Miguel Estrada is no household name. But both parties see his bid for a judgeship as an issue in 2004

By Debra Rosenberg
NEWSWEEK

March 24 issue — When George W. Bush nominated him to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in May 2001, Miguel Estrada seemed like a shoo-in.

A 41-YEAR-OLD Honduran immigrant with a solid resume, he'd clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a federal prosecutor during Bush I and then as assistant solicitor general in the Clinton administration. As a trial lawyer, he didn't even have the kind of incriminating paper trail that sometimes derails judges and law professors. Democrats who suspected he was ultraconservative had no proof.

But they found a way to block his path anyway. They complained that Estrada was evasive during hearings last fall and, looking for evidence of his right-wing views, demanded internal memos from his days at the Justice Department (the administration has refused to hand them over). Last week his nomination remained bogged down in the Senate—where, for the second time, Republicans failed to muster the votes to advance it.

Estrada's trial by fire is becoming an increasingly familiar drama in Washington. Ever since the contentious hearings over conservative Judge Robert Bork's Supreme Court nomination in 1987, senators have engaged in a quiet game of retribution over judicial candidates. The Senate is supposed to offer "advice and consent" in the president's selection of federal judges. But over the years, the two parties have blamed each other for trying to pack the courts with ideologues—and both have done their share of foot-dragging to slow the process. This time, Democrats oppose Estrada not because they disagree with him on the issues, but because they don't have enough information to know what he believes. They worry that if he's confirmed he could be another "stealth nominee" who, like Clarence Thomas, could make an appealin g pick for the Supreme Court.

Although it takes only a simple majority to confirm a nominee, quirky rules allow senators to stall the process unless there are 60 votes to shut off debate. Last month Democrats launched a filibuster against Estrada—but it's hardly the 24/7 talkathon out of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington." In today's low-profile drama, senators pause for other business. Though the battle has been overshadowed by the brewing war with Iraq, it has sent the normally collegial Senate into partisan bickering. "I don't think there's any question the Senate is broken," says Judiciary chairman Orrin Hatch.

Both parties hope the standoff will galvanize their political base. The White House wants to use it in the ground war of the 2004 campaign. GOP strategists concede that, so far, most voters don't even know who Miguel Estrada is. But they hope to portray Democrats as anti-Hispanic obstructionists. "I'm not saying it'll be a top-tier issue, but if we run an ad campaign we can get people fired up," says GOP consultant Charlie Black. One likely battleground: Florida, where the White House is encouraging Housing Secretary Mel Martinez to run for the Senate seat now occupied by Democratic presidential hopeful (and filibuster supporter) Bob Graham.

Democrats bristle at the idea that they're anti-Hispanic. "What idiocy," says Texas Rep. Charlie Gonzales, a member of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, which, along with a number of Latino legal and activist groups, have lined up against Estrada. He says his constituents care more about Iraq, prescription-drug coverage and immigration.

Last week Bush asked the Senate to outlaw filibusters on nominees and hold "timely" votes on his judicial picks. A few senators are quietly trying to find an endgame. Hatch, who predicts Estrada will eventually be confirmed, also hints he has "procedural ways" to end the filibuster. But with more controversial nominees in the pipeline—Bush resubmitted nominations for Priscilla Owen and Charles Pickering, both rejected by Democrats last fall—tension is only likely to rise. If the fight is this heated over an appellate judge, Bush can only imagine the battle he'll face if he tries to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court.

*****KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT AT THE AZORES*****

*Monday is a moment of truth for the world. Many nations have voiced a commitment to peace and security, and now must show that commitment by supporting the immediate and unconditional disarmament of Saddam Hussein.

*Saddam Hussein is a threat to the security of free nations. He is a danger to his neighbors and a sponsor of terrorism. He's an obstacle to progress in the Middle East, and for decades has been the cruel oppressor of the Iraq people.

*Fifteen years ago, Saddam Hussein launched a chemical weapons attack on the Iraqi village of Halabja, killing thousands without mercy or shame. Saddam has proven he is capable of any crime. We must not permit his crimes to reach across the world.

*Saddam Hussein has a history of mass murder and possesses the weapons of mass murder. He agreed to disarm of these weapons over a decade ago.

*UN Security Council Resolution 1441 demanded once again Iraq's full and immediate disarmament, and promised serious consequences if the regime refused to comply. That resolution was passed unanimously and its logic is inescapable; the Iraqi regime will disarm itself, or the Iraqi regime will be disarmed by force.

*Iraq's liberation would be the beginning, not the end, of our commitment to its people. We will supply humanitarian relief, bring economic sanctions to a swift close, and work for the long-term recovery of Iraq's economy. And Iraq's natural resources would be used for the benefit of their owners, the Iraqi people.

*Iraq has the potential to be a great nation. Her people are skilled and educated. We're committed to the goal of a unified and democratic Iraq where members of all ethnic and religious groups are treated with dignity and respect.

*To achieve this vision, we will work closely with the international community, including the UN and our coalition partners. If military force is required, we'll seek new Security Council resolutions to encourage broad participation in the process of helping the Iraqi people build a free Iraq.

KEY QUOTES FROM THE AZORES SUMMIT, 3-16-03

"The UN must mean something. Remember Rwanda, or Kosovo. The UN didn't do its job. And we hope [Monday] the UN will do its job....I will work hard to see to it that at least from our perspective, that the UN is able to be a responsibility body, and when it says something, it means it."
-President Bush

"We will support representative government that unites Iraq on the democratic basis of human rights and the rule of law....[And] we will help rebuild Iraq not because of the problems of conflict, where if it comes to that, we will do everything we can to minimize the suffering of the Iraqi people, but...because of the appalling legacy that the rule of Saddam has left the Iraqi people."
-British Prime Minister Blair

"If Saddam Hussein wants to disarm and avoid the serious consequences that he has been warned about by the United Nations, he can do so....[H]is is the sole responsibility."

Rumble for the Robes

Miguel Estrada is no household name. But both parties see his bid for a judgeship as an issue in 2004

By Debra Rosenberg
NEWSWEEK

March 24 issue - When George W. Bush nominated him to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in May 2001, Miguel Estrada seemed like a shoo-in.

A 41-YEAR-OLD Honduran immigrant with a solid resume, he'd clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a federal prosecutor during Bush I and then as assistant solicitor general in the Clinton administration. As a trial lawyer, he didn't even have the kind of incriminating paper trail that sometimes derails judges and law professors. Democrats who suspected he was ultraconservative had no proof.

But they found a way to block his path anyway. They complained that Estrada was evasive during hearings last fall and, looking for evidence of his right-wing views, demanded internal memos from his days at the Justice Department (the administration has refused to hand them over). Last week his nomination remained bogged down in the Senate-where, for the second time, Republicans failed to muster the votes to advance it.

Estrada's trial by fire is becoming an increasingly familiar drama in Washington. Ever since the contentious hearings over conservative Judge Robert Bork's Supreme Court nomination in 1987, senators have engaged in a quiet game of retribution over judicial candidates. The Senate is supposed to offer "advice and consent" in the president's selection of federal judges. But over the years, the two parties have blamed each other for trying to pack the courts with ideologues-and both have done their share of foot-dragging to slow the process. This time, Democrats oppose Estrada not because they disagree with him on the issues, but because they don't have enough information to know what he believes. They worry that if he's confirmed he could be another "stealth nominee" who, like Clarence Thomas, could make an appealing pick for the Supreme Court.

Although it takes only a simple majority to confirm a nominee, quirky rules allow senators to stall the process unless there are 60 votes to shut off debate. Last month Democrats launched a filibuster against Estrada-but it's hardly the 24/7 talkathon out of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington." In today's low-profile drama, senators pause for other business. Though the battle has been overshadowed by the brewing war with Iraq, it has sent the normally collegial Senate into partisan bickering. "I don't think there's any question the Senate is broken," says Judiciary chairman Orrin Hatch.

Both parties hope the standoff will galvanize their political base. The White House wants to use it in the ground war of the 2004 campaign. GOP strategists concede that, so far, most voters don't even know who Miguel Estrada is. But they hope to portray Democrats as anti-Hispanic obstructionists. "I'm not saying it'll be a top-tier issue, but if we run an ad campaign we can get people fired up," says GOP consultant Charlie Black. One likely battleground: Florida, where the White House is encouraging Housing Secretary Mel Martinez to run for the Senate seat now occupied by Democratic presidential hopeful (and filibuster supporter) Bob Graham.

Democrats bristle at the idea that they're anti-Hispanic. "What idiocy," says Texas Rep. Charlie Gonzales, a member of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, which, along with a number of Latino legal and activist groups, have lined up against Estrada. He says his constituents care more about Iraq, prescription-drug coverage and immigration.

Last week Bush asked the Senate to outlaw filibusters on nominees and hold "timely" votes on his judicial picks. A few senators are quietly trying to find an endgame. Hatch, who predicts Estrada will eventually be confirmed, also hints he has "procedural ways" to end the filibuster. But with more controversial nominees in the pipeline-Bush resubmitted nominations for Priscilla Owen and Charles Pickering, both rejected by Democrats last fall-tension is only likely to rise. If the fight is this heated over an appellate judge, Bush can only imagine the battle he'll face if he tries to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court.

Rumble for the Robes

Miguel Estrada is no household name. But both parties see his bid for a judgeship as an issue in 2004

By Debra Rosenberg

NEWSWEEK

March 24 issue - When George W. Bush nominated him to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in May 2001, Miguel Estrada seemed like a shoo-in.

A 41-YEAR-OLD Honduran immigrant with a solid resume, he'd clerked for Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy, served as a federal prosecutor during Bush I and then as assistant solicitor general in the Clinton administration. As a trial lawyer, he didn't even have the kind of incriminating paper trail that sometimes derails judges and law professors. Democrats who suspected he was ultraconservative had no proof.

But they found a way to block his path anyway. They complained that Estrada was evasive during hearings last fall and, looking for evidence of his right-wing views, demanded internal memos from his days at the Justice Department (the administration has refused to hand them over). Last week his nomination remained bogged down in the Senate-where, for the second time, Republicans failed to muster the votes to advance it.

Estrada's trial by fire is becoming an increasingly familiar drama in Washington. Ever since the contentious hearings over conservative Judge Robert Bork's Supreme Court nomination in 1987, senators have engaged in a quiet game of retribution over judicial candidates. The Senate is supposed to offer "advice and consent" in the president's selection of federal judges. But over the years, the two parties have blamed each other for trying to pack the courts with ideologues-and both have done their share of foot-dragging to slow the process. This time, Democrats oppose Estrada not because they disagree with him on the issues, but because they don't have enough information to know what he believes. They worry that if he's confirmed he could be another "stealth nominee" who, like Clarence Thomas, could make an appealing pick for the Supreme Court.

Although it takes only a simple majority to confirm a nominee, quirky rules allow senators to stall the process unless there are 60 votes to shut off debate. ## Strategy Revealed!

A parody.

By Robert Alt

here seems to be a lot of confusion surrounding the judicial confirmations imbroglio. As luck would have it, I happened to stumble across what appears to be a strategy memo, shedding some light on the opposition to these nominees.

To: Teddy & Tom

From: Your friend for the American way

Re: Talking Points

So far, so good with the filibuster. Here's a recap of points to emphasize:

We Don't Know Anything About Miguel Estrada Because He Won't Answer our Questions . . .

Sure, Mr. Estrada answered over 125 questions during his marathon confirmation hearing, but what does that really tell us? O.K., I know that some of the questions asked were intended to bait Mr. Estrada to ignore the judicial-canon prohibitions regarding announcing how you would decide future cases (for example, Senator Leahy's question asking whether considering race or gender in hiring or selection would meet the strict scrutiny standard of Adarand v. Pena, despite the fact that this is an open question before the D.C. Circuit), but it was all in good fun. And never mind the fact that despite multiple invitations, few of you have actually submitted written questions to Mr. Estrada. Senator Blanche Lincoln did [note to TD: make sure she loses her parking spot]. Boy, I hope no one ever asks what these "unanswered questions" are . . . that would be a tough one. If that happens, the key is to repeat phrases like "Estrada hasn't filled out his application."

If Only He Would Turn Over the Justice Department Memos . . .

Yes, we all know that the memos are probably about as revealing as a burka . . . but that's why it's brilliant. You see, the Justice Department knows that they can't turn them over. But I don't need to tell you that: you've seen the letter signed by every living solicitor general saying what a terrible idea this is. Just keep on citing to the Bork hearings as a precedent, and soon you may be able to call those hearings "fair" without snickering.

Estrada Is A Right-Wing Extremist . . .

Forget everything we said about not knowing anything about Estrada. We know that he's an extremist. "How?" you may ask. Well, his old boss at the DOJ, Paul Bender, told us so. Yes, this is the same Paul Bender who gave him outstanding reviews, praising his legal analysis, but we can ignore that. And yes, this is the same Paul Bender who was such a liberal lightning rod that career staffers complained to the press that he had a tendency to "impugn people's work and their motives and their integrity," but no one really remembers that. And yes, this is the same Paul Bender who was chief counsel to a committee that recommended the abolition of pornography laws, and is thought responsible for the Clinton DOJ's more liberal position on child pornography. Let's try not to mention that last one.

Teddy, you seemed concerned about the contradiction here between not knowing anything, and at the same time saying that we know Estrada is an extremist. Just follow TD's lead: After the last vote, he said both things in the course of the same article, and no one even blinked.

We're Not Anti-Hispanic or Anti-Woman

Of course we're not. Who could possibly get that impression? Sure, we call Estrada a "Hispanic Clarence Thomas" and hold press conferences denouncing him as "not really Hispanic," but that doesn't make us anti-Hispanic. We're very pro-Hispanic, so long as we're sure we can count on you to issue what we deem to be Hispanic decisions.

Some people are stating that we've subjected Estrada to a double standard. Whatever you do, don't let people figure out that you peppered Estrada with over 100 questions because the D.C. Circuit is sooo important, but then when you had another D.C. Circuit nominee before you (who happened to be White), you chose to all-but-ignore him and instead to direct virtually all your questions to a Sixth Circuit nominee. If that comes to light, just blame the fact that there were three nominees before the committee. That really forced you to ask questions only of the Sixth Circuit nominee, after all.

Then there are all those accusations that you treat women candidates differently. Sure, Michael McConnell wrote that Roe is illegitimate and he gets confirmed, while Justice Owen applies Supreme Court precedent and gets voted down in committee. But it serves her right. Doesn't she understand how she's supposed to rule? Whatever you do, make sure that people don't realize that she never actually ruled against Roe and has made it clear that she would uphold it.

Oh, and while we're on the subject of how the Senate is treating women nominees, could you make sure that Senator Feinstein stops calling Justice Cook "Mrs. Cook?" She did it three times on the floor the other day. Pretty soon, people might start noticing, and that would be embarrassing.

I really don't know how anyone could honestly accuse the Democrats of being insensitive to minorities. I mean, sure, you opposed the Civil Rights Act, and you are the only party with a former Klansman and three former segregationists in Congress, but that's all old news. Don't people realize that when you are the party of Cynthia McKinney and James Moran, sensitivity comes as easy to you as, well, spelling and foreign policy.

Keep up the good work. Soon we'll be able to fill the bench with people we can count on.

Keeping 2004 in focus

Donald Lambro

White House political adviser Karl Rove and Housing and Urban Development Secretary Mel Martinez met last week to discuss challenging Florida Sen. Bob Graham in the 2004 election.

Whether Mr. Martinez could beat the popular former governor and three-term senator remains doubtful, but that may not be the chief reason Mr. Rove wants the HUD secretary on the Florida ballot.

What this really boils down to are three things: the state's huge Hispanic vote, Mr. Graham's refusal to break with the Democrats' filibuster against Miguel Estrada's nomination to the D.C. Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals, and improving President Bush's chances of carrying a pivotal state he barely won in 2000.

Mounting evidence shows a Bush-guided GOP is making inroads into the Hispanic vote, especially in Florida. Republicans won 35 percent of the Hispanic vote nationally last November and President Bush's brother, Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, won 40 percent of that vote in his state. Cuban-born Mr. Martinez would be expected to do even better than that.

Despite Florida's reputation as one of the nation's most Republican-leaning states, it remains a wild card in presidential politics. But the Democrats' opposition to Mr. Estrada, a Honduran immigrant who has become a Latino success story, could put the state firmly into George Bush's column.

The longer the Democrats block a majority vote on Mr. Estrada (he has at least 55 votes for confirmation), the angrier Hispanics and Latinos become. Mr. Rove knows that anger could mean votes for Mr. Martinez and for Mr. Bush.

Administration sources tell me Mr. Rove has promised Mr. Martinez the full support of the White House, including presidential fund-raising and campaign appearances.

The White House says it has clamped down on presidential politics while the country faces a war with Iraq. However, Mr. Rove is already working behind the scenes on next year's elections, recruiting Senate candidates in key states and preparing for Mr. Bush's campaign.

In an exclusive interview in his West Wing office, the president's chief campaign strategist refused to talk about what he is doing, but makes it clear presidential politics is never far from his mind.

Whomever wins the Democratic presidential nomination is going to pose a serious challenge to Mr. Bush's re-election bid, he says. "I think at the end of the day, whoever emerges from the Democratic process of selecting a candidate for president will be strong."

"Nine times out of 10 the process of selecting the presidential candidate strengthens the eventual nominee, not weakens him," he says. In other words, for every George McGovern, there are many more Jimmy Carters and Bill Clintons.

It is a lesson Mr. Rove remembers very well, as does Mr. Bush, whose father was trounced by Mr. Clinton in 1992.

Yes, most of the presidential field is made up of liberal, Northeast candidates who are outside of the political mainstream, but Mr. Rove doesn't underestimate any of them. That is because winning the presidential nomination can turn a weakling into a muscular candidate. Add that to the harm a slumping economy is doing to Mr. Bush's popularity and the president could be in trouble.

Need proof? How about Michael Dukakis and Walter Mondale?

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis was a disastrous, left-wing Democrat who gave weekend furloughs to imprisoned criminals and went down to defeat.

But when Mr. Dukakis won the nomination in 1988, polls showed him in a dead heat with Mr. Bush's father.

Walter Mondale, who lost 49 states to Ronald Reagan, was within striking distance of winning in the spring of 1984.

Mr. Rove believes that the country is shifting in favor of the Republicans. "For me, the most incredible number is the number of state legislative races we won last year. We should have lost an average of 350 seats that the White House parties have suffered in the first off-year elections. Instead we gained 195 seats."

This is the first time the GOP has had a majority of the state legislative seats since 1954, and the largest number since 1928.

Winning the Senate and picking up House seats were important, but this can be "explained away" by good recruitment, the president's fund-raising and a strong national message.

"Something more substantial is going on in these state races," Mr. Rove says. "It's very hard to affect the outcome of those [races] on a national scale. To have this kind of result almost across the board, it's a pretty remarkable thing."

Mr. Rove resists any predictions this trend will continue, but he thinks there is a big reform movement going on in American politics. The once-solid black Democratic vote is becoming more diverse. Hispanics are voting for Republicans in larger numbers from New York to Texas. The "ownership class" feels threatened by the Democrats' zeal for taxation.

Many other factors are at work here, but he thinks Mr. Bush is helping to make the Republican Party more inclusive and more palatable for people to vote for. "Only time will tell how permanent, how durable and how big this is."

See men shredded, then say you don't back war
By Ann Clwyd

The London Times

Tuesday, March 18, 2003

"There was a machine designed for shredding plastic. Men were dropped into it and we were again made to watch. Sometimes they went in head first and died quickly. Sometimes they went in feet first and died screaming. It was horrible. I saw 30 people die like this. Their remains would be placed in plastic bags and we were told they would be used as fish food . . . on one occasion, I saw Qusay [President Saddam Hussein's youngest son] personally supervise these murders."

This is one of the many witness statements that were taken by researchers from Indict -- the organisation I chair -- to provide evidence for legal cases against specific Iraqi individuals for war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide. This account was taken in the past two weeks.

Another witness told us about practices of the security services towards women:
"Women were suspended by their hair as their families watched; men were forced to watch as their wives were raped... women were suspended by their legs while they were menstruating until their periods were over, a procedure designed to cause humiliation."

The accounts Indict has heard over the past six years are disgusting and horrifying. Our task is not merely passively to record what we are told but to challenge it as well, so that the evidence we produce is of the highest quality. All witnesses swear that their statements are true and sign them.

For these humanitarian reasons alone, it is essential to liberate the people of Iraq from the regime of Saddam. The 17 UN resolutions passed since 1991 on Iraq include Resolution 688, which calls for an end to repression of Iraqi civilians. It has been ignored. Torture, execution and ethnic-cleansing are everyday life in Saddam's Iraq.

Were it not for the no-fly zones in the south and north of Iraq -- which some people still claim are illegal -- the Kurds and the Shia would no doubt still be attacked by Iraqi helicopter gunships.

For more than 20 years, senior Iraqi officials have committed genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity. This list includes far more than the gassing of 5,000 in Halabja and other villages in 1988. It includes serial war crimes during the Iran-Iraq war; the genocidal Anfal campaign against the Iraqi Kurds in 1987-88; the invasion of Kuwait and the killing of more than 1,000 Kuwaiti civilians; the violent suppression, which I witnessed, of the 1991 Kurdish uprising that led to 30,000 or more civilian deaths; the draining of the Southern Marshes during the 1990s, which ethnically cleansed thousands of Shias; and the summary executions of thousands of political opponents.

Many Iraqis wonder why the world applauded the military intervention that eventually rescued the Cambodians from Pol Pot and the Ugandans from Idi Amin when these took place without UN help. They ask why the world has ignored the crimes against them?

All these crimes have been recorded in detail by the UN, the US, Kuwaiti, British, Iranian and other Governments and groups such as Human Rights Watch, Amnesty and Indict. Yet the Security Council has failed to set up a war crimes tribunal on Iraq because of opposition from France, China and Russia. As a result, no Iraqi official has ever been indicted for some of the worst crimes of the 20th century. I have said incessantly that I would have preferred such a tribunal to war. But the time for offering Saddam incentives and more time is over.

I do not have a monopoly on wisdom or morality. But I know one thing. This evil, fascist regime must come to an end. With or without the help of the Security Council, and with or without the backing of the Labour Party in the House of Commons tonight.

The author is Labour MP for Cynon Valley.

Martinez: Graham wrong to block vote on Estrada

By Mel Martinez | Special to the Sentinel
Posted March 18, 2003

I am disappointed by Sen. Bob Graham's vote last week to impede the nomination of Miguel Estrada.

President Bush has twice nominated Estrada to become the first Hispanic on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, an honor for which he is eminently qualified. Unfortunately, the Democratic leadership has denied him a confirmation vote since the spring of 2001.

Graham's vote on Thursday to maintain the filibuster is not in keeping with his long tradition of supporting the interests of Hispanics, who represent a large portion of his constituency.

Graham and the 42 Democrats who joined him have a constitutional responsibility to hold an up-or-down vote on all judicial nominees within a reasonable time frame. For this obstructionist bloc, it seems, partisanship trumps responsibility.

I applaud Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist and the Republican leadership for holding their ground and scheduling repeated votes to break the filibuster. It is time for Graham and his colleagues to stand up and vote "yes" or "no" and then explain to their constituents why they voted the way that they did.

For Hispanics and other immigrants, the opportunity to serve this great nation in public office is part of their American Dream. I know. At the age of 15, I fled Castro's Cuba, seeking a better life in the United States. Soon, I was eager to give something back to my adopted country.

Estrada and I share a similar path in our quest for the American Dream. At the age of 17, and with minimal English-language skills, the young Estrada emigrated from his native Honduras, seeking a better life and opportunity in this country. Hard work and determination enabled him to graduate with highest honors from Columbia University and then earn a law degree, also with honors, from Harvard Law School.

After college, Estrada served as a clerk to U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy and later worked for both Republican and Democratic administrations at the Department of Justice, including five years in the solicitor general's office. He has appeared 15 times before the Supreme Court, winning 10 of his cases. Recognizing his legal skills and experience, the American Bar Association unanimously gave Estrada its highest rating.

Despite these impressive credentials, many Senate Democrats have obstructed the confirmation process. Twice, they have voted to continue their filibuster and block an up-or-down vote on this outstanding nominee.

Denying Estrada a vote goes against the spirit of the Constitution's "advise and consent" clause and, I would add, against the spirit of America. Estrada, and millions of others like him, came to America because this is a land of opportunity. We should never stand in the way of qualified individuals willing to commit to public service.

I urge Sen. Graham to reconsider his actions and allow this great American success story to receive the vote that he deserves.

Mel Martinez, a lawyer in Orlando for 25 years and a former chairman of Orange County, is secretary of Housing and Urban Development. He wrote this commentary for the Orlando Sentinel.

CFJ Chastises Democrats for Unprecedented Third Cloture Vote

"Startlingly Irresponsible," says C. Boyden Gray.

Washington, D.C. - The Committee for Justice (CFJ), a group supporting the President's judicial nominees, today criticized Democrats in the U.S. Senate for their unprecedented 41-day filibuster of DC Circuit Court nominee Miguel Estrada.

"With today's third unsuccessful cloture vote, Senate Democrats pass yet another historic and infamous extraordinary milestone," CFJ Chairman C. Boyden Gray said. "Miguel Estrada is the first judicial nominee to face a prolonged filibuster, which effectively has changed the Senate's confirmation rules from a majority 51 to a super-majority 60 votes. And now he has the ill-fortune to become the first court nominee in history to sustain a third cloture vote on the floor of the U.S. Senate."

"The Democrats have clearly made obstructing Miguel Estrada a matter of party loyalty within their caucus," Gray continued. "Such tactics may play well among the far-left interest groups, but voters will be reminded on Election Day who blocked this superb Hispanic nominee from the floor vote to which he was entitled by 200 years of Senate precedent. Their cynicism with Mr. Estrada's nomination is shocking."

"Despite what Tom Daschle and Ted Kennedy argue, President Bush is following an entirely legitimate course on the judiciary," Gray also said. "He is well within his rights to nominate the qualified candidates of his choosing to the federal courts, subject to the Senate's advice and consent. Each nominee then deserves an up or down vote before the entire Senate."

"To date, every one of the President's judicial nominees has had the votes to pass by majority on the Senate floor," Gray concluded. "So much for the charge that the President's nominees are 'out of the mainstream.'"

The Committee for Justice was created to support the President's judicial nominees.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER

*****KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS ON IRAQ 3-17-03*****

*Events in Iraq have now reached the final days of decision. Peaceful efforts to disarm the Iraqi regime have failed because we are not dealing with peaceful men.

*The Iraqi regime continues to conceal some of the most lethal weapons ever devised. It has used weapons of mass destruction. It has a history of reckless aggression and a deep hatred for America and our friends. And it has aided terrorists, including al-Qaida. Using chemical, biological, or one day, nuclear weapons, obtained with the help of Iraq, terrorists could kill thousands, or more.

*The United States and other nations did nothing to deserve or invite this threat, but we will do everything to defeat it.

*The UN Security Council unanimously passed Resolution 1441, finding Iraq in material breach and vowing serious consequences if Iraq did not fully and immediately disarm. Today, no nation claims that Iraq has disarmed.

*Some permanent members of the Security Council announced they would veto any resolution that compels disarmament. The Security Council has not lived up to its responsibilities - so we will rise to ours.

*Should Saddam Hussein choose confrontation, the American people can know every measure has been taken to avoid war - and every measure will be taken to win it.

*In a free Iraq, there will be no more wars of aggression against neighbors...no more poison factories...no more executions of dissidents...no more torture chambers and rape rooms.

*In desperation, Saddam Hussein and terrorist groups might try to conduct terrorist operations.

*We are acting to protect our homeland. Should enemies strike our country, they would be attempting to shift our attention with panic, and weaken our morale with fear. In this, they would fail.

*The greatest power of freedom is to overcome hatred and violence, and turn the creative gifts of men and women to the pursuits of peace. Free nations have a duty to defend our people by uniting against the violent. America and our allies accept that responsibility.

Mosman should answer question

It's easy to overestimate a clerk's role in a Supreme Court prospect should explain position decision, but judicial

The
March 17, 2003

The 67,000-strong Basic Rights Oregon, which works to protect the civil rights of gays, lesbians and other sexual minorities, has raised a question about the judicial philosophy of U.S. Attorney Michael Mosman. Does he believe the Constitution grants gay adults the right to have sex in their own homes?

Or does he believe they have no Constitutional right to privacy? The question has arisen because Mosman, by all accounts an outstanding legal scholar, is now a candidate for a federal judgeship. Intense scrutiny of such candidates' views is rare, but in Mosman's case, there is a public record that has caused concern. Mosman was clerking for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell in 1986, when Powell supplied the swing vote in Bowers v. Hardwick. That dubious decision, notorious among homosexuals, upheld Georgia's antisodomy laws.

Mosman, in memos to Justice Powell, warned that striking down Georgia's laws against some sexual acts between consenting adults in their own homes could expand the constitutional concept of privacy unwisely. The courts have applied privacy rights narrowly, he wrote, for protection of marriage, family and procreation.

A respected biography of Powell contends that Mosman played a significant role in shaping Powell's thinking. In our view, whatever influence Mosman might have had amounts to no more than a legal thread, and is immaterial to his fitness to serve on the federal bench. What matters are his views now.

The opinion was issued 17 years ago, after all, and many people involved -- including Justice Powell himself before his death -- have repudiated it. In a later case, even the Georgia Supreme Court struck down the state's antisodomy statutes as unconstitutional. People do grow and change, and jurisprudence can be said to do the same. The question now is not Mosman's influence back then, but how Mosman's thinking on constitutional privacy rights and gay rights has evolved in the intervening years. It's a valid question.

Mosman should answer it. It's true that judicial candidates, like judges, feel constrained by ethical canons that prevent them from saying how they would rule in a future case. Open-mindedness and the ability to set aside personal views in favor of a rigorous interpretation of case law are prized in a judge. But we believe it's perfectly possible for Mosman to explain his general thinking while staying within the confines of ethical restraints.

If he is nominated by President Bush, and confirmed, Mosman could win a lifetime appointment to the U.S. District Court, a job that currently pays $154,700 a year. His appointment could conceivably be the first leap in a judicial career ending in a higher court. And that would not be a bad outcome. He appears to be an excellent candidate.

Sen. Gordon Smith, R-Oregon, has put forward Mosman's name along with those of two other prospects. So Smith needs to make sure he obtains some answers, as well. A judicial candidate's views on privacy rights are of more than academic interest, not only to Basic Rights Oregon, but also to everyone else in our state.

ARGUS LEADER (Sioux Falls, SD)

Estrada deserves full Senate vote
Editorial Board
Argus Leader
published: 3/18/2003
It's time for a Senate vote on federal appeals court nominee Miguel Estrada.

Twice, the Senate has failed to stop a filibuster, which is preventing that vote and dividing our nation.

Both sides must compromise.

Democrats say they want to ask Estrada more questions and have access to his working papers from the time he was in the Justice Department.

Estrada already has been quizzed by the Senate Judiciary Committee, so there seems little need. But if that's what it takes to get a vote, then do it. Democrats must ask the specific questions - in writing, if that is how it must be done - and the Bush administration must turn over those papers.

Do that, and there no longer will be an excuse for the filibuster.

But let's not kid ourselves about what really is going on. Democrats don't want Estrada on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. They say that he's too conservative. Say that he opposes abortion. Say whatever you want - most Democrats in the Senate don't want him.

They also know that if the nomination goes to the floor, Estrada will win.

The filibuster is the only way to stall that and maybe force the Bush administration into sending over a different nominee.

We've had enough of that.

Get the questions out in the open and ask them. Estrada should answer them.

And then, let's get on with the vote.

I will work with Maken on Hatch's staff to see what the best timing for a hearing will be. As we discussed it will either be right before April recess or in early May.

Will you confirm with me the senators your boss plans to visit and the date and times of those meetings? I will do my best to attend with you if that is okay.

Please keep me posted on all developments and I will do the same. Thanks again, Wendy

Confirmation process needs to be reformed
The U.S. Senate should reform the process by which it confirms nominees to the federal judiciary.
The current impasse over the nomination of Miguel Estrada is evidence of the partisan bottleneck that too often blocks the filling of important positions in the federal judiciary.
On Tuesday, Democrats for the third time held off a Republican attempt to break the filibuster that prevents Estrada's nomination from moving to a final vote.
Sen. Chuck Hagel was a member of the unbroken Republican bloc that voted to end the filibuster. Sen. Ben Nelson was one of only four Democrats who joined the Republicans.
The case is unusual in several respects. Appointments to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals seldom generate this much heat. A lower court nomination has never been blocked by filibuster. Also atypical is the use of a filibuster to force a nominee to provide information.
Senate Democrats believe Estrada is a stealth candidate with dangerously conservative views, quite possibly anti-abortion and anti-affirmative action. But Estrada has never taken a public stand on either of those controversial issues.
So Democrats want access to confidential memos Estrada wrote while he worked in the U.S. Justice Department. Every living U.S. solicitor general, whether Democrat or Republican, has written in opposition to the demand on the grounds the office deliberations must remain confidential in order its ability to vigorously defend U.S. interests.
Estrada emigrated from Honduras to the United States as a 17-year-old. By all accounts a brilliant legal mind, Estrada carved out a stellar career including a stint as a clerk at the U.S. Supreme Court and 15 appearances before the court as an attorney.
To give the Democrats their due, suspicions that Estrada is pro-life and conservative must have some basis in fact. Estrada might not have left a paper trail, but over the years colleagues undoubtedly learned his views. But in recent decades U.S. Senators have become too accustomed to creating gridlock on judicial nominations. Republicans did it in the Clinton administration and Democrats are doing it now. "It's payback on top of payback on top of payback," complained freshman Sen. Mark Pryor, D-Ark. Currently the Judicial Conference of the United States, which oversees administration of the courts, has declared 29 of the 55 judicial vacancies have been open so long they are "judicial emergencies."
What's needed is a process that sets timelines for hearings, committee votes and a vote on the Senate floor no matter who is in the White House. That might benefit Republicans now, but it would benefit Democrats the next time the balance of power switches in Washington.

Confirmation process needs to be reformed
The U.S. Senate should reform the process by which it confirms nominees to the federal judiciary.
The current impasse over the nomination of Miguel Estrada is evidence of the partisan bottleneck that too often blocks the filling of important positions in the federal judiciary.
On Tuesday, Democrats for the third time held off a Republican attempt to break the filibuster that prevents Estrada's nomination from moving to a final vote.
Sen. Chuck Hagel was a member of the unbroken Republican bloc that voted to end the filibuster. Sen. Ben Nelson was one of only four Democrats who joined the Republicans.
The case is unusual in several respects. Appointments to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals seldom generate this much heat. A lower court nomination has never been blocked by filibuster. Also atypical is the use of a filibuster to force a nominee to provide information.
Senate Democrats believe Estrada is a stealth candidate with dangerously conservative views, quite possibly anti-abortion and anti-affirmative action. But Estrada has never taken a public stand on either of those controversial issues.
So Democrats want access to confidential memos Estrada wrote while he worked in the U.S. Justice Department. Every living U.S. solicitor general, whether Democrat or Republican, has written in opposition to the demand on the grounds the office deliberations must remain confidential in order its ability to vigorously defend U.S. interests.
Estrada emigrated from Honduras to the United States as a 17-year-old. By all accounts a brilliant legal mind, Estrada carved out a stellar career including a stint as a clerk at the U.S. Supreme Court and 15 appearances before the court as an attorney.
To give the Democrats their due, suspicions that Estrada is pro-life and conservative must have some basis in fact. Estrada might not have left a paper trail, but over the years colleagues undoubtedly learned his views. But in recent decades U.S. Senators have become too accustomed to creating gridlock on judicial nominations. Republicans did it in the Clinton administration and Democrats are doing it now. "It's payback on top of payback on top of payback," complained freshman Sen. Mark Pryor, D-Ark. Currently the Judicial Conference of the United States, which oversees administration of the courts, has declared 29 of the 55 judicial vacancies have been open so long they are "judicial emergencies."
What's needed is a process that sets timelines for hearings, committee votes and a vote on the Senate floor no matter who is in the White House. That might benefit Republicans now, but it would benefit Democrats the next time the balance of power switches in Washington.

Two Times a Justice

Priscilla Owen gets another chance to explain the proper role of the judiciary.
From the March 17, 2003 Dallas Morning News:
By Terry Eastland

WHATEVER ELSE HAPPENS in the life of Priscilla Owen, the Texas Supreme Court justice has made history. Of a sort. Two years ago, President Bush nominated her for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Senate Judiciary Committee finally gave her a hearing in July and then--on a party-line, 10-to-9 vote--rejected her nomination. In January, Bush resubmitted her name, and last week she sat for a second time before the Judiciary Committee.

Justice Owen thus became the first judicial nominee ever to be defeated in committee only to see her name resubmitted and then to be given another hearing. The resurrection of her nomination obviously was made possible by the midterm elections. Had Senate control not shifted to the Republicans--had the Senate remained Democratic--Owen probably wouldn't have been renominated.

At the start of last week's hearing, Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch, now the Judiciary Committee chairman, remarked that Justice Owen "is perhaps the best sitting judge I have ever seen nominated." Senators, it is fair to say, have a gene that inclines them to hyperbole. But Owen is a good state judge and remains an excellent nominee for the 5th Circuit.

Not that committee Democrats can be expected finally to grasp that. As can be seen from last week's hearing, they remain wedded to wrong ideas about judging, not least that judging is best understood in terms of actual results.

Take, for example, Sen. Edward Kennedy, who (as he did in July) faulted Owen for failing to achieve "balance" in her votes on cases involving worker rights, environmental rights and civil rights. Properly understood, however, judging is about the process a judge uses to decide cases, not about making sure the outcomes or results "balance." Justice Owen argued against "balanced" judging in her exchange with Kennedy:

"I can assure you that I do not ever try to achieve a result. I don't look at whether I want one side to win or the other side, or one segment of the population to be favored over another. That is not my job. And I certainly don't keep score and say, 'OK, you know . . . 50 percent of this side has to win 50 percent of the time, and every six months or so we've got to even the score here.' That's not what judging is about. That is not what I do."

Later, Democratic Sen. Richard Durbin asked Owen to identify opinions of hers "that aren't popular with the established power structure in Texas." For Durbin, apparently, judging is at least to some extent about its popularity or lack thereof.

Owen politely asked Durbin to define what he meant by the "established power structure," whereupon he moved to other matters. But if Durbin had listened to Owen's answer to Kennedy, he would have known that, for her, judging isn't about trying to favor "one segment of the population" over another. He also would have heard her say what judging properly is:

"What I try to do as a judge is to put aside personal feelings. . . . The question is what does the law say, what does the law require. . . . I judge cases by what is right, not by what is politically correct."

Notably, Durbin showed little interest when, in answer to his question, "where would you place yourself on the spectrum between judicial activism and strict construction," Owen discussed the process she uses in interpreting the state's constitution and statutes. As she explained it, that process starts with a reading of the text itself but also may require looking at related texts, pertinent history and case law. For Durbin and too many Democratic senators, process is, well, boring. Yet process is what judging intensely involves.

The Judiciary Committee will vote on the Owen nomination--perhaps as early as this week. You can assume the Democrats, claiming that Owen favors business and is hostile to abortion rights, again will vote "no." Because they constitute a minority, however, they won't be able to stop her nomination in committee. It will go to the Senate floor, where, Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison says, "I hope it won't be filibustered."

If it is, expect Durbin and his colleagues to speak of Justice Owen's "bias" against the causes they hold dear, notwithstanding that it is her bias in favor of trying fairly to interpret the law that is her most compelling qualification.

Two Times a Justice

Priscilla Owen gets another chance to explain the proper role of the judiciary.

From the March 17, 2003 Dallas Morning News:

By Terry Eastland

WHATEVER ELSE HAPPENS in the life of Priscilla Owen, the Texas Supreme Court justice has made history. Of a sort. Two years ago, President Bush nominated her for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The Senate Judiciary Committee finally gave her a hearing in July and then--on a party-line, 10-to-9 vote--rejected her nomination. In January, Bush resubmitted her name, and last week she sat for a second time before the Judiciary Committee.

Justice Owen thus became the first judicial nominee ever to be defeated in committee only to see her name resubmitted and then to be given another hearing. The resurrection of her nomination obviously was made possible by the midterm elections. Had Senate control not shifted to the Republicans--had the Senate remained Democratic--Owen probably wouldn't have been renominated.

At the start of last week's hearing, Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch, now the Judiciary Committee chairman, remarked that Justice Owen "is perhaps the best sitting judge I have ever seen nominated." Senators, it is fair to say, have a gene that inclines them to hyperbole. But Owen is a good state judge and remains an excellent nominee for the 5th Circuit.

Not that committee Democrats can be expected finally to grasp that. As can be seen from last week's hearing, they remain wedded to wrong ideas about judging, not least that judging is best understood in terms of actual results.

Take, for example, Sen. Edward Kennedy, who (as he did in July) faulted Owen for failing to achieve "balance" in her votes on cases involving worker rights, environmental rights and civil rights. Properly understood, however, judging is about the process a judge uses to decide cases, not about making sure the outcomes or results "balance." STATEMENT BY IRAQI PRESIDENT SADDAM HUSSEIN FOLLOWING BEGINNING OF ATTACKS AGAINST IRAQ (NOTE: REMARKS ARE THROUGH INTERPRETER)

PRESIDENT HUSSEIN: In the name of God, most merciful, most compassionate, those who are (fought ?), as they are treated unjustly, were granted permission to fight, and God will give them victory. (Audio break from source.)

;;;;; (In progress) -- 20th of March 2003, corresponding to 17th of the Muharram of 1422 Hejri (ph), the criminal -- the criminal junior Bush committed, he and his aides, his crime that he was threatening Iraq with and humanity as well. His criminal act comes from -- and the act of those who helped him and his followers, this is added to the series their shameful crimes against Iraq and humanity. This is a start for other additional crimes.

;;;;; All Iraqis and those who care in our nation, sacrificing for you and for the values of our nation and the banners of fighting and for its religion and for the soul, the family, the son. And here, I will not repeat what should be said. It is a duty of all people, good people -- repeat what has to be done to protect and defend this dear nation and the values and sacreds.

;;;;; But I will say for -- to each -- this is a must on all of us, but I say, on any of us, on each of us in the family of Iraq, the believing, the honest family that is being treated unjustly by its enemy. On all of us, on each of us we have to remember what was said and what was pledged, and these days will go as God wills. This will add -- these days will add to your record, your bright record, all you male and female dignified people. This is your share of dignity and victory, and everything that will raise the status before God and will let the infidels down. The enemies of humanity and God.

;;;;; And that you will be victorious, oh Iraqis. And with you are -- victorious (sic) will be with you are the people of the sons of your nation. And you are victorious with the will of God. And you enemies will be in humiliation and defeat, God willing.

;;;;; Go you sword. I'm not -- draw your sword, and I'm not afraid.

;;;;; Draw your sword, the enemy is making a fuss, and the enemy will not be stopped, except by -- let the reigns be let go any way, but hope is there. Let thunder storms go, until the guidance appears and injustice goes away. And let dawn be the way to confront all bad. And pull your trigger, and keep the fire on. Draw your sword. No one will be victorious unless he is a man, and a brave man. And prepare a banner and call for the way of God that the wound will heal quickly.

;;;;; Dear friends, those who fight evil in the world, peace be upon you. You notice how Bush, the careless, underestimated your values that you declared against the war, and your call, your honest call for peace. And he committed this shameful crime this day. We pledge in our name and in the name of the command and leadership and the name of the people, the fighting people and its heroic army in its history and record of civilization, we pledge that we will confront the invaders, and we will get them to, God willing, to the limit where they will lose their patience and they will lost any hope in accomplishing what they were driven to by the Zionists, the criminal Zionists and those who have agendas. They will go to the lowest levels, and they will be defeated, a defeat that we hope for them after they went far in injustice and evil.

;;;;; We love peace, and we are working towards this peace. Iraq will be victorious, will win. And with Iraq, our nation and humanity will win, and evil will suffer from what makes it incapable of doing any evil or crime at a level similar to the American/Zionists alliance against nations and at the forefront is our dignified nation, Arab nation. God is great. God is great.

;;;;; At the beginning -- at the forefront is our nation. God is great. God is great. And live long Iraq and Palestine. God is great. God is great. And our Arab nation, dignified nation, let that nation live and the human brotherhood, let it live with those who love peace and security and the right of people in freedom according to justice and equality. God is great, and let the losers lose. Let Iraq live. Long live jihad, and long live Palestine.

END.

Brett - as discussed, an invitation to the Garland County LDD in Hot Springs, AR (4/15) was sent out without our knowledge and without us having ever seen it. In the flyer, there were three errors:
1) Ken's name is misspelled;
2) It used Ken's official title on a political invite; and
3) It referred to Ken as the "expected chairman of the George W. Bush re-election committee in 2004."

Per your instruction, we notified the party that this had gone out without WH approval and was inaccurate. They will proceed with the event, but will run any other printed materials by us before sending out. Please let me know if there is any other action that we should take. Thanks.

The SG's Office provided us with a list of 20 possible questions for which they would like us to provide draft answers. The attached document, which incorporates Brett's comments, contains a draft of these answers. It also contains a few additional questions that may arise and draft answers thereto. Once we have everyone's thoughts we can transmit this back to the SG's Office.

Judge -- Should I share these with Jay? Or would you prefer to review them first?

Thanks,
Noel

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING
BRIEFERS: SECRETARY OF DEFENSE DONALD RUMSFELD; AND GENERAL RICHARD MYERS, CHAIRMAN, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

PENTAGON BRIEFING ROOM, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA

SEC. RUMSFELD: Good morning. The United States and the international community have made every effort to avoid war. Diplomacy and sanctions over more than a decade have not worked. And now, by rejecting president Bush's ultimatum, the Iraqi regime has chosen military conflict over peaceful disarmament.

;;;;; Coalition forces hit a senior Iraqi leadership compound last evening. The damage assessment on the compound is pending. That was the first. It will likely not be the last. The days of the Saddam Hussein regime are numbered.

;;;;; We continue to feel that there's no need for a broader conflict if the Iraqi leaders act to save themselves and to prevent such further conflict.

;;;;; What will follow will not be a repeat of any other conflict. It will be of a force and scope and scale that has been beyond what has been seen before. The Iraqi soldiers and officers must ask themselves whether they want to die fighting for a doomed regime or do they want to survive, help the Iraqi people in the liberation of their country and play a role in a new, free Iraq.

;;;;; If Saddam Hussein or his generals issue orders to use weapons of mass destruction, whether on coalition forces, Free Iraqi forces, neighboring countries or innocent Iraqi civilians as they have done before, those orders should not be followed.

;;;;; Do not follow orders to destroy dams or flood villages. Do not follow orders to destroy your country's oil, which is the Iraqi people's, and they will need it to rebuild their country when that regime is gone. Following such orders would be to commit crimes against the Iraqi people. See those orders for what they are -- the last desperate gasp of a dying regime. Those who follow orders to commit such crimes will be found and they will be punished. War crimes will be prosecuted, and it will be no excuse to say, "I was just following orders." Any official involved in such crimes will forfeit hope of amnesty or leniency with respect to past actions.

;;;;; Military units that want to live and act with honor should listen to coalition radio broadcasts to receive instructions as to how you may demonstrate that you do not intend to fight. You will have a place in a free Iraq if you do the right thing. But if you follow Saddam Hussein's orders, you will share his fate. And the choice is yours.

;;;;; To the Iraqi people, let me say that the day of your liberation will soon be at hand. Coalition forces will take every precaution to protect innocent civilians. Once hostilities begin, stay in your homes and listen to coalition radio stations for instructions on what to do to remain safe and out of the line of fire. Iraqi civilians: Do not go to work. Stay away from military targets and any facilities where Saddam Hussein has moved military assets.

;;;;; Arrangements are being made to care for refugees and displaced persons inside of Iraq.

;;;;; There is no need for Iraqis to flee across their borders into neighboring countries. Listen for instructions on how to get food, water and medical supplies. Iraq belongs to the Iraqi people. And once Saddam Hussein's regime is removed, we intend to see that functional and political authority is placed in the hands of Iraqis as quickly as is possible. Coalition forces will stay only as long as necessary to finish the job, and not a day longer.

;;;;; Let me say a word about our coalition. Already more than 35 nations have publicly associated themselves with the coalition effort in Iraq, and that does not include a large number of other countries that are helping in very important ways but some of which prefer to do so privately at this time. As with the case in Afghanistan, our policy is to accept help from countries on a basis that is comfortable to them and let them characterize how, in fact, they are helping the coalition.

;;;;; As the operation unfolds, the number of countries publicly associating themselves with the coalition is likely to grow, just as it has with Operation Enduring Freedom. The coalition in Iraq includes countries from every part of the world, including a large number of Muslim-majority countries. Some are supporting the effort publicly; others are doing so privately.

;;;;; This is not a war against a people. It is not a war against a country. It is most certainly not a war against a religion.

;;;;; It is a war against a regime.

;;;;; Many countries have committed combat and combat support forces to the effort in Iraq. Others are providing access, basing, overflight, refueling, force protection and intelligence-sharing. Still others have pledged to participate in stability operations and post-Saddam reconstruction efforts. When the situation on the ground permits, the humanitarian activities will go forward promptly. Each coalition member is playing a critical role in the liberation of a repressed people and the disarmament of a dangerous regime.

;;;;; Finally, to those in our government, let me say a word about security of operational details. It's essential that everyone with access to classified operational details exercise discipline. There is no excuse for anyone revealing sensitive information that will almost certainly put the lives of men and women in uniform at risk. At a time when coalition forces are poised for battle, any compromise of classified information that gives the enemy knowledge of the positions of our forces or the plans or the timing of future operations can result in the death of coalition servicemen and -women. Don't do it.

;;;;; Let me close by saying that war is the last choice; let there be no doubt. The American people can take comfort in knowing that their country has done everything humanly possible to avoid war and to secure Iraq's peaceful disarmament. We have the greatest fighting forces on the face of the Earth. Our nation is blessed to have so many brave men and women who voluntarily risk their lives to protect our country.

;;;;; As they prepare for battle, the prayers of all Americans are with them and with their families.

;;;;; The coalition against Iraq, called Operation Iraq Freedom, is large and growing. This is not a unilateral action, as is being characterized in the media. Indeed, the coalition in this activity is larger than the coalition that existed during the Gulf War in 1991. And that coalition -- those forces are ready and they will prevail. The Iraqi regime will be removed, and with it, the threat it poses to this country and to the world.

;;;;; General Myers?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Thank you, Mr. Secretary.

;;;;; Let me add just a few remarks to what the secretary said about operation security. As we approach large-scale operations, our responsibility is to give the troops the best opportunity for success and to protect their lives as best as possible. There are military preparatory actions that need to be accomplished before any major attack. That said, we still want to preserve tactical surprise as much as possible. So we will not confirm or deny any preparatory actions, whether accurate or inaccurate. We will acknowledge the obvious if those actions become visible, but give little details, as the secretary just did on the strike on an Iraqi leadership target. Many of these preparatory actions in the hours ahead are vital to the lives of our troops and the safety and security of Iraq's neighbors. I know our nation and our friends and allies will understand and support these efforts.

;;;;; There's been much talk about how easy this conflict could be. Let me assure you that we do not regard combat as an easy task. Warfare is dangerous, we will have casualties. But I'll tell you that our troops are the best trained and the best led in the world. They understand their mission to defend America, and they will carry out their mission successfully.

;;;;; Let me reassure you that when full-scale combat operations begin, we will make the appropriate announcement and provide information on some of those preparatory actions that were accomplished.

;;;;; Finally, to join in with the secretary, we wish Godspeed to all the soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines, Coast Guardsmen, and civilians from the U.S. and our coalition forces who may find themselves in harm's way.

;;;;; With that, we'll take your questions.

;;;;; Q General Myers, you had said earlier that Saddam Hussein is not a target of the war. How do you reconcile that with the first strikes being cruise missile strikes on where Saddam Hussein might be?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Regime leadership command and control is a legitimate target in any conflict, and that was the target that was struck last night.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Charlie?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, two quick ones, if I may. Did you have information --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: With all this crowd, why don't we just try one?

;;;;; Q All right. You said a leadership compound was hit. Did you have information Saddam might have been there?

;;;;; And quickly, there are also reports from southern Iraq that oil fires have begun. Is there any information that the Iraqis might have begun setting their oil fields on fire?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I thought we agreed on just one.

;;;;; Q All right, let's go with the oil one.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: The -- I -- we're not on the ground. I have seen indication and reports from people that there may be -- that the Iraqi regime may have set fire to as many as three or four of the oil wells in the south. And we're in the process of attempting to get additional information on that.

;;;;; (To General Myers) Is that your information as well?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: That's correct.

;;;;; Q Do you plan to try and move quickly to stop that, if --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Needless to say, it is a crime for that regime to be destroying the riches of the Iraqi people. And -- but I'm not going to get into operational details.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: And the people that are carrying it out from the regime are part of that crime.

;;;;; Q When you --

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Are part of that crime.

;;;;; Q Are what, sir?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: They're part of that crime, the people that are carrying this out, carrying these orders out.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, if indeed we missed Saddam last night, what does that do to the Iraqi spirit? And does it provide an early propaganda victory for the regime?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: You know, I'm not into the tick-tock of every hour and every minute. We have a serious task before us and it is to remove that regime and find the weapons of mass destruction, and replace it with a government that does not want those weapons and will not threaten its neighbor and will maintain a single country. This is a process that takes some time, and it will ebb and flow. And when it's over, the regime will be gone.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, you and other officials have emphasized how massive the actual attack on Iraq will be once it starts, urging the Iraqi military not to fight. Is it also your hope that some elements of the military might remove Saddam themselves? And how would you assess the chance of that?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I don't think it's possible to assess the chances, but there's no question that the people of Iraq and the people of the region have to know that his days are numbered, he's not going to be there. In some period of time, he's gone and that regime is gone, to the great benefit of the Iraqi people. They'll be liberated. There are various ways it could happen. One way is that the people of Iraq close to him could decide that he's no longer of value to the country -- which would be the understatement of the morning. He could decide it's time to leave and he'd prefer to stay alive and find a way to escape.

;;;;; There will be Iraqis that will surrender.

;;;;; There will be Iraqis that offer to help us. There will be Iraqis who offer not only to help us but to help liberate the country and to free the Iraqi people. That -- the more of them there are and the -- the greater the chance that the war will be limited and less broad.

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary --

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: The fewer there are, the risk's that it will be broader and more difficult, take more time, and more lives will be lost.

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, what evidence do you have that it's actually working, that there are actually Iraqis who are heeding this call to --

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We have evidence.

;;;;;;;; Q And what sort of evidence is that?

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Good evidence.

;;;;;;;; Yes?

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, the White House last night --

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, do you have reason to believe that Saddam Hussein was at the compound that was struck last night, or his sons, for that matter?

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We had what I would characterize as very good intelligence that it was a senior Iraqi leadership compound. We do not know what the battle damage assessment will be when that type of information is available to us. We -- and I'll leave it right there.

;;;;;;;; Pam?

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, at about the same time that this strike began in Iraq, there was a new assault launched in southern Afghanistan, involving several thousand troops from 82nd Airborne. Is that a coincidence, or is that an intentional message to show that this war in Iraq is not taking away any attention from the war against al Qaeda?

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, I don't know that I'd say there's a connection.

;;;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: There --

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: It isn't taking anything away from the war against al Qaeda. And indeed the pressure will be helpful because there have been and are al Qaeda in that country.

;;;;;;;; GEN. MYERS: It is a separate operation, it is not connected, and would have been coincidence.

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, last night at the White House --

;;;;;;;; Q General Myers, could you tell us --

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We're going to have this question and then your question, and then that'll be it.

;;;;;;;; Q Thank you.

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, do you believe in fact that the man on the tape that was run on Iraqi TV last night was, in fact, Saddam Hussein?

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: There is debate about that. I have no inside information.

;;;;;;;; Q Have you seen any indication that his son, Uday, has taken control of the country?

;;;;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: No.

;;;;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, at the White House last night, a senior White House official after the president spoke said that the decision to make the strike was made some time between 6:30 and 7:00 Eastern time. It's apparent that that decision to strike was not in line with what we have been led to believe about the war plan. Was the intelligence you got fragile enough where you felt you had to go at that moment and not start with, say, shock and awe or some other phase of the war?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, Dick, calibrate me, but the first thing I'd say is I don't believe you have the war plan -- (laughter) -- a fact which does not make me unhappy. (Laughter.)

;;;;; Second, any war plan reflects the reality that one would take opportunities that present themselves. And certainly, there's no war -- a war plan is something that is a plan that's developed before things start. And the minute things start, one has to take account of the realities that you find in the world. And that is what was done last evening. That is what will be done today and tomorrow and the next day. And to not do that would be a terrible mistake.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Having intel agencies and armed forces that are flexible is key to victory, and that's what you saw.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I really -- really wasn't kidding when I said I think that that will be the last question.

;;;;; Let me just make a comment. I did not answer a question as fully as I might have about do we have evidence that it's working. I often try to put myself in other people's shoes and ask myself, in this case, for example, an Iraqi citizen or Iraqi army soldier or an Iraqi officer, or even a Special Republican Guard official, or even people closer to Saddam Hussein. What they have to be seeing is a good deal of evidence that the Iraqi people want to be liberated. We see a great deal of evidence of that. It's a natural human tendency for people that have been brutally repressed. It manifests itself in a host of ways. We see evidence of military personnel, some have already surrendered in Kuwait. We are in communication with still more people who are officials of the military at various levels -- the regular army, the Special Republican -- the Republican Guard, the Special Republican Guard, who are increasingly aware that it's going to happen, he's going to be gone.

;;;;; And what they are probably doing -- I can't do this perfectly, but as I try to put myself in their shoes -- they have to be fearful of that regime because that regime kills people every day to enforce obedience and discipline. So they have to be fearful of the regime. On the other hand, once they are persuaded that that regime is history, it is going, it will not be there, in some reasonably finite period of time they will be gone, then their behavior begins to tip and change. And the -- when I said we have good evidence, we have not only good evidence but we have broad and deep evidence that suggests that there are people going through that decision-making process throughout that country today, and that is a good thing.

;;;;; Thank you very much.

END.

Much More Democratic Obstruction
Democrats move to kill an entire slate of Bush nominees.

lthough it was overshadowed by the beginning of war, on Capitol Hill Wednesday there was a major escalation in the conflict between Senate Democrats and the White House over the president's judicial nominees.

The escalation had nothing to do with the ongoing Democratic filibuster over appeals-court candidate Miguel Estrada. Instead, it involved a Democratic decision to block, and, at least for the moment, kill a total of four Bush nominees to the federal courts of appeals. Acting in concert, Michigan Democratic Sens. Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow told the Judiciary Committee they will block the nominations of Richard Griffin, David McKeague, Susan Bieke Neilson, and Henry Saad to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. In addition, Levin and Stabenow said they will block the nomination of Thomas Ludington to a seat on the U.S. District Court. That means the two senators are attempting to kill every Bush nominee from the state of Michigan. Levin and Stabenow stopped the nominations by returning negative blue slips, which are the documents in which senators indicate approval or disapproval of judicial nominees from their home states. Blue slips are a Senate custom with a long and controversial history, but both parties concede it is nearly impossible for a nominee of either party to win confirmation over the objections of both of his or her home-state senators. That means the nominations of Griffin, McKeague, Neilson, Saad, and Ludington are effectively dead. It was an extraordinary move on the part of Levin and Stabenow, a kind of Wednesday-night massacre that sent Republicans scrambling to research whether such wholesale obstruction had any precedent in Senate history, and what a GOP response might be. The move is all the more remarkable because much of the Sixth Circuit is in what the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts calls a "judicial emergency." The court normally has 16 members, but half of those seats are now empty. The Levin/Stabenow maneuver is the culmination of a conflict that has been years in the making and involves Democratic accusations that Republicans mistreated appeals court nominees selected by President Clinton. When President Bush took office, Levin and Stabenow demanded that he renominate two Clinton appeals court nominees from Michigan, Helene White and Kathleen McCree Lewis, whose nominations had not been acted on by the GOP-controlled Senate. White is married to Sen. Levin's cousin. In a letter sent yesterday to White House counsel Alberto Gonzales, Levin, and Stabenow wrote, "On more than one occasion, the White House counsel has stated that some nominees during the previous administration were wrongly treated....We have said repeatedly that it would be wrong for the president to seek confirmation of his nominees to the Michigan seats on the Sixth Circuit before the acknowledged wrong was corrected."

The White House has refused the demand, saying that it would be an unprecedented surrender of the president's constitutional authority to nominate federal judges.

The story of Levin's and Stabenow's demands and the White House's response are extensively documented in two letters written by Gonzales more than a year ago. One was to the Senate Judiciary Committee's then-chairman Patrick Leahy on August 17, 2001, and the other was to Levin and Stabenow on November 2, 2001.

"Although I understand [Levin's and Stabenow's] desire to have the president renominate two of President Clinton's candidates for the court of appeals...we believe it would be unfair to expect the president to do so," Gonzales wrote to Leahy that August. "The net result of our discussions is an apparent standoff in which the two Michigan senators are attempting (inappropriately, in my view) to use the threat of negative blue slips against President Bush's Michigan circuit nominees to compel the president to renominate Clinton nominees based on grievances in which President Bush played no part."

Despite the Democrats' threats, the White House stood firm. Gonzales continued: "To my knowledge, before President Bush renominated Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit, no president had ever nominated to a court of appeals an individual previously nominated to the court of appeals by his predecessor from a different party. For any senator to insist that this extraordinary and historic act be repeated is simply not fair. Appointments to the federal courts of appeals are uniquely matters of presidential prerogative."

Finally, Gonzales gave Leahy a bit of history. "More than 50 nominations to the federal courts lapsed without Senate action at the end of the previous Bush administration in 1992," Gonzales wrote, "including a nominee to the Sixth Circuit from Michigan, John Smietanka, who had waited almost a year for a hearing and never received one. No one ever attempted to claim that fairness or any other consideration obliged President Clinton to resubmit these names, and he did not."

Although Gonzales suggested there was room for compromise in the standoff, there was no solution. In fact, Levin and Stabenow significantly ratcheted up their demands, threatening to block not only nominees from their own state, but also for the entire Sixth Circuit, which includes Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee in addition to Michigan. The White House still refused to budge, calling the threat a distortion of the Senate's constitutional advise and consent role.

Negotiations between the two sides continued in the fall of 2001. Levin and Stabenow wanted the president to set up a bipartisan commission to select judicial candidates from Michigan (something Bush had done in California, but only to select lower, district court nominees; the president pointedly said that circuit court nominees would be chosen by the White House alone.) The White House again refused, and in November 2001, Gonzales laid out the administration's argument at length, this time directly to Levin and Stabenow.

"I would hope that you would...acknowledge and respect the powers of appointment that rightfully belong to President Bush under the Constitution and would not continue to insist on unprecedented devices that would trench upon those powers," Gonzales wrote. "Circuit court appointments are uniquely matters of presidential prerogative, and nowhere in the nation has the president surrendered his power to select circuit court nominees to a commission, bipartisan or otherwise."

Gonzales expanded on the theme of fairness that he had begun in his earlier letter to Leahy. "We note that the record of unfair treatment of Michigan judicial nominees may not be as one-sided as your letter suggests," Gonzales wrote. "At the end of President George H.W. Bush's administration, two Michigan nominees to the federal courts, John Smietanka and Henry Saad, were denied hearings by the Democratic Senate and failed to attain confirmation. Neither man ever claimed a right to be renominated by the new administration, and all participants in the process accepted and adhered to the time-honored understanding that the accumulated inventory of judicial vacancies at the start of a new presidential term was the new president's to fill."

Gonzales said the White House had offered to consider the two failed

Clinton circuit court nominees, White and Lewis, for nomination to lower federal courts. "In our view, this was a proposal that reflected exceptional generosity, good faith, and respectful bipartisanship," Gonzales wrote. "Indeed, no similar generosity was ever shown to John Smietanka or Henry Saad during the previous administration." In the end, none of the talking did any good, and yesterday, Levin and Stabenow blocked every nominee from Michigan. The move suggests that the Democratic strategy to block Bush judges extends far beyond selected targets like Miguel Estrada and Priscilla Owen. Indeed, it appears that Democrats may plan to use a variety of techniques to try to block every, or nearly every, Bush nominee to the federal appeals courts.

CBS "EARLY SHOW" INTERVIEW WITH: SENATE MINORITY LEADER TOM DASCHLE (D-SD)

HARRY SMITH: Last night the Senate unanimously approved a resolution in support of American troops and President Bush. The House is expected to pass similar legislation today.

;;;;; Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle is at the Capitol this morning. He joins us. Good morning.

SEN. DASCHLE: Good morning, Harry.

MR. SMITH: What was that moment last night when the Senate unanimously passed that resolution?

SEN. DASCHLE: Well, I think it was a wonderful opportunity for us to demonstrate that whatever differences we have had before this started are gone as we consider now the support for our troops, our admiration for what they're doing, and our great expectation and hope that they'll return safely having succeeded in their mission.

;;;;; We also indicated our support for the commander-in-chief and expressed our appreciation to Tony Blair and the leadership that he's shown. So it was a rare moment these days in Congress, but it was a good one.

MR. SMITH: You are under a certain amount of criticism, especially directly from the White House, as the day before the war actually began, you talked about the failure of diplomacy. Did you feel along the way, and especially in the hours after that, that some Republicans were actually questioning your patriotism?

SEN. DASCHLE: Well, I did, Harry. I think that it's unfortunate that in this time when we're fighting for democracy, there are some in this country who would squelch it. But that's behind us. I think now the most important thing we can do is to show the unity and show our support and show our great appreciation for the work and the effort of our troops.

MR. SMITH: As a member of the United States Senate, sometimes you're privy to information that isn't necessarily available to some of us. What are things that you're hearing? There are indices that you may have available to you that give you some sort of extra illumination in terms of how the war effort is going.

SEN. DASCHLE: Well, you all do such a great job these days. I'm not sure there's much that the general public doesn't know that we know. I think it's a good opportunity for us really to be briefed on a regular basis. We were briefed last night by the secretary of Defense. We're going to be briefed again this morning by members of both the Defense Department as well as the CIA.

;;;;; So we're being briefed, but it's in large measure maybe a little more specificity and a little more confirmation of the things that you're reporting quite regularly this morning.

MR. SMITH: There have been a number of protests around the country; dozens and dozens of arrests specifically in San Francisco. Talk to me a minute about the idea of people using civil disobedience at a time like this, tying up police and other law enforcement officials, especially at a time when we're at heightened security alert.

;SEN. DASCHLE: Well, I know that it poses some very serious challenges for our law enforcement and first responders. I think that is a real concern. But, again, this is a democracy. I may disagree with their position or their tactics, but in a democracy I think we have to expect some of that. The freedom to express oneself is really what we're fighting about in Iraq.

;;;;; So, as I say, I think that while it does pose some very serious problems, I think those are problems to be expected under circumstances like this.

MR. SMITH: All right, Senator Daschle, thanks for your time today; appreciate it.

SEN.DASCHLE: My pleasure, Harry.

END.

Asbestos Study Group (ASG) Asbestos Trust Fund: An Insurance Perspective

Insurers strongly support federal asbestos litigation reform, and look forward to working with the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to achieve this goal. This legislation should provide fair compensation, clear legal rules, and financial certainty.

I. If ever an issue was ripe for congressional action, it is asbestos litigation reform.

Fortunately, there is growing bipartisan consensus that Congress must act in 2003. Property-casualty insurers strongly support legislation to fix the asbestos litigation system. We have provided to the Chairman and the Committee legislation which, at its core, would create a standard to only pay medical claims for those who are truly sick, liberalize the statute of limitations for asbestos claims, eliminate huge claim consolidation actions that lead to shotgun settlements, and prevent abusive forum shopping. We have developed additional reforms to address other serious legal abuses, some of which have emerged or worsened since our legislative proposal was first developed.

II. Responding to the Asbestos Study Group paper.

The ASG recently gave Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Hatch a paper describing an alternative administrative approach to reform. This concept paper outlines the structural framework for a privately funded, no-fault claims facility. While the ASG has undertaken a considerable amount of time and effort in developing a more informative paper, many significant issues remain unanswered.

On the positive side, the ASG paper appears to contain several legal reforms favored by insurers, including national medical criteria, occupational exposure requirements, collateral source offsets, caps on damage awards (in the form of scheduled payment requirements), and removal of asbestos claims from state courts. However, it also leaves many critical questions unanswered, including: benefit levels, allocation of financial responsibility among businesses and insurers, potential impact on businesses, insurers, and uncompensated claimants if the fund runs out of money; the future role of courts with respect to review of individual claim decisions; and transition issues from the current state tort system to an administrative trust fund system.

Notwithstanding these uncertainties, insurers stand ready to work with ASG and others to resolve issues and reach a successful conclusion.

III. Some important, unique attributes of the insurance mechanism must be understood.

- Liability insurance is a promise to pay a future claims obligation of a specific policyholder, should it become due. Insurers calculate rates and establish necessary reserves based on projections of their own policyholders' obligations. Translating this individual policyholder-driven indemnification obligation into a system of scheduled payments from a trust fund, without regard to a specific policyholder's obligations, is conceptually at odds with the insurance contract defining insurer responsibilities. As there is no obvious way to translate the individual obligations of an insurance contract into the group obligations of a trust fund, it is not possible to evaluate whether any trust fund approach is viable until specifics are provided regarding, for example, eligibility requirements, benefit levels, funding and insurer participation. Once specifics are provided, insurers stand ready to reach a constructive resolution of this issue.
- The insurance industry actually consists of several sub-sectors, including primary insurers (providing coverage on a first-dollar basis or after a deductible is met); excess insurers (who provide higher layers of coverage directly to the policyholder; and reinsurers (contractually obliged to reimburse primary and excess carriers for a portion of liability payments they are legally obligated to make). The insurance industry comprises a relatively small number of companies as compared to the thousands of manufacturing companies that are currently involved in the pending legislation. The financial impact on insurers versus manufacturing companies may be different and, therefore, careful consideration should be given to the methodology adopted. Further, each segment of the industry faces relatively different levels of asbestos exposure for each policyholder, and different “time value of money” concepts and expectations as to probable losses are built into their financial models.

- The financial viability of the insurance mechanism depends on all sectors playing their role. Many insurers are concerned that reinsurers may refuse to provide reimbursement for trust fund payments based on a mathematical formula. We believe that reinsurers will strenuously assert that the reinsurance contract does not obligate reinsurers to reimburse primary insurers for payments made to a trust fund, especially when those payments are based on the concept of “rough justice,” rather than the policyholders’ actual liability claims obligations. Although the ASG proposal suggests legislation “would address reinsurance issues,” the proposal does not specify how it would do so. Most U.S. primary insurers rely heavily on reinsurance to assist them in meeting their asbestos claims liabilities, and they would suffer financially if such reinsurance were uncollectible.

IV. Several operational issues arise with allocating payments for an asbestos claims trust fund across the insurance industry. These issues arise out of good faith business concerns on the part of insurance companies that recognize the enormity of the asbestos litigation problem.

- A dollar of premium does not equal a dollar of asbestos exposure. Premiums are based upon an assessment of the risk to be insured at the time of issuance of the policy. Many policies were issued decades ago. There is no precedent for allocating liability based on historic premiums. Also, companies that insured past defendant-manufacturers are in a different position than those insuring future defendants-manufacturers and so-called peripheral defendants.
- Most policyholders have multiple insurers and insurance arrangements. Given the long latency associated with asbestos disease, decades of policies are involved. Many insureds changed insurers over the years; even for those who did not, there may be different policy language, different policy limits, and different reinsurers. There is no precedent for using mathematical formulae to capture this complexity in an equitable way.
- Primary and excess policies face different levels of risk compared to premium volume. The insurance industry includes both primary and excess layers of coverage. Each sector has a different ratio of premium dollar/exposure dollar, dependent on the policyholder in question. There is no precedent for establishing a formula that reflects these complexities.
- Different insurers have employed different settlement strategies. Over the past 20 years of asbestos litigation, insurers have maintained a variety of different strategies in defending policyholders and litigating coverage questions. As a result, some believe that they have addressed more of their potential asbestos liability; they would be reluctant to participate in any funding scheme that does not take this into account. Still other insurers would maintain that a more aggressive litigation strategy has reduced their potential asbestos liability and would want this recognized in a funding scheme.

Insurers are open to suggestions from ASG or others about how to resolve the uncertainty cited in this paper. We stand committed to engaging constructively with all stakeholders to achieve federal asbestos litigation reforms.

Marines Briefly Raise U.S. Flag Over Iraqi Port

By Adrian Croft

UMM QASR, Iraq (Reuters) - U.S. Marines briefly raised the Stars and Stripes flag over the new port area of Umm Qasr on Friday after facing tougher than expected resistance in and around the southern Iraq port.

Reuters correspondent Adrian Croft, traveling with the Marines, saw troops lower an Iraqi flag soon after they arrived at the port complex, replacing it with the U.S. flag.

Some time later, Marines returned and removed the Stars and Stripes. No reason was given for the decision, but Washington has consistently stressed that invading U.S. forces want to liberate Iraq, not occupy it.

U.S. troops moved into the huge port area to hunt for Iraqi soldiers who might be hidden in the site. A dozen Marine helicopters landed on a massive parking lot inside the perimeter fence to bring in reinforcements.

"The (new) port is about 40 percent secure. There is still shooting going on," said Marine Captain Rick Crevier from Placerville, California, one of the operation's commanders.

He added the old port, one mile away, was still under observation.

U.S. Marines poured over the Kuwaiti border just after dawn heading for Umm Qasr, but were almost immediately pinned down in a two-hour firefight with Iraqi soldiers armed with machineguns and anti-tank rockets.

The Marines called in tanks and artillery fire to clear their path.

STIFF RESISTANCE

Asked if the resistance was stiffer than expected, Crevier said: "Yes, a lot more. We had some dug in troops and we were starting to receive some mortar fire."

He added one Marine was slightly injured by broken glass.

He had no information about Iraqi casualties, but the bodies of two men in civilian clothes were seen lying in the streets as a U.S. armored convoy moved to the port area.

A third man sat in the road bleeding heavily. Nearby, two cars were ablaze.

U.S. commanders said they were keen to secure Umm Qasr, Iraq's largest commercial port, because they wanted to use it to bring in humanitarian aid.

When Marines arrived at the port they were met by a huge portrait of Saddam Hussein, showing a younger version of the Iraqi President wearing a Western suit, which was hung next to the main entrance.

Hours later, the picture had been cut out of its frame and spirited away, allegedly by a Marine looking for a war trophy.

Marines Briefly Raise U.S. Flag Over Iraqi Port

By Adrian Croft

UMM QASR, Iraq (Reuters) - U.S. Marines briefly raised the Stars and Stripes flag over the new port area of Umm Qasr on Friday after facing tougher than expected resistance in and around the southern Iraq port.

Reuters correspondent Adrian Croft, traveling with the Marines, saw troops lower an Iraqi flag soon after they arrived at the port complex, replacing it with the U.S. flag.

Some time later, Marines returned and removed the Stars and Stripes. No reason was given for the decision, but Washington has consistently stressed that invading U.S. forces want to liberate Iraq, not occupy it.

U.S. troops moved into the huge port area to hunt for Iraqi soldiers who might be hidden in the site. A dozen Marine helicopters landed on a massive parking lot inside the perimeter fence to bring in reinforcements.

"The (new) port is about 40 percent secure. There is still shooting going on," said Marine Captain Rick Crevier from Placerville, California, one of the operation's commanders.

He added the old port, one mile away, was still under observation.

U.S. Marines poured over the Kuwaiti border just after dawn heading for Umm Qasr, but were almost immediately pinned down in a two-hour firefight with Iraqi soldiers armed with machineguns and anti-tank rockets.

The Marines called in tanks and artillery fire to clear their path.

STIFF RESISTANCE

Asked if the resistance was stiffer than expected, Crevier said: "Yes, a lot more. We had some dug in troops and we were starting to receive some mortar fire."

He added one Marine was slightly injured by broken glass.

He had no information about Iraqi casualties, but the bodies of two men in civilian clothes were seen lying in the streets as a U.S. armored convoy moved to the port area.

A third man sat in the road bleeding heavily. Nearby, two cars were ablaze.

U.S. commanders said they were keen to secure Umm Qasr, Iraq's largest commercial port, because they wanted to use it to bring in humanitarian aid.

When Marines arrived at the port they were met by a huge portrait of Saddam Hussein, showing a younger version of the Iraqi President wearing a Western suit, which was hung next to the main entrance.

Hours later, the picture had been cut out of its frame and spirited away, allegedly by a Marine looking for a war trophy.

Bill Would Make Ridge Fifth In Line For Presidency.; Roll Call <http://www.rollcall.com/issues/48\_73/news/992-1.html> (3/24, Bresnahan) reports, "The Homeland Security Department has been open for business for two months, but Tom Ridge is still the only Cabinet secretary without a spot in the line of presidential succession.; Now, if a handful of Members of Congress have their way, he'll vault past the majority of his peers in the line to the Oval Office."; Roll Call continues, "Sen. Mike DeWine (R-Ohio) introduced a proposal in January to rectify the situation, and House Government Reform Chairman Tom Davis (R-Va.) has gotten into the act as well.; Under the identical proposals offered by DeWine and Davis, the Presidential Succession Act would be altered to put the secretary of Homeland Security in the fifth spot among potential successors in the Cabinet if the president and other top leaders die or are otherwise incapacitated. ...; Homeland Security would rank after the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Defense and the Attorney General in the Cabinet, and would be eighth overall among all potential successors to the presidency.
Interior would be next in line after Homeland Security, followed by Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, Transportation, Energy, Education and finally Veterans Affairs."; Roll Call adds, "Norman Ornstein, a constitutional scholar at the American Enterprise Institute who has studied the issue of presidential succession, said the Davis-DeWine proposal needs to be enacted."

FYI. This matter has started to get a fair amount of attention, most of it from the New York Times. Brett, I know you worked on Global Crossing issue so you may be interested as well.

NYTimes Decries Conflict Of Interest In Perle's Roles. The New York Times (3/24) editorializes, "As chairman of the Defense Policy Board, Richard Perle has been an influential architect of the Bush administration's Iraq policy and war plans. At the same time, it turns out, he has signed on to represent a major telecommunications company that has a strong financial interest in lobbying the Defense Department. This is a conflict pure and simple, and Mr. Perle should immediately drop one of his two roles." The Times continues, "Mr. Perle, who served as an assistant defense secretary under President Reagan, is indisputably an important part of the current Defense Department. ... Global Crossing, the telecommunications giant, is now in bankruptcy. It has retained Mr. Perle to help persuade the Defense Department to drop its objections to a proposed sale to foreign buyers in Hong Kong and Singapore. The deal has been opposed by the Defense Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation as a threat to national security because it would put Global Crossing's fiber optics network, which is used by the United States government, under foreign control. Mr. Perle stands to make up to $725,000 from his work for Global Crossing." The Times concludes, "Mr. Perle insists that there is no conflict in his case because the Defense Policy Board is not involved in approving the Global Crossing deal. But that is not the right test. Global Crossing's fee is clearly payment, at least in part, for the influence Mr. Perle exerts through his Defense Department post, and federal ethics rules prohibit using public office for private gain. To remove the conflict, Mr. Perle will have to choose between the gain and the office."

NOAA at Commerce has allegedly, since 1999, promoted individuals requiring senate confirmation without notifying the senate of the promotion. There have been 251 promotions impacting 196 individuals where the appropriate senate action was NOT taken.

Under normal circumstances the Senate would perform a simple ministerial task of approving the promotion. No fuss no muss in almost every case. Since this has come to light, however, Senator McCain is interested in finding the cause and or culprit. As a result, an IG investigation may be ordered.

For our purposes, Senator McCain plans to clear up the backlog quickly. Just be aware that the issue exists, ok?

What kind of inquiry. From whom. I think it will mesh with last year's and the one the year before. I am not sure where original 2001 version came from.

*****KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT*****

*American and Coalition forces are making good progress in the early stages of the war to rid Iraq of weapons of mass destruction and free the Iraqi people from the clutches of a brutal dictatorship. We thank all the coalition forces for their bravery and courage in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

*Saddam Hussein is losing control of his country. We're slowly, but surely, making progress, but it is evident that this war is in the early phases, and this is just the beginning of a tough fight.

*We're executing a plan which will achieve our objectives, and at the same time, spare innocent life.

*Coalition forces have treated Iraqi military prisoners humanely, and we expect any captured Coalition forces to be treated humanely in return. If not, those who mistreat our prisoners will be treated as war criminals.

*We have made a promise to the people of Iraq that we will do everything we can to protect innocent life. We're doing that, and we will do everything we can to help the Iraqi people. When free from the dictatorship of Saddam Hussein, life in Iraq will be a lot better.

Not yet (too early). We worked last year to get some language in it (it is an annual deal) that was relevant to judges issue I think. Cannot remember how proclamation interacted with his remarks as President did a law day/may 9 anniversary event last year in 450. What is being suggested?

Mich. Senators Nix Judicial Nominations

By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: Liberals unveil yet another plan to keep President Bush from appointing federal judges.

On Capitol Hill, there is another indication that liberal Democrats are playing political hardball with President Bush's judicial nominees. Both senators from Michigan are trying to block the president's selections by issuing "negative" blue slips.

Blue slips are a Senate custom, used for judicial nominees. Senators from a nominee's state submit them to the Senate Judiciary Committee, indicating their approval or disapproval of the selection. The president has submitted four nominees from Michigan -- Richard Griffin, David McKeague, Susan Bieke Neilson and Henry Saad -- to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Democratic Sens. Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow, both liberals, have issued negative blue slips on all four nominations.

On the surface, the Michigan senators explain that when President Bush took office, they asked him to re-nominate two of President Clinton's nominees from Michigan. Bush refused, and that seems to be why they're blocking his current nominees.

But John Nowacki, who tracks judicial nominations for the Free Congress Foundation, said Levin and Stabenow -- both liberals - - simply don't want conservative nominees on the federal courts.

"It's a matter of politics, and I think the American people ought to be outraged about this," Nowacki said. "It has nothing to do with the qualifications or even any controversy about these nominees that are being blocked, because there is no controversy about these nominees."

In reality, the nominations could now be dead, because Republicans and Democrats agree that, without the support of a nominee's home senators, the road to confirmation becomes extremely hard.

There is hope, however, and it comes in the form of Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. Kay Daly, with the Coalition for a Fair Judiciary, said the blue slips are a tradition, and not necessarily binding on Hatch.

"It is now up to Hatch as to whether or not he's actually going to honor those blue slips," Daly said. "If Chairman Hatch decides that these folks are just being obstructionist and petty, there's no binding obligation to honor blue slips."

Calls to Hatch's office were not returned, but in the past, he has said that the customary blue slip system needs to be re-worked.

TAKE ACTION: The issue of using blue slips is a matter of Senate custom and could be reviewed by Senate leaders. But regardless of whether that custom should be changed, it is important to note that Senate Democrats are still holding hostage the nomination of Miguel Estrada, whom the president wants placed on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

Please contact your senators and ask them to support allowing the Senate to vote for the president's judicial nominations. Call the Capitol switchboard at 202-224-3121. For help in contacting your senators, or to send an e-mail, please see our Legislative Action Center:

Companies Drop Planned Parenthood Support
By Stuart Shepard, correspondent

SUMMARY: Two major corporations are being taken off a pro-life group's boycott list now that they've stopped giving to the nation's leading abortion provider.

The Walt Disney Co. may be known for movies like "The Lion King," but for years it was also a company that gave money to Planned Parenthood. That is no longer the case.

Douglas Scott, with Life Decisions International, has removed Disney from his boycott list, now that the entertainment giant has gone five years without giving to the pro-abortion group.

"This was definitely a result of people speaking out," Scott said. "If people didn't speak out, (Disney) wouldn't care, they wouldn't even know that there's a big issue here."

He said Disney did not make any announcements, it just stopped writing the checks.

"The one thing a corporation hates is controversy," Scott said. "They just don't want us to be a pain in their neck for very long, so eventually they do the right thing."

The other company Scott dropped from the boycott list is American Express.

Joe Scheidler, of the Pro-Life Action League, said, like a lot of pro-lifers, he cut up his American Express card in symbolic protest. The impact appears to have been more than symbolic, however.

"There's not that enormous margin of profit we always think there is, that they can just treat half the population like dirt," Scheidler said. "They can't do it."

Scott credits the tenacity of pro-lifers for changing the giving practices of both corporations: "Never give up."

Over the past decade, more than 85 corporations have stopped giving to Planned Parenthood, costing the group $20 million.

FOR MORE INFORMATION: Life Decisions International has a list of companies still being boycotted for their contributions to Planned Parenthood. Please see the Life Decisions International Web site for details.

House Passes Military Tax Cut Bill
By David Brody, Washington, D.C., correspondent

SUMMARY: The House votes to give our fighting troops a tax break. Will the Senate follow suit?

The U.S. House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed a bill that would provide our troops fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan with added tax relief. The measure passed 422-0, one of the few examples of unanimous consent in Congress.

The bill is relatively straightforward. Our troops will get tax breaks on travel expenses, death benefits and home sales. In a time of war, who can argue with that?

"There's a unanimous feeling in Congress that our troops need this tax relief and that we want to be very supportive of them especially at this time," said Christin Tinsworth, a spokesman for the House Ways and Means Committee.

It almost didn't get done, however. The original bill was pulled from consideration last week because it had too many unrelated tax provisions. But House leaders put those in a separate bill so troops wouldn't be caught in the political crossfire.

Dennis Cullinan, with Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW), said tax relief for armed forces personnel couldn't have come at a better time.

"It demonstrates that our lawmakers are committed to doing the right thing by them and that we as a nation greatly appreciate their service," Cullinan said. "We know a lot of men and women who are serving right now are suffering economic hardship as a consequence, especially among the (National) Guard and reserves, so something like this will -- at least partially -- offset their losses."

The question now is will the partisan-bickering Senate follow suit? Tinsworth recalls how it held up the bill before.

"The Senate kept making adjustments after the House unanimously passed the bill 412-0 and 413-0," Tinsworth said. "We're hopeful that they'll just pick it up and pass it by unanimous consent and we can get it to the president."

It's unknown when the Senate will take up the bill. The original legislation capped the travel expense reduction at $500 a year, but many reservist groups felt that was too stingy. Sponsors responded by raising the reduction by $1,000.

Combating Spam Possible, Report Says

There are specific steps you can take to reduce the amount of unsolicited e-mail in your inbox, including pornographic spam. A new study reveals some key actions to take: 1) don't let your address be posted on a public Web site; 2) use a disposable address when filling out forms; and 3) the longer your e-mail address, the harder it is for junk-mailers to guess what it might be.

David Miller, with Citizens for Community Values, said today's pornographers have become as technically savvy as any other entrepreneur on the Internet.

"Parents have an obligation to keep a very close watch on the e-mail that is coming into their homes," Miller said.

While no tactic is perfect, he said families must still do as much as they can.

Conservative Student Group Decries Protest Coverage

A conservative student organization is charging the mainstream media with not telling the whole story about the so-called "Books, not Bombs" protests. What's missing in the news is mention of the fact that only a tiny percentage of students has been involved in anti-war events.

The Young America's Foundation, which looked at estimates of up to 50,000 protesters on 400 campuses, did the math, and found that fewer than 4 of every 1,000 of the nation's students protested. Melissa Moskal, a spokeswoman for the foundation, said the media made on-campus protests seem massive and then ignored the other side.

"On a lot of these campuses, there were students who were protesting the protesters, who were having pro-America 'support-our-troops' rallies, but they got no coverage at all," Moskal said.

Thanks! I sure hope you have a copy of the memo because I can't seem to locate my original copy (although I will start a full-scale search if necessary.) Do you need me to find out from AirOps what wording needed to be clarified?

Pantagraph Editorial
Monday, March 24, 2003
Stop abuse of filibuster to block court nominees
When Senate traditions and self-proclaimed "institutional responsibilities" clash with the public interest and the intent of the U.S. Constitution, it should be clear that the Constitution should prevail.
But apparently it's not clear to Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D.
Daschle shrugged off a request from President Bush for a change in Senate rules so filibusters could not be used to block judicial nominees. "I doubt very much that we'll ever permanently change the rules to deny the Senate its institutional responsibilities," Daschle said.
What about the Senate's constitutional responsibilities?
Among those responsibilities is providing "advice and consent" to the president on judicial appointments. Such appointments require only a simple majority. However, it takes 60 votes to break a filibuster -- thereby allowing a minority to thwart the will of a majority of the Senate as well as the president.
Meanwhile, vacancies remain on the federal bench while a Senate minority makes its power play.
It doesn't matter whether Republicans have done to Democratic presidents what the Democrats are doing to Republican Bush. What matters is whether the intent of the Constitution and democracy are being undermined through abuse of the filibuster. They are.
A yes-no vote is being held up on Miguel Estrada, Bush's nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Five other federal appellate court nominees also are being blocked from speedy consideration by Senate Democrats.
Even if the Estrada case is resolved and a vote is eventually taken, Bush should continue to press for the Senate to abandon the use of the filibuster to block action on judicial nominees.

to talk to the Saudis about this?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm sure we'll be in touch with the Saudis. We always are, anyway.

;;;;; Q Can you say from the podium that the Saudis are allowing the U.S. Air Force to fly missions from Prince Sultan Air Base?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I have not described from the podium what individual governments might be doing to support this effort, unless I've seen the governments themselves talk about it. And so I'm not saying from the podium what any particular country in the Middle East or in the rest of the world is doing. That -- we've always left -- for the last months, we've left that to the countries themselves to talk about.

;;;;; Steve?

;;;;; Q On the oil-for-food program resolution, what's the state of play on that? You said it was urgent. What's your hope or expectation about when that -- whatever issues that remain to be resolved can be resolved?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The discussions have continued in New York. There's another set of meetings today in New York. And we hope to reach agreement with other council members soon. I would note the secretary-general has asked for a resolution to ensure the program continues. And we consider this a matter of priority.

;;;;; Q Is there anything more you can say, Richard, about what's causing the delay in reaching agreement?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't think I can at this point.

;;;;; Experts worked over the weekend on the text. They're continuing to work yesterday and today. And as I said, we hope to resolve this soon.

;;;;; Yeah?

;;;;; Q Follow-up on that. Was Dr. Rice's visit to Secretary- General Annan related to oil-for-food?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I think it's related to the overall issues of cooperation with the United Nations. Certainly, oil-for-food and the resolution is one of our priorities right now, as well as one priority of the secretary-general. The secretary of State's talked to the secretary-general already twice today to talk about oil-for-food and a few other matters, including, I think, North Korea and Sudan. So certainly, oil-for-food is the principal subject of discussion right now between us and members of the Security Council, as well as between us and the secretary-general.

;;;;; Q Richard, can you just say -- I don't know if you've said it already, but what is our time frame for how long Kofi Annan would be the trustee of the oil-for-food program under this resolution?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't know that there's any specific time frame at this point.

;;;;; Q What about the reaction of the --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Let's slow down.

;;;;; Q Okay. Can you give us any indication of whether or not this would be something that would be ad infinitum or would eventually stop or, you know, how would we know when the Iraqis would --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Well, I mean, I can't give you a time frame, but you have to understand that the conceptual framework for this is that there are goods that are flowing now, there are things in the pipeline, things that need to be bought, money that's available. Somebody needs to be able to come forward and say, "Okay, this is what they need now. This ought to go here. This is a higher priority than something else and this is how we should spend the money right now."

;;;;; Then the second stage is to ensure the continuation of this program through whatever transition period is required as we move from military conflict to civilian rule to an Iraqi interim administration. The goal would be for the Iraqis themselves to take over this program, and frankly, eventually for Iraq to become a normal place where you don't need a program like this to ensure that people are fed; to have a regime that's not going to misuse the resources of Iraq in the ways that we've seen in the past -- that would just run an economy and have people fed.

;;;;; So, the conceptual framework is that the secretary-general is needed for the immediate and perhaps transitional period, but that as soon as possible, would want to get Iraqis involved in running the program and eventually in running an economy that doesn't require the program.

;;;;; Q Have you provided a benchmark for the United Nations Security Council as to when the Iraqis would be in full control?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't know that there's any particular time frames involved in the discussion at this point.

;;;;; Q Would the -- can I --

;;;;; Q A follow-up on that.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We've had some people waiting.

;;;;; Q Everything's a follow-up.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Everything's a follow-up.

;;;;; Q (Off mike) --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Stop.

;;;;; Betsy?

;;;;; Q Richard, the State Department will be in charge of the civil administration of Baghdad once it enters this period where Saddam Hussein is out. Can you say what the goals are; what the planning is that's going on now about that; how it will be structured; what you will try to achieve in that interim period?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't think I can do the full detail for you now; but yes, we have worked with others, including former General Garner at the Pentagon, we've contributed to his team, on people who can go in and help the Iraqis with civil administration of the country after the immediate military conflict. And the goal is to move from military circumstances, the state of affairs, to one where there's a civil administration. The goal of that is, A, to keep the central services running for the Iraqi people so that they can have an organized system of electricity and water and food distribution and, you know, roads and, you know, get the repair and reconstruction and rehabilitation work up and under way as soon as possible, but also to work with Iraqis so that they can take over more and more functions themselves. So the real goal of that team is to put themselves out of business, is to give -- is to put Iraqis in charge and to move towards an interim Iraqi administration that can run the affairs of Iraq after the conflict is over.

;;;;; Q Can you say whether you will be doing things like reorganizing their government? There are 23 ministries now.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't think I can say at that level of detail at this point.

;;;;; Q Does this tie in with the Blair visit -- (inaudible) -- secretary be on the subject of postwar Iraq? I'm trying to -- you know, I'm trying to see if the Rice visit, talks with the British, points Betsy's covering here; is there anything new from the French on this? I mean, you seem to be ready to move on a postwar plan.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Blair is prime minister of Britain.

;;;;; Q I know he is. And he and you are partners in this. But I don't think --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't think we're waiting for something from the French on this.

;;;;; Q No, but the French don't like --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Oh, okay.

;;;;; Q I mean, you're not surprised that the French don't like what you're doing, are you? I'm wondering if you've heard from the French yet or you're just going to go ahead and -- you know.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not going to try to brief on the -- I'm not even going to announce the visit.

;;;;; Has it been announced?

;;;;; STAFF (?): Yeah. (Cross talk.)

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yeah. Okay. Sorry. Just want to be careful.

;;;;; I'm not going to try to brief on the visit the White House has announced of Prime Minister Blair. But as you know, we discuss the full scope of issues with our ally and coalition partner the British. I'm sure the secretary has talked and will continue to talk to Foreign Secretary Straw about all these matters. He talks to him at least once a day, often many times more than that.

;;;;; And yes, we are working closely with the British when it comes to the U.N. resolution on oil-for-food, when it comes for pursuit of the military operations now, when it comes to the humanitarian assistance. One of the first and, I think, most immediate elements of humanitarian assistance, as soon as the port is de-mined at Umm Qasr, will be the arrival of a British ship that's already there, laden with humanitarian supplies. And that's one of the most important and coordinated efforts at humanitarian assistance.

;;;;; And we also talk to them about the longer-term issues and how we manage the whole transition back to Iraqis being in charge of their country and being responsible for their country in a way that doesn't persecute their people or threaten their neighbors. So all those things are likely to be discussed with the British any time we get together.

;;;;; Q What about -- just to follow up on the food -- oil-for-food, what about the objection of the Iraqi ambassador, saying this is violating the Charter of the U.N.? Are you now in a position of just you withdraw recognition of the Iraqi government? What --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I think if you look back at the history of this, there have been occasional, I guess, periodic reluctant acceptance of the program by the Iraqis, and some modicum of cooperation along the way. But I'm sure you can find the Iraqis on the record as ranting and raving about this program right from the start, because it was a program that we and others designed to help the Iraqi people and to keep the Iraqi government from stealing all the money that Iraq's natural resources produced and spending it on weapons, spending it on palaces, spending it on luxuries for the regime.

;;;;; So unfortunately, the regime has always objected to this program, even though we've seen their reluctant cooperation when it was renewed, and the submission of contracts and things like that as the program went on. But this kind of rhetoric has been around for a long time from them.

;;;;; Betsy?

;;;;; Q Richard, can you say how long you all envision this interim period to be?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I can't give you time frames at this point, no.

;;;;; Q And can you say who the secretary's talked to today besides -- (inaudible)?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: He's talked to President Musharraf.

;;;;; He's talked to Foreign Secretary Straw twice today. And yesterday he talked to -- I think I said Foreign Minister Sinha of India. He also talked to Foreign Minister Ivanov during the afternoon.

;;;;; Yeah. Okay. I have Nicholas waiting to --

;;;;; Q Richard, I asked -- I guess I've been asking since Friday, can you give us any more response on the -- Annan's comments regarding the fact that the U.N. weapons inspectors regime has, in fact, only been suspended, and that he would envision they'll be sent back to Iraq once hostilities stop. Is this something --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I answered the question Friday, I answered the question Monday, I'm not going to answer it again. I'll stick by my answers twice already.

;;;;; Nicholas?

;;;;; Q Yeah, Richard, you said that you were discussing with the British all the aspects of reconstruction. But are there any British members of that civilian team that's helping or will be helping the Iraqi people? And I understand there are former American diplomats engaged in that --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm -- we're not in a position to talk about the whole group at this point. We've been putting this together, been looking at how we help this transition from military rule to civilian to Iraqi rule. And i don't think the whole pattern is complete yet. But we'll talk about that when the time comes.

;;;;; Q Richard, Betsy in her first question said the State Department is in charge of running the -- will be in charge of running of administration, and you didn't seem to object to that. Is that a fair statement?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I didn't seem to confirm it. I'm not actually sure how we would describe who's in charge. I'll see if I can't --

;;;;; Q Well, we'll quote Betsy. (Laughter.)

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'll quote Betsy. That's right.

;;;;; Q Do you have any -- (off mike) -- for this building would be involved?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Again, don't have details for you yet. How -- the final shape of all this somewhat depends on how events unfold.

;;;;; Q And is it -- I'm sorry. If someone else wants to ask about the --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: No, I'm just not in a position to give you any more detail at this point --

;;;;; Q Okay. Well, will you be looking at -- well, is there -- has there been any consideration of looking outside the department to, you know, local -- you know, current civic and civil administrators in towns and cities around the country that needs their expertise, or do you guys have that kind of expertise in the department now?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't want to limit it to the one or the other. I'm sure we'll draw on expertise from wherever it can be useful.

;;;;; Okay.

;;;;; Q Richard, on Mexico, there are some press reports quoting a State Department official saying that -- it was a quote to the Mexican government asking them to fire its ambassador of the United Nations because his comments on the war in Iraq. I wonder if it is true or is not true this story --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I have not seen anything like that.

;;;;; Q Are you guys happy with the position of Mexico in the U.N. and its ambassador?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We don't -- I think -- first of all, we don't comment on other people's ambassadors. They have to be happy with them. If they're happy with them, then that's the ambassador.

;;;;; It's not a matter -- the U.S. government doesn't decide who other people appoint to positions like this.

;;;;; As far as the position of the government of Mexico, we've worked with Mexico throughout this effort, we have continued to cooperate with Mexico and we look forward to cooperate with Mexico in the Security Council.

;;;;; Terri?

;;;;; Q Yesterday Secretary Powell said that he had gotten new information on the transfer of Russian items to the Iraqi military. And I'm just wondering if you can share with us -- if he's already transferred that information to Ivanov, if you can talk about that a little bit more, and also -- well, you can answer that first.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: All right. The situation with regard to Russia and the items that they sold to Iraq is that, as you know, we've raised this over a long period of time, and particularly in the last couple weeks, with the Russians. The president spoke yesterday with President Putin, the secretary spoke yesterday with Foreign Minister Ivanov about this. The -- we have been providing information to the Russian government. We've continued to provide and, yes, we have provided them with additional information since yesterday's discussion. But we have felt all along the information we provided would have been sufficient for them to run this down and to give us a response, and we're hoping now to get a more thorough response from the Russian government, since Foreign Minister Ivanov did promise to us that he would look into it.

;;;;; Q Some questions have come up on this. One is whether Belarus, not Russia, shipped some of the equipment. Can you --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not in any more position today to go into the details of the transactions, except to say that we have had information on this that is very credible and is very solid.

;;;;; Q I mean, credible that Russian firms --

;;;;; Q I have a follow-up --

;;;;; Q Wait a minute. Credible that Russian firms did it? I'm sorry.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Credible that Russian firms have provided this equipment.

;;;;; Q Okay. How about the notion that some of the jammers weren't put on the prescribed list until December? Is your information that the material or the equipment was shipped before or after December? Because that would make a difference.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Again, I'm not in a position to go into any details of the transactions, but no, I don't have anything on the jammers themselves.

;;;;; Q And the goggles are prescribed.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The goggles are on the U.N. oil-for-food goods review list, yeah.

;;;;; Q Thank you.

;;;;; Q The Russian government has answered you every time -- well, I don't know about every time, but at least several times when you've passed along some of this specific information on the companies, the Russian government has in fact told you they've looked into it, and come back and said, "We don't think the companies are making enough of these items" or other things like that. So isn't it a little bit strange that at this point they'd be saying they don't have enough information, since they actually did process what you've given them before and in some ways rejected it as -- sufficient?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We've continued to provide with them information, and we look for a more complete response than we've gotten in the past. (Inaudible) -- that.

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- the other day. Have you gotten any satisfaction from them since the conversations yesterday? Have they said that they will try to stop the --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The conversation yesterday was -- Foreign Minister Ivanov said, "We will look into this." Secretary Powell said, "We've proved you a lot of information, and we will provide more." We've now provided them with more, and we expect them to look into us and get back to us with more complete answers.

;;;;; Q Would that indicate the foreign minister hasn't looked into it before himself?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I wouldn't speculate on that. You can ask him to what extent he's looked into it personally.

;;;;; We -- on something else, or --

;;;;; Q On this.

;;;;; Q Something else.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Okay.

;;;;; Q On this, just very quickly, we're still -- I just want to make sure -- we're only talking about prior or previous shipments. There's no concern -- is there any concern from the U.S. right now that these companies would continue to ship these types of items now that the hostilities have started?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: As I said yesterday, we would want the Russian government to prevent any possible future sales, to interdict any possible sales that might be in process. I can't tell you whether there are or are not such sales, but we have asked them to interdict any such sales and to provide information on the ones that have occurred.

;;;;; Q Can you say how the equipment is getting there? I mean, have they --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: No. Couldn't yesterday, can't today.

;;;;; Q Well, are they abusing the humanitarian program?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I couldn't yesterday. I can't today.

;;;;; Yeah?

;;;;; Q Any contacts with the Syrians on the bus incident? (Off mike.)

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't have anything on that anyway. I'll have to look into it, if I can.

;;;;; Okay. Are we on Russia still?

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; Q It's Russia.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Betsy?

;;;;; Q This morning in the military briefing, the military briefer was asked about these jammers, and the briefer said that six jammers had been hit by forces. Does that mean that that problem is taken care of?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: That's a question you can ask the military briefer. If he wants to say yes, he can say yes. If he wants to say no, he can say no. If he wants to say maybe, he can say maybe. But it's not mine to answer.

;;;;; Terri?

;;;;; Q Did the subject of the Russian team believed to be in Baghdad come up in the secretary's phone call? Is there any indication that team has left --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Again, I'm not in a position to go into any detail on the information we may or may not have.

;;;;; Q Is there any indication they've left Baghdad now?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not -- wasn't in a position yesterday to answer that question, not in position today.

;;;;; Q On the Blair visit, will the Mideast road map be on that -- in the discussion? And can we expect anything, you know, publicly stated to indicate that, you know, progress is being made or movement toward publishing --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: On the road map, I'm sure it will be a matter of discussion. It's an important issue for the United States. It's been an important issue for Britain. It's been an important issue for the other partners that we have in the Quartet.

;;;;; We've made quite clear we expect publication and release of the road map to the parties upon -- immediately upon confirmation of the Palestinian prime minister.

;;;;; That process of his forming a government and getting approved is underway. At this point, I don't have any new estimate of when that might take place, but that remains our commitment and our goal. And that's the issue that we're watching, to see when it's time to put it out in public.

;;;;; Q Our own U.S. ambassador to Canada had some harsh things to say about Canada's position on the war. Was he operating, can you say, on general instructions? Was it something he was ordered to do? Can you give any background --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I don't know. I didn't see any remarks that I -- I haven't checked.

;;;;; Q Oh, I see. Okay.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yep.

;;;;; Sir?

;;;;; Q You said about the formation of the new government in Palestine -- I mean, I thought it is -- it was -- first, you said that appointment of the prime minister --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: No, he said upon confirmation of the prime minister. The prime minister gets confirmed with his government by the legislature. It's a term of normal use in that regard.

;;;;; Sir?

;;;;; Q Yes, on Sunday's TV talk show, Secretary Rumsfeld said that the northern Iraqis under the U.S. and the allies protection, according to Geneva Convention. And if I'm correct, in this area, 5,000 PKK terrorists and guerrillas also based in this area. Are they under the -- according to Geneva Convention, are they under the U.S. protections and --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: That's a distortion of two or three different things and it's a wrong conclusion. Sorry.

;;;;; Q What do you think of the (French ?)? (Laughter.)

;;;;; Q Richard, back in the U.N., have you guys begun talking with the U.N. about removing the current team from -- that represents Iraq?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not aware of any change at this point at the United Nations.

;;;;; Q Well, I know there's not been a change. But have you begun those discussions now?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Again, I'm not aware of anything new in that regard.

;;;;; Q All right. And Fu (ph) asked about Syria. How about the other -- the Iran question? Has there been any movement on that, or is it still --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Nothing new since the messages we exchanged over the weekend.

;;;;; Q Thank you.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: There is -- well, let me just -- hang on. Phil reminds me of one thing, and that is -- it's not new, but it's a reminder that there have been reports that the Iranians have said that it was an Iraqi missile that hit close to the Iranian town of Sardasht (ph). The origin of the other missile that hit the oil refinery has not yet been determined. So, as far as our own investigation, that continues. There hasn't been any new exchanges of messages. But we do note these press reports indicate an Iraqi missile may have been at least one of the hits.

;;;;; Q Okay. And one last one. Do you have any reason to believe that France may have been trying to hold up a vote in the U.N., or hold up the U.N. process on the new -- on what's called the second resolution, in order to give Saddam Hussein more time -- or time to disperse Republican Guard forces throughout the country?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I haven't made any allegations like that --

;;;;; Q I know you haven't.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: -- and I'm not about to start now.

;;;;; Q Well, others have. And I'm just wondering if you have -- no?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We have not made such allegations.

;;;;; Q Thank you.

END.

STATE DEPARTMENT REGULAR BRIEFING
BRIEFER: RICHARD BOUCHER, DEPARTMENT SPOKESMAN

STATE DEPARTMENT BRIEFING ROOM, WASHINGTON, D.C.
12:52 P.M. EST, TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2003

MR. BOUCHER: Okay, good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. If I can, I'd like to make a few comments at the top about the humanitarian situation and try to put in context the announcement today of a supplemental funding request that the president talked about when he was just over at the Pentagon.

;;;;; The situation as it stands now is that there is a massive humanitarian and reconstruction operation, including U.S. government and multilateral assistance for the Iraqi people, that's ready to begin as soon as the Port of Umm Qasr can be opened. We have prepositioned and made preparations in a number of ways. We've provided $109 million worth of -- $109 million for international agencies to use to prepare to take care of the Iraqi people. That's up $4 million from the figure I had the other day with a new grant that's been given to CARE -- the organization CARE. It also includes $60 million to the World Food Program, which has 130,000 tons of food ready. We're providing 610,000 metric tons of food worth $300 million from the United States. Already 132,000 tons of that food is prepositioned in the region.

;;;;; We're working at the United Nations to pass, on an urgent basis, a resolution to authorize the secretary-general to take the steps necessary to sustain the oil-for-food program, which feeds most of the Iraqi people, and which also has food and supplies in the pipeline for delivery as soon as the secretary-general has the authority and that that can be done safely.

;;;;; In addition, I would say relief has already begun. Coalition forces have 3 million rations for distribution to local populations, and I think you've seen on television some of the pictures of them distributing that. We're sending a very large disaster assistance team to the region; 47 of those experts out of 62 are already in the region. The International Red Cross is working to repair the water system at Basra. I think the reports are the same as yesterday; they've got 40 percent of the water supply back on. But the security situation there is also hampering their efforts to restore water to the city. There's a major British humanitarian shipment to Umm Qasr that's ready to be delivered as soon as the waterways have been demined. Yesterday, the U.S. Agency for International Development awarded a contract for reconstruction and management of the Umm Qasr port. The contractor is already moving experts to the region to begin organizing for the services. And U.N. agencies are prepared, when the security situation permits, to move and distribute prepositioned humanitarian supplies through this port.

;;;;; Now, as the president announced today, we're making a huge supplemental budget request to take care of the needs of the Iraqi people. The total amount in this request for relief and reconstruction is about $3.5 billion. Two-point-four billion (dollars) is foreign assistance, focused on the needs of the Iraqi people; that is, to help them with food, with housing, with security, with electricity, water, health care, education and with rebuilding of roads and bridges.

;;;;; There are additional amounts in this request in the Defense Department accounts, principally for things like repair of oil fields so that those assets, those national resources can be used for the Iraqi people.

;;;;; In addition, about $5 billion in the supplemental will help coalition partners and those affected by the conflict. About $4 billion of this is destined for Jordan, Turkey, Israel, Bahrain, Oman and key central and eastern European allies. There's another $770 million that's urgently needed to support ongoing efforts in the war on terrorism, including money for Afghanistan, the Philippines, Pakistan and Colombia. And I'd also note the request includes $187 million to support expanded State Department operations. Of that amount we are budgeting $35.8 million for a U.S. embassy in Baghdad to represent the people of the United States to the free people of Iraq -- $35.8 million for our future embassy, including various security measures that will need to be taken.

;;;;; So that's the overall view of things. I'd be glad to take your questions on that or other matters. Betsy?

;;;;; Q Was your -- was your embassy protected in Baghdad by a protecting power, or has the building passed in Iraqi government hands?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I actually don't know the current status of the building. I'll have to check on that.

;;;;; Yeah.

;;;;; Q Richard, on that, according to the documents released at the White House, a billion dollars is earmarked for Turkey, a portion of which could be used to support loan guarantees of up to $8.5 billion. Is it the U.S. government's intention to give that money to Turkey despite the absence of cooperation so far?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The United States recognizes that Turkey has some needs regardless of the level of their cooperation. The larger package that was under discussion, the $6 billion plus however it was worked into loan guarantees, the larger package that was under discussion was based on involvement and cooperation, and therefore is not in this request. The administration thought it was prudent to put aside some money to help our ally and friend Turkey deal with whatever economic consequences might arise.

;;;;; At this point, this is a -- I'd say it's a request, not a commitment at this stage. We're continuing to work with the Turkish government on the types of circumstances and the circumstances that might lead us to be in a position to make this assistance available to Turkey. And of course, we're always concerned about the need to support economic reform in Turkey, and therefore, it would be conditioned on the kind of strong economic policies we've always looked for. We thought it prudent and appropriate to put aside some money because the needs of our allies may -- that may arise for our ally in this conflict.

;;;;; Q To follow up on that, if I may, when you say "put aside" and you talk about the circumstances under which you might be able to proceed, I guess, with this, and you then stressed economic reform, would it be fair to say that this money going forward is contingent on economic reforms by them, or is it also, perhaps, contingent on other forms -- on cooperation in the war?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I think it's money to help Turkey for needs that might arise, economic consequences of the conflict even though Turkey is not participating to the full extent that we had discussed. It's also money that would be used if -- as we discussed this with Turkey, that would be used based on sound economic policies and continued performance on Turkey's international financial institution programs.

;;;;; So the goal of the money is to help Turkey with the economic consequences that might arise regardless of its level of cooperation. Determining what those economic consequences might be would be the first step. The second step would be to say: But the money can only be effective if it's based on continuation of sound economic policy. That's been true, I think, of almost any package we've discussed with Turkey.

;;;;; Q But it shouldn't be seen as a bargaining chip in the ongoing negotiations conducted by Mr. Khalilzad and others regarding Turkey possibly going into northern Iraq?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I wouldn't see it that way, no.

;;;;; Q Richard, is --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Sir?

;;;;; Q Shall we say that -- (off mike) -- credit, right, is your request? As a credit or the credit guarantee?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Well, the way our budget works -- it's $1 billion of money -- it's a grant amount, a fixed grant amount, of $1 billion that can then be used to back a larger loan for Turkey. So the multiplier depends on the interest rates and how much of a loan -- if Turkey decided -- if we decided economic consequences arose and we need to help Turkey out, then this $1 billion of cash -- of grant could then be used to support loans of a much greater portion, much greater amount, and we would discuss with Turkey what kind of mix there would be in that.

;;;;; Q But with this money, you don't have any credit guarantees or something like that?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Not other than this money, but this money could become a larger loan -- much larger loan facility, because, as you know, a certain amount of grant money can support loans of a much greater amount.

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- several news agencies, they report that's $8- 1/2 billion. Is this some kind of credit guarantees? Is the U.S. --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: It would depend on the mix that was worked out in terms of how much of the $1 billion was turned into loans.

;;;;; Q Could it get that high? I mean, this is --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not going to do the math off my head right now, but yes.

;;;;; Q Well, at least you know if this is --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yeah, the general rule of thumb is that you can eight to 10 billion (dollars) in loans for a billion dollars with grants.

;;;;; Q Right. Yeah, and the multiplier is better if it's the preferred government rate, but what the government can get. Is that --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not going to try to do the math right here right now.

;;;;; Q No, I'm not asking you to do the math. I'm asking what the principle is --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Let me see if in the details if -- yeah, actually, the estimate here is the legislative language that we provided would authorize up to 8.5 billion (dollars) in loan guarantees through this fund.

;;;;; Q Richard, can I just -- included in this, there's obviously a breakdown for the other countries that you mentioned, as well, particularly Jordan, Israel, I guess Oman are some of the countries you named. Is any of that money also contingent on the same -- obviously, it's all contingent on congressional approval, but is any of the money that's earmarked for the other countries subject to the same conditions as the money that Turkey is --

;;;;; (Pause.)

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: There are -- each country is different, and the mix and the way each country is handled is different. Some of the countries, it's foreign military financing for military sales. Some places, it's economic support funds. Some places, there would be loan guarantees in addition. So there's a lot of different -- each country is particular to the situation of that country.

;;;;; Q Okay. But this is ESF for Turkey.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yeah.

;;;;; Q Okay. And the ESF money that goes to the other countries, that is not conditioned on the same kinds of things that the Turkish money is, correct?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: As I said, each country is different. Some places have IMF programs, some don't. They're different things.

;;;;; Q So the answer would -- I mean, is there no answer to the question, then?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The answer is that not conditioned on the same thing as Turkey, true, because each country is different. Perhaps involving other conditions and factors that need to be taken into account, that depends on the country.

;;;;; Q Richard, what about the $10 billion for Israel?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: For Israel, the amounts are $1 billion in foreign military financing and separate loan guarantees of $9 billion. And the conditions on those are still under discussion.

;;;;; Q Could you give us a printout of the breakdown after the briefing?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: It may not be right after the briefing. These amounts are accurate -- (chuckling) -- I'm not sure I can do all the totals quite yet.

;;;;; Q You mean that the $10 billion is beside the $4 billion there, which Israel sharing with other?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: This is a supplemental request for needs that arise because of the conflict.

;;;;; So --

;;;;; Q What is the need of Israel? It's not involved in the conflict, is it?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Do you want to slow down?

;;;;; Q Yeah.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Okay. My turn?

;;;;; In Israel, we see that Israel has had to take a number of military and defense -- military and civilian defensive steps, and so we're trying to help improve the readiness of defensive capabilities and systems for the Israelis. And then there's up to $9 billion in loan guarantees for Israel over a three-year period where, as I said, the conditions are still under discussion.

;;;;; Q But what's the percentage in the $4 billion for Israel?

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: What? What's the --

;;;;; Q He's asking --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The percentage of the $4 billion?

;;;;; Q Yeah, for Israel.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: It's about -- of that amount, about $1 billion are for Israel, about $1 billion is for Turkey. Jordan -- it comes slightly over $1 billion. And then others kind of adds up.

;;;;; Q Can I ask about the embassy again? Are you --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I can't remember what the -- go ahead.

;;;;; Q Well, you said you $38 million for the new embassy in Baghdad.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yeah.

;;;;; Q Is -- have you -- are you planning on moving in to the site of the old? Or is it just --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I was just asked that question, and I said I regretted, but I don't know the condition of our old embassy.

;;;;; Q Oh, exactly. But that's not --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: This is money that's being -- sorry?

;;;;; Q I mean, does this include purchase of a new -- of new property, or do you just not know? I wasn't asking you about the condition of the old embassy.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: You're talking about Baghdad? Yeah, I just don't know. I just don't know. And I'm looking through all my extensive information, but I think it's better if I look through later and see if it's a good answer.

;;;;; Q Richard, for the $1 billion for Israel, is one of the reasons why Israel seems to be a country that's getting a larger share of the foreign aid is because you suspect that there is a -- I mean, you were saying it was because of preparedness. But are you concerned that there could be a strike on Israel as a result of conflict or -- is that part of the justification?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I think we're all concerned about people in the neighborhood being able to protect themselves. I think the United States is trying to help different countries in the neighborhood, either defensively or with regard to the economic consequences. As I said, in each country it's somewhat different. But we know that countries in the region have had to take defensive measures for both military and civilian purposes. And so, to the extent we can, we're trying to help people out with that. As you know, there have been other steps. In some places there have been direct steps taken for defense. NATO has deployed some equipment, for example, to help with Turkish defense.

;;;;; Steve?

;;;;; Q Richard, the billion for Israel you referred to a moment ago as "financing". Does that mean that it's also in the form of a loan, or is it a grant that then finances --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: No, that's -- that's what's called foreign military finance. It's a particular category of U.S. assistance that -- it's a -- it's military aid, basically.

;;;;; Q It's a -- it's a direct grant. Yeah.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: It's direct aid, yeah.

;;;;; Q Can you be any more specific about what kind of military aid you're talking about?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: No, not at this point.

;;;;; Q Can I just make sure on the Turkey thing, that original package -- this is getting redundant, but -- this is apart from that package that was being prepared, which is on a shelf, finished, tied up in a cabinet, locked, over with, right?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: (Laughs.) Off the table, in a cabinet, on the shelf, locked. (Laughs.)

;;;;; Q Because then Turkey stood to get -- I mean -- more money than there is in the world, probably if they --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Well --

;;;;; Q I mean, with this amount and that amount, that would have been extraordinary. Right? I mean, this is just --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: But that's not what's happening.

;;;;; Q This sits by -- this exists on its own.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yeah.

;;;;; Q Okay.

;;;;; Q Richard, have you -- you have told the countries who are getting this -- you have -- you've informed these countries that this is what the -- what's in the supplemental or not yet.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Yes.

;;;;; Q You have.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I think.

;;;;; Q And have you --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I can't vouch that we've told every single one of them, but --

;;;;; Q Okay. But, do you know --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: -- as you remember, there's -- we were being asked questions last week about the announcement, about the amounts for some country, and we were -- we were declining to answer at that point because we hadn't submitted the request.

;;;;; Q Yes. I know. Lots. I specifically want to know about Turkey. Are you aware if you told the Turks yet now?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm virtually certain we have. I'll double-check on when that was.

;;;;; Q Okay. You have. And have you also told them that -- of the problems that you anticipate facing in -- up on the Hill because of their reluctance to participate fully --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I -- I'm sure that they as well as we do understand the needs of Congress to understand the needs of Turkey, and we will help them in that regard.

;;;;; Q Well, I guess what I'm getting at is, have you warned the Turks that they shouldn't expect to get all this money, that it is, in fact, a request and it's not --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: (Laughs.) I -- as I said, we're all quite clear on what this is. This is a request for money from the Congress. And we will work, all of us, to support the president's request. We think it's been carefully studied, that it's necessary, and I'm sure we'll all go up to the Hill to try to support the president on this one.

;;;;; Q But that means that when you go up to the Hill you are going to be definitely asking them, the law makers, to give Turkey this -- this billion dollars.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We're going to ask them to fund the president's supplemental funding request, yes. Including this.

;;;;; Yeah.

;;;;; Q Richard?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Terri?

;;;;; Q Can I change the subject?

;;;;; Q Can I just -- have one question on Israel?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Eli?

;;;;; Q I realize that you don't want to get into the specifics of the one billion and what it would be used for, but could you -- would you at least say that because you are saying that this is money for simple military preparedness that the money, that the -- that there are restrictions, that this would go to things like, say, missile defense or things of this nature? Or is it just -- I mean -- or could they use this money for, say, tanks, or -- I don't know?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We discuss these things very carefully with each of the recipients, and so we do know what the money goes to. I'm just not, at this stage of the process -- we don't even have the money. We're not spending it yet. We're not writing any checks. We're not writing any contracts yet. I'm not prepared at this point to try to define in that level of detail exactly what it's going to buy.

;;;;; Q Well, not necessarily at the level of detail, but, I mean, can you say that there are certain -- there are going to be certain restrictions in terms of the military, of what they can spend, or are there even going to be any restrictions?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I think we might be able to give you some examples later. I'll see if I can.

;;;;; Okay. Terri?

;;;;; Q Saudi Arabia says it submitted a peace proposal to both the U.S. and Iraq. Can you confirm that you have received this, whether you've received this and if you're thinking about it, and perhaps some reaction to it?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: A lot of questions. Let me answer the first one first, which is, we're not aware of any peace proposal from Saudi Arabia. We are familiar, of course, with the Arab League document, the statement that was issued yesterday. But there's been no particular approach or proposal made to us from Saudi Arabia at this stage.

;;;;; Q What is your comment on the now-official Arab League position calling the operation aggression?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: Well, I think, first of all, there are several things that need to be remembered. The first is that this conflict arose because the Iraqi regime refused to disarm. It refused to cooperate with the 12 years of United Nations efforts to disarm Iraq peacefully. And it refused to come into compliance with U.N. Security Council resolutions. So, unfortunately, we think the time for cooperative solutions with this Iraqi regime has passed.

;;;;; Second of all, we've said very clearly our goal in Iraq is to eliminate weapons of mass destruction, to eliminate the threat that they pose to the region and the international community, and to free the Iraqi people from the brutal and corrupt regime of Saddam Hussein. Peace proposals that leave the current Iraqi regime in place to once again threaten the international community, its neighbors and Iraq's own people are just not workable.

;;;;; Our message to friends in the Arab world has been and will continue to be, it's time to focus on how best to achieve a more stable region, how to achieve a brighter future for the Iraqi people, who have suffered far too long under the vicious tyranny of this regime.

;;;;; We'll continue to consult with our friends in the Arab world, continue to talk to them about how they can best assist in these efforts.

;;;;; Q But just to follow up, you said you have a lot of Arab countries who are part of the coalition of unnamed coalition partners. Apparently, only -- of all the 22 Arab countries, only one country, which have reservation on this -- they called the attack "aggression." So where are these unnamed? Is it not -- apparently they agree that you -- (inaudible) -- Iraq.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm not in a position to start naming the unnamed.

;;;;; Q No. I mean, where are they?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: They're in the world. And I think you can probably yourself look at the region and see what's going on and understand that there are people in the region who want to see an end to the Iraqi regime, who want to see the Iraqi people given a better life. And in our discussions with people in the region, that's what we're emphasizing, and we're emphasizing what we can do and what others can do to help bring that about, to help improve the lives of Iraqi people.

;;;;; Q Did taking it to the United Nations -- I mean, are you -- they're asking for ceasing -- you know, to stop the attack. What's your -- would be your reaction?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We don't believe it's time to go to the United Nations for another debate. The United Nations tried and --- again and again over 12 years, with a variety of resolutions, to get Iraq to disarm peacefully. Iraq repeatedly refused those requests. We don't think it's time to move to a big open debate in the Security Council on the issue. That diverts attention of the United Nations Security Council from trying to attend to the needs of the people of Iraq.

;;;;; The urgent matter that's before the Security Council now is to pass the oil-for-food resolution. That's what we have tried to work for. That's what the secretary-general has said is an urgent matter. And that is a way of looking at the future needs of the people of Iraq, as well as the more immediate ones, and setting up a system that can continue to take care of them, to continue to look to the future and meet the needs of the Iraqi people.

;;;;; Q Richard, when you say that you haven't gotten any -- you have not -- you're not aware of any Saudi peace proposal, are you aware of -- in the conversations that the secretary has had with Foreign Minister Saud, has he expressed some kind of desire or wish to see -- I guess we're just trying to figure out what he was talking about when he told a whole bunch of reports in Riyadh that he had presented a proposal -- that there was such a proposal. In the conversations that the secretary has had with the prince, has his -- a Saudi desire for the end of conflict arisen?

;;;;; Have they -- they've made clear -- in other words, he -- when he says --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I mean, they -- certainly the Saudi government, in public and private, has made clear they would like to see the conflict end. I saw the Saudi foreign minister quoted about a week ago, a little less than a week ago, on Thursday, as saying that Saddam Hussein and his regime should depart, that that would be a way of solving this peacefully. So I think they've certainly made clear that that peaceful solution is one that they would support.

;;;;; Q Is it possible that when he refers to -- and I know you can't speak for him -- but when he refers to the peace proposal, which he did, that that's what he's talking about?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I suppose so. He may have been referring to the Arab League as well. I don't know which it might have been. You'd have to ask their --

;;;;; Q So -- okay, and that Arab -- and if he was referring to the Arab League proposal -- which you don't know -- but the Arab League proposal you just said is not --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: I'm really not in a position to speculate on what the gentleman meant.

;;;;; Q Fair enough. You said that the Arab League proposal was --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: He may have been referring to it, but we don't know until we have a chance to ask him exactly what --

;;;;; Q Okay. Do you when the last time the secretary talked to him?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: The last time the secretary talked to him directly was Saturday or Sunday -- Sunday, I believe.

;;;;; Q Richard, are you -- can I follow up on this? I have similar questions. Now, could it -- we're not hung up now, are we, on the word "proposal"?

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: No, we're not.

;;;;; Q It's not -- it's a formal --

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We're not -- we're not cutting this one thin.

;;;;; Q Okay.

;;;;; MR. BOUCHER: We're just not aware of any particular -- any peace proposal from that quarter.

;;;;; Q Well, since it's getting so much publicity, are -- you are going

Stop abuse of filibuster to block court nominees

When Senate traditions and self-proclaimed "institutional responsibilities" clash with the public interest and the intent of the U.S. Constitution, it should be clear that the Constitution should prevail.

But apparently it's not clear to Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D.

Daschle shrugged off a request from President Bush for a change in Senate rules so filibusters could not be used to block judicial nominees. "I doubt very much that we'll ever permanently change the rules to deny the Senate its institutional responsibilities," Daschle said.

What about the Senate's constitutional responsibilities?

Among those responsibilities is providing "advice and consent" to the president on judicial appointments. Such appointments require only a simple majority. However, it takes 60 votes to break a filibuster -- thereby allowing a minority to thwart the will of a majority of the Senate as well as the president.

Meanwhile, vacancies remain on the federal bench while a Senate minority makes its power play.

It doesn't matter whether Republicans have done to Democratic presidents what the Democrats are doing to Republican Bush. What matters is whether the intent of the Constitution and democracy are being undermined through abuse of the filibuster. They are.

A yes-no vote is being held up on Miguel Estrada, Bush's nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Five other federal appellate court nominees also are being blocked from speedy consideration by Senate Democrats.

Even if the Estrada case is resolved and a vote is eventually taken, Bush should continue to press for the Senate to abandon the use of the filibuster to block action on judicial nominees.

Northrup Pascagoula Shipyard

The Issue:

AFL-CIO is putting pressure on Northrup, to put the Asbestos Workers back into the contracts at the Pascagoula Shipyard. This is a direct play by Sweeney to "hurt" the Carpenters. He sent Ron Alt of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades down to pressure Northrup to reinstate the AFL-CIO Metal Trades, and thus the Asbestos workers union, back into the contract at the Northrup yard. This would shift work that has been done by the Carpenters for over a decade, back to the Asbestos workers.

History:

In '91-92, the Navy had a subcontractor performing the asbestos-related work at the shipyard. The Navy wanted to audit the contractor's books. The contractor refused, and ultimately the Navy brought the work "inside," that is, it was performed directly by the shipyard workers rather than a subcontractor. The Asbestos Workers (formally known as the Heat, Frost, Insulators and Asbestos Workers) had an agreement with the subcontractor, but when the work came inside it went to the Carpenters.

For over 10 years we've been doing the work for Northrup and by all accounts doing it well.

Now, John Sweeney is trying to medal in the contract in order to squeeze the Carpenters. He's pushing Northrup to "include" the Metal Trades Dept. of the AFL-CIO in the contract. If that happens, then the Asbestos Workers will "grieve" the assignment of work to the Carpenters, through AFL-CIO processes. A board, appointed by Sweeney, will award the work to the Asbestos Workers (total membership 16,000 - 18,000) and show the Building Trades, especially the smaller building trades unions, how he can squeeze the carpenters (total membership 550,000).

In the long run, Sweeney would squeeze the Carpenters in Pascagoula, but also begin building support among the large number of smaller-sized building trades unions to support Sweeney. There's a showdown coming in the Building Trades over whether they will defy Sweeney's attempt to force the Carpenters back into the AFL-CIO.

Follow Up:

Carpenters, through Rich Bond, are reaching out to Senator Lott. It would be great if the administration could support that effort. It would be helpful if they could make it clear to Senator Lott and his staff that from their first-hand experience we're a reasonable, trustworthy union to do business with and that UBC President Doug McCarron takes a very direct and business-like approach to his dealings.

We're asking Senator Lott to call Phil Dur, President of Northrup Pascagoula, phone: 228/935-8034 and/or Den Knectch, Director of Industrial Relations for Northrup Pascagoula, phone: 228/935-1493. Senator Lott knows Mr. Dur, and the shipyard is, of course, not only in his district but where his father worked.

We need as much support as we can muster encouraging Northrup not to let Sweeney subvert a process that has been working well for a decade. We hope Senator Lott will encourage top Northrup leadership to recognize Carpenters as a union they can do business with and encourage management to stick with the process that has served them well and not get caught up in this.

Meanwhile, vacancies remain on the federal bench while a Senate minority makes its power play.

It doesn't matter whether Republicans have done to Democratic presidents what the Democrats are doing to Republican Bush. What matters is whether the intent of the Constitution and democracy are being undermined through abuse of the filibuster. They are.

A yes-no vote is being held up on Miguel Estrada, Bush's nominee for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Five other federal appellate court nominees also are being blocked from speedy consideration by Senate Democrats.

Even if the Estrada case is resolved and a vote is eventually taken, Bush should continue to press for the Senate to abandon the use of the filibuster to block action on judicial nominees.

on a US Chamber event this am where Hatch spoke. The group was business leaders interested in class action but Heather said Hatch went on and on about the importance of judges and the current nomination crisis. Should Karl call him and thank him??

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.)

;;;;; Q General Myers?

;;;;; Q On the surrender of Iraqi forces, I was wondering, since you were saying they were surrendering and then going back and firing on the U.S. troops, I was wondering what the latest is on negotiations with Iraqi leadership, and if there is some concern that those negotiations might also be some of sort of ruse, that they may not be serious about that.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I don't know of any negotiations with the leadership in Iraq.

;;;;; There are military leaders that have talked about surrendering. Some have actually done it. Others may be engaged in a ruse. That's possible. All -- the kind of ruse we've seen has tended to be a very small handful of people, Fedayeen Saddam types, in civilian clothes, pretending they're giving up.

;;;;; Yes? (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q General Myers, can I keep you back on the question of humanitarian relief enough to just clarify a couple of things? You said at the beginning food, water and humanitarian relief is already being delivered. Is any of that -- other than the initial supplies, MREs and water that troops are taking in with them -- any real humanitarian relief?

;;;;; And what is your view on the challenges to getting humanitarian relief into the country along the whole line of -- towards Baghdad as long as there is this rear action by these other forces? Because you seemed to indicate humanitarian relief first, then you would turn around and deal with the Fedayeen, and of course international aid workers are very reluctant to go into hot zones.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Well, of course the first thing we had to do to get significant humanitarian aid in was to clear the waterway leading up to Umm Qasr from the mines. And as you know, we found boats with mines that had yet to be laid, but indications they may have laid some mines. And so we're a day or two away from General Franks declaring that waterway cleared, so we can bring in ships, major ships, then, that have been loaded, are just awaiting clearance into that part. That's part of it.

;;;;; There has been a combined effort between Central Command forces and the Kuwaiti government to put a pipeline in from Kuwait up to the border. It will initially go into the Umm Qasr area -- after that, we don't know -- to bring fresh water in.

;;;;; And clearly one of the things that's keeping the humanitarian aid from the people in the South is the Iraqi regime itself. As you mentioned, it's the Fedayeen Saddam and others that are keeping the Iraqi people from getting the food, the water, the medicine they need.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: The humanitarian disaster that existed existed under the Saddam Hussein regime. The people needed food. They were starving. And the money was going into weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;; Second, the military -- coalition forces have brought in massive humanitarian assistance as they have come in, quite apart from what the general's talking about, involving the port. They have been bringing in food and water and medicine as they have come in to all of those areas. And the people that are embedded with those units know that fact.

;;;;; Third, the environmental disaster that occurred in Kuwait when the Iraqis touched off all their oil wells was averted.

;;;;; Fourth, there was a concern about internally displaced people or refugees fleeing into neighboring countries and Turkey, Jordan and elsewhere.

;;;;; It has not happened. The last count of refugees was several hundred, not tens of thousands, as was the case previously. Why is that? It is because there is not a humanitarian disaster at the present time in those areas. What -- the area that we're not controlling, there could still be a great many people without food, as was the case under Saddam Hussein. And they may not be able to flee or get to medicine because they may have guns at their heads and they're being told they can't leave the cities.

;;;;; Now, I think there's some very clear indicators of what's taking place. And if we look at them and track them, we'll have a good sense of it. I must say, I also have a feeling that the American people have a very good sense of what's going on there. It may be that some analysts might not, but the American people do. What do they see? They see young men and women in uniform out there performing incredibly difficult tasks. They're doing it courageously, they're doing it tirelessly, they're doing it with great success. And the fact that a few analysts say, well, my goodness, it should have been faster or slower or this or that, I do not think is affecting the judgment of the American people, who are having a chance to see what your friends and peers, who are out there watching what's happening -- and they're seeing that reported every hour of every day.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, can you say what's being done to provide more security for the supply lines, which some critics -- active duty officers and former officers -- say are lightly defended and spread a bit too thin?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Do you want to comment on that?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Well, I -- the problem you have is you get into operational details very quickly. But let me assure you --

;;;;; Q Well, can you say -- are you providing more security for the support there --

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: There is a -- there has been and there is a plan to provide security for the lines of communication. I mean, it's obvious when you go that far, that fast into a country that you need to protect your lines of communication. This is not a new requirement. This is something that General Franks and his people --

;;;;; Q Did you leave them too lightly defended, as critics charge?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: No.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: In my view, no.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We've got total dominance of the air. It is not air superiority, it's dominance. They have not put an airplane up.

;;;;; Q But the Fedayeen are chipping away, it seems, at --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: And these are ones and twos, and that you're going to live with, like we live with in Afghanistan; that's -- we live with in some major cities in the United States.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: There are plans being put in -- or, plans in place to deal with those onesies and twosies.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We're going to make two more questions.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q You used the word a few minutes ago --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Whoa, whoa, whoa, whoa.

;;;;; Q General Myers?

;;;;; Q General Myers?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: No. No. The man next to you, who's been so quiet and courteous and patient and -- (laughter) --

;;;;; Q Very patient. A British-related question, if I may. You talked about the British campaign as well to try to help in Basra with this supposedly popular uprising. I wonder how important is that not just strategically, but also to try to get a message out, not just to the rest of Iraq, that it is popular to rise up, but also to the rest of the world, who look perhaps with a little suspicion at the term "war of liberation" because there's not an awful lot of people willing to be liberated at the moment, it seems.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: (Sighs.) I guess those of us my age remember uprisings in Eastern Europe back in the '50s, when they rose up, and then were slaughtered. And I am very careful about encouraging people to rise up, unless -- I mean, we know there are people in those cities ready to shoot them if they try to rise up. We know there are people in that city ready to kill them if they try to escape.

;;;;; Now, until you're arranged so that you can actually go to those cities and deal with that problem, of the Special Republican Guards, SSOs and the Fedayeen Saddam people who are in those cities, putting a gun to their heads, unless you're ready to deal with that, then I am very reluctant to run around the world encouraging people to rise up. People will rise up. But, let there be no doubt: these are a repressed people. And -- but I hope and pray they'll do it at a time when there are sufficient forces nearby to be helpful to them rather than at a time where it simply costs their life and it's a wasted life.

;;;;; Q General Myers --

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary --

;;;;; Q General Myers?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Last question.

;;;;; Q General Myers, a couple days ago you met with reporters for breakfast, and at that time laid out roughly what you described as the campaign, an initial air campaign, how it would be like nothing we've ever seen before, that if it was successful it would essentially shock the leadership into submission, quickly. It would be a short conflict. To what extent have you seen that shock, and what specific signs can you point to that that's succeeded?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Well, we talked about a campaign that would start with a lot of violence in both the ground and the air. Obviously, we haven't met much resistance on the ground, and the air campaign is going as planned. And I would say, Eric, that I will stick by any statements I made at any breakfast about the -- about how the plan is going. And I did not -- I hope I did not imply any time line with that. I've never talked about a time line, I don't think. You can go back and check the record, but I don't think I've ever talked about a time line, because I -- it's just -- it's unknowable. It is unknowable.

;;;;; Q Do you believe you've shocked this regime? Are there signs of that? They continue to broadcast, they continue to issue orders, apparently; they continue to function, albeit at a degraded level. And I understand there's only -- it's only four days into the air campaign.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I guess it depends how you look at it. If I were in Baghdad and I was looking south and I saw a U.S. Army division that is on the outskirts of Baghdad, I think -- you know, I don't know that that would be shock, but I'd certainly be a little concerned. (Laughter.) And they'll have a lot more to be concerned about shortly.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Thank you very much.

;;;;; Q Thank you.

END.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING
BRIEFERS: SECRETARY OF DEFENSE DONALD RUMSFELD; GENERAL RICHARD MYERS, CHAIRMAN, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

PENTAGON BRIEFING ROOM, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA

SEC. RUMSFELD: Good afternoon. It's now about five days since the major ground forces entered Iraq. It's almost four days and 30 minutes ago that the air war began. We're still, needless to say, much closer to the beginning than the end. The men and women in the uniform, the U.S. and coalition alike, are performing superbly. They're doing an outstanding job. The resistance that's being encountered was expected. It has not affected coalition progress. Iraqi forces are capitulating by the hundreds. The total now, as I understand it -- at least early this morning -- was something in excess of 3,500 Iraqi prisoners of war and thousands more that have been part of units that have simply disband (sic). With each passing day, the Iraqi regime is losing control over more of the country. Coalition forces are closing in on Baghdad and will not stop until that regime has been driven from power. Their defeat is certain. All that is unclear is the number of days or weeks it will take. The threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction will be removed and a regime that is one of the world's most notorious sponsors of terror will be no more.

;;;;; This war is an act of self defense, to be sure, but it is also an act of humanity. Coalition forces are eliminating a regime that is responsible for the deaths of hundreds of thousands of its own people and which is pursuing weapons that would enable it to kill hundreds of thousands more. In recent days, the world has witnessed further evidence of their brutality and their disregard for the laws of war. Their treatment of coalition POWs is a violation of the Geneva Conventions.

;;;;; To the families of those captured or missing, know that our thoughts and prayers are with you and with your loved ones and that we will do everything in our power to bring them safely home. To the families and loved ones of those brave men and women who have been killed or wounded, know that their courage and sacrifice are deeply appreciated by all Americans.

;;;;; The regime has committed acts of treachery on the battlefield dressing their forces as liberated civilians, and sending soldiers out waving white flags and feigning surrender, with the goal of drawing coalition forces into the ambushes; using Red Cross vehicles to courier military instructions. These are serious violations of the laws of war. The regime's actions have had little practical military effect thus far, but they do serve as a telling reminder of why it is important that this regime be removed.

;;;;; Those who behave with such brutality cannot be allowed to possess tools of mass murder. This is the behavior of desperate men. Iraqi authorities know their days are numbered. And while the Iraqi regime is on the way out, it's important to know that it can still be brutal, particularly in the moments before it finally succumbs. This campaign could well grow more dangerous in the coming days and weeks as coalition forces close on Baghdad and the regime is faced with its certain death. But the outcome is assured.

;;;;; To the Iraqi people, let me say this: By now you have seen and know that coalition airstrikes are not aimed at you, they are aimed at the regime of Saddam Hussein. We are systematically eliminating the institutions that repress you. As we do so, we are doing everything possible to protect innocent civilians. Humanitarian assistance, food, water and medicine is already being delivered, and more will arrive shortly. A regime that starved its own people so that a dictator could build many, many palaces, will be removed. In its place, you will build a free Iraq with a new government based on democratic principles of political freedom, individual liberty, and the rule of law.

;;;;; To the officers and soldiers of the Iraqi armed forces: Do not lead your men into a battle to die for a condemned regime. Do not obey orders to use weapons of mass destruction. Lay down your arms and you will be spared.

;;;;; General Myers?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Thank you, Mr. Secretary.

;;;;; I would like to add our thanks to the men and women in uniform, U.S. and coalition, who are performing superbly, and have from the time this all began.

;;;;; Operation Iraqi Freedom continues. I don't have much additional information following CENTCOM's brief, but wanted to update you on the overall picture.

;;;;; On the ground, our forces are nearing Baghdad. They have moved some 200-plus miles into Iraq in less than five days of the ground campaign. We are now poised for the next objectives and our plan is on track.

;;;;; The air campaign is continuing well. We flew nearly 1,000 sorties over Iraq yesterday, most against Republican Guard units, and conducted close air support for the ground advance in the south and special forces in the west. Coalition forces have secured the port of Umm Qsar and are preparing the port for the arrival of humanitarian aid to the people of Iraq.

;;;;; I have a pre- and post-strike image for you today. It's of the Special Security Organization warehouse in Bodog (ph), along the Tigris River in Baghdad. You can see the warehouse and (boat facility ?) destroyed, while the highway and bridge right next to it remain intact and well-traveled.

;;;;; Finally, I have three videos for you today. The first video is an F-117 using a satellite-guided weapon, the GPS weapon, to destroy what we think is the last active Iraqi GPS jammer that we've been able to find. That was a three-quarter speed, by the way, because there wasn't much time between the (clouds ?) and when it went off.

;;;;; The second is of an F-18, destroyed a patrol boat in a canal in southern Iraq. Please note the three other vessels in the area. Only the patrol boat is destroyed.

;;;;; And the third is of an F-15 using a 500-pound bomb to destroy a Republican Guard tank south of Baghdad. Remember we mentioned we focused about 50 percent of our air missions on the the Republican Guard in the past couple of days.

;;;;; And with that, we'll take your questions.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Before we start, let me just say that, as you may know, the president was here today and met with the joint chiefs of staff and with General Franks, General DeLong and General Abizaid by secure video, and then made an announcement concerning the supplemental. In addition, I've just come from meeting with a number of the former secretaries of State, former secretaries of Defense, and former national security advisers who were here to have a discussion with us, which was, I find, always helpful, and it's something we do from time to time.

;;;;; Because we have such a large gathering here, I'd like to suggest that, out of courtesy to everybody, that people ask a single question.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, you said yourself a moment ago that this operation could become more dangerous for U.S. and allied troops in the coming days as you approach Baghdad. There are Sunday morning generals in every war, and critics are coming out of the walls to criticize this ground campaign. They say that your imprintaur(imprint or ?) of transformation is heavily on it, and there are simply not enough troops and armor on the ground right now to efficiently take Baghdad or protect your rear. How would you answer that?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: First of all, I don't know how anyone outside of the government thinks they know what my views are, or what General Franks' views are, or what General Myers' views are. We've all been deeply involved, and the plan has been a plan that's been approved by all the commanders and by, needless to say, General Myers and General Pace and Don Rumsfeld and the president of the United States. And it is a good plan, and it is a plan that in four and a half or five days has moved ground forces to within a short distance of Baghdad. And forces increase in the country every minute and every hour of every day. And that will continue to be the case. There is a force flow that's been put in place weeks and weeks and weeks ago, where people were mobilized, people were trained, people were -- equipment was loaded on ships, ships were leased, ships were sent over, ships moved into position, ships were unloaded, personnel were airlifted over to meet with their equipment. And every hour the number of U.S. and coalition forces in that country are increasing.

;;;;; So I guess how I would respond to what you say are some folks who are concerned about that is that the people who are involved in this, the -- General Franks and General McKiernan (sp) and General DeLong and General Abizaid and Admiral Keating, General Moseley, are very comfortable, as are the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who have met with the president twice in the last two days and discussed it.

;;;;; One question. You want to comment on that?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: You bet I do.

;;;;; It's a plan that's on track. It's a plan everybody had input to. It's a plan everybody agrees to. I've been on public record that I think the plan as finally formulated and, as put together by General Franks with some help and some advice by General Franks and his commanders, is a brilliant plan. And we've been at it now for less than a week. We're just about to Baghdad. Some of the biggest losses we've taken are due to Iraqis committing serious violations of the law of armed conflict in the Geneva Convention by dressing as civilians, by luring us into surrender situations then opening fire on our troops. So this is a plan that is very well thought out, and that will play out, I think, as we expect.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, are there indications -- have you seen indications that the Republican Guard units that are ringing Baghdad have been authorized to use chemical weapons in the event that U.S. forces advance to a certain distance from the city center? Around the city.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: There has been intelligence scraps -- who knows how accurate they are -- chatter in the system that suggest that the closer that coalition forces get to Baghdad and Tikrit, the greater the likelihood and that some command and control arrangements have been put in place. But whether it will happen or not remains to be seen.

;;;;; Yes?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, there is reported to be a popular uprising in Basra, but the popular uprising apparently is not only targeting some of the Iraqi forces but also some of the coalition forces. And we have reports that at least one British coalition force member has been killed. Can you comment on what's going on there?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I have not seen these reports, but I can tell you roughly what's going on there. What's going on is that forces came in -- coalition forces came in from the south; they're moving towards Baghdad. They essentially bypassed Basra. The British forces now have the task of dealing with the remaining capability in Basra. We have intelligence information saying that the Fedayeen Saddam people -- I'm not going to call them troops, because they're traveling in civilian clothes and they're essentially terrorists -- have been moving south into some areas, including Basra, and that they are in some cases pretending to surrender and then shooting people. They do not represent a serious threat to the success of this campaign. What they do represent is a terrorist-type threat, and there will very likely continue to be people -- until the regime is gone, until it's finally tipped, until there is absolute certainty that Saddam Hussein is not there anymore, I suspect that some of these dead ends will be down there shooting people and doing that type of thing. That's basically what's going on.

;;;;; Now, if your implication in your question was that the uprising was against the United States or the coalition forces, I suspect that's not true. I mean, these people have been repressed by the regime of Saddam Hussein and they now have people in there that are shooting them if they try to desert, if they try to surrender, if they try to escape. These are Saddam Hussein's people in there shooting people if they try to leave the city. Now, therefore, an uprising -- anyone who's engaged in an uprising has got a whale of a lot of courage, and I sure hope they're successful.

;;;;; Q And you think that Saddam Hussein is in the middle of it?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: One question. One question.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary -- (inaudible).

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Sir?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, as the nature of the questions before have indicated, and you yourself have anticipated, is at the first sign of any difficulty or casualties, there have been a number of critics, some of them laymen and some of them retired military officers, senior military officers, voicing the kinds of concerns that Charlie did.

;;;;; Without again restating it, would you say that you have perhaps not adequately managed the expectations here of -- in the sense that some people believe that just five days into this, the war might be going badly, and you're trying to make the point that we're much closer to the beginning than the end. Do you need to do a better job in giving the American people and the public an idea of what to expect in the days and weeks ahead?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I don't know how to answer that, really. If you go back to the Afghanistan situation, it was only a few days into it that it was described by one of the newspapers here as a "quagmire." And it was a matter of days later that things looked quite good and, as I recall, Mazar-e Sharif fell, and then the other cities began to fall.

;;;;; I can't manage what people -- civilians or retired military -- want to say. And if they go on and say it enough, people will begin to believe it. It may not be true, and it may reflect more of a misunderstanding of the situation than an analysis or an assessment of it, but there's no way anyone can affect what people say. We have a free country. In Iraq, they can affect what people say because you get shot if you say something they don't like. We don't do that.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; Q General Myers?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: But it seems to me that anyone with any sense of what's taking place recognizes the complexity of this task, the importance of it; the fact that we're there to eliminate the weapons of mass destruction in that country and to put in a regime that will not threaten its neighbors. These are important things to be done. They're not things that are done easily. This is a sizeable military that the coalition forces are up against. They are -- unlike 1991, they recognize that the task is not to put them out of Kuwait and then let them go about their business; the task here is to not only deal with them throughout the country, but to see that the regime is changed. So you're going to get a different level of intensity.

;;;;; And certainly General Myers and I and General Franks all have indicated from the outset that this is a tough business, and wars are unpredictable and there's lots of difficulties.

;;;;; (To General Myers.) Do you want to comment on that?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: No, I think with as much coverage as we have of the war, primarily because of the decision to embed a lot of reporters with it, you know, we are -- we're watching this thing, what happens, pretty much 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

;;;;; And I think that lends this perception that it's been going on a long time and a lot is happening. If you look at the -- a lot is happening, obviously -- but the big scope of things, we're on track, we're on plan, we think we have just the right forces for what we need to do now.

;;;;; I would remind people that forces are still flowing to the region. As the secretary said, we're putting thousands of more each day. It was always the plan. That will continue, probably, to be the plan. Depends on the situation --

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: If you think about the difference, in World War II, there was no television. People had radios. People would go to the movies because the beginning of the movie would be a 15-minute preview of what took place, not the day before or the minute before or the hour before, or what was taking place at that moment, but it was a summary of the week's news of World War II.

;;;;; And now what we're seeing is every second another slice of what's actually happening out there. It is a breathtaking sight to see it. It tends to be all accurate, but not in an overall context. And it does, as the general said, leave people with the impression that it's been going on for days and weeks and months. And it is -- it was 1:00 -- (pause) --

;;;;; Q Thursday.

;;;;; (Pause continues.)

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: -- Friday --

;;;;; Q Friday.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: -- that the air war began. (Laughter, cross talk.)
It even seems like weeks to me. (Laughter.)

;;;;; But it is really just such a brief period, and they have moved so far on the ground and made major accomplishments in the West, made major accomplishments in the North, and clearly have caused the Republican Guard to pull in closer to Baghdad and Tikrit.

;;;;; And the difficult task remains. The Republican Guard units -- setting aside the Special Republican Guard and the Fedayeen Saddam group, which are different; they're more fanatical, I would say -- Republican Guard group are military, and that's where the difficult task begins. And it is starting with the Medina Division south of Karbala.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, we hadn't heard much from Iran in this entire time. I'm wondering if you can characterize what (sic) you think Iran is looking at this conflict and if you believe any troops with an allegiance to the Iranian government are inside Iraq at this time.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, there's no love lost between Iran and Iraq. On the other hand, both are states that have sponsored terrorism and the -- thus far, Iran has not done things that are making our life more difficult in Iraq. We hope that continues to be the case.

;;;;; With respect to the latter portion of your question, we do see Iran-sponsored forces, Iraqis but sponsored and armed and housed previously by Iran, in the country in relatively small numbers, which is unhelpful.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, could I just follow up on -- (name inaudible) --question a little bit. Is it possible that you did raise expectations beyond reasonable levels by talking about a shock and awe campaign? I mean, wasn't the impression put out that, you know, 3,000 bombs are going to fall in the first 48 hours and the regime is going to collapse?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Not by me, not by General Myers.

;;;;; Q Well, General Renuart came and gave a briefing along those lines.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Well, there were a lot of bombs dropped. The reality is that they were dropped on military targets and regime- controlled targets and they were not dropped on innocent men, women and children. And --

;;;;; Q No, I was asking you if you may have created the impression in the public minds this was going to be over in four days.

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: I thought I answered that.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; I certainly did not. General Myers certainly did not. Is it possible that someone might have said something that led some person to believe that? I suppose so. But realistic people -- why would we have put in train the hundreds of thousands of people to go do this task if we thought it was going to be over in five minutes? I mean, it's just unrealistic to --

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, if I could go back to Basra for a minute. As you said -- or, the initial decision was to bypass Basra. Apparently, the British have now decided that they're going to undertake some specific tactical missions there, military missions, so there apparently is a little bit of a change of plans. Can you just explain what's your plan for dealing with cities? Would you -- do you anticipate continuing to bypass cities or try to stabilize them as you go along, given what appears to be some kind of guerrilla threat?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Well, it depends on the situation on the battlefield at the time and where we are in our plan of execution. It was planned to, in fact, to bypass Basra early on. And the British forces, as they have done, have come around Basra at this time. And then we have to deal with the situation we find. Clearly, as the secretary said, the people in Basra I think for the most part would be happy to be done with this regime. But they're not going to do so as long as they think there's a shred of evidence that there's going to be some threat against them. If you remember in '91, hundreds of thousands were killed because they thought they had a chance for a popular uprising, and it didn't -- they didn't get -- the backing didn't materialize the way they thought it was going to materialize. And so I think we have, rightly so, some very cautious people. Now we'll go to the next phase once we've got the environmental situation under control in the oil fields, once we can start bringing humanitarian supplies up, once we can start getting water up to some of the cities where their -- the water supplies have been disrupted, which is all working in entrain. Now we'll look at working those Fedayeen Saddam and Republican Guard that may have come down in civilian uniforms to keep a gun in the back of the other people. And we'll start working that. And that's what you're seeing right now.

;;;;; Q General Myers?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary? Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; Q Question for General Myers?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Let's give General Myers --

;;;;; Q Yeah.

;;;;; Q I have one for General Myers, too, Mr. Secretary.

;;;;; Q Well, wait --

;;;;; Q I will. We'll wait, too.

;;;;; Q General Myers, you talked about how in the last two days a lot of our targets have been against the Republican Guard. In 1991 the U.S. military didn't want to go into Kuwait until 50 percent of the armor of the Iraqis had been destroyed. Is that sort of the template you're using here and we won't really move to close with the Republican Guard until half of their armor is destroyed?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I'll tell you what. I'm just not going to get into that. That gets into some of the operational details, I think. But it'd be at a great disadvantage to our force. But the situation is different, we think. Their overall strength, their training, and their morale is different than it was in '91. And we're going to take advantage of that in ways that I just can't go into.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q Thank you, sir. Just going -- just a moment, please. (Laughter.)
Going back to an earlier question --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: We'll be right with you -- (laughter).

;;;;; Q Can you give an update for any family members on the effort to retrieve the soldiers who have been killed in action and just that process? And is there any possible way that you could use the International Red Cross to retrieve the -- like, the soldiers that we saw on television? And how disturbed are you about the fact that they are showing the remains of these soldiers on national television?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: The -- clearly, what we expect from the Iraqi regime is to treat any prisoners of war in accordance with the Geneva Convention. And part of that is that the International Red Cross ought to have access to them.

;;;;; In fact, we are doing that with the enemy prisoners of war we have, that are nearing numbers now close to 4,000. We will ensure, I think, maybe even today or tomorrow, we'll have International Red Cross in there looking at the condition of the Iraqi prisoners of war we have. We expect the same thing. Of course we're concerned about our prisoners of war, our missing in action, and it's been our government policy for forever to continue to try to repatriate them and find out what happened to the missing.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; Q Sir, why --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Yes?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, thank you, sir. Going back to the question of the intel chatter and the possible use of weapons of mass destruction, the chemical weapons, against our troops, you and General Myers have often said if that should ever happen, we would use every means possible to retaliate. My question is, what more can you use that you're not now using to retaliate if it should happen?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Go ahead.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Okay. There are plans that General Franks has put together to address that situation. And the one thing we're not going to do is tell you what they are, Ivan, right now, because we haven't seen use of WMD, so far as we know, at this point. But when we do, we have plans to deal with that.

;;;;; Q General Myers, I want to ask you about the expectations question. The DIA director a couple of weeks ago said in a press interview that while the Pentagon is preparing for stiff resistance, there is a very real likelihood that resistance could collapse very quickly. A couple days before that, Vice President Cheney said that he did not expect a long, bloody fight, and that even significant elements of Republican Guard are likely to step aside. At this point of the conflict, do any of those predictions seem to be bearing out?

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: Well, I would say, given the fact that we're 200- plus miles inside Iraq at this time, on the doorstep of Baghdad, that we really haven't engaged on the ground the Republican Guard divisions. So -- we've put helicopters against them, attack helicopters, we've put air against them, we've put some artillery against them, but we haven't engaged them in a classic battle. So their mettle has yet to be tested. We're going to have to find out.

;;;;; Q What does the intelligence show -- it's a follow-up.

;;;;; (Cross-talk.)

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: No follow-ups.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Let me just make a comment on this, it keeps coming back up, about expectations. Analysts say what they say. And quite honestly, they seem to me to be all over the lot. They're not all in one little box of "It will be over in 15 minutes." If some analysts want to say it's going to be a cakewalk, and it turns out not to be a cakewalk, the fact of the matter is we have said repeatedly we can't say how long it will last. We do not know. It is not knowable. I've said I don't know how many times, "Days, weeks or months." "Don't know."

;;;;; Same thing like the cost. I notice today everyone was saying, "Oh my goodness, they did not know what the war was going to cost." And I have said repeatedly we don't know what the war is going to cost, and the truth is, we don't know what the war is going to cost. You can't know it, it's not knowable.

;;;;; The budget figure the president announced up there is not the cost of the war; the budget figure he announced up there is the cost -- some money that State needs, some money the CIA needs, some money that Homeland Security needs, some money that this department needs to carry us from the beginning of the global war on terror, starting October 1st of this fiscal year, through where we are today and, hopefully, through the rest of the year; and some money to flow forces overseas. And we can't tell you -- if you can't tell how long it's going to last, you sure can't tell what it's going to cost.

;;;;; But now --

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- was based on the war plan --

;;;;; SEC. RUMSFELD: Shhh! (Laughter.) Shhh!

;;;;; Now, if -- if people have a tendency to want to gravitate toward some analyst's expectation which is unreasonable -- which may be unreasonable, given the fact we're four days into it, it's a little early to know if it's unreasonable, but let's pretend it's unreasonable, then I would not follow that analyst and I would try to listen to what we're saying from this podium as to what we think.

;;;;; Pam?

;;;;; Q Could you explain what's going on with the -- a British spokesman came out and said that elements of the 51st Division have pulled back to Basra. This is a regular army division. We were led to believe that this was a division that abandoned its post, that the commander surrendered to U.S. forces and they abandoned their post and went back home. Were they under -- were they forced back there by Fedayeen? Were they regrouping on their own? Are there other groups that you've seen abandon their posts that are somehow regrouping? And does this force you to rethink the way that you're taking prisoners, which is you're -- from what I gather, you're trying to cull out the ones you want and let the rest of the ones that you don't think will present a problem go home.

;;;;; GEN. MYERS: I think we think the 51st has surrendered; that some of their equipment may have been used by the Fedayeen, perhaps, or other folks the Fedayeen brought with them. I mean, supposedly there were some, maybe, perhaps Republican Guard members who changed to civilian clothes and came south.

;;;;; But I have seen no reliable evidence yet -- and it may be because we haven't seen it yet -- that the 51st has reconstituted. Most of them ran away. Some of their equipment may still be there. They did have a tank battle today with some of their equipment. We think it was the Fedayeen, again, manning some of this equipment, perhaps Republican Guard, and they were defeated by the British.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

Michigan Senators Block Five Bush Judicial Nominees

By Jeff Johnson

CNSNews.com Congressional Bureau Chief

March 24, 2003

Capitol Hill (CNSNews.com) - Michigan's two Democratic senators have registered objections to all five of President Bush's judicial nominees from their state, effectively killing their chances for confirmation by returning negative "blue slips." Conservative legal experts said Friday that the action proves the judicial confirmation process must be reformed.

Senators Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow notified the Senate Judiciary Committee Wednesday of their negative recommendations for 6th Circuit Court of Appeals nominees Richard Griffin, David McKeague, Susan Bieke Neilson and Henry Saad. The pair also objected to the confirmation of Thomas Ludington to the U.S. District Court in Eastern Michigan.

Phil Kent, president of the Southeastern Legal Foundation in Atlanta, worked for former Sen. Strom Thurmond when he was chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Kent has long disapproved of the blue slip process, which allows a nominee's home state senators to effectively veto their confirmation.

"I think we need to do away with it," Kent said. "I think the blue slip thing is archaic, and I also think, in this day and age, when there's ideological litmus testing that it's just another weapon liberals can use or, for that matter, Republicans or conservatives could use."

It will be difficult to bypass the Senate tradition of blue slips, explained John Nowacki, director of legal policy for the Free Congress Foundation, even when the process is being abused as he believes it is in this case.

"This isn't a case where home state senators have some unique insight into why every Michigan nominee should not get a hearing and a vote," he argued. "Instead, it's an attempt to keep a court with six judicial emergencies vacant while Levin and Stabenow play petty political games."

Nowacki noted the contrast between President Bush's handling of the judicial nomination process - including re-nominating several of former President Clinton's nominees - and the treatment afforded Bush's nominees by Democrats in the Senate.

"George W. Bush is the only president to nominate a failed court of appeals nominee of a predecessor from another party," he recalled. "He's shown a willingness to reach out to the other party but - as Levin and Stabenow, once again, have demonstrated - he can't expect the same consideration from the Democrats."

The blue slip process was originally created, Nowacki explained, in a time when nominees were more likely to be known to senators from their home state than to other senators and when thorough background investigations were not always possible. Kent believes that time no longer exists.

"I think the FBI background check is far better than anybody 'knowing somebody,'" Kent said. "I'm not concerned about anybody slipping through if somebody didn't know [a nominee]."

Kent notes that, in addition to the FBI background probe, investigators from the Senate Judiciary Committee thoroughly examine the qualifications and background of every nominee. He's optimistic that, especially as the 2004 presidential elections approach, a bipartisan agreement can be reached to set new rules for judicial confirmations.

"Nominees should get a hearing, there shouldn't be any blue slips involved, and once a hearing is held, you get an up-or-down vote on the floor of the Senate," Kent said. "And I think Republicans and conservatives have to agree to that if there's a Democrat...a liberal in [office]."

Calls to Sen. Stabenow's office seeking comment on this story were not returned. A spokeswoman for Sen. Levin acknowledged to CNSNews.com that the senator had returned negative blue slips on all five nominees but could offer no explanation as to why.

*****KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS AT THE PENTAGON, 3-25-03*****

- Our Coalition is on a steady advance, bound together by the principle of protecting all nations from a brutal regime armed with weapons that could kill thousands of innocent people.

- We're fighting an enemy that knows no rules of law and is willing to kill in order to continue Saddam Hussein's reign of fear.

- We cannot know the duration of this war. Yet we know its outcome; we will prevail. The Iraqi regime will be disarmed. The Iraqi regime will be ended. The Iraqi people will be free. And our world will be more secure and peaceful.

- Our Coalition forces and their families are showing great courage, and some have suffered great loss. America is grateful to all those who have sacrificed in our cause.

- Our troops also continue to fight bravely in other fronts of this war on terror. In Afghanistan last week, coalition forces launched Operation Valiant Strike against terrorists and their allies in the southern mountains of Afghanistan.

- This nation and our Coalition partners are committed to making sure that the Iraqi citizens who have suffered under a brutal tyrant have the food and medicine they need as soon as possible. And soon, the Iraqi people will see the great compassion of not only the United States, but other nations around the

Providing Humanitarian Relief to the People of Iraq

President Bush has requested $2.4 billion to create a new, flexible account focused on relief and reconstruction for the people of Iraq. These funds will be used to provide food, water, medicine, and clothing to the people of Iraq. They will also be used to repair damaged infrastructure, restore important government services, and keep schools open.

The total commitment of resources for Iraq relief and reconstruction, including those provided through the Department of Defense, is approximately $3.5 billion.

CBS "EARLY SHOW" INTERVIEW WITH SECRETARY OF STATE COLIN POWELL

7:08 A.M. (EST), WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2003

RENE SYLER: Secretary of State Colin Powell was the architect of the first Gulf War as chairman of the Joint Chiefs. And as secretary of State, he's been at the heart of the decision-making process that led up to the current military conflict. He spoke with CBS News' Lesley Stahl.

;;;;; (Begin videotape.)

;;;;; MS. STAHL: The secretary of Defense said that there are intelligence reports that the chain of command in Iraq has been told to use chemical weapons against our soldiers once that battle of Baghdad starts.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: We listen to such reports and we make sure that we have in our contingency planning how to handle such an attack. Our troops went into this battle knowing that they might be exposed to chemical weapons and, God forbid, biological weapons.

;;;;; MS. STAHL: So these reports are not so specific. They're pretty vague, or they don't even exist.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: They're pretty vague. I mean, they're reports. People say that such instructions have been given. It's a war. There's a living, breathing enemy out there who's doing everything he can to keep us from knowing what his instructions are. We are quite good with our intelligence, but not perfect.

;;;;; MS. STAHL: The Powell doctrine in military terms is that you throw a massive force. If you're going to go to war, make it huge. There are now criticisms we're beginning to hear that this force isn't massive enough.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: That's nonsense. It's the usual chatter. I mean, we have commentators everywhere. Every general who ever worked for me is now on some network commenting on the daily battle. And frankly, battles come and wars come and they have ups and downs; they have a rhythm to it.

;;;;; The Powell doctrine is you use decisive force. And the plan that General Franks and his commanders have put together is a decisive force that will get the job done.

;;;;; So don't let one days' ups and downs suggest that the battle isn't going well. The United States armed forces, with our coalition partners, the British principally and the Australians, have gone 300 miles deep into Iraq in a period of five days. That is a heck of an achievement.

;;;;;;;; MS. STAHL: Yeah, but the rear is exposed.

;;;;;;;; SEC. POWELL: It's not -- exposed to what? Exposed to small --

;;;;;;;; MS. STAHL: Exposed to Fedayeen, exposed to --

;;;;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Fine. So? We'll get them in due course. They are not exposed to a massive Iraqi army that is operating in a coordinated way that can assault our flanks and stop our assault.

;;;;;;;; MS. STAHL: Are you saying you're not worried or concerned about guerrilla warfare?

;;;;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Of course we are. And we're trained to handle this. But this chatter for the last 24 hours that everything is coming apart because on Sunday we took a few casualties -- the casualties for this operation have been low. You don't want to slow your advance to go into a particular city and spend all your time rooting out people that you will get in due course. They're not threatening the advance.

;;;;;;;; MS. STAHL: But you can't get your supplies.

;;;;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Who says?

;;;;;;;; MS. STAHL: Well, you can't get the humanitarian in there.

;;;;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Only because the mine fields haven't been cleared at the Port of Umm Qasr. But our troops are being supplied. And water is slowly being restored to places like Basrah. It's up to 40 percent of the water capacity now. And that was a question of fixing the pumping stations in Basrah. And as soon as the mines have been cleared, the ships are waiting to deliver the humanitarian supplies to Umm Qasr, and the situation will change rapidly.

END.

I need to call the Chiefs of Staff at Treasury, Defense, Interior and Homeland on a 9-11 Commission-related matter. Could you give me the name and number of the right person for your agency? I thought this would be the quickest way. Thanks

The head of RMD can be made to report either to COO or CFO, although the statute more naturally suggests that the RMD head would report to the CFO because the CFO is charged with responsibility to " direct, manage, and provide policy guidance and oversight of agency financial management personnel, activities, and operations."

Separately, the CFO can be made to report to the head of OA or to anyone else in the EOP who is so designated by the President.

Please call with any questions.

Subject: Admin Contact Meeting Summary

The following items were brought up at this week's Admin Contact meeting:

VRU's

The Secret Service is currently working to station cabinets containing extra VRU's throughout the White House Office buildings. These will be available to volunteers, appointments, and anyone else in need of a VRU in the case of an attack. A diagram or map depicting the locations of each of these cabinets will be forthcoming.

Parking

Reminder that those with Ellipse parking passes are not permitted to park in the newly drawn spaces on the northeast portion of the ellipse near the Visitor's Center. Those spaces are reserved for cars with H passes.

White House Comment Line

In times of war it is standard practice for the White House Comment Line to extend its hours. Comment Line administrators have made the decision to remain open until 9:00 pm Monday through Friday. Due to the fact that the Comment Line relies heavily upon volunteers to man its phones during the day, there is now a void to be filled in the evening hours from 5:00 until 9:00 (they are always willing to accept volunteers, but the evening is when they are most in need). Anyone who is interested in volunteering should contact Justin Grove at 6-5446, or via email at Justin\_A\_Grove@who.eop.gov. While they would love to have people volunteer on a regular basis, they are also happy to take in one-time volunteers as well.

Pagers

White House Management has asked that all pagers which are not used be returned. If you have a White House issued pager that you do not see a need for, please contact Liz or Jon.

White House Signal

The White House Signal phone service is intended for use by the President, Vice President, and the President's senior staff. White House Management asks that all other parties use the White House Operator at 456-1414.

Mend It

The President is right: The judicial confirmation process is broken. During the 2000 campaign George W. Bush realized this - knowing full well Senate Republicans abused their advise-and-consent role during the Clinton years - and proposed that the Senate deal with judicial nominations in a timely fashion. He noted then that the process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation." Bush knew his history, too, citing the "unacceptably high" number of bench vacancies left by partisan sniping in both the presidencies of his father and Bill Clinton. He has announced plans for changing the way the Senate acts on judicial nominations no fewer than three times. In a recent letter to Senators Bill Frist and Tom Daschle, the President again called for the charade to end: I ask Senators of both parties to come together to end the escalating cycle of blame and bitterness and to restore fairness, predictability, and dignity to the process. I ask that the Senate take action, including adoption of a permanent rule, to ensure timely up-or-down votes on judicial nominations both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. This is the only way to ensure that our judiciary works and that good people remain willing to be nominated to the federal bench. All Senators should have a chance to have their voices heard and their votes counted. All Presidents should have their judicial nominees considered and voted upon in a reasonable time. All nominees should have the certainty of an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable time. All judges should have the assurance that vacancies on their courts will not persist for years. And all Americans should have the assurance that the federal courts will remain open and fully staffed to resolve their disputes and protect their rights and liberties.

In the ideal world, Senators would agree to Bush's proposals - and now. Yet in the real world inhabited by cynics and skeptics, it is hard to believe the Senate would give so much ground to its antagonist in the Executive Branch. Never mind that the Judiciary Committee chairman (Orrin Hatch) and the ranking minority member (Patrick Leahy) have, at different times, expressed their support for such reforms. The game of one-upmanship and spite has gone on far too long. The long knives have cut both ways. President Bush wants to end the hemorrhaging brought about by petty politicking on judges. Give judges hearings, then vote them up or vote them down - and make such rules permanent so that they would remain for a Democratic Senate or a Republican one, for a Republican President or a Democratic one. It's not too much to ask.

The Senate should adhere to the President's request. Not doing so would be the unkindest cut of all.

Owen to Get Rare Second Chance in Senate

By JESSE J. HOLLAND, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Texas judge Priscilla Owen is getting a rare second chance for a federal appeals court seat, with the Senate Judiciary Committee's new Republican majority poised to overturn last year's rejection.

Owen, a Texas Supreme Court justice, was to receive another vote Thursday from the committee that rejected her nomination on a party-line vote last year when it was controlled by the Democrats.

She is likely to win committee recommendation for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans this year on a similar, but opposite, party-line vote because Republicans now control the committee with a one-vote margin.

The GOP won control of the Senate in last year's election.

"This committee will now begin setting straight the mistake it made by halting this nomination in committee last fall," Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said two weeks ago.

Democrats contend Owen is an anti-abortion and pro-business judicial activist whose opinions and rulings are overly influenced by her personal beliefs. Owen says she would be a fair and impartial judge if confirmed by the Senate.

"I judge cases by what is right," said Owen, who appeared at her second Judiciary committee hearing two weeks ago, a replay of one she had when Democrats ran the panel. "I do not judge cases by what is politically correct. I apply the law, and the law has to be predictable and it has to be fair and that's what I do."

Liberal groups said Owens still poses a danger.

"Owen is a far-right judicial activist who tries to remake the law to reach an outcome that is often hostile to the rights and interests of individuals," said Ralph Neas, president of the liberal People For the American Way.

Republicans say Democrats have distorted Owen's record and decisions as a judge.

"Not once did I ever see her try to insert her own political preferences or beliefs into her job as a judge," said Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, who served with Owen on the court for three years.

The Democrats have tried to hold up Senate floor votes or committee action on a number of other nominees they consider objectionable.

The filibuster of Miguel Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on the Senate floor hit its 50th day on Wednesday, and nominations have been stacking up behind his.

protect the Kurds from the Iraqis and potentially keep the Turks and the Kurds apart.

;;;;; Do you envision that the northern front at some point would be a more offensive nature heading south toward Baghdad, south toward Tikrit, to harass Hussein from the north as well as from the south?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, there are some parts of your question that allude to exactly what their purpose is up there. And I described more their purpose in the answer to the preceding question. So I'm not going to reinforce necessarily your view of what they're going to do up there as it relates to the Turks and the Kurds and what have you.

;;;;; And I understand your question is really much deeper than that. So let me address that. The capabilities of that force may be more than what meets the eye. Let's say that first. They can be used offensively. And if we choose to use them that way, then that's indeed how they'll be used. But I'm not going to allude to exactly how they'll be used as time goes on.

;;;;; Please, in the back.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- ABC News. In your opening statement, you said that the Iraqi regime is showing increasingly disregard for the Geneva Convention. Is that -- when you said that, are you specifically referring to the American POWs that the Iraqi regime is holding?

;;;;; Can you give us an update on the American POWs? Have they been visited by the International Red Cross, as the Iraqi EPWs have south of Basra? And also, can you give us an update on the casualty figures? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, let me start with first the casualty figures. That's not something I'm going to engage in. What I can tell you is we notify families first. And we don't want to get into the numbers here. When the time is right for numbers to come out, they'll come by other means.

;;;;; Generally speaking, figures like that, after they have been rolled up, are released by the Pentagon. We're fighting the war here. The front part of your question -- what I'm referring to in that case is how the regime has already approached prisoners of war, our soldiers and Marines that have been taken, our pilots that have been taken, their willingness to show their faces routinely, which is already a violation.

;;;;; We'd love to show the faces of the Iraqi prisoners we have. It's not the same as what you see of our prisoners. The Iraqi prisoners are being treated very, very well.

;;;;; I don't know if the Red Cross has made contact with our prisoners yet. We have not gotten a report on that. But we certainly continue to demand that the regime treat our prisoners in accordance with the Geneva Convention, as we are theirs.

;;;;; The fourth row please -- fourth row. Yes, sir.

;;;;; Q Sir, I am -- (inaudible) -- from Polish weekly -- (inaudible). Two questions. Do you receive information about increasing movement of anti-war protests around the world? Do the information changing your decisions, influence your decisions? Secondly, do the soldiers parachuted this night to the north of Iraq -- (inaudible) -- from the bases located in Italy?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, I would leave any comments about what role Italy might have played to Italy. It's appropriate for them to make any comments. The force is based in Italy on a routine basis.

;;;;; The first part of your question -- we can go back to that, please.

What was the first part?

;;;;; Q Are anti-war protests --

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Yes, thank you.

;;;;; Q -- influencing your decisions?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: See, I'm still trying to figure out how I can get a pay raise, so I can't remember as many things. The anti-war protests around the world we view as people expressing their right to say what it is that's important to them. That's what we want to see happen here in this country. It won't happen right now.

;;;;; Off on the left side -- the green shirt, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Knight-Ridder. I have two questions about Basra, if you don't mind. You mentioned that some of the troops who had agreed to leave the battlefield and go home have now been pressed back into service. They were following the coalition advice as spelled out in the leaflets. Is there anything that you're going to be doing to change your procedure, then, for having them leave the battlefield, since they've now been pressed into service again by the Iraqis?

;;;;; The other question I had is with regard to the armored column that left Basra yesterday and headed south. Do you have any information about that, whether it was an offensive tactic or they're retreating? And also, how were they able to leave Basra when the British yesterday said they had cordoned the city off? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: You've got a complex question there, so I'm going to actually let you ask it again. What's the first part again?

;;;;; Q The first part is with regards to the surrender.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Okay. I got the first part. Let's do that one first, and I'll let you -- actually do each segment, because I want to answer each one of them. They're all fair questions.

;;;;; First, on the surrender of the 51st, yes, they did follow the instructions of the coalition. And that was a matter of choice, and we applaud their choice. They were pressed back into service, as best we can tell, by the paramilitaries, the terroristic-behaving organizations of this regime. That was not by choice.

;;;;; We believe that some of them made yet another choice, which was to put an end to that type of behavior. And we applaud that choice as well. So we think that we're about right. And what we've told different organizations of the Iraqi forces that are out there, particularly the regular army, and also some of the Republican Guards, we still believe that forces in this country should not shed their blood for a regime whose days are numbered.

;;;;; Now, the second part of your question was --

;;;;; Q If they simply leave the battlefield and go back, what's to prevent them from being pressed into service again against their will by Iraqis?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Their choice. It really is their choice to do that. And we would certainly not want to have that happen. And we don't want them to be endangered either. And they are endangered; there's no question about it. Anyone in this country that returns to their homes or stays in their homes while the regime is present is in mortal danger. That's happening all over the country.

;;;;; Did you want to go to the second part of your question? I'm going to let you go a little bit further on this one.

;;;;; Q I appreciate it. The second part was with regard to the armored column that was leaving Basra and heading south. Was that an offensive tactic? Were they retreating? And also, how were they able to head south? The British yesterday said they had cordoned off the city.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Okay. I think I can take care of those two. This is a classic example of the fog of war, so let me explain how this works. Out on the line, a report will occur. The report gets pushed up immediately, especially if there's something that appears is going to require reinforcement.

;;;;; In this case we had something we call moving target indicators, an electronic signature that says we've got something vehicular moving in large numbers. That got reported up. It also got released to the world, because we have embedded media, and they were reporting what the unit was sensing at that time; a very classic example of how the world looks from down on the line.

;;;;; The reality was there were not some large number of vehicles. We heard reports between hundreds and thousands. That was not the case at all. In fact, it was an erroneous signal. So what we do when we have indications like that, to work through the fog of war, which we are all in the military very accustomed to, we'll then do something else to corroborate it, and then something else to corroborate it.

;;;;; So a series of other efforts to gain further intelligence, to establish surveillance, to conduct reconnaissance, all those things were done. And we determined it was a different sized force and we destroyed it. It's as simple as that.

;;;;; And the last part of the question was about how could they have left Basra if it was cordoned off. Forces did come out of Basra, and the UK encountered them, particularly on the southwest side, and again destroyed the force that came out.

;;;;; How does that happen? The cordon is not like a wall that gets set around the town as much as it is a wall of control around the town. So things may move toward the town from the outside and be encountered, or they may try to move from inside the town outward and be encountered. Once a determination is made that it's either hostile or not, then further action is taken. In that case, it was determined hostile and they were destroyed.

;;;;; Please, in the gray shirt.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- U.S. News & World Report. I'm wondering, are you facing shortages of supplies like food and water and batteries up on the front lines, as there have been some reports?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Jeff, I'm not aware of any shortfalls. This is like many other things. For continuous operations, what we have our commanders do is analyze their status from the lowest unit up to the highest-level unit. And that's reported on a continuous basis, and we push them what they need. We haven't had any problems that would hinder operations at this point.

;;;;; In the second row, please.

;;;;; Q General, Chaz Henry, WTOP Radio. U.S. and UK military officers have asked us to be careful about using images of military men and women who may die in this fighting. Does avoiding that imagery in any sense take away the public's ability to appreciate either the sense of dedication, sacrifice or human cost of war?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, we know that this war is being prosecuted by humans. And I thank you for the question, because it helps to reinforce that right now. Often what you see is what we can show because we have images of technology.

;;;;; But the reality is there's a human being behind every one of those. There's a human that has to take off from the deck of a ship, a human that has to take off from the surface of some runway somewhere inside of the region. And each time they take off, they can't be certain that they're going to return.

;;;;; You've seen the activities that happen out on the line. You've seen soldiers and Marines from multiple nations that put their lives at risk in some other country other than their own for the cause of freedom. And as you see that sort of thing, you see the level of dedication that's out there.

;;;;; All we'd ask is that you respect that those are, in fact, humans out there and that they have families and that we care for them greatly.

;;;;; Please, in the back, in the red.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) According to the Iraqi health minister, 36 people are dead and more than 200 injured yesterday night in Baghdad. Can you confirm that fact?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I'm not aware of more than 200 being injured in Baghdad last night. I've not heard the report. What I can say is that any time civilians are injured inside of a combat zone, it's an unfortunate circumstance, something we don't want to see happen. And we do everything we can to prevent that.

;;;;; The regime has not been as careful in that regard. And we're seeing indications where many of the problems that we see where civilians are being reported being killed happen to be in Shiah populations. There may be a pattern there. I'll let you draw your own conclusion.

;;;;; Please, in the blue shirt.

;;;;; Q BBC French Service. Can you tell us, on a daily basis, first of all, the number of sorties so we have an idea of the rhythm, the thrust of the battle? And on the Scud issue, in 1991 Gulf War, coalition aircraft had hard time to target Scud platforms. How much the situation has improved? Can you tell us a little bit where these missiles launched on Kuwait are launched from? And can you target them?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I'll start with the second half of the question first about the Scuds and the historic use of certain areas of Iraq for launching on neighboring countries.

;;;;; Let me begin by saying we're very active in those areas to make sure that it doesn't happen again. We have a variety of capabilities to make that happen. It's particularly out in the western desert. And we're able to move very well. We have good surveillance and reconnaissance out there. And thus far we've been successful.

;;;;; But when we join the realities of some of what the regime has been doing over the last several years through its efforts in denial and deception while developing significant military capability that you're beginning to see, like the Sumer (ph) mine that wasn't in there, like atropine injectors purchased with oil-for-food money, we also know that there was some enhancement to the Scud missile system, particularly the al Hussein family.

;;;;; And the reports that we've given you about the potential extended range makes it possible to move it much further east than where the missiles were fired during Desert Storm, much further east, to be able to range a much larger radius of countries.

;;;;; And so we remain focused on finding those whenever we can. Things like the missile assembly facility that I showed you the picture of help us to degrade their ability to threaten their neighbors. And that's part of our effort as well.

;;;;; I think we have time for one more question. Please, in the far side.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) Just following on from that, was this missile site that you've destroyed known to or visited by U.N. weapons inspectors? And, if so, why did you destroy it?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I don't know if it was inspected by U.N. inspectors or not. We can find that out and provide the information to you. We destroyed it because it could be potentially used at this point for this operation.

;;;;; Even beyond the denial and deception that we all witnessed during the UNMOVIC days and years before that, even beyond that, we knew that there were systems inside of there. Some have not been accounted for at this point in time. And so, rather than see them used, we destroy the places where they could be assembled. And we'll also look for places where they might be used and destroy them there.

;;;;; Ladies and gentlemen, thank you very much.

END.

UNITED STATES CENTRAL COMMAND DAILY PRESS BRIEFING

BRIEFER: GEN. VINCE BROOKS, DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF OPERATIONS

DOHA, QATAR

7:06 A.M. (EST), THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2003

GEN. BROOKS: Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. Today is the seventh day since the coalition ground forces entered Iraq. Our plan is working, and we're one day closer to achieving our objectives. We will continue until all of our objectives are attained.

;;;;; Day by day, we significantly diminish the regime's ability to command and control its forces. As we do, we witness the regime's forces becoming more and more desperate in their actions. Their repressive acts against Iraqi citizens showing any signs of tolerance of the coalition are growing harsher. And their disregard for the Geneva Convention are becoming more and more pronounced.

;;;;; Our field commanders report that in the vicinity of An Najaf, as one example, Iraqi regime forces are seizing children from their homes, telling their families that the males must fight for the regime or they will all face execution.

;;;;; The men and women of the coalition are fighting very well. They're showing tenacity to the forces of the regime and compassion to the victims of the regime. We remain committed to the memory of those who have lost their lives in this operation.

;;;;; The force is growing daily, and we are defeating the regime's forces with overwhelming force in each battle every day. The coalition is unified and strong, and it grows more so every day, with now 49 countries contributing to Operation Iraqi Freedom.

;;;;; Now, as before, let me give you an update on our operations and then we'll proceed to questions.

;;;;; Our direct attacks against the regime's structures and units continued in the last 24 hours. And the cumulative effect we're seeing is degraded control. We're seeing locally controlled military and paramilitary actions, frequent survival moves by regime leaders, and uncontrolled firing of air defense missiles.

;;;;; I want to show you two sets of pre- and post-strike images today. The first image is an Iraqi missile support facility, and this is in Baghdad. (Image is shown.) In these types of facilities, ballistic missiles are assembled, essentially. Their parts are put together for use. And destroying it disrupts the missile production and reduces the threat to neighboring countries.

;;;;; Post-strike image shows an effective attack. (Image is shown.) And the split view. (Image is shown.)

;;;;; The second set that I'll show you today is of a television and communications facility that was used for dual purposes by the regime -- on one hand, to broadcast television; on another hand, to use as a node for communicating to different parts of the regime. And our intended effect in this case was to sever the links to the outside for the regime.

;;;;; This is the pre-strike image. (Image is shown.) You can see there are two very large radar dishes -- or satellite dishes, excuse me. And the post-strike, please. (Image is shown.) An effective attack. And the split. (Image is shown.)

;;;;; The work being done by our coalition Special Operations forces in northern Iraq, southern Iraq, western Iraq and central Iraq accounts for the entire array of Special Operations capability. Strategic reconnaissance is ongoing to find weapons of mass destruction, ballistic missiles and regime leaders.

;;;;; (Unconventional?) war is ongoing in several areas to prepare Iraqis to join in liberation. And direct action occurs in times and places of our choosing.

;;;;; The land component remains on track and continues its advance beyond Diwaniyah east of An Najaf, and an airborne brigade combat team parachuted into an airfield in northern Iraq yesterday evening.

;;;;; Action occurred at several places I'd like to highlight today. First, east of An Najaf, coalition forces of the U.S. Fifth Corps were attacked by vehicle-mounted irregulars, where there had been a report of some significant number of vehicles approaching. The reports were not accurate in terms of the size of the force, and Fifth Corps units soundly defeated the attack, destroying most of the force.

;;;;; In An Nasiriyah, the First Marine Expeditionary Force defeated an attack by irregulars, supported by armored personnel carriers, rocket launchers and anti-aircraft artillery systems. The fight lasted for about 90 minutes. The Marines in that battle did sustain some wounded but remained fully effective.

;;;;; UK forces, as Air Marshal Burridge told you earlier today, have continued aggressive patrols and operations in the Al Faw and Basrah areas, and they also have inflicted considerable damage on paramilitaries south of Basrah and near Al Faw.

;;;;; Our maritime component continues its efforts to expand the width of the cleared channel in Khor Abdullah. I mentioned to you yesterday that that channel was open all the way up to Umm Qasr, and that is, in fact, the case. It was about 60 yards wide that we were able to open a path.

;;;;; As we expanded that broader to get to about a 200-yard-wide pathway, we identified some bottom-responsive mines. Or the actual term that is used is really bottom-influenced mines. These are sub-surface mines that are able to be programmed, if need be, to count the number of hulls that pass over top of them, and at a certain point, however programmed, they detonate.

;;;;; And so, before we proceed with humanitarian assistance through that area, we want to ensure that that's all cleared. So clearing operations continue today.

;;;;; I want to show you the type of mine that we're describing here. (Image is shown.) This is a Sumer (ph) mine, developed by the Iraqis from another country's design. And as I mentioned, it is programmable. We believe that these have been developed since the imposition of sanctions. Before 1991, Iraq did not have these.

;;;;; I'd like to also show you now some additional leaflets. And in this case, I'll show you one leaflet that we've used in the last several days to communicate with the Iraqi people. (Image is shown.) This one focuses on protecting landmarks.

;;;;; And it's very much, as I said yesterday, because we see the regime positioning military equipment in and around cultural, religious and historic landmarks. We want to inform the Iraqi population that we have no intention of destroying those landmarks, but we will destroy military equipment. We make that very clear to them. That's what this leaflet shows.

;;;;; We continue our efforts to preserve the resources of the Iraqi people and protect their future. And our efforts really engaged in earnest yesterday in that regard and also in our humanitarian activities.

;;;;; First, over 600 oil wells at this point now fall into an area that is under coalition control. Our firefighting operations continued. (Image is shown.) And in the blue highlighted area, you see the parts that we now control, about 600 wells inside of there; more to follow. The red dot at the bottom shows where we still have six wells on fire, and our work is ongoing to put those out.

;;;;; Additional good news: We had two humanitarian convoys that went over land yesterday into the areas of Safwan, just north of the Kuwait-Iraq border, and Umm Qasr, which you're all well familiar with. And that delivered much-needed water and food supplies to those two areas.

;;;;; I'm going to show you a video here, and I'll show you the entire thing, because I think it's truly worth a thousand words. And it shows the arrival of the humanitarian supplies into Safwan, I believe, in this case.

;;;;; This is a civil affairs soldier in this case. We have civil affairs units that are located with our military organizations.

;;;;; (Videotape continues.)

;;;;; There's no coercion in any of this. This is all truth. You see people who are tasting, for the first time in their lives, what freedom is.

;;;;; We also have free Iraqi forces that some of you have heard of that are joined with our civil affairs units. We've organized them based on the regions that they came from, the regions of their origin into small groups. They join with our civil affairs units, who are then joined with our combat units.

;;;;; I'm going to show you a picture of some of the effect that our free Iraqi forces are having in a very recent encounter. As I mentioned, this is about as good an example as we can find of how the coalition is really being received as the regime elements are being pushed away.

;;;;; There are two images here. (Image is shown.) This is a free Iraqi forces person interacting. He was with a civil affairs battalion commander, did some interpretation and translation work, but mostly he simply interacted.

;;;;; And the next one, please. (Image is shown.) There's no hostility.

;;;;; This scene is being repeated all over Iraq, in every area in which we're operating. And it is the truth.

;;;;; Let me close by saying we remain true to our stated purposes of removing the regime and liberating the long-oppressed people of Iraq, and we will not stop until we have done so.

;;;;; At this point I'll take your questions. Let's start on the right, please.

;;;;; Q General, Geoff Meade from Sky News. The British are just reporting in London the discovery of several thousand chemical protection suits in the Rumaila oil fields that they now control. What does that say to you? What concern does that give you about Saddam Hussein's ability to use chemical weapons and his willingness to do so? And also, doesn't it signal that you should now start to up the tempo of your operations, because the longer you wait, the more opportunity he has?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: What it tells us is, first, there is a certain knowledge in the Iraqi forces that chemical weapons will be used. That's the first thing I'd say. We don't have chemical weapons to use. When we join that with what we found yesterday in An-Nasari (sp) in the hospital, there's obviously distribution to outlying units. Perhaps there's already a decision that's been taken that at some point chemicals will be used.

;;;;; As to the second half of the question, on the pace of operations, operations don't need to change pace. The regime has always had the ability and potentially the will to use those weapons. The timing of our operation doesn't necessarily drive that decision.

;;;;; And so we'll continue on the pace that we have right now, operating at a time and place of our choosing. But it certainly reminds us of the reality of this risk that we've been speaking about for so long. What it does for us also is it causes us to take notice and be more ready to the potential use.

;;;;; We'll go in the third row back there, please.

;;;;; Q General, Don Melvin, Cox Newspapers. We hear regularly that you're right on timeline. I think people are trying to understand overall what that might mean. Without revealing anything about when any particular attack might start, what broadly is your timeline for the military operation? When might Baghdad be under control to start a transition to some sort of civil administration? Is it three weeks or seven months? Give people some idea of what your timeline is.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Probably a better way for us to describe it as that we're on our plan, and we have had a plan for certain actions to occur. They're related in time and space and purpose. When things impact that -- for example, the weather had an impact on some of what we could do -- they're -- maintaining the relationship of time and space and purpose has to be preserved. So it changes timelines per se as to when something's going to occur.

;;;;; It's impossible for me at this point to say what date we're going to do a certain thing, but rather when conditions are set, we will take further actions.

;;;;; Let me go off to the left side here. Please, Kelly.

;;;;; Q Good afternoon, General. Kelly O'Donnell, NBC News. Couple of things. Can you update us on the status of the investigation concerning the events in the Baghdad market, acknowledged yesterday that it was possible that it was the responsibility of the U.S.? Can you tell us more now?

;;;;; And secondly, there are increased reports today of friendly fire incidents involving at least three dozen Marines who may have been hurt. What can you tell us?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: What I can tell you about the Shaab market is that this report, like any other report we get that has any potential at all that we may have caused unintended consequences from an attack, we examine in detail.

;;;;; And that examination involves looking back at what missions we've flown, what weapon systems specifically have been used within a period of time when it might have contributed to such an issue; we look at flight paths, we look at angles of attack; we look at everything we can to examine whether or not we did this. It reinforces first that we have no intention of harming civilians unnecessarily or destroying infrastructure and buildings that we don't intend to attack.

;;;;; What I know further about this particular one is that we did have an air mission that attacked some targets, not in that area but in a different area, and during that period of time, they encountered surface-to-air missile fire. As I mentioned in the opening statement, we've seen uncontrolled surface-to-air missile fire. And what I mean by that is, normally they are controlled by radar, but there's a hazard to turning on a radar against one of our aircraft, a very certain hazard, and so the firing crews have decided not to turn on the radar, and fire the missiles ballistically.

;;;;; They're also using very old stocks, we've discovered, and those stocks are not reliable, and missiles are going up and coming down. So we think it's entirely possible that this may have been, in fact, an Iraqi missile that either went up and came down, or given the behaviors of the regime lately, it may have been a deliberate attack inside of town.

;;;;; Q Friendly fire, sir?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Thanks very much.

;;;;; The other question was about friendly fire. Similarly, whenever we have any kind of incident that we think may involve a blue-on-blue, as we describe it, type of event, whether it's on the ground or air- to-ground or whatever may happen. We begin to investigate right away. We've already reported a few of those. We had the unfortunate incident with a Patriot missile against a U.K. GR-4 aircraft. We will be truthful with you about it when we know some more, but right now, all reports are currently under investigation.

;;;;; Let me go fourth row, please.

;;;;; Q Jonathan Marcus (sp), BBC. A lot of the armchair generals and the military pundits in the United States are constantly saying now that your force is too small in terms of combat troops and it's a relatively light force. Given the sorts of problems you seem to be having securing the area in Nasiriyah, how confident are you that you have sufficient troops to be able to end this war before additional heavy divisions actually arrive in the theater?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, I've worked with many of those generals, so I have to be very careful about my answer here. The reality is, we have adequate force to do what we need to do, and we remain satisfied with that.

;;;;; We still also are building additional forces, as I mentioned in the opening statement. The Airborne Brigade that entered last night and other forces that you're aware of that are flowing into theater. The key to this is examining what the circumstances are right now and then applying more art than science on achieving what it is we seek. And that's ongoing; we've got great commanders who can do that and are doing it daily.

;;;;; Ma'am in the fourth row -- I'm sorry, in the third row.

;;;;; Q Yes. Kathy Shen (ph), Phoenix TV from Hong Kong. On the second date of the operation, the coalition -- they clearly have -- (inaudible) -- secure. But a statement -- that's thrown off by the Iraqi Information minister. And with the pictures that you've been showing us at the briefing indicates the coalition only targeted precisely on the military infrastructure. But Iraqi and also -- as a matter of fact, Iraqi Health minister said that coalition has killed many of their civilians. So, could you tell me who is telling the truth here? And is this war all about image-building?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: What I'll tell you is that -- first, that I can tell you who is telling the truth in this room right now: I am. And we'll tell you the truth with everything we know. We're not going to try to stand up against the reports that are coming out of Baghdad or wherever those reports happen to come out of at a given time. We do target precisely and we take our work very seriously, as I've stated a number of times. So, that's probably the best I can tell you on that. We continue to go in the direction we want to go in the way we want to and we're being very truthful about how we approach our operations.

;;;;; Please?

;;;;; Q Sir, Neil Karlinsky with ABC News. Leadership on the battlefield has raised some concerns that supply lines may be stretched too thin, that they're in increasing danger and that the flow of supplies, in fact, could be in jeopardy. Can you talk a little bit about that and about the logistics?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Sure. As a former maneuver commander myself in one of the units that's up on the front of this operation, I can tell you that as we gain space, we move forward our logistics. And there are different layers of logistics that are out there. So, the combat units carry a considerable portion of logistics with them already. As they get into spaces they control, they move it closer, which makes it possible for them to extend their operating range even further. Layers of logistics beyond that push whatever the distance is from where those logistics are originally stocked to where they need to be delivered. That may, indeed, stretch out lines. But each layer secures itself and we can also add additional forces when risk increases, additional combat forces, anywhere along that supply line to ensure that it remains safe. We feel pretty comfortable right now about the condition we're in with our logistics.

;;;;; Please?

;;;;; Q General, Paul Adams, BBC. You said earlier that Special Operations were conducting a number of operations, including preparing Iraqis for liberation. I wonder if you could tell us how you're preparing Iraqis for liberation?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: The nature of our Special Operations we have to be very careful about, because they go into harm's way and operate very, very closely with a number of people. In some cases, they may be operating inside or near urban areas. In other cases, they may be working with forces that are already armed. In other cases, they may work with forces that may be awaiting the time to surrender or to capitulate and change sides. And we've seen that certainly happen in Basra, where forces that may have already returned to their homes might have been pressed back into military action by the irregulars at the point of a gun, and then turned their guns back the other way.

;;;;; So it's that type of activity, when we talk about unconventional warfare, that I'm referring to. We certainly have forces that are robust and able to do that with great experience.

;;;;; In the last -- fourth row back there, please. Yes, sir.

;;;;; Q General Brooks, I'm Jay Chen (sp) with the Central News Agency, Taiwan. Given the importance of the truth coming to light about the explosion at the marketplace in Baghdad, I'm wondering whether you know or you can give us a time when you will be able to finish your thorough investigation?

;;;;; And secondly, have you been able to find out who provided -- which country provided the mines that you showed earlier? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: On the first question, I think we won't have a final answer until we're in Baghdad ourselves, which we will be. I don't know when that time is going to be or whether the circumstances will lend themselves to a good, thorough investigation. The best we can do at this point is account for everything we did, and we have accounted for our weapon systems that we fired on that night; they hit their target, we're certain of that. And the rest of the story, we just don't know. We may never know.

;;;;; The second part of your question had to do with the Sumer (ph) mine. We believe that was developed by the Iraqis themselves. And I'm not going to talk about the technology source beyond that.

;;;;; Please? In the fourth row. Yes?

;;;;; Q Yeah, General, -- (name inaudible) -- Mexican weekly Proceso. Given the risk of the use of chemical weapons by the Iraqi regime, can you tell us what's going to happen with the embedded journalists program as you get closer to Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well certainly, anyone we encountered that would be at a hazard we'll do the best we can to protect, whether that's Iraqi civilians or whether that is embedded media, and certainly our own forces that are out there. Our capability to protect ourselves is certainly much more robust than the others that might be in danger in that area. There's a certain hazard that any embedded media reporter engages in by being that close to the lines and being in that area. All I can say is, if there's a problem, we'll do the best we can to protect them and assist them.

;;;;; The second row on the far side. Please, sir, with the moustache. In the yellow shirt.

;;;;; Q Thank you. (Name and affiliation inaudible) -- Doha, Qatar. Could you enlighten us about the situation in Basra, especially with respect to the humanitarian scenario?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I will tell you a few things about Basra. First, we don't know everything about what's happening inside of Basra. That's the honest truth.

;;;;; We are in and out of Basra. And we have a variety of sources of information that come to us, but we're not in there ourselves and under control. So that's the first aspect of it.

;;;;; On the humanitarian side in Basra, we know that Basra had had its water turned off for some time. We believe the regime did that. The International Committee of the Red Cross has been successful in the last several days at being able to reopen the flow of water. And at this point I believe it is about 50 percent of the Basra population is able to receive water that is safe for consumption. That's ongoing.

;;;;; We know Basra has a lot of needs, and we are eager to provide those needs as soon as we can. And when the operations lead us to a safe condition, that will happen.

;;;;; Please, in front.

;;;;; Q Tom Mintier, CNN. We've got indications that the weather is indeed improving for the next 48 to 72 hours. Could you tell us what difference that's going to make for your air operations, especially helicopter operations, that may have been suspended because of the sandstorms in the last 24, 36 hours?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I mentioned yesterday that in all military operations we take into account the impact of weather. It's done every day, and it's applied to every operation plan for that day. As the weather changes, we have more options available to us and we have more things that we can bring to bear in the operations we have planned. That's the best I can do.

;;;;; Please, sir.

;;;;; Q Omar -- (inaudible) -- Al Jazeera Satellite Channel. Regarding the picture you showed of the Free Iraqi Forces person, as you named him, sir, how many of those do you have? And what sort of reaction are they getting from the local population? How were they of benefit to you? That's number one.

;;;;; You also just mentioned in your previous answer that you're in and out of Basra. What does that mean? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Thanks, Omar; appreciate it. First, we have roughly 40 -- I'll keep the number rough at this point -- roughly 40 Free Iraqi forces. And they're divided into small groups, usually between five and six in a particular squad as we've put them together. As I mentioned before, they're joined with our civil affairs units.

;;;;; All indications are they're being received very, very well, particularly as they move into areas that they're from. Our design in this, breaking out of these particular groups, was to try to get them back in the areas where we thought the units they're moving with would end up close to where they are from. So there was a deliberate design up front in how we were going to do that.

;;;;; Now, you had a second part of the question and I've forgotten that.

;;;;; Q You said in your previous answer that you were in and out of Basra. What does that mean?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Right. Thank you. What I mean by that is that we have a number of sources that go in and out of Basra and raids like the U.K. staged a few days ago against the Ba'ath headquarters let us have some insights into what's going on in Basra. That's what I mean by that.

;;;;; In the back, please. Thank you. (Inaudible.)

;;;;; Q Michael Massey (sp). I'm a freelance writer. Both Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch have issued statements critical of the strikes against the Iraqi TV transmission facilities. They point out that, according to the Geneva Convention, it's not a legitimate target purely if they are broadcasting propaganda.

;;;;; You said yesterday, I believe, that they were being used for command-and-control purposes. Could you be more specific? What actually were they doing that led you to believe that that is the case? And given that they're back on the air, are there going to be efforts to try to get them off the air again?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, first, we believe and remain convinced that it is a legitimate military target. And we only attack legitimate military targets.

;;;;; I will get as specific as I can under the circumstances here, but let me say that there are a number of facilities throughout Iraq that, on their surface, would seem like normal things. Maybe it's a telephone switch. But it doesn't only take care of the commercial population and civilian population; it is also used as a command-and-control network and a key node inside of that.

;;;;; The TV station that you saw attacked in the images I showed today were also like that. They broadcast television. Propaganda is not our concern. It's the command-and-control aspects that run through the same type of station, that node, that caused us to attack it.

;;;;; And in answer to, with it being back up on satellite and other places, will there be additional pursuits, I would simply say that we will pursue the regime and its control wherever we see it and wherever we find it.

;;;;; Please, in the center.

;;;;; Q I'm Michael Wolf (sp) from New York Magazine. I mean no disrespect by this question, but I want to ask about the valued proposition of these briefings. We're no longer being briefed by senior-most officers. To the extent that we get information, it's largely information already released by the Pentagon. You may know that ABC has sent its senior correspondent home.

;;;;; So I guess my question is, why should we stay? What's the value to us for what we learn at this million-dollar press center? (Applause.)

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I've gotten applause already. That's wonderful. I appreciate that.

;;;;; First, I would say it's your choice. We want to provide information that's truthful from the operational headquarters that is running this war. There are a number of places where information is available, not the least of which would be the embedded media. And they tell a very important story. The Pentagon has a set of information they provide as well. If you're looking for the entire mosaic, then you should be here.

;;;;; I think some of you may have been, based on the questions yesterday, looking for very, very precise information about the operations. And we'll give you that as we can. But we should never forget, the more we tell you, if we're precise about the frontline trace and where units are operating, exactly what our strength is, you're not the only one being informed. And that's the most important (business ?).

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- but is it possible that we can get General Franks on a more consistent basis?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I'm sorry you feel disappointed. I probably need to get a pay raise here. (Laughter.) General Franks will -- he's already shown that he's more than willing to come and talk to you at the right time. But he's fighting a war right now. And he has me to do this for him.

;;;;; Please.

;;;;; Q General, Tom Fenton, CBS News. A Pentagon official, unnamed, was quoted as saying that the dropping of elements of the 173rd in the north was the opening of the northern front. What does that mean for the war as a whole? How does that fit into the mosaic, the big picture?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Thanks for the question, Tom; appreciate that. First, as we add additional units onto the battlefield, according to our plan, we increase the number of options we have available. And we also increase the number of threats posed to the regime.

;;;;; There are forces that remain in northern Iraq that are a threat, along what has been described as the green line, a threat to the Kurdish autonomous zone. And we certainly have already indicated on a number of occasions throughout the government that we have no designs on changing the territorial integrity of Iraq but that everyone in Iraq should have a role in the future of Iraq.

;;;;; And so we don't want to see the types of things that have happened historically by this regime happening again at the hands of regime forces along that green line. The presence of a combat brigade in that area changes the dynamics considerably. That's why they're there.

;;;;; In the back, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- from Newsday. Follow up to that question. I think a lot of us thought that the northern front -- what you're describing is essentially some amount of fairly lightly-armored troops to basically

Owen to Get Rare Second Chance in Senate

By JESSE J. HOLLAND, Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Texas judge Priscilla Owen is getting a rare second chance for a federal appeals court seat, with the Senate Judiciary Committee's new Republican majority poised to overturn last year's rejection.

Owen, a Texas Supreme Court justice, was to receive another vote Thursday from the committee that rejected her nomination on a party-line vote last year when it was controlled by the Democrats.

She is likely to win committee recommendation for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans this year on a similar, but opposite, party-line vote because Republicans now control the committee with a one-vote margin.

The GOP won control of the Senate in last year's election.

"This committee will now begin setting straight the mistake it made by halting this nomination in committee last fall," Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said two weeks ago.

Democrats contend Owen is an anti-abortion and pro-business judicial activist whose opinions and rulings are overly influenced by her personal beliefs. Owen says she would be a fair and impartial judge if confirmed by the Senate.

"I judge cases by what is right," said Owen, who appeared at her second Judiciary committee hearing two weeks ago, a replay of one she had when Democrats ran the panel. "I do not judge cases by what is politically correct. I apply the law, and the law has to be predictable and it has to be fair and that's what I do."

Liberal groups said Owens still poses a danger.

"Owen is a far-right judicial activist who tries to remake the law to reach an outcome that is often hostile to the rights and interests of individuals," said Ralph Neas, president of the liberal People For the American Way.

Republicans say Democrats have distorted Owen's record and decisions as a judge.

"Not once did I ever see her try to insert her own political preferences or beliefs into her job as a judge," said Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, who served with Owen on the court for three years.

The Democrats have tried to hold up Senate floor votes or committee action on a number of other nominees they consider objectionable.

The filibuster of Miguel Estrada's nomination to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on the Senate floor hit its 50th day on Wednesday, and nominations have been stacking up behind his.

Mend It

The President is right: The judicial confirmation process is broken.

During the 2000 campaign George W. Bush realized this - knowing full well Senate Republicans abused their advise-and-consent role during the Clinton years - and proposed that the Senate deal with judicial nominations in a timely fashion. He noted then that the process "does not empower anyone to turn the process into a protracted ordeal of unreasonable delay and unrelenting investigation." Bush knew his history, too, citing the "unacceptably high" number of bench vacancies left by partisan sniping in both the presidencies of his father and Bill Clinton.

He has announced plans for changing the way the Senate acts on judicial nominations no fewer than three times. In a recent letter to Senators Bill Frist and Tom Daschle, the President again called for the charade to end:

I ask Senators of both parties to come together to end the escalating cycle of blame and bitterness and to restore fairness, predictability, and dignity to the process. I ask that the Senate take action, including adoption of a permanent rule, to ensure timely up-or-down votes on judicial nominations both now and in the future, no matter who is President or which party controls the Senate. This is the only way to ensure that our judiciary works and that good people remain willing to be nominated to the federal bench.

All Senators should have a chance to have their voices heard and their votes counted. All Presidents should have their judicial nominees considered and voted upon in a reasonable time. All nominees should have the certainty of an up-or-down Senate vote within a reasonable time. All judges should have the assurance that vacancies on their courts will not persist for years. And all Americans should have the assurance that the federal courts will remain open and fully staffed to resolve their disputes and protect their rights and liberties.

In the ideal world, Senators would agree to Bush's proposals - and now. Yet in the real world inhabited by cynics and skeptics, it is hard to believe the Senate would give so much ground to its antagonist in the Executive Branch. Never mind that the Judiciary Committee chairman (Orrin Hatch) and the ranking minority member (Patrick Leahy) have, at different times, expressed their support for such reforms.

The game of one-upmanship and spite has gone on far too long. The long knives have cut both ways.

President Bush wants to end the hemorrhaging brought about by petty politicking on judges. Give judges hearings, then vote them up or vote them down - and make such rules permanent so that they would remain for a Democratic Senate or a Republican one, for a Republican President or a Democratic one. It's not too much to ask.

The Senate should adhere to the President's request. Not doing so would be the unkindest cut of all.

All Senators are invited to the Moynihan funeral Mon at 10:00. They're planning the first vote for 5:30, so they're thinking they'll go in around 2:00.

As many of you know, tomorrow will be my last day at the White House. I've accepted a new position at Treasury Public Affairs beginning Tuesday. Even though I'll just be moving next door, it's tough to leave all the great people I've been so fortunate to have worked side-by-side with over the last few years. I know that years from now, I'll look back at this time -- and the people I shared it with -- as one of the great experiences of my life. Thanks for everything, I hope you'll keep in touch.

Best,
Taylor

You should probably be the point on these. Agree?

Subject: NEC and WHC contacts on civil justice issues

Hi. Lately, there have been several developments concerning asbestos and class action legislation. In the past WHC and NEC have been interested in related issues, but I no longer have info on who I should be contacting for either. For instance, a class action bill (S. 274) is scheduled to be marked up possibly early next week and I am trying to solidify at least a preliminary position on the legislation. Also, Sen. Hatch has announced he is planning to introduce and markup asbestos related legislation at the end of April. Could you please let me know if any of you in particular should receive information on these two specific issues or any other issues in general? Thank you! Lisa

Hi. Lately, there have been several developments concerning asbestos and class action legislation. In the past WHC and NEC have been interested in related issues, but I no longer have info on who I should be contacting for either. For instance, a class action bill (S. 274) is scheduled to be marked up possibly early next week and I am trying to solidify at least a preliminary position on the legislation. Also, Sen. Hatch has announced he is planning to introduce and markup asbestos related legislation at the end of April. Could you please let me know if any of you in particular should receive information on these two specific issues or any other issues in general? Thank you! Lisa

The head of RMD can be made to report either to COO or CFO, although the statute more naturally suggests that the RMD head would report to the CFO because the CFO is charged with responsibility to "direct, manage, and provide policy guidance and oversight of agency financial management personnel, activities, and operations."

Separately, the CFO can be made to report to the head of OA or to anyone else in the EOP who is so designated by the President.

Please call with any questions.

Cloak Room is guessing that they wouldn't go in until in the afternoon. All Senators are invited to the Moynihan funeral Mon at 10:00. They're planning the first vote for 5:30, so they're thinking they'll go in around 2:00.

More dirty politics from Dems in Senate

THERE IS something not just rotten, but putrid, in the state of Democrats in the U.S. Senate.

Not content with supporting an unprecedented and unfair filibuster against judicial nominee Miguel Estrada, Democratic Sens. Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow of Michigan now are blocking all five Bush administration judicial nominees from their home state.

First, on Mr. Estrada: Republicans have offered a host of concessions to Democrats, including private meetings with the nominee, a new public hearing on his nomination, and written answers to the very questions the Democrats claim he did not answer in his earlier hearings.

Still, the Democrats refused for the third straight time to allow "cloture" - to stop the endless talk-a-thon of a filibuster - in order to allow Mr. Estrada an up-or-down vote. Never in the history of the United States has an appeals court nominee been blocked by such a method - a method contrary to the Democrats' own, previously stated standards, to the spirit of the Constitution, and to the explicit words of Alexander Hamilton in Federalist 76.

All this obstructionism, over a man (Mr. Estrada) whom former Vice President Al Gore's chief of staff, and two of former President Bill Clinton's solicitors general, have heartily endorsed.

But now come Sens. Levin and Stabenow to do even worse. Instead of a minority cabal of 45 moving to block a vote on one particular nominee, they amount to just two people abusing a Senate custom in order to block five nominees, quite indiscriminately.

The custom - not even an official Senate rule, but a longstanding sort of "gentlemen's agreement" - is called a "blue slip." If senators from a nominee's home state submit a blue slip, they are allowed to indefinitely postpone, even kill, the nomination.

The point of the custom is to block nominees who for some reason are particularly, and quite personally, objectionable to a home-state senator.

Instead, the Michiganders are using the blue slip as a cluster bomb against all the administration's nominations from Michigan, without regard to whether the nominees are qualified.

The senators say they are angry that President Bush refused to renominate two of former President Clinton's appeals court nominees from Michigan.

But why should he? Virtually every presidential term ends with several dozen judicial nominees unconfirmed. That tradition goes all the way back to the groundbreaking case of Marbury vs. Madison in 1803. When former President George H. W. Bush left office, more than 50 of his judicial nominations remained unconfirmed, including a nominee from Michigan who had waited almost a year without a hearing.

A new president has no obligation to renominate the choices of his predecessor. Breaking most precedent, the current President Bush did renominate one such Clinton selection - and for his act of good will, the Democrats have repaid his olive branch with nothing but legislative swords.

Their abuse of Mr. Estrada was the most egregious of a number of unconscionable acts of obstruction. Until now. The result is not only the derailment of the careers of five innocent nominees, but also a continued, and officially declared, "judicial emergency" in the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. On a court meant for 16 judges, only eight judgeships are now filled.

What the Democratic senators are doing isn't mere politics; it's subversion of the political process.

WILL PRISCILLA OWEN BE THE NEXT ESTRADA?

The nomination of Priscilla Owen heads to Senate floor. Will she share the fate of Miguel Estrada?

(Please See "CitizenLink Extra" Below)

CITIZENLINK EXTRA:

-----
Will Priscilla Owen Be the Next Estrada?

By Pete Winn and Trish Amason

SUMMARY: The nomination of Priscilla Owen heads to Senate floor. Will she share the fate of Miguel Estrada?

Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen gained approval by the Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday by a 10-9 party-line vote. Last year, when Democrats controlled the Senate, Owen was voted down by the same margin. Democrats still maintain Owen is a pro-life judicial "activist" whose rulings have been influenced by her personal beliefs. In a second Judiciary Committee hearing held recently, however, Owen stated her positions plainly.

"I judge cases by what is right," Owen said. "I do not judge cases by what is politically correct. I apply the law, and the law has to be predictable and it has to be fair and that's what I do."

REV_00113056

CitizenLink Associate Editor Pete Winn talked with John

Nowacki, director of legal policy at the Free Congress

Foundation, about the Owen nomination - and the future of the president's judicial appointments.

-----
Q: John, the Owen vote is a good sign but we expected it, didn't we?

A: We did. There was a wide spread sentiment amongst the Republicans -- and a lot of conservatives -- that Owen did not get fair treatment the last time around.

Certainly, the justifications used by the Senate Democrats to block her nomination in committee last year, ignored completely the answer she gave during her hearings and just kept following the talking points given to them by some of these outside liberal interest groups. But she's gotten the chance finally to get the Senate to act on her nomination on the Senate floor, and this could present a real choice for the Democrats. Will they allow Justice Owen to have an up-or-down vote or will they add her to the list of nominees they're filibustering? They certainly can't claim that they need more information or special documents this time and, in fact, there is really no excuse for blocking the senate from doing its constitutional duty at all in this case.

I would also note that a majority of the Senate supported (Owen), back when the Democrats were in control -- and that was a bipartisan majority. That number has only increased in the time since then. If she is filibustered, it will only be because Senate Democrats have failed to make a case against her and they're desperate to keep a well-qualified consensus nominee with bipartisan support off the bench for what amounts to purely political reasons.

Q: Are liberals, specifically Senate Democrats, really trying to steal the president's ability to appoint judges?

A: Absolutely! We are seeing this across a wide range of nominees, and this effort is being done in a number of different ways. (We're seeing it) in their filibuster of Miguel Estrada -- keeping his nomination from a vote on the Senate floor; and blocking nominees in committee -- as they tried with John Roberts and Deborah Cook; and killing nominations in committee -- as they did with Charles Pickering and Priscilla Owen. There is even the effort that's being done right now by the two senators from Michigan to kill the nominations of every single nominee from the state of Michigan. It's a widespread effort to deny Bush the opportunity that was given to every single predecessor, including Clinton -- and that is to appoint circuit judges who share his judicial philosophy.

Q: How are they able to get away this? Why is there not public outrage?

A: Part of the problem is getting the public to pay attention and part of it is, I think, conservatives need to understand that even if it is not a Supreme Court nomination, circuit court (appeals court) nominees are just as important and they deserve just as much consideration from conservative activists in pressing the senators to allow them to vote and so on.

I mean, if you look at it, the U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals are just one step below the Supreme Court, and these are the final courts of appeal for many cases. The Supreme Court only takes a very small number of cases, so most federal cases that come up end up stopping at the court of appeals level. The liberals certainly know this, and that is one reason they are all energized about (blocking nominations). Conservatives need to understand that. . . they should be getting involved and they still need to be concerned about getting judges who are fair and who are qualified and who are committed to really following the law, not their personal beliefs.

Q: Obviously the war in Iraq has stolen some thunder with regard to this issue, but doesn't it just underscore the need to have judges right now for our national security?

A: Absolutely! And that argument was made after Sept. 11; the need (grows) when there are more criminal cases coming forward and they are pushing civil cases off to the side a little bit. There is a great need to have judges who can handle cases, whether (they are) criminal cases related to terrorism or whether it's the civil cases that end up pending for a very long time because some courts are operating at one-third their strength, or are even half-empty -- as the 6th Circuit was. . . over the past two years.

Q: What do we do now; what direction do we take?

A: Well, conservatives need to be phoning their senators asking them politely, but firmly, to allow these nominees to have up-or-down votes whether it's Priscilla Owen or Miguel Estrada or anyone else.

They need to write letters to the editor, they need to get involved, basically. They need to understand also that the other side, the left, has made this an issue of great importance and that if conservatives are going to win on this, they're going to need to get involved and . . . act.

There are senators who need to be hearing from people, especially in regard to the Estrada nomination -- especially Sen. Bob Graham of Florida, and the two senators from Arkansas, Pryor and Lincoln. We also need to. . . be encouraging Republican senators to stand firm and to take action, where it's appropriate.

I would add, too, there are four Democrats who have come out and supported Miguel Estrada -- who've said he deserves to have an up-or-down vote -- and those are Sens. Bill Nelson, of Fla., Ben Nelson, of Nebr., John Breaux, of La., and Zell Miller, of Ga.

In addition to that there are other Democratic senators who indicated last year that they would probably support Charles Pickering and that they probably would support Priscilla Owen.

So it's not a party-line thing, even though in large part, most Democrats are a part of this obstruction, but I think that senators on both sides need to be hearing from conservatives about the importance of giving nominees and up-or-down vote and treating them fairly.

TAKE ACTION: Please contact your senators and politely ask them to support the nomination of Priscilla Owen when it comes up and to put an end to the filibuster of Miguel Estrada (another cloture vote is expected early next week). Urge them to: 1) reject any attempt to filibuster Priscilla Owen; and 2) allow all future nominees out of the Senate Judiciary Committee to have a straight up-and-down vote.

Call the Capitol switchboard at 202-224-3121. For help in contacting your senators, or to send an e-mail, please see our Legislative Action Center:

The Legal Significance of the Declaration of Independence

Scott Douglas Gerber
Editor, The Declaration of Independence: Origins and Impact
(CQ Press, 2002)
Professor, Ohio Northern University with comments by Roger Pilon

Vice President for Legal Affairs
Director, Center for Constitutional Studies
Cato Institute

In his dissenting opinion in Troxel v. Granville (2000), Justice Antonin Scalia wrote that the Declaration of Independence "is not a legal prescription conferring powers upon the courts." What then is the legal significance of the Declaration? Is it merely a revolutionary document, written to express the sentiments of the moment? Or is it, in its invocation of the "Laws of Nature and of Nature's God," the font of American liberty, inseparable in both principle and practice from the Constitution? In a collection of essays by Harry Jaffa, Thomas G. West, John Eastman, and others, The Declaration of Independence: Origins and Impact explores the political theory of the Declaration, its connection to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, and its place in the Supreme Court. Join us for a wide-ranging discussion of a document that Abraham Lincoln praised as the "apple of gold" without which the Constitution "the picture of silver" would tarnish.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.)

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Oh, yeah. Yeah, yeah.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.)

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: The lessons of about 11 years ago with respect to the Kuwaiti oil fields are quite instructive. If one looks at the campaign the way it was conducted 11 years -- very successful campaign -- and one thinks about just how important these oil fields are to the future of Iraq, then one puts in balance what is the right timing in order to be able to secure this very important operational objective. Hypothetically, if the enemy presents no vulnerability in the southern oil fields, if the enemy presents an incredible threat to be able to destroy those oil fields, then an operational commander like me may take -- may choose to introduce force in a way that would be considerably different than the way you saw the force introduced.

;;;;; Let me go directly to your question. We saw evidence that the regime was intending to destroy the southern oil fields, had not been able to fully set conditions to be able to do that, so we sensed that we had an opportunity to get these -- to get these oil fields. And since we had a plan that enabled us to either do air operations first or ground operations first of perhaps special operations first, we simply put the mosaic together in a way which you have seen unfold.

;;;;; Last question, please. Sir, please.

;;;;; Q Tom Bearden (ph), NewsHour with Jim Lehrer. We've heard the Iraqi resistance in your rear areas characterized in a lot of different ways -- as sporadic; as in pockets --

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Right.

;;;;; Q -- as terroristic. What's your assessment of it? And what level of threat does it pose to your soldiers?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Right. What level threat does it pose? Of course it poses a threat. Pull up the map, please, Vince.

;;;;; From here to here, 250 miles or so, what one finds is that -- and I've heard them called various things -- death squads; bands of thugs; terrorists; paramilitary and so forth -- what they've done, and we see the result every day, is they have occupied the centers of cities like Basra, and Nasiriyah, Diwaniyah, Najaf, As Samawa in here. And so they have put themselves in a position to be able to terrorize the Iraqis in these villages and in these cities and to be able to move out along the lines of communication to attempt to interdict our supplies. They have not been able to do that. Our supplies have in fact run this 250-plus miles, and they continue to do that.

;;;;; These bands of thugs that operate inside these population centers face more and more of our capability every day. Two parts to this. One is to provide lines of communications and security on those lines of communications for ourselves. The other is to reduce these pockets -- word you used -- inside these cities and towns -- the two are not necessarily connected -- once again, at times and places of our choosing -- in some cases simultaneously; in some cases, sequentially. And all of those operations are ongoing. The supplies are moving now, and every day, we see more and better connection between our forces and the local Iraqis in each one of these cities.

;;;;; So that's probably about the best I can give you.

;;;;; Thanks a lot. Look forward to seeing you next time.

END.

UNITED STATES CENTRAL COMMAND OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING
BRIEFER: GENERAL TOMMY FRANKS, CENTCOM COMMANDER

7:14 A.M. EST, SUNDAY, MARCH 30, 2003

GEN. FRANKS: Good afternoon. We're in the 11th day of combat in Operation Iraqi Freedom, and a growing coalition of nearly 50 nations stands one day closer to liberating Iraq and removing the threat of the regime's weapons of mass destruction. Every day we diminish the regime's ability to command and control its forces. You've all seen that. And every day we erode the regime's grip over the Iraqi people. We're in fact on plan. And where we stand today is not only acceptable in my view, it is truly remarkable.

;;;;; Let me take a minute and review with you where we stand in terms of operational objectives.

;;;;; First, the coalition has secured the oil fields in the south from regime destruction, which they attempted, and this vital resource has been preserved for Iraq's future.

;;;;; Second, we have air and ground freedom of action in western Iraq, working to protect Iraq's neighbors from potential regime use of weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;; Third, our air forces work 24 hours a day across every square foot of Iraq. And every day the regime loses more of its military capability.

;;;;; Fourth, we're now staging and conducting air operations from a number of Iraqi airfields which are now under coalition control.

;;;;; Fifth, coalition forces have attacked and destroyed a massive terrorist facility in the last 48 hours in northern Iraq, and ground forces, as we speak, are exploiting the results of that strike.

;;;;; Sixth, the entire coastline of Iraq has been secured and her ports stand today as a gateway for humanitarian assistance for the Iraqi people. As you know, the first humanitarian shipments have arrived in convoys, and additional shipments are on the way.

;;;;; This morning, I received a report that a member of free Iraqi forces in fact yesterday met his mother for the first time in 12 years in the town of Umm Qasr. Somewhat later yesterday, two men stepped forward to surrender to coalition forces. These two men who surrendered are in fact brothers who were trained in Baghdad to be suicide bombers and were sent to Umm Qasr by the regime to kill American and UK forces. Amazingly, when they heard free Iraqi forces speaking in Arabic in the south, they chose to fight for the future of Iraq rather than fighting for this dying regime.

;;;;; Seventh, the coalition has in fact introduced a very capable ground force into northern Iraq. These forces, along with large numbers of special operations troops, have preventing the rekindling of historic feuding which we've seen in years past between the Turks and the Kurds, and these forces do in fact represent a serious northern threat to regime forces.

;;;;; Eighth, a large and capable ground force has attacked to within 60 miles of Baghdad on multiple fronts, and they currently maintain readiness levels of their combat systems above 90 percent mission capable. As we speak, elements of that ground force are continuing the attack. The regime is in trouble, and they know it.

;;;;; Ninth, in the past 24 hours, I have received report that coalition forces are working with local Iraqis in the city of An Nasiriyah, and the death squads that operate -- the squads of gangs, regime gangs that operate in that city, have come under fire. The Iraqis in and around An Nasiriyah are helping us once again as we speak by providing records on Ba'ath Party officials and members of the regime attempting to operate in and around An Nasiriyah. Similarly, we see from day to day Iraqis coming to our forces, linking up with free Iraqi forces, discussing the past, and wanting to discuss their future.

;;;;; Gains, considerable to be sure, not without cost. Gains in war never come without cost. We honor those that have fallen. We mourn their loss with their families.

;;;;; As I've said before, this military campaign will be like no other before. We will attack the enemy, have and will continue to attack the enemy, at times and at places of coalition choosing. Sometimes simultaneously, sometimes sequentially.

;;;;; Let me talk for just a minute about the road ahead. We'll continue to surprise the enemy by attacking at all times of day and night all over the battlefield. Coalition forces will continue to advance on Baghdad while the Iraqi retine will continue to lose control of the country. The regime will continue in the days ahead to locate military assets near civilians, near cultural sites, near hospitals, near schools. And the regime may well attempt to destroy the Iraqi infrastructure. We'll do our best to protect the citizens of Iraq, while the regime does its best to use them as human shields. Our targets will remain the Iraqi regime, not the Iraqi people, and we will continue to provide humanitarian assistance, and we will continue to open the gateways in the south, and in the west, and in the north.

;;;;; As many of you know, we have in fact placed water and millions of meals and medicines in stock to go to the Iraqi people, and delivery has already begun. This campaign, as I started my remarks, has made remarkable progress. Lots remains to be done. The days ahead will see ups and downs -- the ups and downs of war. We don't need to remind ourselves that the outcome has not been, is not, and will not be in question.

;;;;; I'd be pleased to take your questions. Sir.

;;;;; Q General, Jim Wolf (ph), Reuters. Did your original plan call for more troops on the ground before launching the invasion? And do you now expect that the length of the war could stretch well into the summer?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: In response to your first question, no, I did not request additional troops before the beginning of what you refer to as the -- as the ground war.

;;;;; In response to your second question, one never knows how long a war will take. We don't know. But what we do know is that this coalition sees this regime gone at the end of that war -- also sees the Iraqi people having a chance at freedom, which they don't have right now.

;;;;; Sir.

;;;;; Q Yes, General Franks, Tom Mintier for CNN.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure, Tom.

;;;;; Q Yesterday in the 3rd Infantry Division, there was apparently a suicide bomber that killed four soldiers there.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Right.

;;;;; Q Currently, there is an investigation going on in Kuwait where apparently a pick-up truck with a civilian crashed into some soldiers right outside the PX.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Right.

;;;;; Q What can you tell us about this latest incident, and how concerned are you about these types of activities?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: I can't tell you anything at all, Tom, about any linkage between -- between the two. The second event, the one up in Kuwait, I found out about only a short time ago, and so I'm not sure. It's obvious that the modus of the second attack is not at all like the modus of the first, and so one wouldn't want to speculate about any sort of connection.

;;;;; I'll talk for just a second about the first one. It's not at all remarkable, I think, that a dying regime would undertake such tactics as suicide bombers. Remarkable, though, is the connection all the way to the top of the Iraqi regime where, if my Arabic serves me well, that attack was just endorsed by those in power in Baghdad. It's remarkable.

;;;;; I'm reminded of times past, and the presentations before the United Nations and the Security Council about the connections between terrorism and this regime. And we see a suicide bomber attack yesterday, a pure means of terrorism, and then we see the regime claiming credit for that. Remarkable. So, in the days ahead, before -- before one may be inclined to ask the question, what does that mean? Well, what it means is that all of our troops will exercise caution, will increase the standoff to civilian vehicles and the things that I think would be common sense to anyone in order to better protect against this particular kind of threat.

;;;;; Please, sir.

;;;;; Q Thank you, sir. (Inaudible) -- with ABC News. The Ansar al-Islam camp in northeast Iraq was identified by Secretary of State Colin Powell before the United Nations as a camp with possible terrorist connections, possible links to al Qaeda, and it was used as part of the administration's justification for war. Yet a special operations team's raid on the camp turned up, according to people who were there on the ground, none of the suspected ricin or any other weapons of mass destruction. Why is that? Was there bad satellite intelligence? And sir, if you continue to come up empty-handed in search of weapons of mass destruction, doesn't that present a big problem?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: "Present a big problem," I wouldn't want to comment on because -- because it hasn't happened yet. I made reference a minute ago to the fact that coalition forces had attacked a very large terrorist camp -- in fact, massive would be a better way to describe it -- and had -- and had done that only recently. In fact, that -- the exploitation of that is in its very -- in it's very early stages. And there will be a lot of speculation and a lot of discussion, and so we'll see -- we'll see how it goes over the days ahead as that camp is exploited. It is -- it is literally huge. And so we have -- we have forces there now. They're doing their business, and we won't speculate on what will be the result of that.

;;;;; Let me come back to you in a minute, please. Sir.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) Abdullah Saffi (ph), Abu Dhabi TV. Sir, could you first -- I have two questions -- first can I just follow off of the question of my colleague on the -- yesterday's suicide attack in which at least four American soldiers killed. Can you just give us some -- some examples as how your tactics on the ground will change, and how these -- this change will affect your relationship with non-combatant Iraqis?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure.

;;;;; Q And my second question is, could you just tell us what's the situation right now in the Al Faw peninsula?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: I'm sorry -- the second question again.

;;;;; Q What's the situation in Al Faw peninsula?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Oh, yes.

;;;;; Q Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Let me take the second question first, the -- what's going on on the Al Faw. Coalition forces in fact have been up and down the Al Faw. That the peninsula is under coalition control, and our patrolling activities will continue on the Al Faw.

;;;;; Now, let me go to your first question. I mentioned a minute ago that one would expect a review of tactics, techniques, procedures, and so forth, associated with this business of potential suicide bombers. The question, well, what effect will this have on non-combatants? It doesn't change the rules that we use at all. You remember we've talked on a number of occasions about doing our very best to protect the non-combatants, to protect the Iraqis. This won't change that.

;;;;; And I wouldn't speculate -- or I wouldn't I guess comment on the specifics that may be undertaken, but I think it's common sense to say that probably greater attention will be paid to the standoff of civilian vehicles, if that makes -- if that makes sense to you. For example, it's possible to either walk up to a vehicle in order to inspect the contents, or it's possible to cause the people in the vehicle to dismount the vehicle at a greater distance and approach for discussion. And so I'm not sure what the combination of all of this will be, but I don't anticipate an effect on the non-combatants here.

;;;;; Ma'am.

;;;;; Q Nicole Enfield (ph) from Associate Press. In referring to the suicide bombing yesterday, you referred to it as terrorism. I'd just like a definition, because usually when you think of terrorism you think of attacks against civilians. The intended target was clearly military. You are in Iraq, they are resisting.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure, sure.

;;;;; Q Are these kind of attacks not legitimate resistance?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Oh, I didn't comment at all about whether it's legitimate or not. I suppose that's eye of the beholder. What I said was that there is an incredible similarity between this type of suicide bombing and what we see generally characterized as being terrorist in terms of tactic, technique and procedure. So that's what I meant.

;;;;; Sir?

;;;;; Q (Off mike.) General Franks. Seymour Hersh is apparently saying in an upcoming issue of the New Yorker magazine that Donald Rumsfeld specifically overruled you because you were seeking a delay when it wasn't possible to use the bases in Turkey. Can you comment on that? And can you also characterize how difficult life has been made for you by that Turkish decision?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: I'm sorry, the latter part again?

;;;;; Q Just how difficult the decision by the Turkish parliament not to use bases has been for you.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: About the only comment I can make on the first part is that since I don't agree with the assertion, it's difficult for me to address it. In fact, we have talked, I think many of us over the course of time, about the way this plan was put together. And in fact there are very few people who know the truth of how this plan was put together. And as I mentioned to your colleague a little bit earlier, in fact no one has driven the timing of this operation except the operational commander. I think that's the way we'd have it. That's certainly the way that I would have it.

;;;;; What -- but let me give one example of what I'm talking about. If militarily conditions are set, forces are put in place to conduct a military operation, and then the military commander looks at the enemy situation and determines there is an opportunity, I think here's an expectation that the military commander will seize that opportunity. And, in fact -- maybe I didn't go through it in any detail last time I talked to this group of journalists -- but that's exactly what we saw in southern Iraq. We saw an opportunity to achieve one of our operational objectives, which was to prevent the destruction of a big chunk of the Iraqi people's future wealth.

;;;;; So that decision was made by me, not influenced by anyone else.

;;;;; I think there's another very instructive thing, and that instruction point would be to look to see how many -- we call them deployment orders -- how many deployment orders -- that is, the instruction from Washington to move additional people someplace. It would be instructive to see how many of those have been issued with respect to this theater over the past 11 days. I don't know of any.

;;;;; Now, what that may imply is that the plan you see is in fact the plan we have been on. I can simply assure you that that is the truth.

;;;;; Let me comment a bit more on the same subject, because I think it's much discussed. A lot of people over time take a look at any particular military operation and will judge that, or will comment that there is not enough special operations force capability involved in this plan, or perhaps will comment on any plan that there is excessive ground force committed to a plan, or perhaps that there is insufficient air power committed to the plan.

;;;;; I've said on a number of occasions -- I've used the code. I've said, This plan will be unlike any I believe anyone expects. Just a moment on that. The very best planning, I believe, military planning that can be done, is military planning that assures ultimate success, but permits the possibility of early success. When it comes to making a decision about where in the process of a force build any particular activity may take place, it's always best to remember that the military commander should look for enemy vulnerability, should take advantage of such situations when he finds them; but, at the end of the day, should ensure that forces moving en train provide the capability under any circumstance to gain the victory. That is precisely what this plan is all about -- has been, continues to be. We have said at places and times of our choosing. That has been the case, and it remains the case. And those who would seek to find a wedge between the various people among us, the various leaders who have been party to this, will likely not be able to do so, because this has been worked and studied and, as we say, iterated over a long period of time. Its chief characteristic is flexibility, adaptability. It gives us the way and the force to respond to opportunities we see.

;;;;; Please, ma'am?

;;;;; Q Thank you, General. Kelly O'Donnell from NBC. We've spoken very little in recent days about the status of Saddam Hussein. There are some sources that indicate that within Iraq, there is talk of a possible exile plan to Syria. Do you know if that is credible? Do you believe it to be true? And, if so, do you believe that Saddam Hussein is dead or alive?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Kelly, I don't know whether it's credible or not. I've seen -- I've seen the open reporting on that. Don't know whether it's true or not. I don't know whether the leader of this regime is dead or alive. I don't know. Perhaps someone knows, but I don't know.

;;;;; I will say this: I have not seen credible evidence over the last period of days since we started this operation that this regime is being controlled by the top, as we understand the top.

;;;;; Please, sir?

;;;;; Q Tom Aline (ph) from TUA (ph) Radio, Australia. Can I ask you, firstly, as a military commander, secondly as someone that was born in Midland, Texas, what your reaction would be if the greatest force, military force in the world, started marching towards your hometown? Much has been made of the tactics of the Iraqis. What would your reaction be, firstly, as a military tactician; secondly, as someone whose home it was?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: It's difficult for me to relate it. Actually I appreciate the question, but it's difficult for me actually to relate it to Midland, Texas, because out around my home in Midland, Texas, there is no regime that is quite as ruthless and committed to that ruthlessness as the regime we see in Baghdad.

;;;;; That aside, I think that it is -- I think it's a characteristic of the human being that the more isolated one becomes the more concerned one becomes. I believe that the movements, which I perhaps ineloquently described towards our objectives over the past 10 or 11 days, have indicated the degree of pressure that I believe this regime is under. I believe we'll simply wait and see what the psychology of the regime turns out to be in the face of this pressure.

;;;;; I believe that it should cause all of us to be very much aware, as we have said, that this regime holds weapons of mass destruction. And we have absolutely no assurance that this regime won't use those weapons of mass destruction. We have absolutely no assurance that this regime will not continue as best it can to brutalize its own people and to destroy its own infrastructure. We'll remain on the course in order to accomplish the objectives that my boss laid out very early in this, and we'll succeed.

;;;;; Please, sir?

;;;;; Q General Franks, Jeff Schaeffer (ph), Associated Press Television News. There are numerous reports from the front that the advance on Baghdad -- there's a pause or a stall in the advance on Baghdad, anywhere ranging from six days to several weeks. Can you address that, please?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure. I think that the embedded reporting that is coming from inside Iraq, perhaps while we are speaking, would reflect that combat operations are continuing. They are continuing in the north, they are continuing in the west, they are continuing in the south, and they are continuing right around Baghdad.

;;;;; There are two ways to look at this. One way is to discuss something that we call an operational pause, which means that military formations move and then they intend to take a breath, to take a pause, before continuing operations. There have been some pundits who have indicated that perhaps we are in an operational pause -- I think, sir, this is what you made reference to. It's simply not the case. There is a continuity of operations in this plan. That continuity has been seen. It will be seen in the days ahead, and it will be manifested on the battlefield in Iraq at points and times of our choosing. What I mean by that is sometimes air, sometimes ground, sometimes special forces, sometimes combination of two of the above, sometimes all three. That's the way we are going to fight this.

;;;;; Sir, please?

;;;;; Q Neil Tweedie from the Daily Telegraph in London. Just from your comments on flexibility, would it be fair to imply therefore that what you hope to do was take Iraq with about five divisions, but you are prepared if necessary to pump more heavy armor in to secure your objective; you were essentially being opportunistic; it doesn't look as though it's worked, and now you are waiting for more heavy stuff?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sir, it's a great question. And actually it's almost right. But the implication is that one begins with a force and say, Oh-oh, wait a minute, wait a minute -- that isn't enough force, so perhaps we should bring some more force up to some level. Actually, that's why I said one should take a look to see how many forces have been requested since the initiation of this plan. You see, one says, Begin here and ask for more, if necessary. The other course says, Begin to flow this amount of force, and we'll stop it when it's no longer necessary. We're in the case of the latter rather than being in the case of the former.

;;;;; Please, sir?

;;;;; Q Paul Hunter from Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We hear a lot of these briefings about some relatively specific number about leaflets being dropped and not so much about bombs. Can you tell us the total number of bombs in the 11 days, and then break it down? What is a reasonable number to say in terms of what -- which -- how many bombs have struck their targets versus as a percentage how many have missed?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Actually I either wouldn't or couldn't, and it may well be a combination of the both, because what I pay very close attention to is the amount of force in aggregate in any particular piece of geography inside Iraq. And the way I issue guidance by day is to reduce the amount of enemy capability in a given place over a period of time, and I measure results, some of which -- some of those results we call BDA, battle damage assessment. And I think you see some of that coming from here, and Washington and London and so forth.

;;;;; There are a great many other factors associated with that, that have to do with the psychology on the face of battle.

;;;;; They have to do with isolation, which I mentioned earlier. They have to do with the destruction of command and control capability, our orders coming in to these enemy formations -- from where? What do those orders say? And so it is that sort of battle damage assessment that I pay attention to.

;;;;; Just flip it and say it another way. What you described actually is what I refer to as input -- input, the number of hours that something happens, or the number of bombs dropped, or whatever. And I think most of us pay more attention to the output than we do to the input.

;;;;; Please, sir?

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- from Taiwan. There's some reports from the front line, and I hope the general can clarify. Some say the soldiers cannot get enough food and (the like ?) of water is very limited (all it ?) can use. Was that true? And some criticize from the media say too ambitious in the very first beginning and might be too late now and too slow. And, well, lots of criticize from the United States, even here. So what's your reaction to this?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure.

;;;;; Q Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Well, I suppose that one of the blessings of all of you here is the free media, and the ability to form whatever view you choose. My belief is that it -- that the work over these past 10 or 11 days has been exactly as I described it, absolutely remarkable, both from the angle of the plan and the angle of the execution of the plan by people who are in positions -- let me respond to your first question -- where it is distinctly possible that Franks may be in the platoon or in the squad that's way out to the left or way out to the right, and in his perspective, in his view -- and I share it -- if he doesn't get his -- if he doesn't get his meal ready to eat today, or if he doesn't have three, or he doesn't have water, then you bet that's an impact on him, and I wouldn't expect it to be any other way.

;;;;; And so in terms of the classes of supply that we look to, to be able to support an operation of this size, we have sufficient -- and have had sufficient stocks all across the battlefield of food, water, fuel, ammunition. But that doesn't necessarily mean that, you know, Sergeant Franks or Private Franks out there in that west-most squad, because he was involved in some serious combat, may not have gotten his fair share on a given day. And so from an operational perspective, no issues. The lines of communication are open, the stocks are in place, and the battlefield distribution out to every one of these tanks and every one of these troops doing his job on any given day either will or will not meet my expectation. And where we find that it doesn't meet our expectation, well, all the subordinate commanders go to work on it.

;;;;; Let me go over here, please. Sir, please?

;;;;; Q Gregory Castell (ph), BBC French Service. Sir, after weeks -- General, after weeks of airstrikes on Baghdad, how will you convince later the population, this huge population, that you came in as liberators? And that includes -- of course airstrikes includes civilian casualties.

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure. I believe that there is an appreciation inside Baghdad and across the Iraqi population that is the same as the appreciation, sir, which you have. And you have it because you know that this is an incredible precise military operation. I think you have seen time and time and time again military targets fall while the civilian infrastructure remains in place. And it's the same with civilian lives. My experience is that the people of Iraq will welcome their liberation, to be sure.

;;;;; Sir?

;;;;; Q Greg Gordon from Newsday. I'd like to take you back to something you said a second ago about the start of the timing of the ground campaign. Did I understand you to say that you made the decision to do that based on the fear that the oil wells would be torched? Is that sort of the primary motivation behind the timing? You also mentioned taking advantage of vulnerabilities. Can you shed some light?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Sure.

;;;;; Q Was there something you saw in southern Iraq beyond the oil fields? And just secondly, very quickly, some criticism also with all these troops in the pipeline --

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: A question quickly or my answer quickly? (Laughter.)

;;;;; Q You can take as long as you want for the answer. With all these troops, all these deployment orders that have been signed, why aren't those Reserves closer to theater, versus Texas, Louisiana, various places like that?

;;;;; GEN. FRANKS: Okay, I think that's a fair question. Let me take the last one first. As one takes a look at all the infrastructure around Iraq, and decides how best to put the mosaic -- I used that term once before, I'll stay with it -- together, then one takes a look at how much air power where and when, how much ground power where and when, special operations where and when. And so we are not interested in fits and starts. We are interested in a steady flow of force until I tell my boss you can stop it now." We simply haven't arrived -- we haven't arrived at that day.

;;;;; There's been much discussion of the 4th Infantry Division, and some hand-wringing about, "Oh, well. Why was this force -- I mean, isn't it terrible that Turkey did not permit the ingress of this force? And so what has caused it to be out of position and why have you had to fight to get it --" I mean that's absolutely not true. The fact of the matter is that it was quite important, strategically and operationally, to have that very heavy force precisely where it was until the day it moved. And I wouldn't really speculate as to why. I'll leave it to each of you to determine why that was.

;;;;; And now that force, to be sure, has been replaced in large measure by a very capable ground force with enormous leverage, with the ability to leverage enormous air power.

;;;;; I'm sorry, I got so --

Brett -
I'd like to send out the email below from my PERSONAL account (i.e. the georgewbush account) to a number of folks at the White House who have expressed interest in Mark's Azalea Run (that charity event I run in honor of my friend who passed away). Recipients of this email would include friends like Brad Blakeman, Lezlee Westine, Brett Kavanaugh, etc...

your thoughts?

Dear Friends:

Thanks again to so many of you for your interest in Mark's Azalea Run: a 5K Race and One-mile Fun Run in honor of Mark Ferris, one of my best friends who died three years ago from a life-long battle against Juvenile Diabetes.

Last year, a number of you participated in the first annual Run and helped raise over $70,000: $35,000 for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation (JDRF), and the rest for a scholarship fund in Mark's name at Landon School.

The second annual Mark's Run will take place at Landon on Sunday, May 4. With your help, this year's event will draw 500 runners and raise $100,000. Please take a moment and go to www.landon.net/race to sign up today!

By signing up, you'll help two great causes: JDRF - which since 1970 has been the world's largest private contributor to Diabetes research - and Landon's Scholarship Fund, which will allow a needy student to attend one of the area's best high-schools. You'll also help to remember a deeply beloved brother, classmate, and friend.

Mark was an amazing kid - someone whose friendship taught those around him that life is best measured not in its number of years, but in the depth of its humor, caring and patience. His spirit lives on through your participation in this event, so please sign up today. Again, just go to www.landon.net/race and click on "Register for Race."

Thanks for signing up, and I look forward to seeing you at Landon for the Run on Sunday, May 4!

Dear Mr. Prezocki,

Thank you for your postcard concerning your Second Amendment rights. I appreciate you sharing your thoughts with me on this important issue.

The Republican Party proudly defends our Bill of Rights including the Second Amendment. Our platform also specifically endorses a law-abiding individual's right to own firearms.

In the national debate over gun control, Americans are increasingly coming to understand the focus needs to be on prosecuting those who commit crimes with guns, not on trying to infringe upon the Constitutional rights of law-abiding citizens.

I would welcome any further comments you may have on this or any other issue.

Dear Mr. Prezocki,

Thank you for your postcard concerning your Second Amendment rights. I appreciate you sharing your thoughts with me on this important issue.

The Republican Party proudly defends our Bill of Rights including the Second Amendment. Our platform also specifically endorses a law-abiding individual's right to own firearms.

In the national debate over gun control, Americans are increasingly coming to understand the focus needs to be on prosecuting those who commit crimes with guns, not on trying to infringe upon the Constitutional rights of law-abiding citizens.

I would welcome any further comments you may have on this or any other issue.

Sincerely,

Marc Racicot
Chairman

SECRETARY OF STATE COLIN POWELL REMARK TO AMERICAN ISRAEL PUBLIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

9:00 P.M. EST, SUNDAY, MARCH 30, 2003

SEC. POWELL: Thank you. Thank you so very much. Thank you so very much.
Thank you. Thank you. Oy, what a welcome. (Laughter.) I've been milking that Yiddish kid from the Bronx thing for years.

;;;;;; I can't tell you -- (laughter) -- it got so intense that once when I was President Reagan's national security advisor some 15 years ago, I went and I visited with the prime minister, and we went into his office, we were all alone, nobody knew what we were doing in there -- I had a private message from Reagan -- and I came out, and the word went forth from the prime minister's outer office -- the whole conversation was in Yiddish. (Laughter and applause.) I'm a kid from New York. I know the Catskills. Why would I deny such a story? It's a great story. (Laughter.)

;;;;;; But I want to thank you, Ed, for that warm introduction, and Howard, Amy, Tim and so many others, I want to thank you for inviting me to be with you here this evening to speak at AIPAC's 44th annual policy conference. And there are so many, many people here tonight who are friends of mine -- I can't see all of you, but there is one very dear friend that I can see and I must acknowledge, and that's my dear friend Shimon Peres. (Applause.)

;;;;;; And I'm very pleased to be sharing the stage this evening with my new Israeli colleague, Minister Silvan Shalom. (Applause.) The minister is a true Israeli success story. He has distinguished himself in so many ways
-- as a journalist, as chairman of the Israel Electric Cooperation (or Corporation), as a member of the Knesset, and as minister of finance, and now he brings these many talents and all of his experience to the foreign ministry at a most important time in the life of the state of Israel. So, Mr. Minister, I congratulate you again in your appointment, and I can't tell you how much I am looking forward to working with you, sir.
Congratulations. (Applause.)

;;;;;; My friends, all of us here tonight are brought together by a deep commitment to Israel's security, prosperity and freedom, and to the strongest possible relationship between Israel and the United States.
AIPAC came into being half a century ago to help the young Israel state meet the challenges of independence. Since then, AIPAC and its members have worked tirelessly and effectively on Israel's behalf. You have a world class reputation for being one of the most effective such organizations in that regard.

;;;;;; And at the same time, it is America's commitment that also is long and enduring, a commitment that stretches back to Israel's founding, from the very moment of Harry Truman's historic decision. In war and peace, the

REV_00113303

United States has stood proudly at Israel's side. (Applause.)

;;;;; Our two nations and peoples are bound together by our common democratic values and traditions. So it has been for over 50 years; so it will always be. (Applause.)

;;;;; As we meet tonight, our thoughts cannot help but be with the brave young men and women from the United States, from Britain, from Australia and other coalition partners who are laying their lives on the line to liberate Iraq from the tyranny of Saddam Hussein. (Applause.) They are serving their nations, and they are serving humanity to free the Middle East and the world from the threat of Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;; War and force was not our first choice. We gave diplomacy every chance. We worked hard to pass the United Nations Security Council resolution 1441, which gave Saddam Hussein one last chance to disarm peacefully, but it also made it clear in that resolution and in that 15-to-0 vote that if this time he did not take the chance, if he did not comply, then serious consequences would follow, and they are now following. (Applause.)

;;;;; So we warned him, and we built up a massive military force on the borders to show that this time the international community meant business. But Hussein spurned that final chance. Then after 12 years of Iraqi defiance and deception, we could wait no longer. He did not comply. He did not cooperate. And the issue was compliance, not more time for inspections or more inspectors. And we -- (applause) -- and we should be so proud tonight that there were brave and bold leaders such as George Bush, and Tony Blair, and President Aznar, and Prime Minister Berlusconi -- (applause) -- and Prime Minister Howard and so many others. (Applause.) Forty-nine nations openly associated with this willing coalition, all of them headed by leaders who have to go against public opinion -- public opinion because nobody wants war, everybody would like to avoid war. We did everything to avoid war. But these 49 nations and their leaders came together and decided that the world had to be rid of these weapons of mass destruction. And let there be no doubt about the outcome, we will drive Saddam Hussein and his regime from power. (Applause.)

;;;;; We will liberate Iraq. We will remove the shadow of Saddam's terrible weapons from Israel and the Middle East, and we will keep them from the hands of terrorists who would threaten the entire civilized world. (Applause.)

;;;;; I know that all of you are as proud as I am of the brave men and women in uniform who are making our success possible. You see them on your television sets every evening -- volunteers all, willing to serve. We are also thinking of the men and women who spend this night as prisoners of war. We hold the Iraqi regime accountable for their treatment and their safety until we can bring them back home -- and we will bring them home. (Applause.)

;;;;; Our thoughts and prayers tonight also go out to the families of those American and British heroes who have given their lives. They will not be forgotten. (Applause.) And the best way that we can honor their sacrifice and their legacy is to carry on the fight until we win, and we will win. (Applause.)

;;;;; You see much on television and you read much in your newspapers as to how the war is going. Commentaries from all directions. Let me just say this to you: we are only 10 or 11 days into this war. Baghdad is slowly being encircled. Pockets of resistance are being isolated. The oil fields are secure. Humanitarian aid is beginning to flow. I have total confidence in the plan, and total confidence in General Franks and the other leaders who are carrying out that plan. (Applause.)

;;;;; But winning means more than just driving Saddam Hussein from power. It also means giving hope and a better future to 24 million Iraqis after decades of oppression and mis-rule. And we are already starting to help Iraqis in need. We are bringing water to thirsty people. We are clearing Saddam's mines from ports so we can send in ships with food and medicine to distribute to the hungry and to the sick. And once they are liberated, we will work with the Iraqi people to help them create a country that is peaceful, democratic and unified, living in peace with its neighbors. (Applause.)

;;;;; We will help them build a nation that uses its vast oil wealth to improve the lives of mothers and children, not to develop terrible weapons or dot the countryside with lavish palaces.

;;;;; While we deal with Saddam Hussein, we must not forget the burdens that the conflict with Iraq has placed on our Israeli friends.

;;;;; I am very pleased that President Bush has included in his supplemental budget request that just went to Congress $1 billion in foreign military financing funds to help Israel strengthen its military and civil defenses. (Applause.) And that's just for starters. (Laughter.)

;;;;; The president is also asking for $9 billion in loan guarantees. (Applause.) These loan guarantees will help Israel deal with the economic costs arising from the conflict, and will help Israel implement the critical economic and budgetary reforms it needs to get its economy back on track, and I am hopeful that Congress, with your encouragement -- (laughter) -- will act quickly on this request. (Applause.)

;;;;; But you know, even as we rid the world of the Iraqi threat and we deal with these crises, we are also working to meet the other challenges we face at the dawn of this new century. Over a year-and-a-half ago, the cowardly attacks of September 11th occurred, and a year-and-a-half later, we still are at war with terrorism.

;;;;; In Afghanistan, the fight continues to destroy the last vestiges of al Qaeda and the Taliban. It is still a dangerous place. Just yesterday we lost two soldiers. That war is not forgotten. We will remain engaged in Afghanistan. The two soldiers were lost not while out looking for combat. They were lost by being ambushed while they were inspecting a school and a hospital -- both being built with American funding. And we mourn their loss, and our thoughts are with their families.

;;;;; But we've accomplished so much in Afghanistan in the last year-and-a-half. We have set up a new government, a government that is committed to the rights of all of its people, a government that is bringing women into the workplace and into the government itself. (Applause.)

;;;;; So, there is so much going on that is good in Afghanistan and good in other parts of the world, and we are hard at work in this campaign against terrorism. With the Kurds of northern Iraq, we are driving al Qaeda's friends, the Ansar al-Islam terrorists out of their caves. (Applause.) Let there be no doubt -- we will pursue al Qaeda and its accomplices in Afghanistan, in Iraq, and everywhere else they plot their murders. (Applause.)

;;;;; Around the world -- around the world we are working with coalition members to search out terrorists, break up their networks and find their financing. Every day another terrorist who was arrested and put before the bar of justice. There will be no let up, no respite, no rest until the terrorists are defeated. We will never forget what was done to us on 9/11 -- (applause) -- and we will do whatever is necessary to defeat those who were responsible.

;;;;; As part of our overall strategy in combating terrorism and dealing with states that do not follow acceptable patterns of behavior, we are demanding more responsible behavior from these states, especially those in the region. It is now time for the entire international community to step up and insist that Iran end its support for terrorists, including groups violently opposed to Israel and to the Middle East peace process.

(Applause.)

;;;;; Tehran must stop pursuing weapons of mass destruction and the means to deliver them. (Applause.) In addition, we will continue to support the aspirations of the Iranian people to improve their lives and live in peace and security with their neighbors.

;;;;; Syria also now faces a critical choice -- (applause) -- Syria can continue direct support for terrorist groups and the dying regime of Saddam Hussein, or it can embark on a different and a more hopeful course. Either way, Syria bears the responsibility for its choices, and for the consequences. (Applause.)

;;;;; These are sobering issues and sobering realities. We live in difficult and sobering times. But I am an eternal optimist. And as I think about these challenges, as I think about these crises, I also try to take time each day to think about the soaring opportunities that we see throughout the world to bring liberty and fresh hope to men, women and children on every continent. The spread of democratic and economic freedoms, combined with breathtaking advances in technology, opens unprecedented opportunities to lift millions out of misery, to help people put roofs over their heads, good food on their tables, and clean water on their parched lips.

;;;;; Just a year ago, President Bush saw the need to come forward with a bold new initiative to capitalize on these opportunities to kindle hope in people's hearts. He called it the "Millennium Challenge Account," the most exciting thing we have done in foreign assistance in many years. We will put large sums of American money behind those countries that make a real commitment to democracy, to ruling justly, to investing in people, embracing economic freedom -- use our assistance to spur economic growth and attract not more aid but attract investment that is needed to further these nations along the road to prosperity. (Applause.)

;;;;; There are so many other opportunities that are now given to us by the end of the Cold War -- a relationship with Russia and China that couldn't have been dreamed of just 12 of 15 years ago. An opportunity to come together and defeat perhaps one of the greatest scourges on the face of the earth, HIV/AIDS, which kills millions of people every day on the face of the earth. (Applause.) The opportunity to have free trade agreements so that more and more nations can join in the prosperity of the 21st century. The opportunity to deal with famine and all of those other issues of a transnational nature that the people of the world want us to deal with, and look the United States for leadership -- leadership that we will provide.

;;;;; Our world is a mix of challenges and opportunities, old and new, but no challenge, no opportunity is more important, more pressing than the quest to put an end to the conflict between Israel and the Palestinians. (Applause.)

;;;;; These are difficult times for Israel. Families live with the reality that a suicide bomber could tear their lives apart. Just hours ago, the bombers struck again in Netanya. We condemn this cowardly act, and we pray for the victims and their families. (Applause.)

;;;;; Continued terror and instability is having a terrible effect on the Israeli economy. Tourism and investment are down. Breadwinners are worried about their jobs. Young people are increasingly worried about their economic future. The people of Israel are coping. They always do. They always have. But Israelis should not just cope, not just survive, they should thrive, and with our help they will. (Applause.)

;;;;; We are all here tonight working and praying for the day when Israelis can go out to dinner and relax and enjoy the evening without looking over their shoulders. We are all striving for the day when Israeli parents can send their parents to school without fear, when they can travel without trepidation, and when they can enjoy the bounty of a booming economy.

;;;;; We all know that the solution to these difficulties is peace. That is why we are working so hard to bring an end to the tragic conflict between Israel and the Palestinians that has caused both people so much suffering. Last year, President Bush outlined a bold vision for peace based on two states existing peacefully side-by-side -- a secure, Jewish democratic state of Israel, and a viable, peaceful, democratic, independent state of Palestine.

;;;;; We're not naive. We know it will be hard to achieve this vision, especially after the terrible violence and suffering of recent years. Peace will take courage and difficult choices by Israel, by Palestinians, and by Israel's neighbors in the region. And one fact is unmistakable: the president's vision requires an end to the use of violence and terror as a political tool. There is no other way. Terror must end. (Applause.)

;;;;; The president's vision puts clear obligations on the Palestinians. The Palestinian state must be based on transformed leadership and institutions that end terror. The Palestinian government must be transparent and accountable to the people. Above all, the Palestinian state must be a real partner for peace with Israel.

;;;;; Israel has clear obligations too. It must take steps to ease the suffering of Palestinians, and diminish the daily humiliation of life under occupation. Israel must also put economic hope in Palestinian hearts by helping revive the devastated economies of the West Bank and Gaza. Settlement activity is simply inconsistent with President Bush's two-state vision. As the president has said, quote, "As progress is made toward peace, settlement activity in the occupied territories must end." Unquote. (Applause.)

;;;;; Today -- today we have reached a hopeful moment, when progress may again be possible. Israel has held elections and formed a new government. The Palestinian legislative council has created the office of prime minister for the Palestinian Authority, and has written and passed a law that gives the prime minister real power and authority, and provides direct accountability to the legislative -- to the legislature that elected him. There was a vigorous debate among Palestinians over this step, but in the end, the PLC was clearly responding to calls for freedom from the Palestinian people themselves.

;;;;; We will be watching very carefully to see how the new Palestinian prime minister exercises his authority, which is so important for Palestinian hopes for a better future. Once the new Palestinian prime minister is confirmed in office, we will present both sides with the road map we have developed to restart movement towards peace. The president's vision of June 24th marked the beginning of what must be a continuous, determined journey to peace. The road map we have developed in close consultation with the parties, our friends in the region, and our partners in the quartet -- Russia, the European Union, the United States -- describes that journey, and the mutual obligations both sides must meet if we are going to reach our shared destination. The road map is not an edict. It is not a treaty. It is a statement of the broad steps we believe Israel and the Palestinians must take to achieve President Bush's vision of hope and the dream that we all have for peace.

;;;;; Israel and the Palestinians must walk the road of peace together if either is to arrive at the desired destination. (Applause.) And the road map offers a way for the two sides to restart the direct engagement with each other that the journey requires.

;;;;; As we move ahead, we must not lose sight of why we are doing this. We are working so hard for peace because the Israeli-Palestinian conflict has taken too many lives -- Jewish, Muslim and Christian -- and ruined far too many more. We must find a way to ensure that Israeli children, Palestinian children can grow up in peace and dignity and live in mutual respect of each other. We must recommit ourselves to making a better future for men, women, children in generations yet unborn. In the Middle East, such hope depends on security, and Israel's security ultimately requires a real and lasting peace with its neighbors. That is the reality behind the road map.

;;;;; My friends, from day one to today, America has been totally committed to Israel's security and well-being. So has AIPAC. In good times and difficult times, Israel has always been able to rely on her friends. The United States and AIPAC have always been there, and we will always be.

;;;;; Thank you so very much. (Applause.)

END.

Subject: Plane for Karl

Karl Hascall, who is active in the Kent County GOP politics, owns a plane with his brother. It is a King Air B-100, 8 passenger plane. He has offered to fly Karl out and back to the Kent County Lincoln Day Dinner next Friday, April 4. Karl is a Special Guest of the event and will be making remarks. Is this acceptable and is there other information you need?

Brett and Charlie:
Karl is flying to Winston-Salem on 4/24 to participate in a fundraiser for Cong. Burr.
You both have already signed off on the invites, which went out last month.
Below is the charter flight arrangement for him and me to fly down - is this arrangement ok given campaign finance?

thanks for guidance -

Interesting stuff from the Campaign Financing case:

Weekend All Things Considered
National Public Radio
Saturday, March 29 2003
Copyright, National Public Radio

John Ydstie: With the war dominating the headlines, politicians don't like to talk about it, but they can't afford to stop raising campaign money, and they're doing it this year under the provisions of the new McCain-Feingold campaign finance law. The law is only in place tentatively because many questions are being raised in the courts about its constitutionality. Indeed, within minutes of President Bush signing the act into law, its opponents filed a legal challenge. It was expected that by now, the case would be pending in the Supreme Court. It's not. NPR's Nina Totenberg is here to tell us why.

Nina, the law has a process for resolving these legal issues. What is it?

Nina Totenberg: Well, it's an expedited process. It provides for a three-judge court composed of one appeals court judge and two district court judges to look at the law initially, and then it goes directly to the Supreme Court. Now this case was heard in early December--on, I think, the 3rd and 4th of December--and at that time, the chief judge of the three-judge panel, Judge Karen Henderson, who's a court of appeals judge, indicated, volunteered in fact, that she expected a decision out of her court by the end of January. That obviously hasn't happened. Now this is a very complicated case. Still, to have it almost April and unresolved is quite extraordinary.

Ydstie: Mm-hmm. And why haven't we gotten a ruling?

Totenberg: Well, initially, there was a lot of thought that this is just a very hard case. There's a record that's more than 50,000 pages long, more than two dozen provisions, but as the months have dragged on, my sources tell me it's become clear that part of the problem is, indeed, the collegiality, or lack of collegiality, between Judge Henderson, the court of appeals judge, and the two district court judges. Judge Henderson, I'm told, began drafting an opinion on her own before the case was argued, in fact before all the briefs were filed. And very important in these cases is what the lower court, that court, says is the statement of facts. That's what the Supreme Court's going to base its decision on factually.

Well, when the two district court judges got a look at her statement of facts, my sources say, they were appalled. And even though they are very different ideologically--one of them is relatively liberal, one of them relatively conservative--they began working together feverishly to try to make a statement of facts that they could agree on because they found Judge Henderson's unacceptable and much of what Judge Henderson wrote unacceptable. Relations between the district court judges and Judge Henderson are said to be pretty frosty at this point. The decision, when it comes out, I'm told will be almost a thousand pages long, when and if it comes out. And so we're in a bit of a legal mess here with the Supreme Court waiting.

Ydstie: Mm-hmm. I don't want you to reveal your sources, but I presume it's not the judges that are talking about this.

Totenberg: No, let me make this very clear: None of the judges on this panel talked to me, but when there is this kind of holdup, there starts to be a leak in the normally sealed sieve at these courts. And I've talked to a lot of people about this who are very knowledgeable and I'm confident that this is a story at this point worth getting on the air.

Ydstie: Mm-hmm. And time is of the essence because people want to raise campaign money.

Totenberg: Political Washington is getting pretty desperate because they don't know the rules of the game. Over at the Supreme Court, I think it's fair to say there is apparently even some annoyance because the court's coming to the end of the term. They're going to have to schedule this late in the term. This is, as I said, an extremely complex case.

There are at least suspicions that one or more justices might want to retire this summer. So this is getting ugly.

Ydstie: Thanks, Nina.

Totenberg: Thank you, John.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING

BRIEFERS: VICTORIA CLARKE, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE FOR PUBLIC AFFAIRS; MAJOR GENERAL STANLEY MCCHRYSTAL, U.S. ARMY

PENTAGON BRIEFING ROOM, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA

2:02 P.M. EST, MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2003

MS. CLARKE: Good afternoon, everyone.

;;;;; The coalition continues to make good progress toward ending the Iraqi regime, freeing the Iraqi people and disarming the country of weapons of mass destruction. As Secretary Rumsfeld and others reminded us yesterday, coalition troops are within 50 miles of the Iraqi capital. We are approaching Baghdad from the North, the South and the West. We've taken Iraq's only port and control its coastline. The oil wells in the South are being secured for the Iraqi people, and we recently hit a large terrorist facility in northern Iraq.

;;;;; The bombing continues to weaken the command and control leadership. Since the coalition bombed Saddam's headquarters at the very beginning of the war, the world has neither seen his hide nor hair, only tapes. We've not seen his sons. We've seen evidence that family members are fleeing the country or trying to flee the country. We continue to put about 2,000 troops a day into the country. One thing that is very clear is the end of the Iraqi regime.

;;;;; It's also important to note what hasn't happened in the first 10 or 12 days, some of the things that were predicted or feared but haven't happened so far:

;;;;; Unlike the Gulf War, no Iraqi Scud missiles have been fired into Israel. Unlike the Gulf War, the oil fields have not been turned into a huge bonfire, wreaking enormous economic and environmental damage. There has been, thus far, no humanitarian crisis or mass exodus of refugees. There has, as yet, been no Iraqi use of weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;; Of course, bad things may still occur. Some of the toughest fighting, as we have indicated, may well lie ahead. But the fact that none of the predicted disasters has happened yet is good news in itself, and testimony to the progress we're making.

;;;;; The increasingly desperate and bloodthirsty Iraqi regime is willing to terrorize and destroy just about everybody, military and civilian alike, who gets in its way. On Saturday a driver with a suicide bomb killed four American soldiers in southern Iraq. The Iraqi regime -- what's left of it -- publicly celebrated the deed and predicted more suicide bombings.

REV_00113363

;;;;; The Iraqi regime parades our prisoners of war on television, contrary to the Geneva Conventions.

;;;;; And meanwhile, we are treating Iraqi prisoners of war humanely with dignity and decency, adequate food and medical care and full access to the Red Cross, in accordance with the Geneva Conventions. Our humanity contrasts sharply with their inhumanity.

;;;;; We also continue to provide meaningful humanitarian assistance to the Iraqi people, including the recent flow of water from Kuwait to Umm Qasr.

;;;;; Finally, it's worth noting that the free Iraqi forces are having a positive role in their homeland already. The Iraqi -- these Iraqi volunteers help U.S. forces in civil and military operation in carrying out such essential functions as translating and security. Already, they may have saved lives. General Franks told an amazing story yesterday. There were two men who were brothers who were trained in Baghdad as suicide bombers, and they were sent to Umm Qasr. Evidently, they had thought twice about the mission and were trying to figure out what to do, but were afraid to surrender. When they heard a free Iraqi forces soldier speaking in Arabic and explain who he was, they made a decision, stepped forward and surrendered. There's no telling how many lives may have been saved because of the free Iraqi soldier providing a vital communications link.

;;;;; When the Iraqi regime is gone, and it will be, the free Iraqi forces will have played an important role in this war.

;;;;; General?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Thank you, Ms. Clarke. Operation Iraqi Freedom continues. More than 300,000 coalition forces are deployed in support of combat operations, with more than a third of those inside Iraq.

;;;;; Our ground operations are continuing to engage enemy positions throughout Iraq. General Brooks gave an overall accounting earlier today. We've seized additional key bridges over the Euphrates River and conducted offensive operations to isolate As Samawa and An Nasiriyah in order to destroy irregular forces in those areas.

;;;;; The air campaign continues as well. We flew about 1,000 sorties over Iraq yesterday, mostly against the Medina, Hammurabi, Baghdad and Al Nida divisions. We also hit command, control and communications targets and air defense sites in Baghdad and in northern Iraq.

;;;;; Our forces have fired more than 700 Tomahawk land attack missiles and dropped more than 8,000 precision-guided munitions since Operation Iraqi Freedom began.

;;;;; I have two pre- and post-strike images for you today. The first one is a special security compound in Baghdad. As you can see, the building was destroyed with no damage to the surrounding areas. The second image is of a missile facility in Mosul. We believe it serviced all types of missiles, from short-range ballistic missiles to air-to-air missiles.

;;;;; I have three videos for you today. The first video is of an A-10 dropping a precision-guided weapon to strike a bunker located near the H-2 airfield in western Iraq. The second video is also of an A-10 attack on two vehicles on a road north of Al-Asa (sp). The aircraft used its 30mm Gatling gun in this attack. The third video is of an F/A-18 using rockets to strike an artillery emplacement south of Al Amarah.

;;;;; With that, we'll take your questions.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Charlie?

;;;;; Q Torie, you said you'd seen evidence that family members are fleeing the country and trying to flee the country -- Saddam's family members. There were reports before the war that people were jumping into taxicabs and stuffing their suitcases and trying to run. What kind of evidence do you see now that family members are fleeing the country?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: We have seen some reports recently, and I'll just leave it at that, that some family members, including family members of very senior officials, are trying to get out of the country.

;;;;; Q By "reports," do you mean U.S. intelligence reports or anecdotal reports from the region, perhaps media reports? You're talking about definite --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: From several different reports, and I'll just leave it at that. But I'm not talking about media.

;;;;; Tony?

;;;;; Q I have a question about some of these numbers you just threw out, to make sure there's no numbers inflation here. You said that there are over 300,000 troops in the region today, sir. General Myers, on Friday, said there was like -- something like 270,000. Is it possible you could have gotten 30,000 in four days?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: No, our number is 200 -- about -- a little over 250,000 U.S. forces, and then the remainder are coalition. It's about 300 -- slightly over 300,000 combination coalition forces.

;;;;; Q But it hasn't grown by 30,000 since Myers' press conference on Friday?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I'd go back and -- I will go back and check that, but I don't believe so.

;;;;; Q PGMs. You said 8,000 were dropped as of now. General Myers on Friday said 5,00 had been dropped. So in the last three and a half days, roughly 3,000 more PGMs have been dropped? Is that a fair -- accurate way to look at that?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: That in fact is correct. We've been running a tremendous number of sorties, as you know, against -- primarily against the Republican Guard divisions; close air support and interdiction of those forces, using an awful lot of munitions.

;;;;; Q What percentage has been dropped on Baghdad of the 8,000 to date? Can you give a rough order of that, so it doesn't appear that most of these are dropping on Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I couldn't do it with accuracy. I'd like to get back with you with that.

;;;;; Q Could you? Because that's a point people would like to know.

;;;;; Q There are reports from the front that they've found some kind of a torture chamber near this hospital that was used by Iraqi forces. Do you have any information that Iraqis have used torture on coalition prisoners?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I don't have any information on what you just said, but there are reams, and reams and reams of information about what the Iraqi regime has done for decades. I mean, it is policy, it is practice, there's bureaucracy behind it -- civilians and military alike -- what they do. But nothing on the report you have.

;;;;; Q General McChrystal, could you answer that part? Do you have any information about --

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Nothing to add to what Ms. Clarke said.

;;;;; Q Torie, on the use of the heavy bombers -- and I address this to the general primarily -- the B-1s, B-2s and B-52s, can you tell what kind of ordnance they're dropping? The B-52 is dropping dumb bombs, what we used to call carpet bombing, on the Republican Guard troops?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, they are not. They are dropping a combination of munitions, a large number of precision munitions. So there's really not carpet bombing occurring.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Tom?

;;;;; Q Can you say how much these Republican Guard divisions have been degraded? And are you still seeing a problem with them moving their armor and so forth into civilian areas?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: All right, two questions there. We are seeing significant degradation of those forces. I won't put an exact number on it, but I'll say very significant weakening of the forces.

;;;;; We are seeing some movement in Republican Guard formations, as well. What we believe we are seeing --

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- is that correct?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: We are seeing movement around the battlefield. What we think we are seeing them do is move to reinforce other forces that have already been significantly degraded or attrited at this point. So we think they're trying to strengthen where they were.

;;;;; Q And they're putting their armor in civilian areas. Does that continue to be a problem with taking that armor out?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Well, we continue to see them put it next to houses, all kinds of structures. So it's still targetable, but it's more difficult.

;;;;; Q Can you describe the combat you had this morning or earlier today between the Republican Guard and the probing units of the U.S.? How long did that encounter last? How violent was it? What was the result?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, we have some movement of our forces, and I think it's inappropriate if I discuss actions which are still ongoing in any kind of specificity.

;;;;; Q Is there an effort to try to stop the units that are up on that front line from retreating back into Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, there is -- there are maneuvers going to try to destroy those divisions that stand in our way.

;;;;; Q Two questions -- one about the night-vision equipment that the secretary said that he heard was coming over the border from Syria. Has any of it actually been found in country on any of the Iraqis?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I don't have anything new on that report.

;;;;; Q Okay. And the other question, it seemed like the secretary yesterday was trying to say that we were close to taking Basra, that coalition forces were close to taking Basra, but we continue to see reports of the British, who are primarily kind of the forces there, engaging Iraqis, and the fighting just seems to keep going on and on. Is there any reason it's taking so long to take down Basra?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I'll start. I know one thing he was trying to do, which we don't do often enough, is talk about the fabulous job the Brits are doing there. They are doing a phenomenal job of trying to go after the death squads and lessen their influence there -- my understanding is, there is less of an influence there in Basra -- trying to make sure things like water and humanitarian assistance can get in. And I think they are making good progress. It's too soon to characterize which way it's going. We know where it will go eventually, but it could take some time.

;;;;; Q Are the Iraqis that strong in Basra?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I think it's too soon to make characterizations about it. We know that is a place where some of the worst of the worst of the Iraqi regime were, slaughtering people, putting civilians in front of the fighting, those sorts of things. And the Brits are doing fabulous work, and they made good progress.

;;;;; Q Torie --

;;;;; Q General, when you talk about the degradation of the Iraqi Republican Guard units, can you characterize how they're supplying their troops? And we've seen video, gun camera of taking out fuel trucks and supply trucks. Can you make a broad statement about how the Iraqi Republican Guard divisions are supplying their forward troops?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: I would say with great difficulty at this point. Another thing about the attrition or degradation of a unit like that is, once you start to take a certain percentage of a force like that down, particularly a mechanized or armor force, the systems start to break down -- the resupply systems; the maintenance systems; all of the (things ?), command and control that go together. So it doesn't always require you to go down to zero percentage to take a unit to the point where it's not very combat-effective, if you can break those systems.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Let me go back to Carl for a second, and then we'll do Barbara. I know one of the positive signs we've seen in Basra is in a neighborhood, for instance, they were able to reopen the marketplace, reopen the school.

;;;;; So again, I think -- I know what the secretary was trying to do yesterday was demonstrate what a great job the Brits are doing there.

;;;;; Barbara --

;;;;; Q But is he shifting back and forth --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Barbara?

;;;;; Q General McChrystal, could you talk a little bit about the planned follow-on force that's now moving to the region -- the 1st AD, the 1st Cav, the 2nd and 3rd APR -- why you are sending that force, the general role and mission they would fulfill? And would they have been sent anyhow, no matter how the battle was progressing at this point?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: That's a great question. And we talked a little bit about it Saturday. As you know, the plan was sent up or was developed initially to start with a force with a flow that then could be shut off if not required. We have the follow-on forces that are now -- some in movement, some in preparation for movement, all under orders for movement -- that can be shut off if not required. And the way it was designed was, if opportunity struck and conflict was not required, or if very early success was achieved, in fact, the number of forces flowed could be adjusted. The others that come in all come in with their full combat capability and can support the actions required.

;;;;; Q So what will they be doing now, broadly speaking? There's a hundred thousand or so. The mission that they will be fulfilling once they get there, broadly speaking?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: It will be exactly based upon what's required on the ground. If in fact they're required to maneuver and be part of the combat fight, that's what they'll do, and they are prepared for that.

;;;;; Q General, for the record, have you -- have any coalition forces to date located any chemical weapons or biological weapons in Iraq? If not, more broadly, do you think you have an idea of where they are? And how concerned are you that some of our air attacks, coalition air attacks, might hit a storage place for chemical weapons and release a toxic plume?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: We are -- we have not located any chemical or biological weapons to date. We still believe very strongly that the regime has the capability and potentially the intent to employ those weapons. We are targeting in a number of ways -- through information operations, through attacking launchers or capabilities, the different ways they could deliver those munitions -- to try, again, to prevent their use. We are very carefully targeting suspected or potential storage sites, for just the reasons you outlined, so that we don't get an unintended effect by targeting something kinetically. So we have some other methods we can do that.

;;;;; But I'd remind you that when chemical and biological weapons are used, in fact once they're disseminated, they can be put in fairly small, difficult-to-predict areas.

;;;;; They can be delivered by everything from a garbage truck to a car bomb, as well as, of course, conventional artillery. So we have got to maintain our own posture in preparation for that.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Tony.

;;;;; Q General, you showed that video of a bomb hitting a bunker near H-2, and that's one of the few times that I've seen much information at all come out about what's happening in western Iraq. Could you describe what's going on out there? What sort of Iraqi forces are in the area, and what U.S. troops are doing out there?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, we have a combination of special operations forces operating in western Iraq supported by air, support by information operations. It's -- they represent the countries of the coalition. They are doing what probably could be termed an area- denial mission. They are able to move almost at will wherever they want. They have been cutting some lines of communication. They've been raiding some facilities. They've been going to some suspected weapon of mass destruction locations. We've had a series of direct- action raids as well as interdiction. So we think what we've done is, in addition to doing some counter-Scud work out there and denial, we think that we have denied the regime the ability to operate effectively at all in western Iraq.

;;;;; Q What kind of forces are out there on the Iraqi side? And what kind of a bunker was this?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, that particular bunker is at H-2 airfield. I don't remember exactly what's in it. The Iraqis have a combination of forces -- some caretaker units, and they've moved some commando forces out to the west, as we saw on Saturday when the Rangers hit a commando headquarters.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Dale.

;;;;; Q Can you update us on the status of the troops in the Red Sea, the eastern Med? Are you in fact going to bring them around into the Persian Gulf? And in particular, are the carriers going to stay in the eastern Med?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Future operations.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I know of no plan that we could discuss here on moving ships around.

;;;;; Q How about the smaller ships, the Tomahawk shooters? Are they being brought around, as has been reported?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Yeah, we just -- we wouldn't -- it's up to General Franks to decide where and how and when he moves people, he moves assets. One thing we can say, and it's being demonstrated every day, is we have enormous flexibility. Because we're getting so much support from so many countries, we have enormous flexibility to use these assets to their greatest effectiveness.

;;;;; Q What sort of --

;;;;; Q Torie?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: One more for Dale, because he failed on his first one. (Laughter>0

;;;;; Q You've fired 800 TLAMs to date. Is there going to be a pause while you get some of those ships resupplied before a push into Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, we've fired I think 700 Tomahawks to date, and we resupply on a constant basis as required.

;;;;; Q For the general.

;;;;; You had said you'd seen a very significant weakening of the Iraqi Republican Guard. And then you also said that once you take the system, that whole system starts to go down. That sort of echoes what a senior defense official was saying earlier today in Doha, Qatar; he was saying that he senses a tipping point -- they sense a tipping point in Basra and Nasiriyah, and once that comes, it all starts to spread.

;;;;; Do you actually -- is this a beginning of a tipping point?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Ma'am, I couldn't say that I see a tipping point, but we clearly look for that. That's true in units, it's true in places like Basra and an-Nasiriyah. And that's what we're working towards.

;;;;; Q But is the -- you were -- elaborate a little bit on that very significant weakening of the Iraqi Republican Guard. Is this reaching a tipping point there?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Yes, ma'am, we see some very significant weakening, and it will hit a tipping point in some of their formations.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I would just go back to a vision Secretary Rumsfeld used yesterday on the shows, is put yourself in Saddam Hussein's shoes. You're losing control over more and more of your country; you have forces coming at you from every direction. It is not a good picture for him. But we always say in the same sentence, some of the toughest fighting could lie ahead. The outcome is inevitable. We know how it will end: the Iraqi regime will end. But we know that there could be some tough fighting ahead.

;;;;; Jamie?

;;;;; Q Torie, one of the underpinnings of the strategy that the U.S. is using is what you keep referring to, this -- creating the feeling that there's an inevitable outcome. That's --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: The inevitable outcome is more than a feeling --

;;;;; Q Well --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: -- it is reality.

;;;;; Q -- except, wouldn't you concede that at this point in the campaign, whether it's premature or not, you have yet to achieve that feeling of inevitability among the Iraqi people and the Iraqi leadership?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Again, I'd push back on how you're saying it. It's not a feeling that we will achieve, it is the inevitable outcome that the Iraqi regime will be ended, the Iraqi people will be free of decades and decades and decades of torture and oppression, the likes of which I think the world has not ever seen before; and we'll find the WMD and we'll get rid of it. That is absolutely inevitable.

;;;;; What goes on in the mind of every one of the Iraqis, I don't know. I know if I were an Iraqi citizen I'd be saying, "Huh. Look at what's been going on here for the last 10 days -- or 12 days -- and we haven't seen any of our leaders." That's pretty extraordinary, when you think about it.

;;;;; Bob?

;;;;; Q Torie, you mentioned the attack on what you called the terrorist facility in northern Iraq. Were you referring to the Ansar al-Islam, the holdout?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Right.

;;;;; Q Could you tell us about -- either one of you -- what exploitation you've managed to achieve so far from that point of view?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: The general probably has more. What I know is very extensive facility, and a lot of hard work to get through it.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Exactly that. It is, as General Franks said, I think, massive.

;;;;; We have a significant-sized force there. We actually believe we destroyed a significant force in -- portion of the Ansar al-Islam force there, and they're doing the exploitation as we speak.

;;;;; Q Any results whatsoever from --

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: There are no results yet.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: None to report yet.

;;;;; Tom?

;;;;; Q Some members of the 101st today received a briefing in which they were told to be on heightened alert for the possibility of a chemical agent attack -- actually, it was said that a chemical agent attack might be imminent -- and were told to watch out for particular types of vehicles or aircraft. Do you have any idea why -- what prompted that heightened alert

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, that specific report -- I'm not sure what caused it, but clearly we knew and planned, as we got closer to threatening the core of the regime, the likelihood to use chemical and biological weapons would go up dramatically. And we're responding to that with posturing.

;;;;; Q Is it -- but is it in response to particular, specific intelligence?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, I am not aware of any particular intelligence in that case.

;;;;; Q Torie, you mentioned that the forces were moving from the North on Baghdad. We haven't seen the 173rd moving. Could you elaborate on what you meant by that?

;;;;; And are the Kurds -- are the Kurdish forces being allowed to move south, especially on the city of Kirkuk?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I wouldn't elaborate on what I said, but it is very clear there is pressure bearing down on the regime from all directions.

;;;;; Let's do one more. Right there. Next to him. Behind there.

;;;;; Q Can either of you give us any kind of estimate on Iraqi civilian or military casualties? And if not, why not?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: On civilian casualties, when we have ground troops, we bring it forward. That is our habit, that is our policy, and we will continue to do that.

;;;;; Numbers on Iraqi -- I just don't think we have them. I think it's very hard to tell.

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: That's exactly right. Even as we do what we call battle damage assessment, trying to get numbers of casualties is really inexact.

;;;;; Q Torie --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Thank you.

END.

Good.;

How much time would a declaration through the end of the session buy us?

Frist will talk to Stevens today or tomorrow about putting a "place holder" in the supplemental so a debt ceiling increase can be added in conference.;

Meanwhile, Treasury has the following draft prepared to declare a three month debt suspension period at the end of the week.; This would provide enough room to get us into late May or early June.; If Congress fails to act, Treasury GC is prepared to make a second declaration through the end of the session.

April 3, 2003

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert

Speaker of the House

U.S.House of Representatives

Washington, D.C.20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

;;;;;;;;;; I am notifying you, as required under 5 U.S.C.  8348 (1)(2) that by reason of the public debt limit, it is my determination that I will be unable to invest fully the portion of the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund (CSRDF) not immediately required to pay beneficiaries.; For purposes of this statute, I have determined that a "debt issuance suspension period" will begin as early as April 3, 2003; but no later than April 11, 2003 and will last until July 11, 2003.; Therefore, during the debt issuance suspension period, the Treasury Department will suspend additional investments of amounts credited to the CSRDF and redeem a portion of the investments held by the CSRDF, as authorized by law.; Beneficiaries will be fully protected and will suffer no adverse consequences.; The governing statute requires that the Treasury restore all due interest and principal to these funds as soon as this can be done without exceeding the public debt limit.

REV_00113410

;;;;;;;;; Even though the debt issuance suspension period will last until July 11th, the investment suspensions and redemptions may only provide debt issuance capacity under the statutory debt limit until the latter half of May or early June.; I know that you share the President's and my commitment to maintaining the full faith and credit of the U.S. government. Together we must continue working to enact an increase in the statutory debt limit as quickly as possible to avoid any negative repercussions at home or abroad during this critical time.

;;; Sincerely,

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: The formula doesn't specify a specific named city and --

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Here, Chuck.

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: I'm sorry.

;;;;; And the secretary of Homeland Security will have to make a judgment.

;;;;; What we tried to do here is be fair to everyone, be fair to South Dakota, which has some needs, and yet understand that places like New York, like Washington, like San Francisco and Los Angeles have special needs.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; Q Do you have some kind of sheet that would show us at a minimum --

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Yes.

;;;;; Q -- at a minimum what each state -- (off mike) --

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Yes. In -- right.

;;;;; Q -- and then you can say, in addition to that, they might get other money?

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: That's -- yes, that's exactly right. The formula-driven part of this will give you the specifics. And you know, we can work through that for you and give it to you.

;;;;; And then, in all the intelligence that all of us see, you know, there are five to 10 places that always come up. L.A. is one of them, obviously. San Francisco is one of them. Chicago is one of them. You know, these are places that you can just read in the newspaper are, you know, places of concern. Then there are specific areas in other, less-populated states that have a particular attraction for attention to be paid.

;;;;; So yeah, I think you get the formula-driven piece of it, and then you get the discretionary piece on top of it.

;;;;; Q But there is a breakdown for each state?

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Yes.

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: Not on the high needs part. This is on the 2.5 billion that is distributed as a formula.

;;;;; Q Right.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; Q Senator Daschle, do you think the Pentagon underestimated the amount of resistance that U.S. troops would confront in Iraq?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Well, I think our troops are doing an absolutely superb job. We get briefed daily, and I am struck by the extraordinary professionalism they demonstrate each and every day. We can be very proud of the work that they've done.

;;;;; And I think there will be adequate time later on for us to provide or to be given a better understanding of our circumstances. But right now I have to say I think we're doing well, and the troops ought to be lauded for the effort made so far.

;;;;; Q Is there any money for Senator Corzine's chemical security -- (off mike)?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Yes, there is. I don't know what the exact amount is.
Maybe somebody can tell us.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: It's a separate amendment.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: It is a separate amendment.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: A separate amendment. There's a first responders --

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Yeah. It's not in this first responders amendment.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: It's a separate one.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; Q This is for all three of you. Are the cities telling you they're going to have to cut -- (off mike) -- programs if they don't get this money? Are they going to have to cut -- (off mike) -- hours?

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Yes.

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- and people may not realize exactly what -- (off mike).

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Well, first you have to realize what tremendous economic pressure the cities are already facing. I think both my colleagues from New York expressed that concern. But that's true in South Dakota as well. I don't know of a state, I don't know of a city that doesn't face extraordinary pressures right now budgetarily, in part because of the economy, in part because there's been a reduction in the support at the federal level for programs that are implemented at the local level.

;;;;; So, because of the economic pressures and the budgetary effects of those pressures, there is no question that they go into this new threat recognizing the need for their new-found responsibilities but not able to begin to cope with the costs associated with them.

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: Yeah. In New York City, right now the mayor has to make choices. He said he will fund security, whatever it takes, as he should, but then we're cutting huge numbers of teachers from schools; they're thinking of eliminating pre-kindergarten, all pre-kindergarten;; they're thinking of raising taxes again even though they just raised the property tax 18 percent. That choice is not just New York City's. You go to Rochester, go to Buffalo, go to Syracuse; the same choices: cutting schools, raising taxes. These are all choices that have been foisted upon local cities and local communities in part -- in part -- because they have security needs and security has to come first, but if we don't give them this help, they're not going to be able to do what else they have to do.

;;;;; Q Senator Daschle, why do you suppose the White House didn't recognize this issue that you all are talking about, this tremendous funding gap and the pressures being put on the states and localities?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: That's a good question, but I'd invite you to ask the White House. I can't possibly guess why they couldn't. I think you ought to ask them. They ought to be asked why. What we're simply doing is not calling attention to their shortfalls, but to give them an opportunity, and our Republican colleagues, everybody in Congress, one last opportunity to address this issue this year as we're addressing these needs right now.
As we said, the war is being fought -- the war on terrorism is being fought on two fronts, the one abroad, the one here at home. We need to fully fund the one abroad, but we certainly need to fully fund the one here at home. That's what we're trying to do here.

;;;;; Q What have your Republican colleagues said? Why are there no Republicans here asking for this here today? Because the terrorists aren't targeting one party or another.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Well, you know, I have been working on this in terms of first-responder funding literally since November of 2001, and there are a number of responses one gets. A couple of months ago Mitch Daniels said: Well, what do people expect? We can't possibly protect every little town in America.

;;;;; There are budgetary problems. I mean, they've made their choices. Their choices are to fund a huge tax cut and to fund the war, and that leaves out a lot of things, not only homeland security but a lot of other pressing needs. There is a sense in the administration that this should be a state and local responsibility because it basically comes down to police and fire.

;;;;; At the very same time that we're looking at these increased burdens, they're sending us budgets that try to eliminate the COPS program, something that Chuck Schumer worked on, you know, when he was in the House with my husband, which has contributed to lowering crime.

;;;;; I don't understand the calculus, except that it is all part of their continuing effort to lower the revenues of the government, either because they think they'll get them back under supply-side economics, which you know is voodoo economics and defies the laws of arithmetic -- we saw that in the '80s -- or because they really do believe that starving the rest of the government means that we will always pay for national defense and they can get the long-held goal of the more extreme members of their party and some in the administration to turn the clock back not just on the Clinton administration but, you know, on Johnson, Kennedy, Truman and FDR, as far as I can tell. So I think it's as much ideologically and fiscally driven as any objective assessment.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Why don't we take these two questions and then we'll --

;;;;; Q I have a question on the high need money. New York City metropolitan area covers three different states. Is there some way to treat the New York metropolitan area as a region for that money, to a multi-state authority of some sort to try to get in on that?

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Well, there are, you know --

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: We've been trying to do that for 30 years. (Laughs.)

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Yeah. There are certainly lots of cooperations. I met with the governor of New Jersey over the weekend because they're as concerned as we are in New York and there's a lot of cooperation that has to go on across the Hudson. So there's a lot of that that is happening. But if you just look at New York City alone, we have a $900 million set of budgetary needs that are immediate. You know, New York City has its own separate counterterrorism unit, in part going back to the times when they didn't think that they could get much cooperation from the federal government, so they fund that plus the $5 million a week that I referred to earlier. So, each jurisdiction is obviously looking to its own needs. But there's a lot of cooperation that's going on without the need for an authority or some agency.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: And this last question?

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- each separately apply to that high need money and get it?

;;;;; Q Is the entire Democratic Caucus behind all of these amendments? And secondly, do you expect the Republican leadership to try and defeat all of them? Or have you gotten nibbles from them that they might accept some or have their own alternatives?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: I will -- the answer to your first question is that I know of no Democratic opposition. That doesn't mean on every single one of the amendments we're going to have unanimity, but I think it's overwhelming. And as I say, I know of no one who has expressed opposition.

;;;;; And again, as I say, I think that there is the potential of real bipartisan support on all of these amendments, in part because of discussions we've had with our Republican colleagues; in part, I know, because they share many of the same concerns we do. So we expect that there will be bipartisan support.

;;;;; Thank you all very much.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Thank you all.

END.

PRESS CONFERENCE WITH SENATE MINORITY LEADER TOM DASCHLE (D-SD); SENATOR HARRY REID (D-NV); SENATOR HILLARY CLINTON (D-NY); SENATOR CHUCK SCHUMER (D-NY); SENATOR JON CORZINE (D-NJ); AND SENATOR BARBARA MIKULSKI (D-MD)
RE: PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

SENATE RADIO/TV GALLERY, THE CAPITOL BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C.
10:48 A.M. EST, TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2003

SEN. DASCHLE: Good morning, everyone. Thanks for joining us.

;;;;; Last week, the president issued his supplemental budget to fund military action in Iraq, new foreign aid commitments, and our homeland security needs.

;;;;; Let me say first that regarding the funding request for ongoing military action, the Senate and the country stands united on the need to provide every necessary tool to our armed forces. No resource will be spared to make sure that our troops get what they need to complete their mission as safely and as quickly as possible.

;;;;; But the war on terrorism has two fronts, and we need to apply the same vigilance, the same commitment that we're showing abroad to our anti-terrorism efforts here at home. We can't hang on to the September 10th priorities in a post-September 11th world.

;;;;; Regrettably, the administration's supplemental budget seems to do that. This supplemental budget fails to reflect the reality of the homefront. States and cities and towns remain extremely vulnerable to terrorist attack and are ill-equipped to deal with this challenge. Due to the worst fiscal crisis in decades, state and local budgets are stretched to the breaking point, and police and firefighters are struggling just to maintain peacetime staffing levels. Meanwhile, our nation remains under Code Orange threat advisory, and the intelligence community tells us that al Qaeda operatives are likely to attack just as much today as they were before September 11th.

;;;;; This week we will offer a series of amendments to reduce our nation's vulnerability to terrorist attack, and to give the men and women who protect our homeland at the federal, state and local levels the tools they need to do their job.

;;;;; I'm grateful that some of the sponsors of these amendments are here to elaborate on their particular proposals. Together, these amendments will help police and fire departments add staff, they will beef-up port and border security, they help local governments pay for the cost of smallpox vaccinations, secure our nuclear power plants and laboratories, and increase our capacity to protect our skies, our railways and our coastline. The federal government can provide the resources necessary to help prevent terrorism on our shores and respond to an attack effectively, should one occur.

;;;;; We have no choice but to get those resources into the hands of those with the skills to protect us. Just as we have reached across partisan divides to support our troops, so should we come together to protect our homeland. It shouldn't be a partisan issue. We face a clear threat; we know the terrorists' targets; we know how to protect them. We owe it to the American people to work together to make our country safer.

;;;;; Let me call on our distinguished Democratic -- assistant Democratic leader for his discussion or his description of the first amendment, nuclear security.

;;;;; SEN. REID: Thank you, Mr. Leader.

;;;;; We in Nevada are aware of what can happen when a nuclear device goes off. In the deserts above Las Vegas, we've had almost a thousand of them set off over the years -- small ones, medium size ones, and large ones. All you need to do is travel that desert and look at the holes in the ground and the tremendous damage done by things nuclear.

;;;;; That's why I'm terribly disappointed that since September 11th, we have not had any help to focus on the nuclear problems we have as a world and as a country.

;;;;; If we're going to have homeland defense, we must have a defense against things nuclear.

;;;;; The amendment that I will offer will provide $400 million to the Department of Energy to safeguard nuclear weapons and nuclear material in the United States and throughout the world. The amendment provides $300 million for the nuclear nonproliferation program and $100 million in additional funding to the Department of Energy to fund enhanced safeguards and security programs at the nation's nuclear weapons labs and plants, environmental management sites throughout the nation, and DOE Office of Science labs. There are all kinds of nuclear reactors in our universities. We have foreign students who use those reactors, as do other students. We have to make sure that they're safe and they're secure.

;;;;; The largest item in this amendment will be $135 million for nuclear detectors at major seaports around the world. We have the necessary equipment today to do surveillance of seaports to find out if there are things nuclear in those ships. It's important, if there is some foreign country where we find something nuclear, that we found out about it there rather than waiting to the United States to detect it. And certainly, last resort, we need the ability to detect it here in the United States. This amendment, as far as I'm concerned, is vitally important to the safety and security of the American people.

;;;;; It's my pleasure now to introduce someone who has been personally impacted as a result of the September 11th incident, Senator Chuck Schumer.

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: Well, thank you, Harry. And first I want to thank Senator Daschle for his leadership in this issue; Senator Byrd, who helped us craft these amendments; and all of my colleagues here, but particularly Senators Clinton, who is on her way, and Senator Mikulski, because we are carrying the amendments on the first responders together and have worked long and hard on this.

;;;;; The bottom line is simple: When it comes to this administration and homeland security, we don't need any more rhetoric, we don't need any more photo ops; we need more dollars. But so far, this White House has been unwilling to do that. They are spending, as they should, all the money that's needed to fight the war on terror overseas, but they're just laggard in fighting the war here at home. And so on so many different issues, from first responders, to port security, to nuclear security, to bioterrorism funding, the administration talks the talk, but it doesn't walk the walk.

;;;;; The amendments we're doing here today are supposed to walk the walk. The one on first responders -- you all know throughout America our police, our fire, our first responders are under huge strains. In every part of my state, whether it be New York City or up on the northern border, our police and fire are stretched. They have new responsibilities, particularly since the Iraq war. They have to make sure they make sure their old -- or, their regular jobs, fighting crime, fighting fire, are still done. And overall, they have less money and fewer personnel because the budgets are so bad at state and local levels and because, particularly for police and fire throughout America, there are large numbers who are in the Reserves and National Guard and are being called up.

;;;;; The responsibility is Washington's. Terrorism is a national responsibility. And the amendment we're proposing here says to localities, to local police, and fire fighters and local property taxpayers, you should not bear this burden -- this extra burden; we will. And the amendment is a very simple one. It adds $4.3 billion for first responders as part of our overall package.

;;;;; Of that, 3 billion is distributed on a formula basis and will go all around the country so that every state will benefit. There's a minimum floor and then the rest on a per capita basis. But of that, 500 million is for critical infrastructure, and that will be more on a application basis.

;;;;; Then, of particular importance to Barbara and Hillary and myself, who have areas that have special -- who have been under special attack -- New York, Washington -- there's $1.045 billion for high needs areas. And so that will help areas like New York, like Washington, that have particular, particular needs. Here in New York City, we're spending $5 million extra a week on top of everything else extra we were spending since the war and Operation Atlas.

;;;;; And then there will also be money to help our police and fire throughout the country keep doing the jobs their doing for the COPS program and the Fire program; 150 for fire and 130 for COPS.

;;;;; It's a comprehensive package. It is supported by local governments and police and fire fighters throughout. Eighty percent, by the way, of the formula money has to be distributed to the localities. The states can't keep it. And we think it will really take a burden off the now-overburdened police, fire, local governments and local taxpayers, given our post-9/11 world.

;;;;; And now I'd like to call on my colleague who's been such a leader on this issue, as on so many others --

;;;;; SEN. : (Off mike.)

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: Well, he's a leader too, but I'm just going to call on Senator Barbara Mikulski.

;;;;; SEN. MIKULSKI: Okay. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Schumer, and to all here.

;;;;; First of all, America's at war, and America's under attack. We need to support our troops over there, and we need to support our homeland troops here. And we need to do it not only with words, but we need to do it with deeds.

;;;;; And the best way to show our support over there is to make sure that they have the best equipment, the best support and financial support here for their families.

;;;;; The way we support the homeland troops is to make sure that they have the best equipment, that they have the interoperability of radio and communication, so they can talk with each other, in order to protect each other. Then they need to have the best equipment, so that we can protect the protector as they protect us.

;;;;; You cannot do this on the cheap. Homeland security requires financial resources to be able to meet the need of the homeland troops, which are policemen, firefighters, emergency management people, and then the support for local public health people and their personnel.

;;;;; This is why we are offering a series of amendments to be able to put our resources where our rhetoric is, to make sure that we fund the programs while everybody else wants to have a parade. The parade begins in the supplemental. The parade is to the floor of the United State Senate when the banners that we carry will be the amendments that will make sure that we help the people who are trying to protect us.

;;;;; In my own hometown of Baltimore, every time we go to Code Orange, we have to spend $500,000 extra a week in overtime personnel. In Anne Arundel County, a high-risk urban, where we have the National Security Agency, the United States Naval Academy, the capital of the state of Maryland, again, overtime goes up.

;;;;; Now you might say, "So what? So what is overtime?" Overtime for policemen, overtime for firemen, overtime for standing sentry, protecting our ports and our communities. Well, I'll tell you what it means. It means as we put in the money for police overtime on this, we're -- we will -- taking money out of limited local budgets. Local budgets usually can only go to property tax. We can't raise property tax, but it means that we don't fund schools. It means that we don't fund libraries. It means that we don't fund public health and public works infrastructure. If a local community only has so much to give, and it's giving it to homeland security, it means the homeland is essentially local communities, or making homeland security an unfunded federal requirement.

;;;;; Now our police and our firemen, our emergency people, our nurses, are all ready to do this, but we need to be able to support them. That's why the amendments that will come out of -- that we're going to be offering -- more money for homeland security, for policemen, firemen, emergencies -- emergency people, for port security and others, are absolutely, absolutely so crucial.

;;;;; So when we talk about the land of the home -- the land of the free and the home of the brave, we need to make sure we protect it, and the first place we protect it is in the federal budget and in this supplemental. The fight really is here today. Thank you.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Senator Clinton, who is also a prime cosponsor of this amendment.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Thank you much -- very much, Senator Daschle. And I thank all of my colleagues, because this is, as my good friend, Barbara Mikulski, says, where the parade starts and stops, because if we don't provide the funding that we need for our men and women in uniform here on the homefront, we are essentially not fighting this war on the two fronts that it's being waged against us.

;;;;; And for the last 18 months, I've been meeting with mayors and fire chiefs and police commissioners and public health officials who have told me that they simply cannot do the job they're being asked to do without more help from Washington.

;;;;; Back in the fall of 2001, I introduced a bill that would provide money directly to our cities and our counties, because what I was hearing, and what all of us have heard, is that not only on overtime costs, but there was a lot of training and equipment that many of our communities just didn't have, and they were being asked to do this new task of protecting reservoirs and bridges and tunnels and airport perimeters without any additional assistance.

;;;;; Now, asking for this money is just good common sense, and the amendment which we are going to be supporting guarantees that federal resources will get out of Washington to where they are most needed. It's not enough to shuffle the money around, we have to put more money into homeland security. Some of our colleagues in the other house and on the other side of the aisle are saying, "Well, we'll reallocate within the pie that we have." The pie is not big enough. That's why we are coming with this amendment, to provide a total of $4.3 billion, which includes $3 billion in direct grants to states and local communities, $500 million of that to protect critical infrastructure; 1.045 -- one billion, forty-five million -- for high-risk areas; an additional $155 million for the FIRE Act, and $130 million for the COPS program. Because another problem that we've seen -- and we saw it in this budget that was just presented by the administration -- is that in order to get the homeland security money, they cut the money that we have traditionally given for the regular functions of our fire departments and our police departments, which to me is also an unacceptable trade-off.

;;;;; And I'm very pleased and grateful that the leadership has accepted an idea that I have been working on with many of you to get $1 billion for high-threat areas. New York and New York City are spending a total of $12.5 million a week. Every time we go to Code Orange and we have to have additional security in New York City, it's $5 million a week. New York State, which has to work hand in hand with the city as well as protect so much of our ports and our border and our airports and others, has a $7.5 million price tag.

;;;;; Now, the president set aside only $50 million to cover such costs for every high-risk area in the country. You know, New York will have exhausted those resources by next week. Everybody knows New York City is still the number-one area of vulnerability for future terrorist attack. It is absolutely unbelievable to me that we are still having this debate about getting more money to the people who do the jobs.

;;;;; When 911 is called, it doesn't ring in the White House, it doesn't ring in my office, it rings in the local call center or the precinct station or the firehouse. And we're going to have to convince this administration that it is essential for them to come to the plate and work with us in a bipartisan way for additional money.

;;;;; Now, it's not just New York that's spending a lot on homeland security. Today's Washington Post addresses how these costs are causing additional financial burdens for already-strapped cities that are already in deficits. Because this is a two-front war, we're going to make sure that we do pass the wartime supplemental to give our men and women in uniform, who are fighting so courageously against very unusual and difficult odds, everything that they need, but we also have to do the same for our men and women who are our homeland defenders, our front-line soldiers here at home.

;;;;; It is essential that we get this additional funding. I'm hoping that the administration and the Republican leadership will work with us. I've never felt more strongly about anything, certainly in my time here in the Senate, that it would be tragic indeed if we force these false choices on our communities, choosing between schools, hospitals, and police and fire. It's not a choice we should have to make. And additionally, we've got to make sure that we're well defended as well here at home.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Senator Jon Corzine.

;;;;; SEN. CORZINE: Thank you, Senator Daschle.

;;;;; Let me say that this really is a false choice when we talk about homeland defense relative to the other domestic choices, is a false choice when we don't recognize that we have a (true ?) two-front war.

;;;;; And one of those areas that has gone completely off the radar screen of the federal government are our chemical security plants. And I intend to offer an amendment that reflects a chemical plant security bill that went through committee and met resistance when it came to the floor. By the way, it went through committee with a 19 to 0 vote -- 19 to zero vote. And it is a serious problem.

;;;;; And I -- just to illustrate it, on February 12th, when the Homeland Security Department raised the level to Code Orange, they sent out a memorandum to local officials saying: "Al Qaeda operatives may attempt to launch conventional attacks against U.S. nuclear, chemical and industrial infrastructure to cause contamination, disruption and terror. Based on information, nuclear power plants and industrial chemical plants remain viable targets." We've got a real deal here, and it just keeps being ignored. There are 123 plants in this country where a million or more Americans are subject to being in the wake of toxic fumes. There's another 700 where it's 100,000 people.

;;;;; Security has been shown to be lax. I could read you a specific comment by Governor Tom Ridge at a July 10th, 2002 hearing, where he clearly emphasized the deficiencies that occur with regard to the vulnerabilities of our chemical facilities across this country. We need to address this issue. It needs to be done now. And if you needed any other verification, on March 18th this year, homeland security -- by GAO -- the voluntary issues are under -- "voluntary initiatives are underway at chemical facilities, but the extent of security preparedness is unknown." It's like somebody prepared a talking memo for me to come to a press conference to read to you with regard to acknowledging a problem, a request for the administration or Congress to act, and that's what I will try to do with our amendment.

;;;;; The only thing that will be different, other than acknowledging and assessing the vulnerabilities, creating priorities and working to have oversight going forward out of the Department of Homeland Security, with the EPA as a partner in that process, is we will try to add a tax credit program to help business shoulder some of that cost.

;;;;; But this is -- (pounds fist) -- an absolute essential. It is not because of hard work and publicity that the New York Times has it written up as an editorial today.

;;;;; This is a real issue. Eleven of these plants surround the region that we live in. An explosion of one of these chemical plants, that's seven and a half million people in its potential plume site. This is not something that should be ignored on any additional basis by the American people. We understand it's a problem; it ought to be dealt with now. That's what we'll be doing. Thank you.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Tom?

;;;;; Q Senator, just a clarification. What is the total sum of your amendments to increase Homeland Security? How much would they bring this -- how much additional money are you talking about?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: How much is it, Ranit?

;;;;; STAFF: Five point eight.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Five point eight.

;;;;; Q Five point eight. And at this point, what type of -- you need at least a couple of Republican votes to get this. Do you see any at this point?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: You know, I -- I do. I'd have to believe that once you hear the compelling arguments you've just heard that a number of Republicans who share the same concerns, who have publicly expressed them and who have certainly gone to the floor to articulately address many of these same issues, will join us in these amendments.

;;;;; As I said in my opening comment, these are not partisan issues. These should not be partisan in any way. And we welcome the support and hopefully the involvement of our colleagues on the Republican side as these amendments are brought up.

;;;;; Q Senators Schumer and Clinton, over one billion dollars, in your amendment, would go to high risk areas. How much of that will be allocated for New York City and New York State?

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: There are standards in the amendment that talk about high threat, how much money has been allocated already. And it will be on an application basis to the Homeland Security Department. I've already talked, as I know Mayor Bloomberg has, and I know Congressmen Walsh and Sweeney have as well, to the city of New York. And I've talked to Tom Ridge. And he thinks that New York City and New York State will do very well under this formula. But because it's a formula basis we couldn't say how much will go. But it will be a good share.

;;;;; Q So it's a formula for both the high risk and first responder --

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: There's -- the formula for the first responders, yes. The high risk is separate. The one billion is separate. That's on a grant basis. There is no set amount per state. The 2.5 billion of the 3 billion that is not high risk and not cops and fire is done on a formula basis. A certain amount goes to each state, and then it's per capita.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; Q If I could follow up on that. Maybe this is a nit-picking question. But could any jurisdiction apply for that high need money?

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Yes. Yeah. We've got -- we're talking about the first responders as opposed to what Senator Corzine was talking about, which was a specific program.

;;;;; The formula for 2-1/2 billion out of the 3 billion that will go to direct responders is population-based. That is a strict formula. The 5-1/2 million that brings us to the total of 3 billion has other factors that will be taken into account.

;;;;; Now in the -- this is complicated, but this is the way the government works -- in the 2-1/2 billion, the -- 80 percent goes directly to cities, to counties on this formula population-driven basis. The states get 20 percent. So certainly the states are going to be looking out for areas that are not receiving the direct funding through the pass-through from the federal government and are going to be looking within the state to make some tough decisions.

;;;;; The 500 million is going to be based on a discretionary formula that really looks at high-threat areas. You know, what are the places that have the -- you know, the biggest potential vulnerabilities? And there are many.

;;;;; Then the 1 billion, 45 million fund is a discretionary fund that will be totally up to the Department of Homeland Security, because part of what we're trying to do is to get the Department of Homeland Security to get more money in its pot. The president only gave them $50 million. We're trying to get more money, because that $50 million wouldn't go far at all.

;;;;; There's one additional factor that I think is especially important, because this is something I tried to get through the committee, when it passed out my version of this block grant I couldn't get, and that was that the money can go for overtime costs and personnel costs. There was a lot of resistance to that. But as we have seen, that's where the bulk of the money at the local community level is going. You know, when you go to Code Orange, you've got 12-hour shifts on, 12-hour shifts off. So that's another big breakthrough that I'm very happy about.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: I misspoke on the amount. The total amount is $4.8 billion, not 5. --

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: Or more.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: No, no, total amount of additional. So --

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Above the 2 billion --

;;;;; SEN. SCHUMER: The total's 9 billion.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: The total amount of this would be 9 billion.

;;;;; Q You're proposing in an amendment 4.8 --

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: That's correct.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: That adds on to the president's.

;;;;; Q President's total is now --

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: The president's is 4.2, and ours is 4.8 in addition to.

;;;;; Q More than double.

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Well, and which, not totally uncoincidentally, is the amount that is dedicated in the supplemental in assistance for countries abroad. Many of us strongly support that assistance. But it's -- certainly if we are going to provide that level of assistance in the needed ways which are represented in this budget, we believe as well that that kind of assistance ought to be directed towards the needs here at home. So there is a symmetry, in addition to a need, that we think is more than just symbolic.

;;;;; Jonathan?

;;;;; Q Senator Daschle, are you going to support the effort to add money to the supplemental for the airlines as well?

;;;;; And are you concerned that with that going along, $2 (billion), maybe $3 billion; another 4.8 (billion dollars) coming from you on homeland security; the possibility that this war may go on longer than originally anticipated, it could cost more money than the amount allocated to the military in the supplemental -- you've been concerned about the deficit; aren't you concerned that this is all adding up to too much money?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: (Laughs.) Well, the way to deal with it, of course, is to have addressed the tax cut last week in even a more consequential way than we did. The $1.6 trillion the House is still advocating for a tax cut is the source of the problem. Obviously we're concerned about the costs here. As I understand it, our Republican colleagues will be adding some assistance for airlines and we will have an amendment to that which directs aid to workers, as well, extending their unemployment benefits beyond that which they are entitled to now. But yes, there is a significant cost question here that has to be of concern to all of us. But in a magnitude of scale, this is minor compared to the extraordinary costs involved with the tax cut Republicans are still pressing.

;;;;; Q Senator Daschle, this is to clarify the airline question. So, you're talking about additional money to what the Republicans are talking about for the airlines for the unemployment?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Well, the only additional will be the unemployment compensation for airline workers. Senator Murray is offering that amendment. I don't know how much additional amount that is.

;;;;; Q Will there be anything else that you guys are talking about --

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Not that I know -- not that I'm aware. We've listed the amendments that you have available to you today.

;;;;; Q Senator Daschle, what do you think about the Republican proposal to add to the airline package a cap on executive compensation for companies that benefit under this new tranche of money?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: I haven't looked at -- I want to see it in writing. I haven't seen it yet, so before I can comment on it, I'd like to see it more specifically.

;;;;; Helen?

;;;;; Q I'm sorry -- is it headed in the right direction, though, given previous concerns about the airlines --

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: Well, I think we want to provide some balance here. I don't know -- as I say, this may not be the right vehicle, it may not be the right language. I want to take a look at it before I comment. But certainly, we want to make sure that there is a recognition of the need for balance here.

;;;;; Helen?

;;;;; Q Are you concerned about regional pressures here and particularly the small states that have benefited under the present formula and whether they would get proportionally as much here? And have you done any missionary work on that -- (laughs) --

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: I think our colleagues have done an admirable job in recognizing the nationwide nature of these issues, recognizing that we may have somewhat different needs in South Dakota than they have in New York, that there are areas that have higher vulnerability and we have to address those. I don't feel as vulnerable when I'm in South Dakota, frankly. But that doesn't mean we don't have significant issues and concerns that have to be addressed even in rural states like mine. So this package of amendments attempts to address that need for balance and that need for geographical sensitivity.

;;;;; Nick?

;;;;; Q Yeah, I'm not sure you answered Jonathan's first question. Are you going to support the Republican effort to add money to the airline industry?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: It's already in the bill. I mean, somebody would have to offer an amendment to take it out. So it will be in the bill.

;;;;; Q You will not seek to strip that out?

;;;;; SEN. DASCHLE: No.

;;;;; Q And a second question following on what Helen just asked. I write for the L.A. Times and I'm sure Los Angeles is very interested in all this first responder money and California's very interested in it.

;;;;; SEN. CLINTON: Right.

;;;;; Q And you mentioned New York and Washington, but is Los Angeles going to be considered a high need area, as well?

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Tuesday, April 2, 2003

*****KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS IN PHILADELPHIA, 3-31-03*****

*It has been 13 days since the major ground war began. In this short time, Coalition forces have taken control of most of western and southern Iraq, seized key bridges, opened a northern front, achieved complete air superiority, and we are delivering tons of humanitarian aid.

*By quick and decisive action, our troops are preventing Saddam Hussein from destroying the Iraqi people's oil fields. Our forces moved into Iraqi missile launch areas that threatened neighboring countries. Many dangers lie ahead, but day by day, we are moving closer to Baghdad and closer to victory.

*Our victory will mean the end of a tyrant who rules by fear and torture and will remove a sponsor of terror, armed with weapons of terror. Our victory will uphold the just demands of the United Nations and the civilized world. And when victory comes, it will be shared by the long-suffering people of Iraq, who deserve freedom and dignity.

*The Iraqi regime has ruled with fear as a tool of domination to the end. Many Iraqis have been ordered to fight or die by Saddam's death squads. Others are pressed into service by threats against their children. Civilians attempting to flee to liberated areas have been shot from behind by Saddam's thugs.

*Our enemies are desperate and dangerous. The dying regime in Iraq and other parts of the global terror network may try to bring terror to American shores. The United States and allied troops are shattering the al Qaeda network, meeting threats and acting to prevent dangers.

*The people of Iraq have lived in this nightmare world for more than two decades. Fear and distrust run deep.

*We give this pledge to the citizens of Iraq: We're coming with a mighty force to end the reign of your oppressors. We are coming to bring you food and medicine and a better life, and we will not relent until your country is free.

*****NEW PERSPECTIVES*****

Reflections of individuals who traveled to Iraq to act as human shields

"I was shocked when I first met a pro-war Iraqi in Baghdad - a taxi driver taking me back to my hotel late at night. I explained that I was American and said, as we shields always did, 'Bush bad, war bad, Iraq good.' He looked at me with an expression of incredulity. As he realized I was serious, he slowed down and started to speak in broken English about the evils of Saddam's regime. Until then I had only heard the President spoken of with respect, but now this guy was telling me how all of Iraq's oil money went into Saddam's pocket and that if you opposed him politically he would kill your whole family."

HEADLINE: RACE-NEUTRAL ADMISSIONS;
BUSH AIDE URGES SEEKING DIVERSITY WITHOUT QUOTAS

DATELINE: LEXINGTON

BODY:
Colleges and universities should try to maintain diverse student bodies with race-neutral admissions, President Bush's counsel said yesterday.

On the eve of the U.S. Supreme Court taking up the controversial affirmative-action cases out of the University of Michigan, Alberto R. Gonzales addressed the topic at Washington and Lee University's School of Law.

Gonzales said Bush believes in diversity in admissions and hiring, but that institutions should use race-neutral methods first.

"It allows the court to avoid the difficult and divisive question of whether race can ever be a factor in university admissions," he said.

He cited as race-neutral models the admissions policies of Texas, Florida and California.

Gonzales gave the lecture for the Washington and Lee law school's first Powell Lecture, created to bring pre-eminent legal scholars to the school for a public address.

The entirely student-run lecture program is named in honor of Lewis F. Powell Jr., a Washington and Lee alumnus who served as a Supreme Court justice for 15 years.

Powell graduated from Washington and Lee's undergraduate college in 1929 and its law school in 1931. Appointed to the Supreme Court in 1972, he rendered opinions in key cases involving abortion, the death penalty and affirmative action.

One of the key cases in Powell's career marked the last time affirmative action came before the high court. While the court ruled 5-4 against racial quotas in the case of California medical-school candidate Allan Bakke, Powell wrote an opinion saying that admissions policies could take race into consideration - endorsing a form of affirmative action.

Before working in the White House, Gonzales served as a justice of the Texas Supreme Court and as Texas' secretary of state under then-Gov. George W. Bush.

As a personal adviser to Bush on legal matters, Gonzales works with lawyers in the Department of Justice, the CIA and the State Department, among others.

His name has also been mentioned in connection with possible future U.S. Supreme Court vacancies.

Just a thought, but since the records he's asking to copy are on a WHO computer (and presumably, the computer contains additional records from his time as a WHO employee -- i.e., prior to working at TPO), then doesn't he need to follow the procedures outlined in the WHO memo?

I don't have a copy of the WHO memo handy, but here's an excerpt from Phil's memo to TPO employees that touches on this subject:

White House Documents (applies to all TPO employees):
When TPO was created, the White House Counsel's Office made special arrangements for handling documents from "White House" entities that were temporarily provided to TPO personnel (OMB is not a "White House" entity under relevant law).; Those arrangements (addressed in depth in earlier memoranda from the White House Counsel's Office) applied generally to emails and other documents from OHS and other White House entities.; Those materials should already have blue cover sheets and/or bear the legend "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure."
Please return all such materials to the White House entity from which they originated by routing them through Ken Hill, Executive Secretary for TPO. You should not take copies of any materials from White House entities with you, unless you receive clearance to do so by Ed McNally, OHS General Counsel.;
If you have any questions regarding the treatment of materials from White House entities, please contact Ed McNally at 6-1700.

Jennifer Beverly (our government customer support rep at 1800 G St) says that Steve Cooper is refusing to relinquish possession of his WHO (OHS); PC. He wants a CD of the data burned first. When he requested the CD originally, they went to his TPO computer, but there was no data on it. It seems he was using his WHO computer for his TPO work. So now he;has stated he will not give us back the WHO PC until he gets a CD burned of the data on the hard drive of the WHO computer. Jennifer has emailed Faisal since it is way past the agreed upon date, but has not heard back yet. #### JUDICIARY

Hatch Drafting New Asbestos Litigation Reform Legislation

Aides to Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch were drafting and vetting new concepts for asbestos litigation reform legislation Tuesday, the rough outlines of which Hatch sketched at a private meeting last week with insurance and other business executives.

Industry lobbyists were chewing over Hatch's proposals Tuesday at various meetings and conference calls around town, as they and other stakeholders were poised to meet privately with senators that evening to continue the legislative conversation.

That meeting was organized by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and included a larger circle of interested players from the insurance industry, from defendant companies and also from labor, the trial bar and from the broader legal community.

Hatch and Senate Democrats publicly and privately have emphasized the importance of keeping the legislation bipartisan, and sources asserted that Dodd, Hatch, Senate Judiciary ranking member Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and Sen. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, already are working closely together.

Sources said that the Dodd "summit," as it was billed, included some heated exchanges, including one between representatives for the American Bar Association and the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, but that it ended on a positive note.

Aspects of the Hatch proposal were alluded to, but not directly discussed during the meeting, several attendees said. One source described the tenor of the entire discussion as more "philosophical" than legislative in nature.

Many sources agreed that the summit had been somewhat overtaken by events -- namely Hatch's meeting last week in which he established a new set of parameters for legislation, which his aides have since been "furiously" trying to flesh out, one source said.

Still, participants welcomed yet another opportunity at Tuesday's forum to "open up" the process, another source added.

Reform proponents were even more heartened to see the bipartisan nature of the meeting, which in addition to Dodd, included Hatch, Leahy and Sens. Thomas Carper, D-Del., DeWine and Patty Murray, D-Wash.

Murray made a pitch for a litigation reform bill to include legislation she authored last year banning the use of asbestos-containing products.

Attendees said each of the senators and most summit participants agreed that the current asbestos litigation system is in need of repair and that a legislative solution is required this year -- before the Senate's agenda gives way to the political vagaries of the 2004 election cycle.

The new legislative direction being tested by Hatch encompasses elements of proposals earlier suggested by others, but is meant to provide a way through the stalemate that had hindered consensus.

According to several sources, the cornerstone of Hatch's plan is the creation of a "specialized court" of federal claims, or a federally established resolution body for dealing with asbestos claims, which in turn could include an administrative component, such as a trust fund.

Sources said Hatch envisions two "blue-ribbon" commissions, one for defendant companies and one for their insurers, being created to determine annual allocations among the various contributors to a fund that would be used to compensate victims.

Hatch's plan also calls for limited judicial review of the funding allocation and claimant compensation as determined by that expert body, sources familiar with the plan said.

Hatch apparently also agrees that some sort of medical criteria would need to be applied to deter frivolous claims and to ensure that the sickest of victims can quickly and easily get compensation; however, sources said the specifics of that criteria remained up in the air.

Sources said Hatch also is adamant that companies that have been targeted in the past "aren't required to pay twice" and that insurers pay in an "equitable" manner. Contributions would be flexible, based on funding needs and also would be subject to an annual cap, sources said.

A Hatch spokeswoman was not available at presstime Tuesday evening to confirm these points.

Hatch is soliciting interest group input during this exploratory portion of the legislative process, which sources said is a precursor to more formal drafting efforts Hatch has indicated would take place in earnest over the April recess.

Hatch, who has repeatedly challenged the interested parties to put aside their preconceived notions and disputes over what the legislation ought to look like, is aiming for a May markup.

Said Julie Rochman of the American Insurance Association as she left Tuesday's packed meeting: "The Hill owns this process now, they're driving it. And everybody downtown should be doing everything they can to respond to that." By Pamela Barnett

JOINT PRESS CONFERENCE BY TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTER ABDULLAH GUL AND SECRETARY OF STATE COLIN POWELL FOLLOWING THEIR MEETING

ANKARA, TURKEY
6:45 A.M. EST, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2003

FOREIGN MINISTER ABDULLAH GUL: (Through Translator) We are very pleased to host Secretary Powell -- (inaudible) -- but we are very pleased to see him in Turkey as the Turkish government and also the Turkish people. The visit of Secretary Powell has been very timely in answering those criticisms about the -- (inaudible) -- of the Turkish-American relations. I would like to state that the Turkish- American relations are based on very strong foundations, they are deeply rooted, and they are based on half a century of friendship. And our friendship with the United States have also been mentioned in our consecutive government programs.

;;;;; (Inaudible) -- up to the situation in Afghanistan. Currently we have a war in the region, which could not be prevented, unfortunately, and we hope that this war in Iraq does not last long, and it ends, it results with minimal casualties for all sides.

;;;;; (Inaudible) -- coalition efforts. And the cooperation that has been conducted with the United States is within the framework of the Turkish constitutions and undertaken upon the decisions of the governments. You know -- you all know about the decision to allow over-flights for coalition airplanes over Turkey, and the cooperation within these frameworks will continue with the United States.

;;;;; (Inaudible) -- the cooperation between Turkey and the United States will continue. The cooperation, the means for further cooperation with the United States have been discussed in today's talks, and foremost the issue of humanitarian assistance was taken up, and other means of cooperation were also looked into. And the cooperation in northern Iraq was also taken up.

;;;;; This cooperation between the United States and Turkey will continue -- (inaudible) -- of Iraq as well. And new doors will open for us in the future. The model nature of Turkey with its democracy, its free-market economy, is a model for all in the region, and this reciprocal assistance will continue.

;;;;; (Inaudible) -- of Secretary Powell has strengthened our relations, and it has increased the opportunities for future cooperation between both nations. And I would like to state that this visit has -- (inaudible) -- issues with regards to the relations between both countries.

;;;;; SECRETARY OF STATE COLIN POWELL: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

It's a great pleasure to be back in Turkey. And I have found that our conversations have been very fruitful, the conversations that you and I have had as well as my conversations with the president and the prime minister, and I look forward to my conversations later this afternoon with the general staff.

;;;;; Will you be translating or not? Do you need translation?

;;;;; FOR. MIN. GUL: Well, no the translator -- (inaudible) --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Okay. Let me reaffirm what the minister said. The U.S.-Turkish relationship is a strong one. It has endured for over 50 years, and we have been with each other and for each other in war and peace over that 50-year period. We especially treasure our relationship within the NATO alliance.

;;;;; Turkey is an important member of the coalition that is now aligned against the regime of Saddam Hussein. We were all disappointed, both the United States and the Turkish government, when we were unable to obtain the approval of the Turkish parliament on the first of March for the large package that we wanted to move through Turkey, but as a result of flexible planning a great deal of skill on the part of our commanders, we have been able to work around that, and we are now deeply appreciative of the over-flight clearances that have been provided by the parliament and the Turkish government.

;;;;; The minister and I discussed other areas of cooperation, other needs we have now to sustain the forces, coalition forces that are operating in northern Iraq, and we have solved all of the outstanding issues with respect to providing supplies through Turkey to those units that are doing such a wonderful job in northern Iraq to keep the situation in northern Iraq stable.

;;;;; As the minister noted, we also agreed on means by which we can expedite the provision of humanitarian aid into northern Iraq and construction aid into northern Iraq as the beginning of what I hope will be a very productive relationship between Turkey and Iraq as Iraq, after the conflict, goes about the process of rebuilding its society, rebuilding its country under new leadership, under a new government committed to democracy and protecting all of the people of Iraq. Turkey will have an important role to play in this reconstruction effort, not only helping with direct reconstruction help, but also by the example that Turkey will provide to Iraq of a democracy -- a Muslim democracy living in peace with its friends and neighbors, and hopefully that is the kind of Iraq we will be creating.

;;;;; We also had a chance to discuss at some length concerns that Turkey has with respect to the situation in northern Iraq. As we all know, Turkey has been concerned about a potential rush of refugees toward the border, as well as terrorist attacks that might be directed toward Turkey, or an extension of control out of the Kurdish areas towards the south. In each one of these situations, I think we have been able to demonstrate to our Turkish friends that we are monitoring the situation closely, we have it under control, and therefore at the moment there is no need for any movement of Turkish forces across the border. We have agreed today that we will rapidly form a coordination committee so that we monitor this closely, and we will also develop ways in the next several days to ensure that we understand how we would respond to a problem that might arise in northern Iraq that might affect Turkish interests. All of this I think is in the spirit of cooperation, and it shows how Turkey is working so closely with the coalition.

;;;;; I gave the minister and the president and prime minister an update on the campaign, Operation Iraqi Freedom. It is progressing well. It is a campaign that is being conducted with great skill and determination by coalition military forces. With each passing day, the Iraqi military becomes weaker and coalition forces become stronger, and it is just a matter of time before this conflict is brought to a successful end and we can get on to the business of helping the Iraqi people build a better country, a better society, under democratic rule, creation a nation that will live in peace with its neighbors, that will use the wealth of Iraq, its oil, to benefit its people and not to develop weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;; We also discussed other aspects of our bilateral relations. We talked about the request that the president has put into the supplemental for $1 billion to serve as an indication of America's willingness to provide support to Turkey, to take any of the economic shock that might come from this current situation out of their economic system, something for them not to have to worry about because we'll be able to provide some assistance through this supplemental.

;;;;; And we also discussed the situation in Cyprus and our desire to see some progress in the days ahead, even though we had a setback some -- a few weeks ago.

;;;;; So, all in all, I think it's been a very productive trip that reinforces the U.S.-Turkish relationship. And now I think the minister and I would be prepared to take some of your questions.

;;;;; Barry.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, can you --

;;;;; (CROSS-TALK.)

;;;;; Q I think you can hear me -- can I --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Hang on. We'll --

;;;;; Q All right. Thank you. Can you give any other -- you were quite specific, but could you give more instances of enhanced Turkish cooperation on the military side? For instance, we are hearing more help in rescue operations. And so far as this coordination, this council, or this ongoing body, where do you get the Kurdish input into this? How do you make sure from the Kurdish side that there will be, you know, a lessening of tensions, no rush to the border?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: With respect to the kind of support we're getting, our principal area of discussion today had to do with supplies -- food, fuel, other kinds of supplies that might go in. Once we are able to set up our forces in northern Iraq, then some of the issues with respect to search and rescue will be dealt with because it could be handled out of northern Iraq. On other matters, I know that the Turkish government will always act in a humanitarian way with respect to anybody who might be in distress at a particular time.

;;;;; With respect to the coordination group, we are working on that, and I hope in the next several days -- within a week is the goal we put on ourselves this morning -- within a week we will have solved the issue of representation within the coordination group. And frankly, tensions have been lessened.

;;;;; I think the concerns that everybody saw a few weeks ago that gave rise to all of these stories about "an incursion has occurred," "it's about to occur," "things are going in the wrong direction," turned out not to be the case, as a result of close consultation, and as a result of the presence of our military personnel in the north and the control that is being exercised by General Franks in the region and our relationship with the Kurds, we have been able to stabilize the situation in a way that I think will keep the likelihood of a need for an incursion very much under control and a low probability.

;;;;; Nevertheless, since one can't predict what might happen in the future, that's why we also agreed today to create a process by which we will get early warning of a potential problem and begin responding as soon as we get early warning, and how the two sides could work together to deal with a situation that might arise.

;;;;; Q (Translator) (Inaudible) -- the United States in the region -- (inaudible) -- humanitarian and the humanitarian field we understand will also extend to the logistics fields, and there is a request in this direction. Can we understand from your comments that the requests of the United States will be met? And my second question is today, a hospital in Baghdad was hit, and as the war continues, we notice that more and more civilian targets has been hit. Can you comment on that please?

;;;;; FOR. MIN. GUL: (Through translator) (Inaudible) -- the fields of providing food stuff and fuel and other humanitarian assistance facilities to the United States will continue, and these all will take place within the mutual understanding between both sides. For instance, we have been allowing airplanes in distress to land in Turkish airfields, and also for the evacuation of wounded people from the region to be brought in. So, these are the assistance.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: I'm not aware of the specific incident that you made reference to, but I do know that our commanders are conducting this campaign in a way that is designed to minimize the loss of innocent life or the destruction of property. As you look at these scenes on your television set, I think you will realize that we have been as careful as possible, as surgical as possible, as we can be in going after military targets and going after command and control targets that support the military forces of Iraq. And that will continue to be our policy. And we regret any loss of life that might occur, either through our action, innocent loss of life that might occur through our action, and also the action of Iraqi units that often fire indiscriminately and air defense missiles that go up and then come down and cause damage within built-up areas. But I am not aware of the specific incident that you are making reference to.

;;;;; Q (Many questions being shouted out.)

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: I'm sorry?

;;;;; Q What is your reaction to the American POW being freed?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Well, I'm absolutely delighted, and it is a great joy to her family that she is now free, and it also tested the skill of our soldiers in being able to get to her and release her. I'm very, very pleased, of course.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.)

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Yes, we always regret loss of life. War is a terrible thing, to be avoided. This war was caused by Saddam Hussein and his unwillingness to comply with his international obligations, a dictator who tortured people, who has brought devastation and destruction to his country, who developed weapons of mass destruction. And once this regime is gone, a better regime will be put in place -- not just put in place, really, will create itself, will rise up. We will help it. But this will be a regime that comes up, it will be a government that comes up out of the Iraqi people, representing all of the Iraqi people. And we will help this government rise up, and it is a government that we're confident will lead Iraq into a brighter future and create a country and a system that will live in peace with its neighbors, and use a wealth of the nation to support the people and not to support the weapons of mass destruction.

;;;;; Q (Translator) First question -- (inaudible) -- cooperation to take place from now on? Will there be a need for another motion? And the second question, to Secretary Powell, is have you totally given up on the northern option? Is that no longer an option?

;;;;; FOR. MIN. GUL: (Through translator) (Inaudible) -- and whatever assistance that will be provided from now is within the jurisdiction of the council of ministers of the government, therefore another motion will not be needed.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: The norther option has changed shape. Instead of using the 4th Division for that purpose, we have put special forces teams into the north, and the 173rd Airborne Brigade. Whether other forces might at some point be introduced or not, or they'll be coming up from the south, I will leave to the military commanders to decide. We are just now executing the northern option, that part of the campaign, in a different way than had originally been planned. But our planning is flexible, and we respond to events as they occur, and I think we're conducting this campaign in a very efficient way, and I have utmost confidence in our campaign plan and in the commanders who are executing it.

;;;;; Thank you.

END.

You Don't Need Quotas

Expanding opportunity without discrimination.

By Jeb Bush

 As the Supreme Court considers the University of Michigan case, our state of Florida offers an inviting alternative to traditional race-based programs that are coming under growing constitutional scrutiny nationwide.

Just over four years ago, our state launched the One Florida initiative with the ambitious goal of increasing opportunity and diversity in Florida's state universities and in state contracting, without relying on the divisive policies of the past such as quotas, racial preferences, and set-asides. The One Florida initiative is designed to level the education playing field for all Floridians by providing rewarding school experiences to all students regardless of race, gender, ethnicity, or zip code. We have broadened the search for talented minorities through greater outreach and recruitment, and increased access for and success of underrepresented students while employing race-neutral admissions criteria. Since 1999, we have pursued policies that empower and prepare all of our students while simultaneously targeting assistance to the most needy. The result has been that minority enrollment at our state universities has either risen or held steady under One Florida, including at our flagship universities. Our record of success clearly demonstrates that diversity can be attained through race-neutral means.

In stark contrast, the University of Michigan continues to use race as a determining factor for admissions at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. More specifically, the university awards extra points to minority candidates at the undergraduate level, while the law school uses race as one of the factors that can greatly enhance an applicant's chance of admission. Regardless of how one tries to explain the rationale behind the university's policy, this system is fundamentally flawed. As President Bush pointed out, the Michigan program "amounts to a quota system that unfairly rewards or penalizes prospective students solely on their race."

For those in search of a solution, we offer the One Florida approach. In striving to achieve greater diversity in our state universities, my administration never lost sight of two guiding principles: 1) Diversity is a worthy goal, and 2) Outreach and encouragement at the K-12 level is the key to success. As governor of one of the most racially diverse states in the country, I know firsthand that our classrooms and workplaces benefit greatly when opportunity is extended to all. By strengthening the pre-college education experience for all students, we can maintain and increase diversity without a formulaic, one-size-fits-all approach that serves no one's best interest. From the outset, I challenged all university presidents and admissions officers to implement new ways of reaching out to and recruiting minority students to maintain a diverse student population. Today, each of Florida's eleven public universities has established Opportunity Alliances with high schools that have high minority populations, relatively high proportions of dropouts, and relatively low performance on standardized tests. Students in these schools are now being actively recruited while curriculum reform strengthens their high-school experience. In addition, my administration has doubled funding for need-based financial aid over the past four years to help ensure access and the ability to pay for college go hand-in-hand.

In addition, we have entered into a partnership with the College Board to expand AP course opportunities statewide for students in low performing schools, provide free SAT test prep classes for low-income students, and free PSAT or PLAN testing for all tenth graders. The results speak for themselves: In the 2002-03 class of undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in the State University System, minorities comprise 36.2 percent of all new students and 23.5 percent of all new graduate students, respectively. In addition, from 2001-2002, the number of African-American and Hispanic students who took AP Examinations increased by 21 percent and 22 percent, respectively. Both of these increases are higher than the averages for U.S. public schools, as are the numbers of African-American and Hispanic students in Florida with scores of 3 or higher on the AP Examinations.

We are committed to diversity here in Florida, but it must be achieved in ways that both comply with the Constitution and truly benefit our students. Our track record under One Florida proves that it can be achieved through race-neutral means. Florida's programs, and the principles that they advance, are more than just another way of accomplishing true diversity. They provide a better way. Florida's plan is better in that it no longer accepts the lack of quality in the public schools that serve our underprivileged children; better because it encourages all students regardless of race or economic status to aspire to post-secondary education; and better because it looks forward to a day when racial classifications and separate standards are no longer deemed necessary by anyone.

— Jeb Bush is the governor (R.) of Florida.

Just a thought, but since the records he's asking to copy are on a WHO computer (and presumably, the computer contains additional records from his time as a WHO employee -- i.e., prior to working at TPO), then doesn't he need to follow the procedures outlined in the WHO memo?

I don't have a copy of the WHO memo handy, but here's an excerpt from Phil's memo to TPO employees that touches on this subject:

White House Documents (applies to all TPO employees):

When TPO was created, the White House Counsel's Office made special arrangements for handling documents from "White House" entities that were temporarily provided to TPO personnel (OMB is not a "White House" entity under relevant law). Those arrangements (addressed in depth in earlier memoranda from the White House Counsel's Office) applied generally to emails and other documents from OHS and other White House entities. Those materials should already have blue cover sheets and/or bear the legend "White House-controlled Material/Protected from Disclosure."

Please return all such materials to the White House entity from which they originated by routing them through Ken Hill, Executive Secretary for TPO.

You should not take copies of any materials from White House entities with you, unless you receive clearance to do so by Ed McNally, OHS General Counsel.

If you have any questions regarding the treatment of materials from White House entities, please contact Ed McNally at 6-1700.

Jennifer Beverly (our government customer support rep at 1800 G St) says that Steve Cooper is refusing to relinquish possession of his WHO (OHS) PC. He wants a CD of the data burned first. When he requested the CD originally, they went to his TPO computer, but there was no data on it. It seems he was using his WHO computer for his TPO work. So now he has stated he will not give us back the WHO PC until he gets a CD burned of the data on the hard drive of the WHO computer. Jennifer has emailed Faisal since it is way past the agreed upon date, but has not heard back yet. Evidently, Cooper is putting on a lot of pressure on this issue, and Jennifer says he is getting nasty about it. We are trying to verify whether he still has a WHO laptop. Does this need WHO and OHS (HSC) counsel concurrence? Just need some guidance. Thanks. Bart

For Kennedy aide, it?s d?j? vu all over again

By Geoff Earle

In 1967, Jim Flug, a young ambitious Brooklyn-bred, Harvard-trained lawyer, left his job with the Justice Department to work for Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), who he saw as ?the most exciting person to work for on the Hill.?

Kennedy was already making an impact in Congress five years after having been elected in 1962 to the seat held by his brother, who was assassinated in Dallas in 1963.

Now, at 64, Flug has re-enlisted to do more or less the same job that he left 30 years ago ? working for the same senator on the same committee, and even fighting some of the same battles.

Flug spent the intervening years building a substantial private law practice. He represented an association of state attorneys general and performed public-interest lobbying and legal work for generic drug companies.

Republicans, who have already had their troubles facing down Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, will no doubt soon take note of Flug, who served a key strategist behind some tough nomination fights in the late 1960s.

The top echelon of the Kennedy staff, then and now rated among the best on Capitol Hill, exhibits a profound passion for anonymity, although some alumni, including Supreme Court Justice Steven Breyer, have gone on to fame and fortune.

Flug is no exception, The father of three grown daughters is not known as a self-effacing man, but in a reluctant and unusual interview, he invariably steered the conversation to his old and new boss, in the finest tradition of a loyal Kennedy aide.

Nor did he did not mention that he took time off from his law practice to serve as Kennedy's campaign press secretary in his futile presidential primary race against Jimmy Carter in 1980.

Not long ago, Flug decided he would come back to the Hill if he got the chance. When Kennedy approached him recently and suggested he return, "I didn't have to think about it very long," he said. "It was an extraordinary opportunity to maybe repeat history."

So Flug, who served as Kennedy's counsel on the Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on administrative practice and procedure for nearly seven years, returned this month to serve as his counsel on the full committee. Like his iconic boss, Flug's hair has grayed but his desire to shape some of the most important issues of the day endures.

There is no shortage of bright young lawyers that Kennedy could have tapped for the job. But Kennedy prefers having seasoned staffers to handle judiciary and civil-rights issues. Melody Barnes, another longtime aide, left as chief counsel of the immigration subcommittee after more than seven years.

She has joined The Raben Group, where she will handle a variety of corporate and public-interest clients at the boutique law and lobbying firm headed by Robert Raben. Barnes joined Kennedy after a stint at House Judiciary and in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. "They always say, once you're in the Kennedy family, you don't get out," she joked.

In Flug, Kennedy has brought back a battle-tested staffer who can draw on lessons learned in six and a half years on the job ? during the nearly forgotten era of Watergate and Vietnam.

In a reluctant interview about a week into his new job, Flug had yet to fully unpack his boxes of files. Stacked on his desk were four thick, marbled volumes of the Judiciary Committee hearings over Richard Kleindienst, President Richard Nixon's second attorney general -- not exactly the favored reading material of a typical Hill staffer.

Flug explained that he was going back over the old hearings to see if they are relevant to the committee's hearings on Miguel Estrada, President Bush's controversial choice for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Flug was at Kennedy's side during big fights over civil-rights legislation, the creation of new social programs and the war in Vietnam. He said he got his first sense of Kennedy's impact and style when fighting efforts to roll back the Supreme Court ruling in Baker v. Carr, a landmark redistricting case.

Kennedy teamed with Republican Howard Baker (R-Tenn.) to reassert the principle of "one man, one vote" in the drawing of congressional districts and helped beat back attempts to allow states to draw districts with dramatically different populations.

"That was my introduction to both the scope of his interest, the strength of his feeling on constitutional issues, his ability to make alliances across the aisle, and his willingness to do tough things," Flug said.

Flug recalled with a chuckle that his counterpart on Baker's staff in the effort was a young legislative assistant named Lamar Alexander, who returned to the Capitol as a senator this year. "We were working side by side together the whole time," said Flug. "I saw him come back, and I figured I had to come back."

During the turbulent '60s, the political fights were no less important than they are today. Among the issues that Flug had a hand in shaping on Kennedy's staff were civil rights, gun control, crime, civil liberties and judicial nominations, where he helped defeat two Nixon appointees.

Flug recalled heated nomination fights over G. Harrold Carswell, Nixon's nominee for the Supreme Court. An alliance of Democrats, including Kennedy, had joined with several Republicans to turn back the earlier nomination of Clement Haynsworth, a conservative North Carolina appeals court judge. At that point, Flug said, "basically, Nixon and [attorney general John] Mitchell said, 'We'll rub their noses in it -- we'll come up with somebody even worse,'" prompting a subsequent fight over Carswell's nomination.

Kennedy then teamed with then-Sens. Phil Hart (D-Mich.), Birch Bayh

(D-Ind.), and Joseph Tydings (D-Md.) to defeat Carswell. Flug has been credited with spearheading the effort. "In each of these cases, it was always the Republican votes that made the difference," said Flug. "The senator was very good at forging those alliances. It was a very, very exciting place to work."

Adam Clymer's biography of Kennedy notes that Flug organized the opposition to Carswell, at one point crafting a memo to his boss calling Carswell "a mediocre candidate with no indications of particular intelligence, leadership, insight, or respect among his brethren."

Flug said the fight over Estrada is just as much about congressional prerogatives as it is about his conservative ideology. "The Estrada nomination is more about the Senate as an institution," he said. "Can the White House select someone whom they know everything about and the Senate knows nothing about?" he asked.

Flug said his old boss hasn't changed much over the years. He said that in the '60s, Kennedy was a "glutton for work" and took home "piles and piles" of material to study up for the Baker v. Carr fight. "It's exactly like that today" on the fight over Estrada, he said. He said he hopes to use his own institutional knowledge and memory to remind Kennedy of some historical analogies that can be put to good use.

Despite the fierce battles over civil rights, Flug said, bipartisan relations were better on the committee in the past.

Kennedy made a point of tending to relations with the committee's chairman, Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss.), who joined in the Southern conservative opposition to many of the civil-rights initiatives pushed by the minority of liberal Democrats.

"Their personal relationship was fabulous," he said. "Procedurally, it was always smooth sailing."

Flug said that staff relations on Judiciary at the time were humorous and relaxed and that he can't think of a time when there was any hostility. In recent years, relations between Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), the current chairman, and Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), the ranking Democrat, have grown frostier.

A few weeks ago, Hatch scheduled a vote on a nomination even though Democrats wanted to continue debate, causing the Democrats to charge that he had violated history and precedent.

?That was not the kind of ambience I remember,? Flug said. ?I still have some hope that what I remember from 30 years ago ? comity and equity ? will rule the day.?

Flug said that Kennedy has learned the value of incremental changes and ?how to get what can be gotten.? Now, ?people have really recognized him as the supreme legislator.?

But even Kennedy?s outsized reputation does not guarantee victory. Flug said he regrets that Kennedy?s relatively lonely crusade in opposition to the war in Iraq garnered scant press attention, and he faulted some editorial boards for failing to champion the antiwar movement as they once did.

But that won?t keep either Kennedy or Flug from speaking up. ?He likes uphill battles, and I like uphill battles,? Flug said.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Thursday, April 3, 2003

*****KEY POINTS*****

*Progress continues in the war to end the regime of Saddam Hussein. As we close in on Baghdad, our forces - air and ground - are performing superbly, but we must remember that some of the toughest fighting could still lie ahead.

*We must not forget that the Iraqi regime has a history of killing hundreds of thousands of Muslims in Iraq, including the thousands of Shia Muslims who rose up after the Gulf War.

*We are showing more respect for a prominent mosque in Najaf than Iraqi forces. Against all international laws of war, Saddam 's forces are using the mosque as a military fortress. Coalition troops have not fired back - and will continue to work to avoid civilian casualties and protect Iraq's holy sites.

*More than mosques are being mistreated by the Iraqi regime. Coalition forces in An Najat found a school in which the Iraqi regime had stashed weapons and many rounds of ammunition.

*Iraqi people are coming forward with vital information about the enemy.. They approach our troops and tell them where the enemy is hiding, where weapons are hidden, where torture chambers are, where bodies are buried..

*****NEW PERSPECTIVES*****

Excerpt from an interview with Essam Al-Ghalib, an Arab News correspondent, NPR
4-1-03

Renee Montagne (NPR): "Speaking to people who live in Basra, were you able to ascertain what their feelings were about Saddam Hussein, about the American-led troops?"

Mr. Al-Ghalib : "When we went in [Basra] there was a humanitarian relief truck from the Kuwaiti Red Crescent Society. Along with it were a lot of media, a lot of cameras. So as we went in, people were shouting loudly this chant that we've heard many, many times, which was, 'Without blood, without souls, we will die for you, Saddam.'

"And this struck me as being a little odd. So I took this 19-year-old aside, away from the cameras and asked him, 'Why are you guys chanting this, especially that all the relief is coming from Kuwait?' They said, 'On camera we have to always show our support for Saddam because if the US or the UK troops decide to withdraw, then Saddam is going to come and he's going to slaughter families and individuals of those who have voiced any opposition for him.'"

*****TODAY'S SCHEDULE*****

All Times Eastern Standard. Subject to Change

7:00 am CENTCOM Operations Update

11:30 am President Bush remarks at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina

1:30 pm Defense Department Briefing

*****COALITION HUMANITARIAN UPDATE*****

*On Wednesday, America contributed $200 million to the UN World Food Program, which will be used to procure 324,000 metric tons of food that will feed more than 23 million Iraqi people for one month.

*The first shipments of U.S. humanitarian food aid are leaving ports in the U.S. this week bound for Iraq with more than 28,000 metric tons of American wheat. These shipments are enough to feed 4.5 million Iraqis for one month.

*New water pipeline in southern Iraq has the capacity to produce 2.3 million liters of water per day.

*Disaster Assistance Response Teams (DART) have identified "pockets of humanitarian need in Iraq, but there is not a massive humanitarian crisis."

*****IN CASE YOU MISSED IT*****

Excerpt from a briefing by Deputy Defense Secretary Wolfowitz, 3-28-03

"The word 'democracy' gets used kind of freely, but if you look around the world, there are 75 different variants of democracy. I think the essential idea is that the government has to represent the people. It has to respect the people through the rule of law. It has to provide for their freedom. And I think when this regime is gone and Iraqis are free to express themselves, that process will take place in a natural way."

Military blogger L.T. Smash recounts a televised vignette that requires no further comment:

Martin Savidge of CNN, embedded with the 1st Marine battalion, was talking with 4 young Marines near his foxhole this morning live on CNN. He had been telling the story of how well the Marines had been looking out for and taking care of him since the war started. He went on to tell about the many hardships the Marines had endured since the war began and how they all look after one another.

He turned to the four and said he had cleared it with their commanders and they could use his video phone to call home.

The 19 year old Marine next to him asked Martin if he would allow his platoon sergeant to use his call to call his pregnant wife back home whom he had not been able to talk to in three months. A stunned Savidge who was visibly moved by the request shook his head and the young Marine ran off to get the sergeant.

Savidge recovered after a few seconds and turned back to the three young Marines still sitting with him and asked which one of them would like to call home first, the Marine closest to him responded with out a moments hesitation "Sir, if is all the same to you we would like to call the parents of a buddy of ours, Lance Cpl Brian Buesing of Cedar Key, Florida who was killed on 3-23-03 near Nasiriya to see how they are doing." At that Martin Savidge totally broke down and was unable to speak. All he could get out before signing off was "Where do they get young men like this?"

No, everyone is trying to reports from the cloakroom, they are fairly scattered.; As it relates to State, they are aware but I don't believe their big shots have talked to Allen, it would probably require Armitage to have any impact.

April 3, 2003
The Democrats' Big Plan
They don't want to stop a few Bush judges. They want to stop them all.

Although much attention has been paid to the filibuster of appeals-court nominee Miguel Estrada - just Wednesday, Republicans made yet another unsuccessful attempt to break the Democratic blockade on his nomination - there is in fact a far larger story taking shape, one that has gone mostly unreported in the press. Using a variety of complicated parliamentary techniques that attract little public notice, Democrats are now blocking nearly every Bush nominee to the federal circuit courts of appeals. Their actions suggest that party strategists have abandoned an earlier plan to stop a few, carefully selected Bush nominees. Now, they want to stop them all.

Since the new Senate convened in January, the president has nominated 19 candidates for the courts of appeals. At this moment, twelve of those nominees are being held up by Democratic opposition. Most of the rest are new nominations that haven't yet had time to be blocked. Just two have been confirmed.

Estrada is, of course, caught in a filibuster. Fifth Circuit nominee Priscilla Owen, recently approved by the Judiciary Committee, is in pre-filibuster limbo. So is fellow Fifth Circuit nominee Charles Pickering, who has yet to come up for a new vote in the committee. Jeffrey Sutton and Deborah Cook, of the Sixth Circuit, and John Roberts, of the D.C. Circuit, are still awaiting floor votes after Democrats refused to allot time to debate their nominations. (In addition, Sutton has had a hold placed on his nomination by Democrat Tom Harkin, while Cook and Roberts are also under Democratic holds). Sixth Circuit nominees Richard Griffin, David McKeague, Susan Bieke Neilson, and Henry Saad have all been stopped by procedural tactics - the so-called "blue slip" - used by Michigan's two Democratic senators, Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow. Fourth Circuit Terrence Boyle has been blocked by North Carolina Democrat John Edwards. And the nomination of the Ninth Circuit's Carolyn Kuhl, who had a hearing on Tuesday, appears headed for a protracted fight over the opposition of California's Barbara Boxer.

Together, that makes twelve nominees paralyzed by Democratic opposition. Of the rest of the 19 Bush circuit-court nominees, five - Richard Wesley for the Second Circuit, Michael Chertoff for the Third Circuit, Edward Prado for the Fifth Circuit, Steven Colloton for the Eighth Circuit, and Consuelo Callahan for the Ninth Circuit - were nominated for the first time this year (most of them in March), meaning they have not had time to go through the process (or to develop serious Democratic opposition). Two nominees - Timothy Tymkovich of the Tenth Circuit and Jay Bybee of the Ninth - have been confirmed, Tymkovich nearly two years after his nomination.

In the cases that are currently blocked, some involve substantive issues - for example, a candidate who is thought to be insufficiently faithful to Roe v. Wade or "insensitive" to minority rights - while others are hung up on procedural objections. In one instance, Democrats are blocking three nominees (Sutton, Cook, and Roberts) because party leaders are angry at Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch for considering them all in one hearing instead of separate sessions. In another instance, Democrats are objecting to a nominee (Kuhl) because they say Republicans have given too little deference to blue-slip issues. In another (Estrada), Democrats say they haven't been given enough information to make a decision.

"This is an indication of what a determined minority can do in the Senate," says one Republican. "I wouldn't go so far as to say we're flummoxed, but we are dealing with a very obstructionist minority in the best way we can."

Responding to charges of obstruction, Democrats say that it was Republicans who practiced wholesale obstruction of judicial nominees when they controlled the Senate during the last six years of the Clinton administration. But by any measure, Democrats have blocked more Bush appeals-court nominees than were blocked by Republicans in even the worst of the Clinton years, when relations between the parties were poisoned by scandal and impeachment.

Of course, at that time, some in the GOP were advocating wholesale obstruction. But party leaders rejected the idea. "This is something Republicans could have done during the Clinton administration, but there were a lot of [Republicans] who wouldn't go that far, who for reasons of comity and the sake of the process refused to do it," says one party aide.

But now, GOP leaders face those very obstructionist tactics from Democrats and are growing increasingly frustrated. Republicans control the Senate, albeit narrowly, and party leaders and activists believe they ought to be able to confirm the president's judicial nominations. But Senate rules give the minority party substantial power, and the only thing that would discourage them from using that power would be negative public opinion - that is, if there were a real political price to be paid for their actions. So far, however, most of the judicial battles have drawn little attention. Some of the reasons for that are obvious: there are lots of other things happening in the world. But many of the blocked judicial nominations involve arcane rules that would not make the front page even on a slow news day.

For example, Levin's and Stabenow's move to kill a bloc of four circuit court nominees - an astonishingly bold act - has received almost no attention (See "Much More Democratic Obstruction" <<http://www.nationalreview.com/york/york032003.asp>> "). It seems unreasonable to suggest that Levin and Stabenow could be pressured to back away without public opposition, yet it is difficult for the public to oppose what it doesn't know. So the four judges remain blocked.

It is not clear whether the new Democratic across-the-board blockade will ultimately succeed (although it is certainly succeeding at the moment). And it is true that the White House has other things to worry about now. But if the president wants to place judges on the federal courts of appeals, he will eventually have to engage Democrats in political battle - the only thing that can break the current stalemate.

The Democrats' Big Plan

They don't want to stop a few Bush judges. They want to stop them all.

Although much attention has been paid to the filibuster of appeals-court nominee Miguel Estrada — just Wednesday, Republicans made yet another unsuccessful attempt to break the Democratic blockade on his nomination — there is in fact a far larger story taking shape, one that has gone mostly unreported in the press. Using a variety of complicated parliamentary techniques that attract little public notice, Democrats are now blocking nearly every Bush nominee to the federal circuit courts of appeals. Their actions suggest that party strategists have abandoned an earlier plan to stop a few, carefully selected Bush nominees. Now, they want to stop them all.

Since the new Senate convened in January, the president has nominated 19 candidates for the courts of appeals. At this moment, twelve of those nominees are being held up by Democratic opposition. Most of the rest are new nominations that haven't yet had time to be blocked. Just two have been confirmed.

Estrada is, of course, caught in a filibuster. Fifth Circuit nominee Priscilla Owen, recently approved by the Judiciary Committee, is in pre-filibuster limbo. So is fellow Fifth Circuit nominee Charles Pickering, who has yet to come up for a new vote in the committee. Jeffrey Sutton and Deborah Cook, of the Sixth Circuit, and John Roberts, of the D.C. Circuit, are still awaiting floor votes after Democrats refused to allot time to debate their nominations. (In addition, Sutton has had a hold placed on his nomination by Democrat Tom Harkin, while Cook and Roberts are also under Democratic holds). Sixth Circuit nominees Richard Griffin, David McKeague, Susan Bieke Neilson, and Henry Saad have all been stopped by procedural tactics — the so-called "blue slip" — used by Michigan's two Democratic senators, Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow. Fourth Circuit Terrence Boyle has been blocked by North Carolina Democrat John Edwards. And the nomination of the Ninth Circuit's Carolyn Kuhl, who had a hearing on Tuesday, appears headed for a protracted fight over the opposition of California's Barbara Boxer.

Together, that makes twelve nominees paralyzed by Democratic opposition. TELEVISED STATEMENT OF SADDAM HUSSEIN READ BY IRAQI INFORMATION MINISTER

MINISTER SAHAF: (Through interpreter) My dear brothers and sons and beloved, I call on you fighters here, men and women, friends everywhere. Throughout history, when consumed by Satan, invaders always target capitals and cities and believe that their war will be settled there. And when the aggressors are repressed and defeated, they return in humiliation from all the lands they defile. We are determined to conquer them at the footsteps of our capital. We are going to destroy the enemy's horses on all lands of Islam, the land of Iraq. Fight them, my brothers. Fight them day and night. Make the land of Islam a fire to kill them and burn them wherever they pass. And by the hand of God Almighty, they will find themselves in the fires of hell, and our martyrs will have paradise. God is great, and glory to God. Defeat for all those enemies of God. Long live Iraq. Long live our nation. Long live Palestine. Long live Iraq. Long live Iraq. God is great. God is great. And let those criminals be defeated.

;;;;;; Saddam Hussein on the 4th of April, 2003.

First U.S. Journalist Killed in Iraq War

By JONATHAN D. SALANT
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Michael Kelly, editor-at-large for The Atlantic Monthly, was killed while on assignment covering the war in Iraq. He is the first American journalist to die in the conflict.

Kelly, also a hard-hitting conservative columnist for The Washington Post and a former editor of The New Republic, died Thursday night while traveling with the U.S. Army's 3rd Infantry Division as it moved across Iraq, according to a statement issued by Atlantic Media.

President Bush "expresses his sorrow and his condolences to the Kelly family," White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said.

Atlantic Monthly owner David Bradley said the magazine "has had 145 years of good times and bad, but no moment more deeply sad than this one now."

The 46-year-old Kelly, who also covered the first Gulf War, was the first journalist to die among the 600 embedded with the U.S. armed forces. Four foreign journalists have been killed covering the war.

Atlantic Media provided no details about Kelly's death. The Washington Post, on its Web site, said Kelly was killed in a Humvee accident.

Navy Lt. Herlinda Rojas, a spokeswoman at the Coalition Press Information Center in Kuwait City, said a soldier and a reporter were killed near Baghdad when a Humvee went into a canal. Neither were identified. Military officials said they believed it was an accident and not the result of combat.

Kelly's final column for the Post was published Thursday. In it, he wrote about accompanying an Army task force as it captured a bridge across the Euphrates River.

"On the western side of the bridge, Lt. Col. Ernest 'Rock' Marccone, commander of Task Force 3-69, stood in the sand by the side of the road, smoking a cigar and drinking a cup of coffee," Kelly wrote. "Marccone's soldiers say he deeply likes to win, and he seemed quietly happy. ... 'We now hold the critical ground through which the rest of the division can pass and engage and destroy the Republican Guard,'" Marccone said.

A native of Washington, D.C., Kelly was the son of two journalists - Thomas Kelly, a former reporter, and Marguerite Kelly, who writes the syndicated column, "Family Almanac."

Kelly was fired as editor of The New Republic, a weekly political journal, in 1997 by owner Martin Peretz, a friend and former teacher of then-Vice President Al Gore. Peretz objected to what he felt was the magazine's constant criticism of the Clinton administration, especially in Kelly's regular column.

Kelly became a columnist for the Post and continued to criticize Clinton. Around the same time, he was hired as the editor of National Journal, a weekly magazine that covers the federal government. When Bradley, the Journal's owner, bought The Atlantic Monthly in 1999, he named Kelly editor of the venerable magazine.

Last September, Kelly stepped down from that post and took the title editor-at-large. He is also chief editorial adviser to the Journal.

Before taking the helm of The New Republic, Kelly was a reporter for The New York Times and a writer and editor at The New Yorker.

He covered the first Gulf War as a stringer for The Boston Globe, GQ and The New Republic, as well as the Iraq-Kurdish conflict that followed it. He won a National Magazine Award and an Overseas Press Club award for his articles, and later wrote a book based on his reporting, "Martyr's Day: Chronicle of a Small War."

Kelly is survived by his wife, Madelyn, and two sons, Tom, 6, and Jack, 3.

FYI – Apparently Chairman Hatch has asked Secretary Chao to provide advice on how to develop an asbestos trust structure based off of previously established government run trusts. This has come to me indirectly, and I have indicated back indirectly that it would be in Labors' interest to first touch base with you all (Liz and Diana) before moving forward in this regard without WH guidance on the issue.

Let me know if you hear anything. Thanks.

*****MESSAGES TO THE IRAQI PEOPLE*****

*****IN THE PRESIDENT'S WORDS*****

"And the people of Iraq have my pledge: Our fighting forces will press on until your entire country is free. The Iraqi people deserve to live in peace under leaders they have chosen. They deserve a government that respects the rights of every citizen and ethnic group. They deserve a country that is united, that's independent, and that is released from years of sanctions and sorrow. Our coalition has one goal for the future of Iraq -- to return that great country to it's own people." 04-03-03

"The people of Iraq have lived in this nightmare world for more than two decades. It is understandable that fear and distrust run deep. Yet, here in the city where America itself gained freedom, I give this pledge to the citizens of Iraq: We're coming with a mighty force to end the reign of your oppressors. We are coming to bring you food and medicine and a better life. And we are coming, and we will not stop, we will not relent until your country is free." 03-31-03

"Well, they've been sent a message in this war, too, in that if you launch a weapon of mass destruction, you'll be tried as a war criminal. And I urge those Iraqi generals who have any doubt of our word to be careful, because we'll keep our word. We're going to keep our word to the Iraqi people and we'll keep our word to those war criminals in Iraq." 03-27-03

"Many Iraqis can hear me tonight in a translated radio broadcast, and I have a message for them. If we must begin a military campaign, it will be directed against the lawless men who rule your country and not against you. As our coalition takes away their power, we will deliver the food and medicine you need. We will tear down the apparatus of terror and we will help you to build a new Iraq that is prosperous and free. In a free Iraq, there will be no more wars of aggression against your neighbors, no more poison factories, no more executions of dissidents, no more torture chambers and rape rooms. The tyrant will soon be gone. The day of your liberation is near." 03-17-03

Subject: Airline Labor issues

Hi Brett! A couple of the industry experts have raised some issues in the labor arena that I could use some help understanding. The main suggestion was that repealing Clayton Act immunity for labor unions (I guess so they can conspire against all the airlines collectively) would help the labor cost situation. But I don't fully understand what the Clayton Act immunity entails and how it came about. Who would be the best person/agency to ask about this? DOJ? DOL? Your thoughts would be greatly appreciated!!

Thanks!

Yes! As long as, the ta form is approved before they get on the flight.

For political flights, it seems to me they should book the flights when they can, then get the ta form approved. When there are problems with approval, they can cancel or re-scheduled flight. Does that solve the problem?

Colleen - Can you help us on travel? Because the RNC pays for our travel there are lots of extra steps involved for us to book flights. As a result, usually by the time the approval comes through, the original flight is booked or much more expensive causing us to start the process all over. We are often forced to choose between making the RNC spend several hundred more dollars for our flights (as I will now do next Friday - in order to get a reasonably priced flight, I'm leaving at 10:30 am on Friday for a Saturday morning speech).

Perhaps I'm doing something wrong, but DT and others here have the same frustration with the travel office/process for approval. What can I do to help fix this - would it be easier if I wrote up a memo with examples?

We had a flight reservation on Northwest....the travel authorization didn't come until yesterday afternoon, and by that point, the Northwest flight was ridiculous. So, I looked into Midwest Express, which if you are willing to leave early on Friday, would be great. This isn't a problem...provided the new flight is in the same price ballpark as the Northwest flight ($588).

Subject: VOLPAC Invitation

This responds to your e-mail request for advice, below. In addition, is this a matter for consideration also by Brett Kavanaugh, given the Hatch Act issues?

Penny Douglas is an Executive Assistant in the Office of Legislative Affairs, and is not a commissioned officer. She plans to participate in VOLPAC events scheduled for April 25 to 27, 2003, in Nashville, Tennessee, and asks whether she may accept VOLPAC's offer to pay her airfare to and from Nashville, so that she may attend the event.

Ms. Douglas explains that VOLPAC is the political action committee of Senator Bill Frist. She also advises that she has, in the past, volunteered to assist VOLPAC with the logistics of its annual Spring weekend event.

The Office of Special Counsel's web-site notes that an employee may attend and be active at political rallies and meetings; join and be an active member of a political party or club; and, hold office in political clubs or parties.

If this event is a fundraiser, the Office of Special Counsel's web-site also notes that, among other permissible activities, an employee may attend political fundraising functions and is allowed to organize a fundraiser, as long as she does not personally solicit, accept, or receive contributions. She may even give a speech or keynote address at a political fundraiser, as long as she is not on duty, and does not solicit political contributions. However, her name may not be shown on an invitation to such a fundraiser as a sponsor or point of contact.

Regarding the VOLPAC offer of travel expenses, ethics regulations provide that an employee who may take an active part in political management or in political campaigns under the Hatch Act, may accept meals, lodgings, transportation and other benefits, including free attendance at events, when provided, in connection with such active participation, by a political organization described in 26 U.S.C. 527(e). See 5 C.F.R. § 2635.204(f).

· The term "political organization" in 26 U.S.C. 527(e) means "a party, committee, association, fund, or other organization (whether or not incorporated) organized and operated primarily for the purpose of directly or indirectly accepting contributions or making expenditures, or both, for an exempt function."

· The term "exempt function" in 26 U.S.C. 527(e) means "the function of influencing or attempting to influence the selection, nomination, election, or appointment of any individual to any Federal, State, or local public office or office in a political organization, or the election of Presidential or Vice-Presidential electors, whether or not such individual or electors are selected, nominated, elected, or appointed. Such term includes the making of expenditures relating to an office described in the preceding sentence which, if incurred by the individual, would be allowable as a deduction under section 162(a)."

· The term "political management" is not otherwise defined.

It is not precisely clear from its web-site (<http://www.volpac.com/index.html> <<http://www.volpac.com/index.html>>) whether VOLPAC is actually a "527(e)" organization, although that most likely is the case considering its mission and purpose statements.

If Ms. Douglas ascertains that VOLPAC is such an organization, then she may accept the gift of free airfare, as well as any meals, lodgings, other transportation, and other benefits, from that group in connection with her participation in the event. However, the event apparently begins on a Friday and, if she travels to or attends the event during her normal duty hours, she should be in a leave status during those hours.

Subject: VOLPAC Invitation

Hi Nanette -

Last week, I spoke to you briefly at the New Employees' Ethics Briefing regarding my invitation to participate in the VOLPAC events on April 25-27, 2003. VOLPAC is the political action committee of Senator Bill Frist of TN. Each year VOLPAC hosts a Spring Meeting in Nashville, TN for its members. In the past, I have volunteered to assist with the logistics of each event i.e transportation.

VOLPAC has offered to pay my airfare to/from Nashville. Do you see any problem with accepting this? Please let me know if I need to provide you with more information.

Thank you -

Penny Douglas

Pink slip for blue slip
Star-Telegram

When Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch convened a hearing for an appellate court nominee opposed by both her home-state senators, it was a significant step away from the tradition of the "blue slip." The blue slip is a form that is sent to a judicial nominee's home-state senators asking whether they approve of or object to the nomination. Through this form of senatorial courtesy, individual senators have been able to block consideration of nominees for years simply by returning a negative blue slip or not sending it back at all. The reason for opposition can be substantive or silly -- and it need not be made public. Theoretically, the blue slip enables senators to persuade the president to consult them on nominees, thus avoiding political showdowns. But too often the mechanism has put far too much of the Senate's "advice and consent" power into the hands of a single senator. By diluting that concentration of power, Hatch has done the right thing. The decision by the Utah Republican, who also was Judiciary Committee chairman under President Clinton, came on a controversial nominee: Carolyn Kuhl, who's strongly backed by the Bush White House and opposed by California's Democratic senators, Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein. Eliminating the blue slip removes one means of warping the judicial selection process. The challenge remains for senators and the president to avoid other divisiveness that threatens an independent judiciary.

There is nothing in this position that is likely to conflict with your official duties so the acceptance of the work would not violate the Standards of Conduct ethics rules.

However, as White House staff you are subject to a total outside earned income limitation ban if you earn greater than $33,254. See Executive Order 12731. This policy is described in detail at pages D-11 and D-12 of the White House Staff Manual.

Sorry to be the bearer of bad news. I'm sure you would have performed this work in an exemplary and valuable manner, as you perform your work on behalf of the President.

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Tuesday, April 8, 2003

*****KEY POINTS*****

President Bush's Trip to the United Kingdom

*President Bush and British Prime Minister Blair are discussing the progress in the war in Iraq, the status of the ongoing military operation, and humanitarian relief efforts.

*They will also work to help Iraqis build a post-war Iraq that is whole, free, and at peace within itself and with its neighbors.

*They will discuss the role of the United Nations and other international organizations.

*The President and the Prime Minister will also talk about the peace process in Northern Ireland, and discuss efforts to bring peace to the Middle East.

Update on Liberation of Iraq

*Coalition forces are operating in and around Baghdad, on the ground and in the air. The regime's leaders are increasingly isolated. The circle is closing, and options are running out.

*Coalition forces have come a long way in a short time. But there is dangerous and difficult work ahead.

*Iraqi regime death squads have used schools and armories and hospitals as military headquarters. They have executed POWs. They use children as human shields. And they have forced civilians to fight at gunpoint, executing those who refused. They are moving their artillery into residential neighborhoods in Baghdad, hoping to draw coalition fire.

*By contrast, Coalition forces have demonstrated their respect for the Iraqi people, going to extraordinary lengths to protect innocent lives and to safeguard Muslim holy sites, delivering humanitarian aid, and fixing schools where Iraqi children returned to their classrooms last week.

REV_00113842

*As the Coalition makes progress, the Iraqi people are losing their fear of the regime. We want to assure all Iraqis that life without Saddam Hussein is not a distant dream. Coalition forces will not stop until they have accomplished their mission, remove Saddam Hussein from power, and give Iraq back to the Iraqi people.

*Just as we've planned for military victory, we're planning to win the peace. The Coalition is committed to helping Iraqis create a broad-based, representative government, based on democratic principles, that serves their interests and is worthy of their hopes.

*****TODAY'S SCHEDULE*****

All Times Eastern Daylight. Subject to Change

6:00 am President Bush and British Prime Minister Blair hold joint press conference

7:00 am CENTCOM Operations Update

TBD Defense Department Briefing

TBD State Department Briefing

*****LIBERATION UPDATE*****

The voices of freedom, now heard in parts of Iraq

For more reactions to Operation Iraqi Freedom, visit "Liberation Update" at: <http://www.whitehouse.gov/liberation>

"Ayatollah Ali Mohammed Sistani is...the undisputed A'alam al-ulema (the most learned of the learned) of the mullahs who minister to the religious needs of Shiites, 60 percent of Iraq's population. This week he will resume lectures, banned by the Saddam regime for seven years, at the oldest Shiite seminary.

"....[T]he ayatollah said he had advised 'believers not to hinder the forces of liberation, and help bring this war against the tyrant to a successful end for the Iraqi people....Our people need freedom more than air [to breath]. Iraq has suffered, and it deserves better government.'" Op-Ed by Amir Taheri, Wall Street Journal, 4-7-03

*****KEY QUOTES*****

"For too long the world ignored the plight of the Iraqi people. That was wrong. We know and understand that many of you live in fear of Saddam. We promise that the events of 1991 will not happen again. We have pledged to remove Saddam. And we will deliver. Once he is gone, we will help Iraq rebuild itself, and become once more a member of the international family of nations."

British Prime Minister Blair, in message to the Iraqi people, 4-4-03

LIBERATION UPDATE

The voices of freedom, now heard in parts of Iraq

For more reactions to Operation Iraqi Freedom, visit "Liberation Update" at:

<http://www.whitehouse.gov/liberation>

"Ayatollah Ali Mohammed Sistani is...the undisputed A'alam al-ulema (the most learned of the learned) of the mullahs who minister to the religious needs of Shiites, 60% of Iraq's population. This week he will resume lectures, banned by the Saddam regime for seven years, at the oldest Shiite seminary.

"...[T]he ayatollah said he had advised 'believers not to hinder the forces of liberation, and help bring this war against the tyrant to a successful end for the Iraqi people....Our people need freedom more than air [to breath]. Iraq has suffered, and it deserves better government.'"

Op-Ed by Amir Taheri, Wall Street Journal, 4-7-03

KEY QUOTES

"For too long the world ignored the plight of the Iraqi people. That was wrong. We know and understand that many of you live in fear of Saddam. We promise that the events of 1991 will not happen again. We have pledged to remove Saddam. And we will deliver. Once he is gone, we will help Iraq rebuild itself, and become once more a member of the international family of nations."

British Prime Minister Blair, in message to the Iraqi people, 4-4-03

KEY POINTS

President Bush's Trip to the United Kingdom

- President Bush and British Prime Minister Blair are discussing the progress in the war in Iraq, the status of the ongoing military operation, and humanitarian relief efforts.
- They will also work to help Iraqis build a post-war Iraq that is whole, free, and at peace within itself and with its neighbors.
- They will discuss the role of the United Nations and other international organizations.
- The President and the Prime Minister will also talk about the peace process in Northern Ireland, and discuss efforts to bring peace to the Middle East.

Update on Liberation of Iraq

- Coalition forces are operating in and around Baghdad, on the ground and in the air. The regime's leaders are increasingly isolated. The circle is closing, and options are running out.
- Coalition forces have come a long way in a short time. But there is dangerous and difficult work ahead.
- Iraqi regime death squads have used schools and armories and hospitals as military headquarters. They have executed POWs. They use children as human shields. And they have forced civilians to fight at gunpoint, executing those who refused. They are moving their artillery into residential neighborhoods in Baghdad, hoping to draw coalition fire.
- By contrast, Coalition forces have demonstrated their respect for the Iraqi people, going to extraordinary lengths to protect innocent lives and to safeguard Muslim holy sites, delivering humanitarian aid, and fixing schools where Iraqi children returned to their classrooms last week.
- As the Coalition makes progress, the Iraqi people are losing their fear of the regime. We want to assure all Iraqis that life without Saddam Hussein is not a distant dream. Coalition forces will not stop until they have accomplished their mission, remove Saddam Hussein from power, and give Iraq back to the Iraqi people.
- Just as we've planned for military victory, we're planning to win the peace. The Coalition is committed to helping Iraqis create a broad-based, representative government, based on democratic principles, that serves their interests and is worthy of their hopes.

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday handed a major victory to corporate defendants, imposing new limits on punitive damage awards in civil litigation.

By a 6-3 vote in State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. v. Campbell, No. 01-1289, the high court overturned a $145 million verdict against an insurer -- saying it was out of whack with the $1 million in compensatory damages awarded in the case.

Writing for the majority, Justice Anthony Kennedy said the ratio of punitive damages to compensatory damages almost never should exceed single digits -- a maximum of nine to one, in other words -- and that in many cases punitive damages should not exceed compensatory damages at all.

"Single-digit multipliers are more likely to comport with due process, while still achieving the state's goals of deterrence and retribution, than awards with ratios in the range of 500 to 1 or, in this case, of 145 to 1," wrote Kennedy.

After a decade-long series of rulings on the issue of giant punitive damages awards, the ruling marks the Supreme Court's most explicit statement yet about how big is too big.

In addition, the Court ruled that neither a defendant's wealth nor its out-of-state conduct could be a factor in calculating punitive damages. "A defendant should be punished for the conduct that harmed the plaintiff, not for being an unsavory individual or business," wrote Kennedy.

Kennedy also wrote, "The wealth of a defendant cannot justify an otherwise unconstitutional punitive damage award."

The ruling offered the corporate defense bar a near treasure-trove of helpful language in fighting the large liability awards that have fueled an increasingly potent tort-reform movement.

Steve and Keith would like to meet with you sometime today if that's possible regarding airline anti-trust issues.

They are both free between noon and 2pm. What works for you?

Let me know. Thanks!

Lauren

;;;;; We have a number of mechanisms that we use to try to be certain before we say, "Yes, we found some weapons of mass destruction." Initial indications were it could potentially be. And these were done by things like I described yesterday, the Fox chemical reconnaissance system that has some onboard capability to do testing and analysis.

;;;;; More detailed testing and analysis is required. That's ongoing. Some samples have been moved. And we don't know enough at this point to say that it should be discounted or that indeed we found some weapons of mass destruction available for use. So at this point we're simply remaining in waiting until we have additional information.

;;;;; Yes, warnings had been issued before and they continue to be issued. Even now, as we speak, there's certainly a warning that Baghdad is a dangerous location for anyone that is present in there and that the regime continues to put them at deliberate risk. And our combat actions also increase the risk.

;;;;; When we have a known location that is used for multiple purposes, including regime purposes, command and control and otherwise, and certainly when we potentially take fire from those locations, decisions have to be made at a very low tactical level.

;;;;; I think, in all cases, mosques, other buildings, hotels, things that are obviously at least or are apparently not military facilities, there's a decision that has to be made always on a tactical level. And, where appropriate, there should be as proportional a response as necessary to eliminate that threat.

;;;;; That, again, also is a decision made by a tactical leader on the ground. And we have to look into the circumstances to find out more about those decisions that were made, but the action occurs when the action occurs, and everything thereafter is speculative or investigative.

;;;;; That's where we stand at this point on that issue. We certainly pay attention to it. We don't target journalists. We certainly believe in having open access to journalism here, at other locations, and inside of our formations. And any loss of life that came as a result of combat action is regrettable.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Knight-Ridder. I know that it's difficult for you to quantify the loss of life on the Iraqi side, but CENTCOM has been helpful in the past in describing the number of tanks destroyed and armored vehicles. Can you talk about the destruction of those tanks during the last 48 hours of operations in Baghdad? And also, can you elaborate, too, a little bit on the fighting east of Karbala?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: What I will tell you is that -- again, it's always difficult to get an accurate accounting of exactly what happened as a result of that combat action or what may have preceded it with air attacks in advance of an operation.

;;;;; For the most part, the encounters that we're seeing are formations that have somewhere between 20 and 60 vehicles, generally speaking. That's what the numbers tend to come out to be. And often all of those vehicles are destroyed, any vehicles that are encountered. Sometimes there are also technical vehicles that are added to that, in the 10s, 20s or 30s in some cases.

;;;;; Those that encounter our forces, especially ones that are firing or have weapons on them or are trying to flee, are engaged by direct fire systems. And so the degree of destruction varies on a daily basis. I really don't want to characterize it. I think it doesn't help the action that's happening out there.

;;;;; When threats appear, they're dealt with in a military fashion. There's discriminating fire that's provided. And unfortunately, lives are lost as a result of that on both sides. And that's probably where I'd want to stay on it.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: The fighting east of Karbala is to eliminate some pockets that remained in place as we penetrated the defensive lines of the Republican Guard forces command. We have awareness that there still are some elements there that appear to remain loyal to the regime, and we'll conduct operations to reduce those pockets, as we are in other places where we find any regime forces that remain. Since it's an ongoing operation, I don't want to characterize it much more than that.

;;;;; Yes, ma'am, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) We see (a lot on the picture?) of Iraqi civilians died. And everybody knows the majority of Iraqi official buildings exist between civilian areas. So did you intend to continue your strategy while a lot of people died? And what's your priority here, the building or the people and their right to be safe?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We certainly want -- thank you for the question. We certainly want the Iraqi population to be as safe as they possibly can. And we have demonstrated that throughout all parts of the country we've conducted operations, trying to take very deliberate efforts everywhere we can to minimize the loss of life, and certainly being aware of and trying to protect, as much as we can, sacred sites, religious sites, archaeological sites, places that are significant to the rich culture and heritage of the people of Iraq. And we've done that on a consistent basis.

;;;;; I've also showed you images over the last several days of the regime positioning combat systems, communication systems, artillery systems, directly beside buildings in populated areas. And so there will be some circumstances, as we've stated, where it becomes virtually unavoidable to prevent some degree of disruption.

;;;;; The priority clearly remains focusing on the military target that may be associated with that and trying, wherever possible, to minimize any secondary damages that occur. That will not change. It has not changed. And we believe we're doing the best we can to try to get that job done.

;;;;; We would ask that the Iraqi population try to understand. And in due time we can try to seek to pass on condolences to those whose lives were lost. We don't know what the number is. We don't know what the cause is. But we know that there are some that have lost their life in this, and we regret that.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please -- third row.

;;;;; Q Paul Hunter from Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Nineteen days into the war and five or so, six days into Baghdad, can you give us an assessment of what you think is left of the conventional Iraqi resistance? Sort of chemical threats aside, do you think you've seen the worst of what they can throw at the coalition in terms of organization, weaponry and will?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, Paul, I think that there are still some options available to whatever portion of the regime remains. We've seen a lot of forces that we've encountered on the outskirts of town. We think that was a significant defensive line, if you will, from Karbala across to Al Kut, where the Republican Guard forces command was arrayed. Most of those have been destroyed. And we have not seen a movement of those forces into Baghdad.

;;;;; We've encountered some forces along the closer parts of Baghdad, from about where Baghdad International Airport is located, around to the corners where we're conducting operations on the east. There are indications that these are special Republican Guard, but there are also some indications there might be regular army equipment mixed in, and certainly some paramilitaries are mixed in.

;;;;; So the closer we get, the fewer conventional forces remain to be seen. There are still some. There are still artillery systems, for example, that are positioned in different places inside the town that can be brought to bear. There are still rockets in parts of the surrounding area that we have not moved through yet that pose a continuing threat. And there are any number of unconventional options available to this regime. And certainly according to its practice thus far, we expect to encounter those inside of Baghdad as we get closer to removing the remaining vestiges of the regime. We remain focused on it. We remain deliberate in our actions. And as we continue our work in and around Baghdad, we are seeking those types of things to remove them from the hands of the regime, taking away the military options.

;;;;; Sir? I haven't gone to you before, so we'll take you. Please?

;;;;; Q Steve -- (inaudible) -- from the Associated Press. Could you comment on this A-10 Warthog plane that went down today? Was it shot down?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We had one A-10 aircraft conducting a close air support mission at low altitude, in support of ground troops in contact, and we believe that it was hit by surface-to-air missile fire. The pilot was immediately recovered and is safely back in coalition control.

;;;;; Yes. Please, Donna?

;;;;; Q Donna Leinwand from USA Today. We haven't talked a lot about Tikrit. I was wondering if you could tell us what indications you have that some of the forces might be, some of the Iraqi forces might be massing up there trying to reconstitute, or that regime leaders have fled there?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, Donna, Tikrit is one of the areas we know is a stronghold for the regime leadership, and we know that there are any number of command and control related facilities in Tikrit. We know that there had been forces that originally were defending in and around Tikrit, although those moved to south and had been involved in combat actions before this time. Tikrit has not escaped our interest; nor has it escaped our targeting. There are ongoing actions against command and control facilities in Tikrit to make it not something that's available to the regime. And I'll leave it at that since operations are ongoing.

;;;;; Please, Tom.

;;;;; Q Let me take you back again to the Palestine Hotel and the other two incidents from this morning. You said you may have misspoke about fire coming from the lobby. I believe that the local commander on the ground was saying that he was taking RPGs from the roof, also on the other two buildings that were struck this morning, nearly nine hours ago. Were you taking fire from those ground targets? We seem to get information on the Warthog three hours ago, that it was taken down by surface-to-air, but no real information about the two targets this morning, nine hours ago.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I should always be careful about trying to characterize actions that happened on the ground in a fire fight when those reports have not come up. The report of a pilot is different than a report of something that happens on the ground in a fire fight. In many cases we engage actions to try to go and get the pilot right away, and that becomes a significant event that's visible even at this level of the command.

;;;;; Things that happen in a fire fight are much more confused, and are also much slower in coming in details, because every fire fight that happens out there, obviously with the amount of combat action that occurs, we are not going to get a report on every fire fight that happens. This one is obviously an item of interest, and there's interest that's flowing in right now, so I can't characterize exactly where we've seen fire from. Any comment I made earlier was premature. And so at this point it's best for me to wait for additional information to come in.

;;;;; Okay, off the right, please?

;;;;; Q Frederic Gastelle (ph), BBC French Service. General, considering the increase of military pressure on the regime, do you see any defection of Iraqi officials? And do you also see some fighting in between the paramilitary units? They had a very long history of bloody fights in between units created by Saddam Hussein.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We're not seeing defections of people who are loyal to the regime, who are members of the Baath Party. We have captured a number, but we have not seen defections as you describe. But we have seen military commanders depart their post, or express a willingness to cease fighting. That's happened in a number of cases -- but not the ones who are the most loyal to the regime, the party officials, leaders of regime death squads -- not in those cases.

;;;;; The second half of your question?

;;;;; Q Any units -- the Iraqi paramilitary units, do they fight? Do you see any fighting between units?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We are not seeing fighting between paramilitary units, and it's too early to determine exactly what may happen amongst other military units that are out there. There are some indications that there are some problems inside of some of the unit formations, and that has yet to develop, and I probably should not discuss it any further at this point since we don't know.

;;;;; Let me go in the back over here, please.

;;;;; Q Darren Curtis (ph), 7 Network, Australia. Does the coalition actually possess any DNA for Saddam Hussein and his family? Will that be the only means that you justify whether you have in fact got him or not? And, secondly, there's a team of Australian commanders out here at the moment that are tenacious urban fighters. Will you bring them into the battle in Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, I don't want to characterize what information that we have that might identify any remains that we encounter anywhere on the battlefield. That simply would not be appropriate to discuss. And any questions about Australian forces in detail, about specific units, you probably should talk to the Australians on. Okay?

;;;;; Yes, ma'am?

;;;;; Q Danelle Bell (ph) from CBC News, Canada. Thank you. Would you characterize an on-the-ground assessment of the strike in An Mansur as a priority? And what if any resistance do you expect in preventing or in challenging you to get to that site, to conduct an investigation?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, the focus of our operations is not to conduct investigations at particular places where a strike occurred. We are operating inside Baghdad, and may well move to that site. That's a tactical commanders decision, and something I'm not aware of at this point in time.

;;;;; What we can characterize is that we -- when we see something that would provide us a fleeting moment of opportunity related to regime leadership or regime command and control, we'll try to attack that as quickly as we possibly can, given all the other parameters that I've described -- that we have a good confirmation that we think the target is what we say it is, we have eyes that can observe the operation either from or ground, depending on what the delivery system is going to be, and that we can do so in such a way that mitigates potential damage that's unintended. That will continue to be the case.

;;;;; As to seeing what it is on the ground, I'm not sure when that's going to happen, whether we'd have some resistance on that or not. We've already fought inside of Baghdad. We have been successful moving at a variety of places inside of Baghdad, and we believe we still have reasonable freedom of action. That doesn't mean it won't be uncontested, but we are able to move in places of our time and choosing inside of Baghdad, and I think that will continue.

;;;;; Let me go all the way in the back row, please.

;;;;; Q You talked about the coming few days. How can you guarantee the safety of the journalists? What's the procedures you can tell the journalists in the Palestine Hotel? Tell them to just stay in the hotel, don't move out? And how can you -- what's the procedures which you can do in the future to guarantee the safety of them?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: The procedures remain as they are right now. First, we don't target journalists deliberately -- not now, not ever. So I can talk about the future in that particular case.

;;;;; We certainly know that the journalists that are with us have responsibility for their own safety, but they are inherently safe when they stay with a unit, or there is a higher degree of safety, I should say -- they are not inherently safe, because it's a dangerous business, and they are moving with forces that are in danger.

;;;;; Journalists that are moving on the battlefield, we don't know about. We don't know where they are in some cases. They're out -- some of them are operating independently, in a very, very dangerous and often contested area. And so we would certainly again express our concern for those who are choosing to do so that they are putting themselves at risk. Where we have knowledge of that, I think we can do what we can to try to prevent injuring journalists and any other noncombatants. And that remains consistent as well. But we can only deal with what we know in this case. That's how I'd address that.

;;;;; Yes, please?

;;;;; Q Nicole Enfield from Associated Press. You mentioned earlier elements of the Fifth Corps came down from the north -- I'd like some more details of that -- into Baghdad itself. What kind of resistance did you face? And do you get the sense that the Iraqis had drawn some of their lines to the south to prevent you from coming up? And did you have an time of it getting in from the north?

;;;;; And second question. Reports of pretty -- some looting in Basra from -- in these first few days of British control. I'm wondering if you are anticipating that will be repeated in Baghdad, perhaps even on a larger scale, just because it's Baghdad; what you're going to do differently to prevent this looting from occurring. Or is it, at least so far in Basra, a kind of reasonable amount of, you know, release of this pent-up frustration, as the British commander said yesterday, that that was -- in time they will be able to restore law and order, but not it's just frustration, people acting out? Thanks.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: The first question talks about the approach to Baghdad from the north. There was some forces that were encountered. We have the ability to operate and conduct actions at times and places of our choosing. We had awareness of forces that were positioned in the north. Those forces were attacked. That opened up an opportunity there for us to continue operations on a different line toward the center of Baghdad from a different direction.

;;;;; I am not going to characterize where we are going to go at any given time. These are again tactical decisions that are made. They're focused at the same objective, and they are opportunistic in their nature. So tactical action in the north against the force that may have been defending in the north may open a hole in the north. That opportunity may be taken; maybe it's not. There are things that happen on the battlefield like that that our commanders are very skillful of creating and then taking advantage of. So that will be the case as we continue.

;;;;; The second half of your question was --

;;;;; Q A follow-up --

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Let's go to the second half of your first question.

;;;;; Q Basra looting, what are you going to do in Baghdad --

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Looting. Thank you. There have been some reports of looting in cities that have been initially liberated. I wouldn't want to speculate as to why the population in some cases is making that choice. We know that there is often in liberated areas a vacuum in terms of control -- especially when you've had as tight a grip as this regime has had on its people for so long. When that's pulled out of the way, humans make decisions about what they are going to do next and what opportunities may be presented to them. I think as time goes on more law and order will be established. Ideally that goes by way of Iraqi populations taking care of themselves. That's how we see this -- not something that's a military control over top of all people. And this will settle down as time goes on -- not unexpected. We might see it anywhere where there is a temporary vacuum that forms and law and order is pulled away.

;;;;; Q So you are expecting this in Baghdad just as well?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I think anywhere that we have circumstances like this, and there's a removal of structures of control, there will be decisions that are made by members of the population. We will certainly discourage that, but I can't be certain that it won't happen in this case.

;;;;; Let me go up on this first row, please.

;;;;; Q Good afternoon, general, Neil Tweedie, from the Daily Telegraph in London. What efforts has Central Command made to ascertain the number of civilian casualties to date in Iraq? If you have got some preliminary figures, why aren't you releasing them? And, if not, why haven't you made a concerted effort to ascertain how many civilians have died in this war, which is after all one of its most important aspects, and something we have heard very, very little about?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Our approach to civilians on the battlefield is one of concern first, and secondly effort to try to prevent impact of any sort. We can never guarantee that there would be civilians that are completely free from the hazards of battle in and around their area. All we can be certain of is our approach. We can't be certain even after action how many may have died, how many may have been wounded, other than those we encounter. And of course there will be reports that come in from members of the population that we encounter that tell us things. Those can't always be confirmed. There may be reports of dead that can't be accounted for. And so it's very imprecise. Suffice it to say where we have knowledge then that we can know. Causes we can't know whether something occurred by way of coalition action, unintended, or regime action by way of murder. We've certainly seen that type of thing happen. It's just something we cannot get our arms around at this point. It will take time. And I don't think in any case of recorded history of warfare that the full knowledge of all casualties and all secondary effects has ever been gained, and I don't anticipate that will happen here. That's the nature of the approach.

;;;;; Right now our focus is on removing the regime, doing the best we can to protect the Iraqi people, and deliver liberation to them in areas where the regime has been removed. And we'll continue on that thrust to try to get that job done.

;;;;; I think we have time for one more question. Let me go to the second row, please.

;;;;; Q General, Chas Henry from WTOP Radio. The armored raid into Baghdad yesterday, rather than being a hit and run seemed to be a hit and stay. As the coalition makes its presence felt in Baghdad, are we likely to see more instances in which troops move to an area and then end up staying there, and piecemeal establish a presence around the city?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I think you can anticipate that there will be a combination of actions. There will be some actions that go into a location, and we stage operations from there. There will be some operations perhaps that go into a location and then leave. There will be some operations that go into a location we reinforce. In some cases we will clear enemy resistance. In other cases we'll seize a site. The full combination of that is what creates the tactical operations in that objective areas -- and those are tactical decisions that are made. Again, they're very opportunistic. What can we get from this? What happens if we hit that location? What should we do about it? These decisions will be made by our commanders out there on the ground, and you'll see a variety of combinations to try to get it done.

;;;;; Okay, thanks very much, ladies and gentlemen, have a good day.

END.

UNITED STATES CENTRAL COMMAND DAILY PRESS BRIEFING
BRIEFER: GEN. VINCE BROOKS, DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF OPERATIONS

DOHA, QATAR
7:05 A.M. EDT, TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2003

BRIG. GEN. VINCENT BROOKS: Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. Nineteen days ago, coalition forces entered Iraq with a campaign plan to remove a regime, to liberate the Iraqi people from the grip of the regime, and to begin the process of disarming Iraq. We remain on our plan, and the outcome is not in doubt.

;;;;; We continue to remember the brave young men and women who have lost their lives in this conflict to date, and we also remember their families.

;;;;; I'd like to now update you on some of the things that have occurred over the last 24 hours.

;;;;; First, the coalition continues to exert pressure on the regime and on the forces that remain willing to fight for the regime. I have one weapons systems video to show you today. This one is a recent close air support mission inside of Baghdad. And in this particular image you'll see that the regime has positioned heavy military equipment inside the capital city and also increased the risk to the population. But even in urban areas, the coalition forces make every possible effort to attack targets as precisely as we can.

;;;;; This image is of a tank positioned in trees along a canal. The trees are difficult to see because of the spectrum of light that's being used. And this is a close air support mission, unlike some of the other weapons systems videos we have shown where the may not have been someone on the ground focusing it. In those other cases, the pilot identified the target. In close air support missions like these and all other air operations now occurring in and around Baghdad, it requires not only the pilot to be able to see the target, but someone on the ground that can see the target and identify it as well before any weapons are released.

;;;;; Our coalition's special operations forces continue to make significant contributions to the campaign, and are now conducting special operations in the north, the west, the east, the south, and the center of Iraq. In the north, coalition special operations forces, in conjunction with Kurdish forces of northern Iraq, are maintaining pressure on the Iraqi military forces in that area, while preventing their movement to Tikrit or Baghdad.

;;;;; In one engagement yesterday near Irbill, in the north, our special operations forces, in conjunction with close air support, were able to destroy a force consisting of several armored personnel carriers, tanks, and infantry.

;;;;; In another engagement, a similar engagement near Kirkuk, a special operations element defeated an armored counter-attack, destroying several tanks, trucks and armored personnel carriers.

;;;;; In the west, coalition special operations forces continued to hold the important Hadithah Dam. We've talked about that before. There's a smaller body of water just off to the side here that's a result of the dam, and the Hadithah nearby, denying freedom of movement to regime forces, and also denying use of areas that could be used for ballistic missile launches. Unconventional warfare continues in other parts of Iraq.

;;;;; The coalition's operational maneuver remains deliberate, focused and successful. The first area to highlight is Basra. Coalition forces, under the leadership of the U.K. and supported by coalition special operations, succeeded yesterday in reducing the final remaining concentrations of Ba'ath Party officials and regime forces in Basra. The remaining pocket was in the old part of the city and it was cleared by forces during the night. And by the time the sun came up this morning, there were reports of jubilation in the streets. Now, the hard task of preserving security and getting Iraq's second city moving forward into the future can proceed in earnest.

;;;;; The capture of two more Ba'ath Party officials near the town of As-Zubair, on the outskirts of Basra, also reflects our ongoing efforts to rid the entire southern region of regime presence and influence.

;;;;; The next area is near As-Samawa. Coalition forces near As-Samawa continue to work in that area and the towns around it, eliminating any regime elements and also transitioning into humanitarian actions. While water resupply networks are still being reestablished, there are military units operating in that area that are providing purified water that they're generating from water purification systems to Samawa and Arupa (sp), located about 25 kilometers to the north.

;;;;; In An-Najaf and Karbala, our operations continue increasing security in those areas and also eliminating any remaining regime elements that are present. There are combat operations ongoing east of Karbala.

;;;;; The main focus of the operation continues to be, for the land component, in and around Baghdad. In the east, the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force attacked across the Biyala River into the southeast corner of Baghdad. They encountered forces, including T-72 tanks, armored personnel carriers, other armored vehicles, surface-to-surface missiles, artillery pieces, and numerous technical vehicles. These forces were encountered and destroyed, and they proceeded on their attack to seize the Rashid (sp) Airport, which you see identified by an airplane image in the lower right-hand corner of Baghdad.

;;;;; In the west, 5th Corps remained in the center of Baghdad overnight, and also continued attacks this morning from the north and from the south, conducting operations inside of the heart of Baghdad. They also encountered a mixture of forces, including T-72 tanks, armored vehicles, technical vehicles, and artillery pieces.

;;;;; While this is ongoing, our maritime component continues to take steps to maintain the flow of humanitarian assistance supplies into Iraq. And it's currently focused on dredging parts of the Khor- Abdullah to make it a deeper draft for larger ships that carry increasing amounts of humanitarian support and assistance into Umm Qasr.

;;;;; Our efforts to communicate with the Iraqi people on a variety of levels range from the radio and television broadcasts that we've spoken about before, all the way down to physically handing out leaflets in populated areas. I'd like to show you a short video of U.K. and American forces handing out leaflets on the streets of As-Zubair very recently. This was taken by one of our front line camera systems, a military system, and broadcast from there a few days ago.

;;;;; You see them holding the leaflet there. There's a closer image of the leaflet. This is what was actually produced and distributed by hand. And the message of the leaflet is really a future without the regime, and steps that will be taken leading up to the final comment down at the bottom, that the coalition forces will only stay as long as it is necessary to accomplish what we need to accomplish, and then we leave Iraq in the hands of the Iraqi people.

;;;;; Daily, our coalition forces take positive steps to ease the plight of the Iraqi people. In this next image, you'll see military civil affairs elements, again operating with free Iraqi forces, delivering medical supplies in this case. And the supplies being delivered are for the people of An-Nasiriyah. The initial distribution is often done by hand, and it's aimed at alleviating immediate needs of the communities encountered, and it also help to communicate the coalition's intentions to assist the Iraqi people.

;;;;; In the next images, I'll show you a short video of members from the 82nd Airborne Division distributing humanitarian daily rations. These are the yellow ones. We're still eliminating those from our stocks, but we're delivering them by hand, not doing them by air drop, as you'll see inside of this image. Each one of these rations contains enough rations for an adult for one day in each bag, and they're used to augment the existing supplies.

;;;;; Even as food and other rations are distributed in the field, there's more humanitarian assistance arriving in the ports in bulk. Yesterday, we had the arrival of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Ship Sir Percival in the port of Umm Qasr, and the following video shows you the off-loading of those supplies, the humanitarian supplies intended for the people of Iraq. The gentlemen in the yellow hats and the reflective vests are Iraqi port workers who have returned to work and are working alongside coalition forces on a daily basis.

;;;;; We interact on a number of levels, certainly in the areas where combat have ceased, those areas that we have described as liberated cities and towns. There still are challenges that are out there. Sometimes it's just working through the language and cultural barriers, and of course security remains a focus for us. This video shows you some interactions along a street near Basra. It shows that the challenges are being overcome on a daily basis, and that coalition forces in fact are being well received by many citizens of Iraq. And these positive and cooperative relations are improving with every day.

;;;;; With that, ladies and gentlemen, I'll take your questions. Yes, please.

;;;;; Q David Lee Miller, Fox News. General, what can you tell us about this air strike targeting Iraqi leadership, presumably Saddam? And if you could go into the details, I understand that there was -- there is no coalition presence on the ground after this air strike -- what's being done to determine who in fact was hit, and we're going to accomplish that?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: As I've mentioned over a number of days throughout this conflict, we focus our actions directly against the regime leadership, against the regime command and control systems, against the things that protect the regime, whether it's air defense systems or whether it's forces, in an effort to eliminate the influence of the regime and its abilities to continue to conduct command and control. We had credible information that indicated that there was a regime leadership meeting occurring yesterday. While it's not useful to get into any speculation on who might have been present at that meeting, what we will say is that we had an opportunity -- as we've said before, we respond to opportunities, but we had an opportunity to attack that particular regime leadership meeting. We believe that the attack was effective in causing destruction of that facility. As to who was inside and what their conditions are, it will take some time before we can make that full determination. But our efforts remain focused on regime leadership whenever we find it, and any remnants of command and control that might be exerted by any remaining portions of the regime, whether it's local-tactical or whether it's on a larger scale.

;;;;; Q I just want to follow that up.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Please.

;;;;; Q It's my understanding that there was no coalition presence on the ground, so this air strike may have taken place, but members of the regime may have access to this site, and if it were a crime scene, it might be contaminated. How can you preserve it and make the determination later who, if anyone, was hit?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: It -- that's a very difficult challenge for us, and it's been a challenge throughout -- throughout these operations. That's why we can't on a daily basis say exactly who was inside of a building that may have been attacked where we had credible information. What we operate with is the information that leads us to it, and we are -- we are able in some cases to gather additional information after the strikes. But time will have to tell exactly how effective that particular strike was, and others that we've done as well.

;;;;; Yes, please, Adi (sp).

;;;;; Q Adi (sp) Rivale (sp), ABC News. Sir, could we get an update on the investigation into the second Baghdad market explosion? And the second question is, given the severity of and the intensity of the bombardment in yesterday's building, is it possible that we may never know just who was inside that building in terms of identification? Thank you, sir.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I don't have anything new to report on the Baghdad markets. What we've found on these market explosions is there remains evidence that a number of things could have contributed to it. As with so many things, until we are in exactly the location where these incidents occurred, we can't make a full assessment and eliminated -- eliminate all possibilities.

;;;;; As to the results of this particular attack that occurred yesterday, like other places, it is possible that we may never be able to determine exactly who was present without some detailed forensic work, and that's just -- that's one of the circumstances we have to deal with as we go through this campaign.

;;;;; Yes sir, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Al Jazeera. Today, your plane hit Al Jazeera office in Baghdad. One of our colleagues was killed during the attack. The office of Abu Dhabi TV also hit, as well as the Palestine Hotel where most of journalists are staying.

;;;;; Do these attacks mean that you will intensify your military campaign against Baghdad and that you don't need the journalists to cover the bloodshed which will be (taken in?) Baghdad? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, Hassan (sp), if I may, let me begin by saying first that we regret the loss of life from correspondents and we extend our condolences to the family of your journalist and to the families of other journalists who have lost their lives throughout this conflict. It's most unfortunate indeed.

;;;;; We certainly know that we don't target journalists. That's just not something we do. We also know that the locations where the regime does its work in many cases will put civilians at risk. We've talked about that day after day.

;;;;; The regime does not seem to want to change its methods of providing a higher degree of protection to journalists that in many cases we don't know where all journalists are on the battlefield. We certainly know where the embedded journalists are at any given time that are operating with our formations. And that was a conscious decision to take in embedded journalists.

;;;;; There were some combat actions that also occurred at the Palestine Hotel. Initial reports indicate that the coalition force operating near the hotel took fire from the lobby of the hotel and returned fire. And any loss of life, civilian loss of life or unintended consequences, again, we find most unfortunate and also undesirable.

;;;;; This is not something we seek to do. But at the same time, we know that we're conducting combat operations inside of an urban area, an area where the regime has chosen to deliberately defend and not stand down. And we can only be reminded that the risk increases for the population as we do these operations. But we have to remain focused on our objective of removing this regime before there's a greater loss of life.

;;;;; Please.

;;;;; Q Jeff Reed (sp) from Sky News. If I can continue on the point you made there, if you're claiming fire was coming from the lobby of the Palestine Hotel, why was this tank round directed at an upper floor? And what does that kind of marksmanship, or lack of it, suggest about the risks to civilians as your forces penetrate further into Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: The response of fire is something that we always have to give details as time goes on for specifically where the fire was returned and what was hit, where the fire came from. So I may have misspoken on exactly where the fire came from.

;;;;; What I can tell you is, (to?) the marksmanship, there have been plenty of examples of very accurate marksmanship not only from air but also from our systems on the ground as we've conducted operations over time.

;;;;; We remain very confident in the capability of our crews and our folks that are doing the work on the ground, and we believe that where it is possible to avoid losses of civilian life, every effort will be taken. We've seen examples of trying to protect mosques where fire came, and we did not have to return fire at that point in time to protect ourselves, and therefore we did not.

;;;;; Circumstances change in different places, and the tactical decisions that are made can only be made by people on the ground. So I don't have anything else that I can give you in real detail on that. And I appreciate the question. But we'll remain focused on trying to do the job as well as we can without threatening the civilian population.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Reuters. Follow-up on the Palestine; one comment. First of all, journalists inside the hotel say that there was no firing coming from the hotel. And the second question is, did U.S. forces know that that was a media hotel?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: What we know is that there are a number of places in downtown Baghdad where there are civilian populations who are at risk. And we know that there are practices by this regime to increase that risk deliberately, whether it's by positioning or whether it's by taking certain actions.

;;;;; And we know that as we conduct operations inside of Baghdad, we should anticipate attacks from unexpected locations, that some of the military actions might be unconventional in nature, whether it's the use of car bombs or whether it's ambushes, the use of snipers, or certainly the consistent pattern we've seen elsewhere of using civilians as shields.

;;;;; It's too early to be able to say exactly what happened at that site, and so I don't want to get into a who says what happened. We don't know enough to be able to say that definitely. And frankly, I don't know that anyone does to have the whole picture.

;;;;; That's why we have to investigate these types of things and find out what the bottom line is. And when we find out, I think there will be more information for us to pass.

;;;;; Second row, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) Can you detail what you're doing to try and find out who was in that building and also say whether you actually have coalition forces on the spot going through the rubble?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We have coalition forces that are operating in a variety of places inside of Baghdad and in a variety of different ways. In places where we can confirm on the ground the results of a strike, as in places where we've passed through and liberated, then there's more fidelity that we can gain on the precision of the strike and the actual results of the strike.

;;;;; Until that can occur in every location, we certainly can't make full determinations of what has happened. At this point in time I'm not aware of anyone from coalition forces that have walked the site. When that's possible, we'll have more information about what exactly happened there.

;;;;; Until then, we can only go with things that we can gain information on. And we believe the strike was effective in hitting the target, creating the desired effect, but we don't know all the circumstances of what happened to those who were contained inside.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q Thank you. Jonathan Marcus. Two points. One, we know pretty well who the leading figures are in the Iraqi regime. Who do you think is actually in charge, if anybody, at the moment?

;;;;; And secondly, as you take control of more areas of Baghdad, clearly with the continuing fighting there are going to be civilian casualties, whatever the precision of the weaponry. There are all sorts of reports of hospitals being overloaded and so on.

;;;;; Are you taking any steps to provide large-scale medical facilities to deal with some of the casualties, particularly now that you hold some of the ground in the Iraqi capital?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We have not been certain for a very long time of who's in charge in this regime. What we've seen is that the regime leadership structure has been fragmented. We've seen that the ability for the regime to communicate instructions has been disrupted. We've seen that the application of authority has been interfered with on a number of occasions by coalition action. And we're not certain exactly who's in charge at this point in time.

;;;;; But what we do know is that there are still pockets of regime leadership, whether they be local-level Baath Party officials or whether they are unit commanders of military formations that still exist, or whether they are the higher-level leadership figures that were part of the regime and remain part of the regime.

;;;;; As we identify them, we have opportunities to try to reduce their capability to still command and control, whether that's by direct attack, by any other sort of action affecting their communications, whatever it might be, to prevent them from maintaining any degree of control.

;;;;; We do know indeed that as we are conducting military operations in an urban area, that the potential for casualties increases. Our approach to that, however, with regard to encountering casualties that occur on the battlefield, has not changed.

;;;;; We've established temporary hospitals, field hospitals, or used our own tactical aid stations throughout this combat operation whenever we encounter civilians or wounded Iraqi soldiers and provide medical treatment to them on the spot, sometimes for a longer-term basis.

;;;;; In some cases we've had some Iraqi soldiers that have been taken into our custody that ultimately become prisoners of war. They may be evacuated to a hospital ship and receive medical care where it is available.

;;;;; So that will continue as we have more forces operating in and around Baghdad. Those forces have a medical capability. And if we encounter civilians that are wounded in our actions, regardless of what caused them, we'll provide as much relief as we can. And that will continue.

;;;;; Please, George.

;;;;; Q George Curry (sp), editor-in-chief of the National Newspaper Publishers Association News Service, the Black Press of the United States. I want to return to the subject of the attack on the leadership meeting. There are reports today that the CIA passed along this information, and 45 minutes later there was the actual bombing. Was that information phoned through the headquarters here? And can you tell us, in general terms, the source of that information?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: George, I can't help you very much on that at all. We have a number of methods that we use to gain information, a wide array. And it's just not useful to describe what a particular source is.

;;;;; Generally speaking, for anything that we conduct operations against, a single source is never adequate. So there are always multiple sources that tell us, "We may have something here that is worthy of conducting a military action against."

;;;;; When we're satisfied that that is true, when we believe we can make positive identification of that target area, we make specific decisions: What weapons should be used? How should we deliver it? What is the potential consequence to areas in and around it?

;;;;; Even while we have what we call a time-sensitive opportunity, where it may be fleeting in time and has to be addressed, if it's going to be addressed at all, rather quickly, we still take the same deliberate process of deciding what happens to the area around it.

;;;;; How can we mitigate the effects? Should we choose a different weapon? Should we have it detonate a different way? Should we aim at a specific spot? Should we approach the target in a different way with the delivery system?

;;;;; All these types of things are considerations that go into every attack like that. It's done in a way that is -- frankly it's unparalleled. There is no one else that does it like this, with this degree of precision and deliberateness.

;;;;; So that's how it works. We take whatever information we have. We make sure that it's corroborated, that we're satisfied with the quality of the target. Then we make other decisions on how to attack it. And we try to do that in a way that achieves the desired effect.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please.

;;;;; Q Today is the journalists' day -- three attacks against three journalists killed in a few hours. Why you don't order your forces to avoid the buildings where there are journalists doing their job?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: First, we don't know every place a journalist is operating on the battlefield. We know only those journalists that are operating with us. And we have always said that the area for combat operations is a very dangerous place indeed. And certainly there should be no surprise in anyone's mind that eventually operations were going to close on Baghdad. And that's ongoing as we speak.

;;;;; We always regret the loss of any civilian lives -- journalists, non-combatants, people who are used as shields. And we do everything we can to avoid that when we have knowledge of it. There is intermingling that happens, though, on the battlefield. And I don't have enough information to say how the dynamics of the battlefield came together today.

;;;;; What we can be certain of, though, is this coalition does not target journalists. And so anything that has happened as a result of our fire or other fires would always be considered as an accident. And we will look into the circumstances that contributed to it. Where we have responsibility, we'll accept that responsibility.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) At the weekend, your forces broke slightly with the policy of not giving figures for casualties. And indeed, I think first General Perkins (sp) said there had been a thousand casualties in the incursion on Saturday, and then that figure was revised upwards to between 2,000 and 3,000.

;;;;; Can you tell us how many casualties you estimate there have been since then? How many of those were Iraqi forces and how many were civilians? And just for the record, my colleague from Reuter, I think, asked you whether you knew that the Palestine Hotel was a center for journalists. Could you just confirm that you did?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: First, the number of casualties is a figure that can never be completely well-determined. And so, as I have stated on previous days, I'm not going to speculate on exactly how many have been killed on either side and I'm not going to try to characterize the full dimension of that.

;;;;; We know that there have been losses of life. We know that many families have been affected by this on both sides. We know that we've seen people forced into situations by the regime that caused a loss of life, civilian non-combatants in some cases.

;;;;; We know that many have been wounded as a result of combat action, intended or unintended. And certainly, from the regime's perspective, we can't guess whether it was intended or unintended. From the coalition's perspective, we always know that it is unintended.

;;;;; We had some awareness of how the Palestine Hotel might be used and that there are a variety of activities that occur there. There are many places throughout Baghdad, and all who are not part of the regime should be aware that the regime uses places like the Palestine Hotel for other regime purposes. And in doing so, they try to achieve a degree of protection from the other activities that are ongoing there.

;;;;; So we're certainly aware of those types of places, and we've tried to mitigate the risk wherever we can. In some cases the risk cannot be driven to zero.

;;;;; Yes, ma'am, please.

;;;;; Q Good morning, General. Kelly O'Donnell from NBC. There are reports that some American troops are recommending that journalists or civilians in places like the Palestine Hotel hang white sheets. Given the fact that you believe the regime uses that hotel, would you concur with that recommendation? And secondly, can you tell us more about the Rashid Airport circumstances, its operational value, things like that?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: First, on the images of surrender and protection, unfortunately we've found ourselves in a situation where, as those appear on the battlefield, often they are used by regime death squads, Baath Party members, or other regime-related forces to masquerade combat activity.

;;;;; Anything that would help to highlight, I think, would be useful, but we'd still have to take it with a degree of caution and skepticism, given the fact that we're now operating in the heart of the regime. And the regime practices to protect itself in its last days. We expect to be more extreme than ever. And so while that might be useful and helpful, I can't say that it would completely solve the problem at this point in time in terms of who's at risk.

;;;;; Frankly, the best method is to identify themselves and move out of harm's way. And that's a very difficult circumstance now that the battle has been joined inside of Baghdad.

;;;;; As to the Rashid Airport, that's an area also that provides some military advantage and also deprives the regime from being able to use it to depart. It's on the southeast side of the city, between the Diala (ph) River and the Tigris River. That corner is militarily significant, and that is just one of the many operating areas that we will conduct our tactical operations through.

;;;;; Since operations are continuing, I don't want to characterize much more than that, but the forces did enter the airport location this morning and are still doing work to increase the degree of security and control over top of that facility.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: There was resistance, most of it leading to it. And there's also resistance beyond it. Since reports are still coming in from ongoing action, we don't have the full scope of it.

;;;;; But the force I described earlier of T-72 tanks, some artillery systems, some armored personnel carriers, were associated with preventing a crossing of the river. That was defeated. Our First Marine Expeditionary Force succeeded in crossing the Diala (ph) River and proceeded on its attack from there.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q General, Paul Adams, BBC. Let me be the one with the responsibility for asking the daily question about weapons of mass destruction; reports again this morning suggesting that the suspicious site near Karbala has now been discounted. Is that true? And have any other sites yielded anything of interest so far in that regard?

;;;;; And, just going back to the question of the Palestine Hotel, Pentagon officials warned news agencies weeks before this conflict began that they shouldn't be there. Are we now seeing your forces, if you like, compelled to open fire on buildings that they know are occupied by journalists? And unlike the mosques, the sacred sites in other cities, does the presence of a large number of western journalists not represent something that would cause your commanders to (pause)?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, first, on the -- and forgive me; I called your name wrong, Paul. First, on the weapons-of-mass-destruction sites, the one particular one that you're referring to was found east of Karbala. It did have some preliminary testing done that indicated potentially the presence of some agents.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Last Sunday, the Austin American-Statesman printed an article regarding Justice Priscilla Owen's nomination to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals (see attached). I found the article to be inaccurate, one-sided and unfair. I write to encourage you and the members of the Judiciary Committee to read the article with caution.

The case referenced in the article is Ford Motor Co. v. Miles, 967 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. 1998). A copy of the opinion is attached. The litigation arose out of an automobile accident that occurred in Dallas County, Texas in April, 1993. Willie Searcy was riding in a Ford pickup being driven by his step-father, Kenneth Miles, when the pickup collided head-on with another vehicle. Willie was severely injured. The pickup in which Willie was riding had been purchased from a Dallas Ford dealer.

Willie's mother and step-father sued Ford Motor Co. and the Ford dealer, alleging that a defective seat-belt mechanism caused Willie's injuries. The lawsuit was filed in Rusk County, Texas about a year after the accident. It is undisputed that Rusk County had no relationship to the accident or the pickup. The plaintiffs asserted that venue was proper in Rusk County because there were two Ford dealerships in the county and the plaintiffs alleged those dealerships were Ford's "agents" for purposes of the venue statute. Ford asserted that venue was not proper in Rusk County. Ford sought to move the lawsuit to Dallas County because the accident occurred in Dallas County, the pickup was purchased and serviced in Dallas County, and Ford's regional headquarters was located in Dallas County. The trial court overruled Ford's motion to transfer venue.

A trial on the merits resulted in a sizeable judgment in favor of the plaintiffs ($30 million in actual damages and $10 million in punitive damages). Both sides appealed. The court of appeals affirmed in part and reversed in part. See Miles v. Ford Motor Co., 922 S.W.2d 572 (Tex. App.—Texarkana 1996), reversed 967 S.W.2d 377 (Tex. 1998). A copy of the court of appeals' opinion is attached. It is important to note that the first substantive issue addressed by the court of appeals was

Ford's assertion that the trial court erred in refusing to transfer the case to Dallas County. The court of appeals affirmed the trial court's refusal to transfer the case and affirmed the actual damages awarded by the judgment, but reversed the trial court's finding of gross negligence and malice as a basis for awarding punitive damages.

Ford then appealed to the Supreme Court of Texas. As you can see from the attached docket sheet, Ford filed its "application for writ of error" with the Texarkana Court of Appeals on July 22, 1996. The court of appeals forwarded the application for writ of error and the appellate record to the Supreme Court of Texas, where it was received on September 5, 1996. Thus, the papers necessary for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Texas actually reached the Court on September 5, 1996.

The Supreme Court of Texas, in an opinion authored by Justice Priscilla Owen and handed down on March 19, 1998, reversed the court of appeals' judgment on the ground that venue was not proper in Rusk County. Reversal was required by Texas law, which mandates a reversal of any case tried in an improper county. I concurred in the Court's opinion and judgment.

With this background, let me turn to the Austin American-Statesman article. There are several misstatements which should be pointed out. First, the article states that the case "sat undecided" in the Supreme Court of Texas for "more than two years." That is not true. The record and application for writ of error were received by the Supreme Court of Texas on September 5, 1996, and an opinion was handed down on March 19, 1998, about a year and a half later. While a year and a half is still too long, it does not give the American Statesman license to distort the facts.

Second, I take exception to the article's reliance on information gained from a former Supreme Court of Texas briefing attorney. In fact, I was disappointed to read the comments attributed to the former briefing attorney, Ms. Hays, regarding the internal operations of the court and conversations among staff about a case, given that these matters are strictly confidential. As Ms. Hays knows, there are numerous reasons why it may take a substantial amount of time to render a decision in a particular case. For example, once a proposed majority opinion garners five votes, those justices who are concurring or dissenting are given additional time to write their opinions. Thus, in my opinion, it was inappropriate for Ms. Hays to lay all the blame for the delay at the feet of Justice Owen. Finally, at the very least, the article should have disclosed that Ms. Hays is not just "a Dallas attorney," but is the chairperson of the Dallas County Democratic Party.

Third, the delay in the ultimate resolution of the lawsuit, at least in part, was attributable to the plaintiffs and their attorneys. The plaintiffs' attorneys made a strategic decision to pursue the lawsuit in a county that had no relationship to the case. That decision, consciously made by plaintiff's attorneys, resulted in a reversal by the Supreme Court of Texas. The American-Statesman's article should have pointed out that plaintiffs often shop for a favorable forum, knowing that they risk reversal if they guess wrong about the appropriateness of the chosen forum.

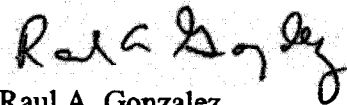

Fourth, according to the article, the court decided the case on "a question that was not among the issues the Supreme Court had agreed to hear when it accepted the case," implying that the court decided the case on an issue not presented. At best, the statement is misleading. As any experienced practitioner before the court knows, once a case is before the court, the whole case is before the court. The court has the right and ability to decide the case on any ground preserved for review and presented in the briefs. In this case, the venue issue was vigorously contested in the trial court, in the court of appeals, and in the briefs before the Supreme Court. It was an issue that was preserved for review and properly presented in the briefs. It, therefore, was appropriate for the court to decide the case on that issue.

Finally, it troubles me that the Austin American-Statesman would accuse a jurist of causing an individual's death under these circumstances. Frankly, I find it both offensive and beyond the bounds of appropriate journalism. Priscilla Owen no more caused the death of Willie Searcy than his attorneys who chose the wrong court to bring the lawsuit. His death was caused by an unfortunate accident. A judge of a court should not allow the bad facts such as these, to result in bad law. Justice Owen did her job as a member of the Supreme Court of Texas by writing a well-reasoned opinion that I believe reached the correct result in a heart-wrenching case. By any objective standard, this should not disqualify her from serving on the Fifth Circuit.

In closing, I served with Justice Owen for a number of years on the Supreme Court of Texas. I found her to be apolitical, extremely bright, diligent in her work, and of the highest integrity. I recommend her for confirmation without reservation.

Cordially,

Raul A. Gonzalez
Justice, Supreme Court of Texas (retired)

While a year and a half is still too long, it does not give the American Statesman license to distort the facts.

Second, I take exception to the article's reliance on information gained from a former Supreme Court of Texas briefing attorney. In fact, I was disappointed to read the comments attributed to the former briefing attorney, Ms. Hays, regarding the internal operations of the court and conversations among staff about a case, given that these matters are strictly confidential. As Ms. Hays knows, there are numerous reasons why it may take a substantial amount of time to render a decision in a particular case. For example, once a proposed majority opinion garners five votes, those justices who are concurring or dissenting are given additional time to write their opinions. Thus, in my opinion, it was inappropriate for Ms. Hays to lay all the blame for the delay at the feet of Justice Owen. Finally, at the very least, the article should have disclosed that Ms. Hays is not just "a Dallas attorney," but is the chairperson of the Dallas County Democratic Party.

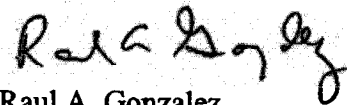

Third, the delay in the ultimate resolution of the lawsuit, at least in part, was attributable to the plaintiffs and their attorneys. The plaintiffs' attorneys made a strategic decision to pursue the lawsuit in a county that had no relationship to the case. That decision, consciously made by plaintiff's attorneys, resulted in a reversal by the Supreme Court of Texas. The American-Statesman's article should have pointed out that plaintiffs often shop for a favorable forum, knowing that they risk reversal if they guess wrong about the appropriateness of the chosen forum.

Fourth, according to the article, the court decided the case on "a question that was not among the issues the Supreme Court had agreed to hear when it accepted the case," implying that the court decided the case on an issue not presented. At best, the statement is misleading. As any experienced practitioner before the court knows, once a case is before the court, the whole case is before the court. The court has the right and ability to decide the case on any ground preserved for review and presented in the briefs. In this case, the venue issue was vigorously contested in the trial court, in the court of appeals, and in the briefs before the Supreme Court. It was an issue that was preserved for review and properly presented in the briefs. It, therefore, was appropriate for the court to decide the case on that issue.

Finally, it troubles me that the Austin American-Statesman would accuse a jurist of causing an individual's death under these circumstances. Frankly, I find it both offensive and beyond the bounds of appropriate journalism. Priscilla Owen no more caused the death of Willie Searcy than his attorneys who chose the wrong court to bring the lawsuit. His death was caused by an unfortunate accident. A judge of a court should not allow the bad facts such as these, to result in bad law. Justice Owen did her job as a member of the Supreme Court of Texas by writing a well-reasoned opinion that I believe reached the correct result in a heart-wrenching case. By any objective standard, this should not disqualify her from serving on the Fifth Circuit.

In closing, I served with Justice Owen for a number of years on the Supreme Court of Texas. I found her to be apolitical, extremely bright, diligent in her work, and of the highest integrity. I recommend her for confirmation without reservation.

Cordially,

Raul A. Gonzalez
Justice, Supreme Court of Texas (retired)

Steve and Keith would like to meet with you sometime today if that's possible regarding airline anti-trust issues.

They are both free between noon and 2pm. What works for you?

Let me know. Thanks!

Lauren

I am hearing from State that Hegel will work with Lugar and Biden to eliminate provision but only if we support a victims compensation program.

They claim to be willing to do a PSOB model of the type we could accept, but of course, the minute we let Hegel tee it up with Administration support, we will be off the races on another compensation program.

Need to decide course of action.

need to communicate it to the speaker. You mentioned to Dan earlier an Armitage letter. Does that offer options? The Speaker, along with delay, is not gearing up to fight this one. And our usual ally on this issue, frank wolf, has not been as agitated on this as he has in the past.

Timeline is action today.

WSJ – Asbestos Games – A12

Miracles do happen, even in Washington. The latest is that Congress is finally getting serious about solving the asbestos litigation mess. The worry now is that the perfect will become the enemy of the better.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch has promised asbestos reform this year, and his committee already has a promising bill from Republican Senator Don Nickles. But just as things were chugging along, the business community split and Big Labor and the tort bar made new demands. So Mr. Hatch (who'd like a bipartisan solution) is now engaged in the Hans Blixian search for perfection while the window of political opportunity closes.

The problem is urgent enough. To date, asbestos lawsuits have driven 67 companies into bankruptcy and another 8,400 to court. Tens of thousands of workers have lost their jobs or seen their 401(k) plans implode. Meanwhile, the truly sick can't get compensation because claims by the healthy are clogging the courts.

The Nickles solution would cut through the court overload by setting medical standards for who can sue. His approach was gaining momentum until the unions and several asbestos companies resurrected a plan to set up a national asbestos trust fund. We're told Senator Hatch now wants to do it all – that is, set medical standards, create a new "asbestos court" and establish two trust funds (one financed by asbestos firms and one by insurers).

We have nothing in theory against either a special court or a trust fund. We like a trust fund when it was the only reform on the table because it envisioned strong medical standards and provided asbestos companies with finality. That's why some companies still prefer a fund.

The problem is that the fund concept is now being used as a poison pill to kill reform. Unions and liberal Senators want a fund in lieu of any real medical standards, meaning it would become a kind of permanent legal slush fund. Such class-action specialists as Fred Baron are also demanding an opt-out clause in case payoffs aren't large enough to keep them in new yachts. Mr. Hatch may find that in wooing these holdouts he will so gut reform that he loses Republicans and kills its chances in this Congress.

Senator Nickles's simple bill is attractive enough. It gives anyone with an asbestos-related cancer the automatic right to sue. Anyone with "non-malignant" diseases – asbestosis, pleural thickening – or other complaints would have to fit an American Medical Association definition of "impairment" to sue. If they don't meet that definition now, they can always sue later when they do.

The Nickles's bill would still allow the terminally ill to forum shop and it gives the tort bar its share of the lucre. It walks a fine enough political line to satisfy much of the business community. And medical standards have the support of both the American Bar Association and that part of the tort bar that still has a conscience. The bill therefore has a chance to win enough Democratic votes to defeat a filibuster.

Mr. Hatch's latest trust fund detour has had the effect of causing some of these Democrats to walk away from reforms they earlier endorsed. After more than a decade of waiting for some relief from the asbestos scourge, both the economy and truly sick need a real solution, not more political games.

I talked to John and think we cleared up the "language" issue.
The "language" is the basic bill language that John has worked on (which of course is different from original State draft) and he just sent that to me for review. I will do nothing with it other than review it and give comments back to John, who has control of the master document.

Thanks Brett. We could probably accomplish this with a conf call. Who else, if anyone, would need to participate?

Subject: APRIL TEXAS TRIP

As discussed, this addresses the Judge and Mrs. Gonzales' proposed travel to Texas on Friday, April 25, and Saturday, April 26, 2003.

The rules regarding the Judge's travel to these events differ from those for Mrs. Gonzales, and the analysis below reflects the different travel status and rules involved for each traveler.

The Judge's Travel

Friday, April 25: Hispanic Public Policy Institute Hispanic Leadership Luncheon

· Judge Gonzales may accept the invitation to be the Key Note Speaker at Friday's Hispanic Public Policy Institute (HPPI) Hispanic Leadership Luncheon, at which Hispanic elected officials will be honored, and give an oral presentation focusing on his official duties or on the policies, programs, or operations of the White House. Acceptance of the invitation and travel payment regarding this event would not cause a reasonable person with knowledge of all the relevant facts to question the integrity of White House programs or operations.

· Because the Judge's travel to Friday's HPPI luncheon involves an official speaking engagement, his travel to Texas on Friday morning should be handled as official travel and as a TEFOS, from HPPI (which is a private, non-profit organization, and not a "527(e)" political entity).

Saturday, April 26: Travis County Republican Party Lincoln-Reagan Day Dinner

· Following the HPPI event, the Judge's travel in Texas (and return to Washington), and related lodging and meal expenses, will be provided by the Travis County Republican Party, for his participation in Saturday's Lincoln-Reagan Day Dinner, a political event at which the Judge will be an honoree.

· The Judge's travel expenses regarding Saturday's Lincoln-Reagan Day Dinner must actually be from and provided by the Travis County Republican Party itself, and not from any one private individual.

Mrs. Gonzales' Travel

Friday, April 25: Hispanic Public Policy Institute Hispanic Leadership Luncheon

· Mrs. Gonzales may accept HPPI's invitation to attend the Friday luncheon, and accompany Judge Gonzales to that event, if others in attendance at that event will generally be accompanied by a spouse or other guest.

Saturday, April 26: Travis County Republican Party Lincoln-Reagan Day Dinner

· Mrs. Gonzales may accept an invitation to her from the Travis County Republican Party organization to attend its Lincoln-Reagan Day Dinner.

· She also may accept the Travis County Republican Party's offer to pay her travel expenses to Texas on Friday, April 25, in anticipation of her attendance at the Party's Dinner event on Saturday. However, this travel arrangement should not result in additional expense (e.g, as long as lodging expenses do not increase because she is sharing the accommodations with the Judge).

· Mrs. Gonzales travel expenses for the Texas trip must be provided by the Travis County Republican Party organization, and not from HPPI (even partially), because she may not travel in an official travel status with funding from HPPI under the official travel regulations, and may not accept a gift from HPPI for transportation under the gift rules.

· Mrs. Gonzales' travel expenses regarding Saturday's Lincoln-Reagan Day Dinner also must actually be from and provided by the Travis County Republican Party itself, and not from any one private individual.

coalition members -- have a sophisticated capability to monitor signals in a number of ways. We continue to do that. As to what we've actually received from that, I'm really not willing to go down that road, so I'll just leave it alone and say that we'll continue to evaluate all types of intelligence to try to help us find those last pockets of the regime.

;;;;; Let me come back over to this side. Hold on. I'll come back over here.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q Tim Wrigley (sp) from Jane's Defence Weekly magazine. Could you give us some rundown on the quantity and the types of equipment that you've captured, and what's actually going to happen to the equipment of the Iraqi armed forces?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Well, quantities of equipment would be a challenge for me to be specific because any number I give you right now would be a lie. It changes from hour to hour as we uncover a number of sites throughout the country. But I will say that each day we have uncovered either numbers of destroyed pieces of equipment, which will go to the nearest scrap metal yards and be turned over to people that can do something with it in recycling, or those pieces of equipment that are still functional, we will maintain control of. In some point in the future -- just as we did in Afghanistan, we are rebuilding the Afghan national army -- there will be some form of military security force built back for Iraq, and it would be a shame to not use some of that equipment that is still functional in order to keep the cost of returning that force -- a force in the future.

;;;;; Kelly?

;;;;; Q Thanks, General. Kelly O'Donnell from NBC. Could you give us a snapshot right now of the area of Baghdad that you feel comfortably under coalition control, an assessment of what you think the capability is still of Iraqi forces? And has there been any directive given to U.S. troops not to display a U.S. flag in Iraq again?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: I don't think there's been direction for U.S. forces not to display a U.S. flag. I think you've seen in a couple cases instances where, in sort of enthusiasm and jubilation, we've seen some of our forces bring out the American flag and then think better of it. And truly, there is -- the guidance from headquarters is you have to understand that this is the country of Iraq. We will have our flag over our forces where we find our forces. And where the Iraqi people begin to reclaim their country, then the Iraqi flag will be flown. And I think, for example, yesterday you saw both coming from the same young man. So I think we'll continue to be enthusiastic where we've succeeded and understanding of the importance of establishing Iraq for free Iraqis for the future.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q The assessment of the area of Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Baghdad's still an ugly place.

;;;;; (To next questioner.) Don't go away; I'm going to come over there.

;;;;; (Returning.) Baghdad's still an ugly place. There are many parts of the city that are either not secured by U.S. forces or are sort of unsecured at all, and there are other places in the city where we believe there are still pockets of remaining small elements of Republican Guard, Special Republican Guard and paramilitary forces. And that's really the objective of our operations in Baghdad now, is to go to those locations and return some stability. In terms of how big a percentage or what have you, it would be, again, unfair because, just as I mentioned with counting tanks, we are succeeding each day to secure more and more of the city, and I think we're making good progress with it.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q (Name inaudible), Irish Times. I had two questions. Number one, where are Saddam, Uday, Qusay, Tariq Aziz, all those other folks? Secondly --

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Do y'all, like, draw straws to see where that question's going to go in the room each day? (Laughter.)

;;;;; Q Secondly -- you're not going to answer this one either -- (laughter, some applause) -- the MOAB. I saw a report on TV this morning that it had been brought in for possible use. Are you going to use it? Is it really necessary at this stage? Thanks.

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Well, I'll go to the second question first. The so-called MOAB, or the BLU-82, which is a 15,000-pound weapon, are surely weapons that are available to us to use really anywhere it's appropriate. We wouldn't want to take away from any commander the opportunity to use appropriate weapons for their part of the battlefield. As to an intention to use it, a target to use it for, I think it would be very unfair of me to presuppose any of those possibilities, and we leave that to the commanders out in the battlefield to make a recommendation on both targets and applicable weapons.

;;;;; With respect to Saddam and Uday and Qusay and Mr. Aziz, don't know where they are. But we'll continue our pursuit of any intelligence that might indicate where they are. I don't know that they're alive and I don't know that they're dead. But that's, again, not really important to us. We will continue to pursue the security and the successful accomplishment of the operation. And as that occurs, those other pieces will fall into place, I'm confident.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q Patrick Moser (ph) from Agence France-Presse. You were talking about the mosque, and you said several people, enemy forces were captured or killed. Can you give us more details as to who they were, whether they were Ba'ath leadership? And also how about casualties on your side?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: We did suffer some wounded. The specific numbers of those casualties, we really don't have a good number, so I'd prefer not to describe that. In terms of the enemy forces, the only report I have that I think is fairly valid is that a number of the killed and captured were dressed in the similar black kinds of garb that we have seen at least other of these paramilitary forces dressed in. Now, whether that means they were Special Republican Guard or Republican Guard who have changed uniforms or some of these other organizations, I'm really not able to give you more specifics on that.

;;;;; Nicole?

;;;;; Q Hi. Nicole Winfield (sp), Associated Press. At the top of the briefing you spoke a bit about Mosul and said that, I think, special forces had moved into the area. Does that mean you're actually in Mosul itself? And what kind of resistance are you meeting there? Are you with any Kurdish fighters as well? And secondly, yesterday we saw some reports of foreign fighters inside Baghdad itself; if you could give an assessment of how big of a role are they playing now in the current resistance in Baghdad, elsewhere? Are you seeing more coming in even from Syria, from that side, currently?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Oh, you mean bad-guy foreign fighters.

;;;;; Q Bad guy, yeah.

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Okay. That's good, because I didn't know we had some others. (Laughter.)

;;;;; Q Are they still coming into the country as they were a week ago?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Let me first talk to Mosul. We have had and continue to have military forces, U.S. forces, in the vicinity of Mosul. They are supported by -- as you know, we have the 173rd Brigade on the ground. We have additional military force that is continuing to flow into that region. Certainly we have support from the Kurdish fighters in that area.

;;;;; The operations will continue there, and as the U.S. forces see the opportunity and can seize the opportunity to further expand, to push the Iraqi forces out of Mosul or Kirkuk or other places, they'll certainly try to take advantage of that. As we flow forces from the south to the north, we will continue to squeeze those forces. So in terms of do we have U.S. forces in Mosul, I'm not aware that we do. But we certainly have U.S. forces that are close by, observing, calling fires and taking advantage of opportunities that might arise.

;;;;; Q And foreign?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Foreign fighters. You know, we've had some reports. We had a number of reports about a week ago. We've since seen fewer reports, but we have had a number on the battlefield killed or captured. We've not seen additional influxes that I can tell. And as I said, I think our forces in the west are doing a pretty credible job of keeping elements from coming into the country that aren't desired.

;;;;; Now let me go back here. Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q I'm George Kerr (ph), editor-in-chief of National Newspaper Publishers Association News Service, the black press of the United States. I want to go back to a point that General Brooks made yesterday. He conformed that uniforms of U.S. personnel have been found in Rasheed, near the airport, at the old prison. Without going into the names, unless you want to volunteer that --

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: (Laughs.) It's a good try.

;;;;; Q -- (laughs) -- thank you -- could you tell us whether those names match the names of those who are prisoners of war or missing in action? And also, do you have any information on their conditions?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: No, I can't confirm that, and won't confirm that, whether they match names, don't match names. I think what General Brooks said is we had evidence of U.S. that may have been held there because we saw some U.S. uniforms. I think it would be unfair to speculate anything more than that. And so I'll leave it at that.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q Autie Raval (ph), ABC News. As law and order becomes more of a concern in Baghdad, how are coalition forces changing their military orientation from one of combat to one of stability? That's the word you mentioned at least five times now in the last half hour or so. How are you changing your military operations, your orientation, so that soldiers might have to become more of a military policeman in the streets of Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Well, that's a good question. Our forces have been trained for a broad variety of circumstances on the battlefield, and some of those circumstances are civil military operations. I hesitate to say military police, because that's really not their task. But, for example, in the Marine side of the city, part of the training of our Marines is to deal in both urban environments and to deal in a relationship of civil military kinds of operations. And I think the answer to the question is it will be a natural transition from combat to providing presence and stability -- that's six times in a half an hour -- into these neighborhoods. And there's probably a very good reason why I say that. It is important for us to create the environment that is secure. And with a secure environment come the more routine functions of day-to-day life -- schools reopening, markets reopening. Those things add to and create stability in each of those neighborhoods. That doesn't mean you have to be the enforcer of the law on the street. I think you can do that with presence and compassionate relationships with the members of the community. I think that's the direction we'll go forward.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q Greg Gordon (sp) from Newsday. Let's go back north again. Two questions. Tikrit: You said something that surprised me a little bit, that we don't have significant forces around Tikrit right now, I think since some of us hear that was potentially the last stand, the last battlefield. Can you paint us a picture of what the United States has in Tikrit and perhaps what Iraq has there?

;;;;; Kirkuk: You are describing a situation that what a lot of people were referring to before the war as the Afghan model, where Special Forces would team up with local fighters, but the local fighters, in this case the Kurds, would sort of do the fighting on the United States' behalf. Is that a sense, the sense of what's happening around Kirkuk right now?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: No, I think -- I think the way we used our Special Forces in Afghanistan was appropriate to that situation. I think the way we are using our Special Forces in the Kurdish territory and in northern Iraq, while it has many of the attributes, is unique to that environment. So I'll say, no, it's not the way -- I wouldn't say it is the Afghan model.

;;;;; And that will beg the question, So, what are you doing? Well, I think the answer to the question is allow time to show, and you will see the results.

;;;;; With respect to Tikrit, certainly Tikrit is one of the key strongholds, potential strongholds of the Baath Party and the Tikriti clan, and that is an area that is important to us. I don't want to misrepresent the fact that we have put a great deal of emphasis on Tikrit. Some of it has been conventional, some of it has been unconventional. In many of those cases it doesn't take many people to create a desired effect. So we'll continue to increase our emphasis on Tikrit and other of the remaining strongholds of the Baath Party, and continue to operate along the plan, the timeline that we have laid out.

;;;;; Let me come over to this side first. Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- China Radio International. General, can you tell us how many hospitals in Baghdad have been under control of the coalition forces? And the Red Cross says many of the hospitals are overwhelmed by patients. Can you describe the situation there?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Well, we -- as far as we know, there are about 125 or so hospitals within the greater Baghdad area. We have been trying to do surveys of those. There are certainly some who have a large number of patients, and that have been hit by a lack of electricity and lack of water.

;;;;; As to how many of that 125, I can't really say. We are continuing to expand those assessments. One thing is clear: that we are attempting to identify those areas where we can restore power and water very rapidly. We are trying to move some additional supplies into some of the most hard-hit of the hospitals, and we will continue to do that over time. And that operation will expand just as our military operations within the city have expanded.

;;;;; Yes, ma'am?

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- from Reuters. Going back to Kirkuk, how are you going to reconcile the different -- the different desires of the Kurds and Turkey? And if the Kurds seem to have gone into Kirkuk, which is very much what Turkey was worried about, are you in contact with Turkey to reassure them? Are you trying to persuade the Kurds not to take up certain positions? How will you reconcile that?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Well, first, I'd say that the coalition forces are in direct contact with all of the parties in the region -- the Turks, the Kurds, both sides, the PUK and the KDP. It is clear to all of those what our position is, what our guidance is to the forces on the ground, and I think we will be able to maintain a very consistent approach to that problem over time. So I am not worried that one side may miscalculate the other. We continue to work very aggressively with both sides to ensure that our intentions are very clear: is to return stability to the country as quickly as we can.

;;;;; Yes, ma'am?

;;;;; Q Sir, Margaret Brandt (ph) with Newsweek magazine. Is there any more detail you can give us by MEF rolling into Baghdad yesterday? Did it happen more quickly than you expected? Were they responding to some opening that --

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: No. Actually the construct of that operation was designed initially to provide an encirclement, if you will, and then to move through the main sectors, the area between the canal and the river, and then the area to the east of the canal. It was designed to be a coordinated effort, and it worked pretty much right on the plan.

;;;;; Yes, sir?

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- the Moscow Channel. Two questions, general, if you please. First, there was information in some media that Saddam -- two nights ago Saddam left in the direction to Iran. That's why Fedayeen left the city and it was not a big battle. Please, do you think the operation will be complete if you will not find Saddam, like it was in Afghanistan with Osama bin Laden?

;;;;; And the second question. Before the war, Iraq had something about 3,500 tanks. And according to the information from Internet, from Russian satellites, the coalition has not destroyed half of these tanks. Where are these tanks now? Just what part of it you have and what part of it is now with the Iraqis? Are they just in Tikrit? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Okay, two good questions. First, I guess I would not argue with what Russian satellites are able to see. I'd just say that our estimates may differ a little bit, and we feel that we have either taken control of -- which means we may not have destroyed, we may own them now -- or destroyed a substantial portion of the armor that is -- that was -- that made up the Iraqi military.

;;;;; With respect to Saddam, it would be surprising to me that Saddam would go to Iran. I wouldn't think he would have a hearty welcome there. And with respect to completing the operation, you'll recall that, as we said a number of times, the operation is designed to end the regime, to take away any capability to use weapons of mass destruction, and to eliminate the possibility that either support of terrorism could occur here or that proliferation of those weapons would continue.

;;;;; I have time for one more.

;;;;; Q Hi, it's Paul Hunter (sp) from Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Notwithstanding there are still pockets of fighting going on in Baghdad, can you explain how winning Baghdad alters or assists you in the search for weapons of mass destruction? Does this mean you can -- there are resources freed up or that there are documents that you now have access to? And what are you doing to exploit that?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: That's a good question. We've said a couple of times that we believe that many of the sources of information would be in and around the Baghdad area. And so as we move into that area and establish more and more control, we hope to gain access to more and more of the facilities that may yield some of that information.

;;;;; I think, also, it's important to say that many of the places where WMD might be hidden are not going to be obvious to the eye, and we are going to have to use some detailed intelligence study, and then some very detailed detective work to identify some of these locations and then exploit them. certainly as you stabilize Baghdad, the force requirements to be in the city will adjust slightly, and I would hope that that would give us some additional capability to get out to some of the other outlying areas that may not yet have been visited. I appreciate everybody's time. Thank you very much.

END.

UNITED STATES CENTRAL COMMAND DAILY PRESS BRIEFING
BRIEFERS: MAJ. GEN. VICTOR RENUART, DIRECTOR OF OPERATIONS; BRIG. GEN.
VINCE BROOKS, DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF OPERATIONS

DOHA, QATAR
7:03 A.M. EDT, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2003

GEN. RENUART: ;Good afternoon, everybody. I'm General Gene Renuart, director of operations for United States Central Command.; I want to spend a little bit of time with you today summarizing some of the activities that we've seen over the last day or two. General Brooks will follow with some specifics on some of the key aspects of the campaign that we feel like are important to make you aware of.

;;;;; Our message has been consistent. Some of you say, "You stand up here and tell us every day you're on plan." I think that's a good thing, and we are on plan. We continue to conduct our operations throughout the country. We continue to reduce pockets of resistance, especially in the southern areas, where we see a growing air of security among the cities from Basra continuing up until -- up to Baghdad. We've seen a lot of activity in Baghdad over the past 48 hours. Those operations continue, and I'll talk a little bit about those a little later in the briefing.

;;;;; But it's important to note that despite what you see in terms of localized euphoria in places in the -- in some of the cities, that this -- this operation is a long way from complete. We have localized pockets throughout the area of the greater Baghdad area that we have to deal with, and we have a number of areas throughout the country that are not yet stabilized, that are not yet engaged in terms of reducing or eliminating the Iraqi military, the paramilitary forces, the Ba'ath Party, and some of the leadership.

;;;;; So, there's a long way to go still. We'll continue on our path, continue on our track, and we will in the end reach all of our objectives.

;;;;; And as we've said over time, each -- really each time we've been up here, none of that comes for free. The men and women of our coalition are bearing a heavy cost, and we always take a moment to remember those military personnel, their families, and also the members of the civilian population, and sort of what I'll say third parties -- members of the media, members of the IOs and NGOs that have been caught in some of the firing around the country. The war comes -- brings with it a cost that affects us all.

;;;;; Just to give you a summary of operations that have been ongoing, the outer cordon in the vicinity of Baghdad really is complete. Elements of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force and 3rd U.S. Division have completed the cordon around, and we believe we've cut the major routes in and out of the city, eliminating the opportunity for large forces to move in and reinforce, and certainly complicating the problem of anyone trying to leave the city.

;;;;; In the south, the first U.K. Armored Division is conducting a number of operations in the Basra area, and continuing to move to the north to link up with elements of the 1st Marine Division in the vicinity of Al-Amara. We have now secured all of the southern oil fields. We're in the process of moving through those oil fields to ensure they are secure, and I'm pleased to say that about 800 of the thousand wellheads have physically been inspected, and the repair requirements have been determined for many of those. That work continues, and we think we'll have those inspections completed over the next few days.

;;;;; In each area where we go, the population seems supportive and continues to welcome our coalition forces.

;;;;; And interesting side line in Basra, I've mentioned the U.K. has been actively engaged there, is doing a superb job -- they report that some of the senior clerics are now coming out into the city asking for two things: one, for our help to pronounce looting to be illegal, and ask us to help with reinforcing their curfew in the city so that we don't have large groups of folks roaming around at hours that could get them into trouble. They've also -- the clerics have also asked for their local citizenry to turn in weapons. So, those are very positive things, and those are, while they are things we enjoy success with and we are pleased with, the best story is it's coming from the leadership of the company -- or the communities themselves.

;;;;; In the center part of the country, the 101st Airborne Division conducted operations near the town of al-Hilla. They returned stability to that area. Found four warehouses of food that were held by the regime. We are now turning that around and distributing it to the local population.

;;;;; Throughout the southern region of the country, the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force has been actively engaged providing humanitarian assistance and civil military support. General Brooks will talk to that here in just a minute, with a number of anecdotal pieces that will demonstrate a real success story and something we're really pleased with.

;;;;; In Baghdad, I mentioned operations are ongoing. They are active in terms of combat operations. We've had a number of localized pockets of resistance, and some combat operations that are more substantial through the city, as we engage targets of regime leadership and paramilitary forces. At the same time -- and we've talked before about those two pillars at this campaign -- at the same time we're conducting assessments of the utility systems in the city, the sanitation capability, the hospitals to see if we can very rapidly infuse water, electricity, sanitation into those areas and to those facilities so that we can return quality care to the people of Baghdad.

;;;;; One note out in the west, another good news story in the town of ar-Rutpah (sp), our special forces had a meeting with the leaders in the community. That town has in fact declared itself open to coalition forces. We've met with the new mayor and his town council. They've asked for our help in returning power to the community and working the flow of water. We've assisted them by providing power generation equipment to get the wells running, and then we have a repair team going in to help with some of the power generation capability for the city. So, a lot of real success stories there.

;;;;; There's been some questions about media access for the people of Iraq. And we have been working very hard over the last week to get a media broadcast capability to bring into Baghdad. We hope we'll have that in very soon, and we're working very aggressively to find the contacts within the city and in the country who would like to begin an Iraqi broadcast network, if you will, and over the coming days and weeks we hope to allow the free Iraqis to begin their own TV, radio throughout the country.

;;;;; In the meantime, our information operations continue with themes like tune into our information radio and TV to ensure that they understand that Baghdad is still not a safe city, and that they should try to remain in their homes, not be out in the streets, and certainly not be anywhere where former regime officials might be.

;;;;; I think the final point I'll make before I turn it over to General Brooks is that as we have been aggressively planning military operations for a military victory, we've also been equally involved planning for the peace that follows. We're not sure when a military victory will be complete. As I said, there's still work to do. But we want to ensure that in parallel we are planning for the follow-on operations to ensure stability, to bring the infrastructure of the country back up to pace, so we're reviewing railroads, road infrastructure, bridge work, power, lights, water -- all of those things in the major metropolitan areas around the country so that we can begin to infuse elements to repair and restore each of those capabilities just as rapidly as we can.

;;;;; With that, I'll turn it over to General Brooks and let him walk you through a couple of the key activities over the last few days.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Thanks, General. Ladies and gentlemen, as General Renuart said, our operations do continue, and so do our efforts to transition the liberated areas into the future of Iraq.

;;;;; Our coalition special operations forces will be where I begin today. We have succeeded in maintaining a lethal pressure against Iraqi forces in northern Iraq, and consolidated some gains in the area of Mosul. I talked about that yesterday, up in this area, where Iraqi forces have been pushed back from what was the green line, and under coalition special operations force lead, supported by some Peshmerga, they've moved into that area and begun to consolidate around the area. It's not yet secure; there's still work to be done.

;;;;; In the west, special operations continued against regime forces in the town of Al-Qa'im. And this is an area that is strategically located on the route that joins Syria and Iraq, and it also is an area that is potentially for use by the launch -- for the launching of ballistic missiles.

;;;;; General Renuart talked about what happened in ar-Rutpah (sp). That is a very good news story indeed. That was a scene of fighting early in the war, and at this point now, special operations forces having joined with the citizens of ar-Rutpah (sp), and being welcomed in a friendly way, are able to get on with the work that's necessary to carry on to the future together.

;;;;; Finally, our special operations forces in this case also conducted operations near Hadithah Dam. This is an area we've spoken about before. Hadithah, located here, to the west, northwest of Baghdad, has a very important dam that we have been able to secure for a period of time, and it also serves as an important crossing point over top of the Euphrates River. Two days ago, our special operations forces there were reinforced by coalition armor and infantry, after a movement by air into an airfield that is controlled by special operations forces, and then that was followed by a link-up.

;;;;; I've got a short video that shows you a part of that operation. These are tanks arriving by C-17 aircraft. The Hadithah Dam area. And tanks rolling across the dam. This is really a very good example of the flexibility of the forces that are involved in this operation, and it shows that an even greater set of options now exist to defeat the remnants of the regime.

;;;;; Our special operations forces now control five different airfields, and those are shown by the airplane symbols on this map.

;;;;; Coalition maneuver operations focus in the areas of Karbala -- let's go to the next map, please -- Karbala, al-Hilla, and also Baghdad. And I'll talk about some of the work in each one of those areas.

;;;;; First, as General Renuart mentioned, in Karbala, we continue our efforts to increase the security in the area, eliminating any remaining pockets of regime forces, clearing out buildings that had been used by them for other purposes, and just increasing the security in that very important city.

;;;;; In al-Hilla, coalition forces of 5th Corps attacked during the night to eliminate remaining pockets of regime forces. There were some still present. Our coalition forces encountered some rocket- propelled grenade ambushes on the approach into town, and also found artillery and air defense systems. But they were successful in causing the resistance to collapse. After consolidating, the force found significant amounts of weapons and equipment, and also liberated that warehouse. We believed the warehouse contained foodstuff and fuel that was associated with the Oil-for-Food Program. It was a very large distribution center, it appeared to be, and of course these will be distributed to the population.

;;;;; Can we go to the Baghdad map, please? I just want to highlight a few more things about work in and around Baghdad. The 1st Marine Expeditionary Force increased its presence. They entered from the southeast and also proceeded to the northeast yesterday. There have been pockets of intense resistance in the center of the city, and also near the Imam al-Adham (sp) mosque, which is located in this area, and that's where the fighting occurred this morning. At this point, the fighting has ended. We know that the mosque was used, and the area around it, for fighting positions for that intense fight that occurred this morning, and the assessments of the fight are ongoing.

;;;;; Fifth Corps forces also increased their presence in several areas west of the Tigris River to further eliminate any pockets of resistance. There was one example of a fight that occurred last night where some regime forces attempted to cross the Tigris River in boats and they were driven back.

;;;;; Our coalition forces continue to interact with the population, and that helps us to gain additional information. You have seen some of the scenes of interaction on the streets. The white circles, just like yesterday, show generalized areas where we've been conducting operations over the last 24 hours. Of course, still near Baghdad International Airport and Rasheed Airport, but it's a much large area now of where we've conducted operations west of the river. We've tightened into this area, and also from the northeast toward the center of town in this area. Operations continue.

;;;;; Of course, there have been reports of ambushes in a number of locations, reinforced in many cases with surface laid mines that have been hastily placed by regime forces that are still out there, and this importantly demonstrates the continuing hazard to not only coalition forces but an even greater hazard to non-combatants that are moving through the area in vehicles.

;;;;; We do continue our efforts in communicating with the Iraqi population, as well as military forces, delivering leaflets by hand and by air, and our broadcasts over the airways. At this point, we've distributed more than a million leaflets yesterday alone, and have reached more than 43 million leaflets overall. And our broadcast messages are adjusting to account for the changes in circumstances as we find them. The good news is we are quickly moving beyond the one- way communications of broadcasts and interacting directly with the population every day.

;;;;; Finally, in the area of humanitarian assistance and efforts, something that becomes increasingly important with each day that passes, are we find that the initial needs that our forces encounter are in the areas of food, water and medical. And while there has not been a crisis in food availability, our coalition forces are able to provide some supplements to the existing food stocks.

;;;;; What I have here is an image of daily rations. (Image is shown.) These were distributed by hand, and we've shown images like that before. What I want to highlight here is two different types of humanitarian daily rations. We've had questions about that before. (Image is shown.) You see the yellow ones that have been seen in other operations. And again, we are distributing these by hand, not air- dropping them.

;;;;; But the new type is a different color, to make it very clear that it's not anything close to any munitions that might be hazardous. (Image is shown.) They're salmon-colored. And there's an additional shot here in this case. (Image is shown.) These were distributed by the 82nd Airborne Division near Asamallah (ph) on the 5th of April.

;;;;; We're also expanding our ability to provide medical care on a variety of levels. The arrival of the Spanish ship Galicia yesterday in Umm Qasr brought humanitarian supplies and also a medical bay with over 50 beds and an off-ship field hospital that can be pushed out in the area surrounding that.

;;;;; What we have is a video that was taken during the offloading of the ship. (Video is shown.) This is a very important coalition contribution to the medical condition, and the effort will be provided for the Iraqi population. That's not military medical support that this effort will provide.

;;;;; But that's not the only medical effort. There's also immediate medical attention that occurs in communities every day. (Image is shown.) This image shows a Navy corpsman near Numaniyah assessing immediate medical needs in the community. And a similar image. (Image is shown.) Whenever possible, we can provide treatment for the immediate needs of the population.

;;;;; Clean drinking water continues to be a daily challenge for communities without electrical power. But the coalition is taking several steps to try to meet the immediate needs for water. First, water is trucked into communities and then transferred into distribution bags, like the ones shown in this image. (Image is shown.)

;;;;; In some cases, the coalition dedicates its own water-purification equipment to meet community needs. What you see in this image are three water bags near As Samawa that were filled with water, taken from the Euphrates River, and purified through military water- purification equipment. And those can generate up to 2,000 liters of water an hour.

;;;;; Eventually we believe that our efforts will make the existing water-purification resources, the ones that are part of the Iraqi infrastructure, functional and operational again, like this in Rumaythah (ph) just north of As Samawa, where we're testing the water conditions to ensure that they, in fact, are safe for use again.

;;;;; Throughout the liberated areas of Iraq, there are efforts like these to quickly transition into the future of Iraq.

;;;;; Sir?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Thanks, Vince. Let me -- two points before I open up to questions, one on -- we mentioned the 40-some-odd million leaflets. And people have said, "Well, so what do they really do for you?" Well, let me give you an example. As we were going back into the oil fields with the UK engineers, U.S. engineers, Kuwaiti engineers, and returning the Iraqi oil workers back to the sites, we were interviewing the staff of the Iraqi oil industry.

;;;;; We noticed that many of these wells had, in fact, been wired to be destroyed. And we also noticed that many of them, even though there were explosives set in place, had the valves turned off, so that, even if you had an explosion, it wouldn't necessarily damage the oil well. And we said, "You all were here. You watched this happen. How did they do this?"

;;;;; And they said, "We read your leaflets. We heard your broadcasts. We understand that keeping the oil infrastructure was important for our future. And so while we complied for our own protection with the regime, we ensured that true damage to the oil fields would not occur."

;;;;; So there's a case where a message passed by a number of means -- leaflets, radio broadcasts, and even some television broadcasts -- was getting to the people that could protect the future of the country. So there's a real powerful message there.

;;;;; And I'm pretty old; I forgot what the second point is. I'll get to it in questions.

;;;;; Now, I'm going to start -- I always go to the front row, but I'm going to go to the back first. So let me go back here to the gentleman in the gray shirt, and then I'll come up to the front row in a minute.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- La Repubblica Newspaper of Italy. Could you tell us something more about civil administration? I understand that this pillar of your operation is getting more and more important by the day. So could you tell us about your endeavor to set up a civil administration?

;;;;; We understand that this has been postponed somehow -- maybe you are encountering difficulties; I don't know -- and also about this meeting of all Iraqi political (section?) in Nasiriyah, which had been announced by Vice President Cheney yesterday. And then, I don't know, maybe it has been canceled (or something?). Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Well, let me first say that you're absolutely right, that the pillar of humanitarian assistance, civil affairs, civil military operations is becoming more and more important. But I want to make sure that no one believes that the military operation has even yet slowed down.

;;;;; But let me go back to the issue of civil governance. As we have seen in many of these cities, there is a governance that has been based on tradition for many, many years in many of these cities. It's based on the clerics in the community and the tribal leaders in the community.

;;;;; As we have taken away the regime dominance, if you will, we have seen that re-emerge. That gives us a natural avenue to restore order and to begin to put some structure back into the communities.

;;;;; Clearly the Iraqi people will choose how each of these towns will be governed. Clearly the Iraqi people will choose what their country's government will look like. So we attempt to work with the known and respected leaders in each of the communities to maintain security while the country begins to move forward towards whatever will be the final government.

;;;;; Now, with respect to the meeting that you mentioned, I didn't hear Vice President Cheney's words, so I wouldn't want to quote what he said. But we do intend to have a meeting of many of the interested parties from all over Iraq, both inside and outside the country, to discuss just this point.

;;;;; I can't tell you what will be the outcome, because this truly is the first in a series of discussions to allow the Iraqi people to begin to voice their preference for the future. I don't know of any indication that that has been canceled. In fact, I believe it's still on track. And so the reports that it had been canceled, I can't give you anything there.

;;;;; Yes, sir. Right here.

;;;;; Q Jonathan Marcus, BBC. Two questions about two areas; one, Kirkuk. Could you confirm whether or not Kurdish fighters, backed up by Special Forces, have actually entered the city there? Could you perhaps clarify whether this is a planned operation sponsored by the Americans or a unilateral operation that the Kurdish fighters themselves have embarked upon?

;;;;; The fighting in the second area, over to the Syrian frontier, in al Qaim, or however you pronounce it, we've heard a lot from Donald Rumsfeld about Iraqi leaders moving to Syria, possibly weapons of mass destruction moving to Syria. That is obviously the main shortest land route from the Iraqi capital. Could you kind of settle that in some sort of wider context?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Let me go to your second question first. You're right; the route from Baghdad through Ar Ramadi out to al Qaim is the shortest route to the west out of the country. Our Special Forces, as we've talked over a number of days, are in a position to carefully monitor and control the flow of traffic, both westbound and eastbound, on that road. And we are doing so.

;;;;; With respect to al Qaim, it is, as you know, the border town right along the Syrian border. It has had a substantial presence of Iraqi Special Republican Guard paramilitary force and some regular army units in that area.

;;;;; And we have continued to conduct unconventional warfare direct-action missions and air strikes against those forces. We believe that those forces have been significantly reduced over the last week or two, and we believe we're in a position where we can begin to control that area more freely.

;;;;; I can't put a time on that to you. We'll continue to work that. We continue to have some discussions with leaders in that area, and we believe we're making good progress.

;;;;; With respect to Kirkuk, the first point I would make is that, as you know, we've had Special Forces in the northern region for quite some time. They have established a relationship with fighters in that area, Kurdish fighters in that area, and, in close coordination with the leadership of the Kurdish region, have established that the coalition forces would be the command element, if you will, for operations in the north. So operations that may occur will be done in close coordination with and under the control of our U.S. forces.

;;;;; With respect to this specific story, I don't have information that says are any fighters in the city. I know that there have been a number of movements along what we call the green line over the last week or so. In many cases the Iraqi regular army forces have been falling back away from that. And in many of those cases, our U.S. forces are pushing forward. We'll continue to monitor those operations. And it would be premature to say anything specifically has happened or will happen in the city itself of Kirkuk.

;;;;; Let me come over here. Yes, sir.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) Two questions. One, can you tell us a little bit more about the fighting that's taking place in Baghdad today? We understand there's been some very fierce fighting around an area where it's believed senior Baathist Party members were meeting.

;;;;; And also, could you give us a little more perhaps about what's happening in al Qaim? What is so interesting there for the coalition forces? Is it simply the presence of Special Republican Guards, or is this a missile launch site or weapons of mass destruction? What is it that's specifically interesting to you there?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Let me -- since we were talking about al Qaim, I'll go to that question first. If you look back during the Gulf War, the al Qaim area, greater al Qaim -- that happens to be just a city that's sort of in that region -- but that area was the site of the largest number of surface-to-surface missile launches that occurred from the western portion of Iraq.

;;;;; We clearly are interested in protecting the neighbors in that region, and so it's in our strategic interest to ensure that we preclude any capability of surface-to-surface missiles, especially those that are long-range, to be launched from that area. That allows us to preserve the security of Saudi Arabia, Jordan and other countries on the border.

;;;;; So it's preventive medicine, I think, is probably the best way to describe it. By our presence, by our activity, by our air power, we hope to reduce the possibility that if there is that capability there -- and we truly don't know for sure -- but if there is that capability, that we would prevent it from being a serious factor, especially at this point in the campaign.

;;;;; Now, let me go back to your question on the fight within Baghdad. An interesting dynamic has begun to occur as you see areas of the city sort of shed the bonds of the Iraqi regime. That has brought to light a number of leads -- "They're over here, they're over there" -- wherever they are.

;;;;; I think it's an understandable situation in the city because these people have been held, you know, in terror for quite some time. But not all of those leads are either current or even accurate, but we have to try to run each of them to ground.

;;;;; In this case we had information that a meeting may be occurring of some senior leadership in this particular area of the city. It happened that this area was also an area that was planned for military operations for today. And so the confluence of both of those came together this morning in the vicinity of the mosque that General Brooks mentioned.

;;;;; Our troops were fired on, took heavy fire from the vicinity of this mosque and another location, and were engaged in a fairly heavy firefight for a number of hours. We've resolved that now. We've killed or captured the enemy force that was taking us under fire. And we continue operations through there.

;;;;; We will have a number of these reports, people who believe that they have some information. And we're going to have to take each of those in, evaluate them against what we know to be the case, and then take action either on the ground or through the use of Special Forces, as it's appropriate.

;;;;; Yes, sir. I didn't call on Al Jazeera my last time here, so please let me do that.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Al Jazeera. Can you please update us on the situation in and around Tikrit, what sort of a fight is going on there or what sort of fight you expect?

;;;;; And also the situation in Baghdad and Basra, especially the looting. A couple of months ago the Iraqi government let out a lot of criminals, thousands of criminals out of prisons. And it seems that they're also taking advantage of the power vacuum. What are you going to do about that? Because citizens who are sitting at home are also getting attacked. It's not only government property.

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: That's a very good point and I think it's one that we need to spend a moment on.

;;;;; Two aspects. First, for a city, in some cases cities, maybe even a country that has been held prisoner, there is a great deal of bad feelings towards the regime. So it's not necessarily surprising that many of these people would choose to go to these symbols of regime leadership and take things or express their anger.

;;;;; On the other hand, that's not the way we would like to have cities conduct themselves each day. In the case of Basra, for example, I mentioned some of the senior clerics have asked the UK military to help to provide presence in neighborhoods so that the emotions will have a chance to calm. And that's occurring. And, in fact, today we've seen many fewer reports of that kind of behavior in Basra.

;;;;; Some of the reports that we saw yesterday were from the eastern portion of Baghdad, and those were areas where we had not yet actually put military forces into, but rather the reaction of many of the people in those neighborhoods to small pockets of regime leaders or regime figures in that area.

;;;;; Today we have begun to move some U.S. military, coalition military into some of these areas, and again, it starts to settle. Our intent would be to work with the leaders in each of these areas because I think all of us understand that it's better to have a safe quiet life in our neighborhoods than not. And we will continue, through our civil-military operations, our civil affairs teams and our special forces to work with these neighborhood leaders initially to begin to help to calm their own neighborhoods, and that usually is the best way to succeed. And then over time, the Iraqi officials in cities will begin to build a police force to do the normal security things that we would expect in any city.

;;;;; Q Will you declare a curfew?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: We really haven't addressed that issue. In some areas -- for example, in Basra we were asked if we would consider a curfew. The local commander there is discussing that with the leaders to decide. He was asked by the local community leaders. And they'll make a decision based on what they believe to be appropriate. It may not be for the city. Might be for just an area of a neighborhood. It will depend.

;;;;; Our intent is not to be heavy-handed, but it is to ensure that stability is brought back into the areas. And I think some of the natural emotion will begin to settle and has already.

;;;;; Tom?

;;;;; Q The Tikrit --

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Oh, I'm sorry. Yes, Tikrit. I can't give you a lot on Tikrit because we do not have any substantial U.S. forces in that area. It certainly is an area that we're focused on as we continue our military operations towards the north. As I mentioned, we still have a long ways to go. We've really only covered about half or 60 percent of the country as we move to the north. So we have operations that will continue, that will address those areas that so far we have not been able to get our forces into.

;;;;; Okay. Tom?

;;;;; Q Yes, sir. Tom Itu (ph) with CNN. Your secretary of State demonstrated the ability of the U.S. military to not only monitor but intercept communications from the regime before this conflict even started. I'm curious to know what kind of communications, if any, you are still able to monitor; and are there any communications from the regime, within?

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Boy, you're going to get me in trouble. I'm not sure I can tell you what the secretary of State said, and I wouldn't try to evaluate his comments.

;;;;; Q He had what appeared to be cell-phone recordings before the U.N.

;;;;; GEN. RENUART: Ah. I got it. I got it. I would say that this coalition -- and it's not just the United States, it's certainly all the

1. Yes. 11 pm in our area.
2. great! Do you want to speak with Addington about it or not? Also, do we care if the VP has the CEO of Halliburton over for dinner and it is part of our Presidential records? Just still trying to make sure we don't care, even politically.
3. I want to know if I can move forward on that plan, but haven't decided for sure to move forward with that plan.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT REGULAR BRIEFING
BRIEFER: VICTORIA CLARKE, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE FOR PUBLIC AFFAIRS; AND ARMY GENERAL STANLEY MCCHRYSTAL, VICE DIRECTOR FOR OPERATIONS, J-3, JOINT STAFF

PENTAGON BRIEFING ROOM, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA
1:46 P.M. EDT, THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2003

MS. CLARKE: Good afternoon, everybody. As the statues of Saddam Hussein fall in Baghdad, hopes continue to rise for the people of Iraq. The enemy is surrendering and scattering, but not everyone, and not yet. The fate of Saddam Hussein himself is not clear, and some of his supporters may be willing to go down with him. We continue to search for the remaining enemy in Baghdad and elsewhere. Troops had a fierce fight in northcentral Baghdad within the past 24 hours, leaving at least one Marine dead. And we may well face more tough fighting ahead.

;;;;; The firefight reminds us that in any war, victorious or otherwise, there is a price to be paid. And in the last few days, seven Army soldiers, seven Marines, and one airman have lost their lives. We respect and honor those brave Americans who have paid the price on the battlefield so their fellow citizens can live in peace and freedom.

;;;;; There have been some concerns continued to be expressed about a possible humanitarian crisis in parts of Iraq. As Secretary Rumsfeld said yesterday, the Iraqi people were already suffering before this war started. Saddam Hussein had oppressed and abused his people for many years. The war didn't launch a humanitarian crisis, it is ending one, however. Free of the Iraqi regime, the people and the economy will have a chance to recover and grow.

;;;;; The coalition is giving the Iraqi people substantial amounts of food and medical aid. The British ship Sir Galahad unloaded 200,000- plus tons of food, water and medicine at the port of Umm Qasr. The United States sent off two ships from Galveston, with a total of more than 50,000 tons of wheat for Iraq. Australia is shipping 100,000 tons of wheat. And President Bush and Prime Minister Blair have called for the United Nations to restart the oil-for-food program for Iraq to get more aid to the people immediately.

;;;;; Let me just walk through a few of the key areas of Iraq and give you a sense of what is going on.

;;;;; In Umm Qasr, the water supply is above prewar levels, as the secretary said; electricity is restored; sufficient food is readily available. The medical facilities are sufficient and operating. The United Nations Children's Fund is providing medical supplies to Umm Qasr. The Czech Republic, a coalition partner, is setting up a hospital for enemy prisoners of war in Umm Qasr. A hospital ship from Spain, another coalition partner, has arrived there carrying food and medical supplies.

;;;;; In Basra, food supplies are sufficient; electricity has been restored; piped water is available to 60 to 80 percent of the city, water is being trucked to the suburbs, and supplies are adequate; the medical facilities are functioning at prewar levels.

;;;;; In Nasiriyah, also the food supply is sufficient. However, water is in limited supply, the electricity is not operating well and health care is rudimentary. The first Marine expeditionary force is providing medical support to the population of Nasiriyah. And the United States Agency for International Development is also providing health kits, enough basic health supplies for 5,000 people for three months.

;;;;; In As Samawa, citizens tell us they have stockpiled two to three months of food. We're delivering water supplies and are working to get their water and electricity service back to normal. The medical situation there is still being assessed.

;;;;; In An Najaf, there are no reported shortages of food, and we're working to restore the water and the electricity. The main hospital there is fully operational. On April 7th, an 18-truck relief convoy arrived in An Najaf, coming from Kuwait. The cargo included water, food and medical supplies provided by the Kuwaiti Joint Red Crescent Society. Kuwait is providing humanitarian aid literally every day to the people of Iraq.

;;;;; In Baghdad, the food is adequate. Hospitals are operating at reduced rates, with a large patient load at some hospitals and not at others. Power is down in some parts of the city, but emergency power is going to critical facilities. Their water supply is in no immediate crisis in Baghdad.

;;;;; In northern Iraq, water, electrical, food and medical service all remain at prewar conditions. Five UNICEF trucks carrying 31 tons of hospital equipment and supplies are headed toward northern Iraq, and another 11 UNICEF trucks are destined for southern Iraq.

;;;;; The food supplies are expected to last for some time, but obviously, we remain concerned. And that's why we are working so hard with our coalition partners to make sure the Iraqi people get what they need.

;;;;; General McChrystal?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Thank you, Ms. Clarke.

;;;;; Operation Iraqi Freedom continues. As Ms. Clarke mentioned, and as the secretary and the chairman clearly stated yesterday, the conflict is not over. Since the Saddam statue was toppled yesterday, two U.S. servicemen were killed and several dozen injured in firefights throughout Baghdad and around the country. We continue to discover weapons caches and military equipment hidden and abandoned. Death squads still pose a threat. And there's still coalition forces fighting organized resistance in the north near Tikrit and Mosul.

;;;;; We've already begun removing remaining pockets of resistance in the north. Specifically, earlier today, elements of the 173rd Airborne Brigade entered the town of Kirkuk, meeting minimal resistance.

;;;;; I have three pre- and post-strike images for you today that indicate the kinds of targets we've been focusing on lately. All three are from the Tikrit area.

;;;;; The first one is of a Special Republican Guard military barracks. It also housed an obstacle course, a small-arms firing range, and a parade field. The second one is of a VIP retreat house. The residence was used by a small network of VIPs when they needed to move from place to place around the country while maintaining command and control for Saddam's regime. And the last image is of a facility that was used to jam radio broadcasts of foreign news services and internal groups that tried to disseminate news and ideas contrary to the regime's viewpoint.

;;;;; And with that, we'll be happy to take your questions.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Charlie?

;;;;; Q Torie, regarding Kirkuk, you've said repeatedly from this podium that Kirkuk and the northern Iraqi oil fields are extremely important. You said that, I believe, units from the 174th Airborne entered Kirkuk today, meeting minor resistance. Our story out of Kirkuk says, in fact, that Kurdish forces have taken control of Kirkuk, under the auspices -- (inaudible) -- U.S. forces. When will U.S. forces take control of Kirkuk? The Turks are quite worried about this, and they seem to feel that U.S. forces are going to throw the Kurds out of Kirkuk. What's the situation there? When will U.S. forces take control of Kirkuk?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, the situation is fluid and has been all day. In fact, Kurdish forces, a combination of KDP and PUK forces, entered Kirkuk earlier today with United States Special Forces with them. Elements of the 173rd Airborne Brigade, in fact, followed them later in the morning and are now in the city as well. We view it as an important opportunity that was given when regular army forces in the north, Iraqi regular army forces in the, north pulled back.

;;;;; Q Do U.S. forces now control Kirkuk or do the Kurds? And the Turks seem to feel that they've been assured by Secretary Powell that Kurdish forces will be removed from Kirkuk, and yet the White House says that U.S. forces were sent to be -- who controls Kirkuk?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I think the situation is fluid. We have United States forces in Kirkuk. We are talking very closely with the Turkish forces as well, as we have been throughout this, as they are a coalition partner.

;;;;; Q Is that a battalion-size force, the 173rd, or larger?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, the first element that went in was about a battalion-size force, and then they retain the capability to reinforce as required.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: And I would just add on, we tend to stay away from words like "control," for the obvious reasons and because these situations do remain fluid, often, for quite some time.

;;;;; But looking at it from the other perspective, the Iraqi regime no longer controls that town.

;;;;; Carl?

;;;;; Q Torie, there was another suicide bombing in Baghdad today. I wondered, A, if you could give us any detail of that, and B, if you could address the issue of how concerned you are as the organized fighting goes down and the Fedayeen Saddam or whomever does more and more of these suicide bombings in various parts of the country.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, I think we're very concerned about it, because force protection is a complex task, because, as you try to allow life to get back to normal, maintaining protection of your forces is increasingly difficult, as we transition from high-intensity combat. This certainly reinforces the danger that will remain.

;;;;; So we'll have to take all the steps that we do in any other high-threat environment to both protect the population and allow them to try to get some semblance of normalacy (sic) -- normality, but still protect ourselves.

;;;;; Q Any details on the bombing that took place today?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, all I've seen is the initial articles.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Bill?

;;;;; Q It's been several days since there have been reports of chemical weapons. Do you have any update on whether the tests on those weapons prove that there are chemical weapons?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: No update.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: None, sir.

;;;;; Q There's a report with the Pittsburgh Tribune Review, embedded with a Marines unit at the Al-Tuwaitha facility, and he reports that a large underground facility has been found there and that he has been told by the Marines of the possible presence of weapons-grade plutonium.

;;;;; Now, understanding that initial reports are sometimes wrong and you want to give tests, can you tell us anything about this, what you know about it, anything that's developing?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I really can't. I'm only aware of the report from the embedded reporter.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I'm in the same situation.

;;;;; Q Okay. What about the process? When these reports come in, does the exploitation task force then go in right away? How does that work?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I think every situation is different. The one common factor is, it takes time. It's hard work. It is a long process. You often have, in different circumstances -- sometimes things test positive, and then it turns out to be negative. We're taking our time, and we remain focused on the primary task of winning the war. Doesn't mean we can't do other things at the same time. We do. But we will take our time and do it properly.

;;;;; Q Can there be definitive tests on the ground, or do all of these samples have to be sent back to the United States?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I don't know. I think different circumstances will be different.

;;;;; Q Torie, a question for General McChrystal. General, yesterday General Myers said that there are approximately 10 divisions of the regular Iraqi Army in northern Iraq. Can you tell us, without violating OPSEC, roughly where they are? Are they around Tikrit or elsewhere?

;;;;; And perhaps more important, what is the -- what is the fighting capability of those forces as intelligence analyzers? Are they well trained, poorly trained, well equipped, poorly equipped? What can you tell us about them?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Yes, sir. If you remember, some weeks ago there were also two Republican Guard divisions up north as well, which were essentially backstopping the regular army divisions, which at that time were 11, I believe, in the north, and they pulled one south. They have been viewed on the low end of the spectrum of the Iraqi army, on the low end of readiness of the regular army. And so they have not been viewed as combat-ready as some of their other forces, and certainly less than the Republican Guard.

;;;;; We have been targeting them aggressively, both from the air, and then with the Special Operations Forces, for the last days. And we judge their capability to have dropped significantly, both from casualties and also from people just simply leaving the battlefield.

;;;;; Q Are they the last main force, so to speak, of Iraqi troops?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Sir, they are the last significant formations on the battlefield that we're aware of.

;;;;; Q I want to go back to the 173rd -- (word inaudible). Can you give a sense of when elements of the 173rd will actually seize or -- will seize the oil fields up there? A lot of the world wants to know that. And what steps are being taken to reinforce what's essentially a 2,000-person light brigade? Are there steps -- is the 4th going to go up there at some point?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Well, that'd be a decision for General Franks. I think it's, clearly, just an option at this point. We have -- and you may have seen -- begun to reinforce the 173rd from outside by air with some heavy forces, and that will continue to the extent that General Franks sees the need to do that.

;;;;; And then, as for their move into the oil fields, that's clearly a future operation. They respond to opportunities and to the enemy situation on the ground.

;;;;; Q Well, it's an obvious one, though. I mean, in the next day or two, is it likely they'll go in?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: I just wouldn't speculate on a future op like that.

;;;;; Q Can I just sort of follow on that? The oil fields themselves, sir, have you seen any instance of sabotage in there by the Iraqi regime?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: I wouldn't go into detail. We're certainly concerned about that and certainly looking for that.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Barbara?

;;;;; Q General McChrystal, understanding that Baghdad is still a combat zone or combat operations are certainly going on there, nonetheless, can you -- two questions. Can you tell us now what the U.S. military task is in Baghdad in terms of providing security for the people of Baghdad? What will U.S. troops do specifically to help provide security for the people?

;;;;; And the other question is, once again, as another day goes by, any update on your concerns about the fate of the POWs, since they have not yet emerged?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Two very different questions.

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Yes, ma'am. We are very concerned about the prisoners of war. We do not have intelligence that I could share with you now. We are -- we're working very hard to get that. We believe that now that we are in the city and among the population and they -- essentially regime control has gone that the opportunity to get information about our prisoners goes way up, because as the regime can no longer threaten, we believe more people are available for us to talk to, more people may feel free to give us information. So we're very hopeful about that. But I couldn't share any specifics.

;;;;; Our task in the city right now is still very two-fold. On the one, we have to defeat those remaining elements of the regime -- some Special Republican Guard elements, potentially some Saddam regime elements -- that are in pockets throughout the city and still fighting fiercely, as we saw from the firefight with the Marines. So that is a direct war fighting task. And then the end result of that has to be a safe and secure environment so that life can get on for the Iraqi people. We have got to be able to secure certain things so that they can get around and do what it is people have to do in a city just to live a life. And that will take some time.

;;;;; Q What would you be doing, though? What would -- any specifics about what you will be doing to provide security for the people of Baghdad?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Well, the first is to get rid of the death squads and get rid of those elements that are threatening. And then to secure key facilities, routes, transportation, and then facilitate -- not necessarily execute themselves -- bringing key supporting assets on line like electricity and water and things like that.

;;;;; Q Thank you. This is a question for Egyptian television. My question is about the power vacuum now in -- there seems to be in Iraq. It is chaotic in Basra, the suicide bombing in Baghdad. Are you concerned about that, the occurrence of such suicide bombings again in Baghdad?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: We're always concerned about things like that, and we're -- force protection is so important to us. But I'd say the situation is erratic throughout the country. In some places, obviously, when you have a power vacuum, some bad things happen. But it happens differently in different places. There are towns in the south, for instance, in which now that the influence of the regime is gone, some of the locals have come forward themselves and started to take control of some of those issues: working with the coalition forces to get the power and the water back on, encouraging the people there don't loot. Some of the clerics have been going out and saying the right things to try to maintain calm. So it's different in different places throughout the country. And we take different steps, depending on the circumstances.

;;;;; Q Do you have any clue or any information as to where the top Iraqi officials have gone, the people that we used to see on television screens every day?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: We don't.

;;;;; Pam.

;;;;; Q Could you clarify one thing for me, General McChrystal? The -- when you said Kirkuk is a fluid situation, do you mean it's fluid between do the coalition forces have control or the Iraqis, or fluid within the coalition as to who's in control?

;;;;; And could you explain to us the reason why Military Police -- or why the troops themselves aren't going in and actively stopping looting? The Pentagon -- or, the military's coming under a lot of criticism on that from the humanitarian community, which says it makes it hard for them to do their work and it makes Iraqis feel unsafe.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Let me push back on part of this. They have not come under a lot of criticism from the humanitarian community. I think I saw one person that might have been from the ICRC who said they had concerns about their people being in certain neighborhoods because of problems like looting, which I'll let the general address. But throughout the country, as I was just saying, we're working with humanitarian organizations, we're working with the ICRC, we're working with coalition partners to bring in the humanitarian assistance. So --

;;;;; Q Right, I'm not trying to criticize what you're doing, I'm trying to understand -- can you explain from a military standpoint why you wouldn't want to go in and get involved in that at this point?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: I can take that part on. You can't do everything at once, although you try to do as many things simultaneously as you can do safely. Clearly, the focus right now has got to be on getting the death squads and the Special Republican Guard elements identified and defeated and out of the city, because that is the major threat. Looting is a problem, but it is not a major threat. People are not being killed in looting. So that's something we have to do as we have the time and capability to do it. Sure, we want the looting to stop. But it's something that will be gotten to.

;;;;; In terms of the situation in Kirkuk, what I mean by fluid is when I came to work early this morning, it was one situation that has continued to change throughout the day; it has not seesawed back and forth. But the Iraqis owned it when we went to bed last night, they do not own it anymore; the regime doesn't own it, the Iraqi people own it now.

;;;;; Q So there's no question that it's not questions between U.S. forces or Kurdish forces?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: No.

;;;;; Q General, I wanted to ask you about Tikrit. Torie described it as a stronghold for Saddam. What remains there air defense-wise, ground defenses; what's happening on --

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: We are trying to figure that out right now. There were some elements that we know that they had positioned routinely around Tikrit, historically. They moved the Republican Guard elements down around Baghdad, so there's not a Republican Guard element there. So we are trying to see whether it's a combination of Special Republican Guard elements, maybe some remnants of other forces, maybe some Ba'athists, Saddam Fedayeen, trying to judge their strength, trying to judge to what extent they have an integrated air defense, although we think we've taken most of that down.

;;;;; I wouldn't -- if anyone starts throwing around "Fortress Baghdad" or "Fortress Tikrit," I don't think we're prepared to say that at this point. But I think we are prepared to be very, very wary of what they may have and prepared for a big fight.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Tom?

;;;;; Q Following that up, you said, I think, if I'm not mistaken, a little earlier that bringing up armored units from the South to the North is an option at this point, I guess, as opposed to a plan. Can you really take on the situation around Tikrit just with those airborne troops you have up there, or are you going to need more heavily armored force in order to tackle what you might be facing there?

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: I leave it up to General Franks to make the decision, of course. We have the forces that are postured already in Baghdad, significant forces, which is a hundred miles from Tikrit. So it's actually pretty well postured. The 4th Infantry Division has largely flowed into Kuwait now. On very short order, they'll be ready to start flowing north. So it gives us even more options, either to use the forces vicinity Baghdad (sic), to use forces from the North, or some combination, which is, in the end, probably what will happen.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Yeah?

;;;;; Q Torie, can you say whether there are any plans to start broadcasting from Iraqi TV, rather than Commando Solo?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Well, we use every we can. I was trying to get more details before this briefing, but we're broadcasting a lot now -- radio and television -- using Commando Solo and those sorts of resources.

;;;;; Then again, the primary focus right now is finishing the fighting, assessing that sort of infrastructure and see what could be used going forward. But again, it's also transitioning it to the Iraqi people as soon as possible. There's a significant amount -- hopefully we'll have more information for you tomorrow -- but a significant amount of what I would call enhanced Commando Solo-like activity, and we hope to do more going forward.

;;;;; Q Has the damage to the TV installations there been such that that's something that would be difficult to do?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I don't know that the assessments have been done yet, but it is something we hope to do going forward. It was part of the -- a major element in the strategy was to try to end the regime and do as little damage as possible to the infrastructure, so the Iraqi people can get it up and running again fairly quickly.

;;;;; Dale?

;;;;; Q Can you tell us a little about the level of activity now in the air and, in particular, about -- some of us with -- reporters embedded on aircraft carriers are continuing to hear reports about a shortage of tankers, that missions are long because they have to break away from target zones early to get in line to get gas. Is that a continuing problem? And have extra tankers been dispatched to deal with it?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I honestly don't know the answer on the tanker issue.

;;;;; We've been flying more than a thousand sorties a day. We continue to fly more than a thousand sorties a day. So there's been no shortage of being able to generate sorties. We have been able to focus -- now that there's less of the regime power available, we've been able focus more at certain areas, like the units around the Tikrit or the regular army divisions in the north, which allows us to do more damage.

;;;;; Q Can you tell us, the photograph that you showed of the VIP retreat near Tikrit, do you believe anyone was in that facility when it was struck?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I don't know.

;;;;; Q Secretary-General Kofi Annan earlier today said that he hoped to get his weapons inspectors back into Iraq as soon as possible. And he said that their mandate had not finished, had not been -- was still valid. What role do you see for weapons inspectors -- for U.N. weapons inspectors in Iraq, given the administration's previous -- given your skepticism over their effectiveness in the past few years?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: It was less skepticism over the inspectors; it was more the reality of the regime was not going to allow anybody in any numbers do an effective job. So set that aside. What might happen with inspectors going forward, I don't know. I think it's probably better addressed over at the State Department.

;;;;; Thelma?

;;;;; Q Following up on the forces in the north, who exactly made the decision to go into Kirkuk? Was it the Kurdish fighters who saw this opportunity and then the U.S. followed along, or who was actually giving the orders to the Kurdish fighters?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Ma'am, I'd let CENTCOM provide the details on that. Our Special Operations Forces have been with the Kurdish forces throughout, and so they've been accompanying them for the last weeks, in fact.

;;;;; Q Is there any doubt, though, about -- that the Kurdish fighters would be taking orders from the U.S.?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I don't think that they are taking orders from United States Special Forces. I think they are working with them. I certainly wouldn't want to give the impression that we are commanding and controlling all of the forces in the north, the Kurdish forces.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: We'll make -- two in the back, right there, and then -- (off mike).

;;;;; Q What access or investigation has there been so far regarding any of the underground bunkers in terms of weapons of mass destruction and/or any injured or dead members of the Iraqi regime?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I think going into these structures, they're pretty, what we've seen thus far, fairly extensive underground facilities, some at great depth, some very, very complex. But my understanding is they have just begun to start to work their way through some of those.

;;;;; Tom? Last question.

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- about the significant erosion of the combat power of the 10 divisions in the north. Do you have any numerical estimates on how many have demobilized themselves and gone home, how many have surrendered? In that kind of environment, where there isn't a significant American presence, how do you surrender?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: That's a good question. The first one is the issue of what strength are they at. It's hard to tell. We continue to target them with information operations, we continue to target them from the air, and with limited elements from the ground.

;;;;; To get a very precise number would be difficult. But they have been significantly degraded or attrited as time passes.

;;;;; They're -- how they surrender is --

;;;;; Q I mean, is it a white flag, like in the movies? Is there an 800 number? I mean --

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: No. (Laughter.)

;;;;; Q There's a big -- again, in Baghdad, there's significant American presence; there isn't from the north. How -- how do they surrender?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: We dropped a number of leaflets providing instructions for how to indicate that you wanted out of the fight. And they included some steps to park your equipment in such a way that from the air it could be so identified, to move away from that, to do some other things which signal their intention not to fight, and they just stop being targeted.

;;;;; Q Has that happened? Do you see that in the north? Do you see surrenders like that in the north?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: We have not seen major surrenders like that in the north.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Thank you.

;;;;; Q Torie, could I just get -- just something on numbers straightened up? General, you said that the 4th ID is largely -- has moved into -- into Iraq now and is ready to -- did you say Iraq, or did you say Kuwait? I'm sorry.

;;;;; Q Kuwait. Kuwait.

;;;;; Q Could you tell us how many forces there are in Iraq now, how many troops there are? You said approaching 125(,000) before. Is it closer to 150(,000) now? Could you give us a number?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Sir, I don't know the exact number at this point. I'd hate to speculate on it.

;;;;; Q Could you take that and try to fill us in next time?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Thank you.

Counsel Promises to Bring Cisneros Probe to a Close

By David G. Savage

(c) 2003, Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON ? The independent counsel who spent $9 million to win a misdemeanor conviction against former Housing Secretary Henry G. Cisneros nearly four years ago is still in business ? although he has promised to bring his now $19 million probe to a close soon.

"We're wrapping it up," said David M. Barrett, the lawyer and lobbyist who was selected in 1995 to look into whether Cisneros had lied about how much money he had given to a former mistress.

"I will be the second happiest person around when this is finished," he said. "The happiest will be my wife."

The taxpayers might have cause to feel relieved too.

Barrett has been spending about $2 million a year trying to determine whether Clinton administration officials thwarted his probe.

But three weeks ago, the special three-judge panel in Washington that originally chose Barrett sent him an order saying he needs to write a final report and quit.

"This is a classic example of why this (now-lapsed) independent counsel statute was a problem," said Lawrence Barcella, a former federal prosecutor. "You give this person all the resources to go after one person, and the first thing that's lost is perspective."

Barrett's probe of the former San Antonio mayor is not the most expensive of the Clinton-era investigations.

He trails the Kenneth Starr investigation that began with the Clintons' Whitewater real estate venture in Arkansas, expanded into whether Monica S. Lewinsky obstructed the Paula Jones lawsuit, which in turn led into whether President Clinton lied about his relationship with the former White House intern.

That probe cost about $71.5 million, according to reports filed with the General Accounting Office.

Still, Barrett's probe stands out in the annals of Washington's investigations for seeming to make the most out of the least.

No one accused Cisneros of taking government money or of corrupting his office. Instead, he was accused of misstating how much money he had given to an ex-mistress before he took office.

He had been a popular mayor and a rising star in Democratic circles when he revealed in 1988 that he had a close relationship with Linda Medlar, a married woman and one of his aides.

His political career appeared to be over. After finishing his term as mayor, he went into private business.

However, after Clinton won the presidency in 1992, he asked Cisneros to head the department of Housing and Urban Development.

During a background interview with FBI agents, Cisneros said he had been giving Medlar about $2,500 a month until she re-established her career. She and her daughter had moved back to her hometown of Lubbock, Texas. He said he had given her about $60,000 in all.

Medlar and the new HUD secretary had maintained a long-distance phone relationship. And, in a preview of later Clinton scandals, Medlar taped their phone conversations.

REV_00114247

When the two broke off their relationship entirely, Medlar sold the tapes to a tabloid television show. And on one of the tapes, Cisneros seemed to agree with her that he may have given as much as $250,000 over four years.

Cisneros later said he had minimized the amount to protect his wife. But FBI Director Louis J. Freeh demanded an investigation into whether Cisneros had deliberately lied to his agents. Lying to a federal investigator is a crime. Attorney General Janet Reno balked since the offense appeared to be minimal, but she finally agreed to ask for an independent counsel to look into the matter.

A three-judge panel, led by David B. Sentelle in Washington, chose Barrett in May, 1995 to investigate Cisneros. It was seen by some as an odd choice.

Barrett had been named by a House committee's investigators as one of the Republican lawyers who used influence and connections to win housing contracts during the Reagan administration. Rep. Tom Lantos, R-Calif., denounced the choice of Barrett, saying he had "clearly benefited from influence-peddling at HUD." He likened the choice to "appointing the well-fed fox to investigate the missing hens at the chicken coop."

But there were no congressional hearings or FBI background interviews required of independent counsels.

Barrett plunged into his new duties and soon had a staff of 23, along with six full-time FBI agents assigned to him.

His investigators fanned out across Texas looking for evidence that Cisneros might have been involved in other corruption, but they came up with nothing.

His lead witness ? indeed, his only witness ? was Medlar, the woman who had taped Cisneros. But he soon learned that she had doctored the tapes by recording over parts of them.

She had been given immunity to talk freely, but Barrett revoked the immunity deal and focused his probe on her. At one point, he indicted Medlar's sister and brother-in-law in Lubbock on bank fraud charges. He alleged they committed a federal crime by taking out a loan in their name that allowed Medlar to buy a house for her and her daughter.

The house was sold three years later, for a slight profit. At the time, lawyers in Lubbock said they had never heard of a charge of "bank fraud" in a case where no one, including the bank, lost any money.

The couple agreed to plead guilty to one count of making a false statement on a bank loan and were given probation. On the same day, Medlar pleaded guilty to lying to the investigators and received 18 months in prison. She also agreed to testify against Cisneros.

Barrett then brought an 18-count indictment against Cisneros, and separate indictments against two of his aides at HUD, Sylvia Arce-Garcia and John Rosales. He alleged vaguely that they had conspired to cover up his payments to his mistress.

But the entire case unraveled as it was about to go to trial in September 1999. Neither his lead witness ? Medlar ? nor the tapes were credible evidence in a case about lying. Barrett dropped the indictments of the two aides.

Cisneros was allowed to plead to a misdemeanor and was fined $10,000.

"During my background investigation, I was not candid with the FBI about a personal matter. I regret my lack of candor," he told U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin.

The judge commented the case had taken "much too long." This matter "should have been resolved years ago," he said.

Barrett issued a statement defending the four-year probe that led to the misdemeanor conviction. "This disposition should in no way be viewed as minimizing the serious ethical breach by Mr. Cisneros," he said.

Two months later, Freeh hosted a breakfast at the FBI to present Barrett an award for "exemplary service" to law enforcement.

Barrett was also not ready to give up. He believed that officials of the Internal Revenue Service, conspiring with Clinton appointees at the Justice Department, had withheld tax information that could have implicated Cisneros in other crimes.

Before leaving office, Clinton pardoned Cisneros for his offense. A few months later, Sentelle's panel gave Barrett a green light to continue his probe.

The one Democratic appointee on the panel, Judge Richard Cudahy of Chicago, dissented. He noted Barrett continued to spend about $2 million a year.

Apparently, "Mr. Barrett can go forever," he wrote in a dissent. "A great deal of time has elapsed and a lot of money spent in pursuing charges that on their face do not seem of overwhelming complexity."

Although nothing has come of this phase of his investigation, Barrett said he believed that it was improper for him to defend his probe publicly. "I've been a low-profile kind of guy," he said in an interview last week. He also said he has had health problems that kept him away from his work for a time.

But by last fall, Sentelle's panel had run out of patience.

The panel issued a "show cause" order and said it was time to cease "all investigative and prosecutorial activities." In its March 17 order, the panel said Barrett should work on his final report.

As of Sept. 30 of last year, Barrett had spent more than $18.7 million, the GAO said.

Barrett said his final report will help to explain why the effort was necessary and justified.

"The public has a right to know," he said. "It will be there in the final report."

Ed--Thanks.; I think the twist here is that as evidenced by the conference report language on the $9 million, about half the appropriation was intended for something other than the plain language of the law would suggest.; Here's the draft reprogramming letter, which I would like to discuss once you've had a chance to review--there would also be one to the Senate.; (Incidentally, I would anticipate that the money would be transferred to GSA to perform the work under the Economy Act, though that would of course not affect the purpose for which the funds were available.);

April 11, 2003

The Honorable Ernest Istook, Jr.
Chairman
Subcommittee on Transportation, Treasury,
; And Independent Agencies
House Appropriations Committee
2358 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Chairman Istook:

The purpose of this letter is to request your approval for reprogramming of funds in the amount of $2 million appropriated to the Office of Homeland Security (OHS) to continue the microbial decontamination of the Office of Administration,s Remote Delivery Site (RDS).; The need for this additional funding became evident after the submission of the FY 2003 budget request, and so this project was not covered in the Office of Administration,s FY2003 budget.; Prior to the enactment of FY 2003 funding levels, the EOP CFO and OA director held discussions with appropriation committee staff regarding the RDS requirement and it was decided that $2 million would be available from the OHS appropriation to fund the RDS decontamination activities.; There is no language in the appropriations law or associated conference report specifically designating funds from the OHS account for this particular project.; However, the conference report,s reference to the transfer of other funds for another project regarding the EOP,s response to the anthrax attacks reflects a sense of Congress that funds for this appropriation were available for that purpose.; Because the amount was not listed in the original budget request and would therefore be used for a specific activity other than those earmarked, we are requesting your approval to reprogram and use $2 million from the OHS account in support of the RDS project.;

The $2 million will fund labor, materials, equipment and subcontractor services for the microbial decontamination of the Anacostia Naval Station RDS Facility, which was contaminated by anthrax in October 2001.; As you know, the RDS screens and processes all parcel mail including packages and bulk items such as equipment and furniture sent to the EOP complex; thus this funding will help ensure the security of the President, his senior staff, and all White House complex employees.

To date the RDS project has received $2.45 million from Congress;; $250,000 on 1/10/2002 from P.L. 107-117 in emergency relief funds for the initial purchase of RDS equipment; $1.5 million on 5/1/2002 from reprogrammed funds to award the initial contract for decontamination of RDS; and $700,000 on 8/26/02 from reprogrammed funds for the disposal of hazardous waste.; I would like the Committee to recognize that we made every effort to develop sound estimates based on the information we had at the time previous reprogramming requests were submitted in support of the RDS.; I want to emphasize that since previously requested funds were received we have obtained additional information updating the RDS project costs necessitating the additional $2 million requested.; See attached statement of work and cost estimate.

None of the funds included in the request have been obligated and none will be obligated until the Committee on Appropriations has approved this request.; We appreciate your consideration of this request and are available to provide any future information that may be required.

Sincerely,

Subject:;;;;;; OA appropriation question re: HSC?

Adam, does the reprogramming request cover your concerns?; Or do you still see significant issues here?;

As I understand it, OA is proposing to transfer $2 million in (what had been marked as OHS?) funds to OA to cover the costs of the RDS anthrax cleanup (do we have that right?).; My understanding from you is that OHS has consented -- pls indicate who so we know who to close the loop w/ here.; While this appears to be a worthy project that needs to be completed, my very limited understanding of appropriations law is that statutory authority is generally required for transfers of appropriations between agencies or accounts.; 31 U.S.C. 1532.; Is that OA's view as well?; Or perhaps there are exceptions that are escaping my quick look?

(Although the conferees apparently authorized OHS to transfer $783K to OA in support of a pilot program to centralize procurement of certain common goods and services, I think that transfer authority is limited to a specific dollar amount and purpose?; Again, if your view is different, we're interested Adam.);

Final question re: costs of the RDS' cleanup;; if they're not absorbed by OA as part of its mission, is there an issue we need to address re: whether they're required to be prorated among the various EOP entities?;

Pls advise.; And pls let us know what if anything you need from HSC management to make sure this is appropriately addressed.; How can we help?

I understand through Tim Campen and Jim Daniel that $2,000,000 of the appropriation was intended for decontamination of our Remote Delivery Site (RDS) (which was shut down due to anthrax).; Like the $9,000,000 that was also in the appropriation for the general EOP mail processing, this was discussed with Committee staff (Tim and Jim personally discussed it with them).; As you know, the $9,000,000 (which I think has already been transferred to DHS/Secret Service) was specifically addressed in the Conference Report.; The $2,000,000 was not addressed, apparently by mistake since they left the money in despite understanding that by that time, it was otherwise not needed.; This is a critical requirement, so we are reviewing the situation with the hope that the appropriation can be used for it.;

No major problems, but please note my attached minor edits to the disclaimer and correcting a typo on the invite page. Also, the "paid for and authorized by" on the reply card needs to be in a box. The "authorized by..." and "not paid for a govt expense" does not need to be on the invite card because it is on the reply card (but if they want it in both places, there's nothing wrong with that).

MEDIA AVAILABILITY WITH SECRETARY OF STATE COLIN POWELL AND KUWAITI MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS SABAH AL-AHMED AL-SABAH FOLLOWING THEIR MEETING

C STREET ENTRANCE, THE STATE DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D.C.
10:21 A.M. EDT, MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2003

SEC. POWELL: Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. I just had an excellent conversation with my colleague, Dr. Mohammed. And in our conversation, I had the opportunity to express the sincere thanks of President Bush and all of my colleagues in the administration, and the American people, and, of course, General Tommy Franks, for the absolutely superb support that Kuwait has provided to Operation Iraqi Freedom. Without that support, I'm not sure the operation could have been conducted. Kuwait understood the threat, was willing to step forward, and we're deeply appreciative of all they have done.

;;;;; And I am especially appreciative of the fact that the minister and I spent most of our time not on the military campaign, but on the future; the humanitarian aid that will be required, the reconstruction activity that will be needed, and our commitment to make sure that the new Iraqi government is based on democratic principles, that is prepared to live in peace with its neighbors. And we also discussed how these developments in recent weeks open up new opportunities with respect to peace in the Middle East and greater cooperation among members of the Gulf Cooperation Council and the Arab League.

;;;;; We also discussed the meetings that will be taking place in An Nasiriyah tomorrow that begins the formation of the new political system for the new Iraqi government and how it must respect, as we go forward, the territorial integrity of Iraq, this process, and how we are hopeful that these conversations beginning tomorrow and going on into the future in many different places throughout Iraq will be able to take into account the interests and equities of all the people of Iraq and give an opportunity to participate in political process both to those who have been outside of Iraq, struggling for these many long years to bring about this change, as well as those inside Iraq, who are now free of this dictatorial regime.

;;;;; In our discussions, we also talked about Syria, and hopeful that Syria will understand its obligations in this new environment.

;;;;; And I also made a point of mentioning to the minister that we were concerned about some of the looting that took place in the museum in Baghdad, one of the great museums in the world. And the United States will be working with a number of individuals and organizations to not only secure the facility, but to recover that which has been taken and also to participate in restoring that which has been broken. I have been in touch with the European Union presidency this morning, Foreign Minister Papandreou, who has experience in such matters. We're also in conversations with UNESCO. But the United States understands its obligations and will be taking a leading role with respect to antiquities in general, but this museum in particular.

;;;;; Mr. Minister, it's a great pleasure to have you here, and again, thank you for all you have done.

;;;;; MIN. AL-SABAH: Thank you, Mr. Secretary.

;;;;; I expressed today Kuwait's appreciation for the work that United States is doing in liberating the Iraqi people from their ordeal.

;;;;; I also discussed with the secretary, in addition to the points that he raised -- he just mentioned -- also discussed with him ways of more intense cooperation between our forces and agencies to find the Kuwaiti POWs who are still unaccounted for in Iraq. One out of every 1,000 Kuwaitis is still unaccounted for in Iraq, and this is something that the secretary has indicated his -- the United States' utmost concern about. And we agreed to expedite and strengthen our concern on this issue.

;;;;; We also discussed the elements of stability in the regionwide area, and this is the Arab-Israeli conflict and the need to get back -- and to put this track on its proper destination.

;;;;; We expressed our need for intensify our consultation, because the challenges ahead of us is now very, very real. But we are all optimists about the future.

;;;;; Thank you.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q Secretary Powell --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Yes? (Inaudible.)

;;;;; Q Excuse me, sir. How serious is the border problem with Syria? Are there many potential war criminals getting across that border?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: I can't quantify how many might be slipping across the border. The basic point is that the card deck of 55, 53, plus others who have knowledge about weapons of mass destruction development activity over the years, plus those who are in other senior political leadership positions in the former regime or in the Ba'ath Party -- these are the kinds of individuals who should not be allowed to find safe haven in Syria. And this is a point that we have made to the Syrians directly and we'll continue to make to the Syrians.

;;;;; And as the president noted over the weekend, we are concerned that Syria has been participating in the development of mass destruction and, as the president noted, specifically on chemical weapons. And we believe, in light of this new environment, they should review their actions and their behavior, not only with respect to who gets haven in Syria and weapons of mass destruction, but especially the support of terrorist activity.

;;;;; And so we have a new situation in the region, and we hope that all the nations in the region will now review their past practices and behavior.

;;;;; Q (In Arabic.)

;;;;; MIN. AL-SABAH: (In Arabic.)

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q Secretary Powell?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Yeah?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, can you say -- and can the foreign minister also comment on this -- whether you have been in touch with the Syrian government on the question of chemical weapons and biological recently, and whether you have asked them to return people within their borders?

;;;;; And do you know if the border is indeed closed, as they said it was last week?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: We're told the border is closed, but as you know, it's a rather porous border. And so when you say it's closed, it might mean the main roads are closed, but whether or not others are able to get across the border is something that I can't speak to. But once they get into Syria and start heading to Damascus, I would expect that Syrian authorities would do everything they could not to provide these people safe haven.

;;;;; Syria is well aware of our concerns with respect to weapons of mass destruction and with respect to terrorist activity. It is a subject of discussion with the Syrian leadership whenever we meet with them. Our ambassadors are making demarches. I've been there twice. Ambassador Burns, Assistant Secretary Burns, has also talked to the Syrians on a regular basis about this. It is no secret to the Syrians about our concern over these kinds of developments.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; MIN. AL-SABAH: Well, we have our own list of the Iraqi war criminals, and we are going to pursue them all over the world wherever they -- where they are found.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, soon you are going to release the road map.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Excuse me. Let's do this gentleman. Yes?

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, can you please tell us if you have asked your Kuwaiti counterpart to intervene in this message? And -- (continuing in Arabic.)?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: I will yield to him for that answer.

;;;;; MIN. AL-SABAH: (In Arabic.)

;;;;; Q Will you repeat in English, please, sir?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Yes, would you --

;;;;; MIN. AL-SABAH: Well, I have not been given a special message to carry to Syria. The secretary, he can reach the Syrians directly. And I think that Syria can play a constructive role in reestablishing security and stability in the region.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: This gentleman.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, we know that you are soon going to release the road map. How do you see Syria under this regime as a partner for peace process?

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: We'll be releasing the road map as soon as Mr. Abu Mazin has been confirmed by a vote of confidence as the prime minister of the Palestinian Authority with his new cabinet. Obviously, as we go down the road to peace, we want it to be a comprehensive peace. And ultimately, of course, that would have to include finding a way to settle the outstanding issues with Syria as well.

;;;;; Q Mr. Secretary, are you satisfied with the way the meeting is developing in Nasiriyah? There are some complaints among some of the Iraqi exile community that Chalabi is not being invited. Do you think that there is going to be a lot of turmoil amongst those Iraqi exiles, particularly outside the country, who maybe do not feel like they're sufficiently involved at the moment?

;;;;; And to the Kuwaiti foreign minister: Can you confirm whether Kuwaiti prisoners of war were indeed located this morning in Baghdad? Thank you.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: With respect to the meetings that begin in An Nasiriyah tomorrow, let's remember this is just the first of many meetings that will be held. And in order to get the process started, it was determined that we should have representatives of the various groups at this meeting, and it will be a fairly large gathering of individuals. It will be chaired initially by Ambassador Khalilzad, the president's personal representative. Of course the individuals have been invited by General Franks. And then General Garner will address the group. And then Ambassador Ryan Crocker will moderate the proceedings.

;;;;; So I think it's a good start. And I think most of the groups outside the country in the resistance understand the need for starting in this way with a modest beginning so that we begin a dialogue. And so I don't think there is much concern about this not being a productive meeting, and also a meeting that reflects the views of those who have been struggling outside, as well as those who are now free inside.

;;;;; MIN. AL-SABAH: This is a breaking news story and I don't have really any confirmation on it.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Nor do I.

;;;;; Q Secretary Powell, are you -- sir, are you considering any measures against Syria in light of the allegations that you've made; perhaps recalling the U.S. ambassador, downgrading U.S. relations, anything along that?

;;;;; And also, in addition, on the humanitarian front, many non-governmental organizations, the International Red Cross and others, have complained that the security situation is so bad on the ground that they can't get the aid in there. Is there anything that the U.S. is considering to do to beef up security?

;;;;; And for Dr. Mohammed, sir --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: That's two already. Thank you.

;;;;; Q Oh --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: With respect to Syria, of course we will examine possible measures of a diplomatic, economic or other nature as we move forward. We are in touch with Syrian authorities. We have a very effective ambassador there, Ambassador Kattouf, who will stay in touch with them and make them aware of our concerns. And we'll see how things unfold as we move forward.

;;;;; With respect to the humanitarian situation, it is improving on a daily basis. Secretary Rumsfeld gave us a report this morning of the various military civil affairs units working with our combat troops to slowly reestablish security and stability throughout the various cities.

;;;;; We are starting to hire again police forces in the South, and that will be expanded as we move north.

;;;;; And there is a huge amount of humanitarian equipment and supplies that are now moving in. Hospital kits are moving in to reestablish health care. Water is beginning to flow in the southern cities, and there is a great deal that is going on.

;;;;; But the campaign is not yet over. And so I think, as you see, day by day, the situation will improve, and the NGOs and other humanitarian organizations and U.N. organizations will be able to accomplish their work.

;;;;; There is not a shortage of food. Food is adequate in marketplaces, as well as food being brought in from the outside.

;;;;; We want to go to work on the health care system and the water system and getting the power on throughout the country, which tends to affect the water supply system, since you need power to run it in the first place.

;;;;; So we're seized with the problem, hard at work on the problem, and the situation will improve day by day.

;;;;; Thank you. (The secretary escorts the foreign minister to his car and then returns for more questions.)

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Anything else?

;;;;; Q Yes. Mr. Secretary, are you all going to -- are you personally going to be in touch with your counterpart in Syria to discuss what's -- you know, what the president said yesterday and --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: I'm sure we'll be in touch in a variety of diplomatic channels. And I usually don't talk about my future phone calls become -- till they become my past phone calls, or visits.

;;;;; Q Whose else have you talked to this morning? What else have you been doing with respect to Iraq and --

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: I've spoken to the foreign minister of Greece on behalf -- and he's the presidency (sic) of the European Union. But otherwise I've been in meetings, and now I will go back to other matters.

;;;;; Thank you.

;;;;; (Cross talk.)

;;;;; Q Critics say that the State Department should have been allowed to invite members to the Nasiriyah meeting, instead of the DOD.

;;;;; SEC. POWELL: Who said we didn't?

END.

Subject: guidance, pls.

there is currently no mechanism or process in place to capture the president's activities aboard af1 for transmittal to the diarist. on the flights to and from belfast, i asked the flight attendants to keep a very basic log of his activities - similar to the one maintained by the camp personnel on the weekends (e.g., when he ate, whether he watched a movie, etc.) ... just as a trial run to see whether it might be helpful / appropriate information for us to have, and whether it would be a burden for the af1 crew.

the crew said they are happy to help. so, that's not an issue.

i just faxed you a copy of what they collected for you to review. when you get a chance, pls let me know whether this is a process we should continue.

IF you suggest that we continue this practice and move forward, there are a couple of things worth pointing out:

1) there were several mistakes on the flight attendant's logs (i wrote notes beside them). i would likely review the logs w/ the attendant at the end of the flight - or soon afterward, which would give me an opportunity to redact any information which is strictly personal and should not be included - there is an example of that in the logs which i faxed over.

2) i would come up w/ a standardized form (like the milaides use for the ranch and for camp), and i would give them better, more specific direction on what kind of info to record

3) any logs would still go to the judge for review before they go to the diarist thanks,

blake

Subject: Congressman Bonilla Invite

This responds to your request for guidance regarding Congressman Bonilla's invitations to David Hobbs and his spouse to attend campaign events, on behalf of Congressman Bonilla, in San Antonio, Texas, on April 25, 26 and 27, 2003. You advise that Congressman Bonilla's campaign organization is a political organization as described in 26 U.S.C. § 527(e), and that this organization will provide travel expenses to Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs for this trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs May Accept

Mr. Hobbs may accept the offer of travel expenses from Congressman Bonilla's campaign organization regarding his attendance at the campaign events, as discussed below. Mrs. Hobbs also may accept an invitation to her from Congressman Bonilla's campaign organization regarding her attendance at the campaign events, and she may also accept that organization's offer to her to provide travel expenses regarding that attendance.

I have provided a copy of this determination to my colleague, Brett Kavanaugh, for his information.

Ethics Rules

An employee who may take an active part in political management or in political campaigns, under the Hatch Act, may accept meals, lodgings, transportation and other benefits, including free attendance at events, when provided by a political organization described in 26 U.S.C. § 527(e) in connection with such active participation. See 5 C.F.R. § 2635.204(f).

· The term "political organization" in 26 U.S.C. § 527(e) means "a party, committee, association, fund, or other organization (whether or not incorporated) organized and operated primarily for the purpose of directly or indirectly accepting contributions or making expenditures, or both, for an exempt function."

· The term "exempt function" in 26 U.S.C. § 527(e) means "the function of influencing or attempting to influence the selection, nomination, election, or appointment of any individual to any Federal, State, or local public office or office in a political organization, or the election of Presidential or Vice-Presidential electors, whether or not such individual or electors are selected, nominated, elected, or appointed. Such term includes the making of expenditures relating to an office described in the preceding sentence which, if incurred by the individual, would be allowable as a deduction under section 162(a)."

The Hatch Act

An employee may attend and be active at political rallies and meetings; join and be an active member of a political party or club; and, hold office in political clubs or parties. An employee may attend a political fundraising as long as he does not personally solicit, accept, or receive contributions. An employee may give a speech or keynote address at a political fundraiser, as long as he is not on duty and does not solicit political contributions. His name may be listed on the event invitation as a speaker or guest, but may not be shown on an invitation to a fundraiser as a sponsor or point of contact. Additionally, his official Government title may not be used either on the fundraiser invitation or during an introduction. See, generally, 5 C.F.R. Part 734.

Discussion

Under the ethics rules and the Hatch Act, as described above, Mr. Hobbs may accept an invitation from a political entity – Congressman Bonilla's campaign organization – to attend campaign events on behalf of Congressman Bonilla, including meals, lodgings, transportation, and other benefits offered to him by that organization. Similarly, Mrs. Hobbs may accept an invitation from that organization to attend the events, including meals, lodgings, transportation, and other benefits offered to her by that organization.

Additionally, Mr. Hobbs may attend political fundraising events so long as he does not personally solicit, accept, or receive contributions. He also may give a speech at a political fundraiser, so long as he is not on duty and does not solicit political contributions. Although his name may be listed on the event invitation as a speaker, it may not be shown on an invitation to a fundraiser as a sponsor or point of contact. Finally, his official Government title may not be used either on the fundraiser invitation or during an introduction.

;;;;;;;; MS. CLARKE: We're done.

;;;;;;;; Q It is?

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT REGULAR BRIEFING
BRIEFER: VICTORIA CLARKE, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE FOR PUBLIC AFFAIRS AND ARMY GENERAL STANLEY MCCHRYSTAL, VICE DIRECTOR FOR OPERATIONS, J-3, JOINT STAFF

PENTAGON BRIEFING ROOM, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA
1:30 P.M. EDT, MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2003

MS. CLARKE: Good afternoon, everyone. We continue to make progress on the war in Iraq. Coalition forces are rooting out remnants of the Iraqi regime, including in Tikrit, Saddam Hussein's hometown. The regime is at its end, and its leaders are either dead, surrendered, or on the run.

;;;;; But progress did not come without great sacrifices. At the briefing on April 7, Secretary Rumsfeld showed a list of those who have died in Operation Iraqi Freedom. Unfortunately, since then we have had to add more names to the list.

;;;;; (To staff) Terry?

;;;;; (Pause while list of names of U.S. casualties is shown.)

;;;;; War is also hazardous for journalists, as we know. At great personal risk, many of them have reported the conflict first-hand. We salute these professionals and offer our condolences to their families.

;;;;; (Pause while list of names of journalist casualties is shown.)

;;;;; Thank you, Terry.

;;;;; On the brighter side, we were thrilled yesterday to see the return of seven former prisoners of war. While we celebrate their return, we are still concerned about the Americans still unaccounted for, and we will keep searching for them until we find them.

;;;;; As we head into the fourth week of this conflict, I'd like to remind you of the eight objectives that Secretary Rumsfeld laid out at the onset of the war.

;;;;; First, end the regime of Saddam Hussein. Baghdad is largely free of its influence, and so is most of the entire country.

;;;;; Second, capture or drive out terrorists sheltered in Iraq. With the end of the Saddam Hussein regime, terrorists have lost their chief sponsor and ally in Iraq.

;;;;; Third, collect intelligence on terrorist networks. As Iraqis come forward and documents are found, we are gathering more evidence.

;;;;; Fourth, collect intelligence on weapons of mass destruction, the systems and the facilities associated with them. We've begun the long process of exploring sites, sifting through thousands of documents, and encouraging Iraqis to come forward with information. This will take time.

;;;;; Fifth, destroy the weapons of mass destruction. We will make sure they never threaten the region or the world again.

;;;;; Sixth, secure Iraq's oil fields and natural resources for the Iraqi people. We have now secured both the northern and the southern oil fields.

;;;;; Seventh, end the sanctions and immediately deliver humanitarian relief. With the liberation of Iraq, President Bush and Prime Minister Blair have asked that the United Nations sanctions be lifted so that more aid can flow into Iraq. Some places in the country clearly need help, but we see no overall humanitarian crisis and no mass flight of refugees. Most Iraqis are staying in their homes or returning to their homes and have enough food to survive for some time. Coalition forces are working with local authorities and police forces to patrol the streets, and the looting is tapering off.

;;;;; In addition, the World Food Program/United Nations combined are delivering over 1 million tons of food. This is enough to feed the entire population of Iraq for several months. A relief ship from the United Arab Emirates is on the way to help the Iraqi people. It is carrying 700 tons of boxed rations, bottled water, family first aid kits, four water tankers, an ambulance, two trucks, two cars and 12 volunteers.

;;;;; The Japanese have pledged $100 million to support humanitarian relief efforts in the country. And the United Nations international staff is returning to northern Iraq, displaced persons there are returning home, and the water service in Najaf is returning to normal. Medical and other types of aid are also coming from Kuwait, Italy, Qatar and Turkey.

;;;;; And the eighth and final goal, to help the Iraqi people transition to a non-threatening, representative form of self-government that preserves the territorial integrity of Iraq. We are working with clerics, tribal leaders and ordinary Iraqis. Many will meet tomorrow, April 15th, in An Nasiriyah to discuss the future of Iraq and the Iraqi interim authority. This will be the first of several meetings as the Iraqi people chart their future free of the oppressive Hussein regime.

;;;;; General.

;;;;; GEN. MCCRYSTAL: Thank you, Ms. Clarke.

;;;;; Operation Iraqi Freedom continues. I'd like to welcome back the seven former prisoners of war, who are now safe and will soon be on their way home. I have some footage I don't believe you've seen yet on their return. (Video shown.)

;;;;; On a sad note, I'd like to express my condolences to all the families who have lost loved ones in combat. As we return Iraq to its people, there's been remarkable progress, but we need to remember that true American heroes gave their lives in this effort.

;;;;; We in uniform also send our regrets to those journalists who lost their lives covering this effort to disarm Iraq.

;;;;; Coalition forces are still patrolling Iraq with due diligence. Our air sorties have decreased over the last few days to about seven (hundred) to 800 sorties over Iraq per day. We dropped less than 200 precision-guided munitions in the last 24 hours to support our operations on the ground. In fact, today was the last day that aircraft from all five carrier battle groups will fly missions into Iraq. And as the 5th Fleet commander mentioned over the weekend, a couple of them will be departing the region over the course of the next few days.

;;;;; On the ground, coalition forces are continuing patrols throughout Iraq. And as I've said before, there's still more difficult and even dangerous work to be done. We're working to create an atmosphere in which the Iraqi people can begin to govern themselves.

;;;;; And with that, we'll be happy to take your questions.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Charlie?

;;;;; Q Torie, the Bush administration gave as one of the main reasons for attacking Iraq that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction, including chemical weapons, and that it was a state that supported terrorism and unveiled why there was a likely chance that these weapons had fallen into the hands of terrorists. Now, the United States has increasingly in the past week said that Syria contains -- it has such weapons, and that Syria's a state that supports terrorism. Why shouldn't the world take this increasing rhetoric about Syria as an open threat to invade Syria?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Two things. I wouldn't call it rhetoric, I would call it facts. And then, the president, the secretary of Defense, the secretary of State have all spoken about this. Secretary of Defense did just a few minutes ago, when he was with the Kuwaiti foreign minister. And we've got nothing to add.

;;;;; Q Well, why -- I mean, why shouldn't the world take this, as much of the world is, as a threat, perhaps, to invade Syria?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I just don't agree with your assessment that this is rhetoric. And there's just nothing to add to what the president, and the secretary of Defense and the secretary of State have said.

;;;;; Ivan?

;;;;; Q Torie and General McChrystal, it seems obvious that there will be no more major, underline the word "major," battles in this war. And of the eight mission objectives, most have now been accomplished. When will this building and when will Tommy Franks advise the commander in chief to declare victory? Is it far away?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I'll take a stab. I'd say we're making good progress on those objectives.

;;;;; I'd say we've got a long way to go on many of them. There are still military operations under way. There are still people doing very, very dangerous work. And I think different people will define it differently. At the end of the day, it's about the Iraqi people having their country back, and the Iraqi people having an environment in which they can get that country up and running again.

;;;;; So I think you're going to see us talking for a long time about work that needs to be done, and we'll let others decide.

;;;;; Bill?

;;;;; Q With the fall of Tikrit, is the conflict now entering a new phase? And are you looking at the forces there as having a different role, as more stabilization than combat?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Well, clearly we are moving toward the goal of providing a safe and secure environment throughout Iraq. The anticipation is that that would occur in a rolling nature. I -- from the standpoint it would be at a -- probably at a different point in each part of the country, based upon conditions there.

;;;;; So I think that as major combat operations wind down, we'll still conduct minor combat operations, to include some sharp fights in areas, and then adjust our operations in each area. I'm not sure it will be so close that all of a sudden we proclaim we are moving from one kind of operation to the next.

;;;;; Q Is this considered a new phase of operations that you're undertaking or will undertake?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: The operation is broken into phases. We're not yet at the point where General Franks would make the decision to transition entirely from one phase to the next.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: And it may be entirely possible it's different in one part of the country than another.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Yeah.

;;;;; Q Yeah. Torie or General, has there been a change in Pentagon policy in terms of repatriated POWs? In the past, we have seen, when POWs have been released, that they go sort of into seclusion, if you will, till they can talk with doctors and really readjust, to get back into the world, if you will. But we've seen with -- in the case of Jessica Lynch, who got to speak to her parents, and also yesterday, when there were actually reporters on the plane after their release, is there a new policy? And what -- if there is, what is that based on?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I'm not aware of any changes in policy. I know the first and the primary consideration is their physical and emotional well-being, and great care and great attention is given to that. And I am not an expert on these matters, so I'll say this carefully. I also know that having contact and communication with your family can be a very, very important part of this.

;;;;; And so I'm not aware of any changes in policy. You guys can let us know.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: But let me just say they take great care and great concern with the physical and emotional well-being of these people, and they would not be put in any kind of situation that wasn't appropriate.

;;;;; Q General, you say that there are combat operations ongoing. Can you characterize the type of combat? Are the major battles, are they finished now at this point? Are we just in this sporadic firefight, mopping-up operations in these cities?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I would anticipate that the major combat engagements are over because the major Iraqi units on the ground cease to show coherence. Tikrit was the last area where we anticipated seeing major combat formations, if in fact they were there. There were some sharp fights there, but not a coherent defense. So I think we will move into a phase where it is smaller, albeit sharp fights.

;;;;; Q And al Qaim out in the west, we heard some firefights there. Are they over? Is that done?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I won't say that al Qaim is completely done. I will say that from our standpoint, the regime no longer has control of it. We have not yet proclaimed it secure under coalition control. But clearly, Saddam Hussein's regime does not control it.

;;;;; Q I swear -- I promise, this is the last one. Anything on the 101st Airborne Division find of some vehicles underneath -- underground?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I saw the news reports of that, and clearly, we're going to treat that very seriously, as you could see from the activity of the soldiers there. But I know no official estimation at this point.

;;;;; Q Torie, Secretary Rumsfeld has said a number of times that these people who are going into Syria are Iraqi officials. Could you offer a little more definition of -- for example, are these people who are on the top 55 list? And if not --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I've got nothing to add. You've had the president, the secretary, the secretary of Defense --

;;;;; Q I'm just asking -- (inaudible) --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I know. But they've --

;;;;; Q Are they on the list or not?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: We've said as much as we're going to say right now.

;;;;; Q But if they're not on the list, why does it matter if they've --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Mr. McWethy?

;;;;; Q Not going to answer that one? Okay.

;;;;; You have now had Republican Guards by the thousands or tens of thousands, depending on how you count them, sort of either being killed or vanishing. You have had this long list of high-ranking officials that have vanished. Are either of these two categories of great concern, especially the fighters that are no longer there, but obviously you can't have tens of thousands of fighters leaving the country. Have they all had a conversion?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Well, the leadership obviously is a concern, and that is part of our military objectives, is finding the leadership, finding the people who were running and enforcing this regime for so long.

;;;;; And we've had some success; we've got a ways to go. Speculation about what happened to the others, I'll leave it to the general. But we have not seen thousands of people pouring out of the country.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: And we haven't in the case of the Republican Guards. As you know, there's sort of a hierarchy of loyalty in the Iraqi defense forces, or so we have assessed. The Republican Guards, many of them may, in fact, go home and rejoin society without any issues. We are probably more worried about some of the Saddam Fedayeen, potentially members of the Special Republican Guards. But even within those organizations, many may just decide to rejoin what, in fact, will be a new Iraq. So, we are concerned about it and stay focused on it, but don't have an assessment right now that there is a looming threat.

;;;;; Q General, you said there's been some repositioning of naval assets, and that was said over the weekend -- (word inaudible) -- respond to new positions. Can you tell us if there's been any repositioning or if there's any repositioning in the immediate future for air assets, Air Force assets, and are any of our ground forces going to leave Iraq?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Well, I'll address the air assets. In fact, General Franks is free to make decisions to redeploy those assets that he no longer feels he needs for this part of the operations, and he is doing that in selected cases now.

;;;;; Q Do you want to give us any clarity on which squads are being redeployed? B-2s, or --

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I can't give you specifics on what types or numbers of assets, but clearly, those assets which were focused on a high intensity air campaign would be the most likely, initially.

;;;;; Q General?

;;;;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Wait.

;;;;;;;; Q Go ahead.

;;;;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Quickly.

;;;;;;;; Q And the second part of the question is on the ground.

;;;;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: We're still early in the ground forces. As you know, we had devised a very flexible force flow that was based to be able to be metered as we go, to either increase or decrease as time passed. There had been no ground units that had been redeployed at this point. We still have the ongoing flow, as programmed, of other ground units, but General Franks and the secretary of Defense continue to review that to determine whether or not that should be adjusted.

;;;;;;;; Q General McChrystal, I want you to go to number two again. I'm going to focus on the elimination of WMD. Can you give us a feel for how now the level of effort will increase to go after -- to look after suspect sites? This 75th Intelligence Exploitation Task Force apparently is going to get more involved. And there was a published report today saying roughly 36 suspect sites are being reviewed. Is that an accurate figure?

;;;;;;;; And for Torie, the scientific adviser for Hussein the other day surrendered and said that Iraq had no WMD program at all. From your perspective, how should the public assess his answer, his claim, given that he's got no reason to lie at this point?

;;;;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Old habits die hard.

;;;;;;;; Q Well, seriously --

;;;;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Seriously. You're talking about a senior player in a regime that took lying and deception and denial to new heights. So we'll see what happens going forward, but this is a regime that we know and the international community knows, with great certainty, had extraordinary designed to hide and deceive everyone about their weapons of mass destruction program.

;;;;;;;; Q Well, what stake would he have? If he said we have -- they have tons, he'd be at the White House today, probably in a Rose Garden ceremony.

;;;;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I wouldn't even begin to try to get inside his head.

;;;;;;;; Q Okay. General, on the whole issue of site surveys?

;;;;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: In terms of the level of effort, we have gone in fact, at this point, to a very small percentage of a very extensive list of known locations. And I would expect that that would grow in fact -- the number of suspect locations -- as we talk to more people.

;;;;;;;; And I would say that as combat operations begin to slow down, that we will have more forces available, and we'll have a more secure environment in which we can get to these locations more easily.

;;;;;;;; It will still be a very long process, because each has to be handled very carefully, both from the ability to protect the forces to go to investigate, but also for rules of evidence, for other practical reasons, and because of the limited number of experts that you can bring. So I would suspect it will go for an extended period of time.

;;;;;;;; Q Is 36 an accurate figure? That was in the New York Times today.

;;;;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I won't talk specific numbers of sites we've been to. But we've been to a very small percentage of those that are already --

;;;;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- sites, though. Their list was winnowed down to 36.

I'm just trying to get a sense if that's a valid universe.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: It in fact is not a valid number that I'm familiar with. There are other numbers, but we've only been to a small percentage of those.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: It's also not, I don't think, a complete picture to just look at sites and say that's what it's all about when it comes to WMD. It's sites. It's paperwork. It's people. It's documents. It is a very complex system, and so it'll require a long and complex process to get to the bottom of it.

;;;;; Al?

;;;;; Q General and Torie, last week General Myers had talked about -- even while combat was going on at al Qaim, that the forces had visited certain sites of interest -- WMD sites, as I understand it -- and results were pending. Can you give us any more detail on what was found at those sites?

;;;;; And then, secondly, do you have any reason to believe that any of the WMD components have left Iraq?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: In terms of what we have looked at, there are no positive results at this point. There are a number of samples that are still being tested. So we don't have positive or negative either way.

;;;;; We have gone to some of the major sites, as I said, and in fact shipped samples back to the United States for detailed analysis.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: And I'd say well before this war started, one of our chief concerns was that weapons of mass destruction, the means of producing them, things associated with their program, could be moving in and out of the country to other places, going to other countries and transiting. So it was a concern and it remains a concern.

;;;;; Q And you don't know whether it has?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Nothing to share with you.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I'd like to add on that if I could. The whole idea of gathering information on their weapons of mass destruction program, we believe, gets measurably easier once we have a safe and secure environment, when we can start to talk to people in Iraq. As more people feel safe and secure that the regime is gone, and we have the ability to connect the threads, it becomes police work.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Mick?

;;;;; Q Last week the U.S. military flew Ahmad Chalabi and 700 armed INC members into Iraq. There are U.S. Special Forces deployed with those INC and Chalabi, and today he's on his way to Baghdad. Presumably, he wouldn't be able to do that without the knowledge and support of the U.S. So how can the U.S. military or the Pentagon deny the perception that they are giving Chalabi and his INC members favorable treatment? And if that's not the case, then what, exactly, is this relationship between the INC and the Pentagon and U.S. military?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Well, it's really the relationship with the Iraqi people overall. We've been working with the Kurds in the north, we've been working with the Shi'a, we've been working with and have brought in free Iraqi forces that were trained in Hungary, we're working with local leaders, with tribal leaders, with clerics, with a wide range of people both within and without Iraq. And at the end of the day, what matters and what's really going to happen is the Iraqi people are going to decide the course of action going forward. So I think if you look at the complete picture, the perception's very different. And it's the reality, as well.

;;;;; Pam?

;;;;; Q I think, given all the stern warnings and concerns from here about the treatment of prisoners of war, I was surprised to see that they are in such good shape. And I'm wondering if you could address what you know of their treatment. I mean, besides the televised pictures of them and the fact that ICRC didn't visit them, do you have any evidence that they weren't treated in accordance with international law? And by the same token, could you tell us when we're going to see Iraqi prisoners of war freed?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I don't have information on our POWs, the ones that were returned. I don't. I'm sure that will come forward at the appropriate time.

;;;;; (Turning to General McChrystal) And on the second? Don't have --

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: There is a process to review all of the prisoners of war under our control and to determine which of those are appropriate for very speedy release.

;;;;; And the secretary has given that guidance and CENTCOM's working it.

;;;;; Q So the Article 5, have any of those proceedings happened yet?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: To my knowledge, they have not. But I am not sure.

;;;;; Q A question on the return of the police to the streets of Baghdad. Last week, General Brooks said that they had to be cautious about the use of the former police because many of them were associates of the regime. And yet there was a report out that significant numbers of them have been reporting back to duty and we've been utilizing them. What's the status of using the former Iraqi police?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: There's an effort ongoing to augment the situation, the security situation in Baghdad and other areas by using Iraqis to help with the policing function. To my understanding, in each case we are still largely in the organizational phase to identify the appropriate people, to do the kinds of checks that ensure that it's a credible and legitimate force. But this will be a long process. This is something we are just starting, and to produce a representative security element within Iraq will be something that takes a long time, and must be done by the Iraqis, in the end.

;;;;; Q Are some of those people -- are they considered acceptable to the Iraqi citizens because of their past association with the regime?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I'm not sure of any specifics. I would just say that we are going through a process to, as much as possible, balance the requirement to get people on the street quickly, with the requirement to have them be legitimate.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Barbara, and then Tom is the last one.

;;;;; Q Torie, General Brooks talked this morning at Central Command about the legal issue of when the cessation of hostilities happens, when the combat phase is declared over, under the Geneva Convention, which the U.S., of course, follows, the U.S. military may have a legal obligation to become formally the occupation force of Iraq and take on the military legal obligations of being the occupation force under the Geneva Convention because war will have stopped. What kinds of obligations does that put upon the U.S. military, and how do you deal with this phase with the understanding that you've always said you're not the occupation force? How do you take on these legal obligations under the Geneva Convention?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: I think he also said he's not a lawyer. And neither am I. But there will be plenty of people who will make sure everything we do is appropriate, how we do it and when we do it. As the general said, right now we are focused on primarily the military operations and using those military operations to create an environment in which the Iraqis can get their country back.

;;;;; We could consider and talk to some of the general counsel people about a briefing of some sort if it would be useful. I just don't know enough about it.

;;;;; Okay? And we'll do Tom last.

;;;;; Q Now that you foresee no more major combat operations, do you see a different mix of U.S. forces heading into the region; more Civil Affairs units, Military Police? And also, some analysts are suggesting you bring in international police of the kind we saw in Bosnia and Kosovo.

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: I wouldn't speak to the international police in specifics, but clearly, the mix of U.S. forces will continue to be adjusted. There will be a requirement for combat power for some period of time to maintain or to establish that secure and safe environment. But clearly, the requirements for Civil Affairs, engineer organizations, Military Police, will be significant. And in fact, that's designed into the force flow.

;;;;; Q General, will we might be seeing that anytime --

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: Well, in fact, I think you're seeing it right now. As the flow goes, those elements are embedded. We have -- the flow's designed into packages that were, in fact, deployment orders. And although there's a major unit with each deployment order, for example, the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment or the 1st Armored Division, that's only part of that package. In fact, that may be 60 or 70 percent of the package, and a number of other forces, echelon above division and echelon above corps units, built into that. And so we tend to say, well, the 1st Armored Division is going, but in fact, it's a much more capable, wider element than that, that include many of the things that were anticipated and that you mentioned.

;;;;; Q The 1st Cav., they've been put on hold?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: There is a review going on right now of what forces will be required. We have --

;;;;; Q Does that mean they've been put on hold?

;;;;; GEN. MCCHRYSTAL: There's been no dep. ord. modification signed at this point, so I wouldn't comment on any specifics.

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: And I would just add, Tom, there are lots of conversations and discussions underway right now with other countries about providing some of those services, international organizations. And there's a lot of enthusiasm from different countries --

;;;;; Q This is for police, or --

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: In terms of providing some of the functions that will be necessary going forward. Obviously, humanitarian on the civil front and perhaps performing some of those functions, as well.

;;;;; Q Police functions?

;;;;; MS. CLARKE: Mm-hmm.

;;;;; Thank you.

;;;;; Q A brief follow-up --

;;;;; Q General, is much of the 4th ID now in Iraq?

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Tuesday, April 15, 2003

*****KEY POINTS*****

- Coalition forces continue to make progress in the war in Iraq. We are rooting out remnants of the Iraqi regime, including Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit.
- The regime is finished. Baghdad and most of the country is free of Saddam's control, and he and his top lieutenants are either dead or on the run.
- With the end of the regime, terrorists have lost their chief sponsor and ally in Iraq.
- We have begun the long process of finding weapons of mass destruction, which could be well hidden. We will find them as Iraqis come forward, and will destroy them to make sure they never threaten anyone again.
- With the liberation of Iraq, the United Nations sanctions imposed on Saddam Hussein are being lifted, so more aid can flow into Iraq. In addition, the World Food Program and UN are delivering over one million tons of food, enough to feed the entire population of Iraq for several months.
- We have secured both northern and southern oil fields and natural resources for the Iraqi people.
- Most Iraqis are staying in their homes and have enough food to survive for some time. Coalition forces are working with local authorities and police forces to patrol the streets, and looting is tapering off.
- We are working with clerics, tribal leaders, and ordinary Iraqis toward our goal of helping the Iraqi people transition to a non-threatening, representative form of self-government that preserves the territorial integrity of Iraq. Coalition members and Iraqis will meet today in An Nasirah to discuss the future of Iraq and the Iraqi Interim Authority - the first of several meetings to talk about achieving a free and stable nation.

*****RECENT DEVELOPMENTS*****

Syria

"As the President noted over the weekend, we are concerned that Syria has been participating in the development of weapons of mass destruction... specifically on chemical weapons. And we believe, in light of this new environment, they should review their actions and their behavior, not only with respect to who gets haven in Syria and weapons of mass destruction, but especially the support of terrorist activity. And so we have a new situation in the region and we hope that all the nations in the region will now review their past practices and behavior." Secretary of State Powell, to reporters, 4-14-03

Iraq Humanitarian Update

A relief ship from the United Arab Emirates is on its way to help the Iraqi people. The ship is carrying 700 tons of boxed rations, bottled water, family first aid kits, 4 water tankers, an ambulance, 2 trucks, 2 cars, and 12 volunteers. Also, the United Nations international staff is returning to northern Iraq, displaced persons are returning home in northern Iraq, and the water service in Najaf is returning to normal.

Refugees

According to the UN International Organization for Migration, almost all of the 30,000 Iraqis who fled to the Iranian border to escape fighting near their homes in Baghdad and Nasiriyah have returned home. The UN estimates that only 3,000 of those who fled remain away.

*****KEY QUOTE*****

"We took the decision that to leave Iraq in its brutalised state under Saddam was wrong. Now there is upon us a heavy responsibility to make the peace worth the war.... We shall do so not in any spirit of elation, still less of triumphalism, but with a fixed and steady resolve that the cause was just, the victory right and the future for us to make in a way that will stand the judgement of history." British Prime Minister Blair, 4-14-03

Ill. GOP Sen. Fitzgerald Won't Run in '04

By DENNIS CONRAD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republican first-term Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, whose Illinois seat is considered key to the GOP's chances to maintain its majority in the Senate in 2004, will not seek re-election, state Republicans said Tuesday.

Fitzgerald called close supporters Monday night to inform them of his decision not to seek a second term, said a source close to Fitzgerald who spoke only on condition of anonymity. The source, who was among those called by Fitzgerald, said the senator was to announce his decision

Tuesday.

Neither Fitzgerald nor his aides returned repeated phone calls Tuesday. Aides at his Washington office declined to comment.

State Sen. Dave Syverson, treasurer of the Illinois Republican Party and a member of Fitzgerald's campaign finance committee, said people "very close" to Fitzgerald confirmed he will not seek re-election.

Illinois Treasurer Judy Baar Topinka, who heads the state GOP, said she had not spoken to Fitzgerald but had already contacted Bush administration officials to discuss the race and the implications of Fitzgerald's decision.

"I've talked to the White House this morning and we are going to work together to find the best and strongest candidate available," Topinka said. "That will take a little bit of time. I don't think anybody was prepared for this."

Fitzgerald, who had frequent disputes with House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., and other Illinois Republicans, faced a potentially tough race in a state that has increasingly leaned Democratic in recent elections. Political strategists in both parties viewed him as the most vulnerable Senate Republican up for re-election in 2004, and Fitzgerald had been calling himself "the 51st senator" in recognition of how pivotal his re-election could be for preserving the GOP's slim Senate majority. Republicans hold 51 seats to Democrats 48 with one independent.

The Chicago Tribune, citing unnamed sources, reported in Tuesday's editions that Fitzgerald told close associates he had "no fire in the belly" and cited concerns about the personal cost of a re-election campaign.

Fitzgerald, a little-known conservative state senator from Chicago's suburbs and heir to a banking fortune, spent $16 million of his own money in 1998 to unseat - barely - Democrat Carol Moseley Braun, the first black woman elected to the U.S. Senate. A 2004 race was likely to be more expensive.

There had been grumbling within the state Republican party about Fitzgerald's performance on a host of issues, including the maverick's reluctance to fight for funding for Illinois projects that he considered political pork. He was likely to face primary opposition next March.

President Bush's political aides have insisted that Bush supported Fitzgerald.

Chicago-area businessman Andrew J. McKenna Jr. had already indicated he might be a primary challenger.

Democrats began lining up as early as 2002. They include former Chicago school board president Gery Chico, multimillionaire businessman Blair Hull, state Comptroller Dan Hynes, state Sen. Barack Obama, Cook County Treasurer Maria Pappas, businesswoman Joyce Washington and Metamora Mayor Matt O'Shea, a Republican who says he will run as a Democrat.

;;;;; As I mentioned, each town, each one of the 26 metropolitan areas, or urban areas, is being examined in each one of those different subcategories of food, water, medical -- the structures of governance, and also the infrastructure. And we work on that on a daily basis. We've got civil affairs teams that are out there very active -- one extremely active team in and around Nasiriyah, where some of our best work is being done.

;;;;; We also know that based on the security environment the area has been declared what we call permissive, which means that more and more humanitarian organizations can move into the area now. That's just within the last few days. And of course the Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance has already passed through Nasiriyah, and finds it certainly worthy of additional activities by other organizations. So there's a lot of great work that's happening in that area, and other areas of the country. Nasiriyah is a key hub, just based on the place it's located geographically. That's part of why the fighting was so significant there. It's also why it's important to be able to move in the area to the east, to the north, to northwest, and also from the south, where the key ports are. That's how we are doing our work.

;;;;; Yes, please, Chas?

;;;;; Q General, Chas Henry, WTOP Radio. Can you give us a sense of the scope and scale of the coalition's effort to hunt for weapons of mass destruction? How many people are involved in this effort? Dozens? Hundreds? And how are they focusing their efforts?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Now, this is a good question, and let me just describe a bit of how we approach the entire WMD program. First, we have -- we remain convinced that there are weapons of mass destruction inside of Iraq, and we remain unwavering in our view of that. We know there are systems that could deliver it -- many of those have been destroyed. Some have been taken into our custody. We also know that there are people who have knowledge of the program and that it would take time before we get access to these people. Some of them we have access to. More we will have access to over time.

;;;;; The way we've organized for the work is first to have a number of mechanisms that let us do the initial checks when we think we might have found something. These are unit level detectors and monitoring equipment. And that may give the first indication that maybe there's something that's chemical, maybe there's something that's radiological. We then take it to another level. We have other organizations that have been brought in, military units that have the capability to do a more detailed examination and confirm an agent, specifically what it might be. If we find a confirmed agent of some sort, we may evacuate it further for yet a better confirmation. Each one of these things provides us greater fidelity on what it might be.

;;;;; We've also organized some units to do this, and embedded in other units, for example within some of our Special Operations units and some of our forward operating units the ability to do what we call sensitive site exploitation -- the ability to go into a place, to examine it in detail, with the right knowledge, with the right equipment related to weapons of mass destruction. An entire brigade has been devoted to that, an artillery brigade -- changed from its normal mission of delivering fire support, trained to do site exploitations in small teams. And so we can cover a number of areas. But the key part is that we have to get information that leads us to the areas for the work to be done. And that's very deliberate. We have to be very patient about it. We knew that much of that would unfold as we got into Baghdad, and indeed we are beginning to get more and more pieces of information that have to be joined together in this mosaic that I have described to find out really what the picture is. The efforts are ongoing. We have some preliminary examinations that have occurred that did not prove to be weapons of mass destruction. We found some things that were potentially agricultural. And so that's why we have not been loud and boisterous about every find that occurs, because we have a structure for getting a very deliberate read and being conscious about it. Nevertheless, we remain convinced we're going to find something as time goes on.

;;;;; In the back, please? And then I'll come to you next.

;;;;; Q Pat Doyle (ph) from the Minneapolis Star Tribune. Given the emphasis in the beginning of the campaign on eliminating weapons of mass destruction and getting rid of Saddam Hussein, if coalition forces are unable to capture or verify that Hussein is dead, either using DNA or some other process, and if they are unable to find unambiguous weapons of mass destruction, will the campaign have been less than a success?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, we've certainly said that this regime had to be removed. The regime had to be removed so that the nexus between terrorism and this regime could be broken; so that threats to neighboring countries, threats to the Iraqi people, and threats to our own nations in the coalition could be removed. Those are the first and most important measures of success. We know that the regime has indeed been broken and will not return.

;;;;; As to the individuals inside of it, we have a process that is ongoing to try to find out what their status is, so that they can be brought to justice for the deeds done over many years against the Iraqi people.

;;;;; Weapons of mass destruction, the same thing. Removing weapons of mass destruction from this regime's hands, and eliminating the threats from emerging again in the future are part of this operation. The efforts to get it done are ongoing, and we believe that we'll be successful in that. The fact that they have not been used yet is a success story. It is not the story of failure by any means. And we have been able to keep this from weapons of mass destruction being delivered against our forces, or being delivered against neighboring countries. Now the work of removing the weapons of mass destruction can begin in earnest, and that work is ongoing as I speak.

;;;;; Yes, please, Paul. I'm sorry, I promised to go to her, and then I'll come right back to you. Please?

;;;;; Q I'm Karen Sloan (ph) with AP Radio. I had two questions. One was getting back to the antiquities issue. Asking people to return things now is kind of like shutting the barn door after the horse has bolted. Why did the coalition, when it went to great lengths to protect oil facilities not go to any lengths at all apparently to protect some of the museums in Baghdad that had great antiquities?

;;;;; My second question is we are hearing some reports of anti- American demonstrations in Nasiriyah in conjunction with the political meeting going on there. Do you have any comment on that?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Let me go to the second question first. I have not heard of any reports that are happening there. When liberation occurs, people have the right to express their opinions on a number of things. We certainly know in the countries that contribute to this coalition that there are protestors and demonstrators who are expressing their opinion, and we believe that's a good news story even here. We certainly would want there to be no civil unrest, any violence. But the right for them to express their opinion is something that we believe is a good news story and a trend perhaps for the future.

;;;;; The efforts to secure antiquities. First, as we entered Baghdad, we were involved in very intense combat, and our focus was the combat actions necessary to remove the regime and any of its appendages. In removing the regime, there is a vacuum that is created -- that certainly did occur -- and the vacuum will be filled as time goes on. I don't think that anyone anticipated that the riches of Iraq would be looted by the Iraqi people, and indeed it happened in some places. So while it may now be after the fact that that looting has occurred, it's still important to try to restore it as much as possible. It's simply not useful to speculate as to why we did, did not, what could we have done differently. We did what we did, and our operations were focused on objectives at hand at the time. And we believe that as time goes on we will be able to sort out this issue as well.

;;;;; They are riches. They are important to not only Iraq, but the world, and we have to count on others as well at this point now to assist in trying to bring that back to a degree of closure and protecting those antiquities for the future.

;;;;; Please, Paul?

;;;;; Q Hi, it's Paul Hunter, from Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Two questions, if I may. One --

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I'm getting used to that. (Laughter.)

;;;;; Q Yesterday you came close as Tikrit was falling. Do you today declare the major military operations in this war finished? And, secondly, back to weapons of mass destruction, we've seen a lot of pictures of regular ammunitions -- it seems every corner you turn there's a pile, or every school has them, and people are giving you tips and pointing you to regular ammunition. Does it not defy logic that if there were -- if Saddam was going to use them against your troops that there would have been some residue, that something would have turned up by now? I know you've got a lot of sites left to search, and you still have big chunks of the country. But if they were about to be used there would be some evidence by now? Do you know what I mean? Like --

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I certainly do know what you mean. First let me say that Tikrit was one of a number of areas where there still was a potential for regime stronghold, regime activity and some military presence. We have not been in every area of the country yet. There are operations that are ongoing right now in areas that we think there still may be some. So it's not time to say that's the last military action.

;;;;; Even if we identified all remaining pockets where there's some capability that still exists -- in some cases we find that there are formations that have been abandoned. But, nevertheless, on initial look there appears to be military capability. Even when all that is done, we still have individuals, we have regime death squads, we still have 80 suicide vests that are unaccounted for, that may have been distributed for us. And there's still a military hazard that exists. All these weapons that we found in piles, in caches in a variety of places, say that there's capability still out there that hasn't been removed from those who might seek to to gain access to it and use it. And so our military work is not complete. It's still ongoing.

;;;;; As to the weapons of mass destruction, we have to always remember that this regime has had a good period of time -- since the last war -- to be very deliberate about how it deceived and denied the existence of a program, just like they did deception and denial operations to say there were weapons that were not being developed, and we found some of those weapons used. The efforts to try to hide are very deliberate, and they have been ongoing for a number of years. It's almost embedded in the culture of the regime to deny and to deceive. And so I think we have to be very patient as we do our work to find these things. The advantage we have is that we can enter a place by force if need be, and we have already done that in some areas. In some cases we found conventional munitions. Those were not being hidden from view. Other things were being hidden deliberately. We've seen a number of indications of items being buried that are not logical. So when you ask, doesn't it defy logic? Burying things that we have found is not logical. Why would we bury airplanes? We found buried airplanes. We've seen airplanes being buried -- jets, MiG fighters. There are other things like that as well, and we'll examine each one of those to find out what it is that's there, and trace the logic that caused the deception and denial. And I believe that we'll be successful in due time. That's how our efforts are ongoing. It will take time to uncover things that are deliberately hidden. And with the assistance of those who have some knowledge, I think we'll get pointed more accurately to those things.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q General, Pete Smallowitz from Knight Ridder. With more than 50 Iraqi leaders who are captured or who surrendered, what happens next with them? Is there a trial? Is there a sentencing? And how long does that process take? How will it work?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, I think that the -- let me say it like this: the 55 top leaders that we are looking for are of interest to our government, and so there will be additional governmental decisions that are made when they are taken into our custody or confirmed dead -- whatever the outcome should happen to be in that regard. And so it's -- I shouldn't speculate on exactly what will happen to them when they are taken into custody. We'll see when that occurs.

;;;;; The statuses of others will be governed by law -- in some cases for the most part the military leaders we've taken are governed as prisoners of war, and we treat them that way, and their status has not changed. There may be others that are out there as well that may fall into a different status as we counter them.

;;;;; Q Can you say what is going to happen to those that have already surrendered or been captured?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Right now they are still in coalition control. Their status has not changed. We are maintaining dialogue with them. We are treating them properly, treating them with respect. And that really is about all I can tell you about at this point in time.

;;;;; Yes, ma'am, please?

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- of Reuters. Can I ask what the situation is along the Syrian border? I know in the past you've said you control at least one of the border crossings. Do you control the whole border? Is it possible for leaders to cross over there? Is there evidence that they are doing so or that weapons of mass destruction have been taken over there?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We have forces that are located in a number of places along the Syrian border with Iraq. I mentioned the border checkpoint at Highway 11. That's currently under our control. Highway 10 also -- we have vehicle checkpoints that are located along some of the key routes. In the northwest area, Al Qaim is an important area for us. We have a presence there, at that very important crossing point. We are located in other areas as well that I would not want to be too specific about at this point. We believe that we are having success on preventing free movement by regime leaders out of country, or others into the country for that matter -- and our operations will continue. But of course we are not arm in arm, inch by inch, and so there may be places that we have not found yet, and we have other methods to try to determine whether there's activity there. Thus far we are not seeing that, and we believe we are being successful.

;;;;; I have time for one more. Yes, sir, please?

;;;;; Q (Off mike) -- with Univision News? Can you tell us more about the three death squads, what their nationality is, if they had any of the suicide vests? And then also there was a report yesterday about some trucks buried -- I mean containers -- mobile, chemical, biological labs. Are you now going to use some sort of subterranean mapping equipment to locate more buried stuff? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: First, the three regime death squad members were identified by the local population. We had been operating in and around that area. The population made contact with us and said, These are bad guys. I don't know anything about their nationality at this point. I have not seen any reports to confirm that or what equipment they may have had with them. That certainly will come as additional military reports come in. The way they were described they are most likely akin to some of the regime death squad members we have seen other places. So nationality will be determined in time, and that I don't know.

;;;;; As to the methods we use to locate other things that may have been buried, we have a number of methods that we use. All of them will be brought to bear to try to point us in the right place. This is as it is on any other part of the battlefield for any other function. We want to get as accurate a picture of information we can gain before we take action, and then act in such a way that it's appropriate for whatever it is we seek. So in this case if we need to dig something up, need to locate something, then we'll use what we have, the telesat.

;;;;; Q Do you have any special equipment? -- is my question.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We do have some special equipment that can help us, and it has to be used in a focused way, but we do have equipment that can help us to locate some items that may be buried.

;;;;; Thanks very much, ladies and gentlemen.

END.

UNITED STATES CENTRAL COMMAND DAILY OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING
BRIEFER: BRIGADIER GENERAL VINCE BROOKS, DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF OPERATIONS

DOHA, QATAR
7:04 A.M. EDT, TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2003

GEN. BROOKS: Ladies and gentlemen, good afternoon. Today is the 26th day since coalition forces entered Iraq to initiate Operation Iraqi Freedom, and we're moving ahead with our efforts to return Iraq to the Iraqi people.

Iraqis are gaining confidence in their safety from the previous regime and its oppression. The Iraqi people have gone beyond celebrating their new-found freedom to beginning to work with the coalition to begin to repair the infrastructure, the government, and public works in their country.

;;;;; Even as we make daily progress, our men and women continue to make sacrifices, and as always, we remember the lives lost during this campaign, and we extend our sympathies to their loved ones.

;;;;; The focus of the coalition's operations in the last 24 hours has been on eliminating the remaining pockets of resistance, locating key regime leaders, and increasing military contributions to humanitarian assistance. Special operations forces have been active in expanding security in the northern Iraq areas of Mosul, Irbil and Kirkuk. And you have seen those pointed out before. Again, just as a reminder, Mosul, Irbil and Kirkuk.

;;;;; All of the oil fields do remain secure in the north, and the oil well fire I reported yesterday has been extinguished. At this point, there are no burning oil wells in Iraq.

;;;;; Special operations forces met with tribal and local leaders in former regime stronghold to secure letters of compliance that work is ongoing.

;;;;; The cooperation by local populations is enhancing the activities of special operations forces, and in one case near Ar-Rupa (sp) off in the west, we found that our coalition forces were led to a group of three former regime death squad members that had infiltrated into the area and had resulted in the capture of these three death squad members.

;;;;; Humanitarian assistance is flowing, also with the special operations forces. And in this next video I'll show you, shows some coalition special operations troops distributing supplies to a remote community in the west.

;;;;; (VIDEO) And you've seen images like this over the last several days, over many days for that matter, and there's always good, positive interaction, especially out in communities where the regime no longer has any influence whatsoever.

;;;;; Direct action missions are also ongoing throughout the country. These actions are intended to locate regime leaders and also to search former regime facilities. In a reconnaissance mission, special operations forces found 80 SA-2 or SA-3 surface-to-air missile hidden in a revetment within a ravine. And so as we continue to move around different areas, we find more and more vestiges of the regime and weapons as well.

;;;;; Coalition maneuver operations remain focused on increasing security in urban areas throughout Iraq while also assessing and addressing humanitarian needs. We're seeing a steady decrease in looting and lawlessness as more communities organize themselves but with coalition support.

;;;;; The deliberate work of clearing sectors in Baghdad and Tikrit continued yesterday. Coalition forces regularly find large weapons and ammunition stockpiles with the assistance of the Iraqi people, in circumstances very similar to what I described in the finding of the surface-to-air missiles. In one example yesterday within Baghdad, Fifth Corps forces found a weapons cache with 91 cases of TNT and plastic explosives, six homemade bombs, 23 cases of rocket propelled grenades, and then they were led by Iraqi people in the area to 10 smaller caches of ammunition and weapons in a different sector. And so it's with the assistance of the Iraqi people that we find these different stockpiles, and it helps to remove some of the threats, not only to our forces but also to the Iraqi people

;;;;; And while this important clearing work is ongoing, it also reminds us that there are still hazards lingering throughout the country of Iraq, and our coalition forces are active in improving conditions throughout the country.

;;;;; Coalition forces are working closely with emerging leaders and religious leaders in several areas to assist the formation of local governmental structures. In Diwaniyah, for example, local administrators are working to create a city council, get it started, and get underway with local government. Two former generals in that same area have volunteered to organize a local police force, and they are being considered at this time.

;;;;; In the town of Karbala, a local leadership council has formed. In As Samawa, a local police force has formed, with over 150 volunteers. Those were selected out of 1,500 that showed up for consideration.

;;;;; So, everywhere we see citizens becoming more active throughout all areas of Iraq in helping to restore order, and the coalition will continue to work very closely with them.

;;;;; Electric power and water supply remain the key needs, and they are also interrelated. In most case, water capacity is limited by a lack of power. Power is limited by either destruction or some sort of mechanical malfunction of the power production plants. We have current assessments ongoing that indicate the restoration of power will also improve most of the other functions immediately, and so it remains one of our focuses. Reestablishing electrical power in many communities has to be done in what we call a step process.

;;;;; As these photos show you, we've had some recent efforts in An Nasiriyah, in the An Nasiriyah district, and they show that first we've got to secure areas before we can do additional work. Coalition teams then conduct assessments to determine problems and the best solutions to the problems, and these assessments are often done in close cooperation with local experts and workers, as you see in this case, meeting on the hood of a vehicle inside of a power plant.

;;;;; I have some other examples of where we stand on restoring function in different urban areas. And this is something we track within the coalition headquarters and the subordinate commands on a daily basis in a number of regional areas -- 26 different regional area -- looking at food, water, medical supply, governance, infrastructure as areas of consideration.

;;;;; So, as an example, currently the power station in An Nasiriyah is mechanically ready to resume function. However, it requires what is essentially a jump-start from another power grid in order to get the generators within it operational. This jump-start will happen we believe within the next several days from Al-Basra. The two of them are connected by power lines. The lines in fact are down right now, and when the lines have been restored and repaired between the two cities, power can move from Basra to Nasiriyah and begin the function there. A similar process is ongoing in Al-Zubair, As-Samawa, Ad Diwaniyah, al-Hillah, Najaf, Karbala, and of course Baghdad.

;;;;; With the restoration of power comes the production of fresh water to meet the broadest humanitarian needs. There are some images to show you water treatment work as well. First we reestablished the flow of fresh water through the existing Iraqi water systems, and this requires the same process of securing the sites first, making an assessment, and then coordinating with local experts and workers. Through the coalition and humanitarian efforts, the water supply in Umm Qasr and Safwan have been returned to their pre-war levels.

;;;;; In those areas where we cannot quickly reestablish any existing systems, direct delivery of fresh water remains the chosen alternative. You can see holes in this one from combat damage -- this is a water tower.

;;;;; The water buffalos you've seen distributed throughout the area, they continue to provide a source of supply for people in communities, and they are restocked with fresh water as time goes on.

;;;;; We also truck water to areas, including An-Najaf and Karbala at the current time, and also in the north. Kirkuk, within the last few days, has received over 700,000 liters of water, and they were able to distribute the first 35,000 just yesterday. And this will continue until we have gotten to the point where the existing water structures have been restored and a permanent flow of water is reestablished.

;;;;; A similar need is in medical. Our cooperation with communities is key to our daily successes in medical care. I have a video to show you of the coalition medical service support group, with -- (inaudible) -- Navy doctors, and it also has an Iraqi doctor that you see at the beginning of this. And other civilians as well work with the coalition forces at these military facilities to provide their support. Let's go ahead and roll the tape.

;;;;; (VIDEO) Hundreds of Iraqis visit this particular facility daily, and they come in for a variety of treatments. Injuries that require a greater level of care are taken to the Talill Airfield and then they're evacuated to other locations. There's also a combat support hospital right there at Talill that may be able to take care of additional needs.

;;;;; Many of the medical care problems we see throughout Iraq are due to regime neglect, or regime use of the hospitals as military centers. Today, five of the 11 hospitals in Basra, for example, are in need of significant repair as a result of combat damage and also neglect.

;;;;; But there are examples in other areas where hospitals are being restored to operational capability. In Baghdad, for example, there are two hospitals that have been secured by coalition forces and they've been reported returned to service. Recently, a coalition group escorted a team of -- from the Italian Embassy to a hospital in Baghdad to deliver two generators and restore local power right there. Hospitals are also open for treatment in An-Najaf.

;;;;; We also recognize, though, like in An-Najaf, that with the restoration of capability, there's often a need for medical resupply. These photos are of civil affairs units and free Iraqi forces delivering medical supplies to a village hospital near As-Shattra (sp), and this is north of Nasiriyah.

;;;;; In the northern cities of Irbill and Dahook (sp), medical conditions are as they were before the war began, and they're in pretty good shape there.

;;;;; Finally, our maritime component continue their efforts to expand access to the inland ports within Iraq, and this enables the free flow of commercial vessels as well as humanitarian supplies. We've spoken before about the efforts focused in the Khor-Abdullah from the Northern Arabian Gulf into Umm Qasr, and that's the area right here, where it ultimately ended up into the port of Umm Qasr. Work is currently ongoing north of that area into the yellow box, to the port of As-Zubair.

;;;;; The next image shows you what is in our way at this point. Each one of these dots represents a derelict vessel. These are vessels that have -- are no longer functional. In some cases they're partially sunken or completely sunken. In some cases they're afloat, but there is no owner. There are 36 of these derelict vessels between the port of Umm Qasr and the port of As-Zubair, and our efforts are now ongoing to clear those out. Each one of them has to be examined, removed of any potential demolitions or unexploded ordinance, cleared for mines in and around it. And the 17 that you -- actually, the 16 that you see highlighted here have to be physically moved in order to create a channel into the port of As-Zubair. This work is ongoing, and it will be very important when it's completed.

;;;;; The coalition will continue its military efforts in close cooperation with expert Iraqis and with various organizations to speed Iraq on its way to a stable future. And with that, ladies and gentlemen, I'll take your questions. Yes, Adi (sp).

;;;;; Q Adi Rival (sp), ABC News. Regarding fugitive regime leaders, there are reports now that some of them may have left Iraq to go into Syria and other countries. Is there a rewards program set up for every single member of the top 55? And also, do you have DNA of most of these regime leaders in your -- at CENTCOM? Thank you.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: There is a rewards program that's out there for information that would lead to the capturing or even clarifying the condition of those leaders, and others -- people that have knowledge of the weapons of mass destruction program, for example -- and they will be rewarded if they provide information about that program. So, it's not just about individuals, it's about a variety of things that are of interest to us. People that might have information about terrorist activities inside of Iraq, and connections to terrorist organizations, there can be some rewards there. There may be some rewards also for turning in of weapons. And so there are a number of things that remain available to us to provide enhancements and enticements to those with information.

;;;;; I don't want to comment on exactly what forensic material we have. Frankly, I don't know the full scope of what we have. I do know that we have some capability, and we'll bring that capability to bear when we have someone we want to confirm, whatever that happens to be -- whether it's forensic information at that site that would like any remains found with a specific individual, or whether it's other sources of information that might be made available to us out there. Anything we can make use of, we will make use of to get positive confirmations in each case that's reported.

;;;;; Please -- (inaudible).

;;;;; Q James Forlong (sp) from Sky News. You mentioned the process of rebuilding in Iraq, and obviously it's going to be important to get people to come back to many of the old jobs they occupied before. But given that a lot of those will be, or will have been Ba'ath Party members, what's the cut-off point -- what would exclude someone from your wanting them to be involved in the rebuilding work?

;;;;; And the second question is about DNA. You've mentioned you've got Saddam Hussein's DNA. Do you also have Bashar Al-Assad's DNA?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, let me first comment on the rebuilding efforts. We know that it's going to be a very deliberate process, and it's one that will also entail a degree of risk. And this is something we think has to be done in order to get the Iraqi people back to work.

;;;;; Many of the structures were extended appendages of the Baath Party, and we're certainly well aware of that. I don't know that we have a fixed cutoff line. I would not say that we have a fixed cutoff line as to who's okay and who's not.

;;;;; I think we have to use good judgment as we get information about specific individuals. We certainly know that anyone that's in the top 55 would not be acceptable for any service in the future. And there are others as well that we believe were strongly associated with the activities of the regime throughout time, not just during this operation.

;;;;; We'll have to rely heavily on what the population tells us about these individuals, and we'll also have to rely on any additional information that we may have about individuals. But the bottom line is Iraqis need to go back to work.

;;;;; The things that were functional as appendages of the Ba'ath regime, we'll keep in place. So, for example, the distribution of food from the oil-for-food program, parts of that program were extended from parts of the Ba'ath Party. It was a functional distribution system. There's value in using it.

;;;;; Some of the port workers may have been paid by the Ba'ath Party. We need to get them back to work to run the port. They won't be paid by the Ba'ath Party anymore. So I think we'll use good judgment on that, as well as we can.

;;;;; And again, on DNA, I don't know who all we have DNA on. I don't have that level of knowledge, and so I wouldn't comment on who we may or may not have at this point.

;;;;; Please, Tom.

;;;;; Q General Brooks, Tom Mintier with CNN. We have seen the pictures of the looting and destruction that has occurred in Baghdad. And while there are efforts to rebuild and reconstruct, there is also apparently an effort to look into the past, some of the historical artifacts, museums that have been looted.

;;;;; The secretary of State, in comments to the Kuwaiti foreign minister, said that the U.S. government would indeed assist with the recovery of some artifacts. Now apparently he's volunteered the services of the Pentagon's Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Affairs to help restore the catalogues and things like that. What's being done about Iraq's past that has been looted and pillaged as well?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: This is something that has always been a concern to us. And as I showed you in images throughout the war, there are so many rich antiquities inside of Iraq and such a long history that's important not only to the Iraqi people but to the world that we wanted to try to protect that wherever we could, certainly in the nature of our military operations.

;;;;; It's most unfortunate that some Iraqis found it efficacious to take away some of these key antiquities from museums in downtown Baghdad when there was a void in security. We are hopeful that that can be restored, that those antiquities have not left the country, did not go on black markets. And we have efforts underway to prevent that from happening.

;;;;; And we would also ask that those who have knowledge on it would provide that knowledge so that the antiquities can be returned. The important aspect of this is the riches of the Iraqi population are of interest to the world, and it's something that we honor and respect, and we want to see that continue.

;;;;; There have been a lot of public statements about the importance of that to the United States, the United States government. And we have work underway with the Iraqi population to try to get these things back. I don't know that there will be a formal rewards program established, but that's certainly a possibility that we're giving some consideration to. Most importantly, we want people to take responsibility for the items and provide them back so that the world can have access to them.

;;;;; You mentioned the Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance, that we sometimes refer to as ORHA. That's a body that's been formed. It's an inter-agency group led by former Army officer General Jay Garner, with others as well that have expertise in a variety of areas, to help organize Iraq to be turned over to the Iraqi people.

;;;;; They work very closely with and in conjunction with Central Command and coalition force headquarters and primarily our land component that have been conducting operations inside of Iraq, to partnership inside of there. For now, the way the work goes is through CENTCOM and the coalition land component command.

;;;;; In time, we will transition some responsibilities and activities to ORHA. And in even further time, those responsibilities and activities will be transitioned to the Iraqi people by way of an interim administration. So we are very closely partnered with that organization already.

;;;;; They've already made assessments in a number of areas. They have teams in place in the south and also in the north and, just within the last two days, have done assessments in Najaf and Karbala to extend the places where they're able to begin doing their work even further. And that's done, as I mentioned, in close partnership -- in fact, integral partnership -- with the military actions that are ongoing for humanitarian assistance.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q Pam Sampson (sp), Associated Press. Can you please comment on reports that the Iraqi army's western An Bahr (ph) command surrendered today to U.S. forces?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I don't have a report that confirms that, Pam, so I cannot say so. But I will tell you that there are a number of places where there are still former commanders of regime forces that we're having dialogue with who have chosen not to fight anymore, and we're seeking any final surrenders that may be out there.

;;;;; These are not large pockets of military resistance. I don't want to create the impression that there's some large Republican Guard division that's still out there. Military capability throughout Iraq has been destroyed or is simply walked away. But there are still some places where there are leaders that we're in contact with, and we'll seek to take them into our custody if necessary or to discuss what the future might be with them.

;;;;; These are ongoing at a variety of locations and areas, east, north and west, primarily. And as it develops, we'll have more information to provide you.

;;;;; Please.

;;;;; Q General, Paul Adams, BBC. Just following on from what you said just now, there's been a lot of talk about working alongside the police force, trying to get police back on the beat in cities. Talk about the army. I mean, is it too early to talk about putting bits of the Iraqi army back together again, making them functional, making them a viable security presence in the country, or is that jumping the gun by a long, long way? And do you have details of an incident reported in Mosul which may have involved fatalities and possibly involved American forces?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We'll look at a number of options as to who should return back to work and what role they might play in the future structure of Iraq. We know that there are a number of military formations that chose not to fight for the regime, and there should be due consideration regarding that.

;;;;; And so I certainly anticipate that there will be some former military members that will have a role in the future of Iraq. And it's too early to be able to say in detail what those roles would be.

;;;;; As to Mosul, there are only initial reports. I have not seen any military reports at this point, so I can't confirm anything you may have heard up to the current time.

;;;;; Please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- New York Times. Not to beat a dead horse, but to return for a second to the DNA question, you said you do have samples of DNA material from the Hussein family. Please tell us where, when, how and from whom they were obtained.

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I can't do that, John. I mean, I just can't do that. I think it would be inappropriate to talk about the sources of any material or information we have that we would use for forensic purposes. We wouldn't do this if it were a trial for the United States. We wouldn't do it for a police force. And it certainly wouldn't be appropriate for us to do that, given what we have right now.

;;;;; In many cases, the types of things that are done to gain military intelligence information or operational intelligence information puts people's lives at risk. And so it's just something I'm not going to comment on.

;;;;; Yes, ma'am, in the back.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- BBC. We have reports that you are searching sites -- this is fairly constantly raised -- for weapons of mass destruction. Will you be bringing in or inviting in any impartial body to help you with the search, possibly the U.N. weapons inspectors?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Without being precise on who might be invited, we certainly would make available any samples that we retrieve as we're doing our searches. Right now our searches are done under military control, and it's not appropriate to add anyone to that equation. But when things are found, I think we certainly would intend to keep that as open as possible. And that's the way we intend to approach it.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) You talked a lot about switching the power back on, and consequently the water supplies today. Can I just talk you back and can you say how much of the power grid across Iraq, and indeed consequently the water system, were actually damaged by allied bombing or by combat or indeed by Iraqis switching it off? I mean, can you give us some kind of breakdown of the causes of that damage?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I don't know that we have a specific number at this point. What I think we're finding in our -- what we are finding in our assessment is this: First, that our targeting remained focused throughout the operation. We knew that the infrastructure would be very important to the aftermath of combat operations. And so it was rarely, if ever, targeted. And if it was targeted, it might have been for a temporary purpose alone.

;;;;; We did see some indications of damage where some of the Iraqi workers may have thrown the switches off and caused generators to go out. And then, when additional power systems went out, it takes a lot more work to get those restored and back on.

;;;;; Certainly we would anticipate that there's some results of combat action from direct-fire engagements that occurred in and around water-treatment facilities, although I don't have a specific number that's associated with that.

;;;;; We also know from our assessments that much of the dysfunction that we're seeing in the power grid and power stations and in some of the water systems was simply from a lack of attention to it over the years. As money from the oil-for-food program was diverted into opulence and palaces and weapons that were not to have been developed, the water supply system, the power system, things that would take care of the Iraqi people, these things were neglected. And we know that that's the case as well.

;;;;; Where we are right now is how do you fix it? What do you do next? And we're making as many assessments as we can, committing resources wherever we can, to try to solve the problem and make sure that the burden does not continue to rest on the backs of the Iraqi people.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q Michael Weiskopf, Time Magazine. What is the price on Saddam's head?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Well, let me describe it like this. We've said a number of times that there are a number of leaders from the regime that we're interested in knowing the status of. We have targeted leadership of the regime. We've targeted leadership capability throughout the operation.

;;;;; There may be rewards associated with information leading to the condition, status and verification of members of the regime. There is no specific price tag that I'm aware of, and I doubt that there will be a specific price tag.

;;;;; Information that's provided, when there's a reward that's exchanged for that information, is dependent upon what information that comes at that time. It's not predetermined.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- ABC Television Australia. Back on the question of surrenders of Republican Guard commanders, can you confirm this report around that the commander of the Republican Guard Baghdad reached an agreement with American forces to surrender and get his men to quit and go home in exchange for transfer, via an Apache helicopter, to an undisclosed safe haven? And if that's correct, how significant is that? And how typical has that been with the secret war you fought to stop it being a military campaign and a more strategic defeat?

;;;;; And the second question, on the children of Baghdad, we've seen some very disturbing pictures lately from hospitals of maimed children who are dying. Can you not airlift these children to Germany and other places using your planes and get them to western medical care rather than dealing with them here in Iraq, where the situation is fairly dire?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: I'm not aware of any deals that have been struck with any commanders for transport on helicopters or anything close to that, so I don't have any report that's like that. When we do deal with leaders that are out there, either local leaders, tribal leaders, religious leaders, or in some cases military leaders, former military leaders, it's a discussion that talks about how to end hostilities and how to begin the future of Iraq.

;;;;; These things are discussed at low levels and they result in exactly what's described there -- cessation of hostilities, steps toward the future of Iraq, what roles might be played, and what conditions need to be set. And, very shortly thereafter, we tend to arrive with humanitarian assistance, because there's people in every one of these areas that need something. And that's the way we tend to approach it right away.

;;;;; You've seen a number of images. I've shown you a great number of images of children being cared for by military medical facilities, children being evacuated, wounded Iraqi civilians being treated all over the battlefield, being moved to field hospitals. I've told you about movement to the best care we actually have available in the theater, which is a comfort. And I've also stated that on no occasion did we pass someone that requires medical care. We never pass that up.

;;;;; The images you've seen, we don't have access to those individuals. And when we encounter people, we provide treatment to them. What treatment is to be provided is determined by health professionals, medical professionals. What we know, though, is we provide whatever care and treatment we can with what we have available at the time.

;;;;; And so that's really our -- that's our approach to it. That's a consistent approach to being humanitarian in our efforts, using military resources when they're available, or moving to civilian resources when they're available to take care of whatever the requirement happens to be at the time.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Al Jazeera. Actually, I've just been back from southern Iraq up to Nasiriyah, and I've witnessed the humanitarian efforts.

;;;;; And they were going up -- I mean, finding our way slowly. And actually can you give us some sort of a breakdown as to how much human aid have you injected into that area? What was taken from Iraqi warehouses from the stocks of the oil-for-food? What did you provide yourselves? And on the medical sort of thing, do you have all the answers to all the cases that are there?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: What I can tell you is in general terms -- I don't have the specific numbers of exactly how much has moved into those areas. First, any supplies that we found that were taken from Iraqi forces, first, we have redistributed -- and I've shown some examples of that -- and there were some stocks in and around An Nasiriyah, and other areas as well. We've produced significant amounts of water in and around Nasiriyah -- some with military capability -- reverse osmosis water purification units that can go into any water source, and provide fresh water.

;;;;; From Nasiriyah, we moved to other areas as well with those supplies. We've done work in hospitals in and around Nasiriyah. We've worked on the power. I've shown some examples of that as well. Medical supplies have moved in there. Field hospitals have been established there, and care has been provided as well. Some of the stocks from the and oil-for-food program we seek to have distributed by those who are involved in the oil-for-food program. And we have indeed found some large stocks of oil-for-food program food stuffs, but it's further north. I don't know that we found any in and around Nasiriyah. I believe Karbala was the area where we found large numbers of stocks. Those also will be distributed, so that nothing is withheld from the population. We found some in Basra that were part of the oil-for-food program, had not been distributed -- those were distributed right away. And we have shown a number of examples of that. That will continue to be the approach that we have.

9/11 Victim Fund Challenge Debated

Tuesday April 15, 2:00 am ET

Daniel Wise, New York Law Journal

Southern District of New York Judge Alvin K. Hellerstein gave a cool initial reception Monday to arguments that Special Master Kenneth R. Feinberg has improperly limited payments to the families of high-income workers who were killed in the Sept. 11 attack on the World Trade Center.

But Hellerstein also complimented one of the lawyers arguing in three separate cases challenging the way Feinberg has administered the no-fault Victim Compensation Fund, and echoed the attorney's key argument in pressing the U.S. Justice Department lawyer defending the special master.

Monday's arguments focused almost exclusively on claims that Feinberg is impermissibly imposing a cap on the compensation he is willing to award high-income families. The families' lawyers pointed to remarks he has made in explaining the fund's rules that in most cases an award of more than $3 million or $4 million would be inappropriate. They also said that several times in meetings with lawyers about individual cases, Feinberg had indicated that he would not approve an award of more than $6 million.

The families' lawyers also said their argument that a "cap" is being imposed is bolstered by Feinberg's approach of defining presumptive awards for people with incomes of less than $231,000, but requiring individuals with incomes over that amount to justify their awards with a individualized presentation. Ninety-eight percent of American workers earn less than $231,000 in a year.

Slightly more than 3,000 people were killed in the Sept. 11 attacks. As of April 11, 1,581 families of those killed or injured have submitted claims. The fund has issued 358 awards, of which 224 have been accepted. The average award to the families of those killed has been $1.5 million, with the largest individual award being $6 million. The fund, however, has approved an award of $6.7 million to someone injured in the attacks.

The provision of the law setting up the federal September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, which was at the crux of Monday's argument, mandates several factors to be considered in calculating awards. They require Feinberg to determine economic and non-economic losses and "the individual circumstances of the claimant."

In his rule-making, Feinberg stated that he could look to the needs and resources of the dependents and beneficiaries of those who died in the attacks under the rubric of "individual circumstances of the claimant."

The lawyers for the families charge that he has looked to those needs and resources, and determined that when they are ample a "de facto" limit should be imposed on an award no matter what a straight mathematical computation of economic losses might yield. Feinberg has also limited non-economic losses to $250,000 for each person killed and $100,000 for each family member, but those limits were not challenged in the three suits before Hellerstein.

The families of several people killed in the World Trade Center were in the ceremonial courtroom of the Pearl Street courthouse. All of the lawyers took note of their attendance, and Judge Hellerstein also said their presence is important because "this is not a theoretical exercise. We are dealing with pain and unique and irreparable losses."

The first of the lawsuits was filed as a class action on behalf of the 2,800 people killed in the towers. Arguing for the seven named plaintiffs in that case, Colaio v. Feinberg, 03--0558, all of them families of Cantor Fitzgerald employees, was John F. Cambria of Salans. Mark S. Moller of Kreindler & Kreindler argued for the plaintiffs in Smith v. Ashcroft, 03-1040, and Jonathan C. Reiter of Broder & Reiter argued in Schneider v. Feinberg, 03-1129.

Arguing for Feinberg was Assistant Attorney General Robert D. McCallum Jr., one of several lawyers from the Justice Department in Washington, D.C., introduced to Judge Hellerstein Monday by Southern District U.S. Attorney James B. Comey.

Both sides had brought dispositive motions: summary judgment motions by the families and a motion to dismiss by the government.

In pressing their cases, the families' lawyers were questioned closely by Judge Hellerstein to show how Feinberg had acted improperly in taking the families' needs and resources into account.

Judge Hellerstein questioned Cambria about whether Feinberg had acted "arbitrarily and capriciously" in viewing "individual circumstances" as justifying taking survivors needs and resources into consideration.

Similarly, in questioning Moller, Hellerstein suggested that Feinberg had done his "best" in construing "individual circumstances," an admittedly ambiguous phrase. "Who am I to say it's arbitrary and capricious," he interjected. It "looks reasonable to me."

But several times Hellerstein told Moller that he had made a strong presentation when he had argued that Feinberg's rules for the consideration of family members resources were so open-ended as to be an invitation for arbitrariness.

"Without guidance, predictability or necessary fairness," Moller had argued, Feinberg's interpretation of "individual circumstances could trump everything else."

Cambria had called Feinberg's approach the "tail that wags the dog."

Judge Hellerstein picked up on those themes when he questioned McCallum, who began his argument after the lunch break. He asked McCallum whether the "loosening" of individual circumstances did not create a "quality of arbitrariness that threatens to envelop" the other factors.

McCallum held his ground, arguing that Feinberg was trying to steer a middle course between giving everyone the same award, a course some in Congress had urged, and creating unacceptable differences in the way victims' lives are valued. Those types of differences emerge, he explained, when a straight economic formula is used because victims with high salaries will receive much higher awards than those with lower salaries.

Hellerstein said he would rule soon on the matters before him.

9/11 Families, Gov't at Odds Over Fund
Mon Apr 14, 11:10 PM ET Add U.S. National - AP to My Yahoo!

By ERIN McCLAM, Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK - Lawyers for 10 people with relatives killed in the Sept. 11 attacks argued in federal court Monday that the government's victim compensation fund is biased against those who lost loved ones with high-paying jobs.

They say Kenneth Feinberg, the fund's special master, should base payouts on the economic loss of Sept. 11 victims - in some cases tens of millions of dollars in never-to-be-earned salary.

But the fund's regulations warn that payouts of more than $3 million would "rarely be appropriate in light of individual needs and resources."

The plaintiffs want U.S. District Judge Alvin K. Hellerstein to rule that the system is unfair. He said he would issue a ruling in early May.

Congress created the fund in 2001 as an alternative to legal action for victims' families. To get a payout from the fund, families must agree not to sue airlines or other entities. The government does not disclose details of individual payouts.

Government lawyer Robert McCallum argued Feinberg should be allowed to pay out what he believes is enough to provide a "sound financial basis on which to begin the healing process."

"Those who earned more will get more," he said. "The question is how much more."

Marc Moller, representing two of the plaintiffs, said families of wealthy people killed in the attacks should not have to overcome a "you'll-never-get-it-over-my-dead-body" standard to get the money that is rightfully theirs.

Feinberg, reached by telephone, declined to comment.

- No period after "Drive" in address
- Should "Specifically, the closed park areas are" instead be "Specifically, the White House requests that the following park areas be temporarily closed:"
- missing apostrophe after "guests" at end of para. 1
- at end of para. 2, does the explanation of why only military personnel are being invited mesh with prior public explanations; in other words, should you just delete the sentence beginning "In light of these extraordinary circumstances"?

Ill. GOP Sen. Fitzgerald Won't Run in '04

By DENNIS CONRAD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republican first-term Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, whose Illinois seat is considered key to the GOP's chances to maintain its majority in the Senate in 2004, will not seek re-election, state Republicans said Tuesday.

Fitzgerald called close supporters Monday night to inform them of his decision not to seek a second term, said a source close to Fitzgerald who spoke only on condition of anonymity. The source, who was among those called by Fitzgerald, said the senator was to announce his decision Tuesday.

Neither Fitzgerald nor his aides returned repeated phone calls Tuesday. Aides at his Washington office declined to comment.

State Sen. Dave Syverson, treasurer of the Illinois Republican Party and a member of Fitzgerald's campaign finance committee, said people "very close" to Fitzgerald confirmed he will not seek re-election.

Illinois Treasurer Judy Baar Topinka, who heads the state GOP, said she had not spoken to Fitzgerald but had already contacted Bush administration officials to discuss the race and the implications of Fitzgerald's decision.

"I've talked to the White House this morning and we are going to work together to find the best and strongest candidate available," Topinka said. "That will take a little bit of time. I don't think anybody was prepared for this."

Fitzgerald, who had frequent disputes with House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., and other Illinois Republicans, faced a potentially tough race in a state that has increasingly leaned Democratic in recent elections. Political strategists in both parties viewed him as the most vulnerable Senate Republican up for re-election in 2004, and Fitzgerald had been calling himself "the 51st senator" in recognition of how pivotal his re-election could be for preserving the GOP's slim Senate majority. Republicans hold 51 seats to Democrats 48 with one independent.

The Chicago Tribune, citing unnamed sources, reported in Tuesday's editions that Fitzgerald told close associates he had "no fire in the belly" and cited concerns about the personal cost of a re-election campaign.

Fitzgerald, a little-known conservative state senator from Chicago's suburbs and heir to a banking fortune, spent $16 million of his own money in 1998 to unseat - barely - Democrat Carol Moseley Braun, the first black woman elected to the U.S. Senate. A 2004 race was likely to be more expensive.

There had been grumbling within the state Republican party about Fitzgerald's performance on a host of issues, including the maverick's reluctance to fight for funding for Illinois projects that he considered political pork. He was likely to face primary opposition next March.

President Bush's political aides have insisted that Bush supported Fitzgerald.

Chicago-area businessman Andrew J. McKenna Jr. had already indicated he might be a primary challenger.

Democrats began lining up as early as 2002. They include former Chicago school board president Gery Chico, multimillionaire businessman Blair Hull, state Comptroller Dan Hynes, state Sen. Barack Obama, Cook County Treasurer Maria Pappas, businesswoman Joyce Washington and Metamora Mayor Matt O'Shea, a Republican who says he will run as a Democrat.

III. GOP Sen. Fitzgerald Won't Run in '04

By DENNIS CONRAD

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republican first-term Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, whose Illinois seat is considered key to the GOP's chances to maintain its majority in the Senate in 2004, will not seek re-election, state Republicans said Tuesday.

Fitzgerald called close supporters Monday night to inform them of his decision not to seek a second term, said a source close to Fitzgerald who spoke only on condition of anonymity. The source, who was among those called by Fitzgerald, said the senator was to announce his decision Tuesday.

Neither Fitzgerald nor his aides returned repeated phone calls Tuesday. Aides at his Washington office declined to comment.

State Sen. Dave Syverson, treasurer of the Illinois Republican Party and a member of Fitzgerald's campaign finance committee, said people "very close" to Fitzgerald confirmed he will not seek re-election.

Illinois Treasurer Judy Baar Topinka, who heads the state GOP, said she had not spoken to Fitzgerald but had already contacted Bush administration officials to discuss the race and the implications of Fitzgerald's decision.

Some points:

-- Date change to April 15.

-- No period after "Drive" in address

-- Should "Specifically, the closed park areas are" instead be "Specifically, the White House requests that the following park areas be temporarily closed:"

-- missing apostrophe after "guests" at end of para. 1

-- at end of para. 2, does the explanation of why only military personnel are being invited mesh with prior public explanations; in other words, should you just delete the sentence beginning "In light of these extraordinary circumstances"?

THE GLOBAL MESSENGER
Wednesday, April 16, 2003

*****KEY POINTS*****

Future of Iraq

*A meeting of free Iraqis took place on Tuesday in Ur, near An Nasiriyah. The meeting had broad representation among Iraqis, including:
-Iraqis from inside Iraq, from the major religious and ethnic groups.
-Iraqis who came from abroad.
-A senior local Shaykh and Iraqi women.

*The meeting was an opportunity for free Iraqis to discuss the vision of the Iraqi people for a post-Saddam Iraq and to share their views with representatives of the coalition countries.

*Speakers thanked the Coalition for liberating their country. Participants called for a democratic Iraq that respects the rule of law and acknowledged the hard work that lies ahead.

*This was the first of several meetings, which we believe will be the start of a dialogue among free Iraqi people about the future of a free Iraq.

Reconstruction

*Our focus is increasingly shifting to security, relief, and reconstruction.

*25 years of rule by a brutal dictator who did not have the interest of the Iraqi people at heart did far more damage to Iraq than the war.

*Rebuilding is a major task because Iraq was neglected and devastated by the rule of Saddam Hussein and his henchmen.

Military Update

*Major combat operations are over. There is no longer any significant organized resistance from the Iraqi military, but the security situation remains dangerous and lives are still at risk. Some regime irregulars and foreign fighters continue to fight.

REV_00114737

*Coalition forces in Baghdad continue to secure key infrastructure and are increasing their patrols of the city to provide security.

*British forces continue to patrol Basra and other areas of southern Iraq, and are now conducting joint patrols with Iraqi citizens.

*****TODAY'S SCHEDULE*****

All Times Eastern Daylight. Subject to Change

7:00 am CentCom Operations Update

1:00 pm State Department Briefing

1:30 pm President Bush makes remarks in St. Louis, Missouri

TBD Defense Department Briefing

*****HUMANITARIAN UPDATE*****

*On April 11-12, two Kuwaiti Air Force C-130s flew into Baghdad with 24 tons of medical supplies for hospitals and health clinics in the city. The U.S. Army's 1st Medical Corps will deliver supplies after a needs-assessment and as security permits.

*The Australian government announced on April 12 that they would provide three planeloads of medical supplies to Baghdad hospital. Australia has earmarked $60 million to date for humanitarian aid to Iraq.

*As an indicator of the improved security situation in the North, schools in the three Northern Governorates of Dohuk, Erbil, and Suleimaniyah have reopened and classes have resumed.

*The Coalition is trucking fresh water to areas near An Najaf, Karbala and Kirkuk. Local citizens received 700,000 liters of water on Monday.

*To increase the flow of aid, the Coalition is clearing a port north of Umm Qasr that is blocked by 36 abandoned Iraqi vessels.

*****KEY QUOTE*****

"Objects and documents taken from museums and sites are the property of the Iraqi nation under Iraqi and international law. They are therefore stolen property, whether found in Iraq or other nations. Anyone knowingly possessing or dealing in such objects is committing a crime....The Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Affairs will help Iraqis and international experts in their efforts to restore artifacts and the catalogs of antiquities that were damaged by looters."

Brett: Fyi. We didn't have to take a position on immunities. See report below and please forward to John Bellinger.

This is the reason I called you. It went well. Judd never even had to state that we would prefer not to have to take a position. The Judge simply never got there! The Judge said he was reserving decision and that he would decide later whether it was necessary to hear from the USG on the question.

Judge Martin has reserved decision on the contempt motion and will advise whether he wants to hear further from us.

The hearing went as follows:

Judge Martin stated that he had received our letter and asked plaintiffs to explain why the case was not moot and why al-Douri was not immune. He quickly moved past the mootness issue and asked plaintiffs several questions about immunities. In particular, he asked why the provisions of the Vienna Convention, copies of which had been provided to the court by us, did not dispose of the motion. Plaintiffs rehashed their FSIA argument.

When Judge Martin asked for the Government's views, I stated that we thought the motion was moot, explained why, and stated that we saw no reason to address the immunity issues given that they were moot. As expected, he asked me if there was anything preventing al-Douri from returning to the United States. I stated that I was not aware of any reason. I said that plaintiffs had not presented any material in support of the notion that it was reasonable to expect his return. They, as expected, referred to al-Douri's statements to the press that he intended to return.

At that point, Judge Martin said he was reserving decision.

It is conceivable that he will rule without additional material from us and may rely on the provisions I read to him on Friday. However, those provisions were directed at whether or not he could detain al-Douri, and the only provision I read on Friday that is cited in our draft letter is Articles 29 and 31, Sec. 2, of the Vienna Convention. That is enough for him to rule that al-Douri is immune to service and testifying, but it is not the only argument we would make if so required.

Judd

Broder bought the Dem spin hook, line, and sinker.

Tale Of Two Judges

By David S. Broder
Washington Post

Wednesday, April 16, 2003

Were it not for an old friend, I would have been as oblivious to the story of Judge Edward Prado of San Antonio as the rest of the Washington press corps.

Judge Tom Stagg of Shreveport, La., told me his pal was up for appointment to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit and suggested I go by and "see how they treat him" at his confirmation hearing.

Turns out it's like the Sherlock Holmes story of the dog that didn't bark. In the midst of the bitter partisan battle in which Democrats have repeatedly blocked a Senate confirmation vote on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Prado went through like gangbusters.

The story of why one Latino Republican has such an easy time while another creates such controversy is an instructive tale -- and one with hopeful implications.

Estrada has been denied an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor because Democrats call him "a stealth nominee," a man of high credentials but no judicial experience and one they say was unresponsive to their questions. Their demand to look at memos he wrote while serving in the Justice Department has been rejected by the administration, and neither side has yielded.

Given this background, I was expecting to see Prado, 55, put to the test at his Judiciary Committee hearing. His credentials are impressive: a graduate of the University of Texas and its law school, four years each as a prosecutor and a public defender, a short stint as a state judge, U.S. attorney for three years and, since 1984, a federal district judge -- the last two appointments coming from President Ronald Reagan.

But Prado is also a character. His courtroom is wired with the latest audiovisual equipment, which Prado, a music lover and showman, loves to demonstrate. Three years ago, during a murder-for-hire trial, he came onto the bench while a recording of "Happy Together" by the Turtles filled the air, and then sang: "Imagine me as God. I do. I was appointed by the president. Appointed forever. My decisions cannot be questioned by you. I'm always right."

Many judges may feel that way; few say so, and even fewer put it to music.

More seriously, in answering the committee's questionnaire, Prado noted controversial cases in which he ruled against a woman's claim of job discrimination by the San Antonio fire department, a diabetes patient's claim that he was unfairly found to be medically ineligible for a police officer's job, and a claim that the Texas high school graduation test discriminated against Hispanics.

In another part of the questionnaire, he listed 68 criminal, immigration and civil cases in which he had been reversed or criticized by the court of appeals. Plenty of fertile ground, one imagined, for liberal groups to challenge elevating a Reagan judge to a closely balanced and important bench just one level below the Supreme Court.

But in fact the Congressional Hispanic Caucus -- which has vigorously opposed the Estrada nomination -- wrote a letter endorsing Prado. Rep. Charlie Gonzalez, a Texas Democrat and co-signer of the letter, told me that he had known Prado for almost 40 years and "he has everything you want in a judge -- he's smart and articulate, he's not arbitrary, and he really understands people. Some of his rulings I would take issue with, but when the caucus interviewed him, he talked honestly about cases that have impacted minorities and he made it clear he knows how important the courts have been to us. It was so different from our hour's conversation with Estrada, who conveyed no sense of what we would think a Latino should appreciate about the historical role of courts in bringing us to where we are today and where we need to be tomorrow."

With the backing of the White House and the Hispanic caucus, Prado's confirmation hearing was perfunctory. Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the ranking Democrat and scourge of Estrada, read a statement complaining of past Republican treatment of President Bill Clinton's Latino nominees, then left without asking any questions. The two Republicans present -- Sens. John Cornyn of Texas and Jeff Sessions of Alabama -- said they had known Prado for years and simply congratulated him.

Prado was then unanimously confirmed by the Judiciary Committee.

When I asked Alberto Gonzales, the White House counsel, if there might be a lesson in Prado's easy approval, he replied, "It's hard to say. We view Judge Prado as no more qualified than Miguel Estrada or others they [the Democrats] have opposed."

But the lesson seems obvious. Conservatives can be confirmed for the courts when they are well known in their communities and a broad range of their constituents have reason to think them fair-minded. Even if they can't resist breaking into song.

Tale Of Two Judges

By David S. Broder
Washington Post
Wednesday, April 16, 2003

Were it not for an old friend, I would have been as oblivious to the story of Judge Edward Prado of San Antonio as the rest of the Washington press corps.

Judge Tom Stagg of Shreveport, La., told me his pal was up for appointment to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit and suggested I go by and "see how they treat him" at his confirmation hearing.

Turns out it's like the Sherlock Holmes story of the dog that didn't bark. In the midst of the bitter partisan battle in which Democrats have repeatedly blocked a Senate confirmation vote on the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, Prado went through like gangbusters.

The story of why one Latino Republican has such an easy time while another creates such controversy is an instructive tale -- and one with hopeful implications.

Estrada has been denied an up-or-down vote on the Senate floor because Democrats call him "a stealth nominee," a man of high credentials but no judicial experience and one they say was unresponsive to their questions. Their demand to look at memos he wrote while serving in the Justice Department has been rejected by the administration, and neither side has yielded.

I would not think you should do much on political activity with them in their ethics briefing since their rules and practices obviously present a host of intricate issues that we deal with. You and I can discuss.

JOHN FUND'S POLITICAL DIARY

Not the American Way

The left's "judicial Armageddon" is an assault on democracy.

Thursday, April 17, 2003 12:01 a.m.

Earlier this year Ralph Neas, head of the liberal group People for the American Way, promised a "judicial Armageddon" to block President Bush's appointment to federal courts. Now that President Bush is no longer preoccupied with toppling Saddam Hussein, he is going to have to pivot and turn his attention domestically and address the judicial emergency he faces in Washington.

The most visible battle in the conflict over Mr. Bush's judges is the filibuster Democrats are waging to block the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, which hears many cases involving the federal government. Mr. Estrada has more than enough votes to win confirmation, but under the Senate's filibuster rules, a 41-member minority can block a vote.

The Constitution makes references to many requirements for "supermajority" approval by the Senate of such matters as treaties or convicting an impeached official. But there's no supermajority requirement for the Senate's "advise and consent" role in approving presidential nominees, no doubt because the Founding Fathers feared a minority could throw the executive branch into turmoil if a president couldn't get his officials confirmed without a Senate supermajority.

President Bush will have to use more of its political capital to preserve his appointment power. The president may have to visit states whose senators are participating in the Estrada filibuster and appeal directly to the public for support. The president can point to outrageous rulings by liberal judges, such as the Ninth Circuit's declaring the Pledge of Allegiance unconstitutional.

The Senate, of course, has the power to vote down presidential nominees its members deem unacceptable. But if a minority of senators can thwart the will of the people and the majority of their colleagues, what's the point of having elections?

GOP Poll Shows Thune Ahead Of Daschle In 2004 Senate Race. The Washington Times (4/17, Hurt) reports, "Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat, would lose in an election to a prominent state Republican, according to a poll conducted for the National Republican Senatorial Committee. Former Rep. John Thune was picked by 46 percent of South Dakota voters over Mr. Daschle's 44 percent, according to the survey conducted last month by McLaughlin & Associates. ... The Bush administration had recruited Mr. Thune for the Johnson race and is expected to back him in the 2004 Republican primary, if he decides to run again, for Mr. Daschle's seat." The Times adds, "According to the Republican poll, Mr. Thune enjoys a 63 percent favorable rating statewide, compared with Mr. Daschle's 56 percent."

Brett,

The organization 60+ is a 501(c)(4), which has been supportive of administration policies in the past. They would like Secretary Thompson to headline a speech in his official capacity. Normally, we would just approve it as an official event.

I just wanted to make sure that 501(c)(4) weren't impacted by the McCain Feingold law. Any ideas or anyone to whom you could refer me?

Filibustering Priscilla Owen

NY Times - editorial

April 17, 2003

Senators opposing Priscilla Owen, a nominee to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, are considering a filibuster to head off her confirmation vote. Filibusters are an extreme measure in which a minority of senators block an issue from being voted on. But the system for picking judges, which should be a relatively nonpartisan effort to seat jurists who reflect broad American values, has broken down. Filibustering Judge Owen's confirmation would send the Bush administration two important messages: the president must stop packing the courts with ideologues, and he must show more respect for the Senate's role.

At Judge Owen's confirmation hearings, it was abundantly clear that she is far to the right of most Americans and that her ideology drives her decisions. On the Texas Supreme Court, she argued in one case that a minor seeking an abortion could be required to prove that she was aware of the religious objections to abortion. Judge Owen has also consistently ruled against workers, accident victims and victims of discrimination.

It is not by chance that the Senate is being asked to confirm someone with these views. The White House has culled the legal profession to find nominees with aggressive conservative agendas. It is asking senators to approve, along with Judge Owen, Carolyn Kuhl, who was a strong supporter of maintaining the tax-exempt status of Bob Jones University, which discriminated against blacks; Jeffrey Sutton, a lawyer who has severely set back the rights of the disabled; and James Leon Holmes, who has compared abortion to the Holocaust.

Judge Owen was voted down by the Senate Judiciary Committee last year, but the administration renominated her when Republicans took control. Ignoring the committee's decision is only one in a growing list of ways the White House and its allies have politicized judicial selection. The latest, and most disturbing, move came when former President George Bush held a fund-raiser for a group that will run ads attacking senators who do not fall into lock step behind the administration's nominees.

Many senators have stood up to the administration's assault on an independent judiciary, but others have been too silent. Senator Dianne Feinstein, who represents California, one of the nation's most diverse states, should be a stronger voice against nominees like Judge Owen and Judge Kuhl, who have shown disregard for victims of discrimination. Senator Arlen Specter, who comes from Pennsylvania, a state with a proud labor tradition, should be speaking out against nominees like Judge Owen and Deborah Cook, who reflexively favor corporations over the little guy.

The filibuster is not a tool to be used lightly. But the Senate has been right to use it against the nomination of Miguel Estrada, who is hiding his views on legal issues. It should do the same to stop the once-rejected Judge Owen, and tell extreme conservatives in the Bush administration to stop trying to hijack the federal judiciary.

UNITED STATES CENTRAL COMMAND DAILY OPERATIONAL UPDATE BRIEFING

BRIEFER: BRIGADIER GENERAL VINCENT BROOKS, CENTCOM DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF OPERATIONS

DOHA, QATAR

7:05 A.M. EDT, THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2003

GEN. BROOKS: Ladies and gentlemen, Operation Iraqi Freedom is now in the 28th day since coalition forces entered Iraq. Iraq is more stable today than yesterday. Identified pockets of resistance are fewer yesterday. And with the ever-increasing flow of humanitarian assistance, tomorrow shows great promise.

;;;;; As we advance into a new future for Iraq, we remember our comrades who have fallen, and we remember their loved ones.

;;;;; Coalition special operations forces remained active throughout Iraq. They have been very effective in gaining capitulations or surrenders in several areas, including ar-Rupa (sp), Kirkuk, Al-Amara, Al-Ramadi, Mosul, and Al-Qa'im. These efforts continue where remaining pockets of military presence are found.

;;;;; Direct action missions against regime leadership or terrorist interests are also ongoing. Earlier this morning, coalition special operations forces, supported by U.S. Marines, captured Barzan Ibrahim Hassan al-Tikriti. Barzan is the half-brother of Saddam Hussein, and an advisor to the former regime leader, with extensive knowledge of the regime's inner workings. There were no friendly or enemy casualties. The capture demonstrates the coalition's commitment to relentlessly pursuing the scattered members of a fractured regime. Efforts related to other regime leaders are ongoing.

;;;;; Coalition maneuver forces continued clearing potentially hostile pockets while conducting assessments and aiding the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The arrival of the 4th Infantry Division into the land component operations area included a brief fire-fight in the vicinity of Taji Airfield north of Baghdad. In the engagement, the 4th Infantry Division forces killed and wounded a portion of the enemy force, destroyed some T-72 tanks, and captured over 100 enemy fighters. The enemy force also had unmanned artillery pieces, armored personnel carriers, loaded multiple rocket launcher systems, a surface-to-air missile warehouse, and a number of computers. The site and the materials have been secured for further exploitation and examination. The coalition force reported the airfield clear of enemy forces and continued its attack to the north, encountering sporadic small-arms fire and snipers.

;;;;; In the U.K. sector of southern Iraq, patrols were attacked by rocket propelled grenades near a bridge in Basra. The patrols are still finding evidence of armed regime death squad members in the city, but in general Basra is rapidly improving in stability and security.

;;;;; The Iraqi-assisted discovery of five shallow grave sites near al-Zubair is currently under investigation.

;;;;; In other areas throughout Iraq, the coalition focused on improving the conditions necessary for a stable and free Iraq. The coalition is focusing effort, in close cooperation with free Iraqis on the restoration of power systems. As I've mentioned before, power is integrally related to the continuous availability of water and other services. And I'll give you an example.

;;;;; Power was recently restored in the northern Iraq city of Kirkuk, and while this is a very important accomplishment for the over 750,000 people in Kirkuk, its impact is far more significant in areas beyond Kirkuk. In this case, the power in Kirkuk will restore function to a natural gas complex that's also located there. Once the gas complex is restored to 100 percent capability, the natural gas can then be pumped from Kirkuk to Mosul, where a gas-operated power plant is currently down. The gas-operated power station will then be able to provide stable electric power that's needed to run the Mosul hydroelectric station at the Mosul Dam to the northwest of Mosul -- formerly known as the Saddam Dam.

;;;;; Once power is restored there, the water distribution system in Mosul can also be restored. And most significantly, the lines that run from Mosul south to Baiji can be activated. That then provides enough energy into the Baiji substation to push power straight into Baghdad and also Tikrit. So, as we have successes like the Kirkuk power plant being restored, it starts a sequence that rapidly improves conditions throughout. Concurrently, the Baghdad South power plant is being prepared to run on a temporary supply of oil until an uninterrupted supply of both power and oil can be provided. And we are confident that there will be many more good news stories like this in the coming days.

;;;;; While our efforts to restore power and subsequently water distribution are ongoing, we see increasing contributions of packaged water. The contributions are organized at humanitarian operations centers, and then they are prepared for movement in concert with coalition forces to the areas that need the supplies. I have a short video to show you of a convoy the coalition recently facilitated from Kuwait up to As-Samawa and An-Najaf earlier this week.

;;;;; (VIDEO.) This is part of a convoy that had 13 large truckloads of water and water supplies that began in Kuwait at the humanitarian operations center there. The Kuwaiti government donated the materials as a gift to the Iraqi people. And I would say that as the convoy moved north, they had some rest halts, and in one case a family with a donkey cart came up and was looking for some water, and they were not refused. So, along the way, if there was a request made by any free Iraqis along the road, they were not denied what was available. And I would add also that, as you could see, this was not just water itself that was being provided, but also containers for bulk water in the same load. The download in this case was in the town of An-Najaf. There were members of the Iraqi Red Crescent that were also facilitating the download.

;;;;; Civilian medical treatment is successfully occurring in many areas of Iraq. And the next image is of a photo taken recently at a hospital near Kirkuk. This is a functioning hospital that was visited by a military medical team. The coalition assists by redistributing medical supplies when it's possible. In this image, you see a military physician's assistant turning over medical supplies which were discovered at a previously looted location.

;;;;; The situation in Baghdad is somewhat different. Areas that are inherently more dangerous must first be secured before any medical care assessments can take place. Third Infantry Division soldiers, as you see in this particular image in Baghdad, first had to secure the hospital and the surrounding area before an assessment of the hospital could begin.

Once military and medical experts gained access to the hospital, they were able to determine any usable areas of the facility, and also to take inventory of the available medical supplies.

;;;;; In some cases, like this one, we may expose very disappointing conditions of the care being provided. What you see here is a man that was found on a gurney within this hospital, and he was untreated.

;;;;; He had gunshot wounds and broken bones in several places on his body. The assessment team provided whatever assistance they could, whatever relief they could at the time. And we find that every day coalition forces are finding health care facilities that are under-equipped, that are unsanitary, that are under-staffed, and it's clear that quality health care was simply not a priority of the regime. It is a priority of the coalition and the reconstruction efforts that are ongoing.

;;;;; Nevertheless, military humanitarian actions and the reconstruction efforts are improving the conditions. More doctors, nurses and health professionals are returning to work every day. Medical supplies and experts are continuing to flow into Iraq.

;;;;; As we complete the process of securing the country from all remnants of the regime and move towards stability operations, free Iraqi forces remain integral to our efforts. They are key to making connection with the population that is now free, and their knowledge of the culture and the areas that they're working in helps to keep our military teams focused and able to show both the energy and the compassion required to make a permanent difference in the lives of the Iraqi people. Operation Iraqi Freedom continues.

;;;;; Ladies and gentlemen, I'll take your questions. Yes please, Kelly.

;;;;; Q Yes, General. Could you give us some more detail about capture of Saddam's half-brother? And has he been able to give you any indication about the fate of Saddam and his sons?

;;;;; BRIG. GEN. BROOKS: The operation occurred, as I mentioned, during night. It was coalition special operations forces, who are professionals at doing this type of an operation, and while doing to minimizing any threat to civilians and protecting the force as they get the job done in an effective way. They were supported by marines, based on the area where their operations occurred -- the marines that had been operating inside of Baghdad. This was a Baghdad operation.

;;;;; I won't provide many more specifics in terms of the tactics they used, since we certainly have interest in finding other regime leaders. There was some information provided by some Iraqis in this case that facilitated the capture, and we're currently asking a number of questions -- of course, treating him properly, but finding out whatever information we can as a result of this capture, and that will unfold in due time. And I don't want to characterize much more precisely than that.

;;;;; Q Was he alone?

;;;;; BRIG. GEN. BROOKS: He was captured alone in this case. Yes please. Let me go to you, Mimi (sp).

;;;;; Q Mimi Scalance (sp), CBS News. Thank you, General. Even with today's capture, there are so many leaders missing. There have been no discovery of weapons of mass destruction. Foreign fighters are in the country. Are you at all worried that there really is an opportunity for a big bang still to come?

;;;;; BRIG. GEN. BROOKS: We remain concerned about any assets, resources or capabilities that might be used. We've seen a number of indications of individuals who either desire a state of lawlessness, who are looting things that are of value to the Iraqi people, or who are engaging in violent acts in a number of places. While they're still out there, our work is not complete.

;;;;; And so we certainly know that there is a potential for weapons of mass destruction. We know that there are a number of methods that could be used for dispersing or dispensing these weapons of mass destruction -- chemicals, for example -- and we're looking for anything that might indicate that.

;;;;; At the same time, our efforts remain very deliberate and focused, and we act on pieces of information, joining parts of the puzzle together, to be able to gain access to regime leaders like Barzan al- Tikriti last night, and others that are still out there. The same applies to our approach to weapons of mass destruction, any weapons otherwise -- conventional munitions and weapons that are still out in areas that need to be removed from the hands of those that might seek to continue actions.

;;;;; The same applies to finding and removing any foreign fighters, with the assistance of the Iraqi people, who don't need them for defense and don't seek their presence. That's the way our approach is, and it will continue to be that way.

;;;;; Yes please, Tom.

;;;;; Q Yes, General Brooks. Not a question about tactics but about policy or enforcement of it. Let's say Saddam Hussein is located in a country like Syria. Would you employ the rule of hot pursuit to cross over that border without permission to capture, find, locate him?

;;;;; BRIG. GEN. BROOKS: Well, I wouldn't want to speculate on that, Tom, in terms of what actions would be taken under a specific circumstance like that. What we do know is this coalition is focused on Iraq. This is Operation Iraqi Freedom and we're operating under specific instructions from our national leaders as to what our responsibilities are, and that's where we would keep it at this point in time.

;;;;; If there are different decisions that are made, we will certainly be told what action to take or to not take under those circumstances. Of course, there are a variety of capabilities available to our nation and other nations in different areas, but for us right now, this is Operation Iraqi Freedom and we will remain focused, as we are, within Iraq.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q David Crantree (sp) from Sky News. You mentioned shallow graves. Do you have any more detail on that? And the northern town of Mosul, does that remain unstable?

;;;;; BRIG. GEN. BROOKS: There are some initial reports that some shallow graves were identified to U.K. forces by some Iraqis. After seeing the first one, they were guided to four more. It's just initial information. We don't know who might be inside of those shallow graves, and they're just now beginning to be examined and so I don't have anything new to report in that regard.

;;;;; Mosul is an area that, as I described yesterday, the stability situation is described as uncertain. There are pockets still of lawlessness, violence, and indications of deliberate agitation to create those conditions. There were some shootings that occurred yesterday. I described a set two days ago, and there were some more that occurred yesterday when a case of some violent actions at a bank involved police and also some coalition forces. A two-way exchange of fire ensued. Police were injured or wounded by fire, and marines were also involved in returning fire. Some were killed -- some of the suspected bank robbers were killed, and there were others who were wounded in that engagement.

;;;;; I think what that tells us is that there are still pockets that would seek to have instability as a better solution than stability. Our efforts have to be directed against locating such individuals, taking away their capability, and simply applying a system of justice that puts an end to it. That takes deliberate work. It takes assistance by the population. And it takes a draining of the pool so that there's not an ability to hide in and amongst the population as well. And those efforts are ongoing.

;;;;; There's some good news inside of this, and that is certainly that there is a police force that was involved in enforcing the law in that location, and they are working very closely with the coalition. Those efforts will improve over time, and we believe that we can create the conditions of stability in Mosul, as they are in other cities of the north right now.

;;;;; Please, Adi (sp).

;;;;; Q Adi Rival (sp), ABC News. Regarding the suicide vests, a couple of days ago you said that about 80 of 300 such vests have gone missing. Any idea where they are now? Have you apprehended any of the individuals who may have taken these vests? And secondly, specifically regarding the situation in Baghdad, are there still some sectors in Baghdad that are still not considered permissive sites, such as Mansour? Thank you, sir.

;;;;; BRIG. GEN. BROOKS: What we saw was a place that had room for about 80 more vests. They were pretty well lined up and prepared.

;;;;; We can't know at this point how many have been already used from that set. We certainly have seen some suicide vest-wearing individuals in homicide attacks. Where they may have gone is unknown. How many are still potential to be used? It could be as many as there are. So if there's 80 that are out there, then we suspect that there is potential for at least 80 to be used. That's one location where we found vests. We don't know that we've found all locations where there may have been supplies of vests.

;;;;; So what it reminds us mostly of is that there is still a capability there for those types of attacks and for the tactics of terrorists to be used to maintain conditions of instability in places where it's in the interest of those who would seek to either try to restore power or to prevent the bright future we think is in store for Iraq from coming into fruition.

;;;;; There are areas still in Baghdad that coalition forces have not been able to declare permissive. The number is decreasing significantly with every day that goes by, and with the assistance of the Iraqi population, who give us more and more information, and also who really create the conditions of what is permissive and what's peaceful and stable.

;;;;; Those areas will be dealt with in due time. In a very deliberate way, just like you saw in our operations throughout this campaign, we'll develop a specific picture of intelligence, we'll find out where specific threats are, and we'll apply the appropriate amount of force, in a proportional way that's necessary to rid that location of any remaining regime pockets, suicide bombers, death squad members, loyalists, or any other particular threat that might be inside of there. That's how (we'll approach?) it.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Let me just leave it at he was inside of Baghdad and we were able to enter and remove him with very precise work.

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Monsur (ph) we're still working on. There's still work to be done there.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Agence France Presse. Two questions. One, can you comment on reports that coalition forces found two dozen political prisoners in dungeons in Baghdad? The second question is, do you have a toll in Mosul since Tuesday?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: Do we have a toll?

;;;;; Q (Off mike.)

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: First, I don't have any reports of political prisoners having been found in Baghdad. We know that there are many, many political prisoners that were held by this regime. I don't think anyone really knows what the full count is on the number of people that have been held, and certainly not the number that have been murdered by the regime over its tenure.

;;;;; But there's clear knowledge that that occurred, and we gain more and more information each day from free Iraqis who really wanted this regime to go away for a long time and now have the opportunity to live without such a regime being present.

;;;;; I don't have a specific count on how many have been killed or wounded inside of Mosul. We know that there have been small numbers killed in each one of these engagements. Some have been wounded as well. The full scope of that is not ever completely well-known. Some move away with wounds and we don't ever know about that.

;;;;; What I can say, though, is our approach is deliberate. It's an effort to maintain law and order where it's appropriate. And in other cases, as with both of these incidents, it's in response to threats that are directed against coalition forces or others. And that's how we'll continue to do our work.

;;;;; Our coalition forces have the inherent right of self-defense. That hasn't changed and will continue to be something that is a first guiding principle for our work. At the same time, we want to be very deliberate about any responses we make and very careful that the response is focused and appropriate to the conditions that are existing at that given time. And we will continue in that direction. So I don't know what the answer is on Mosul, and that will probably unfold over the next coming days.

;;;;; Yes, sir, please.

;;;;; Q Could you expand a little bit more about Barzan al-Tikriti? What was his role in this regime? Why he was sought?

;;;;; And a second question: Based on the number of suspected sites where there might be weapons of mass destruction and the manpower available, how long do you think it will take until all of those locations are thoroughly researched?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We saw the role of Barzan Ibrahim Hasan al-Tikriti as an adviser to former President Saddam Hussein. We believe that he is an insider, and, in terms of priorities, about 38 on our list of 55 top individuals that we believe have key information about the regime.

;;;;; What real details he has, we will see as he's questioned over the coming days. And we believe there may be some additional information that comes that may point us in other directions about exactly how the regime worked; what were the inner workings of the regime? We'll have to wait and see exactly what his role was, but that's the foundation for why we found him to be important.

;;;;; The WMD sites, the process associated with that is more a function of getting good, accurate information, going to a location that bears fruit. And so it's not so much a function of how many people are available to do it but how well we can point them to do the work that needs to be done. We've organized ourselves to do that.

;;;;; We have people who have a specific role to be played in going to sites that might have weapons of mass destruction or other sites that require detailed examination. It's an organized outfit to do that. There are technical capabilities that are available to them, and things that are found may also be technically examined, as we've talked about over a few days. That's really what the long pole in the tent is, if you will, that will determine how long it will take. It depends on what information we get.

;;;;; Now, as each day goes by, as each threat of information is gathered in from various sources, whether they're individuals we encounter on the street, regime leaders that are taken into our custody, other things, we may find that it very rapidly unfolds. But at the current time, we're going site by site, item of information by item of information, action by action. And it's a very deliberate process that will take some time.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible.) Can I just ask you a couple of -- (inaudible) -- questions? One is, there's a New York Times report saying that you've bombed the bases of the Iranian opposition group, the main armed Iranian opposition group, the Mujahideen-e-khalq.

;;;;; And secondly, we have a correspondent who's been to Ba'qubah, between Baghdad and the Iranian border, which doesn't seem to have been visited by U.S. forces and which appears to be run by members of the (Badr ?) Brigade, a pro-Iranian group. Is that a situation that you expect to persist?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: We know that there's a presence of the Mujahideen-e-khalq inside of Iraq, and indeed, we have been targeting them for some time. There's work that's ongoing right now to try to secure some sort of agreement that would be a cease-fire and a capitulation. That work is ongoing and will most likely unfold within the coming days.

;;;;; We have had forces go through Ba'qubah. The forces that ultimately went to Tikrit, their first stop was Ba'qubah. We had indications that it might be a location where our prisoners of war were held. And so a combat force went through that area. We cleared a hospital there and found that our friendly prisoners of war were not present. It was a few days later that they were encountered. And we may have been very close indeed at that point in time.

;;;;; So we have had forces pass through Ba'qubah. Having said that, there are a number of areas where we may have passed through and we need to look at again in a very deliberate way. We don't have any indications that there are problems in Ba'qubah at this point. That will be one of many locations that will be visited by coalition forces as time goes on.

;;;;; Yes, please.

;;;;; Q (Inaudible) -- Reuters. First of all, I would like to ask about Mohammed Moshin Zubaidi (ph), who's in Baghdad, (says?) he's been chosen as the head of an interim council in Baghdad and that he's working with you. Can you tell us more about this interim council, how you're working with it, what it's doing?

;;;;; Secondly, reports about this pilgrimage to Karbala in the coming days. The expectations are there will be an awful lot of people turning out from various places. Given the tension in Najaf recently, can you explain what sort of measures you might be taking to make sure it goes smoothly and peacefully?

;;;;; GEN. BROOKS: There are a number of emerging leaders throughout Iraq, and the coalition works with a number of them on a variety of levels. I'd like to just leave it at that. We want Iraq to be governed by Iraqis. We want the local leadership to develop and take ownership of the actions that are happening inside of towns, villages and cities throughout the country. And we want to see an integrated relationship of those regional governments with national-level governments. That will develop over time. That's where I'd like to leave it on the first part of your question.

;;;;; We're very well aware of the pilgrimage that's coming up and its great importance, and we certainly will take appropriate measures to ensure the security is set as well as we can. And we also would anticipate that the Iraqi people, knowing how important it is, will govern themselves in a way that is not one of disorder but one of the importance of the (global mix?) itself.

;;;;; Ladies and gentlemen, that's all we have time for today. Thanks very much.

END.

Yes it is a fundraiser for the 60+ organization, but not a political fundraiser.

Brett,

The organization 60+ is a 501(c)(4), which has been supportive of administration policies in the past. They would like Secretary Thompson to headline a speech in his official capacity. Normally, we would just approve it as an official event.

I just wanted to make sure that 501(c)(4) weren't impacted by the McCain Feingold law. Any ideas or anyone to whom you could refer me?

Superior Court of the State of California
For the County of Los Angeles
111 North Hill Street, Department 1
Los Angeles, California 90012

April 15, 2003

The Honorable Arlen Specter
United States Senate
711 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Specter:

Thank you for taking the time to meet with me at the Capitol last week. I realize what a busy day it was for you and I appreciate your providing an opportunity for me to talk about my record as a Judge.

In response to your suggestion that I provide you specific examples of my judicial record concerning the rights of minorities, I am sending you two opinions that I authored.

I wrote the appellate decision in Iwekaogwu v. City of Los Angeles, 75 Cal.App.4th 803 (1999), during the three months I sat as a Justice Pro Tempore of the California Court of Appeal. In this case I upheld a jury award of $500,000 to an African-American employee of the City of Los Angeles who had brought suit for discriminatory treatment on the basis of race and national origin and for retaliation. The defense argued that the evidence offered by the plaintiff at trial was insufficient to support the jury's verdict that Mr. Iwekaogwu had been retaliated against for complaining that he had been discriminated against on the basis of his race. This argument required a careful review of the entire trial record to determine (1) whether the adverse employment decisions occurred after Mr. Iwekaogwu had complained about discrimination and whether the persons who made the decisions knew about Mr. Iwekaogwu's complaints, and (2) whether a large verdict for emotional distress damages alone (over $450,000) could be upheld in the absence of any evidence that plaintiff had sought psychiatric or psychological counseling.

My review of the record demonstrated that after Mr. Iwekaogwu had complained about being discriminated against, he had been denied two promotions and had been subject to a discriminatory denial of the opportunity to receive overtime pay. The defense argued that there was not sufficient evidence that the relevant decision makers knew of Mr. Iwekaogwu's discrimination complaint and acted in retaliation. I rejected such a "narrow . . . view of the type of evidence that may be offered to show that an employer's nonretaliatory explanation for its actions is pretextual," and relied on Ninth Circuit precedent for a broader standard more favorable to the plaintiff. (Id. at p. 816.) I also rejected the notion that individual employment decisions should be analyzed apart from discriminatory statements made in the course of other employment decisions. (Id. at 817.) I also rejected the defense argument that the jury could not consider plaintiff's circumstantial proof to support a finding that the persons who denied promotions to Mr. Iwekaogwu knew about his complaints of discrimination. Finally, I rejected the defense claim that the amount of emotional distress damages was excessive. Even though no doctor testified concerning his emotional distress, I held that the jury could rely on his own and his family's statements about the stress and changes in Mr. Iwekaogwu's personal relationships because of the retaliation at work, and his fear of physical harm from coworkers. Therefore I upheld the entire $500,000 damages award.

In a case involving the rights of an openly gay police officer, I overturned discipline of that officer for having worn a police department uniform in a gay rights parade and for having conducted recruitment activities aimed at the gay and lesbian community. A copy of my opinion in Grobesson v. City of Los Angeles, Case No. BC 150151 is enclosed. I wrote that "California law is clear that a person facing an administrative hearing that could affect his fundamental rights must have clear notice of the charges against him." (Opinion at 15.) Because the Police Department had violated Sergeant Grobesson's due process rights, by failing to give him proper notice of the charges against him, I overturned the Police Department's discipline of Sergeant Grobesson in its entirety. (Id. at 18-19.) I am also sending you a Los Angeles Times newspaper article that reported on this decision; it noted:

Judge Carolyn Kuhl instructed police to provide [Mr.] Grobesson with pay plus interest to cover 195 days during which he was suspended without salary in two separate disciplinary actions. The judge's order did not specify the amount owed.

She also ordered the LAPD to remove all mention of the disciplinary actions from its records.

Grobesson was charged with wearing his police uniform without permission in various gay-oriented activities such as a gay pride festival and in a magazine advertisement recruiting homosexuals to the LAPD.

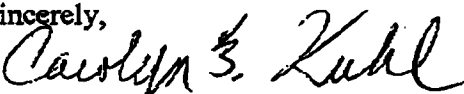

In addition, attached is a list of prominent women and minorities who know my work and support my nomination. I have actively pursued opportunities to mentor women in the law, both practitioners while in private practice and new judges since I have joined the bench. Women continue to be underrepresented in many law firm partnerships and on trial and appellate benches, and I have tried to do my part quietly but effectively to rectify this underrepresentation.

In closing, I want to assure you that I respect the dignity and legal rights of all parties who appear before me, including Ms. Sanchez-Scott. Because I am a woman, because I myself have had, on many occasions, the type of breast examination Ms. Sanchez-Scott underwent, because I have daughters who will undergo that type of medical procedure, I am not insensitive to the feelings of a woman placed in the unfortunate and uncomfortable situation Ms. Sanchez-Scott experienced. I had every reason to be – and was – sensitive to Ms. Sanchez-Scott's situation and claims. I had to determine her rights under California law. California law clearly gave her a tort action against the doctor whose responsibility it was to obtain her consent before he invited any other person into the examining room. It is very important to note that my decision allowed that claim to proceed. Regarding the separate claim against the drug company representative, the law was less clear, as Justice Turner affirms in his letter to you. I am glad that the Court of Appeal clarified the law regarding the claim for invasion of privacy, and I would apply that ruling without reservation.

I would be glad to provide any further information that would be helpful to you in your review of my nomination. Thank you again for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Carolyn B. Kuhl

I just wanted to make sure that 501(c)(4) weren't impacted by the McCain Feingold law. Any ideas or anyone to whom you could refer me?

2. Greenstone does not think there are any action items now on the IRS issue. (Does this relate to parking and W2's?) If you disagree, let me know.

A World of Possibilities

By John O'Sullivan

Bush needs to counterpose a vision of equal power and attractiveness to the "European idea" that animates his opponents. Both isolationism and the "global interventionism" advocated by some neoconservatives would further accelerate the Euro-nationalist trend. That leaves a revived Atlanticism, in which the U.S. would seek like-minded political allies throughout the Continent and seek to reshape the EU along free-market and pro-American lines. To take hold, such an Atlanticism would require a sense of crisis--and in Europe, this is now at hand. Economic, social, and demographic trends show Europe declining and America growing: By 2050 the U.S. economy will be almost three times the size of the current EU economy. Taken together, however, the U.S. and the EU would amount to almost 40 percent of world gross domestic product. In other words, Europe's clout is bound to diminish vis-?-vis the U.S. and every other region--unless it is part of a united West enjoying a global economic and political dominance.

The Great Sorting Out

By David Pryce-Jones

The eventual government of Iraq will have to be as genuinely representative as possible, not an exclusive Sunni or Shia or Kurd benefit system. But far from thinking this through and establishing a government-in-waiting, the State Department and the Pentagon are openly engaged in a wrestling match over their respective Iraqi candidates for office. The State Department hopes to rescue from retirement Adnan Pachachi, an 80-year-old former foreign minister. But he is a Sunni, and so his backers are set to repeat the British mistake of promoting someone from that minority without sufficient concern for everyone else. Among spokesmen for the Shia, the most articulate and forceful is Ahmad Chalabi, a member of a prominent family and secular in outlook, with a degree from MIT. Consistently supported by the Pentagon, he founded and now leads the Iraqi National Congress. According to some sources, people have never heard of him, asking "Ahmad who?" According to other sources, he is cheered in the streets.

The Road to Damascus

By Meyrav Wurmser

Why did Assad throw caution to the wind and decide to risk being America's next target? After all, soon after 9/11 he had cautiously cooperated with the U.S. by arresting a few members of an al-Qaeda affiliate terror group. He seemed, then, to understand the need to avoid America's wrath. The explanation is despair, and the nature of the ideology that motivates the regime. Despite the fact that relations between the Ba'athist regimes in Baghdad and Damascus were always strained, tyranny's collapse in Iraq threatens nobody in the Arab world more than the Ba'athists in Syria. What just transpired in Baghdad cannot be easily contained by even the most repressive security apparatus. The U.S. need not go to war with Damascus, unless Damascus chooses to make a violent last stand, either directly or by employing terrorism. We should, however, launch a war of ideas. Since Syria cannot avoid confronting the U.S., the U.S. can make its addiction to confrontation fatal.

President of the World

By Jay Nordlinger

Americans tend to view the U.N. as a curiosity, or as a nice idea, or as a nuisance to be borne. But to much of the planet, the U.N. is paramount, and Kofi Annan is president of the world--a "secular pope," as he has been called. Other nations, feeling especially weak in the era of one superpower, seek their influence in the collectivity at Turtle Bay. It is the secretary general's job to embody that collectivity. And in the perverse equality of the United Nations, Iraq can head the disarmament council, whenever its spot in the alphabet comes up. Libya is now in the chair of the U.N. human-rights commission--Quaddafi's Libya. Syria and Cuba are among the other Schweitzerian states that serve on it. The only nation that has something like pariah status in the U.N. is the only democracy in the Middle East--you know who. It is the only nation barred from serving on the Security Council.

Off the Air

By John J. Miller

On March 31, five Republican senators--Sam Brownback of Kansas, Norm Coleman of Minnesota, Jon Kyl and John McCain of Arizona, and Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania--sent a letter to the White House. Their concern was that the State Department had not released millions of dollars previously appropriated to the Iraqi National Congress, a union of opposition groups that hoped to operate a television station called TV Liberty, among other vital efforts. Two days later, the State Department released $4 million to the INC--some two weeks after the war had started. The failure to set up an opposition TV station is startling. After all, for the majority of Iraqi viewers, it was all Saddam, all the time. "If opposition TV had been beaming into Iraq from the first day, the cities would have fallen like dominoes," says Ali al-Ahmed of the Virginia-based Saudi Institute. "It would have shortened the fighting and saved lives."

How Cheap Is Your Manhood?

By John Derbyshire

To the degree that warrior envy is a species of regret for misspent youth, there is, pending the invention of a Time Machine, no real cure. If, however, you want to make some amends for your former neglect of the military aspect of citizenship, there are a number of things you can do. In the first place, you may still be able to enlist. The reserves and National Guard accept new enlistees and officers in their mid thirties. One of my e-mailers joined the Navy Reserve as a Petty Officer 2nd Class at age 34, and after 9/11 was mobilized for twelve months of active duty in the Far East. Even beyond the mid thirties, there are options for military service. In addition to the Army National Guard, Air National Guard, and Naval Militia, my own state has a fourth division: the New York Guard, which accepts recruits "in reasonably good health" of any age over 18. Other states have similar arrangements.

An Army That Drawls

By Dave Shiflett

War may be hell, but here in the South, there's a special appreciation for it, and for warriors. The largest pro-war rallies were said to be held in southern cities; by one account Houston's topped the chart with 10,000 celebrants. More to the point, many southerners assume they are considered first among equals when it comes time to draw the sabers. When it comes to war, and indeed all things military, they enjoy heightened respect. While the West is known for rugged individualists (save for California, which provides wine, women, and tap dancers), the Midwest for solid citizens, and the Northeast for industrialists, intellectuals, and ethnic sham artists, the South is the land of grunts and generals.

Don Rumsfeld, Radical For Our Time

By Victor Davis Hanson

No tactician has yet quite figured out the force-multiplying effect of quickly achieved air superiority, GPS-guided munitions, and on-the-ground spotters; but surely the destructive power of A-10 fighters, helicopters, and carrier- and land-based bombers that were in service to small Army tactical units was worth the equivalent of 1,000 tanks. Moreover, something strange is happening to the American soldier, almost as if current popular culture were being married to 19th-century notions of heroism and sacrifice. Arab-American Marines boast of liberating a Muslim city; women brag of flying three combat missions per day; and bearded, hippie-looking Green Berets on horses prefer the company of medieval tribesmen as they radio in bombs from billion-dollar Stealth bombers. The U.S. military is not so much insidious as postmodern. For someone who dresses so formally and insists on protocol, Donald Rumsfeld, it turns out, is actually quite a radical and has helped to turn our military into something that values efficacy and performance far more than habit, tradition, and procedure.

Analyze This

By Mark Helprin

In Washington last year one could hear a lot of loose talk from high-level defense officials about invading Iraq with 500 men. It seemed like a strange joke, or maybe a dream, until corroborating reports began to surface in the press, such as the <I>Journal</I>'s "Some civilians in the Pentagon and the White House have argued that the job in Iraq could be accomplished with air strikes backed by several hundred special operations soldiers, working in conjunction with Iraqi opposition forces and defectors." This absurdity was reflective of the thought of the civilian officials who are now crowing victory. At least twice, General Franks, representing the uniformed services and what is derisively known as "the heavy Army," briefed the president and recommended a quarter of a million troops, and at least twice he was rebuffed. In August he was instructed to plan for between 50,000 and 80,000. Ultimately, the civilian officials reached a point of (problematic) sufficiency only because they were pushed to it.

The Teflon Secretary
By Ramesh Ponnuru

Our failure to win more allies has been blamed on President George W. Bush, on Vice President Dick Cheney, on defense secretary Don Rumsfeld, on second-tier officials such as Rumsfeld deputy Paul Wolfowitz, even on people entirely outside the government. But one person is escaping all blame for the administration's diplomatic failures: its top diplomat. Somehow, secretary of state Colin Powell always manages to come out smelling like a rose. He emerged as a national hero from the first Gulf War, even though, as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, he had opposed showing force to deter Saddam Hussein from invading Kuwait--and then resisted the use of force to undo the dictator's conquest. He is likely to rise in public esteem again now, in the aftermath of another popular war he tried hard to prevent. But while Powell is getting the applause, it's the administration's hawks who are getting the policies they want. He may project an image of strength, but his influence is weak.

Lotrionte thinks by yelling loudly and complaining that we are sitting on her attempt to garner more authority for herself, she can get the substantive result she wants. Doesn't work that way.

On 1, they tell me that the vast majority of Ellipse parking is already reserved for WH parkers. They also tell me there is no legal problem with sectioning off spaces for 150 WH parkers as requested. (For security reasons, the Ellipse is closed to public parkers, which then makes it available for WH parkers.)

1. We haven't decided how to resolve the Ellipse parking problem. I am still wondering if it is an option to section off some of the Ellipse for WH parkers. Could potentially be 150 parkers.

2. The IRS issue had to do with the Travel Office and the Press. I'll ask Eric Terrell about it again on Monday.

Also, just so you know, there are about 120 white house permit holders for about 450 spots. Over 800 permits are issued and parking is on a first come basis. So, 115 permit holders out of over 800 isn't what I call "a vast majority." Also, toss in the the fact that USSS let's anyone in with a pass whether they have a permit or not....

Analysis: Judicial wars in Congress

18 April 2003
NPR: Morning Edition

BOB EDWARDS, host: On Capitol Hill, the judge wars continue with their fascinating political meanderings. While a high-profile filibuster of one judicial nominee takes center stage, the battles in the wings tell as much or more about judicial nominations and how they work. Take the nomination of J. Leon Holmes to a federal district court judgeship in Arkansas. Holmes has apologized for saying that rape victims are as likely to get pregnant as snow is likely to fall in Miami. The apology has not been enough for some senators, but if the nomination survives, it will not be because it was rescued by Republicans but by Democrats from his home state. NPR legal affairs correspondent Nina Totenberg reports.

NINA TOTENBERG reporting:

President Bush nominated Holmes to a federal district court judgeship after he was recommended by Senator Tim Hutchinson, a Republican. When Hutchinson was defeated for re-election, his Democratic successor, Mark Pryor, joined the state's other senator, Democrat Blanche Lincoln, in endorsing Holmes. And Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch scheduled the nomination for a vote last week. But what was supposed to be an uncontroversial proceeding turned ugly for Holmes when Democrats began reading aloud some of his statements, starting with California Senator Dianne Feinstein.

Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN (Democrat, California): In 1980, he wrote a letter to the editor stating that abortions should not be available to rape victims because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami. He co-wrote an article in which he stated that, quote, "The wife is to subordinate herself to her husband," end quote, and, "The woman is to place herself under the authority of the man," end quote. How could I ever vote for this man to be a judge?

TOTENBERG: Feinstein said that she'd never before voted against a nominee for a district court position, but that there was a first time for everything, and for her, this was it.

Holmes has noted that some of his remarks were 15 or more years old and has apologized for at least one statement, the one saying that pregnancy for rape victims was a red herring. In a letter to Senator Lincoln and in written answers to questions, Holmes wrote, quote, "Regardless of the merits of the issue, that sentence reflects an insensitivity for which there is no excuse." For New York Senator Charles Schumer, though, the apology was off point.

Senator CHARLES SCHUMER (Democrat, New York): It's not just insulting. I mean, this guy just makes it up as he goes along. Thirty-two thousand women became pregnant last year because of rape. The man is so blinded by his ideology he doesn't even look at the facts.

TOTENBERG: That 32,000 figure, according to Schumer's staff, comes from a study reported in The Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

Democratic Senator Richard Durbin said he was further troubled by Holmes' written answers to questions about when he would recuse himself from cases. Durbin said that although Holmes had been involved with eight separate right-to-life groups, the nominee had refused to say he would recuse himself from abortion cases.

It wasn't just abortion or even the relationship between men and women that set teeth on edge in the Judiciary Committee. In an article about slavery, Holmes said he agreed with Booker T. Washington that slavery is, at least in one sense, an example of divine providence. God had, quote, "placed the Negro race in America so it could teach the white race by example what it means to be Christlike," he said. Senator Schumer.

Sen. SCHUMER: This man's an embarrassment. He's going to make a laughingstock not of those of us who are opposing him, but of those who are supporting him. What is going on here? Have we lost all sense of reality?

TOTENBERG: Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch sought to defend Holmes, noting that he'd been found well qualified by the American Bar Association, that he had the endorsement of many Democrats in the Arkansas legal community who described themselves as pro-choice. Indeed, in endorsement letters, several said that while they strongly disagree with Holmes, they have complete confidence in his fairness, his evenhandedness and, as one Bar leader put it, 'his rock-solid integrity.' Senator Hatch.

Senator ORRIN HATCH (Republican, Chairman, Judiciary Committee): This all represents a strong testimony of his ability to remain objective once a judge. Now most striking are the letters that the committee's received from pro-choice attorneys, both men and women throughout Arkansas, who strongly believe that Mr. Holmes will fairly adjudicate any case, including abortion cases, that come before him.

TOTENBERG: Hatch's support, however, was qualified.

Sen. HATCH: I have to admit I'm concerned about some of those comments.

TOTENBERG: The Judiciary Committee chairman at first suggested sending the nomination to the Senate floor without any recommendation, an unusual move that would deny the committee's approval, but would allow a vote by the full Senate. But Republican Senator Arlen Specter said he wanted the nomination held over for further examination, and that is what happened. The Pennsylvania senator, who faces a serious primary challenge next year from a conservative, has been moving to the right on a number of issues. But he has always been a strong supporter of abortion rights, and a key base of support for him has been moderate Republican and Independent women. So the Holmes nomination presents Specter with something of a dilemma. In a telephone interview, the senator said he has a lot of questions about the nominee and intends to meet with him.

If Specter decides not to oppose the nomination in committee, allowing it to go to the floor without recommendation, it will put the onus on the two Democratic senators from Arkansas: Blanche Lincoln, who's up for election next year, and Mark Pryor. In the aftermath of last week's hearing, both continue to support Holmes, at least on paper, but neither has been available for an interview on the subject.

Meanwhile, the judge wars continue on other fronts. To date, 119 of President Bush's judicial nominees have been confirmed, including 19 appeals court nominees, the same number confirmed in the first two years of the Reagan and Clinton presidencies. The Democrats are filibustering one nominee, Miguel Estrada, with the possibility that another may soon face a filibuster, too. The GOP charges that the Estrada filibuster is anti-Hispanic. And the Democrats are asking why, then, another of President Bush's Hispanic nominees, Ed Prado, who was unanimously approved in committee, has not been brought forward for a vote.

President Bush, in an unprecedented move, has renominated two judges who were rejected in the previous Congress controlled by Democrats. One, Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen, has already been approved by the Judiciary Committee on a party-line vote and may be filibustered. The other, Mississippi federal Judge Charles Pickering, seems to have disappeared from the Judiciary Committee's schedule. In the last Congress his nomination was defeated in committee amid charges that, as a trial judge, he had improperly interfered with a cross-burning prosecution in order to reduce the offender's sentence. And that is not the kind of record that Republicans are anxious to defend.

Both conservative and liberal groups are continuing ad campaigns on the judicial wars, hoping to influence upcoming Senate elections. This week President Bush's father, the first President Bush, hosted a fund-raiser at his Houston home that sponsors said netted a quarter of a million dollars. They plan to use the money to buy TV ads attacking targeted Democrats for alleged obstructionism on judgeships. And this is only the beginning. Wait till there's a Supreme Court vacancy. *****KEY QUOTE*****

"[T]he world is safer. The terrorists have lost an ally. The Iraqi people are regaining control of their own destiny.

"These are good days in the history of freedom."

-- President Bush, in Rose Garden Remarks, 4-15-03

*****KEY POINTS*****

- The world is witnessing historic days in the cause of freedom. Our work is not done and the difficulties have not passed, but the regime of Saddam Hussein has passed into history.
- Coalition forces continue to secure population centers in Iraq and to respond to the needs of the Iraqi people.
- The Coalition is working with local leaders to restore public works and rebuild Iraqi infrastructure.
- The World Food Program continues operations in Iraq, and core staff in Baghdad have returned to work.

Analysis: Judicial wars in Congress
18 April 2003

NPR: Morning Edition

BOB EDWARDS, host: On Capitol Hill, the judge wars continue with their fascinating political meanderings. While a high-profile filibuster of one judicial nominee takes center stage, the battles in the wings tell as much or more about judicial nominations and how they work. Take the nomination of J. Leon Holmes to a federal district court judgeship in Arkansas. Holmes has apologized for saying that rape victims are as likely to get pregnant as snow is likely to fall in Miami. The apology has not been enough for some senators, but if the nomination survives, it will not be because it was rescued by Republicans but by Democrats from his home state. NPR legal affairs correspondent Nina Totenberg reports.

NINA TOTENBERG reporting:

President Bush nominated Holmes to a federal district court judgeship after he was recommended by Senator Tim Hutchinson, a Republican. When Hutchinson was defeated for re-election, his Democratic successor, Mark Pryor, joined the state's other senator, Democrat Blanche Lincoln, in endorsing Holmes. And Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch scheduled the nomination for a vote last week. But what was supposed to be an uncontroversial proceeding turned ugly for Holmes when Democrats began reading aloud some of his statements, starting with California Senator Dianne Feinstein.

Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN (Democrat, California): In 1980, he wrote a letter to the editor stating that abortions should not be available to rape victims because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami. He co-wrote an article in which he stated that, quote, "The wife is to subordinate herself to her husband," end quote, and, "The woman is to place herself under the authority of the man," end quote. How could I ever vote for this man to be a judge?

TOTENBERG: Feinstein said that she'd never before voted against a nominee for a district court position, but that there was a first time for everything, and for her, this was it.

Holmes has noted that some of his remarks were 15 or more years old and has apologized for at least one statement, the one saying that pregnancy for rape victims was a red herring. In a letter to Senator Lincoln and in written answers to questions, Holmes wrote, quote, "Regardless of the merits of the issue, that sentence reflects an insensitivity for which there is no excuse." For New York Senator Charles Schumer, though, the apology was off point.

Senator CHARLES SCHUMER (Democrat, New York): It's not just insulting. I mean, this guy just makes it up as he goes along. Thirty-two thousand women became pregnant last year because of rape. The man is so blinded by his ideology he doesn't even look at the facts.

TOTENBERG: That 32,000 figure, according to Schumer's staff, comes from a study reported in The Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

Democratic Senator Richard Durbin said he was further troubled by Holmes' written answers to questions about when he would recuse himself from cases. Durbin said that although Holmes had been involved with eight separate right-to-life groups, the nominee had refused to say he would recuse himself from abortion cases.

It wasn't just abortion or even the relationship between men and women that set teeth on edge in the Judiciary Committee. In an article about slavery, Holmes said he agreed with Booker T. Washington that slavery is, at least in one sense, an example of divine providence. God had, quote, "placed the Negro race in America so it could teach the white race by example what it means to be Christlike," he said. Senator Schumer.

Sen. SCHUMER: This man's an embarrassment. He's going to make a laughingstock not of those of us who are opposing him, but of those who are supporting him. What is going on here? Have we lost all sense of reality?

TOTENBERG: Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch sought to defend Holmes, noting that he'd been found well qualified by the American Bar Association, that he had the endorsement of many Democrats in the Arkansas legal community who described themselves as pro-choice. Indeed, in endorsement letters, several said that while they strongly disagree with Holmes, they have complete confidence in his fairness, his evenhandedness and, as one Bar leader put it, 'his rock-solid integrity.' Senator Hatch.

Senator ORRIN HATCH (Republican, Chairman, Judiciary Committee): This all represents a strong testimony of his ability to remain objective once a judge. Now most striking are the letters that the committee's received from pro-choice attorneys, both men and women throughout Arkansas, who strongly believe that Mr. Holmes will fairly adjudicate any case, including abortion cases, that come before him.

TOTENBERG: Hatch's support, however, was qualified.

Sen. HATCH: I have to admit I'm concerned about some of those comments.

TOTENBERG: The Judiciary Committee chairman at first suggested sending the nomination to the Senate floor without any recommendation, an unusual move that would deny the committee's approval, but would allow a vote by the full Senate. But Republican Senator Arlen Specter said he wanted the nomination held over for further examination, and that is what happened. The Pennsylvania senator, who faces a serious primary challenge next year from a conservative, has been moving to the right on a number of issues. But he has always been a strong supporter of abortion rights, and a key base of support for him has been moderate Republican and Independent women. So the Holmes nomination presents Specter with something of a dilemma. In a telephone interview, the senator said he has a lot of questions about the nominee and intends to meet with him.

If Specter decides not to oppose the nomination in committee, allowing it to go to the floor without recommendation, it will put the onus on the two Democratic senators from Arkansas: Blanche Lincoln, who's up for election next year, and Mark Pryor. In the aftermath of last week's hearing, both continue to support Holmes, at least on paper, but neither has been available for an interview on the subject.

Meanwhile, the judge wars continue on other fronts. To date, 119 of President Bush's judicial nominees have been confirmed, including 19 appeals court nominees, the same number confirmed in the first two years of the Reagan and Clinton presidencies. The Democrats are filibustering one nominee, Miguel Estrada, with the possibility that another may soon face a filibuster, too. The GOP charges that the Estrada filibuster is anti-Hispanic. And the Democrats are asking why, then, another of President Bush's Hispanic nominees, Ed Prado, who was unanimously approved in committee, has not been brought forward for a vote.

President Bush, in an unprecedented move, has renominated two judges who were rejected in the previous Congress controlled by Democrats. One, Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen, has already been approved by the Judiciary Committee on a party-line vote and may be filibustered.

The other, Mississippi federal Judge Charles Pickering, seems to have disappeared from the Judiciary Committee's schedule. In the last Congress his nomination was defeated in committee amid charges that, as a trial judge, he had improperly interfered with a cross-burning prosecution in order to reduce the offender's sentence. And that is not the kind of record that Republicans are anxious to defend. Both conservative and liberal groups are continuing ad campaigns on the judicial wars, hoping to influence upcoming Senate elections. This week President Bush's father, the first President Bush, hosted a fund-raiser at his Houston home that sponsors said netted a quarter of a million dollars. They plan to use the money to buy TV ads attacking targeted Democrats for alleged obstructionism on judgeships. And this is only the beginning. Wait till there's a Supreme Court vacancy. Brett, from our perspective, these are ripe now, in that it is very important for us to be discussing and understanding these systems, both in how they are currently being managed and their eventual transfer to NARA/GWBush Library.

Perhaps now is the time to resurrect the Library meeting that you tried to schedule a few months ago, where we can discuss these matters also?

Plus, I will be sending you an email soon with more detail about what appears to be a major problem of interfiling personal/political records with Presidential records.

I will not join this meeting, but see that there are a lot of interesting topics in #4 that we should be involved in when they are considered ripe.

Katy -- Sorry to be so formal about this, but Schwab needs formal acknowledgement of our ability to use a photo from the White House meeting in a newsletter that goes to clients. We have a newsletter that goes to Retirement Plan Sponsors and another to Third-Party Administrators. Hi Katy -- Thanks so much for sending along the great photos of yesterday's meeting with the President. It was an extraordinary experience for me, one I will always remember, particularly given the historic nature of the day in terms of the fall of Baghdad.

Quick question -- what are the policies for using one of the photos in internal and external Schwab publications? We'd like to use one in an employee-only newsletter, and we'd also be interested in using one in client newsletters that talk about the dividend tax cut. Please let me know if this is OK.

Thanks again! mike

Subject: question about photos you sent

Hi Katy -- Thanks so much for sending along the great photos of yesterday's meeting with the President. It was an extraordinary experience for me, one I will always remember, particularly given the historic nature of the day in terms of the fall of Baghdad.

Quick question -- what are the policies for using one of the photos in internal and external Schwab publications? We'd like to use one in an employee-only newsletter, and we'd also be interested in using one in client newsletters that talk about the dividend tax cut. Please let me know if this is OK.

Thanks again! mike

EPIC's counsel (Paul Wolfson of Wilmer) called to propose that we stipulate to dismissal of the OHS FOIA case. His only qualification was that dismissal be without prejudice to allow for the possibility that, at some point in the future, plaintiff could re-file. I asked him why the generosity of spirit, and Paul effectively said that they read our discovery and, "weighing the pluses and minuses" do not think they can win on the current record.

I recommend so stipulating. The downside is that the OHS FOIA status issue would be unresolved where we are likely to win and poised to do so. But the upside is that the case goes away, and we do not risk losing at this time either. If the case arises again, we would be in the same position we are today - ready to file for summary judgment. This would also allow OHS to re-tool even further outside the shadow of litigation if it felt the need (e.g. make explicitly clear that it is the President's HSC staff). In general, we don't usually continue to fight when the other side is willing to walk away, but fight when we have to. I do not see a basis for insisting on dismissal with prejudice (and doubt we would get it), since the argument that the facts could theoretically change seems correct. Dismissal without prejudice is the usual course under Rule 41.

Shannen concurs.

In case any of you missed this today:
Justice signals he may stay another year
USA Today
By Joan Biskupic
4/22/03

Chief Justice William Rehnquist has extended the contract of his administrative assistant, a possible -- but not definitive -- signal that he will stay on the bench another year.
Speculation over the possible retirement this year of Rehnquist, 78, or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, has escalated in recent months at the White House and in judicial circles. Both are GOP appointees who have suggested they would retire when a Republican is in the White House and in position to appoint their successors. Neither justice has commented on any retirement plans.
Justices traditionally have announced their retirements in the late spring, near the end of the court's annual term. This spring could offer a timely window because 2004 is a presidential election year. Justices have resisted retiring when a nominee could become embroiled in campaign politics.
If Rehnquist were to retire, he would not need administrative assistant Sally Rider, who has held the post since 2000. Court spokeswoman Kathy Arberg said Rider's contract has been extended but did not provide details. The contract typically is renewed for a year.

Talked to Izzy and Tim Goeglein. Izzy says May 5 and May 8 are available and says it is on the agenda for meeting tonight. Goeglein thinks we should push for an East Room event given the constitutional significance of what has been and is going on in Senate and the approaching 2-year anniversary. I am partial to that, of course, and will so recommend to Izzy and on draft formal scheduling proposal if you agree. (Room 450 would be the backup.)

I worry about having an East Room event if we have nothing new to announce. To merely complain about what is happening without offering anything new argues for not having an East Room event. I do not have any answers, just concerns.

The Constitution Be Damned: Democrats try to impose a religious test on judges.
BY BRENDAN MINITER
Wall St. Journal (Opinion Journal) --
<http://www.opinionjournal.com/columnists/bminiter/?id=110003390>

REV_00115128

Tuesday, April 22, 2003 12:01 a.m. EDT

Are Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats trying to establish a religious test for federal judges?

James Leon Holmes is the latest judicial nominee they've targeted. Before adjourning for Easter recess these Democrats demonized Mr. Holmes, persuading committee Republicans to put his nomination for a district court in Arkansas on hold until after the break. Then on Good Friday, New York's Sen. Chuck Schumer took to the airwaves on NPR to further attack Mr. Holmes.

This follows on the heels of the attacks on appeals-court nominees Priscilla Owen (a Sunday school teacher) and Charles Pickering (a former president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention). The Judiciary Committee rejected both when the Democrats were in the majority. President Bush has renominated both and it's likely Ms. Owen will eventually win confirmation--although Democrats may filibuster her nomination, as they are now doing to Miguel Estrada.

In Mr. Holmes's case the attacks are shocking, for the Democrats are openly targeting his religious convictions. Mr. Holmes's professional qualifications are impressive. He is an accomplished lawyer who has mostly practiced commercial litigation. He's a partner at the respected Little Rock firm Quattlebaum, Grooms, Tull & Barrow. He was one of the lawyers to work on Rickey Ray Rector's defense. (Rector, a cop killer who was mentally retarded owing to a self-administered gunshot wound, was famously executed in 1992 after Bill Clinton took a break from the campaign trail to return to Arkansas and signed his death warrant.) Mr. Holmes received a "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, and both Democratic Arkansas senators--Blanche Lincoln and Mark Pryor--support his nomination.

He also comes from humble roots. Among other things he's worked as a laborer picking peas before putting himself through law school at night while supporting his family.

The lightning rod here, of course, is abortion. It's no secret that the pope and the Catholic Church are squarely against abortion on demand. And Mr. Holmes, who once served as president of Arkansas Right to Life, is an orthodox Catholic. He's written articles against abortion and has even--God forbid--defended the rights of people to peaceably protest against the practice.

Abortion gives the Democrats some of their most fanatical supporters. So Sens. Schumer, Dianne Feinstein and Dick Durbin feel safe in demonizing Mr. Holmes. They even dug up a 23-year-old letter in which Mr. Holmes argued against rape exemptions. Mr. Holmes says he no longer holds this view, and Sen. Durbin for one should sympathize, since 23 years ago he was pro-life.

Mr. Schumer is particularly critical because Mr. Holmes admitted to him that Roe v. Wade was one of the Supreme Court decisions he didn't agree with and because he refuses to promise to recuse himself if any of the right-to-life groups he's defended ever comes before him. Such pre-emptive recusals aren't in line with judicial ethics, which require federal judges to weigh the circumstances of each case before deciding on whether to recuse themselves.

It's not just about abortion, however. Judiciary Democrats took issue with Mr. Holmes's view of marriage. Citing an article Mr. Holmes and his wife wrote about the traditional Catholic teaching of a wife "subordinating" herself to her husband, Ms. Feinstein claimed he was antiwoman. Mr. Schumer asked if a battered woman bringing suit against her husband could have confidence in his impartiality.

Mr. Schumer went on to complain about and distort Mr. Holmes's views on separation of church and state, evolution, prayer in public schools and more. "We are not getting somebody in this case who refuses to tell us what he thinks, but the bottom line is what he thinks is so bad," New York's senior senator said.

The truth about Mr. Holmes's views is that he sees women as equal to men and in marriage each must assume collaborative roles--which is one reason many prominent Arkansas women who are also pro-choice support Mr. Holmes. In no way is Mr. Holmes endorsing legislating from the bench to impose religion on citizens. Just the opposite is true. Mr. Holmes has specifically staked out his views on religion and government in published articles--for the protection of a free state and religion, the two ought to be separate.

Sens. Schumer, Feinstein, Durbin and others, in their zeal over abortion, are now attempting to screen out judicial candidates who take their faith seriously. Judiciary Democrats may not like Catholic doctrine, but to hold religious convictions against a nominee is a blatant violation of the Constitution, which provides that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." Liberals have a knack for finding new rights in "penumbras" and "emanations" of the Constitution, but this one is right there in the document itself.

Ashcroft Is Criticized for Remarks About Witness in Terror-Cell Case
By THE NEW YORK TIMES

ETROIT, April 18 * The judge at the trial of four men accused of being members of a terror cell criticized Attorney General John Ashcroft today for praising the government's chief witness and implied that Mr. Ashcroft had violated his ban on public comments about the case.

"I believe the attorney general is subject to the orders of this court," said Judge Gerald E. Rosen of Federal District Court.

At a news conference on Thursday in Washington, Mr. Ashcroft spoke about the Justice Department's progress against terrorism. He cited a number of plea agreements with informers, including the government's lead witness in the case here, Youssef Hmimssa.

"Youssef Hmimssa pleaded guilty to multiple criminal charges, and is currently cooperating in the Detroit cell case," Mr. Ashcroft said in prepared remarks. "Such cooperation is a critical tool for our war on terrorism."

After defense lawyers said today that they might move to have Mr. Ashcroft held in contempt, Judge Rosen criticized the attorney general.

"It was pretty apparent that he was bolstering the credibility of Mr. Hmimssa and his work," the judge said of Mr. Ashcroft. "I was concerned and distressed to wake up this morning to hear the attorney general discuss the credibility of a witness in this trial."

Barbara Comstock, a Justice Department spokeswoman, said today that Mr. Ashcroft's comments were part of "a wide-ranging press conference discussing many different matters in the public record."

"We certainly had no intent to contravene the judge's wishes regarding publicity," Ms. Comstock said.

The four men, Farouk Ali-Haimoud, 22; Karim Koubriti, 24; Ahmed Hannan, 34; and Abdel-Ilah Elmardoudi, 37, are charged with document fraud and conspiracy to provide material support to terrorists.

It was not the first time Mr. Ashcroft has rankled Judge Rosen. After three of the defendants were first detained, six days after the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, Mr. Ashcroft accused them of having prior knowledge of the attacks. At the time, no prosecutor had made such a claim.

Before the judge's appearance today, newspaper articles about Mr. Ashcroft's comments circulated in the courtroom.

One of the prosecutors, Keith Corbett, an assistant United States attorney, borrowed a copy from a defense lawyer. After reading it with colleagues, he said half-jokingly of Mr. Ashcroft, "Bring him in. Have a hearing. I'm certainly not capable of defending him."

Thanks. Did you find your tort reform materials by chance? I again looked through Jen's files and didn't find my files. Perhaps I gave them to you (although I have no specific recollection of that) and they were archived -- in which case, I guess they are gone forever.

David/Brett:

The Offices of Cabinet Affairs, Presidential Personnel, Intergovernmental Affairs, Political Affairs, and the Council for Excellence in Government are together sponsoring a two-day conference entitled "Regional Appointees: Challenges and Opportunities," scheduled for May 19-20, 2003 in Washington, DC.

This conference will be the first of its kind during this Administration and will include regional appointees from several Cabinet and sub-Cabinet agencies such as Education, Interior, Labor, EPA, HHS, FEMA, GSA, HUD and SBA. It will be held at the nearby Mayflower Hotel, with several sessions taking place in Room 450 EEOB.

Given your office's stake in such an event, we want to involve you in the conference's program workshops and plenary sessions. In working with the agencies, we have identified roughly 85 regional political appointees that we have invited to attend the conference. Other local agency personnel, including inter-governmental affairs staff, will also be invited.

The purpose of the conference is to better engage our regional appointees as representatives of the President around the country and to give them a chance to meet and hear from senior White House officials and agency leaders. Sessions will focus on a variety of vital issues including:

- Management Results / President's Management Team
- Building Support for the President's Agenda
- Freedom Corps / Faith-Based Initiatives
- Hatch Act / Ethics
- Policy Perspectives
- Homeland Security
- Working Together for Greater Regional Impact
- Legislative Update
- Foreign Policy Update

We have tentatively scheduled your presentation for Tuesday afternoon, May 20 in Room 450 EEOB (exact time is TBD). We would hope you could discuss your insights on the Hatch Act and ethics in government. We would also hope you could join us for a reception to be held later that evening.

We would greatly appreciate your participation, and I know that the Regional Appointees would appreciate hearing from you and will be happy to take your perspectives back with them to their respective regions. Please feel free to contact me should you have additional questions or you may have your assistant contact Christie Parell (6-2343) to confirm your availability.

Many thanks in advance,

Brian Montgomery

Brett,

Would you be available to speak to a briefing for CNP that Tim Goeglein and Matt Smith are doing in room 450 on 4/24 at 6:00pm? You would only need to speak for 15 minutes. Would this work for you?

Thanks,

Ryan

"We were prohibited from visiting these shrines for a long time by the Baath Party and their agents. This year we thank God for ridding us of the dictator Saddam Hussein and for letting us visit these shrines."

Abed Ghilan, Associated Press Television, 4-22-03

"People have been walking for days, literally days, to get here. Some have come barefoot. Others have been crawling on their hands and knees....One man I spoke to set out from his house 18 days ago. Imagine that. That was before Saddam Hussein's government actually fell. This man told us he set off in the hope that he would get through, and his wish has come true. That wish has been the same for many years of the majority of Iraq's Shiite Muslims. They haven't been permitted to come here freely before."

That's really up to us. But idea is about 200 people in Rose Garden with Presidential remarks, and with composition of crowd up to us but probably key Senators, bar leaders, legal luminaries, interest-group leaders, and grass-roots supporters.

I have a rookie question: Do people observe "Administrative Professionals' Day" (aka Secretaries' Day) around here? I noticed that it is today, and although my preference is to ignore it and find other ways to express appreciation throughout the year, I didn't want to inadvertently give offense by failing to do something nice for those who work with us. It occurs to me that, unlike the career secretaries at law firms or elsewhere in government, our staff may not even be aware of this occasion... Any thoughts?

FYI, Senator Graham's Chief Counsel called to let us know the Senator's office has heard from a South Carolina reporter named Lee Bandy (sp?) seeking comment on rumors about who is going to be nominated for the District Court seat in SC. He wanted us to know that we may get a call, too. He said the Senator's staff will decline to comment but that the Senator may choose to do otherwise.

For my info, what is the appropriate response to such press calls? Is there someone to refer them to, or do we just decline to comment?

Brett,

Would you be available to speak to a briefing for CNP that Tim Goeglein and Matt Smith are doing in room 450 on 4/24 at 6:00pm? You would only need to speak for 15 minutes. Would this work for you?

Thanks,

Another Unworthy Judicial Nominee

Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, seems to have undergone a classic confirmation conversion. As a lawyer and as a California state court judge, she advocated objectionable positions on civil rights, abortion and privacy. But at her confirmation hearings, she backpedaled furiously. Her testimony may have been tactically shrewd, but it failed to allay serious concerns about how she would perform as a judge. The Senate should not confirm her.

Judge Kuhl started out as a hard-driving conservative lawyer in the Reagan administration. When the I.R.S. denied tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University, which discriminated against blacks, she played a key role in persuading the Justice Department to take Bob Jones's side. In a landmark 1983 decision the Supreme Court rejected her position, 8 to 1. Judge Kuhl also argued forcefully for Roe v. Wade to be overturned. And she was co-author of a brief backing the defendant in a landmark sexual harassment case. The Supreme Court unanimously rejected its conclusion, ruling for the woman who had been harassed.

Under questioning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, Judge Kuhl repeatedly retracted or minimized her positions: supporting Bob Jones was a mistake, she said, but she had been a "very young staffer" and had not understood the issues fully. She had advocated overturning Roe because President Reagan had wanted it. When, as a private attorney, she had later written a brief critical of Roe, it had not been because she shared its views, but because she had wanted to build an appellate practice and "filing briefs in the Supreme Court is a prestigious thing to do." In the sexual harassment case, her difference with the Supreme Court had been over only a "technical" issue.

Judge Kuhl's many shifts are suspect because of their timing. It is also clear, given this administration's track record, that she was chosen precisely because of the actions she now seeks to distance herself from. The White House can tell from her record that she shares its conservative agenda, including opposition to abortion rights and skepticism about civil rights. It is unlikely that when she spoke with the administration she was as quick to renounce her past as she was before the Senate.

It shows how politicized the selection of judges has become that Judge Kuhl received a hearing at all. In the past, the Judiciary Committee often would not consider a nominee who lacked the support of both senators from the person's home state. The Republicans have pushed Judge Kuhl forward even though Senator Barbara Boxer has not endorsed her. They have also trampled on the Senate's traditional courtesies by reporting out Priscilla Owen for a Fifth Circuit judgeship, even though the committee rejected her last year.

The Senate has confirmed a vast majority of the administration's judicial nominees. It recently confirmed Jay Bybee, a conservative legal scholar, for the same court for which Judge Kuhl has been nominated. But senators must oppose candidates with views well outside the ideological mainstream, including Judge Kuhl and Judge Owen. Only by holding firm can they persuade a president who campaigned on a promise to govern from the center to start looking there for his judicial nominees.

McAuliffe letter re Supreme Court

URGENT ACTION ALERT: SUPREME COURT COUNTDOWN

Dear XXXXXXXXXX:

At the end of June, the current Supreme Court session will come to a close. When that happens, all signs point to one or more of the current Justices retiring, providing an opportunity for President Bush to nominate an extremist Justice who will put our most cherished American values at risk.

* There hasn't been a retirement in almost nine years, the longest drought in nearly 200 years. [1] * Several Justices are facing serious health issues and have indicated a strong desire to retire soon. [2] * Chief Justice Rehnquist has recently held secret meetings with the White House. [3] * Two weeks ago, President Bush's father hosted a fundraiser at his home to raise money for an ad campaign to push Bush's judicial nominees. [4] * The Republican chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Orrin Hatch, is pressuring Justices to make their move. [5]

Civil rights. The freedom to choose. Environmental protections. The hard-won rights of workers. If President Bush stacks the Court with right-wing ideologues, all of these cherished values are in peril. You must get involved today to help protect these values.

[http://mailer.democrats.org/rdr/002JK04vsv0001D](http://mailer democrats.org/rdr/002JK04vsv0001D)

At the DNC, we're organizing on every level to make sure the voices of average Americans are heard on this issue. And, with your help, I promise you that we can and will defeat this threat to our values.

REV_00115395

I'm asking you to do three things:

1. Come to our Supreme Court Action Center and sign the petition to President Bush letting him know you'll fight his attempts to attack our values and stack the Supreme Court with right-wing extremists.

<http://mailer democrats.org/rdr/002JK04vsv0001E>

2. Once you've signed the petition, get as many as your friends as possible to sign it.

<http://mailer democrats.org/rdr/002JK04vsv0001F>

3. Join our Supreme Court Action Team by signing up to become a Democratic eCaptain today.

<http://mailer democrats.org/rdr/002JK04vsv0001G>

Signing this petition and telling your friends is the most important thing I have asked you to do since I've been Chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

<http://mailer democrats.org/rdr/002JK04vsv0001H>

I pledge that in the weeks to come, I will personally obtain and deliver to your inbox the support of our top Democratic leaders in this effort.

Sincerely, Terence R. McAuliffe Chairman

Recess Time

With Senate Democrats taking obstructionism to new levels, the president should re-read Article II, Section 2, Paragraph 3.

by Hugh Hewitt

04/23/2003

THE LEFT EDGE of the Senate Democratic caucus has taken control of the judicial-nomination process and has forced the entire Senate into what is, at best, an extra-constitutional swamp. With their filibuster of D.C. Circuit Court nominee Miguel Estrada, their threatened filibusters of Fifth Circuit nominees Priscilla Owen and Charles Pickering, and their obstruction of other nominees such as John Roberts, Carolyn Kuhl, and a half-dozen Sixth Circuit nominees, Senate Democrats have decided it is good policy to wreck a judicial nomination and confirmation process that has worked for more than two centuries.

The radical agenda of the Senate Democrats has escaped a great deal of attention, though it surely played a role in their historic defeats in November 2002 and will do so again in the more than half-dozen referendums on incumbent Democratic Senators looming in November 2004. The temptation to let the likes of Tom Daschle, Harry Reid, Patty Murray, Blanche Lincoln, and Chuck Schumer hang themselves on their extremist approach must be huge, but President Bush and his advisers would be better served by aggressively defending the Constitution at every step. There are many ways to do this, including a jam-down of new Senate rules with 51 votes. But a way-station to such a melt-down is found in the president's recess appointment power.

Article II, Section 2, Paragraph 3 provides: "The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session."

Thus the president can fill every judicial vacancy that presently exists, though these appointments will lapse in the fall of 2004.

REV_00115416

Nominees have traditionally been reluctant to fill such temporary posts as the Senate guarded its confirmation power jealously and was likely to turn a cold-shoulder to the recess appointees in much the way that the NFL veterans shunned the temporary players who took the field during their strike.

Bill Clinton broke the taboo against recess appointments to the bench, however, with his end-of-term appointment of Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals--an appointment President Bush made permanent through his nomination and the Senate's consent as a gesture of conciliation. That gesture and many others have been rejected as inadequate by the Leahy-Daschle-Schumer-Kennedy caucus. Kindness didn't--and won't--work. Stronger measures are called for, not only to meet real needs for judges, but also to bring the controversy to the public's attention. The Democrats have crashed the process and shredded the traditions because of the pressure of abortion absolutists. Their record is a sorry one, and attention generated via the recess-appointment power will help shine light on their excess.

At this writing there are 24 vacancies on the U.S. Courts of Appeals. The president would be wise not to launch too many recess appointments at first, but it would be a strong opening move to announce that, say, two of the six blocked nominees to the Sixth Circuit will be appointed over the Memorial Day Senate break if there is no movement with those nominees, and that the two vacancies without nominees on the D.C. Circuit (there are a total of four, with Estrada and Roberts having been nominated in May of 2001) will receive nominees in May and will be appointed during the holiday recess unless at least Roberts (and perhaps both Roberts and Estrada) gets a floor vote before then.

The Sixth Circuit nominees are all named, and two would have to volunteer for this sort of hardball, but the two D.C. open slots would be best used to serve up a couple of rock-ribbed conservatives who might be willing to serve 15 to 18 months for the good of the cause. With the freedom from pressure to conform to Chuck Schumer's strange reading of the Constitution, these two judges could provide an impressive legacy of opinions over their year-and-a-half of service. Readers are invited to suggest nominees to me from among the caucus of "They Couldn't Get Confirmed by This Senate in a Hundred Years" club because of their intellectual firepower. Perhaps Judge Bork hankers for a D.C. Circuit encore?

If the Senate radicals remain entrenched in their desire to overturn the Constitution, either the Senate can discipline itself with new rules or the president can increase the number of recess judges and announce a commitment to keep all such nominees on the bench through the recess process for as long as his power to extend their service endures. As Bill Clinton demonstrated, even a lame-duck president can employ the power just prior to his replacement's arrival. President Bush could keep using the recess power through December of 2004 even if defeated, and through December of 2008 if reelected.

This approach would announce a fundamental change in the nomination process, though a constitutional one. It would answer the Democrats' irresponsible absolutism with a measured and transparent reply. Conservative activists would be satisfied, as would moderate defenders of the clear design of the Constitution.

The battles over judicial appointments at home are not nearly as dramatic as those battles fought abroad, but the ability to wage the latter ultimately depends upon a healthy respect for the Constitution's rules at home. Democrats have abandoned that respect in their zeal to meet the demands of the abortion-rights caucus. The president should answer their challenge.

JUDICIARY

Asbestos Litigation Talks Continue As Deal Remains Elusive

There is no deal yet on asbestos litigation reform legislation, congressional and industry sources participating in the negotiations said today. Meetings are ongoing and negotiators are "working hard," they said, but contrary to a published report today that proclaimed an accord was close at hand, sources on all sides of the issue said that is not the case. That does not mean the involved parties are not optimistic, or are at least maintaining a public facade of optimism. Key parties in labor, industry and senators on both sides of the aisle agreed several weeks ago to make a good faith effort to pursue the trust fund concept as a means for settling a flood of asbestos claims. In that respect, and in the context of the bitter disputes that punctuated past congressional debates on asbestos reform, "we're closer now than we've ever been," one source remarked. However, negotiators' effort to put meat on the conceptual framework continues. The Senate Judiciary Committee "still plans a May markup, and I think that's the time you'll see people coming together to say this is what we're going to work off of," predicted one source.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Hatch before the start of the April recess also said he planned to have the formal drafting of the asbestos litigation bill wrapped up by the time senators returned. However, sources privy to the negotiations said the talks and drafting, while productive, remain largely in the conceptual stage, and there is little possibility of formal legislative language being nailed down by the week's end. Indeed, several sources said negotiators with the AFL-CIO, who are representing the interests of the larger labor community, planned to submit its version of medical criteria to the committee Friday. "What we're trying to get [resolved] are the big structural issues and the money issues. It doesn't mean we can't get there," said Damon Silvers, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO said. "It means we have a lot of hard work in front of us." Sources concurred that many of the tough questions relating to the construction of the trust fund, the medical criteria used to establish access to that fund, the individual case values, and the allocation of payments among defendant companies and their insurers -- in short, the thorniest of issues, remain unresolved.

Another key unresolved issue centers on the finality of the settlement and whether asbestos victims would be guaranteed ample compensation even if the trust fund were to go bankrupt. That is apt to constitute a contentious fight, inasmuch as it raises the question of whether the federal government, or perhaps the private sector, would be on the hook for paying those asbestos claims. That is likely to "be the last issue to be solved," Silvers predicted. "Victims cannot be the ones to bear that risk," he added. "If Hatch wants to do a consensus bill, [he has to] figure out a way to solve this problem. A federal backstop is the simplest way to do it." -- by Pamela Barnett

The National Pachyderm Club is trying to get an administration speaker for their national conference. While it isn't a priority and I don't think anyone will attend, their website (<http://www.texaspachyderms.com/>) refers to the conference as described below. Does this pose legal problems referring in prematurely referring to the re-elect, or does it matter since it is their event? Thanks. Paul

As you may know, the National Conference of Pachyderm Clubs will be held this year in Galveston, hosted by the Galveston Island Pachyderm Club. The theme for the Conference is "Threshold to Reelection," obviously referring to our President, George W. Bush, who is also our fellow Texan.

*****KEY POINTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S INTERVIEW WITH TOM BROKAW, NBC NEWS, 4/25/03*****

*Iraq suffered for over 20 years from Saddam's tyranny, but the foundation for democracy is now being laid, and our military forces will leave as soon as we 've accomplished our mission.

*Coalition troops are working with Iraqis to maintain order in different cities and make the country more secure.

*We have an orderly process to bring stability and food and medicine to the Iraqi people, so life can begin to return to normal.

*We are also confident that a government will emerge that represents all Iraqi people and honors the history and traditions of Iraq.

*****TODAY'S SCHEDULE*****

*The International Committee for the Red Cross (ICRC) has restored wastewater treatment service to more than 70,000 residents of Baghdad.

*On April 23, a World Health Organization team of epidemiologists and engineers worked with members of the Iraqi National Public Health Laboratories to restore laboratory facilities throughout the city. With the assistance of the Jordanian Ministry of Health, the WHO is also working to restore Baghdad's blood bank.

*Since March 20, the ICRC has provided more than 228 families in the northern governate of Arbil with emergency non-food items, including cooking stoves, heaters, hygiene kits, and blankets.

*According to the World Food Program, 1,607 trucks have transported more than 38,177 metric tons of food aid to northern Iraq through Turkey to date.

*****KEY QUOTES*****

"We have an orderly process to bring stability and food and health to the Iraqi people, so life can begin to return to normal. And then I'm confident that a government will emerge. I dismiss the critics who say that democracy can't flourish in Iraq....I do believe there can be a representative government and all factions can be represented."
President Bush, interview with NBC, 4/25/03

"Turkey is a Muslim country that has a democratic system. Pakistan, after years of difficulty, is now on a firm footing and a path to a democratic system with a new prime minister and a new parliament. And so just because one is in an Arab country or one is practicing the Muslim faith, to suggest that therefore you are denied the benefits of democracy...it's a false choice. Democracy can coexist with any faith."
Secretary Powell, interview with Free Iraq TV/Radio Sawa, 4/24/03

Forthcoming clash for the court

By James L. Swanson

At the Supreme Court of the United States, October Term 2002 is drawing to a close. The justices hear their last oral arguments on April 30, and in late June they will take to the bench for the last time to announce their final opinions of the term. Court watchers await decisions in several important cases, including free-speech and affirmative-action issues, which may not come down until the last day of the term. But that is not the only reason why court watchers have circled the last week in June on the calendar. That is when oddsmakers are betting on the retirement of at least one member of the court.

For months, pundits have speculated that Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor or Justice John Paul Stevens will step down this year. Why?

Because justices traditionally retire under the political party that appointed them, and this is the last chance for these three Republican appointees to retire during President Bush's first term with the assurance that he can fill a vacancy before the 2004 election.

Because, in the case of the chief justice, he has, in three decades of service, gone from lone dissenter to leader of the court's return to the first principles of limited government and federalism, and will go down as one of the most important chief justices in history.

Because, in the case of Justice O'Connor, the press spread rumors that she wanted to retire.

Because, in the case of Justice Stevens, he is 83 years old.

It is impossible to know whether these or any other members of the Supreme Court are planning to retire this year. Many self-styled experts have embarrassed themselves by attempting to predict a justice's vote in a single case, let alone a retirement from the bench. Nor is this to suggest that any of the nine justices should retire. The performance of the oldest justice (John Paul Stevens) to the youngest (Clarence Thomas), of the longest serving (William H. Rehnquist) to the briefest (Stephen Breyer) reveals that all remain able and engaged. Their written opinions confirm that none has suffered an intellectual decline. One may disagree with their views, but not their competence to serve. If a retirement comes, it will occur because the justice wants to step down, not because he or she has to.

It might not happen until the end of June. But it could also happen tomorrow. Justices Potter Stewart, Warren E. Burger and Thurgood Marshall waited until the end of their final terms and made June announcements. But Byron White and Harry Blackmun announced their retirements early, on March 3, 1993, and April 6, 1994, respectively, to give President Clinton ample time to nominate their successors, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen Breyer, and to win Senate confirmation by, in both cases, the beginning of August.

Although it is impossible to know if or when a vacancy will occur, one thing is easy to predict: how Democrats will respond to Mr. Bush's first nomination of a Supreme Court justice. Senate Democrats, in combination with a cabal of special interest groups, intend to politicize the Supreme Court and oppose any Bush nominee, regardless of who the nominee is. History, both recent and reaching back to the Reagan and first Bush presidencies, offers little encouragement that the Senate will conduct itself professionally and responsibly.

The pattern emerged over time: the Democrats' defeat of Judge Robert H. Bork's nomination to the court in 1987; their near-killing of Judge Clarence Thomas' nomination in 1991; their rage against the Supreme Court for "handing" the presidency to the Republicans in the 2000 election; the notorious Washington Post op-ed by Abner Mikva (former Clinton White House counsel and retired U.S. Court of Appeals judge) calling on the Senate to block any Supreme Court nominations by President Bush; their bottling up superbly qualified appellate court nominees for nearly two years on the Democratic-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee; their obsession with Roe vs. Wade and their imposition of ideological litmus tests; their celebration of the American Bar Association seal of approval as the "gold standard" - until the ABA began giving many of Mr. Bush's nominees the highest possible rating; their filibustering of the nomination of Miguel Estrada to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington to prevent an up or down vote even after a majority of senators announced that they will vote to confirm him; their threatened filibuster against Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

That history, and more, exposes what Democrats will do to fight a Bush Supreme Court nomination. The attack will be waged on two fronts, one substantive, the other procedural.

The substantive attack will have six parts.

Retirement day blitzkrieg. If the retiring justice is a Republican, and gives the White House advance, confidential notice of his or her intention to retire, as Chief Justice Warren Burger did in 1986, the president will have an opportunity to announce a retirement and a nomination on the same day. Within one hour of that nomination, a leading Democratic senator, probably Tom Daschle, Edward Kennedy, Patrick Leahy or Charles Schumer, will attack the nominee's character, integrity or competence. (Recall Mr. Kennedy's outburst within 45 minutes of President Reagan's nomination of Judge Bork: "Robert Bork's America is a land in which women would be forced into back-alley abortions, blacks would sit at segregated lunch counters, rogue policemen could break down citizen's doors in midnight raids, school children could not be taught about evolution, writers and artists could be censured at the whim of government." Sundry left wing "public interest" (actually, special interest) groups will join the chorus. The purpose of the first day blitzkrieg is to set the president and the nominee reeling on their heels and destroy the momentum of the nomination. The blitzkrieg aims to spin that night's TV coverage and the next morning's newspaper stories.
