CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC.,

Defendants.

Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R

JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

Complaint

Nature of the Action

1. Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (collectively, "Conwood") seek treble damages and injunctive relief to redress injuries to competition in the national market for moist snuff caused by United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc., and UST Inc. (collectively, "UST"). UST, the world's largest manufacturer of smokeless tobacco, has maintained a monopoly share in excess of 82% of this approximately $1.5 billion market through illegal and exclusionary conduct that has suppressed competition, raised prices, stifled innovation, and reaped hundreds of millions in profits each year for UST.

2. In 1979 Conwood introduced Hawken™, which competed with UST's moist snuff. Hawken was offered in a plastic can, which preserves freshness far longer than the cardboard containers then used by UST. UST had used the brief "shelf life" of cardboard containers to keep rivals out of the market. In addition, UST had instituted a policy -- which became the industry standard -- of permitting retailers to return all dated products. By combining this policy with packaging that had a short shelf life, UST imposed huge costs on rivals seeking to introduce new products to the market. No other firm could afford to enter the market on these terms. But Conwood's long-lived plastic cans reduced returns of stale product, allowed Conwood to elude the previously insurmountable barrier, and for the first time offered moist snuff consumers a choice.

3. UST "tolerated" Conwood's entry into the market while Hawken's sales were negligible. But as Hawken's plastic can, "rough cut," and other innovations started to win consumers, and as Conwood introduced other new products directly competitive with UST's brands, UST abused its monopoly power to prevent distribution of competing products. It regularly removed or hid Conwood's moist snuff, eliminated or vandalized Conwood's advertising and product display racks, induced retailers and distributors to stop carrying Conwood's competitive products in the areas where they were most popular, and spread lies to consumers about Conwood's competitive products (for example, that Conwood's moist snuff was tainted with "stems" and even fiberglass). UST also schemed to ban advertising and other forms of promotion by which the smaller firms compete, and through false information to promote legislation that would put Conwood and other small moist snuff manufacturers (but not UST) out of business.

4. Through its exclusionary conduct, UST succeeded in halting the substantial sales growth that Conwood had achieved through competition on the merits. Having suppressed competition, UST was able to raise prices on its premium products year after year without interruption. But for UST's suppression of competition, Conwood would have continued to win customers through product innovation and lower prices, and would thereby have increased its market share and its profits. Conwood estimates that its actual damages, before trebling, exceed $400 million.

Parties, Jurisdiction, and Venue

5. Plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P., are Delaware limited partnerships with their principal places of business in Memphis, Tennessee. Plaintiffs manufacture and distribute moist snuff, including Kodiak™, Cougar™, and other brands. Conwood transacts business throughout the United States, including this district, and has a manufacturing facility located within this district at Bowling Green, Kentucky. Conwood also buys substantial amounts of tobacco for use in smokeless products from farmers located in this district.

6. Defendants United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc., and UST Inc. are Delaware corporations with their principal places of business in Greenwich, Connecticut.

United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc. is one of two wholly owned subsidiaries of defendant United States Tobacco Company, and is engaged in the marketing and sales of smokeless tobacco products, in this district and throughout the United States.

United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc. is the other wholly owned subsidiary of defendant United States Tobacco Company, and is engaged in the manufacture of smokeless tobacco products including moist snuff in this district (at a 900,000 square foot complex of offices, plants, and warehouses in Hopkinsville, Kentucky) and elsewhere in the United States.

United States Tobacco Company operates exclusively through its two wholly owned subsidiaries to manufacture, market and sell smokeless tobacco products including moist snuff in this district and throughout the United States. On information and belief, United States Tobacco Company controls the acts and decisions of both of its wholly owned subsidiaries, which function as agents of United States Tobacco Company in this district and elsewhere.

UST Inc. operates exclusively through its wholly-owned subsidiary, United States Tobacco Company to manufacture, market and sell smokeless tobacco products including moist snuff in this district and throughout the United States. On information and belief, UST Inc. controls the acts and decisions of its wholly owned subsidiary United States Tobacco Company and, through that subsidiary, controls the acts and decisions of the two wholly owned subsidiaries of United States Tobacco Company, which function as agents of UST Inc. in this district and elsewhere.

UST transacts business throughout the United States, including this district, directly and through agency. UST also has hundreds of millions of dollars worth of assets in this district and buys substantial amounts of tobacco for use in smokeless products from farmers located in this district.

7. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over the action, personal jurisdiction over each of the defendants, and venue is proper in this district.

a. Subject Matter Jurisdiction exists because the action is instituted under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26, to redress and prevent injuries caused by UST's violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and the Lanham Act. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337. This action also states claims under state law arising from the same and related conduct, for which the Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

b. Personal Jurisdiction. The Court has personal jurisdiction over each of the defendants under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 22, and Kentucky Revised Statutes § 454.210.

1. Defendant United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc. has registered to do business and therefore has consented to personal jurisdiction in this Commonwealth.

2. Defendant United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc. may be found and transacts business in this district, 15 U.S.C. § 22, the claims stated herein arise from its transacting business, contracting to supply goods and services, and causing tortious injury by acts or omissions in this Commonwealth, and the company regularly does and solicits business, engages in other persistent course of conduct, and derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered in this Commonwealth. The secretary of state of the Commonwealth is therefore the designated agent for service of process on this defendant. Kentucky Revised Statutes § 454.210(2)(a)(1)-(4).

3. Defendants United States Tobacco Company and UST Inc., directly or by their agents, may be found and transact business in this district, 15 U.S.C. § 22, the claims stated herein arise from their transacting business, contracting to supply goods and services, and causing tortious injury by acts or omissions in this Commonwealth, and the companies regularly do and solicit business, engage in other persistent course of conduct, and derive substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered in this Commonwealth. The secretary of state of the Commonwealth is therefore the designated agent for service of process on these defendants. Kentucky Revised Statutes § 454.210(2)(a)(1)-(4).

c. Venue is proper in this district under 15 U.S.C. § 22, 28 U.S.C. § 1391, Local Rule 4, and Kentucky Revised Statutes § 452.460, because defendants maintain offices, have agents, transact business, and are found in this district. Certain of the unlawful acts alleged herein were performed and had effects within this district.

Trade and Commerce

8. Moist snuff is the dominant smokeless tobacco product in the United States. In 1996, moist snuff accounted for 76% by value (or approximately $1.5 billion in sales) of the smokeless tobacco sold in the United States. Moist snuff is the only smokeless tobacco market that has grown in recent years. The moist snuff market has tripled in size in the last ten years alone.

9. According to surveys, consumers who use moist snuff typically enjoy it in a "pinch" placed between the cheek and gum. Moist snuff consumers do not consider other forms of smokeless tobacco -- dry snuff and chewing tobacco -- to be substitutes for moist snuff, and typically will not switch to such products irrespective of price differentials.

10. Smokeless manufacturers cannot readily convert production facilities devoted to other tobacco products to production of moist snuff. Nor can these or other firms effectively enter the moist snuff market. There are virtually insuperable barriers to entry, raised in substantial part by UST's dominant and established brands, its huge cash resources and history of anticompetitive tactics, its longstanding and often exclusive contracts with farmers, distributors, and retailers, and the increasingly narrow channels for distribution of tobacco products.

11. The market for moist snuff is a national market in which only four firms are considered competitors: UST, Conwood, Swisher International, Inc. ("Swisher"), and Swedish Match North America, Inc. ("Swedish Match").

12. For decades UST had almost 100% of the moist snuff market, which enabled it to charge supra-competitive prices and thereby collect billions of dollars from consumers. UST controls the oldest and best known moist snuff trade brands -- Copenhagen (introduced in 1822) and Skoal (1934). UST enjoys "prodigious free cash generation" (Goldman, Sachs & Co.) from high mark-ups on its low cost moist snuff products and domination of the chain of distribution -- with operating net profits in 1997 of over $712 million. UST continues to maintain a market share in excess of 82% of the moist snuff market.

13. Conwood's share of the moist snuff market is approximately 13.5%. In recent years Conwood's share growth has effectively ceased. Conwood's market share is expected to remain flat or decline in the future if UST's anticompetitive conduct is not enjoined. The other two firms (Swisher and Swedish Match) total approximately 4.3% of the market. According to industry analysts, their shares are also expected to remain flat or decline.

History of UST and Conwood

14. Until just after the turn of the century, all moist snuff sales were controlled by a cartel known as the American Tobacco Trust. This cartel was broken up in a seminal Sherman Act prosecution. Three smokeless firms (now known as UST, Swisher, and Conwood) were created. UST grew dramatically and soon became dominant. Its growth was fueled by its monopoly of the lucrative moist snuff market. UST Inc. now ranks among the 200 largest publicly held U.S. companies. In 1997, UST Inc. reported sales from smokeless tobacco of $1.18 billion.

15. Conwood and Swisher remained relatively small in the decades following dissolution of the cartel. Both marketed dry snuff or chewing tobacco, products that appealed to older, typically rural and less affluent consumers. In recent years, sales of these products have stagnated or declined.

Conwood Enters the Moist Snuff Market

16. Facing the decline of its traditional markets, Conwood recognized that to survive it had to venture into the growing moist snuff market. In 1979, after unsuccessful attempts to crack the UST monopoly with products sold under the brands Stag™ and Wintermint™, Conwood introduced Hawken™, its first nationally distributed product that competed with UST's moist snuff brands. Hawken offered customers a new product with innovative packaging, at a competitive price.

17. Hawken's plastic can was an innovation of critical importance to Conwood's attempt to gain a foothold in a market wholly monopolized by UST. UST had used the short shelf life of its moist snuff products (which were packaged in cardboard containers, and thus susceptible to becoming stale within weeks of delivery to stores) to entrench its monopoly. By telling retailers and distributors that they could return stale product, UST effectively required any new entrant to bear the huge cost of paying for return of dated products even before the new entrant gained any share of the market. This prohibitive cost chilled competition. But Hawken's plastic can gave this product a far longer shelf life. This reduced significantly retailers' returns and allowed Conwood to enter the market with a new product as a robust competitor unintimidated by the huge return-cost barrier erected by UST.

18. UST initially took little notice of Conwood's entry into a market competitive with UST. UST representatives even told Conwood representatives that UST would "tolerate" Conwood's marginal presence.

19. But Conwood sought to compete for -- and win -- substantial market share. And it quickly began to do just that. In 1981 it introduced a premium brand (Kodiak™) of moist snuff aimed directly at UST's premier Copenhagen™ and Skoal™ brands. With competitive pricing, innovative packaging and a different taste popular with consumers, Kodiak propelled Conwood's moist snuff sales to over $30 million in 1985, and took its market share to nearly 9% in the same year.

20. Conwood continued to innovate and provide new products at competitive prices. In 1986 it introduced "J-racks." Designed for use in stores as a holder for round cans of moist snuff, these racks allow customers to see Conwood's advertising logo on the top of the moist snuff can. UST had long used "S-racks," which show only the can's side. The introduction of J-racks enhanced display of Conwood's products and thereby consumer awareness. This helped Conwood win sales and market share.

21. UST sought to sell only "premium" brands (Skoal and Copenhagen) at premium, supra-competitive prices. In 1995 Conwood challenged this monopoly price structure with the introduction of Cougar™, a discount-priced (or "value") brand of moist snuff. Cougar soon won sales from the premium brands. Conwood's popular "value brand" benefitted consumers and threatened the huge profit margins that UST had long enjoyed.

UST's Campaign to Exclude Conwood

22. Conwood continued to innovate in the market and offer benefits to consumers with its J-racks, improved packaging, value brand pricing, popular new tastes, and other innovations. UST recognized that Conwood was likely to continue to grow significantly if UST did not arrest that growth. UST responded with systematic and illegal steps to restrain competition, and thus reduce the choices to consumers from Conwood and other small moist snuff manufacturers.

23. Using its monopoly power, UST developed a multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary acts for execution by its large nationwide sales force and others. On information and belief, these UST representatives acted at either the express direction, or with the tacit approval of, UST. Through these means UST sought to damage competition by eliminating or suppressing consumers' opportunity to be aware of and to choose Conwood products. This impaired competition permitted UST to impose annual price increases on consumers, for its premium moist snuff brands, without interruption. UST's exclusionary campaign included, but was not limited to:

24. Suppression of Competition Through Theft of Conwood Moist Snuff, Distribution Racks, and Point of Sale Advertising. Conwood products are typically displayed in stores on special plastic racks that Conwood provides to the stores. Consumers are directed to these racks by placard (often called "point of sale") advertising. UST has routinely and systematically, in stores across the United States, taken Conwood moist snuff from the racks (to make it inaccessible to consumers), discarded or defaced Conwood distribution racks, and discarded or defaced Conwood point of sale advertising. In a recent one year period, for example, more than 10,000 Conwood racks were taken out of stores in California alone. This suppression of Conwood's distribution impeded competition and deprived consumers of choice. UST representatives have admitted to Conwood representatives that UST district managers tell sales representatives that the "way to get ahead" in UST is to remove Conwood's racks, that they must "turn up the heat on Conwood," and that if they do not "control the moist racks," they will be "writ[ten] up." When Conwood sales personnel have complained about removal of products, racks, or advertisements by UST, UST district managers have responded that "anything goes" and, in one particularly egregious instance, to "hold on to your pants . . . it's only going to get worse." (Photographs documenting a few examples of this misconduct are attached hereto as Exhibit "A".)

25. Suppression of Competition Through Exclusion of Competing Products Based on Misrepresented "Plan-o-Grams." "Plan-o-grams" are schematic diagrams commonly used by large chain retail stores to set the exact location, type of display, and amount of space to be allotted to the various competing tobacco brands and companies. UST has employed plan-o-grams that exclude Conwood products from stores, contrary to the actual wishes of store management. UST has used these documents to persuade low-level store employees to permit UST to stock stores free of Conwood products. In early 1997, for example, UST took a sample plan-o-gram for Clark Oil stores -- a chain of some 200 stores primarily in Michigan -- and then misrepresented to individual stores that they were required to stock UST products and exclude Conwood products. This was untrue. UST's dominant market share made this scheme possible. Through such repeated fraudulent acts, UST denied consumers the benefits of choice.

26. Suppression of Competition Based on False Representations that UST is the "Category Manager" With Authority To Control Store Shelves. UST routinely removes Conwood racks, advertising and products through deception of store personnel. An example of this deception is the "category manager" ruse. UST has falsely represented to low-level store employees that its representatives are the store's authorized "category manager" for smokeless tobacco products, with the right to set the shelves for all brands. Under color of this supposed authority, which in fact UST does not have, UST routinely arranges the smokeless tobacco products in a way that makes competitors' products unavailable or inaccessible. UST's dominant position in the market helped to make UST's claim of authority plausible. UST has successfully employed this tactic in Florida Winn-Dixie stores, Minnesota Food-N-Fuel outlets, and elsewhere.

27. Suppression of Competition Through Frequent Rack Style Changes to Force Conwood from Stores. UST, as the monopoly provider of moist snuff, dominates stores' moist snuff sections with its display racks. Conwood and other competitors attempt similarly to display their products on their own racks. Stores typically prefer to have all such racks be consistent in appearance. But UST sabotages such consistency by routinely replacing its racks with racks of a different style and shape. UST then discards Conwood's racks, with or without permission from the store, because they do not conform in style and shape to the new UST racks. In the last few years -- and for no apparent purpose other than to remove Conwood racks and impose costs on Conwood -- UST has introduced short racks, tall racks, wall racks and others, across the United States.

28. Exclusive Dealing Agreements. UST has used its power as a monopolist to induce retail chains and stores across the United States to enter into written and oral agreements barring or restricting Conwood products, racks and point of sale advertising. These agreements, which cover thousands of stores, take many forms. For example:

a. UST has an agreement with some or all Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. outlets (a national chain of over 1900 stores) that gives UST control over the entire moist snuff section of the store. UST is permitted to install its own distribution racks; remove Conwood's distribution racks; force Conwood's products into UST racks; and restrict the space and placement of Conwood products in its racks. This agreement also prohibits Conwood in-store promotions and point of sale advertisements, which further and artificially suppresses demand for Conwood's products. UST reportedly has similar agreements with the 642-store Dairy Mart chain located in seven states; the 498-store WaWa chain; the 245-store HEB Store chain; the 35-store Orton Convenience store chain; the Minute Man convenience chain; Uncle Willie's chain in Delaware; Quick Sav stores in Michigan; the Mountaineer Marts chain in West Virginia; and countless other retail outlets across the country.

b. Under the "Copenhagen Incentive Program," UST pays participating retailers across the country to help it restrict both the supply and demand for Conwood products. UST obtains control over all point of sale advertising ("[w]e will have primary positioning of all smokeless tobacco POS [point of sale]"). Participating retailers must also refuse to honor any Conwood promotional discounts ("[n]o competitive round can buy downs") and sample give-away programs (allowing UST "exclusive adult sampling rights").

c. Under its "Free Standing Display #2908 Placement Agreement" scheme, UST provides a moist snuff display stand and other inducements (including cash) to retailers; in return, UST products alone are permanently entitled to positioning on the stand's top shelf, and competitors are relegated to lower, less visible racks. Competitors' point of sale advertisements are restricted to small "product labels" immediately above their distribution slots, while UST is guaranteed advertising on a large overhead sign and on dominating "header cards" placed above all distribution slots -- including Conwood's slots.

d. Pursuant to its "Customer Alliance Program," UST exchanges discounts on its prices for guarantees from chains and individual retailers that they will provide information about Conwood's sales to UST and give UST control of at least 80 percent of all moist snuff shelf space within the store.

29. Disparagement of Conwood Products. UST has regularly and systematically spread disparaging falsehoods about Conwood's products. It has, for instance, used the false pretext that Conwood products are "stale," "out-of-date," or have been "discontinued" in order to remove them from retailers' shelves; misrepresented that Conwood racks no longer "comply" with federal regulations and must be removed; perpetuated a myth that Conwood products contain fiberglass and are full of tobacco stems; and scrawled disparaging comments on Conwood ads, including "low quality." These disparagements are not isolated instances, but form part of the overall UST campaign to drive Conwood moist snuff products from store shelves and thereby perpetuate UST's monopoly. This is yet another respect in which UST has used its size and monopoly power to destroy competition. (A videotape documenting a few examples of this misconduct is attached hereto as Exhibit "C".)

30. Predatory pricing. When retailers and distributors have persisted in carrying Conwood products, UST has offered its own products below cost for no economic purpose other than to drive Conwood from those distribution outlets.

31. Recognizing the threat from Conwood's discount brands, UST has also begun introducing its own discount product, Red Seal. It has largely limited distribution of this product, however, to regions where Conwood's discount products have threatened UST market share. In these areas, UST has systematically campaigned, in the words of one of its representatives, to "give away" its product. In Louisiana and Mississippi, for instance, customers purchasing a single can of moist snuff have recently been given 10 or more free cans of Red Seal in return for the surrender of their chosen brand to the UST representative, while store owners are paid the full retail price for all these "lost sales." Customers are also offered 4 rolls (40 cans) of Red Seal for approximately $14, or roughly 35 cents a can, less than one third Red Seal's normal retail price and, on information and belief, less than UST's costs. Store owners are again compensated fully for these "lost sales."

This "give away" plan is, on information and belief, part of a scripted UST scheme to undercut and eliminate Cougar from the marketplace, so that UST can return to premium pricing for all its products. If this scheme is successful, UST will more than recoup any losses it sustains from "give aways."

Misuse of Tobacco Settlement for Anticompetitive Purposes

32. UST's campaign of exclusionary conduct damaged competition and consumers by reducing the availability of Conwood's competing products. But it did not eliminate Conwood entirely as a competitor. For that, UST has sought to erect even higher barriers to competition in the national market for moist snuff.

33. For example, UST sought to involve itself in the "Global Settlement" of litigation between cigarette companies and various state attorneys general and private plaintiffs' lawyers. UST, was the sole smokeless tobacco company permitted to participate in this initiative (United States Tobacco Company, alone among the smokeless firms, signed the "Global Settlement"). On information and belief, UST sought to embed the Global Settlement with provisions that would cause disproportionate harm to its moist snuff rivals and, ultimately, drive them from the market.

34. UST promoted a variety of anticompetitive measures, such as a payment structure for the purported settlement amounts that was designed to impose substantial and punitive costs on non-participating firms, requiring such firms to pay as much as 150% of the amount to be assessed against similarly-situated participants in the private agreement.

35. Congress asked the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") to analyze the Global Settlement. The FTC readily recognized its anticompetitive impact. It expressly concluded that the proposed settlement would prevent "new entrants or maverick firms with new products, lower priced products, or new brands [from] gain[ing] market share from the other firms in the market . . . . [R]estrictions on advertising could reduce competition and lead to higher prices." See, e.g., FTC, Competition and the Financial Impact of the Proposed Tobacco Industry Settlement Appendix (Sept. 1997).

36. Recognizing the antitrust violations patent in their joint and individual acts, UST and the big cigarette companies proposed an unprecedented blanket antitrust immunity for their private efforts to implement and enforce competitive restrictions. They were required to acknowledge that, without such immunity, their acts "could well be treated as a per se violation of the antitrust laws." See Testimony of Meyer G. Koplow before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Antitrust, Business Rights and competition (Oct. 29, 1997).

37. UST used the confusion engendered by the Global Settlement and related legislative and regulatory initiatives to encourage distributors and retailers to boycott Conwood and other small rivals. UST representatives warn that stores must "get into compliance." "Compliance," their sales agents insist, means removing tobacco from the open shelves and placing it behind the counter; removing or replacing "unauthorized" Conwood distribution racks with "approved" UST racks; and restricting or eliminating Conwood point of sale advertising materials.

38. UST also misled and threatened distributors, for the purpose of inducing such distributors to refuse to deal with Conwood and the other small firms. It did so by referencing provisions in the Global Settlement that would, if enacted by Congress, protect participating manufacturers and their distributors from civil lawsuits, leaving nonparticipating companies (and those who do business with them) open to such suits. UST has led distributors to believe that these immunity provisions are effective now -- or that they soon will become effective and distributors must act now -- and that to gain the benefits of immunity distributors must refuse to do business with non-participating firms like Conwood.

39. Most recently, UST sought to lobby in Congress for passage of a proposed federal law that would cost UST hundreds of millions of dollars per year, but would put its three competitors in moist snuff out of business. UST was asked why it preferred this bill to an alternative bill that would cost UST hundreds of millions less. When challenged with the assertion that only a plan to drive smaller rivals from the market could explain its position, UST had no response.

Injury, Damages, and Anticompetitive Effects

40. As a direct and proximate result of UST's exclusionary conduct, Conwood has been injured in its business and property in an amount that cannot now be quantified, but which, upon information and belief, exceeds $400 million. UST's conduct has affected and, unless enjoined, will continue to affect interstate commerce. These effects include, without limitation: (a) reduction or elimination of consumer choice among competing moist snuff products; (b) foreclosure of access to retail and distribution facilities necessary for smaller and/or new tobacco manufacturers to compete; (c) increased barriers to entry in the moist snuff market; (c) chilling innovation within the moist snuff industry; (d) loss of competition among manufacturers for retail and distribution outlets; (e) loss of outlets for sale of tobacco by growers.

CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

Count I

Sherman Act § 2: Unlawful Monopolization

41. Plaintiffs incorporate paragraphs 1 through 40 by reference.

42. UST's conduct constitutes the intentional and unlawful maintenance of monopoly power in the relevant market for moist snuff, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. section 2.

43. In the alternative, UST's conduct is an attempt to monopolize this market in violation of section 2. UST has acted with the specific intent to attempt to monopolize this market, and has sufficient market power to create a dangerous probability of success of monopolizing the market.

44. UST has excluded, or attempted to exclude, competition in this market by preventing or impeding the distribution of competing products.

45. UST's conduct has injured competition and the consumer in the relevant market for moist snuff, suppressed sales of Conwood's products, increased Conwood's development and marketing costs, diminished Conwood's future sales opportunities, increased

Conwood's operating costs, and prevented Conwood from offering new products to consumers.

Count II

46. Plaintiffs incorporate paragraphs 1 through 45 by reference.

47. UST has made false and misleading representations of fact in interstate commerce and in connection with goods or services in commercial advertising or promotion. UST has misrepresented the nature, qualities, and/or origin of plaintiffs' goods, services, or commercial activities. Plaintiffs have been or are likely to be damaged by these acts.

48. UST's false representations actually have confused and deceived, and have the tendency to confuse and deceive, a substantial number of consumers, retailers, and wholesalers concerning the characteristics of products and services sold by the plaintiffs in interstate commerce.

49. Plaintiffs have lost sales, profits, and goodwill, and have suffered injury to their business reputation. Plaintiffs have been and will continue to be injured in their efforts to sell their products and services. Plaintiffs have sustained and will continue to sustain damages, the nature and extent of which cannot presently

Count III

Tortious Interference with Contract

50. Plaintiffs incorporate paragraphs 1 through 49 by reference.

51. UST intentionally, maliciously, improperly and without right or justification engaged in acts calculated to cause damage to plaintiffs in their contractual and economic rights, including but not limited to their rights under contracts with distributors and retailers, with knowledge of those rights.

52. UST acted with ill will, improperly, and in wanton disregard of plaintiffs' contractual and economic rights.

53. As a direct and proximate result of UST's tortious interference with plaintiffs' contractual and economic rights, plaintiffs have suffered damages.

Count IV

Tortious Interference with Prospective Advantage

54. Plaintiffs incorporate paragraphs 1 through 53 by reference.

55. Plaintiffs had economic relationships with retailers and distributors which contained the probability of future economic benefit in the form of sales of plaintiffs' products.

56. UST was aware of these relationships and intentionally interfered with them by the acts specified herein. UST acted, with improper motive, purposefully and maliciously and with intent to injure plaintiffs by inducing retailers and distributors not to continue or to enter into a business relationship with plaintiffs.

(a) An Order directing the termination of the alleged anticompetitive conduct and injunctive relief which restores plaintiffs to the same position they occupied prior to UST's unlawful exclusionary conduct;

(b) Treble damages (including, without limitation, lost profits), in an amount to be determined at trial but believed by plaintiffs to be substantially in excess of a billion dollars;

(d) Plaintiffs' costs of suit herein, including without limitation their attorneys' fees actually incurred;

DEFENDANTS' MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM FEDERAL CIVIL PROCEDURE RULE 26(d)

Pursuant to Local Rule 7.1, Defendants, United States Tobacco Company, et al. ("USTC"), respectfully submit the following memorandum in opposition to the motion of Plaintiffs, Conwood Company, L.P., et al. ("Conwood"), seeking relief from Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d) and, by implication, relief from the initial discovery and case-management process embodied in Rule 26(a) and (f), and in this Court's standard Scheduling Order.[1]

[1] Defendants' response to Plaintiffs' present motion is not a motion or responsive pleading within the meaning of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1) and, therefore, cannot constitute a waiver of any defense or defenses enumerated in Fed. R.

KELLOGG, HUBER, HANSEN, TODD & EVANS

As described below, Conwood offers no legitimate reason why this Court should deviate from the discovery procedures set forth in the new Fed. R. Civ. P. 26, which this District expressly adopted. See Local Rule 26.1. Conwood does not seek preliminary injunctive relief and has not made a showing supporting expedited discovery on any grounds. Instead, Conwood merely asserts that this is a "major" antitrust case, that the "sooner" it obtains discovery, the sooner it can prepare its case, and, without providing any factual basis, that USTC might "destroy" relevant documents.

Conwood's desire to set its own discovery schedule for this case, in direct contravention of Rule 26 as applied by this Court, should be rejected.

BACKGROUND

On April 22, 1998, Conwood filed a 32-page Complaint against Defendants seeking over a billion dollars in damages based on causes of actions under the federal antitrust laws, the Lanham Act, common law and Kentucky statutes. Conwood does not seek preliminary injunctive relief. Along with its Complaint, Conwood served Defendants with Plaintiffs' First Interrogatories To Defendants and Plaintiffs' First Request For Production Of Documents. The service of this discovery is in direct contravention of Rule 26(d), which prohibits, absent a court order, serving such discovery until after the meeting of the parties pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f).

Apparently recognizing its error, on April 23, 1998, Conwood filed the present motion seeking relief from Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d) so that it may "be allowed to serve" Defendants with formal discovery – something it had already done. Plaintiffs are thus seeking to serve formal discovery again without any Rule 26(f) meeting and without satisfying the meet and confer obligation contemplated by Local Rule 37.1. Conwood concedes in its two-page "grounds and memorandum" that it did not comply with Local Rule 37. Rather, Conwood maintains that it could not meet and confer with Defendants "prior to filing suit" and before USTC has filed an appearance before the Court. This observation by Conwood -- which would be true of any discovery requests attached to a complaint -- merely highlights the impropriety of both its initial discovery requests and the instant motion.

On May 5, 1998, Defendants' counsel initiated a telephone call with counsel for Plaintiffs regarding the motion. Defendants' counsel informed Plaintiffs' counsel that, in light of Plaintiffs' moving papers and the relevant authority, Conwood should consider withdrawing its motion to allow discovery in this case to proceed in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Local Rules. This suggestion was rejected by letter on May 7, 1998.

For the reasons set forth below, Conwood's highly unusual request should be denied, and this case should proceed under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26 and the standard practice of this Court.

ARGUMENT

Conwood seeks relief from Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d). Rule 26(d) provides in relevant part that, absent an "order" or "agreement of the parties," a party "may not seek discovery from any source before the parties have met and conferred as required by subdivision (f)."[2] Rule 26(f) provides that the parties shall meet to discuss the nature and basis of their claims, to discuss prompt settlement or resolution of the case, and to develop a proposed discovery plan prior to a pre-trial conference or scheduling order by the Court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 16. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f). Thus, Rule 26(d) imposes a moratorium on all formal discovery until the parties have met pursuant to Rule 26(f). See Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, §§ 2046.1, 2051.1 (West 1994).

According to the Advisory Committee Notes, the purpose of Rule 26(d) is to preclude formal discovery until the parties have had an opportunity under Rule 26(f) "to attempt in good faith to agree on the contents of the proposed discovery plan." Adv. Comm. Notes to 1993 Amendments. The proposed discovery plan is then presented to the Court at or prior to the Rule 16 pre-trial conference and Scheduling Order. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(a) and (b).

Conwood has offered no reason why this mandated procedure should not be followed in this case. Although a party may be relieved of the requirements of Rule 26(d) and (f)

[2] Certain types of cases may also be exempted from Rule 26(d) by "local rule." Here, there can be no dispute that this case does not fall within any of the exceptions listed in Local Rule 26.1.

by court order, the moving party bears the burden of showing good cause to depart from the new framework of Rule 26. See Wright & Miller, § 2046.1. Absent such a showing, courts require parties to comply with the letter of Rule 26(d) and (f). See, e.g., Certain Underwriters at Lloyds v. Frichelle Ltd., Civ.A. No. 96-549 1996 WL 125957, *1 (E.D.La. March 20, 1996) (notice of deposition properly quashed as premature because telephone conversations in which depositions were discussed were not Rule 26(f) meetings); Bush v. City of Dallas, No. 3:95-CV-1057-D, 1997 WL 13564, *1 (N.D. Tex. March 14, 1997) (under federal rules, requests for admission would be improper if served before the time specified in Rule 26(d) – i.e., before a Rule 26(f) meeting).[3]

As the Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 26(d) make clear, relief from Rule 26(d) is appropriate only in "some cases, such as those involving an application for preliminary relief or motions challenging personal jurisdiction." Adv. Comm. Notes to 1993 Amendments. See also Wright & Miller § 2051.1, n.2. Moreover, even in those types of cases exempted from Rule 26(d) and (f), the allowed discovery will be limited to issues directly relevant to the equitable relief being sought; no discovery is allowed on the merits of the case. See Independence Blue Cross v. Health Systems Integration, Inc., No. CIV. A. 96-8216, 1997 WL 36961, *2 (Jan. 29, 1997) (even where expedited discovery is otherwise allowed in context of preliminary injunction, deposition requests seeking to "delve into the merits of the underlying dispute" were premature and thus inappropriate).

Here, Conwood offers no showing of good cause. Conwood does not seek a preliminary injunction or any other interim equitable relief. To the contrary, the reasons offered by Conwood in its moving papers would be equally true for any cause of action brought before this Court. Conwood provides only the following as grounds for its motion:

> This is a major anti-trust action. Defendants' records are likely to be important evidence.
> a. The sooner plaintiffs discover this material, the more expedient their preparation will be.
> b. Defendants' record retention policy may jeopardize the continued existence of requested records.

(Pl. Mem at 1).

These statements simply are inadequate to show good cause. If the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure could be circumvented by these rather unremarkable assertions, then Rule 26 would be rendered meaningless. Moreover, Conwood's suggestion that Defendants would destroy relevant documents is not only baseless and offensive, it is not the type of assertion that would justify ignoring Rule 26 procedures. In short, Conwood has not met its burden of showing good cause.

It is worth highlighting that Conwood's document request, on its face, appears to seek every document in Defendants' possession having anything to do with "moist snuff" – literally truckloads of documents. Indeed, since there is no time period defined in the request,

Plaintiffs presumably seek any documents going back to 1911, which is when Plaintiffs allege that USTC became a "monopolist." This is precisely the type of improperly broad document request, unfettered by prior judicial review, that Rule 26(d) and (f) were intended to prevent.

Finally, this Court's standard Scheduling Order amplifies the basic tenet that discovery motions generally are to be a last resort. Paragraph 4 includes this prohibition: "No discovery motion may be filed without having a joint telephonic conference with the Judge arranged through his courtroom deputy." Conwood's discovery motion not only fails to meet the substantive burden of good cause, it also violates the procedural good sense and mandates of the rules and practices of this Court.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Plaintiffs' Motion For Relief From Civil Rule 26(d) should be denied, and the case should proceed in accordance with Rule 26.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

REPLY IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM FEDERAL CIVIL PROCEDURE RULE 26(d)

On April 24, 1998, plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P., filed a motion seeking to begin making progress with certain written discovery in this case: a two-page set of document requests and six straightforward interrogatories, which put defendants on notice as to specific categories of documents and related information that plaintiffs will require.

Defendants responded with a lengthy opposition, chiefly suggesting that the Court may not grant relief from Rule 26(d) as a matter of law. See Defendants' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Relief from Federal Civil Procedure Rule 26(d) ("Def. Mem.") at 5. But, in fact, the Court has full discretion in this regard.[1] Defendants also suggest that discovery will be available soon enough, and that the Court should simply adhere "to the letter of Rule 26(d) and (f)." Def. Mem. at 5. Yet defendants have declined to schedule a Rule 26(f) meeting to discuss an appropriate discovery plan -- the first step towards commencing discovery under the rules.[2] After first acknowledging that a meeting pursuant to Rule 26(f) would be appropriate, defendants changed course and refused any such meeting on the ground that it would be "premature." See Exhibits A-D.

[1]UST at one point even intimates that relief is appropriate only in cases involving an application for preliminary relief or

Under these circumstances, permitting the parties to begin limited written discovery would serve the interests of efficient case management without imposing any undue burden. Indeed, defendants have identified no reason to suggest they would be prejudiced in any way by plaintiffs' reasonable proposal to move this case forward. Plaintiffs, accordingly, respectfully seek this Court's assistance in crafting relief appropriate to this substantial case.

motions challenging personal jurisdiction. Id. In reality, the Court is free to fashion any discovery schedule it chooses upon any showing of good cause. 8 Charles A. Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2046.1 at 592 (1994) ("the moratorium may be removed by court order. Although the rule does not say so, it is implicit that some showing of good cause should be made"); 1993 Advisory Committee Notes to 1993 Amendment of Rule 26(d) ("[d]iscovery can begin earlier if authorized . . . by order"; preliminary injunction and personal jurisdiction only examples of cases where such an order "will be appropriate").

[2]Rule 26(f) requires the parties to meet "as soon as practicable" after the filing of the complaint; full Rule 26(a) disclosures — involving substantially more discovery than what is sought by plaintiff's motion — are required 10 days later.

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Dear Mark:

Thank you for your letter of May 7, 1998, in which you agreed on behalf of Conwood to extend defendants' time to answer or otherwise respond to plaintiffs' complaint to June 12, 1998 and to extend defendants' time to respond to plaintiffs' Motion For Relief From Civil Rule 26(d) to May 18, 1998. At your suggestion, our local counsel, John S. Reed of Reed Weitkamp Schell Cox and Vice, has prepared a stipulation reflecting these agreed upon extensions. Mr. Reed will forward a copy to Dick Roberts today for his review, execution and filing.

In accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f), we also agree that it would be useful to have a face-to-face meeting among counsel to discuss case management issues or any other matters required under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Local Rules or the Court's standard Scheduling Order. We should talk later this week to discuss the time and location of this meeting.

Finally, we are somewhat puzzled by your suggestion that we also discuss "issues raised by [our] prior representation of plaintiffs." As I informed you last week, Skadden Arps does not currently represent Conwood, did not represent Conwood in a related matter in the past and has received a written waiver from Conwood that precludes Conwood from asserting that Skadden has a conflict in this case. Accordingly, we believe it is now up to Conwood to decide whether and in what manner it may wish to pursue the issue further.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call me at (212) 735-3660.

Very truly yours,

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Dear Mark:

Thank you for your letter of May 15, 1998, in which you propose that we meet sometime between tomorrow and May 29 for a Rule 26(f) meeting. As I stated in my May 11 letter to you, Defendants prefer to proceed under the time schedule set forth by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as well as the Local Rules and practice of the Western District of Kentucky. Under these established guidelines, your request and proposed dates are premature.

As you know, the timing of the Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f) meeting is tied explicitly to the Court's scheduling of a Rule 16(b) pre-trial conference or the Court's determination of an appropriate due date of a Rule 16(b) scheduling order. In turn, Rule 16(b) provides that the Court's scheduling order shall issue within 90 days of the appearance of a defendant and within 120 days after the Complaint is served on a defendant. Accordingly, under the Federal Rules your request to meet sometime in the next several days is far earlier than contemplated by Rules 16(b) and 26(f).

It also is my understanding that, in accordance with Rule 16, Judge Russell's practice is to schedule a Rule 16(b) conference only after a defendant has answered the Complaint or otherwise responded pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12.

Consistent with my letter of May 11, we believe this procedure should be followed here as well. Moreover, because Plaintiffs have moved for relief from Rule 26(d) in order to avoid the established procedures set forth by the Federal Rules, we believe a Rule 26(f) meeting would be counterproductive at this time.

Accordingly, although we continue to agree that it would be useful to have a meeting among counsel to discuss case management issues or any other matters required under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, we suggest that it is best to discuss the time and place to conduct a Rule 26(f) meeting only after Defendants have first responded to the Complaint and the Court has scheduled a Rule 16(b) conference. At that time, all of the issues will be on the table for discussion, and the meeting and the subsequent scheduling conference will be more productive for the parties and for the Court.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call me at (212) 735-3660.

Very truly yours,

Re: Conwood Company, et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., No. 5:98CV-108-R

Dear Neal:

Last week you wrote that "[i]n accordance with Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(f), we also agree that it would be useful to have a face-to-face meeting among counsel to discuss case management issues . . . . We should talk later this week to discuss the time and location of this meeting." This week you wrote to reject such a meeting, at least for the present. I am disappointed that you have changed your mind on this point; undoubtedly there are many issues that we will need to address, and we do not believe that these issues can or should be deferred indefinitely.

If after further thought you are willing to meet to discuss case management issues, please let me know. Please also advise me of the first available date on which you are willing to meet.

Finally, I note that we have not received in our offices defendants' opposition to plaintiff's motion for expedited discovery. Mr. Roberts did receive a copy, and sent it to us. To avoid this in the future, I propose that we serve one another by overnight delivery, with service effected by the same means to all counsel. If this is acceptable to you and Mr. Reed, please let me know.

Very truly yours,

COUNTERCLAIMS

Defendants United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., and United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc. ("Counterclaimants" or "USTC"), for their Counterclaims against Plaintiffs, state as follows:

PARTIES AND JURISDICTION

1. Counterclaimants are Delaware Corporations with their principal places of business in Greenwich, Connecticut. Counterclaimants manufacture, distribute and sell smokeless tobacco products under various brand names throughout the United States, including this district.

2. Plaintiffs, Conwood Company L.P. and Conwood Sales Company L.P. (together "Conwood"), are Delaware limited partnerships with their principal places of business in Memphis, Tennessee. Conwood manufactures, distributes and sells smokeless tobacco products under various brand names and transacts business throughout the United States, including this district. Conwood has a manufacturing facility located within this district at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and buys substantial amounts of tobacco in this district.

3. The Court has subject matter jurisdiction of all Counterclaims under the Lanham Act pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331. The Court has subject matter jurisdiction of all state law Counterclaims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

4. The Court has personal jurisdiction over Conwood, and venue is proper in this district.

CONWOOD'S UNLAWFUL CONDUCT

5. Conwood, through its sales representatives and others, has engaged in conduct in violation of federal and state law, directly and proximately causing injury to USTC. On information and belief, representatives of Conwood, either at the express direction or with the tacit approval of Conwood, have engaged in unlawful conduct including but not limited to the following:

6. Conwood and USTC products typically are displayed in stores on special display racks known as "vendors," according to the express direction of retail store owners and managers. Based on retailer demand, vendors are offered in a wide variety of shapes, sizes, and designs. Depending on the individual store and on the contractual relationships between the store and the respective tobacco companies, the vendors used for cans of moist snuff are provided by one or more smokeless tobacco companies, including Conwood and USTC. Also depending on the individual retail store, USTC, Conwood, and other smokeless tobacco companies, including Swisher International, Inc. and Swedish Match North America, Inc., place point-of-sale advertising to direct consumers to their respective smokeless tobacco products. Conwood, in stores throughout the United States, has removed USTC products from vendors, has discarded or defaced vendors provided by USTC, and has discarded, altered, or defaced USTC point-of-sale advertising, all without the permission of USTC or the retail stores.

7. In order to save costs and to manage their stores more efficiently, retail store owners and managers, in some cases, enter into agreements with smokeless tobacco companies, including USTC and Conwood, designating a company as "category manager." A company designated as category manager is responsible for managing the specific store space dedicated by the store owner or manager for the display of a certain category of products, here smokeless tobacco products. In most instances, the category manager manages the store space dedicated to smokeless tobacco products pursuant to a plan (sometimes referred to as a Plan-O-Gram) that is designed jointly by the category manager and the retail store based on objective market information, and that is adopted by the retail store owner or manager. Conwood, in stores throughout the United States, has interfered with category management relationships between Counterclaimants and retail stores, and has acted without the authority or permission of the retailer to manipulate improperly the in-store smokeless tobacco displays managed by USTC. Specifically, Conwood has placed additional and unauthorized display racks and point-of-sale advertising, has removed, discarded, or defaced approved racks and point-of-sale advertising, and has removed and discarded USTC products, all without the knowledge or permission of retail store owners or managers. In some instances, representatives of Conwood, either at the express direction or with the tacit approval of Conwood, have posed as USTC representatives in order to gain access to the smokeless tobacco displays in retail stores.

8. Conwood representatives have direct contact with both retailers and consumers. Conwood has regularly published false and misleading statements concerning the nature and quality of USTC products to wholesalers, to retailers and to consumers. For example, Conwood has published false statements that USTC products contain foreign materials, have misrepresented USTC's manufacturing process, and have stated that USTC products are generally of low quality. In addition, Conwood has made false and misleading statements concerning USTC's business practices with the purpose and intent of causing injury to the goodwill associated with USTC products.

9. Conwood has initiated and carried out false and misleading commercial advertising campaigns regarding USTC's role as category manager for certain retail stores. In particular, Conwood issued the "Smokeless Gun" advertisement campaign, featuring a fictional private investigator named "Frank Delving." The advertisements misrepresent the nature of USTC's category management relationships with numerous false and misleading statements, including but not limited to false statements of contrived complaints by fictional retail store owners, false statements of misrepresentations allegedly made by USTC representatives acting as category managers, false characterizations of published information, false statements that USTC representatives are "pulling a fast one" or engaging in "dirty trick[s]," false statements that USTC representatives "hid Kodiak" products, false statements that USTC marketing techniques "increases the cost of [USTC] products," false depictions of fictional retail store owners literally tied up at the hands of USTC representatives, and false statements that retail store owners are being "conned" by USTC representatives. Conwood also distributed commercial advertising directly to retail stores which included similar false statements. On information and belief, Conwood's add campaigns are designed to deceive, and do in fact deceive, a substantial segment of their audience with the intent of injuring USTC by a direct diversion of sales and/or a lessening of the goodwill associated with USTC products.

10. On information and belief, Conwood has made "secret payments" to retail stores in order to induce said retailers to allow Conwood to reset the store in whole or in part. As a direct result of these "secret payments," competition between Conwood and USTC was destroyed and USTC suffered injury.

11. Conwood also has interfered with agreements between USTC and retail stores specifically regarding point-of-sale advertising. Counterclaimants negotiate and enter into agreements with retail stores to gain display space for the promotion of USTC products. Conwood, without permission from retail store owners or managers, has interfered with these bargained for rights by, among other things, removing, discarding, or defacing USTC point-of-sale advertising and covering, or replacing altogether, USTC advertising with Conwood advertising.

Count I

12. Counterclaimants incorporate Paragraphs 1 through 11 of these Counterclaims by reference.

13. Conwood has made false and misleading representations of fact in interstate commerce and in connection with goods or services in commercial advertising or promotion. Conwood has materially misrepresented the nature, qualities, and/or origin of the goods, services, or commercial activities of USTC.

14. Conwood's false representations have the tendency to confuse and deceive, and actually have confused and deceived, a substantial number of consumers, retailers, and wholesalers concerning the characteristics of the goods, services, and commercial activities sold by USTC in interstate commerce.

15. As a direct and proximate result of Conwood's conduct, Counterclaimants have lost and will continue to lose sales, profits, and goodwill, and have suffered injury to their business reputation. As a direct and proximate result of Conwood's conduct, Counterclaimants have sustained and will continue to sustain damages in an amount to be determined at trial.

Count II
TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACT AND PROSPECTIVE ADVANTAGE

16. Counterclaimants incorporate Paragraphs 1 through 15 of these Counterclaims by reference.

17. Counterclaimants have contractual agreements with certain individual retail establishments, including agreements whereby Counterclaimants are designated category managers. A category manager is responsible for managing the in-store placement and display of a certain category of goods, here smokeless tobacco products. A category manager works with a retail store to design and implement a plan for displaying products, sometimes known as a Plan-O-Gram. These store-approved plans include the designation of in-store shelf space, the approval of promotional materials, including but not limited to point of sale advertising, the approval of vendor sizes and designs, and various other factors of category management.

18. Conwood has full knowledge of Counterclaimants' agreements with certain individual retail stores. In addition, Conwood has full knowledge of Counterclaimants' prospective business relations with retailers. On information and belief, Conwood, without proper authorization and in contravention of said agreements between retailers and USTC, knowingly and improperly interfered with those agreements by resetting the smokeless tobacco displays, in whole or in part, in the retail stores.

19. Conwood intentionally, maliciously, improperly, and without right or justification has engaged in conduct designed to cause damage to Counterclaimants in their contractual and economic rights arising out of Counterclaimants' existing contracts and prospective contractual relationships with retail establishments. Specifically, Conwood has caused false and misleading commercial advertising concerning USTC's role as category manager to enter interstate commerce. Conwood has ignored store policies and procedures and has re-arranged smokeless tobacco displays, introduced non-approved promotional materials, tampered with displays in violation of store-approved plans, and placed Conwood's own display racks on non-approved shelf space, all without the permission of the retail store.

In addition, on information and belief, Conwood has made secret payments in violation of Kentucky state law in order to induce retailers to designate Conwood, and not Counterclaimants, as category managers. Conwood's conduct tortiously interfered with Counterclaimants' existing contracts as well as their prospective advantage of entering into category manager agreements with retailers.

20. Conwood has acted with ill will, improperly, and in wanton disregard of Counterclaimants' contractual and economic rights and prospective advantage. As a direct and proximate result of Conwood's conduct, Counterclaimants have sustained injury and have suffered pecuniary harm.

Count III
VIOLATION OF KENTUCKY REVISED STATUTE SECTION 365.050

21. Counterclaimants incorporate Paragraphs 1 through 20 of these Counterclaims by reference.

22. Conwood has engaged in the payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions or unearned discounts, in the form of money or otherwise, and secretly extended to certain purchasers special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions in violation of Kentucky Revised Statutes § 365.050.

23. Conwood's conduct has injured competition among sellers of smokeless tobacco products and has directly and proximately caused injury to USTC.

Count IV
PRODUCT DEFAMATION

24. Counterclaimants incorporate Paragraphs 1 through 23 of these Counterclaims by reference.

25. Conwood has published to customers, retailers, and distributors false statements disparaging the quality of USTC products. These false and disparaging statements were harmful to Counterclaimants' pecuniary interests.

26. Conwood published false and disparaging statements with the intent to cause harm to Counterclaimants' pecuniary interests, or Conwood either recognized or should have recognized that the false and disparaging statements were likely to do so.

27. Conwood knew the statements were false or acted in reckless disregard of their veracity.

28. As a direct and proximate result of Conwood's statements, Counterclaimants have sustained pecuniary injury and have suffered general and special damages.

CONVERSION/TROVER

29. Counterclaimants incorporate Paragraphs 1 through 28 of these Counterclaims by reference.

30. Conwood intentionally, wrongfully, and without permission, converted, took, detained, used, or disposed of USTC property, including but not limited to vendors, point-of-sale advertising, and smokeless tobacco products.

31. Conwood acted willfully and maliciously and with a conscious indifference to the consequences to USTC.

32. As a direct and proximate result of Conwood's conduct, Counterclaimants have been injured and have suffered damages.

INJURY AND DAMAGES

33. As a direct and proximate result of Conwood's unlawful conduct, Counterclaimants have been injured and have suffered general and special damages in an amount to be determined at trial.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Counterclaimants respectfully request the Court to enter judgment on their behalf and against Conwood and to award Counterclaimants compensatory and punitive damages in an amount to be determined at trial.

DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PART OF PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Defendants United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc. (collectively "USTC"), and UST Inc., through counsel, move the Court, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF MOTION BY DEFENDANT UST INC. TO DISMISS COMPLAINT FOR LACK OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION

Defendant UST Inc. respectfully submits this memorandum of law in support of its motion to dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2) for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Preliminary Statement

Plaintiffs, Conwood Company, L.P. and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (together "Conwood"), have filed a 32-page Complaint in the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky, against multiple Defendants, including UST Inc. Conwood alleges a panoply of misconduct by Defendants, including UST Inc., in an attempt to support numerous claims under both federal and Kentucky law.

UST Inc., however, is simply a holding company that has never manufactured, sold or distributed moist snuff (or any other type of product) anywhere, including the Commonwealth of Kentucky. Nor does UST Inc. have any other contacts with Kentucky that could give rise to this Court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over it. Accordingly, UST Inc. moves to dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2) for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Argument

I. PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS AGAINST UST INC. SHOULD BE DISMISSED BECAUSE THIS COURT LACKS PERSONAL JURISDICTION

In order for a federal court to exercise personal jurisdiction over a defendant, jurisdiction must be conferred by an applicable rule or statute, and the assertion of jurisdiction must comport with due process. "A court. . . must satisfy a two-pronged test: the defendant must be amenable to suit under the forum state's long-arm statute and the due process requirements of the Constitution must be met." Reynolds v. International Amateur Athletic Fed'n, 23 F.3d 1110, 1115 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 423 (1994). Here, neither prong of the test can be met by plaintiffs.

A. UST Inc. Is Not Subject To Jurisdiction Under The Kentucky Long-Arm Statute

In order to be subjected to personal jurisdiction in Kentucky, a nonresident defendant must commit some act or omission that satisfies one of the enumerated criteria set forth in the Kentucky long-arm statute. That statute provides as follows :

> (2)(a) A court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who acts directly or by an agent, as to a claim arising from the person's:
> 1. Transacting any business in this Commonwealth;
> 2. Contracting to supply services or goods in this Commonwealth;

3. Causing tortious injury by an act or omission in this Commonwealth;

4. Causing tortious injury in this Commonwealth by an act or omission outside this Commonwealth if he regularly does or solicits business, or engages in any other persistent course of conduct, or derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered in this Commonwealth, provided that the tortious injury occurring in this Commonwealth arises out of the doing or soliciting of business or a persistent course of conduct or derivation of substantial revenue within the Commonwealth;

6. Having an interest in, using, or possessing real property in this Commonwealth, providing the claim arises from the interest in, use of, or possession of the real property, provided, however, that such in personam jurisdiction shall not be imposed on a resident who did not himself voluntarily institute the relationship, and did not knowingly perform, or fail to perform, the act or acts upon which jurisdiction is predicated;

. . . .

Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 454.210(2)(a) (Baldwin 1997). Thus, even if Constitutional minimum contacts otherwise exist – which, as discussed below, they do not – personal jurisdiction is not proper unless the defendant committed some act sufficient to satisfy a relevant provision of the long-arm statute. See Auto Channel, Inc. v. Speedvision Network, LLC, ___ F. Supp. ___, 1997 WL 847047, *2-3 (W.D. Ky. 1997); Wright v. Sullivan Payne Co., 839 S.W.2d 250, 253 (Ky. 1992).

As set forth in the Affidavit of Debra A. Baker, UST Inc. did not itself commit any alleged act in Kentucky sufficient to satisfy any provision of the long-arm statute. UST Inc. does not transact business in Kentucky (Affidavit ¶¶ 2, 4); it does not contract to supply services or goods in Kentucky (Affidavit ¶ 4); it did not cause tortious injury in Kentucky (Affidavit ¶ 4); and it does not have an interest in, use, or possess real property in Kentucky (Affidavit ¶ 5). Moreover, Conwood's bare allegations that UST Inc. "directly or by [its] agents, may be found and transact business in this district" is insufficient to support personal jurisdiction because courts have long held that courts may not impute the business activities of wholly owned subsidiaries to the parent company merely because of their corporate relationship. See Miller v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 302 F. Supp. 174 (E.D. Ky. 1969).

Accordingly, the Kentucky long-arm statute cannot confer personal jurisdiction over UST Inc.

B. Even If UST Inc. Were Subject To The Kentucky Long-Arm Statute, The Exercise Of Jurisdiction Over UST Inc. Would Violate Due Process

In any event, the exercise of jurisdiction would violate the due process requirements of the Constitution. Beginning with the seminal case of International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945), the Supreme Court consistently has held that a court cannot exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant unless there are "certain minimum contacts with [the forum] such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." 326 U.S. at 316, 66 S. Ct. at 158. See also Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Court, 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 (1987). The focus of the inquiry into whether a suit offends traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice is whether a nonresident defendant has purposefully availed himself of the benefits and protections of the forum state's laws, so as reasonably to anticipate being hailed into court there. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 (1958). Consistent with due process, personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant can be either general or specific. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tryg Int'l Ins. Co., 91 F.3d 790, 793 (6th Cir. 1996). Conti v. Pneumatic Prod. Corp., 977 F.2d 978, 981 (6th Cir. 1992).

Specific jurisdiction is applicable when a cause of action arises out of a defendant's purposeful contacts with the forum. See Worldwide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1980). General jurisdiction is applicable when a defendant's activities in the forum state are substantial or "continuous and systematic," even if the cause of action is unrelated to those activities. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 91 F.3d at 793, 794; see also Conti, 977 F.2d at 981. Thus, to satisfy the due process portion of the jurisdictional analysis, plaintiffs must allege and prove either that their claims against UST Inc. arose out of sufficient minimum contacts with Kentucky (specific or limited jurisdiction) or that UST Inc. had such "continuous and systematic" contacts with Kentucky that it is subject to personal jurisdiction even if the cause of action did not arise out of those contacts (general jurisdiction).

Conwood has not met, and cannot meet, the due process requirements here. As demonstrated by the Baker Affidavit, UST Inc. is and always has been a holding company. UST Inc. does no business in Kentucky, and, indeed, has never manufactured, sold or distributed any products anywhere, including Kentucky. (Affidavit ¶ 2). As further established by the Baker Affidavit, UST Inc. was formed in 1986 and is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal and only place of business in Greenwich, Connecticut. (Affidavit ¶ 2). UST Inc. is a separate and distinct corporation and maintains a separate corporate existence from its subsidiary United States Tobacco Company. (Affidavit ¶ 3). UST Inc. has no office or place of business in Kentucky and does not use, own or rent any real or personal property there. (Affidavit ¶ 5). UST Inc. maintains no bank accounts in Kentucky, has no telephone listing in Kentucky, keeps no books or records in Kentucky and pays no taxes in Kentucky. (Affidavit ¶ 5). UST Inc. does not solicit or advertise for business in Kentucky, or anywhere else. (Affidavit ¶ 5). UST Inc. does not have any agents, distributors, servants, employees, officers, directors, brokers, wholesalers or other representatives in Kentucky for the purpose of conducting business there. (Affidavit ¶ 5). Finally, UST Inc. is not, and has never been, qualified or authorized to do business in Kentucky, has never consented to be sued in Kentucky, and has not designated any agent for the service of process in Kentucky. (Affidavit ¶ 6).

Significantly, Conwood cannot base its claim that this Court may exercise personal jurisdiction over UST Inc. on the allegation that UST Inc. is a parent company of one or more corporations doing business in Kentucky. A foreign corporation is not amenable to jurisdiction if it does not itself have sufficient minimum contacts with the forum state. See Velandra v. Regie Nationale Des Usines Renault, 336 F.2d 292, 297 (6th Cir. 1964) (it is "appropriate, for the purpose of determining the amenability to jurisdiction of a foreign corporation which happens to own a subsidiary corporation carrying on local activities, to inquire whether the parent has the requisite minimum contacts with the State of the forum"); Miller v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 302 F. Supp. 174 (E.D. Ky. 1969) (dismissing claim against parent corporation where "plaintiff ha[d] not shown sufficient contacts between the parent corporation . . . and the Commonwealth of Kentucky to render it subject to jurisdiction"); see also Smith v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 1996 WL 751399, *2 (W.D. Mo. 1996) (dismissing complaint against defendant that had ownership interests in other companies that manufactured and sold tobacco products, but did not itself own any tobacco fields, manufacturing plants, or sales force). Conwood cannot establish that UST Inc. itself had sufficient minimum contacts with Kentucky.

In sum, it would offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice to keep UST Inc. as a defendant in this case.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over defendant UST Inc. and the Complaint should therefore be dismissed as to UST Inc.

Civil Action No. 3:97-CV-38-H.

United States District Court,
W.D. Kentucky,
Louisville Division.

Nov. 19, 1997.

Tort action was filed against out-of-state television programming licensors for alleged misappropriation of trade secrets and unfair competition. Licensors moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. The District Court, John G. Heyburn, II, J., held that: (1) the licensors did not have contacts with Kentucky that would permit the assertion of long-arm jurisdiction over them for causing tortious injury in Kentucky by virtue of alleged unfair competition and misappropriation of trade secrets; (2) the causes of action did not arise out of any activities in Kentucky; and (3) the assertion of personal jurisdiction would violate due process.

Dismissed.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

HEYBURN, District Judge.

*1 In a separate Memorandum Opinion the Court has discussed numerous dispositive motions. As a result, Plaintiffs have the following causes of action remaining: (1) unfair competition and misappropriation of trade secrets against Cox, Comcast, Continental and Speedvision and (2) various contractual, bad faith, fraud and fiduciary duty common law actions against Cox.

The Court now considers motions of Defendant Speedvision Network, LLC ("Speedvision") and Defendant Continental Cablevision, Inc. ("Continental") to dismiss Plaintiffs' remaining claims against each of them for lack of personal jurisdiction and improper venue. Plaintiff Auto Channel, Inc. is a Kentucky corporation with its principal place of business in Louisville, Kentucky. Plaintiff Robert J. Gordon d/b/a Gordon Communications is a resident of Louisville, Kentucky. Plaintiff Marco J. Rauch is a resident of Rancho Cordova, California. Defendant Speedvision is a Delaware limited liability company with its principal place of business in Stamford, Connecticut. Defendant Continental is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Boston, Massachusetts. Neither Speedvision nor Continental has any offices, employees, or agents in Kentucky. Neither has entered into any contracts or advertised (other than via an Internet web page) in Kentucky.

I

Since all antitrust claims against Speedvision and Continental have been dismissed, this Court no longer has personal jurisdiction over the parties pursuant to the nationwide service of process provision set forth in 15 U.S.C. § 22. Accordingly, Plaintiffs must now rely on the Kentucky long-arm statute to establish personal jurisdiction over the parties. See, e.g., Morley v. Cohen, 610 F.Supp. 798, 823 (D.Md.1985) ("[P]laintiffs must plead ... sufficient facts to establish a basis for personal jurisdiction independent of the nationwide service of process provisions of the previously dismissed federal claims.") For the purposes of this motion, Plaintiffs have the burden of establishing a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction under the applicable long-arm statute. See Welsh v. Gibbs, 631 F.2d 436, 438-439 (6th Cir.1980). The Court will consider the pleadings and affidavits in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs. Id. at 439.

In order to determine whether personal jurisdiction exists over a nonresident defendant in a diversity action, this Court must apply the law of the state in which it sits, subject to due process limitations. Id. Kentucky's long-arm statute provides that:

A court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who acts directly or by an agent, as to a claim arising from the person's:

1. Transacting any business in this Commonwealth;
2. Contracting to supply services or goods in this Commonwealth;

3. Causing tortious injury by an act or omission in this Commonwealth;
4. Causing tortious injury in this Commonwealth by an act or omission outside this Commonwealth if he regularly does or solicits business, or engages in any other persistent course of conduct, or derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered in this Commonwealth, provided that the tortious injury occurring in this Commonwealth arises out of the doing or soliciting of business or a persistent course of conduct or derivation of substantial revenue within the Commonwealth.

*2 K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a).

Kentucky courts may employ the long-arm statute to exercise jurisdiction over nonresidents "only to the limits of the Constitution's due process clause." Wright v. Sullivan Payne Company, 839 S.W.2d 250, 253 (Ky.1992). Therefore, under the long-arm statute, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant has the statutorily required contacts with Kentucky and that the cause of action arose from those contacts. See K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a).

Plaintiffs have properly pleaded claims against Speedvision and Continental for misappropriation of trade secrets [FN1] and common law unfair competition. These claims sound in tort. Moreover, there appears to be no dispute that the alleged tortious acts from which these claims arose occurred outside of Kentucky. Therefore, the applicable section of the Kentucky long-arm statute is K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)4., which permits personal jurisdiction over nonresident tortfeasors who cause tortious injury in the state through acts done outside the state. [FN2] This subsection requires an "out-of-state" tortfeasor to have at least one of several enumerated contacts with Kentucky before he or she is subject to a court's jurisdiction. Specifically, the tortious injury must "arise[] out of the doing or soliciting of business or a persistent course of conduct or derivation of substantial revenue" in Kentucky. K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)4.

[1] The oral and written submissions of both parties suggest that the Court should essentially bypass the specific requirements of the long-arm statute and proceed directly to a due process analysis of the Defendants' contacts with the forum. They base this position on language in 6 superth Circuit and Kentucky case law stating that the long-arm statute "allows Kentucky courts to reach to the full constitutional limits of due process in entertaining jurisdiction over non-resident defendants." Mohler v. Dorado Wings, Inc., 675 S.W.2d 404, 405 (Ky.Ct.App.1984); Poyner v. Erma Werke GmbH, 618 F.2d 1186, 1192 (6th Cir.1980). Most of us have heard words to this effect repeated so often that we long ago stopped reflecting upon what might be their true meaning or origin. However, a closer reading of these precedents produces a subtle conclusion. Underlying the holdings in these cases is the notion that "the purpose of the Kentucky long-arm statute is to insure that Kentucky courts comply with federal constitutional requirements of due process before asserting personal jurisdiction over nonresident defendants." Pierce v. Serafin, M.D., 787 S.W.2d 705, 706 (Ky.Ct.App.1990); Texas American Bank v. Sayers, 674 S.W.2d 36, 38 (Ky.Ct.App.1984). The notion is not that we ignore the precise language which the legislature has chosen to ensure that constitutional compliance.

The legislative intent to comply with due process is manifest in the specific provisions of K.R.S. 454.210, which were carefully drafted to ensure that jurisdiction over nonresident defendants in a variety of contexts is predicated on the requisite minimum contacts. For example, "Kentucky has elected to assume personal jurisdiction over a nonresident tort-feasor whose activities outside the state result in injury only if that tort-feasor regularly does or solicits business within the state or has other substantial connection to the Commonwealth." Pierce, 787 S.W.2d at 706-07. The stricter requirements for establishing jurisdiction over out-of-state tortfeasors seem clearly intended to address due process concerns not present when a tortfeasor has acted entirely within the state. Compare K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)3. with K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)4. In effect, the legislature has designed the long- arm statute to ensure that non-resident defendants have "minimum contacts" with Kentucky "such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945). Accordingly, a defendant whose conduct in the forum is covered by the long-arm statute will necessarily have "purposefully avail[ed] itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws." Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253,

78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958).

*3 However, the fact that a proper application of K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a) will simultaneously satisfy the requirements of due process does not obviate the need to apply its provisions in a manner faithful to the specific language chosen by the legislature. On the other hand, due process principles and precedents may in many circumstances assist a court with the faithful application of the specific provisions of the long-arm statute. Depending on which provision of K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a) is applicable in a given situation, a court may or may not find it appropriate to apply the long-arm statute without some recourse to a due process analysis. In some cases, a court will be able to determine whether there is personal jurisdiction based purely on an application of the express language of K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a). See Jackson v. Wileman, D.D.S., 468 F.Supp. 822, 823-24 (W.D.Ky.1979) (out-of-state tortfeasor did not engage in "doing or soliciting of business... or derivation of substantial revenue" in the state). In other cases, a court seeking to apply a broadly worded provision of the long-arm statute will rely much more heavily on due process principles. See Tube Turns Div. of Chemetron v. Patterson Co., 562 S.W.2d 99, 99-101 (Ky.Ct.App.1978) (scope of "transacting any business" determined with reference to 6 superth Circuit due process analysis). In still others, a court may find it appropriate to move back and forth between the language of the long-arm statute and a due process analysis. See Pierce v. Serafin, M.D., 787 S.W.2d 705, 706-07 (Ky.Ct.App.1990) (applying 6 superth Circuit due process analysis and language of K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)3-4.). In all cases, however, Kentucky courts arguably have applied the clear directives of the long-arm statute modified only by the requirements of due process. [FN3]

II.

[2] Though Plaintiffs do not specifically address the requirements of the Kentucky long-arm statute, they make a number of factual allegations which might be relevant to establishing jurisdiction. Plaintiffs contend that between February and June of 1994, Continental sent criteria for use in a financial model and a list of contact persons at its local cable systems to Plaintiffs in Louisville, Kentucky. Plaintiffs also contend that Speedvision licenses programming to Primestar, HBO Direct and DirecTV, all of whom make Speedvision available to subscribers in Kentucky. Continental also has indirect links to Kentucky through its ownership interests in Primestar, potentially deriving revenue indirectly from subscriptions to Speedvision in Kentucky. Finally, both Speedvision and Primestar maintain web sites which can be reached by Internet users in Kentucky. [FN4]

The Court concludes that these contacts with Kentucky individually and collectively fail to meet the exacting requirements of K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a) 4. First, there is scant evidence that either Defendant "does or solicits" business in Kentucky. Neither Continental nor Speedvision has any business operations whatsoever within Kentucky and neither has engaged in any advertising in the state. The financial modeling criteria and contact lists sent by Continental to Plaintiffs in Louisville cannot reasonably be characterized as solicitation of business. Moreover, the mere fact that Internet users in Kentucky can view advertisements on web pages provided by Speedvision and Primestar falls far short of demonstrating that Defendants advertise in Kentucky. See, e.g., Zippo Mfg. Co. v. Zippo Dot Com, Inc., 952 F.Supp. 1119, 1124 (W.D.Pa.1997) ("[a] passive web site that does little more than make information available to those who are interested in it is not grounds for the exercise [of] personal jurisdiction."); Cf. Kennedy v. Ziesmann, 526 F.Supp. 1328, 1331 (E.D.Ky.1981) ("Nor may the mere carrying of a telephone listing, without additional advertising or other solicitation, amount in and of itself to regular solicitation of business such as to make ... defendant subject to suit under the long-arm statute of a neighboring state where the directory is distributed.")

*4 Similarly, Plaintiffs have pleaded no facts demonstrating that either Speedvision or Continental derives "substantial revenue" from "goods used or consumed or services rendered" in Kentucky. It is undisputed that Speedvision licenses its programming to distributors including Primestar, HBO Direct, and DirecTV who may, in turn, sell programming to Kentucky subscribers. However, Speedvision sells no programming directly to television viewers in Kentucky and has no control over where licensees sell its programming. At best, Continental's ownership interest in Primestar generates revenue only indirectly through subscriptions to Primestar in Kentucky, and there is no indication that the amounts generated, if any, are substantial. Indeed, the available facts indicate that

Speedvision has, to date, derived a negligible amount of revenue from the distribution of its programming in Kentucky. [FN5]

[3] Moreover, the Plaintiffs seem unable to demonstrate a sufficient causal link between their claims and Defendants' alleged contacts with the state. Even if there were facts sufficient to support the inference that Defendants conducted or solicited business in Kentucky, or derived significant revenue from services rendered in the state, Plaintiffs must show that their injuries "arose out of" these activities, as required by K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)4. However, Plaintiffs' theories of injury, as applied to the remaining counts of the Complaint, are all rooted in allegations that Cox, Comcast, Continental, and Speedvision combined and conspired to use confidential business information acquired from the Auto Channel to furnish programming format and content for Speedvision. The allegedly wrongful acts giving rise to these claims bear no relationship to any business or advertising presently (or previously) engaged in, or revenue derived by, Defendants in Kentucky. The Defendants' in-state activities are at most incidental to the conduct underlying the cause of action. See Kennedy v. Ziesmann, 526 F.Supp. 1328, 1331 (E.D.Ky.1981) ("Here, the cause of action alleged, if any exists, arose in Ohio when the anesthetic was administered, and the telephone calls [by the doctor to Kentucky] were only incidental."). Indeed, it appears that the allegedly tortious acts causing Plaintiffs' injuries would necessarily have occurred prior to the time that Speedvision was first distributed in Kentucky.

III.

[4] The due process analysis followed in the 6th Circuit only bolsters the Court's conclusion that Plaintiffs' causes of action do not "arise from" Defendant's alleged activities in Kentucky. The Sixth Circuit has incorporated the "arising from" requirement into its three-part test for determining whether a nonresident defendant has the requisite minimum contacts to give rise to personal jurisdiction:

> First, the defendant must purposefully avail himself of the privilege of acting in the forum state or causing a consequence in the forum state. Second, the cause of action must arise from the defendant's activities there. Finally, the acts of the defendant or consequences caused by the defendant must have a substantial enough connection with the forum state to make the exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable.

*5 Southern Machine Co. v. Mohasco Industries, Inc., 401 F.2d 374, 381 (6th Cir.1968) (emphasis added). The necessary degree of relatedness for the plaintiffs claims to "arise from" the defendant's contacts has never been precisely determined. See, e.g ., Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 415 n. 10, 104 S.Ct. 1868, 80 L.Ed.2d 404 (1984). However, the Sixth Circuit requires that the cause of action have at least a "substantial connection" to the defendant's in-state activities. Southern Machine, 401 F.2d at 384 n. 27; Third Nat. Bank v. WEDGE Group, Inc., 882 F.2d 1087, 1091 (6th Cir.1989). In many cases, it is easy discern a direct relationship between the cause of action and the defendant's contacts with the forum. For example, in an action for breach of contract, it necessarily follows that the cause of action arises directly out of the contract entered into by the plaintiff and the nonresident defendant. See, e.g., In-Flight Devices Corp. v. Van Dusen Air, Inc., 466 F.2d 220, 229 (6th Cir.1972) (contract entered into by nonresident defendant "is necessarily the very soil from which the action for breach grew.").

In this case, the statutorily required relationship between Plaintiffs' tort claims and Defendants' minimal contacts to Kentucky is so attenuated as to be de minimus. The only possible link is that some Kentucky customers of Primestar, HBO Direct, or DirecTV may be subscribing to Speedvision, the network that Defendants allegedly copied from the Auto Channel. [FN6] However, this slight degree of relatedness is not sufficient to support personal jurisdiction over the Defendants. The fact that Defendants could profit indirectly from sales of Speedvision's programming in Kentucky is simply not one of the "operative facts of this controversy." Southern Machine, 401 F.2d at 384. Indeed, the underlying factual basis of the Plaintiffs' claims does not depend on whether Speedvision is presently available to subscribers in Kentucky or any other state. The validity or invalidity of these claims does not seem to depend on anything these Defendants have done (or may be doing) in Kentucky.

Overall, one cannot escape the impression that neither Speedvision nor Continental have acted purposefully within the state in any consequential manner. A comparison of their actions with those in Third Nat. Bank in Nashville v. WEDGE Group,

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Inc., 882 F.2d 1087 (6th Cir.1989) is instructive. For example, Wedge had meetings and negotiations in the forum state; these Defendants did not. Id. at 1090. Wedge held substantial deposits in the forum; these Defendants did not. Id. Those comparisons alone are sufficient to differentiate Wedge's contacts as "purposefully availing" and the Defendant's contacts as "random" or "attenuated." In the Court's view, the differences are significant enough to justify different results.

IV.

[5] The Court's analysis concludes that Plaintiffs' causes of action against the Defendants lack the requisite minimum contacts with Kentucky for this Court to assume jurisdiction under K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a). Nonetheless, the purpose of the Kentucky long-arm statute is to ensure that courts comply with due process, not to deny arbitrarily an injured party his or her day in court. Indeed, Kentucky has a legitimate interest in seeing that its citizens receive compensation for their injuries, especially when, as here, the brunt of the injury may be felt in Kentucky, that is, upon a Kentucky corporation. However, without the requisite contacts, Kentucky's interest in providing a home forum for its own citizens is insufficient to carry the day.

*6 This Court is satisfied that there are other forums in which it would be fair and appropriate to litigate Plaintiffs' claims against the Defendants. Speedvision is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Stamford, Connecticut. Continental is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Boston, Massachusetts. Plaintiffs allege that Speedvision and Continental conspired with others to steal the programming format and content of the Auto Channel. Such a scheme would require a substantial amount of planning and coordination. Much of the alleged wrongdoing is highly likely to have taken place in Connecticut, Massachusetts, or Delaware. It would not be unreasonable to require Plaintiffs, who were pursuing deals with nonresidents across state lines, to seek recovery in those jurisdictions where the conduct giving rise to their injuries occurred. [FN7] Consequently, the Court concludes that its decision has results which are fair to the movants without being unfair to Plaintiffs overall.

Since Defendants' motions have been resolved on the issue of personal jurisdiction, the Court need not reach the venue issue. The Court will issue an order consistent with this memorandum opinion.

ORDER

Defendants, Speedvision Network, LLC and Continental Cablevision, Inc., have moved this Court to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims against them for lack of personal jurisdiction and improper venue. Being otherwise sufficiently advised,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendants motions are SUSTAINED and the claims against Speedvision and Continental contained in counts 10 and 11 are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

FN1. K.R.S. § 365.880 et seq. (Uniform Trade Secrets Act)

FN2. Plaintiffs have suggested that KRS 454.210(2)(a)1.-2 may establish personal jurisdiction over Defendants. Their reasoning apparently is that operating or deriving revenue through independent distributors can establish minimum contacts with the forum. See Payne v. Kristofferson, 631 F.Supp. 39, 43 (N.D.Ga.1985) (nonresident's licensing arrangement with national distributor of allegedly infringing song books sufficient to establish minimum contacts with forum); See also Edy Clover Productions, Inc. v. National Broadcasting Co., 572 F.2d 119, 120-21 (3rd Cir.1978) (nonresident programmer could anticipate that allegedly infringing game show might be broadcast by distributor in forum). However, even if such arrangements constituted "transacting any business" or "contracting to supply goods or services" in Kentucky under the long-arm statute, Plaintiffs tort claims still would not "arise from" these contacts. See Thermothrift Industries, Inc. v. Mono-Therm Insulation Systems, Inc., 450 F.Supp. 398, 403 (W.D.Ky.1978) ("... a key factor in weighing the strength of this state's connection is whether the cause of action arises out of defendant's attempts to benefit from the laws of Kentucky by entering the market here."); See also Bowen v. Eastside Jersey Dairy, 521 S.W.2d 822, 823 (Ky.1975). K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)3. does not apply, because the allegedly tortious acts took place outside of Kentucky.

FN3. The fact that the requirements of K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a) are theoretically satisfied by the same minimum contacts required by due process should not be taken to mean that the long-arm statute is superfluous. First, it is possible to decline jurisdiction based only on the language of the statute, without recourse to a due process analysis.

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Second, the specific provisions of the statute in many cases will provide courts with additional guidance or lend clarity to factual situations not previously encountered in our due process cases. Of course, merely satisfying the plain language of the statute does not obviate the need to check this result against the requirements of due process.

FN4. It is clear that the Defendants contacts with the forum are not sufficiently systematic or continuous for an assertion of general jurisdiction over them. See Third Nat. Bank in Nashville v. WEDGE Group, Inc., 882 F.2d 1087, 1089 (6th Cir.1989).

FN5. Speedvision presently receives about $ 400 per month from retransmission of its programming in Kentucky. This amounts to less than four hundredths of one percent of Speedvision's total monthly revenues.

FN6. Though Continental's delivery of criteria and lists to Louisville may be more directly related to the cause of action, these contacts fail the threshold requirement of the long-arm statute that the contacts fall into the category of "doing or soliciting of business," "derivation of substantial revenue," or other "persistent course of conduct." K.R.S. 454.210(2)(a)4.

FN7. Presumably, Delaware would be a convenient forum, since both Speedvision and Continental are residents of the state.

No. 96-0459-CV-W-3.

United States District Court, W.D. Missouri.

Dec. 19, 1996.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT B.A.T. INDUSTRIES, PLC'S MOTION TO DISMISS FOR LACK OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION

SMITH, District Judge.

*1 Pending is Defendant B.A.T. Industries' ("BAT-I") Motion to Dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. [FN1] For the reasons set forth below, the Motion to Dismiss is granted.

FN1. On October 8, 1996, the Court issued an Order denying this motion, but erroneously observed that briefing on the motion had been completed. Consequently, the Court withdrew this Order on October 10, 1996.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff has sued BAT-I and Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation ("B & W") on a variety of theories seeking redress for injuries allegedly caused by cigarette smoke. BAT-I is a public limited company organized under the laws of England and Wales. Prior to July 23, 1976, B & W was owned by British-American Tobacco Company Limited ("BATCo"), and BAT-I was known as Tobacco Securities Trust, Ltd. In July 1976, BAT-I purchased BATCo and B & W and changed its name to B.A.T. Industries Limited and, in July 1981, to the name it bears today.

BAT-I is a holding company, and as such has interests in tobacco and financial services. Prior to 1990, BAT-I also had interests in the paper and retail Industries. However, BAT-I does not manufacture or market tobacco products; to say that BAT-I has "interests in tobacco" is to say that it owns companies (such as B & W and non-defendants BATCo, British-American Tobacco (Germany), and Souza Cruz) that do engage in the manufacture, marketing and sale of cigarettes. Plaintiff has submitted a variety of documents that purportedly demonstrate that BAT-I was involved in the research, manufacture and sale of tobacco products to a degree that belies its status as a mere holding company. Some documents purport to demonstrate that BAT-I is a seller of tobacco products, while others are supposed to demonstrate that BAT-I "has attempted to shield itself from liability while at the same time participating in research that it plainly denies." Plaintiff's Suggestions in Opposition at 15. The specific contents of these documents is discussed in greater detail below. [FN2]

FN2. B & W has posed objections to some of the documents proffered by Plaintiff, alleging that they should not be considered because they are privileged. In light of the Court's ruling, there is no need to expend the parties' (and judicial) resources to determine whether these documents are privileged. The documents will be considered for purposes of BAT-I's motion without ruling or waiving B & W's objection.
Some of the documents were supplied as part of Plaintiff's Supplemental Response to BAT-I's motion, which was filed after BAT-I replied to Plaintiff's initial response. The Supplemental Response should not have been filed, see Local Rule 13(a); however, the Court has reviewed the Supplemental Response and concludes that nothing contained therein would alter the Court's ruling.

II. DISCUSSION

The issue of personal jurisdiction is analyzed on two levels. First, the exercise of jurisdiction must be proper under Missouri's long-arm statute. Once it is determined that those requirements are satisfied, the Court then addresses whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction satisfies the dictates of the Due Process Clause. Dakota Indus. v. Dakota Sportswear, Inc., 946 F.2d 1384, 1387-88 (8th Cir.1991). In making its decision, the Court is mindful that "[w]hile it is true that the plaintiff bears the ultimate burden of proof on this issue, jurisdiction need not be proved by a preponderance of the evidence until trial or until the court holds an evidentiary hearing. To defeat a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the nonmoving party need only make a prima facie showing." Id. at 1387.

Missouri's long-arm statute provides in pertinent part as follows:

Any person or firm, ... or any corporation, who in person or through an agent does any of the acts enumerated in this section, thereby submits such person, firm or corporation ... to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state as to any cause of action arising from the doing of any such acts:

*2 (1) The transaction of any business within this state;
(2) The making of any contract within this state;
(3) The commission of a tortious act within this state;

Mo.Ann.Stat. § 506.500.1 (Vernon Supp.1995) (emphasis supplied). The objective in enacting these provisions "was to extend the jurisdiction of the courts of [Missouri] over non-resident defendants to that extent permissible under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution." State ex rel. Newport v. Wiesman, 627 S.W.2d 874, 876 (Mo. banc 1982) (quotation omitted). In furtherance of this objective, "Missouri courts have interpreted the words 'transaction of any business within this state' ... broadly so as not to deny jurisdiction under § 506.500 in situations in which the due process clause would permit the assertion of personal jurisdiction." Id.; see also Fairbanks Morse Pump Corp. v. Abba Parts, Inc., 862 F.2d 717, 719 (8th Cir.1988). With respect to the "tortious acts" provision, the phrase has been interpreted to "include extraterritorial acts that produce actionable consequences in Missouri." Institutional Food Marketing Assoc. v. Golden State Strawberries, Inc., 747 F.2d 448, 453 (8th Cir.1984). With respect to the Fourteenth Amendment's requirements, "the "minimum contacts" standard involves consideration of five factors: (1) the nature and quality of contacts with the forum state; (2) the quantity of these contacts; (3) the relationship between the contacts and cause of action; (4) the interest of the forum state; and (5) the convenience of the parties." Wines v. Lake Havasu Boat Mfg., 846 F.2d 40, 42 (8th Cir.1988).

Plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that the BAT-I (as opposed to the companies it holds, BATCo and B & W) has transacted business in this state or was involved in B & W's allegedly tortious conduct. Many of the documents make reference to the involvement by "BAT" in tobacco operations and research, but fail to specify whether the reference is to BAT-I or to BATCo. In some instances, the correct reference is clear; some of the documents are dated prior to July 1976--prior to the time an entity known as BAT-I even existed. [FN3] These documents must, therefore, refer to BATCo as it was the only "BAT" in existence. In other instances, the author of the document has declared that the "BAT" in question was a reference to BATCo and not BAT-I. In some instances, there is absolutely no way to tell whether or not the "BAT" in question in BAT-I. [FN4] One document, which is in BAT-I letterhead, [FN5] is a two page letter offering general legal advice regarding statements by employees and officers that might be considered admissions in a lawsuit and other general matters relating to litigation risks. This level of involvement is insufficient to impute tortious acts of B & W to BAT-I. Finally, some documents contain no reference to "BAT" or BAT-I. [FN6]

FN3. Exhibits 1 and 7 to Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss.

FN4. Exhibit 8 to Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss.

FN5. Exhibit 4 to Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss. Notwithstanding the Court's treatment of B & W's claims of privilege as enunciated in footnote 2, it should be noted that this document is authored by an attorney and is marked "ATTORNEY WORK PRODUCT " on each of the two pages.

FN6. Exhibit 6 to Plaintiff's Opposition to Motion to Dismiss.

Plaintiff has also submitted public documents (such as SEC filings) that purportedly demonstrate that BAT-I is in the business of selling tobacco products. To the contrary, they demonstrate that BAT-I has interests in other companies (e.g., B & W) that do sell tobacco products; BAT-I has no manufacturing plants, tobacco fields, or sales force. Plaintiff points to activities attributed to "the Group," but the context of these statements demonstrates that "the Group" refers to BAT-I's tobacco companies and not to actions taken directly by BAT-I.

*3 Both parties have also provided a variety of court documents from other jurisdictions. With respect to those provided by BAT-I, the Court wishes to make clear that the fact that other courts have ruled that they lack personal jurisdiction over BAT-I has not been a factor in its decision in this case. With respect to the court documents filed by Plaintiff, the Court finds they present no basis for concluding that BAT-I is subject to suit in this forum.

III. CONCLUSION

As stated above, at this stage of the proceedings Plaintiff has a relatively slight burden to demonstrate BAT-I is subject to jurisdiction in this state. However, Plaintiff has failed to carry even this slight burden; nothing in the record demonstrates that BAT-I has sufficient minimum contacts with this state to satisfy the requirements of either the Due Process Clause or Missouri's Long-Arm Statute. Accordingly, Defendant B.A.T. Industries PLC is DISMISSED for lack of personal jurisdiction.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

OPPOSITION TO UST INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT FOR LACK OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION

Preliminary Statement

Defendant UST Inc. ("Inc.") is a "Fortune 200" company with 1997 revenues of $1.18 billion[1] from tobacco that is grown, manufactured and sold, in significant part, in Kentucky. Inc. claims that it must be dismissed from this suit because it supposedly, unlike each of the co-defendant subsidiaries it closely controls, "does no business in Kentucky." Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion by Defendant UST Inc. to Dismiss Complaint for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction ("Mem.") at 5.

Inc. has no colorable basis for this motion. The Court has personal jurisdiction over Inc. in this antitrust case under Section 12 of the Clayton Act -- a point ignored entirely by Inc.

[1]Corporate Data Shareholder Services, UST Fact Sheet, http://www.shareholder.com/ust/fas2.htm (June 24, 1998) (Exh. A); UST 1997 Form 10-K405 (March 13, 1998) (Exh. B).

Section 12 authorizes jurisdiction over Inc., irrespective of its Kentucky contacts, based on Inc.'s minimum contacts with the United States as a whole. (Point I). Even if the Court were, like Inc., to ignore this controlling statute, Inc. is otherwise subject to jurisdiction based on its contacts with Kentucky. (Point II).

Argument

I. THIS COURT HAS PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER UST INC. UNDER SECTION 12 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Section 12 of the Clayton Act provides for nationwide service of process in federal antitrust actions. 15 U.S.C. § 22. Where -- as here -- the case is brought under a federal statute providing for nationwide service of process, it has long been settled in this circuit that a defendant is subject to personal jurisdiction "based on presence of the defendant in the United States, rather than in any particular state." Haile v. Henderson Nat'l Bank, 657 F.2d 816, 825 (6th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 949 (1982); United Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 985 F.2d 1320, 1330 (6th Cir. 1993) (Section 27 of Exchange Act, which provides for nationwide service of process, "confers personal jurisdiction in any federal court over any defendant with minimum contacts with the United States"); C.B.S. Employees Fed. Credit Union v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Sec. Corp., No. 88-2677-4B, 1989 WL 76479, at *5 (W.D. Tenn. Mar. 27, 1989) (personal jurisdiction based on nationwide service provision of federal securities statute).[2]

Inc. argues that plaintiffs must demonstrate both compliance with the Kentucky long-arm statute and its minimum contacts with Kentucky, in accordance with International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945). Mem. at 2. But Inc. misapprehends the standard. International Shoe is inapplicable where the action is brought under a federal statute (like Clayton Act § 12) that provides for nationwide service. Haile, 657 F.2d at 824-25 ("In an action . . . pursuant to a federal statute which provides for nationwide service of process, the strictures of International Shoe do not apply . . . . There is no due process requirement of 'minimal contacts' to justify the exercise of jurisdiction by federal courts") (citation omitted); McIntyre's Mini Computer Sales Group, Inc. v. Creative Synergy

[2]Nor is there any basis for distinguishing among federal statutes providing for nationwide service. All permit the assertion of personal jurisdiction based on minimum contacts with the United States as a whole. It is the fact of nationwide service, rather than the particulars of the statute, that permits assertion of personal jurisdiction on this basis. See Go-Video, Inc. v. Akai Elec. Co., 885 F.2d 1406, 1414 (9th Cir. 1989). And in any event, Section 12 is "nearly identical" to Section 27 of the Exchange Act. Id. See also id. at 1415 (under "the worldwide service provision of § 12 . . . personal jurisdiction may be established in any district, given the existence of sufficient national contacts"); Mariash v. Morrill, 496 F.2d 1138, 1143 (2d Cir. 1974) (personal jurisdiction based on national contacts under Clayton Act § 12); Kinsepp v. Wesleyan Univ., 763 F. Supp. 22, 24 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) ("[i]n cases where Congress [has] authorize[d] nationwide federal jurisdiction, as in section 12 of the Clayton Act, the district court's jurisdiction is coextensive with the boundaries of the United States"); Dunham's, Inc. v. National Buying Syndicate of Texas, 614 F. Supp. 616, 623 (E.D. Mich. 1985) (same).

Corp., 644 F. Supp. 580, 585 (E.D. Mich. 1986) ("[w]here Congress has provided for nationwide service of process . . . due process requires only that the defendant have minimum contacts with the United States").

The Kentucky long-arm statute is similarly inapplicable. "[W]hen a defendant resides in the United States and is subject to nationwide service of process under a federal statute, the defendant is subject to personal jurisdiction in federal court without regard to state long-arm statutes." Kinsepp, 763 F. Supp. at 25 (jurisdiction under Clayton Act § 12); Dunham's, Inc., 614 F. Supp. at 623 (same).

The only pertinent questions are whether Inc. was served and whether it has minimum contacts with the United States as a whole. Haile, 657 F.2d at 826; Black v. Acme Markets, Inc., 564 F.2d 681, 684 (5th Cir. 1977) ("When a federal statute provides for nationwide service of process, the court has jurisdiction over the person so long as the manner of service is proper").

Inc. was properly served;[3] it has in any event waived objection to service. Chrysler Corp. v. Fedders Corp., 643 F.2d 1229, 1238 (6th Cir.) ("failure to object to service of process . . . in its Rule 12(b) motion . . . constitutes a waiver of any such objection"), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 893 (1981). Inc. has similarly waived any objection to venue; indeed, in its answer it has conceded that venue is proper. Answer ¶ 7(c) ("Defendants admit that venue is proper in this district.").

Nor can Inc., one of the largest U.S. corporations, plausibly contest its minimum contacts with the United States. See FTC v. Jim Walter Corp., 651 F.2d 251, 256 (5th Cir. 1981) (a resident corporation necessarily has sufficient "contacts with the United States"); Bankatlantic v. Coast to Coast Contractors, Inc., 947 F. Supp. 480, 488-90 (S.D. Fla. 1996) (defendant's "mere presence within the United States establishes 'minimum contacts'").

Inc. has ignored the principal basis for personal jurisdiction in this Court — and the primary basis for personal jurisdiction pleaded in the Complaint. Complaint ¶ 7(b) (asserting personal jurisdiction under 15 U.S.C. § 22). Because personal jurisdiction is present under this provision, the Court need not even address Inc.'s claim that jurisdiction would not be present under other theories.

II. CLAYTON ACT ASIDE, INC. IS SUBJECT TO THIS COURT'S JURISDICTION

Inc. is regularly a defendant in cases, unlike this one, where plaintiff must establish Inc.'s minimum contacts with the forum State. With the same regularity, Inc. contests personal jurisdiction based on lack of minimum contacts, and just as regularly fails.[4]

[4]See, e.g., "Motion of UST Inc. To Dismiss First Amended Complaint for Lack of Jurisdiction," filed with "Affidavit of Debra A. Baker," in Florida v. The American Tobacco Co., et al., Case No. 95-1466 (15th Judicial Dist. Cir. Ct., Palm Beach Cty.,

Here, as in its previous and unsuccessful efforts to escape jurisdiction, Inc. argues that it is beyond the power of this Court because the Kentucky long-arm statute does not reach it, and because such an assertion of jurisdiction would violate due process. Mem. at 2-7. Neither contention can withstand scrutiny.

First, the Kentucky long-arm statute does reach Inc. The Complaint alleges that Conwood's claims arise from Inc.'s "transacting business . . . in this Commonwealth," and "causing tortious injury by acts or omissions in this Commonwealth." Complaint ¶ 7(b)(3).[5]

Inc. argues that the affidavit of Debra Baker, which simply denies these allegations, should control. Mem. at 3-4. But that Fla., filed Mar. 29, 1996) (Exh. C); "Special Appearance and Motion of UST Inc. To Dismiss the Third Amended Complaint of the Plaintiffs for Lack of Jurisdiction," filed with "Affidavit of Debra A. Baker," in West Virginia v. The American Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 94-C-1707 (Kanawha Cty. Cir. Ct., W. Va. filed Dec. 5, 1996) (Exh. D). Plaintiffs have been able to locate only one instance — a personal injury case in California where plaintiff had no lawyer — in which this motion has succeeded. Dymits v. American Brands, Inc., et al., No. C 96-1897 CW, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19742 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 31, 1996).

[5]The Kentucky long-arm statute, Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 454.210(2)(a), is construed broadly, because it was intended to confer personal jurisdiction to the maximum extent permissible under the Due Process Clause. Tobin v. Astra Pharmaceutical Prods., Inc., 993 F.2d 528, 542 (6th Cir. 1993) ("[t]he Kentucky long-arm statute has been understood to reach the limit permitted by the Constitution"); id. (Kentucky's "long-arm statute 'was designed to extend the permissible scope of jurisdiction over foreign corporations with minimal contact in Kentucky'") (quoting Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Nantz, 516 S.W.2d 840, 842 (Ky. 1974)).

is precisely what the Sixth Circuit has foreclosed absent a full evidentiary hearing:

> A court disposing of a 12(b)(2) motion does not weigh the controverting assertions of the party seeking dismissal . . . because we want to prevent non-resident defendants from regularly avoiding personal jurisdiction simply by filing an affidavit denying all jurisdictional facts. . . . Dismissal . . . is proper only if all the specific facts which the plaintiff . . . alleges fail to state a prima facie case for jurisdiction.

Compuserve, Inc. v. Patterson, 89 F.3d 1257, 1262 (6th Cir. 1996) (emphasis in original) (citations omitted). Here plaintiffs' allegations more than state a prima facie case for jurisdiction, and Ms. Baker's cursory affidavit need not and should not be considered.[6]

Inc.'s second claim is that it lacks minimum contacts with Kentucky, such that exercise of personal jurisdiction here would "offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Mem. at 4-7. That argument has two parts: Inc. says it has nothing to do with Kentucky, because it is merely a holding company; and it says the extensive operations of its co-defendant subsidiaries in Kentucky cannot be weighed by this Court. Neither is correct.

[6]Inc.'s single authority on this point, Miller v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 302 F. Supp. 174 (E.D. Ky. 1969) is inapposite. There another district court held only that allegations based solely on a parent-subsidiary relationship were insufficient predicate for jurisdiction. Those are not the allegations at issue here; Conwood has alleged far more, and under Compuserve those allegations control.

Inc. in fact has extensive ties to Kentucky, as it has elsewhere stated. Even without discovery,[7] Conwood has established that:

Inc. purchases tobacco in Kentucky. Inc. represents in its most recent annual report that "[w]e remain committed to purchasing only highest quality American tobacco. The Company currently purchases more than 90% of its tobacco from American growers in the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia for its moist smokeless tobacco products." UST 1997 Annual Report, Mar. 18, 1998 (Exh. E) (emphasis added).

Inc. is involved in Kentucky politics. Inc. is a major and regular contributor to Kentucky politicians. It has formed a political action committee composed of Inc. executives -- USTeam PAC -- to funnel more than $65,000 to Kentucky candidates in the last three years. Exh. F. In 1996, it also contributed $75,000 to the McConnell Political Leadership Fund at the University of Louisville. Exh. G.[8] [7]Before the Court can credit any argument that Inc. has no contacts with Kentucky, plaintiffs should be permitted discovery. 4 Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 26.07(6) at 26-165 to 26-166 ("[i]n cases in which jurisdiction depends upon complicated facts, . . . it has been held that it is error to grant a motion to dismiss without affording the plaintiff an opportunity for discovery").

[8]Top Inc. executives, including CEO Vincent A. Gierer, Executive VP Robert Barrett, and Executive VP and General Counsel Richard Verheij, donated an additional $20,000 during the 1994-96 election cycles to Kentucky campaigns, including the maximum lawful contributions to Senator McConnell's reelection campaign in 1996. Exh. H. Just two years ago, Inc. sponsored a luncheon aboard the 90-foot yacht Electra, for Kentucky delegates attending the Republican National Convention. Exh. I.

Inc. is involved in other Kentucky affairs. Underscoring the importance of this State to its business, Inc. is regularly involved in programs and activities in Kentucky that pertain to its tobacco interests. For instance, in Inc.'s 1997 Annual Report CEO Vincent A. Gierer reported that "[t]he Company provides support for Agricultural Extension Service education for farmer leadership programs, scholarships at local colleges and workshops," such as the Agricultural Leadership Program at Murray State University. Exh. J.

The deep involvement of Inc. -- itself -- in Kentucky affairs is further illustrated by a recent trip its CEO took to address Kentucky tobacco growers. On May 7, 1998, just days after the filing of this lawsuit, Mr. Gierer met with leaders of Kentucky tobacco growers associations in Hopkinsville. See Affidavit of Bryce Sanders, Exh. K.

These are but a few examples of Inc.'s continuous and systematic contacts with Kentucky. Inc.'s claim, notwithstanding these close ties, that it lacks "minimum contacts" with this forum is spurious.

Moreover, Inc. is inextricably intertwined in the extensive Kentucky operations of its operating subsidiaries -- each of whom has conceded that it is subject to the jurisdiction of this Court.[9] Inc. has stated publicly that it conducts the operations of its subsidiaries[10] and it has echoed those admissions in testimony before Congress.[11] Any claim that it has somehow insulated itself from these operations, because it has organized itself as a "holding company," is thus belied by its own statements.

[9]They had little choice: Kentucky is effectively the locus of a substantial part of their purchasing, manufacturing, and sales of smokeless tobacco. For example, one of the two largest plants in Inc.'s tobacco empire, a 900,000 square foot office,

Inc.'s claim is also belied by the fact that its top officers are also the officers of its subsidiaries, and thus control their day-to-day management. See Exh. N (chart of overlapping management). For instance, though Inc. claims it does not manufacture anything (see Debra Baker Aff. ¶ 2), its Senior Vice President, Alton Adams, is expressly charged with responsibility for manufacturing. Exh. N. Mr. Adams holds precisely the same title at defendant United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company — the operating subsidiary that purchases, stores, and processes tobacco in Kentucky.

Likewise, Inc. senior vice president and controller Robert Alessandro holds the same positions at United States Tobacco storage, and processing facility nominally owned by Inc.'s manufacturing subsidiary, is in Hopkinsville. And a new facility has recently been opened in Cadiz. Exh. L.

[10]"UST Inc., through its subsidiaries (collectively 'registrant' unless the context otherwise requires), is engaged in manufacturing and marketing consumer products in the following industry segments: Tobacco Products: Registrant's primary activities are manufacturing and marketing smokeless tobacco (snuff and chewing tobacco). Registrant imported and marketed pipe tobacco through December 31, 1997." UST March 13, 1998, 10-K405. (Exh. B).

Manufacturing Company. Inc.'s CEO, Mr. Gierer, is also president of United States Tobacco Company. Id. And a total of 16 Inc. executives hold similar titles in the subsidiaries. Exh. N. This substantial overlap in management demonstrates the artificiality of Inc.'s argument that it is uninvolved in the business of its subsidiaries in Kentucky.

In these circumstances, where the parent company is heavily involved in its subsidiaries' operations — even putting aside Inc.'s own significant contacts with the forum State — there is ample constitutional basis for the assertion of personal jurisdiction. See, e.g., Third Nat'l Bank of Nashville v. Wedge Group Inc., 882 F.2d 1087, 1090 (6th Cir. 1989) (finding personal jurisdiction over foreign parent corporation based on parent's close ties to operating subsidiary); In re Telectronics Pacing Systems, Inc. Accufix Atrial "j" Leads Prod. Liability Litigation, 953 F. Supp. 909, 919-21 (S.D. Ohio 1997) (finding personal jurisdiction over parent where parent exercised control over subsidiary); Daher v. G.D. Searle & Co., 695 F. Supp. 436, 438-39 (D. Minn. 1988) (finding personal jurisdiction over parent based upon the parent's "concert[ed]" efforts with its subsidiary); Warren v. Honda Motor Co., 669 F. Supp. 365, 370 (D. Utah 1987) (personal jurisdiction proper where companies were engaged in a "joint effort" to place product in worldwide market; profits of companies were "dependent on the performance of the other"; and, companies, while maintaining a separate corporate existence, were "interdependent"); Brunswick Corp. v. Suzuki Motor Co., 575 F. Supp. 1412, 1421 (E.D. Wis. 1983) ("the forum activities of affiliated entities may be considered in assessing . . . the constitutionality of [service of process] under the due process clause, notwithstanding the adherence of the parent and subsidiary to the formalities of corporate separateness"); Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corp. v. Pepsico, Inc., 591 F. Supp. 88, 90 (N.D. Ill. 1984) (exercising personal jurisdiction in antitrust case over "holding company" and subsidiaries "whose policies and finances it control[led]"); Hoffman v. United Telecommunications, Inc., 575 F. Supp. 1463, 1471 (D. Kan. 1983) ("corporation's relationship with an affiliated corporation in the forum is relevant to the due process question"); Energy Reserves Group, Inc. v. Superior Oil Co., 460 F. Supp. 483, 507 (D. Kan. 1978) (same).

Just weeks ago, one of Inc.'s tobacco "holding company" confederates had its challenge to personal jurisdiction rejected. See Order Denying B.A.T. Industries Motion to Dismiss the Third Amended Complaint for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction, Washington v. American Tobacco, Inc., et al., No. 96-2-15056-8 SEA (King Cty. Sup. Ct., Wash. June 9, 1998) (denying British tobacco holding company's motion to dismiss because of its claimed lack of contacts with forum State) (Exh. O). The same result would be required here, even if the Court were to bypass the controlling federal statute (Point I, infra).[12] [12]Here the evidence of Inc.'s involvement in the tobacco affairs of its operating subsidiaries is substantial. Were the Court to conclude otherwise, however, at very least Conwood must Plaintiffs,

v.

UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.

Civil Action No.
5:98CV-108-R

OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO DISMISS PART OF COMPLAINT

Plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P. and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. ("Conwood") allege that defendants (collectively, "UST") maintain more than 80% of the moist snuff market through acts that have the purpose and effect of excluding plaintiffs and injuring competition -- e.g., removing plaintiffs' display racks from stores.[1] UST does not deny that each of plaintiffs' eight counts states a valid claim for relief. But UST asks the Court to dismiss Conwood's claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act "to the extent" that the claim is based on UST's efforts to lobby Congress for legislation designed to foreclose competition. Defendants' Memorandum of Law in Support of their Motion To Dismiss Part of [1]Conwood alleges UST has acted systematically to exclude Conwood from the moist snuff market by removing or defacing Conwood retail distribution racks, point-of-sale advertising, and products; frequently changing the style of distribution racks in order to raise rivals' costs; promulgating exclusive dealing arrangements designed to foreclose competitors' distribution channels; disparaging Conwood products; and predatory pricing. See Complaint ¶¶ 22-31.

Plaintiffs' Complaint for Failure To State a Claim ("Def. Mem.") at 6.

Because each count of the Complaint states a claim on which relief may be granted, none can properly be dismissed. (Point I). Conwood has not claimed that UST's lobbying efforts are themselves a basis for liability under any of the eight pleaded counts. UST's argument is thus directed at a straw-man of its own creation, and the Court need not even consider it. And the allegations that UST sought to suppress competition through the "Global Tobacco Settlement" -- and thereby entrench its monopoly -- can properly be pleaded and proved to show UST's intent to monopolize the market for moist snuff. (Point II).

I. BECAUSE EACH COUNT OF THE COMPLAINT STATES A CLAIM, THE MOTION MUST BE DENIED

Seven of plaintiffs' eight counts have nothing to do with UST's efforts to promote anticompetitive legislation.[2] Count I, which alleges that UST violated the Sherman Act by actual or attempted monopolization of the market for moist snuff, is similarly based on UST's conduct in the market, not its sham

[2] See Complaint ¶ 47 (Count II - Lanham Act) (UST has "made false and misleading representations" and done so "in commercial advertising or promotion"); id. ¶ 51 (Count III - Tortious Interference with Existing Contract) (UST has interfered with Conwood "contracts with distributors and retailers"); id. ¶ 56 (Count IV - Tortious Interference with Prospective Advantage) (to same effect); id. ¶ 59 (Count V - Violation of Kentucky Unfair Competition Statute) (UST has "engaged in the secret payment of rebates" to purchasers of its products); id. ¶ 62 (Count VI - Product Defamation) (UST "has published to customers, retailers, and distributors statements disparaging the quality of plaintiffs' products"); id. ¶ 68 (Count VII - Unjust Enrichment) (seeking disgorgement of unlawful profits); id. ¶ 71 (Count VIII - Conversion) (seeking recovery for stolen racks, advertisements, and product).

petitioning in Congress. E.g., Complaint ¶¶ 22-31, 44. UST does not dispute that these allegations state a claim for relief under federal antitrust law; indeed each defendant has filed an answer as to this count. See Answer, Affirmative Defenses and Counterclaims ¶¶ 41-45.

The Sixth Circuit has instructed that, where a complaint states a claim under any reading, a motion to dismiss must be denied. See In re DeLorean Motor Co., 991 F.2d 1236, 1240 (6th Cir. 1993) (a complaint need only "contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory") (citations omitted); Meador v. Cabinet for Human Resources, 902 F.2d 474, 475 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 867 (1990). This Court has recognized the same hornbook rule. See, e.g., Barmet Aluminum Corp. v. Doug Brantley & Sons, Inc., 914 F. Supp. 159, 161 (W.D. Ky. 1995) ("The complaint may not be dismissed 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'") (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957)); see also 5A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, at 337 (1990) ("[T]he court is under a duty to examine the complaint to determine if the allegations provide for relief on any possible theory."). Because it is undisputed that Count I states a claim, without reference to UST's legislative activities, there is no valid ground for UST's motion to dismiss Count I "in part."

UST cites no authority for the proposition that courts are empowered to dismiss potential interpretations of pleaded causes of action rather than the claims themselves. The cases cited by UST all involve claims expressly predicated on petitioning conduct that was, as pleaded, insufficient to state a claim. And in those cases the affected counts themselves were dismissed; they were not "dismissed in part." See, e.g., Norcen Energy Resource Ltd. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 1994-2 Trade Cases ¶ 70,851 (N.D. Cal. 1994) ("defendants' alleged manipulation of the dual federal-state regulatory scheme" not valid basis for relief; count dismissed); Mountain Grove Cemetery Ass'n v. Norwalk Vault Co. of Bridgeport, 428 F. Supp. 951, 956 (D. Conn. 1977) (dismissing antitrust claim seeking relief "on the basis of defendants' state court litigation").

II. CONWOOD'S ALLEGATIONS REGARDING UST'S EFFORTS TO ELIMINATE COMPETITION THROUGH LEGISLATION ARE PROPERLY PLEADED IN THE COMPLAINT

UST's claim to blanket immunity for sham petitioning is misguided.[3] But it is also beside the point: Count I is not based on UST's efforts to persuade Congress to enact legislation that would further its monopoly. Conwood does not seek damages based on that lobbying activity, nor does Conwood seek to have the Court enjoin such lobbying activity. The factual allegations in paragraphs 33-39 do, however, detail evidence that will help demonstrate a necessary element of plaintiffs' monopolization claim — UST's intent to exclude Conwood from the market for moist snuff.

[3] See, e.g., Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313, 315 (6th Cir. 1986) ("Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not protect against improper attempts to influence the government or the courts that are a 'mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.'") (quoting California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 414 U.S. 508, 511 (1972)).

Since the Pennington case itself, courts have held without exception that even protected petitioning may properly be pleaded and proved to establish a defendant's anticompetitive intent:

> [U]nder the "established judicial rule of evidence that testimony of prior or subsequent transactions, which for some reason are barred from forming the basis for a suit, may nevertheless be introduced if it tends reasonably to show the purpose and character of the particular transactions under scrutiny."

United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 n.3 (1965) (citations omitted) (emphasis added). Such petitioning activity "does have evidentiary value as to the purpose and concerted character of [defendants'] contemporaneous non-exempt activities." Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1196 (8th Cir. 1982). See also, e.g., MCI Communications Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 708 F.2d 1081, 1160 (7th Cir. 1983) (petitioning activity shows "purpose and character of business decisions which had already been made"); General Motors Corp. v. Johnson Matthey, Inc., 887 F. Supp. 1240, 1246 (E.D. Wis. 1995) (upholding magistrate's grant of discovery of information concerning lobbying activities can be used for "purpose of establishing [defendant's] motives in engaging in the anticompetitive conduct at issue in this lawsuit"); United States v. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, 439 F. Supp. 29, 47 (N.D. Ga. 1977) ("court may consider all of defendants' arguably exempt activities associated with the petitioning process which are relevant and admissible as purpose and character evidence to prove the anticompetitive intent of defendants' nonexempt conduct as well as the overall anticompetitive scheme").[4]

Thus, it is appropriate for Conwood to plead, conduct discovery, and offer evidence concerning UST's lobbying efforts to "show the purpose and character" of UST's exclusionary plans. Pennington, 381 U.S. at 670 n.3.

[4]Court after court has admitted petitioning activity in evidence to show anticompetitive intent, and every effort to quash discovery into petitioning activity on "immunity" grounds has likewise been reversed or refused. See, e.g., North Carolina Elec. Membership Corp. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 666 F.2d 50, 52 (4th Cir. 1981) (reversing district court's refusal to permit plaintiff discovery on defendants' petitioning activity, holding that "Noerr-Pennington does not apply to discovery"); Associated Container Transp. (Australia) Ltd. v. United States, 705 F.2d 53, 59 (2d Cir. 1983) (reversing district court and holding that production of documents related to lobbying efforts might reveal "other evidence revealing an illegal antitrust conspiracy entirely unrelated to appellees' legitimate activities before the [administrative agency]"); Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12039, *5 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 17, 1995) ("we cannot bar the Class Plaintiffs[] from exploring . . . lobbying documents based on relevance grounds").

ANSWER AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES OF CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., AND CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., TO DEFENDANTS' COUNTERCLAIMS

Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (collectively, "Conwood"), for their answer and affirmative defenses to the counterclaims of defendants United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., and United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc. (collectively, "Counterclaimants"), state as follows:

1. Conwood admits that Counterclaimants are Delaware corporations with their principal places of business in Greenwich, Connecticut. Conwood further admits that Counterclaimants manufacture, distribute, and sell smokeless tobacco products under various brand names throughout the United States.

2. Conwood admits that Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P., are Delaware limited partnerships with their principal places of business in Memphis, Tennessee. Conwood admits that it manufacturers, distributes, and sells smokeless tobacco products under various brand names throughout the United States, including this district. Conwood admits that it has a manufacturing facility located within this district at Bowling Green, Kentucky, and that it buys substantial amounts of tobacco for use in its smokeless products from farmers located in this district.

3. To the extent that the Counterclaimants have stated a claim under the Lanham Act, Conwood admits that the Court has subject matter jurisdiction over that claim under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. To the extent the Court has such original jurisdiction, and to the extent that the Counterclaimants have stated a claim under state law for conduct that forms part of the same case or controversy as Counterclaimants' alleged Lanham Act claim, Conwood admits that the Court has supplemental subject-matter jurisdiction over those claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

4. Conwood admits the allegations of paragraph 4.

5. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 5.

6. Conwood admits that moist snuff products typically are displayed in stores on display racks provided by one or more moist snuff tobacco companies. Conwood further admits that Counterclaimants, Conwood, and other smokeless tobacco companies place or attempt to place point-of-sale advertising to direct customers' attention to their smokeless tobacco products. Conwood denies the remaining allegations of paragraph 6.

7. Conwood denies that it has entered into any agreements with retail stores or managers that designate Conwood as "category manager." Conwood lacks knowledge or information sufficient to admit or deny whether other smokeless tobacco companies have entered into any such agreements, and therefore denies said allegation, but further states that Counterclaimants have from time to time represented the existence of such agreements. Conwood denies the remaining allegations of paragraph 7.

8. Conwood admits that its sales representatives have direct contact in certain instances with retailers and consumers. Conwood denies the remaining allegations of paragraph 8.

9. Conwood admits that it issued certain informational pamphlets under the heading of "Smokeless Gun," which feature a fictional private investigator named "Frank Delving," and respectfully directs the Court to these documents for a full and accurate statement of their contents. Conwood denies the remaining allegations of paragraph 9.

10. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 10.

11. Conwood admits that Counterclaimants negotiate and enter into agreements with retail stores to control display space for promotion of their products. Conwood denies the remaining allegations of paragraph 11.

12. Conwood adopts and incorporates by reference its responses to paragraphs 1 through 11 as if fully set forth herein.

13. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 13.

14. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 14.

15. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 15.

16. Conwood adopts and incorporates by reference its responses to paragraphs 1 through 15 as if fully set forth herein.

17. Conwood admits that Counterclaimaints have contractual agreements with certain individual retail establishments. Conwood lacks knowledge or information sufficient to admit or deny the allegation that Counterlclaimants have contractual agreements with certain retail establishments whereby Counterclaimants are designated category managers, and therefore denies said allegation. Conwood denies the remaining allegations of paragraph 17.

18. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 18.

19. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 19.

20. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 20.

21. Conwood adopts and incorporates by reference its responses to paragraphs 1 through 20 as if fully set forth herein.

22. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 22.

23. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 23.

24. Conwood adopts and incorporates by reference its responses to paragraphs 1 through 23 as if fully set forth herein.

25. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 25.

26. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 26.

27. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 27.

28. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 28.

29. Conwood adopts and incorporates by reference its responses to paragraphs 1 through 28 as if fully set forth herein.

30. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 30.

31. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 31.

16diii000264

32. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 32.

33. Conwood denies the allegations of paragraph 33.

Seventh Affirmative Defense

Counterclaimants have not been harmed in any way by any action or inaction of Conwood.

SPECIAL APPEARANCE AND MOTION OF UST INC. TO DISMISS THE THIRD AMENDED COMPLAINT OF THE PLAINTIFFS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION OVER THE PERSON, INSUFFICIENCY OF PROCESS AND INSUFFICIENCY OF SERVICE OF PROCESS

NOW COMES the defendant, UST Inc., by counsel, David L. Shuman and Edgar A. Poe, Jr., of the law firm of Shuman, Annand & Poe, who specially appears and moves to dismiss the Third Amended Complaint against it pursuant to West Virginia Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules 12(b)(2), 12(b)(4) and 12(b)(5).

Specifically, the defendant, UST Inc., states as a basis for its Motion as follows:

1. There is no basis for jurisdiction over the person of UST Inc. as UST Inc. does no business in West Virginia, owns no property in West Virginia and has no minimum contacts with the State of West Virginia whatsoever. UST Inc. has never manufactured, advertised, sold or distributed cigarettes anywhere, including West Virginia, nor has it ever produced, processed, serviced or manufactured any other product, material or thing to be used or consumed anywhere, including West Virginia.

2. In addition, UST Inc. raises the defenses of Rule 12(b)(4) and 12(b)(5) of the West Virginia Rules of Civil Procedure and states that plaintiffs have failed to comply with the rules of process and service of process. UST Inc. is a foreign corporation not authorized to conduct affairs or transact business in West Virginia. As such, it cannot be served process through the Secretary of State's Office in the State of West Virginia unless it makes a contract to be performed in whole or in part in the state, unless it commits a tort in whole or in part in the state, or unless such corporation manufactures, sells or offers for sale supplies or any product in a defective condition which causes injury to any person within the state . . . . None of these requirements have been met in order to effect service of process upon UST Inc.

As a result of the above and as evidenced by the Affidavit of Debra A. Baker, Secretary of UST Inc., attached as Exhibit 1, UST Inc. specially appears and moves that the case be dismissed against it pursuant to the West Virginia Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 12(b)(2), and/or in the alternative, Rules 12(b)(4) and (5) and/or requests such other relief as the Court may deem appropriate.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT UST INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT FOR LACK OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION

Defendant UST Inc. moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint because UST Inc. is — and always has been — "a holding company that has never manufactured, sold or distributed moist snuff (or any other type of product) anywhere, including the Commonwealth of Kentucky." Def. Mem. at 2. As such, UST Inc. does not "transact business" in the forum district as required by Section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 22, is not subject to the Kentucky long-arm statute, and does not have minimum contacts with this forum sufficient to meet the due process requirements of the United States Constitution.

Plaintiffs' principal response is that, because UST Inc. was properly served in Connecticut, this Court necessarily, and without further inquiry, has personal jurisdiction over UST Inc. under Section 12 of the Clayton Act. Pl. Mem., Point I. However, Plaintiffs simply overlook the fact that Section 12 does not confer personal jurisdiction over parent companies that do not "transact business" in the forum state. Here, it is uncontroverted that UST Inc. does not transact the business of manufacturing, distributing or selling moist snuff, which is done exclusively through United States Tobacco Company. Nor does UST Inc. transact any other business in Kentucky.

Plaintiffs' second response — that UST Inc. transacts business or caused tortious injury in this District within the meaning of the Kentucky long-arm statute and consistent with the requirements of due process — is equally flawed. Notwithstanding Plaintiffs' bald assertions to the contrary, it remains uncontroverted that UST Inc. does not transact business in this District and lacks the minimum contacts here to meet the requirements of due process. In this respect, Plaintiffs offer nothing of substance to refute the affidavit of Debra A. Baker. If Plaintiffs had jurisdictional facts as to UST Inc., they should have been pled specifically as to UST Inc. in the first place. In light of the uncontroverted facts placed in the record by UST Inc., Plaintiffs are not now entitled to engage in a fishing expedition for jurisdictional facts that do not exist.

In sum, this case in all respects is about Conwood's claims against United States Tobacco Company and its alleged misconduct; it is not about UST Inc. at all. To hold otherwise would condone the type of harassment that neither statute nor due process permits.

ARGUMENT

I. UST INC. DOES NOT TRANSACT BUSINESS IN THIS DISTRICT FOR PURPOSES OF SECTION 12 OF THE CLAYTON ACT.

Plaintiffs claim that the only pertinent question in determining whether this Court has personal jurisdiction over UST Inc. under Section 12 of the Clayton Act is whether UST Inc. was properly served. Pl. Mem. at 4. Plaintiffs ignore the fact, however, that the requirements of Section 12 have not been met here. Specifically, the law is well established that Section 12 does not confer jurisdiction over a properly served parent company if that entity does not "transact business" in the forum district.

Universal Services, Inc. v. Central Waste Systems, 1976-2 Trade Cases ¶ 61,140, 1976 WL 1339 (S.D. Ind. 1976), is directly on point. In that case, plaintiff averred that the district court had jurisdiction over defendant parent company under Section 12 of the Clayton Act by virtue of the acts of its subsidiary within the state. Id. at *1. Interpreting the "transacts business" element of Section 12, the court explained that:

> personal jurisdiction over the foreign parent corporation based upon the acts of its subsidiary is available to this Court only if the facts of the instant case reveal that the ... subsidiary [within the state] acted as the agent of its parent so that the parent may be said to be found in, doing business in, or an inhabitant of this state.

Id. The court then held that the facts before it — including the parent's performance of central purchasing, accounting, and financing for its subsidiaries, and overlapping officers and directors of the parent and the subsidiaries — were insufficient to establish the required agency relationship. Id. Further, the court held that various "interorganizational activities" between parent and subsidiary were insufficient to establish that the parent was transacting business within the state directly. Id. at *2. Accordingly, the court granted defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Similarly, in Phillip Gall & Son v. Garcia Corp., 340 F. Supp. 1255 (E.D. Ky. 1972), plaintiff attempted to bring suit against a parent corporation, claiming that the court had personal jurisdiction over the parent under Section 12. The court rejected plaintiff's claim and granted defendant's motion to dismiss:

> [I]n order to come within the purview of the "transacts business" clause, the corporation's activities within the district must be substantial. No evidence has been adduced to show that the [parent] corporation has undertaken any business whatsoever in this state since its incorporation in 1970 or up until the time of the filing of this suit.

> Normally where the subsidiary maintains a separate legal identity the presence of it in the district will not be sufficient to bring the foreign parent corporation within the ambit of Section 12 of the Clayton Act.

Id. at 1258-59 (citations omitted).[1]

By contrast, none of the cases cited by Plaintiffs involves a parent-subsidiary relationship of any kind, and none involves the question of whether a parent company defendant moving to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(2) "transacts business" in the forum district. As such, they are inapposite. See, e.g., Haile v. Henderson Nat'l Bank, 657 F.2d 816, 823-24 (6th Cir. 1981) (personal jurisdiction conferred under 28 U.S.C. § 1692, a statute which does not have a "transacts business" requirement and is based solely on the location of real property); United Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 985 F.2d 1320, 1330 (6th Cir. 1993) (personal jurisdiction conferred under Section 27 of the Securities Exchange Act over a private defendant directly involved in the fraudulent conduct at issue); CBS Employees Fed. Credit Union v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Sec. Corp., No. 88-2677-4B, 1989 WL 76479, at *5 (W.D. Tenn. Mar. 27, 1989) (same, under both RICO and Exchange Act).[2]

AT&T Co., 499 F.2d 349, 351-52 (5th Cir. 1974) (operating companies of AT&T were not "transacting business" within the state and thus were not subject to personal jurisdiction under Section 12); Fisher Baking Co. v. Continental Baking Corp., 238 F. Supp. 322, 327, 328 n.6 (D. Utah 1965) ("domination of the local company through the stock ownership of the parent company and the inter-organizational activity to render that effective" not sufficient to confer jurisdiction over the parent company under Section 12; extending Section 12 to parent corporations for the acts of subsidiaries is a "legislative problem . . . not properly before this court") (citation omitted).

[2] In an apparent attempt to end-run the "transacts business" requirement of Section 12, Plaintiffs suggest that UST Inc. "waived any objection to venue," presumably implying that UST Inc. cannot now argue that it does not "transact business" in Kentucky. Pl. Mem. at 4-5. Defendants' admission that venue is proper, however, does not override its clear and consistent denial of Plaintiffs' allegations that UST Inc. "transacts business" in Kentucky and that UST Inc. is subject to personal jurisdiction in Kentucky. See Answer and Affirmative Defenses, ¶¶ 6,7; Def. Mem., passim; Affidavit of Debra A. Baker, passim.

In sum, although Section 12 provides for nation-wide service of process, it does not, as a matter of law, confer jurisdiction over a parent corporation that is not present, does not inhabit and does not transact business within the forum district.

II. UST INC. IS NOT SUBJECT TO JURISDICTION UNDER THE KENTUCKY LONG-ARM STATUTE.

In the alternative, Plaintiffs contend that their conclusory allegations that UST Inc. "transact[s] business ... in this Commonwealth" and that UST Inc. "caus[ed] tortious injury ... in this Commonwealth" is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Kentucky long-arm statute. Pl. Mem. at 6.[3] As demonstrated in the affidavit of Debra A. Baker, however, these allegations are either simply incorrect or are immaterial to Defendants' motion. Further, as described below, Plaintiffs may not rest on their bare allegations; nor, in the face of the uncontroverted facts, is discovery necessary or appropriate to decide this motion.

Plaintiffs' exclusive reliance on Compuserve, Inc. v. Patterson, 89 F.3d 1257 (6th Cir. 1996), is misplaced. In that case, plaintiff alleged specific facts that demonstrated defendant's contacts with the forum state. For example, plaintiff alleged that defendant subscribed to Compuserve in the forum state, entered into a contract to be decided under the laws of the forum state, repeatedly sent computer software into the forum state, advertised the software in the forum state, and initiated the events in the forum state that led up to the lawsuit. Id. at 1264. Given these specific factual allegations, the court merely recognized that defendant's affidavit, which did no more than simply deny these "jurisdictional facts," could not support his motion to dismiss. By contrast, in this case there are no "controverting assertions" of "specific facts." Plaintiffs have not alleged, presented, or submitted any specific facts or [3] In their opposition papers, Plaintiffs claim that they have alleged "far more." Pl. Mem. at 7 n.6. A thorough search of the Complaint, however, does not reveal a single fact alleged in support of this Court's jurisdiction specifically over UST Inc.

evidence regarding UST Inc.'s contacts with Kentucky — such facts do not exist. Accordingly, Compuserve cannot apply.

Indeed, where a plaintiff — like Plaintiffs here — neither alleges nor otherwise presents any relevant specific facts, a defendant's affidavit is sufficient to establish a lack of personal jurisdiction. For example, in Kerry Steel, Inc. v. Paragon Industries, Inc., 106 F.3d 147 (6th Cir. 1997), the district court considered defendant's affidavit and granted his Rule 12(b)(2) motion without an evidentiary hearing. On appeal, the Sixth Circuit rejected the very argument made by Plaintiffs here:

> Consider the items now claimed to be "controverted" here. [Defendant's] principal place of business, state of incorporation, and ownership or non-ownership of property in [the forum state] are facts ascertainable from public records. [Defendant's] sworn statements as to these matters could easily have been refuted by the plaintiff were they not true. No such refutation was attempted.

Id. at 153 (emphasis added).[4]

Plaintiffs chose to bring this action in the Western District of Kentucky against a Delaware defendant with its principal place of business in Connecticut. Upon Defendant UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, Plaintiffs do not and cannot allege any specific facts, nor do they present any evidence, in support of personal jurisdiction. Accordingly, this Court should dismiss the Complaint against UST Inc. for lack of personal jurisdiction.[5]

Atlantic Resorts, Ltd., 735 F.2d 61, 67 n.9 (3d Cir. 1984) ("Once the defense has been raised, then the plaintiff must sustain its burden of proof in establishing jurisdictional facts through sworn affidavits or other competent evidence. [A]t no point may plaintiff rely on the bare pleadings alone in order to withstand a defendant's Rule 12(b)(2) motion . . . . [P]laintiff must respond with actual proof, not mere allegations.") (emphasis added) (citation omitted).

[5] Notwithstanding Plaintiffs' plea for jurisdictional discovery, where, as here, Plaintiffs cannot refute facts that compel the granting of Defendants' motion, the Court can and should

III. THE EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION OVER UST INC. WOULD VIOLATE DUE PROCESS.

Finally, in the context of the requirements of due process, Plaintiffs submit that UST Inc. "has extensive ties to Kentucky," Pl. Mem. at 8, and that UST Inc. is "inextricably intertwined" in the operations of its subsidiaries. Id. at 9. Apparently, Plaintiffs hope to meet their burden of proof by mischaracterizing UST Inc.'s annual report, Form 10-K, and other documents collected as Exhibits to Plaintiffs' opposition papers.

A. UST Inc. Does Not Have "Extensive Ties To Kentucky."

Plaintiffs' facile attempt to create a jurisdictional issue by quoting inaccurately selected excerpts from UST Inc.'s annual report is disingenuous at best. For example, Plaintiffs claim that UST Inc. is "involved in other Kentucky affairs." Pl. Mem. at 9. In support, Plaintiffs quote Vincent A Gierer from an excerpt of UST Inc.'s annual report stating that the Company provides support for Agricultural Extension Service education, et al. Id. Even a cursory review of the annual report, however, indicates that Mr. Gierer's statement was given in response to the following question: "What is United States Tobacco Company, [not UST Inc.], doing to support the tobacco farmer?" See Pl. Mem., Ex. J, p. 10.[6] Even if such activities — i.e., sponsoring education programs or speaking to tobacco growers — were sufficient to establish minimum contacts, which they are not, Plaintiffs fail to recognize, intentionally or otherwise, that the activities of the subsidiary, United States Tobacco Company, cannot be imputed to UST Inc., its parent company.

decide the motion on the papers alone. See Kerry Steel, supra, pp. 6-7; Time Share, supra, n.4.

[6] Plaintiffs also refer to the affidavit of Conwood Plant Manager, Bryce Sanders, who declared that Mr. Gierer "was in attendance and spoke for US Tobacco, [not UST Inc.]" Pl. Mem., Ex. K, ¶ 5. Apparently, even Conwood's employees are unwilling to represent under oath that UST Inc. is "involved in other Kentucky affairs."

Similarly, Plaintiffs claim that UST Inc. purchases more than 90% of its tobacco from growers in Kentucky by quoting a document that clearly and unambiguously states that "UST Inc. is a holding company of four wholly owned subsidiaries," and that "through its subsidiaries, is a leading producer ... of, [inter alia,] moist smokeless tobacco products...." Pl. Mem., Ex. E, at 3. Again, the quoted passage, a selected line from page 11 of this document, reflects a UST representative's response to tobacco farmers' questions about purchasing tobacco; the representative, not surprisingly, chose not to distract from the answer by detailing the intricacies of the corporate structure that includes UST Inc. and United States Tobacco Company.

Finally, Plaintiffs claim that contributions to Kentucky politicians made, not by UST Inc., but by a separate and distinct political action committee, somehow establishes minimum contacts sufficient to satisfy due process. Aside from the fact that "intermittent" political activity by a company cannot, as a matter of law, constitute minimum contacts,[7] the contributions in question, as Plaintiffs themselves established, were not even made by UST Inc. Pl. Mem. at 8.

B. UST Inc. Is Not "Inextricably Intertwined" In The Operation Of Its Subsidiaries.

Finally, Plaintiffs claim that the minimum contacts requirement is met because UST Inc. is "inextricably intertwined" in the operations of its subsidiaries. Pl. Mem. at 10. Again, Plaintiffs' assertions are incorrect on the undisputed record.

Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, UST Inc. has not "stated publicly that it conducts the operations of its subsidiaries." Id. at 9-10. It has not done so because this statement simply is not true. Plaintiffs' quote from UST Inc.'s Form 10-K is not to the contrary. The fact that a parent company states that it operates "through its subsidiaries" is an unremarkable and irrelevant statement of corporate form, not an admission of Plaintiffs conclusory assertions.[8]

Plaintiffs also claim that there is a "substantial overlap in management" between UST Inc. and its subsidiaries. Id. at 11; Ex. N. Despite the numerous cases cited, however, Plaintiffs offer no case that supports Plaintiffs' implicit contention that overlapping management is sufficient to confer jurisdiction over a foreign parent company. Indeed, as a matter of law, overlapping management is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction over a foreign parent company. See Universal Services, Inc., 1976 WL 1339, at *1; see generally Part I, supra.[9]

Finally, Plaintiffs' reference to a case involving another tobacco company, characterized as UST Inc.'s "tobacco 'holding company' confederate," is telling. See Pl. Mem.

[8] Similarly, Mr. Gierer's testimony before Congress clearly and unambiguously identifies United States Tobacco Company as the subsidiary involved in manufacturing smokeless tobacco products and as the signatory to the proposed resolution. See id., Ex. M, at 127. Plaintiffs' representation to this Court that Mr. Gierer testified otherwise is disturbingly imprecise.

[9] All of the cases cited by Plaintiffs on this subject involve parent companies that were themselves active within the forum state. See, e.g., Third Nat'l Bank v. WEDGE Group Inc., 882 F.2d 1087, 1090 (6th Cir. 1989) (parent maintained checking account in forum state and officers of parent who were not officers of subsidiary entered into an agreement on behalf of parent); In re Telectronics Pacing Sys., Inc., 953 F. Supp. 909, 920-21 (S.D. Ohio 1997) (parent maintained a "central depository" for the cash of its subsidiaries, and parent signed agreements with subsidiary's suppliers); Daher v. G.D. Searle & Co., 695 F. Supp. 436, 438-39 (D. Minn. 1988) (parent "worked in conjunction" with subsidiary to perform the tortious act); Warren v. Honda Motor Co., 669 F. Supp. 365, 370 (D. Utah 1987) (parent manufactured and distributed product); Brunswick Corp. v. Suzuki Motor Co., 575 F. Supp. 1412, 1422 (E.D. Wis. 1983) (parents manufactured and sold products and possessed "a continuing sales and marketing relationship with [the forum state]"); Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corp. v. Pepsico, Inc., 591 F. Supp. 88, 90 (N.D. Ill. 1984) (parent's control of its subsidiaries was "too voluminous to summarize in detail").

at 12; Ex. O. In that case, the court rejected each and every one of the arguments advanced by Plaintiffs here. The court found that, for purposes of determining personal jurisdiction, the parent company did not have minimum contacts with the forum state; Pl. Mem., Ex. O, at 4-5; the parent's subsidiary was not the alter ego of the parent company; id. at 5-6; the parent's subsidiary was not an agent of the parent; id. at 6; and the court could not exercise jurisdiction over the parent "merely because it [was] closely associated with a subsidiary doing business in [the forum state]." Id. at 7.[10]

Accordingly, despite Plaintiffs' efforts to recast the facts and the law in favor of exercising personal jurisdiction over UST Inc., the simple facts remain. UST Inc. is — and always has been — a holding company that does not manufacture or sell any products, or provide any services, anywhere. It is an individual corporate entity, separate and distinct from its subsidiaries, that does not transact business in Kentucky, did not commit any tortious acts in Kentucky, did not cause tortious injury in Kentucky, owns no property in Kentucky, and never has contracted to supply services or goods in Kentucky. UST Inc., therefore, is not subject to the personal jurisdiction of this Court.

[10] Moreover, Plaintiffs fail to cite the approximately fourteen cases in which the same parent tobacco company has won motions to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction on these grounds. See, e.g., City and County of San Francisco v. Phillip Morris, 1998 U.S. Dist LEXIS 3056 (N.D. Cal. March 3, 1998); Arch v. American Tobacco Co., 984 F. Supp. 830 (E.D. Pa. 1997); Smith v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., No. 96-0459-CV-W-3, 1996 WL 751399 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 19, 1996).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendant UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction should be granted.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY
AT PADUCAH

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS PART OF PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs clearly allege that Defendants participated in a legislative initiative — the so-called "Global Settlement" — with the intent of injuring Plaintiffs and other competitors in the alleged moist snuff market. Compl. ¶ 32 et seq. Moreover, there is no question that, on the face of the Complaint, Plaintiffs seek to base antitrust liability on Defendants' alleged intent to harm competition through their involvement in the Global Settlement. As Defendants established in their moving papers, however, such conduct — assuming it occurred — is protected by the First Amendment, regardless of any alleged anticompetitive intent, and even if it is alleged to be part of an overall scheme. See Def. Mem. at 3-6. Thus, a plaintiff cannot, as a matter of law, state a claim under the antitrust laws based in whole or in part on conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

In response to Defendants' motion, Plaintiffs now beat a full retreat and proclaim — contrary to the clear allegations in the Complaint — that they do not seek to base antitrust liability on Defendants' alleged conduct relating to the Global Settlement. Pl. Mem. at 2. Further, Plaintiffs do not seriously contend that they base antitrust liability on the "sham" exception to Noerr-Pennington.[1] Under the case law cited in Defendants' moving brief, these concessions, alone, require dismissal of Paragraphs 32 through 39 of Plaintiffs' Complaint.

In a strained effort to keep the "Global Settlement" allegations in their Complaint, Plaintiffs offer two arguments that are easily dispatched. First, Plaintiffs contend that because they have collected allegations of both protected and unprotected conduct under one Count, the entire claim must necessarily stand as pleaded. Pl. Mem., Point I. As described below, however, this argument is simply wrong as a matter of law; in fact, numerous cases dismiss parts of complaints where the conduct alleged is shielded by Noerr-Pennington immunity.

Second, Plaintiffs argue that because evidence of immune activity may, in some circumstances, be deemed relevant to show the "purpose and character" of unprotected conduct, Plaintiffs' allegations relating to the Global Settlement must necessarily survive the present motion to dismiss. Pl. Mem., Point II. Not surprisingly, Plaintiffs offer no Rule 12(b)(6) cases for this proposition, but instead rely on cases relating to discovery or evidentiary disputes. In this case, of course, discovery has yet to begin, and if Plaintiffs decide to seek discovery on

[1] Although Plaintiffs refer in passing to the alleged conduct as "sham petitioning," (see, e.g., Pl. Mem. at 2-3, 4), Plaintiffs have not pursued the sham exception in their opposition papers. Moreover, while Plaintiffs cite Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313 (6th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1035 (1987), they fail to disclose the relevant statement of law made by the Sixth Circuit in that case – i.e., that to constitute a "sham," the alleged conduct must be undertaken "without the legitimate expectation that such efforts will in fact induce lawful government action." Id. at 316 (emphasis added). In fact, Plaintiffs allege at every turn that Defendants conduct was undertaken with a legitimate expectation that the conduct would induce lawful government action. Compl. ¶¶ 33, 34, 36, 39.

Global Settlement issues, they will have to make the proper showing of relevance at that time. Plaintiffs' cases, however, offer no basis to salvage defective allegations from dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6).

In sum, Plaintiffs have starkly conceded that their allegations relating to the "Global Settlement" have no place in their own Complaint. Accordingly, this Court should dismiss those portions of the Complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

ARGUMENT

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "sought to erect even higher barriers to competition" and "sought to embed the Global Settlement with provisions that would cause disproportionate harm to its moist snuff rivals and, ultimately, drive them from the market." Compl. ¶¶ 32-33. In their opposition papers, however, Plaintiffs disavow any claim of antitrust liability based on Defendants alleged participation in the "Global Settlement":

> Count I is not based on UST's efforts to persuade Congress to enact legislation that would further its [alleged] monopoly. Conwood does not seek damages based on that lobbying activity, nor does Conwood seek to have the Court enjoin such lobbying activity.

Pl. Mem. at 4. Instead, Plaintiffs assert that it only meant to "detail evidence" that might eventually bear on Defendants' overall anticompetitive "intent" to exclude Conwood from the market.

Having contradicted their own Complaint, Plaintiffs then assert that (i) this Court cannot dismiss the Complaint to the extent it is based on conduct relating to the Global Settlement, and (ii) because Plaintiffs may eventually seek discovery on the Global Settlement under the guise of "intent," this Court must permit Plaintiffs' allegations to stand. As set forth below, both propositions are without any support and, in fact, are contrary to the law.

I. THIS COURT MAY DISMISS THE PART OF THE COMPLAINT RELATING TO THE "GLOBAL SETTLEMENT."

Plaintiffs argue that its amalgamated antitrust claim must stand or fall as a whole and that, as a result of Plaintiffs' artful pleading, this Court is precluded from dismissing that part of the claim based on conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Plaintiffs are simply wrong. Numerous courts — including the two cited in Defendants' moving papers and then mischaracterized in Plaintiffs' opposition papers (see Pl. Mem. at 4) — have dismissed antitrust claims "in part" based on protected conduct.

In Norcen Energy Resource Ltd. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 1994-2 Trade Cases ¶ 70,851, 1994 WL 519461 (N.D. Cal. 1994), plaintiff brought an antitrust claim alleging that defendants: (i) denied plaintiff access to defendants' pipeline; (ii) repeatedly informed plaintiff's customers that plaintiff could not provide reliable supply; (iii) refused to extend joint pipeline delivery in order to exclude competitors; (iv) discriminatorily allocated capacity in a manner to exclude competition; and (v) petitioned government agencies for, inter alia, a "crossover ban" to impose heightened costs of delivery on competitors. Id. at *1-3. Defendants moved to dismiss plaintiff's antitrust claim on several grounds, including the application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The court granted defendants' motion with prejudice "to the extent they are based on defendants' actions before [regulatory agencies]." Id. at *7. The court then went on to consider the remainder of plaintiff's "monopoly broth" allegations purporting to support its claim. Id. at *13.

Similarly, in Mountain Grove Cemetery Ass'n v. Norwalk Vault Co., 428 F. Supp. 951 (D. Conn. 1977), plaintiff alleged that defendants: (i) refused to deal with plaintiff; (ii) boycotted plaintiff's product; (iii) disparaged the design, construction, and use of plaintiff's product; and (iv) joined together to initiate litigation. Id. at 952. Plaintiff alleged that defendants' acts constituted violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Like the instant case, defendants moved to dismiss the Section 1 and Section 2 claims only to the extent they were based on allegations of conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id. at 953. The court granted defendants motion and dismissed plaintiff's complaint "to the extent [it] alleges an antitrust violation on the basis of defendants' . . . litigation." Id. at 956 (emphasis added). The remaining issues were decided separately. Id.

More recently, in Christian Memorial Cultural Center, Inc. v. Michigan Funeral Directors Ass'n, __ F. Supp. __, 1998 WL 129954 (E.D. Mich. March 6, 1998), plaintiff alleged that defendants: (i) sued various entities including plaintiff; (ii) engaged in administrative and legislative lobbying; (iii) directly interfered with plaintiff's customers by refusing to service plaintiff's caskets; and (iv) disparaged plaintiff's business activities as "con games" and "illegal schemes." Id. at *2. Like Plaintiffs here, plaintiff used all of these allegations to support a single count of its complaint — an antitrust claim. The court nevertheless analyzed the allegations of Count I in two categories — those activities protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and those that were not. Id. at *3. Finding that the conduct in the first category was protected, the court dismissed "that part of Count I." Id. at *6. See also Invictus Records, Inc. v. American Broadcasting Cos., 98 F.R.D. 419, 432 n.1 (E.D. Mich. 1982) (Noerr-Pennington doctrine would require striking from the complaint all reference to protected conduct irrespective of other reasons for dismissal of claims); Johns-Manville Corp. v. Guardian Indus., Civ. No. 81-70248, 1981 WL 2083 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 27, 1981) (dismissing antitrust claims "insofar as [they] are based on" protected conduct); Brazil v. Arkansas Board of Dental Examiners, 593 F. Supp. 1354 (E.D. Ark. 1984) (after searching complaint for any allegations of antitrust violations, court granted motion to dismiss as to the allegations involving protected conduct), aff'd, 759 F.2d 674 (8th Cir. 1985).

In sum, in response to Defendants' motion, Plaintiffs have conceded that the Noerr-Pennington immunity applies to the allegations made in Paragraphs 32 through 39 of their Complaint. Plaintiffs correctly point out that a motion to dismiss must fail if a complaint states a claim under a "viable legal theory." Pl. Mem. at 3. As the ample — and undisputed — authority set forth above clearly demonstrates, however, allegations of conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine cannot state a "viable legal theory." Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss should be granted.

II. PLAINTIFFS CANNOT CIRCUMVENT NOERR-PENNINGTON IMMUNITY BY RECHARACTERIZING THE ALLEGATIONS AS RELATING ONLY TO "INTENT."

Plaintiffs' concession that they do not seek to base antitrust liability on Defendants' petitioning activity, without more, mandates striking Paragraphs 32 through 39 of the Complaint.[2] Plaintiffs hope to avoid this necessary consequence by asserting that the [2] Given this admission, even if it were not a complete recharacterization of the Complaint, all allegations relating to Defendants' lobbying activities should be stricken from the Complaint under Rule 12(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as immaterial and impertinent. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f); see also Thermos Co. v. Igloo Products Corp., 1996-1 Trade Cases ¶ 71,323, 1995 WL 745832 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (affirming dismissal of claims based on Noerr-Pennington doctrine and striking under Rule 12(f) additional related allegations).

immune activity is "properly pleaded" so long as they now recharacterize the conduct as pertaining only to the element of "intent." Such a rule not only would eviscerate the Noerr-Pennington doctrine — which expressly protects petitioning activity motivated by alleged anticompetitive intent (Def. Mem. at 4-6) — it would encourage antitrust plaintiffs to permeate Complaints with irrelevant and potentially harassing "evidentiary" allegations that are best left to be resolved in the discovery and pretrial process.[3]

Plaintiffs assert that "courts have held without exception that even protected petitioning may properly be pleaded." Pl. Mem. at 5 (emphasis added). All of the cases cited by Plaintiffs, however, reflect nothing more than the resolution of discovery disputes over relevance or evidentiary disputes over admissibility.[4] In fact, as readily apparent from even the most favorable excerpts quoted by Plaintiffs, none of the eight cases even involved a defendant's motion to dismiss; none involved the merit of pleading allegations of protected conduct in any context; and none involved, in any relevant way, a complaint, counterclaim, or any other pleading. See United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 n.3 (1965) (evidence of protected conduct "may . . . be introduced if it tends reasonably to show the purpose and character of the particular transactions under scrutiny") (emphasis added); Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1196 (8th Cir. 1982) (same), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 937 (1983); United States v. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, 439 F. Supp. 29, 47 (N.D. Ga. 1977) (same); MCI Communications Corp. v. AT&T Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1160 (7th Cir.) (district court did not err by not giving Noerr-Pennington instruction when evidence was offered to prove purpose and character of nonexempt conduct), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 891 (1983); General Motors Corp. v. Johnson Matthey, Inc., 887 F. Supp. 1240, 1246 (E.D. Wis. 1995) (court allowed discovery of information concerning protected conduct where plaintiff demonstrated relevance to purpose and character of unprotected conduct); North Carolina Elec. Membership Corp. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 666 F.2d 50, 52 (4th Cir. 1981) (same); Associated Container Transp. Ltd. v. United States, 705 F.2d 53, 59 (2d Cir. 1983) (same); Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., No. 94C 897, MDL 997, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12039, *5 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 17, 1995) (same).

In sum, Plaintiffs' reliance on these cases to support the contention that allegations of protected conduct may survive a motion to dismiss is badly misplaced, and Plaintiffs' assertion that these cases hold "without exception that even protected petitioning may properly be pleaded," (Pl. Mem. at 5) (emphasis added), is more than mere mischaracterization.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants respectfully request that this Court dismiss Count I of Plaintiffs' Complaint to the extent it is based on alleged conduct that is protected from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., United States District Court, Western District of Kentucky at Paducah, Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Dear Judge Russell:

Enclosed for your consideration is Defendants' proposed Protective Order, which represents a number of compromises that were reached after several conferences with Plaintiffs and Plaintiffs' counsel. We have provided our proposed order both in hard copy and Word Perfect disk format. The parties made substantial progress toward a final, agreed-upon order, but were unable to resolve a single remaining issue.

The parties could not agree on the appropriate language to differentiate HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL information (or "Tier 1 Information") and CONFIDENTIAL information (or "Tier 2 Information"). Defendants' position is that, considering the directly competitive relationship of the parties, and in order to preserve the confidentiality of competitively sensitive business documents and other materials, it is necessary to provide for a discrete class of documents that, in the first instance, would be disclosed to Outside Counsel only.

In our discussions, Plaintiffs accepted, in principle, Defendants' proposal for two tiers of protection, but the parties were unable to agree on a specific definition for the types of documents and information that could be designated as HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL. Defendants believe that the best approach would permit the producing party to designate certain documents as HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL, see Proposal ¶ 3, but would also allow the receiving party to challenge any such designation it believes is inappropriate. See Proposal, ¶ 14. Plaintiffs, however, maintain that the Protective Order should, at this time, attempt to enumerate a list of documents — exclusive as to the type of document and as to the date the document was created — that could be designated as HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL. In a complex antitrust case like this one, Plaintiffs' suggestion is simply impractical and would likely lead to more disputes before the Court concerning the meaning and scope of the Order than would a mechanism that provides for informal resolution of disputed designations.

As initial disclosures of documents required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1) are due to be exchanged on July 21, 1998, Defendants respectfully request that the Court enter, at its earliest convenience, a protective order that reflects the genuine concerns for confidentiality presented by this litigation.

Respectfully,

John S. Reed

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

PROTECTIVE ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that:

1. This Stipulation and Protective Order (the "Stipulation") shall apply to all information disclosed during the course of the above-captioned litigation (the "Litigation"), including, without limitation, information disclosed: during discovery, hearing or trial; in any pleading, affidavit, brief, motion, transcript or other writing; or in any testimony given in deposition, hearing, or trial ("Litigation Materials").

2. Nothing in this Stipulation shall impose any restriction on the use or disclosure by a party of (i) its own documents or (ii) information, not otherwise subject to any protective order or to any other restriction as to its use, that is properly obtained from sources other than a party to this action or a non-party served with process in this action.

3. For purposes of this Stipulation, "HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL -- OUTSIDE COUNSEL ONLY" (also known as "Tier 1 Information") shall mean all information or materials, including documents and portions of deposition transcripts, that constitute information that the producing party, in good faith, believes are of a currently highly competitively sensitive nature – i.e., information that a party, in good faith, believes would result in competitive harm in the market place, or other business or financial harm, if the information were disseminated to persons other than those specifically identified in this Paragraph. The parties agree that this category of information is to be applied by the producing party as narrowly as possible, consistent with the party's good faith belief as to the need to preserve the confidentiality of the Tier 1 Information. Tier 1 Information may be disclosed only to the following: outside counsel for the parties in this action and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to Tier 1 Information; the Court (and any appellate court), including court personnel, jurors, and alternate jurors; court reporters to the extent necessary to allow them to record court proceedings and depositions in the Litigation; and independent consultants or expert witnesses.

4. For purposes of this Stipulation, "CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION" (also known as "Tier 2 Information") shall mean all information or materials, including documents and portions of deposition transcripts, that constitute information that the producing party, in good faith, believes is confidential financial, business, or commercial information, but is not included within Tier 1 Information. Tier 2 Information may be disclosed to any "Qualified Recipient" as defined in Paragraph 7 of this Stipulation.

5. Parties and non-parties may designate documents or other tangible Litigation Materials as Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information ("Protected Information") in the following manner:

(a) Tier 1 Information shall be designated by stamping or affixing thereto in red or black ink the legend "HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL -- OUTSIDE COUNSEL ONLY" on the cover or first page or as necessary to indicate the designation (or relevant portion thereof) and, as to multi-page documents, on each page (or relevant portion thereof) containing highly confidential outside counsel only information.

(b) Tier 2 Information shall be designated by stamping or affixing thereto in red or black ink the legend "CONFIDENTIAL -- SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER" on the cover or first page or as necessary to indicate the designation (or relevant portion thereof) and, as to multi-page documents, on each page (or relevant portion thereof) containing confidential information.

(c) The parties or non-parties and their attorneys shall make a good faith effort to designate as Tier 1 and Tier 2 Information only such documents and information that are appropriate to those respective levels of confidential treatment, as set forth above. The parties agree that only that portion of a document or other tangible Litigation Materials constituting Protected Information shall be designated as such in accordance with the terms set forth above, and, where feasible and practical, shall be produced in both redacted and unredacted form.

6. Parties or non-parties may designate deposition or other testimony as Protected Information by stating orally on the record that the information is Protected Information on the day the testimony is given. Testimony so designated as Protected Information prior to transcription shall be placed by the reporter in a separate volume. Parties or non-parties may also designate deposition or other testimony as Protected Information by sending written notice within ten (10) days after the parties receive transcripts of the testimony. Prior to the termination of this five day period, all deposition or other testimony shall be considered Tier 1 information unless otherwise agreed by the parties.

7. For purposes of this Stipulation, except as otherwise agreed to by the parties or ordered by the Court pursuant to Paragraph 9 of this Stipulation, "Qualified Recipient" means:

(a) The Court (and any appellate court), including court personnel, jurors, and alternate jurors.

(b) Court reporters to the extent necessary to allow them to record court proceedings and depositions in the Litigation.

(c) Outside counsel for the parties to the Litigation and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to all Protected Information in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation.

(d) In-house attorneys for the parties to the Litigation and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to Tier 2 Information in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation, and who have executed the attached Confidentiality Agreement.

(e) Senior executives (including any person assisting such executives) of the parties to the Litigation (as designated in a separate list to be exchanged by the parties by July 21, 1998, as such list may be amended), where review of Tier 2 Information is in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation, and who have executed the attached Confidentiality Agreement.

(f) Any independent consultants or expert witnesses or other persons employed for purposes of this litigation by the foregoing and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to all Protected Information in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation, and who have executed the attached Confidentiality Agreement. The parties agree that independent consultants and expert witnesses may review all Protected Information in the Litigation, including Tier 1 Information, as defined by the Stipulation, so long as any such person (or other persons reviewing Protected Information) execute the attached Confidentiality Agreement and have it duly notarized.

8. Protected Information shall be entitled to confidential treatment pursuant to Rule 26(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Each Qualified Recipient to whom Protected Information is disclosed shall use the Protected Information only for the prosecution or defense of this litigation and shall not otherwise disclose it to any person who is not a Qualified Recipient with respect to such information, except as hereinafter provided. All Protected Information shall be carefully maintained so as to preclude access by persons who are not Qualified Recipients with respect to such information. However, this Stipulation does not prohibit disclosure of a document containing Protected Information to persons indicated on the face of such document as having been authors or recipients of such document in substantially the form produced.

9. If a receiving party, in good faith, believes a disclosure of Protected Information to any person other than to a Qualified Recipient, including those persons noticed for depositions or designated as trial witnesses, is necessary for the prosecution or defense of this litigation, the receiving party must give at least ten (10) days written notice to the producing party of such intended disclosure. The written notice shall identify the Protected Information to be disclosed, the person or persons to whom the identified Protected Information will be disclosed and the purpose of the disclosure. If the producing party objects to the intended disclosure, counsel will confer to resolve the dispute. In the event the parties fail to resolve such dispute informally, the producing party may, within the 10-day notice period, apply for relief to the Court. The burden on any such application shall be on the producing party to demonstrate why the intended disclosure should not be permitted. Unless and until the Court denies the application, the receiving party shall not make the intended disclosure. If the Court denies the producing party's application, the person or persons to whom the intended disclosure is to be made must execute the attached Confidentiality Agreement and will be subject to the terms of this Stipulation as a Qualified Recipient.

10. Every person, other than outside counsel for the parties to the Litigation (and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions require access to the Protected Information), who receives Protected Information shall read this Stipulation and execute a Confidentiality Agreement in the form of Attachment A, stating that the person agrees to be bound by the terms of this Stipulation. The undersigned counsel shall maintain a file containing the Confidentiality Agreement executed by each such person to whom disclosure of Protected Information is made by such counsel. Each Confidentiality Agreement executed by a Qualified Recipient as described in Subparagraph 7(e) of this Stipulation shall be promptly disclosed to any party or non-party that designated the disclosed information as Protected Information.

11. The receiving party, and all persons to whom disclosure of Protected Information is made, must take all reasonable measures to ensure that they abide by the terms of this Stipulation. The Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine applications for appropriate sanctions for any violation of this Order.

12. Protected Information shall not be copied or otherwise reproduced by a receiving party, except for transmission to Qualified Recipients. Nothing herein, however, shall restrict a Qualified Recipient from making copies, abstracts, digests, and analyses of Protected Information for use in connection with the prosecution or defense of this litigation. Such working copies, abstracts, digests, and analyses shall be deemed Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information, respectively, under the terms of this Stipulation.

13. This Order shall not restrict (or enlarge) the parties' rights to offer evidence at trial, provided that the parties shall attempt to agree upon the conditions under which Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information shall be used at trial and, if they are unable to agree, the Court shall order appropriate protections for any Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information the parties seek to use at trial. Any party filing in the Court any document containing Protected Information shall seal such document in a closed envelope and shall attach thereon a label containing the case caption and the following legend:

"CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION -- UNDER PROTECTIVE ORDER"

"The enclosed document has been filed under seal pursuant to terms of a Protective Order entered in this action. This envelope shall not be opened or its contents disclosed or examined without order of the Court. Violation thereof may be regarded as contempt of the Court."

14. Nothing in this Stipulation shall prevent a party, in good faith, from contending that any or all information designated as Protected Information should not be subject to this Stipulation or that materials designated as Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information has been improperly designated by the producing party. A party may at any time request the designating party to cancel the designation of information as Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information with respect to any information and to agree that, thereafter, such information shall no longer be subject to the provisions of this Stipulation. A party also may request that the producing party redesignate information from Tier 1 Information to Tier 2 Information. Any such request shall be written, shall be served on counsel for the producing party, shall identify the Protected Information that the requesting party contends should not be subject to this Stipulation or should be redesignated and should indicate the receiving party's basis for the requested redesignation. Where a party has made such an objection, the parties shall confer to attempt to resolve the issue within seven (7) business days from actual receipt of the written objection. To the extent any designation of Protected Information is challenged before the Court, the producing party will bear the burden of demonstrating why the information in contention was properly designated.

15. Nothing in this Stipulation shall prevent a party, in good faith, from designating or redesignating a document or information that has already been produced to another party, in which case the receiving party shall thereafter treat the document or information as redesignated. In the event that two copies of a document or information are produced under different designations, the more restrictive designation shall apply. In the event that two copies of the same document or information are produced by different parties, the designation of the creating party shall govern. The designation of information as Protected Information, pursuant to this Stipulation, shall not be construed as a concession by a producing party that such information is relevant or material to any issue or is otherwise discoverable, or by a receiving party that such information is, in fact, confidential or sensitive financial, business, or commercial information.

16. Nothing in this Stipulation shall prevent or otherwise restrict counsel from rendering advice to their clients and, in the course thereof, relying generally on examination of Protected Information; provided, however, that in rendering such advice and otherwise communicating with such clients, counsel shall not make specific disclosure of any item so designated except as otherwise provided herein.

17. This Stipulation shall be without prejudice to the right of any party to oppose production of any information, the production of which has not already been ordered by the Court, for lack of timeliness or relevance or any other ground.

18. The production of any Litigation Materials during the Litigation shall be without prejudice to any claim that such materials either are privileged or are protected from discovery as work product within the meaning of Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and no party shall be held to have waived any rights under any privilege or under Rule 26 by such production. Upon receiving a demand from a producing party for return of such material, the receiving party shall promptly comply by returning the requested material (and destroying all copies that have been made) and shall not use the material in any way until the validity of the claim of exemption from discovery has been resolved by the parties or by the Court.

19. Any of the notice requirements herein may be waived, in whole or in party, but only in writing signed by the attorney of record for the party against whom such waiver will be effective.

20. Upon final termination of the Litigation, including all appeals, the receiving party shall return to the producing party all Litigation Materials designated as Tier 1 Protected Information, except for pleadings and deposition transcripts and other materials filed with the Court. In addition, the receiving party shall, at its option, either return to the producing party or destroy, in whatever form stored or reproduced, all other Litigation Materials, except for pleadings and deposition transcripts and other materials filed with the Court, including, but not limited to, correspondence, memoranda, notes, and other work-product materials, which contain or refer to Protected Information. All Protected Information not embodied in physical objects and documents shall remain subject to this Stipulation. In the event that any party chooses to destroy physical objects and documents, such party shall certify within thirty days that it has undertaken its best efforts to destroy such physical objects and documents, and that such physical objects and documents have been destroyed to the best of its knowledge.

21. The parties may amend or modify any provision of this Stipulation by mutual agreement, which agreement shall be embodied in a written stipulation to be approved by the Court.

22. This Stipulation is entered into without prejudice to the right of any party or non-party to apply to the Court at any time for additional protection, or to relax or rescind the restrictions of this Stipulation.

23. Until such time as this Stipulation has been "So Ordered" by the Court, the parties agree that upon execution by the parties, it will be treated as though it had been "So Ordered."

STIPULATION AND [PROPOSED] PROTECTIVE ORDER

IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED AND AGREED by the undersigned parties to this action, by and through their respective counsel as follows:

1. This Stipulation and Protective Order (the "Stipulation") shall apply to all information disclosed during the course of the above-captioned litigation (the "Litigation"), including, without limitation, information disclosed: during discovery, hearing or trial; in any pleading, affidavit, brief, motion, transcript or other writing; or in any testimony given in deposition, hearing, or trial ("Litigation Materials").

2. Nothing in this Stipulation shall impose any restriction on the use or disclosure by a party of (i) its own documents or (ii) information, not otherwise subject to any protective order or to any other restriction as to its use, that is properly obtained from sources other than a party to this action or a non-party served with process in this action.

3. For purposes of this Stipulation, "HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL – OUTSIDE COUNSEL ONLY" (also known as "Tier 1 Information") shall mean all information or materials, including documents and portions of deposition transcripts, that constitute information that the producing party, in good faith, believes are of a currently highly competitively sensitive nature – i.e., information that a party, in good faith, believes would result in competitive harm in the market place, or other business or financial harm, if the information were disseminated to persons other than those specifically identified in this Paragraph. The parties agree that this category of information is to be applied by the producing party as narrowly as possible, consistent with the party's good faith belief as to the need to preserve the confidentiality of the Tier 1 Information. Tier 1 Information may be disclosed only to the following: outside counsel for the parties in this action and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to Tier 1 Information; the Court (and any appellate court), including court personnel, jurors, and alternate jurors; court reporters to the extent necessary to allow them to record court proceedings and depositions in the Litigation; and independent consultants or expert witnesses.

4. For purposes of this Stipulation, "CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION" (also known as "Tier 2 Information") shall mean all information or materials, including documents and portions of deposition transcripts, that constitute information that the producing party, in good faith, believes is confidential financial, business, or commercial information, but is not included within Tier 1 Information. Tier 2 Information may be disclosed to any "Qualified Recipient" as defined in Paragraph 8 of this Stipulation.

5. Parties and non-parties may designate documents or other tangible Litigation Materials as Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information ("Protected Information") in the following manner:

(a) Tier 1 Information shall be designated by stamping or affixing thereto in red or black ink the legend "HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL – OUTSIDE COUNSEL ONLY" on the cover or first page or as necessary to indicate the designation (or relevant portion thereof) and, as to multi-page documents, on each page (or relevant portion thereof) containing highly confidential outside counsel only information.

(b) Tier 2 Information shall be designated by stamping or affixing thereto in red or black ink the legend "CONFIDENTIAL – SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER" on the cover or first page or as necessary to indicate the designation (or relevant portion thereof) and, as to multi-page documents, on each page (or relevant portion thereof) containing confidential information.

(c) The parties or non-parties and their attorneys shall make a good faith effort to designate as Tier 1 and Tier 2 Information only such documents and information that are appropriate to those respective levels of confidential treatment, as set forth above. The parties agree that only that portion of a document or other tangible Litigation Materials constituting Protected Information shall be designated as such in accordance with the terms set forth above, and, where feasible and practical, shall be produced in both redacted and unredacted form.

6. Parties or non-parties may designate deposition or other testimony as Protected Information by stating orally on the record that the information is Protected Information on the day the testimony is given. Testimony so designated as Protected Information prior to transcription shall be placed by the reporter in a separate volume. Parties or non-parties may also designate deposition or other testimony as Protected Information by sending written notice within ten (10) days after the parties receive transcripts of the testimony. Prior to the termination of this five day period, all deposition or other testimony shall be considered Tier 1 information unless otherwise agreed by the parties.

7. For purposes of this Stipulation, except as otherwise agreed to by the parties or ordered by the Court pursuant to Paragraph 9 of this Stipulation, "Qualified Recipient" means:

(a) The Court (and any appellate court), including court personnel, jurors, and alternate jurors.

(b) Court reporters to the extent necessary to allow them to record court proceedings and depositions in the Litigation.

(c) Outside counsel for the parties to the Litigation and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to all Protected Information in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation.

(d) In-house attorneys for the parties to the Litigation and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to Tier 2 Information in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation, and who have executed the attached Confidentiality Agreement.

(e) Senior executives (including any person assisting such executives) of the parties to the Litigation (as designated in a separate list to be exchanged by the parties simultaneously with the execution of this Stipulation, as such list may be amended), where review of Tier 2 Information is in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation, and who have executed the attached Confidentiality Agreement.

(f) Any independent consultants or expert witnesses or other persons employed for purposes of this litigation by the foregoing and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, or other personnel whose functions make it appropriate for them to have access to all Protected Information in connection with the prosecution and defense of this litigation, and who have executed the attached Confidentiality Agreement. The parties agree that independent consultants and expert witnesses may review all Protected Information in the Litigation, including Tier 1 Information, as defined by the Stipulation, so long as any such person (or other persons reviewing Protected Information) execute the attached Confidentiality Agreement and have it duly notarized.

8. Protected Information shall be entitled to confidential treatment pursuant to Rule 26(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Each Qualified Recipient to whom Protected Information is disclosed shall use the Protected Information only for the prosecution or defense of this litigation and shall not otherwise disclose it to any person who is not a Qualified Recipient with respect to such information, except as hereinafter provided. All Protected Information shall be carefully maintained so as to preclude access by persons who are not Qualified Recipients with respect to such information. However, this Stipulation does not prohibit disclosure of a document containing Protected Information to persons indicated on the face of such document as having been authors or recipients of such document in substantially the form produced.

9. If a receiving party, in good faith, believes a disclosure of Protected Information to any person other than to a Qualified Recipient, including those persons noticed for depositions or designated as trial witnesses, is necessary for the prosecution or defense of this litigation, the receiving party must give at least ten (10) days written notice to the producing party of such intended disclosure. The written notice shall identify the Protected Information to be disclosed and the person or persons to whom the identified Protected Information will be disclosed. If the producing party objects to the intended disclosure, counsel will confer to resolve the dispute. In the event the parties fail to resolve such dispute informally, the receiving party shall apply for relief to the Court. The burden of any such application shall be on the receiving party to demonstrate why the intended disclosure should be permitted. Unless and until the Court grants the application, the receiving party shall not make the intended disclosure. If the Court grants the receiving party's application, the person or persons to whom the intended disclosure is to be made must execute the attached Confidentiality Agreement and will be subject to the terms of this Stipulation as a Qualified Recipient.

10. Every person, other than outside counsel for the parties to the Litigation (and their stenographic, clerical, secretarial, paralegal, or other personnel whose functions require access to the Protected Information), who receives Protected Information shall read this Stipulation and execute a Confidentiality Agreement in the form of Attachment A, stating that the person agrees to be bound by the terms of this Stipulation. The undersigned counsel shall maintain a file containing the Confidentiality Agreement executed by each such person to whom disclosure of Protected Information is made by such counsel. Each Confidentiality Agreement executed by a Qualified Recipient as described in Subparagraph 8(e) of this Stipulation shall be promptly disclosed to any party or non-party that designated the disclosed information as Protected Information.

11. The receiving party, and all persons to whom disclosure of Protected Information is made, must take all reasonable measures to ensure that they abide by the terms of this Stipulation. The Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine applications for appropriate sanctions for any violation of this Order.

12. Protected Information shall not be copied or otherwise reproduced by a receiving party, except for transmission to Qualified Recipients. Nothing herein, however, shall restrict a Qualified Recipient from making copies, abstracts, digests, and analyses of Protected Information for use in connection with the prosecution or defense of this litigation. Such working copies, abstracts, digests, and analyses shall be deemed Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information, respectively, under the terms of this Stipulation.

13. This Order shall not restrict (or enlarge) the parties' rights to offer evidence at trial, provided that the parties shall attempt to agree upon the conditions under which Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information shall be used at trial and, if they are unable to agree, the Court shall order appropriate protections for any Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information the parties seek to use at trial. Any party filing in the Court any document containing Protected Information shall seal such document in a closed envelope and shall attach thereon a label containing the case caption and the following legend:

"CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION -- UNDER PROTECTIVE ORDER"

"The enclosed document has been filed under seal pursuant to terms of a Protective Order entered in this action. This envelope shall not be opened or its contents disclosed or examined without order of the Court. Violation thereof may be regarded as contempt of the Court."

14. Nothing in this Stipulation shall prevent a party, in good faith, from contending that any or all information designated as Protected Information should not be subject to this Stipulation or that materials designated as Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information has been improperly designated by the producing party. A party may at any time request the designating party to cancel the designation of information as Tier 1 or Tier 2 Information with respect to any information and to agree that, thereafter, such information shall no longer be subject to the provisions of this Stipulation. A party also may request that the producing party redesignate information from Tier 1 Information to Tier 2 Information. Any such request shall be written, shall be served on counsel for the producing party, shall identify the Protected Information that the requesting party contends should not be subject to this Stipulation or should be redesignated and should indicate the receiving party's basis for the requested redesignation. Upon receiving a demand from a producing party for return of such material, the receiving party shall promptly comply by returning the requested material (and destroying all copies that have been made) and shall not use the material in any way until the validity of the claim of exemption from discovery has been resolved by the parties or by the Court.

19. Any of the notice requirements herein may be waived, in whole or in party, but only in writing signed by the attorney of record for the party against whom such waiver will be effective.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE SUR-RESPONSE TO UST INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT FOR LACK OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION

UST Inc. ("Inc.") makes a number of arguments in its reply brief that were not originally part of its motion.[1] Plaintiffs respectfully move for leave to submit this sur-response to address Inc.'s new grounds for asking this Court to hold, without discovery or an evidentiary hearing, and effectively for the first time,[2] that Inc. is insulated from the Court's jurisdiction because it is a "holding company."

1. The Clayton Act Provides for Personal Jurisdiction

Inc. can defend its motion only by confusing personal jurisdiction, which it contests, with venue, which it concedes.

[1]Rather than burden the Court with a separate motion for leave to file a sur-response, and then a sur-response itself, plaintiffs have combined this submission.

[2]Inc. does not dispute that it has attempted this strategem in many courts, and has failed in all but one case (where plaintiff lacked counsel). See Pl. Opp. at 5 n.4.

Pl. Opp. at 4-5; Answer ¶ 7(c); Def. Reply at 2 n.4. In this circuit, it is beyond dispute that the Court has personal jurisdiction over Inc. based on Section 12 of the Clayton Act. Pl. Opp. at 2-5. There is no requirement that plaintiffs establish that Inc. is "transacting business" in Kentucky for the purpose of establishing personal jurisdiction, because the Clayton Act "confers personal jurisdiction in any federal court over any defendant with minimum contacts with the United States." United Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 985 F.2d 1320, 1330 (6th Cir. 1993).[3]

Section 12 also contains a venue provision. See Gall v. Garcia Corp., 340 F. Supp. 1255, 1257 (E.D. Ky. 1972)("The first clause [of Section 12] pertains to venue, and provides that venue is proper in any district in which the corporation inhabits, may be found, or transacts business. The second clause [regarding nationwide service of process] pertains to personal jurisdiction . . . ."). Venue, unlike personal jurisdiction, is appropriate where a defendant "may be found or transacts business." Inc. has specifically conceded that venue is appropriate in this district. Pl. Opp. at 4-5; Answer ¶ 7(c). It has not sought to withdraw that concession and indeed has reaffirmed it in its reply. Def. Reply at 2 n.4. Because venue is not contested here, Inc.'s citation to Section 12's venue provision is beside the point. It cannot contest personal jurisdiction based on a supposed failure to establish venue -- where it concedes venue.

[3]Ryan cannot be distinguished on the ground that Section 12 has a "transacting business" requirement (for venue, see infra). Section 27 of the Exchange Act is identical to Section 12 of the Clayton Act. The Sixth Circuit made plain in Ryan that, such language notwithstanding, a defendant need not be "transacting business" in the forum to be subject to personal jurisdiction.

The cases cited by Inc. (the most recent of which was decided in 1976) follow reasoning that is foreclosed by the recent Sixth Circuit authority on point. In Universal Services, Inc. v. Central Waste Systems, 1976-2 Trade Case (CCH) ¶ 61,140, 1976 WL 1339 (S.D. Ind. 1976), and Fisher Baking Co. v. Continental Baking Corp., 238 F. Supp. 322, 323, 328 (D. Utah 1965), the courts read Section 12 as requiring plaintiff to establish each defendant's contacts with the forum state as a prerequisite for personal jurisdiction. That is not the law of this circuit after Ryan and Haile v. Henderson Nat'l Bank, 657 F.2d 816, 825 (6th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 949 (1982).

In the Gall case, similarly, the Eastern District of Kentucky ruled -- twenty-six years ago -- that satisfaction of the venue provision of Section 12 was a prerequisite to the exercise of personal jurisdiction under the distinct personal jurisdiction provision of the statute. 340 F. Supp. at 1258. But the Sixth Circuit addressed that very issue in Ryan. There the district court dismissed defendants because of supposed lack of minimum contacts with the forum and ignored a federal statute that provided for nationwide service. 985 F.2d at 1329. On appeal, defendant argued that "jurisdiction under section 27 [of the Exchange Act, identical to Section 12 of the Clayton Act] is predicated upon proper venue and venue is not proper . . . ."

Id. at 1330. The Sixth Circuit considered and rejected that argument -- the same argument made here by Inc. -- and held that the statute provided "personal jurisdiction in any federal district court over any defendant with minimum contacts to the United States." Id. Inc.'s argument runs four-square into Ryan, which it cannot distinguish.[4] The motion to dismiss must be denied for this reason alone.[5]

2. Inc.'s Other Arguments Lack Merit

Acknowledging its substantial presence in Kentucky, both directly and via the subsidiaries through which it does business in Kentucky, Inc. nonetheless asks the Court to take on faith its characterization of these substantial contacts as trivial, and to dismiss it without discovery or an evidentiary hearing. The Sixth Circuit does not permit such legerdemain. "To avoid dismissal where there has been no evidentiary hearing, a plaintiff need only present a prima facie case for jurisdiction." Kerry Steel, Inc. v. Paragon Indus., Inc., 106 F.3d 147, 149 (6th Cir. 1997)(citations omitted).[6] The Court cannot even weigh

[4]That Ryan did not involve a parent/subsidiary relationship is irrelevant: Inc. is subject to jurisdiction based on its own conceded contacts with the United States, not because of any contacts of its subsidiaries with Kentucky.

[5]Inc.'s sole remaining case -- San Antonio Tel. Co. v. AT&T Co., 499 F.2d 349 (5th Cir. 1974) -- involved certain Bell operating companies who expressly challenged venue under the Clayton Act. The court refused to dismiss other operating companies who (like Inc. here) waived any venue challenge. Id. at 351 n.2.

[6]Far from disputing Compuserve, Inc. v. Patterson, 89 F.3d 1257 (6th Cir. 1996), the Sixth Circuit in Kerry Steel followed

Inc.'s controverting affidavit, nor can it credit Inc.'s challenges to plaintiffs' showing. Compuserve, 89 F.3d at 1262.[7]

Plaintiffs have established a prima facie case. Inc. cannot cite a single case in which dismissal has been granted (or affirmed) on a record as substantial as that provided by plaintiffs. It cannot find a case that supports its remarkable claim that, notwithstanding the substantial contacts identified by plaintiffs even without discovery, it should be permitted to escape this case without discovery to determine what additional contacts it may have, and the extent of its involvement in the substantial Kentucky operations of the subsidiaries through which it "is engaged in manufacturing and marketing consumer products," according to its own public filings. In these circumstances it would be plain error for the Court to dismiss Inc. from the case.

it. 106 F.3d at 147. The court upheld the dismissal only because, accepting all of plaintiff's allegations as true, the only basis for jurisdiction was that plaintiff "in response to an unsolicited sales call, ordered products from a Michigan seller and negotiated with the seller via fax and telephone to finalize the transaction." Id. at 152. Here, by contrast, plaintiffs have specifically alleged, and indeed have shown, that Inc. both directly and through its operating arms has engaged in substantial activities in Kentucky and has committed a variety of torts in this state.

[7]Notably, while Inc. quarrels with plaintiffs' recitation of the facts, it has done nothing to disprove them aside from the boiler-plate form denial signed by its assistant secretary, Debra A. Baker.

16diii000333

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction should be denied. A proposed order granting leave to file this sur-response is attached.

Civil Action No.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE SUR-RESPONSE TO UST INC.'S MOTION TO DISMISS PART OF COMPLAINT

Defendants (collectively, "UST") make a number of arguments in their reply brief that were not originally part of their motion.[1] Plaintiffs respectfully move for leave to submit this sur-response to address UST's new grounds for asking this Court to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) paragraphs of plaintiffs' background allegations.

1. There Is No Authority for Dismissing An Unpleaded Claim

In Count I, plaintiff alleges that UST violated the Sherman Act by actual or attempted monopolization of the market for moist snuff. Defendants did this by curtailing distribution of competing products -- by removing Conwood's racks, defacing and removing Conwood's point of sale advertising, and locking up distributors and stores in exclusive dealing arrangements designed to foreclose competitors' access to distribution channels. It is undisputed that Count I, as pleaded, states a claim for relief under Section 2 of the Sherman Act based on UST's illegal, anticompetitive conduct in the market for moist snuff. UST's Motion to Dismiss therefore must fail, for Count I of Conwood's Complaint relies squarely on UST's conduct in the market.

Plaintiffs also allege that defendants sought to achieve the same anticompetitive result though the so-called "Global Tobacco Settlement," which would have severely restricted advertising and distribution of competing products. This places into sharp relief the anticompetitive intent underlying UST's monopolization of the moist snuff market. But that activity does not form the basis of Conwood's claims under the Sherman Act. Indeed, UST cannot cite anything in the Complaint to support its argument to the contrary.

UST's effort to have the Court dismiss Conwood's claim "in part," by deleting Paragraphs 32 through 39 of plaintiffs' background allegations from the complaint, is unprecedented and legally incoherent. A court cannot "dismiss" such factual allegations. Rule 12(b)(6) provides relief only in those cases where a complaint fails "to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). See In re DeLorean Motor Co., 991 F.2d 1236, 1240 (6th Cir. 1993). UST has not argued and cannot argue that it meets that standard as to any of the Complaint's eight counts.

Even though no language in the Complaint alleges that UST's anticompetitive lobbying effort violates the antitrust laws, and even though Conwood has explicitly stated that it does not seek legal or equitable relief from UST's anticompetitive legislative forays, UST argues that the Court should read Conwood's Complaint as if it did make such a claim in order to dismiss that (non-existent) claim. This would be an approach entirely without precedent: as Conwood has already pointed out, a Court "'is under a duty to examine the complaint to determine if the allegations provide for relief on any possible theory.'" Pl. Opp. at 3 (quoting 5A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, at 337 (1990)). UST, ignoring the basic purpose of a motion to dismiss, instead invites the Court to determine if the Complaint could be read to articulate a possible legal theory that would not provide for relief. The Court should decline this invitation to engage in a pointless and legally unwarranted exercise.

The cases cited by UST underscore this point. In each instance, the plaintiff explicitly claimed that political activity or litigation violated the antitrust laws, and defendant moved to dismiss that express claim. See Norcen Energy Resources Ltd. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., No. C-94-0911-VRW, 1994-2 Trade Cases ¶ 70,851, 1994 WL 519461 at *5 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 19, 1994) (plaintiff claimed efforts to secure favorable regulation violated antitrust laws under "'price squeeze' exception" to Noerr); Mountain Grove Cemetery Ass'n v. Norwalk Vault Co., 428 F. Supp. 951, 953 (D. Conn. 1977) (plaintiff contended that defendants' state court litigation "falls within . . . the so-called Noerr 'sham exception'"); Christian Memorial Cultural Center, Inc. v. Michigan Funeral Directors Ass'n, 998 F. Supp. 772, 776-778 (E.D. Mich. 1998) (plaintiff argued lobbying effort fell within "'sham' exception to Noerr-Pennington"); Johns-Manville Corp. v. Guardian Indus., Civ. No. 81-70248 , 1981 WL 2083 at *1-2 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 27, 1981) (allegations of wrongful litigation did not fall within "sham exception"); Brazil v. Arkansas Bd. of Dental Examiners, 593 F. Supp. 1354 (E.D.Ark. 1984) (claims based on allegations of lobbying activity dismissed) aff'd 759 F. 2d 674 (8th Cir. 1985). In each case, the court dismissed plaintiff's express and specific claim that defendant's petition activity gave rise to antitrust liability. In no case did the court dismiss an admittedly valid claim concerning activity in the marketplace -- in whole, in part, or otherwise -- based on defendant's argument that the Complaint could be read to raise a potentially invalid claim. Yet that is what UST would have the Court do here.

2. UST's Motion Is Really a Motion To Strike, Which Should Also Be Denied

UST asks the Court to strike Paragraphs 32-39 from the Complaint. That motion, however, is untimely[2] and, in any event, without substance.

Matter may be stricken from a complaint only if it is "redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). A motion to strike is a "drastic remedy." Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. United States, 201 F.2d 819, 822 (6th Cir. 1953). "[S]uch motions are generally viewed with

---

[2]To be timely, such a motion should have been filed at the time of UST's other Rule 12 motions. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). UST made no such motion, and cannot now casually transform its motion to dismiss into a motion to strike merely by dropping a footnote into its reply brief. See Def. Reply at 6 n.2 (suggesting that Court should strike subject paragraphs under Rule 12(f)).

disfavor and rarely granted." Chiropractic Co-op Ass'n v. American Med. Ass'n, 617 F. Supp. 264, 267 (E.D. Mich. 1985). Motions to strike will be denied unless the material "has no possible relation to the controversy" or "has no bearing on the subject matter of the litigation." Lumbard v. Maglia, Inc., 621 F. Supp. 1529, 1539 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Here, UST concedes that Conwood has established, with citations to eight separate cases (including Pennington itself), that even conduct protected from liability under Noerr can prove intent. See Pl. Opp. at 5-6. It is thus clear beyond question that Conwood's allegations "bear[] on the subject of the action," and can properly be included in Conwood's complaint. UST's weak effort to explain away this clear authority -- by arguing that courts may permit discovery and receive evidence of such conduct but that allegations of the conduct may not be pleaded in a complaint -- makes no sense. Def. Reply at 7. Not surprisingly, UST offers no authority for the strange distinction it urges on this Court.

Conclusion

The Court should deny UST's Motion to Dismiss Part of Plaintiffs' Complaint for Failure to State a Claim.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED CONFIDENTIAL SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER

PLAINTIFFS' INITIAL DAMAGES COMPUTATIONS

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(C), plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (collectively, "Conwood"), make the following initial disclosure of damages computations. Supporting documents are included in plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(B) disclosures, certain of which are also provided at Exhibit A.

Plaintiffs' computations are very preliminary and are subject to change. Plaintiffs have not completed their own investigation of the facts. Nor have plaintiffs received any discovery to date. Accordingly, plaintiffs will supplement these disclosures as further information becomes available, consistent with the obligations imposed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and this Court's Local Rules. The computations below exclude pre- or post-judgment interest, statutory penalties, and punitive damages. To the extent the behavior alleged in the Complaint continues into the future, additional damages will accrue.

These calculations are based in part on Conwood's proprietary or otherwise confidential information and are to be treated as such for purposes of the Protective Order applicable to this case.

Conwood alleges that United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales & Marketing Company, United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company, and UST Inc. (collectively, "UST"), have unlawfully monopolized or attempted to monopolize the national moist snuff market by, inter alia, removing or defacing Conwood retail distribution racks, point-of-sale advertising, and products; frequently changing the style of distribution racks in order to raise rivals' costs; promulgating exclusive dealing arrangements designed to foreclose competitors' distribution channels; disparaging Conwood products; and predatory pricing. See Complaint ¶¶ 22-31. Conwood also alleges that it has lost sales, profits, goodwill, and business reputation as a result of UST's false representations about Conwood products, id. ¶ 48; that UST has interfered with its actual and prospective contractual and economic relationships, id. ¶ 50-57; that it has engaged in the secret and unlawful payment or allowable of rebates, refunds, commissions or unearned discounts, id. ¶ 58-60; that it has unlawfully defamed Conwood products, id. ¶ 61-66; that UST has been unjustly enriched by its unlawful conduct, id. ¶ 67-69; and that it has intentionally converted Conwood property, including racks, point of sale advertisements, and moist snuff products, id. ¶ 70.

To compute damages, Conwood will calculate the available market to which it could have sold its moist snuff products in the preceding four years. Conwood will then calculate the market share and revenues it would have earned but for UST's conduct and will compare those to actual sales. Once it has calculated total lost revenues, Conwood will deduct appropriate operating costs based on historical experience and judgment, reduced further by costs incurred due to UST misconduct, to arrive at the final amount of lost past profits. Conwood will also calculate the present value of lost future profits. Pursuant to federal law, Conwood's total lost past and future profits will then be trebled. Based on the above methodology, Conwood currently estimates that UST's conduct has resulted, before trebling, in losses of approximately $360,248,728.64. Conwood bases these estimates on the following calculations.

A. Past Profits

The Available Market. As shown in Exhibit B, in 1994 53,177,000 pounds of moist snuff were sold nationwide; the total market was 54,081,000 pounds in 1995, 56,786,000 pounds in 1996, and 58,051,000 pounds in 1997.[1] Based on experience and judgment, Conwood believes the available market would have been substantially larger in each year had UST not suppressed the availability of competitors' products, advertisements, and distribution systems.

[1]Conwood bases its present calculations on information for fiscal years ending January 1, 1995 through January 1, 1998, except for information concerning pounds of moist snuff sold, which are for calendar years 1995 through 1997.

Market Penetration. As reflected in Exhibit C, Conwood's moist snuff market share was 13.0 percent in 1994, 13.3 percent in 1995, 13.6 percent in 1996, and 13.6 percent in 1997. As is also reflected in Exhibit C, Conwood estimates that its market share would have been at least six percentage points higher in each year but for UST's efforts to suppress competition. That means Conwood would have netted additional sales of 2,807,746 pounds in 1994, 2,920,374 pounds in 1995, 3,090,294 pounds in 1996, and 3,103,406 pounds in 1997.

Price. As reflected in Exhibit D, Conwood's average net sales per pound of moist snuff was $18.99 in 1994, $20.41 in 1995, $20.66 in 1996, and $21.01 in 1997.

Expenses. Conwood's expenses per net pound of moist snuff sold was $6.01 in 1994, $5.82 in 1995, $5.71 in 1996, and $6.09 in 1997. Exhibit D. Conwood's net profits per pound were $12.98 in 1994, $14.59 in 1995, $14.95 in 1996, and $14.92 in 1997. But for UST's misconduct, Conwood's per unit costs would have been lower (and its per unit profits higher) for at least two reasons. First, Conwood would have had higher volumes and greater efficiencies of scale; with its higher volumes, UST currently enjoys lower costs per unit than Conwood. Second, Conwood would not have had to incur substantial costs in replacing racks, advertisement, and products improperly removed by UST.

Net Lost Past Profits. Based on additional market penetration of six percent during the 1994-1997 period, the prices Conwood actually charged, and Conwood's actual expenses minus ten percent (attributable to increased volume and elimination of costs incurred because of UST misconduct), Conwood currently estimates it lost $38,129,191 in 1994, $44,302,074 in 1995, $47,961,363 in 1996, and $48,195,895 in 1997, for total lost profits of at least $178,588,523 before trebling. Exhibit E. This estimate does not account for the possibility of greater market penetration, higher prices, or lower costs -- all of which Conwood is currently exploring and all of which could materially increase Conwood's damages calculation.

B. Future Profits

As a result of UST's past conduct, Conwood has been effectively foreclosed from certain retail outlets and distribution channels, it has lost the chance to gain loyal brand users, other moist snuff users have permanently changed to UST brands, and opportunities to induce UST brand users to switch may be restricted by regulatory efforts to reduce or eliminate tobacco advertising and in-store display. Conwood presently estimates that it has lost at least $269,143,162 in future profits due to UST past misconduct.

This estimate is based on the following calculations.

The Available Market. In 1997, 58,051,000 pounds of moist snuff were sold nationally. Third parties expect the moist snuff market to grow rapidly in coming years. For example, Goldman Sachs estimates that shipments will grow from 815 million cans in 1996 to 881 million by 2000. Exhibit F. With fair competition, Conwood believes the market would grow even more.

Market Penetration. Absent anticompetitive conduct by UST, Conwood believes its market share would already be approximately 20.6 percent, six points higher that it is, and would grow even further over the coming years. However, because of UST's past misconduct -- e.g., foreclosing distribution points that cannot be reopened -- Conwood estimates based on experience and judgment that for the next ten years it has been effectively foreclosed from at least three percent of the expanding moist snuff market. Id.

Price. Third parties estimate that moist snuff prices will increase in coming years due, among other things, to increased regulation. Exhibit G.

Expenses. With the additional market penetration and increased volume Conwood could achieve in a competitive market, as well as the absence of any need to incur costs in response to UST misconduct, Conwood's cost per unit would drop in coming years.

Net Lost Future Profits. Assuming a market expanding two percent per year, Conwood's actual 1997 profit per pound of moist snuff sold ($14.92), and Conwood's exclusion from three per cent of the national market, Conwood estimates that it will lose at least $269,143,162 over the next ten years. This calculation does not account for the possibility of higher prices (as expected by third parties), lower expenses (e.g., due to higher Conwood volumes and absence of costs incurred because of UST misconduct), or exclusion from a larger share of the market -- all of which Conwood is currently exploring and all of which could materially increase Conwood's damages calculation.

To determine the net present value of Conwood's future losses, Conwood will consult UST's borrowing rate. For present purposes, assuming a borrowing rate of 8.5 per cent (June 1998 Bank Prime Rate), the net present value of Conwood's future losses is approximately $181,660,205.64.

Conwood's Lost Past Profits

Lost past profits calculated by multiplying additional pounds Conwood would have sold but for UST misconduct by Conwood's actual profit per pound plus 10 percent of actual costs per pound (which would not have been incurred but for UST misconduct):

2,807,746 x 12.98 + .60 =	$ 38,129,191	(1994)
2,920,374 x 14.59 + .58 =	$ 44,302,074	(1995)

EXHIBIT B

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY
AT PADUCAH

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED HIGHLY CONFIDENTIAL SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER

PLAINTIFFS' INITIAL DAMAGES COMPUTATIONS

Preliminary Statement

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(C), plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (collectively, "Conwood"), make the following disclosure of their preliminary computations of damages.

Plaintiffs make this disclosure based on the information that is reasonably available to them at this time. Plaintiffs have not received any discovery, and have not otherwise completed their investigation of the case. Plaintiffs expect the calculation of damages to be the subject of expert analysis and testimony and accordingly subject to the disclosures of Rule 26(a)(2) and the Court's order of July 8, 1998.

This initial disclosure is based on and contains Conwood's proprietary or otherwise confidential information. Conwood therefore designates this disclosure as "Highly Confidential Information."[1]

Initial Computation of Damages

Conwood alleges that United States Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Sales & Marketing Company, United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company, and UST Inc. (collectively, "UST"), have unlawfully monopolized or attempted to monopolize the national moist snuff market by, inter alia, removing or defacing Conwood retail distribution racks, point-of-sale advertising, and products; frequently changing the style of distribution racks in order to raise rivals' costs; promulgating exclusive dealing arrangements designed to foreclose competitors' distribution channels; disparaging Conwood products; and predatory pricing. See Complaint ¶¶ 22-31. Conwood also alleges that it has lost sales, profits, goodwill, and business reputation as a result of UST's false representations about Conwood products, id. ¶ 48; that UST has interfered with its actual and prospective contractual and economic relationships, id. ¶ 50-57; that it has engaged in the secret and unlawful payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions or unearned discounts, id. ¶ 58-60; that it has unlawfully defamed Conwood products, id. ¶ 61-66;

[1]By agreement of the parties, this information will be treated as "Highly Confidential Information" subject to the terms of defendants' proposed Protective Order of July 14, 1998 pending the Court's entry of a protective order.

that UST has been unjustly enriched by its unlawful conduct, id. ¶ 67-69; and that it has intentionally converted Conwood property, including racks, point of sale advertisements, and moist snuff products, id. ¶ 70.

Conwood expects at trial to prove actual damages[2] consisting of the profits plaintiffs lost in each of the four years immediately preceding the commencement of the action as well as profits that plaintiffs will lose in the future as the result of defendants' past conduct.

A. Past Profits

In 1994, 53,177,000 pounds of moist snuff were sold nationwide; the total market was 54,081,000 pounds in 1995, 56,786,000 pounds in 1996, and 58,051,000 pounds in 1997.[3]

Total Nationwide Moist Snuff Market (pounds)

1995	54,081,000
1996	56,786,000
1997	58,051,000

Conwood believes that substantially more moist snuff would have been sold during the period from 1994-97 had defendants not

[2]For purposes of these initial computations, plaintiffs have excluded pre- and post-judgment interest, statutory penalties, treble damages and punitive damages, as well as damages that may accrue in the future if defendants continue their anticompetitive activities.

[3]Conwood bases its present calculations on information for fiscal years ending January, 1995, through January, 1998, except for information concerning pounds of moist snuff sold, which are for calendar years 1995 through 1997.

suppressed the availability of competitors' products, advertisements, and distribution systems. Conwood is not yet prepared to estimate total moist snuff sales for the period from 1994-97 without defendants' misconduct, and accordingly for present purposes uses only the actual figures in its computations.

Conwood's share of the moist snuff market was 13.0 percent in 1994, 13.3 percent in 1995, 13.6 percent in 1996, and 13.6 percent in 1997. Conwood estimates, preliminarily, that its market share would have increased at least to the levels listed below if defendants had not suppressed competition ("but for" share).

Conwood's Market Share

year	actual market share	"but for" share
1994	13.0	19.0
1995	13.3	19.3
1996	13.6	19.6
1997	13.6	19.6

Based on the increased market share listed above, Conwood would have sold substantially more moist snuff in each of the four years preceding the filing of this action. The following table reflects the additional sales (by pound) that Conwood believes it would have made absent UST's anticompetitive conduct.

16diii000557

Additional Conwood Sales (by pound)

year	actual net sales (pounds)[4]	"but for" net sales (pounds)	additional net sales (pounds)
1994	6,063,300	8,871,046	2,807,746
1995	6,454,500	9,374,874	2,920,374
1996	6,998,500	10,088,794	3,090,294
1997	7,028,900	10,132,306	3,103,406

Conwood earned an average net profit per pound of $12.98 in 1994, $14.59 in 1995, $14.95 in 1995, and $14.92 in 1997 for its moist snuff products. For its additional sales, Conwood thus estimates that it would have received additional profits as follows.

Additional Conwood Profits (dollars)

year	add'l sales (pounds)	net profit/lb.	add'l profits (dollars)
1994	2,807,746	$12.98	$36,444,543.08
1995	2,920,374	$14.59	$42,608,256.66
1996	3,090,294	$14.95	$46,199,895.30
1997	3,103,406	$14.92	$46,302,817,52

Conwood believes that its net profit per pound for the period from 1994-97 was adversely affected by defendants' misconduct. Absent this misconduct, Conwood's unit costs would have been lower (and its profits higher) for at least two reasons. First, defendants' misconduct reduced plaintiffs' sales of moist snuff (as noted above). At significantly higher sales volumes, Conwood would have benefitted from greater efficiencies of scale. (For example, Conwood believes that defendants currently enjoy lower unit costs than Conwood because of their higher sales volume.) Second, Conwood's costs were increased significantly by defendants' anticompetitive conduct. For example, Conwood incurred substantial costs as a result of UST's destruction, removal, defacement, or alteration of Conwood racks, advertisements, and products. Conwood's present estimate is that its unit costs in each year of the damages period would have decreased by at least 10% if defendants had not engaged in anticompetitive conduct. Conwood's actual historical costs per pound of moist snuff sold (unit costs) totaled $6.01 in 1994, $5.82 in 1995, $5.71 in 1996, and $6.09 in 1997. Accordingly, Conwood believes that its "but for" sales should be multiplied by this estimated (10%) cost reduction per pound, to produce additional profits as listed below.

Additional Profits Due to Reduced Expenses

year	but for net sales (pounds)	reduced cost/lb.	Conwood's add'l profits (dollars)
1994	8,871,046	$0.60	$5,322,627.60
1995	9,374,874	$0.58	$5,437,426.92
1996	10,088,794	$0.57	$5,750,612.58
1997	10,132,306	$0.61	$6,180,706.66

By adding its estimated additional profits from additional sales and reduced expenses, Conwood reaches its preliminary computation of total lost profits for each year of the damages period.

Conwood's Lost Profits

year	add'l profits from sales	cost reductions	net lost profits
1994	$36,444,543.08	$5,322,627.60	$41,767,170.68
1995	$42,608,256.66	$5,437,426.92	$48,045,683.58
1996	$46,199,895.30	$5,750,612.58	$51,950,507.88
1997	$46,302,817.52	$6,180,706.66	$52,483,524.18

By adding the net lost profits in each of the four years of the damages period, Conwood presently estimates that its lost profits for the period from 1994-97 total $194,246,886.32.

Conwood's preliminary computation may be substantially affected by further analysis of relevant factors. Conwood is continuing its evaluation of all relevant factors and expects to refine its damage estimates as the case proceeds.

B. Future Profits

In 1997, 58,051,000 pounds of moist snuff were sold nationally. Third parties expect the moist snuff market to grow rapidly over the next ten years. Conwood is not yet prepared to estimate how rapidly the overall market will grow and, accordingly, for purposes of this computation assumes growth in the market of only two percent per year in each of the next ten years.

16diii000560

Market Growth

Year	Moist Snuff Market/pounds at 2% growth rate/year
1998	59,212,020
1999	60,396,260
2000	61,604,185
2001	62,836,994
2002	64,092,994
2003	65,374,854
2004	66,682,351
2005	68,015,998
2006	69,376,318
2007	70,763,844

As a result of defendants' past misconduct, Conwood has been effectively foreclosed from certain retail outlets and distribution channels, it has lost the chance to gain loyal brand users, other moist snuff users have permanently changed to defendants' brands, and opportunities to induce defendants' brand users to switch may be restricted by regulatory efforts to reduce or eliminate tobacco advertising and in-store display. Conwood estimates that even if defendants cease their misconduct today, over the next ten years their past actions will effectively foreclose Conwood from selling moist snuff equal to approximately three percent of the overall moist snuff market.

Conwood's Lost Market Share (pounds)

Year	Total Market (Pounds)	Conwood's Net Lost Market Share (3%) (Pounds)
1998	59,212,020	1,776,361
1999	60,396,260	1,811,888
2000	61,604,185	1,848,126
2001	62,836,269	1,885,088
2002	64,092,994	1,922,790
2003	65,374,854	1,961,216
2004	66,682,351	2,000,471
2005	68,015,998	2,040,480
2006	69,376,318	2,081,290
2007	70,763,844	2,122,915

Third parties estimate that moist snuff prices will rise in coming years. With the additional market penetration and increased volume Conwood could achieve in a competitive market, as well as the absence of any need to incur costs in response to UST misconduct, Conwood would expect its costs per unit to drop substantially in the future. Conwood is not yet prepared to estimate market prices and its costs over the next ten years absent UST misconduct; accordingly, for present purposes Conwood assumes its profits per pound will remain constant from 1997 through 2007, at $14.92 (excluding even nominal price increases due to inflation and other factors). Conwood, thus, calculates its lost future profits as follows.

16diii000562

Conwood's Lost Future Profits

Year	Conwood's Net Lost Market Share (Pounds)	Profit per pound	Conwood's Lost Future Profits
1998	1,776,361	$14.92	$26,503,306
1999	1,811,888	$14.92	$27,033,369
2000	1,848,126	$14.92	$27,574,040
2001	1,885,088	$14.92	$28,125,513
2002	1,922,790	$14.92	$28,688,027
2003	1,961,216	$14.92	$29,261,343
2004	2,000,471	$14.92	$29,847,027
2005	2,040,480	$14.92	$30,443,962
2006	2,081,290	$14.92	$31,052,847
2007	2,122,915	$14.92	$31,673,892

By adding the profits Conwood will lose in each of the next ten years, Conwood presently estimates that its lost future profits total $290,203,326. To determine the net present value of these losses, Conwood will use defendants' borrowing rate. For present purposes, assuming a borrowing rate of 8.5 per cent (June 1998 Bank Prime Rate), the net present value of Conwood's future losses is approximately $203,883,235.

This preliminary computation may be substantially affected by further analysis of relevant factors. Conwood is continuing its evaluation of all relevant factors and expects to refine its damage estimates as the case proceeds.

Documents that support plaintiffs' initial damages calculation are provided with plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(B) disclosures.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

DEFENDANTS' MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTIONS FOR LEAVE TO FILE "SUR-RESPONSES"

Plaintiffs have filed two separate motions for leave to file "sur-response" briefs in order to address what they now claim are "new grounds" raised in the reply briefs in support of Defendants' Rule 12(b) motions. It is abundantly clear, however, that no new grounds were raised in either reply brief, and that no new facts or legal arguments are presented in Plaintiffs' proposed "sur-responses." Rather, Defendants' reply briefs properly responded to the arguments that were first raised by Plaintiffs in their opposition papers, and that are now repeated by Plaintiffs. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' inappropriate attempts to have the last word should be denied.

ARGUMENT

Plaintiffs' motions for leave to file "sur-response" briefs should be denied for several reasons. First, Local Rule 7.1(d) specifically limits the number and type of memoranda allowed: "Memoranda pertaining to motions are limited to a supporting memorandum, an opposing memorandum, and a reply memorandum." L.R. 7.1(d). There is no provision for filing "sur-responses," and Plaintiffs provide no basis for filing them here.[1] Second, as discussed below, Plaintiffs raise no new arguments on "sur-response," but instead, merely repeat the arguments made in their opposition papers.[2] Finally, Plaintiffs' motions are nothing more than an unreasonable delay of the disposition of the legal issues before the Court.

Plaintiffs' first "sur-response" brief asserts that UST Inc. raised for the first time in its reply brief that the Court lacks jurisdiction over it because it is merely a "holding company." Pl. Sur-Response #1, at 1. Plaintiffs, however, overlook — intentionally or otherwise — the principal argument of UST Inc.'s initial moving papers: "UST Inc., however, is simply a holding company that has never manufactured, sold or distributed moist snuff (or any other type of product) anywhere, including the Commonwealth of Kentucky." Def. Moving Papers at 2. To state that this is a "new ground" raised for the first time in UST Inc.'s reply brief is simply and obviously not true. Indeed, Plaintiffs' reliance on United States Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 985 F.2d 1320 (6th Cir. 1993), and Haile v. Henderson Nat'l Bank, 657 F.2d 816 (6th Cir. 1981), as well as Plaintiffs' reliance on insupportable allegations, are as misplaced on "sur-response" as they were in Plaintiffs' response brief. Defendant's authority and legal argument

1 See Archdiocese of Milwaukee v. Underwriters at Lloyd's, London, 955 F. Supp. 1066, 1070 (E.D. Wis. 1997) (motion to file surreply denied where local rule limits memoranda to moving paper, response and reply); Valuejet Airlines, Inc. v. Transworld Airlines, Inc., 1996-2 Trade Cases ¶ 71,537, 1996 WL 557851, *2 (N.D. Ga. 1996) (same); Resolution Trust Corp. v. Youngblood, 807 F. Supp. 765, 774 (N.D. Ga. 1992) (same).

2 See Half Price Books, Records, Magazines, Inc. v. Riepe, 1998 WL 329383, *2 (N.D. Tex. 1998) (motion for leave denied where proposed surreply did not contain any new legal theories or evidence); Resolution Trust, 807 F. Supp. at 774 (motion denied where proposed surreply was "cumulative of the arguments presented in earlier pleadings").

so demonstrated. See, e.g.,Universal Services, Inc. v. Central Waste Systems, 1972-2 Trade Cases ¶ 61,140, 1976 WL 1339 (S.D. Ind. 1976) (regardless of proper service, jurisdiction over a parent corporation is not proper under Section 12 of the Clayton Act where the parent corporation does not transact business in the state).

Similarly, with respect to the Noerr-Pennington issues, Plaintiffs filed a second motion for leave to file a "sur-response" brief that primarily argues — in the face of Defendants' clear authority to the contrary — that a court may not dismiss a claim "in part" to the extent the claim is based on allegations of conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Pl. Sur-Response #2, at 1-4.[3] This is the precise argument asserted in Plaintiffs' original opposition papers, see Pl. Opp., at 2-4. Plaintiffs' attempt to repeat the argument at this time not only is without merit, as demonstrated by Defendants' reply brief, but is also inappropriate. Plaintiffs also argue that Defendants' motion to dismiss "is really a motion to strike" and should be denied.[4] Defendants' motion, however, is and always has been a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Accordingly, the motion should be granted under the clear weight of authority presented in Defendants' moving papers and in Defendants' reply brief.

In short, where, as here, a moving party's reply brief directly addresses issues raised by a non-moving party's response brief, a motion to file a "sur-response" merely to repeat those

[3] It also should be noted that, contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, Defendants do not concede that the remainder of Count I states a cognizable antitrust claim.

[4] Apparently, this argument is based on a footnote in Defendants' reply brief that properly responded to Plaintiffs' evasive statement that they do not seek to base antitrust liability on Defendants' petitioning activity. In response, Defendants respectfully suggested that, given this admission directly contradicting the Complaint, the Court can and should "on its own initiative at any time" strike Plaintiffs' allegations. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f).

issues is both unnecessary and inappropriate. See Half Price Books, Records, Magazines, Inc. v. Riepe, 1998 WL 329383, *2 (N.D. Tex. 1998) (where surreply was duplicative of plaintiff's arguments, moving defendant is entitled to the "last word").

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants respectfully request that the Court deny Plaintiffs' motion to file "sur-response" briefs to Defendants' motions to dismiss, and upon review of the properly filed memoranda, grant Defendants' Rule 12(b) motions.

REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTIONS FOR LEAVE TO FILE SUR-RESPONSES

Defendants argue that the Court should deny Plaintiffs' Motions for Leave to File Sur-Responses because Local Rules do not provide for sur-responses and because their reply memoranda raised no new grounds warranting sur-responses. See Defendants' Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motions for Leave to File "Sur-Responses" at 1. Neither argument is correct.

Argument

1. The Court Has Discretion to Grant Leave to File Sur-Responses

Where local rules do not provide for the filing of a surreply, a district court "may grant leave to file a surreply at its discretion." American Forest & Paper Ass'n v. EPA, No. 93-CV-0694(RMU) 1996 WL 509601, at *3 (D.D.C. Sept. 4, 1996). A court may grant a proposed surreply simply because it "is helpful to the adjudication of the . . . motions in [the] case, and is not unduly prejudicial." Id.; see also City of Heath v. Ashland Oil, Inc., 834 F. Supp. 971, 974 (E.D. Ohio 1993) (granting a motion for leave to file a surreply discussing legal issue because "the information provides the Court with additional helpful information on issues in dispute").

Where, as here, a party has introduced new legal arguments in a reply brief, it is the better practice to grant leave to file. See, e.g., Beaird v. Seagate Technology, Inc., Nos. 96-6087, 96-6145, 1998 WL 271563, at *4 (10th Cir. May 10, 1998) ("Having accepted the reply brief, the district court . . . . could either have permitted a surreply or . . . it could have refrained from relying on any new material contained in the reply brief."). This Court follows that practice. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., No. 93-526, 1997 WL 594498 (W.D. Ky. Feb. 10, 1997).

2. Defendants' Reply Memoranda Introduce New Legal Matter that Requires a Response

Defendants raise two new legal issues in their reply memoranda: the application of the venue provisions of the Clayton Act to this case; and the propriety of dismissing or striking factual allegations in the Complaint related to relevant conduct that is claimed to be immune from liability under Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Personal Jurisdiction: On June 12, 1998, defendants filed two partial Motions to Dismiss. The first (with five pages of argument) claimed that plaintiffs' claim against UST Inc. ("Inc.") should be dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction because 1) Inc. is not subject to jurisdiction under the Kentucky Long-Arm Statute and 2) exercise of jurisdiction under the Kentucky Long-Arm Statute as to Inc. would violate due process. In response, plaintiffs pointed out that the Court has jurisdiction under

Section 12 of the Clayton Act, and defendants' arguments were without merit in any event.

In their Reply Memorandum, filed on July 10, 1998, defendants added eight pages to their original five pages of argument. They claimed for the first time that jurisdiction was not appropriate in this district under the Clayton Act because Inc. does not transact business in Kentucky. For this proposition, defendants cited four decades-old cases, none of which was cited in its opening brief.

In fact, the provision of the Clayton Act upon which defendants purport to rely concern venue,[1] not jurisdiction; the cases they cite run four-square against governing circuit precedent. It is these points that plaintiffs make in their sur-response, and which they had no opportunity to make previously.

Motion to Dismiss "in Part": Plaintiffs' second "Motion to Dismiss in Part" (with a three-page argument section) set forth defendants' claim that some portion of Count I of the Complaint failed to state a claim because it relied on conduct protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In response, plaintiffs noted that no part of the Complaint relied on protected conduct, and that defendants' anticompetitive lobbying efforts were properly included in the complaint because such conduct sheds light on the anticompetitive intent underlying defendants' actions in the marketplace.

Defendants replied with six pages of argument (twice the length of their original pleading), citations to several additional cases, and two new legal theories. First, defendants argued that the Court should dismiss certain factual allegations in the Complaint. Second, defendants suggested for the first time that the Court should "strik[e] Paragraphs 32 through 39 of the Complaint," Defendants' Reply Memorandum in Support of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Part of Complaint at 6, claiming that matter that is discoverable and relevant evidence may nonetheless not be pleaded.

Plaintiffs' sur-response addresses these new arguments, pointing out that 1) it is legally incoherent to request dismissal of background factual allegations; 2) Defendants' Motion to Strike is untimely and insupportable. Plaintiffs should be permitted to make these arguments, because defendants put these theories forward for the first time in their Reply Memorandum.

Conclusion

The Court should grant Plaintiffs' Motions to File Sur-Responses.

Argument

1. The Court Has Discretion to Grant Leave to File Sur-Responses

Where local rules do not provide for the filing of a surreply, a district court "may grant leave to file a surreply at its discretion." American Forest & Paper Ass'n v. EPA, No. 93-CV-0694(RMU) 1996 WL 509601, at *3 (D.D.C. Sept. 4, 1996). A court may grant a proposed surreply simply because it "is helpful to the adjudication of the . . . motions in [the] case, and is not unduly prejudicial." Id.; see also City of Heath v. Ashland Oil, Inc., 834 F. Supp. 971, 974 (E.D. Ohio 1993) (granting a motion for leave to file a surreply discussing legal issue because "the information provides the Court with additional helpful information on issues in dispute").

Where, as here, a party has introduced new legal arguments in a reply brief, it is the better practice to grant leave to file. See, e.g., Beaird v. Seagate Technology, Inc., Nos. 96-6087, 96-6145, 1998 WL 271563, at *4 (10th Cir. May 10, 1998) ("Having accepted the reply brief, the district court . . . . could either have permitted a surreply or . . . it could have refrained from relying on any new material contained in the reply brief."). This Court follows that practice. See Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., No. 93-526, 1997 WL 594498 (W.D. Ky. Feb. 10, 1997).

2. Defendants' Reply Memoranda Introduce New Legal Matter that Requires a Response

Defendants raise two new legal issues in their reply memoranda: the application of the venue provisions of the Clayton Act to this case; and the propriety of dismissing or striking factual allegations in the Complaint related to relevant conduct that is claimed to be immune from liability under Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Personal Jurisdiction: On June 12, 1998, defendants filed two partial Motions to Dismiss. The first (with five pages of argument) claimed that plaintiffs' claim against UST Inc. ("Inc.") should be dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction because 1) Inc. is not subject to jurisdiction under the Kentucky Long-Arm Statute and 2) exercise of jurisdiction under the Kentucky Long-Arm Statute as to Inc. would violate due process. In response, plaintiffs pointed out that the Court has jurisdiction under

Section 12 of the Clayton Act, and defendants' arguments were without merit in any event.

In their Reply Memorandum, filed on July 10, 1998, defendants added eight pages to their original five pages of argument. They claimed for the first time that jurisdiction was not appropriate in this district under the Clayton Act because Inc. does not transact business in Kentucky. For this proposition, defendants cited four decades-old cases, none of which was cited in its opening brief.

In fact, the provision of the Clayton Act upon which defendants purport to rely concern venue,[1] not jurisdiction; the cases they cite run four-square against governing circuit precedent. It is these points that plaintiffs make in their sur-response, and which they had no opportunity to make previously.

Motion to Dismiss "in Part": Plaintiffs' second "Motion to Dismiss in Part" (with a three-page argument section) set forth defendants' claim that some portion of Count I of the Complaint failed to state a claim because it relied on conduct protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In response, plaintiffs noted that no part of the Complaint relied on protected conduct, and that defendants' anticompetitive lobbying efforts were properly included in the complaint because such conduct sheds light on the anticompetitive intent underlying defendants' actions in the marketplace.

Defendants replied with six pages of argument (twice the length of their original pleading), citations to several additional cases, and two new legal theories. First, defendants argued that the Court should dismiss certain factual allegations in the Complaint. Second, defendants suggested for the first time that the Court should "strik[e] Paragraphs 32 through 39 of the Complaint," Defendants' Reply Memorandum in Support of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Part of Complaint at 6, claiming that matter that is discoverable and relevant evidence may nonetheless not be pleaded.

Plaintiffs' sur-response addresses these new arguments, pointing out that 1) it is legally incoherent to request dismissal of background factual allegations; 2) Defendants' Motion to Strike is untimely and insupportable. Plaintiffs should be permitted to make these arguments, because defendants put these theories forward for the first time in their Reply Memorandum.

Conclusion

The Court should grant Plaintiffs' Motions to File Sur-Responses.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

DEFENDANTS' OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL COMPLIANCE WITH INITIAL DISCLOSURES

Defendants, United States Tobacco Co., et al. ("USTC"), respectfully request this Court to deny in full Plaintiffs' motion to compel "compliance" with Rule 26(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Defendants have made appropriate initial disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1), and it is now time to proceed with the discovery process contemplated by Rule 34 (document requests) and Rule 33 (interrogatories).[1] In what is becoming a disturbing trend in this case, however, Plaintiffs have for some unexplained reason become fixated on Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures without regard to the customary progression of a case under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Thus, instead of simply using Defendants' disclosures as a place to begin discovery as the Federal Rules contemplate, Plaintiffs chose to submit a 23-page brief asserting, without regard for the established purpose and scope of Rule 26(a)(1), that Defendants have failed to comply sufficiently with their obligations under that rule. Perhaps even more inexplicable is Plaintiffs' request, without a showing or even a suggestion of any prejudice at this stage of the case, that this Court impose draconian sanctions against Defendants, including the preclusion of evidence and witnesses at trial. In this respect, Plaintiffs' motion to compel, which purports to "keep this case on track" (Pl. Mem. at 1), instead needlessly injects this Court into a discovery process that, due to Plaintiffs' own misconceptions of Rule 26(a), has barely left the station.[2]

As the Court will see, Plaintiffs' motion, to which Defendants have no choice but to respond in detail, and on which Plaintiffs have already sought a hearing and will undoubtedly file a reply, seems more calculated to churn this case than to move expeditiously toward the November 1, 1999 trial date Plaintiffs sought so assiduously. Any plaintiff serious about taking a case to trial would, at this time, eschew the procedural theatrics defendants are so often accused of engaging in and proceed with this case under the federal rules and the established practices of this Court.

[2] Plaintiffs' extraordinary assertion that Defendants have been "long on notice of the areas of plaintiffs' likely interest" because "plaintiffs served a document request with their Complaint in April, 1998, to which [Defendants have] not offered any reply," (see Pl. Mem. at 6 n.2), ignores the facts that (i) Plaintiffs' "document request" was untimely and invalid because it was served in violation of Rule 26(d); and (ii) this Court denied Plaintiffs' subsequent motion for relief from Rule 26(d) and instructed the parties to proceed according to the standards and procedures for discovery set forth in the federal rules. Moreover, Plaintiffs' assertion here that an improper document request filed with the Complaint could have any bearing on Defendants obligations under Rule 26(a)(1) clearly demonstrates Plaintiffs' misunderstanding of the scope of that rule.

16diii000596

ARGUMENT

I. PLAINTIFFS MISTAKE THE PURPOSE OF RULE 26(a)(1)

In their moving papers, and throughout the course of discovery thus far, Plaintiffs have mistaken the purpose of Rule 26(a)(1). Plaintiffs' position is as follows: a plaintiff makes broad, general and conclusory allegations of unlawful conduct and, pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1), all parties against whom such allegations are made are automatically under an obligation to provide the plaintiff with every document that relates, in any way, to the general subject matter of those allegations. Under Plaintiffs' theory, Rule 26(a)(1) would effectively displace the traditional vehicles of discovery because, instead of serving document requests or interrogatories, a plaintiff could simply file a motion to compel, itemizing all of the documents that "should have been disclosed." Thus, this new form of discovery would bypass the discovery limitations of Rule 26(b) and the procedures for objecting to the production of documents under Rule 34(b). Moreover, under Plaintiffs' theory, Rule 26(a)(1) apparently would provide the added feature of precluding a disclosing party's use of any document not included in its initial disclosures.

Plaintiffs' unique interpretation of Rule 26(a)(1) simply ignores the intended purpose of the rule. According to the Advisory Committee Notes, and as Defendants pointed out in their August 3, 1998 letter to Plaintiffs, that purpose of Rule 26(a)(1) is to facilitate the disclosure of "certain basic information" so that the parties may proceed more efficiently with traditional discovery methods. Thus, under Rule 26(a)(1), "an itemized listing of each exhibit is not required...." See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes. What is required is disclosure of the nature and location of documents sufficient to allow the receiving party "(1) to make an informed decision concerning which documents might need to be examined, at least initially, and

(2) to frame their document requests in a manner likely to avoid squabbles...." Id. Based on Plaintiffs' detailed account of what purportedly was missing from Defendants' Initial Disclosures, it is obvious that Defendants' Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures satisfy these objectives. From this point on, Plaintiffs can and presumably will use the information obtained from Defendants pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1) in order to make informed decisions concerning what documents may be relevant to this lawsuit and to frame a Rule 34 document request in accordance with those decisions.

II. DEFENDANTS HAVE COMPLIED IN FULL WITH RULE 26(a)(1)

In any event, Plaintiffs motion must fail because Defendants complied in full with Rule 26(a)(1). As a threshold matter, overlooked by Plaintiffs, Rule 26(a)(1) requires a party to make disclosures based only on those facts that were alleged with particularity in the pleadings. Broadly based, general allegations, though sufficient to satisfy the liberal standards of notice pleading, are not sufficient to create obligations under Rule 26(a)(1). See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes ("Broad, vague, and conclusory allegations sometimes tolerated in notice pleading ... should not impose upon responding parties the obligation at that point to search for and identify all persons possibly involved in, or all documents affecting [the alleged conduct]."). Pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(B), Defendants have produced or described those documents relevant to disputed facts alleged with particularity. Pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(A), Defendants have identified those persons likely to have discoverable information about disputed facts alleged with particularity.

A. DEFENDANTS COMPLIED IN FULL WITH RULE 26(a)(1)(B)

Pursuant to the express language of Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(B), Defendants provided to Plaintiffs either a copy, or a description by category and location, of all documents that are relevant to disputed facts alleged with particularity in the Complaint. Thus, Defendants produced over 15,485 pages of documents, as well as appropriate descriptions of other documents that could not practically be produced, such as collected USTC point of sale advertising that had been defaced by Conwood sales representatives.[3] In their moving papers, Plaintiffs claim that Defendants did not disclose "entire categories of materials that are obviously relevant to plaintiffs' allegations." Pl. Mem. at 7. With this assertion, Plaintiffs avoid — intentionally or otherwise — any reference to the particularity requirement of Rule 26(a)(1)(B). Even a cursory review of Plaintiffs' category-by-category argument reveals that Plaintiffs' entire motion is based on obscuring this legal standard.

1. Competitive Activity Reports and Supporting Documentation

Plaintiffs claim that Defendants "acknowledged [their] duty to produce CARs," and therefore should have produced all CARs and all of the data and information on which they are based. Despite their best efforts and certain misrepresentations of documents, however, Plaintiffs did not and cannot demonstrate how CARs — which were produced in relation to Plaintiffs' allegations concerning the market shares of smokeless tobacco companies — are relevant to any other disputed facts alleged with particularity in the Complaint.

[3] It should be noted that, unlike Plaintiffs, Defendants produced only one copy of each document and did not fill boxes with duplicates and completely irrelevant documents such as scores of photocopies of advertisements that have absolutely nothing to do with this lawsuit in general, much less anything to do with any facts alleged with particularity in the pleadings.

For example, Plaintiffs imply that USTC 014389 indicates that Conwood "has faced problems distributing for [sic] its new Cougar discount product" (Pl. Mem. at 7-8 n.3) as a result of "defendants' exclusive distribution rack agreement with Wal-Mart." Id. In reality, however, the document merely states the fact that Conwood's Cougar product has lost presence in Wal-Mart. The inference Plaintiffs draw is rank speculation. In fact, the document implies that the popularity of Timberwolf, a competing price-value product (manufactured by Pinkerton), is the reason for Conwood's lost presence in Wal-Mart.

Similarly, Plaintiffs cite excerpts from several documents in USTC's production while ignoring the actual reason those documents were produced. For example, Plaintiffs cite to USTC 013080 (stating that Conwood will not be changing its distribution racks); USTC 013082 and USTC 013095 (stating the price of Cougar); and USTC 013086 (stating the average facings held by the Cougar product) (Pl. Mem. at 8 n.4.); but none of the excerpts selected by Plaintiffs from these documents relate in any way to any disputed facts alleged with particularity in the Complaint. Although Plaintiffs allege that Defendants change rack design to impose costs on Conwood (Compl. ¶ 27), the cited CAR page says nothing about any USTC rack change or the motivations for any change. Likewise, Plaintiffs made no allegations — with particularity or otherwise — concerning the price of Cougar or concerning the number of facings held by the Cougar product.

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that because the CARs are based on USTC's "Profile Activity Reporting System" (or "PAR"), all PAR documents should be produced pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(B). Plaintiffs make no independent effort, however, to explain how general sales data contained in PAR reports is related to any disputed fact alleged with particularity in the Complaint. Defendants, therefore, are unable to respond to this assertion at this time beyond stating that Plaintiffs conclusion is, as described above, based on a faulty premise, and therefore is simply wrong.

2. Retail Chain Store Contracts

Plaintiffs generally alleged that Defendants misrepresent market share information, but they make no particularized allegation whatsoever in terms of any specific retail store, or even a specific sales region. Defendants, however, produced to Plaintiffs actual presentations made to retail chain stores which included valid and accurate sales share data based on objective sources. Plaintiffs presume that these documents were produced in response to other allegations in the Complaint and assert that Defendants should have produced all of its alleged "exclusive contracts" with retail stores. Indeed, despite Plaintiffs' lack of specificity in their Complaint and notwithstanding Plaintiffs' misapprehension as to what "exclusive contracts" exist, Defendants produced documents pertaining to their relationships with certain specific retail stores. Plaintiffs should now proceed under Rule 34 to request any further production of documents.

In purported support of their contentions, Plaintiffs misrepresent that they have obtained and produced copies of "UST exclusive vending contracts." Pl. Mem. at 9. This is not true. The document referenced by Plaintiffs, CWD 0100000182-83, is an internal memorandum from one Evelyn M. Banks of Uncle Willie's retail store to Uncle Willie's Store Managers, not a contract with USTC. Moreover, the document does not refer to any exclusive agreement, but allows for "Manager's Discretion" in placing competitive products. Similarly, USTC 013321, while referring to an "agreement with WalMart," does not refer to any written contract, and expressly states that USTC will work "in conjunction with Philip Morris and Swisher" (emphasis added), a competing smokeless tobacco company. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' assertions are without merit.

3. Promotional Alliances

In response to Plaintiffs' allegations of "promotional alliances," Defendants produced Customer Alliance Program ("CAP") documents, including a copy of each and every CAP contract form, fully disclosing the terms of the CAP program. Defendants then described all executed CAP contracts — which, as is evident from Defendants' disclosures, includes all wholesaler, distributor and retail CAP programs — by category and location. Thus, Defendants fully complied with Rule 26(a)(1)(B). As for the "other promotional alliances" cited in Plaintiffs' moving papers (Pl. Mem. at 10-11), Plaintiffs' Complaint mischaracterized such documents as "exclusive dealing agreements," which, as is clear from the face of the documents, is simply not true. Based on this general and conclusory allegation, however, Plaintiffs now demand the production of "all documentation concerning retail or wholesale promotional programs," Pl. Mem. at 11, without any reference to facts alleged with particularity in the Complaint and with complete disregard for their own general allegations concerning these documents. If Plaintiffs require additional documents concerning Defendants' promotional programs, they should frame their Rule 34 document request accordingly, and properly serve the request pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 34.

4. Sales Force Reports

Plaintiffs also assert that Defendants were obligated to disclose "all of their sales representatives reports — many of which plaintiffs expect will reflect defendants' anticompetitive activity." Pl. Mem. at 12. In support of this assertion, Plaintiffs refer to the allegations made in Paragraphs 23-28 of the Complaint. Contrary to Plaintiffs' wishful thinking, however, no USTC sales representative report relates in any way to "a multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary tactics," Compl. ¶ 23, "theft of Conwood moist snuff, distribution racks, and point of sale advertising," Compl. ¶ 24, "misrepresented 'Plan-O-Grams'" Compl. ¶ 25, "false representations that UST is the 'Category Manager' with authority to control store shelves," Compl. ¶ 26, "the suppression of competition through frequent rack style changes," Compl. ¶ 27, or any "written or oral agreements barring or restricting Conwood products, racks and point of sale advertising." Compl. ¶ 28. Accordingly, aside from the fact that Plaintiffs did not make one allegation with any particularity concerning the actions of any USTC sales representative — and Plaintiffs point to no such allegation now — Plaintiffs have no basis for asserting that Defendants were obligated under Rule 26(a)(1)(B) to disclose all of the USTC sales representative reports.

5. Training Materials and Sales Meeting Documents

Plaintiffs state that they have alleged that "UST developed a multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary acts for execution by its large nationwide sales force and others." Pl. Mem. at 12. Based solely on this allegation, clearly not made with particularity, Plaintiffs assert that Defendants are obligated to produce all training materials as well as all sales meeting documents. Defendants, however, cannot produce documents relating to allegations of "a multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary acts" that does not exist. Plaintiffs' unreasonable contention that, based on their broad allegations, Defendants should produce all training materials, regardless of their content, mistakes the purpose and scope of Rule 26(a)(1)(B).

6. Personnel Files

Similarly, Plaintiffs' assertion that Defendants should produce all personnel files based on the vague and speculative allegation that USTC "rewards anticompetitive conduct by its sales force and punishes those who refuse to engage in such conduct" (Pl. Mem. at 14) is patently absurd. Once again, Plaintiffs demand the production of documents based on their own fanciful allegations for which there is no support. Under Plaintiffs' theory, a plaintiff could make any sweeping general allegation concerning a company's employees — no matter how baseless — and then demand every personnel file as part of the initial disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1)(B). This is not, and cannot be, the intent or spirit of Rule 26(a)(1). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 (providing procedure for requesting and objecting to the production of documents).

7. Global Settlement

Plaintiffs also demand the production, presumably, of every document that relates in any way to the so-called Global Settlement. Defendants, on the other hand, have produced all documents relevant to disputed facts alleged with particularity. First, Defendants do not dispute that they were involved in lobbying efforts relating to the so-called Global Settlement. Accordingly, no documents relevant to this general, undisputed fact were produced pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(B). Second, Defendants do dispute that they "sought anticompetitive legislation." Pl. Mem. at 14 (emphasis added). Plaintiffs, however, did not allege any facts with particularity concerning this claim.

8. Rack Style Changes

Plaintiffs state that, because they alleged that USTC "alter[s] and develop[s] new moist snuff distribution racks as a way of imposing costs on rivals," they "expected to see some documentation in defendants' production concerning how many racks they purchase annually, new rack style designs and blueprints, and reasons for style changes." Pl. Mem. at 15. Presumably, Plaintiffs had knowledge of what particular rack changes by USTC imposed costs on Conwood. Nevertheless, Plaintiffs did not allege with particularity — for example, in terms of time frame, or in terms of particular retail locations — any specific USTC rack style change or any imposition of costs on Conwood. Accordingly, Defendants could not and did not produce documents relevant to any facts alleged with particularity.

16diii000604

9. Kentucky Contacts

Plaintiffs' assertion that Defendants should produce all documents concerning Defendants' "Kentucky contacts," as well as those documents concerning "UST Inc.'s control over the acts and decisions of its subsidiaries" (Pl. Mem. at 15-16) demonstrates most clearly Plaintiffs' misapprehension of the legal standard of Rule 26(a)(1)(B). In Paragraphs 6 and 7(b)(3) of the Complaint, Plaintiffs do not allege with any particularity whatsoever that UST Inc. has any contacts with Kentucky — direct or indirect. Similarly, Plaintiffs make no factual allegations whatsoever about the relationship between UST Inc. and its subsidiaries beyond the conclusory allegation that UST Inc. controls their acts and decisions. Accordingly, Defendants would not be obligated under Rule 26(a)(1)(B) to disclose any such documents, even if they existed.

10. Internal Market Projections

Defendants produced third-party market share reports and projections in response to Plaintiffs' allegations concerning the market shares of each company in the alleged relevant market. Defendants do not admit, as Plaintiffs state, that any of these materials are relevant to any other of Plaintiffs' allegations, including the baseless allegation that Conwood's "market share has been constrained by defendants' conduct." Pl. Mem. at 16. In any event, Defendants also produced monthly internal market projections based on the market share information contained in the third-party reports. See, e.g., USTC 014571-014594. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' contention that Defendants did not disclose internal market projections is simply wrong.

16diii000605

B. DEFENDANTS COMPLIED IN FULL WITH RULE 26(a)(1)(A)

Unlike Plaintiffs, Defendants did not choose to subvert the purpose of Rule 26(a)(1)(A) by providing an incomplete, and at times inventive, list of the names, addresses and telephone numbers of over 700 persons purporting to have discoverable information about disputed facts alleged with particularity in the pleadings.[4] Instead, Defendants identified those disputed facts alleged with particularity and then, pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(A), identified those persons likely to have discoverable information about those facts. Plaintiffs, once again, ignore the particularity standard of Rule 26(a)(1) and baselessly assert that Defendants' disclosures are inadequate. Plaintiffs are wrong.[5]

Without repeating the insufficiencies of Plaintiffs' factual allegations in the Complaint, as discussed in subsection A above, it should be re-emphasized that, like Rule 26(a)(1)(B), Rule 26(a)(1)(A) does not impose any obligation on a party to search for and [4] The vast majority of listings provided by Plaintiffs contain wildly inaccurate name spellings, addresses and phone numbers. Rather than "streamline future discovery" as contemplated by the federal rules, Plaintiffs' irresponsible effort merely complicates it.

[5] Moreover, having identified over 700 persons purportedly with discoverable information, Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate how they are prejudiced by any inadequacies in Defendants' disclosures. See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes ("the exception for violations that are 'harmless' is needed to avoid unduly harsh penalties in a variety of situations: e.g., . . . the failure to list as a trial witness a person so listed by another party").

identify all persons possibly having knowledge of disputed facts, or involved in conduct, not alleged with sufficient particularity. Defendants further respond to each of Plaintiffs' specific contentions as follows:

UST Inc. Personnel. Plaintiffs assert that because Conwood personnel met and exchanged correspondence with UST Inc. personnel, Defendants were obligated to disclose those personnel under Rule 26(a)(1). Plaintiffs, however, point to no facts alleged with particularity concerning the substance or even the existence of any meetings or correspondence. Plaintiffs also assert that UST Inc. personnel should have been listed in response to the broad, conclusory allegations concerning UST Inc.'s contacts with Kentucky. As discussed above, Plaintiffs did not allege any facts with particularity in the Complaint concerning such contacts. Moreover, Plaintiffs' reference to Ms. Debra A. Baker illustrates Defendants' rather than Plaintiffs' point. Ms. Baker's affidavit was submitted to present facts that were noticeably absent from the Complaint in response to Plaintiffs' broad, conclusory allegations concerning UST Inc.'s Kentucky contacts. Thus, Ms. Baker, like all other UST Inc. personnel, is beyond the scope of Rule 26(a)(1)(A).

Global Settlement Personnel. As discussed above, the Complaint does not include disputed facts alleged with particularity concerning the so-called Global Settlement. Accordingly, no persons involved in the so-called Global Settlement lobbying activities are within the scope of Rule 26(a)(1)(A).

Third-Party Anticompetitive Activity Witnesses. Plaintiffs point out that Defendants did not disclose any "third party anticompetitive activity witnesses." Plaintiffs fail to recognize that they did not allege with particularity any incidents of the conduct they reference here. Plaintiff did not identify any particular retail store (as opposed to generally naming a national or regional retail chain), any particular USTC personnel involved in such activity, or any particular date of any particular incident. Instead, in their moving papers, Plaintiffs point to USTC and Conwood documents and contend that persons referenced in certain documents should have been listed. Rule 26(a)(1), however, does not require a party to spend time and effort attempting to match certain documents with certain general allegations. Rather, Rule 26(a)(1)(A) requires a party only to identify those persons likely to have knowledge of disputed facts alleged with particularity. Defendants fully complied with this obligation.

In addition, as of the present time, Defendants have not conducted any investigation as to what knowledge any third party may or may not possess about the disputed facts alleged with particularity in the Complaint. See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes ("Subparagraph (A) requires identification of all persons who, based on the investigation thus far, are likely to have discoverable information").

Training Personnel and Sales Force. As discussed above in Section I, Plaintiffs' imaginative allegation that USTC has developed a "multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary acts" is not sufficiently particular to require the disclosure of the names addresses and telephone numbers of all USTC training personnel or members of its sales force. Even if it were, it is not likely — to say the very most — that any USTC sales representative will have discoverable information concerning any such strategy. It simply does not exist.

C. DEFENDANTS ARE NOT OBLIGATED TO PRODUCE A DAMAGES CALCULATION UNDER RULE 26(a)(1)(C)

Plaintiffs point out that Rule 26(a)(1)(C) provides that a party shall provide a computation of any category of damages claimed by that party. Plaintiffs fail to point out, however, that Rule 26(a)(1)(C) does not require a party to provide such a computation if it would depend on information not then available to the party. See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes ("a party would not be expected to provide a calculation of damages which ... depends on information in the possession of another party or person").

Contrary to Plaintiffs' representation, Defendants responded promptly to Plaintiffs' inquiry concerning Rule 26(a)(1)(C), and receiving no further correspondence from Plaintiffs, assumed the matter had been resolved. Thus, in a letter of July 23, 1998, Defendants informed Plaintiffs that, without discovery, Defendants did not have sufficient information upon which to base an accurate calculation of damages. Defendants also informed Plaintiffs that, "[a]s discovery in this case proceeds, and Defendants acquire adequate information to provide an accurate calculation of damages, Defendants will then provide such a calculation, either pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(C) if appropriate, or pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) [expert disclosures]." Indeed, in Plaintiffs' own calculation of damages, Plaintiffs state that they "expect the calculation of damages to be the subject of expert analysis and testimony...," but nevertheless provided a dubious calculation of damages based on a simplistic comparison of Conwood's "actual market share" and baseless and speculative projections of what Conwood's "but for" share would have been and of the expected growth of the moist snuff market as a whole. Defendants declined to engage in such a meaningless exercise.

Accordingly, there is no legal or factual basis whatsoever for requiring that Defendants provide prematurely a calculation of damages when sufficient information is not available. Plaintiffs' argument, therefore, must fail.

III. PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOT DEMONSTRATED ANY PREJUDICE

Finally, at this early stage of this case when there could be no prejudice to a party, Plaintiffs take the untenable position that this Court should levy draconian sanctions, including the preclusion of evidence and witnesses from trial. Rule 37(c), however, expressly provides that sanctions for failure to disclose under Rule 26(a) are appropriate "unless such failure is harmless." Indeed, the authority cited by Plaintiffs highlights the untimeliness of Plaintiffs' request for sanctions. See Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Goldstone & Sudalter, P.C., 128 F.3d 10 (1st Cir. 1997) (striking affidavit of undisclosed witness at summary judgment stage, after close of discovery); Taydus v. Cisneros, 902 F. Supp. 288 (D. Mass. 1995) (sanctions considered after close of discovery for failure to disclose documents); Nelson v. Ford Motor Company, 1998 WL 423111, *1 (8th Cir. 1998) (excluding expert opinion not included in expert report).

Here, by contrast, Plaintiffs could not be prejudiced by any alleged failure by Defendants to disclose documents or identify persons under Rule 26(a)(1). Any additional documents that Plaintiffs claim — without merit — should have been produced pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(B) can easily be requested by Plaintiffs under Rule 34. This Court's June 9, 1998 Order for the Preservation of Documents ensures that such documents will remain in Defendants' possession. Similarly, Plaintiffs can simply frame interrogatories to obtain the names, addresses and telephone numbers of any additional persons they claim — without merit — should have been disclosed pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1)(A). Accordingly, even assuming a violation of Rule 26(a) by Defendants, an assumption that has no basis in law or fact, Plaintiffs are not entitled to the sanctions they request.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' motion to compel compliance with Rule 26(a)(1) should be denied in full.

Civil Action No.

REPLY IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL COMPLIANCE WITH MANDATORY DISCLOSURES

Defendants' Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures ("Def. Opp.") is remarkable for what it does not say. Defendants do not dispute that their one-box document disclosure fails to include or mention category after category of relevant documents. Point I, infra. They do not dispute that their 25-name witness list omits entire categories of persons with relevant knowledge. Point II, infra. They do not dispute that they have failed to supply any initial calculation of their supposed counterclaim damages. Point III, infra. And they do not dispute that Rule 37 specifically authorizes the Court to compel production of, and exclude defendants from using, such improperly withheld information. Point IV, infra.

Defendants instead devote their opposition to arguing that plaintiffs are "fixated" on Rule 26(a)(1) and should simply propound document requests and interrogatories pursuant to Rules 33 and 34. Def. Opp. 1; see also id. at 2 (labeling plaintiffs' attempt to secure Rule 26(a)(1) compliance "theatrics" and "churn[ing]"). Defendants' dismissive attitude toward Rule 26(a)(1), however, is at odds with the judgment of Congress and the courts.[1] Indeed, the drafters thought the Rule so important that they included automatic sanctions to ensure compliance. Rule 37(c)(1). Defendants cannot now excuse their failure to abide by Rule 26(a)(1) simply because they think it unimportant.

Defendants' effort to encourage plaintiffs to ignore Rule 26(a)(1) and seek relief through "traditional vehicles of discovery" (Def. Opp. 3) is particularly ironic given that they have resisted answering plaintiffs' document requests and interrogatories for five months. See Exh. A (Letter from Mark Hansen). Indeed, defendants have filed frivolous motion after frivolous motion seeking to derail the Court's expedited scheduling order. They have filed a motion to strike allegations in the Complaint that are expressly permissible to show intent under United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 (1965); a motion to dismiss UST Inc. for lack of personal jurisdiction despite the Clayton Act's provision for nationwide jurisdiction; and, most recently, a belated motion to dismiss (filed five months after initiation of this lawsuit) that depends entirely on misrepresenting the Complaint's plain allegations. Such dilatory tactics should be put to an end and compliance with the Court's Rules should be ordered to begin.

The only other excuse UST offers for its refusal to comply with Rule 26(a)(1) is that the Complaint supposedly lacks sufficient particularity. See Def. Opp. 3-et seq. Notably, defendants have not challenged the Complaint's supposed lack of particulars under Rule 12(f). Nor can they. Moreover, some of the documents and witnesses defendants have withheld are expressly referenced either in their own production or in plaintiffs' detailed, thirty-one page, seventy-three paragraph Complaint. Withholding such material is precisely the sort of gamesmanship Rule 26(a)(1) was designed to prevent.[2]

Argument

I. UST HAS IMPROPERLY WITHHELD DOCUMENTS

This is a $400 million (before trebling) antitrust lawsuit alleging that an 80 percent monopolist has systematically restrained competition in the moist snuff industry for years through myriad schemes. See Complaint ¶¶ 23-31 (alleging theft of rival racks and advertising, misrepresentation based on plan-o-grams, misrepresentation that UST is "category manager," frequent rack style changes, exclusive dealing agreements, product disparagement, predatory pricing). In response to these allegations, defendants claim that a single box of internal documents fulfills their Rule 26(a)(1)(B) disclosure obligations.[3] This is a patent attempt to avoid compliance with the federal rules, as the following examples further illustrate.

[2]146 F.R.D. at 631 ("[t]he greater the specificity and clarity of the allegations in the pleadings, the more complete should be the listing of the potential witnesses and types of documentary evidence. . . . The litigants should not indulge in gamesmanship with respect to the disclosure obligations").

[3]UST claims that it has produced 15,485 pages. Def. Opp. 5. It does not dispute, however, that most of these documents are third party marketing reports. Neither does it contest that its internal document disclosure fill just a single box. Memorandum in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures ("Pl. Mem.") at 6.

16diii000614

A. Competitive Activity Reports. Defendants concede that its Competitive Activity Reports ("CARs") are relevant "to plaintiffs' allegations concerning the market shares of smokeless tobacco companies." Def. Opp. 5. Defendants likewise do not dispute that their CARs contain only conclusions about market share, omitting the data and reasoning underlying those conclusions. Indeed, defendants' CARs expressly incorporate by reference other materials containing such underlying information. See Pl. Mem. at 8 n.5 (CAR cover memo referring reader to reports "submitted by the field sales management" available in the "Sales Reporting Systems Department"; referring reader to Profile Activity Reporting data). Despite this, none of the expressly-referenced underlying materials have been disclosed. Defendants do not (and cannot) explain how their CAR conclusions are relevant to plaintiffs' claims and admittedly must be disclosed while expressly-incorporated underlying data and analysis are irrelevant and free from disclosure. Indeed, the parties' ability to examine and test such data is necessarily critical to an antitrust case alleging that improper acts by a monopolist have restricted rivals' growth. UST itself recognizes the point, demanding production of all similar market share data in Conwood's control. See Exh. B at 5, ¶ 4 (demanding not just conclusory reports, but "[a]ll documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's financial performance in the alleged moist snuff market").

Despite defendants' contrary suggestion, materials underlying CARs are also directly relevant to plaintiffs' allegations of unlawful exclusionary conduct. One of defendants' CARs alone reports that Conwood has been successfully limited to between 3.1 and 4.3 facings in certain retail outlets; that UST has managed to reduce Conwood's Kodiak product to one facing in a large Western retail chain; that Conwood will not be able to match UST's latest rack style change; and that Conwood's Cougar product is losing presence in Wal-Mart, a chain with which UST has an exclusive dealing contract.[4] See Pl. Mem. at 7-8 nn. 3-4. These matters directly bear on plaintiffs' express allegations that UST has tried to restrict distribution for rivals, that it has constantly changed rack styles in order to impose costs on smaller competitors, and that it has achieved substantial market foreclosure through exclusive dealing arrangements with some of the country's largest retailers. See Complaint ¶¶ 23-28.

B. Retail Chain Store Contracts. UST does not dispute that the Complaint alleges that it has contracted with retail chains across the country in order to obtain the exclusive right to place moist snuff racks and point-of-sale materials. Complaint ¶ 28(a)-(d). In apparent recognition of these allegations, UST has concededly disclosed "documents pertaining to [its] relationships with certain specific retail stores." Def. Opp. 7 (emphasis added). Yet, defendants still do not (and cannot) explain why they have chosen to limit their disclosure to "certain" chains. Indeed, defendants have even (inexplicably)

[4]Defendants dispute that Cougar's diminishing presence in Wal-Mart was due to their exclusive dealing contract, arguing instead that the reasonable inference from their CAR is that the success of another rival product, Timberwolf, was responsible. Def. Opp. 6. But the plausibility of this explanation can only be assessed by reference to the data underlying defendants' CAR; the CAR makes no express link between Timberwolf's success and Cougar's loss. (Even if the underlying data did support such a link, moreover, it would only suggest the fact that UST's exclusive vending contract with Wal-Mart has artificially limited the number of slots available for new rival products, deliberately making market entry by new products unnecessarily difficult.).

failed to produce all documents concerning deals reached with chains mentioned by name in the Complaint. Compare Complaint ¶ 28(a) (naming Wal-Mart and Uncle Willie's) with Pl. Mem. Exhs. H (document showing undisclosed exclusive deal with Wal-Mart) & I (document reflecting undisclosed exclusive deal with Uncle Willie's chain).[5] Defendants' materials for all relevant chains should be disclosed.

C. Promotional Alliances. Again, defendants do not dispute the specificity of plaintiffs' allegations concerning UST promotional alliance programs aimed at providing defendants with exclusive distribution rack, point-of-sale advertising, or promotional rights. Complaint ¶ 28. Indeed, defendants even boast that their disclosure has "described all executed CAP contracts . . . by category and location." Def. Opp. 8. Yet defendants nowhere explain or defend their nondisclosure of numerous other similar promotional alliance programs, including ones expressly referenced in the Complaint or UST's own production. E.g., Wholesaler Alliance Program and Retail Data Program (both mentioned in UST's own documents); Copenhagen Incentive Program (expressly mentioned at Complaint ¶ 28(b)); Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center Agreement (expressly [5]Defendants argue that its contracts with Uncle Willie's and Wal-Mart are proper. Def. Opp. 7. But that merits argument is irrelevant: the Complaint specifically alleges these agreements are unlawful; as evidence of disputed facts, they must be disclosed. Rule 26(a)(1). Besides, even a cursory review of the undisclosed Uncle Willie's contract confirms the Complaint's allegation that UST gained the exclusive right to place vending racks in that chain (limiting all rival products to just three slots in UST's exclusive 16 slot rack). Compare Pl. Mem. Exh. H at CWD0100000182 ("1) Exclusive Vending UST 16 Slot Plastic Vendor") with Complaint ¶ 28(a). The Wal-Mart letter also expressly references an unproduced "agreement with Wal-Mart to reset their stores." Compare Exh. I at 013321 with Complaint ¶ 28(a).

mentioned at Complaint ¶ 28(c)); Retail Merchandising Placement Agreements (see Pl. Mem. Exh. J).

D. Sales Force Reports. In support of their counterclaims defendants produced sales force reports purporting to record misconduct by Conwood representatives. Pl. Mem. 12. It is possible that UST's sales representatives also report their own improper activities; indeed, UST's sales force report forms specifically leave space for representatives to comment on activity concerning rivals' distribution racks, point-of-sale advertising, and promotional efforts. See Pl. Mem. Exh. K; Complaint ¶¶ 23-28. And Rule 26(a)(1) indisputably obliges UST to disclose all "potentially relevant items . . . whether or not supportive of its contentions in the case." 146 F.R.D. at 630 (emphasis added). There is, thus, no basis for UST's selective disclosure of sales reports.

E. Training Materials and Sales Meeting Documents. UST claims that the Complaint lacks allegations concerning its training materials and sales meetings. Yet, paragraphs 23 and 24 specifically allege that UST representatives have "acted at either the express direction, or with the tacit approval of, UST," and that UST teaches its sales representatives that "the 'way to get ahead'" is to engage in anticompetitive behavior against Conwood. Id. UST apparently understood these allegations to require disclosure of one recent training manual and certain documents pertaining to an Orlando, Florida training meeting. Pl. Mem. Exhs. G & M. Plaintiffs seek only full disclosure of the training and sales meeting materials UST already acknowledges must be disclosed.

F. Personnel Files. UST concedes that the Complaint specifically alleges that it rewards anticompetitive conduct by its sales representatives against Conwood, and punishes those who refuse to engage in such conduct. Def. Opp. 10; Complaint ¶ 24. UST claims that it need not disclose sales representative personnel files only because any suggestion that its personnel are engaged in anticompetitive activities is "fanciful" and "baseless," and, in any event, Rule 34 supplies a mechanism for discovery of these materials. Def. Opp. 10. Disputing the merits of plaintiffs' claims is, however, no basis for refusing disclosure of relevant information. Neither is the availability of additional discovery mechanisms grounds for ignoring Rule 26(a)(1).

G. Global Settlement. Defendants admit that they have disclosed no documents pertaining to the Global Settlement despite their own admission that they "were involved in lobbying efforts relating to the so-called Global Settlement." Def. Opp. 10. Defendants rationalize their failure on the grounds that plaintiffs fail to allege with particularity how defendants' activities were aimed at securing anticompetitive legislation. Id. Plaintiffs' allegations, however, cover seven full paragraphs and detail exactly how defendants sought to secure anticompetitive legislation. See Complaint ¶¶ 32-38.[6] UST's

[6]"UST sought to embed the Global Settlement with provisions that would cause disproportionate harm to its moist snuff rivals . . . such as a payment structure for the purported settlement amounts that was designed to impose substantial and punitive costs on non-participating firms, requiring such firms to pay as much as 150% of the amount to be assessed against similarly-situated participants in the private agreement. * * * Most recently, UST sought to lobby in Congress for passage of a proposed federal law that would cost UST hundreds of millions of dollars per year, but would put its three moist snuff competitors out of business. . . . [When] asked why it preferred this bill to an alternative that would cost UST hundreds of millions less[,] . . . UST had no response." Complaint ¶¶ 32-33, 38.

obvious discomfort with defending its participation in an anti-competitive legislative cabal (see Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Part of the Complaint), provides no basis for disregarding Rule 26(a)(1).

H. Rack Style Changes. UST does not dispute that it has documents concerning rack style changes, or that it failed to disclose them. It defends its failure (again) solely on the grounds that plaintiffs' claims lack sufficient particularity. In fact, however, the Complaint specifically alleges that "[i]n the last few years -- and for no apparent purpose other than to remove Conwood racks and impose costs on Conwood -- UST has introduced short racks, tall racks, wall racks, and others, across the United States." Id. ¶ 27. UST's failure to disclose in the face of such a plain allegation is precisely the sort of "adversarial antics" Rule 26(a)(1)'s drafters sought to prevent -- and punish. 8 C. Wright, et al, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2053, at 633.

I. Kentucky Contacts. Again UST does not dispute that it has relevant documents, or that it has failed to disclose them. Again, it argues only that the Complaint lacks sufficient particularity to trigger any obligation to disclose. The Complaint, however, specifically alleges that UST has "hundreds of millions of dollars worth of assets in this district and buys substantial amounts of tobacco for use in smokeless products from farmers located in this district." Complaint ¶ 7. It also alleges that UST controls the acts and decisions of subsidiaries doing business in Kentucky. Id. ¶ 6. UST cannot seriously suggest that it was unable to understand these allegations, or that it was unable to frame a responsive disclosure.

16diii000620

J. Internal Market Projections. While contesting plaintiffs' allegation that their market share has been suppressed by UST's activities (see Complaint ¶ 40), UST admits that it has produced six boxes of third party market reports in response to this allegation. It further represents that it has "also produced monthly internal market projections based on the market share information contained in the third party reports." Def. Opp. 12. Yet, UST still fails to indicate that its disclosure encompasses all internal UST market projections; all such materials, not a few hand-picked examples, should be disclosed.

II. DEFENDANTS HAVE FAILED TO DISCLOSE WITNESSES

According to defendants, they know of only 25 persons with knowledge bearing on any of plaintiffs' -- or their own -- allegations. Defendants claim that they do not know of a single person at UST Inc., United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc. with knowledge of any disputed fact. They claim they do not know of a single relevant third party witness. And they claim they do not know of a single Conwood employee with relevant knowledge. Such representations are incredible on their face, as the following examples only further demonstrate.

A. UST Inc. Personnel. Defendants concede that they named not a single UST Inc. executive in their Rule 26(a)(1)(A) disclosure. They defend this omission on the grounds that the Complaint lacks any allegations which would require disclosure of UST Inc. personnel. But multiple examples of the anticompetitive activities alleged in the Complaint (id. ¶¶ 23-28) were discussed by Conwood and senior UST Inc. executives over the last several years. Indeed, defendants have even produced correspondence between Conwood and UST Inc. executives concerning such discussions. See, e.g., Pl. Mem. Exh. N (Letter to UST executive raising examples of unauthorized rack and point-of-sale advertisement removal and misrepresentations by UST representatives). Accordingly, defendants cannot seriously suggest that no UST Inc. employee has discoverable information relevant to disputed facts.

Defendants allege that "plaintiffs' reference to Ms. Debra A. Baker illustrates Defendants' rather than Plaintiffs' point" because her affidavit was submitted to present facts that were "noticeably absent from the Complaint." Def. Opp. 13. In fact, however, the Complaint alleges specific contacts between UST Inc. and the State of Kentucky. Complaint ¶¶ 6-7; see supra Point I(I). Ms. Baker's affidavit was provided in an attempt to disprove those allegations. Yet, improperly, neither Ms. Baker nor anyone else with relevant knowledge concerning UST Inc.'s contacts with Kentucky was named in defendants' disclosure.

B. Global Settlement Personnel. UST does not dispute that it failed to disclose Global Settlement personnel. Instead, it seeks to defend that failure on the grounds that the Complaint contains no specific disputed allegations about UST's involvement in Global Settlement discussions. As noted above, however, this defense is implausible given plaintiffs' detailed seven paragraph allegations concerning UST's efforts to secure anticompetitive legislation. See supra Point I(G) & n.6.

C. Third Party Anticompetitive Activity Witnesses. UST says it was not required to disclose third party witnesses because the Complaint does not identify any particular retail store at which an anticompetitive incident occurred. But, tellingly, defendants do not dispute that they are fully aware of specific retailers with relevant knowledge about the anticompetitive conduct alleged in the Complaint. Besides, defendants are simply inaccurate about the level of detail in the Complaint. E.g., id. ¶ 25 (mentioning Clark Oil stores in Michigan); id. ¶ 26 (Florida Winn-Dixies, Minnesota Fuel-N-Foods); ¶ 28(a) (citing Wal-Mart, Dairy Mart, WaWa, HEB Stores, Orton Convenience, Minute Man, Uncle Willie's, Quick Sav stores in Michigan, Mountaineer Marts in West Virginia); id. Exh. A (mentioning multiple specific stores in California and Illinois). Further, defendants offer no excuse whatsoever for failing to name third parties with relevant knowledge of their own counterclaims and defenses. Pl. Mem. 19.[7]

D. Training Personnel and Sales Force Personnel. Defendants assert that their training personnel and sales force have no knowledge concerning the anticompetitive conduct alleged in the Complaint because "it simply does not exist." Def. Opp. 14. Such merits-based arguments, however, do nothing to relieve defendants of their burden to name individuals likely to have knowledge concerning whether or not the anticompetitive activity alleged in the Complaint exists. Rule 26(a)(1)(A) (all persons likely to have knowledge of disputed facts must be revealed). And there can be no doubt that defendants' own training personnel and sales force are among the persons likely to know whether or not defendants have engaged in the various kinds of anticompetitive conduct alleged in Complaint at ¶¶ 23-28.

[7]Defendants claim that their investigation is still ongoing. But this is no excuse for failing to disclose witnesses known to them. Rule 26(a)(1). And defendants cannot credibly suggest that their investigation has so far turned up no third parties likely to have relevant knowledge of either plaintiffs' claims or their own counterclaims and defenses.

III. DEFENDANTS HAVE PRODUCED NO DAMAGES CALCULATION

UST's open hostility to the initial disclosure mechanism is evident again in its attempt to brush off the Rule 26(a)(1)(C) initial damages disclosure requirement as "a meaningless exercise." Def. Opp. 15. In fact, however, Conwood's detailed eleven-page initial damages calculation shows the benefits of such disclosures, providing UST with substantial detailed proprietary information about Conwood's historical prices, profit margins, volumes, market projections, as well as Conwood's initial damages calculations. UST has denied Conwood similar useful -- and legally required -- information.

UST (fleetingly) suggests that it lacks sufficient information on which to base a damages calculation. But the Advisory Committee Notes make clear this is an acceptable excuse for nondisclosure only in extremely limited circumstances where all necessary information is in the hands of another party or person (such as patent infringement cases where the infringer's financials alone will reflect the infringed party's damages). 146 F.R.D. at 632; Pl. Mem. 22. UST nowhere explains what information it lacks for an initial calculation, nor who else is likely to have it. Indeed, as an eighty percent monopolist, UST cannot seriously suggest that it does not have sufficient information to provide at least an initial estimate of damages supposedly inflicted by a rival several times smaller than itself.

IV. THE COURT SHOULD COMPEL PROPER DISCLOSURES AND ENTER AUTOMATIC SANCTIONS

In response to UST's single-box, 25-name, missing-damages-calculation Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures, plaintiffs seek an order compelling a proper set of disclosures pursuant to Rule 37(a)(2)(A). Defendants do not challenge the authority of the Court to enter such an order.

Plaintiffs also seek entry of an order pursuant to Rule 37(c)(1) precluding UST from making use of the information it has improperly withheld. UST does not dispute that this sanction was specifically added in 1993 to deter noncompliance with Rule 26(a)(1). See Pl. Mem. 4; 146 F.R.D. at 691. Instead, UST argues that Rule 37(c)(1) sanctions should be denied because "plaintiffs have not demonstrated any prejudice." Def. Opp. 16. But nothing in Rule 37(c)(1) suggests that movant bears the duty to show harm; indeed, the Rule suggests the opposite. 146 F.R.D. at 691 (sanction "self-executing" unless evidence of harmlessness produced). Defendants' sole effort to suggest harmlessness, however, is its (repeated) suggestion that Rule 26(a)(1) compliance is unimportant because plaintiffs may propound document requests and interrogatories. Def. Opp. 16; but see supra p.2. But if such an argument could suffice, no showing of harm would be possible and Rule 37(c)(1) would be a nullity. Besides, even if plaintiffs bore the burden of proof, they have been harmed in several concrete ways[8] and courts in analogous circumstances have repeatedly authorized Rule 37(c)(1) sanctions.

8 Plaintiffs have no information concerning what defendants' counterclaim damages may be, or how they might be calculated and are unlikely to obtain any through other discovery mechanisms given defendants' claimed inability to calculate its damages. (2) Plaintiffs have no idea which third parties and employees of UST Inc., United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc., or United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc. that defendants are likely to use as witnesses at trial (and, thus, persons whom they may need to depose). (3) Plaintiffs have virtually no information concerning what relevant documents defendants have that would allow plaintiffs to focus appropriate document requests. (4) Defendants have jeopardized the expedited trial schedule set by the Court by refusing to disclose information that was due three months ago.

16diii000625

See Pl. Mem. 4 (citing cases).[9]

Conclusion

Defendants should be ordered to provide proper Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures and precluded from making use of information it has failed to disclose.

Counsel for Plaintiffs

[9]Defendants suggest that Rule 37(c)(1)'s automatic sanction was applied in later stages of litigation in these cases. Def. Opp. 16. In fact, the sanctions were applied when sought, and nothing in either those cases, Rule 37(c)(1), or the Advisory Committee Notes suggests that timing is of any significance. To the contrary, the Advisory Committee Notes state that the sanction is to be "self-executing." 146 F.R.D. at 691 And the stated purpose of the sanction — deterring parties from ignoring their Rule 26(a)(1) duties — would be best served by quick and certain application of Rule 37(c)(1)'s sanctions. See id. (purpose to "provide[] a strong inducement for disclosure")

RE: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

We have received your recent requests for production of documents and interrogatories. While a substantial volume of relevant materials has already been provided to defendants as part of plaintiffs' compliance with their disclosure obligations under Rule 26(a), we are continuing our search for relevant and non-privileged materials and will supplement our production if additional materials are available.

We are still unclear on when defendants will produce their responsive documents. As you know, we propounded document requests and interrogatories on April 22, 1998. Defendants initially did not respond to these requests, apparently because the discovery period had not yet commenced. After discovery officially commenced on July 8, 1998, we expected that defendants would provide the requested materials as part of their compliance with their Rule 26(a) disclosure obligations. But that has not occurred. We still have not received your responses to the pending requests for production and interrogatories even though discovery commenced two months ago and the requests were propounded more than four months ago.

I enclose copies of the pending requests for your convenience. We do not want to engage in unnecessary discovery disputes, so we propose that you now provide written responses to these requests, as well as all responsive and non-privileged documents, at the same time that we respond to the discovery requests you propounded to us last Friday. I suggest that we make this mutual exchange of discovery responses and documents on or before October 2, 1998.

If for some reason this is not acceptable to defendants, please let me know.

Very truly yours,

Mark C. Hansen

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Conwood Company, L.P. and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. ("Conwood") hereby oppose the Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings of defendants United States Tobacco Company, et al. ("UST").

Introduction

UST, an 82 percent monopolist in the moist snuff market, has undertaken a systematic campaign of anticompetitive conduct with the purpose and effect of suppressing competition. UST company policy encourages its representatives to remove and to deface competitors' racks (tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of racks have been lost), to remove their products from distribution racks, to discard or to deface point of sale advertising, to use misrepresentations to exclude products from stores, and to defame these competing products. In addition, UST has used its market power to induce retailers and distributors to restrict or eliminate distribution of competitors' brands, foreclosing a substantial share of the market. These and other UST tactics, including predatory pricing, are textbook examples of what the federal antitrust law prohibits.

Under settled law of this circuit and elsewhere, Conwood has alleged a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. To state a claim for monopolization, Conwood must allege that 1) UST has monopoly power in the relevant market and 2) UST has engaged in improper exclusionary conduct. UST has conceded that it has monopoly power in the market for moist snuff, at least for purposes of this Motion. UST argues only that Conwood's allegations do not amount to exclusionary conduct. But if the UST conduct set forth in the Complaint does not violate section 2, the Sherman Act is a dead letter.

UST can challenge these well-pleaded allegations only by changing them, adding others of their own devising, and asking the Court to draw factual inferences that are not only unfavorable to Conwood but contrary to the allegations of the Complaint:

- Where conduct is alleged to be "routine[] and systematic[]" (Complaint ¶ 24), it cannot be treated as though it occurred "from time to time" (Motion at 12).
- Where UST representatives are alleged to have "acted at either the express direction, or with the tacit approval of" UST (Complaint ¶ 23), the conduct cannot be characterized as "one of its employees . . . say[ing] something bad about Conwood's products or remov[ing] a Conwood product from a display rack" (Motion at 15).
- Where product defamation is alleged to have been "regular[] and systematic[]" (Complaint ¶ 29), it cannot be dismissed as "isolated statements" (Motion at 18).
- Where a monopolist is alleged to have used its market power to induce retailers to enter into exclusive dealing arrangements (Complaint ¶ 28), the agreements cannot be said to be "available to all of the other participants in the alleged market," who lack monopoly power (Motion at 15).

16diii000658

- Where the Complaint alleges that "UST has offered its own products below cost for no economic purpose other than to drive Conwood from those distribution outlets," (Complaint ¶ 30), it cannot be claimed that the allegation is limited to one example of such below-cost pricing pleaded as an illustrative example.

Nowhere in the Complaint does it appear that Conwood employees "crossed the line of rough-and-tumble competition," as UST now claims. Motion at 2. UST may not argue that "it would be a rare occasion if a UST[] employee removed a Conwood product from a UST[] display rack" without a retailer's approval. Id. at 15 n.7. In short, UST may not rewrite the Complaint and then argue for its dismissal -- though this appears to be its favored approach. See Plaintiffs' Opposition to Motion To Dismiss Part of Complaint (filed June 29, 1998).

UST's Motion is simply an attempt to delay progress in this case. The Motion is filed weeks after UST filed its answer and a "Motion To Dismiss [in] Part," which implicitly recognized the merit of Conwood's core antitrust claims.[1] Now, having failed to comply with its obligations under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(a), UST attempts to stall further by filing a Motion that is wholly without merit. Indeed, UST served extensive discovery demands on the same day that it argued that discovery is unnecessary because Conwood's Complaint should be dismissed as a matter of law.

[1]That motion did not challenge any of Conwood's antitrust claims based on market conduct, but instead objected to the inclusion in the Complaint of factual allegations concerning UST's efforts to secure anticompetitive legislation through Global Tobacco Settlement lobbying efforts.

Counterstatement of the Case

UST has a monopoly share of the most snuff market, with over 82 percent of this $1.5 billion market. Complaint ¶ 1. For decades, UST's monopoly position in this market went unchallenged. Id. ¶ 12. Conwood entered the moist snuff market in 1979. Id. ¶ 16. In 1981, Conwood introduced a premium brand that began to win substantial market share from UST's premier brands. Id. ¶ 19. UST's reaction to Conwood's early success was to develop a multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary acts, for execution by its large, nationwide sales force and others. Id. ¶ 23. As a direct result, Conwood's growth was halted. Its share of the moist snuff market has stagnated, id. ¶ 13, and consumers have been damaged by this suppression of competition, id. ¶ 23.

As part of this campaign of exclusionary conduct, UST has "routinely and systematically, in stores across the United States, taken Conwood moist snuff from the racks (to make it inaccessible to consumers), discarded or defaced Conwood distribution racks, and discarded or defaced Conwood point of sale advertising." Id. ¶ 24. The number of racks lost is in the tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands -- "[i]n a recent one year period, for example, more than 10,000 Conwood racks were taken out of stores in California alone." Id. This rack removal was actively encouraged by UST management. Id. In addition, UST has frequently changed rack styles for the purpose of removing Conwood racks and to impose costs on Conwood. Id. ¶ 27.

UST has also used misrepresentation to exclude Conwood products. UST has used faked or fraudulent "plan-o-grams" -- schematic diagrams used by chain retail stores to set the location and display space for competing brands -- to convince low-level store employees to permit UST to exclude Conwood products. Id. ¶ 25. In other cases, UST has claimed authority over a store's entire smokeless tobacco section by falsely representing its sales personnel as "category managers" for smokeless tobacco. Id. ¶ 26. This ruse, made plausible by UST's dominant market position, has permitted UST to make competitors' products unavailable or inaccessible. Id.

UST has also regularly and systematically disparaged Conwood products. Id. ¶ 29. UST has told retailers that Conwood products are stale or discontinued in order to remove them from stores, and that Conwood racks do not "comply" with federal regulations and must be removed. UST also has disparaged the quality of Conwood products orally and in writing. Id. These disparagements have not been isolated incidents, but have been part of UST's systematic campaign of anticompetitive acts. Id.

In addition to this pervasive pattern of misconduct, UST has used its monopoly power to induce retail chains and stores to enter into exclusive dealing arrangments that exclude or restrict Conwood products, racks, point of sale advertising, and point of purchase discounts and promotions. Id. ¶ 28. These arrangements cover thousands of stores, id., and have substantially foreclosed Conwood's access to retail and distribution facilities, id. ¶ 40.

UST has also engaged in predatory pricing, in that it has offered its products below cost in order to drive Conwood products from distribution outlets. Id. ¶ 30. One example of such conduct is UST's pricing of its price-value product, which has been intended to eliminate Conwood's price-value product from the marketplace. Id. ¶ 31. UST will more than recoup its investment in below-cost pricing if its predatory pricing strategy is successful.

Argument

UST's Motion rests on three unpersuasive propositions: that unfair marketplace conduct can never be exclusionary; that a monopolist cannot offend the Sherman Act by inducing distributors and retailers to enter into exclusive dealing arrangements; and that a plaintiff must plead predatory pricing claims with microscopic particularity in order for offending conduct to be cognizable under the antitrust laws. Not one of these arguments has merit.

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"In an antitrust case, . . . 'dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.'" Michaels Bldg. Co. v. Ameritrust Co., 848 F.2d 674, 681 (6th Cir. 1988) (quoting Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738 (1976)). A dismissal on the pleadings is warranted only if "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957); Hamilton Chapter of Alpha Delta Phi, Inc. v. Hamilton College, 128 F.3d 59, 62-63 (2d Cir. 1997) (reversing dismissal of claim under Sherman Act § 2); Kerasotes Michigan Theatres, Inc. v. National Amusements, Inc., 854 F.2d 135, 136 (6th Cir. 1988) (same), cert. dismissed, 490 U.S. 1087 (1989).[2] "In an antitrust action,

[2]As an initial matter, UST's Motion To Dismiss "under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)" is procedurally improper. Having filed its moreover, 'the complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws.'" Kerasotes Michigan Theatres, 854 F.2d at 136 (quoting Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1522 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1059 (1988)). In making that determination, the court "must, of course, take as true the material facts alleged in [Conwood's] complaint." Hospital Building Co., 425 U.S. at 740 (reversing dismissal of antitrust claim); see Lamb v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 915 F.2d 1024, 1025 (6th Cir. 1990) (same), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1086 (1991). Likewise, the court "must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff[s]," Hamilton Chapter, 128 F.3d at 63, and "construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff[s]," In re DeLorean Motor Co., 991 F.2d 1236, 1240 (6th Cir. 1993).

II. CONWOOD HAS ALLEGED A CLAIM UNDER SECTION 2 OF THE SHERMAN ACT

To make out a claim that UST has committed the offense of unlawful monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, Conwood must plead two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from Answer on June 12, 1998, UST has waived its right to file a "Motion to Dismiss" pursuant to Rule 12(b). E.g., Mulhall v. District of Columbia, 747 F. Supp. 15, 18 (D.D.C. 1990) ("Since defendants answered plaintiff's complaint prior to filing their motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, . . . this motion is untimely."), aff'd, 946 F.2d 1565 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (Table); 5A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1361, at 444-45 (2d ed. 1990) ("If defendant decides to assert a Rule 12(b) defense by motion, then he must do so before filing his answer.").

growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71 (1966); see Byars v. Bluff City News Co., 609 F.2d 843, 849 (6th Cir. 1979).

UST concedes for purposes of this Motion that it has monopoly power in the market for moist snuff. See Motion at 3. Therefore, the only question for the Court is whether Conwood's Complaint adequately pleads exclusionary conduct. Conwood need not allege that UST has completely excluded rivals from the market; it is enough that Conwood plead that UST has impaired competition on the merits. See, e.g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585 (1985). "[I]f a monopolist abuses its monopoly power and acts in an unreasonably exclusionary manner vis-a-vis rivals or potential rivals, then § 2 is violated." Byars, 609 F.2d at 853.

Moreover, it is the exclusionary impact of UST's conduct, as pleaded, judged as a whole, not the effect of each individual act of misconduct, that is relevant. See, e.g., Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699 (1962) (anticompetitive conduct must be evaluated "without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each"); Litton Systems, Inc. v. AT&T, 700 F.2d 785, 816 (2d Cir. 1983) (same), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1073 (1984); City of Mishawaka v. American Elec. Power Co., 616 F.2d 976, 986 (7th Cir. 1980) ("It is the mix of the various ingredients . . . in a monopoly broth that produces the unsavory flavor."), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1096 (1981).

UST ignores the cumulative effect of the anticompetitive activity alleged in the Complaint and instead seeks to obscure these effects by "tightly compartmentalizing" each allegation. But the cumulative effect of the alleged conduct is far more severe than the effect of any one category of anticompetitive conduct standing alone. For example, UST's persistent removal and destruction of Conwood's display racks is far more damaging when UST has entirely excluded Conwood racks from substantial numbers of retail outlets by inducing retailers to enter into exclusive rack agreements. Likewise, such exclusive rack arrangements greatly exacerbate the impact of UST sales personnel's efforts to pass themselves off as "category managers" and to present false "plan-o-grams" that reduce the amount of shelf space allocated to UST's competitors. Combined with these other tactics intended to raise its rivals' costs, UST's predatory pricing is similarly more damaging than it would be standing alone.

Established authority teaches that each type of UST's misconduct, as pleaded, itself violates the antitrust laws. But the question for this Court is not whether each allegation of anticompetitive activity, taken alone, states a claim. Rather, the Court must decide whether the alleged conduct, taken in its entirety, and with all inferences drawn in plaintiffs' favor, may have been intended to "exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency." Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S. at 605 (internal quotation marks omitted). Conwood's Complaint far exceeds this standard.

A. UST's Campaign of Misconduct Violates the Antitrust Laws

UST dismisses Conwood's allegations of pervasive anti-competitive conduct as "age-old common law business torts." Motion at 15. To be sure, much of UST's conduct has, in fact, been tortious. See generally Complaint Counts III-VIII. But for purposes of Conwood's Complaint under section 2 of the Sherman Act, the question is not whether UST has violated other common law rules. Rather, the question is whether the behavior, as pleaded, can be said to "anticompetitively create or sustain a monopoly." 3 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 651d, at 80 (1996). Conwood has alleged that UST's conduct constitutes "intentional and unlawful maintenance of monopoly power in the relevant market for moist snuff" or "[i]n the alternative . . . an attempt to monopolize this market in violation of section 2." Complaint ¶¶ 42, 43. The anticompetitive effects of such conduct include "reduction or elimination of consumer choice[,] . . . foreclosure of [competitors'] access to retail and distribution facilities[,] . . . increased barriers to entry[,] . . . chilling innovation[,] . . . loss of competition among manufacturers for retail and distribution outlets[,] . . . [and] loss of outlets for sale of tobacco by growers." Id. ¶ 40. These are precisely the types of anticompetitive effects that lie at the core of the antitrust law's concern.

Controlling precedent from this circuit establishes that this conduct violates section 2. In Byars, the plaintiff alleged "predatory conduct" by the defendant including:

> 1) removal of plaintiff's periodicals from sales racks at various retail outlets; 2) covering up of plaintiff's > periodicals on the racks to put them out of the view of prospective buyers; 3) below cost pricing of those few periodicals being distributed by the plaintiff; 4) disparagement of the plaintiff, his financial condition, and the periodicals he was able to obtain; 5) surreptitious addition of its own periodicals identical to those placed on racks by plaintiff in order to increase plaintiff's return and diminish plaintiff's profits; 6) intimidation of plaintiff's customers to purchase periodicals solely from defendant; 7) threats to the regional representative of an independent news company with reprisals if he assisted plaintiff in the direct purchase of periodicals from independents.

609 F.2d at 854 n.30. The district court had found for the defendant on the plaintiff's section 2 claim, and the court of appeals reversed. The court of appeals directed the district court, on remand, to "carefully examine the alleged 'dirty tricks.'" Id. at 863. "Predatory conduct on [the defendant's] part would go a long way toward establishing a § 2 violation." Id.[3]

Each of the allegations in the Byars case has its counterpart in the Complaint. "UST has routinely and systematically, in stores across the United States, taken Conwood moist snuff from the racks (to make it inaccessible to consumers)." Complaint ¶ 24. "When retailers and distributors have persisted in carrying Conwood products, UST has offered its own products below cost for no economic purpose other than to drive Conwood from those distribution outlets." Id. ¶ 30. "UST has regularly and systematically spread disparaging falsehoods about Conwoood's products." Id. ¶ 29. UST has "routinely replace[d] its racks with racks of a different style and shape. UST then discards Conwood's

[3]On remand, the plaintiff failed to prove the alleged conduct; on subsequent appeal, the Sixth Circuit -- reiterating that the evidence of "predatory 'dirty tricks'" could support the plaintiff's claims, affirmed the evidentiary conclusions of the district court. Byars v. Bluff City News Co., 683 F.2d 981 (6th Cir. 1982).

16diii000667

racks, . . . impos[ing] costs on Conwood." Id. ¶ 27. Conwood has "used its power as a monopolist to induce retail chains and stores across the United States to enter into . . . agreements barring or restricting Conwood products, racks and point of sale advertising." Id. ¶ 28. And Conwood's Complaint goes further, alleging that UST has used false plan-o-grams to exclude Conwood products from stores, and that UST sales personnel have falsely held themselves out as "category managers" with authority to remove Conwood products or relegate them to undesirable display locations. Id. ¶¶ 25, 26.

1. UST's Efforts To "Control the Moist Racks," Even Without More, Violate Section 2

Cases from other courts confirm that even conduct far less pervasive and severe in its anticompetitive effects than UST's can run afoul of the antitrust law when it helps to sustain a monopoly. In Sara Lee Corp. v. Kayser-Roth Corp., Civ. No. 6:92CV00460, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6554 (M.D.N.C. Apr. 10, 1995), the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had "induced many stores to display all or nearly all pantyhose that the stores sell in displays furnished by" the defendant. Id. at *6. The defendant "promote[d] [its racks] as a replacement for all hosiery racks then in use by a store, including racks furnished by [the plaintiffs]. . . . This arrangement cause[d] [the defendant] to become the sole supplier of permanent displays for [the plaintiff's] pantyhose in those stores." Id. The plaintiff further alleged that this arrangement had the effect of > degrad[ing] the presentation of [the plaintiff's] pantyhose; impos[ing] unnecessary rack and rack maintenance costs on [the plaintiff]; mak[ing] it impossible for [the plaintiff] to introduce new pantyhose products or to increase its space allocations without [the defendant's] advance knowledge; imped[ing] the introduction of new pantyhose products; and mak[ing] [the plaintiff] vulnerable to a product displacement scheme.

Id. at *9. Held: The plaintiff had stated a claim under both section 1[4] and 2 of the Sherman Act. Because the plaintiff had alleged that the defendant had induced retailers to accept displays that "provide[d] poor presentation" for the plaintiff's products "to increase [the plaintiff's] costs," the plaintiff had alleged that the defendant was "attempting to exclude rivals on . . . bases other than efficiency." Id. at *28 (internal quotation marks omitted). "These allegations sufficiently meet [the plaintiff's] pleading requirements." Id.

UST's exclusionary conduct is considerably more malignant than the conduct alleged in Sara Lee. To be sure, among the anticompetitive tactics employed by UST are exclusive rack agreements that "force Conwood's products into UST racks[] and restrict the space and placement of Conwood products in its racks." Complaint ¶ 28a. Many of these agreements relegate UST's competitors to "lower, less visible racks." Id. ¶ 28c. And UST also prevents Conwood from employing point of sale advertising or engaging in competitive price promotions at the point of sale. Id. ¶¶ 28a, 28b. But, even worse, UST has engaged in outright destruction and removal of Conwood racks -- simply to "impose costs" on its competitor. Id. ¶ 27. Moreover, this conduct was undertaken in the context of a multitude of other anticompetitive

[4]A monopolist violates section 2 if the monopolist has "maintained his strategic position, or sought to expand his monopoly, or expanded it by means of those restraints of trade which are cognizable under [Sherman Act] § 1." United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 106 (1948).

16diii000669

acts and restrictive agreements, conduct which compounds the effects of UST's express policy of "control[ling] the moist racks." Id. ¶ 24. Conwood's well-pleaded allegations go far beyond the fully sufficient claims of the plaintiff in Sara Lee.

2. UST's Campaign of Misrepresentations, Even Without More, Violates Section 2

Likewise, Conwood's allegations that UST has misrepresented both store plan-o-grams and UST's authority over the moist snuff product category similarly state a claim for monopolization, even standing alone. In National Association of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers, Inc. v. Ayerst Laboratories, 850 F.2d 904 (2d Cir. 1988), the defendant sent a letter to pharmacists in California warning of "possible liability associated with dispensing a generic drug for an indication not included in its labeling." Id. at 908. The plaintiff alleged that the letter constituted an effort to monopolize the sale of a certain drug. The district court dismissed the claim on the grounds that "one letter sent in the context of an ongoing debate . . . is insufficient to violate the antitrust laws." Id. at 916.

The court of appeals reversed, holding that the plaintiff "should be allowed to go forward with the discovery process to substantiate its claim" that the letter in question was false, misleading, and likely to induce reasonable reliance. Id. Here, Conwood has alleged that UST has "repeated[ly]" employed plan-o-grams that "exclude Conwood products from stores, contrary to the actual wishes of store management." Complaint ¶ 25. Likewise, UST personnel have > falsely represented to low-level store employees that its representatives are the store's authorized "category > manager" for smokeless tobacco products . . . . Under color of this supposed authority, which in fact UST does not have, UST routinely arranges the smokeless tobacco products in a way that makes competitors' products unavailable or inaccessible. UST's dominant position in the market help[s] to make UST's claim of authority plausible.

Id. ¶ 26. As a result of UST's "large nationwide sales force," id. ¶ 23, and the high visibility of its brands, no competitor can neutralize UST's tactics without incurring overwhelming expense.[5]

Davis v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 70,510, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13257 (S.D. Fla. 1994), provides further support. The defendant was alleged to have distributed misleading inserts with its bills regarding the costs and benefits of an inside wiring maintenance plan. The court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment:

> Plaintiffs' theory of antitrust injury is that [the defendant's] coercive and deceptive sales techniques required potential competitors to engage in corrective advertising. Plaintiffs allege that the need for corrective advertising deterred potential competitors from entering the market . . . because of the high cost associated with such advertising and the low rate at which those costs could be recouped. The adequacy of Plaintiffs' theory turns on the adequacy of the evidence supporting this allegation.

Id. at *42. Here, too, the anticompetitive effects of UST's conduct must be resolved at trial.

[5]It is sometimes said that, for any "false and misleading advertising [to] constitut[e] exclusionary conduct, the disparagement must overcome a presumption that the effect on competition . . . [is] de minimis." American Prof'l Testing Serv., Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Prof'l Publications, Inc., 108 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 1997). To overcome this presumption, plaintiffs must show, as they have have alleged, that the representations were false, material, likely to induce reliance, made to unknowledgeable buyers, continued for prolonged periods, and not readily susceptible of offset by rivals. Id.; Complaint ¶¶ 25,26. All these are issues of fact.

3. UST's Disparagement of Conwood Products, Even Without More, Violates Section 2

Product disparagement such as Conwood has alleged can also, by itself, satisfy the exclusionary conduct element of a section 2 claim. In International Travel Arrangers, Inc. v. Western Airlines, Inc., 623 F.2d 1255 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1063 (1980), the court affirmed a judgment against the defendant on the ground that the defendant had engaged in a campaign of publicity against the plaintiff that was intended to prevent the plaintiff "from becoming a competitive threat" to the defendant. Id. at 1268. "[T]he means by which [the defendant] sought to achieve this end was not fair competition, but rather an organized full frontal attack which (1) used false, misleading and deceptive advertising and (2) was directed at" end-users and distributors. Id. "[I]t was not reasonable for a monopolist . . . to use the means described above with the purpose of preventing any effective competition" from the plaintiff. Id. See also Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores, Inc., 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 70,226, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3947, at *4 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (allegations that defendant "engage[d] in a pattern of misrepresentation and coercion in order to devalue and destroy" competitor supported claims under sections 1 and 2).

4. UST's Arguments to the Contrary Are Without Merit

Conwood's allegations are not limited to any single category of illegal conduct, for UST has "developed a multi-faceted strategy of exclusionary acts for execution by its large nationwide sales force." Complaint ¶ 23. It is hard to imagine a more widespread, persistent, and determined campaign of anticompetitive conduct than that alleged in the Complaint.

None of the cases that UST cites supports its contention that marketplace misconduct by a monopolist cannot constitute the exclusionary conduct prohibited by section 2. In Merkle Press Inc. v. Merkle, 519 F. Supp. 50 (D. Md. 1981), the court rejected the plaintiff's claims because the alleged acts had increased, not decreased, competition. The plaintiff had both "fail[ed] to allege the market power of defendants' enterprise" and failed to allege that "the predator constituted a significant factor in the particular product market." Id. at 54. These holdings have no application here, for UST has conceded for the purpose of this Motion that it has market power in a properly defined market.[6]

Finally, UST cites two district court cases that dismissed claims based in one case on "vague allegations of disparagement" RE/MAX Int'l v. Realty One, Inc., 900 F. Supp. 132, 159 (N.D. Ohio 1995), and in the other on unspecified "defamatory comments,"

[6]Defendants also purport to rely on an unpublished decision, L.B. Cleveland, Inc. v. Bluestone, 1987-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 67,624, 1987 U.S. App. LEXIS 7868 (6th Cir. 1987) (820 F.2d 1225 (Table)), though sixth circuit rules state that "citation of unpublished decisions . . . is disfavored." Sixth Cir. R. 24(c). In all events, the case is not on point. The court did not find that the alleged conduct was legal under the antitrust laws because it was a business tort. Cf. Motion at 16. Rather, the court found that the plaintiffs had failed to plead any conduct that "threatens 'competition' in the market place as opposed to one competitor." L.B. Cleveland, 1987 U.S. App. LEXIS 7868, at *2. The plaintiff's allegation of misconduct was limited to one case of misuse of confidential trade information -- nothing like the systematic campaign alleged in the Complaint. Moreover, the defendants there were attempting to enter the market in order to compete with plaintiffs. See id. at *4. Thus the alleged effect of the defendants' actions was only to threaten a competitor's monopoly on a certain industrial process, not to threaten competition.

Broyles v. Wilson, 812 F. Supp. 651, 655 (M.D. La.), aff'd, 3 F.3d 439 (5th Cir. 1993) (Table). These cases do not stand for the proposition that disparagement can never contribute to a claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act, and any such suggestion would be contrary to the explicit holding of Byars, as well as to the decisions of the courts of appeals in National Association of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers and International Travel Arrangers. Where, as here, such disparagement is simply one ingredient in a particularly unsavory "monopoly broth," City of Mishawaka, 616 F.2d at 986, plaintiffs have stated a claim under the Sherman Act.

B. UST's Exclusive Dealing Contracts Violate the Antitrust Laws

The law condemns the impairment of competition on the merits, even if that impairment does not constitute complete exclusion of a rival or total foreclosure of its opportunities. Conwood need not allege that every possible avenue of distribution has been effectively foreclosed. See, e.g., Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585 (1985) (claim stated where defendant merely impeded competitor's ability to market its product). Rather, the exclusionary provisions of UST's agreements with retailers are unlawful if, on balance, they impair competition and unreasonably restrain trade. See, e.g., Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-28 (1961). Such arrangements run afoul of the antitrust laws if they restrict rivals' output more than they further UST's legitimate objectives. National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691 (1978); American Ad Management, Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 791 (9th Cir. 1996).

Such an inquiry is practical and fact-based, and it "focuses directly on the challenged restraint's impact on competitive conditions." National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 688. For this reason, judgment on the pleadings is improper. Conwood must be given the opportunity to prove what it has pleaded: that the alleged exclusive agreements had an exclusionary effect and were not reasonably necessary to a legitimate business objective. See Sullivan v. National Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1103 (1st Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1190 (1995).

UST's conduct places this case at the heart of current private and public efforts to protect consumers from the pernicious effects of monopoly. As with other comparable enforcement efforts, Conwood's allegations cannot be summarily decided on the pleadings. See PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., No. 98 Civ. 3282 (LAP), 1998 WL 547088, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 1998) (copy attached) (allegation regarding exclusive dealing arrangements "states a section 2 claim"; motion to dismiss denied); United States v. Microsoft, Nos. Civ. A. 98-1232 & 98-1233 (TPJ), 1998 WL 614485, at *19-*20 (D.D.C. Sept. 14, 1998) (copy attached) (denial of summary judgment on monopolization claim based on exclusive dealing arrangements); 3 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 651c, at 78 (conduct that "reasonably appear[s] capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining monopoly power" violates section 2).

UST fails to address these core legal principles. It does not cite a single case in which allegations of exclusive dealing were dismissed on the pleadings. The absence of even a single holding in support of UST's pleading challenge confirms that the argument is without foundation.

UST cites two cases that purportedly support its motion; neither is on point. Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 833 (1984), was decided on summary judgment -- not on the pleadings -- and did not involve allegations at all comparable to the allegations in Conwood's Complaint. In that case, the plaintiff alleged that the defendants had provided coolers and vending machines to retailers on the condition that the plaintiff's products not be stocked in those machines. Id. at 304. The plaintiff did not allege that its own coolers or products were excluded from retail outlets. Here, by contrast, Conwood has alleged that UST has induced retailers to take only UST racks and to place Conwood products in those racks exclusively. This excludes many Conwood products from stores entirely and caps Conwood's market share, restricts its promotional efforts -- including discounting -- and impairs the presentation of Conwood's products. See Complaint ¶ 28. By inducing retailers to accept exclusive UST racks, UST effectively gains control of 100 percent of the shelf space dedicated to moist snuff in thousands of retail outlets. Moreover, the restrictions imposed on Conwood's point-of-sale promotional efforts take on particular significance in the moist snuff market, where alternative methods of marketing and promotion are not available. See Comprehensive Smokeless Tobacco Health Education Act of 1986, Pub. L. No. 99-252, 100 Stat. 30.

Finally, UST cites a district court case, Beverage Management, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Bottling Corp., 653 F. Supp. 1144 (S.D. Ohio 1986), in which, after an evidentiary hearing, the district court found that the plaintiff was unlikely to prevail on a claim that an agreement between a soft-drink manufacturer and a retailer constituted an exclusive dealing arrangement. Contrary to UST's suggestion, the court simply did not find that the plaintiff's claim failed as a matter of law, but rather as a matter of fact. Thus, the district court implicitly accepted the proposition that "foreclos[ure] from 14 percent of the relevant market for national brand soft drinks" would violate the antitrust laws. Id. at 1153-54. However, the court found that the agreements in question -- the factual details of which were already before the court -- were not "equivalent to a requirements contract or an exclusive dealing contract," id. at 1154; the court also held that the plaintiff's market definition would "likely prove untenable," id. Where, as here, the details of UST's exclusive dealing arrangements must await discovery and where the defendants do not contest the definition of the alleged market, the cited case has no application.

UST's legal argument is thus without support; nor can it be bolstered with UST's unsworn assertions that it has no exclusive dealing agreements -- contrary to the allegations in the Complaint -- or that its agreements are merely "ordinary marketing methods." Motion at 12, 15. This characterization of the Complaint is wrong on its face and particularly untenable in the context of a motion to dismiss, where all factual inferences must be drawn in favor of the plaintiff. Hamilton Chapter, 128 F.3d at 63; In re DeLorean, 991 F.2d at 1240. Conwood specifically alleges that UST was able to secure, and did in fact secure, exclusive agreements with retailers across the country by "us[ing] its power as a monopolist." Complaint ¶ 28. These are, in other words, opportunities that only a monopolist may pursue. When a monopolist does so, it breaks the law.

C. Conwood Properly Alleges Predatory Pricing

To establish a claim that UST has engaged in predatory pricing in violation of the Sherman Act, Conwood must allege that UST has set prices below cost, and that there is a dangerous probability that UST will be able to recoup its investment in below-cost prices. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222-24 (1993); Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 117, 119 n.15 (1986). Conwood's Complaint does so. It alleges that "UST has offered its own products below cost for no economic purpose other than to drive Conwood from" distribution outlets. Complaint ¶ 30. Conwood illustrates that such a strategy is likely to permit UST to recoup its investment: for example, if UST succeeds in driving Cougar from the market, UST will be able to "return to premium pricing for all its products," which will permit UST to recoup "more than . . . any losses it sustains" from its predatory pricing strategy. Id. ¶ 31. At this stage, Conwood need plead nothing more to make out a claim of predatory pricing.

UST fails to cite a case disposing of a predatory pricing claim on the pleadings. Instead, UST argues the facts -- and the facts it argues are of its own invention.[7] It claims that the [7]UST's argument appears to be based on the notion that predatory pricing claims must be pleaded with particularity as though they were allegations of fraud. Cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). But "the test for the sufficiency of a complaint in an antitrust action is more liberal that the test for claims of fraud under Rule 9(b), and is guided by the 'short, plain and concise' language in Rule 8." Michaels Bldg. Co., 848 F.2d at 681. "The liberal rules specific allegations concerning pricing of Red Seal are the sole basis for Conwood's Complaint. See Motion at 6. Not so. Conwood alleges that "UST has offered its own products below cost." Complaint ¶ 30 (emphasis added). One example of this is its pricing of "its . . . discount product." Id. ¶ 31. Inclusion of an illustrative example of predatory conduct strengthens but does not limit Conwood's claims. See 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1218, at 183 (2d ed. 1990); Sinaiko Bros. Coal & Oil Co. v. Ethyl Gasoline Corp., 2 F.R.D. 305, 306 (S.D.N.Y. 1942) (inclusion of evidentiary matter "appears to give a fuller understanding of the complaint").

Thus, to the extent that UST's Motion is based on the proposition that "[p]laintiffs' predatory pricing allegations . . . include only [UST's] Red Seal price-value brand" (Motion at 8-9), UST's Motion must fail, for Conwood's allegations go further. UST's claim that "[p]laintiffs do not . . . allege any below-cost pricing of any kind with respect to any other UST[] moist snuff product" ignores the plain language of paragraph 30 of the Complaint.

Even if Conwood's allegations were limited to the price-value category, these allegations could not be dismissed. Contrary to UST's suggestion, a multi-product company can be guilty of predatory pricing if its below-cost pricing of a single product of pleading embodied in Fed.R.Civ.P. 8 are as applicable to claims in antitrust . . . as they are in any other case. All that is required is a short, plain statement of facts sufficient to give the defendant fair notice of the basis of the claim." Baxley-Delamar Monuments, Inc. v. American Cemetery Ass'n, 843 F.2d 1154, 1156 (8th Cir. 1988) (quoting Fusco v. Xerox Corp., 676 F.2d 332, 337 n.7 (8th Cir. 1982)).

injures competition. See, e.g., Marsann Co. v. Brammall, Inc., 788 F.2d 611, 614 & n.2 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that services performed for a single customer could form the basis of a predatory pricing claim); C.E. Servs., Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241, 1247-48 (5th Cir.) (same), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1037 (1985). In Brooke Group Ltd., the Supreme Court held that the defendant's below-cost pricing in the generic segment of the cigarette market failed to support a predatory pricing claim only because "[n]o inference of recoupment is sustainable on this record." 509 U.S. at 232. Here, were Conwood to limit its allegations to the price-value sector -- which it has not -- the Court would nonetheless be required to permit Conwood to show that UST, as a monopolist, has a dangerous probability of recoupment if competitors' price-value brands are driven from the market or if, "to avoid further losses, [competitors] would raise [their] list prices on [price-value brands] or acquiesce in price leadership by [UST]." Id. at 231 (explaining theory of plaintiff's case).

UST's other asserted grounds for dismissal are similarly unfounded. For example, UST claims that Conwood has not alleged anything more than "a promotional offering of the Red Seal brand." Motion at 9. But, in making this argument, UST asks the Court not merely to infer -- contrary to the language of the Complaint -- that Red Seal is the only product that UST prices below cost, but also that the duration of this below-cost pricing has been too brief to support a claim. Id. at 9-10. There is no basis for drawing such an inference against the plaintiffs. Finally, UST also makes the flatly false assertion that "[p]laintiffs cannot . . . plead anticompetitive harm to the alleged relevant market."

Id. at 11. Plaintiffs have pleaded just that. Complaint ¶¶ 30-31, 40, 45. And again, this is a quintessential question of fact precluding dismissal, as UST's own citations attest. Motion at 11.

III. CONWOOD HAS ALLEGED A CLAIM UNDER THE LANHAM ACT

UST cannot argue that Conwood has failed to plead a Lanham Act claim, because UST's counterclaim mimics Conwood's claim virtually word for word. See Defendants' Answer, Affirmative Defenses, and Counterclaims at 13 (filed June 12, 1998). Instead, UST argues that its false statements to customers cannot qualify as "commercial advertising," because the behavior does not involve sufficient dissemination to the public. This argument is wrong.

The Lanham Act prohibits misrepresentations about another person's products made "in commercial advertising or promotion." 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B) (emphasis added).

> "In order for representations to constitute 'commercial advertising or promotion' under Section 43(a)(1)(B), they must be: (1) commercial speech; (2) by a defendant who is in commercial competition with plaintiff; (3) for the purpose of influencing consumers to buy defendant's goods or services. . . . [In addition,] the representations (4) must be disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute 'advertising' or 'promotion' within that industry."

Seven-Up Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 86 F.3d 1379, 1384 (5th Cir. 1996) (quoting Gordon & Breach Science Publishers S.A. v. American Inst. of Physics, 859 F. Supp. 1521, 1535-36 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). The Complaint alleges all four elements of the claim. UST does not and cannot contest that the representations of its salesmen constitute commercial speech. UST does not and cannot contest that it is in competition with Conwood. UST does not and cannot contest that its representations were made with the intent of inducing retailers to stock, and consumers to buy, UST's products rather than Conwood's products.

UST's only challenge to Conwood's claim is that Conwood has alleged only "isolated statements to consumers." Motion at 19. This argument, however, ignores the language of the Complaint, which states:

> UST has regularly and systematically spread disparaging falsehoods about Conwood's products. [Listing examples.] These disparagements are not isolated instances, but form part of the overall UST campaign to drive Conwood moist snuff products from store shelves.

Complaint ¶ 29. UST's response to these allegations is to deny their truth and to suggest that the Court should dismiss this well-pleaded Complaint on the basis of UST's bare denial. But whether UST's statements were or were not "isolated instances" is a question of fact, one that cannot be resolved on these pleadings. See, e.g., Seven-Up Co., 86 F.3d at 1386 (sales presentation not "merely isolated, individual statements of opinion by a single sales representative to a single customer" was commercial advertising for purposes of Lanham Act); H & R Indus., Inc. v. Kirshner, 899 F. Supp. 995, 1005-06 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) (statements made by defendant that competitor was engaging in improper commercial practices held to raise fact issues for jury on trade disparagement claim under Lanham Act); National Artists Management Co. v. Weaving, 769 F. Supp. 1224, 1229 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (allegation that defendants had made phone calls and statements to plaintiffs' clients stated claim for commercial disparagement under Lanham Act); Gordon & Breach Science Publishers S.A. v. American Inst. of Physics, 859 F. Supp. 1521 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (allegations of deceptive promotional efforts stated claim under Lanham Act).

IV. CONWOOD'S STATE LAW CLAIMS ARE UNCHALLENGED ON THE MERITS

UST does not argue that Conwood has failed to make out its state law claims. To the contrary, it virtually admits their validity. Motion at 17. Because UST's challenges to Conwood's claims under the Sherman Act and under the Lanham Act are without merit, its argument that pendent state law claims should be dismissed likewise should fail.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should deny UST's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings in its entirety.

OPINION AND ORDER

PRESKA, District J.

*1 Plaintiff PepsiCo, Inc. ("PepsiCo") has sued defendant The Coca-Cola Company, Inc. ("Coca-Cola"), alleging that Coca-Cola has violated section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by monopolizing and attempting to monopolize a segment of the fountain-dispensed soft drink industry. Coca-Cola moves to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). For the reasons that follow, Coca-Cola's motion is denied.

BACKGROUND

The facts alleged in the complaint are as follows. PepsiCo complains of Coca- Cola's behavior in a market described as "sales of fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors throughout the United States." Complaint ¶ 9. This market allegedly consists of "an increasing number of restaurant chains, movie theater chains and other 'on-premise' accounts" that purchase "most of their supplies, including fountain soft drink products, through foodservice distributors." Id. ¶ 7.

Foodservice distributors are "independent companies that distribute a broad variety of food products, paper products and other supplies, including fountain-dispensed soft drinks, in consolidated deliveries to restaurant chains, movie theater chains and other customers." Id. ¶ 2. These distributors carry thousands of items and supply all of a customer's needs at once, using consolidated single-truck deliveries and consolidated bookkeeping. Id. ¶ 8.

Because foodservice distributors offer a form of one-stop shopping, their customers take delivery of all of the customer's supplies from only one distributor at each of the customer's locations. Id. ¶ 2. Foodservice distributors' customers "generally make it a practice not to purchase these supplies through any other means." Id. Furthermore, for "logistical and economic reasons, these accounts make it a practice to have only a single foodservice distributor supply any given outlet, and it is common for a single foodservice distributor to supply either an entire chain or groups of outlets within a chain." Id. As a result, "for each location in each such chain there is only one foodservice distributor through which a supplier" can have its product distributed. Id. ¶ 7.

According to PepsiCo, the accounts in question have no viable alternatives to fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors. As an initial matter, soft drinks sold in bottles and cans are not adequate substitutes for fountain products. Indeed, virtually all of the soft drink volume of these accounts is in fountain-dispensed products (which provide considerably greater profits than drinks sold in bottles and cans), and the cost of switching a fountain business to bottles and cans would be prohibitive. Id. ¶ 8.

Other modes of delivery also fail to present an adequate alternative to distribution through foodservice distributors. According to PepsiCo, "customers of foodservice distributors generally refuse to be supplied by any other means once they have begun receiving supplies through such distributors, because changing from their established distribution and accounting practices to other methods of distribution, or even switching distributors, would cause them to incur severely adverse economic and logistical consequences." Id. As described in the complaint, the distribution "superhighway" formed by the growth of independent foodservice distributors has become "the lifeblood of competitive efficiency in the restaurant business, movie theater business and other businesses that depend upon delivery through foodservice distributors in order to remain logistically efficient." Id.

*2 PepsiCo alleges that Coca-Cola "dominates" the market described above, see Complaint ¶¶ 9, 33, 36, and that "virtually every major foodservice distributor in America today" has an agreement with Coca-Cola to distribute Coca-Cola fountain products. Id. ¶ 16. Coca-Cola is alleged to control over 90% of that market and to possess the power to control prices and exclude competition in the market. Id. ¶ 9.

PepsiCo alleges that the parties' past business practices explain Coca-Cola's dominance in, and PepsiCo's absence from, this market. Although PepsiCo itself markets fountain-dispensed soft drinks, for two reasons "it historically has been less successful than Coca-Cola in penetrating the relevant market." Id. ¶ 10. First, the fountain products that PepsiCo sold to its "on-premise" accounts were distributed exclusively through PepsiCo local bottlers, while Coca-Cola's sales were made through various types of national, regional and local fountain distributors. Id. ¶ 11. As a result, when foodservice distributors "began to take over" distribution of supplies to restaurant chains, movie theater chains and other "on-premise" accounts, Coca-Cola was able to designate the foodservice distributors as Coca-Cola fountain distributors as well, "thereby facilitating sales to the growing number of customers that had begun to receive their supplies only through such distributors." Id. ¶ 11. In contrast, PepsiCo's arrangements with its local bottlers prevented it from selling its products through foodservice distributors, and PepsiCo lost the opportunity to capitalize on the emergence of foodservice distribution. Id. ¶ 11.

PepsiCo attributes its disadvantage as well to its acquisition in the 1970's and 1980's of restaurant chains which featured PepsiCo products. Coca-Cola capitalized on PepsiCo's restaurant ownership by "convincing other restaurant chains that PepsiCo had become their competitor and therefore they should spurn Pepsi and support Coke." Id.

In 1997, PepsiCo changed its business strategy. It negotiated new arrangements with its bottlers, thereby allowing it to distribute fountain-dispensed soft drinks through foodservice distributors rather than local bottlers. PepsiCo also divested itself of its restaurant chains "so that it could no longer be portrayed as a competitor of the other chains." Id. ¶ 13. As a result of these moves, PepsiCo "emerged in 1997 as a significantly more potent competitive threat to Coca-Cola's dominance" in the alleged market. Id. ¶ 14. Rid of its self-imposed constraints, PepsiCo increased its efforts to sell and market its fountain products; to this end, PepsiCo approached restaurant chains, movie theater chains and other customers with "highly competitive proposals, offering to sell to them through foodservice distributors for less money than Coca-Cola." See id.

According to the complaint, Coca-Cola viewed PepsiCo's emergence as a threat to Coca-Cola's market dominance. Coca-Cola thus embarked on a "strategy to use its market power to perpetuate its monopoly by threatening foodservice distributors with the loss of Coke if they dare to carry Pepsi for their customers who want Pepsi, and by cutting off any distributors that decide to carry Pepsi anyway, making examples of them." Id. ¶ 15. PepsiCo maintains that Coca-Cola's strategy "threatens to freeze PepsiCo out of the market and leave customers that require delivery through foodservice distributors with no alternative to Coke." Id.

*3 According to the complaint, to carry out its strategy Coca-Cola relied on the terms of its contracts with foodservice distributors. Those contracts allegedly contain an express condition prohibiting the distributor from handling PepsiCo soft drink products. Id. ¶ 17. While those agreements historically contained such a condition, Coca-Cola rarely enforced it and even had acquiesced when some foodservice distributors refused to agree to the provision. Id. As soon as PepsiCo "became a serious competitive threat," however, Coca-Cola began to enforce the condition actively. Id. ¶ 20. Coca- Cola allegedly cut off foodservice distributors that began to distribute PepsiCo products and threatened to cut off those that showed an interest in carrying PepsiCo products. Id. ¶¶ 20-26.

PepsiCo maintains that Coca-Cola's tactics lock foodservice distributors into Coca-Cola, depriving those distributors of the ability to distribute competing brands to their customers. In particular, because of Coca-Cola's > huge share of the relevant market, its particular dominance of fountain- dispensed cola (which restaurants, theaters and other accounts must have), and the fact that foodservice distributors must carry Coke products in order to fill orders from their other customers who sell Coke, such a threat is overwhelmingly powerful and coercive, and reflects Coca-Cola's single-minded determination to hold on to its monopoly.

Id. ¶ 25. As a consequence, restaurant chains, theater chains and other customers of foodservice distributors "remain locked into Coca-Cola as their supplier without the real ability to entertain a competitive bid from PepsiCo." Id. ¶ 11. Because their distributors will only deliver Coca-Cola products, establishments that wish to serve PepsiCo products are forced to remain with Coca-Cola products and are prevented from putting their requirements out for fair and open competitive bids. Id. ¶ 27. This absence of price competition is alleged to affect the consumers who are customers of these establishments and deprives PepsiCo of opportunities to compete on the merits for the business of the customers that require delivery through foodservice distributors. Id. ¶¶ 27-28.

DISCUSSION

Coca-Cola moves to dismiss, under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6), on the ground that PepsiCo's complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. "A dismissal is warranted under Rule 12(b)(6) only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Hamilton Chapter of Alpha Delta Phi, Inc. v. Hamilton College, 128 F.3d 59, 62-63 (2d Cir.1997). Under this standard, the question is not "whether a plaintiff will or might ultimately prevail on [its] claim, but whether [it] is entitled to offer evidence in support of the allegations in the complaint." Id. at 62. As explained by the Supreme Court, and recently reiterated by the Court of Appeals, "it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974) (quoted in Hamilton College, 128 F.3d at 62). To this end, I must "accept as true all the factual allegations in the complaint and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff." Hamilton College, 128 F.3d at 63 (citing Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 740, 96 S.Ct. 1848, 1850, 48 L.Ed.2d 338 (1976)). This "generous approach to pleading applies in the antitrust context," and courts should recall that "where the proof of the alleged antitrust violation is largely in the hands of the defendants, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff an opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly." Id.

I. SECTION 2 OF THE SHERMAN ACT

4 PepsiCo alleges that Coca-Cola is guilty of actual or attempted unlawful monopolization of the relevant market in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a monopolization claim under section 2, a plaintiff must establish "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L.Ed.2d 778 (1966); Clorox Co. v. Sterling Winthrop, Inc., 117 F.3d 50, 61 (2d Cir.1997). To state an attempted monopolization claim, a plaintiff must establish "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S.Ct. 884, 890, 122 L.Ed.2d 247 (1993); Tops Markets, Inc. v. Quality Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 99-100 (2d Cir.1998).

According to Coca-Cola, PepsiCo's complaint must be dismissed because it fails, as a matter of law, to allege either (1) a valid relevant market or (2) prohibited anticompetitive conduct. These contentions are discussed in turn below.

II. FAILURE TO ALLEGE A VALID RELEVANT MARKET

It is "a basic principle in the law of monopolization that the first step in a court's analysis must be a definition of the relevant markets." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 268 (2d Cir.1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 100 S.Ct. 1061, 62 L.Ed.2d 783 (1980). This is so because "[w]ithout a definition of that market, there is no way to measure [a defendant's] ability to lessen or destroy competition." Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S.Ct. 347, 350, 15 L.Ed.2d 247 (1965); see Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1296 (8th Cir.1994) ("An actual monopolization claim often succeeds or fails strictly on the definition of the product or geographic market."), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1150, 115 S.Ct. 1100, 130 L.Ed.2d 1068 (1995). Accordingly, PepsiCo's first task is to plead a relevant market. See Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 840 (2d Cir.1980); Theatre Party Assocs., Inc. v. Shubert Org., Inc., 695 F.Supp. 150, 153 (S.D.N.Y.1988).

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

A. Defining a Relevant Product Market

For antitrust purposes a relevant market has both a product dimension and a geographic dimension. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1523, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962); T. Harris Young & Assoc. v. Marquette Elec. Inc., 931 F.2d 816, 823 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1013, 112 S.Ct. 658, 116 L.Ed.2d 749 (1991). Coca-Cola does not contest PepsiCo's allegation that the relevant geographic market in this case consists of sales "throughout the United States." This dispute thus focuses on whether PepsiCo has alleged a valid and relevant product market.

5 As the Supreme Court has explained, "[t]he outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross- elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325, 82 S.Ct. at 1523; Hayden Pub. Co., Inc. v. Cox Broadcasting Corp., 730 F.2d 64, 70-71 (2d Cir.1984). Defining the relevant product market requires consideration of "cross-elasticity of demand" between products, which measures "the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another." Eastman Kodak v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 469, 112 S.Ct. 2072, 2083, 119 L.Ed.2d 265 (1992). If customers are able to substitute one product or service in response to a nontrivial increase in the price of another, these products or services must fall within the same product market. F.T.C. v. R.R. Donnelly & Sons Co., 1990-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 69,239, at 64,854 (D.D.C.1990) (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 400, 76 S.Ct. 994, 1010, 100 L.Ed. 1264 (1956)). As explained by the Court of Appeals, " '[d]efining a relevant product market is a process of describing those groups of producers which, because of the similarity of their products, have the ability--actual or potential--to take significant amounts of business away from each other." ' Hayden, 730 F.2d at 71 (quoting SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 99 S.Ct. 123, 58 L.Ed.2d 134 (1978)).

At play in this case is the principle that within a broad product market there may exist "well-defined submarkets ... which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325, 82 S.Ct. at 1524 (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593-95, 57 S.Ct. 872, 877 (1957)). The boundaries of so-called "submarkets" may be established by reference to such "practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Id.; see F.T.C. v. Cardinal Health, Inc., Nos. Civ. A. 98-595, Civ. A. 98-596, 1998 WL 433784, at *12 (D.D.C. July 31, 1998); F.T.C. v. Staples, Inc., 970 F.Supp. 1066, 1075 (D.D.C.1997).

Ultimately, a "submarket" definition turns on the same inquiry as a "market" definition--"whether the products in a proposed submarket are reasonably interchangeable in use or production with products in the broader market." ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments 521 (4th ed.1997). At bottom, then, "the same proof which establishes the existence of a relevant product market also shows (or fails ... to show) the existence of a product submarket." H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 867 F.2d 1531, 1540 (8th Cir.1989); AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 920 F.Supp. 1287, 1296 n. 6 (S.D.N.Y.1996) (observing that "[t]he required analysis does not change whether a particular product market is deemed a market or a submarket," agreeing with commentators that "submarket" term draws no meaningful distinction and restricting itself to use of the term "market"); Staples, 970 F.Supp. at 1080 n. 11 (noting that use of term "submarket" may be confusing and observing that "[w]hatever term is used--market, submarket, relevant product market--the analysis is the same"). As Professor Areeda counseled, "speaking of submarkets is both superfluous and confusing in an antitrust case," and "nothing would be lost by deleting the word 'submarket' from the antitrust lexicon." IIA Antitrust Law ¶ 533e, at 170, 173. Heeding this advice, where possible this Opinion will speak only of relevant "markets".

*6 Also crucial here is the principle that to define a relevant product market one must look at how consumers view the products in question. See Westman Commission Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1220 (10th Cir.1986) ("Any definition of a line of commerce which ignores the buyers and focuses on what the sellers do, or theoretically can do, is not meaningful." (quoting United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F.Supp. 576, 592 (S.D.N.Y.1958)); Cardinal Health, 1998 WL 433784, at *11 ("[T]he relevant market consists of all of the products that the Defendant's customers view as substitutes to those supplied by the Defendants.").

The market definition inquiry set out in Cardinal Health, which involved a potential merger of pharmaceutical wholesalers, is apt here. In deciding whether wholesale distribution services constituted a market distinct from other distribution methods, Judge Sporkin focused on customers' decisions:

> Thus, in this case, if enough customers view other forms of prescription drug delivery methods as acceptable substitutes to the services provided by the Defendants, then the relevant market should include these alternative methods. On the other hand, if customers do not view the other methods of distribution as viable substitutes, then the relevant product market should be limited to wholesalers' services.

1998 WL 433784, at *11. Judge Sporkin also reflected that "[i]t is imperative that the Court, in determining the relevant market, take into account the economic and commercial realities of the pharmaceutical industry." Id. at 12. Similarly, market definition in this case must account for the "economic and commercial realities" of the beverage industry, but on this motion to dismiss such consideration must be limited to how those realities are alleged in the complaint.

B. The Standard for Evaluating Market Definition on a Motion to Dismiss

As the above cases might suggest, market definition is most often a factual inquiry. See Hayden, 730 F.2d at 70 n. 8 (noting that " 'a pronouncement as to market definition is not one of law, but of fact" ' (quoting Jennings Oil Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 539 F.Supp. 1349, 1352 (S.D.N.Y.1982))); International Audiotext Network, Inc. v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 893 F.Supp. 1207, 1214 (S.D.N.Y.1994) ("Market definition ... is generally ultimately a question of fact which 'can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the "commercial realities" faced by consumers." ' (quoting Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482, 112 S.Ct. at 2090)), aff'd, 62 F.3d 69 (2d Cir.1995). Motions to dismiss in this context thus may be granted only if the alleged market makes "no economic sense under any set of facts." National Communications Ass'n v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 808 F.Supp. 1131, 1134 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (quoting Theatre Party, 695 F.Supp. at 154); Envirosource, Inc. v. Horsehead Resource Dev. Co., 1997-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 71,944, at 80,608 (S.D.N.Y.1997) ("Extensive analyses of reasonable interchangeability and cross elasticity of demand ... are not required at the pleading stage."); Michael Anthony Jewelers, Inc. v. Peacock Jewelry, Inc., 795 F.Supp. 639, 647 (S.D.N.Y.1992) (deeming market definition-based 12(b)(6) dismissal proper only where proposed market definition is "patently implausible solely on the basis of the four corners" of the complaint). Absent an inherently implausible market allegation, the question must be resolved on the facts and economic realities of the case. See, e.g., R.R. Donnelly, 1990-2 Trade Cas. ¶ 69,239, at 64,854 (rejecting market definition where evidence showed that technological developments in relevant fields rendered once-viable market allegation implausible).

C. PepsiCo's Alleged Market

*7 As explained above, PepsiCo defines the relevant market as "sales of fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through independent foodservice distributors throughout the United States." Complaint ¶ 6. In alleging this market, PepsiCo contends, and for the purposes of the motion Coca-Cola accepts, that the relevant sales are to the restaurants, movie theaters, or other establishments that purchase fountain-dispensed soft drinks for later sale to individual consumers, not sales to the diners, moviegoers, or other customers who patronize those retail establishments and actually drink the soft drinks. The market PepsiCo alleges consists of an "increasing number" of these restaurants, theater operators, and other "on-premise" accounts who "generally make it a practice" to purchase the supplies exclusively through foodservice distributors. Id. PepsiCo thus alleges that the relevant market consists not of the sale of all soft drinks, or even of all fountain-dispensed soft drinks, but only of sales of fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors. In this way, PepsiCo alleges that within the broader market for fountain-dispensed soft drinks, there exists a separate distinct market (or submarket) for fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors. The boundaries of PepsiCo's proposed product market are thus defined by this particular method of distribution. As one would expect, Coca-Cola takes issue with this market definition.

D. Coca-Cola's Arguments

1. A Market Cannot Be Limited to Sales Through a Single Group of Distributors

At the outset I must address Coca-Cola's argument that "as a matter of law, a market cannot be limited to sales through a single group of distributors." Memorandum of Defendant The Coca-Cola Company in Support of Its Motion to Dismiss ("Coca-Cola Mem.") at 12. This statement is incorrect--numerous courts have defined product markets by reference to a channel of distribution. See e.g ., Cardinal Health, 1998 WL 433784, at *13 (holding that wholesale distribution of pharmaceutical products to customers who demanded such distribution was a relevant market, even though products so delivered were identical to those delivered through other modes of distribution); Staples, 970 F.Supp. at 1080 (holding that sales of consumable office supplies through office supply superstores constituted relevant market, even though the office supplies sold in those outlets were physically identical to those sold elsewhere; relying on "compelling pricing evidence" which demonstrated that customers of office superstores did not turn to non-superstore outlets when faced with price increases in the superstore market); Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc. v. FTC, 414 F.2d 974, 978-79 (7th Cir.1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 907, 90 S.Ct. 903, 25 L.Ed.2d 88 (1970) (phonograph records sold through record clubs comprised relevant market even though records delivered by clubs were identical to those sold in record stores and other outlets); Henry v. Chloride, Inc., 809 F.2d 1334, 1343 (8th Cir.1987) (sales of automobile batteries through route salespersons distinct from sales of such batteries through retail stores even though "the batteries sold by route salespersons are not different in character, creation or use from those sold from a warehouse or store"); Ansell Inc. v.. Schmid Lab., Inc., 757 F.Supp. 467, 471-75 (D.N.J.1991) (holding that sales of condoms "to retail distributors does constitute an 'economically significant submarket" ' even though manufacturers "may sell their products through a number of different channels of distribution").

8 The point was expressly made in Greyhound Computer Corp., Inc. v. International Business Mach. Corp., 559 F.2d 488, 494 (9th Cir.1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1040, 98 S.Ct. 782, 54 L.Ed.2d 790 (1978), where IBM argued that leasing general purpose computers did not constitute a submarket "economically distinct from others in which such computers are made available to users," such as sales, time-sharing and contracting with service bureaus. Id. at 494. In upholding the jury's finding that leasing of computers did constitute a separate submarket, the court noted:

> No rule of law or economic principle bars application of section 2 of the Sherman Act to one of several alternative means of distributing a product. The statute prohibits monopolization of 'any part' of interstate or foreign commerce. Accordingly, the Sherman Act and other antitrust statutes have been applied to protect competition in one of alternate channels of distribution.

Id.

Accordingly, it is appropriate to limit a market to a discrete channel of distribution so long as it is shown, using established market-definition criteria, that enough customers do not view other methods of distribution as viable substitutes to the distribution method in question. See Cardinal Health, 1998 WL 433784, at *11. PepsiCo's allegations on this score are more than adequate.

PepsiCo's complaint expressly alleges that there are no viable substitutes to fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through independent foodservice distributors. See, e.g., Complaint ¶ 8 (alleging that neither sales of soft drinks in bottles and cans nor sales of fountain-dispensed soft drinks through alternative means of distribution are viable alternatives to foodservice distribution of fountain-dispensed soft drinks). According to the complaint, distribution through foodservice distributors constitutes "the lifeblood of competitive efficiency" among the delineated restaurants, theaters, and other customers who must take delivery in this fashion in order to "remain logistically efficient." Id. ¶ 8. Indeed, "because customers of foodservice distributors maintain a tightly integrated relationship with their distributors, relying on the distributor for virtually all of their supplies, it is far more difficult for them to switch distributors than to switch brands of soft drinks." Id. ¶ 24. Accordingly, even though PepsiCo has made "highly competitive proposals" to customers of foodservice distributors, id. ¶ 14, those customers "remain locked into Coca-Cola as their supplier without the real ability to entertain a competitive bid from PepsiCo." Id. ¶ 27. PepsiCo has adequately alleged a market with reference to cross-elasticity of demand and a lack of reasonable interchangeability within the meaning of the distribution channel cases cited above.

Nonetheless, Coca-Cola argues that it is inappropriate to define the relevant product market in this way, because there is no difference in the products that the parties manufacture. Viewing PepsiCo's proposed market definition as a "submarket" within a broader soft-drink market, Coca-Cola argues that "there can be no relevant submarket without some differences in the products" the parties sell. In support Coca-Cola cites T. Harris, 931 F.2d 816, where a supplier of EKG paper alleged that its competitor monopolized the market in EKG paper sold to "hospitals with more than 200 beds." Id. at 825. Although recognizing that "a relevant product market can be limited to a portion of customers," the court cautioned that such a limitation must be "based on a distinction in the product sold to those customers." Id. at 823. The court rejected plaintiffs' purported distinction, finding after discovery that the paper sold to hospitals with more than 200 beds was identical to the paper sold to all other hospitals. Coca-Cola seizes on the court's holding, observing that "[t]he product that Coca-Cola and PepsiCo supply--soft drinks--is identical irrespective of the form of distribution that is used." See Reply Brief of Defendant The Coca-Cola Company in Support of Its Motion to Dismiss ("Coca-Cola Reply Mem.") at 11. Coca-Cola maintains that this fact is fatal to PepsiCo's claim.

9 Although T. Harris is not dispositive for Coca-Cola, it highlights a crucial aspect of PepsiCo's claim: under PepsiCo's purported market definition, there is a distinction among the products in question--PepsiCo has alleged that the relevant product market is not the market for soft-drinks, or fountain- dispensed soft drinks, but rather the market for "fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors." This product--fountain- dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors--is alleged to be something distinct from "fountain-dispensed soft drinks" distributed through any other means. Indeed, the complaint posits that the buyers in question have real efficiency-based reasons to take delivery of all of their supplies, including fountain syrup, from foodservice distributors; the complaint maintains that for these customers delivery through other means simply will not do. The T. Harris plaintiff made no showing to this effect. [FN1] Further, PepsiCo alleges that a soft drink manufacturer that can offer its product delivered through the preferred--indeed required--channel of distribution offers something markedly different than does a soft drink manufacturer that can only offer delivery of its product through alternate, but disfavored, methods of distribution.

> FN1. Further, as another court in this Circuit has observed, T. Harris was decided "not on law, but on facts." See Sunshine Cellular v. Vanguard Cellular Sys., Inc., 810 F.Supp. 486, 494 (S.D.N.Y.1992). Its consideration of the economic realities of the marketplace before it thus provide limited guidance on this motion under Rule 12(b)(6).

Coca-Cola contends generally that PepsiCo has merely selected one group of customers and called it a market. Coca-Cola posits that "just as Coca-Cola could not define a market made up of [fast-food restaurants owned by a PepsiCo subsidiary] and then accuse PepsiCo of monopolizing the sale of soft drinks within that market, PepsiCo cannot make out a monopolization case focused entirely on a segment of the selling opportunities in which Coca-Cola has achieved substantial success." Coca-Cola Reply Mem. at 7.

In this vein, Coca-Cola relies on Redmond v. Missouri Western State College, 1988-2 Trade Cas. ¶ 68,323, at 59,843 (W.D.Mo.1988). There, a private college-textbook bookstore claimed that the college-owned bookstore unlawfully monopolized a market for the sale of college textbooks to scholarship students by issuing vouchers to the students usable only for books in the college-owned bookstore. The court rejected plaintiff's attempt to "define the relevant market in terms of a certain class of prospective purchasers," noting that to do so would run "contrary to the classic tests used in a monopolization case." Id. The court observed that "it seems unprecedented to allow a claim that a defendant has monopolized a class of customers as distinguished from a product or service." Id. The Redmond court noted, and Coca-Cola relies upon, the proposition that a plaintiff cannot artificially define a market so as to cover only the practice complained of; to do so would, as described by the Redmond court, be an example of "circular or at least result-oriented reasoning." Id.

Redmond is distinguishable. Here, the complaint alleges that market realities force the end users in question to make their purchases exclusively through foodservice distributors. Thus, at least at the pleading stage, it is economic reality, not reference to "the practice complained of," that delineates the boundaries of the alleged market. Further, the books at issue in Redmond were identical whether delivered by the plaintiff or the defendant; as noted above, PepsiCo argues that the character and value of the product actually manufactured by the parties--fountain syrup used to create fountain-dispensed soft drinks--changes in the eyes of buyers by virtue of the manner in which it is delivered. Because foodservice distributors satisfy all of their customers' supply needs at once, offering consolidated delivery and accounting systems, their customers buy supplies through them to the exclusion of all other methods of distribution. See, e.g., Staples, 970 F.Supp. at 1080; Cardinal Health, 1998 WL 433784, at *11. Thus, a manufacturer offering to sell its product through a foodservice distributor is offering something different from a manufacturer offering to sell the same product through other means of distribution. The cluster of products and services offered by independent foodservice distributors selling fountain syrup is alleged to constitute a different product, for antitrust purposes, than fountain syrup sold through other methods of distribution. See, e.g., Staples, 970 F.Supp. at 1080; Cardinal Health, 1998 WL 433784, at *15.

10 Finally, the Redmond scholarship students had the option of exchanging their vouchers for cash and then using that cash to purchase books elsewhere; the class of customers alleged to have no alternative to textbooks in the college-owned store in actuality were free to purchase their books from other distributors. Here, in contrast, PepsiCo alleges that buyers who take delivery through foodservice distributors are unable to switch to any product/distribution combination other than fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors. If, as alleged, Coca-Cola has monopoly power in the market for distribution of fountain syrup within the distinct cluster of products and services offered by foodservice distributors, Coca-Cola would have the ability to restrict output, raise prices, and exclude competition in that market to the detriment of its rivals and buyers in the market.

PepsiCo has not, as suggested at argument, merely "drawn a circle around" certain customers and called those customers a market. To the contrary, PepsiCo has alleged a market using criteria traditionally considered in antitrust cases and has alleged that Coca-Cola has monopolized or attempted to monopolize that market. The market alleged indeed contains a disproportionately high number of Coca-Cola purchasers; but those purchasers are alleged to be distinct, not because they buy Coca-Cola, but because market forces dictate that they purchase their fountain syrup only through foodservice distributors, and those foodservice distributors offer only Coca-Cola.

Coca-Cola also relies on Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430 (3d Cir.1997), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 118 S.Ct. 1385, 140 L.Ed.2d 645 (1998), to argue that a market cannot be defined by reference to the purchasing restrictions of a distinct class of customers. There, Domino's pizza franchisees, bound under the terms of their franchise agreements to purchase Domino's-approved supplies and distribution services, claimed that Domino's had monopolized the market for the supplies and services "used in the operation of Domino's stores." Id. at 437. The district court granted the defendant's Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to allege a valid relevant market, and the Third Circuit affirmed. The court of appeals observed that the supplies available from other pizza suppliers and used by other pizza companies differed from Domino's approved supplies in but one particular: only the latter could be used by Domino's franchisees without precipitating a breach of the franchise contract. Because "the test for a relevant market is not commodities reasonably interchangeable by a particular plaintiff, but 'commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes," ' the inquiry properly focused not on the contractual restrictions of one class of consumers but rather on the decisions of all consumers purchasing the commodity for the same purpose. Id. at 438. The court rejected the notion that a market may be defined by reference to a particular consumer's contractual restraints, affirming the district court's conclusion that the relevant economic power in the antitrust context must flow from the market, not from private contractual relations. Id. at 435; see also IIA Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 510b, at 111 (Supp.1998) (discussing Queen City holding and noting that "the existence of even an unconscionable contract does not create a relevant market for antitrust purposes").

11 In contrast to the Queen City plaintiffs, however, PepsiCo alleges a market based on consumer demand, not on contractual restrictions. As noted above, PepsiCo has alleged that "logistical efficiency" considerations compel an increasing number of purchasers to take delivery of supplies exclusively through foodservice distributors and that such customers will not switch away from that method of distribution once they have chosen it because to do so would result in "severely adverse economic and logistical consequences." Complaint ¶ 8. Again, as alleged, economic forces, not contractual restraints, dictate the boundaries of the market defined in the complaint, and Queen City is thus distinguishable. See IIA Antitrust Law ¶ 510b, at 112 (noting importance of distinguishing between "lock-in" imposed by a contract and that imposed by market forces).

The above cases demonstrate that market definition is a particularly fact- based inquiry. Thus it is not surprising that courts granting 12(b)(6) motions for failure to allege a proper market generally have dismissed only those complaints that failed to explain how the product in question was not reasonably interchangeable with other similar products. See e.g., Rohlfing v. Manor Care, Inc., 172 F.R.D. 330, 347 (N.D.Ill.1997) (dismissing complaint where alleged market "improperly excludes interchangeable substitutes"); Deep-South Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. v. PepsiCo, Inc ., 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) ¶ 68,560 (S.D.N.Y.1989) (granting 12(b)(6) dismissal where plaintiff failed "to set out a theoretically rational explanation to support its proposed relevant product market"; plaintiff "failed to allege why Pepsi-Cola franchises are not interchangeable with franchises for the distribution of other soft drinks"); Theatre Party, 695 F.Supp. at 153 (dismissing complaint after concluding that plaintiff alleging a market limited only to the defendant- supplier's own product had "narrowly defined the market in an attempt to conform the alleged market to the facts of the present case"). Here, the complaint addresses and explains the basis for the market, and on this score is more than sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss.

While not compelling on a motion to dismiss, Coca-Cola's arguments highlight the difficulties PepsiCo may encounter in proving the existence of the market it has alleged in the complaint. Indeed, numerous cases have rejected purported market definitions, some of which were similar to that proposed here, after evidence culled during discovery demonstrated that the plaintiff had excluded reasonably interchangeable products or services from its proposed market definition. See e.g., Thurman v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369 (9th Cir.1989) (rejecting proposed submarket based on one-stop shopping where evidence failed to support plaintiff's purported market); Westman, 796 F.2d 1216 (rejecting proposed market limited to one-stop shopping distributors of goods where evidence in record failed to establish inelastic demand between defendant's products and similar products offered by competing brands); see also R.R. Donnelly, 1990 Trade Cas. at ¶ 64,852 (denying motion for a preliminary injunction after five days of evidentiary hearings because plaintiff was unable to prove the contours of the product market that it had alleged); T. Harris, 931 F.2d 816 (rejecting alleged market because record failed to support finding that products included in alleged market differed from those sold to different class of customers).

*12 Here, if the facts adduced during discovery demonstrate that customers purchasing fountain-dispensed soft drinks view other methods of fountain- dispensed soft drink delivery as acceptable substitutes to delivery through foodservice distributors, then the market alleged should include those alternative methods, and Coca-Cola may be entitled to summary judgment at that time. But for the moment our attention is limited to the complaint, and the allegations contained therein must be taken as true. Those allegations expressly state that an "increasing number" of customers do not view the other distribution methods as viable substitutes. As such the market alleged in the complaint is properly limited to fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors.

2. Even if the Purported Market Exists, It is Irrelevant to This Claim

Conceding that a market may, in certain circumstances, be defined by reference to a distribution channel, Coca-Cola argues that even if such a market exists here, it is irrelevant to PepsiCo's claim. In particular, Coca-Cola points out that PepsiCo alleges it has been foreclosed from competition. Therefore, Coca- Cola maintains, citing Tampa Electric Co. V. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961), that foreclosure must be measured within the context of a market which "includes the full range of selling opportunities reasonably open to rivals, namely, all the product and geographic sales they may readily compete for, using easily convertible plants and marketing organizations." Coca-Cola Reply Brief at 4 (citing IIA Antitrust Law ¶ 570b, at 278 (rev. ed.1995)). To this end, Coca-Cola asserts that foreclosure should be "measured in a market including the total output of the sellers who would be included in the market for assessing a horizontal merger between the merging seller [i.e., Coca-Cola] and any allegedly foreclosed rival [i .e., Pepsi]." Coca-Cola Mem. at 13. Coca-Cola maintains that whatever amount of sales might be attributed to the buyers PepsiCo delineates in its alleged market, such a distinct class of customers is meaningless unless considered in the context of the entire market in which PepsiCo and Coca-Cola, both soft drink manufacturers, compete generally. I disagree.

A " 'market' for antitrust purposes is the one relevant to the particular legal issue at hand." IIA Antitrust Law ¶ 533, at 167. With this in mind it is helpful to examine the nature of the claim PepsiCo asserts. Here, PepsiCo asserts monopoly claims under section 2 of the Sherman Act. That Act prohibits unlawful monopolies because monopoly power allows the monopolist to control a market by excluding competition, restricting output, and raising prices, all without losing customers. See Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. at 571, 86 S.Ct. at 1704; Hamilton College, 128 F.3d at 67 (explaining that ability to "restrict output and raise prices" without losing customers is "precisely the vice of a monopoly"). The essence of product market definition in a monopoly case, therefore, is determining whether there exists a group of buyers which is unable, because of market forces, to switch to an alternative product or service in the face of a monopolist's price increase. [FN2]

FN2. Courts have also considered "supply substitutability," or cross- elasticity of supply, i.e., "the ability of firms in a given line of commerce to turn their productive facilities toward the production of commodities in another line because of similarities in technology between them." See Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1271 (9th Cir.1975). While the parties have not focused on this potential factor, I note that the effect, if any, of supply substitutability on market definition can be determined after discovery.

*13 An example by Professor Areeda, advanced in his attempt to discourage use of the term "submarket," see supra, demonstrates that identifying the relevant market turns on identifying the harm to be avoided. Presume a glass maker selling containers for food, medicine, etc.; presume also that some of the buyers can readily substitute cans or other packages, but others find substitution more difficult. In explaining how to define the market properly in such a case, Professor Areeda noted that "while the glass firms might be able to charge the latter higher prices than others, the more vulnerable customers are not a 'submarket,' ' but rather are properly deemed a relevant product market in their own right. IIA Antitrust Law ¶ 533e, at 170. The following F.T.C. discussion makes the point even more clearly: > levels for the glass containers sold in these end-use segments, those segments would be proper topics of antitrust concern not because they are submarkets, but because they would be relevant product markets in their own right. At least in theory, each end-use segment could stand as a grouping of sales for which a hypothetical monopolist might be able to impose a significant price increase.

[I]f in fact price could be raised above competitive

In re Owens-Illinois, Inc., 115 F.T.C. 14 (1992) (emphasis added).

Here, the complaint alleges a distinct "end-use segment" comprised of those fountain-dispensed soft drink purchasers who can take delivery only through foodservice distributors. For these customers nothing else will do; in Professor Areeda's words, they find substitution "more difficult" than do other purchasers of fountain syrup. If a monopolist--in this case Coca-Cola--can charge these customers more than it charges others, these "more vulnerable" customers constitute a separate product market, and that market is directly relevant to a case complaining about the monopolist's anticompetitive behavior.

As noted above, Coca-Cola suggests that the proper market definition inquiry in a case between manufacturers would be the same as that undertaken in evaluating a horizontal merger between those parties. Exploring this suggestion, I note that in evaluating a horizontal merger between sellers, it is appropriate to consider not only the effect of the merger across a market defined by the full range of those companies' selling opportunities, but also to explore the merger's effects within smaller, distinct markets for "unique" items that the merging entities offer. As the Supreme Court put it in Brown Shoe, "[b]ecause § 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits any merger which may substantially lessen competition 'in any line of commerce', it is necessary to examine the effect of a merger in each economically significant submarket to determine if there is a reasonable probability that the merger will substantially lessen competition." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325, 82 S.Ct. at 1524. Indeed, as then-Judge Bork observed, "[t]hat view of submarket analysis is also mandated by the purpose of antitrust laws: the promotion of consumer welfare." Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 218 (D.C.Cir.1986) (Bork, J .), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1033, 107 S.Ct. 880, 93 L.Ed.2d 834 (1987); see also United States v. Household Fin. Corp., 602 F.2d 1255 (7th Cir.1979) (noting that "in determining the effect of competition in mergers of one type of institution, it is the effect in any area of unique services that must be considered" (citing United States v. Phillipsburg Nat'l Bank, 399 U.S. 350, 360-61, 90 S.Ct. 2035, 26 L.Ed.2d 658 (1970))), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1044 (1980).

14 Indeed, in Owens-Illinois, supra, which involved a proposed merger of glass container manufacturers, the F.T.C. looked not only at the market for the broadest range of the companies' selling opportunities, but also examined the effect within distinct "end-user segments" that might be vulnerable to price increases imposed by a hypothetical monopolist. The Commission found that certain classes of customers put the glass containers to different end uses, with varying abilities to substitute away from the product in the event of price increases. The Commission concluded that so long as an "end-user segment within the larger grouping meets the same economic standard which defines a market, the end-use segment may properly be analyzed as a product market in its own right." Owens-Illinois, 115 F.T.C. at 16. Accordingly, here, where the complaint alleges an end-use segment that "meets the same economic standard which defines a market," it is appropriate to consider that segment a market.

3. Coca-Cola Cannot Monopolize a Market in Which It Does Not Participate

Coca-Cola also argues that PepsiCo's allegations indicate that the proper market here is really the market for foodservice distribution services, not any type of market for fountain syrup. Coca-Cola argues that PepsiCo's market definition is thus inappropriate in a claim against Coca-Cola because Coca-Cola is not a foodservice distributor.

To support the proposition that an entity may not be said to monopolize a market in which it does not participate, Coca-Cola points to Official Airline Guides, Inc. v. FTC, 630 F.2d 920 (2d Cir.1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 917, 101 S.Ct. 1362, 67 L.Ed.2d 343 (1981). There, the petitioner published an airline guide which provided detailed information on flight connections and fares. The guide, described as the "bible" of the industry, was the "standard reference for airline ticket offices, travel agents, businesses, and the public generally" and was the "primary market tool of ... virtually every (air) carrier ... in the United States." Id. at 921-22. The publisher's concededly arbitrary listing policy was found to handicap commuter carriers attempting to compete against certificated carriers. The Court of Appeals held that the publisher, not itself an air carrier, had no duty under the Federal Trade Commission Act "not to discriminate unjustifiably between certificated air carriers and commuter airlines so as to place the latter at a significant competitive disadvantage." Id. at 921.

In so holding, the Court of Appeals noted at the outset that the guide publisher had no "purpose to create or maintain a monopoly" in the relevant market, which was defined as the airline industry. Id. at 925. The court concluded that the guide publisher, "though possibly a monopolist in the airline schedule publishing industry, admittedly had no anticompetitive motive or intent with respect to the airline industry and is engaged in a different line of commerce from that of the air carriers." Id. at 926.

15 Here, in contrast, the complaint clearly alleges that Coca-Cola has acted with "anticompetitive motive or intent with respect" to the downstream distribution of its product, that is to say, in the market for fountain- dispensed soft drinks distributed through foodservice distributors. In particular, by virtue of its agreements with foodservice distributors and in carrying out its actual and threatened refusals to deal, Coca-Cola is alleged to have exhibited anticompetitive conduct in a market for its product as delivered through a particular method of distribution that a number of customers must have in order to remain efficient. It is alleged to have done so to the detriment of both retail customers and ultimate consumers, as well as to the detriment of PepsiCo, which is foreclosed from reaching the buyers in this market. Moreover, in contrast to Official Airline Guide, both PepsiCo and Coca-Cola compete with one another in the market alleged.

Coca-Cola also relies on Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Authority, 816 F.2d 9 (1st Cir.1987), but that case is distinguishable as well. There, the defendant was a municipal authority which possessed a monopoly over an airport's facilities. The plaintiff, an air carrier, was denied access to the ground facility of its choice and claimed that defendant had denied plaintiff access to an "essential facility" in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. The court rejected the claim, because it was "difficult to see how denying a facility to one who, like [plaintiff], is not an actual or potential competitor could enhance or reinforce the monopolist's market power." Id. at 12. Here in contrast, Coca-Cola's alleged refusals to deal clearly could "enhance or reinforce" Coca-Cola's market power in the market for the sale of its product to those customers who must take delivery through independent foodservice distributors.

The lingering question, however, is whether it makes sense to charge Coca- Cola, a soft-drink manufacturer, with monopolizing a product market defined by reference to both the product Coca-Cola manufactures, fountain syrup, and the independent, value-added method of distribution through which that syrup is delivered. As PepsiCo alleges it, this case involves one market with two components: the market for (1) fountain-dispensed soft drinks (2) distributed through foodservice distributors. As Coca-Cola would have it, this case involves two distinct markets: (1) a market for fountain-dispensed soft drinks (in which PepsiCo and Coca-Cola compete) and (2) a market for foodservice distribution services (in which neither PepsiCo nor Coca-Cola participate or compete). Coca-Cola maintains that the market PepsiCo has alleged is at most a distribution-specific market; thus, because Coca-Cola does not participate or operate in any distribution business, a claim that it monopolizes such a market makes no sense. According to Coca-Cola, it may be accused of monopolizing only a market for the "thing" it produces, which in this case is the fountain syrup used to make fountain-dispensed soft drinks.

16 But PepsiCo does more than allege a market for distribution services and it has not alleged that Coca-Cola monopolizes the foodservice distribution industry generally. Rather, PepsiCo alleges that Coca-Cola has monopolized the market for fountain-dispensed soft drinks as distributed through foodservice distributors. According to the allegations in the complaint, consumers view fountain syrup distributed within this cluster of products and services to be different from fountain-dispensed soft drinks distributed through other means. According to the complaint, therefore, the relevant product is neither fountain-dispensed soft drinks alone nor foodservice distribution services alone, but rather a distinct product created by the combination of fountain- dispensed soft drinks and distribution through foodservice distributors. So understood, Coca-Cola has a hand in making this combined product--it manufactures the fountain syrup and secures delivery of that syrup through a distinct channel of distribution that the complaint describes as the "lifeblood of competitive efficiency in the restaurant business, movie theater business and other businesses that depend upon delivery through foodservice distributors in order to remain logistically efficient." Complaint ¶ 8. In this way Coca- Cola creates a product that is unique in the purchasing eyes of an increasing number of restaurants, movie theaters, and other "on-premise" accounts. Moreover, the complaint alleges that by virtue of its actual and threatened refusals to deal Coca-Cola has acted with anticompetitive purpose and intent in this market. Thus, while the complaint does not allege that Coca-Cola is a direct participant in the downstream foodservice distribution market, i.e ., it does not compete horizontally with foodservice distributors, the complaint does allege Coca-Cola's purposeful participation in the distribution of its product and in that regard trumps, at the pleading stage, any attempt by Coca-Cola to disclaim participation in the market alleged in the complaint.

III. FAILURE TO ALLEGE ANTICOMPETITIVE CONDUCT

PepsiCo alleges that Coca-Cola is unlawfully exercising its monopoly power by refusing to deal and threatening to refuse to deal with foodservice distributors that carry or desire to carry Pepsi. Coca-Cola properly notes that even where a defendant has monopoly power, a plaintiff's claims of actual or attempted monopolization require proof of anticompetitive conduct as an essential element of the claim. See Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456, 113 S.Ct. at 890; Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 178 (2d Cir.1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 928, 111 S.Ct. 2041, 114 L.Ed.2d 125 (1991).

Coca-Cola argues that the conduct in which it is alleged to have engaged is not anticompetitive as a matter of law. In particular, Coca-Cola contends that PepsiCo's complaint is fatally flawed because it fails to allege that Coca- Cola's agreements with foodservice distributors are not terminable at will. For this proposition Coca-Cola cites a number of cases of "fairly recent vintage": Paddock Publications, Inc. v. Chicago Tribune Co., 103 F.3d 42 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 117 S.Ct. 2435, 138 L.Ed.2d 196 (1997); Omega Envt'l, Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1164 (9th Cir.1997), pet. for cert. filed, 66 U.S.L.W. 3750 (May 11, 1998); Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 236-38 (1st Cir.1983).

17 Each of these cases held that exclusive dealing arrangements that were terminable at will or of short duration were not barred by the antitrust laws because they left the relevant market up for grabs and because competitors were not foreclosed from the market but rather were encouraged to "compete for the contract." See Paddock, 103 F.3d at 45 (dismissing exclusive dealing claim brought under section 1 of the Sherman Act because, inter alia, "other firms that want to enter the market can do so by competing at intervals for these contracts"); Gilbarco, 127 F.3d at 1164 (finding, after trial, that exclusive dealing arrangements did not foreclose rivals from substantial portion of market because other modes of distribution were available and all relevant distributors were open to bids within one year or less); Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 236-38 (affirming district court's rejection of claim that requirements contract was exclusionary after finding, on complete record, that multiple factors, including nature and duration of contract, suggested the agreements were not 'exclusionary').

Coca-Cola argues that in this case the ability of all distributors to switch to Coca-Cola's competitors' products at all times precludes a finding of exclusionary conduct as a matter of law. Coca-Cola points out that the complaint itself alleges that the reason distributors faced with threats do not carry Pepsi is because those distributors could not afford to stop distributing Coca-Cola in favor of Pepsi because those distributors have customers who want Coca-Cola. According to Coca-Cola, this reflects Coca-Cola's superior product and superior business strategy, not unlawful monopolistic activity.

PepsiCo points out, however, that this complaint does not assert that Coca- Cola has entered into anticompetitive exclusive dealing contracts. Rather, PepsiCo complains that Coca-Cola's actual and threatened refusals to deal represent anticompetitive monopolization or attempted monopolization of the relevant market. To this effect, PepsiCo relies predominantly upon Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 72 S.Ct. 181, 96 L.Ed. 162 (1951), which held that a defendant-monopolist's refusal to deal with any advertiser that also dealt with an emerging competitor constituted a section 2 violation because it was a use of "monopoly to destroy threatened competition ." Id. at 143, 72 S.Ct. at 187 (recognizing the general right of a private business to select its customers, but holding that the exercise of that right for the purpose of monopolization violates the Sherman Act). This principle may be traced back to the Supreme Court's pronouncement generations ago that:

> In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the [Sherman Act] does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he may deal.

18 United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S.Ct. 465, 468, 63 L.Ed. 992 (1919). The principle has remained valid law. See Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 602, 105 S.Ct. 2847, 2857, 86 L.Ed.2d 467; Byars v. Bluff City News Co., 609 F.2d 843, 858 (6th Cir.1979) (observing that where "a monopolist refuses to deal with customers who deal with its rivals," such "behavior is inherently anticompetitive; Lorain Journal ... makes it clear that this is illegal ...."). As noted by Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp:

> Extraction of an agreement not to deal with any competitor--or the equivalent, refusing to deal with buyers who do--can be exclusionary and particularly damaging where the buyers cannot do without the seller's product or service. We see no convincing justification for a requirement that a customer not deal with a particular rival.

IIIA Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 768e6 (citing Lorain Journal, 342 U.S. 143, 72 S.Ct. 181, 96 L.Ed. 162).

In this case, PepsiCo asserts that Coca-Cola has refused to deal and threatened to refuse to deal with independent foodservice distributors who wish to distribute Pepsi. This conduct might be unobjectionable had PepsiCo not alleged that Coca-Cola has acted with a "purpose to create or maintain a monopoly." But PepsiCo's complaint does allege that Coca-Cola possesses or is likely to possess monopoly power in the market for fountain-dispensed soft drinks delivered through these distributors and that Coca-Cola's actual and threatened refusals to deal have been undertaken with the "purpose to create or maintain" monopoly power in that market. The complaint also alleges that Coca- Cola's actions effectively foreclose PepsiCo from reaching any consumers in the relevant market. As such, PepsiCo's complaint states a section 2 claim, and Coca-Cola's motion to dismiss on the ground that PepsiCo has failed to allege anticompetitive conduct must be denied.

CONCLUSION

"Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law." Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 467-68, 112 S.Ct. at 2082. Taking the allegations in the complaint as true, I find that they describe an economically viable market relevant to the section 2 claims PepsiCo asserts. Thus, because it does not appear that PepsiCo "can prove no set of facts in support of [its] claim which would entitle [it] to relief," see Hamilton College, 128 F.3d at 62, Coca- Cola's motion to dismiss is denied. PepsiCo now must demonstrate, however, that "market realities" support the market it has alleged.

Counsel shall appear for an initial pre-trial conference in Courtroom 12A on Friday, October 2, 1998, at 10:00 a.m.

v.
MICROSOFT CORPORATION, Defendant and Counterclaim Plaintiff.

No. CIV. A. 98-1232 (TPJ, CIV. A. 98-1233 (TPJ.

United States District Court, District of Columbia.

Sept. 14, 1998.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JACKSON, District J.

1 On May 18, 1998, in separate actions, the United States Department of Justice ("U.S." or "DOJ") and twenty states' Attorneys General (the "States") [FN1] filed complaints against Microsoft Corporation ("Microsoft"), alleging violations of federal and numerous state antitrust statutes. The DOJ and the States also applied separately for preliminary injunctive relief to prevent irreparable harm to competition in an alleged market for Internet browsers and to potential competition in the market for personal computer ("PC") operating systems. The Court consolidated the cases pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 42(a) and advanced and consolidated the trial of both actions on the merits with the hearing of plaintiffs' preliminary injunction applications, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(a)(2). The hearing/trial is scheduled to begin on September 23, 1998.

FN1. This memorandum refers to the U.S. and the States collectively as "plaintiffs."

The complaints allege essentially the same antitrust violations, namely, that Microsoft: (1) unreasonably restrained competition by "tying" its Internet browser to Windows 98; (2) unreasonably restrained competition by entering into "exclusive dealing" arrangements with various Internet providers; (3) unreasonably restrained competition by imposing "boot and start-up screen" restrictions on original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs"); (4) illegally maintained a monopoly in its operating system software through various exclusionary and predatory practices, including, but not limited to, the tying and exclusive dealing arrangements; and (5) attempted to monopolize the market for Internet browsers. The States bring a separate claim of monopoly "leveraging," arguing, inter alia, that Microsoft has unlawfully used its operating system monopoly to obtain a competitive advantage in the browser market. Each state also brings a pendent claim alleging violations of its respective state's antitrust laws.

The U.S. and the plaintiff States seek virtually the same relief, namely, that the Court enjoin Microsoft from: (1) entering into or enforcing certain contractual provisions which allegedly foreclose distribution and/or promotion of competing Internet browsers; (2) distributing a "bundled" version of its operating system and browser unless Microsoft provides a practical way of removing browser functions and provides OEMs that do not wish to license the browser an appropriate deduction from the royalty fee; (3) distributing a "bundled" version of its operating system and browser unless Microsoft treats Netscape Corporation's ("Netscape") browser the same as its own with respect to inclusion and removal; and (4) retaliating against any OEM that chooses to remove Microsoft's browser from Windows 98.

Microsoft denies the allegations, and moves for summary judgment on all counts. The Court finds sufficient material facts to be in dispute to preclude the entry of summary judgment on all but one of plaintiffs' claims. Because the theory of "monopoly leveraging" is inconsistent with both the Sherman Act's plain text and with Supreme Court pronouncements on the general limitations of its reach, the Court will grant summary judgment in favor of Microsoft on the States' Third Claim for Relief. See States' First Am. Compl. at 26. In all other respects the motion will be denied.

2 A microprocessor [FN2] is the "brain" of the PC. Most of the world's PCs run on the "x86/ Pentium" class of microprocessor, originally designed by Intel Corporation. In addition to the processor, the PC consists of a number of other components, including various hardware device.

(e.g., disk drives) and the operating system.

> FN2. The microprocessor is sometimes referred to as the "processor," the "microchip" (or simply "chip"), or the central processing unit ("CPU").

The operating system ("OS") is the "command center" of the personal computer. It controls the interaction between the processor, memory, peripheral devices such as keyboards, screens, disk drives, and printers. Independent software vendors ("ISVs") write software application programs (such as word processors, games, etc.) that rely on certain general functions embedded in the OS. Applications software does this by using (or "calling on") the OS's application programming interfaces ("APIs"). Because those functions reside on the OS, ISVs do not have to write them into every software application they develop.

In 1980, Microsoft licensed from another company a PC operating system which it modified and introduced in 1981 as the "Microsoft Disk Operating System" ("MS-DOS"). When IBM entered the PC market in 1981, it selected MS-DOS as its operating system. As a result, MS-DOS enjoyed enormous sales and eventually commanded a dominant share of the market.

In 1985, Microsoft introduced a product called "Windows." Originally, Windows was a "shell," which acted as a graphical interface between the user and the MS-DOS operating system, permitting the user to perform functions by pointing and clicking with his mouse, rather than by typing text. Windows and MS-DOS were originally offered and sold separately, but Microsoft combined the underlying operating system with the graphical user interface in "Windows 95," presently the most widely-used PC operating system in the world.

The Internet is a global network that links smaller networks of computers. The World Wide Web ("Web") is the fastest-growing part of the Internet, composed of multimedia "pages" written in Hypertext Markup Language ("HTML") and connected to other pages by hypertext links. "Browsers" are specialized software programs that allow PC users to locate, access, and display content and applications located on the Web, by, among other things, "translating" HTML into an intelligible format for the user.

Consumers most often obtain their browsers as preinstalled software from their OEMs or via downloads from their Internet Access Providers ("IAPs"). IAPs provide users with telephone numbers and software that their computers use to access the Web. There are two types of IAPs: (1) Online Service Providers ("OLSs") (e.g., America Online, Prodigy, CompuServe, Microsoft Network) offer a full range of online services in addition to Web access, including e-mail, news, entertainment, and places to "meet" people with similar interests; and (2) Internet Service Providers ("ISPs") (e.g., AT & T Worldnet, Mindspring, Netcom) offer a cheaper, more "bare bones" package, including e-mail, Web access, and basic software.

3 On July 15, 1994, the U.S. commenced an action against Microsoft under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (" § 2"). The complaint alleged, among other things, that Microsoft had entered into anticompetitive agreements and engaged in unlawful marketing practices directed at OEMs. The effect of those practices, the DOJ alleged, was unlawfully to maintain Microsoft's monopoly in the PC operating system market.

Microsoft ultimately consented to the entry of a "Final Judgment" (or "Consent Decree"), which the Court entered on August 21, 1995. The Consent Decree prohibited Microsoft from continuing the challenged practices and from engaging in other anticompetitive behavior.

On October 20, 1997, the U.S. petitioned the Court for an order to show cause why Microsoft should not be found in civil contempt for violating the terms of the Consent Decree by requiring OEMs to license and distribute Microsoft's Internet browser ("Internet Explorer" or "IE") as a condition of obtaining a license for Microsoft's Windows 95 operating system. On December 11, 1997, the Court declined to hold Microsoft in contempt, but preliminarily enjoined the company from continuing the challenged licensing practices. See United States v. Microsoft Corp., 980 F.Supp. 537 (D.D.C.1997).

Microsoft appealed the December 11 Order. The D.C. Circuit reversed and remanded, holding that the Court "erred procedurally in entering a preliminary injunction without notice to Microsoft and substantively in its implicit construction of the consent decree on which the preliminary injunction rested." See United States v. Microsoft Corp., 147 F.3d 935, 938 (D.C.Cir.1998) ("Microsoft "). The D.C. Circuit also granted Microsoft's application for a writ of mandamus revoking the Court's reference of certain matters to a special master. See id.

The Court of Appeals "tentatively" concluded that Windows 95/IE is a permissible "integrated product" under the applicable terms of the Consent Decree. Id. at 953. An "integrated product," the court held, is one "that combines functionalities (which may also be marketed separately and operated together) in a way that offers advantages unavailable if the functionalities are bought separately and combined by the purchaser." Id. at 948. The D.C. Circuit concluded that Microsoft had "clearly met the burden of ascribing facially plausible benefits to its integrated design as compared to an operating system combined with a stand-alone browser," id. at 950, but left the issue to be finally decided based "on a more complete record." Id. at 952.

II.

Plaintiffs contend, and for present purposes, the Court must assume, that Microsoft enjoys a monopoly in the market for operating systems that are compatible with Intel x86/Pentium microprocessors. [FN3] According to the DOJ's economic expert, between 1991 and 1997, Microsoft's share of that market held consistently at approximately 90%. See Declaration of David S. Sibley. [FN4] ("Sibley Decl.") ¶ 14 (citing International Data Corp., Operating Environments, Review and Forecast 1996-2001 (1997)). Several OEMs, including Packard Bell, Hewlett Packard, Micron, and Gateway, have expressed their belief that they have no commercially reasonable alternative to Microsoft's operating system. Plaintiffs postulate that Microsoft's dominant position in the market is reinforced by high barriers to entry, most importantly its enormous "installed base" and the large number of software applications that run on Windows but not on other operating systems.

FN3. Microsoft disputes plaintiffs' definition of the "relevant markets" and their allegations of Microsoft's power within those markets. Microsoft recognizes, however, that these issues are "sharply disputed by the parties" and are "typically resolved in a battle among expert economists" at trial. See Def.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Pls.' Mots. for Prelim. Inj. at 2, 3. Microsoft concedes that, for purposes of deciding its motion for summary judgment, the Court must assume that Microsoft is a monopolist in a relevant market.

FN4. Dr. Sibley is a Professor of Economics at the University of Texas at Austin.

*4 Despite its strong position in the market for operating systems, internal Microsoft correspondence indicates that the company recently discerned a threat to its operating system monopoly in the growing popularity of Internet browsers. Because browsers offer the potential to overcome the incompatibility between different operating systems by allowing applications to run on a variety of operating systems, browsers threaten to reduce or eliminate the key barrier to entry that protects Microsoft's share of the operating systems market.

Software created to run on particular operating systems (or "platforms") generally will not function on different platforms. Independent software vendors ("ISVs") must, therefore, choose the platforms for which they will develop and support different versions of their software. See generally Sun Microsystems, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 999 F.Supp. 1301, 1302 (N.D.Cal.1998). Because of Windows' dominant market share, ISVs naturally write their applications to run on Windows, leading to "network effects" that support Microsoft's high market share; the more applications that are written for a particular OS, the more attractive will consumers find that OS, thus further increasing market share, leading to more new software applications, and so forth.

A new programming language, known as "Java," [FN5] is designed in part to permit applications written in it to run on any platform or operating system ("across platforms"), thus permitting ISVs to create and distribute a single version of their software capable of operating on many otherwise incompatible system platforms and browsers. Programs written in Java are compiled into intermediate instructions which are then "interpreted" by another computer program which emulates a hypothetical CPU called a "Java Virtual Machine" ("JVM"). The JVM translates the instructions into language that can be understood by the specific CPU on which the JVM is running.

> FN5. Java was developed by Sun Microsystems, Inc ("Sun").

Netscape Corporation's ("Netscape") "Navigator" browser is one means by which Java is distributed to consumers, since a JVM component is shipped with Netscape's browser. See P. Maritz (Vice President in charge of Microsoft's Platforms Group) 7/14/97 e-mail (recognizing Netscape as "the major distribution vehicle" for Java) (Ex. 61 to Pls.' Joint Resp. to Microsoft's Mot. for Summ. J. & Reply in Supp. of Mots. for Prelim. Inj.). [FN6] Furthermore, Navigator is itself a "platform" to which many applications are written.

> FN6. This memorandum refers to exhibits attached to DOJ's preliminary injunction application as "PI Ex."; the States' preliminary injunction exhibits as "States' PI Ex."; Microsoft's summary judgment exhibits as "SJ Ex."; and plaintiffs' exhibits in opposition thereto as "SJ Opp'n Ex."

The more applications written directly to the browser or the JVM it hosts, the more fungible the underlying operating system becomes. Because browsers such as Navigator will run on any operating system, and have the ability to host "cross-platform" applications, they pose a potential threat to Windows' dominance.

Certain statements of Microsoft executives proffered by plaintiffs indicate that the company recognized the impending danger. For example, Microsoft CEO Bill Gates stated that the Netscape/Java combination threatens to "commoditize" the operating system. See B. Gates 5/26/95 e-mail (PI Ex. 2). Following a 1997 meeting with Mr. Gates, Microsoft's Ben Slivka described Java as "the biggest threat to Microsoft" and wrote to Mr. Gates that "clearly the work the Java team is doing has hit a raw nerve with you." SJ Opp'n Ex. 60. And in an essay posted on Microsoft's Web site, Mr. Gates recognized the potential of Netscape's browser to "become a de facto platform for software development, ultimately replacing Windows as the mainstream set of software standards." States' PI Ex. 3. Other Microsoft executives recognized browsers as "alternative platform[s] to Windows," B. Silverberg Internet Platforms & Tools Div. Mtg. Agenda (emphasis in original) (PI Ex. 33), that might eventually "obsolete" Windows. B. Chase 4/4/97 e-mail (PI Ex. 15). One Vice President warned that "[t]he situation is threatening our operating systems and desktop applications share at a fundamental level," and declared: "Netscape pollution must be eradicated." J. Raikes 8/13/96 memo (PI Ex. 34).

*5 Microsoft allegedly set out to eliminate the threats posed by Java and Netscape. Plaintiffs contend that Mr. Gates led the charge to "wrest control of Java away from Sun," SJ Opp'n Ex. 60, and to convert Java to what Microsoft called a "polluted" version which would effectively limit applications to those which would run on Microsoft's systems. To accomplish this goal, Microsoft allegedly entered into a series of anticompetitive agreements with customers and competitors to restrict the use of Java and to substitute the use of Microsoft's version of Java, known as "J/Direct." See, e.g., T. Nielsen 8/25/97 e-mail to B. Gates ("[W]e are just proactively trying to put obstacles in Sun's path and get anyone that wants to write in java to use J/Direct.") (SJ Opp'n Ex. 62).

According to plaintiffs, while Microsoft was combating Sun's Java on one front, it simultaneously set its sights on Netscape. In July of 1996, plaintiffs contend, Netscape enjoyed a 48% share of the browser market, compared to Microsoft's 11%. See Microsoft 11/11/96 "Internet Explorer Marketing Plan Review" (States' PI Ex. 26). Microsoft allegedly made it "job # 1" to remedy that disparity. See, e.g., P. Maritz 6/20/96 e-mail (PI Ex. 92). But to accomplish that job, plaintiffs claim, Microsoft was unwilling to compete on the merits of Internet Explorer alone.

According to plaintiffs, Microsoft's strategy depended largely on leveraging its strong position in the operating systems market to gain a foothold in the market for browsers. Once again, plaintiffs rely heavily on contemporaneous statements of Microsoft executives to support their claims. For example, Jim Allchin, a Microsoft Senior Vice President, wrote: "I don't understand how IE is going to win. The current path is simply to copy everything that Netscape does packaging and product wise ... My conclusion is that we must leverage Windows more ... We need to advantage Windows--more specifically [Windows 98]." PI Ex. 94.

Moshe Dunie, another Microsoft Vice President, wrote in an e-mail to Mr. Gates and several other executives: "The stunning insight is this: To make [consumers] switch away from Netscape, we need to make them to upgrade [sic] to [Windows 98] ... [W]e can leverage these assets to convert the Navigator installed base and eclipse Netscape's browser market share leadership. But if we rely on IE4 alone to achieve this, we will fail." See M. Dunie 2/24/97 e- mail (States' PI Ex. 1). Microsoft executive Christian Wildfeuer apparently agreed: "It seems clear that it will be very hard to increase browser market share on the merits of IE 4 alone. It will be more important to leverage the [operating system] asset to make people use IE instead of Navigator." C. Wildfeuer 2/24/97 e-mail (PI Ex. 23).

Microsoft representatives met with top executives from Netscape on June 21, 1995. The parties disagree vehemently regarding the substance and purpose of that meeting. Plaintiffs allege that Microsoft proposed an illegal market allocation, with Microsoft becoming the sole supplier of browsers for use with Windows and with Netscape becoming the sole supplier for other PC platforms, such as Apple and UNIX. Plaintiffs contend that this proposal was consistent with a pattern of Microsoft's behavior that included similar discussions with Intel (to urge Intel not to continue to develop certain software), Apple (to persuade Apple to stop marketing its "QuickTime" media streaming software for use with Windows), and a company called Real Networks (seeking Real Network's assurances that it would get out of the base streaming media platform business and not share its technology with Microsoft's competitors).

6 Plaintiffs claim that Netscape refused the market allocation offer, causing Microsoft to adopt a two-part strategy to gain market share for IE. First, it began to distribute IE free of charge. One Microsoft Vice President, Paul Maritz, allegedly told Intel Corporation executives that Microsoft intended to "cut off [Netscape's] air supply. Everything they're selling, we're going to give away for free." See Steve Lohr & John Markoff, Why Microsoft is Taking a Hard Line With the Government, N.Y. Times, Jan. 12, 1998, at D1 (PI Ex. 4).

Plaintiffs further charge that Microsoft was not content with pricing Netscape out of the market, but was also determined to cut off Netscape's means of distributing its product. According to internal Microsoft documents, consumers most often obtain their browsers from their IAPs or as preinstalled software from their OEMs; approximately 43% of all browser users obtain their software from one of those two sources. [FN7] In deposition testimony, Microsoft executives acknowledged that the ISP channel and the OEM channel are the two most important channels for distribution. See, e.g., Myhrvold Dep. at 43:7-18.

> FN7. Twenty-five percent obtain their browser from their place of employment, 13% by "downloading" it from the Internet, and 4% at retail. See Microsoft 4/97 "IE Market Review" (States' PI Ex. 25).

Plaintiffs contend that Microsoft used a variety of illegal means to ensure that significant market participants did not distribute Netscape's browser through either the IAP or OEM channel. Microsoft allegedly accomplished its purpose by: (1) implementing an illegal tie between IE and Windows, purchased of necessity by virtually every OEM for installation on new PCs; and (2) using its control over a monopoly asset--"real estate" on the Windows desktop--to restrict IAPs and Internet Content Providers ("ICPs") [FN8] from offering their customers competing browsers.

> FN8. Internet Content Providers are firms such as Disney, Hollywood Online and CBS Sportsline, that provide news, entertainment, and other information from sites on the Web.

In addition to a direct assault on Netscape's major channels of distribution, plaintiffs allege, Microsoft used its monopoly power to induce major computer industry firms, including Apple and Intel, to limit or reduce their use of and support for Netscape's browser. As a result of the totality of Microsoft's efforts, plaintiffs contend, its share of the browser market increased from 3% or 4% in early 1996 to approximately 50% in early 1998.

Plaintiffs concede that Microsoft's dominance in the operating system market does not, by itself, warrant concern. There is no reason to believe that the market, left to itself, will not generate alternatives to Windows, despite the high barriers to entry. See

Sibley Decl. ¶ 17. Historical precedent, for example, demonstrates that compact disc technology was able to overcome similar barriers in the music industry and overtake the LP as the standard medium for recording music. The antitrust laws are implicated, however, if it can be shown that Microsoft constructed artificial entry barriers that further restrict the naturally difficult task of providing alternatives to Microsoft's operating system.

Plaintiffs contend that Microsoft's behavior, including the bundling of its browser with Windows and the contractual restrictions on the use of competing browsers by OEMs, IAPs and ICPs, was designed to enable Microsoft to monopolize the browser market. The intended result was twofold: first, to remove the Internet browser as a software platform that can exert competitive pressure on Microsoft's operating system monopoly; and second, to establish for Microsoft a new monopoly in the browser market. Such conduct, plaintiffs allege, violates Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. [FN9]

FN9. Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination ..., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 proscribes the "monopoliz[ation], or attempt[ed] monopoliz[ation], or combin[ation] or conspir[acy] ... to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

*7 "A tying arrangement is an 'agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from another supplier." ' Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 112 S.Ct. 2072, 119 L.Ed.2d 265 (1992) (quoting Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S.Ct. 514, 2 L.Ed.2d 545 (1958)). Such arrangements are "per se " Section 1 violations, i.e., conclusively unreasonable if proven, when the seller exploits its market power in the tying product market "to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms," Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S.Ct. 1551, 80 L.Ed.2d 2 (1984), [FN10] and a "substantial volume of commerce in the tied market" is affected. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462; see also Foster v. Maryland State Savs. & Loan Ass'n, 590 F.2d 928, 931 (D.C.Cir.1978) (arrangement must affect a "not insubstantial" volume of commerce).

FN10. In Jefferson Parish, four concurring Justices would have abandoned the per se rule. Id. at 32.

"Before an unlawful tying arrangement may properly be found, ... it must be determined that 'two separate products are in fact involved." ' See Foster, 590 F.2d at 931 (quoting Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 507, 89 S.Ct. 1252, 22 L.Ed.2d 495 (1969)). In the typical case, whether a package consists of one or more "separate" products depends "not on the functional relation" between the components, "but rather on the character of the demand" for them. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19; see also Klamath-Lake Pharm. Ass'n v. Klamath Med. Serv. Bureau, 701 F.2d 1276, 1289 (9th Cir.1983) ("Products that function together and are sold in combination may still be 'separate' if consumers would prefer to buy them individually at the price necessary to market them separately ... It is the relationship of the producer's selling decision to market demand, not the physical characteristics of the products alone, that determines the existence of legally separable products."). The critical question is whether the bundle consists of products which are "distinguishable in the eyes of buyers." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19. Courts generally find two products to exist if there is "sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide" them separately, Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462, even if the products are "functionally linked" so that one is "useless without the other." Id. (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19 n. 30).

Microsoft argues that Jefferson Parish 's "demand" test does not apply to cases involving physically integrated products or questions of product design. Microsoft distinguishes Jefferson Parish on the ground that it dealt not with an integrated product, but with a "functionally integrated package of services." See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19 (emphasis supplied). Similarly, Eastman Kodak dealt with the question of whether replacement parts and service for Kodak's photocopiers were separate products. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 459.

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*8 Microsoft advances a theory that courts considering tying claims involving physically integrated products or questions of product design--like the Windows 98/IE combination--have applied a much more deferential standard. Such "technological tying" claims, Microsoft contends, can succeed only if plaintiffs prove that the challenged combination was carried out solely for the purpose of tying two separate products together "rather than to achieve some technologically beneficial result." See Response of Carolina, Inc. v. Leasco Response, Inc., 537 F.2d 1307, 1330 (5th Cir.1976). Any other rule, Microsoft argues, "would enmesh the courts with technical and uncertain inquiry into the technological justifiability of functional integration and cast unfortunate doubt on the legality of product innovations in serious detriment to the industry and without any legitimate antitrust purpose." See Telex Corp. v. IBM, 367 F.Supp. 258, 347 (N.D.Okla.1973), rev'd on other grounds, 510 F.2d 894 (10th Cir.1975).

Microsoft's argument has its genesis in a body of case law addressing claims that, in the 1960s and 1970s, IBM illegally tied the central processing unit of its computers to various peripheral devices, such as disk drives. The peripheral devices and the CPUs were originally manufactured and sold separately and connected to each other with cables. As IBM developed new technologies with more compact circuitry, it was able to place many devices in one box along with the CPU, and to sell the combination as one unit. Naturally, the effect was to injure small manufacturers who were in the business of producing the peripheral devices.

Courts generally concluded that IBM's integrations did not amount to illegal tying, holding that "where a court is dealing with what is physically and in fact a single product," the antitrust laws do "not contemplate judicial dissection of that product into parts and the reconstitution of these parts into a tying agreement." See Telex, 367 F.Supp. at 347 (denying claim that IBM's "integration of additional memory and control functions" into its CPUs constituted unlawful tying, even though the court found IBM to be a monopolist, and that there was evidence that IBM's actions "were designed to help stem the growth of its plug compatible competition"); see also Innovation Data Processing, Inc. v. IBM, 585 F.Supp. 1470, 1476 (D.N.J.1984) (integration of "dump-restore" utility into mainframe operating system held to be "a lawful package of technologically interrelated components"); ILC Peripherals Leasing Corp. v. IBM, 448 F.Supp. 228 (N.D.Cal.1978) (disk drive and head/disk assembly ("HDA") combination lawful), aff'd per curiam sub nom., Memorex Corp. v. IBM, 636 F.2d 1188 (9th Cir.1980). So long as the evidence demonstrated that the challenged integration "represented technological advancements," the courts generally held that IBM's decision to integrate additional functionality into its CPUs could not "be fairly regarded as predatory within the contemplation of antitrust policy." Telex, 367 F.Supp. at 342.

*9 In a more recent case, the Ninth Circuit considered a tying challenge to Kodak's decision to simultaneously introduce its "110 Instamatic" camera, a new film and developing process, and the equipment necessary to process the new film. See Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534 (9th Cir.1983). One of Kodak's competitors in the photofinishing business alleged an unlawful tying arrangement because "the 110 system was incompatible with then existing photographic products and photofinishing equipment." Id. at 544. The Ninth Circuit rejected the claim, "even if ... effective use of any one of the new products necessitates purchase of some or all of the others." Id. at 543. "Any other conclusion," the court reasoned, "would unjustifiably deter the development and introduction of those new technologies so essential to the continued progress of our economy." Id.

In the IBM cases, plaintiffs unsuccessfully challenged IBM's right to bundle two technologically related products. The allegations in the present case differ from the IBM allegations in one critical respect: plaintiffs allege that Microsoft did not just bundle IE into Windows 98, but took the further step of contractually prohibiting OEMs from unbundling the two (assuming that IE could be "unbundled" from the operating system, a disputed issue of fact). [FN11] In contrast, in the Telex case, there was no forced tie of memory and control functions. The integration was "wholly optional," 367 F.Supp. at 347, and IBM continued to offer the two products separately. Id. Similarly, in Innovation Data Processing, IBM continued to license the utility program and the operating system separately as well as together, at the user's option. 585 F.Supp. at 1475. [FN12] And Foremost Pro Color did not involve the bundling of products at all, but rather Kodak's development of new technological formats that rendered competitors' complements incompatible. "The development and introduction " of those formats, "standing alone" (without any contractual requirement that users take the products together) was deemed not to amount to tying. See Foremost Pro Color, 703 F.2d at 542 (emphasis supplied). [FN13]

FN11. Plaintiffs rely on the Declaration of Edward W. Felten, Assistant Professor of Computer Science at Princeton University, for the proposition that Web browsing functionality can be removed from Windows 98 without damaging the underlying operating system. Whether Dr. Felten's "mechanism," see Felten Decl. ¶ 7, actually removes the "browser," or merely removes code that "look[s] more like a key to opening IE than anything that could plausibly be considered IE itself." Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 952 n. 17, remains to be seen.

FN12. That court went on to state that, even had IBM not offered the products separately, there would be no unlawful tie because the items were part of a single product. Innovation Data Processing, 585 F.Supp. at 1476. Following Jefferson Parish, however, the court revisited its decision, emphasizing that the basis for its original decision was the finding of no coercion, and declining to reach the "separate product" question. See Innovation Data Processing v. IBM, 603 F.Supp. 646, 648- 49 (D.N.J.1984).

FN13. Plaintiffs also distinguish the ILC case. There, the court found that the drive unit and head/ disk assembly were a single product because: they were designed to be and would be used as a unit; the aggregation offered dramatically larger online storage capacity; the aggregation satisfied a recognized customer need; the aggregation resulted in cost savings that were passed on, at least in part, to end users; the drive unit and head/drive assembly were normally used in fixed proportions; and the practice of other industry participants was to sell the integrated product at a single price. See ILC, 448 F.Supp. at 232-34. In contrast, plaintiffs contend, operating systems and browsers are not used in fixed proportions. Despite the D.C. Circuit's assumption to the contrary, see Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 948, plaintiffs contend that some users prefer to use as many as three separate browsers while others prefer none at all. Furthermore, plaintiffs argue, not all sellers bundle the products together; no consumer savings have been shown to result from the bundling; and not even Microsoft claims that the benefits of bundling Windows and IE are "dramatic."

Unlike the IBM plaintiffs, neither the U.S. nor the States challenges Microsoft's right to bundle IE and Windows. Instead, they challenge the contractual prohibitions against unbundling, and Microsoft's refusal to offer what plaintiffs allege are two products separately. The cases Microsoft cites in opposition are not inconsistent with the teaching of Jefferson Parish and Eastman Kodak that it is for the market (and not Microsoft) to determine whether the bundling is desirable. See also Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 287 (2d Cir.1979) ("[N]o one can determine with any reasonable assurance whether one product is 'superior' to another. The only question that can be answered is whether there is sufficient demand for a particular product to make its production worthwhile, and the response, so long as the free choice of consumers is preserved, can only be inferred from the reaction of the market."). The market can make that determination only if two bundled products are also offered in their unbundled form, as they were in the IBM cases.

10 In short, this Court is not convinced that either the IBM cases or Foremost Pro Color dictate that Microsoft's licensing practices should be evaluated by a more lenient standard than the one articulated by the Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish and Eastman Kodak, simply because the case involves "physically integrated products or questions of product design," as Microsoft puts it. [FN14] Despite the Court's misgivings, however, the D.C. Circuit clearly appears to have adopted Microsoft's proposed "technological tying" standard in reversing this Court's Order preliminarily enjoining Microsoft from requiring OEMs to take IE as a condition of licensing Windows 95. See United States v. Microsoft Corp., 147 F.3d 935 (D.C.Cir.1998) ("Microsoft "), rev'g United States v. Microsoft Corp., 980 F.Supp. 537 (D.D.C.1997). While that decision was ostensibly limited to interpreting specific terms of the Consent Decree, see Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 950 n. 14, the analysis was, in the Court of Appeals' eyes, "consistent with tying law." Id. at 950.

FN14. In fact, in Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court implicitly rejected Microsoft's argument that the Court's analysis was limited to integrated > packages of services. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19 n. 30 ("We have often found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices.") In cases challenging technical integrations, the Court of Appeals wrote, the ultimate issue is whether the "integrated design offers benefits when compared to a purchaser's combination of corresponding stand-alone functionalities." Id. at 949. Noting what it views as the "limited competence of courts to evaluate high-tech product designs and the high cost of error" in making such evaluations, the Court of Appeals cautioned that courts should be "wary of second-guessing the claimed benefits of a particular design decision ." Id. at 950 n. 13. Courts should reject any challenge to an integrated product design, the court opined, if there is "a plausible claim" that the integration "brings some advantage." Id. at 950.

The Court of Appeals went on to articulate a framework for determining whether an integration amounts to a single product for purposes of evaluating a tying claim. "[I]ntegration may be considered genuine if it is beneficial when compared to a purchaser combination." Id. at 949. And "in making this inquiry," a court should not "embark on [a] product design assessment," id., but rather, "[a] court's evaluation of a claim of integration must be narrow and deferential." Id. at 949-50. An integrated product should pass muster if there are "facially plausible benefits to its integrated design." Id. at 950. The court noted, however, that manufacturers should not be permitted "to metaphorically 'bolt' two products together," i.e., place two separate products in a single package "for an anticompetitive purpose (or for no purpose at all)." Id. at 949 & n. 12; see also X Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 1746b, at 227 (1996) ("The main test is whether the items operate better when bundled by the defendant than when linked by the end user.").

The Court of Appeals expressed its "tentative" view, id. at 953, that the Windows 95/IE combination amounted to a "genuine" integration, but expressly left to a more fully developed factual record the final determination of whether Microsoft's claims of "technological benefits" could be substantiated. Id. at 951 n. 15, 952. Because numerous issues of material fact remain in dispute as the record presently stands, the Court will deny Microsoft's motion for summary judgment on the tying claims.

11 Microsoft argues that the Windows/IE integration offers users a myriad of benefits. It asserts, for example, that the integrated design allows users to move "seamlessly" from a Web site to a floppy disk to a CD-ROM to a local area network with a single mouse click, thus making computers easier for consumers to use. But plaintiffs contend that "a comparable browsing experience can be achieved by the combination of Windows 98 and a competing browser." Sibley Decl. ¶ 35.

Microsoft also claims that "IE technologies" in Windows not only permit access to the Internet, but also provide numerous "system services" that are "not directly related to Web browsing" that "enhanc[e] the functionality of a wide variety of applications." See Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 951. Because that functionality resides on the operating system, ISVs are freed from the need to develop and include it as part of their products. In response, plaintiffs contend that "the ability to browse the web using IE can be removed and replaced with a competing browser in such a way that the consistency of the Windows platform for ISVs would not be frustrated in any appreciable manner."

Sibley Decl. ¶ 34.

Microsoft also asserts that IE technologies perform numerous functions in Windows that are totally "unrelated to Web browsing." Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 951. For example, IE technologies supply a new user interface in Windows that adopts the navigational paradigms of the Web, including "back" and "forward" buttons, lists of "favorite" sources of information and a "history" of recently-accessed information. Microsoft also claims that IE technologies are essential to the Windows 98 "Help" system, which requires an HTML "interpreter" to display the content of "Help" files and to provide easy user access from "Help" to updated on-line resources. Furthermore, Microsoft asserts, IE technologies in Windows 98:(1) provide support for multiple video monitors; (2) invoke a "Disk Cleanup Wizard" to free up hard disk space by deleting unnecessary files; and (3) invoke a Windows Update feature that permits users to download Windows updates from a Microsoft Web site. Whether or not those functions actually rely on technology provided by the browser, and whether they could be just as efficiently provided by a competing browser, is unclear on the record as it presently stands.

In any event, whether or not the "integration brings benefits does not," the Court of Appeals made clear, "end the inquiry." Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 951. "It is also necessary that there be some reason Microsoft, rather than the OEMs or end users, must bring the functionalities together." Id. (citing X Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 1746b, at 227; ¶ 1747, at 229 (1996)). Without the benefit of a factual record that this Court had expected the special master to develop, the D.C. Circuit expressed its preliminary belief that "if Microsoft presented [OEMs] with an operating system and a stand-alone browser application, rather than with the interpenetrating design of Windows 95 and IE 4, the OEMs could not combine them in the way in which Microsoft has integrated IE 4 into Windows 95." Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 952 (emphasis supplied). That conclusion applies even more forcefully to Windows 98, Microsoft argues, where IE technologies are even more deeply integrated into the OS. Whether it is so remains to be seen.

12 Plaintiffs disagree. While they concede that IE provides "a small number of Internet-oriented updates that are not available through the installation of Internet Explorer, as distributed separately from the operating system," see Mem. of the U.S. in Supp. of Mot. for Prelim. Inj. at 43 n. 41, plaintiffs nevertheless contend that "the browsing functionality in Windows 98 is almost entirely equivalent to that provided when Internet Explorer 4.01 is installed on top of Windows 95." Id. (citing C. Jones (Microsoft) Dep. at 34:2-8).

To summarize, the Court cannot determine whether Windows and IE are "separate products" until it becomes clear what are the synergistic benefits that are unique to the Windows/IE combination, i.e., benefits that could not be obtained by combining another browser with Windows. Moreover, it is unclear exactly how the integration is more beneficial when compared to a combination effected by an OEM or an ultimate consumer. Finally, the Court must determine whether Microsoft "metaphorically 'bolt[ed]' two products together," "for an anticompetitive purpose (or for no purpose at all)." See Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 949 & n. 12. Plaintiffs cite Microsoft documents describing the bundling as motivated by a desire to thwart browser competition and to "weld" the products together to achieve that goal. See, e.g., B. Veghte 2/8/97 e-mail (SJ Opp'n Ex. 19).

To succeed on their tying claims, however, plaintiffs must do more than prove that Windows and IE are separate products. They must also show that Windows (the alleged tying product) is conditioned on the purchase of IE, and that the conditioning affects a "substantial volume of commerce" in the browser market. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462; Foster, 590 F.2d at 931. Microsoft contends that neither of those elements can be proved.

In order to prove the requisite "conditioning," plaintiffs must prove that licensees "might have preferred" not to license a browser, or to license it "elsewhere on different terms," Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12, and that Microsoft "coerces the abdication of [licensees'] independent judgment" as to the relative merits of competing browsers. See Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 605, 73 S.Ct. 872, 97 L.Ed. 1277 (1953); see also Service & Training, Inc. v. Data Gen. Corp., 963 F.2d 680, 684 (4th Cir.1992) ("The purpose of the inquiry into consumer demand is to determine whether there are customers who would, absent an illegal agreement, purchase the tied product without the tying product, and the tying product without the tied product."). Plaintiffs allege that Microsoft's goal was to "make people use IE instead of Navigator" by "leverag[ing] the [operating system]." See C. Wildfeuer 2/24/97 e-mail (emphasis supplied) (PI Ex. 23).

Microsoft argues that plaintiffs cannot satisfy the "conditioning" requirement of the tying test, because no OEM has been forced to purchase a separate product; IE technologies are included in a single royalty paid by OEMs for Windows 98. But as Professor Areeda has pointed out, "the tie may be obvious, as in the classic form, or somewhat more subtle, as when a machine is sold or leased at a price that covers 'free' servicing." See IIIA Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 760b6, at 51 (1996). Whether Microsoft invoices OEMs separately for Windows and IE or collects a single royalty of the same amount, it compels OEMs to take (and, one way or the other, to pay for) the entire package of software.

*13 Microsoft also disputes plaintiffs' claims that the Windows/IE combination affects a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the browser market. It argues that neither the design of Windows 98 nor the Windows licensing agreements appreciably impacts Netscape's ability to distribute its browser. OEMs are free to preinstall Netscape Navigator as an add-on (so long as they do not disturb IE) and several leading OEMs apparently do so.

But plaintiffs maintain that while OEMs may preinstall Netscape's browser (leaving IE itself in place, with no other icons or folders larger than IE's), the reality is that many OEMs hesitate to do so, mainly because they believe that too many icons and layers cause customer confusion, which could increase product support costs. OEMs bear the burden of providing technical support for the software they preinstall, a fact that creates a disincentive for preinstalling duplicative titles in a single product category. Furthermore, preinstalling two browsers would double the necessary product testing for OEMs. In fact, Microsoft has actually cited these factors itself to dissuade some OEMs from loading a second browser on their computers. See J. Kempin 10/2/97 Dep at 37. And Joachim Kempin, Microsoft's Senior Vice President of OEM Sales, agrees that OEMs "should be" concerned about installing two browsers on their machines. See id. at 31.

The volume of foreclosed commerce necessary to satisfy the tying standard need only be "substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume so as not to be merely de minimis." Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 501, 89 S.Ct. 1252, 22 L.Ed.2d 495 (1969) ($190,000 not an insubstantial amount, even though only a very small percentage of the market); see also Digidyne Corp. v. Data General Corp., 734 F.2d 1336, 1341, 1347 (9th Cir.1984) (citing Fortner). While plaintiffs do not cite a dollar value or a percentage of the market that is allegedly foreclosed, the facts are sufficiently in dispute to at least raise a genuine issue for trial. Furthermore, where, as here, products in the tied product market (browsers) are potential "partial substitutes" for the tying product, antitrust concerns are heightened because tying agreements not only reduce competition in the tied market, but also reinforce market power in the tying market. See X Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 1747 a-c, at 230-33 (1996); see also Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 795 (1st Cir.1988).

IV.

As Microsoft recognizes in its own internal communications, consumers are likely to select whatever Internet services (including browsers and IAPs) they see the first time they turn on their PC, see, e.g., M. Dunie 2/24/97 e-mail ("[O]nce everything is in the OS and right there, integrated into the OS ... there would be no more need to use something 'separate." ') (States' PI Ex. 1), and are unlikely to go through the trouble of switching. See, e.g., B. Chase 4/4/96 Planning Memo ("We know that it is very hard and expensive to make people switch") (States' PI Ex. 2).

*14 Plaintiffs allege that, in addition to "tying" IE to Windows, Microsoft sought to control the OEM channel of browser distribution by restricting OEMs' ability to alter the Windows "boot-up" sequence. [FN15] After the machine boots up, the user sees a default or "first" screen. The boot-up and first screen present a convenient opportunity for vendors of software and services to address potential customers, providing them with information about and access to their products, and for OEMs to communicate with their customers about configuration options.

> FN15. The "boot-up" sequence is the installation and configuration routine a PC goes through when a user turns it on.

When Windows 95 was first released, a number of OEMs who preinstalled Windows 95 customized the content and configurations of the computers' boot-up and first screens for various commercial reasons. Some OEMs altered the arrangement, number and content of icons and folders which accessed IAPs, Internet browsers and other software through the Windows 95 desktop. These OEMs struck deals with IAPs and ICPs that earned revenue for OEMs and garnered customers for the IAPs and ICPs. In an internal e-mail, Bill Gates wrote of his concern that OEMs were bundling non-Microsoft browsers and "coming up with offerings together with Internet Service providers that get displayed on their machines in a FAR more prominent way than ... our Internet browser" and that those offerings were interfering with the "very very important goal" of "[w]inning Internet browser share." B. Gates 1/5/96 e-mail (PI Ex. 45) (emphasis in original).

Allegedly to address this concern, Microsoft, as a condition of licensing Windows 98, began prohibiting OEMs from adding to the sequence of screens every user sees in the boot-up sequence and from modifying the first screen displayed to the user at the conclusion of the boot-up sequence. [FN16] OEMs could not remove folders or icons from the Windows desktop, create icons or folders larger than those placed by Microsoft on the desktop, and could not alter the boot-up sequence by, for instance, presenting an OEM-created screen that would highlight a choice of Internet browsers or the OEM's own Internet offerings. Plaintiffs contend that the boot and start-up screen restrictions amount to an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of § 1.

> FN16. Several OEMs, including Micron, Hewlett Packard, and Gateway, have requested that Microsoft allow them to provide new PC purchasers with an alternative boot-up sequence or first screen, but Microsoft has refused.

The restrictions are subject to a "rule of reason" analysis, and are unlawful only if they injure competition by restricting competitors' output more than they further Microsoft's legitimate objectives, see, e.g., National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 98 S.Ct. 1355, 55 L.Ed.2d 637 (1978); American Ad Management, Inc. v.. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 791 (9th Cir.1996), or if Microsoft's objectives could be achieved by a less restrictive means, see Sullivan v. NFL, 34 F.3d 1091, 1103 (1st Cir.1994).

Microsoft argues that its OEM license agreements merely highlight and expressly state the rights that Microsoft already enjoys under federal copyright law. Consequently, it contends, the agreements are not subject to challenge under the antitrust laws. According to Microsoft, the license agreements merely require that the very first time a consumer turns on his new computer, Microsoft's copyrighted operating system be allowed to go through its initial startup sequence as designed, developed and tested by Microsoft and to display the Windows "desktop" screen without any aspects of that screen having been altered by the OEM.

Furthermore, copyright law does not give Microsoft blanket authority to license (or refuse to license) its intellectual property as it sees fit. A copyright does not give its holder immunity from laws of general applicability, including the antitrust laws. See Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Supp. Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1185 n. 63 (1st Cir.1994) ("It is in any event well settled that concerted and contractual behavior that threatens competition is not immune from antitrust inquiry simply because it involves the exercise of copyright privileges."). Copyright holders are restricted in their ability to extend their control to other markets. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 479 n. 29, 112 S.Ct. 2072, 119 L.Ed.2d 265 (1992) ("The Court has held many times that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next.") (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). They may not prevent the development and use of interoperable programs by competitors. See, e.g., DSC Communications Corp. v. DGI Techs. Inc., 81 F.3d 597, 601 (5th Cir.1996) (likely copyright misuse to use copyright in a computer program operating a telephone switch to prevent a competitor from designing and testing a compatible switch using copyright holder's protocol). Antitrust liability may also attach to other anticompetitive licensing restrictions involving copyrighted works. See, e.g., Practice Management Info. Corp. v. American Med. Ass'n, 121 F.3d 516, 520-21 (9th Cir.1997) (finding copyright misuse where copyright owner entered into license agreements restricting licensees from competing with it), amended by, 133 F.3d 1140 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 118 S.Ct. 2367, --- L.Ed.2d ---- (1998); Lasercomb Am., Inc. v. Reynolds, 911 F.2d 970 (4th Cir.1990) (same).

16 In addition to claiming a right to "exclude" licensees as it sees fit, Microsoft cites the Second Circuit's opinion in Gilliam v. ABC, 538 F.2d 14 (2d Cir.1976), recognizing a copyright holder's "moral right of integrity" where a copyrighted work was significantly changed, or "mutilated," but still promoted under its original name. But the Gilliam court acknowledged the lack of statutory or doctrinal support in copyright law for the right it recognized, see Gilliam, 538 F.2d at 24, and ultimately grounded its decision in trademark law. Id. at 24-25. Several subsequent decisions considering Gilliam have declined to endorse the "moral right"argument Microsoft advances. See, e.g., Halicki v. United Artists Communications, Inc., 812 F.2d 1213, 1214 (9th Cir.1987); Weinstein v. University of Illinois, 811 F.2d 1091, 1095 n. 3 (7th Cir.1987); Paramount Pictures Corp. v. Video Broad. Sys, Inc., 724 F.Supp. 808, 820 (D.Kan.1989).

Moreover, whatever policy justifications that may exist for a moral right of integrity in works of art are substantially weaker when the work at issue is a computer program, whose value lies in its functionality, not its artistry. The Copyright Act itself expressly allows owners of a copy of a computer program to "adapt" it in certain circumstances without the copyright owner's permission. See 17 U.S.C. § 117; see also Aymes v. Bonelli, 47 F.3d 23 (2d Cir.1995). Although Microsoft undoubtedly enjoys some "right against mutilation" in its software, there are significant factual questions in dispute on this issue, chief among them the extent of copyright protection in the specific portions of the software plaintiffs seek to modify.

Microsoft also claims that the boot and start-up screen restrictions are justified by legitimate business reasons, each of which is disputed by plaintiffs. For example, the restrictions purportedly ensure a "stable and consistent platform" for ISVs who must know that the software code that provides required system services ("APIs") will be present on every computer. In response, plaintiffs contend that the necessary APIs would be unaffected by alterations to the Windows boot-up sequence, modifications to the contents of desktop folders, or creation of icons of different shapes and sizes.

Microsoft also insists that the restrictions are necessary to ensure a "consistent user experience across multiple brands of computers." But plaintiffs point out that Microsoft permits OEM modifications that do not affect the browser, even though such modifications may result in an "inconsistent user experience." For example, Microsoft grants exceptions to the screen restrictions for some OEM tutorials and "system check" applications. See J. Kempin (Microsoft) 3/18/98 Dep., 58:24--59:25. It permits some OEMs to display their own ISP sign-up software before the Windows 98 boot-process is completed for the first time, and permits OEMs to preload the software of their choice, subject to Microsoft's license restrictions. Removal by OEMs of the IE icon would not, plaintiffs argue, affect the overall "look and feel" of Windows any more than adding various software (which Microsoft permits). Similarly, the "look and feel" would not be affected by permitting OEMs to install icons of different sizes, plaintiffs contend.

*17 Finally, Microsoft claims that the restrictions are necessary to "preserve Microsoft's reputation as a supplier of quality operating system software and enhance[ ] the value of Microsoft's brand name." See Gilliam, 538 F.2d at 18-19 (reputational injury resulting from unauthorized alteration of copyrighted work is irreparable). But plaintiffs argue that this "quality control" defense is implausible. Microsoft requires OEMs to bear the cost of providing post-sale software support for the computers they sell. Accordingly, OEMs are unlikely to take any action that will do anything to increase the likelihood that customers will call them for technical assistance.

Regardless of the viability of its justifications for the agreements, Microsoft contends that there is no antitrust violation because there is no market foreclosure. OEMs are free to configure the computers so that on all subsequent occasions (after the initial boot) they will boot directly into an alternative "shell" (such as Netscape Communicator). But several OEMs (and Microsoft executives) have expressed their belief that, while the licenses technically allow OEMs to engineer a mechanism for "user-initiated" action after the first boot-up is complete to alter the Microsoft-required screens, these factors are of negligible value to OEMs. It is both costly and time- consuming for OEMs to develop such a mechanism, plaintiffs contend. See B. Chase (Microsoft) 3/1/96 e-mail ("most OEMs won't go through the hassle to develop such a DOS utility") (PI Ex. 43); J. Kempin (Microsoft) 3/18/98 Dep., 62:2--63:10; R. Brownrigg (Gateway 2000) Dep., 49:15--51:2; F. Santos (Hewlett-Packard) Dep., 29:11--30:15.

Numerous issues remain genuinely in dispute on the boot and start-up screen claim. These include the extent of copyright protection in the specific portions of software plaintiffs seek to modify and whether Microsoft abused its copyright for anticompetitive purposes. Plaintiffs also contest the legitimacy of Microsoft's claimed business justifications and Microsoft's claims that the restrictions do not foreclose competitors' opportunities.

Since May 1995, plaintiffs allege, Microsoft has substantially foreclosed non- Microsoft browsers from the IAP and ICP distribution channels by relying on its operating system monopoly to coerce IAPs and ICPs into entering into what amount to "exclusive dealing" arrangements. Plaintiffs claim that, in return for placement on Microsoft's coveted Windows desktop the content of which Microsoft controls by virtue of the boot and start-up screen restrictions), providers reluctantly agreed to distribute and promote IE and not to distribute and/ or promote competitive browsers.

For example, plaintiffs assert, Microsoft reached agreements with the largest OLSs, including America Online, CompuServe, and Prodigy, by which Microsoft undertook to include an icon for the OLSs' client software both in the "Online Services" folder [FN17] that is displayed on the Windows desktop, and in the Windows "Start" menu. Pursuant to the agreements, Microsoft must also invest in the support and development of improved versions of the OLSs' client software. In return, the OLSs agree to: (1) distribute and promote IE to their subscribers as the "exclusive" or "primary" browser, and not to distribute a non-Microsoft browser unless a customer specifically requests it; (2) eliminate links on their Web sites from which their subscribers could download a competing browser; (3) refrain from "expressing or implying" to their subscribers that a competing browser is available (and even from displaying a logo for a non-Microsoft browser on the OLS's home page or elsewhere); (4) limit the percentage of competing browsers they distribute to 15%, even in response to specific requests from customers; and (5) design their Web sites using Microsoft-specific, proprietary programming extensions so that those sites look better when viewed with IE than when viewed through a competing browser.

FN17. This folder contains the icons of the various providers. When the user "double-clicks" the icon, he is connected to the provider and permitted to "sign up" for the provider's service.

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*18 A number of ISPs agreed to similar terms in return for Microsoft's agreement to include them in a list of providers that are shown to an end-user who selects his Internet access provider using a Windows 98 feature called the Internet Connection Wizard ("ICW"). When a user elects to use the ICW, Windows dials into a computer maintained by Microsoft that transmits to the user a list of participating ISPs. If the user decides to sign up for an ISP's service, Windows connects him to a computer maintained by that ISP, and the user's computer is automatically configured to work properly with the Internet connection provided by that ISP. In return, ISPs pay Microsoft a referral fee for each customer referred to them through the ICW and agree to terms similar to those in the OLS agreements.

The third group of providers entering into such agreements with Microsoft were ICPs. One of IE 4.0's new features is the provision of "channels" that appear on the right side of the Windows desktop screen after IE 4.0 is installed. Channel buttons are icons on the Windows desktop screen that, when clicked, lead the user directly to a particular content provider's Web site or service, [FN18] without having to sign on to the Internet through some intermediary step. In order to gain prominent "channel placement," certain ICPs agreed: (1) not to compensate the manufacturer of an "other browser" [FN19] (including by distributing its browser) for the distribution, marketing, or promotion of the ICP's content; (2) not to promote any browser produced by any manufacturer of an "other browser"; (3) not to allow any manufacturer of an "other browser" to promote and highlight the ICP's channel content on or for its browsers; and (4) to design its Web sites using Microsoft-specific, proprietary programming extensions so that those sites look better when viewed with IE than when viewed through a competing browser.

FN18. Examples include The Disney Channel and a channel, developed by Intuit, providing financial software and services.

FN19. For purposes of the ICP agreements, "other browsers" include the top two browsers (exclusive of IE) by browser share.

Plaintiffs contend that providers sometimes agreed to Microsoft's terms despite their preference not to be locked into exclusive browser distribution agreements. CompuServe, the nation's second-largest OLS, for example, expressed its preference "to have flexibility in software" that it distributes. See K. Knott Dep. at 25:4-5. An MCI executive testified that his company would have liked to "have had the flexibility to be able to promote other browsers should there be a marketing advantage to do so." See S. Von Rump (MCI) Dep. at 11:15- 17. And AT & T told Microsoft that it wanted to remain "browser neutral," and that the "level of exclusivity" demanded by Microsoft was problematic for AT & T's partnership with Netscape. See D. Steele (Microsoft) 3/14/96 e-mail (PI Ex. 58); B. Silverberg Dep., 170:21--171:5. Nevertheless, plaintiffs contend, these providers acceded to Microsoft's restrictions in order to gain access to the nearly ubiquitous Windows desktop. For example, Microsoft allegedly told AT & T during negotiations: "You want to be part of the Windows box, you're going to have to do something special for us ... If you want that preferential treatment from us ... we're going to want something very extraordinary from you." See B. Silverberg Dep. at 159:10-16.

*19 Exclusive dealing arrangements pose two related, but distinct antitrust concerns. First, they threaten to eliminate opportunities for products unable to find ample other outlets to the marketplace. Second, they raise the barriers to entry in a market because, in order to enter, producers will have to be vertically integrated (i .e., they will have to operate at both the manufacturing and retailing levels).

Recognizing potentially pro-competitive rationales for such agreements, see, e.g., Omega Envtl., Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1162 (9th Cir.1997) ("well-recognized economic benefits to exclusive dealing arrangements"), petition for cert. filed, 66 U.S.L.W. 3750 (U.S. May 11, 1998) (No. 97-1828), courts are obliged to apply a "rule of reason" analysis. See, e.g., Roland Mach. Co. v. Dresser Indus., 749 F.2d 380, 393 (7th Cir.1984) (rule of reason must be applied to exclusive dealing). As a threshold matter, courts generally determine whether a "substantial share of the relevant market" is foreclosed. See Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 328-29, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961). Once foreclosure of a sufficient percentage is found, courts consider the agreements' actual impact on competition (as opposed to merely the foreclosed market share), see Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580; see also Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 478-79 (7th Cir.1988); Interface Group v. Massachusetts Port Auth. ., 816 F.2d 9, 11-12 (1st Cir.1987), and any procompetitive justifications that may outweigh anticompetitive effects.

In considering the degree of foreclosure, it is important to remember that the relevant figure is the share of the browser market that is foreclosed by the challenged agreements, and not Microsoft's total browser share. Plaintiffs do not need to show that Microsoft's competitors are completely excluded from the marketplace. Cf. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S.Ct. 2847, 86 L.Ed.2d 467 (1985) (competitor never contended that the joint marketing program at issue was essential to its survival, but rather that it impeded its marketing efforts). Nevertheless, plaintiffs must establish foreclosure on the order of greater than 40% to prevail on their exclusive dealing claims. See, e.g., United States v. Dairymen, Inc., 758 F.2d 654 (6th Cir.1985) (unpublished) (50% sufficient); Sewell Plastics, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 720 F.Supp. 1196, 1212-14 (W.D.N.C.1989) (40% insufficient); Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 656 F.Supp. 760 (D.Mont.1987) (84% sufficient). Plaintiffs must also establish the extent to which exclusive dealing contracts are imposed on other resellers in the market. See Chuck's Feed & Seed Co., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 810 F.2d 1289, 1295 (4th Cir.1987) (j .n.o.v. for defendant where plaintiff failed to show extent to which exclusive dealing was used in the market as a whole).

Without citing a specific percentage of the market that is allegedly foreclosed, plaintiffs allege that Microsoft has entered into agreements with the "largest and most important" ISPs and OLSs and the "largest and most popular" ICPs. The OLSs in Microsoft's Online Services folder include America Online, CompuServe, Prodigy, AT & T WorldNet and Microsoft Network, which, according to plaintiffs, collectively account for over 53% of the total North American subscriber base for Internet access. See Microsoft 1/23/98 Internet Customer Unit FY '98 Mid-Year Review (SJ Opp'n Ex. 26). In 1997, Microsoft estimated that 43% of home users access the Internet through AOL alone. See Microsoft April 1997 IE Market Review (PI Ex. 54). And one Microsoft executive has estimated Internet Explorer's share of usage among AOL subscribers as 92%. See C. Myhrvold 1/13/98 e-mail (SJ Opp'n Ex. 80).

> FN20. In September 1996, Microsoft executive Brad Chase estimated that at least 31% of Internet users get their browsers from an IAP. See B. Chase 9/9/96 e-mail.

Microsoft contends that Netscape and other competitors are not foreclosed from the marketplace, and that the availability to Netscape and others of alternative channels of distribution, including the possibility of direct sales to end users, by itself is fatal to an exclusive dealing claim. See, e.g., Omega Envtl., 127 F.3d at 1162-63; Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1573 (11th Cir.1991); Stitt Spark Plug Co. v. Champion Spark Plug Co., 840 F.2d 1253, 1258 (5th Cir.1988). Microsoft claims that Netscape has arrangements with thousands of ISPs and ICPs, who include "Netscape Now" buttons on their Web sites that facilitate the electronic downloading of Navigator. Netscape also apparently has arrangements with leading ISVs such as Corel, IBM, Novell, Oracle and Sun, and various OEMs who pre-install Navigator on their computers. Netscape executives testified that the company, through these and other channels, will distribute between 150 and 170 million copies of its browser this year alone.

But Netscape's CEO also testified that the ISP channel is one of the principal means through which Netscape has historically distributed its browser, and that other methods of distribution cannot make up for the lack of access to the ISP and OEM channels.

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Netscape's principal remaining channel for distributing its browser is to permit users to download it from a Netscape Web site, but Microsoft itself recognizes the decreasing viability of browser distribution through downloads, as browsers increase in complexity and size, resulting in inordinately long download times and a high rate of failure. See Myhrvold Dep., 152:19--153:4; J. Belfiore Dep. at 45:2-16; B. Chase 11/19/97 e-mail (PI Ex. 73). Microsoft's Carl Stork, who oversaw the development of Windows 95 and Windows 98, testified that having a browser preinstalled on a PC when a user buys it avoids the "painstaking" process of downloading, which is "fraught with risk," and reduces support calls and the potential for errors. See Stork Dep. at 42-43.

In addition to disputing the percentage of the market that may be foreclosed by the agreements in question, the parties disagree about numerous other factors courts consider in determining whether competition in the relevant market is actually affected. Microsoft argues that, since the OLS arrangements are short-term, they cannot unreasonably restrain trade. See, e.g., Omega Envtl., 127 F.3d at 1163-64. [FN21] Excluding the agreement with AOL, which expires on January 1, 2001, all of Microsoft's OLS agreements expire either this year or next. See Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., Inc., 676 F.2d 1291 (9th Cir.1982) (condemning contracts in excess of ten years); Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 236-38 (1st Cir.1983) (approving two-year contracts); Roland Mach., 749 F.2d at 394-95 (approving agreements that could be terminated on one year notice). This factor may be appropriate to consider in a final determination of whether the agreements unreasonably restrain trade. It is, however, only one among many factors the Court will consider and does not admit of, much less compel summary judgment for Microsoft on this claim.

> FN21. Microsoft also argues that since it has unilaterally waived the challenged provisions of its ISP and ICP agreements, the claims related to those agreements are moot. But the Court retains jurisdiction to consider even the "waived" practices if they caused anticompetitive effects. See Northwest Envtl. Defense Ctr. v. Gordon, 849 F.2d 1241, 1245 (9th Cir.1988) ("The fact that the alleged violation has itself ceased is not sufficient to render a case moot. As long as effective relief may still be available to counteract the effects of the violation, the controversy remains live and present."). "[V]oluntary cessation of allegedly illegal conduct" does "not make the case moot." United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632, 73 S.Ct. 894, 97 L.Ed. 1303 (1953). Where the "defendant is free to return to his old ways," id., it must demonstrate that it is "absolutely clear" that "the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 487, 100 S.Ct. 1254, 63 L.Ed.2d 552 (1980) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). Microsoft has not made such a showing.

21 Microsoft also argues that the limitations on OLSs are justified to prevent "free-riding" by other browser manufacturers on Microsoft's investment in support for the development of improved versions of OLSs' software the agreements commit it to undertake. See generally Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 55, 97 S.Ct. 2549, 53 L.Ed.2d 568 (1977) (preventing free riding may justify certain vertical restraints); see also American Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 521 F.2d 1230, 1252 (3d Cir.1975) (hotel chain's exclusionary agreements with franchisees justified, in part, by chain's desire to strengthen its position vis-a-vis its competitors); Joyce Beverages v. Royal Crown Cola Co., 555 F.Supp. 271, 278 (S.D.N.Y.1983) (recognizing exclusive dealing as a means of assuring that retailer "devotes undivided loyalty to its particular brand and that it competes vigorously against all competing brands."). But "[w]hen payment is possible, free-riding is not a problem because the 'ride' is not free." Chicago Prof'l Sports, Ltd. Partnership v. NBA, 961 F.2d 667, 675 (7th Cir.1992) (Easterbrook, J.). In other words, in order to recoup its investment, Microsoft could simply charge OLSs a fee rather than extract exclusionary rights.

Microsoft views its ISP agreements as nothing more than "commonplace cross- marketing arrangements." See Chuck's Feed & Seed, 810 F.2d at 1295 (considering extent to which exclusive dealing was used in the market as a whole). For example, Netscape has similar agreements with all five of the regional Bell operating companies ("RBOCs"), providing that Navigator must be the default browser for all customers who do not specifically request an alternative. But plaintiffs point out that the Netscape restrictions will automatically terminate in the event that Microsoft's restrictions on AT & T and MCI are eliminated. See

Solnik Dep. at 79:2-22; Beran Dep. at 49-52; Barksdale Dep. at 220-21. Moreover, those agreements (unlike Microsoft's) do not require that the RBOCs ship Navigator as a certain minimum percentage of their browsers. And the ISPs in Microsoft's Internet referral server have a combined base of over 4.3 million subscribers, compared to the 625,000 subscribers to the RBOCs. See Microsoft 1/28/98 ISP Marketing Update (SJ Opp'n Ex. 25).

Microsoft also points out that its ISP agreements involve only eleven of the more than 4,500 ISPs in the United States and, once again, are short term, typically no longer than one or two years. Moreover, Microsoft points out, the customers of the eleven ISPs appear to be using Netscape's Web browsing software and IE in about the same proportion as Internet users generally. While that may be true, Microsoft's own documents, see Microsoft 1/26/98 Referral Server Business Plan (SJ Opp'n Ex. 40), show that IE's share of browser usage is much higher among subscribers to ISPs that have been subject to its agreements since mid-1996 than among subscribers to ISPs that entered into agreements in mid- or late 1997. This supports plaintiffs' argument that the agreements have had a substantial role in increasing Microsoft's browser share.

22 In summary, the record to date discloses many material issues of fact genuinely in dispute on plaintiffs' exclusive dealing claims. Chief among them is the degree to which the browser market is foreclosed and the actual effect the agreements have had on competition. Also hotly in dispute is whether the arrangements serve legitimate business purposes that might outweigh any anticompetitive effect. Microsoft claims that consumers benefit by easier access to the Internet; ISPs included in its referral server and OLSs in the Online Services folder benefit by opening the door to a new source of customers; and Microsoft itself benefits by receiving referral fees from the providers and promotion of its browser technologies. But see Myhrvold Dep. at 137:6-7. (explaining that the referral server "doesn't even pay for itself, much less generate any profits").

Furthermore, any claimed benefit "cannot outweigh its harm to competition, if a reasonable, less restrictive alternative to the policy exists that would provide the same benefits" as the challenged policies. See Sullivan v. NFL, 34 F.3d 1091, 1103 (1st Cir.1994). This difficult balancing of potentially legitimate business justifications against what plaintiffs contend are exclusionary effects are fact-bound questions that generally cannot be resolved on summary judgment. See, e.g., Betaseed, Inc. v. U & I, Inc., 681 F.2d 1203, 1228-30 (9th Cir.1982) (explaining that "the reasonableness of a restrictive practice is a paradigm fact question" and reversing grant of summary judgment for defendant on rule of reason claim).

VI.

Plaintiffs contend that Microsoft has monopoly power in Intel-compatible PC operating systems, the relevant product market in this case, and that its monopoly is reinforced by high barriers to entry and network effects. Plaintiffs also allege that Microsoft has "willfully" maintained that monopoly by engaging in anticompetitive conduct, including the tying [FN22] and other alleged § 1 violations discussed supra, aimed at eradicating competition in the browser market, which it perceives as a threat to its operating system monopoly. This conduct, plaintiffs contend, lacks any legitimate business justification.

> FN22. By using monopoly power to compel a customer to purchase a product it might prefer to purchase elsewhere, a monopolist "forecloses competition on the merits in a product market distinct from the market for the tying item." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 22, 104 S.Ct. 1551, 80 L.Ed.2d 2 (1984). "[B]y doing so, the [monopolist] may build a strong market position in [the tied product market]; and that position [in the tied product market], in turn, may increase its power" in its monopoly product. Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 795 (1st Cir.1988).

In order to succeed on their claims of illegal monopolization, plaintiffs must prove: (1) Microsoft's possession of monopoly power in a relevant market; and (2) the "willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 16 L.Ed.2d 778 (1966). For purposes of summary judgment, Microsoft concedes its possession of monopoly power in the market for Intel- compatible PC operating systems. Accordingly, the Court must deny summary judgment on the monopolization claim if there are disputed facts regarding whether Microsoft has "willfully" maintained its alleged monopoly.

23 A monopolist's conduct that violates § 1 necessarily violates § 2. See United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 106, 68 S.Ct. 941, 92 L.Ed. 1236 (1948); Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 239 (1st Cir.1983). Since the Court found sufficient facts to be in dispute to preclude summary judgment for defendant on plaintiffs' § 1 allegations, summary judgment is ipso facto precluded on the monopolization claims. Furthermore, a monopolist's conduct that does not rise to the level of a § 1 violation may nevertheless violate § 2 if it "impair[s] competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way." Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605, 105 S.Ct. 2847, 86 L.Ed.2d 467 (1985); see also Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 149, 72 S.Ct. 181, 96 L.Ed. 162 (1951). As Justice Scalia wrote in Eastman Kodak, "[w]here a defendant maintains substantial market power, his activities are examined through a special lens: Behavior that might otherwise not be of concern to the antitrust laws--or that might even be viewed as procompetitive--can take on exclusionary connotations when practiced by a monopolist." 504 U.S. at 488 (Scalia, J., dissenting); see also Berkey Photo v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 274-75 (2d Cir.1979). These are quintessential fact questions and are genuinely disputed.

Plaintiffs also contend that Microsoft is unlawfully attempting to monopolize the market for Internet browsers. In order to prevail on this claim, plaintiffs must prove that Microsoft: (1) engaged in predatory or anticompetitive behavior (2) with a specific intent to monopolize and, that (3) there is a "dangerous probability" of its achieving monopoly power. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S.Ct. 884, 122 L.Ed.2d 247 (1993); see also International Distribution Ctrs. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 790 (2d Cir.1987); William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., Inc., 668 F.2d 1014, 1027 (9th Cir.1981).

The Supreme Court has held that intent to injure or destroy a rival and to expand one's own business are, standing alone, insufficient to produce an antitrust violation. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 125 L.Ed.2d 168 (1993); see also Abcor Corp. v. AM Int'l, Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 927 (4th Cir.1990); Morgan v. Ponder, 892 F.2d 1355, 1359 (8th Cir.1989) (statements such as "we'll do whatever it takes" are "often legitimately used by business people in the heat of competition"); Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 541 (7th Cir.1986) (because "[a]ll lawful competition aims to defeat and drive out competitors," the "mere intention to exclude competition and to expand one's own business is not sufficient to show a specific intent to monopolize"); Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp., 691 F.2d 818, 826 (6th Cir.1982). The intent must be "something more than an intent to compete vigorously." See Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459.

24 As Professor Hovenkamp points out, "[i]ntent to 'exclude' is consistent with both efficient practices (research and development) and inefficient ones (predatory pricing)." See Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy 252 (1994). Consequently, courts are hesitant to decide cases as a matter of law where the evidence of intent is ambiguous. See, e.g., U.S. Phillips Corp. v. Windmere Corp., 861 F.2d 695, 698-703 (Fed.Cir.1988) (letting jury decide whether internal memoranda containing statements such as "let's pound [our competitors] into the sand" were simply sales talk or sufficient evidence of anticompetitive intent).

In Spectrum Sports the Supreme Court held that improper intent may be inferred from objective evidence such as predatory conduct. See 506 U.S. at 459 ("Unfair or predatory conduct may be sufficient to prove the necessary intent to monopolize."); see also William Inglis & Sons, 668 F.2d at 1027; United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296 (8th Cir.1976). The same facts that preclude summary judgment on plaintiffs' § 1 allegations, if proven, might be sufficient for the Court to infer an improper intent from that behavior.

Plaintiffs also contend that Microsoft's specific intent to monopolize the browser market can be inferred from its attempt to solicit its major competitor, Netscape, to participate in an illegal market allocation scheme. Cf. United States v.

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1121 (5th Cir.1984) (a solicitation to form a cartel in a concentrated market, even if the solicitation is rejected, can in itself constitute an attempt to monopolize). While Microsoft vigorously disputes plaintiffs' account of the June 21, 1995 meeting with Netscape, plaintiffs' evidence is sufficient to create a genuine dispute. Chris Jones, Microsoft's then Group Manager for Internet Explorer, participated in that meeting. In deposition testimony, Mr. Jones indicated that Microsoft "absolutely" intended to persuade Netscape not to compete and offered as a quid pro quo the prospect of Microsoft's staying out of browser development for non-Windows platforms. See Jones Dep., 208:5-- 209:6; 211:22--212:6. Plaintiffs allege that Microsoft's offer was part of a larger pattern of conduct that included similar discussions with Intel, Apple, and Real Networks. See infra at 11.

The test of conduct necessary to prove an attempt claim is, of course, substantially more demanding than the requirements for illegal monopolization. See, e.g., Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. IBM, 698 F.2d 1377, 1382 (9th Cir.1983) (if conduct is not monopolization, it is not attempt either). The conduct must be sufficiently hostile toward competition so as to be branded "predatory," meaning an attempt to drive rivals from the market or to deter their entry. See Neumann v. Reinforced Earth Co., 786 F.2d 424, 427 (D.C.Cir.1986). In support of their "attempt" claims, plaintiffs cite, among other behavior, the same conduct that supports their claims of tying and other unlawful restraints of trade. While Microsoft repeats its claims that it did not engage in any predatory behavior, the relevant facts are, as previously discussed, genuinely in dispute.

25 To sustain the attempted monopolization claim, plaintiffs must also prove a "dangerous probability" of Microsoft's succeeding in its effort to monopolize the market for Internet browsers. To prove a "dangerous probability," courts generally require plaintiffs to show that a defendant has a certain minimum market share. In Lorain Journal v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 72 S.Ct. 181, 96 L.Ed. 162 (1951), for example, the Supreme Court upheld a judgment that a newspaper had attempted to monopolize the sale of advertising by refusing to deal with advertisers who purchased advertising from a local radio station. The Supreme Court took particular note of the newspaper's market power and the likelihood that the boycott would eventually eliminate the broadcaster-competitor. See id. at 152-54.

The Fourth Circuit has articulated the market share requirement as follows: "(1) claims of less than 30% market shares should presumptively be rejected; (2) claims involving between 30% and 50% shares should usually be rejected, except when conduct is very likely to achieve monopoly or when conduct is invidious ...; (3) claims involving greater than 50% share should be treated as attempts at monopolization when the other elements for attempted monopolization are also satisfied." See M & M Med. Supplies & Serv. v. Pleasant Valley Hosp., 981 F.2d 160, 168 (4th Cir.1992) (en banc).

According to plaintiffs, the latest data from a commercial market research firm show that as of February 1998, Internet Explorer had a 58% share of the browser market, with Navigator at 40%. See Sibley Decl. ¶ 29 & Table 3. Courts have found a dangerous probability of success on a comparable share of the market. See, e.g., McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d 1487, 1506 (11th Cir.1988) ("[A] sixty or sixty-five percent market share is a sufficiently large platform ... to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether ... [the defendant] would succeed in achieving a monopoly."); Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Indus., 845 F.2d 404, 409 (2d Cir.1988) (55% share sufficient), aff'd, 492 U.S. 257, 109 S.Ct. 2909, 106 L.Ed.2d 219 (1989).

Microsoft agrees that its browser "usage share" has increased in the last several years. It argues, however, that IE's success is due to the rapid addition of features and functionality, rather than any anticompetitive conduct. Moreover, Microsoft also contends that Netscape is still the market leader: Netscape's own June 1998 internal marketing studies show that the usage share for Navigator is 56.7% while IE's share is 37.2%. Microsoft correctly points out that courts rarely find a market share between 30% and 50% sufficient to establish a dangerous probability of monopolization. See, e.g., U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 1001 (11th Cir.1993) (less than 50% market share insufficient "as a matter of law"); Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1415 (7th Cir.1989) (nearly 50% share insufficient); Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv. of Am., 651 F.2d 122, 129 (2d Cir.1981) (share below 50% precludes finding of dangerous probability absent "significant evidence concerning the market structure to show that the defendant's share ... gives it monopoly power").

26 Microsoft also argues that, regardless of market share, in order to prove attempted monopolization, plaintiffs must show that the structure of the browser market lends itself to monopolization. See Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of Am., 885 F.2d 683, 694 (10th Cir.1989) (defendant must have "the ability to propel itself to monopolistic control over the market"). Microsoft argues that the "fast-moving nature of the software business--where no single firm can gain control over productive assets"--makes it highly unlikely that any firm could ever acquire the power to control prices or exclude competition, regardless of its market share. See, e.g., Dial A Car, Inc. v. Transportation, Inc., 82 F.3d 484, 486-87 (D.C.Cir.1996) (no unlawful attempt absent indication that monopolization of corporate car service business in District of Columbia is even possible). Plaintiffs disagree, contending that the structure of the browser market--like the operating system market--lends itself to dominance by one firm.

The statements of Microsoft executives, when considered in conjunction with other evidence of anticompetitive behavior (including the evidence supporting the § 1 claims as well as evidence that Microsoft may have sought to induce Netscape to agree to an illegal market allocation), at least raises a question as to Microsoft's intent to monopolize the browser market. Plaintiffs, of course, must prove that Microsoft intended to do more than "compete vigorously." Similarly, whether or not Microsoft's conduct was "predatory" is not an issue that can be properly decided as a matter of law. And whether Microsoft may be deemed to have a "dangerous probability" of monopolizing the browser market depends primarily on Microsoft's and Netscape's relative shares of the browser market, a question that is sharply disputed. Consequently, the Court must deny Microsoft's motion for summary judgment on plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claims.

VII.

The States bring a separate claim of monopoly "leveraging" under § 2. Under this theory, first recognized by the Second Circuit in dictum [FN23] in Berkey Photo v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 276 (2d Cir.1979), a seller who has a monopoly in one product violates § 2 when it uses a tie-in to obtain a competitive advantage in a second market, "even if there has not been an attempt to monopolize the second market." See id. (ultimately not finding liability on this theory) (emphasis supplied).

> FN23. See Twin Lab., Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 570 (2d Cir.1990) (Second Circuit characterizing its Berkey Photo leveraging language as dictum).

The continuing viability of the monopoly leveraging theory is in serious doubt. The Supreme Court has offered conflicting views on the theory. In a footnote to Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, 504 U.S. 451, 479 n. 29, 112 S.Ct. 2072, 119 L.Ed.2d 265 (1992), the Supreme Court observed that it had "held many times that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next." Less than a year later, however, the Supreme Court noted that " § 2 makes the conduct of a single firm unlawful only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so." See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S.Ct. 884, 122 L.Ed.2d 247 (1993). And in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 775, 104 S.Ct. 2731, 81 L.Ed.2d 628 (1984), the Supreme Court noted that "[b]ecause the Sherman Act does not prohibit unreasonable restraints of trade as such--but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy--it leaves untouched a single firm's anticompetitive conduct (short of threatened monopolization)." (emphasis supplied).

27 While those statements were dicta in cases not involving a "leveraging" claim as such, several courts have either rejected the theory outright or expressed extreme doubts about its viability. For example, in Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 548 (9th Cir.1991), the Ninth Circuit flatly rejected Berkey Photo 's theory, holding that, "[u]nless the monopolist uses its power in the first market to acquire and maintain a monopoly in the second market, or to attempt to do so, there is no Section 2 violation." Similarly, in Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 205 (3d Cir.1992), the Third Circuit relied on Copperweld in holding that "Berkey Photo 's formulation of monopoly leveraging to proscribe unilateral restraints of trade does violence to the text of the Sherman Act." But see Kerasotes Mich. Theatres v. National Amusements, Inc., 854 F.2d 135, 138 (6th Cir.1988) (reversing dismissal of leverage claim).

The D.C. Circuit has never spoken definitively on the leveraging theory, but has noted "substantial academic criticism cast upon the leveraging concept." See Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women v. NCAA, 735 F.2d 577, 586 & n. 14 (D.C.Cir.1984). Professor Hovenkamp agrees that the idea that a seller can use a tie-in to enlarge monopoly profits has been "condemned repeatedly by commentators." See Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy 371 (1994). Assuming that Microsoft has an operating system monopoly and browsers are being sold competitively, Microsoft's incentive is to extract all available monopoly profits from the OS/browser combination. Accordingly, it already prices its operating system at the monopoly profit-maximizing price, considering what consumers are willing to pay for the entire package. Even if Microsoft were to obtain a monopoly in the market for browsers, the profit- maximizing price for the combination wouldn't change; Microsoft could not make additional monopoly profits even by monopolizing the browser market as well. See Hirsh v. Martindale-Hubbell, Inc., 674 F.2d 1343, 1349 n. 19 (9th Cir.1982).

In fact, the Ninth Circuit noted that "leveraging" may actually "tend to undermine monopoly power,"see Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 549 (emphasis in original), since "[e]very time the monopolist asserts its market dominance on a firm in the leveraged market, the leveraged firm has more incentive to find an alternative supplier, which in turn gives alternate suppliers more reason to think they can compete with the monopolist." Id.

The Court will grant Microsoft's motion for summary judgment on the States' leveraging claim. While the Supreme Court has not considered a leveraging claim per se, it has clearly stated that a firm violates § 2 only when it actually monopolizes or dangerously threatens to do so. The Third and Ninth Circuits and many commentators have rejected the theory outright, as contrary to both economic theory and the Sherman Act's plain language.

VIII.

28 Finally, Microsoft contends that the States' pendent state-law claims, seeking to force Microsoft to alter its copyrighted operating system software (and to allow OEMs to do so), directly conflict with the copyright laws' goal of promoting the distribution of copyrighted works to the general public. See Harper & Row Publishers, Inc. v. National Enters., 471 U.S. 539, 558, 105 S.Ct. 2218, 85 L.Ed.2d 588 (1985) (federal copyright laws' "encouragement of individual effort by personal gain is the best way to advance public welfare through the talents of authors and inventors") (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). Microsoft repeats many of the same arguments it made in support of the boot and start-up screen restrictions, i.e., that it has an unfettered right to license (or not to license), and to prevent alterations to its copyrighted software. While courts have upheld the ability of states to regulate some aspects of copyrighted works, see, e.g., Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286 U.S. 123, 131, 52 S.Ct. 546, 76 L.Ed. 1010 (1932) (upholding ability of state to levy tax on copyright royalties); Associated Film Distribution Corp. v. Thornburgh, 683 F.2d 808, 814-17 (3d Cir.1982) (upholding state regulation of certain procedures by which films were marketed and licensed to theaters), Microsoft argues, they have also recognized that a state law prohibiting the exercise of specific rights conveyed by the copyright laws would be invalid. See, e.g., Allied Artists Pictures Corp. v. Rhodes, 496 F.Supp. 408, 445 n. 19 (S.D.Ohio 1980); Remick Music Corp. v. Interstate Hotel Co., 58 F.Supp. 523, 544-45 (D.Neb.1944) (invalidating state statute that interfered with copyright holder's ability to license public performances of copyrighted music).

"[T]he Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const. Art. VI, cl. 2, invalidates state laws that 'interfere with, or are contrary to,' federal law." Hillsborough County, Florida v. Automated Med. Lab., Inc., 471 U.S.

Copr. © West 1998 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

707, 712, 105 S.Ct. 2371, 85 L.Ed.2d 714 (1985) (quoting Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 211, 6 L.Ed. 23 (1824)). State laws are "preempted" when they "stand[ ] as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52, 67, 61 S.Ct. 399, 85 L.Ed. 581 (1941); accord Gade v. National Solid Wastes Management Ass'n, 505 U.S. 88, 98-99, 112 S.Ct. 2374, 120 L.Ed.2d 73 (1992). But "[c]onsideration of issues arising under the Supremacy Clause starts with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States are not to be superseded by Federal Act unless that is the clear and manifest purpose of Congress." Cipollene v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 U.S. 504, 516, 112 S.Ct. 2608, 120 L.Ed.2d 407 (1992) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

It is fairly clear that the copyright laws do not preempt state antitrust statutes. The Copyright Act's preemption clause provides that "[n]othing in this title annuls or limits any rights or remedies under the common law or statutes of any State with respect to activities violating legal or equitable rights that are not equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright as specified by section 106." See 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3).

29 The Tenth Circuit recently addressed a similar preemption question. In Harolds Stores, Inc. v. Dillard Department Stores, Inc., 82 F.3d 1533 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 117 S.Ct. 297, 136 L.Ed.2d 216 (1996), a retailer sued a competitor, alleging that the competitor's copying of fabric designs violated its copyrights and the state antitrust laws. The defendant argued that the antitrust law was preempted by the federal copyright scheme. Id. at 1543. The court rejected the defense, holding that "the restraint of trade component of [the state antitrust act] claim requires a litigant claiming a violation of [that act] to establish proof beyond that required to demonstrate a violation of the exclusive rights protected by § 106 of the Copyright Act, i.e., copying, preparation of derivative works, performance, distribution or display." Id.

As explained, supra, the Copyright Act does not give a copyright holder a license to engage in anticompetitive behavior that violates federal antitrust law. See, e.g., Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1186-87 & n. 63 (1st Cir.1994) (it is "well settled that concerted and contractual behavior that threatens competition is not immune from antitrust inquiry simply because it involves the exercise of copyright privileges") (citations omitted); Allied Artists, 496 F.Supp. at 443-44 (holding that "ownership of a copyright does not entitle a company to abuse the market power it obtains thereby by engaging in a per se illegal tying arrangement"). Microsoft fails to articulate how state antitrust laws, which are based upon and largely emulate the federal scheme, see California v. ARC Am. Corp. ., 490 U.S. 93, 102, 109 S.Ct. 1661, 104 L.Ed.2d 86 (1989) (state antitrust laws are consistent with broad purposes of federal antitrust laws), "conflict" with any right conferred by federal copyright law. The Supreme Court has recognized that there is "nothing either in the language of the copyright laws or in the history of their enactment to indicate any congressional purpose to deprive the states, either in whole or in part, of their long-recognized power to regulate combinations in restraint of trade." See Watson v. Buck, 313 U.S. 387, 404, 61 S.Ct. 962, 85 L.Ed. 1416 (1941).

Furthermore, Microsoft has not established the extent of any copyright protection in the specific portions of software plaintiffs seek to modify, and the parties dispute whether Microsoft abused its copyright for anticompetitive purposes. Until those questions are resolved, Microsoft's copyright argument is premature at best.

For the foregoing reasons, it is, this 14th day of September, 1998,

ORDERED, that the motion of the defendant Microsoft Corporation for summary judgment on the plaintiff States' Third Claim for Relief is granted, and that claim is dismissed with prejudice; and it is FURTHER ORDERED, that the motion of Microsoft Corporation for summary judgment is otherwise denied.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND INTERROGATORY ANSWERS, FOR SANCTIONS, AND FOR A PRETRIAL CONFERENCE

Plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. ("Conwood") propounded document requests and interrogatories to UST six months ago. UST chose not to respond until October 13, 1998. When UST did respond, it produced not a single document and provided not one meaningful interrogatory answer. Conwood respectfully submits that UST's conduct should be met with an order to compel and Rule 37 sanctions. Point I, infra.

UST's failure to provide discovery is jeopardizing plaintiffs' ability to prepare for trial and meet deadlines imposed by the Court's Scheduling Order. For instance, plaintiffs have sought for the last six months to obtain the names of UST's potential witnesses who might merit deposition. UST has responded by refusing to supply a compliant Rule 26(a)(1)(A) witness list, refusing to produce pertinent employee directories, and refusing to answer four separate interrogatories aimed at identifying likely witnesses. The Court's April 1, 1999 deposition deadline -- itself just six months away -- is placed at increasing risk with each such refusal and each day that passes without answers. Plaintiffs respectfully seek a pretrial conference pursuant to Rule 16(a) to discuss means of preserving the Court's Scheduling Order and initiating meaningful and prompt discovery participation from all parties. Point II, infra.

Background

On April 22, 1998 Conwood served its first set of written discovery with the Complaint, along with a motion for expedited discovery. Conwood hoped that the parties could agree to move forward promptly on discovery, without court intervention, particularly since UST decided to answer the Complaint. Conwood was also concerned that many documents critical to this case could be subject to a document destruction policy and destroyed unless immediate action was taken. Exh. 1 (motion and discovery requests).

UST responded by asking for a thirty-day extension for answering the Complaint (which Conwood granted) and refusing to respond to the First Set of Written Discovery. For the initiation of discovery, UST suggested that Conwood should simply await Rule 26(a)(1) automatic disclosures. Defendants' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Relief from Federal Civil Procedure Rule 26(d) at 8 (urging that discovery "should proceed in accordance with Rule 26").

Conwood sought to schedule a case management meeting with UST. Exh. 2 (May 7, 1998 letter). Initially, UST agreed and proposed that the meeting be conducted in accord with Rule 26(f), thus requiring Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures ten days later. Exh. 3 (May 11, 1998 letter). Conwood accepted in writing and proposed several meeting dates in May. Exh. 4 (May 15, 1998 letter). Inexplicably, UST responded by retracting its offer to hold a Rule 26(f) conference and declining to identify any dates for a potential meeting. Exh. 5 (May 19, 1998 letter).

At this point, the Court intervened. At a hearing on June 9, 1998 the Court entered a document preservation order and instructed the parties to develop a schedule for discovery and trial. A month later, the Court adopted a scheduling order providing for Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures on July 21, 1998, the substantial completion of written discovery by December 15, 1998, the completion of fact depositions by April 1, 1999, and trial beginning November 1, 1999. Exh. 6 (Scheduling Order).

On the July 21, 1998 Rule 26(a)(1) disclosure deadline, however, UST produced just 1 box of non-public documents, the names of only 25 UST employees, and no calculation of its alleged counterclaim damages. Conwood wrote to UST requesting appropriate supplementation of UST's disclosures. Exhs. 7 (July 22, 1998 letter) & 8 (July 27, 1998 letter). UST responded by suggesting that Conwood was "fixated" on Rule 26(a)(1) compliance and should instead await Rule 33 interrogatory answers and Rule 34 document request responses. UST's initial disclosures are now themselves the subject of Conwood's motion to compel. See Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Initial Disclosures.

When UST did finally respond to plaintiffs' initial Rule 33 and 34 requests on October 13, 1998, six months after service,[1] it failed to provide any documents or any meaningful interrogatory answers. Exh. 11 (document request responses) & 12 (interrogatory responses). Instead, UST told Conwood (again) to await a future discovery event -- this time UST's responses to Plaintiff's Second Request for Production of Documents and Things. See, e.g., Exh. 11 ¶¶ 5-11. But UST did not commit to produce documents in response to these requests either. Conwood (unsuccessfully) offered to meet and confer and asked UST to reconsider its discovery (non)responses. Exh. 13 (October 16, 1998 letter); Exhs. 17 & 18 (October 21, 1998 letters).

Argument

I. THE COURT SHOULD COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND INTERROGATORY ANSWERS AND AWARD RULE 37 SANCTIONS

A. UST Has Improperly Withheld Documents

Plaintiffs propounded 18 simple and straightforward document requests. UST, however, refused to produce any documents whatsoever.

Request No. 1 Plaintiffs seek production of documents concerning Conwood in UST's control. Exh. 11 at 4. This suit alleges that UST has for years deliberately employed exclusionary

[1]UST's delinquent responses came only after substantial prodding from Conwood. See Exhs. 9 (September 10, 1998 letter) & 10 (September 16, 1998 letter).

tactics to maintain its monopolist market share and disadvantage rivals like Conwood. Complaint ¶¶ 41-45. It also alleges that UST has made false and misleading statements to third parties about Conwood. Id. ¶¶ 46-49. Conwood is, thus, entitled to know what information UST possesses about Conwood in its files. UST's supposed objections to this request are belied, moreover, by its own document request which expressly demands (and in response to which Conwood has agreed to produce) similar materials. See, e.g., Exh. 14 (Plaintiffs' Objections and Responses to Defendants' First Request for Documents) ¶ 28 (demanding production of "all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to any injury to Conwood's business or property caused by Defendants' conduct"). Accordingly, UST should be ordered to produce.

Request No 2 Plaintiffs seek documents concerning the Global Settlement. Exh. 11 at 5. These materials bear directly on paragraphs 32-39 of the Complaint, and are relevant evidence concerning UST's intent. See United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 n.3 (1965) (evidence of anticompetitive lobbying admissible "to show the purpose and character" of defendants' marketplace activity); see also Opposition to Motion to Dismiss Part of Complaint (June 29, 1998). UST, thus, has no basis for withholding production.

Request No. 3 Plaintiffs seek production of all "Rule 4(a) lists and any similar lists of documents" in UST's control. Exh. 11 at 5. UST claims that it has "no knowledge" of Rule 4(a) lists. Id. In fact, however, UST well knows that in the Minnesota State Attorney General Litigation defendant tobacco companies (not including UST) were ordered to establish a warehouse repository for their internal documents and create detailed indices of these materials pursuant to 4(a) of the Minnesota Court's Order. Exh. 15 ¶ 4(a). Indeed, in the Texas litigation, United States Tobacco Company ("USTC") was subject to a court order expressly discussing the Minnesota Rule 4(a) indices, compelling their production, and ordering USTC to identify and produce by December 15, 1996 all similar "computerized or electronic databases relating to documents in its possession or control." Exh. 16 at 6. For UST to contend now that it knows nothing about Rule 4(a) or similar indices borders on the fraudulent.

Request No. 4 Conwood seeks documents concerning communications between UST and tobacco industry analysts. Exh. 11 at 5. Conwood believes that UST has shared its anticompetitive plans with analysts who have expressed concerns about UST's rivals and their threat to UST market share. Conwood also believes that UST has illegally disparaged Conwood's product to analysts and other persons. Complaint ¶ 29. Accordingly, UST should be ordered to produce the requested documents.

Requests Nos. 5 & 6 Conwood seeks UST's written agreements with retailers and distributors. Exh. 11 at 6. These agreements frequently contain anticompetitive restrictions — e.g., provisions limiting rivals' ability to promote their products in retail outlets, limiting rivals' shelf space or distribution racks, paying retailers or distributors to discontinue rivals' products. Complaint ¶ 28(a)-(d). Accordingly, they are critical evidence to this antitrust dispute and should be produced. See, e.g., Sara Lee Corp. v. Kayser-Rother Corp., Civ. No. 6:92CV00460, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6554, *6 (M.D.N.C. Apr. 10, 1995) (agreements inducing "many stores to display all or nearly all pantyhose that the stores sell in displays furnished by" defendant violate antitrust laws).

Request Nos. 7 & 8 Conwood seeks production of sales reports concerning UST's moist snuff sales. Exh. 11 at 6-7. These materials are necessary for measuring the success of UST's anticompetitive conduct. Complaint ¶ 40 (alleging that as a result of UST misconduct, rivals' moist snuff sales have been adversely affected, competition has suffered, and consumer choice has been limited). UST's own (meager) Rule 26(a)(1) production contains a few such select documents (i.e., Competitive Activity Reports for January 1997 through April 1998). And UST has itself demanded all sales reports from Conwood, which Conwood has agreed to produce. See, e.g., Exh. 14 ¶ 7 (demanding "[a]ll documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's sales share of the alleged moist snuff market"). UST should not be permitted to produce its own materials selectively while simultaneously demanding (and receiving) full production from plaintiffs.

Request No. 9 Plaintiffs seek production of organization charts and employee lists. Exh. 11 at 7. These materials are necessary to determine who within UST has relevant knowledge and, thus, may merit deposition. They are especially critical since UST has failed to comply with Rule 26(a)(1)(A)'s express command that it identify all persons "likely to have discoverable information." See Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures at 16-21. The Court should order production of responsive materials forthwith.

Request Nos. 10 & 11 Conwood seeks documents concerning UST's connection to this forum and the relationship between UST Inc. and the subsidiary defendants. Exh. 11 at 8. UST Inc. has filed a motion to dismiss claiming that it is not subject to personal jurisdiction in Kentucky because it does not do business in the Commonwealth and does not control the day-to-day business of its subsidiaries who do. Before UST Inc.'s motion may be granted, however, plaintiff is entitled under long-settled law to discovery on these matters. See Opposition to UST Inc.'s Motion to Dismiss Complaint for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction at 8 n.7. UST Inc. should have disclosed any materials relevant to personal jurisdiction in response to Rule 26(a)(1), but failed to do so. See Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures at 15-16. Now it seeks to evade a simple Rule 34 request for the same information. The Court should order UST to produce.

Request No. 12 Plaintiffs seek documents concerning the Smokeless Tobacco Council ("STC"). Exh. 11 at 9. UST withdrew participation and funding from the STC after other members refused to accept anticompetitive advertising and distribution restrictions championed by UST. These materials may be relevant to show UST's intent to punish smaller rivals through any means available — legislation and regulation, trade associations, or the marketplace. Cf. Pennington, 381 U.S. at 670 n.3. Accordingly, they should be produced.

Request Nos. 12 [sic] & 13 Plaintiffs seek UST's documents concerning the two other moist snuff manufacturers besides Conwood. Plaintiffs wish to learn whether UST's campaign to exclude Conwood includes other rivals. If so, this would be dramatic further proof of UST's intent to monopolize the moist snuff market. UST's own document request demands Conwood's files on these companies; Conwood has agreed to produce them. See, e.g., Exh. 14 ¶ 9 ("All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to competition in the alleged moist snuff market"). Accordingly, there is no basis for UST withholding its responsive materials.

Request No. 14 Conwood seeks documents concerning Philip Morris, Inc. Exh. 11 at 10. Philip Morris has been the leading force behind the Global Settlement; its lawyer admitted before the Senate Judiciary Committee that provisions of the Global Settlement "could well be treated as a per se violation of the antitrust laws." Complaint ¶ 36. UST's relationship and correspondence with Philip Morris is, thus, critical to understanding its involvement and purposes in Global Settlement negotiations. As with all other requests, plaintiffs (unsuccessfully) offered to meet to discuss ways to facilitate at least some production; UST declined. Exhs. 13, 17-18. UST should therefore be ordered to produce.

Request No. 15 Conwood seeks documents concerning UST's training procedures for sales representatives. Exh. 11 at 10. Such information goes directly to Conwood's allegation that UST has trained and instructed its sales representatives to: mislead retailers; steal Conwood products, racks, and advertising; and impose unreasonably restrictive agreements on retailers, all in an effort to crush competition. Complaint ¶¶ 23-24. Conwood alleges that sales representatives who follow these instructions are rewarded and those who refuse are punished. Id. Forced to concede their relevance, UST produced a few training materials in response to Rule 26(a)(1)(B), withholding many relevant documents expressly referenced in the few it did disclose. Despite Conwood's request that it supplement its production, UST refused and its mandatory disclosure of such materials remains incomplete. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures at 12-13. Now UST seeks to avoid even a direct Rule 34 request. The Court should order UST to provide a full and complete production.

Request No. 16. Plaintiffs seek documents concerning moist snuff distribution racks. Exh. 11 at 11. Such information bears directly on plaintiffs' allegation that UST has frequently altered and developed new moist snuff racks as a way of imposing costs on rivals. Complaint ¶ 27. Again, given these plain allegations in the Complaint, plaintiffs expected UST to disclose such materials in response to Rule 26(a)(1)(B). It failed to do so. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures at 15. UST should now be compelled to respond to a direct discovery request. This is particularly so given UST's own analogous requests, which Conwood has answered by producing documents. Exh. 14 ¶¶ 18-20.

Request No. 17 Plaintiffs seek documents concerning the quality of moist snuff products. Exh. 11 at 11. Such information is directly relevant to plaintiffs' allegation that UST sales representatives and other UST employees or agents have misled consumers and retailers by disparaging Conwood's products as inferior in quality. Complaint ¶ 19. Accordingly, UST should be ordered to produce.

B. UST Has Improperly Refused to Answer Interrogatories

Plaintiffs propounded six simple interrogatories, most aimed at identifying potential witnesses for deposition. UST has refused any meaningful reply.

Interrogatory Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6 These questions ask for the names of various categories of persons who have relevant knowledge and therefore may be important deposition candidates: persons whose files have been produced; persons responsible for marketing UST moist snuff; retailers or distributors with whom UST has a potentially unlawful agreement; UST personnel who have discussed its (anticompetitive) marketing efforts with tobacco industry analysts; and persons who have participated in answering plaintiffs' interrogatories. Exh. 12 at 2-4. Answers to these interrogatories have become particularly critical given UST's refusal to provide a compliant Rule 26(a)(1)(A) witness list. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Compliance with Mandatory Disclosures at 16-21. Every day UST fails to answer these simple questions further jeopardizes the parties' ability to complete fact depositions within the time prescribed by the Court.[2] UST should be ordered to provide full and complete answers immediately.

Interrogatory No. 2 Conwood asks UST to "describe generally" its computer systems and to identify the persons most familiar with them. Exh. 12 at 3. Without such information, it will be impossible for Conwood or this Court to assess whether UST's document production (when UST actually makes one) includes all responsive electronic materials. Nor can UST seriously contest the reasonableness of this request when in the Texas State Attorney General antitrust suit it was expressly ordered to produce far more detailed computer system information. Exh. 16 at 6 (compelling production of "all existing databases relating to documents in [your] possession custody or control").

[2]UST has refused any answer to Interrogatories 1, 4, or 6 and its responses to 3 and 5 are obviously incomplete. When asked to name persons involved in its moist snuff sales (Interrogatory No. 3), UST has provided the names of just its three most senior executives, failing to list any of its hundreds of sales representatives. When asked to identify executives who have spoken with tobacco industry analysts (Interrogatory No. 5), it has supplied the name of only the one person who is "most knowledgeable" about discussions with such analysts.

C. The Court Should Award Sanctions

Under Rule 37(a)(4), once a motion to compel is granted, an award of fees is automatic: "If the motion is granted . . . the party or deponent whose conduct necessitated the motion . . . [shall] pay to the moving party the reasonable expenses it incurred in making the motions, including attorney's fees." Id. Accordingly, plaintiffs respectfully request their costs and expenses associated with this motion.

II. THE COURT SHOULD HOLD A PRETRIAL CONFERENCE

Under Rule 16(a) the Court may schedule a pretrial conference for any purposes, including "discouraging wasteful pretrial activities" and "establishing early and continuing control so that the case will not be protracted." Id. Such a conference is warranted now.

The Court's July 9, 1998 Scheduling Order contemplated a prompt exchange of written discovery. Indeed, the Court even specifically prescribed that "the parties shall complete substantially all production of documents" by December 4, 1998. Exh. 6 at 1. This prompt exchange was designed to set the stage for fact depositions, which are scheduled to close April 1, 1999.

UST's conduct is threatening the speedy discovery schedule set by the Court. It has been nearly four months since the Court entered the Scheduling Order. In that span, UST has turned over precisely one box of internal documents in a nationwide antitrust case spanning years of misconduct. It has refused to supply any meaningful witness list despite the plain language of Rule 26(a)(1)(A). It has refused to supply any calculation of its alleged counterclaim damages. Now it has refused to supply any documents in response to 18 documents requests or to provide any meaningful answers in response to 6 interrogatories. Just six weeks remain in the time allotted primarily to written discovery. Unless UST is prodded into action by the Court, UST's footdragging will jeopardize the Court's deposition schedule and perhaps the Court's trial date. Accordingly, plaintiffs respectfully request that the Court hold a hearing to discuss ways to preserve the Scheduling Order and initiate meaningful discovery participation by all parties.

Conclusion

The Court should compel production of withheld documents and interrogatory answers, award plaintiffs their costs and expenses, schedule a pretrial conference for the earliest possible date, and award such other relief as the Court deems just and proper. A proposed order is attached.

Dkt. No. 5:98CV-108-R

Dear Neal:

I called you this morning but learned you would be out of the office for the day, and I was also out of the office, so I thought it might be easier to send this letter.

This will confirm your request of behalf of all defendants in the above-captioned matter for an extension of thirty (30) days within which to answer or otherwise move in response to the complaint. I believe you mentioned that, by your calculations, the response would otherwise be due on May 13. On behalf of plaintiffs, I consent to your request for an extension. The responsive pleading will therefore be due on June 12, 1998.

This will also confirm your request for an additional week within which to respond to the pending motion for expedited discovery. You may have this extension as well. Your responsive pleading will therefore be due on May 18, 1998.

If you would like to prepare a stipulation reflecting these extensions, please do so and forward it to Mr. Roberts in Paducah. He will execute it and file it with the Court, if you wish.

Finally, as we discussed it seems appropriate to have a face-to-face meeting to discuss case management issues, including the issues raised by your prior representation of plaintiffs. I suggest we try to schedule this meeting in Paducah at your earliest convenience, but preferably within the next two weeks. Please call me to discuss scheduling.

Very truly yours,

Mark C. Hansen

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Dear Mark:

Thank you for your letter of May 7, 1998, in which you agreed on behalf of Conwood to extend defendants' time to answer or otherwise respond to plaintiffs' complaint to June 12, 1998 and to extend defendants' time to respond to plaintiffs' Motion For Relief From Civil Rule 26(d) to May 18, 1998. At your suggestion, our local counsel, John S. Reed of Reed Weitkamp Schell Cox and Vice, has prepared a stipulation reflecting these agreed upon extensions. Mr. Reed will forward a copy to Dick Roberts today for his review, execution and filing.

In accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f), we also agree that it would be useful to have a face-to-face meeting among counsel to discuss case management issues or any other matters required under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Local Rules or the Court's standard Scheduling Order. We should talk later this week to discuss the time and location of this meeting.

Finally, we are somewhat puzzled by your suggestion that we also discuss "issues raised by [our] prior representation of plaintiffs." As I informed you last week, Skadden Arps does not currently represent Conwood, did not represent Conwood in a related matter in the past and has received a written waiver from Conwood that precludes Conwood from asserting that Skadden has a conflict in this case. Accordingly, we believe it is now up to Conwood to decide whether and in what manner it may wish to pursue the issue further.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call me at (212) 735-3660.

Very truly yours,

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Dear Mark:

Thank you for your letter of May 15, 1998, in which you propose that we meet sometime between tomorrow and May 29 for a Rule 26(f) meeting. As I stated in my May 11 letter to you, Defendants prefer to proceed under the time schedule set forth by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as well as the Local Rules and practice of the Western District of Kentucky. Under these established guidelines, your request and proposed dates are premature.

As you know, the timing of the Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f) meeting is tied explicitly to the Court's scheduling of a Rule 16(b) pre-trial conference or the Court's determination of an appropriate due date of a Rule 16(b) scheduling order. In turn, Rule 16(b) provides that the Court's scheduling order shall issue within 90 days of the appearance of a defendant and within 120 days after the Complaint is served on a defendant. Accordingly, under the Federal Rules your request to meet sometime in the next several days is far earlier than contemplated by Rules 16(b) and 26(f).

It also is my understanding that, in accordance with Rule 16, Judge Russell's practice is to schedule a Rule 16(b) conference only after a defendant has answered the Complaint or otherwise responded pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12.

Consistent with my letter of May 11, we believe this procedure should be followed here as well. Moreover, because Plaintiffs have moved for relief from Rule 26(d) in order to avoid the established procedures set forth by the Federal Rules, we believe a Rule 26(f) meeting would be counterproductive at this time.

Accordingly, although we continue to agree that it would be useful to have a meeting among counsel to discuss case management issues or any other matters required under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, we suggest that it is best to discuss the time and place to conduct a Rule 26(f) meeting only after Defendants have first responded to the Complaint and the Court has scheduled a Rule 16(b) conference. At that time, all of the issues will be on the table for discussion, and the meeting and the subsequent scheduling conference will be more productive for the parties and for the Court.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call me at (212) 735-3660.

Very truly yours,

Neal R. Stoll

Gentlemen:

We today received defendants' Rule 26(a)(1)(A), (B), and (D) disclosures. You will be hearing from shortly regarding the inadequacies of these disclosures. We wanted, however, to alert you immediately to the fact that we have apparently not received any Rule 26(a)(1)(C) disclosure. Please advise us immediately whether defendants will seek damages in this case and, if so, when they will provide the required disclosure.

Sincerely,

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

Out initial review of defendants' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) and(B) disclosures (no Rule 23(a)(1)(C) disclosure was provided) has revealed numerous deficiencies. The purpose of this letter is to try to bring some of these obvious shortcomings to your attention so that defendants will have every opportunity to make appropriate initial disclosures.

Rule 26(a)(1)(A). As you know, the parties were required to identify any individual "likely to have discoverable information relevant to disputed facts alleged with particularity in the pleadings." Defendants nonetheless produced a list of only 25 senior United States Tobacco Company ("USTC") employees. Several significant categories of persons are plainly missing, including without limitation:

1. Defendants' Sales Representatives. The Complaint specifically alleges that defendants' sales representatives have been engaged in removing Conwood racks, point of sale advertising, and products (Complaint ¶ 24); misrepresenting "plan-o-grams" (id. ¶ 25); misrepresenting that UST is "category manager" (id. ¶ 26); frequently changing defendants' distribution racks as part of a coordinated scheme to impose costs on rivals (id. ¶ 27); helping implement exclusive dealing agreements (id.

¶ 28); and disparaging Conwood products (id. ¶ 29). Accordingly, there is no basis for defendants to withhold the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of each of its current and former sales representatives who have worked for defendants at any point over the last four years. Affirming this conclusion is the fact that defendants have produced several documents concerning the alleged misconduct of their sales representatives. See, e.g., USTC 012958. And they have voluntarily produced additional documents, many generated in the last few months, by sales representatives purporting to report activity in the marketplace, presumably in support of defendants' counterclaims. See, e.g., USTC 011985, USTC 012008, USTC 012248. Yet none of these persons or their addresses and phone numbers are disclosed.

2. Defendants' Division Managers and Other Senior Sales Personnel. The Complaint specifically alleges that defendants' division managers have played a role in encouraging and overseeing defendants' unlawful conduct. See, e.g., Complaint ¶ 24 ("UST district managers tell sales representatives that the 'way to get ahead' in UST is to remove Conwood racks, that they must 'turn up the heat on Conwood,' and that if they do not 'control the moist snuff racks,' they will be 'writ[ten] up.' When Conwood sales personnel have complained . . . UST district managers have responded that 'anything goes' and, in one particularly egregious instance, to 'hold onto your pants . . . it's only going to get worse."). Again, defendants' own document production includes materials generated by or about defendants' division managers that reveal their importance to this case. See, e.g., USTC 012332. Other current or former supervisory personnel, including David Fritz, are also frequently mentioned in defendants' document production (see, e.g., USTC 012332), yet nowhere found on defendants' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) list. Thus, there is no basis for withholding the names, addresses, and telephone numbers for each of defendants' current and former division managers or senior sales personnel who have worked for defendants at any point over at least the last four years.

3. UST Inc. Personnel. Defendants provide the names of only 25 senior USTC personnel and are careful to avoid mentioning any UST Inc. personnel (for obvious reasons given UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction/venue). But, as you know, senior UST Inc. executives have been intimately involved in past discussions with Conwood concerning defendants' anticompetitive activities. In efforts to avoid this lawsuit, Conwood raised defendants' conduct in multiple meetings and correspondence over the last six years with Vincent Gierer, Richard Verheij, and William O'Donnell, among others. Defendants' own document production reveals some of these contacts. See, e.g., USTC 012958-012986. Accordingly, there is no basis for excluding UST Inc. employees with relevant knowledge from defendants' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) disclosure. The omission of even UST Inc.'s own affiant, Deborah Baker (who has purported to swear that UST Inc. has no contacts with the State of Kentucky) illustrates just how inadequate defendants' disclosures are.

4. Global Settlement Participants. Plaintiffs specifically allege that defendants have simultaneously sought anticompetitive legislation and regulation while conducting unlawful activities in the marketplace. Complaint ¶¶ 32-38. Defendants, however, have produced not identified a single third party with whom they dealt in their Global Settlement efforts, nor have they identified anyone within their own companies who was involved in Global Settlement discussions.

5. Third Party Anti-Competitive Activity Witnesses. Defendants fail to identify a single third party in their disclosure. They fail to mention a single store owner or manager who has witnessed activities discussed in the Complaint or counterclaims, despite defendants' own document production which suggests intimate knowledge of such persons with relevant knowledge. See, e.g., USTC 012958. Defendants likewise fail to mention a single buyer or chain executive with whom defendants have negotiated a "category management" or other similar agreement specifically challenged in plaintiffs' pleadings (Complaint ¶ 28) — again despite documents in their own production which reveal multiple contacts with such persons at WalMart, Kmart, Krogers, Dairy Mart and other retail outlets.

6. Conwood Personnel. Though defendants purport to claim misconduct by Conwood personnel in their counterclaims, they fail to identify a single Conwood employee who is likely to have knowledge of such conduct or any other relevant facts.

7. Inside and Outside Training Personnel. Plaintiffs allege that defendants' have directed a systematic campaign to exclude competitors. Complaint ¶ 23. Defendants recognize the pertinence of training information to plaintiffs' allegations, having provided one version of their sales operations training manual. See USTC 014900 et seq. Yet defendants identify no training personnel, either within defendants' organization or outside it, who helps train defendants' sales personnel. Defendants' own documents, however, confirm that both inside and outside training personnel are in fact used. See, e.g., USTC 015111-015112.

The foregoing categories are only examples of persons obviously missing from defendants' disclosure. Even standing alone, however, they suggest a failure by defendants to honor their Rule 26(a)(1) obligations. Indeed, defendants astonishingly fail to mention persons who are repeatedly named in defendants' own document production, such as William O'Donnell, or in their own pleadings, such as Deborah Baker. In accord with the Rule's plain requirements, we ask that defendants provide a full disclosure of all persons — not just senior USTC personnel — known to them who are likely to have relevant knowledge, no later than August 3, 1998.

Rule 26(a)(1)(B). Defendants' document production is as inadequate as its list of likely witnesses. Defendants have produced just seven boxes of materials. Five of these contain third party (primarily Nielsen) market reports which are virtually public information. One of the remaining two boxes is itself approximately half-filled with outside market reports (this time by Maxwell). And the other box is approximately two thirds empty. Thus, defendants have produced -- at most -- one full box of internally generated documents. This, too, is a worrisome sign that defendants have chosen not to take their Rule 26(a)(1) obligations seriously.

Indeed, defendants' own production reveals entire categories of materials that were improperly omitted, including without limitation:

1. Competitive Activity Reports and Supporting Documentation. You have produced Competitive Activity Reports ("CARs") for periods covering January, 1997-April, 1998. We see no such reports for any period prior to January, 1997. Please provide the missing materials or explain their omission. Likewise please explain the apparent omission of page USTC 014085 in the January-February, 1998 report.

Defendants' CARs purport to provide detailed conclusions about marketplace activity on which both parties will want to rely — e.g., that since introduction of defendants' rack agreement with Walmart Conwood has faced distribution problems for its new Cougar products (USTC 014389); that UST competitors have been limited to between 3.1 and 4.3 facings per account (USTC 013086). Yet the data or other underlying support for these conclusions cannot be found in defendants' production. Such information plainly exists — for instance, defendants' documents repeatedly tout their "Profile Activity Reporting System" as a key generator of marketplace information. Plaintiffs are entitled to all documents underlying defendants' CARs as they will bear directly on their allegations that defendants have sought to exclude rivals from the marketplace, and may contain useful information selectively edited from the CAR reports themselves.

2. Training Materials. You have produced one version of a "Sales Operating Manual," with different pages bearing different editing dates. See USTC 014900 et seq. Please provide all prior versions of this Manual. The Manual also notes the existence of an inhouse training program, external training courses, and an in-house "Resource Center" (USTC 015112). Such training materials are obviously relevant to plaintiffs' allegation that defendants have encouraged and coordinated a strategy to harm rivals and should also be produced.

3. Sales Meeting Documents. Defendants' documents indicate that they hold occasional meetings of sales representatives, division managers, or regional managers. See, e.g., 013974 (Florida meeting). We are aware of other such meetings (e.g., in Las Vegas and Connecticut). Except for a couple documents pertaining to the Florida meeting, there appear to be no documents from these meetings in defendants' production. Such materials are again obviously relevant to plaintiffs' allegations that defendants have encouraged their salesforce to engage in anticompetitive activities and should be produced.

4. Retail Chain Store Contacts. As you know, plaintiffs allege that defendants have actively encouraged retail chains to enter into contracts providing UST with exclusive distribution rack or point of sale advertising rights. Complaint ¶ 28. Your production contains certain "power point" presentations to certain retail chains, but is incomplete for several reasons.

First, defendants' documents reveal contacts with only a handful of chains, while plaintiffs have substantial independent information showing contacts between UST and scores of other chains. Plaintiffs have even produced copies of defendants' exclusive vending contracts with chains that are not included in defendants' production. See, e.g., CWD 000182-183 (unproduced UST document providing UST with "exclusive vending" rights in Uncle Willie's Convenience Store chain).

Second, even for the few chains mentioned in your production, the documentation is patently incomplete. Indeed, for all but two chains (Walmart and a gasoline convenience chain), all you have provided are "power point" presentations to management, not any related correspondence or contracts. Certainly your presentations did not occur in a vacuum: prior or subsequent correspondence surely exists; on information and belief, defendants have unproduced written "exclusive vending" agreement with several of the chains mentioned in your production.

Third, even for the couple accounts for whom have provided some documentation beyond a "power point" presentation, you fail to provide complete production. For example, while we find some correspondence with Walmart in defendants' production, the actual exclusive vending agreement with that chain is missing, though expressly referenced. See USTC 013321 (referencing fact that UST "formed an agreement with Walmart"). Likewise, though the Walmart agreement has been in effect for approximately a year, there is (implausibly) no sales data concerning its impact nor any materials concerning its recent renegotiation.

We ask that you produce all presentations, correspondence, agreements, and data concerning any effort by defendants which have the effect of restricting rivals' products, racks, or point of sale advertising. See Complaint ¶ 28.

5. Promotional Alliances. Documents you produced suggest that defendants have a number of other independent alliance programs with retailers and wholesalers, including without limitation:

- Customer Alliance Program;
- Wholesaler Alliance Program;
- Retail Account Data Program.

These programs variously exclude rivals' distribution racks, point of sale advertising, or products, or provide defendants with store data concerning sales, movement, facings, or other information pertaining to distribution of defendants' and rivals' products. Such information, thus, again directly bears upon plaintiffs' allegations in the Complaint. See id ¶ 28. However, your production does not include any signed agreements with merchants or any of the data defendants have obtained as a result of merchant participation in these programs.

Plaintiffs are further aware of other programs operated by defendants which have the direct effect and purpose of excluding or restraining rivals' rack distribution or advertising (and thus bear directly on Complaint ¶ 28) for which you have provided no documentation whatsoever. These include, without limitation:

- Copenhagen Incentive Program;
- 2908 Free Standing, Expandable Tobacco Center Agreement (see, e.g., CWD 004922;005291);
- Retail Merchandising Placement Agreements (see, e.g., CWD 005467).

Defendants' failure even to mention the existence of such programs demonstrates the perfunctory nature of their approach to Rule 26. Please produce all documentation concerning defendants' retail or wholesale promotional programs that have the effect of restraining distribution of rivals' racks, advertising, or products.

5. Weekly Report Letters, Call Books and Other Sales Force Documentation. Your production is replete with discussion of weekly reports, call books, and other documentation generated by defendants' sales force for consumption by headquarters. See, e.g., USTC 012356 (weekly report letter); USTC 015058 (same); USTC 015287 (call books). These materials appear to contain information about the comparative distribution of defendants' and rivals' racks, products, and point of sale in each store around the country. See, e.g., USTC 015289. Accordingly, they will shed direct and important light on plaintiffs' allegation that defendants have sought to suppress rivals' distribution, yet none of these materials were produced. These materials may also contain notations by defendants' sales force about their anticompetitive efforts and instructions. Defendants have chosen to provide certain examples of these documents in service of their counterclaims; plaintiffs are entitled to review all such documents for bearing on their claims as well. Accordingly, please produce all sales force documentation, including without limitation weekly report letters, call books, and "Profile Activity Reporting" documentation.

6. Personnel Files. Plaintiffs' allege that defendants' supervisory personnel reward anticompetitive conduct by their salesforce and punish those who refuse to engage in such conduct. Complaint ¶ 24. The personnel files of your sales representatives, division managers, and regional managers are thus directly relevant to show whether warnings or positive reviews were issued based on individuals' willingness to engage in anticompetitive conduct. None, however, has been produced. Accordingly, please produce all personnel files for any present or former member of your sales force (including regional and divisional managers).

7. Global Settlement. Plaintiffs specifically allege that defendants have simultaneously sought anticompetitive legislation and regulation while conducting unlawful activities in the marketplace. Complaint ¶¶ 32-38. There are, however, no documents in your production concerning defendants' Global Settlement efforts. I understand that you have a motion to dismiss/strike pending concerning these allegations, but that does not absolve you from discovery obligations. Nor have you sought a protective order on this issue. Accordingly, please produce all Global Settlement documents.

8. Rack Style Changes. Plaintiffs allege that defendants alter and develop new rack styles frequently as a way of imposing costs on rivals. Complaint ¶ 27. Accordingly, we expected to see some documentation in your production concerning how many racks defendants purchase annually, new rack style introductions, blueprints, and reasons for new designs. However, none can be located in your production. Please produce all documents concerning rack style production and changes.

9. Kentucky Contacts. Plaintiffs allege UST Inc. has contacts with Kentucky both directly and through the operations of its subsidiaries. UST Inc. has denied such contacts and introduced an affidavit on the issue. Yet, we find no documents in defendants' production concerning Kentucky contacts either by UST Inc. or its subsidiaries, nor any documents concerning the corporate relationship and interaction between UST Inc. and its subsidiaries. Please produce all such materials.

10. Projections. Defendants' production includes third party market share forecasts. But notably absent are any financial projections or other documents discussing market trends generated by defendants themselves. Such materials bear directly on plaintiffs' assertion that Conwood's growth has been stalled by UST's anticompetitive efforts and that UST is seeking to suppress rivals' distribution. Please produce all such materials.

This list of defects, apparent from even a preliminary examination of your Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures, is not comprehensive, nor should it be taken to limit defendants' Rule 26(a)(1) obligations. The entire point of Rule 26(a)(1) is to require the parties to come forward with information, without waiting for discovery requests from the opposing parties. Please provide an appropriate disclosure, including but not limited to the materials noted above, by August 3, 1998.

Sincerely,

Mark C. Hansen

RE: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

We have received your recent requests for production of documents and interrogatories. While a substantial volume of relevant materials has already been provided to defendants as part of plaintiffs' compliance with their disclosure obligations under Rule 26(a), we are continuing our search for relevant and non-privileged materials and will supplement our production if additional materials are available.

We are still unclear on when defendants will produce their responsive documents. As you know, we propounded document requests and interrogatories on April 22, 1998. Defendants initially did not respond to these requests, apparently because the discovery period had not yet commenced. After discovery officially commenced on July 8, 1998, we expected that defendants would provide the requested materials as part of their compliance with their Rule 26(a) disclosure obligations. But that has not occurred. We still have not received your responses to the pending requests for production and interrogatories even though discovery commenced two months ago and the requests were propounded more than four months ago.

I enclose copies of the pending requests for your convenience. We do not want to engage in unnecessary discovery disputes, so we propose that you now provide written responses to these requests, as well as all responsive and non-privileged documents, at the same time that we respond to the discovery requests you propounded to us last Friday. I suggest that we make this mutual exchange of discovery responses and documents on or before October 2, 1998.

If for some reason this is not acceptable to defendants, please let me know.

Very truly yours,

Mark C. Hansen

RE: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

I have Chris Athanasia's letter of September 10. I understand that defendants now propose to respond to our pending interrogatories and document requests within 30 days after September 7, 1998.

With respect to plaintiffs' production of additional documents in response to their ongoing obligations under Rule 26(a), and in response to your requests under Rule 34, we expect to produce in accordance with and as provided by these rules.

The remaining discussion in the September 10 letter contains much with which we disagree, but there appears to be little value in continued expressions of disagreement on these matters. Our interest is in proceeding expeditiously with discovery, and we hope we will have your cooperation in this regard.

Very truly yours,

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, -against- UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	:	Civil Action No. 5:98 CV-108-R

DEFENDANTS' RESPONSE TO
PLAINTIFFS' FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 34, Defendants respond to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents as follows:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On April 22, 1998, Plaintiffs filed their Complaint in this action and, on the same day, improperly served Plaintiffs' First Request For Production Of Documents. Subsequently, Plaintiffs moved for relief from Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d), which states that no party may seek discovery prior to a meeting of the parties under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f). The Court denied Plaintiffs' motion. Despite the Court's ruling, however, Plaintiffs frequently and erroneously have referred to their First Request For Production Of Documents as "still pending." See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Motion To Compel Compliance With Initial Disclosures, at 6 n.2.

In any event, after Defendants completed their review of Plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1) Initial Disclosures, Defendants framed their Rule 34 document requests, properly describing categories of documents with the requisite particularity, and, on September 3, 1998, Defendants served those document requests on Plaintiffs. By letter of September 10, 1998, Plaintiffs confirmed the receipt of Defendants' discovery requests and inquired as to when Defendants would respond to Plaintiffs' First Request For The Production Of Documents. To this letter, Plaintiffs attached the April 22, 1998 document requests and again asserted the untenable position that those requests were still pending. On September 11, 1998, Defendants responded to Plaintiffs' letter, informing Plaintiffs that their First Request For Production Of Documents was never properly served in accordance with Rule 34, and that Plaintiffs' April 22, 1998 version of those requests was improperly framed – primarily because they were framed prior to receipt of Defendants' Rule 26(a)(1) Initial Disclosures and thus ignored the purpose and intent of Rule 26(a)(1). Defendants also suggested to Plaintiffs that, in the interests of facilitating the production of documents, Plaintiffs should reframe their document requests and properly serve the revised requests on Defendants pursuant to Rule 34. In the alternative, Defendants offered that they would accept the service of Plaintiffs' document requests, as they were framed on April 22, 1998, and as if they were properly served on September 10, 1998. On September 16, 1998,

Plaintiffs responded to Defendants' letter, misstating pertinent dates and again asserting that their original document request was "pending." Defendants responded to Plaintiffs' letter, correcting several wrongful assertions regarding the date of correspondence and the date of the accepted constructive service of Plaintiffs' discovery requests. Plaintiffs, however, never responded in substance to Defendants' September 11, 1998 letter, and never informed Defendants that Plaintiffs intended to revise or re-serve their document requests.

Accordingly, Defendants proceeded in good faith to prepare their response to Plaintiffs' First Request For Production Of Documents. On September 28, 1998, however, in the midst of that preparation and rather than withdrawing their first request, Plaintiffs' served on Defendants Plaintiffs' Second Request For Production Of Documents And Things. While Plaintiffs' second request in part subsumes their first request, Plaintiffs apparently have attempted to narrow their requests and to describe documents with the requisite particularity, in large part by simply mirroring the language of Defendants' Request For Documents.

At this juncture, Defendants hereby submit their response to Plaintiffs' First Request For Production Of Documents And Things, in accordance with Defendants' September 11 letter and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Defendants also are proceeding to prepare their response to Plaintiffs' Second Request For Production Of Documents And Things in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

1. Defendants object to Plaintiffs' requests insofar as they do not meet the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b), and insofar as they are repetitive of and superseded by Plaintiffs' Second Request For Production Of Documents And Things, the response to which is due on October 28, 1998. Defendants currently are conducting a good faith search for non-privileged documents that are responsive to Plaintiffs' Second Request For Production Of Documents And Things.

2. Defendants object to Plaintiffs' requests insofar as they exceed the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 34.

3. Defendants object to Plaintiffs' requests insofar as they seek the production of confidential, proprietary business information.

4. Defendants object to Plaintiffs' requests insofar as they seek the production of information protected by the attorney client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, and/or any other applicable privilege or protection.

5. Defendants object to Plaintiffs' requests on the ground that they do not specify a relevant time period.

RESPONSES TO REQUESTS FOR DOCUMENTS

Request No. 1. All documents concerning Conwood Company L.P. and/or Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (collectively, "Conwood").

16diii000796

Response to Request No. 1: Defendants object to this request on the ground that it is vague and ambiguous, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Request No. 2. All documents concerning the Proposed Tobacco Industry Settlement dated June 20, 1997.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, -against- UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98 CV-108-R

DEFENDANTS' RESPONSE TO
PLAINTIFFS' FIRST SET OF INTERROGATORIES

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 33, Defendants respond to Plaintiffs' First Interrogatories To Defendants as follows:

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

1. Defendants object to these interrogatories insofar as they purport to seek separate responses from each Defendant. A demand for such separate responses would be unduly burdensome and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Unless otherwise specifically noted, all Defendants have responded to these interrogatories based on information reasonably available to them. Defendants have no reason to believe that separate responses provided by any of the individual Defendants would differ from those provided here in any meaningful way.

2. Defendants object to these interrogatories insofar as they seek the production of confidential, proprietary business information.

3. Defendants object to these interrogatories insofar as they seek the production of information protected by the attorney client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, and/or any other applicable privilege or protection.

4. Defendants object to these interrogatories on the ground that they do not specify a relevant time period.

RESPONSES TO INTERROGATORIES

Interrogatory No. 1. Identify each person from whose files documents were produced in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents, identify the documents produced from each such person's files, and identify the person(s) most familiar with each of said files.

Response to Interrogatory No. 1: Defendants incorporate by reference Defendants' Response To Plaintiffs' First Request For Production Of Documents. Defendants also object to this interrogatory on the ground that, to the extent any documents will be produced in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents, the information sought can be obtained as readily by Plaintiffs as by Defendants from such documents. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d).

16diii000808

Interrogatory No. 2. Describe generally each computer system used by defendant, including types of data maintained in each, and for each such system identify the person(s) most familiar therewith.

Response to Interrogatory No. 2: Defendants also object to this interrogatory on the ground that it is irrelevant, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Interrogatory No. 3. Identify by name, address, title, job description, and date of service all persons involved in the marketing and/or sale of defendants' moist snuff products.

Response to Interrogatory No. 3: Defendants object to this interrogatory on the ground that it is vague and ambiguous, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Without waiving this objection, Defendants state that the following persons have overall responsibility for the marketing and/or sale of Defendants' moist snuff products:

A. Gary Smith, President, United States Tobacco Company Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Gary Milano, Vice President, United States Tobacco Company Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Richard Fasanelli, Vice President, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Interrogatory No. 4. Identify all distributors and retailers of moist snuff products with which one or more defendants has or had an agreement.

Response to Interrogatory No. 4: Defendants object to this interrogatory on the ground that it is vague and ambiguous, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Without waiving this objection, Defendants state that Defendants have or have had agreements, including sale/purchase agreements, with each and every distributor and/or retailer with which Defendants have ever done business.

Interrogatory No. 5. Identify by name, address, title, job description, and date of service all persons who have spoken to tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff.

Response to Interrogatory No. 5: Defendants object to this interrogatory on the ground that it is vague and ambiguous, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Without waiving this objection, Defendants state that the person most knowledgeable about discussions with tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff is:

> Mark A. Rozelle, Vice President, UST Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Interrogatory No. 6. Identify by name, address, title, job description, and date of service all persons who participated in the preparation of answers to these interrogatories.

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

Yesterday we received defendants' responses to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents and Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories (collectively, "First Set of Written Discovery").

As you know, we served the First Set of Written Discovery with the Complaint on April 22, 1998. We had hoped that the parties could agree to move forward promptly on discovery, without court intervention, particularly since UST decided to answer the Complaint. You indicated, however, that you would not respond to our First Set of Written Discovery and that we should instead await Rule 26(a)(1) automatic disclosures to begin the discovery process. The Court set a firm July 21, 1998 deadline for Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures.

On July 21, you provided just 1 box of internal UST documents, the names of only 25 UST employees, and no initial damages calculation. Shortly thereafter we requested appropriate supplementation of UST's disclosures. You responded by suggesting that we simply await Rule 33 and 34 interrogatory answers and document request responses.

However, when you did respond yesterday to our Rule 33 and 34 requests, six months after service, you refused to produce any documents despite 17 separate requests and supplied no answers to our 6 interrogatories. Instead, you told us (again) to await a future discovery event -- this time UST's responses to Plaintiff's Second Request for Production of Documents and Things. But you did not commit to produce documents in response to these requests either.

Nor are your refusals to answer our First Set of Written Discovery appropriate. For instance, you claim that you are unfamiliar with Rule 4(a) indices and similar lists. Defendants' Response to Plaintiff's First Request for Production of Documents, Response No. 3, at 5. In fact, however, United States Tobacco Company ("USTC") has been subject to at least one order expressly discussing Rule 4(a) indices and compelling production of all "computerized or electronic indices," and all "existing databases." See Order Compelling Disclosure, Texas v. The American Tobacco Co., et al., No. 5:96CV91 (E.D. Tex. Nov. 13, 1996) (attached hereto).

Likewise, you claim that plaintiffs' request for information about your computer systems is irrelevant, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Defendant's Response to Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories, Response No. 2, at 3. But in the very same Texas lawsuit involving antitrust claims against USTC, your arguments along these lines failed and you were ordered to produce precisely the information we seek. Id. ("all existing databases relating to documents in [your] possession custody or control").

In light of LR 37.1, we request that you reconsider your position with regard to written discovery and, in particular, defendants' refusal to provide any documents or answers to Plaintiffs' First Set of Written Discovery. We have attached an outline detailing the parties' conduct in discovery to date that we believe further illuminates the need for defendants to reconsider their position.

If a conference on this matter would be productive, please let us know. We would appreciate your response by close of business Monday, October 19, 1998, so that, if necessary, we may bring this matter to the Court's attention at the earliest possible moment to avoid further delay.

Very truly yours,

Mark C. Hansen

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R

PLAINTIFFS' OBJECTIONS AND RESPONSES TO DEFENDANTS' FIRST REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS

Pursuant to Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P. and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. ("Conwood") hereby respond to Defendants' First Request for Documents ("Defendants' Requests") as set forth below:

General Objections Applicable to All Requests:

1. Conwood objects to Defendants' Requests to the extent they seek information protected by the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine, or any other applicable privilege that would make the information or documents immune from discovery in whole or in part.

2. Conwood objects to Defendants' Requests to the extent they seek documents already disclosed by plaintiffs pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(a). With respect to all such requests for which Conwood has already produced documents, Conwood will timely supplement its production if additional responsive and non-privileged documents are located.

3. It should not be inferred from the form or substance of any objection or response contained herein that documents responsive to any particular request exist.

Specific Objections and Responses:

REQUEST NO. 1: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's distribution and sale of smokeless tobacco products other than Conwood's moist snuff products, including but not limited to (a) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to any agreements with wholesalers, distributors, retailers, or any other persons or entities involved in the distribution and/or sale of Conwood smokeless tobacco products, (b) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to pricing or pricing policies of smokeless tobacco products other than moist snuff, and how such policies are affected by the sale of moist snuff products, and (c) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to sales data (whether in terms of price or in terms of units) for Conwood smokeless tobacco products, and how such data are affected by the sale of moist snuff products.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 1: Conwood objects to Request No. 1 on the ground that it fails to identify the requested documents with reasonable particularity. Conwood upon diligent inquiry believes that it has produced responsive and non-privileged documents as part of its initial disclosures. See, e.g., CWD1019000003-1019005559; CWD1005000001-001000; CWD1011000001-001881; CWD1031000001-1852; CWD1037000001-1855; CWD1002000001-0001126; CWD1016000001-178; CWD1033000001-916; CWD1001000001-125; CWD1028000001-1836; CWD0100000001-9517; CWD1000000001-909.

REQUEST NO. 2: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's initial entry into the alleged moist snuff market, including but not limited to (a) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's development, introduction, and use of the plastic can for Conwood's moist snuff products; (b) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to discussions, projections, or considerations of the effect Conwood's entry into the alleged moist snuff market would have on the sales of other Conwood smokeless tobacco products; and (c) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to the research and development, production, distribution, or sale of any of Conwood's moist snuff products.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 2: Conwood is conducting a good-faith search for responsive and non-privileged documents.

REQUEST NO. 3: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to entry or potential entry into the alleged moist snuff market by any other existing or non-existing smokeless tobacco company, including but not limited to documents that constitute, refer, or relate to the conversion of production facilities devoted to other tobacco products to the production of moist snuff, and the research and development, production, or distribution of moist snuff products.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 3: Conwood objects to Request No. 3 on the grounds that it calls for information not in Conwood's possession, custody or control. To the extent that the request seeks information in Conwood's possession, custody or control about entry or potential entry into the moist snuff market by firms other than Conwood and UST, Conwood is conducting a good-faith search for responsive and non-privileged documents.

REQUEST NO. 4: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's financial performance in the alleged moist snuff market, including but not limited to (a) budgets; (b) business or strategic plans; (c) financial and/or profit analyses; and (d) sales projections or forecasts.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 4: Conwood upon diligent inquiry believes that it has produced responsive and non-privileged documents as part of its initial disclosures. and expects to produce shortly, additional responsive and non-privileged documents.

REQUEST NO. 5: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's financial performance in the sale of smokeless tobacco products other than moist snuff products, including, but not limited to (a) budgets; (b) business or strategic plans; (c) financial and/or profit analyses; and (d) sales projections or forecasts.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 5: Conwood upon diligent inquiry believes that it has produced responsive and non-privileged documents as part of its initial disclosures. Conwood is conducting a good-faith search for, and expects to produce shortly, additional responsive and non-privileged documents.

REQUEST NO. 6: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's sales share of the alleged moist snuff market, including but not limited to (a) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's moist snuff sales data; (b) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to any reason for any increase or decrease in Conwood's sales share; (c) all documents that refer to your allegation that Conwood's share growth has effectively ceased; and (d) all documents that constitute, refer, or relate to your allegation that Conwood's market share is expected to remain flat or decline in the future.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 6: Conwood upon diligent inquiry believes that it has produced responsive and non-privileged documents as part of its initial disclosures. See, e.g., CWD1019000003-1019005559; CWD1011000001-1881; CWD1028000001-999; CWD1033000001-916; CWD1001000001-125 CWD1028000001-1836; CWD1001000001-13190; CWD1037000001-1855. Conwood will make available for inspection Nielsen market reports at a mutually-convenient time and location.

REQUEST NO. 7: All documents that constitute, refer, or relate to Conwood's sales shares of smokeless tobacco products other than Conwood's moist snuff products.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 7: Conwood upon diligent inquiry believes that it has produced responsive and non-privileged documents as part of its initial disclosures. Without waiving that objection, Conwood upon diligent inquiry believes that it has produced responsive and non-

ORDER

Fitzpatrick, Kenneth J.

The above matter came on for a regularly scheduled general status conference before the Honorable Kenneth J. Fitzpatrick on July 11, 1995, pursuant to the Case Management (Order dated March 29, 1995. Michael V. Ciresi, Esq., appeared and argued on behalf of Plaintiffs. Allen M. Katz, Esq., appeared and argued on behalf of Defendants Philip Morris Incorporated, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Lorillard Tobacco Company, The American Tobacco Company, Liggett Group, Inc., The Council For Tobacco Research - U.S.A., Inc., and The Tobacco Institute. Additional counsel also appeared, but did not argue, on behalf of the parties.

Based on the file, arguments, and representations of counsel

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

1. Pursuant to agreement of Plaintiffs and B.A.T. Industries, p.l.c., the time limits for jurisdictional discovery relating to the Motion of B.A.T. Industries, p.l.c., to Dismiss shall be tolled beginning June 21, 1995.

2. Special Master . Plaintiffs' request for a Special Master is DENIED at this time. The court cautions the parties, however, that it may at any time, on its own motion, decide to appoint a Referee pursuant to Minn. R. Civ. P. 53, particularly if despite the court's admonishment the parties persist in bringing matters of a minute nature before the court.

3. Document Depositories .

A. One depository located within thirty (30) miles of the Minneapolis/St. Paul International Airport shall be established for timely and efficient control and management of discovery in this action. All documents produced by any party to this action shall be deposited therein. Within thirty (30) days of this order, the parties shall inform the court of their chosen site, along with mutually agreed upon vendors of security, maintenance, copying, imaging, and administrative/staff support.

B. The depository shall be open for inspection of documents from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Monday through Friday, at the request of any party on written notice of five business days, unless the parties agree or the Court orders expanded or reduced hours. Each person entering the warehouse shall be required to identify himself or herself, by law firm and party represented, and sign in on a registration log.

C. All parties with access to the depository shall be allowed to view the entire depository at any time during which the depository is open and to select any box or group of boxes for immediate review. The depository staff mutually selected by the parties or appointed by the Court shall have the sole authority to physically remove.the requested boxes from the depository shelves for viewing by an authorized party and to replace the requested boxes back on the depository shelves after viewing by the authorized party.

D. The cost of placing documents requested for production into the depository shall be borne by the party producing the documents. The administrative costs and expenses of operating the depository shall be allocated among the parties on a pro-rata basis determined by use of the facility.

E. The cost of copying or imaging selected documents from the depository shall be borne by the party requesting the copying or imaging of the selected documents. The party selecting the documents shall choose the method of copying or imaging. The copying or imaging shall be performed by the vendor (s) selected by the parties or appointed by the court. All documents duplicated or imaged for the requesting party shall be copied or imaged off of the actual documents in the depository and not from documents maintained at a different location, absent agreement of the parties or order of the Court.

F. Regardless of the manner of copying or imaging, the producing party shall be entitled to receive a record of which documents have been copied or imaged by the requesting party, or a duplicate set of the copies shall be provided to the producing party upon its request and at its expense.

G. Regardless of the manner of copying or imaging, a requesting party shall have the right to designate a reasonable number of documents each day for immediate copying and delivery. At the election of the producing party, this may be accomplished either by providing a convenience copier in the depository for use by the requesting party, or if copying is to be performed off-site, by making appropriate arrangements for the delivery of the requested documents by air courier or hand delivery within one business day.

H. All documents in the depository shall be Bates numbered in accordance with the Case Management Order and shall be placed in numbered boxes. Each box shall be labeled with a box number and the beginning and ending of Bates numbers of documents contained therein, with the labels clearly visible for viewing by walk-by inspection. In addition, the party operating the depository shall maintain a list in each box of each and every document contained within each box, as well as a master list maintained in the depository and distributed to all other parities of each and every document in each box. Such lists shall be updated as necessary.

I. The producing party shall notify all other parties in writing within 48 hours of the placement of documents in the depository. The identification of documents in such notice shall include the Bates numbers of the documents, the box numbers, and the document requests to which the documents are responsive (in accordance with the Case Management Order).

J. The staff operating the depository shall maintain a written guide to the location of documents in the depository, for example, a guide to the location of documents by box and Bates numbers.

K. The staff operating the depository shall maintain at the depository copies of all privilege logs and written document responses from a party in this litigation.

L. Once placed in the depository, documents shall not be removed from the depository, renumbered, reboxed, or moved to a different location of the depository, absent agreement of the parties or order of the Court; provided, however, that:

(i) Documents may be removed from the depository for the purpose of making copies or images as requested by the reviewing party;

(ii) Documents may be reboxed or moved to a different location of the depository in order to keep documents in sequential Bates-numbered order as new documents are placed in the depository; however, any reboxing or moving done pursuant to this subparagraph shall be accompanied by immediate (48 hours) and explicit notice to all other parties of new Bates numbers, new box numbers, and new locations. Where it is more convenient to do so, in lieu of reboxing to keep documents in sequential order, a party may place later-produced documents in a box supplemental to the original box. For example, if box 1 has a Bates-number range of 100 to 500 and later produced documents belong in that box, these documents may be placed in box 1A and placed next to box 1.

M. The depository shall have at least one telephone and one dedicated line for computers.

N. Computer versions of documents shall not be transmitted from the depository itself. The receiving party shall have the right, for any depository document for which it has received a copy pursuant to this order, to transmit the document via computer from any other location to any person authorized to receive the document.

O. The depository shall be reasonably heated and air conditioned and have restroom facilities on site.

P. The depository shall be equipped with tables and chairs to serve as a work space for persons reviewing documents. This work space shall be contiguous with (under the same roof as) the storage area for documents.

4. Document Indexes .

A. Existing Indexes: To the extent that any party has previously prepared or produced any index of documents relative to the subject matter of this action, said party shall immediately produce such existing index to the opposing party; provided, however, that if the producing party claims an existing index contains subjective information protected by the attorney-client or work product privileges, it shall submit such index to the court for in camera inspection and determination.

B. Indexing Upon Production. All parties shall, in conformance with the Case Management Order and this order, provide an index to the documents produced in discovery. Said index shall be provided along with the documents produced. Each such index shall contain at least the following standard information with respect to each document produced:

(i) Author(s) of document;

(ii) Recipient(s) of document, including those receiving copies;

(iii) Date of document;

(iv) Type of document (e.g., memo, letter, news release, pamphlet, etc.);

(v) Title of document (e.g., title, subject, or "re" line, etc.); and

(vi) Bates identification number.

5. Computer-Assisted Litigation Man-agement Technology . The parties shall within ten (10) days of this order inform the court of their progress with respect to choice of computer-assisted litigation management technology, such as CLAD. Absent the parties' agreement, the court shall determine this matter for efficient management of this action.

Civil Action No. 5:96CV91

November 13, 1996

ORDER COMPELLING DISCLOSURE

Judge: David Folsom

Magistrate: Wendell C. Radford

The Motion of the State of Texas to Compel Defendants' compliance with the provisions of the Eastern District's Civil Justice Expense and Delay Reduction Plan (the "Plan") and Defendants [All Defendants except B.A.T. Industries, p.l.c. (BAT) and United States Tobacco Company.] Motion to Compel Plaintiff to comply with the Plan were heard on September 27, 1996. After considering all filings related to the motions, arguments of counsel and applicable law, the Court makes the following findings of fact and order:

The Court finds that both moving parties are entitled to disclosure under the Plan beyond that which has already been made. It is of great concern to the Court that several Defendants have made little or no meaningful attempt to comply with the Plan. As set forth below in detail, the Court orders compliance with the Plan by all parties. [By order of this Court on October 7, 1996, BAT was ordered to make initial disclosure to Plaintiff on the issue of personal jurisdiction. This order supplements the October 7, 1996 order relative to production of documents and information that significantly bear on the issue of personal jurisdiction of this Court over B.A.T.] In ordering the parties to comply with the Plan, the Court is mindful of the countervailing arguments of the parties, the complexity of the issues and the tremendous volume of records that must be reviewed and disclosed.

However, out of the myriad issues, complexities and voluminous document production requirements that have been addressed so thoroughly by both parties in memoranda and argument, there are several considerations that rise to prominence against the procedural backdrop framed by the Plan and the Federal Rules' stated objectives for the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action.

This Court recognizes the State of Texas' interest in the health and lives of its citizens and, particularly, the health and welfare of its children. Accordingly, the Court finds there is a legitimate public interest in the resolution of the issues set forth by Plaintiff. Of equal importance is the opportunity for the Defendants to answer and refute the State's claims, as soon as possible, if the claims are without merit.

Another consideration in fashioning this order is the parties' agreement and request for a September, 1997, trial date. The workload undertaken by the parties' counsel, as well as the considerable employment of this Court's resources, is no small commitment. It is essential, therefore, that this Court order every reasonable measure to facilitate pre-trial preparation that is affordable, timely and fair. At the same time, those measures must enhance the economy of judicial resources as this matter progresses to trial. The initial disclosure requirement under the Plan is the best tool to initiate meaningful discovery that will later be supplemented by the discovery provided for in the Case Management Order.

Finally, in fashioning this order, both parties have impressed the Court with the absolute need to utilize existing computer database indices, as well as indices to be provided with document production, in order to have meaningful access to the millions of pages of documents or electronic data that constitute the universe of relevant information. Counsel for Defendants, particularly, argued convincingly that the use of existing indices was the quickest way to make available documents, both as a matter of paper and as a matter of computers. Counsel for Plaintiff took the Defendants' point further and argued that preexisting databases, prepared by Defendants or their counsel in anticipation of or in preparation for litigation and produced in the Minnesota Case [The State of Minnesota et al v. Philip Morris et al., File #C1-94-8565, 2 nd Judicial District Court, County of Ramsey, State of Minnesota.] should be produced in this case. Plaintiff asserts that the 4(a) and 4(b) indices are necessary to fulfill the intent of the Plan. Defendants are agreeable to produce the 4(b) indices but argue that the 4(a) indices constitute work-product protected from production under the doctrine outlined in Hickman v. Taylor ,329 U.S. 495 (1947).

The work-product doctrine is a qualified immunity under the applicable rules of the FRCP and Hickman . The standard for the production of "work- product" material to an opposing party is set forth in FRCP Rule 26(b)(3). It is abundantly evident from the affidavits and exhibits submitted by all parties, and it is a finding of fact by this Court, that the Plaintiff has substantial need of both the 4 (a) and 4(b) indices in order to prepare its case for the September, 1997 trial date. The Court finds that it would create an undue, if not impossible, hardship on Plaintiff to process, review and recreate the databases indices for the millions of pages of documents in the possession of Defendants. Defendants' own affidavits submitted in connection with these motions show it has taken years and millions of dollars to produce the 4(a) indices. Defendants' affidavits and arguments before this Court are quite convincing that there does not exist a substantial equivalent to the 4(a) indices that Plaintiff can reasonably use considering the time and expense factors. To withhold production of the 4(a) indices from Plaintiff, would run directly counter to the objectives of the Plan. The latter consequence is especially avoidable as this Court has, as does the state court in Minnesota, the ability to order production of the indices and protect against disclosing the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of any Defendant concerning the litigation.

Accordingly,

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED. that:

1. Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Gentlemen:

This letter responds to Mark Hansen's October 16, 1998 letter regarding Defendants' responses to Plaintiffs' First Set of Written Discovery. The letter raises several issues that need to be corrected.

Plaintiffs did not serve their First Set of Written Discovery with the Complaint on April 22, 1998. As the Court held in its June 9, 1998 Order denying Plaintiffs' motion for relief from Rule 26(d), and as Defendants have repeatedly pointed out to Plaintiffs since the entry of that Order, Plaintiffs' First Set of Written Discovery was improperly served in violation of the Federal Rules. As you know, service of process in violation of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is not, and cannot be, service within any legally significant meaning of that word. In fact, Plaintiffs' First Set of Written Discovery was never served on Defendants in accordance with the Federal Rules until, and only because, Defendants voluntarily stipulated to service on September 10, 1998 in order to expedite the discovery process. At this time, Plaintiffs again pointedly ignored the alternative option offered by Defendants – i.e., to reframe their document requests and interrogatories in accordance with Rules 33 and 34.

Notwithstanding Defendants' voluntary stipulation, Plaintiffs then waited over two weeks and served on Defendants Plaintiffs' Second Request For The Production Of Documents And Things. Some of these requests completely subsumed Plaintiffs' first requests; most of these requests copied Defendants' Rule 34 requests almost verbatim. Plaintiffs could not have acted more determinedly to undermine, confuse and protract the discovery process.

Second, it was not improper for Defendants to "indicate[]" that they would not respond to Plaintiffs' First Set of Written Discovery, as Mr. Hansen suggested in his letter. As the Court held, those requests were in violation of the Federal Rules and therefore warranted no response by Defendants. Nor was it at all improper for Defendants to suggest that Plaintiffs should await a Rule 26(f) meeting and, subsequently, Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures before Plaintiffs sought discovery under Rules 33 and 34. Rule 26(d) requires parties to "await" a Rule 26(f) meeting, and Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures, by design, necessarily precede discovery requests under Rules 33 and 34. As Defendants have pointed out to Plaintiffs several times, the purpose of Rule 26(a)(1) is to provide information from which the receiving party can properly frame discovery requests with sufficient particularity as required by Rules 33 and 34. See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 26(a). Again, Plaintiffs' conduct has been completely at odds with the Federal Rules.

Third, Mark Hansen's letter misrepresents the events that occurred shortly after Defendants made its Initial Disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1). Although Plaintiffs did request additional documents and other information as indicated in Mr. Hansen's letter, Defendants did not merely respond that Plaintiffs should await further discovery under Rules 33 and 34. Indeed, Defendants responded by explaining to Plaintiffs the purpose and scope of Rule 26(a)(1), the dearth of facts alleged with particularity in Plaintiffs' Complaint, and the lack of any legal basis for Plaintiffs' vague and ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome requests purportedly made under Rule 26(a)(1). Defendants also responded that if Plaintiffs wished to seek discovery of information beyond the scope of Rule 26(a)(1), and frankly beyond the scope of Rule 26 in general, it should proceed under the Federal Rules so that Defendants would have the opportunity to respond appropriately in accordance with the procedures set forth therein. Until September 28, 1998, Plaintiffs refused properly to serve document requests framed in accordance with Rule 34. To this date, Plaintiffs have not served properly framed interrogatories with the exception of those in response to which Defendants have already provided information.

Fourth, Defendants' response to Plaintiffs' First Set of Written Discovery was completely proper. After Defendants requested several times that Plaintiffs reframe and serve their discovery requests pursuant to Rules 33 and 34, Plaintiffs insisted on relying on discovery requests that were drafted at the time of the Complaint on April 22, 1998. As stated above, the Federal Rules provide Rule 26(a)(1) so that a party can frame discovery requests based on representative disclosures of certain basic information. Thus, on September 3, 1998, after receiving and reviewing Plaintiffs' Initial Disclosures, and in accordance with the intent and purpose of Rule 26(a)(1), Defendants served interrogatories and document requests framed with the requisite particularity. Plaintiffs' refusal to do the same – even after Defendants' request that they do so – left Defendants with no choice but to object to Plaintiffs' vague and ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome requests. Plaintiffs cannot claim that they were without sufficient information. Indeed, after two months had passed since Defendants made their Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures, Plaintiffs had written a letter, improperly requesting additional documents and further disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1), had moved the Court, without any legal basis, to compel production of specific documents and further disclosures under Rule 26(a)(1), but refused simply to request documents and serve interrogatories in accordance with the procedures for doing so under Rules 33 and 34. There can be no explanation for such conduct other than Plaintiffs' intent to disregard and act in contravention of the discovery process. Such conduct certainly is not consistent with Plaintiffs' frequent proclamation that it is Defendants who intend to delay discovery.

Fifth, Defendants were unfamiliar with "Rule 4(a)" for the simple reason that no "Rule 4(a)" exists. Plaintiffs' objectionable discovery request did not include any explanation, cite, or other source to provide Defendants with sufficient information to identify "Rule 4(a)." Notwithstanding Defendants' diligent and good faith inquiry as to the existence and applicability of any "Rule 4(a)" of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Kentucky Rules of Civil Procedure, or applicable past and present local rules, Defendants remained unable to respond to Plaintiffs' vague and ambiguous document request. Mark Hansen now attaches to his letter a discovery order from an unrelated case, from which Defendants now have knowledge that by "Rule 4(a)," Plaintiffs meant to request indices of documents created by certain tobacco companies pursuant to Paragraph 4(a) of a protective order in an unrelated products liability case to which USTC was not a party. Plaintiffs' request is therefore improper for four reasons: (1) "Rule 4(a)" to which the request referred is not a rule, but a provision in a protective order (2) that is neither relevant nor applicable to this law suit (3) in a case to which USTC was not a party (4) which fact Plaintiffs should, with proper due diligence, have known.

Sixth, Mark Hansen's letter offers no explanation as to why information about Defendants' computer systems is discoverable in this case. Mark Hansen's letter also offers no explanation as to what specific type of information about Defendants' computer systems Plaintiffs seek. If documents that are otherwise discoverable are in computer format, they will be produced in response to a specific document request. General information about Defendants' computer systems in and of itself, however, is not discoverable and Plaintiffs request is objectionable for the reasons already stated in Defendants' response. Plaintiffs' reference to and reliance on Texas v. American Tobacco Co., et al. to the contrary is misplaced.[1]

Pursuant to Local Rule 37.1, we suggest that the parties meet and confer in an effort to resolve several of these issues, as well as several issues presented by Plaintiffs' October 5, 1998 responses to Defendants' discovery requests, including but not limited to, those issues set forth below. In order to facilitate our discussions, it would be helpful if Plaintiffs would provide clarification of their positions concerning the following issues:

- Please explain the legal and factual basis for Plaintiffs' assertion of the joint defense privilege, the common interest doctrine, the investigative privilege, and the party communications privilege in response to Defendants' interrogatories.

- Plaintiffs have responded to a number of Defendants' document requests simply by asserting that, upon diligent inquiry, they have produced responsive documents as part of their Initial Disclosures. In most instances, Plaintiffs do not indicate that they are continuing a good-faith search for responsive documents. For each such response, please explain whether Plaintiffs have produced all non-privileged and responsive documents in accordance with their legal obligations, and, if they have not, when Plaintiffs expect to produce additional documents in light of the applicable October 5, 1998 response date.

- Please explain why Plaintiffs did not respond to Defendants' Interrogatory No. 27 with respect to audio taping.

[1] Moreover, Plaintiffs' reliance on a discovery order in an unrelated case, which pertains to unrelated and unidentified documents, is itself objectionable. The fact that USTC was involved in prior litigation does not allow Plaintiffs access to the discovery produced in that case on the chance that they might turn up a discoverable document. Rather, each of Plaintiffs' document requests must meet the particularity requirements of Rule 34. None of them do.

- Please explain the legal basis for Plaintiffs' reliance on a list of over 700 names purportedly produced pursuant to Plaintiffs' obligations under Rule 26(a)(1) in response to Defendants' specific Interrogatories Nos. 11 and 12.

Please inform us at your earliest convenience of an acceptable time for a conference call to further discuss these and other issues related to Mark Hansen's October 16, 1998 letter and Plaintiffs' responses to Defendants' discovery requests.

Very truly yours,

Chris Athanasia

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your letter of earlier today.

On October 16, 1998 we wrote asking defendants to reconsider their refusal to provide any documents in response to plaintiffs' document requests and their refusal to provide any meaningful answers in response to plaintiffs' interrogatories. We also asked whether it would be useful to meet to explore ways to facilitate at least some production of documents and interrogatory answers.

Your letter makes clear that defendants have no interest in modifying their position; to the contrary, you devote fully four pages of your correspondence to rehashing a defense of defendants' nonproduction. On the fifth page you discuss a possible meeting, but for the purpose of discussing perceived faults in plaintiffs' voluminous and ongoing production. We will address your concerns about plaintiffs' production in due course. With respect to defendants' discovery responses, however, it appears that you leave us no choice but to seek relief from the Court.

Very truly yours,

Mark C. Hansen

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

DEFENDANTS' MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND INTERROGATORY ANSWERS AND FOR SANCTIONS

Defendants respectfully submit that Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents and Interrogatory Answers and for Sanctions should be denied for the following reasons:

(1) Plaintiffs are seeking production pursuant to discovery requests that were never properly served and to which Defendants responded voluntarily, by stipulation, in order to end the stalling by Plaintiffs to file proper discovery requests in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 33 and 34.

(2) In filing their motion, Plaintiffs have pointedly ignored two written requests by Defendants to meet and confer to resolve outstanding discovery disputes in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 33 and 34, and Local Rule 37.1.

(3) Plaintiffs' discovery requests do not meet the particularity requirements of the Federal Rules, and Defendants have responded to them accordingly.

(4) Plaintiffs have conceded the inadequacy of their first set of document requests by serving a second set of document requests. Plaintiffs' second set of requests in substance subsumes their first, but does attempt to describe categories of documents with somewhat greater particularity than their first. Thus, in accordance with Rule 34, Defendants will respond to this second set of requests on Thursday, October 29, 1998, and will produce dozens of boxes of documents to Plaintiffs. Despite the contrary impression Plaintiffs seek to create, discovery is proceeding on or ahead of schedule.

ARGUMENT

I.

Plaintiffs move to compel production of documents and interrogatory answers under their first set of discovery requests, which were improperly "served" with the Complaint on April 22, 1998 in violation of Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d) and 34(b). Those requests were the subject of this Court's June 9, 1998 Order denying Plaintiffs' Motion for Relief from Rule 26(d) and instructing the parties to proceed with discovery in accordance with the Federal Rules. To this day, however, Plaintiffs continue to assert that their discovery requests were "served" on April 22, 1998. (See Pl. Mem. at 1, 2) This is untrue. Indeed, the thirty-day response period under Rule 34 was triggered only because Defendants voluntarily stipulated to service of Plaintiffs' requests as of September 10, 1998 in order to move discovery along. (See Ex. A at 2-3)

II.

Had Plaintiffs made a good faith effort to meet and confer with Defendants to discuss and attempt to resolve the discovery disputes presented in Plaintiffs' motion, as is required by Local Rule 37.1, Plaintiffs could have obtained the assurances they apparently seek. Instead, Plaintiffs filed and continue to pursue the present motion in the face of Defendants' October 21, 1998 letter suggesting a meet and confer between the parties (see Pl. Mem. Ex. 17 at 4) and Defendants' October 22, 1998 letter informing Plaintiffs of their Rule 37.1 obligations and renewing Defendants' suggestion that the parties meet and confer to discuss all outstanding discovery disputes (see Ex. B).

III.

In any event, Plaintiffs' first requests, on their face, are vague and ambiguous, overbroad, and unduly burdensome.[1] As such, Plaintiffs' requests do not meet the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 33 and 34, and more importantly, do not provide sufficient information for Defendants to conduct a search for responsive documents and other information. This fact was brought to Plaintiffs' attention several times by Defendants, but each time Plaintiffs refused simply to redraft and reserve proper discovery requests pursuant to the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 33 and 34.

Plaintiffs' arguments regarding two individual discovery requests warrant specific responses. Plaintiffs' request for "[a]ll documents concerning the proposed Tobacco Industry Settlement dated June 20, 1997" calls for the production of irrelevant documents for those reasons stated in Defendants' prior motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) to dismiss that part of the Complaint which seeks to base antitrust liability on conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Further, the request is overbroad and unduly burdensome because it would encompass all types of documents beyond those that would purportedly "bear directly on paragraphs 32-39 of the Complaint." Pl. Mem. at 5. As such, the request is not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

Likewise, Plaintiffs' request for "[a]ll Rule 4(a) lists and any similar lists of documents in defendants' possession, custody or control" — as we now understand it — calls for irrelevant

[1] For example, Plaintiffs' first document request states in full: "All documents concerning Conwood Company L.P. and/or Conwood Sales Company, L.P. (collectively 'Conwood')." As written, the request clearly is overbroad and ambiguous. In fact, even in their papers in support of their present motion, Plaintiffs use a more focused description of the types of documents sought under this and other requests. (See Pl. Mem. at 4-5, 5-12) and unduly burdensome material. Because of Plaintiffs' own error — i.e., using the misnomer, "Rule 4(a)," to describe indices created pursuant to a court order in unrelated tort litigation — Defendants were misled and, after a good faith inquiry, responded accordingly. Only when Plaintiffs conceded their error by letter of October 16, 1998 were Defendants informed that Plaintiffs meant to request indices of documents created by certain tobacco companies pursuant to Paragraph (4)(a) of a protective order in an unrelated products liability case to which USTC was not even a party. Based on this information, Defendants can now definitively state that Plaintiffs' request for any "4(a)" indices created by other tobacco companies for tort litigation in a foreign jurisdiction is not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence in this antitrust case and is burdensome and harassing.

IV.

Inexplicably, two weeks after Defendants' stipulation to service of Plaintiffs' first set of discovery requests and before the response period had run, Plaintiffs served on USTC Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things. This second request in large part subsumes the first. However, this latest request at least attempts to achieve the particularity required by the Federal Rules — a result sought primarily by copying, almost verbatim, language from Defendants' document request.

Under Rule 34(c), Defendants' responses to Plaintiffs' second request are due on Thursday, October 29, 1998. In full compliance with the Federal Rules, Defendants will produce dozens of boxes of documents to Plaintiffs. Although Defendants anticipate that some documents will be produced on a rolling basis, Defendants believe that their production will be substantially completed well before the December 4, 1998 target date for completion of the production of documents. Accordingly, document discovery is on schedule in this case, and there was no reason for Plaintiffs to file a motion to compel relating to its improper first request.

CONCLUSION

To the extent that Plaintiffs were entitled to a response to their first set of discovery requests, Defendants have responded. Plaintiffs will also have received a response to their second set of document requests almost before the ink is dry on this memorandum. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents and Interrogatory Answers, for Sanctions, and for a Pretrial Conference should, therefore, be denied.

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Gentlemen:

I received Mark Hansen's letter of September 10, 1998, and I am both puzzled and troubled by Plaintiffs' continuing effort to foist Plaintiffs' improper April 22 discovery requests on Defendants. I also am troubled by Plaintiffs' unrelenting campaign to confuse the intent and purpose of Rule 26(a)(1) and Rules 33 and 34, with the apparent goal of evading the well-established procedures for seeking discovery under the Federal Rules.

As an initial matter, Defendants are well aware that Plaintiffs have produced documents pursuant to their own understanding of Rule 26(a)(1). The discovery process, however, has progressed beyond Rule 26(a)(1). Now that Defendants have served Rule 34 document requests, and have identified specific categories of documents as required by Rule 34(b), we anticipate that Plaintiffs will produce all responsive documents organized according to the categories described in Defendants' document requests. If copies of certain responsive documents have already been produced with Plaintiffs Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures, those documents should be identified by Bates number and by the category or categories to which they respond. A mutual understanding on these procedures at this time will prevent any confusion that might arise during the remainder of discovery.

Defendants also are aware that Plaintiffs attached interrogatories and document requests to their Complaint, which was served on April 22, 1998. Those discovery requests, of course, were served improperly in violation of Rule 26(d), which prohibits a party from seeking discovery from any source prior to a Rule 26(f) meeting. Plaintiffs' subsequent motion for relief from Rule 26(d) was denied by the Court and the parties were directed to proceed according to the Federal Rules.[1] The Court's ruling was in accordance with the established intent and purpose of Rule 26(a)(1): to enable opposing parties (1) to make an informed decision concerning which documents might need to be examined and (2) to frame their document requests accordingly. See 1993 Advisory Committee Notes.

Accordingly, after the parties met pursuant to Rule 26(f) and made their Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures in this case, we expected that Plaintiffs would reframe their discovery requests with the requisite particularity based on the information it received in Defendants' Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures. Indeed, Plaintiffs undertook such an exercise in its motion to compel "compliance" with Rule 26(a)(1). We also expected that Plaintiffs would properly serve revised discovery requests pursuant to Rules 33 and 34. Neither of these events has occurred. Moreover, your persistent, though now implicit, contention that Defendants should have responded to Plaintiffs' improperly served discovery requests, either directly or pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1), is unfounded. First, Plaintiffs cannot simply ignore the procedures of Rules 33 and 34. Unless interrogatories and document requests are properly served pursuant to Rules 33 and 34, the procedures for service of, and response to, such discovery requests are rendered superfluous. Second, document requests, whether properly served under Rule 34 or not, have no bearing on the scope of a party's Rule 26(a)(1) obligations, obligations that explicitly are based only on facts alleged with particularity in the pleadings.

It is our suggestion that, in accordance with the Federal Rules, Plaintiffs withdraw the document requests and interrogatories improperly served with the Complaint on April 22, 1998, reframe them based on the information produced by Defendants under Rule 26(a)(1), and then properly serve appropriately framed discovery requests pursuant to the procedures set forth in Rules 33 and 34. Otherwise, Defendants will address Plaintiffs' First Interrogatories to

[1] According to the Federal Rules, after the Rule 26(f) meeting, parties are obligated to make initial disclosures pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1).

Defendants and Plaintiffs' First Request For Production of Documents, as they were originally propounded, and as if they were served on September 10, 1998 (not on September 3, 1998 as you suggest in your letter). Defendants will then respond to those discovery requests pursuant to the procedures of Rules 33 and 34.

Please advise us by the end of the day as to your intended course of action. If we do not hear from you, we will presume that you intend to rely on your April 22 discovery requests.

If you have any questions please do not hesitate to call me at (212) 735-2375.

Very truly yours,

Chris Athanasia

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Gentlemen:

We received Mark Hansen's October 21, 1998 letter, and we again feel it is necessary to point out the misrepresentations it contains and the complete disregard for procedural rules that it demonstrates on Plaintiffs' behalf.

As an initial matter, my October 21, 1998 letter cannot reasonably be used as a pretext for Plaintiffs to avoid their obligation to "make a good faith effort to resolve extrajudicially any dispute relating to discovery," as Local Rule 37.1 requires. Indeed, contrary to the suggestion of Mr. Hansen's letter, my letter did not simply "rehash[] a defense of Defendants' nonproduction." Rather, it responded in full to Plaintiffs' contentious October 16, 1998 letter, which was replete with misstatements of fact and unsupportable accusations of misconduct. Moreover, my letter proposed a meet and confer between the parties in order to discuss all discovery disputes that have arisen thus far.

As such, my letter did not suggest a meet and confer only to discuss the deficiencies of Plaintiffs' production, as Mr. Hansen's letter falsely states. The letter made clear that the meet and confer should also include those issues raised by Plaintiffs and discussed in my letter. In an effort to avoid further confusion, I will quote my letter of yesterday in relevant part:

> Pursuant to Local Rule 37.1, we suggest that the parties meet and confer in an effort to resolve several of these issues, as well as several issues presented by Plaintiffs' October 5, 1998 responses to Defendants' discovery requests, including but not limited to, those issues set forth below. (emphasis added)

Defendants are at a loss as to how this passage can be interpreted to mean that Defendants are not willing to meet and confer in an attempt to resolve the discovery disputes raised in Plaintiffs' October 16, 1998 letter. But, to remove all doubt regarding Defendants' intentions, Defendants' are ready and willing to meet and confer with Plaintiffs to discuss and attempt to resolve all outstanding discovery disputes. Plaintiffs, therefore, have a ready alternative to seeking relief from the Court.

Accordingly, Defendants suggest that Plaintiffs reconsider their premature entrenchment and respond directly to Defendants' request to meet and confer in accordance with Local Rule 37.1.

Very truly yours,

Chris Athanasia

Re: Conwood Co., et al. vs. United States Tobacco Co., et al.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed please find Defendants' Rule 34(c) responses to Plaintiffs' Second Request For Production Of Documents And Things. Documents described in Defendants' responses will be made available for inspection and copying at a mutually agreeable time and place.

Defendants also received Neil Gorsuch's letter of October 22, 1998, suggesting that the parties meet and confer to attempt to resolve outstanding discovery disputes. As we have noted on several occasions, Defendants are, and have been, ready and willing to meet and discuss all discovery issues, as well as Plaintiffs' recent attempt to designate its Rule 26(a)(1)(A) disclosures as Tier 2 Confidential Information.

Mr. Gorsuch's letter stated that Plaintiffs would be available on October 29, October 30, or November 1. We anticipate, however, that Plaintiffs will want to review Defendants' enclosed responses and reconsider the issues that need to be resolved prior to any meet and confer. As soon as possible, however, the parties should discuss the time and place where responsive documents will be made available.

Accordingly, please inform us of an agreeable time for a telephone conference.

Very truly yours,

Chris Athanasia

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

PLAINTIFFS' REPLY IN SUPPORT OF THEIR MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND INTERROGATORY ANSWERS, FOR SANCTIONS, AND FOR A PRETRIAL CONFERENCE

Defendants initially refused to supply any meaningful answers to Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories ("First Interrogatories") or any documents in response to Plaintiffs' First Document Request ("First Document Requests"). In repeated correspondence and two lengthy conferences plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. ("Conwood") sought to narrow the parties' differences and facilitate at least some production. In the end, however, defendants still declined to answer request after request. Their failure to provide written discovery at this late date jeopardizes plaintiffs' ability to prepare for depositions and, with it, the Court's Scheduling Order. Plaintiffs respectfully submit that an order compelling discovery, awarding automatic Rule 37(a)(4) sanctions, and scheduling a Rule 16 pretrial conference remains both warranted and necessary.

Argument

I. DEFENDANTS STILL SUPPLY NO REASON FOR WITHHOLDING INTERROGATORY ANSWERS OR DOCUMENTS

A. Defendants fleetingly complain about service of plaintiffs' First Interrogatories and First Document Requests. Def. Opp. at 2. But they do not dispute that they received plaintiffs' discovery in April 1998; that they opposed initiating early discovery despite the fact they answered the Complaint; or that after discovery began June 9, 1998 it still took four months -- and repeated prodding from plaintiffs[1] -- before they responded. Pl. Mot. at 4-12. Nor can they explain how their complaints about service justify their refusal to supply any meaningful interrogatory answers or documents.

B. Defendants suggest that a meet-and-confer could have resolved plaintiffs' concerns. Def. Opp. at 2 ("[p]laintiffs could have obtained the assurances they apparently seek"). In fact, however, until this motion to compel was filed defendants made no effort to resolve plaintiffs' concerns, but merely rehashed their objections in correspondence. See Exh. A (Oct. 28, 1998 Letter); Pl. Mot., Exhs. 13, 17 & 18. Once this motion was filed, two lengthy conferences were held but defendants repeatedly rejected plaintiffs' efforts to facilitate production. See Exh. B (Nov. 5, 1998 Letter) discussing Interrogatories 1, 2; First Document Requests 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12-14, 16-17; Second Document Request 34. In the few instances where defendants did reverse their position and agree to produce, it

[1] See Pl. Mot., Exhs. 9 & 10.

was unclear why they had for so long refused to answer plaintiffs' straightforward requests. See Exh. B discussing Interrogatories 3, 4, 5, 6; First Document Requests 5-6, 9, 15.

C. Tellingly, defendants do not even attempt to answer plaintiffs' point-by-point discussion of the inadequacies in their discovery responses. Pl. Mot. at 4-12. Instead, they specifically defend just three of their document responses (and none of their interrogatory answers).

First, defendants argue that they should not be forced to produce any documents concerning the Global Settlement because they have a pending motion to dismiss portions of the Complaint pertaining to that deal. Def. Opp. at 3; Pl. Mot. at 5 (First Document Request No. 2). Defendants, however, nowhere raised this objection as a basis for withholding production in their written discovery response. Pl. Mot., Exh. 11 at 5. Nor could they have done so: merely filing a motion to dismiss does not stay discovery obligations. If defendants had wished to obtain such a stay, they should have filed a motion as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c). There is, accordingly, no basis for defendants' refusal to produce.[2]

Second, defendants argue that they were confused by plaintiffs' use of the term "Rule 4(a)" rather than "Paragraph 4(a)" in referring to database indices generated as a result of a ruling in the Minnesota Attorney General tobacco lawsuit. Pl.

[2]Defendants fleetingly suggest that plaintiffs' request is overbroad. Def. Opp. at 3. But they expressly rejected reasonable efforts to narrow this request at the parties' meet-and-confer. Exh. B at 4 (Request No. 2).

16diii000894

Mot. at 5-6; First Document Request No. 3. Any possible claim to confusion, however, was resolved between the parties a month ago, as defendants admit. See Def. Opp. at 4.

Accordingly, defendants are left to complain only that their database indices are not relevant. Def. Opp. at 4. But plaintiffs are entitled to these indices to ensure that all potential sources of information in defendants' control have been searched. See Exh. B at 2 (Interrogatory 2); id. at 7-8 (electronic documents discussion). Such information is typically produced in antitrust and business tort litigation. Id. at 7-8. And precisely these same indices were compelled from UST in the Texas Attorney General suit. Pl. Mot. at 6; id., Exh. 16 at 6.[3] Production is particularly warranted in this case given that defendants have so far been unable to confirm whether they will produce electronically-stored data responsive to plaintiffs' document requests -- despite their express obligation under Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a) to do so. See Exh. B at 7-8.

Third, defendants complain that plaintiffs' request for "documents concerning Conwood" is too broad. First Document Request No. 1; Def. Opp. at 3, n.1. But in an antitrust, unfair competition, and product defamation case plaintiffs are entitled to know what defendants say and plan about them. Pl. Mot. at 4-5. Plaintiffs have, moreover, offered to limit the scope of production to the files of a finite number of defendants'

[3]Contrary to UST's suggestion (Def. Opp. at 3), the Texas litigation did include antitrust claims (Count IV) and, also as here, allegations of deceptive trade practices (Count XIV). See http://stic.neu.edu.Tx/1STAMD.htm (Texas complaint).

executives; impose reasonable date restrictions; and forego responsive published third party documents in defendants' possession. Exh. B at 3 (Document Request No. 1). Based on their own document production, plaintiffs believe that a finite and manageable production can easily be made under these circumstances. Defendants do not contest the manageability of such a search but have nevertheless refused all good faith efforts to facilitate production.

D. Defendants suggest that their refusal to produce documents in response to plaintiffs' First Document Requests is immaterial since they are producing documents in response to certain of plaintiffs' Second Document Requests. Def. Opp. at 4-5. This is no defense, however, to defendants' failure to provide meaningful interrogatory answers. Besides, defendants are not at liberty to refuse responding to the First Document Requests simply because plaintiffs have issued a second set of document demands. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) (parties may use any mix and sequence of discovery methods). Plaintiffs' First Document Requests are, moreover, deliberately designed to capture materials that may escape production under the Second Document Requests. Defendants do not (and cannot) suggest otherwise. Def. Opp. at 4 (complaining only that two sets overlap "in large part").[4]

[4]Notably, defendants do not dispute that under Rule 37(a)(4) they are liable for fees and expenses if this motion is granted. Pl. Mot. at 13-14.

16diii000896

II. A PRETRIAL CONFERENCE REMAINS WARRANTED

Defendants have not responded to plaintiffs' motion for a pretrial conference. There is little question that such a conference is needed. Defendants continue to refuse any response to large numbers of written discovery requests: Interrogatories 1, 2; First Document Requests 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12-14, 16-17; Second Document Request 34. See Exh. B. They have rejected plaintiffs' good faith efforts to narrow disputes over these requests. Id. They have declined to supply any meaningful Rule 26(a)(1)(A) witness list. They have refused to produce any calculation of their counterclaim damages as required by Rule 26(a)(1)(C). Until this last week, they had produced just one box of internal UST materials.[5] Unless the Court intercedes, UST's inaction will jeopardize the Court's deposition deadline (less than six months away) and, with it, the Court's scheduled trial date.

[5]On November 3, 1998 defendants produced 25 further boxes. But even then defendants refused to supply their materials in electronic form (as plaintiffs have), and they have been unable to confirm whether they will make a complete production of their responsive electronic data as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a). Exh. B at 7-8. Meanwhile, less than four weeks remain in the period allotted by the Court primarily to written discovery and plaintiffs have already produced or made available nearly 400 boxes.

Conclusion

The Court should compel production of withheld documents and interrogatory answers, award plaintiffs their costs and expenses, schedule a pretrial conference for the earliest possible date, and award such other relief as the Court deems just and proper.

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your letter of October 22, 1998.

We strongly disagree with your characterization of the recent events. On October 13, 1998 defendants finally responded to discovery outstanding for six months. Yet in doing so defendants refused production of any documents in response to 18 distinct requests and refused any meaningful answers to 6 straightforward interrogatories. Defendants' refusal to supply discovery, first through Rule 26(a)(1) and now through Rules 33 and 34, is placing plaintiffs' ability to prepare for depositions and trial in increasing jeopardy.

Accordingly, we promptly wrote on October 16, 1998. We asked you to reconsider defendants' document request and interrogatory responses and inquired whether it would be useful to meet to explore ways to facilitate at least some production from defendants. On October 21, 1998, however, we received a five page letter which promised no change in defendants' position, offered no new documents or interrogatory answers, nowhere stated that defendants were even willing to consider amending their discovery responses, and instead purported to defend at length defendants' claimed ignorance of Rule 4(a) indices and their absolute right to withhold information concerning computer databases. Defendants indicated that they were willing to meet, but listed as agenda items supposed defects in plaintiffs' production. We saw, in sum, no indication that defendants were willing to provide any of the discovery plaintiffs requested or state a recognized reason why such discovery is not being provided.

If, however, defendants are now willing to reconsider their incomplete responses to plaintiffs' interrogatories and first document requests by providing additional answers and documents, please let us know. If this is the case, we would of course be willing to discuss ways of narrowing differences between us and facilitating production. We would propose a telephone conference and are available October 29, the afternoon of October 30, or November 1.

Very truly yours,

Neil M. Gorsuch

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

This is to document the results of the telephone conferences Monday evening and Tuesday morning, November 2 and 3, 1998 between Chris Athanasia, John Reed, Steven Benz, Bill Conyngham, and myself. I also address a few additional outstanding discovery-related issues.

1. Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories

Interrogatory No. 1 (Identify persons whose files were searched in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents). We explained that this interrogatory simply seeks to discovery whether defendants examined anyone's files before responding to our first document requests and, if so, whose files were reviewed. You stated that you will attach labels to any boxes produced reflecting the appropriate custodian. But this is no excuse for refusing to answer a simple and straightforward interrogatory. Besides, you may have searched the files of custodians for whom you have produced no documents. After a lengthy discussion, defendants refused to provide a list of persons whose files were searched, or to supplement their response in any way.

Interrogatory No. 2 (Describe generally defendants' computer systems). We explained that we need this information, inter alia, to ensure that all potential sources of information have been searched. We noted that defendants were forced to produce even more specific database information in the recent Texas litigation (also involving antitrust and tort claims); accordingly, there can be little burden associated with our more modest request. We also explained that, in our experience, lists of computer systems and databases are typically provided in antitrust and commercial litigation. This interrogatory appears particularly warranted given that, despite our direct inquiry, you were unable to confirm to us that defendants will produce all responsive electronic materials. See Point 4, infra. Nonetheless, defendants refused to provide a list of their computer systems, or to supplement their response in any way.

Interrogatory No. 3 (Identify defendants' moist snuff sales personnel). We explained that we were unable to see how identifying defendants' sales force personnel would be unduly burdensome, overbroad, or unlikely to lead to discovery of admissible evidence, as defendants' written response claimed. You eventually agreed to answer this interrogatory insofar as it seeks the name, address, title, job description, and dates of service for (a) all persons who have served as sales representatives, division managers, regional managers involved in the marketing and/or sale of defendants' moist snuff products, and (b) all persons who have been involved in training persons identified in (a). We are at a loss to understand why defendants declined to provide this information until now.

Interrogatory No. 4 (Identify distributors and retailers with whom defendants have or had an agreement). We explained that defendants' agreements with retailers and distributors are at the heart of plaintiffs' exclusive dealing claims. Complaint ¶ 28. You eventually agreed to answer this interrogatory insofar as it seeks the identity of all distributors and retailers of moist snuff products with whom any defendant has or had an agreement that concerns moist snuff racks (e.g., which company's racks may be installed, where a company's racks must be placed), slot allotment, or point of sale advertising. This includes, but is not limited to, all retailers or distributors who have participated in the Customer Alliance Program, Wholesaler Alliance Program, Retail Account Data Program, Copenhagen

Incentive Program, Retail Merchandising Placement, or the 2908 Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center program.

We fail to understand why this information was not provided earlier. As you know, even when defendants' requests have been ambiguously drafted in our judgment, we have not declined production but instead attempted to produce immediately to the best of our ability. See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Objections and Responses to Defendants' First Request for Documents, Response to Request No. 1 (noting ambiguity of question, but agreeing to produce immediately).

Interrogatory No. 5 (Identify persons who have spoken to tobacco industry analysts concerning moist snuff issues). Defendants' written response claimed that this interrogatory was burdensome and overbroad. We questioned these claims, explaining that if defendants conform to industry practice, few of their employees have authority to speak with outside industry analysts. You were unable to state whether defendants' practices were different. In an effort to avoid dispute, however, we offered to narrow the scope of our request to identification of the top 25 persons, by name title, job description, and date of service, who have responsibilities which include speaking with tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff. You agreed to respond to this interrogatory.

Interrogatory No. 6 (Identify persons who participated in preparation of interrogatories). After discussion, you agreed to provide the names, addresses, titles, job descriptions, and dates of service for all persons, except counsel, who participated in the preparation of these interrogatories. This includes, without limitation, any third parties (e.g., investigators). Again, we see no reason why this information was not provided earlier.

2. Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents

Request No. 1 (Documents concerning Conwood). In an effort to avoid needless dispute, we offered to narrow this request to encompass the files of a finite list of defendants' executives. We offered to accept a reasonable time restriction. And we agreed to forego any published third party documents (e.g., Nielsen data) mentioning Conwood. Defendants rejected all of these attempts to facilitate production, and refused to provide any documents.

Request No. 2 (Documents concerning Proposed Tobacco Industry Settlement). Seeking to avoid dispute, we offered to narrow this request to encompass documents which concern the potential or actual effects of any settlement on competition in the marketplace. Such documents are relevant to show intent. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 n.3 (1965). Defendants refused this offer and declined to produce any documents.

Request No. 3 (Rule 4(a) and similar document indices). Though defendants claimed ignorance of 4(a) indices in their document response, we reminded you that less than two years ago USTC was subject to a Texas federal district court order expressly discussing 4(a) indices and ordering USTC to produce all similar "computerized or electronic databases relating to documents in its possession or control." Despite our efforts to facilitate some production, defendants refused to modify their document response in any way.

Request No. 4 (Documents concerning communications with tobacco industry analysts). We offered to narrow this request to encompass the files of a limited number of executives (e.g., to the 25 persons defendants now agree to identify as having contacts with tobacco industry analysts in response to Interrogatory No. 5). Inexplicably, defendants still refused to provide any documents.

Request Nos. 5 & 6 (Documents concerning defendants' agreements with retailers and distributors). In an attempt to obtain at least some discovery, we offered to narrow these requests to all agreements with distributors and retailers of moist snuff products that affect moist snuff racks (e.g., which company's racks may be installed, where a company's racks must be placed), slot allotment, or point of sale advertising. This includes, but is not limited to, Customer Alliance Program, Wholesaler Alliance Program, Retail Account Data Program, Copenhagen Incentive Program, Retail Merchandising Placement, or 2908 Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center agreements. Defendants agreed to produce in response to this request.

Request No. 7 (Documents concerning revenues from the sale of moist snuff). We offered to narrow the scope of this request by time. We offered to limit the number of custodians to be searched. Defendants, however, refused all of these efforts and declined any production. We find defendants' refusal troublesome. As we explained, these documents are highly relevant to plaintiffs' claims of monopoly pricing and to the issue of damages; in our experience, these materials are ordinarily produced in antitrust litigation.

Request No. 8 (Documents concerning market share for moist snuff). Again, we sought ways of narrowing this request to facilitate production. We offered to exclude third party publications (e.g., Nielsen data). We offered to limit the number of custodians to be searched. We offered to limit the applicable time period. Again, none of these efforts were successful and defendants continued to refuse production. Here, too, defendants' refusal to produce is untenable given that the issue of market share is at the heart of any Section 2 monopolization claim.

Request No. 9 (Organization charts, employee lists, job descriptions). Despite their initial refusal, in our conversation defendants agreed to produce all organization charts. Defendants also agreed to provide all employee lists and job descriptions, except for materials pertaining to support staff. As with Defendants' First Request for Documents, the period covered by this request is January 1, 1977 to present. We fail to see why such material was withheld until now.

Request Nos. 10 & 11 (Documents concerning defendants' activities in this district and the relationship between defendants). As you know, it is impossible for the Court to grant UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction until discovery is granted concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky. Because we allege that UST Inc. directly controls the activities of the other corporate defendants, the Kentucky contacts of all defendants must be examined, as must document concerning UST Inc.'s relationship of control with the other corporate defendants. When we explained these points in our November 2, 1998 conversation, defendants agreed to amend their answer and provide documents concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky. In our subsequent conversation on November 3, 1998, however, defendants retracted this offer and stood on their refusals to produce.

Request No. 12 (Documents concerning Smokeless Tobacco Council). Though defendants claimed burden, we explained that we have reason to believe that defendants have a reasonably limited set of responsive materials, based upon our own review of Conwood's analogous files. It also became evident from our discussion that counsel did not make even a modest attempt to determine how many responsive documents exist before interposing its boilerplate burden objection. Defendants also claimed that they could not see the relevance of these materials. We explained at length orally, as we have done in writing, the reasons why we believe them to be relevant and likely to lead to discovery of admissible evidence. Cf. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents and Interrogatory Answers, for Sanctions, and for a Pretrial Conference at 9. Nonetheless, defendants still refused to produce any documents.

Request Nos. 12-14 (Documents concerning Swisher, Swedish Match, Philip Morris). Defendants claimed that these requests are overbroad and unduly burdensome. To avoid needless dispute, we offered to narrow them by custodian and time, and to exclude externally generated publications. Given our proposed limitations, we explained that a very limited set of responsive documents should exist based upon our review (and production) of Conwood's analogous materials. Defendants nonetheless refused to produce any documents.

Request No. 15 (Documents concerning policies, procedures, and training for sales representatives). After discussion, defendants agreed to produce all documents concerning policies, procedures, and training for sales representatives, excluding basic human resources materials (e.g., drug testing policies).

Request Nos. 16 & 17 (Documents concerning moist snuff distribution racks and quality). We explained that these requests bear directly on plaintiffs' allegations that defendants impose costs on rivals by changing rack design (Complaint ¶ 27) and that they disparage Conwood's products as inferior in quality (id. ¶ 19). We offered to narrow our requests by date to facilitate production. Despite the obvious relevance of the materials sought, however, defendants refused stood by their decision to refuse production of any documents.

3. Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things

General Objections. You clarified for us that defendants will not withhold any documents as a result of General Objections Nos. 1-3, and that these objections are interposed solely for purposes of preserving defendants' rights. You further explained that any documents withheld as a result of General Objection No. 4 will be identified on a privilege log.

Request Nos. 5-7 (Documents concerning defendants' costs). We explained that these documents are relevant to plaintiffs' claims of price predation, monopoly pricing, and to damages. You agreed to revise your answers and provide full production.

Request No. 34 (Documents concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky). We explained, again, that all of defendants' contacts with Kentucky are relevant and discoverable given our claim that UST Inc. directly controls and manages the affairs of each of the other defendant corporations who do business in Kentucky. You still refused production. See Point 2, Request Nos. 10 & 11, supra.

4. Other Matters

Amended Discovery Responses. In accord with the results of our conferences, we expect defendants to modify their written responses to Interrogatories 3, 4, 5, and 6 of Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories; their written responses to Requests 5, 6, 9, and 15 of Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents; and their written responses to Requests 5-7 of Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things. Plaintiffs are entitled to defendants' revised responses in writing; we believe that they can and should be made promptly to avoid any future dispute. We would appreciate them by Monday, November 9, 1998. We believe that responsive documents should be produced at the same time, and in no event later than Monday November 16, 1998 — two weeks after our conferences, and seven months after our requests were first propounded.

Electronic Documents. As noted above, see Point 1 Interrogatory No. 2, supra, we specifically asked whether defendants plan to make full production of electronically-stored information, including information concerning sales reports. Defendants indicated that they were not sure, but would respond as soon as possible. We ask for a response by Friday, November 6, 1998. If defendants are not planning to make such production, despite (a) Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a), and (b) plaintiffs' document request, which employs a definition of "documents" encompassing all electronically stored media (e.g., computer databases, computer-stored voice mail, e-mail), we need to know immediately in order to seek appropriate relief.

Mode of Production. With the exception of certain voluminous and hard-to-copy materials, to date plaintiffs have delivered to defendants a free electronic copy of their discovery documents. In our conferences, however, defendants indicated that they will not reciprocate by providing electronic copies of their documents. Defendants also stated that in the future they will not even deliver hard copies of their documents to plaintiffs, but merely make materials available for plaintiffs to retrieve and copy at their expense. This represents an abandonment even of the modest courtesy defendants afforded in response to Rule 26(a)(1) by delivering hard copies of certain materials. Accordingly, in the future plaintiffs will likewise simply make their documents available for inspection and copying at defendants' expense.

As we outlined in our conversation, all of plaintiffs' documents are located in a repository in Fort Worth, Texas. Approximately 300 boxes are now ready for your review in electronic or paper form. We expect additional materials to become available for review in the near future. Suitable workstations will be made available for your use free of charge. You may designate for copying and delivery, at your expense, any documents you wish. Chris Athanasia indicated that he would contact us with proposed dates to visit plaintiffs' repository. We will make every reasonable effort to accommodate your schedules.

Plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) Disclosure. Pursuant to the express language in paragraph 15 of the Court's Protective Order, on October 16, 1998 plaintiffs redesignated their Rule 26(a)(1)(A) list as Tier 2 confidential information. Accordingly, access to plaintiffs' disclosure must be restricted to those persons identified in paragraph 7 of the Court's Confidentiality Order.

Chris Athanasia's letter of October 28, 1998 is very troubling. In it he states that, despite plaintiffs' redesignation, "defendants will continue" to meet and interview potential witnesses listed in plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A). Please clarify immediately whether plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) disclosure, or information derived from it, is being used by or distributed to non-qualified paragraph 7 recipients. I hardly need to remind you that, under the Protective Order drafted by defendants and adopted by the Court, if defendants disagree with a confidentiality designation they may not unilaterally disregard that designation but must bring the matter to the Court's attention.

Athanasia Letter of November 2, 1998. I see nothing productive in responding to each of the inaccuracies and epithets in Chris Athanasia's letter of November 2, 1998. Two badly misrecorded points about our October 30, 1998 conversation do, however, warrant correction. Contrary to Chris's representation, I never stated that plaintiffs do "not intend to produce documents to Defendants as part of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 response." Instead, I explained that many documents responsive to defendants Rule 34 requests have already been produced in plaintiffs' voluminous Rule 26(a)(1) production as they have been kept in the ordinary course of business. I also explained that many additional responsive materials are being readied for production. As we discussed on November 2 and 3, nearly 300 such boxes are presently available for your inspection, with more to come. We have not, to put it mildly, experienced a reciprocal level of production from defendants.

Chris Athanasia's letter accuses me of "evad[ing] the question[s]" whether and when certain documents would be made available for production. This, too, is incorrect. In fact, I explained in our October 30 call that certain categories of documents were ready for inspection, that they were voluminous, but that Steven Benz had more detailed information about the content and quantity of these materials. I even volunteered to find out more about these documents and supply it to Chris in our next conversation, which we scheduled for Monday, November 2 — just three days off. And, as promised, when we spoke on November 2, Steven, Bill Conyngham, and I provided Chris with all relevant details concerning the documents that are now available, their volume, and their location. We also expressed our willingness to make every reasonable effort to schedule a mutually convenient time for your review.

Very truly yours,

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY
AT PADUCAH

'98 NOV 10 A10:18

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P., CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC., Defendants.	Civil Action No. 5:98CV-108-R JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

PLAINTIFFS' REPLY IN SUPPORT OF THEIR MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND INTERROGATORY ANSWERS, FOR SANCTIONS, AND FOR A PRETRIAL CONFERENCE

Defendants initially refused to supply any meaningful answers to Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories ("First Interrogatories") or any documents in response to Plaintiffs' First Document Request ("First Document Requests"). In repeated correspondence and two lengthy conferences plaintiffs Conwood Company, L.P., and Conwood Sales Company, L.P. ("Conwood") sought to narrow the parties' differences and facilitate at least some production. In the end, however, defendants still declined to answer request after request. Their failure to provide written discovery at this late date jeopardizes plaintiffs' ability to prepare for depositions and, with it, the Court's Scheduling Order. Plaintiffs respectfully submit that an order compelling discovery, awarding automatic Rule 37(a)(4) sanctions, and scheduling a Rule 16 pretrial conference remains both warranted and necessary.

Argument

I. DEFENDANTS STILL SUPPLY NO REASON FOR WITHHOLDING INTERROGATORY ANSWERS OR DOCUMENTS

A. Defendants fleetingly complain about service of plaintiffs' First Interrogatories and First Document Requests. Def. Opp. at 2. But they do not dispute that they received plaintiffs' discovery in April 1998; that they opposed initiating early discovery despite the fact they answered the Complaint; or that after discovery began June 9, 1998 it still took four months -- and repeated prodding from plaintiffs[1] -- before they responded. Pl. Mot. at 4-12. Nor can they explain how their complaints about service justify their refusal to supply any meaningful interrogatory answers or documents.

B. Defendants suggest that a meet-and-confer could have resolved plaintiffs' concerns. Def. Opp. at 2 ("[p]laintiffs could have obtained the assurances they apparently seek"). In fact, however, until this motion to compel was filed defendants made no effort to resolve plaintiffs' concerns, but merely rehashed their objections in correspondence. See Exh. A (Oct. 28, 1998 Letter); Pl. Mot., Exhs. 13, 17 & 18. Once this motion was filed, two lengthy conferences were held but defendants repeatedly rejected plaintiffs' efforts to facilitate production. See Exh. B (Nov. 5, 1998 Letter) discussing Interrogatories 1, 2; First Document Requests 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12-14, 16-17; Second Document Request 34. In the few instances where defendants did reverse their position and agree to produce, it

[1] See Pl. Mot., Exhs. 9 & 10.

was unclear why they had for so long refused to answer plaintiffs' straightforward requests. See Exh. B discussing Interrogatories 3, 4, 5, 6; First Document Requests 5-6, 9, 15.

C. Tellingly, defendants do not even attempt to answer plaintiffs' point-by-point discussion of the inadequacies in their discovery responses. Pl. Mot. at 4-12. Instead, they specifically defend just three of their document responses (and none of their interrogatory answers).

First, defendants argue that they should not be forced to produce any documents concerning the Global Settlement because they have a pending motion to dismiss portions of the Complaint pertaining to that deal. Def. Opp. at 3; Pl. Mot. at 5 (First Document Request No. 2). Defendants, however, nowhere raised this objection as a basis for withholding production in their written discovery response. Pl. Mot., Exh. 11 at 5. Nor could they have done so: merely filing a motion to dismiss does not stay discovery obligations. If defendants had wished to obtain such a stay, they should have filed a motion as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c). There is, accordingly, no basis for defendants' refusal to produce.[2]

Second, defendants argue that they were confused by plaintiffs' use of the term "Rule 4(a)" rather than "Paragraph 4(a)" in referring to database indices generated as a result of a ruling in the Minnesota Attorney General tobacco lawsuit. Pl.

[2]Defendants fleetingly suggest that plaintiffs' request is overbroad. Def. Opp. at 3. But they expressly rejected reasonable efforts to narrow this request at the parties' meet-and-confer. Exh. B at 4 (Request No. 2).

16diii000917

Mot. at 5-6; First Document Request No. 3. Any possible claim to confusion, however, was resolved between the parties a month ago, as defendants admit. See Def. Opp. at 4.

Accordingly, defendants are left to complain only that their database indices are not relevant. Def. Opp. at 4. But plaintiffs are entitled to these indices to ensure that all potential sources of information in defendants' control have been searched. See Exh. B at 2 (Interrogatory 2); id. at 7-8 (electronic documents discussion). Such information is typically produced in antitrust and business tort litigation. Id. at 7-8. And precisely these same indices were compelled from UST in the Texas Attorney General suit. Pl. Mot. at 6; id., Exh. 16 at 6.[3] Production is particularly warranted in this case given that defendants have so far been unable to confirm whether they will produce electronically-stored data responsive to plaintiffs' document requests -- despite their express obligation under Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a) to do so. See Exh. B at 7-8.

Third, defendants complain that plaintiffs' request for "documents concerning Conwood" is too broad. First Document Request No. 1; Def. Opp. at 3, n.1. But in an antitrust, unfair competition, and product defamation case plaintiffs are entitled to know what defendants say and plan about them. Pl. Mot. at 4-5. Plaintiffs have, moreover, offered to limit the scope of production to the files of a finite number of defendants'

[3]Contrary to UST's suggestion (Def. Opp. at 3), the Texas litigation did include antitrust claims (Count IV) and, also as here, allegations of deceptive trade practices (Count XIV). See http://stic.neu.edu.Tx/1STAMD.htm (Texas complaint).

executives; impose reasonable date restrictions; and forego responsive published third party documents in defendants' possession. Exh. B at 3 (Document Request No. 1). Based on their own document production, plaintiffs believe that a finite and manageable production can easily be made under these circumstances. Defendants do not contest the manageability of such a search but have nevertheless refused all good faith efforts to facilitate production.

D. Defendants suggest that their refusal to produce documents in response to plaintiffs' First Document Requests is immaterial since they are producing documents in response to certain of plaintiffs' Second Document Requests. Def. Opp. at 4-5. This is no defense, however, to defendants' failure to provide meaningful interrogatory answers. Besides, defendants are not at liberty to refuse responding to the First Document Requests simply because plaintiffs have issued a second set of document demands. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a) (parties may use any mix and sequence of discovery methods). Plaintiffs' First Document Requests are, moreover, deliberately designed to capture materials that may escape production under the Second Document Requests. Defendants do not (and cannot) suggest otherwise. Def. Opp. at 4 (complaining only that two sets overlap "in large part").[4]

[4]Notably, defendants do not dispute that under Rule 37(a)(4) they are liable for fees and expenses if this motion is granted. Pl. Mot. at 13-14.

II. A PRETRIAL CONFERENCE REMAINS WARRANTED

Defendants have not responded to plaintiffs' motion for a pretrial conference. There is little question that such a conference is needed. Defendants continue to refuse any response to large numbers of written discovery requests: Interrogatories 1, 2; First Document Requests 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12-14, 16-17; Second Document Request 34. See Exh. B. They have rejected plaintiffs' good faith efforts to narrow disputes over these requests. Id. They have declined to supply any meaningful Rule 26(a)(1)(A) witness list. They have refused to produce any calculation of their counterclaim damages as required by Rule 26(a)(1)(C). Until this last week, they had produced just one box of internal UST materials.[5] Unless the Court intercedes, UST's inaction will jeopardize the Court's deposition deadline (less than six months away) and, with it, the Court's scheduled trial date.

[5]On November 3, 1998 defendants produced 25 further boxes. But even then defendants refused to supply their materials in electronic form (as plaintiffs have), and they have been unable to confirm whether they will make a complete production of their responsive electronic data as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a). Exh. B at 7-8. Meanwhile, less than four weeks remain in the period allotted by the Court primarily to written discovery and plaintiffs have already produced or made available nearly 400 boxes.

Conclusion

The Court should compel production of withheld documents and interrogatory answers, award plaintiffs their costs and expenses, schedule a pretrial conference for the earliest possible date, and award such other relief as the Court deems just and proper.

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your letter of October 22, 1998.

We strongly disagree with your characterization of the recent events. On October 13, 1998 defendants finally responded to discovery outstanding for six months. Yet in doing so defendants refused production of any documents in response to 18 distinct requests and refused any meaningful answers to 6 straightforward interrogatories. Defendants' refusal to supply discovery, first through Rule 26(a)(1) and now through Rules 33 and 34, is placing plaintiffs' ability to prepare for depositions and trial in increasing jeopardy.

Accordingly, we promptly wrote on October 16, 1998. We asked you to reconsider defendants' document request and interrogatory responses and inquired whether it would be useful to meet to explore ways to facilitate at least some production from defendants. On October 21, 1998, however, we received a five page letter which promised no change in defendants' position, offered no new documents or interrogatory answers, nowhere stated that defendants were even willing to consider amending their discovery responses, and instead purported to defend at length defendants' claimed ignorance of Rule 4(a) indices and their absolute right to withhold information concerning computer databases. Defendants indicated that they were willing to meet, but listed as agenda items supposed defects in plaintiffs' production. We saw, in sum, no indication that defendants were willing to provide any of the discovery plaintiffs requested or state a recognized reason why such discovery is not being provided.

If, however, defendants are now willing to reconsider their incomplete responses to plaintiffs' interrogatories and first document requests by providing additional answers and documents, please let us know. If this is the case, we would of course be willing to discuss ways of narrowing differences between us and facilitating production. We would propose a telephone conference and are available October 29, the afternoon of October 30, or November 1.

Very truly yours,

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

This is to document the results of the telephone conferences Monday evening and Tuesday morning, November 2 and 3, 1998 between Chris Athanasia, John Reed, Steven Benz, Bill Conyngham, and myself. I also address a few additional outstanding discovery-related issues.

1. Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories

Interrogatory No. 1 (Identify persons whose files were searched in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents). We explained that this interrogatory simply seeks to discovery whether defendants examined anyone's files before responding to our first document requests and, if so, whose files were reviewed. You stated that you will attach labels to any boxes produced reflecting the appropriate custodian. But this is no excuse for refusing to answer a simple and straightforward interrogatory. Besides, you may have searched the files of custodians for whom you have produced no documents. After a lengthy discussion, defendants refused to provide a list of persons whose files were searched, or to supplement their response in any way.

Interrogatory No. 2 (Describe generally defendants' computer systems). We explained that we need this information, inter alia, to ensure that all potential sources of information have been searched. We noted that defendants were forced to produce even more specific database information in the recent Texas litigation (also involving antitrust and tort claims); accordingly, there can be little burden associated with our more modest request. We also explained that, in our experience, lists of computer systems and databases are typically provided in antitrust and commercial litigation. This interrogatory appears particularly warranted given that, despite our direct inquiry, you were unable to confirm to us that defendants will produce all responsive electronic materials. See Point 4, infra. Nonetheless, defendants refused to provide a list of their computer systems, or to supplement their response in any way.

Interrogatory No. 3 (Identify defendants' moist snuff sales personnel). We explained that we were unable to see how identifying defendants' sales force personnel would be unduly burdensome, overbroad, or unlikely to lead to discovery of admissible evidence, as defendants' written response claimed. You eventually agreed to answer this interrogatory insofar as it seeks the name, address, title, job description, and dates of service for (a) all persons who have served as sales representatives, division managers, regional managers involved in the marketing and/or sale of defendants' moist snuff products, and (b) all persons who have been involved in training persons identified in (a). We are at a loss to understand why defendants declined to provide this information until now.

Interrogatory No. 4 (Identify distributors and retailers with whom defendants have or had an agreement). We explained that defendants' agreements with retailers and distributors are at the heart of plaintiffs' exclusive dealing claims. Complaint ¶ 28. You eventually agreed to answer this interrogatory insofar as it seeks the identity of all distributors and retailers of moist snuff products with whom any defendant has or had an agreement that concerns moist snuff racks (e.g., which company's racks may be installed, where a company's racks must be placed), slot allotment, or point of sale advertising. This includes, but is not limited to, all retailers or distributors who have participated in the Customer Alliance Program, Wholesaler Alliance Program, Retail Account Data Program, Copenhagen

Incentive Program, Retail Merchandising Placement, or the 2908 Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center program.

We fail to understand why this information was not provided earlier. As you know, even when defendants' requests have been ambiguously drafted in our judgment, we have not declined production but instead attempted to produce immediately to the best of our ability. See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Objections and Responses to Defendants' First Request for Documents, Response to Request No. 1 (noting ambiguity of question, but agreeing to produce immediately).

Interrogatory No. 5 (Identify persons who have spoken to tobacco industry analysts concerning moist snuff issues). Defendants' written response claimed that this interrogatory was burdensome and overbroad. We questioned these claims, explaining that if defendants conform to industry practice, few of their employees have authority to speak with outside industry analysts. You were unable to state whether defendants' practices were different. In an effort to avoid dispute, however, we offered to narrow the scope of our request to identification of the top 25 persons, by name title, job description, and date of service, who have responsibilities which include speaking with tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff. You agreed to respond to this interrogatory.

Interrogatory No. 6 (Identify persons who participated in preparation of interrogatories). After discussion, you agreed to provide the names, addresses, titles, job descriptions, and dates of service for all persons, except counsel, who participated in the preparation of these interrogatories. This includes, without limitation, any third parties (e.g., investigators). Again, we see no reason why this information was not provided earlier.

2. Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents

Request No. 1 (Documents concerning Conwood). In an effort to avoid needless dispute, we offered to narrow this request to encompass the files of a finite list of defendants' executives. We offered to accept a reasonable time restriction. And we agreed to forego any published third party documents (e.g., Nielsen data) mentioning Conwood. Defendants rejected all of these attempts to facilitate production, and refused to provide any documents.

Request No. 2 (Documents concerning Proposed Tobacco Industry Settlement). Seeking to avoid dispute, we offered to narrow this request to encompass documents which concern the potential or actual effects of any settlement on competition in the marketplace. Such documents are relevant to show intent. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 n.3 (1965). Defendants refused this offer and declined to produce any documents.

Request No. 3 (Rule 4(a) and similar document indices). Though defendants claimed ignorance of 4(a) indices in their document response, we reminded you that less than two years ago USTC was subject to a Texas federal district court order expressly discussing 4(a) indices and ordering USTC to produce all similar "computerized or electronic databases relating to documents in its possession or control." Despite our efforts to facilitate some production, defendants refused to modify their document response in any way.

Request No. 4 (Documents concerning communications with tobacco industry analysts). We offered to narrow this request to encompass the files of a limited number of executives (e.g., to the 25 persons defendants now agree to identify as having contacts with tobacco industry analysts in response to Interrogatory No. 5). Inexplicably, defendants still refused to provide any documents.

Request Nos. 5 & 6 (Documents concerning defendants' agreements with retailers and distributors). In an attempt to obtain at least some discovery, we offered to narrow these requests to all agreements with distributors and retailers of moist snuff products that affect moist snuff racks (e.g., which company's racks may be installed, where a company's racks must be placed), slot allotment, or point of sale advertising. This includes, but is not limited to, Customer Alliance Program, Wholesaler Alliance Program, Retail Account Data Program, Copenhagen Incentive Program, Retail Merchandising Placement, or 2908 Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center agreements. Defendants agreed to produce in response to this request.

Request No. 7 (Documents concerning revenues from the sale of moist snuff). We offered to narrow the scope of this request by time. We offered to limit the number of custodians to be searched. Defendants, however, refused all of these efforts and declined any production. We find defendants' refusal troublesome. As we explained, these documents are highly relevant to plaintiffs' claims of monopoly pricing and to the issue of damages; in our experience, these materials are ordinarily produced in antitrust litigation.

Request No. 8 (Documents concerning market share for moist snuff). Again, we sought ways of narrowing this request to facilitate production. We offered to exclude third party publications (e.g., Nielsen data). We offered to limit the number of custodians to be searched. We offered to limit the applicable time period. Again, none of these efforts were successful and defendants continued to refuse production. Here, too, defendants' refusal to produce is untenable given that the issue of market share is at the heart of any Section 2 monopolization claim.

Request No. 9 (Organization charts, employee lists, job descriptions). Despite their initial refusal, in our conversation defendants agreed to produce all organization charts. Defendants also agreed to provide all employee lists and job descriptions, except for materials pertaining to support staff. As with Defendants' First Request for Documents, the period covered by this request is January 1, 1977 to present. We fail to see why such material was withheld until now.

Request Nos. 10 & 11 (Documents concerning defendants' activities in this district and the relationship between defendants). As you know, it is impossible for the Court to grant UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction until discovery is granted concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky. Because we allege that UST Inc. directly controls the activities of the other corporate defendants, the Kentucky contacts of all defendants must be examined, as must document concerning UST Inc.'s relationship of control with the other corporate defendants. When we explained these points in our November 2, 1998 conversation, defendants agreed to amend their answer and provide documents concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky. In our subsequent conversation on November 3, 1998, however, defendants retracted this offer and stood on their refusals to produce.

Request No. 12 (Documents concerning Smokeless Tobacco Council). Though defendants claimed burden, we explained that we have reason to believe that defendants have a reasonably limited set of responsive materials, based upon our own review of Conwood's analogous files. It also became evident from our discussion that counsel did not make even a modest attempt to determine how many responsive documents exist before interposing its boilerplate burden objection. Defendants also claimed that they could not see the relevance of these materials. We explained at length orally, as we have done in writing, the reasons why we believe them to be relevant and likely to lead to discovery of admissible evidence. Cf. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents and Interrogatory Answers, for Sanctions, and for a Pretrial Conference at 9. Nonetheless, defendants still refused to produce any documents.

Request Nos. 12-14 (Documents concerning Swisher, Swedish Match, Philip Morris). Defendants claimed that these requests are overbroad and unduly burdensome. To avoid needless dispute, we offered to narrow them by custodian and time, and to exclude externally generated publications. Given our proposed limitations, we explained that a very limited set of responsive documents should exist based upon our review (and production) of Conwood's analogous materials. Defendants nonetheless refused to produce any documents.

Request No. 15 (Documents concerning policies, procedures, and training for sales representatives). After discussion, defendants agreed to produce all documents concerning policies, procedures, and training for sales representatives, excluding basic human resources materials (e.g., drug testing policies).

Request Nos. 16 & 17 (Documents concerning moist snuff distribution racks and quality). We explained that these requests bear directly on plaintiffs' allegations that defendants impose costs on rivals by changing rack design (Complaint ¶ 27) and that they disparage Conwood's products as inferior in quality (id. ¶ 19). We offered to narrow our requests by date to facilitate production. Despite the obvious relevance of the materials sought, however, defendants refused stood by their decision to refuse production of any documents.

3. Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things

General Objections. You clarified for us that defendants will not withhold any documents as a result of General Objections Nos. 1-3, and that these objections are interposed solely for purposes of preserving defendants' rights. You further explained that any documents withheld as a result of General Objection No. 4 will be identified on a privilege log.

Request Nos. 5-7 (Documents concerning defendants' costs). We explained that these documents are relevant to plaintiffs' claims of price predation, monopoly pricing, and to damages. You agreed to revise your answers and provide full production.

Request No. 34 (Documents concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky). We explained, again, that all of defendants' contacts with Kentucky are relevant and discoverable given our claim that UST Inc. directly controls and manages the affairs of each of the other defendant corporations who do business in Kentucky. You still refused production. See Point 2, Request Nos. 10 & 11, supra.

4. Other Matters

Amended Discovery Responses. In accord with the results of our conferences, we expect defendants to modify their written responses to Interrogatories 3, 4, 5, and 6 of Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories; their written responses to Requests 5, 6, 9, and 15 of Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents; and their written responses to Requests 5-7 of Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things. Plaintiffs are entitled to defendants' revised responses in writing; we believe that they can and should be made promptly to avoid any future dispute. We would appreciate them by Monday, November 9, 1998. We believe that responsive documents should be produced at the same time, and in no event later than Monday November 16, 1998 — two weeks after our conferences, and seven months after our requests were first propounded.

Electronic Documents. As noted above, see Point 1 Interrogatory No. 2, supra, we specifically asked whether defendants plan to make full production of electronically-stored information, including information concerning sales reports. Defendants indicated that they were not sure, but would respond as soon as possible. We ask for a response by Friday, November 6, 1998. If defendants are not planning to make such production, despite (a) Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a), and (b) plaintiffs' document request, which employs a definition of "documents" encompassing all electronically stored media (e.g., computer databases, computer-stored voice mail, e-mail), we need to know immediately in order to seek appropriate relief.

Mode of Production. With the exception of certain voluminous and hard-to-copy materials, to date plaintiffs have delivered to defendants a free electronic copy of their discovery documents. In our conferences, however, defendants indicated that they will not reciprocate by providing electronic copies of their documents. Defendants also stated that in the future they will not even deliver hard copies of their documents to plaintiffs, but merely make materials available for plaintiffs to retrieve and copy at their expense. This represents an abandonment even of the modest courtesy defendants afforded in response to Rule 26(a)(1) by delivering hard copies of certain materials. Accordingly, in the future plaintiffs will likewise simply make their documents available for inspection and copying at defendants' expense.

As we outlined in our conversation, all of plaintiffs' documents are located in a repository in Fort Worth, Texas. Approximately 300 boxes are now ready for your review in electronic or paper form. We expect additional materials to become available for review in the near future. Suitable workstations will be made available for your use free of charge. You may designate for copying and delivery, at your expense, any documents you wish. Chris Athanasia indicated that he would contact us with proposed dates to visit plaintiffs' repository. We will make every reasonable effort to accommodate your schedules.

Plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) Disclosure. Pursuant to the express language in paragraph 15 of the Court's Protective Order, on October 16, 1998 plaintiffs redesignated their Rule 26(a)(1)(A) list as Tier 2 confidential information. Accordingly, access to plaintiffs' disclosure must be restricted to those persons identified in paragraph 7 of the Court's Confidentiality Order.

Chris Athanasia's letter of October 28, 1998 is very troubling. In it he states that, despite plaintiffs' redesignation, "defendants will continue" to meet and interview potential witnesses listed in plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A). Please clarify immediately whether plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) disclosure, or information derived from it, is being used by or distributed to non-qualified paragraph 7 recipients. I hardly need to remind you that, under the Protective Order drafted by defendants and adopted by the Court, if defendants disagree with a confidentiality designation they may not unilaterally disregard that designation but must bring the matter to the Court's attention.

Athanasia Letter of November 2, 1998. I see nothing productive in responding to each of the inaccuracies and epithets in Chris Athanasia's letter of November 2, 1998. Two badly misrecorded points about our October 30, 1998 conversation do, however, warrant correction. Contrary to Chris's representation, I never stated that plaintiffs do "not intend to produce documents to Defendants as part of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 response." Instead, I explained that many documents responsive to defendants Rule 34 requests have already been produced in plaintiffs' voluminous Rule 26(a)(1) production as they have been kept in the ordinary course of business. I also explained that many additional responsive materials are being readied for production. As we discussed on November 2 and 3, nearly 300 such boxes are presently available for your inspection, with more to come. We have not, to put it mildly, experienced a reciprocal level of production from defendants.

Chris Athanasia's letter accuses me of "evad[ing] the question[s]" whether and when certain documents would be made available for production. This, too, is incorrect. In fact, I explained in our October 30 call that certain categories of documents were ready for inspection, that they were voluminous, but that Steven Benz had more detailed information about the content and quantity of these materials. I even volunteered to find out more about these documents and supply it to Chris in our next conversation, which we scheduled for Monday, November 2 — just three days off. And, as promised, when we spoke on November 2, Steven, Bill Conyngham, and I provided Chris with all relevant details concerning the documents that are now available, their volume, and their location. We also expressed our willingness to make every reasonable effort to schedule a mutually convenient time for your review.

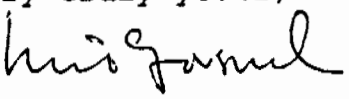
Very truly yours,



Neil M. Gorsuch

Re: Conwood Company, L.P., et al. v. United States Tobacco Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

Gentlemen:

This is to document the results of the telephone conferences Monday evening and Tuesday morning, November 2 and 3, 1998 between Chris Athanasia, John Reed, Steven Benz, Bill Conyngham, and myself. I also address a few additional outstanding discovery-related issues.

1. Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories

Interrogatory No. 1 (Identify persons whose files were searched in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents). We explained that this interrogatory simply seeks to discovery whether defendants examined anyone's files before responding to our first document requests and, if so, whose files were reviewed. You stated that you will attach labels to any boxes produced reflecting the appropriate custodian. But this is no excuse for refusing to answer a simple and straightforward interrogatory. Besides, you may have searched the files of custodians for whom you have produced no documents. After a lengthy discussion, defendants refused to provide a list of persons whose files were searched, or to supplement their response in any way.

Interrogatory No. 2 (Describe generally defendants' computer systems). We explained that we need this information, inter alia, to ensure that all potential sources of information have been searched. We noted that defendants were forced to produce even more specific database information in the recent Texas litigation (also involving antitrust and tort claims); accordingly, there can be little burden associated with our more modest request. We also explained that, in our experience, lists of computer systems and databases are typically provided in antitrust and commercial litigation. This interrogatory appears particularly warranted given that, despite our direct inquiry, you were unable to confirm to us that defendants will produce all responsive electronic materials. See Point 4, infra. Nonetheless, defendants refused to provide a list of their computer systems, or to supplement their response in any way.

Interrogatory No. 3 (Identify defendants' moist snuff sales personnel). We explained that we were unable to see how identifying defendants' sales force personnel would be unduly burdensome, overbroad, or unlikely to lead to discovery of admissible evidence, as defendants' written response claimed. You eventually agreed to answer this interrogatory insofar as it seeks the name, address, title, job description, and dates of service for (a) all persons who have served as sales representatives, division managers, regional managers involved in the marketing and/or sale of defendants' moist snuff products, and (b) all persons who have been involved in training persons identified in (a). We are at a loss to understand why defendants declined to provide this information until now.

Interrogatory No. 4 (Identify distributors and retailers with whom defendants have or had an agreement). We explained that defendants' agreements with retailers and distributors are at the heart of plaintiffs' exclusive dealing claims. Complaint ¶ 28. You eventually agreed to answer this interrogatory insofar as it seeks the identity of all distributors and retailers of moist snuff products with whom any defendant has or had an agreement that concerns moist snuff racks (e.g., which company's racks may be installed, where a company's racks must be placed), slot allotment, or point of sale advertising. This includes, but is not limited to, all retailers or distributors who have participated in the Customer Alliance Program, Wholesaler Alliance Program, Retail Account Data Program, Copenhagen

Incentive Program, Retail Merchandising Placement, or the 2908 Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center program.

We fail to understand why this information was not provided earlier. As you know, even when defendants' requests have been ambiguously drafted in our judgment, we have not declined production but instead attempted to produce immediately to the best of our ability. See, e.g., Plaintiffs' Objections and Responses to Defendants' First Request for Documents, Response to Request No. 1 (noting ambiguity of question, but agreeing to produce immediately).

Interrogatory No. 5 (Identify persons who have spoken to tobacco industry analysts concerning moist snuff issues). Defendants' written response claimed that this interrogatory was burdensome and overbroad. We questioned these claims, explaining that if defendants conform to industry practice, few of their employees have authority to speak with outside industry analysts. You were unable to state whether defendants' practices were different. In an effort to avoid dispute, however, we offered to narrow the scope of our request to identification of the top 25 persons, by name title, job description, and date of service, who have responsibilities which include speaking with tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff. You agreed to respond to this interrogatory.

Interrogatory No. 6 (Identify persons who participated in preparation of interrogatories). After discussion, you agreed to provide the names, addresses, titles, job descriptions, and dates of service for all persons, except counsel, who participated in the preparation of these interrogatories. This includes, without limitation, any third parties (e.g., investigators). Again, we see no reason why this information was not provided earlier.

2. Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents

Request No. 1 (Documents concerning Conwood). In an effort to avoid needless dispute, we offered to narrow this request to encompass the files of a finite list of defendants' executives. We offered to accept a reasonable time restriction. And we agreed to forego any published third party documents (e.g., Nielsen data) mentioning Conwood. Defendants rejected all of these attempts to facilitate production, and refused to provide any documents.

Request No. 2 (Documents concerning Proposed Tobacco Industry Settlement). Seeking to avoid dispute, we offered to narrow this request to encompass documents which concern the potential or actual effects of any settlement on competition in the marketplace. Such documents are relevant to show intent. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670 n.3 (1965). Defendants refused this offer and declined to produce any documents.

Request No. 3 (Rule 4(a) and similar document indices). Though defendants claimed ignorance of 4(a) indices in their document response, we reminded you that less than two years ago USTC was subject to a Texas federal district court order expressly discussing 4(a) indices and ordering USTC to produce all similar "computerized or electronic databases relating to documents in its possession or control." Despite our efforts to facilitate some production, defendants refused to modify their document response in any way.

Request No. 4 (Documents concerning communications with tobacco industry analysts). We offered to narrow this request to encompass the files of a limited number of executives (e.g., to the 25 persons defendants now agree to identify as having contacts with tobacco industry analysts in response to Interrogatory No. 5). Inexplicably, defendants still refused to provide any documents.

Request Nos. 5 & 6 (Documents concerning defendants' agreements with retailers and distributors). In an attempt to obtain at least some discovery, we offered to narrow these requests to all agreements with distributors and retailers of moist snuff products that affect moist snuff racks (e.g., which company's racks may be installed, where a company's racks must be placed), slot allotment, or point of sale advertising. This includes, but is not limited to, Customer Alliance Program, Wholesaler Alliance Program, Retail Account Data Program, Copenhagen Incentive Program, Retail Merchandising Placement, or 2908 Free Standing Expandable Tobacco Center agreements. Defendants agreed to produce in response to this request.

Request No. 7 (Documents concerning revenues from the sale of moist snuff). We offered to narrow the scope of this request by time. We offered to limit the number of custodians to be searched. Defendants, however, refused all of these efforts and declined any production. We find defendants' refusal troublesome. As we explained, these documents are highly relevant to plaintiffs' claims of monopoly pricing and to the issue of damages; in our experience, these materials are ordinarily produced in antitrust litigation.

Request No. 8 (Documents concerning market share for moist snuff). Again, we sought ways of narrowing this request to facilitate production. We offered to exclude third party publications (e.g., Nielsen data). We offered to limit the number of custodians to be searched. We offered to limit the applicable time period. Again, none of these efforts were successful and defendants continued to refuse production. Here, too, defendants' refusal to produce is untenable given that the issue of market share is at the heart of any Section 2 monopolization claim.

Request No. 9 (Organization charts, employee lists, job descriptions). Despite their initial refusal, in our conversation defendants agreed to produce all organization charts. Defendants also agreed to provide all employee lists and job descriptions, except for materials pertaining to support staff. As with Defendants' First Request for Documents, the period covered by this request is January 1, 1977 to present. We fail to see why such material was withheld until now.

Request Nos. 10 & 11 (Documents concerning defendants' activities in this district and the relationship between defendants). As you know, it is impossible for the Court to grant UST Inc.'s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction until discovery is granted concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky. Because we allege that UST Inc. directly controls the activities of the other corporate defendants, the Kentucky contacts of all defendants must be examined, as must document concerning UST Inc.'s relationship of control with the other corporate defendants. When we explained these points in our November 2, 1998 conversation, defendants agreed to amend their answer and provide documents concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky. In our subsequent conversation on November 3, 1998, however, defendants retracted this offer and stood on their refusals to produce.

Request No. 12 (Documents concerning Smokeless Tobacco Council). Though defendants claimed burden, we explained that we have reason to believe that defendants have a reasonably limited set of responsive materials, based upon our own review of Conwood's analogous files. It also became evident from our discussion that counsel did not make even a modest attempt to determine how many responsive documents exist before interposing its boilerplate burden objection. Defendants also claimed that they could not see the relevance of these materials. We explained at length orally, as we have done in writing, the reasons why we believe them to be relevant and likely to lead to discovery of admissible evidence. Cf. Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents and Interrogatory Answers, for Sanctions, and for a Pretrial Conference at 9. Nonetheless, defendants still refused to produce any documents.

Request Nos. 12-14 (Documents concerning Swisher, Swedish Match, Philip Morris). Defendants claimed that these requests are overbroad and unduly burdensome. To avoid needless dispute, we offered to narrow them by custodian and time, and to exclude externally generated publications. Given our proposed limitations, we explained that a very limited set of responsive documents should exist based upon our review (and production) of Conwood's analogous materials. Defendants nonetheless refused to produce any documents.

Request No. 15 (Documents concerning policies, procedures, and training for sales representatives). After discussion, defendants agreed to produce all documents concerning policies, procedures, and training for sales representatives, excluding basic human resources materials (e.g., drug testing policies).

Request Nos. 16 & 17 (Documents concerning moist snuff distribution racks and quality). We explained that these requests bear directly on plaintiffs' allegations that defendants impose costs on rivals by changing rack design (Complaint ¶ 27) and that they disparage Conwood's products as inferior in quality (id. ¶ 19). We offered to narrow our requests by date to facilitate production. Despite the obvious relevance of the materials sought, however, defendants refused stood by their decision to refuse production of any documents.

3. Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things

General Objections. You clarified for us that defendants will not withhold any documents as a result of General Objections Nos. 1-3, and that these objections are interposed solely for purposes of preserving defendants' rights. You further explained that any documents withheld as a result of General Objection No. 4 will be identified on a privilege log.

Request Nos. 5-7 (Documents concerning defendants' costs). We explained that these documents are relevant to plaintiffs' claims of price predation, monopoly pricing, and to damages. You agreed to revise your answers and provide full production.

Request No. 34 (Documents concerning defendants' contacts with Kentucky). We explained, again, that all of defendants' contacts with Kentucky are relevant and discoverable given our claim that UST Inc. directly controls and manages the affairs of each of the other defendant corporations who do business in Kentucky. You still refused production. See Point 2, Request Nos. 10 & 11, supra.

4. Other Matters

Amended Discovery Responses. In accord with the results of our conferences, we expect defendants to modify their written responses to Interrogatories 3, 4, 5, and 6 of Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories; their written responses to Requests 5, 6, 9, and 15 of Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents; and their written responses to Requests 5-7 of Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things. Plaintiffs are entitled to defendants' revised responses in writing; we believe that they can and should be made promptly to avoid any future dispute. We would appreciate them by Monday, November 9, 1998. We believe that responsive documents should be produced at the same time, and in no event later than Monday November 16, 1998 — two weeks after our conferences, and seven months after our requests were first propounded.

Electronic Documents. As noted above, see Point 1 Interrogatory No. 2, supra, we specifically asked whether defendants plan to make full production of electronically-stored information, including information concerning sales reports. Defendants indicated that they were not sure, but would respond as soon as possible. We ask for a response by Friday, November 6, 1998. If defendants are not planning to make such production, despite (a) Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a), and (b) plaintiffs' document request, which employs a definition of "documents" encompassing all electronically stored media (e.g., computer databases, computer-stored voice mail, e-mail), we need to know immediately in order to seek appropriate relief.

Mode of Production. With the exception of certain voluminous and hard-to-copy materials, to date plaintiffs have delivered to defendants a free electronic copy of their discovery documents. In our conferences, however, defendants indicated that they will not reciprocate by providing electronic copies of their documents. Defendants also stated that in the future they will not even deliver hard copies of their documents to plaintiffs, but merely make materials available for plaintiffs to retrieve and copy at their expense. This represents an abandonment even of the modest courtesy defendants afforded in response to Rule 26(a)(1) by delivering hard copies of certain materials. Accordingly, in the future plaintiffs will likewise simply make their documents available for inspection and copying at defendants' expense.

As we outlined in our conversation, all of plaintiffs' documents are located in a repository in Fort Worth, Texas. Approximately 300 boxes are now ready for your review in electronic or paper form. We expect additional materials to become available for review in the near future. Suitable workstations will be made available for your use free of charge. You may designate for copying and delivery, at your expense, any documents you wish. Chris Athanasia indicated that he would contact us with proposed dates to visit plaintiffs' repository. We will make every reasonable effort to accommodate your schedules.

Plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) Disclosure. Pursuant to the express language in paragraph 15 of the Court's Protective Order, on October 16, 1998 plaintiffs redesignated their Rule 26(a)(1)(A) list as Tier 2 confidential information. Accordingly, access to plaintiffs' disclosure must be restricted to those persons identified in paragraph 7 of the Court's Confidentiality Order.

Chris Athanasia's letter of October 28, 1998 is very troubling. In it he states that, despite plaintiffs' redesignation, "defendants will continue" to meet and interview potential witnesses listed in plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A). Please clarify immediately whether plaintiffs' Rule 26(a)(1)(A) disclosure, or information derived from it, is being used by or distributed to non-qualified paragraph 7 recipients. I hardly need to remind you that, under the Protective Order drafted by defendants and adopted by the Court, if defendants disagree with a confidentiality designation they may not unilaterally disregard that designation but must bring the matter to the Court's attention.

Athanasia Letter of November 2, 1998. I see nothing productive in responding to each of the inaccuracies and epithets in Chris Athanasia's letter of November 2, 1998. Two badly misrecorded points about our October 30, 1998 conversation do, however, warrant correction. Contrary to Chris's representation, I never stated that plaintiffs do "not intend to produce documents to Defendants as part of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 34 response." Instead, I explained that many documents responsive to defendants Rule 34 requests have already been produced in plaintiffs' voluminous Rule 26(a)(1) production as they have been kept in the ordinary course of business. I also explained that many additional responsive materials are being readied for production. As we discussed on November 2 and 3, nearly 300 such boxes are presently available for your inspection, with more to come. We have not, to put it mildly, experienced a reciprocal level of production from defendants.

Chris Athanasia's letter accuses me of "evad[ing] the question[s]" whether and when certain documents would be made available for production. This, too, is incorrect. In fact, I explained in our October 30 call that certain categories of documents were ready for inspection, that they were voluminous, but that Steven Benz had more detailed information about the content and quantity of these materials. I even volunteered to find out more about these documents and supply it to Chris in our next conversation, which we scheduled for Monday, November 2 — just three days off. And, as promised, when we spoke on November 2, Steven, Bill Conyngham, and I provided Chris with all relevant details concerning the documents that are now available, their volume, and their location. We also expressed our willingness to make every reasonable effort to schedule a mutually convenient time for your review.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY
PADUCAH DIVISION
CIVIL ACTION NO. 5:98CV-108(R)

vs.

UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, ET AL DEFENDANTS

MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

Currently before the Court are three motions to dismiss filed by the defendant and several procedural motions filed by both parties. For the reasons that follow, Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction (dkt. # 14) and motion to dismiss on the substance of the Complaint (dkt. # 30) are DENIED. Defendants' motion to dismiss claims barred under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is MOOT based on the parties agreement that no claim can be based substantively on Defendants' participation in the "Global Tobacco Settlement."

This suit is filed under § § 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § § 15, 26, which provide a private cause of action for violations of Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et.seq., and the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125. The Complaint also asserts various state tort claims.

I. MOTION TO DISMISS PARENT CORP. FOR LACK OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION

There are four defendants named in the Complaint, (1) United States Tobacco Company, (2) United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company., (3) United States Tobacco Manufacturing Company Inc., and (4) UST Inc. It is the fourth named defendant, UST Inc., that is the subject of this motion to dismiss.

Defendant asserts that Defendant UST Inc. is "simply a holding company that has never manufactured, sold or distributed moist snuff (or any other type of product) anywhere, including the Commonwealth of Kentucky." (Motion to Dismiss, dkt. # 14 at 1-2).

Plaintiff takes two approaches to personal jurisdiction in this case. First, Plaintiff argues that Clayton Act § 22 gives this Court personal jurisdiction with any party having minimum contacts anywhere in the United States. Second, Plaintiff argues that Defendant UST Inc. has sufficient minimum contacts with Kentucky to invoke Kentucky's long-arm statute, or at least to support an evidentiary hearing on the issue.

A. Jurisdiction under Clayton Act § 22

The Sixth Circuit has held that "In an action where service of process is effected pursuant to a federal statute which provides for nationwide service of process, the strictures of International Shoe do not apply." United Liberty Life Insurance Co. v. Ryan, 985 F.2d 1320, 1330 (6th Cir. 1993) (quoting Haile v. Henderson Nat'l Bank, 657 F.2d 816, 825 (6th Cir. 1981).

Clayton Act § 22, 15 U.S.C. § 22, provides for nationwide service of process,

> Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant.

This language is nearly identical to the language of the statute in question in Ryan, § 27 of the Exchange Act (15 U.S.C. § 78aa). The Ryan Court concluded that "section 27 [of the Exchange Act] confers personal jurisdiction in any federal district court over any defendant with minimum contacts to the United States." The Ryan Court remanded the case for a determination as to whether the plaintiff had adequately stated a claim under § 27 so that the personal jurisdiction could be based upon that statute.

Defendants reply that the requirements of the Clayton Act have not been met in this case because UST Inc. does not "transact business" in Kentucky, as required by § 22. However, under Ryan, the factual question in issue is whether the plaintiff has stated a substantive claim under the Clayton Act, not whether UST Inc. transacted business in Kentucky. The Complaint asserts that UST Inc. played an adequate role in the alleged antitrust violations. Therefore, dismissal of UST Inc. would be premature at this time.

B. Kentucky Long-Arm Statute

If jurisdiction cannot be based on Clayton Act § 22, Defendant UST Inc. correctly asserts that this Court's assertion of personal jurisdiction must be based on the Kentucky long arm statute, K.R.S. 454.210. Defendants assert that "even if Constitutional minimum contacts otherwise exist . . . personal jurisdiction is not proper unless the defendant committed some act sufficient to satisfy a relevant provision of the long-arm statute." (Motion to dismiss, dkt. # 14 at 3). However, both federal and Kentucky courts have rejected this analysis.

In In re Air Crash Disaster at Gander, Newfoundland, 660 F.Supp. 1202, 1206 (W.D. Ky. 1987), Judge Johnstone held that "The determination and reach of the Kentucky long arm statute and the reach of due process are one in the same." Id. (citing Handley v. Indiana & Michigan Elec., Co., 732 F.2d 1265, 1268-1270 (6th Cir. 1980) additional citations omitted) See also, Wright v. Sullivan Payne Co., 839 S.W.2d 250, 253 (Ky. 1992).

Therefore, the only relevant question regarding personal jurisdiction under the Kentucky long arm statute is whether Defendant UST Inc. had constitutionally sufficient minimum contacts with Kentucky for this Court to assert personal jurisdiction over it.

Defendants attached an affidavit by a UST Inc. vice president stating that UST Inc. is and always has been a holding company, and has never transacted business in Kentucky. Defendants assert that Plaintiff cannot "rest on their bare allegations" that Defendant UST Inc. has sufficient minimum contacts with Kentucky. Defendant relies on Kerry Steel, Inc. v. Paragon Indus., Inc., 106 F.3d 147, 153 (6th Cir. 1997) in which the Sixth Circuit upheld a 12(b)(2) dismissal for lack of jurisdiction where the Defendant's sworn statements about its principal place of business, state of incorporation, and ownership of property could have been "easily refuted" by the plaintiff because it was a matter of public record.

In this case, Plaintiff's assertions about Defendants contacts with Kentucky are not matters of public record or "easily refuted." Therefore, dismissal of Defendant UST Inc. based on the Kentucky long-arm statute is premature.

II. MOTION TO DISMISS CLAIMS BARRED BY NOERR-PENNINGTON DOCTRINE

Defendants move to dismiss any claims to the extent that they are barred by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, under which "genuine attempts to influence passage or enforcement of laws are immune from antitrust scrutiny, regardless of the anticompetitive purpose behind such attempts." Westmac, Inc. v. Smith, 797 F.2d 313, 315 (6th Cir. 1986) (citing United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-71, (1965), Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 137-39 (1961). "The right to petition, upon which the doctrine is based . . . extends to all departments of government, and therefore governs the access of citizens to courts and administrative agencies." Id. (citing California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510 (1972)).

The Complaint asserts in its general background section that Defendant "sought to involve itself in the 'Global Settlement' of litigation between cigarette companies and various state attorneys general and private plaintiffs' lawyers . . . UST, was the sole smokeless tobacco company permitted to participate in this initiative . . . UST sought to embed the Global Settlement with provisions that would cause disproportionate harm to its moist snuff rivals and, ultimately, drive them from the market." (Complaint, Dkt. #1 at 21-24). The specific Counts of the Complaint then incorporate the general background section by reference.

Plaintiff agrees that these allegations cannot form the basis of an antitrust claim under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine. Since these allegations are not the sole basis for any single count of the complaint, this motion is MOOT. The Court reserves ruling on the admissibility of evidence of this nature.

III. MOTION TO DISMISS ON SUBSTANCE OF CLAIMS

The Sixth Circuit maintains a somewhat more liberal standard for 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss in antitrust cases than in other types of suits. A panel of the Sixth Circuit held in a § 1 Sherman Act case that "[i]n an antitrust case, 'where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Michaels Building Co. v. Ameritrust Co., 848 F.2d 674, 681 (6th Cir. 1988) (internal citations omitted). While this is a § 2 case, the reasoning would be the same in that the proof would be largely in the hands of the alleged monopolist.

However, in an unpublished opinion the Sixth Circuit has affirmed a district court's granting of a 12(b)(6) motion in a Sherman Act case. In Cleveland, Inc. v. Bluestone, 820 F.2d 1225 (6th Cir. 1987) (table), 1987 WL 37754, the Court affirmed the district court's holding that the complaint was insufficient to allege a cause of action under § § 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act because "plaintiffs have not convinced this Court that the challenged conduct threatens 'competition' in the market place as opposed to one competitor . . . . Plaintiffs' complaint, at best, raises causes of action under state law." Id.

In Bluestone, the Plaintiff was a manufacturing company that filed an antitrust action against some of its former managers and two corporations formed by the former managers to compete against the plaintiff. The plaintiffs also sued a third corporation which owned the land on which the plaintiff's plant had been located. The Plaintiffs alleged that the defendants conspired to charge plaintiff an exorbitant rent, and wrongfully used confidential and trade secret information of plaintiff "enabling defendants to start a competing business without suffering the enormous development costs incurred [by plaintiff] in developing its business." Id. at *1.

Therefore, while the burden on defendants for 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss is greater in antitrust cases than some other causes of action, a Plaintiff must still allege conduct in the complaint that would constitute a violation.

As discussed below, the allegations in the Complaint in this case are distinguishable from Bluestone because the broad language of the Complaint alleges more than mere state torts but the exercise of monopoly power to unlawfully exclude competition. Therefore, a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss is not appropriate in this case.

A. Sherman Act Claim

1. Overview

The complaint asserts a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, which states

> Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . .

A private cause of action is authorized for violations of the Sherman Act by the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (trebled damages and attorneys fees) and § 26 (injunctive relief).

To assert a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must assert the defendant's "(1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) its willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Rogers Associates, Inc., v. Gardner-Denver Co., 718 F.2d 1431, 1438 (6th Cir. 1983) (quoting United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1703-04 (1966). Therefore, the two elements of a Sherman Act § 2 claim can be summarized as (1) monopoly power, and (2) unlawful conduct.

For purposes of this motion only, Defendants have conceded that they have monopoly power in the relevant market. Therefore, for this motion to dismiss, the only issue is whether the conduct alleged by the Complaint constitutes a violation of § 2.

2. Exclusive Dealing

The Complaint alleges that Defendants "used its power as a monopolist to induce retail chains and stores across the United States to enter into written and oral agreements barring or restricting Conwood's products, racks, and point of sale advertising." (Complaint, Dkt. # 1 at 17). The Complaint then lists several examples of what it considers to be exclusive dealing contracts. (Complaint, Dkt. # 1 at 17–19).

The majority of exclusive dealing cases involve § 1, in which the "unreasonableness" of an agreement requires an analysis of the percentage of commerce foreclosed within a properly defined relevant market.

Federal Courts have found that exclusive dealing contracts can form the basis of the unlawful conduct element of § 2 claims. In Hartz Mountain Corp. v. General Indus. Corp., 810 F.2d 795 (8th 1987), the Eighth Circuit upheld a jury verdict for the plaintiff in a § 2 exclusive dealing case. In Hartz, the defendant, a leading manufacturer of pet products, was found to have used its monopoly power to force its distributor to stop carrying a rival's products. The Court held that "the jury could reasonably have concluded that Hartz exhibited anticompetitive conduct not motivated by legitimate business concerns about [the distributor's] financial soundness but designed primarily to restrict the consumer's access to competing products." Id at 802.

The Hartz Court reasoned that "a business, especially one with a large degree of market power, may violate § 2 of the Sherman Act if it exercises its power to deal with others, including its own distributor, in a manner which is designed to unreasonably restrain trade." Id. at 803.

Defendant relies on Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 304 (5th Cir. 1984) in which the Fifth Circuit granted summary judgment for the defendant where the plaintiff had complained that the defendant "does not permit retail outlets to place [plaintiff's] products in vending machines and coolers owned by [defendant] and that [defendant] provides free maintenance service on machines and coolers owned by businesses if the machines and coolers are stocked only with [defendant's] products." This fact pattern can be distinguished from the current case where the allegation is that Defendants used their monopoly power to completely exclude Plaintiff's products from retail stores.

Defendant also relies on PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 1998 WL 547088 (S.D. N.Y. 1998) for the proposition that exclusive dealing agreements cannot be unlawful unless it involves a threatened refusal to deal and is not terminable at will by the customer, "exclusive dealing arrangements that were terminable at will or of short duration [are] not barred by the antitrust laws because they left the relevant market up for grabs and because competitors were not foreclosed from the market but rather were encouraged to 'compete for the contract.'" Id. at *17 (citing Paddock Publications, Inc., v. Chicago Tribune Co., 103 F.3d 42 (7th Cir. 1997) (dismissing exclusive dealing claim brought under § 1 of the Sherman Act because, inter alia, "other firms that want to enter the market can do so by competing at intervals for these contracts.") (additional citations omitted)).

Again, the Complaint in the current case alleges that the Defendants used their monopoly power to completely exclude Plaintiff's products from retail stores. Under these allegations, Plaintiff cannot compete at intervals for these contracts.

The Court need not decide at this time whether the specific examples listed in the complaint would be sufficient to support an exclusive dealing claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act. The Complaint alleges that the Defendants used their monopoly power to completely exclude Plaintiff's products from retail stores. These allegations are sufficient to overcome a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

3. Predatory Pricing

The Complaint alleges that "UST has offered its own products below cost for no economic purpose other than to drive Conwood from those distribution outlets." (Complaint, Dkt. # 1 at 20). The Complaint further alleges that UST introduced its own discount product and marketed it below cost. The initial allegation of predatory pricing did not restrict the allegation to the discount brand.

"Predatory pricing differs from healthy competitive pricing in its motive a predator by his pricing practices seeks to impose losses on other firms, not garner gains for itself." D.E. Rogers Associates, Inc., v. Gardner-Denver Co., 718 F.2d 1431, 1436 (6th Cir 1983) (quoting Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp., 691 F.2d 818, 823 (6th Cir. 1982)(internal citations omitted).

In order to establish a claim under the theory of predatory pricing, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant "at least sacrificed present revenues for the purpose of driving [the plaintiff] out of the market with the hope of recouping the losses through subsequent higher prices." Bayou Bottling, Inc., v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 305 (5th Cir. 1984) (quoting International Air Indus. v. American Excelsior Co., 517 F.2d 714, 723 (5th Cir. 1975)).

In order to demonstrate that the defendant has sacrificed present revenues, it is necessary to establish that the defendant's prices were below marginal or average variable cost. Bayou Bottling, 725 F.2d at 305. The marginal or average cost in question must pertain to a single relevant market. Directory Sales Management Corp. v. Ohio Bell Telephone Co., 833 F.2d 606, 613-14 (6th Cir. 1987).

Defendant also argues that the complaint only asserts a claim for predatory pricing of Defendants' discount brand. While the only specific example of predatory pricing in the Complaint involves Defendants' discount brand, a fair reading of the complaint alleges predatory pricing for all brands. "When retailers and distributors have persisted in carrying Conwood products, UST has offered its own products below cost for no economic purpose other than to drive Conwood from those distribution outlets." (Complaint, Dkt # 1 at 20).

Therefore, as discussed above regarding the exclusive dealing claim, the Court need not rule on whether evidence of the specific examples in the Complaint would be sufficient to support the predatory pricing claim. A fair reading of the Complaint makes dismissal on a 12(b)(6) motion premature.

4. State Torts/"Dirty Tricks"

The Complaint alleges that Defendants suppressed competition through the theft or destruction of Plaintiff's product, distribution racks, and point of sale advertising. The Complaint further alleges false representations by Defendants' representatives to "low-level store management" regarding the allocation of space for Plaintiff's products and displays.

The Complaint also alleges that Defendants have "regularly and systematically spread disparaging falsehoods about Conwood's products." (Complaint, Dkt. # 1 at 20). Plaintiff asserts that this is relevant to their Sherman Act claim as well as the basis of their Lanham Act claim.

Defendants rely on Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 509 U.S. 209, 225, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 2589 (1993), for the proposition that a federal antitrust claim cannot be based on mere state law violations absent a "core" antitrust claim, such as exclusive dealing or predatory pricing. This is too narrow a reading of Brown & Williamson Tobacco.

> [W]e held in the Sherman Act § 2 context that it was not enough to inquire "whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics"; rather, we insisted that the plaintiff prove "a dangerous probability that [the defendant] would monopolize a particular market." Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459, 113 S.Ct. at 892. Even an act of pure malice against by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws; those laws do not create a federal law of unfair competition or "purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce." Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826, 65 S.Ct. 1545, 1548 (1945).

Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 509 U.S. at 225.

In this case, Defendant allegedly has 83% market share, as opposed to the 30% held by the defendant in Brown & Williamson Tobacco. The Complaint in this case alleges "acts of pure malice" by a firm using its significant market power to conduct a regular and systematic campaign to exclude Plaintiff from the relevant market.

Defendants also rely on a Fourth Circuit opinion which held that "courts should be circumspect in converting ordinary business torts into violations of antitrust laws. To do so would be to create a federal common law of unfair competition which was not the intent of the antitrust laws." ABCOR Corp. v. AM International, Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 931 (4th Cir. 1990) (quoting Military Services Realty, Inc., v. Realty Consultants of Virginia, Ltd., 823 F.2d 829, 832 (4th Cir. 1987) (internal citations omitted). The ABCOR Court determined that the "sporadic activity" identified by the Plaintiffs did not amount to an antitrust violation and granted the Defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Again, Plaintiff in this case has argued that the anticompetitive conduct was "routine and systematic." Defendants argue that merely pleading that the alleged conduct was "routine and systematic" and "either directed or tacitly approved at the corporate level" cannot be sufficient to "federalize" state torts.

Neither party cites to a case that addressed the issue as to whether "routine and systematic" tortious conduct could be the sole basis of a Sherman Act claim absent a more traditional form of anticompetitive conduct such as predatory pricing or exclusive dealing. However, since the motion to dismiss the claims based on alleged exclusive dealing and predatory pricing is denied, the Court need not address this issue at this time.

B. Lanham Act Claim

Count II of the Complaint asserts a claim under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), which states, inter alia,

> Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term name, symbol or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, which . . . . (B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act.

To state a claim for false advertising under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125, a plaintiff must show

> (1) a false statement of fact by the defendant in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product; (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (3) the deception is material, in that is likely to influence the purchasing decision; (4) the defendant > caused its false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured in as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to defendant or by a lessening of the goodwill associated with its products.

Sothaland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d1134, 1139 (9th Cir. 1997) (citations and footnotes omitted).

Defendants assert that the Lanham Act claim must be dismissed because the Complaint does not allege that any false claims were made in "commercial advertising" which is necessary to state a claim under the Lanham Act. However, federal courts have recognized that "commercial advertising or promotion" under the Lanham Act is "broader than merely the 'classic advertising campaign.'" Seven-Up Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 86 F.3d 1379, 1384 (5th Cir. 1996) (citations omitted). In Seven-Up, the Fifth Circuit adopted the following requirements for establishing "commercial advertising or promotion" under the Lanham Act:

> (1) commercial speech; (2) By a defendant who is in commercial competition with plaintiff; (3) for the purpose of influencing consumers to buy defendant's goods or services. . . . (4) [the representations] must be disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute "advertising" or "promotion" within that industry.

Id. (citations omitted).

In Seven-Up Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 86 F.3d 1379 (5th Cir. 1996), the Fifth Circuit held that sales presentations to bottlers that distributed both parties products that sought to convince the bottlers to switch brands of a particular flavor constituted "commercial advertising or promotion" under the Lanham Act. The Court held that since the presentation was made to every bottler that distributed the products of both parties, the presentation "was a far cry from the individualized comments held by some courts to fall outside the meaning of commercial advertising. . . ." Id. at 1386. Defendant distinguishes Seven-up, arguing that this Complaint does not assert that sales presentations consisting of "charts, graphs, and overhead projection displays" were made to "each and every one" of the relevant purchasing public in the relevant market. (Response, dkt. # 34 at 22).

Count II of the Complaint states: "UST has made false and misleading representations of fact in interstate commerce and in connection with goods or services in commercial advertising or promotion." (Complaint, dkt. # 1 at 26). The Complaint also directly asserts that "UST has regularly and systematically spread disparaging falsehoods about Conwood's products." (Complaint, dkt. # 1 at 19). As discussed above, these allegations support not only a claim under the Lanham Act, but also could support Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims.

Defendants argue that "Plaintiffs' conclusory allegation that isolated instances of product defamation are 'routine and systematic' does nothing to cure the deficiency of the Complaint." (Defendants' Response, dkt. # 34 at 21), and cite several federal cases that held that individualized comments cannot constitute a Lanham Act violation.

At this stage of the proceedings, it is Defendants' classification of the allegations as "isolated instances" that is itself conclusory. While the examples listed in the complaint, standing alone, would not be sufficient to state a claim under the Lanham Act, the allegations that the conduct was "routine and systematic" is sufficient to overcome a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

16diii000963

THEREFORE, IT IS ORDERED:

(1) Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction (dkt. # 14) is DENIED.

(2) Defendants' motion to dismiss claims barred under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine (dkt. # 15) is MOOT; Plaintiff's motion to file a sur response (dkt. # 24) is MOOT.

(3) Defendants' motion to dismiss and/or judgment on the pleadings (dkt. # 30) is DENIED; Defendants' motion to file reply memorandum in excess of 15 pages (dkt. # 34) is GRANTED.

CONWOOD COMPANY, L.P. and CONWOOD SALES COMPANY, L.P. Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY, UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC., and UST INC., Defendants.	)	Civil Action No. 5:98-CV-108-R

MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT OR FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Defendants, United States Tobacco Co., et al. ("USTC"), respectfully request that this Court dismiss plaintiffs' entire complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) or, in the alternative, enter judgment on the pleadings for Defendants under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c).

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This lawsuit is an ill-conceived attempt by Conwood Company, L.P., et al. ("Conwood") to make a federal case out of alleged conduct that is either procompetitive and encouraged by the antitrust laws or, at most, constitutes the type of business tort that is, and should remain, the province of state court actions.[1]

---

[1] On June 12, 1998, USTC filed a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss that part of the Complaint alleging anticompetitive conduct based on USTC's involvement in the so-called "Global Settlement." This motion is directed against the remainder of the Plaintiffs' Complaint.

Taking Plaintiffs' factual allegations as true, established law under Section 2 of the Sherman Act compels the following conclusions:

- USTC has not engaged in predatory pricing in the alleged "moist snuff market" with the promotion of its Red Seal brand because the alleged promotion involved one of many USTC brands, priced above USTC's cost, for a limited promotional period of time;[2]

- USTC may, as a matter of law, enter into "exclusive dealing agreements" with retailers who wish to do so and may offer various incentive programs to encourage retailers to carry and promote USTC products;[3]

- Run-of-the-mill alleged business torts — conversion, theft, disparagement — cannot violate the antitrust laws even if they may, theoretically, violate state law; and

- USTC cannot violate Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act where the alleged false representations were not made in the context of commercial advertising.

Stripped to its essence, Conwood's Complaint is that USTC had a promotion for one of its new smokeless tobacco brands and aggressively competes for retail shelf space, and that, from time to time, some USTC sales personnel — like Conwood's — allegedly crossed the line of rough-and-tumble competition. This, however, is precisely what a highly competitive marketplace looks like, even where one of the participants is an alleged monopolist. Indeed, the law has long been established that every company in the marketplace, regardless of its size and

[2] For purposes of this motion only, USTC will assume, arguendo, that the relevant antitrust market is the national market for the sale of moist snuff, and USTC will assume, arguendo, that USTC has monopoly power in that market. Compl. ¶ 1. A more appropriately defined relevant market, however, would include — at a minimum — other smokeless tobacco products (such as loose leaf tobacco products) of which Conwood is the largest seller.

[3] As a factual matter, USTC has no exclusive dealing agreements with retailers, but will assume that it does for purposes of this motion.

past success, is entitled to compete vigorously and creatively against all its rivals, even its smaller ones.

In sum, even if this Court accepts the dubious proposition that the stagnation or decline of Conwood's sales is somehow attributable to USTC, the antitrust laws — which are for the protection of consumers, not Conwood — both condone and encourage USTC's competitiveness and the resulting effect on Conwood's sales share. The Court should also dismiss Conwood's purely state law claims based on theft, conversion and disparagement. And before Conwood pursues those non-antitrust claims, it may wish to consider the glass house in which it lives and then, if it is still willing to throw the first stone, it should do so in state court.

RELEVANT ALLEGATIONS IN THE COMPLAINT

As noted above, for purposes of this motion only, USTC does not dispute the relevant market for "moist snuff" or USTC's alleged share of that market. Accordingly, the only alleged facts relevant to this motion are those that purport to describe USTC conduct that violates Section 2 of the Sherman Act. That alleged conduct is as follows:

Predatory Pricing Allegations. In Paragraphs 30 and 31 of the Complaint, Conwood alleges that Defendants began "introducing its own discount product, Red Seal." Conwood also alleges that Defendants introduced their products through promotional offers, including a product "give away," Compl. ¶ 31, where consumers received "4 rolls (40 cans) of Red Seal for approximately $14, or roughly 35 cents a can...." Id. Conwood makes no allegation concerning the duration of any promotional offer, and Conwood's predatory pricing allegations are limited to Defendants' price-value brand, Red Seal.

Exclusive Dealing Agreements. In Paragraph 28 of the Complaint, Conwood alleges that Defendants enter into "exclusive dealing agreements" with retailers whereby the retailers "give[] UST control over the entire moist snuff section of the store"; "permit[] [Defendants] to install [USTC] distribution racks; remove Conwood's distribution racks; force Conwood's products into UST racks; and restrict the space and placement of Conwood products in its racks." Id. Conwood also alleges that the retail stores "prohibit[] Conwood in-store promotions and point of sale advertisements." Id.

Conversion, Theft, and Disparagement. In Paragraphs 24, 25, and 26 of the Complaint, Conwood alleges that Defendants' engage in several types of business torts. Specifically, Conwood alleges that Defendants have taken Conwood products from display racks, discarded or defaced Conwood display racks, and discarded and defaced Conwood point of sale advertising. Compl. ¶ 24. Conwood also alleges that Defendants have made misrepresentations to retail store employees in order to remove or exclude Conwood products from those stores. Compl. ¶¶ 25, 26.

Product Defamation. In Paragraph 29 of the Complaint, Conwood alleges that Defendants disparage Conwood products by stating, inter alia, that they are "stale," or "out of date," or that they have been "discontinued." Conwood also alleges that Defendants have "perpetuated a myth that Conwood products contain fiberglass and are full of tobacco stems." Id. Conwood does not allege that Defendants made any misleading statements in any commercial advertising that was sufficiently disseminated to the public.

ARGUMENT

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c), a district court must grant a motion for a judgment on the pleadings if "no material issue of fact exists and the party making the motion is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Paksvan v. City of Cleveland Service, 946 F.2d 1233, 1235 (6th Cir. 1991). Although a court, for purposes of this motion, must construe the complaint "in the light most favorable to plaintiff, and its well-pleaded facts must be accepted as true," Garcia v. City of Oakwood, 99 F.3d 1138, 1996 WL 593602, 2 (6th Cir. Oct. 15, 1996), the Court does not have to accept as true "legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences." Id.; see also Blackburn v. Fisk University, 443 F.2d 121 (6th Cir. 1971) ("we are required to accept only the well pleaded facts as true, not the legal conclusions that may be alleged or that may be drawn from the well pleaded facts").

Under these standards and based on the pleadings, Conwood's claims must fail as a matter of law. Accordingly, Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law under Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

I. DEFENDANTS ARE ENTITLED TO JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW ON PLAINTIFF'S SHERMAN ACT SECTION 2 CLAIMS

Conwood's Section 2 monopolization claim reflects the desperate strategy of a competitor that would rather sue its larger rival than have to compete against it. Specifically, every alleged act of monopolization in the Complaint is either perfectly lawful under the antitrust laws or, as a basis of a potential state court squabble, does not implicate the antitrust laws at all.

16diii000970

A. Plaintiffs' Section 2 Claim Based On Allegations Of Predatory Pricing Must Fail As A Matter Of Law

Conwood alleges that Defendants sold Red Seal, a generic or "price value" moist snuff brand, at a price "less than UST[C]'s costs." Compl. ¶ 31. Based on this conclusory allegation, Plaintiffs apparently believe that they have adequately pled that USTC has monopolized the "market" for moist snuff through predatory pricing. Id.

Judgment as a matter of law as to this claim is warranted for three reasons. First, even if the evidence were to support the factual allegations asserted "on information and belief," Conwood's predatory pricing claims are based on an improper measure of below-cost pricing. Second, because Conwood's claim describes, at most, an introductory promotional "give away" of the Red Seal brand (Compl. ¶ 31) the alleged conduct cannot, as a matter of law, constitute predatory pricing. Third, even assuming arguendo that the Red Seal promotion pricing could be labeled "predatory," such temporary promotional pricing of a generic product in discrete geographic areas (see Compl. ¶ 31) could not have had a significant anticompetitive effect on the alleged national market for all moist snuff products. Each of these reasons independently requires dismissal of Conwood's Section 2 claim to the extent it is based on allegations of predatory pricing.

1. Plaintiffs' Claim Is Based On An Improper Measure Of "Below Cost"

In order to establish a predatory pricing claim, Conwood must be able to prove that the alleged predatory prices were below a proper measure of actual production cost. D.E. Rogers Assoc., Inc. v. Gardner-Denver Co., 718 F.2d 1431, 1435 (6th Cir. 1983); see also III Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 738a ("a predatory price requires objective evidence of prices that are below 'some measure of incremental cost'") (quoting Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown &

Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209 (1993)). Critically, however, the relevant measure for pleading predatory pricing is not a comparison of the price and cost of a single product such as Red Seal, but rather the price and cost of the entire line of products sold by defendant in the relevant market — here, the alleged national market for all moist snuff products. Compl. ¶ 1.

Indeed, where, as here, a plaintiff does not even allege that the product in question is sold in a separate relevant market, a predatory pricing claim as to that product must fail as a matter of law, and summary disposition is required. The Sixth Circuit's decision in Directory Sales Management Corp. v. Ohio Bell Telephone, 833 F.2d 606 (6th Cir. 1987) is on point. There, the plaintiff alleged that defendant violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act because it sold "first listing" advertising below cost. The Sixth Circuit specifically pointed out that the plaintiff alleged that the relevant product market was the entire "yellow pages" market, not the "first listings" market. The court then affirmed summary judgment for the defendant because plaintiff could not show that defendant's overall charges for all yellow pages advertising space, rather than its charges for first line advertising, were priced below cost. Id. at 614. Thus, as the court stated, "the relevant inquiry should be [the defendants'] operations taken as a whole." Id.

Similarly, in a case with allegations substantially the same as those made by Conwood here, Liggett Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 748 F. Supp. 344 (M.D.N.C. 1990), aff'd, 964 F.2d 335 (4th Cir. 1992), aff'd, 509 U.S. 209 (1993), the court awarded the defendant judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the plaintiff's predatory pricing claim. In that case, the parties stipulated to a relevant market defined as the market for all cigarettes in the United States. Id. at 362. The plaintiff, however, alleged that the defendant engaged in predatory pricing of its generic brand cigarette only. The court analyzed the plaintiff's predatory pricing claim in the context of the stipulated market for all cigarettes and held that, where plaintiff and defendant "were both profitable, full product line competitors with access to the same customers and markets,... applying the average variable cost test solely to [defendant's] generic cigarettes would be inappropriate." Id. at 363. As the court explained,

> If the average variable cost test is applied solely to generic cigarettes and antitrust injury is inferred from this below-cost pricing, then [plaintiff] is unjustly rewarded for failing to compete on price with its branded cigarettes. Under this scenario, [plaintiff's] antitrust injury would come from its unwillingness to charge a competitive price for its branded cigarettes and not from [defendant's conduct].

See also id. at 363 n.44 (collecting "numerous" cases "refus[ing] to apply the average variable cost test to a single product line because there could be no competitive injury in the relevant market even if that product line was priced below cost"); Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300, 305 (5th Cir. 1984) (where plaintiff and defendant were full-line soft drink dealers in the soft drink market, predatory pricing claim must include the full product line, not just 32-ounce returnable bottles, and thus judgment as a matter of law was appropriate); Janich Bros., Inc. v. American Distilling Co., 570 F.2d 848, 856 (9th Cir. 1977) (same); see also III Areeda & Hovenkamp, ¶ 742d (when a defendant produces multiple products in the same plant, and significant variable as well as fixed costs are common to both the allegedly predated and non-predated products, predation requires a showing that the defendant is pricing below average cost across its entire product line).

Here, the alleged market is the national market for moist snuff. Compl.¶ 1. Plaintiffs' predatory pricing allegations, however, include only USTC's Red Seal price-value brand. Compl. ¶ 31. Plaintiffs do not and cannot allege any below-cost pricing of any kind with respect to any other USTC moist snuff product or products, including over a dozen different premium brands. More significantly, Plaintiffs do not and cannot allege that USTC engaged in any predatory pricing with respect to USTC's entire line of products taken as a whole. Thus, even assuming Plaintiffs' allegations with respect to the pricing of Red Seal to be true, which they are not, allegations of below-cost pricing of USTC's price-value product only — which is merely one of many products sold by USTC in the alleged national moist snuff market (see Compl. ¶¶ 12-19) — cannot violate Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, Plaintiffs predatory pricing claim must fail as a matter of law.

2. The Alleged Promotional Conduct Cannot, As A Matter Of Law, Constitute Predatory Pricing

It also is clear that Plaintiffs' allegations, at most, describe a promotional offering of the Red Seal brand.[4] Promotional prices, however, are lawful - no matter what the price-cost relationship - when they only last long enough for consumers to judge and accept or reject the promoted product. See, e.g., Airweld v. Airco, 742 F.2d 1184, 1194 (9th Cir. 1984) (even if prices were below cost, promotional below-cost pricing is not a Section 2 violation); Buffalo Courier-Express v. Buffalo Evening News, 601 F.2d 48, 55 (2d Cir. 1979) (free introductory offerings for two or even five weeks could not constitute predatory pricing); Lormar, Inc. v. Kroger Co., 1979-1 Trade Cas. ¶ 62,498, 1979 WL 1593, *6 (S.D. Ohio) (promotional items offered below cost are quite common and do not constitute a violation of Section 2). Indeed, [4] Areeda and Hovenkamp define promotional pricing as "a temporary low price designed to induce patronage with the expectation that the customer will continue purchasing the product in the future at a higher price." III Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 746.

sales at prices below average cost cannot be predatory unless they cover a "significant" enough time period to imply that they were not merely promotional. See In re ITT, 104 F.T.C. 280, 404 (1984) (promotional period must be "sufficiently long to make it likely that sales at prices below average variable cost could in fact force equally efficient firms to exit. Discontinuous or episodic instances of sales at such prices are unlikely to satisfy this standard."). Accordingly, to establish a predatory pricing claim, it is insufficient for a plaintiff merely to allege, as Plaintiffs do here, that a defendant priced below average cost. Compl. ¶ 31. A plaintiff must also allege that the below-cost pricing continued for a period of time beyond a promotional pricing period and into a time frame where it threatens the viability of equally efficient rivals. See ITT, 104 F.T.C. at 404.

Here, Conwood does not and cannot allege that USTC's introductory "give away" (Compl. ¶ 31) was anything more than a temporary promotion of the Red Seal brand during its introduction into the marketplace. Absent some supportable factual allegations that the complained-of conduct was continuous for a legally sufficient period of time, Plaintiffs' predatory pricing claim must fail as a matter of law.[5] [5] Plaintiffs' conclusory allegation that the Red Seal promotion was a "scheme to undercut and eliminate [Plaintiffs' price-value product] from the marketplace" is not only insupportable, it also does nothing to cure the deficiency in Plaintiffs' predatory pricing claim. Moreover, this allegation is belied by the videotape Plaintiffs attached as Exhibit C to their Complaint, which clearly shows USTC sales representatives approaching customers purchasing Conwood's premium brands, not just its price-value product, during the Red Seal promotion at issue. In any event, the law is clear that temporary promotions structured around below-cost pricing, even if aimed at winning customers from a competitor, are perfectly lawful means of competition. See text above.

3. Any Effect On The Alleged Market Could Only Be De Minimis

Finally, even if Plaintiffs could establish a predatory pricing violation limited to the Red Seal brand — which, as demonstrated above, they cannot as a matter of law — Plaintiffs cannot adequately plead anticompetitive harm to the alleged relevant market. Judgment as a matter of law is appropriate where, as here, an antitrust plaintiff cannot establish more than a de minimis effect on competition in the relevant market.

For example, in Stratmore v. Goodbody, 866 F.2d 189 (6th Cir. 1989), the Sixth Circuit affirmed summary judgment for defendant where the complained-of conduct had only a "negligible" effect on competition. Id. at 194. In that case, the court assumed an antitrust violation and assumed the narrow market definition asserted by plaintiff, but found that the complained-of conduct did not appreciably suppress competition in that market. Id.; see also William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 461 F. Supp. 410 (N.D. Cal. 1978) (because effect of pricing violation on the alleged market was "so minimal in relation to [defendant's] market-wide sales, there could be no substantial effect on competition"); Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 478 (7th Cir. 1988) (upholding summary judgment in favor of the defendants where the complained-of conduct had a negligible effect on the entire relevant market).

Here, Plaintiffs' allegations, on their face, indicate that the complained-of conduct could not have had any appreciable anticompetitive effect in the alleged market. First, Plaintiffs' allegations are limited to the Red Seal brand (Compl. ¶ 31), which has been on the market for only a matter of months and comprises less than 1% of the alleged moist snuff market. Second, Plaintiffs' allegations of predatory pricing are further limited to two discrete geographic areas,

16diii000976

Louisiana and Mississippi. Compl. ¶ 31. Even accepting Plaintiffs' allegations as true, which they are not, and even assuming the alleged conduct could constitute an antitrust violation, which it could not, Plaintiffs simply cannot establish that conduct limited to such a small segment of the overall alleged relevant market — in terms of both product and geographic area — could have any significant anticompetitive effect in the alleged national market for moist snuff. Accordingly, judgment as a matter of law is appropriate.

B. Plaintiffs' Section 2 Claim Based On Allegations Of "Exclusive Dealing" Must Fail As A Matter Of Law

Plaintiffs also allege that USTC has monopolized the national moist snuff market through "exclusive dealing agreements" with retailers. Conwood, of course, has a difficult time describing the nature of these exclusive dealing agreements because USTC has none in the traditional — and perfectly lawful — sense of the term.

Instead, Plaintiffs describe four categories of "exclusive dealing agreements"[6] that USTC allegedly has with various retail stores. These include the following: (i) USTC's category management relationships with several large-scale retail chains; (ii) what Plaintiffs refer to as the "Copenhagen Incentive Program"; (iii) the "Free Standing Display #2908 Placement Agreement"; and (iv) USTC's "Customer Alliance Program." Compl. ¶ 28. Even a cursory review of Section 2 jurisprudence, however, confirms that these types of "agreements" and activities are earmarks of vigorous competition and are to be encouraged, rather than condemned.

[6] It should be noted that none of the documents cited by Plaintiffs, including those attached as exhibits to the Complaint, is an "exclusive agreement" in terms of display racks, point of sale advertising, or products.

16diii000977

In Bayou Bottling, Inc. v. Dr. Pepper Co., 725 F.2d 300 (5th Cir. 1984), the court affirmed judgment as a matter of law for defendants on plaintiff's Sherman Act Section 2 claims, which were based on essentially the same facts alleged by Plaintiffs here. In that case, plaintiff, a competing wholesaler, complained that defendant wholesaler (with a 75% market share) monopolized or attempted to monopolize the soft drink market by entering into several categories of "exclusionary" agreements with retailers, including an agreement to provide free service and maintenance if vending machines and coolers were not stocked with plaintiff's products. Id. at 304 n.2. The effect of these agreements, plaintiff alleged, was to bar or restrict plaintiff's products from defendant's vending machines and coolers and also from the retailers' shelf space. Id. at 304. The court rejected plaintiff's arguments, holding that "these practices are not barred by the antitrust laws," even if defendant was a monopolist and even if the effect was to exclude plaintiff's products. Id. As the court stated, "[i]t ought to be apparent that a monopolist's right to compete is not limited to actions undertaken with an altruistic purpose. Even monopolists must be allowed to do as well as they can with their business." Id. (emphasis added). The court specifically rejected plaintiff's implication that the antitrust laws somehow entitled plaintiff to more shelf space in the retail stores. Id.

Similarly, in Beverage Management, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Bottling Corp., 653 F. Supp. 1144 (S.D. Ohio 1986), the court rejected plaintiff's claim that it had been "barred from gaining exposure for its products" and "illegally foreclosed" from the market by defendant Coca-Cola's agreements with retailers, including volume incentive and promotion allowances. Id. at 1152. Plaintiff argued, as Conwood alleges here, that defendant's agreements with retailers were, in effect, exclusive dealing arrangements that excluded plaintiff from a segment of the market. Id. at 1153. The court rejected plaintiff's claims. Relying on the Supreme Court's admonition that "the antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors," id. at 1155 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477 (1977)), as well as on prevailing authority that "competitive marketing practices" do not violate the antitrust laws, "even when the challenged party enjoyed a monopoly in the relevant market," id., the court stated:

> [E]ven were Coca-Cola a monopolist in the relevant market ..., it would still have the option of employing ordinary marketing methods available to all in the market to make its promotional offers the most attractive to [retailers].

Id. at 1156. See also Northeastern Tel. Co. v. AT&T, 651 F.2d 76, 93 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943 (1982) (monopolist's use of "ordinary marketing methods available to all in the market" does not violate the antitrust laws); Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 287 (2d Cir. 1979) (promotional efforts by defendant with substantial market power did not violate the antitrust laws).

Here, Plaintiffs merely enumerate various marketing agreements USTC is alleged to have with certain retailers. According to Plaintiffs' allegations, the result of these alleged agreements is to "permit [USTC] to install its own distribution racks" (Compl. ¶ 28(a)), to "restrict the space and placement of Conwood products" (Compl. ¶ 28(a)), to allow USTC to "have primary positioning of all smokeless tobacco POS [advertising] (Compl. ¶ 28(b)), to give USTC products "positioning on the stand's top shelf, [while] competitors are relegated to lower, less visible racks" (Compl. ¶ 28(c)), and to "give UST[C] control of at least 80% of all moist snuff shelf space within the store." (Compl. ¶ 28(d)). Significantly, Plaintiffs do not allege, nor can they, that any of the enumerated types of agreements are anything other than marketing strategies available to all of the other participants in the alleged market, including Plaintiffs; nor do Plaintiffs allege that the alleged agreements are anything but "ordinary marketing methods" used in the course of legitimate competition. Thus, even assuming that Plaintiffs' allegations could be proven, they do not and cannot establish a violation of the antitrust laws. Perhaps the Beverage Management court best summarized why Conwood cannot blame USTC, under the antitrust laws, for Conwood's failure to do better against USTC in the marketplace:

> [C]onsiderations as to the drawing power of a featured soft drink and perhaps even interpersonal relationships are among the other factors which have influenced [retailers]. The fact that Plaintiff's promotional offers have not proven sufficient vis-a-vis the other factors in [the retailers'] calculus for Plaintiff to have prevailed in the highly competitive struggle ... does not establish that Defendant, one of Plaintiff's rivals, has engaged in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

653 F. Supp. at 1156. Accordingly, judgment as a matter of law is required as to this theory of Section 2 liability.

C. Plaintiffs' Section 2 Claim Based On Allegations Of Business Torts Must Fail As A Matter Of Law

Finally, in a last ditch effort to create an antitrust case where none exists, Plaintiffs claim that USTC violates the Sherman Act every time one of its employees allegedly says something bad about Conwood's products or removes a Conwood product from a display rack (presumably a USTC display rack) without the approval of the retailer.[7] What Conwood alleges, of course, are age-old common law business torts of conversion, theft and disparagement — conduct that has long been the province of state courts despite repeated

[7] As a factual matter, it would be a rare occasion if a USTC employee removed a Conwood product from a USTC display rack without the express approval of the retailer.

attempts by plaintiffs to convert the federal antitrust laws and federal courts into arenas for litigating every type of wrong a plaintiff can imagine.

The Supreme Court clearly drew this line in Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson, 509 U.S. 209 (1993), explaining:

> It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for "the protection of competition, not competitors".... [I]n the Sherman Act §2 context ... it [is] not enough to inquire "whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics".... Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws; those laws do not create a federal law of unfair competition or "purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce."

Id. at 225 (citations omitted). See also Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826 (1945) ("whether respondents' [tortious] conduct amounts to an actionable wrong subjecting them to liability for damages under [state] law is not [of antitrust] concern"). Accordingly, the Sixth Circuit routinely has rejected attempts by plaintiffs to recast state law and common law causes of action as Sherman Act claims.

For example, in L.B. Cleveland, Inc. v. Bluestone, 820 F.2d 1225, 1987 WL 37754 (6th Cir. 1987), the court rejected plaintiffs' argument that instances of conversion of trade secrets and business property could constitute an antitrust violation:

> The Court finds the Complaint to be insufficient to allege a cause of action under the federal antitrust laws as plaintiffs have not convinced this Court that the challenged conduct threatens "competition" in the market place as opposed to one competitor. Plaintiffs' complaint, at best, raises causes of action under state law and/or common law. Since federal antitrust laws do not afford remedies for all torts committed against persons involved in interstate commerce, plaintiffs' federal claims must be dismissed for failure to state a cause of action justiciable by this Court.

Id. at *1 (quoting district court decision) (as altered); see also Merkle Press, Inc. v. Merkle, 519 F. Supp. 50, 53-54 (Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations of injury to competition arising from business torts were insufficient to survive a motion to dismiss because "[c]ourts must be circumspect in converting ordinary business torts into violations of the antitrust laws. To do so would be to create a federal common law of unfair competition which was not the intent of the antitrust laws.").

Further, courts have specifically rejected Sherman Act claims where, as here, they were based on allegations of disparagement. In RE/MAX International v. Realty One, Inc., 900 F. Supp. 132 (N.D. Ohio 1995), for example, the court granted defendants' motion to dismiss as to plaintiff's Sherman Act claims to the extent they were based on disparagement because disparagement cannot cause antitrust injury. Id. at 159. As the court stated, "[m]ere allegations of business disparagement are not the type of injuries to competition that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Id.; see also Broyles v. Wilson, 812 F. Supp. 651, 655 (M.D. La. 1993) (granting motion to dismiss because, even where defamatory comments damaged business reputation, "such conduct is not the type of conduct the antitrust laws were enacted to prohibit or punish").

Here, Plaintiffs allege that USTC sales representatives removed Conwood display racks and products from stores (Compl. ¶ 24), made misrepresentations to third parties concerning USTC's authority to manage in-store displays (Compl. ¶¶ 25, 26), and disparaged Conwood products (Compl. ¶ 29). While such allegations might, if properly pled, rise to the level of a state law tort claim, they do not implicate harm to competition in the overall market as opposed to harm to Conwood alone. Consumers in the alleged national market for moist snuff would gain no benefit from USTC being required to pay Conwood treble damages for these alleged commonplace torts based on conduct that is inevitable in nearly every marketplace. Indeed, a decision not to dismiss Conwood's Section 2 claim based on those allegations would be an open invitation to undermine the objectives of the federal antitrust laws and clog this Court with every type of tort claim dressed up in Sherman Act clothing.

II. PLAINTIFFS' LANHAM ACT CLAIM MUST FAIL AS A MATTER OF LAW

Plaintiffs allege in the second claim of their Complaint that USTC violated Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act.[8] In order to establish such a claim, however, a plaintiff must establish, inter alia, that the alleged statements were made in "commercial advertising," and were not merely isolated statements made by the defendant, or as alleged in this case, by the defendant's employees. See Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1139 (9th Cir. 1997); United Industries Corporation v. Clorox Company, 140 F.3d 1175 (8th Cir. 1998); Abbott Laboratories v. Gerber Products Company, Inc., 979 F. Supp. 569, 571 (W.D. Mich. 1997).

[8] Section 43(a), 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), provides in relevant part:

> Any person who, or in connection with any goods or services ... uses in commerce any word, term, name, ... or any combination thereof, or any ... false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is likely to be damaged by such act.

Although the Lanham Act itself does not define commercial advertising, courts have established what type of speech can give rise to a Lanham Act claim and what types cannot. For example, in Gordon and Breach Science Publishers S.A. STBS v. American Institute of Physics, 859 F. Supp. 1521, 1536 (S.D.N.Y. 1994), the court held that under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, statements would constitute "commercial advertising" only if they met a four-part test:

> (1) commercial speech; (2) by a defendant who is in commercial competition with plaintiff; (3) for the purpose of influencing customers to buy defendant's goods or services. While the advertising campaign need not be made in a "classic advertising campaign," but may consist instead of more informal types of "promotion," the representations (4) must be disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute "advertising" or "promotion" within that industry.

See also U-Haul International, Inc. v. Kresch, 943 F. Supp. 802, 811 (E.D. Mich. 1996); Medical Graphics Corporation v. Sensormedics Corporation, 872 F. Supp. 643, 650 (D. Minn. 1994); Liberty Telephone v. Burke, No. 96 C 50381, 1997 WL 177140, *5 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 31, 1997). Thus, courts consistently have denied recovery under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act where, as here, a plaintiff merely alleges a number of isolated statements to consumers in the context of a large market for the goods in question.

In Licata & Co. Inc. v. Goldberg, 812 F. Supp. 403 (S.D.N.Y. 1993), for example, defendant's employee made disparaging remarks about plaintiff to several customers. The court held that the complained-of conduct did not and could not constitute "commercial advertising," and that the Lanham Act would be "trivialized" if it were applied to statements in oral conversations by a sales representative to a customer. As the court stated, competitors are encouraged to make claims that one's product is superior to a competitor's as part of the "hurly-burly inherent in a free market system." Id. at 408.

Similarly, in Fashion Boutique of Short Hills, Inc. v. Fendi USA, Inc., 942 F. Supp. 209 (S.D.N.Y. 1996), the court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment even though the plaintiff offered evidence of twenty-one instances where the defendants' employees disparaged the plaintiff's goods or services (twelve to customers and nine to undercover investigators hired by the plaintiff). Despite this evidence, the plaintiff had not established that the alleged speech was disseminated sufficiently to the public. As the court explained, when the market for the goods in question consists of "thousands of customers," twenty-one instances of defendants' employees' conduct was not enough to constitute dissemination to the purchasing public:

> [Plaintiff's] best evidence is that seven people, six of whom were undercover investigators, heard defendants' employees make allegedly disparaging comments about customer service. This evidence does not prove that, as a result of defendants' policy, disparaging comments about [plaintiff's] customer service were sufficiently disseminated to the large relevant purchasing public. Nor is the fact that a handful of employees made disparaging comments to a small fraction of the relevant purchasing public evidence of a policy to disparage the quality or authenticity of the merchandise sold by [plaintiff].

Id. at 216-217. See also Medical Graphics, 872 F. Supp. at 650 (where the potential market for the product is large, a "handful" of statements made by sales representatives is not enough to constitute commercial advertising); American Needle & Novelty, Inc. v. Drew Pearson Marketing, Inc., 820 F. Supp. 1072, 1078 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (to permit recovery under Section 43(a) for isolated statements "would sweep within the ambit of the Act any disparaging comment made in the context of a commercial transaction").

Here, Conwood cannot establish that the complained-of behavior constituted "commercial advertising." Plaintiff alleges a nationwide market consisting of millions of moist snuff consumers. Compl. ¶ 8. Although Plaintiffs make the conclusory allegation that statements made by USTC sales representatives "are not isolated instances" (Compl. ¶ 29), Plaintiffs have not and cannot establish, or even allege, any facts that would demonstrate that more than a relative "handful" of allegedly disparaging statements were made in the alleged national market for moist snuff. Compl. ¶ 29. Because the statements allegedly made by USTC's sales representatives were, at most, only isolated instances of conversations with individual customers, Conwood does not and cannot allege that they were disseminated sufficiently to the moist snuff purchasing public. As the court in Fashion Boutique held, such isolated statements are not "sufficiently disseminated" to establish a violation of Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act and, significantly, any evidence of such statements would not be evidence of a policy to disparage Conwood's products. Plaintiffs' Lanham Act claim, therefore, must fail as a matter of law.

III. PLAINTIFFS' STATE LAW CLAIMS MUST FAIL AS A MATTER OF LAW

Plaintiffs allege that this Court has subject matter jurisdiction of Plaintiffs' state law claims only under 28 U.S.C. § 1367, see Compl. ¶ 7(a). Section 1367 allows a district court to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over claims that form the same case or controversy as the claims over which the court has original jurisdiction. Defendants respectfully request that, after entering judgment on the pleadings as to all of Plaintiffs' federal claims, the Court exercise its discretion and dismiss Plaintiffs' state claims for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

The Sixth Circuit has consistently and repeatedly held that a district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims where the court has dismissed or entered judgment as a matter of law on plaintiff's federal claims. See, e.g., Lenox v. Healthwise of Kentucky, Ltd., __ F.3d __, 1998 WL 374754 (6th Cir. 1998) (affirming district court's dismissal of plaintiff's state law claims); Grindstaff v. Green, 133 F.3d 416 (6th Cir. 1998) (dismissing state law claims after entering judgment on the pleadings for defendant on plaintiff's federal claims); Valot v. Southeast Local School District Board of Education, 107 F.3d 1220, 1230 (6th Cir. 1997) ("[a] district court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a state law claim where it has dismissed all of the federal claims over which it had original jurisdiction").

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' state law claims should be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants respectfully request that this Court dismiss the Complaint or enter judgment on the pleadings for Defendants.

DEFENDANTS' SUPPLEMENTAL RESPONSES TO PLAINTIFFS' FIRST SET OF INTERROGATORIES

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 33, Defendants supplement their responses to Plaintiffs' First Set Of Interrogatories to Defendants as follows:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On November 2 and 3, 1998, Defendants and Plaintiffs met via telephone conference to attempt to resolve discovery disputes relating to Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories. Defendants submit the following supplemental responses to Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories to clarify and document the compromises reached during the meet and confer. These responses supercede Defendants' original responses and fully address the issues discussed during the meet and confer.

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

1. Defendants object to these interrogatories insofar as they purport to seek separate responses from each Defendant. A demand for such separate responses would be unduly burdensome and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Unless otherwise specifically noted, all Defendants have responded to these interrogatories based on information reasonably available to them. Defendants have no reason to believe that separate responses provided by any of the individual Defendants would differ from those provided here in any meaningful way.

2. Defendants object to these interrogatories insofar as they seek the production of confidential, proprietary business information.

3. Defendants object to these interrogatories insofar as they seek the production of information protected by the attorney client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, and/or any other applicable privilege or protection.

4. Defendants object to these interrogatories on the ground that they do not specify a relevant time period.

RESPONSES TO INTERROGATORIES

Interrogatory No. 1. Identify each person from whose files documents were produced in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents, identify the documents produced from each such person's files, and identify the person(s) most familiar with each of said files.

Response to Interrogatory No. 1: Defendants incorporate by reference Defendants' Supplemental Response To Plaintiffs' First Request For Production Of Documents. Defendants also object to this interrogatory on the ground that, to the extent documents are produced in response to Plaintiffs' First Request for Production of Documents and in response to Plaintiffs' Second Request for Production of Documents and Things, the information sought can be obtained as readily by Plaintiffs as by Defendants from such documents. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(d). Defendants are under no obligation to index all documents as requested.

Interrogatory No. 2. Describe generally each computer system used by defendant, including types of data maintained in each, and for each such system identify the person(s) most familiar therewith.

Response to Interrogatory No. 2: Defendants object to this interrogatory on the ground that it is irrelevant, overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Defendants fail to see how descriptions of any computer system, in and of themselves, are relevant to this lawsuit or would lead to the discovery of relevant evidence.

Interrogatory No. 3. Identify by name, address, title, job description, and date of service all persons involved in the marketing and/or sale of defendants' moist snuff products.

The parties agreed to limit this interrogatory to request the identity by name, address, title, job description, and date of service of only those employees who have served as sales representatives, divisional managers, or regional managers involved in the marketing and/or sale of Defendants' moist snuff products, and/or employees who have been involved in training such persons.

Response to Interrogatory No. 3: Defendants state that the following persons have overall responsibility for the marketing and/or sale of Defendants' moist snuff products:

A. Gary Smith, President, United States Tobacco Company Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Gary Milano, Vice President, United States Tobacco Company Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Richard Fasanelli, Vice President, United States Tobacco Sales and Marketing Company Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Defendants also refer Plaintiffs to Attachment A to these responses, which is the current Field Sales Directory. Additionally, all prior lists of employees who have served as sales representatives, divisional managers, or regional managers involved in the marketing and/or sale of Defendants' moist snuff products, and/or employees who have been involved in training such persons, are currently being produced in response to Plaintiffs' document requests.

Interrogatory No. 4. Identify all distributors and retailers of moist snuff products with which one or more defendants has or had an agreement.

The parties agreed to limit this interrogatory to distributors and retailers with which one or more defendants has or had an exclusive dealing agreement that is or was, by way of example only, exclusive in terms of display racks, slotting allowances, and/or point of sale advertising.

Response to Interrogatory No. 4: Defendants state that, to the extent this request, as agreed upon by the parties, refers to exclusive dealing agreements that create obligations on behalf of any distributor or retailer to exclude the vendors, products, or point of sale advertising of any smokeless tobacco company, Defendants have no such agreements with any distributors or retailers. Plaintiffs' November 5, 1998 letter does not reflect the agreement of the parties and does not address Defendants' objections to the original interrogatory. To the extent Plaintiffs seek a list of all distributors and retailers that have authorized the placement of Defendants' vendor(s), products, or point of sale advertising - which would include every distributor and retailer with which Defendants conduct business - Defendants object to the interrogatory as overbroad, unduly burdensome, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Further, to the extent Plaintiffs seek a list of distributors and retailers who participate in the Customer Alliance Program ("CAP") and/or the Retail Account Data Program ("RAD"), all executed CAP and RAD contracts have been produced to Plaintiffs pursuant to Rule 34.

Interrogatory No. 5. Identify by name, address, title, job description, and date of service all persons who have spoken to tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff.

Response to Interrogatory No. 5: Subject to and without waiving any objection stated herein, Defendants state that the persons most knowledgeable about discussions with tobacco industry analysts on matters pertaining to moist snuff is:

Mark A. Rozelle, Vice President, UST Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Richard H. Verheij, Esq., Executive Vice President and General Counsel, UST Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Vincent A. Gierer, Jr., Chairman of the Board, Chief Executive Officer and President, UST Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

Interrogatory No. 6. Identify by name, address, title, job description, and date of service all persons who participated in the preparation of answers to these interrogatories.

Response to Interrogatory No. 6: Persons who participated in the preparation of answers to these interrogatories include the following:

Martha J. Weiss, Esq., Senior Corporate Counsel, UST Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, CT 06830.

Richard H. Verheij, Esq., Executive Vice President and General Counsel, UST Inc., 100 West Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830.

vs. — NO. 5:98CV-108-R

UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY,
UNITED STATES TOBACCO SALES AND MARKETING COMPANY INC., UNITED STATES TOBACCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY INC. and UST INC. — DEFENDANTS

ORDER

This matter is before the Court on motions of plaintiff to compel production of discovery materials. (Docket Nos. 29 and 35). Defendant has responded, (Docket Nos. 31 and 36), and plaintiff has replied. (Docket Nos. 32 and 37). The matter was referred to the Magistrate Judge for decision pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(A), (Docket No. 39), and a hearing was held on the motions on December 11, 1998.

I.

Plaintiffs have moved to compel a broader range of discovery from defendants. More particularly, plaintiffs seek to compel the production of weekly and other regular reports from sales representatives, most especially at the district office level, but also at the regional office level. These reports, in the view of Conwood, may well document the alleged exclusionary conduct of UST carried out, inter alia, through actions of UST sales representatives with respect to distribution racks in stores. UST argues that, if any conduct is to be attributable to the corporation, it must be centrally directed and not merely the unauthorized or spontaneous actions of sales representatives. This argument is unavailing. The Court is of the view that, even if it were true that for there to be liability such conduct must be centrally directed, there could well exist documentation at a "grassroots" level which would corroborate or document the implementation of a centrally planned policy. To say that the policy is directed from above does not mean it may not be documented from below.

In addition, UST also argues that, in addition to its contention that the documents are of "weak relevance," the collection of the data would be burdensome. However, it has not particularized this objection, and in view of the significant scope of the claims and the apparent gravity of the litigation, the Court finds no reason based on burden to deny the request. Accordingly,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that UST's objection to the production of documents from the district level is without merit and UST shall produce responsive documents from district and regional offices.

II.

The next issue taken up at the hearing involved disagreements over the format and other technical details with respect to CD-ROM's used by the plaintiffs to store its multiple boxes of documents. Based on the discussion on the record between counsel, it appears that the differences between the parties are being narrowed and may be eliminated. Accordingly, the Court defers any ruling on this issue.

III.

Defendant UST objects to the designation as confidential by plaintiff of the identity of all persons identified as knowledgeable pursuant to Rule 26. Plaintiff counters that, while it did not initially designate all these individuals as confidential, arguably improper contacts have been made by UST employees with respect to Conwood personnel. Accordingly, plaintiffs have designated the entire list as confidential in order to prevent further contacts.

The purpose of the confidentiality order, however, is not to prevent witness tampering or improper contacts; the purpose of the confidentiality order is rather to protect trade secrets and other confidential material from disclosure. In the view of the Court, the use of the confidentiality designation to prospectively protect against improper contacts is not a proper use of the protective order. Accordingly,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the motion of UST to remove the designation is GRANTED. However, the Court notes that, should there be any inappropriate contact with witnesses or potential witnesses, the Court would view that matter most seriously and would wish to review any details, where appropriate. The Court is not making any ruling at all as to whether improper contact has occurred, but reminding the parties it has the authority and the readiness to resolve such issues if it becomes necessary.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that all issues contained in the pending motions which are not decided in this order are reserved for future rulings.

UNITED STATES TOBACCO COMPANY,

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

The undersigned Magistrate Judge conducted a hearing on January 19, 1999, concerning the issue of whether the scope of search for documents by defendant UST should extend to documents retained by sales representatives. For the reasons set forth on the record, in more detail,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that defendant UST shall extend its search for responsive documents previously requested to the following categories of documents in the possession, custody or control of sales representatives:

1. Any notes, correspondence, memoranda, day-planner, calendar, journal, or other similar written summary of activities prepared by or retained by a sales representative which relates in any way to any of the alleged anti-competitive activities asserted by the plaintiff in paragraphs 22-31 of the complaint.

2. Any regularly maintained corporate documents, including so-called PAR's and any other related reports, memoranda, summaries, and the like, in the possession, custody or control of the sales representatives for calendar year 1995 or earlier, and responsive to the previously filed document requests.

3. The Magistrate Judge set out in some detail on the record the reasons for the ruling. Briefly, the scope of Rule 26 is broad, and the plaintiff is entitled to discovery documents which are either relevant or may lead to the discovery of relevant evidence. While the testimony at the hearing from the corporate representative was clear that sales representatives should send official documentation "up the chain" to the regional office, the representative did not deny that it was possible that additional documents were individually prepared and maintained by sales representatives. Given the allegations of the complaint, in which some or many of the anti-competitive activities alleged against UST are supposedly carried out by sales representative personnel, it would be an extraordinary result to deny discovery into the files of the sales representatives who are claimed to have implemented supposedly illegal policies.

The assertions of burden by the defendant are essentially conclusory. Defendant did no more than to argue that there are 448 sales representatives, a fact which is not disputed. Defendant presented no evidence concerning the amount of time which it would take to conduct such a search, and given defendant's position that few such documents are maintained, the task of compliance would not be unduly burdensome. Moreover, to the extent that diaries, journals, individual notes, and the like may document or reflect actions alleged by the plaintiff to be anti-competitive or illegal, such individual records would potentially be of considerable significance in plaintiff's attempt to prove its case.

In short, given the indisputable relevance of the documents, to the extent that they are found to exist, and the generalized assertions of burden, the motion to compel will be GRANTED to the limited extent set out above.

The testimony of the corporate representative was uncontradicted that corporate documents are not retained indefinitely (they are "purged," in the language of one of the memoranda), and given the uncontradicted assertion of plaintiff's counsel that some sales representatives do keep corporate reports longer than the period of time for which the corporate document policy extends, it is not illogical to extend the search for relevant documents to a level of the company where documents no longer retained at the corporate level still may exist.

Finally, while merely pleading an antitrust case is not an authorization for discovery without limits, it is also apparent to the Magistrate Judge that the complaint is one brought by one established competitor against a larger, arguably dominant firm, and given the experience and resources of counsel on both sides of the dispute, and the scope of the case, it cannot be said that a thorough search for documents which may be of considerable significance should be limited to exclude a search at the sales representative level.

THE CAPTIONED MATTER WAS CALLED IN OPEN COURT AT THE HOUR OF 10:05 A.M., ON JANUARY 19, 1998; AND THE FOLLOWING PROCEEDINGS OCCURRED:

THE COURT: Mr. Golden, would you call the case, please.

CLERK OF THE COURT: Conwood Company v. United States Tobacco Company, Civil Action Number 5:98-cv-108-R.

THE COURT: All right. Good morning, everyone.

MR. GORSUCH: Good morning, Your Honor.

MR. REED: Good morning, Your Honor.

MR. KEYTE: Good morning, Your Honor.

THE COURT: The Court recognizes Mr. Gorsuch and Mr. Powell for the plaintiff, Conwood; and for United States Tobacco, Mr. Reed and Mr. Athanasia and Mr. Keyte; and we are here as a continuation of proceedings we've had on discovery-related issues; and last week, the Court requested that UST bring a highly knowledgeable person who could speak to the issue about where and whether documents are kept at the sales or field level and that the reason the Court did that was simply that it was apparent to the Court that there was a good deal of disagreement between the parties as to whether the sales personnel had relevant documents in their possession. And given the nature of the case and the possible importance of the issue to discovery, the Magistrate Judge simply thought that the best thing to do would be to hear from someone. Affidavits can be useful, but sometimes live testimony is the best way to try and resolve a factual conflict.

The Magistrate Judge wants to be very clear that the Court has no predilection or inclination as to what the facts will show here; but I thought that, rather than having an affidavit-based decision, we'd just hear from someone.

So Mr. Keyte, I take it . . .

MR. KEYTE: Yeah.

THE COURT: I see some new faces.

MR. KEYTE: Let me introduce two new faces. First, on your right is Martha Weiss, the senior corporate counsel of U.S. Tobacco.

THE COURT: Good morning, Ms. Weiss. We heard your name last week when we were scurrying around on the phone.

MR. KEYTE: And then Kevin Freudenthal, who will be our witness, who is the Director of Trade and Marketing for U.S. Tobacco.

THE COURT: Maybe you could spell that for the court reporter.

MR. KEYTE: Sure.

COURT REPORTER: I have it.

THE COURT: She has it, okay, all right.

MR. KEYTE: So whenever you'd like to begin.

THE COURT: Unless someone has some procedural comment, the Court's inclination is to let UST put on testimony of Mr. Freudenthal. Did I say that right?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Yes sir.

THE COURT: And we'll give Conwood, of course, the opportunity to cross-examine; and then we'll have a better factual record from which to determine whether the plaintiffs' contention that discovery ought to be extended to the sales level is correct.

MR. KEYTE: Okay. U.S. Tobacco calls Mr. Freudenthal.

THE COURT: All right. If you'll come forward and be sworn, sir.

DIRECT EXAMINATION

THE COURT: Okay, Mr. Freudenthal, if you'd spell your name for me.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Okay. Well, certainly. It's F as in Frank . . .

Q Yes sir.

A . . . r-e-u . . .

Q Very good.

THE COURT: Now people often want to look at me, and you'll get a stiff neck if you do that. You can just look at Mr. Keyte and . . .

MR. KEYTE: And if the Court has a question . . .

THE COURT: Yeah. If I have a question, I'll address you; but I don't want you to have to turn around like that.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Great.

THE COURT: Mr. Keyte, you may proceed.

DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Please state your name for the record.

A Kevin Eugene Freudenthal.

Q What is your current position at U.S. Tobacco?

A I'm Director of Trade and Marketing.

Q And briefly describe your responsibilities in that position.

A I'm responsible for developing sales and marketing programs and promotions.

Q How long have you been employed by U.S. Tobacco?

A A little over 13 years.

Q And what was your first position there?

A I started as a sales rep in January of 1986.

Q And briefly explain to the Court what other positions you held at U.S. Tobacco between 1986 and the present.

A As I mentioned, I started as a sales rep in 1986; and then I was promoted to a Division Manager in 1987, and then I was promoted to a Chain Account Manager in 1988, and then I was promoted to a Regional Marketing Manager in 1990, and then I was promotion to Department Manager in 1993, and then I was promoted to Director of Trade and Marketing in 1997.

Q So to summarize, you were in the U.S. Tobacco sales force for approximately 11 years?

A Yes.

Q And you were elevated about a year-and-a-half ago to your current position?

A Correct.

Q Please briefly describe for the Court the basic organizational structure of the U.S. Tobacco sales force.

A The company is very organized out in the field. The sales rep reports to a division manager, and a division manager reports to a department manager, and a department manager reports to the Regional Vice President, who reports to the Vice President of Sales.

Q How many sales reps did you supervise as a division manager?

A As a division manager, six.

Q And how many sales reps did you supervise as a department manager?

A Approximately 30.

Q And do you still work in the field today in your current position?

A Yes, I do. My job description calls for developing various sales and marketing promotions and programs, and 40 percent or thereabouts, field sales, travel and interaction in the marketplace.

Q Is the organizational structure of the U.S. Tobacco sales force essentially the same now as it was when you were promoted in 1997?

A Yes, it is.

Q What are the responsibilities of the division managers with respect to documenting the activities of the sales representatives?

A The division managers are the team leaders. They're responsible for insuring that all the proper administrative forms are completed and that all the information is sent to them so that they can send it up the chain of command.

Q And what are the responsibilities of sales representatives in documenting their own activities?

A Our sales reps are the eyes and ears of the company out there. They're required to follow procedures and report on administrative forms and reports and send everything to their immediate supervisor, who is their division manager.

Q And based on your experience, do you have an understanding as to what types of documents are used by U.S. Tobacco sales representatives in carrying out their responsibilities?

A Yes sir.

Q Are you familiar with the vans used by U.S. Tobacco sales representatives?

A Yes, I am.

Q And when was the last time you looked inside one of these vans?

A I had the opportunity to look into a sales rep's van yesterday.

Q Okay. And why did you do that?

A Well, I wanted to just take a look and see if the van set-up today is the way it has been over the course of my experience; and it has.

Q And when you're out in the field, in your current work, did you have occasion to look at the vans and how they're set up in other parts of the country as well?

A Yeah. That's part of my responsibility is getting out and working with sales reps and division managers and department managers and working with them in their environment.

MR. KEYTE: Let me - Your Honor, I would like to mark - I don't how you want to do procedurally. I'd like to mark a couple of exhibits.

THE COURT: Why don't you mark them and hand them to the Court if you have copies to make available.

MR. KEYTE: Okay. I'll just call them Freudenthal 1 and . . .

THE COURT: That would be fine.

MR. KEYTE: . . . if that's acceptable.

Let me mark as Freudenthal Exhibits 1, 2, and 3.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Numbers 1 A, B, and C (group exhibit) were so marked for identification.)

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, are these pictures of the van you looked at yesterday?

A Yes.

Q And could you just explain to the Court what the three pictures are, of what parts of the van?

A Sure. A that's listed on the bottom, that would be the rear of the van; and that's where the sales rep would carry their various car-stock product, Copenhagen and Skoal and some POS materials and their supplies, back there.

THE COURT: Is that a Chrysler-made van? What kind of mini-van is that?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: This is a . . .

THE COURT: It doesn't really matter. I'm just trying to . . .

MR. FREUDENTHAL: This is an Aerostar.

THE COURT: Aerostar.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: So that the back of the hatch comes up.

THE COURT: It's not a Silhouette, is it?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Pardon me?

THE COURT: It's not the Silhouette. You know, that's the Cadillac.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, no, no.

MR. KEYTE: It doesn't appear to be.

THE COURT: That's a reference to a movie. You may continue.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No. That's the back of an Aerostar; and as you can see, there's two handles; and those trays actually move in and out of the van so they can access the materials easily.

MR. KEYTE: All right.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: And then B is the side door that's a sliding door; and as you can see, there's a seat, a bench seat, in there; and that's where the sales rep would carry any larger point-of-sale items or displays or promotions.

And then C is the front of the van, which would have the driver's and passenger's seat; and in the middle, there's a little console there.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Okay. And is that commonly referred to as a car file?

A Yeah.

Q And what is a - briefly describe what a car file is.

A It's a piece of wood furniture. It's about 8 inches wide by maybe 14 - 12, 14 inches long, and that's where the sales rep would keep some files and their manuals.

Q And did you have an opportunity to talk to the sales rep who uses the van you were talking about yesterday?

A Yes.

Q And what did you talk to him about?

A I just - you know, I just asked him a couple of questions in looking at his van to really see - look at the organization and see if it's how I remember, and it is. I'm out in the field, as I mentioned, all the time; and I looked at it back - what my experience was as a sales rep and just point of reference and clarify and make sure it's the same.

Q Okay. And did you review the types of documents that he creates or receives and are kept in the car file?

A Yeah. We briefly talked about, you know, some of the things that he carries in his own van.

Q Okay. And has much of anything changed since you left the retail sales force in 1997?

A No.

Q Okay. And in your experience, would these vans or the car files be significantly different in any other parts of the country?

A No. As I mentioned, you know, the opportunity that I have is I got to get out and see different parts of the country. So I had an opportunity to work with different sales reps.

MR. KEYTE: Now I'd like to mark as Freudenthal Number 2, a page out of the Sales Operations Manual that was referenced.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Could you identify for the record what this exhibit is?

A Yeah. It's a suggested topic list of different car files for the sales rep to carry in his van.

Q And is that found in the Sales Operation Manual?

A Yes, it is.

Q I'll walk you through some of these items.

Before I do that, is the van that you looked at yesterday, did it contain the type of documents that are listed here in the exhibit?

A Uh huh, yes.

Q Let's go through it for the Court. The first item listed there is Direct Accounts. What would be found in the Direct Account file?

A That would be Direct Account listing, which would include the name of our direct accounts and address.

Q Is there any other information that would be on that document?

A No, it's really a direct account listing of all the direct accounts in a particular assignment, whatever that might be.

Q Okay. And who creates the direct account list?

A That's created at the regional level, and it's also maintained at the department, the division level.

Q Who would receive copies of it?

A Everybody would receive copies of the direct account listing. That would be sales reps and division, department, region, and corporate.

Q Next on the list is Chain Headquarters. What documents would be in a Chain Headquarters file?

A That would be information contained for chain accounts, like Seven-11 or Circle K. It would be headquarter listings, so again it would be a listing of those particular accounts that would have profiled information, like name and address and everything for that particular chain account.

Q Who creates those documents?

A Those are created with the key account managers, the chain account managers, and working with the regions and departments.

Q And who would receive copies of the headquarters material?

A As I mentioned with the direct accounts, everyone would receive copies of anything to do with the chain account headquarters, up and down the chain of command.

Q And next on the list is a Chain Promotion Planner. What's a Chain Promotion Planner?

A The Chain Promotion Planners, they would be calendar, either a 6- or 12-month calendar that would identify different programs or promotions that would be executed in chain accounts; and it would be generated by the manager responsible for that particular headquarter, either a chain account manager or a key account manager.

Q Okay. Just so it's clear, the people who create those documents are at the regional level or department level?

A It could be either/or.

Q Okay.

A It could be a key account manager at the national accounts level, or it could be a chain account manager that would be at the department level.

Q And who would receive a copy?

A Everyone that would be involved with that particular account, which would be the sales reps that would be responsible for executing, the division managers in that area, the department managers in that area. And if it's anything from a key account manager, it would include anyone in the region.

Q The next on the list is Coordinators. What does that refer to?

A That refers to PTST, which is part-time sales trainee coordinators; and that would be a file to maintain things like time sheets and activity sheets from the actual part-timers themselves.

Q Who creates those?

A Those are created at corporate level. It's an administrative reporting form that's just completed and submitted to corporate.

Q And who gets copies of those?

A Everyone that would be involved with that particular person, which would be the division manager, department manager. The regions receive a copy, and then it goes to the PTST Department, in their headquarters.

Q Now in general, is there a lot of duplication of documents, you know, from sales rep up through the regions?

A Yeah. Everything we do is duplicated. That's why all of our forms are in triplicate or four-part because that's - that's what's important, is passing the information on so that all the field sales managers have all the information that's contained in the marketplace.

Q And next on the list is Promotions. What does that refer to?

A That would refer to any consumer promotions that would be created in the corporate headquarters in the Marketing Department and then any executional plans that are developed at the regional level.

Q So those again are - those are created by the sales representative at the representative level?

A Yes.

Q And who receives copies of that material?

A Everyone receives copies. It starts - as I mentioned, it starts in the corporate headquarters; and then the information is disseminated down to the - to all the different positions in field sales.

Q Next is Programs. What does Programs refer to - and again we're talking about what might be in the file of a sales rep's van.

A It would be work-related programs, things that - things that would outline what's happening in a particular retail store or what's happening in a particular market that a sales rep was working at any given time.

Q And who creates the Program material?

A Although there's - there's two kinds. There's national programs, which are similar to the national promotions; and then if there were regional or department programs, there would be - they would be developed in the regions.

Q Who receives copies of that material?

A Everyone that would be affected, which would be the division managers, the department managers, and the regional vice presidents.

Q The next listing is Promotional Events. What does that refer to?

A Promotional Events are rodeos or races, things that we're participating in on an event level.

Q Who creates those documents?

A The promotional team.

Q Who receives copies - well, is the promotional team above the sales rep level?

A Yeah. The promotional team is on a national level, and it's - we have some satellite offices, which are in the regional offices themselves; and they coordinate all of our events.

Q To the extent they're even relevant to the case, who receives copies of that material?

A Everyone up the chain of command receives copies of it.

Q Next on the list, if I have it right, is Correspondence to/from Supervisor/Department/Region/Chain Manager. These - what does that refer to?

A Correspondence. That would be any correspondence from a division manager or a department manager to a sales rep. It may be a correspondence that sales rep communicated to his immediate supervisor or division manager. Then it would be copied to the department manager if that was the case.

Q And does all such correspondence get put up the chain, copies of that?

A Yes.

Q Well, does a U.S. Tobacco sales representative ever have correspondence with a retailer?

A In the rare instance that they would have communication, it may be with a small chain account that they have, that that would be correspondence that's coordinated with the division manager and created by their division manager.

Q Okay. And would copies of any such correspondence have to be sent up the chain as well?

A Yes, always - everything that we have is communicated up the chain of command to immediate supervisors.

Q And then what about the current project file? What does that refer to?

A The current project file could be any active activities. It could be some promotions or programs that would go into the current project file that they're actively working up and down the street or in the marketplace at that particular time.

Q And who creates those documents?

A Those would be created at the national or the regional level.

Q And who receives copies of those documents?

A The department managers and division managers would have a copy of them.

Q Now let me ask you about some other documents that sales representatives use in their work. What is a call book or a route book?

A A call book or a route book is - it's an output; it's a book that lists all of the retail stores, and it lists the direct accounts in a given area by the sales rep, a division manager, a department manager or regional manager could identify all the call activity for every store in a geographic area.

Q Who creates the route books or call books?

A They're created at the corporate level. A company called Fastech actually sends the output books to field sales.

Q Okay. And who receives copies of them?

A The corporate office receives a copy. The regional vice president receives a copy. The department manager receives a copy. The division manager receives a copy, and then the sales representative receives a copy.

Q What is a par scanner sheet?

A A par scanner sheet is - it's the profile activity reporting scanner, it's a document that is completed by the sales rep for every call that they make; and then that's the information that's tossed up the chain to profile the account information, and then that's the input that creates the call book that they receive as an output.

MR. KEYTE: Let me mark, Your Honor Freudenthal Number 3.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 3 is marked for identification.)

THE COURT: Please continue.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Who creates the par . . .

A Yeah. This is done by Fastech in our corporate office, or we have a profile activity reporting department that puts together this form and all the information that's contained on it.

Q And what is the purpose of the par scanner sheet?

A It's to collect - as you can see on the form, it's to collect information for retail stores and direct accounts and then to send the information up so that you could profile the environment or the retail activity and what the actual retail store looks like on a call book.

Q Okay. Now I'd like to focus - I think it's on the bottom of the par scanner sheet - there's a comment section. What's the purpose of the comment section on the par scanner sheet?

A Well, if there's anything that takes place in the retail store or an observation to collect anything out in the marketplace, the sales rep would have an area to write comments so then those comments could be shared with their division manager.

Q Who receives copies of the par scanner sheet, including the comment section?

A Each week the sales rep takes this three-part form, and they take the original, and they tear it off, and they mail it to Fastech, and then they send a copy of the form to their direct supervisor, which is their division manager; and then they keep a copy for themselves.

Q What happens if the U.S. Tobacco sales representative doesn't fill out the par scanner sheet and send it up the chain?

A Well, first off, if he doesn't fill out the par scanner, he'd not doing his job; and that's a requirement of his job is to send information on the par scanner to his immediate supervisor. If he doesn't send it in, it's really the same as not filling it out. It's required and disciplinary action be taken. It's a critical part of the job.

Q To whom - switching gears a little bit here - to whom does U.S. Tobacco sell its products?

A We sell our products to direct accounts.

Q What is a direct account?

A A direct account is - could be classified as a wholesaler or a distributor, and that's an account that we sell our Copenhagen and Skoal product to; and in turn, they're a supplier that sells to retailers, let them sell to consumers.

Q And what are the different types of direct accounts?

A There's - as I mentioned, there's wholesalers or distributors; and then there's chain accounts, and an example of a chain account would be if, for example - if the Circle K with a thousand stores out there, they bought directly from us, we would ship our product to them; and then they would, in turn, ship it to their stores versus a wholesaler/distributor that we would sell it to and then they would ship it to the retail stores.

Q Do U.S. Tobacco sales representatives sell products?

A No. They don't - they don't sell products. They sell promotions; they sell programs; they service the accounts.

Q What is their role with respect to servicing those accounts?

A They're implementers and executors. They take programs and promotions, and they provide service to the retailer. They execute the plans that are developed for them to put out into the market.

Q Is all that activity documented and sent up, up the chain of command?

A Yes, yes, yes. They're - you know, they gather the information that's asked of them on either reports or any type administrative forms; and again they're required to submit that to their immediate supervisor on up.

Q What is an authorization letter?

A An authorization letter would be a letter or instructions from a retailer to one of our - through one of our chain account managers or key account managers that would authorize U.S. Tobacco representative to perform a service in a store or to introduce a new product. It could be many different things, but it's an authorization from a retailer that says, I'm going to let you do this in my store and I want you to carry it out and let the - let my store managers know that these are - these are okay things to do.

Q Okay. So including retailers, who creates - who creates authorization letters and why?

A Well, it's - it's part of the key account management teams' and chain account managers' responsibility. They work with our chain account customers, and they develop the - they develop the presentations, the proposals for chain accounts and - which are retailers; and then they work to develop these authorization letters with those retailers.

Q Are sales representatives allowed to do their own authorization letters?

A No, they're not. As I mentioned, that's - that's really what the management team's all about. They put together the plans, and the sales reps execute.

Q So they just need the copy to get in the store?

A They need the copy to get in the store.

Q What is the . . .

A Keeps them out of harm's way.

Q Right. What is a retail transaction form?

A A retail transaction form is a form that the sales reps use in the - within their retail accounts that - there's various applications. But it's a form that they could use based on procedures of whatever the plan is that they're executing.

Q Okay. And who creates - who creates that form?

A That's created at the corporate level, and it's sent to all the field sales managers, and it's in - it's in duplicate copy for the retailer, for the sales rep, and for the division manager.

Q And that goes up the chain as well?

A It goes up the chain.

Q If an agreement were executed on a retail transaction form, what would a sales representative do with that form?

A They would give a copy of it to the retailer, and then they would assemble it with their week-ending paper work, and they would send it up the chain of command to their division manager.

Q And what are the consequences if he doesn't do that?

A If he doesn't do it, then he's not accurately reporting information that's happening in the retail store and he's not doing his job because he's responsible for reporting all transactions that take place out there to his immediate supervisor.

Q Without going into characterizations of documents, can you think of any type of document that could be described as an agreement that a sales representative would have with the retailer without sending a copy up the chain?

A No, I can't. That's what makes our organization so efficient is the procedures that we have in place is to let these sales reps go out and execute and implement and have a management team in place that's efficient to get things done.

Q Would that be against U.S. Tobacco Company policy?

A Yes, it would be.

Q What about incentive programs, for example, exchanging a Copenhagen hat for a vendor placement? How are those documented?

A There's a - there's a form for that, and that would be completed by the sales rep and the retailer, and then there would be a copy given to the retailer, and then the form itself would be sent to the company administrating the program and then the division manager.

Q Do U.S. Tobacco sales representatives do weekly or monthly reports?

A They may. That would depend on the sales area and what information somebody would want.

Q All right. Well, how do those sales representatives that are required to do it, how did they decide what goes into the report?

A Well, the report would be - would be similar to any of our other forms. Someone would create a report and list the topics that the information is requested from, and then the sales rep would be required to fill out that report and address those issues that are listed.

Q And who receives copies of the reports?

A Those reports would be generated to the division manager, department manager. They would go to the regional vice presidents and then on up to corporate.

Q In your experience, how do sales representatives put together their weekly or monthly report?

A If they - if they're asked to put together a report, then - in my experience in the field, that's what the comment section is provided for. Let's not create another piece of paper out there. Let's use exactly what we have, and that is the comment section. So if there's something happening in a retail store or in a given area, then the sales rep would write down whatever it is that's related to topics on his report that he's asked to fill out; and then he could use those comments to construct the report whenever it's requested.

Q And when you refer to the comments, you're referring to the comment section on the par . . .

A On the par scanner.

Q . . . scanner?

Did you work off of any notes when you did your own weekly or monthly reports other than the par scanner?

A Not other than the par scanner. I put all my notes down in the comment section, and that's - that's how I constructed any reports that were asked of me.

Q And in your experience, is it common for U.S. Tobacco sales reps to work off of notes not on the par scanner?

A Yes. It's to work off of the par scanner, and it's to construct your comments there. I mean it's a given place. It's a great point of reference because it also contains the information for that particular account, and that's a great area to do it. It would probably be a rare instance that someone would, you know, use a note pad or something to construct any type of report or documents asked of them.

Q And as a practical matter, if the sales rep decided to use a note pad rather than par scanner to construct his report, what would typically happen to his notes?

A They would probably be discarded because there's - there's enough things that he has to do - or she has to do, and the information is really what he or she is putting together, and that's all that they want to do. So they put together the information and fill it out on a report. Then they send it to their division manager and to the department manager, and there's no use for that information any more. They've already done what was asked of them.

Q Let me ask you about some of the other affidavits that were put before the Court last week.

(Off-the-record discussion between Mr. Keyte and the Court.)

Did you have an opportunity to review the affidavits submitted by plaintiff in this case last week?

A Yes, I had an opportunity to look at them.

Q Let me first ask you a few questions about the declaration of Mr. Williams, which I think is marked as Freudenthal Number 4.

Based on your review of Mr. Williams' description of Conwood's documentation of sales rep activity, is U.S. Tobacco's the same?

A Just reviewing this, no, I don't believe it's the same at all.

Q What are the primary differences?

A Well, we forward all our information. Everything's contained in an administrative form or report and it's sent up the chain of command; and it appears that in this affidavit, they aren't required to forward everything to their supervisors.

Q Let's look at the affidavit of Mr. Paulk, who was - it says in his affidavit that he was a representative, a sales rep at UST from 1981 until 1985. And if you could look at the documents listed in Paragraph 3 - and in particular, I'll just read them into the record. He references:

> " . . . a cash sale book, jobber information files [with a parentheses] promotional letters presented to wholesale buyers), and business correspondence."

My question is when you started in 1986, did sales representatives keep copies of these documents?

A Yeah, they would keep copies of the documents.

Q Okay. But did they also send copies up the chain?

A Yes. That's what they're required to do.

Q And if you look at the - let's look at the documents listed in Paragraph 4:

> " . . . personal notes on retail activity - [and again I have a hard time reading that.]

A It says:

> " . . . personal notes on retail activity, and records of payments to retailers . . ."

THE COURT: What's the personal notes? Is it some kind of activity report?

MR. KEYTE: Oh, I'm sorry. Unethical activity reports.

THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Again is it your understanding that when you joined in 1986, to the extent that any similar reports would have had a different name would - a copy would be kept by a sales rep?

A A copy would be kept by the sales rep, but it's his responsibility to make sure that he submits it to his division manager.

Q Now let's look at the affidavit of Mr. Jeffery, who was a part-time employee from 1997 to 1998, and I think also is apparently an employee of Conwood. It appears the only documents he references is in Paragraph 4, which are:

" . . . account listings and company updates."

Again just for the record, what's an account listing?

A You're asking my opinion of what he's referring to?

Q Yeah.

A I would say an account listing would be a direct account listing that would be maintained in the file, but that would be something that would be given to a sales rep from his management team.

And then company updates?

Q Uh huh.

A All of our manuals are updated on a regular basis from our corporate office, and they're sent down to all of our field sales managers and to our sales reps.

Q So just to summarize, do U.S. Tobacco sales representatives create any documentation, competitive activity at the retail level that is not copied up the chain of the sales force?

A No.

Q Okay. And do U.S. Tobacco sales reps receive any documents relating to carrying out the responsibilities that is not copied or - from the division department or region?

A No. Everything they get is from their managers.

MR. KEYTE: Thank you.

THE COURT: All right, Mr. Gorsuch, you may cross-examine the witness.

MR. GORSUCH: Good morning, Your Honor. Good morning, Mr. Freudenthal.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Good morning.

MR. GORSUCH: Before we begin, I just want to pass along Dick Roberts' apologies for not being able to be here today. He's preparing for trial in Paducah next week. So that explains his absence.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, are you aware that UST purported to introduce an affidavit from Mr. Milano last week?

A I've seen an affidavit from Mr. Milano.

Q And Mr. Milano is the head of sales nationally for UST, isn't that correct?

A He's the Vice President of Sales.

Q And that puts him in charge of the whole Sales Division in UST, isn't that correct?

A Yeah. He's responsible for that whole Sales Department.

Q Mr. Milano isn't here today, is he?

A No, I don't see him here today.

Q Where is Mr. Milano today?

A I don't know.

Q He was aware of this hearing, was he not?

A I don't know.

THE COURT: Mr. Gorsuch, in fairness, the Magistrate Judge tried to be clear in his order that he was not requiring Mr. Milano to be here, but . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, I didn't mean to suggest that. I am going to argue that the Milano affidavit, however, should be disregarded because I don't have the ability to cross-examine him, amongst other problems with it.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, isn't it true that UST field sales representatives keep track of how many Conwood facings they eliminate?

MR. KEYTE: Object as to . . .

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, I don't know anything about eliminating.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Are you aware of an e-mail from Mr. Milano, the head of sales nationally, to the regional sales managers in April of 1998?

A No.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, we'll mark what, I guess Freudenthal 6, is that correct?

THE COURT: Seven.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 7 was so marked for identification.)

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, this is an e-mail that was sent on April the 15th of 1998 from Gary Milano; and you're listed as one of the CCs on it, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And amongst other things, Mr. Milano said that he wanted the regional managers to stop sending in monthly reports that used terms such as:

"We have eliminated competitive brands,"

isn't that correct?

A I'd have to read the document if I could.

MR. KEYTE: Your Honor . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Please, go ahead. Take your time.

MR. KEYTE: Could I state an objection, please.

Right now we're now talking about things sent from the regional people to Gary Milano with respect to - frankly things that are going to - are heading towards the merits of the case. I just want to make sure we focus on what documents are found at the sales rep level that are not found elsewhere.

THE COURT: With all respect, Mr. Keyte, that's not a valid evidentiary objection but an argument. So let's let Mr. Gorsuch examine.

MR. GORSUCH: Just let me know when you've finished reading it, Mr. Freudenthal.

(Mr. Freudenthal continues reading.)

I'm just going to ask you about Paragraph listed Number 1.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Okay.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Isn't it correct that UST sales reps keep track of how many Conwood facings they've eliminated?

A No. My experience, they fill out a par scanner; and on the par scanner, it asks them what's the distribution and how many facings of competitive brands that are reported in the store.

Q Isn't it correct Mr. Milano was sending this out to the field to say he didn't want to receive any more monthly reports that use the terms such as:

"We've eliminated competitive brands . . ."

MR. KEYTE: Objection.

MR. GORSUCH: "We have had Timber Wolf discontinued [or] Our chain manager has Conwood facings reduced by X number."

THE COURT: I'll sustain the objection. I think that you're asking the witness what Mr. Milano had in mind.

MR. GORSUCH: Okay, I'll rephrase it.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Isn't it correct that he sent out an e-mail saying he didn't want any more monthly reports that Conwood facings are reduced by X number?

A It says, category management, we should use new terms, and it's our goal to make sure that we're using the correct terminology.

Q Had you seen Mr. Milano's affidavit?

A Yes, I have.

Q Okay. And isn't it true that sales representatives sometimes maintain personal calendars?

A It could be.

Q And that those calendars are not always forwarded to division managers, isn't that correct?

A Well, if they were maintaining a personal calendar, if it's a personal, meaning they're talking about their wife's birthday or their mom's birthday, I don't . . .

Q No, Mr. Freudenthal. I'm asking about calendars pertaining to their business activities. I'm not going to ask you about what they do in their social time.

Isn't it true that they sometimes maintain calendars . . .

MR. KEYTE: Objection, Your Honor. If he could let the witness answer the question.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q . . . that do not go to the division managers, isn't that correct?

THE COURT: Time out. There are too many people talking at once for the reporter to put it down - to take it down. So . . .

MR. GORSUCH: If I could finish my question.

THE COURT: If you'll ask your question again, I'll ask Mr. Keyte not to object while Mr. Gorsuch is phrasing a question and I'll ask that the witness let the questioner finish the question. That way we can - so let's start all over.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Isn't it correct sometimes UST sales representatives maintain calendars that pertain to their business work that are not always forwarded to division managers?

A No. The information that would be contained there would always be a record for something that they would submit to their division manager.

Q Mr. Freudenthal, I'm not asking you what's reflected in the division policy. I'm asking about those calendars. Do those calendars get forwarded to division managers all the time, yes or no.

A I wouldn't know what calendars you're referring to.

Q Okay. Well, I ask this be marked as Exhibit 8.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 8 was so marked for identification.)

Turn to Paragraph 5. Do you disagree with Mr. Milano that sometimes sales representatives keep calendars that aren't sent up to division managers?

A No. As I said, they may keep them. I don't know if they do or not.

Q The truth is you don't know what all 448 sales reps keep, do you?

A I don't know what they personally keep.

Q Right.

A I know what they're required to submit to corporate office and to their immediate supervisor.

Q But above and beyond what they're required to submit, you don't know what they keep, do you?

A No, I don't know what they keep.

Q And, in fact, you don't disagree with Mr. Milano they sometimes keep day books that go up - that don't go up to division managers, isn't that correct?

A No. I believe that everything that they're required to submit on behalf of the company . . .

Q Mr. Freudenthal, I'm just going to ask you to answer my questions.

A Okay.

Q And I may have to ask the Court for some guidance to get you to answer my questions. I hope we don't come to that. The question is very simple though.

Do you disagree with Mr. Milano there are day books that the sales representatives sometimes keep that are not sent to division managers? That's a yes or no.

A There could be.

Q In fact, you served as a sales representative for one year, isn't that correct?

A No, a year-and-a-half.

Q Year-and-a half. '86 to '87, is that correct?

A Correct.

Q So 12 years ago was the last time you served as a sales representative, isn't that right?

A As a sales representative, yes.

Q Okay. And in preparation for your testimony here today, did you e-mail the sales representatives, the 448 sales representatives, about what files they maintained?

MR. KEYTE: Foundation.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, I didn't.

THE COURT: Overruled. Please answer the question.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, I didn't e-mail because I . . .

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Did you send out a memo . . .

MR. REED: Your Honor, may the witness please answer?

MR. GORSUCH: Excuse me. Could I conduct my cross-examination?

THE COURT: All right, all right. We're going to take a five-minute break right now.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you, Your Honor.

AFTER RECESS

THE COURT: All right. Let's go back on the record here. Just a couple of guidelines for everybody.

First, our reporter is probably the most experienced court reporter in the Western District; but she cannot - even she, as able as she is, cannot record two people talking at once; and so please do not interrupt each other.

Secondly - this is probably not necessary - but a lot of objections and a lot of argument about the form of the question is not going to materially help us efficiently use the limited amount of time that we have, and I think I can sort out pretty well what's a good question and what's not a good question, and probably the best thing to do is to let it roll so we don't have to have colloquy from counsel about the form of the questions.

So let us continue.

MR. KEYTE: Understood, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Mr. Gorsuch, I have my supply of Hall's cough drops left over from last week.

MR. GORSUCH: I may have to indulge you on that, Your Honor. I'm in a bad way today.

THE COURT: Let us know. I would offer the same to UST.

MR. GORSUCH: I may, with the Court's indulgence, take an occasional sip of water.

THE COURT: If you need them, let her know. She's a full-service court reporter, especially if you don't interrupt anybody.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Let's just go quickly back to Exhibit Number 7, Mr. Freudenthal. Isn't it correct that Mr. Milano was sending this out to all the regional sales managers telling them he didn't want to receive any more monthly reports using terms such as, we have eliminated competitive brands?

A Yes.

Q And isn't it correct, Mr. Freudenthal, that Conwood - that UST sales representatives keep track of how many Conwood facings they eliminate?

A No.

Q You say that despite Mr. Milano's statement that future monthly reports shouldn't use terms such as, quote:

"Our chain manager has Conwood facings reduced by X number"?

A Well, he's referring to using terms; and the way that I understand the question is that not a practice and it's - in my opinion, it's not a practice that they report that.

Q I'm not asking what practice is. I'm asking what you know that they do.

And doesn't it suggest, Mr. Freudenthal, don't you know that they do keep track of how many facings they've reduced because Mr. Milano's talking about it?

A No, I'm not aware that they do.

Q Then again you just served as a sales representative for a year-and-a-half back in '86 and '87, isn't that right?

A Yes. I have 11 years of practical experience in every position in the field sales group.

Q That's very good, Mr. Freudenthal; but again, if you'd answer my questions, this would move along a little more quickly.

A Certainly.

Q And I asked you earlier whether you - whether you sent out a memo to sales representatives in anticipation of today's hearing asking what documents they keep in their files. You didn't do that, did you?

A I can't.

Q You can't send out a memo?

A You did not say that. You said if I sent an e-mail.

Q No sir, no sir. My question was - and I'm sorry to interrupt.

A Your question before we broke was e-mail.

Q Okay. My question now to you, sir, is did you send out a memo to the sales reps asking them what documents they maintained.

A No.

Q Okay. Did you call the sales reps to ask what documents they maintained?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you check their files to see what documents they maintained and to verify that all of them are reflected in the district offices?

A Not all.

Q Did you check more than one?

A I have over the course of the last year-and-a-half.

Q Okay. I'm asking you, in preparation for today's testimony, did you check more than one sales rep's files?

A No.

Q Okay. And in the month, over the month since the Court ordered discovery in this matter in December, has anyone at UST sent out a memo to sales reps asking what they keep in their files?

A That I don't know.

Q Okay. Do you know if anyone at UST has made any phone calls to sales reps asking what they keep in their files in the month?

A That I don't know.

Q Okay. Do you know in the month that's passed whether - that anyone else has checked sales reps' files to see what they maintain . . .

A

Q . . . and whether they're reflected at district managers?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Who did that?

A Ninety-five division managers, 16 department managers, and 5 regional vice presidents. That's their - that's their job description responsibilities, and they do it on a daily basis.

Q Do you have any documents or testimony from them here today to tell us that all the documents that their sales reps maintain are reflected in the district offices?

A I don't have a document other than referring to any of the policies and procedures.

Q Okay. You have policies. I'm asking whether, in fact, someone checked and found that all the documents are, in fact, maintained in the district offices. Did someone do that?

A If they were performing their job, they would.

Q Do you have any testimony or documents from them here today?

A I don't.

Q Okay. And do you know if Mr. Milano did any checking of sales representatives' files to see what they keep?

A That I wouldn't know.

Q You didn't talk with them about that in preparation for today, did you?

A No.

Q Okay. And you've had a chance to look at Mr. Paulk's affidavit, isn't that correct?

A Yes, I've looked at it.

Q I believe that's already marked as Freudenthal Exhibit . . .

A Five.

Q . . . 5.

With the Court's indulgence, I'm going to take a sip of water.

THE COURT: Sure.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q I refer you to Paragraph 4 of that declaration - and I'll just read it very quickly.

> "Based on my experience as a UST representative, it is my belief that some of these documents do not leave the possession of UST sales representatives. Such documents include unethical activity reports, personal notes on retail activity [activities], and records of payments to retailers (including jackets and free merchandise)."

Do you have any personal knowledge to dispute that Mr. Paulk, in fact, maintained such records that didn't go to division offices?

A Yes.

Q You know for a fact that Mr. Paulk sent all of his documents to divisional offices?

A Well, I would know for a fact that Number 4, it says:

"Based on my experience as a UST [Tobacco] representative . . .," and he lists some documents; and it says:

" . . . records of payments to retailers (including jackets and free merchandise).

Mr. Paulk was employed from 1981 to 1985, and that particular program didn't begin until the latter part of 1980.

Q Okay.

A So I . . .

Q 1980?

A Until the latter part of the '80s.

Q Okay. So you're saying Mr. Paulk's a liar?

A I don't know if he's a liar or not.

Q Well, that's my - that leads me to the question, do you know for a fact that he didn't retain any documents that didn't get sent to division offices? Do you know?

A I don't know Mr. Paulk's behavior.

Q In fact, you have no idea what records he maintained that didn't go to division offices, do you?

A From Mr. Paulk? No, other than what was required of him.

Q Okay. And again just to clarify, you don't know what documents sales representatives kept above and beyond what they were required to keep, isn't that true?

A Only U.S. Tobacco documents that they're required to send up, which would include all their materials.

Q And isn't it true that sales representatives are trained to keep files?

A The files that I've kind of outlined in the prior testimony, yes.

Q So, for instance, you even - you talked about in Freudenthal Exhibit 2 an excerpt from the Sales Operation Manual suggesting ten different file headings that sales representatives are supposed to maintain, isn't that correct?

A Well, they're not supposed to. They're suggested topic headings.

Q Okay. Suggested topic headings of files that they're supposed to maintain, isn't that correct?

A They are the headings for all the materials. This - basically these ten headings would be named for and capture every reporting form or administrative form or piece of paper that they are responsible for, and those are suggested topics, how to head those files to kind of organize some of their systems.

Q Okay. Mr. Freudenthal, real simple question: They are suggested by the company to maintain documents, isn't that correct?

A Those are suggested headings. They're required to submit all their documents.

Q I'm not asking what they're required to submit, sir. I'm asking what they're required to keep.

They are required to keep documents, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And these are the suggested headings on the files that they're supposed to keep, isn't that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And are you - you're familiar with Mr. Jeffery's affidavit, are you not, which was previously marked as Exhibit 6?

A I've looked at it.

Q Okay. And when he says that - in 5, Paragraph 5:

"At present, UST sales representatives have a custom built filing cabinet in their company vans for the purpose of maintaining documents for the territory they serve,"

you don't dispute that, do you?

A No. It's the car file that I described earlier.

Q Okay. Isn't is true that sales representatives visit approximately 50 stores per week?

A Approximately.

Q Okay. And there are approximately 500 stores in the territory?

A No.

Q Okay. How many stores are there?

A Approximately 3-- to 350.

Q Three to 350. UST doesn't have a policy against sales reps keeping personal notes to keep all of these hundreds of stores straight, does it?

A No, it doesn't. But we provide the filing systems and all the materials that they're required to do.

Q But as a matter of common sense, if the sales representative wants to have some personal notes to keep his 50 calls per week and his 350 stores in his territory straight in his own mind, there's no rule against that, is there?

A Why would I want to do that?

Q Sir, I'm not asking . . .

THE COURT: Answer - yeah. You're arguing with Mr. Gorsuch. Simply answer his question.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: He has everything that's needed and necessary to do the job for all the reporting. If he, in the rare instance, had a personal note somewhere that he had written down on a document, then he would have that information. But he would be capturing that information for some request.

THE COURT: Mr. Freudenthal, in fairness now to Mr. Gorsuch, the question, as the Magistrate Judge heard it, was would it be against UST policy or would it be improper for him to keep records; and if you could just give a simple answer to that question, we'll move along.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, it's not against the company policy.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q And, in fact, you've testified that the sales representatives are, quote, the eyes and the ears of the company, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Isn't it true that sales representatives from time to time make presentations to retailers concerning facings, displays, point-of-sale material, and price?

A They make presentations on promotions and sales programs.

Q I'm going to hand you what we'll mark Freudenthal Exhibit Number 9.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 9 was so marked for identification.)

My questions will pertain only to the second page and specifically the language:

"Make all necessary presentations on product promotions; facings; merchandisers; displays; positioning; programs; P.O.S. materials; and retail pricing [(EDLP)]. Use company marketing plans and training programs to prepare presentations. Anticipate possible objections and be prepared in all aspects of your presentation."

Do you see that language, Mr. Freudenthal?

A Uh huh.

Q So sales representatives are responsible for making presentations to retailers, isn't that correct?

A They make presentations to retailers.

Q And these presentations affect - face - the number of facings that - different than manufacturers are entitled to in a rack, isn't that correct?

A It may or may not. That would depend on the circumstances.

Q Okay. But that is one of the things the did presentations on, isn't that correct?

A On merchandising, yes.

Q Okay. And they give presentations on point-of-sale advertising materials, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then . . .

THE COURT: Let me ask a question, Mr. Freudenthal. This is just deep background to me and no mystery to it.

The word, facing, comes up a lot. I've read it in the papers. Give me a one- or two-sentence description of facing.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Sure. That would be - there would be a label that would identify a specific product, an SKU; and that would be a facing. So if you had ten products and they were identified as ten different products, then you would have ten facings. It's actually the face of whatever product it is that's out . . .

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q And, in fact, some of these presentations on facings involve how many facings should be allotted to UST products, how many should be allotted to rivals' products, isn't that correct?

A Most presentations are developed for merchandising for our products, how many products should that retailer manage on a profitability basis for that particular retail account; and that would be - that would be his whole category. That would be U.S. Tobacco products and all the competing brands on the market.

Q Okay. So the answer to the question, I believe, is yes?

A Would you repeat the question.

Q Okay. The question's very simple. Don't UST sales representatives give presentations on how many facings should be allotted to UST products and the competitors' products . . .

A We make recommendations, yes. That's what we do.

Q Okay. And isn't it true that sales representatives sometimes use materials that have come down from company marketing plans and training programs to prepare their own presentations, isn't that correct?

A They use all of the preapproved programs, yes, for their individual retailers.

Q Okay. And they sometimes create personal notes in anticipation of these presentations, don't they?

A They may have their notes for their presentation of what's going to be addressed for that particular account.

Q Okay. And there's nothing in any Sales Operation

Manual or elsewhere that requires those notes to be sent up, is there?

A Well, the presentations are always forwarded as complete documents back to any of the managers after a presentation so that everything that transpired within that presentation with the retailer and the division manager or a sales rep, it's all recorded as a formal presentation back to U.S. Tobacco.

Q Mr. Freudenthal, my question again is very simple.

A Uh huh.

Q There's no policy, is there, in the Sales Operation Manual or elsewhere requiring a sales representative to send up his personal notes that he created in anticipation of the presentation, is there?

A No. In those rare instances, I wouldn't see it.

Q Is it true that you were a department manager in Region 4 in 1997?

A Yes, part of 1997.

Q In January, 1997?

A Yes.

Q And didn't you report on January the 3rd, just three days into the year up to your regional manager that you had, quote:

> "Purged all the 1996 files and administrative paper work in the department's offices"?

A I don't recall.

Q Well, see if we can refresh your recollection.

A Thank you.

MR. GORSUCH: Mark this Exhibit 10.

(Freudenthal's Exhibit Number 10 was so marked for identification.)

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q I'll refer you to Paragraph 3.

A Uh huh, that's correct.

Q So three days into 1997, and you were able to report that you had purged all department office files, isn't that correct, for 1996?

A Correct. We take them out of the filing system in the storage room in the office, and we put them into file boxes, and we put them in the back storage room.

Q All right.

A Purge all the current files.

Q Aren't, in fact, documents destroyed?

A No.

Q You're saying you never destroyed any documents?

A No sir.

Q Okay. What's your document retention policy?

A As I understand it, it would be three-to-five years, maintain any of the working expense reports, any of the activities, any pertinent information that would be used in the future.

Q Okay. Isn't it true that there's nothing in the Sales Operating Manual that instructs sales representatives to purge their files on a periodic basis?

A That I don't know off the top of my head.

Q You're unaware of any rule telling sales representatives when to purge their files, aren't you?

A I'm not aware of anything to purge their files.

Q Are you aware that back in August we subpoenaed to receive documents and UST was made aware of this from a former sales representative, Sarah Weatherly at UST?

A No, I'm not.

Q Are you aware that she, in fact, maintained documents as far back as 1989?

A No, I'm not.

Q Are you aware of the fact that those documents cannot be found anywhere in UST's production at a department level or the regional level or otherwise?

A No. I find that surprising.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. You find it?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Surprising.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Well, if, in fact, you only maintain documents for three-to-five years in your present position but there are sales representatives who don't have any instructions about how long to maintain documents, isn't it quite possible that they maintain documents for longer than you do?

A But those would be all the documents that we maintain because they're required to send everything to us.

Q Right. But if you destroyed them in three-to-five years . . .

THE COURT: Mr. Gorsuch, don't point at the witness.

MR. GORSUCH: I'm sorry. I apologize.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. GORSUCH: No pointing fingers.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q If you destroy those - the documents that you created in three-to-five years, they could be in sales representatives' files for longer than that, couldn't they?

A Well, I didn't necessarily say they were destroyed. I said they were kept. That's what I answered, and they could be kept. They could be transferred up through the chain of command to the regional office.

MR. GORSUCH: May I approach the witness, Your Honor?

I don't think it's necessary to mark this exhibit. I'll just ask you where I can find, sir, whether these documents from UST . . .

MR. KEYTE: Your Honor, could I have a sidebar for a second.

MR. REED: Out of the hearing of the witness.

MR. KEYTE: I could raise the issue . . .

THE COURT: Well, let's let the Magistrate Judge raise an issue.

We're not going to take the time to have the witness go through a series of documents unless you can tell the Magistrate Judge that that's something that you know Mr. Freudenthal's personally familiar with. I don't think we have the time for him to review a stack of paper that's four or five inches thick. I don't know if that goes with the concern expressed.

MR. KEYTE: Your Honor, our concern is that we're in the process, as everybody in this courtroom knows, maybe with the exception of Mr. Freudenthal, of producing up to a hundred boxes from the department and division levels. This entire line of questioning, frankly, I think is premature and unfair.

THE COURT: Well . . .

MR. KEYTE: He's asking him if, based on documents he hasn't seen yet because he hasn't got - we've sent him twenty boxes today, we're in the process of producing the documents he's crossing him about.

THE COURT: Where are we going with this, Mr.

Gorsuch?

MR. GORSUCH: I'm almost finished.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: If we could just let me finish.

THE COURT: Why don't you rephrase your question.

MR. GORSUCH: I'll be happy to do that.

THE COURT: I lost track of what it was, but I'm disinclined to require the witness to look at anything that is that thick.

MR. GORSUCH: That's fine, Your Honor.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Is there - let me just ask you a couple more questions, Mr. Freudenthal.

On par forms, one of the copies is to be maintained for your records, isn't that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Specifically says it on the sheet, copy for your records, isn't that right?

A Uh huh.

Q Okay. And are you aware of what Fastech's document-retention policy is with regard to these par forms?

A No, I'm not.

Q Are you - do you know that they actually only keep them for about two years?

THE COURT: I think he just said he didn't know what that policy was.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q And again just to clarify, the sales representatives, there's no policy forbidding them from keeping documents much longer than that, is there?

A No. They're encouraged to maintain what's active at the time that they need.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Any redirect?

MR. KEYTE: Yeah, just a couple of questions, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Just so everybody knows where I'd like to go with this, assuming that your redirect is limited and that any recross is equally limited, when we get through with Mr. Freudenthal, if there are no other witnesses, I'd like to take a break and then come back and have counsel briefly argue the issue of whether a thorough and complete search should include the sales representative. I'll give you a chance to collect your thoughts and . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Just so Your Honor's aware . . .

THE COURT: With some luck, I may be able to give you a ruling.

Yes sir?

MR. GORSUCH: You asked if there are no more witnesses.

THE COURT: Yeah.

MR. GORSUCH: We do have witnesses available by telephone, Your Honor . . .

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: . . . if you'd like. I don't believe it's necessary.

THE COURT: Let's just continue on.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, if you could look at the Milano affidavit, Paragraph 5, and let me read into the record the complete sentence.

> "To the extent that any Sales Representative keeps calendars or day books, and retains them, these are not likely to reflect competitively significant information, which, as described above, is forwarded to the Division Managers through other means."

Do you understand that paragraph when it referred to calendars or day books to reference personal calendars?

A If they had any calendars that they maintained, yeah, that would be something that they would have.

Q And do you agree with Mr. Milano that personal calendars are not as a practical matter likely to reflect competitive information?

A I agree. They're - that information would be documented on a par scanner and reported on a monthly status report.

Q In your experience, as a practical matter, do sales representatives know that competitive information is either supposed to be on the par scanner or in their weekly or monthly report?

A We give them a place to put it; and any information that we need, it's captured on the par scanner. If there's any questions for monthly reports, then they would answer those questions and send it to their division department members.

Q Mr. Gorsuch also asked you about the fact that sales reps keep copies of documents, and I think he suggested that they may not be kept as long at the division or department level. In your experience, as a practical matter, how long do sales reps keep documents?

A Well, this is - the first scanner is the documents that they use most frequently, and they use that with every call. They would retain the copy of this scanner until they received their new call books and - at which time the information is already updated.

And if there was a mistake in the reporting system, which is highly unlikely, then they could look at the par scanner to make sure all their information is accurate and at which time they would discard their copy because as I was asked how many calls did they make if they're covering 3-- to 350 calls a cycle, that could be five-to-six weeks, they're going to have a lot of paper; and it's all going to be contained here.

So they're already getting recaps of the information, and they get rid of the scanners.

Q Let me ask you about personal notes with respect to presentations.

Again as a practical matter, would any such notes be kept by sales reps, in your experience?

A My experience is no. Their - we solicit input from the sales reps for their accounts; and the business that we're going to present to a retailer, we contain that in the presentation. Anything that is written down after a presentation with a retailer would have been written down on the presentation that they have in some form or fashion, assimilated into that report; and that's what the chain account managers or key account managers keep.

Q And finally, with respect to keeping copies of documents, as a practical matter, what is your experience with sales reps - and I'll use this word - purging documents versus the different levels up the chain at UST keeping documents? As a practical matter, who keeps them longer?

A They're not required to keep all this information. They're required to report the information. So they report the information, and then it's compiled up the chain through division and department and regional vice presidents, the information. So they only retain it for the period of time that they're actively doing it, and then they discard it.

MR. KEYTE: No more questions.

THE COURT: Any recross?

MR. GORSUCH: Nothing, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. Mr. Freudenthal, thank you. You may step down.

You ever been a witness before?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No.

THE COURT: You don't have to tell me.

Why don't you take that file back.

I'm disinclined to hear any witnesses by telephone unless there - somebody can tell me really urgent reasons to do so.

What I'd like to ask you to do, unless someone has a contrary thought, is to take - you know, it's now 20 to 12 - take ten minutes and organize your thoughts as to your observations that you want to make in pulling all this argument together, and it doesn't have to be simply what Mr. Freudenthal said, but what you think are the salient points in deciding this discovery-related issue.

And then I'll hear - I'll hear from Mr. Gorsuch first since it's his motion to compel, in effect. Then I'll hear from UST; and if I'm able, I will give you a ruling from the bench. I will try to do that, but I'm not promising.

MR. KEYTE: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Take ten minutes.

AFTER RECESS

THE COURT: Let's ask each side to sum up its arguments with respect to what I will call the sales-representative issue. If you could take no more - you know, five minutes probably would be adequate. Don't go more than ten.

The reason I say that is that I need to be off the bench by 12:30 or 12:25, which gives us about a half an hour; and I'd like to have a chance to think about your arguments and, if I'm able, give you a ruling from the bench.

So Mr. Gorsuch.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you, Your Honor.

Would you like to hear from me here or from the podium?

THE COURT: I'd like to hear from you wherever it is you are not going to collapse from the flu.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you.

Back in December, December the 18th, the Court recognized the importance of grass-roots documents in this case; and, in fact, if you look at the complaint, the allegations in our complaint all deal with the conduct by UST sales representatives in the field.

Under Rule 26, we're entitled to all documents that are likely to be discovered admissible evidence. I think there are only two plausible arguments for not producing sales arguments - sales reps' documents, and we've only heard two.

One is that they don't retain any original documents, and two is that it's overly burdensome to produce those original documents. I'd like to address each of those in turn.

The primary argument as near as I can tell from the defendants is the first one, that there just aren't any original documents at the sales rep level. Look at the Milano affidavit itself. He nowhere says there are no original documents at the sales rep level. In fact, he admits there are at least two categories of documents, calendars and call books, that are maintained at the sales rep level and may be kept by sales reps that don't get to the district office.

Defendants have had a month to look into this issue. That's more than adequate time. We can see from this Document Number 7, and Mr. Milano didn't cut the mustard, and this is the same fellow who, in fact, not only admits that there are some documents but specifically sent out an e-mail to the field telling them that he didn't want to hear any more - get any more documents saying that we've eliminated Conwood facings. That's pretty strong evidence there's stuff down there at the sales rep level that's not percolating up.

Mr. Freudenthal here today doesn't and can't and hasn't testified that as a matter of personal knowledge there are no documents at the sales rep level. He was a sales rep for a year-and-a-half over 12 years ago. In the last month, neither he nor anyone else at UST has done any checking with the sales representatives personally to gain personal knowledge as to what they maintained with the exception of looking at one sales representative's van.

He admits - Mr. Freudenthal admits that he doesn't know what documents sales representatives keep above and beyond what they're minimally required to keep by UST policy. He admitted that repeatedly in cross-examination, Your Honor; and he admitted that Milano's right, they may maintain calendars and day books.

And Your Honor, when you're visiting 50 stores a day and 300 to 350 in your territory, it's a matter of common sense you're going to maintain some personal notes on those sales calls and your interactions that aren't reflected in corporate documents. That's something Terry Williams says has been in this industry for twenty years and says in his affidavit. That's not disputed. That's not disputed that they maintain those notes. There's no policy against it.

And Your Honor, we all maintain documents above and beyond what we're minimally required to keep. I can't think of anyone who doesn't do that. And all Mr. Freudenthal can tell you about it is the documents that they're minimally required to keep go up. That's all he can tell you.

He also admits that presentations affecting our distribution, which are at the heart of the case, presentations on agreements that lock up the racks and the facings and allocate space that UST had spaced to Conwood, and at the heart of the case, Paragraph 28 of the complaint, he admits that there are sometimes, it's possible that sales reps keep personal notes on these things, customize and tailor the UST presentation materials. He admitted that these personal notes may not go up.

Mr. Freudenthal also admitted that documents which - even the documents which do come from the regions are retained for three-to-five years at the regional level. And yet he also admitted that there's no document-retention policy or instruction policy for sales representative documents.

And I will represent to you, Your Honor, back in August, just to give you one example, we subpoenaed one former UST sales representative, Sarah Weatherly. UST knows about this; they've known about it since August. She kept documents back to 1989. What is that, ten years ago. These documents, a lot of them are from regional headquarters, Your Honor.

We haven't found them in the regional headquarter production. Mr. Keyte knows that he has made production at the regional headquarters offices. He's correct, the departmental and division manager offices are still being searched. But there are documents in here that should have been found in the regional offices, Your Honor, but were not. They came from the regional offices but were not. And the answer, found out today, is because they're only kept at the regional office for three-to-five years and sales reps may keep them longer.

So even for those documents - and Your Honor, those include these critical par forms, which you've heard a lot about. These record how many - I mean this is critical stuff. It records how many facings each side has in each store across the country, price and all that.

And you heard from Mr. Freudenthal about this comment form at the bottom, which is the basis of all their reports. All subsequent reports - and we discussed at length how critically important these are. Well, they're only maintained at the regional offices for three-to-five years.

We know from Fastech that it doesn't even get the comment form; and if you'll look at it, you'll see that what goes to the comment form goes to the direct supervisor and the other is retained for your records. So it's only going to be in two places. One is the supervisor who keeps it for three-to-five years, and the other is the sales rep, who we have proof, Your Honor, keep documents longer in some cases. And there's no policy forbidding them from doing so.

So the most critical comment forms that Mr. Freudenthal testified at length about are likely to be found in the sales representative files and only in the sales representative files.

Your Honor, I respectfully suggest that under Rule 26, it's pro disclosure. The presumption is in favor of disclosure, and UST has not met any kind of burden in showing you there are no original documents at the sales rep level.

Let me just address very quickly a few more points before I get to the burden issue. I don't think we had to do anything, but we have done something affirmatively. We've presented an uncontroverted affidavit from Mr. Paulk saying that he did, as a practical matter, retain documents on his retail activities that did ont go to the district level office; and he's sitting by his phone here this morning in California. We didn't call him in from California, but he's supposed to sit by the phone until 1:00.

THE COURT: His subpoena is pretty old.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, with respect, two things on that. Mr. Freudenthal's is just as old, number one. So if you're going to discredit somebody, you've got to discredit the other on that basis. They're even; it's a wash.

And number two, Mr. Freudenthal says things haven't changed since 1986. That's throughout his testimony on direct, Your Honor.

So Mr. Paulk could testify - and he's prepared by phone to tell you one of the things he did - and I'll just make this proffer - is frequently . . .

THE COURT: I really don't want to hear any proffer about . . .

MR. GORSUCH: That's fine, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I really want to keep it to argument because then they may feel that they need to put Mr. Freudenthal on, and then the door is open again.

MR. GORSUCH: That's fine, Your Honor. I take you on that. I just want you to know he's prepared to elucidate on his affidavit and explain to you . . .

THE COURT: Talk to me about burden.

MR. GORSUCH: Okay.

THE COURT: And I'm not trying to cut you short, but I am trying to manage our time. We've plowed a fair amount of ground pretty repetitively, so talk to me about burden. Then I want to hear from Mr. Keyte.

MR. GORSUCH: Okay. Your Honor, on burden I want to say a few things. First, there is no burden here because we're willing to do it for them; and we've been saying we've been willing to do it for them for months; and we'll get it done in three weeks, Your Honor. So there can't be any burden when they don't have to do it - when they don't have to lift a finger.

Second, burden is an argument that is equitable in nature. You have to look at what's on the other side of the balance. In this case, we have alleged the complaint is specifically alleged about the activities of these individuals in the marketplace. It would be extraordinary for you not to permit discovery of the documents of the alleged bad actors. These are the people who carry out the bad acts.

Now I cannot think of any case in which the Court has not permitted discovery or any authority for the proposition that the people who are alleged to have done the wrong are immune from discovery.

Your Honor, this is a $400,000,000 lawsuit before trebling. It contains serious allegations of misconduct. So when you - when you talk about burden and you're going to talk about fairness, on one side, you have to go look at 400 people's files. On the other hand, this is the most direct evidence available on what these people have done. They are the alleged wrongdoers. It is a $400,000,000 case alleging wrongdoing for over the last twenty years across the country.

And finally, Your Honor, the third point on burden is that the burden really is on us at this point. We've been seeking these documents since forever, as you're aware; and UST could have - could have made this production a lot easier. They could have done it over the course of time. They could have done it in conjunction with sales meetings which they hold from time to time, regional sales meetings, national sales meetings. That's what we did, Your Honor. They've known about this lawsuit. They've known that we've wanted these documents for months - for a year almost.

So if they're going to tell you it's going to be so burdensome for us to have to do it in the next three weeks, well, you know, it might. But the fact of the matter is, they caused this train wreck and they have to live with that; and we're the ones who are really going to wind up suffering from the train wreck, Your Honor, because there's an April 1 deadline for the close of depositions, and we are bound and determined to do everything we can to keep to keep this case on schedule.

But they have yet to even produce their division and department managers' files, which you ordered over a month ago. We're going to be behind the eight ball when we get - if and when we ever finally get these sales rep files, process them, and get them produced. So . . .

THE COURT: I don't have as many stripes as Chief Justice Rehnquist does, but I think I'm going to have to . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Okay. Those are my burden

arguments, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: Last point?

THE COURT: Right.

MR. GORSUCH: Last point.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: Fastech's independent findings. They've made independent findings, Your Honor, that there are original documents that are not centrally maintained. You asked the other day, well, aren't they just the vendor seeking to sell something? You're right, they are; and, in fact, they're trying to sell an automation program to get the sales reps laptops so that this problem may continue. UST bought it. They're now distributing laptops to their sales force. So they've endorsed those findings, Your Honor. I suggest you don't have to make any independent findings yourself.

So I'm finished.

THE COURT: All right, Mr. Keyte.

MR. KEYTE: And I think I'm going to be briefer than five minutes.

THE COURT: That's fine. Brevity is always appreciated.

MR. KEYTE: First, with respect to Fastech, that, of course, wasn't even risked to be part of the cross-examination. So I don't think we need to put any weight on that.

Ultimately Rule 26, as the Court has observed I believe in the past, is a practical test that balances the likelihood of plaintiff obtaining additional probative documents versus the burden of having to try and find them and process them.

What has the plaintiff shown here? Ultimately plaintiffs' showing is really just conjecture that there may be handwritten notes on calendars. There may be notes with respect to presentations that may have been kept even though there are policies and procedures firmly in place and enforced to make sure that competitive information goes up the chain from the sales rep to the division and on forward. Those are the par scanner sheets with the Comment section and the monthly report.

I agree that Mr. Paulk's affidavit - and he is not here for us to cross live with documents - I think cannot be relied on. It is not a wash with Mr. Freudenthal, we submit, who has been at every stage of the sales rep organization up through 1997, 11 years, who is out in the field looking at what sales rep documents have. He testified that division and department managers' job is to make sure they bring up into the chain the competitively relevant information.

It is a scavenger hunt to see - to try to find out whether a particular sales rep in their personal calendar may have scheduled something and made a comment. They - the practical experiences, they don't put competitive information there because they have to do it somewhere else anyway, and there's nothing really to rebut that that they've shown.

What have we shown? One, that we are not like Conwood. We don't - the structure is not the same. The reporting requirements are not the same. The documents are not the same. How they track competitive activity is not the same, and clearly where the documents have to go from the sales rep up the chain is not the same.

If you compare what is being produced - has been produced and is being produced at the division and department level with respect to par scanner sheets, weekly and monthly reports with the prospect of the potential that there might be a written note here and there, it is clear that with respect to the merits issues and relevant documents, they will have the probative information they need to pursue their case.

The direct evidence that Mr. Gorsuch refers to is not going to be the personal note in the calendar. It's going to be the information in the par scanner sheets and the reports going up, and that's been our position throughout, and I think that is really uncontroverted here today at the hearing.

Even with respect to Sarah Weatherly, it is - we have - there is yet to be a production at the division and department level. It's under way, and it's premature to make those kind of arguments, and it also - I guess the suggestion is that we have to go look for the occasional pack-rat who may keep something and may keep something longer than the division or department even though, as a matter of practical experience, these guys and women are very busy. They don't like to keep documents. It's hard enough to get them to fill the reports out that they have to, and those are where the probative information is going to be found.

So with respect to the merits before we even get to the burden, I don't think there's been a showing that these documents are likely to be - add probative information - information, in this case, beyond what has been produced and what is being produced.

With respect to the burden, there are 448 reps. They do work out of vans. They already have the burden of putting the relevant documents on a weekly and monthly basis up the division to the departments and to the regions. There is, by the way, no e-mail to direct them what to do.

It would be extremely disruptive and burdensome to have these 448 reps have to search their documents, produce their documents on the prospect that there might be a handwritten note that is - that reflects competitive information rather than personal information and that is not on a par scanner or in a monthly report. It's conjecture, and it's really not credible.

So, Your Honor, I think when you balance that burden versus the prospect of obtaining additional probative information, I think the balance is zero or near zero with respect to the prospect of additional probative information and quite high with respect to the burden in this case. And for those reasons, we would request that the order be denied.

THE COURT: All right. Here's what I'm going to do. You all just sit tight for a couple of minutes. I've been banging away on my laptop, and I want to pull my notes together, and I'm going to give you a ruling rather than making you leave and come back. If you'll just sit still, I'll give it to you in a minute.

AFTER RECESS

THE COURT: I'm going to grant the motion to compel to the following extent: I'm going to order that UST conduct a search of the records of its sales representatives and produce the following categories of documents:

Number one, any notes or personally maintained documents, such as planners, notes, journals, written summary of activities that relate to the specific anti-competitive activities that are alleged in Paragraphs 22 through 31 of the complaint. The complaint sets out what those are.

One of the concerns that the Magistrate Judge has about the discovery - and this is not a criticism but just an observation - some of the requests by Conwood are quite broad. I think it is fair to inquire if there are individual records of the sales representatives that go to the specific anti-competitive allegations that are alleged to have occurred and that may, if true, involve field activity, those are set out in the complaint.

Secondly, I will order the production of any regularly maintained competitive records that, whether they go up the chain of command or not, from 1995 back. I listened to Mr. Freudenthal, and he said that the corporate retention policy was three-to-five years.

Taking the most aggressive version of that and assuming that everything that has been regularly sent up the chain in the last three years from the divisional or the regional offices, it's fair to look in the records of the sales representatives from 1995 back. So I will order that.

I want to give you some of the reasons for this, and I will do something in writing; but because we have wanted to get these rulings out quickly, I want to give it to you.

First, I think that UST has difficulty, I think, of proving a negative. Mr. Freudenthal got up and testified to what the regular course of business is, and the Magistrate Judge doesn't have any reason to doubt the accuracy of the regular course of business.

However, what may happen and what may be the regular chain of command does not disprove the possibility of - which is a real one - that individuals keep other records. And ordinarily in corporate litigation, it's altogether fair to look not just in the ultimate corporate repository but in other places where records may be kept. And certainly day planners, notes, journals, things like that that may reflect activities that the plaintiff alleges to be anti-competitive may well be retained or created; and I think it is fair to look, especially given the fact that this is an anti-trust case of no small scope.

I listened very carefully to Mr. Freudenthal's testimony. He talked about what the policy is of sending things up the chain of command, and I'm sure that that's an accurate summary of how UST wants the documents to flow so that its management can understand things. But it doesn't disprove the distinct possibility that sales representatives may have relevant information.

When all is said and done, a lot of this has to do with Rule 26, and Rule 26 does say that the information sought need not be admissible at trial if it may lead to discovery of admissible evidence. There's a distinct possibility that reviewing these materials may lead to discovery of witnesses who the plaintiff wishes to depose. What they may say, how credible they are, whether the information helps one side more than the other, the Magistrate Judge knows not at all. But I think, without looking at that material, it's not possible to tell.

As to the burden, the Magistrate Judge would make the following observations:

I hear the argument that there are 448 people. I tried to address that by giving some scope in the course of this order to what needs to be reviewed. I don't think that there is a compelling argument that the burden here of going to these people to look for their individual records is of a scope that it would - that it would negate the ability to discover this kind of material.

I have no opinion - no insight at all as to the merits of this litigation. I don't know if the plaintiff is altogether wrong, a little bit right, or right big time or somewhere in between.

If the plaintiffs' allegations are true, as to which the Magistrate Judge has no opinion at all, then the people in the field who engage in the activities which the plaintiff believes are wrongful would indeed be knowledgeable witnesses and may well have records; and I think that on the basis of the record that is in front of this Court, I am not able to say under Rule 26 that UST should not be required to look for those documents.

So that's the Court's ruling. I will try to do something in writing; but because we have a reporter here today and I know this is an important issue, I'm going to rule based on that; and I do now need to excuse myself.

I know that there are other issues that are out there. What I'm going to ask counsel to do is to go back to the - what I would call the joint-agenda approach. It worked the last time. I'll ask Mr. Keyte and Mr. Gorsuch or whatever pairing seems to work to make up a joint list and - what's today, Monday - say by Thursday submit that to the Magistrate Judge as to what issues remain unresolved.

I know that I took under submission an issue that related to discovery, I think, of some research and development costs because I told you that I thought I needed to look at case law. I feel relatively confident that, given the number of papers that are here on the bench, that there are other things that need to be addressed. But what I'd like to do is to get the joint agenda from you all, look at that, and then figure out what we do next.

So that will be the ruling. I do think that this has been useful, to get Mr. Freudenthal. Good to meet you, Ms. Weiss. And when I get that joint agenda, I will have a telephone-status call as to where we go from here with counsel, which probably won't be till next week because I'm starting a five-day jury trial tomorrow.

So thank you all very much.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you, Your Honor.

MR. KEYTE: Thank you, Your Honor.

AT THIS POINT, THE PROCEEDINGS WERE ADJOURNED.

THE CAPTIONED MATTER WAS CALLED IN OPEN COURT AT THE HOUR OF 10:05 A.M., ON JANUARY 19, 1998; AND THE FOLLOWING PROCEEDINGS OCCURRED:

THE COURT: Mr. Golden, would you call the case, please.

CLERK OF THE COURT: Conwood Company v. United States Tobacco Company, Civil Action Number 5:98-cv-108-R.

THE COURT: All right. Good morning, everyone.

MR. GORSUCH: Good morning, Your Honor.

MR. REED: Good morning, Your Honor.

MR. KEYTE: Good morning, Your Honor.

THE COURT: The Court recognizes Mr. Gorsuch and Mr. Powell for the plaintiff, Conwood; and for United States Tobacco, Mr. Reed and Mr. Athanasia and Mr. Keyte; and we are here as a continuation of proceedings we've had on discovery-related issues; and last week, the Court requested that UST bring a highly knowledgeable person who could speak to the issue about where and whether documents are kept at the sales or field level and that the reason the Court did that was simply that it was apparent to the Court that there was a good deal of disagreement between the parties as to whether the sales personnel had relevant documents in their possession. And given the nature of the case and the possible importance of the issue to discovery, the Magistrate Judge simply thought that the best thing to do would be to hear from someone. Affidavits can be useful, but sometimes live testimony is the best way to try and resolve a factual conflict.

The Magistrate Judge wants to be very clear that the Court has no predilection or inclination as to what the facts will show here; but I thought that, rather than having an affidavit-based decision, we'd just hear from someone.

So Mr. Keyte, I take it . . .

MR. KEYTE: Yeah.

THE COURT: I see some new faces.

MR. KEYTE: Let me introduce two new faces. First, on your right is Martha Weiss, the senior corporate counsel of U.S. Tobacco.

THE COURT: Good morning, Ms. Weiss. We heard your name last week when we were scurrying around on the phone.

MR. KEYTE: And then Kevin Freudenthal, who will be our witness, who is the Director of Trade and Marketing for U.S. Tobacco.

THE COURT: Maybe you could spell that for the court reporter.

MR. KEYTE: Sure.

COURT REPORTER: I have it.

THE COURT: She has it, okay, all right.

MR. KEYTE: So whenever you'd like to begin.

THE COURT: Unless someone has some procedural comment, the Court's inclination is to let UST put on testimony of Mr. Freudenthal. Did I say that right?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Yes sir.

THE COURT: And we'll give Conwood, of course, the opportunity to cross-examine; and then we'll have a better factual record from which to determine whether the plaintiffs' contention that discovery ought to be extended to the sales level is correct.

MR. KEYTE: Okay. U.S. Tobacco calls Mr. Freudenthal.

THE COURT: All right. If you'll come forward and be sworn, sir.

KEVIN EUGENE FREUDENTHAL, DEFENDANTS' WITNESS, SWORN

DIRECT EXAMINATION

THE COURT: Okay, Mr. Freudenthal, if you'd spell your name for me.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Okay. Well, certainly. It's F as in Frank . . .

Q Yes sir.

A . . . r-e-u . . .

Q Right.

Q Very good.

THE COURT: Now people often want to look at me, and you'll get a stiff neck if you do that. You can just look at Mr. Keyte and . . .

MR. KEYTE: And if the Court has a question . . .

THE COURT: Yeah. If I have a question, I'll address you; but I don't want you to have to turn around like that.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Great.

THE COURT: Mr. Keyte, you may proceed.

DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Please state your name for the record.

A Kevin Eugene Freudenthal.

Q What is your current position at U.S. Tobacco?

A I'm Director of Trade and Marketing.

Q And briefly describe your responsibilities in that position.

A I'm responsible for developing sales and marketing programs and promotions.

Q How long have you been employed by U.S. Tobacco?

A A little over 13 years.

Q And what was your first position there?

A I started as a sales rep in January of 1986.

Q And briefly explain to the Court what other positions you held at U.S. Tobacco between 1986 and the present.

A As I mentioned, I started as a sales rep in 1986; and then I was promoted to a Division Manager in 1987, and then I was promoted to a Chain Account Manager in 1988, and then I was promoted to a Regional Marketing Manager in 1990, and then I was promotion to Department Manager in 1993, and then I was promoted to Director of Trade and Marketing in 1997.

Q So to summarize, you were in the U.S. Tobacco sales force for approximately 11 years?

A Yes.

Q And you were elevated about a year-and-a-half ago to your current position?

A Correct.

Q Please briefly describe for the Court the basic organizational structure of the U.S. Tobacco sales force.

A The company is very organized out in the field. The sales rep reports to a division manager, and a division manager reports to a department manager, and a department manager reports to the Regional Vice President, who reports to the Vice President of Sales.

Q How many sales reps did you supervise as a division manager?

A As a division manager, six.

Q And how many sales reps did you supervise as a department manager?

A Approximately 30.

Q And do you still work in the field today in your current position?

A Yes, I do. My job description calls for developing various sales and marketing promotions and programs, and 40 percent or thereabouts, field sales, travel and interaction in the marketplace.

Q Is the organizational structure of the U.S. Tobacco sales force essentially the same now as it was when you were promoted in 1997?

A Yes, it is.

Q What are the responsibilities of the division managers with respect to documenting the activities of the sales representatives?

A The division managers are the team leaders. They're responsible for insuring that all the proper administrative forms are completed and that all the information is sent to them so that they can send it up the chain of command.

Q And what are the responsibilities of sales representatives in documenting their own activities?

A Our sales reps are the eyes and ears of the company out there. They're required to follow procedures and report on administrative forms and reports and send everything to their immediate supervisor, who is their division manager.

Q And based on your experience, do you have an understanding as to what types of documents are used by U.S. Tobacco sales representatives in carrying out their responsibilities?

A Yes sir.

Q Are you familiar with the vans used by U.S. Tobacco sales representatives?

A Yes, I am.

Q And when was the last time you looked inside one of these vans?

A I had the opportunity to look into a sales rep's van yesterday.

Q Okay. And why did you do that?

A Well, I wanted to just take a look and see if the van set-up today is the way it has been over the course of my experience; and it has.

Q And when you're out in the field, in your current work, did you have occasion to look at the vans and how they're set up in other parts of the country as well?

A Yeah. That's part of my responsibility is getting out and working with sales reps and division managers and department managers and working with them in their environment.

MR. KEYTE: Let me - Your Honor, I would like to mark - I don't how you want to do procedurally. I'd like to mark a couple of exhibits.

THE COURT: Why don't you mark them and hand them to the Court if you have copies to make available.

MR. KEYTE: Okay. I'll just call them Freudenthal 1 and . . .

THE COURT: That would be fine.

MR. KEYTE: . . . if that's acceptable.

Let me mark as Freudenthal Exhibits 1, 2, and 3.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Numbers 1 A, B, and C (group exhibit) were so marked for identification.)

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, are these pictures of the van you looked at yesterday?

A Yes.

Q And could you just explain to the Court what the three pictures are, of what parts of the van?

A Sure. A that's listed on the bottom, that would be the rear of the van; and that's where the sales rep would carry their various car-stock product, Copenhagen and Skoal and some POS materials and their supplies, back there.

THE COURT: Is that a Chrysler-made van? What kind of mini-van is that?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: This is a . . .

THE COURT: It doesn't really matter. I'm just trying to . . .

MR. FREUDENTHAL: This is an Aerostar.

THE COURT: Aerostar.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: So that the back of the hatch comes up.

THE COURT: It's not a Silhouette, is it?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Pardon me?

THE COURT: It's not the Silhouette. You know, that's the Cadillac.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, no, no.

MR. KEYTE: It doesn't appear to be.

THE COURT: That's a reference to a movie. You may continue.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No. That's the back of an Aerostar; and as you can see, there's two handles; and those trays actually move in and out of the van so they can access the materials easily.

MR. KEYTE: All right.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: And then B is the side door that's a sliding door; and as you can see, there's a seat, a bench seat, in there; and that's where the sales rep would carry any larger point-of-sale items or displays or promotions.

And then C is the front of the van, which would have the driver's and passenger's seat; and in the middle, there's a little console there.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Okay. And is that commonly referred to as a car file?

A Yeah.

Q And what is a - briefly describe what a car file is.

A It's a piece of wood furniture. It's about 8 inches wide by maybe 14 - 12, 14 inches long, and that's where the sales rep would keep some files and their manuals.

Q And did you have an opportunity to talk to the sales rep who uses the van you were talking about yesterday?

A Yes.

Q And what did you talk to him about?

A I just - you know, I just asked him a couple of questions in looking at his van to really see - look at the organization and see if it's how I remember, and it is. I'm out in the field, as I mentioned, all the time; and I looked at it back - what my experience was as a sales rep and just point of reference and clarify and make sure it's the same.

Q Okay. And did you review the types of documents that he creates or receives and are kept in the car file?

A Yeah. We briefly talked about, you know, some of the things that he carries in his own van.

Q Okay. And has much of anything changed since you left the retail sales force in 1997?

A No.

Q Okay. And in your experience, would these vans or the car files be significantly different in any other parts of the country?

A No. As I mentioned, you know, the opportunity that I have is I got to get out and see different parts of the country. So I had an opportunity to work with different sales reps.

MR. KEYTE: Now I'd like to mark as Freudenthal Number 2, a page out of the Sales Operations Manual that was referenced.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Could you identify for the record what this exhibit

is?

A Yeah. It's a suggested topic list of different car files for the sales rep to carry in his van.

Q And is that found in the Sales Operation Manual?

A Yes, it is.

Q I'll walk you through some of these items.

Before I do that, is the van that you looked at yesterday, did it contain the type of documents that are listed here in the exhibit?

A Uh huh, yes.

Q Let's go through it for the Court. The first item listed there is Direct Accounts. What would be found in the Direct Account file?

A That would be Direct Account listing, which would include the name of our direct accounts and address.

Q Is there any other information that would be on that document?

A No, it's really a direct account listing of all the direct accounts in a particular assignment, whatever that might be.

Q Okay. And who creates the direct account list?

A That's created at the regional level, and it's also maintained at the department, the division level.

Q Who would receive copies of it?

A Everybody would receive copies of the direct account listing. That would be sales reps and division, department, region, and corporate.

Q Next on the list is Chain Headquarters. What documents would be in a Chain Headquarters file?

A That would be information contained for chain accounts, like Seven-11 or Circle K. It would be headquarter listings, so again it would be a listing of those particular accounts that would have profiled information, like name and address and everything for that particular chain account.

Q Who creates those documents?

A Those are created with the key account managers, the chain account managers, and working with the regions and departments.

Q And who would receive copies of the headquarters material?

A As I mentioned with the direct accounts, everyone would receive copies of anything to do with the chain account headquarters, up and down the chain of command.

Q And next on the list is a Chain Promotion Planner. What's a Chain Promotion Planner?

A The Chain Promotion Planners, they would be calendar, either a 6- or 12-month calendar that would identify different programs or promotions that would be executed in chain accounts; and it would be generated by the manager responsible for that particular headquarter, either a chain account manager or a key account manager.

Q Okay. Just so it's clear, the people who create those documents are at the regional level or department level?

A It could be either/or.

Q Okay.

A It could be a key account manager at the national accounts level, or it could be a chain account manager that would be at the department level.

Q And who would receive a copy?

A Everyone that would be involved with that particular account, which would be the sales reps that would be responsible for executing, the division managers in that area, the department managers in that area. And if it's anything from a key account manager, it would include anyone in the region.

Q The next on the list is Coordinators. What does that refer to?

A That refers to PTST, which is part-time sales trainee coordinators; and that would be a file to maintain things like time sheets and activity sheets from the actual part-timers themselves.

Q Who creates those?

A Those are created at corporate level. It's an administrative reporting form that's just completed and submitted to corporate.

Q And who gets copies of those?

A Everyone that would be involved with that particular person, which would be the division manager, department manager. The regions receive a copy, and then it goes to the PTST Department, in their headquarters.

Q Now in general, is there a lot of duplication of documents, you know, from sales rep up through the regions?

A Yeah. Everything we do is duplicated. That's why all of our forms are in triplicate or four-part because that's - that's what's important, is passing the information on so that all the field sales managers have all the information that's contained in the marketplace.

Q And next on the list is Promotions. What does that refer to?

A That would refer to any consumer promotions that would be created in the corporate headquarters in the Marketing Department and then any executional plans that are developed at the regional level.

Q So those again are - those are created by the sales representative at the representative level?

A Yes.

Q And who receives copies of that material?

A Everyone receives copies. It starts - as I mentioned, it starts in the corporate headquarters; and then the information is disseminated down to the - to all the different positions in field sales.

Q Next is Programs. What does Programs refer to - and again we're talking about what might be in the file of a sales rep's van.

A It would be work-related programs, things that - things that would outline what's happening in a particular retail store or what's happening in a particular market that a sales rep was working at any given time.

Q And who creates the Program material?

A Although there's - there's two kinds. There's national programs, which are similar to the national promotions; and then if there were regional or department programs, there would be - they would be developed in the regions.

Q Who receives copies of that material?

A Everyone that would be affected, which would be the division managers, the department managers, and the regional vice presidents.

Q The next listing is Promotional Events. What does that refer to?

A Promotional Events are rodeos or races, things that we're participating in on an event level.

Q Who creates those documents?

A The promotional team.

Q Who receives copies - well, is the promotional team above the sales rep level?

A Yeah. The promotional team is on a national level, and it's - we have some satellite offices, which are in the regional offices themselves; and they coordinate all of our events.

Q To the extent they're even relevant to the case, who receives copies of that material?

A Everyone up the chain of command receives copies of it.

Q Next on the list, if I have it right, is Correspondence to/from Supervisor/Department/Region/Chain Manager. These - what does that refer to?

A Correspondence. That would be any correspondence from a division manager or a department manager to a sales rep. It may be a correspondence that sales rep communicated to his immediate supervisor or division manager. Then it would be copied to the department manager if that was the case.

Q And does all such correspondence get put up the chain, copies of that?

A Yes.

Q Well, does a U.S. Tobacco sales representative ever have correspondence with a retailer?

A In the rare instance that they would have communication, it may be with a small chain account that they have, that that would be correspondence that's coordinated with the division manager and created by their division manager.

Q Okay. And would copies of any such correspondence have to be sent up the chain as well?

A Yes, always - everything that we have is communicated up the chain of command to immediate supervisors.

Q And then what about the current project file? What does that refer to?

A The current project file could be any active activities. It could be some promotions or programs that would go into the current project file that they're actively working up and down the street or in the marketplace at that particular time.

Q And who creates those documents?

A Those would be created at the national or the regional level.

Q And who receives copies of those documents?

A The department managers and division managers would have a copy of them.

Q Now let me ask you about some other documents that sales representatives use in their work. What is a call book or a route book?

A A call book or a route book is - it's an output; it's a book that lists all of the retail stores, and it lists the direct accounts in a given area by the sales rep, a division manager, a department manager or regional manager could identify all the call activity for every store in a geographic area.

Q Who creates the route books or call books?

A They're created at the corporate level. A company called Fastech actually sends the output books to field sales.

Q Okay. And who receives copies of them?

A The corporate office receives a copy. The regional vice president receives a copy. The department manager receives a copy. The division manager receives a copy, and then the sales representative receives a copy.

Q What is a par scanner sheet?

A A par scanner sheet is - it's the profile activity reporting scanner, it's a document that is completed by the sales rep for every call that they make; and then that's the information that's tossed up the chain to profile the account information, and then that's the input that creates the call book that they receive as an output.

MR. KEYTE: Let me mark, Your Honor Freudenthal Number 3.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 3 is marked for identification.)

THE COURT: Please continue.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Who creates the par . . .

A Yeah. This is done by Fastech in our corporate office, or we have a profile activity reporting department that puts together this form and all the information that's contained on it.

Q And what is the purpose of the par scanner sheet?

A It's to collect - as you can see on the form, it's to collect information for retail stores and direct accounts and then to send the information up so that you could profile the environment or the retail activity and what the actual retail store looks like on a call book.

Q Okay. Now I'd like to focus - I think it's on the bottom of the par scanner sheet - there's a comment section. What's the purpose of the comment section on the par scanner sheet?

A Well, if there's anything that takes place in the retail store or an observation to collect anything out in the marketplace, the sales rep would have an area to write comments so then those comments could be shared with their division manager.

Q Who receives copies of the par scanner sheet, including the comment section?

A Each week the sales rep takes this three-part form, and they take the original, and they tear it off, and they mail it to Fastech, and then they send a copy of the form to their direct supervisor, which is their division manager; and then they keep a copy for themselves.

Q What happens if the U.S. Tobacco sales representative doesn't fill out the par scanner sheet and send it up the chain?

A Well, first off, if he doesn't fill out the par scanner, he'd not doing his job; and that's a requirement of his job is to send information on the par scanner to his immediate supervisor. If he doesn't send it in, it's really the same as not filling it out. It's required and disciplinary action be taken. It's a critical part of the job.

Q To whom - switching gears a little bit here - to whom does U.S. Tobacco sell its products?

A We sell our products to direct accounts.

Q What is a direct account?

A A direct account is - could be classified as a wholesaler or a distributor, and that's an account that we sell our Copenhagen and Skoal product to; and in turn, they're a supplier that sells to retailers, let them sell to consumers.

Q And what are the different types of direct accounts?

A There's - as I mentioned, there's wholesalers or distributors; and then there's chain accounts, and an example of a chain account would be if, for example - if the Circle K with a thousand stores out there, they bought directly from us, we would ship our product to them; and then they would, in turn, ship it to their stores versus a wholesaler/distributor that we would sell it to and then they would ship it to the retail stores.

Q Do U.S. Tobacco sales representatives sell products?

A No. They don't - they don't sell products. They sell promotions; they sell programs; they service the accounts.

Q What is their role with respect to servicing those accounts?

A They're implementers and executors. They take programs and promotions, and they provide service to the retailer. They execute the plans that are developed for them to put out into the market.

Q Is all that activity documented and sent up, up the chain of command?

A Yes, yes, yes. They're - you know, they gather the information that's asked of them on either reports or any type administrative forms; and again they're required to submit that to their immediate supervisor on up.

Q What is an authorization letter?

A An authorization letter would be a letter or instructions from a retailer to one of our - through one of our chain account managers or key account managers that would authorize U.S. Tobacco representative to perform a service in a store or to introduce a new product. It could be many different things, but it's an authorization from a retailer that says, I'm going to let you do this in my store and I want you to carry it out and let the - let my store managers know that these are - these are okay things to do.

Q Okay. So including retailers, who creates - who creates authorization letters and why?

A Well, it's - it's part of the key account management teams' and chain account managers' responsibility. They work with our chain account customers, and they develop the - they develop the presentations, the proposals for chain accounts and - which are retailers; and then they work to develop these authorization letters with those retailers.

Q Are sales representatives allowed to do their own authorization letters?

A No, they're not. As I mentioned, that's - that's really what the management team's all about. They put together the plans, and the sales reps execute.

Q So they just need the copy to get in the store?

A They need the copy to get in the store.

Q What is the . . .

A Keeps them out of harm's way.

Q Right. What is a retail transaction form?

A A retail transaction form is a form that the sales reps use in the - within their retail accounts that - there's various applications. But it's a form that they could use based on procedures of whatever the plan is that they're executing.

Q Okay. And who creates - who creates that form?

A That's created at the corporate level, and it's sent to all the field sales managers, and it's in - it's in duplicate copy for the retailer, for the sales rep, and for the division manager.

Q And that goes up the chain as well?

A It goes up the chain.

Q If an agreement were executed on a retail transaction form, what would a sales representative do with that form?

A They would give a copy of it to the retailer, and then they would assemble it with their week-ending paper work, and they would send it up the chain of command to their division manager.

Q And what are the consequences if he doesn't do that?

A If he doesn't do it, then he's not accurately reporting information that's happening in the retail store and he's not doing his job because he's responsible for reporting all transactions that take place out there to his immediate supervisor.

Q Without going into characterizations of documents, can you think of any type of document that could be described as an agreement that a sales representative would have with the retailer without sending a copy up the chain?

A No, I can't. That's what makes our organization so efficient is the procedures that we have in place is to let these sales reps go out and execute and implement and have a management team in place that's efficient to get things done.

Q Would that be against U.S. Tobacco Company policy?

A Yes, it would be.

Q What about incentive programs, for example, exchanging a Copenhagen hat for a vendor placement? How are those documented?

A There's a - there's a form for that, and that would be completed by the sales rep and the retailer, and then there would be a copy given to the retailer, and then the form itself would be sent to the company administrating the program and then the division manager.

Q Do U.S. Tobacco sales representatives do weekly or monthly reports?

A They may. That would depend on the sales area and what information somebody would want.

Q All right. Well, how do those sales representatives that are required to do it, how did they decide what goes into the report?

A Well, the report would be - would be similar to any of our other forms. Someone would create a report and list the topics that the information is requested from, and then the sales rep would be required to fill out that report and address those issues that are listed.

Q And who receives copies of the reports?

A Those reports would be generated to the division manager, department manager. They would go to the regional vice presidents and then on up to corporate.

Q In your experience, how do sales representatives put together their weekly or monthly report?

A If they - if they're asked to put together a report, then - in my experience in the field, that's what the comment section is provided for. Let's not create another piece of paper out there. Let's use exactly what we have, and that is the comment section. So if there's something happening in a retail store or in a given area, then the sales rep would write down whatever it is that's related to topics on his report that he's asked to fill out; and then he could use those comments to construct the report whenever it's requested.

Q And when you refer to the comments, you're referring to the comment section on the par . . .

A On the par scanner.

Q . . . scanner?

Did you work off of any notes when you did your own weekly or monthly reports other than the par scanner?

A Not other than the par scanner. I put all my notes down in the comment section, and that's - that's how I constructed any reports that were asked of me.

Q And in your experience, is it common for U.S. Tobacco sales reps to work off of notes not on the par scanner?

A Yes. It's to work off of the par scanner, and it's to construct your comments there. I mean it's a given place. It's a great point of reference because it also contains the information for that particular account, and that's a great area to do it. It would probably be a rare instance that someone would, you know, use a note pad or something to construct any type of report or documents asked of them.

Q And as a practical matter, if the sales rep decided to use a note pad rather than par scanner to construct his report, what would typically happen to his notes?

A They would probably be discarded because there's - there's enough things that he has to do - or she has to do, and the information is really what he or she is putting together, and that's all that they want to do. So they put together the information and fill it out on a report. Then they send it to their division manager and to the department manager, and there's no use for that information any more. They've already done what was asked of them.

Q Let me ask you about some of the other affidavits that were put before the Court last week.

(Off-the-record discussion between Mr. Keyte and the Court.)

Did you have an opportunity to review the affidavits submitted by plaintiff in this case last week?

A Yes, I had an opportunity to look at them.

Q Let me first ask you a few questions about the declaration of Mr. Williams, which I think is marked as Freudenthal Number 4.

Based on your review of Mr. Williams' description of Conwood's documentation of sales rep activity, is U.S. Tobacco's the same?

A Just reviewing this, no, I don't believe it's the same at all.

Q What are the primary differences?

A Well, we forward all our information. Everything's contained in an administrative form or report and it's sent up the chain of command; and it appears that in this affidavit, they aren't required to forward everything to their supervisors.

Q Let's look at the affidavit of Mr. Paulk, who was - it says in his affidavit that he was a representative, a sales rep at UST from 1981 until 1985. And if you could look at the documents listed in Paragraph 3 - and in particular, I'll just read them into the record. He references:

> " . . . a cash sale book, jobber information files [with a parentheses] promotional letters presented to wholesale buyers), and business correspondence."

My question is when you started in 1986, did sales representatives keep copies of these documents?

A Yeah, they would keep copies of the documents.

Q Okay. But did they also send copies up the chain?

A Yes. That's what they're required to do.

Q And if you look at the - let's look at the documents listed in Paragraph 4:

> " . . . personal notes on retail activity - [and again I have a hard time reading that.]

A It says:

> " . . . personal notes on retail activity, and records of payments to retailers . . ."

THE COURT: What's the personal notes? Is it some kind of activity report?

MR. KEYTE: Oh, I'm sorry. Unethical activity reports.

THE COURT: Okay. Thank you.

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Again is it your understanding that when you joined in 1986, to the extent that any similar reports would have had a different name would - a copy would be kept by a sales rep?

A A copy would be kept by the sales rep, but it's his responsibility to make sure that he submits it to his division manager.

Q Now let's look at the affidavit of Mr. Jeffery, who was a part-time employee from 1997 to 1998, and I think also is apparently an employee of Conwood. It appears the only documents he references is in Paragraph 4, which are:

" . . . account listings and company updates."

Again just for the record, what's an account listing?

A You're asking my opinion of what he's referring to?

Q Yeah.

A I would say an account listing would be a direct account listing that would be maintained in the file, but that would be something that would be given to a sales rep from his management team.

And then company updates?

Q Uh huh.

A All of our manuals are updated on a regular basis from our corporate office, and they're sent down to all of our field sales managers and to our sales reps.

Q So just to summarize, do U.S. Tobacco sales representatives create any documentation, competitive activity at the retail level that is not copied up the chain of the sales force?

A No.

Q Okay. And do U.S. Tobacco sales reps receive any documents relating to carrying out the responsibilities that is not copied or - from the division department or region?

A No. Everything they get is from their managers.

MR. KEYTE: Thank you.

THE COURT: All right, Mr. Gorsuch, you may cross-examine the witness.

MR. GORSUCH: Good morning, Your Honor. Good morning, Mr. Freudenthal.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Good morning.

MR. GORSUCH: Before we begin, I just want to pass along Dick Roberts' apologies for not being able to be here today. He's preparing for trial in Paducah next week. So that explains his absence.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, are you aware that UST purported to introduce an affidavit from Mr. Milano last week?

A I've seen an affidavit from Mr. Milano.

Q And Mr. Milano is the head of sales nationally for UST, isn't that correct?

A He's the Vice President of Sales.

Q And that puts him in charge of the whole Sales Division in UST, isn't that correct?

A Yeah. He's responsible for that whole Sales Department.

Q Mr. Milano isn't here today, is he?

A No, I don't see him here today.

Q Where is Mr. Milano today?

A I don't know.

Q He was aware of this hearing, was he not?

A I don't know.

THE COURT: Mr. Gorsuch, in fairness, the Magistrate Judge tried to be clear in his order that he was not requiring Mr. Milano to be here, but . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, I didn't mean to suggest that. I am going to argue that the Milano affidavit, however, should be disregarded because I don't have the ability to cross-examine him, amongst other problems with it.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, isn't it true that UST field sales representatives keep track of how many Conwood facings they eliminate?

MR. KEYTE: Object as to . . .

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, I don't know anything about eliminating.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Are you aware of an e-mail from Mr. Milano, the head of sales nationally, to the regional sales managers in April of 1998?

A No.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, we'll mark what, I guess Freudenthal 6, is that correct?

THE COURT: Seven.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 7 was so marked for identification.)

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, this is an e-mail that was sent on April the 15th of 1998 from Gary Milano; and you're listed as one of the CCs on it, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And amongst other things, Mr. Milano said that he wanted the regional managers to stop sending in monthly reports that used terms such as:

"We have eliminated competitive brands,"

isn't that correct?

A I'd have to read the document if I could.

MR. KEYTE: Your Honor . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Please, go ahead. Take your time.

MR. KEYTE: Could I state an objection, please.

Right now we're now talking about things sent from the regional people to Gary Milano with respect to - frankly things that are going to - are heading towards the merits of the case. I just want to make sure we focus on what documents are found at the sales rep level that are not found elsewhere.

THE COURT: With all respect, Mr. Keyte, that's not a valid evidentiary objection but an argument. So let's let Mr. Gorsuch examine.

MR. GORSUCH: Just let me know when you've finished reading it, Mr. Freudenthal.

(Mr. Freudenthal continues reading.)

I'm just going to ask you about Paragraph listed Number 1.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Okay.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Isn't it correct that UST sales reps keep track of how many Conwood facings they've eliminated?

A No. My experience, they fill out a par scanner; and on the par scanner, it asks them what's the distribution and how many facings of competitive brands that are reported in the store.

Q Isn't it correct Mr. Milano was sending this out to the field to say he didn't want to receive any more monthly reports that use the terms such as:

"We've eliminated competitive brands . . ."

MR. KEYTE: Objection.

MR. GORSUCH: "We have had Timber Wolf discontinued [or] Our chain manager has Conwood facings reduced by X number."

THE COURT: I'll sustain the objection. I think that you're asking the witness what Mr. Milano had in mind.

MR. GORSUCH: Okay, I'll rephrase it.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Isn't it correct that he sent out an e-mail saying he didn't want any more monthly reports that Conwood facings are reduced by X number?

A It says, category management, we should use new terms, and it's our goal to make sure that we're using the correct terminology.

Q Had you seen Mr. Milano's affidavit?

A Yes, I have.

Q Okay. And isn't it true that sales representatives sometimes maintain personal calendars?

A It could be.

Q And that those calendars are not always forwarded to division managers, isn't that correct?

A Well, if they were maintaining a personal calendar, if it's a personal, meaning they're talking about their wife's birthday or their mom's birthday, I don't . . .

Q No, Mr. Freudenthal. I'm asking about calendars pertaining to their business activities. I'm not going to ask you about what they do in their social time.

Isn't it true that they sometimes maintain calendars . . .

MR. KEYTE: Objection, Your Honor. If he could let the witness answer the question.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q . . . that do not go to the division managers, isn't that correct?

THE COURT: Time out. There are too many people talking at once for the reporter to put it down - to take it down. So . . .

MR. GORSUCH: If I could finish my question.

THE COURT: If you'll ask your question again, I'll ask Mr. Keyte not to object while Mr. Gorsuch is phrasing a question and I'll ask that the witness let the questioner finish the question. That way we can - so let's start all over.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Isn't it correct sometimes UST sales representatives maintain calendars that pertain to their business work that are not always forwarded to division managers?

A No. The information that would be contained there would always be a record for something that they would submit to their division manager.

Q Mr. Freudenthal, I'm not asking you what's reflected in the division policy. I'm asking about those calendars. Do those calendars get forwarded to division managers all the time, yes or no.

A I wouldn't know what calendars you're referring to.

Q Okay. Well, I ask this be marked as Exhibit 8.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 8 was so marked for identification.)

Turn to Paragraph 5. Do you disagree with Mr. Milano that sometimes sales representatives keep calendars that aren't sent up to division managers?

A No. As I said, they may keep them. I don't know if they do or not.

Q The truth is you don't know what all 448 sales reps keep, do you?

A I don't know what they personally keep.

Q Right.

A I know what they're required to submit to corporate office and to their immediate supervisor.

Q But above and beyond what they're required to submit, you don't know what they keep, do you?

A No, I don't know what they keep.

Q And, in fact, you don't disagree with Mr. Milano they sometimes keep day books that go up - that don't go up to division managers, isn't that correct?

A No. I believe that everything that they're required to submit on behalf of the company . . .

Q Mr. Freudenthal, I'm just going to ask you to answer my questions.

A Okay.

Q And I may have to ask the Court for some guidance to get you to answer my questions. I hope we don't come to that. The question is very simple though.

Do you disagree with Mr. Milano there are day books that the sales representatives sometimes keep that are not sent to division managers? That's a yes or no.

A There could be.

Q In fact, you served as a sales representative for one year, isn't that correct?

A No, a year-and-a-half.

Q Year-and-a half. '86 to '87, is that correct?

A Correct.

Q So 12 years ago was the last time you served as a sales representative, isn't that right?

A As a sales representative, yes.

Q Okay. And in preparation for your testimony here today, did you e-mail the sales representatives, the 448 sales representatives, about what files they maintained?

MR. KEYTE: Foundation.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, I didn't.

THE COURT: Overruled. Please answer the question.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, I didn't e-mail because I . . .

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Did you send out a memo . . .

MR. REED: Your Honor, may the witness please answer?

MR. GORSUCH: Excuse me. Could I conduct my cross-examination?

THE COURT: All right, all right. We're going to take a five-minute break right now.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you, Your Honor.

AFTER RECESS

THE COURT: All right. Let's go back on the record here. Just a couple of guidelines for everybody.

First, our reporter is probably the most experienced court reporter in the Western District; but she cannot - even she, as able as she is, cannot record two people talking at once; and so please do not interrupt each other.

Secondly - this is probably not necessary - but a lot of objections and a lot of argument about the form of the question is not going to materially help us efficiently use the limited amount of time that we have, and I think I can sort out pretty well what's a good question and what's not a good question, and probably the best thing to do is to let it roll so we don't have to have colloquy from counsel about the form of the questions.

So let us continue.

MR. KEYTE: Understood, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Mr. Gorsuch, I have my supply of Hall's cough drops left over from last week.

MR. GORSUCH: I may have to indulge you on that, Your Honor. I'm in a bad way today.

THE COURT: Let us know. I would offer the same to UST.

MR. GORSUCH: I may, with the Court's indulgence, take an occasional sip of water.

THE COURT: If you need them, let her know. She's a full-service court reporter, especially if you don't interrupt anybody.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Let's just go quickly back to Exhibit Number 7, Mr. Freudenthal. Isn't it correct that Mr. Milano was sending this out to all the regional sales managers telling them he didn't want to receive any more monthly reports using terms such as, we have eliminated competitive brands?

A Yes.

Q And isn't it correct, Mr. Freudenthal, that Conwood - that UST sales representatives keep track of how many Conwood facings they eliminate?

A No.

Q You say that despite Mr. Milano's statement that future monthly reports shouldn't use terms such as, quote:

"Our chain manager has Conwood facings reduced by X number"?

A Well, he's referring to using terms; and the way that I understand the question is that not a practice and it's - in my opinion, it's not a practice that they report that.

Q I'm not asking what practice is. I'm asking what you know that they do.

And doesn't it suggest, Mr. Freudenthal,

don't you know that they do keep track of how many facings they've reduced because Mr. Milano's talking about it?

A No, I'm not aware that they do.

Q Then again you just served as a sales representative for a year-and-a-half back in '86 and '87, isn't that right?

A Yes. I have 11 years of practical experience in every position in the field sales group.

Q That's very good, Mr. Freudenthal; but again, if you'd answer my questions, this would move along a little more quickly.

A Certainly.

Q And I asked you earlier whether you - whether you sent out a memo to sales representatives in anticipation of today's hearing asking what documents they keep in their files. You didn't do that, did you?

A I can't.

Q You can't send out a memo?

A You did not say that. You said if I sent an e-mail.

Q No sir, no sir. My question was - and I'm sorry to interrupt.

A Your question before we broke was e-mail.

Q Okay. My question now to you, sir, is did you send out a memo to the sales reps asking them what documents they maintained.

A No.

Q Okay. Did you call the sales reps to ask what documents they maintained?

A No.

Q Okay. Did you check their files to see what documents they maintained and to verify that all of them are reflected in the district offices?

A Not all.

Q Did you check more than one?

A I have over the course of the last year-and-a-half.

Q Okay. I'm asking you, in preparation for today's testimony, did you check more than one sales rep's files?

A No.

Q Okay. And in the month, over the month since the Court ordered discovery in this matter in December, has anyone at UST sent out a memo to sales reps asking what they keep in their files?

A That I don't know.

Q Okay. Do you know if anyone at UST has made any phone calls to sales reps asking what they keep in their files in the month?

A That I don't know.

Q Okay. Do you know in the month that's passed whether - that anyone else has checked sales reps' files to see what they maintain . . .

A

Q . . . and whether they're reflected at district managers?

A Yes.

Q Okay. Who did that?

A Ninety-five division managers, 16 department managers, and 5 regional vice presidents. That's their - that's their job description responsibilities, and they do it on a daily basis.

Q Do you have any documents or testimony from them here today to tell us that all the documents that their sales reps maintain are reflected in the district offices?

A I don't have a document other than referring to any of the policies and procedures.

Q Okay. You have policies. I'm asking whether, in fact, someone checked and found that all the documents are, in fact, maintained in the district offices. Did someone do that?

A If they were performing their job, they would.

Q Do you have any testimony or documents from them here today?

A I don't.

Q Okay. And do you know if Mr. Milano did any checking of sales representatives' files to see what they keep?

A That I wouldn't know.

Q You didn't talk with them about that in preparation for today, did you?

A No.

Q Okay. And you've had a chance to look at Mr. Paulk's affidavit, isn't that correct?

A Yes, I've looked at it.

Q I believe that's already marked as Freudenthal Exhibit . . .

A Five.

Q . . . 5.

With the Court's indulgence, I'm going to take a sip of water.

THE COURT: Sure.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q I refer you to Paragraph 4 of that declaration - and I'll just read it very quickly.

> "Based on my experience as a UST representative, it is my belief that some of these documents do not leave the possession of UST sales representatives. Such documents include unethical activity reports, personal notes on retail activity [activities], and records of payments to retailers (including jackets and free merchandise)."

Do you have any personal knowledge to dispute that Mr. Paulk, in fact, maintained such records that didn't go to division offices?

A Yes.

Q You know for a fact that Mr. Paulk sent all of his documents to divisional offices?

A Well, I would know for a fact that Number 4, it says:

"Based on my experience as a UST [Tobacco] representative . . .,"

and he lists some documents; and it says:

" . . . records of payments to retailers (including jackets and free merchandise).

Mr. Paulk was employed from 1981 to 1985, and that particular program didn't begin until the latter part of 1980.

Q Okay.

A So I . . .

Q 1980?

A Until the latter part of the '80s.

Q Okay. So you're saying Mr. Paulk's a liar?

A I don't know if he's a liar or not.

Q Well, that's my - that leads me to the question, do you know for a fact that he didn't retain any documents that didn't get sent to division offices? Do you know?

A I don't know Mr. Paulk's behavior.

Q In fact, you have no idea what records he maintained that didn't go to division offices, do you?

A From Mr. Paulk? No, other than what was required of him.

Q Okay. And again just to clarify, you don't know what documents sales representatives kept above and beyond what they were required to keep, isn't that true?

A Only U.S. Tobacco documents that they're required to send up, which would include all their materials.

Q And isn't it true that sales representatives are trained to keep files?

A The files that I've kind of outlined in the prior testimony, yes.

Q So, for instance, you even - you talked about in Freudenthal Exhibit 2 an excerpt from the Sales Operation Manual suggesting ten different file headings that sales representatives are supposed to maintain, isn't that correct?

A Well, they're not supposed to. They're suggested topic headings.

Q Okay. Suggested topic headings of files that they're supposed to maintain, isn't that correct?

A They are the headings for all the materials. This - basically these ten headings would be named for and capture every reporting form or administrative form or piece of paper that they are responsible for, and those are suggested topics, how to head those files to kind of organize some of their systems.

Q Okay. Mr. Freudenthal, real simple question: They are suggested by the company to maintain documents, isn't that correct?

A Those are suggested headings. They're required to submit all their documents.

Q I'm not asking what they're required to submit, sir. I'm asking what they're required to keep.

They are required to keep documents, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And these are the suggested headings on the files that they're supposed to keep, isn't that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. And are you - you're familiar with Mr. Jeffery's affidavit, are you not, which was previously marked as Exhibit 6?

A I've looked at it.

Q Okay. And when he says that - in 5, Paragraph 5:

"At present, UST sales representatives have a custom built filing cabinet in their company vans for the purpose of maintaining documents for the territory they serve,"

you don't dispute that, do you?

A No. It's the car file that I described earlier.

Q Okay. Isn't is true that sales representatives visit approximately 50 stores per week?

A Approximately.

Q Okay. And there are approximately 500 stores in the territory?

A No.

Q Okay. How many stores are there?

A Approximately 3-- to 350.

Q Three to 350. UST doesn't have a policy against sales reps keeping personal notes to keep all of these hundreds of stores straight, does it?

A No, it doesn't. But we provide the filing systems and all the materials that they're required to do.

Q But as a matter of common sense, if the sales representative wants to have some personal notes to keep his 50 calls per week and his 350 stores in his territory straight in his own mind, there's no rule against that, is there?

A Why would I want to do that?

Q Sir, I'm not asking . . .

THE COURT: Answer - yeah. You're arguing with Mr. Gorsuch. Simply answer his question.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: He has everything that's needed and necessary to do the job for all the reporting. If he, in the rare instance, had a personal note somewhere that he had written down on a document, then he would have that information. But he would be capturing that information for some request.

THE COURT: Mr. Freudenthal, in fairness now to Mr. Gorsuch, the question, as the Magistrate Judge heard it, was would it be against UST policy or would it be improper for him to keep records; and if you could just give a simple answer to that question, we'll move along.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No, it's not against the company policy.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q And, in fact, you've testified that the sales representatives are, quote, the eyes and the ears of the company, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Isn't it true that sales representatives from time to time make presentations to retailers concerning facings, displays, point-of-sale material, and price?

A They make presentations on promotions and sales programs.

Q I'm going to hand you what we'll mark Freudenthal Exhibit Number 9.

(Freudenthal Exhibit Number 9 was so marked for identification.)

My questions will pertain only to the second page and specifically the language:

"Make all necessary presentations on product promotions; facings; merchandisers; displays; positioning; programs; P.O.S. materials; and retail pricing [(EDLP)]. Use company marketing plans and training programs to prepare presentations. Anticipate possible objections and be prepared in all aspects of your presentation."

Do you see that language, Mr. Freudenthal?

A Uh huh.

Q So sales representatives are responsible for making presentations to retailers, isn't that correct?

A They make presentations to retailers.

Q And these presentations affect - face - the number of facings that - different than manufacturers are entitled to in a rack, isn't that correct?

A It may or may not. That would depend on the circumstances.

Q Okay. But that is one of the things the did presentations on, isn't that correct?

A On merchandising, yes.

Q Okay. And they give presentations on point-of-sale advertising materials, isn't that correct?

A Yes.

Q Okay. And then . . .

THE COURT: Let me ask a question, Mr. Freudenthal. This is just deep background to me and no mystery to it.

The word, facing, comes up a lot. I've read it in the papers. Give me a one- or two-sentence description of facing.

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Sure. That would be - there would be a label that would identify a specific product, an SKU; and that would be a facing. So if you had ten products and they were identified as ten different products, then you would have ten facings. It's actually the face of whatever product it is that's out . . .

THE COURT: Thank you, sir.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q And, in fact, some of these presentations on facings involve how many facings should be allotted to UST products, how many should be allotted to rivals' products, isn't that correct?

A Most presentations are developed for merchandising for our products, how many products should that retailer manage on a profitability basis for that particular retail account; and that would be - that would be his whole category. That would be U.S. Tobacco products and all the competing brands on the market.

Q Okay. So the answer to the question, I believe, is yes?

A Would you repeat the question.

Q Okay. The question's very simple. Don't UST sales representatives give presentations on how many facings should be allotted to UST products and the competitors' products . . .

A We make recommendations, yes. That's what we do.

Q Okay. And isn't it true that sales representatives sometimes use materials that have come down from company marketing plans and training programs to prepare their own presentations, isn't that correct?

A They use all of the preapproved programs, yes, for their individual retailers.

Q Okay. And they sometimes create personal notes in anticipation of these presentations, don't they?

A They may have their notes for their presentation of what's going to be addressed for that particular account.

Q Okay. And there's nothing in any Sales Operation

Manual or elsewhere that requires those notes to be sent up, is there?

A Well, the presentations are always forwarded as complete documents back to any of the managers after a presentation so that everything that transpired within that presentation with the retailer and the division manager or a sales rep, it's all recorded as a formal presentation back to U.S. Tobacco.

Q Mr. Freudenthal, my question again is very simple.

A Uh huh.

Q There's no policy, is there, in the Sales Operation Manual or elsewhere requiring a sales representative to send up his personal notes that he created in anticipation of the presentation, is there?

A No. In those rare instances, I wouldn't see it.

Q Is it true that you were a department manager in Region 4 in 1997?

A Yes, part of 1997.

Q In January, 1997?

A Yes.

Q And didn't you report on January the 3rd, just three days into the year up to your regional manager that you had, quote:

> "Purged all the 1996 files and administrative paper work in the department's offices"?

A I don't recall.

Q Well, see if we can refresh your recollection.

A Thank you.

MR. GORSUCH: Mark this Exhibit 10.

(Freudenthal's Exhibit Number 10 was so marked for identification.)

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q I'll refer you to Paragraph 3.

A Uh huh, that's correct.

Q So three days into 1997, and you were able to report that you had purged all department office files, isn't that correct, for 1996?

A Correct. We take them out of the filing system in the storage room in the office, and we put them into file boxes, and we put them in the back storage room.

Q All right.

A Purge all the current files.

Q Aren't, in fact, documents destroyed?

A No.

Q You're saying you never destroyed any documents?

A No sir.

Q Okay. What's your document retention policy?

A As I understand it, it would be three-to-five years, maintain any of the working expense reports, any of the activities, any pertinent information that would be used in the future.

Q Okay. Isn't it true that there's nothing in the Sales Operating Manual that instructs sales representatives to purge their files on a periodic basis?

A That I don't know off the top of my head.

Q You're unaware of any rule telling sales representatives when to purge their files, aren't you?

A I'm not aware of anything to purge their files.

Q Are you aware that back in August we subpoenaed to receive documents and UST was made aware of this from a former sales representative, Sarah Weatherly at UST?

A No, I'm not.

Q Are you aware that she, in fact, maintained documents as far back as 1989?

A No, I'm not.

Q Are you aware of the fact that those documents cannot be found anywhere in UST's production at a department level or the regional level or otherwise?

A No. I find that surprising.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. You find it?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: Surprising.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Well, if, in fact, you only maintain documents for three-to-five years in your present position but there are sales representatives who don't have any instructions about how long to maintain documents, isn't it quite possible that they maintain documents for longer than you do?

A But those would be all the documents that we maintain because they're required to send everything to us.

Q Right. But if you destroyed them in three-to-five years . . .

THE COURT: Mr. Gorsuch, don't point at the witness.

MR. GORSUCH: I'm sorry. I apologize.

THE COURT: All right.

MR. GORSUCH: No pointing fingers.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q If you destroy those - the documents that you created in three-to-five years, they could be in sales representatives' files for longer than that, couldn't they?

A Well, I didn't necessarily say they were destroyed. I said they were kept. That's what I answered, and they could be kept. They could be transferred up through the chain of command to the regional office.

MR. GORSUCH: May I approach the witness, Your Honor?

I don't think it's necessary to mark this exhibit. I'll just ask you where I can find, sir, whether these documents from UST . . .

MR. KEYTE: Your Honor, could I have a sidebar for a second.

MR. REED: Out of the hearing of the witness.

MR. KEYTE: I could raise the issue . . .

THE COURT: Well, let's let the Magistrate Judge raise an issue.

We're not going to take the time to have the witness go through a series of documents unless you can tell the Magistrate Judge that that's something that you know Mr. Freudenthal's personally familiar with. I don't think we have the time for him to review a stack of paper that's four or five inches thick. I don't know if that goes with the concern expressed.

MR. KEYTE: Your Honor, our concern is that we're in the process, as everybody in this courtroom knows, maybe with the exception of Mr. Freudenthal, of producing up to a hundred boxes from the department and division levels. This entire line of questioning, frankly, I think is premature and unfair.

THE COURT: Well . . .

MR. KEYTE: He's asking him if, based on documents he hasn't seen yet because he hasn't got - we've sent him twenty boxes today, we're in the process of producing the documents he's crossing him about.

THE COURT: Where are we going with this, Mr.

Gorsuch?

MR. GORSUCH: I'm almost finished.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: If we could just let me finish.

THE COURT: Why don't you rephrase your question.

MR. GORSUCH: I'll be happy to do that.

THE COURT: I lost track of what it was, but I'm disinclined to require the witness to look at anything that is that thick.

MR. GORSUCH: That's fine, Your Honor.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q Is there - let me just ask you a couple more questions, Mr. Freudenthal.

On par forms, one of the copies is to be maintained for your records, isn't that correct?

A Correct.

Q Okay. Specifically says it on the sheet, copy for your records, isn't that right?

A Uh huh.

Q Okay. And are you aware of what Fastech's document-retention policy is with regard to these par forms?

A No, I'm not.

Q Are you - do you know that they actually only keep them for about two years?

THE COURT: I think he just said he didn't know what that policy was.

BY MR. GORSUCH:

Q And again just to clarify, the sales representatives, there's no policy forbidding them from keeping documents much longer than that, is there?

A No. They're encouraged to maintain what's active at the time that they need.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you very much.

THE COURT: Any redirect?

MR. KEYTE: Yeah, just a couple of questions, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Just so everybody knows where I'd like to go with this, assuming that your redirect is limited and that any recross is equally limited, when we get through with Mr. Freudenthal, if there are no other witnesses, I'd like to take a break and then come back and have counsel briefly argue the issue of whether a thorough and complete search should include the sales representative. I'll give you a chance to collect your thoughts and . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Just so Your Honor's aware . . .

THE COURT: With some luck, I may be able to give you a ruling.

Yes sir?

MR. GORSUCH: You asked if there are no more witnesses.

THE COURT: Yeah.

MR. GORSUCH: We do have witnesses available by telephone, Your Honor . . .

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: . . . if you'd like. I don't believe it's necessary.

THE COURT: Let's just continue on.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. KEYTE:

Q Mr. Freudenthal, if you could look at the Milano affidavit, Paragraph 5, and let me read into the record the complete sentence.

> "To the extent that any Sales Representative keeps calendars or day books, and retains them, these are not likely to reflect competitively significant information, which, as described above, is forwarded to the Division Managers through other means."

Do you understand that paragraph when it referred to calendars or day books to reference personal calendars?

A If they had any calendars that they maintained, yeah, that would be something that they would have.

Q And do you agree with Mr. Milano that personal calendars are not as a practical matter likely to reflect competitive information?

A I agree. They're - that information would be documented on a par scanner and reported on a monthly status report.

Q In your experience, as a practical matter, do sales representatives know that competitive information is either supposed to be on the par scanner or in their weekly or monthly report?

A We give them a place to put it; and any information that we need, it's captured on the par scanner. If there's any questions for monthly reports, then they would answer those questions and send it to their division department members.

Q Mr. Gorsuch also asked you about the fact that sales reps keep copies of documents, and I think he suggested that they may not be kept as long at the division or department level. In your experience, as a practical matter, how long do sales reps keep documents?

A Well, this is - the first scanner is the documents that they use most frequently, and they use that with every call. They would retain the copy of this scanner until they received their new call books and - at which time the information is already updated.

And if there was a mistake in the reporting system, which is highly unlikely, then they could look at the par scanner to make sure all their information is accurate and at which time they would discard their copy because as I was asked how many calls did they make if they're covering 3-- to 350 calls a cycle, that could be five-to-six weeks, they're going to have a lot of paper; and it's all going to be contained here.

So they're already getting recaps of the information, and they get rid of the scanners.

Q Let me ask you about personal notes with respect to presentations.

Again as a practical matter, would any such notes be kept by sales reps, in your experience?

A My experience is no. Their - we solicit input from the sales reps for their accounts; and the business that we're going to present to a retailer, we contain that in the presentation. Anything that is written down after a presentation with a retailer would have been written down on the presentation that they have in some form or fashion, assimilated into that report; and that's what the chain account managers or key account managers keep.

Q And finally, with respect to keeping copies of documents, as a practical matter, what is your experience with sales reps - and I'll use this word - purging documents versus the different levels up the chain at UST keeping documents? As a practical matter, who keeps them longer?

A They're not required to keep all this information. They're required to report the information. So they report the information, and then it's compiled up the chain through division and department and regional vice presidents, the information. So they only retain it for the period of time that they're actively doing it, and then they discard it.

MR. KEYTE: No more questions.

THE COURT: Any recross?

MR. GORSUCH: Nothing, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. Mr. Freudenthal, thank you. You may step down.

You ever been a witness before?

MR. FREUDENTHAL: No.

THE COURT: You don't have to tell me.

Why don't you take that file back.

I'm disinclined to hear any witnesses by telephone unless there - somebody can tell me really urgent reasons to do so.

What I'd like to ask you to do, unless someone has a contrary thought, is to take - you know, it's now 20 to 12 - take ten minutes and organize your thoughts as to your observations that you want to make in pulling all this argument together, and it doesn't have to be simply what Mr. Freudenthal said, but what you think are the salient points in deciding this discovery-related issue.

And then I'll hear - I'll hear from Mr. Gorsuch first since it's his motion to compel, in effect. Then I'll hear from UST; and if I'm able, I will give you a ruling from the bench. I will try to do that, but I'm not promising.

MR. KEYTE: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Take ten minutes.

AFTER RECESS

THE COURT: Let's ask each side to sum up its arguments with respect to what I will call the sales-representative issue. If you could take no more - you know, five minutes probably would be adequate. Don't go more than ten.

The reason I say that is that I need to be off the bench by 12:30 or 12:25, which gives us about a half an hour; and I'd like to have a chance to think about your arguments and, if I'm able, give you a ruling from the bench.

So Mr. Gorsuch.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you, Your Honor.

Would you like to hear from me here or from the podium?

THE COURT: I'd like to hear from you wherever it is you are not going to collapse from the flu.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you.

Back in December, December the 18th, the Court recognized the importance of grass-roots documents in this case; and, in fact, if you look at the complaint, the allegations in our complaint all deal with the conduct by UST sales representatives in the field.

Under Rule 26, we're entitled to all documents that are likely to be discovered admissible evidence. I think there are only two plausible arguments for not producing sales arguments - sales reps' documents, and we've only heard two.

One is that they don't retain any original documents, and two is that it's overly burdensome to produce those original documents. I'd like to address each of those in turn.

The primary argument as near as I can tell from the defendants is the first one, that there just aren't any original documents at the sales rep level. Look at the Milano affidavit itself. He nowhere says there are no original documents at the sales rep level. In fact, he admits there are at least two categories of documents, calendars and call books, that are maintained at the sales rep level and may be kept by sales reps that don't get to the district office.

Defendants have had a month to look into this issue. That's more than adequate time. We can see from this Document Number 7, and Mr. Milano didn't cut the mustard, and this is the same fellow who, in fact, not only admits that there are some documents but specifically sent out an e-mail to the field telling them that he didn't want to hear any more - get any more documents saying that we've eliminated Conwood facings. That's pretty strong evidence there's stuff down there at the sales rep level that's not percolating up.

Mr. Freudenthal here today doesn't and can't and hasn't testified that as a matter of personal knowledge there are no documents at the sales rep level. He was a sales rep for a year-and-a-half over 12 years ago. In the last month, neither he nor anyone else at UST has done any checking with the sales representatives personally to gain personal knowledge as to what they maintained with the exception of looking at one sales representative's van.

He admits - Mr. Freudenthal admits that he doesn't know what documents sales representatives keep above and beyond what they're minimally required to keep by UST policy. He admitted that repeatedly in cross-examination, Your Honor; and he admitted that Milano's right, they may maintain calendars and day books.

And Your Honor, when you're visiting 50 stores a day and 300 to 350 in your territory, it's a matter of common sense you're going to maintain some personal notes on those sales calls and your interactions that aren't reflected in corporate documents. That's something Terry Williams says has been in this industry for twenty years and says in his affidavit. That's not disputed. That's not disputed that they maintain those notes. There's no policy against it.

And Your Honor, we all maintain documents above and beyond what we're minimally required to keep. I can't think of anyone who doesn't do that. And all Mr. Freudenthal can tell you about it is the documents that they're minimally required to keep go up. That's all he can tell you.

He also admits that presentations affecting our distribution, which are at the heart of the case, presentations on agreements that lock up the racks and the facings and allocate space that UST had spaced to Conwood, and at the heart of the case, Paragraph 28 of the complaint, he admits that there are sometimes, it's possible that sales reps keep personal notes on these things, customize and tailor the UST presentation materials. He admitted that these personal notes may not go up.

Mr. Freudenthal also admitted that documents which - even the documents which do come from the regions are retained for three-to-five years at the regional level. And yet he also admitted that there's no document-retention policy or instruction policy for sales representative documents.

And I will represent to you, Your Honor, back in August, just to give you one example, we subpoenaed one former UST sales representative, Sarah Weatherly. UST knows about this; they've known about it since August. She kept documents back to 1989. What is that, ten years ago. These documents, a lot of them are from regional headquarters, Your Honor.

We haven't found them in the regional headquarter production. Mr. Keyte knows that he has made production at the regional headquarters offices. He's correct, the departmental and division manager offices are still being searched. But there are documents in here that should have been found in the regional offices, Your Honor, but were not. They came from the regional offices but were not. And the answer, found out today, is because they're only kept at the regional office for three-to-five years and sales reps may keep them longer.

So even for those documents - and Your Honor, those include these critical par forms, which you've heard a lot about. These record how many - I mean this is critical stuff. It records how many facings each side has in each store across the country, price and all that.

And you heard from Mr. Freudenthal about this comment form at the bottom, which is the basis of all their reports. All subsequent reports - and we discussed at length how critically important these are. Well, they're only maintained at the regional offices for three-to-five years.

We know from Fastech that it doesn't even get the comment form; and if you'll look at it, you'll see that what goes to the comment form goes to the direct supervisor and the other is retained for your records. So it's only going to be in two places. One is the supervisor who keeps it for three-to-five years, and the other is the sales rep, who we have proof, Your Honor, keep documents longer in some cases. And there's no policy forbidding them from doing so.

So the most critical comment forms that Mr. Freudenthal testified at length about are likely to be found in the sales representative files and only in the sales representative files.

Your Honor, I respectfully suggest that under Rule 26, it's pro disclosure. The presumption is in favor of disclosure, and UST has not met any kind of burden in showing you there are no original documents at the sales rep level.

Let me just address very quickly a few more points before I get to the burden issue. I don't think we had to do anything, but we have done something affirmatively. We've presented an uncontroverted affidavit from Mr. Paulk saying that he did, as a practical matter, retain documents on his retail activities that did ont go to the district level office; and he's sitting by his phone here this morning in California. We didn't call him in from California, but he's supposed to sit by the phone until 1:00.

THE COURT: His subpoena is pretty old.

MR. GORSUCH: Your Honor, with respect, two things on that. Mr. Freudenthal's is just as old, number one. So if you're going to discredit somebody, you've got to discredit the other on that basis. They're even; it's a wash.

And number two, Mr. Freudenthal says things haven't changed since 1986. That's throughout his testimony on direct, Your Honor.

So Mr. Paulk could testify - and he's prepared by phone to tell you one of the things he did - and I'll just make this proffer - is frequently . . .

THE COURT: I really don't want to hear any proffer about . . .

MR. GORSUCH: That's fine, Your Honor.

THE COURT: I really want to keep it to argument because then they may feel that they need to put Mr. Freudenthal on, and then the door is open again.

MR. GORSUCH: That's fine, Your Honor. I take you on that. I just want you to know he's prepared to elucidate on his affidavit and explain to you . . .

THE COURT: Talk to me about burden.

MR. GORSUCH: Okay.

THE COURT: And I'm not trying to cut you short, but I am trying to manage our time. We've plowed a fair amount of ground pretty repetitively, so talk to me about burden. Then I want to hear from Mr. Keyte.

MR. GORSUCH: Okay. Your Honor, on burden I want to say a few things. First, there is no burden here because we're willing to do it for them; and we've been saying we've been willing to do it for them for months; and we'll get it done in three weeks, Your Honor. So there can't be any burden when they don't have to do it - when they don't have to lift a finger.

Second, burden is an argument that is equitable in nature. You have to look at what's on the other side of the balance. In this case, we have alleged the complaint is specifically alleged about the activities of these individuals in the marketplace. It would be extraordinary for you not to permit discovery of the documents of the alleged bad actors. These are the people who carry out the bad acts.

Now I cannot think of any case in which the Court has not permitted discovery or any authority for the proposition that the people who are alleged to have done the wrong are immune from discovery.

Your Honor, this is a $400,000,000 lawsuit before trebling. It contains serious allegations of misconduct. So when you - when you talk about burden and you're going to talk about fairness, on one side, you have to go look at 400 people's files. On the other hand, this is the most direct evidence available on what these people have done. They are the alleged wrongdoers. It is a $400,000,000 case alleging wrongdoing for over the last twenty years across the country.

And finally, Your Honor, the third point on burden is that the burden really is on us at this point. We've been seeking these documents since forever, as you're aware; and UST could have - could have made this production a lot easier. They could have done it over the course of time. They could have done it in conjunction with sales meetings which they hold from time to time, regional sales meetings, national sales meetings. That's what we did, Your Honor. They've known about this lawsuit. They've known that we've wanted these documents for months - for a year almost.

So if they're going to tell you it's going to be so burdensome for us to have to do it in the next three weeks, well, you know, it might. But the fact of the matter is, they caused this train wreck and they have to live with that; and we're the ones who are really going to wind up suffering from the train wreck, Your Honor, because there's an April 1 deadline for the close of depositions, and we are bound and determined to do everything we can to keep to keep this case on schedule.

But they have yet to even produce their division and department managers' files, which you ordered over a month ago. We're going to be behind the eight ball when we get - if and when we ever finally get these sales rep files, process them, and get them produced. So . . .

THE COURT: I don't have as many stripes as Chief Justice Rehnquist does, but I think I'm going to have to . . .

MR. GORSUCH: Okay. Those are my burden

arguments, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: Last point?

THE COURT: Right.

MR. GORSUCH: Last point.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. GORSUCH: Fastech's independent findings. They've made independent findings, Your Honor, that there are original documents that are not centrally maintained. You asked the other day, well, aren't they just the vendor seeking to sell something? You're right, they are; and, in fact, they're trying to sell an automation program to get the sales reps laptops so that this problem may continue. UST bought it. They're now distributing laptops to their sales force. So they've endorsed those findings, Your Honor. I suggest you don't have to make any independent findings yourself.

So I'm finished.

THE COURT: All right, Mr. Keyte.

MR. KEYTE: And I think I'm going to be briefer than five minutes.

THE COURT: That's fine. Brevity is always appreciated.

MR. KEYTE: First, with respect to Fastech, that, of course, wasn't even risked to be part of the cross-examination. So I don't think we need to put any weight on that.

Ultimately Rule 26, as the Court has observed I believe in the past, is a practical test that balances the likelihood of plaintiff obtaining additional probative documents versus the burden of having to try and find them and process them.

What has the plaintiff shown here? Ultimately plaintiffs' showing is really just conjecture that there may be handwritten notes on calendars. There may be notes with respect to presentations that may have been kept even though there are policies and procedures firmly in place and enforced to make sure that competitive information goes up the chain from the sales rep to the division and on forward. Those are the par scanner sheets with the Comment section and the monthly report.

I agree that Mr. Paulk's affidavit - and he is not here for us to cross live with documents - I think cannot be relied on. It is not a wash with Mr. Freudenthal, we submit, who has been at every stage of the sales rep organization up through 1997, 11 years, who is out in the field looking at what sales rep documents have. He testified that division and department managers' job is to make sure they bring up into the chain the competitively relevant information.

It is a scavenger hunt to see - to try to find out whether a particular sales rep in their personal calendar may have scheduled something and made a comment. They - the practical experiences, they don't put competitive information there because they have to do it somewhere else anyway, and there's nothing really to rebut that that they've shown.

What have we shown? One, that we are not like Conwood. We don't - the structure is not the same. The reporting requirements are not the same. The documents are not the same. How they track competitive activity is not the same, and clearly where the documents have to go from the sales rep up the chain is not the same.

If you compare what is being produced - has been produced and is being produced at the division and department level with respect to par scanner sheets, weekly and monthly reports with the prospect of the potential that there might be a written note here and there, it is clear that with respect to the merits issues and relevant documents, they will have the probative information they need to pursue their case.

The direct evidence that Mr. Gorsuch refers to is not going to be the personal note in the calendar. It's going to be the information in the par scanner sheets and the reports going up, and that's been our position throughout, and I think that is really uncontroverted here today at the hearing.

Even with respect to Sarah Weatherly, it is - we have - there is yet to be a production at the division and department level. It's under way, and it's premature to make those kind of arguments, and it also - I guess the suggestion is that we have to go look for the occasional pack-rat who may keep something and may keep something longer than the division or department even though, as a matter of practical experience, these guys and women are very busy. They don't like to keep documents. It's hard enough to get them to fill the reports out that they have to, and those are where the probative information is going to be found.

So with respect to the merits before we even get to the burden, I don't think there's been a showing that these documents are likely to be - add probative information - information, in this case, beyond what has been produced and what is being produced.

With respect to the burden, there are 448 reps. They do work out of vans. They already have the burden of putting the relevant documents on a weekly and monthly basis up the division to the departments and to the regions. There is, by the way, no e-mail to direct them what to do.

It would be extremely disruptive and burdensome to have these 448 reps have to search their documents, produce their documents on the prospect that there might be a handwritten note that is - that reflects competitive information rather than personal information and that is not on a par scanner or in a monthly report. It's conjecture, and it's really not credible.

So, Your Honor, I think when you balance that burden versus the prospect of obtaining additional probative information, I think the balance is zero or near zero with respect to the prospect of additional probative information and quite high with respect to the burden in this case. And for those reasons, we would request that the order be denied.

THE COURT: All right. Here's what I'm going to do. You all just sit tight for a couple of minutes. I've been banging away on my laptop, and I want to pull my notes together, and I'm going to give you a ruling rather than making you leave and come back. If you'll just sit still, I'll give it to you in a minute.

AFTER RECESS

THE COURT: I'm going to grant the motion to compel to the following extent: I'm going to order that UST conduct a search of the records of its sales representatives and produce the following categories of documents:

Number one, any notes or personally maintained documents, such as planners, notes, journals, written summary of activities that relate to the specific anti-competitive activities that are alleged in Paragraphs 22 through 31 of the complaint. The complaint sets out what those are.

One of the concerns that the Magistrate Judge has about the discovery - and this is not a criticism but just an observation - some of the requests by Conwood are quite broad. I think it is fair to inquire if there are individual records of the sales representatives that go to the specific anti-competitive allegations that are alleged to have occurred and that may, if true, involve field activity, those are set out in the complaint.

Secondly, I will order the production of any regularly maintained competitive records that, whether they go up the chain of command or not, from 1995 back. I listened to Mr. Freudenthal, and he said that the corporate retention policy was three-to-five years.

Taking the most aggressive version of that and assuming that everything that has been regularly sent up the chain in the last three years from the divisional or the regional offices, it's fair to look in the records of the sales representatives from 1995 back. So I will order that.

I want to give you some of the reasons for this, and I will do something in writing; but because we have wanted to get these rulings out quickly, I want to give it to you.

First, I think that UST has difficulty, I think, of proving a negative. Mr. Freudenthal got up and testified to what the regular course of business is, and the Magistrate Judge doesn't have any reason to doubt the accuracy of the regular course of business.

However, what may happen and what may be the regular chain of command does not disprove the possibility of - which is a real one - that individuals keep other records. And ordinarily in corporate litigation, it's altogether fair to look not just in the ultimate corporate repository but in other places where records may be kept. And certainly day planners, notes, journals, things like that that may reflect activities that the plaintiff alleges to be anti-competitive may well be retained or created; and I think it is fair to look, especially given the fact that this is an anti-trust case of no small scope.

I listened very carefully to Mr. Freudenthal's testimony. He talked about what the policy is of sending things up the chain of command, and I'm sure that that's an accurate summary of how UST wants the documents to flow so that its management can understand things. But it doesn't disprove the distinct possibility that sales representatives may have relevant information.

When all is said and done, a lot of this has to do with Rule 26, and Rule 26 does say that the information sought need not be admissible at trial if it may lead to discovery of admissible evidence. There's a distinct possibility that reviewing these materials may lead to discovery of witnesses who the plaintiff wishes to depose. What they may say, how credible they are, whether the information helps one side more than the other, the Magistrate Judge knows not at all. But I think, without looking at that material, it's not possible to tell.

As to the burden, the Magistrate Judge would make the following observations:

I hear the argument that there are 448 people. I tried to address that by giving some scope in the course of this order to what needs to be reviewed. I don't think that there is a compelling argument that the burden here of going to these people to look for their individual records is of a scope that it would - that it would negate the ability to discover this kind of material.

I have no opinion - no insight at all as to the merits of this litigation. I don't know if the plaintiff is altogether wrong, a little bit right, or right big time or somewhere in between.

If the plaintiffs' allegations are true, as to which the Magistrate Judge has no opinion at all, then the people in the field who engage in the activities which the plaintiff believes are wrongful would indeed be knowledgeable witnesses and may well have records; and I think that on the basis of the record that is in front of this Court, I am not able to say under Rule 26 that UST should not be required to look for those documents.

So that's the Court's ruling. I will try to do something in writing; but because we have a reporter here today and I know this is an important issue, I'm going to rule based on that; and I do now need to excuse myself.

I know that there are other issues that are out there. What I'm going to ask counsel to do is to go back to the - what I would call the joint-agenda approach. It worked the last time. I'll ask Mr. Keyte and Mr. Gorsuch or whatever pairing seems to work to make up a joint list and - what's today, Monday - say by Thursday submit that to the Magistrate Judge as to what issues remain unresolved.

I know that I took under submission an issue that related to discovery, I think, of some research and development costs because I told you that I thought I needed to look at case law. I feel relatively confident that, given the number of papers that are here on the bench, that there are other things that need to be addressed. But what I'd like to do is to get the joint agenda from you all, look at that, and then figure out what we do next.

So that will be the ruling. I do think that this has been useful, to get Mr. Freudenthal. Good to meet you, Ms. Weiss. And when I get that joint agenda, I will have a telephone-status call as to where we go from here with counsel, which probably won't be till next week because I'm starting a five-day jury trial tomorrow.

So thank you all very much.

MR. GORSUCH: Thank you, Your Honor.

MR. KEYTE: Thank you, Your Honor.

AT THIS POINT, THE PROCEEDINGS WERE ADJOURNED.

ORDER

At the most recent teleconference, the Court set a further telephonic status conference for Monday, February 8, at 3:00 p.m., to discuss broader scheduling issues. The Court, on its own motion, hereby REMANDS that conference from the docket, and reschedules it for 3:00 p.m. on Wednesday, February 10, Gene Snyder U.S. Courthouse, 601 West Broadway, Louisville, Kentucky. Senior trial counsel, whom the Magistrate Judge understands to be Mr. Hansen for the plaintiffs and Mr. Stoll for the defendants, are directed to attend. In addition, the Court invites but does not require the attendance of corporate legal department representatives. The purpose of the conference is to hold a working session to plan the nature, scope, and schedule of further discovery in this case, and to put this case on track for the prompt and timely conclusion of discovery and resolution of all outstanding disputes.

The Court recognizes that this is comparatively short notice for a conference in Louisville with senior trial counsel and possibly corporate representatives. If the February 10th date is unacceptable, the Court's chamber staff can work to reschedule this date, although the Magistrate Judge urges the parties to make every effort to make this conference date achievable.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This antitrust case has generated an extraordinary number of discovery disputes, both in terms of numbers of issues, and amount of lawyer and judicial time involved. The matter was referred by the district judge to the magistrate judge in November of 1998. The magistrate judge, since December of 1998, has held numerous hearings in Louisville, with and without witnesses, and multiple teleconferences with counsel as well. The hearings have resulted in the resolution of some discovery issues, but there remains a broad range of discovery disputes pending. Moreover, given the rate at which additional objections continue to accumulate,[1] the court is left with the firm conviction that there is no reason to expect there will be, under the current approach to discovery, any forseeable end to the disputes.

[1]See, e.g., plaintiffs' 18 page, single-spaced letter of this date, transmitted by facsimile.

In order to address the discovery situation, and to bring a conclusion to the disagreements by which this case has been marked, some general observations are needed before particular disputes are resolved.

Chronology of Discovery Disputes. Conwood began the case by serving interrogatories and document production requests with the complaint on April 22, 1998, in spite of the prohibition of Rule 26 against the commencement of discovery before the 26(f) scheduling meeting. Conwood then followed up by a motion [DN 2] seeking relief from the bar of Rule 26(d), a motion which was not granted. Instead, as is standard practice in the Western District, the court held a scheduling conference on July 7, 1998 and entered a scheduling order on July 9. [DN 19] Clearly, at this point, discovery had commenced; although the district court never ruled on the motion for relief from the 26(d) bar on immediate discovery, it was rendered moot by the scheduling order, which required, for example, that document discovery be completed by December 4, 1998, less than five months after the scheduling conference..

The court's scheduling order required the making of initial disclosures by July 21. This, of course, was already three months after the filing of the complaint. Conwood wasted no time engaging in motion practice, filing its first motion to compel on August 21, a mere one month after the mandatory disclosures were to have been made. UST had made some Rule 26 disclosures. Conwood found the UST production inadequate, and filed a two inch thick motion to compel, seeking the very serious remedy of barring UST from using at trial any materials which Conwood contends should have been disclosed [DN 29]. Conwood's motion went into great particularity as to specific categories of documents which should have been disclosed in the initial Rule 26(a) filings. UST had interposed the argument that Rule 26(a) disclosures are not meant to displace traditional discovery avenues. See August 3, 1998 letter from Chris Athanasia to Mark Hansen, attached as exhibit B to Conwood's August 21 motion to compel [DN 29].

While UST was seeking to minimize its responsibilities under Rule 26(a) by pointing to regular discovery options as the alternative to Rule 26, UST was nonetheless pursuing a technical, delaying strategy with respect to answering the very "traditional discovery methods" it had invoked as obviating the need for extensive Rule 26(a) disclosures. UST took the position, which it apparently did not clearly or immediately communicate to Conwood, that the initial interrogatories and document production requests, served with the complaint and before the the July 7 scheduling conference, were simply a nullity. Therefore, even though the July scheduling conference and order had commenced discovery, UST took no action to respond to the previously served discovery. Instead, it took comfort in its formalistic theory that the initial round of interrogatories and document production requests needed to be physically mailed once again to have any legal force. UST apparently did not disclose this position until September 11, more than two months after the scheduling conference, when it offered to treat the first round of discovery as having been effectively served on September 10. See defendants' response to plaintiff's first request for production of documents, served October 13, 1998. [This pleading does not appear in the court's file but is attached as exhibit 11 to Conwood's second motion to compel, dated October 23 and found at DN 35.] Thus, UST sought to have its cake and eat it too, by minimizing its 26(a) responsibilities but denying that it had been served correctly with the "traditional discovery."

Further significant problems were created by Conwood's strategy of serving obviously overbroad, generalized discovery requests while simultaneously relying on the general sweep of Rule 26(a). For example, Conwood's first set of document requests asked UST boldly for "all documents concerning Conwood;" "all documents concerning relationships between defendants;" "all documents concerning Swedish Match [a competitor]; "all documents concerning product racks;" and "all documents concerning product quality." These requests, while notable for their simplicity, are so sweeping as to provide no useful guidance to UST as to what Conwood legitimately sought in a major antitrust case.

General Analysis. Conwood offered to cure the overbroad requests by communicating narrowing restrictions to UST, and a series of "meet and confer" activities took place. Some of these were before and some of these were after the filing by Conwood of its second motion to compel on October 23 [DN 35]. Conwood's approach to discovery, instead of asking from the start for carefully defined and clear categories of documents, has been to paint with the broadest possible brush, then to engage in negotiation, and then motion practice, to narrow them down. The court is of the view that this process, a seemingly endless one of negotiation followed by legal argument, is not an adequate substitute for careful initial draftsmanship and is not what the rules contemplate. It also requires major judicial resources.

Conwood's tactic of extremely broad requests has continued. In reviewing the pleading file, the magistrate judge looked closely at plaintiff's third document production request. It likewise contains overbroad requests, such as "all documents concerning the review or evaluation of the performance of members of your smokeless tobacco sales force;" or "all documents concerning multi-year business plans." Other very broad requests concern the so-called global settlement. All these have drawn overbreadth objections, and it is obvious that many of these issues will eventually be presented to the court for resolution.

Conwood has, however, presented some very legitimate discovery concerns to the court for decision. UST resolutely resisted discovery of documents at the sales force level, even though the clear allegations of the complaint assert anti-competitive tactics by UST, carried out store-by-store. Such an anticompetitive campaign would necessarily be implemented (if it occurred at all) by sales personnel. The court's decision on this fairly obvious point required multiple hearings, and testimony from witnesses, and UST's basis for objection was not especially substantial.

On the other hand, in part because of the overbreadth of its requests, Conwood has also sought an extraordinary degree of discovery micromanagment by the magistrate judge. Conwood seeks relief from the court by having it order e-mails be sent to officers whom UST asserts have no involvement in the factual background of this dispute, by requiring discovery from officials whose only responsibilities are manufacturing, and by seeking discovery from personnel whose only responsibility is to create racks. All these requests arise in the context of a motion to compel based on broad, generic requests.

Rather than relying on focused requests which identify particular categories of documents which might be kept by particular people, Conwood wants to involve the court in defining in exquisite detail what the corporate scope of its very general document request should be. No court has the resources to engage in such an exercise, and Conwood has a variety of specific discovery tools which it certainly can use to discover specific information from specific people. Conwood's pleadings readily show a detailed familiarity with categories of documents and personnel; it can always specifically request under the rules what instead it demands in motions to compel.

Discovery commenced six months ago, yet no deposition has been taken. Both parties share considerable responsibility for this situation. The court has no inclination to impose sanctions as a cure for the current state of affairs, both because sanctions are generally counterproductive and because neither party is without accountability for the current state of deadlock and disagreement. Counsel should carefully consider all these factors in preparing for next week's conference concerning overall discovery status and deadlines.

For the forgoing reasons, the court makes the following rulings:

1. Conwood's request for further detailed relief in defining the scope of a proper corporate search is denied. This includes Conwood's request for a directive to send an e-mail to officers, and its requests to specifically include in an order of the court the categories of marketing promotions managers, rack personnel, manufacturing officers, and retail positioning and vendor teams. Such relief is beyond the scope to which Conwood is entitled and the court declines the invitation to become a full-time member of the discovery team in this case. However, UST is cautioned that the disinclination of the court to specifically order that such personnel be included in a search does not automatically exclude them from the scope of the search, either. UST must make a thorough search -- but the court will not become intimately involved in defining every conceivable aspect of the search. UST should also be mindful that, when the court took up an especially significant issue, i.e., the extension of the search to the field sales personnel, the court found UST's objections to be unpersuasive. Finally, the court notes that, should Conwood be convinced that particular people possess important documents, it has many tools to obtain the documents other than motion practice based on generic, overbroad requests.

2. Conwood's motion to compel a response by UST under Rule 26(a) with respect to UST's counterclaim is sustained. However, Conwood's motion to bar the use of documents not produced in initially in the Rule 26 disclosures is denied.

3. Conwood's motion to compel with respect to Swisher and Swedish Match (first documents request numbers 12 and 13) is denied.

The purpose of this opinion is not to take either party, or either party's counsel, to task for the discovery issues which have arisen in this case. Counsel on both sides are of the highest quality. Nonetheless, significant discovery problems have arisen in this major case. It is the goal of the court to get the case ready for trial promptly and efficiently, so that the real merits of the case may be fairly resolved.

Rule 45, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Parts C&D:

(C) Protection of Persons Subject to Subpoenas

(1) A party or an attorney responsible for the issuance and service of a subpoena shall stake reasonable steps to avoid imposing undue burden or expense on a person subject to that subpoena. The court on behalf of which the subpoena was issued shall enforce this duty and impose upon the party or attorney in breach of this duty an appropriate sanction, which may include, but is not limited to, lost earnings and a reasonable attorney's fee.

(2) (A) A person commanded to produce and permit inspection and copying of designated books, papers, documents or tangible things, or inspection of premises need not appear in person at the place of production or inspection unless commanded to appear for deposition, hearing or trial.

(B) Subject to paragraph (d) (2) of this rule, a person commanded to produce and permit inspection and copying may, within 14 days after service of the subpoena or before the time specified for compliance if such time is less than 14 days after service, serve upon the party or attorney designated in the subpoena written objection to inspection or copying of any or all of the designated materials or of the premises. If objection is made, the party serving the subpoena shall not be entitled to inspect and copy the materials or inspect the premises except pursuant to an order of the court by which the subpoena was issued. If objection has been made, the party serving the subpoena may, upon notice to the person commanded to produce, move at any time for an order to compel the production. Such an order to compel production shall protect any person who is not a party or an officer of a party from significant expense resulting from the inspection and copying commanded.

(3) (A) On timely motion, the court by which a subpoena was issued shall quash or modify the subpoena if it

(i) fails to allow reasonable time for compliance;

(ii) requires a person who is not a party or an officer of a party to travel to a place more than 100 miles from the place where that person resides, is employed or regularly transacts business in person, except that, subject to the provisions of clause (c)(3)(B)(iii) of this rule, such a person may in order to attend trial be commanded to travel from any such place within the state in which the trial is held, or

(iii) requires disclosure of privileged or other protected matter and no exception or waiver applies, or

(iv) subjects a person to undue burden.

(B) If a subpoena

(i) requires disclosure of a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information, or

(ii) requires disclosure of an unretained expert's opinion or information not describing specific events or occurrences in dispute and resulting from the expert's study made not at the request of any party, or

(iii) requires a person who is not a party or an officer of a party to incur substantial expense to travel more than 100 miles to attend trial,

the court may, to protect a person subject to or affected by the subpoena, quash or modify the subpoena or, if the party in whose behalf the subpoena is issued shows a substantial need for the testimony or material that cannot be otherwise met without undue hardship and assures that the person to whom the subpoena is addressed will be reasonably compensated, the court may order appearance or production only upon specified conditions.

(D) Duties in Responding to Subpoena.

(1) A person responding to a subpoena to produce documents shall produce them as they are kept in the usual course of business or shall organize and label them to correspond with the categories in the demand.

(2) When information subject to a subpoena is withheld on a claim that it is privileged or subject to protection as trial preparation materials, the claim shall be made expressly and shall be supported by a description of the nature of the documents, communications, or things not produced that is sufficient to enable the demanding party to contest the claim.

Rule 45, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Parts C&D:

(C) Protection of Persons Subject to Subpoenas

(1) A party or an attorney responsible for the issuance and service of a subpoena shall stake reasonable steps to avoid imposing undue burden or expense on a person subject to that subpoena. The court on behalf of which the subpoena was issued shall enforce this duty and impose upon the party or attorney in breach of this duty an appropriate sanction, which may include, but is not limited to, lost earnings and a reasonable attorney's fee.

(2) (A) A person commanded to produce and permit inspection and copying of designated books, papers, documents or tangible things, or inspection of premises need not appear in person at the place of production or inspection unless commanded to appear for deposition, hearing or trial.

(B) Subject to paragraph (d) (2) of this rule, a person commanded to produce and permit inspection and copying may, within 14 days after service of the subpoena or before the time specified for compliance if such time is less than 14 days after service, serve upon the party or attorney designated in the subpoena written objection to inspection or copying of any or all of the designated materials or of the premises. If objection is made, the party serving the subpoena shall not be entitled to inspect and copy the materials or inspect the premises except pursuant to an order of the court by which the subpoena was issued. If objection has been made, the party serving the subpoena may, upon notice to the person commanded to produce, move at any time for an order to compel the production. Such an order to compel production shall protect any person who is not a party or an officer of a party from significant expense resulting from the inspection and copying commanded.

(3) (A) On timely motion, the court by which a subpoena was issued shall quash or modify the subpoena if it

(i) fails to allow reasonable time for compliance;

(ii) requires a person who is not a party or an officer of a party to travel to a place more than 100 miles from the place where that person resides, is employed or regularly transacts business in person, except that, subject to the provisions of clause (c)(3)(B)(iii) of this rule, such a person may in order to attend trial be commanded to travel from any such place within the state in which the trial is held, or

(iii) requires disclosure of privileged or other protected matter and no exception or waiver applies, or

(iv) subjects a person to undue burden.

(B) If a subpoena

(i) requires disclosure of a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information, or

(ii) requires disclosure of an unretained expert's opinion or information not describing specific events or occurrences in dispute and resulting from the expert's study made not at the request of any party, or

(iii) requires a person who is not a party or an officer of a party to incur substantial expense to travel more than 100 miles to attend trial,

the court may, to protect a person subject to or affected by the subpoena, quash or modify the subpoena or, if the party in whose behalf the subpoena is issued shows a substantial need for the testimony or material that cannot be otherwise met without undue hardship and assures that the person to whom the subpoena is addressed will be reasonably compensated, the court may order appearance or production only upon specified conditions.

(D) Duties in Responding to Subpoena.

(1) A person responding to a subpoena to produce documents shall produce them as they are kept in the usual course of business or shall organize and label them to correspond with the categories in the demand.

(2) When information subject to a subpoena is withheld on a claim that it is privileged or subject to protection as trial preparation materials, the claim shall be made expressly and shall be supported by a description of the nature of the documents, communications, or things not produced that is sufficient to enable the demanding party to contest the claim.
