising their fiduciary duties to the class by accepting the settlement. [FN28]

FN28. Cf. Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir. 1975):
It is little comfort to objector Frackman that Plaintiffs' counsel may have examined the documents sought by objector during the course of . . . discovery. As an objector, Frackman was in an adversary relationship with both plaintiffs and defendants and was entitled to at least a reasonable opportunity to discovery against both.
See also National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, Proposed Uniform Class Action Act s 12(c)(4) Reprinted in 32 Bus.Law. 83, 94 (1976) (notice of proposed settlement to class members shall include "a description and evaluation of alternatives considered by representative parties").

The record before this court contains facts which cast some doubt on the adequacy 1126 of the representation of the class during the settlement negotiations and the fairness of the resulting settlement. These facts warranted in this instance more probing into the conduct of the settlement negotiations than the trial court permitted.

The record establishes that the settlement presented to the court by the Illinois Attorney General was either (1) negotiated without the permission of the other class counsel in the federal action as required by the court's first pretrial order or (2) negotiated by the Attorney General's office in a capacity other than class counsel In this action. The pretrial order prohibited the class counsel executive committee from entering into settlement negotiations without the consent of all plaintiffs' attorneys. The Attorney General's Assistant was a member of the committee and therefore subject to the pretrial order's restrictions. Nevertheless, he participated in negotiations with GM without the consent of other counsel.

[27][28][29] If the negotiations did proceed in violation of the trial court's pretrial order,[FN29] we think that the plaintiff-objectors were entitled to discovery to determine whether the negotiations may have prejudiced the interests of the clas Moreover, even if discovery failed to reveal identifiable prejudice, the exclusion of the private counsel from the settlement negotiations should weigh heavily against approval of the settlement. "(T)he excluded plaintiff might well have improved the settlement terms, and while this may be hard to demonstrate, the proponents of the compromise should not be helped by a difficulty of proof created by their improper conduct." Haudek, The Settlement and Approval of Stockholders' Actions Part II: The Settlement, 23 Sw.L.J. 765, 770 (1969). [FN30]

FN29. The trial court found that at least some private counsel knew of the negotiations between GM and the Attorneys General in advance of the settlement. The knowledge of some counsel, however, falls short of the authorization contemplated by the trial court's pretrial order. That order authorized the class counsel executive committee to conduct negotiations, but only with the consent of all counsel for the named plaintiffs. The trial court made no finding that all class counsel were aware of the negotiations between GM and the Attorneys General. Moreover knowledge of the existence of the negotiatic does not necessarily indicate consent to the negotiations for the purpose of settling the federal action. We do not question the right of the state Attorneys General to settle their parallel state lawsuits against GM without the approval of private counsel in the federal class action. Their authority to do so is unquestioned even though the settlement of state actions may have some collateral impact on the federal action, E. g., reducing the size of the class by affording relief to some class members. Here, however, the negotiations were conducted not only to settle the state actions, but also to settle the federal class action. We find no indication in the record that private counsel were aware that the negotiations would have such a broad effect until immediately before the announcement of the GM-Attorneys General agreement.

After the submission of the proposed settlement agreement, six of the private counsel in the federal action did agree to support the settlement. The district court relied on the plaintiff-proponents' support as a factor indicating both the absence of prejudice from the circumstances of the settlement's negotiation and the settlement's fairness. See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 53 (Consideration 5). The support of some private counsel after being presented with the agreement as a Fait accompli does not amount to a ratification of the conduct of the negotiations. As noted Supra, class counsel should know the options considered and the topics discussed during the negotiations before supporting a settlement as fair. In the absence of such familiarity of counsel with the conduct of the settlement negotiations, the inference of fairness to be drawn from their support is weak. Cf. id. at 64 ("a plan should not be approved simply because counsel on both sides recommend it").

FN30. Thus, although the proponents of any class settlement always bear the burden of proof on the issue of fairness, Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 56, proponents who improperly negotiate a settlement should bear the heavier burden of establishing fairness by clear and convincing evidence. This does not unduly hamper settlements since the disapproval of the settlement always permits the renewal of negotiations between All of the proper participants in the class action. The question of prejudice aside, it is clear that the trial court did not require the proponents of the settlement proposed here to meet such a heavy burden. In fact, the trial court accepted the proposed settlement as Prima facie fair and shifted to the objectors at least the burden of producing evidence disproving the fairness of the settlement. Whether the trial court shifted the burden of persuasion to the objectors as well is unclear. The objectors complain that it did and the Illinois Attorney General's brief seems to concede the point. The trial court's conclusions of law, however, recite that it placed the burden of persuasion on the proponents. Our comparison of the record with the findings of fact leads us to believe that as to some of the court's findings that it may indeed have misplaced the burden.

1127 The Assistant Illinois Attorney General maintains, however, that his participation in negotiations between the state Attorneys General and GM did not violate the pretrial order because he was not negotiating as a class representative in the action in the federal court but rather was negotiating as a representative of the State of Illinois in the parallel state proceedings in the Circuit Court of Cook County.[FN31] The motion of the Illinois Attorney General for leave to file the settlement took this position also, although the motion's first paragraph based the Attorney General's capacity to present the motion on his status as counsel for the State of Illinois, one of the designated class representatives in the federal action. Also consistent with his position that he did not participate in the settlement negotiations as a federal class representative, the Assistant Attorney General admitted during the fairness hearing that the Illinois Attorney General's office did not obtain consent to the settlement from the over 100 named private plaintiffs that the Illinois Attorney General represented in the federal action.

FN31. During the fairness hearing, Mr. Mulack, the Assistant Illinois Attorney General, described his position as one in which he wore "two hats."

(T)he Attorney General filed a State Court action . . . in the Circuit Court of Cook County, on March 7th of 1977. . . . (T)wo weeks later we filed the Federal Action. So as I told the Court, on several occasions; as we had appeared here during the motions on behalf of the class certification, I was wearing two hats and the Attorney General of Illinois was, likewise, wearing two hats; one as a plaintiff, under the State Court action, under the Consumer Fraud Act, in the Circuit Court of Cook County, and the other as a punitive class representative in the Federal Court Action. . . .

I was perfectly aware of the limitations in Pre-Trial Order No. 1, that prohibited either myself or any representative of the Attorney General's office from taking part in nationwide negotiations on this particular class action. With that particular concern and that understanding, I had approached the posture of the overall negotiations.

Now, attendant at those meetings were Assistant Attorneys General literally from every state that had a major action going against General Motors. Each of those Attorneys General were there in their state capacity only they were only concerned about their state lawsuits, as I was concerned, only, about my state lawsuit.

At the opening salvo the opening introductions of the settlement negotiations as people were being introduced, and from which state they attended, and as General Motors' attorneys were being introduced, as I was being introduced, I made this caveat on the record, that "I'm here only as an Assistant Attorney General on behalf of the State of Illinois case; I am not here, at all, as any class representative, or on behalf of the nationwide action; and if any discussions are brought up about the nationwide class action, I cannot participate, because that is not my function." With that caveat, we proceeded to discuss those particular matters attendant to the settlement.

We note that the written settlement agreement between GM and the Attorneys General devoted much space and went into considerable detail reciting the rights and obligations of the parties to the negotiations with respect to the settlement of the Federal action. For example, the agreement, mentioning the Magnuson-Moss class action by name, required the Attorneys General, Inter alia, to seek amendment of the class certification to conform with that group of consumers to whom GM would extend its offer, to represent to the trial court that the proposed settlement was fair and reasonable, and to recommend that the court approve the settlement of the entire action in accordance with the terms of the agreement.

[30][31][32][33][34] The State of Illinois is a representative party in this suit solely because it purchased a 1977 Oldsmobile with a Chevrolet engine. The Illinois Attorney General's ability to maintain the suit on Illinois' behalf as a class action is governed solely by Rule 23. [FN32] In the absence of statutory authorization, Illinois cannot maintain this action in federal court as a Parens patriae action.[FN33] Assuming Arguendo that the Attorney 1128 General's office did not violate the pretrial order and thus participated in the negotiations solely as a representative in the parallel state court action, we believe, nevertheless, that the trial judge should have opened up the negotiations to scrutiny, if only to dispel the questions which naturally arise from the unusual posture of the case. If the settlement was not negotiated by authorized class counsel in the capacity of class counsel in this action, then it was negotiated in the name of, at best, only one of the named plaintiffs in the federal action, the State of Illinois. This stretches the theory of representation of absentee interests by the named plaintiff to its limit [FN34] and warrants searching judicial examination of the circumstances surrounding and the matters discussed during the settlement negotiations before acceptance of the proposed settlement for possible approval.

FN32. See State of Iowa v. Union Asphalt & Roadoils, Inc., 281 F.Supp. 391, 401-02 (S.D.Iowa 1968); State of Minnesota v. United States Steel Corp., 44 F.R.D. 559, 576 (D.Minn.1968).

FN33. Cf. Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 266, 92 S.Ct. 885, 893, 31 L.Ed.2d 184 (1972) ("Parens patriae actions may, in theory, be related to class actions, but the latter are definitely preferable in the antitrust area. Rule 23 provides specific rules for delineating the appropriate plaintiff-class, establishes who is bound by the action, and effectively prevents duplicative recoveries").

The class action, although it also provides a vehicle for furthering the substantive policies behind legislation, is primarily a device to vindicate the rights of individual class members. We also note that the Magnuson- Moss Act does provide that the United States Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission may go to federal court to enjoin violations of the Act. U.S.C. s 2310(c). Thus the Act provides its own mechanism for protecting the general public's interest in enforcement of its provisions. It does not leave protection of the public interest up to the Attorneys General of the fifty states. Compare 15 U.S.C. ss 15a-15h (explicitly vesting power in state Attorneys General to maintain actions against persons engaged in anti-competitive practices which harm state consumers).

FN34. In their briefs and during oral argument the parties devoted a good deal of time to a discussion of whether a settlement could be approved over the objections of some of the named plaintiffs. We agree with General Motors that the unanimous approval of all named plaintiffs is not a prerequisite to judicial approval of a settlement approved by some of the named plaintiffs. See McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416 (7th Cir. 1977). This case does not present, and we need not here decide, GM's admittedly extreme position taken during oral argument that the trial court can approve a settlement offered unilaterally by a class action defendant with the approval of neither a class representative nor class counsel. Here, at least the State of Illinois, a named plaintiff, agreed settle.

Several additional facts suggest that the representation of the class during the negotiations

was less than vigorous. The class settlement was reached relatively early in the course of the action. [FN35] The federal action had been filed about nine months before; the class had been certified only two months before; and notice to class members of the pendency of the action had not even been mailed. Although discovery had commenced, GM's answers to many of the requests were less than completely responsive. Moreover, because the proposed settlement contemplated the release of all claims relating to component substitutions, not just the engine interchanges, the range of possible damages to class members was unclear. It is not possible to tell from the record how fully informed the Attorneys General may have been about the value of the claims they were surrendering.[FN36]

FN35. See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 53 (Consideration 1).

FN36. Id. (Considerations 2 & 3). The record does not reveal and the briefs of the parties do not detail the extent to which the Attorneys General had proceeded with discovery in their parallel state actions or whether they examined the value of the claim for the entire power train. The trial court's order precluding discovery of the conduct of the settlement negotiations, of course, prevented the objectors from making such a record. To this day, we have no idea how the participants in the negotiations arrived at the settlement package of $200 plus the extended power train warranty.

[35][36][37] Not only was the settlement arguably hasty, but also the settlement agreement contemplated the abandonment of the prosecution of the claims of post-April 10 class members.[FN37] The settlement agreement entered into by the Attorneys General obligated them to seek settlement of the entire class action even though the agreement obligated GM to offer payments to only part of the certified class. The agreement contemplated narrowing the class certified 1129 to those who purchased Oldsmobiles before April 11, 1977, despite the original certification of the class to include those who purchased before October 13. GM subsequently formally moved the court for such a revised class definition to conform to the settlement agreement. The court denied GM's motion, but did decide to create a subclass for settlement purposes. Although the abandonment by the Attorneys General of the claims of post-April 10 purchasers does not by itself warrant the reversal of the settlement of the claims of the pre-April 11 purchasers, it does indicate that the representation during the negotiations may have been inadequate as to all Oldsmobile purchasers who constituted the original class.[FN38]

FN37. See id. at 54 (Consideration 6).

FN38. We must note that the means by which the trial court attempted to create a subclass also may have seriously jeopardized the rights of the post-April 10 purchasers. Aside from the tactical disadvantage of having their claims separated from the claims of the other class members, the subclassing technique chosen by the court raises doubts about whether those outside the ambit of the settlement could maintain a class action after the settlement with the pre-April 11 subclass.

The trial court has broad discretion in determining whether to allow a class action to be maintained, Jimenez v. Weinberger, 523 F.2d 689 (7th Cir. 1975), Cert. denied, 427 U.S. 912, 96 S.Ct. 3200, 49 L.Ed.2d 1204 (1976), King v. Kansas City Southern Industries, Inc., 519 F.2d 20 (7th Cir. 1975), and must necessarily have an equally broad range of discretion in determining whether to create subclasses pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(c)(4)(B). Division of a class or potential class into subclasses to account for differences in proof that may be required at trial is clearly permissible. See, e. g., Dorfman v. First Boston Corp., 62 F.R.D. 466, 476 (E.D.Pa.1973) (creating subclasses to account for differences between class members who purchased before and after relevant information received wide public circulation). The trial court's discretion, however, is bounded by the requirements of the applicable law and in this case we believe that the trial court overstepped the bounds of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

The trial court's order creating the settlement subclass did not conform to the requirements of Rule 23 which provides in pertinent part that when appropriate "a class may be divided into subclasses and each subclass treated as a class, and the provisions of this rule shall then be construed and applied accordingly." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(c)(4)(B). The rule contemplates that at least two subclasses will be formed and requires that each independently meet the requirements of Rule 23 for the maintenance of the class action. See Monarch Asphalt Sales Co. v. Wilshire Oil Co., 511 F.2d 1073, 1077 (10th Cir. 1975). The trial court made no finding that the post-April 10 subclass could be maintained as a class action. The record shows instead that the trial court attempted to create a single subclass for the settlement, leaving the post-April 10 purchasers in the original class. No attempt was made to test whether the nonsettlement subclass action met the requirements of Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a) & (b). Furthermore, the record does not indicate whether any named plaintiff in the current action is even in the nonsettlement subclass. The subclass could be "headless," thus raising serious questions about whether the trial court could proceed to consider the post-April 10 claims. See generally Winokur v. Bell Federal Savings & Loan Association, 560 F.2d 271 (7th Cir. 1977), Cert. denied, 435 U.S. 932, 98 S.Ct. 1507, 55 L.Ed.2d 530 (1978); Susman v. Lincoln American Corp., 587 F.2d 866 (7th Cir. 1978); Satterwhite v. City of Greenville, 578 F.2d 987 (5th Cir. 1978) (en banc); Goodman v. Schlesinger, 584 F.2d 1325 (4th Cir. 1978). Even if a named plaintiff is before the trial court, no showing has been made that he desires to or will adequately represent the subclass.

The uncertainty about the viability of the subclass action on behalf of class members who purchased their cars after April 10, 1977, is significant. The notice to these subclass members informing them of the pendency of the action has been sent out. The subclass members, therefore, may rely on the federal class action to vindicate their interests. If it is later determined that the action cannot be maintained, the statutes of limitation may preclude individual lawsuits in the state courts.

The questions raised about the viability of the subclass action if the settlement of the other subclass action is executed illustrate the inadvisability of creating tentative subclasses for settlement purposes without careful examination of the adequacy of the representation of Each subclass. Cf. Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 59-61 (condemning tentative classes for settlement purposes).

[38] One final matter casts doubt upon the circumstances in which the settlement was negotiated by the Attorneys General. The settlement agreement contains GM's promise to compensate the Attorneys General $150,000 "for all the expenses they have incurred in connection with the subject matter of this Agreement." Allocation of the proceeds is left solely to the Attorneys General. The agreement also commits 1130 GM to pay private attorneys' fees in the federal action "in an amount no greater than the amount of documented time actually expended . . . multiplied by the hourly fee prevailing . . . in the community." These amounts were in addition to the amounts promised class members accepting the settlement. The notice to subclass members informed them of even less than was provided by the agreement,[FN39] and the record does not provide any reliable estimate of the aggregate amount of attorneys' fees and expenses that GM will eventually pay.[FN40] We think the proposed settlement estimate of attorneys' fees and expenses is so vague that subclass members could not determine the possible influence of attorneys' fees on the settlement in considering whether to object to it. [FN41]

FN39. The notice to subclass members merely stated:

As part of the Agreement with the Attorneys General, General Motors agreed to pay an aggregate amount of $150,000, to be divided among those Attorneys General, including the Attorney General of Illinois, accepting the Agreement, in payment for expenses claimed to have been incurred in connection with the subject matter of their litigation. The amount of any attorneys' fees, costs or expenses to be paid to the attorneys for the private plaintiff purchasers in the class litigation will be subject to the review and approval by the Court. Any award of costs, expenses and/or fees to the private plaintiff purchasers and their counsel in the class litigation will be in addition to, and Not deducted from, the $200.00 offered by General Motors per automobile purchased as part of the proposed settlement.

FN40. The record does indicate that GM and six of the nine teams of private attorneys have reached an understanding, if not agreement, about attorneys' fees. The understanding is that GM will not object to a request by those counsel for fees up to $360,000, but that private counsel are free to request that the court award a larger amount. Like the provision for expenses of the Attorneys General, this understanding leaves the allocation of the payment a matter for determination by the recipients of the payment. The agreement apparently contemplates that no requests for fees will be made until the end of all of the litigation, including that concerning the rights of post-April 10 purchasers.

FN41. See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 54 (Consideration 7).

Aside from some doubt about whether Attorneys General who, of course, are compensated by the public may ever recover attorneys' fees and expenses, [FN42] we believe that the method by which the GM-Attorneys General agreeme contemplates payment of private attorneys' fees a expenses is questionable. The Manual condemns settlement agreements which provide

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN42. The Manual regards the question of whether publicly employed counsel may be allowed reimbursement for expenses as an "interesting" and apparently open one. Id. s 1.44 at 42. It notes that expenses and attorneys' fees have been allowed to state Attorneys General in several class action settlements. See also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 410 F.Supp. 706 (D.Minn.1975). On the other hand, several district courts have preferred state Attorneys General as counsel in class actions, in part because the Attorneys General presumably would not seek attorneys' fees. See State of Illinois v. Harper & Row Publishers, Inc., 301 F.Supp. 484, 494-95 (N.D.Ill.1969); State of Minnesota v. United States Steel Corp., 44 F.R.D. 559, 577 (D.Minn.1968); Cf. State of Ohio v. Richter Concrete Corp., 69 F.R.D. 604 (S.D.Ohio 1975) (permitting state Attorney General to communicate with putative class members after class certification was denied because salaried Attorney General, unlike private attorneys, had no interest in soliciting litigation or fees). We need not meet the question posed by the Manual. On this record it is not clear that the expenses of the Attorneys General to be reimbursed are those incurred in the litigation before the federal court. It is fair to assume that a large proportion of the expenses, if not all, are due to state court litigation.

that the fees and sometimes expenses of plaintiffs' counsel are to be paid separately by the defendant(s) over and above the settlement. Frequently, the amount thereof is not disclosed at the time the settlement is proposed. Such an arrangement should not be permitted. All amounts to be paid by the defendant(s) are properly part of the settlement funds and should be known and disclosed at the time the fairness of the settlement is considered.

The effect of such an arrangement is to neutralize the court's power and responsibility 1131 to pass upon the reasonableness of the amounts to be paid to plaintiffs' counsel since any reduction by the court in the amount counsel agree upon after the class settlement has been approved will simply go to reduce the aggregate amount defendant(s) will pay and will not increase the amount to be paid to the plaintiffs. As a result, there is little incentive for the judge to reduce the agreed upon fees. On the other hand, the effect of such an arrangement may be to cause counsel for the plaintiffs to be more interested in the amount to be paid as fees than in the amount to be paid to the plaintiffs. Only if the aggregate of all payments to be made by defendants is disclosed in the proposed settlement can the class members and the court make any intelligent judgment as to the fairness and reasonableness of a proposed settlement.

Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 62. This court has previously declined to upset a settlement agreement merely because some problems regarding fees and expenses remained unresolved. See McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 426 (7th Cir. 1977). We do not overrule that decision, but do regard the questionable provision made for expenses and attorneys' fees as one factor requiring examination of the settlement negotiations.

In conclusion, we hold that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to undertake a careful examination of the conduct of the settlement negotiations and by preventing the plaintiff-objectors from showing that the negotiations prejudiced the best interests of the class. Regardless of which of the two possible capacities the Illinois Attorney General's office assumed in negotiating the proposed settlement, the conduct of the negotiations was irregular and the record contains too much evidence tending to indicate prejudice to the class to permit us to allow the trial court's order to stand. Because, however, our decision upsets a settlement of considerable magnitude and because complex class actions are often, although not always, settled before trial, we conclude with a discussion of what we do not hold.

[39][40][41][42][43][44][45] We do not hold that irregular settlement negotiations may never form the basis for a judicially acceptable class action settlement. In fact, a prior decision of this court has approved a settlement negotiated in somewhat similar circumstances. See McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416 (7th Cir. 1977). [FN43] We realize that the system of state and federal courts often generates simultaneous litigation over the same subject matter. We recommend that an attorney who is counsel in both state and federal actions request leave of court before entering into settlement negotiations. In addition, the trial court should probably require as a condition to such leave at least that the attorney inform other counsel in the proceedings of the matters discussed during the separate negotiations. Although this practice is preferable, the failure to follow it is not necessarily reversible error 1132 if the record clearly indicates that representation of the class during the negotiations was adequate and that the settlement itself is fair.[FN44]

FN43. In McDonald the objectors to a settlement contested, Inter alia, the negotiations conducted in connection with a related state court action. The negotiations had begun prior to the commencement of the federal action which was filed only after the negotiations broke down, 565 F.2d at 420. Negotiations resumed prior to class certification, but largely because the trial court delayed certification of the class during the negotiations. Significantly, the trial court was never afforded an opportunity to pass on the issue of the propriety of the negotiations because the objector failed to raise the issue there.

In this case, a pretrial order expressly limited the conduct of settlement negotiations. The objectors raised the issue before the trial court by seeking discovery and by questioning the Assistant Illinois Attorney General during the fairness hearing. The trial court when given a chance to consider the conduct of the negotiations ruled that the matter was irrelevant. Finally, the record contains some evidence suggesting that the settlement negotiations prejudiced the class.

FN44. Although the trial court concluded that the settlement of the subclass action was fair, our discussion of the conduct of the settlement negotiations necessarily casts doubt upon that conclusion. Moreover, that matter aside, we are not convinced that the court's conclusion finds clear support in the record.

The most important factor relevant to the fairness of a class action settlement is the strength of plaintiff's case on the merits balanced against the amount offered in the settlement. Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 56. Conceptually, this requires a comparison of the amount offered with the product of (1) the probability of plaintiff's prevailing on the merits times (2) the present value of probable damages plaintiff would recover if he did prevail. We do not expect the trial court's conclusions to be set forth with mathematical precision. A fairness hearing is not a trial on the merits. The trial court, however, does have a duty to members of the class and to the reviewing court to assess, if not decide, the issues of law which weigh heavily in the above calculus and to consider the most probative evidence bearing on those issues.

The trial court's findings contain no express discussion of the merits of the Magnuson-Moss claim. Indeed, with respect to the alleged transmission switch in Delta 88s, the court apparently misapprehended the nature of the objectors' claims. The court noted that all Delta 88 coupes and sedans contained the THM 200 regardless of whether they had Chevrolet or Oldsmobile engines. The gist of objectors' claim, as we understand it, is that the transmissions used simply were not those warranted. Thus, the fact that all Delta 88 sedan and coupe purchasers received the smaller transmission is irrelevant. If objectors' contention is correct, GM breached its warranty to all Delta purchasers, not just those who received Chevrolet engines.

On the issue of compensatory damages, the trial court framed the issue as the "comparability" of the Oldsmobile engines allegedly warranted and those Chevrolet engines received. The findings then recite a mass of technical data indicating that the durability, performance and fuel economy of the Chevrolet and Oldsmobile engines were not materially different. The evidence on these technical issues was conflicting, but we are more concerned by the district court's failure to apply the ordinary measure of damages for breach of warranty: "the difference . . . between the Value of the goods accepted and the Value they would have had if they had been as warranted. . . ." U.C.C. s 2-714(2) (emphasis added). This is presumably the measure of damages contemplated by the drafters of the Magnuson-Moss Act. Yet, the court found it unnecessary to resolve an evidentiary conflict on the value of the engine. The objectors presented evidence tending to establish a difference in value of over $400. GM presented evidence that the cost of manufacture was virtually the same. Although neither form of evidence was the "best" evidence of value, this is a matter upon which the proponents of the settlement had the burden of proof. Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 56. The trial court should have made a more precise estimate of probable compensatory damages. Cf. id. at 61 ("in view of the complexity which ordinarily attends settlement issues, it is wise in most cases to rely upon proven facts, particularly economic facts").

Finally, we question the court's resolution of the possibility of recovering punitive damages against GM. The court declined to consider whether punitive damages are recoverable under the Magnuson-Moss Act because it found the evidence insufficient to permit an inference that GM acted in willful disregard of the rights of Oldsmobile purchasers. We think the objectors presented substantial evidence tending to show that GM deliberately concealed the source of the engines in the cars that it sold as Oldsmobiles and that it did so to increase profits. Moreover, we cannot say that the possible recovery of punitive damages should not have received any weight because they were unavailable under the Magnuson-Moss Act. Although one opinion published after the trial court's approval of the settlement intimates that the Act does not permit punitive damages, it does not resolve the issue. See Novosel v. Northway Motor Car Corp., 460 F.Supp. 541 (N.D.N.Y.1978). In any event, that decision is binding on neither this court nor the district court. The Act itself provides "for damages and other legal and equitable relief." 15 U.S.C. s 2310(d)(1). Although this broad language falls short of express statutory authorization for an award of punitive damages, we do not believe as GM does that punitive damages are never recoverable under federal law unless expressly authorized. See Globus v. Law Research Service, Inc., 418 F.2d 1276, 1284 (2d Cir. 1969), Cert. denied, 397 U.S. 913, 90 S.Ct. 913, 25 L.Ed.2d 93 (1970); Comment, Punitive Damages Under Federal Statutes: A Functional Analysis, 60 Calif.L.Rev. 191 (1972). Although the legislative history of the Act is silent on the matter, we think it is not unlikely that Congress intended to provide at least the same relief available under state law for breach of warranty. Although punitive damages are usually unavailable for actions sounding in contract, See U.C.C. s 1-106(1), McGrady v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 46 Ill.App.3d 136, 4 Ill.Dec. 705, 360 N.E.2d 818 (1977); Hibschman Pontiac, Inc. v. Batchelor, 340 N.E.2d 377 (Ind.App.1976), this general rule is subject to exceptions. Punitive damages may be awarded, for example, when the breach amounts to an independent tort or is accompanied by fraudulent conduct. See Sullivan, Punitive Damages in the Law of Contract: The Reality and the Illusion of Legal Change, 61 Minn.L.Rev. 207 (1977); 3 Williston on Sales s 25-13 (4th ed. 1974); R. Nordstrom, Sales s 155 (1970).

We do not decide here that an award of punitive damages is appropriate under the Magnuson-Moss Act or that if it were that class members would be entitled to them. We do believe, however, that the possibility of such a recovery is not insubstantial and that this possibility as well as the probable compensatory damages were given insufficient weight by the trial court in the calculus of the fairness of the settlement.

1133 [46] Similarly, we do not hold that the failure of the trial court to hold a preliminary hearing prior to the mailing of the notice of the proposed settlement is inevitably reversible error. Although we believe such a hearing is better practice and the Manual for Complex Litigation recommends it, this court has gone as far as to affirm the approval of a settlement when no evidentiary hearing on its fairness was held before or after the notice to the class. See Patterson v. Stovall, 528 F.2d 108 (7th Cir. 1976). We do hold the record in this case raises so many questions about the adequacy of representation during the settlement negotiations that we cannot say the record clearly supports the trial court's conclusion that the negotiations did not prejudice the interests of the settlement subclass. [FN45]

FN45. Thus, we do not hold that the representation of the class members during the negotiations was in fact inadequate. The record simply does not provide any basis for us to tell. We do note, however, that this is not the first class action in which the State of Illinois has negotiated a settlement without the participation of other counsel representing the class. See Liebman v. J. W. Petersen Coal & Oil Co., 73 F.R.D. 531 (N.D.Ill.1973).

[47] We noted in McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 422 (7th Cir. 1977), that "Per se rules often represent the abdication of judicial discretion rather than its informed exercise." Consequently, this court has declined to adopt Per se rules rigidly confining the trial court's exercise of its discretion in the supervision of class actions. This does not relieve us, however, of our duty to reverse the trial court's judgment when we are convinced that there has been a clear showing of an abuse of that discretion. On the facts of this case, the irregular conduct of the negotiations, the failure of the trial court to examine the irregularities thoroughly, and the evidence in the record indicating that the irregularities may have damaged the interests of the class convince us that such a clear showing has been made. The judgment of the trial court approving the settlement, accordingly, must be reversed.

V. Form of the Settlement

[48][49] Even if we were not constrained to reverse the trial court's approval of the settlement because of the circumstances surrounding its negotiation, we would have to find the settlement defective in another respect. Although the defect may affect only a small portion of those to whom GM's offer would be extended, convenience and expediency cannot justify the disregard of the individual rights of even a fraction of the class. As an appellate court we are without power to rewrite the settlement of the parties. We only have the authority to approve or disapprove the settlement in the form it is presented to us.[FN46]

FN46. Patterson v. Stovall, 528 F.2d 108, 111

(7th Cir. 1976).

[50] The settlement order gives subclass members two options. If the subclass member signs a release he will receive the settlement package and his Magnuson-Moss claim will be dismissed.[FN47] But even if the subclass member refuses to accept GM's offer and refuses to sign the release, the order nevertheless dismisses With prejudice the subclass member's federal claim. [FN48] The 1134 subclass member is presented with an accept-or-else situation: if he does not accept, his federal claim is lost even though he cannot receive the benefits of the settlement package. We have searched the reported decisions in vain for precedent for such a settlement. Finding none and being of the opinion that the dismissal of the action is fundamentally unfair to nonconsenting subclass members, we cannot permit the settlement in its present form to stand.

FN47. The signed release, of course, operates to preclude the accepting subclass member from proceeding on any state claims he may have against GM.

FN48. The relevant paragraphs of the trial court's order provide:
4. The action on behalf of subclass members who accept and receive the settlement shall be and is hereby dismissed as to defendant General Motors with prejudice.
5. The action on behalf of subclass members who do not accept the settlement shall be and is hereby dismissed as to defendant General Motors. Dismissal as to those persons shall be without prejudice solely to their rights to pursue such other remedies as may be otherwise available to them.

GM argues that the form of the settlement is not unusual. It argues that nonconsenting class members are bound by a class settlement even if it is approved over their objections. Moreover, it argues, the very purpose of the 1966 amendments to Rule 23 was to eliminate the spurious class action in which potential class members could obtain the rewards of a favorable suit, but escape being bound by an unfavorable outcome. Thus, GM would have us hold that the dismissal of the Magnuson-Moss claims of nonconsenting subclass members is permissible. Finally, GM goes on to argue that "(t)he settlement does allow class members, even at this late stage, to reject it and pursue state law remedies. To the extent nonconsenting class members are allowed to pursue any future litigation rights by the settlement . . . it is more favorable to them than federal law or policy require." We do not disagree with GM arguments in the abstract. In the context of the particular settlement here which attempts to settle both state and federal claims, however, we must disagree.

[51][52] We consider GM's last argument first. A fundamental characteristic of the federal courts is their limited jurisdiction. In the same pretrial order in which the trial court certified the class, it also expressly declined to take pendent jurisdiction over the state claims presented by the pleadings. Therefore GM's contention that the settlement was more favorable than federal law requires presumably because the trial court could have forced subclass members to accept the settlement package in return for all state and federal claims is without merit. The trial court, having declined jurisdiction over the state claims, was without power to extinguish them. The form of settlement with its unusual use of individual releases was apparently agreed to by GM and the Attorneys General in recognition of the federal court's inability to settle the state claims of subclass members.[FN49] The opt-out provision which permits nonconsenting subclass members to purs state remedies is a necessary consequence of th limited jurisdiction of the federal courts.

FN49. The use of individual releases to effectuate a class action settlement, although unusual, is not unprecedented. See 3-H. Newberg, Class Actions s 5620p (1977).

[53][54][55][56][57] We do not disagree with GM's statement that class members can be bound by a settlement over their objections and that the same is true of objecting named plaintiffs.[FN50] Similarly, we agree that Rule 1135 23 was amended to eliminate the spurious class action. We do not think that it follows, however, that the trial court has the power under Rule 23 to dismiss with prejudice the Magnuson-Moss claims of those subclass members who refuse to accept the settlement package. As to them, the "settlement" is not a settlement; it is merely an offer to settle with a penalty, the dismissal of their federal claims, if they do not accept. We decline to put every subclass member to such an unfair choice.

FN50. In a brief amicus curiae the Congressio sponsors of the Magnuson-Moss Act, Senator Warren G. Magnuson and Representative John E. Moss, also attack the form of the settlement approved by the trial court. The Congressional sponsors maintain that the class members' federal rights under the Act cannot be settled or compromised by a class representative without each class member's individual consent. They would have us hold that to the extent that Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e) authorizes the settlement of class actions over the objections of some class members, it is inapplicable to class actions maintained under the Magnuson-Moss Act. Because we find that the form of settlement in the case at bar was not authorized by the Federal Rules, discussion of this argument is not strictly necessary to our decision. We discuss the issue raised, however, so as not to discourage settlement of the present action after its return to the district court.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide, with exceptions not important here, that they shall "govern the procedure in the United States district courts in All suits of a civil nature . . . ." Fed.R.Civ.P. 1 (emphasis added). Although Congress unquestionably has the power to supersede any federal rule either in its entirety or in particular types of civil actions, we think that the proper rule of construction is that the Congressional intent to repeal a federal rule must be clearly expressed before the courts will find such a repeal. See United States v. Gustin- Bacon Division, Certainseed Products Corp., 426 F.2d 539, 542 (10th Cir.), Cert. denied, 400 U.S. 832, 91 S.Ct. 63, 27 L.Ed.2d 63 (1970). We think neither the language of the Magnuson-Moss Act nor its legislative history clearly manifests Congress' intent to supersede Rule 23(e).

The Act itself refers to Rule 23 twice. In both cases, however, it merely provides that in class actions maintained in the federal courts, Rule 23 will govern whether the named plaintiff is a proper party to represent the class. 15 U.S.C. ss 2310(a)(3), 2310(e). The explicit mention of the applicability of Rule 23 bolsters our conclusion that Rule 23(e) is applicable to class actions maintained under the Act. We do not find the negative pregnant that the Congressional sponsors find. Nor do the Act's provisions encouraging informal dispute resolution necessarily preclude the later settlement of a class action without individual consent by each class member. Indeed, it would be unreasonable to construe an act whose purpose is to encourage settlement to preclude settlement as a practical matter after a class action is commenced.

The legislative history of the Act also fails to evince a Congressional desire to prohibit class action settlements without the consent of every class member. That history instead suggests that Congress had precisely the opposite intention.

Generally speaking, with specific exceptions set forth in the bill, the procedures are to utilize Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For instance, in negotiating the use of any complying informal dispute settlement procedure or any other settlement procedure the representative party would negotiate on behalf of the 100 named plaintiffs and any other class members.

120 Cong.Rec. 40712 (1974) (remarks of Sen. Moss). The legislative history does indicate some dissatisfaction with the Supreme Court's decision in Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 94 S.Ct. 2140, 40 L.Ed.2d 732 (1974), and perhaps indicates Congress' intention to make Rule 23(c)(2) inapplicable in some class actions maintained under the Magnuson-Moss Act. See H.R.Rep.No. 93-1107, 93d Cong., 2d Sess., Reprinted in (1974) U.S.Code Cong. & Ad.News 7702, 7724. No issue about the need for notice, however, has been raised in this appeal so we need not decide this question. We decide simply that the Magnuson-Moss Act does not alter the general rule that the trial court may approve a class action settlement without the consent of every member of the class.

[58] This court on two occasions has noted that the essence of a settlement is a bilateral exchange. "The inherent nature of a compromise is to give up certain rights or benefits in return for others." McDonald v. Chicago Milwaukee Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 429 (7th Cir. 1977). "A settlement by its very nature is an agreement where both sides gain as well as lose something." Patterson v. Stovall, 528 F.2d 108, 115 (7th Cir. 1976). By the terms of the order of the trial court, subclass members who do not sign the release give up their Magnuson-Moss claims and the opportunity to be represented in the class action in return for nothing.[FN51] The right to pursue state remedies is not a benefit, because, as discussed above, the class members possessed state causes of action against GM independently of the federal litigation and the federal court is without power to extinguish those state- created remedies. GM gains the dismissal of each subclass member's federal claim, but surrenders nothing in return.

FN51. The form of settlement in the case at bar is quite different than a settlement in which the defendant's liability is stipulated and class members must make claims against the settlement fund. In the latter case, the cause of action of a class member who fails to file a claim is extinguished by the settlement, and his right to a recovery is lost because he sleeps on his rights. In this case, the cause of action of a subclass member is extinguished and his right to a recovery is lost because he stands on his rights under state law.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The federal claims of individual class members cannot be extinguished with neither adequate consideration in return nor a hearing on the merits of their claims. The dismissal of nonconsenting subclass members' claims would serve solely to benefit GM or those subclass members who accept the settlement. Reconciling such a "settlement" with notions of fair play and justice 1136 is impossible. To permit the trial court to exercise its power to approve class action settlements in this manner would contravene the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. s 2072, by abridging the substantive rights of those who did not accept the settlement offer.

Our objection to the form of settlement in this case is similar to the Second Circuit's objection to "fluid class recovery." See Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 479 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1973), Vacated and remanded on other grounds, 417 U.S. 156, 94 S.Ct. 2140, 40 L.Ed.2d 732 (1974); Van Gemert v. Boeing Co., 553 F.2d 812 (2d Cir. 1977). See also In re Hotel Charges, 500 F.2d 86 (9th Cir. 1974). In Eisen the Second Circuit's rejection of the use of fluid class recovery rested at least in part on the court's concern that that form of recovery would drastically increase the class action defendant's substantive liability. Cf. Beecher v. Able, 575 F.2d 1011, 1016 n. 3 (2d Cir. 1978) (defendant may agree to a settlement which provides for fluid class recovery). In this the converse situation, the form of settlement drastically reduces, in fact extinguishes, the subclass member's substantive cause of action under the Magnuson-Moss Act.[FN52] We hold the trial court's approval of the form of settlement here was unauthorized by the Federal Rules and was inconsistent with the trial court's responsibility to act as the protector of the interests of absentee class members.

> FN52. Although we note the similarity of our reasoning with that of the Eisen opinion, we express no opinion on whether the fluid class recovery technique itself is inconsistent with the Rules Enabling Act.

We cannot hold that the dismissal of the federal claims of those who refuse to accept the settlement offer was insignificant because it merely closed one of the two avenues of recovery against GM. Relegating the nonconsenting subclass member to his state remedies severely reduces his chances of obtaining an adequate recovery on his claim.

The nonconsenting subclass member loses the advantages and economies of having his interes represented in the class action. This tends to defeat the purpose of the class action device to vindicate the interests of the victims of mass production wrongs. "Generally, unless the anticipated recovery exceeds the sum of the measure of the injury and the cost of litigation, multiplied by the probability of a successful decision, the aggrieved person will not seek to vindicate his rights." Note, Judicial Prerequisites to Class Actions in Illinois: Policy, Practice, and the Need for Legislative Reform, 1976 U.Ill.L.F. 1159, 1167. The letters of those subclass members who objected to the settlement proposal indicate the illusory value of the right to pursue their claims individually:

> I will go along with the majority. I can't afford to spend any money on a personal law suit.
> Reguardless (Sic) of the decision of the Court, I will accept it, because I cant (Sic) whip a giant like General Motors, but you do have the powers of your Judgeship and your Court to set things stright (Sic) as they should be.
> This is not to be accepted as notice of withdrawal of Class or Subclass membership.

These letters also refute GM's argument that we can countenance the dismissal of the Magnuson-Moss claim of a nonconsenting subclass member because he was aware of the settlement's terms at the time he made his election to remain in or opt-out of the subclass. The opportunity to opt-out was not a very realistic one. Furthermore, we fail to see that a subclass member's knowledge that he may be treated unfairly excuses committing the injustice.

[59] Even if the subclass member does pursue his state remedies, he is still prejudiced by the dismissal of his Magnuson-Moss claim. "From a consumer protection point of view, the Warranty Act is clearly preferable to the Uniform Commercial Code, which is difficult to apply to consumer sales transactions and is full of pitfalls 1137 for consumers seeking recovery for defective products." Smith, The Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act: Turning the Tables on Caveat Emptor, 13 Cal.W.L.Rev. 391, 429 (1977). In addition to providing a more certain path to recovery, the Magnuson-Moss Act provides the consumer with a more adequate remedy. It provides that the successful plaintiff may also recover the costs of litigation (subject to the court's discreti not to award attorneys' fees). 15 U.S.C. s 2310(d)(2). Thus, the dismissal of the subclass member's Magnuson-Moss claim, leaving him to pursue his state remedies individually, reduces both the probability that the consumer will pursue those remedies and, if he does, the probability that his remedy will be adequate. [FN53]

FN53. The dismissal of the subclass members' claims pursuant to the unusual form of settlement here would also tend to undermine the purpose of the Magnuson-Moss Act. As to nonconsenting subclass members, the purpose of the Act to provide a more certain remedy than is provided under state law would be totally defeated. We think that the settlement provides a unique example of how class action settlements may tend to defeat, rather than promote, the policies and purposes of the laws sought to be enforced. See generally DuVal, The Class Action as an Antitrust Enforcement Device: The Chicago Experience (Part II), 1976 A.B. Foundation Research J. 1273.

[60] GM maintains that we should approve the settlement because it has the "overwhelming" support of the settlement subclass members. GM argues that because only fifteen subclass members or .03% Of the subclass opted out of the action or objected to the settlement after notification of its terms, 99.97% Of the subclass members support the settlement. Although the support of class members is one factor which should be considered in determining the fairness of a settlement, See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.46 at 56, we are not as willing as GM to infer support from silence.

> When a court evaluates the settlement of a class action brought on behalf of individual shareholders or consumers, it should be reluctant to rely heavily on the lack of opposition by alleged class members. Such parties typically do not have the time, money or knowledge to safeguard their interests by presenting evidence or advancing arguments objecting to the settlement.

Factors Considered in Determining the Fairness of a Settlement, 68 Nw.U.L.Rev. 1146, 1153 (1974). Accord, Developments in the Law Class Actions, 89 Harv.L.Rev. 1318, 1567-68 (1976); Cf. Simon, Class Actions Useful Tool or Engine of Destruction, 55 F.R.D. 375, 377-79 (1973) (discussing the tendency of class members not to respond to court communications.[FN54] Acquiescence to a bad deal is something quite different than affirmative support. [FN55] In any event, even if a majority of the subclass did favor the settlement, we do not believe that the preferences of the majority can justify the substantial injustice to the individual rights of the minority that the form of settlement proposed here would work.

FN54. Because the bulk of the class consists of individual consumers, this case is unlike State of West Virginia v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 314 F.Supp. 710, 743 (S.D.N.Y.1970), Aff'd, 440 F.2d 1079 (2d Cir.), Cert. denied, 404 U.S. 871, 92 S.Ct. 81, 30 L.Ed.2d 115 (1971), in which the court stated that support by class members was entitled to "great weight." Many of the class members in Pfizer were large public or private institutions with large stakes in the litigation. Thus, they could be expected to come forward to protect their interests. The Pfizer settlement, however, may not have been in the best interest of those individual consumers represented in the action. See In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 410 F.Supp. 706 (D.Minn.1975) (approving subsequent settlement offering consumers substantially higher payments). See generally Wolfram, The Antibiotics Class Actions, 1976 A.B. Foundation Research J. 251.

FN55. GM's brief indicates that only 26 individuals wrote to the trial court to express their approval of the settlement.

VI. Directions on Remand

[61] In response to a question from the bench at oral argument, GM represented to the court that even if the Settlement of the federal class action is not effectuated, GM 1138 may still seek to extend its Offer to individual members of the class.[FN56] Local Rule 22 appears to require the trial court's approval of any such communication.[FN57] The question thus presented is whether the trial court can approve the communication of the offer, despite our reversal of the court's order approving the settlement.

FN56. Indeed, the agreement between GM and the Attorneys General may obligate GM to extend the offer. Paragraph 11 of the agreement provides:

> while failure by (the district) court to allow General Motors to make such offer to such offerees shall relieve General Motors of the obligation under this Agreement to make such offer, failure by such court to approve settlement of such action . . . shall not relieve General Motors of such obligation if the court has nevertheless allowed General Motors to make such offer in exchange for a Release. . . .

FN57. Local Rule 22 of the Northern District of Illinois, captioned "For Prevention of Potential Abuse of Class Actions," provides:

In every potential and actual class action under Rule 23, FRCivP, all parties thereto and their counsel are hereby forbidden, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, to communicate concerning such action with any potential or actual class member not a formal party to the action without the consent of and approval of the communication by order of the Court. Any such proposed communication shall be presented to the Court in writing with a designation of or description of all addressees and with a motion and proposed order for prior approval by the Court of the proposed communication and proposed addressees. The communications forbidden by this rule, include, but are not limited to, (a) solicitation directly or indirectly of legal representation of potential and actual class members who are not formal parties to the class action; (b) solicitation of fees and expenses and agreements to pay fees and expenses, from potential and actual class members who are not formal parties to the class action; (c) solicitation by formal parties to the class action of requests by class members to opt out in class actions under subparagraph (b)(3) of Rule 23, FRCivP; and (d) communications from counsel or a party which may tend to misrepresent the status, purposes and effects of the action, and of actual or potential Court orders therein, which may create impressions tending, without cause, to reflect adversely on any party, any counsel, the Court, or the administration of justice. The obligations and prohibitions of this rule are not exclusive. All other ethical, legal and equitable obligations are unaffected by this rule.

This rule does not forbid (1) communications between an attorney and his client or a prospective client, who has on the initiative of the client or prospective client consulted with, employed or proposed to employ the attorney, or (2) communications occurring in the regular course of business or in the performance of the duties of a public office or agency (such as the Attorney General) which do not have the effect of soliciting representation by counsel, or misrepresenting the status, purposes or effect of the action and orders therein.

The rule was adopted in accordance with the Manual's recommendation for preventing unauthorized communications with class members, See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.41, and follows almost verbatim the local rule contained in the Manual's appendix. See id., Appendix s 1.41. (Suggested Rule No. 7). See also Dole, The Settlement of Class Actions for Damages, 71 Colum.L.Rev. 971, 993-97 (1971).

Questions concerning the district court's authority to promulgate the rule pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 83 have not been raised by the parties and we do not consider them here. See generally Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.41 (4th ed. 1977 & Cum.Supp.1978). In any event, Rule 23(d), See Weight Watchers, Inc. v. Weight Watchers International, Inc., 455 F.2d 770, 775 (2d Cir. 1972), and the court's inherent power to control the conduct of the litigation before it, See Vernon J. Rockler & Co. v. Minneapolis Shareholders Co., 425 F.Supp. 145, 150 (D.Minn.1977), provide additional sources for the district court's power to control this particular communication with class members.

[62][63][64] We think that the trial court can. GM's offer to settle, if accepted by individual class members, would not amount to a settlement of the class action itself. Individual class members would be free to reject it and continue to have their interests represented in the federal class action. Thus, the communication falls outside the language and the purpose of Rule 23(e).[FN58]1139 See Weight Watchers, Inc. v. Weight Watchers International, Inc., 455 F.2d 770 (2d Cir. 1972) [FN59]; Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 70 F.R.D. 639 (W.D.Pa.), Appeal dismissed, 541 F.2 365 (3d Cir. 1976); Dickerson v. United States Stee Corp., 11 Empl.Prac. Dec. P 10,848 (E.D.Pa.1976) ; Vernon J. Rockler & Co. v. Minneapolis Shareholders Co., 425 F.Supp. 145 (D.Minn.1977); 7A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure s 1797 at 238-39 (1972). But see In re International House of Pancakes Franchise Litigation 1972 Trade Cas. P 73,864 (W.D.Mo.1972); Developments in the Law Class Actions, 89 Harv.L.Rev. 1318, 1548 n.66 (1976). Rule 23(e) requires judicial approval of class action settlements to guard against possible ineffective representation of absentees' interests by the representative parties. This danger does not inhere in offers to settle with individual class members, which the class members are free to accept or reject. Accordingly, a proposed offer to settle with individual class members requires a lesser degree of judicial scrutiny than a proposed settlement of a class action.

FN58. This case does not present the question, and we need not decide, whether Rule 23(e) would be applicable if so many class members accepted GM's offer that the class action could no longer be prosecuted as a class action. Compare Americ Finance System Inc. v. Harlow, 65 F.R.D. 57 576-77 (D.Md.1974), With Vernon J. Rockler & Co. v. Minneapolis Shareholders Co., 425 F.Supp. 145, 150 (D.Minn.1977).

Predicting the number of class members who might accept GM's offer at this time is admittedly speculative, but even if enough named plaintiffs accept the offer to reduce the number of named plaintiffs below the jurisdictional prerequisite, See 15 U.S.C. s 2310(d)(3) & note 2 Supra, the trial court's jurisdiction to decide the class action would remain unaffected. The general rule is that the jurisdiction of the federal court is determined at the time of the filing of the complaint. See Mollan v. Torrance, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 537, 539, 6 L.Ed. 154 (1824) (diversity not defeated when party subsequently becomes a citizen of the same state as his opponent. "It is quite clear, that jurisdiction of the court depends upon the state of things at the time of the action brought, and that after vesting, it cannot be ousted by subsequent events."); St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Co. v. Red Cab Co., 303 U.S. 283, 58 S.Ct. 586, 82 L.Ed. 845 (1938) (court is not ousted of jurisdiction if plaintiff reduces claim to less than jurisdictional amount subsequent to removal from state court); Cf. Rosado v. Wyman, 397 U.S. 397, 402-05, 90 S.Ct. 1207, 25 L.Ed. 442 (1970) (federal court may decide pendent claim even after claim which provided the basis for jurisdiction becomes moot). We see no reason why the general rule should be changed under the Magnuson-Moss Act, particularly when Congress intended that section 110(d) be "construed reasonably to authorize the maintenance of a class action." H.R.Rep.No. 93-1107, 93d Cong., 2d Sess., Reprinted in (1974) U.S.Code Cong. & Ad.News 7702, 7724. The class action can in no sense be regarded as "trivial or insignificant" merely because some of the named plaintiffs have accepted the benefits which the class action has brought forth. Thus, a reduction in the number of named plaintiffs would not preclude the trial court from proceeding to the merits of the class' Magnuson-Moss claims.

Similarly, even if nearly all the offerees accepted GM's settlement offer a rather unlikely possibility since the offerees number approximately 70,000 those who rejected the offer would not be denied the benefit of class adjudication of their claims in federal court. Their claims could be adjudicated along with those of the 66,000 post-April 10, 1977, class members to whom GM will not extend the offer. Therefore, the class will not be decertified for lack of the numerosity required by Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(1). See Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 541 F.2d 365, 370 & n.11 (3d Cir. 1976).

FN59. The court in Weight Watchers expressly reserved the precise question that we decide here. See 455 F.2d 773 n.1. In Weight Watchers the appellant sought review of an order of the trial court permitting communication between the defendant and individual putative class members. Unlike the present case, the pending action had not yet been certified to proceed as a class action. Although the Second Circuit dismissed the appeal from the order for want of appellate jurisdiction, Accord, Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 541 F.2d 365 (3d Cir. 1976), its reasoning is plainly applicable to the present case: "(W)e are unable to perceive any legal theory that would endow a plaintiff . . . with a right to prevent negotiation of settlements between the defendant and other potential members of the class who are of a mind to do this; it is only the settlement of the class action itself without court approval that F.R.Civ.P. 23(e) prohibits." 455 F.2d at 773.

[65][66][67][68][69] The Manual for Complex Litigation provides no standards for judicial approval of communications with individual class members, but we think that the degree of judicial review should be concomitant with the potential for abuse that such communications create. The danger that the offer to settle individual claims would create is the possible misleading of class members about the strength and extent of their claims and the alternatives for obtaining satisfaction of those claims. Thus, an offer to settle should contain sufficient information to enable a class member to determine (1) whether to accept the offer to settle, (2) the effects of settling, and (3) the available avenues for pursuing his claim if he does not settle. In contrast to judicial examination of a proposed class action settlement 1140 which entails consideration of the fairness of the settlement itself, judicial examination of the offer to settle individual claims largely entails only consideration of the accuracy and completeness of the disclosure.[FN60] See, e. g., Vernon J. Rockler & Co. v. Minneapolis Shareholders Co., 425 F.Supp. 145 (D.Minn.1977) (tender offer which met with preliminary approval of SEC contained sufficient information to allow shareholders-potential class members to make an informed and intelligent decision); American Finance System, Inc. v. Harlow, 65 F.R.D. 572, 576 (D.Md.1974) (permitting the defendant to send only "a neutrally worded notice of settlement containing no more than the terms of the proposed compromise, the position of both parties and a copy" of the court's order).[FN61] Whether the offer to settle should contain a statement by the plaintiff-objectors of their opinion of the adequacy of the settlement package in order to make the communication a full and complete disclosure is a matter left to the trial court's discretion. We do believe, however, that the trial court should insist that the notice state that the court's permission to communicate the offer does not indicate any opinion or finding by the trial court that the settlement package is fair or adequate consideration for the release of a subclass member's claim. See American Finance System Inc. v. Harlow, 65 F.R.D. at 576 n.5.

FN60. This is not to say that the amount of the proposed consideration for the settlement is entirely irrelevant. An offer to settle which offers only nominal consideration in return may amount to little more than a request that the class members opt-out of the class. See Manual for Complex Litigation s 1.41 at 27 (condemning unauthorized solicitations to opt-out). Solicitations to opt-out tend to reduce the effectiveness of (b)(3) class actions for no legitimate reason. Offers to settle, however, both provide redress to individual class members and reduce the burden on the courts of trying massive class suits. Determining the difference between the two kinds of communications necessarily requires some judicial examination of the amount of consideration offered by the defendant. Moreover, the amount offered may be so unrealistically low that the consideration itself tends to mislead class members about the strength and extent of their claims. Thus the trial court should examine the amount tendered in settlement before approving the offer to settle. Yet, because each class member may judge for himself whether the amount offered is acceptable, the court need not determine that the amount is "fair, reasonable and adequate." The court need only find that the proposed exchange provides each individual class member with a Meaningful opportunity to obtain satisfaction of his claim. See Rodgers v. United States Steel Corp., 70 F.R.D. 639, 644 (W.D.Pa.), Appeal dismissed, 541 F.2d 365 (3d Cir. 1976).

FN61. See also Chrapliwy v. Uniroyal, Inc., 71 F.R.D. 461, 464 (N.D.Ind.1976) ("although the class action itself may not be voluntarily dismissed without Court approval and scrutiny, an individual claim in a 23(b)(3) action may be settled and dismissed at the class member's own initiative. . . . Because the ability to settle an individual class member's claim could be misused, the Court must be careful to exercise control over the communications of all parties to the suit so that undue influence is prevented"); Dole, The Settlement of Class Actions for Damages, 71 Colum.L.Rev. 971, 995-97 (1971); Developments in the Law Class Actions, 89 Harv.L.Rev. 1318, 1549-50, 1601-04 (1976).

[70] We do not intend to recommend individual settlements as preferable to a fair settlement of the action for all class members. Given the present posture of this litigation, however, we recommend that the district court consider the advisability of permitting the communication if GM decides to extend its offer to individual members of the class. This procedure would provide those class members who wish to settle the benefit of the settlement package already negotiated, minimize further litigation and discovery on issues collateral to the merits of the Magnuson-Moss claim,[FN62] and permit those who desire to prosecute their claims to do so. Our discussion here is not intended to resolve all questions raised by GM's offer, these matters are best left to the 1141 district court for determination in the first instance. [FN63]

FN62. Specifically, because a class action defendant may communicate an offer to settle individual claims without the agreement or consent of the named plaintiffs or their counsel, the court need not permit discovery into the conduct of the settlement negotiations before approving the communication of the offer.

FN63. In particular, we leave to the district court the difficult question of the entitlement of the class counsel to attorneys' fees for their part in encouraging GM to extend the offer. If the district court decides attorneys' fees are appropriate, it must then grapple with the even more difficult questions of the allocation of fees among the attorneys and the allocation of the burden of the fees between GM and the class or among class members themselves. See generally Dole, The Settlement of Class Actions for Damages, 71 Colum.L.Rev. 971, 997-1000 (1971); Developments in the Law Class Actions, 89 Harv.L.Rev. 1318, 1547 n.59 (1976).

VII. Conclusion

Our reversal of the district court's approval of the proposed settlement is a decision that we reach with considerable reluctance. We do not seek to discourage a full settlement of this litigation. More than a year has passed since the Illinois Attorney General presented the settlement agreement to the district court for its consideration. Most likely little has been done since then, aside from some additional discovery, to advance toward a trial on the merits. In the meantime, members of the settlement subclass must be wondering whatever became of the $200 and the mechanical insurance policy each had been promised. Our reluctance to unscramble on review what has been accomplished in the trial court, however, must yield when what has been done not only creates a substantial doubt about whether the interests of the class were adequately represented during the settlement negotiations, but also unjustifiably prejudices the rights of individual members of the class. We believe that approval of what has been done here would establish a precedent inconsistent with the proper functioning of the class action device.

We do not question in the least the good faith of the group of state Attorneys General who negotiated the settlement. We are well aware of the increasingly important role that state Attorneys General have taken in protecting consumers' rights.[FN64] We are also acutely aware of the difficulties which confront litigants attempting to settle consumer class actions based on the Magnuson- Moss Act. The Act by adopting in substantial part, but not preempting state law remedies provides a legal environment conducive to competing state and federal court actions. The myriad lawsuits make settlement desirable, but simultaneously make achieving an acceptable settlement extraordinarily difficult for all concerned. We hold merely that the method of reaching a settlement that GM and the Attorneys General chose warranted greater scrutiny than the trial court permitted and that the form of effecting the settlement permitted by the trial court was unauthorized. Accordingly, the order of the district court is Argued Aug. 11, 1994.

Decided April 17, 1995.

Plaintiffs in multidistrict products liability action against manufacturer of pickup trucks based on alleged defect in fuel tanks on trucks sought approval of proposed class settlement, and the United Stated District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, William H. Yohn, Jr., J., 846 F.Supp. 330, certified settlement class and approved settlement. Objecting members of class appealed, and the Court of Appeals, Becker, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) settlement classes are cognizable in class actions; but (2) courts which use settlement classes in resolution of proposed class action must make formal finding that requisites of rules governing certification of class have been met; (3) failure of district court to make findings required settlement to be set aside; (4) proposed class settlement did not meet adequacy of representation requirement for class certification; (5) district court erred in determining that proposed class settlement was fair, adequate, and reasonable; and (6) district court erred in calculating fee award by applying multiplier to lodestar amount.

Orders vacated, and remanded.

John R. Gibson, Senior Circuit Judge, sitting by designation, concurred in central holding and with judgment and filed opinion.

VIII. OTHER ISSUES; CONCLUSION 823

OPINION OF THE COURT

BECKER, Circuit Judge.

This is an appeal from an order of the District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania approving the settlement of a large class action following its certification of a so-called settlement class. Numerous objectors challenge the fairness and reasonableness of the settlement. The objectors also challenge: (1) the district court's failure to certify the class formally; (2) its denial of discovery concerning the settlement negotiations; (3) the adequacy of the notice as it pertained to the fee request; and (4) the court's approval of the attorneys' fee agreement between the defendants and the attorneys for the class, which the class notice did not fully disclose, thereby (allegedly) depriving the class of the practical opportunity to object to the proposed fee award at the fairness hearing.

The class members are purchasers, over a 15 year period, of mid- and full- sized General Motors pick-up trucks with model C, K, R, or V chassis, which, it was subsequently determined, may have had a design defect in their location of the fuel tank. Objectors claim that the side-saddle tanks rendered the trucks especially vulnerable to fuel fires in side collisions. Many of the class members are individual owners (i.e., own a single truck), while others are "fleet owners," who own a number of trucks. Many of the fleet owners are governmental agencies. As will become apparent, the negotiated settlement treats fleet owners quite differently from individual owners, a fact with serious implications for the fairness of the settlement and the adequacy of representation of the class.

While all the issues we have mentioned are significant (except for the discovery issue), the threshold and most important issue concerns the propriety and prerequisites of settlement classes. The settlement class device is not mentioned in the class action rule, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 . [FN1] Rather *778 it is a judicially crafted procedure. Usually, the request for a settlement class is presented to the court by both plaintiff(s) and defendant(s); having provisionally settled the case before seeking certification, the parties move for simultaneous class certification and settlement approval. Because this process is removed from the normal, adversarial, litigation mode, the class is certified for settlement purposes only, not for litigation. Sometimes, as here, the parties reach a settlement while the case is in litigation posture, only then moving the court, with the defendants' stipulation as to the class's compliance with the Rule 23 requisites, for class certification and settlement approval. In any event, the court disseminates notice of the proposed settlement and fairness hearing at the same time it notifies class members of the pendency of class action determination. Only when the settlement is about to be finally approved does the court formally certify the class, thus binding the interests of its members by the settlement.

FN1. Rule 23 provides, in pertinent part:
(a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. (b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(1) the prosecution of separate actions by or against individual members of the class would create a risk of

(A) inconsistent or varying adjudications with respect to individual members of the class which would establish incompatible standards of conduct for the party opposing the class, or

(B) adjudications with respect to individual members of the class which would as a practical matter be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the adjudications or substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests; or

(2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action. (c) Determination by Order Whether Class Action to be Maintained; Notice; Judgment; Actions Conducted Partially as Class Actions.

(1) As soon as practicable after the commencement of an action brought as a class action, the court shall determine by order whether it is to be so maintained. An order under this subdivision may be conditional, and may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits....

(e) Dismissal or Compromise. A class action shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court, and notice of the proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given to all members of the class in such manner as the court directs.

The first Manual for Complex Litigation [hereinafter MCL] strongly disapproved of settlement classes. Nevertheless, courts have increasingly used the device in recent years, and subsequent manuals (MCL 2d and MCL 3d (in draft)) have relented, endorsing settlement classes under carefully controlled circumstances, but continuing to warn of the potential for abuse. This increased use of settlement classes has proven extremely valuable for disposing of major and complex national and international class actions in a variety of substantive areas ranging from toxic torts (Agent Orange) and medical devices (Dalkon Shield, breast implant), to antitrust cases (the beef or cardboard container industries). But their use has not been problem-free, provoking a barrage of criticism that the device is a vehicle for collusive settlements that primarily serve the interests of defendants--by granting expansive protection from law suits--and of plaintiffs' counsel--by generating large fees gladly paid by defendants as a quid pro quo for finally disposing of many troublesome claims.

After reflection upon these concerns, we conclude that Rule 23 permits courts to achieve the significant benefits created by settlement classes so long as these courts abide by all of the fundaments of the Rule. Settlement classes must satisfy the Rule 23(a) requirements of numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation, as well as the relevant 23(b) requirements, usually (as in this case) the (b)(3) superiority and predominance standards. We also hold that settlement class status (on which settlement approval depends) should not be sustained unless the record establishes, by findings of the district judge, that the same requisites of the Rule are satisfied. Additionally, we hold that a finding that the settlement was fair and reasonable does not serve as a surrogate for the class findings, and also that there is no lower standard for the certification of settlement classes than there is for litigation classes. But so long as the four requirements of 23(a) and the appropriate requirement(s) of 23(b) are met, a court may legitimately certify the class under the Rule.

In this case the district judge made no Rule 23 findings, and significant questions remain as to whether the class could have met the requisites of the rule had the district court applied them. Principally at issue is adequacy of representation. In particular, the objectors contend that there is a conflict between the positions of individual owners on the one hand and fleet owners on the other hand. The disparity in settlement benefits enjoyed by these different groups, objectors argue, creates an intra-class conflict that precludes the finding of adequacy of representation required by the rule. Moreover, they submit, the large number of different defenses available under the laws of the several states involved also creates a potentially serious commonality and typicality problem.

779 We conclude that the objectors' adequacy of representation claim probably has merit. At all events, the district court did not properly evaluate the differential impact of the settlement on individual fleet owners, and should determine on remand whether the conflicts among class members are so great as to preclude certification (or at least sufficient to require the creation of sub-classes). The district court should also focus on the commonality and typicality problems, to determine whether the national scope of the class litigation and the plethora of defenses available in different jurisdictions prevent these requirements from being met.

For the reasons that follow at some length, we conclude that, although settlement classes are valid generally, this settlement class was not properly certified. We also conclude that the settlement is not fair and adequate; more precisely, we hold that the district court abused its discretion in determining that it was, primarily because the district court erred in accepting plaintiffs' unreasonably high estimate of the settlement's worth, in over-estimating the risk of maintaining class status and of establishing liability and damages, and in misinterpreting the reaction of the class. Finally, although our disposition of the foregoing issues makes it unnecessary for us to pass on the approval of the attorneys' fees, we clarify the governing standards for these fee awards to guide the district court on remand. We therefore reverse the challenged order of the district court and remand for further proceedings.

I. FACTS, PROCEDURAL HISTORY, AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

A. General Background

Between 1973 and 1987, General Motors sold over 6.3 million C/K pickup trucks with side-mounted fuel tanks. [FN2] In late October 1992, after the public announcement of previously undisclosed information regarding the safety of the fuel tank placement in GM pickups, consumer class action lawsuits were filed in several jurisdictions. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration ("NHTSA") commenced an investigation of the alleged defects relating to side-impact fires on these trucks, and consumer advocacy groups sought a recall. [FN3]

FN2. The class includes both mid-and full-size trucks with chassis model types C, K, R, or V.

FN3. See note 5 infra.

On November 5, 1992, plaintiffs in one action sought to enjoin allegedly misleading communications to putative class members and filed an application for expedited discovery. On November 8 and 9, 1992, GM filed notices of removal of this and other state court actions, and a motion with the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("MDL Panel") to transfer and consolidate all actions for pretrial purposes under 28 U.S.C. § 1407 (1993). The MDL Panel transferred all related actions to the District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on February 26, 1993. Ultimately, dozens of actions were filed in various courts throughout the United States on behalf of consumer classes; the federal cases were dismissed, remanded to state court, or transferred to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

On March 5, 1993, pursuant to an order of the (transferee) District Court, plaintiffs filed a Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint seeking equitable relief and damages that consolidated all of the actions under the MDL caption and listed nearly 300 representative plaintiffs, including both individual and fleet owners. The Complaint alleged violations of two federal statutes, the Magnuson-Moss Act and the Lanham Trademark Act; a variety of common law and statutory claims, including negligence, fraud, breach of written and implied warranty; and violations of various state consumer protection statutes. The complaint sought, inter alia, an order remedying the alleged abnormally high incidence of fuel-fed fires following side-impact collisions by requiring GM to recall the trucks or pay for their repair. GM answered this complaint, denying all substantive allegations and raising numerous affirmative defenses.

Also on March 5, 1993, plaintiffs filed a consolidated motion for nationwide class certification. The court set July 19, 1993, the hearing date on this motion. On March 30, 1993, GM moved to stay this litigation pending780 the outcome of the NHTSA investigation, initiated in December 1992. This motion was denied on June 4, 1993. Pursuant to a scheduling order issued by the court, discovery during the spring of 1993 focused on class certification issues. During this discovery, GM produced more than 100,000 pages of documents from prior C/K pickup product liability lawsuits and GM's responses to NHTSA information requests. Plaintiffs also had access to the depositions and trial testimony in other cases involving the fuel tank design of C/K pickups, including the jury trial in Moseley v. GM, No. 90-V-6276 (Fulton County, Ga.). Plaintiffs consulted with their own experts to evaluate this information. In addition, depositions were taken of some GM personnel and certain named plaintiffs. Discovery on the merits of the case had been postponed until autumn 1993. Nothing in the record indicates that, as of the spring of 1993, counsel had identified expert witnesses for trial or deposed GM's engineering experts.

In the midst of these proceedings, the parties began exploring a possible settlement of the litigation. These discussions intensified in June 1993, at which time face-to-face and telephonic meetings, both between the parties and among plaintiffs' counsel, took place on virtually a daily basis. On July 19, 1993, the parties reached a settlement in principle, reduced the terms to writing, and informed the district court. [FN4] For purposes of settlement only and without prejudice to GM's substantial opposition to class certification, the named parties agreed to the certification of a settlement class of C/K pickup owners, described below.

FN4. GM reached a substantially identical agreement with counsel representing a class of C/K pickup truck purchasers who are Texas residents in Dollar v. General Motors, No. 92-1089 (71st Judicial District, Marshall, Tex.). That settlement was approved in November 1993, but was overturned on appeal on June 22, 1994. See Bloyed v. General Motors Corp., 881 S.W.2d 422 (Tex.Ct.App.1994), discussed infra at Part VI.I. The Texas Supreme Court granted GM's Application for Writ of Error on February 16, 1995 and set the case for oral argument on March 21, 1995.

B. The Settlement Agreement

In general terms, the settlement agreement provides for members of the settlement class to receive $1,000 coupons redeemable toward the purchase of any new GMC Truck or Chevrolet light duty truck. Settlement certificates are transferable with the vehicle. They are redeemable by the then current owner of the 1973-86 C/K and 1987-91 R/V light duty pickup trucks or chassis cabs at any authorized Chevrolet or GMC Truck dealer for a fifteen month period. Settlement class members do not have to trade in their current vehicle to use the certificate, and the certificates can be used in conjunction with GM and GMAC incentive programs.

The class members can freely transfer the certificate to an immediate family member who resides with the class member. Class members can also transfer the $1000 certificate to a family member who does not reside with the class member by designating the transferee family member within sixty days, running from the date that GM mailed notice of the proposed settlement. Additionally, the $1000 certificate can be transferred with the title to the settlement class vehicle, that is, to a third party who purchases the class member's vehicle.

In lieu of a $1,000 certificate, and without transferring title to the settlement class vehicle, a class member may instead request that a nontransferable $500 certificate (counterintuitively known as the "transfer certificate") be issued to any third party except a GMC dealer or its affiliates. This $500 certificate is redeemable with the purchase of a new C or K series GMC or Chevrolet full-size pickup truck or its replacement model. The $500 certificate cannot be used in conjunction with any GMC or GMAC marketing incentive, must be used on the more expensive full size models, and is subject to the same fifteen-month redemption period as the $1,000 certificates. The class member must make a notarized request to GM, and GM will mail the $500 certificate to the transferee within 14 days of its receipt of the request for transfer.

Under the terms of the agreement, the approval of the settlement and corresponding entry of final judgment would have no effect 781 upon any accrued or future claims for personal injury or death, nor would it affect the rights of settlement class members to participate in any future remedial action that might be required under the National Traffic and Motor Safety Act of 1966, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1381 et seq. (1995). [FN5]

FN5. After oral argument in this case, United States Transportation Secretary Federico Pena announced that NHTSA had settled the proceeding involving the C/K trucks at issue here without ordering a recall, finding an acceptable retrofit, or giving any compensation to the truck owners. The settlement provided that GM would contribute $51 million to general safety programs unrelated to the trucks' alleged problems. See Statement by Secretary Federico Pena on Dec. 2, 1994, Settlement Regarding DOT Investigation of General Motors C/K Pickup Trucks.

The settlement agreement before us also provides that plaintiffs' counsel would apply to the district court for an award of reasonable attorneys' fees and reimbursement of expenses, both to be paid by GM. GM reserved the right to object to any fees or expenses it deemed to be excessive and to appeal any amount awarded by the court over its objection. Plaintiffs' counsel filed their fee applications on or about September 15, 1993; the fee applications remained in the files of the clerk of the district court where class members could theoretically review them, but no information about attorneys' fees other than the fact that a fee application would be made was included in the class notice. GM did not file any formal objections to the fee applications.

C. Approval of the Settlement and Fees

The district court reviewed the substantive terms of the settlement on July 12, 1993 and made the preliminary determination, in Pretrial Order No. 7, entered July 20, 1993, that the proposed settlement appeared reasonable. Also in Pretrial Order No. 7, the court "provisionally" certified the class of GM truck owners as a settlement class (i.e., for settlement purposes only) pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3); however, the court did not make findings that the requisites of Rule 23(a) or 23(b) were satisfied. The court approved the form of and dissemination to putative class members of the combined notice of the pendency of the action and the proposed settlement pursuant to Rules 23(c)(2) and 23(e). The class definition included all persons and entities who purchased in the United States (except for residents of the State of Texas) and were owners as of July 19, 1993 of (1) a 1973-1986 model year General Motors full-size pickup truck or chassis cab of the "C" or "K" series; or (2) a 1987-1991 model year General Motors full-size pickup truck or chassis cab of the "R" or "V" series. On August 20 and 21, 1993, GM mailed the notice to all registered owners of class vehicles (including nearly 5.7 million vehicles), and it published the full text of the notice in USA Today and The Philadelphia Inquirer on August 27, 1993.

In response to the notice, over 5,200 truck owners elected to opt out of the class, and approximately 6,500 truck owners (a number which includes fleet owners who own as many as 1,000 vehicles each) objected to the settlement. The objectors' filings contained many overlapping claims. The recurring contentions were that: (1) the settlement does nothing to fix the trucks; (2) even with the $1,000 coupon, many owners would be unable to purchase a new truck given their high cost (with list prices from $11,000 to $33,000); (3) state and local government fleet owners would not be able to redeem all of their certificates (by buying new vehicles) within the short redemption period (fifteen months), and they might be further restricted from using the coupons by competitive bidding procurement rules; and (4) GM and class counsel colluded in a manner that compromised the interests of the class and that would preclude a finding of adequate representation. GM rejoined with voluminous material emphasizing the substantial risks plaintiffs faced not only in maintaining class treatment but also in establishing liability and damages.

A settlement fairness hearing was held on October 26, 1993 during which the objectors who submitted written briefs were permitted to speak. The district court approved the settlement in a Memorandum and Order dated December 16, 1993. In re General Motors Corp., 846 F.Supp. 330 (E.D.Pa.1993). In that order, the court confirmed its Pretrial Order No. 7, which had provisionally certified the settlement class. Although the court still made no 782 findings that the requisites of Rules 23(a) and (b) were met, it did set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law to justify its approval of the settlement as fair, reasonable and adequate based on the nine-factor test established in Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153 (3d Cir.1975).

The court found that the total economic value of the settlement was "between $1.98 billion and $2.18 billion." 846 F.Supp. at 336. Against the prospect of settlement, the court weighed each of the nine Girsh factors. It concluded that "the complexity, expense and likely duration of the litigation would be mammoth." Id. at 334. Although the settlement was reached at an early stage of the litigation, just four months after the consolidated complaint was filed, the court found that this did not weigh against the settlement because the court believed that the parties had access to "extensive discovery on the same issues of product defect that was previously conducted in the various personal injury actions that have been litigated throughout the country." Id.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The district court also found that the reaction of class members to the proposed settlement supported approval citing "the infinitesimal number of truck owners who have either objected to or sought exclusion from the settlement." Id.

Noting the divided results of the personal-injury jury trials and the numerous defenses GM could raise, the court found that "a substantial risk in establishing liability" weighed in favor of approval. Id. at 336. Similarly, the court found that "[p]erhaps the greatest weakness in the plaintiffs' case is the lack of proof of economic damages." Id.. The court also addressed the objection that the settlement did not provide for a recall or a "fix," explaining that "no objector that complains that the settlement fails to retrofit the alleged defect has been able to come forth with a practical and safe modification for the trucks that has been designed, evaluated and tested." Id. at 342.

On December 20, 1993, four days after approving the settlement, the district court also approved the class counsel's request for attorneys' fees in the amount of $9.5 million. Although the court did not believe at that time that it needed to review that fee award, to which GM had agreed, it subsequently, on February 2, 1994, issued an "amplified order" evaluating the award in greater detail. The court determined that the fee request was reasonable under both a lodestar analysis and the percentage-of-recovery method (see Part VII infra).

D. The NHTSA Investigation

While this case was under submission to this court, the NHTSA investigation continued. Over the objections of some of NHTSA's engineers who had determined that the trucks complied with relevant safety standards, on October 17, 1994, Secretary of Transportation Federico Pena announced the agency's finding that the trucks contained a safety defect creating an increased and unreasonable risk of side-impact fires. The determination was based on the allegedly enhanced risk of side-impact fires relative to Ford pickups that resulted from GM's placement of the fuel tanks outside the frame rails. GM challenged the propriety of the public meeting NHTSA planned to hold and NHTSA's authority to order a recall of vehicles that met all relevant safety standards. On December 2, 1994, Secretary Pena announced the settlement of the C/K pickup investigation wherein GM contributed over $51 million for a variety of safety programs unrelated to the pickups, and admitted no liability. II. ANATOMY OF THE CLASS CLAIMS

The consolidated class complaint filed on behalf of the nationwide class of GM truck owners (except those from Texas) alleged violations of the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 2310(d)(1) (1995); and the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1125(a) (1995); and a variety of state common law and statutory claims, including strict liability in tort for selling a dangerously defective product; negligent design; negligent misrepresentation; fraud (based on defendants' alleged course of conduct in the advertising, promotion, and sale of the GM pickups intentionally concealing material facts about a dangerous latent defect); breach of warranty, including written (from vehicle warranties), express (from public representations by GM), implied (warranties of merchantability) and statutory warranties; and finally violations of various state consumer protection statutes. The case did not involve any pickup trucks that had actually experienced fuel tank fires caused by side- impact collisions. Moreover, personal injury or death claims were expressly omitted from the complaint as well as from the settlement--class members remain free to pursue such claims if any should accrue.

The aggregated treatment of these claims was potentially complicated by the differences in underlying facts. The trucks at issue had nineteen different fuel tank systems; proof might thus be required for each design on relevant issues. Furthermore, unlike the federal securities laws where there is a presumption of reliance on a material misrepresentation, see Basic v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 108 S.Ct. 978, 99 L.Ed.2d 194 (1988), plaintiffs would likely have had to prove individual reliance on the allegedly misleading materials under the various state laws applicable to most of these claims. More fundamentally, the complaint itself invoked state laws that implicated different legal standards on, for example, the warranty claims (the laws contain various privity requirements or the need for an allegedly defective product to fail in service before a warranty claim can be sustained), negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and strict products liability. The state laws implicated by the filing of the nationwide class action also differed on such issues as statutes of limitations; whether pickup trucks are "consumer products;" the application of durational limits on implied warranties; the requirement of reliance to recover for fraud, misrepresentation, and warranty claims; whether intent is a required element of negligent misrepresentation claims; whether comparative fault is a defense; and the relevant test for plaintiffs' design defect claims.

III. Rule 23--Relevant Fundamental Principles

[2] Before turning to the precise questions at issue on this appeal, it is important that we consider the several basic purposes served by class actions in our contemporary, complex litigation-laden legal system. One of the paramount values in this system is efficiency. Class certification enables courts to treat common claims together, obviating the need for repeated adjudications of the same issues. See 1 HERBERT NEWBERG & ALBA CONTE, NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 1.06 (3d Ed.1992); General Tel. Co. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 149, 102 S.Ct. 2364, 2366, 72 L.Ed.2d 740 (1982).

The Supreme Court has articulated other important objectives served by class actions. Class actions achieve "the protection of the defendant from inconsistent obligations, the protection of the interests of absentees, the provision of a convenient and economical means for disposing of similar lawsuits, and 784 the facilitation of the spreading of litigation costs among numerous litigants with similar claims." United States Parole Comm'n v. Geraghty, 445 U.S. 388, 402-03, 100 S.Ct. 1202, 1211-12, 63 L.Ed.2d 479 (1980). The Court has explained the significance of the last goal as > an evolutionary response to the existence of injuries unremedied by the regulatory action of government. Where it is not economically feasible to obtain relief within the traditional framework of a multiplicity of small individual suits for damages, aggrieved persons may be without any effective redress unless they may employ the class-action device.

Deposit Guaranty Nat'l Bank v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 339, 100 S.Ct. 1166, 1174, 63 L.Ed.2d 427 (1980); see also 1 NEWBERG & CONTE § 1.06K at 1-19. Cost spreading can also enhance the means for private attorney general enforcement and the resulting deterrence of wrongdoing. Id. § 1.06K at 1-18 to 1-20.

[3] The law favors settlement, particularly in class actions and other complex cases where substantial judicial resources can be conserved by avoiding formal litigation. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.41, at 11-85 (citing cases); Cotton v. Hinton, 559 F.2d 1326, 1331 (5th Cir.1977); Van Bronkhorst v. Safeco Corp., 529 F.2d 943, 950 (9th Cir.1976). The parties may also gain significantly from avoiding the costs and risks of a lengthy and complex trial. See First Commodity Corp. of Boston Customer Accts. Litig., 119 F.R.D. 301, 306-07 (D.Mass.1987). These economic gains multiply when settlement also avoids the costs of litigating class status--often a complex litigation within itself. Furthermore, a settlement may represent the best method of distributing damage awards to injured plaintiffs, especially where litigation would delay and consume the available resources and where piecemeal settlement could result, in the Rule 23(b)(1)(B) limited fund context, in a sub-optimal distribution of the damage awards. See, e.g., In re Dennis Greenman Sec. Litig., 829 F.2d 1539, 1542 (11th Cir.1987).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[4] Thus, courts should favor the use of devices that tend to foster negotiated solutions to these actions. Prima facie, this would include settlement classes. True, it was once thought that mass tort actions were ordinarily not appropriate for class treatment, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 23 Advisory Committee's note, subdivision (b)(3), 39 F.R.D. 69, 103 (1966). It has also been argued that mass tort cases strain the boundaries of Rule 23. See Bruce H. Nielson, Was the 1966 Advisory Committee Right?: Suggested Revisions of Rule 23 to Allow More Frequent Use of Class Actions in Mass Tort Litigation, 25 Harv.J.Legis. 461 (1988) (suggesting necessity of rule revisions to accommodate class action treatment of mass torts). However, the applicability of Rule 23 to mass tort cases has become commonplace, and the use of the class action device, specifically the (b)(3) class, has created some of the largest and most innovative settlements in these contexts. Prominent examples include the recent $4.2 billion settlement of the breast implant litigation. See In re Silicone Gel Breast Implant Prods. Liab. Litig., 1994 WL 578353 (N.D.Ala.1994).

Despite the potential benefits of class actions, there remains an overarching concern--that absentees' interests are being resolved and quite possibly bound by the operation of res judicata even though most of the plaintiffs are not the real parties to the suit. The protection of the absentees' due process rights depends in part on the extent the named plaintiffs are adequately interested to monitor the attorneys (who are, of course, presumed motivated to achieve maximum results by the prospect of substantial fees), and also on the extent that the class representatives have interests that are sufficiently aligned with the absentees to assure that the monitoring serves the interests of the class as a whole. In addition, the court plays the important role of protector of the absentees' interests, in a sort of fiduciary capacity, by approving appropriate representative plaintiffs and class counsel.

Another problem is that class actions create the opportunity for a kind of legalized blackmail: a greedy and unscrupulous plaintiff might use the threat of a large class action, which can be costly to the defendant, to extract a settlement far in excess of the *785 individual claims' actual worth. Because absentees are not parties to the action in any real sense, and probably would not have brought their claims individually, see Mars Steel v. Continental Illinois Nat'l Bank & Trust, 834 F.2d 677, 678 (7th Cir.1987), attorneys or plaintiffs can abuse the suit nominally brought in the absentees' names. As one court has noted, "[t]his fundamental departure from the traditional pattern in Anglo-American litigation generates a host of problems...." Id.

[5][6][7] The drafters designed the procedural requirements of Rule 23, especially the requisites of subsection (a), so that the court can assure, to the greatest extent possible, that the actions are prosecuted on behalf of the actual class members in a way that makes it fair to bind their interests. The rule thus represents a measured response to the issues of how the due process rights of absentee interests can be protected and how absentees' represented status can be reconciled with a litigation system premised on traditional bipolar litigation. Moreover, the requirement in Rule 23(c) that the court decide certification motions "as soon as practicable," see note 1 supra, aims to reduce even further the possibility that a party could use the ill-founded threat of a class action to control negotiations or the possibility that absentees' interests could be unfairly bound. Hence, the procedural formalities of certification are important even if the case appears to be headed for settlement rather than litigation.

[8] This expanded role of the court in class actions (relative to conventional bipolar litigation) continues even after certification. While the parties in a normal suit do not ordinarily require a judge's approval to settle the action, class action parties do. Rule 23(e) provides: "A class action shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court, and notice of the proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given to all members of the class in such manner as the court directs." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e). Courts and commentators have interpreted this rule to require courts to "independently and objectively analyze the evidence and circumstances before it in order to determine whether the settlement is in the best interest of those whose claims will be extinguished." 2 Newberg & Conte § 11.41, at 11-88 to 11-89. "Under Rule 23(e) the district court acts as a fiduciary who must serve as a guardian of the rights of absent class members.... [T]he court cannot accept a settlement that the proponents have not shown to be fair, reasonable and adequate." Grunin v. International House of Pancakes, 513 F.2d 114, 123 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 864, 96 S.Ct. 124, 46 L.Ed.2d 93 (1975); Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d 426, 433 (2d Cir.1983); Sala v. National RR Passenger Corp., 721 F.Supp. 80 (E.D.Pa.1989); see also Piambino v. Bailey, 610 F.2d 1306 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1011, 101 S.Ct. 568, 66 L.Ed.2d 469 (1980).

[9] Before sending notice of the settlement to the class, the court will usually approve the settlement preliminarily. This preliminary determination establishes an initial presumption of fairness when the court finds that: (1) the negotiations occurred at arm's length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.41, at 11-9"

[10][11] As noted above, this court has adopted a nine-factor test to help district courts structure their final decisions to approve settlements as fair, reasonable, and adequate as required by Rule 23(e). See Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir.1975). Those factors are: (1) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining a class action; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement in light of the best recovery; and (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement in light of all the attendant risks of litigation. Id. The proponents of the settlement bear the burden of proving that these factors weigh in favor of approval. See GM Interchange, 594 F.2d 1106, 1126 n. 30 (7th Cir. *786 1979); Holden v. Burlington Northern, Inc., 665 F.Supp. 1398, 1407 (D.Minn.1987); MCL 2d § 30.44. The findings required by the Girsh test are factual, see Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d at 434; Plummer v. Chemical Bank, 668 F.2d 654, 659 (2d Cir.1982), which will be upheld unless they are clearly erroneous, Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 73 (2d Cir.1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 818, 104 S.Ct. 77, 78 L.Ed.2d 89 (1983); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 643 F.2d 195, 207 (5th Cir.1981).

IV. SETTLEMENT CLASSES

This appeal challenges (among other things) the district court's class certification order. Before we may address the propriety of the court's order we must first decide whether it is ever proper to certify a class for settlement purposes only. We therefore begin our analysis with a closer look at how settlement classes operate.

A. Nature of the Device

As we have explained above, a settlement class is a device whereby the court postpones the formal certification procedure until the parties have successfully negotiated a settlement, thus allowing a defendant to explore settlement without conceding any of its arguments against certification. Despite the directive of Rule 23(c) that courts certify actions as soon as practicable, when a class action has been filed before the settlement has been arrived at courts will often delay the certification determination during the pendency of settlement discussions. If the settlement negotiations succeed, courts will certify the class for settlement purposes only and send a combined notice of class pendency and settlements to the class members. Thus, by the time the court considers certification, the defendant has essentially stipulated to the existence of the class requirements since it now has an interest in binding an entire class with its proffered settlement.

By specifying certification for settlement purposes only, however, the court preserves the defendant's ability to contest certification should the settlement fall apart. Because the court indulges the assumption of the class's existence only until a settlement is reached or the parties abandon the negotiations, settlement classes are also sometimes referred to as temporary or provisional classes. Sometimes the specification may also be seen as assuming that the class may only meet the requirements of Rule 23 if the action is settled, and that certification may in fact be inappropriate if the action will actually be litigated. In any event, notwithstanding that there is an absence of clear textual authorization for settlement classes, many courts have indulged the stipulations of parties by establishing temporary classes for settlement purposes only. See, e.g., Mars Steel v. Continental Illinois Nat'l Bank & Trust, 834 F.2d 677 (7th Cir.1987); Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61 (2d Cir.1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 818, 104 S.Ct. 77, 78 L.Ed.2d 89 (1983); In re A.H. Robins Co., 880 F.2d 709, 738-39 (4th Cir.1989); *In re Dennis Greenman Sec. There has been a great deal of commentary, both critical [FN7] and laudatory, [FN8] of the use of these "settlement classes." And some courts have criticized these accommodations 787 of the negotiating parties and expressed their ambivalence while continuing nonetheless to use them. See, e.g., Mars Steel, 834 F.2d 677 (describing considerable dangers of settlement classes but ultimately upholding the settlement). Before we interpret the dictates of Rule 23 with respect to settlement classes, it will be useful to survey both the criticism and the praise.

B. Perceived Problems of Settlement Classes

[12] A number of commentators, particularly the authors of the first edition of the Manual for Complex Litigation, have voiced serious concerns about settlement classes. These criticisms have focused on the fact that Rule 23, a carefully constructed scheme intended to protect the rights of absentees that necessarily relies on active judicial participation to protect those interests, does not authorize a separate category of class certification that would permit a dilution of or dispense with the subsection (a) criteria. MCL § 1.46; see also Mars Steel 834 F.2d at 680; In re Baldwin United, Corp. 105 F.R.D. 475 (S.D.N.Y.1984). Other criticisms focus on the potential prejudice to the parties and the institutional threat posed to the court. See, e.g., Coffee, supra note 7.

Rule 23 does not in terms authorize the deferral of class certification pending settlement discussions. Indeed, Rule 23(c) provides: "As soon as practicable after the commencement of an action brought as a class action, the court shall determine by order whether it is to be so maintained." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a) (emphasis supplied). Deliberately delaying a class certification determination so that settlement discussions can proceed clearly does not represent an effort to resolve the issue "as soon as practicable." As Judge Posner has noted, "[i]t is hard to see why the propriety of maintaining the suit as a class action could not 'practicably' have been determined much earlier. And, common though the practice of deferring class certification while settlement negotiations are going on is, it not only jostles uneasily with the language of Rule 23(c)(1) but also creates practical problems." Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 680.

The danger here is that the court cannot properly discharge its duty to protect the interests of the absentees during the disposition of the action. Because the class has not yet been defined, the court lacks the information necessary to determine the identity of the absentees and the likely extent of liability, damages, and expenses of preparing for trial. See MCL 2d § 30.45, at 243 ("No one may know how many members are in the class, how large their potential claims are, what the strengths and weaknesses of the parties' positions are, or how much the class will benefit under the settlement."); In re Baldwin United, 105 F.R.D. at 481. Moreover, the court performs its role as supervisor/protector without the benefit of a full adversarial briefing on the certification issues. With less information about the class, the judge cannot as effectively monitor for collusion, individual settlements, buy-offs (where some individuals use the class action device to benefit themselves at the expense of absentees), and other abuses. See In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 174. For example, if the court fails to define the class before settlement negotiations commence, then during the settlement approval phase the judge will have greater difficulty detecting whether the parties improperly manipulated the scope of the class in order to buy the defendant's acquiescence.

Settlement classes also make it more difficult for a court to evaluate the settlement by depriving the judge of the customary structural devices of Rule 23 and the presumptions of propriety that they generate. Ordinarily, a court relies on class status, particularly the adequacy of representation required to maintain it, to infer that the settlement was the product of arm's length negotiations. Cf. Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 74 (2d Cir.1983) (noting protracted nature of negotiations in approving settlement); City of Detroit v. Grinnell, 495 F.2d 448, 463 (2d Cir.1974) (same); In re Baldwin-United, 105 F.R.D. at 482 (same). Where the court has not yet certified a class 788 or named its representative or counsel, this assumption is questionable.

In effect, settlement classes can, depending how they are used, evade the processes intended to protect the rights of absentees. Indeed, the draft of the MCL (Third), although considerably more receptive to settlement classes than the earlier editions of the Manual, explains that "[t]he problem presented by these requests is not the lack of sufficient information and scrutiny, but rather the possibility that fiduciary responsibilities of class counsel or class representatives may have been compromised." MCL (Third) (draft) at 193. Even some courts successfully using these devices to achieve settlements apparently recognize these dangers since they certify these actions more cautiously than ordinary classes. See, e.g., Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 33 (3d Cir.1971) (court must be doubly careful where negotiation occurs before certification and designation of a class counsel); In re Beef Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d 167, 176-77 (5th Cir.1979) (examining though ultimately rejecting the charge that collusion precluded the certification of the settlement class); Simer v. Rios, 661 F.2d 655, 664-66 (7th Cir.1981) (requiring a higher showing of fairness where settlement negotiated prior to certification); Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 69 (2d Cir.1982) (judge made findings about discovery and counsel).

In particular, settlement classes create especially lucrative opportunities for putative class attorneys to generate fees for themselves without any effective monitoring by class members who have not yet been apprised of the pendency of the action. Moreover, because the court does not appoint a class counsel until the case is certified, attorneys jockeying for position might attempt to cut a deal with the defendants by underselling the plaintiffs' claims relative to other attorneys. [FN9] Unauthorized settlement negotiations occurring before the certification determination thus "create the possibility of negotiation from a position of weakness by the attorney who purports to represent the class." GM Interchange Litig., 594 F.2d 1106, 1125 (7th Cir.1979). Pre-certification negotiations also hamper a court's ability to review the true value of the settlement or the legal services after the fact. See supra at 787. In addition, unauthorized negotiations also result in denying other plaintiffs' counsel information that is necessary for them to make an effective evaluation of the fairness of any settlement that results. See GM Interchange Litig., 594 F.2d at 1125.

> FN9. These sorts of dynamics have led some critics to accuse class action attorneys of ethical violations. While we emphasize that counsel here committed no such violations, we do not preclude the possibility that these violations could occur.

Framed as an issue of Rule 23(a) requisites, these considerations implicate adequacy of representation concerns: "[a]rguments in opposition to settlement classes have merit when they are addressed to the problem of inadequate representation or possible collusion among the named plaintiffs and some or all defendants." In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. at 480. Another court has warned that the "danger of a premature, even a collusive, settlement [is] increased when as in this case the status of the action as a class action is not determined until a settlement has been negotiated, with all the momentum that a settlement agreement generates...." Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 680; see also Malchman, 706 F.2d at 433 (recognizing special potential for collusion or undue pressure by defendants in settlement negotiations); Weinberger, 698 F.2d at 73 (requiring a higher showing of fairness to accommodate greater potential for improper settlement). Settlement classes, which constitute ad hoc adjustments to the carefully designed class action framework constructed by Rule 23, lack the regulatory mechanisms that ordinarily check this improper behavior: "There is in fact little or no individual client consultation and no judicial oversight of a hidden process of wheeling and dealing to maximize overall recovery and fees for hundreds and thousands of massed cases." In re Joint Eastern & Southern District Asbestos Litig., 129 B.R. 710, 802 (E. & S.D.N.Y.1991) (discussing the ramifications of class treatment of mass torts).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

In addition to these procedural problems (and the problems created for a judge trying to evaluate both class status and the adequacy 789 of a class settlement simultaneously) the earlier achievement of settlement through the use of a settlement class also can lead to a settlement that may provide inadequate consideration in exchange for the release of the class's claims. With early settlement, both parties have less information on the merits. That is, they have less information on the membership of the class, on the size of potential claims, on whether the settlement purports to resolve class or individual claims, on the strengths and weaknesses of the case, and on how class members will benefit from the settlement. See MCL 2d § 30.45, at 243-44; 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.09, at 11-13. Without the benefit of more extensive discovery, both sides may underestimate the strength of the plaintiffs' claims.

Turning to the question of due process rights, we note that class members may, as a result of these information deficiencies, not be in a fair position at this early stage to evaluate whether or not the settlement represents a superior alternative to litigating. Perhaps more troubling in light of the reality that absentees tend to lack a real understanding of the actions supposedly pursued in their names is that, "where notice of the class action is ... sent simultaneously with the notice of the settlement itself, [the settlement class paradigm], the class members are presented with what looks like a fait accompli." Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 680-81. Thus, even if they have enough information to conclude the settlement is insufficient and unsatisfactory, see In re Beef Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d 167, 173 n. 4 (5th Cir.1979), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 905, 101 S.Ct. 3029, 69 L.Ed.2d 405 (1981), the mere presentation of the settlement notice with the class notice may pressure even skeptical class members to accept the settlement out of the belief that, unless they are willing to litigate their claims individually-- often economically infeasible--they really have no choice.

In a different vein, a number of cases have also criticized settlement classes on the grounds that they create an opportunity for "one-way intervention," allowing putative class members to wait to see whether they think the settlement is favorable before deciding whether they want to be bound by it. See McDonald v. Chicago Milw. Corp., 565 F.2d 416, 420 (7th Cir.1977); Watkins v. Blinzinger, 789 F.2d 474, 475 n. 3 (7th Cir.1986) ("A deferred ruling [on certification] converts the class action to an opportunity for one- way intervention, which Rule 23 is designed to avoid...."); Premier Electrical Constr. Co. v. National Elec. Contractors Ass'n, Inc., 814 F.2d 358, 363 (7th Cir.1987) (criticizing delay of certification). Because class members have the opportunity to wait until the outcome is known (i.e., the settlement's terms are determined) to decide whether they want to be bound by the result, courts and defendants are exposed to the same potential for multiple lawsuits that class actions are designed to avoid, and the supposed advantages of settlement classes are largely eroded.

Perhaps more troubling, the possibility of pre-certification negotiation and settlement may facilitate the filing of strike suits. Since settlement classes can involve a settlement achieved either before or after the filing of class claims, recognition of the settlement class device allows plaintiffs to file as class actions cases that counsel never intended to have certified, but instead only to settle the claims individually. Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 681 ("[P]laintiffs will be tempted to add class claims in order to intimidate the defendant, then delete them by way of compromise."). Knowing that they would not face judicial scrutiny if they settle before certification, plaintiffs' lawyers face no deterrent from attempting to extract larger settlements by threatening class litigation than they could with the cases filed individually.

In many respects then, the failings of settlement classes are a function of the dearth of information available to judges attempting to scrutinize the settlements in accordance with their Rule 23(e) duties. Because the issue of certification is never actively contested, the judge never receives the benefit of the adversarial process that provides the information needed to review propriety of the class and the adequacy of settlement. This problem is exacerbated where the parties agree on a settlement of the case before the class action is filed, since a motion for certification 790 and settlement are presented simultaneously.

Last, but by no means least, the use of settlement classes also risks transforming the courts into mediation forums. See Coffee, supra note 7, at A15. Cases could be filed without any expectation or intention of litigation, with the foreknowledge that the natural hydraulic pressure for settlement may in fact lead to a class settlement, especially given the incentive a defendant has to bind as many potential claimants as possible with an approved class settlement. Courts may approve these class settlements even if the case is highly inappropriate for class treatment, since judges confronting the reality of already over-taxed judicial resources, see Proposed Long Range Plan for the Federal Courts (March 1995) at 9-12, may feel constrained to dispose of such onerous litigation through the settlement class device. The losers in this type of scenario are not only inadequately represented class members but also the federal courts as an institution, because their resources are further sapped by entertaining cases that arguably do not belong there. [FN10] This increased burden will be especially problematic if the standards for certification are relaxed for settlement classes; as this appeal demonstrates, proceedings attendant to settlement class certification can consume considerable federal judicial time.

FN10. Because the parties do not come before the court until the action has settled, some courts have even expressed concern that such cases do not present a case or controversy for Article III purposes. Cf. Carlough v. Amchem Prods., Inc., 834 F.Supp. 1437, 1462-67 (E.D.Pa.1993).

C. Arguments Favoring Settlement Classes

Although settlement classes are vulnerable to potent criticisms, some important dynamics militate in favor of a judge's delaying or even substantially avoiding class certification determinations. Because certification so dramatically increases the potential value of the suit to the plaintiffs and their attorneys as well as the potential liability of the defendant, the parties will frequently contest certification vigorously. As a result, a defendant considering a settlement may resist agreeing to class certification because, if the settlement negotiations should fail, it would be left exposed to major litigation. See In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 177-78 ("[A blanket rule against settlement classes] may render it virtually impossible for the parties to compromise class issues and reach a proposed class settlement before a class certification...."); In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. 475 (S.D.N.Y.1984).

In mass tort cases, in particular, use of a settlement class can help overcome certain elements of these actions that otherwise can considerably complicate efforts to settle. These hurdles include "the large number of individual plaintiffs and lawyers; ... the existence of unfiled claims by putative plaintiffs; and ... the inability of any single plaintiff to offer the settling defendant reliable indemnity protection...." Transgrud, 70 CORNELL L.REV. at 835. By using the courts to overcome some of the collective action problems particularly acute in mass tort cases, the settlement class device can make settlement feasible. The use of settlement classes can thus enable both parties to realize substantial savings in litigation expenses by compromising the action before formal certification. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.09, at 11-13. Through settlement class certification, courts have fostered settlement of some very large, complex cases that might otherwise never have yielded deserving plaintiffs any substantial remuneration.

Settlement classes also increase the number of actions that are amenable to settlement by increasing the rewards of a negotiated solution, in at least four ways. First, the prospect of class certification increases a defendant's incentive to settle because the settlement would then bind the class members and prevent further suits against the defendant. Second, settlement classes may reduce litigation costs by allowing defendants to stipulate to class certification without forfeiting any of their legal arguments against certification should the negotiations fail. Third, because the payment of settlement proceeds, even relatively small amounts, may palliate class members, settlement can reduce differences among class members, and 791 thus make class certification more likely, increasing the value of settlement to the defendant, since a larger number of potential claims can thus be resolved.

Fourth, the use of settlement classes reduces the probability of a successful subsequent challenge to the class-wide settlement. By treating the class as valid pending settlement, a temporary class facilitates notice to those persons whom the court might consider part of the class. The expanded notice afforded by access to the customary class action notification process protects both the absentees and the defendants by eliminating negotiations between the defendants and the named plaintiffs with respect to the class definition that could leave the defendant vulnerable to additional suits by absentees whose interests, a court later determines, were not adequately served or protected. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-40 (citing Midland Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Sellers, 101 B.R. 921 (Bankr.S.D.Ohio 1989)). Increasing the certainty that the settlement will be upheld augments the value of settling to the defendant and consequently the amount defendants will be willing to pay. Thus, delaying certification, in contravention of a strict reading of Rule 23, encourages settlement, an important judicial policy, by increasing the prospective gains to the defendant (and thus potentially to the plaintiffs as well) from exploring a negotiated solution.

Moreover, critics of settlement classes may underestimate the safeguards that still inhere. Although courts are often certifying settlement classes with sub-optimal amounts of information, and without the full benefit of the processes meant to protect the absentees' interests, the provisional certification of a settlement class does not finally determine the absentees' rights. When the simultaneous notice of the class and the settlement is distributed to the proposed class, objecting class members can still challenge the class on commonality, typicality, adequacy of representation, superiority, and predominance grounds--they are not limited to objections based strictly on the settlement's terms. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-40 (citing Midland Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Sellers, 101 B.R. at 921).

Furthermore, the view that, in settlement class cases, the court lacks the information necessary to fulfill its role as protector of the absentees, may reflect an assumption that the court's approval always comes early in the case. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-43 to 11-44. While it often does, the certification decision is sometimes made later in the case, when the parties have presumably developed the merits more fully (in discovery or in the course of wrangling over the settlement terms) and when prior governmental procedures or investigations might have also yielded helpful information. Id. Whatever the timing of the certification ruling, the judge has the duty of passing on the fairness and adequacy of the settlement under Rule 23(e) and also of determining whether the class meets the Rule's requisites under 23(a). [FN11] Whether or not the court certifies the class before settlement discussions, these duties are the same. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-46.

FN11. We are somewhat dubious of the court's ability to discharge its duties completely under these circumstances. See Part IV.E infra.

Although a judge cannot presume that the putative class counsel actively represented the absentees' interests, the court can still monitor the negotiation process itself to assure that both counsel and the settlement adequately vindicate the absentees' interests. Thus, there is no reason to inflexibly limit the use of settlement classes to any specified categories of cases (for example, those cases with few objectors, those which do not involve partial settlements, [FN12] or those which do not involve an expanded class). Even apparently troublesome litigation activity, such as expanding the class just before settlement approval at the defendant's request, is no more free from judicial scrutiny in a settlement class context than it would be otherwise. The court still must give notice to the 792 now-expanded class and satisfy itself that the requisites of class certification are met. Id. at 11-49. Since the party advocating certification bears the burden of proving appropriateness of class treatment, Davis v. Romney, 490 F.2d 1360 (3d Cir.1974), where the procedural posture is such that the court lacks adequate information to make those determinations, it can and should withhold the relevant approvals. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-46.

FN12. MCL 2d expressed concern about partial settlements (settlements only as to certain plaintiffs or certain defendants) since "[m]embers of the settlement class will almost certainly find it difficult to understand their position in the litigation." MCL 2d § 30.45.

But even if the use of settlement classes did reduce a judge's capacity to safeguard the class's interests, it does not necessarily impair the ability of absentees to protect their own interests. Individual class members retain the right to opt out of the class and settlement, preserving the right to pursue their own litigation. See Premier Elec. Constr. Co. v. N.E.C.A., Inc., 814 F.2d 358 (7th Cir.1987) (criticizing settlement classes because they create opportunities for one-way intervention). In fact, the use of the settlement class in some sense enhances plaintiffs' right to opt out. Since the plaintiff is offered the opportunity to opt out of the class simultaneously with the opportunity to accept or reject the settlement offer, which is supposed to be accompanied by all information on settlement, the plaintiff knows exactly what result he or she sacrifices when opting out. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-51. See also In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 174.

In sum, settlement classes clearly offer substantial benefits. However, the very flexibility required to achieve these gains strains the bounds of Rule 23 and comes at the expense of some of the protections the rule-writers intended to construct. As Judge Schwarzer has explained, > one way to see [the settlement class] is as a commendable example of the law's adaptability to meet the needs of the time--in the best tradition of the Anglo-American common law. But another interpretation might be that it is an unprincipled subversion of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. True, if it is a subversion, it is done with good intentions to help courts cope with burgeoning dockets, to enable claimants at the end of the line of litigants to recover compensation, and to allow defendants to manage the staggering liabilities many face. But as experience seems to show, good intentions are not always enough to ensure that all relevant private and public interests are protected. The siren song of Rule 23 can lead lawyers, parties and courts into rough waters where their ethical compass offers only uncertain guidance.

William W. Schwarzer, Settlement of Mass Tort Class Actions: Order Out of Chaos, CORNELL L.REV. (forthcoming).

D. Are Settlement Classes Cognizable Under Rule 23

Although not specifically authorized by Rule 23, settlement classes are not specifically precluded by it either; indeed, Judge Brieant has read subsection (d), giving the court power to manage the class action, as authorizing the creation of "tentative", "provisional", or "conditional" classes through its grant of power to modify or decertify classes as necessary. See, e.g., In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. 475, 478-79 (S.D.N.Y.1984). And because of the broad grant of authority in Rule 23(d), at least one commentator has noted that the validity of temporary settlement classes is usually not questioned. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.22, at 11-31. Courts apparently share this confidence. Indeed, one court believed that "[i]t is clear that the Court may provisionally certify the Class for settlement purposes." South Carolina Nat'l Bank v. Stone, 749 F.Supp. 1419 (D.S.C.1990).

[13][14] We believe that the "provisional" [FN13] or "conditional" [FN14] conception of the settlement class device finds at least a colorable textual basis in the Rule. Rule 23(d) enables 793 a court to certify a class, if it complies with its duty to assure that the class meets the rule's requisites by making appropriate Rule 23 findings (see Part IV(E) infra). Some courts appear to have concluded that the built-in flexibility of the Rule, which enables the court to revisit the requisites and modify or decertify the class should its nature change dramatically during the negotiation process, renders it acceptable to determine class status after settlement and thus avoid scrutinizing and adjudicating class status at an earlier stage when the outcome is unknown. See, e.g., In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. at 483; In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 177 ("[T]he Court finds that a conditional class should be certified for the purpose of considering the proposed settlements.")

> FN13. The terms "tentative" and "provisional" appear to be used interchangeably.

> FN14. "Conditional" is actually a term that can be properly applied to all class actions, even those that are certified in the normal process. Under Rule 23(c)(1), the court retains the authority to re-define or decertify the class until the entry of final judgment on the merits. This capacity renders all certification orders conditional until the entry of judgment. See MCL 2d § 30.18.

Alternatively, some courts have conceived of settlement classes as a "temporary assumption" by the court to facilitate settlement. See Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 680; In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 177; 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-50. The arguments of the late Herbert Newberg, one of the leading advocates of settlement classes, reflect an assumption that the Rule 23 determinations are merely postponed, not eliminated:

> On analysis, however, it would appear that this argument [that courts using settlement classes circumvent the need to test the propriety of the class action according to the specific criteria of Rule 23] may be rebutted by perceiving the temporary settlement class as nothing more than a tentative assumption indulged in by the court.... The actual class ruling is deferred in these circumstances until after hearing on the settlement approval.... At that time, the court in fact applies the class action requirements to determine whether the action should be maintained as a class action....

2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-50. [FN15] Newberg posits, therefore, that the temporary assumption conception of the settlement needs no special authorization since the court eventually follows the ordinary certification process, only deferring it until the settlement approval stage.

> FN15. See also In re Mid-Atlantic Toyota Antitrust Litig., 564 F.Supp. 1379, 1388 n. 13 (D.Md.1983) ("Completely ancillary to the proposed settlement, [a temporary settlement class] lasts only as long as the period between the preliminary approval of the settlement and the court's final determination on the settlement. In effect, a temporary settlement class serves only as a procedural vehicle for providing notice to putative members of a proposed class....").

Courts have also relied on the more general policies of Rule 23--promoting justice and realizing judicial efficiencies--to justify this arguable departure from the rule.

> [T]he hallmark of Rule 23 is flexibility.... Temporary settlement classes have proved to be quite useful in resolving major class action disputes. While their use may still be controversial, most Courts have recognized their utility and have authorized the parties to compromise their differences, including class action issues through this means.

Weinberger, 698 F.2d at 72-73. One commentator found implicit authorization for settlement classes under a settlement-oriented interpretation of Rule 23 :

> [Rule 23] provides that a court may certify a common question class action when it will prove "superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." A judicially supervised and approved class action settlement, like a judicially supervised trial, is a means of hearing and determining judicially, in other words "adjudicating," the value of claims arising from a mass tort. As a result, if conditional certification of the case as a common question class action for settlement purposes would enhance the prospects for a group settlement, then Rule 23 authorizes certification.

Roger H. Transgrud, Joinder Alternatives in Mass Tort Litigation, 70 CORNELL L.REV. 779, 835 (1985) (footnotes omitted).

It is noteworthy that resistance to more flexible applications of Rule 23 has diminished over time. See In re Taxable Mun. Bond Sec. Litig., 1994 WL 643142, *4 (E.D.La.1994) (commenting upon this trend). The evolution of the reception accorded settlement classes has manifested itself in the 794 successive versions of the Manual for Complex Litigation. The first edition of the Manual criticized the initiation of settlement negotiations before certification, and discouraged all such negotiations. See MCL 1st § 1.46. The second edition recognizes the potential benefits of settlement classes but still cautioned that "the court should be wary of presenting the settlement to the class." MCL 2d § 30.45 at 243. The (draft) third version acknowledges that "[s]ettlement classes offer a commonly used vehicle for the settlement of complex litigation" and aims only to supervise rather than discourage their use. See MCL 3d § 30.45 at 192 (draft).

A survey of the caselaw confirms the impression that resistance to settlement classes has diminished: few cases since the late 1970's and early 1980's even bother to squarely address the propriety of settlement classes. Moreover, no court of appeals that has had the opportunity to comment on the propriety of settlement classes has held that they constitute a per se violation of Rule 23. See, e.g., Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 33 (3d Cir.1971) (finding no prohibition but granting absentees standing to appeal settlement approval); Marshall v. Holiday Magic, Inc., 550 F.2d 1173, 1176 (9th Cir.1977) (describing how court approved combined notice of the pendency of the class and the terms of the proposed settlement); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 167; Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 643 F.2d 195, 223 (5th Cir.1981) (upholding settlement despite pre-certification negotiations with some defendants); Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61 (2d Cir.1982); Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 681 (criticizing settlement classes but ultimately approving settlement). But some courts recognize that this practice represents a significant departure from the usual Rule 23 scenario and thereby counsel that courts should scrutinize these settlements even more closely.

[15] We acknowledge that settlement classes, conceived of either as provisional or conditional certifications, represent a practical construction of the class action rule. Such construction affords considerable economies to both the litigants and the judiciary and is also fully consistent with the flexibility integral to Rule 23. A number of other jurisdictions have already accepted settlement classes as a reasonable interpretation of Rule 23 and thereby achieved these substantial benefits. Although we appreciate the concerns raised about the device, we are confident that they can be addressed by the rigorous applications of the Rule 23 requisites by the courts at the approval stages, as we discuss at greater length herein. For these reasons, we hold that settlement classes are cognizable under Rule 23.

E. Are the Rule 23(a) and (b) Findings Required for Settlement Classes? Does Finding the Settlement to Be Fair and Reasonable Serve as a Surrogate for the Findings?

[16] There is no explicit requirement in Rule 23 that the district judge make a formal finding that the requisites of the rule have been met in order to certify a class. However, most district judges have routinely done so, assuming that it was required, and in published opinions, a number of courts have endorsed or at least acknowledged the compelling policy reasons for doing so. See, e.g., Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 785 (3d Cir.1985); Plummer, 668 F.2d at 659; Interpace Corp. v. Philadelphia, 438 F.2d 401, 404 (3d Cir.1971); MCL 2d § 30.13 ("The judge should enter findings and conclusions after the hearing, addressing each of the applicable requirements of Rule 23(a) and (b)."). For example, where there has been some dispute over certification, a court should give the litigants, particularly the absentees, some statement of the reasons for its decision. Eisenberg, 766 F.2d at 785. Articulated findings also simplify the review of complex cases generally. Id. With respect to settlement classes, we hold that courts must make the findings because the legitimacy of settlement classes depends upon fidelity to the fundaments of Rule 23. [FN16]

> FN16. This conclusion is supported by the text of Rule 23(e). That section provides that "class action" may not be compromised without court approval, and arguably a case is not a "class action" in the absence of such findings.

795 Inasmuch as collusion, inadequate prosecution, and attorney inexperience are the paramount concerns in precertification settlements, see Malchman, 706 F.2d at 433; Beef, 607 F.2d at 174, the need for the adequacy of representation finding is particularly acute in settlement class situations, given the inquiry's purpose of detecting cases where there is a "likelihood that the litigants are involved in a collusive suit...." Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 391 F.2d 555, 562 (2d Cir.1968).

There appears to be no authority contra this practice. Indeed, the courts and commentators that have endorsed settlement classes have seemed to assume that the approving court made the requisite class determinations at some point. For example, Newberg's argument rebutting the charge that the "tentative assumption" of class status by the court to foster settlement evades the Rule's strictures continues:

> The actual class ruling is deferred in these circumstances until after [the] hearing on the settlement approval, following notice to the class. At that time, the court in fact applies the class action requirements to determine whether the action should be maintained as a class action....

2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 11-50. See also Whitford v. First Nationwide Bk., 147 F.R.D. 135, 142 (WD Ky.1992) (disregarding even the possibility that these classes would not have to meet all of the normal certification requisites). Even the cases where the courts did not recognize a need to make the determinations demonstrate a heightened concern for fairness and a more cautious approach to settlement approval. See Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 33 (3d Cir.1971) (court must be doubly careful where negotiation occurs before certification and designation of a class counsel); Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 681 (applying a higher standard of fairness); Simer v. Rios, 661 F.2d 655, 664-66 (7th Cir.1981) (requiring a higher demonstration of fairness); Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 69 (2d Cir.1982) (emphasizing the extensive discovery and ability and experience of counsel).

Some courts have certified settlement classes "without articulating or consciously applying Rule 23 tests." 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27 at 11-52. See, e.g., Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 681 (suggesting that the certification procedure may not be necessary to combat the potential for abuse created by the use of settlement classes since that potential is "held in check by the requirement that the judge determine the fairness of the settlement ..."); Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d at 73 (determination that proposed settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate substitutes for Rule 23 findings); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d 167, 177 (5th Cir.1979); City of Detroit v. Grinnell, 495 F.2d 448, 464-65 (2d Cir.1974) (rejecting contention that the court erred when it approved a settlement and acquiesced in the settlement's assumption of the existence of a proper class). Some courts neglecting the findings have taken the view that the notice of proposed settlement, which must be preliminarily approved by the court, "carries the necessary implication that the action complies with Rule 23." Beef, 607 F.2d at 177.

We disagree both with this suggestion and with the conclusion that a fairness determination is a surrogate for Rule 23 findings. [FN17] Even if we set aside the problem of the court's inadequate information, the inquiry into the settlement's fairness cannot conceptually replace the inquiry into the propriety of class certification. Normally, a court makes the required commonality and typicality determinations by referencing the original class complaints in order to assure that the claims alleged by the named plaintiffs are common to the class (although the class need not share every claim in common, Hassine v. Jeffes, 846 F.2d 169, 177-78 (3d Cir.1988)), and that the claims alleged by the named 796 plaintiff occupy approximately the same position of centrality to the named plaintiffs as they do to the rest of the class. Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 810 (3d Cir.1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 105 S.Ct. 1777, 84 L.Ed.2d 836 (1985). Neither the existence of a settlement nor the terms of settlement affect the nature of this important inquiry.

FN17. We note in this regard that other courts have made the determinations of adequacy of representation and homogeneity of the class when evaluating the fairness of the settlement for the express purpose of assuring that they possess enough information to execute their Rule 23(e) duty. See In re Beef Indust. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 173 n. 4 (quoting ARTHUR R. MILLER, AN OVERVIEW OF FEDERAL CLASS ACTIONS: PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE (Federal Judicial Ctr.1977)); see also In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. 475, 483 (S.D.N.Y.1984) (making findings in the opinion which preliminarily approved the settlement).

[17][18] The Rule 23(a) class inquiries (numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation) constitute a multipart attempt to safeguard the due process rights of absentees. Thus, the ultimate focus falls on the appropriateness of the class device to assert and vindicate class interests. Conversely, however, the process of negotiation does not reveal anything about commonality and typicality. One might argue that these requisites are merely means to the end of vindicated rights, and that observing the process of negotiation could demonstrate adequate vindication--the true aim of the Rule. In our view, a court cannot infer that the rights of the entire class were vindicated without having assured that commonality and typicality were satisfied.

The 23(b)(3) determination is also important in the regulatory scheme. To be certified as a (b)(3) class, the judge must determine that "questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3). [FN18] But the settlement approval inquiry is far different from the certification inquiry. In settlement situations, the superiority requirement arguably translates into the question whether the settlement is a more desirable outcome for the class than individualized litigation, and may assure that the settlement has not grossly undervalued plaintiffs' interests. But even if this is so, a point we neither concede nor decide, there remains the concern about conflicts between those appointed to represent class interests--the lawyers and named plaintiffs--and the rest of the class. These concerns, particularly acute with settlement classes, concentrate the focus of the certification inquiries on the representational elements.

FN18. As the case before us involves a damages class under Rule 23(b)(3), we do not address the application of the (b)(1) and (b)(2) requisites which, without the important right to opt out, involve different considerations.

Certainly, evaluating the settlement can yield some information relevant to the adequacy of representation determination under 23(a)(4). The settlement evaluation involves two types of evidence: a substantive inquiry into the terms of the settlement relative to the likely rewards of litigation, see Weinberger, 698 F.2d at 73; Protective Comm. for Indep. Stockholders v. Anderson, 390 U.S. 414, 424, 88 S.Ct. 1157, 1163, 20 L.Ed.2d 1 (1968), and a procedural inquiry into the negotiation process. The focus on the negotiation process results from the realization that a judge cannot really make a substantive judgment on the issues in the case without conducting some sort of trial on the merits, exactly what the settlement is intended to avoid. See Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d at 433. Instead, the court determines whether negotiations were conducted at arms' length by experienced counsel after adequate discovery, in which case there is a presumption that the results of the process adequately vindicate the interests of the absentees. Weinberger, 698 F.2d at 74; City of Detroit v. Grinnell, 495 F.2d at 463; Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. at 482 ("In order to supplement judicial examination of the substance of a compromise agreement, and because a court cannot conduct a trial in order to avoid a trial, attention must be paid to the process by which a settlement has been reached.").

Although the procedural focus on the fairness determination yields information pertinent to the adequacy of representation inquiry, it cannot fully satisfy the inquiry. That is because reliance on the negotiation process used to approve the settlement to satisfy the class certification requirements puts excessive pressure on the settlement approved determinations, and, more fundamentally, such a reliance may be circular. Cf. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.28, at 11-54 (suggesting a greater need for a court to carefully articulate 797 its reasons for settlement approval where the class was not separately certified).

Courts approving settlements have examined the negotiating process in light of the "experience of counsel, the vigor with which the case was prosecuted, and the coercion or collusion that may have marred the negotiations themselves." Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d 426, 433 (2d Cir.1983) (citing Weinberger, 698 F.2d at 73; Grinnell, 495 F.2d at 465.). Some of these courts have suggested that the fact that vigorous, arm's length negotiations occurred should allay concerns about adequacy of representation. But these inferences depend on the implicit assumption that the lawyers actually negotiating really were doing so on behalf of the entire class, see 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.28, at 11-59, assumptions which are clearly unjustified in a context where the potential for intra-class conflict further emperils the class's representation. Far too much turns on the adequacy of representation to accept it on blind faith.

Without determining that the class actually was adequately represented, the district judge has no real basis for assuming that the negotiations satisfactorily vindicated the interests of all the absentees. The focus on the negotiation process also cannot address the part of the adequacy of representation inquiry intended to detect situations where the named plaintiffs are unsuitable representatives of the absentees' claims. To state that class members were united in the interest of maximizing over-all recovery begs the question. Although that observation might allay some concern about a conflict between the attorney and the class, a judge must focus on the settlement's distribution terms (or those sought) to detect situations where some class members' interests diverge from those of others in the class. For example, a settlement that offers considerably more value to one class of plaintiffs than to another may be trading the claims of the latter group away in order to enrich the former group.

[19] In short, the prophylactic devices used by judges to approve these pre-certification settlements without ever formally certifying the class fail to satisfy the requirements of Rule 23. Without determining that the class claims are common and typical of the entire putative class and that the class representatives and their counsel are adequate representatives, we have no assurance that the district court fully appreciated the scope and nature of the interests at stake. [FN19] Finally, we note that courts adopting the view that the formal class determinations are not necessary for settlement classes may be contravening not only the language of the rule but also the Supreme Court's pronouncement in General Telephone Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160, 102 S.Ct. 2364, 2372, 72 L.Ed.2d 740 (1982) (disapproving the trial court's insufficient scrutiny of the named plaintiff's capacity to adequately represent the class), that "[a]ctual, not presumed, conformance with Rule 23(a) remains, however, indispensable." Thus, while we approve the provisional certification of a settlement class to facilitate settlement discussions, final settlement approval depends on the finding that the class met all the requisites of Rule 23.

FN19. In Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d at 433, the court was satisfied by the district court's determination that the settlement class satisfied the adequacy of representation inquiry noting: "There is no doubt that the district court must make an independent evaluation of whether the named plaintiffs were adequate representatives of the class.... A judge has an obligation to consider whether the interest of the class are adequately represented." (citing East Texas Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403-06, 97 S.Ct. 1891, 1896-98, 52 L.Ed.2d 453 (1977)); see also Plummer, 668 F.2d at 659 & n. 4. We agree that this is an appropriate focus given the heightened potential for collusion, buy-offs, and other abuses in settlement class situations where the negotiations occur before the court appoints class representatives and counsel. We still believe, however, that courts should assure that settlement classes meet all of the requirements of 23(a) and (b). This prescription is consistent with the heightened duty of courts in class action settlements to assure that the absentees' rights are adequately protected.

F. Can There be a Valid Settlement Class That Would Not Serve as a Valid Litigation Class?

As we have previously explained, courts using the settlement class device must at some point definitively certify the class and satisfy themselves that the requisites of Rule 23 have been satisfied. To avoid that process 798 entirely would dismantle the ruie's carefully constructed mechanism that serves to protect absentees' due process rights. Moreover, despite some courts' suggestions that the standards are less rigorous for settlement classes, we do not believe that Rule 23 authorizes separate, liberalized criteria for settlement classes.

At the outset we note that, while some other courts have nominally complied with the rule, they appear to have assumed that lower standards apply in settlement class cases. See Officers for Justice v. Civil Serv. Comm'n of San Francisco, 688 F.2d 615, 633 (9th Cir.1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1217, 103 S.Ct. 1219, 75 L.Ed.2d 456 (1983) ("[C]ertification issues raised by class action litigation that is resolved short of a decision on the merits must be viewed in a different light."); Fisher Bros. v. Phelps Dodge Indus. Inc., 604 F.Supp. 446, 450 (E.D.Pa.1985); In re Dennis Greenman Sec. Litig., 829 F.2d 1539, 1543 (11th Cir.1987) ("In reviewing settlement certifications, a special standard has been employed."); A.H. Robins, 880 F.2d at 740 (in deciding whether to certify a class, settlement is at least an important factor in favor and might even be a per se ground for certification); MCL 2d at § 30.45. Other courts have stated that settlement reduces the potential conflicts among the class and thus enhances the likelihood of meeting the criteria, presumably the same criteria a litigation class must satisfy. See, e.g., Bowling v. Pfizer, Inc., 143 F.R.D. 141, 159 (S.D.Oh.1992). Newberg is of this view. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.28, at 11-58.

According to Newberg, though settlement does not impact the numerosity requirement it may indeed increase the likelihood of meeting the commonality and typicality inquiries. "Typicality of claims in a settlement class context requires proof that the interests of the class representative and the class are commonly held for the purposes of receiving similar or overlapping benefits from a settlement." 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.28, at 11-58. On this theory, because the court has delayed the findings until the outcome of the litigation (i.e., the settlement agreement) is known, the judge conducts the inquiry based on the relative rewards to the class members rather than based on the various legal claims of class members. So long as all plaintiffs get similar benefits from the settlement, irrespective of the different strengths of their initial claims, the commonality and typicality inquiries are viewed as likely to be satisfied.

Under this approach, the adequate representation inquiry is also simplified in the settlement class context by a result-oriented approach toward the class requirement findings. Rather than asking whether the lawyers have sufficient resources and skills to prosecute the action (as would be the case with customary class certification procedures), courts, it is said, need only determine, in hindsight, whether the settlement was negotiated at arms' length, and whether the negotiations were long, thorough, and deliberative. See In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 643 F.2d 195, 212 (5th Cir.1981) (adequacy judged by sufficiency of settlement); In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 148 F.R.D. 297, 341 (N.D.Ga.1993) (inequitable distribution). Courts adopting this approach require proof only that named plaintiffs' and class interests are not antagonistic. See, e.g., Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., 777 F.2d 113, 123 (3d Cir.1985) (relying on absence of conflict to find adequate representation); Lewis v. Curtis, 671 F.2d 779, 788 (3d Cir.1982) (finding named plaintiff an adequate representative despite small stake in litigation and ignorance of facts and claims); Steiner v. Equimark Corp., 96 F.R.D. 603, 610 (W.D.Pa.1983) ("The key question [for the adequacy of representation inquiry] is whether their interests are antagonistic."). In these cases, courts have effectively relied on the settlement's terms--the outcome of the action--to find the required absence of antagonism. [FN20]

FN20. For example, in finding adequate representation, one court noted: "[S]o long as all class members are united in asserting a common right, such as achieving the maximum possible recovery for the class, the class interests are not antagonistic for representation purposes." In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 1980-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 63,163 at 77,788 n. 10, 1979 WL 1751 (S.D.Tex.1979), aff'd, 643 F.2d 195 (5th Cir.1981) (citing WRIGHT & MILLER, FED. PRACTICE & PROCEDURE CIVIL § 1768, at n. 7 & 8).

799 [20][21][22] We disagree with this approach, championed primarily by Newberg. There is no language in the rule that can be read to authorize separate, liberalized criteria for settlement classes. [FN21] Although we acknowledge the need for flexible interpretation of Rule 23 to enable it to achieve its broader purposes of vindicating difficult individual claims and conserving judicial resources, see Beef, 607 F.2d at 177-78 (discussing the policy needs for flexibility); Ace Heating, 453 F.2d at 33 (recognizing need to give small claimants who did not opt out the right to appeal a settlement approval), we emphasize that Rule 23 is designed to assure that courts will identify the common interests of class members and evaluate the named plaintiffs' and counsel's ability to fairly and adequately protect class interests. See Katz v. Carte Blanche Corp., 496 F.2d 747, 757 (3d Cir.1974). Thus, actions certified as settlement classes must meet the same requirements under Rule 23 as litigation classes. To allow lower standards for the requisites of the rule in the face of the hydraulic pressures confronted by courts adjudicating very large and complex actions would erode the protection afforded by the rule almost entirely.

FN21. Indeed, if any difference in standards is warranted, pre- certification settlement may raise the adequacy of representation standard. Since this inquiry must ascertain "whether there has been any collusion or undue pressure by the defendants on would be class representatives," see First Comm. Corp. of Boston Consumer Accts. Litig., 119 F.R.D. 301, 308 (D.Mass.1987); Alvarado Partners LP v. Mehta, 723 F.Supp. 540, 546 (D.Colo.1989), it must carry greater weight in the settlement class context where there is an enhanced potential for those evils. Thus, while the other 23(a) findings remain important when the action settles, the need to assure an absence of collusion and an alignment of interests assumes an especially crucial role. Reliance, for the class requisites analysis, on the settlement's terms and process also increases the importance of an independent conclusion of adequate representation (i.e., one not derived solely by reference to the nature of the negotiations).

Judge Posner has explained the animating concern behind this strict application. "The danger of a premature, even a collusive, settlement is increased when as in this case the status of the action as a class action is not determined until a settlement has been negotiated, with all the momentum that a settlement agreement generates...." Mars, 834 F.2d at 680.

The foregoing discussion has focused on adequacy of representation, but the presence of commonality and typicality are equally important to the class action regime. Certifying a class without the existence of questions common to the class (or where the class representatives' claims are not typical) perverts the class action process and converts a federal court into a mediation forum for cases that belong elsewhere, usually in state court. On the other hand, the cases that make the settlement class device appear most useful are cases presenting the most unwieldy substantive and procedural issues, i.e., those diversity cases in which plaintiffs from many states are confronted with differing defenses, differing statutes of limitations, etc.--precisely those cases that stretch the Rule to its outer-most limits.

This is a troublesome issue--and a close one. Many mass tort actions have this problem. The School Asbestos cases and the Breast Implant cases had it, and this case does, as well. It may initially seem difficult to envision an actual trial of these cases because of the differing defenses certain to be raised under the various bodies of governing law. While the problem may be overstated, [FN22] settlement classes still serve the useful purpose of ridding the courts--state and federal--of these litigation albatrosses even though the case may never have been triable in class form. But if that were the primary function of the settlement class, the federal courts would have become a mediation forum, a result inconsistent with their mission and limited resources. In sum, "a class is a class is a class," and a settlement class, if it is to qualify under Rule 23, must meet all of its 800 requirements. The district court should keep these matters in mind on remand.

FN22. In the School Asbestos case, 789 F.2d at 996, the panel asked counsel to analyze all the claims and defenses and write a report reflecting whether the differing claims and defenses evidence a small number of patterns that would be amenable to trial through a series of special verdicts. The plaintiffs came up with a demonstration that the claims and defenses were reducible to four patterns. That, in our view, was sufficient to satisfy the commonality and typicality inquiries. The same might be true in this case.

V. IS THE SETTLEMENT CLASS PROPER HERE?

A. Were There Adequate Findings Under Rule 23(a)?

Certain of the objectors in this case contend that the district court committed plain error by never actually certifying the class as required by Rule 23. See Brief of French Objectors at 18. This, of course, would be a serious error, since without certification there is no class action, and "[i]n a settlement entered without class certification the judgment will not have res judicata effect on the claims of absent class members." Simer v. Rios, 661 F.2d 655, 664 (7th Cir.1981).

[23] The district court certified the class provisionally in a pretrial order. See Pretrial Order No. 7. We have already noted that provisional certification constitutes an acceptable means of facilitating settlement negotiations. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.27, at 55-56. It appears that the court believed that it certified the class by "confirming" the provisional certification in its order approving the settlement. However, the court did not make the findings we today hold that Rule 23 requires, not even upon approving the settlement. Because we hold that courts employing settlement classes must still make findings that the class complies with Rule 23(a) and the appropriate parts of Rule 23(b), the court's failure to comply with the rule in this respect is a plain error of law, and hence an abuse of discretion, requiring that the certification be set aside.

Our conclusion that the settlement class was not properly certified does not mean that the class could not be certified on remand. Accordingly, we must consider whether the existing record is adequate to support class certification, or whether further record development is required.

B. Could the Class Requisites Have Been Met on the Current Record?

1. Numerosity, Commonality, and Typicality

[24] As we have explained, a class action--whether certified for settlement or litigation purposes--must meet the class requisites enunciated in Rule 23. The district court did not make findings on these issues. The numerosity requirement of Rule 23(a) is plainly satisfied in this action encompassing nearly six million truck owners. The commonality and typicality inquiries of 23(a), however, raise substantial concerns about the sufficiency of this class. The record currently lacks the facts needed to establish these requisites, and the defendants also ardently maintain that the applicability of different defenses to different groups of plaintiffs would prevent the class from satisfying the commonality and typicality requirements. At this juncture, we leave open the possibility that, on remand, the district court may indeed find facts sufficient to support these elements.

2. Adequacy of Representation

a. The Situation of the Fleet Owners

[25][26] This settlement class appears to fail to meet Rule 23(a)'s adequacy of representation test. The adequacy of representation inquiry has two components intended to assure that the absentees' interests are fully pursued: it considers whether the named plaintiffs' interests are sufficiently aligned with the absentees', and it tests the qualifications of the counsel to represent the class. See Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 811 (3d Cir.1984); 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.28, at 11-58. On the first prong, we are not satisfied that the interests of various class members were sufficiently aligned; indeed the settlement appears to create antagonism within the class. While some courts have been satisfied that there is no intra-class conflict where "all class members are united in asserting a common right, such as achieving the maximum possible recovery for the class," In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 1980-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 63,163 at 77,788 n. 10 (S.D.Tex.1979), aff'd., 643 F.2d 195 (5th Cir.1981), we disapprove such a myopic focus on the settlement terms.

In this case in particular, the conclusion that the settlement--which (supposedly) maximized class recovery--satisfied the requirement that class members' interests not 801 be antagonistic ignores the conspicuous evidence of such an intra-class conflict in the very terms of this settlement. The substantial impediments to fleet owners' using these certificates creates a conflict between their interests in this settlement and those of individual owners. (The named plaintiffs are all individual owners.) Moreover, the dubious value of the transfer option, see Part VI.A.1.c infra, one of the principal responses to the fleet owners' objection, does little to reduce the disparity in the prospective value to the different sections of the class.

This is not a case where some plaintiffs share the prospect of a future claim with other class members who currently have such a claim. The fleet owners will never enjoy the benefits of the settlement terms, such as the intra- household transfer option, intended specifically for the benefit of individual owners. Thus, we must be concerned that the individual owners had no incentive to maximize the recovery of the government entities; they could skew the terms of the settlement to their own benefit. Not surprisingly, the settlement leaves fleet owners with significantly less value than individual owners. At the very least, the class should have been divided into sub- classes so that a court examining the settlement could consider settlement impacts that would be uniform at least within the sub-classes.

b. Did Counsel Adequately Represent the Interests of the Entire Class?

The other aspect of the adequacy of representation test, whether counsel are qualified and serve the interests of the entire class, also gives us reason to pause. Courts examining settlement classes have emphasized the special need to assure that class counsel: (1) possessed adequate experience; (2) vigorously prosecuted the action; and (3) acted at arm's length from the defendant. See, e.g., Malchman, 706 F.2d at 433; Alvarado Partners, 723 F.Supp. at 546. The first criterion is no problem, for these counsel clearly possess the experience and skills to qualify them to pursue these sorts of actions. But the second and third points require attention in view of the lack of significant discovery and the extremely expedited settlement of questionable value accompanied by an enormous legal fee.

Before addressing the latter points, it is necessary to begin with some legal theory discussing the structural nature of fee arrangements in class actions of this type, having in mind that even honorable counsel--like class counsel here--may be compromised by the possibility of a large fee.

(1) Class Action Attorneys' Fees Theory and Structure

[27][28] Beyond their ethical obligations to their clients, class attorneys, purporting to represent a class, also owe the entire class a fiduciary duty once the class complaint is filed. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.65, at 11-183; Greenfield v. Villager Indus., Inc., 483 F.2d 824, 832 (3d.Cir.1973). The large fees garnered by some class lawyers can create the impression of an ethical violation since it may appear that the lawyer has an economic stake in their clients' case. But class actions cannot be analyzed in the same framework as conventional bipolar litigation. Because of the collective action problems associated with cases where individual claims are relatively small, see 7A CHARLES A. WRIGHT, ARTHUR R. MILLER & MARY KAY KANE, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1754, at 49, and the social desirability of many class suits (the private enforcement model), id. at 51; Sprogis v. United Air Lines, Inc. 444 F.2d 1194 (7th Cir.1971), large attorneys' fees serve to motivate capable counsel to undertake these actions. Thus, large fee awards standing alone do not suffice to show that the representation was inadequate or unethical. These allowances generally reflect the realization that the lawyer represents numerous individuals with somewhat varying interests, not acceptance of a situation where the lawyer's personal interests trump the interests of the entire class.

Some commentators blame the system of compensating class action lawyers in a manner that fails to confront fully the differences between class action litigation and elassical bipolar litigation for creating incentives that diverge markedly and predictably from their clients' interests. The leading critic is Professor Coffee. See John C. Coffee, Jr., Understanding*802 the Plaintiff's Attorney: The Implications of Economic Theory For Private Enforcement of Law Through Class and Derivative Actions, 86 COLUM.L.REV. 669, 671-72 (1986) (noting that critics "have argued that the legal rules governing the private attorney general have created misincentives that unnecessarily frustrate the utility of private enforcement. These critics have focused chiefly on the conflicts that arise between the interests of these attorneys and their clients in class and derivative actions....") [hereinafter Understanding the Plaintiff's Attorney]; id. at 677 ("Ultimately, the most persuasive account of why class actions frequently produce unsatisfactory results is the hypothesis that such actions are uniquely vulnerable to collusive settlements that benefit plaintiff's attorneys rather than their clients."); John C. Coffee, Rescuing the Private Attorney General: Why the Model of the Lawyer As Bounty Hunter Is Not Working, 42 MD.L.REV. 215 (1983); John C. Coffee, The Unfaithful Champion: The Plaintiff as Monitor in Shareholder Litigation 48 LAW & CONTEMP. PROBS. 5 (Summer1985); Kevin M. Clermont & John D. Currivan, Improving on the Contingent Fee, 63 CORNELL L.REV. 529 (1978); Murray L. Schwartz & Daniel J.B. Mitchell, An Economic Analysis of the Contingency Fee in Personal-Injury Litigation, 22 STAN.L.REV. 1125 (1970).

Economic models have shown how conventional methods of calculating class action fee awards give class counsel incentives to act earlier than their clients would deem optimal. See Coffee, Understanding the Plaintiff's Attorney, 86 COLUM.L.REV. at 688. Because, under a percentage of recovery award mechanism, the attorneys will only enjoy a relatively small portion of whatever incremental award they can extract from the defendant, the defendant can pressure the plaintiffs' attorney into early settlement by threatening to expend large sums on dilatory tactics that would run the expenses up beyond what plaintiffs' attorneys can expect to profit. Id. at 690. Rather than presenting a possible solution, the lodestar method seemingly exacerbates the problem of cheap settlement by divorcing the fee award from the settlement's size, since plaintiffs' attorneys have no incentive to take the risk on a trial for a potentially larger award to the class where their own fees will not necessarily reflect the greater risk taken at trial. See also id. at 718 (discussing how lodestar method may create structural collusion).

Coffee also blames the principal-agent problem endemic to class actions for creating a situation where the defendants and plaintiffs can collusively settle litigation in a manner that is adverse to the class's interest: "At its worst, the settlement process may amount to a covert exchange of a cheap settlement for a high award of attorney's fees. Although courts have long recognized this danger and have developed some procedural safeguards intended to prevent collusive settlements, these reforms are far from adequate to the task." Id. at 714 n. 121 (citing cases). A number of commentators have identified settlements that afford only nonpecuniary relief to the class as prime suspects of these cheap settlements. See Coffee, Understanding The Plaintiff's Attorney, 86 COLUM.L.REV. at 716 n. 129; Jonathan R. Macey & Geoffrey P. Miller, The Plaintiffs' Attorneys Role in Class Action and Derivative Litigation: Economic Analysis and Recommendations for Reform, 58 U.CHI.L.REV. 1, 45 n. 10 (1991); Nancy Morawetz, Bargaining, Class Representation, and Fairness, 54 OHIO ST.L.J. 1, 5 n. 40 (1993).

While courts may fail to appreciate adequately the distinction between conventional bipolar litigation and class actions in many respects, they may over-emphasize these differences in other respects. To be sure, courts will be willing to award fees in class actions that would appear extraordinary and arguably improper in conventional litigation. Nevertheless, some of the critiques based on ethical or collusive concerns remain instructive. Although subsequent versions seem to avoid a discussion, the Manual for Complex Litigation (First) acknowledged the potential for attorney-class conflict. It condemned fees that are paid separate and apart from the settlement funds paid to the class because amounts "paid by the defendant(s) are properly part of the settlement funds and should be known and disclosed at the time the fairness of the settlement is considered." MCL 1st § 1.46.

803 One court has noted that the "effect of such an arrangement [where the counsel fees are not resolved and the details not included in the class notice] may be to cause counsel for the plaintiffs to be more interested in the amount to be paid as fees than in the amount to be paid to the plaintiffs." In re General Motors Corp. Engine Interchange, 594 F.2d at 1131. Commentators have also noted how, where there is an absence of objectors, courts lack the independently-derived information about the merits to oppose proposed settlements. See Coffee, Understanding the Plaintiff's Attorney, 86 COLUM.L.REV. at 714 n. 131. Of course, by endorsing a practice where the class is, for practical purposes, deprived of information concerning the fees, courts foster a situation where there will be fewer objectors. [FN23]

FN23. The information on fee agreements may prompt potential objectors to oppose not only the awards but, also, to the extent they conclude that arm's length negotiations were compromised, the adequacy of the settlement and the propriety of the class.

(2) The Stewardship of Counsel Here

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[29] A number of factors militate against the conclusion that the class's interests were sufficiently pursued here. First, the settlement arguably did not maximize the class members' interests. Every owner received a coupon whose value could only be realized by purchasing a new truck. Significant obstacles existed to the development of a secondary market in the transfer certificates given that the transfer restrictions and the certificates' limited lifespan minimize the value of the transfer option. Second, class counsel effected a settlement that would yield very substantial rewards to them after what, in comparison to the $9.5 million fee, was little work.

Third, the fact that the settlement involves only non-cash relief, which is recognized as a prime indicator of suspect settlements, increases our sense that the class's interests were not adequately vindicated. The separate negotiation of the fee agreement and the failure to disclose the amount of the award in the class notice only enhance this sense that counsel may have pursued a deal with the defendants separate from, and perhaps competing for the defendant's resources with, the deal negotiated on behalf of the class. And although the degree to which a settlement hurts a defendant is not ordinarily a measure of the settlement's adequacy, the fact that this settlement might actually benefit GM by motivating current owners to buy new trucks from the company (the settlement may arguably be viewed as a GM sales promotion device) certainly does little to allay the concern that the settlement did not advance the interests of the class as much as it might have.

Fourth, our concern about the vigor of counsels' prosecution of the class claims, specifically the possibility that counsel did not do right by the class, is buttressed by the legacy of Prandini v. National Tea Co., 557 F.2d 1015, 1021 (3d Cir.1977). In Prandini, this court recognized the potential for attorney-class conflicts where the fees, while ostensibly stemming from a separate agreement, were negotiated simultaneously. We characterized simultaneity of fee and settlement negotiations as a "situation ... having, in practical effect, one fund divided between the attorney and client." Id. To respond to this danger of collusion between the class counsel and defendant, Prandini and the Third Circuit Task Force Report on court-awarded attorneys' fees disapproved fee discussions until after the achievement and approval of settlement. See Prandini, 557 F.2d at 1021; Court Awarded Attorney's Fees, Report of the Third Circuit Task Force, 108 F.R.D. 238, 266 (1985) [hereinafter Task Force]. [FN24]

> FN24. Other cases and authorities have followed this guide. See, e.g., Ashley v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 794 F.2d 128 (3d Cir.1986); MCL 2d § 30.41; 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.29, at 11-62 (recognizing potential for conflict where settlement and fees to be paid by defendant simultaneously negotiated). To implement this prophylactic bar fully, courts would have to require class counsel to disclose all understandings as to fees, not simply concluded, formal agreements. See MCL 2d § 34.42, at 237-39. Although it recognized that this prophylactic rule could impede some settlements by making it impossible for the defendant to size up its total liability (i.e. the sum of the settlement amount and any fees the defendant agrees to pay), Task Force, 108 F.R.D. at 267-69, the Task Force concluded that avoiding the conflicts justified this cost.

804 In this case, there were strong indications that such simultaneous negotiations in fact transpired. Indeed, there was evidence in a letter from class counsel that at least some portion of the fees and expenses had to have been negotiated simultaneously with the settlement. The court justified its dismissal of the allegation of simultaneous negotiation by citing (1) a statement in the letter that the "attorneys' fees were negotiated separately, after we agreed on everything else," and (2) GM's reservation of the right to contest any award of fees that it deemed unreasonable. Even though we assume that these are factual findings, thus ordinarily deserving deference, we think these findings were made by reference to an erroneous legal standard. Indeed, neither of these bases is persuasive, especially in view of GM's acquiecence in a patently baseless ground for augmenting the counsel fee, see Part VII infra.

In considering the adequacy of representation, we are loath to place such dispositive weight on the parties' self-serving remarks. And even if counsel did not discuss fees until after they reached a settlement agreement, the statement would not allay our concern since the Task Force recommended that fee negotiations be postponed until the settlement was judicially approved, not merely until the date the parties allege to have reached an agreement. We recognize that Evans v. Jeff D., 475 U.S. 717, 734-38, 106 S.Ct. 1531, 1541- 43, 89 L.Ed.2d 747

(1986), overruled Prandini's strict rule prohibiting simultaneous negotiations. However, many of the concerns that motivated the Prandini rule remain, and we see no reason why Jeff D. or its underlying policy of avoiding rules that impede settlement preclude us from considering the timing of fee negotiations as a factor in our review of the adequacy of the class's representation. Consequently, the likelihood that the parties did negotiate the fees concurrently with the settlement in this case increases our concern about the adequacy of representation. [FN25]

FN25. While the parties could have sought a waiver pre-approving simultaneous negotiations, Task Force at 269, the parties did not seek one here.

Nor would GM's reservation of the right to appeal the fee award establish that the fee was negotiated separately since the likelihood that GM would want to contest an award based on a fee petition to which it agreed is quite small. The fact is confirmed by GM's "lay down" position with respect to the fee application. Although the Supreme Court clearly invalidated the use of multipliers in lodestar awards in 1992, see City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 U.S. 557, 112 S.Ct. 2638, 120 L.Ed.2d 449 (1992), GM did not apprise the district court of this fact when it was approving the fee award, or complain when the district court used a multiplier in the calculations. This posture of GM suggests that its reservation of the right to appeal the fee award should not be given great weight in determining whether the settlement and attorneys' fee were negotiated separately. But we hasten to add that we have not resolved these factors. We only hold today that the court did not make the necessary findings, and we remand to the district court so that it can make the necessary Rule 23 findings.

The thrust of the foregoing discussion is that the circumstances under which the settlement evolved, made possible by the settlement class device, may have compromised class counsel in a manner raising doubts as to adequacy of representation. The district court will examine this aspect of the matter on remand. Perhaps, on a more developed record, the adequacy of representation will be established. These concerns underscore the importance of having the district court make Rule 23 findings. Although we do not believe that the class would meet the requirements for certification on the current record, we do not preclude the possibility that certification could be properly supported on a more developed record. Thus, we will remand this action to the district court so that it can re-examine the class certification and the settlement and, if appropriate, certify the class by making the findings required by Rules 23(a) and (b).

VI. IS THE SETTLEMENT FAIR, REASONABLE, AND ADEQUATE?

[30][31] Invoking the correct standard of review under Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 805 157 (3d Cir.1975), the objectors also argue that the district court abused its discretion when it approved the settlement as fair, reasonable, and adequate. Because we leave open the possibility that the district court may on remand properly certify the class pursuant to Part V of this opinion, we address the district court's approval of the settlement. Rule 23(e) imposes on the trial judge the duty of protecting absentees, which is executed by the court's assuring that the settlement represents adequate compensation for the release of the class claims. See 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.46, at 11-105 to 11-106. Some courts have described their duty under Rule 23(e) as the "fiduciary responsibility" of ensuring that the settlement is fair and not a product of collusion. In re Warner Commun. Sec. Litig., 798 F.2d 35, 37 (2d Cir.1986); see also Plummer v. Chemical Bank, 668 F.2d 654, 658 (2d Cir.1982); Grunin v. International House of Pancakes, 513 F.2d 114, 123 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 864, 96 S.Ct. 124, 46 L.Ed.2d 93 (1975); Alvarado Partners L.P. v. Mehta, 723 F.Supp. 540, 546 (D.Colo.1989). At all events, where the court fails to comply with this duty, absentees have an action to enjoin the settlement. 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.23.

In order for the determination that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate "to survive appellate review, the district court must show it has explored comprehensively all relevant factors." Malchman, 706 F.2d at 434 (citing Protective Committee, 390 U.S. at 434, 88 S.Ct. at 1168; Plummer, 668 F.2d at 659). A number of courts have recognized the need for a special focus on precluding the existence of collusion. See Malchman, 706 F.2d at 433 (advocating a focus on the negotiation process to uncover possible collusion); General Motors Interchange, 594 F.2d at 1125 (finding a need for heightened scrutiny of the settlement stemming from the potential for collusive settlement).

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The topic of class action settlement has received much attention, which is understandable given the growing frequency of the settlement of increasingly large claims through the class action device. See In re A.H. Robins Co., 880 F.2d 709, 739-40 (4th Cir.1989) (discussing the use of the device to settle various mass tort cases); In re Taxable Municipal Bond Sec. Litig., 1994 WL 643142 at *5 (noting the dramatic change in attitudes of courts and commentators toward the settlement class). The drive to settle class actions has also grown, notwithstanding the potential for collusive settlements to compromise absentee interests. Courts undertaking the special role of supervising class action settlements are apparently heeding the public policy in favor of settlement, see 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.41, at 11-85, and acknowledging the urgency of this policy in complex actions that consume substantial judicial resources and present unusually large risks for the litigants.

We have already noted the special difficulties the court encounters with its duties under Rule 23(e) in approving settlements where negotiations occur before the court has certified the class. Because of such difficulties, many courts have required the parties to make a higher showing of fairness to sustain these settlements. See, e.g., Ace Heating & Plumbing Co. v. Crane Co., 453 F.2d 30, 33 (3d Cir.1971) ("[W]hen the settlement is not negotiated by a court designated class representative the court must be doubly careful in evaluating the fairness of the settlement to the plaintiff's class."); General Motors Interchange, 594 F.2d at 1125 (attributing a need for heightened scrutiny of the settlement to the potential for collusive settlement); Weinberger v. Kendrick, 698 F.2d 61, 73 (2d Cir.1982) (higher showing of fairness required in pre-certification settlements, and special focus on assuring adequate representation and the absence of collusion); Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d 426, 434 (2d Cir.1983); Mars Steel v. Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust, 834 F.2d 677, 681 (7th Cir.1987); County of Suffolk v. Long Island Lighting Co., 907 F.2d 1295, 1323 (2d Cir.1990); 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.23; MCL 2d § 30.42 (citing the informational deficiencies faced by the court and counsel in pre-certification settlements). We affirm the need for courts to be even more scrupulous than usual in approving settlements where no class has yet been formally certified.

Settlements that have survived this heightened standard have involved much stronger 806 indications of sustained advocacy by the de facto class counsel than we observe in this case. See Weinberger, 698 F.2d 61 (settlement discussions did not commence until after four years of discovery supplemented by another investigation by a trustee and after plaintiffs rejected first settlement offer); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 607 F.2d at 177-78 (settlement discussions began after six months of discovery; action pending for three years, court fully briefed); City of Detroit v. Grinnell, 495 F.2d 448, 464 (2d Cir.1974) (approving settlement after several counsel vied for position for four years and voiced strenuous objections, explaining that Manual's concerns about settlement classes articulated by the Manual for Complex Litigation only pertained to settlement in the early stages of litigation); cf. Plummer, 668 F.2d 654 (rejecting settlement where plaintiffs' counsel relied on information voluntarily furnished by defendants).

There are certain basic questions that courts can ask to detect those cases settled in the absence of sustained effort by class representatives sufficient to protect the interests of the absentees. See MCL 2d § 30.41. For instance: Is the relief afforded by the settlement significantly less than what appears appropriate in light of the preliminary discovery? Have major causes of action or types of relief sought in the complaint been omitted by the settlement? Did the parties achieve the settlement after little or no discovery? Does it appear that the parties negotiated simultaneously on attorneys' fees and class relief? Even acknowledging the possibility of some overpleading, these questions raise a red flag in this case.

With the courts' heightened duty to scrutinize this pre-certification settlement and some of these rudimentary indicators in mind, we now apply our nine-factor Girsh test, see Part III supra, and conclude from the balance of these factors that the district court's conclusion that the settlement was fair and reasonable constitutes an abuse of discretion. Coincidentally, this result tracks the conclusions of a Texas appeals court that, based on an analysis similar to that of Girsh, set aside an order approving a substantially identical settlement of similar claims brought by residents of Texas. See Bloyed v. General Motors, 881 S.W.2d at 422.

A. Adequacy of Settlement--General Principles

[32][33] This inquiry measures the value of the settlement itself to determine whether the decision to settle represents a good value for a relatively weak case or a sell-out of an otherwise strong case. The Girsh test calls upon courts to make this evaluation from two slightly different vantage points. According to Girsh, courts approving settlements should determine a range of reasonable settlements in light of the best possible recovery (the eighth Girsh factor) and a range in light of all the attendant risks of litigation (the ninth factor). See Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d at 157; see also Malchman v. Davis, 706 F.2d 426, 433 (2d Cir.1983) (identifying a similar test); City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448, 463 (2d Cir.1974) (same).

[34][35] In formulaic terms we agree that "in cases primarily seeking monetary relief, the present value of the damages plaintiffs would likely recover if successful, appropriately discounted for the risk of not prevailing, should be compared with the amount of the proposed settlement." MCL 2d § 30.44, at 252. This figure should generate a range of reasonableness (based on size of the proposed award and the uncertainty inherent in these estimates) within which a district court approving (or rejecting) a settlement will not be set aside. See Newman v. Stein, 464 F.2d 689, 693 (2d Cir.1972). The evaluating court must, of course, guard against demanding too large a settlement based on its view of the merits of the litigation; after all, settlement is a compromise, a yielding of the highest hopes in exchange for certainty and resolution. See Cotton v. Hinton, 559 F.2d 1326, 1330 (5th Cir.1977). The primary touchstone of this inquiry is the economic valuation of the proposed settlement.

[36] We turn to this analysis. As will appear, the district court's conclusion that the settlement was within the range of reasonableness rests heavily on the proposition that the class had never proven any diminution in value of the trucks. It ignored the fact that the coupons provided no cash value 807 and made no provision for repairing the allegedly life- threatening defect. For the reasons that follow, we believe that the district court did not sufficiently scrutinize the valuations of the settlement, and that, on this record, the settlement appears to be inadequate. Consequently, we will conclude that the district court erred when it found that the settlement fell within the range of reasonableness.

1. Valuation of the Settlement--Introduction

The value of the $1,000 certificates is sharply disputed. GM argues that the certificates are worth close to their face value since they can be redeemed for a broad array of GM trucks and can be used in combination with dealer incentives. For those unable or unwilling to purchase another GM truck, GM argues, cash can be realized from transferring the certificate within the household for full value or selling the certificate for $500. Plaintiffs presented an expert, Dr. Itmar Simonsen, who placed the value of the certificates between $1.98 and $2.18 billion, based on an estimate that 34% to 38% of the class would redeem the certificate in purchasing a new truck and an additional 11% of the class would sell their certificates for $500. Objectors contest these estimates and many of the assumptions used to generate them.

We therefore analyze several of the foundations for the district court's evaluation. First, we inquire about the reliability of plaintiffs' witness's valuation. Second, we explore the adequacy of the district court's consideration of the possibility that some class members would not be able to use the coupons at all. Third, we inquire as to whether the quite significant restrictions on transfer of the certificates present obstacles to the development of a market so as to render the estimates of their worth unreasonably inflated. Finally, we consider whether the size of the attorneys' fees agreement suggests that GM attached a greater value to the class claims than proponents of the settlement would have us believe. These factors lead ineluctably to the conclusion that the district court overvalued this settlement, which in turn gives credence to the contention of the objectors that the proffered settlement was, in reality, a sophisticated GM marketing program.

a. Plaintiffs' Witness Dr. Itmar Simonsen

Dr. Simonsen's methods and assumptions raise serious doubts about the reliability of the valuations they generated. Although Simonsen's conclusion was based on his estimate that between 34% and 38% of the class members would use the certificate, his own telephone survey revealed that only 14% of the class reported that they would "definitely" or "probably" buy a new truck. Apparently Simonsen only excluded those who responded that they would "definitely not buy" or "probably not buy" a new truck, a methodological choice which is questionable. Furthermore, Simonsen discounted the statistics by seemingly arbitrary factors in an effort to be "conservative," but without some basis or explanation for the derivation of those factors, we have no way of judging whether they were conservative or aggressive.

Even more importantly, the raw survey data probably overstate the prospects that the certificates will be used since there are substantial obstacles to obtaining and transferring the certificates, none of which Simonsen deals with. Finally, Simonsen supposed that a higher percentage of fleet owners than individual owners would redeem the certificates, but this seems to disregard the statutory and regulatory constraints that often restrict fleet buyers' purchase decisions. Indubitably all of these concerns reduce the value of the settlement, yet Simonsen appears simply to have multiplied his estimated number of users by the coupon amount or transfer value.

On the other hand, although various objectors have made a good argument that the net value of the certificates will also be eroded by rising truck prices (which would allegedly be influenced both by the huge number of certificates that would need to be redeemed within a relatively brief time and by the fact that dealers may take advantage of customers they know to be somewhat tied to the purchase of a GM truck by their desire to realize value from the coupon), we will, to be conservative, not take this factor into account. 808 Even so, Simonsen's methodology undermines his conclusion to the extent that his valuation cannot support the settling parties' case.

b. Inability of Class Members to Use Certificates

[37] The district court also erred by not adequately accounting for the different abilities (not inclinations) of class members to use the settlement. One sign that a settlement may not be fair is that some segments of the class are treated differently from others. See Piambino v. Bailey, 610 F.2d at 1329; In re GM Corp. Engine Interchange Litig., 594 F.2d at 1128; MCL 2d § 30.41, at 236. Consequently, the fact that the coupon settlement benefits certain groups of the class more than others suggests that the district court did not adequately discharge its duties to safeguard the interests of the absentees. See In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig., 617 F.2d 22 (3d Cir.1980) (ongoing duty of the judge to protect absentees); Piambino v. Bailey, 610 F.2d at 1329 (duty to assure the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate with respect to each category of the class).

People of lesser financial means will be unable to benefit comparably from the settlement. GM cites a number of other judicially approved class action settlements that awarded coupons and argues that, since this coupon provides far more consideration, it necessarily merits approval. See, e.g., New York v. Nintendo of Am. Inc., 775 F.Supp. 676, 679 (S.D.N.Y.1991) ($5 discount coupon for video game purchase of approximately $200); In re Cuisinart Food Processor Antitrust Litig., 1983-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 65, at 680, 1983 WL 153 (D.Conn.1983) (discount coupons with maximum value of $100 for machines costing approximately $100 to $300); In re Domestic Air Transp. Antitrust Litig., 148 F.R.D. 297, 331 (N.D.Ga.1993) (certificates worth between $10 and $200 for flights costing between $50 and $1500).

These cases, however, differ dramatically in the amount of money required to purchase the good--i.e. to realize the certificate's value--and in the frequency with which a typical consumer might expect to purchase the good. Whether a new truck costs between $20,000 and $33,000 as some objectors claim or some amount "far less" than that, as GM claims, this purchase is not comparable to buying a new food processor or even an airline ticket. As the district court acknowledged, "a substantial number of class members" would not be able to afford a new truck within the fifteen month coupon period. 846 F.Supp. at 338. Both the high cost of the trucks and the infrequency of a consumer's purchase of a new truck (relative to the fifteen month redemption period) make using these certificates significantly more difficult than those in the other coupon settlements, for all class members but particularly for the poorer ones.

Even where class members do manage to use the certificates, we are concerned about their real value. It may not be the case that the certificates saved those class members $1,000 on something they would have otherwise bought; those class members may only have purchased new GM trucks because they felt beholden to use the certificates. Thus, rather than providing substantial value to the class, the certificate settlement might be little more than a sales promotion for GM, in just the way that the Bloyed court characterized the settlement as a "tremendous sales bonanza" for GM. Bloyed v. General Motors Corp., 881 S.W.2d at 431.

We turn then to the fleet buyers, who constitute a readily identifiable category of plaintiffs arguably disadvantaged by the settlement. Budgetary constraints prevent some of them from replacing their entire fleets within the fifteen month redemption period. [FN26] Competitive bidding requirements also apparently impede many of these entities from being able to use the certificates. Because there is no assurance that GM will be the lowest bidder, the government entities bound by these requirements may not be able to use the certificates. See, e.g. The 809 Louisiana Public Bid Law, LA.R.STAT. § 38:2212(A)(1)(a). The district court dismissed these objections saying it was "confident that ingenious counsel will be able to structure bidding requirements so that the governmental entities can take full advantage of the certificates." 846 F.Supp. at 341. The district court's observation, while perhaps partially accurate, represents far too cavalier a dismissal of a potentially serious intra-class conflict and inequity.

FN26. This is true of, for example, the State of Iowa; State of Indiana; West Virginia Department of Transportation; State of New York; Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Department of Transportation and Department of General Services; County of Los Angeles, California; Jefferson Parish, Louisiana; and the City of New York.

The named plaintiffs argue that, if certain fleet buyers and individuals were dissatisfied with the settlement's terms, they could simply opt out of the class and pursue their own relief individually. While such an argument might theoretically be true, it ignores the realities of pursuing small claims. It would cost considerably more to litigate individual claims than the litigant could recover, using either a retrofit or a warranty theory to measure damages. And the district court apparently did not consider the possibility of a subclass of fleet owners, though that might alter the anatomy of the settlement. At all events, the right of parties to opt out does not relieve the court of its duty to safeguard the interests of the class and to withhold approval from any settlement that creates conflicts among the class. In sum, the relative inability of class members to use the certificates militates against settlement approval.

c. Value of the Transfer Option

In order to support its conclusion that the settlement was reasonable and fair, the district court cited the ability of fleet buyers and those consumers with budget constraints to realize value from the certificates by transferring them. We believe that the value of the transfer option is dubious, and consequently that the settlement was unfair to substantial portions of the class.

Simonsen's valuation of the settlement includes $157 million attributable to transferred certificates. Simonsen calculated that holders of the certificates could realize $250 from the sale of the transferred certificates (with a $500 face value). He gave no explanation for his assumption of a $250 market value. To the extent that this methodology is also dubious, it compounds the skewing of the valuation wrought by his usage estimates, see Part VI.A.1.a supra.

The value of this option depends on the development of a secondary market for these certificates. But there is no assurance that a market will develop; indeed, the restrictions on transfer, which GM claims are necessary to prevent fraud, pose significant barriers to the creation of such a market. The requirement that holders send in their $1,000 or original certificate to exchange for the $500 transfer certificate imposes very significant transaction costs since the parties must agree on a price before the original holder initiates the transfer process (which could easily last several weeks). During that process, there is substantial market risk, for the price of the transfer certificate could well move dramatically and induce a breach in the purchase agreement by one of the parties. Breaches would pose a real problem in this case because the transfer certificate cannot be reissued in another's name and thus cannot be resold. Because of these risks, individuals will be quite reluctant to contract for these transfer certificates. Even worse, the one-time transfer restriction also precludes the development of a market-making clearing house mechanism. In our view, therefore, it is quite possible that holders will be unable to realize any significant value from the transfer option.

Aside from the effect of the transfer restrictions, we also question Simonsen's valuation on the basis that it did not account for the inability to use the transfer certificates in conjunction with other incentive plans. For example, the incremental value of the $500 transfer certificate to class members would be completely eroded if GM offers a $1,000 dealer rebate program, since the class member would be forced to choose between the plans and would therefore be no better off than the general public.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The district court did not take cognizance of these factors. It erred when it presumed development of a liquid market for these transfer certificates with very little support in the record for it, and when it relied on a putative value of the transfer option arbitrarily ascribed by plaintiffs' expert to find 810 that the settlement was fair and reasonable. Although objectors might have made out an even stronger case by proffering their own expert on this valuation, the court has an independent duty to scrutinize the settlement's value and any evidence offered to support it. Accordingly, we find that evidence pertaining to the incremental value created by the transfer option does not support the valuation of the settlement.

d. GM's Implicit Valuation of the Claim

Our concerns about the adequacy of the settlement are complicated by the generous attorneys' fees GM agreed to pay in this case. Although originally GM vigorously contested the viability of the class claims and the class, the company, in view of its willingness to pay attorneys' fees of $9.5 million, may, at the time of settlement, have valued the claims at some substantial multiple of the fee award. [FN27] This $9.5 million attorney's fee award seems unusually large in light of the fact that the settlement itself offered no cash outlay to the class. GM's apparent willingness to pay plaintiffs' counsel close to $9.5 million indicates that the party in perhaps the best position to evaluate the claim may have thought the action, which both plaintiffs' counsel and the defense contend was not worth much, posed a significant enough threat to cause GM to strike a lucrative deal with plaintiffs' counsel.

FN27. GM was apparently so eager to have this $9.5 million fee approved that its counsel did not even object when the district court applied a multiplier notwithstanding clear Supreme Court precedent invalidating the use of multipliers. See City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 U.S. at ----, 112 S.Ct. at 2638. In our view, the fact that counsel to this large multinational corporation did not object to this clear error raises a smoking gun signaling GM's awareness of the questionable settlement it made.

[38] On the other hand, perhaps GM's valuation results only from the class counsel's decision to settle the action at an early stage and GM's desire to encourage that decision. Of course, a decision to settle that occurs at too incipient a stage of the proceedings also weighs against settlement approval. In short, while the settlement certainly presented difficult valuation issues, we believe that the district court erred when it uncritically accepted such high estimates of the settlement's value.

2. Valuing This Settlement Relative to the Relief Requested

The ninth Girsh factor also undermines the district court's decision. In the class action context, "the relief sought in the complaint" serves as a useful benchmark in deciding the reasonableness of a settlement. See Cotton v. Hinton, 559 F.2d 1326, 1330 (5th Cir.1977). Here the adequacy of the certificate settlement is particularly dubious in light of the claims alleged and the relief requested in the original complaint. The coupons offered by GM simply do not address the safety defect that formed the central basis of the amended complaint filed barely four months before the settlement. [FN28] The district court gave two justifications for its conclusion that, notwithstanding this discrepancy, the settlement was fair. First, the court explained, "no objector that complains that the settlement fails to retrofit the alleged defect has been able to come forth with a practical and safe modification for the trucks that has been designed, evaluated and tested." 846 F.Supp. at 342. Second, the court also relied on the fact that "[t]he proposed class settlement does not affect the rights of settlement class members to participate in any recall that NHTSA orders." Id. at 344.

FN28. In the amended consolidated complaint, class counsel described the trucks as "rolling firebombs" and estimated that an additional 200 deaths would occur unless GM took prompt corrective action.

Having considered the validity of these arguments, we conclude that they do not alleviate the substantial concerns created by the dramatic divergence of the settlement terms from the relief originally sought. This factor, therefore, strengthens our conviction that the settlement was not fair, reasonable, or adequate.

a. The Retrofit Issue

It is true that there does not appear to be a consensus retrofit. For each of the suggested 811 retrofits--relocation of the gas tank to the spare tire location, installation of a tank with a rubber bladder, or installation of a metal cage around the gas tank--there was evidence that the retrofit either was ineffective or caused other performance problems for at least some model years. On the other hand, there was also evidence supporting the efficacy of various retrofits. For instance, GM's own documents considered all three options and found that all would enhance the safety of the fuel systems. In addition, there was also potentially damaging testimony by Ronald E. Elwell, an engineering analyst at GM for fifteen of his twenty-eight years with the company and its chief expert in defending the fuel tank location and design on the full-size trucks in a number of significant product liability cases, see, e.g., Bowman v. General Motors, 427 F.Supp. 234, 236 (E.D.Pa.1977).

[39] In his deposition, Elwell testified that GM designed a retrofit using a steel cage which prevented the gas tanks from rupturing in side impact testing. He further testified that GM abandoned the retrofit (knowing, because of its own secret crash tests, of the increased fire danger) only because GM feared that it would give the public the wrong impression. GM attempted to impeach Elwell by characterizing him as a "disgruntled" (former) employee. By way of rehabilitation, objectors explain Ellwell's reduced duties as a result of health problems. Whether or not Ellwell's testimony could itself establish that the steel cage enhances safety, his testimony might have been important if the case had proceeded to trial. As a consequence, the district court abused its discretion when it summarily dismissed Elwell's testimony.

b. Availability of Other Remedies

The district court also relied on the existence of the NHTSA recall mechanism and the class members' unencumbered right to bring personal injury suits to justify its approval of a settlement that did not secure any of the equitable relief originally requested. While individual tort suits are not barred, the court's approval of this settlement (which does nothing to redress the alleged danger) foregoes the opportunity presented by the pleadings [FN29] to prevent injuries that tort suits can at best address only retrospectively. More importantly, the NHTSA remedy may be extremely limited in that it can only require a manufacturer to repair a vehicle first purchased within eight calendar years of the investigation. The court's observation that "all the plaintiffs may have statute of limitations problems in this action that may be equally as severe or worse than the eight year NHTSA limitation," 846 F.Supp. at 344, does nothing to increase the value of the theoretical access to a NHTSA recall remedy to the owner or others who may be injured by the trucks at some future point. Hence, the potential existence of a partial recall under NHTSA does not dispel our doubts about the settlement terms' diverging so far from the original complaint. In so concluding, we do not rely on the subsequent resolution of the NHTSA investigation, which did not include any recall.

FN29. The pleadings alleged a dominant control theory which, if successful, would have required GM, the manufacturer and distributor of these vehicles, to remedy the allegedly unreasonable safety defects before they could cause or exacerbate the damage and injury resulting from a side impact collision.

In sum, we agree with the district court that the evidence of the existence of an effective retrofit to be contradictory; nevertheless, we think that the very murkiness of this evidence and the fact that certain key evidence was wrongly excluded, especially in light of the magnitude of the alleged safety defect, militate against approving a settlement attained at such an early stage of the litigation which does nothing to repair the vehicles, not even creating a fund to finance retrofits. [FN30]

FN30. The district court also based its conclusion that the settlement was reasonable relative to the best possible recovery (i.e., relative to the relief requested) on its doubts that a court could or should award the recall/retrofit remedy requested. The court expressed some doubt that it had the power to order a recall by injunction, citing Walsh v. Ford Motor Co., 130 F.R.D. 260 (D.D.C.1990), and National Women's Health Network Inc. v. A.H. Robins Co., 545 F.Supp. 1177 (D.Mass.1982). Neither of these cases, however, conclusively establishes that the district court would lack the power to order a recall. The fact that no court has done it before and that there may be some logistical issues to surmount do not themselves support the court's conclusion; other class actions and complex litigation settlements have developed mechanisms for supervising and enforcing compliance with detailed affirmative injunctions. See, e.g., MCL 2d § 33.55 ("The court may also decide to appoint a master under Rule 53 to monitor future implementation of injunctive features of the settlement."). Although we intimate no view on the matter, it does seem to warrant further consideration. At all events, the district court could clearly have awarded relief that would require GM to set up a fund to finance retrofits initiated by the owners individually. See Bloyed, 881 S.W.2d at 433. The district court, therefore, did not lack the power to order a remedy that would have been more responsive to the class's concern about leaving the trucks on the road.

812 B. Complexity of the Suit

This factor is intended to capture "the probable costs, in both time and money, of continued litigation." Bryan v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 494 F.2d 799, 801 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 900, 95 S.Ct. 184, 42 L.Ed.2d 146 (1974). By measuring the costs of continuing on the adversarial path, a court can gauge the benefit of settling the claim amicably. The district court here concluded that the litigation "would be mammoth" and would have resulted in a "substantial delay in ... recovery." 846 F.Supp. at 334.

[40] While it is true, as the Youngs objectors argue, that the district court's conclusion in part depended on the ambitious definition of the class in terms of both geography and truck models included, the action would still involve a complex web of state and federal warranty, tort, and consumer protection claims even if the class had been subdivided and some of the legal issues simplified. Had the case not been settled, both plaintiffs and GM would have had to conduct discovery into the background of the six million vehicles owned by class members, including any representations allegedly made to plaintiffs. Each side would also have needed to hire or produce a retinue of experts to testify on a variety of complex issues. Undoubtedly, GM would have ardently contested the action at every step, leading to a plethora of pretrial motions. In contrast, this settlement made its remedies immediately available and avoided the substantial delay and expense that would have accompanied the pursuit of this litigation. The district court thus correctly concluded that the complexity factor weighed in favor of approving the settlement.

C. Reaction of the Class

[41] In an effort to measure the class's own reaction to the settlement's terms directly, courts look to the number and vociferousness of the objectors. Courts have generally assumed that "silence constitutes tacit consent to the agreement." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Bolger, 2 F.3d 1304, 1313 n. 15 (3d Cir.1993). However, a combination of observations about the practical realities of class actions has led a number of courts to be considerably more cautious about inferring support from a small number of objectors to a sophisticated settlement. See, e.g., In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 643 F.2d at 217-18; GM Interchange Litig., 594 F.2d at 1137.

In a class action case involving securities litigation, this court has recognized the possibility that the assumption that silence constitutes tacit consent "understates potential objectors since many shareholders have small holdings or diversified portfolios, ... and thus have an insufficient incentive to contest an unpalatable settlement agreement because the cost of contesting exceeds the objector's pro rata benefit." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Bolger, 2 F.3d at 1313 n. 15. Although this is not a securities class action and the amounts at stake could be significant, the absentees may not fully appreciate the size of their potential claims since, by excluding those owners whose trucks have already experienced some mishap related to the fuel tank design, the class may include only those who have no reason (outside of media coverage) to know of the latent defect or the claim based on the alleged existence of that defect.

Even where there are no incentives or informational barriers to class opposition, the inference of approval drawn from silence may be unwarranted. As we noted earlier, Judge Posner has explained that "where notice of the class action is ... sent simultaneously 813 with the notice of the settlement itself, the class members are presented with what looks like a fait accompli." Mars Steel, 834 F.2d at 681. In this case especially, the combined notice largely defeats the potential for objection since the notice did not inform the class that the original complaint had sought a retrofit. [FN31] Without information about the original complaint, absentees lacked any basis for comparing the settlement offered to them to the original prayer. It is instructive that many of the better-informed absentees, the fleet owners, did object.

FN31. There may also have been other deficiencies in the notice. The fact that the notice > did not disclose the attorneys' fees that the class counsel and defendants agreed to, and the fact that the notice suggested that class members could also have a recall remedy from NHTSA (though many of the trucks were so old that NHTSA lacked the power to recall them), may also have helped suppress potential objection.

[42] The fact that a poll conducted by class counsel's marketing expert reported that a minimum of sixty-three percent of the class would probably or definitely not use the coupon to purchase a new truck also suggests that the class could not possibly have so wholeheartedly endorsed the settlement. Moreover, one cannot infer approval of the settlement from requests for the transfer of the certificates, as the district court did. Those requests only signify that certain class members attempted to maximize the value they could realize from the settlement with which they were presented and thus might illustrate how futile class members thought objecting would be.

Although the absolute number of objectors was relatively low, [FN32] there are other indications that the class reaction to the suit was quite negative: The seemingly low number of objectors includes some fleet owners who each own as many as 1,000 trucks, and those who did object did so quite vociferously. In conjunction with the already-noted problems associated with assuming that the class members possessed adequate interest and information to voice objections, the appeals of those who actually objected demonstrate that the reaction of the class was actually negative, and not supported by the "vast majority of the class members" as the district court concluded. 846 F.Supp. at 334. The class reaction factor plainly does not, contrary to the district court's conclusion, weigh in favor of approving the settlement.

> FN32. Of approximately 5.7 million class members, 6,450 owners objected and 5,203 opted out.

D. Stage of Proceedings

[43] The stage-of-proceedings facet of the Girsh test captures the degree of case development that class counsel have accomplished prior to settlement. Through this lens, courts can determine whether counsel had an adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating. The district court found that this factor favored settlement approval, relying on the fact that settlement was presented for approval less than six months prior to the scheduled trial date.

[44] Given the purpose of this inquiry, however, it is more appropriate to measure the stage by reference to the commencement of proceedings either in the class action at issue or in some related proceeding. See In re Beef Antitrust, 607 F.2d at 180 (court referred to discovery in companion cases); City of Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 356 F.Supp. 1380, 1386 (S.D.N.Y.1972), rev'd on other grounds, 495 F.2d 448 (2d Cir.1974) (noting the extensive discovery in that and parallel cases); In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. at 483 (access to expert testimony and other evidence from parallel state court proceedings as well as to relevant public documents led court to believe counsel "availed themselves of all of these sources of information and conducted full adversarial negotiations ..."); 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.45, at 11-102 n. 247.

[45] The relevant period of time this case was in litigation was quite brief; approximately four months elapsed from the filing of the consolidated complaint to the reaching of the settlement agreement. To be sure, we cannot measure the extent of counsel's effort from the time of the litigation alone; class counsel in this case are known to be quite industrious, and the district court properly considered class-counsel's review of the materials 814 from prior product liability proceedings and from the Moseley personal injury case, Mosley v. General Motors Corp., No. 90-v-6276 (Fulton County, Ga. Feb. 4, 1993). However, mere access to the materials from other proceedings does not establish that counsel developed the merits, particularly where the other cases were premised on different theories of recovery. While we have no doubt that class counsel diligently reviewed those materials during the relevant period, nothing in the record demonstrates that they had conducted significant independent discovery or investigations to develop the merits of their case (as opposed to supporting the value of the settlement), that they had retained their own experts, or that they had deposed a significant number of the individuals implicated in the materials from these other proceedings. It is particularly noteworthy that the plaintiffs did not depose Ronald Elwell, although he could potentially have offered evidence that would have substantially bolstered the plaintiffs' case. See Part VI.A.2.a supra.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

At all events, the inchoate stage of case development reduces our confidence that the proceedings had advanced to the point that counsel could fairly, safely, and appropriately decide to settle the action. While the district court may have, laudably, been attempting to minimize the funds expended on discovery in order to maximize the funds available to the class, we think that the district court erred by not assuring that adequate discovery had been taken.

[46] Beyond the incipient stage of the case and the modest indications of substantive development, there is little basis for presuming vigorous prosecution of the case from the fact that settlement negotiations occurred. In ordinary class action settlements (i.e., where the court certifies the class before settlement negotiations commence) courts can presume that the negotiations occurred at arm's length because they have already determined that the counsel negotiating on behalf of the class adequately represents the class's interests. See Part IV.E supra, (discussion of adequacy of representation). In cases such as this one, however, where there has been no determination by the court that a proper class exists, the mere fact that negotiations transpired does not tend to prove that the class's interests were pursued. Id. In short, the incipient stage of the proceedings poses an even larger obstacle to settlement approval in settlement class situations than it would in normal class action settlements since courts have no other basis on which to conclude that counsel adequately developed the claims before deciding to settle.

Furthermore, to the extent that this stage-of-proceedings factor also aims to assure that courts have enough exposure to the merits of the case to enable them to make these evaluations, it cannot support settlement approval here. With little adversarial briefing on either class status or the substantive legal claims, the district court had virtually nothing to aid its evaluation of the settlement terms. We therefore conclude that the district court clearly erred in finding that this factor weighed in favor of settlement approval.

E. Risks of Establishing Liability

[47] By evaluating the risks of establishing liability, the district court can examine what the potential rewards (or downside) of litigation might have been had class counsel elected to litigate the claims rather than settle them. See In re Baldwin-United Corp., 105 F.R.D. 475, 482 (S.D.N.Y.1985) (comparing advantages of an immediate cash payment with risks involved in long and uncertain litigation). The district court here concluded that this factor also weighed in favor of approving the settlement since "there appear[ed] to be a substantial risk in establishing liability because of the complexity and size of [the] case along with the legal and factual problems raised by GM." 846 F.Supp at 336. While we agree with the district court that, on balance, the prospective difficulty faced by a nationwide class of establishing liability favored settlement, we believe the question is much closer than it thought, and thus the factor does not weigh heavily in favor of settlement as the district court believed.

We do not gainsay that the plaintiff class faced considerable obstacles in establishing liability. First, it is not clear that the plaintiffs815 could maintain the federal causes of action (the Lanham Act and Magnuson-Moss Act claims) without some proof that the trucks suffered some decline in value, which the class was unable to demonstrate by published Kelley Blue Book figures. Second, the trucks complied with the applicable federal safety standards during the relevant times. This would undoubtedly be strong, though not necessarily conclusive, evidence that the trucks were not (legally) defective. Statistics offered by GM also suggest that the trucks presented no greater risk than other trucks or vehicles. Moreover, data from actual accidents, as opposed to crash tests, failed to reveal any statistically significant difference in post-collision fires, injuries, or death relative to Ford or Dodge full-size pickups. Finally, to the extent that state law requires proof of individualized reliance for the misrepresentation claims, that would seem to pose a substantial barrier to proving class-wide liability (though, as noted below, that issue can be the subject of separate proceedings).

On the other hand, we are not impressed by some of the factors relied upon by the district court to support its finding of substantial risk in proving liability. The court cited the legal obstacles faced by the class, such as statutes of limitations varying in different states, the lack of vertical privity for the warranty claims (required in some states), the varying expiration of warranty durational limits, and the bar under some state laws to recovery for economic losses on tort claims. In response to these concerns, we point out that variations in the state procedural rules applicable to the class members have not prevented courts, including this one, from adjudicating class claims. See Hoxworth v. Blinder,

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Robinson & Co., 980 F.2d 912, 924 (3d Cir.1992) (affirming finding of (b)(3) predominance despite differences in state law). Moreover, even if these variations precluded the successful prosecution of the class claims, qua class claims, in this case they would not necessarily doom the action to failure.

Many of the difficulties posed by these variations could have been surmounted (or were more likely to be surmounted) if the action were not treated as a national class. Hence, the fact that the only other national automotive product defect class action ended in a defense verdict does not weigh heavily in favor of settlement. Indeed, to the extent that state-by-state variations in procedural laws created legal obstacles, the district court should have considered dividing the action into geographic sub-classes instead of considering the entire nationwide class to be hobbled. Additionally, the court should have considered making the inquiry we made in In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d at 1011, as to whether the case in terms of claims and defenses might fall into three or four patterns so that, with the use of special verdict forms, the case might have been manageable.

We also note that, in other cases, courts have certified nationwide mass tort class actions, which also include myriad individual factual and legal issues, relying on the capacity for a court to decertify or redefine the class subsequently if the case should become unmanageable. See, e.g., In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d at 1011 (3d Cir.1986). See also Bruce H. Nielson, Was the Advisory Committee Right?: Suggested Revisions of Rule 23 to Allow More Frequent Use of Class Actions in Mass Tort Litigation, 25 HARV.J.LEGIS. at 469 ("Some federal district court judges have suggested that this problem could be overcome and that multistate and nationwide classes could be certified by ... using Rule 23(c)(4) subclasses to account for variances in state law...."); see infra discussion on Risks of Maintaining Class Status. In any event, the failure of the district court to analyze the applicability of these various defenses to the different groups of plaintiffs may itself constitute an abuse of discretion. See Piambino v. Bailey, 610 F.2d 1306, 1329 (5th Cir.1980) ("[Vacatur] is demanded by the failure to assess the interests of the categories of plaintiffs and whether the settlement was fair, adequate and reasonable as to each." (emphasis in original)); see also Piambino v. Bailey, 757 F.2d 1112, 1140 (11th Cir.1985).

In addition, a plethora of other evidence buttressed the class claims. First, the depositions and affidavits from GM engineers, including Elwell, characterizing the design as 816 indefensible would have strongly supported the class claims notwithstanding the fact that Elwell was arguably vulnerable to impeachment on the basis of his own employment history. Second, the evidence from Zelenuk v. GM, No. 96-131262 (Tex.1992), that GM concealed crash tests might have been admitted in this proceeding. Third, the fact that GM has prevailed in three of the eight C/K pickup product liability trials does not support the settlement by confirming the weakness of the underlying claims, for at least two other plausible interpretations could explain this statistic. The fact that plaintiffs prevailed in five of the eight actions suggests that the claim alleged here was not so weak after all, at least if alleged by suitable plaintiffs. Moreover, such a statistic understates plaintiffs recoveries for these types of claims by not accounting for the individual settlements that have been reached.

[48] While we recognize that establishing liability would by no means have been easy or certain for the plaintiffs, the district court over- emphasized the importance of defenses applicable to only some class members under certain state laws and incorrectly discounted a significant body of evidence pertinent to proving liability. Therefore, it is not clear that plaintiffs faced the grave prospects on the merits that the district court apparently believed existed when it approved this settlement. In any event, the district court's failure to distinguish between groups of plaintiffs that did and those that did not confront difficult state law defenses constitutes an abuse of discretion. Piambino, 610 F.2d at 1329.

F. Risks of Establishing Damages

Like the previous factor, this inquiry attempts to measure the expected value of litigating the action rather than settling it at the current time. The district court relied heavily on this factor in approving the settlement: "[B]ecause the plaintiffs cannot adequately prove diminished value [of the pickups], the court concludes that risks of proving damages weigh strongly in favor of approval of the proposed class settlement." 846 F.Supp. 337. We do not share the district court's confidence, and conclude that this factor does not weigh strongly in favor of settlement.

GM argues that the class's warranty claim amounts to a claim for diminished resale value. Some United States Courts of Appeals and some state courts have rejected such claims either on the grounds that a warranty of merchantability does not include any guarantee about the product's resale value, see, e.g., Carlson v. General Motors Corp., 883 F.2d 287, 298 (4th Cir.1989), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 904, 110 S.Ct. 1923, 109 L.Ed.2d 287 (1990), or on the basis that the tort law of many states precludes tort claims for purely economic loss. In assessing this Girsh factor, the district court relied on its belief that the class could not demonstrate any diminution of the trucks' value relative to Ford and Dodge trucks by referring to the Kelley Blue Book.

We do not, however, believe that this is the only permissible approach to measuring the value of the defect. According to the Uniform Commercial Code, "the measure of damages for breach of warranty is the difference at the time and place of acceptance between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount." UCC § 2-714(2). Although diminished resale value might represent one method of measuring the damage suffered by owners from the publicity about the fuel tanks, it does not fully measure the difference between the value the defect-free truck would have had at delivery and the actual value of the truck as delivered. Measuring damages with a focus on resale value confounds the effects of varying rates of depreciation with the effect of the defect on the market value. The comparisons to the trucks of other manufacturers are similarly deficient measures since they fail to gauge the effect of the defect on the value of the trucks at delivery.

The cost of a retrofit, which effectively puts the truck in the condition in which it allegedly should have been delivered, may constitute an alternative measure of the damages arising from the breach of warranty. It 817 has the advantage of avoiding the speculative exercise of ascertaining the hypothetical value of defect-free trucks. See, e.g., McGrady v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 46 Ill.App.3d 136, 4 Ill.Dec. 705, 360 N.E.2d 818, 821- 22 (1977) (affirming an award of actual repair expenses where measuring value of vehicles as warranted upon delivery would be speculative); Nelson v. Logan Motor Sales, Inc., 179 W.Va. 539, 370 S.E.2d 734, 737 (1988) (reversing a ruling that repair costs were not evidence relevant to the value of the goods as accepted). Nothing in the UCC precludes such a measure; in fact, § 2- 714(1) of the Uniform Commercial Code provides:

> Where the buyer has accepted goods and given notification he may recover as damages for any nonconformity the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the seller's breach as determined in any manner which is reasonable.

(emphasis added) (citation omitted). [FN33]

> FN33. GM argues that a repair remedy is available only when it is less costly to the defendant than diminution in value. We think that such rigid rules are inappropriate, and that the court should carefully consider all of the proffered measures of damages. In any event, the costs of retrofit, though unsettled by the district court as of this juncture, will be less than the diminution in value (if the settling parties' valuation of the certificates is any indication of that diminution).

[49] Because the district court based its appraisal of this factor on its exclusive reference to the Kelley Blue Book and refused to consider alternative measures that appear to provide concrete (and substantial) damage figures, we believe that the court erred in finding that the risks of proving damages were so great that they strongly favored settlement approval.

G. Risks of Maintaining Class Status

[50] The value of a class action depends largely on the certification of the class because, not only does the aggregation of the claims enlarge the value of the suit, but often the combination of the individual cases also pools litigation resources and may facilitate proof on the merits. Thus, the prospects for obtaining certification have a great impact on the range of recovery one can expect to reap from the action.

The district court found that this factor favored settlement, although it did not place great weight on it. See 846 F.Supp. at 337. The Court cited the "myriad factual and legal issues" [FN34] and the vigorous contest waged by GM prior to settlement negotiations as the basis for this finding. Id. Two observations, which the district court appeared to ignore, weaken the basis for its finding that the risk involved in maintaining class status favored settlement.

> FN34. The legal issues that might vary among > class members included the claims of breach of warranty, negligent misrepresentation, and negligence and products liability, which would be based on the various state laws. Potentially variable factual issues included the fact that the disputed trucks did not use a single gas tank design, and the individualized proof of reliance required in some jurisdictions for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and breach of warranty claims.

[51] First, Rule 23(a) does not require that class members share every factual and legal predicate to meet the commonality and typicality standards. Baby Neal v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 56 (3d Cir.1994); Hassine v. Jeffes, 846 F.2d 169 (3d Cir.1988). Indeed, a number of mass tort class actions have been certified notwithstanding individual issues of causation, reliance, and damages. See, e.g., In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d at 1009. Because separate proceedings can, if necessary, be held on individualized issues such as damages or reliance, such individual questions do not ordinarily preclude the use of the class action device. See, e.g., Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 786 (3d Cir.1985).

For example, in School Asbestos, the court certified a nationwide (b)(3) class after counsel demonstrated to the court how the laws of the 50 states could be reduced to four general patterns, providing the framework for sub-classes if the nationwide action had proven unmanageable. [FN35] School Asbestos, 818 789 F.2d at 1011. Although there was no such demonstration in this case, we have no reason to doubt that such a demonstration would have been possible, for we cannot conceive that each of the forty-nine states (excluding Texas) represented here has a truly unique statutory scheme, or that all of the model years possessed distinct fuel tank designs. Damage issues, moreover, are not as individualized as the district court seemed to assume: the cost of repair could have served as the measure, and that cost would not vary much among class members. Hence, it is quite possible that a nationwide class could have been properly certified here.

> FN35. The district court could retain the sub-classes although they might not have properly been brought in that court originally. Cf. In re Agent Orange Prod. Liab. Litig., 100 F.R.D. 718, 724 (E.D.N.Y.1983) (recognizing hypothetical need of the court to apply the laws of different states); In re Agent Orange Prod., 580 F.Supp. 690 (E.D.N.Y.1984) (performing choice of law analysis).

Second, even if the action could not be certified as it was originally filed, the district court disregarded the possibility that there were other ways to aggregate the litigation and/or adjudication of these claims. The court might have considered dividing the class into geographic or model-year sub-classes or allowing the case to continue as a multi-district litigation for the remainder of pre-trial discovery. Each of those alternatives could have surmounted some of the individual issues while retaining some of the substantive advantages of the class action as framed here. Thus, the court's conclusion that this factor favored settlement may have reflected its mistaken all-or-nothing approach to certifying this national class.

Additionally, some of the district court's bases for finding such a significant risk in the ability to maintain class status undermine our confidence in the appropriateness of the district court's certification of the settlement class. For instance, if the district court correctly concluded that there were insurmountable barriers to class treatment, it could not certify the class for settlement purposes. See Part IV.F supra. It is true that settlement can reduce the differences among class members. But as we have explained, the standard for certification is the same for settlement classes as for conventional classes.

Moreover, if the class members' claims differed so much as to preclude certification even of geographic sub-classes, a settlement that treats all class members alike cannot be adequate and fair to all of them. For reasons stated above, this settlement does not even appear to treat all members of the class equitably. See Parts V.B and VI.A.1.b supra. Indeed, the settlement arguably affords the least relief to those class members with the most valuable claims, i.e., the fleet owners. See Part VI.A.1.b supra. The district court's concern, therefore, that the class could not maintain its class status, is somewhat inconsistent with its certification of the class for settlement purposes. [FN36]

> FN36. This anomaly is at least partially attributable to the court's failure to certify the class in the manner required by Rule 23. But some part of the inconsistency signals that the district court ignored the various ways that the class claims could be manageably litigated.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

We must agree that this class, even if appropriately crafted, confronted significant difficulties in maintaining its status in light of the claims alleged. Nevertheless, we are once again left with the impression that the district court too hastily approved a settlement because of its perhaps exaggerated concern that the quite ambitious initial nationwide definition of the class made it too difficult to form a class or group of classes capable of litigating these claims.

H. Ability to Withstand Greater Judgment

We find no error in the district court's resolution of this final Girsh factor--whether the defendant has the ability to withstand a greater judgment. The district court determined that GM "could withstand a judgment greater than the proposed settlement," although it did not attribute any significance to this finding "under these facts." 846 F.Supp. at 337.

I. Summary

Assuming arguendo that the district court had validly certified the settlement class (i.e., properly determined that it met the requisites of Rule 23), we hold that the settlement is not fair, reasonable, or adequate under the nine factor Girsh test of this circuit. The case was simply settled too quickly with too little development on the merits for certificates that may well be worth significantly less than the $1.98 to $2.18 billion estimate accepted by the district court. We conclude that the district court erred by accepting plaintiffs' witness's estimated valuations 819 when those so clearly lacked a sound methodological basis and when there were so many other indications-- including the inability of fleet owners and less wealthy class members to use the certificates, the dubious value of the transfer option, and GM's own apparent valuation of the claim--that the settlement was inadequate and unreasonable, and may even have been a marketing boon to GM.

Additionally, the failure of this settlement to abate the lingering safety problem, despite the vociferousness of the arguments for some recall or retrofit in the initial complaint, enhances our conviction that this settlement is inadequate. Beyond its dubious valuation of the settlement, the district court also over-estimated the risks of proving liability and damages and of maintaining class-status, and under-estimated the true degree of opposition to the settlement. The district court, however, correctly applied the complexity-of-suit and defendant's-capacity-for-greater-judgment factors.

Although we are not bound in any way by the proceedings in the separate Texas action, our decision today shares many of the concerns expressed by the Texas appellate court which set aside an approval of a very similar coupon settlement. See Bloyed, 881 S.W.2d at 422. Rule 42 of the Texas Rules of Civil Procedure, which governs class actions, is patterned after Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. The Bloyed court also was concerned about a settlement that provided absolutely nothing to those unwilling or unable to purchase another GM truck and that did nothing about the allegedly dangerous vehicles left on the road. The Texas court objected as well to the $9.5 million in attorneys' fees negotiated between that class's counsel and GM.

Balancing the Girsh factors, on the current record, this settlement clearly fails to meet the standards required for judicial approval. We leave open the possibility, however, that the district court on remand might develop the record more fully, properly approve the settlement, in either its original or a re-negotiated form, and, following the guidance offered by this opinion, certify the settlement class.

VII. APPROVAL OF THE ATTORNEYS' FEE AWARD

[52][53] The French and Young objectors also contest the district court's award of attorneys' fees. (Orders dated Dec. 20, 1993, 1993 WL 533155 and Feb. 2, 1994, 1994 WL 30301.) The court initially awarded fees without an independent review of the agreement, explaining its refusal to review the award: "[The fee agreement] is a matter of contract between the parties, rather than a statutory fee case, ... and payment of the fees will have no impact on the class members...." Subsequently, on February 2, 1994, the court issued an "amplification" of its prior ruling, which justified the award under both the lodestar [FN37] and the percentage of recovery [FN38] methods. Class counsel maintain that the objectors lack standing to contest the agreement made between GM and themselves, and that the objectors waived their right to appeal the award by not raising their objections below. Although our disposition of the certification and settlement approval issues obviates the need for a review of the fee award at this stage (and moots the waiver question), we highlight some of the primary issues in analyzing the appropriateness of a particular fee agreement for the district court on remand (in the event that the record is expanded, the class certified, and the settlement approved).

FN37. The lodestar method calculates fees by multiplying the number of hours expended by some hourly rate appropriate for the region and for the experience of the lawyer.

FN38. The percentage of recovery method resembles a contingent fee in that it awards counsel a variable percentage of the amount recovered for the class.

[54] At the outset, we note that a thorough judicial review of fee applications is required in all class action settlements. The district court did not accommodate practical realities here when, rationalizing its initial refusal to review the fee, it stated that the fee award was "to be paid by General Motors Corporation and will in no way reduce the recovery to any of the settlement class members." Indeed, this court has recognized that "a defendant is interested only in disposing 820 of the total claim asserted against it; ... the allocation between the class payment and the attorneys' fees is of little or no interest to the defense." Prandini v. National Tea Co., 557 F.2d 1015, 1020 (3d Cir.1977); 2 NEWBERG & CONTE § 11.09 (purpose of judicial review is to police abuses even where defendant pays plaintiff's fees). In light of these realities, class counsel's argument that objectors have no standing to contest the fee arrangement is patently meritless: the fee agreement clearly does impact their interests, as it is, for practical purposes, a constructive common fund.

[55] Moreover, as discussed at length in the adequacy of representation section, see Part V.B.3 supra, the divergence in financial incentives present here creates the "danger ... that the lawyers might urge a class settlement at a low figure or on a less-than-optimal basis in exchange for red-carpet treatment for fees," Weinberger v. Great Northern Nekoosa Corp., 925 F.2d 518, 524 (1st Cir.1991). See also Prandini, 557 F.2d at 1020 ("When the statute provides that a fee is to be paid as a separate item, the conflict between client and attorney may not be as apparent.... It is often present nonetheless."). This generates an especially acute need for close judicial scrutiny of fee arrangements that implicate this concern. See In re Agent Orange Prod. Liab. Litig., 818 F.2d 216, 224 (2d Cir.1987) ("The test to be applied is whether, at the time a fee sharing agreement is reached, class counsel are placed in a position that might endanger the fair representation of their clients and whether they will be compensated on some basis other than for legal services performed."); Piambino v. Bailey, 757 F.2d at 1139 ("Because of the potential for a collusive settlement, a sellout of a highly meritorious claim, or a settlement that ignores the interests of minority classes members, the district judge has a heavy duty to ensure that ... the fee awarded plaintiffs' counsel is entirely appropriate."). We have previously acknowledged that the potential for conflict between the class and its counsel is not limited to situations meeting the strict definitions of a common fund. [FN39]

FN39. The common fund doctrine provides that a private plaintiff, or plaintiff's attorney, whose efforts create, discover, increase, or preserve a fund to which others also have a claim, is entitled to recover from the fund the costs of his litigation, including attorneys' fees. Vincent v. Hughes Air West, Inc., 557 F.2d 759 (9th Cir.1977).

As we have also explained in this opinion, courts must be especially vigilant in searching for the possibility of collusion in pre-certification settlements. See Part IV.E supra. In addition, the court's oversight task is considerably complicated by the fact that these attorney-class conflicts are often difficult to discern in the class action context, "where full disclosure and consent are many times difficult and frequently impractical to obtain." Agent Orange, 818 F.2d at 224 (citations omitted). Finally, we emphasize that the court's oversight function serves not only to detect instances of "the actual abuse [that potential attorney-class conflicts] may cause, but also [the] potential public misunderstandings they may cultivate in regard to the interests of class counsel." Agent Orange, 818 F.2d at 225 (citing Susman v. Lincoln American Corp., 561 F.2d 86, 95 (7th Cir.1977), and Prandini v. National Tea Co., 557 F.2d 1015, 1017 (3d Cir.1977)); see also Grinnell I, 495 F.2d at 469; MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY Canon 9 (1975). On remand, therefore, the district court must be alert to the presence in the fee agreement of any actual abuse or appearance of abuse capable of creating a public misunderstanding.

Having emphasized the necessity for judicial review of fee awards in all class action settlements, we will briefly clarify some principles of fee approval for the district court to apply on remand if it certifies a class and approves a settlement.

Because the district court purported to use both the lodestar and the percentage-of-recovery methods, the actual grounds for its approval of the fee are not entirely clear. Although it is sensible for a court to use a second method of fee approval to cross check its conclusion under the first method, we believe that each method has distinct advantages for certain kinds of actions, which will make one of the methods more appropriate as a primary basis for determining the fee. 821 Here, for the reasons that follow, the court should probably use the percentage-of-recovery rather than the lodestar method as the primary determinant, although the ultimate choice of methodology will rest within the district court's sound discretion.

[56] The lodestar and the percentage of recovery methods each have distinct attributes suiting them to particular types of cases. See Task Force, 108 F.R.D. at 250-53. Ordinarily, a court making or approving a fee award should determine what sort of action the court is adjudicating and then primarily rely on the corresponding method of awarding fees (though there is, as we have noted, an advantage to using the alternative method to double check the fee). [FN40]

> FN40. For example, a court can use the lodestar method to confirm that a percentage of recovery amount does not award counsel an exorbitent hourly rate; similarly, the percentage of recovery method can be used to assure that counsel's fee does not dwarf class recovery.

[57] Courts generally regard the lodestar method, which uses the number of hours reasonably expended as its starting point, as the appropriate method in statutory fee shifting cases. Because the lodestar award is de-coupled from the class recovery, the lodestar assures counsel undertaking socially beneficial litigation (as legislatively identified by the statutory fee shifting provision) an adequate fee irrespective of the monetary value of the final relief achieved for the class.

This de-coupling has the added benefit of avoiding subjective evaluations of the monetary worth of the intangible rights often litigated in civil rights actions. Outside the pure statutory fee case, the lodestar rationale has appeal where as here, the nature of the settlement evades the precise evaluation needed for the percentage of recovery method. The lodestar method has the added benefit of resembling modes of fee determination in conventional bipolar litigation. On the other hand, the lodestar method has been criticized as giving class counsel the incentive to delay settlement in order to run up fees while still failing to align the interests of the class and its counsel, and for not rewarding counsel incrementally for undertaking the risk of going to trial. See Coffee, Understanding the Plaintiff's Attorney, 86 COLUM.L.REV. at 691.

[58] Courts use the percentage of recovery method in common fund cases on the theory that the class would be unjustly enriched if it did not compensate the counsel responsible for generating the valuable fund bestowed on the class. See Task Force, 108 F.R.D. at 250. Because these cases are not presumed to serve the public interest (as evidenced by the lack of a fee statute), there is no social policy reason that demands an adequate fee. Instead, the court apportions the fund between the class and its counsel in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure. Courts have relied on "common fund" principles and the inherent management powers of the court to award fees to lead counsel in cases that do not actually generate a common fund. See, e.g., In re Air Crash Disaster at Florida Everglades, 549 F.2d 1006 (5th Cir.1977) (using common fund principles in settlement of consolidated cases). The rationale behind the percentage of recovery method also applies in situations where, although the parties claim that the fee and settlement are independent, they actually come from the same source.

We believe that this case presents a situation more closely aligned with the common fund paradigm than the statutory fee paradigm. Although class counsel and GM contend (and the district court believed) that the fee was a separate agreement, thus superficially resembling the separate awards in statutory fee cases, private agreements to structure artificially separate fee and settlement arrangements cannot transform what is in economic reality a common fund situation into a statutory fee shifting case. Certainly, the court may select the lodestar method in some non-statutory fee cases where it can calculate the relevant parameters (hours expended and hourly rate) more easily than it can determine a suitable percentage to award. But the court must vigilantly guard against the lodestar's potential to exacerbate the misalignment of the attorneys' and the

class's interests. See Coffee, Understanding the Plaintiff's Attorney, 86 COLUM.L.REV. at 717. 822

In this case, the fee clearly was not made pursuant to a statute; therefore no legislatively endorsed policy favors assuring counsel an adequate fee. And the settlement, though difficult to value, did not award the even more hard-to-value intangible rights that could in some limited circumstances justify using the lodestar method. In sum, although this case presents a hybrid, we believe that it more closely resembles a common fund case.

[59] At all events, to the extent that the district court relied on the lodestar method, it erred by applying a multiplier. In the lodestar section of its analysis, the district court calculated the multiplier needed to apply to the simple lodestar result, $3,158,182, to obtain the requested amount, $9,500,000. (see Feb. 2, 1994 Order, 1994 WL 30301 at *2.) After estimating the multiplier to be between 2.5 and 3, the court proceeded with a "contingent nature of the success" analysis of the multiplier's appropriateness from Lindy. See Lindy Bros. Builders Inc., v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 540 F.2d 102, 116-17 (3d Cir.1976). The Supreme Court, however, has rejected the use of multipliers to enhance the lodestar's hourly rate amount. See City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 U.S. at ----, 112 S.Ct. at 2638. Notwithstanding this clear Supreme Court precedent, GM's counsel failed to apprise the district court about Dague even though its pertinence was patent.

[60] To the extent that the district court construed the fee agreement as a common fund, its analysis also appears to misapprehend key aspects of the percentage of recovery method. In common fund cases, a district judge can award attorneys' fees as a percentage of the fund recovered. See Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 900 n. 16, 104 S.Ct. 1541 n. 16, 79 L.Ed.2d 891 (1984); In re Smithkline Beckman Corp. Secur. Litig., 751 F.Supp. 525 (E.D.Pa.1990). One court has noted that the fee awards have ranged from nineteen percent to forty-five percent of the settlement fund. Id. at 533. Here, the district court summarily asserted that, although it could not value the settlement precisely, "whatever method is used in computing the ultimate value of the settlement, the attorneys' fees sought in this action will constitute an extremely small percentage of the total value and will be minute compared to the aforesaid 19-45% range." (Feb. 2, 1994 Order, 1994 WL 30301 at *4.)

Given our skepticism of the settlement's value generally and of Simonsen's estimates in particular (see supra discussion on settlement fairness), we are much less sanguine that the $9,500,000 fee actually constitutes an acceptable percentage of the class recovery. On the current record, we are constrained to reject that conclusion. At the very least, the district court on remand needs to make some reasonable assessment of the settlement's value and determine the precise percentage represented by the attorneys' fees. The problem, however, is not simple, for arguably, any settlement based on the award of certificates would provide too speculative a value on which to base a fee award. (See Task Force, 108 F.R.D. at 250-53 (discussing the preferability of the lodestar method for civil rights actions where the difficulty of valuing injunctive relief complicates the calculation of a fee using the percentage method.))

On remand, the district court might wish to examine the fee primarily under the percentage of recovery scheme. If so, the court will need to determine a precise valuation of the settlement on which to base its award. The court may however, as a check, want to use the lodestar method to assure that the precise percentage awarded does not create an unreasonable hourly fee.

VIII. OTHER ISSUES; CONCLUSION

Objectors also appealed the district court's denial of discovery into the settlement negotiations and the adequacy of the notice with respect to the attorneys' fees. In light of our holding on the certification and settlement approval issues and its effect on the need for us to judge the fee award, we need not reach these issues.

For the foregoing reasons, we will vacate the orders certifying the provisional class and approving the settlement and remand for further proceedings 823 consistent with this opinion. Parties to bear their own costs.

JOHN R. GIBSON, Senior Circuit Judge, concurring in the central holding and with the judgment.

The court today issues a truly masterful opinion. I concur fully in the central holding of the court that the district court failed to make adequate findings under Rule 23(a) to justify class certification, and that the case must be remanded to the district court for further proceedings, and amplification of the record. I concur fully in the reasoning of the court that supports this conclusion and holding, and concur specifically in Parts I, II, III, IV.A, D, E, F, and V.A. and B.1 of the opinion.

In addition, I certainly agree that it follows that the district court on remand must consider further the issues of the adequacy of representation, whether the settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate, and if reached, issues relating to attorneys' fees.

With respect to the remainder of the opinion, I am of the thought that some of the discussion is simply not required to support the holding we reach, specifically Part IV.B and C. In view of the fact that we are remanding for adequate findings under Rule 23(a), I think we need not reach the issue of whether the class requisites have been made on the current record, as we can anticipate that the district court will conduct further proceedings and make additional record in order to fully support such findings. Thus, I think Part V.B.2 dealing with adequacy of representation, Part VI dealing with whether the settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate on the record before us, and Part VII dealing with issues relating to the attorneys' fees simply need not be addressed in detail as they may come before this court on a far different record after remand.

I must make clear that I have misgivings about not joining in the full opinion. The opinion is a most thorough and scholarly analysis of the numerous issues surrounding settlement of class actions and approval of settlement classes. It will stand as the opinion of the court. My concerns are simply that the court has discussed areas that it need not reach.

Supreme Court of Illinois.

Walter F. KERRIGAN, Appellee,
v.
UNITY SAVINGS ASSOCIATION et al., Appellants.

No. 45922.

Sept. 17, 1974.

Derivative action by permanent reserve shareholder of savings and loan association on behalf of himself, association and all association's other members against five directors of association and against corporate insurance broker for an accounting of profits and injunctive relief. The Circuit Court, Cook County, Walter P. Dahl, J., granted defendants' motion for summary judgment and dismissed the action and plaintiff appealed. The Appellate Division of the First Circuit, 11 Ill.3d 766, 297 N.E.2d 699, reversed and remanded and defendants' petition for leave to appeal was granted. The Supreme Court, Schaefer, J., held that it was within power of savings and loan association to act as broker in placement of insurance; that where some directors of association did not give the association an opportunity to act as an insurance broker, directors organized an insurance agency to which the association referred its borrowers for mortgage insurance, and there were possible conflicts of interest directors were liable to association.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Underwood, C.J., and Ward and Goldenhersh, JJ., took no part in consideration or decision of case.

22 40 David P. List and Jerrold E. Fink, of Sidley & Austin, Chicago, for appellants.

Frank J. Mackey, Jr., and Sidney Z. Karasik, Chicago, for appellee.

SCHAEFER, Justice.

The plaintiff, Walter F. Kerrigan, a permanent reserve shareholder of Unity Savings *41 Association, a savings and loan association chartered under the Illinois Savings and Loan Act (Ill.Rev.Stat.1973, ch. 32, pars. 701 through 23 944), brought this derivative action in the circuit court of Cook County on behalf of himself, Unity, and all Unity's other members against five directors of Unity and against Plaza Insurance Agency, Inc. The complaint sought an accounting of profits and injunctive relief. After the complaint and the answer had been filed, each party moved for summary judgment. The court granted the defendants' motion, and dismissed the action. On the plaintiff's appeal the Appellate Court for the First District reversed and remanded. (11 Ill.App.3d 766, 297 N.E.2d 699.) We granted defendants' petition for leave to appeal.

The complaint alleged that Unity was the successor to a savings and loan association formed prior to 1959, and that Plaza had been organized in 1962 by 'some or all' of the five individual defendants. The five include three directors who are also officers of Unity, Saul Z. Bass, Unity's president, Mitchell H. Bass, a vice president, and Howard Bass, the secretary and also a vice president. These three defendants also hold positions with Plaza. Saul Z. Bass is Plaza's president, Mitchell H. Bass is its registered agent, and Howard Bass is its secretary. The complaint does not specify what positions, if any, are held with either Unity or Plaza by the two remaining individual defendants, Louis Speer and Myron Voss. It is admitted by the answer, however, that the individual defendants control Unity's business affairs.

The complaint further alleges that Plaza has its offices in the building owned and occupied by Unity under a lease from the latter, and that Unity 'refers' its borrowers to Plaza to obtain fire and homeowner's insurance and other forms of insurance coverage in connection with mortgage loans made by Unity. These allegations were all admitted by the answer. In addition, in response to interrogatories from the plaintiff, Plaza admitted that it had advertised itself as an 'agent' of Unity.

The complaint contained a further allegation that Plaza was empowered under its articles of incorporation to 24 place loans on real estate on terms competitive with loans which Unity was authorized to make. The defendants admitted that allegation, but stated in their answer that Plaza had not done so. Defendants also stated in their answer, and in an affidavit supporting their motion for summary judgment, that the lease of office space to Plaza was at a rental no lower than that prevailing for comparable property.

The theory of the complaint was that the individual defendants, by creating Plaza, had assumed a role which would produce a conflict of interest with their positions as directors and officers of Unity. Plaintiff also made the specific charge that by selling insurance to borrowers from Unity the defendants had appropriated for their own benefit a business opportunity which properly belonged to Unity. The relief sought included an accounting of profits, the imposition of a constructive trust on all shares of Plaza stock, and an injunction restraining defendants from continuing the practices complained of. From the answers to plaintiff's interrogatories by Plaza it appears that over the period from 1962 through 1969 Plaza earned approximately $428,000 in insurance commissions. Although one of plaintiff's interrogatories requested information on the amount of Plaza's commissions on insurance placed on persons referred to Plaza by Unity, no figures with respect to that item appear in the record.

The only affirmative defenses raised in the answer with respect to the admitted allegations of the complaint, and the only grounds relied on in defendants' motion for summary judgment were that Unity lacked the power under the Savings and Loan Act to write insurance, and that Unity was in any event forbidden to do so by provisions of the Illinois Insurance Code *42 of 1937 (Ill.Rev.Stat.1973, ch. 73, par. 613 et seq.). The appellate court determined that Unity did have the legal power to engage in the insurance business, either directly or through a subsidiary, and reversed the decision of the circuit court. 25 Because the appellate court felt that the asserted liability of the defendants involved questions of fact which could not be determined without a trial, it remanded the case for a determination of those questions.

Each party has argued the cause here, as they did in the appellate court, on the theory that defendants cannot be held liable if Unity lacked the legal power to perform the business activities engaged in by Plaza, since in that event there would have been no business opportunity for defendants to appropriate. We conclude, as did the appellate court, that at the time when Plaza was formed Unity did have the power to engage in the same activities performed by Plaza. We are of the opinion, however, that upon the facts alleged in the complaint and admitted by defendants the liability of the latter does not depend solely on whether in 1962 Unity had the power to engage in the insurance brokerage business.

We turn first to the question of Unity's powers under the Savings and Loan Act. While no power to act as an insurance broker is expressly conferred by the Act, section 1--8 thereof (Ill.Rev.Stat.1961, ch. 32, par. 708) does provide: 'An association also shall have any power conferred on a corporation by the Business Corporation Act, and any power not prohibited by law, which is reasonably incident to the accomplishment of the express powers conferred upon the association by this Act.' One of the powers expressly conferred by the Act is the power granted by section 5--1(b) (Ill.Rev.Stat.1961, ch. 32, par. 791) to make loans to members on the security of real estate.

[1][2][3] When such a loan is made on improved property it is in the obvious interest of the mortgagee that the improvement be covered by insurance in an adequate amount. Although the mortgagee, under Illinois law, acquires only a lien on the property (Kling v. Ghilarducci (1954), 3 Ill.2d 454, 460, 121 N.E.2d 752), its interest is an insurable one to the extent of the debt (Trustees of Schools v. St. Paul Fire and Marine 26 Insurance Co. (1921), 296 Ill. 99, 102, 129 N.E. 567), and the mortgagee may therefore procure the insurance itself. Alternatively, the mortgagee may require the mortgagor to obtain the insurance, and may, as an incident to the making of the loan, act as the broker for the borrower in placing the insurance.

[4] The question of the authority of the mortgagee to act as broker was answered over 100 years ago in Chicago Building Society v. Crowell (1872), 65 Ill. 453. There a loan association, having obtained a covenant from a mortgagor to keep the buildings on the premises insured, agreed to obtain the policy for him. Before that objective had been realized, however, the buildings were destroyed in the Chicago fire, and the mortgagor brought suit against the association for breach of its agreement. By way of defense the association urged that its charter did not empower it to procure insurance, and that the agreement to do so was not incidental to the purpose for which the association had been formed. In rejecting that defense the court stated:

> 'The company was expressly authorized and empowered by the act of the legislature to make loans and provide for the security of the same on real estate, as well upon improved as upon unimproved property. As an incident to security upon improved real estate, no reason is perceived why it may not be regarded as within the powers granted, that the corporation should have the right to contract for insurance on the improvements on the property, to make more available and certain their security, and such a contract would be for the benefit of the company.' 65 Ill. at 457.

*43 While there is language in the opinion relating to estoppel, the decision, in our opinion, established that it was within the power of a savings and loan association to act as a broker in the placement of insurance, because that activity 27 was reasonably incident to the making of the mortgage loan. A similar conclusion was reached in Goodman v. Perpetual Building Association (D.D.C.1970), 320 F.Supp. 20. Our own conclusion is reinforced by the fact that section 506 of the Insurance Code (Ill.Rev.Stat.1973, ch. 73, par. 1065.53) contains a specific prohibition against the licensing of certain classes of banks as insurance agents or brokers, but contains no parallel prohibition directed against savings and loan associations.

In view of our conclusion that Unity can engage, and in 1962 could have engaged, in the insurance brokerage business directly, we need not decide whether Unity, prior to changes in the Savings and Loan Act made in 1967, could have formed a subsidiary to conduct such a business. For the same reason we need not determine whether the individual defendants, assuming that Unity could not have engaged in the insurance brokerage business until 1967, were obligated at that time to terminate their connection with Plaza or to tender to Unity, in some manner, the opportunity to engage in the insurance business.

With the question of Unity's corporate powers disposed of adversely to defendants, we reach the question whether the individual defendants usurped a business opportunity open to Unity. On this issue we start with the basic proposition that a director of a corporation owes a fiduciary duty to it. That proposition, often endorsed by this court, was reaffirmed in Shlensky v. South Parkway Building Corp. (1960), 19 Ill.2d 268, 166 N.E.2d 793, a case involving leases to and purchases of property from other companies in which directors of the building corporation held an ownership interest or a directorship. It was charged by minority stockholders of the corporation, and this court found, that the challenged transactions were unfair to the corporation, that they amounted to a depletion of its assets and the siphoning off of its profits for the benefit of the other concerns. See 19 Ill.2d at 287, 291, 166 N.E.2d 793.

It may be conceded that if a corporation has been 28 informed by a director of a business opportunity, which it declines, the director may then be free to pursue the opportunity himself. That was the situation in Diedrick v. Helm (1944), 217 Minn. 483, 14 N.W.2d 913, in which the secretary of a savings and loan association was permitted to establish his own separate insurance agency after the association had considered and rejected the possibility of operating its own agency.

In the present case, however, no claim is made that Unity was informed of the possibility that it might enter into the insurance business or of the intention of the defendants to do so on their own if Unity did not. Defendants stress their belief that Unity could not have legally engaged in the business. But that belief, assuming that it was held in 1962, cannot operate as a substitute for defendants' duty to present the question to Unity for Unity's independent evaluation. Since the individual defendants, as directors, admittedly controlled Unity, the requisite disclosure and tender would necessarily have had to be made to Unity's shareholders.

[5] For various legal, financial, or other reasons Unity might properly have concluded as a matter of business judgment that it did not want to become an insurance broker. But if the doctrine of business opportunity is to possess any vitality, the corporation or association must be given the opportunity to decide, upon full disclosure of the pertinent facts, whether it wishes to enter into a business that is reasonably incident to its present or prospective operations. If directors fail to make such a disclosure and to tender the opportunity, the prophylactic purpose of the rule imposing a fiduciary obligation requires *44 that the directors be foreclosed from exploiting that opportunity on their own behalf. (See Lutherland, Inc. v. Dahlen (1947), 357 Pa. 143, 53 A.2d 143; Durfee v. Durfee & Canning, Inc. (1948), 323 Mass. 187, 80 N.E.2d 522.) In the latter case, with regard to the alleged financial inability of a corporation to make certain purchases, the 29 court quoted the following passage from Irving Trust Co. v. Deutsch (2d Cir. 1934), 73 F.2d 121, 124: 'If the directors are uncertain whether the corporation can make the necessary outlays, they need not embark it upon the venture; if they do, they may not substitute themselves for the corporation any place along the line and divert possible benefits into their own pockets.' (323 Mass. 187, 202, 80 N.E.2d 522, 530.) We consider that this reasoning is equally applicable to a claim that a corporation was precluded from following a course of action by legal, rather than financial, reasons. See Note, Corporate Opportunity, 74 Harv.L.Rev. 765 (1961).

[6] The present case is not one in which the defendants did no more than capture an opportunity which came their way because of their positions with Unity, an opportunity which Unity had indeed created through its lending activities, although those factors alone would in our opinion be enough to fix liability upon defendants. (See Guth v. Loft, Inc. (1939), 23 Del.Ch. 255, 5 A.2d 503; Rosenblum v. Judson Engineering Corp. (1954), 99 N.H. 267, 109 A.2d 558.) Here it is admitted that the individual defendants caused Unity to 'refer' its borrowers to Plaza, whose office was strategically located in the same building as that of Unity.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The pleadings do not reveal the terms in which these 'referrals' were couched or the manner in which they were made, but it cannot be supposed that the arrangement between Unity and Plaza was not financially advantageous to the latter. Had it been otherwise the defendants would not have persevered in it. Whether the funneling of prospective customers to Plaza is regarded as an appropriation of an asset of Unity, denominated as good will, or whether it is regarded as an employment of Unity's facilities without compensation to it, the result is the same: The defendants were actively exploiting their position as directors of Unity for their personal benefit. See Guth v. Loft, Inc. (1939), 23 Del.Ch. 255, 5 A.2d 30 503; Durfee v. Durfee & Canning, Inc. (1948), 323 Mass. 187, 80 N.E.2d 522; Wadmond, 'Conflicts of Business Interests,' 17 Bus.Lawyer 48 (1961); Wadmond, 'Seizure of Corporate Opportunity,' 17 Bus.Lawyer 63 (1961).

The complaint also charged that in creating Plaza the individual defendants had placed themselves in a position where a conflict of interest would arise.

A potential conflict clearly exists, for under its articles of incorporation Plaza was authorized not only to engage in the insurance business but also to make loans on real estate, the same business in which Unity was engaged. The representation by defendants that Plaza had not hitherto undertaken to exercise that power does not insure that it might not do so in the future. But even as to Plaza's existing operations one can discern areas in which its interests and those of Unity might diverge, among them the selection of the insurance carrier, the reliability of Plaza's performance as to the periodic renewal of insurance, and the size of the commissions charged by Plaza.

[7][8][9] Our decisions have long applied the overriding rule that directors are not to be placed in a position where their own individual interests might interfere with the performance of their duties to their corporation. As early as Gilman, Clinton and Springfield R.R. Co. v. Kelly (1875), 77 Ill. 426, where directors of a railroad company had become stockholders in a company with which the railroad had a construction contract, we observed that the rule 'stands on the obligation which a party owes to himself and his principal, that forbids him to assume a position which would ordinarily excite a conflict between *45 his individual interest and a faithful discharge of his fiduciary duties.' (77 Ill. 426, 434.) The same thought was expressed in Farwell v. Pyle-National Electric Headlight Co. (1919), 289 Ill. 157, 124 N.E. 449, in which a director had purchased patent rights under which his corporation was the exclusive licensee. (See 289 Ill. at 166--167, 124 N.E. 449.) In our view the fiduciary obligations of a director cannot be diluted to the 31 point that they include only the situation in which the director is a seller to or a purchaser from the corporation, or holds an interest in specific property, or under a contract, adverse to the corporation.

The defendants have renewed in this court their contention that Unity would have been precluded from entering into the insurance brokerage business by section 508 of the Illinois Insurance Code of 1937 (Ill.Rev.Stat.1973, ch. 73, par. 1065.55). That section specifies that the Director of the Department of Insurance shall not issue a broker's or an agent's license unless the applicant is to be 'actively engaged' in the insurance business. The quoted term is defined to mean that the applicant 'intends' to write insurance on the property or risks of others in an amount such that the total volume of premiums from that source will be at least twice that obtained from insurance on the property or risks of the applicant itself, or the property or risks of its officers or directors, if the applicant is an association or corporation. The argument made is that Unity, as the mortgagee, would be insuring its own risk, as well as the risks of its borrowers, who are thereby its members.

From what we have previously said in this opinion on the question of Unity's powers under the Savings and Loan Act, it is clear that this contention of defendants does not raise a valid defense. That Unity would have been denied a license under section 508 cannot be retroactively assumed, and the record does not show that defendants ever caused Unity to apply for a license.

In reversing the decision of the circuit court the appellate court directed that the cause be remanded and restored to the docket for further proceedings, which the appellate court saw as including a determination whether Unity could 'in fact' engage in the business of insurance brokerage. While a remand is necessary in order for the trial court to ascertain the amounts to which the plaintiff is entitled and to determine what other relief should be 32 granted, in the view that we take of this case, the question of defendants' liability is established on the basis of the pleadings and no trial is required.

The judgment of the appellate court is accordingly reversed in this respect, and the cause is remanded to the circuit court of Cook County for further proceedings in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Charitable corporation filed petition seeking court authorization of transaction that would result in the sale of its real estate assets and closure of nonprofit hospital. The Supreme Court, New York County, Bernard J. Petition denied.

The Manhattan Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital ("MEETH" or "the hospital") has petitioned for authorization to sell substantially all of its assets, pursuant to Not-For-Profit Corporation Law § 511, which requires that the court be satisfied that the "consideration and the terms of the transaction are fair and reasonable" and that the "purposes of the corporation * * * will be furthered." (Not-For-Profit Corporation Law § 511[d].) What is sought to be sold is MEETH's hospital facility located at 64th Street in Manhattan, to Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center ("MSKCC") and Downtown Group/Colony Capital ("Downtown"), 577 a real estate developer. The Hon. Eliot Spitzer, in his capacity as Attorney General of the State of New York ("AG"), a statutorily necessary party, has opposed this petition. A thirteen day evidentiary hearing was held which, with the agreement of all parties, merged the preliminary injunction application with the hearing on the merits of the section 511 petition.

FINDINGS OF FACT

A. Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital

Established in 1869, originally located on East 34th Street, and then on East 41st Street, MEETH relocated to its present East 64th Street location in 1906, where it ultimately erected three buildings: the Old Hospital Building, the New Hospital Building and the Annex. At this location, it presently operates a highly sophisticated research and teaching (until it terminated its residency program on June 30, 1999), world-renowned, acute care specialty hospital, providing out-patient and in-patient medical services in three specialized areas: ophthalmology, otolaryngology, and plastic surgery. In February 1995, MEETH opened an Outpatient Extension Center in Harlem (the "Harlem Center"), which, unlike the 64th Street facilities, does not provide in-patient care. Instead, it currently functions similarly to the out-patient clinic at 64th Street, and refers patients to 64th Street, for sub-specialty clinics and surgery.

According to its Certificate of Incorporation, MEETH's corporate purposes are:

> to establish, provide, conduct, operate and maintain a hospital in the City, County and State of New York for the general treatment of persons suffering from acute short-term illnesses; performing general plastic surgery; treating persons suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose or throat; and maintaining a school for post graduate instruction in the treatment of such illnesses, performing such surgery, and the treatment of such diseases, and conducting associated and basic research.

By all accounts, MEETH has outstandingly realized these corporate purposes. In order to fulfill its teaching purposes, it developed premier residency programs in the fields of ophthalmology and otolaryngology ("ENT"), as well as a premier fellowship program in aesthetic or plastic surgery. It has consistently been ranked among the top specialty hospitals in the United States. Its physicians have achieved world acclaim for their advancements in medical care and for their provision of acute care in these specialty areas. As to this there is no dispute.

In recent years there have been significant advances in medical technology, and an upheaval in the dynamics and economics of healthcare. The impact of these changes has not escaped specialty hospitals, such as MEETH. Inpatient censuses have been drastically decreasing, a trend which is expected to continue, if not accelerate, with the ongoing shifts to ambulatory surgery. Concomitant with the reduction of inpatient activity, which phenomenon itself has resulted in the reduction of hospital revenues, there have been fundamental changes in hospital economics. This, too, has impacted MEETH, which derives its revenues from several sources, including self-paying patients, reimbursements from Medicare, Medicaid and private health care insurers, and charitable contributions. The Balanced Budget Act of 1997, Pub.L. No. 105- 33, 111 U.S.Stat. 251, has resulted in a reduction of Medicare revenues. There have also been similar reductions in reimbursements from State Medicaid and private health care insurers. This containment of medical expenses, spawned in no small part by the advent of managed care, which has decreased inpatient admission in favor of ambulatory surgery, and other cost cutting measures, is not expected to abate.

MEETH sought to cope with this changed landscape. In 1993, the hospital obtained approval to decertify beds and to 578 establish six additional operating rooms for ambulatory surgery. In 1995, it opened its Harlem Center as a community outreach program, which also served to funnel patients to 64th Street. Dr. George A. Sarkar, Ph.D., J.D., MEETH's Executive Director, sent to the Board members a "proposed strategic plan," dated November 4, 1998, in which he discussed the "Sale or Lease of the Annex Building" and establishment of the proposed Brooklyn Extension Center ("Brooklyn Center"). Thereafter, in December 1998, MEETH applied to the State Department of Health ("DOH") for authorization to open the Brooklyn Center. In its application, MEETH explained that it "is a specialty hospital located ... at east 64th Street." Although approved, the Brooklyn Center has not been opened.

Then in 1999 MEETH's Board of Directors abruptly decided to sell the 64th Street facility to MSKCC and Downtown; to terminate its residency programs; to close the Hospital; to transform the Harlem Center and the planned Brooklyn Center from extension centers to free standing Diagnostic and Treatment ("D&T") Centers; and to eventually add further D&T centers in the South Bronx. Following these decisions, MEETH entered into a nonbinding "Memorandum of Understanding" for a sponsorship agreement with New York-Presbyterian Hospital ("NYPH"), under which NYPH would become MEETH's sole corporate member. Implementation of these plans necessitated the sale of the 64th Street facility, i.e., substantially all of the assets of MEETH, and led to this ligation.

B. "Friends of MEETH" Letter

On October 22, 1998, the Board of Directors received a confidential memorandum, "Re: Crisis at MEETH," from "a group of physicians practicing at Manhattan Eye, [Ear] and Throat Hospital comprising substantially all of the members of the medical staff ... an informal group known as the 'Friends of MEETH.' " This memorandum stated that there was a "crisis at MEETH," discussed a host of problems and recommended "that the Board of Directors, in keeping with its fiduciary responsibility to the Hospital, appoint an independent hospital consulting firm to examine the operations of MEETH in their entirety." Upon receipt of this memorandum, Mr. Lindsay C. Herkness, III, the Board President, contacted Dr. Sherrell Aston, Chairman of the Plastic Surgery Department, and requested that they meet "immediately." Mr. Herkness stated that "[the Friends of MEETH letter] is a bad document, a dangerous document, that could be harmful to both the physicians and the hospital" and asked Dr. Aston "to use [his] influence on the medical staff to withdraw it." When Dr. Aston refused, Mr. Herkness replied if "you guys give me a hard time and don't do that, I'm going to sell the hospital." Mr. Herkness did not deny that he made the remark. Rather, he testified that he did not "recall anything about selling the hospital. It was not on my mind."

Thereafter, Mr. Herkness appointed a Special Committee, consisting of himself, Charles S. Whitman, III, Esq., and Mr. Norman Straus, to "look into the matters raised in the memorandum and to report to the full Board." Mr. Herkness testified that there "was a great deal of concern about the allegations and the need to get to the bottom of it." Deloitte & Touche L.L.P. ("Deloitte"), the Hospital's auditors, were retained to review the financial concerns expressed in the Friends of MEETH letter. In addition, the Special Committee directed the hospital staff to respond, point-by-point, and the Committee had informal meetings with members of the medical staff.

On December 16, 1998, there was a Board meeting, where members of the medical staff were invited to express their views. As Secretary of the Board, Mr. Whitman prepared one page of minutes from the staff notes, which merely mentioned that the physicians in attendance 579 were allowed to state their concerns, but it did not indicate the nature of the statements. Mr. Whitman explained that "[a]s a corporate lawyer you manage to keep your Board of Directors minutes sanitized." It was after this testimony, and as a result of a court order to produce the staff notes, that twenty-six single-spaced pages of notes were produced. These notes show that twenty physicians spoke out. Mr. Herkness not only described the meeting as "historic" and said that the Special Committee and the "Friends of MEETH" would meet soon, but he sent a memorandum to the Members of the Board of Surgeon Directors confirming that "[o]nce the staff has made their report to the Special Committee, we can meet with the Medical Staff Leadership." No such meeting ever occurred. There was no further Board response to the concerns expressed over the mismanagement of MEETH and the Special Committee never issued a report. Rather, in January 1999, the Special Committee metamorphosed into a Strategic Committee, with an additional Board member added, Richard W. Pendleton, Jr., Esq., and Mr. Herkness changed its mandate.

C. Decision to Monetize MEETH's Assets and to Sell the Hospital

1. Retention of a Strategic Advisor

What occurred was that, as Mr. Whitman put it, there was "[a] bid from [MSKCC] to buy the entire hospital which came out of the blue in the middle of January of 1999." Mr. Whitman had learned of "the approach" from Mr. Herkness, and advised Mr. Herkness that "we have to consider it [the offer] and we would need a committee to do that," which caused Mr. Herkness to reconstitute the Special Committee into a Strategic Committee. Mr. Whitman also advised Mr. Herkness that a "financial advisor was necessary ... because the board would need to have the offer analyzed from a financial point of view." This led to the retention of Shattuck Hammond Partners, a Division of Pricewaterhouse Coopers Securities, L.L.C. ("Shattuck Hammond"), an investment banking firm that provides services exclusively to the healthcare industry. According to Mr. Herkness, the offer from MSKCC was not what caused retention of Shattuck Hammond. Rather, he testified that the strategic advisors were retained after he received a draft of "Proposed 1999

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Operating and Capital Budgets," dated January 15, 1999, which he described as "horrific." It is clear, however, that Shattuck Hammond was retained because of the MSKCC proposal.

On February 5, 1999, Mr. Herkness, with the approval of the Strategic Committee, entered into a written retention agreement with Shattuck Hammond to assist MEETH in evaluating its strategic options. The retainer agreement also authorized Shattuck Hammond to seek out parties "interested in entering into a Transaction with the Hospital," a task which seems irreconcilable with the determination of an appropriate strategic recommendation, a determination which should have come first. [FN1] The "transaction" referred to was defined in the retention agreement as "any merger, consolidation, reorganization, recapitalization, sale, business combination or other transaction pursuant to which the Hospital and/or any assets of the Hospital are involved in acquiring, being acquired by or combining with a third party."

FN1. Interestingly, at the time that this authorization was extended, the full Board had not even considered whether a sale of assets was necessary or strategically prudent.

MEETH agreed to pay Shattuck Hammond a retainer fee of $100,000, and agreed that "[u]pon the closing of a Transaction," it would pay a "Transaction Fee" of one percent (1%) of the "Aggregate Transaction Value." According to Mr. Herkness, he had been informed that this fee arrangement was "standard in the industry." The evidence confirms that there was an understanding that a sale was not 580 only contemplated at the time Shattuck Hammond was retained, but was the actual expectation of the parties. Thus, Shattuck Hammond had a direct financial interest in an outcome which would require sale of the real estate. Significantly, while the fee arrangement was discussed by the members of the Strategic Committee, it does not appear to be the subject of any discussion by the Board. Indeed, neither Rozlyn Anderson, Esq., nor Mr. Underhill, both Board members, and not members of the Strategic Committee, was aware that if there was no transfer or acquisition of assets, Shattuck Hammond would not be entitled to the 1% transaction fee, although Ms. Anderson testified that had she known it would have been irrelevant.

2. MEETH is Put Up For Sale

On February 22, 1999, Mr. Herkness reported that he had appointed a Strategic Committee to assist in the review of "(1) whether MEETH can survive in today's medical and economic environment as an independent specialty care hospital; (2) what are the strategic options available; and (3) how should MEETH respond to the possible offers from Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center ... and Mt. Sinai-NYU Medical Center Health System [Mt. Sinai]." The Mt. Sinai possibility, as noted by various Board members, "would not involve the closure of the Hospital."

Shattuck Hammond's written report, which Mr. Herkness had described as a "fairness opinion," was presented. However, at trial he acknowledged that it is was not a "fairness opinion," which of course, as a financial advisor at a major brokerage firm, Mr. Herkness would have known is a term of art in the securities field. [FN2] Shattuck Hammond described the "Hospital's ongoing mission.... 'to improve the quality of life for its patients'," and asked:

FN2. Rule 13e-3(e)(1) (17 C.F.R. § 240.13e-[e][1]), promulgated pursuant to Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78m, requires the disclosure of various items, listed in Schedule 13E-3, 17 C.F.R. § 240.13e-100, which is important in determining the fairness of a variety of corporate transactions. These statements are commonly referred to as a fairness opinion.

> Can the Board, Management and Medical Staff counteract market forces acting against the Hospital and does the Hospital have sufficient financial resources to sustainably support all aspects of the Hospital's current mission, role and business and charitable purposes?

Having posed this question, Mr. James S. Scibetta, a Shattuck Hammond director, concluded that the "business had no value, but the underlying real estate has considerable value" and "that probably one of the best things for the board to consider was to look at the real estate as a very valuable asset ... and see if it could use that as a way to capture additional resources for the board to sort of refocus its mission and do what the board had been discussing." Mr. Scibetta thought it "ridiculous" to contend that MEETH could remain independent. And he testified that "nobody would pay one dollar in order to just take over the business as is." It was this mindset, that the real estate was the only asset of MEETH with value, which determined the future course of events. As Mr. Scibetta put it, the Board wanted to "monetize the assets," rather than seek to preserve MEETH as its main priority.

Neither Shattuck Hammond nor the Board considered MEETH, itself, as having any ongoing economic value. Nor was there recognition or any discussion of the value of MEETH's name, which was considered by Mr. Morton P. Hyman, Chairman of Continuum Health Partners, Inc. (Continuum), to have "great value," and by Mr. Terrence M. O'Brien, Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer of Lenox Hill Hospital, to have "marquis value" as "one of the top hospitals in the country." Even Mr. Herkness conceded at trial that the name had "franchise value."

Under the heading "Outlook for MEETH as a Going Concern," Shattuck Hammond concluded that "market forces 581 have been and are expected to be increasingly unfavorable for the provision of services in a hospital setting," that many of the services provided by MEETH "are being provided in doctors' offices, free standing ambulatory surgery centers, and a number of neighboring hospitals that are competitive for such services with MEETH," and that as a specialty hospital MEETH "has an inherently riskier business model than non- specialty hospitals with considerable financial resources and harmony among physicians, management and the Board." (Emphasis added.) The latter, of course, is a recognition by Shattuck Hammond that there was a "[l]ack of confidence and support for the current Management." The strategic plan neither addressed this lack of "harmony," nor discussed whether solving this lack of harmony could or would have changed or altered its evaluation and ultimate conclusions. Instead, Shattuck Hammond determined that "MEETH's recent financial performance is not sustainable and necessitates proactive, dramatic remedial action," pointed out that "MEETH has significant value tied up in unused or underutilized real estate assets" and purported to evaluate various strategic options, including the MSKCC "transaction opportunity," i.e., the sale of all of the real estate, concluding that this would result in the highest "[p]robability of successful implementation vs. financial reward of success," or in other words, it was the best strategic option. However, not all strategic options were evaluated. Shattuck Hammond failed to report Continuum's expression of interest in a non-sale transaction with MEETH as a possible strategic option.

The report continued, "[i]f the [MSKCC] offer were accepted following the implementation and finalization of the plan of closure," Public Health Law, Article 28, would require surrender of the hospital operating certificate; MEETH would be required to obtain certification "to conduct diagnostic and treatment activities in clinic settings"; and "[i]t is unlikely that, given the applicable statutory and regulatory framework, the corporation will be permitted to retain the name 'Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.' " While the latter may or may not be accurate, its inclusion in the Report indicates that Shattuck Hammond recognized, and communicated to the Board, its understanding that the sale of the real estate would definitively alter MEETH's mission. Moreover, although there had been discussion at previous Board meetings about expanding the extension centers, such discussion was always in the context of the continued existence of an acute care hospital on 64th Street. The free standing D&T center proposal appears to be mentioned for the first time as an option identified in the Shattuck Hammond report, as it sought to "reprioritize" MEETH's mission.

At the February 22nd meeting, Cushman & Wakefield submitted a "Restricted Appraisal Report," concluding that value of the 64th Street real estate "was in the range of $46 to $55 million, it being understood that an approximate 12- month marketing period would be required to attempt to realize such value in the real estate market." It was pointed out that the net proceeds would be reduced by "real estate brokerage commissions in the range of 2.3%." The fee arrangement with Shattuck Hammond was not discussed. The February 22nd meeting concluded with the nine board members present (two members had been excused) unanimously voting to sell the real estate to MSKCC or Mt. Sinai, or to "any other not-for-profit health care provider for a price as near as possible to $45 million," which was less than the Cushman & Wakefield appraisal. The Board also authorized filing of the requisite applications for regulatory and judicial approval.

Mr. Herkness testified that this decision to sell was impelled by the "doomsday scenarios" set forth in a January 15, 1999 memorandum from Mr. Leonard Weil, MEETH's Chief Financial Officer, containing three proposed operating budgets for 582 1999. Mr. Herkness did not know if any of these budgets, which forecast "bottom line losses" ranging from $6,369,000 to $3,417,000, which he described as "warning shots ... was actually adopted." It was this memorandum that "heightened" his concerns about MEETH's financial situation, and which led to the decision, taken within five weeks, to sell the real estate and to close MEETH as an acute care specialty hospital [FN3]. The Board accepted Shattuck Hammond's negative conclusion concerning "the continued viability of MEETH's remaining an independent specialty care hospital," and its recommendation that "the Hospital's current mission would be de-prioritized," a reference to elimination of the Hospital in Manhattan, terminating the performance of plastic and reconstructive surgery, and ending the "school for post-graduate education." The minutes do not record any discussion as to what MEETH planned to do with the net proceeds, although Mr. Herkness and Dr. Sarkar each testified that the sale proceeds were intended to be applied to transform MEETH from its historical role as a teaching specialty hospital into free standing D&T centers in underserved areas of New York City.

FN3. According to Mr. Herkness, these budget proposals also led to the significant February 2, 1999 decision to defease approximately $16.2 million of Dormitory Authority of the State of New York ("Dormitory Authority") bonds, which had been issued in a refinancing on August 1, 1997. The 1997 refinancing dropped the interest rate to below 5%, which Mr. Herkness testified had saved the Hospital "almost a million dollars annually."

The refinancing agreement provided that if the debt service ratio (essentially net income divided by interest payments) fell below 1.25 then the Dormitory Authority "may require the Hospital to employ a Hospital Consultant" and submit a report with regard to "actions to be taken by the Hospital to improve its management and financial position," and if the ratio fell below 1.10 "for any two consecutive fiscal years," then the Hospital "must immediately employ such a consultant, implement its recommendations," and file a report.

Mr. Herkness testified that, since the proposed operating budgets forecast a drastic drop in the debt service ratio, it was decided that the Bonds should be paid off in full. Thus, by "Unanimous Written Consent ... In Lieu of a [Board] Meeting," the Board resolved "to completely defease" the bonds. This required taking $9.4 million from cash reserves and using $6.8 million which had been withheld by the Dormitory Authority. Mr. Herkness was concerned that, if they fell below the ratio MEETH would be forced into "paying off the bonds." And Mr. Whitman thought "then presumably, you could be thrown into bankruptcy by the dormitory authority." Passing the fact that a charitable hospital cannot be put into involuntary bankruptcy (11 U.S.C. § 303) , and that the Agreement provided graduated measures, it appears that there was no effort to determine what action the Dormitory Authority would have taken. Astonishingly, at a time when MEETH was supposed to be facing financial "doomsday," the bonds were paid off without determining how much investment income would be lost compared with the interest that would saved as a result of paying off the bonds, and without ascertaining the position of the Dormitory Authority.

The refinancing also gave "the Authority ... a first mortgage lien" on its real property to "secure all obligations and liabilities" under the Loan Agreement. This was a "condition precedent" to the issuance of the bonds. In its Written Consent, the Board stated that "the equity represented by such bond reserves can be more effectively utilized in connection with a prepayment of the mortgage ... to give the Hospital greater flexibility and options in dealing with its financial needs." This leads to the conclusion that the bonds were defeased as part of the plan to sell the real estate and is evidence that the emphasis was on sale, since if the Board was seeking means to preserve MEETH, defeasance may not have been desirable.

3. Expressions of Interest in Keeping MEETH (Prior to February 22, 1999)

Prior to the February 22nd decision to sell, there had been expressions of interest in keeping MEETH as an acute care specialty hospital which were neither mentioned at the Board meeting, nor in the Shattuck Hammond report. One such expression came from the New York Eye & Ear Infirmary ("NYEEI"), which in February was well into joining Continuum. Discussions with NYEEI had, in fact, been 583 ongoing for years. Continuum had also shown interest in MEETH: the previous year, in March 1998, Dr. Robert G. Newman, Continuum's President and CEO, met with Dr. Sarkar. Nothing came of that meeting. Thereafter, on December 18, 1998, Mr. Hyman met with Mr. Herkness, and other MEETH officials, in connection with MEETH's desire to sell the Annex. At this meeting, Mr. Hyman referred to Continuum's discussions with NYEEI and suggested that they explore "possibly merging the two institutions [MEETH and NYEEI]." Mr. Herkness replied that MEETH "was very strong financially, certainly stronger than New York Eye and Ear and that he wouldn't see any reason really to combine unless basically New York Eye and Ear gave Manhattan Eye and Ear the keys, but he would consider that and possibly get back to me [Mr. Hyman]." Mr. Herkness testified that Mr. Hyman "was rather enthusiastic" about MEETH fitting into the NYEEI affiliation, although Mr. Herkness testified that he had no interest, because "at that point we still thought we had a viable enterprise." Thus, contrary to Mr. Scibetta's view that "nobody would pay one dollar in order to just take over the business as is," there was interest from other medical institutions in seeking to preserve MEETH as a world-class teaching and research hospital, which were ignored by the Board in adopting the recommendations of Shattuck Hammond, its strategic advisor.

4. March 22, 1999 Board Meeting: Mt. Sinai Offer Discussed

On March 11, 1999, Mt. Sinai and MEETH entered into a thirty day, binding agreement, which contained a no-shop clause [FN4], to sell the real estate for $46,000,000. Under this agreement, Mt. Sinai would continue to maintain MEETH's mission as an acute care specialty teaching hospital. This proposal was discussed at the March 22, 1999 meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors. It was explained by the Strategic Committee that "such a transaction would bring a large critical mass and expertise to MEETH's existing operation, keep the Hospital's present services as well as add to them, ensure the continuance of the Residency Programs, and maintain all Hospital employees in their present or similar positions. This would allow MEETH to continue to run extension centers in underserved areas and fund research." This agreement between MEETH and Mt. Sinai lapsed before the next Board meeting.

> FN4. MEETH agreed "not to solicit, initiate or encourage the submission by a third party of any competing proposal."

5. Board's Decision to Open the Bidding Up

At its April 15, 1999 meeting, the Board was told by Mr. Scibetta that both MSKCC and Mt. Sinai had "backed away from their initial proposals and have indicated an interest only at a price substantially below the $46 million minimum amount ... in the appraisal." Mr. Scibetta recommended that MEETH should "open up the process and inject some competitive forces into the negotiations." Because the Board "wanted to be able to offer [the properties] to real estate developers as well as to make sure that all of the potential bidders on the upper east side real estate [sic] would be approached," it voted to retain Cushman & Wakefield as its broker. Shattuck Hammond was to contact "likely not-for-profit hospital entities" and Cushman & Wakefield would seek to qualify "five or six of the most prominent and likely real estate buyers."

Previously, however, in late February or early March, Mr. Hyman, from Continuum, had spoken with Mr. MacRae, MEETH's attorney who, as required by the no-shop clause, said "that the negotiations between MEETH and another hospital 584 were so far along that they did not feel they could discuss any other corporate possibilities with [Continuum] or anyone else, and that they felt ethically and morally bound not to enter into such discussions." The Board was not informed of this conversation. From the evidence it is clear that by the time the Mt. Sinai offer had lapsed and Cushman & Wakefield had been retained, the Board's goal, as Mr. Scibetta testified, was "to obtain fair value for the assets, and for the bids to be in by basically, I think we had established early May." No reason has been provided for this haste to sell the real estate, a haste which seems particularly unnecessary in light of the Cushman & Wakefield Restricted Appraisal Report, which had stated that the required marketing period would be approximately one year. Nor was there any reason as to why Continuum's interest in preserving MEETH by entering into a non-sale transaction was not included in Shattuck Hammond's report as a possible strategic option.

On April 25, 1999, the New York Times reported that MEETH was for sale.

Thereafter, a scheduled annual Board meeting was held on April 29, 1999, at which time Mr. Scibetta said bids were expected to be received, beginning on April 30th, and he reiterated that Shattuck Hammond had determined "that the Hospital's business had no value." He also advised the Board that "[a]lthough Shattuck Hammond Partners tried to interest Mt. Sinai in taking over MEETH, Mt. Sinai was disinterested in keeping the business and only interested in the real estate aspect of the transaction, at a figure much lower than the appraisal." At this meeting, the Board voted to sell the hospital, at a price in excess of $40,000,000. There was no explanation for this decision to sell the real estate for less than its appraised value of $46 to $55 million. At this meeting, authorization to seek regulatory approvals was again provided. Moreover, the Board now realized that its sale and closure plan, leading to free standing D&T centers, would require an amendment to the Hospital's Certificate of Incorporation, and a proposed amendment was authorized, although never submitted.

Now, two months after the Board initially had voted to sell its real estate, the minutes for the first time identify, in the context of discussion of the New York Times article, that the Board had decided that "the Hospital was going back to its original mission of serving the poor in underserved areas, and redirecting its charitable assets to accomplish this goal." Other than the Shattuck Hammond report, which discusses the Hospital's "original" mission, there is no written record concerning this momentous decision. There had been no study concerning this so-called return to the "original mission" and no proposal or recommendation on the subject was provided to the Board for its review and deliberation. Notably, there was no management plan or recommendation discussing the need to return to this "original" mission, nor do prior Board minutes report any discussion held on the subject.

6. Board Accepts Downtown and MSKCC Offer

By the May 5, 1999 Board meeting, four separate proposals had been received, including a $41,000,000 bid from Downtown and MSKCC (and two proposals from real estate developers). According to this offer, MSKCC would open a breast cancer facility in the New Hospital Building, and the remaining real estate, to be purchased by Downtown, would be used as a building site for an apartment building. Mt. Sinai submitted two alternative proposals: (1) a $27,500,000 offer for the real estate, with the hospital closed; and (2) an offer to acquire the Hospital and its operations for "a very substantially reduced price." Because the second Mt. Sinai offer was "vague," the Board took a "short break" in its meeting during which Mr. Scibetta, at the Board's request, placed a telephone call to Mr. Barry Friedman, Mt. Sinai's 585 President and Chief Financial Officer, who stated that Mt. Sinai would seek a "very reduced price," in the range of five to eleven million dollars, and would only commit to running MEETH for up to two or three years. This spur-of-the-moment telephone conversation persuaded the five Board members who were present that the MSKCC offer should be accepted "promptly." Somehow, this telephone call to Mr. Friedman had confirmed Shattuck Hammond's view that MEETH had no value, beyond the real estate it was "sitting" on, warranting acceptance of the MSKCC offer.

The Board took no further steps to seek a bidder which would save MEETH's long-established mission. Instead it decided that "the most preferable offer" would be a combination of "fair and reasonable consideration" together with the involvement of a major tax exempt hospital. This sale would "provide the necessary funding for the Board's envisioned diagnostic and treatment centers and other hospital-type activities to be relocated to medically underserved areas in New York City." The Board then approved a sale to Downtown and MSKCC. That same day, Mr. Herkness executed a non-binding letter of intent, without a no-shop clause, to sell the real estate to Downtown and MSKCC. (On June 25, 1999, the parties entered into a "Real Property Contract for Sale" ["Contract"].)

The May 5th minutes record that after the decision to sell was approved, "[t]he Board then discussed the issue of closing the Hospital. The Board noted that no actual decision had been made to close the Hospital." (Emphasis added.) Previously, on April 29, 1999, the Board had terminated the residency program and authorized the President to prepare for possible hospital closure. However, even as of May 5th, as the minutes show, the Board did not seem to believe that it was actually closing the Hospital. One has to wonder exactly what the Board thought it was doing. Then, without a record of further discussion or Board authorization following this May 5th meeting, MEETH submitted a closure plan to the DOH on June 14, 1999, as an attachment to a letter from Dr. Sarkar, in which he also "requested issuance of a diagnostic and treatment center operating certificate for the existing Harlem facility." It was after this that Mr. Herkness sought (and obtained) "a resolution reaffirming the Hospital's intent to close the East 64th Street facility." This occurred at the July 26, 1999 Board meeting.

As of July 26th, the Board had neither received nor commissioned any study with regard to the Board's planned use of the sales proceeds to establish D&T centers, the necessity for such centers, or the viability of such centers. It was an idea in progress. It may be that written documentation, at this point, was not needed, if there had been any other type of evaluation; however, there was none. There had been no consultation with the medical staff or other medical experts or health care experts or anyone else concerning its feasibility or viability. Rather, Mr. Herkness testified that the "best feasibility study is five years of experience." It bears noting, however, that MEETH had no experience with free standing D&T centers. At best, this plan evolved from the Harlem Center, which was an extension center, and not a free standing center. Nonetheless, without such seemingly basic information, the decision to sell and close was made.

From these events, the conclusion is inescapable, based upon all the credible evidence, that the Board, recognizing MEETH's financial problems, certainly after the March 11, 1999 Mt. Sinai letter of intent lapsed, chose not to seek a solution that would preserve the Hospital, either itself, or in some sort of affiliation with a major medical institution that would be willing to try and preserve MEETH's historic purposes. Rather, the Board decided on a course of action which would lead to the sale and closure of the hospital, and then provide the Board with a substantial 586 sum of money to allow it to take MEETH down the path to new, unstudied and unevaluated charitable purposes.

MEETH began to act, i.e., it terminated the residency program, upon the assumption that it would receive DOH approvals for closure and establishment of the D&T centers. It executed a letter evidencing its intent to sell to MSKCC, and chose to take steps to effectuate closure and receive regulatory approval for its plan, to enter into a contract for sale, and then to seek court approval under section 511. This would have had the effect of presenting the court with what would have been essentially a fait accompli. To put it another way, if everything went as hoped for, MEETH would have been able to present the section 511 petition pertaining to an already closed hospital, with DOH approval for the D&T centers, and it would have asked the court to find "that the purposes of the corporation ... will be promoted." This would have effectively neutralized, or substantially compromised, any meaningful judicial role in the section 511 process. Indeed, under the scenario envisaged by MEETH, denial of the petition would have been a pyrrhic victory for its opponents: the hospital would already be closed; under such circumstances, a court order could hardly have restored MEETH.

D. Events Following the Decision to Sell and Close MEETH

1. MEETH Doctors Seek to Enjoin the Proposed Sale

On May 10, 1999, a CPLR article 78 petition was filed to enjoin the proposed sale to Downtown and MSKCC. The Attorney General did not participate in this proceeding. Rather, in a letter from William Josephson, Esq., Assistant Attorney General, Charities Bureau, the court was advised that "[s]ince the proposed transaction is in a preliminary stage, it would be premature for us to take a formal position on it." On May 28, 1999, the petition was dismissed. What the Article 78 proceeding demonstrated, however, is that the medical staff played no role in the decision to sell and close the hospital: it was not consulted and the Board did not respond to written entreaties on behalf of the doctors. While they were not necessary parties, in a legal sense, Mr. Herkness and the Board recognized that it was the medical staff that distinguished MEETH. Nevertheless, the Board members believed that the doctors were acting in their own self-interest in opposing the sale and did not involve them in its fundamental decisions affecting the future of MEETH.

2. MEETH Commissions Business Plan Re: D&T Centers

Following the June 14, 1999 submission of the closure plan to DOH, Mr. Wayne M. Osten, Director, Office of Health Systems Management, DOH, wrote to Dr. Sarkar on July 22, 1999, and requested "a business plan or financial feasibility analysis on the proposed MEETH Diagnostic and Treatment Centers." This request caused MEETH, which had made the decision to transform MEETH's mission without detailed analyses, and had no studies, reports or other documents concerning the D&T plan, to retain outside consultants, Dr. Frank Cicero, of Cicero Shapiro Velazquez & Cicero, and Mr. Charles Kachmarick, President, Sterling Health Capital Management. These consultants were retained "to develop a business plan in support of the proposed MEETH Diagnostic and Treatment Center." Significantly, they were charged with supporting the already decided-upon plan. The

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Cicero/Sterling study, entitled "Manhattan Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital Business Plan For Fulfillment of Mission Statement" ("Business Plan"), not unsurprisingly supported closure of the Hospital, and the transformation of MEETH from a world-class teaching hospital to operating two D&T "sites in under-served areas in Harlem and Brooklyn." The Board had decided upon the Mission statement; the retained consultants then wrote the "Operational Plan," and provided a 587 "Need Assessment" and "Financial Projections." Neither Dr. Cicero nor Mr. Kachmarick looked at or evaluated, or were asked to look at or evaluate, any of the proposed alternatives to closing MEETH. Indeed, Dr. Cicero, who testified that he was aware of Continuum's interest, and "possibly Mt. Sinai," stated that it would have been "inappropriate" for him to talk with interested potential bidders for MEETH.

At its September 21, 1999 meeting, the Business Plan was accepted by the Board. It was also at this meeting that the Board authorized the filing of a petition seeking court approval of the sale of the hospital's real estate. Under the terms of the June 25, 1999 contract, this petition should have been filed within sixty days. While there has been no explanation for the failure to file in accordance with the contract, there is no doubt that MEETH was putting off instituting the judicial petition while awaiting the hoped-for DOH approvals for the closure and D&T plans. By September 21st, it decided it could not put off the filing any longer.

3. Attorney General Becomes Involved

Since as a Type B, i.e., charitable, corporation, MEETH does not have shareholders, the Attorney General, acting as parens patriae, is statutorily involved whenever such a charity seeks to dispose of all, or substantially all, of its assets, as MEETH resolved to do (N-PCL § 511). Upon learning from the NY Times article of the decision to sell, Paula Gellman, Esq., Assistant Attorney General, Division of Public Advocacy, wrote to Dr. Sarkar on April 27, 1999, and explained that it was "common practice" for the AG to become involved "before a formal submission is made to the Supreme Court so that we may review the papers and raise any questions or concerns we have in advance." This led to a meeting at the AG's office, which was followed by a June 3rd letter from Mr. Josephson to Thomas Ruggiero, Esq., one of MEETH's counsel, stating that since it decided to sell the Hospital, the Board is required "to entertain all responsible proposals, not to favor any bidder over another in the process, and to treat all bidders and potential bidders identically and fairly." This letter was submitted because the AG had received complaints alleging that other interested buyers were not able to obtain pertinent information. In response, the AG was advised that "a successful bidder has been selected and pursuant to a letter of intent, good faith negotiations regarding the definitive contract are continuing." The AG was not told that the letter of intent was not binding, and that it did not contain a no-shop clause. Nor were other interested parties advised that it was non-binding. Mr. Scibetta testified that MEETH could not "be seen actively soliciting proposals, but we are more than willing to review any proposals, and the board would have a fiduciary responsibility to do so." This statement was incorrect; there was nothing in the non-binding letter which would have prohibited MEETH from actually seeking to preserve its mission.

On June 23, 1999, Dietrich L. Snell, Esq., Deputy Attorney General, Division of Public Advocacy, wrote to MEETH's counsel, complaining that there were other "bona fide offerors" and that "[w]e are not aware of ... one single shred of evidence that MEETH is actively exploring in good faith all or even any of these expressions of interest [which would preserve MEETH]." This statement proved to be accurate.

Thereafter, the AG's representatives were ultimately invited to attend the July 26, 1999 Board meeting, both the full meeting attended by several doctors from the medical staff, and the Executive Session. At both of these meetings, Mr. Scibetta evaluated various offers, and reiterated that it was the opinion of Shattuck Hammond that the Hospital's "business had negative value." At the end of the Executive Session, Mr. Herkness said that 588 "[i]t was the sense of the Board of Directors to monetize the real estate...." The decision to go forward with the sale to MSKCC and Downtown was unchanged.

Representatives of the AG continued to meet with MEETH, DOH officials, and others, over the additional concern that MEETH was engaging in a de facto closure of the Hospital, since its closure plan had not received DOH approval. The AG also continued to insist that MEETH must negotiate in good faith with other potential bidders. When MEETH filed this petition, the AG opposed it on the ground that other offers had been submitted, which would have preserved MEETH, and that there had been no genuine effort to negotiate with these bidders in good faith.

E. Alternative Proposals Designed to Preserve MEETH

1. Continuum Proposal

Mr. Hyman, Chairman of Continuum, having been told in late February or early March that MEETH was in negotiations which were "far along" with an unnamed hospital, and that it could not discuss other proposals, did nothing further until he read the New York Times article. He then met with MEETH's physicians and he agreed to try to accommodate at Continuum the medical staff, who would be dislocated upon the sale of the Hospital, and the residents, whose program was being discontinued on June 30, 1999. This led to Mr. Hyman writing a letter on June 29, 1999 to Mr. Herkness in which he proposed a solution which would allow MEETH to continue its mission. Mr. Hyman testified that Continuum proposed "to take the facility over. We were confident that with different management ... as well as our financial strength ... we could continue MEETH in furtherance of its mission." Continuum's offer was that MEETH "join" its healthcare network and combine with NYEEI, which had just joined Continuum. It was not an offer to purchase the assets. Continuum would have maintained the Harlem Center; however, no commitments were made with regard to the proposed D&T centers since the specific proposal was not shown to Continuum. Mr. Hyman explained that they would have to perform "due diligence" to determine if the proposal was "sound." Continuum was prepared to "guarantee" MEETH against all losses for five years and to invest "$10 million, as needed" (a figure which was later raised to $15 million). Finally, since the proposal was for MEETH to merge with NYEEI, this proposal additionally provided MEETH with the security of the assets of NYEEI, and its unencumbered real estate. Recognizing that "in the future, it might be appropriate for MEETH to sell a portion of its real estate[,]" Continuum guaranteed that "[e]very dollar raised from the sale of any asset of MEETH must stay with MEETH and be used solely for the advancement and enhancement of MEETH."

A condition of Continuum's proposal was that "the existing members of the Board of Directors of MEETH are to resign upon the consummation of this transaction." As Mr. Hyman put it, Continuum's proposal left no money for the use of MEETH's Board in its plan to establish the two D&T centers, or to expand into other geographical areas. He pointedly testified that the Board did not "have an interest separate and apart from the institution itself," and questioned "why a board insists upon receiving money to go off and do their own thing." He explained that if "the standard of comparing a hospital's value as an ongoing concern [is] by looking at the operating income and the operating expenses versus the asset value, then ... almost every hospital in Manhattan would have to sell its real estate and go out of business." To preserve MEETH, Continuum was prepared to keep, as minority members, those current Board members who are prepared "to support" the "one hundred and thirty year old" mission of MEETH.

On July 1, 1999, Mr. Hyman proposed an "immediate" merger between MEETH 589 and NYEEI, and agreed to "guarantee all obligations now existing at MEETH." He received no response from Mr. Herkness to either of his letters. However, on July 10, 1999 Mr. Hyman received a letter from Mr. Scibetta, asking him to meet with him. On July 13th, they spoke on the telephone, and Mr. Scibetta wanted to know "what Continuum was prepared to bid for the MEETH real estate." Told that Continuum did not want to buy the real estate, but rather to "continue MEETH exactly where it was," Mr. Scibetta replied "that's very nice, but our board has decided that we are going to sell the real estate." When asked the "purpose" of having a meeting, since Continuum was not a bidder for the real estate, Mr. Scibetta replied that "you know what this is all about and I think we should get together." A meeting was scheduled for July 15th but was never held.

What occurred is that after the telephone conversation, Mr. Hyman invited representatives of the AG to the meeting, "because so many misunderstandings seem to have cropped up already, that I didn't want to come out of a meeting and have more misunderstandings." The morning of the meeting, Mr. Scibetta learned that Mr. Hyman had invited representatives of the AG, and told Mr. Hyman that he would not attend the meeting. When asked why, Mr. Scibetta replied that "what he had to tell me he would not [say] in front of the Attorney General." Mr. Scibetta confirmed that he had refused to attend the meeting with representatives of the AG. He testified, as he had informed the Board, that it was inappropriate for these representatives of the AG to attend the meeting with Continuum, in light of the fact that other potential bidders had not made similar requests.

At the July 26, 1999 Board's Executive Session, Mr. Scibetta reported that on July 1st Continuum had submitted a proposal. He explained that MEETH would become a "subsidiary," the Board would be required to resign, and then he incorrectly characterized the proposal merely as an offer to "invest up to $10 million ... [which] was inferior in all respects to the Mt. Sinai proposal of May 5, which had already been rejected by the Board of Directors." Neither orally nor in the written report was the Board advised of the full scope and nature of Continuum's proposal, including that it would guarantee all of MEETH's losses for five years.

Thereafter, in mid-September, Mr. Hyman received an invitation to meet with Mr. Scibetta, and on September 17, 1999 he attended a meeting with Mr. Scibetta, Mr. Herkness, and two other Board members, Mr. Chips Chapman Page, and Mr. Richard W. Pendelton, Jr. Continuum's proposal, which included that it was prepared to take over and run MEETH within twenty-four hours, was described. Continuum was also prepared to invest beyond the $15 million, "if we had an opportunity to discuss the proposal with the MEETH board." Mr. Hyman further explained that if MEETH's real estate were to be sold in the future, the proceeds would remain "within the MEETH facility to support its mission." Mr. Herkness and Mr. Scibetta told Mr. Hyman that "the board has decided that we want to sell the real estate. [And asked:] Are you prepared to make a bid," to which Mr. Hyman replied "absolutely not." During the meeting, either Mr. Herkness or Mr. Scibetta inquired whether Continuum was willing to indemnify MEETH against MSKCC, if liability arose from "break[ing]" the Contract. Believing, correctly, as it turned out, that the Contract was conditioned upon regulatory and judicial approvals, Mr. Hyman asked to see the written Contract, in order "to know what it was that we were being asked to indemnify." This request was refused and the meeting ended. There were no further discussions with Continuum.

2. Lenox Hill Proposal

Mr. O'Brien, Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer, and Ms. 590 Gladys George, President and Chief Executive Officer of Lenox Hill, on June 23, 1999, met with Mr. Scibetta, who told them that MEETH was about to sign an agreement to sell its property and inquired whether Lenox Hill "would like to buy their property." Mr. O'Brien replied it was not interested in purchasing "the property, [but] we would be very much interested in having a potential relationship with MEETH, either a merger or a sponsorship, where we could keep MEETH open and could continue to fulfill its mission." This led to a June 25th letter from Ms. George to Mr. Herkness, expressing her desire to meet with him and MEETH's Board "to discuss this matter further."

On July 1, 1999, Lenox Hill sent Mr. Herkness a written proposal to sponsor MEETH, which would become a subsidiary of Lenox Hill, with Lenox Hill as the sole voting member. Under the terms of this proposal, which Ms. George wrote would "result in an approximately $50 million financial benefit," MEETH would continue in the New Hospital Building on East 64th Street, and Lenox Hill would guarantee "to invest not less than $3 million per year for not less than ten years to support the hospital and related services provided by MEETH." Title to the Old Hospital Building and Annex, which had been appraised as worth from $16.6 to $20.2 million, would be transferred to a newly created MEETH Foundation, whose trustees would be MEETH's existing Board. This Foundation could use the proceeds to further MEETH's corporate purposes, including patient care at the New Hospital. Lenox Hill was prepared to operate MEETH immediately. Ms. George was "anxious" to meet with MEETH to "refine the terms and conditions" of this proposal. On July 14, 1999, Lenox Hill officials again met with only Mr. Scibetta, even though they had "requested on a number of occasions" to meet with MEETH's board members. Mr. Scibetta made it clear that MEETH was "very focused on trying to complete the [MSKCC] transaction." This led to Lenox Hill formulating another proposal, which was contained in a July 15th letter sent to Mr. Herkness, the so-called Lenox Hill # 2 proposal which continued the sponsorship proposal, but recognized the MSKCC and Downtown contract.

The Lenox Hill proposals were discussed at the July 26, 1999 Board meeting, at which representatives of the AG and the DOH were present by invitation. Also invited were Mr. Michael P. Gutnick, Senior Vice President, Cushman & Wakefield, and James Lytle, Esq., attorney for MSKCC. Several members of the medical staff were also present. No invitation had been extended to Lenox Hill. Shattuck Hammond presented a written report in which, inter alia, it described the Lenox Hill proposals, and mischaracterized the proposals concerning the purpose of the MEETH Foundation. Moreover, Mr. Scibetta failed to inform the Board that Lenox Hill, as stated at the July 14th meeting, would be willing to establish "a separate LH-MEETH subsidiary" if that would be more desirable to the Board. On July 30, 1999, Ms. George wrote to Mr. Scibetta, complaining of these mistakes, and sent copies to the Board members. She also requested a meeting with Mr. Scibetta and the Board. There was no response. Thereafter, a meeting was held on September 16, 1999; representing Lenox Hill were Mr. James Marcus, Chairman of the Board, Ms. George, Mr. O'Brien, and representing MEETH were Mr. Scibetta, Dr. Sarkar, Mr. Herkness, Mr. Whitman (who had to leave early), and another Board member. At this meeting, Lenox Hill explained its proposals. Mr. Herkness then requested that MEETH be provided with additional documentation "outlining exactly what the MEETH Division would be." Ms. George responded that it would take "a week or so to put together the [requested] detailed information." Mr. Herkness replied "fine," they all shook hands, and the meeting ended. Lenox Hill started to assemble material requested by Mr. Herkness. 591 However, it never completed the assembly and forwarding of the materials because on the following Tuesday, September 21, 1999, the Board authorized its counsel "to proceed as expeditiously as practicable to file the Section 511 petition" seeking judicial approval of the sale to MSKCC and Downtown. This petition was filed later that day. The Board was not informed of the meeting held with Lenox Hill, nor was it informed that Mr. Herkness had requested additional information and that he had been told by Ms. George it would be submitted in "a week or so."

F. MEETH'S Plan

MEETH's plan is to sell a part of its real estate to MSKCC, one of the world's outstanding cancer treatment and research centers. MSKCC plans to convert the New Hospital Building to expand its breast cancer center. Undeniably, this would be an extremely worthwhile use. However, the issue under section 511 is not the buyer's planned use of the real estate, however worthy that use may be, but whether seller's use of the sale proceeds will promote its own corporate purposes. (E.g., Matter of St. Luke's Hospital, 33 Misc.2d 888, 228 N.Y.S.2d 25 [Sup.Ct., N.Y. County 1962].) The remaining real estate will be sold to Downtown, a real estate developer, which intends to erect an apartment building on the site.

Upon completion of the transaction, and following the hoped-for DOH approval, MEETH will close its existing specialty hospital. If further DOH approvals are obtained, MEETH will then convert the existing Harlem Center, and the already approved though-not-yet built Brooklyn center to the proposed D&T centers. In addition, as part of the transaction MEETH also has proposed entering into a sponsorship agreement with New York-Presbyterian Hospital.

Although there is no mention of it in the minutes of the April 29th Board meeting, at which the sale of the real property and termination of the residency programs were authorized, the day before, on April 28th, Mr. Herkness had met with Dr. David B. Skinner, Vice Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of NYPH, and proposed placing MEETH's soon-to-be displaced residents at NYPH. Also discussed was "developing a continuing working relationship with" NYPH. After a series of meetings between MEETH and NYPH officials, on July 26, 1999, the Board authorized an "affiliation agreement ... with [NYPH] relating to the Hospital's Harlem Center and its proposed Brooklyn Center." The Board authorized the NYPH arrangement, and thereafter NYPH and MEETH entered into a "non-binding" Memorandum of Understanding, dated September 30, 1999. Under this agreement, as Mr. Louis F. Reuter IV, Vice President of Administration for NYPH, testified, $10 million of the proceeds from the sale of the real estate would be placed into a restricted fund for MEETH's programs which would be housed at NYPH; the remaining $31 million would be available for MEETH's use, including the D&T Centers proposal. This NYPH sponsorship does not necessarily envisage a separate MEETH hospital facility; rather, "the ophthalmology and otolaryngology clinics at NYPH will have appropriate plaques and/or signage which will acknowledge the MEETH Division."

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

At issue is whether, as required under section 511(d) of the Not-For-Profit Corporation Law, [FN5] MEETH has shown "to the satisfaction of the court," both that the "consideration and the terms of the transaction are fair and reasonable" [FN6] and that 592 "the purposes of the corporation ... will be promoted" [FN7] by the sale of all or substantially all of the hospital's assets to Downtown and MSKCC. The few reported decisions dealing with this section have held that whether "the consideration and the terms of the transaction are fair and reasonable to the corporation" is to be evaluated at the time that the contract to sell is entered into. (Church of God of Prospect Plaza v. Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist, of Brooklyn, 76 A.D.2d 712, 717-18, 431 N.Y.S.2d 834 [2d Dept.1980], affd. 54 N.Y.2d 742, 442 N.Y.S.2d 986, 426 N.E.2d 480; Wolkoff v. Church of St. Rita, 132 Misc.2d 464, 471, 505 N.Y.S.2d 327 [Rich. Sup.Ct.1986]; Matter of the Church of St. Francis de Sales of New York, 110 Misc.2d 511, 512, 442 N.Y.S.2d 741 [Sup.Ct., N.Y. County 1981]). On the other hand, the cases hold that whether "the purposes of the corporation ... will be promoted" is to be evaluated "in light of conditions prevailing at the time the issue is presented to the court." (Manhattan Theatre Club, Inc. v. Bohemian Benevolent and Literary Assoc. of the City of New York, 120 Misc.2d 1094, 1097, 467 N.Y.S.2d 143 [Sup.Ct., N.Y. County 1983], citing Church of God, 76 A.D.2d 712, 717, 431 N.Y.S.2d 834). Given my Findings of Fact, I conclude that MEETH has not satisfied either prong of section 511 . Therefore I deny MEETH's petition to approve the proposed sale.

FN5. The origins of section 511 date to 1876 (Code Civ. Pro. of 1876, §§ 3390-3393, added by L. 1890, c. 95); its lineage can be traced through the General Corporation Law § 52 to 1969, when it became a part of the new Not-For-Profit Corporation Law (L.1969, c. 1066).

FN6. This requirement was added in 1972 (L.1972, c. 961 § 6). Prior to this amendment, judicial decisions had required "fair market value" (e.g., Matter of St. Luke's Hospital, 33 Misc.2d 888, 891, 228 N.Y.S.2d 25 [Sup.Ct., N.Y. Cty., 1962]).

FN7. Before 1969, the court was required to be satisfied "that the interests of the corporation will be promoted" (Gen.Corp.L. § 52). The newly enacted Not-For-Profit Corporation Law changed the statutory language to "the purposes of the corporation ... will be promoted." While no legislative history has been found for this change, it is in consonance with Article 2 ("Corporate Purposes and Powers"), which for the first time defined a non-profit corporation in New York (Wyckoff, Practice Commentaries, McKinney's Cons.Laws of NY, Book 37, Not-For-Profit Corporation Law, § 201, at 43-44) and N-PCL § 402, which requires, as did former law, that the certificate of incorporation set forth, inter alia, "the purpose or purposes for which it is formed." (N-PCL § 402[a] [2].)

Before turning to section 511, there are several areas that warrant brief discussion. Not-for-profit corporations operate under legal regimes designed for traditional for-profit corporations [FN8]. However, fundamental structural differences between not-for-profit corporations and for- profit corporations render this approach incapable of providing effective internal mechanisms to guard against directors' improvident use of charitable assets. For example, in the for-profit context, shareholder power ensures that Boards make provident decisions, while in the not-for-profit context, this internal check does not exist. To put it another way, a nonprofit corporation has no "owners" or private parties with a pecuniary stake to monitor and scrutinize actions by the directors. This distinction is even more significant in the case of charitable corporations, such as MEETH, where there are no members, because the board is essentially self-perpetuating. (Explanatory Memoranda No. 1, January 13, 1969, McKinney's Cons.Laws of NY, Book 37, Not-For-Profit Corp. L., p. XX [1970 ed.]).

FN8. The N-PCL was designed to reflect the Business Corporation Law as closely as the subject matter would permit. (See V. Bjorkland, J. Fishman, D. Kurtz, New York Nonprofit Law and Practice: With Tax Analysis, § 1-3(c), p. 15.)

[1][2] The Not-for-Profit Corporation Law addresses this lack of accountability by requiring court approval of fundamental changes in the life of a Type B charitable corporation, such as a disposition of all or substantially all assets, since there are no shareholders whose approval can be sought. The Attorney General is made a statutory party to such petitions, and his "active participation" is presumed. (See V. Bjorkland, op. cit., § 8-2[a], p. 238). This is to ensure that the interests of the ultimate beneficiaries of the corporation, the public, are adequately represented and protected from improvident transactions. (Rose Ocko Foundation, Inc. v. Lebovits, 593 259 A.D.2d 685, 688, 686 N.Y.S.2d 861, 864 [2d Dept.1999], citing Church of God, 76 A.D.2d at 716, 431 N.Y.S.2d 834; Wolkoff

v. Church of St. Rita, 132 Misc.2d 464, 467, 505 N.Y.S.2d 327). It is pursuant to this mandate that this court is called upon to review the sale of substantially all of MEETH's assets to MSKCC and Downtown.

[3][4] A charitable Board is essentially a caretaker of the not-for- profit corporation and its assets. As caretaker, the Board "ha[s] the fiduciary obligation to act on behalf of the corporation ... and advance its interests" (Pebble Cove Homeowners' Association, Inc. v. Shoratlantic Development Co. Inc., 191 A.D.2d 544, 545, 595 N.Y.S.2d 92 [2d Dept.], lv. to app. dsmd. 82 N.Y.2d 802, 604 N.Y.S.2d 559, 624 N.E.2d 697 [1993]) in "good faith and with that degree of diligence, care and skill which ordinarily prudent men would exercise under similar circumstances in like positions." (N-PCL 717[a]). This formulation of the Board's duty of care is an "expansion" of the comparable section of the Business Corporation Law which does not contain the words "care" and "skill" (Wyckoff, Practice Commentaries, McKinney's Cons.Laws of N.Y., Book 37, N-PCL 717, at 350-352), and firmly establishes the appropriate standard of care for directors of a not-for-profit corporation.

[5][6][7] It is axiomatic that the Board of Directors is charged with the duty to ensure that the mission of the charitable corporation is carried out. This duty has been referred to as the "duty of obedience." It requires the director of a not-for-profit corporation to "be faithful to the purposes and goals of the organization," since "[u]nlike business corporations, whose ultimate objective is to make money, nonprofit corporations are defined by their specific objectives: perpetuation of particular activities are central to the raison d'etre of the organization." (Bjorkland, op. cit., § 11-4[a], at p. 414). Analysis of the duties of charitable directors more commonly arises in an action brought by the AG alleging breach of the duties owed to the corporation under N-PCL §§ 112 and 720, and does not appear to have been discussed in any reported decision under section 511. But the duty of obedience, perforce, must inform the question of whether a proposed transaction to sell all or substantially all of a charity's assets promotes the purposes of the charitable corporation when analyzed under section 511.

In recent years, across the United States, there have been a series of transactions that, although certainly different from this petition, nevertheless resemble, in certain basics, MEETH's proposal. I am referring to the nationwide spate of conversions of nonprofit hospitals into for-profit hospitals which has caused a substantial output of commentary. (E.g., Stampone, "Turning Patients Into Profit: Nonprofit Hospital Conversions Spur Legislation," 22 Seton Hall Legis. J. 627 [1998]; Hyman, "Hospital Conversions: Fact, Fantasy, and Regulatory Follies," 23 J. Corp. L. 741 [1998]; Brody, "The Limits of Charity Fiduciary Law," 57 Md. L.Rev. 1400, 1458-1476 [1998]; Hernandez, Note, "Conversions of Nonprofit Hospitals To For- Profit Status: The Tennessee Experience," 28 U. Mem. L.Rev. 1077 [1998]; Krause, " 'First, Do No Harm': An Analysis of The Nonprofit Hospital Sale Acts," 45 U.C.L.A. L.Rev. 503 [1997]; and Rubin, "Nonprofit Hospital Conversions in Kansas: The Kansas Attorney General Should Regulate All Nonprofit Hospital Sales," 47 U. Kan. L.Rev. 521 [1999]; see also, Gassel & Gerzog, "Conversions of Not-for-Profit Organizations Proliferate," N.Y.L.J., 8/29/96, p. 7, col. 1.) It has also resulted in some twenty states enacting or considering legislation regulating such conversions (see Hernandez, op. cit., at 1102, note 125, collecting statutes and pending legislation). However, there has been no similar activity and little discussion in New York where such conversions are not permitted.

[8] Nonetheless, the conversion analogy is analytically useful. This is because, absent the for-profit component, which of course is absent in a Section 511 petition, 594 a conversion is conceptually similar to MEETH's petition, inasmuch as in both there is a charitable organization which alleges that it is incapable of continuing its primary mission of operating a hospital, seeks approval of the sale of all its assets, and plans to apply the sale proceeds towards a newly revised mission. As is relevant to the analysis, for example, legislation in one state requires that the attorney general examine the transaction to determine "(2) Whether the nonprofit hospital exercised due diligence in deciding to sell, selecting the purchaser, and negotiating the terms and conditions of the sale; (3) Whether the procedures used by the seller in making its decision, including whether appropriate expert assistance was used (were fair); (4) Whether conflict of interest was disclosed, including, but not limited to, conflicts of interest [of] board members ... and experts retained by the seller[;] [and] (5) Whether the seller will receive reasonably fair value for its assets." (Krause, op. cit., at 551, summarizing criteria specified in the Nebraska statute). I believe this to be a clear and concise statement of factors which a court should be concerned with in evaluating a transaction under section 511 to sell all the assets. Indeed, they are in many respects mirrored in the AG's June 3, 1999 letter to MEETH, in essence agreed to by MEETH's counsel, in which the AG wrote "Elementary principles of corporate and fiduciary law require the Board, after it has decided to sell the hospital, to entertain all responsible proposals, not to favor any bidder over another in the process, and to treat all bidders and potential bidders identically and fairly."

[9][10] I turn now to the first prong of section 511, which requires that "the consideration and terms of the transaction are fair and reasonable to the corporation." Because the sale of the real estate, as proposed, is inextricably interwoven with the closure of MEETH as it exists today, I believe that the transaction as a whole must be examined, not just the "fair market value" of the real estate. This transaction is unlike, for example Matter of Church of St. Francis De Sales, supra, a simple transaction which dealt only with the question of the value of a building being sold by the Church; there was no larger transaction involved. There do not appear to be reported decisions of more complex transactions, such as here, where implementing its decision to sell its real estate assets to MSKCC and Downtown would require the closing of MEETH and a fundamental change to its corporate purposes. The Board accepted Shattuck Hammond's conclusion that "the business [of MEETH] had no value," which I have found to be incorrect. Clearly MEETH, as a functioning acute care, specialty hospital, had value: major medical entities were willing to operate it and keep it open and guarantee the expenditure of substantial sums to do so. Thus, while it may be that the real estate was fairly valued, this is not enough. The transaction did not take into account MEETH's full value, and the NYPH proposal to establish a MEETH pavilion or building, with "plaques and/or signage," does not correct this since it does not necessarily contemplate preserving the business of MEETH, and therefore preserving the total assets of MEETH. Moreover, as I have also found, evidence at the hearing established that MEETH's name itself had significant value. Again under the terms of the proposed transaction, this value is not evaluated nor is it clear that it will be preserved. The Board disregarded these components of value when it decided to "monetize" its assets and sell the real estate. This is a fundamental flaw which leaves me unsatisfied that the terms and conditions of the proposed transaction are "fair and reasonable."

[11] Under the second prong of section 511, which requires that "the purposes of the corporation ... will be promoted" (N-PCL 511[d]), MEETH's petition fares no better. Unfortunately, there is lacking judicial precedent concerning a proposal of 595 this magnitude [FN9]. While MEETH has argued that the proposal to abandon the acute care, teaching and research hospital component of its mission and to pursue the D&T centers does not require an amendment, this argument is belied by the Board's own action on April 29th, authorizing submission of an Amendment to its Certificate of Incorporation (although never submitted) expressly providing for the D&T centers. This is behavioral evidence that the Board knew that it was proposing a fundamental change in the corporation's mission, which indeed it was doing For generations MEETH's mission, as stated in its Certificate of Incorporation, was understood to be the operation of an acute care, specialty teaching and research hospital dedicated to "plastic surgery" and to the treatment of "persons suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose or throat." While it is certainly correct that the definition of "hospital" contained in section 2801(1) of the Public Health Law includes a diagnostic and treatment center, as MEETH now argues, it is sophistry to contend that this means that MEETH is not seeking a new and fundamentally different purpose, in light of the overwhelming evidence which demonstrates this is exactly what it is doing. The conclusion is inescapable that the proposed use of the assets involves a new and fundamentally different corporate purpose.

> FN9. There are reported decisions dealing with somewhat complicated sales. (E.g. Agudist Council of Greater New York v. Imperial Sales Co., 158 A.D.2d 683, 551 N.Y.S.2d 955 [2d Dept., 1990] [sale disapproved where services provided to senior citizens will be disrupted] and Church of God, 76 A.D.2d 712, 431 N.Y.S.2d 834). Such decisions generally deal with the impact of the sale of the assets on the existing mission, and do not involve a concomitant proposal to change or reprioritize the existing mission.

Before I turn to analysis of MEETH's failure to establish that the proposed transaction will further its corporate purposes as required by section 511, a prescient passage from one text is instructive:

[A] hospital or clinic providing specialized services, that is so deeply in debt that its provision of services is seriously jeopardized, may wish to transfer its assets to another clinic or hospital providing basically the same services in return for assumption of its debt. The only alternative may be the protection of federal bankruptcy laws or a receivership under state law for the protection of creditors. [Bjorklund, op. cit., § 8-2[b][3], at p. 243.]

While it may be appropriate, in certain cases, to solve financial difficulties by eliminating the organization's mission by selling its assets and then undertaking a new mission, the passage properly focuses attention upon the duty of obedience, which mandates that a Board, in the first instance, seek to preserve its original mission. Embarkation upon a course of conduct which turns it away from the charity's central and well-understood mission should be a carefully chosen option of last resort. Otherwise, a Board facing difficult financial straits might find sale of its assets, and "reprioritization" of its mission, to be an attractive option, rather than taking all reasonable efforts to preserve the mission which has been the object of its stewardship.

As has been documented in the Findings of Fact, the record is clear that this case is not a situation where the Board first made a reasoned and studied determination that there was a lack of need for MEETH as a hospital, or that the financial difficulties made it impossible to ensure the survival of MEETH. Rather, the credible evidence is that MEETH's decision to sell was impelled by MSKCC's offer, which caused the Board to recognize the value of the underlying real estate; then its realization that it could "monetize" this asset drove subsequent events.

The MSKCC offer initially drove the decision to retain a strategic advisor, Shattuck Hammond, which had a direct and substantial interest in a sale of the real estate, i.e., the 1% transaction fee. This arrangement, regardless of whether it was traditional in investment banking, as Mr. 596 Hammond testified, resulted in a situation where the Board put its reliance upon a strategic advisor which had an actual interest in the recommendations of its strategic study. It is not necessary for me to conclude that this conflict of interest compromised the result; the fee arrangement certainly gives the appearance that the integrity of the process was flawed and that the Board had not obtained the assistance of a truly independent expert. Moreover, there does not appear to have been full disclosure to the Board of the potential for a conflict of interest in the expert. The evidence showed that two Board members were unaware of the percentage fee which was a part of Shattuck Hammond's retention. Additionally, there was no discussion or deliberation by the Board over the fact that its strategic advisor had a direct, and perhaps disabling, financial interest in the outcome of the strategic option it was recommending. Nor was there a decision by the Board to retain and rely upon Shattuck Hammond, notwithstanding this issue. The issue simply was never raised. As a result, it cannot be concluded with confidence that the Board received wholly disinterested advice. This becomes more troubling in view of the manner in which Shattuck Hammond dealt with bidders such as Continuum and Lenox Hill, which were not interested in purchasing the real estate, by providing misleading information concerning their offers, often omitting crucial details, and by asserting that the only realistic option was the sale of the real estate.

It is also clear that the MSKCC offer, which drove the decision to "monetize" the assets, drove the subsequent decisions to create a new or "reprioritized" mission, to prematurely terminate the residency programs, to seek approval to close the hospital, and virtually every other decision made by the Board, as I have detailed above.

This decision to "monetize" drove the need to change the corporate purposes, and these new or reprioritized purposes then became the basis for the argument that "purposes of the corporation ... will be promoted." A careful evaluation of whether there was a basis for changing the corporate purposes should have determined the need to sell, not vice versa. The total absence of any study beforehand, concerning the D&T centers, and the retention of healthcare experts, only after submission of the proposal to the DOH, and only to prepare a business plan "for fulfillment" or in "support" of the D&T proposal, not to independently evaluate the plan's feasibility, buttresses the conclusion that the sale drove the change in purpose. Indeed, the report submitted by Dr. Cicero and Mr. Kachmarick states that "[t]he following business plan describes how MEETH will achieve [its] goal, in keeping with its expanded mission statement." To argue that MEETH was returning to its original purposes without an iota of evidence that it made this fundamental determination prior to the decision to sell and close, cannot obscure the fact that this decision, of necessity, eliminated MEETH's historic mission, its historic raison d'etre.

Moreover, the record also demonstrates that the Board failed to properly consider the various alternatives submitted which would have preserved MEETH's mission. The Board had concluded that these alternatives were the equivalent of "giving the keys away," and summarily rejected them [FN10]. However, the Board has no independent vitality. It appears that the Board confused preservation of the Hospital with preservation of the Board, when the appropriate calculus should be what is good for the Hospital is good for the Board. This is borne out by the testimony 597 concerning Mr. Herkness' promise to consider the additional Lenox Hill materials, and his bringing the matter to vote without advising the Board of this commitment to Lenox Hill, which effectively foreclosed the Board from considering a proposal which would have preserved MEETH's mission. It is borne out by Mr. Scibetta's refusal to meet with Continuum in the presence of the AG, who is a statutory party to any section 511 petition, a decision acquiesced in by the Board. It also is borne out by the lack of interest in pursuing potential bidders who were willing to preserve MEETH. This conclusion is reinforced by the events on September 17, 1999 when Mr. Herkness inquired whether Continuum was willing to indemnify the Board and then refused to let Mr. Hyman examine the MSKCC contract.

FN10. See Bjorklund, op. cit., § 8-2[c], at p. 246, n. 58, discussing when a charitable "business" is being transferred, and in exchange the acquirer is assuming all liabilities and guaranteeing continuation of the seller services and noting that the "value (i.e., total assets transferred) may be much greater than the consideration (i.e., liabilities assumed)." Neither Continuum nor Lenox Hill was proposing this scenario, as was suggested by the "keys" metaphor.

In sum, it is evident that this petition fails to meet the two pronged test of section 511. The terms of the transaction are not fair and reasonable to the corporation, inasmuch as no consideration was given to the value of MEETH as a going concern; rather, this value was disregarded. Moreover, evaluating the transaction at the time of the petition, it is clear that there has not been a showing that the sale will promote the purposes of the corporation. To the contrary, MEETH decided to sell, and then evolved its new or "reprioritized mission." There has been no reasoned determination that MEETH cannot continue to operate an acute care, specialty research and teaching hospital, as other medical institutions are proposing to do, and are willing to invest substantial sums to accomplish. MEETH instead chose to sell its real estate, to seek DOH approval to close its hospital, and then apply for judicial imprimatur of this plan. I conclude that this sales transaction should be disapproved.

Supreme Court of Illinois.

John R. MARTIN, On His Own Behalf and On Behalf of All Others Similarly Situated, Appellee,
v.
HEINOLD COMMODITIES, INC., Appellant.

No. 75013.

Sept. 22, 1994.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 5, 1994.

Investors in commodity option contracts London Commodity Options (LCO's) brought suit against broker for breach of fiduciary duty and violations of Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act. The Circuit Court, Cook County, Albert Green, J., certified cause as class action and granted summary judgment for investors. The Appellate Court, 139 Ill.App.3d 1049, 94 Ill.Dec. 221, 487 N.E.2d 1098, reversed, and the Supreme Court affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded, 117 Ill.2d 67, 109 Ill.Dec. 772, 510 N.E.2d 840. After remand and judgment for class, the Appellate Court affirmed in part and vacated in part, 240 Ill.App.3d 536, 181 Ill.Dec. 376, 608 N.E.2d 449. Leave to appeal was granted. The Supreme Court, Nickels, J., held that: (1) broker had preagency fiduciary duty to inform investors of all material facts concerning its compensation; (2) failure of broker to include that information in its disclosure statement was not authorized by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission or its regulations, and violated the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act; but (3) investors could not recover their full investment losses, but were limited to amount broker received in commissions and foreign service fees.

Appellate court affirmed in part and reversed in part; circuit court affirmed in part and reversed in part; cause remanded.

Freeman, J., filed opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which McMorrow, J., joined.

*737 446 Justice NICKELS delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant, Heinold Commodities, Inc., appeals from an appellate court decision affirming in part and reversing in part a judgment entered for plaintiffs and 38 against defendant. Plaintiff filed a four-count complaint against Heinold for breach of fiduciary duty and violation of the Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act (Consumer Fraud Act) (Ill.Rev.Stat.1979, ch. 121 1/2 , par. 261 et seq.). Plaintiff's suit alleged that Heinold had misrepresentated the nature of a "foreign service fee" in the sale of London Commodity Options (LCO's) to class members from September 12, 1977, through May 31, 1978. On remand from this court in a previous appeal, the trial court found for the plaintiff class (hereinafter, plaintiffs) on both the breach of fiduciary counts and Consumer Fraud Act counts. The trial court also awarded plaintiffs punitive damages and prejudgment interest under both claims. The appellate court affirmed the award of compensatory damages, but reversed the award of punitive damages under both claims. The appellate court also reversed the award of prejudgment interest under the Consumer Fraud Act. We granted leave to appeal (134 Ill.2d R. 315).

BACKGROUND

This is the second time this case has reached this court. Plaintiff, John Martin, originally filed a four-count complaint against Heinold for breach of fiduciary duty and for violation of the Consumer Fraud Act in 1980. Plaintiff alleged that Heinold had intentionally misrepresented the nature of a "foreign service fee" charged in connection with the sale of LCO's. The action was subsequently certified as a class action. After initial discovery, plaintiff moved for summary judgment on the fiduciary duty counts. The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion, finding a fiduciary relationship between Heinold and plaintiffs as a matter of law and that Heinold had breached its fiduciary duties to plaintiffs.

The appellate court reversed the trial court's decision finding a fiduciary relationship as a matter of law. 39 On appeal from the appellate court, this court affirmed on that matter, and found a material question of fact to exist as to whether, at the time Heinold discussed its compensation with plaintiffs, a fiduciary duty existed for Heinold to breach. This court remanded for a factual determination as to whether a preagency fiduciary relationship existed between Heinold and plaintiffs at the time Heinold's compensation was discussed. Martin v. Heinold Commodities, Inc. (1987), 117 Ill.2d 67, 109 Ill.Dec. 772, 510 N.E.2d 840.

Trial Court's Findings on Remand

On remand, the trial court made the following findings of fact and law.

Findings of Fact

LCO's were commodity option contracts obtained in London, England. The purchaser of such option had the right, but not the obligation, to buy or sell a commodity futures contract at a certain price. This right to either purchase or sell a futures contract was of limited duration, after which time the option would expire and become worthless. Purchasers of such options would only profit if the market moved favorably in their direction, enough to offset the price of the option plus any transaction costs. At that time, purchasers could buy or sell a futures commodity contract at a profit.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission (Commission), a Federal commission established to regulate commodity and futures trading, banned the sale of LCO's effective June 1, 1978. The Commission's ban was necessitated by the fact that an overwhelming majority of firms engaged in the sale of LCO's at that time were employing fraudulent or unlawful practices. One of the specific practices cited by the Commission in banning the sale of LCO's was the use of terms such as "foreign service fee" to conceal markups. The Commission noted:

"The fact most scrupulously concealed by the vast majority 40 of firms is the full extent of fees and mark-ups. * * * [The firms' confirmation statements] uniformly avoid disclosure and in fact conceal such fact by using various explanations or definitions. Mark-ups frequently are defined in promotional materials and customer confirmations *738 447 as * * * [inter alia] 'foreign service fees' * * *." 43 Fed.Reg. 16162 (1978).

The trial court made the following specific findings concerning the trading of LCO's:

"[Trading was] an extremely complex undertaking for investors, with little or no information available to American purchasers from any source other than from their brokers. The mechanics of the options themselves, the workings of the various London exchanges, the impact of currency conversion rates, the lack of information concerning the underlying commodities and other factors all made LCO investing exceedingly complicated. Investing in LCOs * * * was more complicated and much less understood than the trading of securities.

During the relevant period, it was difficult for customers to compare potential transactions effected through different brokers. One of the problems causing such difficulty was that different brokers used differing terminology.

During the relevant period, potential customers were completely dependent upon the LCO broker for information about fees and commissions charged in connection with LCO transactions; during the relevant period, the investor was at the mercy of the broker to learn what the expenses charged in London were, and had to rely upon the broker to state very clearly what the compensation to the broker was, since the customer had no other source for such information.

During the relevant period, virtually no investor in America, regardless of how sophisticated, could truly understand London commodity options trading without the help of a broker. * * * During the relevant period, customers were uniquely dependent upon, and at the mercy of, their brokers in obtaining information relative to such transactions.

The Plaintiff class has established by clear and convincing 41 evidence that during the relevant period the creation of the customer-broker relationship between Heinold and its LCO customers involved a special trust and confidence on the part of the customer in the subsequent fair dealing of Heinold."

In opening an LCO account, each class member executed a customer agreement and statement signifying that he or she had received and understood a summary disclosure statement from Heinold regarding LCO's. Two forms of summary disclosure statements were used by Heinold during the relevant time. The first was a typewritten form and the second was a printed form. Both forms indicated that the entire price of an LCO consisted of three components: (1) a premium for the option; (2) a commission; and (3) a foreign service fee. The typewritten version of the summary disclosure statement described the commission and foreign service fee as follows:

"[Heinold] adds a foreign service fee equivalent to 20% of the premium as well as 1/2 the commodity futures commission rate normally charged on futures transactions. These charges have the following purpose: to recover costs of telephone, telex, bookkeeping, floor brokerage, clearing fees, costs involved with the segregation of customer funds and use of Heinold funds to pay for London Commodity Options, and research costs involved with options transactions; as well as to compensate [Heinold] and the registered representative who services the options customer during the life of options for conducting such business."

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The printed version was virtually identical to the typewritten disclosure form, except that the foreign service fee was changed from 20% of the premium to $1,200. The printed form also noted that the foreign service fee for options with shorter lives would be smaller.

The trial court further found that Heinold could operate profitably on LCO transactions by charging only the price of a standard commission. The court arrived at 42 this by noting that Heinold believed it could operate profitably by charging, and in fact only charged, a commission, and no foreign service fee, on London futures, the mechanics of which were indistinguishable from LCO's. Because Heinold had determined that it could pay all costs, compensate the registered *739 448 representative who serviced the customer's account and still operate profitably by charging only a flat commission on a futures position, the trial court found the charging of a foreign service fee on LCO's a means by which to receive additional compensation for services already covered by the commission. The court further found that Heinold offered no credible explanation for the assessment of the foreign service fee. In fact, the foreign service fee was treated by Heinold internally as a commission.

The court further found that the word "commission" has a commonly understood meaning: a broker's compensation for a transaction as well as payment for the broker's general overhead. However, the term commission is not usually meant to include a broker's out-of-pocket expenses paid to third parties in connection with a particular transaction. In contrast to the understood meaning of commission, the court noted that the term foreign service fee has no common understanding. Thus, the court found that Heinold's use of the term "foreign service fee" was intended to give, and did give, the impression that this fee was not what would normally be known as a commission but, instead, was an additional expense the broker necessarily incurred in the transaction and had to pay to third parties.

The trial court found Heinold's use of the term foreign service fee misleading and deceptive. This information was material to the investor, the court found, and Heinold knew it would be material. The court also found that during the relevant period, Heinold sought 43 to instill confidence in the investing public by conveying to its customers that, unlike other firms, it was not charging exceedingly high commissions and markups on its LCO's. In fact, through the use of the foreign service fee, Heinold accomplished the very same thing.

The trial court concluded that investors would not have engaged in LCO trading through Heinold had they known the true purpose of the foreign service fee. The court then determined that the relief sought by the class, which involved determining how the monies deposited by the class in their Heinold accounts was used and what losses were suffered, required an equitable accounting. The court accepted the parties' stipulation concerning the total amount of money plaintiffs paid to Heinold for the LCO's, $1,728,948.27, of which $597,800 was payment for foreign service fees.

Findings of Law

The trial court found that a preagency fiduciary relationship existed between Heinold and plaintiffs. Thus, Heinold was under an affirmative duty to inform plaintiffs at the time LCO's were discussed all material facts concerning its compensation. Heinold did not disclose all material facts concerning its compensation and thus violated its fiduciary duty to plaintiffs. The court also noted that but for Heinold's misrepresentations, plaintiffs would not have purchased LCO's through Heinold. The court found this sufficient causation to award plaintiffs their full investment losses. The court further found an additional reason to award plaintiffs their full investment losses irrespective of causation: breaches of fiduciary duty with bad faith and malice. The court next found that Heinold violated the Consumer Fraud Act and awarded the same amount of damages.

Next, the court found that an award of prejudgment interest was proper under both the breach of fiduciary duty counts and the Consumer Fraud Act. The court also awarded punitive damages under both claims.

44 The appellate court affirmed the trial court's decision in part, and reversed concerning the award of punitive damages and the award of prejudgment interest under the Consumer Fraud Act.

ISSUES

Heinold presents four issues for review and argues that the appellate court erred in: (1) finding a preagency fiduciary duty; (2) holding that Heinold violated the Consumer Fraud Act; (3) upholding a damages award of investment losses where no proof of loss causation was shown; and (4) holding Heinold had no right to a jury trial on plaintiffs' Consumer Fraud Act or fiduciary duty claims. Plaintiffs have requested cross-relief, arguing that the appellate court erred in: 449 740 (1) reversing the trial court's award of punitive damages; and (2) reversing the trial court's award of prejudgment interest under the Consumer Fraud Act.

I.
Preagency Fiduciary Duty

We first address Heinold's contention that the appellate court erred in affirming the trial court's finding that Heinold owed plaintiffs a preagency fiduciary duty. Heinold argues: (1) plaintiffs did not prove such a duty; and (2) the appellate court erred in creating a new basis for the existence of a fiduciary duty in focusing on the complexity of the LCO transactions rather than on any relationship between the parties.

In Martin, 117 Ill.2d 67, 109 Ill.Dec. 772, 510 N.E.2d 840, this court remanded the cause to the trial court to make a factual determination as to whether Heinold owed plaintiffs a preagency fiduciary duty at the time Heinold discussed its compensation with plaintiffs. In doing so, this court noted the general rule that "an 'agent is subject to no fiduciary duty in making the agreement by which he becomes [an] agent and may thereafter *45 act in accordance with its terms.' (Restatement (Second) of Agency sec. 389, comment b (1958) * * *.)" (Martin, 117 Ill.2d at 78, 109 Ill.Dec. 772, 510 N.E.2d 840.)

However, this court also adopted the exception to this rule found in the Restatement:

"[W]e are unwilling to conclude, as a matter of law, that a fiduciary duty can never be imposed upon a prospective agent prior to the formal creation of an agency relationship. Thus, while the general rule governing preagency contracts does not require disclosure of the terms of a prospective agent's compensation, we believe that facts could be established which would support imposition of a fiduciary duty upon a prospective agent applicable to preagency contracts. * * *

* * * * * *

We also note that, where the very creation of the agency relationship involves a special trust and confidence on the part of a principal in the subsequent fair dealing of an agent, the prospective agent may be under a fiduciary duty to disclose the terms of his employment as an agent. (Restatement (Second) of Agency sec. 390, comment e (1958) * * *.)" Martin, 117 Ill.2d at 78-79, 109 Ill.Dec. 772, 510 N.E.2d 840.

Whether Plaintiff Class Failed to Prove Relevant Factors

Heinold first argues that plaintiffs failed to prove relevant factors from which the court could find an exception to the general rule that no fiduciary duty exists at the time an agent's compensation is negotiated prior to the existence of the agency relationship. Heinold argues:

"A fiduciary relationship exists where there is special confidence reposed in one who, in equity and good conscience, is bound to act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the one reposing the confidence. It exists where confidence is reposed on one side and resulting superiority and influence is found on the other. [Citations.] The relationship may exist as a matter of law between attorney and client, guardian and ward, principal and agent, and the like, or it may be moral, social, domestic, *46 or even personal. Where the relationship does not exist as a matter of law or is sought to be established by parol evidence, the proof must be clear, convincing, and so strong, unequivocal, and unmistakable as to lead to but one conclusion." (Kolze v. Fordtran (1952), 412 Ill. 461, 468, 107 N.E.2d 686.)

Heinold further notes the factors to be considered when determining whether a fiduciary relationship exists where one does not exist as a matter of law:

"When a confidential or fiduciary relationship does not exist as a matter of law, it must be proved by clear and convincing evidence in order to establish a basis for raising a constructive trust. Factors to be taken into consideration are degree of kinship, if any, disparity in age, health, mental condition, education and business experience between the parties, and the extent to which the allegedly servient party entrusted 741 450 the handling of his business and financial affairs to the other and reposed faith and confidence in him. [Citation.]" (Cunningham v. Cunningham (1960), 20 Ill.2d 500, 504, 170 N.E.2d 547.)

Heinold argues that none of the factors pertinent to a showing of fiduciary duty were shown by the plaintiffs.

[1] While Heinold correctly cites the law applicable in instances where no fiduciary relationship exists as a matter of law and must be proven by facts, it does not focus on the law applicable here, where a future principal and agent are discussing terms of the agency, specifically compensation, for a relationship that will be fiduciary as a matter of law. Restatement (Second) of Agency, section 390, comment e, adopted by this court in the previous appeal, addresses this specific factual situation and provides:

"If * * * the creation of the relation involves peculiar trust and confidence, with reliance by the principal upon fair dealing by the agent, it may be found that a fiduciary relation exists prior to the employment and, if so, the agent is under a duty to deal fairly with the principal in arranging the terms of the employment." (Restatement (Second) of Agency § 390, Comment e (1958).)

We find this to be a different inquiry than the factual 47 inquiry on which Heinold relies. While the general inquiry determines whether a fiduciary relationship exists at all, the inquiry here determines at what time that relationship attached concerning the agent's disclosures about his compensation. Thus, while Heinold argues that the inquiry must include a determination as to the parties' relationship, that relationship is already known: future principal and agent discussing the agent's compensation. And, while Heinold argues that the evidence did not show that it accepted the trust and confidence plaintiffs placed in it, this inquiry is not required under comment e. All that is required is that the creation of the agency relationship involve peculiar trust and confidence, with reliance by the principal on the fair dealing by the agent. This is a factual determination to be made by the trial court. The trial court found peculiar trust and confidence to exist here, and we cannot say that the court's finding was manifestly erroneous. Findings of fact will not be overturned on appeal "unless they are palpably against the weight of the evidence, even though we might be inclined to find otherwise." Kolze, 412 Ill. at 468-69, 107 N.E.2d 686.

Plaintiffs' evidence demonstrated that few, if any, investors at the time could understand the complexities of LCO transactions, including the mechanics involved in the purchase and trading of such commodities. Because of this, the trial court found that plaintiffs could not have known what expenses a broker would incur in the overseas transactions and subsequently pass on to the investors. As the trial court found, plaintiffs were "at the mercy of the broker to learn what the expenses charged in London were, and had to rely upon the broker to state very clearly what the compensation to the broker was." Moreover, plaintiffs could not determine this information from other brokers because brokers used different terminology for their fees. Thus, plaintiffs 48 had a peculiar trust and confidence in Heinold during these negotiations and relied on Heinold to deal fairly. It should also be noted that Heinold failed to present any evidence to contradict plaintiffs' evidence on this point.

Heinold relies heavily on Apple v. Apple (1950), 407 Ill. 464, 95 N.E.2d 334, where the issue was whether a fiduciary relationship existed prior to one party's granting another party the power of attorney, which resulted in a fiduciary relationship as a matter of law. We note, however, that Apple is not controlling here because: (1) Apple did not involve negotiations for compensation prior to an agency relationship, and (2) this court had not yet adopted comment e to section 390 of the Restatement.

Whether the Appellate Court Erred in Affirming the Trial Court

Heinold also argues that the appellate court erred in holding that a fiduciary duty exists simply where the subject matter of a contract is complicated. Heinold's argument is based on its belief that the traditional criteria for the existence of a fiduciary duty were not met here and that the appellate *742 451 court created a new basis on which to find a fiduciary duty. The appellate court affirmed the trial court on this point, stating:

> "The record indicates that members of the Class were uniquely dependant upon information obtained from defendant and its soliciting brokers in order to make a profit on LCO transactions. The trading of LCO's during the relevant period was exceedingly complicated due to the mechanics of LCO's and the London exchanges, the volatility of the commodity options market, the impact of currency conversion rates and the differing terminology used among brokers offering LCO's to the public." (240 Ill.App.3d 536, 541, 181 Ill.Dec. 376, 608 N.E.2d 449.)

The appellate court's opinion merely summarizes the trial court's findings that few investors, including plaintiffs, could have understood the mechanics of LCO 49 trading or known what type of charges were proper. The appellate court's finding is not that a preagency fiduciary duty attaches when a transaction is complex, but that under these unique circumstances, where a future principal and agent are discussing compensation, and where the plaintiffs were uniquely dependant upon Heinold for information concerning the proper charges in the transaction, a duty attached. There was no error by the appellate court on this issue.

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

II.
Consumer Fraud Act

[2] Heinold next argues that the appellate court erred in affirming the trial court's finding that Heinold violated the Consumer Fraud Act through the use of its misleading summary disclosure statement. Heinold argues that it literally complied with the Commission's disclosure regulations by disclosing the various elements of the LCO's, and thus could not have violated the Consumer Fraud Act.

Heinold first argues that the Consumer Fraud Act does not apply to "[a]ctions or transactions specifically authorized by laws administered by any regulatory body or officer acting under statutory authority of this State or the United States." (815 ILCS 505/10b(1) (West 1992).) Moreover, Heinold argues, this court has held that "compliance with the disclosure requirements of [Federal statutes and regulations] is a defense to liability under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act." Lanier v. Associates Finance, Inc. (1986), 114 Ill.2d 1, 18, 101 Ill.Dec. 852, 499 N.E.2d 440.

In addition to arguing that it listed all the elements comprising the purchase price of the LCO's in its summary disclosure statement as required by the Commission's regulations, Heinold also notes the great lengths to which it went in order to ensure that all disclosures were made. Thus, Heinold asserts, it could not have violated the Consumer Fraud Act.

50 Heinold's deception was neither specifically authorized by the Commission, nor in compliance with the Commission's regulations. The Commission has noted that literal compliance with disclosure regulations will not necessarily ensure that a violation of the Commission's regulations has not occurred. In certain circumstances, "a customer may be deceived about [material facts] despite receipt of the information required by [the Commission's regulations]." (Hammond v. Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. [1987-1990 Transfer Binder] Comm.Fut.L.Rep. (CCH) par. 24,617 (C.F.T.C.1990).) In Hammond, the Commission noted that it had reviewed "the overall message conveyed by" the solicitation in question in determining whether a violation of Commission disclosure regulations had occurred. It has also been noted:

"[I]nformation is imparted not just through the use of individual words-- information is also gained from the context in which those words are placed. When determining what has been disclosed, therefore, it is wrong to treat each individual piece of information separately, as if it had no relation to the other pieces which surround it." Isquith v. Middle South Utilities, Inc. (5th Cir.1988), 847 F.2d 186, 201 n. 9.

The pertinent Commission regulations are found at section 32.5 of the Code of Federal Regulations:

*743 452 "(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this section, prior to the entry into a commodity option transaction, each option customer or prospective option customer shall be furnished a summary disclosure statement by the person soliciting or accepting the order therefor. The disclosure statement shall contain the following:

(1) A brief description of the commodity option transactions being offered including:

* * * * * *

(ii) A listing of the elements comprising the purchase price to be charged, including the premium, mark-ups on the premium, costs, fees and other charges, as well as the method by which the premium is established;

51 (iii) The services to be provided for the separate elements comprising the purchase price * * *." 17 C.F.R. § 32.5(a)(1) (1977).

As the trial court found, "Heinold's Summary Disclosure Statement, which concealed and failed to disclose an additional commission by using the misleading and deceptive term 'Foreign Service Fee,' failed to satisfy these requirements." By labeling a commission a foreign service fee rather than an additional commission, Heinold deceived the plaintiff class into believing the foreign service fee was an additional separate charge Heinold necessarily incurred and paid to third parties in LCO transactions.

Moreover, we note that Commission regulation 32.9 provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person directly or indirectly:

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(a) To cheat or defraud or attempt to cheat or defraud any other person;
(b) To make or cause to be made to any other person any false report or statement thereof or cause to be entered for any person any false record thereof;
(c) To deceive or attempt to deceive any other person by any means whatsoever; in or in connection with an offer to enter into, the entry into, or the confirmation of the execution of, any commodity option transaction." (17 C.F.R. § 32.9 (1977).)

Again, as the trial court noted, "Heinold violated this provision when it cheated, defrauded and deceived the class."

We note that this finding is supported by the fact that the Commission banned the offer and sale of commodity options, including LCO's, to the general public effective June 1, 1978. This ban was due, inter alia, to the fact that firms were using such terms as "foreign service fee" to conceal the true extent of fees and markups. 43 Fed.Reg. 16162 (1978).

Heinold also argues that the Commission inspected its summary disclosure form and did not object to the 52 foreign service fee. Thus, Heinold argues, the disclosure was proper. This argument is without merit, as is seen by the following which Heinold was required to have printed on the summary disclosure form:
"THESE COMMODITY OPTIONS HAVE NOT BEEN APPROVED OR DISAPPROVED BY THE COMMODITY FUTURES TRADING COMMISSION NOR HAS THE COMMISSION PASSED UPON THE ACCURACY OR ADEQUACY OF THIS STATEMENT. ANY REPRESENTATION TO THE CONTRARY IS A VIOLATION OF THE COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT AND THE REGULATIONS." (Emphasis added.)

Heinold also argues that the appellate court erred in holding that Heinold violated the Consumer Fraud Act "because [the summary disclosure statement] does not disclose the full extent of compensation [Heinold] derived in LCO transactions." (240 Ill.App.3d at 544, 181 Ill.Dec. 376, 608 N.E.2d 449.) Heinold argues that it was impossible to know and disclose at the time plaintiffs signed the summary disclosure forms how much compensation Heinold would derive from the transaction. Heinold also argues that the Commission's regulations do not require that it state the full amount of its compensation. However, we simply note that Heinold's deception was not in failing to disclose the exact amount of its compensation, but in failing to disclose that the foreign service fee was a commission, from which it would derive compensation. We further note the ease with which Heinold could have *744 453 avoided this deception. Heinold could have simply informed the plaintiff class that the foreign service fee was an additional commission, which is how Heinold treated it internally.

III.
Proximate Cause

We next address Heinold's argument that the appellate court erred in affirming the trial court's award 53 of full investment losses where no proof of loss causation existed. In finding causation sufficient to award plaintiffs their full investment losses, the trial court found: (1) plaintiffs would not have engaged in LCO trading through Heinold had they known the truth about the foreign service fee; and (2) but for Heinold's misrepresentations, plaintiffs would not have suffered their losses. The trial court also awarded plaintiffs full investment losses irrespective of causation, due to Heinold's bad-faith breach of its fiduciary duty.

The appellate court affirmed and noted that proximate causation is a necessary element under the fiduciary duty and Consumer Fraud Act counts. The appellate court found proximate causation had been shown for plaintiffs' full investment losses, in that class members would not have purchased LCO's through defendant had they known the truth about the foreign service fee. In so finding, however, the appellate court also noted that " 'neither [defendant's] representations concerning the foreign service fee nor its use of that fee had any effect on the value, risk or profit potential of [LCO's].' " 240 Ill.App.3d at 545, 181 Ill.Dec. 376, 608 N.E.2d 449.

Heinold argues that in Illinois, as in most jurisdictions, a " 'fundamental principle' of tort law" is that a plaintiff must prove a defendant's actions proximately caused the plaintiff's injury. Heinold adopts the Federal courts' term "loss causation" to refer to proximate causation in securities cases. Heinold further argues that plaintiffs failed to prove loss causation and that its conduct did not proximately cause plaintiffs' damages. Plaintiffs respond that Heinold's version of causation is not the law in Illinois for intentional breaches of fiduciary duty or for recovery under the Consumer Fraud Act. Plaintiffs argue that, in Illinois, all that need be previously stated:

"It is a fundamental principle applicable alike to breaches of contract and to torts, that in order to found a right of action there must be a wrongful act done and a loss resulting from that wrongful act; the wrongful act must be the act of the defendant, and the injury suffered by the plaintiff must be the natural and not merely a remote consequence of the defendant's act." (Town of Thornton v. Winterhoff (1950), 406 Ill. 113, 119, 92 N.E.2d 163.)

59 This principle is applicable to actions for negligence as well as intentional torts, such as fraud:
"[I]t is a well settled principle in regard to false representations, that fraud without damage is neither sufficient to support an action at law, nor a ground for relief in equity. Fraud and injury must concur to furnish a ground for judicial action. In an action for fraudulent representations, the *747 456 plaintiff must not only show, that the representations were made, and that they were false and fraudulent, but he must also show affirmatively that he has been injured thereby. [Citations.]" Jones v. Foster (1898), 175 Ill. 459, 469, 51 N.E. 862.

As has been more recently noted by our appellate court in an action for an intentional tort, fraud: "damages * * * must be a proximate, and not remote, consequence of the fraud." (Brown v. Broadway Perryville Lumber Co. (1987), 156 Ill.App.3d 16, 25, 108 Ill.Dec. 593, 508 N.E.2d 1170; see also W. Prosser, Torts § 110, at 732 (4th ed. 1971) ("the damage upon which a deceit action rests must have been 'proximately caused' by the misrepresentation").) It has also been noted by our appellate court that proximate cause must be shown in actions for intentional misrepresentations, even where fiduciaries are involved. See Kev v. Jewel Cos. (1988), 176 Ill.App.3d 91, 98, 125 Ill.Dec. 652, 530 N.E.2d 1061 (suit alleging intentional breaches of fiduciary duty and violation of the Consumer Fraud Act); Vermeil v. Jefferson Trust & Savings Bank (1988), 176 Ill.App.3d 556, 563, 126 Ill.Dec. 603, 532 N.E.2d 288; Martin v. Allstate Insurance Co. (1981), 92 Ill.App.3d 829, 835, 48 Ill.Dec. 316, 416 N.E.2d 347 (suit against insurance agent for breaching his duty to plaintiff and fraud).

We conclude that plaintiffs must prove that a defendant's actions proximately caused their injuries before they can recover in tort, even in instances of intentional torts where fiduciaries are involved. We note, however, that Heinold adopts the term "loss causation" in its argument, a term used by Federal courts in dealing with the issue of proximate cause in 60 Federal security cases. Plaintiffs argue that loss causation has never been the law in Illinois.

[7] In order to understand Heinold's use of the term loss causation, we briefly discuss Federal decisions involving Rule 10(b)--5 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 and loss causation. (17 C.F.R. § 240.10b--5 (1993).) Such decisions are pertinent to our analysis because Rule 10b--5 involves misrepresentations in the sale of securities. Moreover, since a right of action under Rule 10b--5 is an implied right of action, with no statutory guidance as to damages, Federal courts have developed this area of law through reliance on common law principles of fraud and proximate cause. See Bastian v. Petren Resources Corp. (7th Cir.1990), 892 F.2d 680, 683.

In order for a plaintiff to recover for a violation of Rule 10(b)--5, the great majority of Federal courts require plaintiffs to show two types of causation: (1) transaction causation; and (2) loss causation. (Bastian, 892 F.2d at 685.) Transaction causation has been defined as meaning that "the investor would not have engaged in the transaction had the other party made truthful statements at the time required." (LHLC Corp. v. Cluett, Peabody & Co. (1988), 842 F.2d 928, 931.) Loss causation, on the other hand, has been defined as meaning "that the investor would not have suffered a loss if the facts were what he believed them to be." (LHLC Corp., 842 F.2d at 931.) In this regard, loss causation is analogous to proximate cause. It has thus been noted:
"The plaintiff must prove not only that, had he known the truth, he would not have acted, but in addition that the untruth was in some reasonably direct, or proximate, way responsible for his loss." Huddleston v. Herman & MacLean (5th Cir.1981), 640 F.2d 534, 549.

We find Illinois law to be similar to the analysis used by these Federal courts which require both transaction causation and loss causation in order to recover for misrepresentation 61 in securities cases. Thus, plaintiffs here must prove what the Federal courts have termed loss causation prior to any recovery of damages.

Loss Causation: Whether Heinold's Deception Proximately Caused Plaintiffs' Losses

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[8] Plaintiffs have alleged and proven that Heinold misrepresented the nature of its foreign service fee. The trial court found that plaintiffs would not have purchased LCO's from Heinold had they had known the truth about the fee. While the trial court correctly found transaction causation, it did not find loss causation, or proximate cause, *748 457 for plaintiffs to recover their full investment losses. The trial court thus erred in awarding plaintiffs their full investment losses. We find, however, that plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount paid for the foreign service fee as damages due to Heinold's misrepresentation, as the deception proximately caused plaintiffs to pay a fee they would not have paid had they known the truth. However, Heinold's misrepresentation concerning the foreign service fee did not proximately cause plaintiffs' entire investment losses.

Prosser has noted that while a transaction may have been induced by a misrepresentation, proximate causation limits recovery to "those damages which might foreseeably be expected to follow from the character of the misrepresentation itself." (Emphasis added.) (W. Prosser, Torts § 110, at 732 (4th ed. 1971).) We must thus determine the character of Heinold's misrepresentation.

It is important to note that Heinold's deception did not induce plaintiffs into believing that their LCO's were more profitable than they actually were, or that they were risk free. Heinold's misrepresentations also did not concern the size of the foreign service fee. Instead, Heinold's misrepresentations concerned the use of the foreign service fee. As the appellate court noted, Heinold's misrepresentations had no effect on the value, 62 risk, or profit potential of plaintiffs' LCO's. Plaintiffs were aware of the amount of money they risked and that the market had to move enough to offset the price of the option as well as the transaction costs in order to make a profit. This was a risk plaintiffs willingly undertook at the price Heinold charged for the transactions. Plaintiffs made a market decision and either won or lost because the market did or did not move in their favor. Thus, the character of Heinold's misrepresentation had no effect on whether plaintiffs' options made or lost money. As Prosser has also noted:

> "Would the decline in plaintiff's investment have occurred even if defendant's misrepresentation had been true? If the answer to this question is 'yes,' plaintiff has failed to prove that the misrepresentation proximately caused the decline." W. Prosser, Torts § 110, at 732 (4th ed. 1971).

We agree with Heinold that even if Heinold had used the foreign service fee as plaintiffs believed, plaintiffs would have suffered the same losses. Plaintiffs have not proven loss causation, or proximate cause, for investment losses.

Plaintiffs argue, however, that loss causation is against public policy because it favors the wrongdoer. Plaintiffs argue that loss causation is a call for leniency, letting wrongdoers escape their crime by simply returning the money they took from plaintiffs. We note, however, that loss causation ensures that defendants, even where an intentional tort is committed, do not become insurers of plaintiffs who make unwise investments. Without such a requirement, the law "would become an insurance plan for the cost of every security purchased in reliance upon a material misstatement or omission." (Huddleston, 640 F.2d at 549.) This policy is especially strong here where plaintiffs voluntarily undertook known market risks and lost. In this regard, loss causation respects the individual investor's market decision. Plaintiffs were content in assuming the risk of 63 purchasing the options, even if Heinold's deception had been true.

[9] Plaintiffs next argue that Heinold's misrepresentations did proximately cause their loss because of the uniqueness of options. Plaintiffs argue that if Heinold's misrepresentations concerned a different type of security, such as stock, and that stock thereafter lost its value due to market fluctuation, such misrepresentations would not have caused the stock's decline in value. However, plaintiffs argue that options are different from stock in that they have a much shorter life in which to realize a profit, after which they become worthless. Plaintiffs claim that Heinold's misrepresentations prevented them from exercising otherwise profitable options because the break-even point was that much higher. Thus, plaintiffs argue, they lost their entire investment, rather than simply paying an additional fee.

We agree with plaintiffs that options are different from stock, but do not find their argument persuasive. Investing in securities necessitates undertaking risk in an attempt *749 458 to make a profit. In selecting securities, the investor must determine what type of risk he is willing to take. For a minimal price, the investor who chooses to invest in options is allowed to enter the volatile futures market without the risks associated with purchasing a futures contract. If the market moves in an option holder's favor, the holder may profitably enter the futures market. If the market does not move in the holder's favor, he has the security of knowing the exact amount of money he can possibly lose, the price paid for the option plus any transaction costs. Through the use of options, the holder avoids the risk, and escapes any loss, potentially great, the market could have caused if he would have purchased a futures contract. Thus, for the security of having the right, but not the obligation, 64 to enter the futures market, the option holder knows that he may very well lose his entire investment. Those courageous enough to enter the commodities options market knowingly assume this risk.

The investor who chooses to purchase stock, on other hand, has entered a not- so-volatile market. What the stockholder gives up, however, is the potential to reap the great profits the option investor may make from one single leveraged transaction.

Thus, the issue is the undertaking of risk. Plaintiffs could have invested in stock, or futures, but instead chose to invest in options. They did this with the knowledge that they could possibly lose their entire investment, but with the chance that they could profit greatly on a single leveraged transaction. The misrepresentations here did not induce plaintiffs to purchase a type of security, LCO's, but only induced them to pay an additional fee. While Heinold's deception made the break-even price of the option higher, plaintiffs were willing to assume the risk of the volatile futures market at that price.

[10] Plaintiffs next argue that Heinold's deception was intentional, and thateven remote causation will be found in intentional torts. (Shades Ridge Holding Co. v. Cobbs, Allen & Hall Mortgage Co. (Ala.1980), 390 So.2d 601, 607, 609.) Plaintiffs note that intentional tortfeasors are commonly liable even for unforeseeable consequences of their conduct. See Smith v. Moran (1963), 43 Ill.App.2d 373, 193 N.E.2d 466 (doctrine of transferred intent).

We believe, however, that the fact that plaintiffs willingly assumed known market risks defeats any such argument. Moreover, even intentional tortfeasors do not become the insurers of safety for wronged plaintiffs. (See Johnson v. Greer (5th Cir.1973), 477 F.2d 101, 106.) The plaintiffs' willingness to assume risks in a volatile market was the more direct cause of their investment losses than Heinold's misrepresentation.

65 Plaintiffs further cite several decisions for the proposition that it is no defense for a fiduciary breach that losses have been due to market risks. (Merchants National Bank v. Frazier (1946), 329 Ill.App. 191, 67 N.E.2d 611; In re Estate of Busby (1937), 288 Ill.App. 500, 6 N.E.2d 451.) These decisions, however, are inapposite, as they involve trustees who breached their fiduciary duties. These cases deal with the law of trusts, which is not applicable here.

Plaintiffs also rely on language from one of this court's decisions:
"The limitation on a plaintiff's recovery proposed by defendants would mean that a fiduciary could violate his duty without incurring any risk. For if his misconduct were discovered the most he could lose would be the profit gained from his illegal venture; the law would have operated only to restore him * * *." (Vendo Co. v. Stoner (1974), 58 Ill.2d 289, 305-06, 321 N.E.2d 1.)

While this language seems to support plaintiffs' argument, the facts involved in Stoner reveal otherwise. Stoner involved an employee of plaintiff who violated his contract and principles of agency by helping fund and launch a company to compete against his employer. Defendant helped this new company develop a better machine, which damaged plaintiff's business. The issue was damages. Plaintiff argued for its lost profits while defendants argued for the money their machine made. This court found the appropriate amount of damages to be plaintiff's lost profits because plaintiff had proven that defendant's actions actually, or proximately, *750 459 caused those losses. In the instant case, Heinold's misrepresentation did not proximately cause plaintiffs' losses. We further note that there does exist a way in which to punish Heinold so that the law does not operate merely to restore it to its previous position. Punitive damages may be assessed to punish Heinold, which we discuss later.

Plaintiffs further argue that the United States 66 Supreme Court has held that damage measures in Federal securities fraud cases may do more than simply make the plaintiff whole for the economic loss proximately caused by the defendant's fraud. (Randall v. Loftsgaarden (1986), 478 U.S. 647, 106 S.Ct. 3143, 92 L.Ed.2d 525.) We note, however, that this decision did not mean that proximate causation need not be required under every set of facts. Moreover, the Loftsgaarden decision addressed the issue of whether section 28 of the Securities Act of 1934 limited "rescissory recovery to the plaintiff's net economic harm." (Loftsgaarden, 478 U.S. at 662, 106 S.Ct. at 3152, 92 L.Ed.2d at 541.) The Court found that section 28(a) of the Securities Act did not impose "a rigid requirement that every recovery on an express or implied right of action under the 1934 Act must be limited to the net economic harm suffered by the plaintiff." (Loftsgaarden, 478 U.S. at 663, 106 S.Ct. at 3153, 92 L.Ed.2d at 541.) The Court thus allowed the rescission of a contract from which plaintiffs had already received tax benefits, even though defendants argued that plaintiffs should have to reimburse defendants the value of the tax benefits.

It should further be noted that while the United States Supreme Court found that allowing plaintiffs to recover more than their net economic harm serves a deterrent effect, punitive damages, which may serve that same effect in Illinois, are not permissible under the Federal securities act. (See Straub v. Vaisman & Co. (3d Cir.1976), 540 F.2d 591, 599; Carras v. Burns (4th Cir.1975), 516 F.2d 251, 259; Green v. Wolf Corp. (1968), 406 F.2d 291, 302.) We find the imposition of punitive damages, where justified, to more properly serve as a deterrent than in awarding plaintiffs full investment losses where those losses were not proximately caused by defendant's misrepresentations.

Plaintiffs next argue that loss causation need not be 67 proven in cases involving broker and fiduciary fraud. Plaintiffs rely on Federal decisions involving brokers which allow a recovery of damages without proof of loss causation. (See Chasins v. Smith, Barney & Co. (2d Cir.1970), 438 F.2d 1167; Clark v. John Lamula Investors, Inc. (2d Cir.1978), 583 F.2d 594.) Those courts are of a minority view, however, and this is not the law in Illinois. Most Federal courts, it should be noted, do require general loss causation and do not recognize the existence between the parties as an exception to the rule in 10b--5 actions. See, e.g., In re Catenella (1984), 583 F.Supp. 1388, 1417.

We further note that the cases on which plaintiffs rely do not support their argument. These decisions involve brokers who fraudulently induced investors to purchase securities by misrepresenting their intrinsic value, such as their profit potential or risk (Barthe v. Rizzo (S.D.N.Y.1974), 384 F.Supp. 1063), or who engaged in churing or unauthorized trading (Board of Trustees of the Fire Fighters' Pension Fund v. Chicago Corp. (N.D.Ill.1989), 708 F.Supp. 1499; Hatrock v. Edward D. Jones & Co. (9th Cir.1984), 750 F.2d 767). Courts have noted in these cases that if a fiduciary relationship or privity does not exist between buyer and seller, loss causation must be shown. If, however, either relationship exists, the court must determine what type of fraud occurred. If the misrepresentation consisted of a fraudulent inducement to purchase the security, then loss causation need not be proven. If, however, the evil is only the price paid for the security, then loss causation must be shown. (See In re Letterman Brothers Energy Securities Litigation (5th Cir.1986), 799 F.2d 967, 972.) As one of these courts has noted:

"A plaintiff 'should not have to prove loss causation where the evil is not the price the investor paid for the security, but the broker's fraudulent inducement of the investor to purchase of the security.' [Citation.] However, loss 68 causation is relevant when a plaintiff complains that a defendant's misrepresentations inflated the price paid for the security. [Citation.] In *751 460 that case a defendant would not be liable if the decline in value was caused by an event occurring subsequent to any misrepresentation." Kafton v. Baptist Park Nursing Center, Inc. (D.C.Ariz.1985), 617 F.Supp. 349, 350.

The harm here was not the inducement to purchase the LCO, but the inducement to pay an additional fee, the fraudulent foreign service fee. The evil was the price paid. Thus, even under the analysis used in the decisions on which plaintiffs rely, they would not recover their full investment losses.

[11] Plaintiffs next argue that damages for investment losses due to broker fraud are available under the Consumer Fraud Act without a showing of loss causation. Plaintiffs correctly note that the Consumer Fraud Act was intended to afford a broader range of protection than the common law. (See Kellerman v. Mar-Rue Realty & Builders, Inc. (1985), 132 Ill.App.3d 300, 87 Ill.Dec. 267, 476 N.E.2d 1259.) Plaintiffs then argue that remedies under the Consumer Fraud Act should thus be broader and that proximate cause need not be shown.

However, while the intent of the Consumer Fraud Act was to lessen the burden of proof in a claim for certain misrepresentations, there is no suggestion in the Act that damages are to be determined in any manner different than is customary in our State. While plaintiffs note that section 10a(a) of the Act states that the trial court "in its discretion may award actual damages or any other relief which the court deems proper" (815 ILCS 505/10a(a) (West 1992)), we cannot agree with plaintiffs that this section allows the court free reign to award any amount of damages it chooses. The damages must be "proper." As our appellate court has noted, "[a] plaintiff can recover damages under the Consumer Fraud Act only when his injury is a direct and proximate 69 result of an alleged violation of the Act." (Emphasis in original.) (Stehl v. Brown's Sporting Goods, Inc. (1992), 236 Ill.App.3d 976, 981, 177 Ill.Dec. 267, 603 N.E.2d 48, citing Petrauskas v. Wexenthaller Realty Management, Inc. (1989), 186 Ill.App.3d 820, 832, 134 Ill.Dec. 556, 542 N.E.2d 902; see also Fitzpatrick v. ACF Properties Group, Inc. (1992), 231 Ill.App.3d 690, 711-12, 172 Ill.Dec. 657, 595 N.E.2d 1327.) We further note that an award of punitive damages, where appropriate, more properly serves the purpose plaintiffs wish absolute liability to serve in this case.

Plaintiffs finally cite Warren v. LeMay (1986), 142 Ill.App.3d 550, 96 Ill.Dec. 418, 491 N.E.2d 464, for the proposition that under the Consumer Fraud Act market fluctuation was a foreseeable intervening force:

"In assessing proximate cause where an intervening force is alleged to be present, the only question of concern is 'whether or not this intervening force is without or within the range of reasonable anticipation and probability.' [Citation.] Each case must turn on its own facts. [Citation.]" (Warren v. LeMay (1986), 142 Ill.App.3d 550, 570, 96 Ill.Dec. 418, 491 N.E.2d 464.)

Plaintiffs argue that because market fluctuation was a foreseeable intervening force, Heinold's deception was the direct cause of its investment losses.

However, each case must turn on its own facts. Plaintiffs, as investors, necessarily assumed a risk, and that risk was the possibility that the market would not move in their favor. Where plaintiffs knowingly assumed the risk of the market at the price Heinold offered, this argument has no merit. Heinold's deception did not affect the known market risk.

IV.
Right to a Jury Trial

Heinold next argues that it had the right to a jury trial on plaintiffs' claims for violation of the Consumer Fraud Act and breach of fiduciary duties. The trial court denied Heinold's request for a jury trial, and the 70 appellate court affirmed that decision. We affirm those courts' decisions.

Waiver

[12] Before we address Heinold's contentions, we first address plaintiffs' argument that Heinold has waived the right to a jury trial on both claims. Plaintiffs argue that Heinold waived any right to a jury trial by *752 461 waiting eight years to effectuate its request. Although plaintiffs acknowledge that Heinold filed a jury demand when it answered plaintiffs' complaint, plaintiffs note that this case was originally assigned to, and always remained in, the chancery division of the circuit court. Plaintiffs argue that Heinold waited eight years, until the case was on the eve of trial in October 1988, to move to transfer this action to the law division. Although plaintiffs have found no cases dealing directly with this issue, they do cite several where much shorter delays resulted in waiver of a right to seek a change in venue. Horn v. Rincker (1981), 84 Ill.2d 139, 49 Ill.Dec. 315, 417 N.E.2d 1329; Wagner v. David (1966), 35 Ill.2d 494, 221 N.E.2d 248.

Plaintiffs' argument has no merit. Heinold did not waive the issue of its right to a jury trial under either claim. Section 52-1105(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"A plaintiff desirous of a trial by jury must file a demand therefor with the clerk at the time the action is commenced. A defendant desirous of a trial by jury must file a demand therefor not later than the filing of his or her answer. Otherwise, the party waives a jury. If an action is filed seeking equitable relief and the court thereafter determines that one or more of the parties is or are entitled to a trial by jury, the plaintiff, within 3 days from the entry of such order by the court, or the defendant, within 6 days from the entry of such order by the court, may file his or her demand for trial by jury with the clerk of the court." (735 ILCS 5/2-1105(a) (West 1992).)

Heinold filed a jury demand when it answered plaintiffs' 71 complaint. This is all Heinold was required to do under section 2-1105 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Plaintiffs argue, however, that Heinold waited until the eve of trial to file a motion to transfer the case to the law division. We note, however, that the law and chancery divisions are not separate courts from which one must seek a change of venue. Section 9 of article VI of the Illinois

Constitution provides: "Circuit Courts shall have original jurisdiction of all justiciable matters * * *." (Emphasis added.) (Ill. Const.1970, art. VI, § 9.) Moreover, the record shows that Heinold filed a motion after the remand from this court and prior to trial asking the trial court to transfer the cause to the law division. At oral argument on the motion, Heinold noted that it was simply reaffirming its jury demand which it had filed when it answered plaintiffs' complaint some eight years before. Heinold was merely asking the trial court to impanel a jury. As this court noted long ago:
"Conferring jurisdiction in chancery is not excluding trial by jury. Courts of chancery may submit issues of fact to trial by jury, and although it is discretionary to do so in their ordinary course of practice, yet where there comes bestowal upon such a court jurisdiction in a case where there existed, before the adoption of the constitution, the right of trial by jury, it is to be presumed that there would be, in such case, allowance of jury trial,--that there would be obedience to the constitutional injunction that the right of trial by jury, as enjoyed at the time of the adoption of the constitution, should remain inviolate." (Gage v. Ewing (1883), 107 Ill. 11, 15.)

Heinold has not waived this issue for review.

Consumer Fraud Act

[13] Heinold first argues that it had the right to a jury trial under the Consumer Fraud Act. Heinold argues that "it is well settled constitutional law in Illinois that actions for legal relief, including statutory actions, are triable to juries as of right." Heinold finds Illinois' right 72 to a jury trial similar to that right under the seventh amendment of the Federal constitution in that both look to whether the remedy sought is legal or equitable in nature. (U.S. Const., amend. VII; see Chauffeurs, Teamsters & Helpers, Local No. 391 v. Terry (1990), 494 U.S. 558, 565, 110 S.Ct. 1339, 1345, 108 L.Ed.2d 519, 528.) Plaintiffs sought money damages, Heinold argues, which is the traditional form of damages in a case at law. Thus, it had the right to a jury trial. Heinold also notes that Consumer Fraud Act claims have routinely been tried to juries. Although the appellate court has found no right to a jury trial under *753 462 the Consumer Fraud Act, Heinold insists that those decisions are in error.

Heinold is mistaken in its belief that all actions for legal relief are triable in Illinois to juries as of right. Heinold is further mistaken in analogizing Illinois' right to a jury trial with the right under the Federal Constitution. Section 13 of article I of the 1970 Illinois Constitution provides: "The right of trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed shall remain inviolate." (Ill. Const.1970, art. I, § 13.) A similar provision was included in the constitutions of 1818, 1848, and 1870. As this court has noted:

"We do not think there is any substantial difference between the provisions incorporated in the three constitutions. The right of trial by jury was the same under one constitution as under the other. The right protected by each constitution was the right of trial by jury as it existed at common law." George v. People (1897), 167 Ill. 447, 455, 47 N.E. 741.

As this court has more recently noted: "for the true meaning of the guarantee it was necessary to examine the English common law." (Grace v. Howlett (1972), 51 Ill.2d 478, 509, 283 N.E.2d 474.) Thus, our constitution does not guarantee the right to a jury trial in any action nonexistent at common law, even if such action is legal in nature:
"The constitutional provision that 'the right of trial by jury has heretofore enjoyed shall remain inviolate,' means that the right to a jury trial shall continue in all cases 73 where such right existed at common law at the time the constitution was adopted, but that constitutional provision has never been held to prohibit the legislature from creating new rights unknown to the common law and provide for their determination without a jury. [Citation.]" (Emphasis added.) (Standidge v. Chicago Rys. Co. (1912), 254 Ill. 524, 532, 98 N.E. 963.)

Moreover, " '[t]he constitutional provision * * * was not intended to guarantee trial by jury in special or statutory proceedings unknown to the common law.' " People ex rel. Keith v. Keith (1967), 38 Ill.2d 405, 408, 231 N.E.2d 387, quoting People v. Niesman (1934), 356 Ill. 322, 327, 190 N.E. 668.

On the other hand, the Federal Constitution provides: "In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial shall be preserved * * *." (U.S. Const., amend. VII.) Unlike Illinois' constitution, the Federal Constitution has been interpreted to "extend[ ] beyond the common-law forms of action recognized at" the time the bill of rights was adopted. (Curtis v. Loether (1974), 415 U.S. 189, 193, 94 S.Ct. 1005, 1007, 39 L.Ed.2d 260, 265.) In fact, the Supreme Court has stated:
" 'By common law, [the Framers of the amendment] meant ... not merely suits, which the common law recognized among its old and settled proceedings, but suits in which legal rights were to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone were recognized, and equitable remedies were administered. ... In a just sense, the amendment then may well be construed to embrace all suits which are not of equity and admiralty jurisdiction, whatever might be the peculiar form which they may assume to settle legal rights.' Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. [28 U.S.] 433, 446-447 [7 L.Ed. 732] (1830) (emphasis in original)." Curtis, 415 U.S. at 193, 94 S.Ct. at 1008, 39 L.Ed.2d at 265-66.

As can be seen, Illinois' constitutional right to a jury trial is not the same as that found in the Federal Constitution. In Illinois, the right to a jury trial does not attach to every action at law. Instead, such right only attaches 74 in those actions where such right existed under the English common law at the time the constitution was adopted. Under the United States Constitution, however, any action at law, or one not of equity or admiralty jurisdiction, confers the right to a jury trial. It should be noted that Heinold does not argue that the Federal right applies here.

Heinold cites several cases for the proposition that the right to a jury trial depends upon the relief sought. (See Zurich Insurance Co. v. Raymark Industries, Inc. (1987), 118 Ill.2d 23, 112 Ill.Dec. 684, 514 N.E.2d 150; 463754Lazarus v. Village of Northbrook* (1964), 31 Ill.2d 146, 199 N.E.2d 797.) These decisions are inapposite, however, as they involve actions for declaratory judgment. The right to a jury trial depends on the relief sought in an action for declaratory judgment, but this is due to the nature of the declaratory judgment. While statutory, and unknown to common law, a declaratory judgment "is strictly remedial and does not create new rights or duties, but affords a new, additional and cumulative procedure." (Emphasis added.) (Berk v. County of Will (1966), 34 Ill.2d 588, 591, 218 N.E.2d 98.) Thus, an action for declaratory judgment merely provides a procedure to bring existing actions which either confer or do not confer the right to a jury trial. As the statute provides: "If a proceeding under this Section involves the determination of issues of fact triable by a jury, they shall be tried and determined in the same manner as issues of fact are tried and determined in other civil actions." 735 ILCS 5/2-701(d) (West 1992).

Heinold also relies on Flaherty v. Murphy (1920), 291 Ill. 595, 126 N.E. 553, where this court stated: "[T]he test whether or not the right to trial by jury exists in a given case depends on the nature of the controversy rather than the form of the action [;] there was no right of trial by jury on such issue as is raised by section 10, or on one analogous thereto, provided for under the laws of this State prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1870." (Flaherty, 291 Ill. at 598, 126 N.E. 553.)

75 Heinold argues that the nature of the controversy under the Consumer Fraud Act is money damages, a legal issue, and the Consumer Fraud Act is analogous to the common law action of fraud. However, we find an action under the Consumer Fraud Act to be a new statutory right created by the legislature and, as such, does not confer the right to a jury trial.

This issue was first discussed in Richard/Allen/Winter, Ltd. v. Waldorf (1987), 156 Ill.App.3d 717, 109 Ill.Dec. 239, 509 N.E.2d 1078. There, the appellate court found no right to a jury trial under the Consumer Fraud Act. All subsequent appellate decisions addressing this issue have agreed. See, e.g., Rubin v. Marshall Field & Co. (1992), 232 Ill.App.3d 522, 173 Ill.Dec. 714, 597 N.E.2d 688; Wheeler v. Sunbelt Tool Co. (1989), 181 Ill.App.3d 1088, 130 Ill.Dec. 863, 537 N.E.2d 1332.

We find, as did the court in Waldorf, that the Consumer Fraud Act "created a new cause of action different from the traditional common law tort of fraud." (Waldorf, 156 Ill.App.3d at 721, 109 Ill.Dec. 239, 509 N.E.2d 1078.) As this court noted in Siegel v. Levy Organization Development Co. (1992), 153 Ill.2d 534, 542-43, 180 Ill.Dec. 300, 607 N.E.2d 194:
"[I]n order to establish a claim for common law fraud in Illinois, a plaintiff must allege and prove: (1) a false statement of material fact; (2) the party making the statement knew or believed it to be untrue; (3) the party to whom the statement was made had a right to rely on the statement; (4) the party to whom the statement was made did rely on the statement; (5) the statement was made for the purpose of inducing the other party to act; and (6) the reliance by the person to whom the statement was made led to that person's injury." (Seigel, 153 Ill.2d at 542-43, 180 Ill.Dec. 300, 607 N.E.2d 194.)

However, to recover under the Consumer Fraud Act, a plaintiff need only show:
"(1) a deceptive act or practice, (2) intent on the

Copr. © West 2001 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

defendant's part that plaintiff rely on the deception, and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct involving trade or commerce." (Seigel, 153 Ill.2d at 542, 180 Ill.Dec. 300, 607 N.E.2d 194.)

76 Of note, the Consumer Fraud Act does not require actual reliance, an untrue statement regarding a material fact, or knowledge or belief by the party making the statement that the statement was untrue. As one appellate decision has noted of the Consumer Fraud Act:

"[T]he intention of the seller--his good or bad faith--is not important. Rather, we focus our attention upon the effect that that conduct might have on the consumer * * *." 755464American Buyers Club of Mt. Vernon, Illinois, Inc. v. Honecker (1977), 46 Ill.App.3d 252, 259, 5 Ill.Dec. 666, 361 N.E.2d 1370.

We thus find that the Consumer Fraud Act is a statutory proceeding unknown to the common law. Because of this, our constitution does not confer the right to a jury trial for a claim under the Consumer Fraud Act.

We further note that the Consumer Fraud Act does not provide for jury trials. In fact, the wording of the statute, and its legislative history, indicate that the legislature intended the action to be tried without a jury. See Waldorf, 156 Ill.App.3d at 722-25, 109 Ill.Dec. 239, 509 N.E.2d 1078.

Heinold argues, however, that many Consumer Fraud Act claims have been tried before juries. (See Warren v. LeMay (1986), 142 Ill.App.3d 550, 96 Ill.Dec. 418, 491 N.E.2d 464; Tague v. Molitor Motor Co. (1985), 139 Ill.App.3d 313, 93 Ill.Dec. 769, 487 N.E.2d 436; Gent v. Collinsville Volkswagen, Inc. (1983), 116 Ill.App.3d 496, 72 Ill.Dec. 62, 451 N.E.2d 1385.) While this may be true, the issue of whether a right to a jury trial existed was never addressed in those cases. These cases were also all decided prior to the Waldorf decision. Heinold further argues that if this court finds no right to a jury trial in actions under the Consumer Fraud Act, we open the door to making such findings in other instances, such as the Structural Work Act. However, that issue is not now before the court.

We conclude by noting that the drafters of our constitution were aware that the legislature could create a new statutory right that is not subject to the right of trial by jury. In fact, it was noted at the 1970 Constitutional 77 Convention that "a right to recover [in a personal injury action] without regard to fault might be regarded by the courts as a new cause of action, distinctively different from the common law right to recover for negligence." (3 Record of Proceedings, Sixth Illinois Constitutional Convention 1430.) The drafters chose not to change this area of the constitution.

Breach of Fiduciary Duty Claim

Heinold also argues that the trial court erred in denying it a jury trial on plaintiffs' breach of fiduciary duty claims. On appeal, Heinold attacks the appellate court's finding on this matter:

"While the Illinois Constitution provides that the right to a jury trial shall remain inviolate, this right is not absolute and there is no right to a jury trial in equity actions. [Citations.] It is well established that a breach of fiduciary duty claim is an equitable action. [Citation.] Moreover, this court has consistently held that no right to a jury trial exists where an equitable accounting is sought in a breach of fiduciary duty action. [Citations.] Defendant argues, however, that the breach of fiduciary duty claim here lost its equitable nature when the parties stipulated to the numerical calculations involved in the accounting. We find that a breach of fiduciary duty claim remains an equitable action triable without a jury irrespective of how damages are calculated." 240 Ill.App.3d at 540, 181 Ill.Dec. 376, 608 N.E.2d 449.

Heinold again argues that whether the right to a jury trial exists depends upon the nature of the controversy rather than on the form of the action. (Turnes v. Brenckle (1911), 249 Ill. 394, 403-04, 94 N.E. 495.) According to Heinold, plaintiffs sought only money damages, which constituted legal relief. Thus, according to Heinold, it had the right to a jury trial on plaintiffs' breach of fiduciary duty claims.

[14] Without addressing the appellate court's finding that all actions for breach of fiduciary duties are equitable, we note that plaintiffs' claims for a breach of fiduciary 78 duty sought the imposition of a constructive trust and an accounting. Under these circumstances, plaintiffs' claims were clearly equitable.
